FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, we have heard about the answer given the Quebec Minister of Finance by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), an answer which all Quebec residents can only describe as being quite insulting and arrogant. Referring to the attitude of Canada's Minister of Finance, this is the third negative answer of the Conservative Government to Quebecers. As we recall, the Minister of Cultural Communities sought financial assistance to cope with the ever increasing number of refugees coming into Quebec, but the answer of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) was a flat no. Then Environment Minister Cliff Lincoln asked the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) for financial support to clean up the St. Lawrence River, and again the answer was no. Once more this Government's answer to all Quebecers was no.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that henceforth Quebecers will say no to all Conservative Members just to get rid of them.

TOURISM

RECORD NUMBER OF INTERNATIONAL VISITORS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the Niagara Peninsula has experienced its best tourism year in 15 years. Year end travel figures released by Statistics Canada reveal that the number of international visitors to Canada was up by 18 per cent over 1985, the highest level since 1972.

Long-term visits to Canada by Americans rose to 14.1 million, representing an increase of 17 per cent, and overseas visitors to 2.1 million, representing an increase of 25 per cent. Expo 86 was a big draw, but it was not the only attraction. Visitors to Ontario increased by over 5 per cent from 1985 and that includes increases in the number of winter tourists as well.

• (1405)

A major factor in this increase was Tourism Canada's awarding winning advertising campaign "Canada: The World Next Door". The same theme will be used this year. All of us in Niagara look forward to another record-setting tourism year in 1987.

IMMIGRATION

DECREASE IN NUMBER OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, we need a new deal on family re-unification in immigration. Although in 1986 immigration increased to nearly 99,000 it still fell more than 6,000 below the minimum level of 105,000 set for that year by the Minister which, in turn, is far below the level needed to keep our population from shrinking. We need 150,000 to 200,000.

The Government has failed to achieve the level of immigration it recognizes as necessary to maintain Canada's population and economic potential. This failure is mainly due to neglect of family reunification. In family class, immigration fell 3,390 short of the Government's proposed level. In assisted relative class, it fell almost 21,000 short, even 2,364 below 1984.

The Government failed to clear up red tape delays in overseas visa offices and the Government also brought in a new restrictive point system that discourages the majority of prospective applicants.

I call on the Government to open its promised conversations with Canadian immigrant groups about a new deal on family reunification.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PRESIDENT'S REPORTED DECISION NOT TO PROVIDE TELEVISED NEWSCASTS TO SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN AREA POPULATION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, today an entire region was disappointed by the news that the President of the CBC, Mr. Pierre Juneau, has decided that the people of Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean will not get a televised news bulletin. Once more, the President of the CBC is hiding behind the facile excuse of budgetary cutbacks. I get the impression that the President of the CBC is taking these people hostage. Giving the region a televised news bulletin does not sound like a frill, when we have yet to receive full services.

Mr. Speaker, through you, I want to say this to Mr. Juneau: As the President of the CBC, you will get no glory if all you do is manage to maintain existing services according to what your budget allows. You will be remembered for the extra service provided where justified. What has to be done is already clear from the Caplan-Sauvageau report on our region.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN FARMERS—CALL FOR GUARANTEED FINANCIAL RETURN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last month in the Budget we found out that the Government was going to make no commitment of funds for the new crop year for grain farmers. Last week we learned that grain prices this year will be 20 per cent below last year, well below the lowest price in real terms in the 1930s. Tens of thousands of farmers will not be able to get credit to plant their crops this year. Others will lose their farms.

I call on the Government to make a commitment now that farmers will get at least as much financial returns this year from their crops as they did last year.

In the same Budget there was no commitment for farmers facing a farm debt crisis, many of whom will lose their farms this year when the moratorium on farm credit loans is lifted. I call on the Government before the Government lifts that moratorium on farm credit loans to bring in a new program of assistance to farmers facing a desperate loss of land.

ABORTION

TRIBUTE TO SASKATCHEWAN PRO-LIFE ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased last week to meet with representatives of the Saskatchewan Pro-Life Association who travelled to Ottawa to present a brief to Saskatchewan Members. These people are very concerned about the millions of dollars in federal government grants being given to support organizations that require their members to hold a pro-abortion point of view in order to gain membership.

As we have heard in this House many times over the last few months, federal grant money does not seem to be available to organizations that hold a pro-life point of view. The Saskatchewan Pro-Life Association is a provincial organization representing the pro-life groups of Saskatchewan. I am pleased to report on the success of their education programs dealing with fetal development, the truth about abortion and the prevention-based sex education program, "Teen Aid". The abortion rate in Saskatchewan has dropped steadily over the last several years due in large measure to the excellent work being done by Saskatchewan pro-life groups. I commend them, Mr. Speaker, and urge them to keep up the good work.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

INTERNMENT OF JAPANESE CANADIANS DURING WORLD WAR II

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the matter of a proper redress for the dispossession and relocation Japanese Canadians suffered during the 1940s continues to await action by the Government. The present Minister responsible for multiculturalism has consulted with the National Association of Japanese Canadians as well as with others regarding redress. He has indicated that he intends to seek cabinet approval for a redress proposal, but he has not declared that the process he seeks is based on negotiation with the National Association of Japanese Canadians.

An honourable redress, one that will be acceptable to the Canadian people, is one that is negotiated with the national representatives of Japanese Canadian communities. It is one that encompasses the principle of individual compensation for losses of property and income. I call on the Minister responsible for multiculturalism to ensure that the redress process incorporates these principles. Canadians of many communities are watching anxiously to see how the Government removes this long-standing blot on our human rights record.

PUBLIC WORKS

MIRABEL EXPROPRIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a telegram from the people who were expropriated at Mirabel, and the Canadian Press reports that Ottawa will be reviewing their case.

Mr. Speaker, since the visit by Government officials to Sainte-Scholastique may have caused some confusion owing of the kind of questions they asked and their attitude to the memorandum signed by the former Minister of Public Works and representatives of those who were expropriated, today, I would like to give my constituents the assurance that I will never agree to any changes in the memorandum of agreement unless they are made to upgrade conditions for farm support.

The expropriated people at Mirabel and those who are tenants on their own land have suffered and are still suffering as a result of the absurd expropriation program implemented by the Liberals at the time. I was quite shocked today when I noticed some criticism of the settlement negotiated by our Government, which has contributed to the prosperity of Mirabel.

Finally, my constituents can rest assured that I will keep a close watch on this matter. In fact, I already have the unconditional support of all Members of the Conservative caucus from Quebec.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

INCLUSION OF SELF-GOVERNMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, Canada today is positioned to lead the world in the affirmation and accommodation of the rights of aboriginal people. Canada can take this lead later this month by recognizing and defining within our Constitution the inherent right of this country's aboriginal peoples to self-government. Around the world the rights and claims of indigenous people are receiving increased attention and support. The questions are profound, the problems complex, but here in Canada the means of resolving these issues are ready at hand.

The rights of Canada's aboriginal people are rooted in history, a history that predates the arrival of European explorers and settlers by many thousands of years. Fundamental among those rights is that of self-government, a right which was never relinquished or extinguished. By recognizing this right and by providing for its effective implementation, we will not be locking aboriginal people into the past, we will be ending a system which excludes them from the present and the future.

LIBERAL PARTY

CRUISE MISSILE TESTS—PARTY POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Last Monday, Mr. Speaker, we witnessed dissension among the Liberals concerning the cruise missile tests.

The Members for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), Davenport (Mr. Caccia), Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and York South (Mr. Nunziata) rose to vote against their leader and endorsed the motion of the socialists.

Picture the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East now associating with the socialists: a hazardous approach to collaboration with the Soviet Union.

As to the complete about-face of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) in this House last Friday, it attests to the kind of stuff he is made of. As well, the silence of the Hon. Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith)—former Liberal caucus chairman—in this House Friday reflects the weakness of their Party. Will the Leader of the Liberal Party clarify the position of the rebellious members of his caucus? Will the time ever come when the leader will say something, when he will have something to say?

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, was the Liberal Party's internal conflict so deep and so emotional that the leader was absent for the vote?

YOUTH

PUBLICATION LISTING PROGRAMS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, for those who have been waiting for the Government's long-promised policy on youth, we now have their answer: the Hot 100. It is a seductively coloured booklet described as a quick guide to what the feds are doing for youth. Its function is to make the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) look good and, my God, he does, in a full-page glossy photograph right on the first page. Go beyond that distraction and there are indeed some good programs listed and tips given which will be useful. Unfortunately, there is a lot that is not.

• (1415)

Curiously, the book includes programs which are not run by government at all, such as the Canadian Federation of Students Work and Travel program. The Missing Children Program, OHIP, Canadian Assistance Program, and Community Futures, surprisingly and creatively, turn out to be things the Government is doing for youth. Not too surprisingly, as CBC's Ian Parker found out when he called some of the telephone numbers listed, because of under-funding some of the programs appear not to exist at all.

At a cost of $370,000 this most ambitious effort by the Minister is doubtless eligible for the MOGA prize which is also listed in the book. That is the prize for the Most Outrageous Group Activity.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

RICK HANSEN'S MAN IN MOTION TOUR—ALBERTA RESEARCH CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, last week in Edmonton I was proud to have had the opportunity to meet again with Rick Hansen during his Man in Motion tour. This courageous young man has travelled through 33 countries and raised more than $7 million towards his goal of $10 million. It is a tribute to Edmonton and the Province of Alberta which have played a vital role in achieving his goal.

The people of Edmonton have raised more than $500,000 and the amount is growing. In total Albertans have raised almost $2 million and the final figure will be matched by the Alberta Government for a grand total of $4 million. The money raised by Rick Hansen will go towards spinal cord research and the assistance of disabled people. The matching funds from the Government of Alberta will be used for spinal cord research within the province. I commend the strength and tenacity of this young Canadian, and wish him the best as he moves towards the successful completion of his journey.

LOW LEVEL OF ROYALTIES PAID TO COMPOSERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, every Member of this House received a gift copy of a gold record of Canada's centennial song—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: —sent to them by the Canadian Music Publishers Association.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that things cannot be displayed in support of a statement. I ask the Hon. Member to make the statement and not make any display.

Mrs. Finestone: The Minister of Transport did it with his flyer the other day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: I know what he should do with it.

Mrs. Finestone: Besides showing it to everyone in this House.

As I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted by the partisan Members across the floor, everyone received a copy of this Canadian record which gives us a sense of pride. Little did they know that if they had been the author of that record they would not have received more than one cent for each one sold. That is because we have very poorly conceived copyright legislation in place. I would like to recognize in the gallery today representatives of various industries—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Finestone: —who are internationally known. I recognize Randy Bachman, Burton Cummings—a household name to most Canadians—Jim Valance—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has brought some excellent Canadians and their work to the House's attention but I regret to advise her that her time has expired.

FREE TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S PROPOSALS TO PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I direct this question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Canadians want to know what is on the negotiation table in the free trade discussions with the United States. They also want to know what will be on the table this evening when the Prime Minister meets with his provincial colleagues—and I am not referring to roast beef. I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister what proposals the Prime Minister will be making to the provincial Premiers this evening. Can he give us some details?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is a regular meeting of the Prime Minister and the Premiers. They will be reviewing the new areas of investment, intellectual property, and services. They will probably be discussing trade irritants and they will be working toward the completion of the negotiations for a comprehensive free trade agreement between us and the United States.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—APPROVAL OF AGREEMENT PROCESS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will pose another question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government uses its own trade negotiators to leak information on a selective basis. It is also mounting a massive glitzy publicity campaign costing taxpayers $12 million to sell whatever it is the Prime Minister is trying to sell to the country.

Instead of wasting millions and millions of dollars, will the Prime Minister not tell us what the Canadian Government has already given away in its negotiations with the United States, and what type of approval process it has in mind with respect to the provinces?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the Right Hon. Member's question. I think he is aware and would agree that this is a very important issue upon which we place a great deal of importance, as do the Premiers of the provinces. The level of consultation and the co-operation which existed with the provinces during the course of discussions on the comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States are really unprecedented in Canadian history. He should recognize that. Nothing has been given away.

If the Member is interested in more of the details, he will certainly have an opportunity to hear them in full scale when we debate this issue next Monday. We will certainly be interested in the position of his Party and in how many positions it has.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, all this Parliament has gotten from the Prime Minister in a year and a half of these negotiations is a 15-minute speech on generalities.

Some Hon. Members: That's right!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Parliament is always the last to know what is happening in the free trade negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Shame.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH PREMIERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister is going to be frank with the provincial Premiers this evening, will the Deputy Prime Minister give an undertaking that he will tell us what propositions he is making to the provincial Premiers? Will the Prime Minister be stating clearly in the House of Commons what is on the table, what is not on the table, and what the approval process is? Will the Deputy Prime Minister give us the undertaking that the Prime Minister will be here to face the House?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has already pointed out that these matters will be fully debated on Monday. We are all waiting to find out which of the many positions of the Liberal Party will actually be presented, and whether the Leader of the Official Opposition will even take part.

THE CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF GOVERNMENT'S POSITION ON CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I would like to stay on the subject of federal-provincial relations, and in the absence of the Prime Minister, perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister could answer my question.

During the past fifteen months, the Government of Quebec initiated a number of meetings with the provinces to discuss the constitutional question and approval by Quebec of the Constitution Act, 1982.

At the last meeting held here in Ottawa, attended by senior officials, representatives of the federal government were also present. I therefore would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to inform the House and Canadians what the federal Government's position was, as expressed by its officials, at this meeting.

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course those discussions are continuing. With respect to the Government, the Hon. Leader of the Senate is leading these discussions, and those negotiations will continue. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is trying to drag the constitutional position of the Quebec Government into the trade debate, but it is quite clear that the Prime Minister spoke very succinctly when he said on February 17 that on matters of international treaties and negotiations of this nature, the Government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada will speak on matters of such a nature which fall within federal jurisdiction.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question was not loaded. It was quite straightforward, and isn't the Government always forcing the Opposition to take a stand on various issues? It is now two and a half years since this Government came to power, and we have yet to receive any information on the Conservative Government's position on the issue of Quebec and the Constitution. When is it going to make its position clear?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, unlike the previous Government which acted unilaterally on these kinds of issues, these discussions are continuing. When a decision is taken on this, hopefully it will find favour with the Government of the Province of Quebec. And it will be announced in the appropriate manner.

DISCUSSIONS AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, given the paramount importance to the aboriginal people of Canada of the recognition of their inherent right to self-government, and the difficulties that the Minister of Justice knows have been encountered in the preliminary talks, will the Minister of Justice advise the House if the Prime Minister will take the opportunity of his meeting with the Premiers tonight to impress upon them the importance to aboriginal people and all Canadians of reaching agreement at the First Ministers' conference?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question because I share with him his position on the importance of having an agreement between the aboriginal peoples, the provinces, and the federal Government at the First Ministers' meeting to be held at the end of this month. I believe it is fair to say that the federal Government has taken leadership in trying to arrive at an agreement to recognize the right to self-government of the native peoples of our country and articulate that on the basis of negotiated agreements. Recent public opinion polls have indicated that the vast majority of Canadians want a system by which these self-government arrangements are negotiated. That is a position shared by the aboriginal people of Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Does the federal Government accept, and will it indeed promote and endorse the concept that the right to self-government of aboriginal peoples is not something that is just dependent on the consent and agreement of the federal and provincial Governments, but derives from their status under the treaties that their forefathers made?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the First Ministers' meetings and the preliminary meetings that have taken place until now is to define aboriginal rights in the Constitution. We are dealing in a constitutional context. The Hon. Member will understand that it is absolutely essential in this process that we have the federal Government and seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population to attain constitutional change.

Mr. Riis: What is your position?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We have articulated our position over and over again. We have given leadership. As a matter of fact, a very distinguished journalist, Mr. Peter Trueman, stated recently: "Few Canadian Prime Ministers have so strongly supported aboriginal rights or worked so hard for them". Our Government's record is clear.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice is very long on generalities, and I agree with them, but is very short on specifics. What exactly is the Government doing besides letting Ministers say that it will be too expensive?

• (1430)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very unfair statement on the part of the Hon. Member. There is no question that we have put in countless hours. We have had bilateral meetings. The Prime Minister has met bilaterally. We have had an opportunity to meet with our provincial counterparts. We have had officials' meetings going on and on. We have been tireless in our desire to give the leadership which will result in an amendment to our Constitution. That is something for which I hope I will have the support of the Hon. Member and his Party and, indeed, of all Members of the House of Commons.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice on the same subject. Mr. George Erasmus, National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, has charged, regarding plans for the forthcoming First Ministers' conference, that the federal Government is not playing a leadership role. He said: "In former years, the federal Government was a major ally of the native people. Now we have some of the provinces taking a lead". Can the Minister of Justice explain to the House, and to the country, why he and his Government are being so wishy-washy on their obligations under the Constitution towards aboriginal people? Why has he created a leadership vacuum on this issue of aboriginal rights so that the Province of Nova Scotia has had to come in and vainly try to fill the void?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have to apologize for the position taken by this Government and by the Prime Minister. I repeat, the observations made by Mr. Trueman I think are shared by any independent or impartial observer of the political scene in Canada. The fact is that if the Hon. Member and his Party had all the answers, I do not understand why we have not already had this great constitutional amendment. They had lots of time to make a constitutional amendment and they did nothing. It was only through the efforts of this Government and this Prime Minister that strides forward have been made, and we are going to work as hard as possible in order to make sure that agreement comes about.

SUPREMACY OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if he does not honestly think that constitutional rights can never be contingent upon agreements which are signed with Governments? Does he not believe that constitutional rights, including aboriginal rights, must stand on their own and can never be compromised? Does he not accept that?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the reality is that constitutional rights which stand on their own have to be defined in some way. The Hon. Member will understand that. Is it the position of the Liberal Party that the courts should determine the extent and nature of self-government? Or does he share the view put forward by all the aboriginal representatives, indeed, by all provinces, that the method of determining aboriginal self-government rights should be by political negotiation? I think the Hon. Member, if he considers and reflects on this, will decide that this advice is the best advice to take, and that is what I am taking.

BRITISH COLUMBIA LAWSUITS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Justice. The Supreme Court of Canada split three-three on the landmark Nisga'a-Calder case 15 years ago. Now the British Columbia courts are addressing the Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en case. The Federal Court is addressing the Kaska-Dene case, the Sparrow case, Haida sovereignty on Lyell Island, Meares Island, and the list goes on.

Negotiation has been replaced by lawsuits. Is that the route that the Minister and his Government wish to pursue in affirming aboriginal title in British Columbia? If it is not, why are there no active negotiations between the federal Government and the aboriginal people in British Columbia at this time?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has been following this particular matter very closely. He will know that this litigation originally took place between the Indian peoples to whom he referred and the Province of British Columbia. We were only brought into the litigation by an application on the part of the Province of British Columbia. Accordingly, we were not any part of initiating or being a party to that litigation. We are now in that litigation. The matter is before the courts, Mr. Speaker, and you will have to determine whether or not it is appropriate for us to comment on it. However, I think the Hon. Member has indicated already, as far as I know, that he thinks the position being taken in that litigation by the federal Government is a reasonable position to take.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Would the Minister, on behalf of the Government, state unequivocally whether it recognizes and affirms, and intends to affirm, aboriginal title in British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks an important question. However, when he refers to those jurisdictions, the ability of the federal Government to act unilaterally is now placed in jeopardy when we cannot enter into negotiations. We can only affirm where we can negotiate. If we cannot negotiate, as my colleague, the Minister of Justice has put forward, then we are in court. That is not where this Government would like to be, but that is where we are. We hope to be able to negotiate and come to conclusions where we are not forced into having courts make decisions which should be made by negotiation.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST THAT THREE CHILEANS BE ADMITTED TO CANADA

Mrs. Lise Bougault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Although the hunger strike started by the Chileans in Montreal is rather drastic and the Government should not act as a result of such action, the case of three Chilean women, one of whom is seven and a half months pregnant, who are being held in Buenos Aires is something I find particularly distressing. Could the Minister give some special consideration to the case of these three women and take steps to have them join their husbands in Canada before the pregnancy precludes flying for one of these women?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): I have said many times that a Government cannot afford to give in to demonstrations and occurrences of the kind that are being used in Montreal to challenge Government decisions, otherwise it may be faced with this type of situation on a regular basis. However, we have given a great deal of thought to the issue raised by the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau, and I think that Canada has a tradition of considering that in cases like these, the family as well as the individual aspect should be examined. The Hon. Member's point is well taken, and I intend to ask my officials at the Department of Employment and Immigration to issue immediately permits allowing these three women who are—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, this is very important, the entry of the three women whose husbands are in Montreal. This does not in any way prejudge a decision on whether or not they have refugee status. This is merely to reunite the family, the father and mother and there are a few children involved as well. Once again, the decision on whether or not they have refugee status will be made in accordance with other criteria. We are, however, allowing them to come to Canada right away.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ALLEGED PLAN TO CLOSE RURAL POST OFFICES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister in charge of Canada Post. The Minister, appearing before the Committee on Government Operations, stated that Canada Post had no plan for nor any list of rural post office shutdowns. But, yesterday afternoon, Mr. Jack Van Dusen, spokesman for Canada Post admitted that the Foothills, Alberta, plan to shut down 200 post offices across Canada this year is exactly that. Who speaks the truth, the Minister or Mr. Jack Van Dusen?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I said in committee yesterday stands, that in fact there is no list of 200 or 20 or 2,000 post offices which are scheduled for closing. What I said in a letter to all Members of Parliament, which the Hon. Member should read, is that when a postmaster quits, retires or wants to leave, or we lose the lease on the post office, and so on, it will be examined to see whether, in view of changing demographics and circumstances, that type of service continues to be appropriate. Over the next five years we will be increasing the number of outlets by 6,000, not decreasing them.

QUERY CONCERNING ALLEGED LIST

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, if there is no list, as the Minister says, how can he give 90 days' notice to consult Canadians? Why does the Minister not tell Canada Post to make the list public so that Canadians can have the necessary time to consult and to decide whether or not they want the post office the way it is now or a new post office which would be just a stand at which stamps are sold, something which is now being offered to them? Will the Minister come clean with Canadians?

• (1440)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am rapidly reaching the conclusion that the only way I can stop the repetition of these questions is to fabricate an imaginary list and give it to the Hon. Member so that he can run around the country scaring people. There is no list. I am sorry, there is no list.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—INVESTMENT ISSUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade has said today that the Prime Minister wished to discuss investment as an issue in the free trade talks with the Premiers, even though Simon Reisman has no mandate to negotiate this matter. Will the Minister confirm that this is because the United States has asked for greater freedom for its investors as yet one more concession in the free trade talks?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that we have made no such concession to the United States. The Hon. Member is correct when he says that the Cabinet has not given the negotiators any mandate in this area beyond, of course, trade-related investment, which is what was specified in the original proposals between the Prime Minister and the President. The purpose of tonight's discussion is simply to hear the views of the Premiers on this matter because no mandate has been struck by Cabinet for the negotiators. The whole process of consultation with the Premiers, the private sector, and the provinces is an exercise in collecting and listening to all of the groups, all of the players and all of the people of Canada who have an interest in the free trade discussions.

Mr. Langdon: Frankly, one wonders. Why collect views if the subject is not on the bargaining table?

ROLE OF PROVINCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a supplementary question on a second and somewhat related area. Will the Minister herself guarantee on this question of provincial participation in the trade talks that there will be no agreement signed with the United States without clear provincial approval in the key areas which might affect them?

Mr. Andre: Robert Fulford is right.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am having trouble following the Hon. Member's point.

An Hon. Member: Who wouldn't?

Miss Carney: I again refer to the fact that this has been the most extensive consultation ever undertaken by any Government on a national issue. There have been 12 meetings of provincial officials alone, in addition to the First Ministers' meeting. There have been meetings of Trade Ministers. There has been discussion and identification of issues for more than a year now. I am surprised that the Hon. Member does not seem to be aware of this. We have 15 sectoral groups which are meeting constantly with us and with officials in the TNO. Ministers and I will be meeting with SAGITs this week—and I meet with them regularly.

So at the end of the day we will have to find out what is going to be in an over-all agreement before we can identify whether it is federal or provincial jurisdiction which applies. I point out to the Hon. Member that the negotiation of international treaties is a federal responsibility.

FUTURE OF RURAL POST OFFICE

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post said yesterday before a standing committee:

> This year 20,000 Canadians will have heart attacks. It would save the rest of us a lot of anxiety if we had a list of those people.

Does the Minister not realize that Canadians do not expect him to list 20,000 Canadians who will be suffering from heart attacks? What millions of rural Canadians want to know, in order to relieve their anxiety, is will the Minister now stand in his place and say that no rural post office in any community will close without the permission of the people in that community?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if one tempers some of the extreme language, in essence that is what I said. I can no more predict when there will be a circumstance in which the postmaster will quit, retire, resign, or a building will burn down than I can predict who those 20,000 Canadians are who will have heart attacks this year. In those circumstances we will look at the situation and, if appropriate, there may be a change in the postal service. But it will be with the consultation of the Member of Parliament and the people affected. It will have to be a change that is reasonable to reasonable people.

RETAIL SERVICES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, in his letter to MPs, the Minister said that Canada Post plans to place the majority of its retail services in rural areas in the hands of the private sector. Yesterday, before the committee he said:

> McDonald's Restaurants are able to predict how many hamburgers Canadians will eat and where its customers are likely to live over the next five years, the period covered by the latest Canada Post plan.

I ask the Minister what in heaven's name has McDonald's Restaurants to do with Canada Post? Are we to expect that under the present Government rural post offices will operate out of McDonald's Restaurants soon? Rural Canadians do not want their post offices changed; they want them to stay where they are. Is the Minister suffering from a serious "Mac attack"?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am always delighted to receive a question from the Ronald McDonald of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, indeed, the plan is to look at privatization because we feel the public would get better service, for example, if there were post office outlets in retail outlets that operate for 12 hours a day as opposed to a post office that operates from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. We think there is an opportunity for giving better service to the public by privatizing which, incidentally, will save some money. Perhaps we may be able to save enough to buy one of those Muppet Babies from McDonald's for the Hon. Member. Gonzo might be appropriate.

THE JUDICIARY

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC BE CONSULTED BEFORE QUEBEC JUDGE APPOINTED TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, in the absence of the Prime Minister.

Recently, the Quebec Minister responsible for Intergovernment Affairs, Gil Rémillard, asked that the Prime Minister consult with the Province of Quebec before appointing a justice from Quebec to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Can the Minister ensure Quebecers that the Quebec Government will be consulted before that important appointment is made?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. There are two elements involved here. One is the discussion that is going on with my colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, and Mr. Remillard, on the constitutional question and the whole range of options being put forward in that discussion which will involve consultation with all provincial Governments as well.

The other question now is with respect to the appointment of a new Justice for the Supreme Court of Canada under the present regime. The Hon. Member might be interested in knowing that I have already had one chat with my provincial counterpart, Mr. Marx, in this regard. However, we will not be making a constitutional change on the basis of precedent with respect to this particular appointment, if that is what the Hon. Member is asking.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, we hope that it is not the same kind of chat which the Minister had with the Attorney General of Manitoba before appointing Sterling Lyon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Why don't you slander out there so that somebody—

An Hon. Member: Harvie, be nice.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

REQUEST THAT SECOND WOMAN BE APPOINTED TO SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Since the Supreme Court of Canada has only one woman member, the very distinguished Justice Bertha Wilson, and since there are many woman lawyers and justices in Quebec who are well qualified to sit on the Supreme Court, will the Minister appoint a second woman to the Supreme Court of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why the New Democratic Party breaches every rule of fairness and principle to attack a member of the judiciary. It is an ongoing thing, and I think it is malicious and absolutely unacceptable. The fact of the matter is that we are considering a wide range of candidates for the Supreme Court of Canada. We are looking at everyone who has the qualification to serve on the highest court in our land. I think it is a matter of some personal pride that, while I have been Minister of Justice, I have been involved in the appointment of a higher percentage of women to the bench, the elevation of women to the bench, of which the Hon. Member is fully aware. I think the role of women in the judiciary—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would challenge that.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should not get involved in this debate. The fact of the matter is that the Government's record in respect of the appointment of women to important judicial and other positions is precedent setting. We intend to improve on our present record.

COPYRIGHT

ROYALTIES PAID TO SONG WRITERS AND PUBLISHERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, very few of us are aware that each time a song is composed and recorded in Canada, our Copyright Act requires the song writer to split a royalty of only two cents per song with the publisher. This is the lowest royalty rate in the world. My question is for the Minister of Communications. Will the Minister introduce a simple Bill abolishing this antiquated and outdated two cent ceiling, so that Canadian song writers and publishers will receive a fair return for their creative talents? It has been two cents for too long.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, and as I have told her in committee on a number of occasions, the revision of the copyright law will be introduced in the House very shortly. I will look forward to having the support of the Hon. Member and her Party for that revision when it is introduced.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that we have had two reports on this particular article in the Bill and that both of them have recommended the abolishment of Clause 19. In the meantime, while we go through the whole process, we do not have a copyright for song writers in Canada; we have a "copywrong".

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE BILL TO ABOLISH COPYRIGHT ACT SECTION ADVERSELY AFFECTING COMPOSERS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My question is also directed to the Minister. Does she have the political will to introduce a Bill that would abolish that section of the Copyright Act that is harmful to music composers? Two cents is a shame!

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as most Canadians are aware, the copyright law was written in 1924 and it has not been revised since that time. Since 1984, when this Government was elected to office, we have introduced a discussion paper on copyright. We have listened to presentations from groups and organizations, including song writers, from all across the country. We have listened to the subcommittee's report on copyright. However, what I want to emphasize is that we are taking action, whereas the Liberal Party, for 50 of the years since 1924, did absolutely nothing about revision of the copyright law.

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. As the Minister knows, the former Liberal Government failed to enshrine property rights in the Charter. I raised the same question back in September, 1985. Again I ask the Minister when will he be discussing this very important oversight with his provincial counterparts in an effort to correct this grave injustice?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member, having a great and abiding interest in this important topic, will know that the Conservative Party has long supported property rights. Indeed, the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights specifically provides for the right to enjoyment of property. There is in fact a group of Attorneys General working on this particular situation now. It is on the second tranche of constitutional matters which will be discussed after we conclude our discussions in respect of the Quebec matter. We will be pursuing the matter, and I thank the Hon. Member for his continuing interest.

COPYRIGHT

CONTENT OF PROPOSED AMENDING LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. It also deals with the very long-standing injustice to composers over royalties. Will the Minister tell song writers and all other Canadians that in the copyright legislation she will be bringing into the House this long-standing injustice will be remedied? Will she tell them that it will be in that first lot of legislation, given that there is a great deal of anxiety that she will bring in only some technicalities, not important bread and butter issues such as compulsory licensing?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, in response to the subcommittee report the Government agreed with that recommendation. All I can say to her now and to those who are interested in this point is that the Government will be dealing with that issue when it revises the copyright law.

Ms. McDonald: That is rather sad news, indeed. It is nice to know about the principles, but the Government's response to the copyright report was equivocal.

COMPULSORY LICENSING QUERY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am asking for a very clear answer from the Minister. Will the abolition of compulsory licensing be in the first lot of legislation which she brings in? Will important bread and butter issues, such as exhibition rights, performers' performances, stiffer penalties for pirates, dealing with blank tapes and cassettes, and the need to get more money from those directions, be in that first important lot of copyright legislation?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, what I am very impressed by is the interest of the Hon. Member in so many of these issues. We have been trying to further this revision of legislation. I want to ensure that she is as adamant in committee and in the House when the legislation is introduced as she is now. I look forward to the support of her Party.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE ADVERTISEMENTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It concerns his lack of leadership on the AIDS advertising issue. Why did the Minister not tell the House yesterday that his Department received a Telex on February 28 which made quite clear that advertisers and private broadcasters had no intention of running those ads? Why did he not seize the opportunity at that time to meet personally with private broadcasters to let them know the importance of getting out a public message on the killer disease, AIDS?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have shown leadership on this question. I do not accept the charge which the Hon. Member makes. I think it is pretty ridiculous that in January of this year the CPHA put forward ad examples when, for example, we were told that a female actor in an ad could not use exercise clothes but that they must be sweat-suits. If that is the level to which we must come down in terms of this killer disease, if that is lack of leadership, and if the kind of allegation she is throwing around is that I have not looked at it pretty carefully, I think it is ridiculous, and I hope that the advertisers reconsider.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET BROADCASTERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am not making an allegation, I am making a statement of fact. On February 28 the Department of National Health and Welfare was telexed. If the Minister had chosen at that time, he could have shown leadership and personally set up a meeting with the broadcasters to let them know that they should join the 20th century. Is the Minister prepared today to set up a meeting with the broadcasters to let them know that they should run these ads to let the public know that this deadly disease AIDS has to be fought across the airwaves? We have to get the message out, and we need the Minister's leadership. We do not need his platitudes.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the country does not need the Member's allegations or sensationalism. When the CPHA had submitted the ads in January, changes were made in February with respect to some of the problems that the broadcasters, had such as the one I already mentioned, and the visual use of packets of condoms. That was all changed. I believe with respect to those changes we were trying to meet the broadcasters request as much as we could.

I have said to the broadcasters publicly that I hope they will reconsider. Just today at one o'clock, for example, at the International Conference on AIDS in this city the various ads being used in various jurisdictions were being shown. I think as people look at what is happening in other jurisdictions and as they are looking at what our ads are like, a second opinion might prevail and they might show those ads.

ASSISTANCE FOR GRAIN GROWERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I think all grain farmers appreciate the very difficult task which the Government has in responding to the special needs of the grain industry today. However, I think the Minister has a responsibility to be as clear as is humanly possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask when the time for Question Period is coming to a close that Hon. Members would pay attention to the clock and make sure that their preambles are short, concise, and their questions are to the point. The Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hovdebo: In view of the cloudy answer the Minister gave me yesterday, Mr. Speaker, will he indicate clearly that there will, indeed, be special assistance for the grain industry in the next crop year? Even if he does not give the specific details, will there be assistance available?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must indicate that it was not a cloudy message that I gave the Hon. Member yesterday. It was a very clear message. It was a message that initially 55 farm leaders joined with me last Thursday. The Hon. Member should understand that it would be quite inappropriate for us at this point to give any indication that would influence the farmers' decision to plant the 1987 crop.

I would refer the Hon. Member to words in the Speech from the Throne where it states that the Government will spare no effort. I refer him as well to the language in the Budget which mandated the Canadian Wheat Board Minister and myself to continue meeting farm leaders to work out some type of useful, common sense and effective program to assist Canadian farmers in their time of difficulty.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister then indicate that there will be money available next crop year which will be at least as much as there was last year since we know the price of grain will go down at least 20 per cent?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious at this point in time that I cannot give that indication. I can indicate that the Government has always placed a high priority on agriculture. I ask the Member to examine the record. Our Government recognizes the difficulty in the grains and oil seed sector and we have signalled every intention to work with the farm leadership of this country to map out some type of a program that will be of assistance in their time of difficulty.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that the time for Question Period has expired.

I think it is appropriate for the Chair to hear the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) in the continuation of the question of privilege originally brought here a few days ago by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the intervention yesterday of the Hon. President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret).

I also want to give notice to Members that I have notice of a point of order on behalf of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and I will hear the Hon. Member when the first matter is completed.

PRIVILEGE

INTERVIEW GIVEN TO PRESS BY MR. DE COTRET

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank you for suspending the debate on the question of privilege raised in this House by my hon. colleague for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) on March 9, 1987. I have told you about my own concerns regarding the rights and privileges of Members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, in his capacity as employer of the Public Service of Canada, the President of the Treasury Board objected to the motion passed by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to swear in the four Unemployment Insurance Commissioners.

It was clear in my own mind and that of my colleagues of the Committee that this resolution was passed because one of the commissioners—not the one who was mentioned by the President of the Treasury Board—accepted with reluctance our invitation to appear before us and requested that the meeting be held in camera, which we judged unacceptable under the circumstances.

The Members of this House and of its committees are masters of their own destiny and nothing must hinder their work as Members of Parliament or of a committee, especially when they are only following the rules and procedures of the House and its committees.

Mr. Speaker, I agree completely with what the chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), said in the House yesterday, as well as with the intervention of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt the day before.

Mr. Speaker, the servants of the state, technocrats, bureaucrats and senior public servants, who work tirelessly for their country and fellow citizens, deserve our respect and admiration. Most of them do a superhuman job and give priority to the interests of the state and the Government over their own. I can only congratulate them and encourage them to persevere so that my Government can always be reelected. As for those who would be tempted to bring about maliciously the defeat of my Government, I would like them to take note of my vigilance and my determination to stop any such attempt.

The Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration, Mr. Gaétan Lussier, must not feel that he was the personal target of a general motion to swear in all the Unemployment Insurance Commissioners. Just as the Hon. Members for Calgary West and Nickel Belt, I believe that he has accomplished miracles with the small resources at his disposal. As an Officer of Canada, our youngest senior public servant has served his country extremely well and with ability as well as professionalism.

Point of Order—Mr. Robinson

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that Mr. Lussier will never dash out of the room of a committee of the House of Commons and that he will remain at the disposal of the democratically elected members of this House to give an account of the most important spending sector in this country, namely unemployment insurance.

Mr. Speaker, the gesture of the President of the Treasury Board to defend his employees is quite laudable. However, the members of the Committee must protect their rights and privileges as parliamentarians and account to the Canadian people for the activities they are asked to monitor.

Mr. Speaker, let us reassert our rights and privileges immediately.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Jourdenais) for his intervention. However, the Chair will have to reserve its decision for now, perhaps until next week.

POINT OF ORDER

INQUIRY REGARDING WRITTEN ANSWER TO QUESTION ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a brief but important point of order arising from the a written answer to a question on the Order Paper of February 20 last.

Recently it has become apparent that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has adopted many of the trappings of the Head of State of Canada. It was with considerable concern that I read the written response of the Prime Minister's own Parliamentary Secretary to a question asked recently in which in his response he referred to the Prime Minister as the Head of State of Canada. I refer to page 3655 of Hansard. At that page, in response to a question by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Saint Marie (Mr. Malépart) the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson) answers as follows:

> 1. & 2. As Head of State, it is a longstanding practice for a Prime Minister and/or his wife to give hospitality—

● (1510)

While we know the Prime Minister has great delusions of grandeur and has enjoyed the trappings of the Head of State, surely it is appropriate that the Prime Minister's Parliamentary Secretary set the record straight by saying that the Government does not view the Prime Minister as the Head of State of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should indicate to Hon. Members that although I will hear Hon. Members, it seems to me it would strain the Chair a great deal to establish the entire matter raised by the Hon. Member for Burnaby as a point of order. Unless someone can persuade me of that pretty quickly, I think that is the end of it.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) knows that the wording of the answer to Question No. 54 was correct in one official language and wrong in the other official language. We took steps to have it corrected in Hansard. Our House Leader dealt with the House Leader on the other side to have it corrected and the Hon. Member for Burnaby is just up to mischief.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has indicated that this does not seem to be a point of order at all, but I will hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought to our attention. I entered into discussions with the House Leader of the New Democratic Party and the House Leader of the Liberal Party. I pointed out that it was in error in English but correct in French. I then wrote the following letter to Hansard:

> The English translation of the answer to question No. 54 as provided by Mr. Len Gustafson, Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister, contains an error. It now reads "As the Head of State" whereas it should read "As Head of Government".
> I have discussed this correction with Mr. Herb Gray, House Leader of the Official Opposition and Mr. Nelson Riis, House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and they are agreeable to the change being made in the final version of Hansard.
> Thank you for your co-operation in this matter.

I do not know what more we can do when an honest error has been made but correct it after discussions with our colleagues. To have this kind of nonsense come along a lot later is an abuse of the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, a long explanation is being made here. I must say that on February 20 when we received Hansard, a number of Members brought to our attention that there had obviously been an interesting slip made. A number of Members asked if it was proper to refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as Head of State. Indeed, it did cause us some concern.

A number of days later, probably two weeks later, the Parliamentary Secretary came to me and asked if, for the official version of Hansard which takes effect a number of days after the fact, it would be acceptable to have this clarified. I said that it had caused some concern to a number of my colleagues that the Hon. Member used the term "Head of State", but for the official record that correction might be appropriate. As the Parliamentary Secretary has clearly indicated, we had agreed to the change in the official record. Perhaps the Government should change its mind and clarify it.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, the House might be interested to know that the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) met me in the hallway and asked me the specific trap question: "Who is the Head of State", and I answered him by saying: "The Governor General of Canada". The Hon. Member knows he is up to mischief. If I have caused any embarrassment to anyone by signing something that I did not read very carefully, I apologize.

Mr. Speaker: As the Chair indicated, the Chair had some doubt as to whether or not it was a point of order, but the Chair has no doubt when recognizing an apology. I think perhaps it is time to go on to something else.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1987-88

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General transmitting Supplementary Estimates (C) for the financial year ending March 31, 1987, was presented by the Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS

RENEWAL OF EQUALIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House today that I am introducing legislation which will renew the Equalization Program. There are few government programs which are as important as equalization and I think all Hon. Members would agree with that.

At $5.3 billion this year, equalization provides major federal financial support for the less wealthy regions of Canada. Without this assistance, the lower-income provinces would be unable to provide to Canadians residing in these regions the basic services enjoyed in other parts of Canada. In particular the provinces of Atlantic Canada, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, rely on this support. Equalization is also important for Quebec and Manitoba and for Saskatchewan which recently became eligible for these payments.

[Translation]

In keeping with our constitutional obligation, this Government has respected a firm financial commitment with respect to equalization, and we did so despite the financial restraints dictated by our own situation.

[English]

Accordingly, the legislation I am tabling calls for the renewal of the present Equalization Program. This is expected to result in substantial growth in payments in the years ahead. This growth will be further enhanced as a result of improvement to the program's revenue measures to be phased in over the next two years. Total equalization entitlements under a renewed program are expected to increase to about $5.6 billion in 1987-88, and to about $5.9 billion in 1988-89. This means anticipated annual increases of about $300 million each year, or over 5 per cent annually.

This legislation, which will also extend and update other parts of the Fiscal Arrangements Act, was preceded by an extensive process of consultation with provinces which began in the spring of 1985. As Members may be aware, the preliminary 1986 consensus released in January indicates that some provinces, the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Saskatchewan, have been overpaid by about $270 million in equalization payments for the past two fiscal years. By law, the federal Government would expect to collect this amount next year as part of the normal process of adjustments to payments, both up and down, which takes place on an ongoing basis as a result of changes to data. The long-established rules are clear. If changes in data mean the federal Government owes provinces money, we pay the full amount. If they mean provinces owe the federal Government money, we recover. It is important that transfer payments continue to be based on the latest population data if the system is to remain fair and accurate. We cannot ignore the new census. However, we are conscious of the difficult financial situation of the lower-income provinces. We would like to do what we can to help, bearing in mind the federal Government's own financial problems.

Therefore the legislation also provides for forgiveness, on a net basis, of amounts owed to the federal Government under equalization in respect of the last two fiscal years as a result of the census. That is to say, the amounts due the federal Government as a result of the census will be forgiven to the extent that they exceed future increases in equalization entitlements, for those same two fiscal years, which may arise as a result of changes in other financial and economic data relevant to the equalization formula.

Our action respecting these recoveries is not something we have to do. There is no obligation on us, legal or otherwise, to forgive amounts owed to us. We are taking this step because we want to be helpful and because we understand the difficult circumstances faced by the provinces receiving equalization. We know how important federal support is to them. We are determined to provide that support within the limits our own difficult fiscal circumstances allow.

The actions I have announced today are part of a pattern of strong support which this Government has been providing to the lower-income provinces through equalization over the past two and a half years. Our concern and support began with the provision of supplementary assistance in 1985 amounting to $285 million. It is continuing with renewal and enhancement of the present equalization program. It is reflected in the forgiveness proposal I have just outlined for equalization overpayments owed to the federal Government as a result of new census data.

I would suggest that the considerably increased funding stemming from our proposals bear witness to the federal Government's respect for the equalization principle.

[English]

I know Parliament will want to consider the fiscal arrangements legislation carefully. I know it will also bear in mind that authority to provide equalization payments expires March 31, 1987, and that our collective interest is in ensuring that these vital payments to the less wealthy provinces continue uninterrupted.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, eight days ago, more specifically on March 3rd, in this House I directed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in which I said in part:

> As a result of the 1986 mid-decade census, the Federal Government will recuperate a windfall gain of nearly $600 million from its equalization payments to the provinces, and for post-secondary education and health care.

Therefore, I raised this important issue which comes up as a result of the mid-term census and creates for the administration of provincial public affairs a problem which is sometimes positive and sometimes negative.

In the announcement he made today the Minister of Finance is doing is what had been done in 1981-82 by the Liberal Government of the time. The present Minister is following exactly the same route making it possible for the provinces to benefit from variations in their equalization budget as a result of the census. The problems resulting from the mid-term census are always difficult because that particular census carried out every five years lacks the precision of the others. Following the decade census, quite often we realize that a population readjustment is closer to the estimates, thereby creating serious problems.

The Minister of Finance, therefore, has met the expectations of the provinces and, following a suggestion of the Liberal Opposition, he has implemented the same program which had been followed in 1981-82 by the previous Liberal Government and applied it to the provinces which would have been penalized by a correction that was unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has announced that he will refund $270 million. Clearly, if I understood him right, this will not affect equalization payments. Established program financing is also affected by population changes, but the Minister did not mention it in his statement, so that the provinces may loose between $170 million and $175 million because of this population change which may prove to be wrong when the next decade census comes around.

I therefore urge the Minister of Finance to consider this other aspect very closely, namely the losses likely to be incurred by the provinces because of this mid-term census which will affect the financing of Government activities, especially in the context of Bill C-96 which had cut nearly $8 billion in the payments which the Federal Government should have normally made to the provinces within the next five or six years for the financing of post-secondary education, health care and Medicare.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about $270 million, but the Government of Canada is saving much more than that with this complex demographic assessment, for the Minister only takes into account losses incurred during the two previous years. If current provincial losses were added in fiscal year 1987-88 as well as other provincial losses due to that demographic variation incurred in health and hospitalization programs as well as in post-secondary education programs, the federal gain and provincial loss would exceed $600 million.

The Minister of Finance has decided to hand back $270 million. Following that operation, he still has a rather interesting net profit.

Coming back to the problem which I have raised in the House, I would suggest to him that he could perhaps correct the discrimination suffered by Quebec in previous years.

Finally, Mr. Speaker . . . you are indicating that I have only a few seconds left but I would like to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that transferring part of the federal deficit to the provinces, as he has done with Bill C-96 and with an operation which has enabled him to realize a net profit of some $370 to $400, due to a demographic variation, will not help him to solve the problem of public indebtedness in Canada. He is merely tranferring it to the neighbours, and I mean the Finance Ministers of all our Canadian provinces.

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Government came to power it talked about national reconciliation as being one of the major objectives of the new Government. The announcement now that, despite the opposition of the provinces and the failure of consultation with regard to equalization with the provinces, the Government is going forward with this particular project represents a major failure in its efforts, if it still believes in it, to seek national reconciliation and, in particular, to ensure justice for the poorer provinces and regions of the country.

In 1982 equalization equalled 1.3 per cent of the GNP of Canada. It will be equal to about 1 per cent now and that proportion will tend to decline over time with these proposals.

We welcome the Government's decision not to recover equalization overpayments for the last two years. However, provinces like the province of Quebec will suffer in the future, as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) commented, because of the reduction, and the tax problem, the problem in terms of lack of economic potential compared with the rest of the country will continue to exist. We are therefore not happy at all with this proposal.

Mr. Speaker, I could also mention that the Government said it does not intend to recover equalization overpayments for the last two years, but in return, it is asking the province of Quebec and the other provinces to abandon their attempts to claim supplementary payments. The federal Government's decisions in the past have given them no reason to be optimistic. For Quebec, we are talking about $97 million for fiscal 1985-86. Their request for this amount was turned down, and today, to be "excused" from recovery of overpayments, they have to give up their claims.

[English]

I remind the House that last fall the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) quite specifically indicated that the additional amounts coming from the technical changes in equalization, which amount to $175 million, would be added on in a year. He said that publicly and to the press. We now note with regret that he has spread that over a period of two years. We are particularly concerned that the Government has failed to address the fundamental weaknesses and inequities with regard to equalization and the equalization formula. The provinces have been cut in respect of the Established Programs Financing Act. We have learned from interviews as recently as today that the Government intends to abandon completely its program of regional economic development. It will speak of industrial development which will go to the regions which have, and less and less will be done for the have-not regions. They will be left to hang in the wind.

On equalization the Government pushed through what it wanted to do in the absence of an accord with the provinces and has held to the five-province standard which, by any stretch of the imagination, is now inadequate. I have reminded the House on several occasions that in seven provinces of Canada, despite five years of economic recovery, the unemployment rate is higher today than it was in 1981-82. The Premier of Newfoundland says that his province may face bankruptcy in two years if effective action is not taken to help the province establish a more sound economic and fiscal base. Newfoundland has a sales tax of 11 or 12 per cent. The sales taxes in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick are comparable. In other words, the fiscal efforts being made in those provinces are much greater than those being made in other provinces. In Alberta, which has substantial problems, there is no sales tax at all.

I remind Members of the House of the Constitution which was passed in 1981 and came into force a year later. Section 34(2) reads:

Parliament and the Government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as the Quebec Minister of Finance just wrote to the Minister of Finance of Canada, here in the House, that is no longer the case for Quebec or any of the other provinces that are disadvantaged. And in fact, as Mr. Lévesque said in his letter, Quebec cannot afford a level of public services reasonably comparable to that of the other provinces unless it places a tax burden on its taxpayers that is far heavier than the average level of taxation in Canada, or else goes deeper into debt.

Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Minister of Finance believes that Quebec will owe $1.4 billion more in 1985-86 under the existing equalization formula. It is a fact that the existing formula which the Minister of Finance of Canada wants to maintain does not live up to the solemn commitment contained in the Canadian Constitution. These are the facts. We are creating two classes of provinces in Canada, the wealthy provinces and the others, those which receive equalization payments and cannot provide substantially the same level of Government services because of the weaknesses of the existing equalization system.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to make specific comments on the bill, but generally speaking, the Government has forgotten the commitment made by the Conservatives during the 1984 electoral campaign to work for national reconciliation. They are no longer working to reach this goal and this is a serious mistake. It shows a marked lack of concern.

OPPOSITION TO EXODUS LINK CONTRACT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present to the House today 19 petitions bearing the signatures of over 1,000 Toronto residents stating their opposition to the Exodus Link parole privatization contract which would locate dangerous ex-convicts in Parkdale—High Park. The petition calls for the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to terminate immediately funding to Exodus Link until an alternative location outside the boundaries of Parkdale—High Park has been found. I want to add my full and complete support to their petition.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present several petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg and some towns in Manitoba. The petitioners suggest that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They feel that the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They, therefore, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO ESTABLISHMENT OF MILITARY BASE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting this petition on behalf of 155 Canadians, most of whom live in Alberta. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to restrict the Department of National Defence from using, utilizing, purchasing, leasing, or in any way establishing a military base on the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains of Alberta, and in particular the Highwood River Valley area abutting the Kananaskis Provincial Park. This is the three hundred and forty-first petition that has been presented and there are scores more on the way. A certificate is attached.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY—S. O. 82—ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—SELF-GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its timid and unimaginative approach to the advancement of the Aboriginal peoples of Canada, for its continuing failure to offer long term, fair, and just responses to the social, cultural, economic and political aspirations of Canada's First Nations, for its unwillingness to recognize and affirm the inherent rights to Aboriginal self-determination, and for thereby impeding the improvement of the health, heritage and economic well-being of present and future generations of Aboriginal peoples in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising today to address this Opposition Day motion, I can say that I am proud of the record of the New Democratic Party in bringing to the House the concerns of the aboriginal people of Canada. That is a commitment of which today's Opposition Day motion is only part, and I want to start by talking in terms of what this motion is and what it is not.

I do not see this motion as one that is narrowly partisan. I will not make a speech that is interlarded with references to the Government's stubbornness, incompetence, or other faults that are real or imagined. However, I believe that in consideration of this motion it is essential that we recognize we are not talking of a particular government at a particular time but of a cumulative failure for which all of us in some measure bear a very real share of the responsibility.

This motion could have been presented in this Parliament at another time. It is my sincere hope that such a motion will not be necessary in the next Parliament. It could have been a motion moved in a provincial legislature now or at another time. After all, we are talking about the cumulative impact of the deficiencies of governments in Canada to which this Government, while it bears a measure of responsibility, is simply an heir and perpetuator.

While we question the record of governments, we also acknowledge the responsibility of Canadian society as a whole. I stress to my colleagues in the House that I do not consider this as a doom and gloom motion. It is not brought forward to say that progress has not been made, nor is it presented on the hypothesis that there is no willingness to make progress. The purpose of the motion is to point out the paramount importance of this last hurdle on what could legitimately be called the trail of tears, as the aboriginal people of Canada struggle to recover those rights to self-determination and self-government which they never renounced but which have in numerous ways, settings and circumstances, been gradually taken from them.

Ours is not a society that should bear a burden of guilt upon our collective back. However, it is a society that should be fully cognizant and understanding of the need for us to act individually and collectively to reverse the history and turn away progress in Canada from the objectives which it has unconsciously but so effectively been pursuing.

When I talk about ourselves as a society, I do not say that aboriginal people are not integrally a part of our society, because they are. However, as much as they are integrally a part of Canadian society, so they are also integrally a society unto themselves, as, indeed, are each of the hundreds of aboriginal nations in Canada a society integral and entire unto themselves. Canadian society must recognize the extent to which all the parameters, the framework and structures of society are determined by the settlers and their descendants, by immigrants like myself, and are determined in a framework which until recently has discarded, devalued and derogated the contribution of aboriginal people to Canadian society.

This motion and the debate is not about the Department of Indian Affairs. That might disappoint some of the 59 bands of the Nishnawbe-Aski nation and the Grand Council Treaty Three in my riding who, by virtue of the isolation of their communities— including approximately 20 that do not have road connections— have suffered neglect and do not have access to any of the sort of services which most Canadians are fortunately able to take for granted.

This debate is not about the large sums that have been expended by the Department of Indian Affairs and the modest temporary results from those expenditures. The debate is not about the department as an instrument. It is not about the welfare syndrome in which Canada's aboriginal people have been enslaved by virtue of the unthinking, but not uncaring operations of Canadian society through that department.

It is not even about the terrible record of trusteeship with respect to the lands of aboriginal people, and it is not about the performance of the present Minister. This debate is not about the practice articulated in the secret Liberal Cabinet document in the last Government as a strategy of throwing dollars at problems in the hope that aboriginal people will be quiet. These are failed approaches, and what we are talking about in this motion is the future. It is future oriented and it is about change, about the changes which our society and, indeed, our Governments will have to undergo to validate and bring about the fulfillment of the needs of the aboriginal societies.

This debate is about extensive change. It is about change in fundamental attitudes and about recognizing that the so-called Indian people of Canada are not a single people but are many people, diverse and with great differences between them. It is also even about our own legends and the myth of the two founding peoples of Canada at which we have to look very seriously in the light of the aboriginal people's presence in Canada before the settler societies came. It is about changes, of course, to our Constitution, of which more later.

The stark facts about being an aboriginal person in Canada today are not attractive. The proportion of Indian children in CARE is five times the national average. Twenty per cent of native children graduate from high school as compared to 75 per cent nationally. The aboriginal people have an income of approximately half the Canadian average and unemployment, insofar as the very deficient measures of Statistics Canada are concerned, is at least four times that which is prevalent amongst the general population, and up to 90 per cent in some areas. Nearly 19 per cent of on reserve homes shelter two families. I think we should bear in mind the mortality rates amongst native people in Canada. They have a violent death rate of three times the national average. Infant mortality up to four weeks of age is 60 per cent higher than the national average and life expectancy is some 10 years less than that of non-Indian people.

Why do these stark facts relate to the lives of aboriginal people in Canada today? Is it isolation? Is it simply a matter of lack of proper services in many communities? Is it, as some would have us believe, the result of over-indulgence in alcohol and tobacco? Is it something to do with the physiological or psychological make-up of aboriginal people? It is not. These are only symptoms. They are only the outward manifestations of the animé and sense of lack of purpose which has been inflicted upon the aboriginal people of Canada by their exclusion from the mainstreams of society, whether deliberately, accidentally or with complete ignorance of such exclusion, and by the unfortunate relegation of aboriginal people in past years to the level of irrelevancy to our society. These are only symptoms of the results of treaties dishonoured, provinces which exercised jurisdiction over areas to which the aboriginal people had never ceded that control or admitted that jurisdiction. These are also symptoms of the approach of pushing, pushing, pushing aboriginal people back, not only physically and geographically but culturally and economically.

In saying this, I do not deny or attempt to subtract—indeed, I wish I had time to proclaim—the achievements of aboriginal people in spite of the regime under which they have been forced to labour. There have been achievements in the areas of health care, education, industry and the professions. There has been the very significant achievement of the unity which they have been able to forge as a response to the constitutional positions of some governments in Canada. These are very real achievements registered by aboriginal people in every area of human endeavour.

The New Democratic Party and myself continue to support the First Nations of Canada in their continuing struggle for constitutional recognition of their rights. Our Party first called for that recognition in 1973, a full nine years before the signing of the Constitution Act. In fact, we refused to give our final support for patriation until aboriginal rights were restored to the Government's proposal. Now it is time to move forward. We believe the legal right to self-government is inextricably linked to the moral right of aboriginal peoples to survive and to flourish as distinct and unique societies. We cannot rely upon the lowest common denominator approach by the provinces in providing what passes for leadership in this situation.

The Government's record-breaking mandate for change has raised the expectations of aboriginal peoples as it has of all Canadians. It is the First Nations of this country who should ultimately decide on the form of this constitutional amendment. We understand that Canada's aboriginal people have been patient, that they proposed a fair set of workable solutions and that native people cannot and should not be blamed for failures which may occur in these talks.

The situation of aboriginal peoples in Canada today has everything to do with identity. I was privileged to be at our New Democratic Party caucus meeting this morning when the National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations, George Erasmus, came to us and for 20 minutes riveted more than 20 practicing-professional politicians to their seats by a concise, clear and profound exposition of the identity of Canada's aboriginal people and the central importance that that identity has not only to their future but to the future of this country.

I recall as a young man, some 19 years of age, that I learned a lesson in regard to identity. I was a substitute teacher and I had a headmaster who was a Welshman. He had been making his living in England for some 30 years. I recall at one point in the staff room making a disparaging remark about the Welsh, although I myself bear a Welsh name. He turned on me and told me that when one denies a people's identity, one effectively denies that they are people and that they exist.

Why do aboriginal people continue to identify as aboriginal Canadians despite their history? It is, of course, not only because of their tradition but fundamentally because this is the only identity they have as a result of their upbringing, which was not in a society of fast motion, technological dominance, the imperatives of schedules, but rather in a society that functioned differently, was organized differently and had values which we, if we looked at them sincerely and frankly, would have to believe are superior to some of the values which underpin the city-oriented urban, technologically dominated society.

The importance of treaty identity to aboriginal people is, of course, their connection to the Crown which made those treaties. The strength that aboriginal people have used in expressing this identity has never better been portrayed than in the response to the 1969 White Paper when they stood four square and firm against the concept of assimilation which had been held by Canadian society so long, but never better articulated than in that document. I myself, as an immigrant to this country, can appreciate, perhaps with the views of one who started in Canada as an outsider, the importance of that identity to the Indian people, the aboriginal people of Canada, and the strength with which they and their Inuit cousins assert that identity. We know the very limited and minimal effects of the enfranchisement policy which was exercised for several decades by the Department of Indian Affairs. It was essentially a system of bribery to people to give up their native identity. We know how few native people took that particular bate. We know that identity is what makes martyrs and we hope that the present process will have no martyrs.

I have to refute the "one Canada" view that I have heard expressed, the idea that in a democratic society we are all absolutely the same and equal. All of us have special rights or status of sorts as men, as women, as heirs. Obviously, one who does not inherit wealth is at a disadvantage compared to someone who does. Democracy does not suppress dissent. It does not suppress dissent at the level of opinion, and it should not suppress dissent at the level of tradition.

In the context of asserting their identity, the aboriginal people of Canada through the Assembly of First Nations have passed several resolutions this week. They are the following. They will not accept any amendment that would prejudice existing treaty rights. They will maintain their legitimate demand for inherent rights. They will pursue an amendment calling for adequate financing. The candles be lit in every aboriginal household across Canada on the eve of the First Ministers' Conference. They endorse the fundamental principles on treaties as an integral part of their constitutional amendment proposal. When none of the 484 treaties ever renounced the right of aboriginal societies to structure and govern themselves, why should the aboriginal people ever consider giving up their effort to reclaim that fundamental right?

There are several principles that are worth putting on the record in the House that have been enunciated by the AFN. They are that the First Nations made treaties with the Crown as sovereign nations; that the treaties provide acknowledgement by the Crown of the sovereignty of the First Nations; that they were made on a nation-to-nation basis and thus have the status of international treaties; and that the rights contained in those treaties are not subject to federal or provincial legislative override, or any other form of unilateral change. In order to fulfil the spirit and intent of those treaties a constitutionally entrenched process for the re-examination of them has to be established.

What support do the aboriginal people have? The evidence is that, contrary perhaps to public and government belief, there is overwhelming support for the rights of the aboriginal people of Canada. According to the results of a recent poll some 84 per cent of Canadians believe it is important for Canada's political leaders to come to an agreement on aboriginal self-government. Some 77 per cent support entrenchment of aboriginal self-government in the Constitution; and 61 per cent believe that both federal and provincial governments are equally responsible for negotiating and implementing self-government agreements over the next 10 to 20 years.

The Government's actions to date do not augur well. There has been minimal attempt to enlighten Canadians as to the significance of these discussions. There has been little public knowledge of any attempt to exercise the Government's leadership and influence, that should be there, on the western provinces of B.C., Alberta and Saskatchewan which have apparently stood against the entrenchment of the rights, and also on the Province of Ontario which appears to be back-pedalling. Instead, we have had—and I agree with them as mere statements—pious platitudes from the Government in the House. Justice demands that these rights be in the Constitution. Paternalism has failed. The aboriginal people are willing and able to accept the responsibility.

[Translation]

I wish to translate the aspirations of our native people in terms that Quebecers can understand and associate with the fact that our native people want a government in their own image.

[English]

So much flows from this because those who cannot learn from the errors of the past are forever condemned to repeat them. I must warn the Government, and all Canadians, that the repetition of these errors would be many times more numerous, many times more expensive in every term, and many times more shameful to Canada than they have been in the past.

The aboriginal renaissance awaits us. Where there is no vision the people perish. The aboriginal people of Canada seek not to be wards but partners in the future of this confederation which has, if we take the right steps, the potential to confer on Canada glories that can far outshine both the achievements and the failures of the past.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If there are no questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) on debate.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this debate I want to begin by commending the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) for proposing a motion which all Hon. Members can readily support. I certainly find its wording and its concepts to be very helpful coming as it does in this month leading up to the First Ministers' Conference on Aboriginal Rights. So it is a motion that I can happily support, and one which my Leader can certainly support. The aboriginal people who heard my Leader speak at noon today to their rally on Parliament Hill will be able to confirm that. It is certainly a position which my Party can support. That is well demonstrated by the important resolutions on aboriginal rights that were approved at the recent policy conference held by the Party of which I am a member.

Most important, this is a motion that would find support with the Canadian people. My hon. friend has already referred to the important Canadian attitude study which was commissioned by the Inuit Committee on National Issues and carried out by Decima Research which indicates that an overwhelming 84 per cent of Canadian people believe that it is very important, or important, for Canada's political leaders to come to an agreement on the issue of aboriginal self-government. The results of the study show that an equally large majority of Canadians—some 77 per cent—said they support the entrenchment of aboriginal self-government in the Constitution.

Having said some nice words about the useful and helpful motion, I am also pleased that my hon. friend decided to be as non-partisan as he was. He indicated that none who are outside the aboriginal community of the country can take any pleasure or delight in the past record. Even the New Democratic Party is not clean and clear in this regard. No one would want to examine all that closely the Barrett administration in British Columbia with respect to aboriginal rights and title. No one would want to look too closely at the Schreyer Government of Manitoba, especially in terms of the flooding of Indian lands. No one would want to look too closely at Mr. Blakeney's position regarding aboriginal rights in the Constitution. So we will keep it non-partisan as much as we can.

But the motion is not as clean as all that. I mean that the motion puts the Government on the spot. It says that the Government is timid and unimaginative, which is another way of saying that it is not demonstrating the type of leadership that we would expect from a government, any federal government which, in fact, knows that it has a constitutional obligation for aboriginal rights.

The National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations has said that in his view, at least to date—and I continue to believe that at the First Ministers' Conference there may be a creative relationship and significant progress made—leading up to that conference, Chief Erasmus has said that the federal Government is not playing a leadership role. Returning to the Decima Research poll, Canadians tend to feel that way as well. At least 55 per cent of Canadians think that the federal Government has done a poor job handling aboriginal efforts to gain greater control over their own lives.

It has certainly given me some pause to consider what has gone on in these many meetings leading up to the First Minister's Conference toward the end of the month. It seems to me to be unusual that the Province of Nova Scotia is at the present time desperately endeavouring to find an accommodation for the recognition of the right to aboriginal self-government.

I certainly welcome the efforts of Nova Scotia. The people of that province should be proud of those efforts. All of us in the House should take some pleasure in the fact that one of our provincial administrations is trying to give that kind of leadership. However, the peculiar aspect of it is that the constitutional obligation rests largely, mainly, and principally with the Government of Canada.

My hon. friend mentioned the number of treaties which have been signed in North America since the days of early settlement. He mentioned that there were in excess of 400. Those treaty obligations were accepted by the British Crown under the policy elaborated in the Royal Proclamation of 1763. Those obligations have not dissipated into air. They have not disappeared somewhere. They are still obligations but they are now transferred to the federal Government of Canada, which has accepted in our Constitution the Crown obligations stipulated in the treaties. Therefore, the federal Government cannot duck, weave, squirm, or wiggle its way out of its responsibility. All too often we have the impression that that is what motivates the Government of Canada. How can it restrict, limit, and confine its obligations under the Constitution?

Section 91(24) clearly indicates that Indians and lands reserved for Indians are our responsibility. All the best legal testimony which I have been able to read puts the broadest possible interpretation on it and indicates that Indian people include the aboriginal people of Canada. We cannot refine and restrict it. It must be interpreted in the broadest possible way.

I join with the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River in urging the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to demonstrate strong leadership at the First Ministers' Conference on March 26 and March 27. I do not believe that it is a last ditch stand or that if the conference fails all is lost. There are many other avenues and approaches which can be taken by aboriginal leaders to achieve their rights.

Let it be clearly understood that the recognition of aboriginal rights and their clear definition are inevitable. At some point in our history they will be written into our Constitution. The real question is, will the Government at this time take the leadership and work with the provinces to make that a possibility.

I ask Hon. Members what we really have to fear. What is there to fear in this process? I am reminded sometimes of Franklin Delano Roosevelt who said, when he was fighting the great economic depression, that we did not have anything to fear in trying to beat that economic beast except fear itself. Yet, I am suspicious that there is an attempt from time to time within the ranks of the Government to create a certain measure of fear.

For example, why would the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), who is present this afternoon, say that the recognition of aboriginal self-government and the putting into effect of aboriginal self-government would cost billions upon billions of dollars? That is a fear tactic.

Mr. de Cotret: I never said that.

Mr. Penner: It is a fear tactic. It has been denied by the Assistant Deputy Minister for self-government and by aboriginal leaders.

Mr. McKnight: And by the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Penner: We know that billions are being spent now but that they are not being spent in a very cost-effective way. There is a sufficient number of case studies. The Hon.

Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), who is also present, knows that those case studies demonstrate beyond any doubt that moneys used in a self-government situation are in almost every case much more cost effective than what we have at the present time.

We also know that too much money is being spent now, filtered through the bureaucracy the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development which is paying for monitors, overseers, processors, and auditors who do not even know how to audit. Yet, we know that our Indian communities continue to suffer from a very low level of services.

Parliament approves money, for example, for the Native Economic Development Program, yet moneys under that program are allowed to lapse. Why is that? Why is it that the Department of Indian Affairs much prefers to spend billions on social assistance over years and so little in terms of economic development? Is it, as some people think, that the policy is to keep the aboriginal people of Canada as wards of the state? Is that really what we want?

Many people in Canada—and it is in the same study to which I have been referring—believe that we are not spending our money well. The majority believe that giving aboriginal peoples more control over economic programs will result in more effective use of federal funds in the medium term, reducing reliance over the long term. Is that not what all Hon. Members want to achieve? I know that it is what the Minister of Indian Affairs wants to achieve, because he has so testified before the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development.

What is desperately needed at the moment is something apparent to get the process of self-government moving. Under the Department of Indian Affairs it is moving, but at an intolerably slow rate. What we really need is a constitutional imperative to get it moving at a much more rapid rate.

Some of the Attorneys General who attend these conferences, or so I am led to believe, have expressed fear and concern that if there is recognition within our Constitution of the right to aboriginal self-government that right will become enforceable in the courts. I would say to that that of course any right can be enforceable in the courts. If a right is not realized, there must be a remedy. However, Hon. Members on all sides of the House must realize that the aboriginal people of Canada are not seeking some measure by which they can rush off to the courts. They have said time and time again that the way in which they want to proceed is by way of negotiation. It is the preferred route. It is the way they want to go.

I suggest to the House that a false fear has been raised in the country that recognizing the right to self-government will cause our aboriginal people to go to the courts in order to obtain for themselves a definition or even an order for establishing self-government. It is clearly not so. Aboriginal people want to negotiate and they want the Constitution—this is really the answer I would have liked to have given back to the Minister of Justice during Question Period—to contain an obligation to negotiate self-government. They want the Constitution to describe broadly the general terms which are to be negotiated leading to agreements. If aboriginal people wanted to use the courts exclusively, if that were the intention behind their desire to get a recognition of aboriginal self-government, they could have already done so.

Section 35 of the Constitution which recognizes aboriginal rights is a very powerful section. However, there have been very few cases based upon Section 35. Instead, aboriginal people have patiently tried to seek accommodation through the political process by making use of First Ministers' Conferences on aboriginal rights. These conferences have been ongoing for a five-year period. Does that not demonstrate a great deal of patience?

If the constitutional approach runs on to the rocks, I suggest there may be no other way except the route of litigation. I would also suggest to Canadians that the results of litigation based upon Section 35 may be much less pleasing to them and much less satisfactory for national unity and the health of the country than proceeding through negotiation leading to agreements. All Hon. Members would agree that that is the preferable route to go. After all, this country of ours was created more by political forces than any other kind of forces. It was Mr. Justice Macfarlane of the British Columbia Court of Appeal who put forward a view that questions of aboriginal title are best dealt with in the political rather than in the legal forum. He was presiding over a particular case. In giving his judgment, he made this comment:

> This—is but a small part of the whole process which will ultimately find its solution in a reasonable exchange between Governments and the Indian Nations.

That, Sir, is what the First Ministers' Conference is really all about. It is a reasonable exchange. I want to suggest to the Government of Canada that if it is to be a reasonable exchange then it cannot go to the conference table with a very hardened position or an inflexible position. What is true for the Government of Canada is true for provincial administrations as well. There has to be some give and take and some creativity. There has to be a reasonable exchange. I want to repeat that if the Constitution imposes upon Canada an obligation to negotiate these agreements, we really have nothing to fear at all. There is no threat to any of us.

Let me quote, if I may, former Prime Minister Trudeau who travelled, by the way, a very long, long distance with respect to aboriginal rights. There was a time when he denied categorically, in a speech in Vancouver, that they even existed. He travelled that route to giving some of the most forceful directions to the First Ministers at those conferences that have been given to date. At one of those First Ministers' meetings he said:

> There is nothing revolutionary or threatening about the prospect of aboriginal self-government. Aboriginal communities have rightful aspirations to have more say in the management of their affairs to exercise more responsibility for decisions affecting them. These functions are normal and essential to the sense of self-worth that distinguishes individuals in a free society.

Listen to George Erasmus, one of the leading aboriginal chiefs in this country. He said:

> What we are after is power where it is possible and in as many cases as is logical and reasonable for the First Nations to control their own lives without influence.

Listen to Dorothy Wasbisca, Vice-President of the Native Council of Canada. She said:

> Self-government includes the right to have a meaningful say in our day-to-day lives.

Even more recently, John Amagoalik, Co-Chairman of the Inuit Committee on National Issues speaking before the Standing Committee said:

> The vision of aboriginal self-government is one that sees aboriginal peoples maintaining their own distinctiveness by running as many of their own affairs as is practicable in a modern, culturally diverse and inter-dependent federal state. In my view, this is a vision that can be shared by most of the political leaders taking part in the upcoming conference.

I have only just begun my remarks but you are already signally me that my time has expired, Mr. Speaker. I cannot believe time has gone that quickly. Let me conclude by introducing just a very brief international note in the hope that it will be of some guidance and inspiration to our leaders at the First Ministers Conference at the end of this month.

Since 1982 there has a been a United Nations working group on indigenous populations meeting once a year in Geneva to formulate standards for the treatment of indigenous populations. In 1985 Madam Erica Daes, Chairperson of this working group, speaking in Quebec City said that in her opinion:

> —the principle of the self-determination of peoples applied also to indigenous populations, although it did not include the right of secession.

I have attended many international gatherings where indigenous populations were being discussed and the latter part of that remark has never ever been an issue. It is not a question of secession. More accurately, and I conclude on this point, what we are talking about was well expressed I think by Thomas R. Berger in his report of the Alaska Native Review Commission, Village Journey, that I recommend to Hon. Members. He writes:

> If governments continue in their efforts to force native societies into moulds that we have cast, I believe they will continue to fail. No tidy bureaucratic plan of action for native people can have any chance of success unless it takes into account the determination of natives peoples to remain themselves. Their determination to retain their own cultures and their own lands does not mean they wish to return to the past, it means they refuse to let their future be dictated by others.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). I have a question on the area of self-government. It has been a fundamental premise of those who have dealt with native communities, particularly the case of this Government and our present Minister when dealing with Indian communities and native groups, that one respect their aims and aspirations, that we do not dictate or force or pressure anything upon them. I know in discussions on self-government, for example, that we have been dealing at the pace which the individual native communities have established for themselves in these discussions. I know the Hon. Member knows about the signing, for example, of the historic self-government agreement already in place in two provinces and working on a negotiated basis in other areas.

I find it interesting that the Hon. Member would perhaps criticize the Government about pace and direction. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the Government set the pace and direction, as was done in the past by many Liberal Governments? Or is he suggesting that we continue as we are, which is respecting the integrity and the pace of the native communities which they themselves have set?

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member makes a valid point with respect to pace. Yes, the pace must be determined by aboriginal communities and the various aboriginal groupings that want to enter into negotiations leading to self-government agreements. Certainly the pace must be theirs. The problem is not who will determine the pace, the difficulty is putting in place the process, of getting the process going. There are two ways in which you can do it, broadly speaking. One is the process that the Department of Indian Affairs, of community-based self-government, is presently launching. It is not totally unsatisfactory. It is not totally unacceptable by any means. There has been some progress in that direction.

I am suggesting to the House, and the aboriginal leaders in the country more importantly are suggesting to the country, that what is required in order to move this forward more rapidly, to get negotiations going, is a constitutional imperative, but this will be the driving force to get the negotiations going. I suggest that if we are to follow the pace that the Department has in mind, it will be a very slow one indeed. It may be as much as a century before the aboriginal communities of Canada enjoy self-government. We need something more to motivate governments and aboriginal communities to sit down at the negotiating table. I suggest what is needed is that constitutional recognition of the right, which would then act as the imperative desperately needed at the present time.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend, having joined him the other day at the meeting of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Rights. At that time, we heard a witness from the Department who gave evidence on the question of the comprehensive land claims settlement policy.

Today the Hon. Member has been speaking of moving the self-government process forward and of motivating people to get going. Certainly his comments with respect to some form of entrenchment in the Constitution are comments with which the Government agrees. That process is under way at the present time.

As I recall, throughout the spring and early summer of 1986, native people across Canada were hailing a report that had been made by Mr. Coolican on the subject of a comprehensive land claims settlement. They were hailing it particularly because the report contained a reference to the fact that there would be no extinguishment of native rights in arriving at these settlements. Native people across Canada were pressing the Government to adopt this and, as I recall, the Hon. Member was pressing the Government to adopt it as well. In fact, that is just what the Minister did. As a result of that action taken by the Minister, the Hon. Member was delighted and thrilled. He felt that this would be a motivating force that would help move the process along. I wonder if the Hon. Member could confirm for us that he was pressing the Government to adopt the Coolican report and that he is enthusiastic about it and very grateful to the Government and the Minister for adopting that particular report which does motivate the process of native self-government.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may have been present in the House the day I responded to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) on the new comprehensive claims policy. This new policy includes the possibility for negotiating self-government. Like all policies, however, it must get off paper and become a motivating force. That is what we are now waiting to see.

I would ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is present and will probably speak, how soon it will be before the Council for Yukon Indians receives its mandate to negotiate its claim. It is still anxiously waiting and its members have been visiting Parliament Hill, making representations to Ministers and calling on officials. If the new policy results in the settlement of comprehensive claims before the mandate of the Government expires, I would be the first to rejoice.

A policy is one thing. I have seen many fine reports produced by Members of Parliament on a wide range of subjects. I have heard many Ministers of different administrations express that which they had hoped to achieve. In the final analysis, however, judgment is based on what actually takes place. We are still waiting for something to happen. The Minister is due to appear before the standing committee shortly and we will be anxious to know what definite concrete steps have been taken based on the new policy he announced. I would not use all the adjectives used by the Hon. Member, but I certainly recognized that it was an advance over what we previously had.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to say a few words about the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry). When I first read the motion, I wondered what tone the debate would take. I very much appreciate the tone on which the debate started and I think it will continue on the same tone.

There is one thing that those on all three sides of the House—if I could call it a three-sided House—must recognize, and that is that everyone involved in this issue wants to make a contribution and is involved for reasons that do not usually translate into large electoral victories or change the face of a constituency overnight. Everyone involved in native, aboriginal, and Indian issues is involved for several different reasons. While the reasons I just mentioned are not dishonourable, I would suggest that the others are more honourable.

We do recognize the shortcomings in the ways previous Governments of Canada have dealt with aboriginal people. We also recognize that while Governments were perhaps not the motivators for change and were not putting forward policies that provided for change at a rapid pace, and while we have been talking about, worrying about, and discussing self-government, the aboriginal people have been moving forward and making changes. They have been the initiators of the improvements we see today.

The Sechelt and Cree-Naskapi agreements for aboriginal Governments which control the daily lives, the economic development and the very existence of aboriginal people would not have been envisaged 35 years ago when the Indian Act was reviewed for the last time. Parliamentarians of the day would not have been able to envisage this ever happening to aboriginal people in Canada, yet it did happen and the reason it did happen was the leadership shown by aboriginal people.

When we look at national and community-level leadership of Indian communities today, we see a vital and evolving leadership, one that is shaping the way this Government will deal with Indian and Inuit peoples across Canada. Indeed, it is shaping the way we will go together into the 21st century. Over the years, dramatic changes have been made. Again, I do not attribute all of those changes to actions of the Government of Canada either now or in the past.

As we look around and see that there is the acquiring of skills and of technical abilities and the acquiring of educational and professional skills that will be needed to build the aboriginal communities of the future, we should have some hope and feel confident as Canadians that there is a future. Aboriginal leaders have an enormous task in keeping the values of the past which have been passed down by elders while at the same time creating a vision of the future that can fit into the 21st century. Native Canadians are already acquiring greater control over their lives and over an opportunity for a strong future.

This Government is giving or returning control over their own affairs to aboriginal people. It is not doing so, as my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), suggested, at a pace which would startle anyone or cause one to see dramatic change, but we are returning something which should have been in existence on an ongoing basis. If the keys to the future of the aboriginal people in Canada are self-government and economic development, then the changes are being made by the aboriginal peoples themselves. Self-government has become a priority. Why? Because the Indian people have made it a priority.

As a Minister I am involved with my cabinet colleagues in a yet to be written chapter of Canadian history, an amendment to the Constitution dealing with Indian self-government. Over the past weeks and months the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), the Leader of the Government in the Senate, and I have attended a series of meetings with provincial and territorial officials and leaders of aboriginal groups where we were able to prepare for the upcoming First Ministers' Conference. I want to draw to your attention, Sir, that the Government of Canada has provided financial and technical support as well as a motion and a rolling draft all through the 1985 meeting on aboriginal self-government. If we all looked back to the role played by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in trying to bring the provinces and the aboriginal groups together on an amendment, I do not think anyone could question the sincerity and dedication of the Prime Minister and the Government in showing leadership towards acquiring constitutional protection for aboriginal self-government.

We started with a federal framework which was arrived at with the idea that it could gain support from the aboriginal groups and the provincial Governments. Regardless of what my friends on the other side of the House say about what should be put forward by the federal Government, we cannot legislate or ratify self-government for aboriginal people single-handedly. We need the approval of 50 per cent of the population of Canada as represented by seven provinces.

It is not offensive to this Government that after we put forward amendments and rolling drafts, and the aboriginal people put forward an amendment proposal, a province such as Nova Scotia would come forward and draw from both in order to gain consensus. If that does not work, I am sure Members on all sides will say that we hope another province or aboriginal group will be able to take a draft, roll it together, consult, have it accepted and ratified as the Constitution requires. Everyone in this House, including the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent), support the entrenchment of self-government in the Constitution. It is not how it is done and who supports it that counts, it is when it is done. As my friend from Cochrane—Superior said, we hope it is done this time but we do not necessarily have the time to wait, and we have been waiting.

The concept of community-based self-government, which has been mentioned in this debate, is something we are looking at on a case-by-case basis. We are looking to individual communities with tribal councils to develop a proposal through which they can present their ideas. I firmly believe, regardless of the outcome of the meetings on March 26 and March 27, that we will continue to work on some of those proposals. It may happen that if we are not successful, there will be more energy needed to speed up the process, to drive it harder. However, regardless of the outcome, there will continue to be discussions on community-based self-government. I feel confident that within the next 12 months there will be several aboriginal self-government proposals outside of the Indian Act. However, as my colleague from The Battlefords—Meadow Lake mentioned, you can and should proceed only at a pace acceptable to the Indian band, tribal council or Government with which you are dealing. I know that in areas of the Hon. Member's riding there are bands who want programs they have received from the Government under treaty delivered by the Department of Indian Affairs. That will not change until those people wish to have it changed.

When we look at economic development I am not so naive as to think that we can share all the obstacles to economic development among the native people of Canada. However, as Canadians we can make a start. We are doing that now together with the aboriginal people. We are making a start at removing some of those obstacles. It cannot happen overnight and it will not benefit only the aboriginal people. It will benefit all Canadians to have this segment of Canadian society benefit economically.

Just last week in Edmonton we had discussions with over 100 bands who have some form of oil and gas potential on their reserves. That meeting was the culmination of over a year's work by Indian leaders and departmental officials in putting together a more efficient and responsive management regime for the owners of the resource. I am pleased to say there was substantial progress and substantial consensus on the changes which will be needed so that the development of the resource will benefit its owners, the Indian people. As Hon. Members know, this will require legislation. We will need to have changes to the Indian Act. I think we can accommodate those changes.

Looking at the already impressive degree of local administration by Indian bands, and if we can go forward with the management of programs and services being transferred to the Indian leadership, we believe Indians will continue the process of taking over jobs which have been filled by government employees. I do not think that is a bad situation at all.

One of the problems which people address with regard to Indian and federal government relations is that the federal Government provides Indian educational services, child and social welfare, housing, policing and sewage services. In fact, most of the programs and services which are provided to other Canadians by provincial and municipal Governments are provided to Indian people on reserves by the Government of Canada. We hear criticism almost on a daily basis. We hear that the federal Government is not providing sufficient funds to meet the needs and that the Government is trying to evade its obligations to Indian people by transferring its responsibilities to other institutions or Governments. On the other hand, we hear from some critics that the Government of Canada is providing too much money to Indian people.

The criticisms in those three areas are the same criticisms put forward in other areas for which the Government of Canada is responsible. They can be put forward with regard to seniors, and they are. They can be put forward with regard to farmers, and they are. They can be put forward with regard to transportation, and they are. The criticisms which I have mentioned, underfunding, overfunding, and evading responsibility, are things that I do not shy away from. I do not believe them to be an attack on myself, on the Government, on programs, or on Indian people because I can see that the same criticisms are made in other segments of society.

Over the past decade there has been substantial growth in the amount of dollars distributed. My colleagues know the numbers. There has been substantial growth for two reasons. Successive Governments of Canada have recognized more of their responsibilities. Over a number of years the number of Indian people for whom the federal Government has responsibility has grown. Departmental expenditures over the last while have outstripped inflation and the growth rate of the Indian population. Since the election in 1984, the expenditures of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have increased by nearly 30 per cent.

Speaking of dollars, 80 per cent of the dollars of the Department are spent on transfer payments to territorial Governments for education, social development, capital expenditures on reserves, and for health, safety, and economic development, which are also priority areas. From time to time additional funding is required for emergencies. One emergency which comes to mind is Winisk, a community which was wiped out by recent floods.

It is not only a question of how we spend, but how effective it is and whether it meets the needs of the individual communities. Who would be in a better position to say whether we are spending it properly and actually to spend it properly than the native communities themselves? The increases must be made with Indian control over the expenditures. This is not new. We started 30 years ago to transfer responsibility to Indian people for the handling of the dollars which they can best handle. It has changed. In 1972 only 20 per cent of the Department's program expenditures were handled by Indian people. In 1979-80 it increased to 39 per cent. Today the figure is 59 per cent, and I hope that by 1990 it will reach 70 per cent.

Before I close I would like to say that the devolution plan, which was authorized by the Treasury Board, should decrease the number of employees in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from 6,200 in 1985-86 to 4,200 by 1990-91. This means that we will have to transfer the dollars for those person-years to Indian Governments. That is where those dollars will be expended in the most proper and efficient fashion to benefit Indian people.

In conclusion, as significant gains are made by Indian Governments in gaining control over their daily lives, the Indian Governments will have more responsibility. The more responsibility they have, the more they will have to be responsible to their electorate. We presently have two keys, one key that the Department turns and one key that the Indian Governments turn. As the Department hands a key to the Indian Governments, it also hands the responsibility to those Governments. That is something that the Government of Canada and the Members of this House do not shirk from. We look forward to doing more in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been given notice of a point of order by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there has been discussion among the Parties with regard to this motion and the timing of it. I appreciate the indulgence of the House to allow me to move it. I move:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Parry:

That this House condemns the Government for its timid and unimaginative approach to the advancement of the Aboriginal peoples of Canada, for its continuing failure to offer long term, fair, and just responses to the social, cultural, economic and political aspirations of Canada's First Nations, for its unwillingness to recognize and affirm the inherent rights to Aboriginal self-determination, and for thereby impeding the improvement of the health, heritage and economic well-being of present and future generations of Aboriginal peoples in Canada.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern development (Mr. McKnight) chose to participate in this debate. The task of being Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is an onerous and demanding one. That is one of the reasons that, over the years, there has been a good working relationship between members of the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister. A sort of confidence has built up.

The peculiar nature of the Minister's rule is sometimes described as being that of a trustee obligation which is constitutionally based. How that will change with constitutional development, no one knows. However, at the moment, whatever that means, it does include the advocacy role with other aspects of Government itself. When the Minister last appeared before the committee he indicated that he took that role seriously, ensuring that when programs are developed attention is given by other Ministries to the aboriginal aspect of the program.

I would like to ask the Minister two questions in that regard. He indicated that he was concerned about the change in the Jobs Strategy Program which now tends largely to exclude Indian communities and, therefore, labour dollars for housing are no longer available as they had been under the predecessor program, Canada Works.

My supplementary question, which I will ask now so that I will not have to rise again, is with regard to another program under the Minister of State responsible for small businesses. Many of us have wondered why moneys approved by Parliament for native economic development programs have been permitted to lapse in large amounts. Is the Minister concerned about this? Has he made inquiries and, if so, what has been the result of those inquiries?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, we still have concerns about the job strategy. I have had discussions with my cabinet colleague and, hopefully, will have more in the near future.

One thing that we have agreed upon and promoted is the application for community futures funding which may be used for tribal councils if the bands are not large enough to qualify individually, so that there can be some economic development, job training and strategy. However, the additional component of the labour dollar change in the construction of homes on reserves, on top of the subsidy dollar that is provided per unit, is still a difficult problem. I hope to have it resolved for the new fiscal year into which we are entering because presently it is causing a hardship on reserves, even causing homes not to be completed. We all share that concern.

The Hon. Member asked about the native economic development program. Changes will be made and the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has assisted in the past and has provided some 20 person-years to assist in going through the clearing house process so that it can be done more readily. My colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), is responsible for that program. We will be announcing some changes in that program in the near future. That is a responsibility of another Ministry. I believe my hon. friend will be pleased with the changes that will be announced.

Hopefully, the streamlining of the application process, the ability to make approvals by conference call, and limiting the money required for board meetings, will help speed up the program that we all want to work.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Minister will not take me wrong when I say that I am actually a little disappointed that I must ask him this question. I do not want to derogate from the Minister's standing or responsibility in saying that I believe the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should have been speaking for the Government because of the importance of this question to the people of Canada.

However, on four occasions in the House during Question Period the Government has declined to clarify whether it accepts the concept that there is an inherent right to self-government. I refer to responses by the Hon. Minister of Justice on February 18, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Prime Minister last week, and by the Minister of Justice earlier this afternoon. Since they have failed to clarify it and have declined the opportunity to do so, is the Minister willing to clarify for the House the Government's position as to whether the right to self-government is inherent or contingent?

Second, let me refer to this limited circulation background paper on the stationery of First Ministers' Conference entitled: "The Record of Aboriginal Constitutional Reform", which states on page 2, in reference to Section 35 of the Constitution: "The section did not revive or restore aboriginal and treaty rights that had already been lost by the date of proclamation of the Constitution Act, 1982". Will the Minister tell us how aboriginal or treaty rights have been "lost" in the view of the Government?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, let me attempt to answer the last question first. The Hon. Member is aware that there is a contention put forward by aboriginal people that the traditional pursuits—hunting, gathering and fishing pursuits—have been superseded by other law, such as the Natural Resources Transfer Act in my part of Canada. One example often given by aboriginal people is the Migratory Birds Convention where some treaty rights may have been changed, transferred and superseded by another law.

I do not know how we change that. We do not go back. I am not familiar with the booklet from which the Hon. Member quoted but I suggest it is probably accurate that there are some matters that have been superseded by law and cannot be brought back.

The Hon. Member asked about the Government's stance. We put forward a draft that provided for a debate that we believed would have achieved the required support to entrench aboriginal self-government. It was a contingent right that was put forward in that proposal.

I suggest that it does not matter what right we put forward. We are now debating the Nova Scotia rolling draft proposal.

While I did not attend the officials' meeting, I understand it has changed somewhat. It attempted to provide both a contingent and an inherent right to appear in the stand alone provision. I do not know whether that will achieve the required support of the provinces.

There has not been a proposal put forward in the meetings that has not been supported by the federal Government when it came to trying to bring consensus from all sides of the table. We discussed the proposal by the Assembly of First Nations and allowed the provinces to respond to that. There was the first proposal put forward by the federal Government on which we attempted to get a consensus. Now there is the Nova Scotia proposal on which we are trying to achieve consensus.

It is important to recognize that the Government has worked very hard on this since 1985. The Prime Minister has made a commitment to bring the necessary consensus to give constitutional protection to aboriginal self-government and make it a reality. The Ministers, who have been given that responsibility by the Prime Minister, have been working very hard over the months to fulfil that commitment.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this very important debate this afternoon on the whole question of aboriginal self-government. I want to commend my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry), for bringing this motion forward.

During the debate, the Liberal critic, my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), stated that no Party has a perfect record when it comes to the question of aboriginal rights. That is quite true, but I want to state for the record that in all three cases where we have had provincial Governments led by the New Democratic Party we can be proud of the record achieved by those Governments.

For example, when Dave Barrett was the Premier of British Columbia between 1972 and 1975, he instituted a commission that was to look into the whole question of the cut-off lands. Since then, Dave Barrett and the New Democratic Party of British Columbia have recognized the right of aboriginal peoples to aboriginal title. It is the first time that any political Party in British Columbia has recognized that right. We recognize that and it is part of our policy, and when we become the Government it will form the cornerstone of our policy in working with the Indian people of British Columbia.

When Allan Blakeney was the Premier of Saskatchewan, he instituted a treaty entitlement process by which the Indian people of Saskatchewan covered by treaty were able to have access to more land as a result of their increased population. That was a process which the Indian people of Alberta very much wished they could have in their Conservative Province. In the Province of Manitoba, under Premier Pawley, thousands of native people are being trained in the limestone training program. In Manitoba we have the only treaty Indian Minister in Canada, namely, Elijah Harper, the first and only. He has been an historical leader in the whole process of constitutional talks regarding aboriginal rights. We have nothing whatever to be ashamed of there. On the other hand, we can look at the Province of Ontario, which under a Conservative Government previously had a good record in support of the movement of the aboriginal peoples towards self-government and the entrenchment of their rights. Unfortunately, under the Liberal Government of Premier David Peterson, it seems to be taking a step backward. It refuses to recognize the inherent rights of Indian people to self-government or to aboriginal rights.

When we look at the question of aboriginal self-government, we see that this is something which must be addressed on many different levels. Certainly, there is a legal and constitutional level, and constitutional lawyers can argue back and forth as to what is involved. There are technical political discussions involved. It is important for everyone to recognize that there are at least 17 different players involved in the First Ministers' Conference which will take place at the end of this month. Simply to bring together 17 different players with their differing points of view is not an easy thing to do. Therefore, there are some very serious technical questions that have to be addressed.

There are economic problems because self-government is not something which is just a matter of drawing up a charter on a piece of paper and saying: "Okay. Go to it". There has to be an economic base for self-government. Therefore, this raises important questions.

Perhaps most fundamentally, there is a moral and emotional level at which this debate must take place. That, I believe, is where we have to begin. That is where I would like to begin this afternoon. If we can understand and accept aboriginal self-government at the moral and emotional level, then everything else can be worked out. If we do not understand and do not accept this at the moral and emotional level, then nothing will happen. It helps if we know some of the aboriginal people personally, if we have had the chance to sit down with them over a cup of tea, to go fishing with them, to walk a trapline or to attend some of their feasts and celebrations. Because of the nature of our work, parliamentarians have more opportunity for this kind of encounter than most other Canadians. Because of that we should be giving leadership in this whole area.

What if we never had this opportunity? What if we did not take advantage of it when we did have it? Does this mean that we simply turn our backs on this question and leave it to the small number of people who just happen to be interested? Is aboriginal self-government and aboriginal title the concern of just a few? I do not believe this can be our response because at the deepest level we need to relate to one another not as members of one nation or another, not as one ethnic group or another and not on the basis of class or gender. We need to relate to one another on the basis of our common humanity. The proper way for us to relate as one human being to another was summed up hundreds of years ago as: "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you". We should treat other people the way we would like other people to treat us. When we look at our neighbours in this way, we begin to understand a few things.

Let us imagine, if we can, the case of Sam, a Salish Indian living on a tiny reserve on Vancouver Island. The reserve is tiny because in the 19th century, government officials decided that British Columbian Indians did not need very much land because they made their living from fishing. Today a greatly increased population still has to get by with the same little piece of land. In the meantime, however, their right to fish has been cut back, restricted and regulated by the very same Government which took their land in the first place saying that Indians did not need much land because they made their living from the sea.

Sam looks at his family of four young children and at the other families in his village. He looks at their tiny reserve and wonders what kind of a future he and his children will have. He thinks of his sister, her husband and their children. They have moved to the city and are having a pretty rough time. Whenever his sister comes home to the village for a visit, she worries that her children do not have the same understanding of their culture as their cousins. Sam knows that before the coming of European colonists, his people had the entire area to themselves. They used that area, the land and the sea, to provide for all their needs. They had their own system of government with its laws and customs for conservation, for looking after the weaker members of society, for holding and exchanging property, for trading with other nations and for choosing their leaders and so on. They had the land and the right to govern themselves. Sam knows that they never sold those rights. They never had them taken from them in war. If there is any justice in Canada, these rights should still be intact.

Sam looks at his family. He looks at his small overcrowded reserve and knows what aboriginal leaders mean when they talk about aboriginal rights, about land claims and about aboriginal self-government. When they talk about these things, aboriginal leaders are talking about Sam, his kids and their future. Sam knows he cannot turn the clock back to the 1850s when the first immigrants begin to show up. He knows the people in the nearby towns and the farmers have their rights and that these rights have to be respected. He knows that even hunting and fishing have changed. He knows there have to be rules and regulations so that everyone will get their fair share. But then he looks at his small reserve and thinks of the thousands of acres the forest companies control. They got the land for a few cents an acre, took the best of the timber, destroying spawning beds as they did, and then sold out to another company which does not even have its head office in Canada.

Sam thinks of the way that so much of his life has been controlled by the Department of Indian Affairs. He remembers how as a small child he was taken away from his home, family and village and sent away to a residential school where he was not even allowed to speak his own language and he was not allowed to talk with his sister because any contact between boys and girls was forbidden. He had to work half of each day on the school farm so that the education he ended up with never really amounted to very much. He thinks of the difficulty he had trying to borrow money so he could start a small business. The banks would not lend him any money because he lived on an Indian reserve. All the Government's promises about economic development turned out to be nothing but promises.

Sam knows that for his sake, for the sake of his children and his people, he and his people have to gain control over their own lives. Over the last few years he has developed some pretty good ideas about how this should happen. At the very top of the list is the need for federal and provincial Governments to recognize that he has rights. He has rights which were inherited in the same way as other people might inherit a farm, a house or a business. Sam has inherited rights. It is about time that the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia recognized this. He has rights to land, land that goes far beyond the dinky little piece of land that the Government left to him and his people. He has rights with respect to hunting and fishing that go beyond the hunting and fishing rights of other Canadians.

Sam and his people have the right to govern themselves rather than being controlled by the Department of Indian Affairs. This means that they have the right to make basic decisions about their children's education, how they should spend their health budget, how they should look after the welfare of their children, how they should develop their economy, and how they should conserve fish stocks in the stream that runs through the reserve.

Over the last 20 years Sam and his people have become more and more dependent upon Indian Affairs for financial help in running their band and for looking after the growing number of people who have ended up on welfare. Sam has a kind of funny attitude toward this money. He did not like it because of the way it was dealt out. In particular, he did not like what the welfare money did to so many people. Welfare money seemed to destroy their initiative, their independence, their pride and even their joy in life.

Sam knows that in the old days even when times were tough people could take care of themselves. They could take care of one another. Sam wants his people to get back to that spirit and that attitude. But nothing makes Sam more angry than to hear people in the town talking about Indians getting welfare as though they were just sponges on society. It was the system that had done this to his people. They had not chosen to be on welfare. It was the system that had stolen their land, penned them up on a tiny reservation with no economic base except fishing, and then had their right to fish taken away. The people had paid a terribly high price for this welfare, and Sam was not going to take any nonsense about it. He knew that if the community itself had control over that money that was spent on welfare then they could do a lot more and a lot better with it.

All these plans, ideas, hopes and frustrations have been a part of Sam's life for several years now. He has gone to meetings and talked with other Indians about how they could be put into practice. He has even heard non-Indian politicians from all three federal Parties say that they agree with his basic ideas. But progress seems painfully slow. Sam will not be one of the aboriginal leaders who comes back to Ottawa for the First Ministers' Conference at the end of March. However, he has met and talked with some who will be here. What he cannot understand is the attitude of some of the provincial Governments. He does not understand where his federal Government really stands either. He recalls some of the commitments the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made two years ago. The Prime Minister said:

> The special relationships between Canada and the aboriginal people should be strengthened . . . Aboriginal rights, especially the right of self-government, should have constitutional protections.

But now the constitutional conference is coming, and as far as land claims are concerned the Prime Minister seems to have gone into hibernation. Sam knew that his leaders had been working hard on this issue in contacting community groups, churches and unions explaining what aboriginal rights and self-government are all about, answering questions and concerns, anything people might have worrying them. They reassured them that land claims did not destroy the right of other people to own and enjoy property, that self-government did not mean separation. The latest polls show that the majority of Canadians understand at least that much. The great majority of Canadians want self-government and land claims to go ahead.

So why was the Prime Minister not giving some leadership on this issue? Probably the Prime Minister meant well, Sam reflected. He probably meant what he said when he talked about the right to self-government. But why was he not doing something about it? Why was he not leading public opinion instead of merely following it? Why did he not work to persuade the provincial Premiers that they had nothing to fear from land claims? And how about the Premiers themselves, especially the Premier of British Columbia? Why did the Government of British Columbia take such a stupid, perverse attitude, refusing to recognize aboriginal rights or aboriginal title?

Sam and the other people of his village found it highly offensive that the Government of British Columbia was willing to offer a few crumbs as concessions to the alleviation of Indian poverty, but absolutely refused to recognize their rights. It was not concessions or charity that Sam and his people wanted, it was justice. They want this right, and they want a Government in Victoria that will recognize the other rights. They want a Government in Ottawa that will stand up for them.

Once we understand Sam and his people, and people like him in other aboriginal communities across Canada, we can begin to understand the issues involved in aboriginal title and aboriginal self-government. Technical problems, economic problems, constitutional and legal problems abound, but at the core of them all is the gut issue which is: Do we recognize the rights of aboriginal people or do we not? If we do recognize those rights, are we prepared to stand up and give leadership to see that those rights become a reality in our time?

We heard good intentions all around from all three Parties this afternoon. But one Party is in power. One Party has received an overwhelming mandate to govern the country. That is the Party that should be giving the leadership today. We are not seeing that leadership. Good intentions are not good enough. Unfortunately, to date, the Prime Minister and his Government have failed to show the kind of leadership that is needed if aboriginal title and aboriginal self-government are to become a reality in the immediate future.

In the two weeks before the constitutional conference I call upon the Prime Minister and members of Cabinet to show a real commitment to the aboriginal people and to work with the provinces and with the aboriginal leaders themselves so that a new relationship can grow and develop between Canada and the Indian, Métis and Inuit people who live within our borders.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend my hon. colleague for his commitment to the concerns and the issues of aboriginal people that has been expressed over many years in his role as my predecessor as New Democratic Party spokesman on aboriginal affairs. In view of his experience I would like to ask him a question regarding the reply that the Minister of Indian Affairs (Mr. McKnight) gave to me concerning the federal Government's position on the aboriginal right to self-government.

Will the Hon. Member take a moment to explain how he sees the federal position that self-government is merely a contingent right? How does he see that stance of the federal Government in light of what a Constitution should be?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. When the Minister responded to the question as to whether the Government saw the matter of aboriginal rights and the right to self-government as a contingent or an inherent right, he said that the Government had introduced its motion that saw it as a contingent right. But he said that they were prepared to support anything that came along. It seems that the Government is very wishy-washy on this whole subject. It would like to see some kind of an agreement. That would be a feather in its cap. But it does not have any strong, gut-level commitment to the question of aboriginal rights.

Aboriginal rights are not something that can be granted by the Parliament of Canada. They are not something that can be granted by the legislatures of our provinces. Aboriginal rights were not granted by the Royal Proclamation of George III. Aboriginal rights are the pre-existing rights of the people who were here before the coming of colonists and immigrants.

Those rights existed and they continue to exist. They cannot be granted by a Parliament. They can be recognized. It is incumbent upon us as a Parliament to respect and recognize those rights. As long as we deny them, we are involved in an injustice or dishonesty. It is incumbent upon us as a Parliament to recognize that those rights have always existed and exist now. We must deal with them in a realistic manner which befits the 1980s.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, all three Parties are doing their utmost to come up with a consensus in this debate. On one hand, with the ongoing negotiations on a trade agreement between Canada and the U.S., members of the New Democratic Party feel that the provinces should have a veto power. On the other hand, the Hon. Member feels that as a federal Government we should be able to override the provinces on this issue. Could he explain to the House why there are two different standards on these issues?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about two completely different things. We are talking about the entrenchment of the right to self-government in the Constitution. The Hon. Member should know that there cannot be any entrenchment without the consent of seven provinces with 50 per cent of the population. Certainly the provinces have a great deal of control.

What I am calling for, and what we have not seen from the Government, is leadership. That leadership should have been exercised down the line, from the moment when the Prime Minister was elected, in attempting to mould public opinion and to obtain the support of the Premiers for a strong recognition of the inherent right of aboriginal peoples to self-government. The federal Government cannot ride roughshod over them, because it must deal within the Constitution. We are calling for moral and political leadership on the part of the Prime Minister. We have not seen it. We would dearly like to see it. There are two weeks remaining before the constitutional conference. I should like to see the Prime Minister do his damnedest to get something to happen.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's comments in respect of aboriginal rights. I note that in the national convention of the New Democratic Party, the thirteenth federal NDP convention held in Ottawa in June and July, 1985, his Party passed the following resolution in respect of aboriginal rights:

> WHEREAS the Liberals and the Conservatives have stated that aboriginal rights must be extinguished in Land Claims settlements, in spite of consistent resistance from native peoples; . . .
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the New Democratic Party supports the position that aboriginal rights are non-extinguishable in Canada—

The Hon. Member is aware that the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) and the Government have now adopted the provisions of the Coolican report which called for a comprehensive land claims policy and provided that there was to be no extinguishment of rights within that process. In fact, part of that process was to include negotiation for self-government.

Would the Hon. Member advise the House if, at the forthcoming national convention of his Party this Friday, he will be moving a motion to congratulate the Government on its aboriginal rights policy?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will be able to do that. I would dearly like to move a motion at our federal convention congratulating the Government for its aboriginal rights policy, if it had a policy in which it recognized the inherent right of aboriginal peoples to self-government.

If the Government comes out with that statement tomorrow, I will do my darndest to move an emergency resolution of congratulations to the Government.

When the Government indicated that it was prepared to remove the old bugaboo that aboriginal rights had to be extinguished before they could be negotiated, our Party agreed with it and we commended the Government at that time.

We do not want to see the Government rest on some achievement of two months or three months ago or on the commitment which the Prime Minister gave two years ago. We want to see the Government move ahead and deal with the agenda which aboriginal people are placing before it now. It has not done that.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Hon. Member. As I indicated in my comments, the whole question of self-government and the recognition of the negotiating process for self-government are parts of the policy adopted by the Government under the Coolican report and the comprehensive land claims settlement policy. The Government has made that recognition and is moving forward with the procedure.

However, it is interesting to note that in the resolution on aboriginal rights put forward and adopted at the last convention of the New Democratic Party nothing was said about the question of entrenchment of those rights in the Constitution.

In that case, would the Hon. Member now be prepared to reconsider and move a motion of congratulations, since the Government has moved with a policy which recognizes that aboriginal rights should not be extinguished and the policy also includes negotiations for self-government, something which the NDP in its resolutions completely ignored when it last dealt with the issue?

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the entrenchment of the right to self-government is part of New Democratic Party policy. I will show it to the Hon. Member afterwards. He should read the whole book. We do not deal with everything in every resolution.

Mr. Redway: Table it.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member asks me to table it. If I could have the permission of the House to table it, I would do so.

Mr. Redway: Agreed.

Mr. Manly: Is that agreed, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Crosbie: No.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is unwilling to have the New Democratic Party policy on aboriginal rights tabled, because he knows that our policy entrenches the right of aboriginal people to self-government.

With regard to the Coolican report indicating that there should be negotiations for self-government, I think the Hon. Member missed the point in what aboriginal people are saying. They are saying that they want the right recognized as an inherent right, not something given to them by the Government. They want it recognized as something which is inherent and theirs by virtue of being their aboriginal people. We would like to see the Government recognize that, and it has not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif).

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the question under debate today because it gives me an opportunity to highlight what the Government has done to improve the situation of aboriginal peoples.

Hon. Members now in the House know that the Government is committed to take measures designed to enable Canada's native peoples to regain control over their daily activities. I should think that everybody is aware that both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) have stated that this is a priority.

As you undoubtedly know, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has three ways to promote aboriginal self-determination: first, constitutional amendments; second, the adoption of new legislation; and third, changes to administrative procedures and policies within the structure of existing legislative statutes.

Constitutional amendments call for careful deliberations involving many participants and, in this respect, we have begun and are continuing discussions with aboriginal groups and the provincial governments. The First Ministers' Conference scheduled for next March 26 and 27 will deal with Indian self-government and all major participants will attend. Drafting new legislation also requires the active participation of various interests, yet we have managed to make significant progress in that field.

Last June the House passed the Sechelt Indian Band Self-Government Act. The proclamation of Bill C-93 attests to this Government's commitment to find local solutions to aboriginal problems.

The legislation recognizes the Sechelt band as a legal entity and provides for the transfer of the titles to all their lands. The specific powers of the Sechelt Government and the procedures for exercising those powers are being worked out.

My colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) is now looking at other self-government proposals submitted by other Indian groups.

Such long-term changes will provide native communities with durable benefits. We agree however that there is an urgent need for immediate action in various areas.

We are acting on this by bringing administrative amendments to the current program, which is the third way of facilitating self-government.

The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development traditionally has been responsible for providing Indians with a wide range of programs and services which outside the reserves are being provided for by provincial or municipal governments.

We believe that responsibility for those services must be transferred to local administrations. In that way, leaders of those communities will be more accountable to their members. That move also will help improve program implementation, and ultimately the quality of life of Indian communities.

One of this Government's main objectives, Mr. Speaker, is to make sure that Indians have as much control over their daily activities as non-native Canadians. That transfer of responsibilities or programs must take place in a way that is orderly and acceptable to all parties involved. Since they started exercising a certain measure of control over their local programs approximately 25 or 30 years ago, Indian bands have been competently providing such important programs as housing, education and social services. It would be worthwhile to recall today, Mr. Speaker, that 59 per cent of the Indian Affairs' budget is administered by the Indians bands. Since 16 per cent of services are provided for by the provincial Governments, this means that only 25 per cent of the budget is still administered by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments to recall the progress made in some of those areas. Hon. Members will know that most Indian people live under conditions that are very dissimilar to those of non-native Canadians. The Indian economy is healthy, but unemployment is high compared to the national average. Therefore, many Indian communities are simply not in any position to provide their people with adequate housing at affordable prices.

In reserves generally, housing units have fewer rooms for a larger number of people as compared with non-native housing. A smaller but still significant number of Indian homes are not connected to water and sewer systems, facilities that most of us take for granted. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has seen first-hand those conditions during its numerous visits to Indian communities.

It is important for all of us to recognize the need to improve housing within native communities. It is also important for us to recognize, that, through the joint effort of the Government and the Indian bands, very substantial progress has been made these past few years.

Over the past five years for instance, there were 14,000 new housing units built on Indian reserves and 17,000 rehabilitated. The National Housing Code standards have been applied to all new housing units.

Direct native participation to housing policy development has markedly improved these past few years. Most Indians bands also play a more active role in the implementation of housing programs within their communities.

The administrative changes to the program and an increased control by the natives over their own destiny have resulted in a definite improvement in the number and quality of housing units available on the reserves.

Almost all housing construction is run by the Indian bands themselves, using native labour and, whenever possible, native suppliers. The economic benefits and jobs created have had an impact on the community as a whole.

The overpopulation problem, therefore, has eased off. In 1977, on the reserves, there were an average of 5.9 occupants per housing. In 1984, this number has declined to 5.1, and we foresee that it will be further reduced to 4.5 by 1990, which is much closer to the national average.

Mr. Speaker, this means that every year, some 60,000 native families have access to better living conditions than the previous year. And I do not mean just housing but homes of which adults can be proud, where children can invite their friends, and where lasting family traditions can be developed.

Native people are also involved in the development of new quality housing construction procedures.

For instance, some residents of 11 faraway communities, members of the Island Lake Tribal Council, are now taking a course in high-energy performing housing construction techniques. Under supervision, these residents will build 9 new houses and will improve the insulation in 9 others.

We are confident that the project will show that remote communities are in a position to acquire highly energy-efficient housing at a relatively low cost. When the pilot project is completed, the students will make up the base group which will carry on with the construction of highly energy-efficient housing. I think that this is a way to enable the Indians to develop.

While substantial progress has been made, the Government recognizes the need to amend the provision of housing services in Indian reserves. We have launched negotiations with Indian leaders with a view to setting up a mechanism for co-operation in order to develop new approaches to the financing of housing in the reserves.

In addition to housing, Indian bands are actively trying to increase their control over social programs and education.

The House knows that welfare services come under provincial jurisdiction. However, Indian children committed to the care of foster homes are eligible to federal assistance when they live on a reserve.

Federal expenditures for the care of Indian children and families have almost doubled in the past five years, from $35 million in 1981 to $63 million today. Most of those funds are managed by the Indian bands.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, we note a substantial increase in the number of agreements on child care and agencies offering services to Indian families during the past few years. This shows the concern of Indian communities for their children and the survival of the family as a unit.

In Nova Scotia, for example, an agency has been set up to deal with the needs of children and families on reserves all across the province. The jobs will go to Indians and the agency will be managed by Indians. In addition to providing the requisite child care services, the agency will focus particularly on the preventive aspect of social services. Agreements on native child care in Manitoba and Alberta have also shown that Indians want quality programs that respect their culture.

Mr. Speaker, this Government fully endorses the resolution passed by Indian bands to provide for their own social services. When necessary, we consult with the native peoples on ways to improve existing arrangements. This is an area where it is essential for Indians to become responsible for their own future.

It is also important for Indians to continue exercising increasing control over elementary and secondary education. Thirteen years ago, the federal Government started transferring certain responsabilities for education to the bands. Today, 60 per cent of the Indian Affairs budget for education is managed by the local bands. Enrolment of students at the elementary level, school attendance and academic results have all improved dramatically during this period. About 80,000 Indian students are now enrolled in the school system. In 1984, the Canadian Education Association stated there had been a definite improvement in academic results and retention levels among Indian students.

More Indian bands are involved in administration at the local level, and more Indians are teachers. In Manitoba, for instance, only six or seven native people had a teaching certificate in 1970. Today, there are nearly 450. Increasingly, these teachers are incorporating traditional values and Indian precepts in their basic curriculum. Indian youth clearly have everything to gain from the bands taking over responsibility for education. Because of their commitment to local schools that teach traditional Indian values, parents and adults generally are also benefitting from this local autonomy that has renewed their pride and enhanced community involvement.

The present Government has also made a firm commitment with respect to post-secondary education. In 1977, federal financing for post-secondary education was less than $8 million. In 1986-87, it was estimated at $81.6 million. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development gives some form of assistance to about 11,000 post-secondary students enrolled full-time or part-time.

Every year, Mr. Speaker, about 750 Indians graduate from junior colleges or universities, and a good many of them continue to study to obtain post-graduate degrees. Improved schooling will certainly brighten future prospects for all Indians.

Mr. Speaker, better education, housing and social service programs are truly effective only if there is a corresponding growth in economic development. As it has already been pointed out in this House, genuine self-government is impossible because of the current situation of economic dependence of the Indians.

In 1985 there were only 3,000 Indian businesses in Canada, and 2,000 of them were located on reserves; 56 per cent of these concerns have been established over the past five years.

The federal Government took part in the establishment of about 1,000 such businesses through the award of 188 direct loans. The results are impressive: roughly $38 million worth of investments on reserves, and more than 1,500 jobs created or maintained.

But a lot remains to be done, Mr. Speaker. This is why last year we set $25 million aside for the Indian Community Human Resources Program, in addition to the $18 million already earmarked for native training and employment. The new program includes a sound analysis of long-term economic and employments prospects, as well as an assessment of the skills and abilities of Indian community members. This program will enable Indians to find jobs in both Indian and non-Indian companies.

The program is aimed at encouraging Indian communities to assume full responsibility for the preparation and implementation of their own strategy.

We are confident that this approach will make it easier for them to gain readier access to long-term employment in many other communities.

Some bands have been able to take full responsibility for administering federal funds. The Conne River Band is fully responsible for its budget, provided it observes the conditions laid down in an agreement that was signed with the Department of Indians Affairs and Northern Development last March. This Government took a historic initiative at the end of last year when it introduced alternative financing modes. The program will give native leaders, within the scope of existing legislation, the greatest possible control over local expenditures.

Alternative financing modes will make it possible for bands to receive a block of funding equivalent to what they would normally receive from Indian Affairs and Northern Development. However, each band will have the option of setting its own priorities, adapting services to the needs of its members and designing the appropriate mechanisms.

In addition to providing a high level of social and economic autonomy, the new modes will make Indian leaders more accountable to their members, and this is an important point. Leaders will be judged on their ability to provide essential services in a reliable and efficient manner.

Treasury Board has approved this initiative, and its implementation is proceeding. It is expected that around thirty or forty bands or tribal councils will take advantage of alternative financing modes in the course of the next fiscal year. However, the Government will be monitoring the way federal funds are spent. The First Nations that take advantage of these alternative financing modes will have to submit an annual audited report as evidence of effective and responsible financial management. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development will continue to be accountable to Parliament for the funds distributed by his Department, although the Department will no longer be the sole administrator of these funds.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has often demonstrated its commitment to transferring responsibility for local programs to the Indian bands. We have made significant progress in many areas. However, as I said before, much remains to be done. We will be able to succeed thanks to consultation, co-operation and understanding, and we are confident that progress will be even more significant in the future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry).

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for her speech. I think it was useful to have an overview of what is being done in this area by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may comment that in listening to the Hon. Member's description of the progress made by native peoples, I felt that this further points to the need for our native peoples to be considered as equal partners in Confederation. In fact, before the Hon. Member's speech, the debate had centred mainly on the constitutional issue, and therefore I would like to ask the Hon. Member to give us some thoughts on that question. I am particularly interested in her analysis of the position of the Province of Ontario at the First Ministers' Conference to be held within two weeks. Could she give us, let us say a federal perspective on the current position of the Government of Ontario as described in newspapers and as explained to us at the standing committee by the great leaders of native organizations? Indeed, they say that this position is of no use to the aboriginal peoples, that it does not support the process, and they make a comparison between the present Government of Ontario and the previous administration which, during earlier First Ministers' Conferences, they saw as an ally in their quest for the advancement of native peoples.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. With respect to the position of the Government of Ontario concerning the constitutional problem, I think it is under discussion, and that the Indian bands and the governments of the other provinces as well as the federal Government will have to react to various positions.

As the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said earlier, what matters now is that the first proposal which was tabled by the federal Government, which was considered and which prompted the parties to seek concertation paved the way for another motion sponsored by the Province of Nova Scotia. All these debates on the constitutional aspect involved will continue during the conference at the end of this month. To me these problems are extremely important, and I can inform the Hon. Member, in case he is not aware of the fact, that I have an Indian reserve in my own riding. When I consider the co-operation during the last two years between the authorities on the reserve and the federal Government, I have to say that in most cases, I agree with giving increased autonomy and I think this must be done, because I can tell you, Indians are really proud when they have designed and implemented a project and can show their community what they can do.

I am thinking of a senior citizens' home that was built in my riding. The home is really the pride and joy of the whole village, because they built it and also had the idea in the first place. So I think that on the basis of all these facts, we must conclude that Indian bands must be autonomous and be answerable to their own communities, and that is the only way the money will be matched up with the priorities of the community. I am convinced that the native people living in my riding do not have the same needs and priorities as those of other reserves in Ontario or British Columbia, and I therefore think it is important that each community or local authority be able to determine its own needs.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I think I visited the reserve in the riding of Charlesbourg not long ago, if we are talking about the Village Huron reserve. I can assure the Hon. Member that it is certainly quite different from any of the fifty-nine Indian reserves I have in my own riding. The Hon. Member mentioned the need to help native people be proud of themselves. In this respect, what are her views on the position taken by the Government of British Columbia which, for all practical purposes, denies that native rights exist in British Columbia and that the provincial Government has any responsibility to native people? It claims the federal Government is fully responsible for them. I wonder what the Hon. Member thinks the federal Government should do to make the Government of British Columbia change its position.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I think it is important to have an honest and open debate and to have all parties involved. As in any matter where disputes have to be settled, if none of the parties are prepared to come part of the way to understand the other's position, I don't think we will ever get anywhere. In the specific case you refer to, I agree the situation in no way resembles that in my riding. There are very specific problems, and I think that in this particular case, negotiations may take a long time. When we have a provincial Government that is not prepared to make any concessions at all, I think something must be done. On the other hand, I must admit I am not very familiar with the present situation in British Columbia.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Westmorland—Kent (Mr. Robichaud).

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to take part in this debate on the motion now under consideration, which says the following:

> That this House condemns the Government for its timid and unimaginative approach to the advancement of the Aboriginal Peoples of Canada, for its continuing failure to offer long term, fair, and just responses to the social, cultural, economic and political aspirations of Canada's First Nations, for its unwillingness to recognize and affirm the inherent rights to Aboriginal self-determination, and for thereby impeding the improvement of the health, heritage and economic well-being of present and future generations of Aboriginal peoples in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the text of this motion says a lot, and justifiably so.

Before my election to this House, I found it very hard to understand the problems and frustrations of the native communities in my region. Indeed, I could not understand why these people could never reach their goals and receive from the Government the attention they required and which the Government should in fact have given to their problems. I was not aware of all the treaties and agreements signed between the native people of my region and our ancestors and parents. Agreements were in fact signed which provided for mutual respect and for sharing the same territory in harmony.

As a Member of Parliament, I sat on the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development where I heard the submissions of many representatives of native communities, not only from my region, but from everywhere in Canada. These people told us about the problems they had to face in their everyday life. I also attended a few meetings between the native communities and the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and more particularly a meeting at which the Minister was present. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that in his statements and all the time he was at this meeting, the Minister showed understanding and even compassion for the needs expressed by the representatives of the various communities. I have no doubt about the good intentions of the Minister and all the people who were there.

At this meeting there were representatives of all the groups from the various communities in New Brunswick, and as you are probably aware, Mr. Speaker, we have in New Brunswick two Indian nations, the Micmacs, whose territory extends beyond the boundaries of the province, and the Malecites, who live mostly along the St. John River. All these communities were represented at this meeting which had a lot of importance for them.

At this meeting, they indicated the needs of their communities in many areas, including education and especially housing. I will limit myself to these, because it might take much too much time to report everything that was said at that meeting.

In his reply, the Minister assured all the people there that he would look into these problems very carefully and make sure that his department tried to correct certain situations.

Now, when I get in touch with these communities, Mr. Speaker, I can see that the same problems still exist, that although goodwill was expressed during this meeting, the problems still remain, so that I begin to understand why these people sometimes feel so frustrated. They are simply marking time, never progressing. Here is an example. I was told that a certain community was in great need of housing. Recently, representatives of that community appeared before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and told us they had received money for housing. Because of the need, they had started building before the winter. They had to proceed quickly to provide shelters for the people. But when the Department approved funding for this housing, it only covered building materials, not the labour. What happened is that only the basements could be built with no structure above to shelter the family. I am even afraid some of those basements may not be of any use because of ground freezing.

So when one says that these communities are frustrated, I mean when I say so, this is another example which shows why these people are experiencing such frustrations. It would seem that, well intentioned as we always are, we want to help them but we do not carry through our good intentions to the last step, we fail to act on all our intentions and, of course, intentions are always commendable. I have in my riding four Micmac communities, the largest with 1,543 inhabitants. As a matter of fact, these people came to meet us at the standing committee to tell us about some of their problems. Mr. Speaker, I will quote from their brief:

It reads:

It is the biggest reserve in New Brunswick numbering 1,543 people which comprises 25.5 per cent of the status Indian population in the province. We live in an area that suffers one of the highest unemployment rates in the province, which is said to be around 50 per cent. The Big Cove unemployment rate is constantly at 75 per cent and sometimes goes as high as 90 per cent. There are simply no jobs available to the Indians in Kent County even though we represent a large percentage of the area's population and a large percentage of the area's economic generator. We have approximately 4,000 acres of land, but most of it does not have the type of resources that would enable us to create employment. Consequently, the lifeline of Big Cove is welfare.

So that this community is sustained by social welfare. Indeed the community had agreed to assume responsibility for administering this welfare program. They agreed although with some hesitation, because they were afraid that if they accepted this responsibility, then perhaps departmental officials would begin to reduce the funds given to the community. Well, Mr. Speaker, we read a little further and that is exactly what happened. Once they took over responsibility for administering community funds, officials began to reduce them, and the people tell us in their brief that they were not consulted at any time. So again we can understand why they should feel frustrated.

I could give you another example, this time concerning the Tobique community on St. John River, a Malecite nation, where land negotiations had begun, negotiations which had been considered for ten years and which the then Minister in 1982 had acknowledged as being over a legitimate claim, so the negotiation process was launched. Of course those people had to depend on the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Develoment to get the funds required to continue the negotiations. After a few years of negotiations—I am about to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker—all of a sudden it was decided to suspend the negotiations and not give any more money to support the whole infrastructure which had been set up.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is just another example of the way we Canadians and the Government, no matter how well-intentioned we may be, another example as I said which shows how we treat native people. Mr. Speaker, I hope that at the conference to be held at the end of this month there will be strong evidence of a political will to show complete understanding of and full respect for the problems and claims of these native people.

REPORT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address an issue of great importance, the report of the Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals.

At the outset, I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of the government and all Canadians to express our sincere appreciation for the important contribution that has been made by the Commission. Because of the dedication and efforts of the honourable Justice Deschênes and those who assisted him in his work, the resolution of the difficult problem of war criminals has been brought much closer.

The problem of war criminals has been of serious concern to Canadians, and to the entire world from the time when it first became clear during World War II that crimes of unprecedented scope had been perpetrated. In order to ensure that those guilty of war crimes and crimes against humanity were tried and punished, the Nuremberg war crimes trials were held. As a result many major war criminals were tried, convicted and promptly punished.

[English]

It should be remembered that under its War Crimes Act, Canada also conducted war crimes trials from 1946 to 1948. One hundred and seventy-one cases of crimes against members of the Canadian Armed Forces were investigated and seven individuals were found guilty of war crimes.

In the 1950s, as individuals and nations decided to put the trauma and horror of World War II behind them, the active pursuit of war criminals became much less of a priority in many countries.

Strong public attention did not focus on this problem again until the 1970s when suggestions emerged that not all war criminals had been identified and convicted by earlier processes. That alleged war criminals might have found refuge here became clear with the arrest and extradition of Helmut Rauca from Canada to West Germany.

Reports during the early 1980s suggested that the number of war criminals in Canada was in the area of 2,000 to 3,000 and could reach as high as 6,000. There were claims made that Josef Mengele, notorious for brutal and inhuman medical experiments, had come or attempted to come to Canada. As these accounts persisted, it became increasingly apparent that the Canadian Government should take action to resolve old uncertainties and to see that the interests of justice were served. However, the absence of clear information on the scope of the problem and any consensus among legal authorities on appropriate remedies were impediments to decisive action. It is a substantial accomplishment of this Government that, despite the difficulties, it has taken the required action to address this problem which has cast its shadow on Canada for far too long.

To ensure that any war criminals who might be found in Canada were brought to justice, the precise scope of the problem had to be measured and an appropriate approach to its resolution developed. On February 7, 1985, the Commission of Inquiry on War Criminals, with the Hon. Mr. Justice Jules Deschênes as commissioner, was established with a mandate to address these questions. The report on the commission of inquiry was transmitted to the Government on December 30, 1986. It was my privilege to have tabled that portion of the report recommended for publication by the commission. That part of the report discusses generally the scope and nature of the problem of war criminals in Canada and sets out the findings and recommendations of the commission. It also contains general outlines of the commission's treatment of 822 individual cases.

There is an additional part of the report in which the commission discusses 29 cases. The commission originally felt that the seriousness of the allegations and the possible availability of evidence merited special attention. The commission recommended that this part of its report entitled "Part II, Confidential", not be released. We agree with this recommendation.

Before turning to the findings and recommendations of the commission, there is one preliminary matter which is important to note. When the commission's report was submitted to the Government, it was apparent that the level of detail set out in the portion of the proposed public report which deals with individual cases might allow the identification of many of the individuals concerned. Because the commission found the allegations against most of the individuals to be unfounded and in other cases recommended further investigation, the Government decided that changes were necessary to protect the privacy and reputations of all the individuals concerned. This concern was discussed with Mr. Justice Deschênes. Following this consultation, many specific place names, dates and some details in this portion of the report were made more general in order to protect against the identification of individuals. Mr. Justice Deschênes has expressed his agreement that the changes made in no way affect the substance or the integrity of the report. He has also provided an explanatory note to this effect which has been included in the report.

I would like to take a moment to discuss the findings of the report. I am pleased to say that the report represents a substantial clearing of the air with respect to war criminals. We are no longer confronted with an undefined problem with no solution in sight. Rather, it is now apparent that the problem of war criminals is not as extensive as had been feared. Nevertheless, it is apparent that action is required and that a resolution of this problem can be found within our system of justice.

The work of the commission of inquiry has cleared away much of the mystery and speculation which has characterized previous discussions of war criminals in Canada. It has provided a basis upon which the Government can act to carry out necessary investigations and resolve specific legal issues. While the commission's work has identified a number of instances in which individuals suspected of war crimes are or have been in Canada, it appears that the scope of this problem has been considerably exaggerated by some. There are and have been far fewer suspected war criminals in Canada than suggested. Many persons against whom suspicions were voiced are no longer living. There is no evidence that Dr. Josef Mengele ever entered or applied to enter Canada. The charges of war crimes against the so-called Galicia Division said to have committed atrocities were found not to be substantiated, and allegations against many, many individuals have been found groundless or otherwise dismissed.

While pointing out that the history of Canada's approach to the question could have been more active and aggressive, the report indicates that Canadian actions with respect to the pursuit of war criminals in the period following World War II were not substantially different from those of other western countries. There is little doubt that the practices over the past 40 years could have been even more effective in preventing the entry of suspected war criminals into Canada and their attaining of citizenship here. However, it is also clear from the report that there was no action or policy on the part of the Government of Canada or of Canadian officials to aid or assist known or suspected war criminals in entering Canada nor to conceal or protect their presence in any way.

Of approximately 880 individuals investigated by the commission, the large majority of cases have been found to be unsubstantiated. The commission recommends that over 600 cases be closed immediately. The commission did find that 21 persons suspected of possible complicity in war crimes were in Canada but left for another country and 86 such persons died in Canada. Three hundred and forty-one individuals on the suspect list never came to Canada. In 154 cases, the commission could find no prima facie evidence of war crimes.

The number of individuals in Canada against whom there remain outstanding allegations of possible involvement in war crimes has, as a consequence of the commission's efforts, declined very substantially from the previously suggested thousands to far smaller numbers.

[Translation]

However, in the time available to him, Mr. Justice Deschênes was not able to complete his investigations in every case. Consequently, some cases remain open. Of these cases, almost all require further investigation before any decision concerning possible action can be taken. Some of the cases involve possible fraud or non-disclosure of an individual's background at the time of entry into Canada or when applying for citizenship. In turn, some of these reveal no evidence of personal participation in criminal acts directly harmful to others.

[English]

In its recommendations, the commission recognizes that there are difficulties with the capacity of Canada's current laws to deal with war criminals. In particular, the recommendations of the commission indicate a need for further legislative amendment before proceeding beyond the investigative phase. Amendments to present laws are suggested with respect to three possible approaches to dealing with war criminals. These are extradition, criminal prosecution and denaturalization or removal of citizenship with or without deportation. The commission also recommended changes to immigration and citizenship laws and prospective changes to immigration practices to ensure that future entry into Canada by war criminals is prevented.

Specifically, the commission's recommendations are as follows. With respect to extradition, the commission suggests an expansion of Canada's traditional laws and practices to make the extradition from Canada of individuals accused of war crimes easier to accomplish. This would involve amendments to the Extradition Act and specific bilateral treaties to allow war criminals to be extradited to other countries willing to undertake prosecution.

The commission's recommended approach with respect to the use of Canada's criminal law would see a specific amendment to the Criminal Code to allow it to be used as a vehicle for the prosecution in Canada of war criminals. To permit this, the report recommends amendments to the Criminal Code to define war crimes and crimes against humanity. It recommends that Canadian courts should then be given jurisdiction to try individuals accused of war crimes and crimes against humanity even if their crimes were committed outside Canada if the acts in question would have amounted to crimes if committed in Canada.

With respect to revocation of citizenship, denaturalization and deportation, the commission recommends that denaturalization and deportation procedures should be streamlined and consolidated, at least in cases of suspected Nazi war criminals. It also recommends that the denaturalization phase should proceed first and that the resultant findings of fact should be held conclusive in the deportation phase of proceedings. In addition, the report suggests that judicial appeals of decisions on denaturalization and deportation should be denied or restricted to a single appeal.

The report includes other recommendations and findings with respect to the grounds for deportation and denaturalization and the legal principles applicable thereto directed at clearly establishing that war criminals should be denied entry into Canada or Canadian citizenship if their status was obtained on the basis of fraud or by withholding evidence. These changes would be prospective as well as affecting those whose alleged offences occurred during World War II.

With a view to the strengthening of the immigration and citizenship processes to ensure that future entry of war criminals into Canada is made as difficult as possible, the commission made a number of other specific recommendations. In order to strengthen the Immigration Act and immigration procedures, the commission recommended that:

(a) The immigration screening process and interview procedure should be tightened so that a minimum set of questions on military, political and other past activities of applicants are asked, reduced to writing and signed;

(b) Immigration application forms should be kept until the applicant is no longer alive;

(c) Express exclusions should be made in the convention relating to the status of refugees and the Immigration Act to make them expressly inapplicable to war criminals;

(d) Section 127 of the Immigration Act, whose purpose is to provide protection for individuals with an established Canadian domicile, should be amended to ensure that its guarantee expressly does not apply to those involved in war crimes;

(e) To allow individuals to be deported to jurisdictions where they will be subject to judicial process, their current right to choose where they will go on being deported ought to be limited by expressly amending the Immigration Act.

With respect to the Citizenship Act the commission recommended:

(a) That the Citizenship Act should be amended to make it a bar to obtaining citizenship to have been involved in war crimes;

(b) That the Citizenship Act should be amended to make participation in war crimes a specific ground for revocation of citizenship;

(c) That Section 9 of the Citizenship Act, which provides for removal of citizenship by order because of false representation, fraud or knowingly concealing material circumstances, should be amended to make it expressly applicable to situations arising under former laws on citizenship and immigration in order to ensure that it applies to past misrepresentations or offences of this nature.

The commission also considered certain evidentiary problems which presented themselves. It is apparent that in conducting further investigations serious evidentiary difficulties would be encountered. The passage of 40 years and the national, political and linguistic differences that must be addressed in endeavouring to collect the necessary evidence are formidable. In quite a number of the remaining cases the pursuit of investigations must involve at least one Eastern bloc country. The commission concluded that Eastern bloc evidence should be sought but only under specific conditions. The commission recommended that Canada should seek evidence in foreign countries in situations where there are already serious grounds to believe that an individual has committed war crimes, provided that the country agrees to the six specific conditions which the commission recommended in order to ensure that Canadian standards of evidence and justice are met.

Finally, the report recommends that the legal changes recommended by the commission and the investigation of individual cases required, should be carried out either by the commission itself or by the Government utilizing resources within the Department of Justice and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The commission did not recommend an organization similar to the United States Office of Special Investigations.

Since receiving the report the Government has reflected carefully on the nature of the issues which prompted this inquiry and the need for the Government to address the problem of war criminals. Although the commission found that the number of war criminals in Canada has been greatly exaggerated, it is clear that Canadians are not and will not be satisfied with the notion that individuals guilty of war crimes during the course of World War II should find in Canada a safe haven from the processes of justice. The Government must be concerned if even one individual guilty of war crimes has found a refuge from justice here.

It has long been a principle of our law that individuals guilty of serious crimes must be sought out and punished with regard to any statute of limitations. At the same time the Government realizes that the preservation of individual rights is a fundamental component of the administration of justice.

It is clear that Canadians value highly the legal rights guaranteed in the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the other protections of our system of justice. The Government has therefore approached its initial assessment of the recommendations of this commission recognizing the need to develop a response appropriate to our own society in the context of our own system of justice. The guiding principle is simply this: The problem of war criminals should, wherever possible, be dealt with here in Canada and every case must be resolved in a manner consistent with Canadian standards of law and evidence.

Within this framework it is clear that an unequivocal affirmation of Canada's commitment not to be a haven for those who would seek to avoid punishment for crimes committed in time of war is necessary. The Government is, therefore, prepared to amend the Criminal Code to give Canadian courts jurisdiction to try in Canada war crimes or crimes against humanity where the conduct in question would amount to a criminal offence in Canada. Such proceedings, mindful of the need to preserve the fundamental rights and freedoms of persons in Canada, would be undertaken according to Canadian rules of evidence and in accordance with the overriding principles established by our own Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Such jurisdiction will of course allow the trial within Canada of individuals accused of war crimes in modern conflicts and will not be restricted to addressing past crimes. It will also be necessary to define what war crimes will be subject to criminal sanctions. To ensure that the required amendment effectively addresses past and future war crimes, careful attention is being directed to the development of the precise standards and definitions to be utilized in the proposed Criminal Code provisions.

Mr. Justice Deschênes pointed out that much more remains to be done in completing the recommended investigations. He felt, however, that a determined effort could achieve the necessary results within the framework of existing Canadian institutions, specifically the RCMP and the Department of Justice. He pointed out that sufficient resources would be required by these institutions to pursue the investigative process and take the necessary action warranted by the available evidence. As already noted, he recommended against the creation of an organization similar to the Office of Special Investigations in Washington. With all of this the Government agrees.

If Canada is to contemplate seriously the possibility of bringing criminal proceedings in Canada concerning events which happened in Europe it is clear that evidence will have to be gathered wherever it may be found. That is nothing new, of course. Traditionally Canadian courts have, where appropriate, sought and utilized the capacity to seek evidence in foreign countries by way of commission. As well, Canadian police have on many occasions carried their investigations into foreign lands with the aid of local authorities. For example, significant and reliable evidence was obtained in several countries, including the Soviet Union, in the proceedings leading to the extradition of Helmut Rauca to West Germany for war crimes.

The individual cases in which Mr. Justice Deschênes has recommended that consideration be given to seeking Eastern European evidence will be carefully reviewed on a case-by-case basis. Any gathering of evidence abroad will be restricted to those cases where, in the opinion of Canadian authorities, there are specific, credible and serious allegations of war crimes requiring further investigation.

In such cases Mr. Justice Deschênes recommended that six conditions be observed. These were: One, the protection of reputations through confidentiality; two, the use of independent interpreters; three, access to original documents where relevant; four, access to witnesses' previous statements; five, freedom of examination of witnesses in accordance with Canadian rules of evidence; six, the videotaping of such examination. The Government believes that obtaining evidence in accordance with Canadian procedures and the additional safeguards of the six special conditions recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes for use in Canadian courts under the scrutiny of Canadian judges and in accordance with Canadian rules relating to the admissibility and probity of evidence should guarantee fairness and justice to all concerned.

The need to tighten up Canada's practices with respect to the entry into Canada and the processes of obtaining Canadian citizenship to ensure that Canada will not be thought of as a place of refuge for individuals who have participated in war crimes, crimes against humanity, is also clear. The Government will proceed with the measures recommended by the Deschênes Commission to ensure that in the future, immigration into Canada and Canadian citizenship are not available to those who have participated in war crimes in other countries. The immigration screening process and interview procedure will be tightened up as recommended. Other protections of the Immigration Act and the Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees will be made expressly inapplicable to war criminals.

• (1130)

In future, Canadian citizenship will be denied to those who have participated in war crimes. This will be done by amending the Citizenship Act to make complicity in war crimes as defined in the amended Criminal Code a bar to Canadian citizenship.

[English]

With respect to those who already have become Canadian citizens, the Government does not wish to change the law retroactively. Hence, it will proceed under existing laws and practices to address the problem of individuals whose citizenship has been obtained through demonstrable fraud.

Certain of the commission's recommendations suggested changes to Canada's extradition laws to increase the extent to which extradition would be available to remove those suspected of war crimes from this country. The Government's current extradition policies represent a carefully developed balance of the considerations which must apply before Canadian residents are sent outside Canada for trial elsewhere. Because we seek solutions consistent with the Government's goal of ensuring that this problem is, to the maximum possible extent, addressed here in Canada, no change in current law or practice with respect to extradition will be made to address the situation of war criminals specifically. That is not to say that extradition will not be carried out in any circumstances. It is intended, as in the past, to consider extradition requests in a manner consistent with existing law and traditional arrangements and practice.

The commission also makes a number of recommendations suggesting the streamlining and consolidation of Canada's legal processes with respect to the revocation of citizenship and deportation. As recognized by the commission, the proposed changes raise difficult questions which must be carefully reviewed and assessed. It is not proposed to make these changes. The Government believes that by applying current law and practice, together with the other changes already proposed, the underlying problems will be effectively addressed.

Canadians expect their Government to demonstrate leadership in addressing this important question. Canadians also expect that no matter how difficult the problem, the fundamental principles of fairness and equity must apply. It is not appropriate to seek to delay its resolution, nor to seek to export our responsibility to other countries. I believe that the Government's commitment, which I have outlined today, will be effective, fair, and in keeping with the best tradition of Canadian justice.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would it be possible, in view of certain other arrangements, for me to present the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Finance? It would take just a moment and I understand that the opposition speakers will want to speak extensively in reply to this statement by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). It would be helpful and I would appreciate the House's indulgence.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) indicate approval or disapproval?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member requires unanimous consent. For my part, I have no objection.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

WAR CRIMINALS

REPORT OF COMMISSION OF INQUIRY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to thank the Minister for giving us notice of his statement and for the opportunity this morning to spend two hours examining both the report, which numbers about 1,000 pages and the statement he just made. I am of course very grateful, but I think all Members will agree that since we are looking at 1,000 pages, it would be difficult for us to respond today with the same degree of precision as the Minister. I intend to look at the details and to respond specifically to each proposals in the days to come.

Today, however, I can only respond in a very general way, and I trust the Minister will understand.

[English]

When the Deschênes Commission was launched I had the opportunity, on behalf of my Party, to indicate our position. I want to remind the House of the degree of approval which I indicated for the choice of Mr. Justice Deschênes to head this commission. Without having read the report from cover to cover, I believe that what I did see in it shows a degree of workmanship, a degree of commitment which lasted years beyond his original undertaking, a willingness to examine all issues raised, and a willingness to pursue all suspects identified, which deserve the commendation of this House. As I said at the outset, I would like to indicate once again how felicitous the choice of Mr. Justice Deschênes was for this project and how well he has redeemed the confidence which was shown in him when he was asked to undertake this assignment.

At the same time as I expressed confidence in Mr. Justice Deschênes I expressed two reservations, and I want to refer to those briefly now as well. I expressed the reservation that the Government would do nothing on the prosecution of war criminals for the entire time that the commission sat. I expected then that it would be a relatively short period of time. It has turned out to be a long period of time and, regrettably, the concern which I expressed was validated by events. During the entire process, although there were cases under investigation as indicated and referred to in the House by the Minister of Justice of the day, nothing was done during this very, very long period. I regret that during that long process the projects which the Deschênes Commission recognized as having been commenced by the former Government were not pursued by the present Government.

The other concern which I expressed, to which I want to refer again, was a concern that the fabric of Canadian society could be affected by a process in which there would be allegations, not related to particular individuals who would be charged, but which might find a reference to communities, allegations which could disturb the harmony of the Canadian society. Regrettably, and through no fault of Mr. Justice Deschênes, in my opinion, there have been tensions during the period that the Deschênes Commission conducted its work.

However, those are behind us now and the report is before us. It is incumbent upon the Liberal Party, and it is our desire, to look to the future, to look to the degree to which this report will settle issues of public concern and the degree to which the Government will respond to it. It is to those issues that I want to turn now.

However much the fabric of Canadian unity may have been affected by the report, there is a full opportunity for national unity to be strengthened, for the understanding among Canadian communities to be enhanced, and for the report and the action of the Government to be an experience which will enrich Canadian society and reinforce our commitment to fundamental justice, which surely includes the inability of a democratic society to accept among it the presence of those who have committed some of the worst crimes in world history and have remained unpunished.

The formula for a very good ending exists. I had an opportunity to read the Minister's statement beforehand and I want to say that I think the Government is indicating that it will be on the right track. It will have the support of this Party to carry out the program that the Minister has indicated.

I want to examine some of the important issues that are raised in the report. Again, I think Canadians can find reassurance from some of the conclusions on serious key issues with which the Deschênes Commission dealt.

The first question I want to examine is: why has it taken so long for Nazi war criminals to be addressed and brought to justice? The report deals with that issue and finds, I hope to the relief of all Canadians, that there has been no conspiracy to harbour war criminals in Canada, that no one was providing cover or protection for war criminals, and that no one encouraged them to come to Canada. The report finds that the number who got here, regrettable as it is, came here through the same kinds of circumstances in which they got to other countries. While Canada's record is not satisfactory, it is no worse if no better than the record of a number of other western countries which were similarly countries of refuge for those fleeing the war, including a number of war criminals. That should be a relief to Canadians. I hope it will be generally accepted and will provide more cement for good relations among the communities that live in this wonderful country.

A second finding that I believe is valuable and important as well as reassuring is the finding that the number of war criminals who are here is small. One is too many, and I am glad the Minister addressed that theme in his remarks. If there is one among us who can be brought to justice, that individual should be brought to justice. However, I am reassured, as I hope other Canadians are reassured, to learn that there are not 6,000 or 3,000 but a number small enough that there should be no more excuses for not taking the necessary steps to bring them all to justice so that Canadians can feel, when this process is completed, that the problem has been dealt with and we are not a country which offered asylum and did nothing about war criminals who in one way or another—fortunately not through complicity or support—managed to make Canada their hiding place for so many decades. That is reassuring.

Finally, I want to refer to one example because the report makes a great deal of it. It is the example of the Galicia Division in Ukraine. I am Jewish. I grew up in the Jewish community. It has always been thought and said that that division represented a symbol of evil. While I want to read his examination fully, I am prepared and I want to accept the examination by Mr. Justice Deschênes in which he tells us that that division is made up of individuals, some of whom are clearly not guilty of any war crimes, not only in the opinion of Mr. Justice Deschênes but in the opinion of others on whom he relied and whom he cites at great length in his report.

In other words, in relation to this division, I would like to think of the Deschênes Commission as being a clearing of the air and a sign that no ethnic group can be taken as a whole to be responsible for the commission of war crimes. War crimes were committed by individuals of a variety of nationalities, and in the Galicia Division, as in other groups, each case must be considered on its merits and each individual must be dealt with as an individual. According to Mr. Justice Deschênes, the vast majority of them are innocent of any war crimes.

We must remember that the Nürnberg trials were not a trial of the German people. They were not a trial of World War II. They were a trial of a series of individuals, each charged with personal responsibility for the commission of war crimes. That is how we must look at the question of war criminals in Canada. It is a matter of individual responsibility.

I am pleased that Mr. Justice Deschênes went to the length he did in connection with the Galicia Division to establish that approach. It is an approach that I hope Canadians will make part of their consideration in seeing that war criminals are brought to justice and that the matter is dealt with in a way that is fair.

I said that the Government promises action and that Deschênes recommended action. Let me turn to the action that is recommended and what the Government proposes to do about it. Deschênes made three recommendations. The Government is only proposing to act upon one recommendation. First, Deschênes recommended that the Criminal Code be amended so that a made-in-Canada approach can be taken so that prosecutions can be held in our country and evidence can be brought in subject to strict Canadian rules and applied against war criminals here. It deals with some issues that have been difficulties in the past such as the question of retroactivity, and comes to the conclusion, based on what looks like sound legal argument, that the Criminal Code can be amended and war criminals can be prosecuted here.

The second recommendation is the revision of the extradition laws and the treaties to facilitate trying war criminals in foreign countries if those countries ask for their return.

Third, the process of denaturalization is examined. Deschênes recommended all three proposals and the Government is proposing to deal with the Criminal Code approach. I will have much more to say about the details of the Government's proposal, but one point I want to make now is that there is no doubt that the Criminal Code approach is much better than the other two. Taking away someone's citizenship depends on very special circumstances in individual cases which may or may not be there for the individual. I suspect that there are war criminals in Canada who could pass the denaturalization test by the circumstances under which they came. Therefore, it would not work for them in any event.

Extradition is similarly limited. Not every request for extradition can be honoured. In my opinion, if we had a war criminal in Canada who was wanted in some country where he had already been tried and condemned to death in front of a firing squad in absentia, we would not be able to condone an extradition under circumstances like that. Therefore, the two methods which the Government has put aside are less broad and less useful than the third method which it has endorsed and is proposing to follow. Our Party will accept that.

We will be satisfied, I suggest, for the time being to see the Government proceed with the Criminal Code amendment and show us the kind of good faith which has not been forthcoming generally from the Government in many other areas. I must say that the Government has not kept its promise in other areas, but in this case in taking the promise we are prepared to give the Government the opportunity and our support for the concentration on the one method of the three which could touch every war criminal and which ought to be the most useful device with the most safeguards. After all, taking away citizenship does not deal with the reasonable balance of proof of guilt of a serious crime. Extradition puts the individuals in the hands of another country, however much we might respect that particular country.

So let us have the amendments, and let us have them quickly. The Government has also made a commitment to allocate resources so that war criminals can be dealt with expeditiously. It has had the report for three months but we have not yet heard of anything. I hope the Minister was able to tell the media today how many Counties, how many lawyers, how many historians and how many interpreters have been allocated, because in three months, if the Government is acting in good faith on the solution it has endorsed, I think it should have been able to come up with something substantial. We in our Party will be pressing for that.

I think the Government as well ought to act on 21 particular cases referred to in this report. The Deschênes Commission finds that 21 highly suspected war criminals have left Canada. I do not think it is good enough for us to close the books on them just because they have left Canada, and I would expect the Government to do what we have been asking other countries to do. We have asked them to help us bring war criminals to justice in our own country. I would hope that in each of those cases an initiative will be taken by the Government to alert the country concerned that there is a fugitive in that country who ought to be brought to justice and that all possible assistance will be offered by the Government so that that can be done.

I have two other points that I would like to put before you, Mr. Speaker, at this time. The first point is the concern expressed by the public in some quarters while all this has been going on that while the Nazi holocaust certainly occurred and requires that its perpetrators, if found in Canada, be brought to justice, there are other victims in this country who have suffered from other international atrocities in other places in the world. While the Government has focused on the holocaust in Europe during World War II, there have been calls for a focusing on other victims and other victimization and on the fact that in other parts of the world, in Asia, Africa, Afghanistan, Angola, Viet Nam, horrible tragedies and brutalities have been committed, and that possibly there may be perpetrators of those crimes among us. There is, indeed, the Communist invasion following World War II. After the defeat of the Nazis, an additional series of atrocities were committed as the Communists took control of country after country. Something should be done about these facts as well. While I approve and support on behalf of my Party the amendment of the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act so that from now on there will be a very good filter system, I am not satisfied that the past has been sufficiently addressed. I would urge the Government to deal with that problem as well.

I want to suggest even that if a royal commission has done us such a service in connection with war criminals from World War II, a royal commission could be the solution and other Canadians who were victims of foreign atrocities could bring their case against suspects in our country and receive the same attention and investigation which has been given to the case of the Nazi war criminal.

My final thought was that the report, and it is really the point I made at the outset, is a great opportunity and that the Government's response is also a great opportunity for a healing process to take place in our country, a healing process which is needed because of tensions among some communities in Canadian society which became regrettably worse during the process of the Deschênes Commission. This is an opportunity to strengthen national unity and to reinforce our commitment to fundamental justice for all crimes which must be punished, as the commission of war crimes must be punished.

I want to lend my support to the Government in this purpose and to warn that, having made a commitment to action and Criminal Code amendments, a commitment to supply RCMP officers and officials from the Department of Justice, three months is enough time for us to have a report and not simply a statement, if it is the case that the Government is still looking into it. I am pleased on behalf of my Party to offer these preliminary comments.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to respond on behalf of my Party and my caucus to the announcement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) today with respect to the Government's response to the recommendations of the Deschênes Commission. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in February of 1985, the former Minister of Justice of the Government of the day announced the establishment of the Deschênes Commission. I welcomed that announcement and commended the Government for taking the first real and concrete action to deal with the concerns of Canadians with respect to the possible presence in our community of Nazi war criminals. We welcomed the announcement of this commission to be chaired by such a distinguished judge as Judge Deschênes in February, 1985, and I believe it is appropriate now to say that Judge Deschênes has done an excellent job. He has approached his daunting task with care and diligence.

It is not insignificant that it was also in 1985, some 40 years after the conclusion of World War II, that there was a historic gathering here in Ottawa of Jewish holocaust survivors and their children. I had the privilege and honour to attend that gathering. Certainly, for those of us who were present, it was a profoundly moving event. I remember Elie Wiesel, who addressed so eloquently that gathering of the Jewish survivors of the holocaust. He spoke of the importance of not forgetting. He said:

> The fear of forgetting remains the main obsession of all those who have passed through the universe of the damned. The enemy counted on people's incredulity and forgetfulness. How could one foil this plot?
> And if memory grew hollow, empty of substance, what would happen to all we had accumulated along the way? Remember, said the farmer to his son, and the son to his friend. Gather the names, the faces, the tears. We had all taken an oath: "If, by some miracle, I emerge alive, I will devote my life to testifying on behalf of those whose shadow will fall on mine forever and ever."

Those words spoken by Elie Wiesel must surely guide us in our response to the presence in our communities of those who allegedly participated in these atrocities. I want to commend particularly those in our community in Canada who have particularly taken the time and energy to draw to the attention of the Government our historical responsibilities in this area, whether it be the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association, the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the B'nai Brith, and many others. As we know, and as has been clearly documented, Canada has a history of shameful inaction in this area. As Judge Deschênes pointed out, unfortunately, we were not alone in this inaction.

Before the war not only did the Government close the doors to Jews who were seeking to flee persecution from Nazi Germany, but afterward those doors were opened. Those doors were opened to far too many people who, in fact, were perpetrators of the atrocities that the Jews were attempting to flee. Canada had one of the worst records in admitting Jewish refugees fleeing the Holocaust from 1940 to 1945, and a tragic record of keeping survivors out in the three years after the Holocaust. Surely, this imposes upon us even greater obligations at this time to reach out and take whatever steps are necessary in our community to bring to justice those who were responsible for the obscenity of the Holocaust.

This is particularly important as well in view of some recent attempts to deny the reality of the Holocaust. We have seen the obscenity of people who would refuse this reality, the reality of the murder of millions at the hands of the Nazis, millions of Jews, homosexuals, gypsies and others. We must not be blinded to the horrors of the Holocaust. We must not continue what Irwin Cotler has described so eloquently as the bureaucratization of horror. He said:

> Rather, what one finds throughout is the reduction of the Holocaust to a footnote and the concomitant bureaucratization of horror into a technical rationalization of why nothing can be done—a bureaucratization of evil that emerges as a blueprint for government inaction.

We all remember the decision that was taken in 1962, for example, when the Government said that because nothing could be done with respect to alleged Nazi war criminals the RCMP should not pursue these questions. That was wrong. It is tragic that there has been but a single attempt to move in this area, and that was with respect to the extradition of Helmut Rauca in 1982.

The Minister has touched upon the question of the tensions which have been raised between ethnic communities in Canada following the establishment of this commission. My colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), has discussed the same issue. We share these concerns. Indeed, my colleague from Thunder Bay has spoken out eloquently as our official spokesperson in the area of multiculturalism on this question and the essential importance of focusing not on ethnic communities but on individuals. We must make it very clear that we are not singling out any ethnic community. There can be no collective indictments. There can be no collective guilt in this area.

At the same time we must reject one of the arguments made by these bureaucrats to whom Irwin Cotler referred, the argument of retroactivity. I am pleased that the Minister of Justice has dealt with that argument in his response and has rejected it. Murder is murder. The passage of time cannot in any way diminish the significance of these crimes. To suggest otherwise would surely betray not only those who perished in the Holocaust and those Canadians who fought the Nazis, but it would betray those who survived, as well as the families of those who died. Also, it would be a betrayal of our obligations, our international obligations, such as those undertaken in the General Assembly in 1973 where we agreed, and I would like to quote now from the Convention:

> War crimes and crimes against humanity, wherever they are committed, shall be subject to investigation and the persons against whom there is evidence that they have committed such crimes shall be subject to tracing, arrest, trial and, if found guilty, to punishment.

That is our obligation, solemnly undertaken at the United Nations. It is an obligation which we must respect. It is an obligation which has been recognized by the adoption of the provisions of the Charter of Rights allowing for the trial, in Canada, of crimes against humanity.

I might say that it is particularly offensive, in the context of the discussion of retroactivity, to hear individuals within the Department of Justice in submissions to the Government suggest, as they did in 1982, that retroactivity applied to persons whose demeanour while in Canada over a lengthy period may have been exemplary might be quite controversial. That was the suggestion made by the person who chaired the interdepartmental committee looking into this question. So it is no wonder that no action was taken with respect to this question.

We know, for example, that one woman, Hermine Ryan, was recently sentenced by a West German court to life in prison for murdering at least 1,100 prisoners in Poland's Maidenek concentration camp during the Second World War. For a while she lived in Canada. Had she not later moved to the United States, from where she was extradicted in 1983, she might never have been prosecuted for these murders and for the kicks that earned her the nickname "The Mare" among prisoners.

We must not allow that to continue in Canada. There must be a forum for those who suggest that the numbers differ from those which were established by Judge Deschênes. There must be a forum for these people who bring forward evidence, a forum within the Department of Justice and the RCMP. All must be brought to justice.

We welcome the announcement of the Government that all relevant evidence will be used because, indeed, survivors are living today not only in Canada but in Europe and in the U.S.S.R. Provided evidence is taken, subject to the safeguards which were established by the Deschênes Commission, obviously, that evidence must be taken wherever it may be.

Very importantly, we welcome the announcement of the Government to amend Canadian legislation, to amend the Criminal Code to allow the bringing to justice, in Canada, with trials in Canada subject to Canadian judicial standards, of individuals who are alleged to have participated in crimes against humanity, those who have participated in war crimes. I might note that this option is one which was explicitly rejected by the previous Government. I regret that very much. It was a former Minister of Justice, Jean Chrétien, who stated:

> I don't think we should start prosecution in Canada for crimes committed in European countries 35 years ago . . . I don't see how it would be possible to do so in Canada for crimes committed in other countries.

I am pleased that the Government has recognized that, indeed, we can move forward under the appropriately amended provisions of the Criminal Code to take action here in Canada to deal with these individuals. Indeed, it is important—in fact essential—that the Government move forward quickly in this area. Members of the New Democratic Party, and I speak on behalf of my caucus, will co-operate fully with the Government in speedy passage of legislation to allow for the trial in Canada of alleged Nazi war criminals.

It has been pointed out that the biological clock is ticking, the biological clock is running out on Nazi war criminals. As Rabbi Marvin Hier of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre pointed out:

> —the record of history should not read that those who committed unspeakable crimes against humanity had the final victory by depriving justice of its due course.

We will fully co-operate with legislation that will allow for the trial in Canada of these individuals. It is important that the necessary resources be made available to the RCMP and to the Department of Justice to carry out their task with dispatch. I was most concerned to learn that apparently as yet there have been no additional personnel attached to the Department of Justice and no new personnel hired by the Ministry to respond to the report of the Deschênes Commission. As yet, we know of no individuals who have been hired by the RCMP to augment the unit within the RCMP that is conducting investigations. If the good words and the noble intentions of the Government are to be a reality, it must move forward now to put in place the necessary resources, both in the hands of the Department of Justice and the RCMP to allow for the prosecution of these individuals.

I would note the comments in this regard in the report of the Deschênes Commission. The Deschênes Commission states that should this not be done, should the necessary resources not be made available on a priority basis, there would appear to be no other alternative but to close the whole matter of war criminals altogether.

We wish to see legislation very quickly as promised by the Government. But we also want to see action now to ensure that the legislation which is in place can in fact be used and that individuals can be brought to justice. There could be no greater betrayal than to bring forward legislation but at the same time for the Government not to put in place the resources to allow for the necessary prosecutions under that legislation.

The Government has rejected two of the three major recommendations of the Deschênes Commission. The Government has rejected the suggestion that there should be changes in Canada's extradition laws and proceedings to facilitate the extradition of individuals who may be guilty of crimes against humanity. The Government has also rejected any changes to laws governing denaturalization and deportation with respect to these individuals.

With respect, I would suggest that while we fully support the decision of the Government to move forward in the area of trials in Canada, indeed we have called for that action to be taken for some time, we would not close the door, as the Minister has done, on the other options which have been suggested by the Deschênes Commission. I would suggest that these other options be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General in order that that committee might conduct with dispatch a careful study to ensure that indeed these options should not be pursued.

For example, we know of the barriers in the present extradition laws that have prevented the extradition of Jacob Luitjens which has been requested by the Dutch Government. Luitjens was convicted of crimes involving the murder of two innocent people, and also of assisting the German occupiers. He was sentenced to 20 years imprisonment for that criminal offence. Today he is present in our community. The Dutch Government has asked for him to be returned to Holland. Our Government has said that that is not possible because the extradition treaty does not allow it. Surely we must ask ourselves whether there should be some changes to those extradition treaties.

We also must examine with care the question raised by the Deschênes Commission with respect to flaws in the Canada-Israel extradition treaty, and the fact that this treaty is prospective only. Indeed, the commission states that abrogating this amendment in that treaty should be the first task of those who are interested in bringing war criminals to justice.

We do not agree that the Minister should close the door, as he has done apparently irrevocably, to any possible changes in the law in the area of extradition, denaturalization, or deportation.

I wish to conclude by again assuring the Government of our support for speedy passage of legislation to allow for the trial of those individuals who are living within Canada who are accused of crimes against humanity. I call upon the Government to bring that legislation forward quickly, and particularly not to betray the hopes of the survivors by delaying action in terms of adequate resources for the Department of Justice and the RCMP.

As I previously stated, the biological clock is ticking. Those who are accused are getting older; the witnesses are getting older, and many have died. We must move quickly in this area, particularly given Canada's shameful history of inaction in this area.

I wish to close by referring to a story that is told by Simon Wiesenthal of an incident that took place shortly after World War II. He was told that thousands of Jewish prayer books had been found in a cellar of a 16th century castle in Austria. He went to investigate. In the cellar there were thousands upon thousands of books brought from Jewish homes and houses of worship all over Europe. The Nazis planned to distribute these books among libraries as historical curiosities. A young man who was with Wiesenthal picked up one book after another. Finally, in one of the books, on the first page he found, in the handwriting of his own sister, these words:

> They've just come into our town. In a few minutes, they will be in our house. If someone finds this prayer book, please notify my dear brother. Do not forget us. Do not forget our murderers.

We must heed that cry.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Presenting reports from committees.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to request that the presentation of reports from committees be allowed to stand for a minute or two. There is a committee report which has to be presented. If we could go through the other items in Routine Proceedings, we will be in a position to do that at the end of Routine Proceedings.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Do I have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition from a number of constituents who are concerned about the Government's present proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. The petitioners feel that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers. They believe it will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy the necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, the petitioners are asking the Government to reject these proposals before it imposes what they believe could be an additional drug cost as high as $650 million a year.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege and honour to present a petition signed by residents of Richmond, Surrey, Delta, Port Hardy, Vancouver, Nanaimo, and Langley in British Columbia. In July, 1985, 1,093 fishermen were collecting unemployment insurance. By February, 1986, that number had jumped to 29,847. The petitioners point out that fishermen fear that the Government is contemplating their right to collect unemployment insurance. Furthermore, they point out that unemployment insurance must be improved to better serve the needs of fishermen. In fact, the petition calls upon the House to give the assurance that fishermen's benefits under the Unemployment Insurance, 1971 Act will not be removed or tampered with.

• (1220)

Madam Speaker, I have petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg, Manitoba, Kingston, Napanee, Sydenham, Nepean, Ontario; Calgary, Alberta and Gatineau, Quebec. The petitioners point out that if the Forget Commission of Inquiry recommendations were put into effect it would take $1 billion in income transfers out of Quebec, $660 million out of the Atlantic, and $670 million out of the West. It also points out that it would reduce the provision for annualization and would reduce UI benefits to the unemployed by an over-all percentage of 31 per cent.

The petitioners call upon Parliament and this Government to ensure that the provisions of the Forget Commission, namely, annualization, removal of regional extended benefits and the removal of fishermen's special benefits from the UI be cancelled or removed from the Forget Commission.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions under the provisions of Standing Order 106 in which the petitioners, mostly parents of children attending day-care centres, say in connection with the changes to the Patent Act provided for in Bill C-22 that whereas the proposed measure will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis; and whereas the proposals of the federal Government will result in higher costs to provincial Government drug plans; and whereas the proposed changes are another example of the Canadian Government's concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in free trade negotiations, therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

PRESENTATION OF FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your allowing me to present the report at this time. I have the honour to present the fifteenth report of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later this day.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CONCURRENCE IN FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I should like at this time to move concurrence in the fifteenth report of the Striking Committee presented earlier this day.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 71 minutes beginning at 1 o'clock p.m. today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

The House resumed from Tuesday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am quite pleased to have this chance to say a few words in today's debate on the borrowing authority. I want to remind the House that we are being requested to approve borrowing authority for $24.3 billion as set out, as you know, in Part II of the Bill, and for an additional $3.6 billion set out in the other part of the Bill. We are discussing $27 billion plus worth of borrowing authority. For that reason, we felt it was certainly appropriate to spend some time to point out some of the concerns that we have.

I refer now to an interesting speech which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) gave just last week to the Macdonald-Cartier Club in Calgary. Let me quote three or four phrases because I know you will be interested in them, Madam Speaker. At the conclusion of his speech he said:

> In my remarks today, I have stressed the fact that the Government you elected—has carried out your program, your desires for fiscal rejuvenation, your principles of a market- driven economy and your commitment to stimulating the private sector.

In other words, the Minister went on to say that the government program as promised presumably had been delivered. Yet I seem to recall that part of the major thrust of the Government's program when it was seeking a mandate from the Government of Canada was about jobs, jobs, jobs. It was said that the Government would intend to create jobs and put Canadians back to work, but there seems to have been some transgression against that commitment. When you look at the facts and the unemployment figures as they exist in Canada today, you will find that in provinces such as Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, the unemployment levels today are actually higher than they were in September, 1984 when the present Government took over.

I think if you look at the unemployment levels during the very serious recession in which Canada found itself in 1981-82, I say quite frankly that they exist today in seven out of the ten provinces, Madam Speaker. The Government, through this borrowing authority, is asking us to give permission to continue on as it has over the last two and a half years, to stay the course, as the Minister of Finance calls it. I say it would be quite inappropriate. Last year, Statistics Canada labour statistics indicated clearly that 137,000 new jobs were created in Canada. The interesting thing about that is that out of those 137,000 new jobs, 132,000 were created in one province, the Province of Ontario, and even there the jobs were not widely dispersed but were, by and large, confined to the greater Toronto area or, as it is commonly referred to, the Golden Horseshoe. In other words, 96 per cent of the new jobs created in Canada last year were created within sight of the CN Tower in downtown Toronto and only 4 per cent of the new jobs were dispersed across the rest of Canada. That is unacceptable. That is not something with which we ought to feel pleased, yet the Government is saying that it will simply continue on taking this particular tack and will stay the course. The Government will hold the line because this is the strategy with which it feels comfortable and it is asking us to accept. We do not accept that and we cannot accept it.

The Minister of Finance tells us that he has carried out our program and our commitment to stimulating the private sector. That brings little comfort to single parents looking for work, to hard-pressed farmers and ranchers, to fishermen on the two coasts and the interior lake systems or to the small businesses that are struggling. It does not bring any comfort when the Minister of Finance says that he has in fact carried out our program. That was not our program.

I believe that if we were to carry out a survey of small businesses across Canada, we would find that life for them is not particularly encouraging. I recently toured my constituency of Kamloops—Shuswap and asked business people there how they are doing and what their projections for the forthcoming year are. While they maintain a stiff upper lip and a hopeful, positive attitude, the facts are quite to the contrary. In fact, by and large, the businesses are not healthy. There are always a few exceptions to that for a variety of reasons, but over-all, business prospects in most of the country are not particularly encouraging.

An Hon. Member: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend across the aisle says: "Gloom and doom". I am not suggesting that we need to practise gloom and doom but we do have to admit the truth. Before a person with a drinking problem can solve the problem, he has to admit that he has a problem. Once he has admitted he has a problem, he can set out a particular course to resolve the problem.

Government Members are saying that everything is fine. The Minister of Finance is saying that we will simply hold the course. It is time they stopped saying that because things are not fine in most of Canada. They are not fine in Atlantic Canada, in western Canada and in northern Canada. The forest, mining, agricultural and fishing sectors are not fine. I am not suggesting that we get depressed about all this, but we must admit that there are serious problems in the economy and then start putting into place programs to resolve these difficulties. That is all we are asking. Yet in the Budget Speech of a few days ago, I did not hear about any new programs or initiatives the Government planned to take. When I pored through the Estimates item by item, I did not find any new initiatives. I suggest this is the reason Canadians are disillusioned and disappointed with the Government.

When Canadians gave the Conservatives such an overwhelming mandate, they wanted them to do something different from that which was done under successive Liberal administrations. Canadians wanted a new direction and to feel some change in the economy after a few months. Canadians are now saying that after two and a half years, something should have begun to happen in western Canada. The small business sector should be becoming more active than it was two and a half years ago, but that is not the case.

The economic projections for western Canada are relatively bleak. We are hoping for some growth and improvement but, based on our best indicators, we are not particularly hopeful and optimistic. All this means that the future does not look particularly bright under present government policy. If the Government were to behave in different ways, we would see a tremendous change. We would see unemployment rates go down.

Again, before we can begin to create the perception that the Government is really serious about unemployment, it would be realistic to expect the Government to say: "Our goal is full employment, a job for every able-bodied man and woman in Canada. That is our goal and this is how we plan to achieve that goal". Then people would think that the Government is serious.

A great many people are asking seriously what can be done and what are some of the options. I would like to take a moment or two to deal specifically with what the Government could be doing if it really intended to reduce levels of unemployment, particularly in the regions of Canada, and if it were really serious about revving up the economy so that it will be like the economy we knew a few years ago. I will begin with agriculture.

At the top of the list for agriculture, the Government should introduce agri-bonds. The Standing Committees on Finance and Agriculture and special subcommittees have looked into that concept and have unanimously recommended to the Government that action be taken on agri-bonds. The experts, public servants, farmers and parliamentarians interested in agriculture have examined it and have recommended the introduction of agri-bonds in one form or another. Agri-bonds would provide the farmers and ranchers of Canada relatively low-interest money over a long period of time and they could then begin to plan years ahead knowing what interest costs on their loans would be. Other jurisdictions have forms of agri-bonds. They have been developed in the United States, and European countries have various forms of agri-bonds. That is a specific suggestion for what the Government could do this week if it really were concerned about the agricultural sector.

These days, the mayors of Canadian cities are meeting to discuss mutual concerns. A few years ago when the mayors met in Toronto, the then Mayor of Vancouver, Mike Harcourt, proposed that we return to the system that existed a few years ago whereby the federal Government, in co-operation with the provincial and local Governments, shared one-third, one-third, one-third in the development of municipal infrastructures, including new water systems, upgraded sewage treatment facilities, improved roads and highways, and improved recreational and cultural facilities.

The infrastructure required by a city benefits not only the city but also benefits the province and the country. Therefore, the suggestion was made that the funding of those projects should be shared. It is not a new concept. Other countries around the world do it and Canada used to do it a few years ago. If we were prepared to launch such a program, literally tens of thousands of Canadians would be put to work directly on those projects or indirectly by serving those projects through the manufacturing sector and the various professional sectors. That is another proposal that has been before the Government for some time now.

Let us look at some of the hard-pressed resource areas, and first at the forestry sector. As a result of the softwood lumber tax, the Government imposed some $600 million in new taxes. The Government should reinvest that money and develop silviculture and reforestation programs for our forests. I do not have to remind you or any Member of this House how woefully inadequate our silviculture programs have been and still are. There is much to be done. If we were to introduce more programs covering tree planting, thinning, spacing, fertilizing, disease, pest and fire control, as well as research into new product uses and new techniques for forest growth, we could put hundreds of thousands of Canadians to work in that one sector alone. I am not exaggerating. The provincial foresters who work in my constituency have said to me that in my riding alone 10,000 people could be put to work for many years in husbanding the forest as we should be doing. Yet, no, we say we cannot afford it.

We know it costs the Canadian taxpayers, one way or another, directly and indirectly, $1 billion a month for unemployment insurance. It costs them another $1 billion a month for welfare, not to mention all the other costs that unemployment creates. I do not understand why we would rather pay out literally billions of dollars in unemployment insurance and welfare rather than invest that money in the forest and fishery sectors, or in upgrading small business and manufacturing. We could put people to work for that money instead of paying them welfare or unemployment insurance or other forms of support.

We can talk about the fishery on both the East Coast and the West Coast, not to mention our lakes. Work can be done to improve and enhance the fishery sector through bank stabilization, hatchery assistance, fish farming and even fish ranching programs. All sorts of investments could be made to make Canada more productive and competitive in international markets. Yet, again, we say we do not have the money to invest. However, it is an old business adage that to make money you have to invest money. To expand your business you have to invest. Perhaps you have to borrow or find equity. The same thing applies to Canada. The Government has not an exclusive role to play but it has some role to play if we want Canada to grow and develop. If we want to increase our world trade then we have to invest in our country.

The saddest figures I have heard were those we got the other day about the amount of money invested in factories and mines and shops in Canada. Canadians are investing more money outside of Canada than inside. As well, very little money was being invested in Canada from outside. There was a net loss of investment of more than $10 billion in 1985-86, money that was invested in hard economies elsewhere. I understand that the purpose of many of the Government's initiatives was to attract money. We were told that if we privatized Crown corporations and laid off all these public servants, cut back on various programs, for some reason people would come into the country and invest vast sums of money. That was a hoax. I do not know if the Government knew it was going to be a hoax or if it actually hoped it would happen. I suspect that this is the case. However, the fact is that it has not happened. Not only has money not come into Canada for investment in those hard aspects of the economy, but the lion's share has been leaving the country more than ever before. Investment outside Canada is reaching historic highs, and it is a very serious issue.

If we are going to expand our economy we have to start investing. For that reason I think it is time the Government, in co-operation with the private sector, started to take some major initiatives to show the people of Canada that it is serious about expanding and developing the economy, not only in Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe but in the rest of Canada.

It is for that reason that I hope the Government has recognized that its program to date has not been successful in attracting investment or in creating jobs. Further initiatives must be taken far beyond anything we have seen to date, particularly in the regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, after hearing the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), I wonder how and where other than in the areas he mentioned, the Government should invest to provide for increased economic development in Canada. He mentioned quite a few, but I am wondering whether it would not be a good idea for the Government to invest more money in youth and research, to help young people become better educated, which eventually will have a positive impact on this country's economy.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for a good question. Obviously in a short speech one is unable to list all of the initiatives possible. However, he has touched on one which is perhaps the most crucial of all. If we were to identify a Canadian resource which needs to be developed, it would be the people of Canada, particularly the young people of Canada. We are falling behind many countries in the support we give to our people to develop their skills, whether it be vocational, technical or professional training. Anyone looking at the future will realize that our future will be knowledge-based. We saw from briefings this morning that Japan is moving its economy in the direction of a knowledge-based economy. That requires a well-trained and educated workforce. When you look at our educational system and the opportunities young people have relative to many other countries, it is not that encouraging. I noticed the other day that Mr. Ken Dryden issued his report on the participation levels of young people in post-secondary education. I believe all of us were astounded to find that such a small number of people graduate from post-secondary institutions in Canada. In my own province it is less than 5 per cent. This should be creating a great deal of concern. While the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) is really a nice fellow, he does not seem to have done very much in providing equal access to post-secondary education for Canadians regardless of where they live.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, I always look forward to listening to the Hon. Member because he is usually the voice of reason. However, with respect, I was not as impressed today because there were moments when I thought the NDP House Leader was sounding like a disciple of Reaganomics. He was urging the Government to spend more, whether or not it had the money. According to him the answer to the problems he outlined is to stimulate and inflate the economy. I know he did not intend it the way it sounds. We have seen what happens to an economy when it follows that route. It results in a more and more top-heavy deficit from which we are trying to gain liberation.

If we wanted only to be partisan, it would be very simple to respond to the Hon. Member's critique of the Government's alleged lack of concern about regional disparities by pointing to the extraordinarily impressive number of projects that the Government has undertaken in recent months. It has issued a contract for an ice-breaker in Vancouver. It has given $1 billion in funding for grain growers across the country. It has provided for the continuation of the steel industry in Nova Scotia. It expedited the frigate contract in the Maritimes and Quebec. The list is long.

However, I would like the Hon. Member and me to avoid the usually futile partisan exchange and face this: The problem he has rightly identified is not to be solved by the solution he put before this House. It may not be solved by the one the Government is following, but let us put that to one side for the moment. The Member and the House should recognize that the kind of problem which he has identified, namely, the concentration of population and economic strength in one part of the country in contrast to others, is not peculiar to Canada. It is to be found around the world.

We should not be criticizing one another and being defensive, but asking ourselves what are the basic reasons which explain that. What can we do to change that in this great country? The Member does not want to see that, living in British Columbia as he does, and I do not want to see it living in Metro Toronto. However, I do not think the answer is to throw more and more money here and there. We have tried that and it has not worked yet. I hope that at some point the result of the intervention which he has made in this debate will be to force this House to debate one of the critical and economic social problems of our age.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to my hon. colleague who outlined the problem. There is a myth that the United States is a great free enterprise country. I suspect that when one looks at the stimulation of that economy through the defence budget, one will see that there is not a single major community in the United States which does not receive direct financial stimulation every year. I just want to clear the record with regard to federal initiative to expand that economy.

I want to be very specific. The fact that much of the concentration of economic power happens to be in southern Ontario is largely result of the market-place, in other words, the national gravitation of economic forces to where the action is. Let us look at Norway as an example of a country which has tried a different approach. I happen to be familiar with Norway which is headed by the equivalent of a New Democratic government. The unemployment rate there today is 1.9 per cent, the lowest in the world. I checked that figure before I came in today.

In Norway they realize that if it is left to the market-place all the economic activity will take place in and around the City of Oslo. They believe that it is important that people in the various regions of Norway have economic opportunities. Therefore, if one wants to build a factory to make shirts in Sandefjord, a small community, the Government will assist with the cost of transporting raw materials and transporting the finished product to the port to equalize the cost of manufacturing the shirts there rather than in Oslo which has a port facility.

In other words, if you want to locate your factory in a small rural area, the Government will assist you to ensure that you are able to compete without being penalized because of your geographic distance from the port. One could say that that involves government intervention. Yes, it does. However, the unemployment rate in Norway today is 1.9 per cent, virtually full employment. There will always be some people between jobs.

Therefore, if we do not want all of the economic activity in the future to be concentrated in the Golden Horseshoe of Canada, the Government must take steps to ensure that reasonable enterprises elsewhere have support to enable them to compete. I offer my colleague that as a possible way to encourage economic development in the provinces other than southern Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to a Bill whose purpose is to authorize the Government to borrow billions of dollars. If the money was supposed to help low- and middle-income Canadians, I think I would congratulate the Government, sit down, and we could vote on the Budget, so that these measures could be implemented immediately. Unfortunately, the borrowing authority the Government is seeking is certainly not for money that will help people on middle- or low-incomes or people who live in poverty in Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, Edmonton and other urban centres.

I think we should remember that this is the international year of the homeless. I can assure you, Madam Speaker, that the money the Government wants to borrow will certainly not be used to help this group of citizens but to help the Government's friends, the people who contributed $60,000 and more in the case of the bank failures. Although the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and most Government Members would have us believe that all's well with the world, I would like to recall a study whose findings were published in the newspaper La Presse about a month ago, which showed that poverty still exists in Quebec and the Montreal area and Canada, despite the self-congratulatory stance of this Conservative Government.

First the headlines: More and more people are queuing up for our soup kitchens, an institution that had disappeared altogether and that we had to bring back. Soup kitchens were a creation of the Depression, in the '30s, and in Montreal the only vestige of that time was the Bonneau shelter that was able to help the needy of the entire Montreal area. Unfortunately, non-profit organizations all over Montreal and all over this country are having to set up these soup kitchens.

According to the same study, there are over 500,000 poor people in the greater Montreal area alone, at a time when much is made of the fact that the volume of shares traded on the Montreal Stock Exchange has increased in six years from 3.8 billion to 15.9 billion. I think we should remember that the number of people on welfare has also considerably increased over the last five years. The words inequality and injustice come to mind. When we look at our national unemployment statistics, it does not seem so bad, but when we take a closer look, without getting into greatly detailed analysis, we find that any gains that were made in the economy and job creation were made in Ontario, in the Toronto area, while in regions like the Atlantic Provinces, the West and even in some parts of Ontario and Quebec, in Montreal East and in remote areas, the results have been negative and instead of job creation we have had a reduction in the number of jobs.

Madam Speaker, I have no idea whether the Government Members are fully aware of the three budgets presented by their Government, its attitude and behaviour with respect to senior citizens, its decisions concerning both youth and consumer programs. My colleague behind me happens to be the official critic when it comes to youth programs, and I must say we have witnessed a truly sad performance in this field, nothing but cut-backs and more cut-backs. Yet there is a group of people in Canada who are growing richer, but unfortunately they are always the same people. A moment ago the Conservative Member referred to deficit reduction.

We all agree on that, but why is the Government telling us in the same breath that we have to vote for this measure to borrow more money? Yet at the same time, when dealing with family allowances, the Government saw fit to de-index the first slice of the 3 per cent due to inflation, supposedly to give mothers an opportunity to do their share towards deficit reduction, but this did not stop it from giving wealthier people a $500,000 capital gains tax exemption, a move which will drain $800 million from the public treasury in 1987, from the pockets of all Canadian taxpayers, men and women alike.

I referred earlier to the bankruptcy of financial institutions which cost $1.6 billion to Canadian consumers. Then there was the Prime Minister's stupid decision to transfer a penitentiary from Drummondville to Port-Cartier, a project of $41 million which would have been better spent to help Canadian families or young people who cannot find jobs and could have benefitted from programs specially designed for them. Talk about doubling to $15.1 million the expenditures of the Prime Minister's staff. Think about the $2.6 million wasted on organizing the March 1985 Reagan-Mulroney superparty. Remember the trips of the Prime Minister, over $1 million to travel first class all the way at the expense of Canadian taxpayers. Had he acted as a responsible man he would have been the first to set the example instead of urging people to tighten their belts and do without the good things in life. Not this man: he asked others to do what he was not prepared to do himself and, worse still, the Prime Minister and his Government went on a spending spree with the savings of Canadians.

That is something the people simply cannot forgive, and the polls tell the story: 76 per cent have lost faith in this Government. Voters' preferences expressed in polls are particularly significant in Quebec, and the Conservatives can thank their lucky star that the polling firm chose not to put the Rhinoceros Party on the list because they would have gone down ten more points, behind the Rhinos. It is true that the Rhinoceros Party . . . Concerning the Prime Minister, the scandals and everything else that has happened under this Government, I think the Rhinos would have been hard put to come up with funnier jokes, because you got to have an imaginative mind to be able to come up with so many scandals and whatever else the Government has experienced lately. The problem is that Canadians end up paying for the mistakes and blunders of this Government.

I might recall that on Monday this week I attended the seminar of the Fédération de l'âge d'or du Québec which includes all senior citizens' groups from each and every provincial riding. The elderly people who were there, men and women president of associations of senior citizens, reminded me about the famous July 26 promises made by the Conservative Government in the riding of Sherbrooke. All the Conservative Members were there. We all remember that at the time, during the electoral campaign, the Prime Minister and all his colleagues made all sorts of promises. Everyone remembers that, at the time—and I have here the press release of the Conservative Party, which shows that I am not making this up—the first priority was to re-establish full cost of living indexation of old age security pensions as of January 1, 1985. This was just a lie because, immediately afterwards, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and all their Conservative colleagues tried to de-index the first 3 percent of old age security pensions.

Hon. Members will recall what would have happened without the determination, tenacity and energy of senior citizens who said: "Just a minute, Charlie Brown, we have something to tell you; you had better keep your promises." The Prime Minister was forced to admit that he had made a serious mistake and the Conservative Members who had told everyone in their constituencies that the cutbacks were justified realized how wrong they had been, because acting like sheep is never a good idea.

Let us go back to the commitment made on July 26, 1984, in Sherbrooke during the electoral campaign, under Item 4. I can still see the tape showing the Prime Minister with his hand over his heart to show his sincerity and the truth of what he was saying. Item 4 says that the Conservative Government is committed to maintaining the New Horizons Program and to allocating sufficient funds to this program.

That is the promise which the people who were present at the seminar of the Fédération de l'âge d'or recalled for me. Then, Mrs. Denis, who took the Prime Minister to task on Parliament Hill about the de-indexation of old age security pensions, showed me, with the facts to prove it, that once more, for the umpteenth time, this Prime Minister and this Government had misled senior citizens. After saying that they would allocate sufficient funds, they cut back $4.5 million from the budget of the New Horizons Program.

I trust that the Conservative Members who are here now and all senior citizens clubs in every constituency in Canada, and there is one in each, will remember this deception and the fact that the budget of this program was reduced to $12,127,000 in 1985-86, to $10 million in 1986-87 and to $8.8 million in 1987-88. This adds up to a cutback of $4.5 million after a solemn promise made by all Conservative Members and this Prime Minister to our senior citizens.

I can assure you that people will remember these cutbacks and this behaviour. People will remember. During the next electoral campaign, you will knock on their doors and say: "How are you, I am Mr. so and so, I was your Conservative Member of Parliament". They will reply: "Thank you, but no. You did nothing about the de-indexation of old age security pensions. You were not there to defend our rights when we needed money to organize our cultural, social, recreational or educational activities. You refused to do it and you misled us."

They will say: "As for us, we shall not follow the example of the Prime Minister; we shall not mislead you; we can tell you to your face that we shall vote against you." This is the attitude of the public. This is how people are reacting. I have the opportunity to travel to many constituencies in Quebec and the rest of Canada and this has been the reaction of the Canadian population, whether we are speaking about senior citizens, young people, workers or even employers' associations. They are totally dissatisfied with this Government, especially because of its lack of honesty and its failure to achieve anything or to put together a coherent policy to meet the needs of Canadians.

I would also like to touch upon another matter that directly affects Quebecers, and again we know what commitment the Prime Minister and this Government made during the last elections and in the Speeches from the Throne that were delivered here. In all cases it was the same scenario—with one hand on his heart and the other on the Bible, the Prime Minister said he was going to do all that was needed for Quebec to agree to the Canadian Constitution in an honourable and dignified way. So much for the rhetoric. But what are the facts? The proposals put on the table by this Government, Madam Speaker, intended to take away existing rights, important powers that confirm Quebec's distinctive nature and specificity— that of selecting immigrants and managing human resources, immigration-wise.

That was the first time the proposal was put on the table, this Government's proposal not to enshrine in the Constitution, as proposed by the Liberal Party, the Cullen-Couture Agreement which granted powers to Quebec and the right of veto in respect of immigrant selection. But the same may be said about spending powers—the relevant legislation is of great concern to us—borrowing, spending powers. Again this Government, contrary to its commitments, has laid on the table a proposal such that the Quebec Government has not only to turn it down but also to refuse to take part in further constitutional negotiations, including those on native people that will be held over the coming weeks, because the Government will not recognize financial compensation for new social programs.

Here again we have another example of this Prime Minister's and this Government's attitude towards our senior citizens, the sick with respect to whom all Hon. Members will remember the 10 per cent tax on drugs, the young who had some of their programs slashed without added monies to help youth, workers, Quebecers—this Government acted contrary to its commitments, let alone honouring them.

With respect to Quebec matters, I have before me two letters sent to all Members here by the Hon. Marc-Yvan Côté, the Quebec Minister of Transport, concerning those bills. Concerning those two bills, my colleague the transportation critic, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), has tried to convince this Tory Government and make it aware, to wake up the caucus of Quebec Tory Member and tell them that those bills will have a negative impact on Quebec as a whole, whether in the area of rail transportation, air transportation or trucking, those proposals . . . And I am convinced the Tory Members again will not respond to that invitation from the Quebec Minister of Transport.

In Quebec, and I will conclude on that, Madam Speaker, there are 17 unsettled issues either because there has been no response or the response has not been satisfactory.

Now let me list them to conclude: the Montreal East end issues, the shipyards, the Matane pulp and paper mill, the Desbiens plant, the GM plant in Boisbriand, the Melchers' employees, the banking centre, the aerospace agency, equalization payments, grants, immigration assistance, the refugees, the rail system in Quebec, the footwear, textile and clothing industries, also the question of discrimination against potato producers and the denial of grants to help Quebec clean up the St. Lawrence River. And I could go on, Madam Speaker. My time has expired, but it is my hope, because I do not despair, that some day we will find at least one—I am not asking for 10 or 40, but at least one—Tory Member from Quebec who will wake up and roll up his sleeves, before he looses his seat, and save Quebec's interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) has the floor.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Thank you. I should like to comment briefly on the remarks made by my colleague the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart). I wonder if he is afraid, Madam Speaker, for he is leaving . . . May I begin by saying that good management is good government. And to govern means—

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie rises on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, it is to tell the stupid Member who has just risen that he cannot mention whether someone is absent or present. But just to prove to him that I am not afraid of a nincompoop, I will stay and listen to his nonsense.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) did not really mean to use these epithets in the case of the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent). I am sure he is sorry and apologizes to the House. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) has the floor.

Mr. Vincent: Is he apologizing, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Della Noce: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) has the floor.

Mr. Della Noce: I am afraid my hon. friend misunderstood the question. He is very busy with his notes and I suggest that he probably does not remember using as usual such highly colourful terms. However, I too should like to ask the House whether the Hon. Member should not be called to order because I do not think he should use such language when addressing one of his colleague, whether a Conservative, a Liberal or an NDP—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair suggests that there have been procedural infringements on both sides. I do not think it was in order for the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) to mention the presence or absence of one of his colleagues in the House, nor was it in order for the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to use unparliamentary language when addressing one of his colleagues. I think that now we should simply continue with the debate. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, you are an outstanding politician and a great Speaker. We will gladly abide by your decision.

I should like to begin by quoting a phrase: Good management makes for good government which means that the Government, instead of being part of the economic problem, is now part of its solution. In this context, Madam Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie who stated that the funds sought today through this borrowing authority legislation will be spent to help the affluent, that I am quite disappointed with him. I thought he knew how the Parliament of this country worked, Madam Speaker. I was under the impression that, having sat here from 1979-80 to 1987, he would know about the workings of the Canadian Parliament. Unfortunately, I find out that he does not. The reason may be that before 1984, he did not rise in the House too often—

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Two years from now, we will not see you here any longer either.

Mr. Vincent: —and did not participate in debates quite as often as he does now.

• (1320)

You know, Madam Speaker, that the authority granted under the legislation enables the Government to borrow, but you also know that the authority to spend those funds requires that another legislation be passed by this Parliament. Now, when I am told that this borrowing authority enables the Government to spend for the rich, it fails to make any sense, Madam Speaker, and I know that you understand that as well as my colleagues on this side of the House. This information will help the Hon. Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) understand the Canadian parliamentary system.

Then, unfortunately, he was dishonest to some extent when he dealt with the problem of Western banks and said again that the money was paid out to the rich. You know quite well, Madam Speaker, that the serious problem experienced by some Western banks had an impact at the national and international levels and we had to show that our Canadian banking system was sound as is widely recognized. You know that the depositors were credit unions, municipalities, hospitals and charitable organizations. Those were the kinds of institutions which could not afford to incur such losses and which afterwards would have applied for assistance to the provincial governments. The latter would then have turned to the federal Government which would have been forced to help those organizations. I think that on the one hand, we have shown that the Canadian banking system was sound and on the other hand, that the Government of Canada has taken up its responsibilities.

If there are people talking about immoderate spending, about mismanagement of the affairs of the state, as the Hon. Member from Montreal—Sainte-Marie has suggested, I would have liked him to recall the scientific research tax credit that was established in 1984, and because of which billions of dollars—not a few bucks, not thousands of bucks, not millions, and I see the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (M. Tardif) is laughing. He laughs at their spending billions of dollars to help rich companies on the backs—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): On the backs of the poor!

Mr. Vincent: —not only the poor, as the Hon. Member for Champlain (Mr. Champagne) is suggesting, but on the backs of our Canadian researchers, who did not get that money. They have nothing, and we have to stand by with empty coffers in 1984, in 1985, in 1986, in 1987. And why empty coffers? Because this Hon. Member, who was there before 1984 and who today is laughing about those billions of dollars, that Hon. Member voted so that companies could make passes, pick up research tax credits and put the money in their pockets. And this Hon. Member who laughs at it today—on top of that, Madam Speaker, he finds courage to laugh at it. I would be ashamed, I would rather be eating sandwiches rather than laugh in this House where you voted and supported that.

Madam Speaker, you are right, that same Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie talks about the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister came here in 1984 and immediately cut his own salary, the salaries of his Ministers . . .

An Hon. Member: Because they have envelopes!

Mr. Vincent: There are no envelopes, and that you know, Madam Speaker. He cut his own salary three years in a row. It is interesting to know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has refused to have his salary cut.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): There are no envelopes on this side of the House.

Mr. Vincent: He refused that, and the Hon. Leader of the Opposition enjoys benefits that are just as large and interesting financially as those of the Ministers. If the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe wants to be honest he will recognize that the leader of the Opposition refused to have his salary cut. That is interesting, Madam Speaker. There has been no mention of this.

He referred to surveys. I would have liked him to have been here, too bad he has gone. But anyway we will see him comes the next election, and I am inviting him to come to the constituency of Trois-Rivières and have a look around, either now or later. We will see him when he does his door-to-door calls.

Allow me, Madam Speaker, to quote a few newspaper headlines: "Business and labour are disappointed". "The non-budget". "The budget . . . opens the door to another recession". And the last one, Madam Speaker: "Lalonde forgets the unemployed". These headlines appeared in La Presse and Le Droit on February 16, 1984, the day after Mr. Lalonde's budget speech.

Today, they are trying to take us to task, arguing that our management of the country is not sound. If I may, Madam Speaker, I should like to quote another headline: "Inversely proportional to the Government's popularity" "Canadian economy doing quite well, thank you!" These, Madam Speaker, appeared on the front page of the February 17, 1987, issue of Le Devoir. And this article appears under the byline of the noted Michel Vastel, a newpaperman friend of ours whom you know quite well.

Mr. Riis: You should go out West.

Mr. Vincent: If I may, I should like to quote a few excerpts . . . I should like to indicate to my hon. friend that I had the opportunity to visit Nanaimo and Victoria last week-end, Sunday and Monday, and that I was very warmly received in that region where the standing of the Conservative Party is excellent.

Let me read an excerpt from this article:

> But businessmen have been living a true honeymoon with the Government for the past two years. Three weeks ago, in Paris, Tomas d'Aquino, the President of the Business Council on National Issues stated: "The Mulroney Government is progressing slowly but surely in its reduction of the Government's deficit. As a whole . . .

Here, Madam Speaker, is the important part.

> —and compared with other members of the OECD, Canada's economic situation can be said to be relatively good."

And he added:

> "One week later, Mr. Antony Pell, the Chairman and Managing Director of Dominion Securities told his shareholders: "We are more optimistic about the general climate for investment and business then we had been over the past ten years. This is due to a large extent to the major political initiatives taken by the Federal Government over the past two years." And the very serious Financial Times noted that the Canadian dollar, which exchange dealers considered a year ago as the "peso of the North", is becoming a refuge currency for speculators." The Canadian dollar closed at 74.83 cents U.S. yesterday in Toronto.

Madam Speaker, that is exactly what the Conservative Government promised in 1984. We had promised to create jobs and I have some figures here. The Opposition quoted some figures to us and it is now my turn to do so. In Quebec, in December, 1982, there was 14.7 per cent unemployment. In August, 1982, the rate was 15.5 per cent. You know, Madam Speaker, we are now in Ottawa and we are bilingual. In September, 1984, unemployment in Quebec was 12.9 per cent. In January, 1987, it was 10.8 per cent. I could give you the figures for every province in Canada. Unemployment is going down. Since September, 1984, 675,000 jobs have been created. Why is this? Because business people in your constituency, in Trois-Rivières, have confidence in the economic policies of the Conservative Government. They voted for us and they understand that Canada is not a welfare state, that it is the private sector which creates jobs and that the Canadian Government is only the rudder which helps businesses to invest and to create jobs. This is what Canadians voted for in 1984. Since then, we have delivered the goods.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the deficit is being reduced. Inflation is now at 4 per cent, which is very reasonable and acceptable. Canada now has the second best real economic growth in the world. Only Japan has done better. These are facts, Madam Speaker. This is how we are keeping the electoral promises made in 1984. Interest rates have reached their lowest level in ten years. In 1982, Madam Speaker, and I remember this because I had just opened my law office in Trois-Rivières—

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): You will be going back to it.

Mr. Vincent: —interest rates were going up. Who says that I shall go back? I can tell the Hon. Member that he can certainly purchase his own one-way ticket to Richmond—Wolfe.

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, we now have the lowest interest rates in ten years. People in Trois-Rivières and Richmond—Wolfe are now paying $1,500 less each year on a $50,000 mortgage. Maybe you can understand that. The people understand because they have more money in their pockets. Small businessmen understand that they are paying $1,000 less each year in interests. People understand this in Trois-Rivières and they are proud of what this Conservative Government is doing, as are the people of Richmond—Wolfe. This is the problem.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): The polls make it clear.

Mr. Vincent: You should take polls in Trois-Rivières. Come whenever you want. Come to Trois-Rivières and look at the polls. I am not embarrassed or nervous. I can give you the results of my own polls.

Housing starts have increased by 25 per cent. This is the highest rate in ten years. Someone was speaking about the poor a while ago. It is true that there are poor people and we recognize it. However, we are working on that problem. I hope that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) knows at least that the number of families under the poverty line has gone down in 1986 for the first time in five years.

Mr. Della Noce: He did not say so.

Mr. Vincent: Perhaps he did not say so because he did not know, but one thing for sure is that he did not say anything about it. So this can only mean one thing, Madam Speaker, that indeed we have dealt with this issue. Family income in Canada is going up for the first time in six years. Madam Speaker, this is 1987, we were elected in 1984, three years ago. In three years we have managed to turn around the slumping economy which the media commented about in these terms back in 1984: "Lalonde's Budget is paving the way for a new recessison in 1985". These are not my words, Madam Speaker.

Let them tell me about Quebec specifically, the F-18 contract. We have not heard anything about that. I can tell you that in Trois-Rivières . . . I went to Val-d'Or, I went to the riding of Bellechasse, I went to the riding of Champlain, I went to the riding of my colleague from Duvernay who is here.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): You sure get around.

Mr. Vincent: Everywhere I went people were talking about the CF-18s. They are proud of the decision made by the Conservative Government and they said: Strange that you in the Quebec Conservative caucus took position on that and got the contract. Strange, because when the Liberals were in office the Quebec caucus would not take position.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): There were 74 of them.

Mr. Vincent: Indeed, 74 and they did not take position. There are other contracts we should have had in Quebec, but we did not. The Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) is not saying much, yet the Hyundai plant is not all that far from his region.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Domtar.

Mr. Vincent: Domtar, sure. The case was mishandled, I suppose, you are unhappy about the way it turned out. Next you will be telling me that you settled the matter, that the Member for Richmond—Wolfe settled the matter.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): And the mapping centre, is that going to be in the Eastern Townships?

Mr. Vincent: Let's talk about agriculture, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): And about mapping.

Mr. Vincent: One billion and a half in 1985, over five years. And for five years, Quebec's dairy farmers had been waiting for this measure. Madam Speaker, you yourself come from a riding with a number of excellent dairy farms. They had been waiting for this measure for five years. And we did it. More federal-provincial agreements have been signed with Quebec and the other provinces than ever before. These agreements are sound and they have made a difference. Madam Speaker, that is what we have accomplished so far and I am of course referring to this Government.

I would like to spend a few moments on the Budget, because it is of course directly—

Mr. Gagliano: What Budget?

Mr. Vincent: —the 1987 Budget which is of course directly connected with the Bill before the House today.

Mr. Gagliano: That is a Budget?

Mr. Vincent: It is really too bad, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member opposite is supposed to be a chartered accountant and know about figures, and it is really too bad he is criticizing Canada's fiscal plan—

Mr. Gagliano: Just what is a Budget? Tell us.

Mr. Vincent: He should know what a Budget is. A Budget consists of the country's financial statements on a given date. Let them tell us what happened in the past, what the present situation is and what the future holds.

Mr. Gagliano: It contains nothing. And what is a financial statement? There is nothing at all there.

Mr. Vincent: Let me tell you what happened before: In 1983-84, a deficit of $32.3; in 1984-85, a deficit of $38.3.

Mr. Gagliano: How much in 1986-87?

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, what happened to the $6 billion during election year? In September 1984, we battened down the hatches. Which means that they spent $6 billion just before the election, because the deficit increased by $6 billion and we didn't do it. And if we didn't, it was the previous Government. And who knows how they spent it? In any case, all of a sudden it jumped to $6 billion. We were given a deficit of $38 billion and in 1985-86 we cut it back to $34 billion; in 1986-87 to $32 billion and this year, 1987-88, to $29.3 billion. This means a reduction of 23 per cent over three years.

For the first time in 30 years, the federal Government has reduced its deficit for the third consecutive year. Have we mismanaged the country, Madam Speaker, when we created jobs, reduced the inflation rate, promoted economic expansion and became the second best country in the world at the economic level? However, Madam Speaker, when one hears such statements, one wonders whether those Members are entirely honest, if they do not play around with the truth.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): They do not know how to count.

Mr. Vincent: We know that. They were in power for 20 years and we have seen that they have never known how to count.

The 1987 Budget, Madam Speaker, is an exercice in continuity: first we had the economic statement of November 1984, then the May 1985 Budget, the February 1986 Budget and now the February 1987 Budget.

Let me also recall what I would consider large figures in the Budget. They are important for the understanding of what this Government has been doing: $10.5 billion for the unemployment insurance program in this year's budget; $13.5 billion for old age security, and those are billions, Madam Speaker; $6.6 billion for tax transfers; $6.5 billion for the public assistance and family allowance plans; $8.9 billion for established program funding for a total of $48.3 billion. For our national debt—their national debt, the money they borrowed and which we have to pay back—$27.3 billion in interest payments this year. The total shows that 50 per cent of our expenditures are going to social programs, and 25 per cent to interest payments. We manage to administer the country, the departments, the House of Commons, and extend grants with 25 per cent of government expenditures. That, Madam Speaker, is called sound administration. You are signalling that my time has almost expired. Thank you very much.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for Kamploops—Shuswap (M. Riis)

• (1330)

[English]

Mr. Riis: I have two questions for my hon. friend. He began his speech by talking about the excellent management that he alleges the Government has provided.

The Prime Minister's Office is very symbolic to Canadians in terms of what the Government believes in. Does the Hon. Member think it is a good idea that the Prime Minister's Office was expanded from a staff of 60, under Prime Minister Trudeau, to 120, under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)?

The Hon. Member will know that the 10 per cent tariff on English language books brought into the federal Government $11 million from such countries as the United Kingdom, Hong Kong, Japan, Italy, Belgium, Luxembourg, Spain, West Germany, Switzerland, France, Ireland, and many others. Does the Hon. Member believe that it was an example of good management to impose this tax, and then to remove it a few months later?

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, my heartfelt thanks to the Hon. Member for allowing me to clarify a few points. On the one hand, I have no idea of the number of people who were in the previous Prime Minister's office. I must admit that there were not very many of my friends there. On the other hand, Madam Speaker, regarding our Prime Minister who is doing a tremendous job and who, as I said, has cutback his own salary for several consecutive years, I think he proved to Canadians the importance of good management. In the 1986 budget, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister imposed a $1 000 salary reduction to each and every Member of this House. We were unable to impose the reduction to the Leader of the Opposition, so we did it through the Members' account.

As far as tarifs are concerned, I had the opportunity last year, following their imposition, to meet with representatives of the Western Publishers Association during their convention in Lake Louise, and I explained to them what we had done. When they understood the context of the decision, they supported it. They were not happy about it, but they agreed with it. And the rationale was that, as the Canadian Government, we had to send a clear and definite message to the United States about what they had done. Neither the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) nor the Government were to blame, but when we looked at the list of things on which a tarif could be imposed under the GATT agreement negotiated by the former administration, the choice was limited. Once the signal had been sent and this tarif had been imposed, I think that, in view of the fact that the free trade negotiations are progressing rather well, the Minister of Finance was justified in removing this tarif; however it was important to let the United States know that we were not going to let them walk all over us. That was the message, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Having listened with a great deal of attention to the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent), Madam Speaker, I can summarize his remarks in this way: Inflation is down, and so are interest rates. In my opinion, however, Canadian people understand that if such is the situation, it is the result of the very good policies implemented in 1983-84; however, since the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières loves quoting major newspapers to brag about this Government's so-called good and healthy administration, I will quote from an article which appeared this morning in the newspaper Le Droit. I will dispense with excerpts and limit myself to the conclusion:

> All those scandals that have shaken the Cabinet seem to have persuaded the people that the "boss" has no control over the "business". That is why we must ask ourselves today whether marketing experts can confer on a politician an intellectual dimension which does not seem to fit his real nature.

The article concludes with those words, Madam Speaker:

> In short, Prime Minister Mulroney may change political advisers as often as he wants, he may reshuffle his Cabinet to his heart's content, but will the real Brian Mulroney not always remain the man the people—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It is very difficult for the Chair to relate the comments of the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif) to the bill now under discussion. The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) might still want to reply.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, once again, I commend you for your judgment. It is saddening to hear a Member talk about scandals when commenting on the good and healthy economy of Canada. Even more so, Madam Speaker, when we know there have not been that many scandals, in the sense of what Canadians mean by scandals. Presumptions, allegations of scandals by that party. True, Madam Speaker, there have been a lot of those. It is regrettable, and I think even the Hon.

Member's leader would be disappointed because he himself recognized it was time to stop talking about those things.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I just want to point out to the Hon. Member that in fact he carried on in exactly the same vein. His comments were therefore no more acceptable than those of the other Hon. Member.

• (1340)

Mr. Binns: Madam Speaker, I was very interested in the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) in this debate. He pointed out the tremendous recovery being made in Canada because of the fiscal measures of the Government.

Mr. Riis: Where?

Mr. Binns: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) asks where. Let me point out quickly that, for example, last year in my Province of Prince Edward Island housing starts were up by 77 per cent.

Mr. Riis: Unemployment is up.

Mr. Binns: Madam Speaker, I should qualify the point just raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. He has suggested that unemployment is up. That is not the whole story. In Prince Edward Island this year over last year we had 5,000 more jobs. That is an increase in the number of people working of about 10 per cent to 12 per cent.

The Member used selective information in his remarks. Let me ask the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières how he would interpret that. The Member for Kamloops—Shuswap suggested that the unemployment rate in the province was up over a year ago. That is true, but it is very selective. If the Member had used the figures for September, 1986 versus September, 1984 he would find that the unemployment rate actually dropped by 1.5 percentage points. The unemployment rate is decreasing. More people are in the workforce, and generally conditions have improved. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières could give his opinion of how the selective information provided by the Opposition differs from mine.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward Island knows probably the rates of unemployment better that any Member from another province, and they are, indeed, the right figures.

I would like to stress that in Prince Edward Island, as in any other province, there is a feeling that the economy is improving, that things are going well, that we are progressing, that Hon. Members from all provinces are doing an excellent job, and that the Prime Minister and the ministers are dealing equitably with each region in the country.

By the way, I want to underline the excellent work done by my colleague in that regard.

Mr. Gagliano: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question to my colleague from Trois-Rivières. Since we are speaking of good management by his Government, I would like to refer to the Budget Papers. On page 28, we note that between 1984-85 and 1985-86 there is an increase in personal income tax of $3.7 billion, as well as an increase in federal sales tax, also paid by individuals, of $2.4 billion, for a total of about $6 billion.

If we look at the deficit, we see that it was $32 billion in 1983-84, and also $32 billion in 1986-87. There was no increase in the deficit, but no decrease either despite an extra $6 billion in taxes paid by individuals alone.

Where is the good management? Do you reduce the deficit by overloading people with taxes? That is in your own document.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières has 30 seconds to answer.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, it would take at least two years to explain that to him. He does not understand. I have been trying to explain for two years and he still does not understand.

Mr. Gagliano: That is your own paper.

Mr. Vincent: Madam Speaker, 50 per cent of the money spent by the Government is returned to Canadians in social programs. It is a lot more than the increase of billions of dollars which the Hon. Member is referring to.

And I want to ask him this: Where did the $6 billion go which were spent immediately before the election campaign? Where did those $6 billion of deficit increase go? I would like an answer about this, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): You sent them to the banks.

• (1350)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority. Bill C-40 is a very thin Bill. It is like the policy of the present Government in that it is very thin and contains lots of promises but no action. The Bill asks the House to give to the Tories across the way $3,600 million as may be required for public works and general purposes. Money and plenty of it is looking more and more like the key to everything the Conservative Government hopes to do to recover its popularity.

How can we in the Official Opposition support this Bill when its purpose is to enable the Government to borrow money in order to have the Government carry out its budgetary and general economic policies? As the months go by, it is becoming increasingly and painfully obvious what is wrong with these policies. During the last general election campaign, the Conservatives made a number of promises and in fact over 347 carefully articulated promises containing lots of bombast. These promises were made to win the support of Canadians.

The Economic Statement of November, 1984 and the three subsequent Budgets have not in any positive way reflected the promises made by the Conservatives in order to win the support of Canadians. For example, during the last election campaign, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made an explicit commitment not to increase income taxes. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pledged to reform the personal income tax system and said he wanted to make it fairer, more progressive and more productive. I could use the mellifluous tones and the exaggerated and elaborated phrases the Prime Minister used. However, I would suggest that he read the very important admonition of Thomas Paine who said: "Moderation in temper is always a virtue, but moderation in principle is always a vice".

It is clear that in spite of the promises made by the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, middle and lower-income Canadians have become the victims of the most unfair, regressive and economically stifling tax increases on record brought about by the Budgets of 1985, 1986 and 1987. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) spoke most forcefully, as did our finance critic, in the debate just a few weeks ago. They highlighted a number of issues. They said that the third Budget represents phase 3 of an all-out attack on low and middle-income Canadians. It widens the gap between rich and poor and between the have and the have not regions of the country. These three Budgets with their economic approach to Government gave us the largest tax increase in modern Canadian history. They have gouged $22.8 billion more out of individual taxpayers. This is an average of $2,000 per taxpayer during the tenure of the Government. Compared to that, over the same period of time, corporations are being taxed $2 billion less than they were when the Government took office. Is that what the Minister calls fiscal fairness?

I would like to deal particularly with the cultural sector. It would appear as though the cultural sector has been reaping benefits over the past few months, but when one examines more closely the record of the Government one finds that the picture is not quite so bright. I suggest that we have been duped by the triptych effect that has been used. It has been a real trompe-l'oeil. The masters have been at work creating the kinds of illusions that would make us feel that we have had a great buffet at the arts and cultural table.

Yes, moneys have been allocated to culture from the Department of Communications as they should be since it is the responsibility and role of the Department to build on what has occurred in the past. Let us look to see what exactly has happened and let us examine the dramatic impact the cultural sector has had upon the Canadian economy.

I call to the attention of the House the words of Henry Robertson Luce who said: "The business of business is to take part in the great society", and if I may add, the great Canadian society as long as it will last. Are we being allowed to take part in that great society to the extent that we can and should, particularly when we are being threatened by the Americanization of Canadian society as we live next door to our all-pervasive friends on the American side of the border?

In attempting to measure the contributions of culture to the economy, we must naturally rely on pragmatic definitions of culture. Unfortunately, this ignores all the intangible characteristics which define us as a people. When we think of culture, we often forget to include its economic contributions. We must measure the economic impact of cultural industries on our economy in terms of employment, wages paid, revenues generated and some of the other economic variables. Then we must compare this cultural aggregate with a similar total for the entire economy.

According to the analysis of Statistics Canada, the direct impact of the arts and cultural sector as measured by the Gross Domestic Product, the value of production arising within the geographical boundaries of Canada, was valued at $5.2 billion or 1.7 per cent of the GDP of the entire economy in 1981. It has grown rapidly since then. Arts industry revenues increased by 64 per cent at an average annual rate of 13 per cent between 1977 and 1981. Revenues went from $4.7 billion to $7.7 billion. I point out that it was under a Liberal Government that Canadians flourished and grew in this vital sector of the economy.

With the rapid changes in technology, cultural industries have been able to impact on our lives in considerable measure and with increasing force over the past years. A census of manufacturers' comparison of the 20 largest Canadian manufacturing industries and the arts industry in 1981 revealed that the arts industry was the largest, with employment of 234,280; the sixth largest with salaries and wages of $2.5 billion; and the eleventh largest with revenues of $7.7 billion, equal to the Canadian telecommunications industry.

Let us also look at the impact of certain actions which were taken. Bill C-58 provided revenues of $58 million for Canadian t.v. broadcasters. This has allowed the field of television and broadcasting to grow and benefit. There is a very important program of substituting Canadian advertising for American advertising. For example, when one turns on either an American channel or a Canadian channel showing the same program at 8 p.m. any evening, one sees Canadian advertising. That kind of protection represents 40 per cent of the revenues of a t.v. station. It is very important that that money is staying in Canada. This has been effective in enabling us to be good corporate citizens while at the same time allowing us to promote our own industries.

I could go on and on about the things that have been done to enable the Canadian Gross Domestic Product to grow substantially through the arts and cultural industries. In the Budget of February, 1986, the Minister of Finance announced an allocation of $75 million per year for the next five years for a number of cultural initiatives. Madam Speaker, do you wish me to continue later?

POLLUTION OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER BY TOXIC CHEMICALS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, loaded with raw sewage and toxic chemicals, the St. Lawrence is a river gasping to survive. An indicator of that is the beluga whale, the numbers of which have dropped from 5,000 to 500 in the last 80 years. The milk of the mother beluga contains so many toxic chemicals that the babies are being poisoned as they nurse, zoologists inform us. The Quebec Minister of the Environment has said: "Like spoiled brats we ignored it, abused it, raped it, poured acid and human wastes into it".

Having realized the error of past practices the Quebec Government promised in November, 1986, to spend $6 billion building over 400 sewage treatment plants in communities along the St. Lawrence River. Can Quebec cope with this problem alone? Some of the poisons dumped in the Great Lakes end up in the St. Lawrence. Ottawa has some responsibilities upstream. Therefore the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) would do well to help restore this magnificent and historic river by matching his words with tangible help instead of just pointing his finger at polluters.

JOB PLANNING

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—SENNETERRE REGION—REVIVAL OF ECONOMY

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Since March 6 last, Mr. Speaker, the Senneterre region has been receiving federal assistance under one of the six employment programs of the Community Development Program.

The purpose of this program is to help the residents of Senneterre and neighbouring regions cope with massive layoffs resulting from the closure of the radar base and other layoffs by the CN.

A committee has been set up under the chairmanship of Senneterre municipal councillor Jean Roy.

I attended several meetings with the residents of Senneterre to give them a hand, and I want to underscore the competence of Department of Employment and Immigration Alain Darveau of Hull whose professional advice was of great help, and of Minister Benoît Bouchard who showed willingness to listen to the people.

The committee may recommend one or several options available under the program with a view to helping workers create their own company, acquire new skills, and get $200,000 over the next two years to carry out a realistic study on local economy development and diversification future prospects.

Mr. Speaker, the Senneterre region has real potential for economic recovery.

TAX REFORM

SKEPTICISM ABOUT RESULTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have become very skeptical about the Government's intention to change Canada's tax laws because they fear tax reform will not be in their interests since the Government is the only one in the world to allow capital gains from any source to be totally tax-free. Canadians also remember their federal taxes have increased by $1,350 per family per year as a result of taxes imposed by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

We now hear the federal Government intends to impose a food tax on Canadian families. Yes, the Government, through the business transfer tax, a hidden sales tax, will be taxing milk, bread, eggs, vegetables, fruit, indeed all groceries. No wonder Canadians are skeptical. What kind of Government would tax the food on our kitchen table? Only a Government that cares not a whit about the people of Canada. Any Government that imposes such a punitive, regressive, and hidden tax on food will be a Government removed from office as soon as the voters have a chance.

SPORTS

EARLY BLUE JAYS CATCH IRE OF CINCINNATI CITY COUNCIL

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, America feels threatened. We know many Americans have faced the danger of invasion from Nicaragua for several years, but now we discover others fear their national identity is threatened because major league baseball will open outside their country for the first time in history. The first major league baseball game this year will open in Toronto, one hour before the first game in Cincinnati. No one has yet alerted the Marines, but the Cincinnati City Council has called Washington.

I can understand why the Burghers of Cincinnati have seen red, but these good neighbours will just have to get used to Canada showing continental leadership, be it in baseball or trade. The Blue Jays will be first at the start of the season and first at the end. I hope all Members will join me in foreseeing a time when the World Series will be played entirely in Toronto, Montreal, and other cities of this great land.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—TREATMENT OF LATE NIGHT ARRIVALS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, what will it take for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to do something about the absolute chaos at Pearson International Airport when hundreds of tired vacationers arrive late at night all at the same time? Indeed, anyone who has had to experience the cramped arrivals area at Toronto Terminal 1 late at night now knows how ineffective is the Government. Hundreds of people suffer, some waiting as long as 90 minutes, unable to find transportation to their homes.

• (1405)

That, in fact, is the key to the problem. Indeed, as late charters land it becomes obvious that the number of taxis and limousines serving the terminal is terribly inadequate. A recent Toronto Star article quotes airport operation manager, Jim Mattock, as saying that airport officials have been aware of the problem for at least two years. Mr. Mattick goes on to say that it may take several months before a solution is in place. This is unacceptable. The Minister of Transport must immediately address a situation which is intolerable for travellers and a disgrace to Canadian airports.

ELIGIBILITY OF FORMER ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I once again want to raise a matter in this House on behalf of those Canadians, including many retired servicemen who, since January 5, 1986, have had their UIC benefits drastically reduced or eliminated altogether because they had to declare as income their pensions from previous employment.

On December 5, 1986, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said that those who found subsequent employment and were laid off would be reimbursed for lost benefits. For almost a year before that statement, those people were told to wait for the report of the Forget Commission. We have had this report but people have still been kept waiting. These people are fed up with waiting for the Government to act. No one at the Employment Centres can tell them when they will receive their money. The Government's treatment of these people is unfair and intolerable.

I call upon the Minister to act now to ensure that those citizens receive their rightful benefits which should never have been taken from them in the first place.

PUBLISHING INDUSTRY

CALL FOR ENFORCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in July, 1985, the previous Minister of Communications announced a policy of Canadianization of our book-publishing industry, a policy welcomed across the country. The Government, in particular decisions regarding publishing takeovers, has not enforced its own policy. The most spectacular exemption permitted was the Prentice Hall acquisition by Gulf and Western, the company with the scorched earth policy. The Conservative Government excused its dereliction of duty on the grounds that it could not implement its new policy retroactively. Or perhaps the Government was scared of forest fires.

It has now been nearly two years since the policy was announced. One case, GLC, has been under review at Investment Canada for over a year. In another sorry example, Gulf and Western was ordered to sell Ginn and Company to Canadian owners which it has not done. It is time the Government threw some cold water on Gulf and Western's scorched earth policy. It should implement its Canadianization policy beginning with disallowing the GLC takeover by Gulf and Western.

ACID RAIN—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND ONTARIO

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the signing of a federal-Ontario agreement this last week is a real breakthrough in our national battle against acid rain. This latest agreement will provide funding of up to $85 million from each level of government to assist in Ontario's Countdown Acid Rain Program and reinforce Canada's commitment to cut our sulphur dioxide emissions in half by 1994.

This acid rain agreement, along with the Niagara River clean-up declaration signed earlier this year, demonstrates the federal Government's "get on with it" approach to cleaning up the environment. More progress has been made by this Government in attacking the problems of the environment within the last two and one-half years than was made in a decade of Liberal administration. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) should be commended accordingly.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

CALL FOR ENTRENCHMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, some Canadians are asking what aboriginal rights are and why they should be recognized. Simply put, aboriginal rights are all those rights held by Indians, Inuit, and Métis which they possessed and exercised for centuries in this land before the Europeans came to this continent.

Aboriginal rights include not only certain lands and resources, but also social and cultural institutions, laws, and forms of self-government. If these rights existed before the Europeans came and they were never given up by the aboriginal peoples, then they still exist and, in justice, they must be recognized by all of us. The First Ministers' Conference scheduled for March 26 must also recognize these rights and entrench them in the Canadian Constitution.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, last evening's meeting of First Ministers about the trade talks with the United States was an important step forward in this historic process, and an outstanding example of how our Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) efforts at consultation and co-operation are bringing about a new era of national reconciliation.

As the Premiers become more involved and aware of the benefits that such an agreement will bring to each region of the country, the safeguards to be included, and the tremendous opportunities and encouragement it will provide for Canada to become world class in the provision of goods and services, they will surely see and share the positive attitude of British Columbia's Premier Bill Vander Zalm.

As Mr. Vander Zalm said last night, he thought the talks were coming along extremely well, and that our chief trade negotiator, Simon Reisman, was very forthright and fantastic. Bill, I agree wholeheartedly with you that we will get an agreement by the end of the year and that it will be great for Canada. You can count on the support of British Columbia Members of Parliament to ensure that it will be particularly great for British Columbia. And, Bill, you are fantastic too.

PEACE

GIRL GUIDES' ANTI-WAR PLEA

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, recently I received 30 letters from the Sixty-Sixth Girl Guide Group in Regina. I received pictures of smiling suns and flowers. I received pictures of bombs with large Xs through them, on which was written: "No more war. Peace, please". The children were asking me not to drop a bomb on them and not to start a war.

The message is very clear. The children of our country want to live in peace. They do not want Governments to endanger their lives and the lives of their loved ones.

On their behalf I urge the Government not to be timid in the pursuit of peace and to seize this historic opportunity to initiate an independent policy that gives peace a chance. They want to live their lives in a world of peace. I urge the Government to take heed of the voices of the children not only of this country but of the world. Indeed, give peace a chance.

MEDICAL CARE

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED ALBERTA LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am holding a copy of Bill 14 from the Legislative Assembly of Alberta which is an insidious attempt to break down medicare. I want the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) who is in the House today to send a direct message to the Minister of Health in Alberta telling him that we will not sell out our medicare system.

Bill 14 violates the principle of universality and the principle of comprehensiveness, the principles that the previous Liberal Government fought for to make sure that the Canada Health Act was available to all Canadians. Every medical procedure should be available for every Canadian at no cost, with no private insurance.

I urge the Minister to send a very clear message to the Legislature of Alberta that Bill 14 is a violation of the Canada Health Act and must be withdrawn immediately, or there should be penalties against the Province of Alberta.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTES—CONCERNS OF MANITOBANS

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, an issue of primary concern to my constituents in Manitoba is the disposal of nuclear waste. With the approval of the provincial Government, a research project has been going on in Manitoba for several years. It is being carried out by Atomic Energy Canada Limited with financial support from its American counterparts. The end result will hopefully be the discovery of ways to store nuclear waste safely. This research will benefit not only Manitobans but all Canadians and North Americans.

However, my position, and what I believe the position of the Government of Canada should be, is that any nuclear waste not generated within the borders of Manitoba should not be disposed of in Manitoba. By extension, I believe any province or area that receives the benefits of nuclear power should be responsible for disposal of its own nuclear waste within its own boundaries.

No one denies that the research being undertaken is beneficial, but we must make it clear that once the research is completed Manitoba will not become Canada's dumping ground for nuclear waste.

RAILWAYS

DERAILMENTS—PUBLIC SAFETY

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, once again we see evidence that the Government is willing to sacrifice public safety, jobs, and the interests of the poorer regions on the altar of fiscal responsibility. In the past two months six trains have gone off CN tracks in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, raising concerns about public safety on our railways. Yesterday a railway spokesperson blamed most of these problems on bad winter weather. However, his explanation is not convincing.

• (1415)

A recent task force report on CN operations indicated that CN tracks are steadily deteriorating. Furthermore, I have been informed that in the town of Capreol in my riding, certified car inspectors will no longer be doing roll-by train inspections as of April 6, 1987. Instead, they will be handled by Department of Transport employees who do not have the proper training or expertise.

It is simply unacceptable that the CNR and the Government compromise the safety of Canadians by cutting financial corners. Moreover, given that two of these recent derailments cut Nova Scotia's only rail link with the rest of Canada, it is irresponsible for the Government to neglect a crucial part of the Atlantic region's economic and transportation infrastructure.

I demand that the—

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPOSITION TO ACQUISITION OF RANCH LAND

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the good productive soil given to us here in Canada by an omnipotent God is a sacred trust. We have a responsibility to ensure it is here to grow food for future generations. For too long we have been carelessly placing subdivisions, factories, army bases, and so on, on productive land. If we continue, we will leave a barren Canada for our children. That is why the hundreds of people in the area of the OH Ranch in the Kananaskis country are opposed to the army acquiring prime agricultural land for military purposes, especially when there is an alternative only an hour and half out of Calgary.

Prime agricultural land, a provincial park, the eastern slopes of the Rockies, a habitat for birds and animals, a quiet spot for hundreds of tourists to meditate amidst a beautiful countryside, are all reasons why the Government should refuse even to negotiate for this land.

If the Government is still considering this proposition, I suggest that the Minister refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Agriculture so that witnesses may show in no uncertain way that this beautiful area should be retained for ranching, tourism, and recreation.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

SUPPORT FOR CEREMONIAL ROUTE PROJECT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, over the last few months Canadians have become aware of the plans of the National Capital Commission to improve certain streets in the downtown area of Ottawa and to convert this area into a ceremonial route. This project will cost some $15 million and, of course, includes $3 million worth of major repairs to the Alexandria Bridge between Ottawa and Hull.

Canadians have always been proud of the national capital of our country. If we want to continue with this pride, we must continue to invest in our capital. We must do our very best. My purpose in making this statement today is to support the initiatives of the National Capital Commission and its Chairman, Mrs. Jean Pigott, in establishing a ceremonial route for our capital in consultation with the local community.

I have not always agreed with Mrs. Pigott in the past. We have disagreed on such issues as the Mile Circle Park and many others. However, on this issue she certainly has my support.

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ISSUES AFFECTING PROVINCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to pose a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Contrary to previous commitments, last night the Prime Minister in his meeting with the provincial Premiers refused to put forward any meaningful ratification process for the Canada—U.S. free trade deal, even though, as we well know, the provinces constitutionally are not required to accept any requirement under the international treaty which affects their own jurisdictions. How can the Government continue to negotiate with Americans on matters affecting provincial jurisdictions when it does not have in place a proper ratification scheme affecting those jurisdictions? How can one, in effect, negotiate away something when one has not even received it yet?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I think the Hon. Member is overlooking the fact that the success of last night's meeting showed that the process we have in place is working and there is no need to try to find an alternative mechanism at this time. The subject was discussed, but the fact is that many of the Premiers said the system was working well, that it was a way of drawing out consensus, and no one could think of any way of doing it which would achieve any better results.

I might also point out that during the negotiation of the Auto Pact, when the Hon. Leader of the Opposition sat on this side of the House, that Auto Pact was negotiated without any reference at all to the province most concerned, Ontario.

REQUEST THAT PROVINCES HAVE APPROVAL AUTHORITY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we know the Hon. Minister has a somewhat curious definition of what success is. After the meeting last night eight of the ten Premiers said that the Prime Minister had failed to live up to his pledge, and that the Government must have a ratification scheme in place before the negotiations continue. Because of the importance of those types of commitments, what steps is the Government taking at the present time to ensure that the provinces will have total and complete approval of any measures taken under a free trade deal that affect their jurisdiction?

• (1420)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the steps the Government is taking are with respect to involving the provinces in the most extensive consultative process that the country has ever seen. This is the fourth time that the First Ministers have met. I was present at the meeting. It was very amiable. All these subjects were discussed at length in very amiable terms. The general consensus was that the process is working. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is simply reading The Toronto Star again or not, but the Ministers around the table were united in the position that the consultative process is working. If the deal which emerges is not satisfactory to all concerned then there will be no deal, as the Prime Minister has said.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CHAIRMAN OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a third question of the Minister. This morning the Chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, a federal agency, stated very clearly in proceedings before a committee that the questions concerning Bill C-58, simulcasting, income tax rules and copyright are essential to the integrity of the Canadian cultural industries. Considering the importance that the chief regulator of Canadian culture puts on these matters, will the Minister guarantee us now that these very specific items will not be included as part of any free trade deal with the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, no one has expressed more clearly than has the Prime Minister that Canada's cultural identity and the instruments of achieving it are not the subject of discussion in the free trade talks. I do not know why the Hon. Member and the Liberal Party keep dragging culture, the Auto Pact, and marketing boards on to the negotiating table. The Conservative Government is not discussing those subjects at the negotiating table.

ACID RAIN—FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Secretary of State for External Affairs back from his trip to Washington. In light of polls which indicate that 60 per cent of Canadians see acid rain as the number one issue between Canada and the U.S., can the Minister give the House an assurance that as a result of his trip to Washington transboundary emission levels will be reduced at the upcoming summit?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly our hope and our expectation that transboundary emissions will be reduced as a result of actions taken by the Government of the United States and pressure brought by this Government.

I must comment that it is an unusual commentary on party discipline that the two lead questioners for the Liberal Party today were the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and the Hon. Member for Davenport.

Mr. Riis: Keep up the statesmanlike approach, Joe.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is an interesting question as to who speaks for the Liberals.

Mr. Caccia: It goes to show that the Liberal Party is liberal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Something you wouldn't understand, Joe.

Mr. Ouellet: That is why he was not Prime Minister for very long.

NEED FOR UNITED STATES COMMITMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is my supplementary question. On the eve of the third acid rain summit under the new administration of the Government elected in 1984 does the Secretary of State for External Affairs agree that unless the Prime Minister gets a commitment with respect to specific emission cuts Canada will have lost three valuable years by pursuing research instead of emission cuts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what it shows is that the Liberal Party is all over the lot. It is divided on the Cruise, divided on trade, and probably divided on acid rain.

Mr. Ouellet: Answer the question!

Mr. Crosbie: Where is Turner today?

Mr. Nunziata: Joe, your caucus was behind you.

Mr. Axworthy: Who lost his job, Joe?

• (1425)

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that all Hon. Members will certainly agree that the issue being raised by the Hon. Member for Davenport is a serious one on which there is a great deal of unanimity in the Chamber. I am sure that Hon. Members would wish to hear the answer of the Minister.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In Washington I had the opportunity to speak to administration officials, and to make clear our expectation that there will be progress on the United States' side that results in a reduction in transboundary acid rain emissions. I also had the opportunity to speak to several members of both Parties in the Senate and the House of Representatives. All of them interested in acid rain, whatever their Party, unanimously made the point that the position that has been taken by the Government of Canada—particularly because under the leadership of my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, Canada has put its own house in order—is far more compelling than it was in former times. Consequently, our chances of making progress are better. We will wait and see if the Americans respond as we hope they will.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister has told the House that at the meeting last night no one could suggest a better way to proceed. In fact is it not true that various Premiers suggested that a subcommittee be established to work out an agreement process, and this was rejected? Therefore, will the Minister confirm that no approval process exists because of the decision of her Government to turn that proposal down flat?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the point that I made, and the point that I am making, is that while the subject was discussed in very reasonable tones, no one could suggest a better way to proceed than the one which we presently have of extensive consultation. There were some suggestions made by some of the Premiers, but they did not enjoy the support of other Premiers. The only system that enjoyed the support of every Premier, and every participant in the room—and I was there, the Hon. Member wasn't—was the fact that this process that we have in place of consultation, discussion, and the identification of regional and national concerns, is working. I do not understand why the NDP continues to knock a consultative process which is working, and which will produce a free trade deal that is in the interest of all Canadians in all parts of the country.

PREMIERS' POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): The Minister keeps trying to tell us that everything is proceeding wonderfully, just as in the softwood lumber case, and we know what happened there.

Will the Minister admit that last night maritime Premiers expressed grave concern about the constraints on regional development efforts, which an agreement would include, and about proposals to block off future supply-management agreements for our farmers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is a reason that First Ministers' meetings are held behind closed doors without even a recording secretary. They are supposed to be confidential. The only people present were the First Ministers, the Prime Minister, myself, and for parts of the meeting, Simon Reisman. I can only suggest that the Hon. Member is receiving this material from the NDP Premier of Manitoba. There is no one else who would breach that type of security.

To answer the question of the Hon. Member, I have already stated that the meeting discussed how we can maintain our goal of regional development, which is not on the table, within the framework of a free trade agreement. The meeting discussed agriculture, and the concerns of agriculture. The meeting discussed employment, jobs, economic growth, and the potential for the country. There was general consensus that the manner in which we are proceeding will lead to a good trade deal with the United States. The meeting also concluded, and the Prime Minister is the leading exponent of this, that if it is not a good deal, there will be no deal.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if this Government had taken an open, honest approach with the Canadian people right from the start, there would be no need for sleazy accusations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Argumentative questions lead to argumentative answers. I would ask the Hon. Member to put the question.

INVESTMENT RULES QUERY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister also admit, contrary to her answer yesterday, that the Prime Minister has now expanded the mandate of these talks to include investment rules with the United States and that the whole picture coming clear to Canadians is one sell-out after another as the talks go on?

Mr. McCurdy: Down the river.

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the only picture becoming clear to Canadians is the fact that the Government's free trade initiative is working and is going to lead to a job creating, economic growth-creating trade treaty with the U.S. at a time of mounting protectionism. I am sorry the Hon. Member cannot understand that.

In terms of his comments about open approaches, the Minister of Agriculture and I just left a meeting this morning with representatives of all the agricultural and food processing industries in Canada in which we discussed at length the measures of our agreement that impact on them. This has been the most extensive consultative system ever seen in the history of the country.

REFUGEES

CHILEAN REFUGEE STATUS CLAIMANTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. I welcome his decision yesterday to allow three Chilean women refugees and their children to come to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: The Minister will also know that a Montreal delegation of yet unresolved refugee claimants is in Ottawa seeking an audience with the Minister. Given that he was prepared to exercise a sense of compassion in family reunification to the three families yesterday, will the Minister meet with the delegation and assure this House that he will extend that same expression of humanitarianism to the other 85 women and children who are waiting to meet their families in Canada and who are seeking the compassion of this Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I explained at length that my decision regarding three women and children who were coming to join their families here in Canada was a very special decision made on compassionate grounds. Today I received a report on the people who are still in Buenos Aires from our officials down there. Each case was very carefully assessed. A representative of the Quebec Government is now in Argentina, and today I can inform the House that none of the cases that were assessed in Argentina could in Canada be considered a refugee case. In the circumstances, if these people wish to apply for admission to Canada, they will have to go through the same channels as everybody else, according to the law of the land. This means they will have to do so with a view to obtaining immigrant status, and their application will have to be considered on the same basis as all other applications of this kind. However, if the representative—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Bouchard: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but this is very important. If the representative for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, who has yet to comment on this question, were to recommend that our Government consider a certain number of cases, we would be delighted to do so. Meanwhile, we intend to act according to the laws of this country.

EFFECT OF REGULATION CHANGE ON PERSONS IN TRANSIT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister refused to answer the question as to whether he will today at least give them the time of day. I have a supplementary question for the Minister.

[Translation]

I would like to know, considering the fact that these families were held in transit when the changes were made on February 20, and also considering that a period of grace was not allowed and that the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees declared them to be bona fide refugees, why wouldn't the Minister be prepared to make up for the Prime Minister's announcement and authorize these people to enter Canada and join their families?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have just answered the Member's question. I said on February 20, and I repeat it, that we have to apply regulations. That is what we did.

People from around the world who want to come to Canada have to respect the regulations and the laws of Canada. People have a chance to apply as immigrants. If they want to do that, we will consider their applications. There are a lot of people in Canada who want to be reunited with their families. They are waiting for decisions under the Immigration Act. We apply the Immigration Act to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED DUMPING OF STEEL IMPORTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade. In light of the recent imposition of import restrictions on steel in the United States, the Western Canada Steel plant in Richmond, British Columbia, is being forced to compete with cheap foreign steel that is being dumped in Canada.

Due to the seriousness of this situation, why does the Minister refuse to meet with the joint union-management committee which is working hard to avoid a job disaster for Canadian steelworkers? Why will she not meet with this committee and protect the jobs of Canadian workers?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Possibly the reason I have not met with this committee is that I have not personally received an invitation to meet with them, Mr. Speaker.

I can only assure the Hon. Member that we are developing a steel policy to deal with the question of imports. Should the company feel that steel is being dumped in its market, it is perfectly free to take an anti-dumping action against the offender.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's office has received repeated requests for a meeting which she has refused completely.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, Canada's position has been undercut by unscrupulous brokers who ship cheap offshore steel into Canada and then re-export it to the United States, thus escaping American quotas. When will the Minister introduce strong measures to stop this offshore steel from being dumped into the U.S. via Canada and help save the jobs not just of Western Canada Steel but other steel producers in Canada, including those in the Hamilton region?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that I cannot refuse an invitation that I was unaware I received. I will certainly try to meet with this committee on my next visit to Vancouver. In terms of our steel policy, it will be announced at the appropriate time.

THE CONSTITUTION—IMMIGRATION AND FINANCIAL COMPENSATION—INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT TABLED PROPOSALS UNACCEPTABLE TO QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to put my question to the Minister responsible for the Constitution but he is sitting in the other place, or to the Prime Minister who is not in the House. My question is therefore directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the constitutional talks with Quebec, aimed at enabling this province to ratify the Canadian Constitution with honour and enthusiasm, to quote the Prime Minister.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House why his Government put on the table a number of proposals that are clearly unacceptable to Quebec, since what it is offering in terms of immigration and financial compensation in the case of new programs represents a step backwards for Quebec and Quebecers?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the federal Government did not table a counter-offer to Quebec's proposals during last week's federal-provincial officials' meeting.

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILLING TO INCLUDE CULLEN-COUTURE AGREEMENT IN CONSTITUTION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. According to my information that is not so, and we all know how truthful this Government is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Malépart: Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to make a commitment that his Government will provide for enshrining in the Constitution the Cullen-Couture agreement which gives Quebec authority over the selection and administration of immigrants within its territory? Is he prepared to commit himself to tabling that formula?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member should abide by the strict rules of conduct that were issued by his Leader which say that before you ask a question or make an allegation you should know the facts—point number one.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

IMPLEMENTATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology. What has the Government done to formalize our recent commitment to ensure excellence in the area of science and technology?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is always gratifying to hear important questions asked in the House. Of course, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. I am sure she knows that the Prime Minister has placed a very great emphasis on science and technology.

Just recently an advisory board on science and technology, composed of distinguished Canadians, has been put together to provide advice on how the $4 billion the federal Government provides in research and development funds can be used to improve competitiveness. Secondly, just today, my colleague, the Minister of State for Science and Technology, signed in Vancouver with his provincial counterparts the first ever Canadian national science policy.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—BROADCASTING OF PUBLIC SERVICE ADVERTISEMENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. What is the Government's response to the latest outrageous asininity of the CTC which just rejected public service advertisements to be used in the battle against AIDS, advertisements which would save lives, but has now approved paid condom ads from American condom companies that cannot even advertise in the United States, on the basis that those condoms will not be used for casual sex?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member mentioned the CTC, I take it he was talking about the Canadian Telecast Committee. If that is the case, I would say to the Hon. Member, as I said in the House yesterday, that I hope second opinion would prevail and that people will reconsider the positions they have taken. The first television station that said it would accept those ads was MTX in Brandon, Manitoba, and they have been accepted by CJOH here in Ottawa. I understand that the CBC has given verbal approval but I do not know if all the conditions have been finalized yet. I also understand that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters is taking this issue before its next meeting.

I think people who have had to reconsider the entire public response to the AIDS question are doing so. I am of the mind that I will let them form that opinion themselves as they look at the issue more carefully.

URGENCY OF SITUATION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, is it not about time that the Government recognized that this kind of response to the anti-AIDS program is at least in large measure a result of an overly casual, cautious, half-hearted, under-funded and poorly co-ordinated program which lacks the kind of urgency we see in Australia and Great Britain? The need for such urgency was recognized by the House committee which demanded a far more intensive and better funded program than the one we have now. Is it not time the Government recognized the urgency of the AIDS situation and behaved accordingly?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have recognized the AIDS crisis in Canada. We have put money into it, we have an advertising program, and we have a national advisory committee composed of health care workers from all the provinces. We will be hosting the conference this week to which the Hon. Member has referred. We are involved internationally with the World Health Organization. We are doing research and supporting AIDS support groups in various cities. I know you will not give me the time to do so, Mr. Speaker, but I could go on. Obviously we are not casual about the issue.

GRAIN PRICES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week farmers learned that grain prices would be 20 per cent lower in the upcoming crop year. Farm groups like the Southern Alberta Agriculture Stability Action Committee say that farmers will not be able even to get credit to plant a crop this year unless the Government acts. Will the Minister give a commitment today that farmers will get at least the same returns this year as they got in the past crop year so that they may plant a crop, stay on the land, and keep their families together?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member was in the House yesterday or not but that very same question was posed to me by the Hon. Member for Prince Albert. To save the time of the House, I will refer my hon. friend to my answer of yesterday.

REQUEST FOR AGRI-BOND PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Minister is not giving a commitment in this regard. The Minister boasts of his $46 million program designed to take farmers off the land. I wonder if the Minister can say when he will bring in a low-interest rate agri-bond program designed to keep farmers on the land like the one the Prime Minister promised during the last General Election campaign. I wonder if the Minister could do that before he lifts the moratorium on Farm Credit Corporation foreclosures.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at no time did I ever boast about the Canadian Rural Transition Program. The Government simply responded as it has in the past to the wishes and needs of Canadian farmers. I think the program is working extremely well and I think we can take some satisfaction in the fact that the number of applications is much lower, perhaps even 50 per cent lower at this time than was expected.

As to interest rates, I would remind the Hon. Member that when he sat on this side of the House, the Government of which he was a part allowed interest rates to go from 9 per cent to 24 per cent and added an additional 2 per cent—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

STUDY OF EQUITY FINANCING

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister is aware that the scope of business decisions farmers can take to manage their agricultural resources properly is constrained by the long-term debt they carry. The Farm Credit Corporation has been studying for two years now the possibility of equity financing as one solution to this problem. Would the Minister indicate to the House whether or not the Farm Credit Corporation, by itself or with another institution, will offer equity financing as one solution to farmers' long-term debt problems?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question and I would like to acknowledge it. I fully understand and appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the farm finance problem. In addition to what we have already done, I am sure the Hon. Member will take some satisfaction in the fact that a federal, provincial and FCC task force is directing its attention to the very option of equity financing. It is my information that this task force will report to me by the end of this month. Personally, I would like to see that information made available not only to the farm leaders but also to the—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

REFUGEES

AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, 19 years ago Canada signed the United Nations Convention for Protection of Refugees, binding Canada to protect any person who comes to Canada claiming to be a refugee, and after we have examined him and found that he is a refugee, we must not cause him to be returned to the country he has fled, directly or indirectly. How then can the Minister justify the decision of the cabinet committee on social development that met on January 21 to amend the Immigration Act so that when a refugee comes to Canada he will be sent away without a chance to state his refugee claim?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to Cabinet documents and decisions. I do not think I have to respond because these are hypothetical questions.

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the signed report of that cabinet committee meeting, which I have in my hand, is not hypothetical. It is a recommendation by the Minister to that cabinet meeting.

ALLEGED CABINET COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, since that cabinet committee recommended removing those people in order to deny them access to the refugee claims system, and those are the words of the January 21 committee decision, how does the Minister dare put forward a law which also violates a Supreme Court of Canada ruling two years ago that anyone in Canada has a right to a fair hearing in Canada of his claim to be a refugee?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I said before in this House and elsewhere that I would introduce a Bill on the revision of refugee status at the appropriate time. I would urge the Hon. Member to wait until the Bill is introduced.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

FEMALE POSTINGS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the ridiculous RCMP policy concerning married couples in the Force. We learned today that the RCMP allowed an officer who is the daughter of a former Conservative cabinet Minister to be transferred closer to her husband while at the same time refusing similar transfer requests from five other female RCMP officers. Can the Minister explain this apparent double standard?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that Constable Temple, along with five other members of the RCMP, was transferred to headquarters financial duties to meet an urgent operational need. Coincidentally, Constable Temple and one other female member's marriage plans were accommodated in meeting this situation and I am advised that this is fully consistent with RCMP guidelines.

REQUEST THAT POLICY BE CHANGED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I hate to disagree with the Minister but, according to the RCMP, the daughter of the former cabinet Minister was transferred to Ottawa in conjunction with her forthcoming marriage. We agree with the decision to allow the wife of another officer to live with her husband. It was the right decision. What we disagree with is the fact that the same consideration of fairness and compassion was not applied to the other individuals involved.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister instruct the RCMP Commissioner to change its internal policy concerning married couples to ensure that fairness applies to all officers so as to ensure that where a request is made for married couples to live in the same locale, the request is met?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the specific incident the Hon. Member has raised I think I have answered that on the basis of the information provided to me by the RCMP. When the question was put to the Government the other day the President of the Treasury Board undertook to look into that particular policy issue and he is doing so. The Solicitor General is out of the country at the present time. I am sure that, consistent with the views of the Hon. Member, it will be looked at very seriously in that light.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO CREDIT CARD USERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Today the Bank of Canada set the prime rate at 7.28 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: That is exactly 5 per cent lower than it was when the Government took office.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Orlikow: Holders of department store credit cards are required to pay interest on their unpaid balance at a rate in excess of 28 per cent. Holders of gasoline credit cards are required to pay interest on their unpaid balance at a rate of 21 per cent. Will the Minister call in the management of these companies and instruct them it is time to stop ripping off their customers and reduce interest rates as their own interest rates have been reduced?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise and remind the House that this is the lowest interest rate since 1974.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member raises an important point concerning credit card interest rates. We are looking forward to the standing committee report. I also raised this question today with members of the Canadian Bankers Association and they will be responding shortly.

INTERVENTION BY ILLINOIS STATE TREASURER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the Minister that the interest rates I have talked about are still unacceptably high. Will he look at the action taken by the Treasurer of the State of Illinois who, in January, was able to get interest rates on VISA and MasterCard dropped from 19 per cent to less than 14 per cent by threatening to remove state funds from banks which were overcharging on credit cards? Will the Minister consider taking similar action with our banks which are overcharging their customers?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I gather that is one of many suggestions which the standing committee is looking at and I will respond when the committee reports.

TRANSPORT

OPERATIONS OF CANADIAN TRUCKING FIRMS IN UNITED STATES—EFFECT OF PROPOSED U.S. LEGISLATION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As he knows, there is now before the U.S. Senate a Bill which will allow the President to restrict operations of Canadian trucking firms in the U.S. This is an incredible action at a time when the Conservative Government has introduced Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 which will give U.S. truckers favourable entry to and operating privileges in the Canadian market. What does the Minister intend to do to redress this most prejudicial situation for Canadian trucking firms?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have no power to control what legislation is introduced into the U.S. Congress. That is a matter for members of the U.S. Congress, either Representatives in the House of Representatives or Senators in the Senate. They can introduce what legislation they like. However, we would naturally oppose, and put forward strong arguments to the U.S. administration asking them to oppose, any such legislation because we expect to have reciprocal rights there. We would then send into action our Secretary of State for External Affairs if that became necessary. I would even accompany him myself if I thought that might be of any help, and I hope it would.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Do you want the answer to this question or not? In the meantime I wrote—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister will—

Mr. Crosbie: I will just tell you about my letter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Papineau.

CANADA-U.S. MOTOR CARRIER CONSULTATIVE COMMITTEE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from the answer that the Government should have done its homework before introducing Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 to make sure that the U.S. Congress did not introduce that kind of legislation. The Government did not do its job.

I can suggest a solution. Is the Minister ready to upgrade the role of the Canada-U.S. Motor Carrier Consultative Committee to that of a body which could formally make policy recommendations to both national Governments as well as the states and provinces?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take that suggestion under advisement, as well as any other suggestions the Hon. Member has which will be helpful. I would certainly be pleased to have them. Surprised but pleased.

I have already written Mrs. Dole, the Transportation Secretary, in connection with legislation which I think was introduced in the Senate with an amendment which has to do with trucking fees which they are attempting to increase. I made a strong protest. She has protested to those in charge of the Bill. I hope that provision will be changed.

However, if the United States of America does not treat our truckers in a manner that we consider fair and equitable, we will do unto them as they have done to us, plus.

LYELL ISLAND—HAIDA CLAIM

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In a recent judgment regarding Meares Island, Mr. Justice Peter Seaton concluded that there are few imaginable aboriginal rights left in an area that is clear-cut. Would the Minister, who is the only Minister in this House with direct responsibility, tell the House what steps he is now prepared to take in support of the Haida people in their quest for recognition and affirmation of their aboriginal title and rights to Lyell Island?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the rights have been recognized. The comprehensive claim of the people has been recognized. We cannot, as the Hon. Member is fully aware, act unilaterally in providing those rights unless we have the Province of British Columbia with us. I hope, through discussions which I and my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, have had, to assist in the Lyell Island and Meares Island issue. However, we cannot act unilaterally. There is a recognized claim, but it cannot be fulfilled by the Canadian Government alone.

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO STOP LOGGING OPERATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister is aware, the Prime Minister personally contacted Premier Vander Zalm in recent days and requested an end to the dispute on Lyell Island. Since the only way that this can come about is for Ottawa and Victoria jointly to support a buy-out of the present logging interests, will the Minister commit himself today to use the tools at his disposal to stop the violation of the rights of the Haida nation on Lyell Island?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, has had discussions with the Province of British Columbia. I have pursued discussions with the former Minister responsible for the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs. If the Province of British Columbia is interested and will participate with the federal Government, we will certainly sit down.

Mr. Fulton: All we want is some money.

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member says that all they want is money. We hope that the Province of British Columbia would make an appropriate contribution to the purchase because it is also a responsibility of the provincial Government.

PRIVATIZATION

INQUIRY ABOUT SERVICES TO BE PRIVATIZED IN MINISTRY OF FORESTRY AND MINES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to get back to mapping and the possible privatization of certain federal services. In a release made public by Lavalin we learn that the president—indeed he confirms this in a release, and I quote—has begun discussions with Treasury Board and Bell officials to examine the terms under which certain federal services might be privatized. Yet the Government issued a press release last night denying any intention of privitazing the mapping services. Could the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines tell us what federal services of the Ministry of Forestry and Mines will be privatized?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, starting last Friday and with a media release last night we have made it very, very clear that none of those three agencies of the Government are for sale. They have not been for sale and they will not be put up for sale.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Minister of State for Privatization. Will the Minister of State stand in her place today and tell the House clearly that the Surveys and Mapping Services, the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing, and the Canadian Hydrographic Survey are not on her agenda, that they are no longer on her department's agenda Department, and that there is no intention to privatize them?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, the division referred to was never on my agenda or that of the Government.

CROWN CORPORATIONS

PRIVATIZATION OF FISHERIES PRODUCTS INTERNATIONAL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for privatization. If the federal Government is determined to privatize Fisheries Products International, why does it not do something innovative instead of simply dumping the company in the laps of people who want to make a quick buck? Will the Government consider innovative methods by which ownership and control of this company could be put in the hands of the fisheries workers and the fishing communities of Newfoundland, the people who are most interested in having stability in that industry?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, this is an example of the ancient ideology which we hear from across the House. That is exactly what we have done. We have put this into the hands of the private sector. It is being offered to individuals. There is an employee share ownership plan within the context of the offering. The people of Newfoundland are quite welcome to participate in this issue. That is exactly why we did it this way.

ACID RAIN—POSITION OF NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of the Environment had a meeting this morning with the Premier of Nova Scotia with regard to acid rain and the commitment of that province. How successful was he?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, needless to say, my meeting with Premier Buchanan was full and frank. I am glad to report to the Hon. Member and to the House as a whole that the Premier indicated to me a very strong predisposition on the part of his province to sign an agreement on acid rain with the federal Government. There are some technical ways in which he would hope the federal Government might assist the province to achieve its objectives. With that in mind, I will be working with my colleagues in the Cabinet in hopes that a resolution can be found.

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question in Question Period. A senior Member has asked for the right to have the floor. I recognize the Hon. Member for Bow River.

Ms. Copps: A senior Member?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSAL TO ACQUIRE ALBERTA RANCH LAND

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence. Does the Hon. Minister have anything to report on the matter of the Canadian Army and the O/H ranch land in the Kananaskis country west of Longview?

Ms. Copps: What is this about senior Members?

Mr. McKnight: He has 37 years of service to the Canadian people as an elected Member, Sheila.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, shortly before Question Period a statement was issued jointly by the owners of the O/H Ranch and the Canadian Forces Base in Calgary announcing that they had discontinued their discussions on the acquisition of that ranch and thanking the people who had come forward. However, they announced that they are looking for 8,000 to 10,000 acres in a 50-mile radius of Calgary so that the Canadian Forces Base will have some place to train in the future. They do not want to have to pull out of Calgary.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to give us a statement of the business the Government intends to propose to the House during Government Orders for the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly do that. Consistent with the meetings of the House Leaders and the agreement that was reached, we will proceed with Bill C-40 and Bill C-3 to be completed in all stages, as per the order.

On Monday we will have the trade debate. Next week we will have three opposition days and one government day. There have been some discussions with House Leaders with respect to the timing of the government order. However, I understand that we will be meeting this afternoon when we can perhaps firm up that order of business.

POINTS OF ORDER

CORRECTION OF EARLIER STATEMENT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to correct something I said. In referring to the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) I said he had served the Canadian people for 37 years as an elected Member. I believe it has been from 1940 to 1987. I apologize for my inaccuracy.

WORDS OF THANKS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Minister and to thank the Army for withdrawing from Kananaskis. It is wonderful to belong to a Government that listens to the people.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I rise on a real point of order. This is an abuse of the rules of the House. It is strictly an abuse of the rules of the House. I object to that. That is just baloney.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1986-87 (NO. 2)

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) had ten minutes remaining in her speech.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I had outlined a number of initiatives which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in the Budget. There is an allocation of $75 million per year for the next five years for cultural industries. I and the cultural industries were very pleased with these initiatives because they support policies and programs that we considered important.

However, these increases do not make up for the cuts made in 1985-86. These cut-backs include $75 million in the CBC; $10 million in CBC high-tech equipment; $1.5 million to the National Film Board; $1 million to the National Arts Centre; and $3.5 million for the Canada Council. Budgetary cut-backs for different cultural projects and programs amounted to $7 million. There are increased radio licence fees and other charges amounting to $22 million. These cut-backs total $121.5 million.

In addition, in 1987-88, the Government will place licence fees on telecommunications carriers through the CRTC. As well, in 1987-88, the Government will levy radio frequency fees on government agencies at the federal, provincial and eventually the municipal level. We are told that the Government expects to obtain $10 million from the latter and $6 million from the former. This has left the cultural and communications industry in Canada with losses of $137.5 million.

Let us examine the task force studies, the book tariff and the Budget for 1987. I was quite surprised that the Budget began with the elimination of the book tariff and the Christmas tree tax. A number of task forces and papers were initiated by the former Minister of Communications. They include the Task Force on Broadcasting at a cost of $2.8 million; the Task Force on the National Museums at a cost of $425,000; the Task Force on Funding of the Arts at a cost of $833,000; the Task Force on the Film Industry at a cost of $134,000; the Task Force on the National Arts Centre for $319,000; the Task Force on the Status of the Artist at a cost of $50,000. After we, the taxpayers, have laid out in excess of $4.5 million for all these task forces, what is the result? There has been no action. Added to these expenditures were the millions of dollars spent by the Nielsen task force which, according to the cultural community, were ineffectively, inefficiently and poorly spent. The very meagre consultative process that took place was a non-credible effort.

As well, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has tabled its studies and recommendations on federal museum policy and taxation and the arts. That committee recently had its forty-sixth meeting since November.

After spending that $4.5 million and using the committee's time, there has been absolutely no action taken from all of these studies, recommendations and consultations. There is nothing in the Budget of the Minister of Finance respecting the cultural industry. He even failed to indicate that there were representations on the upcoming tax reform. Why were these reports ignored by the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech? The Government does not believe in delivering on its promises.

Let us examine the book tariff. On June 6, 1986, a customs duty on certain English language books was imposed. Consequently, novels, works of fiction, some periodicals, publications to encourage enrolment in educational institutions outside Canada, and books of printed music reverted to being subject to the legislated duty at the rate of 10 per cent ad valorem under the most favoured nation tariff and the United Kingdom and Ireland tariff.

The amount of duty collected from June 6, 1986, to November 30, 1986, which is the date of the latest available statistics, was $11.142 million. Of the $11 million collected in duty, $9.741 million was collected from the United States; $979,000 was collected from the United Kingdom, which has nothing to do with shakes and shingles; $109,000 from Hong Kong; $85,000 from Japan; $47,000 from Italy, $44,000 from Belgium and Luxembourg; $37,000 from Spain; $14,000 from West Germany; $14,000 from Switzerland; $2,000 from France; and $1,000 from Ireland. The remaining $69,000 was collected from other countries. This shows the effectiveness of the reprisal against the American action on shakes and shingles.

Finally, after nine months and losses of up to $15 million to the fragile Canadian book publishing industry, the Tories have recognized the errors of their ways and in his February Budget the Minister of Finance removed the ill-conceived, regressive tax on reading. Certainly, the credit for the removal of this tariff must go to Canadian publishers, book sellers and readers who protested long and hard for the tariff's removal. I want to take this opportunity to thank the thousands of Canadians who wrote petitions to me and the House concerning this issue. I want to thank my colleagues for standing up day after day and reading those petitions into the record. The Minister finally saw the light, and I sincerely hope that the removal of this tariff is a clear message by the Government that Canadian cultural industries are not at risk in free trade negotiations.

It is interesting to consider what the Minister will do with the $11 million in new-found money? I am sure he expects to reduce his deficit, but I suggest that he find a way to repay the publishing industry and those who suffered as a result of this ill-conceived measure.

The Minister also found another $1.2 million in his Budget as a result of changing the procedure in reporting the taxes. The new requirement imposed by the Budget for businesses to remit source deductions on a twice-monthly basis will have a negative impact upon large theatres, museums, dance companies, orchestras, and publishing houses. This results in very poor business practice, with more administrative hassles for business, causing much more paperwork. In addition, this measure will squeeze some cultural industries which have uneven or seasonal revenue.

Let us consider the 1987 Estimates. The Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), in a news release on March 2, 1987, set out the increased amounts of resources to cultural agencies funded by the Government of Canada. The Minister demonstrated creative sleight of hand as the figures she uses are not limited to increases in parliamentary appropriations but include anticipated operating revenues of the individual cultural agencies, leading to the perception of great largess going to these key Canadian cultural agencies. The fact is that most will not even be covered by the inflation rate. It will mean cuts in staff and programs for many.

Let us examine the situation. The Minister's stated amount of increase for the CBC is $50 million, but the actual parliamentary appropriation is $11.6 million. The stated amount of increase for the Canada Council is $5 million, but the actual appropriation is $3.1 million. The stated amount of increase for Telefilm Canada is $3 million, but the actual parliamentary appropriation is $1.522 million. The stated amount of increase for the CRTC is $2 million, but the actual appropriation shows an increase to $2.276 million. The stated amount of increase for the National Film Board is $1 million, but the actual appropriation is $307,000. The stated amount of increase for the National Library is $1 million, but the actual appropriation is $159,000. The stated increase for the National Museums is $19 million, but the actual appropriation is $16.588 million. There was a stated increase of $2 million for the National Arts Centre, but there was actually a loss of $73,000 in the appropriations. The stated amount of increase for the Public Archives is $1 million, but the actual appropriation is $624,000. I hope the Minister found a new abacus to work out these figures.

I believe these figures show the reality of what the cultural agencies will receive.

Since you have signalled that my time has almost expired, let me conclude by saying that I have the deepest conviction that Canadians want to enjoy their environment and express themselves as Canadians. We have lots to say to the rest of the world through our own cultural and creative experiences. I would hope that we would find a way to ensure that those cultural industries would not be put in jeopardy by any action of the House, and every measure taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) to add to the increased protection and growth of these agencies, will be well received by all.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak to Bill C-40, an Act to provide borrowing authority, under which the Government is seeking an additional $3.6 billion borrowing authority for the 1986-87 budget and $24.3 billion for fiscal year 1988-89.

The first comment I want to make is that, thanks to our sound and well-advised administration, we did manage to reduce the Government's annual need to borrow. When the 1984-85 Budget was tabled the deficit stood at $38.3 billion. I refer you to page 19 of the February Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The following year, 1985-86, again as a result of our sound administration, the annual deficit dropped from $38.3 billion to $34.4 billion. With the Budget closing at the end of this month we will again post a deficit, but this time down to $32 billion. Next year, due to the elimination of a number of useless expenditures rather than through huge tax increases, we expect to table a Budget of $29.3 billion. A comparison indicates that the financial requirements of the Government over the four years ending in 1987-88 have declined sharply. By financial requirements I mean borrowing needs which are not necessarily the same figures and which do not tally with the deficit figures because the Government has access to certain pension funds and collects money which was owing. This accounts for the gap between the financial requirements and the deficit of the Government.

The financial requirements amounted to $29.8 billion in 1984-85, and to $30.3 billion the following year. In 1986-87, the year about to end, the financial requirements were reduced by $6 billion through sound administration, and we expect they will continue to decline next year, down to $21.3 billion, the lowest level of Government financial requirements in the past six years.

Canadian taxpayers must be made to understand that the effect of Government decreasing financial requirements is a significant drop in interest levels, to the extent that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has acknowledged this achievement by the Government which every Canadian man or woman who has to borrow can appreciate. Earlier this afternoon the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North told the House that the Bank of Canada prime rate was down to 7.28 per cent, lowest ever since 1974. I want to thank my colleague from Winnipeg North because, even though he is a socialist, in some cases he can read figures when they are not too complicated.

Madam Speaker, for the benefit of all Canadians, it might be a good idea to explain what we intend to do with the borrowed money. This morning the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) raked us over the coals about the use of these funds. Out of budgetary appropriations totalling $122 billion, $57 billion of the expenditures will be in the form of small cut-backs for poorer Canadians. We are going to allocate $57 billion to social affairs, unemployment insurance, youth, the elderly, and needy Canadians. And another, in fact the greater part of our Budget, thanks to the poor management of the previous Liberal Government, will be allocated, all $28 billion, to servicing the national debt, a cumulative deficit of about $300 billion.

Meanwhile, Madam Speaker, the Liberal Party's big guns have been criticizing our fiscal policy and the message we gave Canadians in February, and today they are criticizing our borrowing requirements. One minute they ask us to send cheques to the neediest in this country and the next, they are up in arms about our borrowing authority Bill and the $24 billion involved.

I was listening to the Official Opposition's finance critic, a colleague from Quebec, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). I would like to ask him why his assessment of our Budget is so different from the standards he should be applying, as a former director and president of one of Quebec's major banks. It seems to me that he of all people should be far more perceptive in his reactions to the Budget and Budget speech. He is clearly reacting in a very partisan manner. That seems to be his style since he came back to politics. The Hon. Member was always very good at making a profit for his employers when he was in the private sector, but when he entered politics and became a member of provincial and federal cabinets, he became an expert at making deficits. We saw this when he was with the Quebec Government and we see it today. He has been consistently negative about this Budget.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member, since he is criticizing our message, why, as a Quebecer, he did not rise in the House when we debated the plan to set up an international banking centre in Montreal? I was sitting on the same committee as the Hon. Member, and I did not see him intervene in any significant way to urge that an international banking centre be established in Montreal. His silence was heard across the country. Perhaps his political ambition extends beyond the job of lieutenant to the present Leader of the Liberal Party. Who knows, Madam Speaker.

I also would like to know why the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was so careful to say nothing about the F-18, a one-billion-dollar contract that is to be administered in the province of Quebec. We never got a clear and straightforward statement from him on this question.

And since he is such a good critic of our Budget, I would also like to ask him why, except when he had some specific question in mind, he never referred to our policy to provide, on a long-term basis, for a viable shipbuilding industry in the province of Quebec.

Notwithstanding a number of problems which many experts thought it would be impossible to resolve, our Government has been able to revive the shipbuilding industry in the province of Quebec and I am referring to the shipyards of Versatile Vickers, those in Sorel and those in my own riding in Lauzon, the former Davie shipyards now being managed by Marine Industries. Why did we never hear the Hon. Member from Laval-des-Rapides on a project that is having an economic impact worth over one billion dollars on the three shipyards I referred to?

I would have liked to have heard the Hon. Member comment on the appropriateness of the Government's decision to award a $135 billion contract to Marine Industries for the construction of a second ferry, to award two contracts for refitting some of our destroyers and to award a $196 billion contract to Lauzon for building one and a half frigates, which adds up to $471 billion in federal contracts for Quebec. I would have liked to have heard him voice his support for the two additional $70-billion contracts for repairs to two other Canadian Navy ships. I would have liked to have heard him give his opinion also on the recent financial implication, to the tune of $35 million, of the Canadian Government, the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, to allow for the transaction between Marine Industries and the Lévis shipyards. I would also have liked to have heard his comments on the approval by the Canadian Government of a $50-million dollar investment, $30 million for the development of additional capital investments and $20 million for specialization. Also, $50 million were given by the Quebec Government to modernize the three shipyards I just mentioned.

I would also have liked to have heard him express concern for the finalization of the transaction between Marine Industries and the Government of Canada and the former Versatile shipyards, for which the two governments, Quebec and Ottawa, decided to guarantee $50 million each with respect to the deficit over the next two years.

And, finally, I would have liked him to get involved on the awarding of another $196-million contract for an additional frigate and a half to the Sorel yards, for a grand total of $1.22 billion. But the senior Liberal spokesman for the Province of Quebec never showed any concern for those matters.

I would also have liked the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) to share his views with us, since he can hardly express the views of his party, because he would have had one opinion, that of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) who is against bilateral talks with the United States. He would also have had another opinion, that of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), who is for bilateral talks with the Americans, while the critic, who sits to the right of the Leader of the Liberal Party, has not yet committed himself on a matter of such significance for this country and for the Province of Quebec. I say for this country because we export $95 billion worth of goods to the United States, Madam Speaker. This accounts for 30 per cent of our jobs. And the talks are aimed, first at keeping that market, and second at developing it so that we can sell more Canadian goods and services to those 240 million Americans. We have not heard him. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has remained silent on that matter.

I will hurry. I would have liked to have heard him, Madam Speaker, on the lumber issue. He remained silent.

I would have liked to have heard him about Bill C-22, which deals with the drug industry and the location in Montreal of high-technology industries, industries that create plenty of jobs, industries that, since the announcement of our Bill, have decided to invest $700 million in the City of Montreal, Madam Speaker. Fifty per cent of the pharmaceutical companies' new investments will be in the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, but we never heard anything from the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, who is currently dabbling at launching the Quebec federal organization for the next election. He would do better to make representations here in this House and do his share to improve the lot of Canadians.

Madam Speaker, I will also add a few comments on the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition and perhaps even on his statements. It is not by accident that I began with the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides. The Leader of the Opposition has tried to voice a few comments on the budget speech and our borrowing needs. I should say to the Liberal Leader that before taking position on a budget of so many billions, that is $122 billion, and before giving us some advice on the matter, I wonder if it would not be advisable for him to look after the $5 million deficit which his party is unable to pay back week after week, month after month. I think that would be more important. And when the Liberal Leader is telling us that we are overburdening Canadian taxpayers, he should realize he is living in a democratic system and ask himself how it will be if ever he returns to power 40 years from now? What would be the situation if we listened to his philosophy because today, two years or maybe two years and a half before the next federal election, he is already bearing down on his candidates asking them to collect funds and send 50 per cent to the national organization, something which has never been done before within the Liberal Party. If he is now taxing his own candidates, how will he be taxing the Canadian people later?

Finally, before I hear him give us some further advice, he who was elected to this House in 1962 and appointed minister in 1965, I am still referring to the current leader of the Liberal Party, who was a member of a Government responsible for the $240 billion debt with which Canadian are faced, I will tell him that it is to pay this debt and the interests on this debt that today we have to adopt a legislation calling for $24 billion in borrowing authority. This is partly due to the incompetence of this Liberal Leader who sat in the House for 20 years and did absolutely nothing except increase our indebtedness year after year.

Finally, Madam Speaker, before listening to the negative comments of the Leader of the Liberal Party on our legislation, I think he would be well advised to check the position of the rank and file of his own Party concerning the cruise missile issue and the stand taken at its last convention in November 1986. At that convention, his Party proposed an extraordinary child care project which would cost Canadian taxpayers $11.2 billion a year, Madam Speaker.

Before he starts commenting on our budget, I should like him to tell us how he is planning to finance his own Party's proposal of a child care system which would cost Canadians $11.2 billion a year; I should like him also to explain to the House how he is planning to set up a guaranteed income program for all Canadians. Such programs are good—socialists are experts at that—but I think it is a good idea first to find out how much they will cost. I should like, therefore, the Leader of the Liberal Party to explain to us how he is planning to finance this new guaranteed income concept. I should like him to tell us in his masterly fashion what costs are associated with the recommendations made at the November 1986 Liberal convention.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I should like to comment on some of the statements made by the Leader of the Socialist Party concerning our legislative program and our economic message of February 1987. First of all, before speaking of a country's finance, the leader of the Socialist Party should explain to us why the financing of his own Party is questioned in a decision rendered in July 1986 by Hon. Justice John White, of the Supreme Court of Ontario, indicating that the fund obtained by the unions under the Rand Formula—the Rand Formula compels employers to collect money every week from the pay cheques of unionized and non-unionized employees alike. But all these contributions received from the union are used to enrich the Socialist Party. But Mr. Justice White ruled that the union could not use for purposes other than those of the union the amounts thus collected by the unions by payroll deductions of non-unionized employees.

I mentioned this in the House on a number of occasions, Madam Speaker, and Socialists sitting on opposite benches should listen to me first and tell me where they stand on this particular issue, and if they want to enlighten us about the budget of our Government, they should explain first to the Canadian public why they use these funds illegally obtained to finance their own Party.

Since they keep bragging about the honesty and the openness of their Party, I should like them to tell me why—and here I quote the Minister of Justice who directed in vain this question to the Leader of the Socialist Party—they are using stamps provided by Parliament, meaning Canadian taxpayers' money, to send their political literature to the St-John-East Riding in Newfoundland. On this issue, again, the Leader of the Socialist Party did not know what to say. Therefore, before he starts questioning our budget, I should like him to explain his position on this issue.

Finally, I would like to say something to socialists throughout the world and ask them whether they are aware of the fact that the leader of the socialist party in this House gets $101,700 a year and that he has not only refused to accept the pay cut agreed to by the Prime Minister of Canada and the Cabinet Ministers of this Conservative Government but he has also negotiated for a chauffeur and a car.

Before trying to tell us what to do, and I understand that my time is running short, Madam Speaker, they should think about those matters and about how they use Government services improperly. They are very silent today, which is surprising. They should explain their position to us and think about the White ruling and about Professor Lavigne, who discovered the NDP financing scandal. Then, they can comment on our budget. For all these reasons, Madam Speaker, I hope that the Members of this House will support this borrowing authority bill so that the neediest people in Canada, whom we are always trying to protect, will be able to receive their money in good time.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to correct an impression which the Hon. Member may have left with anybody who happens to read a copy of his speech. The decision of Mr. Justice White that the Member talks about was not a decision regarding the use of union dues for political contributions, it was a decision which strikes at the ability of unions to do almost anything for their members. If that decision is carried to its logical conclusion, unions would be precluded from urging their members to support a better pension plan, or from urging their members to defend the universal medicare or hospital insurance plan. That is what that decision would result in. The unions are appealing that decision. They are quite hopeful, as are we, that if the decision reaches the Supreme Court, it will reject that decision.

Insofar as unions contributing to political Parties are concerned, whether it be our Party or any other, I wish to make it clear to the Hon. Member, in case he is not aware, that every union which makes a contribution on the part of its members to the New Democratic Party gives every member the opportunity to notify the treasurer of the union that he or she does not wish a contribution made to our Party on his or her behalf. That is a great deal more than offered the shareholders of banks, insurance companies, or any of the large corporations which contribute to the Liberal or Conservative Parties. They do not ask their shareholders whether they wish to make a contribution, they just do it. If the Hon. Member wishes to look for justice, that is where he should look.

I rose because during the course of his speech, the Hon. Member referred to a question I asked the Hon. Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) during Question Period. I pointed out, and I would not wish to hide it even if I could, that the prime rate of interest as established by the Bank of Canada has come down 5 percentage points from the day that this Government took office until today.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: Someone says "hear, hear", and I think it is great. I hope that the Hon. Member who spoke would join with me in asking the Minister to call in the management of the department stores that are charging their customers over 28 per cent interest on the unpaid balance of their credit cards, and to call in the management of the gasoline companies—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member may wish to leave the 30 seconds that are left to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) to conclude.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, first, I must congratulate my colleague for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for his intervention as concerns the cost of credit for Canadian consumers. He has shown a lot of interest in this matter. Indeed, it is one of his few successes, but we have to give him credit for it. I would like to congratulate him for having recognized a second time in this House that, under our Government, since September, 1984, interest rates have gone down by 5 per cent. Third, I also want to congratulate him on being the first Member of the socialist party to speak publicly in this House of the ruling made by Judge White about the use of payroll deductions under the Rand formula for employees who are not members of a union, and I did say to the House—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I very much regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 3:45 p.m., pursuant to the order made Tuesday, March 10, 1987, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the matter now before the House.

The debate on Bill C-40 is therefore adjourned.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Thursday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Miss MacDonald that Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act, be read a third time and passed.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my understanding that Bill C-3 would come to an end at this time and that there would be an opportunity later this day to call for a vote. I want it to be clear that there will be a vote on this Bill today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member is correct. The question will be put at 4.45 p.m. on Bill C-40, and on Bill C-3, as per unanimous consent earlier this week.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise for the third time to address Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act. I have attempted to bring to the attention of the House some of the serious concerns that are found in this not too well conceived piece of legislation.

To return to the issue and reset the stage, it would be useful to set the context of the administrative actions which take place under the Radio Act and relate to this amendment. We are talking about an amendment to the question of charging fees for radio licences, that is, the licences which are authorized and given to users of various types of radio and dispatch services for police, ambulance, fire, taxis, cement trucks, et cetera. It also includes paging services, cellular radio, microwave radio, that is, transmission of data and broadcasting information from city to city, satellites, and radio locations. In other words, radar, and all those things.

Mr. Gordon of the Department of Communications outlined to the Senate committee the issues covered by this particular Bill. He notes that the costs of spectrum management are recovered from users through licence fees.

In 1984, and subsequently in the spring of 1985, the Government announced that it intended that the cost of these services be recovered from the licence users. Accordingly, in the fall of 1984, the fees for licences were significantly increased, and they are now at a level where they cover all of the costs including departmental overhead for these activities of the spectrum. It is important to note that all the activities presently are covered. There is no cost to the Government. Therefore, what we are looking at is a new way to tax the users of radio services, and to find offsetting funds that go to the general consolidated revenues of the Government. It is another way for the Minister to take tax money out of the pockets of users of this service, who for many years have not had to pay this fee.

There is one concern, with which I would agree, in the thinking of the ministry and the Minister in the placing of this tax, and that is with respect to competition in the private sector. By placing private users and Government users on the same footing, Bill C-3 will reduce one advantage previously enjoyed by Government, namely, the exemption from radio licence fees. For example, when a Crown corporation like Petro-Canada communicates through radio frequencies with its drilling rigs, the corporation will not be assessed licence fees on the same basis as would a private oil company, such as Texaco or Shell. I think that is only fair. Our legislative committee was told by Cantel Inc. that the Crown corporation known as AGT, Alberta Government Telephones, has been exempt to date from paying licence fees with respect to its cellular telephone operation. Yet private firms competing with the Alberta Government Telephones in the same cellular telephone market have been paying radio licence fees. Bill C-3 will eliminate this particular cost advantage enjoyed by Crown companies like AGT. I think that is significant.

The other aspect is that there are no caps on the fees to be charged. As I said, we have just found a new way to tax and pay off the deficit. I do not think this is the fairest way of doing that. The Government tells us that the purpose of Bill C-3 is to allow full recovery of the costs incurred by the Department of Communications in monitoring the spectrum. There is nothing in this Bill which provides that the Government is limited to the recovery of those costs, and no more. Given the track record of this Government for charging fees at every opportunity, it remains to be seen if this Bill will prove to be more than a cost recovery vehicle.

Further, although the Government indicates that the fees to be charged Government users under this Bill will be calculated on the same basis as the fees already assessed to private users, I wish to point out that Bill C-3 does not so provide. Rather, the drafters of Bill C-3 seem content to allow the regulations to stipulate that the fee assessment will be the same. This means that even if Bill C-3 is passed, there is no absolute assurance that Government and private sector users of the spectrum will be assessed licence fees calculated on the same basis, for the Government could still amend the regulations to require one class of user, be it Government or private sector, to pay higher fees. I think that is a real conundrum. Shame. I can only hope, therefore, that the Government will ensure that the regulations are consistent to ensure this equality of treatment of which it is so proud. The Government seems also, to want to use this as a theory for the Bill.

Let us see what the provincial Governments have to say. We are talking about a Government that has wonderful relations with all the provinces, with a new wonderful dialogue going. Do provincial Governments agree with the federal Government on this cost recovery equal payment procedure? I am glad that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister is listening so carefully. Maybe she would like to propose an amendment before I get through.

Mrs. Mailly: I cannot speak again.

Mrs. Finestone: Listen carefully to what provincial counterparts have had to say. Of the provinces which have written to the legislative committee on Bill C-3, virtually all are opposed to the enactment of this Bill. They are opposed. They do not like it and they do not think the Government should do this. By way of an example, permit me to quote from a letter dated January 29, 1987—I think that is a recent enough date to shake Hon. Members' memories—forwarded by the Hon. Richard French, Minister of Communications of Quebec, my own province. Mr. French makes known his objection to Bill C-3 in the following terms. He writes to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald).

"Dear Madam:

This is further to my letter of September 19 of this year in which I acknowledged your letter stating your Government's intention to recover the cost of spectrum management by imposing fees on all licence holders. I would now like to inform you of my position on this question.

To Quebec, the proposed legislation means basically a transfer of the federal tax burden to the provinces, without any improvement in the services offered to users. The Quebec Minister of Communications estimates that radio licence fees will cost Government agencies and Hydro-Québec approximately one million dollars.

For this reason we ask that the status quo be maintained and that the provinces remain exempted from radio licence fees.

I remain, Yours very truly, . . . "

The letter is signed by the Minister, Mr. French.

It is a fact that licence fees will have quite a substantial impact on Quebec, and I think all Quebecers should be aware that this new legislation will impose an additional tax burden on the people of that province. For Government departments such as the Department of Public Works, the cost will be $7,000; for the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, $119,666; for the Department of the Environment, $12,691; for Hydro-Québec, $437,352; for the Department of Justice, $100,000; for the Department of Recreation, Fish and Game, $80,913; for the Department of Communications, $15,000; for the Civil Defence Board,—and isn't that an essential service, Madam Speaker?—$103,710; the Highways Board, $5,600; the Department of Transport, $77,000; the Olympic Facilities Board, $8,000; the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, $9,000; the Montreal Convention Centre Corporation, $2,200, and others, $3,666, which adds up to a little under one million dollars. Don't you think that is a bit much? And it means they will have to find a way to get the money out of their own budget. With the cutbacks in transfer payments and all other kinds of restrictions, I think it is going to be very hard for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard-D. Lévesque, to make ends meet. But what can we do? It is a federal decision.

[English]

The Province of Saskatchewan objects to the passage of Bill C-3 on the grounds that it would amount to the federal Government taxing the provincial Governments. In a letter to the current Minister of Communications for Canada dated November 3, 1986, the Hon. Gary Lane, Minister of Communications for Saskatchewan wrote:

Dear Ms. MacDonald:

I am writing in response to your letter of August 13, 1986, in which you confirm the intention to eliminate radio license fee exemptions for Provincial Governments and Crown agents.

While I do appreciate advance notice of your Department's intention, I must respond by stating that the Government of Saskatchewan is opposed to such a gesture by the Federal Government, a gesture which nets approximately $1 million from Saskatchewan.

Isn't the province having some financial problems? This will certainly help.

As you are aware, Saskatchewan is not a participant in the Reciprocal Taxation Agreements. Our non-participation stems from the debate surrounding the taxation of Governments by other Governments. While radio license fees are not taxes, similar arguments about Governments charging fees to each other can be invoked.

I hope the Government resolves that problem when it talks to the province.

While deficit reduction is an important endeavour, shifting the deficit onto a different level of Government is not a true solution to the problem. This is especially true when the intended solution will likely lead to an increased administrative effort for both levels of Government. Surely it would be better to reduce the bureaucracy in this country rather than find yet another way to add to it.

I would like to say that your Department's intention seems contrary to the spirit that has led to many instances of the provinces and the federal Government working in harmony together. Removing the established Provincial fee exemptions is hardly in keeping with the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation.

With this letter, I wish to put the Government of Saskatchewan on record as being opposed to your stated intentions on this matter.

I cannot lend support nor comply with any plan to collect radio licence fees from this or any other province.

• (1600)

Let us see what the figures are, and I would hope that there has been no over-expectation reflected in the Minister's calculations for Saskatchewan. I would say that the Minister's figures are in line because the major amounts will be collected from the department of northern Saskatchewan which will pay $2,705. The Departments of Parks, Tourism and Renewal Resources will pay $142,728, Energy and Mines will pay $1,606, Highways and Transportation will pay $60,944; the Department of Education will pay $7,262 and Government Services will pay $1,661. I see that the Department of Education will be paying as well. Today's youth have so many problems that we need every cent possible for education at the provincial level. I do not like to see additional moneys taken from the educational envelope of any Government. The Department of Justice will pay $4,282, the Highway Traffic Board will pay $4,155; Supply and Services will pay $1,012; Communications will pay $1,276 and others will pay $4,690 for a grand total of $232,321. The Saskatchewan Power Corporation will pay $59,445; forest products will pay $1,662 and the telecommunications network will pay $645,522. I hope the people of Saskatchewan will not have their rates raised but it looks like they will.

Let us go on to see what Prince Edward Island had to say. Everyone from coast to coast loves the Tories. The Minister responsible for communications for the Province of Prince Edward Island made the same point in his letter of December 16, 1986, to Mr. Andre Reny, Clerk of the Senate Committee on Transportation and Communications. The letter reads:

Your telex to Premier Ghiz regarding provincial representation on Bill C-3 "An Act to Amend the Radio Act" has been passed to me for reply.

The provincial government will not be making representation in person to the Standing Committee; however, I wish to place on record the contents of a letter I earlier sent to the Minister of Communications, Hon. Flora MacDonald, on the proposal of the Government of Canada to remove radio license fee exemptions for provincial governments and Crown Agencies and the preferential fee treatment currently afforded municipalities.

We have now heard the word "municipalities" for the first time. I know the Minister has promised faithfully that municipalities will not be charged for now. The letter to which the Minister referred reads as follows:

"I am in receipt of your letter dated August 13, 1986, advising me of your government's intention to remove the radio license fee exemptions for provincial government and Crown Agencies and the preferential fee treatment currently afforded municipalities effective April 1, 1987.

Since receiving your letter, officials in my Department have held discussions with both their counterparts in the other Atlantic Provinces and officials in your Department in an attempt to determine the full impact to this Province and Region of this proposed action by your government. The financial impact of the policy change on this Province appears to be substantial—i.e. $22,874 for Provincial Government departments and $2,169 for Municipalities annually.

I suppose they do not know that municipalities will not be taxed, according to the Minister.

Mrs. Mailly: They are being taxed, though, they just won't be increased.

Mrs. Finestone: There will be no increases? I see. They still fall under preferential treatment. The letter goes on:

I appreciate the desire of the Federal Government to introduce deficit reducing measures; however, control of the frequency spectrum is clearly a federal responsibility and the costs of managing it are a federal responsibility as well.

The Federal Government chose to exempt provincial governments for paying fees and municipal governments from paying full fees and, in so doing, it accepted those costs as its responsibility. As Minister Responsible for Communications, I object to the federal proposal to impose them now on provincial and municipal tax payers.

I accept the need for licensing; however, provincial and municipal governments provide an essential service to their respective citizens through the radio communications systems. I do not accept, therefore, that the proposed fees should be imposed thus transferring a financial burden from the Federal Government to provincial and municipal governments.

On behalf of the Government of Prince Edward Island, I urge you to reconsider your proposal respecting radio license fees."

In conclusion, I want to stress in the strongest terms the concern of the Government of Prince Edward Island over this latest intention of the Government of Canada to transfer financial burden from the federal government to the Regions or Provinces.

I think that theme is consistent across the land.

I have here another letter, from the Government of Newfoundland which has added its objection to the passage of Bill C-3. It is dated December 12. The Government of Newfoundland and Labrador has stated the following:

While we do not wish to appear before the Committee, on behalf of the Government of Newfoundland I wish to express my objection, in principle, to Bill C-3, "An Act to Amend the Radio Act".

By itself this initiative has relatively little financial impact on our Province. However, coupled with other Federal initiatives which have also transferred some degree of financial burden to the Province, the impact is significant.

That letter is signed by James Russell, a Minister in the Government of Newfoundland.

In both Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, the impact of this Bill will be important because these are the regions of Canada with economic and unemployment problems. The Government's promise of jobs, jobs, jobs has not been kept in that part of our land. It is strange that our actions do not always follow the intent of our words.

In the Province of Newfoundland, the Department of Justice will be paying $12,498; the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador will be paying $15,036; the Department of Education will be paying $1,064; Transportation will be paying $10,026; Mines and Energy will be paying $2,217; Culture and Recreation will be paying $6,458 and others will be paying $606, for a total of $47,905. The hydro company will pay an additional cost of $25,296. We are talking about a fair amount of money.

In Prince Edward Island, the Department of Highways and Public Works will be paying $9,484; Community Affairs will be paying $2,008; the Department of Agriculture will be paying $2,720 and the Department of Education will be paying $7,000. I would like to know why that fee is so high. I would strongly recommend that the Minister of Education in Prince Edward Island re-check that figure. It seems to be way out of line compared to all the other charges to provincial education departments. I alert the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government of Prince Edward Island to that figure and would ask them to check it out.

Representatives of the Department of Transportation of the Province of New Brunswick appeared before the House legislative committee on Bill C-3 with a very interesting and different complaint. The Hon. Robert McCready, Minister of Communications for New Brunswick, appeared before the Senate Committee on the same matter. New Brunswick advised that it has recently constructed a province-wide communications network which would be in part used for emergency communications. This was done at the federal Government's suggestion and the federal Government made significant capital contributions to its construction. Bill C-3 would require New Brunswick to pay radio licence fees to operate this service. New Brunswick views this as being a penalty for having responded to the important federal initiative of setting up emergency-measure operations. It is strange that when the Government asked them to set these operations up it did not indicate that it would tax them in this way.

New Brunswick also makes the point that the greatest part of the radio licences required by the province are used to ensure the safety and well-being of its residents. New Brunswick advises that radio licences used by its Department of Justice are for the provincial highway patrol. Its Department of Transportation uses radio frequencies for highway construction and maintenance. Its Department of Natural Resources needs radio frequencies for the maintenance of forests and wildlife.

The point is that the Province of New Brunswick, as an entity, is not the user which benefits from the use of radio frequencies. It is the residents of the province who are the beneficiaries. Those people already pay taxes and the cost of the radio spectrum management is already covered in those taxes. This is their major complaint. They say this is a shift of the tax burden from the federal Government to the provincial Government and it is unacceptable. They are echoing once again what I have read into the record from all other provinces.

They say the co-operation of the Department of Communications in providing detailed information is appreciated. The Minister of Communications confirmed the Government's intentions concerning this matter in a letter to the provincial Minister. That Minister is very concerned with the increasing trend by Government towards cost recovery as a budget control measure. He feels this is governed in general by the rationale that if a service exists for the benefit of a particular user, then the appropriateness of having that user pay in part or in whole for the cost of providing the service can be considered. If a particular user cannot be identified, efforts are directed towards controlling increases in the cost of providing the service. It is at times difficult to determine the particular user for whom a service exists, therefore you cannot target where the fee is going. That Minister feels very strongly that we should not be asking his province to pay a licence fee.

The federal Department of Communications apparently identified the provincial Government as the user of the service represented by the radio licence. However, the greatest part of the radio licences required by the province are used to ensure the safety and well-being of its residents. He refers to emergency systems which are in the interests of all Canadians. He feels the imposition of a user-fee reflecting this rationale amounts to an unacceptable tax transfer from the federal Government to the provincial Government. The province feels this is unfair and it cannot support Bill C-3. The provincial Government urges the Minister to exercise every effort to have this Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Caldwell: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I do not want to interrupt the Hon. Member's speech but she is reading from a lot of letters and I know she is running out of time. I hope she has the opportunity to read into the record letters from CNCP, Bell Canada, and the radio operators. I was afraid she might run out of time before she got to those.

Mrs. Finestone: I would like to assure my hon. friend that I intend to refer to the joy of the private sector over this particular Bill. I just thought I should point to the contrast between the federal and provincial Governments, given the great friendship which is manifested between them.

I would like to point out why I am going to read these figures into the record. In the course of our debate on this Bill there has been some question concerning the figures and the fact that they are different depending on their source. Once the figures are available they can be quickly and easily verified in this public forum of Parliament. The figures for New Brunswick are as follows. The Department of Natural Resources, $35,000; the Department of Transportation, $119,440; Department of Agriculture, $3,400; Tourism, $3,787; Health, $12,805; Justice, $24,016; Municipal Affairs, $6,027; Supply and Services, $1,138; and "Other", $838, for a total of $206,785. In addition, the New Brunswick Electric Power Commission will pay $26,108, for a grand total of $232,888.

The same holds true for the other provinces. The passage of Bill C-3 will result in almost $1 million in extra expense for the Province of Quebec. The provincial Minister of Justice will be assessed $100,000. Asking provincial taxpayers to pay for radio licence fees is like robbing Peter to pay Paul. The federal Government is simply shifting the tax burden to the provinces, but it is the taxpayer who will pay the burden of the new fee.

I would like to look at Ontario. The Hon. Ed Fulton, Minister of Communications, also opposes passage of the Bill. He wrote his federal counterpart on February 9, 1987, and said that he urges the Government to reconsider removal of the radio licence fee exemption for provincial Governments and Crown agencies. He says if the Bill is passed in its present form steps should be taken to minimize its adverse effect on public services. While he understands the Government's desire to place such services on a user-pay basis, the use of the radio spectrum by Ontario government users is not revenue-producing. It is used to provide essential services to the public, including emergency services. The reasoning which has led the Government to support the exemption of municipalities from the fee requirement is fully applicable to those similar services provided by provincial Governments. He recognizes there is a need to address the anomalies created when operations in one jurisdiction pay for services while similar operations in another do not, when Crown corporations offering services in competition with the private sector are exempt from fees paid by their competitors. Even Ontario feels that where there is competition it is not a bad idea, which is what I said earlier. I felt that was fair in that instance. Mr. Fulton points out that it should be possible to deal with those few major anomalies without affecting the whole spectrum of public service.

The proposed fees will have a substantial impact on the telecommunication budgets of provincial government programs providing important services. In some cases this will amount to 10 per cent of the budget. Total cost to the Government of Ontario is expected to amount to nearly $1.4 million. If the Bill is passed in its present form he urges ministry officials to meet with their opposite numbers in the provinces to discuss issues raised by the current fee structure and consider alterations. He also urges that implementation of the Act be delayed until such discussions have taken place. We are not doing that because we do not need any more dialogue. We have had plenty. However, Mr. Fulton feels that federal-provincial co-operation should serve to minimize the impact of these changes to the public benefit if that dialogue is entered into.

Mr. Caldwell: CNCP.

Mrs. Finestone: I did it and you were not here.

Mr. Caldwell: No, you did not.

Mrs. Finestone: I did not do that? Well, they are in here somewhere, Jim, don't worry.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), on a point of order.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I simply want to say to the Hon. Member that pay as you go is not such a bad idea.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, that is a good point. Thank you.

And now for the Government of Manitoba.

[English]

Is it not nice? We are going right across the country and no one agrees with the Government. That is normal.

In a letter dated February 10, 1987, that Government pointed out it is concerned with the public emergency support services, such as those related to fire fighting and emergency preparations, and that it is required to restrict access to the radio spectrum or strain its limited budgets in order to pay the new radio licence fees. That is very serious. If they are going to put people's lives in jeopardy or cause serious concerns, I suggest that a good look and more conversation might be in order.

According to the Manitoba Government, Canada will be less well prepared in times of need if agents of Her Majesty, which are using the radio spectrum for safety, emergency preparedness or rescue services, are charged licence fees on the same basis as commercial undertakings.

I have a fairly lengthy letter to Russell MacLellan, M.P., Chairman of the Legislative Committee, from the Hon. Gary Doer. It reads:

I would like to bring to your attention this Government's concerns with respect to the amendment to the Radio Act proposed in Bill C-3.

This Bill will have the effect of imposing new costs on taxpayers and telecommunications users in this Province. We estimate the total impact to be in the neighbourhood of three-quarters of a million dollars, based on current rate schedules.

There has been no consultation with provincial governments before tabling this bill, even though its purpose is to effect a cost transfer to provincial agencies for services previously provided cost-free by the federal Department of Communications.

The imposition of radio license fees on Crown agencies will create financial barriers to the installation of the most effective and flexible communications facilities for public services operated by government departments and Crown agencies.

The safety of any number of public services could be compromised by the need to limit the use of radio services in order to keep expenditures for access to the radio spectrum within budgetary limits. Of greatest concern is the fact that public emergency support services, particularly those related to fire fighting and emergency preparedness will be required to restrict access to the radio spectrum and/or tax their limited budgets to pay license fees.

The federal Minister of Communications has made temporary commitments to limit the application of license fee regulations to municipal services.

However, this exemption is not permanent, and does not cover a number of public safety and emergency services such as fire and rescue services operated by northern communities too small to have municipal status, forest fire fighting equipment operated by provincial departments of Natural Resources, or services used by provincial Emergency Measures Organizations. Canada will be less well prepared in times of need if agents of Her Majesty which are using the radio spectrum for safety, emergency preparedness, or rescue services are charged license fees on the same basis as commercial undertakings.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order to seek clarification. With all due respect to my colleague, the House Leaders had an understanding that, because there is a very restrictive time period for debate on this Bill, the time would be shared. I am watching the clock and notice that we only have 21 minutes left. The Hon. Member is making an excellent speech, but has gone on quite beyond the understanding with regard to time. Through you, Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Member to co-operate in terms of the arrangement we had agreed upon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As you can well appreciate, the Chair cannot interrupt the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) who, according to the rules, has unlimited time. However, now that you have reminded the Hon. Member of the understanding among the Parties, I am sure that at the first possible opportunity she will give the floor to her colleague from Broadview—Greenwood.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I, too, would like to raise a point of information or point of order. I have some additional information I wish to put before the House. This is a debate. If I use all the time allocated, does that not mean that this Bill will come back before the House for further debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There was an understanding on Tuesday, March 10, that both Bill C-40 and Bill C-3 would be put through all stages today. Therefore, at 4.45 p.m. the question will be put on both Bills.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I will, therefore, be pleased to accommodate. I will just note a few other points and then will relinquish the floor.

The Government of Manitoba is very concerned and I think we should take its concerns very seriously. I think the Minister should meet with that provincial Minister for Telecommunications. I would like to have read the complete letter but, as time is pressing, I will not.

I have a letter as well from the Minister of Transportation of Nova Scotia, Maxine Cochran, which takes great exception to this Bill for the same reasons.

During the hearings conducted by the House legislative committee the Government was pressed for exemptions. There will be increased fees to major government users which I think is too bad. I believe it would have been much better to have found a way to have the fee paid by those who are in competition in the private sector. I believe that that would have been fair. As one of the Ministers pointed out, although it might be a bit cumbersome, there certainly should have been a way for the Government to find the mechanism to tax only those who are in competition in the private sector and to have left the provincial and municipal governments out of it. The potential effect on the municipalities, which have only had a promise for the coming year, is just not fair.

In conclusion, I am not supporting this Bill which I believe is incorrectly conceived and a poor piece of legislation.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak at third reading stage of Bill C-3, an Act to amend the Radio Act. This Bill will enable the Government to collect roughly $10 million more a year for the regulation of the radio spectrum. Fees are already being collected from municipalities. This will enable the Government to collect fees from provinces and provincial Crown agencies as well. Municipalities are not covered because they are already being charged fees, albeit lower than those charged commercial enterprises. Those fees are increasing and municipalities will be concerned that they will be in for further fee increases when this Bill is passed. Last year the fees charged to municipalities for radio spectrum were more than doubled from $400,000 to $900,000. We are told that if the full fees were charged they would amount to $3.3 million. There are 3,200 municipalities which pay and have to be worried about what they will be charged in the future.

There is one good argument for this Bill that private corporations which came before us pointed out. There are some instances in which they are competing with a service provided through a provincial Crown agency which is exempt from radio fees. The radio fees are not a significant amount of their business expenses but, nevertheless, one can understand the worry of unfair competition when one company providing a service has to pay a fee which another company does not have to pay. However, I remind the House that these are very, very small exceptions. In the vast majority of cases in which the Government intends to charge these fees, they are not for commercial enterprises but, instead, for a service being provided by a provincial government or provincial Crown agencies which are, in some cases, extremely essential services.

This is a proposition for the federal Crown to impose a tax on the provincial Crown. In the end the taxpayer pays. The amount of money saved by the federal taxpayer will have to be paid by someone, which means that the provincial governments will have to increase the taxes they charge. They, of course, have at least as many financial difficulties as has the federal Government. The poor ordinary taxpayer wonders what we are up to. While the Government is making a very laudatory attempt to collect $10 million more in order to bring spending under reasonable control, it means that taxes must be increased at the provincial level. We are hardly any further ahead.

In some of these cases the services provided are very essential and the amounts involved in some jurisdictions are not great. For example, in Yukon, it is $27,000 for government departments and $2,000 for government agencies. In the Northwest Territories it is $42,000. However, when we consider other provinces, the amounts are very substantial. In British Columbia it is $800,000 for government departments and $220,000 for the agencies. In Alberta it is $508,000 and more than $1 million for the agencies, which effectively represent substantial tax increases. In Saskatchewan, it is $232,000 for the departments and over $700,000 for the agencies. In Ontario it is $1.2 million for departments and an insignificant amount for government agencies. In Manitoba it is $220,000 for government departments and nearly $600,000 for government agencies. In Quebec it is $983,000 for government departments. In Nova Scotia it is $94,000 for government departments and $43,000 for agencies. In New Brunswick it is $200,000 for government departments and $26,000 for agencies. There are substantial amounts for small provinces. While it is $22,000 in Prince Edward Island, I can assure the House that they are objecting to that. In Newfoundland it is $47,000 and $27,000 respectively. Federal departments are nearly $3 million and government agencies are $300,000. We are seeing one government department charging another government department within the same jurisdiction.

The provinces know that they will have to pay these increased fees and have responded to this proposition. Let me quote some of the objections that were brought to the committee by the various departments. I will begin with the Hon. Gary Dewar of Manitoba who says:

> This Bill will have the effect of imposing new costs on taxpayers and telecommunications users in this Province. We estimate the total impact to be in the neighbourhood of three quarters of a million dollars—
> There has been no consultation with provincial governments before tabling this bill, even though its purpose is to effect a cost transfer to provincial agencies for services previously provided cost-free by the federal Department of Communications.
> The imposition of radio licence fees on Crown agencies will create financial barriers to the installation of the most effective and flexible communications facilities for public services operated by government departments and Crown agencies.
> The safety of any number of public services could be compromised by the need to limit the use of radio services in order to keep expenditures for access to the radio spectrum within budgetary limits.

Certainly, we do not want to see that. He goes on:

> Of greatest concern is the fact that public emergency support services, particularly those related to fire fighting and emergency preparedness will be required to restrict access to the radio spectrum and/or tax their limited budgets to pay licence fees.
> The federal Minister of Communications has made temporary commitments to limit the application of licence fee regulations to municipal services. However, this exemption is not permanent, and does not cover a number of public safety and emergency services such as fire and rescue services operated by northern communities too small to have municipal status, forest fire fighting equipment operated by provincial departments of Natural Resources, or services used by provincial Emergency Measures Organizations.
> Canada will be less well prepared in times of need if agents of Her Majesty which are using the radio spectrum for safety, emergency preparedness, or rescue services are charged licence fees on the same basis as commercial undertakings.

The Minister urges reconsideration of this Bill.

There are similar letters raising similar concerns about emergency services from across the country. British Columbia noted that it is not in favour of applying the licence fees broadly across the board to government departments, agencies or municipalities where they are being used for government services or for services to the general public. They say very clearly that the fees should not apply.

Saskatchewan is also very clear on this point. They point out that subsidization in the case of telephone communications in the sparsely populated northern parts of that province will be a terrific burden in the provision of radio services.

The Associate Deputy Minister in Saskatchewan points out that while deficit reduction is an important endeavour, shifting the federal deficit onto a different level of government is not a true solution to the problem. This is particularly true when the intended solution will increase the administrative effort of both Governments. That undoubtedly will be the case.

Mr. Russell, the Minister from Newfoundland and Labrador stated:

> While the financial impact of the proposed legislative amendment appears relatively small at present, I anticipate that the cost of radio licences to the Provincial Government will increase, for whatever reason, in the future.

He stated that the over-all impact of the amendment means an increased financial burden to the province.

Prince Edward Island rejects the suggestion that any part of this responsibility should be transferred to provincial Governments. They state:

> The desire of the Government of Canada to reduce its deficit is understandable and fully appreciated. However, the current trend of the central government to attempt to burden the provincial governments with its financial responsibilities, whether it be through the process of rail line abandonment, innovative airport management schemes, or others, is alarming and unacceptable.

Representatives from New Brunswick appeared before the committee to state a number of concerns. They state in their brief:

> The increasing trend by governments toward cost recovery of a service as a budget control measure is, in general, governed by the rationale that if a service exists for the benefit of a particular user, then the appropriateness of having that user pay in part or in whole for the cost of providing the service can be considered.

However, they point out that the user is not the Government but the people of the province, who are also taxpayers federally.

They go on to state:

> In asking the province to pay radio licence fees, the federal Department of Communications has apparently identified the Government as the user of the service—
> However, the greatest part of the radio licences required by the province are used to ensure the safety and well-being of its residents.

They go on to give examples of radio licences used by provincial highway patrol, the Department of Transport for highway construction and maintenance, for emergency measures and for the maintenance of forests and wildlife. They state that the Province of New Brunswick as an entity is not the particular user who benefits from the services; the residents of New Brunswick are the beneficiaries. I believe that argument is eminently reasonable.

There is strong opposition to this from my Province of Ontario. The Minister from that province states:

> While I understand the government's desire to place such services on a user-pay basis, the use of radio spectrum by Ontario government users is not revenue producing. It is used to provide essential services to the public, including emergency services. The reasoning which has led you to support the exemption of municipalities from the fee requirement is fully applicable to the case of similar services provided by provincial governments.

However, they will also be in trouble because the municipal exemption is only partial and is also slipping away. He goes on to say that if the Bill is passed in its present form he would urge meetings to discuss the issues raised by the current fee schedule. He asks for delays.

In the committee I proposed an amendment which would at least partially alleviate the problems posed by this Bill. The amendment I moved but was not accepted stated that there be an amendment to the Bill, that notwithstanding subsection (2):

> Nothing herein provided shall be deemed to impose or authorize the imposition by regulation of a fee for any licence or certificate issued to public safety or emergency response services within Canada.

Such a provision would have lessened the impact of the Bill by saying that there would be a fee for certain of these crucial emergency services. Regrettably, however, that amendment which I believe was reasonable was ruled out of order. Therefore, the full impact of this Bill will be felt by the provinces and provincial Crown agencies.

I want to deal with what the Government will do with the extra $10 million it wishes to collect if and when this Bill is passed. If I thought the money would be used for improving post-secondary education, public broadcasting, research and development or job-creation, I suppose I might be more in favour of a tax increase, which this is essentially. However, we see that money is being spent so that companies will make profits. There is an elaborate prison for the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding. Other examples such as that mean we cannot expect that any additional money collected through this new tax will be put to good use for the country.

The Government has a majority and undoubtedly Bill C-3 will pass. I regret that. It means an increased burden on the provinces and, of course, no relief to the taxpayer. The $10 million the federal taxpayer does not have to pay will have to be paid by those same people who are provincial and municipal taxpayers. suggest that finding new revenues of this order and in this fashion are not, in any event, going to solve the real problems of revenue collection and the deficit. Without significant tax reform, this sort of measure is very small and is not going to remotely have the kind of impact we need. I think the Government should get on with the real problems of government. We need fair taxes and prudent use of resources for the best long-term interests of the country.

This Bill is another example of poor government and my colleagues and I intend to vote against it.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I have a short question for my hon. colleague. I wonder if she would be kind enough to simply elaborate a moment or two on her last point in terms of our taxation system. It seems to be an appropriate point on which to say a few more words.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, this is indeed the crux of the issue and I am very pleased to be asked to elaborate on this question. We have a very fundamental question, increased revenues for the Government, and we are all in favour of increased revenues for the Government, providing those funds will be spent wisely.

Somewhat earlier in the day in debate on the Borrowing Authority Bill we addressed the question of how money ought to be raised and how it ought to be spent. The Government is increasing its revenue collection by increasing taxes on individuals and families. There is an enormous increase. There is an increase of billions of dollars.

Mr. Lewis: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I wonder if the Chair would be able to assist the House and advise us as to whether or not there are any questions or comments on third reading?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member was the first person to speak for the 20 minutes. After the 20 minute speech, there is a 10-minute question and comment period.

Ms. McDonald: Madam Speaker, in what is just about one minute remaining, I would like to attempt to answer the rather complex question raised by my colleague.

The question as to the wisest use of our resources is a very fundamental question. As I said earlier, I do not have confidence that these increased revenues to be collected under Bill C-3 are going to be put to very good use. We have a Government committed to increasing revenues from many sources, such as personal income tax, sales tax and from all sorts of hidden taxes. This is a most unfortunate approach to tax reform, if one can even honour it with the name of "tax reform". We need a fundamental change in the taxation system, one which will be fair and will mean greater collection of direct taxes. We should not be relying on these hidden taxes, taxes for services, sales taxes, customs and excise taxes, and these sorts of taxes which consumers and taxpayers do not know they are paying. These taxes fall on all users regardless of ability to pay. That is an unfair approach to tax reform. That, so far, is all we have received from the Government.

We have a Government committed to increasing its revenues but it is doing it in the wrong way. In this particular Bill, the Government is increasing taxes, although not by a very large amount given the enormous number of loopholes and escape hatches for corporations which result in massive tax losses. We are going to collect $10 million more from the taxpayers of the provinces when in fact billions and billions of dollars escape because of the 79,000 profitable corporations which do not pay a dime in taxes. I say the Government has its priorities wrong and for that reason I intend to vote against this Bill.

ORGANIZED CRIME

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Miss Nicholson (Trinity) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;

2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the government of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity;

4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

She said: Madam Speaker, organized crime has been defined as:

Two or more persons consorting together on a continuing basis to participate in illegal activities, either directly or indirectly for gain.

• (1720)

This deliberate collaboration for illegal gain can develop into a self-perpetuating conspiracy that continues, despite what may happen to its original members, and that uses force and fear in its operations.

Organized crime has no ethnicity. It exists, it is pervasive, it is international in scope, and whether we know it or not, it is a fact of life. There is organized crime activity in loan-sharking, drug trafficking, robbery and extortion, activities that victimize innocent citizens. Organized crime does not exist as a separate subculture. It extends into our daily lives and the institutions of our society. The extent to which it does so is not known, and that is one of the reasons for my motion which proposes a Royal commission to investigate organized crime in Canada.

There has never been a national inquiry of this kind in Canada. There have, however, been provincial investigations. In Ontario in 1974, Judge Harry Waisberg's Royal Commission into certain sectors of the construction industry made some eye-opening revelations about the degree of corruption and organized crime involvement in Ontario's construction industry. Also in the 1970s, the reports of the Quebec crime probes extensively documented organized crime activity in that province.

The obvious conclusion, as I have said, is that organized crime is a fact of life, a force of corruption and a threat to our society. By its intrusion into other aspects of our lives, it is a threat to democracy. The issues it raises are national ones,

Since organized crime exists to make money and buy power for those involved, it is clear that there is a good deal of money involved, many say billions, acquired illegally and outside the mainstream economy. Criminal organizations use modern financial services to conceal the illegal nature of their funds, to launder their money in other words. The increasing sophistication and the internationalization of the financial services industry make it extremely difficult to distinguish legal from illegal funds as transactions are processed in minutes through international financial networks.

In the United States in 1984, the interim report of the President's Commission on Organized Crime noted that the existence of modern financial institutions contributed to the frightening financial successes of organized crime in recent years. Without the means to launder money, organized crime could not flourish as it now does. Canadian financial institutions with their international operations are not exempt from this laundering activity. Since a great deal of the financial services industry is regulated federally, one of the questions that might be studied by a federal Royal commission would be how to remove the financial rewards of organized crime.

For example, Italian law allows for the arrest and imprisonment of organized crime conspirators as well as the confiscation of their assets. In 1970, the United States enacted the so-called RICO statute, the Racketeer-Influenced and Corrupt Organization Act, which also allows for state confiscation of the proceeds of organized crime. As a result of this law, American authorities have been able to lay charges against entire groups of organized crime conspirators as well as leaders and members of ongoing criminal conspiracies.

Last year in the United Kingdom, the British Parliament passed tough new laws to deprive convicted drug traffickers of the benefits of their illegal activities. Earlier court cases had shown that the law as it stood had no capacity to deprive offenders of the massive profits of their crimes. In 1984, the United Kingdom's Hodgson committee completed a study entitled "The Profits of Crime and Their Recovery" and recommended that the power of confiscation be made available. These are all things that a Canadian Royal commission could study to see how they might be applied in Canada.

Since organized crime operates outside the law and outside the mainstream of society, it does not welcome publicity. A Royal commission holding hearings and gathering information would create that unwelcome publicity which could possibly check the growth of organized crime, or at least prevent its operating at full capacity.

The police may become concerned that the publicity generated by a Royal commission could jeopardize their own ongoing investigations. This may be a legitimate concern which must be accommodated, but without public knowledge and support and without the necessary legislative backing, our law enforcement authorities face an uphill battle against organized crime.

Another area of inquiry for a Royal commission might be the treatment of witnesses against organized crime. The United States has an established witness protection program to deal with these individuals who are often themselves criminals but who put themselves at risk to provide information on organized crime operations. I take seriously the argument that law enforcement authorities should not make deals with criminals. Nevertheless, since police rely on informers, we must have an examination of the matter of the ethical and legal considerations and some guidelines about how to proceed.

Another question that might be explored by a Royal commission is the question of the individual who sits at his desk and orders a murder. At this time, the House is very concerned about capital punishment and other kinds of punishment for the persons who actually commit murders but we have not been very successful in finding the kind of conspirator who is in a position to order a murder.

Perhaps the most important and valuable function of a Royal commission on organized crime would be to highlight the extent to which it has pervaded the institutions of our society and to expose its connections to the business community, the political arena, the judiciary and so on. Organized crime grows and prospers through its connections with and corruption of individuals at all levels of society, not just the wealthy and powerful. I believe that a Royal commission can make an assault on organized crime merely by exposing these connections.

The studies undertaken in Canada so far have given hints of what lies below the surface. We know there is organized crime in Canada and we know it is growing. It is a force of corruption, acting completely outside the law, interested only in expanding its own profit-making capacity at the expense of law-abiding citizens. It is a situation that cannot properly be addressed with ad hoc solutions. I believe it requires a co-ordinated approach on several fronts. That is why I recommend the formation of a Royal commission which would itself be part of a national response to the problem of organized crime in Canada.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge—Foothills): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to rise to speak to the motion of my hon. colleague and friend opposite. I am always surprised and impressed by the breadth of her interest in the various topics that come before the House. As Hon. Members know, the Hon. Member is a recognized expert in financial affairs and I know of her interests in the area of criminal law. The motion she has laid before the House shows her to be thoughtful and is of much credit to her.

There is no doubt that international crime is a very serious problem. Solutions are being addressed at a global level but the question is whether we are doing enough, and whether or not Parliament should authorize a royal commission. I am looking forward to the debate to learn the advantages and disadvantages. I know several of my colleagues have speeches they want to make on the topic. Under our rules this is fortunately a votable motion after five hours of debate. Parliament will take a collective decision. Therefore I want to commend my friend for bringing the motion forward. I regret the delay in starting today but there will be at least another four days for debate.

I want to say a word or two about what the Government has done and is doing concerning illegal drug trafficking and organized crime. In 1985 the previous Solicitor General led the Canadian delegation to the Seventh UN Congress on the Prevention of Crime and the Treatment of Offenders, held in Milan, Italy. I was fortunate to have been part of that delegation. For the first time in my life I had an opportunity to speak with elected officials and police officers from other countries in order to get a real feel for the extent of the problem. It is a bit like AIDS in that it is far more serious than people realize and has the capacity to explode exponentially. We have to do something and in fact certain things are being done.

Members of this House, and Canadians in general, will be pleased to know that Canada is in the forefront in the development of measures to attack international drug trafficking. We have also played an active role in supporting UN initiatives, including the preparation of a new convention on illicit drug trafficking. As well, we are collaborating with other economic summit countries to combat drug abuse. The Canadian delegation in Milan did an absolutely first-class job and I am sure Members will be very thankful for that contribution.

In April of 1986, Canada ratified a drug control agreement with France, the U.S. and Italy. The agreement grew out of the work done since 1970 by the quadripartite conference involving representatives of the French national police, the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, and the RCMP. On March 4, 1986, Canada became a full participant with Italy in the agreement to prevent and suppress trafficking in narcotics and dangerous drugs. The agreement is in effect for five years. I think the House will applaud the fact that Canada will be hosting the next conference to be held here in Ottawa next month.

I mentioned the development of a draft UN convention on illicit drug trafficking. At the thirty-ninth session of the UN Commission on Narcotic Drugs held in February, 1985, Canada co-sponsored a resolution entitled "Initiation of the Preparation of a Draft Convention for Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances". This new convention is viewed as both a necessary and effective mechanism for implementing new initiatives to deal with illicit drug trafficking. A Canadian delegation, including representatives of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), attended a special session of the UNCND in February, 1986, where significant progress was made in identifying the specific subjects for inclusion in the draft convention. With the exception of certain concerns relating to control of vessels and extradition, Canada generally supports the proposed measures.

A top priority for Canada for inclusion in the draft convention is a provision which would permit each member state to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking. Canada will be introducing domestic legislation which will strengthen our ability to effectively seize and forfeit the proceeds of crime, particularly those from illicit drug trafficking. To my mind that would be an incredible step forward in controlling drug traffickers. Seizing the proceeds of crime will in itself cause the practice to dry up quickly.

Another provision providing international control of the principal precursors for the manufacture of illicit drugs, for example, those which permit the extraction of heroin from opium and cocaine from coca, would constitute a primary defence in controlling the manufacture of illicit drugs. Still another provision deals with controlled deliveries which involve the transportation of illicit drugs under controlled conditions with the knowledge and consent of the police. The main objective is to allow the offence to continue, permitting the apprehension and successful prosecution of the key principals involved rather than mere seizure of the drugs and apprehension of the couriers. Controlled deliveries represent an efficient technique which, when successful, effectively identifies major conspirators and sources at the highest level of the international drug trade.

With regard to mutual legal assistance, considerable progress has been made in the international exchange of information to combat the illicit drug trade. Emphasis will now focus on the exchange of evidence and information as it relates to the proceeds of drug trafficking. Illegally acquired assets remain virtually untouched due to inconsistencies in international and national legal systems. The UN Division on Narcotic Drugs has decided to examine possible measures to counter bank security which encourages the apparently legitimate accumulation of these illicit assets in so-called tax haven countries. Canada, meanwhile, has ratified a mutual legal assistance treaty with the U.S., and is actively negotiating similar agreements with Switzerland, the Bahamas, and other Commonwealth countries.

A further provision of the proposed convention deals with illicit traffic via commercial carriers. In most cases air carriers and shipping lines are not held accountable for baggage cargo which is being used to secretly conceal illicit drugs for shipment, or for passengers who conceal drugs. However, when it becomes evident that employees or crew are either directly involved in such activities or, because of laxness of security, allow such activity to occur, the onus must rest with the carrier.

Yet another provision deals with co-operation across frontiers. Canada agrees that international intelligence and information support is a vital activity which must be intensified in the coming years, especially concerning the international drug traffic and the conversion of profits to apparently legitimate business enterprises. Enhanced co-operation between the producing, transit and consumer nation is a priority for this Government.

The UN International Conference on Drug Abuse and Illicit Trafficking will be held in Vienna in June of this year. Members may already be aware that a Canadian, Mrs. Tamar Oppenheimer, head of the UN Division on Narcotic Drugs, is the Secretary-General of the conference. Furthermore, as an indication of the priority this Government gives to the issue, Canada will have ministerial representation at the conference. This multi-disciplinary gathering will consider such matters as the prevention and reduction of the demand for drugs, crop substitution, use of narcotics for medical purposes, forfeiture of illegal drug proceeds, the treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts, and the enhancement of enforcement resources.

I would be remiss if I did not mention the efforts of the RCMP and other provincial and municipal police forces. The RCMP provides training to police officers for many countries every year at the Canadian police college and sends specialists to assist Commonwealth and other countries develop enforcement skills.

I see my time has expired, Madam Speaker. I will close by saying that Canada and the international community are doing much with regard to this problem. That is not to say that my friend opposite does not have a good idea. We will follow the debate with interest. A Royal commission certainly has a lot of financial and time implications and we need to hear more from Members. Perhaps the Parties would even have a position that would be helpful in coming to a decision. I thank the Hon. Member for her motion and I look forward to hearing the rest of the speakers.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, when we look at the question of organized crime and how the newspapers deal with it, we see some very startling headlines. For example, "Metro's crime gangs battle for supremacy. A three-month probe reveals organized crime in Ontario is a $2 billion industry". "Organized gangs preparing for war in bitter fight for billion-dollar turf". "Staggering profits". "Organized crime under attack". The amounts of money suggested are really staggering. Officials say that costs limit prosecutions and the police are not able to deal with the intricacies and complexities, the number of stages of laundering, in order to deal with organized crime. Another headline reads, "Unreported tax costing billions". These are unreported taxes from elicit enterprises run by organized crime. Other headlines read, "White collar rings stay out of sight" and "Gross national rip-off". The public is the loser from the failure to pay taxes, to the intimidation of citizens, to all the direct criminal activities. Of course, the proceeds from these activities get into the grey area of so-called legal businesses which are funded and owned by organized criminals.

These are the reasons why I very much support the resolution of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), that we have at the federal level a Royal commission to inquire into organized crime. There have been Royal commissions and inquiries of various sorts at the provincial level on a much more limited basis. The Americans are much more actively promoting investigations of organized crime in that country. We would be smug and naive indeed to think that this problem was confined to our friends south of the border, that these activities do not take place in Canada as well. Although we are not paying as much attention to them, I believe we have a 10 per cent prorated reason to be as concerned as they are.

I come to this subject with a certain bit of a bad conscience as a sociologist. I used to study various kinds of criminal behaviour as a sociologist and academic. My own profession never paid a great deal of attention to organized crime. It is not easy to study. You cannot go out with tape recorders and questionnaires. It is not amenable to the usual academic kinds of studies. There have been the occasional book and article, usually from a journalistic approach rather than an academic one. Academics have shied away, not because they are afraid of organized crime, although perhaps we would all have a certain amount of fear if we knew the consequences. However, organized crime is obviously very successfully kept hidden. No criminal advertises in an active sense, but organized crime is kept far more hidden and is much harder to study. Even among those who have been convicted there are not large numbers of subjects for studies in the conventional sense.

Therefore, professional sociologists, psychologists, social historians and so forth have concentrated on other forms of crime. Indeed, those other forms of crime are not nearly as significant in terms of the amount of money they cost society, and probably not as significant in terms of the risk to lives of people who are intimidated and killed for not paying what is required of them in certain forms of organized crime. The fear and intimidation in organized crime is very, very serious. This is an extremely significant part of criminal life which is not being dealt with by the people who normally do conduct studies and alert the public—Parliament, and parliamentary committees—of existing problems. That source of information is not available to us. For that reason, it is even more important that we have a Royal commission which can hire some academics and very high level people who are above reproach. They will probably not be knowledgeable about organized crime, because we do not have many experts on that. Nevertheless, we could hire responsible people who would know how to conduct a commission and hire responsible staff to do the work which would put us in a much better position to address this question.

I would now like to refer to the specific proposals in the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:
> 1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;
> 2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity;

4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime.

I would like to highlight the second point, "the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society", which is one of the things we do know. It is certainly clear in other countries that organized criminals like to get protection by infiltrating other social institutions. They move their money into illicit enterprises. Tracing these connections will, of course, be difficult, but it is extremely important to do this.

With regard to measures to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime, some of these have already been mentioned. One suggestion that has been raised as a possible way of preventing some of the laundering of proceeds from organized crime is to make it an offence to hold a numbered bank account in another country. We would assume that anyone who did not want their money traced might be up to no good. Such a measure ought to be considered as a possibility.

The previous speaker referred a great deal to illicit drug trafficking. That is, of course, an important matter. However, I think we would be remiss in our duties if we thought that was even the largest part of organized crime. It is the myriad of activity and a movement into legal businesses which is perhaps the most devastating in terms of its impact on Canadian society.

With regard to possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses, this is a long-standing problem whenever there is an inquiry or a police case involving major figures from organized crime. The witnesses may indeed be criminals themselves and we are put in the moral dilemma of whether we want to make a deal to relieve them of their responsibility for their crimes in order to get information which may lead to more important members of the organized conspiracy. Providing adequate protection for witnesses is a very fundamental question if we are to proceed in a serious way in dealing with this issue.

In conclusion, I believe that this is an eminently sensible resolution. I urge Hon. Members in all Parties to give it support. I was pleased that the first Conservative spokesperson on this subject is at least open to the question. I hope all government Members will be open to this. More enthusiastic support may have been desirable. There is no doubt that Royal commissions are expensive. However, when we consider the enormity of the problem, the billions and billions of dollars at stake, and the number of lives which are affected by this, it seems to me that even the cost of a Royal commission could be money very well spent. I urge the Government to consider, aside from the cost of a Royal commission, the cost of not dealing with this extremely important social question. I think we must address those issues. I believe that the right thing to do is to support this resolution to establish a Royal commission to investigate organized crime.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, I want to comment briefly on that part of motion M-44 under which it is proposed that the House consider the advisability of appointing a royal commission to investigate and make recommendations on the effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy.

First I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her interest in this matter. Surely all Hon. Members understand just how important it is for society that our laws provide appropriate sanctions with a view to punishing those who attack their fellow citizens and preventing them from committing more crimes.

• (1750)

[English]

As many Members of the House will know, the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1985, Bill C-18, contains an amendment to Section 423(1) of the Criminal Code, the effect of which is to increase the punishment for conspiracy to commit murder from one of imprisonment of 14 years to imprisonment for life. This term of imprisonment is subject to the normal rules with regard to parole eligibility.

Madam Speaker, there can hardly be a more serious infraction than conspiring to commit murder. To show that they acknowledged the seriousness of such a crime, parliamentarians thought that it should call for the same punishment given those found guilty of manslaughter, robbery, hostage taking, extortion.

In view of this, Madam Speaker, and although I share the sentiments of the Hon. Member for Trinity, I respectfully submit that the existing provisions of the Criminal Code concerning conspiracy to commit murder are appropriate. The longest prison term applicable, that is imprisonment for life, properly reflects the way this crime is perceived by the honest people and lets the courts take into consideration, when passing judgment, the extenuating circumstances such as change of heart and co-operation with police in order to bring to justice the other parties to the conspiracy.

Madam Speaker, as many Members know, the Law Reform Commission of Canada in its final report entitled "Recodifying criminal law", published recently, suggests in the third part of the Criminal Code draft contained in that report that in matters of conspiracy a simple rule be applied: That a guilty plea should carry only half the sentence prescribed for the crime as such.

Madam Speaker, that suggestion concerns me. Personally, I would not want such a clause to apply to conspiracy to commit murder, especially when organized crime is involved. As I have already said, in my opinion the present punishment seems appropriate for such an odious crime, since it is possible to take into account the degree of involvement in the crime and the extenuating or aggravating circumstances.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I repeat that, in my opinion, the actual wording of the Criminal Code, which prescribes the most severe punishment possible, imprisonment for life, is effective and appropriate to deal with such an odious crime as conspiracy to commit murder, whether the conspiracy is by a large criminal organization or a small group.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to participate in this debate.

[English]

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her interest in matters relating to the administration of justice, especially dealing with organized crime in Canada. I believe we have seen an increase in this regard which has taken place essentially since the end of World War II. It should also be pointed out that many of us do not realize that we are dealing with organized crime very innocently when many of the things we purchase today may have resulted from organized crime. Certainly it is obvious that young people who today are involved with drugs and other things are very much contributing to the increase of organized crime.

I want to take a few minutes to discuss the specific aspect of the Member's motion which relates to the development of legislation to enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of crime. There is no question that the financial rewards from criminal activity, especially drug trafficking, are substantial. Because of the underground nature of the activity, it is difficult to estimate the exact dollar figure with any degree of accuracy. A Member who spoke previously suggested that the figure is possibly $2 billion in Ontario. No one can guess for sure the exact amount involved in organized crime, but it is certainly substantial.

In addition to the profit, there is the added social cost of law enforcement and health and education programs related to drug abuse. There is also the hidden cost of lost productivity on the job due to drug use. Anyone who visits a criminal court will certainly see the effect that drugs are having on our community, leading to such things as theft, prostitution and even murder.

A few years ago I had an opportunity to participate in a jury trial in which drugs were involved in a murder. When one begins to delve into those matters, one can see the effect that organized crime is having on our society. The costs to the community are as substantial as the profits from crime. These profits, which represent a tragic cost to Canadian society, are then used to fund other criminal activities such as graft, theft, pornography and prostitution. There is also the laundering effects of these profits into real estate or other businesses.

If the police are able to make a case that results in the imposition of a jail sentence for one of these offenders, the criminal empire continues to flourish in the hands of his associates who await his eventual release from prison. He only has to wait the situation out before he is back on the street and already set up in business. The deterrent aspect of the sentence is completely lost when the offender knows that upon his being released he can continue that opulent life style that his criminal career has created for him.

In partnership with the provinces, a detailed analysis of organized crime was completed in June, 1983. Included in the recommendations of that report was a legislative scheme to trace, seize and confiscate the fruits of crime. Because there is also a need to reduce the demand for illicit drugs, it is obvious that a program of education is required in conjunction with an attack on the criminal element supplying the product.

In direct response to this problem, the Government announced in the Throne Speech the need to take effective action against the traffic in illicit drugs, as well as to develop a national drug strategy. Virtually all other western countries have legislation providing for the confiscation of the fruits of crime. No country is immune from this monstrous problem. I would anticipate from the words of the Speech from the Throne that the Government will be dealing with this specific aspect of the Member's motion.

Experience has shown that there is a need to freeze assets at the pre-trial stage, so that they will be available for confiscation upon conviction. This may be done by means of a court authorized system of seizure or restraint orders, with the option to appoint an interim manager, if required. Third party interests could be protected by a system of court procedures to determine any innocent interest that should be exempted from the confiscation scheme. What would be expected is a workable mechanism to confiscate criminal assets without sacrificing any innocent parties and always reflecting due process.

The previous Government attempted to pass legislation relating to both the proceeds of crime and instruments of crime. The inclusion of instruments such as businesses that were only minimally tainted by the infusion of criminal funds was perceived as Draconian and I would expect that any initiative entertained by this Government would be limited to only the proceeds of crime.

There is no question that the motivation of the Hon. Member in relation to the presentation of this motion is completely based on very good faith. However, in light of the clear commitment of the Government, as detailed in the Speech from the Throne, it is clear that action in this area will be forthcoming, and that is obvious from other initiatives that have been presented to the House in fulfilment of our promises to the Canadian people.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, before commenting the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), I would like to congratulate her for drawing the attention of this House to the issue of organized crime.

However, I fear that a Royal Commission of Inquiry on this matter would have the opposite effect to that desired. Some Canadians, probably influenced by the American medias, have greatly exagerated ideas about the extent of organized crime in Canada and its presence in our social, economic and political institutions.

I am certainly not trying to minimize the threat of organized crime in Canada, especially in the illegal drug traffic. However, I am convinced that the action taken by all levels of government in Canada to repress organized crime are increasingly effective, and I am happy to note that there is no indication that organized crime is endemic in Canadian institutions.

In my opinion, there is really no need to ask a royal commission to examine this matter.

Royal commissions are very costly, and since their rules of evidence are not as stringent as those of the Canadian courts and the evidence brought before them cannot be used in criminal proceedings, it is not very useful for law enforcement purposes.

In addition, Madam Speaker, creating a royal commission would probably worry Canadians needlessly by giving the impression that our police forces and courts are not fighting properly against organized crime.

Moreover, I fear that a royal commission would divert attention and resources from existing initiatives in the area of information and law enforcement and eventually delay investigations and legal proceedings in serious cases.

Madam Speaker, the royal commission which is proposed would run the risk of delaying initiatives at the national and international level in the fight against organized crime.

As I have mentioned before, federal, provincial and municipal authorities are already committed to this task. The existing national intelligence systems are upgraded continuously and police forces pool their knowledge, experience and ability in joint operations aimed at the big names in organized crime.

Important institutions such as Canadian banks are seeking the best possible means to protect themselves from laundered money.

As for the Federal and Provincial Governments, they are looking ever more seriously at legislation other than the Criminal Code which could help prevent or fight organized crime.

Both at the federal and provincial levels, police officers are being better trained and given the knowledge and skills required to detect organized criminal activity and to gather the necessary evidence for successful prosecution in important cases.

However, these efforts generally go unseen and the media make no mention of them. In Canada, particularly, we have a tendency to say little about what we do and to be more discreet than our American neighbours.

In my opinion, Madam Speaker, the law enforcement methods used by the Canadian authorities in their fight against organized crime are highly efficient. Efforts and resources are coordinated and the various jurisdictions co-operate to prevent and expose illegal activities, to conduct investigations and to prosecute offenders. In other respects, canadian authorities share a particular concern for the rights of people who unknowingly become accomplices.

Enforcement policies and activities are aimed at maintaining the confidence of Canadians in the integrity of our social, political and economic institutions, which are the main forces that stand against the corruption generated by organized crime.

Police authorities, the courts and other Canadian enforcement agencies are the watchdogs of that integrity, representing as they do our first line of defence against organized crime.

It has been said that the importance of the underworld in a society is an indication of the integrity and ethics of its Government and business institutions. We must therefore support policies and programs ensuring that Canada never will be a country where the underworld can take root. And that goal requires that the various governments and enforcement agencies be on a constant watch.

The Government appreciates the genuine concern of the Hon. Member about organized crime. However, the Government of Canada is co-operating with the provinces in intensifying enforcement efforts, and a royal commission of inquiry would add very little to the tools already in place or being developed.

Preferably, Madam Speaker, this House should support and encourage the Canadian Government and the provinces in their enforcement initiatives, and enact rapidly any legislation aimed at increasing the effectiveness of the law against organized crime.

I am aware, Madam Speaker, that the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity reflects a serious concern about the extent of organized crimes in Canada and the weakness of measures to promote enforcement. But I want to assure her that members of the police forces and other dedicated experts in the area of penal justice are showing a high degree of competence in addressing this problem. The Government is relying on them, and they deserve the support of all Hon. Members and Canadians in general.

I do not feel therefore that the setting up of a royal commission would be in the interests of Canadians or would help our fight against organized crime.

Mr. Vince Dantzer (Okanagan North): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased indeed for this opportunity to speak to the motion. I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for drawing to the attention of the House this very important matter. My Government is very much aware of the problems of organized crime. My colleagues have already discussed many of the initiatives the Government has taken to combat organized crime in terms of improved legislation, enhanced resources, improved systems of collecting, analysing and disseminating intelligence on organized crime and, indeed, with new arrangements with foreign governments to help solve this very pressing problem.

In presenting this motion, the Hon. Member proposed that one of the matters the Royal commission would investigate is the matter of witnesses against organized crime. In this connection, I am pleased to report that the matter is currently being examined by the Ministry of the Solicitor General in collaboration with provincial Ministers and other federal Ministers concerned with law enforcement. I believe we would all agree that witness protection is part and parcel of a serious commitment on the part of the Government and law enforcement agencies to forcefully pursue organized criminal activities.

Some Hon. Members may be aware that in the United States the federal Government instituted a witness protection program aimed at organized crime which is administered by the U.S. Marshalls Service. The need for a wide ranging formal program in the United States is, of course, based on the magnitude of the organized crime problem there. Fortunately, we are not yet faced with a problem of similar magnitude in Canada. As Members are aware, the administration of justice is a provincial responsibility. As a consequence, the majority of witnesses requiring protection, relocation and a new identity are the responsibility of provincial authorities. The federal Government, through the RCMP and other federal departments, does however provide assistance to provincial officials in the form of documentation required for the witness to establish a new identity, usually in a new location in a new town. The RCMP also assists other police forces in other aspects of witness protection.

These flexible arrangements which provide for witness protection has worked in a generally satisfactory way at meeting the Canadian needs over the years.

Madam Speaker, I see that we are approaching the witching hour. May I call it 6.11 p.m.?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), this Order is dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

DISASTERS—CHERNOBYL NUCLEAR ACCIDENT—EFFECT ON CARIBOU IN LABRADOR AND QUEBEC. (B) ABILITY TO MONITOR RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to pursue a question I asked of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on December 3, as well as my follow-up letter to him on January 22, relating to the impact of the Chernobyl nuclear accident on Canada.

On December 3 I asked the Minister to make public information on what monitoring took place in Canada following Chernobyl, where the monitoring took place, what was monitored and what the result was in terms of radioactive contamination. In response to my question the Minister indicated a willingness to make a statement to this House, or otherwise provide the House and the Canadian public with further information on the impact of Chernobyl on Canada.

On December 11 the Minister tabled a document entitled "The Impact of the Chernobyl Nuclear Accident on Canada". Unfortunately, this document fell far short of the type of detailed information I was seeking when I asked my question on December 3. As a result, I wrote to the Minister on January 22 expressing my dissatisfaction with the report and again asking him to table a comprehensive statement on the radioactive contamination of the Canadian environment in the days and weeks after Chernobyl. To date, the Minister has yet to respond to my request. I would like to take this opportunity to again put on the record why I feel it is so important that the Government provide the House and all Canadians with the type of detailed information I requested.

To begin, the document the Minister tabled on December 11 states that 28 monitoring stations at airports across Canada were activated shortly after the Chernobyl nuclear accident. I point out to the Government that this network is far less comprehensive than the 33 monitoring stations activated in Sweden, a country 22 times smaller than Canada. In addition, the document the Minister tabled in December leads one to conclude that only air and precipitation samples were collected at the 28 monitoring stations in question at or near ground level, whereas Sweden, for example, also collected air samples at different altitudes through the use of aircraft, as well as plant samples. The report also fails to give any indication of the sophistication of the equipment the Government uses to monitor radioactive fall-out or whether the Government availed itself of the sophisticated monitoring equipment that exists at several Canadian universities and private facilities.

Most important, the report tabled by the Minister does not indicate what isotopes the Canadian monitoring stations were looking for, what they discovered, where, and in what quantities. For example, the report refers to radiation doses in microsieverts but fails to identify the individual isotope levels detected or the methodology used to calculate the doses quoted in the report.

The Government's estimates of the long-term effects of Chernobyl are equally suspect because the report again fails to identify the individual isotope levels detected, and also fails to detail which cumulative dose commitments and which international standards were employed to calculate the risk assessment outlined in the report, thereby seriously undermining the credibility of the Government's projection that there will be less than one Canadian cancer fatality as a result of Chernobyl. As a case in point, Dr. Rosalie Bertell, last year's winner of the Alternate Nobel Peace Prize, estimates that the number of Canadian cancers that could be expected as a result of Chernobyl may actually be anywhere from 1 to 24, with 3 to 9 cancers being the most probable.

Dr. Bertell also noted that the Government has not published projections on the reproductive problems that might be expected from Chernobyl, such as genetic diseases, embryonic, foetal, or infant losses, mild mutations, lower birth weights or growth retardation, which she estimates could be anywhere from 25 to 169 cases.

Similarly, the Government's claim that only 12 of 300 samples of imported food were rejected after Chernobyl is somewhat meaningless without detailed information on what isotopes the inspectors were looking for, what monitoring techniques, or what doses were judged to be acceptable or unacceptable.

I could go on, Madam Speaker, but I hope that I have made my point that it is essential that Canadians be provided with all known information on Chernobyl in order to analyse and reflect on the true impact of the accident on ourselves and on our environment.

This information is important for another reason. It now appears probable that some of the radiation detected over Canada in the wake of the Chernobyl accident did not come from Chernobyl, but rather from the venting of radiation trapped underground as a result of the "Mighty Oak" nuclear bomb blast that took place at the Nevada nuclear test sites on April 10, 1986, 16 days prior to the incident at Chernobyl. Both the United States Department of Energy, and the United States Environmental Protection Agency have confirmed that venting of radiation trapped underground as a result of this test occurred shortly before, and in particular, after Chernobyl. Appropriate monitoring equipment can differentiate between radiation from a bomb blast and radiation from a nuclear reactor accident. But again the Government's failure to release the full results of its post-Chernobyl monitoring prevent adequate public analysis and reflection on the true risks of Chernobyl, or the apparently never-ending string of nuclear tests being conducted by the United States in our shared North American environment.

I should also point out that if some of the fall-out detected in Canada after Chernobyl did come from the "Mighty Oak" bomb blast in the United States, that bomb blast—not to mention many others before it—would be in direct violation of the 1963 Nuclear Test Ban Treaty which forbids any nuclear weapons tests that would impact on any territory outside of the jurisdiction of the country conducting the test.

As you may know, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), and myself, are currently travelling across the country to listen to ordinary Canadians and experts alike as part of the NDP inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle in Canada. These hearings have been most productive to date, and we hope to publish a report some time during the fall of this year. During our hearings, considerable concern has been raised about Canada's ability to monitor radioactive fall-out.

We have also heard a lot about excessive secrecy when it comes to nuclear issues in Canada. One could argue that the report that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tabled on December 11, and the Government's apparent continued unwillingness to release further details on the impact of Chernobyl on Canada, merely confirm both these concerns. Or are we to believe, which might even be more distressing, that the Government does not have this type of information? Therefore, Canadians ought to be doubly concerned about what the Government was doing, or not doing, in the days and weeks following the Chernobyl accident.

I see that the Minister is in the House, presumably to answer my question, and I wish to say I am happy that the Minister has chosen to respond to my statement this afternoon. I hope he will be more forthcoming in what he has to say to the House at this time.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the first point I wish to make to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and all Canadians is that all information that Canada has and that the Radiation Centre has that has been available from universities and private laboratories I have been willing to make public, both immediately after Chernobyl and during the following months when there was great interest in Chernobyl as well as the present.

I wish to convey very directly that there is nothing that we are hiding in terms of information. As I have previously stated, if there is additional information that can be made available, I will make that available.

Second, I wish to discuss the matter of Canadian standards relative to international standards. We have checked that very carefully with various international agencies and as recently as during the parliamentary break, on my visit to Vienna I met with representatives of the International Atomic Energy Agency, namely, Dr. Blix from Sweden and Professor Konstintinov from the Soviet Union. We looked at what took place at the meetings in Vienna relative to the information that came forward from Chernobyl. The Soviets, as we know, had been very secretive about the information initially. That information came forward to some degree at the hearings in Vienna during the special convention of the IAEA. That information is available as well, Madam Speaker. Because of this issue being so sensitive, it is important to stress that we have made all information available that is known to us, both nationally and internationally. If there is more information, we will also make that available.

As to the second part of the question relating to the effect of Chernobyl on the food cycle, the caribou-human food chain, I want to tell Members and Canadians that we have been looking at that matter very seriously. A few weeks ago I had an opportunity to discuss this with health officials at Frobisher Bay. By all measurements the radioactivity measured in the Arctic, post-Chernobyl, was considerably lower than any radiation that, for example, had been measured in the 1960s at the height of the atomic blasts at that time—I am not using it as a standard that we are better off than in the 1960s and therefore everything is fine, but we have to take comparisons here—and the chance of death from radioactivity of even one caribou is so small as to be virtually zero.

As well, we have received reports from Scandinavian countries on the contamination of reindeer herds and their being unfit for human consumption. It should be noted that there are no reports of death of caribou even though their exposure to radiation was higher than that received in Canada. However, to protect northern residents, meat samples from at least 30 caribou from the main herds in the Territories have been collected by the Canadian Wildlife Service. We are doing that in co-operation with Health and Welfare in co-operation with Health and Welfare. This sampling program will be repeated this spring. The departments will make these samples available along with all information. According to all information we have, both the caribou, that is the food chain, and Canadians in the North and elsewhere have been fully protected and fully informed on everything flowing from Chernobyl, and we will continue that action.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—(A) REQUEST THAT MINISTER BE MORE PRECISE (B) FUTURE OF PUBLIC SERVANTS AND FAMILIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to shed some light on a question that has aroused the concern of some 1,300 federal public servants at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources who work for the Surveys and Mapping Branch and the Centre for Remote Sensing, and also at the Canadian Hydrographic Service of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Madam Speaker, this Government which was supposed to be straightforward in its dealings has managed to scare everyone through sheer incompetence. If we look back on what happened five or six days ago, we get a very clear picture of how this Government managed to complicate a situation that should have been very straightforward.

Last Friday on March 5, the employees' union at Energy, Mines and Resources issued a press release announcing that mapping, remote sensing and hydrographic services would be turned over, privatized if you prefer, to Lavalin, a world-class engineering firm.

The press release tells us that various Ministers were consulted and gave contradictory versions of the story. This was not surprising, nor was it particularly reassuring for the employees. The press release also tells us that the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) would deny these rumours in the House very shortly. When we ask the Minister of State for privatization (Mrs. McDougall) to make a few comments on this possibility of privatization she denies it but goes on to say that negotiations are under way. For his part, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) says there were no real negotiations, but here are his own words as reported on page 3953 of Hansard:

Quite frankly, we had some purely exploratory talks—

Good. Last Friday the Minister of Mines told me it was not in the strict sense of the word privatization.

But as always with this Government they all have something to say, but not to one another, with the result that people become confused and concerned. They play with the sentiments and security of people.

Madam Speaker, what do you think is the reaction of an employee who does not know whether he will be privatized, whether his service and his job will still be there? Will he have to move? Madam Speaker, it is difficult to explain the anguish felt by certain employees faced with such a possibility. This is a serious matter, we are not talking about just any company. Lavalin, a major international firm, and Bell Canada, one of our largest companies, are invited by Treasury Board officials to get together to discuss the proposed privatization of what we consider to be essential services—mapping, remote sensing and hydrography.

Morale among public servants is low, and I can understand why. Because Government representatives seem to be talking at cross purposes, public servants have no idea what to expect next and they are very, very confused.

Faced with such confusion, on Monday March 6 the President of the Treasury Board in turn issues a press release to shed light on the whole situation.

On page 3953 of Hansard for March 9, we find the reply given by the Minister to the effect that the Government was having exploratory talks with several companies to discuss the make or buy policy. There have been no negotiations or contracts or any attempts in this respect. There have never been any attempts to engage in an exercise of this kind, as stated in the Minister's press release.

This is even more confusing, Madam Speaker. On one hand, there are negotiations and talks. Three meetings were held, in October, November and December, but I repeat that, according to the Minister, there have been no negotiations. My God, what are those people doing? If they are talking, it must be about something interesting. Either they are speaking about the possibility of having serious exchanges, or else they are talking just for the fun of it. I do not think that Lavalin would want to waste its time with public servants or departmental officials who do not know what they have to offer.

On Monday, Lavalin published a press release in which its president, Mr. Lamarre, confirmed the facts as follows:

"In accordance with its make or buy policy, the Treasury Board had initiated discussions with its firm and Bell Canada—" and this is textual "—to explore the terms for privatizing certain Government services in the field of cartography."

That is quite clear. Lavalin says that there have been negotiations. On the other hand, the Minister says that there have been no negotiations and wonders why the Opposition and the public servants are so excited. The facts are quite clear. The Government does not know where it is going.

In the same press release, Lavalin said: "It is already a known fact that Lavalin and Bell Canada have recently joined forces to put together a business specialized in the management of mapping-related information, including surveying and cartography. By uniting the efforts of this new business to those of federal agencies which already operate competently in this field, Canada could play a frontline role in the development of geomatics".

As I was saying, Madam Speaker, Lavalin is a serious business which does not generally find it amusing to take the public for a ride just for publicity purposes. It does not need it. Mr. Lamarre is a serious man who has no need to advertise or to publish press releases making silly statements. Today, the Ministers have confirmed in the House that the Surveys and Mapping Branch, the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing and the Canadian Hydrographic Service are not for sale. I think that was definitely the conclusion we could draw from the answers given by the Minister of State responsible for privatization and by the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines. Those are the facts, and in that case, Lavalin has been wasting its time. It is high time this Government made up its mind where it is going, and I hope that the Hon. Member or the Minister is going to tell me the matter is closed and mapping will not be privatized.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, thank goodness we are getting to the end of the adjournment debate, because if we listen to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) when he starts talking about where the Government is going, I think we could also ask him where his party is going. We had a good example of this yesterday. He should listen to what I have to say and maybe he won't have to ask those questions anymore.

The example that occurred to me was the vote on the Cruise missile. They can't even agree in their own caucus, and in that case I wonder why he feels he is in a position to judge whether we can or cannot agree.

Madam Speaker, I think it is obvious, and I recall what was said by the Member for Ottawa—Vanier, that exploring possibilities does not mean one is going to sell. People who don't understand that are certainly lacking in judgment. I think that looking at our institutions and our departments and seeing whether we could not make their operations more efficient is one of the obligations we have as a responsible Government. Madam Speaker, bearing that in mind, I think we can look to the future with optimism and consider setting up mechanisms that will benefit all Canadians. That is what we are looking at, that is what we want to achieve, and that is what the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of State for Privatization (Mrs. McDougall) have said.

Madam Speaker, I fail to understand why the Opposition insists on making words say what they are not supposed to say, because there is a big difference between exploring and selling. We can make projections, we can analyze certain things, but that does not mean at all that we are going to sell. It means that we want to make certain improvements, look at the situation as it is now and perhaps as it should have been if the Liberals had lived up to their election promises to locate the cartography sector in Sherbrooke. Madam Speaker, the Liberals campaigned on this issue in two or three elections and failed to do anything, but now that they are on the Opposition benches they still have no idea where they are going yet are quite prepared to tell us how we should be managing public affairs. Madam Speaker, they should look at the way we reduced the deficit, they should look at the way we revived the economy over the past three years. They should realize that this Government can give Canadians an opportunity to rejoin the labour force, to have confidence in the economy, to look forward to a bright future. Once they have done that we will be in a position to respond to sensible questions from another Party, like the Opposition Party.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I want to say that both the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines), who is responsible for the Surveys and Mapping Branch, and the President of the Treasury Board have said that there is no plan to sell or privatize the branch, the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing or the Canadian Hydrographic Service, and any statement to the contrary would simply be false.

Madam Speaker, I hope these few comments are sufficiently clear and specific.

THE ADMINISTRATION—PUBLIC TENDERS—OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND LAW AND REGULATIONS TO ELIMINATE POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST AND CORRUPTION—GOVERNMENT POSITION. (B) CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS TO BAN CORPORATE DONATIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, Canadians are very tired of all the scandals, corruption, hints of conflict of interest, resignations and investigations. Whether it be government contracts, legal services, or renting buildings, Canadians want to see a clean system and a Government they can be proud of.

I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) if he would set up a fair system of public tendering. I do not think many Canadians realize how many loopholes there are in our public tendering system. People think there is an official process and companies which want to sell goods or services to the Government make an offer which is examined impartially by civil servants and the lowest bidder which fulfils the necessary qualifications gets the work. Of course, many contracts are not covered in that fashion. We have government contract regulations and then a vast assortment of exceptions where the Minister can proceed without going through the tendering system.

When I raised this issue with the Prime Minister, he denied there was a problem. All he said was if I had a specific case then I should complain about that. That is not what I was talking about. No doubt the police can deal with a specific case or a specific crime. What I am talking about is the need to have a system that Canadians know is fair.

I think it is scandalous to hear that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) lets certain MPs know about contracts which are coming up so that the MP can go around to friends or companies, possibly those who gave the MP financial contributions in the last election, and suggest there is a chance they can get some government business. I do not think MPs should be in that business. That is what we have a Public Service for. We should have impartial officials dealing with these contracts for everything other than purely trivial amounts. We do not want to call for a public tender every time we buy a pencil or eraser, but for any serious amount of contracting there should be a fair system so people will know where they stand and so the decisions will be made by public servants. We do not have that.

One constructive proposal which I made, because I think Canadians want constructive solutions to this, is that we try to stem the incentive which corporations have to use improper methods of getting contracts by stopping corporate donations to political parties. This is a serious suggestion. It was poohpoohed by the Prime Minister. He did not want to consider it at all. The answer we get to that is that the NDP gets donations from unions and is it not, therefore, in the same boat as the Liberals and Conservatives. We are not in the same boat at all. Unions are not out to get government contracts. They are not selling goods and services and trying to make a profit for their shareholders. It is quite a different situation. The opportunity for corruption just is not there.

In Quebec unions, as corporations, are not permitted to make campaign donations. It is one of the legacies of René Lévesque and the Parti Québecois that they have cleaned up that system in Quebec. They ought to be very proud of that. I only hope that we will follow suit at the federal level and ensure that we have at least as good a system for federal donations.

In fact, both the Conservatives and Liberals get enormous amounts of money from private corporations. In 1984, our last election year, the Conservatives raised $22 million; the Liberals, $11.8 million; and the NDP was a little behind that at $10.5 million. Half of the funds raised by the Conservatives and Liberals came from corporations. That is a substantial amount of money. In short, the Conservative Party raised more money from corporations than the New Democratic Party raised from individuals and unions combined.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) is misleading people when he says that the New Democratic Party gets most of its money from unions. That is simply not true. We get between 10 and 20 per cent depending upon the year and the jurisdiction. We depend overwhelmingly on individual donations. I am sure people would be prepared to consider whether unions should be making contributions. I do not think they are in the same boat as corporations because they are not out to make profits, but in order to have a decent system that is something which could be considered.

As well as corporate donations going to political Parties at the national level, they also go to local candidates in the Conservative and Liberal Parties. In the case of the Hon. Member for Manicouagan, who became the Prime Minister after the election, corporate donations to his riding association in that election year amounted to $58,0000. That was far beyond the spending limit. In the case of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) corporate donations in 1984 were $64,000 although his spending limit was $24,000. It is clear that corporations think they are betting on the winner and that it will do them some good.

I do not think Canadians want that kind of system. I think Canadians were glad to see the end of the bad old days when voters were paid a bottle of rum for their vote and every time there was an election the civil servants from the previous government were thrown out and replaced with people from the Party in power. I am proud of the role that Tommy Douglas and the CCF in Saskatchewan played in cleaning that province up from political corruption and patronage. They instituted a merit principle in the civil service and a public tendering system which did not grant contracts to friends or contributors to the Party in power. They did not take corporate donations so there was no incentive for corporations to try to buy influence by making political donations. That system worked. They got very good value for their money. They cleaned up the system. We know that they even managed to reduce the deficit while providing excellent services. I do think it possible, Madam Speaker, and I would hope that we could have a system in Canada which is fair and clean. That is what Canadians want.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am grateful for this opportunity to talk about the federal Government contract award system.

In recent weeks, Madam Speaker, Members of the Opposition have been saying just about anything on this question without even going to the trouble of seeking a minimum of information on the subject, and especially without taking time to think about it.

Let us be frank. Every year my Department awards in excess of 350,000 contracts for goods and services worth $7 billion. For the whole federal administration, we are talking about roughly 400,000 contracts a year. So how many of these have caused problems? A minimum number, Madam Speaker.

Early in January, the Opposition tried to embarrass the Government with what has been dubbed the Oerlikon Affair. I would like my colleague to show some objectivity.

When he was informed of certain disturbing aspects of a land purchase by the Oerlikon company, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asked for the resignation of a Cabinet Minister and for an investigation by the RCMP. This decision clearly demonstrates that he has no intention of making allowances as far as the confidential nature of Government transactions is concerned.

As for the bidding process and the evaluation of the bids received, to my knowledge, no one has questioned the integrity of this process. The contract for the low altitude defence system has indeed been granted to the most deserving supplier. If my colleague has any information to the contrary, I invite her, as the Prime Minister has already done, to communicate this information to the House.

Madam Speaker, our contracting system is highly regulated, for the very purpose of avoiding any irregularity. All purchasing agents of my department have on their shelves a dozen volumes of regulations and procedures to be followed for each type of acquisition. These books, which are quite heavy, represent all the institutional wisdom accumulated by my Department in its 18 years of existence and by the Department of Defence Production during the 40 years before that. These volumes reflect our constant efforts to act fairly and impartially in our relations with Government suppliers.

One final remark, as Minister of Supply and Services. I am convinced that the State is not a purchaser like any other. As a Government, we must see to it that our purchasing policies are absolutely consistent with our social and economic objectives. Would my hon. colleague who is greatly aware of the need to advance the status of women blame me, for instance, for having ordered a new call for tenders because some companies had disregarded our job equity program?

Madam Speaker, I will see to it that our purchasing policies are consistent with our national goals. If my hon. friend considers this approach as a form of political interference, I deeply regret it.

The Hon. Member has recommended that the Government ban corporate donations to political parties. In this regard, the Prime Minister was most clear in his reply. He said that the Government would consider the Hon. Member's suggestion.

This being said, I sincerely deplore her statement that contributions to political party foster corruption. Again, I urge her to provide us with one single example so we can make sure that justice is done.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being now 6.44 p. m., pursuant to an Order adopted on Tuesday, March 12, 1987, the House stands adjourned until Monday, March 16, 1987, at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 31.

POINT OF ORDER

HOLOCAUST—INTENT OF HON. MEMBER'S STATEMENT

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise with respect to comments attributed to me by the Edmonton Journal of March 13, 1987, regarding the Deschênes Commission report. I wish to state that the intent of my remarks was to acknowledge that both Ukrainians and Jews had suffered enormous losses at the hands of oppressors. Recognizing the tragic death of some five and a half million Ukrainians, I in no way wished to minimize or downplay the atrocities and the evil of the Holocaust perpetrated by the Nazis.

If inadvertently my remarks have given offence or led anyone to believe that I do not share a sense of outrage in the Holocaust, I categorically apologize and withdraw any statement which may be interpreted as offensive to the Jewish community and indeed to any Canadian. Ukrainians and Jews share a common experience as victims of grotesque oppression and cruelty. My desire is to see us work together to ensure neither Holocaust is forgotten nor allowed to happen again.

CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

PRESENTATION OF FOURTEENTH REPORT

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour of presenting to the House the Fourteenth Report in both official languages of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

PATENT ACT

PRESENTATION OF REVISED REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, it is my duty to present a revised report. The first report presented March 5 omitted certain words in the French version only from the amendments adopted in Clause 7, now Clause 8, and Clause 9, now Clause 10. This report now accurately reflects the decision taken by the committee in its study of the Bill.

AGRICULTURE—EFFECT OF FREE TRADE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present a petition on behalf of over 230 farmers from the Lambton—Middlesex area of Ontario, many of whom I had the privilege and honour of meeting this weekend. The petitioners state that whereas the Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to enter bilateral free trade negotiations, whereas Canadian wheat producers who have legislation to establish the price range for wheat produced and consumed domestically would be endangered by a free trade pact, whereas Canadian dairy farmers have an efficient and viable industry that could be destroyed or be traded away, whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) have failed to guarantee farmers that the marketing system established through legislative authority would not be traded away, whereas the Canadian poultry industry has geared its production to domestic needs and can also be traded away, wherefore the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject any negotiations or proposals that threaten Canadian farmers' marketing systems and programs. The petitioners do humbly and ever pray Parliament will listen to their call.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and indeed honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners call attention to the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs, suggesting that this will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which again they feel will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by residents of a number of communities in northern Manitoba including Flin Flon, The Pas, Gillam, Churchill and Brochet who point out that the Government's intent to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will hurt those people whose health needs require the purchase of a large number of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They also believe that this is another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade talks.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition here from a number of residents of my riding who indicate that the federal Government's proposal to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also indicate that the proposed changes are another example of the Conservative Government serving the interests of multinational corporations and increasing their profits at the expense of ordinary consumers. They call upon Parliament to reject this legislation.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a number of people from the constituency of Prince Albert who recognize that the Government's proposal to change the Patent Act will increase the cost of drugs and will unfairly hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs. They call upon Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CANADA POST CORPORATE PLAN

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are still sending in petitions on the question of the proposed supermailboxes. This one is from Toronto and expresses the objection to the two types of mail delivery. The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the corporate plan proposed by Canada Post and to instruct the corporation to proceed with mail delivery to all Canadian taxpayers without discrimination.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege to table in the House a petition signed by 2,923 constituents in my riding, which, added to 2,683 similar petitions I have tabled in the past makes a grand total of 5,606.

The residents of my riding object to and disagree with the corporate plan of Canada Post that will reduce postal services to my constituents, and the petition is signed by the people of my riding, who represent many different communities. Mr. Speaker, I will not quote them all this morning, but I would like to point out that about 30 in my riding are represented through the 2,923 signatures I am laying on the Table this morning.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have the honour and pleasure of submitting to this House a number of petitions from my riding and from the Vancouver area. The petitions deal with proposed changes to the Patent Act. The petitioners are against these initiatives because they are an example of the Government's concessions to the U.S. in its free trade negotiations at the expense of average Canadians and, more importantly, would needlessly increase the price of prescription drugs in Canada. The petitioners ask the Government to back away from these proposals.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and privilege to present to this House a series of petitions properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions and containing over 500 signatures of constituents of the riding of Kent. They humbly pray that Members of Parliament support Motion No. 37 presently before the House which would allow unborn babies to have the protection of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE ON AUTO PACT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a total of 22 petitions to present. They deal with the Auto Pact and the very grave concerns people in my constituency have concerning the free trade negotiations with the U.S. The petitioners call on the Government to indicate in clear and unequivocal ways that there will be no threat to the Auto Pact safeguards. They ask that the promise that the Auto Pact will not be a subject of the free trade negotiations be maintained. The petitions are signed by 1,200 people from my constituency of Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I understand the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) wants to table a report from the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. I just wondered if we could revert to tabling of committee reports.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. This is the committee's second report on the subject of the Auditor General's comprehensive audit of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs Canada. The Auditor General has pointed out that the mandate of the Department is not clear: "The Department was not sure whether it is accountable for producing social and economic gains for native people, or was responsible simply for ensuring an equitable distribution of financial support as native groups pursue their own initiatives." The committee is again recommending that the Department clarify the accountability implications of these two mandate orientations.

On the question of contributions to Indian bands, the committee remains concerned about appropriate controls to ensure that funds are used for the purposes for which they were given. The committee will monitor progress in implementing alternative funding arrangements.

Dealing with the issue of native claims, the committee draws attention to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the Department's procedures which have prevented this agreement from being finalized. In addition, the committee is recommending that the Government include in its financial statement provision for liabilities arising from native land claim settlements.

Pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), the committee requests a comprehensive response to certain recommendations.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING ARRANGEMENT

On the Order: Government Notices of Motions.

March 11, 1987—The Minister of International Trade:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multi-lateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), this Government Notice of Motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day or at the next sitting of the House.

Motions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in connection with today's debate there have been discussions among the House Leaders in an attempt to provide an opportunity for a maximum number of members to participate in this very important debate culminating, of course, in a vote on the resolution. In an attempt to meet these objectives, the Government has made a proposal to extend the hours today which would amount to the equivalent of a two-day debate. I hope, in the interests of ensuring that all Members of the House who wish to speak have that opportunity, that the House would find it appropriate to agree to the proposal I am about to put. It reads as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of the House, the House sit as follows today, Monday, March 16, 1987, for the purpose of consideration of the government motion dated March 11, 1987, respecting bilateral trade, in the name of the Minister of International Trade:

—The House continue to sit until 6:00 p.m., without interruption for lunch break or Private Members' Business or Adjournment Proceedings, provided that statements by Members will be at 2:00 p.m. and Question Period from 2:15 to 3:00 p.m.

—Following a dinner break from 6:00 to 7:00 p.m., debate to be resumed until 10:00 p.m., at which time Mr. Speaker will interrupt any proceeding then under way to put forthwith and successively, without further amendment or debate, any question or questions then before the House, provided that at the request of any Member at that time, a division on any question or questions will be deferred until 6:00 p.m., Tuesday, March 17, 1987.

—Following such question or questions being put at 10:00 p.m. tonight, or following such deferred division or divisions being requested at that time, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations on the proposal just made by the Government House Leader and, as I indicated to him in a letter I sent on Thursday, we, the Official Opposition, would be willing to agree to the proposal the Government House Leader has just made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to see the details of this proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I must say that, to me, it is another example of a disturbing trend we have seen over the last number of months. Whether it be the drug legislation, the National Transportation Act, or other very important issues facing the country, the Government has used procedural tactics to limit debate.

Mr. Mazankowski: We are extending debate.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Government, through the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), has proposed a motion. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition, has agreed to it. The New Democratic Party, which has every right to have a say in this Chamber with respect to the motion, is speaking through the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I ask Hon. Members to respect the dignity of this place.

Mr. Riis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to point out Section 55 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which says:

The privilege of freedom of speech is . . . the most fundamental right of the Member of Parliament on the floor of the House—

We have grave concerns about the request to limit perhaps, in the Government's own words, the most important economic debate in the country to two days. We have very serious concerns about what seems to be a trend of the Government using Parliament as the largest rubber stamp around. We are very concerned about the request before us. As a result of that concern, and the fact that this is the first time I have seen the specific details, I would like to reserve judgment on this until later in the day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the negotiations could be limited to the House Leaders.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING AGREEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (for the Minister of International Trade) moved:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report to the House on the progress of the Canada-U.S. trade initiatives. I welcome the opportunity to speak to the House on this matter of historic importance. I, along with the rest of the country, very much look forward to the opinions which will be expressed by the Leaders of the opposition Parties on this very important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, today we start a historic debate on initiatives that may make the next century Canada's own.

[English]

In this historic debate Members of all Parties will be addressing the motion which you have just set out. This motion is designed to create jobs, to generate new wealth, and to create new economic opportunities in all regions of Canada, particularly those which are presently going through great economic difficulties. Because this trade initiative is part of a comprehensive package designed to improve Canada's competitive position for the 21st century, I tell you with pride that the Government of Canada shall today support the resolution in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The backdrop of this requires a little explanation. The scope of our relationship is worthy of mention itself. There is $200 billion a year in bilateral trade with the United States, over 75 per cent of which is duty free. This is the largest trading arrangement between two countries anywhere in the world. It is an enormous amount which presents enormous opportunities and great difficulties. Thirty per cent of our GNP comes directly from our exports and about 80 per cent of those exports go to the United States. Most importantly, almost 2.5 million Canadian jobs depend directly on the American market, the richest and most dynamic market in the world which is sitting right on our doorstep. This measure is designed on behalf of all people of Canada, from the people who are hurting in Alberta to the people of Newfoundland and the people of the interior of British Columbia who need help. This measure is designed to ensure that those areas of the country get their kick at the can through enhanced bilateral trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There have been troubling developments in Congress. Over the last number of years the United States has been running a very serious trade deficit. Last year it was in the neighbourhood of $170 billion U.S. Such action sometimes brings out the worst in all of us, including the United States. People get scared. They go back to the reactions of the 1930s and throw up protectionist measures. A wave of protectionism has already meant action against our hogs, our steel, our lumber and our potash. The most important and worrisome part of this, albeit understandable, is that Senators and Congressmen in the United States, seeing the decline of smoke-stack industries and large pockets of unemployment develop in traditional areas of wealth, take these measures.

They are looking for what they consider to be the unfair traders. However, one of the major problems upon which I invite the House to reflect is that Canada is a fair trader. We are not an unfair trader seeking unfair access to anybody else's market. As Congress prepares to initiate this competitive legislation, which is trade legislation, the United States is saying that if we want to do business in their markets, this is the price of poker in reference to people they consider to be unfair traders and whom they name regularly. Canada is a fair trader. We do not want to be caught up in a net designed for the unfair seeking access to the American market. We have a history of fair trading and a history of generating prosperity through fair trade. This is designed to strike a fair deal with the United States.

Mr. Mulroney: The trends in trade are there for all to see. They are toward blocks. Japan's emergence as a superpower in trade after the war brought about, in some measure, the creation of the European Economic Community which is now a group of 320 million people within which trade is free, economic intercourse is of the highest and most significant order, and growth and prosperity come about because of the dropping of those barriers.

In another area of the world and for other reasons, but with the fundamentals still in place, Australia and New Zealand have sought and obtained a free trade arrangement between themselves. They are far away from the United States and Europe, yet the structures and objectives apply to them. Over the weekend and today the ASEAN nations from Singapore to the Philippines have been looking at structures which would give them a new free trade association involving hundreds of millions of people. In light of these developments, our domestic market of 25 million people begins to look small and vulnerable. What are our trading options when we strip away the rhetoric? What options are available to any industrialized country? There is GATT, there are sectoral initiatives and there is the possibility of a comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement.

We have been members of GATT for 40 years. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) led a major delegation at Punta del Este where we reaffirmed our commitment to the multilateral trading process. However, specific problems exist in the United States. Steel is very much next on the American agenda, and I see Members here from the Burlington area who are in charge of the steel caucus. The GATT process takes time. The Tokyo round took six years to negotiate and eight years to implement. We cannot wait that long.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The sectoral initiatives attempted by the previous Government have failed because of the new climate that exists in the United States. Those initiatives are not good enough.

There is one initiative that is not exclusive from the GATT but very much complementary of our GATT international exercise. It is a comprehensive bilateral agreement with the United States under Section 24 of the GATT which will put Canada and the United States at the forefront of liberalized trade here and around the world.

And why are we conducting both bilateral and multilateral negotiations, Mr. Speaker? When we decided to engage officially in trade negotiations with the United States, we knew this would be controversial, that all the old bug bears would be resurrected and that it would fan the flames of past partisan debate on the subject. We have decided to go ahead, regardless of the political risk, because we felt it was in the national interest. Why? Simply because without economic prosperity, there can be no cultural and social development in Canada, and to provide for prosperity, we must preserve and expand our export markets.

Canadians export to many countries in the world, but our main market, and in fact the wealthiest and biggest market on this planet is the United States, our next door neighbour. The jobs of several million Canadians depend on it, but access for our goods and services to the U.S. market, as to any other market, is being increasingly threatened by the wave of protectionism and the undue recourse to legislation that presently predominates in international trade.

There are examples of how this affects every province. I am thinking of Quebec, where annual exports total $22 billion, of which $17 billion worth goes to the United States. There are hundreds of thousands of jobs in Quebec that depend directly on the secure U.S. market. Fifteen billion dollars worth of Quebec exports go directly to the United States, and that is to the United States alone! Fifteen billion is what it cost to build the James Bay project, the project of the century. That is how important the U.S. market is to Quebec. It means that Quebec's annual exports to the United States equal the total cost of the James Bay project, and we know the tremendous impact that particular project had on expanding Quebec's economy. And that is why we want to do this. We want to minimize the risks and maximize the benefits. We want to create jobs and boost the economy through our trade initiatives, whether it is in Quebec, in British Columbia or in any other region in Canada.

[English]

Our over-all objective is clear-cut. It is to try to carve out a unique trading relationship with the United States of America that will create jobs, end trade harassment, introduce stability, eliminate trade barriers, enhance competitiveness, spur productivity and build an instrument of liberalized trade between the two greatest trading partners in the world. It will be an agreement that can serve as a model for all countries seeking relief from protectionism, growth in the Third World, and more liberalized access to markets everywhere.

This is not a selfish initiative but it has clear advantages to both sides. We hope it will eventually be seen as a signal against the kinds of vulgar and selfish measures of protectionism and be seen as a noble example of generosity and growth. We can show all developing countries in the world that it is not an initiative of protectionism or cutting off our markets but one by which markets can grow and we can accept more and more goods from Third World countries so that we genuinely contribute through trade to building a better and more equitable world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry from U.S. protectionists who harass and restrict our exports through the misuse of trade remedy laws. Let me leave no doubt that first, a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement. Second, because trading is so clearly a two-way street, our negotiators have been instructed to ensure that the elimination of existing tariffs takes place gradually, with adequate transition arrangements that are sensitive to the needs of Canadian industry and Canadian workers. Third, it is clear that non-tariff barriers increasingly distort trade. Our negotiators have, therefore, been instructed to negotiate a broad and comprehensive agreement addressing these issues, including changes to government procurement practices. For example, if Canada were to capture 1 per cent of the government procurement market in North America, it could result in the creation of 75,000 new jobs in this country.

Let me turn to the area of agriculture. Our goal is straightforward. It is to help Canadian farmers by increasing the predictability and security of access of exports by the farm sector through ending the deeply destructive subsidization of exports while preserving our farm support policies and the operation of our marketing boards at the same time. These are the principal Canadian objectives.

If the United States wants to increase access to our market and truly wants Canada to sign precedent-setting agreements that could indeed serve as a great model for the world, then our desires must be respected and our wishes accommodated. Otherwise, there will be no deal.

However, we recognize that a good deal must be one that is fair to both sides. We make it very clear that we do not approach our commercial relationships with the United States as an enemy. The United States is a sovereign, hard-nosed nation with its own national interests to protect. It confronts Canada in the same situation, as a sovereign powerful nation with our own interests to protect, as we shall. We recognize that the deal cannot favour only one side. If such an agreement is to have any durability and value, or have any significance as a model in the world, it must be a fair deal. There must be growth and prosperity in the United States as well as in Canada so that both sides to this agreement shall prosper to the ultimate benefit of the entire world.

So, given these circumstances, if that is the objective, what was our approach, Mr. Speaker? I think the approach was coherent. First, clear declarations of intentions; second, an exhaustive preparation of the case; and third, a historic degree of consultations and co-operation with the provinces, the industry and, we tried, the labour movement.

First, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) tabled his document entitled A New Direction for Canada in November 1984, he stated that if we want to promote expansion through export trade we must gain easier and more reliable access to foreign markets under the best conditions possible.

Second, the January 1985 green paper How to Secure and Enhance Canadian Access to Export Markets clearly defined the challenge. It stated: With respect to trade policy, attention focuses on—and on the possibility of taking fresh approaches in the conduct of Canada-U.S. trade relations. Then in the month of March, two years ago tomorrow, I met with President Reagan in Quebec City and we reached agreement on our objective to create a safer climate for bilateral trade and reinforce the multilateral trade system. This initiative was followed by a statement I had the honour to make before the House on September 26, 1985 when I said this: Economics, geography, common sense and the national interest dictate that we try to secure and expand our trade with our closest and largest trading partner. Then there was the external trade advisory committee made up of representatives of all levels of Canadian society under the distinguished chairmanship of Walter Light, various groups of sectorial consultation on external trade.

Fifteen advisory groups, representing all areas of the Canadian economy, from our farms to our steel products to our apparel industry, to mining, to goods and services, were formed. Three hundred or so people, men and women from the best parts of our private sector, came together in intimate consultation with the Government over a period of 18 months in order to help prepare us for these negotiations and to work with us, as they continue to do today.

At the First Ministers' Conference in Halifax we set out the beginning of the process where the Government would consult with the First Ministers on a regular basis. That, too, was a very important indication of our preparation and consultation and our desire to obtain a deal which is good for all Canada. Then there was the vote in the American Senate which gave the green light to its participation in May of 1986. We needed that, of course, because it was at that point in time that the forces of negotiation could effectively be engaged.

[Translation]

As to federal-provincial consultations, there were 14 federal-provincial meetings of Ministers and senior officials—an unprecedented series of events, Mr. Speaker. I also had four meetings with the provincial premiers on the question of trade negotiations with the United States, and two more meetings are slated for June and September. This is a first in Canadian history.

[English]

This is historic co-operation in terms of the manner in which we wanted it to proceed. Twenty-two years ago, to put it in some contrast, the Government of Canada sent down a group of negotiators to conclude the Auto Pact with the United States of America. They did the Auto Pact and they did a good deal. However, they did it without so much as a by your leave to the duly elected Government of Ontario at the time. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, federal-provincial relations have clearly changed, and very much for the better.

I want to indicate the extent to which this preparation and, I think, this thoughtful consultation with all areas of national life nevertheless had to come together at one bargaining position. While we wanted very much to co-operate with the provinces, and we have, and I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have said very clearly to the First Ministers, and I say very clearly to the House, the responsibility for international treaty making lies with the federal Government and the Parliament of Canada and it shall not be diluted under any circumstances, we proceeded to select in our judgment the very best team, headed by the very best international and commercial negotiator. I had the honour of asking for, and receiving, the acceptance of Ambassador Simon Reisman who was present on behalf of Canada at the creation of the GATT and who has worked all his life in the Public Service up to the position of Deputy Minister of Finance. Under the instructions of previous governments, he very successfully negotiated the Auto Pact, which has brought such benefits to Canada, notwithstanding predictions to the contrary from other people in this House that it was not going to work. You will hear them again today. The Auto Pact worked because Simon Reisman was the best negotiator in Canada, and we brought him on side to do that job again for the country.

I suppose this leads us to one of the key questions, the rationale and reasoning: why did the Government undertake this historic initiative? It is risky. It provokes controversy and sometimes vexatious and silly questions. It is a "when did you stop beating your wife" situation until you produce the results. We knew that. My Government introduced this historic initiative to create jobs and ensure economic equality for all regions of Canada. Since September of 1984, job creation in Canada has surpassed that of any other industrialized country. We have created 705,000 new jobs as of Friday of last week. Our national unemployment figures have gone from 11.7 per cent down to 9.6 per cent in two years. That is not bad at all.

However, Mr. Speaker, if you look at Friday's figures, I think therein you will see the tragedy. Look at the imbalances in Friday's latest unemployment statistics. These imbalances are largely reflected in our regions and the geography of Canada. Unemployment is down to 9.6 per cent nationally, but in Newfoundland and Labrador unemployment is at 18.4 per cent, and at the other extremity of the country, in British Columbia, unemployment is at 13.3 per cent. Yet in the industrialized heartland of Canada, in Ontario, unemployment is down to 6.8 per cent and in Manitoba it is down to 6.7 per cent, the lowest in the land. What these figures tell us is that over a period of decades, inadvertently, but because of our history and our trading patterns, we are in the process of building two Canadas, one which is rich and promising and one which is underdeveloped and underemployed. That is unacceptable because this Party and this Government stand for one Canada, fairness and equality of opportunity for all.

This is a vital part of that process which will ensure equality of opportunity to all Canadians whoever they are, wherever they live and whatever they do. We are delighted with the prosperity in Manitoba, in Ontario and in certain other regions of the country, but we cannot build prosperity and genuine growth in the country by diminishing anyone else's wealth. What we want is to ensure that Newfoundlanders, British Columbians, Albertans, and others, get their chance, too. They must be given the opportunity to trade their way to new prosperity. That is why I call upon all Hon. Members of the House to set aside the shibboleths and to tell Canadians exactly where they stand today. Are they for this growth and prosperity or are they clinging to the past, because today is a day for the future.

What are the obstacles we have considered? Clearly, in something this important there have been and will continue to be obstacles. First, there is the fact that there are no guarantees. Premier Bourassa of Quebec said that this was a risky but indispensable move, that it had to be done, because the market of 25 million is no longer sufficient in the 21st century to guarantee the kinds of jobs we need. Notwithstanding the progress we have made, and no one can dispute the creation of the 705,000 new jobs, there are still 1.2 million unemployed. It is because I am interested in this, and my Government is interested in this, notwithstanding the risks and not because of the difficulties—we know there are difficulties—we know this requires leadership and daring. There are 1.2 million people still unemployed who are looking to the Parliament of Canada for leadership. I am telling those people that there are new opportunities. Hundreds of thousands of new jobs can be created through trade. This motion is a motion of hope and belief in Canada. That is why I ask the leadership of all Parties to set aside partisanship and to say yes to a more prosperous Canada.

Mr. Mulroney: There are legitimate concerns that have been raised at various times—entirely legitimate concerns. I tried as best I could to deal with some of them in the House when I indicated that the negotiations would not affect our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our commitment to defend our unique cultural identity, or our special linguistic character. These make up the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations. They are legitimate concerns that we have tried as best we can to deal with in the type of atmosphere of fear and panic that some people try to promulgate. We will try to deal with them on a continuing basis.

I wish to salute the leadership and maturity of the Premiers who have set aside the attractiveness of these ephemeral techniques to deal with some of the fundamental issues which have ensured that the profile of a major trading arrangement deal is now emerging. There is indifference in the United States. There has been historic indifference in the United States which has been overcome in large measure—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: We will get to the Liberals in a minute. The whole country is waiting to hear their position. I think the Liberals should have the courtesy of allowing others to set out theirs. They may disagree with the position of the Government, but they have to acknowledge that we have one position, not two, three or four.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Canadian issues were on the back burner in the United States, something which we have managed to overcome. We have done this through initiatives with President Reagan. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has had quarterly meetings with Secretary Shultz. There have been meetings with Secretary Baker, as well as our visit in Canada with Senator Bensten and the leadership that he is seeking to provide to the Senate Finance Committee. We have dealt with the serious question, and let us acknowledge it, of historic indifference in the United States to many of our Canadian concerns. The matter has now been taken from the back burner to a point at which the President of the United States in his State of the Union Address indicated his commitment to bring about a free trade arrangement with Canada. That indicates that we have begun to make some serious progress.

Then, of course, in terms of obstacles, I will acknowledge that in a parliamentary system one of the problems has been the confusion in the Opposition. The signals that go out to the financial community, the signals that go out to the world, the signals that go out to the various negotiators causes the Americans to wonder where the Official Opposition stands. As I have been able to understand it so far, the Liberal policy has to be with respect to trying to garner support on both sides of the issue, unless the issue is particularly sensitive, in which case the Leader of the Liberal Party does not show up to vote.

With respect to the Liberal Party, I can say it no better than Donald Macdonald, a distinguished colleague of my right hon. friend, said it, as reported in The Toronto Star. He said that in a bizarre turn of events Liberal delegates passed a resolution backing free trade in the morning, then supported a policy opposed to free trade at the day's end. Donald Macdonald called the stand of the Party incoherent. Macdonald, who headed a royal commission into the economy last year that favoured free trade, noted that the Party voted for multilateral negotiations, bilateral negotiations, and sectoral negotiations. "From the outside, we look pretty stupid," said Mr. Macdonald. In the national interest I call upon the Leader of the Opposition to deal with that stupidity today and to put the Liberal Party clearly on the record in support of a great national initiative.

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the NDP, we have the resolution of yesterday's convention to consider. As I understand it, the resolution calls upon Canada to withdraw from the comprehensive negotiations with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Mulroney: We have the Leader of the NDP saying that he will propose a policy of full employment. When he is asked how he will do it he does not have the foggiest idea. We know now that it will not be by trade. I tell the Leader of the NDP and the apostles of reaction who have taken over a few of the positions of leadership of the CLC this. Do not become hostages to the past. Reject this call for protectionism because jobs for ordinary Canadians come from trade. We need your help in supporting this kind of great national enterprise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I would now like to deal with the question of research. People say that these matters, of course, have to be considered. Some years ago The Globe and Mail reported that it is often alleged that those supporting liberalized trade have not done their homework. In reality, that is far more true of those who oppose free trade. Among the critics, therefore, rhetoric, passion and a model of nationalism sometimes fill the gap or conceal a defence of economic privilege.

The article went on to ask who the real nationalists are in the free trade debate and who are the defenders of special interests. Who has done the research and who appeals to generalized fears? Those seem to me to be legitimate questions for this House to consider.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), presumably speaking on behalf of his Party, said that the point is that those who argue that a free trade agreement will cost jobs must also look at the other side of the coin. What will protectionism cost us? What will the absence of a free trade arrangement cost us? I salute the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount for his vision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Then there is the MacDonald Commission to consider, as well as the Economic Council of Canada, the C. D. Howe Institute and the Institute for International Economics. Anyone who will contest this—and it is a free country, please go ahead since now is the time to do it—let us hear from you. Let us hear from the research. Let us hear from the scientific data that is available. All of the research, all of the hard practical evidence shows beyond a shadow of a doubt that eliminating trade barriers makes us better off individually and nationally. It makes us richer, gives us more, and permanent jobs and a better future. That is what all of the research indicates. There has been no question of that so far.

What did the Macdonald Commission say? This was a commission headed by a former Minister of Finance, a very distinguished member of the Liberal Party, along with a group of colleagues and millions of dollars—I think $20 million was spent on research. The best people in Canada looked at this issue for a number of years. They concluded, on a prudent course, that free trade will help to make us richer, and by making us richer it will strengthen the fabric of our country and increase our self-confidence.

[Translation]

One of the members of the Macdonald royal inquiry commission, who signed the report after three or four years of inquiry and studies, was Montreal lawyer Michel Robert who has since become President of the Liberal Federation of Canada. I would now expect Mr. Robert to maintain his support for free trade as he did in the signed report, the Macdonald report.

The Economic Council of Canada said that Canada can go forward with these arrangements:

—or it can go backward, accepting the steady erosion of our current access to export markets created by protectionist trade actions.

The Economic Council of Canada forecast a possible—over and above what this Government is going to be able to do with foreign investment and with increased productivity—370,000 new jobs as a result of the initiative if the productivity is increased by, as it indicates, a conservative 5 per cent in certain areas. There will be 370,000 new jobs, Mr. Speaker. Can you imagine what this will do for Nova Scotia, and the help it will give to New Brunswick, Newfoundland and the interior of British Columbia? These are hard facts put out by a distinguished group of economists, Canada's leading group of economists. They say there are hundreds of thousands of new jobs. If Hon. Members are opposed to it, let them give us the information that justifies their absence of faith in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Richard Lipsey and Murray Smith say that the free trade agreement:

—offers the most promising opportunity to create a more efficient, adaptive, and outward-looking Canadian—and U.S.—economy that would provide rising living standards and expanding employment opportunities for the great majority of people.

The Business Council of British Columbia said:

—we must adopt long-term policies based on economic realities which recognize our relationship with the U.S.

[Translation]

La Presse: "Mr. Mulroney's statement is realistic, opens the door to a wide-ranging agreement with the United States and respects the right of Canadians to define the content of a future agreement as negotiations progress". "Canadian culture will never flourish if it fails to stand up to straightforward competition on its own turf, and it must do so outside the country as well."

[English]

John Kenneth Galbraith said:

I read in the papers that Canadians are concerned that free trade will impair their sovereignty and bring Canada ever more dangerously under American influence. This is nonsense. The American influence is there, no one can doubt, but it is a factor of geography, not of trade.

That is why I ask Hon. Members to set aside the nonsense and to deal with trade as a job creating issue for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Pierre Lortie, President of Provigo, one of our great businessmen and economic thinkers in Quebec, says: "It would be criminal not to pursue aggressively negotiations for an agreement with the United States".

[English]

The Canada West Foundation said:

The second compelling reason for arguing for a free trade arrangement with the U.S. is the competitiveness issue, what we like to call the faith in Canadians approach. This approach argues that by adopting a more open market and competitive spirit in Canada an environment will be created which would raise Canadian living standards, employment prospects and quality of life.

The Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce say that this trade is:

to promote industrial decentralization in Canada—

Surely, Mr. Speaker, in light of the unemployment results, notwithstanding tremendous progress by this House and this country in the last two and a half years, and we hear the plea of the Atlantic Provinces Chamber of Commerce and the plea that Premier Peckford made at the First Ministers, Conference where he indicated that Newfoundlanders since coming into confederation had only about 52 or 53 per cent per capita income of people in Ontario who are now at 115 per cent as opposed to 52 per cent, this is the growing of two Canadas, and it is unacceptable. We must require and have the assistance of everyone, including the Opposition Parties for people in other parts of Canada who need jobs and prosperity, and trade is the way you guarantee that.

In southwestern Ontario, in London, there is a very generous view of the Canadian responsibility. We read:

> The better and safer bet would be to try to negotiate a freer trade agreement with the U.S. that would open up new opportunities for productive Canadian firms and businesses, while also safeguarding social, cultural and political values essential to our Canadian identity.

The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix wrote:

> To be too fearful of possible consequences would be to invite greater economic isolation.

Perhaps I could conclude—

Mr. Fulton: Tell us something.

Mr. Axworthy: When do you start your speech?

Mr. Mulroney: I will be glad to quote from a great Canadian nationalist, Richard Gwyn, whose credentials are unchallenged.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Liberals and the New Democrats are laughing at a journalist of the esteem and commitment to Canada of a Richard Gwyn. I tell Hon. Members his credentials are unchallenged. I will read a statement from his book:

> A national vote in favour of bilateral free trade would represent the ultimate declaration by Canadians of self-confidence in themselves, confidence both in their ability to compete and in their ability to continue as a distinct political and social unit.

There is a commitment to Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We have garnered the support in this initiative, although some parties would suggest that we have been alone. We have not been alone. The Premiers, the Governments of all political stripes, business leaders from John Bulloch to Jean de Grandpré, from Tom D'Aquino to Pierre Lorti, from Pierre Macdonald to Jacques Parizeau are with us. It is important to note as we begin the debate the extent to which those outside of this House are non-partisan, the extent to which people do take a broader view of politics, politicians and the future of our country.

[Translation]

The Canadian Chamber of Commerce has expressed its support, and also the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses, the Consumers Association of Canada, the Canadian Export Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Business Council on National Issues.

[English]

> Negotiators for both countries should strive for the largest possible elimination of barriers to trade, having a broad comprehensive free trade agreement in mind. Such an approach would be in the best interest of both countries.

That is the statement from the Hon. Marc Lalonde.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Is this where you are getting your advice?

Mr. Blaikie: He is the guy who designed the National Energy Program.

Mr. Mulroney: And what are the results, Mr. Speaker?

As far as we are concerned, we know there is no magic formula. The process is always a painful one in a country like ours, especially in the case of such important and historical initiatives. Nevertheless, to me and my colleagues, international trade stands for jobs, prosperity, regional growth and a future for our children. Mr. Speaker, we must consider the impact that initiatives such as establishing new trade relations with the United States will have by strengthening the economy and the unity of this country in the next century.

[English]

Nothing is perfect, we acknowledge. Let us consider at the end of the day the alternatives. Who knows, maybe there will be strokes of brilliance and we look forward to hearing them. We will listen to them dispassionately and carefully. If the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party has a progressive, dynamic suggestion in terms of the manner in which we create new jobs—there is no pride of fraternity in something as important as unemployment—we will take the idea, consider it in the House and, if it will create those kinds of jobs, we will deal with it appropriately.

But consider the implications for Canada for economic growth and Canadian unity of new trading arrangements with our largest partner which can produce hundreds of thousands of new jobs, which can increase our productivity, spur on our competitiveness here and around the world. Consider that in the light as well of what has already been initiated with the provinces, the Government of Ontario and all the other provinces, of a new commitment to national science and technology programs. Consider that in the light as well of another building block, so important for all Members of this House, namely, a question of tax reform based on fairness and equity bound together by a new constitutional formula which will allow Quebec to be brought back into the Canadian family. This is a building block of greatness. This is what the House is considering today as the future of Canada. It is an act of faith in Canada.

It has often been said that young men have visions and old men dream dreams. This is a day for Canada. This is a day both for visions and great dreams. It is a commitment to the future of Canada. It is a commitment to the youth of Canada, to our unity and to our integrity as a nation.

• (1210)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this debate should have been held two years ago today, the day before the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) met the President of the United States at the so-called Shamrock Summit and committed our two countries by way of a joint declaration on trade. That declaration was made and jointly signed by the head of our Government and the President of the United States without any prior parliamentary debate, without any prior warning to the Parliament and people of Canada, and without any mandate from the people of Canada because it was not an issue in the last general election.

My first observation this afternoon is to say that despite the opportunity given to us by the Government for the debate, after listening to the Prime Minister this morning and into the afternoon, Canadians are no further ahead and are no wiser than we were two years ago. We wonder why we had this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is true, we have learned, that the Prime Minister has a great clipping service. He called from among newspapers and reports of Chambers of Commerce which he could find for some selective approval. He cited my good friend and successor in the Ministry of Finance, Donald Macdonald. I said to Donald, when he came out with the report of the Macdonald Commission and asked Canadians to take a "leap of faith": "Fine, take a leap of faith, but as a Canadian before I do that I would prefer to know where I land".

The Prime Minister has given us no details, no further information, no further factual data, and no precision at all on the Government's position in the negotiations with the United States. We do not know what is negotiable. We do not know what is not negotiable.

We read the motion. It has been called a motherhood motion. We would have thought the Prime Minister might have given us more explanation of what the Government meant. He did not talk much about sovereignty and how we would reconcile that sovereignty in a comprehensive free trade arrangement with the United States. He mentioned nothing about our social programs, how they were to be interfaced. He did not make a defence of our agricultural marketing systems, as the motion sets forth. He made absolutely no reference to the auto industry or to the Auto Pact, more specifically. He talked in only vague terms once again about our unique cultural identity. Canadians are no further ahead after listening to the Prime Minister through their representatives in Parliament, than they were two years ago tomorrow when he made that declaration with the President of the United States.

Of course it is quite clear now that the Government continues to adhere to its game plan as outlined in the leaked communications strategy document which we produced in the House of Commons a year and a half ago. When the issue of free trade was first brought to the attention of Canadians, the game plan as declared in that document—and its authenticity has never been denied—quite simply was to keep Canadians ignorant of what was being discussed in the trade negotiations because the less Canadians knew, the better chance the Government would have to sell it.

The document, if I might recall, also recommended a dirty tricks campaign against those perceived Members of Parliament who might take issue with the initiative of the Government, including a number of Members of Parliament who sit on this side of the House, beginning with the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra. It is a strategy on how to get us in our own particular ridings if we opposed the initiative of the Government of Canada. I quote from that document:

> The strategy should rely less on educating the general public than on getting the message that the trade initiative is a good idea; in other words, a selling job.

Those were the words of that communique. That has been, and consistently so, the strategy of the Government. It was maintained today in the Prime Minister's speech, because we do not know any more than we did two years ago about where the Government stands in these negotiations on the major issues which have to be dealt with in the negotiations.

A year and a half ago when a resolution was introduced in the House we had a vague 15-minute speech from the Prime Minister clothed in generalities, clothed in shibboleth, laced with rhetoric, and garnished with his usual hyperbole. We got that again today; it took him a little longer. When we are able to analyse and compare the two speeches, he was probably more forthcoming in that first 15-minute speech a year and a half ago.

Perhaps the Opposition should not have pressed so hard for the Government to bring the matter before Parliament or prevailed upon the Government to come clean with Canadians, to let us know, as representatives of people from one end of Canada to the other, where the Government is taking us, what are the general parameters, what is at stake, what is not at stake, what is at issue, and what is not at issue. Perhaps we should not have pressed so hard because the Prime Minister has been a great disappointment to the country this morning.

I thought we were to have a statesmen-like review. For a while the Prime Minister restrained himself, and then of course he descended into the style of the bear pit that he likes. I will try to resist but, since he has opened the door, I think Members of Parliament on this side of the House will be excused if from time to time we do not retain the same shrewd control of ourselves that we should.

Concluding a free trade agreement would bring about profound changes in nearly all aspects of our economy in the years to come. It would have a considerable impact on our way of life, our trading habits, our national sovereignty, our independence and certainly on the quality of life in the northern part of this continent.

The Prime Minister has embarked upon a risky undertaking, and he is once again refusing to let us know the stakes involved. The Government has no mandate from Canadians to negotiate a free trade agreement. There was no mention of this during the election campaign, and in fact we would not even be discussing the matter here in the House, if the opposition Parties had not insisted on having this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I also think that the presentation of this motion at this point in time relates much more to the domestic problems now experienced by the Government than to our trade relations with the United States.

[English]

This debate should have happened first, not last. As the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Canada's International Relations stated in 1985, and I should like to quote from the unanimous report:

> It is premature for Canada to initiate formal bilateral negotiations with the United States to determine the receptivity to liberalizing bilateral trade. After a ministerial report to Parliament on the outcome of these discussions and on whether certain conditions have been met, the Government should decide whether the prospects are sufficiently promising to continue on to detailed negotiations.

What the joint report suggested in unanimous terms is that Parliament ought to be apprised in general terms of the discussions. There ought to be a consensus on the parameters as to how those discussions ought to be directed and how they should go, and only then should formal negotiations be initiated with the United States. The Government of our country ignored that advice. Instead, it went headlong into a process for which it was ill-prepared.

[Translation]

What I had asked at the time, and what my colleagues on this side of the House and the committee members have since asked on many occasions, was that Parliament and the Canadian people be made fully aware of all the parameters of Canada's position before the beginning of official negotiations with the United States.

• (1220)

We have asked on several occasions in committee and elsewhere for the cost-benefit analysis of the impact of such a deal upon Canada. In May, 1986, the Government released 24 trade-enhancement studies, but every piece of information which would have given us the slightest indication of the impact on a given sector or a given region of Canada was censored. Whole pages of those documents were absolutely eliminated. What was missing in the 18-minute gap in the Watergate tape is just a tiny blip compared to what was left out of these documents.

The Government was sticking to its game plan, an approach popularized by the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who said during the last election campaign: "If we told you what we were going to do, we'd never get elected". I think that was the most honest, forthcoming and frank statement we have ever heard from a member of the government side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians are giving a clear message to the Prime Minister. They are saying: "Mr. Prime Minister, would you deal honestly with us, would you give us the facts, would you give us the data upon which we can make judgments about the affairs of state and the issues before us?" I believe that if given the facts and if given an opportunity to assess those facts over a reasonable period of time, Canadians will make the right judgment. The gap in the process now before the country is that the Government does not trust Canadians, it is not giving Canadians the facts and it is not allowing the people of Canada to make a fair judgment about what is going on.

After this morning's intervention by the Prime Minister, we still do not know what is being negotiated. The vocabulary changes almost as often as the Prime Minister's valet changes his shirt. I remind the Prime Minister of the statement he made in 1983 on free trade. He said during the leadership campaign of June 1983 in a debate with the now Minister of Transport and the now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) about free trade: "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it". Then on July 4, 1985, The Ottawa Citizen quoted the Prime Minister as saying: "We never discussed free trade. Enhanced trade or trade agreements impact not only on the United States but on our trading relationship with allies and upon GATT".

A little later on July 8, 1985,— Brian Mulroney, quoted in a Montreal daily, Le Devoir, said: "I agree with the expression "improvement of trade relations" but not with the words "free trade."

[English]

These were the opinions upon which the people of Canada were entitled to rely. These were the opinions upon which the Parliament of Canada was entitled to rely before, suddenly, the Prime Minister, in order to enhance his photo image with the President, unrehearsed and unplanned, with no advice to the people of Canada, signed that joint declaration.

Canadians want to know how far we are going and in what direction. Is it free trade? Is it freer trade? Is it enhanced trade or is it a bilateral arrangement? Is it a comprehensive free trade arrangement? The motion before the House does not answer those questions. Just three hours prior to the motion being printed, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in response to questions in the House of Commons last Wednesday called it a comprehensive free trade arrangement. At the same time, in response to another question, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) called it a comprehensive trade arrangement. Yesterday in her CTV interview, the Minister simply called it free trade. In fact, she used the words "free trade" 14 times in that single interview. What is it?

What we have before us today is not a free trade motion. It is either a considerable retreat from the Government's position as expressed in the joint declaration, as expressed in Ministerial statements and Ministerial responses in the House of Commons and as expressed to journalists, or it is a disguise to get a comprehensive free trade deal. There is nothing in the motion and there was nothing in the Prime Minister's speech today to tell us which direction the Government really contemplates and where it stands on the issue.

The motion is empty, Mr. Speaker. The motion does not give the House any indication of the direction the Government will take in the negotiations with the United States.

And what about the role of the provinces? There is no consensus among the provincial premiers concerning the nature of the agreement which should be concluded.

Yet, a number of questions under study are related to provincial jurisdiction. They affect provincial purchasing policies: Ontario and Saskatchewan purchase programs, grants to agriculture and industry, and so on.

Last month the Premier of Quebec reiterated his conviction that his province has a right of veto in these negotiations. And the Premier of Ontario expressed the same views.

In their meeting with the Prime Minister last week, eight provincial premiers insisted on the need to ratify any trade agreement Ottawa might sign.

Sad to say, the position of the provincial premiers is the same as ours as members and the same as that of most Canadians: we do not know what the Government is negotiating and, quite simply, we are not confident that it can negotiate an agreement favourable to Canada.

[English]

Of course the United States is our largest and most important trading partner. In no way do I contest the emphasis the Prime Minister puts on those figures. Of course we should seek greater access to American markets as part of our over-all opening to the world. However, entering into these talks has been ill-timed. There is rising protectionist sentiments in the United States reflected in the newly elected Democratic Congress. There have been years of trade surpluses with the United States and we felt at the outset that this was not the best time to try to obtain a better over-all deal with the United States.

I would say quite frankly that the Government has been absolutely naive in thinking that the very fact of initiating negotiations with the United States, negotiations on free trade or on whatever, as the motion does not indicate what it is, would by itself dissipate the protectionist sentiment in the United States Congress. Of course that has not happened. During these negotiations we have been held hostage by the Congress and the administration of the United States. At the same time as the Americans were negotiating with our negotiators, presumably for a free trade deal, they imposed a 35 per cent tariff on B.C. shakes and shingles. They forced us to impose on ourselves a 15 per cent export tax on lumber. They forced us to truncate our pharmaceutical legislation in order to please the pharmaceutical companies in the United States. On issue after issue, this country has been held hostage by the protectionist sentiment in the United States and the very fact of these negotiations has had no influence at all on the conduct or reaction of the Americans.

I think there is a question which needs to be put to the Government, with which the Government has not dealt, and we have put the question to Ministers and to the Prime Minister on other occasions. What is the real purpose of these negotiations on the American side? Reading the recently introduced amendments to the U.S. trade legislation, and particularly that piece of legislation now supported in a Democratic Senate by 53 or 54 Senators on both sides of the aisle, one observes that that legislation does not talk about free trade, freer trade or even fair trade. It is a piece of legislation designed to manage the trade of the United States in the interests of the United States. It sets forth a mechanism making it impossible if fully applied for any country trading with the United States to do so on a bilateral basis. It must do so only subject to the will and whim of the United States Congress.

I ask the Prime Minister if we have an undertaking. What is the real purpose of the Americans? Do they want a free trade arrangement with Canada or are they using this mechanism as a way of extracting from us a series of managed trade agreements to their favour? First lumber; what is next, potash, oil and gas, steel, services? We do not know. We have received no report from the Prime Minister. Surely he told the Premiers where he stood. Surely he told the Premiers what the chances were and what was at stake. If he did, fine, but he certainly has not put Members of Parliament in the same position. We have the fundamental role and duty of voting on this matter and recommending to our constituents what the attitude of the country ought to be.

We in the Liberal Party have always favoured finding ways with the U.S. of enhancing access to each other's markets. We believe our policy must be developed as part of a global approach to trade and not focus solely on the U.S. The Prime Minister says he is impatient with the GATT process, it takes too long. That process has served this country well, because as we cut deals in GATT negotiations we have always been able to make on the side a better arrangement with the U.S. than I believe we will ever be able to make head to head in the current negotiations.

The Government refuses to put forward its actual negotiating position. It gives us conflicting reports as to what is actually being negotiated. This resolution tells us nothing. The Prime Minister added nothing upon which we could assess the position of the negotiations. Therefore we will vote against the motion.

The Government and the Minister for International Trade will probably use the excuse that it cannot tell us where the negotiations are because it would impede the negotiations. Surely the Premiers have been given some idea of where the Government is. We have had a series of selective leaks by Mr.

Reisman and others in order to enhance the Government's position every once in a while, hype up the negotiations and titillate the Canadian public. However, when the people of Canada, through their Members of Parliament, ask for the information they are entitled to concerning the range and parameters of the negotiations, the Prime Minister does not tell us, and neither does the Minister for International Trade. Members of Parliament are left completely in the dark and that we cannot accept.

It appears that if these negotiations continue we are going to be faced with some kind of agreement. Whatever it is, the Government will stagger away from the table and cry victory. We have decided to submit an amendment to this House and to the country outlining the basic conditions we believe must be met in any negotiations with the U.S. We have made it detailed and not followed the Government's example of this vacuous motion before the House. These are the principles of our trade policy as it concerns the United States.

I will introduce the amendment at the proper time, at the conclusion of what I have to say, but the conditions we propose include protection of our sovereignty, limiting of U.S. protectionist action, restoring our previous access on softwood lumber, reduction of non-tariff barriers, preservation of our ability to legislate in areas such as social policy, agriculture, regional development, the environment, financial and service industries, language and culture, the Auto Pact, and the provision of adjustment assistance and the ending of U.S. trade harassment on potash, steel, fish, energy and agriculture. We have set forth a blueprint for the Government, if it continues these negotiations, as to where we stand on the negotiations. We do that because the government motion is far more interesting for what it has excluded than for what it actually says. It is, as The Toronto Star put it, a motherhood resolution. That great newspaper has advised us—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —to vote for the resolution, but with due respect to that institution, we would be betraying the people of Canada if we supported the motion, and we do not.

In the motion before the House the Government is simply saying this. Give us a complete and free hand. Trust us. I can assure the Prime Minister that at this time in his mandate the Canadian people do not trust him and we do not trust the future of these negotiations and that is why we are spelling it out in this particular way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Trust us, says the Prime Minister. We will go down and get a good deal. We will do it, the motion says, "while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity".

Let us examine that motion because it is a joke, but Canadians are not laughing after hearing the Prime Minister this morning. Are we going to trust that Government to protect our sovereignty? That is the same Government which dithered and delayed over the passage of the Polar Sea through our northern waters. It challenged that passage only after the waters had been traversed by the Polar Sea. Can we trust that Government after it sold out our fishermen to France and our pharmaceutical industry to the U.S? That Government gave away everything the Americans wanted before these negotiations ever began. If you are going to negotiate with the U.S. on any kind of trade, why was FIRA and the National Energy Program dismantled first? Why not leave them as part of the bargaining process? Why throw away all our cards so early? I would enjoy a poker game with the Prime Minister because he lays his cards out before he even knows what is at stake.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, are we going to rely on the Government to protect our social programs, this Government which made an attempt to de-index old age security pensions and which, in its three budgets, put an unfair burden on the shoulders of low and middle income Canadians, and widened the gap between rich and poor Canadians as a result of the largest tax increases ever in this country? No, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to put our faith in this Government.

[English]

What do the words "agricultural marketing systems" mean? Does it just mean marketing boards or does it include financing through the Farm Credit Corporation? Does it include advance payments for grain under the Canadian Wheat Board Act? Does it include freight rates? We do not know because the motion is deliberately vague, keeping the people of Canada in the dark on the one hand and giving the Government of Canada the widest flexibility on the other. We deserve to know more.

The motion says the Government will protect the auto industry. Does that mean the Auto Pact? The Minister said in her interview, as she has already said 1,001 times, that the Auto Pact is not on the table. However, in the Prime Minister's speech in Montreal last week, although he did not mention it today, he said the Auto Pact was not on the table because the other side had not raised it. However, in the next breath he said if they did raise it, it could become part of the discussions. What is it going to be? If tariffs on auto parts and vehicles are given up, the Auto Pact becomes meaningless.

[Translation]

The motion before the House also affirms that the Government will protect "our unique cultural identity". But what does it mean? Does it include our cultural industries? Where was this protection when the Government authorized the Prentice Hall takeover by the Gulf and Western companies?

[English]

One of the most glaring omissions from this motion, the rest of it being vague vapidities, is any mention of regional equality and the programs to bring it about. In Montreal and again today the Prime Minister said that the Government would never abandon its commitment to regional development. Why is that not mentioned in the motion? Why is something so fundamental to the governing of this country left out? In those circumstances how can the Prime Minister vote for the motion? How can the Minister of Transport vote for the motion? Indeed, how can any Member on that side of the House vote for the motion? It is a vote, as the Prime Minister said, on Canada's future, but the Government, instead of giving Canadians the facts, is asking this House for a blank cheque.

• (1240)

With regard to the Government's regional economic development policy, the Prime Minister mentioned that the trade option is the one solution for Atlantic Canada. The only trade option that the people of Newfoundland have under this Government is to trade unemployment in Newfoundland for a $4 an hour job in Toronto. The Prime Minister said that we must give Newfoundland, Alberta and B.C. a kick at the can. This morning he gave those provinces a kick in the can. This sounds like the rhetoric of an election speech. During the election campaign he promised to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland. Those were his words. Two years later he is still making the same kind of promise and that promise will not work.

The Prime Minister can say what he likes, but we know the Government's attitude to regional equality. Its spending cut-backs on regional development projects are ample proof of this. The House will recall that spending on these projects dropped from $14 billion in 1984-85 to $12 billion in 1986-87.

[English]

In his speech in Montreal before the weekend the Prime Minister said that a trade agreement with the United States "is a critical element for any meaningful regional development strategy". In other words, he is telling the Atlantic, western Canada and northern Canada to wait until we are finished negotiating with the United States, then we will get around to them.

[Translation]

However, seven out of 10 provinces in Canada now have higher unemployment than was the case during the worst days of the recession. For Canadians living in the disadvantaged regions of this country, the Government's message this morning boils down to this: If you don't like it, though, move somewhere else! That is not the Liberal view, Mr. Speaker. We do not want a country where we have to tell Canadians who cannot find jobs in disadvantaged regions: Move to Vancouver, move to Toronto, move to Montreal!

[English]

We believe that equality of opportunity is the cornerstone enshrined in the Charter of Rights. No matter where you live you should have an equal opportunity for an education, a job and a secure retirement. That is fundamental to our view of the country. It is constitutionally enshrined but is not recognized in any way in the motion before the House recommending a bilateral arrangement with the United States.

I suspect that these very regional economic development programs are being discussed in the negotiations. I suspect that that is why there is no mention of those programs or of regional economic equality in this motion. We have consistently demanded to know what is on the table in these negotiations and what is not on the table. The Government has given us a variety of answers. Sometimes some things are on, sometimes they are off.

Last week the Minister for International Trade told us in the House that we would, in her words, have to find out what is going to be in an over-all agreement before we can identify whether federal or provincial jurisdiction applies. That is incredible. Is she telling the House that she does not know what Mr. Reisman is negotiating, that she does not know what Mr. Reisman and Mr. Murphy are talking about? Is she not informed? If she is informed, why does she not tell us? Why does she not give us some simple responses to some simple questions so that Canadians will have a better inkling of where their Government is taking them?

This motion is so vague that we believe the Government does not really know what it wants. Either it does not know what it wants or it is presuming on the goodwill of the country not to tell us what it wants. Either the Government knows and is not telling, or is in the even more precarious position of not knowing.

The Americans certainly know what they want. The office of the U.S. trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, published a list called the National Trade Estimate; 1986 Report on Foreign Trade Barriers. The top trade representative of the United States has set forth in the Cabinet of the United States a clear list of priorities that he and his Government want to discuss with Canada. I am going to send the Minister a copy so that she will know what the Americans want to discuss even if she is not willing to tell us what Canadians want to discuss. I will put on the record that which the Americans want to discuss because they are very clearly set forth.

They want to discuss all tariffs, especially those on textiles, footwear, paper products, furniture, toys, telecommunications equipment, processed foods, electrical products, railway cars and parts, manufactured metal products, and some auto parts. They want to discuss the elimination of all discriminatory liquor practices; the role of the Canadian Wheat Board, particularly import permits; footwear quotas; standards on plywood; government procurement policies, including Supply and Services' 10 per cent price preference on Canadian content; freight rate subsidies; and copyright protection. They want to discuss pharmaceuticals, especially patent legislation, which, by the way, the Government has already acquiesced to by presenting legislation to increase drug prices for Canadians just to help salvage these trade talks. They want to discuss cross-border broadcasting, magazine advertising, trucking, especially Canada's entry standards; the requirement that data processing of Canadian banks be done in Canada; Investment Canada review of culturally sensitive sectors such as books, films, video and audio recordings; Canadian 50 per cent ownership requirement for oil and gas projects on federal lands; and federal and provincial grants for oil and gas exploration. In addition, they want to discuss financial assistance for oil and gas and mineral exploration, agriculture, publishing, and retail and wholesale commerce; performance requirements on foreign investors; i.e. favouring Canadian suppliers; and postal rates which favour Canadian businesses. That is the American list.

We have had no response from the Government as to where we stand on some of the major items. We have not asked for that type of detail. We know that there must be some negotiating flexibility. However, on the major areas this country should have been as forthcoming as the Americans have been. Whatever one might say about their system, it is an open democracy. The Prime Minister promised us open government and has not given us the type of information we want. Where is our list? What are we after? We do not have the Government's list so have set out our list in our amendment so that the people of Canada will know where the Liberal Party stands on those issues as parameters for the negotiations.

I do not doubt the Prime Minister's word, and I second his feeling, that we are very lucky to be living next to the United States. I think they are a great people. I enjoy, as much as anyone in the House, visiting the United States. We all have American friends and one of three Canadians has an American relative.

Mr. Crombie: And there's baseball.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have a lot of admiration for the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) but he has only been bunting in here. Let us talk about baseball because the Americans always talk about a level playing field. However, they are really referring to a football field. When the Americans talk about fair trade and a level playing field they are talking about a field with their linesmen, their lines, their rules, their ball and their referee. That is the kind of level playing field they are talking about and he ought to remember that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Americans have the tendency to change the rules when they find they are losing. In the Tokyo Round we gained the right of free access to the American market of Canadian lumber. We paid for that in a trading negotiation. We had to give up other items including computer equipment. When the Americans found that we were starting to take an appreciable percentage of their domestic market, they changed the rules by using the unilateral countervailing system. The Prime Minister must not be naive in these negotiations. We want meaningful restrictions on countervail.

Speaking of lumber, we saw the Minister's great negotiating skills at work. The U.S. industry called for protection, as it did in 1983. Our lumber industry, supported by good ministerial back-up in 1983, was able to win that case conclusively before the American Inter-Congress Tribunals. The law had not changed since 1983 and the facts had not changed since 1983. Although there was a rising protectionist sentiment in the United States, the main thing that changed was the will and backbone of the Canadian Government to back up a Canadian industry in those negotiations. Undoubtedly, the negotiating prowess of the Minister for International Trade during the lumber dispute will be a case study for business schools across Canada, and presumably even the United States. When is a final offer not a final offer? When is it a final offer? We saw one final offer after another. The Government, through the Minister, pleaded guilty before the American tribunal before the case was ever heard and gave it all the evidence it needed. We still believe that the Minister sold us out and could have done better.

We will wait to see how the issue is eventually determined because the sell-out on Canadian lumber will cost industry at least $600 million per year. If it is ever transferred to a stumpage fee the cost against our industry will probably be $1 billion a year because of the value-added process. Yet the Minister said it is a good deal for Canada and a victory for the country. It will go down as the greatest sell-out in the history of our negotiations with the United States, and the greatest betrayal of a major industry in Canada by a Minister who should be responsible for the export potential of Canada.

The Americans smile because they know it sets a dangerous precedent for other resource and export industries, including pulp and paper, steel, potash, oil and gas, and hydro, as I suggested to the Premier of Quebec.

If this is the style of negotiation we can expect from the Government we will be lucky to keep our shirts on our backs when the matter is eventually brought before the House. That is why the country is nervous and why our Party will not give a blank cheque to the Government. That is why we have asked for more facts and why we are so deeply disappointed with the Prime Minister in failing to use this opportunity for debate to enlarge the factual base upon which Canadians and their Members of Parliament can make a judgment.

I stated from the outset that the Government should have negotiated a standstill agreement on unilateral action, such as harassment to countervail or anti-dumping, prior to the negotiations with the United States. The former Premier of British Columbia, Bill Bennett, took exactly the same position during the lumber dispute. We felt it was illogical for a government of Canada to pursue negotiations in trade with the United States while being beset by unprovoked and unannounced unilateral action. There should not be protectionist harassment if we are supposed to be negotiating a free trade style agreement.

The very day that our negotiators sat down with the Americans, the President of the United States slapped a 35 per cent tariff on British Columbia red cedar shakes and shingles. That was not a good omen for how these negotiations have been carried out. There has not been a good omen since, primarily because of the blanket of secrecy the Government has thrown over the negotiations.

I have also said since the beginning that any agreement with the United States which does not severely limit or eliminate the use of countervail action, such as we saw in the lumber case, will not be worth the paper on which it is written.

The United States has signed a free trade agreement with one other country. It is the State of Israel. In that agreement the Americans did not give up their right to impose countervail action against whatever they consider to be unfair practices. Certainly, members of the Congress tell our Members and leading Senators tell me that the United States Congress is in no mood to give up that remedy under the U.S. Trade Act of 1978. I might point out that in that agreement the United States has the right to prohibit Israel from aiding any new industries. The United States has achieved essentially a controlling element over the future development of that country.

Any deal which allows the current use of countervailing duties will not be fair, will not be free, and will not get the support of Canadians. While we would welcome a dispute resolution mechanism or a joint tribunal between the two countries, an agreement that does not have an appreciable, significant restriction for countervail will not be worth signing on behalf of the country. If there ever is an agreement, under the fast track procedure the Senate, particularly, and perhaps the House of Representatives, will have an opportunity to review whatever document is agreed upon.

The Prime Minister states quite clearly that it is a federal matter, although there will be a need for corresponding provincial legislation in areas of provincial jurisdiction in order for the agreement to be effective. Despite the prerogative of the Government to sign such a treaty without parliamentary approval, I hope the Prime Minister will follow the precedent of the Columbia River Treaty that was signed when Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister. I was Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister concerned at the time and the Government gave Members of Parliament, through a Committee of the House, a full opportunity to examine that treaty, to call the negotiators, as well as the opponents and advocates of the treaty and everyone with a legitimate interest before the parliamentary committee. I hope Members of Parliament, who are elected by the people of Canada, would have a similar right to review the terms and ambit of any agreement with the United States.

In his televised address to the nation last year, the Prime Minister said that our goods would receive "national treatment" in the United States. However, he didn't mention that "national treatment" works both ways. He said: "Goods from Manitoba will be treated exactly the same as goods from Minnesota". However, that is only half of the equation because goods from Minnesota will also be treated like goods from Manitoba, in Manitoba. That has tremendous implications for both federal and provincial procurement policies and subsidies, marketing boards, and tax incentives to business.

Yesterday, in her interview, the Minister for International Trade said that the negotiators have not discussed the subject. Who do we believe, the Prime Minister who talked about national treatment about which there is nothing in the motion before the House, or the Minister with her statement to journalists yesterday on television?

We had hoped that today we would finally get a clear statement from the Prime Minister about what is at stake in these negotiations. Rather than hear that statement, we have more uncertainty and more confusion.

How will Canadians adjust? Will there be adjustment assistance for industries, for our workers, and for our regions? Is the phase-in period 12 years, 10 years, five years, or two years? Where are the training programs for our workers and our young people and those men and women in their 40s and 50s who, through no fault of their own, are displaced by technological change or potentially by a trade arrangement?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I regret to interrupt the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). Considering the time and the fact that we have not heard from the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I wonder whether the House might not be disposed to sit through the normal lunch hour.

Mr. Tobin: Why did you not do that when he was finished?

Mr. Mazankowski: I would have waited until he was finished but we only had a minute left. I regret having to interrupt the Hon. Leader.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has suggested that the Chair not see the clock. That is what the House has done continually in the past. I gather there is agreement to that. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not take umbrage with the Deputy Prime Minister's proper intervention.

What is happening to our educational system and research and development? The Government has consistently cut training programs and has cut its commitment to post-secondary education. That is wrong, regardless of a free trade agreement. Any trading arrangement will not repair the lack of our ability to compete because of our lack of development in research, education, and apprenticeship. If the Government assumes that great opportunities will flow from a trade agreement, how will we capitalize on those opportunities if our workforce lacks the expertise and skills and the required training?

A trade agreement is no substitute for a lack of national economic policy. It is no substitute for a national economic policy on productivity, on working to make us more competitive, on getting us to work smarter and think smarter and to compete around the world. This Government has abandoned that kind of policy, putting all its eggs in one basket by relying on increased U.S. trade as the sole salvation of our economy.

• (1300)

The Liberal Party's trade policy is to fight hard to ensure that any agreement with the United States does not limit those opportunities, or limit our political independence as a nation. Bringing us closer together economically has its risks in terms of our sovereignty, the independence of our foreign policy, our culture, social programs and our regional economic equality. These are important to us. We do not want them negotiated away. I have spoken on two or three other occasions on this trade matter when we had to set the agenda ourselves with our own motions. We enjoy the type of uniqueness and distinction of living on the northern half of this continent with a separate political system, separate traditions, a multicultural mosaic, two official languages and a limitless inheritance in terms of the environment. We like doing things our way. Yet we are an outward looking nation. We do not believe in fortress Canada. We look outward. I do not believe we would feel comfortable in fortress North America. I think we have to be very, very careful as to how we analyse this situation. We respect our American neighbours. We value them as trading partners. However, we will not bargain away our rights as Canadians to control our own destiny.

It is for all these reasons that I present the following amendment to the Government's motion. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy):

> That the Motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "arrangement" and by substituting the following:
> "or arrangements with the United States, as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions,
> Namely that:
> There not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States since such an arrangement would undermine Canada's political, economic and cultural independence; and would jeopardize Canada's regional development policies, agricultural policies, cultural industries, financial service industries, and the Auto Pact;
> And that:
> Any such negotiations are designed to gain greater access to U.S. markets by limiting the operation of contingency protection and non-tariff barriers such as current U.S. and State government procurement regulations and restoring previous access for softwood lumber in U.S. markets;
> While at the same time:
> Ensuring Canadian independence for domestic programs, policies and legislative authority in areas such as: social policy, agricultural marketing, supply management and support programs; subsidies and assistance for regional and industrial development programs including high technology development; the Auto Pact; the environment; bilingualism (including labelling); culture (including cultural industries); financial and service industries;
> And that:
> The Government of Canada tables transitional adjustment assistance proposals to protect those workers, sectors, firms and businesses which may be adversely affected by such a trading arrangement or arrangements;
> And that:
> The Government of Canada secure an immediate standstill of U.S. trade harassment including such matters as agriculture, energy, fish, potash, and steel."

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has completed his address. The House has agreed to not see the clock and we will be looking to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to speak on behalf of the New Democratic Party. In the meantime, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has proposed a motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I think I should indicate to the House now that the obligation of the Chair is to examine the motion to see that it is in order and to report back as soon as it is appropriate. In the meantime, it is my suggestion that the debate continue and I would recognize the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the central Canadian reality in terms of political and economic relationships is, of course, the relationship we have with the United States of America. Therefore, any measure which comes before the Parliament of Canada which directly impinges upon that relationship in a significant way has to be one which is treated with utmost seriousness by members of all Parties on both sides of the House.

Two years ago the Government of Canada launched a major initiative in terms of its proposed change in economic relationships between Canada and the United States. During the intervening period, serious questions have been raised about the implications of that course of direction on Canadian life. Quite specifically, simply to cite the motion we have before us today, questions have been raised about Canadian sovereignty, about the impact on Canadian agriculture, on our cultural industries, on the automotive sector, and one could extend the list. The impact on almost every aspect of Canadian existence is involved in such a trade relationship, and serious questions have been raised in the last two years about the expansion of this trade relationship.

This debate, in terms of historical comparisons, appropriately ought to raise in Canadian minds the great historical debates we witnessed in this country going back to the founding of our nation, debates involving Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier and, in different circumstances in the post-war period, debates which have involved Lester Pearson and John Diefenbaker. I say this because, in my judgment, those debates addressed in a serious way historical concerns. I had hoped on behalf of the people of Canada that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) got to his feet today, he would have understood what was required of a Prime Minister at this particular juncture in our history and in the discussions of these trade talks, and tell us what was going on in terms of the specifics of the impacts on our culture, on sovereignty, on agriculture, and on the automotive industry. We thought we might get some details. We did not get any.

The implications for me are simply twofold. Either the Prime Minister knew and decided not to share the information with the people of Canada or perhaps, and I am not sure it is more regrettable but equally regrettable, the Government does not know what is really involved in terms of the intricacies of the impact in all these areas. In either case, the Prime Minister and the Government, in these major discussions up to this point, are failing completely the aspirations of the people of Canada.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and all Hon. Members of the House, to consider the second part of this resolution which strikes me as significant. First, there is the content, the specific wording, and the reference to particular areas of concern Canadians would have about entering into a comprehensive free trade arrangement. That is fundamentally the substance of an arrangement we would have to consider. The other aspect of the resolution is that the Parliament of Canada at this particular point in 1987 is being asked to authorize the Government to pursue the course of direction it launched in this important and economic political matter some two years ago.

What we have is a Prime Minister who has abolished FIRA, who has sold out Prentice Hall, who has caved in on softwood, who has given away fishing rights in Atlantic Canada, who has yielded to the United States on acid rain, who has sacrificed our generic drug industry and who is now coming to the Parliament of Canada and asking for a blank cheque to continue this approach to Canadian politics. I can tell him that we will not give him that blank cheque.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say quite frankly, the first five to 10 minutes of the Prime Minister's speech were what one might expect of a Prime Minister. It was sober in tone. It began to intimate that there would be some answers provided to the serious questions that ought to be addressed by Parliament. Then, for another 30 or 40 minutes, we heard what can only be described as a kind of high-school-cum-Rotary-Club rhetoric that is totally inappropriate to the seriousness of this occasion—totally inappropriate.

Before I deal with the substance of the resolution that is before us and address on behalf of my Party some of the concerns that we have about some of those specifics, I want to take up the Prime Minister's challenge which he made to us part way through his speech. He said that he would like to see what the opposition Parties would put in its place. I think the whole country has noted that the Prime Minister has said that as justification for this initiative that he launched two years ago we have but one of two options. They are to face massive unemployment on the one hand, or to select this Conservative option on the other. It is an old mug's game. It is a rhetorical device by which one has to choose one or other of the options. Anyone who has thought seriously about anything knows that there are almost always more than two choices in any situation.

I wish to say to the Prime Minister, categorically, before I say something on trade, that I agree with him and any thoughtful person in this country who says that trade is important to Canada. Indeed, one of the crucial ways of expanding employment opportunities in Canada is to extend our trade opportunities, and I also say in this context, trade not simply with the United States, which is important, but also with the Pacific Rim and many other parts of the world. I wish to stress this. On behalf of the unemployed people of the country I find it intellectually unacceptable and morally offensive to suggest that the only way we can deal with unemployment is by way of a major trade initiative.

The Prime Minister cited the Government of Manitoba in his speech. I wish to tell him that I am proud that Manitoba has the lowest unemployment rate in Canada today. I want to tell him also that that was not done by expanding trade initiatives. It was done as a result of a Government which believes in the mixed economy and in the social democratic approach. It believes that one has to have job creation, and it set out to create jobs for the people of Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, because it is so germane to the central justification for what the Prime Minister says about trade, I also want to point to another Government in Canada which, not relying on the primacy of a trade thrust, also dealt with unemployment in the last couple of years. I refer to the Government of Yukon. It is a New Democratic Government as well.

I hear snickers from members opposite. It happened to be the case when the NDP Government came to power that there was an unemployment rate in Yukon of about 20 per cent. But because the Government believed in initiatives other than those directly based on trade, unemployment was cut by 50 per cent in one year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the snickering Conservatives opposite that no matter what country in the world we consider or what region of Canada we consider, if there is a Government in place which is concerned about unemployment, then there are many options other than the trade option with respect to creating jobs to consider.

I now wish to talk about the trade option itself. I am not saying that it is the exclusive way to promote jobs but that it is indeed an important way.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic Party agree that the United States is and always will be our most important trading partner. Ninety per cent of our exports now enter the United States duty free. That is the situation today, and I think we should try and obtain sectorial agreements with the United States that would benefit both parties. We have one example the Prime Minister has often referred to in the past, namely the Auto Pact, and if we can have similar agreements in other sectors, we would like to take this particular one as a model.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I say we should try and establish a process for settling bilateral disputes so as to restrict the arbitrary levying of compensatory measures by both parties.

Mr. Speaker, I am saying restrict, not eliminate altogether.

[English]

In this context I wish to say that if I understood the Leader of the Opposition correctly, it seems to me that in any trade arrangement with the Americans, if we want to protect our sovereignty and respect their sovereignty, it will be impossible, and ought to be impossible, for us to eliminate entirely the right of either nation at some point to take countervailing action against the other.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think I used the word "restriction".

Mr. Broadbent: The Leader of the Opposition is now saying that he believes in restricting that right. If so, then we are in agreement. But we in this Party believe that important steps ought to be taken to establish a bilateral mechanism, something about which all Parties in the House have talked, which could reduce the immediacy of such actions by the other country and eliminate or reduce the range in which countervailing steps can be taken. That would be very useful indeed. We in this Party believe in the sovereignty of Canada and the ultimate obligation we have to make the economic decisions which affect our people, and we know that that is reciprocal. So at some time if we say that we have the right to take economic actions to protect the interests of our people, then we must concede right away that we could not expect the United States to eliminate entirely the right to take action to protect its own citizens. That is a given right.

Having said that, I also want to add that we believe that, in addition to expanding trade with the United States, which I have already said is our most important trading partner, we have to make great efforts to expand trade with other countries. In this context one of the very serious concerns on the part of many provinces which have thought seriously about a special bilateral deal with the United States is that their export arrangements with other countries could be adversely affected. In this context I am thinking particularly of our western provinces which have important export markets in addition to the United States. I know that there is a deep and genuine concern on their part about the possible effects of a bilateral arrangement made exclusively with the United States which could lead to the reduction or elimination of contracts they now have with other countries outside North America. That is a matter which has to be considered with a great deal of seriousness by the Government of Canada.

Third, in terms of job creation and economic growth, we must begin as a nation to make a serious effort to get away from the massive dependence that we now have on the export of resources and semi-processed goods, whether it be to the United States or to other countries. It has to be and ought to be a major matter of industrial policy in Canada to shift our nation away, to use an old cliché, from being hewers of wood and drawers of water to a policy that begins to use more of our resources as a foundation for manufacturing the goods here in Canada and exporting those goods abroad.

Mr. Broadbent: This specifically ought to entail duplicating in Canada what has been done by other industrial nations in the process of their development, whether one thinks of the United States, Germany, Great Britain or in more recent times Japan, namely, to look systematically at certain sectors for import replacement. Where we have a disproportionate amount of manufactured imports coming in, in certain sectors, we should, if we have an appropriate research and development and an investment strategy, be able to replace those imports with domestically produced manufactured goods. We could then use that enhanced domestic market as a foundation for exporting manufactured goods abroad. That is the longer range strategy. It is one we ought to have had in place decades ago and it is one we need now.

The next aspect of a trade strategy that we see as being appropriate, in addition to expanding our trade relations with the U.S., is one which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) indeed talked about just a few minutes ago, namely, to put more emphasis on the GATT. Not only is it desirable in this world of ours, with many Third World nations in utter destitution, to do everything we can to expand trade on a multi-lateral equitable basis, but I say, particularly in the context of our relationships with the U.S., we can get greater access, to put it more precisely—we have good access now—to the U.S. market by taking effective action through the GATT where we are working with other smaller nations like ourselves in terms of economic power in comparative terms with the United States.

I would say in that context to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—I do not always give him a reading list to look at—that perhaps he could look at some of the better works of Machiavelli, not the usual vulgar interpretation of Machiavelli that are referred to. He wrote interestingly and appropriately, given our relationship with the United States, about the dangers of a weaker prince entering into a forum and a binding alliance with the stronger prince. When we have limited economic clout, no matter how effective and determined we are in using that, I say to the Prime Minister that we have to be very wary indeed of linking that holus-bolus to the United States, to put it rather directly. We need more emphasis on a multilateral approach in terms of broadening not only our trade with other nations but ultimately to gain greater and more equitable access to the U.S. market.

[Translation]

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, we need some vigorous research in this country to develop more policies for economic self-sufficiency, designed for the purpose of using our market to implement effective job creation policies. That is to say, we could have federal plans for the creation of new jobs established along the same lines as what the Government of Yukon and the Government of Manitoba have already set up in this country.

[English]

These are some important initiatives that would expand our trade opportunities. They would give us not only greater commerce but for us, what is the fundamental objective, a greater number of jobs.

The Prime Minister asked for some suggestions. I would be happy to pass on to him a resolution passed during our convention in the last few days from which points have been drawn about expanding trade. I ask him to have a hard look at it and I ask him to pass it to his officials. I am sure they are looking at other resolutions with a great deal of interest, but I ask them to look at this one with care, and perhaps if they adopted some of the measures recommended the Prime Minister would see that there is an option to putting all our eggs in the American basket for economic development.

Having briefly indicated some of the other approaches that ought to be pursued, I want now to address the wording of the resolution in some of its key elements, to express our concern about the Government's direction in this major economic initiative. I have already indicated what I think is our central concern, namely, the Prime Minister's own attitude toward the United States, as has been demonstrated in a whole range of bilateral matters in the past two years. I say frankly that the New Democratic Party simply does not have confidence in the Prime Minister as the principal negotiator with the United States of America.

I want also to say something about the evidence that we have accumulated so far in Canada, that has at least been publicly available, that ought to make Canadians rationally, reasonably concerned about moving into a free trade arrangement with the United States. The Prime Minister did not today present us with new information that might have influenced the decision in a more positive direction, as he would define it. He did not do that, so we have to rely on what has already come out. What has come out frankly is not encouraging. We have had a federal study that was censored very substantially. But even when one sets aside the censured nature of that document, we found some rather alarming figures. For example, 900,000 workers in Canada would be directly affected by a new arrangement of the magnitude about which the Government of Canada is talking. The Ontario study showed that in Ontario alone some 281,000 jobs were in what was described, perhaps euphemistically, as the sensitive sectors. That does not even include the 125,000 men and women who work in the automotive sector.

In the Province of Quebec, we know from another study, some 30,000 textile workers directly would be impacted upon, not to mention in that province other workers that we know would be seriously concerned. I am thinking of the clothing industry, the shoe industry and the shipbuilding industry.

To my knowledge, the significant studies on which we have information to base a judgment that I have now alluded to, are the federal Government study, the Government of Ontario study, and the Government of Quebec study. The empirical evidence, I repeat, that we do have ought to make us reticent and ought to give us pause about entering into this kind of an arrangement. Why should we, when we have one million already unemployed, risk putting out on the streets thousands more Canadian workers?

I see another member shaking his head. The implication is that he disagrees with the facts I have given. But the facts I have given have come from three governments, none of them NDP governments. They are their studies, not mine. I also say to the member that if the Prime Minister has counter evidence, instead of giving us broad macro figures about the jobs we might get from a new free trade arrangement, why does he not produce the studies? Why does he not come here and say, "Here is the evidence. In this sector we will have this many new jobs and in that sector we will have that many"? He has not produced the evidence. I say to the Prime Minister that as long as the evidence we have available is negative, as it seems in its implications, we must hesitate to get into this kind of arrangement with the United States.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there would be a disposition on our side to allow the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to continue his remarks beyond the normal 20-minute period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Mr. Broadbent: I appreciate the gesture, Mr. Speaker.

Our second concern relates to the historical nature of the Canadian economy and a continuing ongoing problem. The reality is that, compared with other industrial or quasi-industrial nations, we have a disproportionate amount of foreign ownership in our economy. Let us look at a variety of sectors. I have some figures. The current data on mining indicates 35 per cent; oil and gas, 40 per cent; and manufacturing, 45 per cent. The implications, in terms of the consequences of entering into a continentalized economic arrangement with the United States, are that these firms, most of which are owned in the United States, could very well have a major economic reason to move their branch plants back to the United States, if not this year, at least in two years. It does not assume that they are sinister. It does not assume that they are plotting against Canadian interests. All it assumes is for them to be what they are—profit-making business organizations. If they can make more money by moving a branch plant from Michigan to Georgia, it is not foolish to think that they may believe it is more economically sensible to move the branch plant out of Oakville or Hamilton or someplace in British Columbia or Manitoba.

If we tear down the border economically and all its implications, with no requirement for a certain level of investment in Canada, why would these firms not move to the greater market in size, which is the United States, not Canada? Again we have serious reasons to doubt the wisdom of the policy of the Government in this regard.

Another concern which we have—and I mentioned it earlier—is that of our trading partners. I happened to speak with the leader of one of the provincial Governments concerned about export markets to other countries than the United States if we have a bilateral agreement only with the United States. The concern is that the export, in this particular instance of raw materials, could be jeopardized if the third trading country thinks that we will have a preferential relationship of some kind with the United States from which it is excluded.

Another concern would be the kind of bilateral mechanism which would be set up to inhibit countervail action on either side of the border. As the Prime Minister knows very well, in the free trade agreement between Israel and the United States, the United States has retained ultimate sovereign control; its right to take countervail action. As I said a few minutes ago, I understand that because my Party and I believe Canada must ultimately retain that control too. If we believe that, the exact nature of the mechanism being discussed between the two parties now is something about which we would like to know a lot. It is something that one would have hoped the Prime Minister would have informed the people of Canada through Parliament today, so that we could have some real understanding of where in terms of this institution we may be heading.

Now I want to talk about the areas of concern which are addressed or named in the resolution. I have some concerns about which I wanted to hear the Prime Minister speak, but did not. Social programs were referred to. In general terms there will be protection of our social programs. We want to know about some of them specifically, not the general phrase. In most aspects in life it is the specifics which count, not the general observations.

In this regard we know that in recent trade disputes the Americans have objected to unemployment insurance benefits for our fishermen. They have regarded those—and they have argued it—as a form of subsidy. Will we have assurances that whatever form of unemployment insurance we have in Canada will not be affected by a trade agreement between Canada, it and the United States? That is very important to us, and again we learned nothing about it today.

Agricultural marketing is profoundly important to at least half our provinces as a crucial sector of their economy. I want to be very specific about a concern which has been raised with me in this regard. It is one thing to talk about protecting marketing boards, but what may well be involved—and I will be very frank—and what I suspect is involved is that the Government will say marketing boards will be kept but the supply-management side of marketing will go, that there will be no control of imports coming from the United States to these sectors.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I hear some questioning from the back that that would not be the case. All I can say is that we in this Party are concerned about protecting the interests of farmers. If they are to maintain marketing boards, including the supply-management side, the Prime Minister should have risen to his feet today and told us about it. It is important to farmers producing eggs, poultry, and milk to know where the Government stands on that.

It is also important to refer to another item. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). I hope he will join in the debate. The Minister knows that seasonal tariffs are applied in Canada to protect fruits and vegetables at certain times. Will the new agreement which is to be talked about with the United States enable our farmers during particular seasons to have the important protection needed from those tariffs? We want to ensure that they are protected. We want to hear from the Government of Canada on it.

Also we are concerned about the auto industry. We are concerned that once again we may have the form of the agreement protected but the substance gutted. The Canada-U.S. automotive pact has two key elements. One is investment requirement and the second is the threat of tariffs or duties if major automotive producers do not live up to their automotive investment requirements. As the Ministers responsible know, that has worked out reasonably well.

However, I will tell the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is following this debate, that not many days ago I talked with a senior officer of one of the largest automotive companies in Canada. I asked him what would be his response if the Government of Canada kept the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, said that there should be a certain level of investment on an annual basis in Canada, and at the same time removed all tariffs and duties. I said, "Would that not be an incentive for you to begin transferring all your industry back to the United States and, instead of producing here, starting to export across the tariff-free border from the United States?" I say frankly that there was a pause on the end of the line. The person with whom I talked was quite honest, and he said, "Yes, you are right; there would be an economic incentive to move the industry out of Canada and back to the United States".

That is no laughing or joking matter. If the Government is to indulge in a bogus game of saying that it will keep the formal requirements of the pact which talk about investment levels but remove the negative incentive, if I can put it that way, of tariffs and duties if they do not live up to their requirements, we in this country could see before the end of the century the complete obliteration—and I put it as strongly as that—of the North American automotive industry.

Again I say to the Government, if it has guarantees on the pact, and if it is to maintain the basic structure including the mechanism of the threat to use tariffs and duties if investment is not lived up, then the Prime Minister ought to have told us about that today.

Another subject mentioned in the resolution which I had hoped the Prime Minister would have addressed is our cultural identity. All of us in the House can agree on the cliché that the cultural identity of Canada must be preserved. It is a cliché but it is also reality. I would like to believe all members wish to preserve it. There are all kinds of uniquely important and distinctive aspects to French-Canadian cultural heritage and to English-Canadian cultural heritage which are monthly gaining greater and greater international recognition.

We also know that important protective mechanisms have been put in place in Canada through the years to ensure the survival and growth of Canada's creative people. I say that it is not enough to talk about the protection of cultural identity and uniqueness in this context without talking about the protection of cultural industries. There is nothing in the resolution that refers to cultural industries. Once again, if the Prime Minister had been forthcoming and had wanted to allay some concerns, rather than raising new ones, he would have told us what the Government plans to do with cultural industries.

Another question which looms as a very important concern in terms of the resolution and what flows out of it is what will happen during the phase-in period of such a trade agreement. If we have no FIRA, no effective instrument to protect highly creative, quite profitable, in the Canadian context, and in many cases technically sophisticated industries during this phase-in period, what will stop these companies from being gobbled up by larger companies with more capital resources from the United States? If there is to be a 10-year phase-in period that is supposed to make allowances for adjustments in agriculture and the labour market, setting aside all reservations I have raised about that, what will happen to the ownership of our industries? At the end of the 10-year period, rather than having 25 per cent, 30 per cent or 40 per cent of industries in certain categories American-owned, that figure could double.

After the gobbling up process has begun, the pattern in this kind of international economic development is that an American company first buys a competitor, a good, small Canadian firm, and then operates it as a branch plant for a while. Then the company moves operations back to the United States. We are very concerned about this 10-year, or whatever the magic figure might be, phase-in period and its impact on good, innovative, imaginative Canadian firms that happen to be smaller in size and could be gobbled up by American competitors. The New Democratic Party would not put in motion any kind of resolution that could lead to that. We think, however, that the Government of Canada could do precisely that.

I would like to conclude my observations with a remark made by an earlier Prime Minister, one of the greatest and perhaps the greatest Prime Minister Canada has ever had. For someone living in 19th century Canada, Sir John A. Macdonald had imagination and vision about what needed to be done to build a country. I did not expect to see a social democrat as a Prime Minister in the 19th century, as bizarre as that might sound. One looks for a range of criteria for praising people, and I do not say glibly at all that Sir John A. Macdonald was a great Canadian. His remarks are pertinent to today's debate because in the latter part of the 19th century, he had a choice. There were many voices and arguments saying that we should develop one country in North America and that there should not be a border. They said that rather than expanding to the West, Upper and Lower Canada and what are now the Maritime Provinces ought to join with the United States and there should be one continental country.

Sir John A. Macdonald had a different view, and in retrospect, I say thank God for that. In an important debate in the House of Commons held on March 7, 1878, he said that "there are national considerations that rise far higher than the mere accumulation of wealth, than the mere question of trade advantage. There is," he said, "national status, national dominion and, he concluded, no great nation has ever risen whose policy was free trade." He was right.

Sir John A. Macdonald then went on to talk about Great Britain. Great Britain did not achieve greatness on the basis of free trade. Neither did the United States, nor Japan. The great industrial nations in history have talked about free trade only after they have dominated the economic world. That is the reality.

Sir John A. Macdonald had an appropriate vision. Put in modern terms, he said that Canada had to be something other than a cash register and that there is more to human existence than that. I happen to believe that the modern equivalent of the range of policies needed for our nation, both in economic and social terms, happen to be social democratic in nature. I happen to believe that the kind of political and economic framework provided by social democracy, with a mixed economy using proudly and effectively the instruments of both the private and the public sectors, is the right one. We must proceed with confidence as a starting point and we must have a national development strategy that makes it important for men and women to get jobs while expanding trade. In the final analysis, such a policy says that we have to protect our culture, we have to protect our industries and we have to protect our sovereignty. That is what the Party I happen to lead is all about. It is that kind of political and economic thrust we think is necessary. For that reason, we are completely opposed to the motion before us.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the rules provide for a 10-minute question and comment period but I would suggest that in view of the healthy debate we have had on this motion to this point, and our side has no questions or comments, unless members of the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party wish to engage in same, I would think the House could recess until two o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being unanimous consent, it being 1.48 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.48 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE IMPACT OF CANADA-UNITED STATES PROPOSED TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Government claims that a free trade deal will be struck with the U.S. but Canadians still do not know whether such an agreement could affect the environment. In 1986 the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council and the Desfossés report warned the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) about the trade agreement having an impact on the environment.

A free trade agreement could generate pressure by business, particularly multinationals, on government to reduce the cost of environmental regulation. An agreement could seriously hinder federal and provincial measures on controlling point sources of pollution, hazardous waste management, reforestation, fisheries management, waste water treatment and air quality, because the U.S. could interpret such measures as a form of subsidy. The Minister has not yet realized the gravity of the situation. It is of the greatest urgency and I urge him, as I did on May 6, 1986, to ensure that a trade agreement with the U.S. will not have a negative impact on Canada's environment.

IMPORTANCE OF ACCESS TO NORTH AMERICAN MARKETS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my constituents in Nepean—Carleton have long recognized the importance of research and development and its contribution to our economic well-being. That interest has allowed Nepean—Carleton to become the high technology centre for Canada. My constituents therefore welcomed the signing last week of the historic landmark agreement between the provinces and the federal Government on a science policy for Canada.

Canada's high technology companies are developing world mandates and must compete internationally. Access to North American markets is fundamental and vital. To move forward with a trade agreement, while enhancing our agricultural industry by protecting our agricultural marketing system, will benefit all Canadians, especially young Canadians, because trade is the pathway to our future prosperity.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

ADOPTION OF RESOLUTION RECOGNIZING UNIQUE CHARACTER OF QUEBEC

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Over the weekend, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic Party of Canada adopted a resolution acknowledging the unique character of Quebec, where French is the language and culture of the majority. From Victoria in British Columbia to St. John's in Newfoudland, including the Prairies, Ontario and the Maritimes, the New Democrats said yes to Quebec. On the federal scene ours is the political Party which shows the most open-minded approach to Quebec.

It is deplorable and regrettable that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) should adopt such a partisan attitude. If acknowledging the uniqueness of Quebec is a trick, as claimed by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides, how are we going to qualify last November's decision of the Liberal Party of Canada not to acknowledge this unique character of Quebec, as indeed it has always refused to acknowledge in the past?

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—IMPORTANCE OF CONCLUDING AGREEMENT

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, in today's competitive global market where protectionism is becoming the norm, it is imperative that Canada conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S. if we are to remain a major industrial power. Canada needs a secure market for our products if it is to remain prosperous. Trade is the only vehicle by which Canadians can continue to enjoy economic prosperity. Canadian employment and survival depend on our ability to sell our products.

Not too long ago, in a parallel situation, European countries were addressing the same problems we are today. They formed the EEC which guaranteed secure markets for their products. This economic union allowed those nations to become major economic entities which have produced a standard of living equivalent to that of Canada. Each one of those nations addressed the problem of sovereignty, as well as cultural and economic domination. Yet after 30 years that economic union has become a major economic force with four members being part of the G-7 group of countries. A free trade pact with the U.S. is the only method to ensure that present and future generations can continue to enjoy economic prosperity.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SITUATION OF QUEBEC CONSUMERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, more than 70 Quebec independent consumer organizations cover the province, including 25 which make up three distinct federations. A number of task forces are working to find solutions and take action to help Quebec consumers.

After analysing the new program and funding allotment criteria, I concluded that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has a tendency to ignore the decentralized operations of Quebec consumer organizations and their particular way of working.

In 1986-87, two national organizations which are practically inactive in Quebec account for 72 per cent of the funding allotted by the Minister. When setting aside 15.5 per cent of the budget for Quebec associations, the Minister advised them the funding was transitory and final.

In case the situation grows even worse next year, and to improve the situation this year, I urge the Minister to look into this problem at the earliest opportunity.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SUPPORT FOR POSSIBLE AGREEMENT

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, a freer trade agreement between Canada and the U.S. will mean economic growth for Canada and new jobs for Canadians. The Economic Council of Canada estimates that a freer trade agreement will mean about 370,000 new jobs by 1995. Without that agreement, Canada stands to lose over 500,000 jobs by that same date due to American protectionism.

There is also no doubt that a freer trade agreement will benefit western Canada. A study by the Canada West Foundation indicates that one in every five dollars in the western Canadian economy depends directly on sales to the U.S. A study done by the prairie pools indicates a freer trade agreement with the U.S. would mean an extra $60 million a year for prairie farmers. With a built-in guarantee of protection for marketing boards and institutions like the Wheat Board, western Canadian farmers have much to gain and very little to lose from a freer trade agreement.

For over 100 years western Canada has been asking for a freer trade agreement with the U.S. but its interests have always been thwarted by central Canadian protectionism. Once again we are at the crossroads and I believe western Canada wants us to move ahead so that we, too, can benefit from the growth occurring in Canada today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HONDURAS—EFFECT OF AMERICAN MILITARY PRESENCE ON ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in spite of massive aid from Canada and the U.S., Honduras continues to be one of the poorest countries in South and Central America. The American military presence in that country has created a vast network of roads, air fields and storage facilities which distort the economy and only reflect Ronald Reagan's paranoia about the struggling nation of Nicaragua. These military installations, and the American-supported Contra bases, have done nothing to alleviate the poverty, hunger, unemployment, and underdevelopment of the countryside. We now learn that over the past five years one-third of the $1 billion in U.S. aid has been diverted from economic development into the pockets of Honduran military officials.

No amount of aid can help a nation on the road to development if the Government does not have the right priorities. Because Canada is a significant donor to Honduras we have a major responsibility to Canadian taxpayers as well as to the people of Honduras to pressure the U.S. to cease using Honduras as a military platform, with all its attendant corruption, and allow Honduras and the other countries of Central America to follow their own path of development in peace.

THE ECONOMY

NEED FOR SERIOUS CONSIDERATION OF LIBERALIZATION OF EXCHANGES WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we are now striding towards the 21st century. Our future is that of a peace-loving and prosperous nation that aims for excellence. A nation that thanks to the vigour of its economy will be able to provide for the well-being of its people, the full development of its cultural identity and maintain its sovereignty.

Free trade with the United States is something we should seriously consider. The people of Beauce have understood. Forty-six per cent of our products are distributed elsewhere in this country and 39 per cent of our manufactured goods are exported outside Canada, especially to the United States. The people of Beauce will have much to gain from free trade. Our entrepreneurs have understood the need for diversifying their products and taking advantage of foreign markets, and this attitude has made our region one of the most dynamic in the country.

Not long ago I was reading an article in the Reader's Digest about the "beauceron miracle", and we can be proud of the image of quality and performance we project.

The economist and Harvard professor John Kenneth Galbraith said it so well: "A country cannot isolate itself from the rest of the world and solve all of its problems alone, away from the international context, because all countries have become interdependent".

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION OF VICTOR REGALADO

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) should immediately put a halt to deportation procedures against Salvadorian journalist Victor Regalado. Knowing with what one is charged and being able to defend oneself against those charges is one of the basic principles of our legal system. Mr. Regalado was not given that opportunity.

Changes in the Immigration Act that were made in 1984 now allow for review of a security statement by a monitoring committee of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service.

Mr. Speaker, the Act was amended to allow for situations like that of Mr. Regalado but does not apply to him because his case dates back to before the Act came into effect. Mr. Regalado is the victim of a procedural default which should now be corrected. I want to ask the Minister of Immigration to stop deportation procedures against Mr. Regalado and put his case before the monitoring committee, where he can take advantage of all the recourse and protection afforded under Canadian law.

TARIFFS

EFFECT OF TARIFFS ON PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, nearly 40 per cent of the country's petrochemical industry is located in the constituency of Sarnia—Lambton. The global marketplace is of the utmost importance to the jobs and livelihoods of the residents of Sarnia—Lambton. The petrochemical industries in my constituency do not need a long phase-in period for free trade with the United States. They are ready for it now.

Polysar, the single largest employer in my constituency, exports 21 per cent of its product to the United States. It is of concern that at present the tariff on styrene trade across the U.S. border is about 7.4 per cent. Clearly without the tariff hurdle the market for Canadian petrochemical plants in the United States would be greatly expanded. The money saved by our companies in tariffs could be utilized to cover higher transportation costs to expand further in the American market.

It is a fact that Canadian companies can compete globally, but tariffs limit their sales in the United States. The direction the Government is heading is the right one. We want jobs for Canadians and greater investment in Canada by foreign companies.

TELEVISION

EFFECT OF REPORTED CTV LAY-OFFS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, is CTV going to close its Winnipeg and Quebec City offices? Are the firings in news staffs it has begun going to become massacre? We do not know for sure yet, but we do know, as the Caplan-Sauvageau Report documents, that CTV manages to look poor by a fancy bookkeeping arrangement that enables its affiliates to make a bundle. Any claim that CTV might now make that it is losing money and has to cut Canadian program staff should not be believed.

CTV has a lot of nerve. News coverage has been the only area where Canadian programming has been remotely adequate. The CRTC is now considering the CTV licence renewal and Canadians are hoping that increased Canadian content will be required. In cutting news staff the CTV is thumbing its nose at the CRTC and the Canadian public for whom it works.

The firings must stop. If ever there were a time for the CRTC to get tough, it is now. If CTV cannot better its Canadian content, it does not deserve a place on the Canadian public's airwaves.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—OPPOSITION PARTIES' POSITIONS

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, over the past few weeks we have heard a good deal about the defensive reasons for a new trading arrangement with the United States. There is no question that these are important. What interests me even more, however, is the offence. I hear from my colleagues on the left and those further left that Canada cannot compete. Their comments are covered with rhetoric and chocolate coating, but the bottom line is that they believe Canadians cannot compete, that we would get the worst of a trading arrangement with the United States, that the Americans would take over Canada.

What a tragedy that two of the three political Parties in Canada have no faith in our technology, no faith in our working people, no faith in our management, and, indeed, appear to have no faith in Canada.

EDUCATION

POST-SECONDARY TUITION FEES

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, students throughout Canada are fighting the Government's cut-backs in funding of post-secondary education. In my province, students at the University of Prince Edward Island are burdened with tuition fees which are among the highest in the country. The Government's plans to limit funding increases for post-secondary education under the Established Programs Financing structure will worsen an already abhorrent situation.

This year University of Prince Edward Island students will pay about $1,480 tuition plus other mandatory fees, book costs, and living expenses. Students are struggling with inadequate facilities, overcrowded classrooms and labs, and insufficient course offerings in some programs. Clearly these difficulties affect the quality of education which a student receives. I ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Government to rethink these cut-backs and look upon educating our young people as an astute investment in Canada's future.

CONFIDENCE IN CANADIANS' ABILITY TO COMPETE INTERNATIONALLY

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is time we asked ourselves some tough questions. Are we afraid of our ability to compete fairly with the rest of the world? Should Canadian consumers continue to pay $6 billion every year for import restrictions? Is there some inherent reason why Canadians must fail when presented with the opportunity to triumph? The answer to every one of these questions must be a firm, confident, and aggressive "No".

I make no apology for my confidence in our ability to compete fairly. I make no apology for my belief that the best of Canadian talent, the best of our workers, our managers, our entrepreneurs, will prosper. I make no apology for my desire for a Canadian economy which finds its survival in strength, not in fear. I make no apology, Mr. Speaker, for my confidence that we can and will find a new and dynamic equilibrium in free trade to replace the economic inertia of an economy based on import restrictions and small markets.

Canada has the opportunity now to grab the future and shape it to our needs, to take the tides of change and channel them to our advantage. We can retreat if we are afraid. We can, like the NDP, hide behind psychological barricades, but we cannot hide from the world forever.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

L'ORIGNAL COURT-HOUSE CONDITIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, according to the Auditor of the Province of Ontario the provincial court-house in L'Orignal in my riding is so deficient that witnesses must wait for trials in the same rooms as the accused, and is so unsafe that prisoners, juries and judges are at risk from fire. That is, of course, from 40-odd years of Tory neglect at the provincial level.

Today I want to make a formal demand for a grant under the new federal IOU program, since my riding qualifies under the same criteria used in the riding of Central Nova for the building of a court-house there. I take this opportunity to thank the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) for creating the IOU program used by the federal Government to build provincial court-houses. There are at least nine other communities in Ontario which have a need similar to that of the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I am sure they would like to participate in the IOU program of the Minister of National Revenue as well.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I may be naive—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —but I came to the House of Commons this morning expecting to hear from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the Government's position on free trade. I suppose it is appropriate that his statement comes on the eve of St. Paddy's Day because what we got was more sham than we got at the Shamrock Summit. We got press releases, we got pronouncements, we got expostulations, but we got nothing from the mouth of the Prime Minister to let us know what I can tell the steel workers in my riding.

Is the Auto Pact on the table? Is agricultural policy on the table? What happens with the steel industry? What we got from the Government was more of obfuscation and mystery-making. If the Prime Minister is serious about expecting to lead the country, he has the obligation to present his ideas and options here in the House of Commons as the Liberal Party has done. I challenge the Prime Minister to get off Bruce Phillips' speech writing kick and come clean with the Canadian people about the true story behind his so-called free trade deal.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON REGIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my questions today are for the Prime Minister, but I assume that somebody on that side is acting in that capacity. It takes an extraordinary nerve, or a total lack of sensitivity for Canada's Prime Minister to tell Canada's poorest regions today that they must free trade their way to prosperity. It is the same Prime Minister who, two years ago during an election, promised to "inflict prosperity on the regions immediately".

After 24 months, why should even one of us from Canada's poorest regions believe the Prime Minister's assertion today when seven out of our 10 provinces have higher unemployment than in 1982, when spending for regional economic development has been cut by 39 per cent in the last two years, and when all of us in the regions have recognized the Prime Minister's promise of inflicted prosperity for what it is, empty political rhetoric?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not listen to the speech made by the Prime Minister, considering the inaccuracy which he has enunciated in his question. There is no question that we are concerned about the regional inequities in the country. However, the Prime Minister made it very clear in his statement that one of the key ways that we can diminish these inequities is by opening up trade opportunities to the regions of the country so a larger market can develop for their products in the United States, free of tariff barriers. Surely this is the vision that the Hon. Member cannot quite grasp, but one that the Prime Minister has grasped.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I do not need the Minister of Finance's Bay Street lecture on the trickle-down theory. The fact of the matter is that the Prime Minister has cut regional economic development spending by 39 per cent. The fact is that during the last election campaign the Prime Minister promised to inflict prosperity on the regions immediately. Today the Prime Minister has the nerve to come back and promise prosperity—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Tobin: Given that the Prime Minister added insult to injury this morning, saying that only the Government of Canada has the power to make foreign treaties, and given that U.S. trade negotiator Peter Murphy said this morning—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: —"we are not going to sign an agreement unless the provinces are onboard", how can the Minister square the Prime Minister's assertion that the provinces will not be consulted when U.S. trade negotiator Peter Murphy is insisting that it must be a prerequisite of any signed agreement?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that sort of rhetoric sits very well with the provinces. They sat and watched while trying to find out what went on under the previous Government during the whole GATT round of negotiations in the 1970s. They received absolutely nothing in terms of information.

This Government has been consulting in a very co-operative and open way, not just with the Premiers but with an ongoing committee of officials to make it very clear what is required of them and what is the essence of the trade negotiations and discussions to date. The Prime Minister made it very clear this morning in his statement to the House that the federal Government is the sole arbiter of what the negotiations should be in the final analysis. We must take the national view and that is what we will do. What is at stake here is a negotiation that is at the heart of the future prosperity of this country. We will ensure that the position we take as a national government will reflect that challenge.

Mr. Tobin: The people of Canada are used to the Government's commitments and how they vaporize like snow in the spring.

FUTURE OF MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that on the weekend Canadian General Electric announced that it will not locate in Moncton, New Brunswick. Since the Government has been in power, the workforce at the Moncton shops has declined from 1,200 to a projected 330 by the end of the year. That is a loss of 850 jobs in an area of high unemployment. Since the Canadian General Electric deal is lost, will the Government and the Minister of Transport finally come to their senses and order CN to keep those shops open and maintain a healthy workforce there, or does the trickle-down theory apply in Moncton as well? Are we getting ready for a free trade pact that sells out the Atlantic economy?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman just trickled down his leader in Newfoundland by dealing a blow on the back with the Newfoundland caucus last week. He is an expert in trickle-down.

The hon. gentleman and all Members in the House know what happened in Moncton. An arrangement for Canadian General Electric to go in and take up much of the employment slack there was stopped by the pipefitters' union and machinists' union which blocked the deal. A $4 million fund is being put in place to encourage industrial development in Moncton. Moncton will remain a major centre for CN operations in the Atlantic provinces. We just completed a $10 million intermodal freight terminal there. CN will continue to have a payroll of some $90 million a year in Moncton. Moncton will continue to have all of the aid and assistance we can give it.

INQUIRY WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL MAKE POSITION KNOWN ON INCLUSION OF QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): One year ago already, Mr. Speaker, Gil Rémillard explained the Bourassa Government propositions to pave the way for the inclusion of Quebec in the Confederation and, last November, the Liberal Party of Canada held its convention in Ottawa and took a clear position on this matter. But the best kept secret to this day is the position of the Progressive Conservative Party in this respect. The silence of the Government might well be interpreted as a lack of leadership. What I want to ask whomever answers on the other side of the House is when will the Government make a decision and unveil its position concerning the adherence of Quebec to the Constitution?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, the Government Leader in the Senate, has been having discussions with Mr. Remillard and with his counterparts across the country. Indeed, he and the Ministers at the provincial level know that having Quebec enter the Constitution is a priority of this Government. That was stated by the Prime Minister immediately after the election and the work being done is toward achieving that goal.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is a priority which is taking a long time to become reality. The Prime Minister should recall his 1984 election commitment to have Quebec sign with honour and enthusiasm, as he put it. This was two and a half years ago, Mr. Speaker. Whatever happened to the ardour and enthusiasm shown by the Government during the last election campaign? It certainly was not the same enthusiasm displayed here last Thursday by the Deputy Prime Minister when he replied to my—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but preambles which tend to repeat themselves do go on perhaps too long. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, thank you for calming down the people on the other side.

Last Thursday the Deputy Prime Minister put it this way: The federal Government did not table a counter-offer to Quebec's proposals. That is as clear as clear can be! My question is simple: When are you going to wake up and unveil your position concerning the adherence of Quebec to the Constitution?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that a person who was a member of the Government which failed to bring Quebec into the Constitution has the audacity to rise and bring that forward today. This Government is working toward having Quebec in the Constitution. That remains an objective. The work is continuing and the discussions are very relevant to the goal that will be achieved.

GLC PUBLISHING DECISION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will judge the Government's intention with regard to free trade and the protection of Canadian culture by its actions and not by its vague promises which it has continued to make this morning. My question is directed to the Minister responsible for Investment Canada. It is very specific and really is a test case of the Government's intentions in this regard. The Minister knows that he has had the case of GLC Publishing languishing in his Department for more than a year. It is part of Gulf and Western "scorched earth" policy on takeovers. Will the Minister tell the House and Canadians if he will implement this Canadian book publishing policy? Is he going to deal with this case? Is he going to disallow the acquisition by Gulf and Western of GLC as a commitment to Canadians that we will have a made-in-Canada book publishing policy in action?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian policy on publishers and publications was announced in July, 1985, and in my opinion, it has been very well received by Canadians generally. One objective of this policy was to protect our cultural identity. This is why the Canadian Government did not approve the proposal of Gulf and Western, because we wanted to protect our cultural industry. Negotiations are still going on and a time extension has been granted to the compagny until April 16 to allow it to comply with this policy of the Canadian Government.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know why the Government seems to be making an exception in this case? Why does it not have the courage of its convictions? Why does it not have some guts? We know about that "scorched earth" threat. Can the Government not understand that this is posturing—

Mr. Speaker: Again, I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, especially on a lead question, but the preamble is there to lay out facts, not to just engage in limitless argument. Certainly, if the Hon. Member has a question, and I know she does, I would hope that she would put it succinctly.

Ms. McDonald: My question, Mr. Speaker, is this. Can the Government not summon up some courage and implement the very good policy it announced? Does it not have the courage of its convictions to act and implement, not just to make promises?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat to my hon. friend that the decision announced in July, 1985 aimed at protecting our cultural identity. Because of this policy, even though the Hon. Member has suggested that the Canadian Government is slow to act, Guy Porter Books was able to purchase Doubleday Canada. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in our negotiations and discussions with Gulf and Western, we are determined to protect our cultural identity, and this objective is shared by the Hon. Member and the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

EXPIRATION OF REGULATIONS AFFECTING IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister knows that regulations Nos. 56 and 57 under the Fruit and Vegetables Act will expire at the end of this week. This will allow thousands of vanloads of farm produce to flood into the Canadian market with dumped produce and severely injure our producers. Is the Minister prepared to bring in new regulations on an urgent basis to protect these farmers?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond. I have a definite plan and I will be looking for support from the Hon. Member and, indeed, from all Hon. Members of the House, before the end of this week.

Mr. Foster: I am pleased to see the Minister is learning at the eleventh hour that action needs to be taken on this, and I certainly hope that it will be.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): I wonder if the Minister can assure Canadian farmers that he will not sell out those farmers under supply management and our collective marketing system in the free-trade negotiations the way these people have been left on the hook till now.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has two questions. It is not an eleventh hour interest. The Hon. Member must recognize that under the new rules of the House it is the only way. In fact, it is unique. It has never been done before in the history of this country. The Hon. Member will recognize that a joint committee of the House and the Senate dealt with regulatory reform. Consistent with the new rules of the House, this is the only opportunity the Minister of Agriculture has, and I am utilizing this opportunity on behalf of the Canadian industry to ensure that those regulations which have been in effect will continue to be in effect until we take some other appropriate action.

With respect to the Hon. Member's second question, I do not know what else we can do. I can just refer the Hon. Member to the contents of this motion, the contents of the Prime Minister's speech this morning, and I hope to have some comments later this afternoon in the debate.

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PAY EQUITY LEGISLATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. For the first time in 18 years, under this Government, the wage gap between men and women has widened. Women earn an average of $19,000 as compared to $29,000 earned by men. This trend is likely to increase under free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: Will the Minister agree today to introduce pay equity legislation which requires equal pay for work of equal value in every area of federal jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for a number of years now, the Government of Canada has been promoting . . . This is about the Hon. Member's comment on free trade, Mr. Speaker, but the connection was pretty weak. What I want to say is that the Government of Canada is aware that wage gaps of this kind between men and women cannot be tolerated. However, the Hon. Member will have to admit that though the process is relatively slow, we have set up procedures for improving the situation, and I am referring to employment equity. I may recall that my colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, turned down a contract for the first time ever when a company refused to submit to employment equity rules. There is the federal procurement policy. The Government of Canada encourages provinces like Manitoba and Quebec, and soon Ontario, that set up such policies, but the Hon. Member will agree that this is a joint effort by all parties involved, and not just the federal Government, which in turn is prepared to support all measures being implemented with this in mind.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): The Minister does not seem to understand the difference between employment equity and a pay equity policy. Will he introduce mandatory pay equity in this session? And will he persuade the provinces to do so, as Manitoba has already done?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I understood the question perfectly well, and the Hon. Member should realize that if women are to have access to equal pay, there are a number of factors, including training and the availability of the positions in question. If women do not have access to the jobs, and that is a case of employment equity: yes, it is a pay prerequisite. I am sure the Hon. Member will agree that the federal Government has and will continue to set up the measures to deal with this, and I am sure she will take the time to realize that we have done in two years what our predecessors failed to do in 20.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON REGIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this morning in his speech on free trade the Prime Minister has apparently handed his responsibility for regional development over to the President of the United States. He has told the people of Newfoundland, Alberta, and British Columbia: "Don't count on me. Ask Ronald Reagan". If the Prime Minister is so concerned about development in the less favoured regions of the country, why did he and his Government cut $2 billion more out of our regional development fund this year?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer, of course, is that we did not. My right hon. friend knows full well—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister is answering a question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I think all Hon. Members would want to hear the answer.

Mr. Mulroney: The suggestion from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is as silly as I know he intended it to be in terms of regional development. Since this Government came to office, unemployment has decreased in all of the regions of the country, including—

Ms. Mitchell: In B.C.?

Mr. Mulroney: I said it has decreased in all of the regions of this country. There have been 705,000 jobs created, a larger number than in any other industrialized western country. What I indicated this morning was that, notwithstanding this, there were still areas of tremendous regional disparity. One of the ways, and not the only one, of dealing with this is by creating a climate and a comprehensive agreement which would allow Newfoundland, British Columbia, and Alberta, to name but three, to create jobs and to trade their way to greater degrees of prosperity. I think my right hon. friend will agree that that, along with the attraction of foreign capital which is coming in in record amounts and a number of other initiatives we have introduced, is designed to create new wealth in the regions of Canada. Surely that is what the trade measure is designed to do.

• (1440)

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister would look at the Estimates tabled by his colleague he would see that in the last two years alone regional development has been cut by 39 per cent. There have been further cuts to research and development, to apprenticeship programs and other programs that would have benefited Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Canada. Why is it that in his speech this morning the Prime Minister admitted the vacuum in his own regional development policy and now relies, hopefully, on a future trade arrangement to provide what his Government is not doing for the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not admit to a vacuum in policy in regard to regional development. I said that there was the equivalent of an indictment of all Governments of Canada since the country was founded, that the country has not done enough for the far-flung regions, and I mentioned this morning Newfoundland and Labrador, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and now the interior of British Columbia. I am not casting blame on someone two years ago or three years ago; it is part of the process that has evolved in our country.

If there is 6.8 per cent unemployment in Ontario and 18.4 per cent in Newfoundland then that is unfair and unacceptable in Canada. It cannot be corrected by reducing Ontario; it is corrected by creating new wealth through trade to raise Newfoundland up to Ontario's standards. That is what the Government is committed to trying to do.

AUTO PACT INQUIRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. There are 125,000 jobs in Canada which depend directly on the auto industry and hundreds of thousands of other jobs which depend indirectly on it. In his speech this morning why did the Prime Minister not address how planned across-the-board tariff cuts—if we believe all those leaks from Mr. Reisman in the free trade talks—can be reconciled with maintaining Auto Pact safeguards which themselves depend on the existence of those tariffs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the time that was available to me I think my hon. friend would agree that I could not address in detail all the items under every chapter of such a complex international negotiation. I addressed very carefully the question raised by my hon. friend in a major speech in Longueuil on Thursday night. It will be addressed by the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade, just as the agricultural sector will be addressed by the Minister of Agriculture, during the course of the debate. The nature of the debate is to permit as many Members of Parliament and as many members of Cabinet to participate in particular areas so that the interests of the entire country can be heard. One of the reasons we hope that the NDP will allow extended hours and let this matter come to a vote is so that we can find out where everyone stands.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister had spent less time on partisan attacks and more time answering these types of detailed questions, then he would have made much more of a contribution to the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DEMAND FOR FIXED AMOUNT OF CANADIAN CONTENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Here is my supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Government is talking about protecting the automotive industry, will the Government now take steps to draft regulations governing the 60 per cent Canadian content applicable to any company, be it Japanese, Korean or Canadian?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this question deserves consideration by the House and, undoubtedly, the Minister of Finance and others will be commenting on the views already expressed by the Hon. Member. But in connection with the Auto Pact itself, it was negotiated 22 years ago by the Government of Canada and it has brought considerable benefits to Ontario and Canada as a whole. The position I explained in Longueuil the other night was that we did not want to change it because it is a source of appreciable benefits to all Canadians. In spite of that, unless I am mistaken the New Democrats adopted a policy in 1977 and 1978 under which the Auto Pact would be renegotiable every five years. That was the NDP position, and we reject it. It is unacceptable, a dangerous position for the Canadian automotive industry. That is what we reject.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

WOMEN'S ACCESS TO TRAINING FOR NON-TRADITIONAL WORK

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The reason that women are losing ground in the battle to reduce the wage gap with men for the first time in 18 years is because the Government made changes so that it is more than ever training women in low-paying traditional work. When will the Minister revise his program and guarantee the access of women to all training programs, especially for non-traditional work?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the job strategy was designed for all Canadian men and women who can qualify on the basis of a certain number of criteria for one of the six avenues open to them. For instance, many women in Canada have access to the job entry program and make use of its services. I could quote what was said by the President of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, Mrs. Gold, with respect to the jobs strategy. We realize much remains to be done, as I said earlier to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East. However, the measures are in place, and I think we will gradually get the desired results.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE CHANGED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, women's groups from all across the country have criticized the Canadian Jobs Strategy because women who are applying under it are being referred for training in traditional low-paying work. Why does the Minister not recognize that criticism, change the program, and guarantee places for women in non-traditional work training?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I must disagree with what was said by the Hon. Member. Women in this country see the jobs strategy as a good program. However, I repeat there is room for improvement, if we consider the situation in which women found themselves, and the fact that your Party did absolutely nothing when it was in power. It makes it all much harder when one picks up the reins from a Government that managed by decree but never created a single policy for women.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON POSSIBLE TREATY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Most Canadians understand that one does not negotiate agreements in public, even if they are labour contracts or trade agreements with other nations. However, if those agreements affect the lives of Canadians then they are interested in knowing the details and the implications before anything is signed. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that Parliament will have the opportunity to see and approve any trade agreement with the United States before it is signed by Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his question. Of course the authority of the federal Government to conclude international treaties, including one of this nature, is unchallenged. One of the reasons we have implicated the provinces and the First Ministers so deeply in the consultative process is, as one of them mentioned after Wednesday night's meeting, being so intimately involved in the process precludes any requirement for any ratification.

It may very well be that the treaty to be concluded will be almost exclusively within federal jurisdiction. It may be that matters covered will be exclusively, or almost exclusively, with a smaller amount within provincial jurisdiction, in which case, of course, enabling provincial legislation would be required. But the right of the Government of Canada to sign international treaties is undiminished and shall remain undiluted.

Meetings are scheduled for June and September at which we hope all the concerns that anyone may have will be satisfied, something which we hope all Canadians will endorse. There shall be no treaty signed until such time as Members of the House of Commons have been apprised of it and have been given an opportunity to speak to it.

CONTROL OF CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the free trade resolution, the Government promised to protect Canada's cultural identity, but there is not one word about our cultural industry. My question to the Prime Minister is simply: Will the Prime Minister guarantee that control over our cultural industries will be exercised by Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we tabled a motion, not a dictionary. We could not possibly cover every eventuality and every issue. Of course we are referring to the protection we need for Canadian culture. The Minister of Communications and other Ministers, like myself, have examined the question at length. Canadian culture and its underlying industries are not on the table in these talks.

AGRICULTURAL MARKETING SYSTEMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said he could not deal with every detail. Members of the House would have been happy if he had dealt with a single detail.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Again, in the resolution there is a reference to the Government's interest in protecting agricultural marketing systems. Will the Prime Minister guarantee the farmers of Canada that the Government will not only maintain the marketing systems in the form of marketing boards but will have the enforcement mechanism in place, namely, supply management as well, so that our farmers will not have their markets glutted at totally inappropriate times by American imports?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party had any respect for the record he would know the answer to that question to be yes. Again I remind him to read and reread the motion before us today. He should recognize that we have about 125 different marketing boards, commissions and so on. Obviously what the Government is saying, and what Canadian farmers will understand when we use the terminology agricultural marketing systems, is that if you are a grain grower in western Canada it will mean the Canadian Wheat Board; if you are a dairy farmer anywhere across this country, particularly in the Province of Quebec, it will mean the maintenance of the National Dairy Program, and if you are a member of the feather industry in many provinces it will signal a recognition for the continued support of those existing marketing boards dealing with the feather industry.

The Hon. Member should also recognize that if the Government gives a commitment of this kind, many are contingent on various underpinnings. Naturally, if our commitment is going to remain good—and it is—then obviously you would have to attach the underpinnings. I hope at the end of the day the New Democrats are here supporting the Canadian Wheat Board, and I hope the Liberals are here supporting—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the issue before the House today is whether this Government will protect any Canadian interest. The Government has the obligation, this side of the House does not.

REQUEST FOR TREATY RATIFICATION BY PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister said just a moment ago in reply to another question that before any final deal is signed with the United States in the free trade area Parliament would at least have a word or be able to discuss it in some sense, but he made no commitment that the content of the resolution or the agreement would be brought back before Parliament, and given the potential historic significance of this agreement, will the Prime Minister assure the people of Canada that such a negotiated agreement will be brought before Parliament for ratification?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that there would be an occasion for an opportunity to consult the House in regard to this important matter.

An Hon. Member: Consult?

Mr. Broadbent: Let's see what he means.

Mr. Mulroney: As we speak, negotiations are ongoing right today between Ambassador Reisman and Ambassador Murphy. We do not have a document to submit to anybody. It may very well be—as I indicated this morning, there being no guarantees in life, least of all in these kinds of important negotiations—that we will be unable to achieve all the objectives we seek. I believe we can. I believe that we shall, in which case, as I have indicated, there will be an opportunity to consult the House. But we are months away from that possibility. I think it is important that we let Ambassador Reisman and the Canadians who are representing our strategic industrial interest negotiate, as negotiations must take place with some degree of confidentiality. Do not expect us to throw out all of our negotiating positions so that the Americans can see them and pick them off one by one.

Mr. Fulton: You already have.

Mr. Mulroney: Let Ambassador Reisman speak for Canada. The Hon. Member has the assurance that the House will be consulted.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

CONSTRUCTION OF DASH-8 AIRCRAFT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. When the Government sold de Havilland to the Boeing Corporation it gave Boeing hundreds of millions of dollars of research and development for no charge. The consideration was that de Havilland, to quote a press release of the Government, would have:

—a world product mandate for the design, development, production and marketing of its products. No foreign production will be allowed without the approval of the Minister.

Now an American trade bulletin, the China Trade News, shows that Boeing is negotiating with China for the manufacture of the Dash-8 in Shenyang or Dalian in northeast China. What benefit is it for Canada with the money spent on research and development to have Dash-8s made in China, and why has the Minister given his approval to it?

• (1500)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I ought to point out to my colleague that indeed, when we agreed to sell de Havilland, we put an end to a financial haemorrhage which had first cost taxpayers $1.2 billion and which was about to cost an additional $1.5 billion thanks to the previous administration. Such was the inheritance of Canadians. Quite simply, we made sure, first that the Canadian aerospace industry would survive and, second, that job creation would be maintained in Canada. Again I can assure my colleague, who is obviously referring to rumours that de Havilland is about to award contracts to China, that there is no question of that at all. We have looked into this matter and we are convinced that de Havilland has no intention of handing over some of its production contracts to China.

INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA WILL REMAIN EXCLUSIVE PRODUCTION CENTRE FOR DASH-8

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): So can I have the Minister's assurance that Canada will remain the Dash-8 exclusive production centre?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Once again, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that Canada and de Havilland will remain the only producers of Dash-8 aircraft.

FERRIES

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT AND MARINE INDUSTRIES ARE IN PROCESS OF BREAKING COMMITMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same Minister. In mid-February, the Minister officially inaugurated construction on a second ferry at Marine Industries in Lauzon. At the time, the Government and Marine Industries promised to recall between 800 and 1,000 workers by the end of June. My question is as follows: Could the Minister explain to the House today why the Government and Marine Industries are in the process of reneging on their commitment, since the plan now is that only 350 workers instead of 800 or 1,000 will be recalled by the end of June? Why did they renege on their commitment, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Government certainly did not renege. In fact, we have given Quebecers and Canadian shipbuilders an industry that is becoming increasingly stronger. We have rationalized the industry in Quebec. We have made it possible for Quebec shipyards to be in far better shape and far more competitive.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to a work schedule. After acquiring the shipyard, Marine Industries was supposed to observe the work schedule and if necessary review it, and it is possible that changes will be made. It is now up to Marine Industries to adjust its production schedule according to the contracts the Government has been able to give the company.

MINISTER'S ROLE AND MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE CONCERNING MARINE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important contract which is worth $230 million. Could the Minister explain what his role has been in this matter and what measures he intends to take vis-à-vis Marine Industries? The Government seems to agree with the company's commitment to the workers who were laid off, because it indicated to the union yesterday or maybe two or three days ago that only 350 employees out of a potential 800 to 1,000 would be recalled.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, when we concluded this transaction, we made it clear that it was now up to Marine Industries and its management to look at a production schedule, in terms of the contracts it has been given, that will be adequate in view of the work involved and the time available. I met with the workers last weekend and gave them the assurance that the Canadian Government would be keeping a very close and interested watch on further developments. However, I repeat, it is now up to Marine Industries to take the requisite action.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

REPORTED PROPOSAL MADE BY PETER POCKLINGTON

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance, and it concerns a deal proposed to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation by Peter Pocklington who sold millions of dollars worth of over valued property to Fidelity Trust when he controlled it. Later, Fidelity Trust failed, Mr. Pocklington cut his losses, and CDIC moved in to protect the depositors. Will the Minister confirm that recently Mr. Pocklington offered to pay $10 million for $150 million worth of Fidelity's tax losses, which he intended to use to shelter taxes on his other successful enterprises? Will the Minister confirm that CDIC considered this scheme for several months before finally deciding that it would not be in the public interest?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm the first allegation or the last allegation, but I certainly find the whole narrative astonishing.

FUNDING OF CORPORATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, since the CDIC, which is supposed to be self-funding, now owes over $1 billion, will the Minister not agree that CDIC only considered this hare-brained scheme because it badly needed to bring some money into its battered treasury? Will he tell the House when he will bring in serious measures to deal with the CDIC, instead of his current proposal to allow that corporation to borrow another $1.5 billion from the taxpayers of Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should be aware that the Bill dealing with CDIC was tabled two or three weeks ago. All the provisions are there for future replenishment of CDIC needs.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—EXPANSION PROJECT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He knows that the people of Cape Breton are nervous to know exactly what are the Government's intentions with regard to Sydney Steel. Will the Minister rise in the House at this time and confirm that the Government will go ahead with the expansion of the $157 million upgrader?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada remains committed to our arrangement with Sysco, but it is up to the company as well to table a business plan by the end of March in terms of how it sees its future. We must look at the business plan to see if we want to concur with it, and then we will react to it.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is really up to the Government of Canada to indicate what it is willing to do and to say so now, so that the people of that community do not have the fears and apprehensions which they have at the present time. Why is the Government unwilling to make a firm commitment at this time?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again I think we have made our commitment. We have said in so many words—and the Prime Minister said it as well—that we remain committed to Sysco. However, it is up to the company to submit a business plan by the end of March. We are concerned about the situation which prevails there, and I assure the Hon. Member that we want to do everything possible to help the workers in Cape Breton.

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the amendment which has been offered by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). As Hon. Members will have noticed, the amendment is unusually long and complex. I think the Chair must comment that it comes quite close to being a disguised or expanded negative, that is, a vote for the amendment would have the same effect as a vote against the main motion.

However, while there might be procedural grounds for ruling against the amendment, in view of the importance of the debate which is taking place today and the fact that the amendment is relevant to the main motion, the Chair has decided to allow greater latitude than is perhaps consistent with a narrow interpretation of the rules and procedures of the House.

I want to point out, however, that while the Chair would not wish to inhibit in any way a debate on one of the most important issues which is ever likely to face this nation and as a consequence, I am therefore prepared to rule that the amendment is in order, but I would not wish this decision to be cited as a precedent on future occasions.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) moved in amendment thereto:

That the Motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "arrangement" and by substituting the following:

"or arrangements with the United States, as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions,

Namely that:

There not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States since such an arrangement would undermine Canada's political, economic and cultural independence; and would jeopardize Canada's regional development policies, agricultural policies, cultural industries, financial and service industries, and the Auto Pact;

And that:

Any such negotiations are designed to gain greater access to U.S. markets by limiting the operation of contingency protection and non-tariff barriers such as current U.S. and State government procurement regulations and restoring previous access for softwood lumber in U.S. markets;

While at the same time:

Ensuring Canadian independence for domestic programs, policies and legislative authority in areas such as: social policy, agricultural marketing, supply management and support programs; subsidies and assistance for regional and industrial development programs including high technology development; the Auto Pact; the environment; bilingualism (including labelling); culture (including cultural industries); financial and service industries;

And that:

The Government of Canada tables transitional adjustment assistance proposals to protect those workers, sectors, firms and businesses which may be adversely affected by such a trading arrangement or arrangements;

And that:

The Government of Canada secure an immediate standstill of U.S. trade harassment including such matters as agriculture, energy, fish, potash, and steel."

The question is now on the amendment, and I recognize the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney).

Bilateral Trade

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is a rare privilege to have the opportunity to introduce a motion in the House which has the potential to enhance profoundly the future of our country, and that is my privilege today.

The trade debate is about Canada's future. It is about jobs—20th century jobs and 21st century jobs. It is about economic growth for those regions of Canada which are not sharing in the wealth that our present economic system provides. It is about sovereignty, because only an economically strong country can provide our unique social programs and preserve our cultural policies which protect our national identity. However, most of all, the great debate is about security and enhancing our access to our largest market and our biggest customer, the United States, in a long-term binding treaty.

This concept frightens some Canadians. It scares the opposition Parties which have no vision for Canada and offer no hope for Canadians who are unemployed now or who fear that they will be unemployed in the future as technology changes the nature of their jobs. Scare tactics are a cop-out. They are a way of browbeating Canadians back into the 19th century.

Our Government is prepared to lead Canadians through the final decade of the 20th century, turbulent with change, and into the 21st century, only 13 years away. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, we choose to negotiate not because it is easy and not because it is without political risk but because it is in our national interest. We serve that national interest, he reminds us, by securing an agreement with our largest trading partner which will provide stability and security for traders, investors, workers and for our future. Let me tell the House why this is so.

From the earliest days of mankind, from the era of barter systems through to the development of the first great trade routes, trade has been the generator of growth. Cities sprang up where traders met to exchange goods and all the world's great cities have their origins in trade. History is dominated by trade wars and their impact on the development and decline of regions. Trade has determined the future of nations and trade will determine the future of Canada.

Canada's economy is dependent on trade to a greater degree than almost any other country. Today we export about one-third of all we produce and we import about 30 per cent of what we consume. Growth in trade translates into growth in economic wealth. For the first 40 years since the post-war world first adopted the international rules of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, Canada's exports have multiplied 10 times over and our national wealth has more than tripled. Today our international trading system which helped create unprecedented wealth is in trouble. It is being eroded by protectionism as countries try to reduce unemployment by putting up barriers to other countries' goods and services.

Part of the problem is the GATT itself. Its institutions have become dated, its procedures are ineffective and its dispute mechanisms are often cumbersome. That is why the 92 countries of GATT met in Uruguay last fall to start the eighth round of trade liberalization under the GATT which was first established in 1947. One major objective of that round was to reduce trade barriers and to define rules and regulations for those areas in which no rules exist: areas like services, the fastest growing trade area, and intellectual property and investment. Very importantly, the agricultural sector has never been adequately covered by international rules and regulations.

If one wonders about the value of international rules and regulations governing trade, one need only take a look at the agricultural sector in which no such rules exist. The result is anarchy in agriculture. World agriculture trade is governed not by comparative advantage but by the size of national treasuries. For example, for every dollar the Japanese farmer receives, the Japanese taxpayer pays $2.50. For every dollar the European farmer receives, the European taxpayer pays $1.50. In the United States, the taxpayer pays $1.38 for each dollar the U.S. farmer receives. Canada cannot afford to compete with these huge subsidies and that is why the Prime Minister pushed so hard to get agriculture on the agenda of the economic summit.

Where does the U.S.-Canada bilateral fit into this worldwide picture? There are two answers. The first is jobs. We believe that this provides the best opportunity to create hundreds of thousands of new jobs and economic studies support this. I can cite studies done by the Economic Council of Canada which show that with free trade, as many as 370,000 jobs could be created in the next five years while we could lose half a million without free trade. University of Maryland studies indicated that a free trade agreement with the U.S. could cause an increase in the GPD of Canada of about 5 per cent. Trade is where the jobs are.

Second, we must deal with the rise in U.S. protectionism in a way that protects Canadian interests. As Atlantic fishermen, Quebec aerospace workers, Ontario steel workers, prairie farmers and British Columbia woodworkers know, we must trade to survive let alone to prosper and we are now fighting the ugliest outbreak of protectionism in the U.S. and around the world since the 1930s. We are fighting for those three million Canadians holding a quarter of Canadian jobs whose pay cheques depend on trade. We are fighting for a secure future and for more jobs in the years ahead.

American Congressmen and politicians are concerned about their trade deficit. For the first time in their memory, Americans are buying more from abroad than they are selling and they are losing jobs to overseas competition. They are turning inward, turning away from what gave them the strongest economy and the highest standard of living in the world. They are using all sorts of weapons at their disposal, raising all kinds of non-tariff barriers to stop imports in the mistaken belief they can maintain jobs through protectionism.

In the last seven years, Americans have launched some 40 actions against Canadian goods. Many have failed but those that have succeeded have penalized Canadian exports worth over $6.5 billion. No region of Canada has remained untouched by American trade actions against us. These actions have cost Canadians opportunities and jobs.

There are no signs of weakening in the protectionist mood. There are hundreds of protectionist Bills awaiting action in the Congress. That mood should convince even the most skeptical Canadians that our trading relationship with the Americans is under attack. The new trade Bill would resume that attack if we are unsuccessful in our trade negotiations.

Let me deal with the agenda of the trade talks. We were asked this morning to specify the agenda. We have done so before but we are more than willing to do so again. First let me stress what is not on the table. Regional development and our capacity to sustain regional development is not on the table. Only the opposition Parties are dragging it onto the table. Our cultural policies and our ability to protect our national identity is not on the table. The negotiators know that that is not a subject for negotiation. Only the opposition Parties keep dragging it onto the table. Our social programs are not on the table. Again, only the opposition Parties raise our social programs and try to drag them onto the negotiating table. They are trying to put culture, regional development and social programs on the table, we are not.

Our negotiators are meeting today. Therefore, it is not in their interests to mention specific negotiating positions. However, I do want to say what is on the table and why we are dealing with these matters. Tariffs are on the table because experience has shown that the Canadian economy has prospered through tariff reduction. This is so even with the Auto Pact which the Opposition keeps bringing up. Members of the Opposition fail to mention that tariffs have come down steadily within the Auto Pact. For vehicles, they have come down from around 17.5 per cent to around 9.2 per cent. For auto parts, they have come down from as high as 25 per cent to 9.2 per cent. We have been reducing tariffs for years, and in the trade talks we are seeking to reduce them to zero on Canada-U.S. trade over a period of 10 or 15 years, whatever is negotiated.

Non-tariff barriers are on the table. Since the early 1970s, non-tariff barriers to trade have proliferated. Some are clear, imposing quotas on imports, for example. Some are not so clear, using technical or health standards for protectionism rather than for legitimate purposes. Another item on the table is government procurement practices. We are seeking to drop our "Buy Canadian" for their "Buy American", and as the Prime Minister pointed out today, 1 per cent of American government procurement could create 75,000 jobs in Canada.

Also on the table are customs matters. We want to facilitate commerce between the two countries by reducing the paperwork at the border. That will mean lower costs for Canadian businessmen. Agriculture is also on the table. I have touched upon the massive global problems we face in agriculture and they exist because there has been insufficient progress in bringing international rules to agricultural trade.

We know that we cannot resolve all our trading problems in the U.S.-Canada bilateral, but we can deal with some of them. We can deal with some tariffs, we can deal with health standards and we can deal with dispute settlement mechanisms that are used to harass agricultural products. Agriculture is very much a part of these talks.

Also on the table are subsidies and related measures. Those are important to regional development because under the existing trade laws, we often do not know what kind of subsidies we can use in regional development plans without bringing on U.S. trade actions. We want clear rules. We want to know what programs we will be able to implement for regional development. The existing international rules are not well defined and the U.S. is seeking to broaden them in, for example, the softwood lumber dispute and natural resource pricing. We want better rules in both countries because the U.S. subsidizes its products as well. We want better rules on what we can and cannot do. We need adjustment programs for the retraining which the Opposition talked about. We need programs for women.

One of the most important things on our agenda for negotiation are dispute settlement mechanisms. We want to replace the existing ones. The ones we have in place currently operate within the GATT framework but they do not make sense in application and they are unilateral. We want impartial mechanisms. For example, if the U.S. alleges that our stumpage programs are subsidies, we want an impartial, binational tribunal to deal with the issue, not the U.S. Department of Commerce.

Also on the table is intellectual property. This involves two issues: ensuring adequate protection for those who create new products, services or ideas, and ensuring access to those new products, services or ideas. Let me give you an example. One reason why companies locate their R and D in the U.S. is that if they want U.S. patent protection and someone else is developing the same idea, in the case of a tie the company which did its R and D in the U.S. gets preferred status. We do not like that because companies will locate in the U.S. to ensure their patents get U.S. patent protection. That means that good jobs for highly-trained Canadians are in doubt. We want free trade in intellectual property. We want free trade in services. This is a new area not now covered by international rules. More and more of our economy is service-based. It is about 67 per cent of our GPD these days. We have a solid record of growth in services of about 3 per cent per year. GATT is addressing these problems and new rules for services. So are we in the Canada-U.S. bilateral negotiations. We have some of the finest service industries in the world in engineering, financial consulting, computer services and banking. We are world-class competitors and we want to ensure access to world trade and services.

Also on the table is investment. All countries around the world are loosening their investment policies. We did so when FIRA became Investment Canada. The result was a record $6.8 billion worth of investment for 1986. So far we are dealing only with trade-related investment measures. The Americans want more. We are listening but we have not given the negotiators a general investment mandate.

The Opposition has raised the question of what the Americans want from this. Why are they bothering with the bilateral negotiations with Canada? What motivates them? Several things. First, we are their biggest market and their only growing market in the world today. Second, they want better rules on trade in goods and services and tariff procurement practices and provincial practices on intellectual property. They have the same agenda as we do. Much of this is new ground. What is very important to them is the trade and services agreement with us. The Americans can no longer dominate traditional markets such as steel and automobiles, and they threatened to walk away from GATT if trade and services was not included. The feeling in America is very strong that if they cannot make a deal with Canada in these new areas in particular, if they cannot define rules and regulations for new issues like services and intellectual property, they are unlikely to do it in the wider world of the GATT. They have a major and fundamental interest, even a historic interest, in trying to come to terms with us. So the conditions for these negotiations are far more balanced than the Opposition would lead us to believe.

We cannot stand still. Either we see our trading opportunities and eventually our prosperity fall prey to American protectionism, or we seek an agreement with Washington which will give us more secure access to that market. Let there be no doubt, standing still will make us poorer. Only moving forward will make us richer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: As Minister for International Trade no one knows better than I about the effect American trade remedy laws have had on our exports. We have seen it in shakes and shingles, fish, lumber, and farm products. Those unilateral decisions on what they call unfair practices are the problem between us. Americans call them fair trade laws but they are not. Americans say they cannot accept dumped or subsidized imports from us. We agree. We do not want theirs either. However, we do need a better way to work out these problems. If things were working smoothly neither side would need a change. The simple fact is that the present laws are not working and we need a way which eliminates the problems rather than introducing new barriers at the border. We need a system to ensure that neither country is penalized without a fair and impartial method of resolving disputes under agreed rules.

Let me repeat the message that the Prime Minister gave so clearly to this House. There will be no agreement without such a change. No agreement this Government signs will hold Canadian workers or industries hostage to the unpredictable whims of American protectionism. Canadians want to compete openly in a larger market with clear rules and fair access and that is the kind of agreement we are pursuing. For those who doubt what a trade deal with the United States can do they need look no further than the booming economy of south-central Ontario. Much of that boom is based on what now amounts to free trade in automobiles. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), will be speaking more specifically about the Auto Pact a little later in this debate. Just let me remind Members of this House that there was considerable controversy over that agreement when it was negotiated more than 20 years ago. The Leader of the NDP in this House has consistently called for its renegotiation. Instead, it has been a resounding success and created thousands of jobs in Ontario. Those of us from other parts of the country watch this trade-based boom in Ontario with some envy. However, we mostly ask why our workers and our industries cannot have the same chance. If free trade is good for Ontario, why not for Atlantic Canada, Quebec, the Prairies, or British Columbia? What better way is there to reduce regional disparities than to give others a shot at competing in the American market on the same terms?

This Government has laid out what it is seeking to achieve, and why, in these negotiations with the U.S. We are seeking a secure economic future for Canadians working now and for those to come. We firmly believe that free trade is the best route to that goal. We have a plan and we are on track, but what do we hear from the other side of the House? From the Liberals we have a long complicated resolution which says "maybe", "if", "but", and "ifsoever". There is nothing positive in this long complicated Liberal amendment. There is no suggestion that there are other things which are equally important for us. There is the implication that if they do not get everything here in this long list, then maybe they do not want to proceed at all. I do not think that is good enough for Canadians.

From the NDP we have a long complicated motion presented at their convention this past weekend which says no to free trade. It says categorically: "Therefore be it resolved the New Democrats in Government will withdraw from the comprehensive trade negotiations presently taking place with the U.S. and would instead pursue the following trade strategy". It is a mishmash, a cherry-picking list of sectoral free trade. History has shown that sectoral free trade is not on for either country. It is not acceptable.

The NDP talk about GATT but ignores the fact that our negotiations are consistent with GATT. The Liberals make a point of saying they do not want an all-inclusive free trade agreement with the U.S. but they do want more negotiations in GATT. Those two positions, as the Hon. Member knows, are inconsistent. You cannot have a free trade agreement consistent with GATT unless it is a comprehensive agreement. GATT will not permit it. The way we are going is the way we can go within GATT. The way the Liberals are pursuing this issue is inconsistent with the GATT that they talk so much about supporting.

I want to comment on one issue which is not sufficiently stressed in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Minister's time has expired, I ask her to conclude please.

Miss Carney: Do I have the agreement of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Carney: In closing, I want to speak about Canadians being world-class competitors, although the Opposition implies this is not the case. Canadians are not afraid of the future. The welders who are helping to build the oil pumping systems for Venezuela's oilfields at Canadian Foremost in Calgary know that they are as good as any in the world. The systems designers at Ottawa's Cognos Incorporated whose new computer language is used by 115 of the top 500 companies in the world know they are the best in the world. The technicians at CANAC International in Montreal know that they beat out the best in Germany, France, the United States and Britain in winning a contract for the new control system for India's railroads. They know, as we do, that we cannot deal with protectionism and prepare Canada for the next century if we walk away from this challenge.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise two specific questions with the Minister whose speech was, I must say, as was the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney), full of generalities and very, very short on progress reporting which we expected to hear in the House today. I will try with some questions to get at least a sense of what progress is taking place.

Is it correct that across-the-board tariff reductions are being considered? Would the Minister please address herself to the difficulty of doing that while maintaining the safeguards in the Auto Pact, which themselves depend on the existence of those tariff arrangements as enforcement mechanisms? In dealing with that specific point could the Minister deal with the other specific point with respect to marketing boards? What are the implications with respect to such boards for import policies with regard to seasonal imports and imports in areas presently served by marketing boards such as the Egg Marketing Board, the dairy board, the various feather industries and so on and so forth?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that the Hon. Member has found our report to Parliament to be so generalized. I thought I went into great detail to tell him what was on the agenda, what we were discussing, why we were discussing it, and why it is in our interest. That he thinks that, with Ambassador Murphy sitting at the negotiating table in this city, I would candidly chat about what our cards were and what cards we were playing today shows how ignorant he is of this historic negotiation. It shows that he does not understand the stakes involved and the jobs involved. We are giving this report and debating the issue. However, the idea that we would give specific negotiating positions while Peter Murphy is listening is really naive on the part of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Carney: The Hon. Member raised the issue of safeguards. I want to assure him that the automobile industry in this country is working well above the level of safeguards. If production ever fell to the safeguards in the Auto Pact this country, the Province of Ontario, and that Member would be in trouble.

Finally, with regard to marketing boards we have said repeatedly that marketing boards are not the subject of negotiations. As my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), has patiently and repeatedly explained, and as is reflected in our resolution today, marketing boards are not a subject of these negotiations. Since I cannot put it more clearly than that, possibly the Member will wait until the Minister of Agriculture speaks on the issue.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is aware of the threat to our steel exports from pending legislation in Congress. Could she review for us where our steel industry would stand should we conclude a free trade agreement with the United States? Specifically, what is the state of our industry? Can our industry continue to compete in that market, and are we fair traders?

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to Mr. Steel who knows the answers to those questions far better than I do since he is one of my chief advisers on the steel issue. Yes, we are fair traders. Yes, we can compete in the U.S. Our problem is that we are taking a greater share of their markets than the Americans would like us to. That is precisely the kind of issue we want to address in these free trade negotiations.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been referring to intellectual property and the need to negotiate. Is the Minister including in her negotiations Canadian cable companies which are distributing programs that occupy our Canadian air space?

Miss Carney: I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern, but this again gets into the details of negotiations which are not appropriate for discussion at this time. We are discussing the over-all agenda and the areas in which we are seeking these kinds of agreements. I do not feel that it is useful at this point in the negotiations to start cherry-picking what specific items are involved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) for a question or comment.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, Madam Minister, when I go back to my riding, I keep being asked by several of my constituents about the Canada-US relations, especially with regard to the triangle that involves Japan. Could the Minister explain the medium-and long-term benefits for Canada of a bilateral agreement with the United States as concerns our relations with Japan, for instance, which did not invest enough in Canada because our access to the American market was uncertain? Could the Minister tell me, or explain to my constituents what an agreement with the United States could mean to us by reason of the triangle with our second trade partner, Japan?

[English]

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important point and she is entirely correct. Foreign investment in Canada means jobs. Our investment has historically been less than it could be because of uncertainty of access to the U.S. market. As long as we have the present countervail system and the present trade remedy laws, as long as there is great uncertainty about what we can and cannot do in order to access that market, it will be a drag on investments. All of my discussions with Japanese investors and the Japanese Government encourage me to believe that should we have security of access to the U.S. market and give the U.S. equal access to our market, that would be an access secured by a long-term, binding treaty. Foreign investment from Japan and other places would flow in increasing quantities to Canada and create jobs.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. It is two years late in terms of timing. The musty quality of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) speech which we heard this morning reflects the fact that it was drawn out of the vault, rather than being a contemporary analysis of the important issues and concerns facing Canada. Nevertheless, this is an opportunity for us to examine the anxiety as well as the opportunity Canadians expect from any trade strategy. First, I want to reiterate an important point made by the Leader of our Party this morning. The Liberals believe in expanding trade. Liberal Governments have been the most important architect of developing an international trade system. It was Liberal Governments that helped develop the GATT, that moved the trading realm into the broad reach around the world.

It was Liberal Governments that negotiated the Auto Pact which the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said was one of the important elements of present day progress.

May I remind her that the negotiation of the Auto Pact had nothing to do with the kind of trade the Government is negotiating. It was a managed trade agreement with guarantees on both sides of the border about jobs, investment, and content. Any attempt to try to sell the Auto Pact as being the model the Government is following is another example of the maladroitness of the Government to try again to raise a smokescreen rather than deal with facts. Therefore, we take no backseat in terms of a commitment to expanding the horizons of international trade opportunities.

At the same time, I believe the peculiar genius of Canadian trade policies since the Second World War until this Government has been the recognition that while one must expand that trade it must be done both by strengthening international rules so that big, middle and small countries were equally protected and building up our own distinctive institutions at home to preserve our identity as a country and preserve the right to make our own economic decisions in Canada. It is necessary to preserve our right to make choices in order to maintain that important balance in sharing the North American continent with one of the largest and most powerful countries in the world. That has served us well until now.

The Government has deliberately veered from that course and made a major shift in the basic Canadian understanding that we must expand trade but not sacrifice our rights and freedoms to make choices about ourselves, our institutions and our economic programs. That is the cause we are raising today: how to adopt a trade strategy that expands trade but does not sacrifice the very basic elements of sovereignty in this country and the right to make economic choices for ourselves.

Let us examine what has been said today. The Minister, the Prime Minister and, I suppose, the resolution allude to some kind of commitment to this international trade system. However, the Government has cut back the number of embassies and consulates. It has cut back funds for the Export Development Corporation. It has downgraded the place of the ambassador for multilateral trade so that she plays second fiddle to the Canada-U.S. negotiators when the opposite should be true.

All the Government's actions have been designed to restrict our capacity to broaden our trade base. Perhaps the clearest example is in the Prime Minister's comments this morning about his objectives. He said he is trying to achieve a special deal for Canada, that there are a lot of unfair traders in the world whom the Americans do not like but since Canadians are fair we will negotiate a special deal for ourselves. Is that the way to reinforce and strengthen the international trade system? Is that the way to provide a proper balance of interest to ensure that there are rules that apply to large and small alike? Is the Prime Minister not really abandoning the Canadian tradition and the interests we have tried to pursue in strengthening that international system?

The Government has contradicted its objectives by its actions. We hear the rhetoric, but when it comes to action we see that the Government is not interested in multilateral trade or expanding its international options. It is preoccupied with getting this kind of trade arrangement with the Americans which carries with it very serious implications for this country.

The Government says that the reason it wants this agreement is to create jobs. No one will object to creating more jobs, but where is the proof that more jobs will be created?

The Government refers to the Macdonald Royal Commission. Unfortunately, the figures it used were out of date and did not take into account the reduction in tariffs that had occurred under the GATT system. The Macdonald Commission devoted all of three paragraphs to the surface industries which generate some 60 per cent to 70 per cent of new jobs in this country. There is no research or examination, just three paragraphs outlining the job impact on the surface industries.

What proof does the Prime Minister have for stating that a flourish of regional development will result from this proposed trade deal? There was certainly nothing in the paper the Government tabled several months ago to prove that. Yet I can refer to the study by the Canada West Foundation which generally purports to support free trade but says jobs will be lost in western Canada in food processing, in furniture making, in the service industries, in the horticultural industries, in poultry and in dairy industries. Do we hear the Prime Minister say there will be a loss of jobs in the balance? No. While certainly there will be some benefits, there will also be losses but there is absolutely no recognition of it. The study "l'actualité" in the Province of Quebec revealed that 280,000 jobs in the Province of Quebec alone were in jeopardy. There is the Radwanski study for the Government of Ontario which indicated that hundreds of thousands of jobs in the service industry were at risk.

The fact is that there is no clear evidence that an incredible bonanza is being created.

It is useful to refer to a study commissioned by the Province of Manitoba. It states:

> For the sake of discussion, let us assume that free trade with the U.S. will now generate a further five per cent increase in real GNP. Since any liberalization of trade would be phased in over ten years, we could only expect GNP to increase each year by about half a percentage point more than would be the case if we maintained the status quo. Given that, over the past ten years, the average amount by which real growth rates varied from year to year was 3.4 percentage points, there is no way we will notice whether or not we have obtained our extra half a point of growth or not. In other words, we may never even notice the benefits of free trade, even if they do occur.
> It is worth considering whether the problems associated with free trade will be equally invisible.

The fact is that when we consider all the evidence, all the computer print-outs from the high-priced economic think tanks, do we really have the kind of guarantee of the bonanza we hear about from the Prime Minister or the Minister for International Trade? There is absolutely no such assurance. In fact, we must begin to ask how many more jobs will be at risk and what will be the results if we do not provide the adjustment programs that our Leader talked about this morning to at least insure there is some kind of cushion.

If the Minister for International Trade is so smart, she will vote for our amendment. She will support our amendment because it includes the kinds of requirements we believe are important, such as a major adjustment program. The Government forgot to include such programs in its motion. It will let everyone hang in the wash, and all those workers who are affected can go on the scrap heap, as far as the Government is concerned.

The Government can show that this is not its policy by supporting a Liberal trade policy. We have the experience to show what must be done in this country to provide a rational approach. The Minister accused the Opposition of engaging in scare tactics, but she does not understand. We are not frightened of expanding trade, we are frightened of the Government's approach to it. We are frightened of a Minister who negotiates a deal on softwood lumber that imposes a 15 per cent tariff on our industry, throws the secondary manufacturing industry in to sweeten the pot somehow by accident, and agrees to increase stumpage fees, building in another $300 million or $400 million. She does not take into account the exchange rate so we will have higher costs. This is a Minister who says: "Trust us". This is a Minister who has probably committed one of the great all time give-away sell-outs in the history of trade and she says: "Have confidence in me. I am going to do a great job". What earthly reason can we have, after the debacle of the softwood trade issue, to have any confidence in this Minister or this Government? Can the Government explain why we should trust it when we see what it has already done in the cultural industries? It tells us that culture is not at stake, but it gave away Prentice Hall. It tells us not to worry about industry, but it gave away our patent production. Every time we turn around the Government is negotiating on its knees once again, yet it says: "Don't worry about it. We will do it okay next time".

The reason we raised in our amendment the kinds of very clear conditions we did is that Canadians are equally afraid of what the Government has done. They know full well, whether they are farmers in southwestern Ontario or in the interior of British Columbia that they are at risk when it comes to negotiating the supply systems and the export and import controls. The Minister says: "I am going to bring down tariffs". Does that mean the Government is going to negotiate the seasonal tariffs? Does it mean the Minister is going to put the farmers in Ontario and British Columbia, the farmers in the Fraser Valley and large parts of southern Ontario and New Brunswick out of business? That is the implication of her remarks. That is the clear message she is giving. That is what she is negotiating away if she is going to reduce those tariffs. Our Party kept them in there because we recognize the need to protect those industries.

What is it that the Government is trying to negotiate? The Minister began to give her own little shopping list, and that really begins to telegraph clearly why this debate should have happened much earlier. It should have happened at the time the report of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons indicated that there should be a debate in the House of Commons first before we get into negotiation. The former chairman is here and will know that I certainly supported that recommendation. The fact is that what really is at stake is that level playing field about which the Americans like to talk. It is the idea that we are going to negotiate away our right to choose for ourselves what subsidies or programs we will be able to apply domestically to support our own industries. The Minister has conceded that this is on the table. She has said that we are going to negotiate subsidies, services and investment. We now know that the Government is engaged at the present time in negotiating away the kind of independence Canada will require in order to initiate and control its own economic formula.

I would like to refer for a moment to a Manitoba study done by a Dutch economist, Göran Therborn, on the 15 OECD countries. He analysed them from the point of view of which countries have succeeded in gaining full employment and those which had the worst record. When one takes those 15 countries and analyses the factors, one asks oneself, is it related to export performance? No. Is it even related to economic growth figures? No, it is not. What Mr. Therborn analyses is that the primary rationale, if one compares the top five countries and the bottom five countries in the OECD, and their capacity for creating employment, was the capacity to have an independent economic decision-making so they could choose the kind of policies and programs they need when they need them. That is exactly what the Government is negotiating away. It is exactly what is on the table. The kinds of rights the Government is abandoning is the right of the Government to be able to select the mixture of programs we can apply as a country to secure more employment for Canadians. That is the kind of analysis which should have been done by the Government, but it was never done. That is one reason we believe it is very important to establish those kinds of conditions and requirements to ensure we preserve the right to choose what subsidies we apply for high technology development, what kind of support programs we have in the area of regional development, to ensure the Government does not negotiate Bill C-58, another service industry, to ensure we do not abandon the kind of guarantees we have in telecommunications, trucking and other service industries which provide a large percentage of our jobs. But we now have the admission that that is what is being negotiated away. That is what is on the table.

I would say to the Conservatives opposite that if they want to provide confidence that in fact they will not negotiate away those rights, because they say that somehow we are putting up a screen, then they have one very clear way of proving it. They can vote for our amendment. They can give us right now in this House all the assurance and guarantees which Canadians need, but I do not think they are going to do it. They will not give those assurances because that is what they are negotiating away.

The Government tries to pretend that this is the only alternative, that the only way we can have a dispute settlement mechanism is through a bilateral agreement. It tells us that the only way we can deal with countervail powers is through a bilateral agreement. Of course, that is not true. The fact is there are already in place perfectly good mechanisms under the GATT system for dealing with those issues.

Mr. McDermid: They don't work.

Mr. Axworthy: The Parliamentary Secretary says they will not work. We know the level of understanding he has about trade matters. Canada has already taken seven matters to the GATT and has had five decided in its favour. We have already used an impartial panel to determine what is right or wrong. The Minister tells us we are going to get an impartial panel of Canadians and Americans to decide this. If we really want an independent panel, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we should have an impartial panel of people who do not have any vested interest in the issue at all.

We also know full well that we could have within the existing system of GATT other kinds of applications to offset the matter. However, the one time the Government had the opportunity to prove that it believed in the international system, to prove we could make the system work, it backed away. In fact, it foreclosed the right of Canada to go to GATT on the softwood lumber case. We signed it away as part of the agreement. We did not even have the guts or courage to pursue that issue. We signed it away. Do not think, Mr. Speaker, that that does not set a precedent. Do not think that many other countries around the world are not seeing how Canada is putting its tail between its legs and running for cover. That does not contribute to the enhancement and growth of the international trade system.

It is true that the world is heading towards the emergence of regional blocks. There is no question that that is one of the clear and prevailing dangers in world trade. However, is it the solution or antidote for us to join the pack? Is it our solution to try to push that trend along as opposed to offsetting it? Should we not be fighting against that trend and showing we have a different solution?

We know, of course, and it is clear, that one has to continue dealing with the Americans. We have made many deals in the past as a Liberal Government. In fact, one of the last successful commercial arrangements signed was when I negotiated in the transportation area back in 1984. It was certainly more successful than anything the Minister for International Trade has been able to sign until now. Of course, we know we have to continue talking, discussing and negotiating. But we should make it very clear that the attempt to provide for the wide open, unrestricted, all inclusive ambition which will incorporate the concept of national treatment and prevent us from maintaining our capacity and ability to decide for ourselves what kind of economic blueprint we want for Canada, is what is really at stake.

That is why the amendment we put forward clearly recognizes the need to support the international system, to avoid the kind of entanglements an all-inclusive trade agreement would provide, and that any negotiations should seek to preserve the rights of Canadians to maintain their freedom of choice. That is the basis of our trade policy. It is far more clear, cogent and effective than anything we have received in the kind of resolution the Tories put forward today. That is why we think Canadians are turning against the Government. They do not have trust or confidence that it can negotiate well or is negotiating towards the right objectives.

Miss Carney: Mr. Speaker, I have three questions I would like to put to the Hon. Member. First, if the softwood settlement was so devastating to the industry, as the Hon. Member and his Leader suggest, could he explain to me why the stocks of MacMillan Bloedel have gone up 100 per cent since December 29, the day before our settlement, which is leading to the first stock split since the two companies were merged in 1959? Can the Hon. Member explain this 100 per cent increase in the stock of MacMillan Bloedel and the 127 per cent increase in the stock of Canfor?

Second, can the Hon. Member explain why he would have preferred $600 million going to the U.S. Treasury under the countervail when, under our settlement, that money will stay in Canada?

With respect to the GATT, the Hon. Member's Party was opposed to the duties on books which were imposed in response to the shakes and shingles issue. Can the Hon. Member explain how, if we had won before the GATT, therefore winning the right to seek compensation in the form of other duties against American goods, he would have imposed $600 million worth of duties on American goods coming into Canada which would have hurt our competitive position?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Minister has not taken the time to read the proceedings of the committee which has been examining Bill C-37. If she had she would have had her questions answered for her. In light of the fact that she has not taken the time to read the transcripts of the testimony, I can relate to her the type of evidence that has been given. Perhaps it will stimulate her into actually examining the issues at hand.

With respect to the softwood lumber settlement itself, the Minister says that the stock market is now the arbiter with respect to whether this is a good deal or a bad deal. She seems to think that the stock market will indicate whether there is a healthy economy or not. What has been pointed out is that the burst in the price of MacMillan Bloedel stocks was due to the progress being made in the pulp and paper industry. Many of the companies dealing exclusively in softwood lumber are in fact being negatively affected at the present time. Between 80 and 100 companies have been forced to go out of business in the secondary remand areas.

Mike Apsey, who is the Executive Director of COFI and who appeared before us, said that the fact of the matter is that whatever boom is being experienced in the lumber industry is a result of the completion of inventories after the strike. As they head further into the third and fourth quarters they will face a downturn in the industry. The 15 per cent added cost differential means that the threshold of closing of mills and the threshold of losing money is so much higher than it was before that many of these companies have lost their flexibility. If the Minister thinks that good trade policy should be based on what goes up and down on the Toronto Stock Exchange from day to day, then I say that that is an awfully good reason why Canadians should have even less confidence today than they had yesterday in the capacity of the Minister for International Trade.

The Minister asks whether or not we would have liked to keep the $600 million here in Canada. We said all along that we had a good case. We were convinced that we could have won, in which case no one would have had to spend $600 million on anything. This is $600 million which has been imposed on the Canadian forest industry. It cuts the capacity to expand. It cuts the capacity for capital investment. It also raises the threshold of plant closures. The fact of the matter is we believe that the country could have successfully pursued the case through either the American tribunal or the GATT tribunal. We believe, as does the industry, that the case could have been won or that we could have had the tariff reduced.

It is ironic that this is a Government which says that the market-place is right, that we must listen to private enterprise, but if it comes down to a choice of obtaining the advice of the industry then the Government turns its substantial other cheek and says: "No. We will not listen to that advice".

With respect to going to the GATT, as our Leader said this morning we had already paid for access of our softwood lumber to the American market under the Tokyo round of negotiations. We had given very broad-based access to American goods in the computer business equipment area, which makes up close to a $10 billion market. That was part of the deal that was negotiated. The Americans broke the deal. We were an accomplice in the breaking of that deal by going along with it. The fact of the matter is that if we had been given the right to retaliate, if many American industries, the big multinationals—the IBMs and the Burroughs, which presently have open access to the Canadian market because of the softwood lumber case—had felt they would be restricted, there might have been a very different set of political pressures brought to bear in the United States.

Once again, that is the reason we need a Government that can think through a trade strategy and that does not simply react to some Pavlovian stimulus provided by the Premier of British Columbia whose last job was running Fantasy Land and whose next job may be doing the same thing. That is why we are arguing in our amendment for something that begins to make sense.

I suggest that if the Minister wants further elaboration on these important points there are several hundred pages of transcript that might provide useful reading for her.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, like many Members of the House I have been studying this omnibus resolution. That is what we called it at our convention this weekend since it covers just about everything. I wish to ask my good friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), if this resolution were to pass would it indicate an acceptance of a comprehensive bilateral deal with the United States or would it indicate a rejection of such a comprehensive deal? I have trouble trying to sort this out, which may be my fault. I have trouble trying to sort out whether the conditions, if they were accepted, would be sufficient to put the Liberal Party solidly behind this initiative.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I am always interested in helping the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) in trade matters and to give him the best advice I can to develop his understanding of these matters. With respect to the question he raised, there is a very easy and simple answer. The Hon. Member should read the first paragraph of our amendment in which we state that we oppose an all-inclusive trade arrangement with the United States. I do not think I can be much clearer than that.

In listening to the speech of the Hon. Member's Leader this afternoon I heard him say that members of his Party are not against negotiating with the Americans but that they have certain conditions as well. That sounds to me as if the NDP is about ready to support the Liberal amendment. Considering the events of last week, I think that would be only fair under the circumstances.

The amendment speaks for itself. We oppose an all-inclusive agreement which would set out a whole series of conditions which we feel must guide any other form of negotiation or agreement that is being made. We welcome the support of the New Democratic Party in this regard, just as we welcome the support of the Conservatives in the establishment of a clear trade policy.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I take exception to the remarks of the Hon. Member with respect to the Premier of British Columbia, who we feel is doing an excellent job on behalf of British Columbia. I am sure that the Leader of the Hon. Member's Party would want to dissociate himself from the comments of the Hon. Member. It would not be the first or the last time, I am sure, that the two do not agree.

Speakers this morning have cited many quotations. I would like to add to those which have been put forward this morning and read the following:

> Yielding to protectionism under the guise of economic nationalism is self-defeating for Canada. This country has always proposed freer rules of international trade. Ad hoc retaliation here and there is not ultimately in the Canadian interest. If any of the current reciprocity Bills before the U.S. Congress ever become law, Canadians will learn what retaliation is all about.

I am sure Hon. Members think that perhaps those are the words of one of our Ministers or a member from this side of the House. In fact, it is a statement made by the Hon. Member's Leader back in 1982 when he was with McMillan Binch. I applaud the comments of the Leader of the Opposition. I think he takes the right approach, an open approach to free trade.

Can the Hon. Member advise me how he can reconcile the views of his Leader, which were so forcefully and appropriately set out in 1982, and the view which he has just stated that his Party is against an all-inclusive trade arrangement with the United States? The amendment which has been put forward contains so many caveats and so many ifs, ands and buts, it is like sending a boxer into the ring with both hands tied. How can one negotiate an arrangement with all that? In fact, it reminds me of a cross between a horse and a donkey. We all know what that would end up with. It would be a mule that is sterile and cannot produce. With this type of amendment the Liberal Party will not be producing either. Would the Hon. Member care to enlighten me on the discrepancy between his Leader and himself with respect to this particular issue?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, first let me say to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that in referring to the Premier of British Columbia I was simply stating a fact that that was his last place of employment. If the Hon. Member is disputing that, then it is only consistent with the Tories inability to deal with facts and reality by always dealing in the realm of fiction. The hon. gentleman is now the Premier of British Columbia and, of course, we will accord all the honour due that position. We will listen to him with interest as he makes statements or ruminates on matters of trade or other such matters.

I want to come to the main part of the member's question about the ability to have retaliation. There is a major difference. Ad hoc retaliation is what the Government used on the shakes and shingles. It brought in a sort of stupid tax on books that simply crippled the book industry, to say nothing of having deprived widows of their tea and children of their Christmas trees. That is what you call an ad hoc capricious, silly retaliation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And the Minister finally recognized it.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who is usually nine months behind time, recognized his error by bringing in a correction to his Budget.

I was talking about a clearly determined right of retaliation under international rules. Where there is a major countervail action, as the United States took on softwood lumber which we consider to be totally unfair, given redress by GATT under the international rules we would have been able to apply a proper mode of retaliation under those rules. That is what makes those rules work, and that is the point we are after. Let us make the rules work. Let us have an international system that works effectively instead of skirting around it, trying to get out from under all the time, which has been the practice of the Conservative Government. We believe that if the system worked properly, and we think it would have worked properly—the Americans themselves say their interest is in broadening international rules—we would not have had to retaliate. The Americans would have backed down on the countervail and we would not have $600 million being applied against our lumber industry today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is now over.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties. I believe that if you would put the following motion to the House you would find there is general agreement. It is basically the same motion as was put this morning with one small change to delete a dinner break. I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order of the House, the House sit as follows today, Monday, March 16, 1987, for the purpose of consideration of the Government motion dated March 11, 1987, respecting bilateral trade, in the name of the Minister of International Trade:

—The House continue to sit until 10 p.m., without interruption for Private Members' Business or the Adjournment Proceedings at which time Mr. Speaker will interrupt any proceeding then underway to put forthwith and successively, without further amendment or debate, any question or questions then before the House, provided that at the request of any Member at that time, a division on any question or questions will be deferred until 6 p.m. Tuesday, March 17, 1987.

—Following such question or questions being put at 10 p.m. tonight, or following such deferred division or divisions being requested at that time, Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis). Is there unanimous consent?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we agree with this motion.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) presentation today and hearing his presentation indicating a willingness to discuss the whole matter of the negotiated settlement prior to the final decision with Parliament, we concur that the debate take place into the evening and the vote be held tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

And on the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 4158):

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks in this debate, I want to express my appreciation to my two colleagues, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for allowing me to enter the debate at this time enabling me to fulfil a long time commitment with a large number of eastern Ontario farmers later tonight.

Canadian agriculture has an important stake in international trade negotiations. And, as Minister of Agriculture, I am pleased to speak for Canadian farmers in the Cabinet, in the House and on their behalf in the bilateral trade negotiations.

The federal Government understands and appreciates the importance of Canada's farm industry. Furthermore, we believe that the family farm is and should continue to be at the heart of the industry. Canadians, too, understand that agriculture touches all of our lives every day. We do not take for granted the contribution that our farm industry makes to the national economy and to the economies of many rural towns and villages from coast to coast. We do not take for granted the 1.6 jobs provided directly or indirectly by the agriculture and food industry. And certainly no Canadian should ever take for granted this country's reliable supply of high quality reasonably-priced food. Indeed, the Government's top priority commitment to agriculture is a commitment to a strong, healthy agri-food industry and thus a strong, healthy Canadian economy.

That is why our Government has undertaken many helpful and important agricultural initiatives. Most significantly, we delivered the $1 billion special Canadian grains program, the largest special initiative ever taken on behalf of Canadian farmers by any federal Government in the history of Canada. This and many other actions are tangible proof that we have acted in good faith on behalf of farmers. In the same way we are acting in good faith and in the best interests of our farmers in our international trade negotiations.

Canada's farm industry truly reflects the trading heritage of this nation. Close to half of last year's farm cash receipts in Canada, about $9 billion, were derived from export sales alone. That is why it is essential we get the best possible deal for agriculture in our international trade negotiations.

Let me speak first about the problems of international trade and grains. The ill-conceived export subsidy war between the treasuries of the EEC, and the U.S. is making victims of Canadian farmers. The Government of Canada is determined to see an end to this insane subsidy war. We are fighting for fairness in world agricultural trade. Most Canadian farmers understand and appreciate our many efforts. For example, Canada played a key role in having agriculture put on the table in the new round of multinational negotiations. We are now pursuing the Canadian interest with vigour at the GATT. At the Tokyo Summit last year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) expressed the need for an end to the international subsidy war as a matter of urgency. I am positive the Prime Minister will be doing the same at the upcoming summit. My colleague, the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, has met twice to discuss grain trade problems with the five major grain exporting nations. Canada, in fact, initiated the first meeting. There will be more. We must find a solution. We must restore fairness and equity to the international trade world.

These multilateral initiatives do not stand alone. Canada is also acting on another important international front, namely, bilaterally, to improve our trading relationship with the United States. The Americans are by far Canada's largest export customer for farm products. When you realize that the United States is a relatively small customer for our major farm export, grains and oil seeds, then the significance of the U.S. market becomes even more obvious and apparent. More than half of our non-grain and oil seed farm exports are sold to the U.S. market. Sales of our farm products to the United States equalled 10 per cent of all farm cash receipts in Canada.

The importance of the United States market varies from one commodity to the next, but that is Canadian agriculture. It is an important point to remember. For instance, about three-quarters of our red meat exports go to the United States. Without exports to the Americans, our red meat industry would shrink dramatically. About two-thirds of our horticultural and special crops go to the United States, and well over half our potatoes are exported to the United States. In fact, if we look at the Canadian pork industry, we see that well over a third of all pork produced in Canada is sold in the U.S. market.

Clearly a strong future for many sectors of our farm industry is contingent upon future access to our largest market, namely, the U.S. This is why many farmers are, and rightfully should be, concerned about the increasing protectionist move which is running rampant south of the border.

We have all seen the writing on the wall. Action by U.S. pork producers resulted in the imposition of a countervail duty on live swine. A number of midwestern states restricted imports of our live animals and meats for more than a year. It was allegedly done for health reasons, but it was really to keep Canadian products out of the U.S. market. U.S. potato producers in Maine continue to try to restrict Canadian potato markets in that particular region. The legal costs of this action and the imposition of special inspection procedures create a hardship for potato producers in the country, particularly those in eastern Canada.

There were anti-dumping and countervail duty investigations into British Columbia raspberries. Restrictive import quotas were imposed on certain sugar products. This has caused an estimated trade loss to Canada of about $40 million. Now there is an investigation of beef imports from Canada.

Canadian farmers are not standing still during this process. Many farm groups are beginning to take successful action on their own to protect their own interests. Even as we negotiate nation to nation for new and better rules governing agricultural trade, we cannot and will not leave ourselves disarmed.

A good example is the corn countervail decision which was issued on March 6 by the Canadian Import Tribunal. It found that American subsidized corn was causing injury to Canada's grain corn industry. This decision was a direct result of farmers' own actions.

All these disputes point to the troubling changes which are taking place in our trading relationship with the United States. For our farmers these disputes create uncertainty about the future and future market opportunities. Unless there is an effort on both sides of the border to discuss and resolve these difficulties through the negotiation of a new trade deal, we can bet that there will be more problems and indeed more trade barriers.

The benefits for Canadian farmers will be tremendous, if we are able to negotiate a new trade deal with the United States. It must be a deal that prevents many disputes from happening in the first place. It must be a deal that establishes a reliable and fair mechanism for handling disputes which arise in a manner that does not involve new trade barriers. It must be a deal which, once and for all, regulates technical barriers in order to prevent their use to block trade, and a deal which gives Canada more secure access to our largest agricultural market.

From an agricultural standpoint, that is what these negotiations are all about. They are about fighting off the ground swell of protectionism in the United States, and they are about securing Canada's access to a large American market of some 235 million people.

To get the best deal possible, we are consulting fully with the industry, with all sectors, and with all provinces. I should like to make mention of the membership of Walter Kroeker and Ted Turner on the permanent International Trade Advisory Board. In addition, we have some 15 sectoral advisory groups on international trade. We also have one of the largest sectoral groups on agriculture, food, and beverages, with about 34 members.

More than half the total farm cash receipts in the country are derived from the sale of commodities covered by marketing boards. Producers of many commodities from grains to turkeys to hogs have been served well by the marketing board system. Today there are about 125 active marketing boards in Canada, and the vast majority of them are promotional in nature and established under provincial legislation.

However, an important distinction must be made for dairy, poultry, and egg farmers who operate under a full supply-management system. I appreciate the concern among some of these producers about what our negotiations with the United States may mean for them. My cabinet colleagues are well aware of those concerns as well.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), and the Prime Minister have stated the Government's position on the issue very clearly. In fact, the motion before the House clearly addresses itself to that problem. I have repeated the message time and time again that the Government will retain the right to decide in Canada what kind of marketing systems are best for our agricultural commodities. We are not about to dismantle the Canadian Wheat Board or any other marketing boards, whether or not they have supply-management powers. Let me make that statement very clear. We are talking with the Americans about trade, but we will not sign any deal unless the deal is a good one for Canadian farmers. Obviously any deal which is a good deal for Canadian farmers is a good deal for Canadians generally.

The Government's position on agriculture in the trade negotiations reflects the high priority we place upon the country's agri-food industry. We believe that our positions, our policies, and our actions must and do reflect a commitment to a healthy and viable farm industry in Canada.

I welcome whatever time is remaining for questions.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister to expand a little on what he is saying about marketing boards, in particular the Canadian Wheat Board and the grain commission. Mr. Yeutter, the U.S. Trade Commissioner, has stated very specifically that they cannot accept the grading system established in Canada and that it is unfair to them. In fact, he called it "phoney". That grading system has made us the producer of the best grains in the world, and the United States has complained about it for many years. It has suggested that it wants the system out of the way and that if we are to have a level playing field, it must be out of the way. I want the Minister to assure us that the Government respects the grading system which is in place as far as grains are concerned.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I can take some satisfaction from the fact that at least the question is a different one. For the last six months or eight months certain people have been travelling around the country deliberately stirring up some uneasiness and anxiety by indicating "forget it, fellows, you are going to lose your marketing system". They have indicated to people who have operated so well under supply-management—and some of them have done so for 50 years—that it will go down the tubes.

I hope we have established the facts very clearly today. When the Hon. Member started his question, I thought he was about to raise again a question about the possibility of the Canadian Wheat Board being dissolved or disappearing after the talks. The fact of the matter is that it will not be. We have deliberately used the term "agricultural marketing system". I indicated that we have about 125 boards in the country. Some of the boards have supply-management and some do not. Some are marketing commissions. Some are not much more than associations. Some are groups of producers who sit down on behalf of their membership to try to negotiate contracts with processors and so on. Maybe we are making progress here in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board.

I suppose the grading system is like any other grading system for a whole variety of products. We have some real problems with the grading systems in reference to our U.S. counterparts, and we would not mind talking about that at all. They have a habit of changing these things overnight without even giving us the courtesy of notifying us. They happen to use all sorts of things that give us problems, and I think that is one of the trade irritants about which we should talk.

I can tell the Hon. Member one thing and that is that we will not make any decision on changing the grading systems until such time as we fully utilize the advisory group that exists and until we touch base with the industry people. My colleague, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board will, I am certain, be using each and every occasion to seek the advice of the leadership of the grain trade before we make any move on that particular aspect of it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), indicated earlier today that the Government would be seeking to reduce customs duties, to reduce tariffs and to negotiate in the area of investment and services. Taking that into account, I would like to ask the Minister some explicit questions.

If investment is to be negotiated, would that affect the way U.S. grain companies compete with prairie grain co-operatives and pools which now have special investment advantages? Second, if by negotiating import quotas and tariffs we allow for import restrictions on U.S. grain to be lifted, how will that affect the two-price wheat system? Third, if customs duties on imported fruits and vegetables are revoked or removed, would that not affect our emergency protection laws as well as our seasonal customs duties that now apply for the protection of the horticultural industry? Fourth, how would this affect the wineries in British Columbia and Ontario? The Minister for International Trade said that we would negotiate away government procurement. The wine and beer industries are based on the special advantages they now enjoy with liquor commissions across Canada. Have all those applications of the Government's plan been examined?

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate those questions. In response to a question which I believe was posed by the Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) earlier today, I made it very clear. When we make a clear statement dealing with agricultural marketing systems like the one we made in today's motion, there should be no doubt that we are sending a clear signal across the country that we will maintain the right to decide in Canada what system of marketing a particular commodity deems advisable for its own use. We are also recognizing the continuation of supply management.

Some marketing boards have supply management, but the Canadian Wheat Board is a little different. It does not have supply management powers but it does have powers to issue import permits. We have sent a clear signal that the Canadian Wheat Board stays and that marketing boards, even those with supply management powers, stay. At the same time, there must be a recognition that certain underpinnings are required and will have to remain in place. There is no way the supply management system can operate unless it continues to have other trade advantages.

Let us look at the dairy industry, for example. We can compare any dairy farm in Canada with a dairy farm in the State of Florida. The farmer in the State of Florida will probably not have any more money in his entire operation than the average dairy farmer in Canada has in his or her milk house. That is just common sense. Those who understand the industry know that there is no way Canadian dairymen could compete against dairymen south of the State of Georgia because of weather conditions alone. The same is true of the middle states. Any state further south of Georgia has two crops a year. How in the world can we compete against that? We must recognize that reality. We will not shut them down at all.

With reference to Sections 56 and 57 of the fruit, vegetable and honey regulations, again I indicated in answer to the Hon. Member's colleague that I have an option to express my views on that in accordance with the new rules of the House and I will do so. I will exercise my option on behalf of the Canadian fruit and vegetable industry on Wednesday, I believe. I hope that all Hon. Members, regardless of political affiliation, will join with me in support of that motion so those regulations are not rescinded.

I have spoken of geographic locations and the economy of scale. We always have to be conscious of those. We live in half of the North American continent. Americans can put 10 per cent of their produce into this market and occupy 100 per cent of it. We could put 100 per cent of our produce down there and it would only impact on about 10 per cent of the market. We know that. In fact, I have established a Canada-U.S. port advisory group which has worked well together and will continue working together. There is a respect for our need to pay special attention to those items which impact on Canadian agriculture and particularly the fruit and vegetable industry at certain seasons of the year.

As I have travelled across the country, I have experienced some frustration. A member of my staff told me that I made 190 speeches last year, and I will probably make as many in the future if I have the good fortune to remain in this particular position. As I travel around the country, I find that almost without exception, people are pretty edgy on the trade issue, particularly those who work in supply-managed commodities. I acknowledge that. However, we have decided, and it is the right decision, that we should only say certain things at certain times. I know my colleague, the Minister for International Trade made that point today in answer to my colleague across the way. Whatever we do, we must not jeopardize our chances of striking the best possible deal. We have satisfied ourselves at this point in time that we can be very definite on marketing systems with supply management. The process will go on and as time goes by and negotiations continue, we will be making more definite statements on other aspects as well.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a couple of questions about Canadian dairy farmers. Of course, the Minister probably has a copy of the letter that was addressed to him by the president of their association dated March 13. The dairy farmers made a number of points on the free trade deal with the United States as it relates to the dairy industry to which I would like the Minister to respond.

First, dairy farmers say that their domestic market must not become a disposal ground for U.S. overproduction. The Minister already stated that certain parts of the United States can certainly produce more cheaply than we can in Canada due to our geographic dislocation, if you will, and climatic conditions. This is what bothers the dairy industry, certainly in my province, about free trade. I am sure they would like to have some assurances from the Minister that the import control list is a fundamental element of the Canadian supply management system and it must not be weakened under any conditions in these negotiations. On the contrary, they say that if any changes are to be made they should go towards strengthening of the list, notably through the addition of dairy products such as yogurt and ice cream. If we do not have some way of stopping the import of those products, especially those in the dairy sector, given their longer production runs and their ability to compete against us, then supply management will be thrown out of the window as far as Atlantic Canadian farmers are concerned.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I believe I dealt with that question earlier in Question Period and in my other remarks. This Government provided dairy farmers with a five-year commitment of $1.5 billion. This motion we are debating today indicates that supply management stays. The long-term dairy policy stays. There is no question about that. The Hon. Member should take some comfort from that. I also said that would require the retention of certain underpinnings now in place in order to maintain the commitment to that long-term dairy policy. Dairy farmers can take some satisfaction from all three statements. However, the observation I wanted to make dealt with the example I used previously of the difficulty a dairy farmer has here in Canada compared to one south of the State of Georgia, particularly in Florida. I also wonder if the Hon. Member knows that the U.S. dairy industry can send ice cream across the bridge from, say Detroit but we do not have access to the U.S. market. That concerns me. It might well be an interesting item to raise, but we will not be raising it unless we are requested to do so by the industry.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, let me start off by saying that my sympathies lie with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) as he tries desperately to defend his farmers, as he sees them, against the assault posed by the free trade agreement. He is, as I see it, agonizing his way along as toughly as he can. Frankly, I wish him luck, but I also have to say that I think farmers across the country will find some very rude surprises in what is going to take place.

Miss MacDonald: That is your wish.

Mr. Langdon: That is not my wish.

Miss MacDonald: Indeed it is.

Mr. Langdon: That is not my wish. I have dairy farmers in my riding.

Mr. Wise: Not many of them. How many?

Mr. Langdon: Far fewer than there used to be, and that is a commentary on past agricultural policy. However, those who are there are very concerned about what may happen not just because of the potential threat to the dairy industry, but also because of the potential threat to cross-boundary product movements which could undercut the industry and in turn undercut farmers and the farm sector itself. I wanted to make that point at the beginning.

This is perhaps one of the most important debates which has taken place on the economic future of this country since 1867. We have to choose the direction we are going to take, and that has tremendous implications for our future as a sovereign nation. There is, too, a broader issue involved in this debate. That issue is crucial to all Canadians. That is, the question of the integrity of Ministers who now stand behind this policy when they stood behind quite a different policy prior to their election. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) started this debate with some quotations and I want to do the same. I would like to begin with a quotation from the Secretary of State concerning free trade with the U.S. This is from Maclean's in 1983: "It is silly. Canada must improve relations and trade with the United States, of course, but our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister." Let me quote as well the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) from the same source: "Bilateral free trade with the U.S. is simplistic and naive. It would only serve further to diminish our ability to compete internationally." Either the Minister did not believe it then or he is agonizing over supporting what is taking place now. Finally, let me quote the Prime Minister from that same source: "Canadians rejected free trade with the U.S. in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade which has dropped by 33 per cent in the past two decades."

What we have here is a series of leading economic Ministers who, when they were seeking the leadership of the Conservative Party, and I could quote the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) if I wanted to on this issue, indicated very clearly that they were against free trade. Yet once elected with this vast majority, they led the country in the direction of a comprehensive agreement with the U.S. That carries some extreme dangers, not just for our future sovereignty but for our economic well-being. Those remarks apply to what the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) said today. She made the most remarkable statements about the Auto Pact being an example of free trade and how she wished all the country could share in it. Those of us in southern Ontario who benefited from the Auto Pact and therefore from free trade should be willing to share our goodies. Let me make it quite clear that if the Minister still believes that an agreement which has safeguards both with respect to numbers of cars which must be produced in this country and with respect to Canadian content is in fact free trade, then she simply does not understand anything about the definition of the portfolio in which she is required to work.

I must take this point further. In his remarkable speech this morning, which in so many words said so little, the Prime Minister came at one point to a rather remarkable conclusion. He said that every research study had shown that there would be tremendous economic benefits for this country. I have here on my desk enough research reports which have shown exactly the contrary to keep this House busy for hours. I have one from the University of Maryland which says that among 28 industrial sectors analysed in this report the net employment is positive in 5 industrial sectors and negative in the remaining 23 sectors.

I can quote as well from reports of the Government of Ontario undertaken by Jack Baranson, an American who is unlikely to be biased on this. He makes the point very forcefully in that research report that there will be a tremendous outpouring of American branch plants from this country.

I can make the point with respect to studies done by the Province of Quebec which indicated significant job losses which would take place in Quebec. I can make the point with respect to another study done for the Government with respect to the Auto Pact and its conclusions which said that the Auto Pact should not be permitted in any way to be affected by this negotiation. It is quite clear now that it will be affected by this negotiation if across-the-board tariff cuts are going to be put into place.

Abundant research reports have demonstrated that the Prime Minister's points to us this morning and to the nation were not, as they should have been, reflections of reality but instead were reflections of hope. If he actually read the research reports which have been done on this subject by a great many groups across the country which include sectoral studies which have finally been produced, not by the Government publicly, but by the—

Quebec Coalition against free trade, groups which commissioned those studies carried out by Quebec economists, which clearly stated that in all the industries which were considered, there will be terrible losses as a result of that free trade arrangement.

[English]

That is in fact what the studies have shown us and that is in fact what the Prime Minister should be aware of as he speaks to this House and the nation.

He also spoke this morning about the resolution which came out of the New Democratic Party's convention over the past weekend. In that, too, he was selective. He chose the one point which he wished to attack without making clear to the nation that in that resolution was a very broad and detailed trade strategy that would take us in a different direction which would give us trade expansion with the rest of the world including the United States but would not sell us out as the present trade initiative is clearly going to do.

I could talk about some of those alternatives. I could talk, for instance, about the support for small business and medium-sized firms which the Government has not been prepared to give in the export sector through the EDC as it should have. I could talk about the necessity of working to build up more production and import replacement in high-tech sectors in this country through planning with business and labour. I could talk about an extension of the approach that has been taken in the Auto Pact and its 60 per cent Canadian content rules which would give us thousands of new jobs right across the country. I could also talk about the realities as opposed to the myths of GATT presented by both the Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister.

The reality is that GATT is urgently trying to deal with many of the problems which we are being hit by from the United States; the problems we have seen in softwood lumber, the problems we have seen in fish, and the problems we experience in Ontario in pork. That is a route which can be taken which would give us rapid action toward solving the problems that face us.

I could talk, as well, about the need to establish dispute settlement mechanisms which I think would be quite helpful between ourselves and the United States. That is the kind of strategy which can and should be taken in this country. However, that is not the direction which is being taken and across the country, contrary to the quotations which the Prime Minister read this morning. There is a crescendo of opposition emerging to this free trade thrust, opposition which I am predicting will lead to this thrust being rejected in the end despite the brave words of the Prime Minister this morning.

I could quote from the Gazette of March 14 which suggests that the Government should clarify its position on Monday because it has not clarified it yet. I could quote from Wonnacott's, economists who have supported free trade in many respects and who say that because a free trade arrangement is bound to create a number of specific problems it would best be undertaken when major disturbances such as widespread unemployment or an international financial crisis are absent. That, as we all know, represents the conditions which face us at this stage in Canada with 9.6 per cent out of work.

I could quote from Albert Breton, a member of the Macdonald Commission, who says:

> I continue to hold that anti-Americanism in Canada can be better kept in check and the prospect for free trade over the long term better protected, if unilateral reinterpretation of fair trade laws by the U.S. Government is directed at all its trading partners, rather than if a bilateral agreement calls "special" attention to Canada.

As Breton says, what will stop the U.S. Government from unilaterally reinterpreting and redefining any agreements, however formal, between Ottawa and Washington? Certainly not a sense of fairness or responsibility or even respect for the written word. I could quote from Arthur Donner who states:

> All of this suggests that Canada should not count on a free trade pact with the U.S. to rescue it from its productivity doldrums. Aside from the politics of the issue, Ottawa should be looking at other ways of boosting the economy and productivity.

• (1700)

I could quote Peter Francis, a small boat manufacturer who owns ACF Grew Inc., who states:

> If free trade becomes a reality, I expect to see some U.S. companies retreat across the border and serve the Canadian market from their larger and more efficient plants. I would not be at all surprised if we find Canadian companies establishing their new plants in the U.S. sun belt, where unions are practically nonexistent and a large number of employees work for minimum wages and benefits.

I could quote the head of Labatt's, who says:

> The costs of free trade are very high. Under present conditions, any economic advantages of free trade to the American brewing industry would be offset by severe financial and human dislocation in the Canadian brewing industry.

Perhaps I could finish by quoting George Grant, who has been a member and supporter of the Conservative Party for many years. He says:

> There seems to be no doubt that Canadian political sovereignty would be put in question both domestically and internationally if our two societies were homogenized economically. For example, social security policies: we just could not have policies that put us at a taxation disadvantage.

That is the reality that faces us if this path is taken. There is another path by which this country can get back on its feet. This Parliament must address itself to those dreams of our children and communities throughout the country of a free, independent sovereign nation which will be able to direct its own affairs so that it will not be told, as in the case of softwood lumber, what it can and cannot do. We must look toward a sovereign future in which Washington does not tell us what we can and cannot do in a free trade agreement. We must direct what takes place and decide how we shape our regional development policies, our agricultural strategies, our cultural policies and our development.

That is not the direction in which the Government is taking us. Rather, we are faced with camouflage by the Government and must rely on information that leaks from the chief negotiator and Canadian press in order to get a sense of what is on the negotiating table.

If the Government wanted to regain its sense of leadership on this issue, today was its opportunity to do so by giving the House a real progress report instead of a bogus set of presentations that have not explained what is taking place in the free trade talks.

We want the dream of the future, we do not want bogus directions which will be so devastating for all of us in the future.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that tomorrow will be day number four in the budget debate, and Wednesday will be an allotted day.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is an understanding that at ten o'clock tonight the debate will end and the vote will automatically take place at six o'clock tomorrow. Is that correct?

Mr. Lewis: Provided that is satisfactory to the Table Officers, we have no difficulty with it. In other words, my friend is saying that the vote will automatically be at six o'clock tomorrow rather than being called at ten o'clock for six o'clock. In other words, we know that the vote will be at six o'clock, if it is all right with the Table Officers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it agreeable?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING AGREEMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multi-lateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

and the amendment by Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (page 4158).

Mr. Blais (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully how the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) undertook... Yesterday, his leader promised his scant delegation from Quebec, and I want to quote from Le Devoir: "This morning, Broadbent goes to war against free trade". I would like to know, and perhaps the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor would be able to answer my question... He said earlier that some Hon. Members on the Government side were inconsistent in that before the election they had been against free trade and now they were in favour of it. He said that at the beginning of his speech.

I was surprised to hear him say so, because in fact that is the very essence of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker. That is how they have always operated. They are opposed to a measure until it turns out to be a good thing, and then they try and give the impression they invented it in the place. That is what happened in the case of the Auto Pact and what they are doing now with the language question. After being opposed to this particular measure for a couple of years, and after criticizing Quebec to the nth degree, now they are almost messianic in their defense of the province of Quebec. They even got the help of the Premier of Manitoba, who a few weeks ago was very critical of certain government decisions, and who now said yesterday: Of course Quebec is the best province in Canada. Invest in Quebec. That is a lot of hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

How can the Hon. Member's party be constantly opposed to free trade and object to the whole concept to the point of going to war against free trade? It is all very clear. The message is clear. They do not say why. They say we are on the warpath, we are against it.

They are also opposed to a Canadian policy which, I think, Canadians generally have acknowledged as being a more aggressive stance in the drug sector, a policy aimed at creating hundreds and thousands of jobs in Quebec and Ontario and attracting investments in excess of $1 billion over the next few years. At the same time the New Democratic Party was opposed to the sale of Canadair which will put an end to an annual waste of billions of dollars on a company which was unable to operate in the black. We sold it back to the private sector so as to be able to recoup these losses and put Government management on a sounder footing. But all we get from that Party is opposition and a negative approach, yet a few years ago they did manage at times to come up with challenging initiatives which at least had the merit of being original. They have become naysayers from the word go. They are prophets of doom, ever retrogressive and pessimistic. None of their recommendations or positions has even a whit of constructive elements to create jobs for Canadians.

The Prime Minister—he quoted him this morning—said: He made an intervention, an admirable speech. Yes, I am getting to the point, Mr. Speaker. He said: He made an admirable speech. The main reason why it was admirable is that it was positive. He said: We must forget partisanship, Mr. Speaker. And because Canadians find our 9 per cent unemployment rate intolerable we will do our best to find new markets, we will try to find new customers for our companies located in Bellechasse, Beauce and elsewhere, for our small- and medium-sized businesses from coast to coast in Canada. That is what we need. But we hear them say: No, no, let us not upset anything, we will try to sell that, we will create new state-owned companies, we will trade among ourselves. I cannot imagine what they want, but they have no ideas, Mr. Speaker. As the Prime Minister said this morning, what do you intend to do to help us bring down the unemployment rate? What do you think you can do to create jobs, since you don't think we can do it by working together with our customers, our neighbours to the South, who can provide us, quite honourably, I believe, with a market of 250 million people next door? What kind of positive contribution do you have to make? What can you do to provide jobs for Canadians on this side of the border? Because that is what we need, Mr. Speaker. I wish they would come up with something positive, because we haven't heard anything positive for months.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, at last we have someone from Quebec who sounds just like the Minister from Newfoundland. We have a remarkable addition to the House.

Mr. Blais (Bellechasse): I have been around for two and a half years.

Mr. Langdon: I must say I couldn't find many ideas in all those words. They say, for instance, that we as a party are opposed to trade. In fact, that is not the case. For instance, we could mention the resolution made on the weekend which indicates that we really want to increase our trade, not just with the United States but with many other countries. We could also say that the resolution contains suggestions for supporting small- and medium-sized businesses, because it is this sector of our economy that is the most important one in terms of improving the economy and producing new types of exports. Today, we do not have any agencies to back up these small companies. If the Hon. Member does not agree, he would do well, as I did, to listen to what a group like the Export Development Corporation does, which has been supporting these small companies quite well.

There are other ways of creating jobs. For instance, we said it was necessary to set up in Canada a system to replace imports in the high tech sector, because these sectors are very important for the future. But to do all these things, we have to concentrate on economic issues. We don't have to conclude a wide-ranging agreement with the United States. The U.S. has enough problems of its own nowadays, including the issue of productivity.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude as his time has expired.

• (1720)

Mr. Langdon: I suppose the answer is pretty long for the question, but in concluding, I want to say that on the weekend in Montreal, we discussed a lot of ways to expand the economy, and it isn't necessary to get involved in issues like free trade that will cause problems in this country with respect to the future of our sovereignty.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I take part in this debate on a matter of utmost importance for our country, and Quebec. It is now over a year since Prime Minister Brian Mulroney announced in the House of Commons Canada's intention to conclude a trade agreement with the United States in order to preserve, improve and guarantee our access to the world's largest market for goods and services.

Because of the size of the U.S. market, we must not only safeguard what we have already achieved but also negotiate an agreement which will at the same time facilitate and stimulate growth in our commercial activities in the United States. As you know, Mr. Speaker, our bilateral trade amounts to $200 billion per year—the largest volume of trade between any two countries. Two million and a half jobs depend on U.S. sales, and nearly 80 per cent of our goods and services are sold there.

These negotiations are particularly important to Quebec and its people. The province's exports in 1985 were worth nearly $22 billion, and sales to the United States accounted for two thirds of that amount, or about $14.5 billion. Since Quebec is now selling 66 per cent of its exports on the U.S. market, it is crucial for the province, as it is for the jobs of hundreds of thousands of Quebec workers, that the trade boundaries between the nations—and especially between Canada and the United States—remain open. The necessity for us to take action to protect our access to this market quickly becomes obvious when we look at the protectionist action taken against us recently. The Americans do not hesitate to use measures which create costly trade restrictions.

The trade measures taken against Canada in the past few years have already affected our exports of nearly $7 billion. As an example, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention here the farming sector, which was affected by countervailing and anti-dumping measures against Canadian exports of hogs, potatoes, raspberries and even cut flowers. Hog exports alone bring in nearly 20 per cent of the total cash farm revenue in Quebec. The Americans have threatened to take this type of action against other farm products as well.

If we could succeed in defining some clear rules limiting the use of such action, Quebec and canadian farming would benefit tremendously.

These protectionist measures apply to a whole range of products, such as lumber and cedar shakes and shingles. Quebec's interests have been seriously affected by the measures taken to counter the protectionist threat by the United States against the softwood lumber. We must realize, Mr. Speaker, that softwood lumber exports are important to many regions of the province, and that in 1985 they accounted for just over 5 per cent of Quebec's sales of primary products to the United States.

We must negotiate an agreement that will ensure stability, fairness and predictability, by establishing effective methods of settling disputes. Since we are commercially dependent on the United States in terms of jobs and revenue, that is a threat to Quebec's and Canada's prosperity which we cannot ignore. It clearly makes good sense to try to maintain, expand and protect our bilateral economic relations, by concluding a long-term trade agreement with the United States.

The Americans also consider it in their interest to strengthen their access to their largest export market.

That is why Prime Minister Mulroney and President Reagan have initiated negotiations to provide for, and I quote:

"The broadest possible set of mutually beneficial reductions in the obstacles to their trade in goods and services."

What, then, is at stake in the bilateral trade negotiations with the United States? First there is the objective of freeing up trade—mutually reducing and eliminating customs tariffs, establishing agreed-upon rules for origin and improving customs procedures. Already, 80 per cent of our exports to the United States, and 75 per cent of U.S. exports to Canada, cross our border duty-free. Both parties have an interest in making it possible for the rest of their goods and services to be exported freely and easily.

If that were the only objective, the negotiations might not be too difficult. Greater liberalization of tariffs could be progressively achieved in any case from the new round of GATT negotiations, in which Canada is participating actively. However, such long processes will not solve our most immediate problems.

The bilateral negotiations with the United States cover more important matters: the exceptional U.S. protectionist measures, a number of non-tariff barriers to trade and, for the first time, negotiation of agreed-upon rules for trade in services, measures relating to investment and protection of intellectual property rights like patents, copyrights and trade marks.

Those are questions of access that interest both our countries. We are also talking about better mechanisms for settling disputes, and about the adjustment process required by application of an agreement.

Thus both parties want to eliminate or reduce tariffs, over a transition period established in terms of the adjustment problems of specific industries. That transition period will last five to 10 years. No one will be caught short overnight by decisions ratified in this government. Also, the tariff concessions on both sides must be equivalent in value.

These trade negotiations are difficult and complicated. No one has said the road will be smooth. The sectoral disputes arising during the negotiations certainly do not make them any easier.

But everything boils down to this, Mr. Speaker: there will be no agreement with the Americans unless we can obtain one that is good for Canada and for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, it is our responsibility, our collective responsibility as Government members, the responsibility of the leader of the Government to undertake this kind of negotiation, because we are talking about the future, we are not talking only about ourselves, we are talking about our children and grandchildren, we are talking about the year 2000, Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a country which seeks its own place under the sun, in a competitive world, in an international world. It is the kind of avant-garde policy which the Government has proposed to Canadians and is proposing to its trading partners to ensure a challenging, promising, fair and equitable future.

Mr. Speaker, no matter what certain Members of the Opposition—official or otherwise—or the media may have claimed, we are negotiating on a one-to-one basis; if our negotiations prove to be successful, the agreement must benefit both parties. And unlike in many other economic sectors, it is possible to arrive at mutually beneficial agreements in the international trade sector. It is not a question of abandoning something at the expense of the other. Of course, it is the kind of agreement which our partners to the south are seeking as well, the kind of agreement we are negotiating, and this is why we are confident we will find a solution which both parties will accept as being fair and equitable.

Our negotiators meet every month, and the rythm is picking up as they have reached the practical timeframe for detailed negotiations. Besides security and possibility of access, both parties want to open up public and regulated markets. If Canada succeeded in obtaining only 1 per cent more of the U.S. public market, it would earn $5 billion more per year, which would translate into the creation of 75,000 new jobs, as the Prime Minister said this morning. It shows how important are those negotiations now under way.

The U.S., for its part, is interested in concluding arrangements in the new areas of services, investment and intellectual property. Both Governments consider it important to liberalize trade in farm products, along with better regulation of export subsidies for those products. I hasten to add that this will be done without putting in jeopardy our farm product marketing boards. In this area, Quebec could benefit from continued and wider access to the U.S. market through conclusion of an agreement on the U.S. restrictions on livestock, meat and packaged products, and from an agreement on technical standards, which have been used to block Canadian exports. The questions on trade in farm products are also a priority for the GATT negotiations.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what will an overall trade agreement give us? It will give us a guaranteed environment for investment, new production facilities, economies of scale and specialization, better productivity and better jobs, more secure jobs, jobs with a future. That is what we are striving for in this negotiation which we believe is so important to our country's future.

In Quebec we see the possibility of guaranteeing modernization of the industrial structure. That is why the private sector, particularly the Conseil du patronat, the Chambre de Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, are so strongly in favour of a trade agreement with the United States.

Among the manufacturing sectors in Quebec which would benefit most from a Canada-U.S. trade agreement, we should mention a substantial portion of exports of resource-based products, such as pulp and paper and chemicals. Other important manufacturing exports (like public transit, telecommunications and aerospace equipment) could benefit from better access to the U.S. public markets for civilian and military goods. Quebec's equipment and hardware industries could benefit from lower U.S. customs tariffs and from removal of the threat of countervailing measures, which would encourage investment in Canada and in Quebec.

Quebec's services sector—70 per cent of the province's economy, and over two million jobs—is looking for new outlets. Although much remains to be done to determine the advantages involved, many firms in such sectors as life insurance, construction, consulting engineering and business services have stated they would benefit from freer trade.

Although we have given only a few examples, it is clear that the benefits will not all go only to one region or one sector in Quebec, but to all our people. From Gaspé to Abitibi, from the Eastern Townships to Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean—and in my own riding, I would hope—from urban factories and financial houses to forest, farm, mining and fishing firms—free and guaranteed access to our neighbour's large market will help us build up Quebec and create the jobs on which our prosperity depends.

The Conservative Government has also undertaken to maintain the social security net which enables Canada to adapt to the evolution of the world economy. A new trade agreement with the United States will strengthen this adaptability and open up new opportunities for economic growth, which is in fact the best policy for adjustment.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in its dual trade negotiations—bilateral negotiations with the United States and multilateral negotiations in GATT—the Government is trying to solidify and strengthen Canada's economic base. It is also working to manage change, which is the economic reality of today, to promote production, employment and revenue, which are the basis of our physical, social and cultural well-being. We are working to build a stronger Canada in a stronger world.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) whether he could expand on the copyright issue. He referred to this matter in his speech, and I wish he would explain exactly what he thinks will happen in a free trade agreement on this issue.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the question has been raised before. I mentioned it because it is very important in connection with our Canadian cultural industries. It is of course a matter we would like to look at very closely. I think it is far too early to prejudge any decision that might be made in this area.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) said this had nothing to do with free trade. It was the Minister himself who mentioned the subject in his speech, and I think its importance should be increasing steadily, especially in the Province of Quebec. So since this has nothing to do with free trade, according to the Minister of Communications, why did the Minister bring the subject up in his speech?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I referred to the matter in my speech for a very good reason. Throughout our discussions on bilateral trade negotiations, we talked about a host of issues. This is one question that was raised, just as the patent issue was another question. It is a matter that concerns us very much, and the same goes for the Americans. It is a matter on which we must reach some kind of solution. We intend to defend Canadian interests, and there are certainly no two ways about it. We intend to defend Canadian interests in this respect as we intend to defend them in many other areas we have just mentioned. However, it is just not true that the subject will never be raised. It already has been.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is the Minister of Communications who says it has nothing to do with free trade. So now we can see that the Minister is turning his back on the position announced by the Minister of Communications with respect to the cultural industry, including copyrights. Can he be more specific? This is the first time we hear the Government say that copyrights will be on the negotiation table. Before today they claimed that culture was not negotiable, but now we see that it is. Can you be more specific about the position of the Conservative Party?

Mr. de Cotret: No, no. Mr. Speaker, I should like to set the record straight for my colleague. I never said the question was there to be negotiated. I said: It is a question which had been raised. It is a question we will defend. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that long before the end of our negotiations and the end of the great debate on this issue the Minister of Communications will have quite a lot to say about it.

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) knows the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has said that procurement is one of the major objectives of this particular negotiation. He also knows that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has indicated in past speeches that the principle of national treatment will apply to all these negotiations, meaning there cannot be any law, regulation or guidance from the Government which discriminates against countries on either side of the border. Under those conditions, the President of the Treasury Board would remember that in making the CF-18 decision he made quite a strong case that Montreal was to be an aerospace centre and Canadair was a Canadian-owned company. The President of the Treasury Board said that all the other reasons would clearly discriminate one company against the other. Would he now admit that that would be impossible under the Government's proposed free trade negotiations? Those kinds of judgments that the President of the Treasury Board made could not be made in the case of the CF-18 contract.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to disagree with one of the premises of the Hon. Member. We never at any time said that the ownership issue of the company which got the CF-18—

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, you did.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to try to find any quote that I ever made to that effect.

Mr. Axworthy: I will.

Mr. de Cotret: I will be very happy to see that quote.

Mr. Axworthy: It will be a point of order tomorrow.

Mr. de Cotret: What we did in that case was to ensure that the technology transfer was going to the company best able to transfer that technology. Under any kind of an agreement we make with the United States following this comprehensive trade agreement, we will still be able to do exactly the same thing.

When we talk about procurement, we are talking about access to a multi-billion dollar market for Canadians in the United States. We are talking about giving small, medium-sized and large Canadian companies a chance to bid on both military and civil contracts being handed out by various levels of the U.S. Government. It is a very important market. As I mentioned, only 1 per cent of that market would mean $5 billion more of exports in Canada per year and 75,000 jobs. I think that is a very worthwhile objective for us in that particular area of negotiations.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, how does the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) really expect anybody to take his Government's free trade proposal seriously with the implications that there are for the competitiveness of Canadian industry? He as President of the Treasury Board and the Government are undercutting the foundation of a competitive Canadian industry by cutting spending on research and development, which they have done consistently since taking office. The President of the Treasury Board approved the short-sighted cuts in spending on research and development at the National Research Council. He presided over the freezing of budgets for university research that we saw in the decision of his Government last February, 1986. He presides also over the national science and technology policy announced last week in which the Government made no mention of the target of doubling spending on research and development. That target or that idea has been abandoned by the Government. The Minister knows very well that spending on research and development in the United States is more than twice the level that is being spent in Canada.

How will we possibly compete in the American market or the global market against countries which have strong support from their Governments in terms of spending on research and development when all we have seen from the Minister and his Government are cuts on research and development spending and the abandonment of the goal of doubling spending on research and development?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the comment or question astounds me.

Mr. Berger: It should astound you.

Mr. de Cotret: It astounds me. I have confidence in our industry. We are competitive at the moment. We have some world-class competitors. We have a surplus on merchandise trade. Perhaps the Hon. Member does not know that. I will be happy to provide the numbers for him.

We are competitive. We are productive. We are moving ahead. What we are trying to do with this particular initiative is to give Canadians, in whom we have full faith, one more opportunity to expand production, to expand sales, to expand employment, to expand investment, and to expand productivity. That is a reflection of our faith in the ability of Canadians to compete anywhere in the world at the moment, and they do not have that confidence.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Minister. I was very pleased to hear him refer to the type of action taken by Americans on cut flowers. We do not have much export in cut flowers, but it indicates the retaliatory actions which Americans take when they go against another country that really hurt Canada in the meantime. Does the Minister see any more of this type of action if we do not reach an agreement?

In that the Province of Quebec is a major milk producer, has the Minister or any Minister in Quebec ever indicated that our milk marketing system would be up for negotiation?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question, we certainly see the potential for more protectionist or more restrictive measures if we should unfortunately not reach a comprehensive agreement. If we look at what is already on the roster before the American Congress, we readily appreciate the fact that we are getting caught in a net, often designed against those who would be involved in unfair trade. Nonetheless, we are being caught in that net. I see the potential for a number of other restrictive actions on their side.

One of the major reasons we are engaged in these discussions is to ensure that Canada, as a fair trader, gets it fair share of the U.S. market and gives the Americans a fair share of our market.

In terms of milk marketing arrangements, I can assure my hon. colleague that we have no intention of playing around with it, putting it on the table, discussing it, or making any kinds of concessions on it. I think it is in the resolution. It is very clear that it is not our intention to negotiate on that basis.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Minister's response concerning supply-management and milk marketing quotas.

A couple of week ago, Daniel Amstutz, United States Under-Secretary for Agriculture, who was the principal adviser on trade in agriculture, said that in his opinion agriculture had to be included in a free trade agreement with Canada and that the United States would be demanding a fundamental change in supply-management arrangements. He had no opposition to marketing boards, provided that they were only for promotion, quality control, and so on. However, he indicated that they would be demanding that supply-management methods commonly used by Canadian agriculture, whether it be the feather industry, the dairy industry, the Canadian Wheat Board, or others, would have to be fundamentally changed. He also said that in his opinion there could not be an agreement without those fundamental changes.

Will the Government cancel the negotiations and walk away from them, if in fact the United States demands that those supply-management systems and the import controls which go with them be done away with in the free trade negotiations, whether immediately or whether caught up in an umbrella agreement in which supply-management marketing boards would be phased out over a period of time or through an arbitration process?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the question is very hypothetical—if they do this, if they do that, if they ask for this, if they cannot agree with that, what will we do at the end of the road?

I will tell the Hon. Member what we will do at the end of the road. We will sign an agreement which is beneficial to Canada and for all Canadians. That is what we will do at the end of the road. That is our commitment, and we will stick by that commitment.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise that the time for questions and comments has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why we are having this debate today. I stayed in the House to listen to the Prime Minister's speech, and when he finished, my conclusion was that there was nothing in it.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has an expression that he sometimes uses, which I thought he should have used at the end of his speech—"you ain't seen nothing yet". We have not seen nothing yet. It is quite extraordinary to engage in a day's debate and at the end not know one scintilla of information more than we knew yesterday or the day before, and it appears that we will know nothing more tomorrow.

I was struck by the document produced by the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) during the course of his comments. The document to which he referred from the office of the United States Trade Representative set forth in great detail the issues the United States hopes to resolve, as they say, "in the course of these trade negotiations". They deal with issues of tariffs in detail, provincial liquor boards in detail, and the Canadian Wheat Board. They indicate actions to be taken. They indicate the cost which they estimate is being suffered by United States industrial sectors and exporters by reason of these trade barriers.

Why have we not seen such a wish list from our Canadian negotiator or, more important, from the Government? Why do we not know today, as we were promised, what in fact is the status of these negotiations?

I sought by independent means to determine whether such a list exists, and I have not been able to lay my hands on one. I have not been able to ascertain from any official source available to us as members of the Opposition, and of course to the public, what are the specific concerns which we must address in these negotiations in order to secure access and to protect access in the United States market.

The motion of the Government is curiously and perhaps surprisingly silent on this point. It makes no reference to securing or protecting access in the United States. This is why the amendment produced by the Leader of the Official Opposition and seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) specifically indicates that "any such negotiations are designed to gain greater access to U.S. markets by limiting the operation of contingency protection and non-tariff barriers such as current U.S. and State government procurement regulations", cited as an example, "and restoring previous access for softwood lumber in U.S. markets".

Obviously the elimination of tariffs is significant in any trade debate. That is what the United States asked for in the document produced by the Leader of the Opposition this morning. However, as we know, that is happening anyway.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, according to the experts, when the Tokyo Round tariff cuts become effective this year, nearly 80 per cent of Canada's exports will enter the United States duty free, while 15 per cent will have a duty of 5 per cent or less and only 5 per cent will be subject to a high customs tariff.

• (1750)

Of course, the great irony of what has taken place in the American market and undoubtedly elsewhere is that these tariff reductions during multinational negotiations like the Tokyo Round in which Canada participated so actively have moved domestic industries in the United States to seek other means of protection, to use the so-called import relief laws and regulations to their advantage and to harass Canadian industries. Of course, some of these relief laws are sanctioned by the GATT, but they can also be abused. I would suggest that in many instances they have been abused.

Where in the motion, where in the Prime Minister's speech, where in any of the material that has been before the House, are we told what specific areas of complaint Canadian negotiators are trying to pursue as the Americans in turn are pursuing opposite us? The GATT has been relied upon by some domestic industries in the United States. Article 6 of the GATT provides for countervail against subsidies and for anti-dumping where goods enter a jurisdiction under normal value, and in that case it is necessary to prove material injury. One would expect, of course, that this would be a non-political process.

Article 19 of the GATT in turn provides for safeguards, often in the form of quantitative restrictions by way of quotas. Again, in this case, one must show serious injury. As the House knows, there are compensatory provisions which can apply. These are sanctioned by the GATT and, as I said, one would hope that these would be insulated from political pressure. Recent experience with the United States suggests, however, that this may not be the case. Canadians are under the impression that there is harassment and, I might add, many have endured the painful experience of legal harassment and of expensive and prolonged judicial proceedings in order to attempt to obtain access to the United States market. They have been faced with what looked like arbitrary trade barriers.

While we are told that the process is non-political, the decision of the United States International Trade Commission on Canadian softwood exports reversing its 1983 decision without any major changes in the situation, the facts or the law, as my Leader pointed out today, raised many doubts as to whether or not the process is indeed immune to political interference.

I would ask the Government what it will do to remove this harassment in the course of these negotiations. What does the Government have on its wish list in this regard? That is what we came to the Chamber today to find out. It would appear that we will leave the Chamber empty handed. Will the Government protect access? Will it secure more access? Is this its ambition and desire? What is its strategy for negotiations in this regard?

The Government caved in dramatically, as pointed out by my Leader this morning, on the softwood issue. He called it the greatest sellout in the history of Canadian trade negotiations. What is the Government doing now with respect to these other areas where harassment has become the order of the day? How will such actions as we witnessed in softwood and shakes and shingles be limited in future? That is what Canadians are waiting to hear and that is what we in the Chamber are waiting to hear. We thought that was the purpose of this debate.

It is critical that access be assured, as indicated in the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition and seconded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. Any negotiations should be designed to gain greater access and to limit the operation of these contingency protection rules and regulations and non-tariff barriers such as the one mentioned in the resolution, that is, procurement. It is an important issue, not only for the sectors that have come under fire, for the softwood sector, the potash sector, the steel sector and other sectors to which I will refer in a moment, but it is a terribly important issue for Canadian new-wave industries. Those are the industries which depend upon intellectual capital as much as financial capital and require access to world markets and of course to the United States market. They do not want surprises, they want to know that when they establish themselves in Canada, they have ensured access to the United States market. Any arrangement into which the Government enters with the United States must provide that assurance or it will fall far short of the objectives that must be set for such an arrangement. This motion and the debate so far tells us nothing in this regard.

It has also been pointed out that import relief laws applied in the United States are much more damaging to Canadian markets than vice versa. That is because ours is a smaller market. It is because our exporting companies usually export a much greater percentage of their production than United States companies in similar sectors. When a market area such as the United States is closed, Canadian companies do not have immediate access to other jurisdictions as American companies do. When an American company is threatened by a Canadian tariff barrier, it can change its focus to another part of a U.S. domestic market. That is not the case in Canada. That is why the issue of secure access is so critical.

There can be no risk of arbitrary trade barriers. Has this been appreciated by the Government? Again, we simply do not know. Given the Government's negotiating record to date, forgive us if we have serious doubts.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we therefore have here a series of non-tariff barriers restricting our exports to the United States, and as I said before in the course of my comments, the very prospect of procedures authorized by GATT but implemented arbitrarily removes the climate of certainty and confidence that is necessary to attract new industries to Canada, and will in turn oblige our own entrepreneurs to set up shop in the United States.

In fact, there are other non-tariff measures that restrict our exports and create this climate of uncertainty. There are for instance the federal customs classification rules and administrative procedures that add excessive costs to Canadian exports. Another non-tariff barrier, Mr. Speaker, is the U.S. federal production standards that are at odds with current Canadian standards.

Furthermore, there are the discriminatory practices arising from the Buy American policy of the U.S. federal Government and the States' governments. Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely essential that any arrangement proposed by the Government provide for ways to eliminate the damaging effects of U.S. legislation and policies on Canadian exports.

[English]

Where on earth in this motion do we see that thrust? Is the Government really pursuing these issues? It is certainly not evident.

Sadly, we do not know these things. It is almost tragic that we should finish a day's debate without knowing these things. However, one of the principal purposes of the amendment proposed by our Leader is to eliminate that uncertainty and to establish that competence.

• (1800)

Look at some of the current issues which are a problem at the moment for Canadian exporters. It is these kinds of problems we must get at, and this amendment will do that. Take softwood lumber. Apart from the debacle of the softwood lumber negotiations, there was also incompetence in that now, apparently inadvertently we hear, remanufactured products using softwood lumber are not covered by the Canada-U.S. agreement and are therefore subject to tax on their value-added price rather than on the softwood lumber content. Can you imagine how destabilizing that is to anyone who manufactures products using softwood lumber? What is the answer? Is it to move the plants south of the border? I would hope not. The answer is to include this kind of issue in this bilateral arrangement we are hearing about. Do we know if that is the case? We do not.

We also know what the U.S. Trade Bill is likely to do to us unless it exempts Canada in many important respects. We have had other very recent examples and that is why this amendment calls for a standstill arrangement during these negotiations. On March 3 there was an anti-dumping investigation initiated into imports of line pipe. A preliminary injury determination is due on March 28. This involves annual exports of $3 million. Look at potash. An anti-dumping case has been initiated there. Again we will find out on March 27 whether there is a preliminary determination of injury. Then we have cement and railway rolling stock. The U.S. House of Representatives passed a Bill reauthorizing the Service Transportation Assistance Act. That Bill would extend the "Buy American" requirements to include cement and increase domestic content requirements for rolling stock and increase the bid differential for foreign manufacturers. That is another major non-tariff barrier we have to face. Then we have the famous customs user-fee, of course, and that will be reviewed by a GATT panel.

Then we get into the issue of new technology companies which are of great concern. These are the industries we wish to attract and build upon. An anti-dumping case concerning colour picture tubes has been initiated and the preliminary determination is due May 5. Exports of colour picture tubes are estimated at $10 million. Finally, another kind of harassment which many of our manufacturers have encountered and which has to be addressed by this Government is the application of U.S. patent law. For example, dealing with smoke detectors, a complaint has been filed with the International Trade Commission alleging that certain smoke detectors imported from Canada infringe on U.S. patents. Therein lies the problem. It is not enough to have a legal determination to use down the road and $500,000 later as to whether it does or does not infringe. The Canadian company will be out of the market by that time. This is a perfect example of using the law to harass Canadian exporters to the U.S. Those are the kinds of issues we expect the Government to address and that is why we have asked for access and it does not appear in the Government's motion.

This motion is sadly deficient and I hope Conservative Members of this House, notwithstanding their allegiance to a badly-drafted text, will take a very serious look at the amendment proposed. I find it hard to believe that most Members over there would not agree that this amendment proposed by our Leader and seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry does what should be done. For example, apart from the issue I have dealt with, namely that of secure and greater access and the identification and elimination of non-tariff barriers in the U.S., the motion calls for ensuring Canadian independence for domestic programs, policies and legislative authority in areas such as social policy, agricultural marketing, supply management and support programs. Does anyone in the House take issue with that? Silence, I presume, means consent.

Mr. Ellis: No one is paying attention to you.

Mr. McDermid: I am sorry, Don, we were all asleep.

Mr. Johnston: Subsidies and assistance for regional and development programs, including high technology development. Does anyone in the House take issue with that? Is anyone prepared to say they will not permit these kinds of programs?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: As they say, no news is good news.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: The Auto Pact. Does anyone here think the Auto Pact should be opened up? Again we seem to have consent.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Are you for a deal or not?

Mr. Johnston: Bilingualism in labelling. Anyone want to stand here and criticize that part of our motion? Culture, including cultural industries.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They would not understand that.

Mr. Johnston: Financial and service industries. Looking around, it appears to me we have almost complete agreement on the substance of this motion. The only thing left is to stand and support it.

Finally, a very important issue which I am sure all Members on all sides of the House will be sympathetic with and supportive of. That is, that the Government table transitional adjustment assistance proposals to protect those workers, sectors, firms and businesses which may be adversely affected by such a trading arrangement or arrangements. I am sure all Members of the House will support that kind of program. Obviously it would be fundamental to any trading arrangement that would adversely affect them. Again I hear no one raising a voice in protest.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Everyone is asleep.

Mr. Johnston: With those comments I close my remarks by urging my colleagues in a non-partisan spirit, as the Prime Minister preached to us about this morning—

Mr. McDermid: Say that with a straight face, Don.

Mr. Johnston: —to seriously look at this amendment which does much more than the government motion. It is a trade policy statement and one they should be proud to support in the vote tomorrow night.

Mr. Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): That was not a bad speech considering the one he really wanted to give.

Mr. St. Germain: He certainly did not excite this House to any great degree because he asked questions and people did not appear to be listening. However, I have heard the Hon. Member get up and speak on trade issues, namely the shakes and shingles issue which surfaced in this House a few months ago. He was totally unaware of what type of industry he was dealing with. If he knew anything about the West Coast and some of the outer regions of this country, he would understand how important a trade agreement with our greatest trading partner, the United States of America, really is.

What really surprises me is when we as a Government put forward an ideal motion, as we have, covering agriculture and the automobile industry, he stands and suggests that we consider an amendment from a Party which really has no policy. That Party does not know exactly where it is coming from. The vote will most likely indicate that. We have seen in the recent past where one Liberal voted on this and another Liberal voted on that. However, the final judge of that indecisive group of individuals will be the electorate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. St. Germain: They are clapping. They were leading in the polls before the last election and thank goodness they were because we came through with the largest majority this country has ever seen. The ladies and gentlemen of the Official Opposition will see that again after the next election.

The Official Opposition has continually brought up the question of culture, social programs and agriculture. They have tried to put fear in the minds of Canadians over a trade agreement which is absolutely imperative for this country. The European Common Market has arrived at a comprehensive trade agreement. I do not believe that the French in France have lost any of their culture or their sovereignty. I do not believe that is true with regard to Great Britain or the rest of the European nations involved in that agreement either. I would like the Member to explain why, if a comprehensive trade agreement in a close-knit continent like Europe has had not had that effect, they feel threatened and want to bring forward fear tactics which take away from the intelligence of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston).

Mr. Johnston: The only thing that Canadians are afraid of at the moment is the Government.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And its negotiating skills.

Mr. Johnston: Or the lack thereof. We have looked at the motion and listened to a speech. We have very little to evaluate this "arrangement" on. We have heard nothing substantive today. I would ask the Hon. Member to take a very close look at the amendment which we proposed. It does not strike me as anything which should strike fear in the hearts of Canadians. It seems to me that it should give them a sense of confidence and security that if there is a deal it will be a good deal. I hope the Hon. Member will subscribe to that.

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the speech of the Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). It sounded remarkably like the speeches of his colleagues. I would characterize it as trade if necessary, but not necessarily trade with the United States. Earlier today his Leader chastised the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in one breath because we were giving away too many cards and said he would love to play poker with the Government. About two sentences later he entered into a long dissertation, saying that we were not providing enough information and he wanted us to face up a whole lot of cards which clearly would not be in Canada's interest.

The Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount was quoted in The Citizen on November 22, 1986, as saying that after reading the latest in a series of drafts of the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), no clear message emerges as to what the specific Liberal Party position should be. Today they had the opportunity to discuss meaningfully what their position is. We end up with an amendment to the resolution which I consider to be the Maginot Line of negotiation. The 39 or 40 Liberal Members have each had their kick at the amendment and they have come up with an omnibus amendment. It is a Maginot Line of negatives. I have sat here patiently all day waiting for the Liberal Party spokesmen to say something positive, constructive and helpful in these negotiations rather than giving an endless litany of things we should not talk about.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) said that the only thing the people are concerned about or afraid of is the Government, I was reminded of the discussion paper put out by the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food a few weeks ago with regard to the implications for Ontario and Canadian agriculture with respect to the Canada-U.S. trade negotiations.

In that paper it is pointed out that if Canadian producers were to go to American prices for farm commodities they would lose some $492 million in the dairy industry, $353 million in the poultry and egg industry, and $109 million in the fruit and vegetable industry across the country for a total of $791 million of income. That is on page 53 of the document. On page 55 you see that if we gave away those incomes in those sectors and added in the support programs which Canadian farmers receive, the net farm income would drop from $3.6 billion a year to $1.1 billion, a drop of $2.4 billion. That means that the net income of Canadian farmers would drop by almost two-thirds.

I raise this because we hear the soothing noises of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) saying that farm marketing boards are not on the table. What is on the table? The negotiators are negotiating about agriculture today. Obviously agriculture is on the table and supply management systems are a key point in that regard.

The chief American adviser on agricultural trade, in his interview with CBC a couple of weeks ago, made it clear that in his opinion there had to be fundamental changes to the supply management systems, and that includes the import quota systems which we have for eggs, dairy products and grains, or there would be no agreement. He also said that in his opinion if agriculture was not in the agreement there would not be an agreement.

Does the member believe that the Government would walk away from a trade agreement just because the agriculture issue was not resolved? The Government says that if it is not a good deal for agriculture, they will walk away from it. That is what the Government is saying, but the Americans are laying it out plainly and clearly that agricultural support and supply management programs must be on the table or there will be no deal.

We are concerned about this because we saw what happened on the softwood lumber issue. The Canadian Forest Industries Council spent $10 million fighting that countervail deal and then were sold out. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was receiving telegrams while the Minister for International Trade was fighting on the beaches of Hawaii. We must be very concerned when the Government says, "Trust us". The Canadian Forest Industries Council trusted the Government and today it is struggling with a $600 million export tax which, when transferred to stumpage, will be a $800 million or $900 million tax. That will be devastating for that market, which is not very strog.

Does the Member believe the Government is prepared to walk away from a deal just because it includes an aspect harmful to our agricultural sector which, in many ways, is a much better system than that in the United States with regard to supply management and marketing boards?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible for me to respond to that, but I have grave concerns which are obviously shared by many members on the government side. They should support the amendment which the Official Opposition has put before the House in order to have those concerns laid to rest.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is living in the past. The Hon. Member, referring to the Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount as a Minister, is clearly living in the past. They are the dinosaurs of the House of Commons.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is leading this country into the 21st century with an initiative that the Liberals cannot tolerate because they know it is unequivocally the best policy that will benefit all Canadians. The Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) referred to the Member from Mission Impossible. Perhaps the shake and shingle issue was impossible in his eyes, but I can stand proudly in the House today and say to all Canadians that the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) took the initiative to correct the situation and make it tolerable.

The problem that I faced with the shake and shingle industry would not have been a problem if this initiative had been in place at that time. The softwood lumber problem would not have arisen if we had a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States of America. All the fear and doom and gloom that the Opposition wants to preach is for naught. We will have a trade initiative, as the majority of Canadians want. I suggest to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount that he knows we would not have had the shake and shingle fiasco and the export tax because a free trade arrangement would have dealt with these problems.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that during my comments. Neither the Prime Minister nor anyone in the Government has told us what specific problem areas it has on its list of complaints it wants to address during these bilateral negotiations. It is strictly a dialogue of the uninformed in this House. That is why this debate should never have taken place.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this historic debate today because it is not simply a debate about trade policy, but a debate about the future of our country and our children and the standard of living and opportunities that will be available to them.

[Translation]

We have repeated this so many times that Canadians must know it by heart now: Canada is a trading nation. Our prosperity depends on the sale of our products on foreign markets. It has always been and will always be so.

[English]

The Opposition forgets that trade creates wealth. It is the kind of wealth that pays for our health care, our income security programs, regional development, our national cultural institutions, all of the institutions, policies and values that define the Canadian way of life. We would all be much poorer if we could only sell to other Canadians. A third of our income comes from trade but the world in which we have to sell today is no push over. It is tough and changing fast.

For a long time we got along by exporting natural resources or the resources that other people wanted. However, that has changed and we have become a major industrial power. More and more, we must live by our wits by turning more of our resources into products that the world wants and will buy.

Shortly after this Government took office we issued an agenda for economic renewal. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) wanted to know the national economic policy of the Government. The national economic policy of the Government was in that economic renewal agenda in November, 1984, that focused clearly on all the policies necessary to improve and increase the competitive position of the Canadian economy. One of its keystones was expanding our trade. The main goal of our comprehensive trade agreement with the United States is to secure and expand the horizons for Canadian goods and services in the broadest way possible in the world's biggest and richest economy with a market that is 10 times the size of ours. That is the opportunity and the challenge we face today.

The stakes are high. Success would bring us a vastly larger market in which to sell. That would expand not just our trade but our whole economy. Social programs of the kind all of us want cost money. The more vibrant our economy, the greater the range and the scope of the social benefits we can undertake to provide for our people. The same holds true for the future of our cultural endeavours.

Let us talk about sovereignty. A nation that has the economic power has always had more independence and strength than a country that is down and out. If the stakes for success are high, the cost of failure would be exorbitant. We cannot go on the way we are. The forces of protectionism are growing again in the world, particularly in the United States. We have already felt their impact with shakes and shingles and softwood lumber. They are symptoms of the protectionist disease, and perhaps an early warning sign of things to come.

Those in Canada who oppose a free trade agreement are ignoring the protectionist reality of today's world and they are blind to the opportunities of the future. They have their heads in the sand. They offer no alternative to a trade agreement and no way to give Canadians greater access to that U.S. market. They offer no means to deal with the protectionist threat. They offer no solutions.

Protectionism would bring us nothing and take much away. It would lead to higher prices for consumers and a shrinking market for the goods we sell. Yet, there are some people who take on the colours of protectionists in places one simply would not expect to find them. The Government of Ontario is one example. Of all the provinces of Canada, Ontario has gained the most over the years from freer access to the United States. Ontario has much more to gain from securing this access to the U.S. market and expanding it. Ontario has much to lose if that access is restricted. Ontario sells more to the United States than the rest of Canada combined; two jobs out of five in Ontario are related to trade with the United States and, in northern Ontario, the number rises to seven out of every 10 jobs.

The pay cheques of Ontario workers have certainly not been threatened over the years by trading with the United States, but have been enlarged. Ontarians, like other Canadians, have proven that they can compete successfully in the United States. Without a trade agreement, however, we put their hard work at risk. Indeed, without an agreement, we put at risk the livelihood of untold thousands of Canadians whose jobs depend on U.S. trade.

The attitude of many critics, including members of the Ontario Government, is perplexing. Sometimes they are cynical, sometimes they are only doubtful, but above all, they are timorous. They are afraid of their shadows. Coming from Ontario myself, I find it impossible to believe that cynicism, doubt, and fear are the dominant features of Ontario society. I know that is not true.

The people of Ontario remember what Premier John Robarts used to say: "What is good for Canada is good for Ontario too". However, where does Premier Peterson stand? Does he look outward from Queen's Park or inward? Does he stand with those who want Ontario and Ontario's industry, not to mention the rest of Canada, to reap the advantages of free and secure access to the largest most lucrative market in the world, or is he saying that Ontarians cannot compete?

Does he stand with Ontario's manufacturers who do not want to be confined by the straightjacket of a small domestic market? Does the Premier believe that we need a new relationship with our largest trading partner? What is his answer to U.S. protectionism and preparing the economy for the cold competitive world of the future? How is he going to preserve the access the Ontario steel industry, for example, now has to the United States? Does he have any answers? From what he has been saying, it is hard for Canadians to tell. Surely the answer to these questions is to seize the opportunity of obtaining for Ontario, and the rest of the country, the economic and employment gains which a free trade arrangement with the United States will bring.

There are those who say there is nothing wrong with the trade arrangements we already have with the United States. The status quo is just fine, they tell us, let us keep going in the same way. I have news for them. There ain't no such thing as a status quo any more. What is working today will be questioned tomorrow and may not work in the future. There are those who claim that a free trade agreement with the United States would cost hundreds of thousands of jobs. That is just not true. If it were, we would not be negotiating. What is true, and what the history of Canada shows, is that trade creates jobs, good jobs for Canadians. The Member of Parliament for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) ask where is the proof, where are the studies? The proof is in our history, Mr. Speaker. The lesson of history is that a free trade agreement with the United States would create jobs because it would lead to a stronger and larger economy for Canada. In short, it would mean a bigger pie for all Canadians.

Those who predict job loss have not seriously reviewed the evidence. They are merchants of fear. Jobs would be lost and opportunities would be lost if we tried to rely on the status quo. However, the fear merchants do not see that. They are too busy ringing the alarm bells over a kind of agreement which no one is proposing, an agreement which would force massive adjustments in a very short period of time. That kind of agreement is not in the cards. It is not on the table. It is a straw man. Both we and the Americans want to phase in the new arrangements in order to give both countries plenty of time to take change in their stride.

Let us be realistic. We live in a world of change. All change brings adjustment. We have always adjusted in the past. For the past 40 years we have been adjusting to round after round of tariff reductions by the world's leading trading nations, including Canada. Forty years ago our average tariff on imported goods was 30 per cent. Today it is less than 9 per cent and with American goods it is 5 per cent. Not only have we adjusted to these changes but we have prospered from the adjustments.

Lower tariffs have always meant increased trade, both exports and imports. This gave us a broader base for our industries to expand, to specialize, and to achieve the economies of scale which make them competitive internationally. The past 40 years of progressively freer trade have given Canada growth, modernization and, yes, better jobs. That is what has made us competitive not only in the United States but in overseas markets as well.

Let me emphasize that last point. The increased competitiveness and efficiency of Canadian producers which will come as a result of a trade agreement with the United States will be the key to opening up markets in the rest of the world. I ask the opponents of a trade agreement, what makes them think we will not be able to adjust and prosper in the future as we have been able to do in the past?

The Leader of the New Democratic Party tells us that if we sign a trade agreement, U.S. companies will close their Canadian operations and move back home. That is nonsense. Why is that investment here in the first place, to sneak under our high tariffs? No. If tariffs were the reason, foreign companies would have gone home long ago. They are here for sound business reasons such as proximity to customers, market potential, the quality of our labour force and the return on their investment. We will not sign a trade agreement with any country which will undermine those factors. What a trade agreement will do is make Canada an even more attractive place to invest from outside the country as well as from inside. However, our opponents both here in the House and in the Government of Ontario have not offered any ideas on how to deal with the future. They have no policy for the future and to cover up this lack of vision, they keep raising a false issue, the Auto Pact.

Let us look at the Auto Pact. First, we like it. It works well. Second, the Americans also like it, so it works to the advantage of both countries. Third, it has served us well in terms of investment, output and employment. Fourth, the Auto Pact demonstrates clearly the benefits of free trade. So I say to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that the Canadian automotive industry has been so successful it is operating far in excess of the minimum production levels built into the pact. We have been successful because Canadian auto workers are good at making automobiles. If one needs proof, just last week the managing director of the Honda Motor Car Company of Canada, a company outside the Auto Pact, said the best Honda Accords in the world are built by Canadian workers right here in Alliston, Ontario. He said that Canadian Hondas are better than the ones they make in Japan.

For all practical purposes, free trade has existed between Canada and the United States in products covered by the Auto Pact for many years now. Investment, production and trade decisions are governed by market forces. This has worked to the benefit of both countries. The Auto Pact can be terminated by either party on one year's notice. However, it has not been terminated because it works for both of us.

Let me direct some challenges to the Leader of the Opposition and the Premier of the Province of Ontario. Surely they cannot be afraid that a trade agreement with the United States would extend to the other provinces of Canada the benefits of free access that the Auto Pact has given Ontario. Surely they would not deny those benefits to the provinces which need them most and to the regions of the country which count on industrial diversification to create jobs. Surely they would wish to achieve respite for Ontario producers, and those in the rest of the country, from American protectionist forces. Surely they would like to have a mechanism to resolve disputes in Canada—U.S. trade. We have the largest single trading relationship in the world and the U.S. buys more of what Ontario produces than any place else in the country. Surely they can do more than equivocate and vacillate on the most important issue of our generation. Surely it is not too much to expect them to stand up and be counted. Surely the Government of Ontario could display some leadership. Surely it could reflect more of the traditional concerns the people of Ontario have for the vital interests of the whole of Canada.

I issue a challenge to them and to those in this House who are not with us, to those who snipe at the trade negotiations we are conducting with the United States. That is what we saw today. I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the Hon. Member for Saint Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor, and to anyone else who cares enough to listen, I have one question. What would you do? Do you have a better idea? If so, let us hear it because we have not heard it yet. All we have had is sniping, picking away at the process, but no substantive ideas. All we have heard is fear-mongering and false arguments.

The Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party say that they want to work through the GATT. So do we, and we are. Our Government was one of the leaders in getting the current round of multilateral negotiations under way. We are prepared to go as far as anyone in the GATT, and as fast as possible. But we all know that that will take time, and so do they.

The last GATT round took six years. They know that they are using the GATT as a cop-out, as a device for not taking a position. I ask you this, Mr. Speaker. How can those who support the removal of trade restrictions in GATT argue against their removal bilaterally? How can a good multilateral deal make sense and a good deal with the United States not make sense? I do not understand that.

[Translation]

I put the question to you: How can those who advocate doing away with trade restrictions under GATT argue against doing away with them under a bilateral agreement? How could a good multilateral agreement be sensible, whereas a good agreement with the United States would not be so?

[English]

Let me conclude with a personal comment. I have confidence in Canadians. I often have the opportunity to meet Canadians, people from our business community, not just the captains of industry but the entrepreneurs, the risk-takers, the small business people, the people who are creating jobs, the people who have their money, their life savings, on the line. At these meetings we invariably talk about a trade agreement with the United States, the pros and the cons, who is against it and who is for it. The outcome is always the same. Unanimously and unequivocally they all want the chance to compete in the great big market. They are confident of their ability to make it. They know that they can compete, and they cannot wait to get on with the job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) must have noticed that the Government's motion does not include any reference to the environment. I am sure he realizes that there are a number of potential effects that could be exerted on the environment by way of a free trade agreement.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): The environment is not for sale.

Mr. McDermid: We are not trading the environment.

Mr. Caccia: By way of background, I will only mention the question of non-tariff barriers, environmental programs and regulations, perhaps tax incentives. Then, in another category, pollution control programs, the whole capacity of the Canadian thrust in protecting our natural ecosystem, endangered species, wildlife and the like could be put into question.

The question I wish to ask of the Minister is twofold. First, why was the environment not included in the Government's resolution, considering the fact, with which I hope he will agree, that in the long term environmental and economic interests do converge? Second, can the Minister assure the House that countervailing action will not be taken by the U.S. Government against the Canadian acid rain abatement programs which, as he knows, provide for the modernization of non-ferrous smelters and for the modernization and improvements to some of our major public utilities, particularly those in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many times we have to tell the Hon. Member and Members opposite what is in and what is out of the negotiations. The Canadian environment is not for sale. The Canadian environment is not subject to negotiation.

Mr. Caccia: Then why was it not mentioned in the motion?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): This is something that is very clear, and has been very clear. The Hon. Member asks how he can be assured that a countervail will not be used. What we are trying to achieve is a dispute-settlement arrangement that will not involve countervail, that the disputes, if there are any, will be on the table through a separate organization, a separate tribunal, an entity that can deal with disputes. I wish to draw that point to the attention of the Hon. Member. We are not looking at countervail. This is something that will be dealt with outside the normal countervail laws.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct two questions to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). First, our representatives are dealing with representatives appointed by the President. They are trying to sort out some of the difficulties. Surely, the Minister of Finance remembers the reaction of Senator Packwood when the Republicans still had a majority in the Senate. He must realize that the American system is different from the Canadian system. Even if we reach an agreement with the administration, with the President, which I believe to be very doubtful, the fact is that Congress—

Mr. McDermid: The voice of negativism!

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member says that I am the voice of negativism. The fact is that almost every day members of the House of Representatives and members of the Senate introduce Bills which call for further protection for various aspects of American industry. The Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Congressman Rostenkowski, introduced a major trade Bill a few days ago. There are no provisions in those Bills for making an exception for Canada. Even if we reach an agreement, a tentative agreement with the President, what assurances are there that after we have reached that agreement, after the Government and even Parliament has approved such an agreement, that we will not have a repeat of the Georges Bank fish story when Congress simply said: "No way"?

The second question I have for the Minister is this. He has talked about how we have to go out and compete in the world market. He has said that we have to be more efficient and all the rest of it. When the Conservatives were in opposition they criticized the Liberal Government because our expenditures with respect to scientific research and development put us virtually at the bottom of all the industrialized countries belonging to the OECD. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that a Conservative Government would move us to expenditures of 2.5 per cent of GNP for scientific research and development. The fact is we are now allocating even less for scientific research and development than we were when the Liberals were in power.

The only way in which the Government sees that we will increase those expenditures is if the private sector puts in substantial amounts of financial resources, at which point the Government will match that funding. At this point in time the Government has virtually frozen its funding in this respect. Even if the Government's expectations come to full fruition we will still not be spending anywhere near the 2.5 per cent which other countries are spending. I know that the Minister is aware that scientists in universities, government, research industries and the private sector do not believe that the Government's expectations will be met. If we are not going to increase our efforts in scientific research and development, then how can we possibly become as competitive as we need to be in order to compete with other countries?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have commented in the House on how unfortunate it would be to be a New Democrat, walking around this life with a cloud over my head, being a pessimist on everything that crossed my path. We are not pessimists on this side of the House.

Mr. Althouse: We are realists.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We are confident in getting this deal negotiated with the United States administration. We are also confident that the Americans will see the benefits of such a deal. I am not sure whether the Hon. Member realizes it or not but over the three-year period 1982-85, and I am not sure what the figures were for last year, total exports by the United States world-wide increased by 1.5 per cent. The increase in exports to Canada during that same period was 38 per cent.

• (1850)

There is a value to the United States of having a deal with Canada, having an open market with Canada, and being assured that the Canadian economy is a strong economy, capable of accepting their goods along the lines of that three year period. The Americans see the benefit. We heard from Senator Benson and three of his colleagues in the Senate when they were here in January, that in a broad strategic sense of doing a deal with Canada, being able to demonstrate to the rest of the world, it is possible to reduce protectionist and trade barriers.

We all know the GATT is under way. Ninety-two countries are involved. If the United States and Canada can demonstrate over the course of the next year that we are capable of negotiating a comprehensive trade agreement, the positive signal that that sends out to the other 90 countries is powerful. The Americans understand that. We understand that. It is more important, proportionately speaking, to the Americans than it is to us, but it is very important to us too. That is why I have confidence in our ability to negotiate this arrangement.

The Hon. Member said there will be no exemption for Canada to these trade laws. He is absolutely right. There will not be an exemption to these trade laws for Canada. That is why we must have a comprehensive trade agreement. It is not pick and choose the way the motion of the Liberals picks. It has to be comprehensive. We will not be able to do a deal that picks out the little things that we might like. It has to be a broad deal, something that is good for both sides. That is why we must have a comprehensive deal. There are other reasons in connection with our obligations under GATT for a comprehensive deal, but in a negotiating sense, we need a broad deal.

Let me move to the second question the Hon. Member raised, namely, the competitive strength of the Canadian economy. First, let me tell the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is spending $4 billion on science and technology in support of research. Second, we increased, I believe in the last Estimates, the Budget for the National Research Council. Third, we have increased the funding for the granting councils for the universities. Fourth, we have introduced a program to try to encourage a greater working together between the research laboratory scientists and the private sector so that we bring the inventions and discoveries of the laboratories closer to the market place. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is the Chairman of the National Advisory Board for Science and Technology which he has inaugurated. He will be chairing these meetings on an ongoing basis. This will give us the guidance, the understanding of what must be done by the Government in order to achieve a stronger research and development output.

The economic agenda paper of November, 1984, set out in a broader way how we were going to become more competitive, what the Government could do in deregulation and privatization, of getting the deficit down, of getting interest rates down, doing that range of things to strengthen the Canadian economy. Research and development was a key part, but it is much broader than just research and development. I think we have demonstrated with the strengthening in our economy over the past two and a half years that that program instituted in November, 1984, is a good one, and it has been successful.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in opening my remarks in the debate this evening I must say, having read with care this motion before the House by the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), that I smell a rat. I say that because when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rose to speak he told us nothing. Ministers who have spoken this afternoon and this evening have told us nothing. One or two things we do know is that across the country support among Canadians for the Government is at an all-time low. It is running at about 20 per cent. Only one adult Canadian in five presently supports the Government.

The Government in its motion does not use the words "free trade". It talks about the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States. The attempt is to get a vote, which will come tomorrow afternoon at six o'clock, and it is pretty clear now what the result will be. Conservative Members will vote together giving about 75 per cent support of the House to the motion with the Official Opposition, the Liberals, and the New Democrats voting against it. What does that really mean? That is why I say I smell a rat. The agenda would appear to me for Ministers to do some travelling and to say that there has been a debate in Parliament.

We are now more than two and a half years into this Parliament and there has not been a debate on supposedly the key economic agenda item of the Government, that of free trade, yet the first time the Government brings it before the House it drops the words "free trade". Clearly part of the intent of the motion is to smoke out the Liberals, to find out where they really stand—I will deal with that in a few minutes—and to pass a motion without using the words "free trade". We have to ask ourselves why that is happening. It would appear to me from what we heard from some Ministers that June appears to be the point in calendar time when Mr. Reisman is to wrap up his negotiations and get something off during the summer to the U.S. administration to try to get it dealt with in the United States on the fast-track process that is under way.

Canadians want some answers out of this debate. It now appears unlikely that the Government will give any. There will be no solace to a sawmill worker in Terrace, to a fisherman in Prince Rupert or Newfoundland, to a clothing or textile worker in Quebec City, to a farmer on the Prairies or to northern Canadians. The Government is purposefully staying away from that, even from the kind of thing that I think this House could intelligently debate, namely, what really is the dispute settlement mechanism the Government is talking about.

As we have heard during the debate, there are some things that we know. We know that fully 80 per cent plus of Canadian products going to the U.S. market are duty free now. Effectively it is the other 20 per cent that the Government is talking about. One of the things the Government should be doing is talking more openly rather than providing the sort of glib disinformation that I hear time and again inside and outside of the House. For example, the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody (Mr. St. Germain) just this evening said that if we had this free trade agreement there would not be the problem with the 35 per cent tax on shakes and shingles. That is simply not true.

Mr. Althouse: We had a free trade agreement on that.

Mr. Fulton: We had 50 years of absolutely unrestricted free trade. It was during the term of this Government that the problem arose. This agreement being proposed by Mr. Reisman and by the Government will not deal with the 35 per cent tax on shakes and shingles. It will not deal with the 15 per cent export tax on softwood and it will not deal with the CVDs against hogs, fish, raspberries, steel and all of the other commodities. The Government fails to listen to things being said in the U.S. Senate and in the U.S. House.

A very important point made recently by Don Munton, Research Director of the Canadian Institute of International Affairs reads:

> If Congress was in a mood to be protectionist, it wouldn't make much difference if there was a Canada-U.S. free trade treaty or not.

Mr. Althouse: And it hasn't.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. It hasn't, Mr. Speaker, even during this process. One of the key things I want to deal with this evening is in terms of the softwood issue. Canadians have to judge a Government as a Government goes into this kind of a process by the actions it has taken to protect existing free trade, commodities that were traded freely prior to the Government coming to office and how they were handled.

There are some other things we have to address during this debate. I hope all Members of the House will at least attempt to do that. The U.S. is obsessed with its over-all world deficit in trade which last year exceeded $150 billion, over $20 billion of which was in its trading relationship with Canada. The U.S. has made it very clear that it intends to reduce that deficit because in the last half dozen years it has lost 1.6 million manufacturing jobs. The U.S. has been losing manufacturing jobs and it now has a huge trade deficit. It is in the process of bringing capital back into the United States.

If one looks at the only bilateral treaty negotiated so far—and that is the one with Israel—there was no discussion, no comment, no side letter, or anything else when it came to the countervailing duty actions available to the United States.

We have a pretty good idea of what is the agenda of the Government. We know now that the Government is attempting a cut and run act. If we look at the speeches given today in the House, particularly the one of the Prime Minister, we see that the words "free trade" are fast disappearing. The Minister for International Trade is still trying to prop up those words, but the other government Members who have spoken have meticulously tried to keep them out of their vocabulary.

A key point was made a moment ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he said that between 1982 and 1985 the United States increased its exports to Canada by 38 per cent, while world-wide it only increased its trade by 1.5 per cent. There are some Canadian sectors at which I think we should look because they are highly relevant. Home appliances is a good example. Ten years ago there were dozens and dozens of small plants producing home appliances such as coffee percolators, toasters, microwave ovens, and stoves. All that equipment was made in Canada. Ten years ago 90 per cent of it was made in Canada. Now 90 per cent is made in the United States because its assembly lines are capable of producing highly competitive, consumer oriented products such as refrigerators with an ice machine on one side in blue, green, or orange. They have three trays inside and such things. There are also one, two, or three-slice pop-up toasters and such stuff. They are able to produce large amounts of highly selective consumer products in the United States to flood into Canada.

Let me refer to the key argument used in terms of the softwood issue. The Americans were concerned that now we held about a third of their market in softwood lumber. They said that we had penetrated too far. The fact of the matter is that 10 years ago we held 28 per cent to 29 per cent or almost exactly the same amount of the U.S. softwood lumber market as we hold now.

Let us take a close look at how the Government handled the softwood lumber issue. It is a very important one at which to look. We could go back half a century to a similar kind of mood in the U.S. Senate and in the U.S. House of Representatives, in the days when the Smoot-Holley Bill was passed. Actually it was more than half a century ago, but for the last half century we have freely traded in wood commodities with the United States.

What brought about the 35 per cent duty against shakes and shingles, which has had an impact upon the profitability of those operations in B.C., something which I know the Hon. Member for Mission—Port Moody will not dispute? I talk with the same people as he does. In terms of softwood lumber we all know what a horrific impact that will have in the not too distant future. The pipeline is filling, particularly with wood from British Columbia. U.S. housing starts have been far ahead of the market. Even though interest rates are staying low, they have been massively over-producing in housing starts. There will be a slump, and there will be a horrific effect upon the Canadian industry.

Let us take a look at the anomalies. If we had such a good relationship between Simon Reisman and Peter Murphy, if we had such a good relationship between the Minister for International Trade and Mr. Baldrige and Mr. Yeutter, could we not have come up with something more appropriate? The Minister for International Trade and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) proclaimed in the House that the Americans cheated, that the Department of Commerce cheated, that the international trade administration cheated, and that the 15 per cent ruling which came down on October 16 was illegal. Whatever became of that? How can they trust an administration which will cheat them on one commodity that we have been freely trading for a half century with them? They use double mathematics. They fail to reflect upon the 1982-83 de minimis finding of their own administration on the same products that were going into the United States. Provincial stumpage regimes have not substantially changed in Canada. The change was that there was a protectionist mood in the United States.

Members of my Party and I, as well as government Members and members of the Official Opposition, returned to the House two years ago and warned the Government about the protectionist mood in the United States. We warned the Government that there were steps it could take in getting to U.S. consumers, in spending money, in opening trade consulates throughout the United States, in getting to home builders, contractors, realtors, newspaper and magazine editors, and in getting the information across the United States, as do most other countries in protecting their largest source of balance of trade, which is the forest industry in Canada.

The forest industry was alarmed. It spent $10 million in Washington fighting the legal case. It could not fight the case with U.S. consumers because the industry would not have credibility. How could MacMillan Bloedel go to Georgia where B.C. wood is half the Georgia market and say: "If you guys allow any kind of protectionist action, there will not be as much B.C. wood here and your prices will go up"? That would not sell down there. It had to be sold in a very carefully articulated way through the Government of Canada, and it was not done.

What has come home to roost? We are supposedly talking about free trade, but obviously we are not. The resolution of the Government refers simply to support for negotiating bilateral arrangements. It has been toned down substantively, because obviously the Americans have said that there is a pretty good corral of items which will simply not be on the table. Canada is now coming forward with a pretty sizeable corral of its own in terms of what cannot be on the table. However, let us look at the softwood issue because Canadians can judge the credibility, integrity, and competence of a Government by what happened as recently as December 30.

People think that it is just a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber going to the United States and that it will cost about $600 million per year. It is much worse than that. Remanufacturers in British Columbia are being nailed with it. Even though Mr. Campbell and the Minister of International Trade have gone to Washington to try to get some additions to Schedule B and some further changes, the Americans have refused to move at all. Some groups in Canada are exempted, some 20 corporations. However, there are at least another 80 which are on exactly the same footing. They were found to be de minimis in terms of subsidy or in terms of obtaining any government money. An unlevel playing field has now been created for our forestry sector.

Let us take another example. What about Quebec mills which bring their wood from New Hampshire, Vermont, and other states into Canada? They bring in raw logs which are milled in Canada and exported back to the United States. They have to pay the 15 per cent export tax, even though the U.S. Government in its illegal, illogical, and unfounded ruling made it clear that 14.6 per cent of the 15 per cent countervail duty related to Canadian stumpage policies. The most they could logically, under their own illegal ruling, go after Quebec mills for is .4 per cent, which is almost de minimis again. What is happening? They are being nailed with it.

I am talking about competence, sheer competence at this moment. If a Government cannot find a way to stick handle the softwood lumber issue through the U.S. administration, the Congress, the ITA, and the Department of Commerce, there is no way—and all Canadians should know it—that a Government which bungled on softwood lumber can possibly come up with something that would be more comprehensive in dealing with one-fifth of Canada's exports to the United States.

Let me deal with the attachment which the Liberals are proposing because it is interesting in its lack of logic. The amendment speaks to free trade necessarily but not necessarily free trade. The government motion indicates "that this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States", and it goes on from there. The Liberals propose to delete the words after the word "arrangement" and to add "or arrangements with the United States, as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions". What the Liberals are attempting to say is that the Government brought forward a pretty wishy-washy motion. It is a motion which no Canadian in her or her right mind should support because it really does not say very much. To attempt to amend it in a way that allows the words following it to negative the intention of the motion as the Speaker ruled earlier today is somewhat ridiculous. I think Canadians want to know where politicians stand and what the logic is behind their arguments on issues of vital importance.

Let me describe some of the baggage attached to free trade. Some of the legislation going through the House now, including Bills C-18 and C-19, is attached to the free trade issue. The Government likes to crow about deregulation being so good in rail, marine, air and interprovincial trucking. The Americans tried this, and what happened? A lot of workers in the United States have a message for Canadians.

In the U.S. airline industry, under deregulation which is tied to the free trade initiative, 40,000 workers lost their jobs. Not 250 but 250,000 U.S. truckers lost their jobs as a result of deregulation. It has happened in all fields. Another good example of this is telephone deregulation in the United States. The rates were cut on long-distance calls, and that was good for those who make a lot of business calls, but for 80 per cent of people who use the phone mainly for local calls including shut-ins, the elderly, the disabled and those who live in rural areas, rates increased by 37 per cent. The same thing has occurred in almost all areas where there has been deregulation which is of the same tone as free trade.

Let me spend a moment talking about British Columbia. The debate has not often come to the doors of British Columbians and I think it should do so more often. Actually, some British Columbians are just now getting home from work and are turning on the tube. They might be interested to know that for the first time in two and a half years, something is going on in shakes and shingles and softwood lumber. What would the benefits and disadvantages of this so-called negotiation be for them?

The Government already knows about the highly sensitive industries in British Columbia. The most recent information we have is that which came through access to information for 1982. In that year, the highly sensitive industries in B.C. accounted for 30,000 jobs, or 21 per cent of all B.C. manufacturing employment. Those industries produced $1.1 billion of value added to the B.C. economy in that year. Those businesses include textiles, clothing, the wood industry including sashes and doors, household and miscellaneous furniture, finished paper products, printing and publishing, metal and machine fabricating, ship and boat building, chemical and non-metallic mineral products and so on. Sensitive industries in B.C. accounted for another 44,000 jobs or 31.1 per cent of the B.C. manufacturing employment total. That is a very varied sector but is basically industrial and includes metal and machine fabricating and the high-tech sector including communications and scientific equipment.

There are a number of healthy things this debate can do. One is to keep disinformation out of the minds of the public. That disinformation is that getting a free trade agreement will get rid of countervailing tariffs the Americans have recently brought in or that it will preclude future actions. Don Munton, a true expert in this area, has made it very clear that that is not the case.

British Columbians and other Canadians in highly sensitive and sensitive employment areas should be kept fully informed. Not only are their jobs at risk but we must make it very clear that the Americans want something in return. As we get access for those one-fifth of Canadian products that presently face tariff and non-tariff barriers, the Americans are asking for something else in return. A we talk about the dispute settlement mechanism and sensitive and highly sensitive industries, we should also talk about the kind of process in which the Government is really involved without bringing fluff motions before the House, motions that are no more than an attempt to create an opportunity for the Canadian Government to propagandize this issue through the $12 million slush fund of the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some interest to my colleague on the left. From what I could gather, he does not believe that Canadians can compete with Americans in the steel industry. He does not believe that we now compete with them in the manufacturing industry. He certainly does not believe that we can compete with them in the appliance industry if we had that kind of market. In fact, he just finished talking about jobs being at risk if we move on with the new trading arrangement.

My sense is that the Hon. Member is afraid of free trade. He is afraid of a different trading arrangement with the United States. Yet, a 1979 NDP discussion paper says that the NDP is in favour of a move toward freer trade because its members think that as a trading nation, we would benefit in the long run. A 1984 NDP discussion paper says that New Democrats will continue to fight for fair trade agreements in order to protect the jobs of Canadian workers and, get this, to create new opportunities.

Members of the NDP cannot have it all ways. I wish they would tell us whether or not they really believe in a different trading arrangement. I have been here throughout most of the day listening to NDP and Liberal Members, thinking I was back in a high school or university Shakespeare class with Hamlet saying: "To trade or not to trade, that is the question". Our Liberal friends the other day were saying: "To Cruise or not to Cruise, that is the question".

Would members of the NDP make up their minds? Would they respond to their 1979 discussion paper which called for a move toward freer trade because they think as a trading nation we would benefit in the long run? Is that not what we are trying to do here today?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, that certainly is not what the Government appears to be pursuing. I am happy to respond to the question of the Hon. Member.

We are competitive and are one of the best steel producers in the world. We can learn a great deal about what the Americans now plan to do in the steel industry from the softwood lumber issue. I would hope that the Hon. Member would not support the Minister for International Trade in making a one-time-only out-of-court offer of a 10 per cent tariff on Canadian steel.

New Democrats stand for fair trade. We are not—

Mr. Winegard: Do you want to sit and do nothing?

Mr. Fulton: Do we want to sit and do nothing? One of the trade objectives of our Party is to try to get into markets all over the world, the Pacific Rim, the United States, the Third World, and Europe. The Minister of Finance touched on one of the difficulties that will be created. He said that if Canada and the U.S. can reach this agreement by June and get it ratified on fast track by the fall, it will send a booming signal around the world about what great bilateral arrangements can be made.

Let us not forget what happened with softwood lumber. We traded freely for half a century with exactly the same people. We only made this ridiculous out-of-court settlement on December 30 to satisfy the protectionist mood in the United States. If the Hon. Member thinks Simon Reisman, backed up only by a timorous little motion brought forward by the Government that says that we support a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, will have a more powerful hand in negotiating with the U.S. Congress, the Hon. Member is out of his mind.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, enough is enough. Members of the NDP have said time and again that enough is enough. Well, this is enough.

The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) has inadvertently misled the House again on the softwood lumber issue and on a multitude of other issues including shakes and shingles. He is trying to make Canadians believe that the countervail action was the act of Government. He knows that that is unequivocally and totally wrong. Yet the Hon. Member continues to preach fear.

I have a very succinct question to put to the Hon. Member. There are a multitude of major organizations in Canada that support the free trade initiative. Mr. Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has said that those who will not listen will either walk with the turkeys or soar with the eagles. I do not want to say what the Hon. Member for Skeena will be doing, but I can assure the House that he will be at ground level.

Roger Phillips of IPSCO, one of the major steel producers in Canada, has said that we are dealing with the well-being of our grandchildren. He advocates a free trade initiative. The Shakes and Shingle Association of British Columbia advocates it. The new Premier of British Columbia, in his Throne Speech, gave his stamp of approval to a free trade initiative. The Hon. Member for Skeena would say that this is for nought. Jack Munro, President of the International Woodworkers of America, represents in excess of 70,000 workers in British Columbia. He supports a free trade initiative. The Leader of the NDP in British Columbia, Mr. Skelly, supports a free trade initiative like the one we are suggesting. Where does the Hon. Member stand? Is he against Jack Munro and Mr. Skelly? Mr. Speaker, please have the Hon. Member for Skeena reply to that question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will reply.

Mr. Fulton: I do not really know where I want to start with that Hon. Member. He knows that Jack Munro and I are just like that. He knows that Bob Skelly and I are just like that. I am not sure I am quite so close to Mr. Bulloch or the Chamber of Commerce or Premier Vander Zalm, although I have had a couple of very nice chats with him. What it really comes down to, as the Hon. Member knows, whether it is 35 per cent on shakes and shingles or 15 per cent on softwood, is the competence and political clout of the Government dealing with an issue like that.

The Hon. Member has sat in the committee dealing with forest issues. He knows that every single person to come before that committee has condemned the Government for its actions on the softwood issue. Most of those people are the Government's friends, the largest forest companies in the country. They say the Government is a bunch of bunglers. The message we are taking out of this Chamber to Canadians is that if those guys can bungle that badly on softwood lumber, save us from any further moves on free trade because they will destroy the country. That is what we are saying.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, even in that respect the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is incorrect because Jack Munro supports what we have been doing with respect to countervailing duties. Members from British Columbia have been speaking, and I also appreciate this opportunity. We know there are problems in British Columbia. The City of Vancouver has an unemployment rate of about 14 per cent, the highest of any city in the country. We are going to work hard and do something about that. One of the most important things is trade, trade in value-added goods, trade in services, trade in the shipbuilding and ship repairing industry. Our most important trading partner is the United States, a country with 250 million consumers. We need this agreement for the future of British Columbia, so I find it astonishing that the Hon.

Member, as a representative of our province and knowing the feelings there about how important this is, would not be up here cheering and telling us to keep on with it. Instead, he acts as if he were a Luddite. I am surprised. I thought social democrats were supposed to be progressive. We are the progressive Party and those Members are the Luddites.

I do have a question. We heard the figures earlier today, and I am sure the Hon. Member is familiar with them, with respect to U.S. government procurement contracts. If we could get just 1 per cent of those contracts as a result of working out a new trade arrangement it could result in 75,000 jobs. I look at the shipbuilding industry on the West Coast. If we could break through the restrictive barriers concerning ship repair work for the U.S. Navy, if we could do away with protectionist measures such as the Jones Act, it would be a tremendous opportunity for the thousands of workers who want a future in British Columbia. Does my hon. friend not agree that we have to proceed with this initiative in order to ensure that we have the jobs his Party has been talking about, jobs for British Columbians, jobs for all Canadians?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I will not describe the Hon. Member as a Luddite, but I would point out that she should educate herself on a few of these issues. To start with, shipbuilding. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the Jones Act. American commodities can only be carried in U.S. bottoms which are produced only in the U.S. We are not about to start producing all kinds of great vessels for the U.S. in Vancouver or anywhere else.

Mr. McDermid: That is not what she said. Listen to what she said.

Mr. Fulton: That point flies out of the window.

The present restrictions on government procurement policies in Canada cost the United States an estimated $105 million in lost trade each year. Let us look at what the Hon. Member is proposing because the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) proposed much the same thing. If—and that is the key word—if we can capture 1 per cent of U.S. government procurement contracts, military and civil, that means 75,000 jobs in Canada.

Let me return to the example I used which was that of home appliances. Obviously the Americans will have access to Canadian government procurement contracts. Where you have long production runs, whether it be of toasters or desks or airplanes or cars, and you have a very select market niche you are going to get into, and that niche is much larger in the larger country, you are going to be able to produce at a much lower cost for the smaller niche of a market.

The other point that the Hon. Member and many of her colleagues tend to want to sweep under the carpet concerns the hourly wage structure, and I am talking union and non-union, in the U.S. Deregulation was the biggest union-busting operation in the history of the U.S. The thing about a lot of the policies talked about by Premier Vander Zalm and his friends and the Hon. Member and a lot of her friends is that they do not want to look at North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and other areas of the U.S. where the production of some commodities is at a $1.50 or less per hour. What they are asking many British Columbians to do is to take a job, particularly in the service industry, than not just at the national minimum wage but at less than any imaginable livable wage. We already have enough Canadians living below the poverty line.

Mr. McDermid: That is nonsense and you know it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of diffidence to engage in this historic debate because the Chamber is so historically full, the media are so historically present, and we are engaged in a historic event. I am going to do two things in my speech. I will address this issue from the point of view of Atlantic Canada. Second, I will address it from the point of view of the two opposition Parties.

If I might say in starting, Samuel Johnson, in 1791, summed up perfectly the attitude of the NDP of 1987 when he said: "I am willing to love all mankind except an American". That expresses the NDP policy. Anything American is jaundiced. Anything American they are automatically against. They are flat out against this resolution. However, at least they have the courage of their convictions. They are going to vote against this resolution. What is the resolution? That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the U.S. as part of our multilateral trade policy while protecting our political sovereignty and certain other things. They are against that. They do not want any bilateral trading arrangement with the U.S. In their ignorance and in their opposition we can at least see plainly what they are. Thank God for that.

The Official Opposition is a little different. They are summarized by the speech given to us by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He reminded me of something that Ambrose Bierce said in 1906. He described positive as being mistaken at the top of one's voice. That is what the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has been, very positive. I want to refer to the Liberal amendment just to show you how I am going to address it in a few moments' time. I will first be statesmanlike in my approach, then will gradually degenerate into realism and deal with the Liberal Opposition. The motion says "That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States" and so on. The amendment reads:

That the Motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "arrangement" and by substituting the following:

"or arrangements with the United States, as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions,

Namely that:

There not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States since such an arrangement would undermine Canada's political, economic and cultural independence—

Has a greater example of the word "mugwump" ever been seen in all our history? They are for our motion to negotiate with the United States as long as there is not an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States. How can you be for both? The "mug" is in Saint-Henri—Westmount and the Leader of the Opposition's "wump" is in Winnipeg—Fort Garry. They are for a trading arrangement with the U.S. but against it. This is an outfit which expects the people of Canada to make a decision on whether they should govern the country. They are not fit to govern the country now, they will not be fit in a year, they will not be fit in two years, and they will not be fit in two and a half years. They are less fit than the NDP to govern the country. At least we know where the NDP is sitting.

I summarize the attitude of the NDP as Bob White and the seven dwarfs. The Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) and the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), who is in the "Caccia nut" section of the Liberal Party, are Bob White and the seven dwarfs or Shirley Carr and the "me too's". As soon as Shirley Carr announces what her position is, the NDP falls in line and not far behind is most of the Liberal Opposition.

Before I deal with the sad spectacle we see opposite us of one Party absolutely frank in its confession of ignorance and opposition to what we are doing and the other Party afraid to confess anything, I want to deal with the three objectives we are trying to achieve. We are trying to secure continuing access for existing trade with the U.S., to gain new opportunities for trade through enhanced—which means increased—access to the U.S. market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Well, they did not know. Their problem has been that they have not understood what "enhanced" meant. Third, we want to ensure that access in an agreement which is beyond the reach of short-sighted and erratic protectionist forces, that being, of course, those 70 in the opposition Parties.

This is important for Atlantic Canada, where I come from, because trade into our traditional markets in the U.S. is our economic life-blood. The 70 over there are against the economic life-blood of Atlantic Canada. In 1985 two-thirds of the exports of Atlantic Canada went to the U.S.

Don't leave. The Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) should stay here and try to learn.

Sixty-five per cent of P.E.I.'s exports, 71 per cent of Nova Scotia's, and 66 per cent of New Brunswick's exports went to the U.S.A. Exports to the U.S. are critical to the whole Atlantic region. In 1985 Newfoundland exports were $440 million, which is $756 per capita. P.E.I.'s exports were $73.5 million, which is $576 per capita, and Nova Scotia's exports were $1.12 billion, or $1,351 per capita. New Brunswick's exports were $1.46 billion, or $2,032 per capita. The 70 Hon. Members over there do not care about this. They are going to try to sabotage it if they can. That totals $3.1 billion or 12.6 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product of Atlantic Canada. That is what fuels the structure of our regional economy.

With regard to the Canadian figures, 78 per cent of all Canadian exports in 1985 went to the U.S. That accounted for over 21 per cent of the GNP. That is just over one-fifth for those over there who would not understand. Over 2 million jobs came from exports to the U.S. All we hear from the Members opposite is "jobs".

One would think Ontario is unaffected by the U.S. What do they care about the U.S. in Ontario? Premier Peterson does not give a fig for the United States or exports to the United States. He is quite independent. He wants to judge this and decide that. He is going to sign the treaties or he is not going to sign. Why, he is Premier Peterson of mighty Ontario. He does not understand that 91 per cent of all of Ontario's exports go to the United States of America.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In Newfoundland we are not all that bright, we are not as bright as them mainlanders. Only 54 per cent of our exports go to the U.S., but we are supporting the Government's free trade initiative. What is the difference between 54 per cent and 91 per cent? Why, that would be 37 per cent. Ontario sends 37 per cent more of its exports to the U.S., and Premier Peterson does not care. He does not give a sweet damn about whether 91 per cent of their exports are going there or not. He thinks it is positively dangerous. Can anyone understand the logic of Premier Peterson or his agent in this House, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner)? No, we cannot understand. However, we know mathematics, and in Newfoundland 54 per cent is one hell of a lot of exports.

Secure access is important because the fisheries in Atlantic Canada have been harassed for years by U.S. anti-dumping and countervail actions. We have been harassed and we do not want to be harassed in the future. The Government tries to protect us from being harassed in the future because we have been harassed in the past and we know that if there is no agreement with the U.S. we are going to be harassed again in the future. We are going to be harassed more than we were ever harassed and hassled in the past. That is why we want the Government to succeed. That is why we are supporting the Prime Minister in these free trade initiatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Sometimes those actions fail as when the Americans succeeded in an anti-dumping action against salt cod and in a countervailing action against fresh groundfish exports. We know they are our buddies and friends, but we also know that they are our competitors at the moment. We have no agreement with them. We have no secure access. We cannot stop them from harassing us unless our protector, our saviour, the Prime Minister, can bring us into the promised land of a new agreement with the United States of America.

Twenty per cent of the workforce in Newfoundland is engaged in the fishery. Six hundred communities depend upon it, and they do not appreciate the NDP trying to scuttle this. Ninety per cent of our groundfish, our main export commodity, is sold in the U.S., and these beauts are trying to fight secure access to the U.S. for 90 per cent of our groundfish. Why, I hesitate to tell you what is going to happen to these characters in the St. John's East by-election.

Is enhanced access important? We want entry of processed fish products from Canada. We do not want to send up only frozen cod blocks any more. We want it processed in Canada. Enhanced access means more employment and the creation of more wealth for us. I went to the fisheries SAGIT meeting on Friday. A SAGIT is not some queer paedophile society or something homo-erotic or homo-pathetic. It is the Sectoral Advisory Group for International Trade. They do not want the fishing sector left out. They did not beg us to leave out the fishery because they did not want to take a chance on this. They said, for God's sake, don't leave out the fishery. We told the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) the queen of the pêche, that we are not going to leave out the fishery sector. We told them that we are not going to give U.S. harvesters access to Canadian fish resources either. We told them that existing export restrictions are going to be maintained to ensure further processing in Canada. They do not want to be left because they know how important this is to them and to Newfoundlanders generally as do the P.E.I. and New Brunswick potato producers. Their livelihood has been repeatedly jeopardized by U.S. trade remedy actions taken at the behest of their American competitors. That is why the potato producers in Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick want us to enter into an agreement with the United States. How secure is the future without such an agreement? Will there be any more major industrial investments like Michelin Tire in Nova Scotia if the entrepreneurs there are uncertain whether they will lose their access to U.S. markets through protectionism? Not at all. When the Canadian public understand what these 70 members are doing, the polls will reflect a terrible, cataclysmic cataclysm that will strike those members.

Who is saying no to a trade deal with the United States? Is it Premier Peckford? No, he is "positive Peckford" with respect to a free trade deal. Is it Premier Hatfield? No, it is not Premier Hatfield. Is it Premier Ghiz? No, it is not Premier Ghiz because he is saying "Gee whiz", when he hears what his Leader is saying here in Ottawa.

Why is the New Democratic Party opposed to a trade deal? Why is the Liberal Party opposed, at least every second day? Do the Liberals fret and whine because we will scuttle regional development? That is not the case because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pledged in Montreal last week: "Any suggestion that we abandon our commitment to our regional development would be completely unacceptable to this country". Therefore, the Liberals are not opposing it because it would eliminate regional development. They cannot be opposing it because of social programs or political sovereignty, the agriculture marketing system or our unique cultural identity, which my desk mate will address in a few moments in her own charming style. The Liberals do not oppose free trade for any of those regions because the Liberals have become what they once accused the Conservative Party of being: the coalition of the "antis".

Let us deal with the Liberal amendment which states they are for negotiations but attempts to ensure the understanding that they are against negotiations. It is pusillanimous pussyfooting, two-faced, slippery, duplicitous, tricky, tacky, twisting, indecisive, straddling, strained and scaredy-cat. Where is the Leader of the Opposition leading his Party in circuitous circumspections, circumcised of decisiveness, bereft of principles and dotty with deviousness? That has been the approach of the Leader of the Opposition to this debate tonight.

On October 20, 1986, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, the Liberal trade critic, called for an immediate suspension of trade negotiations. Yet today, the Liberals are pretending that they want arrangements with the United States. By the way, this afternoon, the member, "aerated Axworthy", spoke in this debate. If bluff, bluster and breathlessness were the equivalent of brains he would be the Einstein of the House of Commons.

The day after October 20 the Leader of the Opposition said that: "To walk away now—may unleash damaging countervailing action against us and may inflame the already protectionist sentiment in the Congress—". One day the Liberal trade critic said an immediate suspension should take place, and the next day the Leader of the Opposition said it may unleash damaging countervailing actions.

A week later, on October 27, the Member for Davenport said: "We do not believe that it would be in Canada's best interest to engage in a negotiation on a one-to-one basis between us, a fairly small economy, and the Americans, a very large and powerful economy". Today, the Leader of the Opposition was flexing his muscles, saying how well he could negotiate if he were there to do so. I have news for him. He will never be there to negotiate, so he can flex what he likes. These comments were made in the space of eight days. The Member for Windsor West stated on October 28 that he was flat out opposed to trade talks with the United States. Today, he is just flat out because the Liberals are pretending that they want negotiations with the United States today, although their motion would truncate, eliminate and circumvent any negotiations with the United States.

Who can forget the great resolution of November 28, 1986, at the Liberal national convention? In the morning they passed a motion backing free trade with the United States and in the afternoon they adopted a resolution opposing it.

We know that the New Democratic Party is completely negative. We are proud of them because they are totally what we expect. They are the nattering nabobs of negativism.

Former Liberal Cabinet Minister, Donald Macdonald, said: "From the outside, we look pretty stupid". From any side; from upside down, downside up, from the left side, from the right side, from inside or outside, they are perfectly stupid looking in their position on this matter. I like the phrase used by the Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) when he described those opposed to negotiations with the United States—the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and the Member for Windsor West—as trying to pull off the "great trade robbery". That is a fine phrase that he did not favour us with today. He said that when talking in Vancouver, pretending to be honest, straightforward and sincerely devoted to the country.

I will not even mention Marc Lalonde because he is passé. He said that our best strategy was a two-track approach. We put him on one of those two tracks, but we agree with him on the two-track approach.

The late Don Jamieson, one of the finest minds ever to participate in a Liberal Government, said on September 25, 1986, concerning a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States:

> It is guaranteed access on a fixed set of terms that are not capable of being adjusted at the whim of some politician, or because a hiccup happens to occur somewhere in the international trading system.

The late Don Jamieson knew this was the right course. It was one of the final public statements he ever made.

Canada's trading relationship with the United States is too important to Atlantic Canada to put up with the political whimsy of the Official Opposition or the NDP. They stand foursquare against a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. Their heads are firmly buried in the sand and their ears are ringing with the self-induced applause from their weekend in Montreal. They are veritable lions in the streets between elections, but they will be tame pussycats come election day in two or three years. They will be tame tabbies, indeed.

Since 1980 there have been 22 anti-dumping investigations, 14 countervailing duty cases, and six escape clause actions levelled against Canadian exports to the United States. In 1984 alone, $6 billion worth of Canadian trade, accounting for 150,000 jobs, was in jeopardy. If we did not attempt to do something about that we should be driven from office. History would look back on us as total failures if we were not attempting to do something about that. We will do our best to get a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. If we fail, it will not be because of us but because of the 70 Members opposite and an obdurate and insensitive U.S. administration in Washington.

We know that Members opposite are the naysayers and that your mugs and wumps are half in Winnipeg and half in Saint-Henri—Westmount. We know your Leader is out looking for the part in between.

Finally, let me end with a quotation: "He'll ne'er get a pennyworth that's afraid to ask a price". That was said by Thomas Fuller in 1732 in his great work entitled "Gomologia". We are not afraid to ask the price. When we know the price we will come back here with an agreement which we will ask the Canadian public to accept, or there will be an agreement that we will tell them to forget. We are not afraid. We will ask the price and then report to the people of Canada, and goodbye to the lot of you in the next election.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, before I put my question to my hon. colleague opposite, I would like to assure him that when I want to hear a clown I go to the circus. The main part of the Minister's speech was based on the false assumption that the Opposition does not care. He even went so far as to say we are trying to sabotage. We have put forward an amendment in which we have indicated how we feel the Canadian public interest should be protected. The Minister has just glossed over that amendment. If he is really serious about this debate, why does he not tell us whether he agrees or disagrees with this amendment and where and why he disagrees? Has he given up intellectually to make any serious effort in participating in this debate? Or is he so totally discouraged by the standing of his Party in the polls that he cannot even bring his mind to focus on the amendment the Official Opposition has put forward?

Mr. Crosbie: In all my wildest dreams, Mr. Speaker, I never thought that one of them would ask me a question about their amendment. That is why I spoke on it in my main remarks. Had I thought I would be asked a question about this spiflicated piece of mugwumpery, I would not have wasted part of my 20 minutes dealing with it. I would have waited until now. What does the amendment say? I want Hon. Members to listen. Our motion states:

> That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement—

That seems clear enough. We support the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States. What does the amendment do? It deletes all of the words after "arrangement" and substitutes:

> or arrangements with the United States,—

That is significant. They added an "s".

> —as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions,
> Namely that:
> There not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States—

Now, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are entitled to say to themselves: "What in the name of God is this? Do they think we are completely dumb? Do they think we are brainless? Do they think we have not a shred of intelligence? Do they think we are automatons? Do they think we are going to follow the Gallup polls so blindly that we will not look at what they are doing in the House of Commons for the next couple of years?" Not damn likely. That Party is for "arrangements". They support negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, but they say there cannot be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement. Well, we are trying to get a free trade arrangement, all-inclusive. We do not want some little spavine. We want an all-inclusive free trade arrangement. That is what we want and that is what our motion says.

Of course we are going to protect our political sovereignty, our social programs, our agricultural marketing systems, our auto industry and our unique cultural identity. What are you guys going to do?

Mr. Rodriguez: Take a couple of aspirins now, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Sudbury is not what he used to be.

An Hon. Member: Nickel Belt.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is not worth two cents.

The members of the Official Opposition say they are all for this as long as there not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the U.S. Why are they against it? In their very motion they say:

> Since such an arrangement would undermine Canada's olitical, economic and cultural independence; and would jeopardize Canada's regional development policies, agricultural policies, cultural industries, financial and service industries, and the Auto Pact;

Naturally, they are not for an all-inclusive free trade arrangement because an all-inclusive free trade arrangement would do away with Canada. We would be naked as newts. There would be nothing left of us if that Party is correct that such an arrangement is going to undermine our political, economic and cultural independence, our regional development and agricultural policies, our cultural industries, our financial and service industries and the Auto Pact. We would have to be pretty damn stupid if we are going to enter into some arrangement which does that. But the Liberal Opposition has already decided. It does not know what the arrangement is yet. It is too impatient to wait to see what it is. It has already decided it is going to undermine our political, economic and cultural independence, our regional development and agricultural policies, our cultural industries, our financial and service industries and the Auto Pact. It has already decided, but it does not know what it is yet. That Party can certainly foretell the future. This is a brilliant group, these 40 feckless gentlemen opposite and ladies.

Let us be sensible and just admit that the amendment of those Hon. Members was a farce and they are farcers for producing it. Withdraw, for heaven's sakes, before you are laughed out of Canada. Withdraw.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a former U.S. President said once that we should never fear to negotiate and we should never negotiate from fear. I, for one, do not understand why the Opposition is afraid to negotiate. The well-known Canadian journalist and writer, Richard Gwyn, spoke of the importance to show self-confidence in ourselves concerning free trade talks with the United States. Today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke of a new commercial and trading agreement with the U.S. which will benefit all regions. He said "all regions of Canada". Does the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) want to see Canadian businesses sell to Metropolitan Halifax, Metropolitan Montreal, Metropolitan Toronto, Metropolitan Vancouver, or does he want to see them also sell to Metropolitan America, creating more jobs for all Canadians?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a question from one of the most brilliant, if not the most brilliant of Hon. Members of the House. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner), I predict, has a brilliant future ahead of him, just as these hon. gentlemen opposite have a brilliant future behind them.

I want to answer the hon. gentleman in this fashion; he will recall Lord Byron, he is deeply read in literature. Lord Byron said: "He who would be free must first himself strike the blow". That is the type of person the Hon. Member is. He is not satisfied to hide behind the equivocation and pusillanimous pussyfooting of the Official Opposition. He wants to be free and is ready to strike the blow, and that is what we are doing. We are striking the blow down in Washington to see if it is possible to have a free trade agreement with the U.S. which protects this country. Seventy-eight per cent of its exports go to the United States of America. It is because of people like the Hon. Member backing us up in caucus. A byronic figure such as himself is prepared to back his Leader who is unafraid, despite the equivocation, despite the backing and filling, knocking and rumour-spreading. The most conservative element of society today is represented by the New Democratic Party and the labour movement, the Bob Whites and Shirley Carrs. Yes, they pull the plunger and it springs to attention, you can be sure, Mr. Speaker. It is because of Hon. Members like the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton that we are not afraid to strike the blow, and if we can get a receptive U.S. administration, we are going to bring the people of Canada into a prosperous 1990s and into an even better 21st century.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed quite pleased to participate in this debate tonight and, Mr. Speaker, if you can get the folks opposite to pay the kind of respect to members of the Opposition that we showed to the Tories, although it was quite difficult for us to do so earlier tonight, then perhaps we could proceed with the debate.

What we are debating tonight is that resolution which was moved and which I want to read again because all Canadians should just know how wishy-washy and ridiculous this motion is. It states:

This House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

• (2000)

The motion itself should be defeated pure and simple because of all the mistakes inherent in it. Nowhere in the motion is a mention of agricultural marketing boards. Nowhere does it specifically refer to supply management. It does not mention the Auto Pact. It contains just a general statement about the auto industry. It deals with our cultural identity, not our cultural industries. It deals with trading arrangements with the United States while neglecting to refer to the fact that it is a set of free trade negotiations that the Government is undertaking.

This morning we listened attentively to the speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I must say that that was one of the worst disappointments I have had since taking public office. I say that as objectively as I can. To listen to it in order to gain some information for the constituency which I represent was indeed a difficult task. There was nothing in the speech of the Prime Minister.

I would now like to remind Hon. Members of several quotations. This morning the Prime Minister took considerable time of the House to quote various people from newspaper reports and so on. The first I wish to read states:

This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. I'm all in favour of eliminating unfair protectionism where it exists. This is a separate country. We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch-plant economy, in many ways, in certain important sectors.

Do you know who said that, Mr. Speaker? It was the Prime Minister as reported in The Globe and Mail of June 1, 1983.

Another individual is reported to have said: "we never discuss free trade". Do you know who that individual was, Mr. Speaker? It was the same fellow, the Prime Minister, in an interview with The Ottawa Citizen of July 4, 1985.

Another quote I have in my hand states:

Enhanced trade or trade agreements impact not only on the United States but on our trading relations with allies, upon GATT (the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, in which Canada is a participant).

I will read some more. I invite Tories across the way to pay attention. I promise to speak slowly so that even they will be able to understand. I will read at Tory speed. The quotation states:

—in a discussion paper released last January that formally launched the debate on free trade, the government stuck to its terminology of "comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement."

That was from an interview in The Toronto Star of July 18, 1985, with, again, the Prime Minister.

I would now like to read another quotation in which the Prime Minister states:

"I've never used the words "free trade". I don't think any of your colleagues have heard me ever use that," Mulroney told reporters.

Obviously, that was the Prime Minister as quoted in The Toronto Star of November 28, 1985.

On June 18, 1986, as reported in The Globe and Mail, the Prime Minister said: "—we advocate Progressive-Conservative-Liberalized trade."

Later on we heard the following:

"They will probably be discussing trade irritants and they will be working toward the completion of the negotiations for a comprehensive free trade agreement between us and the United States." That is what the Minister for International Trade said here in the House of Commons on March 11, 1987.

Mr. Speaker, the Government across the aisle accuses the Opposition of failing to take a definite position on free trade, which is quite false, as everyone knows. The interesting fact is that the Government does not even know where it is going. This morning in the House of Commons—and I urge my colleagues on the other side to check this in Hansard—the Prime Minister said that we have bilateral negotiations with the United States under GATT Article XXIV. He said that quite clearly. Mr. Speaker, do you know what is the heading of GATT Article XXIV? Here is how it reads:

[English]

"Territorial applications, custom unions and free trade areas". That is the title of the section of GATT under which we are negotiating. What are we negotiating if it is not a free trade agreement? If it is something else, I would like to know what it is.

Today, in the House of Commons, Conservative Members have used the words "free trade". The Prime Minister says he never uses the words. He says that he is against free trade; he wants enhanced trade, liberalized trade. He says that he is negotiating under Article 24 of the GATT which deals specifically with free trade. What are members opposite talking about? They are asking us to state our position in the House of Commons when they have not made up their minds with respect to what it is they will do. Or is it a case of them having made up their minds yet being unwilling to tell the people of Canada the whole truth about what it is they are doing?

I would now like to read the following:

Benign neglect from a majority of Canadians may be the realistic outcome of a well-executed communications program . . . The best strategy for the government is to adopt a low-profile approach to the general public.

Do Hon. Members know what that statement is from? It is from a cabinet document of 1985 on how to con the Canadian public. It is from the "con-servative" Party and tells the Canadian public that we should not tell them too much. In the view of the Conservative Party ignorance is bliss. They seem to say that we should not tell the people of Canada what we are doing and maybe they will forget about it. I will not allow the Tories to do that. That is not what my constituents sent me to this House for. They sent me to speak on their behalf, loud and clear. That is what I intend to do with respect to all the issues that are put before us.

I would like to remind Hon. Members of another quotation. I know these words are painful for the Tories. I quote them using their own words, which is unfair, and I know that. It is unfair to quote a Tory using his own words. I have in my hand the July 26, 1984, Progressive Conservative Agenda for Government. It has the Tory logo right here on the corner of it. I am sure you will remember it well, Mr. Speaker. You were inflicted with that partisan nonsense as well. You, Sir, being the non-partisan person you are have a good appreciation of it. It states: "The Progressive Conservative commitment—".

That is like a campaign promise, a commitment. Except for a Tory, of course, it usually means something that they break right away. This document states:

> The PC objectives in the textile and apparel industries are to ensure in the short-term stability in the industry through fair and balanced trade measures and, in the long-term, to facilitate adjustments by supporting measures that promote and reinforce the strengths in the industry.
> 1. Fair trade, but not free trade.

And this is a document printed on Conservative Party letterhead and dated July 26, 1984. That was the Conservative policy at that time. It is totally contradictory to the reference this morning to Article 24 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. If there is anyone who is on trial today for inconsistency it is the Government of Canada. The people of Canada have already given their verdict. It is reflected in the public opinion polls. I tell Members across the way that they had better shape up because the people have had it with that type of nonsense.

I would now like to refer to a letter that was sent by Richard Lapointe, Secretary-Treasurer of the Glengarry County Milk Committee, which is in my riding. It is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). It states:

> Dear Mr. Wise:
> The Glengarry Milk Producers at its annual meeting held, Monday March 9, 1987, expressed strong disapproval of your government's intention to include supply managed commodities on the free trade bargaining table.
> You assured us in the past that Marketing Boards are not to be tampered with. Now, milk producers are suspicious of your position.
> In Glengarry County, as elsewhere, dairy farmers are anxiously waiting for you and your peers to clearly affirm that our industry is not up for negotiation.
> We look forward to an early reply on this matter.

The original of the letter was sent to the Minister of Agriculture with copies to the Hon. Member for Stormont—Dundas (Mr. Warner), a copy to myself and one to the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster). The people of my riding are very concerned about this issue.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last weekend I met with farmers in my constituency—dairy farmers who expressed their grievances, stating they could not possibly trust this Government with negotiating any agreement with anybody, still less a bilateral free-trade agreement with the most powerful nation in the world. And those farmers in my constituency—I am thinking for instance of Mr. Gérard Blanchard from the Embrun or Saint Albert area who contacted me last week, asking: "Should I buy additional milk quotas?" What am I supposed to tell those farmers? Should I tell them the Prime Minister is saying this is free trade on the one hand, enhanced trade on the other, and the next day some other kind of trade he is negotiating? What am I supposed to say to the producers in my riding when this Government cannot even tell an ounce of truth about the whole free trade question? What am I supposed to do? And I say to Members opposite—some of them who represent agricultural riding must know this as well. I wonder how they manage to evade such serious issues. Sooner or later they will have to answer the questions. They have to say yes or no. How will they ever do that?

At my office today. Mr. Speaker, I got a letter from Dairy Farmers of Canada Executive Secretary James Waardenburg who is also concerned about this issue. Among all Canadian constituencies, the electoral riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is home to the largest number of dairy producers—well, I think it has the greatest number, close to 2,000 of them in my riding. So it is a major industry indeed, the bread and butter of 2,000 families. It is more than all other issues, or a great many other issues raised in the House in the past. Mr. Waardenburg states: "Our domestic market must not become a reservoir for American surplus production". In the documentation he sent me today he points out that American surplus production is powerful enough or considerable enough to flood the Canadian market. Surplus production in the United States is in excess of our total domestic production in Canada. Mr. Speaker, what will happen if we end up with a free trade agreement without specific measures to protect dairy producers? The industry would cease to exist right then and there.

A moment ago we heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) make statements which I would say are almost reassuring. I must add that those who are negotiating, such as the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade, always avoid saying, for instance, that they are going to protect agriculture. They let other Ministers who have no role to play in the negotiations say these things, and they are then free to say what they want in their negotiations with the United States without admitting that they want to protect a given sector. Mr. Speaker, first, such a strategy cannot work, and second, it does not inspire any confidence among Canadian farmers. The producers in my constituency want something better. They want some definitive statements from this Government.

• (2010)

I want to talk a little bit about another sector of agriculture that affects my riding to a lesser degree, but nevertheless it is there and it is an important industry in Canada. Agriculture is always important. I am talking about supply managed production in what is customarily known as the feather industry, poultry, chickens, turkeys, which includes eggs. In the United States 62 companies have 56 per cent of the egg market. The American so-called free enterprise system with no interference has led to immense corporate concentration in that area of agriculture. In Canada, 89 per cent of the egg producers have less than 20,000 hens. Our egg sector is more diversified, and we have smaller farms, which is good because it keeps family in the business. The Government has said keeping the family farms in business is one of its commitments. It is certainly a commitment of the Liberal Party to have the family farm thrive and survive. Again, in the area of egg production, we are talking about 3,000 jobs, and a $124 million industry. According to statistics, 47 per cent of producers would be at risk under a supply managed system that would not protect them.

There are many other issues that I want to discuss in the few minutes I have left. I have raised with the House before that what we are talking about here is a free trade agreement under Section 24(8) of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The Prime Minister admitted to that in the House this morning. From this point on, it is no use for him to divorce himself from the words free trade. What he said will be in today's Hansard. We have to remember that we got into this thing partially as a result of the Macdonald Royal Commission report that recommended a so-called leap of faith. In other words, close our eyes and hope that we will land in an appropriate spot. That is not good enough for me or for my constituents.

[Translation]

The Glengarry—Prescott—Russell constituency and many other regions in Canada depend on the textile industry. I want to say to the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) and to the others who are willing to listen to me that this sector deserves to be protected. In my constituency, many people in Hawkesbury, Alexandria . . . The Minister of Communications visited Glengarry last year. She is also aware that this sector must be protected.

In the case of the shoe industry, 20,000 jobs are disappearing in Canada because of the attitude of the Conservative Government. There were 450 jobs in Glengarry on the day the Minister of Communications came for a visit one year and a half ago. Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister realizes how many jobs are left at Alexandria Footwear, which used to employ 250 people. Today, they employ only 60, as a result of the disastrous policies of the Conservative Government. And why, Mr. Speaker, did the Government introduce this policy? Just to give us a foretaste of free trade. They are gradually taking apart everything that was built up thanks to the excellence job-protection policies of the previous Government. And they are doing all this to show their good faith to our friends, the Americans.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about these negotiations, we should remember, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed out earlier, that we went into the talks with a $20 billion surplus. Mr. Speaker, picture the situation. We have a little guy and a big guy. The little guy has something the big guy wants, and negotiations are started at that moment. Who is going to lose, Mr. Speaker? The little guy, of course. And we are the little guy. Furthermore, no cost-benefit analysis was made. Or if there was one, the information was never shared with the House. The Members of this House have the right to know what the benefits and what the costs will be of such an agreement.

There has been no discussion about the whole issue of free trade until today, the very first time, some two years later. It took them two years to talk about it in the House. Mr. Speaker, that is entirely unsatisfactory. Furthermore, before starting the talks, there was no consultation with provincial governments across Canada. And of course the provincial premiers would have had a lot more to do if they had been consulted from the very beginning, which was not the case.

[English]

I think it is important to note that the United States, right in the middle of the negotiations, to demonstrate its good faith adopted the U.S. Farm Bill, a Bill containing $70 billion worth of subsidies, subsidies which are there to displace the Canadian market. If there is any evidence required that the other partner is not negotiating in good faith, this is it. I have an easy solution to this problem, Mr. Speaker. What we need to do is to free Canada and trade the Prime Minister. Free Canada, trade Mulroney.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Speaker, I cannot sit back and watch the country become a second or third rate economy. We must fight this thing head on. We must accept reality. We must secure a long-term, comprehensive and binding trade treaty with the U.S. We are building a country for the future.

I cannot think of another major issue of this magnitude where all 10 Premiers agreed, literally from the onset, that the risks involved were worth the commitment of dominating our national agenda. We cannot live in a world of the past and afraid of the future. Canada is a trading nation, and in order to survive we must move ahead. We need jobs, and we need a future for our children.

I come from Alberta, and Alberta has two vital interests in the Government's national trade strategy—agriculture and oil and gas. At Christmas time the FERC 256 option—and that is the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission of the United States—indicated that the U.S. did not like the way we in Canada priced our gas for export. We have been pricing our gas for export that way for decades, and we are not about to change.

I want to ask the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) to comment upon a couple of statements. The Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) spoke to the Vancouver Board of Trade in November, 1985. He told his audience that unemployment in British Columbia had been unacceptably high for too long. In part he said that it was caused by the extreme dependence of that economy on its export sector, especially in forest products and minerals. That gentleman said that we first needed an agreement to secure our access to the U.S. markets because even though three-quarters of our exports went to the United States, there was mounting protectionism.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Mrs. Sparrow: It was the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount. He also said in the same paper that a comprehensive free trade agreement could force the removal of counter-productive interprovincial trade barriers. He said that such an agreement would lead to more economic activity and more jobs. He said that a comprehensive free trade agreement would not compromise Canadian sovereignty. Also he said that such an agreement would require the removal of tariffs which have been the most important single irritant to this federation.

Also I want the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to comment upon the statement of the Hon. Marc Lalonde which he made in October, 1985 on Canada-U.S. trade. He spoke of the importance of the U.S. market for Canada and mentioned the various attempts at increasing our proportionate trade with other trading partners. He said that they had failed and that even the signing of the framework agreement in 1976 with the European Economic Community had not prevented a steady decline in its relative importance as a trading partner for Canada. That hon. gentleman said that negotiators for both countries should strive for the largest possible elimination of barriers to trade, having a broad, comprehensive free trade agreement in mind, and that such an approach would be in the best interests of both countries.

I am for jobs. I am for regional growth. Where are the Liberals? Are they against the regions? Are they against employment? What is their future for the youth of the country?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was beginning to wonder whether that was a question or a filibuster. However, in the limited time remaining in the 10 minutes I will try to answer that Conservative Member's question.

She is now extolling the virtues of a comprehensive bilateral free trade agreement. I remind her, as I did Hon. Members of the House only moments ago, of the meeting of the Quebec caucus of Sherbrooke, which was held on July 26, 1984. A press release entitled "Progressive Conservative Agenda for Government Policy Area: Textile and Apparel Industries". Without reading the whole page and without filibustering, as did the Hon. Member, I will summarize it by saying that the first point indicates "Fair trade, but not free trade". That is signed by the Leader of the Conservative Party.

The same Leader of the Conservative Party told us this morning in the House of Commons that Canada was negotiating with the United States under Section 24(8) of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. That section is specifically on free trade. The Prime Minister and other Conservatives can try saying two things simultaneously which are different. However, it does not work because we are wide awake over here. We know what is going on. We see through the Tory rhetoric, the nonsense we hear from the Conservative benches. In fact what they have been doing all along is specifically negotiating what they said they would not negotiate.

Just as we do not believe the Conservatives on that issue, we do not believe when some Conservative cabinet Members started to say today that maybe some sectors of agriculture will be protected, maybe not, or that maybe culture will be protected. We do not believe all that. Why do we not believe it? It is because of their record over there. It is an unbroken string of promises and deception to Canadian people.

That is why our Right Hon. Leader proposed the very appropriate and well worded motion which I have in my hand. If I repeated it to the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), she would be better informed about why we could improve the motion and make it at least slightly palatable, even though the negotiators across the way will be the same incompetent bunch.

Mr. Daubney: Mr. Speaker, I listened with care to the speech of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), something incidentally not recommended by nine out of 10 family physicians, particularly after sampling the fare of the Parliamentary Restaurant.

I also attempted to make sense of the Liberal amendment to our resolution. I consider myself, as a lawyer and as a reasonable drafter and interpreter of legal documents, somewhat qualified to do so. However, this is virtually an indecipherable document. It can be summed up only as free trade if necessary but not necessarily free trade, just as we heard last Monday about Cruise missile testing if necessary but not necessarily Cruise missile testing. Of course 45 years ago it was conscription if necessary but not necessarily conscription. It shows how little the Liberal Party has changed since the age of Mackenzie King, particularly the leadership of that Party.

Mackenzie King, history tells us, negotiated or had his officials come close to negotiating a free trade arrangement with the Americans in the late 1940s. He backed out of it because he was gutless. He was afraid to take a bold, decisive step for the Canadian people. Just think what our history would have been had he done so; how many more jobs there would have been for Canadians and how many more Canadians there would be because more people would have come to Canada. We would have been able to welcome them to our shores.

We heard the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in his very eloquent speech this evening describe the Liberal Party as the Party of mugwumps, the "mug" being the Hon. Member for Saint Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and the "wump" being the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), or is it the other way around? I want to ask the Hon. Member, who did not make it entirely clear in his remarks, which side he is on. Is he on the "mugs" or is he on the "wumps", or is he solidly in the middle with his Leader?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am very proudly behind my Leader and the future Prime Minister of the country. It will not take long before I tell him where we are. Let me answer the Hon. Member who just asked his question and used unwisely the time of the House. If he wants to use quotes, let me remind him of one, and I invite the Hon. Member for Manicouagan to listen to it. It says:

> Sleeping with an elephant is very exciting until he moves a little and if he rolls over you are a dead man.
> That is why free trade was decided in the 1911 election. This affects Canadian sovereignty and we will hear no more of it, not even in a leadership campaign or in other circumstances.

• (2030)

The Hon. Member for Manicouagan made that speech. I do not need any lessons from a Tory on how to tell the truth and certainly not from a Tory who speaks out of both sides of his mouth simultaneously and incoherently.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) talk about speaking from both sides of one's mouth. Over the last 20 years, people in northern Ontario and the regions of Canada have seen how a Liberal Government spoke from both sides of its mouth.

Today we have heard nothing but doom and gloom from the opposition Party, a Party that was in power for 20 years but really did not have any economic thoughts for the regions of Canada like northern Ontario. Free trade or enhanced trade means that seven out of 10 jobs will be created in northern Ontario and it is extremely important.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would comment on a report tabled last week on Canada's single-industry communities. For 20 years, the Hon. Member's Government had an opportunity to do something for single-industry communities. Can the Hon. Member tell me today if the same approach is still being taken by his Party as has been taken by it for the last 20 years? He should come clean with Canadians and tell us what he will do for single-industry towns.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked me to read a report that he says was tabled in the House or given to Hon. Members last week. I will answer as Tory Members often answer. I will give it my utmost consideration and will read it as soon as possible.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today supporting the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States as part of the Government's multilateral trade policy states unequivocally that such an agreement will only be arranged while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry and our unique cultural identity. I would like to talk for a few minutes about our unique cultural identity and the institutions which protect it.

It has been said that this is an historic debate and indeed it is. I may say that there is no conceivable task that would give me greater pleasure or indeed greater pride than to participate in this debate today. I would like to share with my colleagues and Members of the House some of the reasons for my optimism.

[Translation]

Free trade offers us an opportunity to capitalize on our strength as a trading nation by securing our trading ties with our biggest and most important trade partner. A successful conclusion to these talks will mean a successful Canada as we approach the 21st century. A successful conclusion will give the canadian economy an impetus that may very well prove to be unprecedented in the history of our development.

[English]

This is not idle rhetoric. It would give our economy a phenomenal boost. We are in fact on the verge of an historic agreement. It is not a time for the wringing of one's hands as some Hon. Members opposite seem to think, nor is it a time for sitting on one's hands as others try to proclaim. It is a time to seize the opportunity with both hands. The Government, recognizing the need for change and the danger of resting on past laurels, is doing precisely that. It is seizing the opportunity.

How does all this affect our culture? What does greater prosperity for Canadians mean for the cultural industries? It will mean a healthy cultural sector, healthier than ever before. It will mean greater purchases of cultural products by more Canadians than ever before. It will mean finding more jobs for Canadian creators and more opportunities to create than ever before. This is an opportunity that should not be lost.

Some voices have been heard decrying the effect such an agreement would have on our culture. Some critics have suggested that the Government would sell Canada short in order to strike a deal. I want to say that when such comments are made, it is a case of hoping that the sheer repetition of a falsehood will somehow convince Canadians of its validity. I want to underline the Government's repeated and steadfast commitment to the protection of Canadian culture.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We have stated from the outset of these talks that culture and communications are vital to the defence, the security and the economic health of Canada. Yet they are much more than that. We may try to quantify culture by using words such as "industries" and "products" as a kind of shorthand, but in fact we all recognize that the best of our culture is intangible. It is our ideas and our emotions that make us Canadians. It is the spirit that underlies all our acts, that causes us to declare allegiance to our native land in countless and even routine ways time after time, day after day. It is our hopes and our aspirations, our way of doing things. It is our way of life. No Government would dare to ignore, could ignore, these realities. Certainly not this Government. This Government would not do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We need no prompting from opposition Parties or indeed from interest groups to make our position clear to the Americans. We have done that from the beginning. They know where we stand. Certainly they have heard from us often enough on this topic. As early as September, 1985, Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared the following:

> Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparity, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

In December of the same year, the Prime Minister went on to say in Chicago the following:

> In the United States, you cast the net of national security over more areas than we; in Canada, we cast the net of cultural sovereignty more widely than you.

The myriad of cultural instruments at our disposal is one reason our country is as strong as it is today. Conservative Governments have long recognized this and that is why they helped to create so many of these instruments. We recognize that they go to the very root of Canadian identity. The Government knows well this fundamental truth. We too have created instruments, have searched for innovative solutions to meet our country's cultural needs. It is in part because of such instruments that Canada has reached the stage at which we can contemplate a new trade agreement with confidence. We can consider it in the sure knowledge that our culture is both rich and mature, that our identity is no longer subject to question but is stronger and more self-confident than ever and that our cultural institutions will be firm in their defence of each.

I am not suggesting that we are invulnerable. We all know the impact of American influence, its breadth and its depth. I am saying that despite this influence, our culture has never been more distinct or more truly Canadian, nor has it been more recognized abroad. The elements of our nationhood are all around us. This very House in which I address you, the parliamentary tradition, profoundly separates us from our southern neighbours. Geography, history, our bilingual and multicultural character, our positive attitude toward Government and its purposes, these and many other features of our Canadian way of life give us a unique perspective on the world.

[Translation]

Our remarkable cultural diversity began with our aboriginal ancestors and continued with our two founding peoples—english and french, exemplified by my own Gaelic Brethern in Cape Breton and Les Canadiens of Quebec, the descendants of Canada's first European settlers. This double heritage is reflected in our official bilingualism. To this rich heritage have been added all of the more recent elements of our mosaic, peoples who have been encouraged and helped to retain their own manifold cultural traditions.

• (2040)

This demography, this special mosaic, this diversity which all of these peoples brought and continue to bring to our vast land, this deliberate diversity so characteristic of Canada, has also meant that communications and other cultural links have a special importance in binding our nation together.

Today Canada is as well a proud member of both the Commonwealth of English-speaking nations and of the more recent la francophonie, an arrangement unique in the world which brings us into close association with over 100 other nations.

[Translation]

Our Government achieved an historic breakthrough in its relations with Quebec by recognizing the need for continued dialogue. Thus decisions affecting communications and culture are taken in a spirit of collaboration and good will, a spirit which only our government has established in relations between Ottawa and Quebec.

[English]

There is as well our record of government support for cultural instruments through creation of cultural agencies, support programs, regulations and tax measures. These have played a vital role in stimulating and sustaining Canadian cultural achievement. Our negotiators are making this clear to the Americans. These institutions, quite frankly, are sacrosanct. So, too, is our sovereign ability to enact new or different measures as changing domestic circumstances warrant. We are doing just that as a Government because since this Government's term in office, even before the beginning of the negotiations, my predecessor in this Department and I have been engaged in developing proposals to strengthen virtually every aspect of the cultural sector.

I would like to remind the House of these initiatives. First, in introducing the Investment Canada Act we provided special review procedures to apply to business activities related to Canada's cultural heritage or national identity.

Second, there is a new publishing policy which seeks to increase the Canadian share of the industry both through Investment Canada guidelines and through the new book publishing industry development program, as well as increased funding for the Canada Council.

Third, there is a new feature film production and distribution fund and an additional fund for dubbing and subtitling. This will assist the Canadian feature film industry to produce films and videos for Canadian audiences for exhibition in commercial cinemas.

Four, there is a program for sound recording design to assist the Canadian recording industry in production and marketing of musical programs and products.

Five, we have increased funding for the Canada Council to allow wider access to the performing arts across Canada and to help stabilize the financial situation of arts companies.

Six, we introduced payments for Public Lending Right, a program to compensate Canadian authors for library lending of their works. I may say the first payments are being made tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Seven, we designated a special fund for both libraries and public archives to enhance their efficiency and accessibility in their respective fields.

[Translation]

Eighth, we have taken new steps regarding French-language television. We recognize the distinctivness of the French-language broadcasting system and the need for specific policies tailored to its particular realities.

The Government places great importance on improving choice on French-language broadcasting for Canadians both inside and outside of Quebec.

This is the rationale behind our involvement on an international level in TV5, whose programs are broadcast to Europe and Africa, and, on a Canadian level, in La Chaîne française of TVOntario.

[English]

Nine, we have made a commitment to introduce legislation shortly which will provide for federal Government licensing of films and videos imported into Canada. This will help ensure that Canada is treated as a separate national film and video market. I must point out that although the problems associated with film distribution have been around since the 1920s, we are the first Government to take action on this matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Ten, we commissioned the Caplan-Sauvageau report which will help us chart the future course of Canadian broadcasting. We applaud the emphasis in this report on strengthening Canadian programming and we will be moving on many of the recommendations shortly.

Eleven, the Government is preparing legislation for revision of the Copyright Act which dates back to 1924. The legislation will further protect the status of the artist and creator in Canada.

All of these initiatives have a central theme: To ensure the availability of a diversity of quality Canadian products by assisting Canadian creators, fostering the development of vigorous Canadian cultural industries, and improving the access of ordinary Canadians to their own cultural goods and services.

No clearer evidence could be provided of our Government's commitment to nurturing Canadian culture than these moves. No less important to that nurturing is ensuring our country's economic prosperity. That is what the trade negotiations are intended to do. Canada's economy and Canada's identity will continue to grow together. We can strengthen both by encouraging Canadian industries to become more competitive within a North American context. What we are talking about is a commercial arrangement, not political union or cultural assimilation. We are looking for an agreement which will inspire business confidence and help this country prosper. By increasing our wealth and by putting our economic relationship with the U.S. on a more secure footing, we will improve our ability to make choices, and the ability to choose is the very essence of nationhood and independence.

We have chosen to keep matters relating to our cultural identity out of these negotiations. My colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), had this to say in the House just last Thursday.

No one has expressed more clearly than has the Prime Minister that Canada's cultural identity and the instruments of achieving it are not the subject of discussion in the free trade talks. The Conservative Government is not discussing those subjects at the negotiating table.

As the Prime Minister has said repeatedly, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has said, as the Minister for International Trade has said, and as I have said throughout these debates, our cultural institutions and the instruments are sacrosanct and so is our sovereign ability to act on their behalf.

Commercial negotiations and a trade agreement with the United States will not weaken our sovereignty or our identity. Certainly no one on this side of the House believes that. On the contrary, what we are doing is an assertion of our sovereignty in an increasingly interdependent world. We demonstrate our confidence that we can be as productive, innovative, ingenious and efficient as our American neighbours.

I listened to the Leaders of the opposition Parties this morning. Sadly, what I heard was not leadership. Leadership demands that we seize this opportune moment, leadership such as that being provided by the Prime Minister of the country and the Conservative Party. I am proud, Sir, that it is the Progressive Conservative Party, the Party which founded this country, which dares to move this country into the 21st century, the Party which dares to act boldly for the future of Canadians.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a comment and ask the Hon. Minister a question. I would like to compliment her on the speech she has just made. It was certainly appropriate in its style and content for a Minister of Communications. I especially welcome her reference to the projected trade agreement offering protection to our cultural industries because, by strengthening the economy, surely we are going to generate the surplus wealth without which we cannot have a viable culture. Without having the surplus wealth required for universities, art galleries, museums, symphony orchestras and all the rest, how can we possibly have the culture which so many of our critics say is threatened by the projected trade agreement?

I would like to question the Minister on a point on which she adumbrated very briefly; namely, the possibilities that open up to our cultural industries. She spoke of how, by the trade agreement, our various industries can show that they can compete, not only within our country but in the United States and North America as a whole. Can she elaborate for us on some of the ways that this agreement will make it possible for our cultural industries to find scope beyond that which they have ever had before?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the cultural industries in this country have been growing. I know that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) laughs at that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am just minding my business, Flora.

Miss MacDonald: Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, there are a quarter of a million Canadians who are employed in the cultural industries throughout Canada. That has increased in recent years. In this regard we are funding new areas such as book publishing, film and video production, and sound recording. That we are in so many ways putting new moneys into new agencies to help with the development of these industries means that there is greater strength to tackle the competition in the world abroad.

I mentioned that we are competing in an increasingly interdependent world. The Leader of the Opposition shakes his head. I have to tell him that Canadians are doing well in the cultural industries. Canadians are making films which are being envied throughout other countries. Canadian writers are competing for the top prizes in the world. Canadian developers and creators are making their mark in so many ways. We want that to continue. We believe that in building the cultural industries and strengthening them here at home, as new trading opportunities open so will the opportunities for our creators and our artists.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief comment on the Minister's speech and that given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today. The Minister said that we are getting great leadership from the Conservative Party. I have a press article from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of November 5, 1985. Press releases were quoted quite extensively today, but I noticed that this one was not. This is a quote from a great Conservative by the name of Robert Stanfield. The headline reads: "Stanfield says free trade will have political price". It reads:

> The Conservative government wants a freer trade deal with the United States but former party leader Robert Stanfield said Thursday such an agreement would reduce the power of federal and provincial governments and hurt individuals and communities.
> —Stanfield emphasized "that we would pay a political price for a free trade treaty".

He is talking about sovereignty there, not apolitical sovereignty. The article continues:

> "Individuals and communities would be hurt," he said.
> Exceptions that may be included in any treaty cannot be expected to protect all industries and institutions that require protection to flourish, he said.
> "We would limit our choice as to the role our governments could play in our economy."
> A trade deal which reduced or eliminated trade barriers would restrict regional, provincial and national economic policies, he said.
> "There would still be a large role for governments to play, but our current free-wheeling policy of grants, favorable loans and preferences would presumably be restricted.

He went on to say:

> "Increased exposure to the discipline of the North American market might further limit our freedom of choice".

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that, George?

Mr. Henderson: One of the former leaders of the Progressive Conservative Party, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, whom that Member worked under for some time. He is well respected. I could go on and tell you what Fred McCain—or Harrison McCain of McCain Foods is saying about free trade in Atlantic Canada. I know the Prime Minister knows who I am talking about when I say Harrison McCain rather than Fred McCain.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What did Fred say? Did Fred say anything? That's what I want to know.

Mr. Axworthy: Where is Fred?

Mr. Henderson: Whatever Fred said, it's noticeable by his absence.

I would like to get a few comments from the Minister with regard to those statements by the Hon. Robert Stanfield who is a great Canadian who served Nova Scotia well as a Premier. He understands the political and regional situations in Canada. The Prime Minister said today that Atlantic Canada is going to have to depend on free trade to reduce its unemployment. I think he would like to change that statement a bit. I cannot see any great benefits in free trade for the area from which I come. When I talk to milk producers and other farmers in Prince Edward Island they also tell me that they do not see any great benefits in free trade. I think the Prime Minister should look at some other ways. If it means that we will lose regional incentives we will be in serious shape in Atlantic Canada and it will be to the detriment of this Government and, unfortunately, of the poor people in Atlantic Canada who will have to live by any agreement that the Government might negotiate.

• (2100)

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that he has spoken to certain people in Prince Edward Island. I suggest that he talk to the Premier of Prince Edward Island to find out where he stands on this issue.

Let me also say to him that Robert Stanfield, as Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, as Leader of the Opposition in this House, can never be accused of being a little Canadian, which is more than I can say of the people sitting opposite in this House. Mr. Stanfield needs no defence from me.

Mr. Axworthy: You are too busy working for the CIC.

Miss MacDonald: I have been waiting for someone to raise that. The Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has raised the fact that I was a founding member of the Committee for an Independent Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: How things have changed.

Miss MacDonald: I may say with some pride that I have a letter from the current President of the Council of Canadians in which he says: "On behalf of the board of governors and the executive and members of the Council of Canadians I would like to congratulate you for your recent announcement as to your position relating to new broadcasting facilities for Canada".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: The President is Mel Hurtig.

Mr. Axworthy: What does he say about free trade, Flora?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am sure there are grounds for tremendous positive conversation on the basis of that letter from Mr. Hurtig to the Minister. I must say, listening to the Hon. Minister, that I felt a great sense of disappointment. I fear that the ghost of Sir John A. Macdonald will rise from her constituency of Kingston and The Islands to haunt her tonight and haunt her in the future as the country which she should be serving is being hurt so badly by this agreement.

I want to ask the Minister some precise questions about cultural sovereignty. First, is the Minister prepared to give some commitment to the House, which no other Minister has been prepared to give, that cross-border advertising restrictions will be kept in place?

Second, is the Minister prepared to say that advertisement restrictions on Canadian companies advertising in U.S. magazines will be kept in place?

Third, will CRTC regulations with respect to Canadian content on radio be kept in place?

Fourth, is she prepared to say that Canadian publishing restrictions will be kept in place given the recent statement made to the First Ministers that investment was now being made part of the demands from the United States for greater freedom?

Finally, will she comment on a statement from perhaps the greatest Conservative philosopher that this country has produced, namely George Grant, who told our joint Senate and House of Commons committee:

> Out of a kind of unity which does not overcome disparity there comes a country with its own ethos, what we call the Canadian ethos. This surely would be radically put in question by economic unity, even more than it is at present. Canadians, even more than they do at the moment, would simply come to see themselves as part of a great continental machine over which they had no control.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that it took the Hon. Member so long to come to the question. We have been saying for some time in the House and elsewhere that Canada's culture and cultural instruments are sacrosanct and are not in negotiation.

The Hon. Member wants to know about a list of items. Broadcasting and publishing are referred to in Bill C-58. Those are the cultural instruments that are not on the table for negotiation. I thought he had understood that a long time ago, as most Canadians understood it. However, I will repeat for him that those are not for negotiation.

If he would like me to talk about Doctor George Grant, the author of Lament for a Nation, who saw what was happening under a former Government, I would be glad to do so. I am a great admirer of Doctor Grant and know him well. I also know that we are protecting the soul of Canada and no one will be able to take that away.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: We happen to believe that there are Canadians who will rise to the challenge of the moment and that there are Canadians who can be called "the little Canadians", or "the small Canadians". They are the Canadians who doubt and fear. I am tired of listening to comments coming from that side of the House that show how little faith they have in this country. We believe in this country and in its future. We will be here to protect it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This must be the fifteenth time that government Members such as the Minister have accused members of the Opposition of lack of faith in Canada.

Mr. Forrestall: Sit down.

Mr. Langdon: Lack of faith in Canada is a serious accusation and one that we reject absolutely. Lack of faith in the Government is what we have.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. The Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) on debate.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister accused people on this side of the House of lacking faith in Canada and said that she believed this is why we are refusing to accept the Government's set of initiatives in beginning negotiations with the United States. These negotiations began as an enhancement of trade, a comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement, and they have changed quite rapidly until we are not absolutely sure what the House is dealing with after listening to government Members attempt to explain it in the last two years.

We can only have an idea of what is happening by examining the results of the negotiations and the actions that have taken place thus far. We can only get an idea of what will happen by examining the American reaction and their interpretation of the negotiations.

Perhaps I am not a great optimist by nature. I have made my living as a farmer in the Prairies. Most people believe farmers must be optimists, but we are living in an area in which farmers have less than a 50 per cent chance of making a living. My family has survived for three generations, not because we were optimists or pessimists but because we were realists. When we sat down to organize ourselves for the next year or the next five years, we used all the data which was at hand and looked at all the probabilities and decided whether or not we were likely to be able to make it with that particular policy thrust. I think the Government has failed to do that, particularly in relation to agriculture. I am going to restrict most of my remarks to what it has or has not done in agriculture because I think the Government has, first of all, misread the big picture. I think it has used a reality which may have existed when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was a little boy singing songs for some of his American friends, but which no longer exists. The Prime Minister's mind still seems to see an America which is a growing world power, and one would do very well to tie onto its coat-tails. He still thinks it is a growing, vibrant economy. The facts do not indicate that. What we see is an American economy which is still the leader in the western world financially, and it has used its dollar to maintain that position. However, we are seeing an America that has an ever-increasing trade deficit. It has not been able to produce enough goods and services for export to offset what has become a growing, continuing and accelerating trade deficit. The Prime Minister has not recognized the increasing budgetary deficits or the government spending in that country which has taken off as well at an accelerated rate. Within the next year or two, it is expected to be in effect living off its external investments. It will be relying totally on foreign investment and foreign debt to keep its economy from floundering completely.

That is not exactly the kind of economy one would hook one's star to. It is not the kind of partnership that I would make if I were a farmer. That would not be the kind of neighbour I would hook myself on to if I wanted to pull myself through a tough spell.

Why have we decided that the United States is the place to go? We should have known, and the Prime Minister could have known had he or his officials looked at the record, that the United States has been declining in agricultural trade as well. It has had a decline since 1981 when it exported $44 billion worth of agricultural products. It declined to something like $29 billion worth of agricultural products in 1986. That is a decline over that period of five years of $15 billion, as a result of a strong U.S. dollar, relative to other currencies, in its attempt to maintain itself as a pre-eminent economy in the West, and I have to say it, looking at it quite dispassionately, due to a less efficient and effective grain marketing system. Because it is not as efficient and effective it has lost markets and has run up a trade deficit in agricultural products. That should have been visible to the Prime Minister. When he made the initial proposal that we begin a comprehensive bilateral trade arrangement or begin talks on such an arrangement with the United States, he should have been aware that the Americans were quite worried about their declining role in agricultural trade. He should have looked at our trade in agriculture vis-a-vis the United States.

Contrary to the big picture the Government is always trying to put before the people of Canada and the opposition Parties, we have a trade deficit with the United States. It sells us more goods in agriculture than we sell it. It is a fairly hefty negative trade balance, running between $1 billion and $2 billion per year. If we look at our over-all trade exports to the United States of all commodities, we see we exported almost $83 billion in 1984, which is the last year for which I have firm figures. That year we shipped the United States $2.2 billion worth of agricultural products, or less than 2 per cent of our shipments to the United States were agricultural products. The United States shipped to us some $68.5 billion worth of commodities, $3.6 billion of which were agricultural commodities, or just over 5 per cent of the total trade with us, leaving a total trade deficit for our country of about $1.4 billion.

Here we are, a very small country, one tenth or one eleventh the size of the United States in terms of economy, offering to start a free trade arrangement with, at the beginning, all things on the table. What does that mean in terms of Canadian agriculture? I have looked around for a number of studies and I found one which was done by Professor Warley at the Agricultural College in Guelph. He is not a New Democrat. He is known to be a fairly good big C, small c Conservative who did an analysis of what Canadian agriculture could expect from a free trade discussion or discussions on enhanced trade.

I want to run through his assessment very quickly. Professor Warley said with regard to horticultural crops that Canadian farmers could expect from enhanced free trade talks a loss of the protection now accorded by the seasonal tariffs which protect us from being swamped with product which comes to the market ahead of ours because our season is later. We could expect an end to the prohibition of consignment selling which now assists to regulate the flow of the product into Canada, and we could expect restrictions on the use of bulk containers.

As well, we could almost certainly expect, according to Dr. Warley, an erosion of the power of some of the boards in their ability to negotiate or set prices for fruits and vegetables. Professor Warley tells us that with respect to the dairy industry, which is so important to central Canada, as well as important right across the country, we can expect a reduction in prices in Canada, for fluid milk producers of between 20 per cent and 40 per cent as Canadian prices attempt to harmonize with the prices in the U.S. border states. He says we can expect a corresponding loss of investment value in the Canadian fluid milk industry of about $1.5 billion. We can just write off that investment value because the value of the investment will drop by that much. He thinks that we can look forward to an end to supply management which attempted very successfully in Canada to match production to the demand in Canada.

With regard to industrial milk, he says we can look for prices to fall at least 20 per cent to the lower U.S. support levels, and we can look for a loss of investment in the industrial milk industry of $3.5 billion. I fail to understand how a loss of investment value in the dairy community of over $5 billion can be good for Canada, can create jobs or can be at all useful to our particular situation in this country. When Professor Warley turned his attention to the effects of enhanced trade to poultry meats and egg production, he said we can expect prices in Canada to fall by about 25 per cent. He thought that we could expect the value of quotas alone to drop by $1 billion. When we look at the assessments done by the egg producers of the country we see that their most optimistic projection is that about 47.5 per cent of egg farmers would be at risk and that the Canadian industry would lose between 1,300 and 1,500 producers. The number of producers would go from two-thirds to three-quarters of present producers. The egg industry would lose an additional $90 million to $100 million worth of economic activity each year, and there would be a loss of between 2,100 and 2,300 jobs.

Why would this happen? It would happen because Canada would be expected to meet the level of prices that exist just across the border. We would not lose the industry because of its inefficiencies. Canadian egg farmers are already more productive than their American counterparts. They are able to produce 1 per cent more eggs than the Americans. They have a 2 per cent advantage over U.S. producers in terms of the amount of feed required to produce one dozen eggs. On the bottom line real productive efficiency does not matter. On the bottom line cost is cost and if U.S. product comes to the market at a cost of 25 per cent less, then that will become the price for Canada, if we have the type of open border and unrestricted access to each other's markets that are being touted in the Government's proposal.

I would now like to deal with wine producers. It is quite clear that when one reads the American papers and what they expect to happen from free trade talks one will see that they are saying that they should have access to the Canadian market for wines and that they would "whomp" us, to use a word that is not in the dictionary, in that market. They would take over an additional $6 million to $7 million of our wine industry, not to mention some $100 million worth of other beverages in the beer and soft drink industries, if they could gain unrestricted access to our markets. Because the time is short I will not go into the number of jobs that would be lost in the Canadian agriculture and food industry. Suffice it to say that the losses would be very high indeed.

In the grain business there is not very much trade between our two countries. Canada is one of the major competitors of the United States in terms of international trade in this industry. What Professor Warley expects the Americans to be asking for, and what in fact has come out in some of the discussions and the position papers put forward by the Americans, is an erosion of the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board in Canada and a reduction of the Canadian Grain Commission's ability to set standards for quality in wheats, oats and barley, and the other major grains and oilseeds, in an effort for the Americans to be able to compete. Rather than bring themselves up to our standards they appear to want to bring us down to their rather low standards in these negotiations. So when we sell to foreign competitors, if the Americans were to have their way, no longer would we be able to guarantee the quality of a shipload of grain. If the buyer was dissatisfied, then recompense would be made. We would be expected to move to the type of system which the Americans use and abuse daily. It is the main reason they have lost something in the order of $15 billion in terms of agricultural sales. It is because they do not have a system of maintaining quality.

Mr. McDermid: If you think we would deal our system away, you're crazy.

Mr. Althouse: I have read the position as stated by the American trade representative as to what they expect to get from this particular trading negotiation. The Canadian negotiators and members of the front bench of the House of Commons have said that everything is on the table and that, in fact, they can put those items on the trade table for discussion.

Since the Americans feel that they are already being put upon in the agricultural sector and because they now have, and have had, a positive trade balance with Canada, and see Canada as one place where they can expand that trade balance, we are quite convinced, as is any objective observer, that they will be continuing to press for agricultural items to be on the table and for further access to our market. It is not just my opinion but the opinion of Professor Warley of the University of Guelph.

With respect to the area of livestock and meat trade, there is some possibility that Canada would continue to have a positive export in those particular sectors. We have had good access to their markets, prior to the commencement of the trade negotiations, I might add. Since the enhanced trade talks have begun, in areas in which we did have free trade on an agreement basis for as long as 40 or 50 years we have lost ground.

Prior to the initiation of the talks almost 80 per cent of the goods and services that trade back and forth across our borders were free of any financial or other trade impediment. However, two years after the summit at which the talks were initiated, thanks to the actions taken with respect to live hogs, saltfish and softwood lumber, we are now approaching 70 per cent of trade between our two nations without financial impediment. This is what Progressive Conservatives call progress!

We have gone from 80 per cent free trade down to 70 per cent free trade. It is my personal opinion that the Government has been looking at the wrong aspect of our trade relations. I think it has not put on the table at all the question of dispute settlement. Nearly 80 per cent of our products were moving free of any impediment before these so-called talks began. The main problem we had was one of how to cope with the actions of the International Trade Commission under the U.S. Department of Commerce. That quasi-judicial body is able to act must faster than is any similar body in Canada. The activities of that body have been increased because of protectionist sentiment by agricultural producers—in fact, all producers—in the United States, as they witness their deteriorating position vis-à-vis the rest of the world in terms of world trade. We find ourselves being constantly dragged before this court at the behest of American producers. Even though we have gone through the process and proven ourselves to be free of any subsidies, or any other problems, they continue to bring us back. Softwood lumber is just one case in point. We proved three or four years ago that we did not have an unwarranted amount of subsidy lying in the method of calculating stumpage fees. We were brought before the ITC just recently. In fact, the Government negotiated away our position and has brought us down to the point where close to 70 per cent of our commodities are trading free of any financial impediments, as opposed to the 80 per cent level at which we started.

The motion before us is an attempt for the Government to mollify people who have looked at this situation realistically and carefully, as I have and as my colleagues have. The Government is attempting to tell us that it would never allow full and open discussion on the question of protecting our sovereignty on social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry and our unique cultural identity. Because of the large majority in the House the motion will pass. There are 208 Conservative Members who will make certain that it passes. The Government will take this as its reason for continuing the talks.

The motion may pass, but Canadians will not believe that their culture, their agriculture, their social programs and their unique identity is safe.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I sat here and listened to the debate this entire day.

Mr. Gauthier: We noticed.

Mr. McDermid: I am glad the Member noticed. I want to read a couple of paragraphs into the record, which I think may explain why the Liberals are in so much trouble today, from The Citizen for March 14, 1987. Referring to the Liberals we read:

> But they are hamstrung by the fact that two years after Mulroney first raised the idea of opening free trade talks with the Americans and nearly four months after their convention they still don't have a free trade policy on which the caucus is united.
> Turner has had to appoint a committee of MPs to burn the midnight oil over the weekend, attempting to come up with a position—

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to raise a point of order when I like what the Member is saying about the Liberals, but I am not sure his point is relevant. I understood that comments were to be relevant to the remarks of the previous speaker. I am afraid I did not, unfortunately, refer to the Liberals at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member will make his remarks relevant. If not, they will be out of order.

Mr. McDermid: I will get to the Member in half a second if I can just finish this one sentence. The article continues:

> —with a position for Monday's debate that doesn't make them the butt of jokes.

Obviously the Liberals are the butt of the jokes today. The motion looks as if it were put together by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who is for free trade. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) is against free trade, the right hon. gentleman is for both of them. That is exactly what it looks like.

To get to my hon. friend who has just finished his speech, I can tell you, Sir, that he quoted all the Americans and what they want. He was spreading fear among the agricultural industry. He did not say anything about what our Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) said today and the stand he took or the stand the Government is taking in these negotiations. He talked about what the Americans want. Negotiations go both ways. That is what they are all about. The Member talked about increased protectionism. That is right. There is increased protectionism and that is exactly why the Government has undertaken these negotiations. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) saw protectionism coming and wanted to do something about it. He wanted to protect the markets we have. The Member talked about the disappearance of the free trade market that we had for so long. It is not disappearing because of these negotiations, not at all. These negotiations were brought in to stop protectionism in the United States and to get a bilateral agreement that will make sense and be good for Canadians.

I have a question for the Hon. Member. New Democrats have gone across this country fear-mongering on many issues. They started way back with the Auto Pact some 20 years ago. They said it would never work, that we will lose thousands of jobs. Up until the late 1970s their Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), wanted to renegotiate the Auto Pact. Now he has changed his tune. He said it would lose thousands of jobs back then. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) delivered his financial statement in 1984, the New Democrats said that it would cost Canada 100,000 jobs. We all know that 700,000 new jobs have been created since that financial statement. Then the New Democrats said that about 5,000 jobs would be lost because of the shakes and shingles issue. We all know what happened. That industry is almost working at full force again. Then the New Democrats said we would lose 17,000 jobs because of the softwood lumber issue. We knew that was phoney. It was fear-mongering. Why should Canadians listen to the New Democratic Party when it throws up all these scare tactics? New Democratic rhetoric has been abysmal.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that may lie in a couple of the assumptions which the Hon. Member has made. He began by saying that the Government has not lost ground because of negotiations. I will take him at his word there. If we have lost ground, it is because of the action of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney). We lost free trade on softwood lumber, saltfish and live hogs. Granted it was perhaps not due to the negotiations, but it certainly was due to the actions or inactions of front-bench Ministers.

Mr. McDermid: That is the reason for having negotiations.

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member said that is the reason for having negotiations. From my observations, given the activity and track record of the front bench having already lost live hogs, saltfish, softwood lumber, raspberries and a few other things, I do not feel very confident as a producer or a representative of producers in Canada knowing that that front bench is doing the negotiating for me and knowing that the economy it is negotiating with is at least 10 or 12 times as large as Canada. When I am faced not only with a smaller bargaining position but with incompetent people, I find myself feeling very uncomfortable.

Mr. Ravis: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to making a few comments to the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) who is not only my Saskatchewan colleague but my neighbouring constituent. I listened attentively for 20 minutes while he spoke. He was true to form. I do not like being so partisan, but his comments were typical of the debate that goes on here in the House. In the whole 20 minutes, my colleague from Humboldt—Lake Centre could not find something positive or balanced to say about enhancing our trade or securing trade for Saskatchewan farmers. He himself farms and understands just how serious is the situation that all farmers are facing today.

I had the privilege of attending the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities convention in Saskatoon with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) just a few days ago. Fifteen hundred delegates were there. They understood when the Minister of Agriculture spoke that the situation today in agriculture is very serious and possibly it is one of the areas where we can see a bit of light in the pipe in terms of trying to secure some markets down the road.

I want to go back to something the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said this morning, namely, that Canada has two choices. We can turn inward and watch our standard of living decline or we can reach out and compete with the rest of the world to raise our living standard. If there is one thing that Saskatchewan farmers understand, it is achieving higher productivity every year in order to stay alive. Prices have been coming down, and to keep afloat, they have increased productivity.

How much consideration will my colleague give when he goes back to meet some of his constituents in Saskatchewan and others in terms of the problems we have today with potash, the hog countervail of which he is aware, with steel and uranium? All of these things are irritants across the border. I would suggest that a Member from Saskatchewan who is a farmer and very familiar with these commodities and minerals should be giving some consideration to negotiating these items as opposed to taking the negative attitude and trying to kick the Americans in the shins.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had listened as carefully as he said he had, he would have caught the answer. Perhaps if he understood something about trading in commodities and trading with the Americans he would also have caught the sense of what my speech was about.

• (2140)

As I tried to make clear in my speech, the problem we have with the Americans is the problem of settling trade disputes. We have had this problem as long as I can remember.

I spent quite a bit of my life trying to trade in beef and pork with the Americans. We had a hog marketing agency set up to send sides into Los Angeles and San Francisco. As soon as we began to be effective and successful, we could not get across the border for various reasons.

Mr. Ravis: That is precisely why we are doing this.

Mr. Althouse: My friend should know that we had a free trade agreement—and it has been written out for a long time—on red meat including pork and beef. The agreement was not worth the paper it was written on when one became serious about putting products into their market.

It had to be inspected. For a while that is what it was. There had to be veterinarian inspectors, which made sense. One cannot argue with the health regulations of another country. However, one could not find a veterinarian inspector in any of the points along the border from Regina to Vancouver. One was visiting his mother-in-law and another one had a sick grandmother. One could phone ahead but could not find a place at which to get cool meat, in 80 degree weather, across the border and down to San Francisco. They were retaliating. It was some argument about a totally different commodity in Washington.

What we needed to do, if we were to solve the problem, was to sit down and discuss the ITC proposal or method. We needed some form of joint resolution of the problem, and that would have been the first logical step to solving it.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) offered to the President to trade everything or made everything available as an incentive in that part of the talks. It was not logical and will not work.

We have not really seriously put forward a dispute settling proposal, such as a joint committee like the IJC for settling boundary disputes. We have not even put that on the table. How can we get serious about solving anything if we do not attack the problem where the problem lies?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the debate. I want to sum up and reiterate some of the points which were made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), by my cabinet colleagues, and by members on this side of the House in their interventions.

I would also ask that we might be able to challenge Hon. Members opposite to reconsider the position they have taken today. I was in opposition for some years. I understand the role of Opposition. It is to criticize, to give alternatives, and to give what the Opposition might feel is an alternate plan. However, there is another role to opposition. It is at certain junctures in the history of a country to take responsibility for catching a vision which is sometimes larger than the partisan views with which we come to the House. When a person is faced with indisputable facts, sometimes decisions must be taken, decisions which are in the best interests of the country rather than in the shorter term interest either of debate or politics.

I am proud to be a member of the Ministry and to follow the vision, courage, and dedication shown by the Prime Minister to pursue this difficult issue. It is a difficult issue. I should like to quote what the Prime Minister told the House in September, 1985, at the outset of these negotiations. He said: "International negotiations are complex and extremely challenging. Success is not a sure thing but the results of success are well worth the enormous good faith required for the negotiations".

When we embarked upon these negotiations a year and a half ago, we set three basic objectives. If Canadians, regardless of political background or regional interest, examined these objectives, I believe they would have to accept them as valid.

First, we wanted to secure our access to the United States market through new rules and procedures limiting the protectionist effect of trade remedy laws. Everyone in the House can rail against the protectionist sentiment now resident in the United States. We know the issues. However, having railed against the sentiment, surely it now behooves all of us to come to the negotiating table to try to remove that sentiment and come to an understanding between the two nations which have the largest trade between them in the world.

We wanted a clearer definition of trade distorting practices so as to reduce the threat of countervail. We also wanted to enhance our access to the United States market through more open entry to United States federal and state government procurement markets and broad trade liberalization. We wanted trade liberalization in an orderly manner through the elimination of tariffs, quotas, and other non-trade barriers over a reasonable period of time.

I think anyone who examines those propositions would accept that not only are they timely but they are in the best interests of Canada and in the interest of the trading relationship which exists between our two countries.

We wanted to enshrine our access to the United States market through a strong dispute settlement mechanism which would provide fair, expeditious, and conclusive solutions to differences of view and practice. We know that this must be done. In fact during the debate today a number of Members of the House have so said.

We also wanted institutional and other provisions which would maintain Canadian independence of action in areas of national endeavours. For example, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) touched upon those issues tonight.

We also wanted a lasting agreement which would enshrine our mutual obligation and accommodate differences in our two governmental systems. Our two governmental systems are different. Our societies are different. That being the case, that is why, despite those differences, we have come together over the years, because of geography and a common love for democracy, as two independent peoples.

However, we have developed a relationship which goes beyond trade and goes beyond the relationship of government to government or between institutions.

It also deals with people. People inside and outside the House have friends and business acquaintances across the 49th. They know that it is those relationships as well which augment the national interest in trade. When we speak about the relationship, it goes well beyond simply a document, however important a document might be. I think it goes to the very root of what we see ourselves as a nation and how we see ourselves in the larger world, especially including our relationship to the United States.

These objectives have been pursued for the better part of a year and the bargaining has been hard. However, Canadian interest has been pressed and it has been understood. The hard bargaining is continuing.

I appreciate when the Opposition—and I have done it myself from time to time—says: "Give us more facts, give us more details". All of us who have done some negotiation recognize that while more details are often desired, and possibly we would even want to put forward more details at this point in time, it is in keeping with what the Prime Minister said today that we cannot and should not, in the Canadian interest or in the national interest, put forward details in public respecting negotiations that are taking place right now. One trusts the process, trusts the negotiators, and has confidence in one's position. That is the basis upon which one comes to the bargaining table.

At the beginning of the bargaining process last June, the Prime Minister asked how we would achieve those goals. He said that he would propose to the Americans a commercial deal which, when fully implemented, would erase the border as a factor in commercial transactions between Canadians and Americans. Today the Prime Minister told the House that we are on course, that we are meeting our objectives, that all the issues are now seriously engaged, and that we are negotiating a broad and comprehensive agreement addressing the key issues facing Canada as a leader and international trader. He also said that if the United States and Canada succeed, we will be an example to the world.

I believe that to be the case. I am convinced tonight that we can and we will succeed. We have the will as a people. We have the commitment to succeed, as I believe does the United States. Together I believe we will forge an agreement which is mutually enriching, what some would call a win-win agreement. That is the only kind of agreement in which we are interested and the only kind of agreement that has long-term stability. It is an agreement that has the support of the country. The House has heard my colleagues refer to the many prominent Canadians who have urged the Government to negotiate. I will not go through the list of these people but they have done their homework and are of the view that a new trading arrangement with the United States is in Canada's best interest.

We do not want just any trade agreement. The kind of trade agreement being negotiated by the Government under the leadership of the Prime Minister is one that is comprehensive and establishes clear rules. It eliminates remaining barriers to trade and will resolve disputes quickly and equitably. It is one that will be phased in gradually and fairly and will stimulate healthy growth and investment.

Our critics do not share this vision. They have raised fears and have expressed surprise that trade negotiations are about removing barriers to trade. I must ask them where they have been in the last two years. We have harnessed the trade negotiations to meet the pressing and urgent problems of economic renewal and to create the jobs opportunities and confidence which is so necessary if economic renewal is to take place.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) has clearly spelled out why Canadian business supports the negotiations. My other colleagues including the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Communications, have all put forward very specific trade negotiation goals for their areas of responsibility.

The person who last spoke on behalf of the NDP referred primarily to agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) showed us that the farmers' interests are being pursued with vigour in these negotiations and at the GATT talks. We all know that there must be protection through marketing boards, but we also know that with the productivity of Canadian farmers and with a domestic market of 25 million people, we must expand the market. It has always been thus.

Perhaps I might talk about my own region for just a moment. When the West was opened up, the very first thing we had to do was to find international markets. In Red River as long ago as the 1850s, there was already a trading arrangement with St. Paul and Minneapolis. Why was this? It was because that was where the markets were and that was where the access to the outside world was. What we are speaking of today is not something new but an enhancement of and building upon that which has built this country.

My colleagues have all demonstrated that what our critics are doing is not much more than erecting straw men. After they have erected these straw men, they launch forward to destroy them, to destroy an enemy that is the creation of their own fertile imaginations and nothing more. They insist, for instance, that Americans want to change our social policies and that the social safety net of support for families with dependent children, for medical and hospital insurance, for pensions and for unemployment insurance is negotiable. This is irresponsible nonsense. It is scare-mongering and, to put it charitably, it is not true.

No matter how often we say it, no matter how often we reconfirm it and no matter how often we in the House say that we are Honourable Members and accept each other's word, they keep raising these things in the very opposite context to that which I have referred. They should use their debating techniques and their points of view, but they should use them with a basis in fact and not with a basis in fear-mongering among those Canadians who are most vulnerable. No matter what our partisan views are, that is irresponsible and should not continue.

I say as Minister of National Health and Welfare that our social programs are a fundamental part of the fabric of Canadian society. They constitute the basic entitlement of every Canadian. Social programs are a fundamental part of our way of life. They have not been discussed by either Canada or the United States and they will not be discussed at the negotiating table. I hope that is understood. To put it simply, Canada's social programs are not on the table. Those who say they are are engaging in mischief.

There are differences between how Canada and the United States organize their social safety nets. Priorities differ. However, we each devote a little over 20 per cent of our Gross National Product to the full range of social programs: health, education, welfare, pensions and unemployment insurance. In each country, about 15 per cent of personal income comes in the form of government transfer payments to persons. Some fear that the level playing field in trade relations about which the Americans like to talk would result in some serious diminution in the extent and quality of social programs. If they are not bargained away in a trade agreement, and they will not be, our critics say that they will be eroded thereafter through what is termed policy harmonization.

Let us look at what happened in the European Economic Community. When Britain joined the European Community, it was obligated to harmonize its pensions with those of the other countries. That did not diminish the social policies and benefits of the United Kingdom's pensioners but gave them the full rights and benefits to which they had contributed. We do not yet have an agreement with England but we have one with the United States and we should build on those kinds of arrangements. Our social policies are not at risk and they are not on the table.

To a degree, such a process is going on all the time as a function of world-wide market forces. I say to Hon. Members opposite that the social policies of Canada were created by our experience, by our history and for our needs and purposes. We say again that they are neither on the table nor are the Americans asking them to be put on the table.

I would like to deal with issues relating to Manitoba and the Prairies. I will deal with just one fact because my time is fast diminishing. Manitoba is a province of a million people of which approximately 60 per cent live in one centre. In 1985, Manitoba exported $1.7 billion worth of goods other than grains and oil seeds of which 82 per cent went to the United States. Yes, we want to enhance our trade with Europe and with the Pacific Rim. However, I spoke earlier of indisputable facts. The indisputable fact is that every time there is a trade impediment with the United States, 82 per cent of Manitoba's trade comes under attack and is at risk. Surely any person, even though he might disagree with the process, would say that the objective is correct.

In conclusion, I think there is a larger view than the ones I have expressed so far. In Canada's history, there were certain debates which students of history would call part of our Canadian heritage. There was the debate on Canada's Confederation. There were strong differences of opinion at that time. The country was small and the population was sparse and scattered. Yet the people of the time put aside their partisan differences and created a country. We know about the national policy which created not only a railway but developed and settled the West. It is part of our heritage.

Not that many years ago, there were intensive debates in the House on the Constitution. There were different points of view on how the Constitution should be patriated, on what the amending formula should be, and on whether or not it should have a charter. That debate was intense but the Parties in the House came together and agreed in a vote that it was the right thing to do for Canada. I say today that a trade arrangement with the United States based on fairness, equity and the national interests of both countries is another one of Canada's great debates. It is necessary for us in this House to come together and bring together our various views. However, the overriding factor has to be agreement that trade prosperity is good for Canada, its youth, and its future. I hope this debate has moved every Canadian along that path.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-712, 332-721, 332-747, 332-748, 332-833, 332-834, 332-838, 332-840, 332-842, 332-883, 332-995, 332-997, 332-998, 332-1016, 332-1129 and 332-1130.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of western Canadians who are concerned about the Government's intentions to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs which they believe will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and will severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to purchase those necessary prescription drugs. The petitioners call upon the Government to reject its program to implement these proposals which will result in changes to the Patent Act.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): It is also my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to present a petition from a number of eastern Canadians who are concerned that the Government plans to deprive fishermen of their right to collect unemployment insurance. They call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to reject any recommendations that this be done and to enter into consultations with representatives of fishermen in Canada in order to improve the program offered to fishermen.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if my colleague might be kind enough to give us the date of certification on the Patent Act petition.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the date of certification on the Patent Act petition is October 1, 1986.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition certified by the Clerk of Petitions on December 15, 1986. I regret that it has taken so long to present it to the House of Commons but there have been so many petitions to present on this particular issue. I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary gave us the chance to point that out.

In their petition these Canadians have indicated their concern that the Government intends to change the Patent Act. They expect that this will result in higher costs, not only for provincial government plans, but for those people who because of their health needs are required to purchase prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. They also believe that this is yet another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States in the free trade talks at the expense of average Canadians. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase prescription drug prices for Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CANADA POST CORPORATION PLAN

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour to present to the House hundreds of petitions from various regions all over the country, denouncing the new corporate plan of the Canada Post Corporation that creates two classes of citizens with the permanent installation of superboxes in urban as well as rural areas. The petitioners state that closing rural post offices deprives citizens of a unique federal presence and reduces vital postal services in rural areas, and the raise in postal rates, particularly on second-class mail, jeopardizes the distribution of numerous weekly and regional newspapers, magazines, and so on.

Your petitioners humbly pray that Parliament will reject the plan of Canada Post and urge it to deliver mail to all Canadian citizens without distinction.

AFRICAN NATIONAL CONGRESS

Question No. 71—Mr. Blenkarn:

Does the Government support the African National Congress (ANC) and has the ANC publicly endorsed the means of assassination called "necklacing" and, if so, is it the Government's intention to continue to support the Congress?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Government does not recognize the African National Congress (ANC) or support the ANC's policy of "armed struggle" to overthrow the South African government.

The Government has contacts with the ANC because it is an important part of the opposition movement and would be part of any solution in South Africa.

To the Government's knowledge, the ANC has not publicly endorsed "necklacing".

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from March 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approve in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594).

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, it is really too bad that the very first time I have a chance to speak to the Budget, I have to admit the Budget is a big zero as far as Canadian taxpayers are concerned. When I say a big zero, I am of course referring to the quality of the Budget that was brought down and to the impact this Budget will have on the taxpayer's purse. And that is why the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), proposed the following amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "this House condemns the government for:
> —presenting a budget that increases taxes on individual Canadians for the third year in a row, totalling billions and billions of dollars;
> —widening the gap between the rich and the poor by their ill-advised and heartless fiscal policy;
> —cutting the crucial Regional Economic Development budget, for the third year in a row; and
> —once again delaying the long promised essential tax reform program thereby postponing any attempt to create more fairness in our tax system which is being eroded under the present conservative administration."

Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which will be put to a vote today, in effect condemns the policies announced and the statements made before this House by the Minister of Finance.

It is often said that the Budget is a reflection of the Government's general policies, and on February 18 there was absolutely nothing in the Budget, so I think we must ask ourselves what the policies of this Government really are.

I was astonished, disappointed and almost shocked to hear the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) tell the House that with a Budget like this one, the Conservative Government knew where it was going. I have to say the Minister of Finance certainly did nothing to help the Conservative Members and Ministers who, so far, have been trying to justify the Government's position with respect to the Budget or so-called Budget that was brought down.

We of the Liberal Party also know where the Conservative Members and Ministers opposite are going. The people of Canada are judging them and will continue to judge them in the months to come, and we know where the present Progressive Conservative caucus will be after the next general election, and it will not be in Ottawa.

Actually, one wonders about the Minister of State for Youth who seems to go to considerable lengths to accept and even praise the performance of his Minister of Finance, especially when we realize that never at any time in his response or speech on the Budget did the Minister of State for Youth mention the word "youth" or the word "young", and why should he, since the Budget contains nothing for young people. That is perhaps why the Minister has tried to publish some very interesting-looking and nicely presented booklets that unfortunately contain information that has no connection with and does not reflect the policies of a responsible Government.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has failed to live up to the promises it made in its previous Budget, the one brought down on February 26, 1986, in which the Minister of Finance said: "In my next Budget, I intend to propose further measures to reform our system of social expenditures and related tax provisions." Unfortunately, the Government appears to have reneged on this commitment to social program reform. We need merely refer to the many complaints and expressions of discontent we are receiving from people who were promised this, that and the other, and in my own riding, during the campaign before the by-election to replace my predecessor in the House of Commons, during which the Government party was promising rose gardens right and left, among others that it would be possible to make them eligible for benefits under the Program for Worker Adjustment even if this were to require some stickhandling. After the elections, unfortunately these people find themselves in a situation where they cannot possibly be eligible for such benefits, and of course they are very disappointed and furious about the attitude of the Conservative Government.

And then of course there are the great many Canadians who had been told they could apply for unemployment insurance benefits if they opted for early retirement. Particularly in our region, quite a few people did apply under this program, looking forward to early retirement because they were convinced they would be entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Many of these early retirees are quite disillusioned and upset because the Government has failed to live up to its promise.

I doubt that the average Canadian is strongly opposed to some kind of reform of social programs, but they ought to be more effective and take current conditions into consideration. Like my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), our finance critic, I think a guaranteed annual income system should have been set up long ago. We passed a resolution to that effect at our November Party convention, so we will be in a position to do something about it after the next general elections when we are called upon to form the new Government.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to recall some of the points raised by my colleague, the Opposition finance critic, in the remarks he made recently. He was referring to the gap between rich and poor Canadians after the three Conservative budgets, and he went on to single out the situation of young people. There is nothing at all in this Budget to meet the needs of unemployed youths. Nor is there anything flowing from the commitment made by the Prime Minister of Canada at last year's provincial premiers conference in Vancouver when he promised to set up a child care program. Mr. Speaker, Canadian families will just have to carry a much heavier tax load than what they have been used to this far. Mr. Speaker, does it make sense that, as a result of the 1987 Budget, a working married couple with two children should be taxed $966 more than in 1984? Or that a married couple with two children and only one breadwinner earning $30,000 be asked to pay $1,020 more than in 1984? We could go on and on like this, but such figures are so depressing that we would rather not.

As could be expected, the Government did not dare tamper with the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption because this would have been a direct blow to Party supporters.

Nor did the Government do anything about big business because, here again, the friends of the Party would have been hard hit. As I see it, any Government should make sure that companies and businesses pay their fair share of taxes. Since 1984, unfortunately, 90 per cent of new taxes have been levied against individual Canadians while corporations have had to come up with a little less than 9 per cent. The least I can say is that this is unfair to the average taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is facing a couple of problems: Canadians are not fooled, and this Government will not be re-elected two years from now. Again referring to what is generally happening to young people, throughout his Budget speech the Minister of Finance did not once utter the word "youth". As Young Liberals of Canada President Jonathan Scheiderman put it, it would seem that the Conservative Party solution to the unemployment of young people is to let them grow older. If we are to believe what the Minister of Finance said in his May 23, 1985 Budget speech, it is an ongoing priority of this Government to encourage a much-improved research and development performance in Canada. Unfortunately, since the Conservatives have been in power, the amounts allocated to the National Research Council have decreased from $520 million in 1984 to $398 million in 1986, and an additional cut-back of $20 million was announced in October 1986. How can we believe in research development when the Government is reducing the amounts allocated to this activity in its Budget?

The way the Government is treating the Ministry of Youth is a perfect illustration of the priority given to the problems of young people. The Government has cut back over $200 million from youth programs since 1984. It is hard to understand the self-sastisfaction of the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) when he is asked questions about these cut-backs. When the most important initiative aimed at Canadian youth is the new tax on chips and granola bars, how can young people have confidence in the Government? It has never shown the least concern for future generations, as Mr. Schneiderman said quite recently.

Since the Government did away with the Katimavik program, we have often been told that programs to solve the problems of young people will be introduced in due time. Yet, Katimavik was abolished over a year ago and the Government has yet to announce something to replace it, except for some minor programs which fall quite a bit short of Katimavik in giving real experience and training to young people. If the Budget is not the proper place to announce new programs, will the Minister of Finance one day tell young Canadians when it will be time to introduce the marvellous programs promised by the Conservative Government? Indeed, when will young people stop being treated like third-class citizens by this Government?

Quite recently, the Department of Employment and Immigration sent us information on the amounts allocated to job creation programs for young people. This information shows the amounts allocated in 1985-86 and 1986-87. According to this information, in 1985-86, $673.2 million were allocated to job creation for young people and 253,400 young people took part in the various programs. For the current fiscal year, 1986-87, the estimates show that $720.3 million will be allocated and that 230,000 young people will take part. This is according to the figures we have been given. It is difficult to reconcile the fact that, while the Government is saying that $47.1 million more will be allocated to these job creation programs, 23,200 fewer young Canadians will be able to participate in them.

In the list of federal, provincial and territorial programs Youth Affairs 1986-87, which is an official document distributed throughout Canada by Employment and Immigration and used regularly by the directors of Canada Manpower Centres, a whole section is devoted to federal job-creation programs. This document is used by job counsellors in campus employment centres and Canada employment centres for students, as well as by young people themselves. If we compare this official document and the Canadian Job Strategy information provided by Employment and Immigration, we note many differences both in the job-creation programs themselves and in the amounts allocated to these programs. How can there be any coherence in the youth policy of this Conservative Government? For instance, the Section 38 program appears in the Canadian Job Strategy table, but cannot be found in the index of federal programs. In the case of the Skill Shortage program, which is related to shortages of specialized workers, the index shows that the amount allocated for young people was $4.5 million in 1985-86, while the data provided by Employment and Immigration gives a figure of $24.7 million.

In the case of job development, in the index, the total budget shown is $239.4 million while the data provided by Employment and Immigration show the amount allocated to young people alone as $308.8 million. Where is the coherence, Mr. Speaker? Where is the transparency?

To return to the Hot 100 publication, an abridged guide to the Canadian Government's youth grants and services, that publication in itself is an excellent initiative. Young Canadians needed a guide to find their way around the programs and services set up by the Canadian Government. However, its content is highly questionable.

First, upon reading the guide, one very soon realizes that a very large majority of programs listed were already in force under the Liberal administration. New programs are very scarce, and, besides, it is clear from many of the listed programs and services that the Minister used this as some sort of a carryall to convey an impression that his Government's programs and services were very numerous, although many of them are seldomly used, of little interest to the young or have not really been designed for them.

Besides, program and service descriptions are so short that their nature and requirements are totally or partly left out. Among the programs and services listed in Hot 100 that were not really designed for the young, there is the Hotline services of the Small Business Secretariat, the FDB's management seminars, the business counselling, the video clinics on management, the FDB's information services, community development, the Federal Business Development Bank's booklet Minding Your Own Business, the Equipment Management internal officer and Probationer Program. Also included are programs of such a general nature as health insurance and unemployment insurance, the Canada public insurance plan, family allowances, the missing children programs, the Canada Pension Plan, Federal assistance to post-secondary education, and so on and so forth.

This Government, Mr. Speaker, is constantly bragging about its youth employment policy and its funding. It would indeed be interesting to know about that policy. However, there is nowhere to be found a detailed profile of the policy explaining the details of the various programs, nor the specific budgets allocated. It is no surprise to me that over the weekend, the Minister of State for Youth should have announced, when promoting Hot 100, that according to a report in La Presse, he was shying away from a youth policy, since a youth policy never has been a feature, or a concern, or a priority of the Tory Government.

It would be important for the Government to develop a policy, and that such a policy be made available as one complete and explicit official document, if ever it comes to light.

Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to ask at which point would this Government consider the young for what they are and at their fair value? When will he give any priority to that major group, the leaders of tomorrow, that accounts for 22.6 per cent of Canada's labour force?

Research and development expenditures should increase by 4 per cent in 1986, as compared with 12 per cent and 11 per cent in 1985. Expenditures for 1986 amounted to 1.3 per cent of Canada's gross national product, which is much less than the 2.5 per cent spent in the United States and 2.7 per cent in Japan. However, during the 1984 election, the Progressive Conservative Government was committed to doubling research and development funding over the next four years in order to bring it to 2.5 per cent of the gross national product. It is that sort of statement and promise that has brought this Government to power but is today disheartening our people and driving them into rejecting this Government that has no respect whatsoever for its commitments and does not intend to honour them, if we are to rely on the figures that were published and that lead us to believe that this Government intends to follow along the same line it has been promoting since 1984.

Where employment centres are concerned, it is unfortunate to note that a drastic reduction in staff is expected, a staff that has proved to be very useful on campus in our colleges and universities but unfortunately the Government has decided to reduce the staff on duty in our various Canadian colleges and universities.

Surely, we could speak at length, Mr. Speaker, but I see that the time allotted to me is almost over but I would like to say that at the post-secondary level, by tabling such a budget the government is only fuelling the opposition shown not merely on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, but throughout Canada.

Those Canadians are voicing their views through Gallup polls and briefs, at meetings on social occasions, and they have all kinds of responses which indicate beyond any shadow of a doubt that they are getting ready for an outright firing of all the Tory Members who approved that budget and failed to take into account, at least as far as I am concerned, that extremely important segment of the population which represents 22.6 per cent of Canadians and which will in the years ahead take over from us, and I mean our young people. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that it is too late for the Government to reverse its action, but it is not too late to at least launch programs which would show that this Government still has a heart and that it can be truly concerned about our young people and not solely about the friends of the party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reimer): Questions or comments? Debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, having heard the speech made by their elected representative the people in the Saint-Maurice riding must be very disappointed today in view of the fact that he spent half of his time saying that the Conservative Government would not be re-elected and the other half reading remarks made by other Hon. Members or quoting from this or that. I am very sad when I see my honourable friend from Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) behave this way.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring up again some of the points he tried to make. I honestly believed that the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice knew what a budget is. I realize now that he does not have the faintest idea of what it is. A budget is the financial statement of a country which must be tabled once a year.

As his deskmate the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice thinks that a budget should provide the Minister of Finance with the opportunity to announce what each and every department is planning to do during the forthcoming year. He mentioned what he felt should have been announced concerning the young people of this country, but he forgot to mention what my honourable colleague has done for women; he forgot to deal with regional development; he forgot all of that because a budget is based on detailed estimates of planned or expected expenditures.

The Department of Finance does not have to make announcements in the Budget. For instance, what would have happened last year, when Western Canadians farmers urgently needed assistance had the Government refused arguing that the Opposition did not want any announcements at that particular time but that instead they should appear in the Budget. Wait a while; in the Budget we will announce what in fact you need now. I do not think that Western Canada farmers would have been happy, Mr. Speaker. That is what the Opposition does not understand. The Budget provides each and every Department with the funding it needs, and it is up to each Minister during the year to make the necessary announcements pertaining to their respective areas of responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to young Canadians. What had the previous Government done for them? We have reduced the unemployment rate among young Canadians by 3 per cent. We have still a long way to go, but at least we have done something, contrary to the previous Government which simply allowed the unemployment rate among young Canadians to rise. He referred to the very good booklet published by the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest). This booklet has been very well received everywhere in Canada, except in the ridings held by the Opposition. So, Mr. Speaker, you can see how that works.

As far as the social programs reform is concerned, a few things have been accomplished. The Hon. Member failed to mention the Federal sales tax credit which the Government has implemented to help low income people. The promise which the Prime Minister made last week concerning day-care centres will become a reality. Please, be patient.

The Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice did not mention—which surprises me, for I know him to be straightforward and honest—the minimum income tax which was established in January 1986, although his leader was definitely against imposing a minimum tax on high income people. He did not mention that, Mr. Speaker. On the other hand, he talked a lot about corporations which do not pay a cent in income tax. Mr. Speaker, we owe this income tax system to the Liberal Party which governed this country for 20 years, but the Hon. Member failed to mention the changes we have made and the steps we have taken over the past two years to eliminate a great many tax loopholes. He mentioned the cuts concerning the National Research Council. It is those people who made up the previous Government and who are now sitting in the Opposition who set up the scientific research tax credit which caused billions of dollars to be wasted, an abused tax credit we had to get rid of. Billions have been spent under their policy, and you have seen the magazine Actualité . . . when he speaks about friends of the Government, we should not forget either all these lawyers of Liberal allegiance who profited from that scientific research tax credit, or all the companies which also benefited from it. Now, he is accusing us of not taking our responsibilities as far as research is concerned. Mr. Speaker, they cleaned out the Government coffers; billions have been spent needlessly for the benefit of friends of the Liberals, rather than for our researchers—

Mr. Gauthier: This is not true. Stick to the facts.

Mr. Vincent: Look, Mr. Speaker, how much the truth hurts. It is well known that billions were spent, and you know it too.

So, Mr. Speaker, we cut that out, and nobody should be accusing us today.

Mr. Gauthier: The truth!

Mr. Vincent: We do not have any money, you spent it all. We have nothing left.

Mr. Gauthier: Hell! You are taxing enough! More than $25 billion.

Mr. Vincent: Despite all the problems we inherited from them, Mr. Speaker, we managed to create 675,000 jobs. We lowered the inflation rate. We are second, behind Japan, in terms of economic growth. These, Mr. Speaker, are the achievements of the Conservative Government. But that is never mentioned!

An Hon. Member: We have a million or more unemployed.

Mr. Vincent: Look at that, Mr. Speaker, the truth hurts. It is really worth seeing. They are shocked by the truth. That is their problem.

Mr. Gagliano: Only 18 per cent of the population would vote Conservative.

Mr. Vincent: Really.

Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) to come to my riding.

Mrs. Pépin: I went there.

Mr. Vincent: Yes, how many people did you get? You had 75 people between 5 and 7 p.m. There has been—

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I want to quote a few figures but the Hon. Member has just said that she came in my riding. It is true, Mr. Speaker. They had 75 people for a fund-raising supper and 15 days earlier, 900 people attended a fund-raising supper of the Conservative Party. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, whatever anyone might say, I think that facts speak for themselves and that the people of Trois-Rivières are proud and happy with the Conservative Party.

Mr. Bernier: And with their M.P.

Mr. Vincent: And with their M.P., thank you, Mr. the Hon. Member for Beauce.

Anyway, Mr. Speaker, here lies the difference between the Conservative Government and the previous Liberal Government: we work at the national level, we work to help people throughout the country and each and every Conservative Member in this House is working for the people of his or her riding. We do not work only to be re-elected, and our policies in particular are designed to improve the well-being of Canadians and not just to win the next election, as the previous Liberal Government used to do. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that they did succeed on that point. One cannot hold it against them, since their image was not too bad and they succeeded in being re-elected. But that is not what is important. What is important is that nationally and internationally, Canada take the place it deserves, and this has happened only since 1984.

Let me refer to other comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice. He spoke about the capital gain tax exemption.

Mr. Speaker, that is a good provision which has proved itself up to now as far as the economy and job creation are concerned. When I am told that it is meant to help the Government's friends, I think there are more wealthy people on the Liberal side than on the Conservative side. So let them not tell me this kind of story. They have been in power for 20 years and have made the most of it. Let them not tell me that wealthy people are only on the Conservative side. Mr. Speaker, this I suggest is only playing politics and in so doing, my colleague from the riding of Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) has somewhat disappointed me.

He spoke as well about youth programs. The Challenge Program has created more jobs with less money because it has been carried out efficiently. But what is still more important, young people in 1985, 1986 and again in 1987, will have had during the summer months the opportunity not just to work but also to work in their own fields of endeavour, as against the former Summer Canada programs, or whatever their name was, under which summer work for students meant lawn mowing and house painting and all that sort of informative activities. No, Mr. Speaker, since 1984 young Canadians have been working during summer in their own fields, and I could quote testimonies from people in the Trois-Rivières riding, from young people in my riding, who think the program is great because it gave them a chance to work for four months in their respective areas of competence, and that is something new because it never did exist under the former Liberal regime.

So we need no lessons from anybody in that regard.

The Hon. Member said that the Conservative Government was elected on its promises. No, Mr. Speaker, this Government was elected because Canadians were fed up with the policies, not to say the petty politics, of the former Liberal administration. It must be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that they were elected in 1980 on the promise that they would not increase the tax on gasoline by 18 cents a gallon. One year later we had twice that increase, Mr. Speaker. When we came to power in September 1984, the price of gasoline in Trois-Rivières was 60 cents a litre, Mr. Speaker, whereas it is now 50 cents. The price of gasoline has been reduced thanks to the energy policies of the Conservative Government. And in the riding of Saint-Maurice, the price of gaz has also decreased. I have the opportunity to go there once in a while, and I know it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gagliano: The price of gas has decreased, but no thanks to you.

Mr. Vincent: And once again, I suppose that if interest rates have gone down, it is not because of the judicious policies of the Conservative Government. A mortgage of $50,000 over five years costs nowadays each taxpayer $1,500 less per year. That means that each Canadian with a mortgage of $50,000 has $1,500 more in his pockets each year.

Mr. Gagliano: Yes, but he pays more taxes.

Mr. Vincent: And the small- and medium-size businesses . . . You can see Mr. Speaker, that the truth hurts. Lately, I had the opportunity to visit in the riding of Saint-Maurice some small- and medium-size businesses which are doing very well. In Trois-Rivières also, they are doing quite well, small- and medium-size, they are expanding and people are proud of our policies. In Trois-Rivières our small- and medium-size business people realize that with a Conservative Government they save $1,000 in interest a year. These are tangible achievements the people can see when they get money in their pockets.

Mr. Speaker, personal income has increased by 5 per cent since we have been in power. These are positive achievements. The number of small- and medium-size businesses has increased by 13 per cent. It is not only job creation. Canadian entrepreneurship, now aware of its potential, is moving ahead with the help of the Conservative Government. After being crushed as a result of Liberal policies, as you know, Mr. Speaker. All these achievements are the reason why we have a Budget that everybody, except the Opposition, considers excellent. We are only criticized for not having reduced the deficit further and I can understand that. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, you know that 50 per cent of the expenditures in this budget have to do with social programs. Twenty-five per cent are for interest payments on their debt. Twenty-five per cent of public expenditures in 1987-1988 go towards interest payments on debts incurred by the former liberal administration. We have to live with that, Mr. Speaker. We have no choice.

They spent carelessly and haphazardly, without regard for the proper use of funds. I spoke earlier of scientific research. I could mention a multitude of job creation programs which were a farce, which were tailor-made for friends and acquaintances, which provided temporary jobs, Mr. Speaker, if any at all. And I could go on at length.

With regard to Quebec, Mr. Speaker, what this Government has accomplished over the last two years is tremendous. Worthy of note are the CF-18 contract, the Hyundai plant, the step forward in agricultural policy, Mr. Speaker, amounting to a billion and a half dollars over five years. For five years, the former administration had denied our dairy producers what they rightly deserved. We came up with a solution in 1985, Mr. Speaker, less than one year after having been elected. And I know for a fact that the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) was totally in favor of this initiative. The unemployment rate has declined.

A record number of agreements have been signed between the federal Government and the Province of Quebec in the fields of science and technology, regional development, transport, to name but a few, Mr. Speaker, agreements which have notably benefited Trois-Rivières—in the area of transport, Mr. Speaker, since $18 million are to be spent to renovate the Trois-Rivières bridge. These positive accomplishments have been brought about by the Federal Government, in co-operation with the Government of Quebec. The press mentioned this morning that the time for bickering between the Federal and Provincial Governments had ended, Mr. Speaker. Prior to my entry in the political arena, there was a time when the provincial member and federal member never spoke to one another other than through the press. The Member for Trois-Rivières and the Member for Saint-Maurice did not speak to one another except through the press. That is not the way things are done today, Mr. Speaker. We work in co-operation with the province. I work in co-operation with my two provincial colleagues, and it works well in the area. This is what I call team work, this is what I call the national reconciliation the Prime Minister had promised and we have brought.

Mr. Speaker, there is one question to which I would like an Hon. Member on the other side of the House to answer. In 1983-84, we had a deficit of $32 billion. We came in power in 1984, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and we said in the November 1984 Economic Statement: we cut a bit everywhere, because we have to put some order in our own house and then see where we are going. We still had a $38 billion deficit. Mr. Speaker, $6 billion were spent before the election. Where did that money go? I could give you examples, I have some in my own riding. They sprinkled a little bit of money just about everywhere in order to win. But the Canadian people did not go along this time. They understood in 1984 that you do not win the heart of Quebecers by spending a lot of money; in the riding of Trois-Rivières, in the riding of Beauce, in the riding of Labelle, it is won over by the Conservative Government—

An Hon. Member: And in the riding of Rimouski.

Mr. Vincent: In the riding of Rimouski too, of course. And I feel sorry for you, Liberals, in the next election; you are going to try to win those ridings, but because people are proud of their Hon. Members and work with them, and because they acknowledge that their Hon. Members fight for Quebec and for their ridings—

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would like to say that this is the first time in 30 years that the federal deficit will be reduced for three consecutive years, the first time in 30 years, Mr. Speaker. That is to say, the last time it happened, I was one year old. That was a long time ago, Mr. Speaker. Thanks to whom? Again, thanks to the great policies of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of Finance and of the whole Conservative caucus.

Mr. Speaker, I could say a lot more about this excellent budget, and I would ask Hon. Members to support the motion put forth by Minister Wilson, and of course reject the Opposition motion.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance. I will start with one, in order to give a chance to other Members. And anyway, this is a question I had already asked during the debate on the borrowing authority legislation. He stated that the Liberals wasted $6 billion before the elections, because when they came to power they found themselves with a $38 billion deficit, and that this Conservative Government has been reducing the deficit year after year. First, I would like to tell him that this is not quite the truth, because, last year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had proposed a $29.5 billion deficit and we now get a $32 billion deficit that is equal to the last budget's last deficit, the last full deficit under the Liberal administration, that is $32 billion in 1983-84. So there is no reduction from three years ago. But in 1984-85 and 1985-86, there still was an increase of some $6 billion in tax receipts. Yet, the deficit at the end of 1986 is the same. Now, could he tell me—I believe he has had the time to figure it out and look at it—where those $6 billion have gone and how it is that after increasing taxes by $6 billion since they came to power, the deficit at the end of 1986 is $32 billion, just as it was in 1984?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to my colleague the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) for his question. When we took over, the deficit reached $38 billion. The first year, we brought it down to $34 billion, the following year to $32 billion, and this year to $29 billion. I suggest we have done a very good job.

Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou does not seem to know that the cost of social programs increases every year. For instance, Mr. Speaker, Old Age Security Pension benefits, family allowances, and transfer payments to the provinces are increasing. While it is true that Government revenues have increased, so have expenses. This is simple mathematics and if my hon. friend wants to be honest, he will have to admit that transfer payments to the provinces and social program benefits are responsible to a large extent for the increase in Government spending. He should not forget the debts incurred by the previous Government and which we must pay back. Interest payments on a debt do not go down when the debt is increasing; they grow and must be paid. They are responsible for the increase in our spending.

The Conservative Government currently administers the country with approximately 25 per cent of the overall government budget. International agreements which were signed before we came to power and which we all agree have to be adhered to, namely those concerning National Defence and CIDA. There are increases there too. There has been very little increase, if any, in the expenses which the Government controls. That is not where the increase is occurring. Revenues must increase, because the remaining expenses are increasing.

Mr. Grondin: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to tell my colleague from Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) that he is right to say that we see budgets differently. That is obvious. First, the Budget was brought down in the House, and then we were told about the expenditures projected by the Government for the coming year. We were then able to see that there is a relationship between the Budget and the Main Estimates for 1987-88, and this relationship gave us food for thought. Of course, everything that we had expected after the Budget was brought down was later confirmed by the Main Estimates.

Where I disagree with my colleague from Trois-Rivières is when he says that I simply read what had been written by other people and spent my time saying that the Government would not be re-elected. I think there is some truth in the latter, and as for his claim that what I said was written by others, we could hardly be expected to speak to a variety of issues since the Budget failed to reflect any specific policies or make positive forecasts for Canada's future.

And I don't think that my answers to questions or what I was able to contribute on the youth problem and the total absence of any policies or forecasts in this respect, I don't think this was mentioned by anyone else, Mr. Speaker, since even the Minister of State for Youth, in his speech on the Budget, never mentioned the word "young" or "youth". And why should he, since there was absolutely nothing in the Budget for young people.

As for Hot 100, I simply want to say to the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières that the layout is very good, and I said as much in my speech. The booklet is put together quite well, but unfortunately, aside from certain programs that existed before, if we look for programs that were introduced by the Conservative Government since 1984, I'm afraid the Hon. Member will have to admit they were conspicuous by their absence from this publication.

As far as Challenge '87, Challenge '86, or Challenge '85 go, I do not think my colleague can accuse me of ever having spoken against this program. What we denounce is the Challenge program funding, in light of other increases. Among other things, I am referring to minimum wage levels in the various provinces, particularly in Ontario and Quebec this year, and to the difficulties we experienced when attempting to obtain additional funds to compensate for the extra $30 million which had been earmarked for the 1986 census summer program. These $30 million have been cut back this year and, no matter what my colleague from Trois-Rivières may say, it translates into so many fewer jobs. Fewer jobs will be available this year, unless they plan to reduce the salaries to be paid to young people hired under the Challenge '87 program.

All things considered, Mr. Speaker, that is a sharp reduction and we cannot accept that young people be penalized by a Government which could not care less about this group that makes up 22.6 per cent of the Canadian population.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I will try again. It doesn't seem to sink in. The Budget is not an instrument for giving away goodies to certain groups in our society. The Budget provides certain sums of money for each department, and it is up to the responsible Minister to spend that money in the course of the year. The Minister of State for Youth will make his own announcements when appropriate. It is not up to the Minister of Finance to announce in the Budget what is going to be done for our youth this year. And I see my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). There was nothing in the Budget about Indian Affairs. However, in the months to come, the Minister will be making announcements that concern Indians. That is what the Hon. Member fails to understand, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to point out that for the first time in twenty years, a Government has given a forecast of its expenditures and at the end of the year, the forecast has proved to be correct, and we have been doing this for three years running. It is the first time, Mr. Speaker. It involves administering the country like Canadians administer their family budget and like companies administer theirs. When they say: We are going to spend X thousand dollars this year, they spend X thousand dollars. For twenty years, the Liberal Government failed to balance its budget. We, Mr. Speaker, have done so, and I think that is important.

Finally, I can assure the House that the Minister of State for Youth is doing excellent work for our young people and that he has the support of the Quebec caucus and the national caucus in this respect.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate on the Budget presented earlier this year by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I rise in opposition to the Budget for what it did and did not do. It extended the federal sales tax to snack foods, such as granola bars, frozen yogurt, peanuts, health food mixtures, popcorn et cetera. The snack attack is a tax on food eaten mostly by children. That is why some people have called this tax the kiddie tax. As well, the Budget increased excise tax on gas by one cent a litre and it increased the tax on tobacco products by another 4 per cent. This means that for middle and low-income families taxes are up another $60 to $100 a year. When you pile this tax increase on other tax increases which the Government has introduced since it came to power some two and a half years ago it means that for middle and low-income families taxes are up by $1,350 over that period of time.

Let us deal with what the Budget did not do, Mr. Speaker. It did not address the problem of regional disparity. Since January, 1986, 137,000 new jobs have been created in Canada yet 132,000 of those jobs are in southern Ontario. Only 5,000 new jobs were created in other parts of the country. The problem of regional disparity is tremendous. Yet the Government since it was elected has cut back by some $3 billion the money previously spent on regional economic development, so we can see why regional disparities are increasing and we can see why most of the economic activity and jobs are centred in southern Ontario.

The Budget did not deal with the crisis facing agriculture. Farm net income went down 27 per cent in Saskatchewan last year. Projections are that farm net income will be reduced by a further 10 per cent to 20 per cent this year. There is a crisis occurring in western Canada. There are thousands of farm families on the brink of bankruptcy. The whole way of life of the family farm in rural western Canada is on the brink of disappearing. Yet there was nothing in the Budget to indicate that the Government recognizes the tremendous problem that exists in our region of the country. There was no commitment, not one word by this Government on any program it might have in mind to offer some assistance to those farmers to ensure that family farming as a way of life will be preserved in western Canada. There was no acknowledgment whatever of the problems we face back home. In addition, the Budget does nothing to create jobs and assist the poor.

As I was preparing for my remarks in this debate I received a study that was done in my home city of Regina by the food bank. It is called "On the Bread Line-Hunger in Regina". I would like to enter for the record some of the findings of this study. It states:

> Hunger is a significant problem in the City of Regina.
> People are hungry when their regularly monthly income is inadequate for the purchase of sufficient quantity of nutritious food for themselves and members of their families.
> Our best conservative estimate is that there are at least 3,000 hungry people in the City of Regina. Three thousand and five men, women and children used the Food Bank in January 1986.

More than half of those are children. The study also shows that hunger is primarily a family matter in Regina with the majority of food bank users being children. Some 59 per cent of food bank children have both parents, while 35 per cent lived in households headed by single women. The ability of food banks to provide this service is also under stress and strain. For example, in 1985 the Regina Food Bank received and distributed more than 1 million pounds of food to hungry people. However, the amount contributed per person has fallen from approximately five pounds per day in 1983 to 2.3 pounds per day in 1986.

• (1210)

The study goes on to document the problems hunger creates, particularly among children. It shows that school nutritionists say that children in school meal programs are underfed, undernourished and hungry. They suffer from hindered motivation, reduced attention and awareness, restlessness, and turn in on themselves. Hungry children are exhausted and have circles under their eyes.

There is nothing in the Budget that would help alleviate that problem. In fact, those families were given a further kick by the Government when it increased taxes on snack food and extended the reach of the federal sales tax. It means another $60 to $100 taken from their pockets. The Government says it is aware of the difficulties of the poor at the same time as it increases sales taxes. The Government says it introduced the sales tax credit giving $150 back to the family earning $15,000 or less a year. Yet the Budget of the Minister of Finance this year took approximately half of that away again.

There is nothing in the Budget that will do anything about the high unemployment we have in this country. We have one of the highest rates of unemployment among industrialized countries. Those people are the victims of past government actions. Remember the 1970s when inflation was rampant? That inflation was bred by the greed of the oil industry and many other corporations around the world. We were caught in this cycle of ever-increasing inflation. Governments decided to wrestle inflation to the ground, and well they should have. High inflation does no one any good. However, the method they used, tight monetary policy, threw millions of workers around the world in industrialized nations on the unemployment rolls. All at once millions of men and women lost their jobs. So it was in Canada. Thousands of workers with meaningful employment and income were thrown all at once on the unemployed heap. Many of them have been unable to get back into the workforce, not because they are lazy or lacking motivation, but simply that the economic policies decided upon by Government meant there were no jobs for them. Those who have remained unemployed can no longer collect unemployment insurance and have moved down to the welfare rolls. There they have remained.

In addition, governments in this country, especially Conservative Governments at the provincial and federal level, have continued to kick them. The Conservative Government of Saskatchewan has steadfastly refused to increase welfare allotments to keep pace with inflation. Before that Government was elected, welfare recipients were receiving approximately 70 per cent of the amount considered to be the poverty line. A single person now collecting social assistance in Saskatchewan gets only 40 per cent of that amount. They have as well been hit by taxes from the federal Conservative Government. When we look at our income tax form for last year we see that $1,400 was the point at which a person started paying income tax. The level is now so low that the taxable income starts at $10.

So we can see that the victims of the economic policies which were pursued in the 1970s to wrestle inflation to the ground are still with us. They are still suffering, and more today than they ever did before. That is why we have hunger on the streets of Regina today. In fact, it is not just in Regina, it is in every major metropolitan centre across this country. There are kids going hungry. There are kids whose opportunity to learn is being affected because of forces beyond their control. There is nothing in this Budget and nothing the Government has done that would indicate it has any awareness of the problems and realities which exist on the streets of the cities of this country. It turns a blind eye and is in fact quite willing to kick these people some more and squeeze an extra $60 out of their hides. This is certainly not a Government of compassion.

The Budget does nothing to begin to address the question of fairness in our tax system. Let us examine the record since 1984 when the Government was elected. There has been a 48 per cent increase in the amount of money collected from personal income taxes, totalling $43.3 billion. In the same period, 1984-1986, the tax increase for corporations was only 4.3 per cent or some $10 billion. Federal sales and excise taxes have risen some 62 per cent to $22.83 billion. I would like to put on the record a comment by Bob Couchman, Executive Director of the Family Services Association of Canada and Director of the Vanier Institute of the Family. He says he is extremely concerned over what this means to his clients. If you are hitting people at the lower end of the spectrum you are talking about taking food off the tables and clothing off the backs of these children.

We have also seen that corporations in this country have not been paying their fair share. In 1983, 79,196 corporations paid no taxes on total profits of $13.3 billion. That is $13.3 billion of profits which did not produce one cent of tax for the public treasury. In 1983, 64 corporations with profits of over $25 million paid no taxes. Is it fair that an old age pensioner living in Vancouver receiving $9,312 per year from Old Age Security and Canada Pension has less than $1,000 a month to pay for the basic necessities of life; food, rent and clothing, and still pays tax? As an example, Scott Paper, with profits of over $25 million in 1982, 1983, and 1984, did not pay one cent of tax.

Is it fair that a family of four living in Regina, Saskatchewan, at around the poverty level pays about $2,364 in income taxes per year while TransCanada PipeLine, which made over $256 million in profits in 1980-81, did not pay one cent of tax? Is it fair that a single parent trying to support two children living at the poverty level pays income tax to the federal Government? In fact, in 1985 they would have paid $775 in federal taxes and for 1986 that same family will pay $875 in income taxes. At the same time, in 1980 on profits of $23.7 million and in 1981 on profits of $29 million, for a total of $52.7 million, Union Gas did not pay one cent of tax.

Is it fair that a teller at the Royal Bank of Canada in 1982 paid more in taxes in actual dollars and cents than the Royal Bank of Canada paid, even though in 1982 the Royal Bank of Canada had pretax profits of over $330 million? In fact, in 1982 the Royal Bank got a tax credit of $28 million. The Government actually gave it back $28 million. That is not fair.

There is nothing in this Budget which begins to address the question of fairness in our tax system. We have a tax system in which the middle class and the poor are carrying the load. The well-to-do and the larger corporations have not been carrying their load and, at the same time, the very poor have seen their services and support programs cut.

What I find most obscene is the type of lecture which we, Members of Parliament, have received from the corporate elite of the country. For example, last year I received a letter from the President of the Royal Bank of Canada at that time, Mr. Frazee. Mr. Frazee told us that we have to bite the bullet to bring the deficit under control, that we are spending too much money on our social programs. Mr. Frazee was suggesting that the kids in Regina who go hungry every night are taking too much out of our social programs. He suggested to us that in order to reduce the deficit we have to start cutting our social programs. Yet, in 1982 the bank of which he was president did not pay one cent of tax on $330 million. Who is having a free ride?

There was nothing in this Budget which began to address the question of fairness in our tax system. The Minister of Finance tells us to wait, that he is going to introduce tax reform. I asked him in committee when he will be ready to give us his White Paper. He said he would be ready some time this spring. He told us last year that he would have a paper ready on some aspects of tax reform some time this spring. Now we have to wait a little longer.

The truth is that the Government is asking the poor and the middle class to wait so that it can drop an election goodie on them in time for the next election. Meanwhile, the rich and the large corporations continue their free lunch. This is not right. It is disgusting. No wonder the Canadian public has become cynical with the Government and has expressed that in the public opinion polls. No, Mr. Speaker, in no way can I support this Budget and the action of the Government.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) a chance to catch his breath while I ask him two questions. First, with regard to his comments about those who live below the poverty line, is he aware that the Government of Canada made it clear in the Speech from the Throne and also in the Budget that announcements affecting low income Canadians will flow throughout this year? All of those announcements do not have to be made in the Budget Speech.

Also, is he aware that because of the prodigious job creation of the last two and a half years fostered by the low interest rates and the fiscal discipline of the Government over 200,000 Canadians who were below the poverty line are no longer below the poverty line?

I would like to ask the Member about his peroration about corporations and their lack of production of tax revenue compared with the personal income tax sector. Is the Hon. Member aware that we have done away with a number of tax exemptions and reductions in the last two years, including carve-outs and limited partnerships, and that we are now moving on a whole host of others? Prominent among these are a number of opportunities for corporations to diminish their tax which are complex and must be properly dealt with. Prominent is the large loss overhang which flows out of the recession period. The Hon. Member knows that that has been a major contributing factor to the lower revenue from the corporate sector. The way preferred shares are structured and so on has also contributed to this, all of which is to be looked at in tax reform.

Is the Hon. Member saying that because he is in such a hurry to have these changes, rather than get all these things right, in order that the corporate sector pays its proper amount, we should rush in with a proposal prematurely? The Hon. Member knows that we will be bringing our proposals forward in the spring which is quite soon. I have those three questions for the Hon. Member and I would appreciate if he could answer them directly.

Mr. de Jong: I will with great pleasure, Mr. Speaker. First, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) mentions all the good things which flow out of this and other Budgets to help the poor. The fact is that the poor are being taxed at a new level every year because of the measures which the Government has taken. Since the provision of below 3 per cent for inflation for income tax purposes was taken out, more and more people are being brought into the income tax regime.

I saw no mention whatsoever in this Budget of poverty. The word was not used once. The Minister of State tells us what the Minister of Finance has told us, to be patient, that we should not rush into tax reform, that we have to think it through. They did not think it through when economic policies resulted in hundreds of thousands of people being thrown out of work. There is no thinking through about the results of economic policy when it affects ordinary Canadians, but we have to think it through and be careful when it comes to taxing the corporations and stopping the haemorrhaging of funds which is occurring.

The Minister is right that there are up to $35 billion of business losses still on the books. If the corporations use these business losses they do not have to pay any tax at all in the next two or three years. Yet the Minister and the Government tell us we must be very careful when we deal with that.

• (1230)

Why do successive governments, whether Liberal or Tory, tell us to be careful when we deal with corporations but do not have the same consideration when dealing with human beings? The kids going hungry in the streets of Regina today can wait regardless of the social and economic cost it will produce for the country. They can wait until the Minister of Finance gets his act together and introduces some form of tax reform. In the meantime, the large, the powerful and the mighty of this country continue with their free lunch. I say that is obscene.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, that last exchange reminded me that the Government had not really thought through the implications of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption before it introduced it and gave a free ride to some people while also giving away money that should have been used to reduce the deficit.

I appreciate the Hon. Member's emphasis in his speech that the Budget should have concern for its effect on people. He especially targeted the needs of children. The Budget errs not only in adding extra taxes that impinge on children, primarily it fails to address their needs and even recognize their poverty in many parts of this country. I think that is shameful. I appreciate the Hon. Member bringing that to our attention.

We also live at a time when children are hungry throughout the world. We live in a world that is spending $1 trillion a year on armaments. Canada is making its contribution to arms through our military expenditures. How does that affect Canadians and what should be our position? How should the Budget address that issue?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that question. Indeed, it would be a progressive step if Ministers of Finance begin to acknowledge the cost of the arms race and the effect of that on the budgets of governments throughout the world. It is not possible to remove almost $1 trillion from the world economy without everyone suffering.

A peace institute in London estimates that the cost of the arms race is equivalent to two years of employment income for every working person in the world. If there was a process of disarmament which released that $1 trillion for useful production, countries throughout the world would have the hard currency to afford our wheat. There would not be this obscene situation in the world today where there are surpluses and hunger existing side by side. It would help our farmers and certainly help those in need throughout the world if $1 trillion was available for productive purposes, such as building homes and schools, providing decent day care and creating employment in social areas. There would be much less unemployment today, our books would be balanced and we would live, not in a world of scarcity and cut-backs and deficits as we are today but in a world of plenty. Surely humanity has reached the stage where there are enough resources and enough technology to produce an abundance for us all. Yet $1 trillion a year is sucked out of the world economy in the production of equipment that is only used to kill human beings. It distorts the international economy and turns our society into one where resources are scarce, the poor are ignored, and unemployment is high.

I believe it would be a progressive step if Ministers of Finance included a paragraph in their Budgets noting the economic cost of the arms race and expressing the hope on behalf of all Canadians that some day soon we will have a new international atmosphere in which disarmament and the reduction of expenditures on arms can occur. Humanity could then begin to realize the tremendous potential we have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Johnson): Resuming debate.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on February 18, 1987.

In 1984, Canadians gave the Government a mandate to bring the Canadian economy back on track. When we were elected as a government in September, 1984, we knew as a government and a party that it was time to get back to economic basics and get at the source of the country's economic difficulties. Therefore, in the November, 1984, Economic Statement, the Minister of Finance introduced a comprehensive plan for economic renewal. That plan consisted of four fundamental items on the agenda: first, deficit controls; second, job-creation; third, increased investment and international competitiveness; fourth, the realization of these three goals while maintaining socio-economic justice and compassion.

Following that statement, in May, 1985, and again in February, 1986, two budgets were brought in consistent with these four principles. Now, in this most recent Budget, the central message of the Minister of Finance is that our economic renewal program is working. The Minister stated at page 3579 of Hansard on February 18:

> The results tell the story. We are on the right track. Our program of economic renewal is working.

That is good news for all Canadians. Measured against each item on the 1984 agenda, our economic performance during the past two and one-half years has been nothing short of remarkable.

First, let us look at deficit control and reduction. The facts on deficit control and reduction speak for themselves. When we came to office the annual deficit was more than $38.3 billion and rising. For 15 straight years annual deficits had swollen the accumulated national debt to $200 billion. In fact, the national debt had doubled in just three years prior to our coming into office. The private sector was being stifled by over regulation and wasteful government intervention in its affairs and a lack of spending control over government funds.

What did we do? We abolished the destructive programs such as the National Energy Program and the Foreign Investment Review Agency. We removed distortions in the tax system. We are now privatizing Crown corporations and have privatized 13 to date. We are actively encouraging research and development and investment.

Let us look at some of the results of our actions which we began after the November, 1984, Economic Statement. The deficit is down from $38.3 billion in 1984-85 to $32 billion in 1986-87, with a projected further reduction to $29.3 billion in the 1987-88 fiscal year. That is a three-year decline of 23.5 per cent. The three-year successive decline in annual deficit is the first time that has occurred in 30 years. In other words, one must go back to 1957 to see an equivalent three-year successive reduction in the deficit.

Let us look at a second fact with regard to annual deficits. It is that 67 per cent of the decline of the deficit since we have taken office is due to cuts in government spending, and 33 per cent is through new taxes. Third, in real terms—that is, after inflation—program spending has declined by more than 1 per cent per year over the three years ending 1987-88. Fourth, these measures of deficit reduction and spending control, the elimination of FIRA and the National Energy Program, and the creation of Investment Canada, have all played a large role in restoring confidence in the Canadian economy, and will be continued to ensure even greater economic renewal.

Finally, we look at the job-creation figures. Actions, taken together with world-wide events, have permitted the creation of some 675,000 jobs in 28 months. That is compared to 424,000 jobs created in the previous Liberal administration in 55 months. There are those who say that deficit reduction hurts the economy. They have it exactly wrong. Rising deficits mean higher interest rates and lower economic confidence. This translates into lower growth, fewer jobs and higher Government deficits, along with less flexibility for the Government to deal with the external pressures on our economy and with urgent domestic needs. Perhaps no single obstacle threatens Canada's economic well-being more than the national debt. True to our intent to rectify the fundamental problems of this country's socio-economic life, the Government has achieved a tremendous program in this area even though there is still a long way to go.

Let us look at the second fundamental principle of job-creation. The job-creation figures continue to get better with each passing day. As of February 18, 1987, 675,000 new jobs have been created. That is an average of 24,107 jobs per month as compared to 7,709 jobs under the previous Liberal administration. That is more than three and a half times as many jobs created per month. Seventy-six per cent of these jobs have been full-time jobs and that is almost the exact reverse of the Liberal record.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) stated in his comments on the Budget that there is not one new single job contemplated in this Budget. He is dead wrong. If we look at what has taken place because of the comprehensive economic program the Government has initiated, we can see why these jobs are being created. I would remind Hon. Members of what took place when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance. What did he do in order to create jobs? He took a $481 million surplus and turned it into a $4 billion deficit. Under his leadership, spending rose by an average of 23 per cent per year, the gross national debt grew by 50 per cent and debt service costs grew by 85 per cent. The inflation rate doubled from 5.1 per cent to 10.6 per cent. The Bank of Canada rate rose by 4.25 percentage points. Under his leadership the unemployment rate rose by 1 per cent and youth unemployment rose by 2.5 per cent. What is his answer? He says we must create more jobs. Let us look at his record. What did he do? What he did was spend, and spend more, and print, and print more money. Therefore, we had higher inflation and higher unemployment. I cannot understand why the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, with that kind of record, should now have his Party leading in the polls. I find that just too incredulous to understand.

Canada's unemployment growth has been stronger in Canada than in any other major industrialized country. Since September, 1984, employment growth in Canada has outpaced the United States, Germany, France, the United Kingdom, Italy and Japan. The unemployment rate has dropped by two percentage points from 11.7 per cent to 9.7 per cent. The youth unemployment rate has fallen to its lowest level in years, from 18.3 per cent to 14.4 per cent, or a decline of almost four percentage points. Those figures are still too high, but at least they are starting to go in the right direction because of the actions of the Government.

Let us look at the third principle announced in the Economic Statement of 1984, that of economic growth. Over the past two years growth in the Canadian economy has outpaced that of every major industrialized nation with the sole exception of Japan. This growth is evident in all of the economic indicators; lower personal, business and mortgage rates, housing starts at an eight-year high and a continued low level of inflation. The economic outlook for 1987 is also very encouraging. Canada's employment growth is expected to again surpass all other major industrialized countries. The unemployment rate should continue to decline reaching 9 per cent by the end of the year. Canada should enjoy real output growth of 2.8 per cent, making this economic upturn we are enjoying now the second longest since World War II. Interest rates should remain stable. Consumer confidence should continue to fuel growth and job creation. The inflation rate is projected to average less than 4 per cent. The international environment for Canadian exports should improve as a result of recent interest rate declines, exchange rate realignments and better commodity prices. That is a very encouraging prospect for Canadians to enjoy. That is why I think the directions of the Government are so important for the Canadian economy today.

Let us look at the fourth pillar announced under our economic program in November of 1984, that of socio-economic justice and compassion. I think it is all the more remarkable that deficit reduction, job creation and economic growth have all been achieved with the continued concern for socio-economic justice and compassion for those in need. For example, social assistance recipients have a better employment prospect now due to a special three-year federal-provincial cost-shared training and improvement program. Another initiative is that low-income families are benefiting from significant increases in the Child Tax Credit and from the advance payments of that credit. Over a period of three years, the Child Tax Credit is increasing by 36.5 per cent or $140 per child, from $384 in 1985 to $489 in 1987 and $524 in 1988. Under an innovative new program, four million low-income families and individuals are now receiving a refundable federal sales tax credit of up to $50 per adult and $25 per child, to a maximum of $150 for a family of four. Another program which shows the compassion of the Government for those in need is that all widows and widowers aged 60 to 64 years who are in need are now eligible for the spouses' allowance which was introduced in 1984-85. Veterans and their surviving spouses are now receiving improved benefits. Therefore, as the Government continues to work at reducing and controlling spending, reducing the deficit and stimulating economic growth, it is demonstrating that it has a real concern for those in need.

The Budget also indicated there are many challenges ahead. One of those challenges is international competitiveness. We obviously cannot sit back and relax just looking at what has been achieved so far. We must go on. Canadians must make their way in an increasingly competitive world economy. There are a number of other international challenges which confront us such as the serious imbalances in trade positions among industrialized countries. The American budget and its budget deficit continue to create problems. Many developing countries continue to face serious debt problems together with very low commodity prices. The threat of trade protectionism still hangs over many sectors of our economy. In the face of some 300 protectionist Bills in the American Congress, the Government has taken bold action in seeking a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States.

Canada's trade initiatives are crucial to our efforts to build an economy which can continue to grow and create jobs over the long term. We must improve and secure our access to the richest market on earth right next to us, the United States, while at the same time increasing our trade with all other countries, particularly in Europe and the Pacific Rim.

A second challenge ahead for the Government is to continue to control Government spending. The 1987-88 Main Estimates which were tabled right after the Budget by the President of the Treasury Board indicate that the Government intends to pursue the ongoing challenge of controlling and reducing spending in order to encourage further economic growth. For example, in those Estimates the budgetary Main Estimates increase at 2.9 per cent over the 1986-87 Main Estimates. This marks the third consecutive year that the Government has presented budgetary Main Estimates in which the growth rate has declined. That has not happened in almost 20 years. The basic operating costs of the Government will be approximately the same in 1987-88 as they were in 1984-85. With prices rising by some 4 per cent annually this is a reduction in real operating levels of some 12 per cent since we took office.

The third challenge ahead announced in the Budget Speech by the Minister of Finance was with respect to tax reform. The Minister of Finance stated:

> The central objective of tax reform is to reduce tax rates. There can be no better incentive for growth, investment, savings and job creation.

The Minister expressed in his Budget Speech his intention to release the proposed tax reforms later this spring. He has already begun to provide us with a clear indication of some of the changes that we should expect within that tax reform proposal. One of them is lower personal tax rates with fewer tax brackets. The Government is also considering greater emphasis on tax credits rather than on tax exemptions, which would benefit lower income taxpayers much more than does the present system of exemptions. The third proposal is with respect to an increase in the frequency of payments of the refundable sales tax credit. Further, there is the elimination or modification of a wide range of tax preferences which now largely benefit corporations and high-income recipients.

I am always intrigued by the fact that members of the NDP get up in the House and give us long dissertations about all the evils and ills of the large corporations of Canada. I am always amazed that a socialist can be an expert on corporations. I can never quite reconcile that with what they say they are in favour of, and yet they always want to attack these people. Yes, it is true that if one looks at the budget statements and the papers that came to us and considers what has happened with respect to corporation tax compared to personal income tax, one will see that corporation taxes have been declining, whereas personal income taxes have been increasing over a period of four or five years. That is why I hope when the Minister introduces his tax reform proposals that members of the NDP will stand and applaud, since they are the ones who are saying that we have to act. I hope that they will listen carefully to the tax proposals and watch what they will do. I think they will see the Government acting with real compassion, real concern and good fiscal discipline to bring in tax reform as it should be, and not repeating the simple slogan "tax the rich" which the NDP espouses.

In conclusion, our agenda for economic renewal is a co-ordinated, cohesive plan. It involves action on a wide number of fronts, such as reducing the deficit, controlling spending, improving our trading position with other countries of the world, in particular the United States, developing a more fair and more effective tax system, and improving Canada's international competitiveness while at the same time assisting those in greatest need.

I submit that if one looks at what the Government has done in its economic program from September of 1984, which began with the economic statement in the fall, through to the present time, one would see that there is a plan of action for the present and for the future of Canada. We are sticking to that plan.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member talked about the tremendous economy and the tremendous record of the Conservative Government. I realize that he comes from southern Ontario. He does not come from a region such as yours, Mr. Speaker, or from a region such as mine. When constituents of mine hear the kind of speech that we just heard they become even angrier with the Government, and the Conservative Party becomes about as popular as a skunk in a hen-house. The people in my riding are going through a depression the likes of which they have not seen since the 1930s.

We have two Canadas. Some 95 per cent of the jobs created in the last year in Canada were created in southern Ontario. I am happy for southern Ontario. But we are not all from Toronto. Why does the Hon. Member not get up in the House and talk about more assistance for regional development so that there can be more jobs created in northern Ontario where the unemployment rate is 15 per cent, and in western Canada, in the Province of Quebec and in Atlantic Canada?

Prairie farmers are now receiving less for their product than they received at any time since the Great Depression of the 1930s. When one talks about tremendous prosperity in the country, it is no wonder that people in western Canada rebel against the Conservative Party. The Party will soon not be the third but the fourth, even behind the WCC in western Canada, which is a sad commentary on the future of our country. Speeches such as the one made by the Hon. Member from southern Ontario make western Canadians very angry. The Hon. Member does not recognize that we have regional differences in the country.

Last year there was a 20 per cent drop in the price of grain. Last week we heard rumours that there would be another drop of about 20 per cent. The farmers of Canada, even with the $1 billion which the Hon. Member mentioned, received $3.50 maximum per bushel of wheat last year. Across the border in the United States farmers received $4.80 American, or $6 Canadian, per bushel of wheat. In Europe, farmers are subsidized even more than that. With a drop in price this year the farmers of western Canada will be lucky, even with another $1 billion payment, to get some $3 per bushel for the best quality wheat produced in the country. Most farmers, particularly those in my area, do not grow the best quality of wheat.

Will the Hon. Member opposite stand up and talk, not just about southern Ontario, about which he spouts his baloney, but for real regional development equality for northern Ontario, western Canada, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces? If the Hon. Member does not believe me then he can talk to Brian Peckford.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) asked me to get up and not spout more baloney. The figures I quoted are true in southern Ontario, as they are right across the country. When I said interest rates are lower that means that a person with a mortgage anywhere in Canada enjoys that same lower interest rate. I think the Hon. Member forgets that. He wants to play with these figures in his own way. Sure, southern Ontario is doing very well. There is no question about that. There is no question that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville wants to play with these figures.

Mr. Nystrom: It's reality.

Mr. Reimer: Yes, the regions of Canada, some of them, are facing great difficulties. But when we talk to people from British Columbia we talk about the fact that they want to sell their lumber to the United States. I am glad the Hon. Member has said what he has said because I assume he will now vote in favour of the motion the Government introduced yesterday with respect to trade negotiations with the United States. Those people want to sell their products to the United States. They do not want artificial barriers preventing them from doing that. I assume you will help the Government tonight and vote with us.

Mr. Boudria: The Speaker has nothing to do with this.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, an Hon. Member across the way is telling me that you have nothing to do with this. He is correct. I am speaking through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. I stand corrected in that regard.

The Hon. Member mentions prairie farmers. It is true that the subsidized prices in Europe and the United States are hurting our farmers. The Government has reacted, at least in part, with the payment of $1 billion.

Mr. Nystrom: In part!

Mr. Reimer: Yes, in part. It is not the whole solution. It is at least better than nothing. Is the Hon. Member saying that we should do nothing?

Let us consider the trade negotiations in which Canada is taking part. Let us look at starting to tear down these artificial barriers and subsidy programs. In that way we will start to enjoy a greater prosperity across Canada. Let the Hon. Member listen to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who has said that just as the Auto Pact and the auto parts industry, which my riding enjoys, have tremendously helped southwestern Ontario, let us have a lumber pact in the west and a fish pact in the east with the United States. Let us start to move our products from all regions of Canada, to the benefit of us all, just as southwestern Ontario has benefited.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—CALL FOR INCREASED MAINTENANCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to call upon the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) to increase significantly spending on the maintenance of Canada's small craft harbours. The Government of Canada has continued to ignore the worsening condition of many harbours and wharfs throughout the country.

The situation is particularly desperate in Atlantic Canada. In many harbours conditions have deteriorated so much that the safety of fishermen and boaters is being seriously threatened.

The federal Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has a responsibility to ensure that harbours and wharfs are adequately maintained. There is now a growing concern that he will not live up to this responsibility. It is high time the interests of Canadians are protected instead of being attacked by the Government.

I call upon the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to increase spending immediately on small craft harbours and to end this growing threat to the safety of Canada's fishermen. It is high time that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Government of the day lived up to their responsibility to primary producers in Canada.

THE PRESS

ERRONEOUS REPORT OF COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN'S COMMENTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I answered a few questions by Canadian Press reporter, Allan Bass, as I left the morning meeting of the legislative committee on Bill C-37, the softwood lumber tax, which I chair. The resulting story bore so little resemblance to my comments as to be unbelievable. Simply put, Mr. Bass fabricated outrageously.

Some hours later a changed story, which was a little better, and a retraction went out on the CP wire. However, many newspapers and radio stations had already carried the original story. Not one person with whom I spoke who saw the original story saw either the corrected story or the retraction, nor will they have seen the apology which I received from the CP editor.

No free democracy would ever want to censor the press, but surely there should be some redress when a reporter for a usually responsible agency exaggerates so blatantly and causes international problems in so doing.

WELFARE

EXISTENCE OF FOOD BANKS IN TORONTO AND OTHER CITIES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked to learn last week that in booming, prosperous Toronto there are 180 voluntary agencies providing food hampers and meals to over 60,000 people, more than a third of whom are children. The same situation of voluntary agencies establishing food banks exists in many prosperous cities in the Province of Ontario, including Windsor, Hamilton, and others. That is true in virtually every province.

It is obvious that the system of social security and the system of providing welfare, which many of us thought had been developed to the point where people no longer had to depend upon charity, have now broken down.

I believe, as do most Canadians and certainly the major churches involved in providing this service, that it is a disgrace. The country is wealthy enough for the state to provide people with at least a minimum standard of living.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to meet with his provincial counterparts, to examine the situation, and to devise plans which will eliminate the need for charity in this important area.

YOUTH

DEMAND FOR PUBLICATION LISTING GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, on March 11 in the House the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) attacked the Hot 100 booklet issued by the Ministry of Youth. He suggested that the Hot 100 contains programs which are not run by the Government.

On the contrary, the Canadian Federation of Students' Work and Travel Program has significant involvement from the Department of External Affairs, without which it could not function. Surely the Hon. Member would not want to suggest that the Missing Children Program of the Department of the Solicitor General, the Canada Assistance Plan of the Department of Health and Welfare, and the Community Futures Program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy are not federal programs.

Granted, the Hon. Member caught us on OHIP. That certainly is not a federal program. It is not in the Hot 100 booklet, either.

Here are the facts. Over the past 2.5 years our Government has reduced the youth unemployment rate by 4 per cent. As for the Hot 100 booklet, the Hon. Member should know that 50,000 copies have been snatched up in the past month alone. Canadians across the country applaud the booklet. Even Senator Jacques Hebert approves of it.

I would suggest that NDP Members, who are so supportive of Canadian culture, should first learn how to read a book properly.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN RESTIGOUCHE

Mr. Albert Girard (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to comment upon the latest labour force report which, coincidentally, was issued last Friday, March 13. The contents of that report would indicate a drop in the unemployment rate for the economic region in which the riding of Restigouche is located. Is this a sign of good luck or bad luck, Mr. Speaker?

• (1405)

There are several factors that we must keep in mind. First, the rate is now at 16.1 per cent. By all accounts this is still unacceptably high. Second, our participation rate is the second lowest in the entire country. This means that a great many in my region have simply given up on trying to find work. These people are no longer counted in the ranks of the unemployed. They are the ones whose unemployment insurance benefits have expired and now they have been forced to turn to the province for welfare, or worse yet, to food banks and other voluntary organizations. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is this any way to decrease the unemployment rate? If all the people in Restigouche who are presently out of work were added to the official list, our unemployment rate would be over 50 per cent. I know it is hard to believe, but it is true.

We need real help and we need it fast. We need jobs, and we need them now.

LAPRADE FUND

NEED FOR GOVERNMENT TO ESTABLISH RULES RAPIDLY

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I wish simply to reassure my colleague the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières by saying that I agree with him on the criteria made public last November as to the conditions a project should meet to become eligible to the Laprade Fund provided they are adhered to in practice. However, after a project has been deemed eligible to the Fund, there must be a follow-up. Well, since last November, the Government has been quite silent on this matter. Nobody knows the deadline for applying to this Fund, and nobody knows how to fill out the application.

The municipalities, industries and organizations do not know how to proceed. Treasury Board and DREE officials are passing the buck. Some claim that someone is working on a form; others say that no form is being prepared. I was told a month ago that a press conference would be held in the near future to announce, among other things, the deadline for the submission of projects and forms, etc. That was a month ago.

Meanwhile, we hear that a number of projects have been submitted. How? Nobody knows. To whom? Nobody knows. Who are the resource people? Nobody knows. It reeks of patronage.

Mr. Speaker, $87.3 million are at stake. If the Government wants to regain some credibility, if it wants to demonstrate a certain openness on this issue, it must set the rules of the game quickly. It should seek the participation of all Hon. Members in the 04 area, including those in the Opposition.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSTRUCTION OF NORTHERN AIRSTRIPS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has announced the construction of five new airstrips in the North to let interceptors operate in the Arctic. This is supposed to enhance Canadian sovereignty, but will it? The Americans helped select those sites. They are picking up half the cost of constructing the airstrips. American F-15s will share these strips and operate from Canadian soil. How does that enhance Canadian sovereignty? What will happen when an American fighter takes off from Canadian soil and spots an American submarine sticking up through the ice in our waters? Will the pilot report the sighting to Canada or just wave as he flies over the Polar 8 icebreaker?

We should be looking after our own airspace with our own aircraft. But the Government refuses to live up to this responsibility. Instead, it is content to pay lip service to Canadian sovereignty and let the Americans use our territory as they see fit.

THE ECONOMY

INVESTORS' CONFIDENCE IN CANADA

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, today in Canada we have the economic paradox of falling interest rates and a rising dollar. The Canadian dollar is at its highest level since 1984 and the bank rate is at its lowest level since March, 1974. What better demonstration of the world's growing confidence in the Canadian economy and policies of our Government?

Investment counsellors throughout the world are saying that once again Canada is a good place to invest. I hope that will encourage the Bank of Canada this week to cut interest rates again, both to stimulate our economy further and to produce more jobs, and I hope that such a reduction in the rate will at last shame our major chartered banks and trust companies into cutting their credit card rates.

THE ARTS

URGENT NEED TO SAVE NATIONAL THEATRE SCHOOL

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, the management of the National Theatre School is in its death throes.

The management of the National Theatre School is a daily source of dissatisfaction; no new program can be undertaken because of a lack of financial resources; the teachers are underpaid; there is a $400,000 deficit . . . soon, if the liquidity problems come to a head, it will be too late to save the institution.

These are the words of the school's resigning President, Mr. Jean-Louis Roux. A few weeks ago, wardrobe master François Barbeau resigned as director of the technical section after 25 years with the school. Naturally, it has even been recommended or suspected that the English section of the school, which is a unique institution, move to Toronto, and I believe that this could mean the end of the school as such.

I therefore ask the Minister responsible for this sector and all of the ministers from Quebec to urge the Government to find a solution as quickly as possible. I know that the Federal Government is generous with its subsidies, but I would also like it to show some leadership to breathe new life into a school which has done Quebecers and all Canadians proud, both in this country and abroad.

WAR CRIMINALS

PUBLIC REACTION TO DESCHÊNES COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, during the past several days I have paid particular attention to the reaction of Canadians to the Deschênes Commission Report and the Government's response. I think it fair to say that it was widely praised by the eastern European community and the Canadian Jewish Congress, knowing the issue was finally addressed and discovering the number of war criminals was fewer than expected. They applauded the "Made in Canada" solution to the problem of dealing with suspected war criminals by the Canadian justice system and the RCMP. To quote the President of the Ukrainian Canadian Committee from his home in Saskatoon: "We agree with the Government that rather than having these people denaturalized and deported they should be tried in Canada using Canadian rules of justice".

I congratulate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) for his excellent work. Because the Government had the courage to address this difficult issue future generations of Canadians will be proud that our justice system finally put this issue to rest.

APARTHEID

SPONSORSHIP OF INDIAN CHIEFS' VISIT TO SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Norm Wallace and his South African foundation are sending four Indian chiefs to South Africa to dramatize the plight of Canadian Indians. It is a nice touch. The chiefs will certainly be noticed, perhaps even praised as freedom fighters by a white regime which denies freedom to its own citizens in a land where freedom, if uttered too provocatively, can bring death.

Racism is a common enemy shared by both Indians and Africans alike. However, it is a weakened adversary in Canada while in South Africa it is mightily armed. Those who make common cause with that enemy will have found their worst enemy, themselves. The Assembly of First Nations understands that. Perhaps the chiefs will learn.

SUPPORT FOR CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise today and commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for the bold initiative he took in bringing the free trade debate to the House yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jepson: The Prime Minister has a clear vision for Canada and hopefully this will put the political rhetoric of the Opposition and the negative media hype to rest for good.

As we enter the final half of our Government's first mandate it would be so easy for the Prime Minister and our Government to avoid any initiatives which would leave the Government politically vulnerable. However, the Prime Minister and our Government have faith in Canadians and the entrepreneurial spirit to step boldly into the new frontier by negotiating a new trading arrangement with the U.S. This will not only protect but create thousands of new jobs which will ensure the future of Canada's younger generation. Leadership clearly must come from the top and I commend the Prime Minister for acting in such a decisive manner, whereas the opposition Parties are clearly confused and divided on this most important issue.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

FUTURE OF TORONTO POSTAL STATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, this morning I received a letter from a citizen concerned about the closure of Postal Station "A" on Front Street in Toronto. I would like to read the letter to the House. It says:

> I contacted the station manager, who did confirm that the station, one of the largest in the country, was being permanently closed March 28. I asked him when we would be getting notice of this in our postal boxes and he said we wouldn't, that the only notice would be on the outer doors of the station and they wouldn't be going up until the day of March 28.
> I told him I thought this lack of previous notice was somewhat unfair and he replied that he only carries out Canada Post Corporation policy, he neither sets them nor offers opinions on them.

What kind of policy is that? Now the Canada Post Corporation does not even give notice of a closure. Shame on the Post Office!

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

CONGRATULATIONS EXTEND TO ROLAND JONES OF LOURDES-DU-BLANC-SABLON

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as unbelievable as it may seem, it is possible for a deaf-mute to work in a radio station. To wit, that young resident of Lourdes-du-Blanc-Sablon on Quebec's lower North Shore, who chose that kind of work to earn a living despite his lifelong handicap. He is a unique case in this country's radio broadcasting community.

Roland Jones is 24 and has been attracted to radio for a long time. When he learned that he could be gainfully employed at the Blanc-Sablon community radio station, thanks to a Canadian job development program, Roland Jones took that chance. The station manager, Mr. Alain Vaillancourt, had given his word that he would take him on his staff at the end of that program.

So Mr. Jones is now hosting a radio program between 1 and 4 p.m. Since he has been at his job, reports Mr. Alain Vaillancourt, Mr. Jones has brightened up to a surprising degree. His parents can hardly believe the extent to which he has evolved. His general behaviour has changed, all due to his job.

On behalf of the Prime Minister and Hon. Member for Manicouagan, (Mr. Mulroney) and on behalf of all of us, I say: Bravo, Roland Jones!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN EMBASSY IN FINLAND—CALL FOR RETENTION

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Government's decision to close the Canadian Embassy in Finland has aroused much reaction. My friend, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and I raised questions about the decision with the Minister the day after it was announced. The Finnish- Canadian Cultural Federation expressed feelings of indignation and shame over this seemingly arbitrary decision which ignored vitally important political and diplomatic considerations.

I explored these considerations in the adjournment debate on February 9 of this year citing reasons why the decision to close our Embassy in Helsinki is a mistake. The Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association responded to these concerns last Wednesday evening with a unanimous motion asking the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reverse his decision.

I express the pleasure of many Canadians, especially my Finnish-Canadian constituents, at the news that the Minister is reconsidering the decision. I urge him to reassert Canada's support, in the words of the Finnish-Canadian Cultural Federation, for "little powers such as Finland" by announcing that the Canadian Embassy in Helsinki will continue to work for Finnish-Canadian friendship and good international relations generally.

AQUACULTURE

PROSPECTS FOR FISH FARMING INDUSTRY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, you do not hunt cows any more, you farm them, as people have done for thousands of years. However, we still hunt fish. Fish farming is a better idea. It is more productive and will, in the years to come, provide a better quality, lower cost food product.

World-wide about 9 million tonnes, or 12 per cent of over-all fish production, is farmed rather than hunted. Canadian entrepreneurs and investors are to be applauded for recognizing the natural advantages which exist in Canada, especially British Columbia, for aquaculture. By 1990 it is expected that British Columbia farmed salmon production will reach 25,000 tonnes valued at $200 million. On the East Coast cultured shellfish production is important. Let us, Sir, encourage this trend and do everything possible to facilitate this exciting new industry.

POSITION OF LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte Marie): Mr. Speaker, we had another example yesterday of this Government's and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) crummy behaviour. Imagine, the chairman of a labour union summoning its members to report on their collective agreements negotiations. And once the meeting is opened, imagine the union chairman telling the members: "Now that you are here, I am sorry, but I cannot give you any explanations as to the contents of the negotiations because this could be prejudicial to the process." Mr. Speaker, such naive behaviour on the part of the Prime Minister and the Government is unacceptable in my view, and yesterday we heard about our leader's position. The Liberal Leader was clear, accurate and specific as to our position concerning the free trade negotiations.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY

FREE TRADE—NATIONAL DEFENCE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Prime Minister. In his remarks on free trade yesterday the Prime Minister did not deal with the question of Canadian sovereignty, our sovereignty, our national independence.

Now it is clear that United States President Reagan knows full well what he wants from these negotiations on free trade and acid rain—that Canada sacrifice its independence in defence matters. Does the Prime Minister know that Canadians will never let the United States dictate our defence policy in exchange for a free trade agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): To begin with, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has just made two inaccurate statements. First, he is saying that I did not deal with the national sovereignty issue yesterday, while in fact my colleagues and I talked about it at length and said that the whole process was aimed at protecting and strengthening our national sovereignty.

Second, with respect to his suggestion concerning President Reagan—

An Hon. Member: That is false.

Mr. Mulroney: There again it is false. There is no link whatsoever between our national defence commitments and any other aspect of our national life. With respect to the Government of Canada, there has been no reference to this under any circumstance by anybody whatever.

INTRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER ON DEFENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the link between free trade and defence. The responses this morning by the Prime Minister's Ministers and officials were very cautious. We have been promised the Government's White Paper on Defence for a number of months. Will the Prime Minister be revealing the defence policy to Members of the House of Commons before his meeting with the President of the United States in early April, or will the President be bringing the document with him?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me say for the record that there is no link, nor has any link ever been sought or mentioned, between a question of national defence and any other question on the bilateral agenda. No linkage has ever been suggested in my presence or in the presence of any of our Ministers or government officials.

In regard to the White Paper for which the Minister of National Defence is responsible, my hon. friend knows that since we came to office we have already increased our conventional commitment to NATO, we have already sent 1,200 more men and women to NATO, and we hope to do more. This is not a neutral country. Under this Government, this country stands clearly on the side of the allies and freedom, and the White Paper will reflect precisely that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question on free trade and sovereignty. Yesterday in the House in their speeches on free trade, the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade in effect confessed a total lack of a regional economic equality development policy. What the Government has done is slash our own programs. Yesterday the Prime Minister called on the free trade agreement, if he obtains it with the United States, to rescue our disadvantaged regions. If Canada's policy of regional development is not on the negotiating table, as the Prime Minister undertook yesterday, why, in the motion on free trade before the House this afternoon, is there not one line or one word on regional equality and regional development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman says that yesterday we confessed a lack of regional economic development policy. That statement is utterly false and my right hon. friend knows it. I referred to the desirability of a free trade agreement with the United States precisely because it was instrumental in helping us correct some of the historic regional disparities in Canada. I do not know why the hon. gentleman persists in trying to mislead the House and mislead Canadians.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REPORTED RCMP INVESTIGATION OF MEMBER OF MINISTER'S STAFF

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, there are many serious questions about yesterday's statement that we want to pursue, but first I would ask the Minister to clarify reports that have been issued this morning about irregularities in her office. Will the Minister confirm or deny the report that a member of her staff is now under RCMP investigation? Will she tell us if, in fact, that report is true?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that from a routine internal audit there was some suggestion of possible irregularities. That has been turned over to the RCMP for investigation. It would be inappropriate to comment further at this time.

QUERY CONCERNING NATURE OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I respect the Deputy Prime Minister's answer, but could he give assurance to the House that the actions which are being investigated have no bearing whatsoever on the official functions, duties, and responsibilities of the Minister's office, considering the important and sensitive responsibilities in relation to the international trade issue before the House? Can we have those assurances this afternoon?

• (1425)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's comments are somewhat unrelated to the issue at hand. I can assure the Hon. Member that the RCMP will investigate the matter thoroughly and any recommendations which are brought forth, I am sure, will be taken under serious consideration.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—IMPACT ON DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade or to the Minister of Agriculture. This morning all Members of Parliament received an urgent note from the National Dairy Council of Canada. I would like to ask whether or not the Minister agrees with what the National Dairy Council said:

—in spite of commitment by the Government to the farm marketing boards and to supply management, free flow of dairy products from the U.S.A. into Canada will result in:

1. Substantial threat to Canadian manufacturers of dairy products
2. Probable destruction of the dairy farming industry
3. Serious loss of employment and employment opportunities for Canadians.

Does the Minister agree that this would be the consequence and impact of an across-the-board removal of tariff and non-tariff barriers on the dairy industry of Canada as the National Dairy Council is saying to us this morning?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think I have dealt with this issue on numerous occasions across the country and, indeed, in quite detailed responses to questions yesterday during the Question Period and to a greater extent, perhaps, in a speech yesterday. There is a very clear commitment on behalf of the Government that the supply management systems which exist in this country will remain in place, and attached with that, if one understands the reasons and the history attached to the various marketing boards we have in this country, in order for them to continue to function in an efficient and effective manner as they have in the past, they would require the retention of certain underpinnings which are attached to them. So when I make those comments it is in recognition that if they are required to maintain a marketing board's efficiency and continued use on behalf of the producers, processors and consumers, then, of course, they will have to remain.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—IMPACT ON DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): But, Mr. Speaker, this letter was written after the Minister made his speech yesterday. He did not respond to the question of the council. Even though he did not agree with dairy industry officials and milk producers, I should like to know whether the Minister is now prepared to give the House of Commons the proof that free trade will benefit dairy producers and the dairy industry. Can he prove this? Otherwise, why negotiate a free trade arrangement concerning Canada's dairy industry?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are not negotiating that particular issue. We made it clear in the contents of the motion, we made it clear in this House and across the country on numerous occasions, and we will continue to say so. One of the problems is that a number of people, for some reason which I fail to understand, seem to take great amusement in continuing to build anxiety among a community which does not need it. They are prompted by comments which are made from time to time in this place. It is further complicated and egged on by questions we are receiving from across the floor today.

CANADIAN EGG MARKETING AGENCY FORECAST

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is the National Dairy Council of Canada which is concerned, not just the Opposition, and this letter was written after the Minister spoke in the House of Commons yesterday. I want to know the answer to the question I put and I also want to know whether or not the Minister agrees with CEMA, the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency, which wrote a few days ago to all Members of Parliament that if we had free trade on eggs and egg products, our economy would lose about $124 million and 3,000 jobs per year and our industry would lose between two-thirds and three-quarters of our producers? Does the Minister agree with this since the Minister for International Trade said herself that non-tariff barriers are now on the table? Does he agree or does he not?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are an awful lot of "ifs" there. May I add one more? If the Canadian Dairy Commission, the dairy farmers of Canada, CEMA, and some of the other people would spend a little more time listening to what we have been saying in this House and what we are putting into the record, we might be better off.

INFORMAL MEETINGS WITH QUEBEC ON CONSTITUTION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Government announced that a First Ministers' meeting will be held on April 30 to discuss the Constitution and Quebec. However, we are struck once again by the lack of any specific commitment on the part of the Government. This morning, Senator Murray said: "We are still in the preliminary stages, and discussions will be informal". I would like to ask the Prime Minister how this Government, after two and a half years of promises and hedging on those promises, can announce another informal meeting without putting its own proposals on the table.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may know, or perhaps he has forgotten, that it is not up to the federal Government to conclude a bilateral constitutional agreement with the Government of Quebec. Under the constitutional accord, it takes the approval of seven Governments with 50 per cent of the population. With the co-operation of the Government of Quebec, we have started a series of consultations that have led to increasingly valid and important definitions. Since the First Ministers, in the circumstances, have had to spend more time on the issue of trade with the United States, we have met four times so far to discuss the issue, and two more meetings are scheduled. I repeat, because of the circumstances, there has been less emphasis on getting ahead with the constitutional issue. Considering yesterday's debate and this evening's vote, I thought that, since the constitutional question as it affects aboriginal peoples will be dealt with in two weeks' time, it would be a good thing to call a meeting of First Ministers in order to get some views on the constitutional question as it concerns Quebec. I think the time is ripe for the Premiers of the provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada to give this matter further consideration.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think we have to admit there is a question of leadership here. Mr. Bourassa has made his proposals known. The Liberal Party got into the act last year, and even the NDP announced its position recently. It is certainly high time Canadians knew where the federal Government stands.

Mr. La Salle: They remember your position.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I want to ask the Prime Minister, who today seems to be full of good intentions: Could he commit himself now to tabling his own proposals at the meeting on April 30 with the Premiers?

Mr. La Salle: I remember.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have some very specific ideas about the formula we would like to see in connection with Quebec's approval of the constitutional accord. To me and my colleagues, it is very important for our national unity that Quebec be able to give its approval as soon as possible to the constitutional document. However, under the constitutional agreement concluded by the previous Government, it is not enough for the Parliament of Canada to agree with the proposals. We need the approval of the provincial Premiers. We are meeting with and trying to persuade the Premiers, including for instance the Premier of Ontario, who is—

An Hon. Member: What is your position?

Mr. Mulroney: He is asking what our position is. The important thing is to find out whether the Premiers will endorse a joint proposal. The Government of Ontario, for instance, in the absence of Quebec, and I'm just naming one province, has a very important role to play. We want to know, and the provincial Premiers want to know, whether we can agree on and then ratify, a document that will finally make it possible for Quebec to become a member of the great Canadian family once more.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and relates as well to the constitutional propositions concerning Quebec. Can the Prime Minister reply to the previous question? Can he be more specific and tell the House what specific constitutional propositions he intends to make to Quebec? We would like to have an answer to that question.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of tabling specific proposals today. It would be up to me and the provincial premiers to discuss them, as agreed within the process ratified by my provincial colleagues in Edmonton. We will discuss this during a meeting at Meach Lake.

BASIC GUIDELINES CONCERNING CONSTITUTIONAL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister at least let us know the basic guidelines concerning these constitutional discussions, basic guidelines which would make it possible for Quebec to adhere to Canada with honour and enthusiasm? Is the Prime Minister prepared to follow the example of the New Democratic Party and acknowledge the uniqueness of Quebec?

An Hon. Member: And why not?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last thing I would do would be to follow the example of the New Democrats. If my friend . . . We know what that brought the New Democrats in the past, and we know exactly what is going to happen in the next election. Just wait and see what the people of Quebec have in store for you. You will have nice surprises in the next election. If you want to know more about our basic philosophy, read my Sept-Îles speech and you will see there is a possibility of agreement between Quebec and Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF COMMANDER IN CHIEF OF NORTH AMERICAN AEROSPACE DEFENSE COMMAND

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw the attention of Members to the presence in our gallery today of General John L. Piotrowski, Commander in Chief of the North American Aerospace Defense Command.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

TOBACCO—HEALTH HAZARD INQUIRY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have in my hand a Statement of Claim filed in the Federal Court of Canada alleging interference by the Minister in a departmental investigation of tobacco as a hazardous product. Can the Minister honestly tell the House that tobacco is not a health hazard? If he cannot, then why did he stop his Department's investigation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first, I do not know how I could fulfil my responsibilities as a Minister without interfering in the operations of my Department. Second, there is no investigation in which I could have interfered in this particular case had I been so inclined. Third, I wrote to Dr. Pipe, head of Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada, stating that I am willing to consider the use of the Hazardous Products Act to regulate tobacco products but that a comprehensive tobacco policy is being developed under the leadership of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and that if the Hazardous Products Act is to be used to regulate tobacco advertising then we are certainly ready to participate in that way.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR TOBACCO INVESTIGATION UNDER PROVISIONS OF HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering that he also has the right to invoke the necessity of an inquiry and reverse the decision made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs under the Hazardous Products Act, is he willing today, after all his rhetoric about the tobacco issue on television all across the country, to reverse the unfortunate decision made by his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and to launch an inquiry on the use of tobacco under the Hazardous Products Act?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not hear what my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, said. First, there is nothing to reverse if no action had to be taken. We have said many times in the House that we are working as a Government on a plan regarding the reduction of smoking and the health hazards that are obviously related to smoking. We have said that we will come forward with a comprehensive plan.

Mr. Marchi: All smoke and no fire.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): We might even smoke the Hon. Member out.

Mr. Marchi: Make my day!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Make your day—it would be an improvement on anything we see across the way now.

In all seriousness, and coming back to the point, the Government obviously wants to come forward with a comprehensive plan. Part of that plan is to look at the matter of agriculture, which we will be doing shortly.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT OF TARIFF REDUCTIONS ON AUTO PACT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. It arises out of yesterday's debate on free trade. In the debate the Minister confirmed that it was the Government's intention to reduce tariffs to zero on Canada-U.S. trade over a period of 10 years to 15 years. Can the Minister say what will be left of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement and its provisions which provide for production in Canada, if tariffs on automobiles are reduced to zero over the course of the next 10 years?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear in the House that the Auto Pact is not on the table. Again, one more time, the NDP is trying to do Peter Murphy's job for him, trying to drag the Auto Pact on to the table. May I remind the Hon. Member that tariffs have been steadily reduced within the framework of the Auto Pact over the last 22 years? As I said yesterday in debate, tariffs have come down markedly over the last few years, and the Auto Pact has still generated a great deal of production and jobs for Ontario.

Mr. Cassidy: It does not matter whether or not the Auto Pact is on the table, because the Government, in the free trade talks, is pulling the rug out from under the Auto Pact in that it intends to reduce the tariffs to zero.

INCENTIVE FOR FOREIGN AUTOMOBILE PRODUCERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister. What incentive do foreign automobile producers have to abide by the provisions of the auto agreement and to ensure a substantial proportion of Canadian content in production in Canada, if there will be no tariff barriers between the two countries because the Government is reducing automobile tariffs to zero and leaving no incentive for companies to abide by the Auto Pact?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): I am really surprised, Mr. Speaker, by the insensitivity of that question. The incentive which will exist for the automobile industry is secure and enhanced access to the wealthy, rich North American market.

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST THAT PROTOCOL OF AGREEMENT WITH PERSONS SUFFERING EXPROPRIATION AT MIRABEL BE RESPECTED

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for the Canada Lands Corporation in Mirabel. The expropriated owners and occupying tenants in Mirabel are very concerned following the Public Works officials, visit to Mirabel about rumors that the latter would review the draft agreement signed in March 1985 by the former Minister, the Hon. Member for Joliette. Can the Minister assure my electors that the draft agreement signed by the former Minister on behalf of the Government will be honoured to the letter and that the estimates earmarked for a new agricultural impetus will not be slashed in order that the last group of former expropriated owners and tenants will be dealt with as the first one was?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to point out that business is going on as usual. I should like to say to the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau that there is no way that the draft agreement signed by the Mirabel expropriated owners and the Department of Public Works in March 1985 could be changed. Since 1984, that is within a short two and a half years, this Government has signed 1,100 purchase bids representing 80 per cent of the whole operation. We expect that this operation will be completed before the end of this year.

AIRPORTS

FIRE-FIGHTING SERVICES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this penny wise and pound foolish Government has ordered Transport Canada to take the unprecedented move of lowering the safety standards for fire-fighters at Canadian airports to save $1.5 million. There will be no overtime or no replacement of anyone who is sick for fire-fighters at Canadian airports. Does the Minister of Transport think it is worth it to smudge our superior safety record at Canadian airports, all for the sake of $1.5 million, to violate our own safety standards, and to threaten the safety of the travelling public in Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I certainly do not want the Hon. Member to have an attack of anything, Mr. Speaker. There were 657 fire-fighters or persons in the CFR service in Canada six months ago. There are 657 there now, the same number as before. Some have been relocated in areas where they were needed. There has been no reduction in the numbers.

ICAO standards which apply to airports in respect of fire protection have been observed. Canada is one of the leaders in the world in that respect. As a matter of fact, we ensure that the standards are observed at all airports, not just large international airports. Their job is to provide a fire-free corridor to an aircraft if there is an accident. The standards deal with the capacity to deliver water for foam production, and those standards are maintained everywhere. The hon. gentleman should not get too upset. The quarrel is about overtime, when people have to be called in for overtime performance. There is a savings of $1.5 million. No safety standards are being breached or lowered.

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: This is absolutely correct. That is the information I have from the professionals in my Department. I do not propose to interfere, because I will be accused of interfering with my Department, just as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has been accused of interfering with his Department. Imagine, a Minister actually interfering with his Department!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, today we see the outrageous situation of the fire-fighters—

An Hon. Member: You are a clown, George.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker: I will get to that in a minute. Today we see the outrageous situation of the fire-fighters requesting and receiving waivers to sign to "relieve them of responsibilities for the consequences they fear could result from these government cuts", and the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association saying certain pilots of jumbo jets may refuse to land at certain Canadian airports. I ask the Minister of Transport, speaking of interfering with his Department, whether this is the policy of the federal Government—to freeze employees, to have 657 persons with no overtime or no replacement if they are sick?

Can he explain to the House why one airport in Canada received a 20 per cent increase in employees, and that airport happened to be in his own riding? Is it to make up for the international traffic which he hijacked from Gander last year to prop up his own popularity?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is shocking news which the Hon. Member has just given me about St. John's. This must have slipped through without my notice.

With reference to the CFR service there are various categories. Category 9 is the highest, and it depends upon the length and the size of aircraft. Toronto is a category 9. St. John's was a category 6 but is now changing to a category 7 because a year and a half ago, when my predecessor was there with his usual scrupulous fairness, they noticed larger aircraft and more traffic going into St. John's airport. Therefore, they are changing from a category 6 to a category 7. I did my best to oppose this, but I was overruled by the Department!

When it comes to waivers, I wonder who will get a waiver from the hon. gentleman on his irresponsible statements.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES COMMITMENT—CANADIAN DEFENCE POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the Prime Minister on the question of the report by American officials that President Reagan might be seeking to alter Canadian defence policy in return for living up to his commitments on acid rain. The Prime Minister made a semi-forthright statement in his answer to the Leader of the Opposition. Could the Prime Minister assure the House, if such a linkage is sought by the President, that he will speak up forcefully against any kind of blackmail of that nature and reassert Canada's right to have the United States do the right thing on acid rain because it is the right thing, not because we do anything in return?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has already made it abundantly clear that there is no linkage between Canada's position on acid rain and our intentions with regard to defence. We expect the Americans to act on acid rain because it is the right thing to do. We intend to defend Canada, after so many years of neglect, because it is the right thing to do.

NEW BRUNSWICK'S COMMITMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. It has to do with another form of blackmail that he has been experiencing with respect to acid rain, namely, the position being taken by the Government of New Brunswick concerning its commitment to live up to the agreement made in 1985. Can the Prime Minister tell us that he will not accept, on behalf of the Canadian Government, any linkage which may be suggested by the Premier or the Government of New Brunswick either with respect to Point Lepreau, the second reactor proposal, or with respect to moneys that were never in the original agreement in 1985?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the Government of Canada could not be clearer on this subject. We have said that we will not countenance any such linkage. We do not want our negotiations with either the Americans or with the provinces on acid rain to be reduced to horse trading. I understand that the sub-committee of Parliament on acid rain, of which the Hon. Member is a member, will be issuing an invitation to Premier Hatfield to appear before the sub-committee to discuss some of these concerns in tandem with my own negotiations with New Brunswick. I am sure the Hon. Member will use that occasion to pose a similar question to the Premier.

THE CONSTITUTION

INCLUSION OF CULLEN-COUTURE AGREEMENT FOR QUEBEC—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Right Hon. Prime Minister has to do with the constitutional negotiations and a possible solution as he had hoped designed to make Quebecers want to adhere with honour and enthusiasm to the Canadian Constitution. I wish to direct to him a specific question. During this conference, will the Prime Minister of Canada back up the Quebec Premier, Mr. Robert Bourassa, in his efforts to convince his counterparts that the power now enjoyed by Quebec on immigration matters under the Cullen-Couture Agreement should be entrenched in the Constitution? Can the Quebec Premier count on the support of the Prime Minister of Canada in this endeavour?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, can anybody count on the Official Opposition's support? Can anybody count on the Ontario Government's support? Perhaps. We shall see. It is important that we should consult in an effort to find an appropriate formula for Quebec to join the Constitution. At the moment there is a precise formula which requires the provincial Premiers' preliminary approval. Senator Murray has initiated a very productive dialogue with all the Ministers, and I intend to do likewise with the provincial Premiers in order to speed up the process somewhat.

QUEBEC'S DEMANDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is forgetting that he has a leadership role to play. He is no longer a mediator, but a sort of fireman with hoses but unfortunately, no water. Would the Prime Minister . . . The Prime Minister has promised Quebecers to do everything possible for them to adhere with honour and enthusiasm to the Canadian Constitution. The Quebec Government, through its Minister, has made very concrete recommendations. Now, could the Prime Minister indicate first whether he will support the Bourassa Government which is seeking first the power to select immigrants and second full compensation, should it decide to opt out of the new established programs? What is the Prime Minister's thinking on this? What is he planning to do during the constitutional conference?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, it is not a constitutional conference. It is quite a regular meeting. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East exclaims: "Ah"! Well, she should read the press release. It is quite a logical follow-up on the provincial Premiers' conference which was held last year in Edmonton. I have asked the Premiers to meet to seek their support and their views on a possible formula which would be acceptable to them and to the Parliament of Canada. We are looking for a solution. Under the previous Government, it took several years. Here, in Canada, finding an appropriate formula took 120 years and now we are precisely seeking the right one for Quebec.

I am questioned about my commitment to Quebec. I make this unequivocal commitment: I can promise you that Quebec will not be sold out deep into the night and kept out of the Constitutional process.

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS ACT

TOBACCO—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whose answers to questions posed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East I listened to very carefully. I have the statement of claim that she has. Does the Minister deny that on May 5, 1986, an application was made for an investigation, or is he denying that after that application for an investigation was made no investigation was pursued?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Neither, Mr. Speaker. There are no provisions under the Act for a formal request for an investigation. The attorneys or whoever prepared that document seem to have that director confused with the director of investigation and research in the Combines Branch. There is within my Department a civil servant responsible for the Hazardous Products Act who reports to me. We had a request to exclude tobacco advertising under the Act. As I reported to Dr. Pipe who heads Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada, in a letter of last September, an over-all tobacco policy is being developed under the leadership of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and that we are perfectly willing within that context to have the Hazardous Products Act used for those purposes. There was no investigation that I can either turn on or turn off.

REQUEST THAT TOBACCO BE DECLARED HAZARDOUS PRODUCT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister would agree that something that kills 30,000 Canadians a year is a hazardous product. My question is very simple. Would it not contribute to a comprehensive policy against smoking to declare immediately that tobacco is a hazardous product?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I suspect that more people are killed by cars each year. Should we outlaw them? There has to be a consideration of all the factors. Yes, advertising is one factor. Another factor has to do with the agricultural sector, another one has to do with the small business sector, yet another one has to do with the tax and revenue implications.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Apparently the New Democrats would rather talk than listen, Mr. Speaker. It involves a number of factors and, therefore, there will be a comprehensive program brought in by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As I have just said, I have indicated the willingness in our Department to have it included.

Mr. McCurdy: Do it.

EMPLOYMENT

SINGLE INDUSTRY COMMUNITIES' CONCERNS

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the Canadian Single Industry Communities Report that was tabled last week. Could the Minister tell this House after reviewing the report, which indicates 20 years of mismanagement by the Liberal Government, on 800 communities, what steps our Government will be taking to try to address the concerns of single industry communities across the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is a very good question. Indeed, last week, I received a copy of a report by the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council on single-industry communities. Within the framework of the Employment Strategy, one of the main components for which we are providing $80 million in funding this year deals especially with high unemployment communities, where the development of new economic initiatives is essential. I therefore think that we are carrying on in the same direction, and already the results lead us to believe that the thrust of those community development programs is excellent.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CREE-NASKAPI AGREEMENT—OBSERVANCE BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. As the Minister knows, an independent commission headed by the distinguished Justice Rejean Paul has charged the Government of Canada with the legal and moral failure to live up to its financial obligations related to the Cree-Naskapi Act, an agreement which was passed by this House in 1984. How does the Minister of Indian Affairs respond to these charges of immoral and illegal behaviour by the Government of Canada in relation to Indian people and an agreement passed by this House?

• (1500)

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I refer the Hon. Member to the statement I tabled along with the Cree-Naskapi Commission report. Given that the Cree indicated today they intend to bring this case before the courts, further comment would be inappropriate at this time.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the Minister's statement with respect to the report. I am asking him when he will stop manufacturing excuses and begin to carry out his constitutional responsibility to the Cree people of northern Quebec?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that he is putting me in a very difficult position given that the case is now proceeding to court. I again refer him and other Hon. Members to the statement I tabled with the Cree-Naskapi report.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that in order for the forthcoming First Ministers' conference to succeed the Government must be seen as respecting its obligations, will the Prime Minister undertake that Canada's first self-government agreement, namely, the Cree-Naskapi Act and the agreements made under it, will be honoured in future by his Government?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my reply to the Hon. Member has to be the same as I gave to the Hon. Member preceding him. I would like to comment on it, but I can only refer him to the statement which I tabled in this House along with the Cree-Naskapi Commission report.

HONOURING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, since that argument indicates the Government's strategy regarding negotiations with the aboriginal people, namely, as soon as they have devolved to get away from them as far and as fast as possible, is the Government committed in principle to honouring the Cree-Naskapi Agreement?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, he again puts myself and the Government in a very difficult position. I cannot comment when there is an intent to take the Government of Canada to court. Once again I refer him to the actions taken by this Government over two and a half years regarding assistance to aboriginal people, and I refer him to the statement tabled with the Cree-Naskapi Commission report.

Mr. Speaker: The Member for York Centre, one question, please.

STUDY OF ENTRY TO CANADA—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Deschênes Commission itself commissioned a study on how Nazi war criminals got into Canada in the first place. Mr. Justice Deschênes recommended that report be given the widest possible circulation, yet the Government has not made it public. Does the Minister intend to make it public? If so, when?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the report referred to is one of the research documents turned over by Mr. Justice Deschênes to the Government. As a matter of fact the Department of Justice is not yet in possession of these documents. I am informed that the Privy Council Office has the documents and is reviewing them in accordance with the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act. This is an open Government—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —I may add, unlike the previous Government. We are quite interested in this very sensitive issue and I understand the purpose of the Hon. Member in asking the question. We are very interested in making sure there is disclosure as far as legally possible. This will be reviewed in that context and I think the Hon. Member yesterday, according to press reports, acknowledged that there are areas which might have to be removed from the report.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question. The Hon. Member for London East.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS—TESTS RECOMMENDED IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question today is directed to the Minister of Health. Yesterday we learned that the U.S. is recommending voluntary blood tests for any individual who had blood transfusions between the years 1978 to 1985, particularly for those who are "sexually active". Can the Minister tell this House whether or not the Government is contemplating a similar recommendation?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in looking at the press reports of the U.S. action I would say that almost all those who had blood transfusions prior to the start of blood products being heat tested, or examined for the AIDS virus, would have had a blood test. There might be some who were not covered by that medical action. The National Advisory Committee on AIDS is meeting in Ottawa, I believe right at this time. These points are on its agenda. If it makes a recommendation from the point of view of health and professionalism, I will obviously consider it. However, I would think that in most cases Canadians would have been covered because of medical procedures undertaken for recipients of blood or blood products.

WORDING OF MEMBER'S QUESTION

Mr. Speaker: I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members a matter which occupied the Chair about a week ago as a consequence of a question asked by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). Because of the words used in that question, the Chair felt it necessary to intervene and caution all Hon. Members to be very careful in the words they used in case they might be imputing racist motives to another Hon. Member. In that particular case the Hon. Member whose statement was referred to by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville was the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom). Since that intervention the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville has very courteously come to see the Chair and we have had a discussion. I should also say that the Chair has had the opportunity to have a discussion with the Hon. Member for Willowdale. I want Hon. Members to accept that I am completely satisfied that in the question posed by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, which I am quick to point out was rephrased at the request of the Chair, there was no intention whatsoever to impute racial motives to the Hon. Member for Willowdale or any other Hon. Member. I want that on the record. As well, I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville and the Hon. Member for Willowdale for their conduct and co-operation throughout this matter.

I should advise the House that there are two rulings which I must now deliver. The first concerns a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin).

PRIVILEGE

APPLICATION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: On February 19, 1987, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix rose on a question of privilege concerning the application or lack of application of the Official Languages Act to Parliament, in particular to the House of Commons.

May I begin by stating that the function of the Speaker is to preside over the House of Commons and to decide upon procedural questions whether they be interpretations of the Standing Orders or matters relating to privilege or order.

What the Hon. Member for Charlevoix raised on February 19, 1987, is, I submit, not a procedural question but a question of legal interpretation. The extent of the application of any law is a question that the courts should be asked to decide and not the Speaker. The Honourable Member quoted several legal opinions when raising his question, which adds emphasis to my point that this is a legal matter, not a procedural one.

Beauchesne's 5th Edition, page 61, Citation 71(5) states: "The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law". The reason for this is obvious. A court may very well have to rule on the same question of law someday and clearly a court would not be bound by a Speaker's interpretation of the general or constitutional law of the land. The Speaker's duty is confined to interpreting the procedures and practices of the House of Commons.

• (1510)

[English]

In his presentation the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin) did not establish how his privilege had been infringed by the application or lack thereof of this law. In other words, the fundamental right to speak freely in the House of Commons has not been abridged.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) pointed out that Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, states:

> Either the English or the French Language may be used by any Person in the Debates of the House of the Parliament of Canada—and both those Languages shall be used in the respective Records and Journals of those Houses;

It goes on to say:

> The Acts of the Parliament of Canada—shall be printed and published in both those Languages.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary read those sections to the Chamber during the intervention. In addition, the Hon. Member for St. Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) stated:

> It is ironic that the application of the Official Languages Act to the House of Commons is being debated, because certainly this is the most bilingual of all federal institutions.

I concur totally with the Hon. Member for St. Jacques on this point.

[Translation]

Whether the Official Languages Act applies to the House of Commons in law or not, clearly and unequivocally, the intent of the Act is being applied. Let me briefly expand on this point.

As most Hon. Members will know, the Commissioner of Official Languages regularly conducts studies of federal institutions to determine the degree to which they apply the Official Languages Act. Such studies have regularly been done of the House of Commons. Indeed, the Chair has recently met personally with the Commissioner to discuss whether activities in the House of Commons are, in fact, adequately conforming to the spirit of the Official Languages Act.

In his most recent audit of the House dated June 1986, the Commissioner of Official Languages stated:

> "The linguistic situation at the House of Commons has improved significantly since our earlier audit in 1979. In a relatively short time, the House Administration has successfully carried out an ambitious program of reform. The program's most notable achievement has been to make the face of Parliament bilingual by rendering all public signs, including engravings in stone on the historic buildings, in both official languages.
> The House of Commons' official languages program is complete and forms an integral part of managers' administrative responsibilities."

He went on to state:

> "Service to the public is available and spontaneously offered in both languages with few exceptions since a good proportion of House employees are bilingual . . . English and French are both widely used as languages of work at the House."

It should be clear from Mr. D'Iberville Fortier's report that the intent of the law is indeed being followed.

[English]

Several Hon. Members who participated in the debate on this question pointed out that all House documents are published in both languages, debates are held in both languages, and simultaneous translation is provided in both the House and in committees. Every care is taken to ensure that all Hon. Members are served in the House in their language of choice and can participate fully in either or both languages. If it were demonstrated that this was not the case in a particular circumstance, then the Chair might be required to intervene, but this is not the point that the Hon. Member for Charlevoix is making in this situation.

From a procedural point of view, the contention of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix that if the Official Languages Act does not apply to the House of Commons his privilege is infringed, is clearly not founded in precedent or practice. Whether or not the Act applies is a legal issue which the courts should decide, not the Speaker. It is clear, however, that Section 133 of the Constitution Act is applied and it is clear that the practices of the House adhere to the intent of the Official Languages Act. The second point, that privilege has been infringed if the Act does not apply, has not been demonstrated. Because of the Constitution Act, and because of the way the House operates, all Hon. Members are assured of their right to participate in debate in their language of choice.

[Translation]

Whether the application of the Official Languages Act should be clarified, or whether or not this Act should be amended or revised, is a question for the House to address and not for the Speaker to dictate.

I thank the Hon. Member for Charlevoix for raising this extremely important issue and I also wish to thank all those who participated, for their useful commentary.

[English]

[Later]

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I want to briefly comment on something which flowed from the argument that was made very ably by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), and which I decided to study. I thought it would be more appropriate to raise this matter when you brought down your judgment. You quite properly outlined the role of the Speaker in such a case and suggested that it was a question of legal interpretation and not one of procedure.

I ask your direction, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the role of the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel in the future. During the course of his argument on the question of privilege, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix quoted from a legal opinion given to the committee by the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel. I refer to page 3617 of Hansard. I read the Standing Orders to determine exactly what was the duty of the Law Clerk of the House of Commons. Standing Order 126 states:

> It is the duty of the Joint Law Clerks of the House to assist Members of the House and deputy heads in drafting legislation; to prepare bills for the Senate after they have been passed by the House; to supervise the printing and arrangement and extending of the Statutes year by year as they are issued at the close of each Parliamentary session; to revise, print and put marginal notes upon all bills; to revise before the third reading all amendments made by select committees, or in Committees of the Whole; and to report to the several Chairman of the various select committees, when requested so to do, any provisions in private bills which are at variance with general Acts on the subjects to which such bills relate or with the usual provisions of private Acts on similar subjects, and any provisions deserving of special attention.

Citation 144 of Beauchesne states:

> The Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel is appointed by Letters Patent under the Great Seal. He has the principal duty of advising the Speaker and officers of the House on all legal matters which do not fall within the sphere of procedure.

Naturally, I have no objection to any Member of the House seeking the best legal counsel available. However, I suggest that the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel may find himself and his office in a position of conflict of interest if he or members of his office give advice to a Member of Parliament outside the Standing Orders, which is then used in the House of Commons to support an argument upon which the Chair is called to rule. I suggest that the prime client of the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel is the Chair and the House of Commons.

I suggest that in future the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel might be well advised to seek leave from the Chair to advise on matters outside the Standing Orders since the Chair and the House are the prime clients. If there is a possibility that the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel will be called upon by the Chair for advice, it is incumbent upon the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel to decline to act for the Member or the committee, and the Member or committee can then, under the budget of the House of Commons, seek counsel elsewhere.

I suggest again that the prime client of the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel is the Speaker and the House of Commons. There is a definite risk of conflict of interest if the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel gives advice which is then brought into the House and used in argument upon which the Chair, the prime client, must rule. I wanted to raise that problem for future reference.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments because I question . . .

Mr. Hamelin: Me too!

Mr. Gauthier: . . . this argument made by the Parliamentary Secretary. I have been working in this House for perhaps 14 years now, and from time to time I have had to consult the Law Clerk about the draft of a legal text I wanted to present to the House. I think this text dates back to a number of years but it is still topical. Its purpose was to make the Official Languages Act clearly and specifically applicable to the House of Commons, the Senate and the Library of Parliament.

At that time, when the text was being drafted, of course we had discussions with the Joint Law Clerks and the Law Clerk of the House. I remember very well having many discussions with Mr. Beaupré, for example, who was Joint Law Clerk. Naturally these discussions related to the application of the proposed legislation, its drafting, the objectives its sponsor wants to propose to colleagues in the House. It also had to do with this very important question, namely whether the Official Languages Act, in its normal interpretation, applies to this institution, the Canadian Parliament. I must confess that in 1976-77, when I began to be interested directly in the very specific question of whether the act applied to the House, the Senate and the Library of Parliament, I learned from a reliable source that it was debatable, that the arguments for and against were probably just as strong, and that the Law Clerks of the Senate and of the House and a number of other legal experts had different views about it. I admit that the decision made by the Chair this afternoon is one which I would qualify as being weighted and very enlightened because, in fact, the Speaker of the House did not rule on this question but said clearly that he is the servant of the House and that all legislation must apply to it.

But I should like to get back to the point raised by the Parliamentary Secretary. In these discussions, in these drafting projects, the Law Clerk of the House is the servant of the House of Commons. Our Standing Order 126 makes that clear: "It is the duty of the Joint Law Clerks of the House to assist Members of the House and deputy heads in drafting legislation."

The first question which comes to mind is this: Is there a law to correct or take such problem under consideration? When I asked this question in 1976, Mr. Speaker, the answer was: We do not know. Have all the statutes of Canada been checked to see if some of them refer to obligations concerning, for example, the application of the Official Languages Act to the House of Commons? The answer was: We do not know. This is when it was discovered that with a computer he had at home the Law Clerk could check all the statutes and pinpoint all existing anomalies in legislation concerning the application of the Official Languages Act. As you may recall, Mr. Speaker, in 1974, 1975 and 1976 your humble servant introduced Bills to correct these anomalies. The Government did accept a few. One of the anomalies which still remains, Mr. Speaker, is what the Law Clerk can or cannot do with respect to his professional advice. Contrary to my colleague, I maintain that the Law Clerk is the servant of Parliament, that parliamentarians are of course one of his constant preoccupations because it is his duty to examine and help us draft the Bills we introduce on a regular basis. And if the Chair—I must confess that I did not have time to research Beauchesne or none of the other well-known authors—but if the Chair wants to take the matter under advisement, namely what is the specific role of the Law Clerk and must he work only for the Chair or, as the Hon. Member has suggested, very closely and particularly in drafting certain parliamentary texts, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this definition will have to be the subject of an in-depth study by the House of Commons in an appropriate committee, and that today we should not conclude, as did the Parliamentary Secretary, that the Law Clerk works only for the Chair, that he does not work for us Members of this House.

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to support the position taken by my colleague that we should certainly not be deprived of the services of the Chair which are also available to this House and therefore to its Members. Any attempt to reduce the role of our Law Clerks would deprive us of invaluable expertise, since they are knowledgeable in a very specialized area, namely this House and similar legislatures. Mr. Speaker, I would ask you to consider the points raised by my colleague, and perhaps we could expand on that. But I would strongly urge you, if not to rule now, not to take the position of the Parliamentary Secretary under consideration, but perhaps to expand and make even more readily accessible to us the exceptional services of the Law Clerks who work for you, therefore for us as well.

Mr. Speaker: I thank Hon. Members for their interventions, especially the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), and the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin). The question is important. I do not know whether the Parliamentary Counsel who recently issued guidelines which would specifically define the obligations and duties of a lawyer in such a situation . . . Anyway I will give the problem careful consideration and after some time, perhaps next week, it will probably be possible to make a comment, if not a ruling, concerning the situation. Again I thank all Hon. Members for their contribution.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF DOCUMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to a response to a question which I received from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. Speaker, my question to the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development related to a document entitled, "The Report of the Commission of the Cree-Naskapi headed by Justice Rejean Paul". It is a public parliamentary document. I asked the Minister for his response to this document. In replying, the Minister said that Hon. Members in the House should refer to a response that he tabled along with the document. I am advised by my office, after it checked with Distribution and Internal Mail Services, that there was no such document tabled with the commission's report.

I do, Sir, have a statement by the Minister, but it is not a public document. It is a statement given by the Minister at the federal-provincial meeting of Ministers on aboriginal constitutional affairs and is dated March 13. This is not a public document. It came to me through the courtesy of participants of that conference who thought I should be aware of its contents.

• (1520)

The purpose of my point of order is to have the Chair or Parliamentary Secretary inquire whether the Minister inadvertently made an error, or, if there is such a document that was tabled as a companion piece or response to the commission's report, Hon. Members who are interested in this matter would like to know where it is.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we will contact the Minister and determine the exact state of affairs with respect to that point of order.

Would it be in order for me to make a point of order with respect to your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) have no further comments?

Mr. Penner: Do you wish a response to the statement by the Parliamentary Secretary?

Mr. Speaker: You may take it that the Chair has the point and I will consider it.

PRIVILEGE

INTERVIEW GIVEN TO PRESS BY MR. DE COTRET—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I now have a very important ruling to make on a subject raised a few days ago by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

● (1530)

[English]

On March 9, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) raised a question of privilege arising out of certain remarks made by the Honourable the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) in giving an interview to the press. The essence of the Hon. Member's complaint was that the Hon. Minister's remarks imputed motives to members of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, that he questioned the right of the committee to put witnesses under oath, and that he appeared to be counselling a senior civil servant to defy the standing committee and the House.

I think I have caught completely the tenor and direction of the comments of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

A day or so later when it was possible for the President of the Treasury Board to be in the Chamber, he rose and agreed that he had been correctly reported in The Globe and Mail. I should perhaps repeat the exact words which form the subject of the complaint:

> It is a terrible precedent. I would never ask a public servant to testify under oath. The committee is really saying he is a liar. I do not believe that . . . I would have liked to see Gaétan Lussier walk right out of the room.

There appears to be no argument that the Hon. Minister used those words.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Calgary West and the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Hawkes and Mr. Jourdenais), the Chairman and Vice-Chairman respectively of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, both contributed to the discussion and defended the committee's right to conduct its proceedings in the way it had. They also made it quite clear that in requiring certain witnesses to testify under oath, the committee was not implying that they were untrustworthy.

I must say, at the outset, that any parliamentary committee has the power to require witnesses to be sworn. I would also agree that in using this power, a committee is not reflecting adversely on the character of a witness. I can make the analogy with a Court of Law where all witnesses are examined under oath. This necessary practice does not imply that all witnesses are dishonest.

[English]

I think it is important to emphasize, in case there should be any misconception in any quarter concerning the powers and functions of parliamentary committees, that committees appointed by this House are entitled to exercise all or any of the powers that this House delegates to them. These powers include the right not only to invite witnesses to appear but to summon them to appear, if necessary. They include the right to examine witnesses on oath should the committee deem it necessary. The powers of standing committees to initiate investigations have recently been extended in the spirit of parliamentary reform. Standing Order 96 sets out in some detail the extent of these powers, which include the power to study and report on all matters relating to the mandate, management and operation of departments of government. The scope of operations of standing committees has thus been considerably widened and the power to summon public servants as witnesses is essential to the effective performance of their tasks. It can be expected that this power will be used more, not less, frequently in the future, and I think it is salutary to alert all those concerned to this fact of parliamentary life. I can therefore say in answer to the question raised by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), that a witness once summoned by a parliamentary committee would be ill-advised to walk out because of an unwillingness to be sworn.

[Translation]

With regard to the existence of a question of privilege, I would remind the House that Parliamentary privilege is breached by any action which threatens freedom of speech in the House or which otherwise obstructs Hon. Members in the fulfillment of their duties. The Hon. Minister used certain words in his remarks to the press which expressed in forceful terms his opinion of a certain action by the committee. There is no doubt that these words were critical of the committee. However, it was not apparent to the Chair that the freedom of action of the committee or of any Hon. Member had been restricted by anything the Minister said. He was expressing an opinion, not giving an order to his public servants. In fact, the Hon. Member for Laprairie applauded the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) for defending his employees in such a spirited manner.

[English]

The Hon. Minister's words, which were no doubt delivered spontaneously, did nevertheless reflect upon the committee's actions. The limits of parliamentary privilege are very narrow and have never been precisely defined. Privilege should never be interpreted in such a way as to be an obstacle to the free expression of opinion. At the same time, we all need to be careful in our choice of language when speaking of the legitimate proceedings of the House or its committees.

Although the Chair finds no prima facie evidence of a question of privilege in this case, it is always wise to avoid offending those susceptibilities which can lead Hon. Members to raise complaints of this nature.

I want Hon. Members to take note of the fact that the Chair has very carefully examined the context in which the words of the Minister were spoken. On close observation I think that it is clear that—and I repeat this because it is important—the Minister was not giving any orders to any members of the Public Service. I hope that Hon. Members will review carefully this judgment and that the committees of the House will examine carefully the reiteration that has been set out in it of the powers, obligations and duties of committees of this place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594).

• (1540)

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to be able to participate in the budget debate this afternoon. In examining the record with respect to those speakers who have gone before me I note that we have not yet heard from many Members across the way who represent the Province of Nova Scotia, the province in which my constituency is located. I hope that in the days that remain for the consideration of this motion we will have an opportunity to hear firsthand how Members of Parliament, and in particular members of the Government, view the Budget and the effects it will have on the residents, not only of Nova Scotia but, indeed, of Atlantic Canada and the country as a whole.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in previous Budgets, and indeed in previous statements in the House of Commons, has stated clearly that it was not his intention to raise taxes. I believe he made that statement in March of 1985. If ever there was a contradiction or a breach of that undertaking or commitment, it is found in the recent Budget of the Minister of Finance. I say that not in a gloating way to point out another mistake or another broken promise of the present administration, because there have been so many, but because this Budget has great ramifications for ordinary Canadians who look to the national Government for assistance, leadership and, indeed, some sense of compassion and understanding.

I wish to point out that from 1984 to 1988 total government revenues will increase by $22.3 billion. That is a significant amount of money. Individual taxes will increase by $22.8 billion during the same timeframe. That is a phenomenal increase with respect to individual taxes. During that same period of time corporate taxes will drop, and drop significantly. They will decrease by $2.2 billion. In effect, the corporate tax base is eroding. The Minister of Finance has recognized that, and in his Budget Speech he said that corporate income tax collections for 1985-86 were approximately $1.2 billion below the level expected at the time of the February 1986 Budget. On the one hand we have average, ordinary Canadians facing an additional tax burden of $22.8 billion over the timeframe 1984-88, while on the other hand we have corporations which will see a reduction of approximately $2.2 billion.

The Leader of Her Majesty's Official Opposition stated in Toronto some months ago before a massive crowd of supporters and admirers that the growing gap between the rich and the poor is significantly on the increase and that power is becoming more and more concentrated in the hands of a select few Canadians. There is evidence for this which I have not taken out of the air. There is specific detailed evidence which is contained in the Budget Papers tabled in the House by the Minister of Finance. So we can see that there is a major gap, and the gap is widening, between the rich and the poor.

In 1984-85 individual taxpayers provided upwards of $43.3 billion in revenues. In 1987-88 they will provide $66.1 billion, whereas corporations will provide only $9 million. Again, this is clear and unequivocal information provided by the Minister of Finance in his budgetary papers which show very clearly that individuals in Canada are paying substantially more while corporations are paying substantially less. Knowing your interest, Mr. Speaker, in percentages and how they work in this great country this means that, as a result of this Budget and previous ones, individual Canadians, whether they live in the Province of Newfoundland, Ontario, Quebec, any of the western provinces or, indeed, any of the remaining Atlantic provinces, will be paying a significant increase in individual taxes amounting to 52.5 per cent.

I had hoped that Members opposite would have attempted to try to see some equity in the way in which the Government carries out its operations. When one looks at the corporate side, what does this mean in terms of percentages? It means a reduction of 18.1 per cent. This points to a clear and unequivocal gap between those who have and those who do not. The budgetary measures of the Minister have contributed remarkably to that situation.

With regard to the imposition of federal sales tax and the effects it will have on individuals in the country I wish to quote the following:

> The federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient. It is a silent killer of jobs. It levies a higher tax on average, one-third higher on domestic manufacturers than on competing imports. This leads to plant closures and lost Canadian jobs. The base is narrow and similar goods can have very different burdens of tax. The sales tax is coming under increasing pressure and reform is increasingly urgent.

• (1550)

Perhaps you would have thought, Mr. Speaker, that those were the comments of a member of the New Democratic Party or, better still, a member of Her Majesty's Official Opposition, the Liberal Party of Canada. It was neither. They were the words of the Minister of Finance, talking about the federal sales tax.

From where was the quotation taken? It was taken from the Budget Papers as tabled by the Minister of Finance. What has the man from Bay Street done with regard to the federal sales tax? Has he attempted to reduce it, as one would logically think as a result of the statements in his Budget? No, he is extending the federal sales tax to kiddy snacks.

He said to the young people of the country that it was a terrible, unfair, and inefficient tax, that it was a silent killer of jobs. However, what is he doing? He is extending it to kiddy snacks. I find the hypocrisy of such action to be quite alarming. In fact, it is appalling that the Minister of Finance would want to do that in light of the statements in his Budget. Unfortunately, we have come to recognize and to accept this type of behaviour from the Government of Canada, we have seen it in so many areas of the Government's operations.

Other matters were addressed in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. On December 11, 1979, I attended a conference in Toronto. On that particular evening I turned on the television only to see the Government of that day being defeated, because it introduced a Budget on the floor of the House of Commons which resulted in an 18 cent per gallon increase in the price of gasoline. Canadians in large numbers rejected it, as indicated by the subsequent seats won by my Party and by the New Democratic Party and the loss of seats by the Party opposite. They did not want to see the price of gasoline rising to the extent the Conservative Government of the day suggested.

What do we have in the present Budget? What has been the cumulative effect of the Budgets of the Minister of Finance? On the one hand he increased gasoline by one cent per litre. Days later, not weeks, months, or years, the industry turned around and increased the price of gasoline, which had an effect upon motorists and various sectors of the economy.

The increase in the fuel sales tax has been approximately four cents per litre or about 18 cents per gallon since the Conservative Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took office in September, 1984. Hon. Members opposite laugh. They find some intrinsic joy in the fact that there have been increases in the price of gasoline. I want to share with them that Canadians in different regions of the country recognize that increases in the price of gasoline will not only have negative effects upon our farming and fishing industries, but they will have devastating effects upon a sector of the economy, in which all political Parties agree there is an opportunity for huge economic growth, that is, the tourism sector. Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of our neighbours to the south who travel to Canada do so by automobile. What have we as a nation said to them? What has the Government said to those individuals? It is throwing up road-blocks. It does not want tourists to come to our country. If that were the case, the Government would certainly not be supporting such tremendous increases in the price of gasoline.

It can be fairly argued that there was only a one cent increase in the present federal Budget. I agree. However, it triggered the private sector to leap-frog in terms of increasing the price per gallon of gasoline. Petro-Canada, which is in existence to serve Canadians and be a window on the oil and gas industry, increased its price per gallon of gasoline. The Government had every opportunity pursuant to the Financial Administration Act—and probably the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) would have liked to have done it if he were the Minister responsible for Petro-Canada—to issue a directive saying very clearly, "Do not proceed with a two-cent increase in the price of gasoline".

I would have hoped Hon. Members opposite would have seen the tremendous effect which that increase in the sales tax per gallon of gasoline would have on various sectors of our economy and on people. Jobs will be affected negatively by this particular Budget.

The Budget made some substantive cuts with regard to expenditures in CIDA amounting to $150 million. This is the same Government which advocated only yesterday, through a number of musings or sentences given by different Ministers, that it had a concern not only for bilateral trade but for multilateral trade. When someone says one is concerned about multilateral trade, and when we examine carefully the cuts which have taken place in CIDA and in other aspects of that federal Department, we can fairly and objectively question the hypocrisy of the Government of the day.

Other budgetary measures ask Canadian employers to pay bi-monthly unemployment insurance and CPP premiums. This is a change from the past. We know it is a very slick way, an accountant's way, of fooling with the deficit.

There has been a $200 million cut in national defence by the same Party which advocated that there would be major additional expenditures. Perhaps the greatest reduction—and I underline it for Hon. Members opposite—has been the one in the regional economic development envelope of 39 per cent. On the one hand the Government has said that it is concerned about regional economic development and that it wants opportunities for people in various regions of the country. When it comes to putting money and putting forward innovative programs to assist people in poorer regions, what do we have? We have a 39 per cent reduction in the regional economic development envelope.

• (1600)

The Minister of Finance has ruled time and time again that he has given a tax credit to eastern Nova Scotia, that he has provided the Atlantic Opportunities Program and the Atlantic Enterprise Program and that he has provided assistance under employment and immigration. But we know those things are not working because the Prime Minister said on August, 1986, as reported in The Globe and Mail:

A humble Prime Minister Brian Mulroney acknowledged last night that the Government has made its share of mistakes and has not yet found a way to allow Newfoundland to share in Canada's wealth.

"We've made mistakes as we shall—mistakes being made by men and women trying to do good for you," he told a partisan crowd of 1,500 people.

That admission by the Prime Minister that his policies are not working was made in August, Mr. Speaker. He reiterated it in October, 1986. And now we have the Budget and find that there is a 39 per cent decrease for the regional economic development envelope. There are no new programs. There are no new solutions being offered whatever.

I find it rather unsettling that members of the Government would rise in their places and extol the great virtues about the economy of Canada when we know that seven out of ten provinces have higher unemployment than before the recession of 1982. You can, therefore, understand my reasons for not supporting the Government in this particular venture, Mr. Speaker. I would have liked to do so if the Government had provided some real leadership in providing equal opportunity for Canadians regardless of where they may live. That is not to suggest that I, as an Atlantic Canadian, want to see the wealth of Ontario eroded at my expense. That is not what I am suggesting. What I am suggesting is that the wealth of Canada be shared and shared fairly. Those of us who represent ridings in the peripheral regions of Canada must have the same opportunities as other Canadians regardless of one's geographical birthplace. By the evidence of the Minister of Finance's Budget, that objective has not been met by the Government. That is why I will not be supporting the Government in its economic thrust in the tabling of its budgetary documents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any questions or comments?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-12, an Act to amend the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, without amendment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and the amendment of Mr. Garneau (p. 3594).

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to participate in the budget debate and to speak to the people of Canada on behalf of the residents of the Pembina constituency. As an Albertan and a proud Canadian, I am honoured to represent the great constituency of Pembina.

At the outset, I would like to express my sincere thanks to the voters of Pembina who bestowed this great honour upon me. Over the years, as residents of Pembina, we have enjoyed remarkable representation and leadership by our elected members. No Member of this Chamber worked harder or more diligently than my predecessor, Peter Elzinga. As a member of the agricultural fraternity, I am especially pleased that he has been charged with the responsibility of serving as Alberta's Minister of Agriculture. I know that all Members of the House of Commons would want to join with me in extending our best wishes to Peter.

I would like to thank all those Members who so graciously welcomed me to this House and the members of the Alberta caucus for their excellent counsel. I would be remiss if I did not pay special tribute to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his untiring support. It was during the Pembina by-election, when there were those who attempted to deny the Prime Minister and myself the right to freedom of speech, that he demonstrated to me what it takes to be a leader.

To my good friend, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) who encouraged me to seek the Conservative nomination, I extend my thanks for his continuing support and encouragement. All of this is comforting to me as a rookie Member of Parliament. I look forward to serving my constituents and working with my colleagues, the Members of the House of Commons, to build a better Canada.

In 1984, Canadians gave this Government a mandate to get the economy back on track. Albertans and, in fact, all Canadians, can give assent to this Government's accomplishments in taking control of federal spending; in taking a skyrocketing deficit of $38 billion and in two short years reducing it by $6 billion with an anticipated further decrease next year to $29.3 billion. Interest rates have been reduced to less than half of what they were two and a half years ago. Inflation is under control. This Government is providing sound financial management.

However, there is the problem of regional disparity. While parts of Canada are flourishing, others are not. Alberta, with unemployment in excess of 12 per cent, is hurting. The February 18 Budget was not one of policy or sweeping change. Rather, it was a summation, an accounting of what our Government's actions have provided to date, a firm plateau from which we will meet the challenges of addressing regional disparity, economic renewal and tax reform.

The Budget was positively received by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Pembina is a large, diverse constituency, stretching from the small rural communities in the North through the fertile farmlands surrounding Clyde, Legal, Morinville, Thorhild, Radway, Bon Accord, Gibbons and Bruderheim, with the Town of Westlock as the centre of a thriving agricultural area, through the industrial areas of Redwater and Fort Saskatchewan to the densely populated metropolitan area surrounding Edmonton.

Pembina has many resources. Our greatest resource is people. Pembina, with a population in excess of 160,000, includes the municipal districts of Westlock, Sturgeon, part of Thorhild and the county of Strathcona, Alberta's newer cities, St. Albert and Fort Saskatchewan, the Alexander Indian Reserve and the world's largest hamlet, Sherwood Park.

The growth of Pembina is an interesting saga. Like the rest of Canada, adventurous explorers, fur traders and missionaries heralded the development of a new land. Father Albert Lacombe is perhaps the best known of western Canada's missionaries. His influence spread throughout the northwest as he fearlessly and relentlessly preached the word of God to the Indians and European settlers. In 1861, Bishop Tache named the new mission St. Albert after Father Lacombe's patron saint. The Grey Nuns arrived in the area in 1863 and have maintained a presence in the fields of education and health services.

Over the years Alberta has been known for its agricultural products. Only in recent times has the production of gas and oil come to the forefront. Pembina was developed by pioneers looking for a new start. The homesteaders were French, English, Ukrainian, Dutch, German and countless other nationalities. My parents emigrated from Belgium to this land of opportunity. All of these settlers have contributed to the cultural diversity of Alberta and our nation.

Ours is a heritage to be proud of. Canada is a great country, the envy of nations throughout the world. The people of Pembina are much like the citizens of each part of Canada. They are young and old, urban, rural, but most of all they are proud to be Canadians. We want to belong. We want to be part of the mainstream of Canadian life. Their dreams are to be self-reliant, free to choose a place to live and raise their families. They want security of person and community.

Albertans are pleased with our Government's initiatives to introduce reforms to the criminal justice system dealing with pornography, drug use, soliciting, computer crime and sexual abuse of children. We do not see ourselves as hewers of wood and drawers of water to serve other parts of Canada. That is part of the past. Albertans look with vision to the future. We see ourselves in a partnership with thousands of Canadians working together for the betterment of Canada.

As great as our nation is, it does have its challenges. Transportation and communications are two of the most significant. The average Canadian has not travelled through Canada extensively and has limited knowledge of our vast country. What do Maritimers have in common with folks in British Columbia? What do Albertans know about the complexity of the industrial sector of Ontario? Do the people of Quebec really understand the oil and gas issues of Alberta? If as a Member of Parliament I can play a small part in improving Canadians' understanding and knowledge of Canada I will consider my participation successful. I am firmly convinced that by understanding and knowing one another we can build a better and a united Canada. An excellent way to contribute to this unity, and one which Pembina residents fully support, is an elected Senate. The Senate must provide equal representation from each province. It could effectively become a respected House of sober second thought.

What do the people of Pembina want? They want peace. They want law and order. They want less Government. They want jobs and they want opportunity. Most of all they want to belong. If Members of this House think about it they would probably find that their constituents want exactly the same things. How do we achieve these goals? First we must understand each other's needs and aspirations. Our agricultural industry is suffering. Canadian agriculture production figures are substantial. However, in world terms the numbers are small. In spite of the challenge, our industry has done well over time. We have become more efficient, crop varieties have improved and new crops have been developed. High quality and the assurance of delivery has enabled Canada to compete in a very competitive world market. Now a new monster has arrived. It is called the subsidy. It is a game played by the Treasuries of the EEC and the U.S.A. Massive subsidies have made it economically possible to produce crops in areas heretofore thought unproductive. Subsidies have resulted in the EEC becoming an exporter of grain. In addition, subsidies reduce the sales price to ridiculously low levels. The U.S. responded by subsidizing its exports to maintain its market share. What happens to Canada? The game is played at our expense because we cannot afford to play. We have to take every opportunity to convince the players that the game is senseless. Discussions initiated by the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board with other producing countries are encouraging. At the GATT negotiations Canada must take a strong position. Too often in the past our Government has compromised its position. We have to ensure that Canadian agriculture receives the attention it deserves.

A viable agriculture industry is imperative to the economy of our country. The Minister of Agriculture's announcement of the $1 billion assistance program to supplement the cash flows of grain farmers affected by the dramatic drop in world wheat prices was good news for a suffering industry. This, coupled with the elimination of the fuel tax, reduced interest rates, the establishment of debt review boards, and the $500,000 capital gains exemption, along with the western grain stabilization payments, will help many western farmers remain in business. While the international mess is being sorted out, the economy of our country will benefit from this assistance program.

However, other programs will have to be considered, for example, equity financing and more flexible repayment schedules. Yet that is not the long-term answer. Canadian farmers do not want subsidies and hand-outs. They want dependable markets and a reasonable price for their products, just like any other businessman. As a Government we must create an economic and international environment which will enable our agriculture industry to do what it does best, produce massive quantities of high quality food products to be sold competitively on world and domestic markets. In this context the importance of research, innovative market development and efficient transportation cannot be overlooked. In this vast country only 5 per cent of the land is fertile, ideal for growing food. Proper land use and soil conservation are essential to our nation's well-being. Diversification and processing of our agricultural products must take place if Alberta is to reach its full potential. Canadian consumers recognize the importance of our food production and the need for a strong agriculture industry in Canada. They will support future government incentives in the field of agriculture.

Many residents of Pembina depend on the oil and gas industry for their livelihood. They work in oil fields, gas plants and for hundreds of small companies which provide goods and services to the industry. It is frustrating for those who are unemployed because they know that Canada needs the energy, and exploration and development must continue if we are to have security of supply.

During the past decade the National Energy Program, instituted by the previous Liberal Government and supported by the socialists, siphoned billions and billions of dollars from Alberta. It was a devastating tax, not on profit but on production. Today Alberta's oil economy is hurting. I call on the Government to assist the oil and gas sector. We ask nothing more than what other sectors of the economy are receiving, such things as flow-through shares and earned depreciation allowances. I do not have to remind the Members of this House that all Canada benefits from a healthy energy sector in Alberta.

The downturn of the economy in Alberta has dramatically affected the construction industry. Residential and industrial construction is grinding to a standstill. Trades people, construction workers, and related supply industries have felt the brunt of this disaster. Only immediate action by the Government in co-operation with the Province of Alberta will get the construction industry rolling again starting with the expansion of industries, building of roads, construction of homes, and development of our tourist attractions.

Employment is a federal responsibility. I am confident that in the spirit of fairness and national unity these regional disparities will be addressed. Economic diversification is the key to long-term vitality in Alberta. Major opportunities exist for development of our coal industry. Low-sulphur coal is ideal for industrial use in Ontario. It minimizes the acid rain problem and makes pollution control much easier. I challenge the Governments of Alberta, Ontario, and Canada to get this project moving. It is in the interest of our nation.

These days "high tech" is the word. Many communities in Alberta are trying to attract the best in computers and electronics. I am pleased that the Government recognizes the future of the electronics industry.

One great opportunity comes in the form of tourism as a national renewable resource. Every part of Canada is a tourist attraction, no matter how small the community. We have it all; scenery, mountains, lakes, wildlife, the arts, language, culture and recreation. We just have to seize the opportunity, advertise our advantages, and welcome the tourists in a manner they will not forget. We want them back again and again. As we say in Alberta: "Smile, you're a tourist attraction".

Canada is a trading nation. A large amount of what we produce is for export. Trade means jobs. I would like to commend the federal and provincial Governments for their united efforts in the field of international trade. We must move in the direction of processing more of our raw materials and exporting semifinished or fully manufactured goods. Albertans welcome the Government's free trade initiatives. In view of the growing protectionism in the U.S. these trade negotiations are paramount to the future of our country. The members of the European Common Market have negotiated an agreement as have Australia and New Zealand. Why not Canada and the United States? It will mean wealth and jobs for Canadians. Alberta welcomes the opportunity.

I would like to stress the support of Pembina residents for the free enterprise philosophy. Governments should not be in business but, rather, should create a constructive environment so that business can flourish on its own. Albertans recognize the steps taken by the Government to date in the area of privatization of Crown corporations. When will we get some action on PetroCan and Air Canada? The Government is to be commended for its initiative in becoming a facilitator and regulator rather than a competitor in the business community.

Like the residents of Pembina, Mr. Speaker, I am very positive about our future. We have much to be thankful for. Canadians have a strong, proud heritage. We have unlimited resources and opportunities. We have the youth and vigour to make us leaders. Canada is a land of opportunity, a country of challenges. Alberta is determined to play a role in the destiny of our nation. Let us work together to understand one another and help make Canada an even greater country.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate on the Budget I must record my very grave disappointment with the Government's spending and taxation proposals. This Budget is certainly a missed opportunity to do some good for Canadians, to promote job creation and fairness. The Government is utterly failing in imagination. There are no bold initiatives in the Budget to deal with unemployment. The area from which I come, Toronto, Broadview—Greenwood, is one of the better off areas of the country with regard to jobs, but we know that people in other parts of the country are suffering greatly. They cannot look to the Government or this Budget for any relief or hope that job creation and regional equality will be a priority.

The Government could be bringing forward positive measures in terms of improving the productive capacity of our country, in terms of developing our primary and manufacturing resources, and in terms of investing in science, research, technology, post-secondary education and job training in order to promote economic opportunity for Canadians. However, the Government has failed to do that in this Budget.

There is no tax reform in this Budget. That has been put off to a later date. We are not sure what that date will be. We suspect that any measures along these lines will be brought in as a pre-election goodie to be handed out by a cynical Government that has not done very well and will be looking for ways to earn back the esteem of the Canadian public.

I note that the Government completely missed the opportunity to deal with the child care issue in this Budget. There is not a penny more for child care in it. We have a hypocritical Minister responsible for the status of women who is also responsible for privatization. Her heart is certainly more in her responsibilities for privatization than in the promotion of the status of women. She said that rather than putting the wrong amount in the Budget it is better not to put in a dime. That means that there are zero dollars for child care while we all recognize that there is a crisis in that area.

Families across the country have been asking the Government to deal with it and get on with the job of sharing the responsibility of parents for the raising of children. Our Party recommended an immediate infusion of $300 million for child care while awaiting the long term and gradual development of a national child care system. This infusion of funds has been demanded by the organizations concerned with child care and the professionals involved, yet there is not a dime in the Budget for that purpose.

I note also that the Government claims to be reducing the deficit with this Budget. Let us be clear about what the Government's precise intentions are. Let us be very clear that the accumulated deficit is growing. When government Members talk about nibbling away, picking away, chopping away or chiselling away at the deficit, they are not talking about the accumulated deficit and actually reducing the debt-load which Canada bears. The accumulated deficit continues to increase. The only point they can make is that it is accumulating at a slightly slower rate than it had been during the last couple of years under the previous Government.

If we use the figures for net public debt from the Department of Finance using a public accounts basis, which is a very conservative one, in 1981-82 we had a net public debt or accumulated deficit of just over $100 billion. It rose to $128 billion in 1982-83. That was the beginning of the recession and the reason for an increase in the accumulated deficit. The effects of that recession were felt very strongly in 1983-84, when the accumulated debt went up to $160.7 billion; to $199 billion in 1984-85; and to $233 billion in 1985-86. That is what I call a growing deficit. The best the Government can say about the annual deficit is that it has not done as badly as the worst years of the previous Trudeau regime.

The Government's record is not impressive and one must still refer back to the example of Tommy Douglas in Saskatchewan when one talks about reducing the deficit. Saskatchewan had the largest per capita accumulated deficit in the country when the CCF took over in Saskatchewan in 1944. Under a CCF Government, the deficit gradually reduced year by year until it was eliminated completely 20 years later. That was accomplished by Tommy Douglas and Woodrow Lloyd and CCF Governments.

Last year the Government predicted an annual deficit of just under $30 billion, which is the predicted deficit for this year. We know that the Government had to raise that estimate to $32 billion last year and it can only predict an annual deficit of under $30 billion this year because of the projected sale of Teleglobe. It is selling off the family jewels, or the family silver, as that profitable Crown corporation has been referred to, in order to come under the magic figure of $30 billion.

The annual deficit in 1984-85 was $38 billion, $34 billion in 1985-86, and $32 billion for 1986-87. The projected deficit for 1987-88 is $29.3 billion. We do not consider that as chiselling away at the deficit.

Budget restraint is another key word in the Government's rhetoric. Let us consider what spending restraint means. While the Government certainly has changed its spending priorities, in my opinion those changes are not for the good. We should not be under the illusion that there is general budget restraint because there is no decrease in government spending over-all. While it is decreasing spending in some areas, including some which are very important to people, it is increasing spending in other areas.

Total budget expenditures in 1984-85 were $96.5 billion. In 1985-86 they were $103.6 billion, and for the current fiscal year 1986-87, they are $107.4 billion. Such an increase every year is not budget restraint and reduced spending.

The Estimates for 1987-88 show $110.1 billion, which is a 5.1 per cent increase over last year. It is idle to talk about budget restraint and reduction in expenditures when there is an increase greater than the cost of living and greater than the increase in Gross National Product. That is not budget restraint.

However, there has been restraint in areas of low priority. The Government wanted to reduce spending even further by cutting old age pensions. We know that it cut family allowance in its partial deindexation and plans to cut the child tax credit.

It is neglecting major areas of support for families, such as child care.

The major components of the Government's Budget show increases rather than restraint. Program spending for 1984-85 was $86.8 billion. In 1985-86 it was $85.8 billion, and in 1986-87 it was up to $89.4 billion. The next projection in program spending is $94.5 billion.

The interest on the public debt, the accumulated deficit, is also rising. In 1984-85 the Estimates indicated it at $20.3 billion, although the actual expenditure was a little higher. In 1985-86 it was $25.5 billion. For this fiscal year of 1986-87 it is $27 billion, and for next year it is $28.2 billion. When we consider the interest on the public debt and program spending we see that restraint does not exist. Instead, the Government has other spending priorities such as a penitentiary in the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) riding, and is even spending millions more so that it can be completed before the next election.

The Government is spending more money for contracting out. The Government is cutting back on the Public Service through firing and attrition. There is a projection of a loss of 15,000 jobs in the Public Service in the next three years, some of which have already been lost. However, cut-backs in the Public Service do not mean there will be savings in public expenditures because those services are being provided by contracting out. Instead of paying an employee a reasonable wage and providing reasonable job security and working conditions, services are contracted out to small companies which may or may not be making donations to the Party in power and certainly will be making a profit.

In order to do that, it will either have to boost the price of the contract substantially or reduce the wages of the employees. We know in the case of contracting out for cleaning services that the cleaners have seen their wages, which were already low, drastically reduced. In some cases there is a reduction in wages and increased cost to the Government. I submit that this does not represent restraint. The Government is not saving the taxpayers any money, but is only making public expenditures in a different fashion. Yet it does mean a loss in job security and a loss of good job opportunities. Women especially are concerned about being hired last and fired first in the Public Service. They see many of their jobs as the ones which will not survive the cuts in the Government's planned reduction in the Public Service.

Since the Government is not reducing its over-all spending, it is trying to lower the annual deficit by increasing revenues. It is doing this largely by increasing hidden taxes such as the sales tax, gasoline tax, tax on snack food, tobacco, airline tickets, and increasing a number of other taxes. Since the Conservatives formed the Government, the average family, being the family with a $35,000 income and two dependent children, have had a tax increase of $1,384.

There are other ways to increase revenue. The Government could have eliminated the $500,000 lifetime capital gains tax exemption for wealthy persons. That is a major loophole that was introduced into a tax system which already had far too many loopholes. The Conservative Government could eliminate that loophole and increase revenues. It could eliminate the increased Registered Retirement Savings Plan limits which are primarily utilized by wealthy people. They will be favoured with yet another tax loophole. The Government could eliminate tax loopholes by which 79,000 profitable Canadian corporations pay no income tax. This would be a very effective way to raise revenues.

It is interesting to note that the Estimates predict a 25 per cent increase in corporate profits for the next fiscal year, yet the Government does not plan to collect 25 per cent more in profits from corporations but a mere $365 million while planning to collect $7.5 billion more from individuals. It is shameful that heavy taxes on individuals and families continue to accelerate while corporations, even those that are profitable and expecting higher profits, will get away with very low taxes. Individual taxes are going up from $37.8 billion to $43.3 billion. Corporate income taxes are going up from $9.4 billion to $9.8 billion. That is a very pathetic increase in comparison. Corporations used to pay half the income tax revenue in the country. They are now only paying a very small proportion. The slide started under the Liberals and it went on for a long time, but it has accelerated under the Conservatives. In 1984-85, the last year of a Liberal Government, personal income tax raised 41 per cent of total revenues. Now it is at 43 per cent. Corporations paid 13 per cent of total revenues and now pay 9 per cent. With respect to personal income tax, this represents a 48 per cent increase over the last Liberal year. With respect to corporations, it is only a 4 per cent increase. These are massive changes. This acceleration in unfairness has continued.

Unemployment insurance contributions have gone up 34 per cent. Sales taxes have increased even more dramatically at 62 per cent. The taxes which are not so visible continue to go up and the unfairness increases.

I would like to spend a few minutes talking about the area for which I am particularly responsible and that is the area of culture. In the Government's Estimates for the cultural agencies, we see there are winners and losers. Over-all spending is down. It has not kept up with the cost of living, which was a promise of the Conservative Government. Unfortunately, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) issued a seriously misleading statement on the Estimates after they were tabled. I would like to quote from the news release:

> In a statement issued in Ottawa today, Communications Minister Flora MacDonald said she was pleased that the monies available to the CBC for the fiscal year 1987-88 would increase by $50 million and resources of the Communications portfolio would increase by $82 million.
> The Minister also noted that although the resources available for the operation of her department will decrease by $2 million, the following cultural agencies will see their overall resources increased by $34 million:

She then listed those agencies; Canada Council, $5 million; Telefilm Canada, $3 million; CRTC, $2 million; National Film Board, $1 million; National Library, $1 million; National Museums, $19 million; Public Archives, $1 million; and the National Arts Centre, $2 million. Unfortunately, these figures are fraudulent. The Minister has made up a totally new category called "resources", and people would be misled into thinking that this is what the taxpayer is providing these agencies. That is not the case. What the Minister has done is to add up the parliamentary appropriation plus other moneys available. Therefore, if the National Arts Centre increases the price of its food and drinks, and it is doing so, then its resources go up and it makes it look as if the Government were giving it more money, which is simply and totally untrue. Instead, the National Arts Centre is actually receiving a 4.1 per cent decrease in real terms in its parliamentary allocation. Instead of a $2 million increase, it has received no increase in money. In real terms, that is a decrease. The Minister claimed a $5 million increase for the Canada Council. In fact, it is about level. It turns out to be a 0.1 per cent decrease, a very slight decrease. I note that the moneys the Canada Council will have available to give out in grants will actually be $2 million behind next year as compared to this year. That is not an increase and it means that artists will have less money available to them.

There have been increases for some areas such as museums, but, of course, they are moving into two new museums and so there are expenses regarding that. Of course, the CBC, our major cultural agency, suffered a very major decline of 13 per cent in its spending since the Government took office. The amount of money available to the CBC today is only 87 per cent of what it was in real terms when the Government took over and, of course, the Government promised at least cost of living increases. We see this as a really tragic loss to our cultural agencies.

[Translation]

The Government must be condemned for its lack of imagination and initiative in this Budget. It had an opportunity to promote job creation and investment in the future of this country. It could have supported post-secondary education, vocational training, and technological research and development. Unfortunately, instead of resolutely looking to the future, it failed miserably. Instead of boosting economic renewal, it chose to protect its friends the private companies. Instead of doing justice to families and ordinary Canadians, it saw fit to raise their taxes even more, directly and indirectly. The measures which benefit the rich, such as capital gains tax exemptions, are still there. It is not a realistic Budget, it is not a practical Budget, it is not a fair Budget, it is not a Budget—it is a scandal.

[English]

Why do we have such a stand pat, do nothing Budget? I suggest there is a reason. The Government has other fish to fry. It has other priorities. It thinks the way out of our economic difficulties is to rely on the economic renewal of another country and to hitch our star to the United States in a free trade agreement. Of course, historically both Liberals and Conservatives have looked to trade as a panacea. There was the scandal in the 1930s in the midst of the Depression when both Parties advocated trade as a panacea. They were not prepared to spend. They were not prepared to put money into job creation or unemployment insurance or any other of those practical measures. They both vied for the title of being the Party most in favour of trade. So we have seen in the past that this issue has been treated as a panacea and, of course, it has not worked.

I am very proud of the record of the Government of Manitoba and of Yukon, both NDP Governments which have actually reduced unemployment. They have done this not by relying on illusory measures such as trade, but by making job creation a real priority, by developing measures of import substitution, by local purchasing plans, by very concerted practical, detailed plans to get their economies moving and to get people back to work, and of course they start to receive tax revenue and can support in a stronger way than ever before the social programs we need.

The New Democratic Party has positive, concrete proposals for economic renewal. Until we have the opportunity to implement them, we will be working as much as we can in opposition to advance those ideas. We will be favouring fair measures over unfair measures, job creation over acceptance of the status quo of a high rate of unemployment. This Budget is not in the interests of average Canadians. It is not in the long-term interests of our country. For these very good reasons, my colleagues and I in the New Democratic Party will be voting against this Budget.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) and the position she put forward on behalf of the New Democratic Party. It has me just shuddering to think of that Party ever coming to power. With the type of attitude the Hon. Member expressed today, I wonder that she could even consider putting a government together with any kind of a policy.

She made some mention of Mr. Tommy Douglas and what he once did in Saskatchewan. I thought she was purposely going to avoid talking about Manitoba. However, toward the end of her speech she said that Manitoba is doing the right thing. I am proud of Manitoba. We do have the lowest unemployment rate in Canada, but it has a lot to do with the federal Government as well. If the Hon. Member had paid any attention to Manitoba she would have looked at the recent Budget of the Minister of Finance of that Province. We all know how the NDP represents the ordinary Canadian. As a result of the Budget in that Province someone earning $18,000 a year will now have to pay $400 per year in taxes. That is how the NDP Government looks after the interests of the average person in Manitoba.

It has been reported on the front page of Winnipeg newspapers that the NDP has made a record tax grab in Manitoba. The Province now has the highest per capita debt in Canada. Manitoba, under an NDP Government since 1981—something which the Hon. Member praises—will now have to cut programs.

The Hon. Member says that her particular interest is with respect to culture. She criticizes the Government for reducing expenditures in culture. However, she also criticizes the Government because the national debt is going up just a little too high. How in the dickens can one spend more here and save more there and criticize us for saving and not spending? The Hon. Member says that she knows what she would do. She would tax the rich some more. She would tax the corporations. In every speech made by a member of the New Democratic Party over the last two-and-a-half years they have criticized every program that we have ever cut. They would rather that we increased spending in those areas. On the basis of that type of rhetoric instead of a proposed $29 billion deficit we would probably be looking at a $75 billion deficit. They would go to the Canadian public and say: "We will tax the rich a little more to get that money back".

How can the Hon. Member stand in her place and talk about Manitoba with its tremendous deficit per capita and its reductions in programs when the administration of the Province since 1981 is now making all sorts of tax grabs? Is that the way her Party would operate if they were to come to power, God forbid?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to expand on my remarks. The Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) expressed great horror about a Party such as the New Democratic Party coming to power federally. It seems I need to remind the Hon. Member, since he is not very aware of the fact, that our sister Parties in European countries have been in government for years—in fact, decades. They are in government in countries in the industrialized world where there are high levels of prosperity. These are advanced welfare states, countries with good educational systems and good medicare systems. These countries also happen to have astonishingly low rates of unemployment and great economic growth. They have been extremely successful. Sweden comes to my mind in this respect. Even during the recession Sweden managed to keep unemployment far below the rates we experienced without having a recession. Parties with policies such as my Party have formed Governments and have proven to be successful.

With respect to Manitoba the Hon. Member railed away about how miserable it is to be in Manitoba. Why has business investment increased in that Province? Why has it had the highest per capita business investment in the last few years when compared with other provinces? Evidentally, investors think the climate is good. The low unemployment which exists in Manitoba is good for business. It means that there are people with jobs, people with incomes who are buying things. Indeed, the Government of Manitoba has raised taxes. However, I note that taxes for lower income Manitobans, those earning $11,000 and under, are actually being decreased because they are the people who are in the toughest straits. The Government recognized the need to increase taxes if it wanted to keep up its spending in the areas of social programs and economic investment.

There is a jobs strategy in Manitoba, an economic plan, into which the Province has continued to put money. As well as supporting social programs it has expanded programs in the areas of child care, women and medicare. The Province has not cut back in the area of social spending, something which the federal Government wants to do. Given the alternative of cutting back or raising taxes, the Government of Manitoba chose to raise them. I think it did so in a very fair way. The taxes of those who are better off have been raised while those who are not so well off have had their taxes decreased. The federal Government is increasing the taxes of lower income Canadians. Indirect taxes are regressive taxes. Sales tax falls on all people. Even the implementation of the tax credit, which is a good idea, does not make up for the fact that, proportionately, poor people pay higher taxes.

With respect to the idea that corporations cannot pay more, I remind the Hon. Member that there are 79,000 corporations in Canada which make a profit and which do not pay a dime in taxes. There is obviously money there to collect. Obviously companies such as that in other countries pay their taxes. We are letting them off the hook. We could use that money. The Auditor General estimates that $30 billion to $50 billion a year goes by without being taxed because of various loopholes and exemptions. That is an enormous amount of money. It is more money than is used in our universal social programs.

We have alternatives. It is possible to have spending priorities which are fair to people in terms of taxation and fair to people in terms of how the Government spends their money.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the comments of the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) who pointed out some of the contents of the recent Budget introduced in Manitoba. I wish to quote from an article which appeared in this morning's The Globe and Mail which states:

> In his budget address to the provincial Legislature last night, Finance Minister Eugene Kostyra said the measures are designed to "bypass" the federal tax system, which he described as "riddled with deductions, exemptions, exclusions and loopholes."

My hon. friend from Selkirk—Interlake will know that Canada is the only country in the world which allows $500,000 capital gains tax-free from any source possible, whether it be money made on the Hong Kong Stock Exchange or elsewhere. The article in the newspaper with respect to the Manitoba Minister of Finance goes on to state:

> He complained that Ottawa's budgets since 1981 have increased taxes by $695 for a family with an income of $25,000, while reducing taxes by $2,677 for a family earning $150,000.

Just to keep the record perfectly clear, federal Conservative Budgets have resulted in tax breaks for upper income earners while heaping on taxes for the average Canadian family. What the New Democratic Government of Manitoba is trying to do is to equalize this. The federal Government has brought so much economic pain to the people of Manitoba and western Canada generally that the Governments of Yukon and Manitoba have had to do whatever they could do to rescue themselves from this very serious situation. I am glad the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake made the point that, thank goodness, we have an NDP Government in Manitoba, otherwise things would be at a point of desperation.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to respond briefly to an observation she has made on a number of occasions in the recent past with respect to a number of economic policies that the present Government has introduced which have caused the wage gap between working Canadian men and women to increase. As of late that situation has actually worsened in terms of bringing about equality in pay returns between men and women. I ask the Hon. Member to respond in that regard.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to comment on this sad fact. This is the first year that Statistics Canada reports that the gap in wages and salaries between women and men has actually increased. Those of us who seek fairness for Canadians, and fairness for women in the workforce, have been very impatient with the progress we have seen in this area. It has been made bit by bit. Sometimes it has amounted to no more than a percentage point, but at least it was going in the right direction. We now see that this trend of painfully slow progress has actually been reversed. Certainly one reason for this of which we know is the lack of access for women to better paying jobs. The ghettoization of women continues. Many of them are confined to part time jobs and cannot get full time jobs. However, we see cut-backs in the areas where women have made their best gains. The Public Service has been a good employer of women. The gains which women have made have been largely in the public sector, in service jobs, and in female professions. They have been good jobs. Women have had unions which have protected them. They have made enormous gains in the last 10 years to 20 years. However, the Government is cutting back in the job areas in which women have made the best gains. Naturally the impact of that is that women are beginning to fall back.

• (1700)

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the remarks of the Hon. Member. She was highly critical of the Budget, the Government's approach to the economy, its fiscal policy, its employment initiatives, its expenditures, and its taxing policy. I understand that the Hon. Member is a member of the Opposition. Of course the role of the Opposition is to be critical, to be negative, and never to agree with the Government. However, there is another duty on the part of the Opposition, that is, to put forward some positive and constructive alternatives to the policies of the Government, if it honestly believes that the Government's approach is wrong and can be justifiably criticized.

At the recent convention of the New Democratic Party, I believe her Leader took a very positive stand that what was needed in the country was more jobs. He indicated that that would be an election issue, as far as the New Democratic Party was concerned, in the next federal election.

I would be interested in hearing from the Hon. Member not just generalities that jobs are needed and that what the Government is doing is wrong. Notwithstanding that unemployment has come down very substantially in the last 2.5 years, notwithstanding that interest rates have come down substantially in the last 2.5 years, and notwithstanding that the annual spending deficit has come down very substantially and is still on its way down, the Hon. Member said that our approach was wrong and that other things should be done. I would be interested in hearing the specifics. What would the New Democratic Party do to address the problem of unemployment in such a way as to continue to reduce the budget deficit, or perhaps leave it as it is but, hopefully, not increase it? What specifically would the NDP do in that regard?

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I very much welcome the question. Of course I could go on for a very long time answering it, but I know it is not possible.

The New Democratic Party has outlined and continues to outline in a very positive and concrete way alternative measures. We did this last in a very substantial document entitled "Canada Unlimited", which was our job creation strategy. It outlined all kinds of schemes. There are pages of them. I cannot go into the details at this time, but they included such things as municipal infrastructure spending. Also they included a proposal by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities for an infusion of funds into all kinds of road, sewer, and park improvements. As well, they included community diversification funds for single-industry towns to develop jobs and to keep investment of profits from resource towns to develop spin-off jobs in those communities. They referred to expansion of services, for example, a child care program which would produce a large number of jobs. Cultural spending produces far more jobs. Estimates indicate that there is six times the job spin-off in culture than in other forms of job investment.

These are just a few examples from a very long list which we have outlined. I can certainly see to it that the Hon. Member has a copy of the document, if he would like to have one. Incidentally, these are all costed, and this enormous infusion of jobs into the economy is possible without increasing the deficit at all or with an extremely modest increase in the deficit.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, indeed it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on the Budget presented recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I enjoy debating in the House of Commons the position of the Government, especially the position of the Minister of Finance, in view of the very difficult situation with which we were faced when we came to power.

I must go back somewhat in history and refresh everyone's memory. Do you remember when, Mr. Speaker, things were pretty rotten in the country? I was a farmer back in the 1970s. Farmgate prices were not too bad.

I would like the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) to stay and listen to my comments. She would want to know how things were under a Liberal administration and how they affected many of my colleagues in the House and many of the constituents I represent.

After some 22 years of Liberal Government we had nothing more than a massive conflagration of negative proportion not experienced in the modern world. It was absolutely incredible. For example, when the interest rate jumped two percentage points from week to week and sometimes into the next month, until it hit as high as 20-some per cent at the bank, there was no hope if one wanted to start a small business. Although bankers were lending a little money, it put many people in jeopardy. We must look back to see what was the cause of the devastated Canadian economy and the tremendous debt which had developed.

It started off with the now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was the Minister of Finance back in 1972. Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, the country had a surplus of $700 million in its current account. We have never seen that since. He started the country on a road to pure destruction, yet the Liberals managed to cling to power. When he left in 1975—and I guess he was even frustrated with his actions—there was a deficit of almost $5 billion. When the Conservatives took power, on a yearly basis it was $38 billion.

Mr. Attewell: And on its way to $40 billion.

Mr. Holtmann: Yes. We must remind the Canadian public of some of the terrible things that happened in the past. Much like the wars of this nation, they must be reminded of what happened under that Government of this nation. I do not think this Party will ever let Canadian people forget. I do not think Canadians will ever forget the devastation which was caused at that time. We as a national Government are certainly doing what we can to try to bring some sense to the economies of scale and to the economies of purpose.

Under that Minister of Finance the net debt grew from $18 billion to $28 billion or a 50 per cent increase in only four years. That is what happened when the Leader of the Official Opposition was the Minister of Finance, the man who would like to be the Prime Minister. He is an awfully scary person to have as a leader of the country based on his past record.

Let us take a look at unemployment while he was in office. At the time he was given a mantle in January, 1972, there were 544,000 people out of work. When he left office, there were 732,000 people out of work. Unemployment under the now Leader of the Opposition when he was Finance Minister sky-rocketed. Yet he has aspirations to lead this country.

An Hon. Member: What a joke.

Mr. Holtmann: Imagine how devastating that would be. Let me talk a little bit about inflation when he was the Finance Minister. He took inflation from 5.1 per cent at the time of his appointment to 10.6 per cent where it was at the time of his resignation. He finally got fed up with it all and resigned. That is what he did, he resigned. During that period the New Democrats supported that action of our now Leader of the Official Opposition. Let me tell you just what that inflation rate meant. During the Leader of the Opposition's term of office as Finance Minister prices rose in total by 38 per cent for food, 61 per cent for housing, 32 per cent for clothing, 24 per cent for health, 32 per cent for personal care and 31 per cent for transportation costs. All these things increased under the now Leader of the Official Opposition, but he wants to lead the country.

When the Budget of the Minister of Finance was presented, a very interesting thing happened. I have an editorial from the Winnipeg Free Press here. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the Winnipeg Free Press is very critical of the Government in Ottawa. Not too often does that paper say very nice things about us. I do not know whether that is because it has some left-wing leanings or whether the paper is trying to bolster opposition Parties. Maybe it is just trying to be as polite to us as it can in a way that sometimes angers us. It is important to read what was written on the editorial page of the Winnipeg Free Press for February 20, 1987, a few days after the Budget was brought down by our Minister of Finance. Under the heading of "Opposition Nonsense" we read:

> Opposition politicians have a problem when they are faced with a . . . Budget such as the one presented on Wednesday by Finance Minister Michael Wilson. They find themselves faced with television cameras and newspaper reporters all demanding comment. Custom and ritual demand that they say something damning. If they can find nothing sensible to say, they will feel compelled to say something silly. Thus, on Wednesday night, Canadians heard comments such as these.—

I want to remind my Liberal colleague just what is in this editorial:

> Liberal Leader John Turner: "There is not one new single job contemplated in this Budget."

That is the first thing he said.

Mrs. Pépin: It is true.

Mr. Holtmann: It continues:

> Wrong. There are tens of thousands of jobs contemplated.
> "Our rate of job creation this year is expected once again to exceed that of any other major industrial country", Mr. Wilson said in his Budget speech. "Strong employment growth will be accompanied by large numbers of new entrants to the labour force." Even with those new entrants, the Finance Minister predicted the unemployment rate would drop from 9.4 per cent to 9 per cent.

Mrs. Pépin: I want the facts.

Mr. Holtmann: These are the facts. The article continues:

Mr. Turner, of course, is perfectly free to challenge Mr. Wilson's projections and present his own analysis to show that employment will not increase. Canadians then could judge between the two assessments, keeping in mind that, so far, Mr. Wilson's estimates of job creation have been a lot nearer the mark than Mr. Turner's. But Mr. Turner's flat statement that no new jobs are contemplated is simply false.

In other words, people across Canada have recognized that the statements made by the Leader of the Official Opposition, the man who would like to be the Prime Minister, were totally false. That is from the Winnipeg Free Press and that is what we found out from average Canadians who listened to our Budget and listened to what had to be said. Let me now go to the New Democratic Party and continue with this editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press:

Lorne Nystrom of the NDP: "There is nothing there for the resource industries, for western grain farmers, for farmers in general".

In fact, there is something for grain farmers—next year's share of $1 billion in Government assistance. The complaint about the lack of more help for the oil industry sounds strange coming from the member of a party which has complained shrilly against the help that the Government has tried to give that industry in the past.

Manitoba Finance Minister Eugene Kostyra:—

Mr. Kostyra, by the way, just brought down his Budget and I will refer to that a little later. Let me continue:

"Apparently he is not serious about bringing in a fair tax system in this country . . . He could have given clear messages that the system is unfair and closed some of the more blatant loopholes."

Wrong again. The Minister did give a clear message that the present system is unfair and he did say he was determined to bring in a fair tax system. He said, among other things: "A fairer and more efficient tax system will implement and reinforce economic opportunities for individual Canadians . . .

Our Finance Minister said exactly that. Let me continue:

The federal sales tax is unfair and inefficient . . . Our proposal for tax reform will make our system more fair, less complex and more understandable. It will reflect our commitment to economic progress and social justice."

That was said exactly like that by our Minister of Finance, and yet here we have the Finance Minister for the Province of Manitoba saying that the Minister did not even refer to it. I wonder whether these people can listen, hear and comprehend. Apparently they cannot. Let me go on because I find this editorial very interesting and I know Members in the Opposition would like to hear more although it is shattering to their point of view:

Mr. Kostyra knew before the Budget was delivered that the tax reform proposals were not ready to be included in it. He knew that those proposals would be presented to Parliament within the next few months. When they are presented, he may well determine that they do not bring about the kind of reform he would like. Until they are implemented, he can argue that the Government should be doing more to close existing loopholes. He has no grounds at all, however, for declaring, in the face of Mr. Wilson's statements and on the basis of no evidence, that the federal Minister is not interested in tax reform.

I think that is a fairly balanced statement made by the editor. It indicates precisely what our Minister of Finance is dealing with in terms of tax reform. He never shied away from it. He is prepared to face it head on at the appropriate time.

In the concluding part of this editorial it reads:

Mr. Turner and Mr. Nystrom are members of the federal Opposition and, as such, are regarded as free to display a moderate looseness with the facts. Mr. Kostyra is more than simply an Opposition hack. He is Manitoba's Minister of Finance. As such, he is expected to work co-operatively with the federal Government in pursuit of this province's interests. Part of his duty is to denounce federal policies when they clash with the interests of the province. But calling his federal counterpart in effect a liar, without providing a single shred of evidence to support the charge, is cheap and irresponsible politics, not a responsible defence of the provincial interest.

Here we have a point of view expressed by somebody in Manitoba, an editor, and it clearly illustrates that we are on the right track. We are dealing with problems that were handed to us. We would like to move into a more positive approach to the whole economy.

In my riding when I ran for election I was new and anxious to help an area. I made statements. One promise I made is to see what I could do to bring back some economic activity to the then dead commercial parks that we have, one in Selkirk, an industrial park with more than half of the buildings sitting empty. There is no activity of any description. There were, I believe, two buildings out of about eight or nine in which some activity was taking place. Today, with interest rates where they are, with renewed investor confidence in our economy, that industrial park is filling up and employing more people.

Mr. Riis: Where is it?

Mr. Holtmann: In Selkirk. The Hon. Member might want to check it out. There was an article in the Selkirk paper just recently about how that industrial park is starting to flourish. Quite frankly, how could anything be done with interest rates at 22 per cent? We have now strengthened our economy so that people have the confidence to invest. They see a Government with a policy of good money management. Our deficits are starting to come down. We do not like deficits any more than anyone else, but we cannot just wipe them away. Sound money management will gradually bring the deficit down and maintain investor confidence. That, I am quite happy to say, is what is happening in my riding today. There is a renewal of private job creation, not the government job creation that we heard about before. The NDP attitude towards job creation is basically to get the Government to hire all the unemployed. I bet that if they had the opportunity, they would hire every one of the people who are still unemployed and put them on the payroll and say, "Look at what we did". The Liberals tried that.

Mr. Riis: You pay them unemployment insurance, is that any better?

Mr. Fennell: The NDP does not like unemployment insurance.

Mr. Holtmann: The Liberals ran the national debt up to $160 billion and still could not get everyone working. Let us look at what was said by some of the NDP Members about this Budget. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) said:

Mr. Speaker, I have had 20 years of experience in watching Budgets both as a journalist and as a politician in both this Chamber and in the Ontario Legislature. I venture to say that this is the emptiest and the most insignificant Budget that I have seen in all those 20 years of experience.

Where the dickens was he when the Liberals were bringing in Budget after Budget and unemployment and the deficit both went up? He thinks this Budget is bad! We are creating jobs with this Budget. We are bringing the deficit down. Where was he when the Liberals were bringing in those Budgets? I can go on reading this, it is as comical as heck. He went on to say:

The Minister's agenda for economic renewal is not working yet for us.

That is the NDP talking. We created 705,000 jobs, so what is wrong with that agenda?

Mr. Riis: Where have you created those jobs? In B.C? In Alberta?

Mr. Holtmann: If you want to defend what he said—

Mr. Riis: I will tell you where, in downtown Toronto.

Mr. Holtmann: What else did the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre say? In his review of the Budget he said:

We got an acceleration of tax payments by larger employers, which will affect the cash flow of the private sector to the benefit of the cash flow of the public sector.

Can you make out what the dickens that is? That is what he got out of the Budget. I never heard of such a mishmash. Then he refers to how important the Budget would be to his constituents in Ottawa Centre. Ottawa is the richest place in this country. Civil servants earn so much and the National Capital Commission is looking after the City of Ottawa. I think this is a pretty good place to be.

Let us go back to the Minister of Finance of the Province of Manitoba and see what he has done. He is a member of the NDP and I suppose the Hon. Member would do what he has done. To collect more money they recently increased hydro rates for everyone, rich and poor, by 4.7 per cent. That hits the poor guy, and they stand up for the poor guy. At least they say they do. Then they turn around and if you are making $18,000 you are going to pay another $400. That is standing up for the little guy? Can the Hon. Member stand up in this House and still say he stands up for the little guy?

Mr. Riis: Are you a little guy?

Mr. Holtmann: No, but you defend the little guy, the poor fellow. Then they hit smokers. Did you hear today how they kind of laughed in the House about taxing smoking? Yet the NDP in Manitoba taxed smokers. So did we. They should not be critical of it because it is done by the NDP as well as the Conservatives and Liberals. It is a natural thing to tax. The NDP cannot jump all over the fence.

Get a load of this. There is an article here that says fast food junkies will have to fork out more for take-out foods over $6. Do you remember when we brought in a tax on piggy-puffs and crunchies? We brought in a little tax on those things you get at drive-in theaters for kids. The NDP turns around and does the same thing and then criticizes us.

I realize that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, but I think the Members to my left should put the proper perspective on things. They have supported Budget after Budget which drove this country into devastating economic chaos. They should support this Government for putting things back together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend from Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) would not want to mislead the House inadvertently. He just said the NDP has been supporting these Budgets over the years. I want to make it perfectly clear—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): In 1970, 1972, 1973.

Mr. Riis: —that the NDP has never supported a Liberal Budget.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, you did.

Mr. Riis: The NDP has never supported a Liberal Budget or a Conservative Budget.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Oh, yes, you did.

Mr. Riis: Let us just clear the decks of that comment.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Nelson, 1973, minority Government. I was here.

Mr. Riis: I also want to clear up a misconception left by my hon. friend. He was talking about all these jobs being created. He will remember that a Statistics Canada labour report a few weeks ago identified the permanent jobs created in 1986 and found that 96 per cent of those jobs were created in the Province of Ontario, most of those within 100 miles of the CN Tower in downtown Toronto. Let us be clear: Jobs have been created in the greater Toronto area, but there is another 99.9 per cent of Canada which was overlooked.

If the Government has done all these wonderful things towards building confidence, why has there been a net outflow of hard-core investment money totalling $8 billion over the last two years? When you take into account the money that has come into Canada for investment and that which has left for investment in the U.S., Hong Kong or elsewhere, there is a $10 billion deficit.

Mr. Fennell: How much came in?

Mr. Riis: Can the Hon. Member explain how that reflects confidence?

While he is on his feet, does he agree with this statement uttered by no less than Sir John A. Macdonald, the Leader of the Conservative Party and founder of the nation of Canada, when he said on March 7, 1878, in this House:

> There are national considerations, Mr. Speaker, that rise far higher than the mere accumulation of wealth, than the mere question of trade advantage; there is prestige, national status, national dominion,—and no great nation has ever risen whose policy was free-trade.

• (1730)

John A. Macdonald probably sat in the area where the Hon. Member sits now. Does the Member agree with Sir John A. MacDonald's comment? How does he explain the outflow of $10 million of investment from Canada over the last two years?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I will tackle the latter question of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) first. The Member said that a country will never prosper by entering into free trade. I believe the Member may misunderstand what free trade is. The countries in the EEC to which the Member referred have some social elements to them. They seem to prosper quite well in the unified trade agreement which they set forward. It would certainly not be a negative force for Canada to do something similar with our neighbour to the south in terms of our ability to manufacture, export and import, because trade is exactly that, a two-way flow.

I am sure that during his time Sir John A. Macdonald was a very capable person. However, I am sure that the parameters which affect world trade today are different from those that existed during his era. I will not dispute that in his era he was correct. That is pretty difficult for me to say.

With regard to inflow and outflow, the fact that corporate money has been flowing out of this country demonstrates that our corporations want to perform internationally. There is nothing wrong with corporations going afield. Americans have come to Canada and built up such corporations as General Motors. I think it is very healthy for Canadian corporations to expand their businesses elsewhere as well.

You cannot have it both ways. You cannot have money flowing in, which it does, and have none flow out. What kind of an imaginary attitude is that? Based on the premise of his questions, the Member would want no funds to leave Canada but would want everyone with an investment dollar to invest it here. European companies have invested in Canada and now Canada has the opportunity to reciprocate. I think that is a healthy attitude. We would like more of our money to stay here, but it is proper to spend money in Third World nations which are trading here. Canadian companies have great expertise which should be exploited elsewhere.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the Hon. Member's comments relating to the Budget. I would like to compliment and commend him on his very worthy and wise comments in that regard. I have also been listening to the comments and criticisms of the opposition Parties, particularly the NDP, with respect to the Budget and government expenditures. Opposition Members have said specifically that the Government, in cutting expenditures, has cut out things which are important to ordinary Canadians. I am sure the Hon. Member noticed, as I did, in the spending estimates for this year that the spending for old age security, guaranteed income supplement and spouses' allowance will be increasing by over $900 million in the coming fiscal year. There will be almost a $1 billion increase in the Government's spending on behalf of senior citizens.

Would the Hon. Member give us his views on how this ties in with the criticism of the Opposition? How can the Opposition seriously say that the Government is not spending more money on senior citizens and those who truly need more assistance in our society?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to respond to that. Through many of their statements opposition Members would have us believe that the Government has no interest in the seniors of the country, that the Government would cut back on seniors in many areas. I must admit that we attempted to do such a thing and found that we were in error. We made no bones about the fact that it would have been a mistake to have proceeded with the deindexing of the old age pension. We decided not to proceed with that and since then have maintained the high road. Since then we have continued to do more to help those who built this country.

No government can tax away a deficit. We have to be better money managers. We have to cut out the spending of federal funds in areas where it is very wasteful. There are still many areas in the Government where money is being wasted. We have to cut back in those areas in order to help those who need help.

With regard to day care we must be very careful to ensure that the assistance goes only to those who need it. We must take that route in order to be good money managers. The Government cannot continue to spend more money than it takes in. That cannot continue because eventually the dollar will be totally devalued. Some day there has to be a balanced Budget. I believe that even the Opposition agrees with this. I believe that had the Liberal Party stayed in power, although it would have been devastating, it would have stopped spending money. I really believe that.

We are now spending 33 cents of every dollar to pay the interest on the debt. That would increase to 50 cents of every dollar as the debt escalates. When we have to pay 90 cents of every dollar, what kind of service can we provide? That is the danger we have to avoid. We were elected for good money management skills. Although there are ups and downs, if we can avoid bad errors we will be able to keep the economy on the good and healthy track which it is on today.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to compliment the Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) on his comments. I appreciated the way in which he outlined the track record of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). It is a terrible record of deficit after deficit, be it good years or bad. I did not mean to correct the Hon. Member when he said the deficit was $38 billion in 1984, but I am sure it would have hit the $40 billion mark had we not taken over.

I am distressed from time to time, as I know my colleague is, about the misleading statements and inaccuracies which come out of the mouths of the opposition Parties. I want to commend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for his super record in his three Budgets. Not only has he gotten the deficit down but has done a number of different things to help Canadians. One is setting the target that there will be a Budget in February of each year. In the past, people had to guess when the next Budget would come down, but we have removed that uncertainty and given the process some stability.

• (1740)

Another area where there have been misleading comments is transfer of payments to provinces. The Opposition says that these payments are being reduced when we know they are climbing from $65 billion to $90 billion in the next five years. That is a $25 billion increase to the provinces for higher education and health care.

My question concerns another area about which there have been misleading comments. It is regional development. I believe my colleague would agree that if Canadians believed what they heard from the Opposition, they would think the Government is insensitive to regional development. Are we insensitive to regional development?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised the question of regional development. Unlike past Governments, our Government has representation from every province coast to coast. I am sure Hon. Members in the Liberal Party have wondered how we achieve that.

Mr. Lapierre: We will do it next time.

Mr. Holtmann: The Hon. Member says that they will do it next time, but that is how to get regional representation and concerns expressed by people from all parts of Canada.

The Member is correct that Atlantic Canada requires much more assistance, perhaps even more attention than we have given it at this point. There is no denying that. However, the Government has limited funds for job creation. It cannot happen overnight.

The Hon. Member talked about the strength of the economy as a result of the Budget. Let me say something about our Minister of Finance. A good friend of mine, Mr. Robertson, told me that he overheard some opposition Members saying: "If we could only have a Michael Wilson among us. If we could only have a man like that, compared to all the former Finance Ministers we have had to change so often over 15 years, we would take him tomorrow".

As a matter of fact, those sentiments are being expressed in the opposition lobby. The fact is that the Minister of Finance has the economy moving as a result of his Budgets.

Mr. Lapierre: He should help you with the polls.

Mr. Holtmann: The economy is growing and investment is growing because interest rates are remaining low as a result of the option by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Lapierre: It does not show in the polls.

Mr. Holtmann: The Hon. Member says that it does not show in the polls. He is absolutely right, it does not show in the polls, but it will in time.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I thought the Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) admitted that indeed regional development spending was down and in fact the Government was not doing enough for regional development. That seems to concur with what Premier Peckford said in answer to the Budget. He said:

> They are still re-emphasizing a market-driven economy completely when, in the context of Newfoundland or Manitoba or P.E.I., that will not work if we're going to get the kinds of things we need to be a market economy some day.

He went on to say:

> We haven't gotten our message through that here regional economic development is extremely important and some of that growth that's happening in Ontario and Quebec can only be translated down here through federal intervention.

How does the Hon. Member respond to the comment on the Budget by the Conservative Premier of Newfoundland?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to what was said by the Premier of Newfoundland. I think no one better than the Premier of Newfoundland knows the economic crisis his people face in that province. I also agree, although perhaps not totally, that the Government has looked at the problem and is always working on ways to help Newfoundland. Certainly a total influx of money alone is not the answer. I am sure the Premier recognizes that there are certain resources in the province he would like to develop.

We must remember that we have been in office only two and a half years. No one promised that we could turn the economy around in two and a half years. I also believe that we will continue to address the problem by using every means the Government has at its disposal to work with provinces such as Newfoundland. I believe we have the dedication.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(7), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House.

[English]

Accordingly, the question is as follows: Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, has moved:

> That this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

And in amendment thereto, Mr. Garneau, seconded by Mr. Johnston, has moved:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "this House condemns the Government for:

—presenting a budget that increases taxes on individual

Canadians for the third year in a row, totalling billions and billions of dollars;

—widening the gap between the rich and the poor by their ill-advised and heartless fiscal policy;

—cutting the crucial Regional Economic Development budget, for the third year in a row; and —once again delaying the long promised essential tax reform programme thereby postponing any attempt to create more fairness in our tax system which is being eroded under the present conservative administration."

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Garneau), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

It being 6.15 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to order passed Monday, March 16, 1987, to put to the House all questions necessary to dispose of Government Order No. 6.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S. BILATERAL TRADING AGREEMENT

The House resumed from Monday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

And the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)(p.4158).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "arrangement" and by substituting the following:

"or arrangements with the United States, as part of Canada's multilateral trade policy, while protecting Canadian sovereignty through the application of the following conditions,

Namely that:

There not be an all-inclusive free trade arrangement with the United States since such an arrangement would undermine Canada's political, economic and cultural independence; and would jeopardize Canada's regional development policies, agricultural policies, cultural industries, financial and service industries, and the Auto Pact;

And that:

Any such negotiations are designed to gain greater access to U.S. markets by limiting the operation of contingency protection and non-tariff barriers such as current U.S. and State government procurement regulations and restoring previous access for softwood lumber in U.S. markets;

While at the same time:

Ensuring Canadian independence for domestic programs, policies and legislative authority in areas such as: social policy, agricultural marketing, supply management and support programs; subsidies and assistance for regional and industrial development programs including high technology development; the Auto Pact; the environment; bilingualism (including labelling); culture (including cultural industries); financial and service industries;

And that:

The Government of Canada tables transitional adjustment assistance proposals to protect those workers, sectors, firms and businesses which may be adversely affected by such a trading arrangement or arrangements;

And that:

The Government of Canada secure an immediate standstill of U.S. trade harassment including such matters as agriculture, energy, fish, potash, and steel."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REVIEW OF DELEGATED LEGISLATION

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I advise the House that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) will be rising, but before he does I have the obligation to deliver the following observations.

Before proposing the question of the Hon. Member for York Centre the House might allow the Speaker to express certain reservations about the form of the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which will be the subject of the next hour's debate, if indeed there is an hour's debate.

For the first time since the new and still provisional Standing Orders were adopted on February 24, 1986, the joint committee has chosen to exercise its new powers under Standing Order 44 and ask the House to order the rescinding of a specific regulation.

[Translation]

The Minister has elected, as it is his right, to demand a debate on the question.

[English]

The question to be eventually put to the House today is that "The Third Report of the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be concurred in". In the said committee report I found the following key and principal words:

> Pursuant to Standing Order 44 of the House your Committee now moves: that the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Regulations (C.R.C. c.875) be revoked.

In the opinion of the Chair, this phrase creates an ambiguity as to what in fact will be the order of the House should the concurrence motion proposed by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) be adopted.

I wish to point out that the ambiguity originates with Standing Order 44 itself, which in the English version mentions a report of the committee "containing a proposed motion which, if the report is concurred in, would be an Order of the House . . . .". The French version, however, is clearer and refers to a "resolution of the Committee" and not a motion. A motion is a proposal, usually requiring notice, and is debatable and amendable. It only becomes a resolution when put and adopted.

However it happened, we must understand that we have an English version which talks about a motion, with all of the implications of what that word means, and a French version which talks about a resolution, something arrived at after a motion is put which amounts to a decision. In the opinion of the Chair, the French version is preferable because it makes a lot more sense procedurally.

If the House were to concur in this report, it would only have agreed to the committee moving a motion. The decision of the House would not provide for a clear direction to the Ministry to rescind a regulation but only express the House's agreement to the moving of a particular motion by the committee. Furthermore, such a procedure would be quite sterile for there is no mechanism in the Standing Orders for a committee to in fact move a motion and have it debated and adopted.

The Chair has reviewed the practice in other Commonwealth countries, more particularly that in Australia, and I have found that our Standing Orders are procedurally unique. Because this is a new procedure, the Chair is reluctant to reject outright the said report. Such a decision would not be supportive of the spirit of our recent reforms. Therefore, for the purposes of this report and of this report only, the Chair will deem the words used in the report to be a clear expression of the committee's intent to have the regulations revoked and, should the report be adopted, the Ministry will not be in doubt as to what the House has ordered.

I am grateful, as I am sure all Hon. Members are, that the Hon. Minister is in the Chamber at this time. I am sure the Minister will take careful note of the comments of the Chair.

In future reports of this kind, the Chair would ask the committee to use a form of words which will unequivocally express its intentions and, if adopted, can be extracted from the report and also be a clear expression of the House's resolve.

[Translation]

The Chair hopes that the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections will look into this ambiguity in our Standing Orders as soon as possible.

Delegated Legislation

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert Kaplan (York Centre) moved:

That the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the rules provide for interventions of 10 minutes. Before I begin the statement I had intended to make in my ten minutes, I want to make an observation about the ruling you just made. Of course, I accept your ruling and appreciate that the report before you containing the motion is acceptable for the purpose of this debate. However, I hope and ask that on the occasion of the presentation of our next report that I be given the opportunity to make submissions about it before you reach a conclusion as to the propriety of the language. I would like to be able to defend the language in the next report when it is submitted. I will not take it for granted that the present formulation will be acceptable next time. I understand that is the point that you want to make. However, before you, in effect, rule against this language I would ask to have the opportunity when I submit our next report to make submissions in that respect.

• (1310)

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) raises a matter of importance. I want to make it quite clear to the Hon. Member and all Hon. Members that, of course, I will hear any discussion that might be helpful.

What the Chair has tried to do in making these observations today is to point out to Hon. Members that while I think it is clear what the intent of the matter is, the Chair hopes that Hon. Members and the committee will be able to phrase the words in such a way that the intent is carried out in this Chamber if it is to be debated.

Mr. Kaplan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will submit my next report and when I do I look forward to debating with you the propriety of the formulation used in the report. I would like to turn to the third report which—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair will be permitted to observe that the luxury of debate is kept from it. I must confess, and Hon. Members probably have noticed, that there are times when it takes all of the constraint and restraint that I can muster to keep from entering into debate. However, the Hon. Member is certainly entitled to make representations and make an intervention.

Mr. Kaplan: As you noted, this is an unprecedented occasion. I believe it is worth heralding by remarking that one of the significant reforms of the Government is achieved today, in that the committee is proposing to exercise the authority that it has to move the revocation of a regulation after finding, in due course and in the normal workings of the committee, that the regulation is invalid.

I have had some discussions with all Parties, and the debate, although introduced today, will not come to the normal fruition that one would have anticipated, namely, a vote on whether the report should be concurred in. In any event, I want to take the opportunity to put the report before the Chamber and to indicate that it is a report which, if adopted, would revoke the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Regulations, CRC Chapter 875.

These regulations propose non-tariff barriers on the importation of fresh fruit and vegetables into Canada. The regulations were originally adopted under the authority of the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act many decades ago. The validity of the regulations was not challenged for decades, until the introduction of the Statutory Instruments Act by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and which were reviewed pursuant to that statute in early 1983.

In 1983 the committee received the opinion of the legal advisers of the Department of Agriculture that the regulations were ultra vires of the Act passed by the Parliament of Canada. In other words, there never was any legal authority for the regulations. The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), who is in the House, confirmed that these regulations are not authorized by law, and in a letter dated April 24, 1986, he informed the joint chairmen of the committee, Senator Nurgitz and myself, that he had "instructed his officials to proceed with the revocation of the regulations".

We then requested the assurance from the Minister that pending formal revocation, the regulations would not be enforced by customs officers. The then Minister, the Hon. Eugene Whelan, refused to revoke the illegal regulations on the ground that to do so would seriously jeopardize the Canadian produce industry.

The Minister's declared intention to continue applying these restrictions led the committee, then chaired by the Hon. Senator John Godfrey and the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty), to table the fourth report of the joint committee. In that report, the committee stated that:

—the continued application of these Regulations at the present time involves an inadmissible departure from the usages of Parliamentary government and a repudiation of the concept of the Rule of Law which is at the heart of our constitutional order. While the Committee recognizes that the revocation of these import restrictions may result in an economic disadvantage for domestic producers of fruit and vegetables, it does not accept that this justifies the Executive in illegally restricting the liberty of trade and commerce of Canadian importers. To do so would be to accept that ours is a government of men and not of laws.

Our committee has no business passing judgment on the policy justification of regulations. I could easily agree that the regulations are desirable in the interest of the horticultural industry and I would go so far as to say that regulations of that character may be needed. Our objection as a committee is to the failure of the regulations to conform to the rule of law, which is to say that the statute under which they have been purported to be introduced does not justify passing regulations of this sort. Within the mandate of our committee, we must come to the conclusion that they ought to be recognized as being invalid and ought to be replaced.

For some time, in the interest of the rule of law, our committee has been urging the Government to replace—

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is that there was an acknowledgement which is on the record—and discussions took place between certain parties—that a certain procedure would be followed on this particular item. I just remind the Hon. Member that he was part of that agreement. I hope that he would honour the agreement that was made eyeball to eyeball, in a handshake between he and myself, that a procedure would be announced in the House, would be followed and that the debate on the substance of this issue need not take place. I am honouring that commitment. I would ask that all participants do the same.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I did not understand when we made the agreement that the report would not be presented. I will certainly conclude my remarks now, if that was the understanding of the other two. But I thought I would have the opportunity to present the report, explain it and discuss the procedure. I certainly confirm that we had a discussion. If it was the understanding of my colleagues that there would be no discussion or no explanation of the procedure I will accept that and conclude by simply saying that I look forward to a reconsideration of the report and hope that in due course the issue will be dealt with by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair should observe that there clearly was some discussion among members. The Hon. Minister has pointed that out. I certainly want to thank the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for so quickly accepting the remarks and the intervention of the Hon. Minister. I am sure that all Parties can have a useful discussion with respect to this matter in whatever future course it takes.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to indicate that there had been previous discussions and the impression was that we would simply introduce ourselves to the issue or the problem, hear you in terms of your observations, and then agree to refer the matter for further discussion.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for providing me with the opportunity of an intervention at this point in our discussions. This is an historic day in Parliament. I think it is encouraging for all of us as private members to see that the processes of the McGrath report have indeed been effective and that committees have had an opportunity of exercising to some degree the extended powers which have been placed with them through the adoption of the McGrath report by the House.

I believe the position which has been related by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) fairly represents the situation as indeed it does exist. I would like to put forward an amendment at this time. I think the amendment is particularly opportune in view of the comments you made preceding the discussions which have taken place here today. I also believe that my amendment will preclude the necessity of any further discussion on the matter by the House.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) in a moment. The Chair, of course, is aware, as are all Hon. Members in the Chamber and those who are watching this debate, that there seems to have been some arrangement made between the Parties. The Chair is in the hands of the House, naturally, but I am just wondering whether an amendment at this time might be deemed by some other Members to not be in accord with the understanding. If it is, I would perhaps ask the Hon. Minister, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) to give the Chair some guidance in this matter.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, if you would simply recognize my colleague, the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett), we would be in motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis):

That the Third Report of the Standing Joint Committee be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the said Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments for further consideration.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister, the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal and other Hon. Members.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to your comments at the beginning of this sitting about the need for having Standing Order 44 revised and corrected or referred to the Standing Committee that deals with the Standing Orders of the House regularly. I would also like to ask the Chair given its comments whether it wants the Committee to report as soon as possible on the difference between "motion" in English and résolution in French, so that the matter will be settled once and for all.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: In response to the Hon. Member, the Chair cannot order the Committee to do anything. Clearly, all Hon. Members have a problem with the fact that there are two quite different versions intending to address the same situation. The Chair has suggested that it be considered by the Committee. The Chair cannot order the Committee to even consider it and the Chair cannot order the Committee to report back speedily. The Chair can observe that if the Committee is prepared to consider it, it might very well be to the advantage of all of us to report back speedily.

PATENT ACT—OPPOSITION TO AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is high time the Government took the time to listen to what Canadians and the organizations that represent them are saying about Bill C-22 and the proposed changes to the Patent Act affecting prescription drugs in Canada.

The Consumers' Association of Canada stated before the legislative committee that studied the Bill that:

> We do not see anything in the bill that really gives a guarantee that Canadians can receive the benefits that are promised in the press releases—
> Unless we are careful in writing something into the act to guarantee that research promises relate to net jobs, we could actually end up being had.

Another quotation reads:

> —if the bill is going to do something for Canada on the research front it will have to contain some specific target, like an 8 per cent or 10 per cent performance target for research and development per firm on the basis of the firm's sales.

It is time the Government listened to the opinion of Canadians about this terrible piece of legislation. Canadians want this Bill withdrawn. I call upon the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) to come to his senses, and to withdraw it immediately.

THE CONSTITUTION

SUPPORT FOR PROTECTION OF RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, next week we will have the fourth hour of debate on M-37, a motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges). It is of great importance to many Canadians because it would grant to the unborn the right to life, liberty, and security of the person.

In the riding of Calgary North some 37,000 households received a questionnaire with respect to this measure. Some 1,895 people responded. The results show that 1,251 believe the motion should pass, while 622 think it should be rejected.

Some 66 per cent of the respondents in Calgary North support the protection of the unborn. I trust other members have notified their constituents of this motion and that they have inquired as to their feelings toward it.

WILDLIFE

PORCUPINE CARIBOU HERD—DANGER PRESENTED BY U.S. OIL EXPLORATION PLANS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the NDP I would like to protest the fact that the U.S. Department of the Interior plans to go ahead with oil exploration and development within the Alaska Arctic Wildlife Refuge, a move which Canada opposes because of the danger to the Porcupine caribou herd, and the native people who depend on it.

In ignoring Canadian concerns the Americans are showing contempt for the value of wildlife, for the rights of aboriginal people, and for the tradition of joint Canadian-American management of the shared resource which the migrating caribou represent. Even the U.S. National Wildlife Federation called the U.S. action a case of "arrogant disregard".

The U.S. is increasingly regarding its own north and the Canadian North as an area which exists only for the economic and military purposes of the majority to the south. Canadian sovereignty in the north must be built on respect for native people, for wildlife, and for the environment. I say to the Government that strongly protesting this unilateral American action is a good place to start.

VIA RAIL

CHANGES IN SERVICE AFFECTING GUELPH

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, if there is a more arrogant organization in Canada than VIA Rail I hope we never hear of it.

VIA promised the people of Guelph a liaison committee to discuss problems and changes. We got our committee, and we got a lot of smoke as well. We also have two changes which were not discussed with anyone. We were ignored, Mr. Hanigan, until your letter telling us of the deleted train from Toronto to Guelph, Kitchener and London, and the untenable change of time of another. So much for consultation. So much for liaison. So much for the public. Thank you, VIA Rail.

THE CONSTITUTION

NEED FOR RECOGNIZING SPECIAL STATUS FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the constitutional conference called by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) so that Quebec can join the Canadian Constitution seems to have got off on the wrong foot. Yesterday Mr. Pawley, the NDP Premier of Manitoba, said Quebec was not different and that he was against special status. Today Mr. Getty, the Conservative Premier of Alberta, says he is against special status for Quebec, and that when he was a football player, he didn't notice any difference in the spectators from that province. And yesterday, a proposal by the Premier of Quebec to have the province's authority to select its own immigrants enshrined in the Constitution, a matter of vital importance, was turned down by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Conservative Members from Quebec and the Leader of the New Democratic Party to urge the two Premiers to come to their senses and enable Quebec to join the Canadian Constitution by recognizing Quebec's special status.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

QUEBEC

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the press had some troubling news: "The real face of the NDP which treats Quebec like a third world country". At the convention in Montreal, an NDP Member from Ontario representing garment workers described the situation of francophone Quebecers in apocalyptic terms. She said, in referring to Quebecers: "They are oppressed, like Blacks and women; they do not have the right to speak French and are kept in line by their anglophone bosses; and they have the worst schools and the worst hospitals."

Mr. Speaker, Quebecers do not need a lesson from the NDP, and I suggest that this Party which is full of the most flagrant contradictions brush up on its facts. We do not need the comments of NDP Howard Pawley, who conducted a wide-open campaign against Quebec in the CF-18 dossier. Quebecers do not need the comments of Allan Blakeney, who one night in November, 1981, cooked up an agreement with the Liberals which excluded Quebec.

Quebecers will not support a socialist party financed by the CTC and Shirley Carr, without the consent of the membership. Workers of Canada, beware! The team of Shirley Carr and Broadbent is determined to invest your union dues in their election campaign. And I want all Quebecers to know that their Conservative Members, including the Member for Beauce, will continue to protect their interests.

What do Ontario, the west and the Maritime Provinces think of the resolutions that were adopted Saturday in Montreal by the New Democratic Party? A two-faced party, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

MANAGEMENT OF GRANVILLE ISLAND PUBLIC MARKET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Granville Island Business Association in Vancouver has released a strongly worded report which questions the organization of the Granville Island Public Market and the management practices of CMHC. The report calls on the Minister responsible for housing to strike an independent task force to study solutions for the market. Market merchants have strongly endorsed the report and put forward a list of highly qualified individuals willing to serve on the task force. The Government must start recognizing the legitimate needs of the small business community on Granville Island and act quickly on this matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED INVOLVEMENT OF CANADIAN COMPANIES IN ROUTING SUPPLIES TO HONDURAN CONTRAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I alleged in this House that Canada was involved in the arms trade with the Contras in Nicaragua. We were involved through covert activity to get around the U.S. congressional ban of 1984. Examples were Propair Caribou planes going to the Contras, and Trans World Arms.

I have obtained from the Tower Commission the flow chart from Colonel Oliver North's office which shows Trans World Arms was indeed involved, as well as Defex of Portugal. I have obtained Spanish copies of two end-user certificates, one used by Energy Resources International, a company controlled by Oliver North and Richard Secord, and exactly the same wording was on the certificate used by Trans World Arms of 5340 Ferrier Street in Montreal. This is conclusive evidence to show that Canadian companies were involved in the White House undercover project. There should be a public inquiry in Canada and a Canadian response to the Tower Commission report on those matters involving Canada.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CRITICISM OF TAX MEASURES IN MANITOBA BUDGET

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday evening Manitobans found out what electing an NDP Government means. That Government handed down the biggest tax grab in the history of Manitoba. This tax grab will take an additional $700 per year from over 80 per cent of Manitobans. The sales tax increased to 7 per cent, hydro increased 4.7 per cent on top of a previously announced 5 per cent. Imagine this, a job tax of 2.25 per cent. Cigarettes, alcohol, diesel fuel, insulation, take-out foods—which the NDP criticized us for in this House—virtually everything consumed by the average Manitoban has been hit hard.

Even worse is the NDP do-nothing approach to agriculture. Last week the Premier of Manitoba gave hope to Manitoba farmers with his speech in Montreal. Two days later he fell flat in a stubble field. It is shameful that while the federal Government continues to pump over $500 million in direct contributions to Manitoba farmers, the NDP can only spend a measly $85 million. The NDP disappointed the farmers of Manitoba and of all of Canada, and always will.

EFFECT OF PROPOSED POWER PURCHASE IN UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, from the world of acid rain we learn that the Potomac Electric Power Company has signed a contract to purchase electricity for 18 years from the Ohio Edison Company. The contract is still subject to approval by the U.S. Energy Commission.

The Canadian Embassy joined the Natural Resources Defence Council in saying that the sale shows how loopholes in U.S. environmental law allow electrical utilities to avoid investing in pollution control measures.

"Our concern and the concern of the environmental groups is that it gives the appearance the utilities are trying to circumvent the intention of the Clean Air Act which was passed to ensure new plants would be built with the best available technology for reducing emissions", says Jim Wright, top environmental official at the Embassy in Washington.

Evidently, utilities are able to get around the regulations by hanging on to dirty old plants that pre-date the new pollution control standards. I call upon the Government to protest officially this proposed power purchase, which will cause additional environmental damage to Canada.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF UNITED STATES PROGRAM

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it appears the mountains may finally be moving in the acid rain issue south of the border.

President Ronald Reagan announced this morning that he will implement a control technology commercial demonstration program by providing $2.5 billion, to be matched by the private sector. This could be a long awaited breakthrough in acid rain abatement on this continent.

Following the recommendations in the Joint Report of the Special Envoys on Acid Rain, released in January of last year, the President will also provide for an advisory panel comprised of experts from both countries. He is also recommending a review of U.S. federal and state regulations, which could result in additional sulphur dioxide and nitrogen oxide reductions.

Both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) have been seeking action from the U.S. administration on this issue, and the President's promise today could be the first step toward environmental security.

Let us all hope that the President's announcement today is just the thin edge of the wedge in active acid rain abatement.

FORESTRY

CRITICISM OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, last month, before he was forced to resign, the B.C. Minister of Forests decided to shelve a $28.6 million silviculture program and said that the British Columbia Government could not afford an increase in silviculture spending this year.

The Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) referred to British Columbia as a reforestation slum with its woefully inadequate reforestation policies. Only last week the B.C. Government said that it could not afford a $21 million request package to stop the budworm infestation ravaging the forests of central B.C.

This unwillingness to act is a disgrace. This year the Province of British Columbia will receive $360 million from the export lumber tax, yet its Government has stated that it does not plan to reinvest this money to maintain and develop the British Columbia forest resource.

A recent poll by Decima Research found that 75 per cent of British Columbians favour putting all or most of the money collected from the lumber tax back into forest related spending.

I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister for International Trade, and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) to do whatever is necessary to ensure that in tomorrow's Budget the Minister of Finance for British Columbia includes a provision stating that the full $360 million is to be dedicated to husbanding the province's forests, through direct investments where feasible, and through the establishment of a forest industry heritage fund for the long-term funding of silviculture programs in that province.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ROLE PLAYED BY HELICOPTER PILOT IN RESCUING RUSSIAN SAILORS

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, many Canadians are now aware that a Canadian Forces pilot on exchange duty with the United States Coast Guard at Cape Cod, Massachusetts, was involved last Saturday in an heroic rescue mission off the coast of New Jersey in which 37 lives were saved.

A distress signal from a Soviet freighter was received early Saturday morning, and soon thereafter rescue helicopters were dispatched to the scene. Canadian Forces pilot, Captain Rick Hardy, a native of Prince Edward Island, was the second helicopter pilot to arrive on scene. With a steady hand during heavy rain and sleet, screaming winds and dangerous sea conditions, his helicopter plucked 16 Russian sailors off the deck of their ship.

This daring rescue during severe weather conditions shows the great expertise and coolness of this Canadian Forces pilot. All Canadians can feel proud of the honour which has been bestowed upon him and his Coast Guard colleagues by the President of the United States. All Atlantic Canadians are especially proud.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

WAR CRIMINALS

DESCHÊNES COMMISSION REPORT—CALL FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDY ON ENTRY TO CANADA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Deschênes Report reinforces the commitment of Canadians to the principles of justice. An important part of the commission's mandate was to report on when and how Nazi war criminals obtained entry to Canada.

The analysis of this question prepared by Alti Rodal has been described by Justice Deschênes as "an outstanding contribution—which deserves wide distribution". I therefore call upon the Government to make the document public without which there is no historical context for the individual cases reviewed by the commission.

• (1415)

I am pleased the Government intends to amend our Criminal Code to permit prosecutions of war criminals in Canada. In March, 1985, I introduced a similar amendment and was advised that it was premature. I trust the Government will proceed quickly with amendments and direct our law enforcement agencies to give these cases a priority. To do otherwise would be to betray the victims of Naziism, the privilege of Canadian citizenship, and Canada's moral and international obligation to prosecute war criminals. The passage of time does not diminish the severity of war crimes committed by any individual, wherever and whenever perpetrated.

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF NDP AND LIBERAL PARTIES—EFFECT ON ALBERTA

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, for decades now Albertans have been held down by trade shackles. The Progressives of western Canada set out to remove those fetters. They later joined the Conservatives and the fight to free Alberta continued.

Tommy Douglas and his CCF joined the battle, but when the unions took over the NDP the tradition of Tommy Douglas died and Alberta was abandoned by that Party. Under Pierre Trudeau, Marc Lalonde and their colleagues, the Liberals not only ignored Alberta but added to the problem with their oppressive energy policies. Now, Mr. Speaker, the NDP and the Liberals have once again joined to prevent Alberta from throwing off those shackles.

The Liberals have joined forces with the Premier of Ontario, the NDP and the union bosses in an attempt to prevent the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from negotiating a freer trade agreement with the United States, an agreement that could finally remove some of the heaviest shackles from around the necks of Albertans. The Liberals, the New Democrats and their colleagues are working against Alberta. They should be declared Public Enemy No. 1.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—CALL FOR INCREASED MAINTENANCE BUDGET

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the Government has neglected small craft harbours, boat launching ramps and wharves in Canada to the point of being irresponsible. Existing small craft boating facilities are being allowed to deteriorate because there is no money for maintenance. As a result, existing harbours, wharfs and launching ramps are going to cost more money to repair because when they are neglected they deteriorate faster. This is not a saving, Mr. Speaker. It is simply throwing money away. It costs money to maintain and repair them but it saves money if they are repaired regularly. This neglect is just plain bad management on the part of the Minister.

The Government preaches about tourism and recreation but does nothing in the development of onshore and offshore tourist facilities to support the rapidly growing boating industry in Canada which, incidentally, pays large amounts of taxes to both federal and provincial Governments.

In Ontario the budgets for small craft harbours and boating accommodations have been nil. There is a great demand for boating facilities and maintenance in eastern and northern Ontario. If the Government is truly interested in tourism and recreation, it is time it started doing something for the boating industry in Ontario and across the country. A lot of Conservative unkept promises and self-praise will never launch a boat.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise Hon. Members that before we commence Question Period I will be hearing remarks by the Hon. Minister of Veteran Affairs (Mr. Hees), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

THE LATE HON. DOUGLAS CHARLES ABBOTT

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, following consultations with the other Parties I am rising now to speak in remembrance and tribute to the Hon. Douglas Abbott who died yesterday. Mr. Abbott was elected first to Parliament in 1940 and became Minister of Finance in 1946. He served in that portfolio with great distinction until 1954 when he retired to become a Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada.

I was privileged to serve in the House for my first four years during Mr. Abbott's term as Minister of Finance and found him to be one of the most able and popular Ministers whom I have ever known, and I think probably one of the most popular and able Ministers who ever served in this Parliament. He was a remarkable man.

He had friends in every part of the House in equal quantity. Members of all Parties admired his ability, appreciated his warm personality and his very keen sense of humour. He will be very greatly missed by all of those who were privileged to know him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that was a typically generous gesture made by my friend, the Hon. Member for Northumberland, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). I would like to respond on behalf of our side of the House and particularly on behalf of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and myself. Both of us knew Mr. Justice Abbott personally, held him in high regard, and felt great affection for him.

I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs and Mr. Stanley Knowles are probably the only two people here in the House now who served in the House of Commons with Douglas Abbott. They will remember him as we remember him, a great servant of the people of Canada. He was not only a Member of Parliament for 14 years but he was Minister of Finance from 1946 to 1954. He brought down nine Budgets in the House, a number of them bringing down surpluses. In the extraordinary flavour of that time, he was roundly criticized for that. I might say that I can say this with some authority because I was the last Minister of Finance ever to bring down a surplus in Canada.

Mr. Justice Abbott had an irresistible personality. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has referred to it. He was irresistible, engaging, and a wonderful friend. He sat on the Bench of the Supreme Court of Canada until retirement age. When he retired, he was the Senior Puisne Judge of that court and was renowned for his wide and vast knowledge of the public law of Canada.

Mr. Justice Abbott was born in Lennoxville in the Eastern Townships of Quebec. One of the personal honours accorded to him that he valued most highly was having been elected Chancellor of Bishop's University.

On behalf of the Liberal Party we send our deepest condolences to his widow, to his son Tony who served in the House of Commons as well and was a Minister in the Government of Mr. Trudeau, and to his family our warmest sympathies, our respect, and our admiration because he was a remarkable Canadian in his time.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) in regretting the passing of a distinguished Canadian, the Hon. Douglas Abbott. As has been mentioned, he was a successful politician and a distinguished judge. He was elected to the House of Commons before I was born. As a young lawyer I had the honour of appearing before Mr. Justice Abbott, the first time I appeared before the Supreme Court of Canada, while he did not rule for me, he gave me a good hearing.

Mr. Justice Abbott was, as I saw him, courteous, sharp, and very able. Many of us know his son Tony and our condolences go out to him and to the family. As the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, Tony did serve as a Member and as a Minister in this great House of Commons like his father.

Today, on behalf of my Party and all of us in the House of Commons, including those of us who did not have the honour of serving in the House with the Abbotts but served subsequent to them, I offer condolences to the family and thanks for a distinguished Canadian life.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to stand for one minute's silence.

[Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CLOSURE OF NORTHERN ONTARIO SAWMILL—LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. As a result of the Government's imposition of a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber exported to the United States, Kimberly-Clark, the maker of Kleenex, is closing its sawmill in Longlac in northern Ontario, laying off every worker, and ending an annual production of 20 million board feet of lumber.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister inquire of his colleague as to whether she still calls her sell-out of the Canadian lumber industry to the United States in order to salvage the free trade talks a great victory for Canada? Does she intend to do something to help Canadian lumber workers laid off from their jobs because of the imposition of this tax and the failure of the Government to have any guts in standing up to the American negotiators?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable when any mill closes for any reason. I find the reasons in this case rather perplexing given that that company indicated last year that it had lost $78 million over a decade. Therefore, it was losing last year. Incidentally, prices have risen by over 17 or 18 per cent since a year ago. Therefore, any company that was marginal last year would certainly be marginal this year.

[Translation]

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—EFFECT ON 15 PER CENT TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Given these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I must now direct my question to the Minister of State for Forestry and stress the fact that the 15 per cent tax exceeds the profit margin of Canada's whole forest industry, particularly softwood lumber. And not only did his Cabinet colleague abandon our softwood lumber industry workers when she imposed this 15 per cent tax, but she did not even make arrangements with the Americans to reassess the tax in case the value of our dollar would increase. So my question to the Minister is this: Considering the current exchange value of the Canadian dollar, will his colleague have the courage to reopen negotiations with the Americans with a view to repealing this tax?

[English]

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in this House, as has the Minister for International Trade, that negotiations are ongoing with the American Government on this particular issue. The Ministers of Forestry are dealing with the replacement measures in the hope of changing from the export tax to other provincial measures.

There are a lot of reasons why any mill closes, varying from inventory adjustments to normal seasonal closures, to upgrading and capital improvements. We do not know the reason in this case and I do not think it is fair to put the blame on any one aspect. This happens regularly at this time of year.

SECONDARY LUMBER REMANUFACTURERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talked about marginal companies. His 15 per cent tax is a wider margin than the entire margin of profit of the Canadian lumber industry. His colleague has converted the Canadian lumber industry into sawdust.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1430)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): She admitted in the House that she had neglected, by mistake, to understand the position of Canadian secondary manufacturers in the industry. She gave an undertaking to the House that in January she would go to Washington to correct that oversight. Does the Minister's colleague intend to go to Washington and exempt the secondary remanufacturers, eighty of whom across the country are facing bankruptcy as a result of the incompetence of his colleague, the Minister for International Trade?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, while nobody welcomed the actions of the American producers and the American Government that forced this kind of action, we are dealing with it. We sought the best agreement possible for Canada. Perhaps that is the reason why market prices are up significantly. The price today for eastern spruce pine fir is $285. At the end of December it was $266. The market does not show that it is suffering that much.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade said on Monday that part of the negotiation in bilateral negotiations with the United States is to include subsidies and other measures, and asking the United States Government to set rules by which Canadian industry can be assisted by the federal Government. Will the Minister confirm that the $183 million of assistance that is presently given by the federal Government in the policy of contracting out science and technology is one of those measures now subject to negotiation? Will he not agree that that particular measure, if negotiated away, would put in jeopardy the entire Canadian high-tech industry we are trying to promote and support?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to hear the Liberals say on the one hand that we must lay all our cards on the table while on the other hand their Leader says we have shown too many cards in the negotiations. Discussions and negotiations are continuing. I can assure the Hon. Member that the Government will protect that very valuable industry in these negotiations.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member has it wrong. We did not say that too many cards were shown; we said too many cards had been given away.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister or the spokesperson for the Government. In the measures set out by the Minister, we now know that the Government has cut back the export development assistance from $313 million last year to $26 million this year. At the same time, the Secretary of the Treasury in the United States has just asked Congress for an additional $200 million of export assistance. How can we have a proper negotiation on trade when we are cutting back our export assistance to Canadian industry while the Americans are adding to theirs?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find it very interesting that the Hon. Member thinks the United States trades with Canada and no one else in the world, and that everything should stop when these negotiations are taking place. There is nothing further from the truth. The United States trades with the world, as does Canada. This goes on while these negotiations continue. To relate one to the other is foolishness.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEED RETURN FOR GRAIN PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He will know that two weeks ago I asked him about the Government's decision on the initial price for our grain producers. The Government had not reached a decision. The Minister also knows that the initial price our grain producers received last year was down some 19 per cent and that disaster ought not be repeated this year. Will the Minister give a guarantee to our grain producers that their final price will certainly not be lower than what they received last year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize the procedure that must be followed. The information will have to be considered very carefully by Cabinet. That is exactly what we are doing at the moment. It would be very inappropriate for me to comment at this time, for a whole variety of reasons, many of which I will raise later today in the course of debate on the motion put forward by the Official Opposition.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concerns with respect to some of the details and that there may be a reason for the delay in the Minister's announcement. However, I, and more relevantly, the grain producers, would like to hear the Minister say today that whatever the Government's final decision, the final return to the grain producers who already had a 20 per cent drop last year will not be lower than it was last year? Will the Minister at least give that guarantee?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful if I respond to the Hon. Member's question by reading a statement that was released on March 5 by 55 farm leaders and some 35 farm organizations. This is exactly the message they are saying:

> Farm leaders today agree that producers should base spring planting decisions on market signals. Farmers should not make assumptions about government assistance in planting their 1987 production. It is too soon to come to any conclusions about the help that will be needed or how it would be given but we will insist—

That is the farm leadership:

> —that any new assistance measures be production and market neutral.

I ask the Member to consider that statement on behalf of the farm leadership in this country.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is saying that the market will ultimately be what dictates the Government's final answer, he is telling our grain producers that they can expect a major drop in what they will get this year compared to what they received last year. The Minister did not answer my first question. Will he answer my second question? Will he guarantee to our grain producers that their final return, which was already disastrously low last year, will not go below last year's level? That is what they want to hear.

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with the question. Surely, however, if the Hon. Member does not recognize it, I am certain members of his caucus should recognize that it is very premature, very untimely and very improper in the interests of Canadian agriculture to answer that question in the House at this time or until farmers have made up their own minds based on market signals, particularly in view of the fact that the seed drills have not been pulled out of the implement sheds, let alone triggered into the ground.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF PORTS TO FRENCH FISHING VESSELS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, today's headlines read: "Canadian Ports Closed to French Fishermen"; and "Vessels Will Be Arrested Outside Disputed Zone"; and "Government Acts Against Overfishing".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: The only problem is that the French fleet does not use Canadian ports, the French do not fish outside the disputed zone, and the entire French fleet to which the Government has now closed Canadian ports has already gone back to France.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Come on, John.

Mr. Baker: I ask the Minister of Transport, assigned by the Prime Minister to answer these questions and make statements in Newfoundland: why close the ports when the French do not use them; why forbid them to fish where they do not fish anyway; why have you made these statements after the French have already gone home? The Minister of Transport said: "This is a clear signal". We say that it is a smoke signal: "Heap big smoke, no fire".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we know the Hon. Member imagines himself to be an actor, but one wonders when he will get his act together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: On one day we hear the Hon. Member and his colleagues asking the Government to be firm and tough. The next day he is standing up in the House to say: "Why bother?" The inconsistency of the Member in his continued questions on this issue is regrettable and unhelpful. We announced our undertaking to close the ports and close the French fishing quota in the area known as 3PS because, according to our estimates, France has exceeded the quota which Canada accords to French-based vessels in that area. If this measure will not be effective, why is it that France has protested so strongly today?

• (1440)

Mr. Baker: The Minister of Fisheries finally stands up and answers a question on that subject. He reminds me of a whale which is usually below the surface but every now and then comes up to blow.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Are we now to assume from this statement that the French fleet can return to Canada in the fall, as they always do, and fish now unlimited in the disputed zone out to 200 miles, as they always do, as long as they go into the same ports that they always use? What is the Government up to? Has it assumed the same position and the same style as Premier Peckford with his intellectual terrorism? I am sure the French fishermen are shaking in their rubber boots.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I heard a question, but if there is any whale in this House which has learned to blow hard, it is the Hon. Member opposite.

What is so puzzling is that this Hon. Member sat and did nothing in 1972 as a member of that Government. When the Treaty was signed which led us into this debacle, this Hon. Member sat in his seat in 1976 while his Government cut off the nose and tail of the Grand Banks, cut off its nose and tail to spite its face, so to speak, which has denied Canadian fishermen their right and proper due. We are in the process of ensuring that those resources are conserved and managed to the benefit of the fishermen of Newfoundland and Labrador and, indeed, of all Atlantic Canada.

ASSISTANCE FOR FARMERS—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture seemed, by his previous answer to my Leader, to be saying that farmers cannot be expected to know what sort of assistance intention the Government has for them in this coming year. Could he expand on that a little and explain why he thinks farmers should not know the position of the federal Government with regard to financial assistance when we know and he knows, and all the Canadian farmers know, that their American counterparts have been guaranteed between $35 billion and $36 billion over the next five years? American farmers know where they are at. Why can the Minister not tell us where our farmers are at?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows full well the answer to the question. He knows full well the reason that I at this point in time have to respond and if I had the choice of standing with the New Democratic Party or standing with the farm leaders of this country, there is no question in my mind where I am going to stand.

I do not know what useful purpose it serves to point to an example beyond this country. Indeed, if other countries follow the same example which has been established by this Government and the farmers of this country, we would not be facing many of the difficulties we face today in the international market-place.

MARKET PRICES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If the Minister is intending that farmers respond only to market forces, and he is not going to interfere in the market, does that then mean that he is prepared to give up and permit the foreclosures through FCC and the other institutions to recommence? Has he decided there is no hope as he is reading the signals of the market, which are that grain prices ought to be down at least another 20 per cent in the coming year from the 20 per cent in the previous year? Is he now sending out a signal that they should not be producing anything, that they should give up and walk off their farms?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is just a silly observation. I think everyone in the House would recognize that there are certain things that Governments should do and can do, but—

Mr. Broadbent: And won't do.

Mr. Wise: —I am sure there is not a person in the House who would suggest that the Government of Canada, particularly, and even this Government, which has done so much for Canadian agriculture, should be involved in or dictating what farmers should plant in the 1987 season. Surely he is not suggesting that we do that.

Mr. Broadbent: No, he was not. You are right.

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. According to a Canadian Press report, the Prime Minister is quoted as saying today that President Reagan's intention to seek funds for innovative technology projects to control acid rain is a "very significant movement". How can the Prime Minister claim a very significant movement if all that will happen is more of the same, namely, research, with no commitment to cut acid rain, no percentage cuts, no deadline, no programs, just more research?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Davenport is probably congenitally incapable of coping with good news. He will acknowledge with fairness that I probably have been as critical as anyone else in this House of the lack of action by the U.S. administration, following up on the last summit between the Prime Minister and the President. However, with equal fairness he will acknowledge that today's statement is a major statement by the President of the United States by any standard. I think it is probably the most detailed, most categorical commitment to joint action between the two countries on acid rain ever made by the President of the United States.

We have much more to do. The President and the Prime Minister will be meeting in Ottawa in a few weeks for that purpose. I especially welcome in the President's statement today a commitment "to future specific actions". That is the kind of constructive internationalism which produces results.

REQUEST FOR SIGNING OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, according to the same Canadian Press report, the Minister of the Environment did not seem to be quite happy with the news himself. He is quoted as saying: "We do not have 'signed on the dotted line' . . . ". Can the Minister of the Environment assure the House and Canadians that at the next summit in April the Prime Minister will get President Reagan to sign with Canada an "on the dotted line" agreement of joint cutting of acid rain?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be partisan, much less do I want to make invidious comparisons, but the fact is that the Government of which the Hon. Member for Davenport was a member cut off negotiations with the Americans altogether on acid rain in June of 1982. To the credit of the Prime Minister, he put acid rain back on the agenda. He put the issue back on the rails. We in Canada do not yet have the accord we want, but today's announcement out of Washington is a very significant step in that direction, and the Prime Minister deserves the credit.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSSIBLE EFFECT ON DAIRY INDUSTRY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will know that a free trade agreement which would allow the free flow of food products into Canada would seriously hurt Canadian food producers. Is the Government, while it is saying it will protect farm marketing boards and supply management, considering allowing the free flow of dairy products from the United States into Canada under a projected free trade agreement?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think we have previously answered that question. It was answered in the contents of the resolution and answered during the course of the debate. I want the Leader of the New Democratic Party to pay particular attention to this because, while I did not see him on The Journal last night, I sure had a lot of calls from farmers who were very critical of his comments. There is no question about that. He made some rather interesting comments about western farmers. This Government looks at agriculture from coast to coast. We are concerned about Canadian farmers regardless of from which region they happen to come and from which they produce food, I can tell him that.

• (1450)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive an answer to my question. Is the Government guaranteeing that the free flow of dairy products and other supply management products will not be allowed after a free trade agreement is signed?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have some difficulty with Hon. Members across the way. I do not know whether it is their lack of understanding or their reluctance to listen to us and to read Hansard. I have answered the question on many occasions here and across the country. I ask the Hon. Member to listen very carefully.

We indicated that the Government gave a firm commitment to support the existence of the marketing boards and to decide in Canada their future. When that is done, and if one fully understands the manner in which they operate, it is necessary to maintain at the same time those underpinnings which are necessary for them to work.

Members opposite are interested in the Auto Pact and so on. We clarified that the other day with the debate on free trade. If they really understood the marketing board system, particularly those concerned with supply management, then we could call CEMA the Canada-U.S. egg pact. We could call the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency the chicken pact. We sat down—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Wise: There is not much difference. We sat down with the Americans and we negotiated import levels.

Oral Questions

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

REPORTED PROPOSAL TO MANUFACTURE DASH-8 AIRCRAFT IN CHINA

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On Monday I asked the Minister if he had authorized production of de Havilland's Dash-8s in China, something which de Havilland is prohibited from doing without his permission. He said, as reported at page 4175 of Hansard, that he had looked into the matter and was convinced that de Havilland had no intention of handing over some of its production contracts to China. De Havilland officials have indicated the opposite, that the Minister is wrong and that negotiations are under way to manufacture some of the Dash-8 production in China. Why was the Minister unaware of this, since his approval is required for it to take place? Does the Minister agree, and if so why, jobs should be created in China using the technology that was paid for by Canadian taxpayers?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I did respond to this question, and I also said that the Government was very concerned. Of course when we concluded the sale of de Havilland we made sure that the technology and the jobs would be kept in Canada.

Since the deal was finalized, Mr. Speaker, more than 1,000 jobs have been created, which goes to show that the Government fully respects its mandate in this regard.

My colleague refers to certain negotiations or discussions. Mr. Speaker, of course de Havilland management are expected to seek new markets and, obviously, this may entail negotiations and discussions. But at this time no deal between China and de Havilland has been officially sanctioned.

POSSIBLE CREATION OF JOBS IN CHINA BY DE HAVILLAND FOR MANUFACTURE OF DASH-8 AIRCRAFT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to say now that he will not let de Havilland export jobs for the production of Dash-8 aircraft in China? Is it clear that this technology will be used exclusively to create jobs here in Canada?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): What is clear, Mr. Speaker, is that the Government remains convinced and anxious that the existing agreement with de Havilland must be respected. As it happens, it guarantees that the aerospace industry, the jobs and the technology will remain in Canada, and that is precisely what we want to do.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS—REQUEST FOR TRADE SANCTIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister of Transport said that Canada will do whatever is within its power to stop French overfishing in the disputed 3PS zone south of Newfoundland. So far we have seen nothing but meaningless gestures. When is Canada going to get serious about stopping the French destruction of our Atlantic fisheries? When will it take action that will get the French to the negotiating table? Is the Government now prepared to begin a process of progressive sanctions against French products, beginning with such items as mineral water and moving on to more serious ones?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the Hon. Member has been all these weeks. He is calling for action on a long unresolved problem that this Government did not create, which has to do with the fact that France believes that a treaty signed in 1972 entitles it to certain fishing rights in Canadian waters. That is what led the Government to enter into a process of negotiating an agreement which would refer to international arbitration the boundary issue south of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and a second agreement which would set quotas and administer fishing arrangements during the time it takes to solve that boundary problem once and for all. These are initiatives the Government is taking.

I would like to know if the Hon. Member is suggesting that we cut off all other forms of trade with France. Is that what the Hon. Member is suggesting?

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Government should place fisheries at least as high in its priorities as does the French Government. Do the Minister and the Government really believe that the puny actions they have taken so far will be effective in preventing the French from overfishing in 3PS? When it finds out that these actions are successful, is it prepared to take stronger action up to and including sanctions against French products?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, in the style of his Leader I hear the Hon. Member suggesting that Canada mount a physical confrontation with France. That may be one way to gain some attention when a Party is seeking to win a few meagre votes in a by-election, but it is absolutely irresponsible.

WAR CRIMINALS

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It concerns the Deschênes Commission Report. I wish to commend the Government for its resolve to address this issue, particularly the balanced and sensitive way in which the Minister addressed it, and the made-in-Canada solution.

The Minister indicated that while the commission found the size of the problem of war criminals to be substantially less than indicated by some, the Government must be concerned if even one individual guilty of war crimes has sought refuge from justice in Canada. The next step is to amend the Criminal Code. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice how quickly we can expect that amendment or that process to take place.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question of the Hon. Member who has had substantial interest in this important issue. I wish to thank him publicly for the input which he has given to me with respect to the response of the Government.

The Hon. Member points out the fact that we have some work to do on the floor of the House of Commons. It is my intention to make a priority issue in my Department the bringing forward of amendments to the Criminal Code at the earliest possible date. I am gratified by the response of the opposition Parties and by Canadians generally. I know that we will have co-operation in getting these amendments through the House at the earliest possible date.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

SYDNEY STEEL CORPORATION—MODERNIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. He will know that in July of 1984 the Prime Minister committed himself and his Party to the second phase of the modernization program of Sydney Steel. The people in my region had to wait for 20 months before a subsidiary agreement was signed with Nova Scotia in February of 1986. Another 12 months have now elapsed only for us to find out from the Minister in March of 1987 that they have to wait for a business plan. Why should the people of my region trust the Government in view of the fact that this matter has been delayed for such an unconscionable period of time?

• (1500)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the people in my friend's riding should trust this Government because we are doing much more than the previous Government did for a number of years, point number one. Point number two, as I said, the Government remains committed to the modernization of Sysco but the company has to provide the Government with a business plan by the end of March. The Government will react to it right after that.

PRESENTATION OF BUSINESS PLAN

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. I am somewhat surprised and annoyed at his response because the Deputy Prime Minister said in this House on June 16, 1986:

> The business plan has been received. The Treasury Board submission is in the final stages of being concluded.

Why has the Minister shown such wanton disregard for the people of that region who suffer such high unemployment? Is it a confirmation of his belief that we are second-class citizens in Atlantic Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have just said. Management is expected to submit to the Government a business plan outlining the company's future policy. The Government remains committed with respect to the Sysco Steel modernization and is anxious to co-operate with the provincial Government. Mr. Speaker, once again we have done more for that region of the country than the previous administration ever did in 10 years.

LABOUR RELATIONS

FAIR WAGES SCHEDULE—DISCONTINUANCE OF PRODUCTION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. He has decided to stop producing the fair wages schedule, which has been the basis for the minimum wage paid on federal government construction projects for a number of years. Why has he made that decision? Why has he done so without consulting labour officials? Why has he done it since employers' groups have said it will result in lower wages for construction workers?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, all I did was to take the administrative measures required in connection with the situation which had been prevailing since 1982, and all parties interested in this matter have made their position known since 1982.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, why has the Minister done so at the request of the employers? Why has he refused to meet with the workers? Is his Government not a Government for all people? He knows it will reduce wages in this country and he is not being fair.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have never refused to meet anyone. It is because of the contentious nature of this decision that it was made on a trial basis only.

SHIPYARDS

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT IS DELAYING CONTRACT AWARDS TO THREE QUEBEC SHIPYARDS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. It has now been a year since the Government made its commitment to restructure the shipyard industry in Quebec. Five thousand workers are still waiting for jobs. At Lauzon, workers were informed that unfortunately, construction on the second ferry, Caribou II, will be postponed for the fourth time, until October 1987. Between now and the month of May, 200 workers will be laid off at the Sorel yard, and the marine section at Vickers in Montreal will close down completely in two weeks.

Could the Minister explain to the House why his Government is still putting off awarding the manufacturing and refitting contracts he promised the three shipyards?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, no contracts have been delayed. This Government has shown tremendous concern for the shipyard industry in Quebec. In fact, we initiated the rationalization process. Since then, contracts have been awarded to the various yards, and they will be respected. As I said before, it is now up to the management of Marine Industries to carry out the projects and contracts as scheduled.

INQUIRY WHY CERTAIN WORK HAS NOT YET BEGUN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Pontius Pilate of the federal Government is now washing his hands of Marine Industries. He made a promise, on three separate occasions, in Quebec City, his hometown, that work on Caribou II would start a month ago. The shipyards are empty. Nobody is working there, and the only contracts are those awarded by the federal Government. Is the Minister, considering his incompetence and that of his predecessors, prepared to resign his post and make way for someone who can handle this? And second, could the Minister explain to the House why the work on Cariboo II has not started yet at the Lauzon yard, and why work on the TRUMP program has yet to begin at the Sorel and Montreal yards?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, again, I fail to understand the Hon. Member's attitude. First of all, Mr. Speaker, he has been shouting for months that the Government should award contracts to Quebec shipyards. The Government did so. The yards are operating—

Mr. Malépart: Operating?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Yes, the yards are in operation at this time, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Malépart: Who is working there?

Mr. Côté (Langelier): —and I repeat, it is up to Marine Industries to decide how it wants to schedule production, not the Government of Canada. So once again, Mr. Speaker, the Government has acted while Opposition Members were complaining.

Mr. Malépart: It did nothing of the sort. We have five thousand workers who are idle.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I draw to the attention of the House that Question Period will shortly be coming to an end. We were delayed because of the tribute.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

CLOVERDALE PARK—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for CMHC and has to do with the Cloverdale Park affair. Will there be a public or judicial inquiry concerning this suspicious sale? What is the Minister doing to protect tenants, especially those who need low rental accommodation?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the problem is a matter of concern. I went to Montreal to meet with all of the citizens' representatives. I heard their representations. As a result of that and our own investigation we have instructed our solicitors to commence court action to right what we consider are many wrongs. The outcome is obviously unknown.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood, a short question.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT HALT TRANSACTIONS NOT IN PUBLIC INTEREST

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for taking action. Will the Minister undertake to examine this whole question of sales of housing units to so-called non-profit companies, which in fact are profit-oriented companies, or to co-operatives which are not genuine co-operatives? Will he halt all these transactions which are not in the public interest?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's questions are appropriate and of concern to us. That is the reason we are taking action. We want to find out what has gone on in the past few years. Without that information we cannot make an appropriate decision. Hopefully the court will approve our request, give us access to the books, and then we can make an appropriate decision.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ROLE PLAYED BY HELICOPTER PILOT IN RESCUING RUSSIAN SAILORS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Can the Minister clarify for the House the circumstances of the rescue of 37 Soviet sailors off the coast of New Jersey and, most particularly, the role played by Captain Hardy, a Canadian Forces pilot?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Captain Rick Hardy, a native of Prince Edward Island, is on exchange at the present time with the U.S. Coastguard. When the Soviet ship capsized, Captain Hardy, at great risk to his own life, was able to save some 16 Soviet sailors. That action has been recognized by the President of the United States and this will be the second commendation received by Captain Hardy while on exchange. It is an example of the dedicated service given by so many people in the Canadian Forces.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West, one question, please.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—TARIFF REDUCTIONS—EFFECT ON AUTO PACT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on Monday in the House the Minister for International Trade, referring to tariffs, said:

> —in the trade talks we are seeking to reduce them to zero on Canada-U.S. trade over a period of 10 or 15 years, whatever is negotiated.

In her absence I want to direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Why does the Government ignore the fact that there have been a number of occasions in recent years where automobile companies did not meet their content requirements under the Auto Pact and a threat to impose tariffs was necessary in order to get those companies up to the levels they had to meet on jobs and content? Why is the Government ready to tear the heart out of the Auto Pact by eliminating tariffs and thereby put at risk hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs?

• (1510)

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is entirely wrong. As he should know, because he was a Minister in the former Government, those tariffs on automobiles have been coming down over the years. I believe they stood at 17.5 per cent originally. They are down now to about 9.2 per cent. Those tariffs have been coming down all along. That obviously has not damaged the auto trade between our two countries. It is booming, doing very well. Why is the Hon. Member so afraid of it?

SITUATION OF CHILEANS NOW IN BUENOS AIRES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. I have here the transcript of his remarks last Thursday night and the reply to them on Friday by Miss Herrera of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees from Argentina. The Minister made the statement that none of the Chileans in the plane load at Buenos Aires are real refugees and claimed to base that on Miss Herrera's advice. But Miss Herrera says in fact that some of them, by United Nations standards, are refugees. Since the Minister now understands that what he said on Thursday night was not true, will he, to correct the problem, bring those refugees to Canada and have them examined in Canada according to our refugee determination procedure?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, both the member and the journalists have misunderstood what we actually said. I clearly said that our officials examine, case by case, every individual person's claim that they have a legitimate fear. We determined that not one of those people fled from persecution. They were all economic migrants. I continue to maintain that I had received no advice at that time—and I still have no advice—from Miss Herrera, the UNHCR person responsible. We indicated that in the future if anything else would be said, we would have to look at it again. However, as of now, no advice has been given to our officials in Buenos Aires.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has ended, and that I have a ruling arising from an intervention on March 9 in respect of the Hon. Minister of Transport and the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED MISUSE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS STATIONERY, PRINTING AND FRANKING PRIVILEGES—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On March 9, I recognized the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) on what he considered to be misuse of the House of Commons printing and distribution services by the New Democratic Party. Following the intervention of the Minister, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) in turn complained about the mailing of certain documents and the Government production of a documentary at public expense.

A few members intervened in the debate on these complaints, and I allowed wide-ranging latitude because it seems to me Hon. Members might want the guidelines on householder mailings and franking privileges revised.

[English]

The Hon. Minister of Transport quoted from the Members' Manual on Allowances and Services, which includes under the heading "Unacceptable Requests", material unrelated to activities of the House of Commons and material of a partisan political nature. Nevertheless, the Chair would hesitate to make too rigid a pronouncement without being entirely satisfied that the House as a whole agrees that the guidelines should be interpreted in this way. In any case, a breach of guidelines does not necessarily constitute a breach of privilege.

The complaint of the Hon. Member for Oshawa was challenged by the Hon. Minister of Transport who insisted that the material distributed by the Government and the documentary film were not of a partisan nature. There is thus a difference of opinion among Hon. Members as to whether or not this material was legitimately charged to the public purse. It is obviously not for the Chair to resolve disputes of this kind.

To return to the complaint of the Hon. Minister against the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa categorically stated that the New Democratic Party paid for the publication complained of and for its mailing. He also pointed out that the material was distributed before the writ for the by-election in St. John's East was issued.

[Translation]

In the course of his intervention, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) indicated that he took the Hon. Member from Oshawa at his word. I am sure the House will appreciate the tradition of honour that has served us so well in the past and acknowledge that the assurances given by the Hon. Member for Oshawa have at least satisfied that aspect of the question.

[English]

I come now to a determination of whether or not a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been established. I would like to acknowledge the contribution of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). He dealt with the essentials of the matter in underlining the restrictive application of privilege and pointing out, with relevant quotations, that the privileges of Parliament are rights which are absolutely necessary to enable Members to fulfil their functions. It seems to the Chair that nothing which has been complained of has in any way obstructed the House or any of its Members in carrying out the activities for which they were elected.

I must therefore find that no convincing case relating to privilege has been made, but I would not dismiss the issue, out of hand, for it has triggered a considerable amount of concern on both sides of the House. I believe it is necessary to re-examine the guidelines which apply to the use of the parliamentary frank and the distribution of bulk and householder mailings and determine what changes in our practice, if any, are desirable in order to remove the use of these facilities from any suspicion of impropriety.

[Translation]

I therefore suggest that the Standing Committee on Management and Members Services examine the question and make recommendations as appropriate.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Of course I would not want in any way to challenge your wise rulings. In the reference you are suggesting to the committee, I am wondering whether it could also consider whether or not these rules apply when a special rate is given a member to send out a householder.

For example, in this particular case, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) was allowed to pay $201 to send out 35,566 pieces of mail to St. John's East. The question which should be addressed is whether the same rules apply to this kind of special rate, fantastically cheap postal rate—

Mr. Broadbent: You are just so petty.

Mr. Crosbie: —whether partisan propaganda should be allowed to be sent out in that manner, or whether the same rules should be applied—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —to the Hon. Member for Oshawa—

Mr. Broadbent: You are a jerk, Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: —whether the rules of the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Tory socialists, they are all alike. Pull up the sheets, Tory socialists.

Mr. Gauthier: Kiss and make up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What the viewing public cannot see is the continuation of the debate. However, I think I should point out and draw the Hon. Minister's attention to the second to last paragraph in the ruling. "I believe it is necessary to re-examine the guidelines which apply to the use of the parliamentary frank and the distribution of bulk and householder mailings and determine what changes in our practices, if any, are desirable".

I want to assure the Hon. Minister that the Chair's suggestion to the committee—and it is only that; I cannot order the committee—takes into account the very point which he has raised.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, on another point of order, I wonder whether Your Honour could rule whether or not the term "jerk" is parliamentary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt—

An Hon. Member: John Jerk Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: The New Democratic Party is not led by a statesman, that is for sure.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: The honourable jerks opposite should be—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has risen to ask the Chair if I think the word "jerk" is unparliamentary. I am not sure whether a clear allegation was made that anyone had in fact said that word. However, I want to tell the Hon. Minister that I did not hear it. Of course, if I heard it repeatedly, I might have to make a ruling. However, I think under the circumstances and if the word was used, it was not used by any member in formal debate. As I said, the Chair did not hear it.

Of course, if it is used again, I would invite any Hon. Member who felt offended to rise. Perhaps if a number of members felt that the word applied to them, they might all rise and bring the matter to my attention.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Clean no more; he is a rough, tough guy.

Mr. Speaker: Tabling of documents.

Mr. Crosbie: He is a jerk.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: The Speaker did not hear that.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions, Nos. 332-745, 332-746, 332-869, 332-870, 332-871, 332-1225, 332-1226, 332-1268 and 332-1269.

POINT OF ORDER

ADVANCE NOTICE OF MINISTERS' STATEMENTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a brief point of order. It is this. At 2.25 p.m. during the Question Period I had handed to me an envelope. In that envelope I found a copy of the statement to be given by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). At the same time an envelope with the same statement was delivered to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), our Official Opposition critic for employment.

It has been the long standing custom and tradition, in fact an informal understanding, between the Government and Opposition Parties, which applied before the election, that opposition spokesmen would get at least two hours' notice of statements to be presented on behalf of the Government. In spite of this tradition, in spite of this understanding which dated back before the election, the statement was not presented in advance to myself or to the New Democratic Party House Leader and the critics for the Official Opposition and the NDP pursuant to that understanding. This is a gross discourtesy, Mr. Speaker. It is a breach of that understanding of which I spoke.

I want to say after learning of this, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader came to me behind the curtains, recognized the breach of the understanding and suggested that we interrupt our Liberal Opposition the day after the first three speakers so that the statement could be given and responses pursuant to the rules could be made by the Opposition spokesmen. His intentions were positive. He wanted to give the critics more time to prepare their responses. I said then and I say now that this is unacceptable. We should not have to interrupt our Opposition day for that purpose. In fact, there is another discourtesy involved here with the Minister of Employment and Immigration desiring to make a statement on motions prior to an Opposition day. This is not generally done.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this occurrence is a serious breach of courtesy and of the informal understanding that exists between the Parties in this House, and I therefore raise a point of order. I must point out, not only to you, Mr. Speaker, who are very much aware of the courtesy that must prevail in dealings between parties, but especially to the Government that if it wants co-operation between the Parties in this House, it must stop this habit of not giving the Official Opposition or the third party in the House sufficient notice of a statement so that we can prepare an appropriate reply.

[English]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that this is unacceptable conduct on the part of the Minister, and if this Government, which already has so many things to answer for, wants to have any kind of co-operation in future in this House, it must cease this unacceptable conduct.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to add to the comments made by my hon. colleague, the House Leader for the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray), and say that this goes beyond the simple courtesy that the House has been used to now for many, many months whereby Ministers before they give statements simply carry out the appropriate courtesy and inform the critics well in advance enabling the critics to respond in an appropriate and thorough fashion.

As the House Leader for the Official Opposition has indicated, for the House to work effectively it requires co-operation on both sides of the House. It requires members to be thoughtful, courteous and to take the extra steps to facilitate a very sophisticated debate in the House of Commons. To do that, it is important that Members of Parliament be given as much advance notice as possible about the business of the House.

I am pleased to say that the House Leader for the Government has given us, a number of days in advance, an indication of the business of the House. But, Mr. Speaker, halfway through Question Period we were all surprised to learn that an Opposition day was to have a portion of it taken up by the Minister making a statement—

Mr. Mazankowski: No.

Mr. Riis: Disrupted by the Minister making a statement. We are not asking so much for the courtesy—I think that goes without saying—but to facilitate and elevate debate, it is important that Members such as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who was unaware that this statement was going to be made by the Minister today and is the official critic for the New Democratic Party, be given the maximum advance notice. A few minutes prior to a Minister's Statement is insufficient. I would urge the Government House Leader and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Lewis) to ensure that this type of discourtesy not occur in the future.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first, with respect to the question of a Minister's statement occurring on allotted days, I would point out to the House that there is no loss of time because the time of adjournment is extended. That, therefore, deals with that argument.

Second, and I make this point specifically to the House Leader for the Liberal Party, I would point out that in 291 days of the thirty-second Parliament there were 28 ministerial statements. In 304 days of the 32nd Parliament, during which we were in Government, there were 83 ministerial statements.

Ms. Copps: What is the point?

Mr. Lewis: The point very simply is this, Mr. Speaker. We are making ministerial statements in the House and not at some university campus so that opposition spokespersons have equal opportunities to reply.

Third, there was an hour's notice. I would point out to the House that neither critic responding on behalf of his Party took part in Question Period and, therefore, schedules were not disrupted.

Mr. Gauthier: How would you know that?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): What a dumb statement.

Mr. Lewis: Did they?

Mr. Mazankowski: If you don't want to have the statement, we can forget it.

Mr. Lewis: I think we have tried wherever possible to accommodate our colleagues, Mr. Speaker. I think the point has been made and we should continue and hear the Minister's statement.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I think what the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) is trying to do is hide behind a facade. This is not an isolated case. This Minister also happens to wear the hat of the Minister of Immigration as well as the hat of the Minister of Employment. On February 20 when he announced changes to the immigration program as it relates to refugees, he pulled off the very same routine. As critic for immigration for my Party I had only one-half hour notice of the statement. The statement was not made in the House of Commons, as the Parliamentary Secretary is trying to indicate. It was made at a press conference on a Friday at 10 o'clock. Not only was there only half an hour notice but there was not even ample opportunity for the Official Opposition to respond because, by the time the opportunity arose, it was 11 o'clock and time for Question Period in the House. This is not an isolated case on behalf of this Minister and it is not a case where the Opposition is against ministerial statements.

Ms. Copps: Relax, Maz, Mr. Nice Guy.

Mr. Marchi: What we are trying to tell this Minister and other Ministers is that there needs to be due process and there needs to be ample opportunity for the Official Opposition to respond constructively, as is our responsibility. We are simply not able to do that when we have only 20 or 30 minutes at the most to look over a statement and give a response on behalf of Canadians. That is simply not good enough. It is time the Government began to show some responsibility to the House of Commons and to the traditions that we value.

• (1530)

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If this were an isolated case, I do not think members of the Opposition would be upset. However, this has happened time after time. Just last week, a statement was made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on equalization. Even the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) did not know what would happen that day.

Mr. Lewis: That's incorrect.

Mr. Murphy: You did know?

Mr. Lewis: Don't put words in my mouth.

Mr. Murphy: The problem is that on a continuing basis, we are getting very late notice of statements. The fact that it is happening on an Opposition Day is upsetting as well. In addition to that, I believe the Minister is trying to make the statement today because he knows that a committee of the House which has studied this matter for many, many months will be making its report tomorrow, and that is also upsetting.

Mr. Speaker: Naturally I have listened with care to the interventions that have been made. I think the Hon. Minister would like to respond to the point of order and I will hear the Minister. I think the point Hon. Members wished to make has been made and I certainly have heard it. I will now hear the Hon. Minister and perhaps that will be sufficient for the Chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, when I asked for the paper to be distributed, it was 2.15 p.m., which is the beginning of Oral Question Period. The document was distributed. Did it reach my colleagues opposite at 2.18 p.m.? I feel courtesy is not a matter of 30 or 42 seconds. Courtesy is a matter of using the time available. I think Hon. Members have had about an hour to examine the document which happens to be a three-page statement.

Mr. Speaker, if the Opposition, if Hon. Members opposite feel I should have given them 30 minutes more, all I can do is apologize. Now I don't think this has had any impact on . . . I had the papers distributed at 2.15 p.m. It is now 3.30 p.m., and there has been no presentation yet. The Leader of the Liberal Party rose at 2.20 p.m.

I repeat, I feel we acted according to the rules, and as the Parliamentary Secretary said, we do our best to try and make statements in the House, but we find that every time the Opposition tries to keep us from doing so.

Mr. Speaker: I must say it is impossible for the Chair to come down with a satisfactory ruling in a case like this. There is obviously a problem between the Government and the two opposition Parties. It is also clear it has always been the custom and even tradition here in the House to give sufficient notice when a Minister intends to make a statement or a speech in the House. I am very unhappy about the situation, but I repeat, it is impossible for the Chair to come up with a satisfactory solution.

[English]

Hon. Members have been on both sides of the Chamber. I would urge all government Ministers to give as much notice as possible in cases where the critics have an obligation to respond. This is a completely understandable tradition. It has not always been honoured, and in that regard, perhaps members on both sides of the Chamber in this particular Parliament are not blameless. The Chair has been here for some years. I have certainly heard this complaint before and I have been in a position where I have made the complaint. I know the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary will urge members of the Cabinet to make an extra effort to give adequate notice.

For the benefit of members of the public who are watching, the reason for adequate notice is that the critics who must respond to a Minister's statement do require time to think through the implications of the statement and its subject matter, and also for the formulation of a response. A statement by a Minister may be very brief but, nonetheless, a statement is important or it would not be made in the House. I must say that I commend the Government for the fact that it is making a great many statements in the House. That is in the traditions of this place and it is a good thing. However, I would ask Hon. Ministers to remember that the critics of the opposition Parties have their jobs to do too, and in the public interest of Canada, and notice wherever possible ought to be given with as much regard to the courtesies and traditions of this place as possible. Having said that, I hope Hon. Members will accept that the matter is closed. Under the rules, I must hear the Hon. Minister.

Statements by Ministers

TREATMENT OF PENSIONS AND SEPARATION PAYMENTS AS EARNINGS—U.I. PROGRAM

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I rise to advise Hon. Members of my intention to table, within the next few weeks, a Bill on the treatment of employment pensions and separation payments as earnings under the Unemployment Insurance Program.

[Translation]

Members may recall that on December 5, 1986, I announced this Government's intention to modify the UI legislation dealing with pension earnings. While maintaining the principle that persons who have retired should not use UI as supplementary income, the announcement proposed that workers who take other employment after their retirement and then work long enough to requalify for UI benefits should receive those benefits without any deduction of the previous pension income. The Government will amend the pension regulations to permit this as of April 5, 1987. Moreover, the Bill will permit retroactive requalification back to January 5, 1986.

[English]

These changes to the pension legislation are consistent with the Government's belief that persons who have retired from the labour market should not look to unemployment insurance as a supplementary source of income.

[Translation]

However, there is a difference between people who retire and leave the labour market and people who retire and start a new career. The changes I announced on December 5th addressed this difference and will ensure that people who retire and begin subsequent careers are treated fairly and equitably as active members of the labour force.

[English]

These changes will ensure that workers who start subsequent careers and contribute to unemployment insurance and subsequently become unemployed will be entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits based on their post-retirement employment income regardless of their previous pension income.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, you may also recall that in my announcement of December 5th, the Government noted there were allegations of imprecise information about the implementation of the January 5th, 1986, rules concerning pension income. I said in December—and I have said many times since then—that we would ensure fairness in the implementation of the January 5th provisions.

In December, I proposed that the Government establish a process to re-examine any case where people had alleged that they made their decision to retire on the basis of inaccurate information from federal Government sources.

[English]

To this end, an administrative procedure and a draft questionnaire were prepared. Upon examination of this procedure, we saw the likelihood of excessive administrative complexity arising. Thus, to eliminate such complexity and the potential for uneven application across the country, the legislation I will table draws a clear and simple line to ensure fairness in the transitional provisions.

[Translation]

The rule is simply this: those who applied for Unemployment Insurance prior to January 5th, 1986—that is to say those who applied under the previous rules—will have their entitlement to benefits determined under the previous rules. Equally straightforward, those who applied for benefits on or after January 5th, 1986, will be governed by the new provisions.

Today, I also wish to address an issue of fairness which has arisen in connection with the treatment of payments on separation. Members will recall that on March 31, 1985, the treatment of payments on separation for unemployment insurance purposes was changed.

Since its introduction, certain employer-employee agreements have sought to take advantage of what can only be described as a "loophole" in the wording of the current UI regulations. The purpose of these arrangements is to circumvent the legislative intention. The Government will change the regulations to close this loophole, to ensure that people will not be able to receive double indemnification, namely receiving separation pay and UI at the same time. These regulatory changes will also become effective April 5, 1987.

• (1540)

[English]

The proposed Bill will also permit the extension of both the qualifying and benefit periods when an allocation of separation payments has prevented the payment of UI benefits or has delayed the start of the UI claim. For example, if an allocation of separation pay delays the start of a claim by seven weeks, the qualifying period can be extended by seven weeks. This further measure will, I am sure, receive the approval of all Members of the House.

I call on my hon. colleagues to permit the rapid passage of this Bill so that the Employment and Immigration Commission can commence payment of benefits to all those people affected by this legislation.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, it appears—and I say "appears" because we never know when to trust the Government and because we have not had adequate time to examine this proposal—that the Government has made a complete reversal on the cut which it imposed with respect to unemployment insurance on early retirement pensioners who had applied for unemployment insurance before January 5, 1986. After a year and a half of questions in this House, demonstrations outside the House, Opposition Days, Statements pursuant to Standing Order 21, and visits to the Minister's office, in short, an onslaught of attack on the Government, it has finally seen the light. The Minister has been dragged kicking and screaming to recognize that the policy which his predecessor introduced a year and a half ago is wrong with regard to those who applied for unemployment insurance after being preretired before January 5, 1986.

This gives credit to those many groups across the country including Action Chômage in Montreal, the associations of retired people from the Armed Forces and the RCMP, and people who were retired from many companies throughout the country and who were cut back by the savage action of the Government. Their persistent action has proven that when they are right and persist they can win over a government which does not really know what it is doing or where it is going. I give credit to those groups which continued this battle, just like those who continued to battle against the Government when it tried to deindex old age pensions. They fought and fought and made the Government reverse its position. We have once again been able to do this and I thank God for those who kept up the battle against this ridiculous and unjust policy.

We will have to watch the implementation of this policy because I am always doubtful when I listen to the words of any Minister on the other side. They very often say one thing and end up doing the very opposite. My earlier comments relate to those who took early retirement pensions before January 5, 1986.

With regard to those who were forced to take early retirement pensions after January 5, 1986, the policy is still unacceptable. The Minister has not changed it one iota, and in this respect he contradicts his own principles and policies. In this case he is saying that those who were obliged to take early retirement pensions after January 5, 1986, will not qualify for unemployment insurance because of those early retirement pensions, even though they are still in the labour force or still looking for work. They must find another job and if they get laid off from that second job they will qualify for unemployment insurance.

Why should that take place? Ever since unemployment insurance was established people who were laid off or forced to take early retirement in those circumstances got their unemployment insurance as long as they wished to continue in the labour market. There is no rationale now and there was none a year or a year and a half ago to change that. Many of these people live in parts of Canada where they will never be able to get a second job even if they want to. Therefore, they are denied unemployment insurance although they made contributions all those years.

Many of these people accept early retirement pensions because they have little or no alternative. Firms decide to cut back on the number of its employees and can either lay them off directly or devise a plan of early retirement to offer to the workers. The workers know that their only real choice is to take the early retirement pension. Many of those people are in their 50s, still have children in university or college, and have to pay their mortgages. They are cut off from unemployment insurance which they paid for and would have received under the rules which were in force for a long time in this country. They are forced to get another job and requalify before they can get any unemployment insurance benefits. That is completely unacceptable, Madam Speaker. I will urge the people who are brutally hurt by that measure to continue their battle, as their colleagues who retired prior to January 5 have done.

There is a third part to the statement made today and it is with regard to severance payments. The Minister found out that certain groups of workers, certain unions and so on, were able to circumvent the measure he implemented over a year ago to deduct severance pay from the reception of unemployment insurance benefits. As a matter of fact, the Government of Ontario introduced legislation to overcome what the Minister tried to do. The Minister is now introducing new laws and regulations to try to ding the workers who are receiving severance pay because they are being laid off early in life, which severance pay they would use to retrain themselves, relocate, start a business or, in general, set themselves up again.

The Government of Ontario tried to help the employees at Otis Elevator in Hamilton who were being laid off. The Minister is now going to take that away from them by filling in the loophole and trying to overcome the Ontario legislation. Madam Speaker, we won a victory on the first measure. However, the Minister is still being obstinate and inconsiderate with respect to the other two measures. We will continue to fight him on those to the very end.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, did the Minister rush in with this statement at 2.15 today because he knows that the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration will be bringing down its report in response to the Forget Commission tomorrow? Perhaps he believed he would be embarrassed by some of the recommendations contained in that standing committee report.

In November, 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in this House that pension income, severance pay and holiday pay would be considered as earned income. That was the principle enunciated in November, 1984. There was great opposition to that across the country. Thousands of Canadians opposed that particular change. In response to that, the Government set up the Forget Commission to study the unemployment insurance program and consider the pension income issue. Forget concluded that the Government was wrong-headed in doing it in the way in which it did, that the Government did not give adequate notice.

Forget did not disagree with the principle that pension income was earned income. He supported the Government on that principle. However, he said, in effect, to let it start on January 5, 1989, and pay unemployment insurance benefits to those who qualified previously. What did the Government do? The Minister stood up in the House on December 5 and compounded the confusion. He said he would send out a questionnaire. People who had taken an early retirement and applied for unemployment insurance benefits had to go down to the local offices and fill out the questionnaire. He now admits that it was very complex, very confusing, very bureaucratic, highly unacceptable and obviously very costly.

The Minister is saying now that if someone takes early retirement, gets a second job and is laid off, that person can collect unemployment insurance benefits while collecting the pension at the same time. The Government has abandoned the principle that pension income is earned income.

Now the Minister is relying on a principle that unemployment insurance benefits cannot be used to supplement pension income. That is not the argument. The argument is that those who are available for work, are capable of work and are looking for work should be able to collect unemployment insurance benefits for which they have paid premiums. In fact, if the Government had a proper job-search program it could sort out those who are not looking for work, available for work and capable of working.

The Minister's response in his statement today only goes part way. It is absolutely unfair. The Minister had a golden opportunity to wipe the slate clean and begin again, using the job-search provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act to ensure that people get what is due them under the Unemployment Insurance Program.

The Minister's statement also dealt with the severance pay. I believe the Minister is referring to Regulation 58(10) of the Unemployment Insurance regulations, which was a loophole discovered by the Steelworkers of America vis-a-vis the Collingwood shipyards. The Province of Ontario has already passed legislation stating in effect that one can only lose two weeks of unemployment insurance benefits on severance pay. The Government has not challenged the constitutional right of Ontario to pass legislation which affects a federal Act. Workers in the Province of Ontario who receive severance pay can only lose two weeks, but in other parts of the country the whole severance pay is used as earnings and applied against unemployment insurance. That is unfair.

The Minister had another golden opportunity to say that severance pay will not be considered earned income for unemployment insurance purposes. Instead, the Minister believes he is giving something to people who lose their jobs when he says that he will allow the allocation if the severance pay reduces the weeks of collecting benefits, because it can be added at the end. However, if a worker receives $10,000 in severance pay, that is almost a whole year of benefits and it is not considered insured earnings. Therefore he cannot qualify because he does not have 20 weeks in the previous 52 weeks. It is not insured earnings.

Mr. Bouchard: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Minister does not understand the Act and I suggest that he read it. It is not insured earnings. Therefore premiums are not deducted from it. Since there are not 20 insured weeks of earnings in the previous 52 weeks, a new claim cannot be established. Therefore, the worker loses, and in some cases his benefits are reduced.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with regret that I must advise the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, this is going to be very straightforward. Our 35,000 early retirees have just won a splendid victory, no thanks to the Conservative Government. They had to work hard for it. And as for the next 75,000, Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please! The Hon. Member knows perfectly well he is starting debate, not raising a point of order.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—AGRICULTURAL ECONOMY—PRESERVATION OF FAMILY FARMS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That this House, recognizing the serious plight of Canadian farmers due to record low world prices for grain and other commodities, calls on the government to make a commitment now to farmers:

(a) to ensure that their returns on grain in the new crop year will at least equal the levels of the 1986-87 crop year;

(b) to maintain the current freeze on grain freight rates charged to farmers;

(c) to reduce farm input costs through methods that include measures to deal with high chemical prices; and

(d) in view of the worsening farm debt crisis, to provide greater assistance to preserve the family farm as the primary means of production and a vital part of rural Canadian life.

He said: Madam Speaker, the motion before us today is designed to call attention to the desperate situation we see in Canadian agriculture today, especially in the grain sector of that industry. While the vast majority of the grain sector is centred in the Prairie Provinces, there is grain production in all parts of the country. The motion urges the Government to take certain action to alleviate the situation.

• (1600)

Two weeks ago yesterday it became known that grain prices would drop by some 20 per cent in the coming crop year. That is on top of a 19 per cent or 20 per cent reduction last year. It hit the western agricultural community as effectively as a lightning bolt hitting every prairie community. Nothing could have been more cataclysmic for the western agriculture economy. At that time the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, of which the prairie pools are an integral part and important member, was meeting in Hull. The indication that grain prices would drop by 20 per cent fell like a devastating thud on the floor of that convention meeting in Hull.

A few days ago I talked with a group of people living in southern Alberta who were attending a fall farm show. They said the announcement just drained away all the enthusiasm there was for what otherwise would have been a very happy occasion. A 20 per cent reduction in the price of grain this year would drop the price from $130 a tonne, which was the price last year, to around $105 a tonne, or from $3 a bushel last year to $2.40 or $2.50 a bushel this year. To put that into perspective, we have to recall that three years ago, during the 1984-85 crop year, the price of No. 1 and No. 2 wheat was $170 a tonne. So it does not take much imagination to realize what a devastating impact that kind of reduction in the price of grain will have.

I would like to quote from an article in The Regina Leader-Post. Mr. John Morriss, spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board, was quoted in the March 5 edition as saying:

> This is really getting pretty serious. We're talking nuts-and-bolts economic survival and whether it's worthwhile for farmers to put in a crop.

I would like to quote as well from The Calgary Herald of March 5 in which Doug Livingstone of the Alberta Wheat Pool was quoted as saying:

> Any significant cut in initial grain payments to farmers would mean a further deterioration of the already "scary" situation facing rural Alberta, the president of the Alberta Wheat Pool said Wednesday.
> Doug Livingstone said his gut feeling is that 25 per cent of Alberta's 50,000 farmers are already insolvent because of today's critically low prices.

The headline of The Regina Leader-Post of March 5 reads: "Impossible for Most Farmers to Break Even".

The editorial in The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix of March 6 says in part:

> But Agriculture Minister John Wise is telling farmers they should not count on another deficiency payment, using the market alone as their guide in deciding what to plant this spring. Surely farmers deserve a firm commitment of continued Government support which will, in effect, provide them a guaranteed minimum price higher than anticipated world prices.

To put that into perspective, last year with the market price and the Canadian grain program our producers received about $3.48 a bushel. This year, if prices drop by 20 per cent, we will see a reduction of that to $2.50 a bushel. United States farmers have a guarantee of around $6 a bushel and the European Economic Community has a guarantee of about $8 a bushel for their top quality wheat. It is obvious our farmers are in a desperate situation, not knowing how they can survive or whether they can even plant a crop this year because they do not know what the initial price is going to be and whether the Government is going to provide any assistance or how much. That is why the first part of my motion before the House today just simply calls upon the Government to ensure that the returns on grain in the new crop year will be at least at the levels of the 1986-87 crop year.

Second, it would be most helpful if the Government would make a commitment to freeze the grain freight rates, the part the farmer pays himself. Last year the Minister of Transport ordered the Grain Transportation Agency to roll back its estimate of some 31.5 million tonnes to something in the 27 million to 29 million tonnes range. In fact, it did roll it back to 28.5 million tonnes which resulted in an effective freezing of the freight rates. Unfortunately, the volume shipped is estimated in this crop year to be around 31.5 million tonnes. That means the surplus of some $70 million which was contained in the tally-averaging account has been used up because the estimates were very close or slightly above what the Grain Transportation Agency had given the Minister originally. In the upcoming crop year it is estimated to be almost 32 million tonnes. This will result in an increase in the price charged to farmers for shipping their grain from around $6 a tonne to about $9 a tonne, a 50 per cent increase. Surely if we average that increase over 33 million tonnes of grain, we are looking at an increased cost to farmers of about $100 million. That is an added expense which is really hard for the farmers to absorb in a falling grain market with no guarantees at this stage. Therefore, I would hope the Minister would be able to announce this afternoon that he will freeze the grain freight rates. The Minister of Transport went to a lot of trouble last year so that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), before he flew off to the International Summit Meeting in Japan, would be able to announce that grain freight rates had been frozen. I hope he will be able to announce that today.

Late last summer the CNR finally provided its cost figures for the operation of grain handling operations. Its input into its estimates of the grain handling costs under the Crow benefit was about $25 million higher than it had been previously estimated. It has been recommended by the senior Grain Transportation Agency that the Crow benefit should be increased from $658 million to $683 million. I would hope the Government would move on that recommendation which was made last fall.

The second part of my motion today deals with input costs. I think it is important that we survive the current trade price wars, we have to drive down input costs and provide assistance on top, at least at a level where our farmers can survive this most agonizing and difficult farm situation since the 1930s. There are many ways to drive down the input costs. One way that I think has been most impressive to the agricultural committee, which is doing a study on this, is the cost of farm chemicals. We had a group called the Manitoba—North Dakota Zero Tillage Group before the committee. They told us that the average price of four pesticides which were not patented was some $2.91 a pound, whereas those which were patented were some $30.56 a pound. That points out that the price in Canada of a herbicide such as Roundup, which is commonly used for the control of weeds and reducing tillage, is almost double what it is in Australia. It seems to me that this is an area in which the Government could act, along with others, in providing reduced input costs. It is a dramatic way of reducing input costs. It is also very important in the conservation of our crops and farm land.

The last point I wish to deal with is the worsening farm debt crisis. Since the Farm Credit Corporation first reported the details of the farm debt crisis in the fall of 1984 the situation has deteriorated dramatically because of reduced commodity prices. Today, if we look at the latest FCC figures, we see that 8 per cent of our farmers with gross sales of more than $20,000 are insolvent. That amounts to some 13,000 farmers. There is another 23 per cent, or 39,000 farmers, who have serious cash flow problems. This gives us a combined figure of 52,000, or almost 30 per cent of our farmers who are facing a moderate to serious stress level in terms of their financial situation. Those figures are especially typical of Alberta and Saskatchewan because of the very low commodity prices.

It is interesting to look at the mortgage rates and loans of the FCC, since it carries about 40 per cent of the farm long-term debt. This year its arrears have increased by 38 per cent over last year's. Last year there were arrears of $253 million compared to $355 million for this year. This means that some 16,000 of the 75,000 accounts which the corporation has are in arrears, which points to serious financial difficulties being faced by the agriculture industry today.

Worse than the fact that some 16,000 are in arrears is that some 6,150 have been in arrears for more than two years. It is the experience of the Farm Credit Corporation that when accounts are in arrears for more than two years this points to extreme difficulty and the likelihood of not ever being able to meet mortgage payments. Fully 7.7 per cent of FCC portfolio loans are now in arrears. That is more than twice as high as the most difficult time in history, which was in 1969 or 1970, when only about 3 per cent of loans were in arrears.

The other factor I find extremely disturbing is that during the past two years we have seen the farm asset value, the land value, drop by 15 per cent. This amounts to over $17 billion which has been lost in farm asset values. For a person who owns 100 per cent of the farm and who will continue to farm over a long period of time this may not be a devastating factor. However, when we are dealing with young farmers who are highly leveraged in terms of that farm asset value it means that their equity drops, as does their ability to maintain the farm.

So far the Government's main instrument for helping young farmers who are facing financial difficulty is the commodity-based mortgage. There are funds in place to be used over a two-year period to provide about 2,500 mortgages with reduced rates per year, or about $20 million. When we look to the amount of the arrears and at the 5,200 accounts of farmers who are having cash flow problems, it does not seem like a very large number of loans are available for those in serious financial difficulty. If we really want to preserve the family farm, and if we want to keep young people on the farm, then we have to make a renewed commitment to these young farmers.

A couple of years ago there was an all-Party committee which looked at the idea of providing assistance to young farmers facing serious financial difficulties. We made a report to the House which contained a five-year program. We called it an agri-bond program which would reduce the interest rate by 4 per cent. In today's world it would be down around 5 per cent or 6 per cent. We said that as a result of our study there were at least 12,000 farmers who could be helped by a low interest mortgage such as that. The problem with the commodity-based mortgage is that as the commodity goes up in value, and we hope it will over the course of a 10-year or 15-year mortgage, farmers have to pay 2 per cent more than the going rate to the FCC. A great many farmers shy away from it because of that.

When the all-Party committee met to make its report a couple of years ago it recommended a program that would provide interest rates at about 4 per cent lower for farmers who are capable of staying on the farm and surviving. The value of that would have been extended to 12,000 farmers. The cost would have been some $96 million. However, when we considered the magnitude of the problem facing the country it certainly seemed like a reasonable investment in the future of agriculture in Canada.

If we look at the report of the Farm Debt Review Board we see that in January some 2,627 farmers made application for help. Some 590 of those are facing financial difficulty, while 785 are insolvent. So far panels have dealt with about 349 of those cases, and agreements have been made in about half of them. A great many of them have not been signed. So the whole farm debt review program, which the standing committee hopes to review in the next few weeks, is going to be overburdened as we move through this year in this cycle of extremely low commodity prices.

Those are some of the concerns that we face as we consider this resolution today. I point out that Alberta and Saskatchewan are the provinces with the most serious areas. In Saskatchewan, 11.4 per cent of farmers with gross sales of over $20,000 are in an insolvent position. Some 28.3 per cent are having serious cash flow problems. In Alberta, 9.9 per cent are in an insolvent position, while 22.2 per cent are in a serious cash flow position, according to recent reports of the FCC.

We really have a financial disaster on our hands, something which is unprecedented since the 1930s. This is because the prices of grain are lower in actual dollars, in constant dollars, than they were then. I think that there is a good appreciation in the country for dealing with this problem. I urge the House to do this. It is a national problem which requires national action and the support of every Member of this House. The whole future of the agricultural community, of farms and young people depends on action by us in the House of Commons. I hope that we will move ahead to face this challenge and overcome the problem.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, without in any way underestimating the significance of the financial crisis in Canadian agriculture, and I think all of us in this House recognize the gravity of that crisis, I want to ask a question for clarification.

During the course of his speech the Hon. Member referred to the study on input costs with which the Standing Committee on Agriculture is currently engaged. One thing which has come to light during the course of our hearings is that PSR 80, a regulation enacted by the previous Government, has had a very negative impact on input costs. There is a widespread negative reaction, and has been for a considerable amount of time, to PSR 80. Given that, how could he and his colleagues, members of the previous Government, have permitted that legislation to be enacted? Why was it allowed to remain on the books for the four year life of that Government?

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, that is an important question and an important problem. Clearly if this was 1978 or 1980 we would not be as concerned. However, look at the situation we have today. Land prices are not increasing at an 18 per cent rate. Wheat is not a couple of hundred dollars higher in price.

Given our studies in committee it is clear we must move toward the kind of recommendation made in the Senate report on herbicide pricing. That suggested we should have a compulsory licensing arrangement for farm chemicals. Whether it is done in the manner prescribed in the report, or in the manner used in Australia, where prices of certain farm chemicals are half what they are here, we do not have any choice. Action should be taken because it is not just a farm input cost we are concerned with here. That is very important, but we are concerned with conservation.

The Senate report recommended compulsory licensing with a period of exclusivity for the company making the chemical for a period of four years or perhaps more. That report recommended that a fund be established to compensate the chemical company concerned. In the long run chemicals would come on stream much earlier than they do now and we would have a kind of generic pricing system for producers.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, as I read over the motion put forward today by the Hon. Member, and as I listened to the words of concern and care and the help which has come from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) over the past two and a half years, I certainly, as a Member of Parliament from an urban area, have been made aware of the desperate plight of Canadian farmers. I certainly understand the great concern out there in rural Canada. That concern is shared in urban Canada as well.

However, as I listened to the Hon. Member I could not help but think back to the days when he was a member of the previous Government in the early to middle 1980s. That Government was responsible for an increase in interest rates to an astronomical level. I could not help but think of the days when interest rates hit 22 per cent. I could not help but think of the farm bankruptcies that that caused right across this country. I could not help but think of the havoc wreaked and devastation caused by the policies and approach of the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part, and the Party of which he is still a member and supporter. I could not help but think about how that cut the underpinnings of Canadian agriculture and laid it flat. Certainly it was left weakened, indeed helpless before the onslaught of world conditions which have ensued since that time. The Minister of Agriculture and the Government have been struggling with those conditions valiantly and in many case quite successfully to help farmers.

When the Hon. Member reflects back on these things is he not truly embarrassed to get up in this House and make the statements he makes? When he goes out to talk to farmers in this country does he not really feel ashamed of himself?

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I was pleased with his comments about the concern in urban Canada. I read an Angus Reid poll last May or June which indicated something like 75 per cent of Canadians thought farmers were facing the most difficult time since the 1930s. They thought this would have an extremely adverse impact on the national economy.

I would point out to the Hon. Member that the increase in interest rates in the late 1970s was a world-wide phenomenon. The Republican Government of the United States decided that was the appropriate way to handle certain problems. However, one of the great problems we have today is still that of reducing interest rates. As recently as a few months ago something like 32 per cent of all FCC loans carried interest rates between 12.75 per cent and 16.75 per cent. Most of the loans carrying the 12.75 per cent rate were due to the use of $575 million which was unused in the fall of 1984 when the Minister gave permission to farmers who were on their last legs and about to lose their farms to convert mortgages above 14 per cent to the 12.75 per cent rate.

We are now dealing with an issue which involves the vitality of rural Canada, especially in grain growing areas. It will require every bit of ingenuity and know-how we can muster in this House to meet that challenge and come out of the trade wars with our rural communities intact. We will have to do that if we are to maintain a reasonable percentage of our young farmers on the farm and maintain the vitality of the community life which still exists.

• (1630)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to rise in the House to respond to the motion before us today. At the outset, I should like to express appreciation to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) who allowed me to enter into the debate at this time. Hopefully it will provide me with the opportunity of sitting down with the Board of Directors of the Canadian Horticultural Council at a meeting later today.

I have seldom in the past, if ever, witnessed so much nerve, hypocrisy, and gall. I am referring particularly to the fact that this motion has been put before us today by the Liberals. The contents of the motion do not bother me particularly, because basically the Hon. Member is endorsing what we have done up to this point.

I will save the time of the House by not reading the entire motion and by referring first to item (a). If we include what the Government has done under the Special Canadian Grains Program and other programs, we see that the amount of income to Canadian farmers will be slightly higher this year. In item (b), the Hon. Member talks about a freeze on freight rates. They have already been frozen. In fact, if we had followed the pattern of the Liberals, farmers would have been paying about $12 per tonne for the movement of grain, whereas today it is about $6 per tonne. By freezing freight rates we have saved western farmers, primarily western farmers, between $100 million and $150 million.

The Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris (Mr. Clark) made a very intelligent observation with reference to item (c). With reference to item (d), the final one, we are well under way. We have been given a clear mandate by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to meet with the farm leadership across the country, as we did last year. We had our first meeting on March 5.

What bothers me—and I guess I must accept it because when I look across the way, there is not a farmer in the whole Liberal crowd over there; perhaps it is one of the reasons we keep hearing this question—is that the Liberals have always had two ways to deal with agriculture. One was through verbiage. One does not live very long on verbiage. Second, it was always an afterthought. There is not much more nutrition in what the Liberals say in verbiage and afterthought than there is in trying to raise a group of cattle on a feedlot or a bunch of hogs in a barn on an east wind and snowballs.

However, I will say again that it is not really the contents of the motion that bother me, because we are way ahead of them on that. It is the timing. If there were any farmers or any people who had any real contact with the farming community in the Liberal Party, then it would not be pushing us at this time to make statements on certain items.

Again I draw to the attention of the House the fact that on March 5, not long ago, the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister (Mr. Gustafson), and other colleagues joined us in the boardroom of the Sir John Carling Building. On that occasion we met with 55 farm representatives, an excellent cross-section of the country. They represented some 35 farm organizations. It is important that they joined with us in making three clear statements to which I will refer. They demonstrate that it is premature and untimely to make further statements on the subject at this time for very obvious reasons. I should like to read the three statements. The first one reads: "Farm leaders today agreed that producers should base spring planting decision on market signals".

That was not me speaking as a farmer or as the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of the Government. It was a joint statement, as it should be, made by the Government of Canada in co-operation and in concert with the farm leadership across the country from East to West, representing every possible commodity group.

Mr. McDermid: Read it again.

Mr. Wise: I hear the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). I will read the second sentence because it is just as good. It reads: "Farmers should not make assumptions about government assistance in planning their 1987 production".

It is just as sensible as the first one. Let me read the third sentence: "It is too soon to come to any conclusions about what help will be needed or how it will be given, but we will insist that any new assistance measures be production and market neutral".

Again, it was not the Minister of Agriculture or the Government speaking in isolation. It was a joint statement by the Government and by the agricultural leadership of the country. How in the world can we make a further statement other than what has already been made? The Government will spare no effort. A clear mandate has been given to the Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board and me to reconvene meetings with the farm leadership across the country. We have done that, and we will meet again. I think that meeting will be held prior to the Prime Minister's leaving Canada to attend the summit, about the same as we did last year. The Prime Minister wants to sit down again with the farm leadership of the country. That meeting will take place either in the latter part of May or the first part of June.

How in the world could we make any further statements which would be in keeping with the commitment we made with the farm leadership of the country not to violate production and market neutral signals? Anyone with any connection with the farm community would recognize the importance of that statement.

In answer to questions—and I think they were from the Leader of the New Democratic Party—in the House today, I said that Governments have various roles. Municipal Governments have to do certain things. Provincial Governments have to do certain things. Federal Governments have to do certain things. If we can stay out of anything, then we should stay out of it. There is no doubt in anyone's mind today about Governments at any level dictating how the agri-food industry in the country should run; surely no one in the House would make that comparison.

Again I say that we are working in concert with the farm community. I suppose it is a pleasant surprise. It may be shocking to the Liberals who did very little, and whatever they did was done unilaterally and in isolation. Obviously it was not in the interest of the farm community, and I guess it was not of any political benefit to the Party across the way.

Let me say that the record of the Government is second to none of any other federal Government in the history of the country, and if I have the time, I will read into the record a few things on which I made notes today. There are reasons behind that fact. Of course the first reason is that there is a large number of farmer MPs in our caucus, as well as a large number of MPs who represent urban-rural ridings. We have my colleague from Metro Toronto who is a urbanite. He is present in the House, he is listening to the debate, and he is interested in it. He will participate as he already has. The second reason can be found by looking at the complexion of the cabinet table. More farmers and people representing urban and rural ridings are around the cabinet table than at any time in the past. With the possible exception of the Diefenbaker administration and its Minister of Agriculture, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who is in the House today, we have not had a Prime Minister prior to or since who possessed as much understanding, appreciation and compassion for the agri-food industry, particularly the primary sector, the farmers, as does the Right Hon. Prime Minister who leads this Party and this Government.

• (1640)

I do not know whether I will ever get to the record here, but I am sure that if I do I will not have enough time to go through it. What really galls me about the major financial difficulties that our farmers, primarily the young ones, are experiencing today is that they are a direct result of inaction by the previous Government and certain signals it sent out which turned out to be wrong. What were the Liberals saying? In the mid 1970s they were sending out messages trying to convince Canadian farmers, young people, that certain things would take place in the 1980s and beyond. Having listened to what the Liberals were saying, it is no wonder they got into a lot of trouble. In the mid 1970s the Liberals said: "Look, boys, go out and buy land. Expand, produce, produce to beat the band. Do you know what the future looks like? Interest rates will remain stable". The Liberals were dead wrong. They said that energy costs would remain stable. They were dead wrong. They said inflation was going to remain constant. They were dead wrong. And, listen to this one, Madam Speaker. The Liberals said that we would be going through a situation of world shortages. In complimentary terms, the Liberals were dead wrong again. Do you know what else the Liberals were saying, Madam Speaker? They said: "Go out, produce to beat the band and expand your operations. Borrow the money. Go ahead. You will not have any problems getting out of debt. You will also be going through a period of record high prices for all commodities in Canada during the 1980s and beyond". Those are just some of the signals that were sent out.

Let me talk for a moment now about how indignant the Liberals are over the special Canadian grains program. That program of ours is the largest single financial contribution ever made to Canadian farmers in our history. It amounted to $1 billion. We never said it would fully compensate, but it went a long way. There is no question about that.

We hear some argument about a shortfall. I never got into the shortfall except to acknowledge it. We acknowledged it in Vancouver the first time the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I met the farm leaders. The farmers do not want to get into a bidding game about what the shortfall is. From our Department, the best calculation of it is somewhere around $1.5 billion. Somebody will say the shortfall is $2 billion, someone else will say it is $3 billion and someone in a letter of transmittal said it was $4 billion. That is not important. There is a shortfall and it is a big shortfall and we have acknowledged it. I have also said that we do not have the financial resources here in Canada to take on the United States dollar for dollar nor do we have the financial resources in Canada to take on the European Economic Community dollar for dollar.

There is a shortfall that is far larger than the shortfall caused by the U.S. Farm Bill, the Export Enhancement Program and the trade war between the U.S. and the EEC.

When the Liberals were in office, interest rates rose from about 10 per cent to, as somebody said, 22 per cent. That is nonsense. I can tell you that a lot of farmers had to pay 24 per cent, 25 per cent, 26 per cent and 27 per cent. Let me give the benefit of the doubt and suggest that interest rates increased from 10 percentage points to 24 percentage points, which I believe is a 14 point spread. Each percentage spread in the interest rate is a direct saving in our case, and we will come to that later. In the farmers' case it is a direct increase. Each percentage point makes a difference of $130 million either on the plus or on the minus side of farm input costs. Now multiply 130 by 14 and we arrive at a shortfall of nearly $2 billion. If I had not given the benefit of the doubt, then that shortfall, as a result of economic policies and over-spending which caused interest rates to go beyond the 14 per cent spread, would be well in excess of $2 billion. That is far larger than the impact on Canadian farmers caused by the U.S. subsidy war and its Export Enhancement Program.

What did the Liberals do? One cannot say they did nothing. But the only thing I can find in the record is a little farm assistance program which assisted 2,100 farmers. It brought interest rates down from 16.75 per cent to 12.75 per cent. Do you know who paid for that, Madam Speaker? The Liberal Government did not pay. Its Minister of Finance did not pay. The farmers themselves paid for the shortfall, that little special farm assistance program. It was not until our Government came to office that we negotiated an agreement through our Minister of Finance. We took the burden away from the farmers and introduced our interest rates conversion program, an $80 million commitment, and we reduced interest rates of all 5,600 FCC borrowers from 16.75 per cent to 12.7 per cent.

Since September, 1984, when we took office, interest rates have declined more than 4 percentage points. If we apply the same $130 million that we applied on the cost side when the Liberals were in office in interest rate reduction alone we will find that we have saved farmers $650 million. Let us just apply that to a typical farm operation with a $500,000 mortgage.

Under the Liberals, the payment would have been $83,000. Now, under our Government, the cost would be $54,000, a saving alone to the typical farm operation of $29,000. If you add the gas rebate tax—and we have rebated all federal sales and excise taxes to the farmer—there is another saving of $5,000.

We made 16 campaign commitments. To this point we have fulfilled 14 of them. We are going to fulfil them all. In addition to the 14 that we have already fulfilled, we have done many, many other things. We have taken over 400 initiatives. That is an initiative every other working day that we have been in office. We have delivered well over $6 billion into the hands of Canadian farmers. I see that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I have not really had time to deal with the important things which our Government has done on behalf of Canadian agriculture in the international market-place. The leadership has been taken by the Government through the Prime Minister. The leadership role in the international market-place will continue to be played by the Prime Minister in the world forum and at international meetings.

• (1650)

I regret very much that I do not have adequate time to deal with this. Our commitment to the Canadian agri-food industry is not verbiage. When we took office, we took action. We are not acting unilaterally but are working in concert and in co-operation with the farm leadership of Canada. We have stood by the farm leaders in the past and we will stand by them in the future.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister does not want to emulate Nero who stood fiddling while Rome burned. Right now, the Government is fiddling while farmers are going broke.

I know the Minister can relate all the problems farmers are having to a series of decisions made both on and off the farm over the last many years. However, one of the most important things right now is that many farmers would like to have some assurance from the Government that the Government will continue to take some of the actions it has taken.

It has concerned me that over the last few weeks, a number of farm organizations have interpreted the Minister's meeting with them as being a guarantee that there will be assistance made available, while in the House the Minister has never committed himself to providing that kind of assistance. I am not talking particularly about deficiency payments. When I ask about the kind of assistance that will be available, I am not saying that it has to be acreage, production or per-bushel payments. It can be production-neutral. Farmers do want some assurance that returns from their farms, after taking into account grain stabilization and insurance, will at least be as high as they were last year.

As the Minister knows and has often said, in this past year, even farmers without debt were still unable to make money. If, after taking all government programs together, the farmers' income drops below that which it was last year, all farmers will be losing money, not just those with debts.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I want to be as helpful as I can in response to the Hon. Member because I believe he is the only farmer who sits on the opposition benches and I think he understands agriculture to a reasonable degree.

Mr. Nystrom: What about Vic Althouse?

Mr. Wise: Yes, I must also acknowledge the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse). I do not sense the same necessity as the Hon. Member does. There seems to be more on the down side of making a specific announcement at this time than there is on the plus side. I know it is a subject of debate, but we should take a look at the risks involved. Look at the risk involved if a formula were used on cultivated acres rather than seeded acres. There would be a risk if we indicated that assistance would be the same as it was last year. After quick calculations, those in the west would do certain things and those in the east would more than likely transfer from soybeans to corn based on the deficiency payment. We cannot get by this problem at this time.

As I indicated before, we have a mandate through the clear statement that the Government will spare no effort and a mandate through the Budget announced by the Minister of Finance which authorizes my colleague and me to reconvene meetings and go forward. We sat down with the farmers on March 5 and they joined with us in making a statement. Clearly they have asked me not to make statements of the kind to which the Hon. Member has referred at this time for all of the reasons the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) would understand.

It is next to impossible to respond by providing anything that would be production and market-neutral other than what I have already provided to the Hon. Member. At this point, the final payment under the Agricultural Stabilization Act has gone out as has the final payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The $700 million portion of the $1 billion that was made available is now available if all the applications come back to us by March 31, a very crucial date for farmers. If they respond by that time, then we can issue the cheques and every cheque we have issued has been right on time.

There will be an interim payment under the Western Grain Stabilization Fund. Everyone knows that that fund is in a deficit position, but the Government has a responsibility and the will to honour its commitment to Canadian farmers. The payment will provide direct dollars out of the federal Treasury. We have a responsibility to do some management. We think we have done that and in our discussions with the farmers, they appear to agree.

I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration. I suppose he will have to bear with us because as long as the leadership is telling me to do certain things, I am quite well advised to take their advice.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, the situation of FCC mortgages is rapidly deteriorating. Arrears have jumped by 38 per cent in the last 12 months. Some 16,000 of the 70,000 mortgages are now in arrears and 6,150 of them have been in arrears for more than two years. The Minister said earlier last fall that as soon as the farm debt review boards were established, he would lift the moratorium on FCC foreclosures. Perhaps he could tell us what he is planning to do in that regard as many people seem to think that if the FCC and the banks were to take over all the land on which they have mortgages, the value of land would drop dramatically.

Since the genial Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is in the House, perhaps the Minister could comment on whether or not the freeze on freight rates will be continued into the new crop year. Perhaps my motion did not make it clear that I was interested in knowing if that freeze on freight rates would continue or if the grain transportation charges would be increased by the 50 per cent that has been forecast by the senior grain transportation agency and other groups.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must advise the Minister that his answer will have to be very short, perhaps one minute.

• (1700)

Mr. Wise: The Hon. Member has raised a number of questions. With regard to the FCC we have had the moratorium, the interest rate conversion program, the shared risk mortgage and the commodity based loan. There is $300 million in there. The equity financing task force is to report to me by the end of the month. We have established the Farm Debt Review legislation, the farm debt review boards and the Rural Transition Program. I could go on and on.

The fact is that I put that moratorium on in September of 1985. If I had to do it over again, I would do it over again. The Hon. Member may find this surprising, but the fact is that, even given the difficulties in farm financing, I am under more pressure to lift the moratorium. However, I am not going to do it abruptly or unilaterally for the very reasons that the Hon. Member mentions. The Farm Debt Review boards are up and operating. The rural transition program is 80 per cent successful. We have had an approximately 66 per cent success rate in the farm debt review boards in Alberta and about 55 per cent across the country. That is not bad because the first cases they will be dealing with are very, very severe.

I have consulted with some of the farm leadership. I am meeting with the Farm Debt Review chairpeople across the country. We are going to work out a system whereby there will be more fairness and equity for those farmers who are not protected by the moratorium. We are exploring ways of giving more prosperity to the FCC on longer term leases and so on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Minister knows that it is with deep regret that I have to interrupt him at this time.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise to debate a motion which deals with agriculture. As I said a little earlier, many farmers and farming organizations are very much concerned that we here in the Parliament of Canada are fiddling while the agriculture industry goes down the drain. It is not as though it were decreasing by the day or the season. It is a major blow to grain producers, now that grain prices will be 20 per cent lower, that the Government has not committed itself to having the money available to keep incomes at the level of last year at least, even if not through deficiency payments on a per bushel or per acre basis.

There is no doubt that agriculture needs a considerable amount of attention from the federal and provincial Governments since it is a shared responsibility. All the Governments of the country must look at the agricultural industry. If we cannot find a solution acceptable to everyone which can deal with the crisis in agriculture, we will lose 20 to 30 per cent of our farmers in the next year, particularly on the Prairies. That does not mean that that farmland will go out of production or that we will produce less grain. It just means that a way of life which started 150 years ago and developed into the best lifestyle in the country is going to disappear. It does not have to disappear. The important point is that it does not have to disappear. Surely there are enough people in this country who recognize that and will commit the necessary time and effort to ensure that that does not happen.

I am not going to spend a lot of time discussing the concerns of the effect that high input costs have had on the incomes of farmers which has led to the crisis we are facing in the farming communities. That does not apply only to the grain farming communities but to most farm communities because commodity prices have gone down almost right across the board. We have had some temporary relief in hogs and cattle, but commodity prices have gone down and input costs have gone up in almost all other commodity areas, with the result that the net farm income has been reduced to almost zero in most of those areas.

Let us take a look at the truths of the situation, at what is happening in the farm community today. In only a couple of minutes of scanning rural papers from the Prairies I came up with four little items which speak to the quality of life which is disappearing in the farm community, and not only on the Prairies although these come from prairie publications.

The farm suicide rate has increased and is now several percentage points higher than that in other categories in the country. In fact, there is a suggestion that 50 per cent of the farm deaths in Saskatchewan last year could have been suicides. Last week there were 30 stress seminars in Saskatchewan and I understand that they were all well attended. The Legal Aid Societies in Saskatchewan are establishing seminars to teach farmers their rights with regard to bankruptcies. Last, but not necessarily of least importance, the children of credit union managers are being harassed by their classmates on the school grounds.

By not dealing with the crisis in the farm community we are breaking up the structure which has existed in farm communities for so long, the custom of helpfulness and assistance to neighbours. Instead, stress is driving people off the farm and unacceptable conditions are prevalent.

This motion deals with four items. I will spend only a short time on those items because I think it is important to look at the global situation. Deficiency payments which we have been discussing have a tendency to encourage farmers to overproduce. If you are paid a deficiency payment per bushel, the more bushels you produce the more subsidy you will receive. That happened to a great extent in the United States. Even when they used subsidies to reduce the amount of production, they found that farmers used the subsidy to increase fertilizer application and, consequently, increase production on less acreage. It does not work quite the way the Minister wants. I must agree with him that there is a danger in making an announcement. However, the danger lies in making the announcement in a certain way. There is a need to assure the farming community that the Government will find the necessary funds to ensure that incomes do not drop below what they were last year. Even farmers who did not have debts last year and paid no interest have found this year that they could hardly make ends meet. Another 20 per cent reduction in the price of grain will affect those farmers as well.

All of us, regardless of our Party and regardless of who is in Government, have a responsibility to devise a solution that will effectively deal with the crisis in the farm community. We should include provincial Governments and farm organizations in that solution because they are the most concerned and probably have the best insight into what needs to be done.

There is one area of the farm community that seems to be surviving. It is those who have been on supply management structures, such as dairy producers, egg producers and turkey producers, that were developed primarily by farmers themselves, but under permissive legislation that Governments have passed over the years. Those kinds of marketing structures have been operating rather well.

The Government's proposal for free trade concerns many farm groups, but those areas which have supply management are particularly concerned because if the philosophy of the free market system is adopted, there will be the free movement of food across the border. While we can protect supply management as much as we want in this country, if the products of the dairy industry are allowed to enter the country, the need for dairy products in this country will be reduced and the industry will collapse. One need only look at the statistics from the United States for this week to see that the Americans produce enough surplus in their dairy industry to supply Canada without any increase in production. Furthermore, they are looking for a market for those products.

Free trade at its extreme means that one should not produce anything in Canada that can be produced cheaper elsewhere. If we reached that extreme, very few of our basic industries would do much more than supply the local market, because many areas in the United States can produce most of our food products cheaper than we can do it here most of the year. The total farm debt in Canada, including Canadians farmers in all areas of the industry, is $23 billion. Experience tells us that even in good years, farmers with less than 75 per cent equity have a very slim chance of survival. In recent years, even farmers with 100 per cent equity are having difficulty surviving. It behooves us as Members of Parliament and Governments in Canada to find a way to take care of this debt. It is not sufficient simply to suggest that we will reduce the interest rate from 16 per cent to 12 per cent or 8 per cent. The debt itself must be eradicated. We cannot afford to hope that the industry will turn around and we will begin to produce and receive enough for our products in two to five years to pay off that debt.

Most farmers realize that they will never repay a good portion of that $23 billion. Therefore, there will be a foreclosure on the debt and it will not be paid by the farmers who presently own the land. The farmer will have to give up farming or relinquish a portion of the land which someone else will buy. We are not talking about the elimination of agriculture; we are talking about the elimination of a way of life for many farmers.

I, many in the farm community and, in fact, many Canadians believe that the elimination of the present agricultural structure is unacceptable. The use of land in financing has been a major problem, possibly because the cost of land went up so high. For instance, I have 160 acres of land that is worth perhaps $100,000. However, I am lucky to have a return of $5,000 from the land. In fact, last year I lost money on it, but I do not depend upon the production of that land to pay debts.

Let us consider the situation of a prairie farmer who has almost 30 per cent of the land in debt and the farmer is unlikely to survive on the farm. If the banks, the credit unions, the loan companies and the Farm Credit Corporation cannot collect the debt, they will end up with the land. If they were to take all that land and put it on the market, the price of the land would probably drop to some $200 an acre from its present $500, $600 or $700. The Government has suggested that perhaps land companies should be formed from the land that is being foreclosed. I call that a type of modern feudalism, a situation where we are developing land owners who will then lease the land to the farmers. Again, that is not necessarily a bad thing, but what it does is to eliminate the kind of structure we have accepted in the farming and rural community for many years, the community which has produced the products which are part of this country's wealth. I do not think anyone in this House, or even anyone in the urban communities, if he thinks about it, wants that to happen. Unless we in this House, and the provincial Governments, do something about it, it is going to happen regardless of whether we want it to do so.

• (1720)

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the speech of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo). He is one of the more respected farm spokesmen in this House and I followed his line of thinking very closely. However, I did not notice too many solutions to the problem or what his Party would do if it were in government. The only thing I heard him mention was supply management. Supply management seems to be the answer. I think it has worked in many of the commodities such as feathers, some of the fruit and vegetable areas and in the dairy industry. However, I wonder how he is going to apply supply management to the western grain farmers when 65 per cent of their production is exported. Is he suggesting that 65 per cent of the farmers go out of business or that they should cut down by 65 per cent?

Second, the Hon. Member says we should basically almost match the Americans in the amount of money they are going to put into the system. He knows very well that Canada is a major grain producer and that we produce about 20 per cent of the world market. The U.S. supplies 40 per cent, but we certainly do not have half the population to support that tax base. Is it the position of the Hon. Member's Party that this money should be put in there to increase the deficit which, in many cases, I think would devalue the dollar and also increase interest rates? Or is he suggesting making cuts in other areas of government spending? I would like to know, first, where he is going to get this money? And does he believe there should be a 65 per cent reduction in the number of farmers or a 65 per cent cut in production in western Canada? And how would the farmers feel about that?

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I thought I spent a particularly large amount of time suggesting that that is exactly what we do not want. We do not want the elimination of 65 per cent. In fact, if we could find a method of doing it, I would suggest that the land we have, particularly on the Prairies, could handle another 25 per cent of farmers and we could still produce enough to keep those people going.

At no time did I suggest that we try to match the United States. In fact, I do not think you would find many farmers right now on the Prairies or even in the Hon. Member's part of Ontario who would say they wanted us to match the U.S., although in the deficiency discussions that came up quite often. I think right now most of the farmers out there would be quite satisfied if there were some assurance that as long as they produced, they could survive. They would produce what was saleable. However, if they do make a wrong choice or if the markets do continue to fall, they still want to be able to produce something which will make them a living. They do not want to go on the dole. They don't want to have to collect unemployment insurance in some city. They want a farm, a community and a rural life. They do not mind working for it and they will accept anything almost to the survival level.

I am not suggesting that I or anyone else have a solution at this moment. However, the agronomists of Ontario made a very well defined suggestion on what could be done as far as the grain industry was concerned. That suggestion is something we should look at. Neither my Party, the Liberals, nor the Conservatives should look at it separately. We should look at it together as a solution to the problem. They suggested that we knew how much grain we use domestically. We have a pretty good idea of how much grain we can sell, at what quantities and at what particular price. The main concern, of course, is that the price goes down and we have no way of knowing how much we are going to lose. However, if the Government is willing to admit that we need the farm community, we need this production, then we can make a decision jointly with the farmers and with the Governments which will allow them to survive.

If it costs more than it is costing now, that is the price we will have to pay. If we do not do that, those farmers are going to go off the land and we will end up paying for them because they will not find jobs in the cities. We will be paying for them in other ways. It does not take a great deal of extra money to keep them on the farms, and that is all they want at the moment.

Mr. Caldwell: Madam Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has really answered my question or even if he understands what supply management means. It means that we produce for the domestic market and give up our exports. That is what a supply management board is, as we understand it. I do not quite understand how the Hon. Member can say we can increase production and still be in supply management. I do not quite understand where he is going there. If we are going to go into straight supply management and produce for the domestic market, we are going to have to cut our crops by 65 per cent on the Prairies in western Canada to meet just the domestic market.

Mr. Hovdebo: The Hon. Member should know that the dairy industry, which is probably the most sophisticated structure of supply management we have, produces in a variety of ways. It produces, first, for the domestic milk market, then for the industrial milk market and for an export market. The same thing can be done with any of the products with which we are concerned.

I am not suggesting, although it might be the only way we have to go, that supply management of that type is what is going to work in the grain industry. What I am suggesting is that we do know the parameters of the domestic market. We have a pretty good idea as to what we can sell. We know, for instance, that if we can produce a high quality wheat, we will sell more. We sell 10 per cent of our grain right now to the United States even if there are barriers to allowing it in. There are possibilities, but we will not find those possibilities, and they will not become part of the agricultural production system, unless we put them in place and we all accept them.

I suppose what I am suggesting is that perhaps the time has come, as far as agriculture is concerned, when the farmers in the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, and the farm organizations, should all get together and decide that this is one way we can survive.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I have a short comment. I have been working with the Minister for some months now to try to establish a complaint mechanism to referee between a farmer and a farm chemical company when they are having a dispute. I wish the Minister were here because he has been kind enough to have a policy review done in his Department and there appears to be some headway made in establishing such a mechanism.

• (1730)

A number of months ago I was approached by some Saskatchewan farmers not from my riding but from the Town of Eston in the riding of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), in particular farmer Roger Oakland and farmer Lorne Johnston who were representing a group of Eston farmers who had a dispute with Dow Chemical over a chemical called Tordon 202C. They could not get any satisfaction because of a problem they have had with this chemical. Thus they had to go to the courts. This involved a very lengthy court case. I cannot comment on it because it is still before the courts.

I see that the Minister is now in the House. Because of this situation these farmers came up with the idea that there should be some type of a mechanism to solve disputes between a farmer and a farm chemical company when there is a problem with chemicals that malfunction, do not work, do not perform or which damage the soil or crop. Now the situation is that a farmer cannot really afford to take on a big multinational farm chemical company, or he does not have the time. I want to say that the Minister has been very co-operative in this regard. Perhaps it is even out of order to commend the Minister, I am not sure, Madam Speaker. However, not very often do we see that type of review instituted. I just want to say publicly that I am happy that there is this review going on now in Agriculture Canada with respect to some type of complaint mechanism.

I am sure we may have to start off with the industry itself setting up a voluntary mechanism procedure with full consultation with farmers and farm organizations as a first step toward an official mechanism or a referee, which I guess might be another way of putting it. I think we will make some progress on this issue. It is an example of a number of Saskatchewan farmers having got together with a good idea. I suppose there is nothing more powerful than an idea whose time has come. It shows that these farmers, when they push their ideas and do their research, are able to persuade officials in the Department of Agriculture that they have ideas well worth looking at. Hopefully, before not too long the farmers of the country will have an independent referee who will settle disputes between farm chemical companies and farmers. I wish to ask the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) whether or not he would support such a fantastic idea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) has one minute in which to respond.

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I would very definitely support such an idea. It brings up a matter on which I would like to comment. I think it is time to carry out a review of a great many of these areas, such as financial, inputs and production. The research that should be done these days should not be with respect to increasing production, since we have plenty of most of our products, but with respect to reducing the costs of production, even if we end up producing less in the end.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain): Madam Speaker, this is a subject which I think really concerns a question of trust of the people of Canada as between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party. With all due apologies to the NDP, this is our battle.

First, it should be made clear that this was a dangerous type of thing to have done at a time when the Canadian Wheat Board is in desperate travail trying to do its duty under the Act. I could have said that my first thought in reading this motion was that it is an attack on the Canadian Wheat Board. Under the legislation of this Parliament, the Canadian Wheat Board has the power to handle the selling of all the grain in western Canada, or at least almost all of it. I do not think that was in the minds of the Liberals. I hope it was not. What we are being asked to do is to vote no confidence in the Government if we believe that the Conservative Party has betrayed its past and its present.

In very simple terms, the Liberal record on agricultural policy has not been good over the last number of years. I have in my hand their Bible. It is entitled Canadian Agriculture in the Seventies. It was prepared by some of the brightest men from across the country. It was started under the Pearson administration and published in 1969 under the Trudeau administration. The Minister of the day tried to carry out its policies.

It is known to the people of western Canada that the Liberal Party under Pearson and Trudeau attempted to carry out the policies of the task force report of 1969. What are the guts of the report? It states that if one looks into the future that there is no future for farmers in Canada at all. It recommends that we get rid of two out of every three farmers. It also recommends that we reduce the acreage in western Canada to one-half in three years. That was the policy the Liberals followed from 1969 until the time they were defeated in 1979.

The Conservative record from 1957 to 1963, with respect to which we have quantitative evidence, earned the trust of the western grain farmer for the next 50 years. The Minister was rightfully upset about this motion after all the Government has done in the last two years to maintain that trust. To bring in a motion as silly and untimely as this one could be taken as an attack on the Wheat Board to which Parliament has given the right to decide what the returns will be.

I put it very simply to you, Madam Speaker, that this debate is really a matter between two major Parties which have governed this country for the last 100 years. This is a question of trust. I have a list here a page long of the horrible things that happened to us. I remember in the early days of the Diefenbaker period when my job was to prepare an over-all national agriculture policy. The same type of criticism was thrown at us. At the time it looked pretty bad. Specifically, I can recall when I came back with the news of the first grain sale, the long-term deal, to China. The NDP said that it was not a deal at all, that it was a hoax. The Liberal Party said that it looked as if we were selling wheat on credit to our enemies to fight our friends.

I can say no more. This is a question of faith. Does our record not deserve a little more trust than this motion represents? If we look at the Liberal record, then how are we to respond?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Madam Speaker, I sincerely believe that the short but convincing comments by my hon. colleague have shown that especially since this Government was elected in September 1984, Canadian agriculture has made tremendous progress.

[English]

I would like to ask a question of my hon. friend.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I wish he would tell me how he sees the various efforts that have been made in the agricultural industry across Canada. Let's start in Newfoundland and go on to British Columbia. First of all, let's talk about the long-term dairy policy that Canadian producers wanted so badly. The Liberals had been promising the policy since 1980, and since 1980, producers have been in limbo, and it took a Progressive Conservative Government to finalize the policy.

• (1740)

Madam Speaker, the House will recall that as far as Quebec and the 1983 crop losses are concerned, we signed the agreement and we dealt with the problem because the Liberals had failed to do so, claiming that Quebec producers didn't need the money. Madam Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would tell me what he thinks about the proposal by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) and his comment that Canadian producers and Canadian agriculture are at risk, when for 20 years his own Government refused to help them. Madam Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would talk about the 16.75 per cent interest the Farm Credit Corporation was charging farmers when the Liberals were in power. Why didn't the Hon. Member for Algoma, the present agriculture critic, present his motion at the time? If he had been perfectly honest he would have done so. I wish the Hon. Member would explain, because I know how well informed he is on agricultural issues and how concerned he is about the economic future of our farmers.

Madam Speaker, what Canada wants, what the Government of Canada wants and what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has been delivering since 1984 is, first of all, consultation with the provinces. We have talked and we have agreed on various programs. The last agreement we signed with Quebec was worth $35 million. I wish my hon. friend would comment on the agreements we signed with the Maritimes. Effectiveness depends first and foremost on how we treat our farmers, the provinces and the Canadian agricultural industry. Madam Speaker, in concluding, because I would not want to make undue demands on the time of this House, I wish the Hon. Member would comment on upcoming agreements. These are the bilateral agreements with the United States and the multilateral GATT agreements, because this is the first time a responsible Government, a Progressive Conservative Government has taken the trouble to put the agriculture question right out in front at the Tokyo Round.

This is the first time a responsible Government, a moral Government has taken on the responsibility for making stabilization payments, for making an additional payment of one billion dollars to grain producers, and the Hon. Member for Algoma is complaining. Madam Speaker, what is he complaining about? Is it because we are helping farmers? If that is the purpose of his speech, I think he should try listening a little more. He should co-operate more, and above all, and I say this for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardiff), look at the 400 or so achievements of this Government in the agricultural sector since it came to power. Those are not mere words, those are concrete measures. Canadian agriculture is one of our main economic priorities, and with a responsible Government and a responsible Minister of Agriculture like the one we have today, I think we will be able to see some very positive results.

I therefore wish my hon. friend would give me his views on these various questions.

[English]

Mr. Hamilton: Madam Speaker, I cannot answer all those questions. What I am simply saying is that the Government of which I was a Member had a tremendous record in every province of this country. When we are met with a motion like this it becomes a question of whether the people have forgotten the trust they put in us for all those years.

On the question of trust, the man working for me when I was winding up this effort in 1962 is the man who is presently Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I called him my private secretary but he called himself by another name. He brought the exotic semen into Canada which caused a great revolution in the cattle industry. When I could not speak very well in Quebec he explained what I was trying to say. We did well in Quebec in 1962, 1963 and 1965 in the rural areas. I think that is all I need to say.

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, it is a great honour to offer this intervention following one of the greatest Ministers of Agriculture this country has ever known, and one of the greatest debaters this House of Commons has ever known.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: Madam Speaker, we do not usually expect Members from Metropolitan Toronto to participate in an agricultural debate. In doing so, the point I make is that while I do not represent many farmers, I represent a large number of consumers of farm products. The health of the farming sector of our society is vitally important to all Canadians, whether we live on the farm or in the cities. In my constituency we have the largest producer of flour-based products in this country. Government policies affecting wheat and flour are of vital importance to that company and the 400 people working in it. I am very grateful to and very impressed by this Government for the balanced way it handled the wheat pricing issue. It cares about the concerns of the wheat producer. It cares for the concerns of the consumers. It cares for the concerns of the people in industry. It has brought all that together to meet the legitimate needs and aspirations of us all. That is an example of what the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was talking about when he said it is a matter of trust. Surely this is a Government in which we can have confidence because it cares about all segments of our society. It approaches policy issues with balance and justice for all.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, let me start with the issue of trust raised by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). He has a long and distinguished career and surely he recognizes that trust is based upon a return of that trust. When confidence is placed in a Government there is an expectation that it will result in effective and useful action on behalf of the people who gave that trust.

In 1984, the Conservative Government received a huge majority. A great deal of hope was placed in the Government by western Canadian farmers. They had great expectations. I would just remind the Hon. Member of what has happened since then. In the prairie provinces, long a bastion of Conservative support, the Conservatives are in third place. In a short two-year period they have lost the trust and confidence of western Canadians. They have not fulfilled the hopes and expectations placed in them by those people. There is no doubt that the trust was there.

The whole point of this motion is to remind members of the Conservative caucus that it is about time they started acting as representatives of the people who elected them. They are not here simply to lash themselves to the mast of a sinking ship and obey orders. This is a time of conscience for members of the Conservative caucus who represent rural constituencies. They know what is going on. They know they are losing the trust of the people and they are doing so because they are not responding to circumstances.

Let me give you some examples, Madam Speaker. Last Friday night I was being driven to Toronto from the Lambton—Middlesex area of southwestern Ontario by two farmers in order to catch my plane to Winnipeg. These farmers were from families who had been in business for three or four generations. They were good farmers, not marginal by any means. For two and a half hours I listened to their story. Day by day, week by week, they would see their neighbours down the road slowly packing what was remaining of their household goods into pick-up trucks to move off the land and recognizing that there was no one out there to give them a helping hand. There were not only one or two examples; they were by the tens of hundreds in that part of southwestern Ontario. These farmers said that it broke their hearts to see their communities dissolving in front of their eyes.

Let me also talk about another example. About two weeks ago I was meeting with people in my Winnipeg constituency office. Suddenly a group of seven or eight persons came in. They said that they did not have an appointment but that they wanted to speak to the Member of Parliament. They were from the Interlake area of Manitoba, Beausejour, to be exact. They had had a meeting the night before, and they said that they had only one choice and that was to leave the land. Their sons and daughters no longer had faith or hope in farming because there was no longer money to be made. These men and women were in their late fifties. They told the same story as that of the farmers in southwestern Ontario. They had lost hope, trust, and confidence. As a result, a way of life or a way of making a living was disappearing around them.

Last week I met with delegates of the Agricultural Stability Action Committee of southern Alberta representing some 20,000 farmers in that part of the country. It was the same story. They coined a new phrase for me. I had not heard it before. It was called "minding the farm". This means that what farmers are planning to do this year in many parts of Canada is simply to put in a minimum amount of seed to qualify for their acreage payment, get their government stabilization cheque, and walk off the land. That story is being repeated across the country.

It is not a matter of the resolution simply saying that we want to put forward our policies. In the resolution we are trying to get both sides of the House of Commons to respond to the deepest crisis faced by the agricultural community in generations and in decades. We are watching the dissolution of the grain economy of Canada. Farmers and their wives and children do not want the smug complacency we have heard this afternoon, indicating that things are okay, that we do not have to take action, that nothing needs to be responded to, that we do not need to worry, that it will be okay tomorrow, and that the market will take care of it. They do not want those kinds of supercilious answers when they see their way of life disappearing in front of their eyes. That is what the resolution is about. It is not simply saying business as usual or that we should tinker with the system. We are talking about an economy that is being severed from its ties.

The Member from Metro Toronto rose to his feet to say that he felt a common cause with farmers. It was a genuine statement, and I agree with it. However, if he says that, then he should vote for the resolution which says what farmers want. It is not based upon some esoteric think-tank or upon what officials in the Department of Agriculture said. It is based upon the discussions we have held with farmers over past months who are worried about losing everything they have.

I was part of a task force of our caucus which visited our four western provinces during the parliamentary break. At every single stop farmers refuted exactly what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) had to say today. They said they needed an efficiency payment or a commitment that the initial payment on Canadian Wheat Board grains would be maintained at last year's level. They needed not only to continue their cash flow to allow them to buy their seeds and to make their preparations for planting, but to send a signal to the Americans and the Europeans that we in Canada will not be forced out of business.

We know what is the objective of the U.S. Farm Bill. It is to put us out of business. The Americans are using their incredible volumes of grain to bring down world prices, to subsidize their farmers at $3 or $4 per bushel, and to push the producers of Canada, Argentina, and Australia out of business. The only way to convince them and to stop that demonic attempt to put us out of business is to send them the signal that we will not be cowed.

If it means that Canadians will be required to pay more money to support farmers over the next year or two or three years, then we should say so now and tell the Americans and the Europeans that they cannot push us around. That is the kind of signal that is needed.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Champagne) rose and said that he had this matter put on the agenda of the summit. However, what have they done since then? Have they given the Americans that kind of signal?

I refer to a brief which we received when we were in Winnipeg. It was from United Grain Growers. In the polite language which is used in front of parliamentary groups, it reads: "It is disappointing in our view to see a country like Australia deliver its message effectively to the United States when Canada has such strong economic and social ties with our neighbours to the south". During their presentation they said that they were disappointed with the Minister of State for Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer) in terms of the "dance of the seven veils" which he does at those meetings. It is no longer a time for cute diplomacy. It is no time to repeat the briefs written by the people in the striped pants from the Department of External Affairs. It is time for tough language with the Americans. It is time for tough language which says that they will not put us out of business, and that we will keep our farmers on the land producing effectively until there is a change. The Americans have not heard that kind of language from the Government, and that is what we need.

They will not stop. They have every intention of keeping the U.S. Farm Bill and of ratcheting down the prices 15 per cent to 20 per cent this year, next year, and the year after, until someone says "halt". That is partly the reason for the resolution. That is partly why the Government needs to give a signal now, not several months from now.

We also believe that there is an opportunity for both sides of the House to give a clear message that we will do something about farmers affected by credit problems. We tend to disparage these people. We talk about marginal farmers who will go out of business anyway. What kind of language is that? Who in this House of Commons is so omniscient that he can call someone a marginal farmer?

I was told by the Minister of Agriculture that somehow the only people who have any business participating in this debate are the farmers themselves. It is like saying that only women should be interested in feminist issues or only easterners should discuss problems of the St. Lawrence Seaway. I am a Member of Parliament. I come from western Canada. I am deeply concerned about what I see happening in my region of the country. I will speak out on it, whether or not I am a farmer. What I am saying is that many of those farmers were aggressive farmers in the 1970s. They were good farmers who talked about expanding their operations and building up their machinery. There are young farmers with degrees in agriculture. The future of farming is in the hands of the people who are now in deep arrears to the FCC. Those are the people upon whom we need to build. They are the future of our grain economy. They are the ones who are going down the chute.

We heard the numbers. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) indicated that 30 per cent of FCC credit holders have been in arrears for over two years. In fact they are legally bankrupt.

What has the Government done? Hon. Members across the way have been beating their chests in pride about what they have done. They have given $15 million to the FCC in two years, $10 million of which was to help write down some debts; $10 million against an outstanding debt pool of over $23 billion. This is what the Government is doing to deal with the credit crunch facing the farm economy. It is not fair to the farmers. It is not fair to the country as a whole. The Hon. Member from Metro Toronto was right. The rest of us depend in large part upon the grain economy and the farm economy.

The jobs of the people in the food processing industry and the many workers in transportation depend upon land producers. So why are we letting the land go fallow? Why are we allowing people to go off the land? Why do we have farmers in southern Alberta talking about mining their farms? I do not think there is any dispute about the facts. I do not think anybody here has argued about the deep-seated conditions we are in.

Why are we going to disagree about the kinds of measures that can be brought forward to give some hope, confidence and trust that the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle—Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) asked for? We recognize it will cost money. As did my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), we applauded when the Government announced the $1 billion program. It was a good start. Farm groups said it was not enough, but it was of some assistance. That, however, was last year. We are talking about what is happening next year. We are talking about farmers now nearing the end of March, who are making their plans today as to what to do, whether to stay on the land, what they can seed or whether they will be in business three or four months from now.

Mr. Wise: They know more about it than you do, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: I concede they do. But I must say to the Hon. Minister that I think they know more about it than he does.

Mr. Wise: I agree to that.

Mr. Axworthy: I have been listening to them, Madam Speaker. That is why I have been out in the countryside for the last two months talking to people in the farm economy in western Canada. That is why I was in southwestern Ontario last weekend. They told me to act as a vehicle for their point of view. They said they needed help and they need it now.

Mr. Wise: They will get it.

Mr. Axworthy: They need the assurances now.

Mr. Wise: They have the assurances.

Mr. Axworthy: That is all this resolution asks for. It does not say that the Minister of Agriculture has to say how much or whether it will be acreage, cultivated or resource-free; it simply says make the commitment now—

Mr. Wise: The commitment is made.

Mr. Axworthy: —rather than dancing away from that commitment.

Mr. Wise: The commitment is made.

Mr. Axworthy: The commitment is not made.

Mr. Wise: It is.

Mr. Axworthy: It is not out there.

Mr. Wise: Yes, it is.

Mr. Axworthy: If that is the case, it is the best kept secret in Canada. Farmers sure as hell don't know about it. No one out there knows about it. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues know about it. If that is the case, let them say so.

Mr. Wise: You cannot say it now.

Mr. Axworthy: If that commitment is out there, then we have no problem. The Minister of Agriculture can get to his feet in two or three minutes and vote for this resolution. That is all it takes. We do not ask him to do any more than that. Just let him get to his feet and say yes to this resolution. Then there will be no mistake and no confusion. And we can say is that this House of Commons has done its job. It will give farmers a little hope. We will have shown that this Parliament of Canada is prepared to take some action when necessary. We can say that all Parties got together and took the action necessary.

If the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues say that the commitment has been made and the assurances are there, then I say to them, get on your feet and vote for this resolution.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think we have had other items on the agenda today. It has been a good debate. Could you seek unanimous consent not to see the clock to give the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) an opportunity to pose a question or two?

Mr. Gauthier: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent for the Minister's suggestion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wise: Just one question?

Mr. Gauthier: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We do not have consent.

[Translation]

Order. It being 6.05 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 82(9), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the supply proceedings now before the House. Accordingly, the question is as follows:

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That this House, recognizing the serious plight of Canadian farmers due to record low world prices for grain and other commodities, calls on the government to make a commitment now to farmers:

(a) to ensure that their returns on grain in the new crop year will at least equal the levels of the 1986-87 crop year;

(b) to maintain the current freeze on grain freight rates charged to farmers;

(c) to reduce farm input costs through methods that include measures to deal with high chemical prices; and

(d) in view of the worsening farm debt crisis, to provide greater assistance to preserve the family farm as the primary means of production and a vital part of rural Canadian life.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Foster), which was negatived on the following division:

TELEGLOBE CANADA REORGANIZATION AND DIVESTITURE ACT—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Committee, I have the honour to present the report of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-38, an Act respecting the reorganization and divestiture of Teleglobe Canada, with amendments, in both official languages.

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration concerning unemployment insurance in both official languages. In accordance with Standing Order 99(2), I request that the Government make a comprehensive response to this first report.

First, I want to pay tribute to committee members who have laboured long and hard. In the last two weeks I recall four occasions when the committee meetings began early in the morning and concluded at midnight or shortly thereafter. I think that that type of schedule speaks to the complexity of unemployment insurance. It also speaks to the importance of unemployment insurance in the Canadian mosaic. Our report contains 90 recommendations from all three Parties. There was agreement on 89 of those recommendations and slight differences on only one. I think that speaks for the spirit of co-operation which members have shown in this endeavour.

The major feature of the changes recommended by the committee are to restore equity from coast to coast, in a geographic sense. We hope the days are over when there were first-class unemployed in some regions of the country and second-class unemployed in other regions.

We are also recommending that the beneficiaries of unemployment insurance will increasingly be allowed to take better control of their own lives by becoming trained and retrained while receiving benefits. I believe it is the first time that a committee of the House has recommended that as a matter of right, adult Canadians who do not have a basic education be allowed to use their benefit periods to seek that basic education. We think it is a major attack on the problem of functional illiteracy in this country. If our advice is to be followed by the Government and this Parliament, we think it will make an enormous difference.

I believe Members will also be pleased with the notion of eligibility being determined on the basis of 400 hours of work. While this seems simple at first blush, this refers to the resource nature of this country, in the oil industry, fishing, forestry and many other sectors of the Canadian economy in which people work large numbers of hours in a week. Previously, unemployment insurance did not acknowledge the reality that people may work 100 or 120 hours in a week rather than the normal 40 hours a week associated with the manufacturing industry. We are pleased to be able to assert a recommendation that would acknowledge the resource sector and its differential work patterns.

There are many other recommendations, including major reorganization, but I think those three thrusts represent significant departures. I hope they will find favour with the Government and the Parliament of Canada.

POINT OF ORDER

PRESENTATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT—EQUAL TIME SOUGHT FOR OPPOSITION CRITICS' RESPONSE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, when my colleague, the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration was tabling the report of the standing committee with respect to unemployment insurance, a report which I, for the greater part, support, he made some lengthy comments. It seems to me that while I support much of what he said, I think it is appropriate that when one makes such a lengthy statement in tabling a report, the opposition critics should have similar time to comment as well.

If I understand correctly, the usual rule is that you simply table the report. I think it is a good thing that the Chairman is able to make the kind of comments he made. However, I also believe that if he does make that kind of comment, which is similar to comments made when a Minister makes a statement on Motions, opposition critics should have a similar short period of time to make comments as well.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. In the same vein, I applaud much of what our Chairman has said. I would think it is a good idea if we had a few minutes to highlight, from our perspective, the work which was done in this particular committee with this particular report. I think it does signal a new mood in committees. We have come up with a report which has the support of all Parties in this House. In fact, only one Member from the government side—and it is in the report—departed from the rest of his colleagues with respect to the issue of pension income as earned income. I think there was only that one departure. I would ask Your Honour to consider giving us an opportunity to respond briefly.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would not for a moment want to be seen to be prohibiting freedom of expression in the House. However, I think we are dealing here with the tabling of a document. It has been customary in previous Parliaments, and this Parliament, to allow for certain non-partisan remarks to be made by the individual in his or her capacity as chairperson of that committee. I think that is appropriate and is well understood.

I would suggest to the Chair that the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure is presently reviewing the Standing Orders. It seems to me that if a new practice is to be created, and I am not for a minute suggesting it should or should not be created, the format for dealing with a change in our procedures should be through changes to the Standing Orders rather than by a point of order on the floor of the House.

For that reason, I think my colleagues have had their opportunity to comment and in future we should simply try to confine the remarks to those pertinent to the tabling of the reports, and any comments a Member may want to make should be made during Question Period or outside the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to comment. First, I am happy to see that the annualization principle that had detrimental effects for fishermen of the Atlantic provinces has been unanimously rejected. I am happy to see Conservative Members oppose the Government's decision to take pension income into account to reduce unemployment benefits. I am also very pleased, Mr. Speaker, that Members of the House, be they Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat, worked in a very constructive way.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the Chair might comment, and I note the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary calling for a point of order.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) has finished speaking.

[English]

Perhaps the Chair could assist Hon. Members. What has happened here is that pursuant to the Standing Orders, the Hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), as Chairman of the committee, has reported to the House on a report from that committee concerning the whole question of unemployment insurance, and it is clearly a very important matter. The Hon. Member for Calgary West has also commented on the fact which is, I think, a credit to the committee, if the Chair can say so, that there was great unanimity and that members of all Parties collaborated and worked very hard on the committee report. The report has already received some attention in the news and it is perhaps not too hard to understand why the Chairman of the committee wished to say a few more words than a committee chairman would ordinarily do when bringing in a report of such nature to the House.

What has happened is that other Hon. Members have risen and said that when there is a statement like that, perhaps it would be appropriate if representations from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party were also permitted. I take it literally that the Chair is being asked if the Chair could accede to that request at this time. I draw to the attention of Hon. Members Rule 99(1) which states:

> Reports to the House from committees may be made by Members standing in their places, at the time provided pursuant to Standing Order 19(3) or 82(15)(c), provided that the Member may be permitted to give a succinct explanation of the subject-matter of the report.

This House can do anything by consent, of course. If it were the disposition of the House at any given time, on any particular report, to hear as well from representatives of the other Parties, and if the House agreed, then that of course would be completely appropriate. However, the Chair is in the position, in this case, of having to look to the rule. On some other occasion, and even on this occasion, the Chair does not, under any circumstances, wish to close off legitimate comment or what might even become debate, if it were the wish of the House to do so. However, I think that under the circumstances, the Chair must adhere to the rule and say to Hon. Members and to the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), that looking at the rule, the Chair cannot unilaterally take away from that rule and give the permission requested. In saying this, the Chair is in no way diminishing the importance of the matter. As the Chair indicated a few moments ago, and I think I am quite permitted to say it again, the House, and the country as well, owes a great deal to the work of all Parties in the preparation of this report.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is raising a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the point of order has been dealt with.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): I have the honour, Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, to table a petition signed by 32 residents of the Montreal area who object to the amendments proposed in Bill C-22 to the Patent Act. They consider that the government proposals will increase the already high costs of provincial health care systems and will directly affect all Canadians who are not covered under private drug insurance schemes. The undersigned call upon the Canadian Parliament to reject those proposals which will increase drug prices for all Canadians.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROGRAMS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): I also have the honour to present a second petition dealing with housing policy in Canada. That petition is signed by 36 residents of the Montreal area who object to the decision of the Government to bring about major changes in the housing policy in Canada. They believe that in this International Year of Shelter for the Homeless the definition of essential needs as understood by this Government prevents hundreds of thousands of Canadians living under the poverty line to receive housing assistance from the Government. Wherefore, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to increase immediately the assistance provided for co-operative housing programs.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST DECISION TO REDUCE SERVICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition dealing with Canada Post Corporation. The petition is signed by a number of constituents from the Glengarry—Prescott—Russell riding who are objecting against the decision of Canada Post to reduce its service in rural as well as in urban areas. This petition is signed by 1,116 constituents of my riding. They are joining in with the 5,606 people who have already voiced their complaint for a grand total of 6,723.

The undersigned are residents of the communities of Plantagenet, Treadwell, St. Albert, Alfred, Casselman, Limoges, Embrun, Bourget, Apple Hill, Green Valley, Glen Robertson, Alexandria, Russell, Clarence Creek, Saint-Bernardin, Dalkeith, Dunvegan, l'Orignal, Hammond, Rockland and Wendover in the riding which I have the honour and privilege to represent.

RIDEAU HALL—PUBLIC'S ACCESS TO GROUNDS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present a petition that is in accordance with Standing Order 106. The undersigned, residents of Canada, now prevail themselves of their right to present a grievance against the decision to close Rideau Hall made by the National Capital Commission, the Department of Public Works, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the Office of the Governor General, without prior notice. The closure of this attractive and tranquil park affects thousands of visitors to the capital from across the country who held Canada's uniquely accessible Rideau Hall as a symbol of the trust, openness and democracy of which Canadians are so justly proud. And the area residents from the entire National Capital Region who have used and enjoyed the grounds of Rideau Hall, recognizing the security concerns that prompted the closure decision, cannot accept a blanket closure of the 20-acre park to public access. Wherefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to open the decision for consultation with a group of citizens, representative of the large and growing opposition, in order that a modus vivendi can be created that would satisfy the Government and the public.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106. In this petition people from Norway House, Snow Lake, The Pas, Churchill, Flin Flon and Thompson, Manitoba, express their concern about the Government's intention to change the Patent Act relating to prescription drugs. They believe this measure will increase drug prices for Canadian consumers and severely restrict the ability of average Canadians to buy necessary prescription drugs. They also believe that it will hurt those Canadians whose health needs require the purchase of prescription drugs on an ongoing basis. In their petition they also state that they believe that this is yet another example of the Canadian Government making concessions to the United States at the expense of average Canadians in the free trade negotiations.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member might be good enough to give us the date of certification of the petition and the name of the Member who presented it for certification.

Mr. Murphy: Certainly, Mr. Speaker. The name of the person who asked for the petition to be certified is Rod Murphy, which you may have guessed from the fact that all the communities listed on the petition are from the federal riding of Churchill. I believe the petition was certified according to the regulations by the Clerk of Petitions on January 6 of this year. I do not know whether or not the petition went to the Government House Leader for ratification.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. If we cannot trust Members of Parliament to present petitions in this House in their proper form and in the proper manner, then why does the Parliamentary Secretary get up each time and ask Hon. Members to identify who gave it authorization, who signed it and under what authority? I think that a gentleman's trust is involved here. Hon. Members must trust other Hon. Members in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to my hon. colleague that the reason for the question I ask will unfold with the passage of time.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not disagree with the request of the Parliamentary Secretary. However, in the vein of questions he has been asking members of the Opposition lately, can he tell the House the date for the question which the Government has yet to provide an answer and has been on the Order Paper the longest?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is not sure whether or not the Parliamentary Secretary can answer such a question. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and the Parliamentary Secretary can discuss the matter in their own time.

Shall all the questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members remember the statement made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when he introduced this Bill last week.

[English]

This statement sets out very clearly the main purpose of the Bill. It is to provide strong financial support to the lower income provinces by renewing the equalization program. I say "strong financial support" because that is what renewal of the equalization program means.

Under this Bill total equalization entitlements are expected to grow substantially in the years ahead. They should grow from about $5.3 billion in 1986-87 to about $5.6 billion in 1987-88 and about $5.9 billion in 1988-89. This means estimated increases of about $300 million each year, or over 5 per cent growth annually.

• (1130)

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated in his statement, this Bill will also provide for the net forgiveness of about $270 million owed to the federal Government under equalization as a result of the 1986 census.

[Translation]

In short, Madam Speaker, this Bill is aimed at giving low revenue provinces the financial assistance they need. This Bill shows the federal Government's clear intention to give them that assistance.

[English]

I will briefly underline the significance the Government attaches to the provision of equalization. As the Minister of Finance said in his statement, there are few federal programs as important as equalization. It is part of the fabric of this country. Indeed, the provision of equalization has become so accepted in this country that a commitment to the principle of making these payments is now included in the Constitution. The unconditional cash transfers which the federal Government provides to the low income provinces under equalization are funds which they can use as they choose to help provide public services. They are unconditional cash transfers.

This assistance is provided on the basis of the relative strength of provincial economies vis-à-vis one another. Lower income provinces with relatively stronger economies are in a position to finance services more directly themselves. Those which are not as well off relatively speaking have more need for federal assistance.

[Translation]

Naturally the Atlantic provinces benefit more from this kind of federal Government assistance. However the assistance is important as well to Quebec and Manitoba, and more recently to Saskatchewan.

Madam Speaker, our Government is fully aware that equalization payments are an important aspect of the financial structure of low revenue provinces.

[English]

That is why the federal Government has acted repeatedly to increase equalization payments despite its own financial difficulties. We did this two years ago when we provided $285 million in special payments outside the regular program. There was no obligation to do this. We are doing it now by renewing the equalization program. This renewal includes some adjustments being implemented over two years which will contribute to the enhanced growth of total payments. We are also doing it through the net forgiveness of amounts owed to the federal Government under equalization as a result of the 1986 census. It is worthwhile to remind the House of the net forgiveness of these amounts which was announced last week.

As the statement of the Minister of Finance indicates, the forgiveness of equalization overpayments arising from the 1986 census is not something the Government is compelled to do. These overpayments are part of the normal process of adjustments to payments, both up and down, which take place on an ongoing basis. The Government is taking this step because it wants to be helpful. It recognizes and understands the cash flow and financial difficulties faced by the provinces receiving equalization.

[Translation]

Our decision will help the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Saskatchewan, and will lighten their tax burden.

[English]

Manitoba is not affected by this provision because it does not owe the federal Government money under equalization as a result of the census. Instead, Manitoba will automatically receive a further $15 million.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this Bill also reorganizes the system designed to set minimum and maximum equalization payments, a system of lower and upper limits which was established recently but has yet to be implemented.

[English]

As Members will be aware, this Act also contains a number of other programs and provisions which together make up what is generally known as "the fiscal arrangements". These programs, that is the authority to enter into agreements with the provinces for the collection of income taxes and for the payment of each others' sales and excise taxes, the personal income tax revenue guarantee, and Established Programs Financing, will all continue essentially unchanged.

The fiscal stabilization program which provinces have said they would like to see continue will also be maintained. Some adjustments are being made to improve and clarify the program in light of difficulties which have arisen in its administration, but in administration only. Should any future stabilization payments be very large, any assistance in excess of a base amount will also take the form of an interest-free loan. In fact, the stabilization program is likely to be triggered infrequently. It provides for a federal payment to a province in the event its revenues were to decline from one year to the next because of an economic downturn. In short, the main thrust of this legislation is to review and extend existing fiscal arrangements programs and provisions.

Before concluding, it is important that I say a word about federal-provincial consultation because everything in this Bill has been discussed with the provinces. As Members will be aware, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act involves federal legislation and federal expenditures. Amendments do not require provincial consent. The Government is, however, strongly committed to open discussion and consultation with the provinces, whether or not they need provincial consent.

[Translation]

We held lengthy consultations with the provinces before introducing this Bill. These consultations began in 1985, almost two years before changes were to be made to the existing program. Therefore the provinces have had every opportunity to contribute directly to improving the program.

[English]

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, this Bill comes before the House at this time because Parliament has traditionally authorized equalization payments for five years at a time. The present equalization authority is scheduled to expire on March 31 of this year. It needs to be renewed if payments to provinces are to continue without interruption. This Bill makes clear the Government's continuing commitment to equalization. Our willingness to do as much as we can to assist the lower income provinces is made very clear in this Bill. The Bill provides large and growing support under equalization. It comes on top of other strong support we are giving to less wealthy regions of the country. It will extend and improve other federal-provincial fiscal arrangements programs and provisions. It follows a long process of consultation with the provinces.

For all those reasons, Madam Speaker, I call upon all Members of the House to give assent to this Bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, I listened carefully to the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin) as he extolled the virtues of Bill C-44. In my speech, I intend to show that his enthusiasm is out of touch with reality. In fact, if we consider both the additional transfers the provinces have received under equalization, as the Minister said, together with the cuts the same provinces have suffered under established programs financing, which includes post-secondary education, health insurance and hospital insurance which are all part of the fiscal arrangements, the provinces stand to lose nearly $400 million over 1987-88 alone. Madam Speaker, in my speech I intend to prove that the provinces will lose money.

[English]

In fact, if the additional equalization transfers which the provinces are to receive are taken together with the cuts, they will suffer in health care and post-secondary education financing and they will lose close to $400 million in the fiscal year 1987-88.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, before getting into the specifics of the Bill and the reasons why it would be very difficult for us to support the Government, I would first like to give a short overview of the history of equalization payments to the provinces.

In the middle of the fifties, subsequent to a recommendation made by the Rowell-Sirois Royal Commission of Inquiry just after the war years, the Liberal Government introduced a series of measures in an attempt to improve the balance between Canada's various regions. Following an in-depth study conducted by Maurice Lamontagne, later a Member of this House and a Member of the Government—at this point I would like to pay tribute to the work done by Mr. Lamontagne, and there was also a task force consisting of Members of this House, including one who later played an important role in Quebec politics, the Hon. Jean Lesage, who was a Member of this House and a Member of the Liberal Government headed by Mr. Louis St-Laurent—therefore, as a result of this work, the Government introduced the principle of equalization.

Equalization means enabling each province to offer the people of that province the same number and level of services. The general objective was to give Canadian citizens the same opportunities, whether they were living in Newfoundland, British Columbia, Manitoba, Alberta or Quebec. The proposal is a very liberal idea and reflects a concept of Canada the Liberal Party has always had: Canadians across this country should have access to comparable services.

Subsequently, after this measure had been in effect for several years, the Economic Council of Canada pointed out in a rather detailed study that equalization payments were not welfare in disguise. In fact, the economic value of equalization payments was important for all regions in the country and for the Canadian economy in general.

According to this principle, the federal Government took the per capita income received by the provinces from various fiscal sources and set a national average. That was the principle of the legislation that became effective on April 1, 1957 and has been maintained all these years, namely, the national average based on the income of the richest province or of a group of provinces. Some changes were made over the years because of developments in the economy and major variations in the prices of certain raw materials, so that from year to year, there were some changes involving either substantial additional payments or the reduction of some of those payments.

Therefore the basis of this legislation, the equalization payments, reflects a perception of this country that was held by the Liberal Government at the time and has been maintained over the years.

That concept of equal chances, equal opportunities for Canadians in my view is reflected in the theory that the central Government, if we are to maintain some political unity and some regional balance, must get involved with its national policies. And in the management of public affairs, because we wanted this country that is called Canada to be managed differently than that country which is called the United States, our neighbours to the south—because we wanted to be a nation of regions, a Canadian mosaic—we have devised and the successive governments inspired by the liberal view have maintained the idea that in Canada, central Government involvement was needed to maintain regional balance. And that quest for balance has led to equalization payments and national policies with respect to health, hospital care and post-secondary education.

That vision we have for this country has also led successive Liberal Governements to develop housing policies, transportation policies, financial institution policies. And I think it is worthwhile, upon entering the discussion on Bill C-44, to remind the Conservative Government that this nation was built because of national policies—as I have said before in this House—and the wilful deregulation policy constantly pursued by this Government is destroying that concept which Canadians have always had of the role of their national Government and of the role which this Parliament, the House of Commons have played in the development of Canada's social fabric and policies.

This is why I maintain, Madam Speaker, that equalization is one of the tools, one of the key elements of the vision we have developed for this country over the years. The so-called equalization payments do not only transfer moneys from the federal Treasury to the provincial Treasuries, they are much more—they express a vision of this country, a concept that was developed and accepted by Canadians over the years and that is important to them. Equalization payments are provided for under a piece of legislation that is much wider in scope—it is called the fiscal arrangements legislation and covers other areas the Minister referred to, that is post-secondary education, in fact the established programs funding program.

Madam Speaker, the way this Government has been moving for two or three years on EPF and the way it is now tampering with the equalization formula, I have no choice but to sound the alarm and tell the Minister of State (Finance), so that he may convey the message to his colleagues, that in so doing the Conservative Government no only transfers its deficits to the provinces by way of the cuts made in established programs funding, but that provinces will be losing $8 billion by 1990 because of the change that was made to equalization payments for established programs. Yes, $8 billion—$2 in Quebec, nearly $2 billion in Ontario.

Certainly this shortfall in transfer payments will force provinces either to increase their deficits, to increase their taxes or to lower the level of their services.

And knowing the importance to Canadians of post-secondary education, knowing the importance of post-secondary education—research in our universities is one of the key elements of this nation's economic development—I say to this Government that they are making a big mistake while failing to solve any problem, because the deficit that is lowered at the federal level has to be shifted to the provincial legislators and Ministers of Finance, which means to taxpayers in each and every province. And the ability of the provinces to raise taxes in order to maintain the high level of post-secondary education, their ability to raise taxes to fund their health and hospital care programs, because they vary widely from one province to the other, my view is that little by little they are destroying or still reducing to a significant degree that chance for equal opportunities that Canadians hope they will be able to maintain from sea to sea.

Madam Speaker, the amended equalization formula features major changes, and one of the things dropped from the existing legislation is the interim payments which guaranteed the growth of equalization funding in several provinces. This provision will be eliminated. It had been offset by $260 million in 1985-86, but in the long run all provinces will be losers because the Government has decided to do away with these interim payments which had been made over the first three years of the fiscal arrangement program ending March 31, 1987.

Madam Speaker, even if we were looking only at the post-secondary education financing programs, the health care and hospitalization programs, and now the equalization formula, we would be quite justified to make lengthy interventions to show the incoherence of this Government and its negligence with respect to the development of our various regions. But on top of that we must add cutbacks in the growth rate of federal Government payments to fund established programs such as health care, hospitalization and post-secondary education. Then of course we cannot ignore this Government's approach to regional development generally.

• (1150)

In fact, the Government seems to be completely out of touch with the regions of Canada. Let us take a look at the situation. The unemployment rate in Newfoundland at the height of the 1982 recession was 16.8 per cent. In January, 1987, that unemployment rate was 19.2 per cent. You can see, Madam Speaker, that it was higher in January, 1987 than it was at the height of the recession of 1982, a recession that affected the whole western world.

If we take the statistics for February, 1987, the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland at 18.4 per cent is again higher than it was in the 1982 recession. The situation is the same for Prince Edward Island, which is now suffering an unemployment rate of 14.5 per cent compared to 12.9 per cent in 1982. And what about Nova Scotia? It is the same situation. The unemployment rate was 14.6 per cent in February, 1987, while it was 13.2 per cent in 1982. What about the unemployment rate in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia? In February, 1987, the unemployment rates in those provinces were higher than they were in the 1982 recession. Canadians living in St. John's, Charlottetown, Halifax, Quebec City, Calgary and Vancouver know that Canada's regions are experiencing a recession today that is as bad as the one that we and the world faced in 1982.

The Minister told us in his Budget Speech that everything was perfect. It seemed to me that what the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) told us today was along the same lines. It is imperative that the Government address in a much more serious manner the problem facing our regions, things such as the plight of our hard-pressed farmers, fishermen, sawmill workers and those in the energy sector. We Liberals believe in equality of opportunity no matter where one might live in this great land. We believe that Canada is only as strong as its most disadvantaged region, and we believe that Canadians expect the Government to do much more.

Let me examine the disastrous record of the Government in the crucial area of regional development. Since the Conservatives took over as government, they have cut the regional development envelope by almost $3 billion, or by 20 per cent. We see the effect of that on the rate of unemployment. The Government should reverse its policies and fight for the principle of equality of opportunity in each region. This morning, Madam Speaker, we learned that in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, over 1,000 workers are going to lose their jobs, and the Government is doing nothing except cutting the regional development envelope.

I ask the Government to change its policies, not only to revise the decision made in terms of fiscal arrangements but also to revise its attitude and thinking concerning Canada's regions. It is not the Canadian way to let our regions suffer such high rates of unemployment. I think our history shows that the opposite is true and that Canadians are prepared to support the different regions.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, if we were to speak more directly to the measure under consideration, Bill C-44, we could analyze some of the more technical aspects. We have seen that the Government has decided to make some technical changes in the equalization formula. I have nothing against that, believing as I do that the law must reflect the new requirements. Still, they chose not to maintain the guaranteed interim payments in the equalization formula. You may remember that in 1982 the previous administration had altered the equalization formula to base payments on the average revenues of five provinces. The main reason for this was that natural gas and petroleum prices had soared to levels such that under the existing equalization formula the federal Government would have had to make equalization payments to Ontario, Canada's richest province. This would have been ludicrous and the Central Government was forced to amend the equalization formula to establish the base on the average for five provinces, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Ontario and British Columbia. And because of these changes, the Provincial Ministers of Finance and the Minister of Finance of Canada had a long discussion to know what would be the advantages of the new formula compared to the old one. The provinces were saying that they were going to loose some equalization payments. The Federal Government maintained the opposite. And to solve the problem, the Federal Government granted the provinces transitional guarantee payments to assure them that the equalization payments under the new formula would be as significant and would grow at the same pace as under the old one. These payments had been guaranteed for three years. Meanwhile, the Conservative Government which was now in office realized that the transitional payments had been not only significant but essential to maintain the balance in the formula but instead of making long term adjustments, gave something to most provinces one year, granted a couple of provinces a little more the following year, and then completely stopped the transitional payments. Not only they did that, but they also blamed it on the previous Government, while the very purpose of the transitional payments was to guarantee payments to the provinces under the equalization formula. The Conservative Government blamed the Liberals, but did nothing to rectify the situation and maintained the transitional payments in the same spirit in which they had been introduced early in 1981-82 when these agreements had been renegociated.

Madam Speaker, this is the Gospel truth, and I could provide figures for several provinces. The Minister of State (Finance) nods his disagreement. I am prepared to debate the matter with him to prove him wrong. The legislation obviously provided for transitional payments since there is an amendment in Bill C-44 to abolish them.

Generally speaking, Madam Speaker, transitional payments have helped most provinces. As far as Quebec is concerned, the situation as shown by the Conservative Government—and I am not refering here to Established Programs Financing but only to equalization payments—in 1984-1985, according to the Minister's own figures, as published in Le Devoir on March 13, and it is reported to be the full reply of the Canadian Minister of Finance to his Quebec counterpart, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, in 1984-1985, the last year a Liberal Government tabled a budget the province of Quebec received $3.074 billion in equalization payments. For 1986-1987, the province of Quebec will have received, including a transitional payment of $110,000, altogether $2.68 billion. Which means that in 1986-1987, compared to two years before, the province of Quebec will have lost as much as $394 million in equalization payments. When we compare fiscal year 1984-1985 to fiscal year 1987-1988, according to the figures released by the Minister of Finance, the province of Quebec will receive, three years later, $2.783 billion in equalization payments, when it received $3.074 billion in 1984-1985, a further loss of $291 million.

Madam Speaker, when I hear the Minister of State (Finance) and the Minister of Finance himself state that these payments are increasing, I wonder in relation to what.

How can it be said that payments are increasing when they dropped substantially between 1984-1985 and 1985-1986. It is as if we changed floors and started up the stairs again. We are certainly above the floor below, but we are still below the one we were on before. That is what the Conservative Government is doing for Quebec, and the same is true for most provinces receiving equalization payments.

In an attempt to correct the situation, here is what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to say:

• (1200)

[English]

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made a ministerial statement in the House on March 11, he said that because of the effect of the mid-census, the federal Government would have to recuperate from the provinces certain amounts of money that had been over-paid. He said that those over-payments would be forgiven, and that was nice. That was a positive answer. The Minister of Finance said the same thing the Liberal Government said in 1982, but with a small exception.

When I received the ministerial statement on March 11, I read it very rapidly because I had to react to it within the next hour. I noticed a sentence that said that the amount due to the federal Government as a result of the census would be forgiven to the extent that it exceeds future increases in equalization entitlements. That means that the technical changes in Bill C-44 which favour some provinces will be counterbalanced by the recuperation of the over-payment that was made because of the census. If a province was bound to receive $30 million as a result of technical improvements, it may lose that $30 million through the readjustment due to the mid-census. Finally, the federal Government will be left with probably $300 million more in its pocket. That is unbelievable.

The Government is giving with one hand and taking back immediately with the other while telling the Canadian provinces that it has been very generous, as the Minister of State for Finance said a few moments ago. I think that is unacceptable and I want to say to the Government that we have seen through its actions. It is giving with the right hand and taking back with the left. The net result is that many of the provinces will lose some of the advantages they were bound to receive under Bill C-44.

The Premier of Newfoundland issued a press release stating his opposition to this. The press release indicates that the Premier was disappointed with one aspect of the announcement whereby the federal Government will not pay to the Province of Newfoundland any future increases to equalization that might arise from revised estimates of equalization for 1985-86 and 1986-87. Any such increases that might have occurred up to the $35 million now being forgiven will now be withheld by the federal Government. That is exactly what I said. This federal Government will give with the right hand and take back with the left.

The Province of Quebec, the Province of Newfoundland and probably all the maritime provinces will lose. They were bound to receive a little more through the technical changes, but they will lose that because of the way the federal Government will readjust the figures as a result of the mid-census that changed the valuation of populations in each of the Canadian provinces.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, some parts of Bill C-44 are rather surprising. The Minister of Finance had stated on various radio and television programs over the past months that under the equalization formula payments to provinces would increase by $175 million.

[English]

In November, 1986, the Minister of Finance said that he would offer $175 million a year in enhancement, or almost $1 billion over the next five years. On television on December 17, 1986, he said that he believed that an augmentation of $175 million a year or close to $1 billion over a five-year period would be a very major increase in the program. He said that very clearly. It seems to me that Dalton Camp's strategy is obvious. Make all sorts of promises, repeat the promises but do not deliver the goods. After a while, people are inclined to believe them. If one lies long enough, people will believe the lie.

The Minister of Finance said to Canadians on two occasions that the $175 million under the technical changes will be paid to the provinces every year. After reading Bill C-44, we realize that the $175 million is to be spread out over a two-year period. The provinces will have to cover the difference with their own taxes or will have to cut services. The small Provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia as well as Quebec will have difficulty balancing their budgets because of the decision made by the Government not only on equalization payments but also on the Established Programs Financing.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I shall now return to Quebec and to the letter which was made public by the minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, and to which the minister of Finance of Canada had responded through the newspapers. I would like to read an excerpt dealing with the technical changes which were made with regard to property tax. Why is it that the Federal Government has decided to establish the tax base using the reports of a real estate brokerage firm, namely Royal Lepage, rather than the standardized assessment rolls of certain provinces such as Quebec? I wonder why they did that. Here is what the Quebec minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, has to say on the matter: "The most important technical changes, those dealing with property taxes, are for the most part arbitrary and have nothing to do with the reality of Quebec. In view of the many criticisms by Quebec about the methodology applied by your services and the data sources used, I have serious doubts about the usefulness of the consultation process which has led to such results."

Madam Speaker, in his presentation, the Minister of State for Finance spoke about consultation. It is all very well to consult and to hold meetings, but if it is only to be able to tell the House that there have been consultations when a Bill is introduced, how useful can it really be? However, if the Government used consultations to try to understand the needs of the various provinces and propose solutions based on real facts, that would be another matter. Usually, the Quebec Minister of Finance is a man who thinks before he speaks. Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque is not a man to cry wolf. He has a long parliamentary experience and that is not his style. His predecessor used to make flamboyant statements. However, Mr. Lévesque seldom speaks only to create a sensation, and since he says that he has serious doubts about the usefulness of the consultation process, I must also wonder why the Minister of State for Finance felt it proper to suggest that Bill C-44 was the result of a provincial consensus when such is not the case.

Madam Speaker, I have a few more points to make before concluding. When the Budget was brought down on February 18, the Minister of Finance refused to table revenue projections for the next few years. He said that he could not do so because of the impact of the tax reform. He seemed to be saying that, since there might be a tax reform, he could not make any projections. As for me, I believe that his reasons were quite different. He did not want to show the impact of the tax increases brought about by his 1985, 1986 and 1987 Budgets, and the impact of these tax increases on Canadians would have been plain as a pilsestaff. However, if we accept the explanations of the Minister about why he cannot give revenue projections to the Members of this House who have to make decisions on the financial administration of this country, how can the Government then propose that Bill C-44 apply for a five-year period, since equalization payments are based on the tax performance in the provinces, which is equalized to the average of five provinces, and since we all know or presume that the tax reform will mean major changes to the tax base? For this reason, when we reach the clause by clause stage, we shall be proposing amendments to limit the period of application of this Bill, at least as concerns the equalization payments, and set a limit of perhaps of one or two years so that the House can review the impact of the tax reform on the Bill.

What will be the objectives of the tax reform according to what the Minister of Finance said in 1986? In a statement to the press, the Minister of Finance stated that the Canadian tax reform would follow the American model, the purpose being to extend the base, lower the rates and transfer some of the burden from personal income tax to corporate taxes, or, in other words, to bring us back to the situation before 1984, when the Government transferred a very heavy burden to individual taxpayers. However, this change will have a definite impact throughout Canada, but not to the same extent everywhere. As a consequence, there could be changes, even deep changes it seems to me, in the equalization payments especially to provinces with the weakest industrial and corporate base. Since the Government is seeking to get a larger part of its tax revenue from corporations, it is clear that the less industrialized provinces, the ones with less corporate profits to tax, will be affected. The Minister of State for Finance and the Minister of Finance should limit the impact of the Bill on equalization payments, maybe until 1990, in order to give the House enough time to study the situation further.

I also mentioned earlier the technical changes which are to be implemented over a two year period. Madam Speaker, I can inform right away the Minister of State for Finance that we intend to propose, during the clause by clause study of the Bill, an amendment which would ensure that the commitment the Minister of Finance made on national television on December 17, 1986, and also to the Globe and Mail on November 1st, 1986, is indeed fulfilled. The Minister committed himself in front of Canadians and this should be reflected in the Bill. We will move an amendment to clause 3 to have the $175 million paid immediately, instead of being spread over two years, especially given the fact that, due to the way it used the 1986 census, the federal Government will have a net gain. It would be appropriate that it be passed on to the provinces.

Madam Speaker, this Bill will—it is obviously our role to point out its shortcomings, and I must say that my party, when in government, encouraged this approach in Canada. Studies made by the Canada Economic Council showed that those payments served a useful purpose in the Canadian economy. Therefore, we are not only very favourable but we will fight hard against any attempt by the Conservatives to eliminate equalization payments. However, even though we are committed to and agree on this formula, we do not agree with the Bill as introduced because it does not meet the commitments made by the Minister in November and December 1986 as regards additional payments of $175 millions; because in this legislation, all readjustments that are the result of the new census will only benefit the Government of Canada; because under the proposed payment formula, they give with one hand and take back with the other. Therefore, the Official Opposition, as it disagrees with those aspects of the legislation, will vote against it for all these reasons, and if the Government agrees to our amendments in committee, we will be pleased to support it at third reading.

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member twice used the word "lie". He said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had lied. My understanding is that that is unparliamentary language. If he did indeed say that, I would ask that you rule on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, if I had expressed myself in my mother tongue, perhaps I would have used more parliamentary words, and I think he will admit that I must have been carried away when I said that. I wish to withdraw those words respecfully, even though that it what it looked like when reading newspaper clippings and the transcript of what the Minister said on television.

[English]

Mr. Attewell: Madam Speaker, to clarify the situation, if the word was used, and I believe it was, it was said in English.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I believe the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has said to the House that if he had inadvertently used the word, he did apologize for it and that it went over and above what his real thoughts were. I think we should leave it at that.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, it is with both pleasure and regret that I speak at this time. It is a pleasure because I feel very strongly about the matter of equalization payments. It is not only important to my own Province of Manitoba but very important to the majority of provinces across the country.

This matter is dealt with in our Constitution. Section 36(2) calls upon the Government of Canada to ensure that provincial Governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of service at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. We recognize in our Constitution the importance of equalization payments. Unfortunately, we are in a situation where, whether it be that Government or the Government which preceded it, those equalization payments have been treated as a financial shell game. Every time there is a change in the formula, the provinces say they are getting less money than they would have under the previous formula. The federal Government says no, that is not true. A cut-back is not a cut-back. We are giving you more money than you are getting this year and that is all you should be concerned about. You should not be concerned about the fact there were formulas and agreements between the federal and provincial Governments which would have given you more money had they been allowed to continue. Instead, whether it was the Liberal Minister of Finance, Allan MacEachen, or the current Minister of Finance, formulas have been changed. The net result each time has been that provincial Governments are not getting as much money as they would have, had those changes not taken place.

I am not saying that the old federal-provincial agreements were perfect, because they obviously had problems. However, neither the previous Liberal Government nor the present Conservative Government have been able to agree with the provinces about how Established Programs Financing and equalization will be treated. It is regrettable that they have not been able to come to grips with this very important matter. One of the reasons that Newfoundland and other provinces came together so long ago was the understanding that all Canadians would be provided the very basic services they required. Yet that is not happening.

Let me give an example of the problems in education, a matter about which I am very concerned as a teacher. I will use figures from 1983 to show the impact of the present arrangements. Newfoundland school boards spent $2,867 per year per student. That represented 7.2 per cent of the provincial Gross Domestic Product. That is a very high percentage, but not much money. The situation in Manitoba was somewhat better. It spent $3,742 per student, almost 30 per cent more than the Province of Newfoundland. Furthermore, it was only costing the Province of Manitoba 4.8 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product. Ontario could spend even more, and yet the percentage of its Gross Domestic Product was less.

The point is that the poorer provinces of this country were spending less per student for primary and early secondary education, yet the amount represented a much higher percentage of the total money available in those provinces. The situation has not improved since 1983, and if the formula before us now passes the same disparity will not only continue but, according to the Premier of Newfoundland, will actually increase. It is unfortunate because we have not come to grips with the situation in the last ten years.

In the early 1980s a parliamentary task force with representatives from all three Parties travelled across the country to consult the provinces and groups concerned about education, health care services and the level of those services in every province of the country. The committee returned and presented an excellent report to the House of Commons, but the Government of the day basically ignored those recommendations. In 1982, the Government came down with the five-province formula and created the problems we are facing now. Since then the situation has become worse instead of better.

The November 1985 Budget proposed a change in the formula for Established Programs Financing, the money that is used for medicare and post-secondary education. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated in that Budget that he expected to change the formula in such a way that he would save $2 billion a year until 1990, which meant that large amounts of money would not be going to medicare and post-secondary education. Although he said this measure would be phased in, the budget papers that were tabled at that time made no mention of any change for the fiscal year 1986-87. Therefore, while the provinces, the universities, doctors and nurses were upset that this money would be lost in the future, they had no reason to believe that it would happen in 1986 and 1987. They thought they had time to convince the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and the Secretary of State (Mr. Crombie) to persuade the Government that a $2 billion per year cut by the year 1990—$6.9 billion over a five-year period—was insane. That was not to be.

Late one evening, toward the end of the Finance Ministers' summer meeting in which they talked about a number of concerns, the Minister of Finance commented that in 1986 and 1987 the provinces would not receive the $400 million they had anticipated.

He said that the money for post-secondary education and health care services provided for by the law would be taken away. This represented another kick from the Minister of Finance when the provinces' ability to provide services as a result of the November Budget was already diminished. The Minister took that money sooner than he should have been allowed had the current provisions been allowed to expire on March 31, 1987.

When that legislation was brought before the House of Commons we were told not to be concerned. The Government indicated that it would remove $2 billion from Established Programs Financing by the fiscal year 1990-91, starting with $400 million and escalating it on an ongoing basis. We were told told not to be concerned that the old formula was changing because the provinces would still receive a little more money each year, which would cover the cost of inflation. However, the federal Government ignored the fact that the cost of hospitalization, medicare services, and the cost of education was increasing at a greater rate than inflation. That increase is understandable because more services can be provided now than was the case ten years ago. Furthermore, we have an aging population that needs, wants, and deserves proper medical services. Therefore, as a result of an aging population and new technology and new drugs, medical costs were increasing at approximately 9 per cent or 10 per cent. Obviously, the change in the Established Programs Financing made it harder for the provinces to provide adequate medicare services.

It is somewhat ironic that a New Democrat would quote the Canadian Medical Association, but it predicted to the committee of the House studying this legislation that if the cut-back in the funding formula on Established Programs Financing was allowed, a two-tier medical service in this country would result. The richer provinces would provide one service while the less wealthy provinces would provide a lesser service. The Canadian Medical Association recognized what would happen.

The Government has given us many assurances, including an assurance by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who spoke in St. John's and explained that there are no problems. He said the difficulties would be resolved once the Government has had discussions with the provinces about equalization. I refer the House to comments made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that appear in The Evening Telegram on Tuesday, June 17, 1986. I will not quote the Minister but he said, in effect: "Do not worry, we will look after it". June 17, 1986, was less than a year ago. So the provinces do not like the legislation being passed by the House of Commons. They feel betrayed by the federal Government and they have a right to feel betrayed.

When the Conservatives were in opposition and when the Hon. Allan MacEachen brought down his Budgets and his legislation on this very matter, the present Ministers of Finance, National Health and Welfare, Communications and other Ministers, each rose in this House and said how terrible it was what the Government was doing to the provinces. They said what it was doing was creating a cut-back in very essential services. They said: "We would not do that". But lo and behold, 1984 comes and goes, Members switch sides of the House, we have new Ministers, and the Ministers I just mentioned are now the ones responsible for instituting a further set of cuts. They do not call them "cuts" any longer, it is a gradual increase, but it is not the increase which should have taken place.

After June of 1986, the provinces took the word of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and had every reason to believe there was going to be an equalization formula put in place which would help the poorer provinces to be compensated for the fact they were not receiving as much money for EPF as they would have, had the Established Programs Financing legislation been allowed to continue under the old formula. But what happened is yet another round of meetings with Ministers of Finance and other Ministers from the provincial Governments and the federal Government getting getting together and not being able to agree on what was happening. It is ironic that we in this House got into a great debate, and we almost came to it again today, about what the federal Minister of Finance promised to the provincial Governments.

I quote again what the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said in this House, that the Minister of Finance on the CBC National on December 17, 1986, said he believes that an augmentation of $175 million in a year, close to $5 million in a five-year period, is a very major increase in that program. He said they were not able to get a consensus so they will go back to the drawing-boards and look at some proposals, but the parameters are still there. He said the provinces would be getting $175 million additionally in a one-year period. The provinces did not think that was enough. After losing $400 million in one year as a result of changes to the EPF legislation, $175 million more in equalization did not look that good, so we had the provincial Ministers of Finance, after consulting with provincial Ministers of Health and other provincial Ministers concerned, coming back to our federal Minister of Finance and saying it is not enough, and the federal Minister of Finance, in his statement on CBC obviously was referring to that. What happens then? Our federal Conservative Minister of Finance comes back, talks to his cabinet buddies, and then goes back to the provinces and tells them it is not $175 million in one year, it is $175 million over two years.

As you know, Madam Speaker, we came into the House of Commons brandishing the words of the Minister of Finance. He said he did not lie and we have to take his word for that. We can quote his words from the CBC. We can show that the amount was reduced. He says he did not promise it and we will take his word, but how would you feel, Madam Speaker, if you were negotiating for someone and were told there was $175 million on the table and at the next meeting, after doing your homework and looking for ways to improve the situation, you were told it is not over one year, it is over two years? It is called bargaining in bad faith. Provincial Ministers right across this land should be almost afraid to meet with our federal Minister of Finance because each and every time they meet, there is some kind of shell game perpetrated on the provinces. First, they are not losing the EPF money in 1986-87. Then they are. Then we are told equalization is going to make up for any cut-backs in EPF. Then the offer of $175 million a year is obviously not enough to make up for the money which is going to be lost through EPF in one year alone. The $5 billion the Minister of Finance promised over five years will not make up for the $6.8 billion which was going to be taken away from the provinces as a result of changes in the EPF legislation. Then we find out that the $175 million does not even exist as an offer from the federal Government. It is no wonder we are no better off now in terms of federal-provincial relations than we were in the early 1980s.

It is ironic that Conservative Ministers from Nova Scotia, and Conservative Ministers and a Conservative Premier from Newfoundland, are tackling the federal Government and screaming on an almost daily basis. It is not surprising that from time to time even the Premier of Alberta expresses some sort of exasperation, and "exasperation" is probably too polite a word but I do not want to use anything unparliamentary.

The truth is that provincial Ministers really do not believe they are being listened to. Provincial Premiers feel it is frustrating to come to Ottawa. I am almost tempted to use a quote from Manitoba, but I suspect some people would say that is just the New Democratic Government in Manitoba and it is partisan. Being in Ontario right now, perhaps I should use a quote from the Liberal Government of this province, but someone would say that that is just being partisan also. I cannot use a Prince Edward Island quote because there is a Liberal Government there. A few more years of Tory rule in Ottawa and we are going to have a whole lot of New Democratic Governments across this country.

Some Hon. Members: Don't hold your breath.

Mr. Murphy: I will quote one of the friends of the people heckling on the other side of the Chamber. Premier Peckford said:

> When you talk about a new era of federal-provincial relations, that meant not only consultation, it was meant that some of the legitimate, rational things that were being put forward could be accepted by this government and they have not been to date.

The Premier said:

> —if Ottawa was going to make a meaningful contribution to the long-term stability of Newfoundland, equalization payments and established program funding would have to be based on need and ability to pay rather than rough population figures.

He went on to express his concern in much more vibrant language. He said: "We are being squeezed all the way to Sunday". He expressed concern that the situation in his province is such that it reflects the years of the 1930s. He said his province could not possibly maintain its level of services with the proposals coming back from the federal Minister of Finance.

It is a frustration which started on the East Coast but it is a frustration now being expressed in each and every part of this country. It is ironic, as the previous speaker said, that we have had the drastic changes to the Established Programs Financing. We are now in the process of changing the equalization formula for the next five years and we are doing so a month and two days after the federal Budget. We were told in that Budget we were going to have major tax reform and that the whole system of tax reform is going to be so fair and so important that it will drastically alter the way things are done in this country. If that is true, if the Government really believes that, if that is its real political agenda for fairness, then why did it rush through Parliament last year changes to the Established Program Financing? Why did members of the Government rush changes through in such a manner that when I suggested that representations of the national nurses' association should appear before the committee, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), said: "What do nurses know about this? Why do we have to bring them here?" The Hon. Member did not want a great many witnesses to appear. We brought them anyway, and they certainly knew something about health care services. They certainly knew something about the need to have proper financing. Again, it is interesting that the nurses and doctors agreed to hear them speak, but that Conservative Members did not.

We are now considering Bill C-44. Yesterday morning I received a telephone call from the Minister of Finance and I do not think I am telling any state secrets. He said: "We have this legislation which is in front of us. Can we get through it in one day? I really have to have this legislation. I cannot write cheques to the provinces unless we pass this legislation quickly. How about dealing with all stages and all witnesses, hopefully before the end of March?" This is an important piece of legislation. If the federal Government thinks it is an important piece of legislation it should not be playing the same games as were played by the previous Government. It has brought in legislation for the first day of debate on March 19 and has said that we have to get through it quickly. A legislative committee must study this matter. The provinces must come forward to explain how they feel about it.

We need to have other legitimate representatives of the population and groups from each province who are concerned about what equalization does for their province come forward. Obviously, the school boards and hospitals will be concerned. Obviously, those people who work for the federal and provincial Governments will be concerned.

There are those who have a strong feeling that we should have an adequate level of services, services that guarantee people in St. John's, Saint John, Moncton, Halifax, Charlottetown, Quebec City, Sherbrooke, and other centres right across the country the right to some guaranteed equal level of services. They should have the right to appear before the committee. It should not be done as it has been done in the past when five or six witnesses appear back-to-back. In the case of the patent drug legislation, witnesses were allowed to come in, speak for 40 minutes, and were then shoved out the revolving door as new witnesses came in.

Equalization legislation, legislation which the Government feels cannot be in place for just one year, legislation which the Government believes must be in place for the next five years, despite the fact it said it will bring in drastic tax reform in that period, is not something that should be rushed through. It is not something that affects a small community somewhere as a local by-law would. It is a major piece of legislation. I heard the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) a few minutes ago agree that it is major legislation. If it is, then why are we in such a rush? We certainly do not want to hold those cheques back from the provinces. But members of the Government should not try to blame the Opposition. They should not try to suggest to us that we are responsible for delaying necessary cheques from going to the provinces if we say that we want to have a thorough discussion of this matter and if we say that there must be adequate time for witnesses to come forward. As my Liberal colleague mentioned earlier, there must be a chance for us to try to prevent this legislation from being put in place for five years when, obviously, tax reform is on its way within the next year. Obviously, then, this legislation should be in place for but one year.

What the federal Government should be saying at this time also is that the EPF legislation, legislation which provides money for medicare, hospitalization and post-secondary education, should be amended so that it is only in place for one year instead being in place for the unforeseeable future.

I do not want to prevent other people from speaking. I know there is a concern that we allow Members representing Quebec and the prairie provinces time to speak. I know that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), now that he is representing a have-not province, for the first time in history—

Mr. Nystrom: No, the second time.

Mr. Murphy: Pardon me. I understand that it is not completely new, but it is startling to see Saskatchewan on this particular list. There are people who wish to explain the concerns of their provinces and their regions. It is important that they have the opportunity to do that in this debate.

We have no intention of keeping this matter in the House at second reading stage for a long time. However, we do insist on the right to have speakers from the various regions speak. After that has taken place, it will be important for the Government to ensure that Members on the legislative committee do not try to gag it. It is important that those Members do not try to limit the number of witnesses. It is important that those Members allow recognized groups to come here and talk about how this legislation can affect them. It is important legislation. There is nothing more important to our Canadian unity than to have a sense that each one of us will be treated fairly regardless of whether we come from Newfoundland, P.E.I., Quebec, Manitoba, B.C., or any other province. Right now that is not the case. I have quoted Premier Peckford. I could have quoted any number of provincial Premiers or Ministers. They do not feel that they are being treated fairly by the Government. They certainly have reasons for feeling that way. That is important.

What is more important is that we recognize the duty of Parliament to do all that we can to ensure that children growing up in all parts of this land have an adequate educational system, a system which is comparable right across the land. We also have to ensure that the provinces can produce and maintain adequate medical services. We also have to ensure that seniors feel that their provinces can maintain them in a decent way of life. We have to do so in such a way as not to bankrupt the poorer provinces. And we have to do it in such a way as not to bankrupt the taxpayers of the poorer provinces. That is what equalization is all about.

To get back to where I started in this speech, this is why, when we changed the Constitution with all-Party consent, and which was supported by nine, unfortunately not ten, of the provinces, we insisted there be a clause recognizing the role of equalization. It is important that we pass a law, not just recognizing equalization in principle and throwing a few more dollars into the pot, but that we actually put a system in place which will lead up to the meaning, the thoughts and beliefs behind that clause in our Constitution. It is easy to pass constitutional amendments. It is easy to put any words in place in the House of Commons. But it is much more important to provide the adequate means, the adequate financing, to make it happen.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak on the Bill that is before us and to support it. I had the opportunity to address this matter last year in the House of Commons. So my thoughts are already on the record regarding the supplementary equalization payments that came forward last year. I am certain you will recall what I said at that time. However, I will refresh your memory. As a Member of Parliament I am truly a member of a national Government. I must first and foremost concern myself with the well-being of my constituents and ensure that they are being treated fairly in the national sense. For example, if there is an increase in federal spending in one area of the country, there should be a proportionate increase in spending in the other areas.

However, Canada is a very diverse country and some areas are doing much better than others. This is not a problem which happened to occur in 1984 when we took over the Government of Canada. It has been with us historically since we became a country. The Government is indeed trying to address the disproportionate share of wealth which exists in the country today.

The equalization formula is designed to take into account a number of factors which reflect a province's ability to provide an adequate level of services for the people who live there. It is commonly agreed that the equalization program is a cornerstone of our Canadian federalism and is not a program like any other. The Government recognizes that, and that is why we have increased payments this year. The Government gave my own province, Manitoba, $115 million extra in the last two years to ensure that it was financially able to provide the services needed. I might point out that the Government was not legally obligated to provide these increases but felt that it should in fairness. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that your own Province of Quebec received a sizeable supplementary payment as well. I would like to reiterate that Manitoba was treated fairly.

I would now like to comment on the net forgiveness of an over-payment which occurred in the past years because of the census estimation being incorrect. The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said in his remarks that because of the net forgiveness clause in this Bill the provinces would not qualify for the technical changes. I hope the Hon. Member was not trying to mislead the House. However, he may have misunderstood the Bill, because that is not the case. The over-payment forgiveness relates to the last two years and does not affect future years in which the technical changes will take place. It is in fact included in the $5.6 billion which the provinces will receive in the coming year and the $5.9 billion estimated for the next year. I want to make that very clear to the House. I hope that the Hon. Member realizes that he may have misunderstood the Bill and was not trying to mislead the House on that point.

I believe that net forgiveness is a fair approach. The question of why they were not receiving complete forgiveness has been raised. The former Government created an accumulated deficit which restricts the ability of the Government to expand further equalization payments to the provinces. I would like to remind the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and the House that in the 1985 Budget it was stated that over the past three years the national debt grew 75 per cent and that in the same period the economy grew only 25 per cent. The present Government has taken a different approach to try to put a cap on the deficit and reduce it.

With regard to the statement of the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides that the Minister of Finance is the king of deficits, I want to remind him that it was the previous Liberal Government which accumulated the $200 billion deficit which now faces the provinces. Eighty cents of every dollar which we collect in personal income taxes goes to pay the interest on the debt. That is why the Government does not have the funds it would like to have in order to give the provinces more equalization payments.

I would like to remind the Hon. Members for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) and Laval-des-Rapides that the payments are increasing. The increase of $300 million is in addition to the net forgiveness accorded to the provinces. My own province is getting $15 million in additional moneys based on the rule that provinces benefit by estimations. All Governments have to estimate their budgets. When a census is taken, the estimations are corrected. The Opposition bases its claim of lack of increases on estimates which were found to be incorrect because the population did not grow as quickly as we thought it would. The Opposition is trying to use old estimates to support the claim that there are cuts when, in fact, there are increases. This year equalization payments will increase from $5.3 billion to $5.6 billion and to $5.9 billion in the following year.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides commented that the provinces will be losing $400 million in the major federal transfers. That is completely incorrect. I refer you to a table which was in the equalization document which indicates that of the total major federal transfers in 1986-87, EPF and Canada Assistance Plan will total $25,887 million. That will increase to $27,328 million, a total increase of $1.44 billion between 1986-87 and 1987-88. That is a definite increase of around 5 percentage points. There are additional federal transfers which are not included in those figures which will represent another $2.5 billion.

I want to put that on the record to ensure that the House is not left with the understanding that these payments are decreasing, because they are increasing considerably. We would naturally like to have these payments increased further if possible, but we must recognize the responsibilities of a federal Government. I hope the provincial Governments will recognize their responsibilities as well, because there is only one taxpayer. As the former Member of the House from Calgary, John Kushner, once said, there is only one taxpayer, you and me.

However, Governments do not have money. They raise their revenues from taxpayers. I believe the provinces should recognize their responsibilities. I hope I will have the opportunity to continue this debate after the luncheon adjournment.

S. O. 21

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to advise the Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) that he will have an additional 10 minutes for debate when the House resumes Government Orders, which will be followed by a 10-minute period for questions and comments.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons why Canadians have lost confidence in the Government is the inability of the Conservatives to keep the promises they made to the Canadian people.

Recently, the Canadian government staged a refugee immigration crisis and it tried to manipulate public opinion to make their situation even worse.

Immigrant refugees were used by the Conservatives for political reasons, like the debate on capital punishment. This kind of tactic is as irresponsible as their campaign promises.

The conservatives promised to give us a fair and equitable immigration policy, to introduce training programs to make immigration offices outside the country better informed, to help immigrants acquire a thorough knowledge of one of the official languages and to make Canadians more aware of our cultural mosaic.

Mr. Speaker, these actions and promises are an insult to the intelligence of Canadians, and I regret the Government having taken this position.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—FATE OF JEWISH CITIZENS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Mrs. Ida Milgrom, the 78 year old mother of Anatoly Shcharansky, visited Ottawa to urge politicians to increase the pressure on the U.S.S.R. to let people leave that country. Mrs. Milgrom scoffed at Gorbachev's new policy of openness, or glasnost in Russian, because thousands of Jews have been waiting years to obtain their exit visas.

She asked for our specific help to free Ida Nudel, a long-time refusnik whose health is failing due to years of frustration and persecution.

Mrs. Milgrom also highlighted the struggle of refusniks Lev and Inna Elbert who have been waiting 11 years for exit visas and who finally, out of despair and frustration, began a hunger strike on March 5.

Today we welcome over 100 Jewish students from across Canada from Network Canada and their President, Michael Zeldman. They are in the nation's capital to visit over 40 Members of Parliament to stress the desperate plight of thousands of refusniks and prisoners of conscience in the U.S.S.R.

Regrettably, at this point in time glasnost remains a misleading, deceitful word, totally empty of substance and commitment.

YOUTH

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, Canadian youth still await the Government's youth program, but they have not had to wait for New Democrats whose youth task force recommendations, formulated largely by youth, became our policy last weekend.

The Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) consumes himself in defensiveness over the not so Hot 100. He is now joined by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg). This is the handbook which claims to list 100 programs, services, and resources financed by the feds for youth.

All the hot and angry letters to me from the Minister or statements in the House will not change the fact that too many of the programs listed in the booklet, in an effort to make the Government look good, are neither financed by the feds nor designed specifically for youth.

The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni was right about one thing—New Democrats support Canadian culture to which honesty, especially for youth, is fundamental.

The Government promised a youth policy, and promised and promised and promised, and a broken promise is a form of dishonesty. If the Government wants something really hot, we have something to warm even a hard Tory heart—the New Democratic Party youth policy.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD

PUBLIC'S PERCEPTION OF BOARD'S DECISIONS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, less than a month ago Canadians were shocked to learn that a man convicted of two rape-murders and an attempted rape-murder had been released on an unescorted day pass by the National Parole Board.

Last week we were shocked even more to learn that the police were placing bodyguards around a judge, a crown attorney, and the witnesses to an attempted murder, because the National Parole Board had released the man convicted of that crime after he served only a third of his sentence.

Worse yet, the Chairman of the National Parole Board admitted last week that his board does not have any clear criteria to use when granting a parole. No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians see the National Parole Board's decisions as arbitrary, inconsistent, and often downright reckless. No wonder the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Ontario admit that Canadians have lost confidence in the justice system. The parole system must be changed, and it must be changed now.

EARLY RETIREES' RIGHT TO BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, 35,000 early retirees in Canada, including 13,000 in Quebec, won another victory yesterday. After waiting for a year and two months, the government has finally decided to admit these people were right. However, there is some thing I think the government should know. I spoke to the people in charge of ARSAC in Quebec, Mr. Cloutier and Mrs. Jeanne Lalanne. Monday there will be a meeting in Montreal and Thursday one in Quebec City, and the people of ARSAC, our early retirees, will persevere until they have their unemployment insurance benefits cheque in their pocket.

Furthermore, we are going to decide whether we will continue this action to prevent future Government discrimination again retirees so there will not be two classes of workers in Canada.

S. O. 21

EARLY RETIREES' RIGHT TO BENEFITS

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has just acknowledged that the early retirees of 1985 had a legitimate grievance. I am proud of this decision, all the more so because from day one I have been speaking on behalf of the Abitibi early retirees. In a press release dated May 20, 1986, I stated:

> Given the commitments made by their employers and the recommendations of the federal Government, justice will prevail for the Abitibi early retirees of 1985. Those who opted for retirement have since had their benefits reduced or cut off.
> Since the state has chosen not to honour its contract with them, they can appeal this decision.

Mr. Speaker, I was elected to defend the interests of the people, and this is not the first time I fight for the well-being of elderly people in Abitibi. I appreciate the commendable job done by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Like an excellent CEGEP teacher, he has corrected the Government's essay.

FORESTRY

JOBS NEEDED BY FORESTRY GRADUATES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on March 10 the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) said:

> I'm particularly aware of our country's need for well educated foresters who will contribute invaluably to the continued prosperity of our number one industry.

If the Minister truly wants to see more professional foresters in Canada, he should act now to provide jobs for those foresters who are already trained.

A study of recent forestry graduates from UBC shows how Canada wastes the training and talents of these young people. Of 290 graduates between 1983 and 1986, only 141, or 48.6 per cent, have been able to find jobs as forestry professionals. Twenty-one per cent are still unemployed.

Three years ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to create a separate Department of Forestry. He has not kept that promise. Both our forests and our foresters suffer from this failure to keep his word.

IMMIGRATION

VOLUNTEER GROUP'S EFFORTS TO SECURE DEPORTATION OF LANDED IMMIGRANTS CONVICTED OF CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to draw attention to an issue of great importance to all Canadians. There is a group of concerned citizens in British Columbia who, under the leadership and motivation of Mrs. Christine Mellin, are giving tirelessly of their time and energy to ensure that the safety of all Canadians is maintained. Their cause is the immediate deportation of individuals who have landed immigrant status in Canada and who have been convicted of criminal activities.

I am proud of these people's selfless efforts on behalf of all Canadians and I would like to reassure them that we, as a Government, recognize the serious nature of this issue. Given the excellent work of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) in protecting the rights of Canadians through recent changes to immigration policies, I am sure that he will give serious attention to the concerns of those I am representing here today. Evidence of their commitment is demonstrated by the more than 4,000 signatures on this petition that I hold in my hand.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, Canada's agricultural crisis grows worse every day. The total farm debt in Canada in 1985 amounted to $21.6 billion. One year later, at the end of 1986, it had climbed to $22.5 billion and is still rising. In Ontario, Canada's most prosperous province, my province, the farm debt stands at $5.2 billion, Mr. Speaker. It is interesting to note that farmers owe ever more to the Farm Credit Corporation and that 22.2 per cent of payments are late. Mr. Speaker, I might point out that in 1982, the worst recession year, 410 farm bankruptcies were recorded in Canada. In 1986, with a Conservative Government which claims to have done so much for the agricultural community, the number of farm bankruptcies went up to 440. The situation is intolerable and I insist that the Conservative Government come to the assistance of Canadian agricultural producers.

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN BANK RATE—CREDIT CARD COMPANIES' HIGH INTEREST CHARGES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the bank rate has plunged again. It has just been announced that it has dropped to a rate of 7.14 per cent. That is one reason the press can say that foreign investors just love Canada. It is a good place to do business again.

We must also be aware that the spread between the bank rate and the prime rate is now wider than it was last week. The challenge to the banks and lending institutions is to bring that prime rate down so it can benefit business people and consumers still more, and particularly credit card users.

The credit card rate is the same as it was when the prime rate was over 20 points. One must ask if the bank rate has to come down to nothing before credit card consumers will benefit.

IMMIGRATION

SITUATION OF CHILEANS IN BUENOS AIRES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the 85 Chileans barred from Canada by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) are trapped in Buenos Aires. They cannot come to Canada and dare not return to Chile. They report recognizing Chilean secret police menacing them on the streets of Buenos Aires. After exhausting their money and the church aid available, they have slept in a park for two nights and live on the streets. They are drinking the non-potable water available there but are lacking money for food. Some of these people are children under the age of two.

The Canadian chârgé d'affaires is quoted by The Globe and Mail as saying: "If they've been sleeping in the streets, it's because they've chosen to do so". What a disgrace to Canada's foreign service. She sounds like a direct descendant of Marie "Let-Them-Eat-Cake" Antoinette. Ms. Herrera of the UNHCR sounds more realistic. She has said: "You only have to talk to them to know they are destroyed, that they are afraid to return". What is the Minister's problem with Chileans? Is none too many?

ACID RAIN

UNITED STATES COMMITMENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada and especially the Prime Minister have finally been successful in their efforts to convince the United States to join in the fight against acid rain. Yesterday, in Washington, the American President announced that his country would spend $5 billion to fight acid rain.

Mr. Speaker, over the past year our Government has often severely blamed the United States for their inaction in this matter and the announcement made yesterday in Washington is definitely a major step in the right direction. I feel it is important to remind the House that the commitment made yesterday by the American President is fully consistent with the main recommendation in the Lewis-Davis report made public in January 1986.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians can rest assured that the Prime Minister of Canada will strongly protect their interests in this matter to provide them with the quality of life they rightfully deserve.

TARIFFS

EFFECT OF LUMBER EXPORT TAX ON NORTHERN ONTARIO SAWMILL

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of the House and most particularly the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) a further effect of her so-called softwood lumber deal with the United States. Mr. Jack Lavallet, President of Kimberly-Clark Canada Limited, announced on Tuesday that the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber has had a negative impact on sawmill profitability. Consequently, his company has announced a shut-down of the Longlac sawmill in northern Ontario effective May 15 this year. This will result in a total loss of over 100 jobs. It is further proof of how the Government bungled the entire softwood lumber issue with the United States administration.

The Government was tested and it has been found wanting, and tragically so. I call upon the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) immediately to take what steps they can to repair the damage done by their colleague, the Minister for International Trade.

• (1415)

IMPORTANCE OF TRADE TO ECONOMY OF NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it was interesting to hear yesterday the comments of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) about the forestry sector of northern Ontario, especially after his Party spoke out against the Government's trade initiatives. That really showed how misinformed his Party is about the North. The facts are that seven out of 10 jobs in northern Ontario depend directly on trade. Some 200,000 people are employed in the mining sector and over 70,000 in the forestry sector. Canadian exports last year included over $19 billion worth of metals and $16 billion worth of wood and paper.

On average each $1 billion in exports leads to the creation of 15,000 jobs. A trade agreement with the U.S. will provide even more employment opportunities which are so important to our economy. The Conservative Government will meet the challenge of trade negotiations with the U.S. and further the vision of Canada. The Conservative Party has always been the Party of vision. It is our heritage and our obligation. Sir John A. Macdonald moulded it and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) of today will enhance it.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

HOUSING CONDITIONS ON RESERVES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak about something which affects not only my riding but those right across the country, that is, the condition of native housing. For many years native people, especially treaty Indians, have suffered from a deplorable housing situation. We have not had for a number of years any special effort by any Government at the federal level to come to grips with the problem. This year's Budget and Estimates do not provide money to help solve the problem.

I find it deplorable to walk into native housing in this country and find holes in floors, broken-down ceilings, and doors that do not close. It is deplorable that the Government is not coming to grips with the problem. I call upon the Government to develop a national strategy for native housing and announce it soon. There should be a five or six-year program to make sure we get rid of the backlog. There is no way native students will receive adequate education or live in a healthy environment unless the Government commits itself to such a program.

HUMAN RIGHTS

YUGOSLAVIA—PLIGHT OF DOBROSLAV PARAGA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, Dobroslav Paraga is a young Yugoslavian who protested the human rights problem in that country. For that protest he was arrested and jailed for five years. When released he protested the torture inflicted on him by the state. As a result of that protest he was again arrested and prosecuted. It was only because of the excellent lawyer he had and because of ill health that the prosecution was temporarily stayed. I call on the Government of Yugoslavia to respect human rights as all Governments should respect human rights.

AUTOMOBILES—USE OF REAR SEAT THREE POINT SAFETY BELTS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, again today I want to put on the record a letter I received from Dr. Acker, President of the Medical Society of Nova Scotia. The letter deals with the need for three point safety belts for rear seat passengers. The letter reads:

> Congratulations and thank you for your comments to the House February 11, 1987 concerning the need for increased safety measures for rear seat passengers. Your observations about the added safety provided by three point safety belts are quite correct.
> The Medical Society raised this question a year ago. We pointed to the concern, noted that a mere handful of imported cars use the three point harness and reminded government of its commitment to car safety. Regrettably, no action has been taken by any government in Canada.
> We have come a long way in vehicle safety, and we urge government to take the next logical step. We already require seat belts in our cars, let's require that those seat belts be the most effective.
> Again, thanks for bringing this important matter before the House. Hoping your remarks will lead to action—

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It is becoming evident that the Government's acid rain strategy has failed so miserably—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: —that even getting President Reagan to live up to a year-old commitment is considered by the Prime Minister to be a very significant movement. We are now locked in a five-year research and demonstration program which will not benefit our dying lakes, forests, and eco-systems because there is no commitment to cut acid rain entering Canada. As Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain put it, "clean coal technology isn't the solution to the problem . . . Emission reduction is the key".

My question is simply this. What will the Prime Minister be bargaining for at the next summit on Canada's behalf?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what we will do at the summit is continue the results of yesterday which constitute a very significant step forward in the fight against acid rain. We will continue that. Surely anyone who cares about the environment and understands anything about the devastating impact of acid rain on the environment, and appreciates the total absence of activity in regard thereto over the last 20 years, will celebrate yesterday's events but recognize that we have a long way to go. It is a tough road, but we will stick with it and we will clean up the environment.

Mr. Caccia: It seems quite clear that anything is good news to a Party that is ten points behind the third Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the essence of what happened yesterday is that the Prime Minister has given up his bargaining position with the President by accepting with open arms the President's position three weeks before the summit. He has given up his bargaining position. When will the Prime Minister muster enough courage to demand what Canadians are asking for, namely, acid rain cuts that are significant to Canada, with percentages, with target dates, and with emission reductions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend refers to polling data. I just remind him that when Prime Minister Turner called an election he was leading by 14 points in the Gallup Poll and, 53 days later, something strange happened.

Mr. Gauthier: Are you going to call one? Call it.

Mr. Mulroney: Are you interested?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Right now. Let's go!

Mr. Mulroney: I would do it, Mr. Speaker, but I am worried about their pensions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You don't qualify yet, Brian.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the Right Hon. Prime Minister that the question was on acid rain.

Mr. Mulroney: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker I am sure it got lost in the translation. Obviously, our record in this area and others will be examined. I look forward to an examination of our record on the environment by Canadians who will contrast this field of acid rain with what took place in the years that preceded our swearing in. In particular, I suppose they will want to contrast that record with what I think you will admit is the really quite deplorable record of the Hon. Member who is posing the questions. He should be ashamed of himself.

Mr. Caccia: I am afraid the Prime Minister got lost in research and demonstration rather than in substance.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. According to U.S. Representative Henry Wexman: "The Prime Minister is selling out the Canadian people and the Canadian environment". That is what he said yesterday. How can the Minister of the Environment stay in his job, calling for cuts in U.S. acid rain, when the Prime Minister agrees gleefully with President Reagan on more research and demonstration?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Davenport keeps referring to the $5 billion program confirmed yesterday by the President as a research program. He knows better.

Mr. Caccia: Read the Envoys' Report.

Mr. McMillan: In fact, his statements to that effect are made no more true just through repetition.

I noticed in the The Ottawa Citizen today an article in which U.S. Energy Secretary John Herrington is quoted as saying that the program will be: "—tailored as much as possible to projects that demonstrate equipment which will reduce chemicals from existing coal-burning plants—". The program is not for research. It is not for basic and fundamental research. It is designed to reduce acid rain-causing emissions in the United States that do irreparable harm to the Canadian environment. I think the Hon. Member should keep that in mind.

• (1425)

GREAT LAKES WATER QUALITY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is also directed to the Prime Minister. He talks about celebrating yesterday. Well, nine million people living around the Great Lakes were not celebrating when a report was released which showed that the situation is actually getting worse rather than better with respect to water quality in the Great Lakes. Does the Prime Minister not agree with the suggestion of the Liberal Party that a super fund to clean up the Great Lakes is critical at this point in time so we can stop further deterioration in the quality of water in the Great Lakes?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware of the fact that I have made public statements on behalf of the Government of Canada very favourably predisposed to the idea of a super fund. In fact I have met with the Canadian Chemical Producers' Association a number of times following up on its indication to me and to the Government that for its part it would be eager to explore with us, with Ontario and with other jurisdictions, the possibility of a multi-party fund.

For our part, we are providing leadership in this area. We think—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): But no money.

Mr. McMillan: We think the polluters should pay the costs of damage to the environment. We are seeking from the chemical industry itself, which bears responsibility for much of the pollution, funds for that purpose.

Ms. Copps: Believe me, I have a file full of words from this particular Minister with respect to the Hamilton Harbour. I do not need any more of his words.

POLLUTION OF WINDERMERE BASIN IN HAMILTON HARBOUR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): The Minister is so serious about the problem. When the IJC cited the Hamilton Harbour and, in particular, the Windermere Basin, as one of the most severe hot spots in the Great Lakes with PCB levels up to 68 times the acceptable level, why did the Minister, in his letter to me, refuse the request from the city, the region and the provincial Government, for a $1.25 million federal contribution to help clean up this mess? We want action. We want funds. We do not want more rhetoric.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member has such an aversion to rhetoric, I do not know why she makes a career out of it in this House.

That aside, I have met with the mayor of Hamilton, with the head of the regional municipality of Hamilton—Wentworth, with the head of the Hamilton Harbour Commission and with the Minister of the Environment for Ontario, to explore ways in which the federal Government could join with those jurisdictions in a clean-up of the Windermere Basin. I recognize it as a very serious problem. I am taking it seriously. I am exploring every possible contribution the federal Government can make to that end.

I think it is incumbent upon the Hon. Member to recognize the very good work which the federal Government is doing in this area and which it has committed itself to doing in future.

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the same subject. I will agree with the Minister that this Government has done something about acid rain and we give the Government credit for it, and I mean that. But what we are discussing today is not what this Government has done but what the United States has done.

Considering that fully half the acid rain which is destroying our lakes, waters, and forests comes from the United States, and considering that a year ago the President of the United States made a commitment not to reduce acid rain by one drop but to spend on demonstrator projects and research, not a penny for anything else, can the Prime Minister tell the country why he said yesterday that a simple reassertion of this promise to spend money by the President, not on reducing acid rain but on research, should be seen by our Prime Minister as a very significant step forward?.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously our objective remains a treaty with the United States and targets for emission reductions. That is clearly what we are seeking to achieve.

I think my hon. friend will agree that when we were asked to take over this matter, nothing had been done. The previous Government walked away from it completely in 1982 saying that nothing could be done. By and large I think that an objective observer would indicate that is what we inherited. We began with a series of initiatives. Part of the culmination of these initiatives was realized yesterday by the statement of the President of the United States. First, he indicated that the full amount of the government share of the funding recommended by the Joint Envoys, $2.5 billion, will be secured for a demonstration of innovative control technology over a five-year period. He also set out the second step, the third step, and so on.

• (1430)

This represents a significant advance over the position adopted by the administration last year. It does not get us yet—

Mr. Broadbent: It is the same.

Mr. Mulroney: No. I invite my hon. friend to read the statement carefully. There is a significant improvement in the position advanced by the United States.

I give my hon. friend this commitment. We shall not relent until such time as we have agreed with the United States on a program that will eliminate the locus of the problem emanating from the United States which is killing our environment.

PRIME MINISTER'S FORTHCOMING MEETING WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that what the United States announced yesterday will not reduce one drop of acid rain falling on our forests, our lakes or our streams. What Canadians want from the United States is a commitment to reduce levels of acid rain.

In terms of negotiating with the United States, does the Prime Minister think it is the best diplomatic position for the Government of Canada to announce today in the House, before he sits down with the President, that we should be celebrating what has already been announced, what he has now described as a very significant forward step by the President of the United States? Doesn't taking this position give our whole case away? Will President Reagan not come here and say: "Well, we will just shake hands with the Prime Minister and there will be an agreement on everything we will do", which is nothing?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated that yesterday, in response to a vitriolic attack by the Opposition on this accomplishment, if the Hon. Member is asking me whether I believe that throwing hand-grenades at the United States, or at any of our friends and allies, works, the answer is no. It did not work for the previous Government, and I do not think it will work for anybody. I believe that what clearly works is the setting out of an agreed upon position by the Government of Canada, fighting for it forcefully, and obtaining results—not perfect results but substantial movement forward—on cleaning up our mutual environment. That is exactly to what we are committed, and we are in the process of achieving it.

REQUEST THAT AMERICANS REDUCE ACID RAIN EMISSIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question for the Prime Minister is as follows: When he discusses this problem with President Reagan, will the Prime Minister insist that the Americans reduce the levels of acid rain they are producing and that are affecting this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yes, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. But as the Leader of the New Democratic Party said himself, and I want to thank him for his comments, progress has been made on acid rain. He did not say the problem was solved, but he did acknowledge that the Government of Canada had made definite progress through its bilateral relations. I wanted to make this point, considering the entirely negative and destructive attitude taken by the Liberal Opposition, which sees bilateral relations with the United States as an excuse to shoot down our allies. I maintain that progress is not served by declarations of war. Progress is served by mature individuals who act according to a well organized and well thought out plan of action, and a government that is determined to pursue it.

DECAY OF MAPLES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alain Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, this is another question on the same subject, and it is directed to the Prime Minister. As the maple syrup season is about to begin, producers are extremely concerned about the extent of the damage to their maple trees. They have lost thousands of taps and feel that at this rate, the industry will be wiped out completely in four years' time. They do not share the Prime Minister's optimism. Could the Prime Minister inform the House what he intends to do today, right now, to correct this serious problem that is affecting our maple trees?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am puzzled by the question because my understanding is that yesterday the major spokespersons for the maple sugar industry, especially in Quebec, welcomed the initiative taken by President Reagan in Washington and made public statements to that effect. We recognize, as I think it is being increasingly recognized in other jurisdictions, that forestry is suffering among the worst effects from acid rain. In Quebec we are seeing maple sugar production plummet by as much as 50 per cent because of acid rain related emissions.

One of the reasons we are seeking an accord with the United States to slash acid rain causing emissions on both sides of the border is to help the very people whose cause the Hon. Member intended to champion in his question.

[Translation]

REPAYMENT OF $100 MILLION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Tardif (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also directed to the Prime Minister. They find most timid indeed the progress made with respect to this issue, if any. They currently estimate at $100 million the losses suffered by that industry. Does the Government intend at the next summit to present the American administration with the bill: $100 million, and does the Government intend to support that $100 million claim for losses to date?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member were truly fair on this question, and if the Liberal Party of which he is a Member were truly fair, he would recognize that over many years Canada has faced an enormous amount of opposition south of the border to progress on acid rain. We are making progress. That contrasts with the situation that prevailed in June of 1982 when the previous Government terminated all discussions with the Americans on acid rain out of sheer frustration at the lack of progress.

To the credit of the Prime Minister, he put the issue back on the agenda. He got acid rain back on the rails. We are making steady progress. There are no home runs, no grand slams, no royal flushes in Washington on acid rain. But we are making singles and doubles that will eventually put home runs on the board.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

RAIL FREIGHT CAR INDUSTRY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The rail freight car industry in Canada has faced massive problems in recent years. Last year, National Steel Car in Hamilton saw its workforce fluctuate between 100 and 1,000 people. The latest incident is with today's announcement that Hawker Siddeley has put the Trenton car plant on the market because of lack of orders. What will the Government do to ensure that our rail car industry remains healthy?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I think we have already recognized the regional challenges and it is also our intention to meet them. Since September, 1984, the Government has been doing things in that province, in the Atlantic area—first, we signed energy agreements; second, we had new economic development agreements with the provinces, and also we intend to keep working at that.

But with respect to Hawker Siddeley, we are especially concerned with that company's plans to sell their interests. We intend to work in close co-operation with the company and the Province, Mr. Speaker, in order to find solutions which would allow the company to remain in operation.

[English]

HAWKER SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N.S.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question was asked of the former Member for Central Nova who said in the 1983 by-election campaign that Ottawa "should use its colossal procurement influence in the Department of Supply and Services and Canadian National Railway to guarantee that the Hawker Siddeley (Canada) Ltd. rail car plant at Trenton, Nova Scotia, gets its fair share of orders, and that other industries in that area benefit". What will the Prime Minister do to help the people of that area?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what the Government of Canada will do. It will work very closely with the province, with prospective purchasers, with Hawker Siddeley, with the Crown agencies, for example the CNR, and with all possible intervenants in this case to make absolutely certain that the Hawker Siddeley operation in Trenton continues to provide gainful and beneficial employment in an ongoing way for the people of Central Nova.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GREAT LAKES POLLUTION—RECOMMENDED PUBLIC CONSUMER EDUCATION PROGRAM

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment and is with regard to the report of the International Joint Commission on the Great Lakes. For 30 years or more the pollution of Lake Ontario has threatened people living on both sides of that body, the use of beaches and, at times, the safe use of drinking water. The IJC report indicates that consumers may be part of the solution rather than part of the problem by becoming more conscious of what toxic chemicals are doing to our water.

What action is the Minister prepared to take to respond to the IJC's recommendation that a public consumer education program be undertaken to induce more and more of the public to use less and less toxic chemicals?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the question relates to one of 36 recommendations brought down by the International Joint Commission a few days ago. I am exploring with all of my relevant cabinet colleagues how we might respond to all of the recommendations as a package rather than to any individual ones separately.

In connection with education I can certainly tell the Hon. Member that I am very sympathetic to the position he expressed in his question. We have ourselves greatly highlighted that part of our total program over the past year through, for example, increased funding for Environment Week. With my cabinet colleagues, including the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I will be exploring how we can follow up even further.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

HAWKER SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and it, too, is with regard to the Trenton car works in Nova Scotia. The 2,000 laid-off employees of that particular company as well as the entire community of Trenton are very uncertain as to their future and anxious to have the federal Government exert some leadership at this most difficult time.

Will the Minister confirm that his Department knew of this pending sale or closure some weeks ago? Would he indicate to the House what discussions took place with the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia? Would he also tell the House what actions he and his government colleagues intend to take in the coming weeks to assist the workers and the community of Trenton?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion): First, Mr. Speaker, I must correct the Hon. Member's statement. Until now there has been no reference to any shutdown, but to a selling out. The company intends to sell its interests in Trenton, not to stop its operations. Second, on this Government's commitment, again we must meet regional challenges as I said. We have provided constant help and shown our interest in the Atlantic region's workers especially. We will still be doing this, while recognizing the area's problems and working with the company and the Province involved.

REQUEST FOR PROGRAM TO ASSIST COMMUNITY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. I hope that this commitment is not similar to the commitment the Government made to the workers in Moncton, New Brunswick. I would like to remind the Minister that it was the Prime Minister who led the people of Pictou County to believe that as a result of his by-election victory in 1983 incidents of this nature would not happen.

Will the Minister undertake to visit Trenton, Nova Scotia, meet with the affected workers, and implement a program of action to assist those 2,000 employees and the community of Trenton, thereby living up to the commitment, the promises and the undertakings that the Prime Minister made to those people?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to that question. First, the allusion to the Moncton situation is quite inaccurate. The Moncton situation went off the rails largely because unions refused to accept the compromise put forward by the federal Government, the Government of New Brunswick, and the people of Moncton. I think it is important to note that that, in large measure, is why the situation developed as it did in Moncton.

With regard to Trenton, there was no reference in any campaign at any time to incidents of this nature not happening. There was certainly an undertaking at that time by the Member of Parliament and the Government to do everything that we possibly could to be of assistance and keep alive a very vital and historic part of industrial Nova Scotia in the constituency of Cape Breton.

We have acted already. For example, right in my hon. friend's home area, in Sydney, we have been of tremendous assistance, along with the Government of Nova Scotia, to Sysco and the development of Cape Breton. We will do no less to help the people of Central Nova who depend very much on this traditional industry as a source of growth for their region.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY WHY MINISTER DID NOT AWAIT TABLING OF COMMITTEE REPORT BEFORE MAKING STATEMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday afternoon the Minister came into the House puffing, panting, and out of breath, circulating, at the last minute, a statement that he wanted to make later on.

[Translation]

Can the Minister tell us why he was in such a hurry to make a statement in the House yesterday on pension income and severance pay when he knew the report of the Standing Committee would be tabled today? Why did he not wait for the suggestions of the Committee?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the answer is simply because I was ready to make my statement yesterday.

[English]

PROVISION OF BENEFITS FOR EARLY RETIREES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the same Minister. I would like to give the Minister a chance to save his neck and his skin, and the skin and necks of all the Tories on that side of the House. The committee tabled its report today. The Minister now knows that the committee, comprised of Members representing all sides of this House, with the exception of one Tory, recommends that those who have taken an early retirement pension, provided they are available and looking for work, ought to be able to receive their unemployment insurance benefits. I want the Minister to stand in his place and say that he will listen to the advice of Members from all sides of the House and do justice to those who deserve to get their UI benefits.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I made a statement in the House about this matter yesterday. The Standing Committee is tabling its report today. There is a procedure to respond to the reports of Standing Committees. I shall now receive the report, but I can tell my hon. friend immediately that I made a very clear statement yesterday, that everything is already quite clear, and that it will remain so.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is not clear.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LOBBYIST EMPLOYED BY CANADA IN WASHINGTON—REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Prime Minister. He is probably aware that Mr. Michael Deaver, who received a $150,000 contract from the Government of Canada, was yesterday indicted by a U.S. grand jury. In May of last year in response to inquiries I made in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote the following:

> If there is any determination by the appropriate U.S. authorities that Mr. Deaver broke U.S. laws in carrying out his contract with Canada, and if these findings reflect unfavourably on Canada, it would then be appropriate for the Canadian Parliament to undertake an investigation of this issue.

Since charges have been laid and that it does reflect unfavourably on Canada, when will the Prime Minister initiate the parliamentary investigation promised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know nothing beyond that which my hon. friend has just indicated. Presumably the notion of the presumption of innocence applies in the United States as well. If it is indeed the case that a charge has been laid, then I assume that my hon. friend will want to allow whoever is accused to enjoy the presumption of innocence and go through the process without bother or inhibitions by us, unless my hon. friend has a charge or new evidence which he would like to bring forward, in which case I am sure we would like to take a look at it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. The point of my question does not relate to the guilt or innocence of Mr. Deaver, but rather to the involvement of the Government of Canada in this matter and the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs made a commitment to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade that any determination would result in an investigation.

Taking into consideration that officials from the Prime Minister's Office, high officials of the Government, are involving themselves in this affair, and how sensitive our relationships with the United States are on environment, trade and other issues, would it not be appropriate to get to the bottom of this matter and determine once and for all what are the involvement and role of officials of the Government of Canada in this very unhappy event in Washington?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, even for my hon. friend that is really quite a scurrilous question. The U.S. General Accounting Office, the Congressional Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations, and special investigators have made no allegations of impropriety by the Canadian Government or any of its agencies at any time, in any circumstances. That is the situation. If my hon. friend has a charge to make or any new evidence, please let him bring it forward, as opposed to the scurrilous smears in which he indulges on a regular basis.

STATUS OF WOMEN

RECOGNITION OF HOME-MAKING SKILLS AS RELEVANT QUALIFICATION FOR JOBS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. Recently the Public Service Commission refused to recognize home-making skills as relevant experience for a procurement clerk's job. The Minister will know that Canada endorsed resolutions at the Nairobi Decade of Women Conference to value unpaid women's work as part of the GNP. Therefore, will the Minister undertake studies to determine the value of child rearing, home management, and volunteer community work, so that these job skills will be accepted as relevant experience for jobs in the paid labour force?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, it is already the policy of the Government to value that sort of work and to take that into account in a case like this one. What surprises me is that it was a union head who went ahead with the issue and was not prepared to value this work. Given the Hon. Member's political affiliation, I am surprised that she is raising the issue.

Ms. Mitchell: I think the Minister should check into the facts of the matter when she makes a statement like that.

TREASURY BOARD'S POSITION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the Minister establish procedures to recognize the job skills of home-makers in applications for Public Service jobs, and will he make it a negotiable item in collective bargaining?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer is very clear. We recognize unpaid and voluntary work as legitimate work experience. Treasury Board is always aware of that position. It was the position which was applied in this case. The case was brought to an appeal board under the leadership of one of our unions, and an appeal board overturned the Government's position. We are reviewing the situation right now, but it was not at all government policy. The government policy is that we recognize that, and the union does not.

LAPRADE FUND

TREASURY BOARD CUTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. We learned yesterday evening that the Government is planning to cut back $40 million from the Laprade and Lower St. Lawrence Fund, which was supposed to be used to promote the economic development of our regions. How can the Minister justify this decision in view of his statement to the House on November 25, 1986, that the money in this fund would be used exclusively in the Saint-Maurice—Bois-Franc region?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall now repeat exactly the same statement. The region designated to benefit from the Laprade Fund to compensate for the closing of the Laprade plants remains unchanged. It is exactly the same.

Mr. Grondin: I think that the President of the Treasury Board should read the Committee reports, because they mention some changes.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO SUBSIDIZE MAURICIE CENTRE INDUSTRIAL INCUBATOR

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this: Why is the Minister refusing to subsidize the regional industrial incubator of the Mauricie Centre which would have a major impact on economic and industrial development in our region when the Government is ready to take away 40 per cent of the Laprade and Lower St. Lawrence Fund and use this money for other purposes outside our region?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the premise of this question is completely false. There is no plan to reduce the funds used to promote economic development in that region—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair could observe that we are a long way through Question Period and we are not doing very well in the number of Members being recognized, and that is because of the length of the exchanges. The Hon. Member has asked a question and the Hon. President of the Treasury Board is trying to answer it. I would ask for co-operation.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I shall try to be very brief. The amount in the Laprade Fund has remained the same since we came to power in September 1984. The amount is still the same, and it will be spent in the region which had been designated at the very beginning when the Laprade Fund was created. Third, the money will be spent to create permanent jobs and to promote permanent economic development in the region, contrary to what had happened under the previous Government, which, for years, kept spending as though there was no tomorrow.

HOUSING

KIRKLAND LAKE AREA—LOW-INCOME AND SENIOR CITIZEN HOUSING

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister in charge of CMHC. With the increased amount of mining activity in the Kirkland Lake area of my riding, much concern has been expressed about low-income housing and senior citizen housing. Could the Minister tell us exactly what is the federal Government's role with regard to providing funding for senior citizen and low-income housing?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think the problems the Hon. Member is encountering are not peculiar to his riding. They are global, at least in Canada. There are federal-provincial agreements outstanding with all provinces whereby the provinces are charged with the delivery of the programs. The federal Government provides the majority of funds. If the Hon. Member has a particular problem which has not been acknowledged by the province, I would be happy to make representations on his behalf.

REQUEST FOR WATER QUALITY POLICY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. What will be the Government's response to the statement by the International Joint Commission that the only real difficulty with its job and the International Water Quality Agreement is the failure on the part of Governments to show the political commitment to act? For example, will the Government at last bring forward a water quality policy which commits the Government to hard action and appropriate expenditures, or will the Government wait for the impossibility of singles and doubles adding up to home runs?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think yet again the Hon. Member has struck out. The fact is that the budget of my Department, Environment Canada, is $768 million. It is higher now than it has ever been in any previous year, except for one. We have brought down an Environmental Protection Act which will be reintroduced into Parliament for first reading, it is to be hoped, this spring. The Act addresses many of the concerns raised by the International Joint Commission in its report. In addition, very recently I signed with the Government of the United States the Niagara River pollution abatement program, which will slash toxic loadings into that important international waterway by 50 per cent by 1996. We are taking solid action in response to the International Joint Commission and to other representations.

POSITION OF FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Is it not clear that an integrated ecosystem approach involving both provincial and federal participation is necessary? Is the Government not welshing on its agreement when it tells municipalities that they will get no help in making their contribution to cleaning up the Great Lakes?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that the federal Government is welshing on a commitment to the municipalities to support—

Mr. McCurdy: On the agreement.

Mr. McMillan: There is no such agreement. Waterworks of a local sort are within municipal and provincial jurisdiction. We are backing the provinces and the municipalities to the hilt within our federal jurisdiction. We expect the municipalities and the provinces to live up to their side of the bargain.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF DEMANDS MADE BY PUBLIC SERVANTS OF MR. GEORGE ZOUBRIS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to deal with the case of Mr. George Zoubris, who has been a Canadian citizen since 1968 and a resident of Montreal for 20 years. My question is directed to the Minister of State (Immigration) who is aware of the situation since he had a telephone conversation with this citizen. I would like the Minister to tell us why, three times since July last year, officials of his Department have asked Mr. Zoubris to go to the Department to obtain permanent refugee status?

• (1500)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I will not respond to the specific question, but I will certainly take note of it and make sure that my officials will be back to the Hon. Member with a complete response.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE MR. ZOUBRIS WILL NOT HAVE TO VISIT DEPARTMENT AGAIN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that the Minister is very much aware of the situation because he himself spoke to this man.

I would also like the Minister—after he has made yet another inquiry this afternoon—to assure us that Mr. Zoubris will not have to go to the Department of Employment and Immigration at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning and pay $125 to have his passport and Canadian citizenship papers examined.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this situation, and I assured the Hon. Member that the officials of my Department will give her a more detailed report, but it is not proper to raise a specific case here in the House of Commons.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have here a copy of a study that has been done of the Canadian Jobs Strategy by the Ontario Government on behalf of all 10 provincial Governments. Does the Minister agree with the key recommendation in the study, which criticizes the Canadian Jobs Strategy, that funding should be increased from $1.7 billion to $2.5 billion? This would bring funding up to the 1984 index level when the Minister took over. Does the Minister agree with that? Will he end the cut-backs and increase the money to train the unemployed of Canada, particularly for those regions that need it?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can only suggest that my colleague ought to be proud of the Canadian Jobs Strategy results, knowing as we do that 80,000 Canadians are involved every day. The Government of Ontario may very well urge us to increase our budgets to unrealistic levels, but I think the Jobs Strategy program has proven to be a success and the results attest to that. Many Canadians are in a position to find that out for themselves every day. Again I repeat that the Government can be proud of the results—705,000 jobs in two years—something which you will spend the rest of your life hoping to achieve.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POLICY CONCERNING MARRIED PERSONNEL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the new R.C.M.P. policy with regard to married couples in the Force. As the Minister knows, the new policy is regressive, inequitable, and discriminatory to families.

Is the Solicitor General prepared to instruct the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to scrap the new policy and adopt a policy that would be far more humane and fair in the circumstances?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Hon. Member raised this question during my absence with the President of the Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board was good enough to bring this matter to my attention. I have already had a preliminary discussion with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and have asked the R.C.M.P. for a full briefing on the matter. At that time I will be looking at the policy in depth.

Mr. Speaker: The last question for the Question Period will go the Hon. Member for York East.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF CLOSURE OF PORTS TO NUCLEAR POWERED SHIPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Some time ago New Zealand closed its ports to ships that were powered by nuclear fuel. This past weekend the New Democratic Party committed itself to a similar policy. Would the Minister advise the House what effect such a policy would have on Canada and, in particular, upon its membership in NATO and NORAD?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, such a policy would require us to turn back ships from allied nations. The effect on New Zealand of its policy has been to damage its defence relationships severely with other friendly powers around the world. It is a policy that would be very damaging to Canada's national defence interests.

Mr. Broadbent: Do you believe that?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the customary question of the Government House Leader as to what business for the Government he intends to call for the coming week.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to. I must say that I was rather surprised in the Question Period today—and it clearly demonstrates how badly the opposition Parties are out of touch when they fail to recognize the economic realities in the country—not to hear that we have the lowest interest rate in thirteen and a half years of 7.14 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There are some things, I suppose, that create certain temptations in the Chamber. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has asked a question of the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) with respect to the business—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I have asked the question. If he wants to talk about records, he should talk about—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister would like to respond.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I think it behooves the House to remember that yesterday was St. Paddy's Day and that if the Deputy Prime Minister wants to practise blarney, yesterday was the day to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has, of course, as have all Hon. Members, the right to think anything he wants about what was yesterday. It is not for the Chair to point out that today is March 19.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: In any event, the Deputy Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Murphy: Perhaps he can say something intelligent.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we know that the Hon. Member who just spoke is noted for his blarney, but he is also noted for the fact that he is quite a politician. He just came back from Newfoundland after deposing his provincial leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should share with Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) pointed out that in Newfoundland they celebrate St. Patrick's Day for two days.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: But if we do not get to the business of the day, we will be here for a couple of days. The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, today we will continue with Bill C-44. My understanding is that there is an agreement among all Parties to conclude this piece of legislation in all stages.

Mr. Garneau: If you don't make any more statements.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will not make any more statements, provided the Hon. Member does not extend me the invitation.

We will complete Bill C-44 today. Friday will be an allotted day; Monday next will be an allotted day; Tuesday will be an allotted day; Wednesday we will proceed with Bills C-43 and C-45. I understand that there has been some discussion with regard to the expeditious passage of those two pieces of legislation. Bill C-38 on Teleglobe will follow, being at report stage.

• (1510)

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, just to clarify, I think the Government House Leader meant to say, although he seemed to use a lot of verbiage today, that there was agreement for second reading today. The reason our NDP caucus gave agreement to that was to ensure that the many witnesses who wish to appear on the equalization legislation will have the opportunity to do so all of next week and into the week following.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, I am sorry, the Hon. Member is correct. It was a misunderstanding on my part.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, before we broke for dinner today, I was indicating why I supported Bill C-44, the equalization payment Bill. I would like to recap my remarks and, in the 10 minutes I have left, highlight some of the reasons for my support of Bill C-44.

First, equalization payments for this year and next are increasing. Members of the Opposition have tried to imply that the equalization payments will not increase and I would like to put on record that in 1987-88, equalization payments for the provinces that receive them will be increasing from $5.3 billion to $5.6 billion and in 1988-89 they will increase to $5.9 billion. That is an increase of well over 5 per cent per year and it is in addition to the forgiveness of the over-payment which will amount to somewhere in the neighbourhood of $270 million.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) indicated earlier in his debate that the net forgiveness clause in the Bill would interfere with and cancel out the technical increases, but that is not correct. I do not know if the Hon. Member misunderstood the Bill or if he was trying to mislead the House, but there is no way to connect the net forgiveness in the over-payment with the technical changes. The technical changes are for future years while the forgiveness in the over-payment is for the past two years.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) as well as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides implied that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had indicated that the technical changes would be handled in one year. I would like to remind Hon. Members that the Minister of Finance indicated very clearly on December 17 in the House of Commons, in response to a question put by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the following:

> Mr. Speaker, this proposal was made by officials of the provincial and federal Governments. The offer did not come from the federal Government. I told the provinces yesterday and last Friday that the federal Government could not possibly accept the one-year proposal. We were agreeable to an increase over two years, and that is what our Government has decided. This is in addition to the increase from 4 to 6 per cent in the annual increment for the equalization program.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides indicated, I believe, that there would be a $400 million loss in the major transfer payments. Again, that is incorrect. I would like to make it very clear to the House and to Canadians that the major federal transfers which are made up of the equalization payments, the EPF and the Canada Assistance payments totalled $25.887 billion in 1986-87. The major federal transfers will be increased in the coming year to $27.328 billion, for a total increase to all the provinces of $1.44 billion. That is a lot of money. I like to say it is 27,328 millions of dollars in transfers to the provinces. In addition to that, another $2.5 billion will go to the provinces. I believe it is very clear that the payments are increasing.

I would like to comment on what this means to the province in which I live, Manitoba. The 1987 Manitoba Budget in Brief, under the heading "A Good Place to Live and Work", says that Manitoba's economic performance has been above average for Canada and is expected to lead other provinces again in 1987. The total transfer payments to Manitoba will represent $1.312 billion this year. Manitoba's Budget indicates that the budgetary expenditure for the Province of Manitoba this year will be $4.188 billion. The budgetary revenue, the amount of money collected through taxes and from the transfers from the federal Government, will represent $3.773, resulting in a net deficit budget requirement of $415 million. The $1.312 billion that the federal Government will be transferring to the province in the coming year compared to the $3.773 billion that will be collected means that over 35 cents of every dollar raised in Manitoba will be coming from federal transfer payments. At that point, the provincial Government must take some responsibility. If it wishes to spend on programs, many of which I support, then I believe it is also its responsibility to raise the revenues and not just get the money from the federal Government. As I mentioned earlier, there is only one federal taxpayer, there is only one provincial taxpayer and there is only one municipal taxpayer.

I believe Governments should be responsible. The federal Government has been responsible in trying to control the deficit. As the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) just mentioned a few moments ago, the Bank of Canada interest rate has fallen to 7.14 per cent today. What does that mean to the provinces? Most of the provinces have accumulated debts on which they will be paying lower interest charges this year. Even the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) recognized the other day that the lower interest rate will be beneficial to the provinces.

Why is the interest rate lower? It is because the people of the world know that Canada is trying to control its debt. As a result, they have confidence in our dollar. The interest rate has gone down because of the confidence in the dollar. Inflation is down. This will benefit all the different levels of Government. I say that the different levels of Government must take some responsibility and I call upon them to be fair about this.

The equalization payments to Manitoba this year will be $441 million for 1986-87 and they will grow to $469 million in 1987-88. That represents roughly $435 per person and accounts for more than 10 per cent of the actual revenue collected in the province. That is unconditional money. There are no strings attached to it whatsoever. The province can do whatever it wants with that money.

As well, my province benefited from the estimate of the number of people in the province to the tune of another $15 million this year. Instead of being forgiven an overpayment, the province will receive an extra $15 million. When we add up the $1.312 billion the province will receive from the federal Government, it means in excess of $1,200 per person. I commend our Government for that. As I indicated earlier, this will account for approximately 35 per cent of the Manitoba Budget, not counting the money it has to borrow. This is a 6 per cent increase in a province which is one of the leaders in economic growth in Canada.

I know we all benefit from equalization payments. I know Manitoba benefits quite well. It is in our Constitution and I support it. We have to recognize the different regions of our country and the fact we should all have a certain quality of life regardless of where we live.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, my friend just said I was incorrect when I suggested in my speech earlier today that if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) forgave the recovery of equalization payments from previous years, that would be balanced by the technical changes brought about by this legislation. I would like to remind my colleague that the Minister, in his statement on March 11 in this House, said:

> That is to say, the amounts due the federal Government as a result of the census will be forgiven to the extent that they exceed future increases in equalization entitlements—

I also referred to the reaction of the Premier of Newfoundland. He said he was disappointed because of the way the Minister of Finance decided to apply the results of the mid-term census. I would like the Hon. Member to read the ministerial statement and perhaps retract what he said. It is not my interpretation of what he said, it is exactly what the Minister said in the House, that it would be applied "to the extent that they exceed future increases in equalization entitlements". I hope the Hon. Member will read that. If he does he will probably agree that this is the way the Minister decided to apply the regulations.

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I am very happy to have the opportunity to answer the question. If the Hon. Member would continue to read the statement I think it would become more apparent. He has left out the tail end of it. It says:

> That is to say, the amounts due the federal Government as a result of the census will be forgiven to the extent that they exceed future increases in equalization entitlements, for those same two fiscal years,—

That is, the years 1985-86 and 1986-87. The Minister went on to say:

> —which may arise as a result of changes in other financial and economic data relevant to the equalization formula.

That is for the past two years. Perhaps it is a misunderstanding on the part of the Hon. Member but it relates to the years 1985-86 and 1986-87 and would not affect future years. That is the way it was explained to me by the Minister's Department.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's comments about the unconditional nature of equalization payments. I am especially interested in the way they have been applied. Would the Member comment on how some of those funds have been applied by his Province of Manitoba, especially in light of the large deficits incurred by the present Government?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, I do not really want to get into details on how the provincial Government spends its money. I left that arena and I am in this arena now. I do not necessarily agree with all the ways the money is spent, but I cannot agree with the large deficit. It is very clear that we as a federal Government are starting to control the deficit and bringing it down. That has resulted in an interest rate of 7.14 per cent being set today. There will be benefits for my province and the province of the Hon. Member because of that. The provinces have a very large public debt and this interest rate will obviously be of benefit. One of the main reasons we have this low interest rate is our Government's stand on the deficit. The rest of the world knows we are committed to reducing it, and that is why the value of our dollar is up and interest rates are down.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) for straightening out the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau). That Hon. Member seems to be thoroughly confused about the national debt. I saw him on national television a couple of weeks ago misinforming and handing out false information to the Canadian people. He called this Government's Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) the king of deficits. I am sure he is a little confused. What he should have said was that it was the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) who was the architect of our national debt.

I will explain to him what happened and how we got into this ridiculous situation under successive Liberal Governments. In 1972, when the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra was the Minister of Finance, he inherited a surplus of $700 million. In 1975 he left and there was a deficit of almost $5 billion. That is referred to as the Turner formula. The Right Hon. Member introduced blank cheque government to this country, uncontrolled spending and the encouraging of empire-building. The Liberals did not even know how many Crown corporations they had. That formula was carried on by Macdonald, MacEachen, Chrétien and all the rest. That Turner blank cheque formula was stopped in 1984. If we had not taken control of expenditures the deficit would be $42 billion this year. We have reduced it by $10 billion.

It is very easy to be a Liberal or a New Democrat. They have one theory and one philosophy. You solve all problems by spending more money. About 90 per cent of the questions they ask in this House, including those from the Rat Pack, are concerned with giving everyone more money. Everyone is to get more money from the Government. They never explain where all of that money is to come from.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Madam Speaker. The 10-minute period is restricted to questions and comments on the speech of an Hon. Member. That Member across the way is not doing that. He is just giving us a lot of blah-blah, superfluous verbiage, and everything else. I ask him to ask a question or sit down.

An Hon. Member: The truth hurts.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member believes what he just said, but I think the Hon. Member was commenting. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) may have a comment on the comment of his colleague.

• (1530)

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, first I must concur with my colleague that the large deficit that was accumulated under the former Liberal Government has affected our Government's ability to fund the equalization payments to the provinces. I am sure that our Government would like to give the provinces more money but they have to recognize, as I stated before lunch, that presently 80 cents out of every dollar paid in federal income tax goes to pay the interest on the outstanding debt. We are strained financially to give the provinces more money when only 20 cents out of every dollar remains to deal with that problem. While there is other tax revenue, 80 cents out of every dollar in federal income tax goes to pay the interest on the outstanding debt and that is why we must get control of the deficit, as my hon. colleague indicated.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker) said that he was concerned about the growing deficit in Manitoba. I am sure that he is also concerned about the more rapidly increasing deficit in Saskatchewan and the increasing deficits in British Columbia and a number of other Conservative and neo-Conservative provinces. How do the provinces decrease these deficits when the federal Government has removed more and more money in Established Programs Financing?

The Hon. Member, who was on the committee, knows that there is $5.6 billion less going to the provinces through EPF financing because of the formula passed by the federal Government last year. Yet the money that is coming from the equalization will not even cover that. Therefore, automatically the deficits in the provinces must increase. Will the Hon. Member explain his comment about a need for reduced deficits in the provinces when the federal Government is not doing its share in meeting the needs of those provinces?

Mr. Minaker: Madam Speaker, the major federal transfers have increased, not decreased as the Hon Member has indicated. They will increase in excess of 5 per cent per year. The money being spent in this particular envelope represents the fastest growing expenditure of the federal Government.

In Manitoba, the EPF payment in 1985-86 was $610 billion, in 1986-87 it will be $648 billion, and in 1987-88 it will be $681 billion. It increases quite substantially every year, in excess of some 6 per cent per year.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on a Bill that concerns equalization payments and cash transfers to the provinces. Madam Speaker, being a Quebecer yourself, you will understand my reaction. Today's poll shows that 50 per cent would have voted for the Liberals and 17 per cent for the Conservatives. It is just as well the polling firm did not include the Rhinoceros Party in its questionnaire, because the Conservatives would have come fourth with 7 per cent, while the Rhinoceros Party would have had 10 per cent. And when you watch the Government and the Prime Minister, I think they are just as entertaining as the Rhinos.

On the subject of equalization payments, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, the Quebec Minister of Finance, and the Hon. Robert Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec and a man I hold in high esteem, who has made his mark and has shown a great deal of courage, both these gentlemen are demanding the province's fair share. We are not asking for sympathy. We are not asking for charity. We are asking for our fair share.

At this very moment, the Government of Quebec is claiming $91 million it is owed by the federal Government.

I have here a document dated April 2, 1985. Of course the House is well aware Premier Bourassa is a Member of the Liberal Party. For Quebec, however, it is not a matter of politics, it is a matter of justice. The document in question was signed by Mr. Yves Duhaime, then Minister of Finance in the Parti Québécois Government, and like Premier Bourassa and Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, he was claiming reimbursement of money owed and felt that the way Quebecers were being treated by this Conservative Government was entirely unfair and unacceptable. At the time, they were claiming $81 million, as a result of the inaction and incompetence of this Government, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. And today, Quebec is still lagging behind.

What are the consequences of this lack of cash transfers from the federal Government to Quebecers? It has meant a loss of billions of dollars for secondary education, health insurance and hospital insurance programs. Who is affected by this situation? If it were just a quarrel or a conflict between the Quebec Minister of Finance and the Minister of Finance in Ottawa, a personality conflict, for instance, his limousine is bigger than mine or one Minister travels more than the other, I wouldn't even bother. However, the consequences are borne by ordinary citizens. Less money for post-secondary education will penalize our sons and daughters. There will be less money to educate our children. More poor families will have to let their children join the labour market instead of finishing school.

As for the cutbacks in health care, they affect our families, our children, and the entire population of Quebec, especially as far as health care and hospital services are concerned in regions such as Bellechasse and the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean, where it is more difficult to find doctors and adequate services such as exist in the major centres like Montreal and Quebec City, where the people are well taken care of and where there are full services in community centres, as well as accommodations and emergency home services.

The media often tell us about the overcrowding in the emergency rooms of our hospitals. The Quebec Minister of Health and Welfare, Mrs. Lavoie-Roux, is finding it very difficult to solve this problem, even though everyone in Quebec would like to do so, whether they are Péquistes, Liberals or something else, but whenever they sit down at a table to try to find an answer, someone very, very smart in Ottawa says that he will cut off their funds. This reminds me of what happened yesterday. Since I am speaking about senior citizens and early retirement . . . I can see Conservative Members from Quebec, who are always ready to applaud anything that the Minister says. They act like clowns, they always smile and say that everything is perfect. As for me, I have worked on three rather important issues, and in the case of senior citizens who demanded justice once for six weeks and then for 14 months, the Government finally had to admit that a mistake had been made. Then how come with old age security pension indexing, senior citizens had to demonstrate on Parliament Hill. Mrs. Denis even had to address the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sharply and Members of the Opposition had to complain for weeks before the Government admitted it was wrong?

In the field of health, the same thing happened with the 10 percent tax on medecine. Together with Members of the Opposition, people suffering from diabetes, cardio-vascular and respiratory diseases had to constantly pressure the Government for four or five months to bring the Prime Minister and the Cabinet to the realization that they had made a mistake. Tory Members never rise in the House to protect the interests of these people.

Again, yesterday, the 35,000 early retirees in Canada, including 13,000 in Quebec, have succeeded and forced the Minister of Employment and Immigration for the first time and the Prime Minister for the third time to admit that they had been wrong. But why is it that no Tory Member in the House, whether representing Quebec, Alberta, Ontario, Atlantic or Western Canada, has ever managed to convince the Prime Minister by telling him: My dear Prime Minister, you are dead wrong.

For instance, let us look at matters strictly of interest to Quebec. The aerospace centre for instance. There again, Quebec is about to be hoodwinked. The same thing in the case of equalization payments, tax point transfers, post-secondary education, as well as health programs and hospitalization services.

Let us take for instance the famous promise concerning the Banking Centre in Montreal. Everybody here knows that I am a Montrealer, beside being a Quebecer and a Canadian. I am a citizen of the Montreal—Sainte-Marie riding. The formal promise made by the Prime Miniser to Montrealers: the International Banking Centre will solve all your problems. In fact, what we got was a night counter, a night teller. The guy who lives far away would be able to make a deposit in Montreal at night. That is of no use; it is a joke. These are nothing but half-measures.

There are other Quebec programs, including equalization, which have been poorly put together including the cleaning up of the St. Lawrence River polluted water which is again in the news. Mr. Clift Lincoln, the Quebec Minister of Environment, is not asking for a hand out but something similar to what other provinces have already received, in order to help Quebec clean up the St. Lawrence River.

In view of the fact that this request came from Quebec, the federal response, as in the area of equalization, is no. Another similar issue—you know that over the past few months, a large number of refugees have come to the province of Quebec, to Montreal. Faced with this situation, Mrs. Robic, the Quebec Minister responsible for ethnic groups, turned to Ottawa and ever so gently asked for assistance, in view of this particular situation, to help Quebec foot the bill. Again, because it was a Quebec request, the answer was no.

There were also requests for funds to help Montreal-East and the shipyards. Quebec shipyards still have a major role to play and used to be a job creation industry. Let us look at the Lauzon shipyards near Quebec City. In four instances, six months ago, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion promised those people that 1,000 workers would be hired to work there. There are now approximately ten workers in the yards, and the 1,000 others who expected to get jobs on the construction of the Caribou II have just been told that this may have to wait until next October. So there is another delay.

At the Sorel shipyards, which have quite a reputation, the Marine Industries yards, there again 200 layoffs are expected within the next two months. The only remaining work involves contracts that were awarded by the previous Liberal Government.

And at the Versatile Vickers yards, well, two weeks from now the naval section in Montreal will be shut down.

There you have 5,000 Quebec workers who have been demonstrating for the past year and a half. All the employees of all the companies have been here on Parliament Hill. They have met with the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, with Members from the entire Quebec region. On each occasion there were promises, but again not one darn job has yet been created.

The same thing goes for Sorel. The former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) told on Parliament Hill: "That is settled. Don't worry, fellows, I am looking after that." He has looked after himself, and is no longer a minister.

Same thing in Montreal. There was the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret)—when the Montreal East end issue came up, there were five Ministers dealing with it, five Ministers on that committee: The President of the Treasury Board, the former Minister of Environment, the now Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the former Minister of State for Small Businesses. Two Ministers had to resign from that committee. They were never replaced. And not a single job has yet been created in Montreal East end.

If the Gulf refinery is in operation, it is thanks to a Minister in Quebec, the Minister of Energy, Mr. Ciaccia, who decided to roll up his sleeves. Now, 250 employees are working there. It is not because of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Mercier (Mrs. Jacques), the Hon. Member for Gamelin (Mr. Gravel), nor the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers). It is simply because people in Montreal East end, whether PQ, Liberals, members of the Civic Party, of the RCM, representatives of all labour federations, union and non-union people, they all joined in. The only ones who bickered among themselves in public were Conservative Members.

What about the Matane paper mill, the Desbiens paper mill, potato producers? We see another injustice there. Even the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister were sent in to open the Matane paper mill. There was a big party. After the party, pictures were taken. Two weeks later they were announcing: No, no go! Nothing has been started yet. Words again! That is all our national camera kid can do, give a small handshake. I will settle all that. You may be sure that at the present rate, you will get nothing.

Let us look at what is going on in the footwear industry or better still with the former Melchers employees. The matter was thought to be solved. They were in to meet me as recently as two months ago asking me to intervene because they were unable to meet their Member who is a minister of the Crown, the Hon. Member for Berthier—Maskinongé—Lanaudière (Mr. de Cotret).

Now, the footwear industry. In the past, the Quebec caucus had always stood against the officials and even the Prime Minister who was opposed to quotas, to protect the footwear industry. What did the Quebec Tory Members do? Niet. Nothing. Footwear quotas were removed. They all applauded because the then Minister said in his speech: "No problem!" What is going on today? One year later, 4,000 jobs have been lost. Industries have been affected not only in the Montreal area but also in Trois Rivières, and Shawinigan where large manufactures were providing jobs which fostered regional economy.

I see that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is here and this reminds me of another project. There was the preretirement plan in designated sectors or for the so-called designated industries and I will explain, Madam Speaker. The footwear industry as well as the textile and clothing industries had a program in designated districts such as the Thetford and Sorel areas as well as in other areas which could also make use of it. Under that program, if the footwear industry as a result of modernization or changes had to dismiss some of its employees, workers aged 55 years or over were eligible to what was called preretirement under the unemployment insurance scheme which allowed those workers who had not found jobs in their areas to draw unemployment insurance benefits up to their age of retirement. It is an vital program in remote areas. The Government, the Minister of Finance announced a new adjustment program for workers. And all of a sudden, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Labour terminated the existing program which gave early retirees the right to collect unemployment insurance benefits. In their announcements, they said: We are going to negotiate a new adjustment program for workers with the provinces, and the program will be retroactive. This was six months ago, and nothing has been done yet. The Minister of Labour is there, but nothing has been done. If a plant or a factory closes tomorrow, no one will be entitled to the safeguards of this program. This is another instance where the federal Government wanted to save on unemployment insurance benefits. It wanted to give less than welfare, and it was asking the provinces to make up the difference. And that is why the Minister of Labour cannot rise in the House and say: Mr. Malépart or the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is wrong, we have an excellent program. There is no program. So far there has been no progress whatsoever. And not a single Conservative Member has raised this point. I have the impression they didn't know and that it is definitely news to them. I only hope that at least the Minister of Labour, a good Quebecer, realizes things are not going according to plan and that although so far he has been left in peace, this may be the next issue to get a going over. I advise him not to follow the example of his other colleagues and to settle before he is forced to. I think we have here a series of issues that clearly show . . . It is not surprising why only 17 per cent of the people of Quebec trust the Conservatives and that between 71 and 76 per cent do not trust the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government. It is all quite simple. The evidence is there and these are the people speaking. These are the people who elected this Government and who are now prepared to throw them out tomorrow. I have the impression that the longer they postpone the election, the fewer Conservative Members they will have left. They will be an endangered species!

Madam Speaker, since I have only one minute left, I want to urge Members from Quebec to sit up and take notice! I think it is high time somebody rose in the House and told the Minister . . . In fact, to be honest, two of them did. The Hon.

Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) rose today to speak to the matter of unemployment insurance, and he said: The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Prime Minister are wrong. The Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) had the courage to rise. He doesn't follow the herd. He said: As far as unemployment insurance benefits and pension plans are concerned, my Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration are wrong. That makes two of them. But is anyone going to rise in the House and say: Is the Prime Minister going to do something about equalization, justice for Quebec, the programs Quebec is claiming and the twenty-one dossiers that are pending?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, I am somewhat hesitant to rise today because I would not want to give too much significance to what my colleague has just said. Still, if only for the record, I should like to indicate that the program to which my colleague referred, what he called the pre-retirement program, was the then Liberal Government Labour Adjustment Program which was slated to end in 1985. We did extend it for one year to find a better substitute, not something which would apply only to designated sectors but a program designed for all sectors with a view to protecting and helping all older workers, not just some of them. I will certainly have more to say about this once the program is ready for implementation, but I have no intention of promoting it before it is unveiled.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, at least I woke up one of them long enough for him to rise. Sad to say, as usual he is off on a tangent. True, the program was to end, but then all programs come to an end with a change in Government, there is nothing new in that. But if a program is working out well it should be extended. But can the Minister explain to me on the basis of what principle would his Government end a program and say: We have something better, but we do not know when it will be ready . Would any sensible person behave like that? I understand, the Minister says: I cannot go into the details of the program today. There are no details, the whole thing does not work. But the problem . . . If he had said: There is a good solution, here is the future program, this gives you an idea but in the meantime the programs designed for soft sectors or designated areas will continue to apply. On the other hand, he tells others: You are the most underprivileged and you are having problems in your regions, but I shall solve everything and help everyone throughout the country; however, I do not know when I can find the solution; here is how we are going to do it. I can understand that the Minister is ashamed about this and does not want to say anything. I would do the same in his place and I would remain silent. He is asking the provinces to share.

Madam Speaker, I am happy that one member opposite at least did speak up. We heard that he is Minister of Labour. No one knew it. I took it upon myself to make this fact known. However, I trust that he will now rise and tell us that such or such a program exists for the good of the community, but not like he has been doing to this point.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, I am certainly not ashamed to ask the provinces to help older workers because I believe that all Governments should do something for these people. They should not discriminate and take care only of certain regions, because there are older workers in the Montreal region who were perhaps not specifically covered by the old program in the constituency of my hon. friend and who will be protected by the new program when it comes into effect.

In the meantime, Madam Speaker, the workers are protected since these programs come into affect only after all other benefits, including unemployment insurance, are exhausted. If my hon. friend knows how to consult a calendar, he will realize that no one has ever lost any benefits because of this.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member comes from a wealthy family, but he does not understand the effects of such a delay. When someone does not know what to expect after six months, he becomes worried and nervous. If the Hon. Member comes from a wealthy family and relied on his father to pay all the bills, I can understand that he would have no idea about what such a situation means. The Government is asking the provinces to share, it is reducing equalization entitlements and the amounts allocated to help older workers. If the Federal Government had shown some generosity, it would have said: We are allocating the same amount to help all the workers throughout the regions, but since we want to cover the entire country, we shall ask the provinces to put up an equal amount.

Instead, the Minister is cutting back the amounts allocated to older workers to reduce the deficit, to help people with bank deposits of over $60,000 and to spend $56 million on new uniforms which had to be thrown out later because they smelled bad. Then, the Minister asks the provinces to make up the difference. The older workers do not benefit; the Federal Government is simply helping its own friends.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, I would not insist on depriving Hon. Members from their right to speak in other circumstances, but I think there is a limit to distorting facts. And I think the Hon. Member is quite aware that senior citizens should be helped, not scared. The program in question will be a better program if only, Madam Speaker, because it will apply to all senior workers rather than to only some of them. And again, if the Hon. Member could look at the amount of funding that has been provided for that program, and the extension of benefits under the previous program, he would realize that not only have we made no cuts, but we had the benefits increased.

• (1600)

Mr. Malépart: This is a darn good debate. We succeeded in waking him up for once, but he is still beside the track. The amounts of money he wants to provide to senior workers fall short of what they used to be. This is what he calls helping senior workers, taking money away from the poor in order to give it to the rich. I realize this is his leader's philosophy, but these are the facts. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Bellechasse (Mr. Blais) is here. The Marine Industries workers in Sorel met with the Minister. They met with the Minister, and they would like to have . . . because their industry was designated—they would like to avail themselves of the program that we used to call in popular language—I understand that Minister is somewhat high-browed—but people who are working at Marine Industries, the fellow who used to be a welder would like at age 57 or 58 to benefit from the previous program. But they cannot. Those people, they are the youngest ones, are forced into unemployment because you have ended that program. They would like to claim entitlement to the previous program. But then you say about your new program—and Lamoureux, Chairman of the Marine Industries workers' union, went to see you, but the program you are offering only provides for ridiculous amounts. Less than the Quebec welfare. It is therefore unaceptable for this Government to brag about helping senior workers. Your performance is bad. You were one of the Ministers, one of the Members who supported the Government move to de-index old age security pensions. You said nothing when you cut, when you took unemployment insurance away from those workers who had gone to an early retirement in order to help the younger ones, but there again you are penalizing people in the future.

So you are in no position to give any lesson to anybody with respect to senior citizens.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) on a point of order.

Mr. Cadieux: First, Madam Speaker, I prefer keeping my mouth shut to speaking and having nothing to say. As for being high-browed, Madam Speaker, I view this as an additional asset.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bellechasse and Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): No. The Minister of Labour has already risen on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart).

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker . . . Either you sit down, or I will. One of us must sit down.

With regard to the point of order, Madam Speaker, the Minister says that there is nothing wrong with being an intellectual, but it is sometimes important for intellectuals to think about the people.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister of Labour rises on a point of Order.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Speaker, I said that it was an additional asset meaning you can still have others.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order! Order, please! I am sure that both sides of the House realize that these are not points of order. In fact, only two and a half or three minutes remain to the question and comment period. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Bellechasse, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Blais).

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I have a comment to make on this because they are just trying to—

Mr. Malépart: I woke you up.

Mr. Blais: Yes, you did. You wake us up or you think you do with this nonsense, but when you talk about job creation, and about Bellechasse—well, I am not near Sorel, being a 175 miles away from it. At least, to begin with, you could check your geography. Since you are referring to Bellechasse, some 1,100 jobs were created over the past few months to replace the 2,500 which had been lost during the terrible time of your administration. I want to tell the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie that was the reason why Bellechasse was a designated area. But today, it could no longer be recognized as a designated area, because the economic situation has greatly improved.

All you have managed to do is to spread fear in the Montreal area. The Minister of Labour has just said so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I urged the Hon. Member for Bellechasse to address the Chair when talking to his colleagues.

Mr. Blais: I am sorry, Madam Speaker. It is easy sometimes, because of a bad influence to forget.

In the footwear industry alone, which he mentioned a while ago, nearly 1,000 jobs, approximately 900 in Quebec, have been created by the Taurus Company. You should listen instead. Those are statistical data. There are 200 in Montreal, 200 also in the riding, Madam Speaker. These are employment figures, some 40,000 in Quebec, 700,000 in Canada. That is what you should talk about, and there are several also in the Montreal area. With regard to the shipyard issue which you raised, you are hellbent on frightening everybody; you were never concerned with rationalization. What did the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboia (Mr. Mckenzie) tell you this afternoon? He stated very clearly that your philosophy and that of your bosom buddies from the New Democratic Party are based on spending. The hell with spending! It does not matter how much you spend; what matters is to get reelected.

Mr. Malépart: Bissonnette and Stevens never spent money?

Mr. Blais: With the Laprade fund, you wasted $100 million building picnic tables and painting churches. The money we spend is used to create permanent jobs in all Quebec ridings, in the Beauce area, in Bellechasse, in Quebec East, in Vaudreuil, that is what we tried to do. It is easy for you to try to flatter the humble people as you call them. I see you are laughing. I do not know if you are laughing at them, but we do respect them.

Mr. Rossi: What do you have against churches?

Mr. Blais: We should begin by balancing the budget of those people and act in such way that our expenditures which have been increasing for years, the huge deficit burdening Canadian taxpayers—

Mr. Rossi: What do you have against churches?

Mr. Malépart: Do you want an answer? Are you afraid of it?

Mr. Blais: This is a comment. I am asking you the following simple question.

Mr. Rossi: What do you have against churches? Tell it to your bishop!

Mr. Blais: I have nothing against churches!

Mr. Rossi: This is not what you have just said!

Mr. Blais: I met my bishop last week and I am in a state of grace!

Mr. Rossi: In a state of grace!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. In all fairness, I will give a minute to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) to conclude before resuming debate.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, that will be enough, after having heard such inane talk. There are a million and a half unemployed, a million and a half jobless—

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, the Chair shall not entertain that point of order. On the other hand, given the comments made by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie, I shall end the debate as of now.

Mr. Garneau: Why?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Malépart: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I am no expert on procedural matters, but since when, and I would like someone from the Table to fill you in on this, since when can someone, a Speaker of the House, on the basis of comments such as those, decide to take away a minute of speech time from a Member of the House, once it has been granted? I find your attitude unacceptable and partisan, Madam Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Oh! Oh!

Mr. Malépart: You might consider handing in your resignation!

Mr. Blais: How low can you go?

Mr. Rossi: He is entitled to that minute!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order!

Mrs. Duplessis: But he has no right to insult her!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, I would like to inform the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) that the extra minute granted him was over and above the normal speech time he was entitled to. I had even deemed appropriate to grant three additional minutes given the debate which had arisen and the numerous points of order. The original questions and comments period following the Hon. Member's speech has been over for six minutes now. I think that the easiest for everybody at this time would be to go back to the debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Malépart: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think there are no points of order at this time, I just interrupted the debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Thank you, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Garneau: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides on a point of order.

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, I heard the comments you made regarding the time allocated for debate. I am rising on this point of order because I am wondering about the reasons which led the Chair to cut short the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) after giving him an extra minute. The reason given by the Chair is that the Hon. Member used a word that the Chair did not like, but I submit that word is not unparliamentary. If the proceedings in this House are going to be governed by the appreciation of some words, which are not unparliamentary, by the Chair, we are entering into a debate which will be very difficult for you and many other people.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I want to make the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and all the other Hon. Members aware of the fact that I did not object in any way to a specific word but rather to a general atmosphere which seemed to spread through the House of Commons at this time. As the time had already elapsed, I thought I should put an end to a debate which could grow bitter and which could have prompted some Hon. Members to exchange words they might have regretted later. This was a matter of judgment, and I stand by my ruling.

Mr. Garneau: I maintain my point of view, Mrs. Speaker.

Mr. Rossi: I rise on the same point of order, Mrs. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As I have decided at this time to recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), I consider this point of order has been taken of.

Mr. Rossi: I rise on the same point of order, Mrs. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): This point of order has been settled; the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I remind my friends of the Liberal Party they should not keep on raising points of order all the time. We have come to an agreement with the government to try to complete the second reading consideration of this bill today. Everybody, including the Liberal Party, should therefore have a chance to take part in the debate. That is what I will try to do, and I appeal to my colleagues not to raise points of order which will effectively obstruct the continuation of the debate. If I may continue—

Mr. Rossi: Not according to the Chair's decision!

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, Bill C-44 is a very serious piece of legislation, since it will cut equalization payments to the province of Quebec by about $71 million and payments to the province of Manitoba by a fairly substantial amount. In fact, it is in line with this Government's policy to cut the growth of equalization payments and tax transfers to the provinces by billions of dollars, which will increase disparities among the provinces.

Madam Speaker, I must say I am disappointed in the remarks just made by the Parliamentary Secretary, who looks at the fight against the deficit as his Government's sole priority, without any consideration for an employment situation that remains urgent in many of our provinces. In seven provinces, the unemployment rate is still higher than it was in 1981-82 during the recession. I am also disappointed in the attitude taken by the Official Opposition, which is trying to raise all kinds of points of order instead of getting on with the debate on this very important matter.

On that side they are not being serious enough about this, while the Government side is making the fight against the deficit its sole priority, without any consideration for the impact on Canadian men and women of the regional disparities existing today in this country. Madam Speaker, perhaps this explains why today in the Province of Quebec, for instance, the polls indicate that the Conservatives have fallen to the lowest level ever, 17 per cent, at the same time as the New Democratic Party rose to 34 per cent in polls throughout the country and 34 per cent as well in the Province of Quebec, the highest level we have ever reached since World War II.

Madam Speaker, I want to remind my friends in all Parties how this happened in history. During World War II the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, which preceded the New Democratic Party, brought every kind of pressure to bear on the then Liberal Government to promote a social policy, a welfare policy, a full employment policy after the war. All Canadians had been disillusioned by the great depression. They wanted to make sure that, once the war was over, our country would be looking forward to a much more promising future than what they had lived through in the 1930s. Sure enough, they turned to the New Democratic Party because throughout World War II the CCF had been the only Party to claim that governments must serve the people, not major financial interests, not major companies, not the Canadian elite only.

Well, Madam Speaker, the pressure exerted by the CCF was so effective that, although we had only a handful of Members in the House of Commoms at that time, Canadian public opinion expressed itself through polls and all sorts of indications, to the point where they prompted the Government of former Prime Minister Mackenzie King to come up with a full employment policy.

The Liberal Government responded to the general wish for a Government which would show some concern for the needs of the people. For instance, the family allowance program was introduced, and so were some of the major social programs which now provide some support for all Canadians. It was only three years after the Second World War that the hospital insurance program came into being, and it too was due to the leadership shown by the CCF in Saskatchewan.

I am recalling these historical events, Madam Speaker, to reply to the Parliamentary Secretary who says, just like the Government did in 1983, that the priorities of the Canadian population, as expressed in the polls and as stated by the New Democratic Party, are of no interest whatsoever to the Conservative Government. Instead of wanting to follow the example of the former Liberal Government in the forties, instead of wanting to change the policies of the Government to develop a full employment policy, a policy to eliminate regional disparities among the provinces, a policy to maintain social programs, the Parliamentary Secretary is saying that he supports the policy of fighting the deficit and doing nothing to meet the other needs of Canadians. Obviously, the deficit is important. Everyone knows it, but unemployment is also important, as is the fight against regional disparities. It is in this context, Madam Speaker, that I want to make some comments on Bill C-44.

I would like to remind all my friends in the House of Commons and all Canadians who are watching this debate that, with this Bill, the Government is imposing a solution after failing in all its efforts to achieve a consensus among the provinces. There were indeed many meetings. That there was no agreement with the provinces is mostly due to the fact that the Government wanted to save money at their expense. Finally, this solution had to be forced on them.

This Bill brings about a technical change to the provincial equalization program. It will provide $175 million a year to the provinces and the Minister of Finance has promised that this will apply for one year.

But after having made all those promises on television, in public, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) changed his views, and now he will be putting that change in place over a two year period.

Madam Speaker, in view of the announcement made the other day by the Minister and in Bill C-44, I accept that they will not require a refund of overpayments made to provinces and that were discovered following the 1985 census. This means Quebec will not have to repay certain monies received under the equalization program without being entitled to them because its population had been over-estimated but that now have to be adjusted. But in the same breath, the Government insists that Quebec waive its claim to certain adjustments in the order of $100 million for fiscal year 1985-86, and I think for 1986-87.

It is also true, Madam Speaker, that in Quebec the other technical changes that are very important have to do with the payment checking program for established program funding and equalization payments. There seems to be very little time allowed for checking the figures, to make sure they are accurate. If there are indeed errors, the Canadian Government refuses to change its calculations. Quebec would like to be allowed a three to six months period after the final evaluation, in order that the provinces may check the figures. The technical change has not yet been made, but hopefully, after the representations made before the committee, that technical change can be made.

Madam Speaker, I note particularly the fact that the equalization scheme pursued by the Government is at odds with the commitments entrenched in the Constitution that equalization must be used to remove disparities between provinces and ensure that each province can provide comparable levels of public services at comparable levels of taxation.

Madam Speaker, I see in the Estimates for 1987-1988 an increase of only 2 per cent in the equalization payments and other payments with regard to that area. However, Madam Speaker, here are the figures as they appear in the Estimates, Part I, relating to government expenditures: it is indicated in the table, on page 40, that the fiscal transfer payments will increase from $5.768 billions in the 1986-1987 Main Estimates to $5.9 billions in 1987-1988. The difference is $134 millions or 2.3 per cent. That is all. Now, Madam Speaker, we have just heard someone describing the situation prevailing in Saskatchewan. We are familiar with the difficult situation in Alberta due to the decrease in oil prices and the problems with that industry. One wonders whether a mere 2.3 per cent increase in equalization payments will be enough to make up for increasing disparities in our country, a country where the unemployment rate in southern Ontario is down to 5 per cent and even to 4 per cent in some areas like Toronto, Kitchener and Waterloo, while it stays higher in seven other provinces, an unemployment rate like the one that prevailed during the 1981-82 recession. Will such a small increase be enough? I do not think it will.

I would also like to quote, Madam Speaker, from the French version of the summary of the Government Expenditure Plan regarding fiscal transfer payments: Fiscal transfer payments include equalization payments, subsidies under the Constitution Acts, Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer and Reciprocal Taxation. Equalization payments, accounting for some 95 per cent of these transfers, are unconditional payments to provinces to raise, to some standard level, the per capita revenue-raising capacity of lower-income provinces, in order that they can provide their residents with reasonable levels of public services at reasonable levels of taxation. The standard is determined by the average fiscal capacity of the five provinces of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec.

In fact, what the Government says is that he wants to raise, to some standard level, the revenue-raising capacity of the provinces, in order that they can provide their residents with reasonable levels of public services at reasonable levels of taxation. Now, I would like to quote Section 36(2) of the Constitution Act, 1981 according to which Parliament and the government of Canada are committed to the principle of making equalization payments to ensure that provincial government have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public services at reasonably comparable levels of taxation. There is no double standard to the Constitution; it is a comparable standard for everybody.

When a province like Newfoundland levies a sales tax of 11 or 12 per cent while in Ontario this same tax is only 7 per cent, would you say they are comparable? I would say no. If differences of income tax rates are as high as 40 percent from one province to another, can we say that personal incomes tax rates are comparable in Canada? Again, I say they are not.

If the provincial Minister of Finance suggests that Newfoundland is on the verge of bankrupcy because of income tax problems, can we, in all fairness, compare the situation of his province to that of Ontario where the liberal government has just received actually a heavenly gift of one billion dollars which has been already spent on gifts, new expenditures, new programs and so on? The premier of Ontario has just been visiting in Ottawa where he announced a $10 million grant to the Cardiology Research Centre at the Civic Hospital in my riding. It is a welcome announcement indeed but could the premier of Newfoundland do the same? The answer is no because Newfoundland does not have the same fiscal capacity as Ontario. Why is the commitment made in our Constitution apparently ignored by this government in its description of the fiscal transfer payment program for the 1987-88 fiscal year? Indeed, instead of providing public services at a roughly comparable level of quality the government now changes that commitment so that that level of quality be set according to an established standard. If I may, this is what they say in English and I quote:

[English]

Equalization payments—are unconditional payments to provinces to raise, to some standard level, the per capita revenue-raising capacity of lower-income provinces, in order that they can provide their residents with reasonable levels of public services at reasonable levels of taxation.

[Translation]

Now, Madam Speaker, does that mean reasonable as compared with Bangladesh, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) said a while ago, or as compared with all other Canadian jurisdictions? That is the question we must ask ourselves. And the Government would indeed answer that "reasonable" means as compared with England, perhaps with France, perhaps with underdeveloped countries, but certainly not with all the other provinces.

In fact, the Conservative Government, in power now for only two and a half years, fails to honour an undertaking that all three political Parties had solemnly taken during the Constitutional debate of 1981 and 1982.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I wish to say that we recognize, in our Party, how difficult it is to achieve full employment. I have just read this morning's editorial in The Globe and Mail, which states very clearly the economic performance of the Manitoba Government, showing how the NDP Government has reduced the unemployment rate and brought the growing rate of the economy to be the highest projected of all provinces for the fiscal year 87-88. I could always refer to the economic record of the New Democratic Governement in the Yukon Territory. About a year or a year and a half ago, they inherited a situation with an unemployment rate close to 20 per cent. Within a year, they reduced this rate by half. These, Madam Speaker, are the results of a real policy of full employment.

Last weekend, Madam Speaker, the NPD held its convention. I know that many Quebec voters watched us since it was held in Montreal for the first time. Yes, a great many of them did. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary—many of his constituents voted NDP because of our efforts in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Blais: Sixty-five delegates!

Mr. Cassidy: Yes. There were over a hundred delegates from the province of Quebec.

Mr. Blais: Sixty-five!

Mr. Cassidy: Including the delegates representing affiliated unions and other delegates. Now, Madam Speaker—

Mr. Blais: How many delegates from Bellechasse?

Mr. Cassidy: I emphasize the fact that our party has now established a beachhead in the province of Quebec and that we will hold onto it. We are now one of the three major parties at the national level because our support in Quebec in terms of polls, Madam Speaker, is twice as high as that of the Conservative Party. In fact, I think it is a good thing for this country that the Conservatives have taken a foothold in Quebec and that in spite of their bad results in polls both at present and in the future, in 1988-89, some of the Conservative members will be re-elected at the next election. Some of them. Maybe five, maybe ten, I don't know, but some of them. They will form a group with NDP members who will also be elected in the province of Quebec for the first time since the CCF member from Quebec was elected in the forties.

And, Madam Speaker, I said to my honourable friend the Parliamentary Secretary that it is a good thing that the Liberal Party will have some members elected in Western Canada at the next election, after so many years without any representation. The NDP will have seats in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, as well as the Conservative Party. It is very important, however, given that three major parties are coming before the people, that we emphasize full employment and a commitment to eliminate regional disparities and that we elect in Canada a government that will ensure a job to all Canadian women and men who are willing and able to work, and that the federal Government be committed to achieve full employment in this country.

As a conclusion, Madam Speaker, I will say that if the other parties, the old parties, are not prepared to make that commitment as the Mackenzie King government did during the forties, they will fall into oblivion since it is our party, the New Democratic Party, that will take office in order to give the Canadian people what they expect from a government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay).

Mr. Tremblay (Quebec East): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) said in the beginning of his remarks that equalization payments to the Province of Quebec had been cut. Obviously, he does not fully understand the substance of Bill C-44. It is not true, Madam Speaker, and I cannot see why the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre does not realize it. He should read the bill more carefully. He would then see by himself that the Province of Quebec got equalization payments amounting to $2.68 billion in 1986-87, that will go up to $2.783 billion in 1987-88. This represents a net increase of $103 million. Could the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre explain to this House what made him base his remarks on such a false premise?

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay). The figures I have before me—I asked a question to the Hon. Minister of Finance about them on March 2—show that equalization payments made to the Province of Quebec would be cut by $71 million and that the province would see its total transfer and equalization entitlements increase by $7 million only. During Question Period on March 2, I asked the Minister of Finance how he could justify that with a 6.6 percent unemployment rate, the Province of Ontario would get a $550 million increase on transfers and other federal payments while the Province of Quebec, with an unemployment rate over 10 percent, would only get $7 million more, which represents a $71 million decrease in equalization. I do not have all the details, but these are the figures I have.

Madam Speaker, since the Hon. Member has asked about the impact on Quebec, I could also mention the fact that Quebec is suffering and will actually be suffering a loss of approximately $30 million because of the fact that the Government has specifically excluded the duty on softwood lumber in its equalization calculations. Indeed, as a result of this decision to exclude the duty on softwood lumber, the Province of Quebec will lose $30 million in that area alone.

Mr. Tremblay (Quebec East): Madam Speaker, just to add to the seemingly incomplete data which our colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has in his possession, concerning equalization payments and other transfer programs, the federal Government's contribution will total over $8.6 billion for the Province of Quebec in 1987-1988.

Mr. Cassidy: Of course, Madam Speaker, it is a tougher proposition to have a battle of figures in the House. I quoted the figures that I thought were reasonable, according to the data provided by the Governement. I asked, and I am asking once again the following question: How is it, if the Government is committed to reducing disparities, that Quebec is getting such a minimal increase? I gave an aggregate figure of $7 million for fiscal transfers or equalization payments while Ontario will get a $550 million increase when we know that economic growth in Canada is mainly concentrated in the south. I already asked the question: How is it that according to Statistics Canada figures for the period going from January 1986 to January 1987, on the 137,000 new jobs created in Canada, only 5,000 were to be found in nine provinces while the 132,000 others went to Ontario? Is this the kind of fairness the Government is looking for? How can Quebec and the other provinces overcome the problem of disparities? How will they find enough tax revenues to pay for all the necessary programs and ensure their economic development if the jobs created are all concentrated in one province only, namely the Southern part of Ontario? This is the question. The Finance Minister often tells us that he is committed to achieve fairness among provinces and all the rest. But people won't judge only by his words but also by the facts. And when I look at the performance of this Government, I see that the bulk of the economic growth taking place at the present time in the country is concentrated in Southern Ontario. Surely this development is to be welcomed but that doesn't compensate for the fact that the recession continues in the rest of the country. This is unacceptable.

Message from the Senate

[English]

Mr. Gagnon: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) kept talking about deficit reduction not being important. He seems to be forgetting something; that is, fiscal responsibility. He said what was important was the unemployment rate. I would like to draw some comparisons between Canada and Australia. Australia has a prime rate of 18.25 per cent. Canada has a prime rate of 8.75 per cent. Over the last year the unemployment rate in Australia increased by 0.4 per cent. The unemployment rate in Canada has decreased by .1 per cent. What I am trying to say is we must have fiscal responsibility. The NDP think that if we vote the Socialists in it will be paradise. Australia did it and they are suffering. Unemployment is going up and their interest rate is more than twice ours. That is my comment and I hope the people of Canada understand that.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I would point out to him, of course, that when Canadians go to the polls in the next federal election they will make their judgment not on the basis of what is happening in Australia but on the basis of the performance of the Government of Canada. The opinion polls have the Conservatives at the lowest level of any Government in power in this country since they began taking polls. That suggests to me that Canadians are profoundly dissatisfied with the performance of the Government. They have reason to be. The Government has not been fair in ensuring that the people of Atlantic Canada, Quebec and western Canada get a fair deal in the distribution of economic opportunity. I do not think our country can work effectively if the message from the Government in the next election is, yes, we created jobs, jobs, jobs, but all in southern Ontario. If you do not have a job then get in your car or on a train and go to southern Ontario because that is where the work is. That is not good enough. I think people in Saskatchewan, Chicoutimi, Newfoundland, and the interior of British Columbia have a right to share in the economic wealth of this country and not have it all concentrated in one region.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), a very short question.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I am sad to have to say that last week Saskatchewan officially became a have-not province. That just shows that the Devine Government has not been doing a very divine job of managing the economy. After so many years of Alan Blakeney and the NDP we were a have province with balanced budgets year after year. For 11 years fiscal responsibility was the word. That was also the situation during the Ross Thatcher Liberal years and the CCF years of Tommy Douglas. All of a sudden we are a have-not province because of a massive deficit of $1.2 billion. That just shows how irresponsible Conservatives can be once they are in office. I am sure you wanted me to share that very sad news with the House. We will of course take the money but I am very sad we had to do it in that way.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's comments and share his regret. I particularly share his regret over the incompetent way in which the Devine Government promised its way back to power and then proved to be ineffective in resolving the economic problems of that province.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. Wilson, seconded by Mr. Crombie, moves that Bill C-44, an Act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

THE SENATE

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION ACTS 1867-1982—REFORM

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Prince Edward—Hastings) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing a measure to amend the Constitution Acts 1867-1982, in order to reform the Senate by providing, in particular:

1. that, 50 per cent of the number of Senators in each province be appointed by the Governor in Council and that the respective appointees also be residents of the province for which they are appointed;

2. that, 50 per cent of the number of Senators in each province be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governors in Council;

3. that, the tenure of Senate appointments be for the duration of a Parliament;

4. that, all Senators may be re-appointed;

Senate Reform

5. that, when a provincial election is called, the seats of all Senators of that province appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council be vacated and that the said Senators may be re-appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council after the provincial election;

6. that, where a Bill is not adopted by the Senate within ten sitting days after its receipt from the House of Commons, the Senate may require that the Bill be submitted to a joint conference committee of the two Chambers;

7. that, where a Bill is not adopted by the House of Commons within fifteen days after its receipt from the Senate, the House of Commons may require that the Bill be submitted to a joint conference committee of the two Chambers;

8. that, each House appoint seven members to the joint conference committee, and that the representation of the House of Commons reflect the proportion of the number of seats of each political party in that Chamber;

9. that, where a conference committee proposal fails to be adopted by both Houses, the original bill be withdrawn; and that this House urge the Senate and the Legislative Assemblies of all provinces to pass similar resolutions.

He said: I am delighted to have the opportunity to deal with this motion with you in the chair, Madam Speaker. Two other Members of this House, the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) and the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), have dealt with Private Members' Motions on the Senate. A number of my other colleagues in the House during those discussions have made comments and have spoken on the subject, as have many provincial legislatures and, indeed, the public. There has been a great deal written and a great number of comments regarding the cause of Senate reform. The thrust of most of the recommendations has focused on the so-called "triple E" concept that the Senate should be made effective, equal and elected. I want to endorse most strongly the call for effectiveness and for equality, particularly on a provincial basis. However, as you will see in a moment, Madam Speaker, I want to deal with a Senate which would be appointed.

The motion I put forward departs only from the comments made by colleagues in that they ask for an elected Senate. I propose an appointed Senate. If the only purpose of a geographically equal Senate were to balance this country's regional and population-based interest, I would probably go along with the idea of an elected Senate. However, my concept of the Senate goes beyond providing that particular balance to add the function of providing a Chamber of sober second thought, which was the initial intent. I feel that appointing the Senators will remove them from the passions and partisanship which is inevitable in the running for election.

I want to deal with the motion I put forward in some particular detail. First, I made the point that 50 per cent of the Senate should be appointed by the Governor-in-Council. I left out of my motion details such as how much land appointees should own in their particular area. I have said they should be residents of the province for which they are appointed. I purposely left this vague, because in a motion such as this, obviously, the Government would have some ideas. However, I think it is abundantly clear that if we were to appoint in the present manner only half of the Senate, the other half to be appointed by another group, we would find that those persons appointed to the Senate would tend to be legislators first. I say this without rancor and certainly without envy. Having been a very successful bagman for a political Party, having been the former president of a political Party, having been an organizer or in fact being an organizer for a political Party, would not necessarily be sufficient background to be named a Senator. The fact is that in the Senate I perceive, and which I support, there would necessarily be legislators first, and the Governor in Council, I think we would find as we go through this, would need to appoint men and women whose function would be legislative in the first instance.

The second point I make is that the other half of the Senate would be appointed by the Lieutenant-Governors of each province. Once again, I have purposely left the numbers vague. I think having a minimum number, for example, in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and those province which now have minimums, is something which can be dealt with by negotiation and by the Government of the day in consultation with the other provinces. In countries I could name, the representatives in the upper House do not vary in number that greatly despite the variables in the provinces or regions of the country which send them to the Senate. The United States, for example, has the same number of Senators in Rhode Island as it does in California. In Germany there are two Members of the upper House from the smallest of its states and only five from the largest. So some balance could be arrived at which would be fair.

In the concept I put before you, Madam Speaker, the Senators might well include a Cabinet Minister without portfolio in a province, a former Premier and very likely someone who was very closely involved with the politics of that province because he or she would be in the Upper House of Canada to deal with their regional responsibilities and they would be performing a specific duty.

The third item has to deal with both Houses and that is that the tenure of Senate appointments would be for the duration of a Parliament. There is no question that the Senators could be reappointed by Parties of either stripe. In the case of some appointments, I am sure the Governments of the provinces, or the Government of Canada, in appointing persons, might want to take from areas of business expertise certain members to put in the Senate. If they did, provision would have to be made, in my concept of the Senate, to allow for an extended leave of absence. It would be hardly fair for a corporate counsel of a major firm to be put in the Senate for one term and then expected to go back on the street. The likelihood would be that some form of leave of absence would be necessary and, as I indicated, all Senators could be reappointed.

Fifth, when a provincial election is called, the seats of all the Senators from the province in which an election is called would be vacated. The new government would appoint the Senators from that province. Rightly or wrongly, whether one agrees with the politics of the Parties I speak of, we have had in the Parliament of Canada, in the upper House, since—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Ellis: Do I not have 20 minutes? I just have 10? I am only half way through. Perhaps I could have a little extra time because I thought I had 20 minutes.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ellis: I thank my colleagues. My point is that whether or not one agrees with the politics of particular governments, since Confederation there have only been two Parties in the upper House, the Liberals and Conservatives. The numbers of Liberals or Conservatives depended upon the tenure of the Government in power.

Until recently there were three Governments—the Parti Quebecois in Quebec, the New Democratic Party in Manitoba, and the Social Credit Party in British Columbia—which at no time had a political say in the affairs of the Government of Canada. Whether or not one agrees with their politics, they were refused the right to have spokesmen in the upper House of Canada.

As part of my concept of the upper House, I want to deal with how the Senate would actually function. I state in my motion that where a Bill is not adopted by the Senate within ten sitting days after its receipt from the House of Commons, the Senate may require that the Bill be submitted to a joint conference committee of the two Chambers. Today, a Bill that is passed by the House of Commons will go to the Senate where it may sit interminably. Conversely, a Bill originating in the Senate may come to the House of Commons and sit here interminably. There has not been an effective refusal of a Commons Bill in the Senate for many years, and the reverse is true.

It seems to me that if both Houses are to do their job they should be in a position to seriously criticize and amend either's proposed legislation. However, there must be a provision that if a Bill goes to the Senate and sits there for a specific time and is not dealt with, it can come back to the House for final passage. As well, the reverse must be true.

If a Bill is sent back from one House to the other, there should be a joint conference committee of the two Chambers, made up of senior members who would, in their wisdom and experience, deal with the Bill and send it back to both Houses to either be passed after that joint consideration or left to die. In areas where such a procedure works, it is very rare that a Bill is allowed to die. There may be some changes but eventually the Bills are passed.

In conclusion, I have proposed a suggestion for a Senate. I do not favour abolishing the Senate because I believe it protects Canadians in many ways. I like the idea of a Senate that is more representative of the regions but I oppose the suggestion of an elected Senate. I believe the original thought of our forefathers in having the Senate above elections is worth while and my suggestion to the House is that there are ways of appointing Senators, providing there are rules that makes it work to the benefit of all Canadians.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to address this resolution this afternoon, essentially on my own. I am speaking from the Liberal side of the House and I do sit in the front benches. I am briefed and committed to the policy resolutions of our Party which I intend to share with the House, and I am committed to the views of our leader. However, I want to give some personal reactions because I believe I can make as good a contribution to the debate in that way.

The fundamental problem with the Senate, as I see it, is a problem of legitimacy. The Senate has a tremendous power that is legally and constitutionally the equivalent of the power we have in this Chamber.

Mr. Ellis: Ostensible.

Mr. Kaplan: My friend, the mover of the motion, is saying that the power is ostensible. The power is real. The power is constitutionally valid. No legislation in Canada can be enacted unless the other place deals with it and adopts it. Therefore, the power is real, but the legitimacy is missing because Canadians know and Senators know, and many of them have said that it would be unacceptable for the Senators to use power in the same way that we do so proudly and defensively in this place.

We make decisions, we speak for the Canadian people, and we have the credentials to prove it. Our membership in the House is established in such a way that we represent the people of Canada and I suggest that we would find it difficult to accept the negation of our will by the other place, even though it is proper to do that constitutionally.

That creates a dilemma for them in the other place. I imagine they want to perform their function but the only way they can do so under the present set-up might cancel the work that was done in this House. There is something significantly wrong with the Senate and I believe it is its legitimacy.

I do not believe this resolution addresses fully the problem of legitimacy. The mover of the motion mentioned at the outset that he did not want to deal with the proportionate representation by Senators. I appreciate that he is choosing not to address that, but I suggest that it is an essential component of a Senate reform package.

I want to talk about that for a moment because otherwise there is not much point in trying to market some of the ideas dealt with in this resolution directly. The Senate needs reform along the lines proposed by our Party at its national convention, which is that Senators should come from each province in equal numbers. That may shock the Hon. Member opposite if he did not know that our Party passed that resolution. But it does state that the Liberal Party of Canada has committed itself to an elected Senate with equal representation from each province.

This means that if Yukon, if it achieves provincial status, or little Prince Edward Island, will have the same strength in the other place as Ontario and Quebec. We are making this proposal to point out the need in this country for regions to feel that they have a voice here. This is particularly important in view of the behaviour of the present Government in relation to regional development or regional priorities. The Government committed itself to regional programs. It came to office and is awarding government contracts and business on a political basis. I only need remind Members about the decision on the CF-18.

Mr. Daubney: Relevance.

Mr. Kaplan: I think it is very relevant. I believe that people feel if they had an equal voice per province in the Senate that type of abuse could be stopped. They cannot look to the Senate to stop it now because it has a legitimacy problem. If the members of the Senate were chosen on an equal basis by the regions, as the Liberal Party recommends, I think people would look to the Senate. If there was a defense for what the Government was doing then the defense could be made in the Senate, chosen the way I have recommended.

• (1720)

When we look at the principle of representation in this House, which is "rep by pop", we have to ask ourselves why Prince Edward Island should have the same number of members as Ontario, and will it work. We think it should have, and we think it would work. Perhaps the best way in which I could demonstrate this is by using the example of the United States where Rhode Island has the same number of Senators as does California and New York. It does work. It would be an effective way of showing the Senate to Canadians as a place that has a legitimate right to intervene in our procedure. Canadians would accept its basis on that score.

I now wish to turn to the second point, which is whether Senators should be chosen on any basis other than on an election basis. Under the present system they are all chosen by the Prime Minister, by the Governor in Council. The recommendation in the resolution before us is that half of each province's delegation should be chosen as it is now and the other half should be chosen, in effect, by the provincial Government. Our resolution calls for direct election.

I want to try to convince the Hon. Member of the advantages of direct election. I heard his argument against it when he addressed the question. I am afraid that in the type of Senate he has proposed the temptation of a province with a desperate problem, with a perspective on national affairs, would be to send a delegated group to Ottawa knowing that they would be replaced from time to time as elections occur. This delegated group would be sent to Ottawa to speak for the perspective of the Government of the day governing that province. I can see a provincial Government using this forum to give some of its players a chance to strut their stuff on the national scene, to improve their credentials, perhaps for leadership of a party, or to improve their credentials for running for office in a riding which would be open in a future provincial election, or something of that nature. In other words, with this type of formula, especially with the reappointment provision, I can see Senators coming here under this procedure with a special agenda in mind.

One thing that can be said for the Senators who are chosen under our present system is that when they come here they tend to come for life. Of course, there have been one or two exceptions, but they tend to come for life. If they lose interest along the way and take an early retirement, while retaining their seat in the other place—retiring in the sense of their continuing contribution to public affairs—at least they do not have the other agenda which is: "Boy, as soon as the election comes along I'm running for a seat in Prince Edward Island", or a seat in Ontario.

I would like to see Senators come here from their provinces in the national interest. I do not think this motion achieves that. I am worried that provincial appointees will not rise above a provincial perspective. I am worried that the knowledge that they will not be reappointed, or may not be reappointed, will cause them to think ahead about their next career. Nothing is more fair than having an election to choose a spokesperson for the people of the country. Therefore I prefer to see the direct election of Senators, which is what my Party recommends.

Finally, I wish to address one other aspect of the question concerning the legitimacy of the Senate. I do not think that there should be equal authority as between the two Chambers. I think that if we move to an elected Senate the dispersal of power, in the type of checks and balances system we have, would weaken the national government in a way that would be against the national interest. I think a reformed Senate should have less authority, even with elected Senators. They should have less authority than those who are elected to this place which chooses the Government and to which the Government is accountable. This idea is not part of my Party's resolution. It is my own thinking with respect to how we would fill in the blanks. So I would like to see them have some sort of suspensory authority by which they could hold up legislation for a while.

In that connection I would like to turn to the idea that 10 days or 15 days is enough, as this motion proposes, for the Senate to gather its points of view together, and, failing to do so, then have a conference. I do not think that is realistic. I think the suspensory period should be for 90 days or 120 days, or something of that nature. In any event, it should be longer than 10 days.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to participate in this debate on yet another scheme for Senate reform. We spend enough time in this Chamber gilding lilies, we are now apparently reduced to gilding weeds. I say that since the resolution before us essentially envisages an expansion of the existing powers which the Senate now has, that is one thing members of my Party could not contemplate under any circumstances.

The previous speaker spoke of a Liberal policy resolution for an elected Senate. He went into some detail as to the virtues of such a scheme. In listening to him I think that each and every one of us was surely asking ourselves, and would ask him had we the opportunity, what possible significance a Liberal Party policy resolution—almost a contradiction in terms, as I am sure my hon. colleagues will note—could possibly have for the deliberations of this Chamber or, indeed, for the agenda of the country.

I think it was last week that we had a resolution before the Chamber that corresponded quite closely to a Liberal Party policy resolution that had been debated and voted on at that Party's convention last fall. If I recall correctly there were some 20-odd, perhaps close to 30, members of that Party who voted against the position of the Party as set out in the policy resolution. There were about four brave souls who saw fit to uphold the position in this Chamber that their Party had adopted in their policy convention. So much for the relevance of Liberal Party policy resolutions. After all, we are not here to discuss an elected Senate, which we can conveniently and perhaps with some pleasure dispose of as a viable contribution to Canada's constitutional debate at another time.

Essentially, what we are looking at is a resolution which, if it were to pass, would pit tradition and the Constitution against each other, even in a worse way than the Constitution has already been pitted against our most valued democratic traditions. This was the most unfortunate consequence of the 1982 constitutional entrenchment process. I say that because until we had the 1982 Constitution Act Canada's democratic traditions, which were inherited from the mother of Parliaments, Westminster, transplanted and grown ever more vigorous in the free and democratic soil of our country, stipulated a role for the Senate that was appropriate to the way in which the Senate is formed and the way in which it, if I can use the term ever so loosely, is regenerated. Up until 1982 it was clear to anyone who studied political science and to anyone who understood the democratic traditions of our country that the Senate did not have the power or the ability to impede or prevent the House of Commons from passing legislation. Of course, there would be those who will say that it is not the House of Commons, it is merely the Government of the day. Let them say that. For as I now sit on the opposition benches let me say that I will forever uphold the right of the Government, any Government, to legislate and to bring into law any project of legislation which it can persuade the majority in the House of Commons to pass.

• (1730)

In 1982 the Constitution was essentially silent on that lack of power with the Senate and some bold spirits, perhaps going against the democratic traditions of Canada, have argued that the Senate now in fact has the power to impede legislation. My hon. friend, the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), stated that the Senate was lacking legitimacy. It is now ever more lacking in legitimacy and was even before the last Liberal Government started its rampage of patronage appointments which contributed to its well-merited defeat in the last election.

I would even make the argument that the continued existence of the upper House is essentially un-Canadian because ever since Confederation in 1867 we in Canada, through the provincial legislatures, have followed a tradition of abolishing upper houses. Today we have reached the point where only one upper House remains, that being at the federal level. I, of course, would be glad to see that upper House abolished in the due course of time.

It seems that the resolution envisages something along the American model. I might point out that that which the Hon. Member for York Centre was proposing as a Liberal alternative was also modelled along the constitutional lines of the United States of America which has an equal number of Senators from each state. I ask all Members of this House and all Canadians to consider whether these imported models are relevant to the Canadian situation, or whether we as Canadians would not be much better advised, rather than striking out into uncharted waters and unknown territory, to continue the tradition which has been established at the provincial level and abolish this relic of history, the upper House, which has for so long haunted us and which now seems to have a very real danger of impeding the democratic will of the country.

In proposing this motion the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis) said that the Senate has protected Canadians. I wish a speaker in this House would come up with a concrete example which contains any degree of agreement on other than the most slender of partisan pretences. The fact is that, be the power of appointment with the provincial governments or with the federal Government, it is still a patronage power of appointment. Nothing in this resolution would lay upon Senators any responsibility to attend and participate in committee meetings.

I would like to take a moment to praise those members of the Senate who do attend and participate in committee meetings. Many of them make a valuable contribution. However, that does not mean that the institution itself should persist unchanged.

The alternative of provincial patronage might seem satisfactory to some. It would, after all, involve a distribution, a devolution if you like, of the patronage powers. These are the usual arguments that we have heard for the Senate alternatives that come up. Unfortunately, although some of them have a certain mathematical elegance, they overwhelmingly lack the characteristic of democratic participation except, of course, when an elected Senate is called for. All those arguments and schemes essentially ignore the terrible opportunities for conflict and dissension which could occur if there were an elected upper chamber setting itself against the will of the people as expressed in the election of the House of Commons.

I am confident that this resolution will go down to defeat. It always interests me to see another scheme for Senate reform but, overwhelmingly, this is not what Canadians want. If any Government were to put the fate of the Senate to Canadians in a referendum, we would have a unicameral Parliament in this country.

[Translation]

Mrs. Anne Blouin (Montmorency—Orléans): Madam Speaker, the resolution proposed today by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis) is a most interesting one. It reflects the Hon. Member's abiding interest in parliamentary reform and the depth of his thinking on this subject.

This resolution could open the doors of the Senate to improved regional representation by allowing the provincial Governments to appoint half of the senators representing them. The concept of the Senate as a "Council of Confederation" is not a new one. Many Senate reform proposals, including the more ambitious ones, have recommended some form of provincial representation. The pros and cons of this idea would merit careful consideration by this House, and although that is not the purpose of my speech today, I am sure one of my colleagues will raise this issue.

Madam Speaker, today I would like to draw the attention of the House to the second aspect of the proposal now being considered. It concerns the legislative process proposed by the Hon. Member and the power the Senate would have as a result.

According to the resolution, when a Bill is adopted by one Chamber and voted down by the other, Parliament would set up a mediation committee consisting of representatives of both Chambers and based on the proportion of seats each party has in the House of Commons. The proposal by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings implies that the committee would examine the Bill with a view to either smoothing out or reflecting the differences between Senators and Members and reaching a common position. The Hon. Member's proposal concludes, and I quote:

> That, where a conference committee proposal fails to be adopted by both Houses, the original bill be withdrawn.

It follows, Madam Speaker, that this would confirm the Senate's veto right over all actions of Parliament, as stated in the Constitution Act, 1867, a veto right that is no longer exercised today.

This constitutes the originality of the Hon. Member's proposal. None of the major Senate reform plans over the last twenty years recommends maintaining the absolute veto right of a Senate appointed either by the provinces, the federal Government or both. To those in favour of an elected Senate, only the proposal released by the Government of Prince Edward Island in 1983, confirms the legislative powers exercised by the Senate since 1867 while maintaining the Senate's absolute veto right.

None of the parliamentary proposals, including those by the senators themselves, and none of the federal Government's proposals have suggested that all the Senate's powers should be preserved. In fact, they recommended restricting those powers.

In its 1972 report the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada maintained practically unchanged the current system of appointment and the right of the Senate to study proposed legislation. However it did limit the Senate veto to imposing a six-month delay on any bill which would not have the full support of the Upper House. Then the House of Commons would simply have had to pass a new bill to reverse the unfavourable Senate decision and thus get the legislative process rolling again. On this question, Madam Speaker, Hon. Members and senators of the committee concluded:

> In the case of the Senate a curbing of its veto power would, paradoxically, strengthen it, and do so without weakening the House of Commons. It would increase the possibilities of confrontation, but avoid the perpetuation of deadlock by ultimately giving the House of Commons its way.

Under the 1978 bill on constitutional reform, the famous Bill C-60, it was proposed to turn the Senate into a House of the Federation, half it members being appointed by the House of Commons, the other half by the various legislative assemblies. This measure is not far removed from the Hon. Member's resolution. However it takes a totally different approach with respect to the absolute veto which would apply exclusively to the approval of appointments to the Supreme Court and senior positions of certain federal organizations. On most other issues the Senate would have had only a 60-day suspensive veto, after which the controversial measure could have been submitted to the Governor General without the House of Commons having to reconsider its position. The only exception had to do with legislation of a linguistic character or of federal-provincial importance. In both cases a Senate refusal could have been reversed only through a favourable vote by two thirds of the House of Commons.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, we are still a long way from the absolute veto over all legislative measures, as advocated by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings.

In 1980, the Senate Standing Committee on Legal and Constitutional Affairs also looked at Senate reform. In its report on some of the aspects of the Canadian Constitution, better known as the Goldenberg-Lamontagne Report, that committee recommended that the Senate be given a suspensive veto of a maximum of six months, after which the House of Commons would have to pass for a second time legislative measures that would have been rejected. According to that committee, such a delay and the requirement for a new debate in the House of Commons would allow the general public to be alerted and to make the necessary pressures to protect their interests.

Furthermore, those senators, who would themselves be the first affected by Senate reform, have rejected the idea of the absolute veto which they now have, for the reason that, in a democratic society, such powers could not be vested in a Chamber whose Members are appointed. The use of the absolute veto, according to those senators, would be tantamount to violating the will of the people.

More recently, the Joint Special Committee on Senate Reform, in its January 1984 report, came to the conclusion that an elected Senate was the best means of giving the Upper Chamber the required political authority.

That committee, Madam Speaker, also refused to maintain the Senate's absolute veto, even if it were an elected Senate, thereby empowered by the nation's will. In that respect, the committee wrote: "The principal factor in our decision not to accord the Senate an absolute veto was the possibility, if not the probability, of our parliamentary institutions continually becoming deadlocked. We therefore decided that it was wiser and more in keeping with the character of parliamentary government to give the Senate the power to delay but not altogether prevent the adoption of measures voted by the House of Commons."

The report therefore recommended a suspensive veto of a maximum of 120 sitting days. This means that bills rejected by the Senate within the 60 sitting days following their transmission to that House, according to that formula, would have to be passed by the House of Commons a second time. That second adoption could not take place unless at least 60 sitting days has elapsed since the Senate rejected the bill. Therefore, that formula could enable the Senate to delay for a number of months the implementation of a bill it felt was unaceptable, but could not enable it to cripple the Commons and the Government.

However, this did not appear to be enough to eliminate the absolute veto, and the 1984 Joint Committee wanted to further restrict the powers of the Senate by limiting the use of the suspensive veto by exempting all supply bills. On that matter, the Committee wrote: "To give the Senate even a suspensive veto in such a vital area would amount to giving it a disguised power to overturn the government. We therefore propose that the Senate have no power over appropriation bills (including the main, interim and supplementary estimates)."

The only case where the Committee judged it appropriate to maintain the absolute veto of the Senate was the adoption of bills or parts of bills with a linguistic significance. To give the French linguistic and cultural minority a fair over-representation on matters which directly concern them, the Committee had recommended that any legislation of linguistic significance be approved by a majority of all Senators including a majority of the francophone Senators. In the 1984 report, this was the only instance where it was recommended to maintain the absolute veto held by the Senate since 1867.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, each time that Parliament and the Federal Government have examined Senate reform in the last 15 years, it has been recommended that the absolute veto be eliminated. Whether the reform proposed was for an appointed Senate, an assembly of provincial delegations or an elected Chamber, whether it was on the basis of legitimacy or government efficiency, it has in each case been recommended that the powers of the Senate be restricted to a suspensive veto on the great majority of legislative measures. Most proposals by provincial Governments and groups interested in this issue, most if not all of the proposals made in the last 20 years, have recommended the same thing.

Madam Speaker, the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings is an exception to the rule. By maintaining for the Senate powers identical to those of the House of Commons, this motion puts the appointed Chamber in direct competition with the elected Chamber. In the motion, only trust in the good faith of parliamentarians guarantees that the will of the population as expressed by its elected representatives will prevail in case of a deadlock. I admire this trust of the Hon. Member in the good faith of parliamentarians, but I am afraid that it will not be enough to protect us from frequent stoppages of the legislative process. In my opinion, the proposal would be more credible if it provided for an unblocking mechanism such as a suspensive veto.

I ask my colleagues in this House to reflect on this aspect of the matter before deciding whether to support this motion today.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for bringing an extremely important subject to the floor of the House of Commons.

In 1975 the Hon. Member came to speak in my riding, and I have been elected four times since. If he comes to my constituency again and talks about Senate reform, I could get elected another four times.

There is probably no place in Canada which has more of a grass roots, broadly spread desire for changes to the Senate than has the Province of Alberta. This came about because of a bleeding away from that province of some $30 billion as a result of the Liberal National Energy Program. It brought about a sense of anger which is so deep-rooted in Alberta that today it believes the only way in which it will be able to sustain a sense of fairness in Confederation is with a reformed Senate.

Another observation I want to make—and I make it particularly as a result of the comments of the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry)—is that indeed this country is naive if we are of the presumption that there are no problems among our regions. In fact, I find it surprising that a Member from northern Ontario would not want some sense of regional balance in a federal system.

Although my good friend, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings, would have some differences of view in respect of the specifics of a reformed Senate, I want to start out by saying how much I commend him for introducing the idea in the House of Commons. I believe that political bodies ought to be elected. I know that that view differs from the views of others in the House, and those views are legitimately held, but I believe they ought to be elected. As was the case with the Magna Carta some 700 years ago, the whole purpose of politics in a democracy is for the people to have a sense of power. That cannot come about unless the citizens believe that their representatives are elected and that they have a chance to put them in and a chance to throw the rascals out. That sense of power must be present.

Let us take a look at Canada. It is about 4.5 thousand miles wide. Its population is largely concentrated within 100 miles of the American border, a ribbon which stretches from Vancouver Island to Prince Edward Island. There are more Members of Parliament from the urban areas of Toronto and Montreal than there are from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, Yukon, Northwest Territories, and two-thirds of British Columbia, northern British Columbia. In other words, two cities outnumber about 75 per cent of Canada's land mass. Surely that signals the need for regional balance in political decision making.

I do not want to recite an old adage which demonstrates triteness, partly because I cannot remember it just now. However, we have all heard that fine saying that if we destroy the cities, the hinterland will develop new cities, and that if we destroy the hinterland, the grasses will grow in our cities. I simply say to you, Madam Speaker, that all that a city is is a processor of the hinterland. It does nothing else except manufacture what it takes from the hinterland. It ensures that what is taken out of the hinterland can be manufactured for resale to those in that area of the country. I do not use the word hinterland in any derogatory way. I am very proud because that is the resource base—the fish, the lumber, the minerals, the like.

I believe that if there is a concern that we ought to be reflecting upon today, it is that concern that arises from the void that existed in this country in the mid-1970s because we had no Senate with any effective power. The Government of the day began the process of institutionalizing First Ministers' Conferences. Premiers began to fill that gap that the Senate had or ought to have filled.

The result of the proposed process, as I see it, is that the Senate would simply be appointed by provinces or a federal Government. I hold that that would do away with what I think this country is aching for, namely, a federal system for which the citizens of the country could have and respect. There is a thirst within Canada to want to be Canadian, irrespective of whether one is from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan or the Territories. We want a federal system that works.

We have heard a lot in western Canada about a "triple E" Senate, one "E" to mean elected. That I accept because I accept that power should be with the people. The other "E" is equal. On that I want to expand for just a moment because I am a product of six years of university in the United States. I recognized that in America little Rhode Island had two Senators to offset two Senators from California. Great big heavily populated New York had two Senators to offset 500,000 or 600,000 persons in Wyoming which had two Senators.

Frequently in the U.S. people talk about "us" and "we" while Canadians have this all too often tendency to talk about "I" and "them", pointing at each other across the map. Yet I submit there is less difference between a person from Dallas and one from Boston than there is between a person from Edmonton and one from Toronto. Perhaps that reflects the fact that we do not have within any federal institution a sense that we all have some equal partnership in our federation. I believe that equality is also important.

I might add, parenthetically, one other observation, Madam Speaker. Let me refer to United States Senators Dave Church, a former Senator from Idaho, Mike Mansfield, again a former Senator who used to be the Senate majority leader, and Senator Barry Goldwater of whom we have all heard. The Senators who had prominent positions were the ones who came from the smallest populated states because that was part of the unwritten law, and it brought a sense of equality.

My final point is that of effectiveness, Madam Speaker. That is where I believe the institution ought to be measured in its judgment and that is what the real debate is about. It is important that we have a Senate that is elected, that is equal, but probably with some measure of control so that it could not always force one vote by one person to reverse House of Commons legislation. This would mean it could have sober second thought and it could demand another reflection. If that were so, I think the citizens of the nation by and large would send to the House of Commons the necessary signals to bring the balance we need in debate in this place.

I see that my time is up, Madam Speaker. I want to conclude by thanking the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings for bringing such an important Bill to our attention.

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, in the few minutes remaining in private Members' hour, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on the motion sponsored by a very distinguished private Member of this House, the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings (Mr. Ellis). His motion has given us an opportunity today to look at the broad issue of Senate reform, a subject that has received considerable attention over the years, probably starting on July 2, 1867.

The Prime Minister of that day, our first Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, coined the phrase "sober second thought". I think it is clear, although it is certainly a moot point, that from Confederation to the present day the Senate has made an important contribution in the area of legislative review. But the Fathers of Confederation also intended that the Senate should have a regional representation function. They used the expression "sectional interests" as being protected. I think few of us would deny that the second principle function intended for the Senate is not being carried out effectively.

Why is it that the Senate is not able to play an effective role in regional representation? Again, there is broad agreement in this House, and I think across the country, that for Senators to be appointed by the federal Government until age 75 lessens the ability of Senators to represent their regions. As pointed out by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), the public does not accord a high level of legitimacy to Senators, largely because of the appointment method. As a result, the Senate lacks the authority to exercise the substantial powers it has under the Constitution. I think the Senators themselves, however willing and able they might be, are not seen as defending regional interests.

It seems quite clear that the principle purpose behind many recent proposals for Senate reform has been to restore to that chamber its intended role in regional representation. That is certainly one of the main aims of the Hon. Member from Prince Edward—Hastings. Some have pointed out that in the absence of a sufficiently strong second chamber, provincial Governments and Premiers have, on occasion, stepped in to try to fill that gap. Others have observed that our electoral system has created the impression that the support for national political Parties in particular regions is much lower than it really is. They also point out that in its present form the Senate cannot help to compensate for the imbalances in elected representation in this House.

There are other arguments for an enhanced regional representation role for the Senate, but in the end most of them share a common goal, to allow Canada's Senate to play the sort of role that second chambers play in other federal systems.

What is the evidence that improved regional representation has become the main focus of Senate reform proposals? I would suggest there is a substantial body of evidence to this effect, Madam Speaker. The former Special Joint Committee on Senate Reform was asked in its terms of reference, for example, to:

> Report on ways by which the Senate of Canada could be reformed in order to strengthen its role in representing people from all regions of Canada.

The committee, as you know, heard many witnesses from various regions and sectors of Canadian society. Although their views and proposals differed, it is fair to say that more witnesses called for the Senate's regional representation role to be strengthened than for any other function to be emphasized.

In the remaining minute or so I would like to refer to one witness, a strong representative from western Canada, Dr. David Elton, President of the Canada West Foundation who said:

> In this country what we really need are regional spokesmen in Ottawa, not provincial Governments per se, but regional spokesmen who can address the concerns of their constituents and ensure that they have a meaningful role to play in the deliberation and the legislation that the national Government brings into existence.

I appreciate that my time has expired and I thank the House for its attention, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay) would have liked to address the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hour set aside for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION—DEMAND FOR DETAILED INFORMATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, last Friday, or last week in any case, I rose in the House to raise a matter I felt was important. I wanted to shed some light on the sale of certain federal services, more specifically the Surveys and Mapping Services and the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing at the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and the Canadian Hydrographic Survey at Fisheries and Oceans. The House will recall that the issue raised quite a few comments for about ten days, and that finally, the Government put an end to the debate in the House by giving us the whole truth, saying it had no intention of privatizing these services which were judged to be essential.

The main point of my intervention at the time consisted in showing that the Government was sometimes hard-pressed to be clear to Canadians about its intentions and how it would proceed. Anyone who did not keep track of the Government's record in this debate might have thought this was an exception, an isolated incident, but it seems to be a pattern, a scenario that is being repeated time and time again.

This evening, I would like to raise a matter which I think will be of considerable interest to Hon. Members, and on which this Government is still hesitating and dragging its feet. I am referring to the Official Languages Act and the promise made by this Government in two Throne Speeches and during the 1984 election campaign. It has been said repeatedly in this House, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the responsible Ministers, including the Secretary of State, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Justice, that the Government intends to table amendments to the Official Languages Act. The latest question on the subject, Madam Speaker, which is the subject of my speech this evening, goes back to December 11, 1986, at page 2022 of Hansard.

The Official Languages Act has been in existence for nearly seventeen years. As so many of us, it is showing its age, and needs some improvements. It needs to be modernized, to be updated, to reflect today's reality, and I do not think I know a single Member of this House who is against the suggestion, as I said, that the legislation be brought before this forum, this Parliament so that we might update it, strengthen it and amend it as required.

And this is becoming urgent because mentalities have changed in Canada since it was adopted in 1969. We must admit indeed that the situation has changed. The Constitution was repatriated and it has brought on many significant changes concerning the whole linguistic issue, and there have been a number of judgments by various Canadian courts about the interpretation to be given to both the Constitution and the Official Languages Act.

The result of all this is that we need leadership, we need amendments to the Official Languages Act. I think it is imperative that the matter be dealt with by the House, that the Government show leadership and, as I said earlier, that it find solutions to the important questions of national culture and identity, that it give a new spirit, if you like, a new vigour to the Official Languages Act and its application.

Madam Speaker, basic reforms are a must if we want to meet the challenges of the years 2000. A whole new generation has been raised in this atmosphere, this new climate, this new way of thinking and seeing things.

I believe that this generation is increasingly willing to accept both Canadian realities and to accept that they can flourish without either one being threatened. I do not believe that anyone could demonstrate today that, by asserting my rights as a francophone, I could in any way weaken or diminish the rights of the English-speaking majority, and vice versa, in Quebec, I do not believe that an English-speaking Canadian who asserts his right to use his own language at home can threaten in any way the identity or right to exist of the Quebec majority.

Madam Speaker, I am not alone in saying that it is essential to amend the Official Languages Act. As I have already pointed out, the Prime Minister has repeated on many occasions in the House and during the electoral campaign, and the Government has given Canadians hope in two Speeches from the Throne that this legislation will be amended. Until now, we have heard only promises and endless excuses, but as we all know, Madam Speaker, there are limits to anyone's patience, and I believe that the Government should now set some time table for the Canadian public and announce what will be done about the linguistic issue. The Government should introduce amendments as soon as possible during this session so that we may look at them and discuss them with our usual openmindedness. Such a process can only lead to a piece of legislation which will be much more appropriate to this day and age.

• (1805)

We must not hesitate too long because to do so could lead to other instances of what we saw in the case of the RCMP. Certain agencies could use such an opportunity to make undesirable changes by saying that there is a vacuum which must be filled. I want to invite the Parliamentary Secretary, in the spirit of reform and to show that this Government and this Parliament speak for all Canadians, to give to all the Government agencies which might be somewhat impatient and want to take action a firm and specific indication this evening that amendments will be introduced in the near future.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, it is on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) tonight that I am providing details on the questions raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). First, Madam Speaker, concerning the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as the President of the Treasury Board already indicated, the Treasury Board has neither considered nor approved of any reduction for whatever reason in the RCMP's or any other federal institution's goals for hiring employees or recruits whose first official language is French. Policy changes proposed by the RCMP in that respect will be submitted to his colleagues in the Treasury Board and to himself for consideration.

With respect to the many complaints that were filed with the Commissioner of Official Languages against the Canadian Security Intelligence service, as was mentioned by my colleague the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) here some time ago, action already has been taken to remedy the situation. This action includes the appointment of a larger number of bilingual officers at headquarters, the enhancement of language skills for certain key positions, as well as an increase in the envelope for translation, in order that written communications be provided in both official languages.

As far as language training is concerned, the expected Public Service Commission staff reductions will not lead to any reduction in the use of French in Government Departments because, wherever possible, language teachers will be moved to other positions within the Public Service itself. On the contrary, changes to the language training policy and staff restructuring within the Public Service Commission are a major initiative in terms of efficiency and effectiveness in the area of official languages. As Hon. Members know, the Government will still be picking up the costs of language training needed for operational requirements, and also encouraging language training with a view to improving individual career prospects. Training opportunities will not be reduced, neither inside departments nor regarding the employees.

As to the question of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier concerning the presentation of the Bill amending the Official Languages Act, I cannot but repeat the statement the Prime Minister made on that subject on the 5th of December last year. If it is not before Christmas, it will be shortly after, due to the consultations the Government absolutely wants to hold on that matter.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the Government is well aware of the necessity to increase the francophone representation among the administrative group. You can rest assured that it spares no effort to that end. Along with the Public Service Commission, the Treasury Board keeps a watchful eye on the matter. Given the circumstances, of course, it may still take a few years before we reach a completely satisfactory situation, but the President of the Treasury Board wants you to know that this principle is of the utmost importance for the Government, and that all fair measures are taken, while respecting the merit principle, in order to continue increasing the francophone representation in the administrative group of the federal Public Service.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY—OPPORTUNITY TO INCREASE FUNDS FOR RESEARCH. (B) APPROVAL OF PROJECTS

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in preparing for my remarks this evening I was reminded of a comment made by John Polanyi, the Nobel laureate, at a dinner in his honour in Ottawa several weeks ago. A video tape had been shown, touching on some of the highlights of his remarkable career. In characteristically modest fashion, Professor Polanyi said that his work was but an element of the story of Canadian achievement past, present and future. "The question is", he said, "how long will that future be postponed"?

Canadians are still waiting for an answer to that question from the Conservative Government. Indeed, all we have seen since the last election are reversals and confusion, a policy and a Government that is in disarray. The saga of Canada's participation in the space station is a perfect illustration of a policy and a Government in disarray.

When I asked my question regarding cuts at the National Research Council, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) denied for the umpteenth time that there had been any cuts at the National Research Council. Who did the Minister think he was fooling? Surely not the small businesses in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan that I visited in September and October, prior to the announcement of the cuts. They told me that their projects had been put on hold because of a lack of funding in the Industrial Research Assistance Program, which is one of the most effective government programs in helping small and medium-sized businesses across Canada to do research and become innovative.

The truth is that the Cabinet ordered a cut in that program. However, the Minister had to back down following a wave of protest from across the country and when the members of the board of directors of the National Research Council refused to take that direction from the Government to cut IRAP.

While the Government announced its participation in the space station over a year ago, we still do not know today where the money is coming from to pay for that program. We know that the National Research Council was forced to contribute some $60 million. The Minister was asked by an Ottawa Citizen reporter last fall to provide a list of the exact sources of money. He declined to do so because, he said: "It might cause my colleagues at other Departments unnecessary problems".

We have had a hint of some of these problems in recent days. We have learned that regional development moneys will go into the space program. Indeed, the Cabinet has ordered the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to take some $35 million and $5 million respectively, or a total of $40 million, from the Laprade Fund and the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé Funds to pay for our participation in the space program.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, not a single cent of that money will go back to the Mauricie, Bois-Francs or Gaspe areas, because there are no opportunities there. There is no research facilities and there is no way that part of the country can participate in the space program. Consequently, funds that had been earmarked by the Government for regional development are being secretly taken away, without the Government telling the truth to the Canadian population.

• (1815)

[English]

I mentioned this to the Minister several weeks ago and he expressed surprise that we had obtained the information. He wondered how we had got it. A researcher from the Library of Parliament got it through a simple telephone call to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Minister really outdid himself in answering a question I put to him two weeks ago. I again asked him when he would be able to provide us with details of the funding of the space program. He replied: "I do not know if I will ever be able to provide such information, if I will ever know what the answers are". Does that not inspire confidence in the Government? Canadians can really sleep well tonight knowing that our Government is in such good hands.

Professor Polanyi was once again disappointed by the Government when it announced its science and technology strategy 10 days ago. Our future is still on hold. I do not know if you have seen this policy statement, Madam Speaker. It is a very fancy policy statement. It looks like a placemat. It is pretty. It has the coats of arms of the provincial and territorial Governments. It has the signatures of the Ministers, but there is not one more nickel for research funds. I hope that one of these days the Government will learn that what we need is more spending for research, not cutting. The Minister will learn that we cannot solve problems by throwing promises endlessly at them.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, as usual, the Hon. Member has departed from the question he asked and it is really annoying. The question he asked was why the Government has reduced IRAP funding by $60 million, thereby jeopardizing the competitiveness of Canadian industry, particularly small and medium-size business. The Hon. Member did not deal with that question at all, and that is what he asked.

I am pleased to respond today because it provides the opportunity to set the record straight on this issue. Simply, the Government never cut the NRC IRAP Program by $60 million. The Hon. Member should know that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) gave his personal assurances that the level of IRAP grants in 1986-87 would not be any less than in previous years.

As the Hon. Member is so poorly informed about federal science and technology policy, perhaps he will not mind if I take a moment to educate him. Let me first say that the Government's actions with respect to the NRC have been part of a consistent policy. The Speech from the Throne announced the opening of a major effort to carve out a significant place for science and technology in the culture of Canada.

Had we taken office with a clean slate, there would have been few problems in meeting these objectives. Instead, we inherited a crisis situation which was built up by the Party to which the Hon. Member belongs. Years of unrealistic spending has led to an intolerable deficit position. Federal science and technology expenditures were an unco-ordinated grab-bag of programs, many just bricks and mortar, not science, working in isolation and often at cross-purposes. This meant that we could not move as freely or as quickly as we wanted. In particular, we found that the federal Government science and technology effort was in poor shape. There was no consistent national science and technology policy or priorities. As a result, the efforts of federal agencies, provincial organizations, universities and industry were unco-ordinated and, at times, ineffective. Funding for the granting councils was not secure, and vast sums were being spent on additional bricks and mortar for various federal facilities. Finally, the scientific research tax credit was losing significant tax revenue with little result.

Since taking office the Government has worked on four different fronts. First, we halted the SRTCs and replaced them with a refundable tax credit designed to help all Canadian companies, especially small start-up firms. Second, we have given the granting councils a guaranteed funding base for the next five years. From this measure alone, the university research community could receive over $1 billion in additional funds over the next five years. Third, we have developed a national consensus on science and technology that fully involves all players. The product of this consensus building, which has recently been announced by the Minister of State for Science and Technology in Vancouver, is a national science and technology policy setting out the framework for a more co-ordinated and vigorous national effort in R and D. Fourth, we have begun to rationalize the Government's laboratories system, including NRC, to focus federal efforts on support to industry.

All these measures have been put in place within the constraints imposed by the deficit position. Despite these constraints the Government is finding additional resources when requested by NRC to meet new requirements. In fact, NRC is getting an additional 62 person-years for its operations next year.

In summary, the situation at NRC has been misrepresented and exaggerated out of all proportion by the Opposition. In actual fact the reductions which have taken place were necessary but very limited. The impact on people is being contained and the NRC remains a strong and viable research facility with new resources in important areas such as biotechnology.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—FORTHCOMING MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT. (B) NEED FOR UNITED STATES COMMITMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, as you well know, the subject I raise tonight is with respect to acid rain. It is becoming evident that the Government's acid rain strategy is falling apart. We have now reached a stage at which getting President Reagan to live up to a commitment made a year ago has been proclaimed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to be a very significant movement. The fact of the matter is we are now locked into a five-year research and demonstration program. This is a program that will have no benefits to our dying lakes, forests and ecosystem because there are no commitments within the program to cut acid rain.

As Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain put it:

> Clean coal technology isn't the key to the solution . . . Emission reduction is the key.

I ask myself and the Parliamentary Secretary what the Prime Minister will be bargaining for at the summit on April 5 since he accepted with open arms yesterday President Reagan's proposed solution with respect to continuing with more demonstration projects. Not only has the Prime Minister accepted it, he has done so three weeks before the summit begins. Thus he has basically given away any bargaining position that he might have had. He could have remained silent and prepared on the basis of a position for Canada that would go well beyond what was announced yesterday in Washington by President Reagan. One has to ask oneself what the Prime Minister will be asking at the summit now that he has said: "Hurrah, that is what we want". Yet it was something promised a year ago, and it was for more than demonstration and research.

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary when the Government will muster the necessary courage—and not very much is needed—to say in a straightforward and plain manner to President Reagan that what we want is not more research and demonstration but cuts in acid rain. We want a significant program from the Canadian point of view with deadlines, percentages and dates such as we have launched on the Canadian side. We want to move ahead together in the interests of Americans and Canadians. One begins to wonder why the Government is pussyfooting around instead of saying it as it is. The basic mistake was made a year or two ago when this Envoy's report was launched and it was decided that we should go for research and development. Time is running out. Years are going by and the environment is still subject to deterioration and constant acidic precipitation.

• (1825)

We are not alone in saying this. Henry Wexman, the U.S. representative in Congress, says that by accepting President Reagan's pledge our Prime Minister has been accused of "selling out the Canadian people and the Canadian environment". He went on to say, "I am surprised that the second time around the Prime Minister would not see through the President's hocus-pocus . . . This is a betrayal of our common environment".

As another example, Clifford Lincoln, the Quebec Minister of the Environment, said Reagan's promise "sounds good until you read between the lines. There's nothing about limits of reduction. There's nothing about abatements. There's nothing about timetables. The signal is very clear to us. We've got to start pushing and screaming a little louder". That is what a distinguished Minister of the Environment in Canada is saying.

If that is not enough, Senator George Mitchell, the Chairman of the U.S. Senate Subcommittee on the Environment, said last week: "I hope the same thing does not happen again", namely this acceptance by the Prime Minister of President Reagan's diplomatic solutions. Congressman Sikorski chimes in along similar lines. I have already told you what Michael Perley of the Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain has said. I will quote another distinguished American—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I suggest to the Member that if he does want an answer it may be to his advantage to give the floor to the Parliamentary Secretary.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, of course questions are important but sometimes the answers are also. One must surely have to be quite bold to ask such a question and challenge us about our achievements. When one really considers what we have done . . . This Government, Madam Speaker, has done more to solve the problem of acid rain—and besides it has been recognized by everyone including the media—than the previous Governement.

The Prime Minister met with President Reagan in Quebec City in March 1986. They decided to conclude an agreement. During that time, the Opposition was chuckling and laughing and still was looking for dirt and scandals.

Then, Madam Speaker, the representatives appointed by the United States and Canada met to discuss acid rain and means to solve the problems. They came up with recommendations and findings. The U.S. President and Mr. Mulroney met in Washington in March 1986, one year later. They accepted those findings and promised to take the necesssary action. During that time, our opponents on the other side were still looking for dirt and scandals. They were not making any comparison with what had been done in past years.

Today, Madam Speaker, my colleague for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), a Member of the party opposite, has risen in the House to address the disastrous effects of acid rain on maple trees and said that conditions will be worse four years from now. I fully agree with him and I find it terrible. The people in my Beauharnois—Salaberry riding agree. However, Madam Speaker, acid rain is not the result of the election of a Tory Government in September 1984. The problems did not happen overnight after the election of the Tories. What was done before Septembre 1984 in that regard? If these problems are so catastrophic as is the case today, it is because absolutely nothing was done in the past. Do you know what he proposed for a solution? Will the producers receive any money? That is what has always been done. They think money can buy them peace of mind. That is not the solution. We have to take the proper means.

The last announcement . . . Mr. Bush did indeed come here, Madam Speaker, when we indicated how concerned we were about the agreement that was signed with Mexico; he took the trouble to come here in person. It did not happen when the Members opposite were in government. They were still scouring the garbage cans for scandals. What happened last Wednesday in Washington? Funds were allocated. Let us trust people who are sane and who wish to build a better world as fast as they can.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House in now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.31 p.m.

WELFARE

NEED FOR FOOD BANKS CONDEMNED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last night Liberal Leader John Turner and Hamilton Mountain Liberal Beth Phinney had a first-hand chance to see how poverty is affecting the people on Hamilton Mountain. They visited the Neighbour-To-Neighbour Food Centre on Hamilton Mountain. I think it is a crying shame that in this day of plenty in 1987, ridings across this country should have to open food banks in order to feed our poor and hungry.

The Government in the last three Budgets has taken more money out of the hands of the poor, the working class and ordinary Canadians, and put it into the hands of rich Canadians. Now the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has the nerve to talk about tax reform. We saw the reality last night on Hamilton Mountain. When our candidate Beth Phinney took our Leader to the food banks, she was able to show him that it is not only in the cities people are hurting. People are hurting in the suburbs. They are hurting in every riding across the country.

I think it is imperative that the Government come out with a national attack on poverty to ensure that in 1987 people do not have to stand in line for food for themselves, for their children and for their families. That is a decent policy, that is a Liberal policy, and that is the policy that Beth Phinney is going to promote when she comes here to Ottawa.

CHALLENGE '87

JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, much has been said in the House recently about Challenge '87 and youth job creation. I rise today to commend the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) for his fine job in furthering the federal Government's attempt to provide meaningful job opportunities for the youth of our country.

Last year I was pleased to see how successful Challenge '86 was for northern Ontario youth. Over $8.2 million was contracted to northern Ontario under the program which resulted in creation of 4,600 jobs. Students from across the North greatly benefited from Challenge '86, and this year students will have the same enjoyment of this successful program.

• (1105)

I am very happy to see that the federal Government has recognized the special needs of youth in northern Ontario, and we have responded. Again I commend the Minister of State for Youth for his efforts in recognizing the regions of our country, and the Government of Canada for the employment of our youth.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SASKATCHEWAN RESIDENT'S OPPOSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Canadians finally received a clear picture of who is really pushing for free trade in Canada. It is a Liberal-Conservative big business alliance which drew itself together with Donald Macdonald, Peter Lougheed, people such as Philippe de Gaspé Beaubien, and people supporting them from all of the major corporate groups in the country.

I wish to place on the record the voice of someone from central Saskatchewan, someone from the riding of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) who wrote to the Minister saying:

> I believe it is a mistake to attempt to negotiate a free trade deal with the U.S. while there are such strong protectionist sentiments down there . . . We don't want to sell the farm to buy a shovel.

He goes on to make a very strong case and concludes:

> Mr. Reisman should be instructed to quietly pack up and come back home.

That is the position of our Party, too.

FINANCE

PHASING OUT OF INVESTMENT TAX PROGRAM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the investment tax credit was instituted back in the mid-1970s. It turns out that the ITC was not intended to stimulate employment in the production of machinery and equipment. The purpose, according to Finance officials, was to enhance productivity by encouraging more investment in equipment.

Clearly, the ITC ought never to have applied to agriculture. The ITC is a program which encouraged wealthier farmers to flip equipment for tax purposes. It is a program which was not even intended to stimulate employment in the manufacturing of equipment in Canada, a program which did little to enhance productivity in western agriculture—a sector which is already highly productive. It is a program which has cost the Canadian Treasury hundreds of millions of dollars, moneys which might have been better used on other agriculture programs.

The investment tax credit was another Liberal program, like the scientific research tax credit—ill-conceived, poorly designed, and open to abuse.

I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for recognizing the ITC as a program without purpose and for acting to phase it out.

AEROSPACE

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH NEW SPACE AGENCY IN MONTREAL

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, for a number of weeks now Montreal has been urging that it be designated as the site of the space agency headquarters. Board of Trade President Manon Vennat and Chambre de commerce President Marcel Daoust have made strong representations to have the agency located in Montreal.

Yesterday's Le Devoir stated: "Space centre in Montreal considered as realistic and challenging vision for all Canada". This is a true statement, Mr. Speaker: 55 per cent of Canada's space industry is located in Montreal; 79 per cent of research and development is carried out in that region; 45 per cent of the space industry sales are made in Montreal. Montreal's four universities provide excellent synergy for academic and industrial circles.

Notwithstanding so many good reasons to make Montreal Canada's space agency centre, it would seem that this Government may be considering locating it elsewhere. I think it is a very important issue, and we have been told that there are several reasons for this, one being that some public servants in this sector would be reluctant to leave the national capital, but I do not think this is a sufficient reason. The Government would be well advised to keep its mandate in mind and make sure that the country's economic interests come first, another way of suggesting that the space centre must be located in Montreal.

THE ECONOMY

REDUCTION IN NUMBER LIVING BELOW POVERTY LEVEL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the effective policies of the Progressive Conservative Government, poverty in Canada is being significantly reduced. Statistics Canada reports that as real family income increases the number of Canadians living below the poverty line declined by 263,000 in 1985. For those of us of the Conservative persuasion who believe in the dignity of all mankind, this is welcome news.

• (1110)

It is evident that the Government's emphasis on the creation of an economic environment which encourages investment, new jobs, and opportunity, is much more effective in eliminating hardship than the old Liberal-NDP approach of hand-outs and giveaways.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA BUDGET—CRITICISM OF PROVISIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the British Columbia Government brought down a Budget that will cost average families an extra $135 in taxes. The Budget also provides strong evidence that the plan of the Conservative Government to ban new generic drugs will indeed hurt consumers.

The British Columbia Government has reached a new low in its treatment of the elderly by forcing seniors to pay 75 per cent of the dispensing fee for prescription drugs, up to $125 annually. Although there is compensation for the very poor, this will affect a great many seniors who live just near the poverty line.

The British Columbia Government has also hurt the elderly and sick by increasing the deductible for pharmacare. I submit that these callous actions are very much related to the drug Patent Act that will force families to pay more for prescription drugs. It is another example of Ottawa Conservatives working hand in hand with B.C. Socreds to make corporations wealthy at the expense of the elderly, the sick, and the poor.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

RESULTS OF SCIENTISTS' RESEARCH AND INNOVATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the easiest people to deride in this House are professors. No MP dares say a word against farmers, fishermen, industrial workers, or business people, provided that they are small. But anyone, any day, can run professors down without fear of retaliation.

Yet the cars people use to drive to work, the equipment with which they work, the economy that makes the work possible, and the satisfaction of almost every legitimate need result from the research and innovation of scientists and scholars, mostly at universities.

Here is a priority for all levels of government and all members of the private sector as we see the rising need for increased funding for research. Without it Canada could not have prospered in the 20th century, nor can it hope to advance in the 21st century.

PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

ESTABLISHMENT OF SPACE AGENCY AND SITUATION OF ELDERLY WORKERS WITH REGARD TO UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague from Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) just pointed out, the Chambre de commerce and Board of Trade of Montreal, the mayor of Montreal and, yesterday, Montreal editorial writers, the Quebec National Assembly—for the second time—the Opposition, the Parti québécois and the Liberal Party unanimously endorsed a motion urging the Mulroney Government to confirm Montreal as our aerospace industry centre by establishing the space agency in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative, first, that at their Quebec City weekend meeting the Conservative Members general council adopt a unanimous resolution supporting Montreal; and, second, that the general council of Conservative Members should pass a unanimous motion aimed at eliminating unemployment insurance discrimination against elderly workers.

SPRING

DAFFODILS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA—HURRAH!

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, today is a very special day. Not only is it the forty-eighth birthday of Canada's Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney)—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: —but it is also the last day of winter. Yes, "now ends the winter of our discontent". Spring officially arrives this evening!

As you will agree, Mr. Speaker, spring is eternal in our home Province of British Columbia. The sun always shines, the flowers bloom year round, and ocean waters softly lap against our shores.

But we are magnanimous people who are willing to share our good fortune with eastern Canadians. So, while the Ottawa snow turns grey and gritty, Members of Parliament from paradise on the Pacific have provided daffodils to all of our colleagues in the House.

They are supplied by Vancouver radio station CKNW, which once again this year means: "Canadians know nice weather". These daffodils symbolize that:

Spring has sprung,
The grass is riz—
British Columbia is where
The sunshine is!

HARBOURS AND PORTS

SMALL CRAFT HARBOURS—CALL FOR INCREASED MAINTENANCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries has budgeted only $47.5 million for maintenance of small craft harbours. Mr. Mike Godin of the Harbour Maintenance Branch estimates that $120 million per year is needed. If we do not spend that amount of money, within five years we will have to close about 150 Class C fishing harbours.

In other words, the Government is not maintaining the basic infrastructure needed for both our fishing and tourist industries. In some cases if fire breaks out on fishing vessels it will be impossible for fire engines to have access. In the meantime licence fees for fishermen on the Pacific coast have doubled and, in some cases, wharfage rates have more than doubled.

The Government must change this penny wise and dollar foolish policy of neglecting our basic fishing industry.

THE ECONOMY

BANK RATE REDUCTION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is true that some regions of Canada are booming and others are not sharing equally in Canada's strong economic performance. However, there is one key development which helps every region, that is, lower interest rates.

Yesterday the Bank of Canada rate dropped to 7.14 per cent, the lowest in 14 years. When the Government came to power in September, 1984, the Bank of Canada rate was 12.38 per cent.

This is good news for all Canadians. It helps young couples acquire homes. Lower interest rates mean the creation of more small businesses and help existing ones to survive.

Lower interest rates even help the Government. Each 1 per cent decrease means an annual saving of over $2 billion in interest charges on the national debt. This helps reduce the deficit.

As Jackie Gleason used to say, "How sweet it is!"

POLITICAL PARTIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS—POSITION OF NDP LEADER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the Liberals proposed a very thoughtful amendment to the Government's free trade motion earlier this week. The amendment called for the protection of agricultural marketing boards, the Auto Pact, Canada's cultural industries, and other similar measures. The NDP voted against the amendment.

I have a transcript of an interview on CBC's The Journal of March 17 in which, in response to a question about free trade, the Leader of the NDP said:

> Now if we're talking about a trading arrangement that has certain protective mechanisms, that keep in place marketing boards for our western farmers, that keep in place certain investment requirements in the automotive industry, that protect our cultural industries, in other words, all these exceptions, of course we could have a trade arrangement with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, the NDP will never be accused of telling the truth.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today, there are a number of articles in the Globe and Mail, Le Droit and Le Devoir about the Official Languages Act and the Government's intention to introduce a Bill. Today, Le Droit says that the Conservative Government—> —will provide bilingual services only in offices receiving an average of fifty requests per month, twelve months a year, in the minority language. In areas with a population of over 200,000, there will have to be more than 5,000 Francophones for Ottawa to provide services in both languages as a matter of course.

Mr. Speaker, Saskatoon, Saint John, New Brunswick and even Victoria do not have 5,000 Francophones, and I think their rights are going to be taken away. Why do the Conservatives feel they can afford to quantify the rights of Canadian men and women? This Government does not seem to realize that such a policy is prejudicial to the advancement of Francophones in several provinces.

We could say that this quantification policy is a sure sign of the Government's lack of any common sense. Mr. Speaker, when revising the Official Languages Act, the Government will have to set effective dates for language of service, language of work and language of communication, but it will also have to act responsibly to ensure that equitable representation is reflected in this Government and in this Parliament.

ACID RAIN

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S PROMISES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is therefor directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, because we are celebrating another anniversary as well. Exactly a year ago, the Prime Minister announced:

> —We are now going to reduce air pollution. That will remain our immediate objective.

This week, however, the Prime Minister praised the President of the United States for the same promise he received from him last year and the year before, which was that he would look into the problem of acid rain. How many times does he have to thank the President of the United States for promises the latter made and which he has yet to keep?

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I really find it strange that the right hon. gentleman opposite would want to be so critical of progress that is being made on a very, very important issue. He and his Party should be the last ones to condemn the actions of this federal Government in trying to make progress in resolving this very important national and international situation. The Liberal Government of the day walked away from the bargaining table of trying to work toward a permanent resolution.

Under the leadership of the Prime Minister and with the close co-operation of the U.S. administration progress indeed has been made, and it was so indicated in Mr. Reagan's statement when he said, "We've made some progress in learning things that can be done and we were ready to make this move. There are others probably yet to come. We're still investigating this." This is a positive reaction to a very important problem. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and his Party should be commending our Government and the United States for this action rather than adopting that attitude.

ENVOYS' REPORT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is contagiously close to the Prime Minister in attempting to rewrite history. The joint report of Drew Lewis and William Davis, the Special Envoys on Acid Rain reported that the amount of SO2 emitted in 1983 represents a 28 per cent decline from the peak level emitted in 1973. Electric utility SO2 emissions declined by 19 per cent between 1973 and 1983 and industrial emissions declined by 46 per cent. There was a lot of action under the previous Government which has not been continued under this administration.

My question relates to the fact that the Prime Minister has thanked the President for a giant step backward. In fact, even American Congressmen are criticizing our Prime Minister for undermining their efforts in the Congress to proceed toward emission control. Why has the Prime Minister backed away from his position of last year when he insisted on immediate emission controls?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Clearly, Mr. Speaker, progress has been made and if the right hon. gentleman would read the press release from Washington it makes clear reference to the fact that three major steps, consistent with the envoys' proposal, were being adopted and acted upon. Surely that is a clear indication not only of the commitment made south of the border but indeed of the progress being made which will be the subject of the bilateral talks to take place at the summit early in April. I know that the Right Hon. Leader has to play the role of being an opposition spokesman, but certainly when you are in opposition you have to have a little credibility.

Ms. Copps: Check with Dalton.

Mr. Mazankowski: The credibility that he and his Party have with respect to the actions they took on acid rain certainly does not give them much credibility and credence for the position they are taking right now.

Mr. Gauthier: It is a hell of a lot better than yours.

REQUEST FOR EMISSION CONTROLS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say this in a kindly way to the Deputy Prime Minister. He is not adding to his credibility by being a mouthpiece for his neighbour the Prime Minister of Canada.

Every school child knows that smokestacks and cars are a source of acid rain. Yet the President of the United States is thanked by our Prime Minister for conducting more research into the sources of acid rain. When will our Prime Minister tell the President of the United States, "We have the research. Let us get on immediately to emission controls"?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is so sure we have all the research, why didn't he and his Government act prior to 1984? They did absolutely nothing. They walked away from the bargaining table. They refused to talk to the Americans. Within six months of taking office, with the co-operation of the provinces, we agreed to reduce emissions by 50 per cent. Through the efforts of the Prime Minister we have been successful in getting the U.S. discussions back on track. We have had very productive discussions and productive commitments. Those talks will continue at the summit.

• (1125)

The right hon. gentleman should acknowledge, as the Leader of the NDP did yesterday, that progress has been made. I am really surprised that the right hon. gentleman is so jealous of the progress that has been made.

UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, two hours ago in Quebec City the Quebec Government and the Government of Canada signed an acid rain agreement which is part of the process that was initiated by the Liberal Government in 1984, just to inform the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last night on television we heard President Reagan at his press conference saying the following:

> We have found that the further we've gone, the more complex the issue of the source of acid rain becomes.

It does not seem to me that this is a statement by a person who is ready to act with acid rain clean-up programs. This is a stalling tactic. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not realize that the President has taken a stalling tactics approach?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, who is a former Minister of the Environment, should refrain from selective quotations to try to present a weak case. If he read further he would learn that the President said:

> We've made some progress in learning things that can be done and we were ready to make this move. There are others probably yet to come. We're still investigating this.

I think that is a pretty positive statement.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly our point. The progress that has been made in the mind of the President of the United States is that it is no longer volcanoes and ducks. That is the progress that has been made.

NEGOTIATION OF CANADA-UNITED STATES TREATY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is a solid position common to all three Parties in this House that procrastination is not helping Canada. Therefore, will he make representations to the Prime Minister urging him to push for a North American acid rain agreement with deadlines, percentages and targets? Can he tell us when Canada will be protected by such a treaty?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to make representations to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He has clearly shown leadership and made progress in this regard. More leadership will be demonstrated at the summit and more progress will be made.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

FIRST MINISTER'S MEETING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Next Thursday there will be a major meeting of First Ministers and the aboriginal peoples of Canada to discuss aboriginal rights. The Minister knows that the federal Government has left leadership, with regard to documents that will be discussed, to the provinces which will determine the substance of the meeting.

At this late stage before the meeting starts next Thursday will the Government of Canada undertake to make public its position on the crucial issues to be discussed at that meeting?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party because it affords me the opportunity to restate once again the very great priority which the Prime Minister gives to this important meeting coming up next week.

I believe that impartial observers of this process will agree that throughout the consultation process and period the federal Government has consistently given leadership in terms of rolling drafts, in terms of stating the position of the federal Government up front, and in terms of trying to move the parties toward a constitutional amendment.

We are determined to arrive at an agreement if possible but it will require movement on the part of participants in these meetings. I call upon those who are participating to come to this meeting with an open mind in order that we may bridge the gaps which now exist between the parties in order to serve the true and legitimate interests of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, when you work your way through that fog you conclude that the federal Government is not prepared to state its position openly and therefore take a leadership role.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to quote what the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development had to say on this and then ask the Minister to deal with the question. In the House on March 11 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said:

> There has not been a proposal put forward in the meetings that has not been supported by the federal Government when it came to trying to bring consensus from all sides of the table.

The Minister is saying that the federal Government has not taken the lead. It is prepared to follow the lead of others and maybe get a consensus. Will the federal Government now show some leadership and, before next Thursday's meeting, publicly release its views, particularly on the crucial question of aboriginal self-government?

• (1130)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the position put forward by the Leader of the NDP is patently absurd. The fact is that the federal Government has come a very considerable way and has tried to bring the participants along and make progress on the issue. We have taken a position with respect to the right of self-government which is clear and unequivocal. We are unequivocally supportive of the right of self-government. We want to, and on this all participants agree, determine the process by which self-government will be instituted in a constitutional way. We are the first Government to put forward our views with respect to financing and every other critical issue to be discussed at that meeting. There is no secret about our position. We are the leaders in putting our position forward.

AGENDA FOR FIRST DAY'S TALKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is just unfortunate, and I will not go into the details now, that the leadership of virtually all the aboriginal peoples have been quite critical of the federal Government for failing to do precisely what the Minister claims it is doing.

I want to ask the Minister another question which came out of a House committee meeting last night. It has been suggested that the federal Government is now making changes in the proposed agenda for the first day. As the Minister knows, the first day was supposed to be allocated to discussions of the question of self-government. The suggestion now is that the federal Government is proposing a much more general discussion on the first day about a variety of aboriginal matters. Will the Minister clarify this situation? Is the Government still proposing to go ahead on the first day and deal with the very important matter of self-government?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the agenda is under discussion now. The Prime Minister has written to the Premiers and leaders of the aboriginal groups represented at the conference. The federal Government cannot solve this matter unilaterally. A constitutional amendment is required. Not only the federal Government but seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population must support it. It is not possible to have movement unless we have the support of the provincial Governments. I say to the Hon. Leader of the NDP that we have been giving leadership and striving mightily at the Ministers' meetings to bring about that kind of consensus on the best possible level so that the aboriginal peoples will be able to achieve self-government and realize their expectations in the Canadian confederation.

RIGHTS OF EARLY RETIREES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Next Monday, in Montreal, I am having a meeting with older workers to explain the decisions announced this week and what should be done to defend the rights of early retirees.

Could the Minister explain to the House why he decided to continue to discriminate against older workers who have company pension plans, as opposed to the older worker who has a registered retirement savings plan? Why is the older worker who has a company pension plan not entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits, while the worker who is getting money from a registered retirement savings plan is entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits? Why the double standard?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in November 1984, the Minister of Finance identified a set of rules dealing with the issue of simultaneous income from pensions and unemployment insurance. In these rules, the Minister of Finance considered that private pension plans were eligible and public pension plans were not.

At his meeting next Monday, I think the Hon. Member will have to make it clear that the Government has always maintained the same principle. There has never been any change in the Government's position in the way it deals with early retirees. However, for considerations of justice and equity in implementing the measure, the Government has decided to consider a refund for people who formally applied for unemployment insurance before 1986, but that will not be the case for those who applied after that time. I think this position is quite clear, and it will remain entirely in line with what was announced by the Minister of Finance in November 1984.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The fact remains that the Minister has yet to explain why some older workers are treated better than others. The purpose of my supplementary is to get some information for these people. Could the Minister inform the House whether a person who on October 10, 1985 agreed with his employer to take early retirement and who because of separation payments and accumulated sick leave was not eligible for unemployment insurance benefits until February 10, 1986, is considered to be a 1985 retiree and thus eligible for the refund or will that person be penalized if he failed to apply at the time of termination of employment?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement I made in the House the day before yesterday was quite clear in this respect. I said that people who formally applied for unemployment insurance benefits at a Canada Employment and Immigration Centre before January 1986 would be considered. There are a number of special cases. The staff at the employment centres has a certain amount of leeway, and the usual mechanisms that exist at employment centres should people decide to protest the Government's procedures are in place and will apply in these instances. I want this to be quite clear. I repeat, people who formally applied for unemployment insurance benefits before January 5, 1986, will be considered.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES PRESIDENT'S PRESS CONFERENCE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the Deputy Prime Minister and the issue of acid rain. The President of the United States, at his press conference, when asked about it, said "We are still investigating this". The President has some fine qualities, no doubt, but he is not known as a quick study. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister not to tell us about what the Liberals did in the past or anything else. I want to know whether the Canadian Government was satisfied with the President's response at that press conference yesterday?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly satisfied with the announced initiative and will, I am sure, be satisfied with the results of the continuing discussions which will take place between the Prime Minister and the President when they meet here in early April.

MINNESOTA CONGRESSMAN'S STATEMENT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I think most people in Canada think that acid rain is the key environmental issue in North America. They are really disappointed with our leaders on both sides of the border for their responses. Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that a U.S. Congressman from Minnesota said this morning that our Prime Minister's dealings with the President on acid rain are retarding congressional efforts to deal with acid rain? Will the Government stop retarding the efforts of the anti-acid rain lobby by pretending that the President is doing something significant on acid rain when he is not? Would it not be better for the Government to work with congressional leaders against acid rain instead?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I guess there is nothing wrong with different points of view being expressed in the U.S., just as they are expressed in Canada, on this very important issue. I remind the Hon. Member that there has been considerable progress not only on acid rain but on other fronts as well. For example, on February 4, 1987, Canada and the U.S., along with Ontario and New York, signed a declaration of intent which, coupled with the Niagara River management plan, will see a 50 per cent reduction of loadings of persistent toxic chemicals into the Niagara River by 1996. There was, in the fall of 1985, a joint declaration of intent regarding transborder control of hazardous wastes. There was a Memorandum of Understanding creating contingency measures for dealing with accidental and unauthorized discharges along the inland boundary.

Mr. Waddell: That was not the President.

Mr. Mazankowski: There was a Memorandum of Understanding concerning research and development for areas of common interest in science and technology. The latest initiative, reinforced by the President, is also good news.

Mr. Waddell: Good news? That is good news?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why do Members opposite always chastize the good news and the progress being made?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS AT MONCTON SHOPS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions concerning regional development of importance to the Atlantic provinces. However, in the absence of the Minister responsible I will put my first question to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that the announcement by Canadian General Electric that it does not intend to locate in the Moncton area, coupled with the stated intention of CN to close the Moncton shops, represents a double devastating blow to the citizens of Moncton. So far all the Government has done is allocate $4 million to assist laid-off workers. The Minister knows that amounts to $3,300 for each of the 1,200 workers, while the yearly pay-roll of those shops was some $32 million. Does the Government of Canada really believe that $4 million is a sufficient response?

• (1140)

In light of the Canadian General Electric announcement that it is not locating in Moncton, would the Government consider ordering CN to maintain its shops in the city of Moncton and to transfer work back to that community?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to see the Hon. Member back in the House after going to Newfoundland to unseat the provincial Liberal Leader. In fact it is rumoured that the hon. gentleman is going to run for the leadership there and we all wish him well. If he is successful, it will certainly lead to a quieter House of Commons.

With respect to Moncton, the first thing the Government did to assist was to encourage CN to find another employer to take over part of the works. It did that with Canadian General Electric, but unfortunately two of the international unions operating in Moncton refused to go along with the arrangement which was made. As a result, a further 303 people are now unemployed who could have been employed in Moncton.

We then encouraged CN to participate with the Government in a $4 million fund to help Moncton find other industries to go in to help the situation. In addition, our payroll this year in the Moncton area—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: —of CN will be over $90 million. There is a new multi-modal terminal in operation which cost—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: You don't want to hear what we are doing for Moncton. The question was what are we doing, and I am trying to answer it.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the only Newfoundland Member of Parliament who has a well deserved reputation for salivating unashamedly whenever the word "leadership" is mentioned is the Hon. Member opposite who, of course, has run for two of the three Parties so far, and I would advise the Hon. Member for Oshawa to watch his back.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: No, no, we are safe.

Mr. Speaker: At least it is a family argument.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

HAWKER SIDDELEY PLANT AT TRENTON, N. S.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): My other question of regional development importance to Atlantic Canada has to do with Pictou County, Nova Scotia. Hon. Members are aware that an announcement has been made that the Trenton car works will be sold or closed. Of course, yesterday Members of the House heard the Prime Minister respond to that grave crisis in his former riding of Central Nova.

Is the Deputy Prime Minister aware that the current Hon. Member for Central Nova, who preceded the Prime Minister and who followed the Prime Minister, that is, the Minister of National Revenue, is quoted as saying yesterday: "If I was a Hawker Siddeley worker, or the son of a Hawker Siddeley worker, I would be pretty cynical about the Government's response too". When is the Government of Canada going to come clean and keep the Prime Minister's commitment to the people of that community to ensure prosperity and continuity of work?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, you not only heard an answer to that question yesterday from the Prime Minister, you heard it from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I invite the Hon. Member to reread the answers and maybe he could enlighten himself.

FREIGHT CAR MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport and also concerns the sorry state of the Canadian freight car industry and the fact that jobs are being lost in Montreal, Hamilton, and Trenton. Hawker Siddeley is now on the sale-block. Yesterday the Prime Minister promised action, but the Mayor of Pictou says they have had so many promises they are now calling it the promised land. Yesterday the Prime Minister promised he would work with Canadian National presumably to cause CN to use Canadian instead of American freight cars. Which policy is the one we can depend on being implemented, the Prime Minister's policy or the Minister's, which was no interference with CN?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in case of any difference there might be, and I am not aware of any, between my views and those of the Prime Minister, my guess is that the Prime Minister's views will overcome. With respect to this particular question, the railcar manufacturing industry has had grave difficulties in the last several years because circumstances in both the United States and Canada have dictated that the railroads are not purchasing railcars in their normal volumes because of the reduction in the amount of goods they have had to transport and circumstances like that. There is a problem and it has been looked at by the Department of DRIE.

With respect to Nova Scotia, there has been a tremendous contribution, I believe $1.4 billion, in development assistance from this Government to Nova Scotia in the two and a half years since September of 1984. That is $1.4 billion to help overcome these kinds of situations, and we will continue in that gigantic effort, no matter what the difficulties are.

USE OF AMERICAN FREIGHT CARS BY CANADIAN RAILWAYS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Will the Government act to stop the use of American freight cars by CN? And will it change its own tariff regulations to encourage the use of Canadian cars rather than American cars by CN and Canadian rail industries?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I do not know how protectionist the hon. gentleman can get. The New Democratic Party has to decide. Does it want an efficient, economic and effective Canadian transportation service or not? This is a very complicated—

Mr. Broadbent: We want jobs in Nova Scotia, fellow.

Mr. Crosbie: We will have no jobs in Canada at all if that Party, led by the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the hon.—I won't call him that name.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Watch it.

Oral Questions

CANADA POST CORPORATION

DELAYS IN MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Many of my constituents are very upset with the tardy mail service of Canada Post. To cite a typical example, Mr. Kasner of Pinnacle Road called recently to say he receives his mail about seven or eight o'clock at night. It often takes a week for a letter to arrive from downtown. He has not had a regular mailman for over two months.

Is service really the number one priority at Canada Post? And if it is, when are we going to see some results?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, some of the mail apparently gets through. In February I received 3,000 letters of complaint. As the Hon. Member will know from the Marchment Committee report, there is a lot wrong with Canada Post, going back some two decades, as a result of political interference and other things. I think the Post Office is on the right track. It is making the right moves. There is the intent, and indeed it is in place, to have outside auditors on a quarterly basis measure the effectiveness, efficiency and quality of service of Canada Post so that the public will know from an independent source whether in fact these improvements are occurring according to the plan. I have all my fingers and toes crossed that by February next year my letters of complaint will be down significantly.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

FUNDING OF SPACE PLAN

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In the fall we learned the Government was making massive cuts at the National Research Council to pay for its space plan. Now we learn it is cutting $40 million from regional development programs. When is the Government going to tell us where it plans to find the rest of the money? And could the Minister tell the House and Canadians what he meant when he said he could not provide us with details because: "It might cause my colleagues at the other Departments unnecessary problems"?

• (1150)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I recall that question was answered yesterday. It is quite true that the resources that will be required to carry out the comprehensive space program which was announced last May will come from existing programs. It is not true that regions which have had resources identified for their use will be deprived of those resources. However, should some of the space activities be carried out in those regions, obviously it would be prudent to use the resources that have already been identified for them.

SELECTION CRITERIA FOR SITE OF FUTURE SPACE AGENCY

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister ought to give guarantees there will be some kind of space industry in the Gaspé and in Mauricie. I challenge him to do so.

Mr. Speaker, so far, the Minister has also refused to reveal the selection criteria for the site of the future space agency. Could the Minister inform the House today what definitive criteria will be used to determine the site of this agency?

[English]

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive space program is a national program. There is keen competition from several regions in the country for the head office of the agency, which is not in itself a job-creation effort. It will involve about 40 or 50 people. The location of the agency will be decided in the best national interest.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OF CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance and deals with the subject of credit card interest rates. Yesterday, the Bank of Canada rate fell to 7.14 per cent, a drop of 4 percentage points over two years, while interest rates on most credit cards have remained unchanged, that is, about 19 per cent at the banks and 29 per cent for the department stores. Is the Government prepared to take the necessary steps to ensure that credit card interest rates are brought down to reasonable levels?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising this important issue, an important issue which not only he raises but which has been raised by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West over the last year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The NDP is slow but they catch up after a while.

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member suggests a reduction of interest rates on credit cards. I think the goal should be not only to do that, and to do it right away, but to act across the whole range of needs. First, we should act in terms of better disclosure and in terms of better and common methods of reporting. This range of issues is being looked at by the standing committee whose report we will receive shortly. With that report we will be able to act very quickly.

ROLE OF BANKS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Minister's statement that he intends to see action taken right away. Will he assure the House that if the banks and retailers do not act to bring their credit card rates down, as the Toronto Dominion Bank did about four weeks ago, the Government will introduce legislation which will impose ceilings on credit card rates and ensure that the benefit of lower interest rates will go to credit card users and not to the banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to look at that Major Douglas Social Credit solution to the problem—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: —as well as other ways to get those interest rates down.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—LACK OF TAXI AND BUS SERVICE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. For months people have found it easier to fly into Toronto International Airport than to drive out of it. Often, limousines, taxis and buses are simply not available. When entrepreneurs are eager to supply additional services, I ask the Minister what action he plans to take to solve this problem?

Ms. Copps: We have a great airport in Hamilton. Come on over!

An Hon. Member: We would but you're there.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we can always put the Hon. Member for Hamilton East there to act as a director.

Because of the popularity of Toronto, which city's popularity is unbounded—it used to be known as Hogtown, but no longer—there has been a problem at Toronto Airport after 11 p.m. when a number of charter flights come in together. There have not been sufficient ground facilities in place there. However, certain steps are being taken during the March break weekend.

We are assigning additional ground transportation inspectors, commissionaires, and RCMP to be on duty. We have told the public that the arrivals level of Terminal One will not be available to private vehicles after 11 p.m. during this weekend when many people are returning. We have warned all the airport taxi and limousine vehicle operators that they will be expected to be at the airport to provide service during these peak times. If the taxi-cab and limousine fleets become depleted, outside taxis and limousines will be called in to provide service.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Crosbie: In other words, we are taking every reasonable precaution. We anticipate that the problems should be met.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Crosbie: In addition—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CANADIAN SHARE IN NEW TELESCOPE IN HAWAII

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. In a letter to me the Minister stated that the Government:

> —has reached a preliminary understanding to purchase a 25 per cent share of the new James Clark Maxwell Telescope being built by the United Kingdom and The Netherlands on Mauna Kea in Hawaii.

How can the Minister place Canada in the disgraceful position of being the first country in the world ever to close down a major telescope, a world-class telescope, the Algonquin Radio Observatory, and then turn around and pay out millions of dollars elsewhere to remove science and technology from Canadian soil?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as you know the Government relies on a council of the most eminent people we can find to help us allocate scarce resources in the best interests of the country. It was a decision of the National Research Council to participate, with other countries, in the establishment of a world-class leading-edge telescope in Hawaii. This is a millimetre telescope compared to the centimetre telescope that is in place in Algonquin Park. Far be it from me to question that decision. It was merely made to stay on the leading edge of this particular discipline of science.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister has just done is not only abdicate his own responsibility but he has abdicated the responsibility of the Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: Is this the Government's new science and technology policy—made in Britain and made in The Netherlands and located on American soil? Why is the Government returning the country back to its colonial days? Has he no pride in the Canadian record in science and technology, the best in the world?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the reason the council made the decision is because the telescope being established in Hawaii is simply the best in the world. Incidentally, we are already partners with a number of other countries in this telescope. We shall assure that we and future generations will be with the best in the world on the frontier of science. We will even drag, kicking and screaming, the Hon. Member along with us.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—WEEKLY FLOATING INTEREST RATE CHARGED TO FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. With the inception of the new Bank Act in 1980 most banks began to charge farmers on a weekly floating rate of interest even though the signed notes that they held were for lower fixed rates. Since the banks floated their rates as high as 22 per cent and 24 per cent, and since there now appear to be several judgments showing these extra charges to be beyond the legal power of the banks to collect, will the Minister instruct the banks to review all such files and have them make restitution for the overcharges to farmers?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to take a look at that issue and report back to the House next week to see whether the suggestion the Hon. Member is making can be followed or not.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—WITHHOLDING TAX ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for organizing trade and financial services as part of our bilateral arrangements with the United States. I want to inform the Government that at the Finance Committee, Alexander McKie indicated that the major problem in our financial services and banking with the United States was withholding tax arrangements that do not apply between the United States and Britain, between the United States and Germany, or between the United States and Holland. Is that matter being addressed by the Government in these negotiations?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would not want me to negotiate that issue with the United States in Parliament at this time. He has a very tantalizing theory about withholding tax. At some point he should make that clear to members of his committee because I believe it is a very important theory for these negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that Question Period is drawing to a close. I will try to recognize more Members, but they should make the questions short.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I hope the answers will be short as well.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. On several occasions I tried to get the Government moving with respect to the Official Languages Act amendments. Today's newspapers report that the situation is worsening and that people are exasperated at the Government's snail pace when it comes to the introduction of these amendments. They even indicate that the Member for Charlevoix and Chairman of the Standing Committee on Official Languages has stated that the delay was due to barbarian and dinosaurian reactions, as he put it. In all likelihood, he was referring to his Conservative caucus colleagues who have seen the proposed amendments, but we certainly did not see them.

Can the Minister assure the House today that, to prevent leaks and so that at long last we might deal seriously with this matter, the Government will soon set a firm and specific time frame concerning appropriate amendments to the Official Languages Act?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): When I was Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, I had an opportunity to launch the official languages policy review process. Surely my colleague will recall that last fall he deplored the lack of sufficient consultations with organizations directly involved in this process, among others the Fédération des francophones hors Québec. The process has been initiated, and I should think that the Government is committed and will take action soon in this session. As I see it, everything must be in place before we can recommend the best possible course to follow with respect to revamping the Official Languages Act.

NEED TO END SITUATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice because he is responsible for this matter.

Today, for instance, we have learned that Federal Court and Tax Court of Canada judges are exempt from the need to understand what is being said in court, in other words, the language of the accused. Once again to avoid the possibility that people might begin to question the seriousness of the Government and its willingness to correct the problem, can the Minister not rise in the House and put an end to this painful and probably very dangerous situation by stating today that the Government will bring forth its Bill, thus enabling people to conclude that this is what the Government wants to do?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to answer categorically that notwithstanding what the Hon. Member refers to as leaks, the Government has been involved in a very extensive process of consultation with a wide range of people who are most interested in the question of official languages across our country. We do not regard that as being the wrong approach. I know that when the Hon. Member was in the previous Government he did not think much of consultation, but we think it is important to develop our official languages policy on the basis of consultation.

I think the Hon. Member is completely out of luck with respect to his allegation concerning the judiciary and that so-called leak because it simply is not true. I have negotiated on behalf of the Government of Canada with respect to a number of provincial jurisdictions and the provision of trials in both official languages. Presently, I am trying on a voluntary basis to have the accord of all provinces on this basis. But I have put the provinces on notice that I will proclaim the provisions of the Act which will provide for trials in the French language where they are not now provided in the provinces. I intend to proceed with that initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I advise Hon. Members that this will be the last question. I want to apologize to the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre. I did not mean to cut him off. I will try to make it up to him on another day.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA BUDGET—SILVICULTURE FUNDING

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister for International Trade. The British Columbia Budget that was brought down yesterday only allocates $36 million in new money to silviculture and reforestation from the estimated $360 million to $400 million that British Columbia will receive from the federal export tax on softwood lumber. Less than 10 per cent will go to silviculture and reforestation. Was this the understanding that the Minister for International Trade had with Premier Vander Zalm? This was not suggested at all in her remarks in the House on February 5. Is that allocation of less than 10 per cent acceptable to the Government?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade made it clear in the House many times that it was her hope that the moneys realized from the tax on softwood lumber—money that was kept in Canada and did not go to the United States—would be used for silviculture, reforestation, and adjustment for displaced workers. I remind the Hon. Member that these are provincial resources and the funds being channelled to the provinces are money that they can use as they see fit. That was a provincial Budget on which I do not care to comment. It is for the people of British Columbia to comment on the Budget. However, it is the Minister's hope that moneys derived from this tax will be spent in the forestry industry in a way, I might add, that does not negate the Memorandum of Understanding we have with the United States.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member. One last question.

PERFORMANCE GUARANTEE QUERY

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Does the Parliamentary Secretary not agree that these are federal moneys and that some performance guarantee should have been arranged? Why was it not arranged, and why is the Government allowing itself to be conned by Premier Vander Zalm?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a matter of Premier Vander Zalm conning anyone. These funds are derived from a provincial resource and the agreement was that the taxation, with the exception of a small amount for administration, would be channelled to the provinces. At the same time the provinces are considering various ways of adjusting that tax, by stumpage fees or other means. Therefore, it would be foolish for the Government to dictate to the provinces how this money should be expended. We can make suggestions but we should not be dictating—

Ms. Jewett: It is federal money.

Mr. McDermid: Maybe the NDP would dictate to them. We will not.

AGENCY FOR CULTURAL AND TECHNICAL CO-OPERATION

SEVENTEENTH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, last March 9 the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) rose in this House to observe Commonwealth Day. Barely a few days later we are proud to mark the anniversary of the creation of L'Agence de coopération culturelle et technique (the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation) on March 20, 1970 in Niamey, Niger, particularly in this year of the Quebec City francophone summit.

• (1210)

[English]

Canada, with Quebec alongside as a participating Government, was one of the founding members of the ACCT. New Brunswick joined the agency in 1977. Still today the ACCT is the most important Francophone intergovernmental organization.

[Translation]

Its initial vocation being the promotion of co-operation among member nations, through a common means of communications, the French language undoubtedly contributed to create the climate which led to the first meeting of heads of states and heads of governments held in Paris in 1986.

Indeed we can only be pleased that the growing number of Canadian representatives within the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation has paved the way, through such summits, for a formula which made it possible to invite the Premiers of Quebec and New Brunswick to attend these deliberations.

Before the Paris meeting, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated in Montreal that:

> —Canada's collective prosperity cannot be dissociated from the economic development of the Third World, industrial co-operation between countries and access to international markets.

He went on to say that:

> —la Francophonie is a window on the world. It gives Canadian Francophones, whether they are from Quebec or any other province, the unlimited scope that those who speak English already have in the English-speaking world.

[English]

In 1987 Canada will host two major international meetings which will bring here representatives from more than 90 countries. Canada is one of the few countries which can claim to be a part of such a large international assemblage. In La Francophonie, as in the Commonwealth, most of Canada's partners are Third World countries. Our common interests require a greater measure of dialogue and co-operation in the face of the challenges before us.

[Translation]

The Quebec Summit, like the summit in Vancouver, will help enhance co-operation and understanding between countries and between heads of state of varying political affiliations and cultural origins, who nevertheless are able to converse in a common language. Canada, after ensuring that two of its provinces were allowed a degree of participation consistent with this country's constitutional framework, will spare no efforts to make this event a success that will ensure the further development of La Francophonie, an institution that reflects our most fondamental interests.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party, I would like to join the Minister in drawing the attention of the House to this anniversary of the Agence de coopération culturelle et technique. It is indeed a fact that Canada and Quebec have been a part of the ACCT since its inception in 1970, and perhaps I may recall some comments that were made at the time by the former Secretary of State of Canada, Mr. Gérard Pelletier. In fact, his remarks were made in February 1969 at the first conference in Niamey, prior to the creation of the ACCT. Mr. Pelletier said, and I quote:

> That the Francophones in our country, taking part in a structured Francophonie is not only natural but fulfils a vital need. After three centuries of living in French in North America, French-Canadians feel they need the support of the entire francophone community to develop their full potential.

I would also like to mention one of the objectives of the ACCT that is particularly important:

> c) To provide the means for securing the broadest and most efficient dissemination of information among all members in the areas of science, education and technology;

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I feel that our participation in the ACCT is further proof of one of the specific advantages this country has, namely, our two official languages: French and English.

I think this is one more opportunity to recall how our two languages enable Canadians to take part in both English-speaking and French-speaking international organizations. This makes it possible for Canada to have considerable influence throughout the world, and it is part of the heritage and the resources of this country.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): On behalf of our Party, Mr. Speaker, I endorse the Minister's statement. As he said, today is the anniversary of the creation of the Agency for Cultural and Technical Co-operation. This organization was founded in Niger on March 20, 1970

Mr. Speaker, La Francophonie is the world's most important intergovernmental organization, and the first summit of the heads of government of this organization took place in Paris in February 1986. Canada is proud to play host to the organization's second summit in Quebec next fall.

Mr. Speaker, we are lucky to have as participants not only the Government of Canada, but also the Governments of Quebec and New Brunswick. As an English-speaking Member from western Canada, Mr. Speaker, I can only say how proud I am of the fact that we should belong to both La Francophonie and the Commonwealth, because we are now members or the world's leading linguistic communities, and we can make a great contribution to both the Commonwealth and La Francophonie.

[English]

It is also as important for English-speaking Canadians that we participate in La Francophonie, in terms of what we can do in the world, as it is for Francophone Canadians to remain active members of the Commonwealth.

[Translation]

Because, Mr. Speaker, La Francophonie is very important to French-speaking people and for the worldwide advancement of the French language. It is also very important to the ACCT. And do not forget that French is the language spoken in 18 African countries, Mr. Speaker, such great countries as Zaire, Senegal, the Ivory Coast, Niger, the North African countries of Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria, and so on. Both the ACCT of La Francophonie and the Commonwealth are outstanding organizations.

The other fact is that, just as is the Commonwealth, La Francophonie is important for economic development, a driving force in the Third World.

And something else, perhaps we could do something against apartheid in La Francophonie as the Prime Minister is trying to do in the Commonwealth. I realize that South Africa is not part of La Francophonie, being a former British colony, but perhaps, Mr. Speaker, with so many African countries in La Francophonie, we could do something for the liberation of Blacks in South Africa.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister, and I wish those participating in the Francophonie Summit in Quebec City next fall the best of luck, and today, we are proud to celebrate the anniversary of the Agence de coopération culturelle et technique.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in both official languages in relation to interest rates charged on credit cards and charge cards.

We are in a plastic age where paying bills with a credit card is the common way transactions are handled. The committee deals extensively with that matter. It deals with disclosure of the terms and conditions of credit cards in Recommendations Nos. 1, 2 and 3; in the standardization of the calculation of interest charges and other charges in Recommendations Nos. 4 and 5 and in the question of fairness of rates in Recommendations Nos. 6 and 7.

PETITIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to present a petition on behalf of a number of Canadian citizens who are calling upon this Parliament to enact legislation which will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of a refugee commission; universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present their claim. It is an important issue. These people feel strongly and I am honoured to present the petition on their behalf.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition under Standing Order 106 that calls upon the House of Commons to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and a fair chance to arrive in Canada so they can present this claim.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF UNBORN BABIES—PROTECTION OF CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Anthony Roman (York North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present 24 petitions signed by 714 of my constituents in support of Motion M-37 that would amend The Constitution of Canada and protect the life of the unborn by the Charter of Rights. My constituents petition and humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support M-37.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions, both of which have been certified correct according to form. The first one reads that because of the killing of thousands of unborn Canadian babies each year for reasons of convenience, and for such babies capital punishment exists for the crime of being unwanted, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to support Motion M-37 and allow unborn babies to be protected by the Charter of Rights.

The second petition Mr. Speaker, reads that all human beings are deserving of legal protection from unjust attacks upon their lives, that the present law regarding abortion does not provide such protection, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code so that the unborn human beings are protected by law from abortion.

IMPOSITION OF SHIFT CHANGES—AIR CANADA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by several hundred Canadians from Air Canada in Toronto who are calling upon the Government of Canada whereas the shift changes imposed on Air Canada aircraft maintenance employees at Pearson International Airport will severely affect quality of work, family life and social life; and whereas the strain of these imposed shifts are already having adverse effects on the family unit, the health of the employees physically and mentally, and the deterioration of the maintenance of aircraft safety; and whereas the imposition of these shifts are a ploy by Air Canada to have its employees vote away their paid statutory holidays, wherefore, we the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to demand Air Canada to direct management at Pearson International Airport to return to an equitable system whereby its employees will have some weekends off to spend with their families, and as in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

I am sure a number of Government Members in the Toronto area will certainly want to support this petition.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my humble duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens of Canada who, although they recognize that the refugee status determination of Canada has been well developed, are concerned it is unfair to certain people and call upon the Parliament of Canada to enact legislation which would require complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission; universal access to such hearings to every claimant and also the right for a fair chance at least for claimants outside of the country to have these hearings performed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps my hon. friend might tell us briefly which Member presented the petition for certification?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo)?

The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition here from a number of Canadians concerned about the refugee determination process. Although it was originally a good process it is now breaking down under the strain of the increased number of refugees. It points out that a recommendation for an improved process has been put forward by the Standing Committee and endorsed by a number of organizations throughout Canada. It calls upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Would the Hon. Member provide the House with the name of the Member of Parliament who had the petition certified?

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member wish to respond? No response. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Toronto who point out that the committee of Parliament has recommended an improved system for refugee determination procedure which has been supported by the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress and other groups and individuals and, therefore, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation that will embody the principles of fair and complete oral hearings of claimants before a refugee board, independent of the Immigration Commission; universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and a fair chance to arrive in Canada to present this claim, and as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED CHANGES TO PATENT ACT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions that I am honoured to present today, all on the same subject. People are very concerned about the Government's legislation to change the Patent Act and the impact this will have on drug prices, and state that it will hurt elderly Canadians particularly and those who need prescription drugs. They call on this House to rescind the legislation. The petitions are from Surrey, Langley and Clearbrook, British Columbia.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would my hon. colleague be able to give the date of certification of these petitions?

Ms. Mitchell: Not necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). No response.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that I will be raising a point of order with respect to the petitioning of the Crown and Government on Monday next.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 57 will be answered today.

[Text]

POST OFFICE AT FORT GOOD HOPE, N.W.T.

Question No. 57—Mr. Nickerson:

1. Did the post office in Fort Good Hope, N.W.T., run out of 34 cent stamps three times between August and the end of November, 1986?

2. Is there a restriction on the number of stamps that a post office, such as the one at Fort Good Hope, may order at any one time?

3. Are stamps shipped from a regional office in the south to northern post offices, such as Fort Good Hope, only on one day per month and, if so, if a stamp order arrives late will it have to wait until the following month to be filled?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate affairs): 1. Yes. The post office in Fort Good Hope, N.W.T. did run out of 34-cent stamps on three occasions between August and November, 1986, as a result of problems the Postmaster was having in anticipating demand. The Field Support Postmaster for the area has provided guidance to the Postmaster which should prevent a future occurence of the incident.

2. The only restriction on offices of that size is that the value of the stock on hand does not exceed $1,800.

3. Routinely, orders are processed once a month. However, stamps may be ordered at any time. There is neither a time limit nor a restriction on the frequency or orders to the Vancouver depot. In addition, any order received by the depot, either in writing or by telephone, which is identified as being "urgent", "special" or "late" will be processed as quickly as possible, often within an hour.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, today's sitting will be extended nine minutes.

I should advise the House that before beginning Orders of the Day there is a point of order by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I will hear the Hon. Member now.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DIVULGING OF CONTENTS OF COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to briefly raise a question of privilege of order with you regarding the long-standing practice of this House as explained to us in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Section 647, which reads as follows:

> No act done at any committee should be divulged before it has been reported to the House.

This is a long-standing principle. It has also come to our attention through Erskine May's Twentieth Edition, on page 153, which reads as follows:

> By the ancient custom of Parliament "no act done at any committee should be divulged before the same be reported to the House".
> Upon this principle the Commons, on 21 April 1837 resolved, "That the evidence taken by any select committee of this House, and the documents presented to such committee, and which have not been reported to the House, ought not to be published by any member of such committee or by any other person."

On January 27, 1987, I apologized to this House for having accidentally released one line from a parliamentary committee report prior to it coming to the attention of the House of Commons. Today there are three newspaper articles alluding to the fact that the Standing Committee on Government Operations will be tabling a report on Monday. Those reports very accurately divulge the contents of the report. There is a further newspaper article on a similar issue involving the parliamentary committee dealing with day care. Yesterday there was a similar breach of parliamentary privilege, in my opinion, regarding another parliamentary committee dealing with unemployment insurance.

I want to close by asking that you investigate these matters and report to the House. I believe they could be breaches of our parliamentary privileges. All Members of this House have a right to be protected, otherwise we could all divulge the contents of these committee reports.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I appreciate that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) wishes to speak to his opposition motion. I would not want to delay the debate.

I would simply say that this happens from time to time. The Hon. Member used the word "alluding". I think the accuracy of the reports can be judged by the fact that in one article my friend from Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) was referred to as being a Saskatchewan Member of Parliament and he took great umbrage at that.

Mr. Nystrom: Order!

Mr. Lewis: I think we should take it at face value.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I chair the committee on which the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) sits. As you may recall, I stood up in this House on a question of privilege, after the first report, on this very problem. We once again find ourselves in the very unfortunate situation where the media alludes to our report before it is tabled in the House. I object to that and ask for your guidance on what we can do in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is very aware of the problem. I will consider the matter and report back to the House. At this time I can say only that if Hon. Members feel they cannot deal with each other in confidence, that gets very close to putting them in great difficulty in carrying out their duties. The Chair is very concerned about that. I thank the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) and the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) for taking the position they have. I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for his intervention.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—ABORIGINAL PEOPLES—CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO SELF-GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

> That this House affirms its support for the aboriginal peoples of Canada in their endeavour to have recognized in the Constitution their inherent right to self-government, and further instructs the Government of Canada to assume its leadership role and fulfil its Constitutional obligations to protect and guarantee the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, and specifically directs the Government of Canada to abandon its insistence that the right to self-government be contingent upon negotiated agreements.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is to urge the Government to correct what we believe is a historical injustice to the aboriginal people of our country. Before I proceed I want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who will be following me in the debate from our side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He has been and continues to be a great friend of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I think it is conceded that he is the leading authority in this House of Commons on the subject. It is thanks in large measure to his skill and persistence that this Party, both in Government and in opposition, has taken a leadership role on this issue.

[Translation]

And I am proud to lead the party that presided over the patriation of our Constitution and enshrined therein the rights of our aboriginal peoples. I want to pay tribute to the endeavour and perseverance of the aboriginal leaders who obtained constitutional recognition of their rights, and I salute their sustained efforts and determination to translate this recognition into a new framework for their relationship with Canada.

Finally, I had the privilege of meeting with Chief George Erasmus, and as I said to him at the time, we in the Liberal Party acknowledge that the right of our aboriginal peoples to self-government has existed for centuries. In fact, that right existed well before this continent was explored and colonized by the Europeans.

• (1240)

[English]

We believe that this right to self-government is inherent and has always existed, having never been extinguished. It exists today and should be recognized, therefore, in the Canadian Constitution.

At our convention last November this Party approved a resolution calling for the entrenchment in our Constitution of the right of our aboriginal people to self-government.

[Translation]

The Liberal Government led by my predecessor, Mr. Trudeau, also recognized that right. The Penner report, named after the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior, which recommended working towards the inclusion of aboriginal self-government in the Constitution, was ordered by the Trudeau Government. Subsequent to this report, the same Government also introduced legislation to provide self-government for Indian nations.

[English]

As a result of that report, Mr. Trudeau also introduced a constitutional amendment to include aboriginal self-government in the Constitution. Mr. Trudeau's Government brought forward framework legislation for self-government for Indian nations. Aboriginal rights were included in the Constitution of 1982 along with the guarantee that those rights apply equally to men and women.

There was also recognition of the existence of rights acquired through both future and existing land claims agreements. Several land claims agreements were also negotiated including the self-government of the Cree-Naskapi in the James Bay area. Also included was the accord binding the federal and provincial Governments to hold three more conferences; one in 1984, one in 1985, and the conference next week, to reach agreement on this very critical issue for the aboriginal people of Canada.

[Translation]

We do not deny the complexity of this issue. We recognize the concerns it may raise for provincial Governments. However, we believe the federal Government should exercise its leadership to provide for aboriginal self-government, and in our opinion, the present Government is not exercising that leadership.

[English]

The issue turns on whether those rights should be included in the Constitution first as a general statement and affirmation of the rights of the aboriginal people which we consider to be inherent, never having been extinguished, or that all the details of every application of that right be worked out first and only then have the right included in the Constitution. It is the latter position which has been taken by the current Government of Canada. We believe it is the wrong one. The Government is attempting to make the right to self-government contingent upon the negotiation of successful agreements.

In his response dated March 18 to my letter of December 23, 1986, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in which I requested that the Government pursue this matter, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) stated that the principle of self-government "would be enforceable in accordance with the terms of negotiated agreements in order to ensure the necessary certainty as to the potential scope and effect of aboriginal government jurisdiction".

In his telex to native leaders outlining the program for the upcoming conference the Prime Minister says they will not even discuss specifics. They will only chat about the concept of self-government and hope that possibly the lawyers can draft something they can all agree on—maybe. I quote from that telex as follows:

> The first part of the conference will focus neither on the specific constitutional language nor on specific proposals.

That telex indicates that the Government is not only stepping backwards, but represents, I believe, an insult to the aboriginal people of the country. Let us remember where we were three years ago. I quote Mr. Trudeau at the First Ministers Conference in March, 1984, as follows:

> The Government of Canada remains committed to the establishment of aboriginal self-government . . . .We are not here to consider whether there should be institutions of self-government, but how these institutions should be brought into being: what should be their jurisdiction, their powers; how they should fit into the interlocking system of jurisdiction by which Canada is governed.

In effect, the current Government is turning back the clock to before 1982. It wants to start all over again. How can our Government expect the aboriginal peoples to trust it? In our view this is simply not acceptable, not to the aboriginal people and not to the Party I represent today in the House of Commons, nor should it be acceptable to the other Members of the House of Commons.

We in the Liberal Party support a constitutional amendment which recognizes the inherent right, the historic right never extinguished, of the aboriginal people to self-government. The question for the Prime Minister and the Premiers next week is whether their vision of Canada is great enough to include the aboriginals' right to self-determination or whether they will once again insist on calling the shots.

Our First Ministers must demonstrate faith in the ability of the aboriginal peoples of this land to make their own decisions. It is not the time to take refuge in the security of what they may believe to be a status quo, that status quo having served the aboriginal people of this country so poorly in the past.

Not only must we have an acceptable amendment, we must also have a commitment from the Government subsequent to that amendment to negotiate and to provide the fiscal resources necessary for the effective exercise of self-government and a commitment to negotiate the necessary agreements and infrastructure. Our point is that the agenda should be, enshrinement of an existing right as a constitutional amendment to our constitutional position in 1982, then the infrastructure, then the agreements, then the financial underpinnings.

This is the last scheduled conference on the issue of aboriginal rights under the terms of the Constitution Act, 1982. Time is running out. I believe that we must move forward in the process started by my colleague, the Member for Cochrane—Superior, and continued by the last Government. The current Government cannot abrogate its responsibility to complete this historical and, I believe, essential change to our Constitution.

I am glad the Minister of Justice is here to respond. I understand his sincerity, but we believe that he ought to persuade his Government and the Premiers that this is the last constitutional opportunity under the law of 1982 to achieve that breakthrough. There are hundreds of thousands of Canadian citizens of aboriginal status awaiting his answer and looking forward to one last chance at that conference next week. We are counting on him, from our quarter of the House, to exercise on behalf of the people of Canada the leadership which I believe is overwhelmingly sought by Canadians everywhere and from every origin.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief question for the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I would like to thank him for his participation and initiation of this very important debate. Is the position of the Party of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that inherent right to self-government on the part of the aboriginal people involves sovereignty of aboriginal peoples?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think we understand the interdependence of these rights and the fact that these rights were historically linked to a land base and must be considered in accordance with the land base. I think that the background work has been sufficiently explored so that the full ambit and parameter of those rights is already known. The Minister's officials in the Department of Justice have explored this for the last 10 years. I think there is enough precision and certitude to the ambit of those rights to draft that constitutional amendment with little difficulty. We are asking that those historical and inherent rights which preceded the arrival of our ancestors on this continent be enshrined in the Constitution as already described, and that the aboriginal peoples of this country be invited to join our confederation.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would like to get a more precise response, if I might. I am asking whether it is the position of the Liberal Party of Canada that the inherent right to self-government involves actual sovereignty, or is it the position of the Liberal party of Canada that self-government should be only in the context of confederation?

• (1250)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think we are talking about self-government within our Confederation, linked to that historical land base. If the hon. gentleman would refer to the United States Constitution, he will see in that Constitution that the word "sovereignty" has a flexible enough meaning to recognize the aboriginal peoples under the United States Constitution within that context as well.

I urge him not to confuse the issue by setting up a definition of "sovereignty" beyond what the historical inherent right would imply.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, this will be my last question because I want to have an opportunity of elaborating on what I think is a very excellent position of leadership taken by the federal Government with respect to this matter.

I just want to refer back to the remarks of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he addressed, a week ago last Wednesday, the gathering on Parliament Hill which was sponsored by the AFM, representing the Indian peoples of Canada. At that time the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition supported what he referred to as an explicit right of self-government. He did not at that time, and I have a copy of the transcript of his remarks, endorse the concept of an inherent right. I ask the hon. gentleman what has caused him and his Party to change their position since a week ago last Wednesday?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my position was quite clear that we wanted to state explicitly what was implicitly already an inherent right. So there is no conflict at all. I did not state a precise position, as I am able to state in the House of Commons, before a public meeting where the Indian peoples were calling for some response from the Government of Canada. In the absence of the Government, I went out and met with them. The Minister may have had—

Mr. McDermid: The Minister has been meeting with them all along.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on this issue? Our motion is clear and consistent. I am going to read it to the Minister. We moved that this House affirms its support for the aboriginal peoples of Canada in their endeavour to have recognized in the Constitution their inherent right to self-government. Nothing could be clearer and the Minister will have an opportunity to respond to it in clear terms. What is more, the aboriginal peoples of our country are going to be listening to him very carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Right Honourable Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). If he is proud of the patriation of the Constitution, why did he overlook the province of Quebec?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As you know, this is not relevant to the situation today, and the Hon. Member is as aware as I am of the history of our patriation. But he should pay particular attention to what we are here for today, namely, to remedy an injustice, and I give his colleague the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) an opportunity to take a stand.

An Hon. Member: Where are the Quebec Francophone members?

An Hon. Member: You don't have enought guts to rise.

An Hon. Member: Traitors!

An Hon. Member: Why don't you go back to your riding.

An Hon. Member: There is not even one Quebecer present.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on questions and comments?

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question, if I may. I want to commend the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), if that is in order, for putting this motion before the House today. It is a very important issue. The aboriginal people of this country have rights and those rights should be enshrined in the Constitution. I agree fully with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I want to ask him a question which is very difficult for all of us. What is the policy of the Liberal Government now on Métis and non-status people? There are a lot of them in Saskatchewan. I do not have the simple answers to it. I wonder if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could enlighten the House as to what the position of the Métis people should be in terms of the Constitution of Canada? I am not asking this question in a critical sense. It is just a very difficult issue that we are going to have to deal with some day.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right, and he has returned the House to a serious tone.

I have met with the Métis people of Canada through their federation. They are anxious that this constitutional agreement be achieved in the terms as we described it this morning so that they can proceed towards some sort of constitutional recognition by way of agreement of the rights they may have under our Confederation. We would be in favour of advancing that position.

[Translation]

I will just reply to the noise coming from benches opposite, Mr. Speaker, by saying that the reason why the Quebec Tory caucus is so sensitive today is because they have no Constitutional position to respond to Mr. Bourassa's initiatives.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They have nothing. The Liberal party's position since November is quite clear, quite concise and quite constructive, to quote Mr. Bourassa's own words. Even the NDP which is not so comfortable in Quebec has a position, but the Conservative caucus has a big zero to offer the Quebec people.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, when we hear pandemonium in the Opposition benches, it's business as usual. I have a question for the Leader of the Opposition. Although his answer to my colleague for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) was absolute Liberal hypocrisy, I would like to ask him, if he is so conscientious, Mr. Speaker, as to grant the right to self-government to the native people, how does he explain that Quebec is absent from those negotiations and does not want to take part? If he has such an awareness of the provinces, especially Quebec, Mr. Speaker, when we know that his own party dropped Quebec, his own party stabbed it with the Ouellets and others.

An Hon. Member: They murdered it.

Mr. Blais: Where are the Members from Quebec? There is not a single one of them.

Mr. Gauthier: What about Allmand? Is he not a Quebecer? What about Berger. Is he not a Quebecer?

Mr. Berger: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: French-speaking Quebecers, there is not one of them.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I see the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) is returning to his seat and I understand he is raising either a point of order or a point of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Conservative Members have just insulted part of the Quebec people by suggesting there were no Quebec Members among the Liberal Members today. I want to tell him that anglophone members from Quebec are definitely Quebecers and Canadians, and it is about time Members in that party recognized the multicultural and pluralistic nature of our Canadian society—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1300)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Once upon a time there was a rule of relevance in this Chamber. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) referred to it earlier, something for which the Chair is grateful. The Chair will exercise that ancient rule. I will now hear the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the right hon. gentleman.

An Hon. Member: One o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members, as I did a few moments ago, that because of the ministerial statement and replies the House will sit until 1.09 p.m.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a serious question for the right hon. gentleman. His friend who is now sitting to the right of him, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), will reinforce the feeling that I have a very genuine interest in this issue as I was a spokesman for our Party for one year while we were in opposition. One of the things that has been bothering me somewhat while these negotiations are going on is the leverage that is being used by the Premier of Quebec in bringing our native peoples into them and their position vis-à-vis the Constitution. I am wondering if the right hon. gentleman will use his good offices and ask the Premier of Quebec that he not use the native peoples of Canada as a leverage—

Ms. Copps: Like you did with Sterling Lyon.

Mr. McDermid: Boy, you are ignorant!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: You are arrogant!

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): You are Liberal!

Ms. Mitchell: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of all Hon. Members that yesterday during a question and comment period when I was not in the Chair, but when the Acting Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Hyacinthe—Bagot (Mrs. Champagne), was in the Chair, there was, as Hon. Members will note if they look at Hansard, or if they were here, an unfortunate and lengthy exchange of comments that took place back and forth across the Chamber. I remind all Hon. Members that that was viewed by thousands of people who watch this place. I can also say that the comportment of all Hon. Members has been—and I think the Chair can say this—generally of a very high quality for a long time now. However, I would ask Hon. Members not to take advantage of the question and comment period. It was introduced, as some Members who are in this Chamber will know, and when I was their colleague as a private Member, in order to create more debate, and more relevant debate, arising out of the comments made by Hon. Members. It is not an excuse for Members to send messages, if I can put it euphemistically, to each other verbally. I would ask all Hon. Members to constrain themselves.

The second thing I want to say is this. There are obvious differences of opinion on this subject in the Chamber. It is not for the Chair to comment on them. I think the Chair can almost take judicial notice of the fact that the matter raised here by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is a very serious one. It is treated just as seriously by the New Democratic Party because of the calibre of the Members who are here for this debate. It is also being treated as seriously by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and other Members who are here.

I would ask the Right Hon. Member to respond to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown. Since we are close to the time of adjournment for lunch, I know that the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, or the Minister of Justice, whoever wishes to speak next, might want to start after lunch so that his comments will not be interrupted.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to withdraw my remarks which I aimed at the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I feel very passionately about this particular subject and I was asking a very serious question. I apologize for the comments I made earlier.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair thanks the Hon. Member. Perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will respond to the question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the last comment of the Hon. Member also. We held him in respect on this issue when he was critic. Thus I will treat his question with the gravity it deserves, and I thank him for it.

I hope that the Premier of Quebec will see it within his priorities to attend the meeting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In earlier days his Government was a leader in moving toward self-government and the autonomous rights of our aboriginal peoples when the James Bay project was constructed. In order to make that a meaningful operation he had to obtain the consent and the co-operation of the people in northern Quebec. He did so with a great deal of imagination, skill and enlightenment. As a result of that, there was the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement. Flowing from that was a federal statute, the Cree-Naskapi Act. In light of the history of the enlightened treatment the Premier of Quebec has shown for our aboriginal peoples, I hope that he would bring those skills to the table at the conference next week.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the order of speaking which seems to have agreement in the Chamber is that the Minister of Justice will speak next. I am inviting the Minister of Justice to indicate to me whether he would prefer to return at two o'clock. There are but a few minutes left until we adjourn.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I think this would be an appropriate time for us to adjourn. I can then deliver my remarks in total at two o'clock, even though they would be equally compelling if I were to divide them before lunch and after lunch.

Mr. Speaker: It being 1.09 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1.09 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at 1.09 p.m., the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) had the floor.

[Translation]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part, on behalf of the Government of Canada, in this important debate.

[English]

Earlier today, the Leader of the New Democratic Party asked me to restate the position of the federal Government with respect to the very important issue we are debating today. It gives me a great deal of pleasure to participate in the debate so that I can state the federal Government's position on the matter of constitutional amendment on behalf of the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

Let me point out at the beginning that the position of the Government has been consistent since taking office. In fact, it has been consistently better than that of Members opposite when they were in Government.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is asking us to recognize an inherent right of self-government for aboriginal peoples. The previous Government refused to so in 1984. I am at a loss to understand why there should be such a blatant inconsistency on the part of the Official Opposition on this very important issue.

Indeed, I pointed out during the question and answer period with the Leader of the Opposition that, not only were the Liberals inconsistent between 1984 and today, they have been inconsistent between one and a half weeks ago and today.

It should be clear that the position of the Assembly of First Nations has been consistent throughout. From the very beginning they have insisted on the so-called inherent right to self-government. That certainly has not changed. The record will show, however, that that was a position they placed before the First Ministers' Conference of 1984, which everyone knew.

Let us look at what the Government of the day, many of whom are sitting in the Opposition now, said in response. In fact, I would like to quote from the federal proposal that was tabled at that conference. I refer to a particular provision from their proposed constitutional accord. It states:

> The aboriginal peoples of Canada have the right to self-governing institutions that will meet the needs of their communities, subject to the nature, jurisdiction and powers of those institutions, and to the financing arrangements relating thereto, being identified and defined through negotiation with the Government of Canada and the provincial governments; and
> The Government of Canada and the provincial governments are committed to participating in the negotiations referred to in paragraph (B) and to presenting to Parliament and the provincial legislatures legislation to give effect to the agreements resulting from the negotiations.

That provision merely offered self-governing institutions and, moreover, it contained no guarantee that self-government arrangements would be constitutionally protected. The proposal then envisaged delegated powers that could have been revoked at any time by Parliament and the legislatures concerned.

So unsuitable was the Liberal Government's proposal that it prompted a caustic observation by a scholar and specialist on the subject of aboriginal constitutional rights. I want to quote from a recently published book by Dr. Bryan Schwartz of the University of Manitoba Law School, First Principles, Second Thoughts. He says:

> The Federal Government's 1984 proposal on self-government was a brilliant public relations stroke. It was utterly vacuous; it contained no ideas on what self-government would look like in practice, no commitment to adequately fund them, no clarification of the federal-provincial division of powers and responsibilities in dealing with them. It was designed to be legally unenforceable. It might have prejudiced constitutional gains that aboriginal peoples had already made.
> It would almost certainly have impeded their progress towards substantive constitutional assurances on self-government. Yet the impression created for the public was that the Federal Government had unveiled a bold new picture of aboriginal self-government.

What does that represent? Is that an inherent right? I do not think so. Is it a substantial acknowledgement of the right in some way? I suggest that the answer is no. The proposal of the Liberal Government at the time was no more than a right to delegated legislation. It was not a constitutional solution. The negotiating climate established by the Government was so poor that even with this proposal it was only able to win the support of three provinces and, of course, none of the aboriginal associations. That record does not accord with the kind of proposition I hear from across the House today.

I want to speak about our record in connection with this matter. When we took office we inherited an extremely polarized and very difficult situation. We moved immediately to reconcile two opposing points of view. On one hand, the aboriginal associations were insistent on an inherent right to self-government. On the other hand, many governments did not want to recognize any right of the aboriginal peoples to self-government in the Constitution. Instead, most governments preferred to proceed by non-constitutional means of defining self-government. They were led by the Liberal Government and the same Prime Minister whom the Leader of the Opposition now embraces, lock, stock and barrel. Mr. Trudeau's position was that he would give self-government but it would be delegated. It would be legislated rather than constitutionalized.

I know the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) will agree that that proposition was patently absurd and unfair. While I thought he would have rejected it at the time, I did not hear him do so.

In December, 1984, my predecessor introduced a proposal that was designed to bring these two sides together in a spirit of compromise and negotiation which, I suggest, is the preferred way to work at constitutional development in our country. The polls indicate that this is what Canadians want. It is the preferred position of the aboriginal peoples. The proposal of my predecessor provided for the right of self-government to be recognized in the Constitution subject to its detailed right being defined in agreements concluded by the governments and aboriginal representatives. That proposal marked the beginning of a new era in negotiating the right of the aboriginal peoples to self-government.

• (1410)

This has been a lengthy process involving numerous multilateral meetings at the ministerial level and at the level of officials. All parties worked together building upon this essential idea and identifying the components which they considered necessary to reach a workable agreement on a self-government amendment.

As a result, the federal Government was in a position to table at the 1985 First Ministers' Conference a substantive and improved proposal for a constitutional amendment on aboriginal self-government. That proposal will have constitutionally committed Governments to negotiate self-government agreements with representatives of the aboriginal peoples. It also proposed and provided for the right to self-government set out in the agreements and that those rights would be given constitutional protection. Despite its subsequent modification at the insistence of the Government of Saskatchewan, the proposal was supported in principle by seven provinces around the constitutional table and by two of the four aboriginal associations.

That represents the progress of the former Government and the present Government in constitutional amendment on behalf of the aboriginal peoples of Canada. I ask Hon. Members, particularly those who have put forward this proposition, to compare the two records and understand the progress which has been made.

The level of support from aboriginal associations for the proposals was not sufficient for Governments to proceed with an amendment without giving aboriginal peoples the opportunity to consult further with their constituents. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not ready to give up. Instead, he asked aboriginal leaders to reconsider their positions and instructed his Ministers to convene a subsequent meeting to deal with the outstanding contentious items. The meeting took place, but the necessary support was unfortunately not forthcoming.

Since then the Government has been tireless in its efforts to pursue a constitutional amendment. It has convened and led numerous ministerial meetings to identify the necessary components of a workable agreement on the self-government amendment. It has also explored a number of options which might bring us to a compromise.

Throughout this very lengthy process we have attempted to strive for compromise, which is the essence of constitutional change. I have been a part of the process since July of last year and have participated in a series of not only multilateral meetings but a huge number of bilateral meetings with participants, with the purpose of seeing whether or not we could in fact establish appropriate wording for a constitutional amendment. The intervening period has been a productive one. We listened. We consulted. We negotiated and have been able to define, in my view, the essential shape of an agreement which will give us an amendment on self-government.

Let me be clear that the federal Government is prepared to support proposals which provide for the explicit recognition of the right of aboriginal peoples to self-government. We take the view that we must be equally explicit in ensuring that self-government be implemented through agreements negotiated by Governments and the representatives of aboriginal peoples living in communities or regions, agreements tailored to the particular circumstances of aboriginal peoples which would encompass a broad range of matters.

We established a process of negotiation among aboriginal peoples and Governments to define and implement that right; to permit aboriginal control over matters that are directly affected and applicable to all aboriginal peoples; to ensure that the rights already recognized and affirmed in Section 35(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982 are neither diminished nor expanded; to permit the reasonable accommodation of the interests and concerns of other Canadians; and, finally, to ensure that aboriginal peoples have access to the basic protections and privileges available to other Canadians.

I want to review the approach of the Government. The Government supports an explicit statement, as I indicated before, of the rights of aboriginal peoples, and it would be implemented and exercised through a process of negotiations.

The recognition of the right would respect the aspirations of aboriginal peoples without compromising their position—and it is shared by most Governments—regarding the unacceptability of an immediately enforceable and inherent right to self-government.

This position is based upon the strongly held view of Governments that the establishment of aboriginal self-government should be achieved through negotiation. I suggest that the entrenchment of an inherent right could leave details of content and exercise to be decided by lawsuits and countersuits. Because these details of content and exercise refer to such complex items as the nature of the institutions of self-government, their powers and jurisdiction, and financial arrangements, and because the arrangements resulting from negotiations could affect in many ways the lives of all Canadians, the Government and most others as well believe that they should be defined through negotiation.

Furthermore, the Government believes that a key purpose of self-government negotiations under an amendment is to develop new relationships between the two orders of government and the aboriginal peoples, thus establishing their rightful place in Confederation. The entrenchment of an inherent right and the inevitable litigation to define its content and exercise would not meet this goal.

The federal Government favours a process of negotiation to implement self-government. I think it is important to understand, however, that once agreements have been concluded, it believes that aboriginal self-government rights should be given constitutional protection. This is not a matter of passing legislation giving delegated self-government which can be revoked at the whim of any subsequent Parliament. This is constitutionalized self-government which has been arrived at by equal negotiation on the part of aboriginal peoples and the respective levels of Government. It would be constitutionalized and put out of the reach of subsequent Parliaments and the whims of subsequent legislators and subsequent governments, whether they be federal or provincial.

Constitutional protection of the rights contained in the agreements would safeguard them from unilateral amendment by Parliament or provincial legislatures. Having their rights thus recognized and affirmed is of special significance to Canada's aboriginal peoples.

Although it recognizes that in 1985 only six provinces were prepared to support it, the Government continues to believe that the commitment to negotiate self-government agreements should be placed in the constitutional amendment rather than in a political accord. This approach respects the aboriginal belief that only a constitutionally mandated commitment to negotiate will guarantee the integrity of the process over a period of time and through changes of governments. While some governments have feared that a constitutionally mandated commitment would result in aboriginal groups resorting to the courts for rulings which would prescribe the terms of agreements where negotiations had failed, our view is that the commitment would simply require governments to negotiate in good faith.

We support the principle that the evolution toward and the financing of aboriginal self-government is a joint responsibility of both orders of government. Although we believe that the costs of self-government can only be determined on a case by case basis in the context of the powers and responsibilities which an aboriginal government would assume, we are of the view that neither level of government should off-load financial responsibilities as a result of self-government, and that both levels of government should share in any new costs resulting from the negotiations which would take place.

I have a couple of minutes left in which to deal with some very important issues. I hope the House will allow me a few minutes to conclude my remarks and entertain questions.

The position on the joint responsibility of both levels of government reflects a conviction shared by all governments that provincial participation is a practical necessity, given possible effects on areas of provincial jurisdiction. Provincial Governments have sought an active role in negotiation of self-government agreements in order to ensure consistency by aboriginal self-governing communities with the standards and regulations in adjoining regions.

The Government supports the principle that Parliament and provincial Legislatures have a role to play in the constitutional protection of rights contained in their negotiated agreement.

A provision embodying this principle would require approval by the provincial legislature as well as Parliament in any case where rights set out in negotiated agreements were to obtain constitutional protection. This approval requirement reflects the positive role provinces are prepared to take in the negotiation and realization of self-government arrangements.

The Government is, however, willing to consider alternatives that do not involve provincial legislatures in the protection of rights contained in certain types of bilateral agreements. Certain of these alternatives have been advanced during the consultative process, primarily to the effect that provincial approval might not be required where their legislative jurisdiction or other interests were not affected.

We support the inclusion in an amendment of a non-derogation clause to ensure that new constitutional provisions could not be construed so as to derogate from any existing aboriginal or treaty rights aboriginal peoples may have. Such a provision would guarantee that any new constitutional amendment would not prejudice the rights of aboriginal peoples that are now constitutionally recognized. At the same time, the amendment should ensure that existing rights are not expanded, except through a process of negotiated agreements.

The process that has led to this final conference has challenged the resourcefulness and perseverance of Governments and aboriginal associations alike. Although the search for constitutional change through negotiation has been a difficult one, the Prime Minister in his opening address to the 1985 First Ministers' Conference expressed confidence that:

> The inventiveness and creativity that Canadians have always shown in developing their democratic institutions——would stand participants in good stead.

The Government believes that significant tangible benefits would result from the federal approach to the constitutional recognition of aboriginal self-government rights. This approach would provide for self-government based on aboriginal peoples taking responsibility for their own decisions rather than having decisions made for them; based on self-reliance rather than dependence; based on pride and a sense of self-worth. This, indeed, is the Canadian way.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I hesitate to interrupt the Minister but perhaps by unanimous consent the House will allow him to conclude his remarks?

Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I thank the House for its indulgence. I will not be very long. I just wanted to put on record the full context of the background and the position of the federal Government for the benefit of Members and for the benefit of all Canadians.

If participants can achieve the level of agreement required for a constitutional amendment on aboriginal self-government, the federal Government believes that the door will have been opened to translating into reality the dreams of Canada's aboriginal peoples. In this sense, the Opposition's motion is not helpful as it is clearly not of a nature that could produce agreement to proceed with a constitutional amendment.

[Translation]

However, Madam Speaker, the Canadian Government's approach does not stop at that. Recently, we introduced a list of basic rules governing the financing of aboriginal governments.

[English]

Let me summarize what our approach does, Madam Speaker. First and foremost it asks that the aboriginal peoples of Canada give us none of their rights recognized within the Constitution. There are no risks in this regard for them. We recognize those rights which are at present acknowledged by our Constitution.

Second, it provides for a solemn, indeed a constitutional commitment by governments to the aboriginal peoples that they will enter into negotiations aimed at concluding self-government agreement.

Finally, it provides that the right to self-government identified in those agreements would be given constitutional protection. Let me stress what that means. It means protection in the highest law of this land.

Our approach would result in self-government arrangements based on negotiation and compromise. I think that is the route to follow in adjusting constitutional arrangements. I have to ask the question, and this, of course, is the nub of what we are talking about today: what does inherent right to self-government mean? Does it mean that we are going to dedicate the resolution of constitutional self-government to the courts and to a series of litigation by a variety of aboriginal peoples across Canada?

We have at the present time a very delicate and intricate jurisdictional relationship in Canada. It is appropriate and necessary for us to have a system which involves both levels of government in our country and the aboriginal peoples. Any amendment that would provide for an adjustment of those jurisdictional relationships must be formulated to ensure that that delicate balance is not thrown awry. The only way that I know of is through a process of doing it, what I call the Canadian way, through negotiation and agreement; a commitment to negotiate, a commitment with the aboriginal peoples enforceable in the courts of this land but nonetheless a political accord arrived at between the aboriginal people and the Governments of our country.

I agree with those who say that at the First Ministers' meeting we have a historic obligation no matter who we represent in those meetings to arrive at an agreement to set the basis for progress in the years ahead, to meet the legitimate hopes and aspirations of aboriginal peoples and to do it in a way which will ensure progress and ensure that the aboriginal peoples will realize self-government at the earliest possible moment in the most equitable way and in a way which will win the approval, not only of those peoples but of all peoples of Canada.

I thank you, Madam Speaker, for your time and for the indulgence of the House and I look forward to any questions that may be asked.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, the motion condemns the Government for not showing the kind of leadership needed in this upcoming constitutional debate which has been taking place at the ministerial and official level for some time. The Minister has asserted everything the Government has been doing.

Could the Minister tell the House what chance does he think the conference will have of succeeding? Does the Minister believe that it will result in an acceptable resolution of the situation, a recognition by the federal Government and of the provinces of the right to self-government in a way that will be acceptable to the aboriginal peoples of Canada? What chance does the Minister think the conference has of succeeding?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I think I should answer that question in two parts. First, very often in negotiations there is a pre-occupation with items in which there are differences between participants. It tends to overshadow very substantial areas of consensus which have been developed over the course of the last month. I say to the Hon. Member that I regret very much that we were not able at the ministerial level to come forward with specific wording that we would recommend as being acceptable to the First Ministers to take forward, to finalize and to approve. I had hoped to be in that position after the substantial number of meetings but, regretfully, that was not the case.

• (1430)

Having said that, I know the federal Government looks forward to going into this meeting with a view to concluding an arrangement. It will require movement on the part of all parties. As has been pointed out many times, in order to amend the Constitution it is necessary to have concurrence of the federal Government and seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population. We are going to work as hard as necessary to achieve success. That is our commitment. I hope the parties to this issue will show the necessary flexibility which will result in an amendment that will meet the hopes and aspirations of aboriginal peoples. That should be and is our commitment. The alternative is unacceptable.

Mr. Penner: Madam Speaker, all Members recognize the need for provincial consent. What troubles Members on this side and the aboriginal leaders is the lack of leadership shown by the federal Government. I want to ask the Minister why the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) would suggest that the first day of the meeting be given over to a discussion of issues in a general way and that they not get down to specifics? It leaves the impression there are no specifics to be discussed. I believe what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is proposing in his motion today is similar to the Nova Scotia proposal which has a free-standing right in Section 35(5)(a). It stands on its own. It then goes on in Section 35(5)(b) to say the scope of the right shall be set out in agreements. That is quite different from the federal position which at the very outset wants to make the right contingent.

My second question is to ask why the Minister wants to raise this smoke-screen, along with other attorneys-general across the country, that a recognition of the right to self-government is going to mean a headlong rush to the courts. Surely the Minister is now well enough acquainted with aboriginal leaders to know that it is not in the courts that they wish to seek a remedy but through negotiated agreements. If they wanted to use the courts, Section 35 gives them all the scope they need. There has been precious little of that except in the Province of British Columbia which has been so reluctant to do any kind of negotiating at all.

Finally, I want to come back to the question the Minister put to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition regarding what is meant by "inherent" and where the concept of sovereignty comes in. Would the Minister not agree that when we talk about sovereignty in the modern context, we are talking about a definition or description of jurisdiction? How do you define or describe jurisdiction? Surely the Minister would agree it is done by way of negotiation and agreement. Is that not what we want when we recognize an inherent right and then want to proceed from that recognition to agreements embodied in the Constitution?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. I should preface my remarks by acknowledging his very sincere interest in this matter over a long period of time. I do listen with interest and sincerity to his representations.

His first question dealt with the agenda. Reference has been made to a general discussion. I think that is taken out of the context of the Prime Minister's telex to the provincial Premiers and leaders of the aboriginal groups. There is specific reference to the draft proposed by Nova Scotia which is draft number three with an appendix. This document in itself has been the subject of discussions and it touches on all the salient and essential ingredients which have to be considered in coming to an agreement.

What we must do at the meeting and what the Prime Minister is interested in doing is having a discussion to resolve in a conceptual way some of those areas in which we can come together and bridge the gaps which have existed up until this point in time. I think the format will be helpful in arriving at a specific and detailed discussion so that an agreement can come out of the process.

The second question dealt with what is meant by inherent right. The Hon. Member puts forward the proposition that somehow the reason we are discussing the question of a process involving negotiations is that we are concerned that under the status quo, or indeed under an inherent right proposition, there will be a headlong rush, I think were his words, to the courts. With all due respect, I think this is a misunderstanding of the position we have put forward.

If you want to be quite candid and frank about the federal Government's position, this enhances the right of aboriginal peoples to go to the courts. It gives them an additional dimension, what I call a constructive and positive dimension, inasmuch as in the amendments put forward by the federal Government we include a commitment by the Government to negotiate. If we are simply silent or talk about inherent right or have some general reference to inherent right, that will fall far short of providing guidelines or any assistance to the courts to define what self-government really is. I ask the Hon. Member, and I referred to this the other day during Question Period, does he think that the courts are the appropriate forum in which to have these matters resolved? I think not. In his remarks he indicated that he would prefer, as do I and as do the aboriginal peoples, to have a negotiated arrangement. That is the mature political way in which we accomplish things in Canada. It is a recognition of the equality of status of the aboriginal peoples in this country that they are able to negotiate with different levels of government.
