

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE OF THE STATE

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series. CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

C)1984

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below. Coloured covers/			qu'il de c poin une mod	L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normale de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous. Coloured pages/
L Couv	erture de couleur				Pages de	couleur rs damaged/ erture endommaç	j és			Pages de Pages er	imaged/ idommag	óos -		£.
	rs restored and/o erture restaurée e					stored an staurées (
	r title missing/ re de couverture	manque		1		scoloured icolorées, ured maps/ es géographiques	en couleur			Pages de Pages de ured ink (i.e. othe e de couleur (i.e. a			V	Showthr Transpar ured plates and/o ches et/ou illustra					of print va négale de		ion
	d with other mate avec d'autres do					suppleme nd du mat			re along	binding may cau interior margin/ liure serrée peut (tion availe lition disp Blan appe have li se lors c mais	rtion le long de la k leaves added du ar within the text been omitted fro peut que certaine d'une restauration , lorsque cela étai tté filmées.	marge intérieure iring restoration n . Whenever possil m filming/ s pages blanches apparaissent dan	nay ble, these ajoutées es le texte,		slips, tissensure the Les page obscurcietc., ont	holly or passes, etc., ne best pos totalemes par un été filmés meilleur	, have be essible im ent ou pa feuillet d es à nouv	en refilme age/ irtielleme 'errata, ui reau de fa	nt ne pelure, tional comments: mentaires supplér Ce docum	is filmed at the re ent est filmé au te	oux de réduction i		ess ous.					,
10X	14X	18X	1.1	22X	1 1	26X	1 1	30X
	127	167	 X 		247		28Y

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

fills Memorial Library fcMester University

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol -- (meaning "CON-TINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Mills Memorial Library McMaster University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole -- signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants iliustrent la méthode.

1	2	3

1 2 3

1	2	3
4	5	6

pelure.

errata to

étails es du nodifier er une

ilmage

THOUGHTS

O'N

THE CAUSE

OF THE PRESENT

DISCONTENTS.

Hoc vero occultum, intestinum, domesticum malum, non modo non existit, verum etiam opprimit, antequam perspicere atque explorare potueris.

CIC.

LONDON: Printed for J. Dodsley, in Pall-Mall.

DUBLIN: Reprinted

For G. Faulkner, J. Exshaw, H. Saunders, W. Sleater, D. Chamberlaine, J. Potts, E. Lynch, J. Hoey, jun. J. Williams, J. Milliken, C. Ingham, J. Porter, and T. Walker.

M DCC LXX.

1 2

EX LIBRIS BARRY BROWN

MC MASHER UNIVERSHY TIBRARY HAMHLION ONLARIO

* Wabana dan con con far to be er tu in

THOUGHTS

ON

THECAUSE

OF THE PRESENT

DISCONTENTS.

CELX T is an undertaking of some degree of delicacy to examine into the cause of public disorders. If a man happens not to fucceed in fuch an enquiry, he will be thought weak and visionary; if he * 122865 * touches the true grievance, there is a danger that he may come near to perfons of weight and confequence, who will rather be exasperated at the discovery of their errors, than thankful for the occasion of correcting them. If he should be obliged to blame the favourites of the people, he will be confidered as the tool of power; if he censures those in power, he will be looked on as an instrument of faction. But in all exertions of duty fomething is to be hazarded. In cases of tumult and diforder, our law has invested every man, in some fort, with the authority of a magistrate. When the affairs of the nation are distracted, private people are, by the spirit of that law, justified in stepping a little out of their ordinary sphere. They enjoy a privilege, of somewhat more dignity and effect, than that of idle lamentation over the calamities of their country. They may look into them narrowly; they may reason upon them liberally; and if they should be so fortunate as to discover the true source of the mischief, and to suggest any probable method of removing it, though they may displease the rulers for the day, they are certainly of service to the cause of Government. Government is deeply interested in every thing which, even through the medium of some temporary uneasiness, may tend sinally to compose the minds of the subject, and to conciliate their affections. I have nothing to do here with the abstract value of the voice of the people. But as long as reputation, the most precious possession of every individual, and as long as opinion, the great support of the State, depend entirely upon that voice, it can never be confidered as a thing of little confequence either to individuals or to Government. Nations are not primarily ruled by laws; less by violence. Whatever original energy may be supposed either in force or regulation; the operation of both is, in truth, meerly instrumental. Nations are governed by the same methods, and on the same principles, by which an individual without authority is often able to govern those who are his equals or his fuperiors; by a knowledge of their temper, and by a judicious management of it; I mean when ever publick affairs are steadily and quietly conducted; not when Government is nothing but a continued scuffle between the magistrate and the multitude; ir which sometimes the one, and sometimes the other, is uppermost; in which they alternately yield and prevail in a feries of contemptible victories and feandalous submisfions. The temper of the people amongst whom he prefides ought therefore to be the first study of a Statesman, And the knowledge of this temper it is by no means impossible for him to attain, if he has not an interest in

To complain of the age we live in, to murmur at the presen possessions of power, to lament the past, to conceive extravagant hopes of the suture, are the common dispositions of the greatest part of mankind; being ignorant of what it his duty to learn.

indecd

ind

of

ex

tru

th

in to 211 pr

70 la

tel

th an

po

th

th en

in

рr

аг

th

ed

no

u

qı

fu

pe

lo

ſh

ħ

indeed the necessary effects of the ignorance and levity of the vulgar. Such complaints and humours have existed in all times; yet as all times have not been alike, true political sagacity manifests itself, in distinguishing that complaint, which only characterizes the general infirmity of human nature, from those which are symptoms of the particular distemperature of our own air and season.

Nobody, I believe, will confider it meerly as the language of spicen or disappointment if I say, that something particularly alar, in the There is hardly a marrin or out present conjuncture. of power who holds any other language. That Government is at once dreaded and contemped; that the laws are despoiled of all their respected and filutary terrors; that their inaction is a lubject of rid only, and their exertion of abhorrence; that rank, and office, and title, and all the telema plaufibilities of the world, have lost their reverence and effect; that our foreign politicks are as much deranged as our domestic economy; that our dependencies are flackened in their affection, and loofened from their obedience; that we know neither how to yield nor how to inforce; that hardly any thing above or below, abroad or at home, is found and entire; but that disconnection and confusion, in offices, in parties, in families, in Parliament, in the nation, prevail beyond the disorders of any former time: these are facts univerfally admitted and lamented.

This state of things is the more extraordinary, because the great parties which formerly divided and agitated the kingdom are known to be in a manner entirely dissolved. No great external calamity has visited the nation; no pestilence or famine. We do not labour at present under any scheme of taxation new or oppressive in the quantity or in the mode. Nor are we engaged in unsuccessful war; in which, our missortunes might easily pervert our judgment; and our minds, fore from the loss of national glory, might feel every blow of Fortune as a crime in Government.

It is impossible that the cause of this strange distemper should not sometimes become a subject of discourse. It is a compliment due, and which I willingly pay, to those who administer our affairs, to take notice in the first place of their speculation. Our ministers are of opinion, that the encrease of our trade and manufactures, that our growth by colonization and by conquest, have concurred to accumulate immense wealth in the hands of fome individuals; and this again being dispersed amongst the people, has rendered them universally proud, ferocious, and ungovernable; that the infolence of fome from their enormous wealth, and the boldness of others from a guilty poverty, have rendered them capable of the most atrocious attempts, so that they have trampled upon all fubordination, and violently borne down the unarmed laws of a free Government; barriers too feeble against the fury of a populace so fierce and licentious as ours. They contend, that no adequate provocation has been given for fo fpreading a discontent? our affairs having been conducted throughout with remarkable temper and confummate wifdom. The wicked industry of some libellers, joined to the intrigues of a few disappointed politicians, have, in their opinion, been able to produce this unnatural ferment in the nation.

A 3

opinion,

Nothing indeed can be more unnatural than the prefent convulsions of this country, if the above account be a true one. I confess I shall assent to it with great reluctance, and only on the compulsion of the clearest and firmest proofs; because their account resolves itself into this short, but discouraging proposition, "That we have a very good Ministry, but that we are a very bad people;" that we fet ourselves to bite the hand that feeds us; that with a malignant infanity we oppose the measures, and ungratefully vilify the persons of those, whose sole object is our own peace and prosperity. few puny libellers, acting under a knot of factious politicians, without virtue, parts, or character (such they are constantly represented by these gentlemen) are sufficient to excite this disturbance, very perverse must be the disposition of that people, amongst whom such a disturbance can be excited by such means. It is besides no small aggravation of the public misfortune, that the disease on this hypothesis, appears to be without remedy. If the wealth of the nation be the cause of its turbulence, I imagine, it is not proposed to introduce poverty, as a constable to keep the peace. If our dominions abroad are the roots which feed all this rank luxuriance of fedition, it is not intended to cut them off in order to famish the fruit. If our liberty has enfeebled the executive power,

therc

the

pot

ma W

for ou

bit

ly

in

es,

ve

of

fed

lly

:ce

eſs

em

ev

tly

t;

fo

no

h-

m.

he

eir

ent

e-

be e-

٦ď

:lf

at

·y ıt

e

there is no defign, I hope, to call in the aid of defpotism, to fill up the deficiencies of law. Whatever may be intended, these things are not yet professed. We seem therefore to be driven to absolute despair; for we have no other materials to work upon, but those out of which God has been pleased to form the inhabitants of this island. If these-be radically and essentially vitious, all that can be faid is, that those men are very unhappy, to whose fortune or duty it falls to administer the affairs of this untoward people. I hear it indeed fometimes afferted, that a steady perseverance in the present measures, and a rigorous punishment of those who oppose them, will in course of time infallibly put an end to these disorders. But this in my opinion is said without much observation of our present disposition, and without any knowledge at all of the general nature of mankind. If the matter of which this nation is composed be so very fermentable as these gentlemen describe it, leaven never will be wanting to work it up, as long as discontent, revenge, and ambition have existence in the world. Particular punishments are the cure for accidental distempers in the State; they inflame rather than allay those heats which arise from the settled mismanagement of the Government, or from a natural ill disposition in the people. It is of the utmost moment not to make mistakes in the use of strong meafures; and firmness is then only a virtue when it accompanies the most perfect wisdom. In truth, inconstancy is a fort of natural corrective of folly and ignorance.

I am not one of those who think that the people are never in the wrong. They have been fo, frequently and outrageously, both in other countries and in this. But I do fay, that in all disputes between them and their rulers, the prefumption is at least upon a par in favour of the people. Experience may perhaps justify me in going further. Where popular discontents have been very prevalent; it may well be affirmed and supported, that there has been generally fomething found amifs in the constitution, or in the conduct of Government. The people have no interest in disorder. When they do wrong, it is their error, and not their crime. But with the governing part of the State, it is far otherwife. They certainly may act ill by design, as well as by mistake. " Les revolutions qui arrivent dans les " grands

A 4

" grands etats ne sont point un effect du bazard, ni du caprice des peuples. Rien ne revolte les grands d'un royaume comme Governement soible et derangé. Pour la populace, ce n'est jamais par envie d'attaquer qu'elle se souleve, mais par impatience de souffrir." * These are the words of a great man; of a Minister of state; and a zealous assertor of Monarchy. They are applied to the system of Favouritism which was adopted by Henry the Third of France, and to the dreadful consequences it produced. What he says of revolutions is equally true of all great disturbances. If this presumption in favour of the subjects against the trustees of power be not the more probable, I am sure it is the more comfortable speculation; because it is more easy to change an administration than to reform a people.

Upon a supposition therefore, that in the opening of the cause the presumptions stand equally balanced between the parties, there seems sufficient ground to entitle any person to a fair hearing, who attempts some other scheme besides that easy one which is fashionable in some fashionable companies, to account for the present discontents. It is not to be argued that we endure no grievance, because our grievances are not of the same sort with those under which we laboured formerly; not precisely those which we bore from the Tudors, or vindicated on the Stuarts. A great change has taken place in the affairs of this country. For in the silent lapse of events as material alterations have been insensibly brought about in the policy and character of governments and nations, as those which have been marked by the tumult of public revolutions.

It is very rare indeed for men to be wrong in their feelings concerning public misconduct, as rare to be right in their speculation upon the cause of it. I have constantly observed, that the generality of people are fifty years, at least, behind-hand in their politicks. There are but very few, who are capable of comparing and digesting what passes before their eyes at different times and occasions, so as to form the whole into a distinct system. But in books every thing is settled for them, without the exertion of any considerable diligence or sagacity. For which reason men are wise with but little restection, and good with little self-denial, in the business of all

* Mem. de Sully, vol. I. p. 133.

ni du n roycour la fe foure the and a
to the ty the nees it
f true
avour
t the e fpemini-

ng of beo enfeme
nable predure
the
merdors,
aken
ilent

heir nt in obat but ing ind em. out ty.

es

go-

ark-

times except their own. We are very uncorrupt and tolerably enlightened judges, of the transactions of past ages; where no passions deceive, and where the whole train of circumstances, from the trifling cause to the tragical event, is fet in an orderly series before us. Few are the partizans of departed tyranny; and to be a Whig on the business of an hundred years ago, is very confiftent with every advantage of present civility. retrospective wisdom, and historical patriotism. are things of wonderful convenience; and ferve admirably to reconcile the old quarrel between speculation and prac-Many a stern republican, after gorging himself with a full feast of admiration of the Grecian commonwealths and of our true Saxon constitution, and discharging all the splendid bile of his virtuous indignation on King John and King James, fits down perfectly fatisfied to the coarfest work and homeliest job of the day he lives in. I believe there was no professed admirer of Henry the Eighth among the instruments of the last King James; nor in the court of Henry the Eighth, was there, I dare fay, to be found a fingle advocate for the favourites of Richard the Second.

No complaifance to our Court, or to our age, can make me believe nature to be so changed, but that public liberty will be among us, as among our ancestors, obnoxious to some person or other; and that opportunities will be furnished, for attempting at least, some alteration to the prejudice of our constitution. These attempts will naturally vary in their mode according to times and circumstances. For ambition, though it has ever the fame general views, has not at all times the fame means, nor the same particular objects. A great deal of the furniture of ancient tyranny is worn to rags; the rest is entirely out of fashion. Besides, there are sew Statesmen fo very clumfy and awkward in their business, as to fall into the identical snare which has proved fatal to their predecessors. When an arbitrary imposition is attempted upon the subject, undoubtedly it will not bear on its forehead the name of Ship-money. There is no danger that an extension of the Forest-laws should be the chosen mode of oppression in this age. And when we hear any instance of ministerial rapacity, to the prejudice of the rights of private life, it will certainly not be the exaction of two hundred pullets from a woman woman of fashion, for leave to lye with her own huf-band.*

10

Every age has its own manners, and its politicks dependent upon them; and the same attempts will not be made against a constitution fully formed and matured, that were used to destroy it in the cradle, or to resist its growth during it's infancy.

Against the being of Parliament, I am satisfied no defigns have ever been entertained fince the Revolution. Every one must perceive, that it is strongly the interest of the Court, to have some second cause interposed between the Ministers and the people. The gentlemen of the House of Commons have an interest equally strong, in sustaining the part of that intermediate cause. However they may hire out the u/ufruel of their voices, they never will part with the fee and inheritance. Accordingly those who have been of the most known devotion to the will and pleasure of a Court, have at the same time been most forward in afferting an high authority in the House of Commons, When they knew who were to use that authority, and how it was to be employed, they thought it never could be carried too far. It must be always the wish of an unconstitutional Statesman, that an House of Commons who are entirely dependent upon him, should have every right of the people entirely dependent upon their pleasure. It was foon discovered that the forms of a free, and the ends of an arbitrary Government, were things not altogether incompatible.

The power of the Crown, almost dead and rotten as Prerogative, has grown up anew, with much more strength, and far less odium, under the name of Instuence. An Instuence, which operated without noise and without violence, an instuence which converted the very antagonist, into the instrument, of power, which contained in itself a perpetual principle of growth and renovation, and which the distresses and the prosperity of the country equally tended to augment, was an admirable substitute for a Prerogative; that being only the offspring of antiquated prejudices, had moulded in its original stamina irresistible principles of decay and dissolution. The ignorance of the people is a bottom but for a temporary system; the interest

<sup>Uxor Hugonis de Nevill dat Domino Regi ducentas Gallinas, co quod possit jacere una nocte cum Domino suo Hugone de Nevill.' Maddox, Hist. Exch. c. xiii. p. 326.</sup>

THE PRESENT DISCONTENTS. 11

interest of active men in the state is a foundation perpetual and infallible. However, some circumstances, arising, it must be confessed, in a great degree from accident, prevented the effects of this influence for a long time from breaking out in a manner capable of exciting any serious apprehensions. Although Government was strong and flourished exceedingly, the Court had drawn far less advantage than one would imagine from this great fource of power.

At the Revolution, the Crown, deprived, for the ends of the Revolution itself, of many prerogatives, was found too weak to ftruggle against all the difficulties which pressed so new and unsettled a Government. Court was obliged therefore to delegate a part of its powers to men of such interest as could support, and of fuch fidelity as would adhere to, its establishment. Such men were able to draw in a greater number to a concurrence in the common defence. This connexion, neceffary at first, continued long after convenient; and properly conducted might indeed, in all fituations, be an useful instrument of Government. At the same time through the Intervention of men of popular weight and character, the people possessed a security for their just portion of importance in the State. But as the title to the Crown grew stronger by long possession, and by the constant encrease of its influence, these helps have of late feemed to certain persons no better than incumbran-The powerful managers for Government, were not sufficiently submissive to the pleasure of the possesfors of immediate and perfonal favour, fometimes from a confidence in their own strength natural and acquired; fometimes from a fear of offending their friends, and weakening that lead in the country, which gave them a confideration independent of the Court. Men acted as if the Court could receive, as well as confer an Obligation. The influence of Government, thus divided in appearance between the Court and the leaders of parties, became in many cases an accession rather to the popular than to the royal scale; and some part of that influence which would otherwise have been possessed as in a fort of mortmain and unalienable domain, returned again to the great ocean from whence it arose, and circulated among the People. This method therefore of governing by men of great natural interest, or great acquired confideration, was viewed in a very invidious light by the true lovers of absolute monarchy. It is the nature of despotism to abhor power held by any means but its own momentary pleasure; and to annihilate all intermediate situations between boundless strength on its own part, and total debility on the part of the people.

To get rid of all this intermediate and independent importance, and to fecure to the Court the unlimited and uncontrolled use of its own vast influence, under the sole direction of its own private favour, has for some years past been the great object of policy. If this were compassed, the influence of the Crown must of course produce all the effects which the most sanguine partizans of the Court could possibly desire. Government might then be carried on without any concurrence on the part of the people; without any attention to the dignity of the greater, or to the affections of the lower forts. A new project was therefore deviled, by a certain fet of intriguing men, totally different from the system of Administration which had prevailed fince the accession of the House of Brunswick. This project, I have heard, was first conceived by some persons in the court of Frederick Prince of Wales.

The carliest attempt in the execution of this design was to set up for Minister, a person, in rank indeed respectable, and very ample in fortune; but who to the moment of this vast and sudden elevation, was little known or considered in the kingdom. To him the whole nation was to yield an immediate and implicit submission. But whether it was for want of firmness to bear up against the first opposition; or that things were not yet fully ripened; or that this method was not sound the most eligible; that idea was soon abandoned. The instrumental part of the project was a little altered, to accommodate it to the time, and to bring things more gradually and more surely to the one great end proposed.

The first part of the reformed plan was to draw a line which should separate the Court from the Ministry. Hitherto these names had been looked upon as synonymous; but for the suture, Court and Administration were to be considered as things totally distinct. By this operation,

13

operation, two fystems of Administration were to be formed; one which should be in the real secret and confidence; the other meerly oftensible, to perform the official and execute a duties of Government. The latter were alone to a responsible; whilst the real advisors, who enjoyed all the power, were effectually removed from all the danger.

Secondly, A party under these leaders was to be formed in savour of the Court against the Ministry: this party was to have a large share in the emoluments of Government, and to hold it totally separate from, and independent of.

ostensible Administration.

con-

by e of

lwn

ate

art,

m-

011-

1011 en

he

hе

ırt

0-г,

δŧ

g

n

of ۱-

e

The third point, and that on which the success of the whole scheme ultimately depended, was to bring Parliament to an acquiescence in this project. Parliament was therefore to be taught by degrees a total indifference to the persons, rank, influence, abilities, connexions, and character, of the Ministers of the Crown. By means of a discipline, on which I shall say more hereaster, that body was to be habituated to the most opposite interests, and the most discordant politicks. All connexions and dependencies among subjects were to be entirely dissolv-As hitherto business had gone through the hands of leaders of Whigs or Tories, men of talents to conciliate the people, and to engage their confidence, now the method was to be altered; and the lead was to be given to men of no fort of confideration or credit in the coun-This want of natural importance was to be their very title to delegated power. Members of Parliament were to be hardened into an infensibility to pride as well as to duty. Those high and haughty sentiments, which are the great support of independence, were to be let down gradually. Point of honour and precedence were no more to be regarded in Parliamentary decorum, than in a Turkish army. It was to be avowed, as a conftitutional maxim, that the King might appoint one of his footmen, or one of your footmen, for Minister; and that he ought to be, and that he would be, as well followed as the first name for rank or wisdom in the nation. Thus Parliament was to look on, as if perfectly unconcerned; while a cabal of the closet and back-stairs

Was

14 THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSE OF

was substituted in the place of a national Administra-

With such a degree of acquiescence, any measure of any Court might well be deemed thoroughly secure. The capital objects, and by much the most flattering characteristicks of arbitrary power, would be obtained. Every thing would be drawn from its holdings in the country to the personal favour and inclination of the Prince. This savour would be the sole introduction to power, and the only tenure by which it was to be held: so that no person looking towards another, and all looking towards the Court, it was impossible but that the motive which solely influenced every man's hopes must come in time to govern every man's conduct; till at last the servility became universal, in spite of the dead letter of any laws or institutions whatsoever.

How it should happen that any man could be tempted to venture upon such a project of Government, may at first view appear surprizing. But the fact is, that opportunities very inviting to such an attempt have offered; and the scheme itself was not destitute of some arguments not wholly unplausible to recommend it. These opportunities and these arguments, the use that has been made of both, the plan for carrying this new scheme of government into execution, and the essets which it has produced, are in my opinion worthy of our ferious confideration.

His Majesty came to the throne of these kingdoms with more advantages than any of his predecessors since the Revolution. Fourth in descent, and third in succession of his Royal family, even the zealots of hereditary right, in him, faw fomething to flatter their favourite prejudices; and to justify a transfer of their attachments, without a change in their principles. The perion and cause of the Pretender were become contemptible; his title disowned throughout Europe, his party ditbanded in England. His Majesty came indeed to the inheritance of a mighty war; but, victorious in every part of the globe, peace was always in his power, not to negociate, but to dictate. No foreign habitudes or attachments withdrew him from the cultivation of his power at home. His revenue for the civil establishment, fixed (as it was then thought) at a large, but definite lum, afure of fecure. lattering obtained. s in the of the 18tion to be held: all lookthat the oes must

ill at laft

ad letter

tempted may at that opiave ofof fome nend it. use that his new e effects y of our ingdoms ors fince in fucheredifavourattachhe perntemptis party d to the n every ver, not udes or of his thment. definite lum, fum, was ample, without being invidious. His influence, by additions from conquests, by an augmentation of. debt, by an increase of military and naval establishment, much strengthened and extended. And coming to the throne in the prime and full vigour of youth, as from affection there was a strong dislike, so from dread there feemed to be a general averseness, from giving any thing like offence to a Monarch, against whose resentment opposition could not look for a refuge in any fort of rever-fionary hope.

These singular advantages inspired his Majesty only with a more ardent defire to preserve unimpaired the spirit of that national freedom, to which he owed a situation fo full of glory. But to others it suggested sentiments of a very different nature. They thought they now beheld an opportunity (by a certain fort of Statefmen never long undiscovered or unemployed) of drawing to themselves, by the aggrandisement of a Court faction, a degree of power which they could never hope to derive from natural influence or from honourable fervice; and which it was impossible they could hold with the least security, whilst the system of Administration rested upon its former bottom. In order to facilitate the execution of their defign, it was necessary to make many alterations in political arrangement, and a fignal change in the opinions, habits, and connexions of the greatest part of those who acted then in publick.

In the first place, they proceeded gradually, but not flowly, to destroy every thing of strength which did not derive its principal nourishment from the immediate pleasure of the Court. The greatest weight of popular opinion and party connexion were then with the Duke of Newcastle and Mr. Pitt. Neither of these held their importance by the new tenure of the Court; they were not therefore thought to be fo proper as others for the fervices which were required by that tenure. It happened very favourably for the new fystem, that under a forced coalition there rankled an incurable alienation and difgust between the parties which composed the Administration. Mr. Pitt was first attacked. Not satisfied with removing him from power, they endeavoured by various artifices to ruin his character. The other party feemed rather pleased to get rid of so oppressive a support; not perceiving, that their own fall was prepared by his, and involved in it. Many other reasons prevented them from daring to look their true fituation in the face. To the great Whig families it was extremely disagreeable, and seemed almost unnatural, to oppose the Administration of a Prince of the House of Brunswick. Day after day they hesitated, and doubted, and lingered, expecting that other counsels would take place; and were flow to be perfuaded, that all which had been done by the cabal, was the effect not of humour, but of fystem. It was more strongly and evidently the interest of the new Court faction, to get rid of the great Whig connexions, than to destroy Mr. Pitt. The power of that gentleman was vast indeed and merited; but it was in a great degree personal, and therefore transient. Theirs was rooted in the country. For, with a good deal less of popularity, they possessed a far more natural and fixed influence. Long possession of Government, vast property, obligations of favours given and received, connexion of office, ties of blood, of alliance, of friendship (things at that time supposed of some force) the name of Whig, dear to the majority of the people, the zeal early begun and steadily continued to the Royal Family; all these together formed a body of power in the nation, which was criminal and devoted. The great ruling principle of the cabal, and that which animated and harmonized all their proceedings, how various foever they may have been, was to fignify to the world, that the Court would proceed upon its own proper forces only; and that the pretence of bringing any other into its service was an affront to it, and not a support. Therefore, when the chiefs were removed, in order to go to the root, the whole party was put under a profcription, fo general and fevere as to take their hard-earned bread from the lowest officers, in a manner which had never been known before, even in general revolutions. But it was thought necessary effectually to destroy all dependencies but one; and to shew an example of the firmness and rigour with which the new tyficm was to be supported.

Thus

preion in emely ppose Bruns-, and party

a fup-

take which
of hul eviget rid . Pitt.

d methereFor,
a far ion of given of alf fome
of the ued to

ody of voted. which ow vato the n proig any a fup-

a fuped, in under their their eneral ally to n cx-

Thus

: new

Thus for the time were pulled down, in the persons of the Whig leaders and of Mr. Pitt (in spite of the services of the one at the accession of the Royal Family, and the recent services of the other in the war) the two only securities for the importance of the people; power arising from popularity; and power arising from connexion. Here and there indeed a sew individuals were left standing, who gave security for their total estrangement from the odious principles of party connexion and personal attachment; and it must be confessed that most of them have religiously kept their faith. Such a change could not however be made without a mighty shock to Government.

To reconcile the minds of the people to all these movements, principles correspondent to them had been preached up with great zeal. Every one must remember that the cabal fet out with the most astonishing prudery, both moral and political. Those who in a few months after foused over head and ears into the deepest and dirtiest pits of corruption, cried out violently against the indirect practices in the electing and managing of Parliaments, which had formerly prevailed. This marvellous abhorrence which the Court had fuddenly taken to all influence, was not only circulated in conversation through the kingdom, but pompoufly announced to the publick, with many other extraordinary things, in a pamphlet * which had all the appearance of a manifesto preparatory to some considerable enterprize. Throughout, it was a fatire, though in terms managed and decent enough, on the politicks of the former Reign. It was indeed written with no small art and address.

In this piece appeared the first dawning of the new system; there first appeared the idea (then only in speculation) of separating the Court from the Administration; of carrying every thing from national connexion to personal regards.; and of forming a regular party for that purpose, under the name of King's men.

To recommend this system to the people, a perspective view of the Court, gorgeously painted, and finely illuminated from within, was exhibited to the gaping multitude. Party was to be totally done away, with all its evil works. Corruption was to be cast down from Court, as Atè was from heaven. Power was thenceforward to be the chosen residence of public spirit; and no one was to be supposed under any finister influence, except those who had the misfortune to be in disgrace at Court, which was to stand in lieu of all vices and all corruptions. A scheme of persection to be realized in a monarchy far beyond the visionary republick of Plato. The whole scenery was exactly disposed to captivate those good souls, whose credulous morality is so invaluable a treasure to crafty politicians. Indeed there was wherewithal to charm every body, except those few who are not much pleafed with professions of supernatural virtue, who know of what stuff such professions are made, for what purposes they are designed, and in what they are fure constantly to end. Many innocent gentlemen, who had been talking profe all their lives without knowing any thing of the matter, began at last to open their eyes upon their own merits, and to attribute their not having been Lords of the Treasury and Lords of Trade many years before meerly to the prevalence of party, and to the Ministerial power, which had frustrated the good intentions of the Court in favour of their abilities. Now was the time to unlock the fealed fountain of Royal bounty, which had been infamously monopolized and huckstered, and to let it flow at large upon the whole people. The time was come, to restore Royalty to its original splendour. Mettre le Roy bors de page, became a fort of watch-word. And it was constantly in the mouths of all the runners of the Court, that nothing could preserve the balance of the constitution from being overturned by the rabble, or by a faction of the nobility, but to free the Sovereign effectually from that Ministerial tyranny under which the Royal dignity had been oppressed in the person of his Majesty's grandfather.

^{*} Sentiments of an honest Man.

These were some of the many artifices used to reconcile the people to the great change which was made in the persons who composed the Ministry, and the still greater which was made and avowed in its constitution.

As to individuals, other methods were employed with them; in order so thoroughly to disunite every party, and even every family, that no concert, order, or effect, might appear in any future opposition. And in this manner wn from enceforand no nce, exgrace at and all zed in a of Plato. aptivate invaluere was ofe few pernatulions are in what gentlewithout to open te their Lords of lence of ad frufvour of e fealed amoufly at large restore bors de as con-Court, onstitur a facctually Royal reconade in the still tution.

I with
party,
effect,
anner

an

ajesty's

an Administration without connexion with the people, or with one another, was first put in possession of Government. What good effects followed from it, we have all seen; whether with regard to virtue, public or private; to the ease and happiness of the Sovereign, or to the real strength of Government. But as so much stress was then laid on the necessity of this new project, it will not be amiss to take a view of the estacts of this Royal servitude and vile durance, which was so deplored in the reign of the late Monarch, and was so carefully to be avoided in the reign of his Succession. The effects were these.

In times full of doubt and danger to his person and family. George the Second maintained the dignity of his Crown connected with the liberty of his people, not only unimpaired, but improved, for the space of thirtythree years. He overcame a dangerous rebellion, abetted by foreign force, and raging in the heart of his kingdoms; and thereby destroyed the seeds of all future rebellion that could arise upon the same principle. He carried the glory, the power, the commerce of England, to an height unknown even to this renowned nation in the times of its greatest prosperity; and he left his succession resting on the true and only true foundations of all national and all regal greatness; affection at home, reputation abroad, trust in allies, terror in rival The most ardent lover of his country cannot wish for Great Britain an happier fate than to continue as she was then left. A people emulous as we are in aftection to our present Sovereign, know not how to form a prayer to Heaven for a greater bleffing upon his virtues, or an higher state of felicity and glory, than that, that he should live, and should reign, and, when Providence ordains it, should die, exactly like his illustrious Predecessor.

A great Prince may be obliged (though such a thing cannot happen very often) to sacrifice his private inclination to his public interest. A wise Prince will not think that such a restraint implies a condition of servility; and truly if such was the condition of the last reign, and the effects were also such as we have described, we ought, no less for the sake of the Sovereign whom we love, than for our own, to hear arguments convincing indeed, before we depart from the maxims of that reign, or fly in the face of this great body of strong and recent experi-

В 2

tore

tha

nev Ped

and por

wh

bad

ftit

rifh

tori But

upd

a Q

dan

im

feer

the

too and

Go

mu

the

pla

COL

and

of

an

no

gr

ita

al

in it

cl

0

f

One of the principal topicks which was then, and has been fince much employed by that political * school, is an affected terror of the growth of an ariflocratic power. prejudicial to the rights of the Crown, and the balance of the constitution. Any new powers exercised in the House of Lords, or in the House of Commons, or by the Crown. ought certainly to excite the vigilant and anxious jealoufy of a free people. Even a new and unprecedented course of action in the whole Legislature, without great and evident reason, may be a subject of just uneasiness. will not affirm, that there may not have lately appeared in the House of Lords a disposition to some attempts derogatory to the legal rights of the subject. If any such have really appeared, they have arisen, not from a power properly aristocratic, but from the same influence which is charged with having excited attempts of a similar nature in the House of Commons; which House, if it should have been betrayed into an unfortunate quarrel with its constituents, and involved in a charge of the very same nature, could have neither power nor inclination to repell fuch attempts in others. Those attempts in the House of Lords can no more be called aristocratic proceedings, than the proceedings with regard to the county of Middlesex in the House of Commons can with any sense be called democratical.

It is true, that the Peers have a great influence in the kingdom, and in every part of the public concerns. While they are men of property, it is impossible to prevent it, except by fuch means as must prevent all property from its natural operation; an event not eafily to be compassed, while property is power? or by any means to be wished, while the least notion exists of the method by which the spirit of liberty acts, and of the means by which it is preferved. If any particular Peers by their uniform, upright, constitutional conduct, by their public and their private virtues, have acquired an influence in the country; the people, on whose favour

^{*} See the Political Writings of the late Dr. Brown, and many others.

ppeared

of Mid-

THE PRESENT DISCONTENTS. 21

that influence depends, and from whom it arose, will never be duped into an opinion, that such greatness in a Peer is the despotism of an aristocracy, when they know and feel it to be the effect and pledge of their own importance.

I am no friend to aristocracy, in the sense at least in which that word is usually understood. If it were not a bad habit to moot cases on the supposed ruin of the constitution, I should be free to declare, that if it must perish, I would rather by far see it resolved into any other form, than lost in that austere and insolent domination. But, whatever my dislikes may be, my fears are not upon that quarter. The question, on the influence of a Court, and of a Peerage, is not, which of the two dangers is the most eligible, but which is the most imminent. He is but a poor observer, who has not feen, that the generality of Peers, far from supporting themselves in a state of independent greatness, are but too apt to fall into an oblivion of their proper dignity, and to run headlong into an abject fervitude. Would to God it were true, that the fault of our Peers were too much spirit! It is worthy of some observation, that these gentlemen, so jealous of aristocracy, make no complaints of the power of those Peers (neither few nor inconfiderable) who are always in the train of a Court, and whose whole weight must be considered as a portion of the fettled influence of the Crown. This is all safe and right: but if some Peers (I am very forry they are not as many as they ought to be) fet themselves, in the great concern of Peers and Commons, against a backstairs influence, and clandestine government, then the alarm begins; then the constitution is in danger of being forced into an aristocracy.

I rest a little the longer on this Court topick, because it was much insisted upon at the time of the great change, and has been since frequently revived by many of the agents of that party; for, whilst they are terrifying the great and opulent with the horrors of mob-government, they are by other managers attempting (though hitherto with little success) to alarm the people with the phantom of the tyranny of the Nobles. All this is done upon their favourite principle of disunion, of sowing jealousies amongst the different orders of the State, and of disjointing the natural strength of the kingdom

B 3

kingdom; that it may be rendered incapable of refifting the finister defigns of wicked men, who have engrossed the Royal power.

Thus much of the topicks chosen by the Courtiers to recommend their system; it will be necessary to open a little more at large the nature of that party which was formed for its support. Without this, the whole would have been no better than a visionary amusement, like the scheme of Harrington's political club, and not a business in which the nation had a real concern. As a powerful party, and a party constructed on a new principle, it is a very inviting object of curiofity.

It must be remembered, that since the Revolution, until the period we are speaking of, the influence of the Crown had been always employed in supporting the Ministers of State, and in carrying on the public business according to their opinions. But the party now in question is formed upon a very different idea. It is to intercept the favour, protection and confidence of the Crown in the passage to its Ministers; it is to come between them and their importance in Parliament; it is to separate them from all their natural and acquired dependencies; it is intended as the controll, not the support, of Administration. The machinery of this system is perplexed in its movements, and false in its principle. It is formed on a supposition that the King is iomething external to his government; and that he may be honoured and aggrandized, even by its debility and difgrace. The plan proceeds expressly on the idea of enfeebling the regular executory power. It proceeds on the idea of weakening the State in order to strengthen the Court. The scheme depending intircly on distrust, or disconnection, on mutability by principle, on systematic weakness in every particular member; it is impossible that the total result should be substantial strength of any kind.

As a foundation of their scheme, the Cabal have established a fort of Rota in the Court. All sorts of parties, by this means, have been brought into Administration, from whence sew have had the good fortune to escape without disgrace; none at all without considerable losses. In the beginning of each arrangement no professions of considence and support are wanting,

of resisting e engrossed

y to open a which was hole would ment, like d not a buern. As a new prin-

Revolution, ence of the ing the Miblic business ty now in a. It is to ence of the is to come liament; it nd acquired ul, not the of this syfin its prinhe King is d that he its debility on the idea it proceeds strengthen on distrust, on systeit is im-

have effats of parto Admigood forl without arrangepport are wanting, al strength

wanting, to induce the leading men to engage. But while the Ministers of the day appear in all the pomp and pride of power, while they have all their canvas spread out to the wind, and every fail filled with the fair and prosperous gale of royal favour, in a short time they find, they know not how, a current, which fets directly against them; which prevents all progress; and even drives them backwards. They grow ashamed and mortified in a fituation, which by its vicinity to power, only ferves to remind them the more strongly of their infignificance. They are obliged either to execute the orders of their inferiors, or to fee themselves opposed by the natural instruments of their office. With the lass of their dignity, they lose their temper. In their turn they grow troublesome to that cabal, which, whether it supports or opposes, equally disgraces and equally betrays them. It is foon found necessary to get rid of the heads of Administration; but it is of the heads only. As there always are many rotten members belonging to the best connexions, it is not hard to persuade several to continue in office without their leaders. By this means the party goes out much thinner than it came in; and is only reduced in strength by its temporary possession of power. Besides, if by accident or in course of changes, that power should be recovered, the Junto have thrown up a retrenchment of these carcases, which may ferve to cover themselves in a day of danger. They conclude, not unwifely, that fuch rotten members will become the first objects of disgust and resentment to their antient connexions.

They contrive to form in the outward Administration two parties at the least; which, whilst they are tearing one another to pieces, are both competitors for the favour and protection of the Cabal; and, by their emulation, contribute to throw every thing more and more into the hands of the interior managers.

A Minister of State will sometimes keep himself totally estranged from all his collegues; will differ from them in their councils, will privately traverse, and publickly oppose their measures. He will, however, continue in his employment. Instead of suffering any mark of displeasure, he will be distinguished by an unbounded profusion of Court rewards and caresses, because he does what is expected, and all that is expected, from men in office. He helps to keep fome form of Administration in being, and keeps it at the same time as weak and divided as possible.

However, we must take care not to be mistaken, or to imagine that such persons have any weight in their opposition. When, by them, Administration is convinced of it insignificancy, they are soon to be convinced of their own. They never are suffered to succeed in their opposition. They and the world are to be satisfied, that neither office, nor authority, nor property, nor ability, eloquence, council, skill, or union, are of the least importance; but that the meer influence of the Court, naked of all support, and destitute of all management, is abundantly sufficient for all its own purposes.

When any adverse connexion is to be destroyed, the Cabal seldom appear in the work themselves. They find out some person of whom the party entertains an high opinion. Such a person they endeavour to desude with various pretences. They teach him first to distrust, and then to quarrel with his friends; among whom, by the same arts, they excite a similar distinct of him; so that, in this mutual sear and distrust, he may suffer himself to be employed as the instrument in the change which is brought about. Afterwards they are sure to destroy him in his turn; by setting up in his place some person in whom he had himself reposed the greatest consideree, and who serves to carry off a considerable part of his adherents.

When such a person has broke in this manner with his connexions, he is soon compelled to commit some flagrant act of iniquitous personal hostility against some of them (such as an attempt to strip a particular friend of his family estate) by which the cabal hope to render the parties utterly irreconcileable. In truth, they have so contrived matters, that people have a greater hatred to the subordinate instruments than to the principal movers.

As in destroying their enemies they make use of instruments not immediately belonging to their corps, so, in advancing their own friends, they pursue exactly the same method. To promote any of them to considerable aken, or in their is conte to fuctorld are ity, nor still, or ed, from

of Admit, and ient for lroyed, nfelves. enter-vour to ne meer

among fidence off, he ument wards ng up off a

with forme
forme
riend
ender
ve fo haprin-

of rps, ctly conable tiderable rank or emolument, they commonly take care that the recommendation shall pass through the hands of the oftensible ministry: such a recommendation might however appear to the world, as some proof of the credit of Ministers, and some means of encreasing their strength. To prevent this, the persons so advanced are directed, in all companies industriously to declare, that they are under no obligations whatsoever to Administration; that they have received their office from another quarter; that they are totally free and independent.

When the faction has any job of lucre to obtain, or of vengeance to perpetrate, their way is, to felect, for the execution, those very persons to whose habits, friendships, principles, and declarations, such proceedings are publickly known to be the most adverse; at once to render the instruments more odious, and therefore the more dependent, and to prevent the people from ever reposing a confidence in any appearance of private friendship, or public principle.

If the Administration seem now and then, from remissiness, or from fear of making themselves disagreeable, to fuffer any popular excesses to go unpunished, the cabal immediately fets up some creature of theirs to raife a clamour against the Ministers, as having shamefully betrayed the dignity of Government. Then they compel the Ministry to become active in conferring rewards and honours on the persons who have been the instruments of their diffrace; and, after having first vilified them with the higher orders for fuffering the laws to fleep over the licentiousness of the populace, they drive them (in order to make amends for their former inactivity) to some act of atrocious violence, which renders them completely abhorred by the people. They who remember the riots which attended the Middlesex Election; the opening of the present Parliament; and the transactions relative to Saint George's Fields, will not be at a loss for an application of these remarks.

That this body may be enabled to compass all the ends of its institution, its members are scarcely ever to aim at the high and responsible offices of the State. They are distributed with art and judgment through all the secondary, but efficient, departments of office, and through the households of all the branches of the Royal Family: fo as on one hand to eccupy all the avenues to the Throne; and on the other to forward or frustrate the execution of any measure, according to their own interests. For with the credit and support which they are known to have, though for the greater part in places which are only a genteel excuse for falary, they possess all the influence of the highest posts; and they dictate publickly in almost every thing, even with a parade of superiority. Whenever they dissent (as it often happens) from their nominal leaders, the trained part of the Senate instinctively in the fecret, is fure to follow them; provided the leaders, fensible of their situation, do not of themselves recede in time from their most declared opinions. This latter is generally the case. It will not be conceivable to any who has not feen it, what pleasure is taken by the cabal in rendering these heads of office thoroughly contemptible and ridiculous. And when they are become fo, they have then the best chance for being well supported.

and

The members of the court faction are fully indemnified for not holding places on the flipperv heights of the kingdom, not only by the lead in all affairs, but also by the perfect security in which they enjoy less conspicuous, but very advantageous situations. Their places are, in express legal tenure, or in effect, all of them for life. Whilst the first and most respectable persons in the kingdom are tossed about like tennis balls, the sport of a blind and insolent caprice, no minister dares even to cast an oblique glance at the lowest of their body. If an attempt be made upon one of this corps, immediately he flies to fanctuary, and pretends to the most inviolable of all promises. No conveniency of public arrangement is available to remove any of them from the specific situation he holds; and the flightest attempt upon one of them, by the most powerful Minister, is a ceatain preliminary to his own destruction.

Conscious of their independence, they bear themselves with a losty air to the exterior Ministers. Like Janissaries, they derive a kind of freedom from the very condition of their servitude. They may act just as they please; provided they are true to the great ruling principle.

es of the by all the forward according and fupfor the el excuse e highest ry thing, ver they inal lealy in the leaders. s recede This latceivable is taken ice thoen they indemheights affairs, y enjoy uations. id most d about ent caglance made Ruary, omifes. ailable holds:

or being

ifelves niffaconthey principle

e most s own

ciple of their institution. It is, therefore, not at all wonderful, that people should be so desirous of adding themfelves to that body, in which they may possess and reconcile fatisfactions the most alluring, and seemingly the most contradictory; enjoying at once all the spirited pleafure of independence, and all the gross lucre and fat emoluments of fervitude.

Here is a sketch, though a slight one, of the constitution, laws, and policy, of this new Court corpora-The name by which they chuse to distinguish themselves, is that of King's men, or the King's friends, by an invidious exclusion of the rest of his Majesty's most loyal and affectionate subjects. The whole system, comprehending the exterior and interior Administrations, is commonly called, in the technical language of the Court, Double Cabinet; in French or English as you choose to pronounce it. Whether all this be a vision of a dist acted brain, or the invention of a malicious heart, or a real faction in the country, must be judged by the appearances which things have worn for eight years past. Thus far I am certain, that there is not a fingle public man, in or out of office, who has not, at some time or other, borne testimony to the truth of what I have now related. particular, no persons have been more strong in their asfertions, and louder and more indecent in their complaints, than those who compose all the exterior part of the present Administration; in whose time that faction has arrived at such an height of power, and of boldness in the use of it, as may, in the end, perhaps brings about its total destruction.

It is true, that about four years ago, during the administration of the Marquis of Rockingham, an attempt was made to carry on Government without their concurrence. However, this was only a transient cloud; they were hid but for a moment; and their constellation blazed out with greater brightness, and a far more vigorous influence, some time after it was blown over. tempt was at that time made (but without any idea of proscription) to break their corps, to discountenance their doctrines, to revive connexions of a different kind, to restore the principles and policy of the Whigs, to reanimate the cause of Liberty by Ministerial countenance; and then for the first time were men seen attached in office to every principle they had maintained in opposition. No one will doubt, that such men were abhorred and violently opposed by the Court saction, and that such a fystem could have but a short duration.

It may appear somewhat affected, that in so much discourse upon this extraordinary party, I should say so little of the Earl of Bute, who is the supposed head of it. But this was neither owing to affectation nor inad-I have carefully avoided the introduction of personal reflections of any kind. Much the greater part of the topicks which have been used to blacken this Nobleman, are either unjust or frivolous. At best, they have a tendency to give the refentment of this bitter calamity a wrong direction, and to turn a public grievance into a mean, personal, or a dangerous national quarrel. Where there is a regular scheme of operations carried on, it is the fystem, and not any individual person who acts in it, that is truly dangerous. This system has not risen folely from the ambition of Lord Bute, but from the circumstances which favoured it, and from an indifference to the constitution which had been for some time growing among our gentry. We should have been tried with it, if the Earl of Bute had never existed; and it will want neither a contriving head nor active members, when the Earl of Bute exists no longer. It is not therefore, to rail at Lord Bute, but firmly to embody against this Court party and its practices, which can afford us any prospect of relief in our present condition.

Another motive induces me to put the personal consideration of Lord Bute wholly out of the question. He communicates very little in a direct manner with the gteater part of our men of business. This has never been his custom. It is enough for him that he surrounds them with his creatures. Several imagine therefore, that they have a very good excuse for doing all the work of this faction, when they have no personal connexion with Lord Bute. But whoever becomes a party to an Administration, composed of insulated individuals, without faith plighted, tie, or common principle; an Administration constitutionally impotent because supported by no party in the nation; he who contributes to destroy the connexions of men and their trust in one another, or in any fort to throw the dependence of public counsels upon private will and favour, possi-

Ыу

No l viouch a

h diffo litof it.
inadon of part
No-

they r carance irrel. I on, acts rifen cirence row-not ody can on.

onli
He

the

ver

nds

ore,

the

onarviciceri-

ust ce Ti-

ly

bly may have nothing to do with the Earl of Bute. It matters little whether he be the friend or the enemy of that particular person. But let him be who or what he will, he abets a faction that is driving hard to the ruin of his country. He is sapping the soundation of its liberty, disturbing the sources of its domestic tranquillity, weakening its government over its dependencies, degrading it from all its importance in the system of Europe.

It is this unnatural infusion of a system of Favouritism into a Government which in a great part of its constitution is popular, that has raised the present ferment in the nation. The people without entering deeply into its principles could plainly perceive its effects, in much violence, in a great spirit of innovation, and a general disorder in all the functions of Government. I keep my eye folely on this fystem; if I speak of those measures which have arisen from it, it will be so far only as they illustrate the general scheme. This is the fountain of all those bitter waters of which, through an hundred different conduits, we have drunk until we are ready to The discretionary power of the Crown in the formation of Ministry, abused by bad or weak men, has given rife to a system, which, without directly violating the letter of any law, operates against the spirit of the whole constitution.

A plan of Favouritism for our executory Government is effentially at variance with the plan of our Legislature. One great end undoubtedly of a mixed Government like ours, composed of Monarchy, and of controls, on the part of the higher people and the lower, is that the Prince shall not be able to violate the laws. is ufeful indeed and fundamental. But this, even at first view, is no more than a negative advantage; an armour meerly defensive. It is therefore next in order, and equal in importance, that the discretionary powers which are necessarily vested in the Monarch, whether for the execution of the laws, or for the nomination to magistracy and office, or for conducting the affairs of peace and war, or for ordering the revenue, should all be exercised upon public principles and national grounds, and not on the likings or prejudices, the intrigues or policies of a Court. This, I said, is equal in importance to the fecuring a Government according to law. The laws reach but a very little way. Conflitute Government how you please, infinitely the greater part of it must depend upon the exercise of the powers which are left at large to the prudence and uprightness of Ministers of State. Even all the use and potency of the laws depends upon them. Without them, your Commonwealth is no better than a scheme upon paper; and not a living, acting, effective constitution. It is possible, that through negligence, or ignorance, or defign artfully conducted, Ministers may suffer one part of Government to languish, another to be perverted from its purposes, and every valuable interest of the country to fall into ruin and decay, without possibility of fixing any fingle act on which a criminal profecution can be justly grounded. The due arrangement of men in the active part of the state, far from being foreign to the purposes of a wise Government, ought to be among its very first and dearest objects. When therefore, the abettors of the new system tell us, that between them and their opposers there is nothing but a Aruggle for power, and that therefore we are noways concerned in it; we must tell those who have the impudence to infult us in this manner, that of all things we ought to be the most concerned, who and what fort of men they are, that hold the trust of every thing that is dear to us. Nothing can render this a point of indifference to the nation, but what must either render us totally desperate, or sooth us into the security of ideots, We must soften into a credulity below the milkiness of intancy, to think all men virtuous. We must be tainted with a malignity truly diabolical, to believe all the world to be equally wicked and corrupt. Men are in public life as in private, some good, some evil. The elevation of the one, and the depresfion of the other, are the first objects of all true policy. But that form of Government, which neither in its direct institutions, nor in their immediate tendency. has contrived to throw its affairs into the most trustworthy hands, but has left its whole executory fystem to be disposed of agreeably to the uncontrolled pleature of any one man, however excellent or virtuous, is a plan of polity desective not only in that member, but consequentially erroneous in every part of it, Confliie greathe powuprightd potenm, your paper; n. It is , or dee part of ted from country of fixtion can men in toreign ht to be n therethat beng but a noways the imll things. vhat fort ing that point of ier renfecurity y below virtuous. abolical, and core good, deprefpolicy. n its dindency, ft trusty system ed pleairtuous,

In arbitrary Governments, the conflitution of the Ministry follows the conflitution of the Legislature. Both the law and the magistrate are the creatures of Will. It must be so. Nothing, indeed, will appear more certain, on any tolerable consideration of this matter, than that every fort of Government ought to have its Administration correspondent to its Legislature. If it should be otherwise, things must fall into an hideous disorder. The people of a free commonwealth, who have taken such care that their laws should be the result of general consent, cannot be so senselies as to suffer this executory system to be composed of persons on whom they have no dependence, and whom no proofs of the publick love and considence have recommended to those powers, upon the use of which the accordance of the State depends which the very being of the State depends.

The popular election of magistrates, and popular diiposition of rewards and honours, is one of the first advantages of a free State. Without it, or fomething equivalent to it, perhaps the people cannot long enjoy the substance of freedom; certainly none of the vivifying energy of good Government. The frame of our Commonwealth did not admit of fuch an actual election: but it provided as well, and (while the spirit of the constitution is preserved) better for all the effects of it than by the method of suffrage in any democratic State whatsoever. It had always, until of late, been held the first duty of Parliament, to refuse to Support Government, until power was in the bands of persons who were acceptable to the people, or while factions predominated in the Court in which the nation had no confidence. Thus all the good effects of popular election were supposed to be fecured to us, without the mischiefs attending on perpetual intrigue, and a distinct canvas for every particular office throughout the body of the people. This was the most noble and refined part of our constitution. The people, by their representatives and grandees were intrufted with a deliberative power in making laws; the King with the controll of his negative. The King was intrusted with the deliberative choice and the election to office; the people had the negative in a Parliamentary refusal to support. Formerly this power of control was what kept Ministers in awe of Parliaments, and Parliaments in reverence with the people. If the use of this power of control on the system and persons of Administration is gone, every thing is lost, Parliament and all. We may assure ourselves, that if Parliament will tamely see evil men take possession of all the strong-holds of their country, and allow them time and means to fortify themselves, under a pretence of giving them a fair trial, and upon a hope of discovering, whether they will not be reformed by power, and whether their measures will not be better than their morals, such a Parliament will give countenance to their measures also, whatever that Parliament may pretend, and whatever those measures may be.

In

t mem-

part of

Every good political institution must have a preventive operation as well as a remedial. It ought to have a natural tendency to exclude bad men from Government, and not to trust for the safety of the State to subfequent punishment alone: punishment, which has ever been tardy and uncertain; and which, when power is suffered in bad hands, may chance to fall rather on the injured than the criminal.

Before men are put forward into the great trusts of the state, they ought by their conduct to have obtained such a degree of estimation in their country, as may be some sort of pledge and security to the publick, that they will not abuse those trusts. It is no mean security for a proper use of power, that a man has shewn by the general tenor of his actions, that the affection, the good opinion, the considence, of his fellow citizens have been among the principal objects of his life; and that he has owed none of the gradations of his power or fortune to a settled contempt or occasional forseiture of their esteem.

That man who before he comes into power has no friends, or who coming into power is obliged to defert his friends, or who losing it has no friends to sympathize with him; he who has no sway among any part of the landed or commercial interest, but whose whole importance has begun with his office, and is sure to end with it; is a person who ought never to be suffered by a controlling Parliament to continue in any of those lituations which confer the lead and direction of all our public affairs; because such a man bas no connexion with the interest of the people.

Those

prevento have Governe to subhas ever power is on the rusts of obtained may be ck, that n fecus shewn fection, citizens e; and power feiture ias no defert ympay part whole to end ed by thofe ll our with

Those

Those knots or cabals of men who have got together. avowedly without any public principle, in order to fell their conjunct iniquity at the higher rate, and are therefore univerfally odious, ought never to be suffered to domineer in the State; because they have no connexion with the fentiments and opinions of the people.

These are considerations which in my opinion enforce the necessity of having some better reason, in a free country, and a free Parliament, for supporting the Ministers of the Crown, than that short one, That the King has thought proper to appoint them. There is something very courtly in this. But it is a principle pregnant with all forts of mischief, in a constitution like ours, to turn the views of active men from the country to the Court. Whatever be the road to power, that is the road which will be trod. If the opinion of the country be of no use as a means of power or confideration, the qualities which usually procure that opinion will be no longer cultivated. And whether it will be right in a state, so popular in its constitution as ours, to leave ambition without popular motives, and to trust all to the operation of pure virtue in the minds of Kings and Ministers, and public men, must be submitted to the judgment and good sense of the people of England.

Cunning men are here apt to break in, and, without directly controverting the principle, to raise objections from the difficulty under which the fovereign labours, to distinguish the genuine voice and sentiments of his people, from the clamour of a faction, by which it is so easily counterfeited. The nation, they say, is generally divided into parties, with views and pasfions utterly irreconcileable. If the King should put his affairs into the hands of any one of them, he is fure to difgust the rest; if he select particular men from among them all, it is an hazard that he difgusts them all. Those who are left out, however divided before, will foon run into a body of opposition; which, being a collection of many discontents into one focus, will without doubt be hot and violent enough. Faction will make its cries refound through the nation, as if the whole were in a uproar, when by far the majority, and much the better part, will frem for a while as it were annihilated by the quiet, in which their virtue and moderation incline them to enjoy the blessings of Government. Besides that the opinion of the meer vulgar is a miserable rule even with regard to themselves, on account of their violence and instability. So that if you were to gratify them in their humour to-day, that very gratification would be a ground of their diffatisfaction on the next. Now as all these rules of public opinion are to be collected with great difficulty, and to be applied with equal uncertainty as to the effect, what better can a King of England do. than to employ fuch men as he finds to have views and inclinations most conformable to his own; who are least infected with pride and felf-will, and who are least moved by fuch popular humours as are perpetually traverling his defigns, and diffurbing his fervice; trufting that, when he means no ill to his people, he will be fupported in his appointments, whether he chooses to keep or to change, as his private judgment or his pleafure leads him? He will find a fure resource in the real weight and influence of the Crown, when it is not suffered to become an instrument in the hands of a faction.

I will not pretend to fay that there is nothing at all in this mode of reasoning; because I will not affert, that there is no difficulty in the art of Government. doubtedly the very best Administration must encounter a great deal of opposition; and the very worst will find more support than it deserves. Sufficient appearances will never be wanting to those who have a mind to deceive themselves. It is a fallacy in constant use with those who would level all things, and confound right with wrong, to infift upon the inconveniencies which are attached to every choice, without taking into confideration the different weight and confequence of those inconveniencies. The question is not concerning absolute discontent or perfect satisfaction in Government; neither of which can be pure and unmixed at any time, or upon any fyttem. The controversy is about that degree of good humour in the people, which may possibly be attained, and ought certainly to be looked for. While fome politicians may be waiting to know whether the fense of every individual Le against them, accurately diffinguishing the vulgar from the better fort, drawing lines between the enterprizes of a faction and the efforts of a people, they may chance to fee the Government, which they are to nicely weighing, and dividing, and diffinguifning, tumble to the ground in the midft of their

the

an

pe

wl

liti

an

int

civ

of

ftr

an

ab

fud

nil

pe

th

qu

Pr

Bι

or ag

ha

T

te

do

th

po

cl

137 tl

ir

 \mathbf{n}

ιl

15 fi

e

11

the opinion

with regard

and instabi-

in their hu-

be a ground

as all these with great

uncertainty

England do,

e views and who are leaft

o are least

petually tra-

e; trusting

he will be

chooses to or his plea-

in the real

t is not fuf-

of a faction.

thing at all

t affert, that

ment. Un-

st encounter

orft will find

appearances

nind to dent use with

found right

ncies which

into confi-

ce of those

rning ab/o-

vernment;

t any time.

out that de-

iay possibly

for. While

hether the

accurately

t, drawing

the efforts

vernment,

iding, and

e midst of

their

their wise deliberation. Prudent men, when so great an object as the security of Government, or even its peace, is at stake, will not run the risque of a decision which may be fatal to it. They who can read the political sky will see an hurricane in a cloud no bigget than an hand at the very edge of the horizon, and will run into the first harbour. No lines can be laid down for civil or political wisdom. They are a matter incapable of exact definition. But, though no man can draw a stroke between the confines of day and night, yet light and darkness are upon the whole tolerably distinguishable. Nor will it be impossible for a Prince to find out luch a mode of Government, and fuch persons to administer it, as will give a great degree of content to his people; without any curious and anxious refearch for that abstract, universal, perfect harmony, which while he is feeking, he abandons those means of ordinary tranquillity which are in his power without any research at all.

It is not more the duty than it is the interest of a Prince, to aim at giving tranquillity to his Government. But those who advise him may have an interest in disorder and confusion. If the opinion of the people is against them, they will naturally wish that it should have no prevalence. Here it is that the people must on their part shew themselves sensible of their own value. Their whole importance, in the first instance, and afterwards their whole freedom, is at stake. Their freedom cannot long furvive their importance. Here it is that the natural ilrength of the kingdom, the great peers, the leading landed gentlemen, the opulent merchants and manufacturers, the fubitantial yeomanry, must interpose, to rescue their Prince, themselves, and their posterity.

We are at present at issue upon this point. We are in the great criss of this contention; and the part which men take one way or other, will serve to discriminate their characters and their principles. Until the matter is decided, the country will remain in its present consustion. For while a system of Administration is attempted, entirely repugnant to the genius of the people, and not conformable to the plan of their Government, every thing must necessarily be disordered for a time, until this system destroys the constitution, or the constitution gets the better of this fystem.

There

There is, in my opinion, a peculiar venom and malignity in this political distemper beyond any that I have heard or read of. In former times the projectors of arbitrary Government attacked only the liberties of their country; a defign furely mischievous enough to have fatisfied a mind of the most unruly ambition. But a system unfavourable to freedom may be so formed, as considerably to exalt the grandeur of the State; and men may find in the pride and splendour of that prosperity some fort of consolation for the loss of their solid privileges. Indeed the increase of the power of the State has often been urged by artful men, as a pretext for some abridgement of the public liberty. But the scheme of the junto under consideration, not only strikes a palfy into every nerve of our free constitution, but in the same degree benumbs and stupifies the whole executive power; rendering Government in all its grand operations languid, uncertain, ineffective; making Ministers fearful of attempting, and incapable of executing any use ul plan of domestic arrangement, or of soreign politicks. It tends to produce neither the fecurity of a free Covernment, nor the energy of a Monarchy that is absolute. Accordingly the Crown has dwindled away, in proportion to the unnatural and turgid growth of this excrescence on the Court.

The interior Ministry are sensible, that war is a situation which fets in its full light the value of the hearts of a people; and they well know, that the beginning of the importance of the people must be the end of theirs. For this reason they discover upon all occasions the utmost fear of every thing, which by possibility may lead to fuch an event. I do not mean that they manifest any of that pious fear which is backward to commit the fafety of the country to the dubious experiment of war. Such a fear, being the tender fensation of virtue, excited, as it is regulated, by reason, frequently shews itself in a feafonable boldness, which keeps danger at a distance, by seeming to despise it. Their fear betrays to the first glance of the eye, its true cause, and its real object. Foreign powers, confident in the knowledge of their character, have not scrupled to violate the most solemn treaties; and, in defiance of them, to make conquests, in the midst of a general peace, and in the heart of Europe. Such was the conquest of Corsica, by the profesfed enemies of the freedom of mankind, in defiance a.

W

rig

as ler

th

ra:

th

co de

an

co

ın

of

m

tr

tŀ

CI

ir

a

0

A

h

om and mad any that ne projectors liberties of s enough to bition. But formed, as State; and that prospef their folid ower of the as a pretext y. But the t only strikes ition, but in whole exell its grand e; making ble of execunt, or of fothe security a Monarchy has dwindled irgid growth ar is a situathe hearts of eginning of nd of theirs. lions the utty may lead nanifest any commit the nent of war. irtue, excithews itself t a distance, to the first real object. of their chanost solemn e conquests, eart of Euthe profefin defiance of those who were formerly its professed defenders. We have had just claims upon the same powers; rights which ought to have been facred to them as well as to us, as they had their origin in our lenity and generofity towards France and Spain in the day of their great humiliation. Such I call the ransom of Manilla, and the demand on France for the East India prisoners. But these powers put a just confidence in their resource of the double Cabinet. These demands (one of them at least) are hastening fast towards an acquittal by prescription. Oblivion begins to spread her cobwebs over all our spirited remonstrances. Some of the most valuable branches of our trade are also on the point of perishing from the same cause. I do not mean those branches which bear without the hand of the vine-dreffer; I mean those which the policy of treaties had formerly fecured to us; I mean to mark and distinguish the trade of Portugal, the loss of which, and the power of the cabal, have one and the same æra.

If by any chance the Ministers, who stand before the curtain, possess or affect any spirit, it makes little or no impression. Foreign Courts and Ministers, who were among the first to discover and to profit by this invention of the double Cubinet, attend very little to their remonstrances. They know that those shadows of Ministers have nothing to do in the ultimate disposal of things. Jealousies and animosities are sedulously nourished in the outward Administration, and have been even considered as a causa sine qua non in its conflitution: thence foreign Courts have a certainty, that nothing can be done by common counsel in this nation. If one of those Ministers officially takes up a business with spirit, it serves only the better to fignalize the meanness of the rest, and the discord of them all. His collegues in office are in haste to shake him off, and to disclaim the whole of his proceedings. Of this nature was that aftonishing transaction, in which Lord Rochford, our Ambassador at Paris, remonstrated against the attempt upon Corsica, in consequence of a direct authority from Lord Shelburne. This remonstrance the French Minister treated with the contempt that was natural; as he was affured, from the Ambassador of his Court to ours, that these orders of Lord Shelburne were not supported by the rest of the (I had like to have faid British) Administration. Lord Rochford, C 3 a man of spirit, could not endure this situation. The confequences were, however, curious. He returns from Paris, and comes home full of anger. Lord Shelburne. who gave the orders, is obliged to give up the feals. Lord Rochford, who obeyed these orders, receives them. He goes, however, into another department of the same office, that he might not be obliged officially to acquiesce in one fituation under what he had officially remonstrated against in another. At Paris, the Duke of Choiseul confidered this office arrangement as a compliment to him: here it was spoke of as an attention to the delicacy of Lord Rochford. But whether the compliment was to one or both, to this nation it was the same. By this tranfaction the condition of our Court lay exposed in all its nakedness. Our office correspondence has lost all pretence to authenticity; British policy is brought into derision in those nations, that a while ago trembled at the power of our arms, whilst they looked up with confidence to the equity, firmness, and candour, which shone in all our negotiations. I represent this matter exactly in the light in which it has been univerfally received.

Such has been the afpect of our foreign politicks, under the influence of a double Cabinet. With such an arrangement at Court, it is impossible it should have been otherwise. Nor is it possible that this scheme should have a better effect upon the government of our dependencies, the first, the dearest, and most delicate objects, of the interior policy of this empire. The Colonies know, that Administration is separated from the Court, divided within itself, and detested by the nation. The double Cabinet has, in both the parts of it, shewn the most malignant dispositions towards them, without being able to do them the smallest mischief.

They are convinced, by sufficient experience, that no plan, either of lenity or rigour, can be pursued with uniformity and perseverance. Therefore they turn their eyes entirely from Great Britain, where they have neither dependence on friendship, nor apprehension from enmity. They look to themselves, and their own arrangements. They grow every day into alienation from this country; and whilst they are becoming disconnected with our Government, we have not the consolation to find, that they are even friendly in their new independence. Nothing can equal the sufficiency, the weak-

THE PRESENT DISCONTENTS. 39

tion. The conturns from Paord Shelburne, the seals. Lord res them. He of the same ofly to acquiesce ally remonstrake of Choiseul compliment to to the delicacy

By this tranpossed in all its off all pretence into derision in the power of fidence to the in all our ney in the light politicks, unh fuch an aruld have been e should have dependencies, As, of the ins know, that divided withdouble Cabinct of malignant e to do them

ence, that no ned with uniy turn their ey have neienfion from neir own arenation from disconnected nfolation to new inde, the weakness, ness, the rashness, the timidity, the perpetual contradiction in the management of our affairs in that part of the world. A volume might be written on this melancholic subject; but it were better to leave it entirely to the reslexions of the reader himself than not to treat it in the extent it deserves.

In what manner our domestic occonomy is affected by this fystem, it is needless to explain. It is the perpetual subject of their own complaints.

The Court party resolve the whole into faction. Having faid something before upon this subject, I shall only observe here, that when they give this account of the prevalence of faction, they prefent no very favourable aspect of the confidence of the people in their own Government. They may be affured, that however they amuse themselves with a variety of projects for substituting something else in the place of that great and only foundation of Government, the confidence of the people, every attempt will but make their condition worfe. When men imagine that their food is only a cover for poison, and when they neither love nor trust the hand that serves it, it is not the name of the roast beef of Old England, that will persuade them to fit down to the table that is spread for them. When the people conclive that laws, and tribunals, and even popular affemblies, are perverted from the ends of their intlitution, they find in those names of degenerated establishments only new motives to discontent. Those bodies, which when full of life and beauty, lay in their arms, and were their joy and comfort, when dead and putrid, become but the more loathfome from remembrance of former endearments. A fullen gloom, and furious disorder prevail by fits; the nation loses its relish for peace and prosperity, as it did in that season of fulness which opened our troubles in the time of Charles the First. A species of men to whom a state of order would become a sentence of obscurity, are nourished into a dangerous magnitude by the heat of intestine disturbances; and it is no wonder that, by a fort of finister piety, they cherish, in their turn, the disorders which are the parents of all their consequence. Superficial observers consider such perfons as the cause of the public uncafiness, when, in truth, they are nothing more than the effect of it. Good men look upon this distracted scene with forrow and indignation. Their hands are tied behind them. are despoiled of all the power which might enable them to reconcile the strength of Government with the rights of the people. They stand in a most distreffing alternative. But in the election among evils they hope better things from temporary confusion, than from established servitude. In the mean time, the voice of law is not to be heard. Fierce licentiousness begets violent restraints. The military arm is the fole reliance; and then, call your constitution what you please, it is the sword that governs. The civil power, like every other that calls in the aid of an ally stronger than itself, perishes by the assistance it receives. But the contrivers of this scheme of Government will not trust folely to the military power; because they are cunning men. Their restless and crooked spirit drives them to rake in the dirt of every kind of expedient. Unable to rule the multitude, they endeavour to raise divisions amongst them. One mob is hired to destroy another; a procedure which at once encourages the boldness of the populace and justly increases their discontent. Men become pensioners of state on account of their abilities in the array of riot, and the discipline of confusion. Government is put under the difgraceful necessity of protecting from the feverity of the laws that very licentiousness, which the laws had been before violated to repress. Every thing partakes of the original disorder. Anarchy predominates without freedom, and fervitude without submisfion or fubordination. These are the consequences inevitable to our public peace, from the scheme of rendering the executory Government at once odious and feeble; of freeing administration from the constitutional and falutary control of Parliament, and inventing for it a new control, unknown to the constitution, an interior Cabinet; which brings the whole body of Government into confusion and contempt.

After having stated, as shortly as I am able, the effects of this system on our foreign affairs, on the policy of our Government with regard to our dependencies, and on the interior economy of the Commonwealth; there remains only, in this part of my design, to say something of the grand principle which em. They ght enable nment with a most dismong evils fusion, than time, the licentioufary arm is constitution erns. The e aid of an flistance it of Governpower; beand crooked every kind e, they en-One mob is lich at once d justly iniers of state riot, and s put under the fevewhich the very thing predomiut submisnfequences scheme of ice odious he consti-

whole boe, the efthe polependen-Commont of my le which first

, and in-

constitu-

first recommended this system at Court. The pretence was, to prevent the King from being enflaved by a faction, and made a prisoner in his closet. This scheme might have been expected to answer at least its own end, and to indemnify the King, in his personal capacity, for all the confusion into which it has thrown his Government. But has it in reality answered this purpose? I am sure, if it had, every affectionate subject would have one motive for enduring with patience all the evils which attend it.

In order to come at the truth in this matter, it may not be amiss to consider it somewhat in detail. here of the King, and not of the Crown; the interests of which we have already touched. Independent of that greatness which a King possesses meerly by being a representative of the national dignity, the things in which he may have an individual interest feem to be these: wealth accumulated; wealth spent in magnificence, pleasure, or beneficence; personal respect and attention; and above all, private ease and repose of mind. These compose the inventory of prosperous circumstances, whether they regard a Prince or a fubject; their enjoyments differing only in the scale upon which they are formed.

Suppose then we were to ask, whether the King has been richer than his predecessors in accumulated wealth, fince the establishment of the plan of Favouritism? I believe it will be found that the picture of royal indigence which our Court has presented until this year, has been truly humiliating. Nor has it been relieved from this unfeemly distress, but by means which have hazarded the affection of the people, and shaken their confidence in Parliament. If the public treasures had been exhausted in magnificence and splendour, this distress would have been accounted for, and in some meafure justified. Nothing would be more unworthy of this nation, than with a mean and mechanical rule, to mete out the splendour of the Crown. Indeed I have found very few persons disposed to so ungenerous a But the generality of people, it must be confessed, do feel a good deal mortified, when they compare the wants of the Court with its expences. They do not behold the cause of this distress in any part of the apparatus of royal magnificence. In all this, they they see nothing but the operations of parsimony, attended with all the consequences of profusion. Nothing expended, nothing saved. Their wonder is increased by their knowledge, that besides the revenue settled on his Majesty's Civil List to the amount of 800,000l. a year, he has a farther aid, from a large pension list, near 90,000l. a year, in Ireland; from the produce of the Dutchy of Lancaster (which we are told has been greatly improved;) from the revenue of the Dutchy of Cornwall; from the American quit-rents; from the sour and a half per cent. duty in the Leeward Islands; this last worth to be sure considerably more than 40,000l. a year. The whole is certainly not much short of a million annually.

These are revenues within the knowledge and cognizance of our national Councils. We have no direct right to examine into the receipts from his Majesty's German Dominions, and the Bishoprick of Osnabrug. This is unquestionably true. But that which is not within the province of Parliament, is yet within the sphere of every man's own reflection. If a foreign Prince refided amongst us, the state of his revenues could not fail of becoming the subject of our speculation, with an anxious concern for whatever regards the welfare of our Sovereign, it is impossible, in considering the miscrable circumstances into which he has been brought, that this obvious topick should be entirely passed over. There is an opinion universal, that these revenues produce fomething not inconfiderable, clear of all charges and establishments. This produce the people do not believe to be hoarded, nor perceive to be fpcnt. It is accounted for in the only manner it can, by supposing that it is drawn away, for the support of that Court fashion, which, whilst it distresses the nation, impoverifhes the Prince in every one of his refources. I once more caution the reader, that I do not urge this confideration concerning the foreign revenue, as if I suppoted we had a direct right to examine into the expendituic of any part of it; but folely for the purpose of shewing how little this system of Favouritism has been advantageous to the Monarch himself; which, without magnificence, has funk him into a state of unnatural poverty; at the same time that he possessed every means of affluence, from ample revenues, both in this country, and in other parts of his dominions.

ony, at-Nothing ncreased tiled on ,000*l*. a fion lift, duce of as been Dutchy om the flands; 0,000% rt of a id cogdirect jefty's abrug, withsphere се геot fail Filled elfare g' the ught. over. proarges not) It is iling Ourt iponce nfi-Po-

Has this system provided better for the treatment becoming his high and facred character, and fecured the King from those disgusts attached to the necessity of employing men who are not personally agreeable? This is a topick upon which for many reafons I could wish to be filent; but the pretence of securing against such causes of uncafiness, is the cornerstone of the Court party. It has however so happened, that if I were to fix upon any one point, in which this fystem has been more particularly and shamefully blameable, the effects which it has produced would justify me in choosing for that point its tendency to degrade the perfonal dignity of the Sovereign, and to expose him to a thousand contradictions and mortifications. It is but too evident in what manner these projectors of royal greatness have fulfilled all their magnificent promises. Without recapitulating all the circumstances of the reign, every one of which is more or less a melancholy proof of the truth of what I have advanced, let us consider the language of the Court but a few years ago, concerning most of the persons now in the external Administration: It me aik, whether any enemy to the personal feelings of the Sovereign, could possibly contrive a keener instrument of personal mortification, and degradation of all dignity, than almost every part and member of the present arrangement? nor, in the whole course of our history, has any compliance with the will of the people ever been known to extort from any Prince a greater contradiction to all his own declared affections and diflikes than that which is now adopted, in direct opposition to every thing the people approve and defire.

An opinion prevails that greatness has been more than once advised to submit to certain condescensions towards individuals, which have been denied to the entreaties of a nation. For the meanest and most dependent instrument of this system knows, that there are hours when its existence may depend upon his adherence to it; and he takes his advantage accordingly. Indeed it is a law of nature, that whoever is necessary to what we have made our object, is fure in some way, or in some time or other, to become our master. All this however is submitted to, in order to avoid that monstrous evil of governing in concurrence with the opinion

ıdi-

w-

ad-

out

70-

2115

11-

of the people. For it feems to be laid down as a maxim, that a King has some fort of interest in giving uneasiness to his subjects; that all who are pleasing to them. are to be of course disagreeable to him: that as soon as the persons who are odious at Court, are known to be odious to the people, it is fnatched at as a lucky occafion of showering down upon them all kinds of emoluments and honours. None are confidered as wellwishers to the Crown, but those who advise to some unpopular course of action; none capable of serving it, but those who are obliged to call at every instant upon all its power for the fafety of their lives. None are supposed to be fit priests in the temple of Government, but the perfons who are compelled to fly into it for fanctuary. Such is the effect of this refined project; fuch is ever the refult of all the contrivances which are used to free men from the servitude of their reason, and from the necessity of ordering their affairs according to their evident interests. These contrivances oblige them to run into a real and ruinous fervitude, in order to avoid a supposed restraint that might be attended with advantage.

If therefore this fystem has so ill answered its own grand pretence of saving the King from the necessity of employing persons disagreeable to him, has it given more peace and tranquillity to his Majesty's private hours? No, most certainly. The father of his people cannot possibly enjoy repose, while his family is in such a state of distraction. Then what has the Crown or the King prosited by all this sine-wrought scheme? Is he more rich, or more splendid, or more powerful, or more at his ease, by so many labours and contrivances? Have they not beggared his exchequer, tarnished the splendour of his Court, sunk his dignity, galled his feelings, discomposed the whole order and happiness of his private life?

It will be very hard, I believe, to state in what respect the King has profited by that saction which presumptu-ously choose to call themselves bis friends.

If particular men had grown into an attachment, by the diftinguished honour of the society of their Sovereign; and, by being the partakers of his amusements, came sometimes to prefer the gratification of his personal inclinations to the support of his high character, the thing maxim, g uneafito them, s foon as yn to be ky occaemoluas wellto fome ving it, ant upNone into it ed proivances f their affairs vances vitude.

s own
If y of given rivate ecople fuch
r the s he

s he or ces? the eel-

by ees,

tu-

thing would be very natural, and it would be excusable enough. But the pleasant part of the story is that these king's friends have no more ground for usurping such a title, than a resident freeholder in Cumberland or in Cornwall. They are only known to their Sovereign by kissing his hand, for the offices, pensions, and grants, into which they have deceived his benignity. May no storm ever come, which will put the sirmness of their attachment to the proof; and which, in the midst of consusions, and terrors, and sufferings, may demonstrate the eternal difference between a true and severe friend to the Monarchy, and a slippery sycophant of the Court! Quantum infido scurræ distabit amicus.

So far I have confidered the effect of the Court fyftem, chiefly as it operates upon the executive Government, on the temper of the people, and on the happiness of the Sovereign. It remains, that we should consider, with a little attention, its operation upon Parliament.

Parliament was indeed the great object of all these politicks, the end at which they aimed, as well as the instrument by which they were to operate. But before Parliament could be made subservient to a system, by which it was to be degraded from the dignity of a national council, into a meer member of the Court, it must be greatly changed from its original character.

In speaking of this body, I have my eye chiefly on the House of Commons. I hope I shall be indulged in a few observations on the nature and character of that assembly; not with regard to its legal form and power, but to its spirit, and to the purposes it is meant to answer in the constitution.

The House of Commons was supposed originally to be no part of the standing Government of this country. It was considered as a control, issuing immediately from the people, and speedily to be resolved into the mass from whence it arose. In this respect it was in the higher part of Government what juries are in the lower. The capacity of a magistrate being transitory, and that of a citizen permanent, the latter capacity it was hoped would of course preponderate in all discussions, not only between the people and the standing authority of the crown, but between the people and the fleeting authority of the House of Commons itself. It was hoped that being of a middle nature between tubject and Government, they would feel with a more tender and a nearer interest everything that concerned the people, than the other remoter and more permanent

Whatever alterations time and the necessary accommodation of bufiness may have introduced, this character can never be sustained, unless the House of Commons shall be made to bear some stamp of the actual disposition of the people at large. It would (among public misfortunes) be an evil more natural and tolcrable, that the House of Commons should be insected with every epidemical phrenzy of the people, as this would indicate fome confanguinity, fome fympathy of nature with their constituents, than that they should in all cases be wholly untouched by the opinions and feelings of the people out of doors. By this want of tympathy they would cease to be an House of Commons. For it is not the derivation of the power of that House from the people, which makes it in a dulinet tense their representative. The King is the representative of the people; so are the Lords; so are the Judges. They are all trustees for the people, as well as the Commons; because no power is given for the sole take of the holder; and although Government certainly is an inflitution of Divine authority, yet it forms, and the perions who administer it, all originate from

A popular origin cannot therefore be the characterissical distinction of a popular representative. This belongs equally to all parts of Government, and in all forms. The virtue, spirit and essence of a House of Commons confifts in its being the exprets image of the feelings of the nation. It was not intituted to be a control upon the people, as of late it has been taught, by a doctrine of the most pernicious tendency. It was defigned as a control for the people. Other inflitutions have been formed for the purpole of checking popular excesses; and they are, I apprehend, fully adequate to their object. If not, they ought to be made fo. The House of Commons, as it was never intended for the support of peace and subordination, is miserably appointed for that service; having no stronger weapon than its Mace, and no better officer than its Serjeant at Arms, ons itself, between h a more oncerned ermanent accomcharacf Come actual (among nd tolnfected as this ithy of fhould ns and ant of Comof that Hlinet refene the 'ell as e sole tain-

Ster-I his all pufe age be thi, was pus lar to he

ts

:h

rnis,

from which it can command of its own proper authority. A vigilant and jealous eye over executory and judicial magistracy; an anxious care of public money, an opennels, approaching towards facility, to public complaint: these seem to be the true characteristics of an House of Commons. But an addressing Hou! of Commons, and a petitioning nation; an House of Commons full of confidence, when the nation is plunged into defpair; in the utmost harmony with Ministers, whom the people regard with the utmost abhorrence; who vote thanks, when the public opinion calls upon them for impeachments; who are eager to grant, when the general voice demands account; who in all difputes between the people and Administration, perfume against the people; who punish their disorders, but refuse even to enquire into the provocations to them; this is an unnatural, a monstrous state of things in this constitution. Such an Assembly may be a great, wise, awful Senate; but it is not to any popular purpose an House of Commons.

This change from an immediate state of procuration and delegation to a course of acting as from original power, is the way in which all the popular magistracies in the world have been perverted from their purposes. It is indeed their greatest and sometimes their incurable corruption. For there is a material distinction between that corruption by which particular points are carried against reason, (this is a thing which cannot be prevented by human wisdom, and is of less consequence) and the corruption of the principle itself. For then the evil is not accidental but settled. The distemper becomes the natural habit.

For my part, I shall be compelled to conclude the principle of Parliament to be totally corrupted, and therefore it ends entirely defeated, when I see two symptoms: first, a rule of indiscriminate support to all Ministers; because this destroys their very end as a control, and is a general previous sanction to misgovernment: and secondly, the setting up any claims adverse to the right of free election; for this tends to subvert the legal authority by which they sit.

I know that, fince the Revolution, along with many dangerous, many useful powers of Government have been weakened. It is absolutely necessary to have frequent recourse to the Legislature. Parliaments must therefore fit every year, and for great part of the year. The dreadful diforders of frequent elections have also necessitated a septennial instead of a triennial duration. These circumstances, I mean the constant habit of authority, and the unsrequency of elections, have tended very much to draw the House of Commons towards the character of a standing Senate. It is a disorder which has arisen from the cure of greater disorders; it has arisen from the extreme difficulty of reconciling liberty under a monarchical Government, with external strength and with internal tranquillity.

It is very clear that we cannot free ourselves entirely from this great inconvenience; but I would not encrease an evil, because I was not able to remove it; and because it was not in my power to keep the House of Commons religiously true to its first principles, I would not argue for carrying it to a total oblivion of them. This has been the great scheme of power in our time. They who will not conform their conduct to the public good, and cannot support it by the prerogative of the Crown, have adopted a new plan. They have totally abandoned the shattered and old-fashioned fortress of prerogative, and made a lodgement in the strong hold of Parliament itself. If they have any evil design to which there is no ordinary legal power commensurate, they bring it into Parliament. In Parliament the whole is executed from the beginning to the end. In Parliament the power of obtaining their object is absolute; and the safety in the proceeding perfect; no rules to confine, no afterreckonings to terrify. Parliament cannot with any great propriety punish others, for things in which they themtelves have been accomplices. Thus the control of Parliament upon the executory power is loft; because Parliament is made to partake in every confiderable act of Government. Impeachment, that great guardian of the purity of the Constitution, is in danger of being lost, even to the idea of it.

By this plan several important ends are answered to the Cabal. If the authority of Parliament supports itself, the credit of every act of Government which they contrive, is saved; but if the act be so very odious that the whole strength of Parliament is insufficient to recommend it, then Parliament is itself discredited; and this discredit increases more and more that indifference to the constitution,

r. The forneforneforneof autended owards which it has liberty rength itirely t en-; and ule of would them. time. oublic of the otally ls of hold vhich is exit the afety iftergreat iem-

d to s itthey the nend difthe ion,

Par-

Par-

Ot of

constitution, which it is the constant aim of its enemies, by their abuse of Parliamentary powers, to render general among the people. Whenever Parliament is persuaded to assume the offices of executive Government, it will lose all the considence, love, and veneration, which it has ever enjoyed whilst it was supposed the corrective and control of the acting powers of the state. This would be the event, though its conduct in such a perversion of its sunctions should be tolerably just and moderate; but if it should be iniquitous, violent, full of passion, and full of faction, it would be considered as the most intolerable of all the modes of tyranny.

For a confiderable time this separation of the reprefentatives from their constituents went on with a filent progress; and had those, who conducted the plan for their total separation, been persons of temper and abilities any way equal to the magnitude of their design, the fuccess would have been infallible: but by their precipitancy they have laid it open in all its nakedness; the nation is alarmed at it; and the event may not be pleafant to the contrivers of the scheme. In the last session, the corps called the King s friends made an hardy attempt all at once, to alter the right of election it/elf; to put it into the power of the House of Commons to disable any person disagreeable to them from sitting in Parliament, without any other rule than their own pleasure; to make incapacities, either general for descriptions of men, or particular for individuals; and to take into their body, persons who avowedly had never been chosen by the majority of legal electors, nor agreeably to any known rule of law.

The arguments upon which this claim was founded and combated, are not my business here. Never has a subject been more amply and more learnedly handled; nor upon one side in my opinion more satisfactorily; they who are not convinced by what is already written would not receive conviction though one arose from the dead.

I too have thought on this subject: but my purpose here, is only to consider it as a part of the favourite project of Government; to observe on the motives which led to it; and to trace its political consequences.

A violent rage for the punishment of Mr. Wilkes was the pretence of the whole. This gentleman, by setting himself strongly in opposition to the Court cabal, had become at once an object of their persecution, and of the popular favour. The hatred of the Court party pursuing, and the countenance of the people protecting him, it very foon became not at all a question on the man, but a trial of strength between the two parties. The advantage of the victory in this particular contest was the prefent, but not the only, nor by any means, the principal object. Its operation upon the character of the House of Commons was the great point in view. The point to be gained by the cabal was this; that a precedent should be established tending to shew, That the favour of the People was not so sure a road as the favour of the Court even to popular bonours and popular trufts. A strenuous resistance to every appearance of lawless power; a spirit of independence carried to some degree of enthusiasm; an inquisitive character to discover, and a bold one to display, every corruption and every error of Government; these are the qualities which recommend a man to a feat in the House of Commons, in open and meerly popular elections. An indolent and submissive disposition; a disposition to think charitably of all the actions of men in power, and to live in a mutual intercourse of favours with them; an inclination rather to countenance a strong use of authority, than to bear any fort of licentiousness on the part of the people; these are unfavourable qualities in an open election for Members of Parliament.

The instinct which carries the people towards the choice of the former, is justified by reason; because a man of fuch a character, even in its exorbitancies, does not directly contradict the purposes of a trust, the end of which is a control on power. The latter character, even when it is not in its extreme, will execute this trust but very imperfectly; and if deviating to the least excess, will certainly frustrate instead of forwarding the purposes of a control on Government. But when the House of Commons was to be new modelled, this principle was not only to be changed, but reversed. Whilst any errors committed in support of power, were left to the law, with every advantage of favourable construction, of mitigation, and finally of pardon; all excesses on the fide of liberty, or in pursuit of popular favour, or in defence of popular rights and privileges, were not only to be punished by the rigour of the known law, but by a discretionary proceeding which brought on the loss of the popular

and of the party purfu-

ecling him,

he man, but

The advan-

was the pre-

he principal

the House

The point

precedent

the favour of the Court

ftrenuous

er; a spirit

hthusiaim;

old one to

f Govern-

end a man nd meerly

e disposi-

e actions

rcourie of intenance

of licen-

vourable

rliament.

ards the ecause a

es, does

the end

aracter.

ite this

he least

ing the en the s prin-

Whilst

left to ction.

n the

in de-

ily to

by a popular object itself. Popularity was to be rendered, if not directly penal, at least highly dangerous. The favour of the people might lead even to a disqualification of representing them. Their odium might become, strained through the medium of two or three constructions, the means of sitting as the trustee of all that was dear to them. This is punishing the offence in the offending part. Until his time, the opinion of the people, through the poor an Assembly, still in some fort popular, led to the greatest honours and emoluments in the gift of the Crown. Now the principle is reversed; and the favour of the Court is the only sure way of obtaining and holding those honours which ought to be in the disposal of the people.

It fignifies very little how this matter may be quibbled away. Example, the only argument of effect in civil life, demonstrates the truth of my proposition. Nothing can alter my opinion concerning the pernicious tendency of this example, until I see some man for his indiscretion in the support of power, for his violent and intemperate servility, rendered incapable of sitting in Parliament. For as it now stands, the fault of overstraining popular qualities, and, irregularly if you please, afferting popular privileges, has led to disqualification; the opposite fault never has produced the slightest punishment. Resistance to power, has shut the door of the House of Commons to one man; obsequiousness and fervility, to none.

Not that I would encourage popular disorder, or any disorder. But I would leave such offences to the law, to be punished in measure and proportion. The laws of this country are for the most part constituted, and wisely so, for the general ends of Government, rather than for the preservation of our particular liberties. Whatever therefore is done in support of liberty, by persons not in publick trust, or not acting meerly in that trust, is liable to be more or less out of the ordinary course of the law; and the law itself is sufficient to animadvert upon it with great feverity. Nothing indeed can hinder that fevere letter from crushing us, except the temperaments it may receive from a trial by jury. But if the habit prevails of going beyond the law, and superfeding this judicature, of carrying offences, real or supposed, into the legislative bodies, who shall establish themselves into courts of criminal equity (so the Star Chamber has been called by Lord Bacon) all the evils of the Star Chamber are revived. A large and liberal construction in ascertaining offences, and a discretionary power in punishing them, is the idea of criminal equity; which is in truth a monster in Juriprudence. It fignifies nothing whether a court for this purpose be a Committee of Council, or an House of Commons, or an House of Lords; the liberty of the subject will be equally subverted by it. The true end and purpose of that House of Parliament which entertains fuch a jurifdiction will be destroyed by it.

D 2

I will not believe, what no other man living believes, that Mr. Wilkes was punished for the indecency of his publications, or the impiety of his ranfacked closet. If he had fallen in a common flaughter of libellers and blafphemers, I could well believe, that nothing more was meant than was pretended. But when I fee that, for years together, full as impious, and perhaps more dangerous writings to religion and virtue and order, have not been punished, nor their authors discountenanced; that the most audacious libels on Royal Majesty have passed without notice; that the most treasonable invectives against the laws, liberties, and constitution of the country, have not met with the flightest animadversion; I must consider this as a shocking and shameless pretence. Never did an envenomed scurrility against every thing facred and civil, public and private, rage through the kingdom with fuch a furious and unbridled licence. All this while the peace of the nation must be shaken, to ruin one libeller, and to tear from the populace a fingle favourite.

Nor is it that vice meerly skulks in an obscure and contemptible impunity. Does not the public behold with indignation, persons not only generally scandalous in their lives, but the identical persons who by their society, their instruction, their example, their encouragement, have drawn this man into the very saults which have surnished the Cabal with a pretence for his persecution, loaded with every kind of savour, honour and distinction which a Court can bestow? Add but the crime of servility (the sadum crimen servitutis) to every other crime, and the whole mass is immediately transmuted into virtue, and becomes the just subject of reward and honour. When therefore I reslect upon this method ed by method pursued by the cabal in distributing rewards and vived. punishments, I must conclude that Mr. Wilkes is the ences. object of perfecution, not on account of what he has e idra done in common with others who are the objects of reluni. ward, but for that in which he differs from many of r this them: that he is pursued for the spirited dispositions uie of which are blended with his vices; for his unconqueraof the ble firmness, for his resolute, indefatigable strenuous ree end rtains fistance against oppression.

ieves,

of his

t. If

blaf-

e was

t, for

dan-

have iced:

have

nvec-

of the

fion:

ence.

hing

the

All

ngle

and

ıold

lous

fo-

ge-

ıch

fe-

ınd

he

ry

nĒ-

·eiis

ρd

In this case, therefore, it was not the man that was to be punished, nor his faults that were to be discountenanced. Opposition to acts of power was to be marked by a kind of civil proscription. The popularity which should arise from such an opposition was to be shewn unable to protect it. The qualities by which court is made to the people, were to render every fault inexpiable, and every error irretrievable. The qualities by which court is made to power, were to cover and to fanctify every thing. He that will have a fure and honourable feat in the House of Commons, must take care how he adventures to cultivate popular qualities; otherwise he may remember the old maxim, Breves et infaustos populi Romani amores. If, therefore, a pursuit of popularity expose a man to greater dangers than a disposition to fervility, the principle which is the life and foul of popular elections, will perish out of the constitution.

It behaves the people of England to confider how the House of Commons under the operation of these examples must of necessity be constituted. On the side of the Court will be, all honours, offices, emoluments; every fort of personal gratification to avarice or vanity; and, what is of more moment to most gentlemen, the means of growing, by innumerable petty fervices to individuals, into a spreading interest in their country. On the other hand, let us suppose a person unconnected with the Court, and in opposition to its system. For his own person, no office, or emolument, or title; no promotion, ecclesiaffical, or civil, or military, or naval, for children, or brothers, or kindred. In vain an expiring interest in a borough calls for offices, or small livings, for the children of mayors, and aldermen, and capital burgeffes. His Court rival has them all. He can do an infinite number of acts of generofity and kindness, and even of D_3 public public spirit. He can procure indemnity from quarters. He can procure advantages in trade. He can get pardons for offences. He can obtain a thousand favours, and avert a thousand evils. He may, while he betrays every valuable interest of the kingdom, be a benefactor, a patron, a father, a guardian angel, to his borough. The unfortunate independent member has nothing to offer but harsh refusal, or pitiful excuse, or despondent representation of an hopeless interest. Except from his private fortune, in which he may be equalled, perhaps exceeded, by his Court competitor, he has no way of shewing any one good quality, or of making a single In the House, he votes for ever in a dispirited friend. If he speaks, the doors are locked. A body minority. of loquacious place-men go out to tell the world, that all he aims at, is to get into office. If he has not the talent of elocution, which is the case of many as wise and knowing men as any in the House, he is liable to all these inconveniencies, without the eclat which attends upon any tolerably successful exertion of eloquence. Can we conceive a more discouraging post of duty than this? Strip it of the poor reward of popularity; fuffer even the excesses committed in defence of the popular interest, to become a ground for the majority of that House to form a disqualification out of the line of the law, and at their pleasure, attended not only with the loss of the franchife, but with every kind of personal disgrace.—If this shall happen, the people of this kingdom may be asfured, that they cannot be firmly or faithfully ferved by any man. It is out of the nature of men and things that they should; and their presumption will be equal to their folly, if they expect it. The power of the people, within the laws, must shew itself sufficient to protect every representative in the animated performance of his duty, or that duty cannot be performed. The House of Commons can never be a control on other parts of Government, unless they are controlled themselves by their constituents; and unless these constituents possess some right in the choice of that House, which it is not in the power of that House to take away. If they suffer this power of arbitrary incapacitation to stand, they have utterly perverted every other power of the House of Commons. The late proceeding, I will not fay, is contrary parparours, trays

actor, ough. o ofident n his chaps y of ingle rited body that

t the and all ends

Can his? even rest,

e to d at the —If af-

by lat to le,

of

ir e e s to law; it must be so; for the power which is claimed cannot, by any possibility, be a legal power in any limited member of Government.

The power which they claim, of declaring incapacities, would not be above the just claims of a final judicature, if they had not laid it down as a leading principle, that they had no rule in the exercise of this claim, but their own discretion. Not one of their abetters has ever undertaken to assign the principle of unfitness, the species or degree of delinquency, on which the House of Commons will expel, nor the mode of proceeding upon it, nor the evidence upon which it is established. The direct consequence of which is, that the first franchise of an Englishman, and that on which all the rest vitally depend, is to be forfeited for some offence which no man knows, and which is to be proved by no known rule whatfoever of legal evidence. This is fo anomalous to our whole conflitution, that I will venture to fay, the most trivial right which the subject claims, never was, nor can be, forfeited in fuch a manner.

The w! n c. their usurpation is established upon this method of arguing. We do not make laws. No; we do not contend for this power. We only declare law; and, as we are a tribunal both competent and supreme, what we declare to be law becomes law, although it should not have been so before. Thus the circumstance of having no appeal from their jurisdiction is made to imply that they have no rule in the exercise of it; the judgment does not derive its validity from its conformity to the law; but preposterously the law is made to attend on the judgment; and the rule of the judgment is no other than the occasional will of the House. An arbitrary discretion leads, legality follows; which is just the very nature and description of a legislative act.

This claim in their hands was no barren theory. It was pursued into its utmost consequences; and a dangerous principle has begot a correspondent practice. A systematic spirit has been shewn upon both sides. The electors of Middlesex chose a person whom the House of Commons had voted incapable; and the House of Commons has taken in a member whom the electors of Middlesex had not chosen. By a construction on that legislative power which had been assumed, they declared that the true legal sense of the county was contained in the minority, on that occasion; and might, on a resistance to a vote of incapacity, be contained in any minority.

When any construction of law goes against the spirit of the privilege it was meant to support, it is a vicious construction. It is material to us to be represented really and bona fide, and not in forms, in types, and shadows, and fictions of law. The right of election was not established meerly as a matter of form, to satisfy some method and rule of technical reasoning; it was not a principle which might substitute a Titius or a Maevius, a John Doe or Richard Roe, in the place of a man specially chosen; not a principle which was just as well satisfied with one man as with another. It is a right, the effect of which is to give to the people, that man, and that man only, whom by their voices, actually, not constructively given, they declare that they know, esteem, love, and trust. This right is a matter within their own power of judging and feeling; not an ens rationis and creature of law: nor can those devices, by which any thing else is substituted in the place of such an actual choice, answer in the least degree the end of reprefentation.

I know that the courts of law have made as strained constructions in other cases. Such is the construction in common recoveries. The method of construction which in that case gives to the person in remainder, for their fecurity and representative, the door-keeper, cryer, or sweeper of the Court, or some other shadowy being without substance or effect, is a fiction of a very coarse texture. This was however suffered, by the acquiescence of the whole kingdom, for ages; because the evasion of the old statute of Westminster, which authorised perpetuities, had more sense and utility than the law which was evaded. But an attempt to turn the right of election into such a farce and mockery as a fictitious fine and recovery, will, I hope, have another fate; because the laws which give it are infinitely dear to us, and the evasion is infinitely contemptible.

The people indeed have been told, that this power of discretionary disqualification is vested in hands that they may trust, and who will be sure not to abuse it to their prejudice. Until I find something in this argument differing from that on which every mode of despotism has haan

hee

con

felv

not

mo

tail

of

the

po

th

аг

ar

O

10

0-rit

us

ed

as

ne

ıs, ci-

a-

he

hď

n-

n,

ir

is

h

c-ď

n

h

been defended. I shall not be inclined to pay it any great compliment. The people are fatisfied to trust themfelves with the exercise of their own privileges, and do not defire this kind intervention of the House of Commons to free them from the burthen. They are certainly in the right. They ought not to trust the House of Commons with a power over their franchises: because the constitution, which placed two other coordinate powers to control it, reposed no such confidence in that body. It were a folly well deferving fervitude for its punishment, to be full of confidence where the laws are full of diffrust; and to give to an House of Commons, arrogating to its fole refolution the most harsh and odious part of legislative authority, that degree of submisfion which is due only to the Legislature itself.

When the House of Commons, in an endeavour to obtain new advantages at the expence of the other orders of the state, for the benefit of the Commons at large, have purfued frong measures; if it were not just, it was at least natural, that the constituents should connive at all their proceedings; because we were ourselves ultimately to profit. But when this submission is urged to us, in a contest between the representatives and ourselves, and where nothing can be put into their scale which is not taken from ours, they fancy us to be children when they tell us they are our representatives, our own flesh and blood, and that all the stripes they give us are for our good. The very defire of that body to have fuch a trust contrary to law reposed in them, shews that they are not worthy of it. They certainly will abuse it; because all men possessed of an uncontrolled discretionary power leading to the aggrandifement and profit of their own body have always abused it; and I see no particular fanctity in our times, that is at all likely, by a miraculous operation, to overrule the courfe of nature.

But we must purposely shut our eyes, if we consider this matter meerly as a contest between the House of Commons and the Electors. The true contest is between the Electors of the kingdom and the Crown; the Crown acting by an instrumental House of Commons. It is precisely the same, whether the Ministers of the Crown can disqualify by a dependent House of Commons, or by a dependent court of Star Chamber, or by a dependent court of King's-Bench. If once Members of Parliament can be practically convinced, that they do not depend on the affection or opinion of the people for their political being; they will give themselves over, without even an appearance of reserve, to the influence of the Court.

Indeed, a Parliament unconnected with the people, is effential to a Ministry unconnected with the people; and therefore those who saw through what mighty difficulties the interior Ministry waded, and the exterior were dragged, in this business, will conceive of what prodigious importance, the new corps of King's men held this principle of occasional and personal incapacitation, to the whole body of their design.

When the House of Commons was thus made to consider itself as the master of its constituents, there wanted but one thing to secure that House against all possible future deviation towards popularity; an unlimited fund of money to be laid out according to the pleasure of the Court.

To compleat the scheme of bringing our Court to a resemblance to the neighbouring Monarchies, it was necessary, in essex, to destroy those appropriations of revenue, which seem to limit the property, as the other laws had done the powers, of the Crown. An opportunity for this purpose was taken, upon an application to Parliament for payment of the debts of the Civil List; which in 1769 had amounted to 513,000l. Such application had been made upon former occasions; but to do it in the former manner would by no means answer the present purpose.

Whenever the Crown had come to the Commons to defire a supply for the discharging of debts due on the Civil List; it was always asked and granted with one of the three following qualifications; fometimes with all Either it was stated, that the revenue had been diverted from its purposes by Parliament: or that those duties had fallen short of the sum for which they were given by Parliament, and that the intention of the Legislature had not been fulfilled: or that the money required to discharge the Civil List debt, was to be raised chargeable on the Civil Lift duties. In the reign of Queen Anne, the Crown was found in debt. The leffening and granting away some part of her revenue by Parliament was alledged as the cause of that debt, and pleaded as an equitable ground, such it certainly was, for difcharging it. It does not appear that the duties which were eople; ty difterior what

o conanted offible fund of the n held

ation.

to a as neof reother ortuon to Lift;
pplio do
the

the one all had that hey the ney led of en-

if-

ch re were then applied to the ordinary Government produced clear above 580,000 l. a year; because, when they were afterwards granted to George the First, 120,000 l. was added to complete the whole to 700,000 l. a year. Indeed it was then afferted, and, I have no doubt, truely, that for many years the net produce did not amount to above 550,000 l. The Queen's extraordinary charges were besides very considerable; equal, at least, to any we have known in our time. The application to Parliament was not for an absolute grant of money; but to empowe the seen to raise it by borrowing upon the Civil List fun.

The Civil List debt was twice paid in the reign of George the First. The money was granted upon the same plan which had been followed in the reign of Queen Anne. The Civil List revenues were then mortgaged for the sum to be raised, and stood charged with the ranfom of their own deliverance.

George the Second received an addition to his Civil List. Duties were granted for the purpose of raising 800,000 l. a year. It was not until he had reigned nineteen years, and after the last rebellion, that he called upon Parliament for a discharge of the Civil List debt. The extraordinary charges brought on by the rebellion, account fully for the necessities of the Crown. However, the extraordinary charges of Government were not thought a ground sit to be relied on.

A deficiency of the Civil List duties for several years before, was stated as the principal, if not the whole, ground on which an application to Parliament could be justified. About this time the produce of these duties had fallen pretty low, and even upon an average of the whole reign never produced 800,000 l. a year clear to the Treasury.

That Prince reigned fourteen years afterwards: not only no new demands were made; but with so much good order were his revenues and expences regulated, that, although many parts of the establishment of the Court were upon a larger and more liberal scale than they have been since, there was a considerable sum in hand, on his decease, amounting to about 170,000 l. applicable to the service of the Civil List of his present Majesty. So that, if this Reign commenced with a greater charge than usual, there was enough, and more more than enough, abundantly to supply all the extraordinary expence. That the civil List should have been exceeded in the two former reigns, especially in the reign of George the First, was not at all surprizing. His revenue was but 700,000 l. annually; if it ever produced so much clear. The prodigious and dangerous disastection to the very being of the establishment, and the cause of a Pretender then powerfully abetted from abroad, produced many demands of an extraordinary nature both abroad and at home. Much management and great expences were necessary. But the throne of no Prince has stood upon more unshaken foundations than that of his present Majesty.

To have exceeded the fun given for the Civil List, and to have incurred a debt without special authority of Parliament, was, prima facie, a criminal act: as such Ministers ought naturally rather to have withdrawn it from the inspection, than to have exposed it to the scrutiny, of Parliament. Certainly they ought, of themselves, officiously to have come armed with every fort of argument, which, by explaining, could excuse, a matter in itself of presumptive guilt. But the terrors of the House of Commons are no longer for Minister.

ters

On the other hand, the peculiar character of the House of Commons, as trustee of the public purse, would have led them to call with a punctilious solicitude for every public account, and to have examined into them with the most rigorous accuracy.

I he capital use of an account is, that the reality of the charge, the reason of incurring it, and the justice and necessity of discharging it, should all appear antecedent to the payment. No man ever pays first, and calls for his account afterwards; because he would thereby let out of his hands the principal, and indeed only effectual, means of compelling a full and fair one. But, in national business, there is an additional reason for a previous production of every account. It is a check, perhaps the only one, upon a corrupt and prodigal use of public money. An account after payment is to no rational purpose an account. However, the House of Commons thought all these to be antiquated principles; they were of opinion, that the most Parliamentary way of proceeding was, to pay first what the Court Court thought proper to demand, and to take its.chance for an examination into accounts at some time of great-exave

ally pri-

ly ;

and

ifh-

ully

ex-

uch

But

ken ift.

lity

as

th-

ſed

ht,

ery

le,

ors

iif-

he

e, дe

to

of

d

t

t

The nation had settled 800,000 l. a year on the Crown, as fufficient for the support of its dignity, upon the estimate of its own Ministers. When Ministers came to parliament, and faid that this allowance had not been sufficient for the purpose, and that they had incurred a debt of 500,000 l. would it not have been nrtural for Parliament first to have asked, how, and by what means, their appropriated allowance came to be infufficient? Would it not have favoured of some attention to justice, to have seen in what periods of Administration this debt had been originally incurred? that they might discover, and, if need were, animadvert on the persons who were found the most culpable? To put their hands upon fuch articles of expenditure as they thought improper or excessive, and to secure, in future, against such misapplication or exceeding? Accounts for any other purposes are but a matter of curiofity, and no genuine parliamentary object. All the accounts which could answer any of these purposes were refused, or postponed by previous questions. Every idea of prevention was rejected, as conveying an improper fuspicion of the Ministers of the Crown.

When every leading account had been refused, many others were granted with sufficient facility. But with great candour also, the House was informed, that hardly any of them could be ready until the next fession; some of them perhaps not so soon. But, in order firmly to establish the precedent of payment previous to account, and to form it into a fettled rule of the House, the god in the machine was brought down nothing less than the wonder-working Law of Parliament. It was alledged, that it is the law of Parliament, when any demand comes from the Crown, that the House must go immediately into the Committee of Supply; in which Committee it was allowed that the production and examination of accounts would be quite proper and regular. It was therefore carried, that they should go into the Committee without delay, and without accounts, in order to examine with great order and regularity things that could not possibly come before them. After this stroke of orderly and Parliamentary wit and humour, they went into the Committee; and very generously voted the payment.

62 THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSE OF

There was a circumstance in that debate too remarkable to be over-looked. This debt of the Civil Lift was all along argued upon the fame footing as a debt of the State, contracted upon national authority. Its payment was urged as equally pressing upon the public faith and honour: and when the whole year's account was stated, in what is called The Budget, the Ministry valued themselves on the payment of so much public debt, just as if they had discharged 500,000 l. of navy or ex-Though, in truth, their payment, from chequer bills. the Sinking Fund, of debt which was never contracted by Parliamentary authority, was, to all intents and purposes, so much debt incurred. But such is the present notion of public credit, and payment of debt. No wonder that it produces fuch effects.

Nor was the House at all more attentive to a provident security against future, than it had been to a vindictive retrospect to past, mismanagements. I should have thought indeed that a Ministerial promise, during their own continuance in office, might have been given, though this would have been but a poor security for the publick. Mr. Pelham gave such an assurance, and he kept his word. But nothing was capable of extorting from our Ministers any thing which had the least resemblance to a promise of confining the expences of the Civil List within the limits which had been settled by Parliament. This reserve of theirs I look upon to be equivalent to the clearest declaration, that they were resolved upon a contrary course.

However, to put the matter beyond all doubt, in the Speech from the Throne, after thanking Parliament for the relief so liberally granted, the Ministers inform the two Houses, that they will endeavour to confine the expences of the Civil Government—within what limits think you? Those which the law had prescribed? Not in the least.—" such limits as the bonour of the " Crown can possibly admit."

Thus they established an arbitrary standard for that dignity which Parliament had defined and limited to a legal standard. They gave themselves under the lax and indeterminate idea of the Honour of the Crosson, a full loose for all manner of dissipation, and all manner of corruption. This arbitrary arbi both mer and fole any > fo fet

lav pa fur lin ef pc

> ol ti to n

to It

arbitrary standard they were not afraid to hold out to both Houses; while an idle and unoperative Act of Parliament, estimating the dignity of the Crown at 800,000/. and confining it to that fum, adds to the number of obfolete statutes which load the shelves of libraries without any fort of advantage to the people.

tary

and

ark-

Was

the

ient

and ted.

ued

just

ex-

om

Eted

bur-

ent

on-

bvi-

in-

uld

ing

en,

the

he

ng

m-

he

by

be

re

in

1-

1-

After this proceeding, I suppose that no man can be fo weak as to think that the Crown is limited to any fettled allowance whatfoever. For if the Ministry has 800,000l. a year by the law of the land; and if by the law of Parliament all the debts which exceed it are to be paid previous to the production of any account; I prefume that this is equivalent to an income with no other limits than the abilities of the subject and the moderation of the Court; that is to fay, it is such an income as is possessed by every absolute Monarch in Europe. It amounts, as a person of great ability said in the debate. to an unlimited power of drawing upon the Sinking Fund. Its effect on the public credit of this kingdom must be obvious; for in vain is the Sinking Fund the great buttress of all the rest, it it be in the power of the Ministry to refort to it for the payment of any debts which they may choose to incur, under the name of the Civil Lift, and through the medium of a Committee, which thinks itself obliged by law to vote supplies without any other account than that of the meer existence of the debt.

Five hundred thousand pounds is a serious sum. But it is nothing to the prolific principle upon which the fum was voted; a principle that may be well called, the fruitful mother of an hundred more. Neither is the damage to public credit of very great consequence, when compared with that which refults to public morals and to the fafety of the constitution, from the exhaustless mine of corruption opened by the precedent, and to be wrought by the principle, of the late payment of the debts of the The power of discretionary disqualification Civil List. by one law of Parliament, and the necessity of paying every debt of the Civil List by another law of Parliament, if suffered to pass unnoticed, must establish such a fund of rewards and terrors as will make Parliament the best appendage and support of arbitrary power that ever was invented by the wit of man. This is felt. The quarrel is begun between the Representatives and the People. The Court faction have at length committed them.

THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSE OF

In such a strait the wifest may well be perplexed, and the boldest staggered. The circumstances are in a great measure new. We have hardly any land-marks from the wisdom of our ancestors, to guide us. At best we can only follow the spirit of their proceeding in other I know the diligence with which my observations on our public disorders have been made; I am very fure of the integrity of the motives on which they are published: I cannot be equally confident in any plan for the absolute cure of those disorders, or for their certain future prevention. My aim is to bring this matter into more public discussion. Let the sagacity of others work upon it. It is not uncommon for medical writers to defcribe histories of diseases very accurately, on whose cure they can fay but very little.

The first ideas which generally suggest themselves, for the cure of Parliamentary disorders, are, to shorten the duration of Parliaments; and to disqualify all, or a great number of placemen, from a feat in the House of Commons. Whatever efficacy there may be in those remedies, I am fure in the present state of things it is impossible to apply them. A restoration of the right of free election is a preliminary indispensable to every other What alterations ought afterwards to be reformation. made in the constitution, is a matter of deep and difficult research.

If I wrote meerly to please the popular palate, it would indeed be as little troublesome to me as to another, to extol these remedies, so famous in speculation, but to which their greatest admirers have never attempted seriously to resort in practice. I confess then, that I have no fort of reliance upon either a Triennial Parliament, or a Place-bill. With regard to the former, perhaps it might rather ferve to counteract, than to promote the ends that are proposed by it. To say nothing of the horrible diforders among the people attending frequent elections, I should be fearful of committing, every three years, the independent gentlemen of the country into a contest with the Treasury. It is easy to see which of the contending parties would be ruined first. Whoever has taken a careful view of public proceedings, so as to endeavour to ground his speculations on his experience, must

of tha

a li

did

ons

if

be

inf

m

tel

C

to

and in a marks t best

com-

t best other rvativery y are in sor rtain into work def-

Cure*

lves, orten or a fe of

imit of other o be icult

her, t to feave ent, s it orent ree of

to ce,

must have observed how prodigiously greater the power of Ministry is in the first and last session of a Parliament. than it is in the intermediate period, when Members At a little firm on their feats. The persons of the greatest Parliamentary experience, with whom I have conversed, did constantly, in canvassing the fate of questions, allow fomething to the Court-side, upon account of the elections depending or imminent. The evil complained of. if it exists in the present state of things, would hardly be removed by a triennial Parliament: for, unless the influence of Government in elections can be entirely taken away, the more frequently they return, the more they will harrass private independence: the more generally men will be compelled to fly to the fettled systematic interest of Government, and to the resources of a boundless Civil-Lift. Certainly fomething may be done, and ought to be done, towards lessening that influence in elections; and this will be necessary upon a plan either of longer or shorter duration of Parliament. But nothing can so perfectly remove the evil, as not to render such contentions, too frequently repeated, utterly ruinous, first to independence of fortune; and then to independence of As I am only giving an opinion on this point, and not at all debating it in an adverse line, I hope I may be excused in another observation. With great truth I may aver, that I never remember to have talked on this subject with any man much conversant with public business, who considered short Parliaments as a real improvement of the constitution. Gentlemen, warm in a popular cause, are ready enough to attribute all the declarations of such persons to corrupt motives. But the habit of affairs, if, on one hand, it tends to corrupt the mind, furnishes it, on the other, with the means of better information. The authority of such perfons will always have some weight. It may stand upon a par with the speculations of those who are less practifed in business; and who, with perhaps purer intentions, have not to effectual means of judging. It is, besides, an effect of vulgar and puerile malignity to imagine, that every Statelman is of course corrupt; and that his opinion upon every constitutional point, is solely formed upon some sinister interest.

The next favourite remedy is a place-bill. The fame principle guides in both; I mean, the opinion which is entertained by many, of the infallibility of laws and E regulations.

regulations, in the cure of public distempers. Without being as unreasonably doubtful as many are unwisely confident, I will only fay, that this also is a matter very well worthy of ferious and mature reflexion. It is not easy to foresee, what the effect would be, of disconrecting with Parliament, the greatest part of those who stold civil employments, and of fuch mighty and important bodies as the military and naval establishments. were better, perhaps, that they should have a corrupt interest in the forms of the constitution, than that they should have none at all. This is a question altogether different from the disqualification of a particular description of Revenue Officers from feats in Parliament; or, perhaps of all the lower forts of them from votes in elections. In the former case, only the few are affected; in the latter, only the inconfiderable. But a great official, a great professional, a great military and naval interest, all necessarily comprehending many people of the first weight, ability, wealth, and spirit, has been gradually formed in the kingdom. These new interests must be let into a share of representation, else possibly they may be inclined to destroy those institutions of which they are not permitted to partake. This is not a thing to be trifled with; nor is it every well-meaning man, that is fit to put his hands to it. Many other ferious confiderations occur. I do not open them here, because they are not directly to my purpose; proposing only to give the reader some taste of the difficulties that attend all capital changes in the conflitution; just to hint the uncertainty, to fay no worse, of preventing the Court, as long as it has the means of influence abundantly in its power, of applying that influence to Parliament; and perhaps, if the public method were precluded, of doing it in some worse and more dangerous method. Underhand and oblique ways would be studied. The science of evafion, already tolerably understood, would then be brought to the greatest perfection. It is no inconsiderable part of wildom, to know how much of an evil ought to be tolerated; left, by attempting a degree of purity impracticable in degenerate times and manners, inflead of cutting off the substifting ill practices, new corruptions might be produced for the concealment and fecurity of the old. It were better, undoubtedly, that no influence hout

rifely

r ve-It is

conwho

por-

rupt they

ther

ldeſ-

ent:

es in

ted:

of-

aval

the

ally

be

nay

are

be

t is

ler-

iey

ive

all

ın-

as

its

nd

g

rce

e

ril

ì

It

67

influence at all could affect the mind of a Member of Parliament. But of all modes of influence, in my opinion, a place under the Government is the least difgraceful to the man who holds it, and by far the most safe to the country. I would not shut out that fort of influence which is open and visible, which is connected with the dignity and the service of the State, when it is not in my power to prevent the influence of contracts, of subscriptions, of direct bribery, and those innumerable methods of clandestine corruption, which are abundantly in the hands of the Court, and which will be applied as long as these means of corruption, and the disposition to be corrupted have existence amongst us. Our constitution stands on a nice equipoife, with steep precipices, and deep waters upon all fides of it. In removing it from a dangerous leaning towards one fide, there may be a risque of overfetting it on the other. Every project of a material change in a Government so complicated as ours, combined at the same time with external circumstances still more complicated, is a matter full of difficulties; in which a confiderate man will not be too ready to decide; a prudent man too ready to undertake; or an honest man too ready to promise. They do not respect the public nor themselves, who engage for more, than they are fure that they ought to attempt, or that they are able to perform. These are my sentiments, weak perhaps, but honest and unbiassed; and submitted, entirely to the opinion of grave men, well affected to the constitution of their country, and of experience in what may best promote or hurt it.

Indeed, in the fituation in which we stand, with an immense revenue, an enormous debt, mighty establishments, Government itself a great banker and a great merchant, I see no other way for the preservation of a decent attention to public interest in the Representatives, but the interposition of the body of the people itself, whenever it shall appear, by some slagrant and notorious act, by some capital innovation, that these Representatives are going to over-leap the sences of the law, and to introduce an arbitrary power. This interposition is a most unpleasant remedy. But, if it is a legal remedy, it is intended on some occasion to be used; to be used then only, when it is evident that nothing else can held the constitution to its true principles.

The

68 THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSE OF

The distempers of Monarchy were the great subjects of apprehension and redress, in the last century; in this the distempers of Parliament. It is not in Parliament alone that the remedy for Parliamentary disorders can be compleated; hardly indeed can it begin there. Until a considence in Government is re-established, the people ought to be excited to a more strict and detailed attention to the conduct of their Representatives. Standards, for judging more systematically upon their conduct, ought to be settled in the meetings of counties and corporations. Frequent and correct lists of the voters in all important questions ought to be procured.

By fuch means fomething may be done. By fuch means it may appear who those are, that by an indiscriminate support of all Administrations, have totally banished all integrity and confidence out of public proceedings; have confounded the best men with the worst; and weakened and dissolved, instead of strengthening and compacting, the general frame of Government. If any person is more concerned for government and order, than for the liberties of his country; even he is equally concerned to put an end to this course of indiscriminate support. It is this blind and undistinguishing support, that feeds the spring of those very disorders, by which he is frighted into the arms of that faction which contains in itself the source of all disorders by enfeebling all the visible and regular authority of the state. The diftemper is encreased by his judicious and preposterous endeavours, or pretences for the cure of it.

An exterior Administration chosen for its impotency, or after it is chosen purposely rendered impotent, in order to be rendered subservient, will not be obeyed. The laws themselves will not be respected when those who execute them are despised; and they will be despised, when their power is not immediate from the Crown, or natural in the kingdom. Never were ministers better supported in Parliament. Parliamentary support comes and goes with office, totally regardless of the man, or the merit. Is Government strengthened? It grows weaker and weaker; the popular torrent gains upon it every hour. Let us learn from our It is not support that is wanting to experience. Government, but reformation, When Ministry rests upon publick opinion, it is not indeed built in this in this iament can be Until a people attendards, induct, id cors in all y such ndiscrilly baoceedworst; ng and If any order, equally minate ipport, which h coning all he disimpoimpoot be when will be in the re mientary ordless (thenprent i our nistry

69

ideed

built

sterous

built upon a rock of adamant; but when it stands upon private humour, its structure is of stubble, and its foundation is on quickfand. I repeat it again. He that supports every Administration, subverts all Government. As the whole business, in which Courts usually take an interest, goes on at present equally well, in whatever hands, whether high or low, wife or foolish, scandalous or reputable; there is nothing to hold it firm to any one body of men, or to any one confishent scheme of , politicks. Nothing interpoles, to prevent the full operation of all the caprices and all the passions of a Court upon the servants of the public. The system of Administration is therefore open to continual shocks and changes, upon the principles of the meanest cabal, and the most contemptible intrigue. Nothing can be folid and permanent. All good men at length fly with horrour from such a service. Men of rank and ability. with the spirit which ought to animate such men in a free state, while they decline the jurisdiction of dark cabal on their actions and their fortunes, will, for both, chearfully put themselves upon their country. They will trust an inquisitive and distinguishing Parliament; hecause it does enquire, and does distinguish; if they act well, they know, that in fuch a Parliament, they will be supported against any intrigue; if they act ill, they know that no intrigue can protect them. This situation, however aweful, is honourable. But in one hour, and in the felf-same Assembly, without any affigned or affignable cause, to be precipitated from the highest authority to the most marked neglect, possibly into the greatest peril of life and reputation, is a fituation full of danger, and destitute of honour. It will be shunned equally by every man of prudence, and every man of spirit.

Such are the consequences of the division of the Court from the Administration; and of the division of public men among themselves. By the former of these, lawful Government is undone; by the latter, all opposition to lawless power is rendered impotent. Government may in a great measure be restored, if any considerable bodies of men have honesty and resolution enough never to accept Administration, unless this garrison of King's men, which is stationed, as in a citadel, to control and enslave it, be entirely broken and disbanded, and evey work they have thrown up be leveled with the ground. The disposition of public men to keep this corps together, and to act under it, or to co-operate with it, is a touchstone by which every Administration ought in future to be tried. There has not been one which has not fufficiently experienced the utter incompatibility of that faction with the public peace, and with all the ends of good Government: fince, if they opposed it, they soon lost every power of ferving the Crown; it they submitted to it, they lost all the esteem of their country. Until Ministers give to the public a full proof of their entire alienation from that system, however plausible their pretences, we may be fure they are more intent on the emoluments than the duties of office. If they refuse to give this proof, we know of what stuff they are made. In this particular, it ought to be the electors business to look to their Representatives. The electors ought to esteem it no less culpable in their member to give a fingle vote in Parliament to fuch an Administration than to take an office under it; to endure it than to act in The notorious infidelity and versatility of Members of Parliament in their opinions of men and things ought in a particular manner to be confidered by the electors in the inquiry which is recommended to them. is one of the principal holdings of that destructive system, which has endeavoured to unhinge all the virtuous, honourable, and useful connections in the king-

This cabal has, with great success, propagated a doctrine which ferves for a colour to those acts of treachery; and whilst it receives any degree of countenance, it will be utterly fenfeless to look for a vigorous oppofition to the Court party. The doctrine is this: That all political connexions are in their nature factious and as such ought to be dissipated, and destroyed; and that the rule for forming Administrations is meer personal ability (on the judgment of this cabal upon it) taken by draughts from every division and denomination of public men. This decree was folemnly promulgated by the head of the Court corps, the Earl of Bute himself, in a speech which he made, in the year 1766, against the then Administration. ÞF ntly exon with Governlt every to it, l Minire alieeir preefuse to made. iness to ight to e a finn than act in embers s ought ctors in This ive fyfvirtu-

king-

a doccachenance, oppo-That us and d that perfoupon d delemns, the made, ation,

the

the only Administration which he has ever been known directly and publicly to oppose.

It is indeed in no way wonderful, that fuch perfons should make such declarations. That connexion and faction are equivalent terms, is an opinion which has been carefully inculcated at all times by unconstitutional Statesmen. The reason is evident. are linked together they eafily and speedily communicate the alarm of any evil defign. They are enabled to fathom it with common counsel, and to oppose it with united strength. Whereas, when they lie dispersed, without concert, order, or discipline, communication is uncertain, counsel difficult, and resistance impracticable. Where men are not acquainted with each other's principles, nor experienced in each other's talents, nor at all practifed in their mutual habitudes and dispositions by joint efforts in business; no personal confidence, no friendship, no common interest, subsisting among them; it is evidently impossible that they can act a public part with uniformity, perfeverance, or efficacy. In a connexion, the most inconsiderable man, by adding to the weight of the whole, has his value, and his use; out of it, the greatest talents are wholly unserviceable to the public. No man, who is not inflamed by vain-glory into enthusiasm, can flatter himself that his single, unsupported, desultory, unsystematic endeavours are of power to defeat the fubtle defigns and united cabals of ambitious citizens. When bad men combine, the good must associate; else they will fall, one by one, an unpitied facrifice in a contemptible struggle.

It is not enough, in a fituation of trust in the commonwealth, that a man means well to his country; it is not enough that in his fingle person he never did an evil act, but always voted according to his confcience, and even harangued against every design which he apprehended to be prejudicial to the interest of his country. This innoxious and ineffectual character, that seems formed upon a plan of apology and disculpation, falls miserably short of the mark of public duty. That duty demands and requires, that what is right should not only be made known, but made prevalent; that what is evil should not only be detected, but defeated. When the public man omits to put himself in a situation of doing his duty with effect, it is an omission that frustrates the purposes of his trust almost as much as if he had formally betrayed it. It is surely no very rational account of a man's life, that he always acted right; but has taken special care, to act in such a manner that his endeavours could not possibly be productive of any consequence.

E 4

I do not wonder that the behaviour of many parties should have made persons of tender and scrupulous virtue somewhat out of humour with all forts of connexion in politicks. I admit that people frequently acquire in fuch confederacies a narrow, bigoted, and profcriptive spirit; that they are apt to fink the idea of the general good in this circumscribed and partial inte-But, where duty renders a critical fituation a necessary one, it is our business to keep free from the evils attendant upon it; and not to fly from the fitu-If a fortress is seated in an unwholeation itself. some air, an officer of the garrison is obliged to be attentive to his health, but he must not desert his sta-Every profession, not excepting the glorious one of a foldier, or the facred one of a priest, is liable to its own particular vices; which, however, form no argument against those ways of life; nor are the vices themselves inevitable to every individual in those pro-Of such a nature are connexions in politicks; effentially necessary for the full performance of our public duty, accidentally liable to degenerate into faction. Commonwealths are made of families, free commonwealths of parties also; and we may as well affirm, that our natural regards and ties of blood tend inevitably to make men bad citizens, as that the bonds of our party weaken those by which we are held to our country.

Some legislators went so far as to make neutrality in party a crime against the State. I do not know whether this might not have been rather to overstrain the principle. Certain it is, the best patriots in the greatest commonwealths have always commended and promoted such connexions. Idem sentire de republica, was with them a principal ground of friendship and attachment; nor do I know any other capable of forming sirmer, dearer, more pleasing, more honourable, and more virtuous habitudes. The Romans carried this principle a great way. Even the holding of offices together, the disposition of which arose from chance not selection, gave rise to a relation, which continued for like. It was called necessitudo sortis; act in possibly parties ous virnnexion equire in ptive spithe geal intelation a rom the the fitunwholed to be his staous one le to its o argune vices ofe broliticks; ur pubfaction. mmonn, that ably to in parer this nciple.

mon-

h conrinci-

know

afing,

The

n the vhich

tion.

rtis;

s much

no ve-

always

and it was looked upon with a facred reverence. Breaches of any of these kinds of civil relation were considered as acts of the most distinguished turpitude. whole people was distributed into political societies. in which they acted in support of such interests in the State as they severally affected. For it was then thought no crime, to endeavour by every honest means to advance to superiority and power those of your own sentiments and opinions. This wise people was far from imagining that those connexions had no tie, and obliged to no duty; but that men might quit them without shame, upon every call of interest. They believed private honour to be the great foundation of public trust; that friendship was no mean step towards patriotism; that he who, in the common intercourse of life, shewed he regarded somebody besides himself, when he came to act in a public situation. might probably consult some other interest than his own. Never may we become plus sages que les sages, as the French comedian has happily expressed it, wifer than all the wife and good men who have lived before us. It was their wish, to see public and private virtues, not dissonant and jarring, and mutually destructive, but harmoniously combined, growing out of one another in a noble and orderly gradation, reciprocally supporting and supported. In one of the most fortunate periods of our history this country was governed by a connexion; I mean, the great connexion of Whigs in the reign of Q. Anne. They were complimented upon the principle of this connexion by a Poet who was in high esteem with them. Addison who knew their fentiments, could not praise them for what they considered as no proper subject of commendation. As a poet who knew his business, he could not applaud them for a thing which in general estimation was not highly repu-Addressing himself to Britain, Thy favourites grow not up by fortune's sport, Or from the crimes or fellies of a court, On the firm basis of desert they rise, From long-try'd faith, and friendsbip's boly ties.

The Whigs of those days believed that the only proper method of rifing into power was through hard essays of practised friendship and experimented fidelity.

74 THOUGHTS ON THE CAUSE OF

fidelity. At that time it was not imagined, that patriotism was a bloody idol, which required the sacrifice of children and parents, or dearest connexions in private life, and of all the virtues that rise from those relations. They were not of that ingenious paradoxical morality, to imagine that a spirit of moderation was properly shewn in patiently bearing the sufferings of your friends; or that disinterestedness was clearly manifested at the expence of other peoples fortune. They believed that no men could act with effect, who did not act in concert; that no men could act in concert, who did not act with considence; and that no men could act with considence, who were not bound together by common opinions, common affections, and common interests.

These wise men, for such I must call Lord Sunderland, Lord Godolphin, Lord Sommers, and Lord Marlborough, were too well principled in these maxims upon which the whole fabrick of public strength is built, to be blown off their ground by the breath of every child-ish talker. They were not asraid that they should be called an ambitious junto, or that their resolution to stand or fall together should, by placemen, be interpreted into a scuffle for places.

Party is a body of men united, for promoting by their joint endeavours the national interest, upon some particular principle in which they are all agreed. For my part, I find it impossible to conceive, that any one believes in his own politicks, or thinks them to be of any weight, who refuses to adopt the means of having them reduced into practice. It is the business of the speculative philosopher to mark the proper ends of Government. It is the business of the politician, who is the philosopher in action, to find out proper means towards those ends, and to employ them with effect. fore every honourable connexion will avow it as their first purpose, to pursue every just method to put the men who hold their opinions into fuch a condition as may enable them to carry their common plans into execution, with all the power and authority of the State. As this power is attached to certain fituations, it is their duty to contend for these situations. Without a proscription of others, they are bound to give to their own party the preference in all things; and by no means, for private private confiderations, to accept any offers of power in which the whole body is not included; nor to suffer themselves to be led, or to be controlled, or to be overbalanced, in office or in council, by those who contradict the very fundamental principles on which their party is formed, and even those upon which every fair connexion must stand. Such a generous contention for power, on such manly and honourable maxims, will eafily be distinguished from the mean and interested struggle for place and emolument. The very stile of such persons will serve to discriminate them from those numberless impostors, who have deluded the ignorant with professions incompatible with human practice, and have afterwards incented them by practices below the level of vulgar rectitude.

tri-

ate

bns.

rly

ds;

he

hat

bn-

lot

ith

on er-

rl-

on

to

d-

be

to

t-

ir

It is an advantage to all narrow wisdom and narrow morals, that their maxims have a plaufible air; and, on a curfory view, appear equal to first principles. They are light and portable. They are as current as coppercoin; and about as valuable. They ferve equally the first capacities and the lowest; and they are, at least, as useful to the worst men as the best. Of this stamp is the cant of Not men, but measures; a fort of charm, by which many people get loofe from every honourable engagement. When I fee a man acting this defultory and disconnected part, with as much detriment to his own fortune as prejudice to the cause of any party, I am not persuaded that he is right; but I am ready to believe he is in earnest. I respect virtue in all its situations; even when it is found in the unsuitable company of weakness. I lament to see qualities, rare and valuable, fquandered away without any public utility. But when a gentleman with great visible emoluments abandons the party in which he has long acted, and tells you, it is because he proceeds upon his own judgment; that he acts on the merits of the feveral measures as they arise; and that he is obliged to follow his own confcience, and not that of others; he gives reasons which it is impossible to controvert, and discovers a character which it is impossible to mistake. What shall we think of him who never differed from a certain fet of men until the moment they lost their power, and who never agreed with them in a fingle instance afterwards? Would not fuch a coincidence of interest and opinion be rather fortunate?

tunate? Would it not be an extraordinary cast upon the dice, that a man's connexions should degenerate into faction, precisely at the critical moment when they lose their power, or he accepts a place? When people defert their connexions, the defertion is a manifect fael, upon which a direct simple issue lies, triable by plain men. Whether a measure of Government be right or wrong, is no matter of fact, but a meer affair of opinion, on which men may, as they do, dispute and wrangle without end. But whether the individual thinks the measure right or wrong, is a point at still a greater distance from the reach of all human decision. It is therefore very convenient to politicians, not to put the judgment of their conduct on overt-acts, cognizable in any ordinary court, but upon such matter as can be triable only in that secret tribunal, where they are sure of being heard with favour, or where at worst the sentence will be only private whipping.

I believe the reader would wish to find no substance in a doctrine which has a tendency to destroy all test of character as deduced from conduct. He will therefore excuse my adding something more, towards the further clearing up a point, which the great convenience of obscurity to dishonesty has been able to cover with some degree of darkness and doubt.

In order to throw an odium on political connexion, these politicians suppose it a necessary incident to it, that you are blindly to follow the opinions of your party when in direct opposition to your own clear ideas; a degree of fervitude that no worthy man could bear the thought of fubmitting to; and fuch as, I believe, no connexions (except some Court factions) ever could be so senselessly tyrannical as to impose. Men thinking freely, will, in particular instances, think differently. But still, as the greater part of the measures which arise in the course of public business are related to, or dependent on, some great leading general principles in Government, a man must be peculiarly unfortunate in the choice of his political company if he does not agree with them at least nine times in ten. If he does not concur in these general principles upon which the party is founded, and which necessarily draw on a concurrence in their application, he sught from the beginning to have chosen some other,

to

more conformable to his opinions. When the question is in its nature doubtful, or not very material, the modesty which becomes an individual, and (in spite of our Court moralists) that partiality which becomes a well-chosen friendship, will frequently bring on an acquiescence in the general fentiment. Thus the disagreement will naturally be rare; it will be only enough to indulge freedom, without violating concord or disturbing arrangement. And this is all that ever was required for a character of the greatest uniformity and steadiness in connexion. How men can proceed without any connexion at all, is to me utterly incomprehensible. Of what fort of materials must that man be made, how must he be tempered and put together, who can fit whole years in Parliament, with five hundred and fifty of his fellow citizens, amidst the storms of such tempestuous passions, in the sharp conslict of so many wits, and tempers, and characters, in the agitation of fuch mighty questions, in the discussion of such mighty questions, in the discussion of such vast and ponderous interests, without seeing any one fort of men, whose character, conduct, or disposition, would lead him to associate himself with them, to aid and be aided in any one system of public utility?

I remember an old scholastic aphorism, which says, " that the man who lives wholly detached from others, "must be either an angel or a devil." When I see in any of these detached gentlemen of our times the angelic purity, power, and beneficence, I shall admit them to be angels. In the mean time we are born only to be We shall do enough if we form ourselves to be good ones. It is therefore our business carefully to cultivate in our minds, to rear to the most perfect vigour and maturity, every fort of generous and honest feeling that belongs to our nature. To bring the dispositions that are lovely in private life into the fervice and conduct of the commonwealth; so to be patriots, as not to forget we are gentlemen. To cultivate friendships, and to incur enmities. To have both strong, but both selected: in the one, to be placable; in the other, inmoveable. To model our principles to our duties and To be fully perfuaded, that all virtue our situation. which is impracticable is spurious; and rather to run the risque of falling into faults in a course which leads us to act with effect and energy, than to loiter out our days without without blame, and without use. Public life is a fituation of power and energy; he trespasses against his duty who sleeps upon his watch, as well as he that goes over to the enemy.

There is, however, a time for all things. It is not every conjuncture which calls with equal force upon the activity of honest men; but critical exigences now and then arise; and I am mistaken, if this be not one of them. Men will see the necessity of honest combination; but they may fee it when it is too late. They may embody, when it will be ruinous to themselves, and of no advantage to the country; when, for want of fuch a timely union as may enable them to oppose in favour of the laws, with the laws on their fide, they may, at length, find themselves under the necessity of conspiring, instead of consulting. The law, for which they tland, may become a weapon in the hands of its bitterest enemies; and they will be cast, at length, into that miserable alternative, between flavery and civil confusion, which no good man can look upon without horror; an alternative in which it is impossible he should take either part, with a conscience perfectly at repose. To keep that fituation of guilt and remorfe at the utmost distance, is, therefore, our first obligation. Early activity may prevent late and fruitless violence. As yet we work in the light. The scheme of the enemies of public tranquillity has difarranged, it has not destroyed

If the reader believes that there really exists such a faction as I have described; a faction ruling by the private inclinations of a Court, against the general fense of the people; and that this faction, whilst it purfues a scheme for undermining all the foundations of our freedom, weakens (for the present at least) all the powers of executory Government, rendering us abroad contemptible, and at home distracted; he will believe also, that nothing but a firm combination of public men against this body, and that, too, supported by the hearty concurrence of the people at large, can possibly get the better of it. The people will see the necessity of restoring public men to an attention to the public opinion, and of restoring the constitution to its original principles. Above all, they will endeavour to keep the House of Commons from assuming a character which does not belong

fitu-

his goes

not

the

and

of

ney

es,

ant

ofe

iey

ity

ich

its

to

n-

)r-ıld

ſe.

ıt

c-

et

ρf

ď

long to it. They will endeavour to keep that House, tor its existence, for its powers, and its privileges, as independent of every other, and as dependent upon themselves, as possible. This servitude is to an House of Commons (like the obedience to the divine law) " perfect freedom." For if they once quit this natural, rational, and liberal obedience, having deferted the only proper foundation of their power, they must seek a support in an abject and unnatural dependence fomewhere When, through the medium of this just connexion with their constituents, the genuine dignity of the House of Commons is restored, it will begin to think of casting from it, with scorn, as badges of servility, all the false ornaments of illegal power, with which it has been, for fome time, difgraced. It will begin to think of its old office of CONTROL. It will not fuffer that last of evils, to predominate in the country; men without popular confidence, public opinion, natural connexion, or mutual trust, invested with all the powers of Government.

When they have learned this lesson themselves, they will be willing and able to teach the Court, that it is the true interest of the Prince to have but one Administration; and that one composed of those who recommend themselves to their Sovereign through the opinion of their country, and not by their obsequiousness to a favourite. Such men will ferve their Sovereign with affection and fidelity; because his choice of them, upon fuch principles, is a compliment to their virtue. They will be able to serve him effectually; because they will add the weight of the country to the force of the executory power. They will be able to ferve their King with dignity; because they will never abuse his name to the gratification of their private spleen or avarice. This, with allowances for human frailty, may probably be the general character of a Ministry, which thinks itself accountable to the House of Commons; when the House of Commons thinks itself accountable to its constituents. If other ideas should prevail, things must remain in their present confusion; until they are hurried into all the rage of civil violence; or until they fink into the dead repose of despotism.

THEEND.

