He includes in evil moral as well as natural evil; that is, he thus makes God the author of sin. "God's acting on their hearts and producing all their free, voluntary, moral exercises, is so far from preventing them from being moral agents, that it necessarily makes them moral agents " He goes so far as to assert, that they who deny this "universal agency," in the production of sin as well as holiness, do "virtually deny God's existence." In reference to the origin of Adam's sin he says, "Satan placed certain motives before his mind, which, by a certain divine energy, took hold of his heart and led him into sin." Thus he ascribes to God the efficiency in the production of Adam's sin, to which the devil was only a tempter. Satan tempts men to sin; God produces sin. If this is not blasphemy, what can be? There is not the least doubt as to his doctrine, which he has much more fully asserted. He makes God the efficient cause, the actual producer of every sinful volition in his creature; he makes God the author of sin. Is not God then responsible for sin? And how can he punish man for sin? Is not he, who intelligently and voluntarily performs an act, responsible for that act? The man who lays a living child upon the ground, and with an axe chops off its head, is guilty of murder. If God creates a human mind, and then by his almighty and irresistible power moves that mind to sin and produces sin, God is the author of sin. If we embrace this doctrine, we make God the author of sin, which the Bible ascribes to the devil. We give to the infinitely pure and holy Being the very character of Satan. But Dr. E. ascribes to God holy motives,-his own glory and the highest possible good of the universe, whereas the Devil is influenced by the contrary evil motives; yet the acts and effects are the same, - the production of sin, which God abhors. In communicating such a doctrine to the world, by what argument does the teacher justify himself? He teaches that all freedom consists in volition and its effects, and not in its cause. The man who acts voluntarily - whatever may cause his volition - is a free, voluntary agent. So that, although God causes, produces his sinful velitions, man is yet a perfectly free moral agent. But this contradicts the teaching of the great

It may ter in a er of thets. should radictory expedient writings. nd where. verse relitful sovs natural author of producing is so far al agents, agents " who deny ion of sin God's exf Adam's ves before rgy, took Thus he duction of tempter. s sin. If There is which he akes God of every God the nsible for sin ? Is performs man who d with an rder. If by his alt mind to or of sin. God the s to the and holy it Dr. E. glory and iverse, --contrary are the d abhors. he world, tify him-

nsists in

se. The

ay cause

ent. So sinful veal agent.

he great

and con-

sense of man. It is deceptive language - " what God makes free must be free." But man is not free, if his volition is made, created, produced by almighty power.

Dr. Stephen West, in his book on agency, was the first teacher in this country of this doctrine, that God is the only agent, the producer of all the volitions of his creatures. It was doubtless to his book, published in 1772, that Dr. Emmons was indebted for his theory. It is probable that on this point there are now in the Christian world very few followers of these bold theorists. Their doctrine, which was the doctrine of Epicurus, Gassendi, Condillac, Hobbes, and Priestley, may be acceptable to infidels and universalists; but it readers of the Bible, who can easily understand, with a host of commentators, that when God is certain event in Providence, that he would harden his own heart, as it is afterwards declared that he by charging it blasphemously upon God. But if God is a free agent, then he might make man in is free, and is not caused, produced, made by another. Do we not all know intuitively, by common sense, by reason and conscience, that we are such free agents, therefore justly accountable to a holy, sin-hating God? Even Berkeley, though he denied the existence of matter, did not deny the existence of created minds, having wills of their own and volitions not produced by another. He says: "It is true, I have denied there are any other agents beside spirits; but this is very consistent with allowing to thinking, rational beings in the production of motions the use of limited powers, ultimately indeed derived from God, but immediately under the direction of their own wills, which is sufficient to entitle them to all the guilt of their actions." Our innate sense of justice teaches us, that if God creates, produces our wicked affections, volitious, and actions, it would be injustice in him to punish us for them, or to charge upon us guilt.

As to Emmons' other doctrines, he differed little from a multitude of New Eugland theologians. He believed that Christ came from heaven to be an atoning sacrifice for sin, a substitute for sinners, to vindicate God's justice, and that men are justified by faith in him; that men are active, not passive, in regeneration; that men are not guilty of Adam's sin, but that their hearts are, in consequence of his sin, totally depraved; that holiness and sin consist in voluntary exercises. As to the success of his ministry, during fifty-four

tradicts the general consciousness and common | years three hundred and eight were added to the church, less than six a year on an average. He was one of the founders of the Massachusetts missionary society, and was its first president for twelve years. He was zealously attached to the system of Congregationalism, maintaining in his " platform of ecclesiastical government," that all ecclesiastical power is vested in each church. He was a man of wit and quickness of retort. Some ancedotes are the following: As a Universalist had answered one of his sermons, some one suggested to him the plan of printing the sermon and the answer in one pamphlet; he replied, "It is against the laws: - thou shalt not plow with an ox and an ass together." The secret of popular preaching, he said, was not to meddle with will make little progress with intelligent, pious the hearers' consciences; also, "let your sermons be without beginning, middle, or end." He said, "let your eloquence flow from your heart to your said to harden Pharaoh's heart, the meaning is, hands, and never attempt to force it the other not a producing efficiency, but a prediction, of a way." "It is a great blessing to be able to talk an hour about nothing. The most important requisites for an extemporaneous preacher are did. And it may be added; let it be that the ignorance, impudence, and presumption." When origin of sin is a mystery. Then let it remain a a tippler asked him "to tell what he was to unmystery, and not be attempted to be cleared up derstand by the soul of man," he replied, "No, I can't tell a man that has n't got any." When a minister wrote to him -"I have read your sermon his own image a free moral agent, whose choice on the atonement and wept over it," he immediately sent back this answer: "I have read your letter and laughed at it." He said to a candidate, "Your sermon was too much like Seekonk plain, long and level." He asked a young preacher, "Do you ever mean to preach another sermon? You've preached about everything this morning." When a young man said, "I hope you were not wearied with the length of my sermon," he replied, "No, nor with the depth either." He published sixty or more single sermons and tracts. He published sermons at the ordinations of E. Dudley, C. Chaddock, E. Smith, C. Alexander, D. Avery, W. Harris, J. Tufts, J. Emerson, T. Williams, E. Whipple, G. Conant, Z. Whitmore, and C. Park; a sermon on the death of Washington and of many other persons; on receiving from Dr. Franklin books for Franklin library, 1787; election sermon, 1798; on the second century from the landing at Plymouth, 1820; sermons, 8vo., 1812; collection of sermons, 8vo., 1813; sermons, 8vo., 1815; sermons, 3 vols., 8vo., 1823. His works were published, edited by Dr. Ide, in 6 vols., 8vo., 1842. - Memoir Prefixed to Works; Punchard on Congregationalism, 276; Review of E.'s Theory.

> EMOTT, James, died at Poughkeepsie April 7, 1850, aged 80; a distinguished lawyer at New York, and a member of Congress from 1809 to 1813. He was judge of the common pleas and of the circuit court.

ENDECOTT, John, the first governor of Mas-

Ga pre

six

Th

fra

was thi

ful

Tis

pro

thi

Vii

tho

eel

fro

col

Br

cor

die

ing 10

Αυ

He

Be

pul

ica of

Sh

Bo

cia lat Fr lat in

sachusetts, died March 15, 1665, aged 75. He | Cork, and, being made bishop by the pope, arrived was born in Dorchester, England, in 1589, and married a relation of M. Cradock, the governor of the Massachusetts company in England, and brother-in-law of R. Ludlow, deputy governor. He was sent to this country by that company as their agent, to carry on the plantation at Naumkeag, or Salem, and arrived Sept. 6, 1628. It permanent town within the limits of the Massachusetts patent. He was a suitable person to be intrusted with the care of a new settlement in the wilderness, for he was hold, undaunted, sociable, and cheerful, familiar, or austere and distant, as occasion required. The company, in April, 1629, chose him the governor of " London's plantation;" but in August it was determined to transfer the charter and the government of the colony to New England, and John Winthrop, who arrived in the following year, was appointed governor. In 1636 Mr. Endecott was sent out on an expedition against the Indians on Block Island, and in the Pequot country. He continued at Salem till 1644, when he was elected governor of Massachusetts, and removed to Boston. He was also governor from 1649 to 1654, excepting in 1650, when Mr. Dudley was governor, and from 1655 to 1665. He was succeeded by Bellingham. He left two sons. He was a sincere and zealous Puritan, rigid in his principles, and severe in the execution of the laws against sectaries, or those who differed from the religion of Massachusetts. Two Episcopalians, who accused the members of the church of Salem of being Separatists, were sent back to England by his orders. He was determined to establish a reformed and a pure church. The Quakers and the Baptists had no occasion to remember him with affection. Popery, that, through the influence of Roger Williams, he cut out the cross from the military standard. He insisted at Salem, that the women should wear veils at church. In 1649, when he was governor, he entered into an association with the other magistrates again. long hair. As the practice of wearing it, "after the manner of ruffians and barbarous Indians, had begun to invade New England," they declared their detestation of the custom, "as a thing uncivil and unmanly, whereby men do deform themselves, and offend sober and modest men, and co corrupt good manners." In 1659, during his administration, four Quakers were put to death in Boston. - Neal's New England, I. 139, 361; Hutchinson, I. 8-17, 38, 235; Winthrop; Hist. Coll. vi. 245, 261; IX. 5; Holmes; Morton, 81, 188; Magnalia, 11, 18; N. E. Historical Register, July, 1847.

and South Carolina and Georgia, died at Charles- of his men. ton April 11, 1842, aged 55. He was born in at Charleston the last day of 1820. He established a theological seminary, and aided in the anti-duelling society. Returning from a visit to Rome, he contracted on the voyage the dysentery, of which he died. His works were published in 5 vols., 8vo., 1849. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit. II. 84.

ENGLISH, GEORGE B., an adventurer, the son was here that he laid the foundation of the first of Thomas English, of Boston, was graduated at Harvard college in 1807, and afterwards for a while studied theology. He then became an officer of marine in the navy. Embracing, as is said, Islamism, he entered the service of the Pasha of Egypt, and accompanied an expedition under Ismael to Upper Egypt. He died at Washington in Sept., 1828, aged 39. He published Grounds of Christianity examined, 12mo., 1813, which was answered by E. Everett and S. Cary; letter to Mr. Cary on his review; letter to Mr. Channing on his two sermons on infidelity, 1813; expedition to Dongola and Sennaar, 8vo., 1823.

ENGLISH, PHILIP, a wealthy merchant of Salem, died in 1734, aged 84. He came near to being a victim to the witcheraft delusion in 1692, Both he and his wife were accused and imprisoned, and from Salem prison were, by their friends, on some pretence, removed to Boston. On the day before that appointed for trial, they, being under bail, attended public worship, and heard Mr. Moody preach from the text, "If they persecute you in one city, fice to another," justifying a flight from outrage under the forms of justice. He visited them, and through his persuasion they fled at midnight to New York, and thus perhaps saved their lives. He ever acknowledged his obligations to the manly courage of Mr. Moody.

ENOS, Roger, lieut.-colonel, accompanied Arnold in his expedition to Quebec, as far as fifty opposed was he to everything which looked like miles up Dead river in Maine, when, by decision of a council of war, he returned with his division in consequence of the want of provisions; and thus, perhaps, the whole army was saved from destruction. - American Remembrancer, 1776.

EPENOWE, an Indian of Martha's Vineyard, was a victim, with twenty-five others, to the treachery of Capt. Thomas Hunt in 1614, who carried them to Malaga with the purpose of selling them as slaves. This villainy was retaliated. Epenowe was taken to England, and there contrived a method of regaining his native land, He invented the story of a mine of gold at Capapoick, or Capawock, now Martha's Vineyard, to which he was conveyed by Capt. Harley. When twenty canoes were around the ship, he plunged into the water, and, by the aid of his friends and their flight of arrows, he escaped. Epenowe, in 1619, with his countrymen, assaulted Capt. Der-ENGLAND, JOHN, Catholic bishop of North men, and inflicted many wounds, killing several

EPHRAIM, was an Indian preacher in 1698 at

e, arrived le estabd in the a visit to ysentery, lished in t. 11. 84. r, the son luated at ds for a e an offias is said, Pasha of under Isington in ounds of hich was letter to Channing chant of e near to in 1692. prisoned, riends, on n the day ng under card Mr. persecute stifying a of justice. sion they perhaps d his obloody.

anied Ar-

xpedition

ir as fifty decision s division ons; and ved from , 1776. Vineyard, , to the £14, who e of selletaliated. here conive land. at Capaeyard, to When plunged apt. Derz several a 1698 at ends and

enowe, in

Gayhead, Martha's Vineyard. With Abel, another preacher, he had the charge of two hundred and sixty souls or more, who were taught to read. These Indians were well clothed. They had a framed meeting-house. At the same time Japhet was a preacher at Chilmark to two hundred and thirty-one Indians, of whom sixty-four were in full communion; and there were preachers at Tisbury to seventy-two Indians; Job Russel preached at Edgartown to one hundred and thirty-six, and there were yet other congregations on the Vineyard.

EPPES, John W., died near Richmond in Virginia in Sept., 1823, aged 50. His wife, Maria, the daughter of Mr. Jefferson, died at Montiecllo in April, 1804. He was appointed senator of the United States in 1815, but he resigned from ill health.

ERVING, WILLIAM, a benefactor of Harvard college, was graduated in 1753, and quitted the British army, in which he was an officer, at the died at Roxbury May 27, 1791, aged 56, bequeathing to the college, in which he was educated, 1000 pounds toward establishing a professorship of chemistry and materia medica.

ERVING, JOHN, a merchant of Boston, died Aug. 20, 1786, aged 94. He came from Scotland. He was twenty years a member of the council. Being opposed to independence, he retired from public life at the Revolution. One daughter married Gov. Bowdoin, another Gov. Scott, of Dominica, and a third Dunean Stewart, who was collector of New London before the Revolution.

ERVING, SHIRLEY, Dr., died in Boston July 8, 1813, aged 54. He was the grandson of Gov. Shirley, the son of John E., of Boston. He settled as a physician in Portland, and was highly esteemed. In declining health he removed to Boston. — American Quarterly Register, 1840.

ERVING, GEORGE W., consul, died in New York in July, 1850. A native of Boston, the son of George E., a loyalist, he was educated at Oxford. Mr. Jefferson appointed him consul to London; thence he was sent to Denmark and Berlin, and then ambassador to Madrid.

ESCARBOT, MARC L', published Nova Francia, or an account of New France, as described in late voyages into the countries called by the Frenchmen La Cadie, 4to., London, 1654; translated from the French edition of 1612; the same in Purchas and Churchill.

ESTAING, CHARLES II., count de, commanded the French fleet sent to our aid in the Revolutionary war. He made an unsuccessful assault on Savannah Oct. 9, 1779, when Pulaski was mortally He afterwards captured Grenada. Being one of the assembly of notables in France, and incurring the suspicion of the dominant faction, he was guillotined at Paris April 29, 1793.

ESTABROOK, Joseph, minister of Concord, Mass., died in 1711, aged about 68. Born in Enfield, Middlesex, England, he came to this country in 1660, and graduated at Harvard in He was ordained colleague with Mr. Bulkley in 1667. His son Benjamin, first minister of Lexington, a graduate of 1690, died in 1697, leaving a widow Abigail, daughter of Rev. S. Willard. His son Samuel, minister of Canterbury, Conn., a graduate of Harvard of 1696, ordained 1711, died in 1727, aged 52.

ESTABROOK, Joseph, minister of Athol, Mass., died May 18, 1830, aged 71. A descendant of Rev. Joseph E, of Concord, he was born in Lexington, and he fought in the battle of Lexington. He was graduated at Harvard in 1782.

In 1787 he was ordained.

ESTEN, Joseph, died in Burrillville, R.I., Sept. 20, 1851, aged 99 years and 9 months. His brother John, of B., died Sept. 1, 1851, aged 90.

EUSTACE, JOHN SKEY, a brave officer in the commencement of the American Revolution. He American war, died at Newburgh Aug. 25, 1805, aged 45. He entered into the service of his country not long after the commencement of the Revolution, and continued one of her active defenders till the conclusion of the contest. He served for some time as aid-de-eamp to General Lee, and afterwards as an aid-de-camp to General Greene. When the war was ended, he retired to Georgia, and was there admitted to the bar, as an advocate. In that State he received the appointment of adjutant-general. In the year 1794, as he was fond of military life, he went to France, and there received the appointment of a brigadier-general, and was afterwards promoted and made a major-general. In that capacity he served the French nation for some time. He commanded in 1797 a division of the French army in Flanders. In 1800 he returned again to his native country, and resided in Orange county, New York, where he led a retired, studious life till his death. He devoted to literature all the time which the state of his health would permit. - New York Spectator, Sept. 4, 1805.

EUSTIS, ABRAHAM, brigadier-general, died at Portland Jan. 27, 1843, aged 57. He studied law, but early entered the army, and served honorably thirty-five years.

EUSTIS, WILLIAM, M. D., governor of Massasachusetts, died in Boston Feb. 6, 1825, aged 71. He was the son of Benjamin Eustis and was born at Cambridge June 10, 1753. After graduating at Harvard college in 1772, he studied physic with Dr. Joseph Warren. At the beginning of the war he was appointed surgeon of a regiment, and afterwards hospital surgeon. In 1777 and during most of the war he occupied as a hospital the spacious house of Col. Robinson, a royalist, on the east side of the Hudson, opposite to West Point. In the same house Arnold had his headquarters. At the termination of the war he con- 'cal, historical, political, philosophical, and mechanmenced the practice of his profession in Buston. In 1800 he was elected a member of congress. By Mr. Madison in 1809 he was appointed secrelate war the army of Hull was surrendered, when he resigned. In 1815 he was sent ambassador to Holland. After his return he was a member of congress in 1821, and f four successive sessions. After the resignation of Gov. Brooks, he was eliosen governor in 1823, and died after a short illness. His wife, who survived him, was Caroline, the daughter of Woodbury Langdon of New Hampshire. By his direction he was buried by the side of his mother. His successor was Levi Lincoln. - Holmes, H. 515; Thacker.

EVANS, NATHANIEL, a minister in New Jersey, and a poet, was born in Philadelphia June 8. 1742, and was graduated at the college in that city in 1765, having gained a high reputation for his genius. He immediately afterwards embarked in North America. It comprehended all New for England, recommended to the society for propagating the gospel, and was ordained by the bishop of Loudon. He arraved at Philadelphia on his return, Dec. 26, 176, and entered soon upon the business of his mission at Cloucester county in New Jersey. His season of labor was short, for it pleased God to remove bis from this present life Oct. 29, 1767, aged 25. He was remarkable for the excellence of his temper, the correctness of his morals, and the soundness of his doctrines. He published a short account of T. Godfrey, prefixed to Godfrey's poems, and an elegy to his memory. After his death a selection of his writings was published, entitled, poems on several occasions, with some other compositions, 1772. Annexed to this volume is one of his sermons. - American Museum, VII. 405; Preface to the above Poems.

EVANS, Lewis, eminent for his acquaintance with American geography, was a surveyor in Pennsylvania, and died in June, 1756. He made many journeys into the neighboring colonies, and had been frequently employed in surveying lands, purchased of the natives. He had collected a great store of materials from other sources. From these he compiled a map of the middle colonies, and of the adjacent country of the Indians, lying northward and westward. The first edition of it was published in 1749, and a second in 1755, accompanied with an explanatory pamphlet. Some expressions, countenancing the title. of France to fort Frontenac, brought him into a controversy with a writer in Gaines' New York Mercury in 1756. In the course of the same year he wrote a full and elaborate reply to this and other charges against him, and caused the pamphlet to be published in London. They were both ical essays ; Nos. 1, and 2. The first edition of this map was chiefly limited to New York, New Jersey, and Delaware; the second was much tary of war, and continued in office until in the cularged, being made a general map of the middle British colonies, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, and Rhode Island, and the country of the confederate Indians. It was inscribed to Mr. Pownall, in consideration, as a writer of that period asserts, of being promised by him the office of surveyor-general of New Jersey, and to gratify whom he published also in 1755 a panphlet against Gov. Shirley. He belonged to the cabal in favor of W. Johnson. He was imprisoned for a libel on Gov. Morris. Afterwards in 1776, on the breaking out of the war between Great Britain and her colonies, Mr. Pownall himself gave a new edition of Evans' man, with large additions, entitled a map of the British colonies England and the bordering parts of Canada.

EVANS, ISBAEL, minister of Concord, N. H., died March 9, 1807, aged 59. He was of Welsh descent, born in Pennsylvania, where his father and grandfather were ministers. He graduated at Princeton college in 1772, in a class of twentytwo, of whom fifteen were ministers. Being ordained in 1776 at Philadelphia as a chaplain, he served during the war in the New Hampshire brigade. He accompanied Sullivan against the Indians; and was at the capture of Burgoyne and surrender of Cornwallis. July 1, 1789, he was installed as the successor of Mr. Walker at Concord; but was dismissed at his request July 1797. His feelings and habits, brought from the army, were not adapted to make him useful as a minister. Humility was no trait in his character. His patriotic sermons during the war were acceptable to the army; he published a sermon after the Indian expedition; oration on the death of Gen. Poor, 1780; on the surrender of the British army at York; on the thanksgiving for independence, Dec. 11, 1783; at the election, 1791. --Bouton's Centen. Disc. 33; Moore's Ann. Con-

EVANS, OLIVER, a mechanic, was a descendant of Evan Evans, D. D., the first Episcopal minister of Philadelphia, who died in 1728. He made various improvements in the arts. His iron foundry, steam factory, and steam-mill were located at Philadelphia. He died at New York April 15, 1819, aged 64. He published the young engineer's guide, 1805; miller's and millwright's guide, twenty-five plates, 1807; first edit. 1795.

EVANS, CADWALLADER, Dr., died at Philadelphia in 1773, aged 57. He was born in Philadelphia, of Welch descent, and studied under Dr. offered to the public under the title of geographi- Bond and in Edinburgh. He was long a physician of the hospital. — Thacher's Medical Biography.

EVANS, JOHN, colonel, died near Monongalia, Va., in 1835, aged 97. He commanded a regiment in the war of the Revolution, and was a member of the convention to form a constitution for Virginia.

EVANS, Morris, died at Raleigh, N. C., Aug.

25, 1834, aged 105. EVARTS, JEREMIAH, secretary of the American board of commissioners for foreign missions, died in Charleston, South Carolina, May 10, 1831, aged 50. He was probably a descendant of John Evarts, who lived in Guilford, Conn., in 1650, and was born in Sunderland, Vermont, Feb. 3, 1781. In a few years his parents removed to the town of Georgia in the northern part of Vermont. In 1798 he was placed under the instruction of Rev. John Eliot of E. Guilford, and was graduated at Yale college in 1802. During a revival of religion in the college in the beginning of this year, he cherished the hope, that his soul was renewed by the Spirit of God, and became a member of the college church. From 1803 to 1804 he was the instructor of the academy at Peacham, and afterwards studied law with Judge Chauncy of New Haven, in which city he commenced the practice of the law in July, 1806. In May, 1810, he removed to Charlestown, near Boston, in order to edit the Panoplist, a religious and literary monthly publication, which had been conducted by Dr. Morse and others four or five years; and he superintended that work, writing for it a large proportion of the original articles, till the close of 1820, when it was discontinued, and the Missionary Herald was published in its stead, under the authority of the American Board. This work was also committed to him. He had been chosen treasurer of the Board in 1812 and the next year one of the prudential committee. He served as treasurer till 1822. In 1821 he succeeded Dr. Woreester as corresponding secretary, in which office he continued nearly ten years till his death. Thus he toiled ten years as the editor of the Panoplist, ten years as the treasurer of the Board of missions, and ten years as corresponding secretary. In feeble health he took a voyage to the island of Cuba in Feb., 1831, and thence in April to Charleston, where in the house of Rev. Dr. Palmer he died. He left several children: his widow, Mehitable, the daughter of Roger Sherman of New Haven, died in 1851. While Mr. Evarts was on his voyage to Cuba, fully aware of the uncertain continuance of his life, he wrote as follows: "Here, in this sea, 1 consecrate myself to God as my chief good: to him, as my heavenly Nather, infinitely kind and tender of his children; to him, as my kind and merciful Redeemer, by whose blood and merits 1821, aged 104.

alone I do hope for salvation; to him, as the beneffcent renewer and sanctifier of the saved. I implore the forgiveness of my numerous and aggravated transgressions; and I ask, that my remaining time and strength may be employed for the glory of God, my portion, and for the good of his creatures." In his last hours his hope of forgiveness and salvation was undiminished and unshaken. He said, "I wish in these dying words to recognize the great Redeemer as the Saviour from sin and hell. And I recognize the Great Spirit of God as the renovator of God's elect." When it was said to him, "You will soon see Jesus;" he exclaimed, "Wonderful, wonderful, wonderful glory! We cannot understand we cannot comprehend - wonderful glory! I will praise, I will praise him! Jesus reigns." This was no feverish excitement, nor dream of enthusiasm; but the vision of a dving believer. Mr. Evarts' character has been delineated in printed discourses by Dr. Woods and Dr. Spring. In the management of the important interests, with which he was intrusted, he manifested a serupulous integrity. He combined with a sound judgment the ardor requisite for the accomplishment of great designs. His piety and extensive knowledge of theology and his accordance with the settled orthodoxy of New England secured to him the confidence of the churches in a degree seldom obtained by one, not especially trained for the ministry of the gospel. Free from self-sufficiency and pride, he sought the counsel of his associates; and especially he with habitual devotion sought the guidance and blessing of God. Though humble, he was yet resolute and determined and persevering. Having enlarged views and a vigorous mind, he was not disheartened by difficul-ties and opposition. Feeble in health, with a thin, slender frame, and destitute of oratorical action, he yet in his public addresses arrested attention and produced effect, for his conceptions were clear and his language perspicuous and forcible. His industry was untiring. Besides his 'abors in editing the Panoplist, he wrote the ten annual reports of the American Board from 1821 to 1830, the last of which contains a most weighty and valuable discussion on the future growth of this country and the means of preserving it from ruin. His essays, twenty-four in number, on the rights and claims of the Indians, under the signature of William Penn, were published in 1829; and he subsequently wrote various other pieces on the same subject, one of which is an article in the North American Review. He edited the volume of speeches on the Indian bill and wrote the introduction. - Woods' and Spring's Sermons; Miss. Herald, Oct. Nov. 1831.

EVE, ADAM, died in Pennsylvania Oct. 27,

4

ged to the as imprisevards in r between wnall himwith large sh colonies I all New ey, and to 55 a pam-

mada.
rd, N. H., of Melsh
his father graduated of twentys. Being haplain, he Hampshire against the Burgoyne
, 1789, ho
Walker at

equest July
it from the useful as a character.
vere acceprmon after e death of the British prindepen-

a, 1791. —

Ann. Con-

a descend-Episcopal 1728. He His iron Il were lo-New York the young nillwright's dit. 1795. t Philadelin Philadelunder Dr. ng a physi-

EVEREST, Solomon, a physician, died at Canton, Conn., in July, 1822. He bequeathed 10,000 dollars to religious and missionary purposes.

EVERETT, OLIVER, minister in Boston, died at Dorchester Nov. 19, 1802, aged 49. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1779, and was ordained pastor of the church in Summer street, as successor of Mr. Howe, Jan. 2, 1782. After a ministry of ten years, and after having acquired a high reputation for the extraordinary powers of his mind, the state of his health induced him to ask a dismission from his people in 1792. He was succeeded in 1794 by Mr. Kirkland. Afterwards he was appointed a judge of the court of common pleas for the county of Norfolk. He was the father of Alex. II, and Edward Everett.

EVERETT, DAVID, editor of the Boston Patriot, dled Dec. 21, 1813, aged 44. He was born at Princeton, Mass., and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1795, and engaged in the profession of the law in Boston. In 1809 he commenced the Patriot, in which John Adams in a series of letters gave a history of his political career. In 1811 he was appointed register of probate; but a revolution in politics deprived him of his office. In Sept., 1812, he commenced the Pilot, a paper devoted to De Witt Clinton. Removing soon to Marietta to edit a paper, he died there. published common sense in dishabille, or the farmer's monitor, 1799; Daranzel, a tragedy, 1800; essay on the rights and duties of nations; three orations and addresses; Junius Americanus in Boston Gazette in defence of J. Adams. -Specimens American Poetry, 11. 113.

EVERETT, Moses, minister of Dorchester, died March 25, 1813, aged 62. Born in Dedham, he graduated at Harvard in 1771, and in 1774 was ordained the minister of Dedham, in which office he continued eighteen years till 1792. He was appointed in 1808 a judge of the court of common pleas in the place of his brother Ollver. He published a sermon to young men, 1778; one at the ordination of his brother.

EVERETT, Noble, minister of Wareham, Mass., died Dec., 30, 1819, aged 72, in the 38th year of his ministry. Born in Woodbury, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1775. He was a laborious, faithful, successful pastor. In revivals he was unwearied in his toils. His predecessors were R. Thacher and J. Cotton.

EVERETT, ALEXANDER 11., died at Canton, China, June 28, 1847, aged 57. He was the son of Rev. Oliver E., and graduated in 1806. After being a teacher in Exeter academy, he went to Russia with Mr. Adams as secretary of legation, by whom he was appointed minister to Spain in 1825. After his return he was the editor of the North American Review. Connecting himself with the democratic party, Mr. Polk sent him as commissioner to China. He published Europe, 1822; America, 1827; oration, 1830; address to horticultural society, 1833.

EVERETT, Horace, L.L. D., died at Windsor, Vt., Jan. 30, 1851, aged 72. He was a member of congress fourteen years from 1829 to 1843, and honorably distinguished himself by his zeal to do justico to the Indians.

EVERETT, SERAPHINA SARAH, wife of Joel S. Everett, missionary at Constantinople, died in great peace Dec. 27, 1854; she said, "I wish to be near and like Jesus." She had the charge of the female boarding school of thirty-five pupils; and was one of the most accomplished of the ladies in the eastern mission. The hymn, "Asleep in Jesus," was sung, when she was dying; her husband, when dying, was asked by those around his bed, what they should sing, and he replied, "Asleep in Jesus.

EVERETT, JOEL S., a missionary, died at Hebek, near Constantinople, March 7, 1856, aged 42. He was a graduate of Amherst college in 1840. To Dr. Hamlin he said, that for a year past he had "a strong desire to depart to the blessed company on high; also, we have travelled together for eleven years, and now we must part for a little time. Get many souls to Christ. O, glorious God! O, glorious Redeemer! O, blessed company! and I am going to join it!" He was an excellent, faithful missionary. He had the charge of the boarding school for girls, and of the colporteur and Bible distribution work. He left four children.

EWING, JOHN, D. D., minister in Philadelphia, and provost of the college in that city, died Sept. 8, 1802, aged 70. He was born in East Nottingham, Md., June 22, 1732. His classical studies were begun under Dr. Allison, with whom, after finishing the usual studies, he remained three years as a tutor. He was graduated at Princeton college, 1752, and afterward accepted the appointment of tutor. Having resolved by Divine permission to become a minister of the gospel, he pursued his theological studies under the direction of Dr. Allison. At the age of twenty-six he was employed as the instructor of the philosophical classes in the college of Philadelphia, during the absence of Dr. Smith, who was then provost. In 1758 he accepted an unanimous call from the first Presbyterian church in Philadelphia, of which he continued a minister till his death. In 1773 he was sent to Great Britain to solicit benefactions for the academy of Newark in Delaware. He was everywhere received with respect. Among his acquaintances and friends were Dr. Robertston, Dr. Webster, Mr. Balfour, and Dr. Blacklock. In 1775 he returned to America, as the Revolution was commeneing, notwithstanding the most tempting offers which were made to induce him to remain

indsor, nember 1843. his zeal

Europe,

ress to

Joel S. died in wish to arge of pupils; of the Asleep ng; her y those and he died at 56, aged ollege in r a year t to the travelled nist part rist. O, er! O, join it!" He had irls, and ork. He Philadelcity, died in East classleal on, with s, he res graduifterward aving reminister al studies the age nstructor ollege of r. Smith, cepted an ın ehurch minister to Great ademy of where reaintances Webster, 1775 he was comtempting to remain

the university of Pennsylvania. To this station, which he held till his death, he brought large stores of information, and a paternal tenderness toward the youth who were committed to his care. He had been a minister more than forty years. During his last sickness no murmur escaped his lips, and he was patient and resigned to the will of his heavenly Father. His colleague, Dr. Linn, survived him. In all the branches of science and literature, usually taught in colleges, he was uncommonly accurate, and in his mode of communicating information on the most abstruse and intricate subjects, he was seldom surpassed. His qualifications as a minister of the gospel were many and eminent. Science was with him a handmaid to religion. He was mighty in the Scriptures. His own investigation confirmed him in his belief of the doctrines of grace, which he endeavored to impress upon the hearts of his people. His sermons were written with great accuracy and care, in a style always perspicuous, and generally sober and temperate, though sometimes ornamented. Mere declamation was never heard from his lips. His deportment was easy and affable. He had a freeness of salutation, which sometimes surprised the stranger; but which was admired by those who knew him, as it proceeded from an open and honest heart. His talents in conversation were remarkably entertaining. He could unbend from severer studies and become the companion of innocent mirth, and of happy gayety. Perfectly free from pedantry, he could accommodate himself to the most unlettered. His talent of narration was universally admired. An extract of his sermon on the death of Dr. Allison, is in the assembly's magazine. He published also a sermon on the death of George Bryan, 1791; the design of Christ coming into the world, in the American preacher, II.; and several communications in the transactions of the American philosophical society. His lectures on natural philosophy were published, 1809. - Linn's Funeral Sermon ; Assembly's Miss. Mag. 1. 409,

EWING, GEORGE, died in Indiana about the year 1830, the father of Thomas Ewing. He was a native of Salem county, N. J.; an officer in the war; a pioneer in the west, one of the founders of Amestown, Ohio, a rich town, so named by R. Putnam in honor of Fisher Ames. - Hildreth.

414, 458; Miller, II. 372; Holmes, II. 424.

EWING, CHARLES, LL. D., chief justice of New Jersey, died Aug. 5, 1832, aged about 54. He graduated at Princeton in 1798.

FAIRBANKS, DRURY, minister of Littleton, N. H., died in Jan., 1853, aged 80. He graduated at Brown university in 1797.

FAIRBANKS, Jason, the murderer of Eliza-

in England. In 1779 he was elected provost of out manifesting any repentance. At the gallows fifteen minutes were allowed him to seek finally, if he pleased, the Divine mercy. At the end of one minute he dropped his handkerehier as a signal, and was swang off, and justice was edministered. No blind and fulsely alleged humanity then we up against God's law, - "The murderer shall surely be put to death." - Numbers 35: 16. No deluded legistator then thought of enacting, that the murderer should be imprisoned for life, or imprisoned for a year under the pretence that he might have time to repent. God's justice is the only safety of human society.

FAIRFAX, THOMAS, baron of Cameron, proprietor of the northern neck, between the Potomae and Rappahannock, in Virginia, died at Greenway court-house, Frederic county, Dec. 12, 1781, aged 08. His wife was the daughter of Gov. Culpeper, and heir of the Virginia estate.

FAIRFAX, BRIAN, minister of the Episcopal church in Alexandria, Va., died at Mount Eagle, neat Cameron, Aug. 7, 1852, aged 70. He was a man of upright principles, of unfeigned piety, and of simple manners. His long illness he bore with resignation. He published a sermon on the forgetfulness of our sins, in American Preacher, FAIRFIELD, JOHN, governor of Maine, died at Washington Dec. 24, 1847, aged 49. He lived in Saco. He was governor in 1842; senator of the United States in 1843, and re-elected in 1845.

FAIRMAN, GIDEON, colonel, an engraver, died at Philadelphia March 18, 1827, aged 51. Ho and the late George Murray contributed more than any other persons to elevate the beautiful art of engraving in this country. Richard Fairman, also an engraver, died at Philadelphia in Dec., 1821, aged 34.

FAIRMAN, DAVID, an engraver, died suddenly at Philadelphia Aug. 19, 1815, aged 33. He was amiable and much respected.

FAITOUTE, GEORGE, minister of Jamaica, L. I., died in 1815, aged about 60. He was a graduate of Princeton in 1776, and was respected for his learning and piety.

FALES, DAVID, died at Thomaston, Me., April 4, 1822, aged 89. He was a native of Bradford, Mass., and lived in Dedham before he removed to Maine, where he was employed as a surveyor by the proprietors of the Waldo patent. He was also useful as a physician. By each of two wives he had twelve children; seventeen survived him.

FALES, STEPHEN, a lawyer in Cincinnati, died in 1854, aged 64. Born in Boston, he was a graduate of Harvard in 1810, and a tutor at Bowdoin in 1811. He had the reputation of a scholar.

FANEUIL, PETER, founder of Faneuil Hall in Boston, died March 3, 1743. He possessed a both Fales at Dedham, Mass., was executed Sept. large estate, and employed it in doing good. 10, 1801. He was a young man, and died with- While his charities were extensive, his liberal spirit induced him to present to the town of Boston a stately edifice called Fancuil Hall, for the accommodation of the inhabitants at their public meetings.

FANNING, EDMUND, LL. D., died in London in 1818, aged about 80. He was native of Conneeticut, and graduated at Yale college in 1757. Settled as a lawyer at Hillsborough, N. C., he was a tory in the Revolution, and was afterwards lieutenant-governor of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward's Island.

FANNING, A. C. W., colonel, died at Cincinnati Aug. 18, 1846, aged 58; a native of Massachusetts. He was of the artillery. Entering the army in 1812, he was in various battles, and served in the Seminole wars.

FARLEY, MICHAEL, general, died at Ipswich in 1789, aged 70. He sustained various public offices, was sheriff and treasurer of Essex, and delegate to the State convention for adopting the constitution.

FARMER, John, died at Concord, N. H., Aug. 13, 1838, aged 49. Born at Chelmsford, he was in 1821 an apothecary at Concord, after having been ten years a teacher at Amherst, N. II. He was a most industrious laborer in researches relating to American history and biography, and his publications were numerous and useful. He published historical sketches of Amherst, 1820; memoir of Billerica; new military guide, 1822; a gazetteer of New Hampshire, with Jacob B. Moore, 1823; genealogical register of the first settlers of New England, 1829; an enlarged edition of which is preparing by James Savage; communications to several historical societies, and to the American quarterly register. He compiled also, for sixteen years, the New Hampshire register, and published memorial of the graduates of Harvard; collections with Mr. Moore in 3 vols., 1822-1824; and also an edition with notes of Belknap's New Hampshire.

FARNSWORTH, RUTH, Mrs., died at Conway, Mass., in 1815, aged 100.

FARNSWORTH, JAMES D., minister of Bridgewater, Mass., died Nov. 5, 1855, aged 62. He graduated at Harvard in 1818.

FARQHUAR, JANE, died March 20, 1760. aged 36. She was the daughter of lieut.-governor Colden, of New York, and married Dr. William F. Skilful in botany, she was the correspondent of Linneus, who, in compliment to her, named a plant Coldenia.

FARR, JONATHAN, Unitarian minister of Harvard, Mass., died June 12, 1845, aged about 47. He graduated at Harvard college in 1818, and was the author of several little works on practical religion.

FARRAND, DANIEL, minister of Canaan, Conn., becoming pious in the revivals after 1740, several all the alleviation which could be ministered by ministers assisted in his education. He was graduated at Princeton in 1750, and ordained Aug. 12, 1752, as the successor of Elijah Webster. He was a man of science, and of a vigorous mind; a zealous preacher. He attended more than one hundred ecclesiastical councils. In his death he had an exulting hope of eternal life. His son, Judge F., lived in Burlington, Vt. He published a sermon on the death of Elizabeth, wife of Rev. Jonathan Lee, 1762.

FARRAR, STEPHEN, first minister of New Ipswich, N. H., died June 23, 1809, aged 70. Born in Lincoln, Mass., he was the son of Deacon Samuel, who died in 1783, aged 75. He was the brother of Judge Timothy, and brother of Deacon Samuel the second, of Lincoln, who died in 1829, aged 04. His daughter, Lydia, married Rev. Warren Pierce. He graduated at Harvard in 1755, and was ordained in 1760. He was a devoted and faithful minister. - Payson's Funeral Sermon.

FARRAR, TIMOTHY, judge, the oldest graduate of Harvard, died at Hollis, N. H., Feb. 21. 1849, aged 101 years and nearly eight months. He was the son of Deacon Samuel F., was born at Lincoln June 28, 1747, and graduated at Harvard 1767. He lived in New Ipswich, N. H. From 1775 to 1816 he was judge of the courts, his appointment to the office of chief justice of the superior court being dated Feb. 22, 1802. His portrait is in the historical register for October, 1852. He was buried at Mount Auburn.

h

a

tl

e

FARRAR, PHEBE, wife of Samuel Farrar, died at Andover, Mass., Jan. 22, 1848, aged 79. Born in Elizabethtown, N. J., the daughter of Timothy Edwards, her first husband was Rev. A. Hooker. She married in 1814 Mr. F., the treasurer of the theological seminary at Andover, who still lives at a very advanced age. Her views of religious doctrine accorded with those of her grandfather, President Edwards; and she died in Christian peace. Her three children were Dr. E. W. Hooker, and the wives of Dr. Cornelius and of Rev. Solomon Peck. - Wood's Sermon.

FARRAR, John, LL. D., professor of natural philosophy and mathematics in Harvard college, died March 8, 1853, aged 73. He was the son of Samuel Farrar, of Lincoln, and graduated in 1803. His father died Sept. 19, 1829, aged 92, and his grandfather, Samuel, died April 17, 1783, aged 74; both were deacons of the church. The father of the latter was George, who first settled on the farm at Lincoln, being the son of Jacob. who came from England to Lancaster about 1642, and was killed in Philip's war in 1675. Mr. Farrar was chosen professor in 1807, and remained in office till 1836. He was a most amiable, social, and excellent man, endeared to his friends. He died in 1803, aged 83. Born in New Milford, and had years of siekness and severe suffering, with as graded Aug. daughter of Rev. Dr. Buckminster; his second Vebster. wife, who survived him, was Eliza, the daughter vigorous of Henjamin Roach, of New Bedford. His sister d mere Rebecca married Rev. Dr. Jonathan French, of In his North Hampton, N. H. Timothy Farrar, who died aged 101, was his uncle. He published vanal life. Vt. He rious papers in the memoirs of the American lizabeth, academy, of which he was secretary; also a series of learned works in his departments of science, of New for the classes in college.

FARRAR, MARY, widow of Rev. Joseph F., died in Petersham, Mass., July 24, 1855, aged 100. FASSITT, THOMAS, Mrs., of Philadelphia, died in 1853, bequeathing many thousands of dollars to various benevolent institutions.

FAUNCE, THOMAS, an elder of the Plymouth church in 1623, died Feb. 27, 1746, aged 99. His daughter, Patience Kempton, died in 1779, aged 105 years and six months.

FAUGERES, MARGARETTA V., distinguished for her literary accomplishments, died Jan. 9, 1801, aged 29. She was the daughter of Ann Eliza Bleecker, and was born about the year 1771. The first years of her life were spent with her parents, in the retired village of Tomhanic, about eighteen miles above Albany. Here through the instructions of her mother, her mind was much cultivated, but the loss of this excellent parent at an age, when her counsels were of the utmost importance, was irreparable. Mr. Bleceker after the termination of the war removed to New York, and as his daughter grew up, saw her engaging in her manners, lively and witty, of an equal and sweet temper, and diffusing cheerfulness around her. Of her admirers she placed her affections upon one of a dissipated character, and, notwichstanding the most earnest remonstrances of her father, she in 1792 married Peter Faugeres, a physician in New York. It was not long, before she perceived the folly of having been governed by passion rather than by reason; and her disregard of paternal advice, and preference of external accomplishments to correct morals and the virtues of the heart, overwhelmed her with trouble. In three or four years the ample fortune, which she had brought to her husband, was entirely expended. Before the death of her father in 1795 his affections shielded her from many evils; but in the summer of 1796 she was glad to procure a residence in a garret with the author of her woes and one child. Mr. Faugeres fell a victim to the yellow fever in the autumn of 1798, and she soon afterwards engaged as an assistant in an academy for young ladies at New Brunswick. For this station she was peculithe education of the children of several families. of Berkshire.

affection. His first wife was Lucy Maria, the Her declining health having rendered her incapade of this employment, she was received by a and in New York, whose attentions were peenliarly grateful, as she was sinking into the grave. She was resigned to the will of God, and, cheered by the truths of religion, she died in peace. She had a taste for poetry, and many of the productions of her pen were published in the New York magazine and the American museum. In 1793 she published, prefixed to the works of Mrs. Bleecker, her mother, memoirs of her life; and several of her own essays were annexed to the volume. She published in 1795 or 1796 Belisarius, a tragedy.

FAUQUIER, FRANCIS, governor of Virginia from 1758 to 1767, succeeded Dinwiddie, and was succeeded by Botetourt. He was well educated; had fine talents; sustained an excellent character; and proved himself a friend of religion, sciency, and liberty. His administration was very popular. He died March 3, 1768. - Lempr.

FAY, DAVID, judge, died at Bennington in June, 1827, aged 66. He was engaged in the battle of Bennington and was among the first to mount the Hessian breastwork. He had been adjutant-general, attorney for the United States, and judge of the supreme court of Vermont, and judge of probate.

FAY, SAMUEL P. P., judge, died at Cambridge May 18, 1856, aged 78, a graduate of 1798. He was a captain in the army in 1799; then a lawyer; and the judge of probate nearly thirty-five years. - Boston Advertiser, July 16, 1856.

FEARING, PAUL, judge, died Aug. 21, 1822, aged 59, of an epidemic fever: his wife died the same day. Born in Wareham, Mass., he graduated in 1785 at Cambridge. In danger of losing his degree, Joseph Barrell lent him money to pay the fee. He studied law with Mr. Swift of Windham. In 1788 he emigrated to Ohio. He celebrated the fourth of July at the mouth of the Muskingum: Gen. Varnum delivered the oration; guns were fired from fort Harmer. He heard the first sermon in the Northwest Territory, July 20, by Mr. Breck from Massachusetts. He and Mr. Meigs were the first lawyers. In 1801 he was a delegate to congress. In 1810 he was judge of the common pleas. On his farm below the Muskingum he raised the Merino sheep. - Hildreth's Bio. Memoirs.

FELLOWS, John, brigadier-general, a soldier of the Revolution, died Aug. 1, 1808, aged 73. He was born at Pemfret, Conn., and resided at Sheffield, Mass. He commanded, in 1775, one of the two regiments of minute-men, constituted by the patriotic citizens of Berkshire, and after the arly qualified by the variety of her talents and battle of Lexington marched to the neighborhood the sweetness of her temper. In about a year of Boston; John Patterson commanded the other she removed to Brooklyn, where she undertook regiment. He was for several years high sheriff religious ndfather, Christian E. W. s and of f natural l college. he son of uated in aged 92. 17, 1783, ch. The t settled of Jacob. out 1642, Mr. Farremained le, social,

ids. He

ing, with tered by ged 70.

Deacon

was the

of Dea-

died in married

Harvard

e was a m's Fu-

st grad-

Feb. 21,

months.

was born

at Ilar-

h, N. II.

e courts,

ustice of

2, 1802.

for Octo-

). Born

Timothy

Hooker.

er of the

still lives

burn. rar, died

FELLOWS, John, colonel, died in New York | joined the British in the war and never returned Jan. 3, 1844, aged 84. He was born in Sheffield, Mass., and was reputed to be a follower of Thomas Paine. He published works on the authorship of Junius, on free-masoury, and on the life of Putnam.

FENNELL, JAMES, a theatrical performer, was born in London in 1766, and destined for the church. In 1703 he came to this country, and acquired fame as an actor. At Boston he taught reading and elecution. Like Cooke, he died a drunkard, at Philadelphia, in June, 1816. He published an apology for his life, 2 vols. 1814.

FENNER, ARTHUR, governor of Rhode Island, succeeded Mr. Collins in 1789 and was succeeded by James' Fenner in 1807. He was the son of Arthur Fenner, and died at Providence Oct. 15, 1805, aged 60.

FENNER, JAMES, LL. D., died in Providence April 17, 1846, aged 76. He was a graduate of Hrown university in 1789. He was a senator of the United States; also, governor fourteen years, and for fifty connected with the public affairs of Rhode Island. He was firm, indomitable, patriotic, and faithful.

FENWICK, GEORGE, proprietor of a part of Connecticut, died in 1657. He came to this country in 1636, having purchased the plantation of Saybrook fort, and was "a good encourager to the church of Christ at Hartford." He returned arrived at New Haven July 15, 1639, with his lady and family, and commenced the settlement at Saybrook, so called in remembrance of Lords Say and Brook, who with others claimed the territory by grant of Robert, Earl of Warwick. Mr. Fenwick was their agent. He sold his rights to the Connecticut government Dec. 5, 1644, and it was stipulated, that he should receive for ten years a old patent. His wife died at Saybrook, where is effaced. - Dwight, II. 519.

FENWICK, E., D. D., Catholic bishop, died at Cincinnati Sept. 25, 1832.

FENWICK, BENEDICT, a Catholic bishop, died in Boston Aug. 11, 1846, aged 64. A Jesuit, he became president of Georgetown college; thence he went to Boston, where he was bishop twentyone years. At first there were only two churches churches and sixty priests. He was regarded as for Jefferson and Madison as president. a learned man and powerful preacher.

aged 61. She was the daughter of Dr. Thomas tinguished as a lawyer, but deafness compelled Graham or Graeme of Philadelphia, by Anne, him to reliuquish the profession. He then bedaughter of Gov. Keith. She was well educated, came skilled in mineralogy and natural history, and married II. II. Ferguson, a Scotchman, who to which he was devoted.

to his wife. She enjoyed the friendship of meny eminent men. Through her Dr. Duché sort ha letter to Washington, proposing his resignation of the command of the army. She lived on a farm of hers in Montgomery county. Her literary reputation was high. The whole of the Bible was by her transcribed. She transleded Telemachus into verse.

0

aı

of

ac

re

11 1

ni

at nt

cl

tie

te

ťo

ol

18

ni

H

P

11 Α

of

li

11

ol

11 a hi

h

ľ

h

la

Т

r

re

ci

h

FERRIS, DAVID, minister of Newburgh, Ohio, died Aug. 19, 1849, aged 73.

FERRY, RACHEL, Mrs., died in Norfolk, Conn., in 1810, aged 101. She died in the Christian faith. At the age of 100 she heard a century sermon, then retaining her faculties.

FESSENDEN, THOMAS, minister of Walpole, N. II., a descendant, as others of the name are, of Nicholas F, of Cambridge, graduated in 1758 and died May, 1813, aged 74, in the forty-seventh of his ministry. He published two sermons; a theoretic explanation of the science of sanctity, 8vo. 1804; and the Boston self-styled gentlemen reviewers reviewed, 1806.

FESSENDEN, THOMAS GREEN, died at Hoston Nov. 11, 1837, of apoplexy, aged about 60. Horn in Walpole, N. II., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1796, and devoted himself to various literary labors. He published a satirical poem entitled terrible tractoration, or democracy unveiled, 1805; original poems, 1806; register of arts, 1808; to England; but came again to this country and the New England Farmer, 1822; essay on the law of patents; address on temperance, 1831; new American gardener, 1832.

FEW, WILLIAM, colonel, a patriot of the Revolution, died in July, 1828, aged 81. He was born in Maryland in 1748, and, residing in Georgia, was in 1796 a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the State. He soon distinguished himself in several actions with certain duty on exports from the mouth of the British and Indians. Augusta being recovriver. The colony paid him 1600 pounds for the ered, he in 1780 was sent a delegate to congress, and remained in that body till the peace; and was her monument remains to the present day near again appointed in 1786. The next year he asthe fort, but, it being of sandstone, the inscription sisted in forming the national constitution. He resided in his last years in the city of New York, and died at Fishkill.

FIELD, RICHARD, a physician and senior editor of the Petersburg Intelligencer, studied at Edinburgh. He died in Brunswick County, Va., May 23, 1829, aged 61. As a physician he was skilful, and as a botanist none exceeded him in the knowledge of the plants of Virginia. He was and two priests under his care: he left over fifty a member of three electoral colleges, and voted

FIELD, MARTIN, general, died in Fayetteville, FERGUSON, ELIZABETH, died Feb. 23, 1801, Vt., Oct. 26, 1833, aged 60. He was early dis-

returned of meny nert hi dguston ed on a ler literof t.e eanstraed gh, Ohio,

Norfolk, ie Chrisd a cen-

Walpole, ame are. in 1758 y-seventh mons; a sanctity, entlemen

t Boston). Horn irtmouth literary entitled ed, 1805; s, 1808; on the e, 1831;

the Rev-He was in Geornvention ate. He ions with g recovcongress, and was ar he asion. He ew York, enior edudied at nty, Va., n he was d him in He was nd voted etteville, early disompelled then behistory,

FIELD, Timothy, minister of Westminster, Vt., died Feb. 22, 1845, aged 69. Horn in East Guilford, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1797, and studied theology with Dr. Dwight. He was ordained at Canandaigua, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1800, and dismissed in 1807. He was then the minister of Westminster from 1807 till 1835, twenty-eight years. He afterwards was useful as a preacher, but died in the insane hospital at Brattleborough.

FIELD, BARNUM, principal of the Franklin school, Boston, died May 7, 1851, aged 55.

FINDLEY, WILLIAM, a member of congress, came in early life from Ireland. In the Revolution he engaged with zeal in the cause of his adopted country; at the close of the war he removed to the western part of Pennsylvania. He was a member of the convention which in 1789 framed the new constitution of Pennsylvania, and a member of congress in 1812. He died at Unity township, Greensburg, April 5, 1821, aged upwards of 70. In his polities he opposed the administration of J. Adams and supported Mr. Jefferson. In his religion he belonged to the class of "old dissenters" of the Scotch reformation. He published a review of the funding system, 1794; a history of the insurrection of the four western counties of Pennsylvania, etc., 1796; observations on the two sons of oil, vindicating religious liberty against Rev. Samuel B. Wylie, 1812.

FINDLEY, WILLIAM, governor of Pennsylvania, died at Harrisburg Nov. 14, 1846, aged 78. He published a history of the insurrection in Pennsylvania, 1796.

FINLEY, SAMUEL, D. D., president of the college of New Jersey, died July 17, 1766, aged 50. He was born of pious parents in the county of Armagh in Ireland in the year 1715, and was one of seven sons, who were all pious. Very early in life it pleased God to awaken and convert him. He first heard a sermon, when he was six years old, and from that time resolved to be a minister. He left his native country at the age of eighteen, and arrived at l'hiladelphia Sept. 28, 1734. After his arrival he spent several years in completing his studies. Having been licensed to preach in Aug., 1740, he was ordained Oct. 13th by the Presbytery of New Brunswick. The first part of his ministry was spent in fatiguing itinerant labors. He contributed his efforts with Gilbert Tennent and Mr. Whitefield in promoting the revival of religion, which was at that period so remarkable throughout this country. His benevolent zeal sometimes brought him into unpleasant circumstances. The legislature of Connecticut had made a law, prohibiting itinerants from entering parishes, in which a minister was settled, unless by his consent. For preaching to a Presbyterian congregation in New Haven, Mr. Finley was in consequence of this law seized by the civil blessed be God, I do, when you come to die;

authority, and carried as a vagrant out of the colony. But persecution could not shake him from his purpose of being occupied in preaching the everlasting gospel. His exertions were greatly blessed in a number of towns in New Jersey, and he preached for six months with great acceptance in Philadelphia. In June, 1711, he accepted an invitation from Nottingham, Maryland, where he continued near seven years faithfully and successfully discharging the duties of his office. Here he established an academy, which acquired great reputation. Under his Instruction many youths received the rudiments of learning, and correct moral sentiments, which have since contributed much toward rendering them the most useful members of society. Upon the death of President Davies, Mr. Finley was chosen his successor. It was with reluctance that he left a people so much endeared to him, and with whom he had so long lived in friendship. He removed to Princeton in July, 1761, and entered upon the duties of his new offlee. The college flourished under his eare; but it enjoyed the benefit of his superintendence for but a few years. He died of an affection of the liver at Philadelphia, whither he had gone for medleal assistance, and was buried by the side of his friend, Gilbert Tennent. His first wife, who died in 1760, was Sarah Hall, by whom he had eight children; his second wife was Ann Clarkson, daughter of Matthew Clarkson, merchant of New York. She survived him fortyone years. His son, Ebenezer Finley, was a physician in Charleston, South Carolina. His daughter married Samuel Breeze of New Jersey, and was the mother of the wife of Rev. Dr. Morse.

In his religious opinions he was a Culvinist. His sermons were not hasty productions, but the result of study, and filled with good sense and well digested sentiment, expressed in a style pleasing to the man of science yet perfectly intelligible by the illiterate. He was remarkable for sweetness of temper and polite behavior, hospitable, charitable, and diligent in the performance of the various duties of life. During his last sickness he was perfectly resigned to the Divine will; he had a strong faith in his Saviour; and he frequently expressed an earnest desire of departing, that he might dwell with the Lord Jesus, A short time before his death he sat up, and prayed carnestly, that God would enable him to endure patiently to the end, and keep him from dishonoring the ministry. He then said, " blessed be God, eternal rest is at hand. Eternity is but long enough to enjoy my God. This, this has animated me in my severest studies; I was ashamed to take rest here. O, that I might be filled with the fulness of God!" He then addressed himself to all his friends in the room, "O that each of you may experience what, reflect, that, with faith and patience, zeal and sincerity, you have endeavored to serve the Lord; and may each of you be impressed, as I have been, with God's word, looking upon it as substantial, and not only fearing, but being unwilling to offerd against it." On being asked how he felt, he replied: "Full of triumph! I triumph through Christ! Nothing clips my wings, but the thoughts of my dissolution being delayed. O, that it were to-night! My very soul thirsts for eternal rest." When he was asked, what he saw in eternity to excite such vehement desires, he said: "I see the eternal love and goodness of God; I see the fulness of the mediator; I see the love of Jesus. O, to be dissolved and to be with him! I long to be elothed with the complete righteousness of Christ." Thus this excellent man died, in the full assurance of salvation.

He published a sermon on Matthew XII. 28. entitled, Christ triumphing and Satan raging, preached at Nottingham, 1741; a refutation of Mr. Thomson's sermon on the doctrine of convictions, 1743; Satan stripped of his evangelical robe, against the Moraviaus, 1743; a charitable plea for the specehless in answer to Abel Morgan's auti-pedo-rautism, 1747; a vindication of the preceding, 1748; a sermon at the ordination of John Rodgers at St. George's, March 16, 1749; a sermon on the death of President Davies, prefixed to his works; the curse of Meroz, or the danger of neutrality in the cause of God and our country, 1757. - Assembly Miss. Mag. 1. 71-77; Panoplist, I. 281-286; and new series, I. 241-257; Christian Mag. I. 301-307, 419-436; Mass. Miss. Mag. IV. 241-247; Green's Discourse, 356-386.

FINLEY, ROBERT, D. D., president of the university of Georgia, died Oct. 3, 1817, aged 45. He was born at Princeton in 1772, and graduated at Princeton college in 1787. From 1792 to 1795 he was a tutor, and a trustee from 1807 till 1817, when he resigned. He was the minister of Basking-Bridge, N. J., from June, 1795, until 1817. Deeply interested in the welfare of the free blacks, he formed a plan of sending them to Africa, and may be considered as the father of the colonization society. In Dec., 1816, he went to Washington, and succeeded in calling a meeting of gentlemen, Dec. 21, at which addresses were made by Mr. Clay and Mr. Randolph. The next week a constitution was adopted and Judge Washington chosen president. On his return, Dr. Finley caused the establishment of an auxiliary society at Trenton. Being at this period chosen president of Franklin college, at Athens, Ga., he repaired to that place in 1817, and in a few months died there, icaving a wife and nine children. He published several sermons. - Memoirs of Finley.

FINN, HENRY J., died Jan. 13, 1840, aged

may you have the pleasure in a dying hour to | 58, lost with one hundred and thirty-nine others in the burning of the steamboat Lexington. Born in Boston, when a boy on his passage to England the vessel sunk, but the passengers escaped in small boats and were taken up after several days. He went upon the stage in Lordon, and then in New York, and Boston. He was the owner of an elegant residence in Newport, to which he was returning from New York on the day of his death. He published a comic annual, and a drama eatled Montgomery. -- Cycl. American Literature, II. 28.

FIRMIN, GILES, a physician, was born in Suffolk, and educated at Cambridge, England. His father of the same name was chosen deacon in Boston in 1633. He came himself to this country as early as 1634. He settled at Inswich. where in 1638 he had a grant of one hundred and twenty acres of land. He married the daughter of Rev. Nathaniel Ward. About the end of the civil wars he returned to England, and his family followed him. Ordained as the minister of Shalford, he there faithfully preached the gospel, until he was ejected in 1662. Retiring to the village of Redgwell, seven or eight miles distant, he practised physic and continued to preach, having a vigorous constitution, to the last Sabbath of his life. He died in April, 1697, aged upwards of 80. He was a man of learning, of peace, and of a public spirit. Calamy gives a catalogue of his writings, among which are the schism of the parochial congregations in England and ordination, with an examination of Owen, and of Noyes'argument against imposing hands, 1658, and the real Christian, 1670. - Calamy's Acct. II. 295.

FISH, Joseph, died in 1780, aged about 72. He graduated at Harvard in 1728; and was settled the pastor of the north society of Stonington, Conn., Dec. 27, 1732. He published a sermon at the ordination of W. Vinal, Newport, 1746; a fast sermon, 1755; election sermon, 1760; nine sermons on Matthew 16:18, concerning separation, about 1767; also, the examiner exemined, or remarks on Isaac Backus' examination of nine sermons, 1771.

FISH, ELISHA, minister of Upton, Mass., died in 1795, aged about 66. He graduated at Harvard in 1750. He published a thanksgiving sermon on the repeal of the stamp act, 1767; the art of war lawful and necessary, 1773; discourse on infant baptism; at Worcester, 1775.

FISH, Preserved, died at Portsmouth, R. L. May 17, 1844. He was a worthy and respected eitizen. A Mr. Fish with the same christian name died at New York July 23, 1846, aged 81.

FISH, PHINEAS, died June 16, 1854, aged 69. He was born at Sandwich Jan. 30, 1785, graduated at Harvard in 1807, and was ordained at Marshpee Sept. 18, 1812, at which place he was for more than forty years a faithful missionary to se others exington. ssage to orgers esufter sev-Lordon, He was wport, to

on the annual,

d. Amer-

nd. His leacon in his coun-Ipswich, hundred ried the bout the land, and he minisched the Retiring tht miles inued to o the last 397, aged rning, of ives a cathe schism

d and ora, and of 1658, and
of. 11. 295.
about 72.
I was setonington,
sermon at 1746; a

g separamined, or

n of nine

ass., died at Hariving ser-767; the discourse

th, R. I., respected christian aged 81. aged 69. 35, gradudained at ce he was sionary to the Indians, as the successor of G. Hawley. He published a sermon at the ordination of S. Mnnson, Barnstable, 1832.

Idea of New Braintree, Mass., he was a graduate of published a sermon at the ordination of S. Mnnson, Barnstable, 1832.

With Dr. Tappan, was ordained in 1796. His

FISHER, HUGH, minister of Midway, Geo., died in 1734. He succeeded Mr. Lord, and was succeeded by John Osgood. He published a sermon, a preservative from damnable error; and a reply to Smith's answer, 1731.

FISHER, NATHANIEL, first minister of Dighton, died in 1777, aged 91. The son of Daniel, of Dedham, he was graduated in 1706; and ordained in 1712.

FISHER, JABEZ, a patriot of the Revolution, died in Franklin, Mass., Oct. 15, 1806, aged 88. He was a member of the provincial congress at Salem in 1774, and of that at Cambridge in 1775, and for many years a representative, councillor, and senator. He was the associate of Adams, Cushing, Paine, and Hancock. He was also an eminent Christian. — Emmons' Funeral Sermon.

FISHER, NATHANIEL, Episcopal minister of Salem, was born at Dedham in 1742; graduated in 1763; and ordained in 1776 for a church in Nova Scotia. He went to Salem in 1781, and died Dec. 22, 1812, on the Sabbath, after preaching from the text, "How long have I to live?" A volume of his sermons was published, 8vo.,

FISHER, MYERS, a lawyer at Philadelphia, and a Quaker, died March 12, 1819, aged 71. He was a man of science and an eloquent orator. He published an answer to Paine's age of reason.

FISHER, ALEXANDER M., a professor of mathematics in Yale college, died April 22, 1822, aged 28. He was born in Franklin, Mass., in 1794, and graduated at Yale college in 1813. For a while he studied theology at Andover. He was appointed professor in 1817 as successor of Mr. Day, elected president. Anxious to enlarge his knowledge of the science to which he was devoted, he determined to make a voyage to Europe. He accordingly sailed in the packet ship Albion, which was wrecked on the coast of Ireland; and he was among those who were lost. He was succeeded by Mr. Dutton. With a genius for mothematical inquiry, he had made great advances in the higher branches of mathematics. Some of his investigations were published in Silliman's journal.

FISHER, ELLAS, minister of Lempster, N. 11., died in 1831, aged about 82. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1769; and was ordained at L. in 1787. He had been a preacher fifty-two years.

FISHER, JOSHUA, M. D., president of the Massachusetts medical society, died in Beverly March 21, 1833, aged 84. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1766. He published a discourse on narcotics, 1806.

FISHER, JONATHAN, minister of Bluehill, Me., and remained such till 1713, and had for years died Sept. 22, 1848, aged nearly 80. A native the almost sole care of the college, as Mr. An-

Harvard in 1792, and, having studied theology with Dr. Tappan, was ordained in 1796. Ilis ministry in a beautiful town on the seaboard was for nearly half a century. He survived all the members, constituting his church at his settlement. The whole place was shaped and moulded by his character and efforts. His various labors ought to be remembered. He was a good farmer, working on his own farm. He toiled in the structure of his house. He made his own clock, which kept note of the whole period of his life. He was a portrait painter and copied some ancient pieces. He engraved on wood, with his penknile, most of the animals mentioned in Scripture, and published them with a description in a book. He was a prolific poet. He learned Hebrew, and proceeded far in writing a lexicon. He wrote out three thousand sermons. He was so good a walker as sometimes to walk to Bangor, seventy miles, and home again. In all his habits he was regular. A severe Calvinist, his whole life "was a pre-constructed, fore-ordained system;" so much so, that, rising at the call of his alarm clock, it was his rule that his feet should strike the floor before the weight reached the bottom. He was stern, severe, most faithful. With the young he ever conversed most faithfully; all his children were pious. In his preaching he had no gentleness, no emotion; it was cold, hard reading. What he had determined to preach, he would preach, no matter what unexpected change of circumstances might have occurred. Under him the town was remarkable for industry and thrift, for good morals, for the prevalence of sound religious principle. Such was his known character, that when a scoffer was calling all Christians hypocrites, and asked for the name of one who was not, in which case he would yield the argument, and the name of "father Fisher" was uttered, he said: "I refuse to accept him; he is odd in every thing!" He published a sermon at the ordination of M. Steele, 1801. - New York Independent, Oct. 2, 1856.

FISHEL, REDWOOD, died at Philadelphia May 17, 1856, aged 74. He was an editor and author and statistician of large acquirements.

FISK, PHINELAS, the minister of Haddam, Conn., died Oct. 17, 1738, aged 55. He was the son of Dr. John Fisk of Milford, and grandson of Rev. John Fiske,—as the name was formerly written,—of Chelmsford. His name is the fourth in the catalogue of Yale college; but he never studied at New Haven. It was while the infant seminary was at Killingworth that L-pursued his studies in it, and was grad-nated in 1704 in a class of three persons. When the college was removed to Saybrook, in 1706, he was appointed a tutor, and remained such till 1713, and had for years the almost sole care of the college. as Mr. An.

drew, the rector, resided at Milford. About forty students were educated under him. In 1714 he was settled at Haddam. He was a scholar, and spoke Latin fluently; he was also a physician, Brown university in 1815, and was appointed skilled in the treatment of insanity and epilepsy. His daughter married a brother of D. Brainerd.

He published an election sermon.

FISK, PLINY, a missionary, died Oct. 23, 1825 aged 33. He was born at Shelburne, Mass., June 24, 1792. His father, Ebenezer, died in 1841, aged 92: he came to S. when it was a wilderness. At the age of sixteen he became pious. He was graduated at Middlebury college in 1814. In his indigence he lived two years on bread and milk; nor was he ashamed to carry his corn to mill upon his shoulders. A good woman baked his loaf for him. Having studied theology at Andover, where he was one of the "group of stars," commemorated by Wilcox, he was employed as an agent for the board of foreign missions one year, and then sailed for Palestine with Mr. Parsons, Nov. 3, 1819. On arriving at Smyrna Jan. 15, 1820, they engaged in the study of the eastern languages; but in a few month removed to Scio, in order to study modern Greek under professor Bambas. The college at Scio then had seven or eight hundred students. But in 1821 the island was desolated by the barbarons Turks. In 1822 he accompanied to Egypt his fellow laborer, Mr. Parsons, and witnessed his death and buried him in the Greek convent. From Egypt he proceeded in April, 1823, through the desert to Judea, accompanied by Mr. King and Mr. Wolff. Having visited Jerusalem, he ment to Beyroot, Baalbee, Damaseus, Aleppo, and Antioch. He made a third visit to Jerusalem with Mr. King. When he withdrew from Jerusalem in the spring of 1825, he retired to the mission family of Mr. Goodell and Mr. Bird at Beyroot, where he died of a prevailing fever. He was emineutly qualified to be a missionary in the east. He was a preacher in Italian, French, modern Greek, and Arabic. Ife had been employed in preparing a dictionary in English and Arabic, and on the day of his seizure by his sickness, he had put down against the last letter of the English alphabet the last word which he knew in Arabie. His various communications are found in several volumes of the Missionary Herald. - Bond's Memoir of Fisk.

FISK, ISAAC, an assistant missionary, died at Elliot among the Choctaws in 1820, after a faithful service of one year. He west from Holden, Mass., in April, 1819.

FISK, JOSEPH, physician in Lexington, Mass.,

died in 1837, aged 85.

history in Western theological seminary, died in usual hour in apparent health, and in a short time Philadelphia Dec., 1833, aged about 45. graduated at Williams college in 1809.

FISK, WILBUR, D. D., president of the Weslyan university in Middletown, Conn., died there Feb. 22, 1839, aged 46. He was graduated at president in 1831. He was much respected and deeply lamented. He published inaugural address, 1831; travels in Europe.

80

1)

0

C

 \mathbf{n}

.18

20

of

he

ac

J٠

fif

fe

sp

2,

ea

in

se

nfl

th

sh

ra

of

W

1)

pr

en

sp for

an ex fri

he н

lis sla

Q

ua pr

FISK, Elisha, minister of Wrentham, died Jan. 11, 1851, aged 81. A graduate of Brown university in 1795, he was ordained in 1799, and was in active, useful service during his whole life. His predecessors were Mann, Messinger, and Bean. He published a sermon at Boston, 1793; two anniversary sermons, 1846; a half-century sermon in June, 1850.

FISKE, JOHN, first minister of Wenham and Chelmsford, Mass., died Jan. 14, 1677, aged 76. He was born in England in 1601, and was educated at Cambridge. He came to this country in 1637, and, being in the same ship with John Allen, they preached two sermons almost every day during the voyage. He was for some time the teacher of a school at Cambridge. As his property was large, he made considerable loans to the province. He lived almost three years at Salem, preaching to the church, and instructing a number of young persons. When a church was gathered in Enon, or Wenham, Oct. 8, 1644, he was settled the minister, and here he continued till about the year 1656, when he removed to Chelmsford, then a new town, with the majority of his church, and was there an able and useful preacher twenty years. He was a skilful physician, as well as an excellent minister. His son, Moses, was minister of Braintree. Among the severest afflictions to which he was called, says Dr. Mather, vas the loss of his concordance; that is, of his wife, who was so expert in the Scriptures as to render any other concordance unnecessary. He published a catechism, entitled, the olive-branch watered. - Magnalia, III. 141-143; Hist. Coll. vi. 239-249.

FISKE, Moses, minister of Braintree, Mass., died Aug. 10, 1708, aged 65, in the thirty-sixth year of his ministry. He graduated at Harvard in 1662, in the class of S. Stoddard. He suceecded Mr. Flint, and was ordained Sept. 11, 1672.

FISKE, John, minister of Killingly, Conn., died in 1773, aged 89. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1702.

FISKE, NATHAN, D. D., minister of Brookfield, Mass., was born in Westen in 1733. He was graduated at Harvard in 1754, and ordained pastor of the church in the third parish in Brookfield, May 28, 1758. Here he continued more ed in 1837, aged 85.

FISK, EZRA, D. D., professor of coelesiastical day, Nov. 24, 1799, he retired to his bed at his He died without a struggle, aged 66. By incessant study he gradually perfected his talents, and e Wesd there ated at pointed ted and ıral adm, died Brown 199, and iole life. er, and n, 1793; century

am and ged 76. as eduuntry in m Allen, ery day ime the is propis to the t Salem, a numrch was 1644, he ontinued loved to majority d useful hysician, , Moses, severest Mather. is, of his res as to iry. He e-branch st. Coll.

, Mass., irty-sixth Harvard He suc-11, 1672. , Conu., duate of rookfield, He was ordained n Brooked more e Lord's ed at his lort time incessant nts, and gained the public esteem. In prosperity and adversity he possessed the same screnity of mind. With a small salary he found means to practise a generous hospitality, and to give three sons a collegial education. He published a sermon on the settlement and growth of Brookfield, delivered Dec. 31, 1775; at a fast, 1776; on the death of Joshua Spooner, 1778; of Judge Foster, 1779; of J. Hobbs, 1781; an oration on the capture of Cornwallis, Oct., 1781; sermons on various subjects, 8vo. 1791; Dudleian lecture, 1796; the moral monitor, 2 vols, 12mo, 1801. - Preface to Monitor; Monthly Anthol. 1. 639.

FISKE, CALEB, M. D., died at Scituate, R. L., Dec. 30, 1834, aged 82.

FISKE, OLIVER, M. D., died at Boston, Jan. 25, 1837, aged about 70. A son of Rev. Mr. F. of Brookfield, he was a graduate of 1787, and long a physician in Worcester. He filled with honor various offices. He published oration, 1797; addresses to agricultural society, 1823 and 1831.

FISKE, CATHARINE, Miss, for thirty-eight years a distinguished teacher, died in Keene, N. II., in July or August, 1837, aged 63. Born in Worcester, her mother removed to Newfane, Vt. At fifteen she began to teach; she instituted the female seminary in Keene in 1814, in which she spent the remainder of her life. More than 2,500 pupils from various States were under her care. She had remarkable powers, superintending her household and farm, and teaching various sciences, and maintaining discipline, and retaining affection. She was pious. After various bequests, the whole of her property, all acquired by herself, she gave for an insane hospital .- Harstow's Blography, in Recorder, Sept. 1.

FISKE, Moses, died in 1843, aged 83, brother of Rev. Dr. John F. He was the son of Peter, of Sherburne, and a descendant of David, of Watertown in 1638. He was an able tutor at Dartmouth from 1788 to 1795; he began to preach, but was never ordained. About 1799 he emigrated to Hilham, in Tennessee, where he spent the remaining period of his life, more than forty years. After the age of fifty he married and had nine children. He was a farmer and an excellent scholar, an encourager of learning; a friend of the needy and desponding. He abhorred slavery, and would never own a slave. He edited the "Eagle" at Dartmouth, and published an English grammar, 1772; a sermon on slavery, in 1795, from Eccl. 4: I. - American Quarterly Register, 1840, p. 382.

FISKE, NATHAN W., professor of Greek at Amherst college, died May 27, 1847. A graduate of Dartmouth in 1817, he was appointed professor in 1825, and professor of moral philosophy and metaphysics in 1836. An account of his life and writings was written by Dr. Humphrey. He published a valuable work, - a manual of classical literature, from the German of Eschenburg, with additions, 3d edit., 1841.

FISKE, JOHN, D. D., died at New Braintree, Mass., March 15, 1855, aged 84. He was the brother of Moses, of Tennessee. A graduate of Dartmouth in 1791, and a member of the college church, lie was ordained as a missionary to the Seneca Indians in 1794; and he preached twenty sermons at Geneva, which then had five log houses and two framed enes. He was settled fifty-seven years. Of Amherst college he was a trustee. He was a highly respected and very useful man, and he died, as he wished, in a sound and happy old age, with "That which should accompany old age, As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends."

He published a fast sermon, 1812. - Snell's Funeral Sermon.

FISKE, THADDEUS, D. D., the oldest minister in Massachusetts, died in Charlestown Nov. 14, 1855, aged 93. He was born in Weston June 22, 1762, graduated in 1785, and at his death there was only one living graduate older, Asa Andrews, of Ipswich, of the class of 1783. He was minister of West Cambridge forty years, from 1788 to 1828, and survived three of his successors in the ministry, D. Damon, W. Ware, and J. F. Brown. He published a thanksgiving sermon, 1795.

FITCH, JAMES, first minister of Saybrook, and of Norwich, Conn., died Nov. 18, 1702, aged 79. He was born in the county of Essex, England, Dec. 24, 1622, and came to this country in 1638. He had already acquired a correct knowledge of the learned languages; but he spent seven years under the instruction of Mr. Hooker and Mr. Stone. In 1646 he was ordained over a church, which was at that time gathered at Saybrook, and it is said that the brethren's hands only were imposed. In 1660 he removed with the greater part of his church to Norwich, and in that town passed the remaining active days of his life. When the infirmities of age obliged him to cease from his public labors, he retired to his children at Lebanon. By his first wife, Abigail, daughter of Rev. Henry Whitefield, he had two sons, James and Samuel, and four daughters; by his second wife, Priscilla, daughter of Maj. John Mason, of Norwich, he had seven sons, Daniel, John, Jeremiah, and Jabez, Nathaniel, Joseph, and Eleazer, and one daughter; and all lived to have families, excepting Eleazer.

His brother Thomas, of Norwalk, was the father of Gov. Thomas Fitch. He was distinguished for the penetration of his mind, the energy of his preaching, and the sanctity of his life. He was acquainted with the Mohegan language, and preached the gospel of salvation to the Indians in the neighborhood of Norwich. He even gave some of his own lands to induce them to renounce their savage manner of living. The descendants of those Indians at Mohegan, for whose benefit he toiled, have been earefully instructed in religion by some self-denying Christians, have had a meeting-house built for them by the liberality of the citizens of Norwieh and other towns, and have received an appropriation from the war department of a few hundred dollars. A letter of his on the subject of his missionary labors is published in Gookin. He published a sermon on the death of Anne, wife of Maj. Mason, 1672; the advice of council explained, 1683. — Mather's Magnatia, 111. 200; Trumbull's Connecticut, I. 107, 299, 502, 503; Hist. Coll. I. 208; IX. 86; Alder's Account of Portsmouth.

FITCH, JABEZ, minister of Portsmouth, N. H., was the son of the preceding, and was born at Norwich in April, 1672. He was graduated at Harvard in 1694. In 1703 he was ordained at Ipswich as colleague of John Rogers. On account of the incompetency of his maintenance, he withdrew from his pastoral office in Dec., 1723, and about the year 1725 was established at Portsmouth. After continuing here more than twenty years, he died Nov. 22, 1746, aged 74. He had a taste for historical researches, and began in 1728 to make a collection of facts relative to N. II. Belknap had access to his papers. He published a sermon on the death of Mary Martyn; one occasioned by the great earthquake, Oct. 29, 1727; at the ordination of John Tucker, at Gosport, Isle of Shoals, in 1732, from these words: "I will make you fishers of men;" two sermons designed to make a religious improvement of the throat distemper, which prevailed in 1735 and 1736; and an account of that disease, as it appeared in New Hampshire. — Alden's Account of Society in Portsmouth; Hist. Coll. VII. 251, 257; X. 50.

FITCH, ELIJAH, minister of Hopkinton, Mass., died in 1788, aged 42. He was a graduate of Yale in 1765. He published a poem in blank verse, entitled the beauties of religion.

FITCH, John, inventor of steamboats, died of a broken heart at Bardstown, Ky., in 1798, aged 55. Born in Windsor, Conn., he was first an apprentice to a clock-maker, and was then a silversmith in Trenton. Being plundered by the British, he was next a soldier. He purchased land in Kentucky, and was there detained a prisoner some years by the Indians. In 1782 he regained his liberty. In 1786, after various experiments, he ran his boat at the rate of eight miles an hour, and obtained a patent; but the want of funds interrupted the prosecution of his designs. In 1798 his privilege in New York was withdrawn and given to Livingston. — Scientific American, 1848, p. 25.

FITCH, EBENEZER, D. D., died at West Bloomfield, N. Y., March 21, 1833, aged 77. He was a graduate of Yale in 1777; the first president of was the worthy patron of students; and one

Williams college, from 1793 to 1815, when he resigned, and was succeeded by Dr. Moore. The rest of his life was spent in the ministry in Bloomfield. He was a benevolent man and an excellent Christian. The following anecdote has been heard, — which ought to be true, and probably is, — that in his poverty as a poor minister at the west, a friend presented him with one or two thousand dollars; and that friend was W. F. Backus, a graduate of 1802, whom he had assisted in his struggles to obtain an education. Dr. F. had a wife as good and benevolent as himself.

Ĭį

 $_{\rm pl}$

sc

G

80 cl

01

C

V

1

1

FITZHUGH, WILLIAM HENRY, vice-president of the colonization society, the son of William F., a patriot of the Pevolution, was born at Chatham, Stafford county, Va., March 8, 1792, and graduated at Princeton in 1808. He afterwards settled on the patrimonial domain of Ravensworth, Fairfax county, devoting himself to agricultural pursuits, and receiving with generous hospitality his numerous friends. He died at Cambridge, Md., of the apoplexy, May 21, 1830, aged 38. Ilis wife was the daughter of Charles Goldsborough, of Dorset, Md. He published in favor of the colonization society the essays of Opinius in the Richmond Inquirer of 1826; a speech at the ninth anniversary, and a review of Tazewell's report in African Repository, Aug. and Nov., 1828. In one of his writings he represents, "that the labor of the slave is a curse on the land on which it is expended." - African Repository, IV.

FI.AGG, John, a physician and patriot, died at Lynn in 1793, aged 49. He was the son of Rev. Ebenezer F., of Chester, N. H., and graduated at Harvard in 1761. He belonged to the medical society, and had full practice. — Thacker.

FLAGG, EBENEZER, died Nov. 14, 1796, aged 92. The son of Ebenezer, of Woburn, he graduated at Harvard in 1725, and was ordained in 1736 at Chester, N. H.

FLAGG, THOMAS COLLINS, an eminent physician of Charleston, S. C., died in 1801. He was of the order of the Cincinnati.

FILEET, THOMAS, an eminent printer in Boston, died July 21, 1758, aged 72. He was a man of a fine understanding and knowledge of the world, and of great industry, just and benevolent. — N. E. Journal, July 24, 1758.

FLETCHER, BRIDGET, wife of Timothy F., of Westford, died about 1770, aged about 44. Her hymns and spiritual songs, a small volume, was published by her son, Rev. Elijah F., in 1773.

FLETCHER, ELIJAH, minister of Hopkinton, N. H., was born in Westford, and graduated at Harvard in 1769. He was ordained Jan. 27, 1772, and died April 8, 1786, aged 39. Five ministers had been settled before him in H. He was the worthy patron of students; and one whom he prepared for college and assisted, was of death with perfect calmness, for he trusted in President Webber, who ever acknowledged his obligations. His three daughters married Josiah White, of Pittsfield, N. H., Israel W. Kelley, of Salisbury, N. H., and Daniel Webster. His son Timothy was a merchant in Portland. His widow married Rev. Christopher Paige, of Salisbury.

FLETCHER, THOMAS, died in Southwick Dec. 4, 1846, aged 55, in the twenty-third year of his ministry. He was one of those unobtrusive men of wide usefulness, who will be held by wise and good beings ir eternal honor. Born in New Ipswich in 1790, he took charge of the academy at Kinderhook Landing in 1818. Remote from a place of public worship, he organized a Sabbath school and conducted the worship; through God's blessing one hundred and twenty-five persons were soon his converts and admitted to the church. He now studied divinity three years with Dr. Livingston, of Coxsackie, and was then ordained at Schaghticoke Point in 1824. In six years there were two special revivals of the power of religion. Afterwards he was settled at Northeast and New Marlborough, and then at Southwick for ten years. He died in great peace.

FLINN, ANDREW, D. D., minister of Charleston, S. C., had been previously the minister of Camden seven or eight years, and removed to Charleston about 1808. He died Feb. 25, 1820, rejoicing in the hope of eternal life. As a minister he was faithful and zealous. He published a sermon on the death of Judge Wilds, 1810; a dedication sermon, 1811.

FLINT, HENRY, one of the first ministers of Braintree, Mass., died April 27, 1668, aged 68. He was ordained as teacher March 17, 1640. When the church was first organized Sept. 16, 1639, he was chosen colleague with Mr. Thompson, who was ordained pastor Sept. 24th; but his settlement was delayed for a few months. He was a man of piety and integrity, and well qualified for the work of the ministry. His wife was Margery, sister of President Hoar. His son, Josiah Flint, was settled at Dorchester in 1671 and died in 1680. - Magnalia, III. 122; Hancock's Cent. Serm.; Morton, 200; Winthrop, 188;

FLINT, HENRY, tutor and fellow of Harvard college, was the son of Josiah Flint of Dorchester, and received his degree of bachelor of arts in 1693. He was chosen a fellow of the college in 1700, and in 1705 was appointed tutor. This office he sustained till his resignation Sept. 25, 1754. He died Feb. 13, 1760, aged 84. Many of the most eminent men in the country were educated under his care. Dr. Chauncy pronounces him a solid, judicious man, and one of the best of preachers. The few foibles, which he exhibited, were ascribed to his living in a single the mercy of God through the merits of Christ. He published two sermons on the last judgment, 1814; an appeal to the consciences of a degenerate people, a sermon preached at the Thursday lecture in Boston, 1729; a sermon to the students in the college hall, 1736; oratio funcbris in obitum B. Wadsworth, 1738; twenty sermons, 8vo. 1739. - Appleton's Fun. Serm.; Lovell's Oratio Funeb.; Hist. Coll. 1x. 18a; x. 165.

FLINT, ABEL, D. D., minister of the second church in Hartford, was born in Windham Aug. 6, 1765; graduated at Yale college in 1785; and died March 7, 1825, aged 59. He published a sermon on the death of the wife of Rev. A. Yates, 1806; of John M'Curdy Strong, 1806; a system of geometry and trigonometry, with a treatise on surveying, 1806; and a translation of some of Massillon's and Bourdaloue's sermons.

FLINT, JACOB, minister of Cohasset, died in 1835, aged about 60. Born in Reading, he graduated at Harvard in 1794, and was ordained Jan. 10, 1798. He published a history of Cohasset in the historical collections, 3d series, vol. II.; two discourses on the history of Cohasset, 1821; a discourse on the doctrine of the trinity, 1824.

FLINT, TIMOTHY, died at Reading, Mass., Aug. 18, 1840, aged 60. He was born in Reading, was graduated at Harvard in 1800, and was the minister of Lunenburg, then a missionary in the Mississippi valley. Afterwards he lived in Cincinnati, and was a resident on Red River, La. His writings are interesting and valuable. He published recollections of the last ten years in the valley of the Mississippi; history and geography of the Mississippi valley, 2 vols. 1832; Francis Berrian, or the Mexican patriot; George Mason, or the young backwoodsman, 1829; Western Review, 1830.

FLINT, Austin, doctor, died at Leicester Aug. 29, 1850, aged 90. Born in Shrewsbury Jan. 4, 1760, he was the son of Dr. Edward Flint; both father and son were eminent patriots, surgeons and physicians in the army. Dr. Austin F. was at the age of twenty-one in Drury's regiment at West Point in 1781. He married the daughter of Col. William Henshaw of L., a distinguished officer in the Revolution. He was a man of judgment, of independence, of principle, and fearless in the expression of his principles and sentiments; cheerful and good-humored, the sick and the well were glad to see him. His son, Dr. Joseph H. F., died before him. - Washburn.

FLINT, JAMES, D. D., died in Salem March 4, 1855, aged 73. He was born in Reading Dec. 10, 1781, was graduated in 1802, studied divinity with J. Bates, and was ordained at East Bridgewater Oct. 29, 1806. With a poetic taste and a taste for horticulture, he greatly embellished the state. In his last illness he viewed the approach grounds about his house. At his reques' he was

38. His borough, r of the s in the at the vell's rev., 1828. that the land on itory, IV.

n he ree. The istry in

and an

dote has

id prob-nister at

e or two

W. F.

had as-

on. Dr.

himself.

resident

lliam F.,

'hatham,

l gradu-

s settled

th, Fair-

ıral pur-

ality his

ge, Md.,

t, died at of Rev. luated at medical 96, aged

he gradlained in nt physi-He was in Bosas a man e of the l benev-othy F., bout 44. volume, h F., in opkinton, luated at Jan. 27, 9. Five II. He and one dismissed April 6, 1821; and was installed over the east church in Salem Sept. 20, 1821, as the successor of William Hentley. He had a colleague, Dexter Clapp, Dec. 17, 1851. He had "ready humor, lively sympathy, and rare conversational powers." He published some poetical productions; also, at ordination of N. Whitman, 1814; election sermon, 1815; antiversary discourse at Plymouth, 1815; at ordination of S. Alden, 1820; on the death of Dr. Abbott, 1828.

FLORA, a black woman, died at Harbor island, 1808, aged 150. Horn in Africa in 1658, she was carried to Jamaica, then to Nassau, and sold to W. Thompson. She was free forty-eight years hefure her death.

FLOYD, WILLIAM, general, died Aug. 4, 1821, aged 86. He was the son of Nicoll F., an opulent landholder, whose ancestors came from Wales and settled on Long Island. He was born Dec. 17, 1731. His education was imperfect; but he acquired much knowledge by intercourse with the intelligent. He was a delegate to the congress of 1771, and continued a member till after the Declaration of Independence. When the British possession of Long Island, his family fled -afety to Connecticut; his house was occupied by troops; and for nearly seven years he was an exile from is dwelling and derived no benefit from his tanded estate. In Oct., 1778, he was again a member of congress, and was frequently a member of the legislature of the State. In 1784 he purchased a tract of land at Western, Oneida county, on the Mohawk; and this, by the labor of several summers, he converted into a good farm, to which he removed his family in 1803. He left a widow and children. Three of the signers of the Declaration of Independence survived him. His manners were not familiar, nor was his disposition affable; yet in public life he was patriotic and independent, and for more than fifty years was honored with the confidence of his fellow citizens, - Goodrich's Lives.

FLOYD, JOHN, governor, died at Sweet Springs, Va., Aug. 16, 1837. He was a member of congress from 1817 to 1829, and governor of Va. from 1829 to 1834.

FLOYI), John, general, died in Camden county, Geo., June 24, 1839, aged 70.

FOBES, PEREZ, L.L. D., professor of mathematics, was graduated at Harvard in 1762, and ordained minister of Raynham Nov. 19, 1766. In 1786 he was elected professor of the college in Rhode Island. He died Feb. 23, 1812, aged 70. His wife was the daughter of John Wales, minister of Raynham. He published a history of Raynham; sermon on death of President Manning, 1791; election sermon, 1795.

FOGG, Daniel, a physician in Braintree, died in 1830, aged 71.

FOLGER, PETER, was the son of John F. of lived in Harrison sixty years.

Norwich, England; was born in 1618; and came to this country in 1635. He settled at Martha's Vineyard in 1635, and removed to Nantucket in He married Mary Morrill. He is de-1662. scribed as an "able, godly Englishman, who was employed in teaching the youth in reading, wilting, and the principles of religion, by catechizing." His daughter, Abiah, was the mother of Benjamin Franklin. The time of his death has not been ascertained. His small poem was finished April 23, 1676, and bears the title of "A Looking-glass for the Times." According to Franklin, "the author addresses himself to the governors for the time being; speaks for liberty of conscience, and in favor of the Anabaptists, Quakers, and other sectaries, who had suffered persecution. To this persecution he attributes the war with the natives, and other calamities, which afflicted the country, regarding them as the judgments of God in punishment of so odions an offence; and he exhorts the government to the repeal of laws so contrary to charity. The poem appeared to be written with a manly freedom and a pleasing simplicity."

Of the simplicity the following is a specimen; the four last lines are quoted erroneously by Dr. Franklin:

at

fi

lis

S

iı

h

"I am for peace and not for war,
And that 's the reason why
I write more plain that some men do,
That use to daub and lle.
But I shall cease, and set my name
To what I here ansert;
Because, to be a libeller,
I hate it with my heart.
From Sherbontown, where now I dwell,
My name do I pust here,
Without offence, your real friend,
It is Peter Foiger."

FOLLEN, CHARLES T. C., LL. D., died with one hundred and thirty-nine others in consequence of the burning of the steamboat Lexington in Long Island Sound Jan. 13, 1840, aged 44. He was professor of the German language and literature at Cambridge. Born in Germany in 1796, he was educated at the university of Giessen. He was compelled to leave Germany by the Prussian government, being wrongfully suspected of being privy to Sand's assassination of Kotzebue in 1819. In 1824 he was appointed German instructor at Cambridge, and professor from 1830 to 1835. He ergaged in the elerical profession. He was simple, modest, courteous, firm, and benevolent. His wife was Elizabeth Lee Cabot of Boston. His works were published in 5 vols. in 1841, with his life, by his widow. - Cyclop. of American Lit. II. 242.

FOLLOW, PETER, died in Harrison, N. Y., in 1809, aged about 120. He retained his hearing and memory. He was a native of Flanders, and was in the battle of Ramilies in 1706. He had lived in Harrison sixty years, and came Martha's tucket in le is dean, who reading, by catemother is death oem was title of ording to If to the or liberty abaptists, suffered

ity. The inly freepecimen ; ly by Dr.

attributes

alamitics,

them as

so odious

ment to

lied with n conse-Lexingaged 44. nage and many in of Giesny by the suspected Kotzebue German om 1830 rofession.

N. Y., in s hearing ders, and He had irm, and

Cabot of

5 vols. in

elop. of

FOLSOM, NATHANIEL, general, a member of the first congress of 1774, died at Exeter, N. II. in June, 1790. In the French war of 1755 he distinguished himself at the capture of Dieskau. He was a general of the militia. His earliest ancestors in this country wrote the name Foulshame.

FOLSOM, DAVID, colonel, chief of the Choctaw Indians, died Sept. 24, 1847.

FONTAINE, WILLIAM, died in Florida Oct. 16, 1851, aged 105; a Revolutionary soldier.

FOOT, JOHN, minister of Cheshire, Conn., was ordained colleague with Samuel Hall in March, 1767, and died Aug. 30, 1813, aged 71, having been a pastor forty-five years.

FOOT, SAMUEL AUGUSTUS, LL. D., governor of Conn., died at Cheshire, Sept. 15, 1846, aged 65. He was the son of Rev. John F. of Cheshire, and graduated at Yale in 1797. He was for years a democratic representative and senator in congress, and governor in 1834. His son, John A., was a lawyer in Cleveland, and Augustus II., a lientenant in the navy.

FOOT, JOSEPH I., D.D., president of Washington college, Tennessee, died April 21, 1840, aged 43. Born in Connecticut, he was a graduate of Union college, and of Andover theological seminary in 1824. He was a pastor in Brookfield, Mass., and in Cortland, N. Y. He published a historical discourse at Brookfield, 1829; at ordination, 1830; prominent trait in false

FOOTE, ROXANA, wife of Horace Foot, missionary to Tripoli in Syria, died in 1855, lamented by

FOOTE, ISAAC, judge, died at Smyrna, N. Y., Feb. 27, 1842, aged 96. A native of Colchester, he removed to Stafford, Conn., and in 1795 to Smyrna. He was a Christian and an exemplary church member seventy-five years.

FORBES, Joseph, brigadier-general, was intrusted with the expedition against fort du Quesne in 1758. With an army of eight thousand men he occupied the fortress, which the enemy had abandoned, Nov. 25, and called it Pittsburg. Having concluded treaties with the Indians, he died, exhausted by fatigue, at Philadelphia, aged 48. — Mante, 158.

FORBES, ELI, D. D., minister of Brookfield and of Gloucester, Mass., died Dec. 15, 1804, aged 77. He was born in Westborough in Oct., 1726, and entered Harvard college in 1744. In the month of July of the following year he was demanded as a soldier, and he cheerfully shouldered his musket and marched more than a hundred miles to oppose the French and Indians. Having been released by the interposition of his friends, he returned to his studies with a sharpened appetite, and was graduated in 1751. He was or-field June 3, 1752. In the years 1758 and 1759 he was a chaplain in one of the regiments. In 1762 he went as a missionary to the Oacidas, one of the six nations of Indians, and planted the first Christian church at Onaquagic, on the river Susquehannah. Having established in this place a school for children and another for adults, he returned, bringing with him four Indian children, whom he sent back again in a few years, ufter furnishing them with such knowledge as would be useful to them. He also brought with him a white lad, who had become a complete savage; but he was civilized, and being educated at Dartmouth college, where he received a degree, was the agent of congress during the Revolutionary war, and was very useful. Dr. Forbes, falling under the groundless suspicion of being a tory, requested a dismission from his people in March, 1776, and on the fifth of June was installed at Gloncester. He published a family book, and a number of single sermons, among which are a thanksgiving sermon on the conquest of Canada, 1761; an artillery election sermon, 1771; an account of Joshua Eaton of Spencer, prefixed to seven sermous of Mr. Eaton, and a funeral sermon on his death, 1772; a sermon on repairing his meeting-house, 1792; on the death of J. Low, 1797: convention sermon, 1799. - Month, Anthology, 1. 669; Whitney's Hist. Worcester, 75, Chauncy's Serm. at Ordin. of J. Bowman; Piscataqua Evan. Mag. 11. 169-173; Assemb. Miss. Mag. 1. 53, 54.

FORBES, DUNCAN, died in Cumberland, Mo.,

Jan., 1856, aged 110.

FORD, GABRIEL H., judge, died at Morristown, N. J., his native town, Aug. 27, 1849, aged 85. He was a graduate of Princeton in 1784. Of the lawyers of New Jersey he was regarded as the most efficient and eloquent. He was a judge of the supreme court twenty-one years. His family residence was the head-quarters of Washington in 1777. His son is Henry A. F., a member of the same bar, at which his father was distinguished.

FORD, HENRY, died at Elmira, N. Y., Nov. 6, 1848, aged 64. Born in Morristown, a graduate of Yale in 1803, he was settled in the ministry at Bethlehem, N. Y., at Lisle, Elmira, New York eity, and Wells, Pa. - Observer, Nov. 25.

FORD, THOMAS, governor of Illinois from 1843 to 1846, died in Jan., 1851. He left in manuseript a history of Illinois.

FORD, Augustus, captain, died at Sackett's Harbor Aug. 4, 1855, aged 83. Born in Rhode Island in 1772, he was early impressed as a seaman in the British service. In 1800 he removed to Oswego; in 1810 he was made a master of the navy and removed to Sackett's Harbor. His chart of the lake and of the river St. Lawrence dained minister of the second parish in Brook- was regarded as of great value. He was the father of foarteen children. His end was peaceful; his hope that of the carnest Christian.

surgeon's mate in the old French war under Amherst; he was also a surgeon during the Revolutionary contest, and was patriotic and skilful. He died at Fishkill, New York, in July, 1816, aged 78.

FORMAN, JUSTICA, judge, one of the projectors of the Eric canal, died Aug. 4, 1849, in Itatherfordton, N. C., aged 71. He lived in Onondaga Hollow, was a man of intelligence and enterprise, the founder of Syracuse, New York.

FORNARO, ADOLPH, died in Washington in 1851, aged 37. He was a draughtsman in the office of the United States coast survey. In Switzerland he was major in the corps of topographical engineers.

FORREST, URIAH, general, died at his seat near Georgetown, Maryland, in 1805. In the battle of Germantown he was severely wounded, and ever afterwards was supported by crutches. His life was marked by honorable and useful enterprise.

FORREST, THOMAS, a distinguished officer of the Revolution, died at Philadelphia in 1825, aged 78. He had been a member of congress.

FORSTER, ANTHONY, Unitarian minister in Charleston, S. C., was a native of North Carolina, and was settled in 1815 as a Calvinist in connection with Dr. Hollingshead, after whose death he established the second Independent charch. In 1816 he withdrew from the Presbytery. He died Jan. 18, 1820. He published a discourse on the doctrine of election. A volume of his sermons was published in 1821.

FORSYTH, John, governor of Georgia, died at Washington Oct. 22, 1841, aged 61. He was born at Fredericksburg, Va., in 1780; was graduated at Princeton in 1799; was representative from Georgia 1813-18, and 1827-29; senator 1818-19, and 1829-35; governor of Georgia 1827-29; minister to Spain 1819-22; secretary of State in 1835, remaining in office till 1841. He added to his talents elegance and dignity of manners.

FORWARD, JUSTUS, minister of Belchertown, Mass., died March 8, 1814, aged 83, in the fiftyninth year of his ministry. Born in Suffield, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1754, and was settled Feb. 25, 1756, over three hundred inhabitants. In the course of his ministry there were seven hundred and ninety-eight deaths, of whom fifty died of the consumption. He succeeded Mr. Billings and was succeeded by E. Porter.

FORWARD, WALTER, judge, died in Pittsburg Nov. 24, 1852, aged 65. He was a native of Connecticut, and early removed to the west. He was a lawyer and a member of congress, first emptroller of the treasury, and secretary of the surv, appointed by Mr. Tyler. For several the doctrine of salvation by free grace, and as a

years he was charge to Denmark; he was also judge of a district court. Taken ill in court, he FORMAN, WILLIAM, a physician, served as a died in forty-eight hours. He was a member of the Methodist church; and there was no stain on his character.

FOSTER, JEDEDIAH, justice of the superior court of Massachusetts, died Oct. 17, 1779, aged 53. He was born in Andover, Oct. 10, 1726, the son of Ephraim F., and graduated at Harvard in 1744. He soon established himself in the town of Brookfield, and married a daughter of Gen. Dwight. His character for integrity and talents procured him a number of civil and military offices. He received his appointment of judge in 1776. He was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Massachusetts. His sons, Theodore and Dwight, were members of congress. He was early and firmly attached to the interest and freedom of his country, in opposition to the despotic measures of Great Britain, and never once, in the most gloomy periods, was heard to express a doubt of the ultimate success of America. In early life he made a profession of Christianity, and his conduct was uniformly exemplary. - Fiske's Fun. Serm.; Chronicle, Oct. 28, 1779.

FOSTER, BENJAMIN, D. D., minister in New York, died Aug. 26, 1798, aged 48. He was born in Danvers, Mass., June 12, 1750. Although early inspired with the love of excellence, it was not until after many conflicts that he obtained that peace, which the world can neither give nor take away. He was graduated at Yale in 1774. While a member of this institution a controversy respecting baptism occupied much of the public attention, and, this being thought a proper subject of discussion, Mr. Foster was appointed to defend infant baptism by sprinkling. In preparing himself for this disputation he became convinced that his former sentiments were errer cous, and he was afterwards a conscientious Baptist. After pursuing for some time the study of divinity under the care of Dr. Stillman of Boston, he was ordained minister of a Baptist church in Leicester, Oct. 23, 1776. The want of a suitable maintenance induced him in 1782 to ask a dismission from his people; after which he preached about two years in Danvers. In Jan., 1785, he was ealled to the first church in Newport; and in the autumn of 1788, removed to New York, where he was minister of the First Baptist church till his death. During the prevalence of the yellow fever he did not shrink from his duties as a faithful minister of Jesus Christ. He visited the sick and the dying, and endeavored to impart to them the hopes of religion. He fell a victim to his benevolenee. He was distinguished for his acquaintance with the Greek, Hebrew, and Chaldean languages. As a divine he advocated with zeal

e was also court, he nember of no stain on e superior 1779, aged , 1726, the Harvard in the town er of Gen. und talents nilitary offif judge in convention sachusetts. members ly attached country, in of Great gloonly pe-

of the ulti-

e he made

onduct was

1. Serm.; er in New le was born Although ence, it was e obtained er give nor le in 1774. controversy the public proper subpointed to In prepareame conerrel cous. us Baptist. of divinity ton, he was in Leicestable maindismission ehed about 85, he was and in the k, where he reh till his ellow fever

uthful min-

ick and the

them the

his benev-

s acquaint-

l Chaldean

l with zeal

e, and as a

preacher was indefatigable. His life was pure and amiable, upright and benevolent. He pubtished, while he lived at Leicester, the washing of regeneration, or the Divine rite of immersion, in answer to a treatise of Mr. Fish, and primitive baptism defended, in a letter to John Cleaveland. He also published a dissertation on the seventy weeks of Daniel. - Mass. Miss. Mag. 1. 30; Backus, III. 174, 230; Benedict, II. 301-1.

FOSTER, JOEL, minister of Sudbury, Mass., died Sept. 25, 1812, aged 57. A graduate of Dartmouth in 1777, he was the minister of New Salem from 1779 to 1802, and then of East Sudbury from 1803 till his death. He had excellent pulpit talents, and was specially gifted in prayer.

FOSTER, DWIGHT, died at Brookfield in April, 1823, aged 63. He was the son of Jedediah F., of B., a judge of the supreme court, and a brother of Theodore F., a senator from Rhode Island from 1790 to 1803. A graduate of Brown university in 1774, he was a lawyer in Brookfield, sheriff, chief justice of the common pleas, and a representative and a senator in congress from 1800 to 1803. Of a large and commanding figure, he was mild and urbane. He was the father of Alfred D. Foster, of Worcester. His daughter Sophia married S. M. Burnside.

FOSTER, JOHN, D. D., minister of Brighton, Mass., was graduated at Dartmouth in 1783, and died in Sept., 1829, aged about 66. His wife wrote the Coquette, a novel. He published a sermon before a charitable society; on the death of Washington, 1799; of C. Winship, 1802; a sermon on infidelity, 1802; on the installation of his brother, 1803; at a fast, 1805; at artillery election; at a dedication, 1809; before the society for propagating the gospel, 1817.

FOSTER, GIDEON, general, died at Danvers in Nov., 1845, aged 96. He was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and was faithful in various public offices. Mr. G. Peabody contributed 50 dollars toward creeting a monument to his memory.

FOSTER, STEPHEN, president of East Tennessee college, died Jan. 11, 1835, aged 37. Born in Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1821, and was of Andover theological seminary in 1824.

FOSTER, HANNAH, the widow of Rev. John F., of Brighton, died in Montreal in 1840. She published the Coquette. .

FOSTER, WILLIAM, died in Andover Aug. 30, 1843, aged 85. For many years he was a respected teacher.

FOSTER, ALFRED DWIGHT, died in Worcester Aug. 15, 1852, aged 52. The son of Dwight Foster, he graduated in 1819, and studied law with Mr. Burnside, who married his sister. He soon withdrew from the bar; for years he was a representative, senator, and councillor; also treasurer of the lunatic hospital, a trustee of Amherst college, and a member of the American minister, Sept. 5, 1679, and died of the small board for foreign missions. Though modest and self-distrustful, he had fixed and stern principle, and at the call of duty could despise popular favor and expose falsehood and evil doings in terms of indignant eloquence. - Washburn.

FOWLE, DANIEL, a printer in Boston, was arrested in Oct., 1754, by order of the house of representatives, on suspicion of having printed " the monster of monsters," a pamphlet reflecting on some of its members, and by the same authority was committed to prison amongst thieves. After a few days he was liberated. Disgusted with such tyranny, he removed to Portsmouth, and in 1756, commenced the New Hampshire Gazette. He died June, 1787, aged 72 .- Thomas, 1. 332, 434.

FOWLER, AARON, minister of Guilford, Conn., died in 1800, aged 72, in the 43d year of his ministry.

FOWLER, DAVID, an Indian, died at Oneida in 1812. He was one of the Indian chiefs, and was employed by Kirkland in 1766 as a schoolmaster; he sustained a Christian character, good to the last.

FOWLER, ORIN, minister of Fall River, died Sept. 3, 1853, aged 62. He was born at Lebanon, Conn., July 29, 1791, one of twelve children, and was a descendant of the seventh generation from William, a magistrate of New Haven colony. He was graduated in 1815; studied theology with Dr. Dwight; and was soon settled in Plainfield, Conn. Thence he removed to Fall River, where he was a minister twenty years, when he was chosen a member of congress in 1848. He made an able reply to Webster's speech of March 7, 1850. He died suddenly at Washington. He was a useful pastor. In the first year of his ministry, ninety persons were added to the church. In 1836 there were added to his church at Fall River one hundred and nine persons. He was decided in his support of the temperance cause, and in opposition to slavery. He published a treatise on baptism, 1835; an historical sketch of Fall River, 1841. - Boston Recorder, Oct. 28. 1853.

FOWLER, BANCROFT, died at Stockbridge of pneumonia, April 5, 1856, aged 80. He was a native of Pittsfield, a graduate of Yale in 1796. then tutor, many years the minister of Windsor, Vt., and Northfield, Mass., and a professor in the theological seminary at Bangor. He was a man of more than ordinary talents and attainments. courteous and gentlemanly, and of uniform piety. He published an oration at New Haven, on the death of E. G. Marsh, 1804.

FOX, JOHN, minister of Wohurn, died Dec. 12, 1756, aged 78. He was the son of Rev. Jabez, his predecessor at Wohnrn, who graduated in 1665, and succeeded Thomas Carter, the first pox Feb. 28, 1702; he is supposed to be a de- dron, 1727; of John Williams and Thomas Judith, reached her 99th year. He graduated at Harvard in 1698. His son, John, succeeded him. He published a sermon on the earthquake Oct. 29, 1727; time and the end of time, 1729; the door of heaven opened and shut, 1731.

FOX, Justus, a type founder and printer, died in Germantovn, N. J., Jan. 26, 1805, aged 69. A native of Germany, he came to this country in his youth. He was respected and lamented.

FOXCROFT, THOMAS, minister in Boston, died June 18, 1769, aged 72. He was the son of Francis Foxeroft, of Cambridge, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1714. His father, who was a member of the church of England, was desirous that his son should be an Episcopal elergyman. This was also his intention, till by diligent study and free conversation with Nehemiah Walter of Roxbury, a great reasoner and an eminently pious man, he became convinced, that the Congregational mode of worship was most agreeable to the Scriptures. He was ordained pastor of the first church in Boston, as colleague with Mr. Wadsworth, Nov. 20, 1717. No minister was more universally admired. None was accounted either a more polite and elegant, or a more devout and edifying preacher. His high reputation continued till in his later years the vigor of his constitution and of his mind was impaired by repeated siekness. Dr. Chauncy was settled as his colleague in 1727. He was a pastor more than half a century. His son, Samuel, minister of New Gloucester, died in March, 1807, aged 72. - He was a learned divine. His powers of reasoning were strong, and few had a greater command of words. His religious sentiments were strictly Calvinistic, and they were the chief subjects of his preaching. He never conecaled or yielded them from the fear of man, as he always sought the approbation of God. His addresses to the consciences of his hearers were pungent. He was, says Dr. Chauncy, a real, uniform in his walk with God in the way of his commandments, though, instead of trusting that he was righteous in the eye of strict law, he accounted himself an unprofitable servant; fixing his dependence, not on his own worthiness, not on any works of righteousness, which he had done, but on the merey of God and the atoning blood and perfect rightousness of Jesus Christ. His writings evince a clearness of perception, copiousness of invention, liveliness of imagination, and soundness of judgment. They bear testimony also to his unfeigned picty. He published a sermon at his own ordination, 1718; on kindness, 1720; on the death of his mother, 1721; of John Coney, 1722; of Dame Bridget Usher, 1723; seendant of the famous John Fox. His widow, Blowers, 1729; of Benjamin Wadsworth, 1737; an essay on the state of the dead, 1722; the day of a godly man's death better than that of his birth; duty of the godly to be intercessors and reformers; two sermons showing how to begin and end the year after a godly sort; God's face set against an incorrigible people, 1721; at the ordination of John Lowell, 1726; a discourse preparatory to the choice of a minister, 1727; on death; on the earthquake; at the ordination of John Taylor, 1728; an answer to T. Barclay's persuasive, a defence of Presbyterian ordination, 1729; observations historical and practical on the rise and primitive state of New England, with special reference to the first church in Boston, a century sermon, Aug. 23, 1730; pleas of gospel impenitents refuted in two sermons, 1730; the Divine right of deneons, 1731; to a young woman under sentence of death, 1733; a sermon, ocensioned by the visits and labors of Mr. Whitefield, 1740; at a private family meeting, 1742; a preface to Fleming's fulfilling of the Scripture, 1743 : an apology for Mr. Whitefield, 1745; saints' united confession in disparagement of their own righteousness, 1750; like precious faith obtained by all the true servants of Christ, 1756; a thanksgiving sermon for the conquest of Canada, 1760. - Chauncy's Funeral Sermon: Massachusetts Gazette, June 22, 1769; Chandler's Life of Johnson, 70; Hist. Coll. x. 164.

h

d

ľ

FOXCROFT, SAMUEL, first minister of New Gloucester, Maine, died March 2, 1807, aged about 73. He graduated at Harvard college in 1754. His name stands the second in the class, the names being at that time arranged according to the dignity of the family. The name of John Hancock comes a little lower, and still lower the names of Rev. Drs. Payson, Fiske, and West. The church of N. G., was gathered, and he was ordained in Jan., 1765. He was pastor twentyeight years. He had a strong understanding and sound judgment. The atonement of Christ filled good Christian; a partaker of the Holy Ghost; his soul with joy. He knew nothing of the terrors and struggles of death, for he fell asleep suddenly. - Scott's and Mosetey's Sermons.

FOXCROFT, Francis, a physician in Brookfield, died in 1814, aged 69. He graduated at Harvard in 1764.

FRANCISCO, HENRY, died near Whitchall, State of New York, Nov., 1820, aged 134. A native of England, he was present at the coronation of Queen Anne. He had lived in this country eighty or ninety years, and served in the French and Revolutionary wars.

FRANKLIN, BENJAMIN, LL. D., a philosopher and statesman, died April 17, 1790, aged 84. He was born in Boston Jan. 17, 1706. His father, Josias, who was a native of England, was of George I.; of Penn Townsend; of W. Wal- a soap-hoiler and tallow-chandler in that town.

Thomas h, 1737; the day at of his ors and to begin od's face ; at the wse pre-727; on iation of Barclay's dination, ctical on and, with Boston, a of gospel 730; the g woman on, ocenhitefield, a prere, 1743; ; saints' heir own obtained 1756; a Canada, assachuof New 07, aged ollege in the class, ceording of John lower the d West. l he was twentyding and rist filled the terleep sud-

er's Life

1 Brooknated at hitchall, 134. A e coronahis cound in the losopher aged 84. 06. His and, was at town.

poet. At the age of eight years he was sent to a grammar school, but at the age of ten his father required his services to assist him in his business. Two years afterwards he was bound as an apprentice to his brother, James, who was a printer. In this employment he made great proliciency, and, having a taste for books, he devoted much of his leisure time to reading. So eager was he in the pursuit of knowledge, that he frequently passed the greater part of the night in his studies. He became expert in the Socratic mode of reasoning by asking questions, and thus he sometimes embarrassed persons of understanding superior to his own. In 1721 his brother began to print the New England Courant, which was the third newspaper published in America. The two preceding papers were the Boston News-Letter and Boston Gazette. Young Franklin wrote a number of essays for the Courant, which were so well received as to encourage him to continue his literary labors. To improve his style he resolved to imitate Addison's Spectator. The method, which he took, was to make a summary of a paper, after he had read it, and, in a few days, when he had forgotten the expressions of the author, to endeavor to restore it to its original form. By this means he was taught his errors, and perceived the necessity of being more fully acquainted with the synonymous words of the language. He was much assisted also in acquiring a facility and variety of expressions by writing poetry.

At this early period the perusal of Shaftesbury and Collins made him completely a sceptic, and he was fond of disputing upon the subject of re-This circumstance caused him to be regarded by pious men with abhorrence; and on this account, as well as on account of the illtreatment which he received from his brother, he determined to leave Boston. His departure was facilitated by the possession of his indenture, which his brother had given him about the year 1723, not from friendship, but because the general court prohibited him from publishing the New England Courant, and in order that it might be conducted under the name of Benjamin Franklin. He privately went on board a sloop, and soon arrived at New York. Finding no employment here, he pursued his way to Philadelphia, and entered the city without a friend and with only a dollar in his pocket. Purchasing some rolls at a baker's shop, he put one under each arm, and, eating a third, walked through several streets in search of a lodging. There were at this time two printers in Philadelphia, Andrew Bradford and Mr. Keimer, by the latter of whom he was employed. Sir William Keith, the governor, having been informed that Franklin was a young man of promising talents, invited him to his

His mother was a daughter of Peter Folger, the | ner. He advised him to enter into business for himself, and, in order to accomplish this object, to make a visit to London, that he might purchase the necessary articles for a printing-office. Receiving the promise of assistance, Franklin prepared himself for the voyage, and, on applying for letters of recommendation previously to sailing, he was told that they would be sent on board. When the letter-bag was opened there was no packet for Franklin; and he now discovered that the governor was one of those men who love to oblige everybody, and who substitute the most liberal professions and offers in the place of active, substantial kindness. Arriving in London in 1724, he was obliged to seek employment as a journeyman printer. He lived so economically that he great part of his wages. Instead of di ints of beer in a day, like some of hi he drank only water, and he pa them to renounce the exbread and cheese for breaktravag cheap soup. As his principles fast and nt this time were very loose, his zeal to enlighten the world induced him to publish his dissertation on liberty and necessity, in which he contended that virtue and vice were nothing more than vain distinctions. This work procured him the acquaintance of Mandeville and others of that licentions class. He returned to Philadelphia in Oct., 1726, as a clerk to Mr. Denham, a merchant; but the death of that gentleman in the following year induced him to return to Mr. Keimer in the capacity of foreman in his office. He was very useful to his employer, for he gave him assistance as a letter-founder; he also engraved various ornaments, and made printer's ink. He soon began business in partnership with Mr. Meredith, but in 1729 he dissolved the connection with him. Having purchased of Keimer a paper, which had been conducted in a wretched manner, he now conducted it in a style which attracted much attention. At this time, though destitute of those religious principles which give stability and elevation to virtue, he yet had discernment enough to be convinced that truth, probity, and sincerity would promote his interests and be useful to him in the world, and he resolved to respect them in his conduct. Sept. 1, 1730, he married a widow. whose maiden name was Read, and to whom six years before he had pledged his fidelity, but had neglected her when he was in London. The expenses of his establishment in business, notwithstanding his industry and economy, brought him in a short time into embarrassments, from which he was relieved by the generous assistance of William Coleman and Robert Grace. In addition to his other employments, he now opened a small stationer's shop. But the claims of busihouse, and treated him in the most friendly man- ness did not extinguish his taste for literature and

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

junto, composed of the most intelligent of his acquaintance. Questions of morality, polities, or philosophy were discussed every Friday evening, and the institution was continued almost forty years. As books were frequently quoted in the club, and as the members had brought their books together for mutual advantage, he was led to form the plan of a public library, which was carried into effect in 1731, and became the foundation of that noble institution the library company of Philadelphia. In 1732 he began to publish Poor Richard's almanac, which was enriched with maxims of frugality, temperance, industry, and integrity. So great was its reputation, that he sold ten thousand annually, and it was continued by him about twenty-five years. The maxims were collected in the last almanac in the form of an address, ealled the way to wealth, which has appeared in various publications. In 1736 he was appointed clerk of the general assembly of Pennsylvania, and in 1737 postmaster of Philadelphia. The first fire company was formed by him in 1738. When the frontiers of Pennsylvania were endangered in 1744, and an ineffectual attempt was made to procure a militia law, he proposed a voluntary association for the defence of the province, and in a short time obtained ten thousand names. In 1747 he was chosen a member of the assembly, and continued in this station ten years. In all important discussions his presence was considered as indispensable. He seldom spoke, and never exhibited any oratory; but by a single observation he sometimes determined the fate of a question. In the long controversies with the proprietaries or their governors, he took the most active part, and displayed a firm spirit of liberty.

He was now engaged for a number of years in a course of electrical experiments, of which he published an account. His great discovery was the identity of the electric fluid and lightning. This discovery he made in the summer of 1752. To the upright stick of a kite he attached an iron point; the string was of hemp, excepting the part held in his hand, which was of silk; and a key was fastened where the hempen string terminated. With this apparatus, on the approach of a thunder-storm, he raised his kite. passed over it, and, no signs of electricity appearing, he began to despair; but observing the loose fibres of his string to move suddenly toward an erect position, he presented his knuckle to the key, and received a strong spark. The success of this experiment completely established his theory. The practical use of this discovery, in securing houses from lightning by pointed conductors, is well known in America and Europe. In 1753 he was appointed deputy postmastergeneral of the British colonies, and in the same year the academy of Philadelphia, projected by pain which he might feel on their account, by science. He formed a club, which he called the him, was established. In 1754 he was one of the commissioners who attended the congress at Albany, to devise the best means of defending the country against the French. He drew up a plan of union for defence and general government, which was adopted by the congress. It was however rejected by the board of trade in England. because it gave too much power to the representatives of the people, and it was rejected by the assemblies of the colonies, because it gave too much power to the president-general. After the defeat of Braddock he was appointed colonel of a regiment, and he repaired to the frontiers and built a fort. In 1757 he was sent to England as the agent of Pennsylvania, and, while residing there, was appointed agent of Massachusetts. Maryland, and Georgia. He now received the reward of his philosophical merit. He was chosen a fellow of the royal society, and was honored with the degree of doctor of laws by the universities of St. Andrews, Edinburgh, and Oxford, and his co. respondence was sought by the most eminent philosophers of Europe. During his residence in England he published a pamphlet, showing the advantages which would spring from the conquest of Canada, and he formed that elegant instrument, which he called the harmonica. He returned in 1762, and resumed his seat in the assembly: but in 1764 was again sent to London as an agent for the province to procure a change of the proprietary government. In 1766 he was examined at the bar of the house of commons respecting the repeal of the stamp act; and there he evinced the utmost possession and an astonishing accuracy and extent of information. During the same and the following year, by visiting Holland, Germany, and France, he became acquainted with most of the literary characters of Europe. In 1773 some letters of Hutchinson, Oliver, and others in Massachusetts falling into his hands, he sent them to the legislature of that State; but he ever refused to tell how he procured them. It is now known that he received them from Dr. Williamson. He returned to America in 1775, and the day after his arrival was elected a member of congress. He was sent to the camp before Boston to confirm the army in their decisive measures, and to Canada to persuade the citizens to join in the common cause. In this mission, however, he was not successful. He was in 1776 appointed a committee with John Adams and Edward Rutledge to inquire into the powers with which Lord Howe was invested in regard to the adjustment of our differences with Great Britiain. When his lordship expressed his concern at being obliged to distress those whom he so much regarded, Dr. Franklin assured him that the Americans, out of reciprocal regard, would endeavor to lessen, as much as possible, the s one of the gress at Alfending the w up a plan government. It was howin England, the reprerejected by e it gave too . After the d colonel of rontiers and England as ile residing assachusetts, received the He was chowas honored the univerand Oxford, by the most During his a pamphlet, spring from red that eleharmonica. is scat in the t to London ure a change 1766 he was of commons t; and there id an astonation. Durr, by visiting became acharacters of Hutchinson, falling into ature of that how he prohe received returned to his arrival He was sent the army in ada to permmon cause. t successful. ee with John nire into the invested in erences with xpressed his those whom assured him ocal regard, possible, the account, by

taking the utmost care of themselves. In the discussion of the great question of independence, he was decidedly in favor of the measure. He was in the same year chosen president of the convention, which met in Philadelphia to form a new constitution for Pennsylvania. The single legislature and the plural executive seem to have been his favorite principles. In the latter end of the year 1776 he was sent to France to assist in negotiation with Mr. Arthur Lee and Silas Deane. He had much influence in forming the treaty of alliance and commerce, which was signed Feb. 6, 1778, and he afterwards completed a treaty of amity and commerce with Sweden. In conjunction with Mr. Adams, Mr. Jay, and Mr. Laurens, he signed the provisional articles of peace Nov. 30, 1782, and the definitive treaty Sept. 30, 1783. While he was in France he was appointed one of the commissioners to examine Mesmer's animal magnetism, in 1784. Being desirous of returning to his native country, he requested that an ambassador might be appointed in his place, and on the arrival of his successor, Mr. Jefferson, he immediately sailed for Philadelphia, where he arrived in Sept., 1785. He was received with universal applause, and was soon appointed president of the supreme executive council. In 1787 he was a delegate to the grand convention which formed the constitution of the United States. Some of the articles which composed it did not altogether please him, but for the sake of union he signed it. In the same year he was appointed the first president of two excellent societies which were established in Philadelphia, for alleviating the miseries of public prisons, and for promoting the abolition of slavery. A memorial of the latter society to congress gave occasion to a debate, in which an attempt was made to justify the slave trade. In consequence of this, Dr. Franklin published in the Federal Gazette, March 25, 1789, an essay, signed Historicus, communicating a pretended speech, delivered in the divan of Algiers in 1687, against the petition of a sect called Erika, or Purists, for the abolition of piracy and slavery. The arguments urged in favor of the African trade, by Mr. Jackson, of Georgia, are here applied with equal force to justify the plundering and enslaving of Europeans. In 1788 he retired wholly from public life, and he now approached the end of his days. He had been afflicted for a number of years with a complication of disorders. For the last twelve months he was confined almost entirely to his bed. In the severity of his pains he would observe, that he was afraid he did not bear them as he ought, and he expressed a grateful sense of the many blessings received from the Supreme Being, who had raised him from his humble origin to such consideration among men. He had only two

New Jersey, and a daughter, who married Wm. Bache. The following epitaph was written by himself many years previously to his death; probably suggested by Woodbridge's lines on John Cotton:

" The body of Benjamla Franklin, printer Like the cover of an old book, Its contents torn out, And stript of its lettering and gliding, Lies here, food for worms;
Yet the work itself shall not be lost,
For it will, (as he believes,) appear once more In a new And more beautiful edition, Corrected and amonded

The Author."

But although he thus expressed his hope of future happiness, yet from his memoirs it does not appear whether this hope was founded upon the mediation of Jesus Christ. Some have even considered him as not unfriendly to Infidelity; but the following anecdote seems to prove that in his old age he did not absolutely reject the Scriptures. As a young gentleman was one day ridiculing religion as a vulgar prejudice, he appealed to Dr. Franklin, expecting his approbation. "Young man," said the philosopher emphatically, "it is best to believe." President Stiles addressed a letter to him, dated Jan. 28, 1790, in which he expressed a desire to be made acquainted with his sentiments on Christianity. The following is an extract from it: "You know, sir, I am a Christian; and would to Heaven all others were as I am, except my imperfections. As much as I know of Dr. Franklin, I have not an idea of his religious sentiments. I wish to know the opinion of my venerable friend concerning Jesus of Nazareth. He will not impute this to impertinence or improper curiosity in one who for many years has continued to love, estimate, and reverence his abilities and literary character with an ardor of affection. If I have said too much, let the request be blotted out and be no more." To this Dr. Franklin replied, March 9, but a few weeks before his dea h: "I do not take your curiosity amiss, and shall endeavor, in a few words, to gratify it. As to Jesus of Nazareth, my opinion of whom you particularly desire, I think the system of morals, and his religion, as he left them to us, the best the world ever saw, or is likely to see; but I apprehend it has received various corrupting changes; and I have, with most of the present dissenters in England, some doubts as to his divinity." It may not be unnecessary to remark, that, if we may credit Dr. Priestley, Dr. Franklin was not correct in estimating the sentiments of a majority of the dissenters in England. To Thomas Paine, concerning the proposed publication of his age of reason, Dr. F. wrote: "I would advise you not to attempt unchaining the children: William Franklin, who was governor of tiger, but to burn this piece before it is seen by religiou, what would they be, if without it?"

Dr. Franklin acquired a high and deserved reputation as a philosopher, for his philosophy was of a practical and useful kind, and he seemed to be continually desirous of advancing the welfare of society. In company he was sententious and not fluent, and he chose rather to listen to others than to talk himself. Impatient of interruntion, he often mentioned the custom of the Indians, who always remain silent for some time, before they give an answer to a question. When he resided in France as a minister from this country, it has been thought that he was somewhat intoxicated by the unbounded applauses which he received, and was too much disposed to adopt the manners of the French. One of his colleagues was immersed in the pleasures of a voluntuous city, and between himself and the other, Mr. Lec, there was some collision.

He published experiments and observations on electricity, made at Philadelphia, in two parts. 4to., 1753; new experiments, 1754; a historical view of the constitution and government of Pennsylvania, 1759; the interest of Great Britain considered with respect to her colonies, 1760; his experiments, with the addition of explanatory notes, and letters and papers on philosophical subjects, 1769; political, miscellaneous, and philosophical pieces, 1779; and several papers in the transactions of the American philosophical society. Two volumes of his essays, with his life, brought down by himself to the year 1730, were published in England in 1792. A collection of his works was first published in London in 1806, entitled, the complete works, in philosophy, politics, and morals, of Dr. Franklin, first collected and arranged, with a memoir of him, 3 vols., 8vo. - Franklin's Life; Holmes' Life of Stiles, 309, 310.

FRANKLIN, JAMES, a brother of Benjamin, published a newspaper in Boston in 1721, and the Rhode Island Gazette in 1732, the first paper in that State.

FRANKLIN, WILLIAM the last royal governor of New Jersey, the son of Dr. Franklin, died in England Nov. 17, 1813, aged 82. He was born about 1731. He was a captain in the French war, and served at Ticonderoga. After the peace of Paris he accompanied his father to England. Going to Scotland, he became acquainted with the Earl of Bute, who recommended him to Lord Halifax, and by the latter he was appointed governor of New Jersey in 1763. He continued in office, firm in loyalty, till the beginning of the Revolution, when the whigs, in July, 1776, sent him to Connecticut. On his release he sailed to England, and obtained a pension for his losses. His first wife was a West Indian, by whom he

any other person. If men are so wicked with | land. His son, William Temple Franklin, editor of the works of Dr. F., died at Paris May 25. 1823. - Pub. Char. IV. 189-203.

> FRANKLIN, WILLIAM, a botanist, died at Franklin Sept. 1, 1819. He was born near Wilmington, Delaware; was a surgeon in the navy before 1812, and during the war was stationed at St. Mary's. He explored Florida, Georgia, and South Carolina. He was surgeon in the frigate Congress, sent to South America in 1818; and one of the scientific men of the expedition to Red Stone river in 1819, but illness compelled him to leave his companions in Missouri.

> FRAZAR, REBECCA, Miss, died in Duxbury in 1840, aged 72, much esteemed. She left 500 dollars to the church for the communion service, and the same sum to the Pilgrim society at Plymouth.

FREEMAN, NATHANIEL, a physician and brigadier-general, died Sept. 27, 1820, aged 66. He was a descendant of Edmund F., an early settler of Sandwich, Mass., and whose sons, John and Edmund, married the daughters of Gov. Prince. He was born at Dennis in April, 1741, and soon afterwards his father removed to Mansfield, Conn. Having studied medicine with Dr. Cobb, of Thompson, he settled in Sandwich. Being a patriot of the Revolution, he performed various important services for his country as a member of the legislature and as colonel of the militia. He was also register of probate forty-seven years, and judge of the common pleas thirty years. At the age of sixty-three he retired from the practice of physic. By two marriages he had twenty children, eighteen of whom lived to adult age. He was a brother of Jonathan F., of Hanover, N. H. He had collected a large library in medicine and theology. In early life he joined a Calvinistic church; in his meridian he became a follower of Priestley; at a later period he returned to his first faith, in which h many years and died. jraphy. Thacher's Medica

FREEMAN, SAMUEL, judge, died at Portland in June, 1831, aged 88. He was a descendant of Samuel F., of Watertown in 1630, and was the son of Enoch Freeman, judge of the court of cormon pleas and of probate, who died at Portland Sept. 2, 1788, aged 81. He was judge of probate many years. He published the town officer, 6th edit.; American clerk's magazine, 6th edit., 1805.

FREEMAN, James, D.D., pastor of the stone chapel society, Boston, died Nov. 14, 1835, aged 76. He was born in Charlestown in 1759, was graduated at Harvard college in 1777, and in 1782 became pastor of his church. The liturgy he altered so as to conform to the Unitarian or Socinian doctrine; and as Bishop Provost declined to ordain him, he was ordained by his society alone Nov. 18, 1787. This chapel was formerly had a son; his second wife was a native of Ire- called King's chapel. The first Episcopal church klin, editor ris May 25, st, died at near Wila the navy stationed at corgia, and the frigate 1818; and pedition to s compelled ıri.

Duxbury in left 500 dolservice, and t Plymouth. an and briged 66. He early settler , John and Gov. Prince. 1, and soon sfield, Conn. . Cobb, of Being a pat-various immember of militia. He n years, and irs. At the e practice of twenty chillt age. He nover, N. H. edicine and a Calvinistie follower of d to his first and died. - at Portland escendant of nd was the he court of ied at Portas judge of d the town s magazine, of the stone 1835, aged n 1759, was 777, and in The liturgy Unitarian or ost declined his society as formerly opal church in New England thus became the first Unitarian. He had two colleagues, Mr. Cary and Mr. Greenwood. He was one of the founders of the Massachusetts historical society, and a memoir of him by Mr. Greenwood is in historical collections, 3d series, vol. v. He published two volumes of sermons in 1812 and 1829; and in 1832 he published both, with a sermon on necessity, in one

FREEMAN, SARAII, the widow of Jonathan F., one of the first settlers of Hanover, N. II., died in Oct., 1846, aged 97. She was a woman of eminent piety; her husband was long a respected magistrate and judge. Of their sons, Peyton R. is an aged lawyer in Portsmouth, and Asa a lawyer in Dover, and another son a physician in Ballston, N. Y.

FREEMAN, CHARLES, minister of Limerick, Me., died in 1853, aged about 61. He was the son of Judge F., of Portland, was graduated at Bowdoin college in 1812, and ordained in 1820. He was one of the oldest of ministers in Maine, one of seven who had never changed their parish. He published an account of Limerick in the Maine historical collections, vol. 1.

FREEMAN, NATHANIEL, died at Easton, Conn., June 23, 1854, aged 76, long the minister of Easton and Greenfield, an earnest and efficient preacher. In the view of death he had peace.

FRELINGHUYSEN, THEODORE JAMES, minister of the Reformed Dutch church at Raritan, New Jersey, died in 1754. He came from Holland in the year 1720. His zealous labors in preaching the pure doctrines of the gospel, especially in inculcating the necessity of an entire renovation of the corrupt heart, were eminently usefal in a number of towns. He was a member of the assembly of Dutch ministers in 1738, which formed the plan of a ceetus, or assembly of ministers and elders in this country, though subordinate to the classis of Amsterdam. This proposition convulsed the Dutch churches in America, for it was apprehended, and the apprehension was verified, that these churches would be led in time to throw off entirely their subject a to a distant ecclesiastical body. Mr. Frelinghuysen was an able, evangelical, and eminently successful preacher. He left five sons, all ministers, and two daughters, married to ministers. Among his sons were Rev. Theodore F., minister of Albany, eloquent, active, and pious, succeeded by Westerlo, and Rev. John F., who preached at Raritan. - Christian's Magazine, II. 4, 5; Prince's Christian History for 1744.

FRELINGHUYSEN, FREDERIC, general, a senator of the United States, died April 13, 1804, aged 51 on the day of his death. He was the son of Rev. John F., of Raritan, and grandson of the preceding. He graduated at Princeton in for his country. As a captain, it is said that in the battle of Trenton, Dec., 1776, he shot Rhalle, the Hessian commander. He was a member of the old congress, before the adoption of the constitution, in 1789, and was afterwards, under the administration of Washington, a senator from New Jersey. Of Princeton college he was one of the trustees. He was buried near Millstone. His son, Theodore Frelinghuysen, is president of New Brunswick college.

FRELINGHUYSEN, CHARLOTTE, the wife of President Theodore Frelinghuysen, died at New Brunswick, N. J., April 11, 1854. She was the chosen and suitable companion of a man of eminence and worth; adorned with every excellence; the delight of her many friends. Her maiden name was Mercer, and she was a native of Newark.

FRENCH, JONATHAN, minister of Andover, Mass., a descendant of John F., who lived in Dorchester in 1639, was born at Braintree Jan. 30, 1740, graduated at Harvard college in 1771, was ordained Sept. 22, 1772, as successor of Samuel Phillips, and died July 28, 1809, aged 69. His daughter married Rev. Samuel Stearns, of Bedford; his son, Dr. Jonathan, is the minister of North Hampton, N. II. At the age of sixteen Mr. French was a soldier, a drummer in the French war, and afterwards was stationed as a sergeant at eastle William, near Boston. His desire to obtain an education, although at an uncommon age, was encouraged by several literary gentlemen, with whom he became acquainted at the castle. Gov. Bowdoin liberally assisted him. In the Revolutionary war he partook of the patriotic spirit of that period. On hearing of the battle of Breed's hill, he took his musket and his surgical instruments and repaired to the army. He was a faithful, useful preacher. During his ministry five hundred and six were added to the church. He published a sermon against extortion, 1777; at the ordination of Daniel Oliver, 1787; of Abiel Abbot, 1795; of James Kendall, 1800; of Jonathan French, 1801; at the election, 1796; at a thanksgiving, 1798; at a lecture, 1805. - Alden's Memoirs of F.

FRENCII, HENRY S. G., missionary at Siam died Feb. 14, 1842, aged 35. Born in Boscawen, N. H., he graduated at Yale in 1834, and at Andover theological seminary in 1837; and sailed for Siam in 1839. Though he looked for years of labor for the benefit of the heathen, they were but few. He said to his alarmed Siamese attendants, "I am not afraid to die."

FRENEAU, PHILIP, a poet, died at Freehold, N. J., Dec. 18, 1832, aged about 80; in consequence of losing his way and getting mired in a bog in the evening. He was born in New Jersey, and graduated at Princeton in 1771. His poems 1770. In the war of the Revolution he fought were written between 1768 and 1793. The first edition was in 1786; the third was published in | death of Moses Parsons, 1784; two sermons on a 1809, in 2 vols. | day of public fasting; at a thanksgiving; an FRENEAU, Peter, brother of the preceding, died in Charleston, S. C., in Oct., 1814, aged 56. Before 1795 he edited and published the Charleston City Gazette, which he sold out in 1810. Mr. Jefferson appointed him commissioner of the loan office in South Carolina. He was a forcible writer and a man of great learning. He knew the Greek, Latin, Freuch, Spanish, Portuguese, and Italian languages. By residing a few days in his cottage out the city he imbibed a fatal miasma.

FREY, JOSEPH S. C. F., died in Pontiae, Mich., June 5, 1850, aged 78, known in England as "The converted Jew." He was active in forming the London Jews' society; he came to this country in 1816. He was a Baptist minister. He published several works; among them, "Joseph and Benjamin," examining the argument of the Jews.

FRINK, JOHN, a distinguished physician, died at Rutland, Worcester county, Mass., in 1807.

FRISBIE, LEVI, minister of Ipswich, Mass., died Feb. 25, 1806, aged 57. He was the son of Elisha F. of Branford, Conn., and was born in April, 1748. In 1767, having the charucter of a pious youth of promising talents, he was placed under the patronage of Dr. Wheeloek, with a special view to the missionary service. He entered Yale college, where he continued more than three years; but his collegial studies were completed at Dartmouth college, where he was graduated, in the first class, in 1771. In June, 1772, he and David Macelure set out on a mission to the Delaware Indians west of the Ohio, and he returned in Oct., 1773. He was ordained in 1775, and then continued his missionary career. After extending his labora to different parts of the country and into Canada, the convulsed state of America obstructed his progress. He was settled the minister of the first church in Ipswich, as successor of Nathaniel Rogers, Feb. 7, 1776. His widow died April, 1828, aged 77. He was a faithful, evangelical preacher, whose labors at different periods it pleased God to render eminently useful. His discerning mind was strengthened by a close application to study, and furnished with the most useful knowledge; and all his acquisitions were conscerated to moral and religious purposes. His life displayed the humility, meekness, and benevolence of the Christian. Interesting and instructive in conversation, remarkably tender of the character of others, upright, sincere, and affectionate in all the relations of life, he was respected and beloved. His distrust of himself led him to place his entire dependence upon God, and to ascribe all hope to the riches of Divine mercy in Jesus, the Redeemer. He death of Moses Parsons, 1784; two sermons on a day of public fasting; at a thanksgiving; an eulogy on Washington, 1800; before the society for propagating the gospel among the American Indians, 1804. —Hantington's Funeral Sermon; Panoplist, I. 471, 572; Wheelock's Narratices.

FRISBIE, Levi, professor of moral philosophy at Harvard college, died at Cambridge July 9, 1822, aged 38. If was the son of the preceding, and was born at Ipswich in 1784. After graduating in 1802, he engaged in the study of the law; but an affection of his eyes, which proved to be a permanent evil, obliged him to desist. In 1805 he was appointed Latin tutor, and professor of moral philosophy in 1817. He was an admirable teacher and lecturer. His inaugural address was published in 1817, and after his death Prof. Norton published his miscellaneous writings, with notices of his life and character, 8vo., 1823.

FRŒLIGH, SOLOMON, D. D., minister of Seramenburg, N. J., died Oct. 8, 1827, aged 78. He was a pastor forty years. He had an honorary degree at Princeton in 1774.

FROMENTIN, ELIGIUS, senator of the United States from Louisiana, died Oct. 6, 1822. He was elected in 1813, and was succeeded by James Brown in 1819. In 1821 he succeeded Mr. Winston as judge of the criminal court of Orleans; and was appointed judge of the western district of Florida. Gen. Jackson, the governor, having demanded in vain certain documents of Col. Callava, the late Spanish governor, threw him into prison, from which he was relieved by a writ of habeas corpus, granted by Judge Fromentin. This act of judicial authority occasioned a long and bitter altereation with the general, who elaimed the supreme power. For the sake of quietness, Judge F. resigned his office and returned to the practice of the law at New Orleans, where he died of the vellow fever. His wife died the preceding day. They had no children. He is a remarkable instance of the instability of human affairs. He published observations on a bill respecting land titles in Orleans.

FRONTENAC, Louis, count, governor-general of Canada, succeeded Coureelles in 1678, and in the spring of the following year built upon lake Ontario the fort which bore his name. He was recalled in 1682, but was reinstated in his office in 1689. He died Nov. 28, 1698, aged 77. His exertions conduced in a great degree to the protection and prosperity of Canada; but he was a man of haughty feelings, suspicious, revengeful, and outrageous. Notwithstanding his professions of regard to religion, it was very evident, that he was almost completely under the influence of ambition. — Charlevoix, I. 444-469, 543-570; II. 43, 237; Holmes.

of Divine mercy in Jesus, the Redeemer. He FROST, John, brigadier-general, died in Kit-published an oration on the peace, 1783; on the tery, Me., in 1810, aged 72. Born in that town, rmons on a giving; an the society ie American al Sermon; 'arratives. l philosophy dge July 9, e preceding,

After graduof the law; oved to be a st. In 1805 professor of ın admirable address was death Prof. vritings, with , 1823.

minister of 27, aged 78. d an honor-of the United

3, 1822. He led by James led Mr. Winof Orleans; estern district ernor, having ents of Col. , threw him ved by a writ e Fromentin. ioned a long general, who the sake of ffice and re-New Orleans, His wife died hildren. He ability of hu-governor-genin 1678, and r built upon s name. He stated in his 698, aged 77. legree to the ; but he was ıs, revengeful, ns professions dent, that he luence of am-543-570; IL.

ions on a bill

died in Kitin that town, lutionary wars, and fought in various battles. He was present with his regiment at the surrender of Burgoyne. After the close of the war he sustained various civil offices.

FROST, EDMUND, missionary to Bombay, was a native of Brattleborough, Vt., and, after graduating at Middlebury college, studied theology at Andover. He was ordained at Salem Sept. 25, 1823, and embarked with his wife, a native of Chester, N. H., on the 27th, for Calcutta. June 28, 1824, he arrived at Bombay, and joined the missionaries, Mr. Hall and Mr. Graves. But he died of a pulmonary complaint Oct. 18, 1825.

FROST, John, an early preacher in Oneida county, N. Y., was a graduate of Williams college in 1806; was of the theological seminary, at Andover, in 1810; and died at Waterville, N. Y., in 1842, aged about 56. For nearly twenty years he was pastor of the church in Whitesborough. He was a preacher at Waterville, at the time of his death.

FROTHINGHAM, John, judge, died at Portland in 1826, aged 76. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1771. He discharged well the duties of various offices. He was judge of probate from 1804 to 1811, when that court was dissolved.

FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM, minister of Belfast, Me., died June 24, 1852, aged 77. Born in Cambridge, Mass., he graduated in 1799; was minister of the third church in Lynn from 1804 to 1817; and was settled at Belfast in 1819.

FRYE, JONATHAN, chaplain to Capt. Lovewell's company, was a native of Andover, and graduated at Harvard college in 1723. In Lovewell's fight with the Indians at Pickwacket, or Fryeburg, in May, 1725, he was killed.

FRYE, Joseph, general, died in 1794, aged 68. He was born in Andover, Mass., in April, 1711, and was colonel at the capture of fort William Henry in 1757. In 1775, he was provincial major-general. He removed to Fryeburg among the early settlers; and from him the town reecived its name.

FRYE, JAMES, colonel, was born at Andover, and died Jan. 8, 1776, aged 66. He was a colonel in the battle of Bunker Hill, and animated his soldiers, saying: "This day, thirty years ago, I was at the taking of Louisburg, when it was surrendered to us. It is a fortunate day for America. We shall certainly heat the enemy." His mistake is no reproach to his bravery.

FRYE, PETER, died in Camberwell, near London, on his birth-day, Feb. 1, 1820, aged 97. Born in Andover, he graduated at Harvard in 1744, and was schoolmaster in Salem seven years, justice of the common pleas, and register of probate for Essex. He was a loyalist.

FRYE, SIMON, judge, was among the first set-

he served as an officer in the French and Revo- | died in Nov., 1822, aged 82. He was a patriot of the Revolution, and sustained various important offices; was a member of the council, and judge of the common pleas for York, and chief justice of Oxford. He reared up a numerous

> FULLER, SAMUEL, a physician, one of the settlers of Plymouth in 1620, was a regularly educated physician. His practice extended to Massachusetts. A prevailing sickness called him to Salem in 1628 and 1629. Besides being a surgeon and physician, he was also a useful deacon of the church. He died of a fever at Plymouth in 1633. He bequeathed to his "sister," Alice Bradford, 12 shillings to buy a pair of gloves. His wife then was her sister. - Thacher.

FULLER, SAMUEL, first minister of Middleborough, Mass., died Aug. 17, 1695, aged 70. He was a deacon at Plymouth, and emigrated to Middleborough, and occasionally preached and was very useful for sixteen years, until a church was formed and he was ordained in 1694.

FULLER, ABRAHAM, judge, died in Newton, Mass., in 1794. He was a patriot of the Revolution, and held various public offices. As head of the committee of the provincial congress at Concord, he took charge of the military papers and removed them safely, so that they escaped the hands of the British troops. He left 1,000 dollars toward founding an academy in Newton.

FULLER, TIMOTHY, died at Groton, Mass., Oct. 1, 1835, aged 57. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1801, a lawyer, and a member of congress from 1817 to 1825. Madame D'Ossoli was his sister.

FULLER, HENRY H., died at Concord, Mass., Sept. 15, 1852, aged 62. Born in Princeton, he graduated at Harvard in 1811. His practice as a lawyer was at the Suffolk bar: he was thirty years in the profession.

FULTON, ROBERT, a celebrated engineer, died Feb. 14, 1815, aged 50. He was of Irish descent, and was born in Little Britain, Lancaster county, Penn., in 1765. His genius disclosed itself at an early period. He was attracted to the shops of mechanics; and at the age of seventeen he painted landscapes and portraits in Philadelphia. Thus he was enabled in part to purchase a small farm for his widowed mother. At the age of twenty-one he, by the advice of his friends, repaired to London to place himself under the guidance of Mr. West, the painter, and by him was kindly received and admitted as an inmate of his house for several years. Prosecuting his business as a painter, he spent two years in Devonshire, where he became acquainted with the Duke of Bridgewater and with Lord Stanhope. well known for his attachment to the mechanic arts. In 1793 he engaged in the project of imtlers of the town of Fryeburg, Me., where he proving inland navigation, and in 1794 obtained patents for a double inclined plane, and for machines for spinning flax and making ropes. The subject of canals now chiefly occupied his attention, and at this period, in 1796, his work on canals was published. In his profession of a civil engineer he was greatly benefited by his skill in drawing and painting. He went to Paris in 1797, and, being received into the family of Joel Barlow, he there spent seven years, studying chemistry, physics, and mathematics, and acquiring a knowledge of the French, Italian, and German languages. To him Barlow dedicated his Columbiad. In Dec., 1797, he made his first experiment on submarine explosion in the Scine, but without success. His plan for a submarine boat was afterwards perfected. In 1801, while he was residing with his friend, Mr. Barlow, he met in l'aris Cheacellor Livingston, the American minister, who explained to him the importance in America of ravigating boats by steam. Mr. Fulton had alre-dy conceived the project as early as 1793, as appears by his letter to Lord Stanhope, Sept. 30. He low engaged anew in the affair, and at the con. non expense of himself and Mr. Livingston buil: a boat on the Scine in 1803, and successfully navigated the river. The principles of the steam engine he did not invent; he claimed only the app"cation of water-wheels for propelling vessels. In J'ec., 1806, he returned to this country; and he and Mr. Livingston built in 1807 the first boat, the Clermont, one hundred and thirty feet in length, which navigated the Hudson at the rate of five miles an hour. In Feb., 1809, he took out his first patent. In 1810 he published his torpedo war. In 1811 and 1812 he built two steam ferry-boats for crossing the Hudson; he contrived also very ingenious floating docks for the reception of these boats. In 1813 he obtained a patent for a submarine battery. Conceiving the plan of a steam man-of-war, the government in March, 1814, appropriated 320,000 dollars for constructing it, and appointed him the engineer. In about four months she was launched, with the name of Fulton, the first. He was employed in improving his submarine boat, when he died suddenly. His wife, whom he married in 1808, was Harriet, daughter of Walter Livingston. His features were strong and interesting; his manners easy; his temper mild; in his domestie and social relations he was affectionate, kind, and generous. The two inventions of the cotton gin by Whitney and of steam navigation by Fulton have an incalculable effect on the prosperity of this country, and may show the bearing of genius, invention, science, and skill on national wealth. The following is a brief explanation of some of his inventions, besides the steamboat: 1. By the machine for making ropes, which can stand in a room forty feet square, the ropeyarns are put on

2. The submarine boat had a main-sail and jib like a sloop; the mast and sails could be taken in and the heat dive under water in one minute, and be rowed and steered by a compass. Thus a torpedo could be fixed to the bottom of ships of war. Mr. F. and three others continued under water one hour. He supposed, that five men might continue under water six hours and rise fifteen miles from the place, where they went down. 3. The torpedo is a copper case, containing fifty or one hundred pounds of powder, discharged by a gun lock, which strikes by means of clockwork, set to any short time. He proposed to attach it to a rope of sixty or eighty feet, and to fasten it by a gun harpoon to the bow of a vessel, whose motion would draw it under her bottom, and thus she would be blown up. A few row-boats, each with a torpedo, might attack a ship of war, and be pretty sure to succeed. -Colden's Life of Fulton; Encyc. American.

FURMAN, RICHARD, D. D., an eminent Baptist minister of Charleston, S. C., died Aug. 25, 1825. He had been nearly forty years the pastor of a church in Charleston, having previously been the minister of Statesburgh from 1774 to 1787. He furnished Ramsay with a statistical account of Camden, and published a sermon on the death of Oliver Hart, 1796.

GADSDEN, CHRISTOPHER, licutenant-governor of South Carolina, and a distinguished friend of his country, died Aug. 28, 1805, aged 81. He was born in Charleston in 1724. He was appointed one of the delegates to the congress, which met at New York in Oct., 1765, to petition against the stamp act. He was also chosen a member of the congress which met in 1774. He was among the first, who openly advocated republican principles, and wished to make his country independent of the monarchical government of Great Britain. "The decisive genius," says Ramsay, " of Christopher Gadsden in the south and of John Adams in the north at a much earlier day might have desired a complete separation of America from Great Britain; but till the year 1776, the rejection of the second petition of congress, and the appearance of l'aine's pamphlet, common sense, a reconciliation with the mother country was the unanimous wish of almost every other American." During the siege of Charleston in 1780 he remained within the lines with five of the council, while Governor Rutledge, with the other three, left the city, at the carnest request of Gen. Lincoln. Several months after the capitulation he was taken out of his bed, Aug. 27th, and with most of the civil and military officers transported in a guard ship to St. Augustine. This was done by the order of Lord Cornwallis, and it was in violation of the rights of prisoners on parole. Guards were left at their houses, and spools, and any sized cordage made by one man. the private papers of some of them were examail and jib e taken in inute, and Thus a torof ships of ued under five men s and rise they went se, containowder, disy means of e proposed y feet, and w of a veser her hotip. A few lit attack a succeed. nerican.

ninent Baped Aug. 25, s the pastor viously been 74 to 1787. l account of the death of enant-goverrished friend ged 81. He He was aphe congress, 5, to petition so chosen a n 1774. He cated repube his country vernment of " says Ramne south and much earlier eparation of till the year ition of con-'s pamphlet, the mother almost every of Charlesines with five dge, with the st request of r the capitud, Aug. 27th, litary officers . Augustine. l Cornwallis, of prisoners houses, and were exam-

such was his indignation at the ungenerous treatment which he had received, that he refused to accept it, and bore a close confinement in the eastle for forty-two weeks with the greatest fortitude. In 1782, when it became necessary, by the rotation established, to choose a new governor, he was elected to this office; but he declined it on account of his age. He continued, however, his exertions for the good of his country, both in the assembly and council, and notwithstanding the injuries he had suffered and the immense loss of his property he zealously opposed the law for confiscating the estates of the adherents to the British government, and contended, that sound policy required us to forgive and forget. - Boicen's Fun. Ser.; Ramsay's Rev. of Car. 1. 35, 55, 61, 164; H. 125, 349.

GADSDEN, CHRISTOPHER, D. D., bishop of South Carolina, died at Charleston June 25, 1852, aged 67. He was a grandson of Gen. Christopher G., and was graduated at Yale in 1804. After having the charge of several churches he was elected bishop in 1840, as successor of Bishop Bowen. He was a man of learning, cloquence, and piety. He published a sermon on the death of Bishop Dehon, 1817.

GAFFIELD, BENJAMIN, was drowned in attempting to cross the river in order to escape the Indians, who attacked Hinsdale, N. H., in 1755. His wife, Eunice, was carried a prisoner to Canada and sold to the French. She was sent to France, and thence to England; and at last was liberated. She married a Mr. Pratt, and died at Dana, Mass., in 1830, aged 97.

GAGE, THOMAS, or Friar Thomas of St. Mary, a Catholic missionary, was an Irishman educated at St. Omer's, and joined the Dominicans. In 1625 he went out from Spain to Mexico with a band of missionaries, destined for the Philippine islands; but, not relishing so distant a mission, he fled to Gautimala, where and in other neighboring places he lived as a missionary to the Indians ten or eleven years. In 1637 he escaped to England and became a Protestant minister at Deal. He published a new survey of the West Indies, giving an account of his mission to New Spain and of his travels; second edit. 1655; 4th edit. 1699; 4th edit. in French, 1720. It is a curious and interesting book; though Clavigero, an Italian, might well after the laspe of one hundred years decry it and represent it as full of falsehood, for it unveils much of the secrets of Catholicism and describes the pope as antichrist.

GAGE, THOMAS, the last governor of Massachusetts appointed by the king, died in England in April, 1787. After the conquest of Canada in 1760, he was appointed governor of Montreal. At the departure of Gen. Amherst in 1763, he succeeded him as commander in chief of his ined. A parole was offered at St. Augustine; but | majesty's forces in America; he was appointed governor of Massachusetts, and arrived at Boston May 13, 1774. He was a suitable instrument for executing the purposes of a tyrannical ministry and parliament. Several regiments soon followed him, and he began to repair the fortifications upon Boston neck. The powder in the arsenal in Charlestown was seized; detatelments were sent out to take possession of the stores in Salem and Concord; and the battle of Lexington became the signal of war. In May, 1775, the provincial congress declared Gage to be an inveterate enemy of the country, disqualified from serving the colony as governor, and unworthy of obedience. From this time the exercise of his funetions was confined to Boston. In June he issued a proclamation, offering pardon to all the rebels, excepting Samuel Adams and John Hancock, and ordered the use of the martial law. But the affair of Breed's hill a few days afterwards proved to him that he had mistaken the character of the Americans. In Oct. he embarked for England, and was succeeded in the command by Sir William Howe. His conduct toward the inhabitants of Boston, in promising them liberty to leave the town on the delivery of their arms, and then detaining many of them, has been reprobated for its treachery. - Stedman, 1. 95-110; Gordon; Holmes; Marshall, 1. 391, 446; 11. 163, 185, 276; III. 21; Warren, I. 127-132, 241.

GAGER, WILLIAM, an eminent surgeon and physician, came to Charlestown, Mass., in 1630, but soon fell a victim to the spotted fever. He died Sept. 20, 1630.

GAGER, WILLIAM, minister of Lebanon, Conn., died in 1739, aged about 39. He graduated at Yale in 1721, and was the predecessor of E. Wheelock.

GAILLARD, JOHN, senator of the United States from South Carolina, was a native of St. Stephen's district. He voted for the war of 1812. Called repeatedly to preside over the senate in the absence of the vice president, he presided with great impartiality. He died at Washington Feb. 26, 1826. He was a man of a vigorous understanding and inflexible integrity; firm in friendship; fixed in his political principles; yet in all the conflicts of parties maintaining the courtesy, which is too often forgotten.

GAINE, HUGH, a bookseller in New York, was born in Ireland. In 1752 he published the New York Mercury, and soon opened a book-shop in Hanover square, and continued in his profitable business forty years. He died April 25, 1807, aged 81. In a poetical version of his petition at the close of the war, he is made to express the principle by which many others have been found to be governed:

And I always adhere to the sword that is longest,
And stick to the party that 's like to be strongest." Thomas, II. 103, 301, 483.

GAINES, EDMUND PENDLETON, major-general, died at New Orleans June 6, 1849, aged 72. Born in Culpepper county, Va., he was named after his grand-uncle. His father removed to East Tennessee, where the son was a lieutenant in Indian warfare at the age of eighteen. In 1801 he was appointed military collector at In 1806 he arrested Aaron Burr. Afterwards he became a lawyer; but in the war of 1812 he resumed his position of captain. He commanded a regiment at the battle of Chrystler's Field in 1813. The next year he was a brigadier-general, and made a successful defence at fort Erie; but, being wounded by a shell, he resigned the command to Gen. Ripley. Under Jackson he was engaged in the Creek and Seminole wars. He was a man of great simplicity of character, and of integrity. A short time before his death his wife came in possession of a large property.

GAIR, THOMAS, pastor of the second Baptist church in Boston, died April 27, 1790, aged 35. Born in Boston, he graduated at Providence in 1777, and was for ten years a minister at Medfield. He succeeded Mr. Skillman in B. in 1787; and Dr. Baldwin was his successor. He published a sermon at the ordination of T. Green, 1783.

GALATZIN, DEMETRIUS AUGUSTINE, died at Loretto, Cambria Co., Pa., May 6, 1840, aged 70. He was born at Munster in Germany in 1770. His father was Prince de Galitzin, of Russia. He arrived at Baitimore in 1792; having studied theology, he took up his abode in the wilderness of Cambria county, and gathered around him a Catholie population of three or four thousand. It is said he expended a princely fortune. In a rude log cabin he spent thirty years.

GALE, BENJAMIN, a physician, was born on Long Island in 1715, but his parents soon removed to Goshen, N. Y. He graduated at Yale college in 1733. Having studied with Jared Eliot, of Killingsworth, he married his daughter, and settled in that town, where he died in 1790, aged 75. He was an eminent physician and agriculturist, and was deeply concerned also in politics. He invented a drill plough; he wrote a dissertation on the prophecies; he published a treatise on the inoculation for the small pox, about 1750. His method of a preparatory course of mercury was commended in England. The same was employed in 1745 by Dr. Thompson, of Pennsylvania, and Dr. Morison, of Long Island. In the tr sactions of the royal society, vol. Lv., he publish historical memoirs on inoculation, and account of the cure by salt of the bite of the rattlesnake. - Thacher.

GALES, JOSEPH, died at Raleigh, N. C., Aug. 24, 1841, aged 80. He was the father of Joseph G., of Washington. Born in England, he was a printer and bookseller in Sheffield; he emigrated to Philadelphia in 1704, and in 1790 to Raleigh. For forty years he published the Raleigh Register. He was blameless, benevolent, piqus.

GALLATIN, ALBERT, died at the house of his son-in-lew in Astoria, L. I., Aug. 12, 1849, aged 88. He was born in Switzerland Jan. 29, 1761. His ancestor, John G., secretary to the Duke of Savoy, emigrated to Geneva. Graduating in 1779, he came to America in 1780. He commanded a fort at Machias; then became a tutor in French at Cambridge; thence he proceeded to Virginia. Receiving now his patrimony, he made the purchase of new lands. He settled in Favette county, on the Monongaliela, and became soon a prominent member of the legislature of Pennsylvania, and then a member of congress. In 1793 he was a senator of the United States for a short time. Mr. Jefferson called him in 1801 to be secretary of the treasury. In 1813 he was sent with others to negotiate with Great Britain under the mediation of Russia; and he afterwards assisted at Ghent in the treaty of peace. From 1810 to 1823 he was minister at Paris. After 1828 he became a citizen of New York. He was president of the national bank from 1831 till he was succeeded by his son James in 1839; he was also president of the New York historical society. His wife, Hannah, daughter of James Nicholson, of New York, whom he married about 1794, died May 14, 1849, aged 82; amidst the varied scenes of her life she was never unmindful of her religious duties. He wrote against war and on the currency, and published elaborate essays on the Indian languages. - Evening Post; Boston Advertiser, Aug. 15.

GALLAUIET, PETER W., died at Washington May 17, 1843, aged 88. He was a soldier of the Revolution. He toiled untiringly in establishing the Washington manual labor school, and the Howard institution was acquainted with his devotion to the cause of Christian charity.

GALLAUDET, THOMAS HOPKINS, LL. D., died in Hartford Sept. 10, 1851, aged 63. Born in Philadelphia Dec. 10, 1787, he graduated at Yale in 1805. After serving some years as a tutor, he studied theology, and was licensed to preach in 1814. But now he turned his attention to the instruction of deaf mutes. After visiting Europe, he opened the asylum for the deaf and dumb at Hartford in 1817, but from ill health resigned his place in 1830, and engaged in other philanthropic labors. In 1838 he was chaplain at the insane hospital. H. Barnard delivered a discourse on his character in 1852. His monument was erected by the deaf and dumb Sept. 0, 1854. He published various discourses in 1818, 1821, 1824; 6 vols. of annals of the deaf and dumb.

GALLISON, John, a lawyer, was born at Mare emigrated to Raleigh. eigh Regisious.

iouse of his 1849, aged n. 29, 1761. e Duke of duating in

He comame a tutor roceeded to ny, he made led in Fayand became gislature of of congress. nited States lled him in In 1813 he with Great sia; and he

e treaty of minister at

izen of New itional bank is son James New York daughter of om he mar-19, aged 82; ife she was duties. He cy, and pubn languages.

r, Aug. 15. at Washinga soldier of ly in estabr school, and ted with his arity.

s, LL. D., d 63. Born graduated at years as a licensed to d his atten-. After visfor the deaf but from ill d engaged in ard delivered His monuumb Sept. 6, rses in 1818, the deaf and he was chap-

born at Mar-

blehead in Oct., 1788. His mother was sister of Judge Sewall. After practising law for a short time in Marblehead, he removed to Boston, where, for a year or two, he was the editor of the Weekly Messenger. He died Dec. 25, 1820, aged 32. He published reports of cases decided in the circuit court, 2 vols., 1817; address to the peace society, 1820.

GALLOWAY, JOSEPH, an eminent lawyer in Pennsylvania, died in England in Sept., 1803. He was a member of the assembly of that province in May, 1764, when the subject of a petition in favor of a change of the government from that of a proprietary to a royal government was discussed. John Dickinson was opposed to the petition, and Mr. Galloway answered his speech with much warmth. Both speeches were printed, and Mr. Dickinson, after an ineffectual challenge, wrote his "Answer to a piece, called the speech of Joseph Galloway." After having been for some time speaker of the house of assembly, he was appointed a member of the first congress in He afterwards deserted the American cause, joining the British at New York in Dec., 1776, and remained with the army till June, 1778. His counsels and exertions were of little avail against the resolute spirit of millions, determined to be free. By his own account he abandoned an estate of the value of 40,000 pounds. In 1779 he was examined before the house of commons on the transactions in America, and his representation did not do much credit to the British commanders. The preface to his speech, which was published in 1764, was written by Dr. Franklin, who supported the same cause. It presents a history of the proprietary government. Mr. Galloway published also observations on the conduct of Sir William Howe, in which, notwithstanding his attachments, he discloses and reprehends the shocking brutality of the British troops, especially in New Jersey. The following work, it is believed, is the production of his pen: brief commentaries upon such parts of the revelation and other prophecies as immediately refer to the present times, London, 1802. He published a letter to Howe on his naval conduct; letters to a nobleman on the conduct of war in the middle colonies, 1779; reply to the observations of Gen. Howe; cool thoughts on the consequences of American independence; candid examination of the claims of Great Britain and her colonies; reflections on the American rebellion, London, 1780. - Hist. Coll. II. 93; Monthly Review, XXXII. 67; LXI. 71; Franklin's Works, III. 163.

GALLUP, JOSEPH A., M. D., founder of the medical institution in Woodstock, Vt., died Oct. 12, 1849, aged 80.

GALUSHA, Jonas, governor of Vermont, died at Shaftsbury in Oct., 1834.

Boston, was the son of Dr. Wm. G., of Cambridge, who died Jan. 1, 1821, aged 76. He graduated at Harvard college in 1802, and died Oct. 5, 1818, aged 37. He published several articles in the New England journal of medicine, and some account of the fever of 1817 and 1818, with remarks on typhus.

GAMAGE, JONATHAN, died at Fryeburg in Aug., 1843, aged 90, in consequence of the excitement of attending the Bunker Hill celebration at Charlestown, occasioning the loss of reason. A fellow soldier of the same age, Josiah Cleaveland, died from the same cause.

GAMBOLD, JOHN, Moravian missionary, resided at Spring Place among the Cherokees in 1817, when he was visited by Mr. Cornelius. Hy his labors Mr. Hicks became a Christian convert. In 1827 he resided within thirty miles of Spring Place, at Oochelogy, and in that year he died, Nov. 6th, after a long period of weakness and He was a faithful servant of his suffering. Master.

GANNETT, CALEB, minister of Amherst and Cumberland, N. S., died at Cambridge April 25, 1818, aged 72. He was born in Bridgewater, Mass., Aug. 22, 1745, graduated at Harvard college in 1763, and was ordained Oct. 12, 1767; but from inadequate support returned to New England in 1771. For some years he was a tutor in the college, and steward from 1780 till his death. He married a daughter of President In the transactions of the American academy, vols. I. and II., he published observations of an eclipse, and two papers on the aurora borealis. — 2 Hist. Coll. VIII. 277-285.

GANO, John, minister in New York, died Aug. 10, 1804, aged 77. He collected the first Baptist society in that city, and was ordained its pastor in 1762. Early espousing the cause of his country in the contest with Great Britain, at the commencement of the war he joined the standard of freedom in the capacity of chaplain. His preaching contributed to impart a determined spirit to the soldiers, and he continued in the army till the conclusion of the war. When a lieutenant, after uttering some profane expressions, accosted him, saying, "Good morning, Dr. Good Man," he re-plied, "You pray early this morning." The reproved man said, "I beg your pardon."—"O," retorted Mr. G., "I cannot pardon you; earry your case to God." He left his society in New York in 1788, and removed to Kentucky. He died at Frankfort, resigned to the Divine will, and in the hope of everlasting blessedness in the presence of his Redeemer. Memoirs of his life, written principally by himself, were published in 12mo., 1806. — Gano's Memoirs.

GANO, STEPHEN, D. D., son of the preceding, died at Providence Aug. 28, 1818, aged 65, in the GAMAGE, WILLIAM, M. D., a physician in thirty-sixth year of his ministry. Besides editing the memoirs of his father, he published a sermon at the ordination of J. Bradley, 1801.

GANSEVOORT, PETER, Ja., brigadier-general, died July 2, 1812, aged 62. He was born in Albany July 17, 1749. With the rank of major he accompanied Montgomery to Canada in 1775. He commanded at fort Stanwix, as colonel, when it was besieged by St. Leger in 1777. He resolutely defended the post from Ang. 2 to 22, until the approach of Arnold dispersed the Indians and gave him relief. For his gallant defence he received the thanks of congress. In 1781 he was appointed brigadier-general by the State. After the war he was military agent and intrusted with other offices. He was brave, intelligent, and falthful, and highly respected.

GARDEN, ALEXANDER, an Episcopal minister. was born in Scotland in 1685, came to Charleston about 1720, and died in 1756, aged 70. He was the faithful commissary of the bishop of London for the Carolinas, Georgia, and the Bahama islands. He was a man of learning and of charity. A tenth of his income he gave to the poor. He published six letters to Mr. Whitefield, 1740; doctrine of justification vindicated; two sermons, 1742. - Ramsay, II. 10, 466.

GARDEN, ALEXANDER, D. D., F. R. S., a physician, was the son of Rev. A. G., of Hirse, Aberdeen, who died about 1784. Having studied physic at Edinburgh, he came to Charleston, S. C., about 1750, and by his practice of thirty years acquired a fortune. In 1783 he returned to Europe, and died in Loudon April 15, 1701, aged 63. He was much devoted to the study of natural history, particularly of botany, and made a number of communications on those subjects to his philosophical friends in Europe. In compliment to him the greatest botanist of the age gave the name of Gardenia to one of the most beautiful flowering shrubs in the world. He introduced into medical use the Virginia pink root as a vermifuge, and published in 1764 an account of its medical properties, with a botanical description; a second edition, 1772. - Thacher; Ramsay's Review of Medicine, 42, 44; Miller's Retrospect, I. 319.

GARDINER, CHRISTOPHER, an adventurer, to be remembered for nothing good, came to Massachusetts in 1630 with pretensions to piety, but bringing with him "a comely young woman, whom he called his cousin." He would have been better received in such a new colony as that of the Mormons in Utah, where there is no scruple about allowing seven wives. But in the old Bay State Gardiner was arrested in 1631 on the charge of having two wives in England. In revenge, he, in 1632, with Morton, presented a petition to the king against the colony, accusing the colonists of intended rebellion.

tient and New York, and a man of character and influence, died in 1663 at East Hampton, Long Island. A native of England, bred to the profession of arms, an engineer, he engaged in the wars of Holland, where he became connected with Peters, Davenport, and other Puritans, and was induced to proceed to Saybrook in the service of the patentees, in making a city, towns, and forts. He embarked with his wife, Mary Wilemson, an excellent Hollander lady, in 1635, and crossed the ocean in a small craft of twenty-five tons, and arriving at Saybrook Nov. 28, commenced its settlement. The next year he built the fort. His policy was to live in peace with the Indians. His son David, born April 29, 1636, was the first white child born in Connecticut. He purchased of the sachem Wyandanch the island now called Gardiner's Island, of three thousand acres. Here he settled as a farmer in 1639, the first English settlement in New York. In 1648 he became a proprietor of East Hampton, to which place he removed in 1653, and lived there ten years. His influence over the Montaukett Indians was great and important. All his large estate he bequeathed to his wife, who survived him two years; and, dying, Gardiner's Island was entailed upon her son David, and it has descended through eight proprictors, from David to John, and from John to David, to the present generation, the descent from father to son not having been broken, President Tyler married into this family. A memoir is in historical collections, 3d series, vol. x.

GARDINER, Sylvesten, a physician, was born in Rhode Island in 1717. His grandfather emigrated from England. Having studied his profession several years in France and England. he practised physic very successfully in Boston; he also established a very profitable drug-shop. Acquiring great wealth, he connected himself with the Plymouth land company, and purchased extensive tracts of land in Maine. At the commencement of the Revolution he was a tory refugee, and of his large estate was able to take with him only 400 pounds. His lands, about one hundred thousand acres, were confiscated and sold at auction; but his heirs, through some informality, were re-invested with the property. After the war he returned to Newport, where he died of a malignant fever, Aug. 8, 1786, nged 68. He displayed in his life the moral virtues and a regard to the duties of religion. In his will be bequeathed ten acres and a small sum of money for the Episcopal society in Gardiner, and directed the small house of worship to be finished; but it was soon burnt by an insane man, McCausland, in 1773. - Thacher; Greenleaf's Eccles. Sketches, 227.

GARDINER, JOHN SYLVESTER JOHN, D. D., Episcopal minister in Boston, became assistant to GARDINER, Lion, an early settler in Connec- Dr. Parker April 12, 1792, and died at Harrowracter and oton, Long
the procetted with s, and was service of
, and forts,
demson, an dd crossed to tons, and cet its setfort. His lians. His s the first

s the first purchased now called es. Here st English became a place he ears, His was great equenthed ears; and, on her son eight prom John to ie descent n broken. y. A mees, vol. x.

ician, was randfather tudied his England,
loston; he
hop. Acelf with the sed extencommencetory rele to take ads, about scated and le to take nds, about scated and h some inproperty. ort, where 1786, aged ral virtues n. In his all sum of diner, and e finished; , McCaus-

IN, D. D., ssistant to Harrow-gate Springs, England, July 26, 1830, aged 65. He was distinguished for his literary attainments, and zealous for what he regarded as the Arminian and Trinitarian tenets of the Episcopal church, and no less zealous in politics. He published a sermon at the ordination of J. Howers, 1802; before the humane society; before the charitable lire society, 1803; on the death of Bishop Parker, 1804; of Dr. Lloyd, and D. Sears; of Geo. Higginson, and Thomas C. Amory, 1812; at a fast, 1808, and 1812; before a female asylum, 1809; on the Divinity of Jesus Christ, 1810; preservative against Unitarianism, 1811; before the society of donations, 1813.

's Eccles.

GARDNER, NATHANIEL, died in Boston in 1760, aged about 41. He graduated in 1739, and was many years usher in the Latin school under the celebrated Lovell. He was honored for his classical taste and acquirements. He published some English poems, and a Latin translation of Watts' ode on the nativity of Christ. — Monthly Anthology, 1v. 38.

GARDNER, JOHN, minister of Stow, died Jan. 10,1775, aged 79. He was born in Charlestown; graduated at Harvard in 1715; and was settled in 1718. His predecessor, the first minister, was John Eveleth; his successors, Jonathan Newell in 1774, and John L. Sibley in 1829.

GARDNER, GEOROE, a benefactor of Harvard college, died at Salem in 1773. He was graduated in 1762, and was a merchant. He bequeathed to the college 4,867 dollars, for the education of poor scholars; 1,466 to the poor of Salem; and 7,333 to the marine society for superannuated seamen. The legacies became due on the death of his brother, Weld G., in Nov., 1801.

GARDNER, HENRY, first treasurer of Massachusetts, in the time of the Revolution, died in 1782, aged about 52. He was the son of Rev. Mr. G., of Stow, and graduated at Harvard in 1750. From 1757 he was a member of the general court until the Revolution; and then was the faithful, patriotic treasurer, till his death. He was also councillor, and judge of the court of common pleas for Middlesex. In every office he manifested integrity, prudence, firmness. He was also a pious man and humble Christian; and in the faith and hopes of the gospel he died in peace.

GARDNER, Joseph, died at Boston April 3, 1806, aged 92. A graduate of Cambridge in 1732, he was settled May 15, 1740, as colleague with Rev. N. Clap of Newport; but was dismissed in 1743. He was justice of the common pleas for Suffolk.

GARDNER, FRANCIS, minister of Leominster more than half a century, died in 1814, aged 76. Born in Stow, he graduated at Harvard in 1755. His son, John, died in Aug., 1856, aged 89. He published a thanksgiving sermon, 1795; half-cen-

GARDNER, PEREGRINE, colonel, d'ed in West Bloomfield, N. Y., April 13, 1838, aged 72. He was a native of Norwich, Conn. He and his wife were the first inhabitants of W. B., in 1780, from Utica to Buffalo being almost an entire wilderness. In the war of 1812 he was wounded and taken prisoner. He was a good citizen, a benevolent man, an eminent Christian. He was accustomed to do what to some would be harder than to meet the face of an enemy in war; he was accustomed to ask of a stranger, with a spirit of affection, "Do you love the Saviour?"

GARDNER, HENRY, Dr., died in Charlestown, Mass., Aug. 22, 1854, aged 81. Horn in C., he graduated at Harvard in 1707.

GARLAND, HUGH A., died in St. Louis Oct. 14, 1854, an eminent lawyer, a native of Virginia. He was clerk of the house at Washington from 1836 to 1841. He published a life of John Randolph.

GARNETT, JAMES MERCER, died in Elmycod, Essex county, Va., May, 1843, aged 02. He was a member of Congress, from 1805 to 1809. His life was much and honorably devoted to the cause of education and agriculture; his public addresses were very acceptable.

GARRARD, James, governor of Kentucky from 1796 to 1804, was a native of Virginia, and an officer of the Revolution. He was among the first adventurous settlers of Kentucky, and died at Mount Lebanon, Bourbon county, Jan. 19, 1822, aged 73.

GARRETSON, CATHERINE, died at Red Hook in 1749, aged 96 years and 9 months. She was the sister of Chancellor Livingston, and the widow of F. Garretson, a Methodist minister.

GARRETT, James, missionary printer for twelve years, died at Bombay July 17, 1831. The day before his death he summoned his twenty workmen to his bedside, and addressed them in Mahratta, and exhorted them to repent and to believe in Christ as their only Saviour; with tears they heard the last counsels of a dying Christian. Mr. G. lived in Utica, when he entered the missionary service. An account of his death is in the Missionary Herald, 1832.

GASSETT, HENRY, a merchant, died in Boston Aug. 15, 1855, aged 81. He was a graduato of 1795. He was of Huguenot descent, from Henri Gachet, who came from Rochelle to Taunton. In time the name was Anglicised. Three of his sons were also graduates of Harvard. His pen and wealth were in his zeal for truth and virtue employed in opposing the masonic society.

GASTON, WILLIAM, LL. D., a judge of North Carolina, died at Raleigh Jan. 23, 1844, aged 66. His father, Dr. Alexander G., born in Ireland of Huguenot ancestry, lived at Newbern, and was shot by the tories Aug. 20, 1781, William being then only three years old. His mother, Margaret Sharpe, born in England, ever afterwards a widow, devoted herself to the education of her son. When he returned with honor from Princeton college in 1790, the first thing she did was to lay her hands on his head, as he knelt before her, exclaiming, "My God, I thank thee!" Her pious spirit survived the withering influence of popery. She lived thirty-one years after the death of her husband; but never made a visit except to the suffering poor. He graduated at Princeton in 1796; and was a senator of North Carolina, and a representative in congress in 1813.

GATES, Horatio, a major-general in the army of the United States, died April 10, 1806, aged 77. He was a native of England. In early life he entered the British army, and laid the foundation of his future military excellence. He was aid to Gen. Monkton at the capture of Martinico; and after the peace of Aix la Chapelle, he was among the first troops which landed at Halifax under Gen. Cornwallis. He was with Braddock at the time of his défeat in 1755, and was shot through the body. When peace was concluded, he purchased an estate in Virginia, where he resided until the commencement of the American war in 1775, when he was appointed by congress adjutant-general, with the rank of brigadier-general. He accompanied Washington to Cambridge, when he went to take command of the army in that place. In June, 1776, Gates was appointed to the command of the vrmy of Canada. He was superseded by Gen. Schuyler in May, 1777, but in August following he took the place of this offieer in the northern department. The success, which attended his arms in the capture of Burgoyne in October, filled America with joy. Congress passed a vote of thanks, and ordered a medal of gold to be presented to him by the president. His conduct towards his conquered enemy was marked by delicacy, which does him the highest honor. He did not permit his own troops to witness the mortification of the British in depositing their arms. After Gen. Lincoln was taken prisoner, he was appointed, June 13, 1780, to the command of the southern department. 16, he was defeated by Cornwallis at Camden. He was superseded Dec. 3, by Gen. Greene; but was in 1782 restored to his command.

After the peace he retired to his farm in Berkeley county, Va., where he remained until the year 1790, when he went to reside at New York, having first emancipated his slaves, and made a pecuniary provision for such as were not able to provide for themselves. Some of them would not leave him, but continued in his family. On his arrival at New York the freedom of the city was presented to him. In 1800 he accepted a seat in the legislature, but he retained it no longer than he conceived his services might be useful to the of John Hancock, 1744; at the election, 1745;

political opinions did not separate him from many respectable citizens, whose views differed widely from his own. A few weeks before his death he wrote to his friend, Dr. Mitchill, then at Washington, on some business, and closing his letter. dated Feb. 27, 1806, with the following words: "I am very weak and have evident signs of an approaching dissolution. But I have lived long enough, since I have lived to see a mighty people animated with a spirit to be free, and governed by transcendent abilities and honor." He retained his faculties to the last. He took pleasare in professing his attachment to religion, and his firm belief in the doctrines of Christianity. The will, which was made not long before his death, exhibited the humility of his faith. In an article, dictated by himself, he expressed a sense of his own unworthiness, and his reliance solely on the intercession and sufferings of the Redeemer. In another paragraph he directed that his body should be privately buried, which was accordingly done. His widow died in 1810. Gen. Gates was a whig in England, and a republican in America. He was a scholar, well versed in history and the Latin classics. While he was just, hospitable, and generous, and possessed a feeling heart, his manners and deportment yet indicated his military character. - Marshall, II. 237; III. 3, 226, 273, 336; IV. 169-182, 324, 596; Brissot, Nour. Voy. II. 50; Stedman, I. 336. 342; H. 200, 233; Gordon, H. 276, 572; HI. 391, 439, 472; IV. 26.

GAY, EBENEZER, D. D., minister of Hingham. Mass., was born Aug. 26, 1696. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1714, and ordained June 11, 1718, as successor of John Norton. The first minister was P. Hobart. These three ministers preached about one hundred and fifty years. Dr. Gay died March 18, 1787, aged 90, in the sixtyninth year of his ministry. He was succeeded by Dr. Ware. He died unmarried. His mental powers were continued to him in an uncommon degree till his death. On the day which completed the eighty-fifth year of his age, he preached a sermon, which was much celebrated and was reprinted in England, Dr. Chauncy pronounces him to have been one of the greatest and most valuable men in the country. His sentiments were not so rigid as those of some of his brethren in the ministry; but he was zealous for the interests of practical goodness. He published a sermon at the ordination of Joseph Green, 1725; of Eb. Gay, Jr., 1742; of J. Mayhew, 1747; of J. Dorby, 1752; of E. Carpenter, 1753; of G. Rawson, 1755; of Bunker Gay, 1763; of C. Gannett, 1768; at the artillery election; on the transcendent glory of the gospel, to which is added a pillar of salt to senson a corrupt age, 1728; on the death cause of liberty, which he never abandoned. His at the convention, 1746; Dudleian lecture, 1759;

a from many ered widely his death he n at Washg his letter, wing words: signs of an ve lived long mighty peoee, and gov-honor." He e took pleasreligion, and Christianity. ig before his faith. In an essed a sense eliance solely of the Redirected that d, which was ied in 1810. and a repubr, well versed While he was l possessed a portment yet Marshall, 11. 182, 324, 596; lman, 1. 336, r of Hingham, was graduated ordained June on. The first ree ministers ty years. Dr.), in the sixtys succeeded by His mental an uncommon ay which come, he preached ated and was cy pronounces atest and most entiments were his brethren in or the interests ed a sermon at 1725; of Eb. 7; of J. Dorby, of G. Rawson, Gannett, 1768; e transcendent ded a pillar of ; on the death election, 1745; lecture, 1759; two sermons on the death of Dr Mayhew, 1766; | league Samuel Mather, but a separation occurred, thanksgiving sermon, 1771; the old man's calendar, 1781. - Shute's Funeral Sermon; Hist. Coll. x. 159; Mass. Centinel, March 30, 1787.

572; III. 391,

GAY, EBENEZER, D. D., died at Suffield, Conn., March or April, 1796, aged 77, having been in the ministry fifty-three years. Born in Dedham, he graduated at Harvard in 1737. Of six brothers, four were above 70. He was a nephew of E. G., of Hingham. Bunker Gay, minister of Hinsdale, N. H., who died in 1814, was his brother. His son, Ebenezer, a graduate of Yale in 1757, was settled as his colleague or successor in 1793, and died in 1837. He had a strong mind and was respectable for learning.

GAY, BUNKER, brother of Dr. E. G., and minister of Hinsdale, N. H., died in Feb., 1815, aged He graduated at Harvard in 1760, and was ordained in 1763. He was born in Hingham, Mass.; and his father, Nathaniel, was the son of John, whose father was also John, of Dedham in 1635, the ancestor of the Gays of Massachusetts and Connecticut. He published the accomplished judge, a sermon at Keene; also, on the death of

Rev. L. Hedge at Warwick.

GAY, SETH, a useful and venerable citizen of Gardiner, Me., died Jan. 30, 1851, aged 89.

GAY, SAMUEL, minister in Hubbardston, died Oct. 16, 1848, aged 64. He was born in South Dedham, and a graduate of Harvard in 1805. Ordained Oct. 16, 1810, in 1827 in consequence of a division among his people a new Calvinistic church was formed, of which he was the pastor till 1841, when he resigned and lived respected in retirement. He preached on the Sabbath but one before his death. He died suddenly. at work in his field, he fell and expired.

GAY, MARTIN, M. D., died in Boston Jan. 12. 1850, aged 46; son of Ebenezer Gay, of Hingham.

GAYLORD, WILLIAM, minister in Norwalk, died Jan. 3, 1767, aged 57, in the thirty-fourth year of his ministry. His parish was called Wilton. He graduated at Yale in 1730.

GAYLORD, NATHANIEL, died at West Hartland, Conn., May 8, 1841, aged 90, the oldest pastor in the State. He graduated at Yale in 1774. His end was peace.

GAYLORD, LEVI, major, died in Geneva, Ohio, in 1846, aged 83. He was a Revolutionary soldier, born in Farmington, Conn.

GEDNEY, RACHAEL, died in New York, Nov. 26, 1848, aged 107, the last of the Moliegans. Born at Mamaroneck, her father belonged to the Tappan tribe; her mother was a Mohegan. She married a Malay.

GEE, JOSHUA, minister in Boston, the son of Joshua, was graduated at Harvard college in 1717, and ordained pastor of the second or old north church, as colleague with Cotton Mather.

and a new church was built for Mr. Mather. He died May 22, 1748, aged 50. His wife, the daughter of Rev. Mr. Rogers, of Portsmouth, an accomplished woman, died in 1730, aged 29. A sermon on her death was published by P. Thacher. He possessed a strong and penetrating mind. His powers of reasoning were very uncommon. Few were more discerning, or could more completely develop a subject. He possessed also a considerable share of learning. His foible was a strange indolence of temper. He preferred talking with his friends to every thing else. He published in 1743 a letter to Nathaniel Eells, moderator of a convention of pastors in Boston, containing some remarks on their printed testimony against disorders in the land. From this pamphlet it appears, that there was present in the convention not one-third of the pastors in Massachusetts, and that of these, seventy in number, but a small majority voted for the last paragraph of the testimony, which caused such debates respecting an attestation to the work of God's grace in a remarkable revival of religion among the churches. Mr. Gee complains of the testimony, that it is partial; that it speaks of the prevalence of antinomian but not of Arminian errors; that it holds up to view the disorders consequent upon the revival, and not the great and beneficial effects of the revival itself. He was one of the assembly of ministers, who met in Boston, July 7, 1743, and gave their attestation to the progress of religion in this country. He published also a sermon on the death of Cotton Mather, 1728; two sermons, entitled, the strait gate and the narrow way infinitely preferable to the wide gate and broad way, 1729. - Histor. Coll. x. 157; Prince's Christian Hist. 1. 164.

GEISSENHAMER, FREDERICK W., D. D., a German Lutheran minister in New York city, died in 1838, aged 66.

GELSTON, DAVID, collector of New York, died at Greenwich in Sept., 1828, aged 85. He was a member of the assembly in 1775 and a Revolutionary patriot. He was collector from 1801 to Dec., 1820.

GEMMIL, John, died in Pennsylvania in 1815. He was principal of the academy in Westchester, and had been the minister of the united church in New Haven, Conn., over which he was installed

Nov. 7, 1798.

GENET, EDMOND CHARLES, died at Jamaica, 1.. I., July 14, 1834, aged 71, formerly minister from France in 1793. He married a daughter of George Clinton; and in 1814 a daughter of Samuel Osgood. He took an interest in promoting improvement in agriculture and in the arts and sciences. On his arrival at Charleston as minister, he authorized the arming of vessels in that Dec. 18, 1723. In 1732 he received for his col- port against nations with whom we were at peace; for which offensive conduct Washington asked his recall.

GERRISH, Joseph, minister of Wenham, Mass., the son of Capt. Wm. G., of Newbury, was born March 23, 1650; graduated in 1669; was ordained as successor of A. Newman in 1673; and died Jan. 6, 1720, aged 69. His wife was a daughter of Maj. Waldron of Dover: his son, Joseph, was a minister. His brothers, Benjamin of Salem, John of Dover, and Moses of Newbury, with many of their descendants, were distinguished men. John Dunton ealls him Mr. Geery: his description of him is thus given: "the philosopher is acute, ingenious, and subtle. The divine curious, orthodox, and profound. man of majestic air, without austerity or sourness; his aspect is masterly and great, yet not imperious or haughty. The Christian is devout without moroseness or starts of holy frenzy and enthusiasm. The preacher is primitive, without the accessional colors of whining or cant; and methodical, without intricacy, or affectation, and, which crowns his character, he is a man of a public spirit, zealous for the conversion of the Indians, and of great hospitality to strangers. He gave us a noble dinner, and entertained us with such pleasant fruits, as, I must own, Old England is a stranger to." - 2. Hist. Coll. II. 120.

GERRISH, JACOB, colonel, a Revolutionary patriot, died at Newbury in 1817, aged 77.

GERRY, ELBRIDGE, vice-president of the United States, died suddenly at Washington Nov. 13, 1814, aged 70. He was born in Marblehead, Mass., July 17, 1744. His father, a merchant, came to this country in 1730 and died in 1774. After graduating at Harvard college in 1762, he devoted himself for several years to commercial pursuits, and acquired a competent estate. Being a member of the legislature in 1773, he was appointed on the important committee of inquiry and correspondence. In his patriotic labors he was the associate of Adams, Hancock, and Warren. The provincial congress of 1775 appointed him on the committee of pubiic safety and supplies. The committee had been in session at Menotomy, then a part of Cambridge. Mr. Gerry and Col. Orne were in bed, when the approach of the British troops induced them to flee half-dressed to a neighboring corn-field, where they remained, while the troops searched every apartment of the house in order to find them. To the provincial congress he proposed the very important measure of passing laws for the encouragement of privateers and for the establishment of a court of admiralty; and he and Mr. Sullivan were the committee to draw up the act for that purpose. Elected to the | Harvard in 1734. continental congress, he took his seat Feb. 9, 1776, and continued in that body with some interportant committees. His skill in finance rendered him particularly useful. In 1787 he was deputed to the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. He was opposed to the plan adopted, deeming the executive and judicial powers perilous, and some of the legislative powers ambiguous and dangerous, and thinking that the constitution had few federal features and was rather a system of national government. He retained his objections. In 1809, the writer of this heard him express his opinion, that the president had powers which few were aware of, and which he hoped would never be exerted. Under the constitution he served four years as a member of congress. In 1797 he was appointed by Mr. Adams minister to the French republic, with Mr. Marshall and Gen. Pinckney. When, in 1798, his colleagues were sent away from France, he was invited to remain. His services were useful in preserving peace. In 1810 he was elected governor as successor of Mr. Gore, and was suceeeded in 1812 by Mr. Strong. March 4, 1813, he was inaugurated the vice president of the United States, Mr. Madison being president. His daughter married James T. Austin of Boston, the author of memoirs of his Life. - Goodrich's Lives; Austin's Life of Gerry.

GIBBON, JAMES, major, died at Richmond, Va., July 1, 1835, at an advanced age. He was the eollector of customs. Under Gen. Wayne he was the hero of Stony Point, when out of twenty men seventeen were killed or wounded. He was greatly respected.

GIBBONS, EDWARD, general, died Dec. 9. 1654. He came to this country as early as 1629; in a few years he was a representative of Boston; from 1649 to 1651 he was major-general, in which office, elective by the people annually like that of governor, he was succeeded by Robert Sedgwick. He was a worthy member of Mr. Wilson's church. Having advanced to La Tour more than 2500 pounds, secured by mortgage of his fort and lands in Acadia, when D'Aulnay captured La Tour's fort, Maj. Gibbons was by the loss "quite undone." - 2 Hist. Coll. vi. 498.

GIBBS, HENRY, minister of Watertown, Mass., died Oct. 21, 1723, aged 55. The son of Robert, an eminent merchant of Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1685, and was ordained in 1697. His wife was Mercy, daughter of William Greenough; and of his daughters, Mercy married Rev. Benjamin Prescott, of Danvers, and Margaret married Rev. Dr. Appleton, of Cambridge; and among his descendants is Professor Josiah W. Gibbs.

GIBBS, WILLIAM, minister of Simsbury, Conn., died in 1777, aged about 63. He graduated at GIBBS, GEORGE, colonel, died at Newtown, near New York, Aug. 5, 1833, aged 57. He was vals until Sept., 1785. He served on various im- a patron of science, especially of mineralogy.

He was the original proprietor of the cabinet at |

GIBSO5 ":CHARD, a scholar, came from England aba 38, and was a minister to a fishing plantation at Richman's Island, then at Piscataquack and the Isle of Shoals. Being "addieted to the hierarchy," and writing an offensive letter, he was summoned before the court at Boston; but as he purposed to return to England he escaped any punishment. - Winthrop, II. 66.

GIBSON, John, general, a soldier of the French and Revolutionary wars, died in May, 1822, aged 81. He was born in Lancaster, Penn., in May, 1740, and was well educated. He early served under Gen. Forbes in the expedition to fort du Quesne, which was occupied Nov. 25, 1758, and called Pittsburg. Here he remained as an Indian trader. In 1763 he was captured by the Indians, and adopted by a squaw, whose son he had slain in battle. He had thus opportunity to acquire a knowledge of several Indian languages. On being released, he again settled at Pittsburg. In 1774 he was an important agent in making the Indian treaty, entered into by Gov. Dunmore. On this occasion Logan's celebrated speech was delivered, of which Col. Gibson was the interpreter. On the commencement of the Revolutionary war he was appointed the colonel of a Virginia regiment, of which he was in command at the close of the war. Residing at Pittsburg, he was in 1788 a member of the Pennsylvania convention; he was also associate judge and major-general of the militia. In 1800 he was appointed secretary of the territory of Indiana, Gen. Harrison being governor; an office which he held till the territory became a State in 1816. Being afflicted with an incurable cataract, he removed to "Braddock's fields," near Vincennes, the residence of his son-in-law, George Wallace, where he died.

GIBSON, SAMUEL, a slave, lived in the West Indies and in Guilford, Conn. After being liberated he opened, about the beginning of this eentury, a grocery shop at Hartford, and acquired property, and was held in respect for his integrity. The son of his last master was his clerk, and to him he left his property. Let it not be said that the blacks, incapable of taking care of themselves, must have masters.

GILBERT, HUMPHREY, Sir, a distinguished navigator to America, was born at Dartmouth, in Devonshire, England, in 1539. His mother becoming a widow, married Mr. Raleigh, by whom she had the celebrated Sir Walter Raleigh. Gilhert was educated at Eton and Oxford; but he forsook an academical life for a military, and was knighted in reward of his services in Ireland. On the 11th of June, 1578, he obtained of Queen Elizabeth letters patent, authorizing him to take

Christian prince or people, conferring upon him certain rights and privileges, and prohibiting all persons from attempting to settle within two hundred leagues of any place which he should occupy. This was the first charter for a colony granted by the crown of England. A violent storm, obliging him to return, frustrated his hopes in his first voyage. He sailed a second time June 11, 1583, with five ships. On his arrival at St. John's harbor, Newfoundland, he found there thirty-six fishing vessels of various nations, which refused him entrance; but on producing his commission no further opposition was made to him. He entered the harbor on the 3d of August, and on the fifth took possession of the country for the crown of England, in consequence of the discovery of the Cabots. This transaction is the foundation of the right and title of the crown of England to the territory of Newfoundland, and to the fishery on its banks. The vessel, in which he sailed, foundered on the 9th of September, and all on board perished. A short time before, the people in another vessel in company heard him say, as he was sitting in the stern, "We are as near heaven by sea as by land."

GILBERT, RALEIGH, a patentee of New England, nephew of Sir Walter Raleigh, commanded a vessel in the expedition of one hundred men, who attempted a settlement at the mouth of the Sagadahoe or Kennebee in 1607. They sailed from Plymouth the last of May; arrived at Monhegan Island Aug. 11; and soon landed on the west shore of Kennebee at Cape Small Point, now in Phipsburg. They built a fort and called it St. George. Dec. 5th the two ships returned, leaving forty-five persons. George Popham was chosen president and Gilbert the admiral. In the spring, when supplies were brought, intelligence was received of the death of Sir John Gilbert, to whom Raleigh Gilbert was the heir: he therefore determined to return, and, Mr. Popham having died, and the store-house being burnt, the whole colony went back with him to England, to the great discouragement of "the first undertakers."

GILBERT, THOMAS, minister of Topsfield, Mass., died in 1673, aged 63. He came from Ealing in England, where he had been pastor, and was among the first of ministers who were deprived of office for nonconformity. - Nonconformists' Memorial, 11. 446.

GILBERT, BENJAMIN, published an account of his captivity and that of his family by the Indians, Philadelphia, 1784.

GILBERT, JAMES, a physician, was born in New Haven, Oct. 25, 1779, and graduated at Yale college in 1800. After practising eight years in New Haven, he in 1814 visited Paris and London for his improvement, and returned in 1815. He nossession of all remote lands, unocupied by any died of a pulmonary complaint at sea, Feb. 11, hmond. Va.. He was the ayne he was twenty men I. He was ce rendered as deputed

constitution sed to the

nd judicial

lative pow-

inking that es and was

nt. He re-

riter of this

e president

and which

Under the

member of

ed by Mr.

ic, with Mr.

n, in 1798,

France, he were useful

was elected

ad was suc-

reh 4, 1813,

lent of the

sident. His

of Boston,

Goodrich's

ied Dec. 9. rly as 1629; of Boston; ral, in which like that of rt Sedgwick. on's church. than 2500 rt and lands La Tour's ite undone."

town, Mass., h of Robert, raduated at 1697. Ilis Greenough; Rev. Benjaaret married and among . Gibbs. bury, Conn., raduated at t Newtown, 7. He was mineralogy.

1818, aged 39. As a surgeon he had few superiors. Ilis religious views gave him peace in death. - Thacher, 11. 247-249.

GILBERT, a slave, died near Stanton, Va., Feb. 19, 1844, aged 112. He was a servant of Washington at Braddock's defeat.

GILBERT, ELIPHALET, W., D. D., died at Philadelphia July 31, 1853, aged about 60, formerly president of the Delaware college. He was clerk of the General Assembly, new school.

GILDERSLEEVE, HENRY, died in Kingston, Canada, in 1851, aged 66. Once an extensive ship-builder in Chatham, Conn., he removed in 1816 to K., where he launched the first steamboat on lake Ontario.

GILE, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Milton, died Oct. 16, 1836, aged 56. He was born in Plaistow, N. H., July 23, 1780, son of Maj. Ezekiel Gile, a soldier of the Revolution; and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1804. His theological studies he began with Rev. J. French, Andover; he was ordained as the successor of Dr. McKeen at Milton, Feb. 18, 1807. He was an eminent preacher and excellent man; but, owing to parochical difficulties arising from a diversity of religious opinions, he was dismissed Jan. 6, 1834, by an exparte council, whose authority he never acknowledged. He believed the evangelieal or orthodox doctrines of New England; and his church adhered to him. On the day of his death he assisted in the public services in the forenoon; but as the people were assembling for the afternoon worship he died, after an illness of one hour, with which he was seized as he sat down to his table at dinner. Dr. Gile had extraordinary gifts in prayer, having freedom, richness, power, and sublimity; few were so appropriate and copious in the use of scriptural passages. Prudence, tenderness, benevolence, humility, meekness, patience were traits in his character. Many were his domestic afflictions in the loss of children; severe were his trials as a minister; but his Christian virtues were always resplendent.

GILES, JOHN, died in Newburyport Sept. 28, 1824, aged 69, the senior pastor of the second Presbyterian church. He was born in England, and settled July 20, 1803. He published oration July 4, 1809; two sermons on the fast, 1812.

GILES, WILLIAM BRANCH, governor of Virginia, was for many years a member of congress. He was a representative as early as 1796. In 1802 he voted for the repeal of the judiciary law, and in 1812 he voted for the war. He was elected to the senate in Jan., 1811, and resigned his office in Oct., 1815. He was again a candidate for election to the senate in 1825, but his rival, Mr. Randolph, was ehosen. In 1826 he was chosen governor and continued in office till 1829. He died at his residence, the Wigwam, Amelia county, Dec. 8, 1830, at an advanced age. He 1757, and was ordained Dec. 8, 1769, as suc-

published a speech on the embargo laws, 1808; in Nov., 1813, political letters to the people of Virginia; a series of letters, signed a Constituent, in the Richmond Enquirer of Jan., 1818, against the plan for a general education; in April, 1824, a singular letter of invective against President Monroe and Mr. Clay for their "hobbies," "the South America cause, the Greek cause, Internal Improvements, and the Tariff." In Nov., 1825, he addressed a letter to Judge Marshall. disclaiming the expressions, not the general sentiments, in regard to Washington, ascribed to him in debate of 1796 in the life of Washington, v.

GILL, Moses, died in Boston May 20, 1800, aged 66. He was several years lientenant-governor, and acting governor on the death of Sumner. from June, 1799, to his death. He was an early benefactor of Leicester academy, giving 150 pounds. He was a Boston merchant of wealth. As he married a daughter of Thomas Prince, the annalist, he acquired a large landed estate in Princeton, of which Dr. P. was one of the proprietors; and there he built him a mansion. He was a patriot of 1775, and was ever after in public office. - Washburn's Sketch of Leicester Academy.

GILLET, ALEXANDER, minister of Farmington, Conn., died in Jan., 1820, aged 76. He graduated at Yale in 1770.

GILLET, ELIPHALET, D. D., died at Hallowell. Me., Oct. 19, 1848, aged about 80. A graduate of Dartmouth in 1791, he was long the minister of Hallowell. In his last years he was the secretary and agent of the Maine missionary society. He published a sermon at the ordination of II. Wallis, 1795; of J. Dane, 1803; of H. Loomis, 1812; before missionary society, 1810; fast sermon, 1811.

GILLEY, John, died at Augusta, Maine, July 9, 1813, aged 124. He was a native of Ireland. When he came to fort Western, about 1755, to enlist as a soldier, Capt. Howard deemed him too old. He had enjoyed fine health, and was singularly active and vigorous. In 1811 he could walk four miles to the bridge.

GILMAN, Joseph, judge, died at Marietta in 1806, aged 70. He was born in Exeter, N. H., a grandson of John, who emigrated from Norfolk, Eng., in 1637. He was a patriot of the Revolution, then an associate of the Ohio company in 1789. He was a United States judge for the Northwest Territory. His wife, Rebecca Ives, was an accomplished woman. - Hildreth.

GILMAN, TRISTRAM, minister of North Yarmouth, Me., died April 1, 1809, aged 74. He was the son of Rev. Nicholas G., of Durham, N. H., who died April 13, 1748, aged 41, and a descendant of Edward G., of Exeter. He was born in 1735, graduated at Harvard college in laws, 1808: people of onstituent, 18, against April, 1824, President bies," " the use, Inter-In Nov., Marshall, neral sentibed to him hington, v.

20, 1800. nant-goverof Sumner, ıs an early giving 150 of wealth. Prince, the l estate in he proprica. He was ublic office. adenty.

Farmingd 76. He : Hallowell,

A graduate he minister s the secreary society. tion of II. II. Loomis,); fast ser-

Maine, July of Ireland. ut 1755, to ed him too was singucould walk

Marietta in eter, N. H., m Norfolk, he Revolucompany in ge for the becca Ives, North Yard 74. He f Durham, 41, and a . He was college in 9, as successor of Edward Brooks. His successor, Francis Brown, married his daughter. He was a faithful, useful, highly respected minister. A reyival of religion attended his labors in 1791 and 1792, when 132 members were added to the church. During the whole period of his ministry 293 were admitted and 1344 baptized. He was the first president of the Maine missionary society. He published a sermon on the death of D. Mitchell, 1796. — Panoplist, v. 1-4.

GILMAN, JOHN TAYLOR, governor of New Hampshire, died at Exeter Aug. 31, 1828, aged 74. He was the son of Nicholas Gilman and Ann Taylor, daughter of Rev. John Taylor, of Milton, Mass., born at Excter Dec. 19, 1753. Older ancestors were Daniel, Nicholas, and John. He received the usual education of those who were not designed for the learned professions. The morning after the news of the battle of Lexington he marched as a volunteer with a hundred others, to Cambridge. He was also employed to assist his father, the treasurer of the State. In Oct., 1780, he was the delegate from New Hampshire to the convention at Hartford, to provide for the common defence. After being a member of congress in 1782, he succeeded his father as treasurer in 1783. When the confederated government appointed three commissioners to settle the accounts of the different States, he was joined with Irvine and Kean. On resigning this place in 1791 he was re-chosen treasurer of New Hampshire, and was very faithful and useful. In 1794 he was chosen governor, as successor to Bartlett, and was annually re-elected until 1805, when he was succeeded by Langdon. He was again elected in 1813, and the two next years, but declined, and was succeeded in 1816 by Plumer, whom he had succeeded in 1813. The legislature in a farewell address acknowledged his long and important services. In the political divisions of the times he was known as a decided federalist .-American Annual Register, 1827-9, p. 182-194.

GILMAN, NICHOLAS, a senator of the United States from New Hampshire, died at Philadelphia May 3, 1814. He was a member of congress from 1789 to 1797, and a senator from 1805 to

GILMAN, NATHANIEL, died Jan. 26, 1847. aged 88. He was State treasurer of New Hamp-

GILMAN, BENJAMIN IVES, a merchant, died at his son's, in Alton, Ill., in 1833, aged 68. Born in Excter, N. H., in 1765, he accompanied his parents to Marietta in 1789. His wife was Hannah, daughter of Rev. Dr. Robbins, of Plymouth; his journey with her to the west in 1790 was on horseback, twenty-five or thirty days in crossing the mountains. He became a rich merchant in Marietta. Such were the perils of those times, ert, the latter was shot by the Indians, while he escaped. From 1801 to 1808 he was engaged in shipbuilding. In 1813 he removed to Philadelphia. His wife became a most useful member of the church at Marietta in 1811. She died in 1836. — Hildreth's Biographical Memoirs.

GILMAN, JOSEPH, Dr., died at Wells, Me., Jan. 4, 1847, aged 75. He was son of Rev. T. Gilman. He was president of the medical society of Maine. His religious character commenced in 1791, in a revival under his father's preaching. He listened to every call of the poor. — N. Y. Observer, Jan. 23.

GILMER, THOMAS W., secretary of the navy, died on board the U.S. steamer Princeton by the bursting of a large gun, Feb. 28, 1814. He was of Charlottesville, Va.

GILMORE, ADDISON, died at Watertown, Mass., Jan 10, 1851, aged about 47. Born in Windsor Co., Vt., he came to Boston, and by industry, energy, and judgment, was successful in various business. He was president of the Western railroad.

GIRARD, STEPHEN, a man of wealth, died at Philadelphia Dec. 26, 1831, aged 81, leaving an estate of ten or fifteen millions of dollars. He was a native of Bordeaux in France, came to this country before the Revolution, and had lived in Philadelphia about fifty years. He was first a cabin-boy, then the mate of a ship, then the keeper of a tap-shop, afterwards a merchant down to the year 1811, and for the remainder of his life a banker. The notes of his bank were deemed as good as those of any incorporated institution. In 1811 he purchased the banking-house and 1,200,000 dollars worth of the stock of the old bank of the United States, and commenced banking in 1812. At last his bank capital was increased to five millions. His other property was in real estate in the city, stock in the Schuylkill navigation and Chesapeake canal companies, lands in Mississippi, shipping, etc. He owned the great square between Eleventh and Twelfth and Chestnut streets. His particular bequests amount to upwards of three millions; the residue of his estate is given to Philadelphia, for improvements in the city. The following are some of the thousands of dollars bequeathed: two to a brother, ten to several nephews and nieces, ten to the orphans' asylum, ten to purchase wood for the poor, ten to the society of shipmasters, twenty to the asylum for the deaf and dumb, twenty to the freemason's lodge, thirty to the Pennsylvania hospital, one hundred and ten to the city, one hundred and twenty in various legacies to individuals, three hundred to the State for internal improvements, and two millions for a college for poor white children. The building was to be of three stories, 110 feet by 160, to be erected at Peel Hall, on that while at work on his lot with his man Rob- the Ridge Road, Penn Township, to be inclosed by a wall ten feet high, capped with marble, "and guarded with irons on the top." The scholars are to be orphans from Pennsylvania, New York (the first port at which he arrived), and New Orleans (the first port at which he traded as first officer), and must be between six and ten years old; when between fourteen and eighteen years old they are to be bound out by the corporation of the city to mechanical trades, agriculture, etc. There is also the following provision: "I enjoin and require, that no ceclesiastic, missionary, or minister of any sect whatever, shall ever hold or exercise any station or duty whatever in the said college, nor shall any such person ever be admitted for any purpose, or as visitor, within the premises appropriated to the purposes of said college." He wished that the orphans, after they left the college, might adopt "such religious tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer." He thus wished to carry into effect the exploded project of Rousseau, not considering that the religious sentiments and character are necessarily settled, for the most part, before a young man is sixteen or eighteen years of age; not considering that, whether for learning or religion, an early training of children and youth is important. However, while ecclesiastics may not see the inside of Mr. Girard's iron-capped college walls, his teachers are to inculcate "the purest principles of morality." Those teachers will be either Infidels or Christians; if Christians, they will teach their pupils the only pure morality from the revealed code of moral instruction in the New Testament of Jesus Christ, including that fear and love of God, which constitute the sole basis of moral virtue. His bequests were large, but true liberality may be seen in the life of Solomon Goodell.

GIST, MORDECAI, a brigadier-general in the American war, commanded one of the Maryland brigades in the battle of Camden, Aug. 16, 1780. In Aug., 1782, he defeated a party of the British at Combakee ferry. He died at Charleston, S. C., in Sept., 1792. - Marshall, IV. 178; Holmes.

GIUSTINIANI, Louis, D. D., died July 17, 1855, aged 58. A native of Rome, he became a Protestant by reading Father Clement, a discussion between a Jesuit and a Protestant, and left the church of Rome in 1828. He was a member of the old school Presbytery of Cincinnati.

GLADWIN, major-general, died at Stebbing, England, in Sept., 1791. He was an officer in Braddock's defeat, and was wounded. In July, 1763, he commanded at Detroit, and defended it with great bravery and vigilance against Pontiae, a Miami chief, the boldest leader among the GLEASON, CHARLES, minister of Dudley, died in 1790, aged about 72. He graduated at was born in 1740. In 1762 he commenced the Harvard in 1738.

GLEASON, BENJAMIN, a public orator early in this century, graduated at Brown university in 1802. He published address at Providence, 1802: masonic addresses at Reading, Boston, and Montreal, in 1805, 1807, and 1812; orntion July 4, at Charlestown 1805 and 1809; at Hingham, 1807; on the death of Washington, 1800; geography,

GLEN, HENRY, died at Scheneetady in 1814. aged 73. He took an active part in the Revolutionary war, and was a member of congress eight

GLENN, JAMES, governor of South Carolina, entered on this office Jan., 1744, and was succeeded by Lylleton in 1755. Toward the close of his peaceable administration he concluded a treaty with the Cherokee warriors in their own country, and acquired a cession of territory, which conduced much to the prosperity of the colony. He published a description of South Carolina, 8vo., London, 1761.

GLEZEN, LEVI, preceptor of the academy at Lenox, Mass., died in 1842, aged 68. He graduated at Williams college in 1798.

GLOVER, THOMAS, published in vol. XI. of transactions of the royal society, an account of Virginia, its situation, temperature, productions, etc. He relates, that when alone in a sloop in the Rappahannock, three leagues from the mouth, he heard "a great rushing and flashing of the water," and that looking, he saw near him "a most prodigious creature, much resembling a man, standing right up in the water, with his head, neck, shoulders, breast, and waist to the cubits of his arms above water. His skin was tawny, much like that of an Indian; his head pyramidal and sleek, without hair; his eyes large and black, and so were his evebrows; his mouth very wide, with a broad, black streak on the upper lip, turning upwards at each end like mustaches; his countenance grim and terrible." After gazing a sufficient time at Mr. Glover, the animal plunged down, and cast his tail above water, like the tail of a fish. He speaks also of a dreadful storm in Aug., 1667, which lasted three days, destroying the tobacco, etc.

GLOVER, PELATIAH, second minister of Springfield, preached first in that town July 3, 1659. He succeeded Mr. Moxon in 1661, and died March 29, 1692, aged 55, being succeeded by Mr. Brewer. He was born in Dorchester, and was of distinguished talents and piety. Mr. Hubbard says he was a great student, and much given to books.

GLOVER, ANNA, widow, died at Pelham, N. Y., in 1767, aged 106.

GODDARD, WILLIAM, a printer, the son of Dr. Giles G., postmaster at New London, Conn., Providence Gazette; in 1766 he went to Philaor early in iversity in ence, 1802; and Mon-July 4, at am, 1807 : geography,

y in 1814, he Revolugress eight

Carolina, l was sucthe close of ed a treaty n country, which conlony. He olina, 8vo., leademy at He gradrol. XI. of account of roductions. a sloop in the mouth, ing of the ır him "a embling a r, with his aist to the skin was his head his eyes brows; his streak on end like terrible." Glover, the tail abovo ks also of

of Spring-3, 1659. and died ed by Mr. nd was of Hubbard given to ich lasted

am, N. Y.,

ne son of on, Conn., enced the to Philaicle, under the patronage of Joseph Galloway; in 1773 he commenced the Maryland Journal at Baltimore, where he formed an intimate acquaintance with Gen. Charles Lee, who bequeathed him n part of his estate in Berkeley county. In 1775 Franklin appointed him comptroller of the postoffice. In 1792 he relinquished the Journal, and afterwards resided in Rhode Island. He died at Providence Dec. 23, 1817, aged 77. He married n Miss Angell, of Providence, taking, as his friends said, "an augel for his wife." He published a history of the Pennsylvania Chronicle, 1770. — Thomas, I. 427; II. 63, 134-140.

GODDARD, CALVIN, judge, died in Norwich, Conn., April 2, 1842, aged 73. His father, Daniel, of Shrewsbury, Mass., was the son of Edward, and he the son of William, who came from Norfolk, England, in 1666. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1786. He practised law in Plainfield, Conn., and thence removed to Norwich. He was n member of congress in 1801, and a judge of the supreme court from 1815 for three years. He was an excellent man, a lover of truth, benevolent, of strong attachments. Near his dwelling is the cemetery of the old Mohegan tribe of Indians. His wife was Alice, daughter of Rev. Levi Hart, and grand-daughter of Dr. Bellamy. They had six children, of whom three were of the profession of the law, in Ohio and New York city.

GODDARD, WILLIAM G., died suddenly at Providence Feb. 16, 1846, aged 52. He was professor of belles-lettres in Brown university.

GODDARD, Josian, Baptist translator of the New Testament into Chinese, died in China in 1854. He was a graduate at Providence in 1835, and studied theology at Newton. He at first spent some years at Bankok, in Siam, where he studied the Chinese language. About 1844 he went to Ningpo and commenced the work of translation. About 1853 he finished the revision of the New Testament in Chinese, and saw it rapidly printed. In one day he gave away a thousand different cities.

GODFREY, THOMAS, the inventor of Hadley's quadrant, died in Dec., 1749. He was by trade a glazier in the city of Philadelphia. The extent 155 of his education was only to read and write, and

delphia and commenced the Pennsylvania Chron- | the year 1730, he communicated his invention of the quadrant. The royal society of London, being made acquainted with it in 1732, by means of Mr. Logan, sent Mr. Godfrey, as a reward, household furniture to the value of 200 pounds. Money was not sent on account of a habit of intemperance, to which the artist was subject. Tho following is an account of the invention, and of the method by which he was deprived of the honor of the invention. While replacing a pane of glass on the north side of Arch street, opposite a pump, a girl, after filling her pail, placed it on the pathway. Turning round, Godfrey observed the rays of the sun reflected from his window into the bucket of water. He was thus led to conceive, that if by reflection he could draw the sun down to the horizon, he should have an instrument incomparably superior to the pig-yoke, then in use. He formed his model in wood, and carried pieces to Charles Hamm, who completed for him an instrument in brass. This was committed to Godfrey's brother, a captain in the West India trade, who, on arriving at Jamaica, and exhibiting the quadrant to some officers of the British navy, was tempted by a Captain Hadley to sell it to him for a large sum of money. Hadley carried the instrument to London and placed it in the hands of his brother, a mathematical instrument maker in the Strand, and obtained a patent. According to another account, John Hadley, commanding a vessel in the Delaware, was allowed to see the instrument, and took a description of it. The American Encyclopedia states that, May 13, 1731, John Hadley, vice-president of the royal society, presented a paper, describing the quadrant, and that the society decided that both Hadley and Godfrey were entitled to the honor of the invention. He was a member of a literary club, established by Dr. Franklin, and having confined his attention to mathematical pursuits, he was almost insufferable in conversation, requiring an unusual precision in everything which was said, continually contradicting, and making trifling discopies to the learned assembled at Shanghai from | tinetions .- Miller's Retrospect, I. 468; American Mag. for July and August, 1758; Franklin's Life; Preface to Godfrey's Poems; Boston Chronicle, Aug. 1, 1821; National Register, IV.

GODFREY, THOMAS, a poet, the son of the apply the common rules of arithmetic. Having preceding, died near Wilmington, N. C., Aug. 3, met with a mathematical book, he was so de- 1763, aged 26. He was born in Philadelphia in lighted with the study, that, without an instructor, 1736. The only advantages of education which he soon made himself master of it, and of every he enjoyed were found in a common English book of the kind which he could procure in Eng-school. Such, however, was his desire of knowllish. Finding that the knowledge of the Latin edge, that he prosecuted his studies with unweawould open to him new treasures of mathematical ried diligence; and, having perused the best of science, he applied himself to the study of that the English poets, he soon exhibited proofs of language, till he was enabled to read a Latin poetical talents. He had a fine car for music, and author on his favorite subject. He then borrowed a taste for painting. After the death of his father Newton's principia of Mr. Logan, to whom, about he was put an apprentice to an ingenious watchmaker; but the muses and graces, poetry and before the completion of his second course of lecpainting, stole his attention. He devoted all his hours of release from mechanical labor to writing the poetical pieces, which were published in the American Magazine. At length he was recommended to a lientenant's commission in the Pennsylvania forces, raised in 1758 for an expedition against fort du Quesne. In this station he continued till the troops were disbanded. He was settled in the succeeding spring as a factor in North Carolina, where he continued upwards of three years. He died of a fever, occasioned by violent exercise in a very warm day. With an amiable disposition and an engaging diffidence and modesty of manners, he united an integrity of character which procured him esteem and respect. The productions of his pen were collected by his friend, Mr. Evans, and published in 1765, entitled, Juvenile poems on various subjects, with the prince of Parthia, a tragedy. - Account Prefixed to Poems; American Museum, vi. 471, 472.

GODMAN, JOHN D., an eminent anatomist and naturalist, died April 17, 1830, aged 31. He was born at Annapolis, in Maryland. His parents died while he was yet young. Being without property, he was indented an apprentice to a printer in Baltimore; but, disgusted with the employment, he entered as a sailor, in 1813, in the flotilla, then stationed in the Chesapeake. At the close of the war, being allowed to follow his own inclinations, he commenced the study of medicine at the age of fifteen, at first under Dr. Lucket, of Lancaster, but soon under Dr. Davidge, of Baltimore, professor of anatomy. He was indefatigable in his toils to acquire learning. Before he graduated, he was called to supply the place of his preceptor in the anatomical chair; and he lectured for several weeks with such enthusiasm and cloquence as to gain high applause. Soon after he obtained his degree, he settled in a small village in Anne-Arundel county, and entered with energy upon the active duties of his profession. At this period he commenced the study of natural history, for which he ever afterwards had a strong passion. He removed to Baltimore, and, after his marriage, to Philadelphia. Being invited to the professorship of anatomy in the college of Ohio, he spent a year at the west, and then returned to Philadelphia, where he willingly retired from the field of practice and devoted himself to scientific pursuits. Determined to be a thorough teacher of anatomy, he opened a room for private demonstrations, and in the first winter had a class of seventy students. His incessant toils and exposure to the foul atmosphere of the dissectingroom, laid the foundation of the disease of which he died. After prosecuting his anatomical labors four or five years, he was chosen professor of anatomy in Rutgers medical college in New York. With a broken constitution, he was compelled, the articles on natural history for the American tures, to retire from the school and to seek a milder climate. After passing the winter in Santa Cruz, he settled in Germantown, near Philadelphia. His disease was still advancing; yet, with unabated ardor, he prosecuted his literary and scientific employments, not for fame, but for the support of his family and the welfare of his fellow-mon.

Dr. Godman, like many other young physicians, adopted the Infidelity and Atheism of the French naturalists of the last century. For a time he not only rejected revelation, but was blind to the strong proofs of the existence of God, which are presented continually to the eye of the anatomist and the student of nature. A deprayed, unrenewed heart extinguished the light of reason. But, while lecturing at New York in the winter of 1827, he visited the death-bed of a student of medicine, in whose joyous anticipations of heaven and triumph over death, he saw a phenomenon which philosophy could not comprehend. This event led him to read the Bible, and the secret was unfolded. From this time he studied the Scriptures. He obtained the Christian hope; and he died in peace, in his last hour commending his family to the Father of the fatherless and the widow's God, - then, with uplifted eyes and hands, and a beaming countenance, resigning his spirit to his Redeemer. In the last sickness of his friend, Dr. Judson, an Infidel, the brother of the missionary, he addressed to him a letter, which was the means of his conversion, pointing out the way of conquering the fear of death. "Philosophy is a fool, and pride a madman. Many persons die with what is called manly firmness; they put on as smooth a face as they can, to impose on the spectators, and die firmly. But this is ail deception; the true state of their minds at the very time, nine times out of ten, is worse than the most horrible imaginings even of hell itself. But the man who dies as a man ought to die, is the humble-minded, believing Christian. He does not die manfully, but he rests in Jesus."

Dr. Godman was a distinguished scholar. With a limited education, he yet acquired a knowledge of the Latin, Greek, French, Spanish, and Italian languages. His industry was astonishing. It was his purpose to accomplish thoroughly whatever he undertook. He concentrated all his powers upon the pursuit in which he was engaged. The most striking character of his mind was a fertile fancy, yet controlled by a sound judgment, His talent at description is exhibited in his history of American quadrupeds and his rambles of a naturalist. His addresses are compositions of highly-wrought eloquence. At one time he was the principal editor of the Philadelphia journal of the medical and physical sciences. He wrote urse of lecto seek a ter in Santa r Philadel-; yet, with iterary and but for the of his fel-

ung physieism of the ry. For a n, but was xistence of to the eve nature. A ed the light ew York in th-bed of a inticipations saw a pheomprehend. ole, and the he studied istian hope; r commended eyes and esigning his sickness of brother of letter, which ting out the " Philos-Many pernness; they o impose on his is ail des at the very se than the

therless and itself. But o die, is the He does holar. With knowledge and Italian nishing. It ughly whatall his powas engaged.

mind was a l judgment. i his history ambles of a ositions of time he was phia journal He wrote

ie American

merous papers in the periodical journals of the day. He published the western quarterly reporter of medical science, etc., Cincinnati, 1822; account of irregularities of structure and morbid anatomy; contributions to physiological and pathological anatomy; Bell's anatomy, with notes; anatomical investigations, comprising descriptions of various fasciæ of the body, 1824; American natural history, with engravings, 3 vols., 1828; addresses on various public oceasions, 1829; rambles of a naturalist. - Prof. Sewall's Eu-

GOERING, JACOB, minister of the German Lutheran church in York, Penn., commenced the labors of the sacred office when only twenty years of age, and it pleased God to give such success to his faithful exertions at this early period of life, that a revival of religion always attended his preaching. He died in 1807, aged 52. He was a president of the synod of the German Lutheran church in the States of Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Virginia. He was a man of profound crudition, and among the languages with which he was acquainted, the Hebrew and Arabic were his favorites. Though warmly interested in his country's welfare, he yet declined a civil station, in which his fellow-citizens would gladly have placed him, dedicating himself wholly to the ministry. He died in the full assurance of obtaining and enjoying a perpetual happiness through the merits of his Redeemer. - Brown's American Register, 11. 84, 85. GOFFE, WILLIAM, one of the judges of King Charles I., and a major-general under Cromwell, died about 1679. He left London before Charles II. was proclaimed, and arrived at Boston with General Whalley in July, 1660. Governor Endecott gave them a friendly reception. But when the act of indemnity arrived in Nov., and their names were not found among those to whom pardon was offered, the government of Massachusetts was alarmed. Perceiving their danger, they left Cambridge, where they had resided, Feb. 26, 1661, and arrived at New Haven March 7th. They were here concealed by Deputy-governor Leet and Mr. Davenport. From New Haven they went to West Rock, a mountain three hundred feet in height, at the distance of two or three miles from the town, where they were hid in a cave. They afterwards lived in concealment at Milford, Derby, and Branford, and in Oct., 1664, removed to Hadley, in Mass., and were concealed for fifteen or sixteen years in the house of Mr. Russel, the minister. On the 1st of Sept., 1675, the town of Hadley was alarmed by the Indians in the time of public worship, and the people were thrown into the utmost confusion. But suddenly an aged, venerable man, in uncommon

Encyclopedia to the end of letter C., besides nu- | their courage, and, putting himself at their head, led them to the attack and repulsed the enemy. The deliverer of Hadley immediately disappeared, and the inhabitants, overwhelmed with astonishment, supposed that an angel had been sent for their protection. He died in Hadley. Under the oppression of constant fear during his residence in this country, his mind seems to have found some relief in the consolations of religion. Stiles' History of the Judges; Hutchinson, 1. 215-219,532; Holmes.

GOLD, HEZEKIAH, minister of Cornwall, Conn., died May 31, 1790, aged 50. He graduated at Yale in 1751. His wife was Sarah, the sister of Judge Sedgwick; she died in 1766, aged 27. Among their children were Thomas Gold, a lawver of Pittsfield, whose daughter, Maria, married Nathan Appleton, of Boston, and was the mother of Mrs. Longfellow; and Thomas Ruggles Gold, a lawyer at Whitesborough, N. Y.

GOLDSBOROUGH, ROBERT, a patriot of the Revolution, was graduated at Philadelphia college in 1760, and was afterwards attorney-general of Maryland, which office he resigned in 1768. In Aug., 1775, he was elected to congress, and embarked his large fortune in the cause of his country. He died at Cambridge, Md., Dec. 31, 1788.

GOLDSBOROUGH, CHARLES W., died in Washington Dec. 14, 1843, one of the oldest and most respected inhabitants of the city. He was chief of the bureau of provisions and clothing of the navy department. He published a naval history of the United States.

GOLDSMITH, JOHN, D. D., died at Newton, L. I., April 6, 1854, aged nearly 60, pastor of the church thirty-four years, president of the L. I. bible society. He was the son of Benjamin G. Goldsmith, who was forty-six years minister at Riverhead. He graduated at Nassau Hall in 1815. Dr. Spring preached his funeral sermon, as he did that of his predecessor.

GOLDTRAP, THOMAS W., died in Philadelphia in 1846, bequeathing to the widows' society and to the orphans' each 2,000 dollars; to the association for colored orphans the same; to Wills' hospital and to the apprentices' library 1,000 dollars each.

GOOCH, WILLIAM, Sir, major-general, and governor of Virginia from 1727 to 1749, sustained an excellent character, and was popular in his administration. He had superior military talents, and commanded the forces in the unsuccessful attack on Carthagena in 1740. When a slave in Williamsburg bowed to him in the street, he bowed in return. He said, "I cannot suffer a slave to exceed me in good manners."

GOODALE, NATHAN, major, died in the spring of 1793 at Sandusky, aged 50. He had been captured by the Indians, and died of sickness. A dress, appeared in the midst of them, revived native of Brookfield, he was an officer in the war, 1788, and the next year settled at lielpre. - Hil-

GOODALL, HERVEY, died in Africa in 1850. He was a Baptist missionary, sent out to explore Central Africa and to establish missions in Soudan.

GOODELL, Solomon, a man of liberality, died at Jamaica, Vt., in Sept., 1815, aged 70. At no time was his property worth 5,000 dollars. He was a farmer, living in a rude spot in the neighborhood of the Green Mountains. All his property was gained by severe personal labor, and saved by strict frugality; yet his liberality was such as might shame Mr. Girard, the possessor of millions of dollars. About the year 1800 he gave 100 dollars to the Congregational missionary society, and the same sum for several successive years. When the American board of foreign missions was established, he sent notice that he wished to subscribe 500 dollars for immediate use, and 1,000 for the fund, while yet it was in his power to forward only 50 dollars as earnest money. He fulfilled his engagement, and paid interest on the proposed 1,000 until he made provision for its payment just before his death, adding to it another 1,000. The amount of his donations for missions to the heathen, besides other charities, was 3,686 dollars. He had also provided for his children and his wife. He was a Baptist, yet most of his donations were intrusted to the hands of his fellow Christians, not Baptists. In this way he proved that he was no sectarian; not, like Mr. Girard, by condemning all religions alike. The power that moved him to his self-denying distributions in his life, - not, like Mr. Girard, when he could hold and accumulate no longer, - was a settled religious principle; a conviction that all his property was the gift of God, and that it was his duty to employ it for the highest and noblest of all purposes, that of promoting the knowledge of the gospel of his Redeemer and the ineffable blessedness of cternal salvation through that knowledge among his fellow-men, whom he was bound to love, as he loved himself.

GOODHUE, JOSIAH, minister of Dunstable, Mass., died in 1797, aged about 62. He graduated at Harvard in 1755.

GOODHUE, BENJAMIN, formerly a senator of the United States, died at Salem in 1814. aged 66.

G()OI)RICII, WILLIAM, one of the first settlers of Hartford, died in 1676. He came from Watertown in 1636 with his brother John. Goodwin gives the names of hundreds of his descendants.

GOODRICH, DAVID, colonel, son of the preceding, died in Wethersfield, Conn., in 1755, aged 87. He was a lieutenant-colonel in the old French war. Among his many children were and was wounded. He emigrated to Ohio in Col. Elizur, who died in 1774, aged 81; and Hezekiah, whose daughter, Honor, married Rev. Joshua Belden, of W., who lived to a venerable age as pastor of Newington society, dying in 1813, aged 89.

GOODRICH, ELIZUR, D. D., minister of Durham, Conn., was born in Wethersfield, 1734, and was graduated at Yale college in 1752. He was ordained to the work of the ministry Nov. 24. 1756. After his character as an excellent minister and a friend of literature was established, he was chosen in 1776 a member of the corporation of Yale college. He died at Norfolk Nov. 21, 1797, aged 63. He was the son of Deacon David G., of Wethersfield, Conn., who died in 1785, aged 90; and he was the son of Col. David G., of W., who died in 1655, aged 87. The father of the latter was Ensign William G., one of the first settlers of Wethersfield, who came from Watertown, Mass., about 1636, and died in 1676. His wife was Katharine, daughter of Elihu Chauncey. Dr. D. Smith married his daughter. Dr. Goodrich conciliated the esteem of his acquaintance, and was faithful in all the relations of life. He was distinguished for his literary and scientific acquirements, as well as for his piety and patriotism. As a preacher, he followed the examples of the apostles, preaching repentance and faith. He taught his hearers that man was depraved, and guilty, and lost, condemned by the law, and having no hope but in Christ, and that salvation was of grace and not of works. He published a sermon at the ordination of R. Newton, 1761; of S. Goodrich, 1787; at the installation of B. Boardman, 1784. - Dwight's Funeral Sermon.

GOODRICH, CHAUNCEY, lieutenant-governor of Connecticut, the son of the preceding, was born at Durham, Oct. 20, 1759; was graduated in 1776 at Yale college, where he was a tutor from 1779 to 1781. Engaging in the practice of the law at Hartford, he soon rose to eminence. From 1704 to 1800 he was a representative in congress, and senator from 1807 until his resignation in 1813, when he was chosen lieutenant-governor. He was also mayor of Hartford. He died suddenly of a dropsy in the heart, Aug. 18, 1815, aged 55. He survived two wives, but left no children. He was a man of energy of mind, of integrity, moderation, and amenity of manners. Several months before his death he applied for admission to the church, but, in consequence of his infirmity of body, had not been received. He remarked: "A moral life of itself is nothing for the salvation of the soul. I have lived a moral life in the estimation of the world; but I am a bundle of iniquity in the sight of a holy God. If there were not an atonement, I must be condemned and miserable forever."- Strong's Funeral Sermon.

GOODRICH, CHARLES, a first settler of Pitts-

81; and ied Rev. renerable dying in of Dur-734, and He was Nov. 24. minister d, he was m of Yale 797, nged of Weth-90; and who died atter was ttlers of

n. Mass., wife was Dr. D. lrich conand was was disc acquireotism. As s of the aith. He aved, and and havation was ed a ser-61; of S. B. Board-

-governor ding, was graduated s a tutor ractice of eminence. ntative in s resignanant-govord. He Aug. 18, s, but left of mind, manners. plied for quence of ved. He

t be conong's Fuof Pitts-othing for a moral

it I am a

God. If

was the son and sixteenth child of David, and grandson of William, the first settler of Wethersfield; and born April 6, Old Style, 1720. Goodwin is mistaken in his account of him, p. 79. He was one of the converts under Whitefield, and removed to Pontoosuck, now Pittsfield, in 1753. when there was but one building in the place, the house of Solomon Deming; and he introduced and held the first plough. He was in the battle of Bennington. He was a member of the provincial congress in 1774; he was also a judge of the common pleas. His son Charles, a graduate of Yale in 1797, is a preacher at Havana, Chemung county, N. Y.; his grandson, Charles S. J., is a physician in Brooklyn.

GOODRICH, HANNAH, died unmarried at Vernon, Conn., in July, 1820, aged 100 on the day of her death.

GOODRICH, SAMUEL, son of Dr. Elizur G., and the minister of Ridgefield and Berlin, died April 19, 1835, aged 72. His wife was Elizabeth, a daughter of Col. John Ely. Of his daughters, Elizabeth married Rev. Noah Coe; Abigail married Rev. Samuel Whittlesey; Emily Chauncey married Rev. Darius Mead. Rev. Charles Augustus Goodrich, a graduate of 1812, is his son. He published a sermon at the ordination of C. A. Goodrich at Worcester, 1816.

GOODRICH, ELIZUR, LL. D., died at New Haven, Nov. 1, 1840, aged 88. Jefferson removed him from the office of collector of customs, and avowed in a letter his purpose and principle of removals. He was born in Durham, the son of Dr. E. G.; graduated at Yale in 1779; and was a member of congress and judge of probate. Prof. Chauncey Allen Goodrich is his son. He was also mayor of the city, and nine years professor of law in Yale college. His life was one of temperance, integrity, and virtue.

GOODWIN, EZRA S., minister of Sandwich, died Feb. 5, 1833, aged 45. He was a native of Plymouth, a graduate of 1807. He published a sermon in the liberal preacher, III. 9; address to peace society, 1830; ancient and modern orthodoxy, 1831; Alice Bradford, a present; a piece in tracts of Unitarian association, No. 66. A memoir of him is in Historical Collections, 3d series,

GOODWIN, GEORGE, died in Hartford in May, 1844, aged 87, formerly publisher of the Hartford

GOODWIN, NATHANIEL, died at Hartford, May 29, 1855, aged 73, the son of Nathaniel G. and Anne Sheldon. His other ancestors, ascending, were Daniel, Nathaniel, Nathaniel, and Osias, who was one of the first settlers of Hartford, and died in 1683, aged 87. After serving for years creditably as an apprentice to the Websters, printers in Albany, he became a quently accompanied him in his missionary tours, field, Mass., died Nov. 15, 1816, aged 96. He teacher and a land surveyor. At Hartford he held many important public trusts. He was treasurer many years, judge of probate, and clerk. He was much employed in settling intestate estates, and was held in high respect as a man of probity. He died worth about 150,000 dollars, about half of which he bequeathed to his nephew, Daniel. Though never married, the subject of genealogy engaged much of his attention. He published an account of the "descendants of Thomas Olcott," and then of the "Foote Family." He only commenced, before he died, the publication of his genealogical notes, or contributions to the family history of some of the first settlers of Connecticut and Massachusetts," which was published in 1856, pp. 362. A memoir of Mr. G. is prefixed.

GOOKIN, DANIEL, author of the Historical Collections of the Indians in New England, and major-general of Massachusetts, died March 19, 1687, aged 75. He was born in the county of Keut, in England. He came to Virginia in 1621 with his father, who brought cattle to the colony from Ireland, and who established himself at a plantation, called Newport's News. In the year 1642, Mr. Thomson and other ministers from Massachusetts were sent to Virginia, to preach the gospel to a people but little acquainted with the truth. When they were forced to withdraw from this colony, because they would not conform with the church of England, such was the attachment of Mr. Gookin to their preaching, that he soon followed them. In 1644 he removed with his family to New England, and settled in Cambridge, that he might enjoy the ordinances of the gospel in their purity. Soon after his arrival he was appointed captain of the military company in Cambridge, and a member of the house of deputies. In 1652 he was elected assistant or magistrate. and four years after was appointed by the general court superintendent of all the Indians, who had submitted to the government of Massachusetts. He executed this office with such fidelity, that he was continued in it till his death. In 1656 he visited England, and had an interview with Cromwell, who commissioned him to invite the people of Massachusetts to transport themselves to Jamaica, which had been conquered from the Span-In 1662 he was appointed, with Mr. iards. Mitchell, one of the licensers of the printing press in Cambridge. When Philip's war commenced in 1675, several severe laws were passed against the friendly Indians, to whom religious instruction had been imparted, through apprehension that they would join the enemy, and the rage of the people against their red-colored brethren was violent and alarming. Mr. Eliot stood forth as the friend and protector of the Indians, and Mr. Gookin, who had zealously co-operated with Mr. Eliot in his benevolent exertions, and who fre-

was equally their friend. He was the only magistrate who endeavored to prevent the outrages of the populace. He was in consequence much abused, and even insulted as he passed the streets; but he had too much of the elevation of Christian virtue to feel any resentment, and the effects of licentiousness did not inspire him with the desire of abridging the liberties of the people. He soon, however, recovered the esteem and confidence which he had lost, by firmly resisting the attempts which were made to destroy the charter of Massachusetts. In 1681 he was appointed major-general of the colony, and he continued in the magistracy till the dissolution of the charter in 1686. In the inscription upon his monument in the burying-ground in Cambridge, his name is written Gookings. Such was his poverty, that Mr. Eliot. in a letter to Mr. Boyle, not long after his decease, solicits that charitable gentleman to bestow ten pounds upon his widow. He was a man of good understanding, rigid in his religious and political opinions, zealous and active, of inflexible integrity and exemplary piety, disinterested and benevolent, a firm patriot, and uniformly and peculiarly the friend of the Indians, who lamented his death with unfeigned sorrow. His two sons, Daniel and Nathaniel, were ministers; the former of Sherburne, whose care extended also to the Indians at Natick, and the latter of Cambridge, who was ordained Nov. 15, 1682, and died Aug. 7, 1692, aged 33. He was succeeded by Mr. Brattle.

Mr. Gookin wrote in 1674 historical collections of the Indians in New England, which remained in manuscript, till it was published by the Mussachusetts historical society in 1792. In this work he gives many interesting particulars of the various tribes of Indians, of their customs, manners, religion, and government, and of the exertions which were made to civilize them, and to bring them to an acquaintance with the Christian religion. He also wrote a history of New England; but it is not known that the manuscript is now in existence. — Hist. Coll. 1. 228, 226; VII. 23; Holmes' Hist. of Cambridge; Hutchinson; Magnalia, II. 21; Johnson's Wond.-Work. Prov. 109, 192; Stith, 205.

GOOKIN, NATHANIEL, minister of Hampton, N. H., was the son of Rev. N. Gookin, of Cambridge, and was graduated in 1703. He was ordained in 1710 as successor of John Cotton. After a prudent and faithful ministry of about twenty-four years, he died in 1734, aged 46. His son, Nathaniel, was settled in North Hampton, N. H., in 1739, and died in 1766. His grandson, Judge Paniel, died at Saco in 1831, aged 75. Mr. Goolie bablished three sermons, occasioned by the certaplack in Oct., 1727, to which is sandting added an account of the earthquake, and something parantisable of thunder and lightning in Hampton. - Hist. Coll. VII. 55; Shurtleff's Sermon at Ordination of Mr. Gookin, 1730.

GORDON, WILLIAM, D. D., minister of Roxbury, Mass., and a historian of the American war, died at Ipswich, England, Oct. 19, 1807, aged 77. He was a native of Hitchin. He was early settled as a pastor of a large Independent church at Ipswich, but after many years he removed in consequence of some unearlness occasioned by his reprehension of the conduct of one of his principal hearers in employing his workmen on public business on the Lord's day. After the death of Dr. David Jennings, he was chosen to be his successor in the church at Old Gravel lane, Wapping. Here he might have continued much respected, but in the year 1770, his partiality to America induced him to force himself away, in order to settle in this country. After having preached about a year to the third church in Roxbury, he was ordained its minister July 6. 1772. He took an active part in public measures during the war with Great Britain, and was chosen chaplain to the provincial congress of Massachusetts. While in this office he preached a fast sermon, which strongly expressed his political sentiments. In 1776 he formed the design of writing a history of the great events in America. Besides other sources of information, he had recourse to the records of congress, and to those of New England, and was indulged with the perusal of the papers of Washington, Gates, Greene, Lincoln, and Otho Williams. After the conclusion of the war he returned to his native country in 1786, and in 1788 published the work, which had for several years occupied his attention. It produced him 300 pounds. After spending some time in London, where he had many friends, he obtained a settlement at St. Neots in Huntingdonshire. This situation was much inferior to either of the former settlements which he had enjoyed. The congregation gradually declined, in consequence of his want of that popular address, to which they had been accustomed, and of the failure of his mental powers. The infirmity of his mind was at length so visible, that his friends advised his resignation, and raised a subscription for him. He afterwards returned to Ipswich, England, where he had some agreeable connections left. Here he preached a few occasional sermons; but his memory and failed him to such a degree as to reader that what for all public service. After living to experience the melancholy extinction of the powers of his mind, he died at

In his religious sentiments Dr. Gordon was a strict Calvinist; yet he possessed a liberal mind, and a very sociable disposition. He was even sometimes facctious. Though his temper was warm, he was yet friendly and benevolent. His sermons were composed with care; but, as they

r of Rox-

American 10, 1807, He was Indepenyears he ness ocenuct of one his workay. After vas chosen old Gravel continued D, his parce himself ry. After ird church ter July 6, e measures and was ongress of preached l his politie design of a America. e had reto those of the perusal s, Greene, the concluve country ork, which attention. spending any friends, n Huntinginferior to he had enleclined, in ar address. and of the ifirmity of his friends

ubscription o Ipswich, cable conoccasional nim tasach public sernelancholy he died at rdon was a eral mind, was even mper was lent. His ut, as they were written in a very systematical form, and was not interesting as a preas her. He published a plan of a society for making provision for widows, by annuities for life, 1772; a sermon at a fast; at two thanksgivings, 1775; before the house of representatives, 1773; at the election 1775; before the general court on the anniversary of Independence, 1777; doctrine of universal salvation examined and shown to be unscriptural, 1783. His history of the rise, progress, and establishment of the Independence of the United States of America, in 4 vols. 8vo. 1788, though not written with elegance, is allowed to have considerable merit as a minute and in general a faithful parrative of facts. Before he came to this country he published an abridgment of President Edward's treatise on the affections. -I'ref. to his Hist. of American War; Monthly Repos., London, for Nov. 1807.

GORDON, WILLIAM, attorney-general of the State of New Hampshire, died at Boston in May, 1802, aged 39. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1779. His residence was at Amherst. He was a senator in the State legislature and a member of congress.

GORE, CHRISTOPHER, governor of Massachusetts, died March 1, 1827, aged 68. He was born in Boston in 1758, and was the son of a respectable mechanic, who at the beginning of the Revolution, as he adhered to the royal government, went to Halifax, but afterwards returned to Boston. He was graduated in 1776, and after studying law with Judge Lowell, engaged in extensive and lucrative practice. In 1789 he was appointed first United States attorney for the district of Massachusetts, in the execution of which office he met with difficulties, but he resolutely pursued the course of duty. In 1796 he was appointed colleague with William Pinkney, a commissioner under the fourth article of Jay's treaty, to settle our claims for spoliations. By his efforts, when in England, he recovered sums to a vast amount for our citizens; his argument on that class of captures, which were made under the rule of 1756, was elaborate and powerful. As his commission lasted nearly eight years, he remained abroad till 1804. In the preceding year he had been left by his intimate friend, Rufus King, minister to England, charge d'affaires. After his return he was chosen, in 1809, governor of Massachusetts, as successor of Sullivan; but the next year the people chose Mr. Gerry in his place. In 1814 he was appointed senator to congress, in which capacity he served about three years, and then withdrew into final retirement. His residence was a beautiful seat, about nine miles from Boston, at Waltham, whence he was excruciating disorder embittered his last years.

Having no children, Mr. Gore left valuable bewere read with slavish adherence to his notes, he quests to the American academy and the historical society, of which he was a member ; and he made Harvard college, of which he had been a fellow or trustee, his residuary legatee. With the literature of the day he had kept himself familiarly acquainted, and he was an excellent classical scholar. His mind was acute and thiscriminating; his morals pure; his manners dignifled and elegant. He published a masonic oration, 1783. - American Ann. Reg. 1826-7, p. 339-311.

GORGES, FERMINANDO, Sir, proprietor of the province of Maine, died in 1647. He was the governor of Plymouth and an early member of the Plymouth company in England. and Chief-justice Poplism sent out Challons in a ship of fifty tons for discovery, but the vessel was captured by the Spanlards. In the next year George Popham and Raleigh Gilbert were sent out to the Kennebec. In 1610 he sent Capt, Dermer to Monhegan. Desirons of engaging the Scotch in the settlement of New England, he promoted the patent of Nova Scotia to Sir Wm, Alexander, Sept. 10, 1621. In 1622 the council of Plymouth, established by new charter in 1620, made to him and J. Mason a grant of the lands between the Merrimae and Sagadahoc, reaching back to the lakes, called Laconia. The next year a settlement was commenced at Pascataqua. In 1639 he obtained from the crown a confirmatory grant of the land from Pascataqua to Sagadahoe, called the province of Maine, in compliment to Queen Henrietta, who held as her estate the province of Maine in France. He was made lord palatine. He incorporated the village of Agamenticus, or York, into a city, called Gorgeana; but the colony did not prosper. This estate fell to his son, John Gorges, who neglected the province, so that in 1652 they placed themselves under Massachusetts. He expended 20,000 pounds in his American enterprises. He published narrative of his proceedings relative to the settlement of New England, contained in the work of his grandson, Ferdmando, 1659. In closing his narrative he asks, "What can be more pleasing to a generous nature, than to be exercised in doing public good; and what monument so durable as erecting of houses, villages, and towns; and what more pious, than advancing of Christian religion amongst people, who have not known the excellency thereof?" In this work Dr. Belknap found materials for his history of Gorges. - Belknap's Biog. 1. 346-393.

GORGES, FERDINANDO, grandson of the preceding, succeeded to the rights of his father, John. On the restoration he petitioned the king against the usurpation of Massachusetts. Commissioners, Carr, etc., were sent over to adjust accustomed frequently to walk into town. An the affairs of government. But in 1677 he was induced to sell his rights to Massachusetts for 1250 pounds. The territory, thus acquired, was first formed into the two counties of York and Cumberland. He published a description of New England, entitled "America painted to the life," London, 1659, containing the narrative by his grandfather, as well as descriptions of his own. In some editions, Johnson's wonder-working providence is also annexed.

GORHAM, JOHN, colonel, died at Barnstable, in 1717, aged 65. He was distinguished in the war against the French and Indians.

GORHAM, NATHANIEL, president of congress, was born in Charlestown, Mass., in 1738, and died June 11, 1796, aged 58. He was often a member of the legislature, and in 1784 was elected to eongress, and was chosen president June 6, 1786. He was also a judge of the court of common pleas for several years. As a member of the convention he assisted in forming the constitution of the United States. - Eliot; Welsh's Eulogy.

GORHAM, NATHANIEL, son of the preceding, one of the first settlers of the "Genesec country," died at Canandaigua Oct. 22, 1826, with the character of a worthy citizen. Massachusetts having received of New York the right of pre-emption of about six millions of acres, sold their right of the eastern one-third, or two millions, to Nathaniel Gorham and Oliver Phelps, in 1788, for 300,000 pounds. In July they held a treaty with the five nations of Indians and obtained their release. Mr. Phelps began the settlement in 1789. In 1790 one million of "Phelps and Gorham's purchase" was sold to R. Morris, and he, in 1792, sold to C. Williamson.

GORHAM, WILLIAM, judge, died in Gorham, Me., in 1804. A native of Massachusetts, he went early on public business to Nova Scotia, and in 1772 removed to Gorham. In 1782 he was judge of probate; in 1789, judge of common pleas. He was a man of solid talents, and good judgment, and a Christian.

GORHAM, JOHN, M. D., physician in Boston, graduated at Harvard college in 1801, and studied his profession at Edinburgh. In 1809 he was appointed adjunct professor of chemistry and materia medica at Cambridge; and in 1816, professor of chemistry and mineralogy. He died suddenly March 29, 1829, aged 46. He published inaugural address, 1817; elements of chemical science, 2 vols. 8vo. 1819.

GORHAM, BENJAMIN, died in Boston Sept. 27, 1855, aged 80; a graduate of 1795. His father, Nathaniel G., of Charlestown, was president of the continental congress; his brother was a pioneer of western New York. Studying law, he was the associate of Prescott, Jackson, Parsons, Gore, Dexter, Sullivan, Cabot, Ames, Otis, Parker, and Lowell. He was also a faithful representative and senator in congress. By marriage Jones. In private life he loved to talk, and he talked well. — Boston Advertiser, July 16, 1856. GORHAM, MARY, died in Stratford, Conn., Jan. 2, 1837, nged 74, widow of Capt. Nehemiah G., an officer of the Revolution. She was a memorable example of humility, of submission and patience, of peace and hope, in a long-continned sickness.

GORTON, SAMUEL, the first settler of Warwick, R. I., died after 1676, at an advanced age, He came to this country in 1636, and in a few years occasioned much disturbance in the church of Boston by the wild sentiments on religion which he advanced. He soon went to Plymouth, in which colony he was subjected to corporal punishment for his errors, and whence he removed in June, 1638, to Rhode Island. At Newport he received the same discipline, on account of his contempt of the civil authority. He purchased some land near Pawtuxet river, in the south part of Providence, in Jan., 1641. Under the cover of this purchase he encroached upon the lands of others, and, complaints having been entered against him in the court of Massachusetts, he was required to submit himself to the jurisdiction of that colony, and to answer for his conduct. This summons he treated with contempt; but, being apprehensive that he was not in a place of safety, he crossed the river at the close of 1642, and with eleven others purchased of Miantunnomu, the Narragansett sachem, a tract of land at Mishawomet, for which he paid 144 fathoms of wampum. The deed was signed Jan. 17, 1643. The town, of which he now laid the foundation. was afterwards called Warwick. In May following, he and his party were seized by order of the general court of Massachusetts, and carried to Boston, where he was required to answer to the charge of being a blasphemous enemy of the gospel and its ordinances, and of all civil government. His ingenuity embarrassed the judges, for, while he adhered to his own expressions, which plainly contradicted the opinions which were embraced in Massachusetts, he yet, when examined by the ministers, professed a coincidence with them generally in their religious sentiments. The letter which he wrote to the governor, before his seizure, was addressed "to the great, honored, idol gentleman of Massachusetts," and was filled with reproaches of the magistrates and ministers; but in his examination he declared that he had reference only to the corrupt state of mankind in general. He had asserted that Christ suffered actually before he suffered under Pilate; but his meaning was, as he said, that the death of Christ was actual to the faith of the fathers. The ordinances, he thought, were abolished after the revelation was written, and thus he could admit that they were the ordinances of Christ, because they he was connected with Judge Lowell and J. C. were established for a short time by him. But talk, and he ly 16, 1856. ford, Conn., t. Nchemiah She was a f submission a long-con-

ler of Warvanced age. nd in a few n the church on religion o Plymouth, orporal punremoved in Newport he ount of his e purchased e south part r the cover the lands of een entered achusetts, he jurisdiction his conduct. niempt; but, n u place of ose of 1642, of Miantunract of land 4 fathoms of ın. 17, 1643. e foundation, May followorder of the carried to swer to the emy of the ll civil govthe judges, expressions, nions which et, when excoincidence sentiments. rnor, before at, honored, d was filled d ministers; that he had

th of Christ The orditer the revadmit that ceanse they him. But mankind in rist suffered

te; but his

this equivocation did not avail him. His opinions were undoubtedly erroneous. All the magistrates but three were of opinion that he should be put to death, but the deputies were in favor of milder measures. Gorton, with a number of his companions, was sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor, and prohibited from passing the limits of the town to which he was sent, and from propagating his heresies, under pain of death. After a few months, the dissatisfaction of many people with his imprisonment, and other causes, induced the court to substitute banishment in its place. In 1644 he went to England with a deed from the Narragansett Indians, transferring their territory to the king; and he obtained an order from parliament, securing to him the peaceable possession of his lands. He arrived at Boston in 1648, and thence proceeded to Shawomet, which he called Warwick, in honor of the Earl of Warwick, who had given him much assistance in effecting his object. Here he officiated as a minister, and disseminated his doctrines, in consequence of which a large part of the descendants of his followers have neglected all religion to the present day. Without the advantages of education, he made himself acquainted with the Hebrew and Greek languages, that he might better understand the Scriptures, though he had affected to despise human learning. He violently opposed the Quakers, as their principles were hostile to his antinomian sentiments. He believed that the sufferings of Christ were within his children, and that he was as much in this world at one time as at another; that all which is related of him is to be taken in a spiritual sense; that he was incarnate in Adam, and was the image of God, wherein he was created. He published simplicity's defence against the seven-headed policy, which was answered by Mr. Winslow; antidote against Pharisaical teachers; saltmarsh returned from the dead, 1655; a glass for the people of New England. -Winthrop, 309-318, 325; Morton, 117, 120; Hutchinson, 1. 72, 117-124, 549; Coll. Hist. Soc. 1x. 35-38; Holmes; Callender, 36, 37; Magnalia, vit. 11. GOSNOLD, BARTHOLOMEW, an intrepid mariner of the west of England, sailed from Falmouth for the coast of America March 26, 1602. Instead of approaching this country by the way of the West Indies, he was the first Englishman who directly crossed the ocean. He discovered land May 14th, and a cape on the 15th, near which he caught a great number of cod, from which circumstance he named the land Cape Cod. The Indians, whom he met at different places, wore ornaments of copper, and used the pipe and tobacco. He passed Sandy Point, and in a few days came to an island, which he named Martha's Vineyard, as there were many vines upon it. This is supposed to have been, not the island his residence, it is supposed, was Boston.

which now hears that name, but the small island, which is called No man's land. He resided three weeks on the most western of the Elizabeth islands, on which he built a fort and store-house. But, finding that he had not a supply of provisions, he gave up the design of making a settlement. The eellar of his store-house was discovered by Dr. Belknap in 1797. After his return to England he embarked in an expedition to Virginia, where he was a member of the council. But he died soon after his arrival, Aug. 22, 1607. - Belknap, 11. 100-122; Holmes; Purchas, IV. 1690; v. 1646-1653; Stith, 30, 35, 45; British Empire, 1. 353; Harris' Voyages, 1. 816; Universal History, XXXIX. 269, 270.

GOSS, THOMAS, minister of Bolton, died in 1780, aged about 63. He graduated at Harvard

in 1737.

GOSS, EBENEZER, Dr., died in Paris, Me., in 1825, aged 84. He came from Concord, N. H., and had lived fifty years in Maine.

GOUGH, HANNAH, widow of Joseph G., died in New York Oct. 19, 1845, aged 109 years, 11 months, in full possession of her faculties.

GOULD, THOMAS, a Baptist minister, came from England to Boston before 1687. - Snow's History of Boston.

GOULD, EBENEZER, a minister in Middletown, Conn., died in 1778, aged about 75. He graduated at Yale in 1723.

GOULD, JAMES, LL. D., died at Litchfield, Conn., May 11, 1838, aged 67. A native of Branford, he graduated at Yale in 1791, became a distinguished lawyer and judge of the supreme court of Connecticut, and for many years was the associate of Mr. Reeve, as a professor in the law school at Litchfield, after whose death he conducted it for a few years. He was learned, accomplished, amiable and affectionate. He published principles of pleading in civil actions, 1832. Hellister's History of Connecticut.

GOULD, John W., son of Judge J. Gould, died at sea Oct. 1, 1838, aged 23. His writings were published in a volume, with a sketch of his life, 1839. The forecastle yarns were published separately in 1854. - Cyclopedia of Amer. Lit.

GOULD, M. WOODBRIDGE, died in Southampton in 1838. She was born in Nov., 1787, the only daughter of Dr. S. Woodbridge, of Southampton, the minister of which place, Rev. V. Gould, she married. She was a scholar. In his absence his many pupils in Greek and Latin recited to her; and she had great picty as well as talents. Her character is described at length in the Recorder of July 20, 1838.

GOULD, ALEXANDER, died at Elliot April 19, 1844, aged 93 : he was in Bunker Hill battle. - A Captain Benjamin Gould was wounded in the battle of Lexington, who died about 1846, aged 90:

GOULD, VINSON, died in 1841, aged 67. Born | with his family from want of the necessaries of in Sharon, Conn., he graduated at Williams college in 1797. He succeeded Mr. Judd as minister of Southampton, Mass., and was minister from 1801 to 1832, when he resigned. From 1833 to 1836 he was a minister in Bernardston. published a sermon at the ordination of S. Clark, 1808.

GOULD, DANIEL, minister of Rumford, Me., died May 21, 1842, aged 90. He was two years in the war; then a graduate of Harvard in 1782, and a much respected minister.

GOULD, WILLIAM M., died in New York June 16, 1852, aged 36; author of zephyrs from Italy, a book of travelling sketches.

GOULD, WILLIAM, general, died in Caldwell, N. J., Feb. 12, 1847, aged 89. He was in the battle of Monmouth. In 1784 he and others formed the church, of which he was a worthy officer. His death was that of a humble, penitent man, yet full of faith in Christ, in whom was his "only

GOULD, BULAII II., wife of Maj. D. Gould, of Sharon, Conn., died May 22, 1856, aged 66. She was a woman of eminent piety, of unwearied industry, of rare benevolence. For many years as a milliner she toiled to gain property for good uses. Her gains of 350 dollars a year for ten years she devoted to charity, giving about 1700 dollars to the American board, and 900 to the sician. home missions, and 300 to the Bible society. -N. Y. Observer, June 29.

GOULDING, THOMAS, D. D., minister of Columbus, Ga., died in July, 1848, aged 62. After preaching he died within an hour from an affection of the heart.

GRAEME, THOMAS, Dr., a distinguished physician in Philadelphia for near half a century, died about 1774. He was collector of the port. He was a native of Scotland, a graduate in medicine. His residence was Graeme park, about twenty miles from the city. His wife was the daughter of Sir Wm. Keith; his daughter was Mrs. Ferguson. — Portfolio, new series, 1. 520.

GRAFTON, Joseph, a useful pastor, died at Newton Dec. 16, 1836, aged 77. He was for nearly half a century the Baptist minister of Newton. He was born at Newport, R. I. He published a piece on baptism and a funeral sermon.

GRAHAM, JOHN, first minister of Southbury, Conn., died in Dec., 1774, aged 80. He was a descendant of one of the marquises of Montrose, born in Edinburgh in 1694, and educated at Glasgow. He studied physic. Emigrating to this country with the Londonderry people in 1718, he lived at first in Exeter, N. H.; but, after he became a preacher, he was ordained as the first minister of Stafford, Conn., May 25, 1723. The to the Episcopal church of Vermont, and resided settlement of the town began in 1719. Suffering there several years. On his return he lived at life, he was dismissed in 1731 for inadequate support. After living a short time in Lebanon, he was settled Jan. 17, 1733, as the first minister of the second church in Woodbury, in a village which is now the town of Southbury. Here he passed more than forty years, useful and respected. He had a colleague, Mr. Wildman, in 1766. In the revival of religion in New England about 1740. he zealously engaged in promoting it by his labors. He married, in Exeter, Love Sanborn; and there his son John was born in 1722. His second wife was Abigail, the daughter of Rev. Isaac Chauncy of Hadley. His daughter, Love Graham, married first Mr. Brinkerhoff, who lived on the Iludson river, and next Rev. Jonathan Lee of Salisbury; she was the mother of Rev. Dr. Chauncy Lee. Three of his sons, graduates of 1740, 1747, and 1760, were ministers: John of Suffield, Chauney of Fishkill, and Richard C. of Pelham, Mass. His sons, Andrew and Robert, were physicians, Robert lived at White Plains, and was judge of the common pleas and the admiralty courts. Rev. John G. died in West Suffield in 1796, aged 74. Mr. Graham wrote, in 1732, a ballad against the church of England. It exists in manuscript. He published also a tract on the same subject, and a rejoinder to Johnson's answer. They call him Dr. Graham, perhaps because he was once a phy-

GRAHAM, ANDREW, an eminent physician, and patriot of the Revolution, was the son of the preceding, and was for many years the representative of Woodbury. He was the surgeon of the troops in the action at Danbury; and in the battle of the White Plains was taken prisoner, and not released till the surrender of Cornwallis. He died in 1785 .-- Graham's Vermont, 6, 7.

GRAHAM, ISABELLA, a pious and benevolent lady of New York, was born in Scotland July 29, 1742; in 1765 she married Dr. John Graham. and accompanied him with his regiment to Niagara, and thence to Antigua, where he died in 1774. She came in 1789 to New York, where for many years she superintended a school for the instruction of young ladies. By her efforts the widow's society, the orphan asylum society, and the society for the promotion of industry were instituted. She died July 27, 1814. Mr. Bethune married her daughter. Dr. Mason published interesting memoirs of her life.

GRAHAM, JOHN ANDREW, LL. D., died at New York Aug. 29, 1841, aged 77. He was the son of Dr. Andrew Graham, of Woodbury, the sixth of his nine children. Born in 1764, in the early part of his life he resided at Burlington, Vt., and about 1795 he went to London as agent essaries of equate supebanon, he minister of llage which he nassed ected. He 36. In the bout 1740, y his labors. ; and there second wife ac Chauncy

am, married

he Hudson

Salisbury; nauncy Lec.), 1747, and ld, Chauncy ham, Mass. physicians. as judge of ourts. Rev. 6, aged 74. against the script. He bject, and a ey call him hysician, and of the prerepresentageon of the in the battle ier, and not wallis. He 5, 7. benevolent once a phy-

and July 29, hn Graham, ent to Niaghe died in York, where hool for the efforts the society, and stry were in-Ir. Bethune ublished in-

D., died at He was the podbury, the 1764, in the Burlingten, lon as agent and resided he lived at 1812.

GRAHAM, WILLIAM M., colonel, fell in battle in Mexico Sept. 8, 1847. He was born in Virginia, and had fought the Indians in Florida in various battles.

GRAHAM, Joseph, general, died Nov. 12, 1836, aged 77, in Lincoln county, N. C. He was born in Chester, Penn., in 1759, and in the State to which he emigrated sustained various public offices. I'or forty years he was a member of the Presbyterian church. He was frugal and liberal; he lived to see his children rise to eminence, and he died in the assurance of a happy immortality.

GRAHAM, ISAAC GILBERT, M. D., died Sept. 1, 1848, aged 88. He was born in Southbury. Conn., son of Dr. Andrew G., and was surgeon in army at West Point. At the close of the war he settled at Unionville, N. Y., and there lived more than sixty years, - a benevolent physician, a sincere and humble believer in the Christian faith.

GRAHAM, ALEXANDER J., died at New Lebanon, N. Y., July 23, 1850, aged 24; a missionary to the Choctaws. The son of Charles I. Graham, of Newark, he was educated at Princeton college and semipary; then took charge of the Spencer academy, Arkansas, devoting himself to the service of forty Indian boys. But he soon died .-N. Y. Observer, Aug. 3.

GRAHAM, SYLVESTER, died at Northampton, Mass., Sept. 11, 1851, aged 56. He was the son of Rev. John G., of Suffield. For some years he was a preacher; then for the rest of his life a public lecturer on total abstinence from animal food, which he recommended; on temperance, and on other subjects. He published lectures on the science of human life, 2 vols., and other lectures. Dr. Titus Cornwell, a resident in Illinois, died in 1855, bequeatling four-fifths of an estate of from 7,000 to 10,000 dollars, the interest to be employed for the benefit of schools in Greene county, in the distribution annually of Graham's and Alcott's lectures.

GRAHAM, DAVID, an eminent lawyer in New York, died of the consumption at Nice, in Italy, May 27, 1852, aged 46. He was skilled in arguing criminal and other jury cases. He was one of the commissioners for framing the new code of procedure in New York.

GRAHAM, Augustus, died in 1851. By his will, dated April and Oct., 1851, he bequeathed about 100,000 dollars to a multitude of institutions. Among the largest of his bequests were 27,000 to the Brooklyn institute; 12,000 for leetures on the attributes of God seen in his works; 10,000 to the colonization society, and the same to the Unitarian association in Boston. - N. Y. Observer, Dec. 11.

New York. He published sketch of Vermont, Brooklyn, N. Y., in March, 1853. He and his London, 1797; speeches in the New York courts, brother Augustus, who died in 1852, were natives of Scotland, and lived in B. about forty years; they were rich and generous, the founders of the Brooklyn institute, home for aged females, and the city hospital.

GRAHAM. MARGARET, Mrs., died in Lexington, Va., Sept. 25, 1853, aged 83; the daughter of William Alexander, and the sister of Dr. Archibald A. When young she rode forty miles to attend a remarkable religious meeting at the Peaks of Otter, and became soon religious, and made her profession with her brother under a large tent, as there was no church at Lexington. She lived as a Christian more than fifty years.

GRAHAM, John, minister plenipotentiary to the court of Brazil, died at Washington August 6, 1820, aged 46. His ill health had induced him to return. While a member of the legislature of Virginia, he was appointed secretary to the American legation in Spain; afterwards secretary for the territory of Louisiana; then chief elerk in the department of State. In 1818 he went on a mission with Rodney and Bland for political information to Buenos Ayres. His long and valuable report was made Nov. 5, 1818, and is among the printed State papers. His worth was attested by letters of Madison and Monroe, published in Nat. Intell., Aug. 29, 1820.

GRANGER, GIDEON, postmaster-general of the United States, died Dec. 31, 1822. He was born at Suffield, Conn., July 19, 1767, the son of Gideon Granger, and graduated at Yale eollege in 1787. He soon became eminent as a lawyer. Through his exertions in the legislature Connecticut is chiefly indebted for its large school fund. In 1801 Mr. Jefferson appointed him postmaster-general in the place of J. Habersham, in which office he continued till 1814, when, being displaced and succeeded by Meigs, he removed to Canandaigua, N. Y. As a member of the senate of New York in 1819, he promoted internal improvements. He gave one thousand acres of land for the benefit of the canal. His wife was the sister of Mr. Pease, assistant postmaster-general. He was tall, dignified, and commanding, yet affable; a man of integrity and distinguished talents. His political writings were under the signature of Senectus, on the school fund, and of Algernon Sidney in 1809, and Epaminondas in 1820, in favor of the administrations of Jefferson and of Gov. Clinton.

GRANGER, DANIEL T., died at Eastport, Mc., Dec. 27, 1854, aged about 48. He graduated at Bowdoin in 1826, and was a lawyer of eminence and integrity.

GRANT, Anna, a widow, died at Rowley in 1801, aged 105.

GRANT, Mrs., a colored woman, died at Pitts-GRAHAM, John B., died of apoplexy in field in 1845, aged more than 100; and another died at P. in the same year, aged 92.

GRANT, ASAHEL, M. D., missionary, died at Mosul of typhus fever April 24, 1844, aged 36. He was born in Marshall, N. Y., and embarked May, 1835. His wife, Judith Campbell of Cherry Valley, died at Ooroomialı in 1839. A memoir of him by A. C. Lathrop was published 1846, and one by Mr. Laurie in 1853. A memoir of his wife was published with that of Mrs. E. Dwight.

GRASSE, FRANCOIS JOSEPH PAUL, count de, commander of the French fleet in the American service in the Revolutionary war, died in France Jan. 15, 1788, aged 65. His family were exiles in the Revolution of France. His son in 1795 commanded a man-of-war in the British service.

GRATIOT, CHARLES, general, died in May, 1855, formerly chief of the engineer corps.

GRAUPNER, GOTTLIEB, professor of music, died in Boston April 15, 1836, aged 70.

GRAVES, THOMAS, judge of the supreme court of Massachusetts, died in 1747, aged about 65. He graduated at Harvard in 1703.

GRAVES, ALLEN, missionary at Bombay, died Dec. 30, 1843, aged 51. Born at Rupert, Vt., he graduated at Middlebury in 1812, at Andover seminary in 1816, and embarked for Bombay in 1817. He visited the United States in 1832. His wife was Mary Lee of Rupert.

GRAY, Ellis, minister in Boston, died Jan. 7, 1753, aged 36. He graduated at Harvard in 1734, and was ordained in 1738. As a preacher he was carnest and pathetic. He published a sermon at the ordination of T. Maccarty, 1742. - Mather's Fun. Sermon.

GRAY, JAMES, colonel, died in Stockbridge, Mass., in 1782. He was commissary-general for the northern department during the war; but ill health compelled him to resign. His daughter, Mrs. Hunt, died in 1788, and his daughter, Mrs. Bidwell, died in 1808. Mrs. Gray died in 1809. She was an eminent Christian, a member of Dr. West's church forty years.

GRAY, WILLIAM, lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, an eminent merehant, died Nov. 4, 1825, aged 74. He was born in Lynn, of humble parentage, about 1751. He was early an apprentice to Samuel Gardner, and then to Richard Derby, merchants of Salem. Entering upon commercial pursuits at a favorable period, he conducted his business with sound judgment and unwearied industry. Though he acquired a very large fortune, his simple habits remained unaltered. In the period of the embargo in 1808, he abandoned the party to which he had been attached, and espoused the side of the government, and it is said that the political excitement, awakened against him, induced him to remove to Boston. In 1810 he was elected lieutenant-governor, Mr. Gerry being chosen governor. Mrs. a navy as was more than sufficient to protect colored woman. Dinah, wife of Thomas Brown, Grav died in 1823. His sons were William R. and Henry.

GRAY, HARRISON, died at Boston in Aug., 1846, aged 54. He was a bookseller, formerly of the firm of Hilliard, Gray & Co. He was zealous in the temperance cause, and a member of various charitable societies.

GRAY, THOMAS, D. D., died at Jamaica Plain, near Boston, June 1, 1847, aged 75. A graduate of 1790, he was long the minister of a parish in Roxbury. He published a sermon before the humane society; on abolition of slave trade, 1818; artillery election sermon, 1819; on opinions of the day, 1822; the death of Gov. Eustis; notice of Rev. John Bradford and sketch of Roxbury churches, 1825; on industry, fervor, and religion.

GRAY, JOSEPH B. MONTAGUE, M. D., died in South Berwick, Me., Nov. 1, 1856, aged 38. He was principal of Berwick academy, late of Essex, England, an accomplished scholar and successful teacher. He contributed to the reviews learned writings upon subjects of classical literature. He edited a Greek classic, now in use at Cambridge.

GRAY, FREDERIC T., died in Boston March 9, 1855, aged 51. He was for some time an associate with Dr. Tuckerman as a city missionary; then a colleague of Mr. Dean and his successor for fifteen years. In ill health, he went in 1853 to San Francisco and had the charge of the Unitarian society.

GRAYDON, ALEXANDER, naval captain in the Revolutionary war, after the peace entered on the profession of the law, and lived in Dauphin county, Penn. He died at Philadelphia May 2, 1818, aged 66. He published authentic memoirs of a life chiefly passed in Pennsylvania, etc., 1811. GRAYSON, WILLIAM, a senator of the United States, died March 12, 1790. He was a native of Virginia, and was appointed a representative to congress from that State in 1784, and continued a number of years. In June, 1788, he was a member of the Virginia convention, which was called for the purpose of considering the present constitution of the United States. In that assembly, rendered illustrious by men of the first talents, he was very conspicuous. His genius united with the eloquence of Henry in opposing the adoption of the constitution. While he acknowledged the evils of the old government, he was afraid that the proposed government would destroy the liberty of the States. His principal objections to it were, that it took from the States the sole right to direct taxation, which was the highest act of sovereignty; that the limits between the national and State authorities were not sufficiently defined; that they might clash, in which ease the general government would prevail; that there was no provision against raising such William R.

n in Aug., r, formerly . He was a member naica Plain. A graduate a parish in before the slave trade, 9; on opin-Jov. Eustis; sketch of , fervor, and

D., died in ed 38. He te of Essex, d successful ews learned rature. He Cambridge. on March 9, ime an assomissionary; is successor vent in 1853 of the Uni-

eaptain in e entered on in Dauphin lphia May 2, ntic memoirs a, etc., 1811. f the United was a native enresentative and contin-1788, he was n, which was the present that assemthe first talgenius united pposing the he acknowlnent, he was ment would lis principal n the States ich was the e limits beies were not tht clash, in ould prevail; raising such t to protect our trade, and thus would excite the jealousy of | European powers and lead to war; and that there were no adequate checks against the abuse of power, especially by the president, who was responsible only to his counsellors and partners in crime, the members of the senate. After the constitution was adopted, Colonel Grayson was appointed one of the senators from Virginia in 1789. His colleague was Richard Henry Lee. His great abilities were united with unimpeached integrity. - Gazette of United States, 1. 395; Debates in Virginia Convention.

GREELEY, ZACCHEUS, died in Londonderry, N. II., June 16, 1846, aged 93. His widow, Mary Woodburn, died in Wayne, Eric county, Penn., July 27, 1855, aged 68, a woman amiable, and of a strong mind. These were the parents of Horace Greeley of New York.

GREEN, SAMUEL, a printer, the son of Bartholomew Green of Cambridge, was fifteen years old when he arrived in 1630. He succeeded to the business of Daye in printing at Cambridge about 1649, and died Jan. 1, 1702, aged 86. He was a pious and benevolent man. He had nineteen children. His descendants were a race of printers; living in Boston, New London, Norwich, Hartford, New Haven, and also in Vermont and Maryland. He printed the laws in 1660; and also, at the expense of about 1200 pounds, paid by the commissioners in New England, the following in the Indian language; the psalter, Eliot's catechism, Baxter's call, the New Testament, and one thousand copies of the Bible, 1683. The psalter was first printed by Daye in 1639, the first printed book in New England: the Cambridge Platform was by Green in 1649. George Brinley is preparing a history of printing in America, in the century ending 1700. A second edition of the Bible, begun in 1680, was completed in 1686. Thomas gives a long list of the books printed by him. - Thomas, 1. 235-264.

GREEN, HENRY, the first minister of Reading, Mass., died in 1648. He came from England. The church was gathered in 1644; and he was probably then ordained.

GREEN, BARTHOLOMEW, a printer, the son of Samuel, died Dec. 28, 1732. He began business in Boston in 1690; and commenced a weekly paper, the Boston News-Letter, April, 1704, for John Campbell, postmaster, and after eighteen years published it on his own necount. This was the first newspaper in the British colonies. Like his father he was distinguished for piety and benevolence, and was a deacon of the old south church. His son, Bartholomew, a printer in Boston, was the grandfather of Joseph Dennie. -- Thomas, 1, 283, 321.

GREEN, Joseph, pastor of Salem village, died Green, marshal general of the colony, and a wards the president.

grandson of Percival Green, who lived in Cambridge from 1636 till his death in 1640. graduated in 1695, and was ordained in 1697. He healed the difficulties, which sprung up under Mr. Parris. The church record declares him "The choicest flower and goodliest tree in the garden of our God." His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Joseph Gerrish; he was the father of Joseph Green, a merchant of Boston, who died in 1765. J. Barnard placed him among "worthy and learned divines." A sermon on his death by T. Blowers, and a poem by N. Noyes, were published.

GREEN, TIMOTHY, a printer, the son of Samuel, and grandson of Samuel G. of Cambridge, after conducting a press thirteen years in Boston, removed to New London in 1714, by encouragement of the government of Conn., having a salary of 50 pounds a year. He was pious and benevolent, cheerful and facctious. Of the church at New London he was a deacon. He died May 5, 1757, aged 78. Three of his sons were print-

GREEN, Joseph, a poet, was born in Boston in 1706; graduated at Harvard eollege in 1726; and afterwards devoted himself to commercial pursuits. He had a vein of humor and satire, which he freely indulged, associated with a club of wits, not sparing the measures of the government; but at the beginning of the Revolution he went to England, and died in 1780, aged 74. He wrote a burlesque on a psalm of Mather Byles; he ridiculed the freemasons in the entertainment for a winter's evening in 1750; he wrote also the land bank; account of the celebration of St. John; and lamentation on Mr. Old Tenor. -Spec. Amer. Poct. I. 133-139.

GREEN, JOHN, an excellent portrait painter of Philadelphia, was the friend of Godfrey the poet who died in 1763, and wrote an elegy to his memory, which is prefixed to his poems.

GREEN, Jonas, died at Annapolis, Maryland. April 10, 1767. He had published the Maryland

Gazette nearly thirty years.

GREEN, JOSEPH, minister of the east parish of Barnstable, died Oct. 4, 1770, aged 79. He was born in Boston; graduated at Harvard in 1720; and was ordained May 12, 1725. He published a sermon at the ordination of his son Joseph, at Marshfield, 1753.

GREEN, JACOB, minister of Hanover, N. J., died in May, 1790, aged 68. He was a native of Massachusetts, and graduated at Harvard in 1744. He accompanied Mr. Whitefield to N. J. in 1745, and studied theology with Jonathan Dickinson and Mr. Burr. His wife was the daughter of Rev. John Pierson, of Woodbridge. Green was one of the original trustees of the col-Nov. 26, 1715, aged 39. He was the son of John lege, of which his son, Ashbel Green, was afterGREEN, ROLAND, minister of Marshfield, gress then sitting at Princeton, Washington at-Mass., died July 4, 1808, aged 70, in the forty-seventh year of his ministry. He graduated at commencement. He was then four seventh year of his ministry. He graduated at years a tutor and professor. Next settled as a colleague with Dr. Sprout, at Philadelphia, he was 1701, as successor of Ebenezer White, deceased. a very acceptable preacher for twenty-five years,

GREEN, Francis, a merchant in Boston, son of Benjamin G., of Halifax, and grandson of Rev. Joseph G., was graduated at Harvard college in 1760. At the beginning of the Revolution he repaired to England. On his return in 1799, he resided at Medford, where he died April 21, 1809, aged 67. Having two children who were deaf and dumb, he placed them at Edinburgh under the skilful care of the Braidwoods. He published a dissertation on the art of imparting speech to the deaf and dumb, London, 1783. After his return he wrote essays on the same subject in the newspapers, and translated the letters of the Abbé L'Epéc.

GREEN, John, a physician, died at Worcester Nov. 29, 1799, aged 63. He was the son of Dr. Thomas G., who was a native of Malden, Mass., and one of the first settlers of Leicester, having his first lodging in the eave of a rock. Born in 1736, he studied with his self-taught father; settled at Worcester; and was extensively employed. His wife was the daughter of Brigadier Ruggles of Hardwick; he had many children. His son, John, a physician, more distinguished than himself, was born in 1763, and died at Worcester Aug. 11, 1808, aged 45. Never in his practice was he known to accept the proffer of strong drink for his refreshment. — Thacher.

GREEN, James, major-general, died at Long Branch, N. J., Sept., 1811. He was an officer in the Revolutionary war.

GREEN, LEMUEL, died in Philadelphia in 1831, aged 79, a Methodist minister.

GREEN, SAMUEL, a minister in Boston, died in Nov., 1834, aged 41. He was born in Stoneham, and was a graduate of Harvard in 1816. Memoirs of him by R. H. Storrs were published in 1836. He published a tract, called More than a hundred arguments for the Divinity of Christ.

GREEN, JOSHUA, judge, died in Wendell in 1847. A native of Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1784; his father, Joshua, was a graduate of 1749. For more than fifty years he was a most useful and respected citizen. He was the father of Dr. Joshua Green, of Groton.

GREEN, JACOB, M. D., died Feb. 1, 1841, at Philadelphia; professor of chemistry in Jefferson college, the author of a monogram of the trilobites.

GREEN, ASHEEL, D. D., died in Philadelphia May 19, 1848, aged nearly 86. He was the son of Jacob Green, who was forty years the minister of Hanover, N. J., and who was a native of his ancestral town of Malden. He graduated at Nassua Hall at the age of twenty-one; the con gress then sitting at Princeton, Washington attended at commencement. He was then four years a tutor and professor. Next settled as a colleague with Dr. Sprout, at Philadelphia, he was a very acceptable preacher for twenty-five years, till in 1812 he was chosen president of Princeton college, from which he withdrew in 1823, when past sixty. In Philadelphia he now lived again and preached to the poor, and edited the monthly Christian Advocate. He died in great peace. He was regarded as a man of an indomitable will, of self-control, and skilful in business. He was the father of Princeton seminary. His autobiography was published in a large volume in 1849, commenced when eighty-one years old, and finished by 1rs. Jones, Plumer, and Murray.

GREEN, Dr. Ezra, died in Dover, N. II., July 25, 1847, aged 101 years and about a month. Born in Malden, Mass., he graduated in 1765; at his death he was the oldest graduate of Harvard. In 1775 he joined the army, and was a surgeon in the Ranger, commanded by Paul Jones, continuing in the navy till 1781. He was afterwards a merchant in Dover, and a member of the convention for adopting the constitution of the United States. After passing the age of eighty he assisted in forming a Unitarian society. At his death he was in the full possession of his faculties.

GREEN, AARON, minister of Malden, died at Andover Dec. 23, 1853, aged 89. A graduate of 1789, he was ordained Sept. 30, 1795; and resigned his office in 1827, and soon removed to Andover. He survived all his class. He published a discourse on the death of Washington, 1800.

GREENE, CHRISTOPHER, lieutenant-colonel, a Revolutionary officer, died in 1781, aged 44. He was born in Warwick, R. I., in 1737. In 1775 he was a major under his relative, Gen. N. Greene. He accompanied Arnold through the wilderness. At the seige of Quebec, being in the command of a company, he was taken prisoner. After being exchanged, Washington intrusted him with the command of fort Mercer on the Delaware, commonly called Red Bank, where he was attacked by Col. Donop and his Hessians, whom he repulsed. Donop was slain. For this service congress voted him a sword, which was presented to his eldest son in 1786. In 1778 he was with the army under Sullivan. In the spring of 1781, having been posted on Croton river, he was surprised by a corps of refugees and harbarously murdered.

GREENE, CALEB, chief justice of R. I., died at Coventry in Jan., 1794, at an advanced age.

GREENE, NATHANIEL, a major-general of the army of the United States, died June 19, 1786, aged 46. He was born in Warwick, R. I., about the year 1740. His parents were Quakers. His father was an anchorsmith, who was concerned in nington atthen four ed as a colia, he was -five years, Princeton 823, when lived again be monthly peace. He ole will, of Ie was the obiography 1849, comnd finished

N. II., July a month. in 1765; at f Harvard. surgeon in es, continufterwards a the conventhe United he assisted s death he cs. en, died at raduate of)5, and reemoved to He pub-Vashington, ant-colonel, l, aged 44. 1737. In ve, Gen. N. hrough the cing in the a prisoner. intrusted cer on the , where he Hessians, . For this which was In 1778 he the spring

R. I., died ced age. neral of the e 19, 1786, R. I., about ikers. IIis oncerned in on river, he and barbar-

some valuable iron works, and transacted much! business. While he was a boy, he learned the Latin language chiefly by his own unassisted industry. Having procured a small library, his mind was much improved, though the perusal of military history occupied a considerable share of his attention. Such was the estimation in which his character was held, that he was at an early period of his life chosen a member of the assembly of R. I. After the battle of Lexington had enkindled at once the spirit of Americans throughout the whole continent, Mr. Greene, though educated in the peaceful principles of the Friends, could not extinguish the martial ardor which had been excited in his own breast. Receiving the command of three regiments with the title of brigadier-general, he led them to Cambridge; in consequence of which the Quakers renounced all connection with him as a member of their religious body. On the arrival of Washington at Cambridge, he was the first who expressed to the commander-in-chief his satisfaction in his appointment, and he soon gained his entire confidence. He was appointed by congress majorgeneral in Aug., 1776. In the battles of Trenton Dec. 26th, and of Princeton Jan. 3, 1777, he was much distinguished. He commanded the left wing of the American army at the battle of Germantewn, Oct. 4th. In March, 1778, he was appointed quartermaster-general, which office he accepted, on condition that his rank in the army should not be affected, and that he should retain his command in the time of action. This right he exercised June 28th, at the battle of Monmouth. His courage and skill were again displayed Aug. 29th, in Rhode Island. He resigned in this year the office of quartermaster-general, and was succeeded by Col. Pickering. After the disasters, which attended the American arms in South Carolina, he was appointed to supersede Gates, and he took the command in the southern department Dec. 3, 1780. Having recruited the army, which had been exceedingly reduced by defeat and desertion, he sent out a detachment under the brave Gen. Morgan, who gained the important victory at the Cowpens Jan. 17, 1781. Greene effected a junction with him Feb. 7, but on account of the superior numbers of Cornwallis, he retreated with great skill to Virginia. Having received an accession to his forces, he returned to North Curolina, and in the battle of Guilford, March 15th, was defeated. The victory, however, was dearly bought by the British, for their loss was greater than that of the Americans, and no advantages were derived from it. In a few days Cornwallis began to march toward Wilmington, leaving many of his wounded behind him, which had the appearance of a retreat, and Greene followed him for some time. But, altering his plan, he resolved to recommence offensive operations in liam, died at East Greenwich in Oct., 1826, aged

South Carolina. He accordingly marched directly to Camden, where, April 25th, he was engaged with Lord Rawdon. Victory inclined for some time to the Americans; but the retreat of two companies occasioned the defeat of the whole army. Greene retreated in good order, and took such measures as effectually prevented Lord Rawdon from improving his success, and obliged him, in the beginning of May, to retire beyond the Santee. While he was in the neighborhood of Santee, Greene hung in one day eight soldiers, who had deserted from his army. For three months afterwards there was no instance of desertion. A number of forts and garrisons in South Carolina now fell into his hands. He commenced the siege of Ninety-six May 22, but he was obliged, on the approach of Lord Rawdon in June, to raise the siege. The army, which had been highly encouraged by the late success, was now reduced to the melancholy necessity of retreating to the extremity of the State. The American commander was advised to retire to Virginia; but to suggestions of this kind, he replied: "I will recover South Carolina, or die in the attempt." Waiting till the British forces were divided, he faced about, and Lord Rawdon was pursued in his turn, and was offered battle after he reached his encampment at Orangeburgh, but he declined it. Sept. 8th, Greene covered himself with glory by the victory at the Eutaw Springs, in which the British, who fought with the utmost bravery, lost one thousand and one hundred men, and the Americans about half that number. For his good conduct in this action, congress presented him with a British standard and a golden medal. This engagement may be considered as closing the Revolutionary war in South Carolina. During the remainder of his command he had to struggle with the greatest difficulties from the want of supplies for his troops. Strong symptoms of mutiny appeared, but his firmness and decision completely quelled it. After the conclusion of the war he returned to Rhode Island, where the greatest dissensions prevailed, and his endeavors to restore harmony were attended with success. In Oct., 1785, he sailed to Georgia, where he had a considerable estate not far distant from Savannah. Here he passed his time as a private citizen, occupied by domestic concerns. While walking without an umbrella, the intense rays of the sun overpowered him, and occasioned an inflammation of the brain, of which he died. Congress ordered a monument to be erected to his memory at the seat of the federal government. His widow married Phineas Miller, the co-partner of Eli Whitney, inventor of the cotton gin. His youngest daughter, Mrs. Louisa C. Shaw, died at Cumberland Island in April, 1831. His eldest surviving brother, Wilposition, and, abhorring the cruelties and excesses of which partisans on both sides were guilty, uniformly inculcated a spirit of moderation. Yet he was resolutely severe, when the preservation of discipline rendered severity necessary. In the campaign of 1781 he displayed the prudence, the military skill, the unshaken firmness, and the daring courage which are seldom combined, and which place him in the first rank of American officers. His judgment was correct, and his selfpossession never once forsook him. In one of his letters he says, that he was seven months in the field without taking off his clothes for a single night. It is thought that he was the most endeared to the commander-in-chief of all his assoeiates in arms. Washington often lamented his death with the keenest sorrow. Sketches of his life were published by Mr. Johnson, also by Dr. C. Caldwell. - Hillhouse's Orat. on his death; American Mus. 11. 111. VII.; Mass. Mag. IV. 616, 671; Gordon; Marshall; Ramsay's S. C. II.; Holmes: Stedman, H. 376; Warren, H. 56-59. GREENE, WILLIAM, governor of R. I., died at Warwick in Dec., 1809. GREENE, GRIFFIN, died at Marietta June, 1804, aged 55, one of the ablest of the Ohio company's settlers. He was born in Warwick. R. I., and was a cousin of Gen. N. Greene, with whom he worked at the same forge in the manufacture of anchors. In 1794 he led the expedition to discover the Salt springs near the Scioto.

He was postmaster at M. - Hildreth's Biog. Memoirs.

GREENE, PETER, Dr., died at Concord, N. H., April, 1828, aged 83.

GREENE, GARDINER, president of the Branch Bank of the United States, died in Boston Dec. 19, 1832, aged 79. He was a man of great wealth.

GREENE, Asa, M. D., a bookseller in New York, died in 1839, aged 49. He graduated at Williams college in 1813, and went to New York about 1830. He published various humorons pieces, as the life of Dr. Duckworth; the perils of Pearl street; a glance at New York, 1837. -Cyel. of Lit.

at Hartford in 1840, aged 76.

GREENE, ALPHEUS S., Dr., died in Utica Jan. 25, 1851, aged 64. He had held many offices of trust.

mond, Va. His father was Robert, mayor of the society for foreign missions, 1814. city; his mother perished in the burning of the theatre. He studied physic in New York; in 1828 he was appointed translator in the department of State at Washington; in 1850 he went and proceeded soon to Italy, where he spent most te California. He died in consequence of falling of his remaining life. He principally lived in

83. — He possessed a humane and benevolent dis- in the night into a pit in the streets of California. He published a history of Oregon and California. - Cycl. of Lit.

GREENLEAF, STEPHEN, sheriff of Suffolk, died Jan. 26, 1797, aged 92. The son of Rev. Daniel of Yarmouth, he graduated at Harvard in

GREENLEAF, DANIEL, minister of North Yarmouth, Me., died in Boston in 1763, aged 88. He graduated at Harvard in 1699.

GREENLEAF, Moses, died at Williamsburg, Me., March 20, 1834, aged 55. He was the son of Moses, of Newburyport, who removed to New Gloucester, where he died, leaving other sons, Simon and Jonathan. He published statistical view of Maine, 1816; a survey of Maine, 1829.

GREENLEAF, SIMON, LL. D., an eminent lawyer, died at Cambridge Oct. 6, 1853, aged 69. He was born in Newburyport Dec. 5, 1783, and practised law in Maine. In 1854 he succeeded Mr. Ashmun as Royall professor of law in Harvard, and removed to Cambridge. On the death of Judge Story he took the chair of the Dane professorship, which he resigned in 1848. Never educated at a college, he was yet worthy of the honors he received from Harvard. A Christian of the Episcopal church, he was distinguished for his virtues. For years he was president of the Massachusetts bible society. The fugitive slave law he abhorred, notwithstanding the opinion of his friend, Mr. Webster. He published reports in 9 vols.; a volume of over-ruled cases; on evidence, 3 vols., 1842-1853; Cruise's digest of real law, with annotations, 1846; an examination of the testimony of the four evangelists by the rules of evidence, with the trial of Jesus: republished in England.

GREENOUGH, THOMAS, the last of the tribe of Nobscussett Indians, died in the alms-house at Yarmouth, Jan., 1837, aged 90.

GREENOUGH, WILLIAM, minister of Newton, Mass., died Nov. 10, 1831, aged 75. The son of Deacon Thomas G. of Boston, he was born June 29, 1756; his mother was Sarah Stoddard, the daughter of David, the son of Simon, who was the brother of Rev. Solomon Stoddard. He graduated at Yale in 1774; and was ordained in 1781. He GREENE, THOMAS, Dr., of Providence, died was a faithful and useful minister. Of his children by his wife Abigail, the daughter of Rev. S. Badger, were Sarah, married to Josiah Fuller; and Abigail, married to Robert II. Thayer; and William, the father of William W. Greenough. GREENHOW, ROBERT, M. D., died in Cali- He published charges at the installation of Mr. fornia in 1854, aged 54. He was born in Rich Fay and Dr. Griffin; also, a sermon before the GREENOUGH, HORATIO, a sculptor, died in Somerville, Mass., in Dec., 1852, aged 47. Born in Boston Sept. 6, 1805, he graduated in 1825; nlifornia. alifornia.

Suffolk, of Rev. arvard in f North aged 88. amsburg.

s the son l to New ier sons. tatistical , 1829.

eminent aged 69. 783, and ucceeded in Harhe death

he Dane . Never y of the Christian ished for t of the ive slave pinion of l reports ; on evist of real ation of the rules oublished

the tribe -house at

Newton. ie son of orn June lard, the was the raduated 81. He his chil-Rev. S. Fuller; er; and fore the died in 7. Born in 1825 : ent most lived in

eenough. of Mr. and a kindly, generous man. His brother, John, a painter, died in Paris Nov. 16, 1852 aged 51; he was a graduate of 1824. On hearing of his death, the American artists at Rome held a meeting, which was addressed by Thomas Crawford and William W. Story; and where among other resolutions, it was resolved in respect to him: " He is fairly entided to be considered as the pioneer of American sculpture. His works are marked by purity of conception, correctness of taste, graceful design, and rare deli-He also won the friendship ency of sentiment. and regard of all who knew him." Among his early productions are the Medora, the Chanting Cherubs, the Angel Abdiel. His last great work, at Washington, is a group symbolizing the triumph of civilization, received from Florence since his death. His writings are contained in a memorial published in 1853.

GREENSMITH, Mrs., a witch, was executed as a witch at Hartford, Conn., in 1652. Peters says, she was "the first witch."

GREENUP, CHRISTOPHER, governor of Kentucky, died at Frankfort in May, 1818. He succeeded Garrand from 1804 to 1808, when he was succeeded by Charles Scott. He was a brave patriot of the Revolution, and participated in the perils of war. He was for years a faithful and able member of the state and national legislature. In the public estimation he was the most useful man in Kentucky.

GREENWOOD, THOMAS, minister of Seckonk, Mass., died in 1720, aged 50. He was born at Plymouth, and graduated at Harvard in 1690. He was succeeded by John Greenwood, who died in 1766, aged about 70. He was born at Seckonk, and graduated at Harvard in 1717.

GREENWOOD, ISAAC, first professor of mathematics at Harvard college, was graduated in 1721; was elected professor in 1728, and after ten years was dismissed. He afterwards went to Carolina, where he died in 1745. He published an arithmetic, 1729; and a philosophical discourse on mutability, etc., occasioned by the death of Mr. Hollis, the founder of the professorship, in 1731.

GREENWOOD, JOHN, minister of Rehoboth, died in 1766, aged about 69. He graduated at Harvard in 1717.

GREENWOOD, MARY LANGDON, died in Boston in July, 1855, aged 80, the mother of Rev. F. W. P. Greenwood. Her mind received the finest culture, and she had great excellencies of character. She early wrote a dialogue on female education, published in Bingham's American Pre-

GREENWOOD, FRANCIS W. P., D. D., min-

He was a very eminent sculptor, 1814, and was first settled in Baltimere. He lived in Boston from 1823, about twenty years. He was an accomplished scholar and naturalist. He published sermons at the ordination of W. P. Lant, 1828; of W. Newell, 1830; of J. W. 1 of S. May, 1834; history Thompson, 1832; of king's chapel, 3; sermon to the female asylum; artillery election sermon, 1826; on the Lord's supper; on death of C. Gore; collection of psalms and hymns; the theology of the Cambridge divinity school, 1830; on fast day, A volume of his sermons was published. - Boston Advertiser, Aug. 19, 1843.

GREENWOOD, ETHAN A., died in Hubbardston May 3, 1856, aged nearly 80. He was long a proprietor of the New England Museum in Hoston, and a painter.

GREGG, Captain, was scalped by the Indians near fort Stanwix, N. Y., in the summer of 1777, and left for dead. But his life was preserved by the affection and good offices of his dog. He went out with a corporal to shoot pigeons, when some Indians, unseen, fired upon him and wounded him, so that he fell, and killed his companion. Seeing an Indian approaching him, and unable to resist him, he feigned to be dead; but received several blows on his head from the tomahawk of the savage, and was then scalped. As he revived and could move a little, his dog yelped and whined; but soon run off to some men, who were fishing at the distance of a mile, and whined, and then moved in a certain direction repeatedly, so that they concluded to follow him. - and he led them to his master, whom they conveyed to the fort; and he survived his perilous wounds. -Dwight's Travels, vol. 111.

GREGG, WILLIAM, colonel, an officer of the Revolution, died Sept. 16, 1824, aged nearly 94. He was born at Londonderry, N. H., Oct. 21, 1730, being the son of Capt. John G., and the grandson of Capt. James G., one of the first settlers of that town. He was engaged in the battle of Bennington under Stark. After the war he retired to his farm.

GREGG, Janvis, professor of rhetoric in Western Reserve college, died in Hudson, Ohio, June 28, 1836; a graduate of Dartmouth in 1828. He died suddenly of the scarlet fever; he had been married but a short time. For piety, scholarship, and manners he was highly esteemed.

GRENNELL, GEORGE, died in Greenfield, Mass., in 1844, aged 93, the oldest inhabitant of G. He was the father of George Grennell.

GREW, THEOPHILUS, professor of mathematics in the college of Philadelphia, died in 1759. He had been a teacher in Kent county, and in an academy at Philadelphia. For his scientific attainments and skill as an instructor he was disister of King's chapel, Boston, died Aug. 2, 1843, tinguished. Nathaniel Evans honored his memory aged about 50. He graduated at Harvard in by some poetic lines. He was supposed to be a grandson of the English botanist, who, in 1676, died Sept. 27, 1827, aged 31. Proposing to asfirst suggested the sexual doctrine of vegetables to the royal society of London.

GRIDLEY, JEREMY, attorney-general of the province of Massachusetts, died Sept. 10, 1767, aged about 62. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1725. He was editor of the Weekly Rehearsal, a newspaper, which commenced in Boston Sept. 27, 1731, and continued only for one year. He soon became pre-eminent as a lawyer, and was appointed king's attorney. In this canacity he in 1761 defended the writs of assistance, which the custom-house officers had applied for to the superior court, and by which they would be authorized to enter at their discretion suspected houses. He was opposed with great force of argument by his former pupil, Mr. Otis, He was colonel of the first regiment of militia, and grand master of the free-masons. His strength of understanding, and his extensive knowledge, particularly his intimate acquaintance with classical literature, gave him the first rank among men of intellect and learning, while his thorough knowledge of the canon and civil law placed him at the head of his profession. He possessed at the same time a sensibility of heart, which endeared him to all who were connected with him in social and domestic life. His fortitude in his last moments resulted from the principles of religion. - Hist. Coll. III. 301; v. 212; Boston Post-Boy, Sept. 14, 1767; Minot, 1.88-90; Gordon, I. 141.

GRIDLEY, RICHARD, major-general, brother of the preceding, died at Stoughton June 20, 1796, aged 84. He was born in Boston in 1711. In 1746 he was engineer in the reduction of Louisbourg. In 1755 he again entered the army as chief engineer and colonel of infantry. Under Winslow he was concerned in the expedition to Crown Point in 1756, and constructed the fortifieations on Lake George. He served under Amherst in 1758, and was with Wolfe on the plains of Abraham. For his services Magdalen Island was given him, with half pay. At the commencement of the Revolution he was appointed chief engineer. He skilfully laid out the works in fortification of Breed's hill, the day before the battle of June 17th, in which he was wounded. His daughter, Jane, who married Elijah Hunt, of Northampton, died in 1818, aged 80.

GRIPLEY, Elenatilan, a missionary at Smyrna, was bora in Farmington, Conn.; was graduated at Yale college in 1820, and studied theology at Andover. He also studied physic. He was ordained as a missionary Aug. 25, 1825, and sailed with Mr. Brewer Aug. 16, 1826. After his arrival at Smyrna, he studied modern Greek and Turkish. In June, 1827, he accompanied a friend to Endurouk, a Greek village, six miles from Caisaria, in the interior of Asia Minor. There he breacher in the church in Hamilton square, and died Sept. 27, 1827, aged 31. Proposing to ascend Mount Argens, which is about thirteen thousand feet high, covered with perpetual snows, he with much fatigue, Sept. 13th, approached within three or four hundred feet of the summit, when he was prevented from advancing by perpendicular rocks. The next day he suffered from the headache and soon fell a victim to a malignant fever, occasioned, probably, by his imprudence.—Missionary Herald, April, 1828.

GRIDLEY, ELIJAH, died at Granby June 16, 1834, aged 74. Born in Herlin, a graduate of Yale in 1788, he was first the minister of Mansfeld, then of Granby. He was the father of R. W. Gridley.

GRIDLEY, RALPH W., died at Ottawa, Ill., Feb. 2, 1840, aged 46; a graduate of Yale in 1814. Before he removed to the west he was the minister of Williamstown, and eminently successful.

GRIFFIN, CYRUS, president of congress, was a native of England; in 1778 he was elected a delegate to congress from Virginia, and again in 1787. Under the constitution he was a judge of the district court from Dec., 1789, for twenty-one years. At his first court John Marshall was admitted as coursel. He died at Yorktown Dec. 10, 1810, aged 62.

GRIFFIN, EDMUND D., a distinguished writer, died Sept. 1, 1830, aged 26. He was the second son of George Griffin, and was born at Wyoming, Penn., Sept. 10, 1804. His mother was the daughter of Col. Zebulon Butler, who commanded in the desence of Wyoming, when it was desolated by the British and Indians in 1778. His parents removing to New York, he was at the age of twelve placed under the instruction of David Graham, of that city. With unequalled order he now pursued the various branches of study, gaining the highest rank in the school. In this school it was an excellent arrangement, which required frequent exercises in composition. Young Griffin wrote nine little volumes of essays, and thus acquired a rich flow of language and remarkable copiousness and energy of thought. At the age of fourteen Mr. Graham's school being discontinued, he was transferred to that of Mr. Nelson, a celebrated blind teacher. In 1823, at the age of eighteen, he was graduated at Columbia college with the highest honors of his class. After prosecuting the study of law about two months in the office of his father, he determined to prepare for the ministry, and entered on his studies in the seminary of the Episcopal church, although none of his family were then Episcopalians. One motive which influenced him in his choice was his repugnance to the doctrines of Calvinism. In Aug., 1826, he was admitted to deacon's orders, and soon became an assistant

g to aseen thounows, he ed within nit, when erpendicfrom the nalignant idence.-

June 10, duate of of Mansner of R.

tawa, Ill., f Yale in ic was the ently suc-

gress, was elected a again in judge of wenty-one ll was adown Dec.

ied writer. he second Wyoming, was the mmanded was deso-778. Ilis at the age ı of David d ardor he udy, gain-In this which re-

i. Young ssays, and d remarkt. At the ool being nat of Mr. in 1823, at at Cohunhis class. about two letermined red on his pal church, Episcopanim in his octrines of dmitted to 1 assistant quare, and also associate with Dr. Lyell. In the hope of promoting his ultimate usefulness, he visited Europe in 1828. Arriving in November at Paris. he there passed two months, and crossed the Alps into Italy. He set sail on his return April 1, 1830, and in the short passage of sixteen days reached New York. Being immediately invited, in the absence of the professor, to deliver in the college a course of lectures on the history of literature, he performed this service in May and June. The lectures, which are published, related to Roman and Italian and English literature, and are "a noble monument of promptitude, diligence, and knowledge." From a journey of recreation he returned to New York Aug. 25th, and three days after was seized with an acute disease. an inflammation of the bowels, which terminated his life. He died in meek submission and joyful trust in the Redeemer, admonishing others to pursue the course to a blessed immortality. On reviving, after a spasm which seemed to be fatal, he said, with a smile of inexpressible sweetness, "I did not get off that time;" but, checking himself, he added, "That was a rebellious thought; I must wait God's time to die." He was buried by the side of his beloved sister. Language cannot depict the desolation which must have come over the heart of a father enthusiastically attached to a son of such promise. Such a blow, however alleviated by the memorials of the genius and by the virtuous fame of the departed youth, would seem to be insufferable without the hope of a reunion in the world of holiness and joy. Probably America cannot boast of any young man, who, at so early a period, reached such a height of learning and eloquence. He had taste, and feeling, and enthusiasm, and his powers of description are unrivalled. His poetical talents were of a high order. Two volumes of his works have been published, with the title, Remains of Edmund D. Griffin, compiled by Francis Griffin; with a biographical memoir of the deceased, by John McVickar, D. D., 2 vols. 8vo. 1831. Among the pieces in his Remains are his lectures and a journal of his travels.

GRIFFIN, EDWARD DORR, D. D., died at Newark Nov. 8, 1837, aged 67, being born in East Haddam Jan. 6, 1770. His mother was Eve Dorr, of Lyme; her mother a sister of Gov. Griswold. His uncle was Rev. E. Dorr, of Hartford. One of his brothers was George G., of New York. Graduating at Yale in 1790, he was installed as colleague pastor with Dr. McWhorter at Newark in 1801. He became professor of sacred rhetoric at Andover in 1808; minister of Park-street church in Boston in 1811. He returned to Newark in 1815, and was president of Williams college from 1821 to 1836. His wife, of Coventry, die laty 25, 1837. le himself died in the family of sour-in-law, r. L. A. Sn. h. When Dr. Griffin was a minister in Boston of delivered a course of evening lectures, w. h excited much attention, and drew multitus to hear him from among those whose views he ntroverted. He was bold and eloquent in his discourses. They were afterwards published as his l'ark-street lectures. His memoirs, compiled from his own writings by Rev. W. B. Sprague, were published, 8vo., 1839. He published a sermon on the death of Dr. Macwhorter, 1807; farewell at Newark; inaugural oration at Andover, 1809; at the dedication of Park-street church, 1810; Purk-street lectures, 8vo., 1813; dedication sermon at Sandwich; plea for Africa, a sermon, 1817; before the foreign missionary society, New York; on the extent of the atonement, 12mo., 1819; before American education society, 1825; letter on open communion, 1829; address to Bible class society. - Griffin's Memoirs, by Spraane.

GRIFFITH, DAVID, D. D., of Virginia, died at Philadelphia in Aug., 1789.

GRIFFITTS, SAMUEL POWELL, M. D., a physician in Philadelphia, was born in that city July 21, 1759. His medical education was completed during his residence of three years in Europe. After his return he practised more than forty years, till his death, May 12, 1826, aged 67. He was a Quaker. Every morning he read the New Testament in Greek or Latin. He was seldom absent from religious meetings. During the prevalence of the yellow fever in various years he never deserted his post. Yet he believed the fever to be contagious. The establishment of the dispensary and other charitable societies were promoted by his efforts. Of the celectic repertory he was one of the editors. - Thacher, 1. 275-285.

GRIMKE, JOHN F., judge of the supreme court of South Carolina, was a colonel in the war of the Revolution. He died in 1819. He published a revised edition of the laws of South Carolina to 1789; on the duty of justices of the peace; a probate directory.

GRIMKE, THOMAS SMITH, LL. D., son of the preceding, died near Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 12, 1834, aged 48. A native of Charleston, he was a graduate of Yale in 1807, and by profession a lawyer. He died of the cholera, being on his way to Columbus. He wrote much on peace and war. His notions were the extreme notions of the Quakers, that even a defensive war is wicked; that a ruler may not protect his people by the sword; that the people may not protect themselves from an enemy. Although he thus misconstrued the precept, "Resist not evil," yet he was not likely Frances, a daughter of Rev. Joseph Huntington, to misconstrue the other precept, "Give to him that asketh of thee," by yielding his estate to a robber, who should demand it. Being asked what he would do if he was the mayor of Charleston, and a pirate ship should approach the harbor, whether he should think it wrong to fire a gun upon that ship? he replied in writing that he should call together the Sabbath-school children and lead them in procession to meet the pirates, who, by such a sight, would be subdued into forbearance; and the city would be unharmed. His literary views were rather peculiar. He would exclude the classics and the mathematics from making a part of the general education; and as to English orthography, he would write in the following forms the words which they designate, namely: disciplin, respit, believ, creativ, excelent, ilustrious, efectual, iresistible; burys, buryd, varys, varyd, hurrys, hurryd, etc. Hut he has not gained any followers. He published addresses on science and education; on the Bible as a class-book, 1830; on Sunday schools in the Mississippi valley; at the Sunday-school jubilee, 1831; on the truth and beauty of the principles of peace; oration before the Cincinnati, 1809; before the Phi Beta Kappa society, 1830; report on a code of law, 1827.

GRIMSHAW, WILLIAM, died at Philadelphia in 1852, in advanced years. He was a grammarian and historian. He published a history of the United States, 12mo., 1826.

GRISCOM, JOHN, LL. D., died at Burlington, N. J., Feb. 26, 1852, aged 77. He was a distinguished physician and learned man. He was professor of chemistry and natural philosophy in New York institute. He published a year in Europe in 1818 and 1819, 2 vols., 1823; a discourse on character and education, 1823.

GRISWOLD, GEORGE, minister in Lyme, Conn., died in 1761, aged about 64. He graduated at Yale in 1717.

GRISWOLD, MATTHEW, LL. D., governor of Connecticut, died at Lyme in April or May, 1799, aged 83. He had been a judge of the supreme court and lieutenant-governor before he was governor.

GRISWOLD, ROGER, governor of Connecticut, was the son of Matthew Griswold, who was chief justice, and the governor after Trumbull from 1784 to 1785, when he was succeeded by Huntington. He was born at Lyme May 21, 1762. His mother was the daughter of Gov. R. Wolcott. Having graduated at Yale college in 1780, he studied law. In 1794 he was elected a member of congress, and was for many years a distinguished member of the federal party. In 1801 he declined the appointment offered him by Mr. Adams, of secretary of war; probably because the accession of Mr. Jefferson would in a few days remove him. In 1807 he was appointed a judge of the supreme court of the State. He was also Lebanon and a graduate of Dartmouth in 1789.

licut.-governor from 1800 till May, 1811, when he was elected governor in opposition to Mr. Treadwell. He refused to place four companies under Gen. Dearborn, at the requisition of the president, for garrison purposes, deeming the requisition unconstitutional, as they were not wanted to "repel invasion, etc." For four or five years he was afflicted with paroxysms of suffering. An eulogium on him was pronounced at New Haven by D. Daggett, before the general assembly. His successor was John Cotton Smith.

ni

D

ist

of

A

di

tli

ba th

tw

als

1.0

nı

17

WO

the

Cy

nic

ad

re

tri

co

ag ua gu ele co H of bo

GRISWOLD, STANLEY, judge of Illinois territory, died at Shawncetown Aug. 21, 1815. He was born at Torrington, Conn.; was graduated at Yale college in 1786; was for some years the minister of New Milford, but relinquished theology for secular pursuits. He edited in 1803 a paper at Walpole, N. II. Removing to Ohio, he was chosen a senator of the United States in 1809, and afterwards was appointed judge. He published a discourse, 1800; a sermon at Wallingford March 11, 1801, to the friends of Mr. Jefferson, who had become president; the good land we live in, a sermon, 1802.

GRISWOLD, Solomon, died in Windsor, O., in June, 1834, aged 80; an early settler and an officer of the Revolution.

GRISWOLD, SIMEON, died at Nussau, N. Y., Dec. 17, 1843, aged 90. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and lived most of his days in Pittsfield, Mass.

GRISWOLD, BENJAMIN, missionary to Africa, died on the Gaboon river July 14, 1844. Born in Randolph, Vt., in 1811, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1837, and studied theology at Andover and New Haven. He embarked for Cape Palmas in Dec., 1841. The fatigue of an exploring tour and of surgical labors was perhaps the cause of his death. Mrs. Mary H. Griswold, his widow, died in Africa in Feb., 1849; she was cheerful, energetic, and useful; converts mourned her death.

GRISWOLD, DARIUS O., a minister at Sarntoga Springs, died Dec. 27, 1841, aged 54. He had been laid aside by paralysis for two years. He graduated at Williams college in 1808. He was social, generous; of high attainments as a scholar; as a preacher solemn, and an undissembled Christian. He was first settled in Bloomfield; then in Saratoga in 1817; in Watertown, Conn., from 1823 to 1833; then again in Saratoga aix years.

GRISWOLD, ALEXANDER V., D. D., bishop of the eastern diocese, died very suddenly at Boston, Feb. 15, 1843, aged 76. He published convention sermon, 1811; also, 1817; addresses and charges and pastoral letters, 1816-1821.

GRISWOLD, JOHN, minister in Pawlet, Vt., died May 4, 1852, aged 87. He was a native of In his labors he was very useful; but he was for years laid up by his infirmities.

GROS. JOHN DANIEL, D. D., a professor of moral philosophy in Columbia college, and minister in the city of New York, was a German. During the Revolutionary conflict he was a minister of a Dutch Reformed church on the frontier of the State, and was exposed to many perils. After the war he removed to New York. He died at Canojoharie May 25, 1812, aged 75. He published natural principles of rectitude, etc., a systematic treatise on moral philosophy, 8vo., 1795.

GROSVENOR, Thomas, colonel, a patriot of the Revolution, died in Pomfret, Conn., in 1825, aged about 80. He graduated at Yale college in 1765; was an officer and was wounded in the battle of Bunker Hill; and at the termination of the war held the rank of colonel. For about twenty years he was the judge of probate, and also chief justice of the court of common pleas until he was seventy.

GROSVENOR, DANIEL, minister of Grafton, Mass., and Puxton, died July 22, 1834, aged 85, a patriot of the Revolution. After the battle of Lexington be marched with a company of minute men, carrying his musket, to Cambridge. Born in Pomfret, he graduated at Yale in 1769; from 1774 to 1788 was in Grafton; from 1794 to 1802 was minister of Paxton. Ebenezer G. preached the sermon at his ordination in 1774. Rev. Cyrus P. G. was his son. He published a sermon at the ordination of J. Bailey, 1784 .-Washburn's Leicester Academy.

GROSVENOR, DEBORAH, widow of the preeeding, died in Petersham Sept. 11, 1841, aged 85. The daughter of Dr. Hall of Sutton, at the age of fifteen she joined the church; and she adorned her profession seventy years. Religion controlled her life; to every good work she was ready. Of ten children she saw three die in the triumphs of faith, and the other seven were professors of religion. The bible was ever her daily

GROSVENOR, THOMAS PEABODY, a member of the fourteenth congress, died April 25, 1817, aged 37. He was born in Pomfret, Coun.; graduated at Yale college in 1800; and was a distinguished lawyer at Hudson, N. Y., when he was elected a member of congress, in which body his eloquence was very powerful. He died of the consumption, at Judge Hanson's near Baltimore. His wife was Mary Jane Hanson, of Maryland, of whose life he published memoirs a short time before his own death. Elisha Williams married his sister.

GROTZ, PHILIP T., died at Stone Arabia,

of Wurtemberg, highly esteemed for classical learning and zeal for religion.

GROUT, Mrs., wife of Alden G., missionary to Africa, died at Port Elizabeth Feb. 21, 1836, aged 31. Her name was Hannah Davis, of Holden. She went to Cape Town in 1834.

GROVER, STEPHEN, first minister of Caldwell, N. J., died June 22, 1836, aged 77, having been the pastor forty-nine years. He was the son of Joseph, of Tolland, Conn., and graduated at Dartmouth in 1786. His widow died at Newark July 13, 1847, aged 87; she was early pious, and read the Bible through once a year for forty years. An aged minister of the same name, who was from New Jersey, was paster of Pittstown near Canandaigna in 1804. His brother, Joseph, a minister, graduated at Dartmouth in 1773, and died in 1826.

GRUBE, BERNHARD ADAM, a Moravian missionary, the first who was sent among the Delawares, died at Bethlehem March 20, 1808, aged 93 years. He was well acquainted with the Delaware language. It is remarkable that he, and his brethren, Youngman and Zeisberger, after suffering so many hardships, should reach so great an age. Some years before 1765 he preached to the Indians in Pennsylvania. He afterwards was a minister at Lititz in the same State. - Hecke-

GRUNDY, FELIX, a senator, died at Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 19, 1840, aged 63. After being a member of the legislature of Kentucky, he was elected a judge of the supreme court in 1806. He afterwards practised law in Tennessee. In 1811 he was elected a member of congress, and remained till 1814 or 1815; in 1829 he was a senator of the United States, and again in 1840; in 1838 he was appointed U. S. attorney-general. He had a good character as a Christian. He published an eulogy on Adams and Jefferson.

GRYMES, John R., an eminent lawyer, died in New Orleans in 1854, aged 68. Born in Virginia, he emigrated to Louisiana in 1808; and after the close of the war of 1812, was district attorney of the United States, and attorneygeneral.

GUESS, GEORGE, or SEQUOYAH, the inventor of the Cherokee alphabet, died in the town of San Fernando, in Aug., 1843, aged about 70. In 1842 he with a few other Indians roved into the Mexican territory and suffered much by sickness. His residence was near Willstown, perhaps fifty miles from Brainerd. He invented and first wrote the Cherokee language about 1824, comprising it in eighty-five characters, each of which expresses an English syllable. The characters have been learned in one day, so that the language could N. Y., Dec. 1, 1809, having been in the Lutheran | be expressed in speech. But to understand the ministry more than thirty years. He was a native import of all words and combinations would re-

An Haven y. His terri-5. He ated at ers the

enlogy

hen he

Tread-

under presi-

requi-

wanted

years

paper ie was n 1809, le puballing-Ir. Jefod land sor, O., and an , N. Y., of the Pitts-

Africa, Born in t Dartindover Palmas ng tour ause of widow, heerful, ed her at Sar-4. He o years.)8. He ts as a ıdissem-Bloomtertown, Saratoga

Boston. convenses and let, Vt., ative of in 1789.

ishop of

quire a long time, as in the case of other languages. Into this language, Rev. Samuel A. Worcester, the missionary, has translated and printed a part of the New Testament, and some portions of the Old Testament. In 1856, after a residence of thirty-one years among the Cherokees as their faithful teacher, Mr. W. made a visit for the first time to his relatives and friends in New England. Mr. Guess was an ingenious silversmith and small farmer. Unreclaimed from the Cherokee heathenism, it is said, that when he saw the use made of his characters in translating the bible into Cherokee, he lamented his invention.

GUNN, James, general, died suddenly in Louisville, Geo., July 30, 1801. He was a member of congress from 1789 to 1801.

GUNN, ALEXANDER, D. D., minister of the Reformed Dutch church at Bloomingdale, N. Y., died Sept. 18, 1829. His widow died in 1831. He published memoirs of the late Dr. Livingston.

GUNNISON, J. W., captain, was killed by the Utah Indians Nov. 25, 1853. He was a topographical engineer; his useful services were employed along the coast of Florida, and ten years in a survey of the northwestern lakes, in the Salt lake region, and on a railroad route to the Pacific.

GURLEY, JOHN, minister in Lebanon, Conn., died Feb. 27, 1812, aged 63, in the thirty-seventh year of his ministry. He graduated at Yale in 1773, and succeeded E. Wheelock. His widow, Mary, married Gen. A. Peters, and died in 1837, aged 80. His son John W. G., attorney-general of Louisiana, died, killed in a duel, in 1807. His daughter Mary married Rev. Dr. Gillett, of Maine. His son, Rev. Ralph R. Gurley, lives in Washington. His daughter, Abby, is the widow of Prof. Hinckley of Mississippi.

GUTCH, ROBERT, Episcopal minister at Bath, Me., came from England, and died about 1675.

GWINNETT, BUTTON, a member of congress, died May 27, 1777, aged 44. He was born in England about 1732, and after he came to this country purchased a large tract of land in Georgia, and devoted himself to agricultural pursuits. Elected to congress in 1776, he signed the Declaration of Independence. At this period he was a competitor with Col. Lackland MIntosh for the office of brigadier-general, and formed a settled hostility to his successful rival. Being afterwards president of the council, he nominated a subordinate officer to the command of an expedition against Florida. The expedition failed, and by consequence Mr. Gwinnett failed to be elected governor in May, 1777. In the mortification of his adversary, M'Intosh exulted. In the result Mr. G. challenged him. Fighting at the distance of twelve feet, both were wounded, and Mr. G. died quire a long time, as in the case of other languages. Seen the effects of envy, rivalry, and hatred. Had Into this language, Rev. Samuel A. Worcester, the missionary, has translated and printed a part of the New Testament, and some portions of the New Testament, and some portions of the Old Testament. In 1856, after a residence of the ornament of his State. — Goodrich's Lives.

HABERSHAM, Joseph, postmaster-general of the United States, died in Nov., 1815, aged 65. He was the son of James H., a merchant of Savannah, who died at Brunswick, N. J., Aug. 29, 1775. He served with reputation in the Revolutionary war, and had the rank of lieutenant-colonel. In 1785 he was a member of congress; in 1795 he was appointed postmaster-general, but resigned the place in 1800. In 1802 he was president of the branch bank in Savannah, where he died.

HAGAN, James, a physician and editor, was an Irishman, who lived in Virginia and Philadelphia, and who established the Vicksburg Sentinel, Miss. His fate may well be a warning to editors, who make intemperate and abusive attacks upon their fellow-men. He fell in a street fight in Vicksburg, June 7, 1843, aged 38.

HAGNER, Peter, auditor of the treasury, died in Washington July 16, 1850, aged 79. Born and educated in Philadelphia, he was appointed in 1793 an accountant of war. He served faithfully under every president from Washington to Taylor, fifty-seven years, modest, laborious, patriotic, of unwavering integrity. He was often intrusted with the settlement of large claims. No public officer had a higher character in the estimation of congress.

HAINES, CHARLES G., adjutant-general of New York, was born in Canterbury, N. II., and was early thrown upon the resources of his own mind. He graduated at Middlebury in 1816. In 1818 he removed to the city of New York. As a lawyer he was respectable; but his talents were of a popular kind, and he gave himself to polities. He supported Mr. Clinton. No young man, perhaps, ever acquired so much influence. He died of the consumption at Bloomingdale July 3, 1825, aged 32. His writings were numerous. He published considerations on the canal, 1818; memoir of T. A. Emmet, 1829. — New York Statesman, July 8.

HAINES, JESSE, died in Lycoming county, Penn., in Sept., 1856, quite aged. He was known and esteemed as a minister of the society of Friends over seventy years.

officer to the command of an expedition against Florida. The expedition failed, and by consequence Mr. Gwinnett failed to be elected governor in May, 1777. In the mortification of his adversary, M'Intosh exulted. In the result Mr. G. and he was appointed one of the company. Purchallenged him. Fighting at the distance of twelve feet, both were wounded, and Mr. G. died voyages, navigations, traffiques, and discoveries of the English nation, fol., 3 vols., 1589–1600; Virginia richly valued, by the description of Florida, | published in 1856. - American Rememb. 1782, 1609. An edition of his works was published, 5 vols., 4to., 1809-1812.

HALL.

11ALE, JOHN, first minister of Beyerly, Mass., the son of Robert II., was born at Charlestown June 3, 1636; graduated in 1657; was ordained Sept. 20, 1667, and was chaplain in the expedition to Canada in 1690. He died May 15, 1700, aged 63. In the witcheraft delusion of 1692, begiming in the family of Mr. Parris, he was deluded, and approved of the judicial measures. His modest inquiry into the nature of witchcraft was published in 1702, indicating a wise change of his views. His account of the witcheraft was made use of by C. Mather, in Magnalia, vi. 79. A memoir of him is in Hist. Coll., 3d series, vol. vii. — Sprague's Annals.

HALE, James, the first minister of Ashford, Conn., died Nov. 22, 1742, aged 57. Born in Beverly, the son of Rev. John II., he graduated at Harvard in 1703, and was a tutor at Yale in 1707, and was ordained in 1718. His mother, for his father was three times married, was Mrs. Sarah Noyes of Newbury. His younger brother Samuel, who lived in Newbury, was the father of Richard, and grandfather of Nathan, of Coventry, of Revolutionary memory. - Sprague's Annals.

HALE, Moses, minister of Byfield parish, in Newbury, Mass., died Jan. 16, 1743-1, aged 65. He was the son of John, and grandson of Thomas of Newbury, born July 10, 1678; was graduated at Harvard in 1699; and was ordained Nov. 17, 1706. His successor was Moses Parsons.

HALE, NATHAN, captain, a Revolutionary offieer, was a descendant of the preceding. He was the son of Richard H., of Coventry, Conn., and graduated at Yale college in 1773, with high reputation. In the war he commanded a company in Col. Knowlton's regiment, and was with the army in the retreat from Long Island in 1776. Washington having applied to Knowlton for a discreet and enterprising officer to penetrate the enemy's camp and procure intelligence, Hale passed in disguise to the British camp, but on his return was apprehended and carried before Lord Wm. Howe, by whom he was ordered for execution the next morning. He was denied a bible and the aid of a clergyman. The letters, full of fortitude and resignation, which he had written to his mother and sister, were destroyed. He was lning, regretting that he had but one life to lose for his country; though executed in a brutal manner as a spy, he was firm and composed. In education and talents he was superior perhaps to Andre, who died also as a spy; in patriotic devotion to his country, hazarding in her sacred cause not only life but honor and home, no one was lines on his death. His life by I. W. Stuart was of Rochester, N. II.; a daughter married Rev.

p. 285; Knapp's Lect. 254-255.

HALE, NATHAN, died in Goshen, Conn., Sept. 6, 1813, at an advanced age. He graduated at Yale in 1769. He was judge of the county court, much respected as a man of integrity and piety. His son, Jonathan Lee Hale, minister of Windham, Me., died at Skidaway, Geo., Jan. 15, 1835, aged 43; a graduate of Middlebury in 1819, of Andover, 1822.

HALE, DAVID, minister of South Coventry, Conn., died in 1822, aged about 57. He graduated at Yale in 1785. His widow, Lydia, remarkable for piety and for mental and physical vigor, died at Rockville in 1849, aged 85. These were the parents of David Hale, editor of the Journal of Commerce at New York.

HALE, ENOCH, the first minister of Westhampton, Mass., died in Jan., 1837, aged 83. Born in Coventry, Conn., the son of Richard, he was the brother of Capt. Nathan Hale, of Revolutionary memory. He graduated at Yale in 1773, and was settled in 1779. His widow, Octavia, died in 1839, aged 85. He was a faithful, respected, and useful minister. Mr. Hale was the father of Nathan Hale, the editor of the Boston Advertiser. He published a fast sermon, 1804.

HALE, ENOCH, M. D., died in Boston in 1848, aged 60 years or more. He was the son of Rev. Enoch Hale, of Westhampton. His grandfather was Deacon Richard, of Newburyport, and Coventry, Conn.; and he was the son of Samuel, of Newbury, Mass.; and Samuel was the son of Rev. John Hale of Heverly, and of Sarah Noves. He published Dr. Holyoke's journal, with a memoir, in the memoirs of American academy; on animal heat by respiration, 1813; Boylston prize dissertations, 1821.

HALE, WILLIAM, Dr., died at Hollis, N. II., Oct. 10, 1854, aged 91. He was the son of Dr. John Hale, a surgeon in Col. Cilley's regiment in the Revolutionary war.

HALE, DAVID, editor of the Journal of Commerce, New York, died at Fredericksburg, Va., whither he went in ill health, Jan. 20, 1849. He was the son of Rev. David Hale, of South Coventry, now called Lisbon, Conn. At first he was a merchant in Boston, but unsuccessful; then an auctioneer. As proprietor and distinguished editor of the Journal of Commerce, he prospered and had a wide influence. He was an efficient member of the Congregational church in New York.

HALL, THEOPHILUS, first minister of Meriden, Conn., died March 25, 1767, aged 59. He was a graduate of Yale in 1727, and ordained Oct. 29, superior to him. Dwight honored him by some 1729. One of his sons was Avery Hall, minister rould not erned by ave been Lives. r-general aged 65. chant of

ed. Had

J., Aug. the Reveutenantcongress; neral, but he was ah, where

litor, was Philadelrg Sentinming to ousive atn a strect 18. treasury, aged 79.

e was ap-He served ashington laborious, was often ge claims. ter in the eneral of V. 11., and of his own 1816. In rk. As a ents were to politics. man, per-He died ly 3, 1825, He pubtatesman, g county, vas known society of

; memoir

, was born Inried at er Raleigh America, my. Purpublished coveries of 600; VirA. Lee, of Norwich. He had strong intellectual powers, was a strong advocate of civil and religious liberty, and was much esteemed as a preacher. He published two discourses on the death of Rev. Isaac Stiles; two on faith; and a sermon at the ordination of Rev. M. Meriam.

IIALL, PRINCE, a negro, master of a masonic lodge in Boston, was born about 1738. After the peace a masonic charter was obtained from England; but it seems that white masons, out of pride, would not acknowledge the African lodge. Mr. Hall said, "There are to be seen the weeds of pride, envy, tyranny, and scorn, in this garden of peace, liberty, and equality." He published two masonic charges, 1792, 1797.

HALL, SAMUEL, minister of Cheshire, Conn., died in 1776, aged 80, in the ferty-second year of his ministry. He graduated at Yale in 1716, and was a tutor two years. His daughter, Ann, married Rev. Warham Williams. He published a sermon on the small pox, 1732; an election sermon, 1746.

HALL, DAVID, D. D., minister of Sutton, Mass., died May 8, 1789, aged 84, in the sixticth year of his ministry. He was the son of Joseph, of Yarmouth, and graduated at Harvard in 1724, and was ordained in 1729. In five years eightyone were added to the church; in 1743 there were added ninety-eight persons. He experienced trouble from the Separatists. He was the friend of Jonathan Edwards, and as a member of the council resisted his dismission from Northampton. Of his twelve children, one daughter married Rev. Daniel Grosvenor, of Grafton. He published a thanksgiving sermon on the reduction of Canada, 1760; a half-century sermon, 1779. — Sprague's Annals.

HALL, LYMAN, governor of Georgia, was a native of Conn., and graduated at Yale college in 1747. Having studied medicine, he established himself at Sudbury, Ga. He early and zealously espoused the cause of his country. His efforts were particularly useful in inducing the Georgians to join the American confederacy. In May, 1775, he was a member of congress, and signed the Declaration of Independence, and continued in that body to the close of 1780. While the British had possession of Georgia, they confiscated his property. In 1783 he was elected governor; the next year he was succeeded by J. Houston. He died in Feb., 1791, aged 66. Though warm and enthusiastic, he had the guidance of a sound judgment. — Goodrich's Lives.

HALL, SAMUEL, a printer in Boston, died Oct. 30, 1807, aged 67. He was a correct printer. From the beginning to the end of the war he conducted a firm, republican paper. He did good service to his country. He was a patriot of integrity and equanimity.

HALL, AARON, minister of Keene, N. H., died in 1815, aged 62, having been pastor thirty-six years. He was zealous for the truth, but candid and pacific. He died in Christian hope and joy. — Panoplist, XI. 95.

HALL, WILLIAM, first minister of Grafton, Vt., died in 1823, aged 78. Born in Woburn, he graduated at Harvard in 1776, and was settled in 1788.

HALL, GORDON, first American missionary at Bombay, died March 20, 1826, aged 42. He was born in West Granville, now Tolland, Mass., and was graduated at Williams college in 1808. the first scholar in his class. Having studied theology, he refused an invitation to settle in Connecticut, saying, "Wo is me if I preach not the gospel to the heathen." Offering himself as a missionary to the American board of commissioners for missions, he was ordained at Salem, with Newell, Judson, Nott, and Rice, Feb. 6, 1812, and in the same mouth sailed for Calcutta. Another hand of missionaries, consisting of Bardwell, Meigs, Poor, Richards, and Warren, sailed for Ceylon in Oct., 1812, followed by Graves and Niehols in 1817, and by Winslow, Spaulding, Woodward, and Dr. Scudder in 1819. Mr. Hall arrived at Bombay in Feb., 1813, and there spent thirteen years in his benevolent toils, with a purpose unaltered and zeal unquenched. He had just revised the New Testament in Mahratta, when, as he was on a journey in the interior, he was seized with the cholera, which proved fatal in eight or nine hours. His widow, a native of England, is still living, 1856, with her son, Gordon Hall, one of the ministers of Northampton. His mother, Elizabeth, died in 1834, aged 91. He was a man of great force of mind and decision of character, of ardent picty, and of entire devotedness to the work of a missionary. His vigorous frame and habits of life fitted him to endure the hardships of a missionary. His qualifications of every kind for the work to which he devoted his life, were very uncommon. He published a sermon on foreign missions, 1812. His appeal to the American Christians in behalf of the twelve millions speaking the Mahratta language, was published in the Missionary Herald, Oct., 1826. He wrote, also, w'th Newell, the conversion of the world, or the claims of six hundred millions, etc., 2d edit., 1818. The New Testament in Mahratta was printed at the mission press in Bombay in 1826. - Missionary Herald, Oct., 1826; Sprague's Annals.

HALL, JOHN E., editor of the Portfolio, died at Philadelphia June, 1829, aged 44. He published American law journal, 6 vols., 1808-1817.

HALL, ELIJAH, captain, died at Portsmouth, N. H., in 1830, aged 87. In the Revolutionary war he was a licutenant in the navy, and sailed under John Paul Jones. II., died hirty-six t candid and joy.

fton, Vt., ourn, he ettled in onary at 42. He d, Mass.. in 1808, died thein Connot the self as a commist Salem, . 6, 1812, tta. Anof Barden, sailed raves and paulding,

Mr. Hall ere spent ith a pur-He had Mahratta, iterior, he ed fatal in e of Eng-, Gordon ton. His 91. He lecision of devotedvigorous o endure qualifiça-which he He pub-312. His behalf of ratta lany Herald, the conhundred w Testaion press ald, Oct., olio, died He pub-08-1817. rtsmouth, lutionary nd sailed laski, Tenn., April 13, 1840. He left Auburn theological school in 1834, and embarked for Ceylon. His wife died there. Disease soon compelled him to return. He died of the consumption. His last words were, "I triumph."

HALL, FREDERIC, M. D., LL. D., of Washington city, died in Peru, Ill., July 27, 1843, aged 64. He was born in Vermont, graduated at Dartmonth College in 1803, and was professor of natural philosophy in Middlebury college; afterwards president of Mt. Hope college, near Baltimore. At the time of his death he was professor of chemistry in Columbia college, Washington. He was a benefactor of Dartmouth college, giving to it a cabinet of minerals and some thousands of dollars in money. He published a enlogy on Solomon Metcalf Allen, at Middlebury college, 1818; statistics of Middlebury in Mass. historical collections, 2d series, vol. IX.

HALL, CHARLES, D. D., died at Newark, N. J., Oct. 31, 1853, aged 55. A native of the State of New York, he graduated at Hamilton college in 1825. He was for years secretary of the American home missionary society, associated with Dr. Badger. He was principal editor of the Home Missionary. He was a scholar, and had sound judgment and a devoted piety; in a mysterious providence he was taken away in the midst of extensive usefulness.

HALL, CHAUNCEY A., M. D., died at Madison, Wisconsin, May 8, 1856, of congestion of the lungs, aged 43. He was the son of Dr. Eli Hall, of Blandford, Mass., a graduate of Amherst in 1833. He was many years an excellent physician in Northampton, connected with the watercure establishment on Round Hill; then two years in Hartford. His wife, in going out to him, met his remains at Detroit. He was buried at Brattleborough, Vt., his native place.

HALL, WILLIAM, general, died in Sumner Co., Tenn., in Oct., 1856, aged 82. He had been a boy exclaimed in the language of his country, member of congress.

HALLADAY, ALBERT R., a missionary to Persia, died in Albemarle, Va., Oct. 18, 1856. He had, since his return from P., been recently chosen president of Hampden Sydney college.

HALLOCK, JEREMIAH, minister of West Simsbury, near Canton, Conn., died June 23, 1826, aged 68, in the forty-first year of his ministry. He was the son of William, of Brookhaven, Long Island, who removed, when his son was young, to Goshen, Mass. Here he toiled on his father's farm until twenty-one years old, twice being called out as a soldier in the war. He studied theology his labors with remarkable revivals, in the years died in 1813, the original of "The Mountain

HALL, Alanson C., missionary, died in Pu- | 1793,1799, 1805, 1812, 1813, 1816, and 1821. With but little education, he preached with a warm heart and with wonderful power. With little action, and none of the graces of oratory, he found a way to the souls of his hearers; it was by his sincerity, simplicity, affection, and carnestness. Some one called him the apostle John. In prayer, which was his element, he was humble, solemn, fervent. His intellect was not of an inferior order. He was original; he had a graphic power; his imagery was vivid. His only daughter died of the spotted typhus fever in 1813, aged 14. His son, Jeremiah Humphrey Hallock, was graduated at Williams in 1810, was a judge in Ohio, and died in 1817. His widow died in the year of his own death, 1826. The godly pastor, is the title of a memoir of his life, by C. Yale, with a sketch of his brother Moses. His only printed sermon was preached at the dedication of his meeting-house in 1815. - Sprague's Annals.

HALLOCK, Moses, the first minister of Plainfield, Mass., died July 17, 1837, aged 77. He had been settled nearly forty-five years. He was the brother of Jeremiah II. His father removed to Goshen, near Northamptou, when he was young. He graduated at Yale in 1788, and was ordained July 11, 1792. During his ministry there were several remarkable revivals of religion. He had received 351 members of the church previously to 1831, when his colleague was settled. Aceustomed to receive students into his family and to teach them, the whole number was 304, of whom thirty were females, fifty became ministers, and seven missionaries to the heathen. Of these last were James and William Richards, Parsons, and Fisk, Jonas King, Ferry, and H. Hallock. Ho was meek, humble, kind, holy, exhibiting all the excellencies of the Christian character. Three weeks before his death Mr. Richards, the missionary from the Sandwich Islands, introduced to him a native, and said, "This is my teacher." The "Day most gone; sun most down; most supper Then Mr. II. offered a most fervent prayer. When he was buried, his old blind deacon, James Richards, the father of the missionary, the last of his original church, was led up to his coffin, and, as he felt the face of his pastor, he burst into a flood of tears, saying, "Farewell for time!" Of his three sons, Gerard is the editor of the New York Journal of Commerce; William Allen is secretary of the American tract society; Homan was missionary printer thirteen years at Malta and Smyrna. His wife, Margaret Allen, of Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, died in 1835. four years with T. Dwight, of Northampton, and His father died in 1815, aged 85, leaving one with others, and was ordained in 1785. He went word for future generations, received from his on an early mission to Vermont about 1801. As father, - "Remember, there is a long eternity!" a diligent and faithful preacher God often blessed | The deacon of his church was Joseph Beals, who name. - C. Vale's Sketch of his Life; Holland, 11. 265; Sprague's Annals.

HALLOCK, MARTHA, died at Plainfield, Mass., in 1852, aged 56, the daughter of Rev. Moses II. She was poor. She gave five dollars to each of five benevolent societies, and her spectacles to a friend, and said, "Nothing but the soul now!"

HALSEY, John T., died in Elizabethtown July 2, 1842, aged 45. He was a preacher, and also a public benefactor as long the excellent teacher of a flourishing school.

HALSEY, WILLIAM, mayor of Newark, N. J., died Aug. 16, 1843, aged 78. He was a judge of the common pleas. He had lived half a century in Newark, and was active and enterprising.

HALSTED, ROBERT, Dr., died at Elizabethtown, N. J., in 1825, aged 79.

HAMILTON, ANDREW, an eminent lawyer of Philadelphia, died Aug. 4, 1741. He had been speaker of the house of assembly, but he resigned this office in 1739 on account of his age and infirmities. He filled several stations with honor, integrity, and ability. In Zenger's trial at New York he acquired much reputation as a law-His son, James Hamilton, was repeatedly governor of Pennsylvania between the years 1748 and 1771. - Proud's History of Pennsylvania, II. 216-219. HAMILTON, ALEXANDER, first secretary of the treasury of the United States, of Scotch or English descent, died July 12, 1804, aged about 47. He was born in the island of Nevis in 1757. At the age of sixteen he accompanied his mother to New York, and entered a student of Columbia college, in which he continued about three years, While a member of this institution the first buddings of his intellect gave presages of his future eminence. The contest with Great Britain called forth the first talents on each side, and his juvenile pen asserted the claims of the colonies against very respectable writers. His papers exhibited such evidences of intellect and wisdom. that they were ascribed to Mr. Jay. At the age of eighteen he entered the army as an officer of artillery. The first sound of war awakened his martial spirit, and as a soldier he soon conciliated the regard of his brethren in arms. It was not long before he attracted the notice of Washington, who in 1777 selected him as an aid, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. Throughout the campaign, which terminated in the capture of Lord Cornwallis, he commanded a battalion of light infantry. At the siege of York in 1781, when the second parallel was opened, two redoubts, which flanked it and were advanced three hundred yards in front of the British works, very much annoyed the men in the trenches. It was resolved to possess them, and, to prevent jealousies, the attack

Miller," referred to in the popular tract of that of the other to the French. The detachment of the Americans was commanded by the Marquis de Lafavette, and Col. Hamilton, at his own enrnest request, led the advanced corps, consisting of two battalions. Towards the close of the day, Oct. 14th, the troops rushed to the charge without firing a single gun. The works were carried with but little loss.

Soon after the capture of Cornwallis, Hamilton sheathed his sword, and, being encumbered with a family destitute of funds, at the age of twentyfive applied to the study of the law in New York. In this profession he soon rose to distinction, But his private pursuits could not detach him from a regard to the public welfare. The violence which was meditated against the property and persons of all who remained in the city during the war, called forth his generous exertions. and, by the aid of Governor Clinton, the faithless and revengeful scheme was defeated. In July, 1782, he was chosen a member of congress. He was chairman of the committee which reported a resolution to provide a sinking fund to pay the national debt. In 1786 he was chosen a member of the assembly of New York, and he introduced and ably supported the bill for accoding to the assumed independence of Vermont. A more important affair now demanded his talents. After witnessing the debility of the confederation he was fully impressed with the necessity of an efficient general government, and he was appointed, with two others, in 1787, a member of the federal convention for New York. He assisted in forming the constitution of our country. It did not indeed completely meet his wishes. He was afraid that it did not contain sufficient means of strength for its own preservation, and that in consequence we should share the fate of many other republics, and pass through anarchy to despotism. He was in favor of a more permanent executive and senate. He wished for a strong government. which would not be shaken by the conflict of different interests through an extensive territory. and which should be adequate to all the forms of national exigency. He was apprehensive that the increased wealth and population of the States would lead to encroachments on the union, and he anticipated the day when the general government, unable to support itself, would fall. But, believing the constitution to be incomparably superior to the old confederation, he exerted all his talents in its support, though it did not rise to his conception of a perfect system. By his pen, in the papers signed Publius, and by his voice in the convention of New York in the summer of 1788, he contributed much to its adoption. When the government was organized in 1789, Washington placed him at the head of the treasury. In his reports he proposed plans for funding the of the one was committed to the Americans, and debt of the union and for assuming the debts of

nent of rquis de earnest of two ay, Oct. without ied with amilton ed with twentyw York. tinction. ach him The vioproperty city durxertions, faithless In July, ess. He ported a pay the member troduced to the asnore ims. After ation he of an efppointed, re federal in formdid not He was means of at in conany other espotism. executive vernment. ict of difterritory, forms of e that the ie States mion, and ıl governall. But, arably suted all his ot rise to his pen, is voice in mmer of

n. When

Washing-

sury. In iding the

e debts of

mint, and for procuring a revenue. He wished to redeem the reputation of his country by satisfying her creditors, and combine with the government such a monied interest as might facilitate its operations. But, while he opened sources of wealth to thousands by establishing public credit, and thus restoring the public paper to its original value, he did not enrich himself. He did not take advantage of his situation, nor improve the opportunity he enjoyed for acquiring a fortune. Though accused of amassing wealth, he did not vest a dollar in the public funds. In the early stage of the administration, a disagreement existed between Mr. Hamilton and the secretary of State, Mr. Jefferson, which increased till it issued in such open hostility, and introduced such confusion in the cabinet, that Washington found it necessary to address a letter to each, recommending forbearance and moderation. Mr. Hamilton was apprehensive of danger from the encroachment of the States, and wished to add new strength to the general government; while Mr. Jefferson entertained little jealousy of the State sovereignties, and was rather desirous of checking and limiting the exercise of the national authorities, particularly the power of the executive. Other points of difference existed, and reconciliation could not be effected. In the beginning of 1793, after intelligence of the rupture between France and Great Britain had been received, Hamilton, as one of the cabinet of the president, supported the opinion, that the treaty with France was no longer binding, and that a nation might absolve itself from the obligations of real treaties, when such a change takes place in the internal situation of the other contracting party, as renders the continuance of the connection disadvantageous or dangerous. He advised therefore, that the expected French minister should not be received in an unqualified manner. The secretary of State on the other hand was of opinion, that the Revolution in France had produced no change in the relations between the two countries, and could not weaken the obligation of treaties; and this opinion was embraced by The advice of Hamilton was fol-Washington. lowed in regard to the insurrection in Pennsylvania in 1794, and such a detachment was sent out under his own command, that it was suppressed without effusion of blood. He remained but a short time afterwards in office. As his property had been wasted in the public service, the care of a rising family made it his duty to retire, that by renewed exertions in his profession he might provide for their support. He accordingly resigned his office on the last of Jan., 1795, and the respective States, for establishing a bank and he thought it necessary to disclose a circumstance which it would have been more honorable to his character to have left in oblivion. This was an adulterous connection with a Mrs. Reynolds, while he was secretary of the treasury. When a provisional army was raised in 1798, in consequence of the injuries and demands of France, Washington suspended his acceptance of the command of it on the condition, that Hamilton should be his associate and the second in command. arrangement was accordingly made. After the adjustment of our dispute with the French republic, and the discharge of the army in the summer of 1800, he returned again to his profession in the city of New York. In this place he passed the remainder of his days.

In June, 1804, Col. Burr, vice president of the United States, addressed a letter to Hamilton, requiring his acknowledgment or denial of the use of any expression derogatory to the honor of the former. This demand was deemed inadmissible, and a duel was the consequence. After the close of the circuit court, the parties met at Hoboken, July 11th, and Hamilton fell on the same spot, where his son Philip, aged 19, three years before had fallen, in obedience to the same principle of honor, and in the same violation of the laws of God and of man. He was carried into the city. and, being desirous of receiving the sacrament of the Lord's supper, he immediately sent for Dr. Mason. As the principles of his church prohibited him from administering the ordinance in private, this minister of the gospel informed Hamilton, that the sacrament was an exhibition and pledge of the mercies, which the Son of God has purchased, and that the absence of the sign did not exclude from the mercies signified, which were accessible to him by faith in their gracious Author. He replied, "I am aware of that. It is only as a sign that I wanted it." In the conversation which ensued, he disavowed all intention of taking the life of Col. Burr, and declared his abhorrence of the whole transaction. When the sinof which he had been guilty, was intimated to him, he assented with strong emotion; and when the infinite merit of the Redeemer, as the propitiation for sin, the sole ground of our acceptance with God, was suggested, he said with emphasis, "I have a tender reliance on the mercy of the Almighty through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ." Bishop Moor was afterwards sent for, and, after making suitable inquiries of the penitence and faith of Gen. Hamilton, and receiving his assurance, that he would never again, if restored to health, be engaged in a similar transaction, but would employ all his influence in society to discountenance the barbarous custom, adminwas succeeded by Mr. Wolcott. Not long after istered to him the communion. After this his this period, as he was accused of peculation, he mind was composed. Like his antagonist, Mr. was induced to repel the charge, and in doing this Burr, he was small in person and short in stature.

His widow, Elizabeth, a daughter of Gen. Schuyler, died at Washington Nov. 9, 1854, aged 97.

In assigning the reasons for accepting the challenge of Col. Burr, while he seems to intimate his apprehensions that the debility of the general government would be followed by convulsions, he also alludes to the demand, which, in such an event, might be made upon his military talents. His words are, "the ability to be in future useful, whether in resisting mischief or effecting good, in those crises of our public affairs, which seem likely to happen, would probably be inseparable from a conformity with public prejudice in this particular." With all his pre-eminence of talents he is yet a melancholy proof of the influence, which intercourse with a deprayed world has in perverting the judgment. In principle he was opposed to duelling, his conscience was not hardened, and he was not indifferent to the happiness of his wife and children; but no consideration was strong enough to prevent him from exposing his life in single combat. His own views of usefulness were followed, in contrariety to the injunctions of his Maker and Judge. He had been for some time convinced of the truth of Christianity. and it was his intention, if his life had been spared, to have written a work upon its evidences.

He published the letters of Phocion, which were in favor of the loyalists after the peace, in two pamphlets, 1784. The Federalist, a series of essays, which, under the signature of Publius, appeared in the public papers in the interval between the publication and the adoption of the constitution of the United States, and which was designed to elucidate and support its principles, was written by him in conjunction with Mr. Jay and Mr. Madison. The Washington City Gazette. Dec. 22, 1817, states indirectly on the authority of Mr. Madison himself, that Hamilton wrote all the numbers excepting Numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, and 64, which were written by Mr. Jay; and Numbers 10, 14, 17, 18, 19, 21, 37 to 58 inclusive, 62 and 63, which were written by Mr. Madison. This work has been published in two volumes, and is held in the highest estimation. His reports while secretary of the treasury are very long, and display great powers of mind. Some of them are preserved in the American museum. In the report upon the manufactures he controverts the principles of Adam Smith. In the papers signed Pacificus, written in 1793, while he justified the proclamation of neutrality, he also supported his opinion, that we were absolved from the obligation of our treaties with France, and that justice was on the side of the coalition of the European powers for the re-establishment of the French monarchy. A series of essays in defence of the British treaty, under the signature of Camillus, was written by him in the summer of 1795. He her intelligence and loveliness and eminent usefulpublished also observations on certain documents, ness, the reader is referred to Mrs. Lawrence's etc., being a defence of himself against the charge of peculation, 1797; the stand, or essays signed Titus Manlius, designed to awaken this country to a sense of its danger from France, 1798; and a letter concerning the public conduct and character of his excellency John Adams, president of the United States, 1800. In this letter he endeavors to show, that the venerable patriot, who was more disposed than himself to maintain peace with France, was unworthy of being replaced in the high station, which he occupied. His writings were collected and published in three vols. 1810. - Mason's Orat, on his death; Nott's Discourse; Morris' Fun. Oration; Otis' Eulogy; Ames' Sketch; Marshall, v. 131, 350-360, 607-611; Life by Remeick, and his Son.

HAMILTON, PAUL, secretary of the navy of the United States, was the governor of South Carolina from 1804 to 1806, when he was sueceeded by Charles Pinckney. He was secretary of the navy in the administration of Mr. Madison from 1809 to 1813; and he died at Beaufort June 30, 1816. He was a patriot of the Revolu-

HAMILTON, ANDREW, major, died in Abbeville district, South Carolina, Jan. 17, 1835, aged

HAMILTON, SAMUEL R., a prominent lawyer in New Jersey died at Trenton Aug. 14, 1856, aged 66.

HAMILTON, ELIZABETH, widow of Gen Alexander H., died in Washington Nov. 9, 1854, aged 97, the daughter of Gen. Philip S. Schuyler of Albany. She survived her husband more than half a century.

HAMLIN, HENRIETTA ANNA LORAINE, a missionary in Turkey, was the daughter of the Rev. Dr. Jackson of Dorset, Vermont, and was born May 9, 1811. Her little dying sister bequeathed to her, when an infant, her own name, Anna Loraine. saying, "I shall not want it any longer." Among the schools she attended were the academy of Haverhill, Mass., and the female academy at Andover. At this last place she formed a friendship with Margarette, daughter of Professor Woods, now Mrs. Lawrence, who has published the memorials of her friend. She was married Sept. 3, 1838, to Rev. Cyrus Hamlin, and with him sailed for Smyrna from Boston Dec. 3. In a few weeks they reached Constantinople, where she spent the remainder of her days, till near the close, the helpmeet of her husband in ceaseless toils and cares and prayers for the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. In her failing health her husband sailed with her, Oct. 5, 1850, for the beautiful island of Rhodes. There she died Nov. 14, aged 39, leaving five daughters. For a knowledge of the high excellence of her character, of

e charge s signed country 98; and nd charident of · he enriot, who do peace placed in His writree vols. tt's Dis-Eulogy;

navy of of South was sucsecretary Madison Beaufort : Revolu-

60, 607-

in Abbe-335, aged nt lawyer 14, 1856, den Alex-854, aged uyler of ore than

E, a mis-

the Rev. was born eathed to Loraine, Among ademy of ny at Anriendship r Woods, the meied Sept. with him In a few here she near the ceaseless ancement ng health 0, for the died Nov. a knowlracter, of

ent useful-

awrence's

value, which can hardly be read without admiration, and tears of sympathy, and spiritual profit. After ten months her remains were removed to Pera, at Constantinople. On her monument are the words, - "Peace, perfect peace!" Her youngest child sleeps with her; Mary Van Lennep is also buried there. From the height of this cemetery the city is seen and the waters of Marmora.

Dr. Hamlin, after an absence of eighteen years, made a short visit to this country in 1856, and failed not to repair to the village, where he was united with his beloved early companion, now sleeping in the dust in the far distant Pera. But O, how changed! The old mansion-house, and its tenants, and the beautiful grove, where he held conferences with his beloved, were gone, as he said to the writer, his old friend; but the high elm before the door, and the fields, and the mountains, and the heavens above remained. In those heavens he by faith cherished the hope of meeting again the departed. Without this hope how wretched were human life? Has he not then chosen a good work, to communicate the gospel to the misguided millions of the east? As to our country villages, who can enumerate the excellent women they have nurtured for the world's benefit?

HAMMOND, WILLIAM, an early settler of Massachusetts in 1636, died Oct. 8, 1662, aged 94. Elizabeth, probably his widow, died at Watertown 1669, aged 90; she is regarded as the sister of William Penn.

HAMMOND, LAWRENCE, died at Boston in 1699. He was a freeman in 1666; a representative of Charlestown for six years from 1672. Others of the name of Hammond lived early at Sandwich, Rochester, and Hingham.

HAMMOND, JOHN, a Baptist minister, died at Coventry, R. I., in 1840, aged 84.

HAMMOND, CHARLES, died in Cincinnati April 3, 1840, aged 60. He was a lawyer of eminence, and reporter of the superior court of As editor of the Cincinnati Gazette he was very distinguished.

HAMMOND, JABEZ, D., died in Cherry Valley Aug. 18, 1855; a member of congress. He published Julius Melbourn, the political history of N. Y., and the life and times of Silas Wright.

HAMPTON, WADE, brigadier-general, died Feb. 4, 1835, aged 80, at Columbia, S. C. He served in the Revolutionary war; he commanded at Plattsburg in Nov., 1813, and made an unsuccessful expedition into Canada, co-operating with Wilkinson. He had a plantation at Orima point, seventy miles from New Orleans, and in 1820 was the owner of four-hundred slaves, and by their labor obtained at one crop five hundred hogsheads of sugar and one thousand bales of cotton, said to be worth 150,000 dollars. His slaves, in

"memorials," a book of unequalled interest and | all about three thousand in number, the engines of his wealth, says Schoolcraft, were scarcely fed or clothed in any way bordering on humanity, the common allowance for food being one quart of corn a day. Is it possible, that any man of common reason could, on reflection, think, because he had bought or inherited slaves, that he had a right to the unrequited toils of his fellow men, living in luxury on their toils, and not even teaching them the gospel of salvation, that after the extorted labors and miseries of the present life they might cherish the hope of justice, and kindness, and happiness beyond the grave?

> HANCOCK, JOHN, minister of Lexington, Mass., was born in Cambridge, the son of Nathaniel, in 1671, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1689. He was ordained Nov. 2, 1698. After a ministry of more than half a century, he died very suddenly Dec. 6, 1752, aged 81. Two of his sons were ministers, one of whom, Ebenezer, was settled as his colleague Jan. 2, 1733, and died Jan. 28, 1740. Mr. Hancock possessed a facetious temper, and in general his wit was used with discretion. Being a friend to peace he exerted himself, and with success, to preserve harmony in his parish. By his brethren in the ministry he was highly respected and beloved, and as he was for many years senior minister in the county, his services were frequently requested in ecclesiastical councils. He had given the charge to twenty-one ministers. He retained uncommon vigor to the last. Some interesting anecdotes are in Sprague's annals of the American pulpit. He published the election sermon, 1722; a sermon preached in Boston, 1724; at the ordination of his son, 1726; at the installation of T. Harrington, 1748. — Appleton's Fun. Sermon.

HANCOCK, John, minister of Braintree, now Quiney, Mass., was the son of the preceding, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1719. He was ordained as successor of Joseph Marsh. Nov. 2, 1726. He died May 7, 1744, aged 41. Possessing good talents, he applied with diligence to the studies of the ministerial office. During the revival of religion in America a short time before his death, it was his wish to guard his people against what he considered as enthusiasm on the one hand, and against infidelity and indifference to religion on the other. After a life of uprightness and sobriety, he expressed in his last moments the satisfaction which he felt in the testimony of a good conscience, and looked for the mercy of the Lord Jesus to eternal life. He published a sermon on the death of E. Quincy, 1738; a century sermon, Sept. 16, 1739; on the good work of grace, 1743; unqualified ministry; an expostulatory and pacific letter in reply to Mr. Gee, 1743; the examiner, or Gilbert against Tennent, 1748. - Gay's Funeral Sermon.

HANCOCK, THOMAS, a benefactor of Harvard

ton, and died in Boston Aug. 1, 1764. His portrait at full length is in the philosophy chamber of the college. His nephew, Gov. Hancock, inherited most of his property; but he bequeathed 1,000 pounds sterling for founding a professorship of the Hebrew and other oriental languages in Harvard college; 1,000 pounds to the society for propagating the gospel among the ludians in North America; and 600 pounds to the town of Boston toward erecting a hospital for the reception of such persons as are deprived of their reason. Stephen Sewall, the first Hancock professor of Hebrew in the university of Cambridge, was inducted into his office in 1765. - Ann. Reg. for 1764, 116; Holmes.

HANCOCK, John, LL. D., governor of Mass., the son of Rev. John Hancock, of Braintree, Quiney parish, died Oct. 8, 1793, aged 56. He was born Jan. 12, 1737. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1754. On the death of his uncle, Thomas Hancock, he received a very considerable fortune, and soon became an eminent merchant. In 1766 he was chosen a member of the house of representatives for Boston, with James Otis, Thomas Cushing, and Samuel Adams. The seizure of his sloop, Liberty, in 1768, for evading the laws of trade, occasioned a riot, and several of the commissioners of customs narrowly escaped with their lives. As the controversy with Great Britain assumed a more serious shape and affairs were hastening to a crisis, he evinced his attachment to the rights of his country. He and John Adams spent the night before the battle of Lexington at the house of Rev. Mr. Clark. He employed himself in cleaning his gun; but Adams said to him, clapping him on the back, "That is not our business, we belong to the cabinet." He was president of the provincial congress in 1774. June 12th of the following year, Gen. Gage issued his proclamation, offering pardon to all the rebels, excepting Samuel Adams and John Hancock, "whose offences," it is declared, "are of too flagitious a nature to admit of any other consideration than that of condign punishment." Mr. Hancock was at this time a member of the continental congress, of which he was chosen president May 24th, in the place of Peyton Randolph, who was under the necessity of returning home. In this office. as the head of the illustrious congress of 1776, he signed the Declaration of Independence. consequence of the ill state of his health, he took his leave of congress in Oct., 1777, and received their thanks for his unremitted attention and steady impartialty in discharging the duties of his office. Henry Laurens was his successor.

On the adoption of the present constitution of Massachusetts, he was chosen the first governor college, was the son of Mr. Hancock, of Lexing-| continued in that office till Feb., 1785, when he resigned. In 1787 he was again chosen in the place of Mr. Bowdoin, and remained in the chair till his death. His administration was very popular. It was apprehended by some, that on his accession the dignity of government would not be sufficiently maintained; but his language on assuming the chair was manly and decisive, and by his moderation and lenity the civil convulsion was completely quieted without the shedding of blood by the hand of the civil magistrate. Fourteen persons, who received sentence of death, were pardoned. In his public speeches to the legislature he acquitted himself with a degree of popular eloquence, which is seldom equalled. In one of his last acts as governor he supported in a dignified manner the sovereignty of the individual States. By a process commenced against Massachusetts in favor of William Vassal, he was summoned by a writ to answer to the prosecution in the court of the United States. But he declined the smallest concession which might lessen the independence of the State, whose interests were intrusted to his care, and he supported his opinion with firmness and dignity. Litigations of this nature were soon afterwards precluded by an amendment of the constitution of the United States. Mr. Hancock is represented as not possessing extraordinary powers of mind, and as not honoring the sciences very much by his personal attentions. But he was easy in his address, polished in his manners, affable and liberal; and as president of congress he exhibited a dignity. impartiality, quickness of conception, and constant attention to business, which secured him respect. As the chairman of a deliberative body, few could preside with such reputation. In the carly periods of his public career, it has been said that he was somewhat inconstant in his attachment to the cause of his country. Though this representation should be true; yet from the commencement of the war, the part which he took was decided and uniform, and his patriotic exertions are worthy of honorable remembrance. By the suavity of his manners and his insinuating address he secured an almost unequalled popularity. He could speak with ease and propriety on every subject. Being considered a republican in principle and a firm supporter of the cause of freedom. whenever he consented to be a candidate for governor, he was chosen to that office by an undisputed majority. In private life he was charitable and generous. With a large fortune he had also a disposition to employ it for useful and benevolent purposes. The poor shared liberally in his bounty. He was also a generous benefactor of Harvard college. His widow, Dorothy, the daughter of Edmund Quiney, married Capt. Scott. in Oct., 1780, and was annually re-elected and and died in 1830, aged 83. He published an oration, which he delivered on the Boston massacre, 1774.— Thacher's Sermon on his death; Gordon, 1. 508, 231; 11. 31; 111. 18-21, 498; Warren, 1. 212-215, 430; Minot's Hist. Insur. 179, 184; Holmes.

when he

n in the

the chair

ery pop-

it on his ould not

guage on e, and by lsion was

of blood

Fourteen

th, were

e legish-

of popu-

In one

in a dig-

ndividual

nst Mas-

, he was

osceution

it he de-

ht lessen interests

orted his gations of

led by an

e United

s not pos-

nd as not

s personal

lress, pol-

il; and as a dignity,

and con-

ured him

tive body,

. In the

been said

nis attach-

ough this

the com-

he took

otie exer-

nnce. By uating ad-

opularity.

on every

n in prin-

f freedom,

e for gov-

ndisputed

itable and

ad also a

enevolent ly in his efactor of

othy, the

apt. Scott, lished an HANCOCK, MARTHA M., wife of Rev. J. W. H., missionary among the Sioux Indians, died in Red Wing, Minnesota, 1851. She was daughter of Wm. Houghton, of Par. Mass.

HANFORD, THOMAS, the first minister of Norwalk, Conn., was ordained in 1654, and officiated nearly forty years. S. Buckingham succeeded him in 1697.

HANNA, John Andre, general, died at Harrisburg, Pa., in 1805, aged 43. He was a member of congress, repeatedly elected, firmly attached to the principles of the Revolution.

HANSON, JOHN, president of congress from 1781 to 1783, was a delegate from Maryland, and a distinguished friend of his country. He died in Prince George county Nov. 13, 1783.

HANSON, ALEXANDER CONTEE, a senator of the United States, died at Belmont April 23, 1819, aged 33. He was the grandson of the preeeding, and the son of Alex. F. H., chancellor of Maryland, who died in 1806. He edited with Mr. Wagner the Federal Republican at Balti-The printing establishment, after the declaration of war in 1812, was attacked by a mob, on which occasion Mr. Hanson's friends, Gens. Lingan and Lee, were wounded. Elected to congress in the same year, he was a distinguished opposer of the administration. In 1816 he was appointed a senator in the place of Gen. Harper. At the age of twenty-four, in Jan., 1810, he was guilty of the folly and crime of fighting a duel, occasioned by political controversy, with Capt. Gordon of the navy.

HARBY, ISAAC, died in New York in 1828, aged 40. He was a literary man; was born and educated in Charleston, S. C. A selection from his writings was published in 1829. It contains Alberti, a play, discourses, and essays.—Cycl.

American Lit. HARDENBERGH, JACOBUS R., D. D., first president of Queen's college in New Jersey, died in Nov., 1790. He was a native of this country. He was not favored with many advantages in the early part of his education, yet with a powerful mind and habits of persevering application he made great progress in knowledge. He was ordained by that party in the Dutch churches, which was denominated the Cœtus, and was its most distinguished and able supporter. He cheerfully exerted himself with Dr. Livingston in 1771, when he was minister of Raritan, to heal the division of the Dutch churches, and a union was completed in the following year. After the charter of Queen's college at New Brunswick was ob-died in that office. This institution was designed for educating young men for the ministry. Dr. Hardenbergh's piety was ardent; his labors indefatigable; and his ministry greatly blessed.—Christian's May, 11, 13, 270.

HARDIN, BENJAMIN, a member of congress from Kentucky, from 1815 to 1837, died in 1852, HARIOT, THOMAS, born in Oxford, England, died in 1621. He accompanied Raleigh to America, and published an account of the discovery of Virginia. It is in Hakluyt, vol. 3.

HARKER, SAMUEL, pastor of a church at Blackriver, East Jersey, was settled about 1752. He published in 1761, "Predestination consistent with general liberty;" in consequence of which the synod of New York and Philadelphia excluded him from their body and voted him to be disqualified to preach. He then published an "appeal from the synod to the Christian world," in 1763.

HARLOW, Lydla, widow, died in Minot, Me., Aug. 30, 1846, aged 103 years, 8 months. She was born in Plymouth, near Monument pond, the daughter of Isaac Harlow; she married Ebenezer Harlow.

HARMAR, Josian, brigadier-general, died in Aug., 1813. He in 1784 conveyed to France the ratification of the definitive treaty. In 1785 he was appointed colonel and commander of the forces on the northwestern frontier. In the war against the Indians be marched Sept. 30, 1790, from fort Washington, and had an army of 1453 men. His detachment had several engagements with Indians. In the last Col. Harding was defeated, near Chillicothe, with the loss of Maj. Fontaine, aid to the general, and Maj. Wyllys, and upwards of 180 men. The Indians lost 120 warriors and 300 wigwams burnt. After this defeat, called Harmar's defeat, he returned to fort Washington: St. Clair was in command the next year. He died on the Schuylkill, near Philadelphia.

HARMON, Johnson, colonel, a commander against the Indians in Maine, was a native of York, and served under Col. Westbrook in his expedition to the upper falls of the Androscoggin in Feb., 1723; and in Sept. was at Arousic, under Col. Walton. In Aug., 1724, he and Col. Moulton proceeded against the Indian village of Norridgewock, and killed father Itallé, and dispersed the Indians. He resided in his last days at Harpswell, where he died and where his descendants remain.

most distinguished and able supporter. He cheerfully exerted himself with Dr. Livingston in 1771, when he was minister of Raritan, to heal the division of the Dutch churches, and a union was completed in the following year. After the charter of Queen's college at New Brunswick was obtained in 1770, he was the first president, and

While a member of Princeton college, where he graduated in 1785, he was a teacher of one or two of the lower classes. He soon afterwards embarked for Charleston, S. C., where he arrived a stranger, with but a dollar or two in his pocket. A gentleman, of whose son he had been the teacher, offered him his assistance and friendship, and introduced him to a lawyer, with whom he studied the profession of the law. In a year he began the practice. He settled in the interior, and soon entered upon public life and was chosen a member of congress. In that body he became very distinguished. He was an earnest supporter of the measures of Washington, and was known as a decided federalist. After the accession of Mr. Jefferson in 1801, he retired from congress, and, having married the daughter of Charles Carroll, he entered upon the practice of the law at Baltimore. He was employed in the defence of Judge Chase, when he was impeached. It was by Maryland, that he was elected a member of the senate. In 1819 and 1820 he visited England, France, and Italy with his family. After his return he engaged with zeal in promoting the interests of the American colonization society. After being engaged on the preceding dayin a cause before the circuit court, he died suddenly. He had been subject to the augina pectoris: having breakfasted, he arose from the table and was standing with a newspaper in his hand, when he suddenly fell, and died before medical aid could be procured. It is worthy of remark, that he had just offered himself as a candidate for election to congress in the autumn of the next year; so uncertain and vain are the hopes of men in regard to the future. One of the reports of the colonization society contains an able and long discussion, which he wrote. He published also address on the British treaty, 1796; observations on the dispute between the United States and France, 1797; letter on the proceedings of congress; letters to his constituents, March, 1801; correspondence with Robert Walsh respecting Germany; address on the Russian victories, 1813; on the triumphs in Germany; select works, 1814. - Encuel, Americana,

HARPER, WILLIAM, died Oct. 10, 1847. It's was chancellor of South Carolina, appointed in

1835; an eminent jurist. HARRINGTON, TIMOTHY, minister of Lancaster, Mass., died Dec. 18, 1795, aged 80. He was born in Waltham; graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was settled in 1741, pastor of the church in the lower Ashuelot, now Swanzey, N. II., from which place he was driven by the savages in 1747. In the following year he was settled at Laneaster, where he continued till his death. Mr. Thayer was settled as his colleague in 1793. He was the poor he was very liberal. He relinquished to physician in the Revolutionary war; and died

Ashuelot the property which he received as the first minister of the town. As a minister he was faithful and useful. He published a century sermon, 1753; a discourse on the ill-boding symptoms of a stupid people, 1756.

HARRINGTON, THEOPHILES, a judge of the supreme court of Vt., died in Clarendon in 1813. HARRINGTON, Lewis, commodore, died at Washington Oct. 12, 1851, aged 69. At the blockade of the Tripoli he was in the President; in 1813 he commanded the Peacock, and, April 19, captured the Epervier. In the war he took nineteen vessels.

i:

B

1

h

cl

80

to

HARRIS, SAMUEL, a Baptist minister, called the apostle of Virginia, was born in Hanover county Jan. 12, 1724. Removing to Pittsylvania eo., he there sustained various offices, was colonel of the militia, captain of Mayo fort, and commissioner for the fort and army. He was baptized about 1758. He soon preached diligently, but was not ordained until 1769. His pious zeal met the usual return of persecution. He was once pulled down from his stand, as he was preaching, and dragged by the hair, and once knocked down. Having much property, he devoted the greater part to charitable purposes. In his power over the affections of his hearers he was thought to be equal to Whitefield. The Virginians say, he seemed to pour fourth streams of lightning from his eyes. His worldly offices he resigned, as he ascribed to them the diminution of his religious enjoyments. In 1774 the general association of separate Baptists, wishing to reestablish the primitive order, as mentioned Ephes, 4: 11., chose Mr. Harris apostle, and ordained him by the hands of every minister in that body. No other instance of such an extraordinary ap-pointment is recollected. The following anecdotes may illustrate his character. Meeting a pardoned criminal, who showed him his pardon received at the gallows, he asked, "Have you shown it to Jesus Christ?" "No, Mr. II., I want you to do it for me." Accordingly the old man dismounted and kneeled, and, with the pardon in one hand and the other on the offender's head, rendered thanks and prayed for God's pardon. He once requested a debtor to pay him in wheat, as he had a good eron; but the man replied that he did not intend to pay until he was sued. Unwilling to leave preaching to attend a vexatious suit, he wrote a receipt in full and presented it to the man, saying, he had sued him in the court of heaven; he should leave the affair with the head of church, with whom he might settle another day. The man soon loaded his wagon and sent the wheat. - Benedict, 11. 330-339.

HARRIS, TUCKER, M. D., a physician of Charleston, S. C., was born in that city in 1747; uncommonly mild, affable, and benevolent. To studied at Edinburgh; served his country as a l as the he was ury serg symp-

e of the in 1813. died at At the esident ; id, April

he took

er, called Hanover tsylvania s colonel commisbaptized ntly, but zeal met vas once reaching. knocked

oted the In his s he was e Virgincams of offices he iminution e general ng to reed Ephes. ordained hat body. nary apng aneclecting a s pardon Iave you I., I want old man nardon in er's head, pardon. in wheat, blied that ed. Unvexatious ited it to court of the head another and sent sician of in 1747; ntry as a and died

character and was known as a friend of religion. of Philadelphia. — Thacher's Med. Biog.

HARRIS, WILLIAM, D. D., president of Columbia college, died in 1829, aged about 43. He was born in Springfield, Mass. He was first a preacher in Marblehead. He published a sermon on the death of Mrs. Roads; a sermon at the Episcopal convention, 1799.

HARRIS, ANDREW, M. D., died at Canterbury, Conn., May 28, 1840, aged 52, a distinguished physician. Dying of the consumption, his last days were devoted to religion, to the study of truth, and the exercises of faith.

HARRIS, WALTER, D. D., minister of Dunbarton, N. H., died Dec. 25, 1843, aged 82. He was the son of Nathaniel of Lebanon, Conn., and served three years in the war before he was nineteen years old. His only brother fell in battle. He bought him a farm in Lebanon, N. H., intending to be a farmer; but, becoming religious in a revival there, he determined to be a minister. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1786; studied theology with Dr. Emmons; and was ordained at Dunbarton Aug. 26, 1789. He was an excellent preacher and pastor. He had three wives, one of whom, the mother of his children, was of the name of Fisher of Franklin, Mass., and the next was the widow of Rev. John Cleveland of Wrentham. He published sermons on the death of the wife of Rev. A. Burnham; of Samuel Burnham; of the third wife of Rev. A. Burnham, 1815; of Mrs. Morrill; a fast sermon, 1799; at thanksgiving, 1812; at the ordination of A. Burnham; of E. Corser; doctrine of decrees encouragement to the use of means, 1814; on false teachers; to a cent society; at Reading; on the Sabbath; to freemasons, 1823; before the pastoral convention, 1834. - Sprague's Annals.

HARRIS, John, judge of the supreme court of N. H., died at Hopkinton April 23, 1845, aged 74; a graduate of Harvard in 1791.

HARRIS, WILLIAM COFFIN, a teacher, was born in Portsmouth March 17, 1788, was graduated at Harvard in 1807, and died at Portsmouth Nov. 22, 1853, aged 65. At Portsmouth and at Newington he was a distinguished teacher between thirty and forty years. He fell down in a fit in his school-room, and lived but ten minutes.

HARRIS, THADDEUS M., D. D., died in Dorchester April 3, 1842, aged 72. He was a graduate of 1787, of Harvard, of which he was for years the librarian. When he was a junior in college, he needed some new clothing, and his mother, in her poverty, asked him to procure in some way a little money for the purpose. Going to meet her with a small sum, he gave it away to

July 6, 1821, aged 73. He sustained an excellent | nothing to put into his mother's hands, he thought something adhered to the end of his rough cane, He published some essays in the medical journal cut on the road; and lo! it was a gold ring, having engraved on it, "God speed thee, friend." This sold for the money wanted; the moral lesson was invaluable. The titles of his discourses, books, and various writings, contained in a manuscript in my hands, occupy eight folio pages. Some of them are the masonic constitution, 4to., 1792; the natural history of the Bible, I vol., 1793; minor encyclopedia, 4 vols. 1803; account of Dorchester, 1804; journal of a tour to the northwest, 8vo., 1805; volume of masonic discourses; beauties of nature delineated; hymns for the Lord's supper; discourse at Plymouth, 1808; to the memory of James Howdoin, 1811; memoir of father Rasles, in the historical collections; memorials of the first church in Dorchester, 1830; memorials of James Oglethorpe, 1841. His ordination at Dorchester was Oct. 23, 1793; and there he spent the remainder of his life. There have been in this country few so industrious scholars and such voluminous writers.

HARRIS, THADDEUS WILLIAM, M. D., librarian of Harvard college, died at Cambridge of dropsy of the chest Jan. 16, 1856, aged 60; the son of T. M. Harris of Dorchester. He graduated in 1815, and acquired reputation as a physician in Dorchester. In 1831 he was chosen librarian as the successor of Mr. Pierce, and remained in office till his death, an assiduous, faithful librarian. He was succeeded by Rev. John L. Sibley. He was highly skilled in natural history; as an entomologist he had no equal. By his writings he contributed to the dissemination of knowledge. His tract on insects injurious to vegetation was published by the legislature. He published a discourse to horticultural society, 1832. - Boston Advertiser, July 16, 1856.

HARRIS, WILLIAM THADDEUS, LL. D., died Oct. 19, 1854, aged 28. The son of Dr. T. W. Harris, he graduated in 1846. An early ancestor was Thomas of Boston, who died 1680; next Benjamin, Capt. William, a teacher in Boston and officer of the Revolution, the father of Rev. Dr. T. M. Harris of Dorchester, who was the grandfather of the subject of this article. He published Cambridge epitaphs, 1845.

HARRISON, ROBERT HANSON, a patriot of the Revolution, sustained the office of chief justice of the general court of Maryland. He declined in 1789 the appointment of judge of the supreme court of the United States, and died at his residence on the Potomac, in Charles county, April 2, 1790, aged 45. His talents were distinguished, and he enjoyed in a high degree the confidence of his fellow citizens.

HARRISON, BENJAMIN, governor of Virginia, a crippled, hungry soldier, who asked his aid. died in April, 1791. He was a patriot of the As he went on, in great distress from having Revolution. His father and grandfather, having the name of Benjamin, lived at Berkeley, on the banks of James river, in view of the seaports of Petersburg and Richmond. His father, who married the daughter of Mr. Carter, surveyor-general, was killed with two of his daughters by lightning. About 1761 he became a member of the legislature, and in 1771 a member of congress, in which body for several years he rendered important services. On signing the Declaration of Independence, being quite corpulent, he said to Mr. Gerry, who was slender and thin, after putting his name to the instrument, "When the time of hanging shall come, I shall have the advantage of your it will be over with me in a minute, but you will be kicking in the air half an hour after I am gone." In 1777 he resigned his sent in congress. From 1782 to 1781 he was the popular governor of Virginia, and was succeeded by Henry. He was afterwards a member of the convention for adopting the constitution of the United States. He died of the gout. His health had been impaired by his free manner of living. His wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Col. William Bassett. His third son was Gen. William Henry Harrison. - Goodrich's Lives.

HARRISON, BENJAMIN, a tall man, was a native of Virginia, and died in Georgia in April, 1818, aged 44. He was, by accurate measurement, seven feet, two inches and a half in height.

HARRISON, RICHARD, an eminent lawyer, died at New York Dec. 6, 1829, aged 81.

HARRISON, RICHARD, auditor and treasurer of the United States, died at Washington July 10, 1841, aged 91. He was five years consul at Cadiz; auditor fifty-live years, appointed by Washington. He was highly esteemed as a man of abilities and integrity.

HARRISON, WILLIAM HENRY, president of the United States, died April 4, 1841, aged 68. He was born in Charles City Co., Va., Feb. 9, 1773, being the son of Benjamin II., governor of Virginia. He was educated at Hampden Sydney college. He received from Washington a mili-tary commission in 1791. He fought under Wayne. After the battle of Miami Rapids he was made captain, and placed in command of fort Washington. In 1797 he was appointed secretary of the Northwest Territory. In 1799 he was a delegate to congress. Being appointed governor of Indiana, he was also superintendent of Indian affairs, and negotiated thirteen treaties, He gained a great victory in the battle of Tippecanoe, Nov. 7, 1811. In the war with Great Britain he was commander of the northwest army, and was distinguished in the defence of fort Meigs and the victory of the Thames. In 1816 he was in congress, and in 1828 minister to the republic of Colombia. On his return he resided at North Bend, in Ohio, upon his farm. He was ducted into his office March 4, 1841, he died in one month. Among the last utterances of his lips he expressed a desire for the perpetuity of the constitution and the preservation of its principles. For many months he never omitted reading the Scriptures every night before retiring to rest. On the third day of his illness he spoke of his long persuasion of the Christian truth, and his regret that he was not a member and a communicant in a church.

HARRISON, ROGER, minister of Tolland, Mass., died in 1853, aged 84. Horn in Branford, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1792; was ordained in 1798, and dismissed in 1822. He had great skill and power in music with his voice. -

Sprague's Annals.

HART, WILLIAM, minister of Saybrook, Conn., died July 11, 1781, aged 71, in the forty-eighth year of his ministry. He was the son of Rev. John H., of East Guilford, and was graduated at Yale college in 1732 and ordnined Nov. 17, 1736. Mr. Hotchkiss was his colleague. He first gave the name of Hopkintonian to certain doctrines which he opposed. Dr. Hotkins replied to his dialogue. He published nature of regeneration, 1742; with Jonathan Todd, narrative of proceedings at Wallingford, in regard to the settlement of J. Dana, 1759; remarks on dangerous errors, against the Hopkinsians, 1770; a dialogue, and a sermon, which was never preached and never will be, against the same; remarks on Edwards' dissertation on the nature of virtue, 1771, which was answered by Dr. Hopkins; a treatise of qualifications for the sacraments, 1772. - Devotion's Funeral Sermon; Sprague's Annals.

d

d

a

c

tl

e

'n

c

b

gi

aı

R

11 gr of hi

ily

oe

118

J

he

pr

th

11

110

wa

wa

th

HART, John, first minister of East Guilford, now Madison, Conn., died March 4, 1732, aged 48, in the twenty-fifth year of his ministry, Born in Farmington, he graduated at Yale in 1703; he made the whole second class, as N. Chauncey did the first. The college was then at Killingworth. He was ordained in 1707. In 1722 he was associated for a time with Cutler and others, who doubted the validity of Presbyterian ordination. In his last years he had distressing bothly infirmities. His wives, by all of whom he had children, were Rebekah Hubbard of Boston, Sarah Bull of Hartford, and Mary Hooker of Farmington. He was an eminent preacher and a humble Christian. - Sprague's Annals.

HART, OLIVER, minister of Charleston, S. C., died Dec. 31, 1795, aged 72. He was born at Warminster, Bucks county, Penn., July 5, 1723. At the age of eighteen he was impressed with the importance of religion, and was baptized. He was ordained at Southampton Oct. 18, 1749, and in the same year went to Charleston, where he succeeded Mr. Chanler, and was minister of the elected president by 234 votes out of 294. In- Baptist church in that city for thirty years. In died in s of his tuity of its prinomitted retiring he spoke uth, and d a com-

Tolland. Branford. wns or-He had voice. - ok, Conn., tv-eighth of Rev. graduated Nov. 17, rne. He to certain pkins renature of ld, narraregard to narks on ms, 1770; as never he same; he nature Dr. Hophe sacra-Sermon ;

Guilford, 732, aged ministry. Yale in iss, as N. s then at Cutler and esbyterian listressing whom he of Boston. looker of ncher and ls.

ton, S. C., s born at y 5, 1723. d with the ized. He 1749, and where he ter of the ears. In such estimation was his character for patriotism and talents held by the council of safety of Carolina, that at the beginning of the Revolution he was appointed by them, with William Tennent, to visit the frontiers, in order to reconcile some of the disaffected inhabitants to the change which occurred in public affairs. In Feb., 1780, the warm interest which he took in promoting the American Revolution, induced him to leave Charleston, lest he should fall into the hands of the British, who were about to besiege the city. In Dec. following he was settled at Hopewell in New Jersey, where he remained till his death.

Mr. Hart possessed strong powers of mind. His imagination was lively and his judgment sound. Though not favored with a liberal cducation, by diligent study and habitual reflection he became very respectable for his knowledge of Christian truth. He was a uniform advocate of the doetrines of free and sovereign grace. As a preacher his manner was pleasing and his delivery animated. As a citizen he was a firm and decided patriot. He possessed a liberal spirit, and exhibited the beneficence which he recommended. In his last moments he enjoyed the consolations of the gospel, resting his hopes upon the righteousness of Christ. He published several sermons and tracts, namely: dancing exploded; a discourse on the death of William Tennent; the Christian temple; a circular letter on Christ's mediatorial character; America's remembrancer; a gospel church portrayed, and a thanksgiving sermon, 1789. He had a turn for poetry, and wrote much, though none of his productions were published. Many of his papers and of his hest books were destroyed by the British army.-Rogers' and Furman's Discourses on his death.

HART, John, a patriot of the Revolution, died in 1780. He was the son of Edward Hart, of Hopewell, N. J. He was a member of the congress of 1774, and in 1776 signed the Declaration of Independence. In the latter part of this year his form was pillaged by the enemy and his family dispersed. The alarm and distress of these occurrences caused the death of his wife, whose name was Scudder. After the evacuation of New Jersey he again collected his family; but his health was now failing him. He in his religious profession was a Baptist, and sustained an excellent character. Great confidence was reposed in the wisdom and judgment of "honest John Hart." - Goodrich's Lives.

HART, LEVI, D. D., minister of Preston, Conn., now Griswold, died Oct. 27, 1808, aged 69. He was the son of Thomas II., of Southington, and was graduated at Yale college in 1760. While a member of college he made a public profession of that religion which regulated his whole life. Having pursued the study of divinity for some time nals. with Dr. Bellamy, whose daughter, Rebecca, he afterwards married, he was settled Nov. 4, 1762, as the minister of the second church in Preston. Here he continued to perform the various duties of the sacred office until a short time before his death. Receiving as the gift of God a sound and vigorous mind, it was much improved by his scientific and literary acquisitions. Many young men were trained up by him for the ministry. As he united a keen discernment of character to a social and communicative turn of mind, and was always governed by the desire of promoting the interests of religion, he was very useful in his private intercourse with his people, as well as in his public labors. He sought out the abodes of affliction, of poverty, and of distress; and, while he soothed the poor by his conversation, he was enabled, also, by an exact economy, to contribute something from a small salary for the relief of their wants. His disposition was placid; his manners amiable and unassuming; and in the various relations of life he was faithful and affectionate. He engaged in the support of missionary institutions, and the progress of the gospel was the theme of his correspondence with a number of respectable friends of religion in Europe. He prenched and published a funeral sermon for Dr. Hopkins, in 1803. He published also a sermon at ordination of J. Benedict, 1771; of J. Smith, 1772; of A. Holmes, 1785; of W. Patten, 1786; of A. Chase, 1787; of J. Wilder, 1790; a sermon on liberty, 1774; on the death of Mrs. Woodbridge, 1775; of J. Huntington, 1780; of N. Eells, 1786; of his wife, 1789; of Mrs. King, 1791; of Washington, 1799; of Dr. Hopkins, 1803; at election, 1786. - Panoplist and Missionary Magazine, 1. 287; Sprague's

HART, IRA, minister of Stonington, Conn., died in 1829. He graduated at Yale in 1792.

HART, THOMAS, colonel, died in Kentucky. His widow, Susannah, died at Lexington in 1832, aged 86; she was the mother of Mrs. Henry Clay, Mrs. Dr. Prindle, Mrs. James Brown, and of Capt. Hart, who fell on the river Raisin.

HART, LUTHER, minister of Plymouth, Conn., died April 25, 1834, aged 50. Born in Goshen, the son of David, he became early pious in a revival in the region where he lived, in 1799. He graduated with honor at Yale in 1807, and was ordained in 1810. More than four hundred were added to his church during his ministry, especially in 1812, 1824, 1827, and 1831. He was a principal writer for the Christian Spectator. He wrote an able tract on Presbyterian ordination. He published, also, a Christmas sermon, salvation for lost men, 1818; at installation of D. O. Griswold; on the death of A. Gillet, with a memoir, 1826; a memoir of A. Pettingill, 1834. - Sprague's An-

HART, JOHN, Dr., died at South Reading

April 27, 1836, aged 84. Born in Ipswich in 1752, the son of John, a lawyer and noted musician, he joined Prescott's regiment in the beginning of the war, and afterwards, till its close, was surgeon of the 2d Massachusetts regiment. He settled at Reading in 1782. He was five years in the senate, and was a venerable patriot and a Christian. When chosen to a public office, instead of making a treat, as was customary, he gave the money to buy books for schools.

HART, LUTHER W., Dr., died in Marshall, Mich., Sept. 10, 1842, aged 64. A native of Berlin, and a graduate of Williams college, he was thirty years a physician in Durham, N. Y.; then, as a pioncer, he removed to Marshall. He was a scholar and a patron of education; a supporter of the institutions of the gospel; a man of virtue and worth.

HART, RUTH, widow of Gen. Sclah II., died in Kensington, Conn., Jan. 15, 1844, aged 101; a woman of great excellence. She gave to her own Congregational church 1000 dollars, and 500 dollars to Yale college for a scholarship for pious students.

HART, Joseph C., died in Santa Cruz July 23, 1855, American consul at S. C.; author of Marian Coffin, and other works.

HARTWELL, BENJAMIN, Dr., died April 17, 1844, aged 85, in Shirley; the first physician settled in the town, and the only one for thirty-five years. He was a Revolutionary pensioner.

HARVARD, JOHN, the founder of Harvard college, died in Charlestown Sept. 14, 1638, aged about 30. He graduated at Emanuel college in Cambridge, England, in 1631, and was received into the church at Charlestown in 1637. He had been a minister in England, and he preached a short time in Charlestown. He left a legacy of 779 pounds to the school at Newton, or Cambridge. The next year the general court constituted it a college. The first president was Mr. Dunster. Precisely one hundred and ninety years after his death a granite monument was erected to his memory, Sept. 26, 1828, on the top of the burying-hill in Charlestown. On this occasion Edward Everett delivered an address to a large company, including the officers and students of the college. The expense was provided for by the payment of one dollar each by many graduates. The monument is a solid obelisk, fifteen feet high, four feet square at the bottom, two at the top, weighing twelve or thirteen tons, brought from the quarry at Quincy. On the eastern face is the name of Harvard in high relief; beneath it is an inscription in English on a white marble tablet, and on the tablet of the west side, looking toward the college, an inscription in Latin. -Magnalia, IV. 126; Everett's Address; Hist. Coll. I. 242; Neal, I. 199; Holmes, I. 247; Hutchinson, I. 90.

IIARVEY, BENJAMIN, died at Frankfort, Herkimer Co., N. Y., March 18, 1847, aged 112 years. He was seventy years a Baptist minister; and he preached only a short time before his death. His voice was strong, and his manner animated.

HASEY, Isaac, first minister of Lebanon, Me., died in 1812, aged about 70. He graduated at Harvard in 1762, and was settled in 1765.

HASKELL, JONATHAN, major, died at Belpre in Dec., 1814, aged 39. He was born in Rochester, Mass., was an officer in the army, and emigrated to Ohio in 1788. — Hiddreth.

HASKELL, SAMUEL, died at New Rochelle Aug. 24, 1845, aged about 75. He graduated at Yale in 1790, and was the oldest Episcopal minister in the State of New York, having preached his first sermon in Trinity church, New York, fifty years before his death. He was a soldier in the battle of Bunker Hill.

HASKELL, DANIEL, president of Burlington college, Vt., died at Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 9, 1848, aged 64. Born in Preston, Conn., he was a graduate of Yale in 1802, then a teacher at Norwich. He had a good pupil in Mrs. Sigourney. He was pastor at Middletown and Litchfield, Conn., and at St. Albans and Burlington, Vt. He was then from 1821 to 1824 the president of the Vermont university; but during the last ten or fifteen years of his life he resided in Brooklyn, N. Y. Dr. Cox, his minister, describes him as a man of theological erudition, of high attainments in science and literature, of deep reverence toward God, and of great strength and soundness of mind, with one exception, that he was subject to a strange monomania. He imagined that he had died in some other world, in which he proved a rebel against God, and for his rebellion he was placed in his present abode and was no longer a probationer for eternity. Hence he would never pray. On all other subjects he was sane, learned, and instructive. What cause of thankfulness we have to God for preserving our faculties unimpaired? He edited McCulloch's geographical dictionary. He published a sermon at the ordination of II. S. Jehnson, 1814; of R. A. Avery, 1824; a gazetteer of the United States, with J. C. Smith, 1843; a chronology of the world, 1845. — Spragne's Annals. HASSELTINE, JOHN, deacon, died at West Bradford in June, 1837, aged 80, — the father of Mrs. Judson.

IIASSLER, FERDINAND R., director of the United States coast-survey, died in Philadelphia Nov. 20, 1843, aged 74. A native of Geneva, he came to this country about 1810, introduced by Mr. Gallatin, and was superintendent as early as 1816. His high attainments as a mathematician and man of science, and his faithfulness were universally acknowledged. His survey of the t, Hered 112 inister; ore his

m, Me., ated at

Belpre Rochesid emi-

tochelle
ated at al minreached
w York,
oldier in

rlington Aug. 9, , he was icher at Sigourl Litchgton, Vt. resident the last sided in lescribes of high lcep revgth and that he le imag-

world, in I for his ode and Hence jeets he let cause eserving McCulolished a n, 1814; e United ology of at West of the adelphia neva, he uced by early as matician ess were

of the coast commenced in 1832. He was succeeded scenes of affliction and sorrow he was a son of by Professor Bache. His mathematical and astronomical writings are valuable, especially his papers in the American philosophical transactions, relating to the coast survey.

Seenes of affliction and sorrow he was a son of by Professor Bache. On funeral occasions, for variety consolation. On funeral occasions, for variety consolation and sorrow he was a son of by Professor Bache. His mathematical and as reconsolation and sorrow he was a son of by Professor Bache. His mathematical and as sorrow he was a son of by Professor Bache. His mathematical and as sorrow he was a son of some survey.

HASTINGS, George, died at Chatanooga, in Tennessee, whither he had gone on account of his health, Sept. 2, 1854. He was late pastor of the American Protestant chapel in the city of Rome, Italy. When past speaking he wrote with a pencil,—"The peace of this last hour of suffering is worth a life of great privation in the gospel ministry." He opened his eyes in assent, as they read this to him, and then closed them in death.

HATCH, ELISHA, died in Bristol, Me., in 1843, aged 100.

HATCH, NYMPHAS, died at Leominster in Aug., 1850, aged 79. He graduated at Harvard in 1797, and was a minister at Tisbury, Martha's Vineyard, from 1801 to 1820.

HATCHCOCK, Thomas, died in Richmond Co., N. C., April 13, 1818, aged 125. He left sons, aged 93, 87, and 16.

HATHORN, WILLIAM, died at Salem after 1651, described by Johnson as "a godly captain of rhetorical volubility of speech, much used in public service."

HAVEN, ELIAS, minister in Wrentham, Mass., died in 1754, aged 40. He graduated at Harvard in 1733, and was ordained in 1738.

HAVEN, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Portsmouth, N. II., died March 3, 1806, aged 78. He was born in Framingham, Mass., Aug. 16, 1727, the son of Joseph, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1749. During a revival of religion his mind was impressed by the truths of God, and he was a great admirer of the preachers, whose labors appeared to be blessed by the Holy Spirit. He was ordained May 6, 1752. His first wife was the daughter of Dr. Appleton, of Cambridge. His second wife, who closed his eyes, died herself in a few hours afterwards. They were both buried at the same time, and twelve children followed them to the grave. Dr. Haven possessed respectable talents, and was acquainted with various departments of science. His mind was rather sprightly, than inclined to obstruse researches and deep investigation. Having paid considerable attention to the study of physic, his usefulness was thus increased among his people. In his theological sentiments he was moderately Calvinistic, though in the latter part of his life he possessed a spirit of eatholicism and charity so excessive, as led him privately to speculate with Dr. Chauncy on the sentiment of universal restitution. But he never proclaimed this sentiment from the pulpit, and he declared that he never meant to risk his salvation on that ground. He excelled in the tender and sympathetic.

scenes of affliction and sorrow he was a son of consolation. On funeral occasions, for variety, eopiousness, tenderness, and pertinency of address he was rarely equalled; and he was often instrumental in awakening the careless and convincing the unconvinced. By his first marriage to Mehetabel Appleton he had eleven children; by his second he had six children. His sons, Samuel, Nathaniel Appleton, and Charles Chauncy, graduated at Harvard in 1772, 1779, and 1804.

He published the following sermons: at the request of ministers of N. II., 1760; on the death of George II. and the accession of George III., 1761; on the conclusion of the war and the declaration of peace, 1763; at the ordination of Jeremy Belknap, 1767; on the death of Henry Sherburne, 1767; of B. Stevens, 1791; the everliving redeemer, 1768; at Cambridge, 1771; at Medfield, 1771; at the election, 1786; on the reasonableness and importance of practical religion, 1794; the Dudleian lecture, 1798; after the ordination of T. Alden as his colleague, 1800. — Buckminster's sermon on his death; Sprague's Annals.

HAVEN, JASON, minister of Dedham, Mass., died May 17, 1803, aged 70. He was born at Framingham March 13, 1733, the son of Moses, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1754. He was ordained pastor of the first church in Dedham Feb. 5, 1756. In his old age, his impaired health rendering a colleague necessary, Joshua Bates was ordained March 16, 1803. He was furnished with talents for the acceptable discharge of the various duties of the sacred office. His discourses were very evangelical; he was eminent in prayer; and his appearance and manners uniformly accorded with his station. Besides several smaller works, he published the following sermons: on the thanksgiving, 1758; at the artillery election, 1761; at a private meeting, 1761; at the ordination of Edward Brooks, 1764; of E. Ward, 1771; of M. Everett, 1774; of S. Palmer, 1792; election sermon, 1769; on the death of Hannah Richards, 1770; of Samuel Dunbar, 1783; a sermon to his own people forty years after his ordination, Feb. 7, 1796. - Prentiss' Sermon on his death; Sprague's Annals.

IIAVEN, NATHANIEL APPLETON, editor of the aid Portsmouth Journal, died of the scarlet fever by June 3, 1826, aged 36. He was the grandson of lely like and the scarlet fever with the second of Portsmouth, was the son of Nathaniel A. H., who was a member of congress in 1809, and died March, 1831, aged 69. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1807, and setting the second second portsmouth. His wife, the daughter of John Haven, survived with five children. He wrote some pieces of poetry, and many valuable articles for the Journal, which he edited from 1821 to 1825. He wrote also for the N. A. In Review. He was a member of one of the intended a Sabbath school. His remains, with a memoir by Geo. Ticknor, were published, 1827. -N. H. Hist, Coll. II. 229-235.

420

HAVEN, SAMUEL, died in Roxbury Sept. 1, 1847, aged 76. He graduated at Harvard in 1789, and was a judge of the county court, and register of probate.

HAVEN JOSEPH, died in Amherst, Mass., Oct. 15, 1851, aged 65. Born in Holden, he graduated at Harvard in 1810, and was minister of Dennis from 1814 till 1826, when from ill health he was dismissed. He became the minister of Billerica in 1836, but in five or six years was constrained by the state of his health to terminate his labors as a pastor. He was the father of Prof. Haven, of Amherst.

HAVILAND, JOHN, a distinguished architect. died in Philadelphia March 28, 1852, aged 60. The tombs by him constructed were praised for their execution.

HAWES, AYLETT, Dr., died in Culpepper county, Va., April, 1834. He liberated one hundred and ten slaves, and removed them to

HAWKINS, John, an Indian chief, sagamore of Pennacook, had the name of Kancamagus, but the English called him Hawkins, Hakins, or Hogkins. He killed Maj. Waldron and his family. By Church his wife was taken prisoner in 1690. The following letter to the governor of New Hampshire, May 15, 1685, is a specimen of his English learning: "Honor governor, my friend, - You my friend I desire your worship and your power, because I hope you can do som great matters this one. I am poor and naked and I have no men at my place because I afraid allwayes Mohogs he will kill me every day and night. If your worship when please pray help me you no let Mohogs kill me at my place at Malamake river called Paunkkog, and Nuttukkog, I will submit your worship and your power. And now I want pouder and such alminishon, shatt and guns, because I have forth at my hom and I plant theare. This all Indian hand, but pray you do consider your humble servant JOHN HOG-KINS." In another letter he said: "If my Indian he do you long pray you no put your law because som my Indians fooll, som men much love drunk then he no know what he do, may be he do mischief when he drunk if so pray you must let me know what be done because I will ponis him what he have done." He called himself "Indian sogmon." - Farmer's Belknap, I. 508.

HAWKINS, BENJAMIN, colonel, long a useful agent for Indian affairs, died at the Creek agency in May, 1816. On the settlement of his accounts by his brother, there was found a balance due churches in Portsmouth, and for six years super- | narrative of the Creeks was published among the public documents in Dec., 1801.

HAWKS, John, an officer in the Indian wars. commanded fort Massachusetts in Hoosac, when it was captured in 1716. After his return from captivity he was sent with a flag to Canada, to procure the release of Samuel Allen of Deerfield. of Nathan Blake of Keene, and of others. He set out in Feb., 1748. It was with reluctance, that Allen, who had resided among the Indians only eighteen months, left them; nor did his Indian attachments cease in eld age. He rose to the rank of lieut.-colonel, in the war of 1756.

HAWLEY, THOMAS, minister of Ridgefield. Conn., died Nov. 8, 1738, aged about 50. He was born in Northampton, Mass.; graduated at Harvard in 1709; was ordained in 1713, and was also town clerk from 1714 till his death. His daughter married Rev. N. Birdseye, who lived

103 years.

HAWLEY, JOSEPH, distinguished as a statesman and patriot, died March 10, 1788, aged 64. He was born in Northampton, Mass., and was graduated at Yale college in 1742. He engaged in the practice of the law in his native town. In this science he became a great proficient, and was one of the most distinguished counsellors in the province. Among his other studies he attained to such an eminence of knowledge in political history and the principles of free government, that during the disputes between Great Britain and the colonies, he was regarded as one of the ablest advocates of American liberty. His integrity both in public and in private life was inflexible, and was not even questioned by his political opponents. He was repeatedly elected a member of the council, but refused in every instance to accept the office, as he preferred a seat in the house of representatives, where his character for disinterested patriotism, and his bold and manly eloquence gave him an ascendancy which has seldom been equalled. He was first elected a memof the legislature 1764. In the latter part of 1776, Maj. Hawley was afflicted with hypochondriacal disorders, to which he had been frequently subject in former periods of his life; and after this he declined public business. A letter, which he wrote in 1760, preserved in the life of Edwards, does him the highest honor, for it proves him not incapable of humbling himself for his failings. He had been active in effecting the removal of Mr. Edwards from Northampton, and he deplores the part which he took in that affair.

HAWLEY, GIDEON, many years a missionary to the Indians, died Oct. 3, 1807, aged 80. He was born at Stratfield, now Bridgeport, Conn., and was graduated at Yale college in 1749. He commenced his missionary labors in Feb., 1752, from the government of 200,000 dollars. His at Stockbridge. In this year he preached at nong the an wars. ac, when urn from anada, to Deerfield. . He set , that Almly eighın attach-idgefield, 50. He luated at , and was ath. Ilis who lived a states-

e rank of

aged 64. and was engaged own. In t, and was ors in the e attained litical hisnent, that ritain and the ablest integrity inflexible. litical opmember istance to at in the racter for and manly h has seled a memr part of hypochonfrequently and after ter, which

fe of Edit proves

lf for his

ng the re-

pton, and

hat affair.

nissionary

80. He

rt, Conn.,

749. He eb., 1752.

eached at

Pittsfield the first sermon ever preached there, extensive correspondence was the source of much in the bark-covered house of Mr. Willard. In satisfaction to him. As a missionary he was September he made an excursion to Schoharie, in the country of the Mohawk Indians, and after his return to Stockbridge, he opened his school again at the beginning of winter under the patronage of Mr. Edwards. Here he was the instructor of the children of a number of Mohawk. Oneida, and Tusearora families, and preached to them on the Sabbath. It being determined by the commissioners for Indian affairs in Boston, to establish a mission in the country of the Iroquois, or Indians of the Six Nations, he engaged in the plan. In May, 1753, he commenced his journey towards the wilderness, accompanied by Timothy Woodbridge, a gentleman of abilities, and of great influence among the Indians. Having visited Sir William Johnson at his seat upon the Mohawk river, and secured his patronage, they proceeded toward the head of the Susquehannah, ndoring every night and morning that kind Providence, which attended and preserved them in the recesses of the forest. On the fourth of June they reached the place of their destination, Onolioghgwage, or, as it is sometimes called, Oughquauga, upon the Susquehannah river. Here an interview was held with the Indians, who gave them a good reception. July 31, 1754, Mr. Hawley was ordained at Boston, that his usefulness might be increased by being authorized to administer the ordinances of the gospel. He soon returned to Onohoghgwage, and was there till May, 1756, when the French war obliged him to withdraw from that country. He went to Boston in June, and, entering as chaplain in the regiment of Col. Gridley, he soon joined the army above Albany, which was destined against Crown Point. After the campaign he made an attempt to return to the place of his mission, but was deterred by the dangers of the enterprise. A church was established here by Dr. Forbes in 1762. In December, Mr. Hawley went to Stockbridge, where he spent the winter. In 1757 the commissioners of the society for propagating the gospel persuaded him to visit the tribe of Indians at Marshpee, whose pastor, Mr. Briant, had been dismissed, and who were dissatisfied with the labors of Mr. Smith. Here he was installed April 10, 1758, and passed the remainder of his life, being occupied in this place more than half a century in benevolent exertions to enlighten the darkened mind, and to promote the salvation of his Indian brethren. In his last sickness he obtrue, my labors have been many; but they have and John Woodbridge. been so very imperfect, attended with so great a peculiarly well qualified, for there was a dignity in his manner and an authority in his voice which had great influence with the Indians. He published in the collections of the historical society biographical and topographical anecdotes respecting Sandwich and Marshpee, and an interesting letter, giving a narrative of his journey to Onohoghgwage. - Panoplist, III. 431; Hist. Coll. III. 188-193; IV. 50-67; Sprajues An-

HAWLEY, JAMES, son of Rev. Gideon II., minister of Pembroke, Mass., died in early life, Oct. 8, 1800, aged 27. He was graduated at Harvard in 1792; was a tutor there in 1797-98, and ordained in May, 1798. President Dwight was at his father's house when the son was there on his dying bed. - Dwight's Travels, vol. II.; Spraque's Annals.

HAWLEY, STEPHEN, first min ster of Bethany, in Woodbury, Conn., died in 1804, aged about 65. He graduated at Yale in 1759, and was settled in

HAWLEY, RUFUS, Rev., died at Farmington, Conn., in Jan., 1826, aged 85. He graduated at Yale in 1767.

HAWLEY, WILLIAM AGUR, minister of Plainfield, Mass., died May 20, 1854, aged 66. He was born in Huntington, Conu., and graduated at Williams college in 1815. He studied theology with Dr. Catlin, and was ordained at Hinsdale in July, 1817. Dismissed in 1841, he was in tho same year installed at Plainfield, and dismissed in 1847. He died in peace at the house of his son-in-law, Brainerd Smith, in Sunderland. He was a faithful and useful and successful preacher and pastor.

HAY, GEORGE, judge of the United States court for the eastern district of Virginia, was for many years attorney of the United States, in which capacity he was the prosecutor of Aaron Burr. As a Virginia legislator he was distinguished. On his return from the Springs, whither he was induced to repair by ill health, he died in Albemarle county Sept. 18, 1830. His wife was the daughter of President Monroe. His political writings, signed "Hortensius," gave him some celebrity. He wrote also a treatise against the usury laws; the life of John Thompson; and a treatise on emigration, 1814, of which a review was ascribed to J. Lowell.

HAYES, JOEL, minister of South Hadley, served: "I have hope of acceptance with God, Mass., died July 29, 1827, uged 74, having been but it is founded wholly on free and sovereign pastor forty-five years. He graduated at Yale in grace, and not at all on my own works. It is 1773. His predecessors were Grindall Rawson

HAYES, WILLIAM A., judge, died of a disease want of charity and humility, that I have no hope of the heart in South Berwick, Me., April 15, in them as the ground of my acceptance." An 1851, aged 67. Born in North Yarmouth, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1805, and for a year | Col. Hayne was not a spy, who might be forthwith taught Moor's school. For forty years he practised law in Berwick. He was judge of probate.

HAYNE, ISAAC, a patriot of the Revolution, died Aug. 4, 1781. He was a native of South Carolina. In the beginning of the war he lived on his plantation, with an ample fortune; yet he served as a captain of artillery, being also a senator in the legislature. Disgusted with the promotion of a younger officer over him, he resigned his commission and served as a private soldier at the siege of Charleston. At its capitulation May 12, 1780 he was taken prisoner, but was allowed to retu hene on parole, under an engagement not to ocar arms. In 1781 he was required by the British commander to bear arms or to return to Charleston; he refused to do either, but at length was induced to repair to the city on the assurance of being allowed to return when he should engage to demean himself as a British subject so long as a British army occupied the country. At Charleston he was threatened with close confinement, unless he subscribed a declaration of his allegiance to the British ang, with an engagement to bear arms in support of the royal government. He subscribed the declaration, but expressly objected to the clause requiring him to bear arms, and was assured that this would not be required. Thus he was able to return to his family, sick with the small pox. One of his children was dead, and his wife soon expired. After a time he was summoned to repair to the British standard, in disregard of the assurance he had received. Deeming himself, in consequence, absolved from his engagement, he joined the American army in command of a regiment, and in July, 1781, sent out a detachment, which captured Gen. Williamson. For his recovery the whole British cavalry was ordered out, and Col. Havne fell into their hands. He was thrown into prison in Charleston, and soon ordered by Lord Rawdon and Col. Balfour to be hanged for taking arms against the British government, after he had become a subject. The sentence, notwithstanding various petitions and the entreaties of his children on their knees, was executed. On the morning of his execution he delivered to his son of thirteen years some papers to be sent to congress, and added, "Go, then, to the place of my execution, and receive my body." Thus fell, in the bloom of life, a brave officer and good citizen. Gen. Greene issued a proclamation Aug. 26th, saying he should make reprisals. Rawdon's pamphlet in justification of his conduct was examined in the first number of the Southern Review. The minute history of this affair, given by Lee, particularly the letter of Col. Hayne to Lord Rawdon and Col. Balfour, cannot fail to awaken strong feelings of indignation at the conduct of those officers who ordered his execution. John, lived also in Hartford, and his daughter executed. He was either a prisoner of war or a British subject. If a prisoner of war, he could not be executed for his lawful conduct in the exereise of arms; if a British subject, he had a right to a formal trial. The court of inquiry was not a court of trial. Besides, as he returned to his home in the character of a British subject, when the country west of the Edisto, in which he lived, fell under the protection of the American arms, he could no longer be considered as a British subject. The effect of his execution was to sharpen by pity and revenge the swords of the Americans. -- Lee's Memoirs, II. 252-274; Ramsay, I. 453-460; Remembrancer for 1782, p. 121.

HAYNE, ROBERT Y., major-general, died Sept. 24, 1839, aged 47. He was born near Charleston, S. C., Nov. 10, 1791. His early advantages were limited to a school education. He studied law with Langdon Cheves, and soon took a high rank as a lawyer. In 1814 he was in the legislature; in 1818 he was speaker; and he was a senator of the United States from 1822 to 1832. In the "Union and State rights convention," as chairman of the committee in 1832 he reported the ordinance of nullification. He was governor from 1832 to 1834, and in 1837 was chosen president of the Charleston, etc., railroad company. He died at Asheville, N. C. He was clear in judgment, fluent in speech, and endowed with a persuasive eloquence. Few men enjoyed a higher degree of public confidence; and he was of spotless integrity in private life. His debate with Mr. Webster in the senate in 1836 gave impression of his talents.

HAYNES, JOHN, governor of Massachusetts and of Connecticut, died March 1, 1654. He was a native of Essex, in England, and arrived at Boston in company with Mr. Hooker in 1633. He was soon chosen an assistant, and in 1635 governor. The next year he was succeeded by Mr. Vane. In 1636 he removed to Connecticut, of which colony he was one of the principal founders. He was elected its first governor in April, 1639, and was replaced in this office every second year, which was as often as the constitution would permit, till his death. He was distinguished for his abilities, prudence, piety, and public spirit, being considered as in no respect inferior to Governor Winthrop. His estate and talents were devoted to the interests of the colony of Connecticut. He paid strict attention to family worship, and the religious instruction of his children. His son, Joseph Haynes, was the minister of the first church in Hartford; but the name is not new borne up by his des adants. Joseph's daughter, Sarah, married Rev. Mr. Pierpont, of New Haven, and died young, leaving a daughter, Abigail, who married Rev. Joseph Noyes. The governor's son, forthwith war or a he could n the exe had a quiry was urned to subject, which he American as a Britn was to ls of the 4; Ram-32, p. 121. ral, died orn near early adtion. He soon took as in the reported governor osen prescompany. ı elear in ed with a da higher nd he was

2 to 1832.

ntion," as

s of spotbate with e impressachusetts He was rrived at in 1633. 1635 govd by Mr. eticut, of founders. pril, 1639. and year, ould perd for his rit, being Governor devoted cut. He and the His son, the first not new laughter,

w Haven,

gail, who

nor's son,

daughter

Mary married, 1. E. Lord; 2. Capt. Roswell Sul- on original sin, and had prepared for the press a tonstall; 3. President Clap. Her daughter, Mary Saltonstall, married Col. Whiting, of New Haven, in 1769, or before. Gov. Haynes' daughter Ruth married Samuel Wyllis, of Hartford, and Mabel married James Russell, of Charlestown, Mass .-Trumbull's Connecticut, 1. 34, 223, 224; Magnalia, II. 17; Hutchinson, I. 34, 43, 53; Holmes.

HAYNES, LEMUEL, a colored and faithful and useful minister, died Sept. 28, 1833, aged 79, at Granville, N. Y. He was born at Granville. Mass., and was brought up by Deacon D. Rose. He pursued his studies by the light of pine knots. After preaching five years in Granville, Mass., and three in Torringford, he was for many years the much respected Congregational minister of West Rutland, Vt.; afterwards he preached three or four years in Manchester and eleven in Granville, N. Y. His wife was a white woman. After hearing Mr. Ballou, the Universalist, preach, he followed him with his famous, unequalled sermon on the words of Satan, "Thou shalt not surely die," which has been widely read. Being once introduced to a Universalist preacher, he took him by the hand, saying, "Well, you are the person who preaches that a man may lie, steal, and murder, and after all go to heaven; are you not ?" "No," replied he, "I preach no such thing." "But you believe so, do you not?" was the final question. When the young men of another parish rallied his friends on their having a "colored minister," the reply was:

" His soul ts pure,
All white! Snow white!"

He published, besides his famous sermon, one at the ordination of R. Parmelee, 1791. Dr. Cooley published his memoirs. - Sprague's Annals.

HAYS, Jacob, died in New York June 21, 1850, aged 79; high constable for nearly fifty years. As a detector of rogues he had unparalleled skill and success. Such was his memory of persons, that he never forgot one on whom he fixed his attention.

HAYWARD, LEMUEL, M. D., physician in Boston, died March 20, 1821, aged 72. He was born in Braintree, and graduated at Harvard college in 1768. He was a fellow student with Eustis, under Warren. He commenced the practice at Jamaica Plain; was appointed surgeon in the general hospital of the army in 1775; and removed in 1783 to Boston. He was an excellent physician, and from early life a professor of the Christian religion. — Thacher's Medical Biography.

HAYWARD, NATHAN, Dr., died at Plymouth, Mass., June 16, 1848, aged 84; long an active physician.

HAYWOOD, HENRY, a minister in South Carolina, arrived in Charleston from England in 1739, from which time till his death, in 1755, he was minister to the Socinian Baptists in that city. He translated into English Dr. Whitby's treatise Memoirs.

large volume in defence of Dr. Whithy against Dr. Gill, and also a catechism. - Miller, H. 365.

HAZARD, Enenezer, postmaster-general of the United States, was a native of Philadelphia, and graduated at Princeton college in 1762. In 1782 he succeeded Mr. Bache as postmaster, and continued in office until the adoption of the constitution in 1789. He died June 13, 1817, aged 72. His daughter married Ebenezer Rockwood. of Boston. He published a valuable work in reference to American history, which is often quoted, namely: Historical collections, 2 vols., 4to., 1792, 1794; also, remarks on a report concerning the western Indians, in 2 historical collections, IV.

HAZARD, ENOCH, Dr., died at Newport May 7, 1814, aged 72. For more than forty years he attended to his profession with faculties unimpaired.

HAZEN, Moses, brigadier-general, a soldier of the Revolution, commanded a corps, called "congress' own regiment." He died at Troy, N. Y., Jan. 30, 1802, aged 69.

HEALY, John, died at Baltimore June 19, 1848, aged 83, for fifty years the minister of the first Baptist church in B., and the originator of the first Sunday school in the United States.

HEARD, John, died at Ipswich Aug. 11, 1831, aged 90, a man of benevolence and eminent piety, a senator, and one of the electors of presi-

HEATH, WILLIAM, major-general in the army of the Revolution, died at Roxbury, Mass., Jan. 24, 1814, aged 77. He was born March 2, 1737, at Roxbury, of which town one of his ancestors was a settler in 1636, and was bred a farmer. In 1775 he was appointed provincial brigadier, and also brigadier of the United States, June 22, and Aug 9, 1776. major-general. When the army removed to New York, he commanded near King's bridge. In 1777 he was intrusted with the command of the eastern department near Boston, and the prisoners of Saratoga fell under his care. In June, 1779, he returned to the main army, and commanded the troops on the Hudson, and in that station, for the most part, he remained until the close of the war. In 1793 he was appointed judge of probate for the county of Norfolk. He was several times one of the electors of president. He published memoirs of Maj-Gen. Heath, containing anecdotes, details of skirmishes, battles, etc., during the American war, 8vo., 1798. Notwithstanding the indications of an excusable vanity and simplicity, it exhibits him as an honest, faithful patriot, and presents many interesting occurrences of the war. He says of himself, "he is of middling stature, light complexion, very corpulent, and bald-headed." He was the last surviving maj.-general of the war. - Heath's

HEBARD, Story, teacher of the mission seminary at Beyroot, died at Malta in June, 1841, aged 38. His health had been poor for a year: he was on his way to England. Born in Lebanon, N. II., he graduated at Amherst college in 1828, and at Andover seminary in 1834, and embarked for his field of labor Dec. 3, 1835.

HEBARD, REBECCA, missionary, wife of Story Hebard, died at Beyroot, Feb., 1840. Her name was Rebecca W. Williams, of East Hartford. She embarked for B. in 1835, and was married in 1836. The seenes of her death-bed were striking,-her exhortation to the Bishops Carabet and Jacob Aga, and their prayer for her; and her addres of half an hour to the boys of the . ag them to the Lamb of God. seminary directing r weeping eyes to the mansions of giory, she was about to enter.

HECKEWELDER, JOHN, a Moravian missionary, died at Bethlehem, Penn., Jan. 21, 1823, aged nearly 80. He was born in Bedford, England, March 12, 1743, and came with his father to Pennsylvania in 1754. He was bred a cooper and joiner. In 1771 he commenced his benevolent labors amongst the Indians, and was devoted to their instruction for many years, amidst many perils and hardships. Such men, and not bloodstained warriors, are deserving of honor, though they seek it not. In 1786 he returned to Bethlehem. As he had acquired a perfect knowledge of the Delaware language, and was well aequainted with Indian affairs, he was repeatedly requested by Washington to accompany missions to the Indians for pacific purposes. In 1797 he went to Ohio in order to superintend the remnants of his Indian congregation, to whom congress had granted lands on the Muskingum. In 1810 he returned to Bethlehem. Dr. Wistar persuaded him to communicate to the world the result of his observations. He published correspondence with Mr. Du Poncean concerning the languages of the Indians, 1819; account of the history, manners, etc., of the Indian nations, etc., in transact. of hist. committee of American phil. soc., vol. I.; this was translated into French, 1822; communicutions on the same subjects, 1822; some papers for Barton's med, journal; a paper on the bird Nine-Killer, and the big naked bear, American phil. tr. vol. IV.; on the beaver, vol. VI.; narrative of the missions among the Delaware and Mohegan Indians, 1821; words and dialogues of Delaware Indians in Philadelphia historical trans., vol. I. He wrote also books and pamphlets in the German language, and left many manuscripts. - Encyc. Amer.

HEDDING, ELIJAH, D. D., a Methodist bishop, died April 9, 1852, at Poughkeepsie, aged 72. He was the respected senior of the five Methodist bishops.

1854, aged about 74. A graduate of 1792, he was a tutor and professor at Harvard thirty-seven years; professor of logic and metaphysics from 1810 to 1827, and Alford professor of theology from 1827 to 1832. He published elements of logic, 1816; eulogy on Joseph McKean, 1818; Brown's philosophy abridged, 2 vols., 1827.

HEHL, MATTHEW, bishop of the church of the United Brethren, died in Lancaster, Pa., in 1787.

aged 82.

HEISTER, JOSEPH, general and governor, died at Reading, Pa., June 10, 1832, aged 81. He was a soldier of the Revolution.

HELYER, JONATHAN, minister of Newbort. R. I., died May 27, 1745, aged about 27. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1738, and was ordained as colleague to T. Clap, June 20, 1744. He was a man of great worth and high promise. - Sprague's Annals.

HEMINGWAY, JACOB, first minister of East Haven, Conn., died in 1754, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1704, was settled in 1711, and was succeeded by N. Street. He published the election sermon, 1740.

HEMMENWAY, PHINEAS, minister of Townsend, Mass., died May 20, 1760, aged 55. A brother of Ralph II., of Framingham, he was graduated at Harvard in 1730, and was ordained M. Hemmenway, D. D., was his in 1734. nephew. - Sprague's Annals.

HEMMENWAY, Moses, D. D., minister of Wells, Me., a descendant of Ralph II., who lived in 1634 at Roxbury, was born in Framingham, and graduated at Hurvard college in 1755; was ordained Aug. 8, 1759; and died April 5, 1811, aged about 76, having been a minister fifty-one years. His wife, the daughter of Mr. Jefferds, one of his predecessors, died Nov., 1824, aged 84. He was a faithful preacher and a learned theologian. His controversies were conducted with fairness and eandor. He published seven sermons on the obligation of the unregenerate to strive for eternal life, 1767; a pamphlet on the same subject, against Dr. Hopkins, pp. 127, 1772; remarks on Hopkins' answer, pp. 166, 1774; on baptism, 1781; at the election, 1784; discourse concerning the church, 1792; at the ordination of M. Calef, 1795. - Greenleaf's Sketches, app. 4-9; Sprague's Annals.

HENCHMAN, NATHANIEL, minister of Lynn, Mass., died Dec. 23, 1761, aged about 63. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1717, and was ordained in 1721. He published sermon on the death of John Burrill, 1721; at the ordination of J. Varney, 1733; reasons for not admitting Mr. Whitefield into his pulpit, 1745; letter to Mr. Hobby concerning Mr. Whitefield.

HENDREN, JOHN, D. D., an aged minister of Churchville, Va., died in Nov., 1856, during a HEDGE, LEVI, LL. D., died at Cambridge in session of the Synod, of which he was a member. 2. he was rty-seven sics from of theolelements an, 1818; 327.

rch of the , in 1787,

governor, aged 81.

Newport, 27. Born 1738, and June 20, and high er of East t 70. IIe d in 1711, published of Towned 55. A in, he was a ordained , was lis ainister of , who lived amingham, 1755; was ril 5, 1811, r fifty-one . Jefferds, 1824, aged arned theucted with seven serenerate to let on the pp. 127, pp. 166, ion, 1784; of Lynn, 63. Born 1717, and sermon on ie ordinaiot admit-45; letter 14.

92; at the

ireenleaf's

ninister of during a a member.

HENDRICK, a Moliawk chief, was the son of a Mohegan chief, called the Wolf, by a Mohawk woman. He married Hunnis, daughter of a Mohawk chief. He was consulted in 1751, by the commissioners of Massachusetts, on the project of removing the Mohawks to Stockbridge, to be instructed by Mr. Edwards. There were then about thirteen chiefs of the tribe of the Caunceyenkees or proper Mohawks; seven living at Caunaujohhanry, and six at Tewauntaurogo. The other tribes were the Oneivutas, of which the village Onohquauga was two hundred miles from Albany, the Tuscaroroes, the Quinquuhs, the Oncontaugas, the Chonuntoowaunces or Senecas, the three last being chiefly in the French interest. He attended the congress at Albany for a treaty with the Six Nations in June, 1754. In the next year he joined Sir William Johnson with a body of two hundred Mohawks and marched to meet Baron Dieskau. When it was ascertained that the enemy, after marching from the South Bay to the Hudson, four miles from fort Edward, were now advancing to attack Johnson at fort Wm. Henry or fort George, a council of war was called Sept. 8. It was proposed to send a detachment to meet the enemy; when the number was mentioned to Hendrick, he replied: "If they are to fight, they are too few; if they are to be killed, they are too many." When it was proposed to send out the deta ent in three parties, Hendrick took three s s, and said: "Put these together, and you can't break them; take them one by one, and you will break them easily." From respect to his judgment, twelve hundred men were sent out, commanded by Col. Williams. At Rocky Brook, four miles from fort George, they fell into an ambuscade, because Hendrick had been too late sent out as a flank guard; and in the action the old and valiant warrior and faithful friend of the English was mortally wounded. - Holmes, 11. 63; Dwight, 111. 363; Mante, 35, 37.

HENDRICKS, WILLIAM, governor of Indiana, died in Madison May 16, 1850, aged 67. He was the first representative of the State in congress, governor from 1822 to 1825, and senator of the United States. He had a strong mind and strong attachments; he had long been a professor of religion.

HENING, WILLIAM, presiding judge of the court of appeals of Virginia, died at his seat in Chesterfield, Va., in Feb., 1824, aged 89. He was a Revolutionary patriot and an upright judge.

HENING, WILLIAM WALKER, clerk of the chancery court for the Riehmond district, Va., died March 31, 1828. With great industry and research he collected the statutes of Virginia

To his brethren, as he was about to die, he sent a justice, called Hening's justice, 3d ed., 1820; most touching message. He was highly respected. statutes at large, being a collection of all the laws of Virginia from the first session in 1619, 13 vols., 8vo., 1823; and with Wm. Munford, reports in the supreme court of appeals, 4 vols., 1809-1811. He was also the editor of Francis' maxims of equity. HENNEPIN, Louis, a French missionary, was born in 1640; embarked for Quebec in 1675; and during six or seven years explored Canada and Louisiana. In 1680 he was taken prisoner one hundred and fifty leagues from the mouth of the Illinois, and carried in to the country of the Naudowessies and Issati. He gave the name of the falls of St. Anthony, and the river St. Franeis. He published description de la Louisiane, 12mo., 1683; the same in Dutch, 1688; new discovery of a vast country in America, with a continuation, London, 1698; Nouveau voyage dans l'Amerique, Sept., 12mo., 1711 et 1720. - Schoolcraft's Trav. Intr. HENRY, PATRICK, governor of Virginia, and a most eloquent orator, died June 6, 1799, aged nearly 63. He took an early and decided part in support of the rights of his country against the tyranny of Great Britain. In the year 1765, he was a member of the assembly of Virginia, and he introduced some resolutions, which breathed a spirit of liberty, and which were accepted by a small majority May 29. These were the first resolutions of any assembly occasioned by the stamp act. One of the resolutions declared, that the general assembly had the exclusive right and power to lay taxes and impositions upon the inhabitants of the colony. Such was the warmth, excited in the debate, that Mr. Henry, after declaiming against the arbitrary measures of Great Britain, added, "Cæsar had his Brutus, Charles the first his Cromwell, and George the third-" when the speaker of the house cried out "Treason!" and the cry was echoed from every part of the house. Mr. Henry finished the sentence with firm emphasis - " may profit by the example. If this be treason, make the most of it." Mr. Henry left a paper for his executors, in which he speaks of the resolutions of 1765, which closes with these words: "If they [the people] are wise, they will be great and happy. If they are of a contrary character, they will be miserable. Righteousness alone can exalt them as a nation. Reader, whoever thou art, remember this; and in thy sphere practice virtue thyself and encourage it in others." He was elected in 1774 one of the deputies from Virginia to the first congress, and was in this year one of the committee which drew up the petition to the king. In May, 1775, after Lord Dunmore had conveyed on board a ship a part of the powder from the magazine of Williamsburg, Mr. Henry distinguished himself by down to 1792. He published the New Virginia assembling the independent companies of Hanover and King William counties, and directing them towards Williamsburg with the avowed design of obtaining payment for the powder, or of compelling to its restitution. The object was effected, for the king's receiver-general gave a bill for the value of the property. The governor immediately fortified his palace, and issued a proclamation, charging those, who had procured the bill, with rebellious practices. This only occasioned a number of county meetings, which applauded the conduct of Mr. Henry, and expressed a determination to protect him. In Aug., 1775, when a new choice of deputies to congress was made, he was not re-elected, for his services were now demanded more exclusively in his own State. After the departure of Lord Dunmore he was chosen the first governor in June, 1776, and he held this office several succeeding years, bending all his exertions to promote the freedom and independence of his country. In the beginning of 1778 an anonymous letter was addressed to him with the design of alienating his affections from the commander-in-chief. He inclosed it to Washington, both to evince his friendship and to put him on his guard. In another letter, written a few days afterwards, when he had heard of a plan to effect the removal of Washington, he says to him, "While you face the armed enemies of our liberty in the field, and, by the favor of God, have been kept unhurt, I trust your country will never harbor in her bosom the miscreant, who would ruin her best supporter; but when arts, unworthy of honest men, are used to defame and traduce you, I think it not amiss, but a duty, to assure you of that estimation in which the public hold you."

In June, 1788, he was a member, with other illustrious citizens of Virginia, of the convention which was appointed to consider the constitution of the United States; and he exerted all the force of his masterly eloquence, day after day, to prevent its adoption. He contended that changes were dangerous to liberty; that the old confederation had carried us through the war, and secured our independence, and needed only amendment; that the proposed government was a consolidated government, in which the sovereignty of the States would be lost, and all pretensions to rights and privileges would be rendered insecure; that the want of a bill of rights was an essential defect; that general warrants should have been prohibited; and that to adopt the constitution with a view to subsequent amendments was only submitting to tyranny in the hope of being liberated from it at some future time. He therefore offered a resolution, containing a bill of rights and amendment for the greater security of liberty and property, to be referred to the other States before the ratification of the proposed was not accepted. The arguments of Pendleton, Randolph, Madison, and Marshall prevailed against the eloquence of Henry, and the constitution was adopted, though by a small majority. Mr. Henry's bill of rights and his amendments were then accepted and directed to be transmitted to the several States. Some of these amendments have been ingrafted into the federal constitution, on which account, as well as on account of the lessons of experience, Mr. Henry in a few years lost in a degree his repugnance to it. As he had opposed the constitution with all the force of his eloquence, because endangering the sovereignty of the States, his support of the constitution afterwards presents a memorable example to all the nullifiers of the constitution. - to all who would resist the supreme law of the land and endanger the union. He offered himself a short time before his death a candidate for the house of delegates, and in his address said to the people, -in consequence of some proceedings of the ussembly, - "The State has quitted the sphere in which she has been placed by the constitution. What authority has the County of Charlotte to dispute obedience to the laws of Virginia? And is not Virginia to the Union what the County of Charlotte is to her? Opposition on the part of Virginia to the acts of the Federal Government must beget their enforcement by military power. This will produce civil war; civil war, foreign alliances; and foreign alliances must end in subjugation to the powers called in. Pause and consider. Rush not, I conjure you, into a condition, from which there is no retreat." "You can never exchange the present government but for a monarchy. If the Administration have done wrong, let us all go wrong together, rather than split into factions, which must destroy that union, on which our existence hangs." After the resignation of Mr. Randolph in Aug., 1795, he was nominated by President Washington as sceretary of State, but considerations of a private nature induced him to decline the honorable trust. In Nov., 1796, he was again elected governor of Virginia, and this office also he almost immediately resigned. In the beginning of the year 1799, he was appointed by President Adams as an envoy to France, with Messrs. Ellsworth and Murray. His letter in reply to the secretary of State is dated in Charlotte county, April 16th, and in it he speaks of a severe indisposition, to which he was then subject, and of his advanced age and increasing debility, and adds, "Nothing short of absolute necessity could induce me to withhold my little aid from an administration, whose abilities, patriotism, and virtue deserve the gratitude and reverence of all their fellow citizens." Davie of North Carolina was in consequence appointed in his place. He lived but a short time form of government. His resolution, however, after this testimony of the respect in which his ndleton. revailed e constinajority. ndments nsmitted amendconstitucount of in a few o it. As the force ie soverconstituample to all who d and enf a short he house the peoigs of the ie sphere astitution. arlotte to ia? And County of e part of vernment ry power. reign allin subjuga-

l consider. tion, from never exr a monne wrong, than split union, on e resignawas nomcretary of nature intrust. In nor of Virnmediately

r 1799, he an envoy d Murray. of State is nd in it he ch he was nd increasof absolute my little ties, patri-and rever-Governor quence aphort time which his Red Hill in Charlotte county. By his first wife he had six children, of whom two survived him; by his second wife he had six sons and three daughters, who survived him. By judicious pur-chases of lauds he left his family rich. His widow married the late Judge Winston, and died in Halifax county, Feb. 15, 1831.

He was a man of eminent talents, of ardent attachment to liberty, and of most commanding eloquence. The Virginians boast of him as an orator of nature. His general appearance and manners were those of a plain farmer. In this character he always entered on the exordium of an oration. His unassuming looks and expressions of humility induced his hearers to listen to him with the same easy openness, with which they would converse with an honest neighbor. After he had thus disarmed prejudice and pride and opened a way to the heart, the inspiration of his eloquence, when little expected, would invest him with the authority of a prophet. With a mind of great powers and a heart of keen sensibility, he would sometimes rise in the majesty of his genins, and, while he filled the audience with admiration, would with almost irresistible influence bear along the passions of others with him.

In private life he was as amiable and virtuous as he was conspicuous in his public career. He was temperate. Ho never uttered a profine expression, dishonoring the name of God. He was kind and hospitable, friendly to his neighbors, punctual, and faithful to his promise. Yet it was thought, that the love of money was too strong a passion in his heart, rendering him exorbitant in his fees, and leading him to partake in the profit of the Yazoo speculation; and that he was also too vain of his wealth. If this be true, it will detract from his excellence of character. He said to a friend, just before his death, who found him reading the Bible, - "Here," said he, "is a book worth more than all the other books that were ever printed; yet it is my misfortune never to have found time to read it, with the proper attention and feeling, till lately. I trust in the mercy of heaven that it is not yet too late." He was not a member of any church. His principles of liberty and regard to Christianity led him to deplore the practice of slavery. On this subject, in a letter written in 1773, he inquires: "Is it not amazing, that at a time when the rights of humanity are defined and understood with precision, in a country above all others fond of liberty; that in such an age and such a country we find men, professing a religion, the most humane, mild, gentle, and generous, adopting a principle as repugnant to humanity as it is inconsistent with the Bible, and destructive to liberty? Would any one believe, that I am master of slaves of my own talents and patriotism were held. He died at | convenience of living here without them. I will not -I cannot justify it. I believe a time will come, when an opportunity will be offered to abolish this lamentable evil. Every thing we can do is to improve it, if it happens in our day; if not, let us transmit to our descendants, together with our slaves, a pity for their unhappy lot, and an abhorrence of slavery." With what astonishment and indignation, had he lived till 1856, would he have seen a sober recommendation, by unprincipled southern editors and one governor, of the revival of the slave trade? In another letter to Archibald Blair, written a few months before his death. after lamenting the violence of parties in Virginia, and reprobating French infidelity, and manners, and politics, he adds: "I am too old and infirm ever again to undertake public concerns. I live much retired, amidst a multiplicity of blessings from that gracious Ruler of all things, to whom I owe unceasing acknowledgments for his unremitted goodness to me. And if I were permitted to add to the catalogue one other blessing, it should be, that my countrymen should learn wisdom and virtue, and in this their day to know the things that pertain to their peace." Mr. Wirt's very interesting life of Henry was published, 3d edit., 8vo., 1818.

HENRY, ALEXANDER, a traveller, died at Montreal April 4, 1824, aged 84. He was born in New Jersey in Aug., 1739. In 1760 he accompanied the expedition of Amherst, and was present at the reduction of fort de Levi, near Ontario, and the surrender of Montreal. In descending the river he lost three boats of merchandize, and saved his life by elinging to the bottom of one of them. Immediately after the conquest of Canada, in his enterprising spirit he engaged in the fur trade. He visited the upper lakes in 1760, and during sixteen years travelled in the northwestern parts of America, and was in many scenes of hardship and peril. He was a man of warm affections, domestic habits, and a generous mind. He published an interesting book, written with simplicity: Travels in Canada and the Indian territories, between the years 1760 and 1776, 8vo., New York, 1809.

HENRY, JOHN JOSEPH, presiding judge of the second district of Pennsylvania, was the son of Wm. II., of Lancaster, a skilful mechanic, inventor of the screw anger, and commissary of the troops at the beginning of the war. He was born Nov. 4, 1758. At the age of seventeen he entered the army in 1775, and accompanied Arnold through the wilderness of Maine to Quebec. In the attack on the city he was wounded and taken prisoner. Having afterwards studied law, he practised from 1785 till 1793, when he was appointed judge. He died about the year 1810 at Paxton, Dauphin county, aged 52. His wife purchase? I am drawn along by the general in- was the sister of Stephen Chambers. His interesting account of the expedition across the wilderness to Quebec was published at Lancaster, 12mo., 1812.

HENRY, WILLIAM, general, a soldier of the Revolution, died in Christian county, Ky., in 1824, aged 63. At an early age he entered the army, and fought at the battles of Guilford and the Cowpens. Removing to Kentucky, he was much er gaged in the Indian warfares, so harassing to the early settlers. He participated in the hardships of Scott's and Wilkinson's campaigns.

HENRY, T. CHARLTON, D. D., minister of Charleston, S. C., was the son of Alexander Henry, of Philadelphia, president of the Sabbath school union, and was graduated at Middlebury college in 1814. He was the paster of the 2d Presbyterian church at C., and died Oct. 5, 1827. aged 37. For talents, acquisitions, holy zeal, and usefulness in the ministry, few are superior to him. He published an inquiry into the consistency of popular amusements with a profession of Christianity, 1825; letters to a friend to relieve an anxious inquirer, with memoirs by Th. Lewis, London.

HENRY, ALEXANDER, a merchant, died at Philadelphia, Aug. 13, 1847, aged 81. Born in Scotland, in his eighteenth year he arrived at Philadelphia in 1783. He first was a clerk at 250 dollars a year. As he entered upon business on his own account, he was highly prosperous, and acquired a large estate, in the use of which he was charitable and generous. An elder in the Presbyterian church, he performed important services in the cause of Christ. Before a tract society was formed, he distributed tracts; he was president of the board of education and of other societies, which, on account of his death, passed commendatory resolutions. A notice of him is in the Merchant's Magazine, Jan., 1850. Dr. Me-Dowell published a sermon on his death.

HENRY, ROBERT, D. D., died at Columbia, S. C., Feb. 6, 1856; for many years professor of Greek literature in South Carolina college.

HENSHAW, DAVID, died at Leicester, Mass., Nov. 11, 1852, aged 62. He was the son of David, and grandson of Daniel, who went from Boston to Leicester in 1748. His earlier ancestor was Joshua, of Dorchester, in 1668. He was successful in commerce, and was collector of the port of Boston for eight years from 1830. He was appointed secretary of the navy in 1843, but was rejected by the senate.

HENSHAW, JOHN P. K., D. D., bishop of Rhode Island, died July 20, 1852, aged about 62. Born in Middletown, Conn., he graduated at Middlebury in 1808, and, after being a rector at Baltimore many years, was consecrated bishop in 1843.

Caroline Lee Hentz. Born in France, after he came to this country he was associated with George Hancroft in his school at Round Hill, Northampton. He was a man of varied accomplishments. He published papers on the alligator and on new species of insects in the American philosophical transactions; Tadenskund, the last king of the Lenape, 12mo., 1825.

HENTZ, CAROLINE LEE, died at Marianna. Florida, Feb. 11, 1856. She was the daughter of Gen. John Whiting, and sister of Gen. Henry W. She at the age of twelve wrote a novel and a Married to Prof. Hentz, she lived at tragedy. Chapel Hill, N. C.; then near Cincinnati; then at Florence, Ala., and at Tuscaloosa. She was an excellent teacher, pleasing in appearance, and her conversational powers were of a high order. She published De Lara, or the Moorish bride; the mob cap, Aunt Mercy, the blind girl, the peddler, the Village anthem; Lovell's folly, a novel; and Ernest Linwood, 1856. - Cycl. Amer. Lit.

HERKIMER, general, of the militia of New York, was of German descent. When St. Leger, in 1777, invested fort Stanwix, afterwards called fort Schuyler, at the head of Mohawk river, Herkimer, with the militia of Tryon county, hastened to the relief of Col. Gansevoort. On his approach he was ambuscaded in August, about six miles from the fort, near Oneida ereek. Though mortally wounded in his legs, he seated himself upon a stump and heroically encouraged his men to the fight; but his party was defeated with the loss of four hundred men. Congress ordered a monument to his memory. - Holmes, II. 270; Hist. Coll. 11. 108.

HERRERA, ANTONIO DE, a Spanish historian, was born in 1559, and died in 1625. He published in Spanish a general history of the West Indics, 1601; also, 1615. The same has been published in various editions and languages. It gives an account of discoveries from 1492 to 1553. The history of America, translated by J. Stevens, was published at London, 2d edit., 6 vols., 1740.

HERSEY, EZEKIEL, an eminent physician of Hingham, Mass., and a benefactor of Harvard college, was graduated at that seminary in 1728, and died Dec. 9, 1770, aged 62. His widow married Capt. Derby, of Salem, and, in fulfilment of his wishes, established an academy at Hingham, calling it Derby instead of Hersey academy. Dr. H. was remarkably humane and benevolent, and had extensive practice as a surgeon. He bequeathed to the college 1000 pounds towards founding a professorship of anatomy and surgery. His widow also gave the same sum for the same purpose. Dr. Warren was the first who was established on this foundation. - Holmes.

HERSEY, ABNER, an eminent physician of HENTZ, N. M., professor, died at Marianna, Barnstable, Mass., died Jan. 9, 1787, aged 65. Florida, Nov. 4, 1856. He was the husband of He was the brother of the preceding, the son of after he ted with and Hill, d accomalligator American , the last Marianna, nighter of Henry W. rel and a e lived at i: then at ie was an e, and her der. She bride; the e peddler, novel; and Lit.

St. Leger, ards called river, Herr, hastened In his ap-, about six Though ed himself ia of New

ed his men ed with the ordered a es, 11. 270;

h historian, . He pub-f the West has been guages. It 92 to 1553. J. Stevens, ols., 1740. hysician of f Harvard ry in 1728, widow marlfilment of Hingham, lemy. Dr. volent, and He beds towards > ho was esnysician of aged 65. the son of nd surgery.

the same

James Hersey. brother James, of Barnstable, and on his decease succeeded to his practice. Dr. Thacher was his pupil. He had many singularities. His dress was loose, lined throughout with baize. He had a great coat made of seven calf-skins, to protect him from the rain. He was hypochondriacal, capricious, whimsical, and churlish; and domestic peace was a stranger to his family. He had no children. He bequeathed to Harvard college 500 pounds toward the establishment of a professorship of the theory and practice of physic. The first professor in this department was Dr. Waterhouse. Dr. Hersey also bequeathed about 500 pounds, the interest of which he directed to be applied annually to the purchase of religious publications, which should be distributed in all the towns on Cape Cod. He directed what books should be selected for a hundred years; after the expiration of which time the ministers and deacons of the thirteen parishes, to whose care his donation is intrusted, are authorized to select any religious books at their pleasure, excepting on every fourth year. On the petition of the parties the legislature authorized the division of the property among the churches interested .- Thacher.

HERVEY, WILLIAM, missionary to Bombay, died May 13, 1832, aged 33. He was born at Kingsbury, N. Y., and graduated at Williams college in 1824, where he was a tutor; studied theology at Princeton; was ordained as a missionary in 1829. His disease was the cholera. Mr. Read's letter on his death is in the Missionary Herald for 1832. He toiled in the East only one year; but his example might do good for many a year after his departure from life.

HERVEY, ELIZABETH, wife of William Hervey, missionary to Bombay, died May 2, 1831, aged 33. She was the daughter of Deacon Jacob Smith, of Hadley, Mass. Her grandmother, who died at the age of 101, could count among her descendants twenty-one ministers. She died peacefully soon after her arrival. Her character is described in Missionary Herald for 1831 and 1832. Her husband died the next year.

HERWIG, LEOPOLD, a musical teacher, died in Boston, suddenly, of an affection of the heart, Nov. 1, 1845, aged 34. He led the orchestra at a concert the same evening.

HEULET, J., died in Groton, Conn., in 1821, aged 95, father by one wife of 27 children.

HEWARD, JOSEPH, died in Broomfield, Me., Nov. 11, 1851, aged 93. He served in the war, and was in Morgan's rifle regiment.

HEWITT, ALEXANDER, published an historical account of South Carolina and Georgia, 2 vols., London, 1779.

HEWES, JOSEPH, a patriot of the Revolution, was born in 1730 in New Jersey. His parents

He studied physic with his as a merchant at Edenton, N. C. In 1774 he was a member of congress, and was appointed on the committee to state the grievances of congress, Although a merchant, he entered heartily into the plan of non-importation. He signed the Declaration of Independence in 1776, and remained in congress, with the exception of a year, till his death at Philadelphia, Nov. 10, 1779, aged 19. He left a large fortune, but no children. It is said that when, in 1775, the Quakers put forth a "testimony" against the proceedings of congress, he withdrew from the sect. - Goodrich's Lives; Encyclopedia Americana.

> HEWES, ROBERT, Dr., died in Boston in 1830, aged 79. He was long a celebrated fencing-master and bone-setter. He published rules for sword-exercise of eavalry, 12mo., 1813.

HEYWARD, THOMAS, judge, a patriot of the Revolution, died in March, 1809, aged 63. He was born at St. Luke's, S. C., in 1746, the son of Col. Daniel II., a wealthy planter. Having studied law at the temple in London, he spent some years in a tour on the continent of Europe. On his return he practised law. In 1775 he was appointed a member of congress in the place of Mr. Rutledge, and in 1776 signed the Declaration of Independence. In 1778 he was appointed judge of the civil and criminal courts. At the capture of Charleston, May 12, 1780, he bore arms and fell into the hands of the enemy, and was sent to St. Augustine. His plantation was plundered, and he lost one hundred and thirty slaves, who were probably transported to Jamaica. Having at last permission to sail to Philadelphia, he narrowly escaped drowning, having fallen over-In 1798 he relinquished his judicial board. duties. By his two wives, whose names were Matthews and Savage, he had children. With an ardent disposition he yet had a sound judgment, and was honest, firm, and fearless. - Biog. Amer.; Goodrich.

HIACOOMES, the first Indian in New England who was converted to Christianity, and a minister at Martha's Vineyard, lived upon this island when a few English families first settled there in 1642. Under the instruction of Thomas Mayhew he eagerly received the truths of the gospel. Having learned to read, he in 1645 began to teach his copper-colored brethren the Christian doctrines, and he did not labor in vain. A number of them were soon impressed with a sense of their guilt in living as they had lived and sought for pardon from him who is the propitiation for the sins of the world. The sachems and pawaws, or priests, did not observe this progress of Christianity with indifference. While the latter threatened to destroy all the praying Indians with witcheraft, their menaces were particularly directed against Hiacoomes; but he said were Quakers. At the age of thirty he settled to them, "I believe in God, and put my trust in him; therefore all the pawaws can do me no hurt." In 1650, when he lost a young child, the funeral was performed in the English manner. The mourners did not discolor their faces, nor deposit any utensils or goods in the grave, nor howl over the dead. After the death of Mr. Mayhew in 1657, he continued his benevolent labors, though he greatly lamented the loss of that good man, by whom he had been enlightened In the knowledge of the truth, and whose instructions gave him the power of instructing others. August 22, 1670, an Indian church was regularly formed on Martha's Vineyard, and Hiacoomes and Tackanash were ordained its pastor and teacher by Eliot and Cotton. Hiacoomes survived his colleague, and died about the year 1690, aged near 80. In 1698 his son, John Hiacoomes, was a preacher and schoolmaster at Assawamusit, or Middleborough. He was a faithful and successful minister, slow in speech, grave in manners, and blameless in his life. He was courageous in reprehending the Indians for worshipping their fulse gods and adhering to their pawaws. He was not clated by the high office which he sustained, but ever continued humble. At the ordination of Mr. Japhet, who succeeded Tackanash, as his colleague, he prayed, imposed hands, and gave the charge with much propriety. In his last sickness he expressed the hones of a Christian, and gave good exhortations dian Converts; Mather's Magnalia, 111. 199. IHCKS, Ellas, a Quaker, died at Jericho, Long Island, Feb. 27, 1830, aged 81. His wife, Jemima, with whom he had lived in harmony fifty-eight years, died in 1829. In the last years of his life he was the cause, by some new doctrines which he advanced, of a great discord and division among the Friends.

to those around; and at his death he without doubt entered into that rest from which many of the learned and refined, who love not the Lord

Jesus Christ, will be excluded. - Mayhew's In-

IHCHBORN, BENJAMIN, a Boston patriot, died in 1817, aged about 70. He delivered an oration at Boston March 5, 1777, which was published in 4to.; an oration at Boston July 4, 1784.

HIDDEN, SAMUEL, first minister of Tamworth, N. II., died in 1837, aged 77, in the forty-sixth year of his ministry. Born in Rowley, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1791. He was ordained in 1792 on a rock near where the meetinghouse was afterwards built. Settled in a country almost a wilderness, his holy zeal led him to preach the gospel widely around him. To his own church more than five hundred were added. His son William was a deacon. He was greatly respected and beloved. In death he had triumph. He said, "Just draw back the veil, and I am there!" Ilis lyre, for he loved sacred music, was tuned for the last song:

"Angels, roll the rock away! Death, yield up the mighty prey!"

The rock, on which he was ordained, is near his grave; the rock of his hopes standeth forever! His memoir was published in 1842.

HIGGINHOTTIAM, THOMAS, died in Amherst county, Va., in Feb., 1835. He emancipated fifty slaves.

HIGGINS, DAVID, a venerable minister, died at Bath, N. Y., in June, 1842, aged 81, pastor of the first Presbyterian church in that town. Horn at Haddam, he graduated at Yale in 1785. He was first settled at Lyme for eighteen years, then at Aubura, N. Y. He was an early, carnest, and faithful laborer in the vineyard of Western New York. In his old age he preached at Norwalk, Ohio, and by one account he died there.

HIGGINSON, FRANCIS, first minister of Salem, Mass., died in Aug., 1630, aged 42. After receiving his education at Emanuel college in Cambridge, he became the minister of a church at Leicester, in England. Here he devoted himself to the duties of his office, bending all his efforts to produce that renovation of heart and holiness of life, without which no man can see the kingdom of God. While his popular talents filled his church with attentive hearers, such was the divingblessing upon his labors, that a deep attention to religious subjects was excited among his people, and he witnessed with pleasure the progress of uprightness, benevolence, and piety among the dishonest, the selfish, and the impious. Hecoming at length a conscientious nonconformist to the rites of the English church, some of which he thought not only were unsupported by Scripture, but corrupted the purity of Christian worship and discipline, he was excluded from the parish pulpit. But he obtained liberty to preach a lecture in Leicester, and often attended private meetings for prayer and religious conference with a number of excellent Christians. As the spirit of ecclesiastical tyranny became more jealous and rigorous, information was lodged against him, and while he was daily expecting to be dragged away by pursuivants to the high commission court, a kind Providence interposed remarkably in his favor, and provided for him a place of security. One day two messengers came to his house, and with loud knocks cried out, "Where is Mr. Higgiason? We must speak with Mr. Higginson!" His wife ran to his chamber and entreated him to conceal himself; but he replied that he should acquiesce in the will of God. He went down, and as the messengers entered the hall they presented him with some papers, saying, in a rough manner, "Sir, we came from London, and our business is to convey you to London, as you may see by those papers." - "I thought so," exclaimed Mrs. Higginson, weeping; but a woman's tears could have little effect upon hard-hearted pursuivants. Mr.

near his forever!

Amherst ated fifty ster, died pastor of n. Horn 785. He ears, then nest, and tern New Norwalk. of Salem, After ree in Camchurch at d himself is efforts l holiness the kings filled his the divinotention to is people, ogress of mong the Becomormist to of which orted by Christian from the to preach d private ence with the spirit alous and him, and ged away n court, a ly in his security.

ouse, and Mr. Higginson [" nted him e should own, and resented manner. siness is by those

Irs. Higuld have ts. Mr.

his arrest, but, instead of an order from Bishop Land for his seizure, he found a copy of the charter of Massachusetts, and letters from the governor and company, inviting him to embark with them for New England. The sudden transition of feeling from despondence to joy inspired him with the same good humor which induced his friends to act the part of his enemies, and a pleasant interview succeeded.

Having sought advice and implored the Divine direction, he resolved to accept the invitation. In his farewell sermon, preached before a vast assembly, he declared his persuasion, that England would be chastised by war, and that Leicester would have more than an ordinary share of sufferings. It was not long before his prediction was verified. It is not meant that he claimed the power of foretelling future events; but he could reason with considerable accuracy from cause to effect, knowing that iniquity is generally followed by its punishment, and he lived in an age when it was usual for ministers to speak with more confidence, and authority, and efficacy, than at present. He sailed from Gravesend April 25, 1629, accompanied by Mr. Skelton, whose principles accorded with his own. When he came to the Land's End he called his children and the other passengers on deck to take the last view of their native country; and he now exclaimed: " Farewell England, farewell the church of God in England, and all the Christian friends there. We do not go to America as Separatists from the church of England, though we cannot but separate from its corruptions." He then concluded with a fervent prayer for the king, church, and state in England. He arrived at Cape Ann June 27, 1629, and having spent the next day there, which was Sunday, on the 29th he entered the harbor of Salem. July the 20th was observed as a day of fasting by the appointment of Gov. Endicott, and the church then made choice of Mr. Higginson to be their teacher, and Mr. Skelton their pastor. Each with the assistance of some of the gravest members of the church laid his hands at this time on the other with prayer. A more solemn investiture took place August 6th, when about thirty persons per cepted a confession of faith and church covenant, which had been drawn up by Mr. Higginson, and the two ministers were again ordained by the imposition of hands. Governor Bradford and others from the church of Plymouth gave them the right hand of fellowship. As both these ministers had been ordained by bishops in England, and as Mr. Higginson professed not to be a separatist from the established church, this ordination cannot be considered as investing them with the sacred office, but only as introducing them to the pastoral care of a particular flock. Thus auspicious was the commencement of the settlement of Naumkeak, he married. In 1643 he was chosen one of the Higginson opened the packet to read the form of or Salem; but the scene was soon changed. During the first winter about one hundred persons dled, and Mr. Higginson was soon selzed with a heetic, which terminated his days. In his last sickness he was reminded of his benevolent exertions in the service of the Lord Jesus Christ. To consoling suggestions of this kind he replied, "I have been an unprofitable servant, and all my desire is to win Christ, and be found in him, not having my own righteousness." His family, consisting of his wife and eight children, whom ho was about to leave without a suitable provision for their maintenance, he cheerfully commended to the care of God, being fully persuaded that his favor would attend them.

He was a zealous or useful preacher, mild in his doctrines, but strict in discipline. He admitted none into the enarch without satisfactory evidence that they were truly religious, and excluded the ignorant and immoral from the table of the Lord. In his deportment he was grave, and pure in morals, and, though not rash in his decisions, he was not easily shaken from his purposes. In his person he was slender and not tall. His son, Francis Higginson, went to Europe, and after residing some time as a student at Leyden, was settled as a minister at Kerby Steven in Westmoreland, England, where he died about the year 1670, aged 51. He was the first who wrote against the Quakers, and he published also a Latin creatise concerning the tive principal lights, un reated and created light, and the light of nature, grace, and glory.

Mr. Higginson, of Salem, wrote an account of his voyage, which is preserved in Hutchinson's collection of papers. He wrote also a short account of that part of Massachusetts, which was now settling, and of the Indians, entitled, New England's plantation, or a short and true description of the commodities and discommodities of that country, 1630. It has been reprinted in the collections of the historical society. This curious account is generally correct, though the isle of slates, and the marble, and the lions existed only in report and imagination. - Magnalia, 1. 18, 19; III. 70-75; Coll. Hist. Soc. 1. 117-124; vi. 231, 242-244; ix. 2-3; Sprague's Annals.

HIGGINSON, John, minister of Salem, Mass., died Dec. 9, 1708, aged 92. He was the son of the preceding, and was born in England Aug. 6, 1616. Some time after the death of his father, with whom he came to this country in 1629, he was the instructor of a school at Hartford, his mother with six of her children being somewhat dependent upon his exertions for her support. Having become a preacher, he was chaplain at Saybrook fort a number of years. In 1641 he went to Guilford, and preached about two years as an assistant to Mr. Whitfield, whose daughter seven pillars of Guilford. The practice of choos- cause of God and his people in New England. ing from among the brethren seven persons, who were called pillars, to whom the other churchmembers were gathered, had before been adopted in New Haven and Milford. After the church was completely organized in Guilford in 1643, Mr. Higginson was elected teacher to assist Mr. Whitfield: but he was not ordained. the year 1650 Mr. Whitfield returned to England, and Mr. Higginson remained as teacher of the church. But in 1659 he left that town with the intention of revisiting his native country. On his arrival at Salem he was persuaded to preach one year in the church, where his father had been settled, and was ordained in Aug., 1660. Here he continued near half a century till his death. He had been seventy-two years in the ministerial office. His colleague, Mr. Nicholas Noves, says of him in his elegy:

"For rich array cared not a fig.
And wore Ellsha's periwig; At ninety-three luid comely face, Adorned with majesty and grace: Before he went among the dead. He children's children's children had."

By his second wife he had two daughters, one of whom married Jeremy Dummer. By his first wife he had seven children. John was of the governor's council and lived in Salem; Nathaniel graduated at Harvard in 1670, went to England, was employed in the tower, was governor of fort St. George in the East Indies, and at last a merchant in London, where he died in 1708; Thomas went to England and was a goldsmith, and sailing from Arabia was never heard of again; Francis was educated at Cambridge in England, and died young; and Henry, a merchant, died in Barbadoes in the West Indies, in 1685. At his ordination the hands of the deacons and one of the brethren were imposed in the presence of the neighboring churches and elders. Whether they united in this ceremony is not known, but Mr. Norton, of Boston, gave the right hand of fellowship. Mr. Higginson was at first zealous against the Quakers, and he lived to lament that his zeal was so warm. As a preacher he was highly respected. Judge Sewall calls him, "that aged and venerable divine;" and Dr. Mather speaks of him, in the eighty-eighth year of his age, as then performing the duties of his office with such manly, pertinent, judicious vigor, and with so little decay of his intellectual abilities, as excited admiration. In his worldly affairs he was often embarrassed, being supported during part of his ministry by voluntary contribution. It is considerable evidence of his good sense and of his benevolence, that he took no part in the proceedings relating to witchcraft in 1692. Some of his letters are in the Historical Collections, 3d series. He published an election sermon, entitled, the at Boston. He had long been pension agent, 1663; our dying Saviour's legacy of peace to his disciples in a troublesome world, with a discourse on the duty of Christians to be witnesses unto Christ, unto which is added some help to self-examination, 1686; an attestation to Dr. Mather's magnalia, or church history of New England, prefixed to that work, and dated, 1697; a testimony to the order of the gospel in the churches of New England with Mr. Hubbard, 1701; an epistle to the reader, prefixed to Hale's inquiry into the nature of witchcraft, 1702; a preface to Thomas Allen's invitation to thirsty sinners; the deplorable state of New England, 1708. - Magnalia. III. 66, 76; Coll. Hist. Soc. VI. 243, 244, 259-294, 271, 272; Sprague's Annals.

HIGHTOWN, JOSHUA, died in Marengo county. Ala., Aug., 1844, aged 126. Family records attest his age. He was wounded at Braddock's defeat, and was also a soldier of the Revolution.

HILDRETH, Hosea, died at Sterling July 10. 1835, aged 53. Born in Chelmsford in 1782, a graduate of Harvard in 1805, he was a minister for some years at Gloucester, Mass., afterwards secretary of the Massachusetts temperance society. He published discourse at Exeter academy, 1825; Dudleian lecture, 1829; lives of evangelists and apostles, 1830.

HILL, ABRAHAM, died at Oxford, Mass., June 8. 1788, aged 69. Born at Cambridge, he graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was the minister of Shutesbury from 1762 to 1778, when he was dismissed. Rand's sermon at his ordination was published. — Sprague's Annals.

HILL, HENRY, a merchant in Boston, died July 7, 1828, aged 92. He graduated in 1756.

HILL, EBENEZER, minister of Mason, N. H., died May 27, 1854, aged 88. He was born at Cambridge, Mass., Jan. 29, 1766, was graduated at Harvard in 1786, and ordained Nov. 3, 1790. He had been settled more than fifty years. He published a sermon on the death of Ruth Batcheller, another on the death of William K. Batcheller, 1811. Seth Payson's sermon at his ordination was published.

HILL, ISAAC, governor of N. II., died at Washington March 22, 1851, aged 63. Born in Cambridge, his parents removed when he was a boy to Ashburnham. With little education he became a printer, and as editor issued the New Hampshire Patriot in 1809. It gained a wide circulation and great influence in the party called republican. In 1829 Jackson appointed him second comptroller of the treasury; but the next year his nomination was rejected by the senate. In 1831 he was chosen senator for six years, but resigned in 1836 to accept the office of governor of N. II., to which place he was rechosen in 1837 and 1838. In 1840 he was sub-treasurer England, ace to his discourse ito Christ, examinaier's magl, prefixed timony to es of New epistle to to the na-Thomas ne deplor-Magnalia, go county, ecords at-3raddock's volution. g July 10, in 1782, a a minister afterwards erance soeter acad-; lives of 244, 259-

Iass., June he graduninister of he was disation was ston, died in 1756. n, N. 11., s born at graduated v. 3, 1790. ears. He ith Batch-K. Batchiis ordina-

, died at Born in he was a cation he the New d a wide rty called nted him the next e senate. years, but governor chosen in -treasurer n agent.

He and two sons established Hill's New Hamp- of Col. M. Woolsey, of Dosoris. — Bacon's shire Patriot, which was united with the Patriot in 1847. He published also the Farmer's Monthly Visitor.

HILL, WILLIAM, D. D., died in Winehester, Va., Nov. 16, 1852, aged 83. He was the minister of W. from 1800 to 1838, and afterwards in Alexandria and elsewhere. He was a powerful extemporaneous preacher; a man generous and impetuous. He opposed what is called the exscinding aet of his church in 1838, and joined the New School Assembly. For the last five years he lived in retirement with his children. N. Y. Observer, Dec. 2.

HILL, EBENEZER, died in Mason, N. H., May 20, 1854, aged 88. A native of Cambridge, a graduate of Harvard in 1796, he was the minister of M. sixty-three years, having a colleague seventeen years. - N. Y. Observer, July 6.

HILLHOUSE, WILLIAM, judge, died Jan. 12, 1816, aged 87. He was the son of James H., first minister of the second church in New London, now Montville, who was a native of Ireland, and was installed Oct, 3, 1722, and died in 1740. He was born in 1727, and was for fifty years a member of the legislature; for forty years a judge of the court of common picas, and also judge of probate. During the Revolutionary war he was one of the council of safety. His seat in the council he resigned in 1808, and died at Montville. He was a man of integrity, a Christian, and an unshaken patriot.

HILLHOUSE, JAMES ABRAHAM, a distinguished lawyer, the brother of the preceding, was born at New London about 1729. He was graduated at Yale college in 1749, and was tutor from 1750 to 1756. He afterwards practised law at New Haven, where he died Oct. 3, 1775, aged 46. His widow, Mary, died July, 1822, aged 87. He had a high reputation as an advocate, and was a zealous supporter of the rights of his country. His Christian life was exemplary; he was adorned by meckness, humility, and charity. - Holmes' Life of Stiles, 66.

HILLHOUSE, JAMES, LL. D., died of apoplexy, suddenly, at New Haven Dec. 29, 1832, aged 78. He was born at Montville Oct. 21, 1754, and was graduated at Yale in 1773. Having studied law, he took an active part in the Revolutionary struggle. A member of congress in 1791, he was chosen a senator in 1794, and continued in the senate sixteen years, resigning his seat in 1810. He was then commissioner of the school fund of Conn. for fifteen years. From 1782 for fifty years he was treasurer of the college. In 1825 he undertook the construction of the Farmington and Hampshire canal, in which Sketch.

HILLHOUSE, JAMES ABRAHAM, a poet, died at New Haven, Jan. 5, 1841, aged 51. The son of the preceding, he was graduated at Yale in 1808; and was distinguished for his acquirements, taste, and character. He published Percy's Masque, 1820; Hadad; and the judgment. His whole works were published in 2 vols., 12mo., 1839, entitled dramas, discourses, and other pieces.

HILLIARD, TIMOTHY, minister of Cambridge, Mass., died May 9, 1790, aged 43. He was born in Kensington, N. H., in 1746, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1764. In 1768 he was appointed chaplain of eastle William, and after officiating a few months was elected a tutor of the college, in which he was educated. He was ordained the minister of Barnstable April 10, 1771, as the successor of Mr. Green; but after continuing his benevolent exertions in this place for twelve years, respected and beloved by his people, he was induced in consequence of his impaired health, occasioned by the dampness of the sea air, to request a dismission, which was given him April 30, 1783. He was succeeded by John Mellen. On the 27th of Oct., he was installed at Cambridge, as colleague with Dr. Appleton. He was peculiarly well qualified for the conspicuous station, in which by Divine providence he was now placed; for he possessed an easy and pleasing elecution, and a devotional manner, and his discourses were pure in language, and replete with judicious sentiments, well arranged, instructive, and truly evangelical. But the power of doing good was continued to him but a few years. In the midst of his usefulness and with increasing reputation, he died suddenly. A short time before he expired, he expressed his full confidence in God, and said, that he enjoyed those consolations which he had endeavored to impart to others. While he was respected for his talents and acquisitions, and made himself pleasing in social intercourse, he also possessed an amiable temper, kind and sympathetic feelings, and tho genuine benevolence of the gospel. Though firm in the maintenance of his religious sentiments, he was yet conspicuous for his candor. He published two fast sermons, 1774; a sermon at the execution of three persons, 1785; at the ordination of Henry Ware, 1788; of Bezaleel Howard; of John Andrews, 1789; and a Dudleian lecture, 1788. — Willard's Funeral Sermon; Holmes' Hist. of Cambridge; Coll. Hist. Soc. 111. 16; VII. 63-67; Sprague's Annals.

HILLIARD, WILLIAM, the son of Rev. Timothy H., of Cambridge, was a bookseller in Camhe sunk much property, a railroad having taken bridge and Boston, and died at Cambridge. April the place of the canal. His wife was a daughter 27, 1836, aged 57. He was descended from Emanuel Hilliard of Hampton, N. H., who was lost with six others in a boat in 1657. In the old records his name stands Em. Hilliar. Timothy of Hampton, in 1686, was probably his son. Mr. William Hilliard was among the early and extensive booksellers of Boston, and was a man of great worth and highly respected. Through his purchase of the ancient libraries of monasteries in Germany, Dr. Homer procured valuable documents, illustrating the labors of the reformers in biblical learning. He left two sons, Francis, a lawyer in Boston, and William. He published address to charitable mechanic association, 1827; to masons, 1829. - Sprague's Annals.

HILLIARD, TIMOTHY, Episcopal minister in Portland, Me., the son of Rev. Timothy II., of Cambridge, died in Claremont, N. 11., Jan. 2, 1842, aged 64. He was born in Barnstable, graduated with his brother Joseph at Harvard in 1793, and was rector at Portland from 1803 to 1808.

HILLIARD, Joseph, the son of Rev. Timothy H., died at Berwick, Maine, in 1843, aged 69. He was graduated at Harvard in 1793, and was the minister of Berwick from 1797 to 1825, when he was dismissed.

HILLS, EBENEZER, a colored man, died in Vienna, N. Y., Aug. 3, 1849, aged 110. He was born a slave at Stonington, and was free at the age of 28. He served through the war, was in various battles, and was present at the surrender of Burgoyne. Can it be right to deny to such a man, of a black color, the right of voting, given to the most ignorant, freshly-arrived white Irishman?

HILLYER, Asa, D. D., minister of Orange, N. J., died Aug. 28, 1840, aged 76; a graduate of Yale in 1786. He was a native of Massa-

HILTON, EDWARD, the first settler of New Hampshire, was sent over by the proprietors of Laconia, with his brother William and David Thompson in 1623. He set up a stage for fishery at Dover. After fifteen or twenty years he removed to Squamseot patent, or Exeter, where he died about 1671, leaving an estate of 2200 pounds. He left sons Edward, William, Samuel, and Charles. His descendants and those of his brother are numerous in N. II. and Maine.

HILTON, WINTHROP, colonel, the grandson of the preceding, was killed by the Indians, while at work in the woods of Epping in 1710. He accompanied Church in his expedition in 1704; and in 1705, with two hundred and fifty English and twenty Indians, went against Norridgewock on snow shoes and burned the Indian wigwams and chapel. He was the son of Edward, and his mother Ann was the daughter of Rev. S. Dudley and Ann Winthrop, the son and daughter of Governors Dudley and Winthrop.

Plymouth, died at Barnstable in 1705, aged 75, He was the son of Samuel H., who lived in Scituate in 1636, removed to Parnstable in 1639, and died in 1662. He was born about 1630. He was chosen governor in 1680, and continued in office, except when interrupted by Andros, till the union of the old colony with Mass., in 1692. Among the manuscripts of the New England, or old south church library, which were deposited in 1817, in the historical library, are 3 vols. folio of papers, collected by Gov. Hinckley.

HINCKLEY, SAMUEL, register and judge of probate many years, died at Northampton in 1840. aged 83. He was a graduate of Yale in 1781, a descendant of Samuel, who lived in Scituate in HINDE, Doctor, family physician of General Wolfe, was a native of England, born in 1737. and was with Wolfe when he fell on the plains of Abraham Sept. 13, 1759. He afterwards settled in Virginia in the neighborhood of Patrick Henry, whom he accompanied, when he marched against Lord Dunmore. His practice as a physician and surgeon was extensive both in Virginia and Kentucky, whither he removed. He died in Newport, Ky., in 1829, aged 92. Educated an Episcopalian, he became a deist, and ridiculed Christianity. When his wife and daughter attached themselves to the Methodists, in his rage he banished his daughter from his house. and to eure his wife of her insanity he applied a blister to her spine. But, as he used to say, "God turned the huge blister upon his own heart." Her meekness and fortitude under this malignant eruelty awakened his attention to the religion which sustained her; and in the result he became a Methodist. For nearly half a century he was a devout adherent of that sect of Christians. No waking hour ever passed, whoever might be present, in which he did not utter some expression of admiration for the Christian faith. No patient was visited without first praying in secret for success, nor without assembling the family, on his arrival at the house, and praying for the recovery of the siek. - West. Journ. Med. and Phys. Sciences.

HINMAN, EPHRAIM, general, died in Roxbury, Conn., Dec. 11, 1829, aged 76. He was the son of David of Southbury; and removed in 1784 to Roxbury, where he was thirty years a merchant. He was a man of dignified appearance and was fond of military life; he was made brig-adier-general in 1805. The close of his life was marked by humility and attachment to the orthodox faith. One of the Hinman family, Royal R. Hinman, late secretary of Conn., now of the city of New York, is publishing, in successive numbers, a catalogue of the first Puritan settlers of Conn. No. 5 was published 1856.

HINCKLEY, THOMAS, the last governor of HINSDALE, ABEL K., missionary to the Nes-ged 75. in Scit-39, and 30. He inued in lros, till n 1692. land, or osited in folio of udge of in 1840, 1781, a ituate in General in 1737, ie plains ards setf Patrick marched ıs a phy-Virginia e died in cated an ridiculed daughter s, in his is house, applied a l to say, his own inder this on to the he result alf a cent sect of

sed, who-

not utter

Christian

irst pray-

sembling

and pray-t. Journ. in Roxe was the l in 1784 s a merpearance ade briglife was ie orthoy, Royal w of the uccessive settlers

the Nes-

ton, Conn., he graduated at Yale college in 1833; an essay on the Lord's supper; at the ordination in Jan., 1841, he sailed from Boston. He had a of A. Flint, 1791; of Jonathan Gould, 1793; of quenchiess zeal to promote God's glory, but he | E. Fiske, 1799; on the death of Washington; was permitted to toil only a short time in the missionary field.

HINSDALE, NANCY, Miss, died in Troy May 16, 1851, aged 82; a useful teacher of females. She was the daughter of Rev. Theodore II., of Windsor, Conn. In 1796 she commenced the buisness of teaching in Pittsfield, Mass. In 1830 she removed to Troy. In her last hours she exclaimed, "Blessed hope! blessed hope!" - N. Y. Observer, June 26.

HINSDELL, EBENEZER, a descendant of Robert Hinsdale of Dedham in 1638, and afterwards of Deerfield, died in 1763, aged about 56. He graduated at Harvard in 1727, and was ordained. with Stephen Parker and Joseph Seecomb, as a missionary to the Indians, in 1733, when Dr. Sewall preached the ordination sermon. -Sprague's Annals.

HITCHCOCK, GAD, D. D., minister of Pembroke, Mass., was graduated at Harvard college in 1743, and after a ministry of fifty-five years died Aug. 8, 1803, aged 85. He was frank, affable, and hospitable; in his old age many profited by his instructions. He published a sermon to a military company, 1757; at the ordination of E. Hitchcock, 1771; at the election, 1774; anniversary at Plymouth, Dec., 1774; Dudleian lecture, 1779.

HITCHCOCK, Exos, D. D., minister of Providence, Rhode Island, died Feb. 27, 1803, aged 58. He was a native of Springfield, Mass., and was graduated at Harvard college in 1767. He was ordained in 1771, a colleague of the aged Mr. Chipman, pastor of the second church in Beverly. At the commencement of the war his zeal for his country's rights induced him to become a chaplain in the American army. Believing that his duty to the public and to his family required that his connection with the church in Beverly should be dissolved, he was dismissed in 1780. In intervals of leisure from duty in the camp he preached at Providence, and was installed Oct. 1, 1783. Distinguished by active, habitual benevolence through life, at his death he bequeathed 2500 dollars for the establishment of a fund for the support of the ministry in his society. He paid great attention to the education of youth, and, while he wrote upon the subject, he projected and promoted the establishment of free schools. He was an excellent preacher and died in peace. He published a book of catechetical instructions and forms of devotion for children and youth; memoirs of the Bloomsgrove family, a work on education, 2 vols., 12mo., 1790; discourse on national prosperity; farmer's friend, 12mo., 1793;

torians, died in Dec., 1842. A native of Torring-| mon at the dedication of his meeting-house, 1795; of Mrs. S. Bowen, 1800. - Tappan's Sermon on his death.

HITCHCOCK, SAMUEL, died at Burlington, Vt., in 1814, or end of 1813, aged 59, a judge of the circuit court of the United States. He graduated at Harvard in 1777.

HITCHCOCK, SAMUEL J., judge, died at New Haven Aug. 31, 1845, aged 59. Born in Bethlehem, a graduate at Yale of 1809, he was a judge of a county court and the principal instructor in Yale college law school.

HITCHCOCK, HARVEY R., missionary to the Sandwich Islands, died in 1855.

HITE, ISAAC, major, an officer of the Revolutionary war, died at Bellegrave, Va., Nov. 30, 1836, aged 80.

HOAR, LEONARD, M. D., president of Harvard college, died Nov. 28, 1675, aged about 45. He was graduated in that seminary in 1650, and in 1653, went to England and took the degree of doctor in medicine at the university in Cambridge. He was afterwards settled as a minister of Wensted in Sussex, from which parish he was ejected for his nonconformity in 1662. He returned to this country in 1672, and preached a short time as an assistant to Thomas Thacher, at the south church in Boston. In July he was chosen president, to supply the loss of Mr. Chauney, and was inducted into this office Sept. 10th. As a scholar and a Christian he was very respectable; but being deficient in a spirit of government, and falling under the displeasure of a few men of influence in the neighborhood, the students were thus encouraged to array themselves against him, and his situation was rendered so unpleasant that he was under the necessity of resigning his office March 15, 1675. He was succeeded by Mr. Oakes. The injuries which he had suffered visibly affected his health, and induced a consumption, of which he died. While he was president, there was a contribution through the colony for erecting a new building for the college, and 1895 pounds were collected. A valuable letter of Dr. Hoar to Josiah Flint, giving him direction in his studies, is published in the collections of the historical society. - Magnalia, IV. 129; Collect. Historical Society, VI. 100-108.

HOAR, John, died at Concord, Mass., in 1701; he had lived there since 1660. Mrs. Rowlandson was by him restored from Indian captivity. His son, Daniel, was the great grandfather of Samuel, the following.

HOAR, SAMUEL, LL. D., died at Concord, Mass., Nov. 2, 1856, aged 78. Born in Lincoln May 18, 1778, he graduated at Harvard in the at a dedication; on education; new years; a ser- large and distinguished class of 1802. He practised law with success for more than half a | ton, died in 1707, aged 62. Born in Hirgham, century in Concord; and he was a respected and honored citizen, who was elected to various offices, the duties of which he most faithfully discharged. In the State he was a representative, councillor, and senator, and a member of congress in 1836. His mission to South Carolina is a matter of historical record. Some negro free citizens of Massachusetts, seamen in northern vessels, were imprisoned at Charleston for no crime, but under certain police regulations of the city concerning the blacks. The government of Massachusetts sent Mr. II. to harleston to commence a suit against the perpetrators of the offence in the United States court. He was prevented from executing his purpose by a mob of white citizens, who drove him from the city Dec. 5, 1844; and the legislature in a distant city on the same day passed resolutions, authorizing the governor to do what the mob had already done. To the slaveholders of the south, who subsist by the extorted labor of slaves, - inherited, or purchased, or begotten by themselves, and their own children, - the sacred obligations of the constitution in regard to the rights of all free citizens of the United States, whether of a lighter or darker hue, are deemed of no importance, compared with the imagined security of "their own institution," as in soft words slavery is called. It is to be hoped the day will come, when they will respect not only the rights of the Northern States but the lights of their own offspring and of the descendants of men kidnapped and brought to this country by the God-abhorred race of men-sicalers. Mr. Hoar was a worthy member of the Unitarian church in Concord. He took a leading part in the cause of temperance. His wife, who survived him, was a daughter of Roger Sherman of Conn. Judge E. Rockwood Hoar, named after a classmate, is his son, with two other sous and two daughters. His classmate, William Minot, has been asked to prepare a memoir of Mr. Hoar. He published a speech in congress on slavery in the district of Columbia, 1836.

HOBART, PETER, first minister of Hingham, Mass. the son of Edmund H., was born in Hingham, England, in 1604, and was educated at the university of Cambridge. After he began to preach, the impositions of the prelatical party induced him to come to this country. He arrived June 8, 1635, and in Sept. he began, with a number of 'is friends, a new plantation at Hingham. Here Lo continued till his death, Jan. 20, 1679, aged 74. Four of his sons were respectable ministers, Joshua of Southold, L. I., Jeremiah of Topsfield and Haddam, Gershom of Groton, Mass., and Nehemiah of Newton. - Magnalia, III. 153-155; Winthrop, III., 222; Sprague's Annals.

the son of Rev. P. II., he graduated at Harvard in 1667. He was settled in 1679, succeeding S. Willard, and was succeeded by D. Bradstreet, Trowbridge, Dana, and Chaplin.

HOBART, NEHEMIAH, minister of Newton, the son of Rev. Peter II., was born Nev. 21, 1648, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1667. After preaching two years at Newton, he was ordained Dec. 23, 1674, as successor of Mr. Eliot, and died Aug. 12, 1712, aged 63. Mr. Cotton succeeded him. He was humble, pious, and learned. He published a sermon entitled, the absence of the Comforter described and lamented. - Hist. Coll. v. 267-269; IX. 169.

HOBART, JEREMIAH, minister of Haddam, Conn., died in 1715, aged 84; or, by another account, in 1717, aged 86. He died on Sunday in his chair after returning from public worship. The son of Rev. Peter II., of Hingham, he graduated at Harvard in 1650, and afterwards became, from 1672 to 1680, the minister of Topsfield. Thence he removed, in 1683, to Hempstead, on Long Island; but, his people neglecting to give him adequate support, he left them, and was settled in the ministry at Haddam Nov. 14, 1700. One of his daughters was the mother of David Brainerd.

HOBART, Joshua, died at Scuthold, Long Island, in 1717, aged 88, in the forty-sixth year of his ministry. The son of Rev. Peter II., he graduated at Harvard in 1650, in the class of his younger brother, Jeremiah, and was ordained at Southold in 1674.

HOBART, NEHEMIAH, minister of Cohasset, died in 1740, aged 42; the son of David, and grandson of Rev. Peter H. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1714.

HOBART, NOAH, minister of Fairfield, Conn., died Dec. 6, 1773, aged 68, in the forty-first year of his ministry. He was the grandson of Rev. Peter H., and the son of David, of Hingham. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1724, and was ordained Feb. 7, 1733, as the successor of Joseph Webb. In a few years a number of persons in Fairfield county adopted the Episcopalian worship, separating themselves from the Congregational churches, and some of the Episcopal missionaries represented the ministers of the country as not the true ministers of Christ. In consequence of this he was induced to write upon the subject of Presbyterian ordination, and to vindicate its validity in a sermon, which he preached at the close of the year 1746. In answer to him Mr. Wetmore wrote his vindication of the professors of the church of England. A controversy now commenced, in which Mr. Hobart had for his opponents Dr. Johnson, Mr. Wetmore, Mr. Beach, and Mr. Caner. He contended that HOBART, GERSHOM, second minister of Gro- the inhabitants of the American plantations were irgham, rvard in eding S. adstrect,

Newton, 21, 1648, in 1667. he was Ir. Eliot. . Cotton ous, and tled, the amented.

Haddam, other acunday in worship. he grads became, Fopsfield. stead, on g to give l was set-14, 1700. of David old, Long th year of ., he gradass of his dained at Cohasset, avid, and graduate

ld, Conn., -first year of Rev. Hingham. in 1724, successor umber of e Episcofrom the the Episnisters of of Christ. to write ation, and which ho . In anindication land. A r. Hobart Wetmore. nded that ions were not obliged by any laws of God or man to conform to the prelatic church, as established in the south part of Great Britain; that it was not prudent to embrace the Episcopal communion; and that it was not lawful for members of the New England churches to separate from them and produce a schism. He also animadverted upon the conduct of the society for propagating the gospel in foreign parts, and upon the misrepresentations of its missionaries. This controversy lusted a number of years. He buried two wives, eight children, and 1093 parishioners. His first wife, whom he married Sept. 22, 1735, was Ellen Sloss. His relict, Priscilla, died at Plymouth July, 1798, aged 92. He was her third husband, as she was his third wife. In his life he exhibited the virtues and in his death the resignation and peace of the Christian. Not long before his departure from the world, as some one remarked to him that he was going to receive his reward, he replied, "I am going, I trust, to receive the mercy of God through Jesus Christ." He had few equals in this country for acuteness of genius and learning. A sound judgment, a retentive memory, and an uncommonly social and communicative temper, joined to a knowledge of books, and an extensive acquaintance with most branches of science, especially with history and divinity, which were his favorite studies, rendered his conversation very interesting and useful. In the public offices of religion he acquitted himself with graceful dignity, and with a solemnity which indicated a deep impression of the majesty of that Being, in whose presence he appeared. In his preaching he addressed himself to the understanding rather than to the imagination and passions, inculcating the great doctrines of regeneration, of repentance toward God and faith in Jesus Christ, and pressing with earnestness upon his hearers the necessity of that holiness, without which no man will be admitted to heaven. He published a sermon at the ordination of Noah Welles, 1747; a serious address to the members of the Episcopal separation in New England, 1748; election sermon, 1750; a second address to the members of the Episcopal separation in New England, 1751; a vindication of the piece entitled, the principles of Congregational churches, etc., applied to the ease of the late ordination at Wallingford, occasioned by remarks made thereon by Mr. Hart, 1761; on the execution of I. Frazier, 1768. -Welles' Funeral Sermon; Holmes; Sprague's Annals.

court of New York, was the son of the preceding, and died Feb. 4, 1805, aged 66, having sustained through life a blameless character. During the and confidential stations in New York. Mr. Jay, Mr. Hobart, and Mr. Yates were appointed the | HOBBY, WILLIAM, minister of Reading, Mass., three judges of the supreme court, first appointed after the Revolution. This place he held for a number of years. In 1798 he was chosen a senator of the United States.

HOBART, JOHN HENRY, D. D., bishop of New York, and professor of theology and eloquence in the theological seminary, died Sept. 12, 1830, aged 55. He was born at Philadelphia, and graduated at Princeton in 1793, and was a tutor from 1796 to 1798. After being for some years assistant minister of Trinity church, New York, he was consecrated bishop May 29, 1811. He was also rector of Trinity parish. The parish includes Trinity church, St. Paul's chapel, and St. John's; and the rector had three assistant ministers. Dr. Hobart's predecessors in the rectorship were Wm. Veazie from 1696 to 1746; Henry Barclay from 1746 to 1761; Sam. Auchmuty from 1764 to 1777; Charles Inglis, afterwards bishop of Nova Scotia, from 1777 to 1783; Sam. Provoost from 1783 to 1800; Benjamin Moore from 1800 to 1816. While at Auburn in the performance of his official duties, he died suddenly, and was buried at New York. His notions concerning the necessity of Episcopal ordination caused him to be ranked among the high-churchmen. He had a controversy on the subject with Dr. Mason, who wrote in the Christian's magazine; and a controversy with Rev. J. C. Jones, an Episcopalian, 1811. A collection of sermons on his death, with his life, was published in 1831. He published a companion for the festivals and fasts, 1804; a thanksgiving sermon; charge to the clergy, 1815; address to the New York Bible and common prayer-book society, 1816; to the Episcopal missionary society, 1817; sermons in 2 vols., 8vo., London, 1824; a discourse comparing the United States with England, 1825.

HOBBAMOC, an Indian, was a Pinese, or chief captain of Massassoit. He repaired to Plymouth in July, 1621, to live among the settlers as their friend, and he proved faithful till his death. He was the guide of Capt. Standish, when he went, Aug. 14th, against Corbitant at Namasket; and he fought bravely by his side in 1623. He also accompanied the governor to Manomet in 1623; and was the guide of Winslow and John Hampden when they visited Massassoit in the same year. Hubbard describes him as "a proper, lusty young man." - Hist. Coll.; Prince.

HOBBIE, Selah R., major, first assistant postmaster-general, died in Washington March HOBART, John Sloss, judge of the district 24, 1854, aged 57. He first served as a member of congress from Delaware county, N. Y. From 1829 to 1850, and subsequently, his services in the post-office department were very important. war he was placed in some of the most important His wife was a daughter of Gen. Root, of Delhi, died June 18, 1765, aged 57, in the thirty-third year of his ministry. His natural endowments and acquirements were uncommon. He preached with fluency, and copiousness, and fervor, and much promoted the cause of evangelical faith, which he zealously esponsed. As he went down to the grave, he had a joyful, triumphant hope of eternal life. He left behind him a serious address to his people, as from the dead, charging tuem to choose as his successor a faithful preacher of the gospel, which is in Massachusetts missionary magazine, v. 371-375. He published a vindication of the it heracy and conduct of Whitefield, 1745; self-examination in its necessity and advantages, 1746; artillery election sermor, 1747; vindication of the protest against Jonathan Edwards' dismission, 1751.

HODGE HANNAH, Mrs., died in Philadelphia Dec. 17, 1805, aged 84. She was a woman of memorable Christian excellence. She was of English and Huguenot descent, and became early pious, joining the church formed by Gilbert Tennent in Philadelphia in 1743, one of the first members, and for more than sixty years its ornament. She performed no deeds which gain the applause of the world; but the was a woman of deep piety and active benevolence. Her husband, who died in 1783, left act Lis estate, which, after her death, was to be a read for the education in Princeton college of poor young men, destined for the ministry. But she continued his business, the profits of which she expended in charity. She had good common sense, strong passions under control, great affability and kindness; and she was hum-

Lile and truly pious.— Assembly's Mayazine, 1806.
HODGES, A. W., a murderer, was hung in Tortola May 4, 1811, for whipping to death one of his slaves. Though the jury recommended him to mercy the governor would not listen to the recommendation. He was a member of the executive council.

HODKINSON, John, a distinguished theatrical performer, died at Washington in 1805, aged 38. He came from England in 1792. His wife, a distinguished actress, died in 1804. He published a narrative of the old American company of comedians.

HOFFMAN, JOSIAH OGDEN, judge, died at New York Jan. 24, 1837. He was a judge of the supreme court of the city.

HOFFMAN, MICHAEL, died at Brooklyn Sept. 27, 1848, aged 60. He lived first as a physician in Herkimer county, and was long a member of congress. He was a canal commissioner in 1833. For years a member of the assembly, he showed the talents of a debater, and statesman, and financier, and the honest devotion of a patriot to the interests of the State of New York.

HOFFMAN, DAVID, LL. D., died at New York same liberal and benevolent spirit 5,585 pounds.

was graduated at Harvard college in 1725, and died June 18, 1765, aged 57, in the thirty-third year of his ministry. It's natural endowments and acquirements were uncommon. He preached with fluency, and copiousness, and fervor, and much promoted the cause of evangelical faith, which he zealously espoused. As he went down

HOFFMAN, OGDEN, died in New York May 1, 1856, aged 62; a distinguished lawyer. He was a son of Judge Josiah Ogden Hoffman; he commenced the practice in Coshen. For years after 1836 he was a member of congress. His second wife, Virginia, Jaughter of S. L. Scuthard, survived him.

HOGE, Most s, D. D., president of Mostphen Siduey college, Virginia, died at Phitadelphia in July, 1820, aged 39. His son, Rev. Samuel Davies Hoge, professor of natural sciences in the university of Ohio, died at Athens, O., Dec. 25, 1826, aged 33. After the death of Dr. Moge, a volume of his sermons was published.

HOLBROOK, ABIAH, a schoolwaster in Boston, was master of the south writing school, and died Jan. 27, 1769, aged 50—tile was an exemplary Christian. He brought penmanship to a perfection before unknown in this country. A specimen of his skill is in the library of Harvard college.

HOLBROOK, Amos, Dr., died at Milton, Mass., in June, 1842, aged 88.

HOLBROOK, JOSIAH, died near Lynchburg, Va., by falling into Black Rock Creek while on a geological excursion, June 17, 1854, aged 65. He was born at Perby, and was a graduate of Yale in 1810. He devoted himself to the cause of popular education, and diffused a love of mineralogy.

HOLCOMB, REUBEN, minister of Sterling, Mass., died in 1826, aged about 72. He graduated at Yale in 1774, and succeeded J. Mellen in 1779. He left 1200 dollars to missionary and education societies, and 250 dollars to the ministerial fund of Boylston.

HOLCOMBE, HENRY, D. D., minister of the first Baptist church in Philadelphia, died May 22, 1821, aged 61.

HOLDEN, SAMUEL, a benefactor of the province of Massachusetts, died in London in 1740. A sermon on his death was preached in Boston by Dr. Colman, before the generout. Mr. Holder was at the head of the dissonters in England, and at the head of the bank of England. Such was his benevolence and regard to religion, that he sent to Dr. Colman thirty-nine sets of Baxter's practical works, in four massy folios, to be distributed among our churches. The amount of his charities for promoting the gospel and other useful purposes was 4,847 pounds. After his death his widow and daughters gave in the same liberal and benevolent suit 5 585 pounds.

in Baltiears pro-He pubıl outlines, tor, 1811; chronicles, er. Lit. fork May vyer. He ffman; he Por years

Max ipden delphia in annel Daes in the ., Dec. 25, r. Moge, a ress. His

Southard,

er in Boschool, and an exemnship to a ountry. A f Harvard ton, Mass.,

Lynchburg, while on a d 65. Ife ate of Yale eause of ve of min-

Sterling, He gradu-Mellen in onary and the minis-ster of the d May 22,

the provin 1740. in Boston urt. Mr. rs in Eng-England. o religion, e sets of v folios, to ne amount ospel and ls. After ve in the 5 pounds.

built by their donation. Mr. Holden was a man of unfeigned piety. He says in a letter: "I hope my treasure is in heaven, and would to God my heart were more there. Abstract from God and futurity, I would not accept of an eternity here in any given circumstances whatever." - Colman's Sermon.

HOLLAND, ABRAHAM, Dr., died at Walpole, N. II., March 1, 1847, aged 96. He was a graduate of 1779.

HOLLENBACK, MATTHIAS, judge, a patriot of the Revolution, died at Wilkesharre Feb. 18. 1829, aged 76. He was an early settler in the valley of Wyoming. When the valley was desolated by the Indians under Butler, he was one of the few who escaped, while his corps was mostly destroyed. In the Revolutionary army he was a licutenant, and afterwards engaged in the profession of the law. He had a sound judgment and much decision of character.

HOLLEY, HORACE, LL. D., president of Transylvania university, Kentucky, died July 31, 1827, aged 46. He was born in Salisbury, Conn., Feb. 13. 1781; was graduated at Yale college in 1803; in 1805 was ordained as the minister of Greenfield Hill, Fairfield, and in 1809 installed the minister of Hollis street, Boston. In 1818 he became the president of the university of Kentucky in Lexington, but was induced to resign his office in 1827. On his voyage to New York he died of the yellow fever. He was settled in Connecticut as a Calvinist; but, renouncing his early faith, he was at Boston a Unitarian. In Kentucky his religious views occasioned much excitement. Some accused him of being openly a Deist. It was found that the college would not flourish under his care. He published a discourse on the death of Col. James Morrison, 1823. His memoirs were written by his widow.

HOLLEY, MARY AUSTIN, died at New Orleans Aug. 2, 1846, widow of Rev. Horace II. She emigrated to Texas under the protection of Gen. S. T. Austin; and she published a history of Texas. HOLLINGSHEAD, WILLIAM, D. D., minister of Charleston, S. C., was the son of Wm. II., of Wakefield, Penn. He graduated at the university of Pennsylvania in 1770. About the year 1783 he succeeded Mr. Tennent as the pastor of the Congregational church in Charleston, where he died Jan. 26, 1817. J. Keith was associate pastor in 1788. He was a distinguished theologian. He published a sermon on opening the new meeting-house, 1787; on the advantages of public worship, 1794; commemorative of Gen. Moultrie, 1803. - Sprague's Annals.

HOLLIS, THOMAS, a most liberal benefactor of Harvard college, was born in England in 1659, of pious parents, and, being impressed by died Aug. 20, 1832.

Holden chapel for the college at Cambridge was | religious truth and having embraced the principles of the Baptists, was baptized in 1679. He died in Feb., 1731, aged about 72. He was for many years an eminent merchant, and, while success attended his exertions, it pleased God to incline him also to charitable and benevolent deeds in proportion to his wealth. He founded two professorships in Harvard college, the professorship of divinity and mathematics. He also presented a valuable apparatus for mathematical and philosophical experiments, and at different times augmented the library with many valuable books. In 1727 the net produce of his donation, exclusive of gifts not vendible, amounted to 4900 pounds, the interest of which he directed to be appropriated to the support of the two professors, to the treasurer of the college, and to ten poor students in divinity. The liberality of Mr. Hollis seemed to proceed from a pious heart. He says in a letter, after speaking of some of his efforts to do good: "I think not hereby to be justified. My rejoicing is in Christ, my God and Saviour." He also ascribes all that he was, "to rich, free, and sovereign, electing love." Being a Calvinist in his sentiments, he required his professor of divinity to be "of sound or orthodox principles." Still he was not governed by a sectarian spirit; he did not require the preference of his own Baptist denomination; but the professorship was open to every one, who, in his view, embraced the important and fundamental doctrines of the gospel. His first professor was Dr. Wigglesworth. His nephew, Thomas Hollis, who died in 1774, had a most ardent attachment to liberty, and endeavored to promote it by the publication and distribution of books which vindicate the rights of man, His benefactions to the library of Harvard college amounted to about 1400 pounds. - Colman's and Wigglesworth's Sermons; Greenwood's Discourse and Rudd's Poem on his death; Memoirs of T. Hollis, 1. 1; II. 598-601; Morse's True Reasons, etc.; Holmes.

HOLMES, John, minister of Duxbury, Mass., died Dec. 24, 1675. Although he was not a graduate of the college at Cambridge, he studied theology with President Chauncy in 1658; and soon succeeded R. Partridge, the first minister of Duxbury, and was the pastor about thirty-seven years. His successors were Wiswall, Robinson, Veazie, Turney, and Drs. Sanger and Allyn. As Elder Brewster built a house in D. and lived there for a time, some have regarded him as the first teacher of the people.

HOLMES, OBADIAH, Baptist minister, died at Newport, R. I., in 1682, aged 75. He was of Salem church before 1639, and became a Baptist at Rehoboth. His descendants were estimated at five thousand in 1790 .- Benedict's Hist. Baptists.

HOLMES, DAVID, governor of Mississippi,

HOLMES, ABIEL, D. D., died at Cambridge June 4, 1837, aged 73. A native of Woodstock, Conn., the son of Dr. David II., a patriot who died In 1779, he graduated at Yale in 1783; was pastor of a church in Midway, Geo., as successor of Moses Allen, from 1785 to 1791; and in 1792 was settled at Cambridge, Mass., over the first church, and remained pastor till 1832, when he was dismissed. His first wife was the daughter of President Stilen; his second the daughter of Judge Oliver Wendell. A memoir of him by Dr. Jenks, is in hist. coll., 3d series, vol. VII., to which is added a list of his numerous sermons and other writings, which also may be seen in Dr. Sprague's annals of the American pulpit. He published nearly thirty sermons and disquisitions; among them sermons on the deaths of Gov. Sumner, Washington, President Willard, and Drs. Tappan and Osgood; a century sermon, 1801; at Plymouth, 1806; on the landing at Plymouth, 1820; history of English translations of the bible; at ordination of D. Kendall, 1803; of W. Bascom, 1805; of J. Bartlett, 1811; of T. B. Gannett, 1814; of II. Hildreth, 1825; at the inauguration of E. Porter, 1812; two discourses on the second century, 1821; convention sermon, 1819; Dudleian lecture, 1810; to the antiquarian society. 1814; the life of Stiles, 1798; American annals, in 2 vols., 1805; a new edition, 1829. - Sprague's Annals.

HOLMES, John, died at Portland, Me., July 7, 1843, aged 70. He was born on Cape Cod, but in early life removed to Maine, and, residing at Alfred, became eminent as a lawyer. He was a distinguished member of the convention which framed the constitution of Maine, and its first senator. He was a representative in congress, 1817–1820; and senator, 1820–'27, and 1828–'33. At the time of his death he was district attorney for Maine. He was muny years a trustee of Bowdoin college.

HOLMES, JADEZ, M. D., died at Bristol, R. I, Nov. 4, 1851. He was vice-president of the medical society, and had been in extensive practice nearly forty years.

HÖLT, John, a printer in New York, died Jan. 30, 1784, aged 64. He was a native of Virginia, and settled as a merehant in Williamsburg, of which place he was elected mayor. Being unsuccessful in business, he repaired in 1760 to New York, where he published the New York Gazette and Postboy, and in 1760, the New York Journal. In the Revolution he was a firm whig; he was an excellent writer in favor of his country. While the British had possession of the city, he published his journal at Esopus and Poughkeepsie; he inserted in it Burgoyne's boastful proelamation, and subjoined,—"pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." By the enemy he lost much property. His widow printed a memorial of him on cards, which she distributed among her friends. — Thomas, II. 105.

HOLT, NATHAN, minister of Danvers, Mass., died Aug. 2, 1792, aged 67. Born in Andover, he graduated at Harvard in 1757, and was ordained Jun. 3, 1759. Rev. T. Phillips preached his ordination sermon.

HOLT, FIFIELD, minister of Bloomfield, Me., died Nov. 15, 1830, aged about 45. Born in Hollis, N. II., he graduated at Middlebury, 1810, and studied theology at Andover. He was settled in 1815 with liberty to employ half his time in missionary labors. For years he thus preached the gospel faithfully in the missionary settlements. His ardent feelings gave an acceptable unction to his public ministrations. He was familiar and affectionate. — Tappon's Sermon.

HOLT, Thomas, minister of Hardwick, Mass., died in 1836, aged 74. Born in Merlden, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1784, was settled in 1789, and was dismissed in 1805. He was then the minister of Chebacco church in Ipswich, from 1809 to 1813; and afterwards lived on a farm in Hardwick. He published a sermon at the ordination of Reed Paige.

HOLT, Peter, minister of Epping, died at Greenfield, N. H., March 25, 1851, aged about 80. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1700; and his classmate, Benjamin Hasey, a lawyer of Topsham, Me., died on the previous day, March 24th. He was twenty-eight years the minister of Epping, six at Exeter, and eight at Peterborough.

HOLT, CHARLES, an aged newspaper editor,

died at Jersey City July 30, 1852.

HOLTEN, Samuel, president of congress, was born in Danvers, Mass., June 9, 1738, and settled in that town as a physician. In the Revolution he zealcusty espoused the cause of his country, In 1778 he was elected a member of congress, and continued in that body five years. He was again elected in 1793; and in 1796 was appointed judge of probate for the county of Essex, which office he resigned in May, 1815, after having been in public stations forty-seven years. He died in Christian peace Jan. 2, 1816, aged 77. With a majestic form, a graceful person, and engaging manners, he was eminently popular. Of all the public and private virtues he was a bright example; and he was pious from early life.— Thacher.

HOLYOKE, EDWARD, president of Harvard college, died June 1, 1769, aged nearly 80. He was born in Boston, 1689, the son of Elizur. He was graduated in the seminary in 1705, and, after being a tutor for a few years, was ordained the minister, of a new society in Marblehead, April 25, 1716. He continued in this place until 1737, when he was elected president. He was inducted into this office as the successor of President Wudsworth Sept. 28th. He retained the vigor

ich she , 11. 105. , Mass., indover, was orreached

eld, Mc., Born ia ry, 1810, was sethis time preached lements. nction to iliar and k, Mass., n, Conn., ettled in was then rich, from a farm in the ordi-

, died at about 80. ; and his of Tonsarch 24th. of Epping, zh. er editor,

gress, was nd settled tevolution s country. congress,

He was appointed sex, which wing been Ie died in With a engaging Of all the bright exly life. -

Harvard 80. He izur. He and, after lained the ead, April intil 1737, s inducted President the vigor and discharged the duties of his station until a few months before his death. He was succeeded by Mr. Locke. As a minister of the gospel, while he contended for the free and sovereign grace of God in our salvation, he was also zealous for good works, and by his benevolence, uprightness, and the uniform integrity of his conduct he exemplifield the lessons, which he inculcated upon others. His excellence as a preacher was such as gained him a high reputation. At the head of the university he possessed a dignity peculiar to himself. His majestic appearance, his speech, and demeanor were calculated to impress with awe; but, notwithstanding his air of dignity and authority, he was humble in heart. He sought not praise from men, but endeavored to secure the approbation of God. Having a vigorous constitution, and knowing the value of time, his hours were appropriated to particular duties, and he was remarkable for his punctuality, exactness, and order. He was eminent in the various walks of literature, but he principally excelled in acquaintance with mathematics and natural philosophy. He published an election sermon; at the ordination of J. Diman, 1737; at a convention of ministers, 1741; an answer to Mr. Whitefield, 1744. - Appleton's Sermon on his death; Sewall's Orat. Funeb.; Hist. Coll. viii. 70-75; x. 158; Holmes; Sprague's Annals.

HOLYOKE, EDWARD AUGUSTUS, M. D., a physician of Salem, Mass., son of the preceding, was born in Marblehead Aug. 13, 1728, graduated at Harvard college in 1746, and died at Salem March 31, 1829, aged 100 years and between 7 and 8 months. He was born just one hundred years after the settlement of Salem. He was married, first in 1755, and a second time in 1759. By his second wife he had twelve children, of whom only two survived him. He had been a practising physician in Salem seventy-nine years; for two years he had no case excepting a whitlow; for many years he had almost all the practice in the town; on some days he made one hundred visits, and at one period, as he said, there was not a dwelling-house in Salem which he had not visited professionally. He enjoyed during his long life almost uninterrupted health, which may be ascribed to his exercise, and great temperance, to the calmness and cheerfulness of his disposition, his virtuous practice, and his pious sentiments. On his centennial anniversary, Aug. 13, 1828, about fifty medical gentlemen of Boston and Salem gave him a pubfic dinner, when he appeared among them with a firm step and cheerful look. He smoked his pipe with them at the table, and gave an appropriate toast relating to the medical society and its members. A memoir of his life and character has been published.

HOLYOKE,

of his mind and considerable strength of body, Mass., died in 1806, aged 75. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1769; he was settled in 1759.

HOLYOKA' SAMUEL, a teacher of music, died at Concord, N. H., in Feb., 1820. He graduated at Harvard 1789. He published Columbian repository of sacred harmony; occasional music, Exeter, 1802.

HOMER, GEORGE JOY, died in Boston June 7, 1815, aged 63. He was a merchant of the firm of Homes & Homer, and a man of unceasing and memorable beneficence. Even when young, with an income of 500 dollars, he gave half of it in charity; and in this runner he gave through life. His son, Rev. B. Homer, died before him.

HOMER, JONATHAN, D. D., died at Newton, Mass., Aug. 11, 1843, aged 84. He was descended from John, who came to Boston in 1670. His father was Michael, a mason. He graduated at Harvard in 1777. He was pious and learned. His great affliction was the loss of his son, Jonathan, a graduate of 1803, who died the next year. He devoted much time to a comparison of old editions of the Bible. A part of Dr. Codman's sermon on his death was published in the Boston Recorder of Aug. 17. He published artillery election sermon, 1790; a century sermon, Dec 25, 1791; a history of Newton in hist. coll., vol. 1; mourner's friend, a sermon, 1793; the way of God vindicated, on the death of his only child, 1804; before the society for promoting Christian knowledge, 1828. - Sprague's Annals.

HOMER, WILLIAM BRADFORD, minister of South Berwick, Me., died March 22, 1841, aged 24. He had been settled only four months. He graduated at Amherst in 1836. His father was George J. Homer of Boston; his mother was a descendant of Gov. Bradford. His writings were edited by E. A. Park, who also published a memoir of him, 2d ed., 1849.

HOMER. ELMIRA, the last of the Turkey Hill Indians, died at the ancient wigwam of the tribe in New Milford, Conn., in Dec., 1852. About the same time died Sally Maminash, the last of the Indians at Northampton. HCMES, WILLIAM, minister of Martha's Vineyard, died June 20, 1746, aged 83. He was born in 1663 in the north of Ireland, and was liberally educated. He came to this country in 1686, and taught a school three years on the Vineyard; then returned to Ireland and was ordained in 1692 the minister of Strabane. He came again to this country in 1714, and in 1715 was settled at Chilmark, where he died. His son, Capt. Robert Homes, married Mary, a sister of Dr. Franklin; a daughter married Col. Jonathan Allen of Chilmark. He was a learned, judicious, orthodox theologian, attached to the Presbyterian forms, and eminently pious. He published a sermon on the ELIZUR, minister of Boxford, Sabbath; on the public reading of the Scriptures; on church government, 1732; on secret prayer; on the government of Christian families, 1717.

HOMES, HENRY, died in Middleborough, Mass., Oct. 19, 1815, aged 69. His father, William, died in Boston in 1825, aged 83; and his father, William, a goldsmith, who married Rebecca, daughter of Thomas Dawes, died in 1789, aged 69. The last was the son of Capt. Robert, who married Mary, the sister of Dr. Franklin; and he was the son of Rev. W. Homes of Martha's Vineyard. -He was senior partner of the firm of Homes, Homer & Co., Boston. George J. Homer died a short time before him, June 7, 1845. Of such integrity was he, that he received from London a very honorable token of respect from a house, with which he had for forty or fifty years transacted business. He was a man of benevolence, charity, and piety, - one of the founders of Park street church. For more than forty years he and his partner were not only united in business but in Christian labors. Before the tract society was formed, their store was a depository of religious tracts; before the education society, they were accustomed to make loans to young men. The writer of this has now in his library a folio Greek testament, given to him as a student in theology half a century ago by Mr. Homes. He accumulated property - not for self-indulgence but to do good with it from day to day, in a multitude of charitable ways, instead of reserving it for a huge, fame-drawing bequest. To what laymar, has the religious state of Boston for the last half-century been more indebted than to Henry Homes? His son was the well-known missionary in Constantinople. His last words were, "Lord Jesus, come quickly!"- Dr. E. Beecher's Serm. on his death in Recorder, Oct. 30.

HONE, PHILIP, died at New York, May 5, 1851, aged 70; a merchant and philanthropist.

HONEYWOOD, St. John, a poet, died Sept. 1, 1798, aged 33. He was born in Leicester, Mass., in 1764. His father, a man of literature, who came from England, died as a surgeon in the American army at Ticonderoga in 1776. By the generosity of individuals he was educated, and was graduated at Yale college in 1782. Having studied law at Albany, he settled in the practice at Salem, N. Y., where he died. His miscellaneous writings, prose and verse, were published in 1801. - Specimens American Poetry, II. 43.

HONTAN, BARON LA, a traveller, was an officer of the French army, and first went out to Quebee in 1683. For four years he was stationed chiefly at Chambly, fort Frontenae, Ningara, St. Joseph at lake Huron, and the Sault de St. Marie. In 1688 he was at Michilimackinae, and at Green Bay in 1689, and thence he proceeded to the Mississippi. Some of his accounts are the inventions of a traveller, particularly his account of Long he established a grammar school, and continued river, which he ascended eighty-four days, and of to exert his whole influence for the Christian various tribes of Indians. He was an infidel as to religion. His travels were published in French 2 vols., 12mo., 1705; and in English, 1732.

HONYMAN, ROBERT, M. D., a physician, was a native of Scotland; for some years was a surgeon in the British navy; came to this country in 1771, and settled in Louisa, Virginia; was for a time a surgeon in the army; and after most skilful medical toils for half a century, died in 1824. He read the Greek, Latin, French, and Italian, and with unwearied industry read almost all the most valuable books in English, making extraordinary attainments in literature. His life was honorable and upright. — Thacher.

HOOKE, WILLIAM, minister of New Haven, after he came to this country was a preacher at Tamton: was settled at New Haven in 1644, the colleague of Davenport; returned to England in 1656 and was Cromwell's chaplain; and died March 21, 1678, aged 77. He was by marriage a cousin of Cromwell, and brother-in-law of G. Whalley. He published a discourse on the witnesses; also, New England's tears for old England's fears, a fast sermon at Taunton, July 23, 1640. His description in this sermon of the horrors of a civil war and of the battle field is very striking. "Here ride some dead men, swagging in their deep saddles; there fall others alive upon their dead horses; death sends a message to those from the mouth of the muskets. In yonder file is a man, that hath his arm struck off from his shoulder, another by him hath lost his leg; here stands a soldier with half a face, there fights another upon his stumps. A day of battle is a day of harvest for the devil." He published also a sermon on Job II.: 12, in 1641; a sermon in New England in behalf of Old England, 1645; the privileges of the saints on earth beyond those in heaven, 1673; a discourse of the gospel day; the slaughter of the witnesses; a sermon in the supplement to the morning exercises. - Bacon's Historical Discourse; Sprague's Annals.

HOOKER, THOMAS, the first minister of Cambridge, Mass., and one of the founders of thecolony of Connecticut, died of an epidemical fever July 7, 1647, aged 61. He was the son of Thomas, and was born in Leicestershire, England, in 1586, and was educated at Emanuel college, Cambridge. In his youth he had such a deep sense of his guilt, as filled his mind with anguish; but at length he found peace through the blood of the Redeemer, and an exemplary life of piety and goodness proved that his hope would not make him ashamed. After preaching for some time in London, he was chosen lecturer and assistant to Mr. Mitchell at Chelmsford in 1626. He was reremarkably successful in his labors; but, being silenced in about four years for his nonconformity, fidel as French 9 an, was a suruntry in as for a ost skiln 1824. Italian, all the extraor-life was

Haven, cher at 644, the gland in md died marringe aw of G. the witdd Engm, July rmon of ttle field ad men, all others ls a meskets. In truck off lost his ice, there of battle published a sermon nd, 1645; and those spel day;

n in the

- Bacon's

s. r of Cams of the ical fever Thomas, , in 1586, mbridge. se of his ; but at od of the icty and not make e time in sistant to e was reut, being nformity. ontinued

Christian

neighborhood petitioned the bishop of London on his behalf; but Lau has of too imperious and determined a spirit to suffer any circumstance to shake him from his purpose, when he had an opportunity to lay his hands upon a Paritan. Mr. Hooker was obliged to flee to Holland about the year 1630, and he preached sometimes at Delft, and sometimes at Rotterdam, being an assistant to the celebrated Dr. Ames.

In 1633 he came to New England in company with Mr. Cotton and Mr. Stone, and was settled with the latter at Newton, or Cambridge, October 11, being ordained by the imposition of the hands of the brethren of the church. In June, 1636, he removed with a hundred others to a fertile spot on the banks of the Connecticut river, which they called Hartford, having travelled through the wilderness with no other guide than a compass. In this new colony he had great influence in establishing the order of the churches. As he was dying, he said, "I am going to receive mercy;" and then closed his own eyes, and expired with a smile on his countenance. He was a remarkably animated and interesting preacher. With a loud voice, an expressive countenance, and a most commanding presence, he delivered the truths of God with a zeal and energy seldom equalled. He appeared with such majesty in the pulpit, that it was pleasantly said of him, that " he could put a king into his pocket." He has been called the Luther and Mr. Cotton the Melanethon of New England. It was his custom, it seems, to preach without his notes. On a visit to Massachusetts in May, 1639, he preached on the Sabbath at Cambridge, and Governor Winthrop went from Boston to hear him. Having named his text io the afternoon, he proceeded about a quarter of an hour with great loudness of voice and vehemence of manner, when suddenly he found himself entirely at a loss what to say. After several ineffectual attempts to proceed, he observed to the assembly, that what he intended to have spoken was taken from him, and, requesting them to sing a psalm, withdrew for half an hour. He then returned and preached about two hours with wonderful pertinency and vivacity. After the sermon, he said to some of his friends, "We daily confess, that we can do nothing without Christ; and what if Christ should prove this to be the fact before the whole congregation ?" Dr. Ames declared, that he never met with Mr. Hooker's equal either in preaching or cause. Forty-seven conforming clergymen in his he listened, and such solemn truths reached his ears, as by the blessing of God were the means of his salvation. Though his own preaching was generally very practical and experimental, he advised young ministers to preach the whole system of divinity, both for their own benefit and that of their people. In the government of the church he would propound nothing for decision till it had been previously considered by some of the principal brethren, and said, "The elders must have a church in a church, if they would preserve the peace of the church." Though naturally irascible in his temper, he acquired a remarkable command of his passions. He was condescending, benevolent, and charitable. It was no uncommon act of beneficence with him to give five or ten pounds to the necessitous. At a time when there was a great searcity at Southampton upon Long Island, he with some friends sent the inhabitants a small vessel, freighted with corn. His benevolence was united with piety. One day in every month he devoted to private prayer and fasting, and ho used to say, that prayer was the principal part of a minister's work. In his family he exhibited a lively devotion, and all, who resided under his roof, were instructed and edified by him. His sister, Dorothy, married in England John Chester, the father of Leonard. Another sister, Mary, married Rev. Roger Newton of Farmington.

While he lived in his native country, he was invited to preach in the great church of Leicester, and one of the chief burgesses set a fiddler in the churchyard to disturb the worship. Mr. Hooker elevated his voice to such a pitch and spoke with such animation, as to rouse the euriosity of the man and attract him to the church door. There 38-41; Trumbull's Connect., I. 10, 48, 55, 306.

> His most celebrated work, entitled, a survey of the sum of church discipline, was published in England in 4to., 1648, under the inspection of the famous Dr. Thomas Goodwin, who says, "As touching this treatise and the worthy author of it, to preface any thing by commendation of either were to lay paint upon burnished marble, or add light unto the sun." In this work Mr. Hooker contends, that each church has in itself full power to exercise all church discipline, but that there is a necessity for consociations, which may proceed against a church, pertinaciously offending, with a sentence of non-communion. Mr. John Higginson transcribed from his manuscripts about two hundred sermons, and sent them to England; and near one-half of them were published. Tho titles of some of his discourses and treatises are the following: the soul's preparation for Christ; the soul's humiliation; exaltation; vocation; implantation; the unbeliever preparing; of selfdenial; duty and dignity of saints; on the Lord's prayer; on church discipline; four treatises on the earnal hypocrite, the church's deliverance, the deceitfulness of sin, the benefits of afflictions, 1638; the soul's possession; pattern to perfection; saint's guide; the application of redemption; on Christ's last prayer, 1656; and the poor, doubting Christian drawn to Christ. The seventh edition of this last excellent work was published at Boston in 1743. — Magnalia, III. 58-68; Hist. Coll., VII.

HOOKER, SAMUEL, the second son of Rev. Thomas Hooker, and the second minister of Farmington, Conn., died in 1697, aged about 65. He graduated at Harvard in 1653, and was ordained the successor of Roger Newton in 1658, according to one account, in July, 1661, according to another. As Mr. Newton was installed at Milford In 1660, if Mr. II, was ordained in 1658, it must have been as his colleague. He was a fellow of Harvard college. Of his eleven children Mary married Rev. Mr. Pierpont, of New Haven, and was the mother of Sarah, the wife of Jonathan Edwards. - Spragne's Annals.

HOOKER, NATHANIEL, minister of West Hartford, Conn., died June 9, 1770, aged 32, and was succeeded by Mr. Perkins. He was the son of Capt. Nathaniel, a descendant of Thomas II.: his mother was Eunice, a daughter of Gov. Talcott. A graduate of Yale in 1755, he was ordained in Dec., 1757. He was a diligent, faithful minister. A scholar, and having a lively fancy, his discourses abounded in imagery. His sentiments were liberal and catholic. Feeble in health for eight years, he sometimes had transports in his views of future glory. He left a daughter, but no son. He had brothers, James and Horace. He published a sermon, "the invalid instructed," 1763. Six of his sermons were published in 1771.

HOOKER, John, minister of Northampton, Mass., was a descendant of Thomas II., being his great grandson, and was a native of Farmington. The son of John, who was the grandson of Rev. S. H., of Farmington, he was graduated at Yale college in 1751, and was ordained at Northampton in 1754. After a ministry of about twenty-three years, he died of the small pox Feb. 6, 1777, aged 48, deeply regretted by the people of his charge, who, in testimony of their affection and his virtues, creeted a handsome monument to his memory. Having early imbibed the genuine spirit of Christianity, he uniformly exhibited the evidence of it in his life. He was an able and faithful minister, of distinguished learning, penetration, and prudence, of uncommon suavity of temper, and the most engaging manners. His widow, Sarah, daughter of John Worthington, of Springfield, died in 1817, aged 85. He published a sermon at the ordination of Thomas Allen, of Pittsfield, 1764, and a sermon on the death of John Hunt, of Boston, 1776, both of which sermons furnish honorable testimony of his piety and talents. - Sprague's Annals.

HOOKER, ASAHEL, minister of Norwich, Conn., died April 19, 1813, aged 51. He was a descendant of Thomas II., and was born in Bethlem in 1762. After the age of twenty he became a member of the church in Farmington, whither his parents had removed. His own efforts to obtain an education were aided by the benevolence port in the summer of 1637. He soon removed of others. He was graduated at Yale college in 1789, and was ordained in Sept., 1791, of Goshen, where, in 1799, his bases were eminently blessed, about eighty perso, a heing added to the church. There was also a revival in 1807. At this period of his life about twenty young men studied theology with him. In correquence of ill health he was dismissed in Jun , 1810. Jan. 16, 1812, he was installed at Chrisen, or Norwich city, as the successor of Walter King, who had been dis-But he died the next year. His wife was Phebe, daughter of Timothy Edwards, of Stockbridge. His only son is Prof. Edward W. Hooker, D. D., the minister of Hennington. Vt. One of his daughters is the widow of Elias Cornelius; another married Rev. Dr. Peck. Mr. Hooker was succeeded by Alfred Mitchell. He published five occasional sermons, among which are a sermon at the election, 1805; at the ordination of John Keep, 1805; of James Heach, 1806. - Panoplist, xt. 43, 07, 145; Sprague's Annals. HOOKER, THOMAS, Dr., died in Rutland, Vt.,

April 14, 1836, aged 57. His wife was Sally, a daughter of Col. John Brown, of the Revolution. His son is the minister of Falmouth, Mass.

HOOPER, WILLIAM, minister in Boston, died April 14, 1767. He was a native of Scotland, and was first settled May 18, 1737, as the Congregational minister of the west church, and then Episcopal minister of Trinity church Aug. 28, 1747, as successor of A. Davenport, the first rector. His successors were Walter, Parker, and Gardiner. He had talents and eloquence. He published, the Apostles neither impostors nor enthusiasts, 1742; a sermon on the death of Thomas Greene, 1763.

HOOPER, WILLIAM, a patriot of the Revolution, son of the preceding, died Oct., 1790, aged 48. After graduating at Harvard college in 1760. he studied law with James Otis, and settled at Wilmington, N. C. In 1774 he was elected a member of congress, and drew up in 1775 the address to the inhabitants of Jamaica. In 1776 he signed the Declaration of Independence. His embarrassed private affairs induced him to resign his place in Feb., 1777. - Goodrich.

HOOPER, LUCY, Miss, died at Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 1, 1841, aged 25. Born in Newburyport, she lived in her last ten years in Brooklyn. Her poetical works were published in 1848. - Cycl. Amer. Lit.; Loston Recorder, Aug. 21, 1856.

HOOPER, ROBERT, died at Marblehead June 2, 1843, aged 77. He was highly esteemed, a man of integrity and disinterestedness, and a devout Christian.

HOPKINS, EDWARD, governor of Connecticut, and a benefactor of Harvard college, died in 1657, aged 57. He was an eminent merchant in London, and arrived at Boston with Mr. Davenllege in Closhen, blessed. church. period d theolalth he 1812, he , as the en disr. His dwards, Edward nington. of Elias k. Mr. ell. He g which e ordinach, 1806, Annals. and, Vt., Sally, a volution. 88.

ton, died land, and ongregand then Ang. 28, first recker, and nce. He s nor en-Thomas

Revolu-90, aged in 1760, ettled at elected a 5 the ad-1776 he cc. His to resign yn, N. Y., buryport, n. Her - Cycl. 1856. ead June eemed, a and a demeeticut, died in rehant in . Davenremoved self at Hartford, than to join Mr. Davenport and Mr. Eaton, whose daughter-in-law he married, at New Haven. He was chosen a magistrate in 1639, and governor of Connecticut every other year from 1640 to 1654. Mr. Haynes was the alternate governor. He afterwards went to England, where he was chosen warden of the English fleet, commissioner of the admiralty and navy, and a member of parliament. He died in London. His young wife, the sister of David Yale, a merchant of Boston, became deranged about 1642, and died in 1698. Governor Winthrop says, she had written many books, and he aseribes the loss of her reason to her "giving herself wholly to reading and writing;" and he adds, that if she had attended her household affairs, and not "meddled in such things as are proper to men, whose minds are stronger, etc., she had kept her wits." He was a wise and upright magistrate, and a man of exemplary piety and extensive charity. He bequeathed most of his estate in New England, estimated at about 1000 pounds, to trustees in Connecticut, for the support of grammar schools in New Haven and Hartford; and 500 pounds out of his estate in England for promoting the kingdom of the Lord Jesus, which donation was considered as made to Harvard college and the grammar school in Cambridge, and, by virtue of a decree in chancery, was paid in 1710. With this money real estate was purchased in a township named Hopkinton, in honor of the donor, and the legislature of the State has made such addition to the fund, that six bachelors may now reside at Harvard college, and seven boys at the grammar school. - Magnalia, II. 22-25; Hutchinson, I. 82, 101; Trumbull, I. 241.

HOPKINS, SAMUEL, minister of West Springfield, Mass., died Oct. 6, 1755, aged 61, in the thirty-sixth year of his ministry. He was graduated at Yale college in 1718, and was ordained June 1, 1720. He was much beloved and esteemed. His wife was Esther, a daughter of Rev. Timothy Edwards. One of his daughters, Hannah, married Col. Worthington. He published historical memoirs relating to the Housatunnuk Indians, or an account of the methods used for the propagation of the gospel among that heathenish tribe under the ministry of John Sergeant, etc., 4to., 1753. - Breck's Cent. Serm.;

Sprague's Address.

HOPKINS, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Hadley, Mass., son of the preceding, was born Oct. 20, 1729; was graduated at Yale college in 1749, and was tutor; was ordained Fcb., 1755; and after a ministry of fifty-six years died March 8, 1811, aged 81. He had a paralysis in 1809, and in 1810, John Woodbridge was ordained as his colleague. His first wife was the reliet of Rev. ignorance and of his sin impelled him to seek to Connecticut, choosing rather to establish him- | Chester Williams and daughter of Col. Porter; his second was Miss Margaret Stoddard. The daughter of Mrs. Williams, his wife, married Rev. N. Emmons. Of his eight children by his first wife, four were married to ministers; to Des. Spring and Austin, L. Worcester, and W. Eldock His character and useful labors were described by Dr. Lyman in a funeral sermon. He published discourses on infant membership; a half-century sermon, 1805. - Sprugue's Cent. Address at W. Springfield; Sprague's Annals. HOPKINS, SAMUEL, D. D., an eminent theologian, from whom the Christians, called Hopkinsians, derive their name, died at Newport Dec. 20, 1803, aged 82. He was a descendant of John II., one of the first settlers of Hartford, by Stephen of Hartford, John of Waterbury, and next his own father Timothy of Waterbury; and not a descendant of Gov. Hopkins. He was born in Waterbury, Conn., Sept. 17, 1721. He lived with his parents, employed in the labors of agriculture, until he entered his fifteenth year; and such was the parity of manners among the youth of this place, that he never heard from any of them a profane expression. After having been placed for a short time under the tuition of Mr. Graham of Woodbury, he entered Yale college, where he was graduated in 1741. While a member of that institution he made a public profession of religion. He diligently studied the Scriptures and was constant in his secret devotions; but he was afterwards convinced, that he did all this without any true love to the character of God, and that as yet he was ignorant of that religion, which has its seat in the heart. It was during the remarkable attention to the things of a better world, excited in the college and town of New Haven by the preaching of Mr. Whitefield and Gilbert Tennent in the year 1741, that his false confidence was shaken. Such was the extraordinary zeal for religion, which was at that time called into action, that a number of the members of the college were impelled to visit their fellow students without regard to the distinction of classes, and to speak to them of the important concerns of eternity. At this period David Brainerd, then a student, entered the room of Mr. Hopkins, and though he could draw nothing from him and found him completely reserved, yet he made a remark, which sunk into his heart. He observed, that it was impossible for any man to be a real Christian, who was not sometimes deeply affected in contemplating the character of Christ. Mr. Hopkins could not but admit, that a warm affection for the Redeemer would exist in those who had been saved by him from their sins, and, as he was conscious of no such love to the Son of God, he became convinced, that he was destitute of the spirit of the gospel. The sense of his

was enlightened with the knowledge of the way ished that he had no prospect of a maintenance. of salvation. The character of Jesus Christ, as a mediator between God and man, filled him with joy, to which he had before been a stranger. Still, he did not include the hope that he was a Christian. His mind was for some time principally occupied by the consideration of his unworthiness, helplessness, and guilt. Many whole days he spent in fasting and prayer. In Sept., 1741, he retired to his father's house, and lived a rechise for a number of months, except when he eould hold intercourse with persons zealous in religion. In Dec., he went to Northampton, to pursue the study of divinity with Mr. Edwards. In July, 1743, he went to Houssatonnoc, now Great Barrington, where he was ordained Dec. 28, 1743. At this time there were only thirty families in the place. Here he continued till Jan. 18, 1769, when he was dismissed by an ecclesiastical council. This event was occasioned by the diminution of his society and the want of support. An Episcopal church had been established in the town in order to escape the tax for the maintenance of a minister of the gospel. He was again settled in the ministry at Newport, R. I., April 11, 1770. There were some circumstances, attending his establishment in this place, which were remarkable, and which prove that the hearts of all men are in the hands of God, and may be turned, as the rivers of water are turned. After he had been with this people some time, a meeting was called, and it was voted not to give him an invitation to settle among them. Many were dissatisfied with his sentiments. He accordingly made his preparations to leave them, and on the Sabbath preached a farewell discourse. This sermon was so interesting and impressive, that a different vote was immediately and almost unanimously passed, and he consented to remain. For about four years he was unwearied in the discharge of his pastoral duties, preaching a lecture every week in addition to the services of the Sabbath, and seizing every opportunity to impart religious instruction. The war of the Revolution interrupted his benevolent labors. In Dec., 1776, when the British took possession of Newport, he left the town, and retired to his family, which he had before sent to Great Barrington. During the summer of 1777 he preached at Newburyport in a congregation, which was thought to be the largest in America. Its pastor, Mr. Parsons, died a short time before. He afterwards preached in Canterbury and Stamford. In the spring of 1780 he returned to Newport, which had been evacuated by the British in the fall of the preceding year. He found his church ing sinners to use the means of grace in order to and congregation much diminished. The meeting-house had been made a barrack for soldiers. That portion of his former society, which had use of the means of grace they would be entirely instruction and supplicate mercy. At length he | remained in the town, had become so impover-Yet such was his benevolence, that he preached to them a year, supported entirely by a few generous friends, and, when he received a pressing invitation to settle at Middleborough, the request of his people induced him to decline it. From this time till his death his maintenance was derived entirely from a weekly contribution and the donations of his friends. But he was contented with his humble circumstances, and in a situation. which would have filled most minds with the greatest anxiety, he cast himself upon the providence of God, and experienced through a course of years many remarkable interpositions in his favor. His wants were always supplied. Jan., 1799, a paralytic affection deprived him of the use of his limbs, although his mental powers were uninjured. But he afterwards recovered from this attack, so as to be able to preach.

> Dr. Hopkins was a very humble, pious, and benevolent man. His views of his own character were always very abasing. This humility pervaded his whole conduct. It preserved him from that overbearing zeal which is the offspring of self-confidence and pride. In his intercourse with persons of sentiments different from his own, he exhibited the greatest mildness and candor. As truth was his object, and he never disputed for victory, he sometimes carried conviction to an opponent by the force of arguments. He sympathized in the distresses of others. He took delight in relieving the wants of the poor. Though he had but little to bestow, yet many were gladdened by his liberality. On one occasion he contributed 100 dollars for promoting the gospel among the Africans. His life was spent chiefly in meditation; his preaching had but little effect. He sometimes devoted to his studies eighteen hours in a day. With respect to his views of divine truth, he embraced the Calvinistic doctrines; and it is principally by the consequences which he drew from these doctrines, that his name has been rendered famous. He fully admitted the octrine of the entire depravity of the human heart and the sinfulness of all the doings of the unregenerate; but thought there was a discordance between this doctrine and the preaching of some of the Calvinistic divines, who exhorted the unregenerate as such to perform certain acts as the appointed way to obtain that grace, which should renew their hearts and make them holy. If men before conversion could do nothing that was pleasing to God, he concluded, they could do nothing to procure the influences of the Holy Spirit. Instead, therefore, of exhortobtain the divine assistance to enable them to repent, when it was acknowledged, that in the impoverntenance. preached few genpressing e request t. From e was den and the contented situation, with the the proviı a course ns in bis ed. Jan., m of the al powers recovered ach. pious, and character nility per-atereourse from his s and cannever disconviction ents. He He took the poor yet many one occanoting the was spent l but little is studies ect to his e Calvinishe conse-

him from

fspring of

rines, that He fully pravity of of all the ght there e and the vines, who perform otain that and make could do oncluded, afluences of exhortorder to them to

at in the

e entirely

the ministers of the gospel, to imitate the preaching of the Lord Jesus, their Master, and to call upon men immediately to repent and yield themselves to the love of God. He thought that religious advantages, if in the use of them the unregenerate were not converted, would but increase guilt, as in this case there would be a greater resistance to the truth. Another sentiment, which is considered as one of the peculiar sentiments of Dr. Hopkins, is that the inability of sinners is moral and not natural; but this is only saying, that their inability consists in disinclination of heart or opposition of will to what is good. Combining the Calvinistic doctrine, that God has foreordained whatsoever comes to pass, with his views of the nature of sin as consisting entirely in the intention or disposition of the mind, he inferred, that it was no impeachment upon the character of the most righteous disposer of all events to say, not merely that he deereed the existence of sin, but that he exerted his own power to produce it. The design being benevolent, he contended that this agency is no more an impeachment of the divine character, than the bare permission of sin. This is another of his peculiarities. In this he differed from President Edwards, who maintained, that sin was "not the fruit of any positive agency or influence of the Most High," and who said, "if by the author of sin he meant the sinner, the agent, or actor of sin, or the doer of a wicked thing; so it would be a reproach and blasphemy to suppose God to be the author of sin." It may indeed well excite astonishment, that a man of intelligence and piety should be so bewildered in metaphysics, as to ascribe to God the efficient production of all sinful volitions, and yet deem bimself responsible for such volitions. From his views of the nature of holiness, as coasisting in disinterested benevolence, he also inferred, that a Christian should be willing to perish forever, to be forever miserable, if it should be for the glory of God and the good of the universe, that he should encounter this destruction. Instead of the Calvinistic doctrine of the strict imputation of Adam's sin and of the righteousness of Christ, he chose rather to adopt the language of Scripture, that on account of the first transgression men were made or constituted sinners, and that men are justified on account of the righteousness of Christ, or through the redemption which there is in him.

He published a life of Edwards; three sermons, entitled, sin, through divine interposition, an advantage to the universe; and yet this no excuse for sin or encouragement to it, 1759; an inquiry concerning the promises of the gospel, whether sinful, he thought it a sacred duty, incumbent on the divinity of Christ, preached in Boston, 1768; two sermons on Romans vit. 7, and John I. 13, 1768, republished 1793; the true state and character of the unregenerate, being an answer to Mr. Mills, 1769; animadversions on Mr. Hart's dialogue, 1770; an inquiry into the nature of true holiness, with an answer to Drs. Hemmenway and Mather, 1773; of this a second edition was published in 1791; a dialogue, showing it to be the duty and interest of the American States to emancipate all their African slaves, 1776; an inquiry concerning the future state of those who die in their sins, 1783; a system of doctrines contained in divine revelation, to which is added a treatise on the millennium, 2 vols., 8vo., 1793 (it is on this system of divinity that the reputation of the author principally rests); the life of Sesannah Anthony, 1796; the life of Mrs. Osborn, 1798; and a volume of sermons. He left behind him sketches of his life, written by himself; a dialogue on the nature and extent of true Christian submission. and an address to professing Christians, all of which were published by Dr. West, of Stockbridge, in 1805. - Hopkins' Life; Sprague's Annals.

> HOPKINS, DANIEL, D. D., the brother of the preceding, after a ministry of thirty-six years, died Dec. 14, 1814, aged 80. He was born at Waterbury Oct. 16, 1734, being the son of Timothy II. and Mary Judd. At the age of fourteen he lost his father, and the care of his education devolved upon his brother Samuel. He was graduated at Yale college in 1758, removed to Salem, Mass., in 1766, and for twelve years was chiefly employed as a teacher of youth, and was ordained as successor of Dr. Whitaker, who had become a Presbyterian, in Nov., 1778. He was a respected and useful minister. Rev. Brown Emerson, D. D., married his daughter. His wife was a daughter of John Saunders. Just before his death he repeated the lines:

> > " Jesus, with all thy saints above My tongue would bear her part Would sound aloud thy saving love, And sing thy bleeding heart."

He published a sermon on Washington's death. and one at a dedication, 1805. Most of his works were published in 1853, with a memoir by Professor Park.—Panopl., XII. 42; Sprague's Annals.

HOPKINS, STEPHEN, governor of Rhode Island, died July 13, 1785, aged 78. He was born at Scituate March 7, 1707, and was bred a farmer. In 1742 he removed to Providence and engaged in mercantile business. He was from 1751 to 1754 chief justice of the superior court. In 1755 he was elected governor, and remained in office, excepting four years, till 1768. In 1774 any of them are made to the exercises and doings ho was a member of congress. His signature to of persons in an unregenerate state, containing re- the Declaration of Independence indicates a marks on two sermons by Dr. Mayhew, 1765; on trembling hand; this was owing to a nervous affection. His heart did not tremble. He retired from congress in 1779. He published, at the order of the assembly, rights of the colonies examined, 1765; and an account of Providence, in 2 historical collections, IX. 166–203.—Goodrich.

HOPKINS, LEMUEL, a physician, a descendant of Gov. Hopkins, was born in Waterbury June 19, 1750. At Litchfield, where he practised physic from 1776 to 1784, he acquired celebrity, and the singularity of his appearance, manners, and opinions, attracted general notice. About the year 1784 he removed to Hartford, where he had a high reputation and extensive practice as a physician till his death, April 14, 1801, aged 50. It is supposed that his erroneous practice in his own case was the cause of his death. Apprehensive of the pulmonary consumption, for a pain in his side he was repeatedly bled, against the remonstrance of his medical friends, and he otherwise reduced his strength and brought on a hydrothorax. His widow died at New York in Sept., 1826. He was tall, lean, stooping, with large features, and light, staring eyes. In his early life he admired the Infidel philosophers of France; in his last days he read the Bible. As a physician he was remarkable for his unceasing attention to his patients, sometimes devoting to one patient whole days and nights. Once, on being called to a child sick with the scarlet fever in a family to which he was a stranger, he entered the room without saving a word, and, secing the child loaded with bed-clothes in a heated room, he seized the child in his arms and rushed out of the house, followed with cries and broomsticks, for his appearance was uncouth and uglv. But, resting in a coel shade, he called for wine, and had the pleasure of seeing the child restored to health. He was a man of learning, and a poet. He wrote for Barlow the beautiful version of psalm 137, beginning with the words, "Along the banks, where Babel's current flows." Associated with Trumbull, Barlow, Alsop, and others, he wrote parts of the Anarchiad, the echo; politieal green-house, the guillotine, and other essays. There of his productions were published in the American poems, — the hypocrite's hope, the cancer quack, and a-poem on Ethan Allen. The Anarchiad was a satirieal political poem in twentyfour numbers; and these writings appeared in the newspapers from 1786 to 1793. - Thacher's Medical Biography; *perimens American Poetry, 1. 272-284.

most of a useful life. His widow died in 1855. By his wil his estate was to be divided thus: to the Northfield society in Litehfield 3,000 dollars; to the Purch 300; to his native school 600; to the Bible society 500; to the American board of foreign missions 250; to the tract society 250;

fection. His heart did not tremble. He retired to Connecticut missionary society 250; the refrom congress in 1779. He published at the mainder, 7,000, to Northfield society.

HOPKINS, John, died at Northampton Jan. 9, 1842, aged 72. He was a Christian professor, and among his family connections was a remarkable number of ministers, namely: his father, Dr. Samuel II., of Hadley, and his grandfather, Samuel II., of West Springfield, - his grandmother, too, was the daughter of Rev. Mr. Stoddard, and sister of President Edwards, the son of a minister. His mother was the widow of Rev. Chester Williams, of Hadley; her son was Rev. N. Williams; her daughter married Dr. Emmons, whose daughter married Dr. Ide, of Medway. Two of his sons were ministers, and his daughter married President Wheeler, of Burlington. Four of his sisters married ministers, - Dr. Spring, of Newburyport, Dr. Austin, of Worcester, and William Riddell and Leonard Worcester. His nephews are Rev. Dr. Gardiner Spring, of New York, Rev. Samuel Spring, Rev. Samuel H. Riddell, and Rev. Leonard Worcester, of Peacham, Vt.; of Mrs. W.'s sons are the ministers, Rev. Samuel A. Worcester, missionary, Rev. Evarts Worcester, deceased, Rev. Isaac R. Worcester, of Littleton, and Rev. John II. Worcester, of St. Johnsbury. The connections of such a family must have many calls to be sober-minded and religious.

HOPKINS, Asa T., D. D., pastor of the first church in Buffalo, died Nov. 27, 1847. Born in Hartford, he was graduated at Yale in 1826.

HOPKINSON, Francis, district judge of the United States for Pennsylvania, died May 9, 1791. aged 53. After passing two years in England, he settled at Bordentown, N. J. He was a member of congress in 1776, in which year he signed the Declaration of Independence. He held an appointment in the loan office for several years, and afterwards succeeded George Ross, as judge of the admiralty for the State of Pennsylvania. In this station he continued till the year 1790, when he was appointed by Washington a judge of the district court. He was a person whose stature was a little below the common size, whose features were small, but uncommonly animated, and whose speech and motions indicated the activity of his mind. He was distinguished for his wit in conversation, but it was mild and elegant. He contributed not a little towards promoting the independence of America; not, however, by labored discussions, but by his inimitable humor and satire. He began in 1775 with a small tract, entitled, a pretty story, in which, in an allegorical manner, he exposed the tyranny of Great Britain towards America, and he concluded his contributions to his country in this way with the history of the new roof, which ought to be read with interest, while the citizens of the United States are shel; the re-oton Jan. professor, a remarkather, Dr. her, Samdmother. dard, and f a minisv. Chester . N. Wilons, whose

Two of er married our of his , of Newd William nephews York, Rev. l, and Rev. Mrs. W.'s Worcester, deceased, , and Rev.

The conny calls to of the first

Born in 1826. dge of the ay 9, 1791, ingland, he a member signed the eld an apyears, and s judge of lvania. In 790, when dge of the se stature se features and whose ivity of his wit in con-He cong the indeby labored and satire. entitled, a ıl manner, in towards butions (o ory of the h interest, s are shelional govbeen much in consequence of an act of the assembly for cutting down the trees of Philadelphia, in order to guard against fire and the evils of stagnant air, he wrote a humorous speech of a standing member of the assembly against the act, and rescued the devoted trees from the impending destruction. His satires on newspaper scandal had the effect to restrain for a number of months the licentiousness of the press. His specimen of modern learning, in an examination of the properties of a salt box, is a piece of exquisite humor. His opinions on education were somewhat peculiar. He often ridiculed in conversation the practice of teaching children the English language by means of grammar. He considered most of the years, which were spent in learning Greek and Latin, as lost, and he held several of the arts and sciences, which are taught in colleges, in great contempt. To his poetical talents he united uncommon excellence in music, and some knowledge of painting. Besides the above works, he published science, a poem, 1762. After his death his miseellaneous essays and occasional writings were published in three vols., 8vo., 1792 .- Mass. Mag., 111. 750-753; American Museum, III. 165; IX. 39.

HOPKINSON, JOSEPH, judge, died at Philadel-phia in Jan., 1842, aged 71. The son of Francis H., he was educated at the university of Pennsylvania, and practised law at Easton and Philadelphia. He was appointed in 1828 judge of the district court. He was president of the Philadelphia academy of fine arts. He wrote the song, "Hail Columbia," in 1798. — Cycl. Am. Lil.

HOPPER, Isaac T., died in New York May 7, 1852, aged 80. Born in 1771 in West Jersey, he resided many years in Philadelphia, and was inspector of prisons; a man of benevolence. His life was written by Mrs. Child.

HORRY, ELIAS, died at Charleston, S. C., Sept. 17, 1834, aged 91; a descendant of the Huguenots. He gave 10,000 dollars to Charleston college for a professorship of moral philosophy.

HORSMANDER, DANIEL, chief justice of New York, a native of Great Britain, came to the province about 1730, and was recorder of the city and president of the council. He died in Sept., 1778, and was buried in Trinity churchyard. He published the New York conspiracy, or the history of the negro plot, 1742; republished 1810. Of the conspirators to burn the city fourteen were burnt, and eighteen hanged, with ten whites.

HOSACK, DAVID, M. D., LL. D., died of apoplexy, at New York, Dec. 23, 1835, aged 66. His father came from Scotland to New York. He graduated at Princeton in 1789; was medically educated at Edinburgh, and was at the head of his profession in New York. He was professor of the theory and practice in the medical institution, an eloquent and able teacher; a admired for its wit. A few years before his death, liberal promoter of the arts. He published a history of the Eric canal; a life of De Witt Clinton; an address on temperance; introductory discourse, with a tribute to Rush, 1813; treatment of the typhoid, 1815; on vision; system of noselogy, 1818; on the peripneumonia, etc.; on febrile contagion; the surgery of the ancients; syllabus of lectures on botany, also on the theory and practice; course of studies; memoir of Hugh Williamson; discourses before the historical and horticultural societies; medical essays, 2 vols.; observations on the medical character; plants in botanie garden; medical and philosophical register, with J. W. Francis, 4 vols.; and other tracts. - Memoir by Dr. Francis.

HOSMER, STEPHEN, minister of East Haddam, Conn., died in 1749, aged about 70. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1699. He published election sermon, 1720.

HOSMER, STEPHEN TITUS, chief justice of Connecticut, died Aug. 6, 1834, aged 76; a graduate of Yale in 1782.

HOTCHKIN, BERIAH, died at Plattsburgh, N. Y., 1829. He was Mr. at Yale, 1794.

HOTCHKISS, FREDERIC W., minister of Saybrook, died March 31, 1844, aged 81. A native of New Haven, he graduated in 1778, and was ordained colleague with Wm. Hart Sept. 24, 1783; the ministry of both exceeded a century. He was aid to the commanding officer in 1779 in resisting a British attack, and then lost his father and two uncles. He was pastor sixty years, highly respected, useful, and venerable. He published the cross of Christ the Christian's glory, 1801; a half-eentury sermon, 1833; a sermon at the end of the sixtieth year of his ministry, 1843. - Sprague's Annals.

HOUGH, GEORGE, a respected printer in Concord, N. II., died in 1930, aged 72. He was the father of G. H. Hough, Baptist missionary to Burmah, who died before him.

HOUGHTON, DOUGLASS, Dr., geologist of Michigan, died Oct. 13, 1845, aged 36. He was born in Troy, N. Y., and educated at the Rensselaer institute, in which he became a professor of chemistry and natural history. In 1831 he was surgeon and botanist to the expedition to the west. Settling in Detroit, he was appointed State geologist in 1837. In a snow storm he was drowned with two men at the mouth of Eagle river, on Lake Superior. He was an associate of various learned associations. He was nearl ready to make his last report for eight years. Though young, he had a high rank among scientific men, and was greatly estcemed.

HOVEY, John, second minister of Kennebunkport, Me., died in 1773, aged about 70. Born in Newbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1725, and was settled in 1741.

HOVEY, IVORY, minister of Plymouth, Mass.,

died Nov. 4, 1803, aged 89. He was born at he could not express severity which he never Topsfield July 14, 1714; was graduated at Harvard college in 1735, and was ordained minister of Metapoiset, the second parish of Rochester, Oct. 29, 1740. Having devoted much attention to the study of physic, he in 1744 commenced the practice, and was the principal physician of Metapoiset till his dismission in 1765. He was afterwards installed, April 18, 1770, at Monument Ponds, in Plymouth, where he passed the remainder of his life. He had preached about sixty-five years, and during that time kept a journal, designed to promote his improvement in Christian excellence, which he left behind him in about seven thousand pages of short hand. Extracts from it are preserved in the Pascataqua magazine. He was one of the best of men, being distinguished for meckness, humility, and piety. He published a sermon on leaving Metapoiset, and one on the subject of mortality.

HOVEY, SYLVESTER, died at Hartford, Conn., May 6, 1840, aged 43. A native of Conway, he graduated at Yale in 1819. He was a tutor and professor of mathematics at Williams and Amherst colleges, skilled in various sciences, highly respected and beloved. He died in peace; his last efforts to do good were by letters from his sick chamber; in this way one young man was brought to the knowledge of the way of life. Mrs. Sigourney described him as

" Sublime in science, yet with meckness clad, Clear-minded, eloquent in thought and speech, And full of love for truth."

He published letters from the West Indies. HOWARD, SIMEON, D. D., minister in Boston. died Aug. 13, 1804, aged 71. He was born at Bridgewater May 10, 1733, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1758. He was afterwards an instructor of youth for several years. Soon after he began to preach, he was invited to the province of Nova Scotia, where he officiated about a year. In 1766 he was elected a tutor of Harvard college; and May 6, 1767, was ordained pastor of the west church in Boston, as successor to Dr. Mayhew. He continued in this station till his death, and was succeeded by Charles Lowell. He heartily engaged in promoting the American Revolution, and participated in the joy experienced on the acknowledgment of our independence. In the various relations of life he was faithful and exemplary. In his theological sentiments he differed from the first fathers of the New England churches, for he rejected the system of Calvin. Towards those who differed from him, he was indulgent in his thoughts, and tolerant in his conduct. He never could approve of a sarcastic and irreverent way of speaking of objects, which any sincere believer might deem was a senator of the United States. His estate sacred. He was indeed so mild and gentle, that was increased in a high degree in value by the felt. There was a serenity upon his countenance which indicated the peace that constantly dwelt in his heart. He was remarkable for humility. While he never mentioned either his virtues or his faults, it was evident to all who were intimately acquainted with him, that he had a humble sense of his own talents and moral attainments. He was endeared to his people, for he interested himself in their welfare, and endeavored to render them virtuous and good. All who knew him were delighted with the modesty, mildness, and benevolence, which he exhibited. He published a sermon at the artillery election, 1773; on the death of his wife, 1777; to freemasons, 1778; on not being ashamed of the gospel, occasioned by the death of Dr. Winthrop, 1779; at the election, 1780; at the ordination of T. Adams, 1791. - Monthly Anthol. 1. 476; III. 115-119.

HOWARD, John Eager, governor of Maryland, died Oct. 12, 1827, aged 75. He was born June 4, 1752, in Baltimore county, Maryland, His grandfather came to this country about 1685 and obtained a grant of land, which is still in the family. His father, Cornelius, married Ruth Eager, grand-daughter of George Eager, whose estate, procured soon after the charter, now makes a considerable part of the city of Baltimore. Mr. Howard entered the army in 1776 as a captain in the regiment of Col. J. C. Hall, in the following years he was promoted, till finally he succeeded Lieut.-Col. Ford in the command of the 2d Maryland regiment. He was an efficient coadjutor of Greene during the camnaign in the south, distinguishing himself at the battle of Cowpens, when, says Lee, "he seized the critical moment, and turned the fortune of the day;" also at Guilford and the Eutaws. He was in the engagements of White Plains, Germantown, Monmouth, Camden, and Hobkirk's Hill. Having been trained to the infantry service, he was remarkable for pushing into close battle with fixed bayonet. At Cowpens this mode of fighting was resorted to for the first time in the war; but afterwards the Maryland line was often put to this service. In this battle he had in his hands at one time the swords of seven officers, who had surrendered to him personally. On this occasion he saved the life of the British general, O'Hara, whom he found clinging to his stirrup and asking quarter. When the army was disbanded he retired to his patrimonial estate near Baltimore. He soon afterwards married Margaret, the daughter of Benjamin Chew, of Philadelphia, a ludy of courteous manners and elegant hospitality. In Nov., 1788, he was chosen governor of Maryland, and continued in this office three years. From the autumn of 1796 till March, 1803, he

e never ntenance tly dwelt humility. ritues or vere intila humunments. nterested to render new him ness, and published ; on the 1778; on sioned by

ıms, 1791. of Marywas born Maryland. ry about which is lius, marof George after the ert of the I the army

the elec-

Col. J. C. promoted. ord in the He was the camself at the he seized une of the He was Germankirk's Hill. service, he attle with e of fightn the war; often put his hands s, who had is occasion ıl, O'Hara, and asking led he re-Baltimore. the daughia, a lady rospitality. of Maryree years. , 1803, he Ilis estate lue by the the retired soldier. His old age was the object of regard and veneration. In more than one letter Washington expressed to him his confidence and esteem. - Am. Ann. Reg., 1826-7, p. 137-139.

HOWARD, BENJAMIN, brigadier-general, died at St. Louis in Oct., 1814. He had been a member of congress from Kentucky, and was late governor of the Missouri territory.

HOWARD, BEZALEEL, minister of Springfield, died in 1837. A native of Bridgewater, he was ordained as the successor of Mr. Breek April 27, 1785, and was dismissed on account of ill health at the ordination of his successor, S. Osgood, Jan. 25, 1809. He published a sermon at the ordination of A. Pratt, 1790; of A. Steward, 1793; of Benj. R. Woodbridge, 1799.

HOWARD, ABISHAI, Dr., died in Sturbridge Dec., 1844, aged 76; a physician and Christian, making liberal bequests to benevolent objects.

HOWDEE, SARAH, the last of the Queen Awashunk tribe of Indians, died May, 1827, at Little Compton, R. I.

HOWE, PERLEY, minister of Killingly, Conn., died in 1753, aged about 42. He graduated at Harvard in 1731, was the minister of Dudley, Mass., from 1735 to 1743, and was installed at Killingly in 1746. At the time of his death, his son Joseph, afterwards a minister, was only six years old. - Sprague's Annals.

HOWE, JOSEPH, son of Rev. Perley II., minister of the new south church in Boston, died in Hartford Aug. 25, 1775, aged 28. He graduated at Yale in 1765 at the age of eighteen, the first scholar in his class. He was licensed to preach in 1769, and was soon appointed a tutor at Yale. In 1772 he was settled at Boston as the successor of Rev. Penuel Bowen. The storm of war drove him from the city early in 1775; in the same year he died. He was a minister of high talents and promise, and of almost unequalled elocution. Yet no stone marks the spot of his burial. -Sprague's Annals.

HOWE, GEORGE, lord viscount, was the eldest son of Sir E. Scrope, second lord viscount Howe in Ireland. He commanded five thousand British troops, which arrived at Halifax in July, 1757. In the next year, when Abererombie proceeded against Ticonderoga, in an attack on the advanced guard of the French in the woods Lord Howe fell on the first fire, in July, 1758, aged 33. In him, says Mante, "the soul of the army seemed to expire." By his military talents and many virtues he had acquired esteem and affection. Massachusetts erected a monument to his memory in Westminster Abbey, at the expense of 250 pounds. - Holmes, II. 82; Mante, 147.

brother of the preceding, died Aug. 5, 1799, aged fessional career, highly respected.

growth of Baltimore, which extended so as to | 73. On the death of his brother he succeeded to embrace in its streets the shades which sheltered his title and estate. He commanded the British fleet which arrived at Staten Island July 12, 1776, and was one of the commissioners to offer proposals of peace. In July, 1777, he convoyed the two hundred and seventy transports, in which the British army sailed from New York to the Cheaspeake. In the winter he repaired to Newport, as a safe harbor. This place, when threatened by the Americans and French, he relieved Aug. 30, 1778, arriving from New York with one hundred sail of ships. In Sept. he resigned the command to Admiral Gambier. June 1, 1794, he obtained a victory over the French. A severe letter to Lord Howe on his naval conduct in the American war was published in 1779, in all probability written by Lord Sackville, the minister or secretary for the colonies. He published a narrative of the transactions of the fleet, etc., 1779.

> HOWE, Sir WILLIAM, general, brother of the preceding, died in 1814. He was the successor of Gage, in the command of the British forces in America, arriving at Boston in May, 1775, with Burgoyne. He commanded in the battle of Bunker Hill. In Sept., 1776, he took possession of New York. With his brother he was a commissioner for peace. In July, 1777, he sailed for Chesapeake; entered Philadelphia Sept. 27th: and defeated the Americans at Germantown Oct. 4th. In May, 1778, he was succeeded by Clinton. He published a narrative as to his command in North America, 2d ed., 1780.

HOWE, NATHANIEL, minister of Hopkinton, died Feb. 15, 1837, aged 72, in the forty-sixth year of his ministry, respected for his talents and virtues. Born in Ipswich, a graduate of Harvard in 1786. he was ordained Oct. 5, 1791; he had a colleague in 1830. In the gift of prayer ne was remarkable; he had an excellent character as a minister. His century sermon in 1815 excited attention. He said in it, "Do you know by what means I have become so rich, as to have a great house, etc.; a farm, a herd of cattle, a flock of sheep, etc. The principal reason is this, because I have been doing your business and neglecting my own." He then explains, that he had been obliged to support himself on account of the neglect of his people. His son Appleton, a graduate of 1815, has been a senator. He published a sermon on the death of three persons, 1808; the century sermon mentioned; design of John's baptism, 1819; a reply to Dr. Baldwin, 1820; a eatechism, with questions and proverbs. -Sprague's Annals.

HOWE, John, major, a brave officer of the Revolution, died near Flemington, N. J., Dec.

15, 1843, aged 90.

HOWE, ZADOCK, M. D., died at Billeriea, HOWE, RICHARD, earl, an English admiral, Mass., Feb. 8, 1851, after a long successful pro-

HOWELL, RICHARD, governor of New Jersey, died April 28, 1802, aged 47. He was a native of Delaware, but commanded a New Jersey regiment from 1776 till 1779, when in conscquence of a new arrangement of the army he resumed the profession of the law. In 1788 he was appointed clerk of the supreme court, which office he held till June, 1793, when he was chosen governor of the State. To this place he was eight years successively elected. He possessed a cultivated mind, and was benevolent in his life.

HOWELL, DAVID, LL. D., judge, died July 29, 1824, aged 77. He was born in New Jersey, and graduated at Princeton, 1766. Removing to Rhode Island, he was appointed professor of mathematics and afterwards of law in the university. Devoting himself to the practice of the law at Providence, he was chosen judge of the supreme court. He was also a member of the old congress; and in 1812, was appointed district judge for Rhode Island, which office he sustained till his death. He was a man of distinguished tlements. talents and learning.

HOWELL, SILAS, died in Portland, Maine, in May, 1846, aged 101.

HOWELL, NATHANIEL W., judge, died at Canandaigua, N. Y., Oct. 16, 1851, aged 82. He was eminent as a jurist.

HOWLAND, John, a pilgrim of 1620, was a member of Gov. Carver's family, and married his daughter Elizabeth. On his voyage in a storm he fell overboard, but escaped death by elinging to the topsail halliards, which hung in the water. He lived in Plymouth, Duxbury, and Kingston. In the last town he died Feb. 22, 1672, aged 80. The records speak of him as "a godly man and an ancient professor of the ways of Christ." He was a deputy, assistant, and one of the leading men of the colony. He was buried at Plymouth. His widow died 1687, aged 80. His sons were John, Jabez, Isaac, Joseph; his daughter Desire married John Gorham; Hope married J. Chipman: Elizabeth married E. Hicks: Lydia married J. Brown; Ruth married T. Cushman. His son John married Mary Lee, 1651, daughter of Mary, and settled in Barnstable, Joseph in Plymouth, Isaac in Middleborough, and Jabez in Bristol, whose grandson John died in Providence Nov. 5, 1854, at the great age of 97, a man of moral worth, and skilled in antiquarian researches in regard to the history of the pilgrims. He was president of the R. I. historical society.

HOWLAND, JOHN, the minister of Carver, Mass., died Nov. 4, 1804, aged 83. He was the son of the second John of Barnstable; graduated at Harvard in 1741, and was ordained in 1746. His wife was the daughter of Rev. Daniel Lewis of Pembroke. His daughter Anna married Rev. Ezra Weld of Braintree.

ter, died at Gayhead, Martha's Vineyard, July, 1821, aged 84.

HOYT, ARD, missionary to the Cherokees, was a settled minister of Wilkesbarre, Pa., when he offered his services to the American Board. In Nov., 1817, he proceeded with his family to Brainerd, and in 1824 to Willstown, where he died Feb. 18, 1828, aged 57. He died very suddenly, but was able to say, lifting his eyes in rapture to heaven, "I'm going." The Cherokees were strongly attached to him. By his labors Catherine Brown and others were converted. He was indeed a most valuable missionary. His journals were read with great interest.

HOYT, EPAPHRAS, general, was born Dec. 31, 1765, and died at Deerfield, Mass., Feb. 8, 1850, aged 84. He published several works on military affairs, one of which was on cavalry discipline, 1797. His antiquarian researches were published in 1824, containing a history of Indian wars, especially in reference to the Connecticut river set-

HUBBARD, WILLIAM, minister of Ipswich, Mass., and a historian, died Sept. 14, 1704, aged 82. He was born in the year 1621, the son of William of Ipswich and Boston, and was graduated at Harvard college in the first class in 1642. The time of his ordination is not known, but it is supposed to have been about the year 1657, as colleague with Mr. Cobbet. In his old age John Rogers was settled with him in 1692. His wife was Margaret, the daughter of Nathaniel Rogers. His second marriage in 1694 to Mrs. Mary Pearson displeased his parish, on account of her sphere in life. His son Nathaniel was a judge of the superior court. He was a man of learning, and of a candid, benevolent mind. He wrote a valuable history of New England, for which the State paid him 50 pounds. It was used by Mather in writing his magnalia, by Hutchinson, and by Dr. Holmes. At last it was published in the Mass. historical collections, 2d series, vols. v. and vi. He published an election sermon, entitled the happiness of a people in the wisdom of their rulers directing and in the obedience of their brethren, etc., 1676; the present state of New England, being a narrative of the troubles with the Indians from the first planting thereof in 1607 to 1677, but chiefly of the two last years, 1675 and 1676, to which is added a discourse about the war with the Pequots, 4to., 1677; a fast sermon, 1682; a funeral discourse on Gen. Denison, 1684; a testimony to the order of the gospel in the churches of New England, with Mr. Higginson, 1701. - Hutchinson, II. 147; Holmes; Hist. Coll.; Sprague's Annals.

HUBBARD, JONATHAN, the first minister of Sheffield, Mass., died July 6, 1765, aged 61. He was born in Sunderland, and graduated at Yale in HOWOOSWEE, ZACHARY, an Indian minis- 1824. The church was formed and he was setard, July, okees, was , when he loard. In family to where he very sudes in rap-Cherokees his labors erted. He n Dec. 31. b. 8, 1850, s on milidiscipline, published n wars, est river setnary. His of Ipswich, 1704, aged the son of was graduiss in 1642. m, but it is ar 1657, as d age John . Ilis wife iel Rogers. Mary Pearmt of her ras a judge

n of learn-He wrote r which the as used by Iutchinson, published in ies, vols. v. rmon, entiwisdom of nce of their ate of New oubles with reof in 1607 years, 1675 e about the st sermon, nison, 1684; spel in the Higginson. nes; Hist.

minister of ed 61. He d at Yale in he was setJohn Keep succeeded him. He had a sound mind, and was netive and lively.

HUBBARD, John, minister of Meriden, Conn., died Nov. 18, 1786, aged 59. The son of Col. John II., of New Haven, he was graduated at Yale in 1744, and was ordained June 22, 1769, Several pamphlets were occasioned by his ordination. He was useful and beloved. - Sprague's Annals.

HUBBARD, LEVERETT, M. D., president of the Connecticut medical society, died at Hartford in 1794, aged 70. He graduated at Yale in 1744, and was an eminent physician.

Mass., died Nov. 28, 1794, aged 69, in the fortyfifth year of his ministry. Born in Hatfield, he graduated at Yale in 1747. He was ordained May 30, 1750.

HUBBARD, EBENEZER, minister of Marblehead, Mass., died Oct. 15, 1800, aged 42, in the fourteenth year of his ministry. He was born at Concord, graduated at Harvard in 1777, and was ordained Jan. 1, 1783. E. Stone preached his ordination sermon. He published a sermon at the ordination of A. Orne, 1796. - Sprague's Annals.

HUBBARD, John, professor of mathematics and natural philosophy at Dartmouth college, died in 1810, aged 51. Born in Townsend, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1785; and, having studied theology, became the precentor of New Ipswich and Deerfield academies, and was also judge of probate in Cheshire county. He succeeded Prof. Woodward at Dartmouth in 1804, and was succeeded by Prof. Adams. He published an oration on the 4th of July, 1799; rudiments of geography, 1803; American reader, 1808; essay on music.

HUBBARD, BELA, D. D., Episcopal minister in New Haven, died in 1812, aged about 75. He graduated at Yale in 1758. He succeeded Mr. Palmer in 1767.

HUBBARD, POLLY, Miss, died at Fowlerville, N. Y., Dec. 29, 1837, aged 63; her sister Sally, the wife of Wells Fowler, died the preceding day. The loss of two such eminently pious women in a new church is great. They were daughters of deacon James Hubbard, of Pittsfield, Mass. In a religious meeting of females, Miss II. could do two things well: she could guide and support a conversation on religious subjects, and she could pray. God has enriched our churches with a multitude of such women, of whom the world, which they bless, knows nothing. To the prayers and toils of such women revivals of religion may often be ascribed, in one of which her sister had tled Oct. 22, 1735; he was dismissed in 1764. With their work let a fashionable woman's work this present season of 1856, at Saratoga, be contrasted, displaying sixty different costly dresses, made up at New York. The name of a vain and uscless woman of extravagance and folly may well pass into oblivion; the righteous shall be in remembrance.

> HUBBARD, RICHARD, mayor of Middletown, Conn., died in 1839, aged 47. He graduated at Yale in 1813.

> HUBBARD, THOMAS, M. D., professor of surgery at Yale college, died at New Haven June 13, 1838, aged 63,

HUBBARD, SAMUEL, judge, died at Boston HUBBARD, John, minister of Northfield, Dec. 24, 1847, aged 62. Born in Boston, he graduated at Yale in 1802. For a few years he practised law in Biddeford, then in Boston. In 1812 he was appointed a judge of the supreme court. For years he was one of the board of commissioners for foreign missions. He was learned, upright, judicious, and expert in business.

HUBBARD, CALEB, major, died in Sunderland April 7, 1850, aged 96, an officer of the Revolu-

HUBBARD, JONATHAN H., judge of the supreme court of Vt., died at Windsor Sept. 20, 1849, aged 81; a member of congress, 1809-1811.

HUBBARD, Samuel Dickinson, LL. D., postmaster-general, died of a spinal complaint at Middletown, Conn., Oct. 8, 1855, aged 55. He graduated at Yale in 1819.

HUBBELL, Wolcott, died at Lanesborough Oct. 26, 1840, aged 85. He was a magistrate, senator, and Christian. - N. Y. Observer, Nov.

HUBBELL, WALTER, died in Canandaigua March 25, 1848, aged 53; a lawyer and an active Christian, a useful teacher in bible classes and Sunday schools. — Daggett's Sermon.

HUBBELL, MARTHA STONE, wife of Rev. Stephen Hubbell of North Stonington, died Aug. 8, 1856, aged 42. She wrote "Shady Side."
HUBBELL, MARY ELIZABETH, the only daughter of the preceding, died at Stonington, Conn., in June, 1856, aged 20, the authoress of pieces, signed Leila Linwood.

HUDDY, Joshua, captain, was taken prisoner in a small fort on Tom's river, New Jersey, by a party of tory refugees in March, 1782, and carried, with his company, to New York. On the 8th of April, he and two others were sent by the board of loyalists to Middletown Point or Sandy Hook, to be exchanged under the care of Capt. Lippencot, who reported on his return, that he had exchanged the two as directed, and that "Huddy had been exchanged for Philip White." He had, in fact, of his own authority, hung him on a tree the happiness of seeing her husband, one son and on the Jersey shore. The case of Philip White, his wife, a daughter, also two daughters and their the tory, was this. Having been taken prisoner, husbands, united at the same time to the church. as some light horse were conveying him to Freethough called upon to surrender, he continued to run, and as he was about to leap into a bog he was cut down by a sword. Gen. Washington, April 21, 1778, demanded of Gen. Clinton the delivery of Lippencot, the murderer of White; but the board of loyalists interposed for his protection. On the failure of compliance with his demand, Gen. Washington selected by lot Capt. Asgill of the guards, taken at Yorktown, and fixed the time and place of his execution. Mrs. Asgill, the mother, wrote to M. Vergennes, the French minister, and begged his interference, describing her distress and that of her family. Her pathetic appeal was published. In consequence of it, Vergennes interposed with Washington, and by order of congress Asgill was released in Nov. Capt. Asgill was afterwards Sir Charles A., general; and died in 1823, aged 70.

HUDSON, HENRY, an eminent navigator, was an Englishman, who explored a part of the coast of Greenland in the years 1607 and 1608, while seeking a passage to Japan and China. After his return to England from his second younge, he went over to Holland, and the Dutch East India company gave him the command of a ship for discovery. He sailed March 25, 1609, and after passing along the coast of Lapland, crossed the Atlantic, and discovered Cape Cod, at which place he landed. He then pursued his course to the Chesapeake, and on his return along the coast entered the river in the State of New York, which bears his name, and ascended as far as where the city of Albany now stands. A settlement was soon after made upon this river by the Dutch. In 1610 he was again fitted out by some gentleman to discover a passage to the south sea, and in this voyage he discovered the extensive bay to the north, which bears his name. He drew his ship into a small creek, Nov. 3, and it was frozen up during the winter. Uncommon flights of wild fowl furnished provision, without which supply the crew must have perished. In the spring of 1611 he made several efforts to complete his discoveries, but was obliged to abandon his enterprise and make the best of his way home. He distributed to his men with tears in his eyes all the bread he had left, which was only a pound to each; though it is said that other provisions were afterwards found in the ship. In his uneasiness and despair, he let fall threatening words of setting some of his men on shore; upon which a few of the sturdiest, who had been very mutinous, entered his cabin in the night, tied his arms behind him, and set him adrift in the shallop at the west end of the straits, with his son and seven of the most sick and infirm of his men. He was never heard of again. The crew proceeded with his ship for England. Four of them were killed by the savages, as they went on shore near the sent to the river Raisin. Under these circum-

hold at the end of March, he attempted to escape; strait's mouth, and the rest, ready to die for want, arrived at Plymouth in Sept., 1611. He published divers voyages and northern discoveries, 1607; a second voyage for finding a passage to the East Indies by the northeast, 1608. Accounts of his other voyages were published; but they were not written by himself. Some of them are preserved in the third volume of Purchas' pilgrims. - Belknap's Biog. 1. 394-407; New and Gen. Biog. Diet.

HUGER, Isaac, brigadier-general in 1777, died in South Carolina in 1780, a patriot and soldier of the Revolution. D. Huger and J. Huger, statesmen, also of South Carolina, died in 1799 and 1804

HUIT, EPHRAIM, minister of Windsor, Conn., eame from Fugland and was settled as colleague with Mr. Warham in 1639, and died Sept. 4. 1614. He was a man of superior talents and eminent usefulness. Johnson says of him:

" And Ifult had his arguings strong and right."

His name is also written Heuet and Hewett. He published the prophecy of Daniel explained, 4to.,

HULL, Joseph, minister at Weymouth, Mass., was settled in 1635, and resigned in 1639.

HULL, WILLIAM, general, governor of Michigan Territory, died Nov. 29, 1825, nged 72. Born at Derby, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1772. He was a brave and useful officer of the Revolutionary war. In 1796 he was chosen major-general in the militia of Massachusetts. In 1805 he was appointed governor of the Michigan Territory, in which office he was succeeded by Lewis Cass in 1814. At the beginning of the war he was requested to command the northwestern army. He surrendered with two thousand men at Detroit, to the British Gen. Brock, Aug. 15. 1812. A court martial was ordered to try him on several charges, and he was actually in 1814 sentenced to be shot, but for his Revolutionary services and his age recommended to merey. The president approved the sentence and remitted the execution. Gen. Hull died at his residence in Newton, near Boston. His reliet, Sarah, died in Aug., 1826. In his defence he makes statements, which ought to be taken into consideration, before it shall be concluded that the sentence was just. Being governor of Michigan, as well as general, he was bound to consult the safety of the frontier settlers, who were threatened by a horde of savages. His army was in effective force only one-third of the forces of Brock. He could hope for no co-operation on the part of Gen. Dearborn on the Niagara, who had entered into an armistice, and thus threw the enemy upon him; the British commanded lake Erie; and a part of his own forces under Cass and McArthur had been for want. ublished 1607; a the East ts of his were not are prepilgrims. nd Gen.

777, died soldier of r, states-799 and or, Conn., colleague Sept. 4. ents and m: ht."

ett. He ned, 4to.,

th, Mass., 9. of Miehiaged 72.

t Yale in er of the s ehosen nchusetts. he Michisucceeded ng of the ie norththousand ock, Aug. ed to try ctually in volutionto merey. remitted residence rah, died es stateonsiderasentence as well as ty of the a horde oree only uld hope Dearborn armistice. the Brirt of his ad been circum-

with the British army; cut off by the lake and the in 1750, and resigned in 1782. wilderness from his supplies and reinforcements; he says, that he deemed it a sacred duty, which he owed to his fellow citizens under his government, to negotiate a eapitulation, which secured their safety. We most put treachery out of the question. The only inquiry is, whether a brave Revolutionary officer was absolutely a coward at Detroit? It has been often the case, that rash heroes have occasioned a pitiable and uscless destruction of life. It was so in the action at Minisink. When St. Clair retreated from Ticonderoga in 1777, there was a great elamor against him: but the measure was wise and indispensable to the safety of the army. - He published defence of himself, 1814; memoirs of the campaign of 1812, with a sketch of his Revolutionary services, 1824. His Revolutionary services and campaign of 1812, by his daughter Maria Campbell, and J. F. Clarke, was published 1818. - Holmes, tl. 470.

HULL, Araetius B., minister in Worcester, Mass., died in 1826, aged 47. Born in Woodbridge, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1807; was a tutor for six years; then was ordained over the first church in W., in 1821. He was a man of great intelligence, and of a fine taste, and a faithful minister. - Sprague's Annals.

HULL, ISAAC, a naval commander, died at Philadelphia Feb. 13, 1843, aged 68. He was born at Derby, and was forty-five years in the service of his country. Bred to the sea, at the first establishment of the navy he was appointed lieutenant. In 1800 he cut out the French letterof-marque, the Sandwich, from a port in St. Domingo. In the war of 1812 he commanded the Constitution frigate of forty-four guns. Aug. 19, after an action of thirty minutes he captured the Guerriere, Capt. Daeres, carrying fifty guns. After this period he was for some time employed in settling the estate of a deceased

HUME, ROBERT W., missionary, died in 1855. He had been for fifteen years a much respected member of the mission to Bombay.

11UMMING-BIRD, General, a Choctaw chief, was from his youth a friend of the United States, and fought many battles by the side of white men against the red people. In the expedition of Wayne and Scott in 1794, against the Shawnees and Delawares, he commanded sixty Choctaw warriors. In the war against the Creeks and British he also distinguished himself. He died at Nashville, Tenn., Dec. 23, 1827, aged 75, and was buried by Col. Ward, the agent, with the honors of war. His commission and silver medal, received from Washington, were placed in his coflin.

HUMPHREY, JAMES, first minister of Athol, Mass., died in 1796, aged 73. Born in Dorches- country; on the death of Washington.

stauces, with six hundred Indians already present | ter, he graduated at Harvard in 1744, was settled

HUMPHREY, Jours, died at Pittsfield Dec. 2, 1854, aged 38. The son of Rev. Dr. Humphrey, he graduated at Amherst college in 1835, and was pastor of the Winthrop church in Charlestown, Mass., from which he was removed by reason of ill health. Then he was settled at Hinghamton, N. Y.; at last was appointed professor of moral philosophy at Hamilton college. Selections from his sermons with memoirs by W. J. Budington were published in 1856.

HUMPHREYS, DANIEL, minister of Derby, Conn., died in 1787, aged about 75. He was graduated at Yale in 1732, and was ordained the next year. He was one of the ministers who zealously promoted the revival of religion about 1740. - Sprague's Annals.

HUMPHREYS, David, colonel, died Feb. 21, 1818, aged 65. He was the son of Daniel II., the minister of Derby, Conn., was born in 1753, and graduated at Yale college in 1771, and soon went to reside in the family of Col. Phillips of Phillips manor, New York. He early entered the army as a captain; in 1778 he was a major and aid to Gen. Putnam; in 1780 he was selected as Washington's aid, with the rank of colonel, and remained in his family to the end of the war, enjoying his confidence and friendship. His competitors for the place of aid were Tallmadge, Hull, and Alden. For his valor at the siege of York congress honored him with a sword. In 1784 he accompanied Jefferson to Paris, as secretary of legation, accompanied by his friend Kosciusko. He returned in 1786, and was elected to the legislature from Derby. Heing appointed to command a regiment, raised for the western service, he resided for some time at Hartford, and with Trumbull, Barlow, and Hopkins, wrote the Anarchiad. In 1788 he went to reside with Washington, and continued with him till he was appointed in 1790 minister to Portugal. He sailed in 1791; and soon after his return in 1794 was appointed minister plenipotentiary to Spain. He concluded treaties with Tripoli and Algiers. In 1802 he was succeeded by Pinckney. In his last years he devoted much care to the rearing of merino sheep. In 1812 he took the command of the militia of Connecticut. He died suddenly, of an organic affection of the heart, at New Haven. His wife, whom he married in 1797, was the daughter of John Bulkley, an English merchant at Lisbon of great wealth. He published in 1782 a poetical address to the armies of the United States, which was much celebrated. His other works are poems or the happiness of America; on the future glory I the United States; on the industry of the United States; on the love of wrote also the life of Putnam, 1788; the widow of Malabar, a tragedy, from the French, 1790; and several political tracts and orations. A collection of his poems and tracts, including most of his writings, was published at New York, 8vo., 1790 and 1804. — Spec. American Poetry, I. 259–272.

HUNN, NATAMIEL, the first minister of Reading, Comn., ded in 1749. He graduated at Yale in 1731, and was settled in 1733. He published the election sermon, 1747.

HUNNEWELL, WALTER, Dr., died in Watertown Oct. 19, 1855, aged 86. Horn in Cambridge, a graduate of 1787, he studied with Dr. Spring; his useful professional life was spent in W.

HUNT, John, minister of Boston, died at his father's house in Northampton Dec. 20, 1775, aged 31. He and John Bacon were settled over the old south church in Boston Sept. 26, 1771. In the war in 1775, he was shut out of Boston; his church was used us a riding-school. He died of a pulmonary complaint. He was a preacher of eminence and high promise. He published a sermon at his ordination; one on the death of Sarah Gill, 1771. — Hooker's Funeral Sermon; Sprague's Annals.

HÜNT, EBENEZER, M. D., a physician of Northampton, was born there in 1744; was graducted at Harvard college in 1764; and studied with Dr. Pyncheon of Springfield. He died Dec. 26, 1820, aged 76, having practised physic more than fifty years, and in that time never having such any person for any debt, incurred by medical attendance. For several years he was a member of the senate.—Thacher.

HUNT, WILLIAM G., died in Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 13, 1833, aged. 42. He was a graduate of Howerd in 1810; and a man of talents, and learning, and worth. He lived at first in Boston. He edited the National Banner.

HUNT, WILLIAM W., minister at North Amherst, Mass., died Oct. 5, 1837, aged 41. He graduated at Williams college in 1820, at Andover seminary in 1824. His sermons with a memoir were soon published.

HUNT, LITTLETON, died in Gwinnett county, Ga., March 12, 1843, aged 107, a soldier of the Revolution, present at the battle of Guilford, and wounded at Entaw Springs.

HUNTER, WILLIAM, M. D., a physician of Newport, R. I., was a native of Scotland; came to this country about 1752; and gave, in 1754-6, the first lectures on anatomy delivered in New England. He died in 1777. His wife was the daughter of Godfrey Malbone, a rich merchant. His son, William, was a senator of the United States. — Thacker.

HUNTER, Andrew, a chaplain in the navy, died at Washington in Feb., 1823, aged 75. In the Revolutionary war he was a brigade chaplain.

wrote also the life of Putnam, 1788; the widow Probably he was the A. H. who was of the class of Malabar, a tragedy, from the French, 1790; of A. Barr at Princeton in 1772.

HUNTEH, WILLIAM L., died in Newport Dec., 1849, aged 75. He was a lawyer. a senator in congress from 1811 to 1821, and in 1542 minister to Brazil. His style as a speaker was ornate and more oratorical than was common at the bar. He devoted more study in his last years to the subject of religious liberty.

HUNTINGTON, John, minister of third church in Salem, Mass., died May 30, 1766, aged 29. The son of John II. of Norwich, Conn., he graduated at the college of New Jersey in 1759, and was ordained Sept. 28, 1763. He died of the consumption. He was a man much esteemed for his talents and piety. — Sprayue's Annals.

HUNTINGTON, HEZEKLAH, died at New London in 1773, aged 76. He was chief judge of the county court, a respected, useful, religious man. — Lord's Sermon.

HUNTINGTON, SAMUEL, governor of Connecticut, died at Norwich Jan. 5, 1796, aged 63. He was the eldest son of Nathaniel H., a farmer of Windham, and was born in 1732. In his youth he gave indications of an excellent understanding. Without the advantages of a collegial education he acquired a competent knowledge of the law, and was early admitted to the bar; soon after which he settled in Norwich in 1760, and in a few years became eminent in his profession. In 1764 he was a representative in the general assembly, and the following year was appointed king's attorney, which office he filled with reputation, until more important services induced him to relinquish it. In 1774 he was made an assistant judge of the superior court. In 1775 he was elected into the council, and in the same year chosen a delegato to congress. In 1779 he was president of that honorable body, and was rechosen the following year. After this year he resumed his seat in the council and on the bench. In 1783 he was again a member of congress. In 1784 he was appointed chief justice. He was placed in the chair of the chief magistrate in 1786. as successor of Gov. Griswold, and was annually re-elected till his death. His wife, Martha, the daughter of Eb. Devotion, minister of Windham, died June 4, 1794. Having no children, he adopted two children of his brother, Joseph; one of whom was the governor of Ohio, and the other married Rev. Edward D. Griffin. His elder brother, Nathaniel, minister of East Windsor, or Ellington, was ordained in 1749 and died in 1756, aged 32. Gov. II. was an exemplary professor of religion. He is one of those men, who by the force of genius, by industry, patriotism, and integrity, rose to eminent usefulness and honor. -Strong's Funeral Sermon; Goodrich; Dwight,

HUNTINGTON, JOSEPH, D. D., minister of port Dec., cuator in 2 minister rnate and e bar. He o the suh-

the class

ird church nged 29. ., he grad-1759, and ied of the teemed for nals.

New Lonidge of the gious man.

or of Con-

6, nged 63.

., a farmer n his youth inderstand a collegial owledge of har; soon 760, and in profession. he general appointed with repunduced him le an assist-775 he was same year 779 he was nd was rehis year he the bench. ngress. In . He was ate in 1786, as annually Martha, the Windham,

d honor. -; Dwight, minister of hildren, he oseph; one d the other

elder broth-

sor, or El-ed in 1756,

ry professor

en, who by riotism, and

Coventry, Coun., died in 1795, aged about 53. of the law," and that this will be the only resur-He was graduated at Yale college in 1762. One daughter married Rev. Mr. Griffin; another Mr. Jones, and she was the mother of two eminent men of Philadelphia, Judge Joel Jones and Rev. Dr. Joseph Huntington Jones. His brothers were Rev. Enoch H. of Middletown, and Gov. Samuel II. It is said, that many copies of his work on future punishment remaining in the family, Mrs. Jones "caused them to pass off in smoke and flame." He is well known as the author of a work, entitled, Calvinism improved, or the gospel illustrated as a system of real grace, issuing in the salvation of all men, which was published, after his death, in 1796. It was answered in the same year by Dr. Strong. It is probable, that he adopted the notice of universal salvation, as many others onsequence of erroneous views of 1] reignty. Ascribing to God an "Un -including every thought, voli ion of all moral agents, - every being, every circumstance, connection, and consequence throughout the whole system of being;" it would very naturally seem to him unjust, that any man should be punished forever. He says, "If any are in extreme sufferings to endless duration, in this case they must be infinite losers by that existence, which the God of love forced upon them." But surely Scripture does not ascribe to God any decree or agency to produce sin; on the contrary, it declares expressly that God tempteth no man to sin. Throughout the Hible, man is regarded as a moral agent, self-acting, and, if sinful, with unforced volition choosing evil. Hence he is responsible, and destined to answer for himself in the final judgment. Setting out with the grand error of absolute decree of sin, and production of it by God's power, and the consequent denial of human responsibleness, Dr. II. founds his argument for universal salvation on another error in regard to the atonement of Christ, which, he thought, included the endurance of all the punishment threatened the sinner, and thus a satisfaction of the law, so that all sinful men are released from its curse. Hence he says, by a wild perversion of the plain language of scripture, that sinners "in their surety, vicar, or substitute, i. e. in Christ, the head of every man, go away into everlasting punishment, in a true gospel seuse. In him they suffer infinite punishment, i. e. he suffers for them, in their room and stead." By another strange perversion, revolting to common sense, he represents that in the day of judgment, not men of all nations, but "characters shall be separated one from another, as a shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats." "The character of sinners was always at God's left hand and always will be." In the resurrection he main-rection to condemnation and everlasting shame and contempt, while all men will arise to everlasting life. It is by such strange departure from scripture and common sense, that error is built up and miserable men are deluded.

Dr. Huntington published a sermon on the vanity and mischief of presuming on things beyond our measure, 1774; a plea in the cause of Mrs. Fisk, excommunicated for marrying a profane man, 1779; address to his anabaptist brethren, 1783; election sermon, 1784; installation of J. Ellis, 1785; on death of J. Howard, 1789; on the atonement, 1791; on the death of Mrs. Strong, 1793. After his death his work on universal salvation was published, called Calvinism improved.

- Sprague's Annals. HUNTINGTON, ENOCH, minister et Palle

town, Conn., died in 1809, aged abou 70. 1st graduated at Yale in 1759. He succeeded W. Russell and was succeeded by Dan Huntington, The pastor of Westfield church in Middletown was David Huntington, who graduated at Dartmouth in the third class in 1773, and died in 1811, aged about 60. He published a sermon at the ordination of E. Parsons, 1773; a sermon on political wisdom, 1786.

HUNTINGTON, ASAHEL, minister of Topsfield, died April 22, 1813, aged 52. He left an unfinished sermon, written on the day of his sickness, on the text, "Be ye also ready." He was born in Franklin, Conn., once a part of Norwich, in which town his ancestors lived. His grandfather was Deacon Christopher II. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1786, the first scholar in his class. He was ordained in 1789. He was an excellent minister and teacher. His wife was Alethea Lord of Pomfret, of whom there is a portrait in Cleaveland's address. She was the daughter of Dr. Elisha L., and died in 1830, aged 83. Dr. Elisha of Lowell and Asahel II. of Salem are his sons. -Topsfield Celebration; N. Cleaveland's Address.

HUNTINGTON, JEDIDIAH, general, died Sept. 25, 1818, aged 75. He was born in Norwich, Conn., Aug. 15, 1743, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1763, on which occasion he pronounced the first English oration ever delivered at commencement. He soon engaged in commercial pursuits in Norwich. At the age of twentythree he made a profession of religion. Entering the army in command of a regiment in 1775, he was in May, 1777, appointed by congress a brigadier-general. After the war, during which he had the esteem and confidence of Washington, he was sheriff of the county and treasurer of the State. In 1789 he was appointed collector of the port of New London, an office which he held twenty-six years, resigning it in 1815. His first wife, the daughter of Gov. Trumbull, died at tains that our sins will arise, "in the holy voice Dedham in 1775, while he was on his way to join

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

STATE OF THE STATE

the army at Cambridge. His reliet, the sister of Bishop Moore of Virginia, died in March, 1831. With the courage of the soldier he combined the humble graces of the Christian. He was an officer of the church, a member of the American foreign mission society from its organization, and a zealous supporter of various charitable institutions. His own charities were unequalled in Connecticut. — Panoplist, Xv. 143.

HUNTINGTÓN, EBENEZER, major-general, died at Norwich, Conn., in June, 1834, aged 79. He graduated at Yale college in 1775, and joined the army near Boston in the same year. He rose in rank in successive years; in 1779 he was appointed lieutenant-colonel, and was present at the surrender of Cornwallis. He was twice elected a member of congress. In 1799 he was appointed, at the request of Washington, brigudier-general in the army then raised.

HUNTINGTON, HEZEKIAH, died at Middletown, Conn., May 27, 1842, aged 83. He was United States attorney for Connecticut.

HUNTINGTON, Joshua, minister of Boston, son of Jedidiah II., was born Jan. 31, 1786, and graduated at Yale college in 1804. During a revival in 1802 he became pious. He was ordained colleague with Dr. Eckley, May 18, 1808, and on his return from a journey for his health to Canada, died at Groton Sept. 11, 1819, aged 33. He was a very faithful and useful minister, and a humble, disinterested, excellent Christian. When, in his sickness, told that he was about to meet his father, he replied, "Yes; it will be a glorious meeting." He published memoirs of the life of Abigail Waters, 1817. — Panoplist, XVI. 529-535; Sprague's Annals.

HUNTINGTON, SUSAN, wife of the preceding, the daughter of Achilles Mansfield, minister of Killingworth, Conn., was born Jan. 27, 1791. Her mother was the grand-daughter of Jared Eliot, minister of K., a descendant of the "Indian apostle." At the age of sixteen she made a profession of religion. She was married May 18. 1809. After surviving her husband four years, she died in Boston Dec. 4, 1823, aged 32. Her four surviving children became partakers of the same grace in which their parents rejoiced. was very intelligent and remarkably pious. wrote a letter to a friend recovered from sickness, which is tract No. eighty-eight of the American tract society, and the story of Little Lucy. Her memoirs by B. B. Wisner, with an introductory essay and poem by James Montgomery, were published, third edition, 1829, containing her letters, journal, and some pieces of poetry. Five editions have been published in Scotland.

HUNTINGTON, SAMUEL, governor of Ohio, died at Painesville July 7, 1817, aged 49. He was the son of Dr. H. of Coventry, and the adopted son of Governor II. of Connecticut, was born in 1765, and graduated at Yale college in 1785. Removing in 1801 to Ohio, he was there apovernor, as successor of Tiffin, the first governor; in 1810 he was succeeded by Meigs.

HUNTINGTON, GEORGE, died at Rome, N. Y., Sept. 23, 1842, aged 71; an early settler, and patriarch of the village. There was but one house when he settled. He was a merchant, a man of talents and integrity.

HUNTINGTON, ZACHARIAH, general, died at Norwich, Conn., June 23, 1850, aged 86.

HUNTINGTON, JABEZ W., judge, died in Norwich Nov. 1, 1847, aged 59. He graduated at Yale in 1806, and was a member of congress from 1829 to 1834. He was a judge of the superior court of C., and a senator of the United States in 1840 and in 1845. He had a high character for talents, integrity, and patriotism.

HUNTINGTON, JABEZ, deacon, died in Norwich Aug. 16, 1848, aged 81. The son of Gen. Jededian II., he graduated at Yale in 1784. He was president of Norwich bank, and connected with it for fifty years. Mrs. Sarah L. Smith, the missionary, was his daughter. His widow, Sarah Lanman II., died Feb. 19, 1850, aged 84; an intelligent Christian, blind in her last years.

HUNTINGTON, NEHEMIAH, died in Peterborough, N. Y., in 1855, aged 78. His father removed from Bozrah to Lebauon, N. II., in 1780. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1804, and was sound lawyer and ripe scholar, a Christian, and an elder in the church; a man rich in good deeds.

HUNTOON, JONATHAN, governor of Maine, died at Fairfield in Oct., 1851, aged 70.

HUNTTING, JUNATHAN, died at Southold, L. I., Dec. 30, 1850, aged 72. A graduate of Yale in 1804, he was the minister of Southold twenty-one years, and after his dismission in 1828 supplied various publits.

HURD, Carlton, D. D., minister of Fryeburg, Me., died Dec. 6, 1855, aged nearly 60. Born at Newport, N. II., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1818. He was settled in 1825, and was an able and laborious minister. He delivered some discourses on the Revelation, in the last of which he gave notice that his next and last would be on "the great white throne." The cause of his death was a cold, taken by preaching a funeral sermon near the open door of a private house. His recollections of his daughter were published, with a portrait by Sartain, 2d edition, 1847. Her name was Marion Lyle Hurd.

HURD, ISAAC, minister in Exeter, N. H., died in South Reading Oct. 4, 1856, aged 70. Born in Charlestown, he graduated at Harvard in 1806, and was ordained in Lynn Sept. 15, 1813, being then a Unitarian; but, becoming a Trinitarian, he was dismissed in 1816, and the next year was installed over the second church in Exeter, where ir

ie

B

ollege in as there elected overnor;

ne, N. Y.. , and pae house man of

died at

died in raduated congress f the sue United igh charn.

in Norof Gen. 784. He connected Smith, the ow, Sarah 4; an inrs.

in Peterlis father [., in 1780. md was a an, and an d deeds. of Maine, hold, L. I., of Yale in wenty-one 8 supplied

Fryeburg, Born at tmouth in an able some diswhich he uld be on his death al sermon His reed, with a Her 7.

. II., died 0. Born d in 1806, 313, being itarian, he ar was iner, where student, a good scholar, amiable, exemplary, and Louisiana and West Florida, 1784. faithful.

HURLBUT, JAMES, a physician, was born in Berlin, Conn., in 1717, but lived in his latter years at Wethersfield, where he died April 11, 1794, aged 77. He was a learned and skilful physician. No physician was better acquainted with our indigenous materia medica; he employed the blood root, geranium, cornus, trillium; the cornus norvegica in strangury. Although he was the greatest genius in the medical profession in Connecticut, he was in his last years a miserable drunkard, an enormous eater of opium, a poor dependent on charity. - Thacher.

HURLBUT, MARTIN LUTHER, died in Southampton in 1842, aged 61. He graduated at Williams college in 1804. He was eminent as a teacher, and lived at Charleston, S. C., as well as at S. His son, William Henry, a graduate of Harvard in 1847, is known at Cambridge as a scholar; he is the author of an interesting book relating to one of the West India islands.

HUTCHINS, THOMAS, geographer-general of the United States, died at Pittsburgh April 28, 1789. He was born in Monmouth county, New Jersey. Before he was sixteen years of age he went to the western country, and was soon appointed ensign in the army. He distinguished himself at fort Pitt, the plan of which he laid out, and which was executed by him under Gen. Bouquet. He afterwards lived several years in Louisiana, and was engaged in a variety of battles with the Indians while with the army in West Florida. He here obtained a captain's commission in the British army; but, being much attached to America, he found it necessary to relinquish it. He was in London at the commencement of the war in 1775, and his zeal in the cause of his country induced him to refuse some excellent offers which were made him in England. Being suspected in 1779 of holding a correspondence with Franklin, then in France, he was thrown into a dungeon, and lost 12,000 pounds in one day. In this dark and loathsome place he was kept six weeks. He was then examined and liberated. After this he went to France and sailed thence to Charleston, where he joined the army under Gen. Greene. It was not long before he was appointed geographer-general of the United States. He was esteemed and beloved, being remarkable for piety, charity, and benevolence. Under the vicissitudes of life he was patient and resigned to the Divine will. Dr. Morse was much indebted to him in the compilation of his Amer-He published an account of ican gazetteer. Bouquet's expedition against the Ohio Indians in 1764, with a map and plates, 1765; a description of Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, North Carolina, etc., with maps, London, 1778; and a his-

he continued till his decease. He was a diligent | torical narrative and topographical description of

HUTCHINSON, ANN, an artful woman, who occasioned much difficulty in New England soon after its first settlement, came from Lincolnshire to Boston in 1636, and was the wife of Wm. II.. a representative of Boston. She was an admirer of Mr. Cotton. The members of his church used to meet every week to repeat his sermons, and discourse on doctrines. She set up meetings for women, and soon had a numerous audience. After repeating the sermons of Mr. Cotton she added reflections of her own; she advocated erroncous sentiments, and warped the discourses of her minister to coincide with her own opinions. She asserted that believers are personally united with the spirit of God; that commands to work out salvation belong only to such as are under a eovenant of works; that sanctification is not sufficient evidence of a good state; and she pretended to immediate revelation respecting future events. She soon threw the whole colony into a flame. Those who opposed her were said to be in favor of a covenant of works, and those who supported her were said to be vindicating a covenant of grace. The progress of her sentiments occasioned the synod of 1637, the first synod in America. This convention of ministers condemned eighty-two erroneous opinions, then propagated in the country. Mrs. Hutchinson, after this sentence of her opinions, was herself called before the court in November of the same year, and, being convicted of traducing the ministers and advancing errors, was banished the colony. Her trial is published in the appendix of the second volume of Hutchinson. She discovers art, spirit, and talents. The church in Boston excommunicated her for many evils in her conversation as well as for corrupt opinions. She went with her husband to Rhode Island. In the year 1642, after her husband's death, she removed into the Dutch country beyond New Haven, and the next year she, her son Francis, and most of her family of sixteen persons were killed by the Indians .-Hist. Soc. VII. 16, 17; IX. 28, 29; Hutchinson, I. 55-57, 66, 70-73; Magnalia, VII. 17-20; Win-

HUTCHINSON, THOMAS, died in Boston Dec. 3, 1739, aged 64. He was the father of Gov. H. He was long a member of the council, and deserves remembrance for his good deeds. He was a worthy member of the church. For thirty years or more he gave away secretly to the poor 20 or 30 pounds in each year, at a season in which he had received some special favor in God's providence. He gave to the town the north Latin school-house, and was at half the expense of the north writing-school. Mather published a sermon on his death.

HUTCHINSON, THOMAS, governor of Massa-

scendant of Mrs. Ann H., he was the son of Col. Thomas II., a distinguished merchant and memher of the council, and a most benevolent and excellent man, who died in 1739. He was born Sept. 9, 1711, and graduated at Harvard college in 1727. He applied himself first to mercantile business, but without success. He then engaged in the study of the common law of England, and the principles of the British constitution, with reference to his employment in public life. For ten years he was a representative, and the speaker of the house three years. In 1752 he succeeded his uncle Edward, a judge of probate; he was a member of the council from 1749 to 1766, and lieut,-governor from 1758 to 1771; in 1760 he was appointed chief justice after the death of Judge Sewall. This appointment displeased the Otis family, the father having had the promise of a seat on the bench. At one time he held the offices of councillor, judge of probate, chief justice, and lieutenant-governor. His respect to religious institutions, his sympathy with the distressed, his affability, his integrity, industry, and talents, procured in a very high degree the public confidence. The stamp act being passed, Andrew Oliver, one of the council, and brother-in-law of Mr. Hutchinson, was appointed distributor of stamps. The law was to go into effect Nov. 1, 1765. A few months before that time, Jared Ingersoll, the distributor for Connecticut, arrived in Boston from London. When he left town, Mr. Oliver accompanied him a short distance, in consequence of which he was hung in effigy on the great tree at South Boston, and a mob destroyed a building which he had erected, supposed to be designed for a stamp office, and also destroyed the furniture of his house. Mr. Oliver immediately resigned his office. In the evening the mob thanked him, and made a bonfire on Fort hill near his house. The next evening the house of Mr. Hutchinson was attacked, a report being spread that he had written letters in favor of the stamp act; but the chief damage was the breaking of the windows. In a few evenings there was a more formidable assault. The merchants being displeased with the officers of the customs and the admiralty, a mob was collected in the evening of Aug. 26th in King street, and well supplied with strong drink. Having first plundered the cellar of the comptroller of the customs of the wine and spirits, the rioters proceeded with intexicated rage to the house of Mr. Hutchinson, and, splitting the doors to pieces with broad axes, they destroved or cast into the street everything which was in the house, and kept possession until daylight. The damage was estimated at 2,500 pounds, besides the loss of a great collection of public and private papers. He received a The governor was that sent them in the autumn to Samuel Cooper, with grant for his losses.

chusetts, died June 3, 1780, aged 68. A de- night at the castle. The town the next day voted their abhorrence of the riot; but no person was punished; even six or eight persons who were imprisoned for this affair were released by a company, who, by threats, obtained the keys of the prison from the prison-keeper.

The political controversy continued during the remainder of Bernard's administration from 1765 to 1770; and Mr. Hutchinson, by taking his seat in the council in 1707 without being chosen, and merely in consequence of his office of licut,-governor, excited a clamor against him. He charged it upon Mr. Hawley's resentment for something which had occurred in the court of common law. But the claim to a seat was voluntarily abandoned, though Mr. H. thought, that the early practice sanctioned the claim. In a few days, however, he was appointed by the house to an important post, that of one of the commissioners for settling the boundary with New York. In 1768 the arrival of the troops at Boston increased the popular excitement against the lieut .- governor. At the request of the governor he accompanied the sheriff to the manufactory house, to advise the occupants to leave it, as it belonged to the State and was at the disposal of the governor, who had appropriated it for the use of the troops; but the occupants, encouraged by "the first-rate sons of liberty," held their ground. When Gov. Bernard left the province in 1769, the administration devolved on Mr. Hutchinson, the lieut.-governor. In the next year the Boston massacre, as it was called, occurred, and inflamed the public mind: he had also a long controversy with the assembly, on his proroguing the assembly to Cambridge, by order of the king; the council was also opposed to him. At this period, in meditating on the "ture, he concluded, that it would be prudent f to remain chief justice, and to peace; and his wishes he compass his da municated to the British government. In the mean time, however, his commission as governor was received in March, 1771, Andrew Oliver being nominated lieut.-governor, and Tho. Flucker secretary in his stead. Unhappily for himself, he accepted the appointment, for from this time till his departure for England in 1774, he was in constant dispute with the assembly and council. Among the subjects of controversy were the provision made for his support by the crown, which paid him a salary of 1500 pounds, and the provision made in the same way for the judges. By his speech Jan. 6, 1773, asserting the supreme authority of parliament, he provoked a discussion by the council and house, which it would have been wiser not to have awakened. Indeed, the minister recommended to him not to renew the discussion. In 1772 Dr. Franklin procured some confidential letters of Gov. H., and others, and ext day person rho were v a coms of the iring the om 1765 his seat sen, and eut.-govcharged mething mon law. ly abanthe early ew days, se to an issioners ork. In inereased governor. ompanied ulvise the State and o had ap-; but the e sons of . Bernard ration degovernor. as it was lie mind; the asembly to e council d. in medt it would ce, and to s he com-. In the governor liver being ucker secimself, he s time till as in cond council. e the prown, which the prolges. By

supreme discussion

puld have

ndeed, the renew the ared some thers, and

pper, with

published. Mr. Cooper put them into the hands of the speaker, with permission to show them to five persons. Thus they were kept six or eight months. In June, 1773, they were communicated to the legislature in secret session. In order to obviate the difficulty of the restriction and to make them public, Mr. II. says, that Mr. Hancock presented to the house copies of the letters. which some one in the street had put into his hands; and the next day, in consequence of copies being abroad, the person to whom they were sent gave his consent to the publication. It has been recently asserted, that Mr. Williamson obtained them from a public office; but this is probably a mistake. They were written to Thomas Whately, a member of parliament, who at the time was out of office, and in opposition to the ministry, and the ministry never saw them. In the letters also there was no sentiment but what the governor had openly expressed in his addresses to the legislature. The council indeed reproached him for saying, " there must be an abridgment of what are called English liberties;" but this was no more than what had been said openly in his speech at the last meeting, - the whole paragraph was,- " I never think of the measures necessary for the peace and good order of the colonies without pain; there must be an abridgment of what are called English liberties; I doubt whether it is possible to project a system of government in which a colony, three thousand miles distant, shall enjoy all the liberty of the parent state." The writers of the other letters were Andre - Oliver, Charles Paxton, Thomas Moffatt, Robert Auchmuty, Nathaniel Rogers, and George Rome. Gov. H. complained, that his letters were united with the other letters, of which he knew nothing, and that he was made responsible for all. Franklin remarked, in regard to the restriction under which he sent the letters, "possibly, as distant objects seen only through a mist appear larger, the same may happen from the mystery in this case." For their concern in obtaining these letters, Dr. Franklin and Mr. Temple were removed from office. Mr. II. thought, that the letters had been in the possession of a member of parliament, not Mr. Whately, and by him given to Dr. Franklin. The last public difficulty was the affair of the tea. A part of it had been consigned to two sons of the governor, a part to Richard Clark and sons, and a part to Benj. Faneuil and Josh. Winslow. On the arrival of the first ship with tea, a "body meeting" of the town and neighborhood was called at old south church, on Tuesday, Nov. 30th, and it was resolved, that the tea should be sent back : Mr. Rotch, the owner, being required not to enter the tea, and Capt. Hall, the master, not an injunction, that they should not be copied nor | brought from below the eastle to a wharf, and a watch of twenty-five men was appointed for securing the ship. The governor sent a sheriff, who read a proclamation for the dispersion of the publie, but a general hiss followed, and it was unanimously voted to proceed in defiance of the governor, and compel the owner and master to engage to send the tea back in the same vessel. When two other vessels arrived, the committee of safety required them to be brought to the same wharf. There was a difficulty in the return of the ships, for no clearance could be obtained from the eustom-house, and no pass by the eastle from the governor. As there were several men-of-war in the harbor, an attempt to get to sea without a pass would be ineffectual. It was apprehended, too, that the collector would demand the duties, and seize the ship and goods, in the proper discharge of his office. Another "body" meeting was therefore summoned Dec. 14, 1773, of the people of Boston and the adjacent towns, who enjoined the owner of the ship to apply for a clearance and a pass, which were refused. When the governor's answer was returned to the "body," they dissolved the meeting and repaired to the wharf as a guard to the destrovers of the tea. About fifty men, covered with blankets and appearing like Indians, had previously marched by the old south church, and gone on board the vessel. On the arrival of the "body," the "Indians" in two or three hours hoisted out of the holds of the ship three hundred and forty-two chests of tea and emptied them into the sea. The governor was much blamed in England for not granting a pass; but he could not have done it without violating his oath, as the laws of the custom-house had not been observed. Nor could he secure the tea in the town without bringing the regiment from the castle, or by marines from the men-of-war. This would have brought on a contest. In fact, the sons of liberty had annihilated all the powers of government. There was not a judge, justice of the peace, or sheriff, who could venture to withstand the inflamed, determined people. Feb. 24, 1774, he informed the legislature by message, that he had obtained his majesty's leave to go to England, and that he should soon avail himself of it. Gen. Gage arrived May 13th, but Mr. II. was assured of the king's intention to reinstate him, when Gen. Gage's services should be elsewhere required, and that he should not suffer by the loss of his commission. He sailed for England June 1st. After the publication of the letters in 1773, the council and house voted an address for the removal of the governor. His friend, Israel Mauduit, petitioned for a hearing before the privy council, which was granted Jan. 29, 1774, Mr. Wedderburne defending the governor, and Mr. to land it. By order of the town the ship was Dunning and John Lee being on the other side.

The decision was in favor of "the honor, integrity, and conduct " of the governor, and was approved by the king. In Massachusetts Jonathan Sewall ably defended him under the signature of Philalethes. After his arrival in England, the unprosperous state of affairs in America deprived him of the offices and rewards he may have expected, though he received a pension. He lived at Brompton, near London. The death of his youngest son, William, in Feb., 1780, most deeply afflicted him; and he himself died in June, and was buried at Croydon. His son, Thomas, died in England in 1811, aged 71, and Elisha, in 1824, aged 80. His brother, Foster II., was a judge of the supreme court. Mr. Hutchinson was a man of a good character, of unwearied industry, and of respectable talents. But it was his fortune to live at a Revolutionary period, and in the very focus of the popular excitement. His political views he candidly and manfully explained to the legislature in many speeches and messages, which display his learning, temper, and abilities. If any man descreed the gratitude of the British administration, it was he. Though a baronetcy was offered, which he declined for private reasons, yet was he treated with neglect. Had the "rebellion" been put down the first year, he would have been deemed worthy of the highest honors, so much does the estimation of men depend on success. Massachusetts, amidst all the vitunerations against him for encouraging the ministers in their measures to keep the colonies in a state of dependence, has one cause to remember him with gratitude, for when the commissioners, Brattle, Hawley, and Hancock, met those of New York at Hartford, May 12, 1773, it was his advice only, which prevented them from abandoning the claim of Mass. to the western territory of New York, which was retained and sold for a large sum. He deserves great honor also for his labors in regard to the history of Massachusetts. He published a brief state of the claim of the colonies, etc., 1764; the history of the colony of Massachusetts Bay, from the first settlement thereof in 1628 until the year 1750, in 2 vols., 8vo., the first in 1760, and the second in 1767; and a collection of original papers relative to the history of the colony of Massachusetts Bay, 8vo., 1769. Those works are held in high estimation by those who are searching into the history of our country. His grandson, Rev. John H., of Trentham, Eng., published from his manuscripts a third volume of the history of Massachusetts, from 1749 to 1774, 8vo., London, 1828. There was promised many years ago a biography of Gov. II. by the same descendant. - Warren; Gordon; Minot; Hutchinson's Hist.

Pennsylvania, died at Philadelphia of the yellow sketches of the life of Rev. Dr. West, 1819;

fever Sept. 6, 1793, aged 51. One of his sons was consul at Lisbon. - Thacher.

HUTCHINSON, ISRAEL, colonel, an officer in the Revolutionary war, died at Danvers, Mass., in 1811, aged 84.

HUTCHINSON, AARON, the minister of Grafton, Mass., died in 1800, aged 76. Born in Hebron, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1747, and was settled in 1750, and resigned in 1772, and was succeeded by D. Grosvenor. In 1775 he engaged to preach for five years in the towns of Pomfret, Woodstock, and Hartford, Vt. In 1776 he removed his family of ten children to Vermont, having a farm in Pomfret, preaching in the vicinity till his death. He had memory and a strong mind, but was unpolished and eccentric. In his whole life he was prevented from preaching by ill health only two Sabbaths. He published at Grafton a sermon on valor for the truth. Dr. Tucker replied to the sermon. When some of his people found him digging at the bottom of a well, "Really," said Dr. Tucker, "that was veritas in puteo." He published also a reply to Tucker, 1768; a sermon after the execution of Arthur; two sermons as he left his people, 1772; a sermon, 1772; at Pelham, 1773. - Sprague's Annals.

HUTCHINSON, AARON, died in 1843, aged upwards of 90. The son of Rev. Aaron II. of Grafton, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1770. He was a lawyer in Grafton, N. H., and in Lebanon, N. H., where he died. His son, Henry, a lawyer at Hanover, N. H., and at N. Y., married Mary, a daughter of Professor Woodward.

HUTCHINSON, ANDERSON, chief justice of Texas, died at Jackson, Miss., Dec. 31, 1852. He was the author of a code, and manual of forms. HYDE, ALVAN, D. D., minister of Lee, Mass., died suddenly Dec. 4, 1833, aged 65. Born in Franklin, Conn., the son of Joseph, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1788, and was settled June 6. 1792. He was highly respected as a pious, faithful, and successful minister, and as a teacher of young men destined for the ministry. His successor from 1834 to 1838 was J. N. Danforth. His brethren in Berkshire were Judson, West, Catlin, Shepard, Allen, and Collins. His son, Alvan, a graduate of Williams in 1815, was settled as a minister at Madison, Ohio, and died in 1824, at Lee, aged 30. A memoir of Dr. Hyde was published in 1834. He published the following sermons: at thanksgiving, 1796; on the death of Mrs. West and H. W. Dwight, 1804; of Mrs. Bassett, of Mrs. Benton; of Rev. D. Perry, 1817; of Madam D. Williams, 1833; on the eonjugal relation, 1815; at the ordination of A. Clark. 1807; of A. Hyde, Jr., 1819; the power of Christ HUTCHINSON, JAMES, M. D., professor of in the salvation of believers, 1810; on the landmateria medica and chemistry in the university of | ing at Plymouth, 1820; on temperance, 1829;

HYDE, NANCY MARIA, died at Norwich, Conn., March 26, 1816, aged 24. She was the daughter of Elisha Hyde, who died in 1813. For a few years she was a teacher of young ladies, well qualified, skilful in painting and embroidery. Her writings, with a sketch of her life by her friend and neighbor, Miss Huntley, afterwards Mrs. Sigourney, were published in 1816.

ILLSLEY, ISAAC, collector of the port of Portland, Me., appointed by Jefferson, died Oct. 17,

1853, aged 88.

IMLAY, George, published a topographical description of the western territory of North America, 8vo., London, 1792; the same, with a supplement by J. Filson, 2 vols., New York, 1793.

INCE, JONATHAN, a distinguished mathematician, died in 1657. He graduated at Harvard in 1650, in the class of President Hoar.

INGALLS, WILLIAM, M. D., professor of anatomy in Brown university, died at Wrentham, Sept. 8, 1851, aged 82. Born in Newburyport, the son of William, his earlier ancestor, Edmund of Lynn, came from Lincolnshire in 1629. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1790; the only survivor of his class is Josiah Quiney. He was long an eminent physician in Boston.

INGERSOLL, JONATHAN, minister of Ridgefield, Conn., died in 1778, aged about 62. He was graduated at Yale in 1736. He published election sermon, 1761.

INGERSOLL, JARED, a judge of the admiralty court, died in New Haven in Aug., 1781, aged alcout 60. He was born in Milford, Conn., in 1722; was graduated at Yale college in 1742; settled at New Haven as a lawyer, and was agent of the colony in England in 1757; but being appointed distributor of the stamps in Connecticut, under the stamp act, he lost his popularity. The people of New Haven compelled him to resign Aug. 24, 1765. Not deeming this resignation explicit, a large company from the eastern part of Connecticut set out on a journey to New Haven. They met Mr. I. at Wethersfield, when they compelled him to resign and cry out, three times, Liberty and Property. The next day five hundred men escorted him to Hartford. On being appointed admiralty judge for the middle district, about the year 1780, he removed to Philadelphia; but in consequence of the Revolution he returned to New Haven.

INGERSOLL, SAMUEL B., minister of Shrewsbury, Mass., died in 1820. He succeeded Dr. Sumner. He graduated at Yale in 1817, and in three years died in the year of his settlement. His sermon at Shrewsbury June 18, 1820, was published, with a memoir.

INGERSOLL, JARED, LL. D., judge of the | INMAN, HENRY, died at New York Jan. 17,

an essay on the state of infants, 1830. - Sprague's district court of Philadelphia, the son of Judge Jared, died Oct. 31, 1822, aged 73. He was graduated at Yale college in 1766, and attained a high rank as a lawyer in Philadelphia. He was also a member of congress, and of the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. The office of attorney-general of Pennsylvania he resigned in 1816. At the time of his death he was judge. In 1812 he was the Federal candidate for the office of vice-president of the United States.

INGERSOLL, JONATHAN, I.L. D., judge, and lieut.-governor of Connecticut, died Jan. 12, 1843, aged 76. He was born in Ridgefield, the son of Rev. Jonathan I., and was graduated at Yale in 1760. He settled at New Haven and became eminent in the profession of the law. During the last thirty years of his life he was in many unsought public employments, and in all enjoyed the perfect confidence of his fellow citizens. He was appointed judge in 1798, but resigned in 1801, and was chosen lieut.-governor in 1816. He left a wife and seven children. His daughter, Grace, married to Peter Grellet, died in Paris, 1816. He was a patriot, statesman, and incorruptible judge. Of the episcopal church he was from early life a member; his life evinced his benevolence and piety; he was eminently a man of prayer. He lived and died without reproach; yet at death he had no proud confidence; his reliance was on the mercy of the Redeemer.

INGERSOLL, JAMES, died in Boston 1851, bequeathing to various societies 20,000 dollars,

INGLES, John, colonel, a brave officer during the Revolutionary war, died near Raleigh, N. C., Oct. 10, 1816, aged 77. He was an emigrant Scotchman, and was commended by Steuben as one of the best of disciplinarians.

INGLIS, CHARLES, D. D., bishop of Nova Scotia, died in February or March, 1816, aged 82. He was rector of Trinity church, New York, in 1777, and for some years; but he fled as a tory, and was succeeded by Mr. Provoost. His son, John, was made bishop in 1825; and died in London in Nov., 1850. He published an answer to Paine's Common Sense, in Feb., 1776, which made him obnoxious to the patriots. - Observer, Jan. 16, 1851.

INGLIS, JAMES, D. D., minister of Baltimore. and an eloquent preacher, died Aug. 15, 1820. A volume of his sermons was soon afterward published.

INGRAM, DAVID, wrote travels in America in 1582; published in Hakluyt.

INMAN, RICHARD, died in Wilkesbarre, Penn., in 1831, aged 77. He lost four brothers in Indian battles and skirmishing in 1778. He left a large family of children, who removed still farther west.

is sons icer in Mass.,

f Grafin He-17, and 72, and 775 he wns of ln 1776 to Verin the and a centric. preach-Ic pube truth. n some bottom nat was eply to tion of , 1772; rague's 3, aged

1 II. of in 1770. n Leba-Ienry, a married

stice of

52. He f forms. , Mass., Born in aduated June 6, s, faithcher of lis sucanforth. , West, lis son, vas setdied in r. Hyde followhe death of Mrs. , 1817;

onjugal Clark, f Christ e land-, 1829;

1819;

1846, aged 44, a distinguished painter, and president of the National academy of the arts of design. He was born in Utica, and studied under Jarvis. He was chiefly skilled in portrait painting, working rapidly, and having a peculiar freedom and grace of pencil. He was an artist of fine powers, producing delightful pictures.

INMAN, JOHN, died in New York March 30, 1850, aged 46. He was a brother of Henry Inman, a native of Utien, and educated for the law, but spent his life in literary and editorial labors. On his return from Europe, he was connected with the Standard and the New York Mirror, and with the Commercial Advertiser, of which he became chief editor on the death of Col. Stone. For some years he edited the Columbian magazine.

IREDELL, James, judge, was appointed a judge in North Carolina in 1777, and in 1790, a judge of the supreme court of the United States. He died in Edenton in October, 1709. James I., probably his son, was governor in 1827.

IREDELL, JAMES, governor of North Carolina in 1827, died in 1853, aged 05. He was also judge of the superior court, and a senator of the United States from 1828 to 1831.

IRVIN, CALLENDER, general, died at Philadelphia in 1841. He was commissary-general of supplies, and president of the Cincinnati, much respected. IRVINE, WILLIAM, major-general, died July 30, 1804, aged 63. He was born in Ireland. Educated for the medical profession, he served as a surgeon on board of a British ship in the war which began in 1754, and after the peace of 1763 settled at Carlisle, Penn. In 1774 he was a member of the state convention. In 1776 he served in Canada, and accompanied Col. Thompson, who was dispatched by Gen. Sullivan from Sorelle to dislodge the enemy from Trois Rivières; but was taken prisoner June 16th, and remained as such at Quebec nearly two years, until he was exchanged in April, 1778. On his release he was promoted to the command of the second Pennsylvania regiment. In 1781 the defence of the northwestern frontier, threatened by the British and Indians, was intrusted to him. After the war he was elected a member of congress. During the whiskey insurrection of 1794 he was a commissioner to the insurgents on the part of the State, and, his peaceful mission having failed, he was more successful at the head of the militia. Removing about this time from Carlisle to Philadelphia, he was appointed intendant of military IRVINE, JAMES, general, a Revolutionary officer, died at Philadelphia, April, 1819, aged 84. He was a colonel in 1776; in 1782 a major-general in Pennsylvania.

IRVING, SHIRLEY, a physician of Portland,

Me., died in Boston in July, 1813, aged 54. He was the son of John Irving and the grandson of Gov. W. Shirley. He entered Harvard college in 1773, but the war interrupted his studies. For many years he was a highly esteemed physician in Portland. In his last years he suffered from an affection of the lungs, and was induced to return to Boston. He was of an equable temper, of unbending integrity, affable and benevolent, as well as learned without pedantry. — Dr. S. W. Williams' Med. Biog.

e

tÌ

h

ti

tl

B

dı

L

18

en

ro

of

no ne

fai

Co

811 mi

in 16

acı

Hi

da

Ma

cec

บกเ

ve

an

his wri

ser

age

cha

wh

wa

war

He

of

chu

emi

IRVING, WILLIAM, a literary merchant, was a member of congress from New York city from 1812 to 1818, and one of the committee of commerce and manufactures. He died Nov. 9, 1821. He was the brother of Washington Irving, of whose "Salmagundi" he wrote some papers.

IRVING, MATTHEW, a physician, died at Charleston, S. C., in Sept., 1827. He was a distinguished physician and scholar, and a patriot of the Revolution.

IRWIN, JARED, general, governor of Georgia, was a soldier of the Revolution. He was a member of the convention which adopted the constitution in 1789; was governor from 1796 to 1798, and also from 1806 to 1809, when he was succeeded by Mitchell; and died March 1, 1818, aged 68.

ISHAM, JIRAH, general, died at New London, Conn., in 1842, aged 54. Born in Colchester, he graduated at Yale in 1707; was a lawyer at New London, much respected, state's attorney, mayor, and judge of probate; also major-general of the militia in the war of 1812. His three wives were Lucretia, daughter of Dr. L. Hubbard of New Llaven, Lucretia Starr, and Elizabeth C. Trott of New London. He left twelve children.

IVES, Levi, M. D., a physician, was born in 1750, and died at New Haven, Conn., Oct. 17, 1826, aged 76. He was one of the founders of the New Haven medical society, and one of the conductors of the "Cases and Observations," a medical journal at New Haven, the first in this country. With professional skill, he acquired only a competence. While he regarded the temporal welfare of his patients, he had a deeper solicitude for their spiritual interests.

IVES, Jesse, minister of Norfolk, Conn., died in 1805, aged about 69. He graduated at Yale in 1758, in the class of Dr. Hopkins.

IVES, REUBEN, Episcopal minister, died in Cheshire, Conn., Oct. 14, 1836, aged 75. He was a graduate of Yale in 1786.

IVES, ANSEL W., a physician, died in New York Feb. 2, 1838, aged 50. Born in Woodbury, Conn., a farmer's son, he was accustomed as he went to his toils in the field to carry a book in his pocket; then he taught school; then studied physic with Dr. North of New London, Dr. White of Fishkill, and Dr. Mott of New York.

He In 1827 he became a member of the Presbyterian on of church. He wrote for the medical journals. His paper on the humulus lupulus gained him reputation. He republished with notes Paris' pharmacologiæ, and Hamilton on mercurial remedies; and on the influenza of 1815. - Williams' Med.

IZARD, RALPH, a senator of the United States from South Carolina, from 1789 to 1795, was a distinguished and eloquent statesman. In the judgment of Washington, no man was more honest in public life. There was an enthusiasm in his political sentiments; but his patriotic motives were unquestionable. In the senate he had the confidence of all parties. He died at South Bay, May 30, 1804, aged 66. His wife was Alice, daughter of Peter Delancey of New York.

IZARD, GEORGE, general, governor of the Arkansas territory from 1825 to 1828, died at Little Rock, in consequence of the gout, Nov. 22, 1828. He was a native of South Carolina. After a classical education and travelling in Europe he entered the army as a captain of artillery and rose to the rank of major-general. At one period of the late war he commanded the division on the northwestern frontier. After the war he resided near Philadelphia till he was appointed successor of Gov. Miller. In his office of governor he was faithful and had the confidence of the people.

JACKMAN, ABEL, colonel, died in 1820, in Corinth, Me., aged 58. In assisting to hive a swarm of bees he was so stung as to die in ten minutes. Who is secure against death?

JACKSON, EDWARD, died at Newton, Mass., in 1681, aged 78. He came from England in 1645. To Harvard college he gave four hundred acres of land in Billerica and other property. His descendants were numerous: one of his daughters married Rev. N. Hobart.

JACKSON, JOSEPH, minister of Brookline, Mass., died July 22, 1796, aged 61, and was succeeded by John Pierce. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1753; was a tutor some years; and was ordained April 9, 1760. He was an excellent and acceptable preacher; but through his modesty we cannot judge of his merit from his writings, for he never would consent to publish a sermon, although he was often requested.

JACKSON, JONATHAN, died in Boston in 1810, aged 67. He was the son of Edward, a merchant, who graduated in 1726, and died in 1757, whose only sister married Judge Wendell. Mr. J. was graduated at Harvard in 1761, and was afterwards treasurer of the college and of the State. He was a member of the provincial congress, and of congress in 1781; the first marshal of Massachusetts district, and inspector of excise. His sons, Judge Charles and Dr. James, were men of eminence. Taking an early part in the American

As a physician his practice continually increased. | struggle for freedom, and being the owner of a slave, named Pomp, he felt the obligation of setting him free. He therefore liberated him by a noble document, recorded in the Suffolk probate office, and dated two weeks before the Declaration of Independence, saying: "I, Jonathan Jackson of Newburyport, in consideration of the impropriety I feel and have long felt in holding any person in constant bondage, more especially at the time when my country is so warmly contending for the liberty every man ought to enjoy," and then declares, that he has given freedom to his "negro man Pomp." This man lived, served in the cause of freedom during the war, and died in Andover, near Pomp's pond, in 1822, aged about Washington had the same feelings with Jackson, and ordered his slaves to be liberated on the death of his wife, as there were obstacles to their earlier liberation. - F. Jackson's Hist. of Newton.

JACKSON, HALL, M. D., a physician, died Sept. 28, 1797, in consequence of being overset in his gig while riding to visit a patient. He was the son of Dr. Clement Jackson of Portsmouth, N. H., who died Oct. 10, 1788, aged 82. After studying with his father, he attended the medical lectures in London during three years. On his return he settled in his native town, where he was eminent not only as a physician, but particularly as a surgeon. He frequently performed the operation of couching the eye. His habits were social, and he was a welcome guest in every circle. The culture of the foxglove in New England was introduced by him. He published a tract on the malignant sore throat which prevailed from 1784 to 1786. - Thucher.

JACKSON, JAMES, governor of Georgia, died at Washington March 18, 1806, aged 48. He was a native of England and came to this country at the age of fourteen in 1772. Early in the war he joined the army; in 1778 he was chosen brigadie major; in 1781 he commanded the legionary surps of the State. When the British evacuated Savannah, July 12, 1782, he received the keys. For his various services the assembly of the State presented him with a house and lot in Savannah. On the return of peace he engaged with success in the practice of the law. In 1789 he was chosen a member of congress, and soon afterwards a senator, which office he resigned in 1795. He was major-general of the militia; and governor from 1798, till his election as senator in the place of Gen. Gunn in 1801. His brother, Gen. Abraham J., died in Georgia Jan., 1810. Gov. Jackson had not strength of moral and religious principle to restrain him from duelling. He was an honorable murderer. In 1780 he killed Lieut. Gov. Wells in a duel, and was himself severely wounded in both knees. In consequence of a political controversy he fought a ollege For sician om an return of uns well

. Wit-

was a from f com-, 1821. ng, of ied at a disriot of corgia, mem-ie con-796 to he was 1, 1818. condon. ster, he at New mayor, of the of New rott of born in

Det. 17, ders of of the ions," a in this cquired ed the deeper n., died died in 5. He n New

at Yale

odbury, as he k in his studied on, Dr. York. duel with Col. R. Watkins in June, 1802, and was wounded in the hlp. Five shots were exchanged. In May, 1803, he complained that he had been cruelly treated by Georgia, and that republics are always ungrateful; he thought the capital of Wayne county ought to be called Jacksonville in honor of himself.

JACKSON, LEVI, died at Chesterfield, N. II., in 1821, aged 49. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1799, and was six years preceptor of the academy in Chesterfield, his native town; afterwards much in public service.

JACKSON, JAMES, Jr., M. D., died in Boston March 27, 1834, aged only 24. He graduated at Harvard at the age of eighteen; studied medicine with his father, the eminent physician, who still lives; was in Paris and Great Britain from 1831 to 1833, when he returned, ready for practice. He took rooms and sent out an advertisement; but he did not enter them, for in the same month he died. His afflicted father published a memoir of him in 8vo. He published a Boylston prize dissertation on pneumonia.

JACKSON, RICHARD S., died at Providence April 18, 1838, aged 74. He was a member of congress from 1808 to 1815. A merchant, he was among the first to engage in the cotton manufacture, and was a man of integrity and religion, the associate of various literary, benevolent, and religious institutions.

JACKSON, THOMAS, Episcopal minister, died at Alexandria, district of Columbia, in Nov., 1838,

JACKSON, HENRY, M. D., LL. D., professor of mathematics, etc., in the university of Georgia, died near Athens in 1841, aged 62. He went with Crawford as secretary of legation to France, and was absent from 1814 to 1817, resuming his college duties on his return, but retiring in 1828.

JACKSON, WILLIAM, D. D., minister of Dorset, Vt., died in 1842, aged 74. He was born in 1768, at Cornwall, Conn., and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1790. Having studied theology with Dr. Emmons and Dr. Spring, he was ordained in 1796. His wife, Susanna Cram of Brentwood, N. H., was a descendant of John Rogers. She survived her husband. Born in 1771, she died in 1848, aged 77. Her remarkable letters may be read in the memoirs of her daughter, Henrictta Anna Lorain Hamlin, the wife of the missionary, Dr. H. Dr. Jackson was an eminently pious and useful minister, as may be gathered from the book just referred to. In nine revivals five hundred were added to his church, of whom fo teen became preachers. Though he well studied a larranged his sermons, he did not write them out in full. Of his church was good Deacon Kent, worthy of perpetual honor, a man of faith and prayer, who died near a hundred years of age. At the age of ninety-two he made a memorable prayer at the bedside of his dying pastor, saying, with more expansion of language, but in substance, "Lord, we remember how thy servant has preached and with what wonderful power and success; but now we fear thou art about to take away our head. If so, - though we know not how to spare him, - lead him through the dark valley, safe from the malignant spirits there; conduct him to that blessed world, where thou dwellest, that he muy be in the presence of thee, the Lamb of God, in the midst of saints and angels, joining in their anthems of praise forever." 1)r. J's elder daughter married Rev. John Malthy of Sutton and of Bangor. Ilia son, Dr. Samuel C., was the minister of west parish in Andover, then agent of the board of education. - Sprague's Annals.

JACKSON, ANDREW, President of the United States, died near Nashville, Tennessee, June 8, 1845, aged 78. He was born at the Waxsaw settlement, South Carolina, March 16, 1767. Ilis parents came from the north of Ireland and were of Scotch descent. His early education he owed to the kindness of a cousin. He engaged in the war of the Revolution, in which he lost his two brothers. At the age of twenty-one he practised law in the back settlements of North Carolina. When the territory was made into the State of Tennessee, his residence was Nashville. In 1795 he assisted in forming its constitution. He was soon a representative in congress and a senator in 1797; then a judge of the supreme court. He was appointed a major-general, and in 1814, he received the like appointment in the army of the United States. His victory over the British at New Orleans was Jan. 8, 1815. The Seminole war he conducted in 1817-1818. In 1821 he was governor of Florida. He was chosen president in 1828, and again in 1832, - thus being in office eight years, succeeding J. Q. Adams and being followed by Mr. Van Buren. Some events of his administration were the removal of the deposits from the United States bank, and the suppression of the nullification movement in South Carolina. In earlier life, in the absence of all moral and religious principle he fought several duels; was wounded; and in 1804 killed Moses Dickenson in a ducl, - an act which must have embittered his whole life. In old age he was a member of the Presbyterian church. He died in great peace. confiding in the grace of the Redeemer, and expressing his hope of salvation, "through the merits and blood of our blessed Lord and Saviour." A letter of Mr. Jefferson has lately been published, in which he speaks of Gen. Jackson: "I feel much alarmed at the prospect of seeing him president. His passions are terrible. When I was president of the senate he was a senator; and he could never speak, on account of the rashness of his feelings. I have seen him attempt it repeatedly, and as often choke with rage." It deserves ils dying the consideration of a people intrusted with the mguage. power of choosing their own rulers, whether they how thy can be justified by any principle of duty or by a onderful wise regard to their own security in elevating a thou art - though murderer to the highest rank in the community? Whether, if they do this, they must not make a end him poor claim to be regarded as an intelligent and ulignant d world. virtuous people, worthy of God's gift of freedom? JACKSON, HENRY, deacon, died in Portland the pres-Aug., 1850, aged 67, an esteemed teacher in midst of hems of

married

or. His

west par-

l of edu-

e United

June 8. Waxsaw

67. His

and were

he owed

ed in the t his two practised

Carolina.

State of

In 1795

He was

senator in

urt. He

1814, he

my of the British at Seminole

21 he was president

g in office nd being

nts of his deposits

ppression

Carolina.

al and reels; was kenson in ttered his

er of the

at peace,

, and ex-

the mer-riour." A

published,

him pres-

en I was

; and he shness of it repeat-

" I feel

Portland nearly fifty years.

JACKSON, WILLIAM, died at Newton Feb. 27, 1855, aged 71. In early life he was dissatisfied with Mr. Holly's ministry in Boston and went to hear Mr. Channing; but he was led by the triumphant death of his wife to renounce Unitarianism. For the last forty years he was a pillar of the church at Newton Corner. As he was about to die, he was asked, if the Saviour was precious. He replied, "precious, very precious." While a member of congress he met regularly for prayer with a small band of Christians. He toiled for temperance and in the anti-slavery cause.

JACKSON, CHARLES, L.L. D., judge, died in Boston Dec. 13, 1855, aged 80. Born in Newburyport, the son of Jonathan J., a merchant, he graduated in 1703 at Harvard with the highest honors of a distinguished class. He studied law with Judge Parsons, and practised in Newburyport until appointed a judge of the supreme court in 1813, when he removed to Boston. After ten years he was induced by ill health to withdraw from office, but remained at the head of his profession. His services were most important on the commission, which reported in 1835 the Revised Statutes of Mass. From 1825 to 1834 he was of the corporation of Harvard college. Of his brothers, Dr. James Jackson survived him. As a Christian believer he calmly awaited the summons of death. He was the last survivor, but one, of his class. - Boston Advertiser, July 16, 1856.

JACOB, HENRY, a Puritan minister, came to Virginia in 1624; but died soon after his arrival. He left England and joined Robinson in Holland, being an Independent as to church government. He published in 1610 at Leyden, a treatise on Christ's true, visible, and material church. Returning to England, he founded the first Independent or Congregational church, of which he was chosen pastor with prayer and imposition of hands. After about eight years he came to America, and was succeeded by Mr. Lothropp. -Sprague's Annals.

JACOB, STEPHEN, chief justice of Vermont, died at Windsor in Feb., 1817, aged 61. He graduated at Yale in 1778, in the class of Barlow and Wolcott.

JACOB, JOHN L, a Methodist minister, died in Hampshire, Va., in 1839, aged 81.

JACOBS, PHERE ANN, once a slave, died at Brunswick, Me., and was buried March 3, 1850. She was honored in her death. President Allen, in whose family she had lived many years, came with two daughters several hundred miles, from Northampton, merely to attend her funeral. Rev. Dr. Adams, of Brunswick, made an affecting and eloquent speech. Her pall-bearers were Governor Robert Dunlap, Dr. Lincoln, Professor Packard, Joseph McKeen, and others. She was placed by the side of her friends, Mrs. Allen and her daughter Maria Malleville. Why was she thus mourned and honored? Because she was a Christian, and an eminent Christian. She had been thirty years a most worthy member of the church in Brunswick. Her friend, Mrs. Adams, died the same night. Dr. Adams said, that if his beloved companion, then lying dead, to be buried the next day, could have chosen an attendant spirit in her upward flight, doubtless she would have chosen Phebe. "Black Phebe!" he exclaimed, "she has sometimes been called; but her soul is whiter and purer than the light, and her heavenly garments are more resplendent than the sun shining in his brightness!" Mrs. Upham, the wife of Professor Upham, wrote a brief memoir of Phebe, which has been extensively circulated. Let her lofty thoughts and Christian virtues and elevated character be contrasted with the unblushing project of a slaveholder, the present Governor Adams of South Carolina, who, in his message at this period, when I am writing, says: "To maintain our present position we must have cheap labor also. This can be obtained in but one wayby re-opening the African slave-trade!" Let anv intelligent and Christian man make the comparison, and his soul will burn with indignation as he thinks of the governor of a southern State in this year, 1856. Jefferson, in his views of human rights, lamented the existence of slavery; Washington provided for the emancipation of his slaves. But, pure selfishness, in the absence of all sense of justice, and humanity, and human brotherhood, would not only hold fast those men who are now under hard oppression, but would gather a new multitude of bondsmen from the coast of Africa. All the noble women must revolt at the continuance of slavery, which, besides its hard oppression, annihilates all the sanctity of marriage.

JAFFREY, GEORGE, chief justice of New Hampshire, died at Portsmouth in 1749, aged about 67. Born in Newcastle, he graduated at Harvard in 1702. He was councillor and treasurer, and a judge at different periods.

JAMES, an Indian sagamore at Lynn, Mass., died of the small pox in 1633, with most of his people, and John, sagamore, at Winnesimet.
The eastern Indians, the Tarratines, made a captive of his wife, but she was liberated,—Hubbard.
lish, saying, they must have again new shirts, or

JAMES, THOMAS, first minister of Charlestown, Mass., died in England about 1678, aged 86. He was born in 1592; came from Lincolnshire, where he had been a minister, to Boston June 5, 1632; and when the church in Charlestown was organized Nov. 2, by dismissions from the Boston church, he was appointed the pastor. Mr. Symmes was ordained his associate, as teacher, Dec. 22, 1634, and not in 1652, as Dr. Bartlett states in his history of Charlestown. The succeeding ministers were Harvard, Allen, Shepard, Morton, Bradstreet, Stevens, Abbot, Prentice, Paine, and Morse. After a short time he was dis-Gov. Winthrop relates, that Satan missed. stirred up a spirit of discord between Mr. James and many of his people, on which Mr. Savage remarks, that "few in the present age would attribute such a misfortune to the agency of Satan," and that in our indictments for capital offences we retained till lately "the absurd allegation," "being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil." Mr. Savage is sincere in his disbelief of the agency of Satan in tempting men to great crimes and Christian men to discord; but he certainly misjudges in his estimate of the general opinion of the great body of Christians of various sects, who really believe that "he, who committeth sin, is of the devil," and also of the opin-ion of those who are not Christians, nuless we are to suppose, that in their daily conversation they ascribe much to the tempter as a real being, when they regard him as a nonentity. But whether or not the devil was the sower of discord at Charlestown, there arose a dissension between Mr. James and the brethren. It is related, that being "a melancholic man," he had uttered some groundless, jealous surmises. A council advised to his dismission which occurred in March, 1636. He soon removed to New Haven. When at the request of the people of Virginia three ministers were sent to them, Mr. Thompson of Braintree, and Mr. Knowles of Watertown set sail Oct. 7 or 8, 1642; they were long wind-bound at Rhode Island. They put in at New Haven, where they took in Mr. James as their companion. On the rocks at Hell Gate they lost their pinnace. After eleven weeks' dangerous passage the vessel arrived about Jan. 1, 1643, in Virginia. It fared with them as with the apostles: the people heard them gladly, but the rulers persecuted them, ordering them to quit the country by a certain day, unless they would conform to the English church. In June, 1643, Mr. Knowles returned to New England. Soon afterwards the great massacre by the Indians occurred. Mr. James stated, that in Maryland he saw forty Indians baptized in new shirts given them as encouragement to receive the while he saw the same Indians return to the English, saying, they must have again new shirts, or they would renounce their bantism. It is not known at what time Mr. James returned to England; perhaps not till after 1650, when his son, Thomas, was settled at East Hampton, L. I. In England he was the minister of Needham in Suffolk, but was silenced and ejected for nonconformity in 1662. Yet afterwards he preached to a pretty numerous society. The elergyman, his successor, would allow him to be buried nowhere in the churchyard, but in "the unconsecrated corner, left for rogues, etc." Mr. Culamy says, "he was a very holy, good man;" and Johnson speaks of his "learned skill and courteous speech."

JAMES, Thomas, son of the preceding, was the minister of East Hampton, Long Island, from 1650 till his death in 1696. In 1695 he sold his estate for 500 pounds to John Gardenier of G. Island. He was a faithful preacher. His body he ordered to be laid in a position contrary to that of his people, — for what reason is not known, — perhaps as a testimony against some prejudices as to the manner of burial.

JAMES, John, major, a brave Revolutionary officer in South Carolina, died in 1791, aged 59, Born in Ireland, his father emigrated to this country, and brought his son, an infant, in 1733, and settled at a village called King's Tree. His tencher was Rev. John Rac, also an emigrant. In 1776 he marched at the head of a company in defence of Charleston. In 1779 he served under Moultrie, commanding one hundred and twenty riflemen. Through him the distinguished corps, known as Marion's brigade, was formed. By the war he was reduced from wealth to poverty, every house on his plantation being burnt. In the battle of Eutaw his riflemen had each twenty-four cartridges, and many of the men expended the whole, taking good aim. His last days were devoted to the improvement of his property and the education of his child; and he departed hence with the fortitude of a Christian hero .- Ramsay's South Carolina.

JAMES, WILLIAM, died at Albany Dec. 19, 1832, aged 63, leaving two or three millions of dollars to nine heirs. He began as a clerk in 1780

JAMES, THOMAS C., M. D., died in Philadelphia July 25, 1835, aged 69. He was educated in Robert Proud's grammar school, then studied medicine under Dr. Kuhn. In 1788 he went as a surgeon to the Cape of Good Hope. He studied in London and Edinburgh from 1790 to 1793, when he returned to witness the ravages of the yellow fever. In 1811 he was appointed professor of midwifery in the university. He was modest, diffident, gentle, amiable. He was a diligent re, after a student of the Bible in various languages. He knew Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, and Gershirts, or it is not ical society. As he was skilful, so was he a good teacher in his department. — Williams' Medical Biography.

L. l. In JAMESON, ROBERT, died in South Carolina

JAMIESON, Robert, died in South Carolina in 1813, aged 104. His eye-sight had failed for some years, but was restored before his death.

JAMIESON, HORATIO G., M. D., long an eminent surgeon in Baltimore, died in Aug., 1855, aged 76. He published a work on cholera.

JANSEN, HENRY, a member of the convention at Albany, died in Sept., 1821. He was at the capitol, had purchased a ticket to view Peale's "Court of Death" in the senate chamber, and in passing toward it fell and died.

JAQUES, STEPHEN, a notary public, died in Newbury, his birthplace, in 1779, aged 04. He was for a while a schoolmaster on Cape Cod.

JAQUES, RICHARD, minister of Gloucester, Mass., died April 12, 1777, aged 77. Horn at Newbury, he was graduated at Harvard in 1720, and was ordained in 1725. John Cleaveland justified his church in 1705 from some strictures by Mr. Jaques.

JAQUETT, Peter, major, died on the banks of the Christiana in Delaware in Sept., 1834, aged 79; an officer of the Revolution, said to have been engaged in thirty battles in the field.

JARMAN, JANE, Mrs., died near Wadesborough Feb. 22, 1835, aged 105.

JARVIS, ABRAHAM, D. D., bishop of Connecteut, was born in Norwalk May 5, 1739, and was graduated at Yale college in 1761. He was a minister in Middletown from about 1764 to 1799, when he removed to Cheshire, and in 1803 to New Haven. He succeeded Bishop Seabury in 1797, and died May 3, 1813, aged 73. He published a sermon on the death of Bishop Seabury, and a sermon on the witness of the Spirit.

JARVIS, CHARLES, M. D., a physician, died Nov. 15, 1807, aged 58. He was the son of Col. Leonard Jarvis, a merchant of Boston. mother was the grand-daughter of the celebrated Col. Church. After graduating at Harvard college in 1766, he completed his medical education in Europe. On his return he settled in Boston, and rose to eminence in his profession. In the Revolution he engaged zealously in the cause of his country. For many years he was a member of the legislature. As an orator he was impressive and powerful. With a bald head and aquiline nose, he was called the bald eagle of the Boston seat. In his politics he opposed Jay's treaty and espoused the democratic side, of which he was the leader in Boston. When the marine hospital was established at Charlestown, he was appointed by Jefferson its surgeon, and faithfully discharged the duties of his office till his death.

student of the Bible in various languages. He like was the sister of Sir Wm Pepperell, and knew Hebrew, Greek, Latin, French, and German. He was one of the founders of the historical like was skilful, so was he a good Joseph Russell. — Thacker.

JAY.

JARVIS, JOHN WESLEY, an eminent portrait painter, died in New York Jan. 12, 1840,

JARVIS, SAMUEL FARMER, D. D., I.L. D., died in Middletown, Conn., March 25, 1851, aged 64, son of Bishop A. Jarvis. In 1813 he was a rector in New York, then a professor in the theological seminary. He removed to Boston in 1620, and went in 1826 to Europe, where he remained nine years. In 1835 he was professor in the college at Hartford, and soon became rector at Middletown, and then was appointed historiographer of the church. He published an introduction to the history of the church, with a hurmony of gospels, 8vo., 1845; Christian unity; sermons on prophecy; no union with Rome; colonies of heaven; narrative as to his rectorship in Boston; Christ's conversation with Nicodemus, 1822; discourse on the religion of the Indians, in vol. 3d of New York historical collections; reply to the Catholic Milner's end of controversy; the church of the redeemed, or history of the mediatorial kingdom, 2 vols., 1850. - Cycl. of Lit.

JARVIS, Russell, died in New York April 17, 1853, aged nearly 63. A native of Boston, ho graduated at Dartmouth in 1810. He was the editor of the Philadelphia Ledger eight or ten years, and, with Duff Green, also of the U.S. Telegraph at Washington. He lost his wife and two children in the burning of the Lexington bont in the sound Jan 13, 1810.

JARVIS, LEONARD, died in Baltimore Nov. 16, 1855, aged 76. Born in Cambridge, he graduated in 1797, and was a successful merchant in Boston and Baltimore. He was generous to young merchants. By his will he devised the Jarvis building, one-half to Harvard college and the other half to several humane societies after the decease of his widow, who was left with an income of 20,000 dollars a year. — Boston Advertiser, July 16, 1856.

JARVIS, LEONARD, died at Surry, in Maine, Sept. 18, 1854, aged nearly 73. He was a native of Cambridge, Mass., and was graduated in 1800. In early life he spent years abroad. In Maine he was collector of Eastport, sheriff, and a democratic member of congress from 1831 to 1833. For a time he was navy agent for the port of Boston.

JAY, John, chief justice of the United States, died May 17, 1829, aged 84. He was the great-grandson of Pierre Jay, a Protestant merchant of Rochelle, in France, who, on the revocation of the edict of Nantes, fled to England. Augustus, a merchant, the son of Pierre, emigrated to New York, where, in 1697, he married Anne Maria, daughter of Balthasar Bayard. Dying at the age ding, was land, from le sold his nier of G. His body ontrary to on is not inst some olutionary

ım in Suf-

nconform-

ched to a yman, his

d nowhere

msecrated amy says,

Johnson

courteous

, aged 59. d to this t, in 1733, ree. His emigrant. ompany in ved under nd twenty hed corps, . By the erty, every n the batwenty-four ended the s were deperty and rted hence Ramsay's

Dec. 19, illions of elerk in Philadeleducated in studied e went as He stud-0 to 1793, ges of the ed profeswas moda diligent of 85, he left one son, Peter, who was born in 1764, and in 1728 married Mary, daughter of Jacobus Van Cortlandt, of New York. About the year 1746, Peter, a merchant, retired to his estate at Rye, on Long Island Sound, whence he was compelled to remove by the approach of the British army. He died at Poughkeepsie in 1782. John Jay, the son of Peter, was born in New York December 12, 1745. He was educated at King's college, where he graduated May 15, 1764, and in 1768 was admitted to the bar. In 1774 he married Sarah Livingston, the daughter of William Livingston, afterwards governor of New Jersey. Acquiring great reputation as a lawyer, and presenting a rare union of the dignity and gravity of manhood with the energy of youth, his fellow-citizens began to look up to him as their future guide in the contest for liberty. He was appointed to the first American congress in 1774. Being on the committee with Lee and Livingston to draft an address to the people of Great Britain, he was the writer of that eloquent production, adopted Oct. 21, 1774. In the congress of 1775 he was on various important committees, performing more services, perhaps, than my member, excepting Franklin and J. Adams. In May, 1776, he was recalled to assist in forming the government of New York, and, in consequence, his name is not attached to the Declaration of Independence; but, July 9th, he reported resolutions in the provincial convention in favor of the declaration. After the fall of New York and the removal of the provincial assembly to Poughkeepsie, Mr. Jay retained his resolute patriotism. The very eloquent address of the convention to the people of New York, dated Fishkill, Dec. 23, 1776, and signed by A. Ten Brocck as president, was written by him. March 12, 1777, he reported to the convention of New York the draft of a form of government, which was adopted, and many of the provisions of which were introduced into the constitutions of other States. From May 3, 1777, to Aug. 18, 1779, he was chief justice of the State, but resigned that office in consequence of his duties as president of congress. The glowing address of that body to their constituents, dated Sept. 8, 1779, was prepared by him. On the 29th Sept. he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to the court of Spain. The frigate in which he sailed, losing her masts in a gale, was obliged to proceed to Martinique. He reached Madrid April 4, 1780. In communicating the resolution of congress of July 15, 1781, yielding the navigation of the Mississippi to Spain, he had the prudence to limit the proposition, so that it should have no force, unless a treaty was made with Spain before a general peace. This limitation was sanctioned by congress April excellencies. The utmost prudence was combined 30, 1782. Being unsuccessful in his negotiation, with invincible energy. At a period of life when

Mr. Jay suspected some bad faith on the part of France, but probably without reason.

Being appointed a commissioner to negotiate a peace with Great Britain, he arrived at Paris June 23, 1782, and toiled incessantly to secure the interests of his country. His health now becoming impaired, he went to Bath for its recovery. He signed the definitive treaty at Paris Sept. 3, 1783. The next year, having resigned his Spanish commission, he returned to New York, where he arrived July 24, 1784. Congress had already appointed him secretary of State for foreign affairs, in the place of R. R. Livingston. In the difficult circumstances of the country, the secretary was, in effect, the head of the government. Mr. Jay's services were of great importance. He drew up, Oct. 13, 1786, an elaborate report on the relations between this country and Great Britain, Though not a member of the convention which formed the constitution of the United States, he was present at Annapolis and aided by his advice. He also assisted Hamilton and Madison in writing the Federalist. He wrote numbers 2, 3, 4, 5, 64. His labors after the 5th number were interrupted by a wound in the forehead from a stone in the doctor's mob. In the convention of New York he contributed to the adoption of the constitution.

For the high station of chief justice of the United States, to which he was appointed by Washington Sept. 26, 1789, he was eminently qualified. In 1792 he was the unsuccessful candidate of the federal party for the office of governor of New York, against George Clinton; but, in 1795, he was elected against Robert Yates, though he was at the time abroad, having been appointed April 19, 1794, minister plenipotentiary to Great Britain. He effected the treaty which bears his name, Nov. 19, 1794; a treaty which, notwithstanding the clamors of political partisans friendly to France, was highly advantageous to our country, as it stipulated for the surrender of the northwestern posts, procured admission for our vessels into India, and obtained payment for spoliations amounting to nearly ten millions of dollars. In 1798 he was re-elected governor against R. R. Livingston. The political excitement of the period rendered his station unquiet. Longing for retirement, he withdrew, at the end of the term for which he was chosen, in the summer of 1801, from the cares and honors of public station, and passed the remaining nearly thirty years of his life in retirement at his seat in Bedford, Westchester county, where he died. His brother, Sir James Jay, M. D., died in New York in Nov., 1815. His pious, excellent wife died in May, 1802.

In his character there were great and peculiar

he part of negotiate a Paris June ure the inbecoming very. He pt. 3, 1783. anish comwhere he already apign affairs. the difficult retary was, Mr. Jav's e drew up, the relaat Britain. ition which States, he his advice. on in writcrs 2, 3, 4, er were ind from a vention of

tion of the tice of the ointed by eminently essful canof governton; but, bert Yates, wing been ipotentiary eaty which aty which. ical partirantageous surrender mission for nyment for millions of governor cal exciten unquiet. it the end the sum-

of public

rly thirty

n Bedford,

s brother, k in Nov.,

May, 1802. l peculiar combined

life when the scenes of political agitation; nor did he once east a lingering look behind. In his last years he was much occupied in the study of the Scriptures, particularly of the prophecies, and devoted to the duties of religion and preparation for the seenes of the future world. There is something refreshing in the view of his last years. Instead of dwelling, like his co-patriots, Adams and Jefferson, on the history of the past, or the agitating political occurrences of the day, and fighting anew the battles of old time, his serene mind was absorbed in the contemplation of the bright, and glorious, and everlasting kingdom of God. Besides the writings already mentioned, he published letters, being the whole of the correspondence between him and Lewis Littlepage, a young man, whom Mr. Jay, when in Spain, patronized and took into his family, 2d edit., 1786. His life was published by his son William, also by Renwick. -American Annual Register, 1827-9, p. 215-234

JAY, PETER AUGUSTUS, a lawyer, president of the New York historical society, died Feb. 20, 1843. He was the eldest son of John Jay, and his private secretary. In 1817 he was recorder of New York; and of the American hible society

he was a vice-president.

JAY, Ann, daughter of John Jay, died in New York, in Nov., 1856; and a few days afterwards died her sister, Maria Banyer, aged 75, widow of Goldsborough Banyer, the last of the daughters of John Jay. These sisters bequeathed more than 34,000 dollars, distributed among the bible, tract, missionary, and other charitable societies.

JEFFERSON, ELEANOR, Mrs., died at Boston

May 9, 1737, aged 100.

JEFFERSON, PETER, father of Thomas Jefferson, died Aug. 17, 1757, aged 49. He was born at Osborne's in Chesterfield, Va., in, 1708, and married in 1739 Jane Randolph, daughter of Isham Randolph, of Goochland. He was chosen, with Prof. Fry of William and Mary college, to continue the boundary line between Virginia and North Carolina. He was employed by Mr. Fry to make the first map of Virginia. About the year 1737 he settled at Shadwell, near Monticello, being the third or fourth settler in that part of Virginia. His wife, who lived till 1776, survived him, with six daughters and two sons. To his eldest son, Thomas, he left an estate at Monticello. The ancestor came from Wales, near the mountain of Snowden. - Jefferson's Writings.

JEFFERSON, THOMAS, president of the United States, died July 4, 1826, aged 83. He was the son of Peter J., and was born at Shadwell, Albermarle county, near Monticello, in Va., April 2, 1743. His mother was Jane Randolph. His early education was conducted by Mr. Doug-ambition is apt to bear sway, he abandoned all to William and Mary college, where he continued two years. He derived great benefit from the instructions of Winiam Small, professor of mathematics, and afterwards lecturer on ethics, rhetoric, and belles lettres. By his kindness he was placed as a student of law at Williamsburg under his intimate friend, George Wythe. In 1767 he entered upon the practice of the law at the bar of the general court. In 1769 he became a member of the legislature for the county of his residence, and so continued till the Revolution. Jan., 1772, be married Martha Skelton, widow of Bathurst Skelton, and daughter of John Wales, a lawyer of much practice. By her he received property about equal to his own patrimony.

In May, 1769, he was a member of the house of burgesses. In the spring of 1773, he, with Mr. Henry, R. H. Lee, F. L. Lee, and Dabney Carr, his brother-in-law, at a private meeting, agreed upon certain patriotic resolutions, which were adopted by the house, and a committee of correspondence with the other colonies was accordingly appointed, of which Peyton Rundolph, the speaker, was made chairman. At this period Mr. J. maintained the opinion, in which Wythe agreed with him, that the British parliament had no authority whatever over America. His views were printed with the title, "A summary view of the Rights of British America." It was reprinted. a little altered, by Mr. Burke, as an opposition paper in England. The other Virginia patriots, Randolph, the Lees, Nicholas, and Pendleton, concurred with John Dickinson, who allowed that England had a right to regulate our commerce and to lay duties for regulation but not for revenue.

He took his seat in congress June 21, 1775, in the place of Peyton Randolph, who had been recalled to the general assembly of Virginia. He took with him the answer of the assemby, drawn up by himself, to the conciliatory propositions of Lord North. In congress he was immediately placed on the committee to prepare a declaration of the causes for taking up arms. He accordingly drew up a paper; but it not being deemed sufficiently conciliatory, he put it into the hands of Mr. Dickinson, who was also on the committee; and he drew up the declaration which was adopted, retaining only of Mr. Jefferson's the four last paragraphs and half the preceding. Mr. Dickinson also drew up the second petition to the king, which Mr. Jefferson thought expressed too much humility. In July, Mr. Jefferson drew up the report on Lord North's conciliatory resolution. May 15, 1776, the convention of Virginia instructed their delegates to propose in congress a Declaration of Independence. Accordingly Friday, June 7, R. H. Lee made the motion for the Declaration of Independence. In the debate las and Mr. Maury, clergymen. In 1760 he went | which followed, it was argued by Wilson, R. R.

Livingston, E. Rutledge, Dickinson, and others, that the measure, though ultimately to be adopted, was yet now precipitate, and for various reasons ought to be deferred. On the other hand the measure was supported by J. Adams, Lee, Wythe, and others. Of the thirteen States, all but four voted for the motion on the 1st July, in committee of the whole. South Carolina and Penn. voted against it. Delaware was equally divided. The delegates from New York, though in favor of the motion, were excused from voting, being restrained by their old instructions. The committee reported their resolution to the house. July 2, the house agreed to the resolution of the committee all the States but New York voting for it, South Carolina falling in for the sake of unanimity, and the new members turned the votes of Delaware and Pennsylvania. On the day of this vote the form of the Declaration reported, drawn up by Mr. Jefferson, was taken into consideration by the committee of the whole. The debates continued till Thursday the 4th, in the evening, when the Declaration was reported by the committee of the whole, agreed to by the house, and signed by every member present, except Mr. Dickinson. July 9, the convention of New York approved of the declaration, and their delegates signed July 15th. There was no sub-committeee for drawing up the Declaration, though Mr. Jefferson showed a few slight alterations. The other members of the committee were R. Sherman and R. R. Livingston. Several paragraphs were struck out by congress, among which was the following: "He has waged cruel war against human nature itself. violating its most sacred rights of life and liberty in the persons of a distant people, who never offended him, captivating and carrying them into slavery in another hemisphere, or to incur miserable death in their transportation thither. This piratical warfare, the opprobrium of infidel powers, is the warfare of the CHRISTIAN king of Great Britain. Determined to keep open a market where MEN should be bought and sold, he has prostituted his negative for suppressing every legislative attempt to prohibit or restrain this exe-crable commerce." Mr. Jefferson supposed that this clause was struck out in complaisance to South Carolina and Georgia, who wished to continue the importation of slaves, and that the northern carriers also felt a little tender under that censure.

This declaration was engrossed on parchment and signed again Aug. 2d. The convention of Pennsylvania named a new delegation July 20th, leaving out Mr. Dickinson, and Willing, and Humphreys, who had withdrawn, re-appointing the three members, who had signed, -Morris, who had not been present, and five new ones, Rush, Clymer, Smith, Taylor, and Ross. These six were ten minutes at a time, nor to any but the main permitted to sign, as indicating the assent of the full delegation. Thornton, of New Hampshire, signed as late as Nov. 4th, for reasons unknown.

Mr. Jefferson retired from congress Sept. 2, 1776, and took his seat in the legislature of Virginia Oct. 7th. He drew up the bill for the establishment of courts of justice; the bill declaring tenants in tail to hold their lands in fee simple; the bill for religious freedom; the bill for the revision of the laws, in regard to which the committee were Pendleton, Wythe, Mason, Thomas L. Lee, and himself. The work was done by Pendleton, Wythe, and Jefferson, from 1777 to June, 1779. Mr. Jefferson also proposed a bill for general education, providing schools for every hundred or ward, and twenty-four higher schools, etc. June 1, 1779, he was appointed governor, as successor of Mr. Henry. As one of the visitors of William and Mary college, he procured the abolishment of the professorships of divinity and oriental languages, and substituted those of law, of anatomy, medicine, and chemistry, and of modern languages. After being governor two years, thinking that at the time of invasion the public might have more confidence in a military chief magistrate, he resigned, and Gen. Nelson was appointed to succeed him.

In Sept., 1776, the state of his family induced him to decline the appointment then made, of it to Dr. Franklin and Mr. Adams, who suggested commissioner, with Franklin and Deane, to negotiate treaties with France. Dr. Lee was appointed in his place. He was appointed on the commission for peace June, 1781, but the state of his family again kept him at home. He was ugain appointed minister plenipotentiary, with others, for negotiating peace, Nov. 13, 1782. This he accepted, having two months before lost the cherished companion of his life, with whom he had passed "ten years in uncheckered happiness." But before he could sail for England news was received of the signing of a provisional treaty of peace. He therefore was excused from further proceeding, and returned home May, 1783. He took his seat at Trenton Nov. 4th, in congress, which adjourned the same day to Annapolis. In 1784 he wrote notes on the establishment of a money-unit, and of a coinage for the United States, in opposition to the views of Robert Morris, the financier, or of his assistant, Governeur Morris. He proposed the money-system now in use. To him we are indebted for the dollar as the unit, and the very convenient decimal divisions, and our present pieces of coin. This was an important service.

As a member of congress Mr. Jefferson made few speeches. He remarks: "I served with Gen. Washington in the legislature of Virginia before the Revolution, and, during it, with Dr. Franklin in congress. I never heard either of them speak ent of the lumpshire. unknown. s Sept. 2, ire of Virthe estabdeclaring ee simple : for the rethe comn, Thomas ne by Pen-7 to June. ill for genry hundred hools, etc. or, as sucvisitors of the aboly and oriof law, of of modern ly induced made, of e, to negoappointed e commisate of his was again ith others.

two years,

the public

itary chief

on was ap-

This he t the cherm he had appiness." news was I treaty of m further 1783. He congress, polis. In ment of n he United hert Mor-Governeur m now in llar as the divisions, son made with Gen. nia before . Franklin iem speak the main ras an im-

point, which was to decide the question. They laid their shoulders to the great points, knowing that the "tle ones would follow of themselves. ent congress errs in too much talking, how ex to be otherwise in a body to which the people send one handred and fifty lawyers, whose trade is to question everything, yield nothing, and talk by the hour?"

In May, 1784, he was appointed, with Adams and Franklin, a minister plenipotentiary to negotiate treaties of commerce with foreign nations. He sailed from Boston with his eldest daughter, July 5, in the Ceres, n merchant ship. After a pleasant voyage of nineteen days from land to land, he arrived at Cowes July 26, and at Paris Aug. 6th. He now printed his Notes on Virginia, for which he had been collecting information since 1781. Dr. Franklin having returned in July, 1785, Mr. Jefferson was appointed his successor nt Paris, in which station he continued till he solicited his recall in 1789, in order to place his daughters in the society of their friends. He arrived at Norfolk Nov. 23. While at Eppington, in Chesterield, at the residence of Mr. Eppes, he received from President Washington the appointment of secretary of State. At Monticello his eldest daughter was married to Tho. M. Randolph, the eldest son of the Tuckahoe branch of Randolphs, afterwards governor of Virginia. He arrived at New York March 21, 1790, and entered upon the duties of his office. On his way he saw for the last time the venerable Franklin, who put into his hands a narrative of his negotiations with the British ministry, by the intervention of Lord Howe and his sister. This paper Mr. J. delivered to W. T. Franklin after Franklin's death. He apprehended it was suppressed by the British government, and not published by his grandson. In the office of secretary of State Mr. Jefferson continued till the close of Dec., 1793, when he resigned. He was opposed to the funding system and other measures of the administration, and became the head of the republican party.

In a letter to Gen. Knox, Aug. 10, 1791, he maintained, "that the Indians have a right to the occupation of their lands, independent of the States within whose chartered limits they happen to be;" that without their consent "no act of a State can give a right to such lands;" and that government will think itself bound to remove unallowed settlements "by the public force."

In his retirement at Monticello Mr. J. says, in Feb., 1794; "I indulge myself in one particular topic only; that is, in declaring to my countrymen the shameless corruption of a portion of the representatives of the first and second congress, and their implicit devotion to the treasury."

On some appointment being offered him by me to engage in anything public." To Mr. Madison, in Dec., 1794, he expressed a hope that his friend might reach a more splendid post, - that of president of the United States; adding, "I ought, perhaps, to say, while I would not give up my own retirement for the empire of the universe, how I can justify wishing one, whose happiness I have so much at heart as yours, to take the front of the battle which is fighting for my security." April 27, he wrote to Mr. Madison on the subject of a republican candidate for president: "There is not another person in the United States, who, being placed at the helm of our affairs, my mind would be so completely at rest for the fortune of our political bark. As to myself, the subject had been thoroughly weighed and decided on, and my retirement from office had been meant from all office, high or low, without exception."

Mr. Jefferson was chosen vice-president at the close of 1796. Just before the election he wrote to Mr. Madison, Dec. 17: "The first wish of my heart was, that you should have been proposed for the administration of the government. On your declining it, I wish anybody rather than myself; and there is nothing I so anxiously hope, as that my name may come out either second or third." In case of an equal division, he expressed a wish that congress would choose Mr. Adams, To E. Rutledge he also wrote, Dec. 27: "I retired much poorer than when I entered the public service, and desired nothing but rest and oblivion. My name, however, was again brought forward without concert or expectation on my part (on my salvation I declare it). I do not yet know the result, as a matter of fact."

Mr. Jefferson was chosen president by congress in Feb., 1801, he and Mr. Burr having an equal number of the electoral votes. In this high office he continued eight years, retiring in 1809 to Monticello. There he passed the remainder of his days, yet devoting the last years of his life to the establishment of the university of Virginia at Charlottesville, about four miles from Monticello. He died on the 4th of July, just fifty years from the date of the Declaration of Independence. On the same day, it is remarkable that Mr. Adams also died. In the short intervals of delirium in his last hours he seemed to dwell on the events of the Revolution. He exclaimed, "Warn the committee to be on their guard!" For the most part, during the last days of his life, his reason was undisturbed. He expressed the anxious wish that he might see the fiftieth anniversary of Independence. In a private memorandum he suggested that, if a monument should be erected, it should be a small granite obelisk, with this inscription: "Here lies buried Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, of Washington, in Sept., 1794, he replied to the sec- the statutes of Virginia for religious freedom, and retary, "No circumstances will ever more tempt | father of the university of Virginia." The youngest daughter of Mr. J., who married Mr. Eppes, in the gospel, - to say nothing of his setting himdied about May, 1801, leaving two children. His eldest daughter, Martha, married to Mr. Randolph, was left with eleven children. He was an extensive farmer. He had three hundred and fifty acres of corn, as many of clover, and the same of potatoes, beans, and peas; yet there were much greater Virginia planters. plantations were of five thousand acres. One master had seven hundred miserable slaves toiling for his profit.

Not long before his death Mr. Jefferson wrote an essay on lotterics, and solicited permission of the legislature to sell his property at its just value by lottery, that he might be able to pay his debts. A lottery was granted Feb., 1826. It was a humiliating expedient, for, undeniably, all lotteries exert a most baneful, corrupting influence on the morals of the people, and several of our States have on this account interdicted them. Relief by public charity would have been no dishonor: but the request of a lottery is no credit to his philanthropy. His library was purchased by congress in 1815, 6,000 vols. for 24,000 dollars.

Mr. Jefferson was tall, with a mild countenance, a light complexion, and hair inclined to red. He was interesting in social intercourse, but not cloquent in debate. As the head of a political sect he had a greater sway than ever any man had in this country, excepting Washington. For the accomplishment of his objects he spared no personal efforts or pecuniary sacrifices. He wrote nothing for the newspapers himself; but in Jan., 1799, he stimulated E. Pendleton to write against Adams' administration, and in February he wrote to Mr. Madison: "The engine is the press. Every man must lay his purse and his pen under contribution. As to the former, it is possible I may be obliged to assume something for you. As to the latter, let me pray and beseech you to set apart a certain portion of every post day to write what may be proper for the public. Send it to me." In the result he obtained the office of president. He kept his friends, for he never abandoned them and gave them all the rewards in his power.

The blindness of Mr. J. on the subject of religion, while deeply lamented by the admirers of his talents, is only a new proof that "the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God," He seems to have believed that God is a material being, for his words are in letter 154: "To say that the human soul, angels, God are immaterial, is to say that they are nothings, or that there is no God, no angels, no soul."-" When once we guit the basis of sensation, all is in the vid Jeffries, and was born in Boston Feb. 5, 1744. wind." Yet he believed, that after depositing his After graduating at Harvard college in 1763, he material body in the grave, he should "ascend in essence," and he a "looker-on from the clouds tended the medical schools of Great Britain, above." His ignorance of the disclosures made From 1771 to 1774 he was the surgeon of a ship self up, like Mahomet, as a rival teacher, in the comparison which he makes between his own doctrine and that of Jesus Christ, -- ought not to be overlooked: "I am a materialist; He takes the side of spiritualism. He preaches the efficacy of repentance towards the forgiveness of sin; I require a counterpoise of good works to redeem it," &c., (letter 151). Any person, acquainted with the instructions of Jesus, any child in a Sunday school, would have told the philosopher that repentance means a real change of character, implying the performance of good works, and that Jesus required men to bring forth "fruits meet for repentance."

It appears most clearly from his letters, that Mr. J. was a contemner of the religion of the gospel. The amount of his faith seems to have been, that there is a God, and that there will be a future state of retribution. The standard of duty, in his view, was reason or instinctive moral sense, not the Bible. He did not consider how easily, by strong passion and the practice of evil, conscience is blinded and seared, and how necessary religious instruction is to preserve the power of the moral sense. This philosopher imagined that he found in the gospel, among many passages of correct morality, "Much untruth, charlatanism, and imposture," and he regarded Paul as the chief of "the band of dupes and impostors," and the "first corrupter of the doctrines of Jesus." And so he gravely attempts "to winnow the grain from the chaft." He speaks of the ministers of the gospel of various sects thus: "We have most unwisely committed to the hierophants of our particular superstition the direction of public opinion, that lord of the universe. We have given them stated and privileged days to collect and catcehise us, opportunities of delivering their oracles to the people in mass," &c. With these views of the gospel, he, of course, when he died, could not be cheered with the hopes which are founded upon a belief that Jesus Christ was the son of God. There is no Christian on the earth, who would die as he died. He published summary view of the rights of British America, 2d. edit., 1774; declaration of independence, 1776; notes on Virginia, 1781; manual of parlinmentary practice, for the use of the senate; life of Capt. Lewis, 1814; some papers in American philosophical transactions, IV. His works, chiefly letters, were published by his grandson, Thomas Jefferson Randolph, 4 vols., 8vo., 1829.

JEFFRIES, JOHN, M. D., a physician, died Sept. 16, 1819, aged 75. He was the son of Dastudied physic with Dr. Lloyd, and afterwards atsetting himher, in the in his own ught not to if He takes the efficiety s of sin; I to redeem acquainted d in a Sunsopher that aracter, ims, and that fruits meet letters, that gion of the ms to have ere will be tandard of ctive moral nsider how tice of evil, how necesthe power r imagined iany passauth, charlarded Paul and imposoctrines of to winnow of the minnus: "We nicrophants irection of erse. We cd days to

published

America,
ependence,
d of parlisenate; life
American
orks, chiefly on, Thomas
dician, died

of deliver-

"&c. With

e, when he opes which

Christ was an on the

ician, died son of Dab. 5, 1744. In 1763, he erwards atit Britain. In of a ship of the line, lying in Boston harbor. His services were required by the British commander for the wounded at the buttle of Bunker hill. Having accompanied the British garrison to Halifax in 1776, he was appointed surgeon-general to the forces of Nova Scotia, and also apothecary-general. He went to England in 1779, and being appointed surgeon-major to the forces in America, he repaired to Charleston and New York. At the close of 1780 he resigned and commenced the practice of his profession in London. January 7, 1785, he crossed the British channel from Dover to the forest of Guines in a balloon. This exploit procured him many friends in Paris and London. But in 1790 he was induced to resume his profession in his native country and town. He kept for more than forty years a medical and surgical diary. An inflammation, originating in a hernia, which was caused by his efforts in his first aerial voyage in 1784, caused his death. He published a narrative of his two aerial voyages, London, 1786. — Thacher, 316-324.

JENIFER, DANIEL, died at Port Tobacco, Md., Dec. 25, 1855, at an advanced age, a respected and honored citizen. He was minister to Austria, appointed by Harrison.

JENISON, SILAS II., governor of Vermont, died in Shoreham in 1849, an esteemed and valuable citizen.

JENKS, Joseph, governor of Rhode Island, was the son of Joseph J. of Pawtucket, who built there the first house, and grandson of Joseph J., a blacksmith, who came from England to Lynn about 1645, and died in 1683. He was born in 1656; was governor, after Cranston, from 1727 to 1732; and died June 15, 1740, aged 83. His brother, William, a judge, died in 1765, aged 90; his brother, Ebenezer, was a minister at Providence. Gov. J. was a member of the Baptist church and a zealous Christian. His skeleton was disinterred at Pawtucket in July, 1831, and after ninety-one years was found nearly entire. His thigh bones measured eighteen inches. He was the tallest man in Rhode Island, standing seven feet two inches without his shoes.

JENKINS, John, a teacher of the art of penmanship, died at Wilmington, Delaware, in Oct, 1822, uged 67. He was formerly of Boston. He published the art of writing reduced to a plain and easy system on a plan entirely new, second edition, 1813. He was the first who reduced the art to a system. Wrifford, Dean, Townes and Carstairs followed his analysis. His book received the most ample testimonials to its unequalled excellence from many distinguished men.

JENKINS, CHARLES, minister of Portland, Maine, died Dec. 29, 1831, aged 45. He was born in Barre, Mass., in 1786, and was graduated at Williams college in 1813. He was afterwards preceptor of the academy at Westfield; in 1816 he was appointed tutor at the college; he was settled in the ministry at Greenfield, Mass., in 1820, and installed at Portland, as the minister of the third congregational society, in 1825. After a short illness he died of the prevailing influenza. He was highly esteemed and exerting a most important and beneficial influence, when he was removed from life. His mind was of an original east and very fertile and vigorous. With a rich poetical fancy, he gave an interest to the subjects of his discussion. Sometimes, however, he failed in simplicity of style and in adapting his method of instruction sufficiently to the understandings of minds less elevated than his own. With some defect of this kind, which is to be ascribed in part to his very originality, he was yet a most faithful and useful preacher, and made himself understood in the hearts of the hypocritical and the sinful. Disregarding the world's applause, he steadily pursued the path of duty, declaring the whole counsel of God, and seeking in every way to advance the power of the gospel. He published three sermons on the obligations, duties, and blessings of the Sabbath, with remarks on the report in congress on Sabbath mails, 1830; a sermon on the elevated nature of true piety, in the national preacher, Dec., 1831. A velume of his sermons was published after his death. -Christian Mirror, Jan. 5, 1832.

JENKINS, Samuel, died at Lancaster, Ohio, Feb. 4, 1849, aged 115. Born in 1734, the slave of Capt. Broadwater, of Fairfax county, Va., he drove a wagon in Braddock's campaign. He had been free forty years.

JENKS, DANIEL, chief justice of Providence county court, R. I., died in July, 1774, aged 72. Born in Pawtucket, he was judge nearly thirty years; and from his youth a member of a Baptist church.

JENNER, THOMAS, a preacher at Weymouth and elsewhere, was admitted a freeman in 1636, and was a representative in 1640. He was the minister of W. from 1636 to 1640.

JENNESS, RICHARD, died at Deerfield, N. H., in 1819, aged 73. He was a senator and a judge of the common pleas.

JENNINGS, OBADIAH, D. D., minister at Nashville, Tenn., died Jan. 12, 1832, aged 52.

JENNINGS, JONATHAN, the first governor of Indiana, died near Charlestown, July, 1835. He had been a member of congress.

JENNINGS, SAMUEL K., M. D., died at Baltimore in Oct., 1854, aged 84. He was one of the founders of the Methodist church, and for years a professor in the medical college of Philadelphia.

born in Barre, Mass., in 1786, and was graduated jENNISON, WILLIAM, minister of the east at Williams college in 1813. He was afterwards church in Salem, died in 1750, aged 45. He in S. from 1728 to 1736. His successors were Diman, Bentley, and Flint.

JENNISON, WILLIAM, a teacher, died in Boston Dec. 4, 1843, aged 86. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1774, and was once a teacher in New Brunswick, Pa., and Lu.

JENNISON, TIMOTHY L., M. D., died at Cambridge in 1845, aged about 82; a graduate of 1782.

JEROME, AMASA, minister of Wadsworth, Ohio, died suddenly at New Hartford, Conn., in 1832, aged 57. Born at Stockbridge, Mass., he graduated at Williams college in 1798, and was settled at New Hartford in 1802, whence after eleven years he was dismissed on account of ill health. - Sprague's Annals.

JEWETT, JEDIDIAH, minister of Rowley, died in 1774, aged 68. Born in R., he was graduated at Harvard in 1726, and settled over the first church in 1729 as the successor of Edward Payson. He published a sermon at the ordination of D. Tappan.

JEWETT, DAVID, minister of Montville. Conn., died in 1783, aged 66. He was a native of Rowley, a graduate of Harvard in 1736; ordained Oct. 3, 1739, just seventeen years from the installation of James Hillhouse. Montville was then New London, second church. He was an accomplished gentleman, a good scholar, and an eloquent preacher. During his ministry one hundred and twenty-nine were added to the church; also twenty-one Indians living at Mohegan within the town of Montville, whose names were nearly all as follows: Cyrus and wife, widow Shokket, Sarah Junco, Lucy Junco, Henry Cochquid, Joshua Nonesuch, Hannah Nonesuch, Andrew Tantapan, Joe Tanner, Betty Occom, Lizzy Nimrod, Lucy Cochegun, John Ninnipoome, Sarah Occom, Anne Uneas, Hannah Cooper, Sam Ashpo. After 1740 Ashpo set up a separate worship at Mohegan; other Indian preachers followed him, the last of whom was John Cooper. Oceom preached to this church.

Immediately after the death of Mr. Jewett's son, Dr. David H. Jewett, in 1814 there was a revival, in which sixty were in a few months added to the church. May 6, 1823, the meeting-house, standing on Raymond hill, was struck by lightning and two persons were killed. There soon followed a great revival, in which one hundred persons were added to the church in one year.

JEWETT, DAVID, minister of Rockport, Mass., died at the house of his son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Whitney, at Waltham July 14, 1841, aged nearly 68. Born in Hollis, N. H., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1801, and was settled successor of E. Cleaveland Oct. 30, 1805. His faithful and successful labors continued thirty-one years, when from ill health he resigned his office. His church graduated at Harvard in 1724, and was minister | increased from ten members to more than two hundred and fifty. Amidst a flood of Universalism and Unitarianism, which overflowed cape Ann, he was the instrument in Providence of saving his church from being wrecked; and to him great is the debt of gratitude from the Orthodox church of Gloucester and two churches of Rockport. A most interesting event was the burial of his remains at R. after fifteen years. His son, William R. Jewett of Plymouth, N. H., preached the sermon on the occasion, July 13, 1856; then at the grave made an address, which was responded to on the part of the people by Dr. Benjamin Haskell. His widow, who was Miss Reed of Marblehead, still lives. The handsome granite monument was erected at the expense of his grateful people, who remembered his virtues; and he now sleeps in the midst of their fathers, his former flock. He was a man of childlike simplicity and Christian tenderness, but of an iron purpose, resolute, fearless, unmovable.

JEWETT, THOMAS, Dr., an Infidel reclaimed. died in Rindge, N. H., April 24, 1840, aged 69. Until seven or eight years before his death he was an Infidel and Universalist; but in 1833 he, out of regard to his family, burnt his Infidel books. As soon as his last book was in ashes, he felt, for the first time, a sense of guilt, which led him to accept the gospel. He died in neace. The tract, 351, "the Infidel reclaimed," relates to him. In his sickness he talked earnestly with hundreds, who called to see him. Among his last words were these: "All is light; I seem to look right into heaven." - "O, the joy and peace in believing!"-"I long to drink of the water that flows from God and the Lamb."

JEWETT, Joseph, colonel, died in Ashburnham May 3, 1846, aged 85. He served in several campaigns in the war of independence; his life was useful, and he was regarded as the father of the town. At the age of 70 he made a profession of his faith in Christ.

JEWETT, ISAAC A., died in Keene, N. II., in 1853, aged 44. Born in Burlington, Vt., he gradunted at Harvard in 1830, and was a lawyer in Cincinnati and New Orleans. In his last years he lived at the north. He published passages in foreign travel, 2 vols.; and wrote letters from the West Indies, published in the Christian Register about 1850.

JIM, a negro, died in Shreveport April 19, 1856, aged 124 years and nearly 4 months: born a slave of John Carter in Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 24, 1731.

JOHN, an Indian sagamore, lived a: Winnesimet at the first settlement of Boston in 1630, and was one of the principal chiefs of the Mattachusetts. He was courteous and friendly to the new settlers, and endeavored to learn their language. In 1632 the Tarratines or Eastern Indians than two iversalism e Ann, he saving his n great is ox church sport. A of his reı, William d the seren at the onded to min Hasof Marbleite monus grateful

nd he now

iis former plicity and purpose, reclaimed, aged 69. death he is 1833 he, his Infidel in ashes, he which led in peace. Telates to testly with mong his I seem to and peace the water

Ashburnin several e; his life father of a profes-

N. H., in , he gradlawyer in last years assages in a from the Register

April 19, ths: born ourg, Va.,

w Winneio 1630, he Mattadly to the their lann Indians wounded him. In 1633 he and most of his people died of the small pox: he said, "I must die, the God of the English is much angry with me, and will destroy me." To Mr. Wilson, who visited him in his sickness, he gave his son to be taught the Christian religion. — 2 Hist. Coll. 111. 127; vi. 650.

JOHN, an old negro, died at Washington city April 8, 1838, aged 115, drowned in the canal.

JOHNES, TIMOTHY, D. D., a minister in Morristown, N. J., fifty-three years, died in 1794, aged nearly 80. He was graduated at Yale in 1737. From his hand Washington received the sacrament, as is related by Sparks.

JOHNS, JEHIEL, died in Huntington, Vt., Aug. 12, 1840, aged 85. He built the first log house in H., and brought his family in 1786.

JOHNSON, ISAAC, one of the founders of Massachusetts, was a native of Clipsham, county of Rutland, England, and arrived at Salem June 12, 1630, with Gov. Winthrop in the chief ship of the fleet, formerly the Eagle, but now named the Arbella in honor of his wife. In July he, with the governor and other gentlemen, proceeded to Charlestown. July 30th was a day of fasting, and the church of Boston was founded at Charlestown; the four persons, who entered into covenant and laid the foundation of the church, were Gov. Winthrop, Deputy-governor Dudley, Mr. Johnson, and Mr. Wilson, afterwards the minister. Five more were added August 1. The want of good water at Charlestown induced Mr. Johnson and others to remove to Shawmut, or Boston, where was "an excellent spring." In August his wife died at Salem: for an account of her see the next article. At the second court of assistants in Charlestown, Sept. 7, Mr. Johnson was present. Boston was settled under his conduct. He died there on Thursday, Sept. 30, 1630. "He was a holy man and wise, and died in sweet peace; leaving part of his substance to the colony. He made a most godly end; dying willingly; professing his life better spent in promoting this plantation, than it could have been any other way." He had the largest estate of any of the settlers, and was "the greatest furtherer of this plantation." His lot in Boston was the square between Tremont, School, and Queen streets and Cornhill; and he was buried at the upper end of his lot, which gave occasion for the first buryingplace to be laid out around his grave. This is now called the stone chapel grave-yard. His house was on a hill near Tremont street .-Prince, 318-333.

JOHNSON, ARBELLA, wife of the preceding, came with him to Salem in June, 1630, and died about Aug. 30th, probably of a prevailing infectious fever, contracted on shipboard, and of which many died. She was the daughter of Thomas, third earl of Lincoln, who died in 1619, and sister of Theophilus, the fourth earl. Her sister, Frances, married John, son of Sir Ferdinando Gorges; her sister, Susan, married John Humphrey. She has been usually called the lady Arbella, and it was in honor of her that the admiral ship of Winthrop's fleet, before called the Eagle, received the name of the Arbella. The word, indeed, by Johnson, Mather, Neal, Hutchinson, and almost all our historians, excepting Prince, has been written Arabella. Mr. Savage, in his edition of Winthrop in 1825, has insisted upon the propriety of following Prince, whose accuracy is unquestioned, and who, doubtless, in the manuscripts of which he made use, found the form Arbella, as printed in his annals. Mr. Savage testifies that the word is so written in the original note of the meeting of the assistants on board this ship; that Winthrop so wrote the word, and that Gov. Dudley so wrote it in a letter to the countess of Lincoln, the mother of the lady. I am able to strengthen the cause by a new argument. The lady Arbella Johnson was probably named after the lady known as the lady Arabella Stuart, who died in the tower about twenty years before the settlement of Massachusetts. In respect to her name, the English historians generally have fallen into a mistake. Her name ought to be written Arbella, and for these reasons: Echard quotes the indictment against Raleigh. etc., for sedition and "setting up the lady Arbella Stuart." Thus he wrote the name, and thus, doubtless, he found it in the record. Moreover, some years ago, in examining an English book, I met with a fac simile of this lady's method of writing her own name after her marriage to Seymour, and the copy stands thus: "Arbella Seymoure." We ought, then, to be satisfied, that Arbella was the name of Isaac Johnson's wife, and the name on the stern of the admiral ship. Shall we now so write the name, or shall we accommodate the orthography to what was probably the pronunciation of the English, who now give, in some cases, a peculiar sound to the letter r, which we are not accustomed to give? Can we hope to induce the English to write Arbella Stuart? Shall we divide into the two belligerous factions of Arbellans and Arabellans, and dispute, like the theologians of old, about a single letter? Or shall we fall in with the modern reformer, who stands up for the primitive writing, and dares not substitute custom for the record? Dr. Molmes, in his second edition, has come out an Arbellan. Mr. Farmer, though contrary to his own antiquarian principles, is an Arabellan. For my part, I have concluded to be tolerant, - especially as in my book I happen to present the word in both forms, - and will embrace the partisans of both sides in the compass of my charity. - Savage's Winthrop, 1. 1, 34; Prince, 314; Holmes; 1. 206;

JOHNSON, EDWARD, captain, an early New England historian, died April 23, 1672, aged, probably, upwards of 70. He came from Herne-Hill, a parish in Kent, in 1630, probably in the fleet of Gov. Winthrop, for, Oct. 19, he was among the petitioners to be admitted as freemen. In 1632 he was at Merrimac, residing there under a license to trade, but his usual residence was Charlestown. When it was determined to erect a new town, and church, now called Woburn, he was one of the committee for that purpose. In May, 1642, the town was incorporated; it had been called "Charlestown village." Aug. 14 the church was formed, and Mr. Carter ordained Nov. 22. In 1643 he went with Capt. Cook and forty men to Providence, to seize Gorton. In the same year he was chosen representative, and was annually re-elected, excepting 1648, till 1671. He was the speaker of the house in 1655. At the incorporation of the town he was chosen recorder, and he kept the records of the town until about a year before his death. In 1665 he was appointed on the committee with Bradstreet, Danforth, and others, to meet the commissioners, Nicolls, Carr, etc., who had been sent from England. He left five sons, - Edward, George, William, Matthew, and John, - two of whom were representatives of Woburn. His descendants are numerous in Woburn and Burlington. Farmer, the author of the New England Genealogical Register, was a descendant. Capt. Johnson was the author of a history of Massachusetts from 1628 to 1652, which is of great value, notwithstanding the imperfections of its style. Its title is, history of New England from the English planting in 1628 till 1652; or, wonder-working Providence of Zion's Saviour, 4to., London, 1654. It has been reprinted in the historical collections, second series, vols. II., III., IV., VII., VIII., in which work it fills about 230 pages. Short pieces of poetry are interspersed in the work, as a kind of sonnets on individuals, and in other forms, amounting to about 1200 lines. We should be glad at the present day to exchange this poetry for a plain narrative of facts. - Farmer; Chickering's Dedication Sermon.

JOHNSON, ISAAC, captain, of Roxbury, was one of the six captains slain by the Indians at the capture of Narragansett fort, Dec. 19, 1675.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, major, the son of Edward, died at Woburn, Mass., in 1704. He was a firm, inflexible assistant under the old colony charter .- Collections of Farmer & Moore, vol. 1.

JOHNSON, NATHANIEL, Sir, governor of South Carolina seven or eight years, died in 1713. He had been a soldier and a member of the house of commons, and from 1686 to 1689 governor of the leeward islands, Nevis, St. Christopher, etc. He first came to Carolina as a private individual, silk, of grapes, of rice, the manufacture of salt, the building of mills. He procured a legal establishment of the Episcopal church, although the majority of the people were opposed, and was the means of introducing one hundred Episcopal clergymen and forming parochial libraries. The fort he built on the east end of James Island bears his name.

JOHNSON, ROBERT, governor of South Carolina, died at Charleston May 3, 1735. He was governor in 1719, and again from 1730 till the period of his death. In 1731 he negotiated a treaty with the Cherokees. He proved himself an efficient friend of Mr. Oglethorpe and the first settlers of Georgia on their arrival at Charleston, the assembly, at his suggestion, furnishing them with one hundred and four head of cattle, twentyfive hogs, twenty barrels of rice, and ten horsemen rangers for their protection. The settlement of Purrysburgh, by six hundred Swiss under Col. Peter Purry, was made in his administration.

JOHNSON, GABRIEL, governor of North Carolina, remained in office from Nov., 1734, till his death in 1752. In his administration much was done for the establishment of order and the encouragement of learning and religion, and the colony prospered.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, minister in Newbury, Mass., died in 1772, aged 65. Born in N., he graduated at Harvard in 1727, and was settled in 1732 over the fourth church. His successor was

Dr. Tappan.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, D. D., first president of King's college, New York, died Jan. 6, 1772, aged 75. He was born in Guilford, Conn., Oct. 14. 1696, and graduated at Yale college in 1714. In Oct., 1716, the trustees and general court directed the college to be removed to New Haven. and Mr. Johnson was chosen a tutor, in which office he continued till March 20, 1720, when he was ordained the minister of West Haven. Having an aversion to extemporary performances, it was his practice to use forms of prayer, and to write only one sermon in a month. He usually preached the discourses of others, minuting down only the heads, and expressing himself, when his remembrance of the words of the author failed him, in language of his own. ing embraced the Arminian doctrines and become a convert to the Episcopalian worship and church government, he resigned his charge at West Haven, and embarked at Boston with President Cutler for England Nov. 5, 1722. Having reeeived ordination as a missionary for Stratford, he arrived at that place in Nov., 1723. His predecessor and friend, Mr. Pigot, was immediately removed to Providence. Mr. Johnson was now the only Episcopalian minister in Conn., and there were but a few families of the English church in and engaged in various projects, as the culture of the colony. They were not increased in Stratford re of salt. legal esalthough d. and was Episcopal ries. The nes Island outh Caro-He was 30 till the gotiated a d himself d the first Charleston, hing them tle, twentyten horsesettlement under Col. ration. North Car-

734, till his much was nd the enn, and the Newbury.

in N., he is settled in ccessor was resident of

, 1772, aged ın., Oct. 14, n 1714. In l court di-Yew Haven, r, in which 0, when he ven. Havormances, it yer, and to He usually nuting down nself, when the author wn. Havand become and church t West Ha-1 President Having re-Stratford, he His predeediately rewas now the and there

h church in

in Stratford

towns, where he sometimes officiated, many families conformed. The desire of escaping the Congregational tax by joining a church, whose minister received a salary from a foreign society, and the petty quarrels which exist in most congregations, were enuses, according to Mr. Hobart, of no inconsiderable influence, in multiplying the Episcopalians. Hetween the years 1724 and 1736 Mr. Johnson was engaged in a controversy on the subject of Episcopacy with Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Foxeroft, and Mr. Graham. Entering on a new course of studies, he procured the works of John Hutchinson, and embraced many of his sentiments. He regarded him as a person of a stupendous genius, little inferior even to that of Sir Isaac Newton, whose principles he opposed; and he thought that in his writings he had discovered many important ancient truths, had effectually confuted the Jews, Infidels, Arians, and heretics of other denominations, and proved that the method of redemption by Jesus Christ was better understood in the patriarchial and Mosaic ages than was generally imagined. In 1754 he was elected president of the college, which had been lately instituted at New York. He went to that place in April, and soon commenced his labors. The charter was procured Oct. 31, 1754. March, 1763, he resigned, and was succeeded by Myles Cooper. He passed the remainder of his days in the peaceful retreat of Stratford, resuming his former charge, and continuing in the ministry

Dr. Johnson was in his person rather tall and in the latter part of his life corpulent. He was happy in a calmness of temper which was seldom discomposed. Those who knew him generally loved and revered him. The same good disposition, which rendered him amiable in private life, marked all his proceedings of a public nature, and may be discovered in his controversial writings. Henevolence was a conspicuous trait in his character. He seldom suffered a day to pass without doing to others some good offices relating to their temporal or spiritual affairs. His conversation was enlivened by the natural cheerfulness of his disposition, yet in his freest discourse he retained a respect to his character as a clergyman. By his acquaintance with Dean Berkeley he became a convert to the peculiar metaphysical opinions of that great man. His piety was unmingled with gloom or melancholy, and he contemplated with admiration and gratitude the wonderful plan of redemption, disclosed in the gospel. An account of his life, written by Dr. Chandler, was given to the public in 1805. He published plain reasons for conforming to the church, 1733; two tracts in the controversy with Mr. Graham; a letter from Aristocles to Authades; a defence of it in a letter to Mr. Dickin- son of Dr. Samuel, died Nov. 14, 1819, aged 92.

by means of his labors, but in the neighboring | son; a system of morality, 1746, designed to check the progress of enthusiasm; a compendium of logic, 1752; a demonstration of the reasonableness of prayer, 1761; a sermon on the beauties of holiness in the worship of the church of England; a short vindication of the society for propagating the gospel; an English grammar and a catechism, 1765; a Hebrew grammar, 1767; this evinced an accurate acquaintance with that language, and it was reprinted with improvements in 1771 .- Chandler's Life of Johnson ; Beach's Fun. Sermon.

> JOHNSON, STEPHEN, minister of Lyme in Conn., died Nov. 8, 1786, aged 61. He was graduated at Yale in 1743, and was settled as the successor of Jonathan Parsons in 1746. He published election sermon, 1770; on the everlasting punishment of the wicked, in answer to Chauncy and others, 8vo., 1786.

> JOHNSON, JACOB, minister of Groton, Conn., died in 1794, aged about 76. He was graduated at Yale in 1740, and settled over the third church in Groton, 1748,

JOHNSON, WILLIAM MARTIN, Dr., a poet, died at Jamaica, L. I., Sept. 21, 1797, aged about 26. He was the son, real or stolen, of a beggar, who intrusted him to the care of Capt. Albee of Wrentham, Mass. He studied medicine with Dr. Gage of East Hampton, L. I. Then he emigrated to Georgetown, S. C., where he was a partner with Dr. Bromfield. He married and was in good business, when he soon lost his health. He wrote this epituph on a lady:

" Here sleep in dust and wait the Almighty's will, Then rise unchanged, and be an angel still.'

- Cycl. of American Lit.

JOHNSON, NOAH, died at Plymouth, N. H., in Oct., 1798, aged 103. He was a deacon of the church. He was a soldier in Lovewell's battle with the Indians at Fryeburg.

JOHNSON, JOSHUA, was a graduate of Yale in 1775; a minister of Dudley, Mass., from 1790 to 1796. He had been previously settled in 1784, in Woodstock, Conn., north society.

JOHNSON, Joshua, commissioner of stamps, died at Alexandria in April, 1802. He was father-in-law of J. Q. Adams; and had been American consul at London.

JOHNSON, JAMES, minister of North Fairfield, Conn., died in 1810, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1760, in the class of Dr. Hart.

JOHNSON, BENJAMIN, judge of the supreme court of Rhode Island, died at West Greenwich in 1813, aged 65.

JOHNSON, BAKER, colonel of the Revolutionary army, died in Maryland in 1813.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM SAMUEL, LL. D., president of Columbia college, New York, the eldest

He was born at Stratford Oct. 7, 1727; was grad- | son, after the defeat of a detachment under Col. uated at Yale college in 1744; and soon rose to eminence as a lawyer. He was not only a man of science and literature, but also an eloquent orator. In 1765 he was a delegate to the congress at New York; and in 1766 was an agent of the colony to England. While there he formed an acquaintance with illustrious men; with Dr. S. Johnson he corresponded for many years. He returned in 1771, and in 1772 was appointed a judge of the supreme court of Connecticut; an office which he relinquished in 1774. In 1785 he was a delegate to congress; and in 1787 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. He was one of the first senators from Connecticut, and with Mr. Ellsworth drew up the bill for the judiciary system. From 1792 to 1800 he was the president of Columbia college. After 1800 he lived in his untive village till his death.

JOHNSON, THOMAS, governor of Maryland, died at Rose Hill Oct. 26, 1819, aged 87. He was a native of Calvert county. In 1774 he was appointed a member of congress, and was for several years in that body. After the Revolution he was the first governor, from 1777 to 1779, when he was succeeded by Thomas S. Lee. He was an associate justice of the supreme court of the United States from 1791 till his resignation, from ill health, in 1793.

JOHNSON, Sir WILLIAM, a major-general of the militia of New York, and remarkable for the ascendency which he gained over the Indians, died July 11, 1774, aged 60. He was born in Ireland about the year 1714, and was a nephew of Sir Peter Warren, the naval hero, who distinguished himself especially at the siego of Louisbourg in 1745. Sir Peter, having married a lady in New York, was induced to purchase large tracts of land upon the Mohawk river and the more interior parts of the country, and he sent for his nephew, about the year 1734, to come to America and take the charge of his affairs. Young Johnson accordingly took up his residence upon a certain tract on the Mohawk, about this to miles from Albany, and cultivated an acquaintance with the Indians. He learned their langunge; he studied their manners, that he might be able to conciliate their regard; his situation upon the river between Albany and Oswego presented a fine opportunity for trade, and he carried on a large traffic with them, supplying them with such goods as they needed, and receiving in return beaver and other skins; at length he acquired an influence over them, which no other man ever possessed. In 1755 he was intrusted with the command of the provincial troops of New York, and marched to invest Crown Point, while Shirley proceeded towards Ontario agreea- of Great Britain, which excited such agitation in bly to the plan of the compaign. General toho- the colonies a few years before his death, and he

Williams, which he had sent out, was attacked himself in his camp on lake George Sept. 8th. But as soon as his artillery began to play, the Canadian militia and the Indians fled with precipitation to the swamps. The French troops were repulsed, and Baron Dieskau, their general, was taken prisoner. The advantage, however, which was thus gained, was not pursued, and his conduct in not proceeding against Crown Point has been the subject of reprehension. Even the success of the battle is to be attributed to the exertions of the brave Gen. Lyman. But Johnson, who was wounded in the engagement, reaped the benefits of the repulse of Dieskau, which was magnified into a splendid victory. The house of commons bestowed on him 5,000 pounds, and the king conferred on him the title of baronet. About this time also he was appointed superintendent of Indian affairs in New York. In the year 1759 he commanded the provincial troops under Brig.-Gen. Prideaux, in the expedition against Ningara. While directing the operations of the siege, Prideaux was killed by the bursting of a cohorn July 20th; but Johnson prosecuted the plan, which had been formed, with judgment and vigor. On the 24th of July the enemy made an attempt to raise the siege, but were defeated through the excellent dispositions and the courage of Johnson, and the next day the fort was taken, and about six hundred men made prisoners of war. This event broke off the communication which the French intended to establish between Canada and Louisiana. When Amherst embarked at Oswego in June, 1760, to proceed on the expedition to Canada, Sir William brought to him at that place one thousand Indians of the Iroquois or five nations, which was the largest number that had been seen in arms at one time in the cause of England. He died at his seat at Johnson hall, about twenty-four niles from Schenectady, on the Mohawk river. He left a large sum of money to be employed in presents to the Indians of the Mohawk castles, all of whom, men, women, and children, had mourning dresses presented them on his death.

Sir William possessed considerable talents as an orator, and his influence over the Indians was not a little owing to the impression made upon them by means of his elecution. It has been represented, that he was envious toward Shirley, and endeavored to thwart him in his plans, by discouraging the Indians from joining him; and that in his private conduct he paid little respect to those laws, the observation of which only can insure domestic peace and virtue. He had wives and concubines, sons and daughters, of different colors. He was zealous in supporting the claims mder Col. attacked Sept. 8th. play, the ith preciponps were neral, was ver, which d his con-Point has m the sucthe exer-Johnson, reaped the which was e house of ounds, and of baronet. d superink. In the cial troops expedition operations he bursting prosecuted judgment nemy made re defented l the courie fort was ade prisone communio establish n Amherst proceed on brought to ions of the mourning talents as ndians was made upon t has been ard Shirley, is plans, by him; and ttle respect ch only can e had wives of different the claims ngitation in eth, and he

the largest

at one time

his seat at iles from

He left a

in presents

les, all of

exerted himself to promote the interest of the ing the New Testament and Baxter's saints' church of England. The following anecdote seems to evince that, in his dealings with the Indians, who have a good reputation for cuming, he was not outwitted by them. Having sent to England for clothes finely laced, on their arrival, Hendrick, the chief of the Mohawks, was dazzled with their splendor, and began to think how finely he should look dressed in a similar manner. His vanity could not be resisted, and to gratify it he hit upon the following expedient. He went to Sir William one morning, and told him very demurely, that in the preceding night he had dreamed, that the baronet had generously presented him with a suit of his laced clothes. solemn hint could not be mistaken or avoided, and the Indian monarch went away pleased with his successful ingenuity. In a few days, however, Sir William accosted his majesty and made known his dream, which was, that Hendrick had given him a tract of land containing several thousand acres. "The land is yours," said Hendrick, "but now, Sir William, I never dream with you again; you dream too hard for me." He published a piece on the customs and language of the Indians in philosophical transactions, vol. LXIII. — Dr. Eliot; Annual Reg. for 1758, 1759, 1760, 1766, 1774; Marshall, I. 385, 395, 446; Wynne, 11. 44-52, 99-101.

JOHNSON, Sir JOHN, son of the preceding, died in Jan., 1798. He succeeded his father in his title, and was appointed major-general in his place Nov., 1774. At the commencement of the war he joined the British, and about the year 1776 persuaded the Mohawks to retire into Canada, from whence he repeatedly ravaged different parts of New York, and in one expedition, in which he destroyed the very settlement where he formerly lived, he proved himself not very dissimilar in character to his savage companions. In Aug., 1777, he invested fort Stanwix, and defeated Herkimer. In Oct., 1780, Gen. Van Rensselaer defeated him at Fox's mills. In 1796 he was appointed governor of Upper Canada.

He died at Hampton, Canada.

JOHNSON, JOSEPH, an Indian preacher, was born at Mohegan, near Norwich, Conn., about 1750. He was the son of Capt. Joseph Johnson, who served near lake George in the French war of 1757, and who was a man of piety. After being educated at Mr. Wheelock's school at Lebanon, as was also Occom, another Moliegan preacher, he was sent, at the age of fifteen, as a schoolmaster to the Six Nations of Indians in New York, and was thus employed two years. Afterwards "he wandered up and down in this delusive world." Returning from a whaling veyage in 1771, he repaired to his farm at Mohe-

It would seem from his journal, which is still preserved, that he experienced the deepest conviction of sin. Afterwards he was licensed to preach and was for years a missionary in the State of New York. Being among the Six Nations in 1776, he received a letter from Washington, dated at Cambridge Feb. 20th, saying 1 "Tell them, that we don't want them to take up the hatchet for us except they choose it; we only desire, that they will not fight against us. We want that the chain of friendship should always remain bright between our friends of the Six Nations and us. We recommend you to them, and hope, by your spreading the truths of the gospel among them, it will keep the chain bright." His manuscript journal and sermons display his talents and acquaintance with theology.

JOHNSON, John, major, a painter, died about 1817. He was a brave officer in the Revolutionary army. After the peace of 1783 he took up the peneil, residing chiefly at Boston; but he was deficient in drawing, though with a correct eye and steady hand. He was also a man of a vigorous mind. His strong likenesses of some of our fathers are valuable. - Knapp's Lectures, 193.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL B., lieutenant, an officer of the navy, was born in New York and educated a printer. In the war of 1812 he joined the marine corps, and was for a time a prisoner in Chili. He died on board the Macedonian, May 12, 1820. He published letters from Chili, 1816.

JOHNSON, JOHN, chancellor of Maryland, died suddenly in Aug., 1824, aged about 52, supposed to be a graduate of Columbia college, New York, in 1792.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, colonel, died at Boonville in Christian peace, June 1, 1834, aged 85, a Revolutionary soldier. Born in Haverhill, he lived many years in Boscawen.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, judge of the supreme court of the United States, died at Brooklyn Aug. 4, 1831. His residence was Charleston, S. C. He published the life of Gen. Greene, 2 vols., 4to., 1822; essay to philosophical society; Nugae Georgicae, 1815; culogy on Adams and Jefferson, 1826.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL, died at Hallowell Nov. 16, 1836, aged 44. He was secretary and agent of the Maine missionary society. His death was occasioned by a slight injury of one of his toes by a peg in a newly-mended boot. Born in Georgetown, Mass., he graduated at Bowdoin in 1817. He was the minister of Alna from 1818 to 1828, and minister of Saco from 1828 to 1836, succeeding Dr. Jonathan Cogswell, and afterwards usefully employed in promoting the missionary cause. He had power as a preacher. gan, and there, in a time of sickness brought on As he was about to die, he sent a message to his by his vices, became a Christian convert by read- church, that he should be ready to meet them in the world of glory, as one by one they should

JOHNSON, ALFRED, minister of Helfast, in Me., died Jan. 12, 1837, aged 69.

JOHNSON, OSOOOD, principal of Andover Academy, died May 9, 1837, aged 33; a graduate of Dartmouth, 1828. He had talents, taste, literature, and possessed manly and Christian virtues.

JOHNSON, MARIA PRESTON, Mrs., of Rupert, Vt., wife of Stephen J., missionary to Siam, died at Philadelphia Jan. 8, 1839. Ill health compelled her to return to this country.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM SAMUEL, judge, died at Stratford Oct. 25, 1846, aged 85; a native of S., and a graduate of 1779. He was a judge of a county court.

JOHNSON, WILLIAM, died in New York in July, 1818, aged about 80. Horn in Middletown, he graduated at Yale in 1788, and settled in the law at New York. He was a reporter of the supreme court and court of chancery. He published a translation of Azuni's maritime law in 1806, and a digest of eases decided in the courts of New York, from 1799 to 1803, in 3 vols.; from 1808 to 1812; reports, etc., 20 vols., 1815, 1823; digest of enses from 1799 to 1827, 2 vols., 1825; do. from 1799 to 1823, 8vo.

JOHNSON, SAMUEL LEE, rector in Indianapolis, Ind., died in 1848, aged 36. He graduated at Kenyon college in 1839, and was several years tutor. He established St. Mary's seminary in I., and was its principal. He was a zealous and faithful preacher.

JOHNSON, CHAPMAN, died at Richmond July 12, 1849; an eminent member of the bar, a lending man in Virginia.

JOHNSON, RICHARD M., colonel, vice-president of the United States, died in Frankfort, Ky., Nov. 19, 1850, aged about 70. From 1807 he was a representative in congress twelve years. In the war he served under Harrison, and was distinguished in the battle of the Thames. He was afterwards a senator and representative. His name as chairman is connected with a report against the suspension of the Sunday mails. His death was by paralysis.

JOHNSON, THOMAS, a seaman, died at the naval asylum, Philadelphia, in 1851, aged above 100. The old tar fought the Scrapis with Paul Jones in 1779.

JOHNSON, WALTER ROGERS, professor of chemistry, died in Washington April 26, 1852, aged 57. His death was caused by inhaling noxious gas, while performing some chemical experiments in the Smithsonian institute. Born in Lerminister, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1879, was the preceptor of Germantown acaderay "to promssor of Chamistry in the college at Philadelphia, and of the Smithsonian Institute. | touched became immediately deaf, or was seized

JOHNSON, ISAAC, governor of Louisiana from 1845 to 1850, died in New Orleans in 1853.

JOHNSON, ELVIRA, Mrs., died in Hartford, Conn., Sept. 21, 1856, aged 102. A Mr. Deems died on the same day of the same age.

JOHNSON, ALFRED, judge, died at Belfast, Me., in 1852, aged 62. Born in Newburyport, the son of Rev. Alfred J., he was a resident in Belfast in 1805, and graduated at Bowdein in 1808. He was a member of the convention which formed the constitution of Maine, and a judge of probate eighteen years. He published an eulogy on Adams and Jefferson, 1826,

JOHNSON, JOHN, chancellor of Maryland, died at Haltimore Oct. 4, 1856. He was buried at Annapolis, the place of his birth.

JOHNSTON, JOSIAH S., a senator of the United States from Louisiana, died May 19, 1833, killed on Red river forty miles above Alexandria, by the explosion of a steamboat by gunpowder. About fifteen others were killed. Horn in Conn., his father emigrated to Kentucky, and them e to Louisiana. He was senator from 1824 till his

JOHNSTON, SUSAN, widow of John J., from Ireland, died at Sault St. Marie in 1843, aged 67. She was a daughter of Wabojeeg, chief of the Chippewa nation.

JOHNSTON, JOHN, a Christian merchant of New York, died April 16, 1851, aged 69. His character was described by his pastor, Dr.

McElroy. - Observer, May 1.

JOHNSTON, JOHN, D. D., died in 1855, aged 77. He had been for half a century the pastor of the Presbyterian church of Newburgh, N. Y., and was an attached friend of Dr. Prime. There was a revival in 1843 in his church, of which he had the charge forty-eight years.

JOHNSTONE, SAMUEL, governor of North Carolina from 1788 to 1790, was also a judge of the superior court of the State. He died at Stewarkey in Aug., 1816, aged 82. Gabriel Johnstone was the governor before the Revolution from 1734 to 1753.

JOLLIFFE, or JOLYFE, JOHN, died at a great age in Boston in 1701; a man of useful public services, and at a late period of his life a member of the council.

JOLLY, MENEY, Judge, died in Jersey, Ohio, July 29, 1812, aged the seldier of the Revolution in M when's regiment. He emigrated to Ohio in 1782, and settled a township now bearing his name. He was judge of the common pleas fourteen years.

JONES, MARGARET, of Charlestown, Mass., was in June, 1648, executed as a witch. According to Hubbard's account, she had "such a malignant touch" that the person whom she ana from 53. lartford. r. Deems Helfnst. port, the ii Belfast (08. lie formed f probate ulogy on faryland, as buried

r of the 19, 1833, exandria, mpowder. in Conn., thence to 1 till his

J., from , aged 67. ief of the rehant of 69. His stor, Dr.

855, aged he pastor gh, N. Y., e. There which he of North judge of e died at Gabriel e Revolu-

died at a of useful his life a sey, Ohio, lievolugrated to now bearcommon

n, Mass., tch. Ac-" such a whom she was scized execution a ship in the harbor, with one hundred and twenty tons of ba last, rolled as if she would have turned over. In did not occur to the historian, that the movement of eighty horses, who were on hoard, might have occasioned a little motion

JONES, Jones, minister of Concord from about 1637 to 1644; then of Fairfield, where he died about 1664, aged upwards of 70. He was the son of William of Abergavenny, and was of Jesus college, Oxford, in 1624, at the age of seventeen. Coming to this country in 1635, he was ordained pastor at Concord, and P. Bulkley teacher, April 6, 1637. The church was gathered in 1636. His son John graduated at Harvard in 1643, in the second class. - Sprague's Annals.

JONES, HUGH, minister of Jamestown, published the present state of Virginia, 8vo., London,

JONES, ELIPHALET, minister of Huntington, L. I., died in April, 1731, or after, aged 90 or more. He was the son of John Jones, born at Concord, Jan. 11, 1641; and was settled in

in 1741.

JONES, DAVID, judge of the supreme court of New York, died Oct. 11, 1775. He was born in Sept., 1699, at Oyster Bay, L. I., and from 1737 to 1758 was a member of the assembly, and for thirteen years the speaker. In 1758 he received the appointment of judge, which he resigned in 1773. During his whole life he was the firm advocate of the rights of the people against royal encroachments, and participated largely in the public confidence and respect.

JONES, ISAAC, minister of Western (now Warren), Mass., died in 1784, aged about 64.

He graduated at Yale in 1742.

JONES, Horatto, Dr., died at Stockbridge, Mass., April 26, 1813, aged 43. His widow died in Middletown in 1851, aged 77. He was a deseendant of Lewis Jones, a first settler of Watertown, Mass. His father was Capt. Josiah J., of He left an only daughter of ten years old. He was eminent in his profession, a good surgeon, and most sociable and popular. His conversion was memorable. His wife and her friend, each of whom had an irreligious husband, agreed to meet in order to pray for the salvation of their husbands. They were heard; and in a few months Dr. J. died in peace; and in about two years the two neighbors, a merchant and his wife, had a peaceful departure. According to Rev. Dr. Hyde, who preached his funeral sermon, " He left the world like a Christian, with resignation to the Divine will, and with enrapturing views of the mediation, all-sufficiency, and glery of Jesus Christ." Just lean commissioners. April 10, 1778, he sailed on with some violent sickness; and soon after her before he closed his eyes, he extended his arms and said: "Jesus, I expand my arms to receive thee, Happy, happy, beyond expression? Ye spirits in yonder sky, receive my soul, and take it to Jesus!" Who would not die thus, rather than in the dark, uncheered, hopeless despondence of the Infidel? - Panoplist, X.; Willyams' Med.

JONES, SAMUEL, D. D., of Pennsylvania, died Feb. 7, 1811. He received an honorary degree at the first commencement of Rhode Island college in 1769

JONES, WALTEST, died in Westmoreland co., Va., in 1816, aged 76; for many years a memb of congress.

JONES, JOHN, M. D., a physician, of Welch extraction, died June 23, 1701, aged 62. Me was the son of Evan Jones, a physician, and was born at Jamaica, Long Island, in 1729. After studying physic with Dr. Cadwallader at Philadelphia, be completed his medical education in Europe,-London, Paris, Leyden, and Edinburgh. On h. return he settled at New York and was partieu larly emineut as a surgeon. In the war of 1755 he served as a surgeon in the army. The French JONES, THOMAS, minister of Woburn, died in commander. Dieskam, severely wounded, was at-1774, aged about 55. He graduated at Harvard tended by him. On the establishment of a medical school in New York, he was appointed professor of surgery. Soon after he settled in the city the physicians agreed, for their own dignity, to wear their hair in a particular bob, and, as he refused to concur in the project, they refused to consult with him. Hut he soon triumphed, and the power of ridicule compelled the medical men to wear their hair like other gentlemen. In the Revolutionary war he left the city, when it was occupied by the enemy. In 1780 he settled in Philadelphia, where he was the physician of Franklin and Washington. In his religious views he was a Quaker. He published plain remarks upon wounds and fractures, 1775. After his death his pupil, J. Mease, published his surgical works, with an account of his life, 8vo., 1795 .-Ramsay's Review, 36; Thacher, 324-340.

JONES, JOHN PAUL, a naval commander, died in Paris July 18, 1792, aged 45. He was born at Arbingland, Scotland, July 6, 1747. His father was a gardener of the name of Paul, for some reason the son, when he lived in Virginia, assumed the name of Jones. He early went to sea. After being for some time in command of a vessel, he engaged in commercial pursuits in the West Indies. In 1773, on the death of his brother, he resided in Virginia to settle his affairs. Soon after the beginning of the war he commanded the Providence of twelve guns and seventy men, in which he cruised and took sixteen prizes. In May, 1777, he was ordered to proceed to Paris to arrange some naval operations with the Amer-

a cruise in the Ranger, and alarmed the whole coast of Scotland. He landed at Whitehaven, and captured two forts with thirty cannon; he carried off also the plate from the house of the Earl of Selkirk, at St. Mary's Isle, but he afterwards restored it. He returned to Brest with two hundred prisoners of war. He sailed again with a squadron of seven sail Aug. 14, 1779. His own ship was the Bon Homme Richard, in which after a desperate engagement off Flamborough head he captured the British ship of war, Scrapis, of superior force, Sept. 24, 1779. His own vessel, however, soon went down. For this exploit the French king presented him with a golden sword. Feb. 18, 1781, he arrived at Philadelphia. Congress passed a complimentary resolution and voted him a golden medal. He afterwards superintended at Portsmouth, N. H., the building of a ship of war. After the restoration of peace he went to Paris as agent for prize money. He was soon invited to enter the Russian service with the rank of rear admiral. But after serving a short time in the Black sea, he was dissatisfied, was calumniated at court, and had liberty from the empress to retire. Returning to Paris, he died in that city in neglect. Though most enterprising and brave, he was irritable, vain, and of an impetuous temper. An account of his life was published in 1828 by J. H. Sherburne. - Memoirs, 1830.

JONES, NOBLE WIMBERLY, a physician, and a natriot of the Revolution, died Jan. 9, 1805, aged 80. He was the son of Col. Noble J., one of the first settlers of Georgia and judge in 1755. He held a military commission in 1738, and in 1748 was associated in business with his father. He was a member of the assembly in 1761; in 1774 he was one of the first to stir up the Revolutionary spirit in Georgia. In 1775 he was chosen a delegate to congress; and again in 1781. In the capture of Savannah in Dec., 1778, by the British, he lost one of his sons, and he himself fell into the hands of the enemy at the capture of Charleston in May, 1780. In Dec. he was sent a prisoner to St. Augustine. In Aug., 1781, he was exchanged, and commenced the practice of physic in Philadelphia. At this period he was also a member of congress. In Dec., 1782, he returned to Savannah. He was soon induced to remove to Charleston, where he lived in lucrative practice till Dec., 1788, when he again settled at Savannah. In 1795 he was president of the convention which amended the State constitution. He continued in the practice of his profession till his death. He was not only eminent as a physician and statesman, but in the relations of private life was amiable and exemplary. He was temperate and abstemious, a lover of neatness and order, of strict morality, and a sincere believer in Christianity. Though attached Boston, died April 26, 1842, aged 83.

to the Episcopal church, he contributed liberally to other religious societies. - Thacher, 340-344.

JONES, WALTER, M. D., a physician, died Dec. 31, 1815, aged 70. He was born in Virginia, and educated for medicine at Edinburgh about 1770. On his return he settled in Northumberland county, where he had extensive practice through life. For a few years he was a member of congress. On account of the originality and strength of his mind, his extensive and various learning, and the captivating powers of his conversation, he was one of the most extraordinary men. - Thacher.

JONES, SAMUEL, died at Ryc Neck, N. Y., in 1819, aged 85. He was the brother of Judge David, and son of Capt. Thomas, who came from the north of Ireland to Long Island in 1692; and has been called the father of the New York bar. His services were extremely important in organizing the judiciary system at the close of the Revolution. For industry, extensive acquirements, and purity of character he presented a model for the imitation of those who aim at high attainments in jurisprudence. - New York Hist. Coll., ш. 278.

JONES, WILLIAM, governor of Rhode Island, was born in Newport in 1754, and during the war was a captain of marines. At the capture of Charleston he was made a prisoner. After being some years the speaker of the house, he was chosen governor in 1810 and remained in the office till 1817. He died in April, 1822, at Providence, aged 67.

JONES, STEPHEN, chief justice and judge of probate for the county of Washington, Maine, died in Boston Oct. 6, 1825, aged 86. He served in the old French war, and was present when Lord Howe was killed at Ticonderoga. Removing to Machias, soon after its settlement, he lived there more than fifty-six years, fulfilling his various duties with great cheerfulness and integrity.

JONES, CAVE, an Episcopal minister, died at Brooklyn, L. I., Jan. 29, 1829, aged 59. He was a chaplain in the navy. He published Hobart's intolerance, and a solemn appeal to the church, 1811; which was answered by Hobart.

JONES, ABIEL, minister of Royalton, Vt., died in 1829, aged 67.

JONES, JAMES, Dr., died near Smyrna, Del., in 1830, aged 74. He was surgeon in the army, and more than fifty years in the ministry of the Baptist church, distinguished and respected.

JONES, EDWARD, colonel, died at Pittsborough, N. C., Aug. 8, 1841, aged 84, formerly attorney-general. He was born in Ireland. At the bar he was distinguished, and he was a scholar. and witty and hospitable, highly esteemed.

JONES, THOMAS K., an eminent merchant in ed liberally r, 340-344. sician, died orn in Vir-Edinburgh d in Northensive pracwas a meme originality ive and variowers of his

t extraordi-

ck, N. Y., in er of Judge o came from in 1692; and w York bar. nt in organe of the Revequirements, a model for high attain-: Hist. Coll., hode Island, aring the war e capture of After being ouse, he was ained in the 822, at Prov-and judge of gton, Maine, . He served present when ga. Removnent, he lived fulfilling his ness and inister, died at 59. He was hed Hobart's o the church, art.

lton, Vt., died

Smyrna, Del., in the army, inistry of the spected.

d at Pittsbo-84, formerly Ireland, At was a scholar, teemed.

merchant in

in Aug., 1846, aged 83.

JONES, THOMAS P., M. D., died at Washington March 11, 1848, aged 75. He had been superintendent of the patent office and editor of the Franklin Journal.

JONES, JACOB, commodore, died in Philadelphia July, 1850, aged 82. He fought a bloody battle in the Wasp, capturing, Oct. 18, 1812, the Frolic of superior force, for which several States voted him a sword; but both vessels were soon taken by the Poietiers, a 74-gun ship, and earried to Bermuda. He was afterwards appointed to the command of the Macedonian. Temperate himself, he deserves honorable mention as a promoter of temperance among his crew; many seamen were by him reclaimed from intoxication.

JONES, NANCY, a colored woman, died at Jamaica, L. I., July 17, 1851, aged 110.

JONES, SAMUEL TAYLOR, D. D., died at Bangkok, Siam, Sept. 13, 1851, aged 49. He was born in New Ipswich, a graduate of Amherst in 1825, and was a Baptist missionary to Burmah in 1829. He translated the whole New Testament into the Siamese in 1829.

JONES, ROGER, major-general, died in Washington June 15, 1852. Born in Virginia, he was lieutenant in 1809; was distinguished in 1813 and 1814 on the Niagara frontier, and was adjutantgeneral from 1825 until his death.

JONES, SAMUEL, chief justice of New York, died at Cold Spring, Long Island, Aug. 8, 1853, aged 83. He was chancellor 1826-1828, chief justice 1828-1847, and judge of the court of appeals, 1848. He was the eldest son of chief justice Samuel Jones, who died in 1819, and greatgrandson of Capt. Thomas Jones, who came from Strahane in Ireland in 1692, and settled on Long Island, south side, leaving three sons, David, William, and Thomas. David was a judge of the supreme court; William, who died in 1779, was the grandfather of the subject of this article, Chancellor Jones. His father, Thomas, who died in 1769, was the brother of Judges David and Samuel Jones. At the age of eighty he returned to his profession.

JONES, PETER, or Kakewakwanaby, an Indian chief and Wesleyan missionary, died near Brantford, Canada, June 29, 1856, aged 54. It is believed that he did more than any other man to interest the public on both sides of the Atlantic in behalf of the christianization and improvement of the Indian tribes.

JORDAN, ROBERT, an Episcopal minister at cape Elizabeth, died in 1679. He merried a daughter of John Winter, from whom he inherited a large landed estate. He removed to Portsmouth in 1676.

JONES, THOMAS, minister of Gloucester, died | Anson co., N. C., July 12, 1803, aged 114. He was born in April, 1689. Hunting was a favorite amusement.

JOSEPH, Francis, an Indian, died at Passamaquoddy in 1831, aged 99. He was a worthy man, and governor of the Indians. In the war of the Revolution he espoused the American eause.

JOSSELYN, JOHN, an author, arrived in Boston in 1663, and resided in New England a number of years. He was brother to Henry Josselyn, a councillor under the government of Gorges. The following is the title of his principal work: "New England's rarities discovered in birds; fishes, serpents, and plants of that country; together with the physical and chyrurgical remedies, wherewith the natives constantly use to cure their distempers, wounds, and sores; also a perfeet description of an Indian squaw in all her bravery, with a poem not improperly conferred upon her; lastly a chronological table of the most remarkable passages in that country amongst the English; illustrated with cuts, 1672." His account of the natural history of the country is amusing: "Some frogs, when they sit upon their breech, are a foot high;" "Barley frequently degenerates into oats," etc. He published also an account of two voyages to New England, wherein you have the setting out of a ship with the charges, a description of the country, etc., 1674. - Sullivan's Maine, 332; Hutchinson, 1. 267, 268; Douglass, II. 71.

JOY, JOSEPH GREEN, died at Nahant July 24, 1850, aged 67, a man of refined taste and kindly feeling, endeared to his friends.

JUDD, THOMAS, the first of the name of Judd in this country, died at Northampton, Mass., Nov. 12, 1688, aged about 80. His descendants of the name of Judd down to this time, eight or nine generations, were more than 2600. He came from England about 1633, and settled in Cambridge; thence he removed in 1636 with the colony to Hartford; and thence to Farmington about 1644, where he was a first settler, one of the seven pillars of the church, a deacon and man of influence, many years deputy to the general court. In 1679 he married Clemence, widow of Thomas Mason of Northampton, to which town he removed, as she had a good estate and no children. His own six sons and three daughters were all married and had children. Two of his sons settled in Mattatuck or Waterbury. The daughter of one of them, Mary, the daughter of Thomas, was the mother of Rev. Dr. S. Hopkins. T. J. was one of the eighty-four proprietors of Farmington and four or five other towns, so that large tracts were distributed to his children. His descendant, Sylvester Judd of Northampton, has in JORDAN, CHARLES, died near Speedsborough, this year, 1856, published "Thomas Judd and his descendants," a genealogical work, containing names and notices of 1882 persons, among whom Benjamin occurs 499 times, William 370, Thomas 325. — Judd's Genealogy.

JUDD, TIMOTHY, the brother of Rev. Jonathan Judd, died in Westbury society in Waterbury, Conn., in 1796, aged 82. He was a representative of the town for more than twenty sessions of the general court. He made full trial of matrimony, for he had in succession five wives.

JUDD, JONATHAN, the first minister of Southampton, Mass., died July 28, 1803, aged 83. He was of the sixth generation from Thomas, and the son of Capt. William of Westbury in Waterbury. He was graduated at Yale in 1741, in the class of Dr. Hopkins and Buell and of Wm. Livingston. He was settled when the church was formed, June 8, 1743. His house, standing in 1856, was palisaded in two French and Indian wars. His four sons were each above six feet in height. His ministry lasted sixty years. V. Gould was his colleague in 1801. His wife was Silence, the daughter of Capt. J. Sheldon of Northampton; his second wife, in 1790, was Ruth, widow of Rev. A. Bidwell, and by her he had no children. He was a fuithful minister, an eminent Christian, and a true patriot. During his ministry, 691 persons were received into the church. His sermons, about 3,000, were by his order committed to the flames. He published a sermon to the soldiers, 1759, and one in the select sermons. - Judd's Genealogy.

JUDD, WILLIAM, major, of the sixth generation from Thomas, died at Farmington, Conn., in 1801, aged 61. He was the son of William of Farmington. He graduated at Yale in 1763; was a popular man, and many years a representative. In the Revolutionary war he was an officer: and afterwards conspicuous in the democratic ranks in the party divisions of his day. He published an address to the people only five days before his death.

JUDD, JONATHAN SHELDON, Dr., son of Solomon of Westhampton, and of the eighth generation from Thomas, died in Onondaga Hollow in 1813, aged 33. His daughter, Louisa Melissa, has been many years a teacher at the south and

JUDD, JONATHAN, son of Rev. Jonathan, died unmarried at Southampton Jan. 30, 1819, aged 74. He graduated at Yale in 1765; taught Hatfield grammar school a few years, and then was engaged in mercantile business. His property of 14,000 dollars went to his brothers, sisters, and nephew, who gave 1,000 dollars to the Hampshire education society. - Sylvester Judd's Genealogy

JUDD, SYLVESTER, son of Rev. Jonathan J.,

80. He was a farmer and trader, much employed in public business. He was a representative and a member of the convention to form the constitution of Massachusetts. By his wife, Hannah Burt, he had eleven children. His grand-daughter, Clarissa Lyman, married Rev. J. H. Bisbee, and Theresa married Rev. George Lyman. His son, Sylvester of Northampton, is known for his historical and antiquarian researches. Perhaps there is no man who has made such a collection of New England historical facts since the first discovery of our coast.

JUDD, EBEN WARNER, Dr., settled at Middlebury, Vt., about 1800, and died in 1837, aged 76. He was of the seventh generation from Thomas. He was a surveyor and was employed in the northern parts of Vermont. He lived for a while in Northumberland, where the falls in the Connecticut river were called Judd's falls. He discovered marble at Middlebury about 1802, and erected a water-mill with sixty teethless saws for sawing marble, which operated for years. A daughter married Dr. Eells of Cornwall. - Judd's

JUDD, FREEMAN, brother of E. W. J., the son of Stephen of Westbury, Conn., died in Lockport, N. Y., at the house of his son Alfred, in 1840, aged 84. He was a carpenter. He and his brother served in the attack upon Quebee by Arnold in 1775, and published a journal of their movements from Boston to Quebec. He often preached as a Methodist.

JUDD, DEMAS, of the seventh generation from Thomas, died in Jefferson, N. Y., in 1841, aged 87. He was taken at fort Washington in the Revolutionary war, and was confined in the Jersey prison ship. His wife died in 1840; they had fourteen children.

JUDD, ELNATHAN, Dr., of the seventh generation from Thomas, died in Troy, Mich., in 1845, aged 72. He was the father of Dr. Judd of the Sandwich Islands. Born in Watertown, Conn., he emigrated to Paris, N. Y., and was there a respected physician for thirty years. He was a Christian of fervent piety, and died in peace. His daughter married A. B. Bates, attorney-general under the king of the Hawaiian Islands.

JUDD, SYLVESTER, a Unitarian minister, died in Augusta, Me., Jan. 26, 1853, aged 39. The son of Sylvester J. of Northampton, and grandson of Rev. Jonathan J., he was of the eighth generation from Thomas. He graduated at Yale in 1836; studied theology at Cambridge; and was ordained Oct. 1, 1840. He was a public lecturer, and published various discourses. He married Jane Elizabeth, daughter of Reuel Williams of Augusta, and left three daughters. His life by Miss A. Hall was published in a small volume. died in Westhampton Sept. 19, 1832, aged nearly In his New Year's sermon, a few weeks before his h employed entative and the constiife, Hannah d-daughter, Bisbee, and a. His son. for his hiserhaps there collection of he first dis-

d at Middle-37, aged 76. om Thomas. oved in the l for a while in the Conlls. He disit 1802, and less saws for years. A all. - Judd's

J., the son ed in Lockon Alfred, in . He and his Quebec by irnal of their c. He often ieration from n 1841, aged gton in the l in the Jer-1840; they enth generaich., in 1845, Judd of the town, Conn., was there a He was a ed in peace. attorney-gen-Islands. ninister, died ed 39. The

i, and grand-f the eighth nated at Yale nbridge; and a public leees. He marenel Williams s. His life by small volume. eks before his pastor to the grave?" The next day he was taken sick of bilious colic. He had a peculiar frankness and independence, uttering his thoughts holdly; and he was a man of kindly sympathies, highly esteemed by those who did not accord with him in his religious notions. Mr. Judd published Margaret, a New England tale, 1845; an edition in 2 vols., 1856; Philo, a poem in blank verse; and Richard Edney, a tale, 1850. In reference to his book, Margaret, a tale, the artist, Felix P. C. Darley, prepared in 1856 thirty large, beautiful illustrative plates, which were published by Phillips, Sampson and Co., of Boston, at 10 dollars in boards. The church, in a series of discourses, was a posthumous work, 1854. - Cyclop. of American Literature; Judd's Genealogy.

JUDD, Lors, widow of Elihu Judd of Bethel, Conn., died at Wilton Aug. 23, 1855, aged 102 years and 10 months. Her maiden name was Dikeman of Bethel. She married a second husband; but his name is not ascertained.

JUDKINS, PHILIP, died at Parkman, Me., Oct. 27, 1851, aged 103; a pensioner.

JUDSON, DAVID, minister of Newtown, Conn., died in 1776, aged about 60. He was graduated at Yale in 1738. He published church discipline, a sermon, 1770; on church government, in reply to Ross, 1773.

JUDSON, ANDREW, minister of Eastford in Ashford, Conn., died in 1804, aged about 50. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1775.

JUDSON, EPHRAIM, minister of Sheffield, Mass., died Feb. 23, 1813, aged 76. He was born in Woodbury, Conn., the son of Capt. Elnathan J., a descendant of William of Concord in 1635, and of New Haven. He graduated at Yale college in 1763. After being some years the minister of Chelsea, or the second church of Norwich, as the successor of Dr. Whitaker, he was dismissed, and was succeeded by Walter King. He was next settled as the minister of Taunton, Mass. In May, 1789, he was settled at Sheffield as the successor of John Keep. He was succeeded by James Bradford. During his ministry of twenty-two years only sixty were added to the church. In the next filteen years three hundred and twenty-nine were added. He was mild, courteous, hospitable, and faithful as a preacher of the gospel, yet a little eccentric. He published a sermon at the ordination of J. Strong, 1789; of E. Fitch, 1795; of H. Weeks and D. Smith, 1799; two sermons in a collection. - Sprague's Annals.

JUDSON, Ann, missionary to Burmah, died Oct. 24, 1826, aged 36. She was the daughter of John Hasseltine of Bradford, Mass., and was born Dec. 22, 1789. In early life she was gay, enterprising, active, and eager for the acquisition Judson was seized and imprisoned, with Dr. Price death, he inquired - " Or will you follow your of knowledge. She was educated at the academy of her native town. At the age of sixteen she became pious. She married Adoniram Judson, Jr., appointed a missionary to India, Feb. 5, 1812. In his letter to her father, asking his consent to the marriage, Mr. Judson said: "I have now to ask, whether you can consent to her departure for a heathen land? whether you can consent to her exposure to the dangers of the ocean; to every kind of want and distress; to degradation, insult, persecution, and perhaps a violent death? Can you consent to all this, for the sake of Him who left his heavenly home and died for her and for you?" She was the first American female who made up her mind to go to India as a missionary. She sailed from Salem Feb. 19, with Mrs. Newell, and arrived in June at Calcutta. While residing there, she and her husband adopted the principles of the Baptists and were baptized Sept. 6. Mr. Rice, also, a missionary, was baptized Nov. 1. As the missionaries were ordered to quit India, she sailed to the Isle of France, where, on her arrival Jan. 17, 1813, she was informed of the death of Mrs. Newell in Nov. She proceeded in July to Rangoon in Burmah. A few English missionaries had been there since 1807. After studying the language several years, Mr. Judson began to preach and to publish tracts in the Burman language. He was also joined by the missionaries, Hough, Colman, and Wheelock. In Jan., 1820, Mr. Judson made a fruitless visit to the emperor to obtain permission to propagate the Christian religion. In conscquence of this refusal, Mr. Colman was induced to remove to Chittagong, near which place he died July 4, 1822. Mr. Wheelock was also deeeased, and Mr. Hough had departed, so that Mr. and Mrs. Judson were left alone at Rangoon. Several converts were baptized in 1820. In consequence of alarming illness, Mrs. Judson left Rangoon in Aug., 1821, and repaired to Calcutta, and thence to England. In Sept., 1822, she arrived at New York. After visiting her friends at Bradford for a few weeks, she was induced, on account of her health, to pass the winter in the milder climate of Baltimore, where Dr. Elnathan Judson, an only brother of her husband, resided. Here she lived in retirement and wrote an interesting work, a history of the Burman mission. in a series of letters to Mr. Butterworth, a member of the parliament, in whose house she was received while in England. She sailed on her return June 22, 1823, from Boston, with the missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. Wade, and arrived at Calcutta in Oct., and in Dec. proceeded to Rangoon. In the same month she accompanied her husband to Ava, the capital. The Bengal government invaded Burmah in May, 1824. June 8th, Mr.

than a year and a half, nine months in three pair of fetters, two months in five pair, - amidst indescribable sufferings, - Mrs. Judson repaired every day two miles to the prison, prepared food for her husband, and administered to the wants of the prisoners, and made constant application to the government for their lives and their deliverance, until at last, on the approach of the British army, she had the happiness to announce to them their freedom.

> "O woman -When pain and anguish wring the brow, A ministering angel thou!"

In March, 1826, she passed down the Irrawaddy to the British camp, when Gen. Archibald Camphell received her with the kindness which she deserved for the eloquent appeals to the proud Burman government, of which she was the author, and which contributed to the peace. Mr. and Mrs. Judson now settled in the new town of Amherst on the Salwen river. But after a few months, in the absence of Mr. Judson, she died there of a fever. This fatal event is to be ascribed to her sufferings at Ava. In a few months her only surviving child, Maria, died. They were buried beneath a large hope tree, the Hopia, Her little son, Roger Williams, was buried at Rangoon. She was a woman of unquestioned piety and most benevolent zeal. Her talents, too, were of a high order. No female missionary ever passed through such scenes of suffering, or made such efforts of benevolence in sickness and amidst perils and difficulties of every kind. When, at a future time, the gospel shall triumph over the superstitions of the east, her name will be honored throughout all Burmah. A very interesting memoir of her life was published by James D. Knowles, 2d ed., Boston, 1829.

JUDSON, ADONIRAM, the brother of Ephraim, died at Scituate, Mass., in 1826, aged 76. Born at Woodbury, he graduated at Yale in 1775, and was the minister of Malden from Jan., 1787, till Sept., 1791; and then of Wenham from 1792 to 1799; and then of Plymouth from 1802 to 1817. He afterwards connected himself with the Baptists and preached in several places. He was the father of the missionary of the same name. He published a sermon on the landing of our fathers, 1802. — Sprugue's Annals.

JUDSON, SAMUEL, minister forty years of Uxbridge, died Nov. 11, 1832, aged about 62. He graduated at Yale in 1790. Till his last illness he performed the public services of every

JUDSON, ADONIRAM, D. D., Baptist missionary at Burmah, son of the Rev. A. J., died at sea April 12, 1850, aged 62. He left Maulmain in ill health April 3, 1850, in the French barque was sent to America, in 1748, to collect informa-

and others. During his imprisonment of more Aristide Marie, bound for the isle of Bourdeaux. He was constrained to leave Mrs. J. behind. In nine days he died, in latitude 150 north, and longitude 93° east, within the range of islands along the coast of Malacca; and the same evening was buried in the sea. He had been more than thirty-eight years in service, having embarked in 1812; and was one of the first and most eminent of the American missionaries in the east. He was born in Malden, graduated at Brown university in 1807, and at Andover seminary in 1810. He published a sermon on baptism, 1812; a dictionary of the Burman language, 1826.

JUDSON, EMILY CHUBBUCK, the widow of the missionary, Adoniram Judson, died in Hamilton, N. Y., June 1, 1854, aged about 40. She was a native of Morrisville, N. Y. She became a teacher in the femule seminary at Utiea. As a writer under the name of Fanny Forrester, she contributed in 1844 to the New York Weekly Mirror. At Philadelphia she became acquainted with Dr. Judson, who employed her to write his deceased wife's biography. In the subsequent conference he became convinced that she might supply the place of the departed; and he persuaded her to yield to his wishes. They were married in July, 1846, and proceeded to Maulmain, where she lived till his death. She was generally known by her pen-name of Fanny Forrester, and her writings were acceptable to the public. It was in July, 1846, that she embarked with her husband for India. Soon after his death in 1850 she returned to this country, and for the last two years of her life was in feeble health. Her mother died in 1855. She published Alderbrook, and memoirs of her husband. - Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

JUMPER, a distinguished chief of the Seminole Indians, died at New Orleans April 18, 1838.

KALB, BARON DE, major-general in the army of the United States, was a German by birth, and had long been in the French service. In the battle near Camden, Aug., 1780, he fell, after receiving eleven wounds in his vigorous exertions to prevent the defeat of the Americans. He died Aug. 19, aged 47, having served three years with high reputation. His last moments were spent in dictating a letter, which expressed his warm affection for the men and officers of his division. and his admiration of their firmness and courage in withstanding a superior force. An ornamental tree was planted at the head of his grave in the neighborhood of Camden, and congress resolved, that a monument should be erected to his memory at Annapolis with a very honorable inscription. - Gordon, III. 391, 443; Ramsay, It. 168; Warren, 11. 243; Marshall, IV. 184; Holmes.

KALM, Peter, a naturalist, was a Swede, and Bourdeaux. J. behind. 150 north, range of ; and the a. He had ervice, bavof the first missionaries , graduated at Andover sermon on lurman lan-widow of ed in Hamabout 40. Y. She bery nt Utica. y Forrester, ork Weekly e acquainted to write his subsequent it she might and he perey were marto Maulmain, was generally `orrester, and e public. It ked with her death in 1850 the last two health. Her l Alderbrook, cl. of Amer.

of the Semipril 18, 1838. in the army by birth, and In the batl, after receivexertions to ns. He died ree years with s were spent sed his warm f his division, s and courage An ornamenhis grave in congress reerected to his honorable in-; Ramsay, 11. 184; Holmes. a Swede, and ollect informa-

he travelled through Canada, New York, and Pennsylvania. He was afterwards professor of economy in Swedish Finland, where he died Nov. 16, 1779. In honor of him the beautiful Kalmia received its name. His travels in North America were published at Gottingen, 1754; the same in English, 3 vols., 1770; 2 vols., 8vo., 1772. He published also an account of the cataracts at Niagara, 1751.

KANT, JAMES, minister of Trumbull, Conn., died in 1840. He was settled in 1826.

KARNES, SARAH W., Mrs., died in New York in 1854, aged 117 years, being born in 1737.

KAST, PHILIP GODFRID, Dr., an eminent physician in Boston, died at Haverhill April 28, 1791, aged 87.

KAST, THOMAS, Dr., died in Boston June 20, 1820, aged 69. He was the son of Dr. Philip Godfrid Kast, and was graduated at Harvard in 1769. His profession he studied in Europe, and returned to Boston in 1774. From 1810 to 1817 he was also in Europe for his health. He had a well-deserved reputation in his profession, and was especially eminent in obstetric practice. For many years he had extensive practice as a physician and surgeon. - Thacher.

KAVANAGII, EDWARD, governor of Maine, died in Newcastle Jan. 20, 1844, aged 48. He had been a member of congress.

KEAN, ANDREW, Dr., died in Goochland, Va., in 1837, aged 62, one of the most eminent physicians of Va. KEARNEY, Francis, an eminent engraver, died at Perth Amboy, N. J., in 1837, aged 52.

KEARNEY, JAMES A., Dr., died in the Gulf of Mexico Aug. 27, 1847. He was fleet-surgeon of the home squadron, and had been nearly forty years a skilful officer of the navy.

KEARNEY, STEPHEN W., major-general, died at St. Louis Oct. 31, 1848, aged 54. He was thirty-six years in the army, and served in New Mexico and California.

KEARSLEY, John, a physician of Philadelphia, was a native of England and came to this country about 1711. As a member of the assembly, his speeches for the rights of the colony were so acceptable that he was sometimes carried home on the shoulders of the people. He died Jan. 11, 1772, aged 88. He contributed much for building Christ church, and the hospital of that church for widows he endowed with a valuable estate.

KEEP, JOHN, minister of Sheffield, Mass., died Sept. 3, 1785, aged 35, in the thirteenth year of his ministry. He succeeded Mr. Hubbard and was succeeded by Mr. Judson. Born in Longmeadow, probably a descendant of John Keep

tion concerning its botany. In two or three years | uated at Yale in 1769, and was ordained in 1772. Such were his talents and eloquence, that few preachers were so much commended. He was a candidate for the professorship of divinity at Yale, when Mr. Wales was chosen in 1782. His widow, daughter of Rev. P. Robbins, married J. Woodbridge. - Hist. of Berkshire.

> KEITH, JAMES, first minister of Bridgewater, Mass., was a native of Scotland, and educated at Aberdeen. He was ordained Feb. 18, 1664, and died July 23, 1719, aged 75. He had six sons and two daughters. His descendants in Bridgewater in 1810 were two hundred; and there were many more in other towns. His successors were Daniel Perkins, who died Sept. 29, 1782, aged 85, and John Reed. He was of singular sweetness of temper and eminent piety. In his preaching he did not use notes. He published a case of prayer, on the establishment of a new society; he and J. Danforth, two sermons, 1717. - Mather's Sermon.

KEITH, George, a Quaker, was born at Aberdeen, Scotland, and was well educated. He came in 1682 to East Jersey, where he was surveyor-general. In 1689 he taught a school in Philadelphia. After writing various treatises in favor of the Quakers, and visiting New England for the propagation of his sentiments, on his return a schism occurred between him and the Quakers in 1691. He drew away many as his followers, who called themselves Christian Quakers. At length he entirely deserted the society; in England he became an Episcopalian, and he officiated as an Episcopal missionary about a year in New York and Boston. Repairing again about 1706 to England, he was a rector at Edburton in Sussex, where he died. He had learning, talents, acuteness, and logical skill, but was irritable, overbearing, and virulent. He had nothing of moderation, meekness, and charity. In his day the contention among the Quakers was vehement. The following are the titles of some of his many publications: immediate revelation not ceased, 1668; the way to the city of God, 1678; the Presbyterian and Independent churches in New England brought to the test, 1689; this was answered in 1690 by the Boston ministers, in their Protestant religion maintained; the pretended antidote proved poison, in answer to the preceding, 1690; account of the great division amongst the Quakers in Pennsylvania, 1692; more divisions, 1693; against Sam. Jennings, 1694; a plain discovery of many gross cheats in pamphlets by the Quakers; account of his travels, 1699; the Deism of Wm. Penn and his brethren destructive of the Christian religion, 1699; account of a national church and the clergy; reasons for renouncing Quakerism, 1700; account of the Quakers' politics; the who died in Longmeadow in 1675, he was grad- magic of Quakerism, 1705; journal of travels theory of the longitude, 1709. - Proud, I. 363-376; Sewall's Hist. 504-664.

KEITH, Sir WILLIAM, governor of Pennsylvania, sustained this office from 1717 to 1726. He had been before surveyor-general of the customs in America. He died in England in poverty, Nov. 17, 1749, aged near 80. He was a desperate intriguer, courting always the favor of the people, and not sparing of delusive promises to individuals. At last he sunk into contempt. He published the history of the British plantations in America, part 1., containing the history of Virginia, 4to., 1738; collection of papers and tracts, 1749; on the subject of taxing the colonies, 1767.

KEITH, ISAAC STOCKTON, D. D., minister of Charleston, S. C., died Dec. 14, 1813, aged 58. He was born in Bucks county, Penn., Jan. 20, 1755, and graduated at Princeton in 1775. He was the minister of Alexandria in Virginia for about ten years till 1788, when he was settled at Charleston as the colleague of Dr. Hollingshead. There his ministry of twenty-five years was longer than that of any of his eleven predecessors. He died suddenly. His first wife was the daughter of Rev. Dr. Sproat; his second the daughter of Thomas Legare of Charleston; his third the daughter of Wm. Huxham. He was an eminent Christian and a faithful pastor. To his church he bequeathed 5000 dollars, and half that sum to the general assembly. To each of about twenty children, bearing his name or that of one of his wives, he bequeathed Scott's commentary. A collection of his sermons, addresses, etc., with an account of his life by Dr. Flinn, was published, 1816. - Panopl. XI., 441-448; Sprague's Annals.

KEITH, REUEL, D. D., died Sept. 3, 1842. He was an eminent scholar, teacher, and clergyman; the principal of the Episcopal theological seminary near Alexandria.

KELLOGG, Joseph, was taken prisoner at Deerfield in 1703. He acted as Indian interpreter at the treaty of Albany in 1754, and as such was to accompany Shirley to Oswego; but he died on his way at Scheneetady in 1756.

KELLOGG, GILES CROUCH, Dr., died at Hadley in 1793, aged about 60. He was adopted and educated by Dr. Crouch, a bachelor and physician of H., who came from England; he was graduated at Harvard in 1751, and had the eecentricity of Dr. C.

KELLOGG, EBENEZER, the first minister of Vernon, Conn., died Sept. 3, 1817, aged 80, in the fifty-fifth year of his ministry. He graduated at Yale in 1757.

KELLOGG, Bela, minister of Avon, Conn., died in 1831, aged 50. He was a graduate in 1800 in the sixth class of Williams college.

KELLOGG, ELIJAH, a minister in Portland, from New Hampshire to Caratuck, 1706; new in South Hadley, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1785, and was minister of the second church in Portland from 1788 to 1811, Mr. Pavson becoming his colleague in 1807; then of the chapel church from 1812 to 1821. He was afterward a missionary from the society for propagating the gospel to the Quoddy Indians, living in Perry Pleasant Point, near Eastport, Me. The Passamaquoddies, the Indian name, means pollock fish. Schoodak signifies burnt land; Sockum chief, Scepee river. Mr. K's. vocabulary of the Quoddy language is published in Hist. Coll., vol. III., 3d series. He published an oration on the death of Rev. T. Smith, 1795.

> KELLOGG, DAVID, D.D., died at Framingham, Mass., Aug. 13, 1843, aged 87. A native of Amherst, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1775, and was pastor from 1781 to 1830. His son is Judge Daniel K. of Vermont. He published a masonie sermon, 1796. - Sprague's Annuls.

> KELLOGG, EBENEZER, professor, died in Williamstown, Mass., Oct. 2, 1846, aged 57. He was born in Vernon, Conn.; graduated at Yale in 1810: in 1815 he was elected professor of Greek and Latin in Williams college, which office he usefully discharged.

> KELLY, WILLIAM, the first minister of Warner, N. II., died in 1813, aged 65. He was the son of John of Atkinson, who died in 1783, aged 84; graduated at Harvard in 1767; was ordained in 1772; and dismissed in 1801. His son, John, a councillor at law, graduated at Dartmouth in 1804. - Farmer.

> KELLY, Moses, colonel, the sheriff of Hillsborough county, N. H., died Aug. 2, 1824, aged 85. He was the brother of William. His father and three preceding ancestors up to John of Newbury bore the name of John. - Farmer.

> KELLY, John, minister of Hampstead, N. II., died in 1848, aged 85. Born in Amesbury, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1791, and was ordained in 1792. He was a descendant of John, a first settler of Newbury, who died in 1644. He published a sermon on the death of Dr. W. Cogswell, 1831. — Sprague's Annals.

> KEMP, JOHN, LL. D., professor of mathematies in Columbia college, N. Y., died in 1812, aged 49. Born in Scotland, he was educated at Marischall college, Aberdeen. Before the age of twenty-one he was chosen a member of the royal society of Edinburgh. He began his toils at Columbia college in 1785. He was appointed in 1785 to an additional professorship of geography, history, and chronology. In 1810 he made a journey to lake Erie, and satisfied himself that the project of a canal was feasible.

KEMPER, JAMES, president of Walnut Hills college, Ohio, died Aug. 29, 1834, aged 80.

KENDAL, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Wes-Maine, died there in March, 1842, aged 80. Born ton, Mass., died Feb. 16, 1815, aged 60. He d at Dartthe second 1, Mr. Paythen of the e was afterr propagatis, living in , Me. The means polland ; Sockcabulary of Hist. Coll. n oration on ramingham, tive of Amouth in 1775, His son is published a Annals.died in Wil-

57. He was Yale in 1810 ; f Greek and office he use-ister of War-He was the in 1783, aged was ordained lis son, John, Dartmouth in eriff of Hills-2, 1824, aged n. His father John of Newrmer.

pstead, N. II., esbury, Mass., 791, and was ndant of John, died in 1644. ath of Dr. W. als.

of mathemal in 1812, aged eated at Marisne age of twenof the royal n his toils at s appointed in of geography, 10 he made a d himself that

Walnut Hills aged 80. inister of Wesaged 60. He was a descendant of Francis K., who lived in 1753; his father, Elisha K., died in 1824 at the age of 99. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1782, and was ordained Nov. 5, 1785. His two wives were the daughters of Samuel Woodward, his predecessor in the ministry, and descendants of Richard Mather. He published at thanksgiving; at ordination of P. Nourse, 1802; at the election, 1804; seven sermons for the young, making 8th number of the Christian monitor, 1808; on the death of S. Dexter, 1810; century sermon, 1813. A volume of his sermons was published after his death.

KENDALL, SAMUEL, the first minister of New Salem, Mass., died Jan. 31, 1792, aged 84. Born in Woburn, he was a graduate of Harvard in 1731; was ordained in 1742; and dismissed in 1776. Joel Foster was his successor from 1779 to 1802.

KENDALL, DAVID, died in Augusta, N. Y., Feb. 19, 1853, aged 85. Born in Athol, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1794, and was minister of Hubbardston from 1802 to 1809. He removed to Augusta, Oneida county, where he was pastor till his death.

KENDRICK, J., captain, a navigator, lost his life on the northwest coast in 1800, or towards the close of the last century. Born in Martha's Vineyard, his residence was at Wareham.

KENDRICK, NATHANIEL, D. D., late president of Madison university, died at Hamilton, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1848.

KENDRICK, WILLIAM POOLE, minister in Bristol, Illinois, died in 1854 or 1855, aged 64. He was a native of Hollis, N. II.; a graduate of Harvard in 1816; a theological student at An-

KENNEDY, WILLIAM M., a Methodist minister, died in Newbury, S. C., in 1840, aged 56.

KENNEDY, JOHN II., minister at Cannonsburg, Penn., died in 1840, aged 38.

KENNEDY, E. PENDLETON, commodore in the navy, died at Norfolk March 29, 1844, aged 65, of paralysis. He was in command of the flag ship Pennsylvania.

KENNEDY, ANDREW, died in Indiana Dec. 31, 1847, aged 37. At the age of nincteen he could neither read nor write; yet became a lawyer, a member of the State senate, and of congress from 1841 to 1847.

KENNISON, JENNY, died at Brookfield, N. 11., Dec. 27, 1840, aged 110, the oldest person in New Hampshire.

KENNISTON, DAVID, died at Chicago Feb. 24, 1852, aged 117; the last of the party who destroyed the tea at Boston.

KENNISTON, JOHN, of Greenland, N. H., was killed by the Indians April 16, 1677, and his house burnt.

KENNON, BEVERLEY, commodore, was killed Woburn in 1647, was born at Sherburne July 11, by the explosion of the great gun on board the steamer Princeton, Feb. 28, 1814. He was chief of the bureau of construction, etc. He had a high reputation in the navy.

KENT, ELISHA, died at Philippi, N. Y., July 17, 1776, aged nearly 72, in the forty-second year of his ministry. A native of Suffield, Conn., the a sermon at the ordination of T. M. Harris, 1791; son of John Kent and Abigail Dudley, he was graduated at Yale in 1729. He was a minister of talents and influence, and of a lumble, Christian character. His son, Moss Kent, the father of Chancellor Kent, graduated at Yale in 1752, and died in 1794, aged about 62, a lawyer in Duchess county, N. Y.

KENT, Joseph, Dr., governor of Maryland, died near Bladensburg, Nov. 24, 1837, aged 58. He was a physician and farmer; many years a representative; governor from 1826 to 1829; and senator of the United States from 1833 to 1837.

KENT, WILLIAM A., colonel, died in Concord, N. II., April 7. 1840, aged 75, a member of the State senate and treasurer of the State. He was a man much respected for his virtues.

KENT, James, chancellor, died at New York Dec. 12, 1847, aged 84. He was born in 1763, in Duchess county; his father was Moss Kent, his grandfather was Elisha Kent. He graduated at Yale in 1781, studied law with E. Benson, and practised law in Poughkeepsie and New York. In 1797 he was recorder of the city; in 1798 a judge of the supreme court; in 1804 chief justice; in 1814 chancellor; and he retired from office July 31, 1823, at the age of sixty, as required by the constitution. His brother, Moss Kent, was a senator of the United States. His lectures as law professor of Columbia college were the basis of his commentaries. He was eminently a virtuous and good man, respected and beloved. He lived long, contented and presperous, and was eminently happy in domestic life. His commentaries on American law, published in 4 vols., in 1830, were by him enlarged. His important decisions in law and equity are preserved in the reports of Caines and Johnson. His biography, it is said, is preparing by his son, William Kent. - American Almanac, 1849;

Cyclopedia of Amer. Literature. KENTON, SIMON, general, died in Logan county, Ohio, April 29, 1836, aged 82. He was a companion of Col. Boone, in exploring the western country and commencing new settlements. Many were his hardships. Once he was tied to a stake by the Indians to be burned, but was rescued by a friend.

KER, NATHAN, Presbyterian minister at Goshen, N. Y., more than forty years, died Dec. 21, 1804, aged 68. Born in New Jersey, he graduated at Princeton in 1761. He published a sermon on the church and union, and on God's sovereignty in the American preacher, vols. III. from England to transport them thither for trial.

KERR, HAMILTON, major, was the son of Matthew of Philadelphia, who emigrated to the Muskingum in 1787. He was a bold hunter on the frontiers, as related by Hildreth. His descendants are many.

KERR, ROBERT, a minister of the Scotch Presbyterian church, died at Savannah in June, 1805, having been a preacher thirty-two years.

KERR, Joseph, D. D., pastor of the Associate Reformed church at Pittsburg, died in 1829.

KETELTAS, ABRAHAM, minister of Jamaica, L. I., died Sept. 30, 1798, aged 66. He was the son of a minister of the same name; was graduated at Yale college in 1752; and was settled at first the minister of Elizabeth. He preached fluently in Dutch and French. In 1777 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of New York. His wife, the daughter of William Smith, a distinguished man, died in 1815, aged 84. He published a sermon on extortion, 1778, and other occasional discourses.

KEY, PHILIP BARTON, a member of congress from Maryland, died at Georgetown July 28, 1815, aged 50. His eloquent resistance to the restrictive system gave him celebrity.

KEY, FRANCIS S., district attorney of the United States, died at Baltimore Jan. 11, 1843, aged 63. Born in Frederick county, Maryland, his father was John Ross Key, an officer of the Revolutionary army. He was educated at St. John's college, Annapolis. Having studied law with his uncle Philip, he lived in Fredericktown and Washington. He was a brother-in-law of Chief Justice Tancy. His poems were published in New York in 1856. His star-spangled banner, a song, was written on an occasion of deep interest, with the inspiration of patriotism and of poetry. — Cyclopedia of American Literature.

KEYES, ABRAHAM J., a Jew, pastor of the Hebrew congregation, Philadelphia, died Oct. 18, 1828, aged 47.

KEYS, THOMAS, a Methodist minister, died in Jefferson county, Virginia, in 1828, aged 57.

KIDD, WILLIAM, a pirate, was the commander of a vessel which sailed from New York to London, and in London was recommended by Mr. Livingston of New York as a suitable commander of a vessel, which Lord Rumney and others had fitted out against the pirates of the East Indies, at an expense of 6000 pounds. Kidd first sailed to New York, where he had a family; on his arrival in India he committed many daring acts of piracy. In his infatuation he came from Madagascar to Boston. July 3, 1699, he was summoned before Governor Bellamont, and ordered to draw up a narrative of his proceedings. But not doing this, he was arrested July 6th, with several of his men. A man-of-war was sent his knowledge, and especially his skill in survey-

They were condemned and executed. Bradish, who was executed at the same time, had run away with the ship Adventure on a voyage to India, and arrived in March, 1699, at the east of Long Island, where he had deposited in the care of a gentleman his money, rings, and jewels. Multitudes of weak-minded men have dug along the American coast in search of Kidd's money, imagining that he had concealed gold and silver on the shores. Such dupes of covetonsness would do well to dig the soil.

KIDDER, JOSEPH, minister of Dunstable, N. H.. died in 1818, aged 76. Born in Billerica, he graduated at Yale in 1764; was ordained in 1767; was dismissed in 1796, but continued paster of the church till his death.

KILBORN, JONATHAN, died in Colchester, Conn., in 1785, aged 78. He was a very ingenions mechanic, and is said to have been the inventor of the iron screw.

KILBURN, John, a brave man, the first settler in 1749 of Walpole, N. H., died April 8, 1789, aged 84. His son, John, died at Shrewsbury, Vt., in 1822, aged also 84. Kilburn's garrison was attacked by about two hundred Indians in 1755. His force consisted of himself and wife and daughter, his son John, and John Peak and his son. Philip, the Indian chief, eried out from behind a tree, "Old John, young John, I know you, come out here; me give you good quarter."-" Begone, or we'll quarter you!" was the reply. The incessant firing lasted till night, the females casting

KILLAM, REBECCA, died at Hillsborough, N. H., in Sept., 1856, aged 103 years wanting nine days. She was the widow of Daniel K., a soldier under Washington near Boston.

KILLEN, WILLIAM, chancellor of the State of Delaware, died at Dover Oct. 3, 1805, aged 83. He was a native of Ireland. Early in life, before he had attained the age of manhood, he arrived in America, having an excellent education in the English language. After passing through a variety of scenes, incidental to strangers, he settled himself in the family of Samuel Dickinson, the father of John Dickinson of Wilmington. There he devoted himself most assiduously to the acquisition of a competent knowledge of the Greek and Latin languages, under the direction of Jacob Orr, who was engaged in teaching the sons of Mr. Dickinson, and some other young gentlemen. The diligence and modesty of Mr. Killen made him a favorite of the whole family, and particularly of his instructor. His unwearied attention was rewarded by a rapid proficiency in his studies. After holding the office of county surveyor for some years, he commenced the study of the law. In the courts of Delaware her for trial.

1. Bradish, ad run away
o India, and st of Long
the care of a rels. Multig along the money, immod silver on usness would stable, N. H., Billerica, he ned in 1767; ed pastor of Colchester, a very ingebeen the inne first settler pril 8, 1789, Shrewsbury, garrison was ians in 1755. fe and daughand his son. om behind a ow you, come "—"Begone, ply. The inpenales casting lsborough, N.

wanting nine
l K., a soldier of the State 3, 1805, aged Early in life. manhood, he ellent educa-After passing otal to stranily of Samuel kinson of Wil-If most assidetent knowlguages, under s engaged in on, and some liligence and favorite of the his instructor. led by a rapid ding the office ne commenced s of Delaware kill in surveyrendered him an able assistant in suits for land, and in such trials the most eminent men of his day were always pleased to associate with him as their colleague. His practice soon became extensive. His moderation, his modesty, and his punctuality in business, aided by his abilities, led him to wealth and to all the honors of his country. For many years before the Revolution he was selected by his fellow citizens to represent them in the assembly of Delawarc. At the commencement of the contest with Great Britain he took a deeided and active part in favor of American liberty. Soon after the declaration of independence he was appointed chief justice of the supreme court of the State of Delaware, which office he held till he was promoted to that of chancellor in 1793. He resigned his seat in the court of chancery in 1801. In all the variety of public business, in which he was engaged, he exhibited the strictest integrity. As a legislator he was wise and attentive to the interests of his constituents, and as a judge he was learned, patient, and impartial. The same uprightness, which marked his public character, was also conspicuous in all the relations of private life. - New York Spectator, Oct. 22, 1805.

KILPATRICK, JOSEPH D., minister in Rutherford co., N. C., died in 1829.

KIMBALL, Thomas, of Ipswich, one of the first settlers of Bradford, Mass., was killed by the Indians May 3, 1670; and his wife and five children were carried prisoners into the wilderness, but returned in a few weeks.— Farmer.

KIMBALL, DANIEL, founder of Union academy in Plainfield, N. H., died in March, 1817, aged 63. He gave the academy between 20 and 30,000 dollars.

KIMBALL, James L., died in 1833, aged 34. A native of Lyndon, Vt., and a graduate of Dartmouth in 1824, he was secretary of the American tract society, Boston.

KIMBALL, Joseph Horace, died at Pembroke, N. H., April 11, 1838. He had been editor of the Herald of Freedom at Concord. He and J. A. Thome visited the West Indies and published Emancipation in the West Indies, a six months' tour, etc.

KIMBALL, INCREASE, the inventor of the first machine for making cut nails, died at Hanover, N. II., Sept. 16, 1856, aged 80. He was a member of the church. At the age of thirty he gave signs of derangement. In the controversy between the college and the university, he esponsed the side of the latter, which was annulled by decision of the supreme court. In his displeasure he took a vow never to shave. So he lived with a long white beard, and, regarding himself as a Jew, he would not cat pork, wearing a long white most popular speaker in the house, opposed it, The legislature appointed him in 1784 a delegate a century such a change came over the world that to congress, then in Rhode Island. After studying law with Mr. Parsons, he was admitted to the bar in 1780 at Newburyport, by which town he was soon afterwards chosen a representative in the legislature. It being recommended by congress to the States about 1784 to grant a 5 per cent impost to the general government, a distinction arose between the federal and the State interests. In the debate which followed, Mr. King supported the grant, and prevailed, and James Sullivan, the most opposed it. The legislature appointed him in 1784 a delegate to congress, then in session at Trenton, but soon

ing and in various branches of the mathematics, he saw many men, who used to regard his long rendered him an able assistant in suits for land, beard as a proof of insanity, themselves wearing and in such trials the most eminent men of his day were always pleased to associate with him as their colleague. His practice soon became extention, patented in 1866, was of no advantage to him, as he alond sell out his right.

KINCAID, MARY, Mrs., died in Monroe co., Va., Nov. 13, 1838, aged 100.

KING, ANDREW, died in Orange co., N. Y., Nov., 1815, aged 69. He had been there a faithful minister for forty years.

KING, WALTIR, minister of Williamstown, Mass., died Dec. 1, 1815, aged 57. Born at Wilbreham, he graduated at Yale in 1782, and was a faithful pastor of the second church in Norwich, Conn., from 1787 for twenty-four years, when he was dismissed without any impeachment of his character. He was less than three years at Williamstown, in consequence of apoplexy, which seized him in the pulpit as he was preaching a lecture. He was a solemn preacher and a man of prayer. He published a sermon at ordination of Daniel Hall, 1797; on taking leave of his people. — Panoplist, XII. p. 141; Sprayue's Annals.

KING, CYRUS, major-general, died at Saco, Me., April 25, 1817, aged 44. The son of Richard, he was born at Scarborough. He was the private sceretary of his brother Rufus, in London, then studied law in Portland. In 1812 he was a member of congress, and his speeches exhibited a splendor of language and a profusion of imagery, in opposing the increase of taxes and on the bill for filling the ranks of the army in 1814.

KING, RUFUS, minister of the United States to Great Britain, died April 29, 1827, aged 72. He was the eldest son of Richard King, a merchant of Scarborough, Me., and was born in 1755. From Dummer academy at Byfield he went to Harvard college, about the time of the death of his father. His studies had been interrupted at the beginning of the war by the occupation of the college buildings as barracks, but were resumed at Concord. He graduated in 1777, with reputation for classical attainments and particularly for his powers of oratory, to the culture of which he had applied himself with great zeal. In 1778 he was an aid to Sullivan in an expedition agaiust the British in Rhode Island. After studying law with Mr. Parsons, he was admitted to the bar in 1780 at Newburyport, by which town he was soon afterwards chosen a representative in the legislature. It being recommended by congress to the States about 1784 to grant a 5 per cent impost to the general government, a distinction arose between the federal and the State interests. In the debate which followed, Mr. King supported the grant, and prevailed, and James Sullivan, the most popular speaker in the house, opposed it. The legislature appointed him in 1784 a delegate adjourned to New York, in which hody he introduced, March 1785, a resolution, prohibiting slavery in the territory northwest of the Ohio. Of the convention in 1787 to form the present constitution of the United States he was an efficient member, as he was also of the Massachusetts convention for considering that constitution.

Having relinquished his profession in 1784, and in 1786 having married the daughter of John Alsop, an opulent merchant of New York, he removed in 1788 to that city. In 1789 he and Gen. Schuyler were elected senators under the constitution of the United States. During the violent discussions respecting the British treaty in 1794, he co-operated with his friend, Gen. Hamilton, in its defence. Of the papers concerning this treaty, with the signature of Camillus, usually ascribed to Hamilton, all the numbers, except the first ten, were written by Mr. King, displaying much acquaintance with the laws of different nations on the subjects of navigation and trade. When a petition was presented against allowing Mr. Gallatin to take his seat as senator, in consequence of the law of naturalization, a warm debate arose; the right to the sent was maintained by Taylor, Monroe, and Burr, and opposed successfully by Ellsworth, Strong, and King. On this occasion Mr. King displayed great talents as an orator. Being re-elected to the senate, he was nominated by Washington in 1796 minister plenipotentiary to Great Britain. At the English court he remained during the administration of Mr. Adams, and two years of that of Mr. Jefferson, with great advantage to his country. His dignity, mildness, and firmness promoted the adjustment of several difficult claims. The convention as to boundaries was, however, rejected by Mr. Jefferson, from misapprehension, perhaps, as to its effect on the boundary of Louisiana, which had been purchased. Had this convention been adopted, the northeastern boundary, which has occasioned much uneasiness, would have been settled by three commissioners, two appointed by the parties, and the third by the two. Mr. King made great efforts to induce the British to renounce the practice of impressing American scamen. After his return in 1803 he lived in retircment until the war of 1812, when he came forward in support of his country. In consequence of the patriotic spirit which he manifested, the democratic legislature of New York appointed him in 1813 a senator of the United States. His speech concerning the conduct of the enemy in the destruction of the city of Washington, gained him great honor. In 1816 he was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of governor of New York. Re-elected to the senate in 1820, he brought forward the important law, requiring cash payments upon sales of the public lands. In the discussions relating to the admission of Missouri he would not admit the contagious character of

into the union, he ends wored to extend to that State the prohibition of davery, which had been wisely imposed upon the northwest territory, The last proposition which he brought forward was to devote the proceeds of the public territory to the removal of slaves and free persons of color to some country beyond the limits of the United States.

On retiring from the senate in 1825 he was induced by Mr. Adams to proceed again as a minister to the British court, in the hope of adjusting several disputed questions. But an overruling Providence did not permit him to accomplish the objects which he had in view. During his voyage he was attacked by a disease, often the consequence of a voyage, which prevented him from entering upon the active discharge of his duties. After remaining abroad a year without amendment, he returned to die in his native land and in the bosom of his family. He died at Jamaica Long Island, in a composed and resigned state of mind. In person Mr. King was above the common size, and somewhat athletic, with a countenance manly and bespeaking high intelligence. His conversation and writings were remarkable for conciseness and torce.

KING, FREDERIC GORE, M. D., died at New York in 1829, aged 27. The youngest son of Rufus King, he graduated at Harvard in 1821, and studied medicine, especially anatomy, in New York and in France. He gave lectures at the athenuum, on phrenology and on the structure of the human voice. To the national academy of design he lectured on anatomy. He was surgeon in the New York hospital, and he gave lectures on the preparations in the museum. - Dr. Williams' Am. Med. Biog.

KING, Jonas, died in Hawley, Mass., in 1832, and Abigail, his widow, died in 1839, aged 76. These persons were happy in being the parents of Jonas King, who has been for many years, and is still, the distinguished American missionary at Athens in Greece.

KING, EDWARD, general, died at Cincinnati Feb. 6, 1836; a distinguished lawyer, formerly speaker of the house in Ohio.

KING, ELISHA W., a distinguished lawyer of New York, died at Brooklyn Dec. 3, 1836, aged KING, DAVID, M. D., a physician in Newport, R. I., died Nov. 14, 1836, aged 62. Born at Raynham, Mass., he graduated at Brown university in 1796, and studied physic with Dr. Thacher, of Plymouth, settling at N. in 1799. The medical library of Dr. Center came opportunely into his possession. With great independence he adopted Jenner's practice of inoculation. He was surgeon to the U.S. troops at fort Wolcott. During the prevalence of the yellow fever in 1819, nd to that had been t territory. ght forward die territory ous of color the United

5 he was inn as a minof adjusting overruling omplish the g his voyage the consed him from his duties. out amendland and in at Jamaica

signed state

above the with a coun-

intelligence.

remarkable lied at New gest son of ard in 1821. omy, in New tures at the structure of academy of was surgeon ave lectures - Dr. Wil-ss., in 1832, 39, aged 76. the parents y years, and nissionary at t Cincinnati

er, formerly d lawyer of

, 1836, aged in Newport,

2. Born at rown univer-Dr. Thacher.

The medirtunely into endence he on. He was ort Wolcott. ever in 1819, character of the disease, but ascribed its prevalence to a general cause. He was a good physician, and president of the Rhode Island medical society. -S. W. Williams' Am. Med. Biog.

KING, WILLIAM, Dr., died in Boston in 1839, aged 78. He was the inventor of lightning rods, having many points along the rod. It is said that he saw at the south a company of soldiers, whose bayonets, in a storm, were all tipped with the electric flame, which led him to his invention.

KING, Asa, died in Westminster, Conn., Dec. 2, 1849, aged 78. Born in Mansfield, he was a minister forty-six years; bine years at Pomfret, twenty years at North Killingworth. His labors were remarkably effectual and successful.

KING, WILLIAM, governor, died at Path, Me., June 17, 1852, aged 84. liorn in Scurborough, a brother of Rufus King, he engaged in commerce at Bath. He was the first governor of Maine; he was also commissioner on the Spanish claims, and collector of the port of Buth.

KING, WILLIAM R., vice-president of the United States, died in Selma, or Cahawba, Ala., April 18, 1853, aged 68. Horn in North Carolina, he was representative and senator nineteen years; minister to France from 1845 to 1849; for many years president of the senate. He was a man of probity, industry, and of a gentlemanly

KING, JAMES G., son of Rufus King, died at Highwood, N. J., Oct. 4, 1853, aged 62. He was an eminent banker in New York, the brother of Charles King, president of Columbia college. -Lives of American Merchants.

KINGSBERRY, Sanford, judge, died in Gardiner, Me., in 1849, aged 66. Born in Claremont, N.H., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1801, and settled as a lawyer in G. in 1804. He was a judge of the court of common pleas, and a member of the State senate.

KINGSBURY, SAMUEL, minister of Edgartown, Martha's Vineyard, died in 1778. He graduated at Harvard in 1759, and was ordained in 1761. His predecessors were T. Mayhew, J. Dunham, S. Wiswall, and J. Newman. His suceessor was J. Thaxter.

KINGSBURY, JOEL, colonel, died at Franklin, Mo., July 1, 1837, aged 82. A native of Connecticut, he was an officer in the service of the United States forty-two years.

KINGSBURY, Judge, died at Newburg, Ohio, Dec. 12, 1847. He was an early settler on the Reserve, in 1796, and was appointed territorial judge by Gov. St. Clair.

and ecclesiastical history in Yale college, died Aug. 31, 1852, aged 73 years. He was con- a daughter of Col. Simon Larned, of Pittsfield. nected with the college in the department of clascentury. He published an eulogy on Prof. Fisher, Kebeck, or Quebee, a great market for beavers and 1822; sketc of history of ale college Changterly Register, vol. VIII.

KINKELDON, ADAM, a Cuthell died at New Orleans in 1837. He was philanthropist, the founder of an association the relief of male orphans.

KINNARD, George L., member of CH 1088 from Indiana, died at Cincinnati Nov. 26, 1856, in consequence of the explosion of the steamboat Flora, on the Ohio, Nov. 16th.

KINNE, AARON, minister of Groton, Coun., died July 9, 1824, aged 79. He was born at Newent in Norwich, now Lisbon, was graduated at Yale college in 1765, and was ordained Oct., 1770. The massacre of Ledyard and others of his people, at fort Griswold, diminished his means of support. At last, in 1798, he was dismissed. In 1800 he resided in Winsted, in 1803 at Egremont, Mass., and in 1805 he removed to Alford. He was occasionally employed by the Berkshire missionary society. He died at Talmadge, Ohio, at the house of his son-in-law, Dr. Wright, five days after his arrival there. He was a faithful preacher. He published a work on the sonship of Christ; a display of Scripture prophecies, 1813; an explanation of the types, prophecies, revelation, etc., 8vo., 1814.

KINNEY, HENRY, missionary to the Sandwich Islands, died Sept. 24, 1854. He sailed with his wife in 1817, and was stationed at Kau on Hawaii. Ill health induced him in 1854 to repair to California, and he died at Sonora, "the mountain city," in great peace. His Infidel doctor said: "None but a Christian can die in that KINSEY, JAMES, LL. D., chief justice of New Jersey, died at Burlington Jan. 4, 1802, aged 69. He had been a member of congress before the adoption of the present constitution.

KIRBY, EPHRAIM, first judge of the district court of the United States at New Orleans, died at fort Stoddert, Oct. 20, 1804. He had sustained this office but a short time. He had been for a number of years an inhabitant of Litchfield in Connecticut, and was once a candidate for governor in that State. He published reports of cases adjudged in the supreme court of the State of Connecticut from 1785 to May, 1788, with some determinations in the supreme court of errors, Litchfield, 8vo., 1789.

KIRBY, REYNOLD M., major in the army of the United States, son of the preceding, died at fort Sullivan, in Eastport, Oct. 7, 1842, aged 52. He entered the army in 1813, and on the Niagara KINGSLEY, JAMES L., professor of languages was aid to Gen. Ripley, and received him in his arms as he fell wounded. His wife, Harriet, was

KIRK, DAVID, Sir, admiral, "a great trucksical literature, with high reputation, for half a master," captured and garrisoned, in 1629, fort otters. As late as 1645 he was on the coast of Newfoundland.

KIRKLAND, DANIEL, or Kirtland, as the name was formerly written, minister of Newent, the third society of Norwich, or Lisbon, Conn., died in May, 1773, aged 72. He was of Scotch descent from his grandfather, John, of Saybrook, In 1635, who came from London. His father had also the name of John; and, as he had nine other children, his descendants may have been numerous. Born in Saybrook, he graduated at Yale in 1720, and in 1723 was ordained at Newent, the first pastor of the third church then in Norwich. After thirty years he became deranged, and removed to Groton, but returned to Newent, where he died. His wife was a Miss Perkins, of Windsor, He had two sons, Daniel and Samuel. He was a worthy minister, of fine talents, a scholar, of ready wit and an amiable temper. -Life of S. Kirkland, by Lothrop; Miss Caulkins' History of Norwich.

KIRKLAND, SAMUEL, a missionary among the Indians, died March 28, 1808, aged 66. He was the son of Daniel K., minister of Norwich. After enjoying for some time the advantages of Wheelock's school, he finished his education at the college in New Jersey, where he was gradnated in 1765. While at school he had learned the language of the Mohawks, and he commenced a journey to the Seneca Indians, in order to nequire their language, Nov. 20, 1764, and did not return till May, 1766. June 19th, he was ordained at Lebanon as a missionary to the Indians. He removed his wife to Oncida eastle in 1769. She was Jerusha Bingham, whose mother was a sister of President E. Wheelock, in whose family she long lived. In the spring he went to the house of his friend, Gen. Herkimer, at Little Falls, and there his twin children were born Aug. 17, 1770, of whom one was President Kirkland. His daughter Jerusha married John H. Lothrop, of Utien, the father of Rev. S. K. Lothrop, of Boston. About 1772 he removed to Connecticut, and afterwards lived for a time at Stockbridge. For more than forty years his attention was directed to the Oneida tribe in New York, and he died at Clinton in that State, the place of his residence, in the neighborhoad of Oneida. Dr. Norton preached a sermon at his funeral. - Wheelock's Narratives; Panoplist, 111. 536; Life by Lothrop , Sparks' Library of American Biography; Wheelock's Life; Sprague's Annals. KIRKLAND, JOHN THORNTON, D. D., LL. D., president of Harvard university, died in Boston April 26, 1840, aged 69. He bears the name of Mr. Thornton of London, a correspondent of President Wheelock, and a benefactor of Moor's Indian school. He was the son of the preceding, a descendant on the maternal side from Miles man Flats, N. Y., Aug. 17, 1770; George Whitefield was his twin brother. His mother was then on her return to New England after residing at Oneida. The Indians called the child John Ahganowiska, or Fair Face. Having prepared for college at Andover, he was graduated in 1789, and ordained pastor in Summer street, Boston, in 1794. In 1810 he was elected President of Harvard college, as the successor of President Webber; which office he resigned, after eighteen years, in 1828. He married in 1827 Elizabeth. the daughter of George Cabot. The next year he embarked for Europe, and was absent three or four years. His widow died in 1852. He was eminent as a scholar and writer, and the delight of his associates and friends. He published artillery election sermon, 1795; on the death of Belknap, 1798; of Washington, 1860; at a fast; oration before Phi Beta Kappa society, 1798; at ordination of J. Pipon, 1800; address to fire society, 1801; Dudleian lecture, 1813; before society for suppressing intemperance, 1814; election sermon, 1816; life of Fisher Ames, 8vo., 1809; life of Com. Preble, 8vo.; life of Gen. Lincoln in historical collections, vol. III., 2d series; on the death of George Cabot, 1823; in commemoration of Adams and Jefferson, in memoirs of American academy. Other papers of his are in the historical collections.

KIRKLAND, JOSEPH, first mayor of Utica. died Jan. 26, 1844, aged 73. Born in Lisbon, a part of Norwich, Conn., he graduated in 1799. For nearly fifty years he was a prominent man in Oncida county.

KIRKLAND, WILLIAM, died in New York about 1817. He had been a teacher in Hamilton college. His wife was Caroline M. Stansbury, the daughter of a bookseller in New York; she is known by her various writings. They lived several years in Geneva, Switzerland; then two years at Detroit. He published a series of letters from abroad. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

KIRKPATRICK, ALEXANDER, a minister in Laurens district, S. C., died Dec. 30, 1832.

KIRKPATRICK, DAVID, captain, died at Delaware City in 1838, aged 86. He served in the Revolutionary war, in the battles of Monmouth. Germantown, Trenton, Cowpens, and others.

KIRTLAND, TURHAND, died in Poland, Ohio, Aug. 16, 1844, aged 89. Horn in Wallingford, Conn., he visited Ohio in 1798, and was the agent of the Connecticut land company, selling extensive tracts to new settlers, and sustaining various public offices with eredit.

KISSAM, RICHARD S., M. D., a distinguished surgeon, died in Oct., 1822, aged 58. He was the son of Benj. K., a lawyer, and was born in New York in 1763. At Edinburgh he studied medicine five years. Returning to New York in Standish. He was born at Gen. Herkimer's, Ger- 1791, he continued in the practice about thirty rge Whiter was then residing at hild John r prepared ed in 1789, et, Boston, resident of President er eighteen Elizabeth, next year sent three 2. He was the delight lished artil-

ath of Bel-

nt a fast :

y, 1798; at

ess to fire

13: before

1814; elec-

Ames, Svo.,

te of Gen.

., 2d series ; 3; in comin memoirs s of his are or of Utica, n Lisbon, a d in 1799.

ient man in

New York n Hamilton Stansbury, ork ; she is y lived sevthen two ies of letters minister in 1832. died at Delrved in the Monmouth, others. oland, Ohio, Vallingford, as the agent ning various istinguished 8. He was vas born in he studied ew York in about thirty lling exten-

lithotomist only three cases were fatal. - Thacher.

KISSAM, BENJAMIN P., a surgeon in the United States Navy, died at Portsmouth in Oct., 1828. He had been a practitioner in New York.

KITTREDGE, Joun, the ancestor of all in this country who bear the name, died in Billerica Oct. 18, 1670. He was a farmer, who came from England. His sons were John, James, Daniel, Jonathan, and Benoni. John, who had six sons, was called doctor; a title borne by many of the descendants of the common ancestor. -Farmer.

KITTREDGE, THOMAS, M. D., a physician, died at Andover in Oct., 1818, aged 72. He was a descendant of John K., whose son, John, was a physician. Horn at Andover in July, 1746, he studied with Dr. Sawyer of Newburyport. At the beginning of the Revolution he was a surgeon in the army. After being an eminent physician and surgeon about fifty years, and being often a member of the legislature, he died of the ungina pectoris. In his polities he was a strenu-ous republican. It were not an easy task to reckon up all the physicians in New England, who have had the name of Kittredge. - Thacher.

KITTREDGE, BENJAMIN, Dr., died at Tewksbury, Mass., Jan. 18, 1822, aged 81.

KITTREDGE, OLIVER, Dr., died at Salem in Jan., 1823, aged 38. A native of Brookfield, he was the son of Dr. Jacob K., and brother of Dr. Benjamin K., of Salem, both deceased.

KITTREDGE, Francis, Dr., died at Woburn, Mass., in 1828, aged 46.

KITTREDGE, BENJAMIN, died at Little Rock, Ark., in 1839, aged 45. He removed from Salem in 1837.

KITTREDGE, INGALLS, Dr., died in Beverly June 17, 1856, aged 86.

KITTS, THOMAS J., a Baptist minister at Philadelphia, died in 1838, aged 48.

KNAPP, Francis, a poet, was educated at Oxford, and in this country lived at Watertown. In 1717 he wrote a poetical address, congratulating Pope on his Windsor forest, in the best style, then exhibited in our country.

KNAPP, JOSHUA, minister in Winchester, Conn., died in 1816, aged about 67. A graduate of Yale, he was ordained in 1772, and dismissed in 1789.

KNAPP, SAMUEL L., LL. D., died at Hopkinton, Mass., July 8, 1838, aged 53. He was born in Newburyport in 1784; was graduated at Dartmouth in 1804; and lived in Boston and New York, and was a lawyer and an author. In 1812 he commanded a regiment of militia. In 1824 travels of Ali Bey, 1818; sketches of lawyers, was a soldier of the Revolution. statesmen, etc.; lectures on American literature,

He was one of the surgeons of the New | 1820; sketches of public characters, 1830; the York hospital. Of sixty-five operations as a bachelor and other tales, 1836; advice in the pursuits of literature 1 sketches of Americans, 1833; female biography.

KNAPP, Josian, died in Boston in 1843, aged 90; an honorable man of business, cheerful, retaining all his faculties. To him the south part of Hoston was much indebted for various improvements.

KNAPP, HORTON O., missionary at the Sandwich Islands, died at Honolulu in March, 1845. Born at Greenwich, Conn., In 1813, he embarked in 1836. He had been a school teacher since 1837. His wife was Charlotte Close of Greenwich. He resided at Waimen and Knilua. Great peace attended his death; "dying was but going home," He gave earnest exhortations and sent dying messages of truth and love.

KNAPP, ISAAC, minister of Westfield, died July 6, 1847, aged 72. A native of Norfolk, Conn., and graduate of Williams college in 1800, he was ordained the fifth minister of W., in 1803; his predecessors were E. Taylor, N. Hull, J. Ballantine, and N. Atwater. 11is successor was E. Davis. He published a sermon on the death of Gen. W. Shepard, 1818.

KNAPP, Uzat., died at Newburg Jan. 16, 1856, aged 95, the last of Washington's life guard.

KNEELAND, WILLIAM, a physician of Cambridge, died in 1788, aged 56. He was born in Boston; graduated at Harvard college in 1744; and was a tutor about nine years. For many years he was register of probate. He was a man of integrity and religion. The impressions made upon his mind by the instructions of his pious parents were never obliterated. - Thacher.

KNICKERBACKER, HARMAN, judge, died in Schaghticoke, or Williamsburg, N. Y., in 1855, aged 75. In 1810-13 he was a member of congress. He was the original of Irving's Diedrich, " a fellow of infinite mirth."

KNIGHT, WILLIAM, the first minister at Topsfield, Mass., died about 1665, Farmer says 1655. He was admitted a freeman in 1638, and began to preach in 1641.

KNIGHT, JOHN M., D. D., died at Chambersburg, Pa., in 1823, aged 70.

KNIGHT, DEBORAH, Mrs., died at Sumner, Me., June 22, 1839, aged 104.

KNIGHT, HENRY C., a graduate of Brown university in 1812, died in early life; he was the brother of Frederick, and was born in Newburyport. He published poems, 1809; another volume of poems, the broken harp, at Philadelphia, 1815; a third colléction in 2 vols., Boston, 1821. - Cycl. of American Literature.

KNIGHT, JONATHAN, a faithful minister, died he edited the Boston Gazette. He published the lia Cranston, R. I., Feb. 15, 1842, aged 82. He

KNIGHT, NATHANIEL, captain, died in Salem

the old Jersey prison-ship at New York. He lived in a house built by his great-grandfather.

KNIGHT, CALEB, minister of Washington, Mass., died in 1854, aged 83. Born in Lisbon, Conn., he graduated at Williams college in 1800; was ordained at Hinsdale in 1802; was dismissed in 1816, and settled in Washington in 1826.

KNIGHT, FREDERICK, died at Rowley, Mass., in 1849, aged 58. He studied law, and was a teacher for a short time. He found friends, with whom he lived, enjoying his simple tastes. He wrote various poetical pieces. A memorial of him was published at Boston, entitled Thorn cottage, or the poet's home. - Cycl. of American Literature.

KNIGHT, NEHEMIAH R., governor of Rhode Island, died at Providence April 18, 1854, aged 73. He was governor 1817-21, and senator of the United States 1821-41.

KNOLLYS, HANSERD, an early preacher at Dover, N. II., and at Long Island, after being an Episcopal minister some years, came to this country in 1638. For his abuse of the Massachusetts government he made a confession in Boston. About 1612 he returned to England, and formed a Baptist church in Loudon, of which he was many years the minister. He died Sept. 19, 1691, aged 93. He published rudiments of the Hebrew grammar, 1648.

KNOWER, BENJAMIN, died at Watervliet, as a merchant.

KNOWLES, JOHN, minister of Watertown, Mass., died April 10, 1685, probably between 80 and 90 years of age. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Cambridge, and was chosen fellow of Catherine Hall, in 1625, in which station he was a respected and successful tutor. He came to New England in 1639; was ordained colleague with George Phillips Dec. 9, 1640; and went as a missionary to Virginia, with Mr. Thompson and Mr. James in 1642. He arrived about Jan. 1, 1643, having been invited by gentlemen of Virginia, who were anxious to hear the gospel. Gov. Berkeley at first received these missionaries courteously; but when he found they were opposed to the common prayer, surplice, etc., he was determined to silence them. In about two months an act was passed, March 2, 1643, prohibiting any minister from preaching in the colony, unless he subscribed an agreement to conform to the church of England. The governor and council were to silence offenders and compel them to leave the country. Without question this act was aimed at the New England ministers, and Virginia had as good right to pass it, as Massachusetts to make enactments against the Quakers for their religion. It was clearly an act of bigotry and persecution.

Jan. 20, 1845, aged 84. He was imprisoned in In consequence of this act Mr. Knowles returned to Watertown in June, 1643. Probably Mr. James remained longer, as he was for some time in Maryland. Cotton Mather is mistaken in supposing the Indian massacre occurred at the time Mr. Knowles left Virginia, for the date of the massacre was April 18, 1644. In 1650 Mr. K. returned to England, and was a preacher in the cathedral of Bristol. After being silenced in 1662 he preached, at the hazard of imprisonment. in London, where he was useful during the plague in 1665. - Calamy.

KNOWLES, JAMES DAVIS, died at Newton of the small pox May 9, 1838, aged 39. He was professor of rhetoric, etc., in N. theological seminary. He was born in Providence; became a Baptist minister in Boston in 1825, and removed to Newton in 1832. He conducted the Christian review, and wrote the memnirs of Mrs. Judson, 1829; and the memoir of Roger Williams, 1834. He published a sermor on spirituous liquors, 1829; address to Newton theological institution, KNOWLES, D., a Freewill Baptist minister, died at Guilford, N. II., in 1840, aged 60.

KNOX, JOHN, a captain in the British army, published an historical journal of the campaigns in North America, for 1757-1760, 2 vols., 4to., London, 1769.

KNOX, HENRY, a major-general in the army of the United States, died in Thomaston, Me., N. Y., Aug. 23, 1839, aged 64. He lived forty Oct. 25, 1806, aged 50. He was born in Boston years in Albany, eminent first as a mechanic, then July 25, 1750. Before hostilities between this country and Great Britain in the Revolutionary war commenced, he discovered an uncommon zeal in the cause of liberty. Being placed at the head of an independent company in Boston, he exhibited in this station a skill in discipline, which presaged his future eminence. It was at the unanimous request of all the officers of artillery, that he was intrusted with the command in that department. When the corps of artillery in 1776 was increased to three regiments, the command was given to Knox, who was promoted to the rank of a brigadier-general. He was actively engaged during the whole contest. After the capture of Cornwallis in 1781, he received the commission of major-general, having distinguished himself in the seige at the head of the artillery. Previously to the adoption of the present constitution he succeeded Gen. Lincoln as secretary at war in March, 1785; and after our present government was organized in 1789, Washington nominated him for the same office. He continued to fill this department till the close of the year 1794, when he resigned it. In his letter to the president he says: "After having served my country near twenty years, the greater portion of the time under your immediate auspices, it is with extreme reluctance I find es returned obably Mr. r some time nistaken in rred at the he date of n 1650 Mr. preacher in g silenced in prisonment. during the t Newton of He was procal seminary. ie a Baptist removed to the Christian Mrs. Judson, illiams, 1834. uous liquors, cal institution, tist minister, d 60. British army,

499

the campaigns 2 vols., 4to.,

in the army omaston, Me., orn in Boston between this Revolutionary ncommon zeal placed at the in Boston, he iscipline, which It was at the rs of artillery, nmand in that of artillery in ents, the comis promoted to

He was accontest. After 1, he received having distinhe head of the ion of the presen. Lincoln as ; and after our ized in 1789, the same office. nt till the close ned it. In his "After having ars, the greater immediate ausuctance I find able a situation. But the natural and powerful claims of a numerous family will no longer permit me to neglect their essential interests. In whatever situation I shall be, I shall recollect your confidence and kindness with all the fervor and purity of affection, of which a grateful heart is susceptible." Washington in reply assured him of his sincerest friendship, and declared him to have "deserved well of his country." During the last years of his life Gen. Knox lived at Thomaston. It has been stated, that he failed in 1798 for the large sum of 400,000 dollars, and that Gen. Lincoln shared in the loss 150,000 dollars, and that Col. Jackson was also a sufferer. His death was occasioned by his swallowing the hone of a chicken. His wife, the daughter of J. Flucker, secretary of Massachusetts, died June 20, 1824. In April, 1796, he lost two children by death in one week; and in a manner almost as sudden he had previously lost five children.

He was distinguished for his military talents, and possessed in an uncommon degree the esteem and confidence of Washington. Though a soldier and a statesman, he did not dismiss the amiable virtues of the man. There was a frankness in his manners, which was pleasing, and his heart was susceptible of the kindly affections. Bradford's Sermon on his death; Marshall, III. 62; IV. 495; V. 25, 213, 614; Thacher's Eulogy.

KNOX, SAMUEL, president of Baltimore college, died Sept., 1832, aged 76.

KNOX, RUTH, died in Blandford July 19, 1847, aged 84, the widow of Elijah Knox, who died in 1833, with whom she had lived fifty years. She was strong-minded, skilled in family government, and blessed in her pious labors. Nine children survived, and her descendants were scattered in six different States. Such mothers have been God's great benefactions to New England He was a grandson of the warrior Hendrick, who and our whole country.

KNOX, WILLIAM, died in Berwiek, Me., May 24, 1851, aged 103 years and 6 months.

KNYPHAUSEN, BARON, lieutenant-general, commanded the Hessian troops in the British service in the war of the Revolution. In June, 1780, he made an incursion into New Jersey, with five thousand men. Landing at Elizabethtown, he proceeded to Connecticut Farms, where he burned thirteen houses and the church. Being reinforced, he repulsed the Americans near Springfield, and burned the town, consisting of about thirty houses. He died at Berlin, Prussia, ia June, 1789, aged 59.

KOLLOCK, HENRY, D. D., minister of Savan-

myself constrained to withdraw from so honor- his parents had removed, but in Dec., 1803, was appointed professor of theology at Princeton, having the care also of the church. His abilities and eloquence procured him great respect. In 1806 he removed to Savannah, where he was a minister about thirteen years. For a time some ecclesiastical difficulties, founded on charges of indiscretion, interrupted his quietude. He went to Europe in 1817, and returned with invigorated health. After his death his sermons were published in 4 vols.

KOLLOCK, LEMUEL, a physician, died at Savannah in 1823, aged 57. He was a native of Mussachusetts, and settled in South Carolina, and then in Georgia, where he was distinguished. KOLLOCK, SHEPHERD, an officer of the Revolution, died at Philadelphia, July, 1839, aged 87. He was born at Lewistown, Del., in 1750. He was in the battle of Treeton, fort Lee, and Short Hills. In 1779 he established the New Jersey Journal, at Chatham; in 1783 he removed his press to New York and established the New York Gazette, first weekly, then three times a week; in 1787 revived at Elizabethtown the New Jersey Journal, which he edited thirty-one years, supporting the democratic administrations. For thirty-five years he was judge of the court of common pleas. He was greatly respected for his usefulness and his exemplary religious character.

KONKAPOT, JOHN, eaptain, lived at Wnahtukook or Stockbridge, when Mr. Sergeant went there as a missionary; his cabin was on a knoll north of the Konkapot brook, east of the county road. Gov. Belcher gave him a captain's commission. Mr. Hawley in 1770 spoke of him as less than 80 years old at his death some years before.

KONKAPOT, John, Jr., a Mohegan Indian of Stockbridge, gave, more than fifty years ago, a list of Mohegan words, which was published in the Massachusetts historical collections, vol. IX. was the son of Wolf, a Mohegan chief, by a Mohawk woman, Hunnis, the daughter of a chief.

KOSCIUSKO, THADDEUS, a Polish officer in the American Revolutionary war, was born in Lithuania in 1756, of an ancient and noble family. and educated at the military school at Warsaw. He afterwards studied in France. He came to America, recommended by Franklin to Gen. Washington, by whom he was appointed his aid. He was also appointed engineer, with the rank of colonel, in Oct., 1776. At the unsuccessful siege of Ninety-six, in 1791, he very judiciously directed the operations. It was in 1784 that he left this country, and in 1786 he returned to Poland. In 1789 the diet gave him the appointment of manah, died Dec. 19, 1819, aged 41. He was born jor-general. In the campaign of 1792 he disat New Providence, N. J., Dec. 14, 1778; was tinguished himself against the Russians. When, graduated at Princeton in 1794; in Dec., 1800, in 1794, the Poles made a noble attempt to was ordained at Elizabethtown, to which place recover their liberty and independence, Kosciusko

April, at the head of 4,000 men, he defeated 12,000 Russians, but was subsequently defeated and obliged to retire to his intrenched camp near Warsaw, in which city he was soon besieged by 60,000 Russians and Prussians. When, after two months, an assault was made, he with only 10,000 men repelled the attack. An insurrection in Great Poland compelled the king of Prussia to raise the siege. Kosciusko, with 20,000 regular troops and 40,000 armed peasants, had resisted the combined armies, amounting to 150,000 men. At last, Oct. 10, at Macziewice, fifty miles from Warsaw, an overwhelming Russian force defeated Kosciusko, who had only 21,000 men. Being wounded, he fell from his horse, saving, "Finis Poloniæ," and was made a prisoner.

"And Freedom shricked when Kosciusko fell."

He was thrown into prison by Catharine; but was released by Paul I. When the emperor presented him with his own sword, he declined it, saying, "I no longer need a sword, since I have no longer a country." Never afterwards did he wear a sword. In Aug., 1797, he visited America and was received with honor. For his Revolutionary services he received a pension. In 1798 he went to France. Having purchased an estate near Fontainebleau, he lived there till 1814. In 1816 he settled at Soleure in Switzerland. In 1817 he abolished slavery on his estate in Poland. He died at Soleure, in consequence of a fall with his horse from a precipice near Vevay, Oct. 16, 1817, aged 61. He was never married. His body was removed to the tomb of the kings at Cracow, beneath the cathedral. Gray-headed warriors bore the relics on their shoulders; two maidens with wreaths of oak-leaves and branches of cypress followed; then came the general staff. the senate, and clergy. Count Wodziki delivered a funeral oration on the hill Wavel, and in the church a prelate gave an eloquent address. The senate of Cracow decreed, that a lofty mound should be raised on the heights of Bronislawad. For three years men of every class and age toiled in this work, from Oct. 16, 1820, to Oct. 16, 1823. till the Mogila Kosciuszki, the hill of Kosciusko, was raised to the height of three hundred feet. A serpentine foot-path leads to the top, from which there is a fine view of the Vistula and of the ancient city of the Polish kings. He erected himself a better monument to his memory. In 1798 he made a bequest for the emancipation and education of slaves in Virginia. In 1826 the amount was about 25,000 dollars. B. L. Lear was the executor. A suit was pending, in 1830, instituted by the heirs, who claimed the bequest.

KRAYNE, Robert, died in Boston about 1650. He was an early settler; a merchant tailor, who was intrusted with the supreme command. In | and eollege make him worthy of honorable remembrance. He gave to Boston the first market-house and conduit, and the first public library. To Harvard college he gave a house. The court of assistants, in consequence of his "liberal gifts to the country," gave his widow five hundred acres of land. He was allied by marriage to Rev. Mr.

> KREMER, George, member of congress from 1823 to 1829, died in Union co., Penn., Sept. 11, 1854, aged 79, > KRIMMEL, JOHN LEWIS, a distinguished painter, was drowned, while bathing near Germantown, July 15, 1821, aged 35. He was president of the society of American artists, having resided about ten years in Philadelphia. At the time of his death he was engaged to paint a large historical picture of the landing of Wm. Penn. His genius and amiable manners secured to him respect and esteem.

> KUHN, ADAM, M. D., a physician, died at Philadelphia July 5, 1817, aged 75. He was born at Germantown, Nov. 17, 1741, old style; his father came from Swabia, and was a useful physician and an elder of the Lutheran church. In 1761 he proceeded to Europe, and studied at Upsal under Linnæus, and by him was highly esteemed. After visiting various countries of Europe, he returned to this country in Jan., 1768. and in May commenced his first course in botany. For twenty-two years he attended the Pennsylvania hospital. In 1789 he was appointed professor of medicine in the university, but resigned in 1797. He practised physic about fifty years. He left two sons. A biographical sketch was published, 1818. - Thacher.

> KUHN, FREDERIC, Dr., died at Lancaster, Pa., in March 1816, aged 68.

> KUNZE, JOHN CHRISTOPHER, D. D., professor in Columbia college, N. Y., died July 24, 1807. aged 73. For fourteen years he was the minister of the German Lutheran church in Philadelphia, and a professor in the college of that city. In 1784 he removed to New York, where he was a minister twenty-three years, also professor of the oriental languages. His valuable cabinet of coins and medals is now owned by the N. Y. Historical society.

> KURTZ, J. DANIEL, D. D., died at Baltimore June 30, 1856, aged 92. He was for more than half a century a minister of the German Lutheran church; preaching always Christ and him crucified, and justification through faith in his blood.

> KUYPERS, GERARD A., D. D., minister of the reformed Dutch church, in New York city, died June 28, 1833, aged 66.

KUYPERS, ZACHARIAH H., D. D., died in New York, Oct. 4, 1850, aged 80, the son of came from London; his benefactions to the town Warmoldus K., D. D., of Rhinebeck, He was honorable e first marblic library. The court of eral gifts to idred acres to Rev. Mr.

ngress from n., Sept. 11, istinguished g near GerIe was prestists, having hia. At the paint a large Wm. Penn. cured to him cian, died at 75. He was 11, old style; was a useful eran church. In died at a was highly countries of in Jan., 1768, rse in botany. the Pennsyl-pointed profesut resigned in fity years. He teth was pub-

Lancaster, Pa.,

D., professor July 24, 1807, as the minister Philadelphia, that city. In here he was a cofessor of the abinet of coins. Y. Historical at Baltimore for more than erman Luthehrist and him h faith in his

., minister of Yew York city,

D. D., died in so, the son of eck. He was thirty-six years pastor of Jamaica, Newtown, Inness, and Oyster Bay congregations; then twelve years of Wyckoff, Ponds, and Preakness, N. J.

KYAN, JOHN H., an Englishman, who lived a short time in this country, died in New York in 1849 or 1850, aged 75. He was the inventor of the chemical process of hardening wood, making what is called Kyanized wood.

LABAT, J. B., published in French a voyage to the American isles, 6 vols., 1722.

LACOCK, Anner, general, died near Freedom, Beaver county, Penn., April 12, 1837. He was a native of Virginia. With little education, he by his talents, industry, and much worth, became eminent as a legislator and statesman. He was a representative in eongress from 1811 to 1813, and a senator of the U. S. from 1813 to 1819.

LACY, JACOB, died in 1840, at Longhill, N. J., aged 100, a Revolutionary pensioner.

LADD, JOSEPH BROWN, a poet, died in 1786, aged 31. He was the son of Wm. L. of Little Compton, R. I. Having commenced the practice of physic, the rejection of his addresses by a young lady, to whom he was extremely attached, induced him to remove to Charleston, S. C. There he proved himself destitute of moral and

There he proved himself destitute of moral and religious principles by fighting a duel in consequence of a political controversy. He was wounded, and neglected the means of recovery. The poems of Arouet were published in 1786; a sketch of his life, with poems, in 1832.—Specimens of American Poetry, 1. 334.

LADD, WILLIAM, president of the American neace society, died at Portsmouth, N. H., April 9, 1841, aged 63. His residence was at Minot, Me. Born in Exeter in 1778, he graduated at Harvard in 1797. His widow died in Boston in 1856: he left no children. He took a very active part in promoting the interests of the peace society, in which perhaps the first movement was made by Dr. Noah Worcester. For years he was the president and the agent of the society, which was indebted more to his toils than to those of any other person. He made many public addresses and he labored abundantly with his pen. His views in regard to the right of defensive war accorded with those of the Quakers and of Mr. Grimké and Mr. Dymoud. Many persons believed that the incorporation of the denial of this right into the constitution of the peace society, which he formed, was greatly injurious to the cause of peace, as not being founded in truth. He colited the Friend of Peace, begun by Dr. Worcester; also the Harbinger of Peace. He was a man honest, earnest, benevolent, and pious. He published, among other essays and addresses, an address to the peace society of Maine, 1824; to that of Massachusetts, 1825; a dissertation on a congress of nations, 1832.

LAET, JOHN DE, a historian, and a director of the Dutch East India company, died at Antwerp in 1649. Among other works he published Novus Orbis, fol., 1633.

LAFAYETTE, GILBERT MOTTIER, marquis de, died in Paris May 20, 1834, aged 76; an honored friend of American liberty. Born in Auvergne, France, he was educated at Paris, and at the age of seventeen married the grand-daughter of the Duke de Noailles. In 1777, when the American struggle seemed very doubtful, he, at the age of nineteen, espoused the cause of freemen; and when the agents of our country confessed that they were not able to convey him to America, "Then," said he, "I will fit out a vessel myself!" And in such a vessel he arrived at Charleston, April 25, bringing hope to the desponding, and producing an amazing sensation through the land. He was immediately offered a command in the army, but he chose rather to raise and equip a body of men at his own expense, and to enter the service as a volunteer, without pay. In July he was appointed major-general; in September was wounded at Brandywine. He served in Pennsylvania and Rhode Island in 1778. He embarked at Boston Jan., 1779, for France, in order the more effectually to aid our country. He returned soon with the assurance that a French force would follow him, and took the command of two thousand men, partly equipped at his expense. He marched to Virginia in Dec., 1780, raising 2000 guineas on his own credit at Baltimore, to supply the troops. In the siege of Yorktown he shared, storming a redoubt. Again he went to France, honored, of course, with the commendatory resolutions of congress, and urged upon the French government the sending of a strong and decisive force to America. Such a force, of forty-nine ships and twenty thousand men, he found at Cadiz, ready to follow him, had not peace prevented. Invited to revisit America, he landed Aug. 4, 1784, and, after spending a few days at Mount Vernon, visited the great cities and received the acknowledgments which were his due. The world hardly furnishes such an instance of noble, effectual aid, on the part of an individual, a foreigner, to a national struggle for freedom; and no American can hear the name of Lafayette without a tide of gratitude rushing through his heart. On his return to France he toiled for the benefit of Protestantism, and the abolition of slavery. In 1789 he commanded the national guards of Paris. In 1790 he renounced the title of nobility, and sustained the constitution of a representative monarchy. He defended the king, but soon resigned his command and retired to his estates. Jacobins triumphing, he left France, and, falling into the hands of the Austrians, was imprisoned several years at Olmutz. He was released in 1797. He declined the dignity of senator and of a peerage, offered by Bonaparte. In 1824 ton, Penn., in 1787, and died Dec. 17, 1805. His he visited the United States, and was enthusiastically received, in twenty-four States, as the nation's guest. Congress made him a grant of 200,000 dollars and a township of land. He was carried home in the frigate Brandywine, so named in compliment to him, in Sept., 1825. In 1830 he was made marshal of France. In 1834 his earthly course was finished. His eldest son, George Washington, who accompanied him in his visit to America, died at Lagrange, in France, Jan. 6, 1856. He was a consistent, noble-minded. disinterested patriot. His engagement in the cause of America is an unparalleled event in history; and the honorable treatment which he received from America is a proof that republies are not always ungrateful.

LAFON, BARTHELEMY, a geographer, died at New Orleans, where he had long been a citizen, Sept. 29, 1820. He published a map of Lower Louisiana and New Orleans. About 1814 he proposed for publication a work, entitled. Urane geography, designed to prove, that America was known to the ancients, and was the native place of Orpheus, etc.

LAHDLIE, ARCHIBALD, D. D., the first minister of the Dutch church in America, who ofliciated in the English language, was a native of Scotland, and had been for four years a minister of the Dutch church of Flushing in Zealand, when he received a call from New York. He arrived in America in the year 1764, and died at Red Hook Nov. 14, 1779, during his exile from the city, occasioned by the Revolutionary war. His wife was the daughter of Col. Martin Hoffman. He was a man of a vigorous mind and of singular piety; a sound divine; an evangelical, commanding, and powerful preacher, and indefatigably faithful in his pastoral labors. His ministry was much blessed and attended with an uncommon revival of religion. - Christian's Magazine,

LAKE, THOMAS, captain, a merchant, was the joint owner with Maj. Clarke, of Boston, of Arrousic island in Kennebec river, where he had a house. Here he was killed by the Indians, Aug. 14, 1676.

LAKE, MARY, a pioneer Christian of Ohio. died at Marietta in 1802, aged 60. A native of Bristol, England, she married Mr. Lake, who emigrated to New York, and worked in a ship-yard. She was a member of Dr. Rodgers' church. In 1789 he removed to Marietta. One of the first Sunday schools in America was taught by her in 1791. At this time Mr. Storey preached once on each Sunday. She taught the catechism and lessons from the bible to twenty scholars. They removed to a farm a few miles up the Muskingum. Her children were all pious; two of her sons were aged in 1852. - Hildreth.

LAKE, WILLIAM, a poet, was born at Kings-poems, entitled the Parnassian pilgrim, were published at Hudson, 12mo., 1807.

LALLEMAND, HENRY, baron, general of artillery in the Imperial guard of France, espoused the side of Napoleon on his return from Elba, for which he was condemned to death for contumacy. having escaped to this country. He died at Bordentown, N. J., Sept. 15, 1823. He published in this country a valuable work on artillery.

LAMB, GEORGE, a worthy, much esteemed Freewill Baptist minister, pastor of a church in Brunswick, Maine, died in Dec., 1836, aged 48. His son, George W. Lamb, L.L. B. at Cambridge, a graduate of Bowdoin college in 1837, and a lawyer in New Orleans, died recently.

LAMB, ANTHONY, general, died at New York

May 13, 1855, aged 84.

LAMB, EDWARD, Dr., died at Montpelier, Vt., Nov. 4, 1845, aged 74; for half a century a distinguished physician and citizen.

LANCASTER, THOMAS, minister of Scarborough, Mc., died in 1831, aged 88. Born in Rowley, he graduated at Harvard in 1764, and was settled in 1775.

LANCASTER, JOSEPH, died at New York, Oct. 24, 1838, aged 68, of wounds received from a gig, while he was walking in the street. He was born in England and bred a Quaker. He came to America about 1820, and introduced his system of education, called the Lancastrian. He published several works relating to education.

LANE, Job, an excellent tutor of Yale college, died in 1768, aged 26. Born at Bedford, Mass., he graduated at Yale in 1764. He was once a soldier; and he studied theology. For his last two years he was a tutor. President Daggett in a sermon highly commended him. - Spraque's

LANE, EZEKIEL, died at Buffalo in May, 1828, aged 103. In 1795 there were only four buildings in Buffalo; the first was erected by Lane and his father-in-law, Martin Middaugh, a double log-house.

LANE, OTIS, died at Southbridge, Mass., in 1812, aged about 64. Born in Rowley, Mass., he was graduated at Harvard in 1798; was minister of Sturbridge from 1801 to 1819; and was installed at Sterling, Conn., in 1828. - Sprague's LANE, Amos, colonel, died in Lawrenceburgh, Ind., in 1850. He was a member of congress from 1833 to 1837, and was speaker, and a lawyer of talents.

LANG, DAVID, a Baptist minister, died at Colerain, Mass., in 1831, aged 78.

LANG, JOHN, died at New York March 17, 1836, aged 67; editor of the New York Gazette, connected with it from the first. He was a man of moral worth, of integrity and benevolence.

805. His were pubeneral of e, espoused n Elba, for contumacy, ied at Borublished in esteemed church in , aged 48. Cambridge, 837, and a

New York

tpelier, Vt., ntury a dis-of Scarbo-. Born in n 1764, and

New York, eccived from street. He luaker. He troduced his astrian. He ducation.

Yale college, dford, Mass., was once a For his last 1)aggett in - Sprague's

n May, 1828, y four builded by Lane ugh, a double ge, Mass., in ley, Mass., he was minister 9; and was — Sprague's wrenceburgh, r of congress and a lawyer

died at Cole-

k March 17, York Gazette, le was a man nevolence.

over, N. H., the seat of Dartmouth college, died in 1810, aged 71.

LANGDON, SAMUEL, minister of York, Me., died in 1794, aged 71. He was born in Farmington, Conn.; his mother's name was Elizabeth Lee. He graduated at Yale in 1747. He was ordained over the second church in York in 1754. He was a man of talents and a faithful preacher; but much depressed by his little success, - Piscat-aqua Magazine, I.

LANGDON, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and president of Harvard college, died Nov. 29, 1797, aged 74. He was a native of Boston, and was graduated in 1740. He was ordained as the successor of Mr. Fitch Feb. 4, 1747. He was inducted into the office of president as the successor of Mr. Locke Oct. 14, 1774, but resigned it, in consequence of the disaffection of his pupils, occasioned by his want of dignity and authority, Aug. 30, 1780. President Willard succeeded him. He now entered again on the milder task of presiding over an assembly of Christians. He was installed at Hampton Falls, N. H., Jan. 18, 1781. His extensive knowledge, hospitality, patriotism, and picty secured to him, in this calm retreat, the affection and respect of the people of his charge, and of his numerous acquaintance. He published a sermon at the ordination of S. Macclintock, 1756; on the conquest of Quebec, 1759; an impartial examination of R. Sandeman's letters on Theron and Aspasio, 1765; a summary of Christian faith and practice, 1768; a rational explication of St. John's vision of the two beasts, 1771; Dudleian lecture, 1775; before the provincial congress, 1775; at the ordination of E. Sprague, 1777; on the death of professor Winthrop, 1779; New Hampshire election sermon, 1788; observations on the revelations of Jesus Christ to saint John, 1791; the efficacy of the gospel above all earthly wisdom, the business of life and hope in death, two sermons in American preacher, IV.; before the Piscataqua association, 1792; corrections of some great mistakes committed by J. C. Ogden; remarks on the leading sentiments of Dr. Hopkins' system of doctrines, 1794. - Alden's account of the Religious Society of Portsmouth; Hist. Coll. x. 51; Sprague's Annals.

LANGI)ON, JOHN, LL. D., governor of New Hampshire, died at Portsmouth Sept. 19, 1818, aged 78. He was the grandson of Tobias L. and the son of John L., a farmer of Portsmouth. After being educated at a public grammar school, he became acquainted with mercantile business in the counting-house of Daniel Rindge, and afterwards prosecuted business upon the sea until the commencement of the controversy with Great

LANG, RICHARD, a man of business at Han- | the powder and the military stores from fort William and Mary, at Newcastle, in 1774. In 1775 and 1776 he was chosen a delegate to congress. Commanding a company of volunteers, . he served for a while in Vermont and Rhode Island. In his own State, he was in 1776 and 1777 speaker of the house and judge of the court of common pleas. In 1779 he was continental agent in New Hampshire and contracted for the building of several public ships-of-war. June 13, 1783, he was again appointed delegate to congress. He was afterwards repeatedly a member of the legislature, and speaker. In March, 1788, he was chosen president of the State; and in November was elected senator of the United States. He was opposed to the funding system. In 1794 he was re-elected for another term of six years. He was afterwards representative and speaker in the State legislature. From 1805 to 1808, and in 1810 and 1811, he was governor of the State. After 1811 his days were passed in the calmness of retreat from public life. In his polities he acted with Mr. Jefferson and was known as a republican. In 1801 Mr. Jefferson solicited him to accept the post of secretary of the navy. In 1812 the majority in congress selected him for vice president, but he declined the honor, to which he would have been elevated instead of Mr. Gerry, had he consented to be a candidate. For several years he was a member of the first church in Portsmouth; he enjoyed the consolations of religion; and nothing gave him so much pain as to see the doctrines of grace rejected and assailed. His habits were social; and in his manners he was easy, polite, and pleasing. - Annals of Portsmouth, 370; Farmer's Belknap, I. 405.

LANGDON, JOHN, minister of Bethlehem, Conn., died in 1830, aged 40. He graduated at Yale in 1809, and was a tutor from 1811 to 1815. He was pastor at B. from 1816 to 1825. -

Sprague's Annals.

LANGSTAFF, HENRY, died by a fall at Bloody Point, N. H., in 1705, aged 100: a hale, strong man; the first in New England who reached a century. But in the next one hundred and forty years there were one hundred and sixty persons who attained the same or a greater age. See W. Perkins.

LANGWORTHY, CONTENT, Mrs., died at Stonington, Conn., in 1814, aged 105.

LANKTON, LEVI, died in Alstead, N. II., in 1843, aged about 87. Born in Southington, Conn., he was graduated at Yale in 1777, and was pastor in Alstead from 1789 to 1828 .- Sprague's Annals.

LANMAN, JAMES, died at Norwich, Conn., Aug. 7, 1841, aged 72. He graduated at Yale in Britain. He was one of the party which removed | 1788, and was a senator of the United States, and a judge of the supreme court of Connecticut, station, or was more admired for his eloquence. His brother, Peter L., died Dec. 29, 1854, aged 83. By his death, a kind of sacrifice to duty, he left of Lansingburgh, N. Y., died at New York in true piety. 1791, aged 72.

LANSING, JOHN, chancellor of New York, died in Nov., 1829, aged 75. He went out from the City hotel, New York, one stormy evening, and was never heard of afterwards.

LANSING, NICHOLAS, minister at Tappan, N. Y., died in 1835, aged 86.

LAPHAM, DARIUS, died in Cincinnati in 1850, aged 42. He was an engineer, first employed on the Eric canal; and was a man of science.

LARCUM, MARY, Mrs., died at Hartford, Conn., in 1839, aged 100,

LARNED, Sylvester, minister of New Orleans, died Aug. 31, 1820, aged 24. He was the son of Col. Simon Larned, of Pittsfield, Mass., who was a rative of Thompson, Conn., and a Revolutionary officer, and died in 1817. His mother, of extraordinary intellectual power and pious zeal, was of the name of Bull, of Hartford, He was born Aug. 31, 1796, and after being for a short time a member of Williams college, he removed to Middlebury with his friend, Solomon Allen, and there in his senior year his mind was first impressed by religious truth. He graduated in 1813, having the English oration. His talents were very early developed. His theological education was at Andover and Princeton. At this period no one equalled him in extemporary debate. After he became a preacher, in 1817, and was ordained as an evangelist, he repaired to New Orleans, where he arrived Jan. 22, 1818. Mr. Cornelius had been there as a missionary about three weeks, endeavoring to form a congregation. On the arrival of Mr. Larned the society was quickly established, and he was settled as the minister of the first Presbyterian congregation. In the summer he visited New England, and procured materials for the erection of a church. The corner-stone was laid Jan. 8, 1819. He fell a victim to the yellow fever the next year. He preached on the preceding Sabbath from the words, " For to me to live is Christ and to die is gain;" and closed his discourse in tears. Mr. Hull, the Episcopal minister, read the funeral service over him in the Presbyterian church. His widow, Sarah Wyer, of Newburyport, died at Washington city Jan. 20, 1825, aged 25. Mr. Larned was distinguished for his powerful talents and pathetic eloquence. He was sanguine, bold, and confident, yet not haughty. He had pressing solicitations from churches in Alexandria, Baltimore, and Boston, to become their pastor; but he deemed his Christian influence more important at New Orleans. Probably no preacher in the United States occupied a more important Austin married his only daughter.

LANSING, ARRAHAM, the original proprietor a deep impression of the courage and value of

" Revolving his mysterious lot, I mourn him, but I praise him not; Glory to God be given. Who sent him, like the radiant bow, His covenant of peace to show, Athwart the breaking storm to glow. Then vanish into heaven.

LARNED, CHARLES, general, died of the cholera at Detroit Aug. 13, 1834; a son of Col. Simon L. of Pittsfield.

LARNED, Enastus, minister of Canterbury, Conn., died before 1840. He gruduated at Brown university in 1795.

LASELL, EDWARD, died at Auburndale Jan. 31, 4852, aged 42, of typhus fever. He had been eighteen years professor of chemistry at Williams college. He had projected and established with others a female seminary at Auburndale.

LATHROP, John, the first minister of Scitnate and Barnstable, Mass., died Nov. 8, 1653. He was educated at Oxford, and was an Episcopal minister in Kent. About 1624 he renounced his Episcopal orders and was chosen the successor of Henry Jacob, who in 1616 became the pastor in London of the first Independent or Congregational church in England, but removed in 1624 to Virginia, where he died. The congregation met in private houses. In April, 1632, the bishop seized and imprisoned forty-two of them: eighteen escaped. Mr. L., after an imprisonment of two years, obtained liberty "to depart the kingdom." Mr. Cunne succeeded him. With about thirty followers he came to New England in 1634. He removed from Scituate to Barnstable Oct. 11, 1639. He was meek, humble, learned, and faithful. His successors were Walley, Russell, and Shaw. He left several sons and daughters; his son, Samuel, who settled at Norwich, was the ancestor of those who bear the name in Connecticut, New York, and Vermont. Mr. L. wrote his name Lothropp: Morton wrote it Laythrop; some of his descendants in Plymouth county still write it Lothrop, as the word is pronounced in Massachusetts; but it is generally written Lathrop. A descendant at Norwich, Dr. Joshua L., died Oct 29, 1807, aged 84. Two of his letters to Gov. Prince are in 2 hist. coll. I. 171. - Sprague's Annals.

LATHROP, ELIJAH, minister of Gilead in Hebron, Conn., died in 1797, aged 73. He graduated at Yale in 1749.

LATHROP, Joshua, Dr., died at Norwich, Conn., in 1807, aged 84. He was a graduate of Yale in 1743; a man highly esteemed. David eloquence. ity, he left d value of ed of the son of Col.

Canterbury, raduated at nrndale Jan.

He had been
at Williams
ablished with lale.

er of Scituate 3, 1653. He an Episcopal renounced his successor of the pastor in or Congregaoved in 1624 congregation il, 1632, the two of them; an imprisony "to depart cceeded him. came to New om Scituate to s meek, humccessors were ft several sons ho settled at who bear the and Vermont. Morton wrote dants in Plyp, as the word but it is gen-

of Gilead in 73. He grad-ndant at Nor-

1807, aged 84.

e are in 2 hist.

d at Norwich, s a graduate of eemed. David LATHROP, EBENEZER, general, died in Barnstable in 1815, aged 72, an officer of the Revolution.

LATHROP, JOSEPH, D. D., minister of West Springfield, Mass., a descendant of John L., died Dec. 31, 1820, aged 89. He was the son of Solomon and Martha L., and was born at Norwich, Conn., Oct. 20, 1731. After the decease of his father in 1733, his mother removed to Bolton. He graduated at Yale college in 1750, having first made a profession of religion. Becoming the teacher of a school at Springfield, he studied theology with Mr. Breck, and was ordained Aug. 25, 1750, and was pastor sixty-three years. In 1819, Dr. Sprague, now of Albany, was settled as his colleague. His wife Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Seth Dwight of Hatfield, died in 1821. His son was president of the senate. He stood as the patriarch of the Congregational churches; no minister was more respected and venerated. He was as eminent for candor and charity as he was devout and holy in life. A man once had the impudence to ask him: "Dr. Lathrop, do you think you have got any religion?" He replied:
"None to speak of." When one in another parish asked his advice in regard to his minister, whom he did not well like, he advised him, as he was a rich farmer, to send a generous piece of his beef, when he slaughtered a fat animal, to his minister, accompanied with this passage: "Let him that is taught in the word, communicate in all good things to him that teacheth." As a writer he was remarkably perspicuous, plain, and useful. His publications were numerous, and more extensively known than those of any contemporary theologian of this country. They consisted of sermons, six volumes of which were published during his life, on various subjects, chiefly practical. After his death an additional volume was published, accompanied by a memoir of his life, written by bimself. This autobiography is remarkable for its simplicity and candor. His sermons were published 2 vols., 1796; 1 vol., 1806; 5 vols., 2d edit., 1807-9; and a volume of discourses on the epistle to the Hebrews, 8vo., 1801. He published the following sermons: on the death of R. Breck, 1784; of Dr. Gay, Suffield; of Dr. G.'s wife, 1796; of Mrs. Whitney, 1800; of Rev. Mr. Atwater, 1802; of four young women drowned at Southwick, 1809; at a thanksgiving relating to the insurrection, 1786; the perspicuity of the Scriptures, in American preacher, 1791; four discourses on baptism, 1793; on the dismission of Mr. Willard of Wilbraham, 1794; on American independence, 1794; at a thanksgiving, 1795; a century discourse for the town; to children, 1796; God's challenge to infidels, at a fast, 1797; at a fast, 1798; also, 1803; also, 1808; at the ordination of Mr. Ball, 1797; of a great-grandson of John L., of Barnstable, died Jan. 4, 1816, aged 75. He was born in Norwich, Conn., May 17, 1740, and was one of ten sons. He graduated at Princeton college in 1763, and soon afterwards became an assistant to Mr.

Thaddeus Osgood, 1808; century sermon, 1800; at the dedication of Westfield academy, 1800; before a missionary society, 1802; on leaving the old meeting-house; dedication of the new, 1802; two discourses on the Sabbath, 1803; two on the church of God, 1804; on old age; on suicide, two sermons; on the drought; on the opening of the bridge, 1805; on Christ's warning to churches; on the consulting of the witch of Endor; on the solar celipse, 1806; warning to beware of false prophets, 1811; before a bible society, 1814; two sermons on the sixtieth anniversary of his ordination, 1816. — Spraque's Annals.

LATHROP, JOHN, D. D., minister in Boston,

He graduated at Princeton college in 1763, and soon afterwards became an assistant to Mr. Wheelock in his Indian school at Lebanon. He was ordained May 18, 1768, at the Old North church, Boston, where the Mathers were ministers. In 1779, his society having united with Dr. Pemberton's, of the new brick church, their own church being demolished by the enemy, he became the pastor of the united society, called the second church. He was an officer of various literary and charitable societies. He published the following sermons: soon after 5th March, 1779; on early piety, 1771; at the artillery election; at the thanksgiving, 1774; on 5th March, 1778; on the death of his wife, Mary L., 1778; of S. West, 1808; of his wife, Elizabeth L., 1809; of J. Eckley, 1811; of J. Eliot, 1813; at the ordination of W. Bentley, 1783; on the peace, 1784; before the humane society, 1787; catechism, 1791; Dudleian lecture, on popery, 1793; before the fire society, 1796; at the Thursday lecture, 1797; at Brattle-street, 1798; on the fast, 1799; on the commencement of the nineteenth century; before the society for propagating the gospel; before the female asylum; at Milton, 1804; at the thanksgiving, 1808; at the same, 1811; a birth-day discourse, 1812; at the fast, 1812; on the law of retaliation, 1814; on the peace; history of the late war, 1815. - Parkman's Sermon.

the death of R. Breck, 1784; of Dr. Gay, Suffield; of Dr. G's wife, 1796; of Mrs. Whitney, 1800; of Rev. Mr. Atwater, 1802; of four young women drowned at Southwick, 1809; at a thanksgiving relating to the insurrection, 1786; the perspicuity of the Scriptures, in American preacher, 1791; four discourses on baptism, 1793; on the dismission of Mr. Willard of Wilbraham, 1794; in American independence, 1794; at a thanksgiving, 1795; a century discourse for the town; to children, 1796; God's challenge to infidels, at a fast, 1797; at a fast, 1798; also, 1803; also, 1803; at the ordination of Mr. Ball, 1797; of 1819 he proposed to publish a work on the manners and customs of India. He went to that south, and delivered lectures. At last he ob- | were unwilling to release him, lest he should actained a place in the post-office. Improvident and destitute of foresight, his talents scarcely procured him subsistence. He published an oration July 4, 1796; speech of Canonicus, a poem, Calcutta, 1802; the same, Boston, 1803; pocket register and freemason's anthology, 1813. -Specimens American Poetry, II. 101-108.

LATHROP, SAMUEL, died at West Springfield July 11, 1810, aged about 75. He was the son of Rev. Dr. L., and a graduate of Yale in 1792. He was a member of congress 1818-1828. His widow died in 1853, aged 73. His minister, Rev. Dr. Sprague, now of Albany, was his son-in-law.

LATTA, JAMES, died at Chestnut Level, Lancaster co., Penn., in 1801, aged 67. He was a were ministers, of whom Francis A. L. died at Monson, the preceptor of Moscow academy, near Philadelphia, in 1834, aged 67. John E. Latta, of New Castle, Del., delivered a sermon before the general association of Connecticut in 1809, which was published. He died in Delaware in 1824.

LAUDERDALE, JAMES, lieut.-colonel, was killed in battle under Gen. Jackson, Dec. 13, 1814. Born in Virginia, of an ancient family, he removed to West Tennessee. He was distinguished He returned to this country in 1783, and died at in three battles under Gen. Coffee, with the Creek Indians. - Analect. Magazine, v.

LAURENS, HENRY, president of congress, died Dec. 8, 1792, aged 69. He was a native of South Carolina, and took an early part in opposing the arbitrary claims of Great Britain at the commencement of the American Revolution. When the provincial congress of Carolina met in June, 1775, he was appointed its president, in which capacity he drew up a form of association, to be signed by all the friends of liberty, which indicated a most determined spirit. After the establishment of the temporary constitution in 1776, he was elected vice-president. Being appointed a member of the general congress after president of that illustrious assembly in Nov., 1777. In 1780 he was deputed to solicit a loan from Holland, and to negotiate a treaty with the United Netherlands. But on his passage he was captured by a British vessel on the banks of Newfoundland. He threw his papers overboard, but they were recovered by a sailor. Being sent to England, he was committed to the tower Oct. 6th as a state prisoner, upon a charge of high treason. Here he was confined more than a year, and was treated with great severity, being denied, for the most part, all intercourse with his friends, and forbidden the use of pen, ink, and paper. His complish the object of his mission. The discoveries found in his papers led to war between Great Britain and Holland, and Mr. Adams was appointed in his place to carry on the negotiation with the United Provinces. During his imprisonment it was intimated to Mr. Laurens that it might be of advantage to him if he could induce his son, then on a mission to France, to withdraw from that country. He replied, "that such was the filial regard of his son, that he knew he would not hesitate to forfeit his life for his father; but that no consideration would induce Col. Laurens to relinquish his honor. even were it possible for any circumstance to prevail on his father to make the improper request," preacher from Ireland. He had four sons, who At length, in Dec., 1781, enfeebled in health and apparently sinking into the grave if continued in confinement, he sent a petition to the house of commons for release, stating that he had labored to preserve the friendship between Great Britain and the colonies, and had extended acts of kindness to British prisoners of war. At the close of the year he was accordingly released. Proceeding to Paris, he, with Franklin, etc., signed the preliminaries of peace Nov. 30, 1782, having been appointed by congress one of the commissioners. Charleston. He directed his son to burn his body on the third day, as the sole condition of inheriting an estate of sixty thousand pounds sterling. Dr. Ramsay married his daughter. His son, Henry L., died in May, 1821. - Gordon; Ramsay's Rev., 11. 213; History of South Carolina, 1. 33, 38, 93; Warren; Marshall, III. 339; IV. 5, 572.

LAURENS, John, a brave officer in the American war, died in 1782. He was the son of the preceding, and was sent to England for his education. He joined the army in the beginning of 1777, from which time he was foremost in dauger. At Germantown he was wounded. He was present and distinguished himself in every action of the resignation of Hancock, he was appointed the army under General Washington, and was among the first who entered the British lines at Yorktown. Early in 1781, while he held the rank of lieutenant-colonel, he was selected as the most suitable person to depute on a special mission to France, to solicit a loan of money, and to procure military stores. He arrived in March and returned in August, having been so successful in the execution of his commission, that congress passed a vote of thanks for his services. Such was his dispatch, that in three days after he repaired to Philadelphia he finished his business with congress, and immediately afterward rejoined the American army. In conjunction with Dr. capture occasioned no small embarrassment to Franklin, Count de Vergennes, and Marquis de the ministry. They dared not to condemn him Castries, he arranged the plan of the campaign as a rebel, through fear of retaliation, and they for 1781. August 27, 1782, in opposing a forgshould ac-The discovr between Adams was n the ne-Dures. ted to Mr. e to him if mission to ry. He reof his son, o forfeit his onsideration h his honor, ance to preper request." n health and continued in the house of had labored Great Britain acts of kindt the close of d. Proceed-., signed the 2, having been ommissioners. 3, and died at to burn his e condition of usand pounds his daughter. 1821. — Gor-

r in the Amerhe son of the id for his edue beginning of nost in danger. He was presevery action of gton, and was British lines at e he held the selected as the a special mismoney, and to ived in March en so successful h, that congress services. Such ays after he reed his business erward rejoined ction with Dr. nd Marquis de of the campaign

pposing a forag-

tory of South

Marshall, III.

ing party of the British, near Combahee river, in South Carolina, he was mortally wounded, and he died at the age of 29. His father, just released from imprisonment, and happy in a son of such distinction and virtues, now witnessed the desolation of all his hopes. Col. Laurens, uniting the talents of a great officer with the knowledge of the scholar and the engaging manners of the gentleman, was the glory of the army and the idel of his country. Washington, who selected him as his aid, and reposed in him the highest confidence, declared that he could discover no fault in him, unless it was intrepidity, bordering upon rashness. His abilities were exhibited in the legislature and in the cabinet, as well as in the field. He was zealous for the rights of humanity, and, living in a country of slaves, contended that personal liberty was the birthright of every human being, however diversified by country, color, or powers of mind. His insinuating address won the hearts of all his acquaintance, while his sincerity and virtue secured their lasting esteem. - Ramsay's South Carolina, II. 21, 105, 206, 306, 374; Gordon; Warren, II. 465; III. 51, 55; Marshall, 111. 486, 508; IV. 407, 485, 575; Gordon.

LAURIE, Mrs., wife of Thomas Laurie, missionary to Mosul, died Dec. 16, 1843. She was born in Westford, Mass., and embarked in 1812. She died in peace. Though her missionary life was brief, she did not live in vain.

LAVAL, FRANÇOIS DE, first bishop of Canada, arrived in June, 1659. He was also the pope's apostolic vicar. In 1662 he procured the establishment of the seminary at Quebec. He sent out various missionaries amongst the Indians. He made great and commendable exertions to prevent the supply to the Indians of strong liquors, for all his promising Christians were becoming drunkards. But he struggled in vain against the covetousness of the traders, who were not opposed by the government. He, therefore, in 1662 repaired to France and presented his complaint to the king, and obtained an order for the suppression of the detestable traffic. It was afterwards resumed, and representations were made of the indispensable necessity of it in order to secure the friendship of the Indians. The bishop was for some time engaged in another struggle; but in 1678 he procured another order for the suppression of the traffic, under severe penalties to offenders. - Charlevoix.

LAVAL, LE PERE, a Jesuit, published voyage de la Louisiane en 1720, 4to., 1728.

LAVAT, R. P., published Nouveau voyage aux

Isles de l'Amerique, 12mo., 8 vols., 1711.

LAW, JONATHAN, governor of Connecticut, died Nov. 6, 1750, aged 76. He was born at excepting one year, was a judge of the supreme court. In 1725 he was appointed chief justice and lieutenant-governor, which offices he held till he was chosen governor, as successor of Joseph Talcott, in 1741. He was succeeded by Roger Wolcott. Governor Law, in his zeal against the more zealous preachers of his day, the followers of Mr. Whitefield, the new lights, etc., gave his sanction to some persecuting acts Trumbull remarks: "Gov. of the legislature. Talcott, who called those days times of refreshing, was now no more, and a gentleman of a different character was chosen governor. Under his administration a number of severe and persecuting laws were enacted." Mr. Law was of the Arminian, or "old-light" party, and the outrageous enactments were ascribed to him. President Finley, for preaching in Connecticut, was, agreeably to one of those laws, carried as a vagrant out of the colony.

LAW, RICHARD, LL. D., chief justice of Connecticut, the son of the preceding, died Jan. 26, 1806, aged 72. He was born at Milford, and graduated at Yale college in 1751. After a lucrative practice of law for some years at New London, he was appointed a judge of the county court; in 1784 a judge of the supreme court; and in 1786 chief judge. In 1789 he was appointed district judge of the United States, in which office he continued till his death.

LAW, ANDREW, Rev., a teacher of music for forty years, died at Cheshire, Conn., July, 1821, aged 73. He was graduated at Brunswick in 1775. He invented four characters to express always the four syllables of music. He published rudiments of music, 1783; musical primer, on a new plan, with the four characters, 1803; musical magazine, 1804; collection of hymn tunes.

LAW, LYMAN, died at New London, in 1842, aged 71, an eminent counsellor. He graduated at Yale in 1791. His father and grandfather were distinguished in the councils of the State and nation. He was a member of congress in the time of Jefferson.

LAWLER, JOAN, a member of congress from Alabama, died at Washington in 1838. He was a Baptist minister, and much respected.

LAWRENCE, WILLIAM, the minister of Lincoln, Mass., died in 1780, aged about 57. He graduated at Harvard in 1743, and published a sermon at the ordination of S. Farrar.

LAWRENCE, JAMES, a naval commander, died June 6, 1813, aged 31. He was the son of James L., a lawyer, and was born at Burlington. N. J., Oct. 1, 1781. He had early a predilection for a seafaring life, which his friends could not conquer. At the age of sixteen he received a midshipman's warrant. In the war against Tri-Milford, Aug. 6, 1674; was graduated at Har- poli he accompanied Decatur as his first lieutenvard college in 1695; and from 1715 to 1725, ant in the hazardous exploit of destroying the

in the Mediterranean and commanded successively the Vixen, Wasp, Argus, and Hornet. While cruising in the latter off Delaware, he fell in with the British brig, Peacock, and after an action of fifteen minutes captured her, Feb. 24, 1813. On his return he was received with distinction. Being promoted to the rank of post captain, he was intrusted with the command of the frigate Chesapeake. While in Boston roads, nearly ready for sea, the British frigate Shannon, Capt. Brooke, appeared off the harbor, and made signals expressive of a challenge. Although under many disadvantages, with an undisciplined crew, etc., vet Capt. L. determined to accent the challenge. He put to sea in the morning of June 1; the Shannon hore away. At four the Chesapeake hauled up and fired a gum; the Shannon then hove to. Soon after the action commenced, Capt. L. was wounded in the leg. Soon the anchor of the Chesapeake caught in one of the Shannon's ports, in consequence of which her guns could not be brought to hear upon the enemy. As Capt. L. was carried below in consequence of a second and mortal wound from a bullet, which lodged in his intestines, he eried out, "Don't give up the ship!" But after the action had continued eleven minutes the enemy boarded and captured the Chesapeake. The loss of killed and wounded was one hundred and forty-six; that of the Shannon eighty-six. Capt. L. lingered four days in extreme pain and then died. He was honorably buried at Halifax. His body and that of Lieut. Ludlow were brought by Capt. G. Crowninshield, at his own expense, to Salem, and then removed to New York. His wife was the daughter of Mr. Montaudevert, a merchant of New York. She survived with two children.

LAWRENCE, SAMUEL, major and deacon, the father of a distinguished family, died in Groton Nov. 8, 1827, aged 73. His widow, Susanna Parker, daughter of William P., died May 2, 1845, aged 89. He was a descendant in the fifth generation from John Lawrence of Great St. Albans, Herefordshire, who came to Watertown, probably of Winthrop's party, in 1635, and who in 1660 removed to Groton, where he was an influential and respected citizen. Deacon Lawrence, when a youth, heard the alarm from Concord and immediately mounted his horse and rushed into the contest. He was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and served during the war. For forty years he was a deacon of the church.

LAWRENCE, LAWRENCE, a Methodist minister in Maryland, presiding elder in Chesapeake district, died April 4, 1829.

LAWRENCE, LUTHER, son of Deacon Samuel L., died at Lowell April 27, 1839, aged 61. He was mayor of the city, and was killed by a frigate Philadelphia. He remained several years | of Harvard in 1801, he was a lawyer, a speaker of the house of representatives, a man respected for his virtues.

LAWRENCE, NATHANIEL, minister of Tyngsborough, Mass., died Sunday, Feb. 5, 1843, aged 77, in the fiftieth year of his ministry. His death was sudden. He preached in the morning; walked home half a mile in a snow-storm; and was fatally attacked at his table. He published a sketch of Tyngshorough in historical collections.

LAWRENCE, John J., missionary at Madura, died at Tranquebar Dec. 20, 1846, aged 39. Born in Geneseo, N. Y., he graduated at Union college in 1829, at Andover seminary in 1834. He sailed from Boston in May, 1835, and continued in the Madura mission till his death. His wife was Mary Hulin of Troy.

LAWRENCE, WILLIAM, the son of Deacon Samuel L., died in Boston Oct. 14, 1848, aged about 64. Brought up a farmer, he became a merchant; at first he kept a small store; then he was a partner with his brother Samuel. In 1825 he commenced domestic manufactures. The Suffolk bank system, much commended, originated with him. He married a daughter of William Boardman, and left his wife and four children. He was a man of integrity, kindness, and religious faith. His munificence to Lawrence academy in Groton is worthy of honorable record; in all by gift and bequest he gave 40,000 dollars to the academy. His portrait and a memoir are in Barnard's American Journal of Education, July, 1856.

LAWRENCE, Myron, died in Belchertown, Mass., in 1852, aged 57. A graduate of Middlebury, he was a lawyer and senator of Massachusetts. His daughter, Mrs. Sara, wife of Gov. Robinson, published in 1856 a well-written account of Kansas, to which she was an emigrant, entitled, Kansas, its interior and exterior life. He published agricultural address, 1832.

LAWRENCE, Amos, the son of Deacon Samuel L., died in Boston Dec. 31, 1852, aged 77. He early settled in Boston as a merchant. Modest and unassuming, his private noiseless charities were unceasing and unequalled. He expended, not in splendid donations bringing fame, but in private charities in various forms and with unceasing consideration and care, as much as six hundred thousand dollars! To Williams college he gave at different times about 25,000 dollars: to the Bunker Hill monument 10,000 dollars; and some thousands to Groton academy. 'Though not ranked among the orthodox in his faith, he believed in the high rank and atonement of Jesus Christ. His memoirs were published by his son.

LAWRENCE, ABBOTT, died in Boston Aug. 18, 1855, aged 62, brother of the preceding. At the age of sixteen he entered the store of his fall through the scuttle of a mill. A graduate brother Amos, at 39 Cornhill; a connection in a speaker respected r of Tyngs-1843, aged His death morning; storm; and e published collections. at Madura, d 39. Horn Union col-1834. He d continued h. His wife of Deacon , 1848, aged e became a store; then Samuel. In actures. The nded, originhter of Wilnd four chilindness, and to Lawrence rable record; 40,000 dolınd a memoir of Education.

Belchertown, te of Middleof Massachuwife of Gov. well-written an emigrant, exterior life. 1832.

Deacon Sam-352, aged 77. rchant. Modoiseless charilled. He exbringing fame, orms and with s much as six illiams college 5,000 dollars ; 0,000 dollars; lemy. Though n his faith, he ement of Jesus ed by his son. Boston Aug. preceding. At ie store of his connection in of dollars, by merchandise and manufactures. tary of the navy, offered him by President Taylor, he declined. He was our minister to England in 1849, and in subsequent years. He gave 50,000 dollars to Harvard college to found a scientific school, and bequeathed a like sum. He married in 1819, Katharine, daughter of Timothy Bigelow, and left three sons and two daughters. Of his several brothers only Samuel survived him. Although an attendant at Brattle-street church, in Boston, his friends, or some of them, did not regard him as in his faith a Unitarian.

LAWRENCE, ELEAZER, Dr., died at Pepperell, Mass., in 1856, aged 36. A graduate of Harvard in 1795, he practised physic fifty-one years in Hampton, N. H. He gave but little singularities, died in 1760, aged 79. He was a native of England and brought up to the sea. About the year 1710 he settled in Barbadoes. Bearing his open testimony in all companies against the conduct of the owners of slaves, he became so obnoxious to the inhabitants, that he left the island in disgust, and settled in Pennsylvania. He fixed his residence at Abington, ten miles from Philadelphia. On his arrival he found many quakers, who kept slaves. He remonstrated against the practice with zeal, both in public and private. To express his indignation at the practice of slave-keeping, he once carried a bladder filled with blood into a public meeting, and in the presence of the whole congregation thrust a sword into it, which he had concealed under his coat, exclaiming, "Thus shall God shed the blood of those persons, who enslave their fellow-creatures." Calling upon a business followed, and the acquisition at last of | slaves in thy house?" On being answered in great wealth, a million and a half or two millions the affirmative, he said, "Then I will not partake with thee of the fruits of thy unrighteousness." He assisted in establishing the cities of Lowell. After an ineffectual attempt to convince a farmer Lawrence, and Manchester. He was several and his wife in Chester county of the iniquity of years a member of congress. The place of secre- keeping slaves, he seized their only child, a little girl of three years of age, under the pretence of carrying her away, and when the cries of the child and his singular expedient alarmed them, he said, "You see and feel now a little of the distress which you occasion by the inhuman practice of slave-keeping." In 1737 he wrote a treatise, entitled, all slave-keepers, that keep the innocent in bondage, apostates. It was printed by Dr. Franklin, who told the author, when the manuscript was brought to him, that it was deficient in arrangement, "It is no matter," said Mr. Lay; " print any part, thou pleasest, first." This worthy Quaker died at his house in Abington. He was temperate in his diet, living chiefly upon vegetables, and his drink was pure water. When tea was introduced into Pennsylvania, his wife brought home a small quantity, with a set of cups and saucers. In his zeal he seized them. and, carrying them back to the city, he seattered the tea from the balcony of the court house, in the presence of a multitude of spectators, and broke to pieces the instruments of luxury, delivering at the same time a striking lecture upon the folly of introducing a pernicious herb in the place of the wholesome diet of the country. He often visited schools, earrying a basket of religious books with him, and distributing them as prizes among the scholars, imparting also frequently some advice and instruction. So much was he the enemy of idleness, that when the inclemency of the weather confined him to his house, or his mind was wearied with reading, he used to LAY, BENJAMIN, a benevolent Quaker of great spend his time in spinning. All his clothes were manufactured by himself. Though kind to the poor, he had no pity on common beggars, who, he said, if able to go abroad to beg, were able also to earn four pence a day, and this sum was sufficient to keep any person above want or dependence in this country. He once attempted to imitate our Saviour by fasting forty days; but he was obliged to desist from the attempt. His weaknesses and eccentricities disappear before the splendor of his humanity and benevolence. His bold, determined, and uniform reprehension of the practice of slavery, in defiance of public opinion, does him the highest honor. The turbulence and severity of his temper were necessary at the time in which he lived; and the work which he began was completed by the meek and gentle Anthony Benezet. - Rush's Essays, 305-

LAWSON, John, a traveller, was surveyorgeneral of North Carolina. While exploring lands on the river Neus, accompanied by the Baron Graffenreid, the Indians seized him and solemnly tried him for encroaching on their territory, before a large council, and condemned and executed him in the autumn of 1712. This was the commencement of an Indian war. The baron escaped by representing, that he was not of the English party, but king of the Palatines. He published a journal of one thousand miles' travels amongst the Indians, with a description of North Carolina, 4to., London, 1700; the same, 1711; also the same at Hamburg, 1712; history of Carolina, 4to., London, 2d edit., 1714; the same, 1718. - Holmes, 1. 507.

311; Mass. Magazine, IV. 28-30. LAYNE, CHARLES, died in Campbell co., Va., friend in Philadelphia, he was asked to sit down in 1821, aged 121, leaving a wife aged 110. He to breakfast. He first inquired, "Dost thou keep | was a native of Virginia.

LEAKE, Walten, governor of Mississippi, succeeded Geo, Poindexter in 1821, and was succeeded by David Holmes in 1825. He was soldier of the Revolution. He died at Mount Salus, in Hines county, Miss., Nov. 17, 1825.

LEAMING, JEREMIAH, D. D., an Episcopal minister, died at New Haven in Sept., 1804, aged 86. He was born in Middletown, Conn., in 1719, and was graduated at Yale college in 1745. He preached in Newport, R. L. eight years; at Norwalk, Conn., twenty-one years; and at Stratford eight or nine years. In the Eniscopal controversy he wrote with great ability upon the subject. He published a defence of the Episcopal government of the church, containing remarks on some noted sermons on Presbyterian ordination. 1766; a second defence of the Episcopal goverument of the church, in answer to Noah Welles, 1770; evidences of the truth of Christianity, 1785; dissertations on various subjects, which may be well worth the attention of every Christian, 1789.

LEAR, Mrs., died at Portsmonth, N. H., in 1775, aged 103.

LEAR, HENJAMIN, a hermit, died at Sagamore Creek, in Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 17, 1802, aged 82. For more than twenty years he lived entirely alone, in a miserable hut; yet on his own farm, which was sufficient for the support of a large family. He tilled his land, milked his cows, made his butter and cheese, but subsisted entirely on butter and nilk. At the age of eighty-two his face was as free from wrinkles as that of a man of fifty. He died alone in the morning after a cold night, in which the thermometer was four degrees below zero.

LEAR, Toblas, colouel, died at Washington Oct. 11, 1816. He was consul-general at St. Domingo in 1802; he was afterwards consul-general at Tripoli, and in 1804 commissioner with Barron to negotiate a peace, which he effected, much to the dissatisfaction of Gen. Eaton, then at the head of an army at Derne, agreeing to pay for two hundred prisoners 60,000 dollars. At the time of his death Mr. Lear was accountant of the war department.

LEASURE, JOSEPH, died in Garrard county, Ky., July 21, 1836, aged 104; being born March 21, 1732. He walked seven miles the day of his death.

LEAVENWORTH, MARK, minister of Waterbury, Conn., died in 1797, aged about 80. He graduated at Yale in 1737, and was ordained in 1740. In the French war he was a chaplain. He published a sermon on the death of D. Southmayd, 1754; at the election, 1772.

LEAVENWORTH, HENRY, brigadier-general, died at Cross Timbers, one hundred and twenty miles west of fort Towson, July 22, 1834. He commanded on the southwest frontier.

LEAVITT, FREEGRACE, first minister of Somers, Conn., died in 1767, aged about 38. He graduated at Yale in 1745.

LEAVITT, Dudley, minister of the Tabernacle church, Salem, died in 1762, aged 42. Born in Stratham, he graduated at Harvard in 1739, LEAVITT, Dudley, died at Meredith, N. H.,

Sept. 22, 1851, aged 784 for half a century an abnance-maker. He was born in Evener.

ahnanac-maker. He was boru in Exeter.

LE HARON, FRANCIS, a physician, died in Plymonth in 1704, aged 36. A native of France, he was a surgeon in a privateer wrecked in Buzzard's Bay in 1696, and was made a prisoner. His surgical skill having been experienced at Plymouth, the people, although he was a Catholie, solicited his liberation and his residence among them. There he married. His son, Lazarus, who studied with Dr. Mackay, a Scotch physician of Southampton, L. I., after long practice, died in Plymouth in 1773, aged 75; and two of his sons died physicians in Plymouth, and another son, Lemuel, was the minister of Rochester.

LE HARON, LEMUEL, minister of Rochester, Mass., dipd in Nov., 1836, aged 89, in the sixty-fifth year of his ministry. He graduated at Yalo in 1768, and succeeded Ivory Hovey, and was succeeded by Thomas Robbins. He was a descendant of Dr. Francis Le Baron, who came to Plymonth from France. The Indian name of the village of Rochester was Mattapoisett, meaning a place of rest.

LECHFORD, Thomas, a lawyer from London, lived in Boston from 1638 to 1641. Being dissatisfied with the country, he returned to England. He published, plain-dealing, or news from New England's present government, ecclesiastical and civil, compared, etc., London, 1642.

LEDERER, JOHN, an early explorer to the west of Virginia, published his discoveries in three numbers in 1669 and 1670, translated from the Latin in 1672.— Cycl. Am. Lit.

LEDYARD, JOHN, a distinguished traveller, died Jan. 17, 1789, aged 38. He was born in Groton, Conn., in 1751. His father died while he was yet a child, and he was left under the care of a relative in Hartford. Here he enjoyed the advantages of a grammar school. After the death of his patron, when he was eighteen years of age, he was left to follow his own inclinations. With a view to the study of divinity he now passed a short time in Dartmouth college, where he had an opportunity of learning the manners of the Indians, as there were several Indian pupils in the seminary. His acquaintance with the savage character, gained in this place, was of no little advantage to him in the future periods of his life. His poverty obliging him to withdraw from the college before he had completed his education, and, not having a shilling in his pocket to defray the expense of a journey to Hartford, he t 38. He e Taberna-42. Born in 1739, lith, N. H., century an eter. in, died in

of France,

er of Som-

ed in Buza prisoner. crienced at as a Cathoresidence is son, Lazy, a Scotch long prac-5; and two ith, and an-Rochester. Rochester, the sixtyited at Yale

y, and was

e was a de-

ho came to

in name of

isett, meanom London, Being dised to Engr news from cclesiastical 2.

orer to the coveries in slated from

d traveller, as born in ied while he r the care of yed the adr the death years of age, ions. With w passed a iere he had ners of the in pupils in the savage of no little riods of his hdraw from his educas pocket to Iartford, he made him a cance, fifty feet in length and three to Yakutz, intending to wait for the conclusion of in breadth, and being generously supplied with some dried venison for his sea-stores, he embarked upon the Connecticut, and, going down that river, which is in many places rapid, and with which he was totally unacquainted, he arrived safely at Hartford, at the distance of one hundred and forty miles. He soon went to New York, and sailed for London in 1771, as a common sailor. When Captain Cook sailed on his third voyage of discovery, Ledyard, who felt an irresistible desire to explore those regions of the globe which were yet undiscovered, or imperfectly known, accepted the humble station of corporal of marines, rather than forego an opportunity so inviting to his inquisitive and adventurous spirit. He was a favorite of the illustrious navigator, and was one of the witnesses of his tragical end in 1778. He ascribed the fate of Cook to his rashness and injustice toward the natives. He surprised his American friends, who had heard nothing of him for eight years, by a visit in 1781. His mother kept a boarding-house at Southold; he took lodgings with her, and she did not recognize her son. Having offered his services to several merchants to conduct a trading voyage to the northwest coast, and meeting with no encouragement, he again embarked for England in 1782. He now resolved to traverse the continent of America from the northwest coast, which Cook had partly explored, to the eastern coast, with which he was already perfectly familiar. Disappointed in his intention of sailing on a voyage of commercial adventure to Nootka sound, he crossed the British channel to Ostend with only ten guineas in his purse, determined to travel overland to Kamschatka, whence the passage is short to the western count of America. When he came to the gulf of Borhnia, he attempted to cross the ice, that he might reach Kamschutka by the shortest way; but finding that the water was not frozen in the middle, he returned to Stockholm. He then travelled northward into the arctic circle, and, passing round the head of the gulf, descended on its eastern side to St. Peterslargh. There his extraordinary appearance attracted general notice. Without stockings or shoes, and too poor to provide himself with either, he was invited to dine with the Portuguese ambassador, who supplied him with twenty guineas, on the credit of Sir Joseph Banks. Through his interest he also obtained permission to accompany a detachment of stores destined to Yakutz for the use of Mr. Billings, an Englishman, who was intrusted with the schemes of northern discovery in which the empress was then engaged. From Yakutz, which is situated in Siberia, six thousand miles east of Pc-

the winter. Here, in consequence of some unaccountable suspicion, he was seized in the name of the empress by two Russian soldiers, who coaveyed him, in the depth of the winter, through the north of Tartary to the frontier of the Polish dominious, assuring him, at their departure, that, if he returned to Russia, he should certainly be hanged; but, if he chose to return to England, they wished him a pleasant journey. Poor, forlorn, and friendless, covered with rags, and exhausted by fatigue, disease, and misery, he proceeded to Konigsberg, where the interest of Sir Joseph Banks enabled him to procure the sum of five guineas, by means of which he arrived in England.

He immediately waited on Sir Joseph, who recommended him to an adventure as perilous as that from which he had just returned. He now was informed of the views of the association, which had been lately formed for promoting the discovery of the interior parts of Africa, which were then little known. Sparrman, Patterson, and Vaillant had travelled into Caffraria, and Nordon and Brace had enlarged the acquaintance of Europeans with Egypt, Nubia, and Abyssinia. In regard to other parts of this quarter of the globe, its geography, excepting in relation to its coasts, was involved in darkness. Ledyard engaged with enthusiasm in an enterprise, which he had already projected for himself; and, receiving from Sir Joseph a letter of introduction to one of the members of the committee appointed to direct the business and promote the object of the association, he went to him without delay. The description, which that gentleman has given of his first interview, strongly marks the character of this hardy traveller. "Before I had learned," says he, "from the note the name and business of my visitor, I was struck with the manliness of his person, the breadth of his chest, the openness of his countenance, and the inquietude of his eve. I spread the map of Africa before him, and, tracing a line from Cairo to Sennaar, and from thence westward in the latitude and supposed direction of the Niger, I told him that was the route by which I was anxious that Africa might, if possible, be explored. He said, he should think himself singularly fortunate to be intrusted with the adventure. I asked him when he would set out? To-morrow morning, was his answer."

From such zeal, decision, and intrepidity the society naturally formed the most sanguine expectations. He sailed from London June 30, 1788, and in thirty-six days arrived in the city of Alexandria; and, having there assumed the dress of an Egyptian traveller, proceeded to Cairo, which tersburgh, he proceeded to Oczakow, or Ochotsk, he reached Aug. 19th. He travelled with pecuon the Kamschatkan sea; but, as the navigation liar advantages. Endowed with an original and was completely obstructed by the ice, he returned comprehensive genius, he beheld with interest and described with energy the scenes and objects around him; and, by comparing them with what he had seen in other regions of the globe, he was enabled to give his narrative all the varied effect of contrast and resemblance. His remarks on Lower Egypt, had that country been less generally known, might have ranked with the most valuable of geographical records. They greatly heightened the opinion which his employers already entertained of his singular qualifications for the task which he had undertaken. Nor was his residence at Cairo altogether useless to the association. By visiting the slave markets, and by conversing with Jelahs, or travelling merchants of the earavans, he obtained without any expense a better idea of the people of Africa, of its trade, of its geography, and of the most prudent manner of travelling, than he could by any other means have acquired; and the communications on these subjects, which he transmitted to England, interesting and instructive as they were, afforded the society the most gratifying proofs of the ardent spirit of inquiry, the unwearied attention, the persevering research, and the laborious, indefatigable, anxious zeal, with which their author pursued the object of his mission,

He had announced to his employers, that he had received letters of earnest recommendation from the Aga; that the day of his departure was appointed; that his next dispatch would be dated from Sennaar; and the committee expected with impatience the result of his journey. But that journey was never to be performed. The vexation, occasioned by repeated delays in the departure of the caravan, brought on a bilious complaint, which, being increased at first by incautions treatment, ballied the skill of the most approved physicians of Cairo, and terminated his earthly existence.

The society heard with deep concern of the death of a man, whose high seuse of honor, magnanimous contempt of danger, and carnest zeal for the extension of knowledge had been so conspicuously displayed in their service; whose ardor, tempered by calm deliberation, whose daring spirit, seconded by the most prudent eaution, and whose impatience of control, united with the power of supporting any fatigue, seemed to have qualified him above all other men, for the very ardnous task of traversing the widest and most dangerous part of the continent of Africa. Despising the accidental distinctions of society, he seemed to regard no man as his superior; but his manners, though unpolished, were not disagreeable. His uncultivated genius was peculiar and capacions. The hardships to which he submitted, in the prosecution of his enterprises and in the indulgence of his curiosity, are almost incredible. He was sometimes glad to receive food as in charity to a der to avoid a heavier calamity. His judgment of the female character is very honorable to the sex. "I have always remarked," said he, "that women in all countries are civil and obliging, tender and humane; that they are ever inclined to be gay and cheerful, timorous and modest; and they do not hesitate, like men, to perform a generous action. Not haughty, not arrogant, not supercilions, they are full of courtesy, and fond of society; more liable in general to err than man, but in general also more virtuous, and performing more good actions than he. To a woman, whether civilized or savage, I never addressed myself in the language of decency and friendship, without receiving a decent and friendly answer. With man it has often been otherwise. In wandering over the barren plains of inhospitable Denmark, through honest Sweden, and frozen Lapland, rude and churlish Finland, unprincipled Itussia, and the widespread regions of the wandering Tartar; if hungry, dry, cold, wet, or sick, the women have ever been friendly to me, and uniformly so. And to add to this virtue, so worthy the appellation of benevolence, their actions have been performed in so free and kind a manner, that, if I was dry, I drank the sweetest draught, and if hungry, I ate the coarsest morsel, with a double relish.'

Besides his communication to the African association, he published an account of Cook's voyage in 1781. Several of his manuscripts were a few years ago in the hands of his brother, Dr. Isaac Ledyard, health officer of the city of New York. His life by J. Sparks was published in 1828.

LEDYARD, colonel, commanded in 1781 fort Griswold in Groton, Conn., on the Thames, exactly opposite to New London, when, Sept. 7, he was attacked by Col. Eyre with a large force. With one hundred and fifty men he fought bravely; Col. Eyre and Maj. Montgomery being killed. the command of the British devolved on Mai. Broomfield. When the fort was carried by assault with the bayonet, Broomfield inquired, who commanded. Ledvard replied: "I did command, sir, but you do now;" and presented to him his sword. The ferocious officer instantly run him through the body; and between sixty and seventy Americans were slaughtered, after they had surrendered. The whole American loss was seventythree killed; about thirty wounded; and about forty taken prisoners. The British loss was forty-eight killed, one hundred and forty-three wounded. On the other side of the river Arnold burned New London. Col. Ledyard was a brave. sensible, nolished, noble-minded citizen. He feli by the hand of a brutal assassin. His widow Ann married A. Hodge, and died at Philadelphia Nov. 8, 1848, aged nearly 91. - Dwight, II, 525.

of his curiosity, are almost ineredible. He was sometimes glad to receive food as in charity to a madmau, for that character he had assumed in ordinate in 1625, and was the son of Samuel L., an emi-udgment of e to the sex. that women tender and d to be gay and they do generous acot supercild of society; man, but in rming more an, whether ed myself in ship, without wer. With n wandering le Denmark, apland, rude Russia, and ering Tartar; women have ıly so. And ppellation of performed in I was dry, I hungry, I ate elish." African assolook's voyage s were a few ier, Dr. Isaac f New York. in 1828. in 1781 fort ames, exactly pt. 7, he was force. With ght bravely; being killed, ved on Maj. ed by assault ed, who comid command, d to him his ntly run him y and seventy hey had surwas seventy-; und about ish loss was d forty-three river Arnold was a brave.

zen. He fell

His widow

Philadelphia

eight, 11. 525.

Bristol, R. I.,

rn in London

l I.., an emi-

ited. At the age of fifteen he went for his education to Oxford, where he was admitted to the degree of master of arts in 1648. He was soon settled in a fellowship in Waldham college, and in 1651 was appointed a proctor of the university. He was afterwards preferred by Cromwell to a church near Bishopsgate in London, but was ejected in 1662. He was then a lecturer of Great St. Helen's church in London. After the restoration he was not silenced for nonconformity, for he had no preferment to lose; but he lived for some time in Oxfordshire, oceasionally preaching. In 1678 he removed to Newington-green, near London, where he was for several years minister of an Independent church. His learned tutor, Bishop Wilkins, advised him to enter the established church; but his views of truth and duty would not suffer him to do it. Being apprehensive that the rights of conscience would soon be further invaded by the return of Popery, he in June, 1686, removed to New England, and preached in the town of Bristol. When a church was formed May 8, 1687, he was chosen minister. After the Revolution in his native country, he was eagerly desirous of returning. Just before he sailed in 1691, he told his wife that he had viewed a star, which, according to the rules of astrology, presaged captivity. He was accordingly captured by a French privateer, and carried into St. Maloe, in France, where he died about the time of Christmas, and was buried without the city as a heretic. He was a very learned man, who spoke Latin with elegance, was a master of physic and chemistry, and well versed in all the liberal arts and sciences. He had studied the astrological art, but, disapproving of it, he burned a hundred books, which related to the subject. Though a conscientious nonconformist, he possessed a catholic, liberal spirit. His learning was united with charity, and the poor were often relieved by his bounty. In a manuscript treatise on Rev. XI., he expressed his belief that the period of 1260 years would end between 1716 and 1736, and that the broad wings of the eagle mean the eastern and western empires. He published Chronicon Cestrense, an exact chronology of all the rulers of Cheshire and Chester, in church and state, from the foundation of the city, 1656; orbis miraculum, or the temple of Solomon portrayed by scripture light, folio, 1659; this was printed at the charge of the university; de excidio antichristi, folio, 1659; a sermon on the means to be used for the conversion of earnal relations, 1661; contemplations on mortality, 8vo., 1669; a sermon on secret prayer, 1674; the visibility of the true church, 1675; the triumph of mercy in the chariot of praise, a discourse of secret and preventing mercies, 1677; two discourses on the mournful state of the church, with was dispatched to New York to prevent the

nent and wealthy citizen, whose estate he inher- | a prospect of her dawning glory, 1679; a dissertation on the ancient and successive state of the Jews, with Scripture evidence of their future conversion and establishment in their own land, 1679; this is printed with Fletcher's Israel redux; the joy of faith, 1689; answer to many queries relative to America, as to its natural productions, diseases, etc., 1690; the great day of judgment, preached before a court at Bristol, 1695. He also wrote a preface to John Rowe's Immanuel. with his life. His triumph of mercy was much read in New England; Judge Davis says, it is now, with his other works, "lost in oblivion." But I have a copy in my possession, printed at Boston, 1718; also a copy of his contemplations on mortality. They display learning and genius. Wood's Ath. Oxonienses, II. 882, 883; Calamy's Nonconformists' Memorial, 1. 104; Mather, III. 223; Account of origin of Bristol; Sprague's Annals.

> LEE, CHARLES, a major-general in the army of the United States, died Oct. 2, 1782. He was born in Wales, and was the son of John Lee, a colonel in the British service. He entered the army at a very early age; but, though he possessed a military spirit, he was ardent in the pursuit of knowledge. He acquired a competent skill in Greek and Latin, while his fondness for travelling made him acquainted with the Italian, Spanish, German, and French languages. In 1756 he came to America, and was engaged in the attack upon Ticonderoga in July, 1758, when Abererombie was defeated. In 1762 he bore a colonel's commission, and served under Burgoyne in Portugal, where he much distinguished himself. Not long afterwards he entered into the Polish service. Though he was absent when the stamp act passed, he yet by his letters zealously supported the cause of America. In the years 1771, 1772, and 1773, he rambled over all Europe. During this excursion he was engaged with an otheer in Italy in an affair of honor, and he murdered his antagonist, escaping himself with the loss of two fingers. Having lost the favor of the ministry and the hopes of promotion in consequence of his political sentiments, he came to America in Nov., 1773. He travelled through the country, animating the colonies to resistance. In 1774 he was induced, by the persuasion of his friend, General Gates, to purchase a valuable tract of land of two or three thousand acres in Berkeley county, Va. Here he resided till the following year, when he resigned a commission which he held in the British service, and accepted a commission from congress, appointing him major-general. He accompanied Washington to the camp at Cambridge, where he arrived July 2, 1775, and was received with every mark of respect. In the beginning of the following year he

British from obtaining possession of the city and the Hudson. This trust he executed with great wisdom and energy. He disarmed all suspicious persons on Long Island, and drew up a test to be offered to every one whose attachment to the American cause was doubted. His bold measures carried terror wherever he appeared. He seems to have been very fond of this application of a test: for, in a letter to the president of congress, he informs him that he had taken the liberty at Newport to administer to a number of the tories a very strong oath, one article of which was, that they should take arms in defence of their country, if called upon by congress; and he recommends that this measure should be adopted in reference to all the tories in America. Those fanatics who might refuse to take it, he thought, should be carried into the interior. Being sent into the southern colonies, as commander of all the forces which should there be raised, he diffused an ardor among the soldiers which was attended by the most salutary consequences. In October, by the direction of congress, he repaired to the northern army. As he was marching from the Hudson through New Jersey, to form a junction with Washington in Pennsylvania, he quitted his camp in Morris county to reconnoitre. In this employment he went to the distance of three miles from the camp, and entered a house for breakfast, A British colonel became acquainted with his situation by intercepting a countryman, charged with a letter from him, and was enabled to take him prisoner. He was instantly mounted on a horse, without his cloak and hat, and carried safely to New York. He was detained till April or May, 1778, when he was exchanged for General Prescott, taken at Newport. He was very soon engaged in the battle of Monmouth. Being detached by the commander-in-chief to make an attack upon the rear of the enemy, Washington was pressing forward to support him, June 28th, when, to his astonishment, he found him retreating without having made a single effort to maintain his ground. Meeting him in these eircumstances, without any previous notice of his plans, Washington addressed him in terms of some warmth. Lee, being ordered to check the enemy, conducted himself with his usual bravery, and, when forced from the ground, on which he had been placed, brought off his troops in good order. But his haughty temper could not brook the indignity which he believed to have been offered him on the field of battle, and he addressed a letter to Washington, requiring reparation for the injury. He was on the 30th arrested for disobedience of orders, for misbehavior before the enemy, and for disrespect to the commander-in-chief. Of these charges he was found guilty by a court was sentenced to be suspended for one year. He defended himself with his accustomed ability. and his retreat seems to be justified from the circumstance of his having advanced upon an enemy whose strength was much greater than was apprchended, and from his being in a situation, with a morass in his rear, which would preclude him from a retreat, if the British should have proved victorious. But his disrespectful letters to the commander-in-chief it is not easy to justify. His suspension gave general satisfaction to the army, for he was suspected of aiming himself at the supreme command. After the result of his trial was confirmed by congress, in Jan., 1780, he retired to his estate in Berkeley county, where he lived in a style peculiar to himself. Glass windows and plaster would have been extravagances in his house. Though he had for his companions a few select authors and his dogs, yet, as he found his situation too solitary and irksome, he sold his farm in the fall of 1782, that in a different abode he might enjoy the conversation of mankind. He went to Philadelphia, and took lodgings in an inn. After being three or four days in the city he was seized with a fever, which terminated his life. The last words which he uttered were : "Stand by me, my brave grenadiers."

In his person Gen. Lee was rather above the middle size, and his remarkable aquiline nose rendered his face somewhat disagreeable. He was master of a most genteel address, but was rude in his manners and excessively negligent in his appearance and behavior. His appetite was so whimsical, that he was everywhere a most troublesome guest. Two or three dogs usually followed him wherever he went. As an officer he was brave and abie, and did much towards disciplining the American army. With vigorous powers of mind and a brilliant fancy, he was a correct and elegant classical scholar, and he both wrote and spoke his native language with propriety, force, and beauty. His temper was severe. The history of his life is little else than the history of disputes, quarrels, and duels in every part of the world. He was vindictive, avaricious, immoral, impious, and profanc. His principles, as would be expected from his character, were most abandoned, and he ridiculed every tenet of religion. He published about the year 1760 a pamphlet on the importance of retaining Canada. After his death, memoirs of his life, with his essays and letters, were published, 12mo., 1792. - Lee's Memoirs.

letter to Washington, requiring reparation for the injury. He was on the 30th arrested for disobedience of orders, for misbehavior before the enemy, and for disrespect to the commander-in-chief. Of these charges he was found guilty by a court martial, at which Lord Stirling presided, and he

one year. ned ability, om the cirn an enemy an was apa situation, d preclude hould have ul letters to y to justify. tion to the himself at esult of his n., 1780, he y, where he Glass wintravagances is compans, yet, as he irksome, he t in a differrersation of a, and took hree or four fever, which which he utgrenadiers." er above the quiline nose ceable. He ess, but was negligent in appetite was here a most dogs usually As an officer uch towards ith vigorous ey, he was a and he both with propriwas severe. than the hisin every part e, avaricious, is principles, aracter, were very tenet of year 1760 a taining Canhis life, with t of congress, was a native outh devoted ountry. His atford, Westpresident of ished, 12mo.,

the council, who died in 1750, leaving six sons, | 183, 209, 402, 409; Gordon, II. 274; Warren, all of whom were men of distinction; Philip Ludwell, a member of the council, Thomas Ludwell, a member of the assembly, Richard Henry, Francis Lightfoot, William, and Arthur. Richard Henry was born Jan. 20, 1732. He was edueated in a school at Wakefield, Yorkshire, England. He had a seat in the house of burgesses in 1757; but it was only after several years, that he was able to surmount his natural diflidence. His public life was distinguished by some remarkable circumstances. He had the honor of originating the first resistance to British oppression in the time of the stamp act in 1765. He proposed in the Virginia house of burgesses in 1773, the formation of a committee of correspondence, whose object was to disseminate information, and to kindle the flame of liberty throughout the continent. He was a member of the first congress, in 1774, and in October prepared the draft of the memorial to the people of British America, ordered by congress. He also made and ably supported the Declaration of Independence June 7, 1776. From June 10th till Aug., he was absent from congress on account of the sickness of his family. The second eloquent address to the people of Great Britain was drawn up by him as chairman of the committee. After the adoption of the articles of the confederation, he was under the necessity of withdrawing from congress, as no representative was allowed to continue in congress more than three years in any term of six years; but he was re-elected in 1784, and continued till 1787. It was in Nov., 1784, that he was chosen president of congress. When the constitution of the United States was submitted to the consideration of the public, he contended for the necessity of amendments previously to its adoption. After the government was organized, he and Mr. Grayson was chosen the first senators from Virginia in 1789. This station he held till his resignation in 1792, when John Taylor was appointed in his place. Mr. Lee died at his seat at Chantilly in Westmoreland county, Va. By two marriages he left many children. He supported through life the character of a philosopher, a patriot, and a sage; and he died as he had lived, blessing his country. A letter which he wrote against Deane is published in the Virginia Gazette of Jan. 1, and the Independent Chronicle of Feb. 11, 1779, and a letter to Gov. Randolph respecting the constitution in the American museum. He is supposed to have been the author of observations leading to a fair examination of the system of government, proposed by the late convention, in letters from the Federal Farmer to the Republican, 1787. Ilis life, with his correspondence, was published by R. H. Lee in 2 vols., 8vo., 1825. — Gazette of United States, July 8, 1794; Marshall, II. 180- series of letters, under the signature of Junius

t. 306; Hotmes' Annals, II. 401; American Museum, 11. 553-558; Jay's Memoirs, 11. 382.

LEE, FRANCIS LIGHTFOOT, a statesman of Virginia, brother of the preceding, died in April, 1797, aged 62. He was born Oct. 14, 1734. He was educated under the care of Mr. Craig, a domestic tutor. The estate, bequenthed him by his father, was in the county of Low ban, nom which county he was a member of the house of burgesses in 1765. In 1772, having married the daughter of Col. John Tayloe of Richmond, he removed to that county. In 1775 the convention of Virginia elected him a member of congress, in which body he continued till the spring of 1779. He was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. Though he seldom took part in the public discussions, his patriotic spirit was not less determined than that of his brother, Richard Henry Lee. After being called again to the legislature of Virginia, he withdrew from public life for the quietness of domestic retirement. In his disposition he was benevolent; his manners were courteous; and in his intercourse with his friends he was uncommonly interesting and instructive. At the approach of death the gospel gave him consolation and hope. He died of the pleurisy, and his wife in a few days afterwards died of the same disease.

LEE, WILLIAM, brother of the preceding, was born about 1737, and was sent to London before the Revolution as the agent of Virginia. Being a zealous whig, and a favorite of the livery of London, he was elected one of the sheriffs in 1773. During the Revolution he was the agent of congress at Vienna and Berlin.

LEE, ARTHUR, M. D., minister of the United States to the court of Versailles, the youngest brother of the preceding, died Dec. 14, 1782, aged nearly 42. He was born in Virginia Dec. 20, 1740. He was educated at the university of Edinburgh, where he also pursued for some time the study of medicine. On his return to this country he practised physic four or five years in Williamsburg. He then went to London about 1766, and commenced the study of the law in the Temple. At this time he became the intimate friend of Sir William Jones. During his residence in England he kept his eye upon the measures of government, and rendered the most important services to his country by sending to America the earliest intelligence of the plans of the ministry. When the instructions of Gov. Bernard were sent over, he at the same time communicated information to the town of Boston, respecting the nature of them. In 1769 he wrote his Monitor's letters in vindication of the colonial rights. From 1770 to 1776 he enjoyed a lucrative practice of law. At this period he wrote a

Americanus, which were much celebrated. In | patriotism, of a sound understanding, of great 1775 he was in London as the agent of Virginia, and he presented, in August, the second petition now directed to the good of his country. When Mr. Jefferson declined the appointment of a minister to France, Dr. Lee was appointed in his place, and he joined his colleagues, Dr. Franklin and Mr. Deane, at Paris, in Dec., 1776. He assi-ted in negotiating the treaty with France. In

he and Mr. Adams, who had taken the pace of Deane, were recalled, and Dr. Franklin was appointed sole minister to France. His return had been rendered necessary by the malicious accusations with which Deane had assailed his public conduct. In the preceding year, Deane had left Paris, agreeably to an order of congress, and come to this country in the same ship with the French minister, Gerard. On his arrival, as many suspicions hovered around him, he thought it necessary to re al them by attacking the character of his colleague, Dr. Lee. In an inflammatory address to the public he vilified him in the grossest terms, charging him with obstructing the alliance with France, and disclosing the secrets of congress to British noblemen. He at the same time impeached the conduct of his brother, William Lee, agent for congress at the courts of Vienna and Berlin. Dr. Lee also was not on very good terms with Dr. Franklin, whom he believed to be too much under the influence of the French court. Firm in his attachment to the interests of his country, honest, zealous, he was inclined to question the correctness of all the commercial transactions in which the philosopher had been engaged. These dissensions among the ministers produced corresponding divisions in congress, and Monsieur Gerard had so little respect to the dignity of an ambassador, as to become a zealous partizan of Deane. Dr. Lee had many friends in congress, but Dr. Franklin had more. When the former returned to America in 1780, such was his integrity that he did not find it difficult to reinstate himself fully in the good opinion of the public. In 1784 he was appointed one of the commissioners for holding a treaty with the Indians of the Six Nations. He accordingly went to fort Schuyler and executed this trust in a manner which did him much honor. In Feb., 1790, he was admitted a counsellor of the supreme court of the United States by a special order. Having purchased a farm in the county of Middlesex, near Urbana, on the banks of the Rappahannock, while assisting in planting an orchard he exposed himself in a cold and rainy day, in consequence of which he died of the pleurisy. He was never married. He was a distinguished scholar, being well skilled not only in the Greek and Latin, but also in the French, Spanish, and probity, of plain manners, and strong passions. During his residence for a number of years in of congress to the king. All his exertions were England he was indefatigable in his exertions to promote the interests of his country. Besides the Monitor's letters, written in 1769, and the letters of Junius Americanus, he wrote an appeal to the English nation; he also published extracts from a letter to the president of congress, in answer to a libel by Silas Deane, 1780; and observations on certain commercial transactions in France, laid before congress, 1780. His life by R. H. Lee was published in 2 vols., 8vo., 1829. This work centains many of his letters. His public letters are published in Sparks' diplomatic correspondence.

LEE, Ann, founder of the sect of Shakers in America, died Sept. 8, 1784. She was born in Manchester, England, about 1736, and was the daughter of a blacksmith, who lived in Toad lane. Her trade was that of a cutter of hatter's fur. Not being instructed in what she afterwards taught was the way of rectitude, she committed the sin of marrying Abraham Standley, a blacksmith, who lived in her father's house. Her four children died in infancy. At the age of twenty-two, about 1758, she became a convert to James Wadley, who was originally a Quaker, but who, in 1747, imagining that he had supernatural visions and revelations, established the sect, called Shakers, from their bodily agitations. Having become a member of this society, - which was merely a new form of the fanaticism of the French prophets fifty years before, — she passed through the exercises of the sect. In her fits, as she clinched her hands, it is said the blood flowed through the pores of her skin. Her flesh wasted away, and in her weakness she was fed like an infant. Thus was she exercised nine years, by the end of which time, it might be thought, she had lost her reason. At length, about 1770, she made the discovery of the wickedness of marriage, and opened her testimony against it. She called herself "Ann, the word," signifying, that in her dwelt the word, and to this day her followers say, that "the man who was called Jesus, and the woman who was called Ann, are verily the two first pillars of the church, the two anointed ones," etc. Soon after Mrs. Standley began her testimony against "the root of human depravity," her exercises induced the people of Manchester to shut her up in a madhouse, where she was kept several weeks. She came to America in the ship Maria, Capt. Smith, and arrived at New York in May, 1774, having as her companions her brother, Wm. Lee, James Whitaker, John Hocknell, called elders, and others. As her husband's name is not mentioned, probably he was left behind. During the voyage the ship sprung a leak, and she and the elders, Italian languages. He was a man of uniform being strong and lusty, put their hands to the

LEE.

, of great passions. f years in ertions to tesides the the letters eal to the racts from answer to servations n France, by R. H. 829. This His public

matic cor-

Shakers in orn in Manthe daughlane. Her s fur. Not ards taught ted the sin ksmith, who our children y-two, about es Wadley, ho, in 1747, visions and ed Shakers, g become a as merely a rench prophthrough the she clinched through the away, and in nfant. Thus end of which t her reason. discovery of ened her teself " Ann, the he word, and the man who ho was called f the church, n after Mrs. st "the root induced the up in a madweeks. She Capt. Smith, 774, having as . Lee, James ders, and othot mentioned, ng the voyage id the elders, hands to the pumps, and the ship arrived safe; in consequence, as the Shakers say in their book, of their " power, which was above the natural power of man." In the spring of 1776, she went to Albany, and thence to Niskeuna, now Watervliet, eight miles from Albany. Here she and her followers lived unknown a few years, holding their meetings as

But in the beginning of 1780, when there was an unusual religious commotion, principally among the Baptists in New Lebanon and some adjacent towns, in the midst of the wildness and extravagance of fanatacism some account of the elect lady reached the bewildered enthusiasts. Immediately the road to Niskeuna was crowded with deluded beings in quest of greater delusions. The mother received them with many smiles, and told them she knew of their coming before; declared herself to be the woman clothed with the sun, mentioned in the twelfth chapter of the revelation; claimed the power of ministering the Holy Spirit to whom she pleased; asserted that she was daily judging the dead of all nations, who came to her for that purpose; and that no favor could be shown to any person but through the confession of their sins unto her. These impious pretensions, enforced upon persons, some of whom were already bereft of reason, by the magical charms of wry looks, odd postures, whimsical gestures, unintelligible mutterings, alternate groans and laughter, and the solemn ceremony of hopping, dancing, and whirling, completed the work of converting rational beings into idiots, and brought her in a fine harvest of deluded fol-One of these was Valentine Rathbun, a Baptist minister; who, however, in about three months recovered his senses, and published a pamphlet against the imposture. He says, that there attended this infatuation an inexplicable agency upon the body, to which he himself was subjected, that affected the nerves suddenly and forcibly, like the electric fluid, and was followed by tremblings and the complete deprivation of When the good mother had somewhat established her authority with her new disciples, she warned them of the great sin of following the vain customs of the world, and having fleeced them of their ear-rings, necklaces, buckles, and every thing which might nourish pride, and having cut off their hair close by their ears, she admitted them into her church. Thus metamorphosed, they were ashamed to be seen by their old acquaintance, and would be induced to continue Shakers to save themselves from further humiliation. The impostor asserted, that she was not liable to the assaults of death, and that, when she left this world, she should ascend in the twinkling of an eye to heaven. But, unhappily for her claims, she was not exempted from the

are mouldering in the vile ground. She died at Watervliet. After her death James Whitaker was head man; and after his death in 1787, Elder Joseph Meacham and Lucy Wright, a native of Pittsfield, Mass., stood in the "spiritual relation of a joint parentage" to the society; and on Meacham's death in 1796, Lucy Wright, as she chose to be called, though her husband, Mr. Goodrich, was still living, stood to the Shakers "in the order of the first mother of their redemption." There are now several societies in different parts of our country. Rejecting the ordinances which Jesus Christ most expressly enjoined; and substituting revelations and impressions upon their minds, in the place of the consistent and plain instructions of Scripture, they are to be classed with those, who choose rather to be guided by their own reason or imagination, than by the wisdom of God. Of the art of Mother Ann, an instance is given in the account of Col. John Brown. She had the gift of speaking in an unknown tongue. An honest man, who was once her follower, assured me, that in her presence he once uttered many unmeaning words with Latin and Dutch terminations, - for he had studied the Latin Grammar and knew a little of the Dutch, - and asked her what it meant, when she replied, that "He was talking to the spirits, and they understood his language." But, he remarked, he knew better when she said so, for he could not understand it himself. Tho. Brown, who was once a Shaker, and published an account of the Shakers in 1812, gives the following specimen of one of his miraculous speeches: "Liero devo jirankemango, ad sileabana, durem suhramo devirante diacerimango, jasse vah pe eri evanigalio; de vom grom seb erinom, os vare eremo domo." Learned inquirers into the affinities of spiritual languages and unknown tongues may compare this precious morsel with the following, which was uttered by one of Mr. Irving's congregation in London in 1831:

" Hippo-gerosto hippo booros senocte Foorime oorin hoope tanto noostin Noorastin nipsros hipanos bantos boorin O Pin'tos eleiastino haiimungitos dantitu Hampootine farimi aristos ekrampos Epoongos vangami beresessino tereston Sa tinoctino alinocsis O fastos sunger O fuston sunger Eletanteti eretine menati."

As to the moral character of Mother Ann, Reuben Rathbun, who was once a Shaker, testifies, that he once saw her come to hard blows with Wm. Lee. He adds, "it appears to me, that the mother, at that time, was very much overcome with strong liquor." He considered her also as well skilled in profane and indecent language. But, whatever might have been her moral deportment, it is one of the deplorable facts, of which the history of the world is full, evineing the blindsame event which befalls beasts, and her bones ness and depravity of man, that rational beings should yield their minds to her blasphemous religious pretensions.— New York Theol. Mag. 1. 82; V. Rathbun's Hints; D. Rathbun's, Taylor's, West's and Brown's Account of Shakers.

LEE, JONATHAN, first minister in Salisbury, Conn., died Oct. 10, 1788, aged 70. He was the son of David Lee of Coventry, who married in 1695 Lydia Strong, daughter of Jedidiah Strong and Freedom Woodward, and grand-daughter of Elder John Strong, and about 1709 removed from Northampton to Coventry. David Lee's parents were John Lee, who died in 1690, and Mary Hart 7 armington. Mr. Lee was born in about 1718; was graduated at Yale colles in 1742; and, having studied theology with Mr. Williams of Lebanon, was ordained Nov. 23, 1744. The church of Salisbury was formed on the principles of the Cambridge platform; the association of the county, adhering to the Saybrook platform, suspended the ministers who ordained Mr. Lee, - Mr. Humphreys of Derby, Mr. Leavenworth of Waterbury, and Mr. Todd of Northbury. A fierce zeal against the zealous Calvinistic preachers occasioned this and other strange proceedings in Connecticut, which are related by Dr. Trumbull. His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Joseph Metcalf of Falmouth, Mass.; his second was Love Graham Brinkerhoff, a widow, the daughter of Rev. Mr. Graham. He had eleven children, of whom Elizabeth married Rev. Thomas Allen; Love married Rev. Aaron Cook Collins; Elisha Lee lived in Sheffield; and Dr. Chauncey Lee was minister of Marlborough, Conn. He was an animated and popular preacher. He published the election sermon, 1766; a sermon on the death of Abigail Spencer, 1787.

LEE, John, born in Marblehead, at the commencement of the Revolutionary war commanded a private armed vessel, owned by the Tracys, merchants. With a vessel of six iron guns and some wooden ones he captured a heavy armed merchantman; approaching in the dark, and extending indistinct lights beyond the bowsprit and stern to produce the appearance of great length, he produced a ready submission to the inferior force of the shrewd Yankee. In his last days he amended his habits, and became considerate meek, and patient in suffering, and was cheered with the Christian hope. — Knapp's Lectures.

LEE, Joseph, died at Cambridge Dec. 5, 1802, aged 93. A graduate of 1729, he was a justice of the common pleas.

LEE, JOHN, a physician of great promise, died at Ashfield, Mass., in 1813, aged 27. He was born in Amherst. — Williams' Amer. Med. Biog.

LEE, JESSE, called the apostle of American Methodism, died in August, 1816, aged 58, and was buried at Baltimore. He was born in Prince George's county, Virginia, and he was a minister of zeal and ability, and the apostle of Methodism, especially in the New England States.

LEE, Joseph, first minister of Royalston, Mass., born at Concord, was graduated at Harvard in 1765; ordained Oct. 19, 1768; and died Feb. 16, 1819, aged 77. He published four sermons, 12me., 1782; a sermon at the ordination of W. B. Wesson, 1803; half-century, 1818.

LEE, EZRA, captain, an officer in the Revolutionary war, died at Lyme, Conn., Oct. 29, 1821, aged 72. He was selected by Gen. Parsons, at the request of Washington, to navigate Bushnell's submarine vessel, called the marine turtle, in the harbor of New York, for the purpose of blowing up the British ship Asia. The copper of the ship prevented him from attaching the instrument of destruction to it, though he toiled two hours under water; but the explosion at a little distance alarmed the fleet and caused its removal to the Hook. He was amiable and henevolent, and respected for his valor, having fought bravely in several battles.

LEE, Thomas Sim. governor of Maryland, from 1779 to 1783, was afterwards a member of congress, and of the convention which formed the constitution. He was again chosen governor in 1792. He died at Needwood, in Frederic county, Nov. 9, 1819, aged 75. He was much attached to agricultural pursuits.

LEE, CHARLES, attorney-general of the United States, succeeded Mr. Bradford Dec. 10, 1795, and was succeeded by L. Lincoln in 1801. He died in Fauquier county, Virginia, June 24, 1815, aged 58.

LEE, HENRY, general, governor of Virginia, died March 25, 1818, aged 62. He was born in Virginia Jan. 29, 1756, and was graduated at Princeton college in 1773. While his father, in 1774, was engaged in negotiating a treaty with the Indian tribes, he was intrusted with the menagement of the private concerns of the family. In 1776 he was appointed a captain of cavalry under Col. Bland; in Sept., 1777, he joined the main army. His skill in discipline and gallant bearing soon attracted the notice of Washington. He was soon promoted to the rank of major, with the command of a separate corps of cavalry, and then advanced to the rank of lieut.-colonel. From 1780 to the end of the war he served under Greene. The services of Lee's legion in various actions were very important. Ho particularly distinguished himself in the battle of Guilford; afterwards he succeeded in capturing fort Cornwallis and other forts; he was also conspicuous at Ninety-six and at the Eutaw Springs. In 1786 he was appointed a delegate to congress from Virginia, in which body he remained till the constitution was adopted. In the convention of Virginia he advocated its adoption. In 1791 he succeeded Beverly Randolph as governor, and n, Mass., rvard in Feb. 16. s, 12mo., B. Westhodism,

Revolu-29, 1821, rsons, at te Bushne turtle, urpose of copper of the inhe toiled sion at a aused its e and ber, having

Maryland, ember of h formed governor Frederic was much

he United 10, 1795, 801. He 24, 1815,

f Virginia,

duated at father, in reaty with the manhe family. of eavalry joined the nd gallant ashington. of major, of eavalry, it.-colonel. rved under in various articularly Guilford; fort Cornonspicuous rings. In gress from ill the con-

rention of n 1791 he

ernor, and

remained in office three years. By appointment | 1785; an inquiry as to a willingness to be of Washington, he commanded the forces sent to suppress the whiskey insurrection in Pennsylvania. In 1709, while a member of congress, he was selected to pronounce a funeral oration on Washington. After the accession of Mr. Jefferson in 1801 he retired to private life. In his last venrs he was distressed by pecuniary embarrassments. While confined, in 1809, within the bounds of Spottsylvania county for debt, he wrote his valuable memoirs of the southern campaigns. Being in Baltimore in 1814, when the mob attacked a printing-office, he was one of the defenders, and was carried to jail for safety; in the attack on the jail, when Gen. Lingan was killed, he was severely wounded. Repairing to the West Indies for his health, on his return he died at Cumberland island, near St. Mary's, Georgia, at Mrs. Shaw's, the daughter of Gen. Green. By his wounds at Baltimore he was rendered decrepid, and afterwards life was a burden. It has been represented, that he was dissipated and without moral principle. Being once taken by an officer for debt, the ingenuity of the soldier procured his release from the sheriff; he told him, he was glad that he was about to lodge him in prison, for he had been bitten by a mad dog and might do mischief. After a while, as they were riding, he began to rave, and the terrified officer was glad to escape from a man who had ad dog! General Lee's son, been bitten by , pul lished a work, entitled, the Major Henry I campaign of 1781, etc., the design of which was to vindicate the memory of his father against the representations which are to be found in Johnson's life of General Greene. General Lee himself published an oration on the death of Washington, 1800; memoirs of the war in the south, 2 vols., 8vo., 1812.

LEE, THOMAS BLAND, a member of the first congress from Virginia, died at Washington March 12, 1827, aged 65 years. He enjoyed the friendship and confidence of Mr. Madison, and was a man of high talents and public virtue.

LEE, ELIAS, a Baptist minister, died at Balls-

ton Spa in 1829, aged 63.

LEE, FRANCIS, died in Boston in 1830, leaving by his will 20,000 dollars to the McLean asylum for the insane.

LEE, Andrew, D. D., minister of Lisbon, Conn., died Aug. 25, 1832, aged 87. He was born in Lyme, the son of John Lee, a lawyer, who died when his son was an infant. He graduated at Yale in 1766; was ordained at Hanover. now Lisbon, in 1768; and toiled as a minister till within a year of his decease. He was beloved and honored. At the time of the Revolution he was a glowing patriot. In his theology he avoided extremes, and was rather liberal. He published damned, 1786; at the ordination of J. Ellis, 1789; of D. Palmer, 1800; declensions of Christianity, 1793; at election, 1795; two discourses on Rom. IX., 1811; n half-century sermon, 1818; sermons, 8vo., 1803. - Sprague's Annals.

LEE, ELISHA, n lawyer of Sheffield, Mass., died in 1835, nged about 78. He was the son of Rev. Jonathan Lee, and graduated at Yale in 1777; in 1784 he settled at Sheffield. Mr. Sedgwick was settled there previously. His wife was the widow of Rev. Moses Allen of Georgia. He sustained a high Christian character.

LEE, ELIZABETH, Mrs., died in Baltimore in April, 1836, aged 112 years.

LEE, THOMAS G., M. D., died in Charlestown, Mass., Oct. 29, 1836, aged 28, superintendent of the McLean asylum, a man of talents and usefulness. LEE, HENRY, consul at Algiers, died in Paris in 1837, aged 50. He was the son of Gen. Henry Lee, born at Stratford, Vn., and educated at William and Mary college. He served as a major in the war of 1812. In vindication of his father's fame he published the campaigns of 1782, in the Carolinas, 1782; observations on the writings of Jefferson, 1832; an incomplete life of Napoleon. 1835. -- Cycl. of Am. Lit.

LEE, THOMAS, died at Charleston, S. C., in 1839, aged 69. He was judge of the United States court for South Carolina, and held various offices, and was much respected.

LEE, SAMUEL, general, a soldier of the Revelution, died at Barre, his birth-place, Oct. 17, 1839, aged 72. His monument of marble, proteeted by a portico and roof of granite, cost 2,000 dollars. It has inscribed these lines:

"To freedom's cause his ardent youth was given; His riper age to rural cares and Heaven."

His son Charles, a merchant of Boston, perished in the Lexington steamboat, when it was burnt in the sound, Jan. 13, 1840, aged 43. - Boston Advertiser, July 13, 1851.

LEE, WILLIAM, died at Boston in 1840, formerly consul at Bordeaux, late second auditor of the treasury of the United States.

LEE, GIDEON, died at Geneva, N. Y., Aug. 21, 1841, aged 63; born in Amherst, Mass. He was a dealer in leather in New York, and mayor; also member of congress. He was a man of talents, integrity, and philanthropy, and acquired a large

LEE, CHAUNCEY, D. D., minister of Colebrook, Conn., died in Hartwick, N. Y., Nov. 5 or Dec., 1842, aged 79. He was the son of Rev. Jonathan Lee of Salisbury by his second wife, who was the widow Love Brinkerhof, the daughter of Rev. John Graham of Southbury. He graduated at Yale in 1784, and studied law with Mr. a fast sermon, 1776; at the funeral of B. Throop, Reeve of Litchfield, and then practised there for

West, and was ordained in Sunderland, Vt., in 1700; another pastor was settled the same day in another part of the town, who gained in a lawsuit some land which had been given to the first settled minister, as he was settled two minutes the first! After about seven years he left S., and resided in Lansingburgh and Hudson as a teacher and preacher. Installed in Colebrook in 1800, he remained there twenty-seven years, and was then pastor of Marlborough, Conn., eight years. For the last five or six years of his life he resided with one of his sons in Hartwick, N. Y. By his wife, Abigail Staunton, he had a son, Chauneey Graham, who was a minister; his second wife was the widow of A. Spencer, the brother of Chief Justice Spencer of New York; his third wife he married in 1818. Dr. Lee was courteous and gentlemanly, and had a kindly, a benignant spirit. In his theology he was attached to the ancient school, and rejected modern novelties, against which he wrote in his letters. He was a writer of poetry and was skilled in music. Sometimes he indulged in sallies of harmless wit, which amused, but which he sometimes lamented. He was a classical scholar and a man of learning. He published an arithmetic, 1797; a poetical version of Job, 1807; election sermon, 1813; on the death of A. R. Robbins, 1813; sermons for revivals, one vol., 1824; letters from Astarchus to Philemon, 1833. — Sprague's Annals.

LEE, Moses Allen, M. D., professor of materia medica in Berkshire Institution, died at Pittsfield, Mass., June 16, 1842, aged 35. He was the son of Samuel L. of Salisbury, and brother of Dr. Charles A. L.; and studied physic with his brother-in-law, Dr. Luther Ticknor. His wife was Adelia, daughter of Joseph Merrick of Pittsfield. He died of an epidemic erysipelas. - Williams' American Medical Biography.

LEIT, WILLIAM, governor of Connecticut, died April 16, 1683. He came to New England in 1637, in company with Eaton and Hopkins. Sept. 29, 1639, he, Mr. Whitefield, and others purchased Menunkatuck, or Guilford, of the sachem squaw, the owner. The agreement was made at New Haven, and was confirmed by the general court Jan. 31, 1640. When the church of Guilford was formed in 1643, he was one of the seven pillars, or first members. Whitefield and Higginson were two others. For many years he was the clerk of the town. He was an assistant of New Haven colony from 1643 to 1657, and governor from 1661 to 1665; and after the union of New Haven and Connecticut, was deputy governor from 1669 to 1675, and governor, after Winthrop, from 1676 to 1680. Having removed to Hartford, he died there. His sons were John and ducted the public affairs with integrity and wis- dustry and temperance.

He studied theology with Dr. | dom. In 1660, when the regieides, Whalley and Goffe, were in danger of being arrested, he nobly protected them.

LEFFINGWELL, THOMAS, of Saybrook in 1637, was one of the purchasers of the town of Norwich, in 1659, from Uncas and his sons Owaneco and Attawanhood.

LE FORGE, HENRY, died at Hamden, Conn., in 1839, aged 100.

LEFTWICH, JOEL, general, died at Bedford, Va., in 1846, aged 86; a brave soldier of the Revolution.

LEGARE, HUGH SWINTON, died at Boston June 20, 1843, aged about 50. He lived at Charleston, S. C., and was a member of congress, attorney-general, and chargé to Brussels. He was a scholar, and a writer in Southern Review, LEGGETT, WILLIAM, died in New York May 24, 1839, editor of the Evening Post and the Plaindealer, author of poems and miscellaneous writings.

LEGGETT, ABRAHAM, major, a Revolutionary soldier, died at New York in 1842, aged 88. He was made prisoner at the capture of fort Montgomery.

LEIGH, BENJAMIN W., died at Richmond Feb. 2. 1849, aged 67. He was a lawyer and statesman. From 1829 to 1841 he was reporter of the State of Virginia, frequently a member of the legislature, and of the senate of the United States from 1834 to 1837.

LELAND, JOHN, minister of Peru, Mass., died in 1826. He was born in Holliston, settled in 1783, and received R. Hawkes as a colleague in 1815. Rev. Dr. Aaron W. Leland, of South Carolina, is his son.

LELAND, John, a Baptist minister, died at Cheshire, Mass., Jan. 14, 1841, aged 85. He was born at Grafton in 1754. From 1776 he lived fourteen years in Virginia; in 1791 he settled in Cheshire. In 1810 he had baptized 1163 persons, about 700 of them in Virginia. He was a zealous political friend of Jefferson, and published various tracts, political and religious. His people sent him to Washington eity to present a great cheese to Mr. Jefferson, whose politics they approved. It was made from curds furnished on a particular day by the dairywomen of the town; it weighed 1,450 pounds. The speaker presented it in behalf of his people as "a peppercorn" of their esteem for the democratic president. He published oration, 1802; on the death of Mrs. Northrop; the Virginia Chronicle, 12mo., 1790; the rights of conscience, 1793.

LELAND, AARON, deacon, died at Sherburne, Mass., Sept. 17, 1846, aged 95, the last of foar brothers and four sisters, all of whom, but one, Andrew; his posterity are numerous. He con- lived above eighty years, showing a family of indley and he nobly orook in town of ons Owan, Conn.,

Bedford, er of the

t Boston lived at congress,
sels. He Review.
York May
t and the cellaneous

olutionary d 88. He fort Montmond Feb. and statesorter of the aber of the nited States

Mass., died , settled in olleague in of South

er, died at d 85. He om 1776 he 791 he setptized 1163 a. He was n, and pubgious. His o present a politics they urnished on the town; er presented percorn" of sident. He ath of Mrs. 2mo., 1790;

t Sherburne, last of four om, but onc, family of inLEMELL, ELEANOR, died in Lafayette parish, at Cambridge. La., in 1839, aged 105. King Philip.

LE MERCIER, Andrew, minister in Boston, died in 1762. He had for many years the care of the Protestant French church, which was founded by Protestants, driven from France by the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1686. Daillé was their first minister. The society being very much diminished, he at length desisted from his public labors, and the house was in 1748 occupied by Mr. Croswell's church. He sustained a reputable character. He published a church history of Geneva, 12me., 1732, and a treatise on detraction. — Hist. Coll., 1II. 264, 301.

LENOIR, WILLIAM, general, died in 1830 at fort Defiance, Wilkes co., N. C.; an officer of the Revolutionary war. He was president of the senate; a patriot, a man of integrity, generous, hospitable.

LENOX, ROBERT, died in New York Dec. 13, 1839, aged 80; a merchant, a native of Scotland, enterprising and wealthy.

LENT, ISAAC, died in Ballston, N. Y., in 1847, aged 102. A native of New York, he was a Revolutionary pensioner.

LENTHALL, ROBERT, minister of Weymouth, was there from 1638 to 1640. Barnard, Hull, and Jenner were ministers before him; all came from England.

LEONARD, NATHANIEL, minister of Plymouth, died in 1770, aged about 72. He graduated at Harvard in 1719, and was ordained in 1724 as successor of Mr. Little. He ceased to preach from ill health in 1757, and removed to Norton, and Mr. Robbins was ordained his successor in 1760.

LEONARD, ABIEL, D. D., son of Rev. Nathaniel L., died in 1778, aged about 40. He graduated at Harvard in 1759, and was a chaplain in the army. He published a thanksgiving sermon at Woodstock, Conn., 1767; at the ordination of G. Wheaton, 1772.

LEONARI), GEORGE, LL. D., died at Raynham July 26, 1819, aged 90. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1748. He was a descendant of Judge Thomas Leonard, on whom, after his death in 1713, S. Danforth published an eulogy. His father was Col. George L., a judge of probate and of the common pleas. He himself sustained the same offices, and was one of the first members of congress under the constitution. He was a man of wealth. His ancestors were as follows: Lennard, Lord Dacre, created a baron in 1297; James and Henry Leonard settled at Raynham in 1652, and built the first forge in America. Henry removed to New Jersey. Of the great ages attained by this family, it is stated that in 1793 it was known that one had died aged 100, two over 90, seventeen over 80, at Cambridge. James L. lived in friendship with King Philip. Among his descendants were Judge Daniel Leonard of Bermuda, Judge Ward Chipman of New Brunswick, Judge Wilde of Massachusetts, L. White, Lieut.-Gov. Cobb, and Dr. Howard.

LEONARD, ELMAH, died Feb. 8, 1834, aged 74, minister of second society in Marshfield, Mass., forty-five years. He graduated at Yale in 1783

LEONARD, DAVID, a minister, graduated at Providence in 1702, and published a sermon on the death of John Holmes at Holmes' harbor, 1705; a masonic oration at Nantucket, 1707.

LEONARI), ABIOALI, died in Raynham Jan. 25, 1845, aged nearly 101; a descendant of John Alden. Her husband was high-sheriff of Bristol. In early life she was consecrated to the Redeemer. She devoted a portion of every day to literature and the bible. For the last fifteen years she could read without glasses. Sho was cheerful, pious, happy.

LEONARD, JONATHAN, Dr., died at Sandwich, Mass., in 1849, aged 86; a graduate of Harvard in 1786.

LE ROY, HERMAN, died in New York in 1841, aged 84; a prosperous merchant.

LESCARBOT, MARC, published Histoire de la Nouvelle France, two vols., 12mo., 2d edit., 1612.

LESLIE, George, minister of Washington, N. H., died in 1800, aged 72. He was the son of James, of Topsfield, a Scotchman; was graduated at Harvard in 1749, was ordained at Linebrook in Ipswich in 1749, and dismissed in 1770; and was pastor at W. from 1780 to his death. He fitted young men for college, and some for the ministry. He published a sermon at the ordination of S. Perley. — Sprague's Annals.

LEVERETT, John, governor of Massachusetts, died March 16, 1679, aged 62. He was the son of Elder Thomas L., and came to this country with his father in 1633, and was admitted a freeman in 1640. He signalized himself by his bravery in the early periods of his life. He was long employed in public uffairs and places of great trust. He was in England at the Restoration, and appeared an advocate for the colony. Upon his return to this country he was chosen a member of the general court for Boston. In 1664 he was chosen major-general, and in 1665 an assistant. He was elected governor in 1673 as successor to Bellingham, and was continued in that office till his death. His administration is spoken of with respect. He was succeeded by Bradstreet. - Magnalia, II. 19; Neal, II. 32;

Of the great ages attained by this family, it is stated that in 1793 it was known that one had died aged 100, two over 90, seventeen over 80, and fifty-three over 70. Thirteen had graduated the college, which was afterwords intrusted to his care, in 1680. He was first appointed a tutor in | Harvard in 1707. His daughter married Mr. this seminary. He next was chosen a member of the house of representatives, and then speaker. He was successively a member of his majesty's council, a justice of the superior court, and a judge of the probate of wills. After the death of the vice-president Willard, he was chosen president, and was inducted into this office Jan. 14, 1708. In this station he continued till his sudden death. He was succeeded by Wadsworth. President Leverett received from the gift of God great powers of mind, which he diligently cultivated. He was conspicuous for his learning, and he was an eminent divine as well as statesman. In an early period of his life he occasionally preached. So extensive was his knowledge and so correct was his judgment, that in almost every difficult case the people resorted to him for information and advice. He was a man of courage and resolution and firmness, as well as learning. No difficulties discouraged him, when he once engaged in any affair of importance; he encountered them with cheerfulness, and by his perseverance and diligence frequently effected what would have been impossible to a mind of feebler texture. When his object could not be accomplished, he yielded it without disquietude. At the head of the university he was respected, for he possessed personal dignity and a talent of government. There was a majesty in his speech, behavior, and countenance, which secured the reverence of all who conversed with him, and impressed the youth who were subject to his authority with awe. Yet he did not lose their affections, for his dignity was not the offspring of pride. He was a good man, of unaffected piety and of a holy life, a cordial friend to the Congregational churches, but placing religion not so much in particular forms, as in the weightier matters of righteousness, faith, and love. In his care of the college he was indefstigable, and it flourished much during his presidency. He was its glory, and he was also the ornament of his country. His first wife was Margaret, daughter of parative poverty. - Goodrich. President Rogers; his second, Mrs. Harris, who afterwards married Dr. Colman. His daughter Sarah married Rev. E. Wigglesworth; Mary married Major John Denison .- Funeral Sermons by Appleton, Colman, and Wadsworth.

LEVERIDGE, WILLIAM, a preacher, arrived at Salem in the ship James, Oct. 10, 1633, and preached at Dover till 1635. In 1640 he was in Sandwich, and was employed as a missionary in 1657 by the commissioners of the united colonies. He accompanied the first settlers to Huntington, L. I.; but in 1670 he removed to Newtown, where he died, and where his posterity remain.-

Mass., died in 1753, aged 68. He graduated at expedition in about three years. He was re-

Howland, minister of Carver from 1746 to 1804. when he died, aged 83; his grand-daughter married Mr. Weld, minister of Braintree. He published a sermon at ordination of J. Stacev, 1720; the sins of youth, 1725; the election sermon,

LEWIS, JOSIAH, minister of Wellfleet, Mass, died in 1786, aged 84. A graduate of Harvard in 1723, he was ordained in 1730.

LEWIS, John, minister in Wethersfield, Conn., died April 28, 1792, aged about 42. Dr. Chapin was his successor. He graduated at Yale in 1770, was tutor from 1773 to 1778, and was ordained at Rocky Hill in 1781. He published two sermons on forbearance to weak consciences, 1789. -Sprague's Annals.

LEWIS, FRANCIS, a patriot of the Revolution, died Dec. 30, 1803, aged 90. He was born in Landaff, South Wales, in 1713. He was educated at Westminster. In 1735 he arrived at New York, where he engaged extensively in navigation and foreign trade. His commercial transactions induced him to visit Russia and other parts of Europe. As agent for supplying the British troops, he was at fort Oswego when it surrendered to Montcalm, after Col. Mersey had been, killed by his side. He was carried a prisoner to Montreal, and thence to France. After his liberation, in the Revolutionary movements of the country he was among the first of "the sons of liberty." In April, 1775, he was elected a member of congress; the next year he signed the Declaration of Independence. He was employed in the importation of military stores and other secret services. In 1775 he removed to Long Island; in the autumn of 1776 his house was plundered by the British; his library and papers were destroyed, and Mrs. Lewis taken prisoner. She was confined several months by the brutal foe without a bed to lie upon; her sufferings were such as to occasion her death in one or two years. Mr. Lewis in his last days lived in com-

LEWIS, MERIWETHER, governor of Upper Louisiana, died Oct. 11, 1809, aged 35. He was born near Charlottesville, Va., Aug. 18, 1774. He relinquished his academic studies at the age of eighteen, and, after being a farmer for two years, enlisted as a volunteer in the militia, called out at that time, and soon entered the army. From 1801 to 1803 he was the private secretary of President Jefferson, who appointed him in 1803 to the command of the exploring party, directed to cross the continent to the Pacific Ocean. His unshaken firmness and undaunted courage, his prudence and enterprise, besides his knowledge of botany, qualified him for this service. Accom-LEWIS, DANIEL, first minister of Pembroke, panied by William Clarke, he returned from this ried Mr. to 1804, hter mar-He pubey, 1720; sermon, et, Mass., f Harvard

eld, Conn., Dr. Chapin de in 1770. ordained at vo sermons s, 1789. --

Revolution,

as born in as educated ed at New navigation transactions er parts of the British n it surreney had been prisoner to ter his liherents of the the sons of cted a memsigned the vas employed es and other red to Long s house was and papers ken prisoner. by the brutal ner sufferings or of Upper 35. He was ng. 18, 1774. ies at the age rmer for two militia, called ed the army. vate secretary ed him in 1803 party, directed c Ocean. His courage, his his knowledge vice. Accom-He was re-

in one or two

lived in com-

in 1806 he was made governor of Louisiana, and Clarke was made a general and agent for Indian affairs. On his arrival, he was successful in composing some dissensions which had spring up. Some difficulty as to his accounts, which distressed him, induced him to set out on a journey to Washington. Landing at Chickasaw Bluffs, he thence proceeded by land. On the borders of Tennessee, about forty miles from Nashville, he killed himself with a pistol and a razor. This event was ascribed to the protest of some bills which he drew on the public account. He had written un account of his expedition up the Missouri and to the Pacific, which was published, under the care of Paul Allen, in 2 vols., 8vo., 1814, in which appeared his life, written by Mr.

LEWIS, COMFORT, Miss, died at Portsmouth, N. H., Sept., 1834, aged 105.

LEWIS, LAWRENCE, major, died at Arlington house, near Alexandria, Va., Nov. 20, 1839, aged 73. He was of Wood Lawn, a nephew of George Washington, the last of his near blood relatives. His widow, grand-daughter of Martha Washington, died in 1852, aged 83.

LEWIS, ISAAC, D. D., minister of Greenwich, Conn., died Aug. 27, 1840, aged 94, in the seventysecond year of his ministry. Born in Stratford Feb. 1, 1746, he graduated at Yale, in 1765, in a class of forty-seven, which sent out twenty-one ministers. His conversion was ascribed to the preaching of Whitefield. He studied theology with S. Buell and J. Mills. He was first installed at Wilton; from 1786 to 1818 he was the minister of Greenwich, Conn., and was dismissed at his request at the age of 72; his son Isaac being installed in his place the same day. He made his last address at the communion-table at the age of 90. He was a man much venerated; of various learning, urbane, courteous, cheerful, sound in the faith, fervent in his preaching. Of his five sons, two were ministers and three were lawyers. His wife died in 1829, aged 86. He published a sermon at ordination of J. Mitchell; at Yale college, 1790; divine mission of Christ, 1796; election sermon, 1797; at inauguration of President Day; at installation of his son; piety in ministers.

LEWIS, ZACHARIAH, the son of Rev. Dr. Isaac L., died at Brooklyn, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1840, aged 67. A graduate of Yale in 1794, he was liceused to preach, and was several years a tutor in the college. His health failing, he became the editor of the Commercial Advertiser and New York Spectator, and thus toiled seventeen years, from 1803 to 1820. He was secretary of the New York tract and missionary societies, and viceedited the Missionary Register. He was a good 1636. His father was Benjamin L., a maltster

warded by a tract of land. Soon after his return | scholar, a close reasoner, a man endowed with the Christian virtues. He published an oration before the Cincinnati, 1799; remarks and reply relating to a subterranean wall in South Carolina, 1802; reports of tract society. - Sprague's

> LEWIS, SETH, died at Rapides, Louisiana, in 1848, aged 84. He was a district judge, and an eminent jurist.

> LEWIS, ISAAC, D. D., son of Rev. Dr. Isaac L., and twin-brother of Zachariah, died at New York Sept. 23, 1854, aged 82. He was graduated at Yale in 1791; was a Presbyterian, settled as pastor at Cooperstown in 1800, afterwards at Goshen. On the decease of his father at Greenwich, Conn., in 1818, he was settled in that place, and last at Bristol, R. I. One of his daughters married Dr. Harvey E. Peet, president of the New York institution for the deaf and dumb. He published a sermon at ordination of J. Knight, 1801; at thanksgiving, 1812; on the divinity of Christ; address to Hible society, 1824; union of believers with Christ; Connecticut election sermon, 1827. - Sprague's Annals.

LEWIS, Morgan, general, died at New York April 7, 1844, aged 89, the son of Francis Lewis of New York, who signed the Declaration of Independence. He graduated at Princeton in 1773, and was a colonel in the army at the surrender of Burgoyne. In 1791 he was attorney-general, chief justice in 1801, and governor in 1804. He was a kind parent, a benevolent man, and a good citizen.

LEWIS, Dixon II., a senator from Alabama, died at New York Oct. 25, 1848, aged 46. A native of Virginia, he was the largest man in con-

LEYDT, JOHN, a Dutch minister in New Brunswick, N. J., died in 1772. He sought the independence of the Dutch churches in America, and published several pamphlets on the subject. He was answered by Mr. Ritzema of New York. He assisted in forming the union in 1771.

LIL, the name of a slave who died in Northampton about 1821, very aged. She lived in the family of Col. Dwight, and then of his son, President Dwight; and through her care were thirteen children brought up. She was a pious woman, a member of the church of N. She was liberated, if not by the act of her master, yet by the constitution of Massachusetts, many years before her death. Though called Lil, her name was Sylvia Church.

LILLY, ANNA, Mrs., died in Sutton July 6, 1843, aged 100. At the age of 90 she plied her spinning-wheel.

LINCOLN, BENJAMIN, general, died May 9, 1810, aged 76. He was a descendant of Thomas president of the American bible society. He L., a cooper, who lived at Hingham, Mass., in and farmer, a member of the council, and one of the principal men in the county. He was born Jan. 23, 1733, old style, and had few advantages of education, though his brother, Bela, was a graduate of 1754. His vocation was that of a farmer till he was more than forty years of age. He toiled every day, except when engaged in civil or military duties. He was a magistrate, representative, and lieutenant-colonel of the militia. In 1776 he was much employed in training the militia, being major-general. In Feb., 1777, he joined Washington's army with a reinforcement, and was soon created a major-general by congress. On the approach of Burgoyne. Washington sent him to join the northern army, but first to receive at Manchester and form the militia, as they came in, and to operate in the rear of the enemy. September 13th, he detached Col. Brown on a successful service. He himself joined Gates on the 29th. Commanding in the works, he did not participate in the action of Oct. 7th. The next day, as he was returning from a post he had visited, a party of the enemy having been advanced, he found himself within the reach of their fire, and was severely wounded in the leg. rendering it necessary for him to be removed to Albany and to Hingham. It was several years before the wound was healed; but he was able to rejoin Washington in August, 1778. Being now appointed to the chief command in the southern department, he proceeded to Charleston in December. As the enemy in the same month had landed in Georgia, and defeated Gen. Robert Howe, and captured Savannah, Gen. Lincoln marched in April, 1779, toward Augusta, in order to cover the upper parts of Georgia, but was recalled to protect Charleston against Gen. Prevost. June 19, he attacked the enemy intrenched at Stono ferry; but as their works were strong, and they were reinforced from John's island, opposite to Stono, he was repulsed. On the arrival of Count D'Estaing with French troops, it claims, vol. v. - Hist. Collections, III. 233-255 was resolved to recover Savannah. An assault was made by the combined American and French forces Oct. 9th, but it was unsuccessful, with the loss of nearly one thousand men. In February, 1780, Sir H. Clinton conducted an expedition from New York against Lincoln; besieged him in Charleston; and constrained him to capitulate May 12th. But, notwithstanding his misfortunes, his reputation as an able, prudent, brave officer was untarnished. Admitted to his parole, he returned to Hingham; but was exchanged in November. In 1781 he joined the army of Washington. At the siege of Yorktown he commanded a central division; the same terms were granted to Cornwallis which were granted at Charleston to Lincoln, who was appointed to receive the submission of the captured troops, and the death of Mr. Sullivan, acted as governor in Jan.

to conduct them to the field where their arms were deposited.

Congress elected him, Oct. 31, 1781, the secretary of war, which office he discharged, still retaining his rank in the army, for three years, when he retired to his farm, with a vote of congress commending his enpacity and faithfulness in his office and his meritorious services in the field. In 1786 and 1787 he was intrusted with the command of the militia for the suppression of the Shays insurrection. He proceeded to Hampshire and to Pittsfield in Berkshire and restored order. In May, 1787, he was elected lieutenant-governor; but at the next election the democratic party gained the ascendency and chose Samuel Adams. In 1789 he was appointed collector of the port of Boston, which office he held nearly twenty years, till he resigned it two years before his death. He had offered to resign it a year or two before Gen. Dearborn succeeded him. In 1789 he was a commissioner to treat with the Creek Indians, and in 1793 a commissioner to make peace with the western Indians. After a short attack of disease he died at Hingham. He lived with his wife fifty-five years. His sons, Benjamin and Theodore, were graduates of 1777 and 1785; the former, who married a daughter of James Otis, died in 1788. Gen. Lincoln was temperate, frugal, and methodical; cheerful in his temper; and for a great part of his life a deacon in the church. No profane expression ever fell from the lips of this soldier. About the year 1799 his pecuniary responsibilities for Gen. Knox subjected him to much temporary inconvenience; but his large income for the last twenty years enabled him to distribute considerable sums amongst his children. He published, in the historical collections, observations on the climate, etc., of the eastern counties of Maine; on the religious state of the same, vol. IV.; on the Indian tribes, their decrease and

LINCOLN, LEVI, attorney-general of the United States and lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, died at Woreester April 14, 1820, aged 71. He was a descendant of Samuel L. of Hingham, who came to this country from Hingham, England, in 1637. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1772, and settled as a lawyer in Worcester, where he rose to distinction. In the party divisions during Mr. Adams' administration, he was a zealous democrat or republican. He wrote, at that period, a series of political papers, called farmer's letters. On the triumph of Mr. Jefferson he was appointed attorney-general, March 5, 1801, as successor of Charles Lee, and was succeeded by R. Breekenridge, Dec. 23, 1805. In 1807 and 1808 he was chosen lieutenant-governor, and on heir arms the secred, still reirce years, ote of conhithfulness ces in the usted with uppression occeded to ire and reas elected election the dency and s appointed h office he gued it two ered to rearborn suenissioner to 1793 a comern Indians. ed at Hing--five years. were gradurho married 1788. Gen. methodical; reat part of profune exthis soldier. responsibilimuch temincome for to distribute nildren. He ons, observaern counties f the same, decrease and II. 233-255 of the United lassachusetts, ged 71. 1fe ingham, who England, in ard college in cester, where irty divisions ie was a zealrote, at that called farm-

Jefferson he

arch 5, 1801, as succeeded

In 1807 and

ernor, and on

ernor in Jan.,

1809. His speech, delivered at a difficult political 'ville, Me., June 15, 1852, aged 89. A son of period, reprehending the resistance to the embargo laws, was not responded to in sentiment by the senate and house; and in the spring Mr. Lincoln, who was a candidate for the office of governor against Mr. Gore, failed to be elected. In 1810 Mr. Gerry was chosen governor and Mr. Gray lient.-governor. His widow, Martha, died at Worcester in April, 1828, and was followed to the grave by two sons, then governors, - Levi, governor of Massachusetts, and Enoch, governor of Maine.

LINCOLN, Exocu, governor of Maine, son of the preceding, died Oct. 8, 1829, aged 40. He was born Dec. 28, 1788, and having studied law, settled in Fryeburg, Maine, and afterwards in Paris. He was a member of congress from 1819 to 1826. Having been elected governor, he entered upon the duties of his office in Jan., 1827. In the autumn of the same year and in 1828 he was re-elected; but at the election in Sept., 1829, he was not a candidate. He died at Augusta, whither in bad health he had taken a journey of fifty or sixty miles, to deliver an address to a female academy. He was never married. As the governor of the State he maintained the right of Maine to the whole controverted eastern territory, and denied the power of the United States to alienate it, whatever might be the decision of the umpire to whom the dispute between Great Britain and the United States as to the northeastern boundary had been referred. published, while he lived at Fryeburg, the village, a poem, 1816. The first vol. of Maine historical collections contains a few remarks on the Indian languages, and an account of the Catholic missions in Maine, found among his papers. - Spec. American Poetry, 11. 303.

LINCOLN, NATHANIEL, captain, a Revolutionary soldier, died at Windham in 1834, aged 105.

LINCOLN, RUTH, widow, died in Mansfield, Mass., March 27, 1842, aged 101. Her husband had been dead twenty-six years; for his military services she received a pension of 100 dollars a year for ten years. She left many descendants.

LINCOLN, WILLIAM, died at Worceste. Oct. 5, 1843, aged 42. The son of Levi Lincoln, he graduated at Harvard in 1822. He studied law with his brother, and entered into business with R. Newton. He edited the National Ægis; with Mr. Baldwin he published the Worcester magazine. He was an early and efficient member of the antiquarian society. His own descent he could trace from Samuel of Hingham, Mass., who eame from Hingham, England, in 1637. He published an oration, 1816; W. magazine and historical journal, 1826-7; address on Mr. Baldwin, 1835; history of Worcester, 1837. -Hist. Coll. x. 3d series.

Gen. Henjamin L., he was an early settler of D., and was judge of the court of common pleas. His father had bought much eastern land of Judge Lowell and others. Mr. L. was the father of Benjamin L., professor of anatomy and surgery at Burlington university, who died in 1835, aged 32, being a graduate of Howdoin in 1823.

LINCOLN, LUTHER B., died in Deerfield May 11, 1855, aged 53, then a member of the legislature. He was a graduate of 1822. He was a teacher in Sandwich and Greenfield, and preceptor of Deerfield academy, and Derby academy in Hingham. For thirty years he ardently devoted himself to the work of 'caching.

LINDALL, TIMOTHY, : peaker of the house of Massachusetts, died at Salem in 1760, aged 82. He was the son of Timothy of Duxbury and Salem ; and grandson of James of Duxbury, as early as 1640, who died in 1652. He graduated at Harvard in 1695, and was judge of the court of common pleas.

LINDSAY, WILLIAM, colonel of the United States army, died at Huntsville, Ala., in 1838. He was a native of Virginia, much respected.

LINDSLEY, PHD.P. D. D., died of apoplexy at Nashville, Tena., Viay 25, 1855; he was attending, as a delegate from New Albany, the old school a neral assembly. He was once a professor at Panceton college, then president of the university of Nashville. He died in the midst of his children, in the place where he spent the years of his manhood. He published a plea for the theological seminary at Princeton; discourses on the improvement of time, 1823; baccalaureate address, 1831.

LINUS, HENRY, a Baptist minister, died in

New Haven, Conn., in 1835, aged 52.

LINGAN, JAMES MACCUBIN, general, a victim to a mob, was a native of Maryland, and an offieer of the Revolutionary army; he fought in the battle of Long Island. At the surrender of fort Washington he was taken prisoner and shared in the sufferings of the horrible prison ship. At the close of the war he returned to Georgetown. of which port he was appointed by Washington the collector. For several years before his death he lived retired in the country, happy in domestic life. He was murdered by a mob at Baltimore, his brains being beaten out with clubs, July 28, 1812, aged about 60. The following is a brief history of the event. The war had just been declared against Great Britain. In June, Mr. Hanson had published something in his Federal Republican, which so irritated the populace, that they destroyed the printing-office. Mr. II., resolving to issue his paper anew, took possession of a house on Sunday, July 26, supported by a ist. Coll. x. 3d series.

LINCOLN, THEODORE, judge, died at Dennysple of Baltimore; in the evening the house was attacked, but, assisted by Gens. Lingan and Lee and about twenty others, he repelled the assault by firing upon the assailants, killing Dr. Gale and wounding others. In the morning of the 28th, the gentlemen in the house found it necessary for their security to surrender to the civil authority, and were conducted to jail. In the evening of the same day a bloodthirsty mob forced the jail, and killed Gen. Lingan and dreadfully mangled eleven others. A few escaped in the crowd. Eight of the wounded were thrown together in front of the jail, supnosed to be dead. Of this number were Mr. Hanson and Gen. Lee. Dr. Hall preserved them by persuading the mob to intrust the supposed dead bodies to his care. He removed them first to the jail room, and then to places of safety.

LINING, John, M. D., an eminent physiciar and philosopher of South Carolina, died in 1760. He was born in Scotland in 1708, and received an excellent education. He came to America about the year 1730. He corresponded with Dr. Franklin on the subject of electricity, and was the first person who introduced an electrical apparatus into Charleston. He practised physic in Charleston nearly thirty years, and was reckoned one of its most skilful physicians. He published a series of judicious statical experiments, which were conducted from 1738 to 1742. In 1753 he published a history of the yellow fever, which was the first account of that disease that was given to the world from the American continent. — Miller, 11. 364. LINN, WILLIAM, D. D., minister in New York, died at Albany, Jan., 1808, aged 55. He was born in 1752, and was graduated at the college of New Jersey in 1772. He was at first connected with the Presbyterian church in Pennsylvania. During the war of the Revolution he was chaplain in the army. A few years after the peace he attached himself to the Reformed Dutch church, and settled in the city of New York. He was finally constrained to resign his pastoral charge by indisposition, though his friends regarded his complaints as imaginary. Before disease broke down his strength, he was distinguished and useful. His eloquence was for the most part natural. impressive, and commanding, though at times he had too much vehemence in his manner. He married a daughter of Rev. John Blair. One of his daughters married Chas. L Brown; another, Simeon De Witt. The following are his publications: a military discourse, deli rered in Carlisle, 1776; the spiritual death and life of the believer, and the character and misery of the wicked, two sermons in American preacher, I.; a sermon on American independence, 1791; sermons historical and characteristical, 12mo., 1791; at a fast, containing animadversions on the police and people of Baltimore; in the evening the house was Panoplist, III. 431, 432; Life of J. B. Linn, 1.

LINN, JOHN BLAIR, D. D., a poet, and minister in Philadelphia, the son of the preceding, was born in Shippensburgh, Penn., March 14. 1777. He early evinced a strong attachment to books. At the age of thirteen he returned from a seminary in Flatbush on Long Island, where he had passed two or three years in the full enjoyment of health, and delighted with the benuties of nature. He now entered Columbia college, and engaged in a new seene, being subject to new discipline and interested by new associates. During the four years which he passed in the college, he evinced a powerful tendency to poetry and criticism. Admiring the great works of the dramatic writers, it was natural for him, when unrestrained by deep seriousness, and in a city. where there is an established theatre, to hasten where he might behold these works invested with the charms of life and action on the stage. But though the theatre became his chief passion, he was not seduced into vicious pleasures. When his academical career was ended, he was eighteen years of age, and his choice of a profession fell upon the law. He was placed under the direction of Alexander Hamilton, who was the friend of his father; but he did not apply himself with much assiduity to his new pursuit. He regarded the legal science every day with new indifference, and at the close of the first year relinquished the profession altogether. Before this event he ventured to produce a new dramatic composition. ealled Bourville Castle, on the stage. Its success was encouraging; but other objects now claimed his attention, and his dramatic career was entirely renounced. His passion for theatrical amuscments yielded to affections of a more serious and beneficial nature, and those religious impressions. which from his earliest infancy he had occasionally felt, now sunk permanently into his heart. He was ordained, June 13, 1799, as the colleague of Rev. Dr. Ewing of Philadelphia. The two succeeding years of his life were passed in diligent and successful application to the duties of the pastoral office, which were rendered more arduous by the increasing infirmities of his venerable colleague. In the summer of 1802 his constitution suffered irreparable mischief from a fever. His brain afterwards was frequently seized with dizziness, which was followed by a heavy depression of mind. He struggled manfully with his infirmity, but his strength was wasting, and he was sinking into the earth.

The gloom which hovered over his mind became deeper and more settled. He could look beyond the grave without fear, but the terrors of death were almost insupportable. In the summer of 1804 he was induced to take a journey to the eastern States. The images of melancholy, the on, 1800. -B. Linn, 1, , and minispreceding, , March 14, tachment to turned from ıd, where he e full enjoythe beauties nbia college, ibject to new associates. ed in the coley to poetry works of the im, when unnd in a city, tre, to hasten invested with e stage. But ef passion, he ures. When was eighteen profession fell ler the direcvas the friend himself with He regarded w indifference, linquished the event he vene composition, e. Its success s now elaimed er was entirely atrical amusere serious and as impressions, had occasionnto his heart. s the colleague ia. The two passed in dilithe duties of dered more ars of his vener-f 1802 his conief from a fever. tly seized with a heavy depresrasting, and he r his mind be-He could look t the terrors of In the summer journey to the melancholy, the nfully with his

before felt, still, however, attended him. He returned to Philadelphia in July. Aug. 30th, he arose with less indisposition than usual. On the evening of that day he had scarcely laid his head upon the pillow, when he said to his wife: " I feel something burst within me. Call the family together; I am dying." A stream of blood now choked his utterance. But after a short interval he recovered strength to exclaim with fervency, clasping his hands and lifting his eyes, "Lord Jesus, pardon my trangressions, and receive my soul!" Such was the termination of his life, Aug.

He prepared for the press and published soon after he left college, without his name, 2 volumes of miscellanies in prose and verse, 12mo. His poem on the death of Washington was written in imitation of the manner of Ossian, and published in 1800; and his powers of genius in 1801; a funeral sermon on Dr. Ewing, 1808; his two tracts in the controversy with Dr. Priestley, 1802. After his death there was published from his manuscripts, Valerian, a narrative poem, intended in part to describe the early persecutions of Christians, and rapidly to illustrate the influence of Christianity on the manners of nations, 4to., 1805. Prefixed to this is a sketch of Dr. Linn's life by Mr. Brown, written in a style of uncommon excellence. - His Life in Valerian; Portfolio, new series, I. 21-29, 129-134, 195-203; Blair's Funeral Sermon.

LINN, JOHN, died at Belvidere, N. J., in 1841, aged 108; a native of Maryland. He was a carpenter, and assisted in building a log court-house near Washington city.

LINN, LEWIS F., died at St. Genevieve, Mo., in 1843, aged 49. He was a physician, and a senator of the United States, born near Louisville, Ky. Mr. Benton, in a speech, delineated his character. - Williams' Am. Med. Biog.

LINSLEY, JAMES II., died in Stratford, Conn., Dec. 26, 1843. He was a native of Brandford, and a graduate of 1817. For several years he was a Baptist minister, till his health failed. Directing his attention to natural history, he published various communications in the American Journal of Science; a catalogue of mammalia in vol. XLIII., and of birds in vol. XLIV.

LIPPITT, CHARLES, died at Providence Aug., 1845, aged 91; an officer of the Revolution, a good citizen, and a Christian.

LISLE, HENRY M., a native of the West Indies, died at Tortola in 1814. He resided at Milton, Mass., and practised law. He published an oration on the death of Washington, 1800; Milton hill, a poem; a masonic address, 1805.

Miss., in 1850, aged 55, president of the State his wife, the daughter of George Williams, and gloom, the despondence, the terror, which he had | senate. He was esteemed for his large and liberal mind.

> LITCHFIELD, PAUL, minister of Carlisle, Mass., died in 1827, aged 75. Born in Scituate. he graduated at Harvard in 1775, and was ordained in 1781. He published a sermon to missionary society, 1805. - Sprague's Aunals.

> LITCHFIELD, JOSEPH, minister in Kittery, Me., died in 1828, aged 78. Born in Scituate, he graduated at Brown university in 1773, and was settled in the second church in 1782.

> LITCHFIELD, FRANKLIN, Dr., died at Puerto Cabello, where he was U. S. consul, in 1844, aged about 59. He was the son of Rev. Paul L., and a descendant, in the seventh generation, of Lawrence L., who removed soon after 1643 from Barnstable to Scituate. He graduated at Harvard in 1810.

> LITTELL, WILLIAM, LL. D., died in Frankfort, Ky., in 1824. He was reporter of the decisions of the court of appeals, the compiler of Littell's laws of Kentucky.

> LITTLE, EPHRAIM, minister of Plymouth, died Nov. 23, 1723, aged 47. Born in Scituate, he graduated at Harvard in 1695, and was ordained the successor of Mr. Cotton, Oct. 4, 1699, having first preached there two years. He was succeeded by Mr. Leonard. He was active and useful, generous and charitable.

LITTLE, EPHRAIM, minister of Colchester, Conn., died in 1787, aged about 80. A descendant of Thomas, who early lived in Plymouth, he was the son of David, a lawyer of Scituate, Mass., and graduated at Harvard in 1728. He was ordained in 1732. - Sprague's Annals.

LITTLE, DANIEL, minister of Kennebunk, Me., died in 1801, aged 77. Born in Newburyport, he was educated under Mr. Sewall, but obtained an honorary degree from Cambridge in 1766. He was for half a century pastor of the second church in Wells. He was cheerful and sociable, and visited his people from house to house. He disliked controversy. A fifth of his income he spent in hospitality and charity. He sometimes acted as a missionary in the new plantations. N. II. Fletcher became his colleague in 1800.

LITTLF, HARVEY D., a lawyer, was born at Wethersfield, Conn., in 1803. For several years he followed the business of a printer and editor in Ohio, and afterwards entered the profession of the law. He died at Columbus Aug. 22, 1833, aged 30. He edited the eclectic and medical

LITTLE, Moses, a distinguished physician of Salem, was a descendant of George L., who lived in Newburyport in 1640. He was born there in 1766, graduated at Harvard college in 1787, and LISPCOMB, JAMES, major, died in Columbus, died at Salem Oct. 13, 1811, aged 45. He and In his surgical practice he once successfully punctured the liver. - Thacher.

LITTLE, EZEKIEL, died in Atkinson, N. H., in 1840, aged 77. He graduated at Harvard in 1784, and was for many years the popular teacher of the Eliot school in Boston.

LITTLE, EDWARD, died in Danville, Me., Sept. 21, 1849, aged 76; for years a lawyer of Newburyport. From Portland he removed to D., where he throve by the good management of real estate, derived from his father. He endowed an academy, and contributed liberally for charitable and religious objects.

LITTLEJOHN, JOHN, a Methodist minister, died in Louisville, Ky., in 1836, aged 82.

LITTLEPAGE, LEWIS, an adventurer, died July 19, 1802, aged 39. He was born at South Wales, Hanover co., Va., Dec. 19, 1762, and lost his father when he was young. At the request of his uncle, Benjamin Lewis, Mr. Jay, minister at Madrid, was induced to patronize him, and received him into his family in Sept., 1780, and soon advanced for him, as his uncle failed to make him a remittance, about 1,000 dollars, in eash. He volunteered under the Duke De Crillon in the expedition against Minorca in 1781, and afterwards accompanied the Count Nassau to the siege of Gibraltar, and thence to Constantinople and Warsaw. The king of Poland made him his confidential secretary in 1786, and sent him as his agent or ambassador to Russia. On the revolution in Poland he returned to Virginia, and died at Fredericksburg. When he was at New York, in Nov., 1785, Mr. Jay arrested him for the debt of 1,000 dollars, without interest, which was still unpaid. For this he challenged Mr. Jay. The correspondence between him and Mr. Jay was published in 1786. Mr. Jay had reason to complain, not only of the pecuniary imposition, but also of other abuse, as he expresses himself, from the young man "with my money in his pocket and my meat still sticking in his teeth."

LITTLE TURTLE, an Indian chief, was defeated by General Wayne in 1792, on the Miami. The confederated Indians were Wyandots, Miamis, Pottowattomies, Delawares, Shawanoes, Chippewas, Ottoways, and some Senecas. He lived many years afterwards, and was esteemed and respected for his courage and humanity, his wisdom and consistency. He did much to abolish the horrible custom of human sacrifices. His grave is near fort Wayne.

LIVERMORE, SAMUEL, LL. D., chief justice of New Hampshire, died in May, 1803, aged 71. He was probably a descendant of John L., who lived in Watertown in 1642; and was born in Waltham about 1732. He graduated at Princeton in 1752, was judge-advocate of the admiralty Livingston, as chairman of the committee of the court before the Revolution, from 1782 to 1790 legislature, conducted the correspondence with two children, were the victims of the consumption. | was a judge of the superior court, and a senator of the United States from 1793 to 1801. He died at Holderness. His wife was the daughter of A. Browne, of Portsmouth. His sons, Edward St. Loe and Arthur, were judges of the same court. - Farmer.

LIVERMORE, ARTHUR, judge, died in Campton, N. II., July 1, 1853, aged nearly 67, being born in Londonderry July 26, 1776. From 1799 to 1816 he was a judge of the supreme court of New Hampshire, afterwards a member of congress, and from 1825 to 1833 a judge of the common pleas. He was a son of Judge Sam-

LIVINGSTON, ROBERT, first possessor of the manor of Livingston, in the State of New York, and founder of one of the most distinguished families in this country, was the son of John L., who received the degree of A. M. at Glasgow in 1621, and was the minister of Anerum; but, refusing to take the oath of allegiance in 1663, was banished, and removed to Rotterdam, where he was a minister of the Scot's chapel, and died Aug. 9, 1672, aged 69. Robert L. was born at Ancrum in 1654, and came to this country with his nephew about 1672. He was a member of the council in 1698. His wife was the sister of Peter Schuyler, and the widow of Nicholas Van Rensselaer. He left three sons: Philip, Robert, and Gilbert. A Mr. Livingston, perhaps Mr. R. L., who was many years speaker of the assembly of New York, died at Boston Oct. 1, 1728.

LIVINGSTON, PETER VAN BRUGH, a native of New York, was graduated at Yale college in 1731, and was long distinguished as a judicious, well-informed, and public-spirited man. He died at an advanced age. - Miller, 11. 345.

LIVINGSTON, PHILIP, a patriot of the Revolution, grandson of Robert L., died June 12, 1778, aged nearly 62. He was the fourth son of Philip L., who inherited the manor of Livingston. He was born at Albany Jan. 15, 1716, and was graduated at Yale college in 1737, and soon afterwards settled in New York, where he engaged prosperously in commercial pursuits. In 1754 he was elected an alderman; the population of the city was then only about ten thousand. In 1759 he was chosen a member of the assembly, the whole colony having only one hundred thousand inhabitants. He exerted an important influence in promoting measures for the prosecution of the French war, and also for advancing the interests of agriculture and commerce. In 1764, in the answer to a speech of Lieutenant-Governor Colden, which he wrote, he spoke of "that great badge of English liberty, of being taxed only with our own consent." In 1770, when Edmund Burke was agent of the colony in London, Mr.

a senator 801. He daughter s, Edward the same

l in Camp-67, being From 1799 e court of er of conlge of the idge Samssor of the New York, stinguished of John L., Glasgow in m; but, ren 1663, was , where he ıd died Aug. orn at Antry with his mber of the ter of Peter s Van Rens-Robert, and Mr. R. L., assembly of

28. HI, a native de college in a judicious, nn. He died of the Reved June 12, fourth son of r of Livings-15, 1716, and 37, and soon where he cnpursuits. In he population housand. In the assembly, undred thouimportant inre prosecution dvancing the rce. In 1764, ant-Governor f " that great g taxed only vhen Edmund London, Mr. amittee of the ondence with 1774, and again in 1776, when he signed the Declaration of Independence, and also in 1777. It was in a state of ill health, from the dropsy in the chest, that he took his seat in congress at York, Penn., May 5, 1778. He had visited his friends in Albany, and bid adieu to his family at Kingston, whither they had been obliged to flee from the city. His health rapidly declined. During his few last days his son, Henry Philip, then a member of Washington's family, was with him. His wife was the daughter of Col. Direk Ten Broeck, by whom he had several children. He firmly believed the truths of Christianity, and was a humble follower of the Saviour. By a donation in money in 1746 he laid the foundation of the professorship of divinity at Yale college. -

Goodrich's Lives. LIVINGSTON, WILLIAM, LL. D., governor of New Jersey, brother of Philip L., died July 25, 1790, aged 67. He was born about the year 1741. He afterwards pursued the study of the law. Possessing from the gift of God a strong and comprehensive mind, a brilliant imagination, and a retentive memory, and improving with unweared diligence the literary advantages which he enjoyed, he soon rose to eminence in his profession. He early embraced the cause of civil and religious liberty. When Great Britain advanced her arbitrary claims, he employed his pen in opposing them and in vindicating the rights of his countrymen. After sustaining some important offices in New York he removed to New Jersey, and as a representative of this State was one of the principal members of the first congress in 1774. After the inhabitants of New Jersey had sent their governor, William Franklin, under a strong guard to Connecticut, and had formed a new constitution in July, 1776, Mr. Livingston was elected the first chief magistrate, and such was his integrity and republican virtue, that he was annually re-elected till his death. During the war he bent his exertions to support the independence of his country. By the keenness and severity of his political writings he exasperated the British, who distinguished him as an object of their peculiar hatred. His pen had no inconsiderable influence in exciting that indignation and zeal which rendered the militia of New Jersey so remarkable for the alacrity with which, on any alarm, they arrayed themselves against the common enemy. He was in 1787 a delegate to the grand convention which formed the constitution of the United States. After having sustained the office of governor for fourteen years, with great honor to himself and usefulness to the State, he died at his seat near Elizabethtown. He was succeeded by William Patterson. Judge Brockholst L. was his son. Mr. Jay married his daughter.

Governor Livingston was from his youth re-

him. He was chosen a member of congress in | markably plain and simple in his dress and manners. Always the enemy of parade, he never exhibited himself in splendor. He was convivial, easy, mild, witty, and fond of anecdote. Fixed and unshaken in Christian principles, his life presented an example of incorruptible integrity, strict honor, and warm benevolence. He obeyed the precepts of the gospel, and, in the opinion of his Christian friends, was sincerely pious. He relied for salvation solely upon the merits of Christ. In his political principles he was purely republican, having an abhorrence of the monarchical form of He was en excellent classical government. scholar. His writings evince a vigorous mind and a refined taste. Intimately acquainted with the eelebrated writers of his day and of the preceding age, he acquired an elegance of style which placed him among the first of modern writers. He was unequalled in satire. He published a poem, called philosophical solitude; a funeral eulogium on President Burr, 1758, which is considered as a fine specimen of eloquence; a letter to the bishop of Landaff, occasioned by some passeges in his sermon, 1767; and a number of miscellaneous tracts, in various periodical works. The review of the military operations of 1753-1756, ascribed to him and W. Smith and Scott, which is in Massachusetts historical collections, VII., a literary gentleman of Philadelphia has said was not written by them. His son, William Livingston, issued proposals, a few years ago, for publishing memoirs of his life, with his miscellaneous writings, in prose and verse; but the work was not given to the public. - Macwhorter's Funeral Sermon; Miller's Retrospect, 11. 369.

LIVINGSTON, ROBERT R., chancellor of the State of New York, died Feb. 26, 1813, aged 66. He was born Nov. 27, 1746. His grandfather, Robert L., was the second son of the first owner of Livingston's manor, and died at Clermont June 27, 1775, aged 88; his father, Robert Livingston, was a judge of the supreme court, who died at Clermont Dec. 9, 1775, aged 58; his mother was Margaret Beekman. He was grad-uated at King's college, New York, in 1765. Having studied law with Wm. Smith, he was appointed by Gov. Tryon recorder of the city; an office which he resigned at the beginning of the Revolution. In April, 1775, he was elected from Duehess county to the assembly. In 1776 he was a member of congress, and was placed on the committee with Jefferson, Adams, Franklin, and Sherman, for drawing up the Declaration of Independence, and on other important committees. In Aug., 1781, he was appointed secretary for foreign affairs; and he commenced his duties Oct. 20th. The foreign concerns of congress had been previously conducted by the committee of secret correspondence. He was diligent, prompt, and energetic. Domestic affairs were also in part intrusted to him. His valuable correspondence is published in the diplomatic correspondence, edited by Jared Sparks. On his resignation in 1783 he received the thanks of congress, and was succeeded by Mr. Jay. Under the new constitution of New York, which he assisted in forming as chairman of the committee, he was appointed chancellor, and continued in that place till 1801. In 1788 he was chairman of the State convention which adopted the federal constitution, uniting his efforts at that time with those of Jay and Hamilton. In 1794, on his declining the place of minister to France, which Washington offered him, it was given to Mr. Monroe. But in 1801 he was induced to proceed as minister plenipotentiary to Paris, appointed by Mr. Jefferson. By the first consul he was received with respect, and, after his mission had closed, Napoleon presented him with a splendid snuff-box, with a miniature of himself by Isabey. Assisted by Mr. Monroe, he made the very important purchase of Louisiana, for 15,000,000 of dollars. In Paris he formed an intimacy with Robert Fulton, whom he assisted by his counsels and money. After his resignation and the arrival of Gen. Armstrong, his successor, he travelled in Italy, Switzerland, and Germany, returning to his seat, called Clermont, on the Hudson, in June, 1805. He rebuilt a venerable old mansion, his summer residence, on an ample patrimonial estate, called the upper Livingston's manor, and devoted the rest of his days to the promotion of improvements in agriculture and the arts. He caused the introduction of steam navigation in this country. He introduced the merino sheep in New York, and the use of gypsum; of an agricultural society, and of the academy of fine arts, he was a president. He died suddenly at Clermont. His widow, Maria, died at Washington in March, 1814. He published an oration before the Cincinnati, 1787; an address to the society for promoting the arts, 1808; essays on agriculture; a work on the merino sheep.

LIVINGSTON, JOHN II., D.D., president of Queen's college, New Jersey, died Jan. 29, 1825, aged 78. He was born at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., in 1746, and graduated at Yale college in 1762. In May, 1776, he went to Holland to prosecute his theological studies in the university of Utrecht, viere he resided about four years, obtaining the dagree of doctor in theology in 1770, in which year he returned to this country and became the pastor of the Dutch Reformed church in the city of New York. At this period the Dutch churches in this country were divided into the Conferentie and the Coetus parties; by the efforts of Dr. Livingston a happy union was effected in 1772, and the Dutch churches became independent of the classis of Amsterdam. For this independence he member of congress from 1803 to 1807, was had negotiated while in Holland. In 1784 he born in 1764; was graduated at Yale college in was appointed theological professor in the Dutch church. The duties of minister and professor he performed till 1810, when, on the removal of the theological school to Queen's college, New Brunswick, he was appointed the president of the college, in which place he remained till his death. His father was Henry, his grandfather was Gilbert L., son of Robert. His wife was a daughter of P. Livingston; one of her sisters married S. Van Rensselaer: another was the mother of Mrs. D. Clinton. He was eminently learned, pious, and useful. He published two sermons on growth in grace in American preacher, yol. I.; sanctuary blessings, vol. III.; before New York missionary society, 1799; address at the commencement at Queen's college, 1810. - Observer, March 20. 1851.

LIVINGSTON, BROCKHOLST, LL. D., judge of the supreme court of the United States, died March 18, 1823, aged 65. He was the son of Gov. William L. of New Jersey, and was born in New York Nov. 25, 1757. He was graduated at Princeton college in 1774; and in 1776 entered the family of Gen. Schuyler, commander of the northern army, and was afterwards attached to the suite of Arnold, at the time of the capture of Burgoyne. In 1779, when Mr. Jay, who had married his sister, repaired to the court of Spain, he accompanied him as his private secretary. After an absence of three years Col. Livingston returned and studied law. He was admitted to the bar in April, 1783; was appointed judge of the State supreme court Jan. 8, 1802: and in Nov., 1806, was appointed, in the place of Mr. Patterson, judge of the supreme court of the United States. He died at Washington during a session of the court. His daughter, Louisa C., died Feb., 1807, aged 16. It is said that, having killed a man in a duel in early life, the recollection of the deed imbittered the remainder of his days. His mind was acute and powerful, and he was distinguished as a scholar and jurist.

LIVINGSTON, HENRY, general, a soldier of the Revolution, was born at Livingston manor Jan. 19, 1752. He joined his country in the struggle for liberty, accompanying a detachment of militia from his native county, he acted as lieutenant-colonel at the capture of Burgoyne. He died at his residence in the manor of Livingston, May 26, 1823, aged 71, and his remains were placed in the family vault. The poor and industrious experienced his benevolence and liberality. He was a friend to the people, aiming always to secure their liberties and rights. His princely estate was inherited by Henry L., who married the cldest daughter of Judgo W. W. Van Ness, and died at Claverack Nov. 14, 1828.

LIVINGSTON, HENRY WALTER, judge, a ne Dutch fessor he al of the ge, New ent of the uis death. was Giluighter of ed S. Van f Mrs. D. pious, and growth in sanctuary missionary cement at

March 20,

D., judge tates, dicd he son of as born in graduated d in 1776 ommander rwards attime of the n Mr. Jay, the court private secyears Col. He was ads appointed n. 8, 1802; the place of court of the on during a , Louisa C., that, having he recollecinder of his erful, and he a soldier of ston manor mtry in the detachment he acted as f Burgoyne. r of Livingsremains were r and indusad liberality. ng always to His princely who married V. Van Ness, 3.

rist.

R, judge, a o 1807, was ale college in 1786; was secretary in 1792 to Mr. Morris, ambassador to France; and died at Livingston's manor, in Linlithgow, N. Y., Dec. 22, 1810, aged 42. He was educated to the law, and possessed good talents. Of the court of common pleas for Columbia county he was the judge. In his manners he was pleasing, and in his habits of life correct and honorable.

LIVINGSTON, JAMES, colonel, died in Saratoga co., N. Y., in 1832, aged about 85, a soldier of the Revolution.

I.IVINGSTON, GILBERT R., D. D., pastor of a Dutch church in Philadelphia, died March 9, 1834, aged 48. His son, II. G. Livingston, who graduated at Williams' in 1840, was the minister of Carmel and the successor of Dr. Bethune in Philadelphia; and died Jan. 27, 1855, aged nearly 34. - Observer, Feb. 15.

LIVINGSTON, EDWARD, an eminent jurist, died at Rhinebeck May 23, 1836, aged 71. He was descended from a Scottish family, and born in 1764, at Clermont, Livingston's manor, N. Y. He was graduated at Princeton in 1781. Admitted to the bar in 1785, he pursued his profession till 1795, when he became a member of congress from the city of New York, and continued till 1802, when he was appointed attorney of the United States for the district of New York. He was also mayor of the city. Removing to New Orleans in 1804, he there was eminent as a lawver. At the invasion of Louisiana he acted as the aid of Gen. Jackson. In 1823 he was again a member of congress; in 1829 he was elected a member of the Senate; in 1831 he was appointed sceretary of State, and in 1833 minister to France. His death was sudden, said to be caused by drinking cold water, when heated. He was employed with others by the legislature of Louisiana to prepare a system of jurisprudence and also of municipal law, and performed this service with great industry and deep research. His Penal Code, his own unaided work, is a monument of his profound learning and of his desire to promote the welfare of mankind.

LIVINGSTON, EDWARD, died at Albany in 1840, formerly speaker of N. Y. assembly, and district attorney.

LIVINGSTON, EDWARD P., died at his seat at Clermont, N. Y., in 1843, aged 63. He was many years a member of the State senate; in 1830 he was lieutenant-governor.

LIVINGSTON, PETER R., died at Rhinebeck, N. Y., in 1847, aged 81. He had been a member of the State senate and of congress.

LIVINGSTON, JOHN R., died at Red Hook
Sept. 27, 1851, aged 98, a brother of Robert R. L. His father was Robert; so also his grandfather; and next the first Robert L. He had lived fifteen years at Red Hook, one mile below the chancellor's house. He had been previously ill afford to pay them.

359-376.

LLOYI), EDWARD, g
at Annapolis June 2, senator of the United
the chancellor's house.

a merchant in New York; his house was supplanted by the Broadway house. LLOYD, JAMES, M. D., died at Boston in March, 1810, aged 82. He was the grandson of James L., who came from Somersetshire in 1670, and, after residing a short time at Shelter Island, where he married a lady, settled at Boston, where he died in July, 1693. His father was Henry L., who inherited an estate, purchased by his father, in Queens county, Long Island; his mother was the daughter of John Nelson of Boston, a "Revolutioner," or one of those, who put down the tyranny of Andros in 1689. Dr. L. was born at Long Island in April, 1728. He was educated at Stratford, where he formed a friendship with Wm. Samuel Johnson, which lasted through life. Having studied medicine for a time in Boston, he proceeded to England, where he attended the London hospitals two years. In 1752 he returned to Boston and soon obtained extensive practice. He introduced improvements in surgery, such as ligatures for cautery, and amputation by double incision. Among his numerous pupils were Gen. Warren, Rand, Jeffries, and Clark. During the occupation of Boston by the British, he remained in the town. He thought the Revolutionary movements were premature. Yet he was devoted to his profession, and not a zealous politician. The dispersion of his connections and the loss of his two sons threw a heavy cloud upon his mind for several years, and taught him the lesson, which comes to all, that the earth is not the abode of happiness. In the war the enemy stripped of its timber an estate of six or seven hundred acres, inherited from his father, at Queen's Village or Lloyd's Neck, on Long Island, about forty miles from New York, bordering on the sound. In 1789 he went to England to seek compensation, but without success, as he would not consent to become a British subject, nor even express an intention of becoming such. His fine health, which continued to old age, was first interrupted by a fall from his horse. He left two children; James L., and Sarah, reliet of Leonard Vassal Borland. For nearly sixty years he was in extensive practice. He was educated in the Episcopal form and was a worshipper at Trinity church. His house was the seat of hospitality. Multitudes of the poor experienced his kindness. He had no avarice of money. His professional services to them were without charge, and he was also frequently the almoner to their necessities. In his last will he directed the cancelment of the debts due from those who could ill afford to pay them. - Thatcher's Med. Biog., 359-376.

LLOYI), EDWARD, governor of Maryland, died at Annapolis June 2, 1834, aged 55. He was a senator of the United States, and respected in public and private life.

LLOYD, JAMES, a senator of the United States, the son of the preceding, died at New York in 1831, aged 62. He was born in Boston in 1769, and graduated at Harvard college in 1787. He afterwards, in order to acquire a knowledge of commercial parsuits, entered the counting-house of Thomas Russell. About the year 1792 he visited Europe and resided for some time in Russia. In 1808 he was elected senator, and in a period of great political excitement and national difficulty was a distinguished member of congress. He opposed the war of 1812. He was re-elected senator in 1822, and during a service of five years was incessant in his efforts to promote the public interest. He was the chairman of two important committees, of commerce and naval affairs. The result of his investigations appeared in several pamphlets. He married, in 1809, the daughter of Samuel Breck of Philadelphia. He published remarks on the report of the committee of commerce of March, 1823, on the British colonial intercourse.

LOBDELL, HENRY, M. D., missionary at Mond, died March 25, 1855. He graduated at Antherst in 1949. His wife, Lucy C. L., survived him. They sailed from Boston in Nov., 1851. His great 6 uess for his work and his faithfulness make his scally removal from his field of labor a deep mystery.

LOCKE, Mrs., wife of Edwin Locke, missionary to the Sandwich Islands, died at Waialua, Oahn, Oct. 20, 1842. She was the daughter of Rev. Joseph Rowell, of Cornish, N. H., and sailed from Boston in 1836. Her brother, George B. R., joined the mission only a fortnight before her death. Her end was peaceful.

LOCKE, EDWIN, missionary to the Sandwich Islands, died Oct. 28, 1843. He was born at Fitzwillham, N. H., in 1813, and arrived at Waialua in 1837. He had taught a manual labor school with great skill and success. His missionary brethren held him in high esteem. By his death his three daughters were left without father or mother.

LOCKE, JOSEPH, judge, died in Lowell, Nov. 10, 1853, aged 81. Born in Fitzwilliam, N. H., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1797, studied law with Mr. Bigelow, settled at Billerica, and removed to Lowell in 1833. He was judge of the court of police 13 years. He had also been a member of the convention to revise the constitution in 1820, and a representative and councillor.

LOCKE, JOHN, a lawyer, brother of Judge L., died in Boston March 29, 1855, aged 91. He graduated in 1792, and settled in Ashby. In 1820 he was a member of the convention for revising the constitution; from 1823 to 1829, a member of congress. He removed to Lowell in 1837, and thence to Boston in the family of his son, John G. Locke.

LOCKE, JOHN, professor, died at Cincinnati July 8, 1856, aged 64. Born at Fryeburg, Me., his education was at Bethel academy, and he early distinguished himself by mechanical and scientific attainments. He received a medical degree at Yale, and was then a surgeon in the navy. For thirty years he had lived in the west. In 1836 he was chosen professor of chemistry in Cincinnati. He was an accurate geologist, and skilled in every department of natural history. His "magnetical researches" extended widely: the country was also indebted to the for his "magnetic-astronomes, elect."

LOCKWOOD, JAMES, minister of Wethersfield. Com., died July 20, 1772, aged 57. The son of James and Lyuia L., he was born in Norwalk in 1714, and graduated at Yale in 1735; and was ordained in 1739, as successor of S. Mix. He favored Mr. Whitefield when he soon after visited the New England churches. He declined the presidency of Princeton and Yale colleges, to both of which he was is shed, for he was strongly attached to his people. He was a scholar, and theologian, and a good preacher, a man of prudence, benevolence, and faithfulness. His wife was Mary, daughter of Rev. Moses Dickinson of Norwalk. Dr. Marsh succeeded him. He published the election sermon, 1754, also in 1763; on the death of Col. Williams, 1755; of A. Woodbridge, 1758; at ordination of E. May, 1756;

thanksplving for peace, 1763.—Sprague's Annals. LOCKWOOD, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Andover, Conn., the brother of Rev. James L., died in 1791, aged 69. He was graduated at Yale college in 1745, and was ordained in 1749. He contributed, in the year 1787, 100 pounds toward completing the philosophical apparatus in Yale college. His death occurred at New Lebanon, whither he went for his health; but he was buried at A. He was highly respected and had great influence. No religious society was more prosperous than his. He published the election sermon, 1774. — Holmes' Life of Stiles, 390, 397; Sprague's Annals.

LOCKWOOD, WILLIAM, minister of Glastenbury, Conn., died June 23, 1828, aged 75. He graduated at Yale in 1774, and was a tutor.

LOCKWOOD, Jesse, warry among the Arkansas Cherokees, died. Dwight July 11, 1834, aged 31. A native of North Salem, N. Y., he graduated at Williams college in 1830. His labors at Dwight were only for a few months. His wife was a daughter of Rev. M. Sawyer of Gloucester. His character is described in the Missionary Herald for 1834.

LOGAN, JAMES, distinguished for his learning, died Oct. 31, 1751, aged about 77. He was descended from a family formerly of Scotland, and was born at Lurgan in Ireland in 1674. Possessing a good genius and being favored with a

Cincinnati eburg, Me., ny, and he nanical and a medical geon in the in the west. chemistry in ologist, and instory. led widely:

Vahersfield, The son of Norwalk in 35; and was S. Mix. He atter visited declined the colleges, to was strongly scholar, and man of prus. His wife Dickinson of m. He pub-, lso in 1763; of A. Wood-May, 1756; gue's Annals. inister of Anames L., dicd ated at Yale n 1749. He ounds toward ratus in Yale ew Lebanon, but he was cted and had ety was more the election Stiles, 390, er of Glastenaged 75. He a tutor.

y among the ight July 11, Salem, N. Y., n 1830. His few months. M. Sawyer of scribed in the r his learning,

77. He was
of Scotland,
in 1674. Pos-

suitable education, he made considerable proficiency in the sciences and in various branches of polite literature. As he was educated in the sentiments of the Quakers, and was acquainted with William Penn, he was induced to accompany that gentleman to Pennsylvania in 1699, in his last voyage. Under his patronage he was much employed in public affairs. By his commission he was, in 1701, appointed secretary of the province and clerk of the council. He afterwards held the offices of commissioner of property, chief justice, and president of the council. He attached himself rather to the interest of the proprietary and his governor than to that of the assembly, and was in consequence in the earlier periods of his life very unpopular; but he soon gave general satisfaction in the discharge of the duties of his several offices. Upon the death of Governor Gordon in Oct., 1736, the government of course devolved upon him, as president of the council; and during his administration of two years the utmost harmony prevailed throughout the province. Several years previously to his death he retired from public affairs and spert the latter part of his life principally at Stanton, his country seat, near Germantown, where he enjoyed among his books that leisure which he much relished, and was much employed in corresponding with learned men in different parts of Europe. He was well versed in both ancient and modern learning; he had made considerable proficiency in oriental literature; he was master of the Greek, Latin, French, and German languages; and he was well acquainted with mathematics, natural and moral philosophy, and necural history. In his religious sentiments he was a Quaker. He had collected with great care a library of more than three thousand volumes, which at that time was by far the largest in Pennsylvania, and particularly rich in works in the Latin and Greek languages, and in the most curious, rare, and excellent scientific publications. This valuable collection of books, usually called the Loganian library, was bequeathed by its possessor to the citizens of Philadelphia, and has since been deposited in one of the apartments belonging to the library company of that eity.

Mr. Logau published in the philosophical transactions, for 1735, an account of his experiments on maize. The work was afterwards published in Latin, entitled, experimenta et meletemata de plantarum generatione, etc., Leydew, 1739; and in London by Dr. Fothergill with an English version on the opposite page, 1747. He also published canonum pro inveniendis refractionum, tum simplicium, tum in lentibus duplicium focis, demonstrationes geometricæ, etc., Leyden, 1739; and a translation of Cicero's treatise de senectute, 1741. This was the first translation of a classical author made in America. — Proud's Hist. Pennsylvania, I. 448, 479; Miller's Retr. 1., 134; II. 340.

LOGAN, MARTILA, a great florist, was the daughter of Robert Daniel of South Carolina. In her fifteenth year she married Geo. Logan, son of Col. Geo. L., and died in 1779, aged 77. At the age of 70 she wrote a treatise on gardening.

LOGAN, an eloquent chief, was the second son of Shikellemus, a celebrated chief of the Cayuga nation, whose residence was at Shamokin. Logan was the friend of the white people, he admired their ingenuity, and wished to be a neighbor to them. In April or May, 1774, when Logan's residence was on the Ohio, his family was murdered by a party of whites under the command of Capt. Michael Cresap. The occasion of this outrage was a report, that the Indians had killed a number of white persons, who were looking out for new settlements. A war immediately commenced, and during the summer great numbers of innocent men, women, and children fell victims to the tomahawk and scalping-kuife of the Indians. In the autumn of the same year a decisive battle was fought at the mouth of the great Kanawha, between the collected forces of the Shawanese, Mingoes, and Delawares, and a detachment of the Virginia militia. The Indians were defeated, and sued for peace. Logan, however, disdained to be seen among the suppliants. But, lest the sincerity of a treaty from which so distinguished a chief absented himself, should be mistrusted, he sent by a messenger the following speech, to be delivered to Lord Dunmore, governor of Virginia: "I appeal to any white man to say, if ever he entered Logan's cabin hungry, and he gave him not meat; if ever he came cold and naked, and he clothed him not. During the course of the last long and bloody war, Logan remained idle in his cabin, an advocate for peace. Such was my love for the whites, that my countrymen pointed as they passed, and said, Logan is the friend of white men. I had even thought to have lived with you, but for the injuries of one man. Colonel Cresap, the last spring, in cold blood and unprovoked, murdered all the relations of Logan, not even sparing my women and There runs not a drop of my blood in children. the veins of any living creature. This called on me for revenge. I have sought it; I have killed many; I have fully glutted my vengeance. For my country I rejoice at the beams of peace. But do not harbor a thought that mine is the joy of fear. Logan never felt fear. He will not turn on his heel to save his life. there to mourn for Logan? Not one."

a translation of Cicero's treatise de senectute, 1741. This was the first translation of a classiHe went to Detroit, where he vielded himself to the habit of intoxication. On his return, between that place and Miami, he was murdered. In October, 1781, Mr. Heckewelder was shown the spot, by some Indians, where this event was said to have occurred. - Jefferson's Notes on Virginia, query VI., and appendix.

LOGAN, BENJAMIN, died in Shelby county, Ky., Dec. 11, 1802, at an advanced age. He took an active part in favor of his country in 1776. An early adventurer to Kentucky, he was one of her most able defenders against the savages. The fate of the western country seemed to hang upon him. He was upright, sincere, honorable, of unbounded hospitality.

LOGAN, GEORGE, M. D., a senator of the United States, the grandson of James Logan, died at Stanton April 9, 1821, aged 66. He was the son of William L., and was born at Stanton, near Philadelphia, Sept. 9, 1753. After being three years at the medical school of Edinburgh, he travelled on the continent, and returned to this country in 1779. After applying himself for some years to agriculture, and serving in the legislature, he was induced in June, 1798, to embark for Europe, with the sole purpose of preventing a war between America and France. He made his way from Hamburg to Paris; and there was introduced to Merlin, the chief director. At this period Mr. Gerry, the American minister, had departed, an embargo had been laid on our shipping, and many seamen had been imprisoned. Dr. L. persuaded the French government to raise the embargo, and prepared the way for a negotiation, which terminated in peace. He was indeed reproached, and accused of being sent by a faction; but on his return he vindicated himself in a letter of Jan. 12, 1796. He was a senator in the seventh and eighth congresses from 1801 to 1807. He went to England in Feb., 1810, on the same peaceful mission, which led him to France, but not with the same success. Mr. Duponceau said of him: "And art thou too gone, Logan P friend of man! friend of peace! friend of science! Thou, whose persuasive accents could still the angry passions of the rulers of men, and dispose their minds to listen to the voice of reason and justice?" He was an active member of the board of agriculture, and of the philosophical society. He published experiments on gypsum, and on the rotation of crops, 1797.

LOGAN, DEBORAH, widow of Dr. George L., died at Stenton, Pa., in 1839. She was skilled in the early history of Pennsylvania, and was a member of the Pennsylvania historical society.

LOMBARD, SOLOMON, first minister of Gorham, Maine, died in 1781. Born in Barnstable, Mass, he graduated at Harvard in 1723; was on future punishment; when he had for a hearer him. He became in some measure delirious. ordained in 1756, and dismissed in 1764. -Sprague's Annals.

LONG, SARAH, a colored woman, died in Toronto, Canada. June 16, 1856, aged 119.

LONGFELLOW, STEPHEN, LL. D., died in Portland Aug. 2, 1849, aged 73. Born in Gorham, he was a descendant of William L. of Newbury, who died in 1690, aged 37; he graduated at Harvard in 1798, and passed his life as an eminent lawyer, chiefly at Portland. Of the Hartford convention he was a member from Maine. The poet, Longfellow, is his son. He compiled sixteen vols, of the Massachusetts Reports and twelve vols. of the Maine, extending over a period of thirty years.

LONGLEY, WILLIAM, died at Hawley, Mass.,

July 8, 1836, aged 92. He was one year in the French war and five years in the Revolutionary war, LONGLEY, EDMUND, died in Hawley, Nev. 20, 1842, aged 96. He built the first framed house in the town, then called Number Seven, and was an officer in the Revolutionary war.

LONGLEY, JONATHAN, minister of Northbridge, Mass., died in 1850, aged 60.

LONGMERE, DAVID, D. D., died at Gloucester, N. J., Sept. 15, 1855, aged 62.

LOOKER, OTHNIEL, died in Palestine, Illinois. in 1845, aged 87. Born in New Jersey, he was a soldier of the Revolution; he emigrated in 1804 to Ohio, and was a senator of Hamilton county, a judge, and acting governor in 1814.

LOOMIS, HARVEY, first minister of Bangor, Maine, was a native of Torringford, Conn.; graduated at Williams college in 1809; and was ordained Nov. 27, 1811, when the church of Bangor was formed, consisting partly of members of what was called the Orrington church. After the toils of fourteen years, on Sunday morning, Jan. 2, 1825, Mr. Loomis walked in a snow-storm up to his meeting-house, with a sermon on this text: "This year thou shalt die." When he had sented himself in the pulpit, he had a fit of the apoplexy and died in ten minutes, aged about 36. His successor was S. L. Pomeroy. He was a popular and useful preacher, in his character and manners adapted to the people of his parish, skilful in the guidance and control of the young and active minds, which on the banks of the Penobscot were laying the foundations of a large town. In his sermons he dispensed with circuitous preambles; was direct, concise, brief, energetic, seldom excceding twenty-five minutes; and thus he had no hearers of a lagging attention. His prayer meetings were conducted with great freedom and wisdom. Why he was cut down in the midst of his important labors is one of the great mysteries of Providence.

It is said, he once preached a sermon of terror

1764. -ed in To-

., died in n in Gorof Newideated at in emineut

Hariford inc. The ipiled sixports and er a period

ley, Mass., ear in the ionary war. wley, Nov.

est framed Seven, and

of North-

at. Glouces-

ne, Illinois, ey, he was nigrated in f Hamilton in 1814.

of Banger. onn. ; gradind was orof Bangar ers of what er the toils ng, Jan. 2, torm up to this text: had seated e apoplexy t 36. His

s a popular d manners kilful in the and active bscot were n. In his preambles; seldom ex-

he had no lis prayer eedom and e midst of t mysteries

n of terror or a hearer " I have no faith in your doctrine, but I wish you to preach it, till the stealers of my logs shall learn to be honest;" and that the same man gave a hell for the church to call them to meeting. Doubtless God's word is full of terror to the wicked, and the God of justice and of truth will not fail to execute his purposes. He published a sermon before the Maine Missionary Society, 1823. On occasion of his death a young lady of his society wrote some lines, called "The deserted conference-room," of which the following is an extract:

" Ye need not hang that candle by the desk, Ye may remove his chair, and take away his book; He will not come to-night. He did not hear the belt, Which told the hour of prayer.

Do ye remember, how he 'd sometimes sit In this now vacant corner, quite hid by its obscurity, In this now vacant corner, quite and by its onecurity, Only ye might perceive his matchiess eye Sirlving to read the feelings of your souls, That he might know, if ye would hear the voice of Jesus Ye do remember. Well—he's not there now; Ye may be gay and thoughtless, if ye will, His glance shall not reprave you. There - listen to that hymn of praise: Did ye not hear an angel-voice take up the lofty strain, For Thou, O Lumb of God, art worthy?' 'Twas his voice; Not rising, as in former days from this low temple: Only the clearert, softest strain, waving its way From the celestial world, just strikes the listening ear,— And new 'tis gone.''

A notice of him is in the Independent, July 17, 1856. - Sprague's Annals.

LOOMIS, LEBBEUS, colonel, died in Cherry Valley, in 1836, aged 79. He was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and an officer to the close of the war.

LOPEZ, AARON, died May 20, 1782, at Smithfield, R. I. He was a rich Jewish merchant of Newport, but removed to Leicester in 1777 on account of the war. On a journey to Providence he drove his horse in a gig to water in Spot's pond; when the gig was upset and he was drowned. His house in Leicester was purchased as the first building used by the academy.

LORD, RICHARD, captain, died at Hartford in 1662, aged 51, the son of Thomas, who was a first settler. He was a merchant and man of distinction. His son Richard was also a merchant; and he died in 1685. His wife was Mary, daughter of Henry Smith of Springfield, and granddaughter of W. Pynchon. After his death she married Dr. Thomas Hooker, the son of Rev. Samuel H. of Farmington, and grandson of Rev. Thomas II. of Hartford. Mr. Goodwin gives the names, in order, of one hundred of the descendants of Thomas Lord.

LORD, Joseph, first minister of Dorchester, South Carolina, died June 6, 1748, aged about 77, was a native of Charlestown, Mass., and was graduated at Harvard college in 1691. In the fall of 1695 he was ordained pastor of the church which was gathered in Dorchester, Mass., with in 1850. - Sprague's Annals.

a rich log owner, who commended him, and said, the design of removing to South Carolina. They arrived Dec. 20th, and began a settlement called Dorchester, on Amiley river, about eighteen miles from Charleston. The sacrament of the Lord's supper was first administered in Carolina, Feb. 2, 1696. Hugh Fisher succeeded Mr. Lord. -Holmes' Annals, 11. 34; Collect. Hist. Society, IX. 156, 157; Guildersleeve's Cent. Sermon.

LORD, BENJAMIN, D. D., minister of Norwich, Conn., died in April, 1784, aged 90. He was a graduate at Yale college in 1714, and was afterwards a tutor in that seminary two years. He was ordained in October, 1717, as successor of Mr. Woodward, who was the next minister after Mr. Fitch; and, continuing his public labors about sixty years, he lived to see eight religious societies, which had grown out of the one of which he had taken the charge. Two other parishes were formed at the time of his settlement. During the half-century of his ministry, ending in 1767, about a thousand persons had died. Of persons admitted to the church there were three hundred and thirty. The covenant was owned by four hundred and ten, of whom ninety joined the church; and two thousand and fifty were baptized. He was a man of distinction, and a faithful evangelical preacher. He had some trouble from a wild seet called Rogerenes. Rogers, their leader, once accosted him at his church door: "Benjamin, Benjamin, dost thou think that they wear white wigs in heaven?" He published a discourse on the parable of the merchant man seeking goodly pearls, 1722; true Christianity explained and enforced, 1727; on the character, birth, and privileges of God's children, 1742; an account of the extraordinary recovery of Mercy Wheeler, 1743; at the election, 1751; on the death of Henry Willes, 1759; of Hezekiah Lord, 1763; of Hezekiah Huntington, 1773; of Mrs. Willes, 1774 · at the instalment of Nathaniel Whitaker, 1761, at the ordination of Levi Hart, 1762; a half-century discourse, Nov. 29, 1767, being fifty years from his ordination; a sermen, 1780. - Sprague's Annals.

LORD, JOSEPH, son of Rev. J. L., a preacher and physician, died at Westmoreland, N. H., in 1789, aged 85. He graduated at Harvard in 1726

LORD, JOHN, minister of Buffalo, N. Y., died in 1839, aged 65.

LORD, JOHN KING, minister in Cincinnati. Ohio, died of the cholera July 13, 1849, aged 30. The son of President Lord of Dartmouth college, he graduated in 1836. Having studied theology at Andover, he was six years a minister in Hartford, Vt., and then in 1847 was the pastor of the first congregational church in Cincinnati. In less than two years he died. A volume of his sermons, with a memoir by his father, was published LORD, WILLIAM, Dr., died at Lyme, Conn., in 1852, aged 89. He graduated at Yale in 1784. LORD, NATHANIEL, died in Ipswich, Mass., Oct. 16, 1852, aged 72. The son of Isaac of Ipswich, he graduated in 1798, and was a teacher, and regis.or of probate in Essex county. LORING, ISRAEL, minister of Sudbury, Mass., died March 9, 1772, aged 90. He was born at Hull, April 6, 1682, the son of John, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1701. He was ordained at Sudbury, Nov. 20, 1706, as successor of Mr. Sherman. A new church was formed on the east side of the river in 1723, and William Cooke was settled as its pastor March 20. He preached on the first day of the mouth in which he died. He was a venerable man, of primitive piety and manners, and faithful and useful in his ministerial work. He had preached for nearly seventy years, and was zealously attached to the doctrines of the gospel. His successor was Jacob Bigelow. His son John, a physician in Hoston, died in 1744, aged about 35. He graduated in 1729. He published the nature and necessity of the new birth, 1728, with a preface by Mr. Prince: on the death of Robert Breek, 1731; on the torments of hell, 1732; election sermon, 1737; justification not by works, but by faith in Jesus Christ, 1749; at the ordination of G. Richardson, 1754. - Sprague's Annals.

LORING, James, deacon, died in Boston July 9, 1850, aged 80. He had been an officer in the Baptist church of Dr. Stillman, and was a Christian of humility and great excellence of character. For fifty-five years he was a printer and bookseller, and was editor of the Christian Watchman, and publisher of the Massachusetts State Register, from 1800 to 1848. He was born at Hull July 22, 1770. His carliest ancestor in this country was Deacon Thomas Loring, who came from Devon to Hingham Dec. 22, 1634; and after him were Deacons John, Benjamin, and James, the last of whom was the father of the subject of this article.

LOTHROP, NATHANIEL, a physician, died in Plymouth Oct. 20, 1828, aged 93. Born in P., he graduated at Harvard in 1750.

LOUGHBRIDGE. MARY, died at Tallahassee in 1850, wife of Robert M. L., missionary to the Creeks, and daughter of Deacon Joseph Avery, of Conway

LOVE, BENJAMIN, colonel, a Chickasaw chief, died in 1849. He was an intelligent and useful man, engaged in public matters since 1832, when he was a chief, and the interpreter at the making of the treaty; he was a commissioner of the Chickasaw nation.

liberty. For his patriotic zeal Gen. Gage shut him up in prison; and he was carried as a prisoner by the British troops to Halifax, where he was for a long time kept in close confinement. The father was a tory refugee; the son, a whig prisoner. On his return to Hoston he was elected

LOVEJOY, HANNAH, died in Amherst, N. H., in 1805, aged 102.

LOVEJOY, Pompey, died in Andover in 1826, mittee of foreign correspondence he was laborious aged 102. He was born a slave in Boston, but became a freeman. He lived on the spot where he died, ninety-one years; his wife survived him, aged 98. He was the oldest man in the county of Essex, and had his mental faculties to the last.

LOVEJOY, DANIEL, a useful minister in Maine, died in Albion in 1833, aged 58. He was the father of sons of eminence. Born in Amhierst, N. H., he was settled in Robbinston and Windsor, Me., and went to Albion in 1829.

LOVEJOY, ELIJAH P., son of the preceding, was killed at Alton, Ill., Nov. 7, 1837, aged 35. He was born in Maine in 1802; graduated at Waterville in 1820, and was licensed to preach in 1833. He soon established the St. Louis Observer, an anti-slavery paper, which occasioned a mob in 1836. Driven away, he re-established his paper in Alton, where his press was twice destroyed by mobs. On the attack for the third time, he was shot, while defending his property against lawless murderers.

LOVEJOY, SAMUEL, Dr., died in West Townsend May 21, 1851, aged 75. He was a successful physician, and he died in the Christian's hope.

LOVELL, John, a schoolmaster in Boston. died in 1778, aged about 70. He was a descendant of one of the first settlers of Massachusetts, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1728, and, after succeeding Jeremy Gridley as assistant, for some years, in the south grammar or Latin school, was placed at the head of the school in 1738. He was "the master" nearly forty years. Many of the principal men of the Revolution had heen under his tuition. But unhappily he was himself a loyalist, and in 1776 accompanied the British army to Halifax, where he died. Master Lovell was succeeded in his school by Samuel Hunt. He was a good scholar, of solid judgment, rigia in discipline, yet humorous and an agreeable companion. He published a funeral oration on P. Faneuil, 1742, and several political and theological pamphlets. In the Pietas, etc., printed at Cambridge, he wrote Nos. 2, 25, 26, and 27, partly in Latin. - Eliot.

LOVELL, JAMES, a schoolmaster in Boston, son of the preceding, died in July, 1814, aged 76. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1756, and was for many years a teacher of the Latin school, associated with his father. In the Revolution he was a firm whig, devoted to the cause of liberty. For his patriotic zeal Gen. Gage shut him up in prison; and he was earried as a prisoner by the British troops to Halifax, where he was for a long time kept in close confinement. The father was a tory refugee; the son, a whig prisoner. On his return to Hoston he was elected a member of congress, in which station his services were of great advantage to his country. On the committee of foreign correspondence he was laborious pot where vived him, the county ies to the inister in . He was Amherst. ind Wind-preceding, 7, aged 35. aduated at o preach in Louis Ohccasioned a ablished his s twice dethird time, erty against

West Towns a successstian's hope. in Boston, s a descendassachusetts, ege in 1728, as assistant, ar or Latin e school in forty years. volution had ppily he was mpanied the ed. Master by Samuel solid judgrous and an ed a funeral eral political Pietas, etc.,

2, 25, 26, and

in Boston, 14, aged 76. ge in 1756, of the Latin the Reveluthe cause of 1. Gage shut ed as a prisax, where he confinement. e son, a whig e was elected n his services On the comvas laborious e committee, to which his name is affixed, is dated Oct., 1777. In May, 1778, he w associated with R. H. Lee and R. Morris. Before the establishment of the present constitution of Massachusetts he was the collector of the customs for Boston, and afterwards was naval officer for Boston and Charlestown, in which station he continued till his death. He published oratio in funere H. Flyntii, 1760. Several of his letters are found in the life of A.

LOVELL, JOSEPH, M. D., died at Washington Oct. 17, 1836, surgeon-general of the United States army. He graduated at Harvard in 1807; entered the army in 1812, and served on the Niagara frontier; and was then hospital surgeon. He was a man of talents and skill, and adorned with the virtues of private life. He left a widow and eleven children.

LOVELL, JAMES, major, died in St. Matthews, S. C., July 10, 1850, aged 92. Born in Boston July 9, 1758, the son of James Lovell, he graduated in 1776. He was in various battles of the war, and was severely wounded. He was adjutant in Lee's legion. After all his perils, he lived to be the oldest graduate at Harvard.

LOVELL, ALEXANDER, died in Nashua, N. H., July 2, 1855, aged 68. Born in Holden, a graduate of Dartmouth in 1814, of Andover in 1816, he was from 1817 for fifteen years a useful minister of Vergennes; then eleven years at Philips-ton, when ill health laid him aside.

LOVEWELL, Joun, eaptain, the hero of Pigwawkett, died in 1725. He was the son of Zaecheus L., who was an ensign in the army of O. Cromwell, and who settled at Dunstable, and died there, aged 120, being the oldest person who ever died in New Hampshire. Zaccheus had three sons: Zaccheus, a colonel in the French war of 1759; Jonathan, a preacher, representative, and judge; and the subject of this article. In the Indian wars a large bounty being offered for scalps, Capt. Lovewell, at the head of a volunteer company of thirty men, marched to the north of Winipisseogee lake and killed an Indian and took a boy prisoner, Dec. 19, 1724. Having obtained his reward at Boston, he augmented his company to seventy and marched to the same place. There dismissing thirty men for the want of provisions, he proceeded with forty men to a pond in Wakefield, now called Lovewell's pond, where he discovered ten Indians asleep by a fire; they were on their march from Canada to the frontiers. He killed them all Feb. 20, 1725, and with savage triumph entered Dover with their sealps hooped and elevated on poles, for each of which one hundred pounds was paid out of the public treasury at Boston. He marched a third time with forty-six men. Leaving a few men at a fort. thirty-four men to the north end of a pond in guenot descent. Excepting sixty years in New Pigwawkett, now Fryeburg in Maine, and there a severe action was fought with a party of fortytwo Indians, commanded by Pangus and Wahwa, May 8, 1725. At the first fire Lovewell and eight of his men were killed; the remainder retreated a short distance to a favorable position and defended themselves. With the pond in their rear, the mouth of an unfordable brook on their right, a rocky point on their left, and having also the shelter of some large pine trees, they fought bravely from ten o'clock till evening, when the Indians, — who had lost their leader, Paugus, killed by Mr. Chamberlain, — retired, and fled from Pigwawkett. Ensign Robbins and two others were mortally wounded; these were necessarily left behind to die. Eleven, wounded but able to murch, and nine, unhurt, at the rising of the moon quitted the fatal spot. Jonathan Frye, the chaplain, Lieut. Farwell, and another man, died in the woods in consequence of their wounds. The others, with the widows and children of the slain, received a grant of Lovewell's town, or Suncook, now Pembroke, N. H., in 1728, in recompense of their sufferings. The bodies of twelve were afterwards found by Col. Tyng and buried. Capt. L. had two sons; John died in Dunstable, and Col. Nehemiah in Corinth, Vermont. His daughter married Capt. Joseph Baker of Pembroke. The last of his company, Thos. Ainsworth, died at Brookfield Jan., 1794, aged 85. - Symmes' Memoirs of the Fight; Farmer; Belknap, 11. 61-70; Farmer's Hist. Coll. I.; II. 94, 180; 111. 64, 173.

LOVEWELL, Mr., died in Dunstable, N. H., aged 120. He died many years ago, but the date of his death has not been ascertained. He was the father of Col. Zaccheus L., mentioned by Belknap.

LOW, SAMUEL, a poet, was born in 1765. He published at New York, two small vols. of poems, 1800.

LOW, JAMES, M. D., a physician, died in 1822, aged 40. He was born at Albany Dec. 9, 1781, and was educated at Schenectady college. He studied his profession four years at Edinburgh. and, returning in 1808, commenced the practice at Albany in connection with his former teacher, Dr. Wm. McClelland, and was extensively employed. For some years he delivered lectures on chemisivy. He was a scholar, an enthusiast in poetry, and a promoter of learning. He published an inaugural dissertation, de tetano, 1807; account of the epidemic pneumonia, in medical register, IV.; observations on the moth destructive to bees; notes to Hooper's Vade Meeum, and to Bell on the venereal. - Thacher.

LOW, Ann, died in Rye, N. Y., in 1849, aged 91, at the house of her son-in-law, Rev. M. De which he built at Ossipee pond, he proceeded with Vinne. Her maiden name was Creglere, of HuYork, the rest of her life was spent in the itineracy of her daughters, in connection with the Methodist church.

LOW, SETH, died at Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1853, aged 71. Born in Gloucester, he graduated at Harvard in 1804. A merchant, he lived in Salem and New York, and was a man of judgment, of generous charity and influence.

LOWELL, JOHN, minister in Newburyport, died May 15, 1767, aged 63. He was a descendant of Pereival L., a merchant, who came from Bristol, England, and settled at Newbury, where he died Jan. 8, 1665. His father, Ebenezer L. of Boston, died in Boston in 1711, aged 36. He was born March 14, 1704, graduated at Harvard college in 1721, was ordained over the third church in Newbury Jan. 19, 1726. Mr. Cary was his successor. He was amiable, candid, liberal, and social, respected for his learning, and a useful minister. He published a sermon at the ordination of T. Barnard, 1738; before Col. Titcomb and his soldiers, 1755; on the death of Col. Moses Titcomb, who fell near Lake George, 1760. -Tucker's Funeral Sermon; Sprague's Annals.

LOWELL, John, LL. D., judge, the son of the preceding, died at Roxbury May 6, 1802, aged 58. He was graduated at Harvard college in the year 1760. Having settled in Boston as a lawyer, he was chosen a member of congress in 1781. Of the convention which formed the constitution of Massachusetts he was a distinguished member. In 1789 Washington appointed him judge of the district court, and on the new organization of the courts of the United States in Feb., 1801, he was appointed chief judge of the first circuit. Uniting to a vigorous mind, which was enriched with literary acquisitions, a refined taste and conciliatory manners, and being sincere in the profession and practice of the Christian religion, his decease was deeply felt and lamented. For eighteen years he was a member of the corporation of Harvard college, and one of the founders of the American academy. His son, Francis C., a proprietor of the Lowell factories, died in 1817; his son, Rev. Charles L., is still living. He wrote an English poem, No. 3, in the "Pictas," etc., printed at Can.bridge. He pronounced before the American academy of arts and sciences, in Jan., 1791, an elegant culogy on their late president, James Bowdoin, which is prefixed to the second volume of the memoirs of that society.

LOWELL, JOHN, died in Bombay in Feb., 1836, aged 37, oldest son of Francis C. L. Inheriting early an ample fortune, he yet toiled for learning. Losing his wife and children, he travelled in Greece, Syria, Egypt, Nubia, and Abyssinia. He had moral and religious principle, and was esteemed in the relations of life and by his

Boston March 12, 1640, aged 70. He was the son of Judge Lowe I, and was born at Newburyport Oct. 6, 1760; was graduated at Cambridge in 1786; and, after practising the law till of the age of 34, he left the bar. In 1803 he went to Europe for the be refit of his health. After his return he wrote much for the newspapers and journals, few man exercising so great an influence over public opinion. He was of the federal school. His political pieces appeared chiefly in the Centinel; he wrote also on theological controversial matters and agriculture. He was the author of twenty-five or more pamphlets. From 1810 to 1822 he was one of the corporation of the college. Of the Massachusetts general hospital, the athenœum, the savings bank. and the hospital life insurance company he was one of the founders. He was frank, fearless, generous, sometimes impetuous,

LOWNDES, WILLIAM, LL. D., a statesman, was a native of South Carolina, and was a distinguished member of congress for a period of ten years from about 1812 to 1822, when from ill health he resigned. In 1818 he was chairman of the committee of ways and means. While on a voyage from Philadelphia to London in the ship Moss, he died at sea, Oct. 27, 1822, aged 42, His family was with him. A writer in the National Register describes him as tall, slender, emaciated, of a rueful countenance; a man of wealth and probity; modest, retiring, and unambitious; with a mind of the first order, vigorous, comprehensive, and logical, and a memory of uncommon power, and standing in the first rank of American statesmen. There must have been some most extraordinary excellences in his character, for he was respected and beloved even by his political adversaries. He had a heart of kindness, purity of morals, frankness and candor, a sound judgment, wisdom pre-eminent, and patriotism most ardent. His feeble voice and awkward gesticulation were of little advantage to his oratory. Hut his strong, comprehensive mind, and his love of country, together with his virtues, gave him a persuasive power. On hearing of the victory of Lake Erie, he rose and electrified the house with his eloquence. Had he lived, he might have been the president of the United States. It was said of him in congress by Mr. Taylor of New York: "The highest and best hopes of the country looked to Wm. Lowndes for their fulfilment. The most honorable office in the civilized world, the chief-magistracy of this free people, would have been illustrated by his virtues and taients." Concerning that office, of seeking which, by any intrigue or artifice or effort of his own whatever, Mr. Lowndes was totally incapable, he remarked. "The office of president of the United States is one neither to be solicited nor declined." It were LOWELL, JOHN, LL. D., died of apoplexy at happy for our country, if the same modest spirit exerted a controlling effect over our great statesmen, and if the honors of high office were merited by public services and private virtues, and not sought.

was the

Newbury-

nbridge in

of the age

went to

After his apers and a influence

ie federal chiefly in theological . He was pamphlets.

ae corpora-

usetts genings bank.

any he was

k, fearless,

statesman.

as a distin-

eriod of ten

en from ill

chairman of

While on a

in the ship

2, aged 42,

r in the Na-

lender, ema-

an of wealth

ınambitious;

ous, compre-

f uncommon

of American

some most

racter, for he

his political

dness, purity

sound judg-

riotism most ard gesticularatory. But

d his love of gave him a

he victory of

e house with

ht have been

It was said f New York:

the country

ilment. The

ed world, the

, would have

lents." Con-

h, by any in-

vn whatever,

he remarked

ted States is

ed." It were modest spirit LOWNDES, THOMAS, died at Charleston, S. C., July 8, 1843, aged 77. He was the eldest son of Rawlins L., who was president of South Carolina in 1778–1780. Mr. L. was in congress in 1801– 1805, and was eloquent in debate.

LOWREY, GEORGE, major, a distinguished Cherokee, died Oct. 20, 1852, aged about 82. He was a deacon in Mr. Worcester's church. Born on the Tennessee river about 1770, he was one of the delegates who visited President Washington at Philadelphia in 1791 or 1792, and who made the treaty of 1819; he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the Cherokee nation in 1827, and was elected assistant principal chief. He sustained various offices, and was an honest man, a pure patriot, a devoted Christian. He wrote a tract on temperance in Cherokee, which was printed, and he aided in the translation of the Scriptures. As he was about to die, he expressed his reliance on the atoning blood of Christ.

LOWRIE, WALTER M., missionary to China of the Presbyterian board, was murdered by pirates, being thrown into the sea, in Aug., 1847. He was the son of Walter L., secretary of the Presbyterian board, and brother of John C. L., missionary in Northern India. He was on his return from Shanghae, where he had attended a convention of missionaries to revise the translation of the New Testament. R. W. Dickinson has spoken of him in the columns of the Observer, Jan. 8, 1848.

I.OWRY, JAMES, a minister in Chester district, S. C., died in 1853, leaving 1000 dollars for foreign missions, and the same for domestic missions.

LUCAS, WILLIAM, minister of Auburn, N. Y., died in 1839.

LUCAS, JOHN B. C., died at St. Louis in 1842, sged about 80. Born in Normandy, he was educated at Caen, and became doctor of laws. He emigrated in 1784 to Pittsburg. While a member of congress, Mr. Jefferson, in 1805, nominated him as a judge in Louisiana, an office which he held till 1820.

LUDLOW, ROGER, deputy-governor of Massachusetts and of Connecticut, was a pious gentleman of a good family in the west of England, and came to this country with Maverick and Warham, and was one of the first settlers of Dorchester in 1630. He was an assistant four years, being chosen such in England. In May, 1632, when Gov. Winthrop told him that the people intended to ask of the next general court that the assistants might be chosen annually, "he grew into passion and said, that then we should have no government, etc." In 1631 he was copulygovernor; but, failing to be chosen gove tor, he complains of the election, as agreed upon by the deputies in private. For this he was left out of the magistracy. In consequence he removed in 1635, with the first settlers, to Windsor, and in Connecticut he was for nineteen years one of the most useful and distinguished men. He was every year a magistrate or deputy-governor; he was also one of the commissioners of the united colonies. Removing in 1639 to Fairfield, his situation made him particularly interested in the protection of the western frontier against the Dutch and Indians. The commissioners, in consequence of an alleged plot of the Dutch, voted, in 1053, to make war against them; but Massachusetts refused to concur, much to the dissatisfaction of New Haven, and in disregard, it was asserted, of the power stipulated to belong to the commissioners, to make war and peace. At this period the inhabitants of Fairfield determined to make war with Manhadoes, and chose Mr. Ludlow commander-in-chief. He accepted the appointment. Hut the general court of New Haven discountenanced the project, and punished his officers, Basset and Chapman, for attempting to make an insurrection, and for raising volunteers. Probably, in consequence of this affair, Mr. Ludtow embarked, in April, 1654, for Virginia, with his family, and carried away the records of Fairfield with him. The time and place of his death are not known. Mr. Endicott was his brother-in-law. He was ambitious and aspiring. Yet he deserves honorable remembrance for his knowledge of jurisprudence and various public services. He compiled the first Connecticut code of laws, which was printed in 1672.

LUSK.

LUDNUM, AUGUSTA V., Miss, a celebrated pianist of Cincinnati, died at New Orleans Jan. 30, 1851.

LUNDY, BENJAMIN, died at Hennepin, Ill., in Sept., 1839; editor of the genius of universal emancipation.

LUNSFORD, Lewis, a Baptist minister, died in Virginia Oct. 26, 1793, aged 40. With little education, he was an eloquent and celebrated preacher, the pastor of Moratico church, residing in 1779 in Northumberland. He sometimes appeared more like an angel than a man, his face beaming with light, and his style and manner most energetic and sublime. Though in charge of an opulent church, he was poor and neglected; being, as ministers in all ages have often been, like the camels of Arabia, who, while they carry spices and jewels, feed on coarse shrubs and thistles.

intended to ask of the next general court that the assistants might be chosen annually, "he grew in June, 1838, aged 104. Born on Long Island, he was a soldier in the French and Revolutionary | purpose Gen. Lyman went to England. Proha-

LUTHER, SAMUEL, a Baptist minister of Swansey from 1685, died in 1717. He was a man of character, of talents and faithfulness.

LUZERNE, CÆSAR ANNE DE LA, chevalier, minister from France to the United States, succeeded M. Gerard, having been previously employed in a diplomatic capacity in Bavaria. He arrived at Philadelphia Sept. 21, 1779, from which time till the end of the war he continued in his office, having the esteem and confidence of the American people. After five years he was succeeded by M. Barbé Marbois, the secretary of legation, as chargé d'affaires. From Jan., 1788, Luzerne was ambassador at London till his death. Sept. 14, 1791, at the age of 50. His correspondence in regard to America is published in the 10th and 11th vols. of diplomatic correspondence, edited by Jared Sparks.

LYFORD, JOHN, a preacher, was sent over about 1623 as an enemy of the Plymouth company. He was well received and employed for a while as a minister; but, his character being discovered, he was banished. He then preached, about 1626, in Gloucester, Mass., and thence went to Virginia, where he died miserably.

LYMAN, PHINEHAS, major-general, died in 1775, aged about 59. He was born at Durham, Conn., about 1716, was graduated in 1738 at Yale college, in which he was afterwards a tutor three years, and settled as a lawyer in Suffield. He Dec. 20, 1749, so that he was sixty years in the sustained various public offices. In 1755 he was appointed major-general and commander-in-chief of the Connecticut forces. When Sir W. Johnson was wounded in the battle of Lake George, the command devolved on him, and he animated his men to a successful combat. For five hours, in front of the breastwork, he issued his orders with the utmost coolness. Yet Johnson, who was in every respect his inferior, in his mean jealousy gave him no praise; he wished to bear away the honor himself; he was, in fact, made a baronet for this battle, and received 5,000 pounds. In 1758 he served with Abercrombic, and was with Lord Howe when he was killed. He was also at the capture of Crown Point by Amherst, and at the surrender of Montreal. In 1762 he commanded the provincial troops in the expedition against Havana. His services were important, and he acquired a high reputation. In 1763 he went to England as the agent of a company, called the "Military adventurers," and wasted eleven years of his life. The company had purchased of the Six Nations of Indians, under the authority of Connecticut, a tract of land on the Susquehannah river. The proprietors of Pennsylvania claiming the same tract, the government death of S. Hopkins, 1811; of R. Woodbridge, of Connecticut recommended to the company to 1819; of C. Strong, 1819; before American board, obtain a confirmation from the king. For this 1819; before Hampshire ministers, 1821; two bly he formed other projects. Dr. Dwight represents that the object of the company was to obtain a tract on the Mississippi and Yazoo. Being deluded for years by idle promises, his mind sunk dowr into imbecility. At last his wife, who was a sister of Dr. Dwight's father, sent his second son to England to solicit his return, in 1774. About this time a tract was granted to the petitioners. After his return he embarked with his eldest son for the Mississippi. Both died soon after their arrival at West Florida, in 1775. Mrs. Lyman and all her family, but her second son, accompanied by her only brother, Col. Dwight, proceeded in 1776 to the neighborhood of Natchez. Within a few months she died. and Col. Dwight also died in 1777. The Spanish war compelled the whole company, in 1781 or 1782, to flee from Natchez, and with incredible sufferings to make a journey of more than one thousand miles to Savannah, where two of the daughters of Gen. Lyman died. His four sons ioined the British in the war. One of them, once brilliant, gay, and ingenious, came to Suffield, about 1783, penniless, and died in poverty and melancholy. The history of this unhappy family is not encouraging to adventure and emigration. - Dwight, 1. 305; 111. 361.

LYMAN, ISAAC, minister of York, died March 12, 1810, aged 85. Born in Northampton, he graduated at Yale in 1717. He was ordained ministry. His widow, Ruth, died in March, 1824.

aged 93.

LYMAN, GERSHOM C., first minister of Marlborough, Vt., died in 1813, aged 61. Born in Lebanon, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1773, and was ordained Dec. 9, 1778.

LYMAN, JOSEPH, D. D., minister of Hatfield, Mass., died March 27, 1828, aged 78. He was the son of Jonathan, of Lebanon, Conn., and was graduated in 1769 at Yale college, where he was a tutor from 1770 to 1771. Soon afterwards he was ordained at Hatfield, as the successor of Mr. Woodbridge, and died in consequence of a cancerous humor, which afflicted him nearly two years. In his painful sickness he never complained; his last words expressed his trust in Christ as a Saviour. He was an original member of the American foreign mission society, and in 1823 and several subsequent years was its president. He published election sermon, 1787; two occasional sermons, 1804; at ordination of W. Graves, 1791; of H. Lord, 1804; of T. H. Wood, 1806; of D. Huntington, 1809; of S. Hopkins, 1811; at the convention, 1806; at the opening of the bridge, 1807; at Charlestown, 1811; on the and. Proba-. Dwight repnpany was to i and Yazoo. promises, his at last his wife, ther, sent his his return, in as granted to he embarked issippi. Both est Florida, in amily, but her only brother, onths she died, The Spanish ny, in 1781 or with incredible more than one ere two of the His four sons of them, once ne to Suffield. n poverty and unhappy family and emigration.

the neighbor-

rk, died March orthampton, he was ordained ty years in the in March, 1824.

nister of Marl-61. Born in Yale in 1773, ter of Hatfield, 1 78. He was Conn., and was e, where he was afterwards he uccessor of Mr. ience of a canim nearly two he never comd his trust in riginal member society, and in s was its presinon, 1787; two lination of W. of T. II. Wood, of S. Hopkins, t the opening of , 1811; on the . Woodbridge, merican board,

rs, 1821; two

Russia, 1813. -- Sprague's Annals.

LYMAN, WILLIAM, brigadier-general, consul-Northampton, Mass., and graduated at Yale college in 1776. For some years he was a member of congress from Hampshire county, then residing at Northampton. He went in 1805 as consul to London, where he died in Oct., 1811, aged LYMAN, THEODORE, died at Waltham May 24, 1829, aged 86. He had been a merchant in Boston, and was a man of liberal charities.

LYMAN, THEODORE, son of the preceding, died in Boston in 1849. He was a graduate of 1810, and mayor of Boston. He published, A few weeks in Paris, 1814; political state of Italy, 1820; oration July 4, 1820; three weeks in Paris; account of the Hartford convention, 1823; diplomacy of the United States, 2 vols., 1826.

LYMAN, WILLIAM, D. D., minister of Haddam, Conn., and China, N. Y., died in 1833, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1784. He published the election sermon in 1806; a sermon on the death of Mrs. Griswold, of Lyme; a dedication sermon at Lebanon, 1807; at the ordination of J. Harvey, 1810.

LYMAN, HENRY, a missionary, was killed with Mr. Munson by the Battahs at Sumatra, June 28, 1834, aged 24. He was born at Northampton, the son of Theodore and Susan W. Lyman, and a graduate of Amherst in 1829, in a class of thirty-eight persons, of whom twenty-six were ministers. He attended medical lectures at Bowdoin college, preparatory to his fatal mission. There is a monument to his memory at Northampton, near the grave of Brainerd. His wife was Eliza Pond, of Boston. His mother died at Montreal June 12, 1855, aged 68; his sister Helen died there also in 1852. Another sister has been for years at the head of an excellent school for young ladies in Montreal. He published Condition of females in Pagan countries.

LYMAN, ELIPHALET, minister of South Woodstock, Conn., died in 1336, aged 81. He graduated at Yale in 1776. He published two discourses, with an appendix, 1794.

LYMAN, Asa, died at Clinton, N. Y., in 1836, aged about 60. The brother of Rev. Dr. Wm. L., he was graduated at Yale in 1797; was minister of Hamden, Conn., for three years from 1800; was minister in Bath, Me., from 1806 to 1808, when he was dismissed for ill health. He was afterwards a publisher of books in Portland, afterwards in New York, Newark, and Buffalo. Two of his sons were ministers of the Episcopal church in Maryland.

LYMAN, LEWIS, merchant, died at Hartford, Vt., Jan. 29, 1837, aged 45.

sermons on the overthrow of the French army in Mass., in Dec., 1847, aged 80. Born in N., he graduated at Yale in 1783. When he was young a falling tree killed his companion, while he esof the United States at London, was a native of leaped. He was clerk of the courts, judge of the common pleas, judge of probate, and sheriff of Hampshire. He voted at fifty-nine annual elections. Of the Hartford convention he was a member, and of that for revising the State constitution. To the town of N. he was a benefactor, giving the land for the boys' high school. He was descended from John L., a first settler of N., by Benjamin, Joseph, and Captain Joseph, his father, who died in 1804, aged 70. - Ellis' Ser-

> LYNCH, THOMAS, a patriot of the Revolution, was horn Aug. 5, 1749, at Prince George's parish, S. C. His ancestor, Jonack L., emigrated from Ireland. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge, England, and afterwards studied law at the Temple. In 1772 he returned. In 1775 he commanded a company in the first South Carolina regiment. Being chosen to succeed his father, then in ill health, as a member of congress, he signed in 1776 the Declaration of Independence. He set out on his return in company with his father, who died at Annapolis. His own ill health constrained him at the close of 1779 to embark with his wife, in a ship commanded by Capt. Morgan, but nothing was ever afterwards known concerning the vessel. Probably he and his companion went down together into the depth of the ocean. He was about twenty-eight years of age. He had ability, integrity, and firmness, and was amiable in the relations of private life. - Goodrick.

LYNDE, BENJAMIN, chief justice of Massachusetts, died March 28, 1745, aged 79. He was born at Salem in 1666; graduated at Harvard college in 1686; and studied law at the temple: He was appointed a judge in 1712, and chief justice in 1729. From 1723 to 1737 he was a member of the council.

LYNDE, BENJAMIN, chief justice of Massachusetts, son of the preceding, died in 1781, aged about 63. He was graduated in 1718; from 1737 he was for many years a member of the eouneil. At the trial of Capt. Preston in 1770 he presided in court. He resigned the office of chief justice in 1772.

LYNDON, Josias, governor of Rhode Island in 1768, died in 1778, aged 74. He was a member of the Baptist society in Providence, to which he bequeathed his house and other property.

LYON, RICHARD, a poet, came early to this eountry. In 1649 he was a private tutor to a young English student at Cambridge, and lived with President Dunster; he was a preacher. After Eliot's Bay Psalms were published, when it was deemed necessary to revise them, Mr. Lyon was appointed to this service with President LYMAN, Joseph, judge, died in Northampton, Dunster. Many passages from other parts of the New Testament, are inserted. The 20th edition he was ordained at Kingston in 1742, and after was published in 1722.

LYON, JAMES, minister of Brookhaven, N. Y., died in October, 1790, aged 90,

LYON, Asa, minister in South Hero, Grand Isle, Vt., died April 4, 1841, aged 78. Born in Massachusetts, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1790, and commenced preaching the gospel in Grand Isle county, when the settlement was new, and he was venerated in his old age. He was a preacher more than fifty years, and lived at Grand Isle forty years.

LYON, MARY, principal of Mount Holyoke female seminary, died at South Hadley March 5, 1849, aged 52. She was born of pious parents, in the humble walks of life, in a retired spot among the green mountains, in Buckland, Hampden county. On the same mountains were born the missionaries Parsons, Fisk, and King. Early bereaved of her father, she yet enjoyed the care of a Christian mother. She was first the teacher of a district school, evincing talent and skill. Her own academical studies were pursued under Joseph Emerson. She toiled a while in the academy of Ashfield; then became the associate of Miss Grant in the academy of Derry. Thence they removed to Ipswich, and for years Miss Grant conducted a popular female academy with Miss Lyon for her assistant. But now Miss L. formed the plan of Mount Holyoke seminary at South Hadley, near Mount Holyoke. Hers was the plan, and the labor of collecting funds, and arranging the buildings, and the course of instruction. She presided for years over an admirable school, in a beautiful brick college, whose proportions are visible to the traveller on the railroad on the western side of the Connecticut river, furnishing rooms to more than two hundred young ladies. Miss L.'s objects were to bring the means of a thorough education within the ability of the less wealthy, and in the three years' course to train up accomplished teachers, sending them out in great numbers to the far west. Thus has she been an almost unequalled benefactor of the whole country. Her life was written by Dr. Humphrey. For twelve years she was at the head of the seminary. As a teacher thirtyfive years she had three thousand pupils.

LYTTLE, ROBERT T., general, died at New Odcans in 1839. He was of Cincinnati, and a member of congress and distinguished speaker

MACBRIDGE, JAMES, a physician, died in Charleston, S. C., in 1817. He was much devoted to botany, and assisted Elliott in his sketch of southern botany.

MACCARTY, THADDEUS, minister of Worcester, Mass, died July 18, 1785, aged 63. Born physician of Southampton, Long Island.

bible, called the spiritual songs of the Old and in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1739: three years was dismissed for his attachment to Whitefield: was settled June 10, 1747, at Worcester, where he was succeeded by S. Austin. He was tall and slender, with a black, piercing eve, and a sonorous voice. He published a sermon at his installation, 17-17; two fast sermons, 1759; at execution, 1768; at execution for burglary, 1770. His farewell sermon at Kingston was published 1795.

MACCLINTOCK, SAMUEL, D. D., minister of Greenland, N. H., died in 1804, aged 71. He was born in Medford, Mass., May 1, 1732. His father was a native of Ireland. He was graduated at the college in New Jersey in 1751. Being invited to become an assistant to William Allen of Greenland, he was ordained about the year 1757. He was an eminent divine. Though he had no predilection for the field of controversy, yet, when forced into it, he evinced himself a master of argument. An enemy to all civil and religious impositions, during the war he was repeatedly in the army in the character of a chaplain. His exhortations animated the soldiers to the conflict. Under afflictions he was submissive to the Divine will. As he was averse to parade, he directed his funeral to be attended in a simple manner. He published a sermon on the justice of God in the mortality of man, 1759; against the Baptists, 1770; Herodias, or cruelty and revenge the effects of unlawful pleasure, 1772; at the commencement of the new constitution, 1784; an epistolary correspondence between himself and J. C. Ogden, 1791; at the ordination of Jesse Appleton, 1797; the choice. occasioned by the drought, the fever, and the prospect of war, 1798; an oration commemorative of Washington, 1800, - Piscat. Evangelical Magazine, I. 9-12.

MACE, Mrs., died at Brookline, Mass., Dec.

31, 1850, aged 100.

MACGREGORE, DAVID, died May 30, 1777. aged 66, having been forty-one years pastor of the second Presbyterian church in Londonderry, N. H. He was an excellent preacher, a zealous. confident patriot, a trustful Christian. He published a sermon, 1741, entitled professors warned; and the true believer's all secured, 1747.

MACK, DAVID, died in Middlefield, aged 94. He was the first merchant in the town, acquired wealth, and was a man of influence and benevolence, highly esteemed. Yet so ignorant was he, that he went to school with his own son six years old. The tract, the faithful steward, relates to him. - Holland's Hist. Hampshire Co.

MACKAY, ANDREW, Dr., died at Wareham, Mass., in April, 1817, aged 70, the son of a Scotch in 1739; , and after achment to 17, at Wor-S. Austin. ck, piercing shed a serst sermons. on for burt Kingston minister of ed 71. He 1732. His was gradu-1751. Beto William about the e. Though of controvinced himemy to all ng the war ie character imated the ions he was was averse be attended sermon on man, 1759; s, or eruelty il pleasure, new consti-ondence be-9i; at the the choice, r, and the ommemora-Evangelical Mass., Dec.

ay 30, 1777, s pastor of ondonderry, r, a zealous, . He pub-ors warned;

d, aged 94. n, acquired nd benevoant was he, on six years relates to Wareham. of a Scotch d.

MACKENZIE, ALEXANDER, Sir, a Scotchman of him, he is "the best, and purest, and wiscst employed in the service of the Northwest Fur man that I ever knew." company in Canada, went in 1789 on an exploring expedition from fort Chipewyan to the northern ocean in lat. 69°. In 1792 he crossed the Rocky Mountains and reached the Pacific. His travels were published in 2 vols., 1802.

MACKENZIE, ALEXANDER SLIDELL, commander in the navy, died at Tarrytown, in 1848, aged 45. His father was J. Slidell of New York. He was induced to take his mother's name. In 1842 he made his cruise in the Somers, in which he felt constrained to hang several mutineers to the yard-arm. Two courts approved of his conduct. He was a man of integrity and devotional feeling. He published a year in Spain, 1825; American in England; Spain revisited; biographies of Paul Jones and S. Decatur. - Cycl. of American Literature.

MACKENZIE, DONALD, died at Mayville, N. Y., Jan. 20, 1851, aged 67. He was a partner of J. J. Astor in the fur trade at the west; in 1825 he was the governor of the Hudson Bay company. He withdrew in 1832 and lived in M.

MACKLIN, ROBERT, was bern in Scotland and died at Wakefield, N. II., in 1787, aged 115. He lived several years in Portsmouth.

MACLEAN, JOHN, professor of chemistry at Princeton and William and Mary colleges; a Scotchman, died in 1814.

MACLURE, WILLIAM, died March 23, 1840, aged 77, near the city of Mexico. Born in Scotland, he lived in Philadelphia. He was twenty years president of the academy of natural sciences. His liberal gifts to the association amounted to 25,000 dollars. He crossed the Alleghany mountains fifty times in his scientific explorations. He published, among other essays, a scientific map, 1809; geology of the U.S. and W. Indies; opinions on various subjects, 1831. -Cyclopedia of American Literature.

MACOMB, ALEXANDER, major-general, commander-in-chief of the army of the United States, died at Washington, June 25, 1841. He was horn at Detroit in 1782, and entered the army in 1799. He commanded as brigadier at the battle of Plattsburg. For his gallantry he received a gold medal from congress. After the death of Brown ac was commander-in-chief. He published a treatise on martial law and courts martial, 1809.

MACON, NATHANIEL, died in Warren county, North Carolina, June 29, 1937, aged 79. He was in congress from 1791 to 1815; then in the senate the national legislature, -- longer than any other one questioned his integrity. Mr. Randolph said Morse, 1795; address to the Episcopal church, MACNEVEN, WILLIAM J., M. D., died at New York July 12, 1841, aged 78. Born in Ireland, he was educated by an uncle at Prague and Vienna, and commenced the practice at Dublin in 1783. In the political difficulties of 1798 he was imprisoned. Released in 1802, he travelled, and published a ramble through Switzerland; next he was a captain in the French army. He came to New York in 1805, and by the aid of Mr. Emmet, Mr. Sampson, and other friends, commenced the successful practice of physic. He married Mrs. Tone, the widow of a merchant and the daughter of Samuel Ricker. He was a devout Catholic. He was skilled in German, French, and Italian. He held various professorships in the eollege of physicians for twenty years. He published the atomic theory, 1820; and was co-editor of the New York medical journal. - Williams' Med. Biography.

MACWHORTER, ALEXANDER, D. D., died at Newark, N. J., April 2, 1807, aged 72. He was a native of Delaware. His father, Hugh, was of Scotch descent, and came from the north of Ireland. A. M. was two years in the university of Edinburgh; he graduated at Princeton in 1757. His deep religious impressions began at the age of 16. He was ordained in 1759, and was minister of the first Presbyterian church about forty-six years. His wife, Mary, was a sister of Rev. A. Cumming of Boston. Dr. M. had the attachment and confidence of his people. Dr. Stearns has published a full account of him in his history of Newark.

MADISON, JAMES, bishop of Virginia, died March 6, 1812, aged 62. He was born Aug. 27. 1749, near Port Republic, Rockingham county, Virginia. His father was clerk of West Augusta district. He was educated at William and Mary college, and was distinguished for classical learning. Under Mr. Wythe he studied law, and was admitted to the bar; but he soon resolved to devote himself to theology. In 1773 he was chosen professor of mathematics in William and Mary college, and in 1777 was appointed the president, and visited England for his improvement in science. Until 1784 he was not only president, but professor of mathematics, and afterwards was professor of natural, moral, and polical philosophy until his death. He first introduced leetures on political economy. In 1788 he was chosen bishop. As a preacher he was eloquent. His wife was Mrs. Mary Tait of Williamsburg. till 1828, having been for thirty-seven years in He was tall and slender, of a delicate constitution, temperate and abstemious. In his disposiman. He was speaker of the 7th, 8th, and 9th tion he was mild and benevolent, of simple, but congresses. He was the friend of Jefferson and courteous and winning manners. He published Madison. Though a conspicuous party man, no a thanksgiving sermon, 1781; a letter to J. large map of Virginia; and several pieces in Barton's journal.

MADISON, GEORGE, governor of Kentucky, son of the preceding, at the age of seventeen went out as a soldier in defence of the western frontier, and was engaged in several battles with the Indians. In St. Clair's defeat he was wounded. In the war of 1812 he was an officer at the battle of Raisin. After having been twenty years auditor of the public accounts, he was chosen governor for the term of four years in 1816, but in a few weeks after his election he died at Paris in Oct., 1816, and was buried at Frankfort.

MADISON, JAMES, president of the United States, died at his scat at Montpelier, Orange co., Va., June 28, 1836, aged 85. He was the son of Col. James Madison of Orange co., and of Nelly Conway, born March 16, 1751; and he could trace back his ancestors only the short distance of a hundred years. His father died in 1801. He was born at the house of his maternal grandmother, in Port Conway on the Rappahannoek. Early educated by Mr. Robertson, a Scotchman, in King and Queen co., and by Rev. Mr. Martin. a Jerseyman, at his father's house, he studied English, Latin, Greek, French. and Italian. He entered Princeton college in 1769, and graduated in 1771, going over the junior and senior studies in one year. Then he remained at Princeton till 1772, studying the Hebrew. In 1776 he was sent to the general assembly; but the next year he lost his election because he would not treat and electioneer. From 1779 to 1785 he was a member of the continental congress chosen by the general assembly; and he was again chosen in 1786. In 1787 he was a member of the great convention at Philadelphia, which formed the constitution of the United States, by unanimous agreement, Sept. 17th. He remained in congress until 1797. In 1798 he was of the general assembly; in 1800 an elector. In 1801 he was seeretary of State of the United States, and continued eight years, till in 1809 he was chosen president, remaining in office two terms until 1817, when he retired to Montpelier. He was a visitor and elector of the university; and in 1829 a member of the State convention. In the seventh year afterwards he died. He held a high and honorable and unstained character, and his memory is venerated. Yet in making the awards of truth and justice, the inquiry is not to be overlooked, whether in his high office of president of the United States he did not perform one act which cannot be justified, but which in the calm judgment of sober reason must be condemned? No reflecting man can doubt whether war is a great and tremendous evil, and whether for a ruler to precipitate his country into a needless 1799; discourse on the death of Washington; a of 1812 with Great Britain would not have occurred, had not Mr. Madison in his message seemed to recommend it, when he proposed to congress the decision of the question, "whether the United States shall continue passive under these progressive usurpations and these accumulated wrongs; or, opposing force to force in defence of their national rights, shall commit a just cause into the hands of the Almighty Disposer of events?" Notwithstanding these good and justifying words, it may well be doubted whether the wrongs experienced were at all of a character, rendering a war just and necessary, and whether an enlightened Christian, seeking the approbation of God, would have recommended war for the reasons alleged. In fact, within four days after the declaration of war, the British orders in council, one chief cause of the war, were repealed. The next year, through the mediation of Russia. commissioners were appointed to negotiate a peace, and in 1814 peace was made, after the loss of a multitude of valuable lives and an immense waste of treasure. When will great statesmen learn, that, as they will be brought to account by the Supreme Ruler for any act of flagrant immorality which stains their character, so they will most assuredly be held to fearful judgment for plunging their country, without just and urgent reasons, into the desolations and horrors of war? If the sword may be drawn in defence of the national existence and the national freedom, yet it is not to be drawn from ambition, the love of popularity or fame, or the love of office, from pride or petty revenge, or for the enlargement of territory. Cowper said, after alluding to "the diversion" of princes in the tented field,

"But war's a game, which, were their subjects wise, Kings would not play at.

And with greater certainty American presidents and members of congress will not again rush into an unjust and unnecessary war, unless the American people, who choose them to office, are foolish, deluded, and borne away by evil passions. The numbers in the Federalist, illustrative of the constitution, which Mr. Madison wrote, were 10, 14, 18, 20, 37-58, 62, 63. Jay wrote 2-5 and 64: Hamilton the other numbers. His report of the proceedings and discussions of the convention was published. His works have been published in

MADISON, DOROTHY, Mrs., the widow of President M., died at Washington July 12, 1849, aged about 80. Her maiden name was Dorothy Paine; her parents were of the society of Friends in Virginia, and removed to Philadelphia while she was young. Before the age of twenty she married Mr. Todd, who died in three years, leaving her the mother of a son, who survived her. Mr. Madison, who as a member of congress war is not an enormous crime. Probably the war | boarded at the house of her mother, married Mrs.

t have ocs message oposed to " whether sive under e accumurce in deamit a just y Disposer

good and ed whether a character, nd whether pprobation var for the days after ers in coune repealed. ı of Russia, negotiate a fter the loss in immense t statesmen account by lagrant imer, so they d judgment

ust and urhorrors of ı defence of ıal freedom, on, the love office, from argement of ng to "the eld, jects wise,

n presidents ain rush into s the Ameri-, are foolish. ssions. The tive of the ote, were 10, 2-5 and 64: report of the nvention was published in e widow of uly 12, 1849, vas Dorothy y of Friends lelphia while twenty she e years, leavsurvived her. of congress narried Mrs. Todd in 1794. Of her grace and dignity, while her husband was president, much has been said. In her old age her house in Washington was a centre of attraction, her form being still creet, her voice full, her manners cordial. She was a member of the Episcopal church.

MADISON, WILLIAM, general, youngest brother of President M., died at Woodberry Forest, Madison co., Va., July 19, 1843, aged 82. He was a soldier in two wars, a man of a strong mind, of integrity and benevolence.

MADOCKAWANDO, sachem of Penobscot, or chief of the Malceites, was a powerful chief in the war of 1676; Mugg was his prime minister. At the siege and capture of Caseo fort in May, 1690, by Portneyf. whom Capt. Davis calls Burniffe, he was present with his Indians. June 10, 1692, he co-operated with a Frenchman in an unsuccessful attack on Storer's garrison in Wells, commanded by Capt. Convers. He afterwards entered into the treaty of Pemaquid, but Thury, the missionary, persuaded him again perfidiously to take up the hatchet. In 1694 he accompanied the Sieur de Villieu, who had under him two hundred and fifty Indians, in the attack on Oyster river, at Piscataqua, killing and capturing, July 17th, nearly one hundred persons, and burning twenty houses. Matawando, as Charlevoix ealls him, fought bravely by the side of the Frenchman. He carried the scalps to Canada and was rewarded by Frontenae.

MAFFIT, JOHN N., died in Mobile May 28, 1850. He was born in Ireland, and was a Methodist minister of great celebrity, many years, for his eloquence.

MAGRAW, JAMES, D. D., minister of West Nottingham, Md., died in 1835, aged 60.

MAGRUDER, ALLEN B., a senator of the United States from Louisiana in 1812, had been previously a lawyer in Kentucky. He died at Opelousas in April, 1822. He had collected materials for a general history of the Indians. He published a character of Mr. Jefferson, and reflections on the cession of Louisiana to the United States, 1805.

MAIRS, George, minister at Argyle, N. Y., died in 1841, aged 80, in the forty-eighth year of his ministry at Argyle. Born in Ireland, he studied theology under John Brown, in Scotland.

MAKEMIE, Francis, died in Boston in 1708. He preached the first Presbyterian sermon in the city of New York, in a private house Jan. 20, 1708. He was from Ireland, a resident in Va. For thus preaching, Gov. Cornbury imprisoned him several weeks. The first settled Presbyterian minister in New York was James Anderson from Scotland, who was settled in Oct., 1717.

MAKIN, THOMAS, a poet, was one of the early settlers of Pennsylvania, and died in 1735. In the Friends' public grammar school, and in the following year succeeded him as master. He was for some time clerk of the provincial assembly. He published two Latin poems in 1728 and 1729, inscribed to James Logan, and entitled, encomium Pennsylvaniæ, and in laudes Pennsylvaniæ poema ; extracts from which are preserved in Proud's history of that province.

MALBONE, JOHN, general, died at Newport, R. I., in 1795, aged 60. Francis M., a senator of the United States from Rhode Island, died at Washington of the apoplexy, May 4, 1809.

MALBONE, EDWARD G., a portrait painter, died at Savannah May 7, 1807, in early life. Ho was a native of Newport, R. I. At an early period of life he discovered a propensity for painting, which became at length so predominant that he neglected every other amusement for its indulgenee. When a schoolboy he delighted in drawing rude sketches of the objects of nature. As he obtained the necessary assistances to improvement, his talents were developed. He frequented the theatre to contemplate the illusions of scenery; and by the regularity of his attentions behind the scenes in the forenoon, he attracted the notice of the painter, who discovered unusual genius in his young acquaintance, and accepted his assistance with the brush. He was at length permitted to paint an entire new scene, and as a reward received a general ticket of admission. His intervals of leisure were now employed in drawing heads, and afterwards in attempting portraits. His rapid progress in the latter occupation convinced him, that he had talents for it, and gave alacrity to his exertions; and ho was soon induced to devote to it his whole attention. As he now began to be known and patronized as a miniature painter, his natural propensity was nourished by the prospect of reputation and wealth. He visited the principal cities, and resided successively in New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. In the winter of 1800, he went to Charleston, where his talents and the peculiar amenity of his manners enhanced the attentions which he received from the hospitality of its inhabitants. In May, 1801, he sailed from Charleston to London, where he resided some months, absorbed in admiration of the paintings of celebrated masters. With a mind improved by study and observation, and animated by the enthusiasm of genius, he visited the different galleries of living painters, enlarging his ideas and profiting by the contemplation of their works. He was introduced to the acquaintance of the president of the royal academy, who gave him free access to his studio, and showed him those friendly attentions which were more flattering than empty praises to the mind of his young countryman. He even encouraged him to remain in England, assuring the year 1689 he was usher to George Keith in him that he had nothing to fear from professional competition. But he preferred his own country, and returned to Charleston in the winter of 1801. He afterwards continued his pursuits in different parts of the continent, always finding employment. By his sedentary habits and intense application to his professional labors his health was so much impaired, that in the summer of 1806 he was compelled to relinquish his peneil, and indulge in exercise; but his frame had become too weak to become again Invigorated. As he felt the symptoms of an approaching consumption, his physicians advised him to try the effect of a change of climate. In the beginning of the winter be therefore took a passage in a vessel for Jamaica; but, the change not producing much benefit, he returned to Savannah, where he languished till his death.

Though he had not reached all the perfection which maturer years would have given, yet his pencil will rescue his name from oblivion. His style of painting was chaste and correct, his coloring clear and judiciously wrought, and his taste altogether derived from a just contemplation of nature. In his female heads particularly there was, when his subjects permitted, enchanting delleacy and beauty. To his professional excellence he added the virtues which endeared him to his friends. His heart was warm and generous. The profits of his skill, which were very considerable. contributed to the happiness of his relations; and as their welfare was an object which seemed always to animate his exertions, his mother and sisters deeply deplored his death.

MALCOMSON, JAMES, a minister from Ireland, died at Charleston, S. C., in 1804, aged 35. He was ten years pastor of the Presbyteriam church of Williamsburgh, when a division and animosity among his people induced him to go to C. as a teacher; but he died within a few months.

MALHIOT, Modeste, the Canadian giant, died at St. Jean des Challons, Lower Canada, Feb. 28, 1834. His height was 6 fect 4 inches; his weight six hundred and nineteen and a half pounds. He had exhibited himself in America and in various countries of Europe.

MALLET, Angeline, Mrs., died at Vincennes, Indiana, in 1834, aged 110.

MALTBY, ISAAC, general, lived in Hatfield, and was a representative in the legisle are and a member of the church. He removed to Waterloo, New York, where he died in Sept., 1812; n treatise on courts martial and military law, 1813.

MALTBY, BENJAMIN, deacon, died at his son's, Deacon Daniel M.'s, at Southington, Ohio, Jan. 1, 1847, aged 97. He was the son of deacon Daniel M. of Northford, Conn. Both he and his father had each cleven children, and all of them were members of the church. He was a patriot of the Revolution.

MAMINASH, SALLY, the last Indian in Northampton, Mass., died Jan. 3, 1853, aged 88. Her father's grave-stone stands alone in a field near the pine grove, a little south of the new State asylum for the insane. Her mother, who died in 1780, aged 60, was Elizabeth Occom of Mohegan, near Norwich, Conn., the eldest sister of Rev. Samson Occom. Sally was a pious, excellent woman. For many years she was kindly provided for in a family in South street, of the name of Clapp.

MAN, Samuel, first minister of Wreutham, Mass., died May 22, 1719, aged 71. He graduated at Harvard college in 1865. After preaching one or two years in Wrentham, he was driven away by the Indian war, March 30, 1676: but after the war he returned to his labors, August 21, 1680, and continued them till his dec'th. No church being previously formed, he was not ordeined till April 13, 1692. He was a man of erudition, a faithful pastor, an accomplished preacher, good, pious, and eminent. His successors were Henry Messinger, who died March 30, 1750, and Mr. Beau.

MANCHESTER, NILES, M. D., died at North Providence, Pawtucket, R. I., in 1843, aged 65, having been a faithful physician about forty years.

MANCIUS, WILHELMUS, Dr., died at Albany N. Y., in 1808, aged 70. He had been nearly forty-eight years a skilful physician at A.

MANIGAULT, GABRIEL, a merchant of Charleston, S. C., and a patriot of the Revolution, died in 1781, aged 77. He was born in 1704 of parents driven from France by Catholic persecution. By his commercial pursuits for fifty years he honestly acquired a fortune of half a million of dollars. In the beginning of the war he loaned the State 220,000 dollars. In May, 1779, at the age of seventy-five, when the British General Provost appeared before Charleston, he equipped himself as a soldier, and, equipping also his grandson of fifteen years, he led him to the lines to repel an expected assault. His daughter married Lewis Morris, and lost her life in the great hurricane on Sullivan's Island in 1822. His son, Peter, also a patriot and speaker of the house from 1766 to his death, died in 1773, aged 42. Integrity and benevolence were prominent traits in the character of Mr. M. He bequeathed to a charitable society 5,000 pounds. He was a member and a zealous supporter of the French Calvinistic church.

MANLEY, JAMES R., a physician in New York, died in 1851, aged 70. MANLY, JOHN, a captain in the navy of the United States, died in Boston in 1793, aged 59. He received a naval commission from Washington, Oct. 24, 1775. Invested with the command patriot of

Indian in 53, aged 88, a a field near e new State er, who died om of Moheest sister of pious, excelwas kindly street, of the Wrentham, He graduofter preachne was driven b, 1676: but hors, August s dec'h. No was ot oras a man of accomplished His succesed March 30, died at North 843, aged 65, ut forty years. ied at Albany been nearly at A.

ant of Charlesvolution, died n 1704 of pae persecution. years he honmillion of dolhe loaned the 9, at the age neral Provost ipped himself grandson of es to repel an narried Lewis eat hurricane on, Peter, also from 1766 to Integrity and in the charac-

e navy of the 793, aged 50, rom Washingthe command

a charitable

nember and a inistic church.

ician in New

of the schooner Lee, he kept the hazardons station of Massachusetts bay during a most tempestnous season, and the captures which he made were of immense value at the moment. An ordnance brig, which fell into his hands, supplied the continental army with heavy pieces, mortars, and working tools, of which it was very destitute. and in the event led to the evacuation of Hoston. His services were the theme of universal eulogy. Being raised to the command of the frigate Hancock of thirty-two guns, his capture of the Fox increased his high reputation for bravery and skill. But he was taken prisoner by the Rainbow of forty guns, July 8, 1777, and suffered a long and rigorous confinement on board that ship at Halifax, and in Mill prison, precluded from further actual service till near the close of the war. In September, 1782, the Hague frigate was intrusted to his care. The cruise was peculiarly uthappy. A few days after leaving Martinique he was driven by a British seventy-four on a sandbank at the back of Gaudaloupe. Three ships of the line, having joined this ship, came to within point blank shot, and with springs on their cables opened a most tremendous fire. Having supported the heavy cannonade for three days, on the fourth day the frigate was got off, and, hoisting the continental standard at the main-top gallant mast, thirteen guns were fired in farewell defiance. On his return to Boston a few months afterwards, he was arrested to answer a variety of charges exhibited against him by one of his officers. The proceedings of the court were not altogether in approbation of his conduct. Memoirs of his life, which should vindicate his character, were promised, but they have never ap-

MANN, James, a surgeon, died at New York in November, 1832, aged about 70. Born in Wrentham, his ancestor wrote his name Man. He graduated in 1776, and served as a surgeon three years in the army of the Revolution. In 1812 he was hospital surgeon; and was at the head of the medical staff on the northern frontier. He was a Swedenborgian. He published two monographs, which gained prizes in 1804; and medical sketches of empaigns of 1812, etc.

MANN, Perez, Dr., died in Burlington, Conn., Feb. 1, 1843, aged 84. He was surgeon's mate in the Revolutionary war, and the principal physician of B. for thirty years.

MANN, Jacon, died in Morristown, N. J., Dec. 17, 1843, aged 67. He was an editor thirty-five years, having established the Genius of liberty in 1798.

MANN, HERMANN, died in Dedham Nov. 26, 1851, aged 56. He published annals of Dedham in 1847.

MANNING, JAMES, D. D., first president of the college in Rhode Island, died July 29, 1791, aged 52. He was born in New Jersey Oct. 22. 1738, and was graduated at Nussau hall in 1762. When he began to preach, several of his Baptist brethren in New Jersey and Pennsylvania proposed the establishment of a college in Rhode Island, on account of the religious freedom which was there enjoyed, and directed their attention towards him as its president. The charter was obtained in February, 1761, and in 1765 he removed to Warren, to make preparations for earrying the design into execution. In September the seminary was opened, and it was soon replenished with students. In 1770 the institution was removed to Providence, where a spacious building had been creeted. He was soon chosen pastor of the Haptist church in that town, and he continued in the discharge of the duties of these two offices, except in an interval of about six months in 1786, when he was a member of congress, till his death of the apoplexy. He was of a kind and benevolent disposition, social and communicative, and fitted rather for active life than for retirement. Though he possessed good abilities, he was prevented from intense study by the peculiarity of his constitution. His life was a sceno of labor for the benefit of others. His piety and his fervent zeal in preaching the gospel evinced his love to God and man. With a dignified and majestic appearance, his address was manly, familiar, and engaging. In the government of the college he was mild yet energetic. His memoir was written by W. G. Goddard.

MANNING, John, a physician, probably a descendant of John M., who lived in Ipswich in 1640, died in 1824, aged nearly 87. He was the son of Dr. Joseph M. of Ipswich, who died at the age of 79. He was born November, 1737, and, after practising in Ipswich eleven years, went to England in 1771 for his medical improvement. In the American war he served as a surgeon one campaign on Long Island and Rhode Island. In this politics he was a democrat or republican. On public worship he was a regular attendant. He left three sons, physicians.— Thacher.

MANNING, RICHARD J., governor of South Carolina, died in Sumter district in 1836. He was twice chosen to congress, and was respected as a patriot and Christian.

MANNING, JOHN, Dr., died in Rockport, Mass. November, 1841, aged 80. He was a skilful physician.

MANNING, WILLIAM, died at Cambridgeport July 25, 1849, aged 83; the oldest printer in the State, formerly of the firm of Manning and Loring, Boston.

MANNING, John, a physician, the son of Dr. John M., died at Reckport in 1852, aged 62. He was a native of Gloucester, and graduated at Harvard in 1810.

MANNING, SAMUEL B., a printer in Boston, died in 1856, aged 60. He was the son of William, and with him connected in publishing the Worcester Spy.

MANSPIELD, Achilles, minister of Killingworth, Conn., died in 1814, aged 63. He graduated at Yale in 1770, and was ordained in 1770. He preached on the Sabbath preceding his death, from the text, "His rest shall be glorious." His wife, a widow when he married her, was the daughter of Joseph Elliot of K., and grand-daughter of Rev. Jared Elliot. Mr. M. was a respected minister, and a trustee of the college. His daughter married Rev. Joshua Huntington. He published the Christian hope in Amer. preacher, IV.

MANSFIELD, RICHARD, D. D., Episcopal minister in Derby, Conn., died in 1820. As he graduated at Yale college in 1741, if he was then twenty-one years old, his age at his death was about 100 years.

MANSFIELD, JARED, colonel, LL. D., professor of natural philosophy in the military academy at West Point, died in 1830, aged 71. He was born in New Haven, and graduated at Yale college in 1777. He was afterwards surveyor-general of the United States and professor. A few years before his death he retired from West Point to Cincinnati, Ohio, where he resided while surveyor. While on a visit to New is wen he died. Colonel Totten, United States engineer, was his nephew. He published essays mathematical and physical, 1802.

MARCII, ÉDMUND, minister of Amesbury, Mass., died March 6, 1701, aged 88. Born in Newbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1722, and was ordained the same year. In a controversy on original sin, originating with Mr. Webster of Salisbury, he published a pamphlet entitled fair play, etc. — Sprague's Annals.

MARCHANT, HENRY, LL. D., judge of the district court of the United States for Rhode Island, died in 1796, aged 55. He practised law at Newport; was attorney-general of the State in 1774; was a patriot of the Revolution; and in 1783 a delegate to congress. He was judge from 1790 till his death.

MARION, Francis, a brave officer in the Revolutionary war, died in 1795. He was born near Georgetown, South Carolina, in 1733. In 1759 he served as a soluter against the Cherokee Indians. In the Revolutionary war he assisted in the defence of fort Mcultrie and commanded a regiment at the siege of Charleston. He was promoted by Governor Rutledge to the rank of briendier-general in 1780. On the advance of Gutes, he placed himself at the head of sixteen men, and captured a small British guard, rescuing one hundred and fifty continental prisoners. As the militia was in no subordination, sometimes he had not more than a dozen men with him. September 4th, he marched with fifty-three men to attack a body of two hundred tories. He first surprised a party of forty-five, killing and wounding all but fifteen, and then put the main body of two hundred to flight. His conduct was most generous as well as brave. Not one house was burned by his orders, for he detested making war upon poor women and children. At one time he was obliged to convert the saws of sawmills into horsemen's swords for his defence. For months he and his party slept in the open air, and sheltered themselves in the thick recesses of swamps, whence they sallied out and harassed the enemy. After the war he married Mary Videan, a lady of wealth, and resided in his native parish of St. John's. As a member of the legislature he nobly resisted all retaliatory measures towards the tories. As a prudent, humane, enterprising, brave partisan officer, he had no superior. His life, written by General P. Horry and M. L. Weems, was published, 6th edition, 1818. The soldier and companion of Marion had little concern in writing the book. It bears all the marks of Mr. Weems' wild, undisciplined pen; one can searcely read it without mingled laughter and tears.

MARKOE, Peter, a poet, died at Philadelphia in 1792. He published miscellancous poems, 1787; the times, a poem, 1788; the patriot chief, a tragedy; reconciliation, an opera; and was supposed to be the author of Algerine spy.

MARKS, ZACHARIAH, died at Burlington, Conn., in 1840, aged 80. He was a farmer, and left an estate of 3,000 dollars to Washington college, Hartford.

MARQUETTE, JOSEPH, a Jesuit missionary, the discoverer of the Mississippi river, died suddenly on the Marquette river, which falls into lake Michigan, in 1675. He explored the western regions of Canada; laid the foundations of Michilimackinae; and, in company with the Sieur Joliet, crossed the portage from the Fox river of Green Bay to the Wisconsin, and first entered the Mississippi in 1673.—Charlevoix.

MARSH, Joseph, minister of Braintree, now Quincy, died in 1726, aged 41. Born in Hadley, he graduated at Harvard in 1705, and was ordained in 1709. His successor was John Hancock in 1726.—Sprague's Annals.

MARSH, ELISHA, minister of Westminster, Mass., died in 1784, aged about 66. Born in Hadley, he graduated at Harvard in 1738, was ordained in 1742, and dismissed in 1757.—Sprague's Annals.

MARSH, EBENZER GRANT, professor of languages and ecclesiastical history in Yale college, died in 1803, aged 26. He was the son of Dr. John Marsh, minister of Wethersfield. He was graduated at Yale college in 1795. In 1798 he was elected an instructor in the Hebrew language, and in 1799 one of the tutors. In 1802 he was

s. He first and woundmain body t was most house was ed making n. At one aws of sawfence. For e open air, recesses of id harassed d Mary Vin his native of the legisry measures humane, enad no supe-. Horry and dition, 1818. n had little ears all the plined pen;

Philadelphia cons poems, patriot chief, and was suppy. ngton, Conn.,

led laughter

, and left an ton college, missionary, er, died sudalls into lake e western rens of Michilh the Sieur Fox river of first entered raintree, now and was or-John Han-Vestminster, 6. Born in in 1738, was

in 1757.—

n in Hadley,

essor of lan-Yale college, e son of Dr. ld. He was In 1798 he ew language, 1802 he was elected a professor; but the hopes which had been excited by his talents and unequalled industry were blasted, and his increasing usefulness was terminated by his death. He was a man of amiable manners, pure morals, and unquestioned picty. As a preacher of the gospel he was uncommonly acceptable. His literary acquisitions were great. He published an oration on the truth of the Mosaic history of the creation, 1798; a catalogue of the historical writers of this country, entitled, a series of American historians, from the first discovery of this country to the present time, 1801; and an elaborate oration, delivered before the American academy of arts and sciences in 1802, designed to confirm the truth of Scripture history by the testimony of eastern writers. This, it is believed, with improvements, was a posthumous publication. - Dwight's and Dana's Sermon, and Fowler's Oration, on his Death; Hist. Coll. IX. 108-111.

MARSH, JOHN, D.D., minister of Wethersfield, Conn., died Sept. 13, 1821, aged 78. Born in Haverhill, he graduated at Harvard in 1761, and was ordained Jan. 12, 1774. He published election sermon, 1796; at the installation of W.

Lockwood, 1797.

MARSH, JAMES, D. D., died at Burlington, Vt., July 3, 1842, aged 47. He was a native of Hartford, Vt., and a graduate of Dartmouth in 1817. He was professor of moral and intellectual philosophy in the Vermont university, and had been the president. He was a scholar, and a man of modest worth and piety. His two wives were sisters, the daughters of James Wheelock, the brother of President Wheelock of Dartmouth college. He published, with notes, Coleridge's German, and some reviews.

MARSH, DANIEL, minister of Bennington, Vt., died at Jamesville, N. Y., Dec. 13, 1843, aged 81. Born in New Milford, Conn., he graduated at Williams in 1795. He was first settled at Poughkeepsic, then from 1806 to 1820 at Bennington, and last at Jamesville, where his labors were greatly blessed. His sight failed him. Respected and beloved, he died in Christian peace.

MARSH, JONATHAN, minister of Windsor, Conn., died Sept. 8, 1747, aged 63. He was the son of John, and grandson of John, a first settler of Hartford, then of Hadley. He graduated at Harvard in 1705. His wife was Margaret Whiting. His son Jonathan was the minister of New Hartford; his daughters married Rev. Nathaniel Roberts of Torrington, and Rev. Stephen Heaton of Goshen. He published election sermons, 1721

MARSH, CHARLES, LL. D., died at Woodstock, Vt., Jan. 11, 1849, aged 83. Born at Lebanon, Conn., he was graduated at Dartmouth in lieutenant-governor. For fifty years he practised law at Woodstock. From 1815 to 1817 he was in congress. He was a member of various religious and charitable societies.

MARSH, TRUMAN, died at Litchfield, Conn., March 27, 1851, aged 83; an Episcopal minister.

He graduated at Yale in 1786.

MARSH, Dexter, died at Greenfield, Mass., April 2, 1853, aged 47. An uneducated man, a native of Montague, while he lived in G. he had an enthusiastic zeal in collecting the print-marks of various animals on the sandstones of the Connecticut river valley. He collected a valuable cabinet, which, at his executor's sale, sold for nearly 3,000 dollars.— Holland's History, II. 376.

MARSH, SAMUEL D., missionary to the Zulus in Africa, died Dec. 11, 1853, leaving a wife and child. He was wise, prompt, courageous, and persevering. He was peaceful in his last hours, assured that "the good pilot" would conduct him safely over the flood.

MARSHALL, HUMPHREY, a botanist and industrious horticulturist, died about 1805. He published Arbustum Americanum, the American grove, or alphabetical catalogue of forest trees and shrubs, Philadelphia, 8vo., 1785 and 1788. It was translated into French, 1788.

MARSHALL, Moses, died at Marshallton, Penn., in 1813; a scientific naturalist, and a man of practical skill.

MARSHALL, ALEXANDER K., reporter of the court of appeals of Kentucky, died in Mason co. in 1825, aged 55.

MARSHALL, JONAS, Dr., died at Fitchburg,

in Dec., 1825, aged 87.

MARSHALL, JOHN, chief justice of the United aids to reflection, and some translations from the States, died at Philadelphia July 6, 1835, aged 79. His eldest son, on his way to his father's deathbed, was killed by the fall of a chimney, at Baltimore. He was born in Fauquier county, Va., Sept. 24, 1755, the son of Col. Thomas M., and the eldest of fifteen children. He had some classical instruction, but was never at a college. A soldier in the war, he reached the rank of captain, and fought in various battles. As a lawyer, he soon rose to distinction. Of the Virginia convention to ratify the constitution he was a conspicuous member. Mr. Adams sent him as a minister to France, with Pinckney and Gerry, in 1798. In 1800 he was secretary of war, and afterwards secretary of State, and chief justice in 1801. On the resignation of Chief Justice Ellsworth, he was nominated by President John Adams, Jan. 31, 1801, chief justice of the United States; which high office he held with increasing reputation and unsul' ed integrity thirty-four years, till his death. He had great talents, unquestioned uprightness, and was laboriously devoted to the important duties of his oflice. He 1786. His father removed to Vermont, and was was undoubtedly the most illustrious judge of our country. Amidst the changes of parties in trade, or the wish to extend and terpetuate our government he yet was held in universal respect, because he was a man not only of great learning and mental power, but also of stern, unbending principle, and of moral virtue, resolute to maintain the right, incapable of being swayed aside by prejudee, interest, or partisauship. Suppose there should ever stand in his high place - the most important, perhaps, in our country a man of a different character, whose prejudices and passions should blind him to the right when some great constitutional question, such, perhaps, as the relation of slavery to the territories of our country, should come before him; and a majority of his associates should agree with him in feeling and judicial decision; it is easy to see that such a false judgment, revolting to the sense of freedom in the hearts of a majority of the States, might break up the very foundations of our Union. The evil of a president faithless to his trust can be remedied by the people at a new election. But our judges are permanent in office: if they become corrupt, there is no remedy but revolution. Judge Story, who was twenty-four years the associate of Chief Justice Marshall, said of him, that there was not a man of any party "who would not cheerfully admit, that the highest judicial honors could not have fallen on any one who could have sustained them with more solid advantage to the glory or interests of the country." And as to his official labors he also said: "There is one class of cases which ought not to be overlooked, because it comes home to the business and bosom of every citizen of this country, and is felt in every gradation of life, from the chief magistrate down to the inmate of the cottage. We allude to the grave discussions of constitutional law, which, during his time, have attracted so much of the talents of the bar in the supreme court, and sometimes agitated the whole nation. If all others of the chief justice's judicial arguments had perished, his luminous judgments on these occasions would have given an enviable immortality to his name." - Judge Marshall's residence was Richmond, Va. He had gone to Philadelphia for medical advice in his failing health. His faculties he retained to the last; and he met death with the resignation of the Christian. He was a man of kind feelings and simple manners: he was not uplifted by his honors. In his dress he was very plain. He mixed easily with his neighbors. In various objects of benevolence and human improvement he took a lively interest. He believed in the Christian religion; was a regular attendant on the Episcopal church; was one of the vice-presidents of the American bible society, and the president of the colonization society. No one, in the possession of his reason, would ascribe to him, or to slavery, or the absence of the wish of justice and humanity, that all slavery might come to an end. - He published the life of Washington, 5 vols., 1805; 2d edit., improved, in 2 vols., 1832. The history of the colonies was published separately in 1824.

MARSHALL, JOHN E., an eminent physician, died at ilufiato in 1838, aged 52.

MARSHALL, John J., judge, died in Louisville, Ky., June, 1846, aged 61. He had a great estate; but, lending his name generously and incautiously to support the credit of others, he lost his property.

MARSHALL, Andrew, a colored preacher, died in Richmond, Va., about Dec. 20, 1856, aged 100. For many years he was pastor of the African Baptist church, Savannah. He had gifts, and by his excellent character he won the respect and esteem of all who knew him. He preached, in the last spring, in various churches in New York.

MARSTON, JOHN, died in Taunton Dec. 13, 1846, aged 91; a commandant of artillery under Gen. Knox in the war of the Revolution.

MARTHA, an Indian, died at Mohegan, near Norwich, Conn., in 1805, aged 120. She was the widow of Zacharah, a chief, and was herself for years the agent of the Mohegan tribe.

MARTIN, John, first minister of Northborough, Mass., died in 1767, aged 61. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1724, and was settled in 1746.

MARTIN, ALEXANDER, LL. D., governor of North Carolina from 1782 to 1785, died in 1807. He was a delegate to the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. In 1789 he was again chosen governor, In 1792 he was elected a senator of the United States.

MARTIN, PHILIP, a patriot of the Revolution, died at Providence, R. I., in 1821, aged 65. He was a State senator.

MARTIN, LUTHER, a patriot of the Revolution and a jurist, died at New York July 10, 1826, aged 81.

MARTIN, WILLIAM P., a Methodist minister. died near Lynchburg, Va., in 1829, aged 84.

MARTIN, James, a Revolutionary soldier, died at Knoxville in 1833, aged 106.

MARTIN, John, died in Augusta, Ga., Feb. 14, 1843, aged 105. His parents came with Oglethorpe. He served in the Cherokee war, and was wounded in the head by an Indian tomahawk. He served also in the war of the Revolution.

MARTIN, FRANCIS X., LL. D., died at New Orleans Dec. 9, 1846, aged 84. He was chief justice of the supreme court of Louisiana. Ite was born in Marseilles in France. He published cases in supreme court of Louisiana, in 12 Washington, the project of reviving the slave vols., 1816-1823; the same, new series, 8 vols., perpetuate justice and come to an ishington, 5 vols., 1832, blished sep-

nt physician,

d in Louishad a great ously and inhers, he lost

ed preacher, 0, 1856, aged of the Afriand gifts, and e respect and preached, in n New York, ton Dec. 13, tillery undertion.

ohegan, near She was the as herself for be,

of Northbo-61. Born in in 1724, and governor of 785, died in e convention the United sen governor. of the United

e Revolution, 1ged 65. He

the Revoluork July 10,

odist minister, aged 84. y soldier, died

ta, Ga., Feb. me with Oglee war, and was n tomahawk. evolution. died at New died at New Ie was chief puisiana. He

e. He pubuisiana, in 12
eries, 8 vols.,

1824-1830; history of North Carolina, 2 vols., give his assistance to those who were contending 1818.

MARTIN, Joseph P., died in Prospect, Me., May 2, 1850, aged 90. The son of a minister in Berkshire, he entered the army in 1776, and was in several bloody battles. He was the clerk of the town, which was a wilderness when he settled in it. He published in 1830 a narrative of his adventures as a soldier.

MARTIN, DAVID, a popular writer, died at Baton Rouge, La., in 1855. He wrote the song, "Erin is my hone,"

MARTINDALE, STEPHEN, minister of Wallingford, Vt., died in 1847, aged 59. Horn in West Dorset, he graduated at Middlebury in 1806, and was a preceptor so a minister at Timmouth from 1892, and for the rest of his life at W.

MARTYN, RICHARD, spe bbly, died at Portsmouth, N. II., in so one of the founders of the church and a councillor. His son, Richard, a graduate of 1680, was for a time a preacher.

MARVIN, THOMAS J., judge, died at Havana in Dec., 1852, aged 50. He lived at Saratoga. He and his brother were the proprietors of the great house, called the United States hotel, and had held it for twenty years, constantly enlarging and improving it. He was a judge in Saratoga country.

MASON, JOHN, captain, proprietor of New Hampshire, died in 1635. He was a merchant of London, and afterwards governor of Newfoundland. On his return he met with Sir Wm. Alexander, who was induced to engage in the project of settling the new world, and obtained a patent of Acadic, or Nova Scotia, in 1621. In the same year Mason obtained of the Plymouth company, of which he was a member, a grant of the land from Salem river to the Merrimack, and up to the heads thereof, called Mariana. In 1622 he and Gorges obtained a grant of the lands between the Merrimac and Sagadahoc, extending back to the lakes, called Laconia. He obtained, Nov. 7, 1629, a new patent of New Hampshire. His daughter Jane married John Tufton, whose son, Robert T., assumed the name of Mason. He had been at great expense in the settlement of his province, with no advantage. His heirs sold their rights to Samuel Allen in 1691.

MASON, John, major, a brave soldier, and author of the history of the Pequot war, died bout 1672, aged 72. He was born in England about 1672, aged 72. He was bred to arms in the Netherlands, under Sir Thomas Fairfax, whose good opinion he so much conciliated, that, after his arrival in this country, when the struggle arose in England between King Charles I. and Mason, requesting him to join his standard and the parliament, Sir Thomas addressed a letter to

for the liberties of the people. The invitation, however, was declined. Mason was one of the first settlers of Dorchester, being one of the company of Mr. Warham in 1630. From this place he removed to Windsor about the year 1635, and assisted in laying the foundation of a new colony, The Pequot war, in which he was so distinguished, was in the year 1637. The Pequot Indians were a spirited and warlike nation, who lived near New Loudon. In 1634 a tribe which was in confederacy with them murdered a Captain Stone and a Captain Norton, with their crew of eight men, and then sunk the vessel. A part of the plun 'er was received by Sassaens, the Pequot sachem. 19 1636 the Pequo's killed a number of mer 28 as brook, where there was a garrison of ab war week men; in consequence of which Mason was ser .. down the river by the Connecticut colony in March, 1637, for the relief of the fort. He remained there a month, but not an Indian was to be seen. In April the Pequots killed nine of the English at Wethersfield, and destroyed much property. The colony was now reduced to a most lamentable condition. The inhabitants were in number but about two hundred and fifty, and most of the men were needed for the labor of the plantations. Many of the eattle had been lost by the want of hay or corn. There were, perhaps, not five ploughs in the colony, and the people were suffering for want of provisions. They were at the same time so harassed by a powerful enemy, that they could neither hunt, fish, nor cultivate their fields, but at the peril of their lives. They were obliged to keep a constant watch. At this crisis a court was summoned at Hartford on the first of May. Besides the six magistrates, there were also committees from the few towns in the colony, to compose the court. As the Pequots had killed about thirty, and were endeavoring to effect a union of all the Indians in a plan for the extirpation of the English, it was determined that an offensive war should be carried on against them, and that ninety men should immediately be raised, forty-two from Hartford, thirty from Windsor, and eighteen from Wethersfield. The little army, under the command of Mason, with Mr. Stone for their chaplain, fell down the river on the 10th, and arrived at Saybrook on the 17th. They had united with them about seventy Indians under the command of Uneas, sachem of the Mohegans, who had lately revolted from Sassacus. At Saybrook Mason and his officers were entirely divided in opinion respecting the manner of prosecuting their enterprise. The court had directed the landing of the men at Pequot harbor, from whence they were to advance upon the enemy; but Mason was of opinion that they should sail past the Pequot country to Narragansett, and

M.25 M.3 M.8 M.8 M.5

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

SIM STATE OF THE S

This opinion was a proof of his discernment and through the palisadoes, entered the fort at the military skill. The Pequots were expecting them at the harbor, where they kept a watch day and night; and the place was encompassed by rocks and thickets, affording the Indians, who were the more numerous, every advantage. It would be difficult to land, and if a landing was effected, it would be difficult to approach the enemy's forts without being much harassed, and giving an opportunity for all of them to escape, if they were unwilling to fight. Besides, by going first to Narragansett, the hope was indulged that some accession to their force might be procured. These reasons weighed much with Mason, but not with the other officers, who were afraid to exceed their commission. In this perplexity Mr. Stone was desired to seek wisdom from above. Having spent most of Thursday night in prayer on board the Pink, in the morning he went on shore and told Mason he was entirely satisfied with his plan. The council was again called, and the plan was adopted. On Saturday, the 20th, they arrived at Narragansett; but the wind was so unfavorable, that they could not land until Tuesday at sunset. He immediately marched to the residence of the sachem, Miantunnomu, and disclosed to him the object which he had in view. Two hundred of the Narragansetts joined him, and on Wednesday they marched about eighteen or twenty miles to the eastern Nihantick, which was a frontier to the Pequots. Here was the seat of one of the Narragansett sachems, who was so unfriendly that he would not suffer any of the English to enter the fort. A strong guard was in consequence placed round it, that none of the Indians should come out and alarm the Pequots. The little army continued its march on Thursday, having in its train about five hundred Indians. In the evening they reached the neighborhood of one of the Pequot forts at Mystic. The army encamped, being exceedingly fatigued in consequence of the heat and the want of necessaries. The guards, who were advanced considerably in front, heard the enemy singing until midnight. It was a time of rejoicing with them, as they had seen the vessels pass a few days before, and concluded that the English had not courage to attack them. About two hours before day on the morning of Friday, May 26th, the captain assembled his men, and prepared himself for determining the fate of Connecticut. The blessing of God was briefly and devoutly implored. With less than eighty brave men he marched forward, the Indians, who were much afraid, having fallen in the rear. He told them to stay behind at what distance they pleased, and to see whether Englishmen would not fight. As Mason approached within a rod of the fort a dog barked, and an Indian roared out, Owanux! Owanux! [Englishmen! Englishmen!] The troops wigwam for fire to burn the fort, an Indian was pressed on, and, having fired upon the Indians drawing an arrow to the very head, and would principal entrance, sword in hand. After a severe conflict, in which a number of the enemy were killed, victory was still doubtful, for the Indians concealed themselves in and about their wigwams. and, from their retreats, made good use of their arrows. At this crisis the captain cried out to his men, "We must burn them!" and, seizing a firebrand in one of the wigwams, set fire to the mats with which they were covered. In a short time all the wigwams were wrapped in flames. Mason drew his men without the fort, encompassing it completely; and the sachem, Uneas, with his Indians and such of the Narragansetts as remained. took courage and formed another circle in the rear. The enemy were now thrown into the utmost terror. Some climbed the palisadees and were brought down by the fire of the muskets; others were so bewildered that they rushed into the very flames. A number collected to the windward and endeavored to defend themselves with their arrows, and about forty of the boldest issued forth and were cut down by the swords of the English. In a little more than an hour the whole work of destruction was completed. Seventy wigwams were burned, and six hundred Indians perished. Seven escaped, and seven were taken prisoners. Two only of the English were killed, and sixteen wounded. The victory was complete. but the army was in great danger and distress. So many were wounded and worn down by fatigue, that only about forty could be spared to contend with the remaining enemy. In about an hour three hundred Indians came on from another fort; but Mason led out a chosen party and cheeked their onset. It was determined to march immediately for Pequot harbor, into which, a few minutes before, to their unutterable joy, they had seen their vessels enter, guided by the hand of Providence. When the march commenced, the Indians advanced to the hill on which the fort had stood. The desolation which here presented itself to their view filled them with rage; they stamped and tore their hair in the transports of passion; and, rushing down the hill with great fury, seemed determined to avenge themselves on the destroyers of their brethren. But the superiority of fire-arms to their bows and arrows kept them at a distance. Mason reached the harbor in safety; and, putting his wounded aboard, the next day marched by land to Saybrook with about twenty men. His safe return, and the success which attended the expedition, filled the whole colony with joy and thanksgiving. Several providential events were particularly noticed. It was thought remarkable that the vessels should come into the harbor at the very moment when they were so much needed. As Mason entered a fort at the After a severe enemy were the Indians eir wigwams, use of their ed out to his seizing a firee to the mats a short time nes. Mason ompassing it with his Inas remained. circle in the into the utalisadoes and the muskets; y rushed into l to the windemselves with oldest issued words of the our the whole ed. Seventy dred Indians n were taken n were killed. was complete, and distress. down by fabe spared to In about an from another n party and ned to march which, a few joy, they had the hand of nmenced, the hich the fort ere presented h rage; they transports of ll with great hemselves on But the supel arrows kept l the harbor l abourd, the ok with about the success d the whole Several proviced. It was

should come

at when they

n entered a n Indian was

d, and would

this critical moment cut the bowstring with his sword. So completely was the object of the expedition effected, that the remaining Pequots were filled with such terror, that they burned their wigwams and fled from their abode. The greatest part of them went towards New York. Mason was sent out to pursue them, and he took one hundred prisoners of the old men, women, and children. The rest, about two hundred in number, soon submitted themselves, engaging never to live in their country again, and becoming subject to the sachems of Mohegan and Narragansett, with the disgraceful necessity of never again being called Pequots.

Soon after this war, Mason was appointed by the government of Connecticut major-general of all their forces, and continued in this office till his death. He remained a magistrate, to which station he was first chosen in 1642, till May, 1660, when he was elected deputy-governor. In this office he continued ten years, till May, 1670, when his infirmities induced him to retire from public life. After the Pequot war, at the request of the inhabitants of Saybrook, and for the defence of the colony, he removed from Windsor to that place in 1647. Thence, in 1659, he removed to Norwich, where he died in 1672 or 1673, aged 72. He left three sons, Samuel, John, and Daniel, whose descendants are numerous; one of them was Jeremiah Mason, of Portsmouth. Mason held the same reputation for military talents in Connecticut, which Standish held in Plymouth colony. Both rendered the most important services to their country. Both were bred to arms in the Dutch Netherlands. Standish was of short stature, but Mason was tall and portly, and equally distinguished for his courage and vigor. He was also a gentleman of prudence and correct morals. At the request of the general court he drew up and published a brief history of the Pequot war. It is reprinted in Increase Mather's tory; Trumbull, I. 68-87, 337; Holmes. MASON, GEORGE, an eminent statesman of Virginia, died in 1792, aged 67. He was a member of the general convention which in 1787 framed the constitution of the United States, but refused to sign his name, as one of that body, to the instrument which they had produced. In the following year he was a member of the Virginia convention, which considered the proposed plan of federal government. He united with Henry, and opposed its adoption with great energy. He thought that the confederation was about to be converted into a consolidated government, for relation of troubles by the Indians, 1677. It was also republished more correctly, with an introduction and some explanatory notes by Thomas

Prince, in 1736. - Introduction to Mason's His-

have killed him instantly, had not one Davis at | cral convention avowed an attachment, and he was desirous of introducing amendments. He contended for the necessity of an article, reserving to the State all powers not delegated. This article is now among the amendments of the constitution. He wished also that there should be a limitation to the continuance of the president in office. So averse was he to that section which allowed the slave trade for twenty years, that, attached as he was to the union of all the States, he declared that he would not admit the southern States into the union, unless they would agree to discontinue the traffic. He died at his seat at Gunston Hall, Va.

> MASON, JOHN, D. D., minister of the Scotch church in Cedar street, N. Y., died in 1792, aged 57. His widow, Sarah, died in 1827, aged 84, at New Rochelle, at the house of Rev. Isaac Blan-velt, her brother-in-law.

MASON, DAVID, colonel, died in Boston Sept. 17, 1794, aged 67. He was a meritorious officer of the Revolution, and laid the foundation of the armory at Springfield. His earliest ancestor in Boston came from England in 1634. He learned the art of painting and gilding, and then portraitpainting of Greenwood; he also delivered lectures on electricity in various towns. Dr. Franklin was a friend in his father's house. In the French war he was a lieutenant, and understood well the art of gunnery, commanding a battery of six cannon in fort William and Henry. He was there taken prisoner, but was released in the woods by the kindness of a French officer. In 1763 he organized the first artillery company in Boston. In 1774 he was appointed engineer. Two brass cannon, which the British seized, he secretly carried off concealed in loads of manure. His wife, Hannah, grand-daughter of Rev. Thomas Symmes, cut out five thousand flannel cartridges. From Salem, April 19, 1775, he marched to Medford with four or five hundred men. Under Washington's eye he bombarded Boston from Dorchester heights with a 13-inch mortar, captured by Capt. Manly. At the second fire the mortar burst and wounded him in his leg. As soon as he could ride, he followed Washington to New York. Late in 1776 Washington ordered him to select a place for preparing ammunition; he agreed for ten acres, now the arsenal at Springfield, and there he lived five years. His residence was afterwards at Springfield. His State securities he sold at a great loss, for two or three shillings on the pound. In 1786 he became lame, and remained so eight years, till his deata. He was a Christian, eminent for love to God and man. His daughter Hannah married Capt. John Bryant of Boston, and died at Springfield. Susanna married Professor John Smith of Hanover. Mary married Daniel Tuttle of Boston. His which, he said, many of the members of the gen-| grandson, John Bryant, merchant of Boston, now living, married Mary, a daughter of Professor the United States, died Feb. 6, 1819, sged 33. Smith by his first wife, Mary Cleaveland.

MASON, JOHN, minister of Swanzey, died in July, 1801, aged 85.

MASON, THADDEUS, register of deeds for Middlesex, died May 1, 1802, aged 96. He graduated at Cambridge in 1728. MASON, JOHN M., D. D., minister in New York, died Dec. 27, 1829, aged 59. He was the son of Dr. John M., was born March 19, 1770, and was graduated at Columbia college in 1789. Having studied theology with his father, he completed his education at Edinburgh. In 1792 he succeeded his father in the church in Cedar street. By his letters on frequent communion, written in 1798, the associate Reformed churches were induced to change the old custom of communing but twice a year for a more frequent commemoration of the death of the Redeemer. Appointed professor of theology in 1801, he performed the duties until his health declined. In 1810 his connection with Cedar-street church was dissolved, and in 1812 he became the pastor of a new church in Murray street. From 1811 to 1816 he was the provost of Columbia college. In 1816 he travelled in Europe for the benefit of his health; in 1819 he suffered from two paralytic attacks. From 1821 he presided over Dickinson college in Pennsylvania until 1824, when he returned to New York, and lingered the rest of his days the shadow of what he once was.

He was eminent for erudition and for his intellectual powers. As a preacher he was uncommonly eloquent. But he was harsh and overbearing, somewhat in proportion "to the rohustness of his faculties of mind and body." At a contribution in his church, a man put into the box a counterfeit ten-dollar bill. In the afternoon Dr. M. said to the people: "A counterfeit ten-dollar bill was put into the box this morning; the man knew it to be counterfeit; if he is here, I will tell him - 'the Almighty has debited you ten dollars, and will charge you compound interest during the endless ages of eternity!" In preaching he once quoted Pope's lines as to God's being adored alike "by saint and savage and by sage," he pronounced it (in his deepest guttural), "the most damnable lie." He edited for some years the Christian's magazine, in which he had a controversy with Bishop Hobart on Episcopalianism. In that work his letters on frequent communion, a plea for communion on catholic principles, and other writings, are found. He published a sermon preached before the New York missionary society, 1797; before the London missionary society, about 1802; an oration on the death of Washington, 1800; of Hamilton, 1804. Four volumes of his sermons were published in 1832.

a senator from Virginia, and was born in 1785. He ably defended Norfolk in 1812. On the resignation of Mr. Giles he was elected senator in his place in 1816, the term of office expiring in 1817. In consequence of a political dispute with his relative, John McCarty, they fought a duel with muskets at Bladensburg, when Gen. Mason was killed. In the correspondence with his antagonist, which was published, he manifested the most malignant ferocity. The benevolent temper, cnjoined by the gospel of Jesus Christ, would have excluded from his heart that hatred of his brother which led to his own destruction. In the first third of the present century there were more than a hundred murders committed by duellists in this country, and the blood of more than a hundred unavenged murders eries to Heaven against our guilty land. Maj. Campbell was executed in London in Sept., 1808, for killing Capt. Boyd in a duel; yet in our republic no "honorable murderer" has yet been brought to the gallows. Blackstone, in expounding the law of England, says of deliberate duelling, that "both parties meet avowedly with an intent to murder." The law of God and the laws of our country require, that the murderer shall be put to death.

MASON, ABEL, captain, died at Southbridge, Mass., in 1832, aged 93, a soldier of 1756, and of the Revolution.

P

M

st

OI

fr

di

gı D

pı

pr

fe

D

130 th

th

vi

8n

н

we

th

88

W

sa

80 m

Pa

So

MASON, EBENEZER P., died in 1840, aged 21. He graduated at Yale in 1839, and published an introduction to practical astronomy.

MASON, WILLIAM, minister of Castine, Maine, died in 1847, aged about 77. Born in Rowley, he graduated at Harvard in 1792. He was settled in 1793, and dism' d in 1834.

MASON, ELIHU, er of Le Roy, N. Y., died in 1849, aged (orn at West Springfield, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1808, and was the minister of Herkimer, N. Y., then of Barkhamstead, Conn., two years from 1814; then engaged in missionary service; at last was pastor at Le loy, when after four years he was in 1833 disabled by ill health. He was laborious and eminently pious.

MASON, Joseph, Dr., died in Providence July 19, 1843, aged about 76, for many years an eminent physician. He was a graduate of Brown university in 1786.

MASON, STEVENS THOMPSON, the only son of Gen. John Thompson Mason, died at New York Jan. 4, 1843, aged 31. At the age of nineteen he was appointed secretary of Michigan, and was its governor as a Territory, and also as a Statc.

MASON, JOHN THOMPSON, general, died at Galveston April 17, 1850. A native of Virginia, MASON, ARMISTEAD T., general, a senator of he lived in Kentucky from 1811 to 1835; and in

Michigan, where he lived fifteen years; he was in three miles he came to Metapoiset, in Swangovernor after the leath of his son, Stevens

Thompson Mason.

MASON, JEREMIAH, LL. D., died at Boston Nov. 14, 1848, aged 80. Descended from Capt. John Mason, he was born in Lebanon; his father, opulent, died in 1813. His grandfather died in Norwich in 1779; his great-grandfather lived at Haddam. He graduated at Yale in 1788. In the practice of law he lived first at Westmoreland, N. II., then at Walpole, and at Portsmouth in 1797. In 1802 he was attorney-general. From 1813 to 1817 he was a senator of the United States. In 1832 he removed to Boston; at the age of seventy he left the bar, though still consulted as a lawyer. His high character in his profession was described by Mr. Webster and Judge Woodbury. As few men were so tall in stature, so very few ever reached his height of excellence as a lawyer.

MASON, THOMAS, minister of Northfield, Mass., died Jan. 3, 1851, aged 81. Born at Princeton, he was a graduate of Harvard in 1796, and paster at N. from 1799 to 1830. He published a thanksgiving sermon, 1824.

MASON, ERSKINE, D. D., died at New York May 14, 1851, aged 47; minister at Bleecker street; son of Dr. John M. Mason. His memoir, written by W. Adams, is prefixed to his sermons on practical subjects, entitled a pastor's legacy.

MASSASOIT, sachem or king of the Womponeags or Womponoogs, whose authority extended from Narragansett bay to Massachusetts bay, died about 1655. He is sometimes called their great sagamore and great sachem; but, although Dr. Dwight maintains, that sachem means a principal chief, and sagamore an inferior one, yet probably they are words of the same meaning, or the same word in different dialects or in different inflexions. Hubbard says the same as Dr. Dwight; but Winslow speaks of "sachems or petty governors." An ancient writer says, that the northern Indians used the term sagamore and the southern the term sachem. Purchas gives the word sagamo. Winslow, in his account of his visit to Massasoit, says, that he went to the sachimo comaco, to the sachem's house; and that Hobbamoc addressed him with the words, "Neen womasu sagimus," My loving sachem. We may then regard sachem, sachemo, sagamo, sagamore, as the same. The name of M. was written by Winslow, as it was probably pronounced, Massassowat; also it was written Massasoyt and Massasoyet. He was also called Asuhmequin, Osamekin, and Woosamequen. His residence was at Packanakick, or Pokanoket, sometimes called Sowams and Sowamset. Over against him, on the opposite side of the great bay, lived the Narcrossed a river, which, I suppose, was Taunton; living. He was silenced for nonconformity to the zey; and four or five miles beyond was Packanokic, the residence of the sachem. A Dutch vessel had been stranded before his house. I suppose, therefore, that he lived at Warren, and that Sowams or Sowamset was Swanzey, though the town was so called from Swansea in Wales, whence some of the first inhabitants came. March 22, 1621, he visited the English pilgrims at Plymouth with his brother, Quadequina, and a train of sixty men, and presented himself on Spring hill. The governor sent Mr. Winslow to invite him to a treaty. While Quadequina detained Mr. W. as a hostage, the sachem with twenty unarmed men met Capt. Standish and a few men at the town brook, where they saluted each other. Massasoit was then conducted to Governor Carver and made a treaty, the articles of which he always faithfully observed. The league lasted to 1675. It was stipulated, "that neither he nor his should injure any of ours; that if any unjustly warred against him, we would aid him, and if any warred against us, he should aid us." He was "a portly man, in his best years, grave of countenance, spare of speech." The Narragansetts under Canonicus being hostile to him, he was glad of the friendship of the whites. In July, E. Winslow visited the sachem at his residence, and was kindly received. When he was sick in March, 1623, Mr. Winslow, accompanied by John Hampden, "a gentleman of London," visited him. This was probably the celebrated Hampden. Massasoit, who was very sick, in his gratitude said, "I will never forget this kindness;" and he disclosed the Indian conspiracy for the destruction of the Plymouth settlers. Capt. Standish in consequence killed the ringleaders. The benevolent visit was the means of saving the colony from destruction. Massasoit was succeeded by his son, Alexander; king Philip was another son. — Belknap, II. 229, 290.

MATHER, RICHARD, minister of Dorchester, the son of Thomas M., died April 22, 1669, aged 73. He was born in Lancashire, England, in 1596. At the age of fifteen he was invited to take the instruction of a school at Toxteth, near Liverpool. After suffering for some time that anxiety and distress, which the knowledge of his own character as a sinner produced, he in his 18th. year found peace and joy in the gospel of the Redeemer. In May, 1618, he was admitted a student at Oxford; but in a few months afterwards he became the minister of Toxteth, being ordained by the bishop of Chester. Here he continued about fifteen years without any interruption of his benevolent labors. He preached every Tuesday at Prescot, and he always seized the opportunity, which his attendance upon funerragansetts. Winslow, in going to Massasoit, als afforded, for imparting instruction to the ious and ovidence years an of Brown ly son of ew York nineteen and was State. died at Virginia,

; and in red 33.

Mase n.

n 1785.

e resig-

r in his

n 1817.

his rel-

el with son was antago-

he most

per, en-ld have

brother

the first ore than

s in this hundred

inst our

in Lon-

yd in a le mur-

gallows.

England,

parties r." The require,

hbridge,

756, and

aged 21.

ished an

e, Maine,

Rowley,

was set-

y, N. Y.,

Spring-

808, and then of 14; then

as paster

in 1833

fluence of his friends was soon restered. He was again suspended in 1634, as he had never worn the surplice, and could not adopt the ceremonies which were enjoined. Having resolved to seek the peaceable enjoyment of the rights of conscience and the purity of Christian ordinances in New England, he escaped the pursuivants, who were endeavoring to apprehend him, and embarked at Bristol in May, 1635. August 17th he arrived in Boston harbor. He was in a few months invited to Dorchester; and, as the first church had removed with Mr. Warham to Windsor, a new church was formed, of which he was constituted the teacher, August 23, 1636. He assisted Mr. Eliot and Mr. Welde in 1640 in making the New England version of the psalms. The model of church discipline, which he presented to the synod of 1648, was the one which was chiefly adopted in preference to the models prepared by Mr. Cotton and Mr. Partridge. He died in the peace of the Christian. The following was the poetic inscription of the day:

"Divinely rich and learned Rich'd Mather, Sons, like bim prophets great, rejoic'd this father. Short time his sleeping dust here's cover'd down; Not his ascended spirit or renown."

His first wife was the daughter of Edmund Hoult; his second was Sarah, widow of John Cotton. His six sons were by his first wife. Though in his old age he experienced many infirmities, yet, such had been his health, that for half a century he was not detained by sickness so much as one Sunday from his public labors. He was a pious Christian, a good scholar, and a plain and useful preacher. He was careful to avoid foreign and obscure words, and unnecessary citation of Latin sentences, that all might understand him. While his voice was loud and distinct, there was also a vehemency and dignity in his manner. He wrote the discourse about , the church covenant, and the answer to thirtytwo questions, published in 1639, which pass under the name of the elders of New England. He wrote also a modest and brotherly answer to Charles Herle's book against the independency of churches, 1644; a reply to Rutherford, or a defence of the answer to Herle's book, 1646; an heart-melting exhortation, etc., in a letter to his countrymen of Lancashire, 1650; a catechism; a treatise of justification, 1652; a letter to Mr. Hooker, to prove that it was lawful for a minister to administer the sacrament to a congregation not particularly under his care; election sermon. about 1660; an answer to Mr. Davenport's work against the propositions of the synod of 1662. He also prepared for the press sermons on the established church in 1633, but through the influence of his friends was soon restored. He was again suspended in 1634, as he had never worn

the surplice, and could not adont the ceremonies of his Life.

MATHER, SAMUEL, minister of Dublin, Ireland, the son of the preceding, died in Dublin Oct. 29, 1671, aged 45. He was born in Lancashire May 13, 1626. Accompanying his father to this country, he was graduated at Harvard college in 1643. He was appointed the first fellow of the college, and he was held in such estimation by the students whom he instructed, that, when he left them, they put on badges of mourning. When he began to preach, he spent some time in Rowley as an assistant to Mr. Rogers, A church having been gathered in the north part of Boston, he was invited to take the charge of it; but, after preaching there one winter, he was induced to go to England in 1650. The church which he left was afterwards under the pasteral care of his brother, Increase Mather. In England he was appointed chaplain of Magdalen college, Oxford. He then preached in Scotland and Ireland. In Dublin he was senior fellow of Trinity college, and was settled the minister of the church of St. Nicholas. Though he refused several benefices that were offered by the lord deputy, because he did not wish to have the Episcopalian ministers displaced; yet soon after the restoration he was suspended on a charge of sedition. Returning to England, he was minister at Burton wood, till ejected by the Bartholomew act in 1662. He afterwards gathered a church at his own house in Dublin, where he died in peace. He was succeeded by his brother, Nathaniel Mather. As a preacher he held the first rank, and his name was known throughout the kingdom. His discourses were remarkable for clearness of method. He published a wholesome cavcat for a time of liberty, 1652; a defence of the protestant religion against popery, 1671; an irenicum, or an essay for union among the Presbyterians, Independents, and Anabaptists; a treatise against stinted liturgies; a picce against Valentine Greatarick, who pretended to cure diseases by stroking; a course of sermons on the types of the Old Testament, with some discourses against popish superstitions. - Wood's Athenæ. Oxon., II. 489, 490; Magnalia, IV. 143-153; Nonconformists' Memorial, II. 355-357.

ir F

n

te

n

h er

ye the the fe of he co he provided H countrymen of Lancashire, 1650; a catechism; a treatise of justification, 1652; a letter to Mr. Hooker, to prove that it was lawful for a minister to administer the sacrament to a congregation not particularly under his care; election sermon, about 1660; an answer to Mr. Davenport's work against the propositions of the synod of 1662. He also prepared for the press sermons on the second epistle of Peter, and an elaborate defence in 1662 he went into Holland, and was a minister in London, the son of Richard Mather, died July 26, 1697, aged 67. He was born March 20, 1630. After his arrival in this country with his father, he was cducated at Harvard college, where he graduated in 1647. He afterwards went to England, and was presented to the living at Barnstable by Oliver Cromwell in 1656. Upon his cjectment in 1662 he went into Holland, and was a minister

Wood's ш. 122 account

lin, Ire-Dublin Laneas father Harvard first feluch estited, that. f mournent some Rogers. orth part charge of

r, he was ie church e pastoral In Engdalen col-Scotland fellow of inister of ie refused the lord the Episafter the ge of sedininister at tholomew

a church ne died in other, Nad the first ghout the kable for a whole-1652; a inst popefor union , and Anaturgies; a pretended of sermons some dis-- Wood's a, IV. 143-55-357.

London, 1697, aged After his he was cdgraduated rland, and nstable by ejectment

a minister

at Rotterdam. About the year 1671 or 1672 he succeeded his brother, Samuel Mather, at Dublin. Thence he removed to London, where he was pastor of a Congregational church, and one of the lecturers at Pinner's hall. He was buried in the burying ground near Bunhill fields, and there is upon his tomb-stone a long Latin inscription, written by Dr. Watts, which ascribes to him a high character for genius, learning, piety, and ministerial fidelity. He published the rightcousness of God by faith upon all who believe, 1694; a discussion of the lawfulness of a pastor's officiating in another's church; twenty-three sermons, preached at Pinner's hall, and Lime street, taken in short hand as they were delivered, 1701; a fast sermon. - Calamy's Contin. 1. 257-258.

MATHER, ELEAZER, first minister of Northampton, Mass., the son of Richard Mather, died July 24, 1669, aged 32. He was born May 13, 1637. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1656. Having preached about two years at Northampton, when a church was gathered there in 1661, he was ordained its minister, June 23. His wife was the daughter of John Warham; she married after his death S. Stoddard. His daughter married Rev. John Williams. He was admired as a man of talents and exalted piety, and as a zealous and eminently useful preacher. After his death there was published from his manuscripts a serious exhortation to the succeeding and present generation, being the substance of his last sermons, 1671. — Magnalia, III. 130.

MATHER, INCREASE, D. D., president of Harvard college, the son of Richard Mather, died August 23, 1723, aged 84. He was born at Dorchester June 21, 1639. He was graduated in 1656. Beginning to preach in the next year, and being invited by his brother to Duhlin, he embarked for England July 3, 1657, and after an absence of four years returned in August, 1661. In the next month he was invited to preach at the north church in Boston, though he was not ordained there till May 27, 1664. Two years before this, when the controversy respecting the subjects of baptism was agitated, he opposed the results of the synod, but, being convinced by the arguments of Mr. Mitchell, he afterwards defended the synodical propositions. He was a member of the synod of 1679, and drew up the result, which was then agreed on. When King Charles II. expressed his wish that the charter of Massachusetts might be resigned into his hands in 1683, Dr. Mather zealously opposed a compliance with his majesty's pleasure. In 1688 he sailed for England as agent of the province to procure redress of grievances. After several years of important services he returned with a new charter, and arrived in Boston May 14, 1692. He had the sole nomination of the first governor. After his arrival the general court appointed a voted a tenth part of all his income to charitable day of public thanksgiving for his safe return. and for the settlement of the government. During the witcheraft delusion he opposed the violent measures which were adopted. He wrote a book to prove that the devil might appear in the shape of an innocent man, by means of which a number of persons, convicted of witcheraft, escaped the execution of the sentence. After the death of Mr. Oakes in 1681, the care of Harvard college devolved upon him. But as his church refused to relinquish him, he only made weekly visits to Cambridge, until the appointment of President Rogers in the following year. After his death he was again called to the presidency of the college, June 11, 1685, and he continued in this station till Sept. 6, 1701, when he resigned in consequence of an act of the general court, requiring the president to reside at Cambridge. He was unwilling to leave his church, though his son, Cotton Mather, had been settled as his colleague for a number of years. Mr. Willard succeeded him. After a long life of benevolent exertion, he died in Boston, having been a preacher sixty-six years, sixty-two of which were passed in the ministry in Boston. His wife was Maria, the daughter of John Cotton. He had six daughters and three sons; Sarah married Rev. Mr. Walter, and Abigail, Rev. John White.

He was a man of great learning and of extensive influence and usefulness. Soon after his return from England he procured an act, authorizing the college to create bachelors and doctors of theology, which power was not given by its former charter. As president he was careful not only to give the students direction in their literary pursuits, but also to impart to them religious instruction. He frequently called them one by one into the library, and there, with the affection of a parent and the fidelity of a minister of the gospel, he would confer with them respecting the salvation of their souls, and solemnly charge them to renounce their sins, to embrace the gospel, and to devote themselves to the service of God. He usually preached to them every week, and his sermons, both at Cambridge and in Boston, were designed to impress the conscience as well as to enlighten the mind. He considered him as the best preacher who taught with the greatest simplicity. His delivery was somewhat peculiar. He usually spoke with deliberation, but at times, when uttering an impressive sentence, his voice became the voice of thunder. Always committing his sermons to memory, he never used his notes in the pulpit. Sixteen hours in every day were commonly spent in his study, and in his retirement he repeatedly addressed himself to the Lord, his Maker. He always kept a diary, designed for his improvement in religion. Such was his benevolence, that he de558 purposes. His portrait is in the library of the Massachusetts historical society. The following is a list of his publications: the mystery of Israel's salvation, 1659; the life and death of Richard Mather, 1670; woe to drunkards, 1673; the day of trouble near; important truths about conversion, 1674; the first principles of New England; a discourse concerning the subject of baptism, and consociation of churches; the wicked man's portion; the times of men in the hands of God, 1675; history of the war with the Indians from June 24, 1675, to Aug. 12, 1676; a relation of troubles of New England from the Indians, from the beginning; an historical discourse on the prevalency of prayer; renewal of covenant the duty of decaying and distressed churches, 1677; pray for the rising generation, 1678; a call to the rising generation, 1679; the divine right of infant baptism; the great concernment of a covenant people; heaven's alarm to the world, 1680; animadversions upon a narrative of the Baptists, 1681; diatriba de signo filii hominis; practical truths; the church a subject of persecution, 1682; a discourse concerning comets, 1683; remarkable providences; the doctrine of divine providence, 1684; an arrow against profane and promiscuous dances, 1685; the mystery of Christ; the greatest of sinners exhorted; a sermon on an execution for murder, 1686; a testimony against superstitions, 1687; de successu evangelii apud Indos epistola, 1688; the unlawfulness of using common prayer, and of swearing on the book, 1689; several papers relating to the state of New England; the revolution justified, 1690; election sermon, 1603; the blessing of primitive counsellors; cases of conscience concerning witchcraft; an essay on the power of a pastor for the administration of sacraments, 1693; whether a man may marry his wife's own sister; solemn advice to young men, 1695; a treatise of angels, 1696; a discourse on man's not knowing his time; the case of conscience concerning the eating of blood, 1697; funeral sermon on J. Baily, 1698; the surest way to the highest honor; on hardness of heart; the folly of sinning, 1690; the order of the gospel vindicated, 1700; the blessed hope, 1701; remarks on a sermon of George Keith; Ichabod, or the glory departing, an election sermon; the Christian religion the only true religion; the excellency of public spirit, 1702; the duty of parents to pray for their children; soul-saving. gospel truths, 1703; the voice of God in the stormy winds; practical truths to promote holinesa, 1704; meditations on the glory of Christ, 1705; a discourse concerning earthquakes; a testimony against sacrilege; a dissertation concerning right to sacraments, 1706; meditations on death; a disquisition concerning right to sacraments, 1707; a dissertation wherein the strange doctrine of Mr. Stoddard is refuted, 1708; on the future conversion of the Jews, confuting Dr. Lightfoot and Mr. Baxter; against cursing and swearing, 1700; concerning faith and prayer for the kingdom of Christ; at the artillery election, on being very courageous; awakening truths tending to conversion, 1710; meditations on the glory of the heavenly world; concerning the death of the righteous; the duty of the children of godly parents, 1711; burnings bewailed; remarks upon an answer to a book against the common prayer; meditations on the sanctification of the Lord's day, 1712; a plain discourse showing who shall not enter into heaven; a funeral sermon for his daughter-in-law, 1713; on the death of his consort, 1714; Jesus Christ a mighty Saviour, and other subjects, 1715; a disquisition concerning ecclesiastical councils; there is a God in heaven; the duty and dignity of aged servants of God, 1716; at the ordination of his grandson; sermons on the beatitudes; practical truths plainly delivered with an ordination sermon, 1718; five sermons on several subjects, one of them on the author's birth-day, 1719; a testimony to the order of the churches, 1720; advice to children of godly ancestors, a sermon concluding the Boston lectures on early piety; several sheets in favor of inoculation for the small pox, 1721; a dying pastor's legacy; Elijah's mantle, 1722. +-Remarkables of I. Mather; Nonconformists' Memorial, II. 245-249; Magnalia, IV. 130, 131; V. 77-84; VI. 2.

MATHER, COTTON, D. D., F. R. S., minister in Boston, died Feb. 13, 1728, aged 65. He was the son of the preceding, and grandson of John Cotton. He was born in Boston Feb. 12, 1663. Distinguished for early piety, when he was a schoolboy he endeavored to persuade his youthful companions frequently to lift up their hearts to their Maker and heavenly Friend, and he even wrote for them some forms of devotion. He had also the courage to reprove their vices. At the age of fourteen he began to observe days of secret fasting and prayer, reading commonly fifteen chapters in the bible every day. He was grad-uated at Harvard college in 1678, having made uncommon proficiency in his studies. At this early period of his life he drew up systems of the sciences, and wrote remarks upon the books which he read, and thus matured his understanding. At the age of seventeen he approached the Lord's table with affectionate reliance upon Jesus Christ for salvation. Having been occupied for some time in the study of theology, he was ordained minister of the north church in Boston as colleague with his father, May 13, 1684. Here he passed his days unwearied and unceasing in his exertions to promote the glory of his Maker, and the highest welfare of his brethren. He died in the assurance of Christian faith. His first wife was the daughter of Col. John Phillips; his

Clark; his third, widow George, daughter of Rev. Samuel Lee. By his two first wives he had fifteen children. He was a man of unequalled industry, of vast learning, of unfeigned piety, and of most disinterested and expansive henevolence. He was also distinguished for his credulity, for his pedantry, and for his want of judgment and taste. No person in America had so large a library, or had read so many books, or retained so much of what he read. So precious did he consider time, that to prevent visits of unnecessary length, he wrote over his study door in capital letters, " Be short." Still his manners were never morose, but easy and obliging. His social talents and various knowledge rendered his conversation interesting and instructive. Every morning he usually read a chapter of the Old Testament in Hebrew and another in the French, and a chapter of the New Testament in Greek. Besides the French, he understood also the Spanish and Iroquois, and in these languages ho published treatises. There were two books, in which he every day wrote something. In the one, which he called his quotidiana, he transcribed passages from the authors which he read. In the other, which was his diary, he noted the events of the day, his imperfections and sins, and every thing which might subserve his religious improvement. By this diary it appears that in one year he kept sixty fasts and twenty vigils, and published fourteen books, besides discharging the duties of his pastoral office. As a minister of the gospel he was most exemplary. Always proposing in his sermons to make some particular impression upon the minds of his hearers, the whole discourse had relation to this object, and he endeavored to make his sentences short, that those who took notes might do it with more ease. His discourses, without doubt, were equal in length to those of his brethren, which, he himself informs us, usually went a good way into the second hour. He kept a list of the members of his church, and frequently prayed for each separately Those especially, whose cases had been mentioned on the Sabbath in the house of public worship, were remembered by him in his secret addresses to the throne of grace. He usually allotted one or two afternoons in a week to visiting the families of his congregation, and in these visits he addressed both the parents and the children, exhorting the former to faithfulness, and endeavering to instruct the latter by asking them questions, and recommending to them secret prayer and reading of the Scriptures. When he left them he recommended to their consideration a particular text of Scripture. As he published many pious books, he was continually putting them into the hands of persons to whom he thought they would be useful. His success second, widow Hubbard, daughter of Dr. John | first year of his ministry about thirty were added to his church; and he received the benedictions of many dying believers, who spoke of his labors as the means of their salvation. He promoted the establishment of several useful societies, particularly a society for suppressing disorders and for the reformation of manners, and a society of peacemakers, whose object was to prevent law-suits and to compose differences. He arranged the business of every day in the morning, always inquiring by what means he could be useful to his fellow men, and endeavoring to devise new methods of doing good. He did not content himself with contriving plans, but vigorously executed them. When he travelled, he commonly had for a companion some young gentleman, to whom he might impart instruction, and he used to pray with him in private, when they lodged together. Notwithstanding his benevolent labors and unwearied industry, he expressed the greatest humility, and spoke of his days as passed in sloth and sin. He took some interest in the political concerns of his country, and on this account, as well as on account of his faithful reproof of iniquity, he had many enemies. Many abusive letters were sent him, all of which he tied up in a packet and wrote upon the cover, "Libels: Father, forgive them." Though he derived much satisfaction from his theological and literary pursuits; yet he declared, that, in performing an act of benevolence to some poor and suffering Christian he found much higher pleasure. In his diary he says: "As for the delights of the world, I know of none comparable to those which I take in communion with my Saviour. As for the riches of this world, I use no labor for them. In my Saviour I have unsearchable riches; and in my fruition of him I have a full supply of all my wants. As for the honors of this world, I do nothing to gain honors for myself. To be emloyed in the Lord's work, for the advancement of his kingdom, is all the honor that I wish for."

His publication amounted to three hundred and eighty-two. Many of them indeed were small, such as single sermons; but others were of considerable magnitude. His essays to do good, 12mo. 1710, is a volume peculiarly excellent. It has lately been reprinted. Dr. Franklin ascribed all his usefulness in the world to his reading it in early life. His Christian philosopher, 8vo. 1721, was admired in England. His directions for a candidate of the ministry, 12mo. 1725, gained him a vast number of letters of thanks. Others of his larger works are, the life of his father; and ratio disciplinæ fratrum Nov-Anglorum, or an account of the discipline professed and practised in the churches of New England. But his largest and most celebrated work is his Magnalia Christi Americana, or the ecclesiastical hisseemed to correspond with his fidelity. In the tory of New England from its first planting in 1625 to the year 1698, in seven books, folio, 1702. His style abounds with puerilities, puns, and strange concelts, and he makes a great display of learning; but no man was so thoroughly acquainted with the history of New England, and he has saved numerous important facts from oblivion. In the work are contained biographical accounts of many of the first settlers, both governors and ministers. It appears that he gave full eredit to the stories of witcheraft; but he was not singular in his credulity. Even Dr. Watts wrote to him, "I am persuaded that there was much immediate agency of the devil in those affairs, and perhaps there were some real witches too." The catalogue of his publications in his life, written by his son, occupies eighteen pages; and the whole, therefore, could not with con-venience be here inserted. He published many funeral sermons. Among his other works, which are principally occasional sermons or pious tracts, is the Wonders of the Invisible World, 4to. 1692; and Psalterium Americanum, or the book of Psalms in blank verse, with illustrations, 1718. Besides his numerous publications, he left behind him in manuscript the angel of Bethesda, in which ha placed under every disease not only suitable religious instructions, but the most simple and easy medicines; a large treatise, designed to promote union among protestants; Goliathus detruncatus, against Mr. Whiston, to prove that most of the Antenicene fathers were orthodox and not Arian: and Biblia Americana, or the sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament illustrated. This learned work, which it was once proposed to publish in three folio volumes, is now in the library of the Massachusetts historical society. -Life by S. Mather; Middleton's Biog. Evang. IV. 233-240.

MATHER, SAMUEL, minister, of Windsor, Conn., the son of Timo. M. of Dorchester, and the grandson of Richard M., was graduated at Harvard college in 1671; was ordained in 1682; and died March 18, 1728, aged 77. His predecessors were Warham and Huit; his successor was Jonathan Marsh. An unhappy division existed in Windsor from 1667 to 1680. The two preachers, neither of whom were ordained, were Mr. Chauncy and Mr. Woodbridge. But the two churches and town happily united in Mr. Mather, and lived in harmony during his ministry. He was one of the first trustees of Yale college, from 1700 to 1724. His wife was Hannah, the daughter of Gov. Treat. He published dead faith, 1697; on reu uncing our righteousness, 1707.

MATHER, \ZARIAH, minister of Saybrook, Conn., died in 37. He graduated in the fourth class at Yale in 1705, and was tutor at Killingworth, where the college then was, in 1709 and 1710. He published woe to sleepy sinners, 1720; sabbath day's rest; election sermon, 1725.

MATHER, SAMUEL, an eminent physician of Windsor, Conn., died in 1743, aged 63. He was born in or near Boston; graduated at Harvard in 1698; and studied physic with Dr. Hooker of Hartford. No man had a wider circuit of practice; and he was venerated for his virtues. Among his descendants may be mentioned Dr. Samuel Mather of Windsor and Hartford, his grandson; and Dr. Charles Mather, who died in Hartford in 1822, aged 80. — Williams' Medical Biography.

MATHIER, ALLYN, first minister of Fairhaven, Conn., died in 1784, at Savannah, whither he had gone on account of his health, aged 36. He graduated at Yale in 1771; and was ordained February 3, 1773.

MATHER, SAMUEL, D. D., minister in Boston. the son of Cotton M., died June 27, 1785, aged 79. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1723. He was ordained in the same church in which his father was settled, as colleague with Mr. Gee, June 21, 1732. In about ten years a separation occurred, in consequence, it is believed, of a difference of views in regard to the revival of religion at that period. A church was built for him, in Bennet street, by persons who withdrew with him from the old north church. He was their pastor till his death. He was buried, by hir own direction, without any eeremony. A society of Universalists purchased his church and still occupy it. Dr. Mather published a sermon on the death of William Waldron, 1727; of his father, 1728; life of his father, 8vo. 1729; essay on gratitude, 1732; on the death of Queen Caroline, 1738; an apology for the liberties of the churches in New England, 8vo. 1738; artillery election sermon, 1739; on the death of T. Hutchinson, 1740; of the prince of Wales, 1751; of William Welsteed and Ellis Gray, 1753; dissertation on the name of Jehovah, 1760; convention sermon, 1762; essay on the Lord's prayer, 1766; a modest account of the salutations in ancient times, 1768, anonymous; the sacred minister, a poem, in blank verse, 1773; America known to the ancients, 1774; all men will not be saved forever, in answer to Chauncy, 1781. - Hist. Coll. 111. 258, 263; Holmes.

MATHER, Moses, D. D., minister of Middlesex, Conn., died in 1806, aged about 88. He graduated at Yale in 1739. He published infant baptism defended, 1750; election sermon, 1781.

MATHER, ELISHA, M. D., died in Northampton, Mass., April 24, 1840, aged 48. He was the son of Mr. Elisha Mather, and grandson of Dr. Samuel Mather of Northampton, an eminent physician, who died in 1770, aged 73, and whose son William, also a physician in N., died before him in 1775, aged 32. Dr. M. was a counsellor of the Massachusetts medical society, skilled in Christian. - Williams' Medical Biography.

MATHER, THADDEUS, M. D., died at Binghamton, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1854, aged 75; a descendant from Dr. Samuel M. of Windsor, by Nathaniel, and Elihu M.

MATHEWS, THOMAS, a soldier of the Revolution, died at Norfolk, Va., in 1818.

MATIGNON, FRANCIS ANTHONY, D. D., Catholic minister in Boston, died Sept. 19, 1818, aged 64. He was born at Paris Nov. 10, 1753. Appointed professor in the college of Navarre in 1785, after some years he received an annuity from the king, which made him independent. The revolution compelling him to leave France, lip. Carroll sent him from Baltimore to Boston, Aug. 20, 1792; in 1796 he received Mr. Cheverus as his colleague. He was gentle and courteous, learned and eloquent; and, assisted by the higher eloquence of Mr. Cheverus, the decayed Catholic society was rendered flourishing.

MATTHEWS, MARMADUKE, was a preacher at Hull, Mass., in 1650. He was also the first minister of Malden in 1651, and died in England in 1683. Mr. Wigglesworth came to M. about 1654.

MATTHEWS, John, governor of South Carolina, died at Charleston in 1802, aged 58. He was a patriot of the Revolution, and in 1776 a judge of the supreme court. He was appointed in 1780 a delegate to congress, in which body his services were important. He succeeded Mr. Rutledge in 1782 as governor for one year, and in 1784 was appointed a judge in the court of equity.

MATTHEWS, VINCENT, general, LL. D., died at Rochester, N. Y., Aug. 23, 1846, aged 80. He was one of the greatest lawyers in the State of New York, engaged 56 years in the practice of the law. Born in Orange county, near Elmira, he lived in Bath, and then in Rochester.

MATTHEWS, MARY, Mrs., died in Warren,

Me., May 6, 1851, aged 106.

MATTHEWSON, ELISHA, died at Scituate, Mass., Oct. 14, 1853, aged 88. He was in polities of the democratic school of Jefferson, and four years a senator of the United States.

MATTOON, EBENEZER, general, died in Amherst, Mass., Sept. 11, 1843, aged 88. Amherst, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1776. In the war he was a major; he was also a member of congress, and sheriff of Hampshire. In 1816 he was adjutant-general. He was a member of the second church of Amherst.

MAUD, DANIEL, an early minister, died at Dover, N. H., in 1655. He was a schoolmaster in Boston; a freeman in 1636; and was settled at D. in 1641 or 1642.

MAULE, THOMAS, a shopkeeper of Salem, was called before the council in 1695, for publishing a pamphlet of 260 pages, truth held forth.

physiology and pathology, and exemplary as a | Thus early did authority attempt to shackle the

MAURY, JAMES, died at New York Feb. 23, 1840, aged 95. A native of Virginia, he was the first United States' consul at Liverpool, - a station which he held nearly half a century. He was educated, intelligent, amiable, and respected.

MAVERICK, John, one of the first ministers of Dorchester, and colleague pastor with Warham, lived in England forty miles from Exeter; he arrived at Nantasket May 30, 1630, and died at Boston, Feb. 3, 1630, aged about 60. He was a man of a humble spirit and eminently useful. Most of his church removed to Windsor.

MAXCY, JONATHAN, D. D., president of three colleges, died June 4, 1820, aged 52. He was born at Attleborough, Mass., Sept. 2, 1768, and was graduated in 1787 at the college in Providence, of the Baptist church in which town he was ordained the pastor, Sept. 8, 1791. He was also professor-of divinity in the college, and eleven years the president, from Sept. 6, 1792. In his pastoral office he was succeeded by S. Gano. In 1801 he succeeded Dr. Edwards as the president of Union college in Schenectady, in which office he was succeeded by Dr. Nott in 1804. For the next fifteen years he was the first president of the college of South Carolina in Columbia, where he died. He married a daughter of Commodore Hopkins of Providence. He published a discourse on the death of Pres. Manning; address to graduates, 1794; oration to mechanics, 1795; oration July 4; existence of God from his works; at a dedication; on the atonement, 1796; sermon at Boston; to a class, 1797; address to graduates, 1798; to candidates for a degree, 1801; funeral sermon to legislature, 1818. His literary remains, with a memoir by Dr. Elton, were published in 1844.

MAXCY, VIRGIL, was killed by the explosion on board the steamer Princeton, Feb. 28, 1844. In the same manner were killed Commodore Kennon and Secretary Gilmer. He was born in Massachusetts, and graduated at Providence in 1804, his brother being the president of the college. In law he was associated with A. G. Harper of Maryland. He was solicitor of the treasury, and charge at Belgium five years. He published oration to Phi Beta Kappa society, 1833.

MAXWELL, EBENEZER K., minister at Delhi,

N. Y., died in 1840, aged 55.

MAY, ELEAZAR, minister of Haddam, Conn., died in 1803, aged 70. Born in Wethersfield, he graduated at Yale in 1752, and was ordained in MAY, SAMUEL W., minister at Cincinnati, O., died March 27, 1840.

MAY, HEZEKIAH, died at Tionesta, Venango valley, Penn., July 4, 1843, aged 69. Born in Haddam, he graduated at York in 1793, and from 1803 to 1808 was the minister of Marbiehead; then he emigrated to the wilderness of the Alleghany river. His first care was preaching the gospel, yet he successfully engaged carnestly in agriculture, bringing up a large family. His father was Eleazer, a minister in East Haddam fifty years. He published a sermon at the Installation of E. Sage, 1808.

MAY, Frederic, a physician, died at Washington in 1847, aged 74. He graduated at Harvard in 1702, and removed to Washington in 1705, when the capital was a wilderness. For many years he was its physician and surgeon. He was president of the medical society.

MAY, GEORGE W., a physician, died at Washington in 1845, aged 56. Born in Boston, he graduated at Harvard in 1810. MAYHEW, THOMAS, governor of Martha's Vineyard and the neighboring islands, died in 1681, aged 92. He resided at Watertown, Mass. in 1636. He had been a merchant in Southampton, England. In Oct., 1641, he obtained of the agent of Lord Stirling a grant of the above lands. In the following year he began a settlement at Edgartown. In about thirty years these islands were attached to New York, and in 1692 they were annexed to Massachusetts. He gave his son much assistance in the benevolent work of converting the heathen. The Indian sachems were afraid that the reception of the Christian religion would deprive them of their power; but Gov. Mayhew convinced them that religion and government were distinct, and by his prudent conduet removed their prejudices against the truth. Having persuaded them to adopt the English administration of justice, and having proved himself their father and friend, they became exceedingly attached to him, and at length submitted themselves to the crown of England. After the death of his son, as he was acquainted with the language of the Indians, and as he saw no prospect of procuring a stated minister for them, he began himself, at the age of seventy, to preach to the natives as well as to the English. Notwithstanding his advanced years and his office of governor, he sometimes travelled on foot near twenty miles through the woods, in order to impart the knowledge of the gospel to those that sat in darkness. He persuaded the natives at Gayhead to receive the gospel, which they had before opposed. Between the years 1664 and 1667 he was much assisted by John Cotton. When an Indian church was formed, Aug. 22, 1670, the members of it desired him, though above fourscore, to become their pastor; but, as he declined, they chose Hiacoomes. When Philip's war commenced in 1675, the Indians of Martha's Vineyard could count twenty times the number of the English, and the latter would probably have been extirpated, had not the Christian religion been introduced; but now all was peace, and Mr. Mayhew employed some of his converts as a guard. While his zeal to promote the gospel was yet unabated, he died in old age. In his last moments his heart was filled with Christian joy.—Prince's Account, annexed to Mayhew's Indian Converts, 280, 292–302.

t

1

n

n

a

n

Ph

I

h

ti

N

10

d

I

tł

fa

 \mathbf{pl}

pi

a

W

H

Z

m di

ac

we a fer off co gi

pr er va C/

In 18 Vi th be pr Oc co th

MAYHEW, THOMAS, the first minister of Martha's Vineyard, the only son of the preceding, died in 1657, aged 36. He in 1642 accompanied his father to that island, where he became the minister of the English. He beheld with Christian compassion the miserable Indians, who were ignorant of the true God; he studied their language; he conciliated their affection; and he taught them the truths of the gospel. The first convert was Hiacoomes in 1643. Mr. Mayhew eemmenced his public Instructions to the Indians in 1646, the same year in which Mr. Eliot began his missionary exertions in a different part of the Many obstacles were thrown in his country. way; but he persevered in his benevolent labors, visiting the natives in their different abodes, lodging in their smoky wigwams, and usually spending a part of the night in relating to them pertions of the Scripture history. Before the close of the year 1650, a hundred Indians entered into a solemn covenant to obey the Most High God, imploring his mercy through the blood of Christ. In 1662 there were two hundred and eighty-two of the heathens who had embraced Christianity. and among these were eight pawaws, or priests, who were so much interested to support the credit of their eraft. He sailed for England in Nov., 1657, to communicate intelligence respecting these Indians to the society for propagating the gospel, and to procure the means of more extensive usefulness; but the vessel was lost at sea. He left three sons, - Matthew, who succeeded his grandfather in the government of the island in 1681, and also preached to the Indians, and died in 1710; Thomas, a judge of the common pleas for the county; and John. A grandson of Matthew was Dr. Matthew Mayhew, a man of wit and humor and uncommon powers of mind, who died before 1815, aged 85. - He had received a liberal education, and was a man of considerable learning. His talents might have procured him a settlement in places, where his maintenance would have been generous; but he chose to preach the gospel to the heathen, and cheerfully consented to live in poverty and to labor with his own hands to procure the means of subsistence for his family. Four of his letters respecting the progress of the gospel were published in London. - Indian Converts, app. 280-292; Neal's N. E. I. 262-267; Magnalia, III. 200.

MAYHEW, JOHN, minister of Martha's Vineyard, the son of the preceding, died in 1689, aged Intro-Invhew While abated, is heart iccount, 0, 202-

of Marceeding, apanied sme the h Chrisho were eir lanand he
'he first
Mayhew
ludians ot hegan et of the

to the in his tabors, les, lodg-spending portions se of the into a God, imf Christ. ghty-two distinuity, priests, he credit in Nov., ing these

e gospel, ssive use-He left is grandin 1681, died in pleas for Matthew wit and who died a liberal ble learnim a setee would reach the reach the consented wn hands his famprogress on. — In-N. E. I.

na's Vine-689, aged

ty-one he was called to the ministry among the English at Tisbury, in the middle of the island. About the same time also he began to preach to the Indians. He taught them alternately in all their assemblies every week, and assisted them in the management of their ecclesiastical concerns. For some years he received but five pounds annually for his services, but he was content, being more desirons of saving souls from death than of accumulating wealth. He sought not glory of men, and willingly remained unknown, though he possessed talents which might have attracted applause. He died, leaving an Indian church of one hundred communicants, and several well-instructed Indian teachers in different congregations. In his last sickness he expressed his hope of salvation through the merits of Christ. - Indian Conrerts, Appendix.

MAYHEW, EXPERIENCE, minister on Martha's Vineyard, the eldest son of the preceding, died Nov. 29, 1758, aged 85. He was born Jan. 27, 1673. In March, 1694, about five years after the death of his father, he began to preach to the Indians, taking the oversight of five or six of their assemblies. The Indian language had been familiar to him from infancy, and he was emplayed by the commissioners of the society for propagating the gospel in New England to make a new version of the Psalms and of John, which work he executed with great accuracy in 1709. His sons were Jonathan, Joseph, Nathan, and Zechariah. He published a sermon, entitled, all mankind by nature equally under sin, 1724; Indian converts, 8vo. 1727, in which he gives an account of the lives of thirty Indian ministers, and about eighty Indian men, women, and youth, worthy of remembrance on account of their piety; a letter on the Lord's supper, 1741; grace defended, 8vo. 1744, in which he contends, that the offer of salvation, made to sinners in the gospel, contains in it a conditional promise of the grace given in regeneration. In this, he says, he differs from most in the Calvinistic scheme; yet he supports the doctrines of original sin, of eternal de-

Channey's Remarks on Landaff's Sermon, 23.

MAYHEW, ZECHARLAH, a missionary to the Indians, the son of the preceding, died March 6, 1800, aged 89. He was ordained at Martha's Vineyard Dec. 10, 1767, and devoted his life to the instruction of the remnants of the red men, being employed by the Massachusetts society for propagating the gospel among the Indians. In Oct. of this year there were at Gayhead people of color in all two hundred and twelve. Formerly the number of Indians was very large. The age attained by the Mayhews is remarkable: the first Thomas died, aged 90; Experience, 84; John, and saying, that it is of little consequence what a erees and of the sovereignty of God in the salvation of man. - Indian Conv. Appen. 306, 307;

He was born in 1652. At the age of twen-grandson of the first John, 89; his brother, Jereme he was called to the ministry among the miah, 85; Dr. Matthew, 85; Zechariah, 70.

MAYHEW, JONATHAN, D. D., minister in Boston, the son of Experience M., died July 9, 1766, aged 45. He was born at Martha's Vineyard Oct. 8, 1720, and was graduated at Harvadeollege in 1744, having made uncommon proficiency in literary pursuits. He was ordained the minister of the west church in Boston June 16, 1747, as successor of the first minister, Mr. Hooper, who had embraced the Episcopalian system. Here he continued till his sudden death. He was succeeded by Dr. Howard.

He possessed superior powers of mind, and in classical learning held an eminent rank. His writings evince a mind enpable of making the nicest moral distinctions, and of grasping the most abstruce metaphysical truths. Among the correspondents, which his literary character or his attachment to liberty gained him abroad, were Lardner, Benson, Kippis, Blackburne, and Hollis. From the latter he procured many rich donations for the college at Cambridge. Being a determined enemy to religious establishments, to test nets, and to eeclesiastical usurpation, he in 1763 engaged in a controversy with Mr. Apthorp respecting the proceedings of the society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts, of which Mr. Apthorp was a missionary. He contended, that the society was either deceived by the representations of the persons employed, or wes governed more by a regard to Episcopacy than to charity. He was an unshaken friend of civil and religious liberty, and the spirit which breathed in his writings, transfused itself into the minds of many of his fellow citizens, and had no little influence in producing the great events of the Revolution. He was the associate of Otis and other patriots in resisting the arbitrary claims of Great Britain. He believed it to be his duty to promote the happiness of his brethren in every possible way, and he therefore took a deep interest in political concerns. He possessed singular fortitude and elevation of mind. Unshackled by education, he thought for himself, and what he believed he was not afraid to avow. In his natural temper he was warm, and he had not always a full command of himself. His want of meekness and his pride are peculiarly displayed in his letter to John Cleaveland. He was, however, amiable in the several relations of life, endeared to his friends, ready to perform the offices of kindness, liberal, and charitable. Some of his contemporaries considered him as not perfectly evangelical in his sentiments. But, although he thought for himself, and wished others to enjoy the same liberty, yet he did not degrade his in-tellectual dignity by confounding the difference his sentiments, his charity would not admit of attenuation and expansion to such a degree as to embrace every one. His discourses were practiand to reach the heart. He was most interesting to the judicious and enlightened. He published seven sermons, 8vo. 1749, which for perspicuous and forcible reasoning have seldom been equalled; a discourse concerning unlimited submission, and non-resistance to the higher powers, preached Jan. 30, 1750, in which he did not speak of the on the death of the prince of Wales, 1751; election sermon, 1754; on the earthquakes; sermons on justification, 1755; two thanksgiving sermons for the success of his majesty's arms, 1758, and two on the reduction of Quebec, 1759; a thanksgiving sermon on the entire reduction of Canada; fire in Boston, 1760; on the death of George II.; striving to enter in at the straight gate explained and inculcated, 1761; Christian sobriety, in eight sermons to young men, with two thanksgiving sermons; observations on the charter and conduct of the society for propagating the gospel in foreign parts, 1763; defence of the preceding, 1764; second defence, 1765; letter of reproof to John Cleaveland; Dudleian lecture, 1765; thanksgiving sermon for the repeal of the stamp act, 1766. - Chauncy's and Gay's Sermons.

MAYHEW, MATTHEW, Dr., died in Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, in 1805, aged 86. He was an eminent physician, a senator, and judge of probate. He was a man of talents, of wit and humor; of benevolence and an exemplary Christian; and his end was peace. Nine children followed him to the grave. - Collections Hist. Society, 2d series, vol. III.

MAYHEW, ALLEN, Dr., died at Chilmark, Martha's Vineyard, in Dec., 1826, aged 59.

MAYHEW, WILLIAM, died in Edgartown in Dec., 1840, aged 92, the oldest person on Martha's Vineyard. He was a member of the convention of 1789.

MAYHEW, John, died in 1742, aged about 47. He graduated at Harvard in 1715. He wrote poetry, and published the conquest of Louisburg; also, in blank verse, Gallie perfidy, relating to the massacre by the savages of the garrison of fort William Henry, Aug. 9, 1757.

MAYNADIER, HENRY, colonel, died in Annapolis, Md., in 1849, aged 93. He served under Washington in the war. As a surgeon he extracted a ball from the leg of Lafayette at the battle of Brandywine.

MAYNARD, WILLIAM H., a lawyer, died of man believes. Though he was called liberal in college, New York, about 20,000 dollars, to found a law department.

MAYNARD, ELIPHAL, missionary to the Jews at Salonica, died Sept. 14, 1849. He sailed from cal and persuasive, calculated to inform the mind | Boston with Mr. Dodd in January, and arrived at S. April 2, and entered upon the study of the Hebrew, Spanish, Turkish, and Greek. Exposure on a journey to mount Olympus was the cause of his death. He was a native of Potsdam, N. Y.; his wife, Celestia A., was born in Parishville, N. Y.

MAYNARD, JOHN, judge, died in Auburn, royal martyr in the strain of the Episcopalians; N. Y., March 24, 1850, formerly of Seneca Falls, In 1826 he was a member of congress, supporting Mr. Adams. He was a judge of the supreme court of New York, and a judge of the court of appeals.

MAYO, JOHN, the first minister of the north church, Boston, died in 1662, or later. He came on the death of Stephen Sewall; on the great to this country in 1642, and was a pious and learned minister in Plymouth colony; about 1649 he went to Boston. He opposed the result of the synod respecting baptism in 1662.

MAYO, Mrs., died in Portsmouth in 1775. aged 106.

MAZZEI, PHILIP, a native of Tuscany, after engaging in commercial business in London, removed to Virginia. By that State he was sent on a secret mission to Europe, from which he returned in 1785. He afterwards lived in Poland in the service of the king. He died at Pisa, March 19, 1816, aged 86. A notorious letter of Mr. Jefferson was addressed to him. He published recherches historiques et politiques sur les Etats-Unis, 4 vols., 8vo., 1788.

McCALL, THOMAS H., D. D., died early in this century at Savannah. He graduated at Princeton in 1774. As a Presbyterian minister he was pre-eminent for science, classical learning, and eloquence, in the western counties of North Carolina. He was called to the presidency of the college at Wynnsborough, S. C., and thence, after several years, removed to Savannah, where he soon died.

McCALL, Hugh, major in the army of the United States, died at Savannah, Georgia, in 1824, aged 57. He published a history of Georgia, 2 vols., 8vo., 1816.

of

st:

te

E

an eo

di

m

co

McCALLA, Daniel, D. D., minister at Wappetaw, South Carolina, died April 6, 1809, aged 60. He was born at Neshaminy, Penn., in 1748, of pious parents, and graduated at Princeton in 1766. He afterwards taught an academy in Philadelphia, making himself great improvement in science, acquiring also a knowledge of the French, Spanish, and Italian languages. In 1774 he was ordained pastor of the churches of New Provithe cholera in 1832, aged 44. He graduated at dence and Charleston, Penn. In the war he went Williams in 1810. He bequeathed to Hamilton as a chaplain to Canada and was made a prisoner the Jews led from arrived y of the Exposwas the of Potsborn in to found

Auburn, ea Falls. supportsupreme court of

he north
He came ious and y; about the result 2.

in 1775,

any, after orden, rewas sent which he in Poland at Pisa, letter of He pubes sur les early in luated at minister learning, of North idency of d thence, ah, where ny of the a, in 1824, Georgia, at Wap-809, aged , in 1748, inceton in yet on Philrement in e French, 74 he was ew Provir he went prisoner he was confined in a prison ship. He returned on parole at the close of 1776. After his exchange he taught an academy in Hanover county. For twenty-one years he was the minister of the Congregational church at Wappetaw, "Christ's church parish," devoting himself chiefly to the critical study of the Scriptures in the original languages. The death of his daughter overwhelmed him, and gave new power to his disease. He died in calm submission. His wife was Elizaboth, daughter of Rev. John Todd of Virginia; his only child, who married Dr. John R. Witherspoon, died at the age of 26, leaving one son. He had a Latin bible of the ninth century, which he gave to his son-in-law, Rev. Dr. Witherspoon. He was an eminently learned, good, and useful man. His eloquence was almost unrivalled. He preferred the Congregational form of government as most consonant to the apostolical practice. He published a sermon at the ordination of James Adams. His sermons and essays, with an account of his life by Hollingshead, were published in 2 vols., 1810.

McClARY, Andrew, major, sell in the battle of Bunker Hill June 17, 1775, in the vigor of manhood. Born in Epsom, N. H., his parents were of Irish descent. In Dec., 1774, he accompanied Cilley in the capture of fort William and Mary. On hearing of the battle of Lexington he left his plough. At Warren's fall he succeeded to the command, and said he would not retire until he had given them one more shot; but at that moment a cannon-ball killed him. He was prompt, generous, and of a sound judgment.

McCLARY, JOHN, died at Epsom, N. H., in 1801, aged 82, a councillor. Gen. Michael Mc-Clary died at Epsom in 1824, aged 71.

McCLELLAND, SAMUEL, M. D., died at Philadelphia Jan. 4, 1854, aged 53; an eminent physician.

McCLURE, DAVID, D. D., minister of East Windsor, Conn., died June 25, 1820, aged 71. He was a native of Brookfield, Mass., and was graduated at Yale college in 1769. From Nov. 13, 1776, till Aug. 30, 1785, he was the minister of North Hampton, N. H., and in 1786 was installed at East Windsor. His wife was the daughter of Dr. Pomerey. His predecessors were T. Edwards and J. Perry. Dr. M. was a respected and useful minister, and a trustee of Dartmouth college. He published a sermon on the death of Dr. Pomeroy, 1784; of Erastus Wolcott; ordination of S. Griswold, 1790; with Dr. Parish, memoirs of E. Wheeloek, founder of Dartmouth college, 8vo., 1810; twenty-four sermons on the moral law, 8vo., 1818; an account of Windsor, in historical collections, v.

McCLURE, SAMUEL, died in Clark county, with Thomson at Trois Rivieres. For some months lillinois, Dec. 18, 1845, aged 97. A soldier, he he was confined in a prison ship. He returned on parole at the close of 1776. After his exchange he taught an academy in Hanover county. Indians, his four children killed, and his wife taken For twenty-one years he was the minister of the prisoner; but he recovered from his wounds.

McClure, George, general, died in Elgin, Illinois, in 1851, aged 80. He was an emigrant from Ireland to Bath, N. Y., where he lived from 1794 to 1835. He commanded a brigade in the war of 1812.

McClurg, James, M. D., a physician in Virginia, died in Richmond in 1825, aged 77. He was killed by his horses running away. He was the son of Dr. Walter M.; was educated at William and Mary college; then studied physic at Edinburgh and Paris. At his return about 1773 he settled at Williamsburg; about 1783 he removed to Richmond. He stood high in his profession. He published an essay on the bile, which has been much commended.— Cyelopædia of Amer. Literature.

Cyclopædia of Amer. Literature.

McCONAUGHY, DAVID, D. D., LL. D., died
Jan. 29, 1852, formerly president of Washington college at Washington, Penn.

McCORD, DAVID J., colonel, died in Columbia, S. C., May 12, 1855, aged 58. He was graduated at Columbia college, and was a lawyer of repute, editor of the statutes of the State, and one of the authors of Nott and McCord's reports. He also published two vols. of law and two of chancery reports; also South Carolina law journal one vol., with Col. Blanding; and wrote many pieces for the Southern review. — Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

McCORNISH, Andrew T., a minister for twenty-three years of the first Episcopal church at Washington, died in 1841, aged about 80.

McCRACKEN, J. L. II., u merchant of New York, died at Sierre Leone in 1853, aged 40. He was a literary man, and wrote for the magazines and journals. — Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

McCREA, JANE, murdered by the Indians in 1777, was the second daughter of James M., minister of Lamington, New Jersey, who died before the Revolution. After his death, she resided with her brother, Col. John M., of Albany, who removed in 1773 to the neighborhood of fort Edward. His house was in what is now Northumberland, on the west side of the Hudson, three miles north of fort Miller falls. In July or Aug., 1777, being on a visit to the family of Mrs. Mc-Neil, near fort Edward, at the close of the week, she was asked to remain until Monday. On Sunday morning, when the Indians came to the house, she concealed herself in the cellar; but they dragged her out by the hair, and, placing her on a horse, proceeded on the road towards Sandy Hill. They soon met another party of Indians, returning from Argyle, where they had killed the family of Mr. Bains; these Indians to the British camp, and one of them struck her with a tomahawk and tore off her scalp. This is the account given by her nephew. The account of Mrs. McNeil is, that her lover, anxious for her safety, employed two Indians, with the promise of a barrel of rum, to bring her to him; and that in consequence of their dispute for the right of conducting her, one of them murdered her. Gates, in his letter to Burgoyne of Sept. 2, says, she "was dressed to receive her promised husband." Her brother, on hearing of her fate, sent his family the next day to Albany, and, repairing to the American camp, buried his sister with one Lieutenant Van Vechten, three miles south of fort Edward. She was twenty-three years of age, of an amiable and virtuous character, and highly esteemed by all her acquaintance. It was said and believed, that she was engaged in marriage to Cant. David Jones of the British army, a loyalist, who survived her only a few years, and died, as was supposed, of grief for her loss. Her nephew, Col. James McCrea, lived at Saratoga in 1823.

McCREERY, John, minister of White Clay Creek, Delaware, died in 1800, aged 64, having been pastor thirty years.

McCREERY, John, a Virginia poet, died at Richmond in 1825.

McCULLOCH, JAMES H., died at Baltimore in 1836, aged 80, for thirty years the collector of the port. He was a patriotic, respected citizen.

McCULLOCH, THOMAS, D. D., died at Pietou in Nova Scotia, Sept., 1843, aged 67. He was long known as one of the leading minds of the country where he lived. He had great learning, and profoundly investigated the mysteries of nature.

McCULLOCH, ROBERT, a patriot of the Revolution, died in Marcellus, N. Y., Dec. 16, 1855, aged 96. He was at the surrender of Burgoyne. During his long life he never had occasion to call a physician. By mistaking the door he fell into his cellar and was instantly killed. Multitudes attended the funeral of a man of uprightness and kindness, who had lived to see the increase of his country's population from three to nearly thirty millions, and who was one of the noble men whose toils and courage established our national independence.

McDANIEL, ARCHIBALD, died in Bladen county, North Carolina, in 1834, aged 101.

McDONALD, FLORA, an early settler of Fayetteville, N. C., died in her native Isle of Skye, March 5, 1790, aged about 62. When unmarried she assisted the pretender, Charles Edward, to escape after the battle of Culloden in the dress of a woman, in 1746. She married Allen McDonald, and with him emigrated to North Carolina in 1775. In the war her husband the anniversary of the repeal of the stamp act in disapproved the purpose of taking Miss McCrea | espoused the wrong side, and was taken prisoner and sent to Halifax. Dr. Johnson was a visitor at her house in Scotland. Her son John, a writer on tacties and the telegraph, died in 1831, aged

> McDONALD, John, a Presbyterian minister. died at Albany in 1821.

McDONALD, John (or Daniel), D. D., professor of languages at Geneva college, New York, died in 1830, aged 44.

McDONALD, DONALD, born in Scotland in 1722, died in Lynn, Mass., Sept. 4, 1830, aged 108 years.

McDONALD, WILLIAM, general, died at Baltimore Aug. 18, 1845, aged 86; a soldier of the Revolution, and long an enterprising mer-

McDONELL, ALEXANDER, D. D., bishop of Kingston, U. C., died Jan. 14, 1840, aged 80.

McDONOGII, John, a merchant, died in New Orleans Oct. 26, 1850, aged 72. He was a man of immense wealth, of which he gave equal portions to New Orleans and Baltimore, to establish free schools and an asylum for the poor; also a large sum to the American colonization society.

McDONOUGII, THOMAS, commodore, died Nov. 10, 1825, aged about 39. He was the sor of a physician in New Castle county, Delaware, who was a major in the war, and died in 1796. After the death of his father he obtained a midshipman's warrant and went in our fleet to the Mediterranean. In the war of 1812, at the age of 28, he commanded the American forces on lake Champlain. His own ship, the Saratoga, mounted twenty-six guns; the Confiance, the ship of the British Capt. Downie, mounted thirty-six. In the battle of Sept. 11, 1814, after an action of two hours and twenty minutes, he obtained a complete victory, which he announced to the department of war as follows: "The Almighty has been pleased to grant us a signal victory on lake Champlain, in the capture of one frigate, one brig, and two sloops of war of the enemy." The State of New York gave him one thousand acres of land on the bay in which the battle was fought. His residence was Middletown, Conn. His wife, who was Miss Shaler of that town, died in August, while he was absent. He was tall and dignified, of light hair, complexion, and eyes.

McDOUGALL, ALEXANDER, major-general, died in June, 1786. He was the son of a Scotchman, who sold milk in the city of New York, nor was he ashamed to acknowledge that, when a boy, he assisted his father. He proved himself a zealous whig before the beginning of the war. In 1770, when he was a printer, he was in prison in New York for a libel on the royal party of the colonial government; and on the 19th of March, ken prisoner was a visitor olm, a writer 1 1831, aged an minister,

D. D., pro-, New York,

Scotland in I, 1830, aged

al, died at a soldier of prising mero., bishop of aged 80. ant, died in

2. He was a ne gave equal nore, to establic the poor; a colonization

nodore, died

was the son ity, Delaware, died in 1796. tained a midr fleet to the 12, at the age an forces on the Saratoga, fiance, the ship ted thirty-six. er an action of ne obtained a ced to the de-Almighty has ictory on lake e frigate, one enemy." The housand acres tle was fought. nn. His wife, lied in August, and dignified, major-general,

on of a ScotchNew York, nor that, when a oved himself a
of the war. In
as in prison in al party of the 9th of March,
e stamp act in 1766, when three hundred whigs met at Hampden hall, opposite the common, or the park, before they sat defer them are so dinner, with the liberty pole before them are sufficiently with Capt. McDougall in the new gaol. In Aug., 1776, he was appointed brigadier, and major-general in Oct., 1777. He commanded in the action at White Plains and was engaged in the battle of Germantown. In 1781 he was elected a delegate to congress; he was afterwards of the senate of New York. His only daughter married John Lawrence.

McDOUGAL, ALEXANDER, died March 3, 1841, aged 101, in Hamilton county, Ohio. He was a Baptist; and a soldier of the Revolutionary McDOWALL, John Robert, died in New York, in 1836, aged 35. He was the founder of the moral reform societies, and editor of McDowall's journal for the promotion of purity of morals.

McDOWELL, SAMUEL, colonel, died near Danville, Ky., Oct. 25, 1817, aged 84; one of the first settlers of the State. He was circuit judge; a man of industry and integrity, patriotic and pious. He left more than one hundred descendants.

McDOWELL, James, governor of Virginia, died near Lexington, Aug. 23, 1851, aged 55. He was a descendant of the Scotch and Irish of Rockbridge; and graduated at Princeton in 1816. He was for years a member of congress, and a distinguished orator. As a friend of temperance, he did not offer intoxicating drink at his table. He was a member of the church, and one who did not neglect family prayer. His religious life commenced in the revival of 1838, soon after the conversion of his wife.

McDOWELL, WILLIAM A., D. D., died at Morristown, N. J., Sept. 18, 1851. He lived in Lamington, and was a learned theologian, and an impressive preacher.

McDUFFIE, George, governor of South Carolina, died March 11, 1851. He was many years a member of the house and senate of the United States, and governor from 1834 to 1836; a State rights man, and very zealous for the interests of slavery. The slaves on his estate were sold, in 1856, being two hundred and ten in number, for 140,000 dollars. They were thus sold to a western planter for about 700 dollars cach, with the condition that they should not be separated.

MCELROY, WILLIAM C., president of Danville college, Va., died in 1837.

McEWEN, John, minister at Salem, S. C., died in 1833, aged 34.

McFARLAND, Asa, D. D., died at Concord, Revolution, and a N. H., in 1827. He was a graduate of Dart-mouth in 1793; ordained at Concord in March, McINTIRE, Mr. 1798; and continued in office till, by reason of a in 1811, aged 106.

palsy, he resigned in March, 1825. He was many years a trustee of the college, and president of the State missionary society. He published an oration, 1802; historical view of heresies, 1806.

McFARLAND (or McFarlane), John, D. D., died in Paris, Ky., in Aug., 1828. He was of the Presbyterian church.

McGEE, John, a Methodist minister in Smith county, Tenn., died in 1836, aged 71.

McGREGORE, JAMES, first minister of Londonderry, N. H., died in 1729, aged 52. He had the care of a Scotch Presbyterian society in the north of Ireland. The sufferings of the Protestants in that country and the inextinguishable desire of religious liberty impelled him, with a number of other ministers and a part of their congregations, to seek an asylum in America. Ho arrived at Boston with about one hundred families. Oct. 14, 1718. In the following year sixteen families settled on a tract of good land near Haverhill, which was called Nutfield, and which they named Londonderry. Mr. McGregore, who since his arrival had preached at Dracut, was called to be their minister. He was a wise, affectionate, and faithful guide to his people both in civil and religious concerns. They brought with them every thing necessary for the manufacture of linen. They also introduced the culture of potatoes, which were first planted in the garden of Nathaniel Walker of Andover .- Belknap's N. II. 11. 55-37, 41.

McGREGORE, DAVID, minister of Londonderry, N. II., son of the preceding, died May 30, 1777, aged 66, in the 42d year of his ministry. He left eight children. One of his daughters married Col. Robert Means, who died in Amherst in 1823, leaving two sons and three daughters, who married Jeremiah Mason, Jesse Appleton, and Caleb Ellis. With eminent abilities he was an excellent Evangelical preacher. He was also a zealous and intrepid assertor of the rights and liberties of America, and died in the full persuasion that the cause of his country would triumph, and that here the church of God would flourish in its purity. He published professors warned of their danger, 1741; on the trial of the spirits, in answer to Caldwell, 1742; the believer's all secured, 1747; on the death of J. Moorhead, 1774.

McGREGORE, DAVID, minister of Falmouth, Me., died Oct. 18, 1845, aged 74. He was a deseendant of the minister of Londonderry. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1799, and was first the minister of Bedford, N. H., then of F.

McGUIN, Samuel, died at Andover, N. H., Feb. 1, 1845, aged 110. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and a pensioner, who was called the Cathness veteran.

McINTIRE, Mrs., died in Goffstown, N. H.,

McINTOSII, JOHN MORE, came from Scotland to Georgia in 1735, with one hundred followers, and settled at Darien, in McIntosh county. He drew up a protest - and was the first signer of it - against the introduction of African slaves into Georgia. Had the views of this enlightened and benevolent man been regarded, to what a comparative height of prosperity and dignity would the State of Georgia have attained? Of his sons and grandsons, seven bore commissions in the army of the Revolution. - Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

McINTOSII, LACHLAN, general, an officer of the Revolution, died at Savannah Feb. 20, 1806, aged 80. He was one of the early settlers of Georgia, and the principal military officer of the province. Sept. 16, 1776, he was appointed brigadier-general. Having murdered Mr. Gwinnett in a duel, the event, instead of banishing him from the army, was the cause of his removal to the north. Having served till the end of the war, he was a member of congress in 1784. In 1785 he was one of the commissioners to treat with the southern Indians.

McINTOSH, John, general, was an officer of the Georgia line in 1775, and served during the war with unblemished honor. In 1814 he commanded the Georgia division, which went to Pensacola. He died at his plantation in McIntosh county, Nov. 12, 1826, aged about 70. He was a sincere Christian.

McINTOSH, WILLIAM, general, an Indian chief, was one of the three great chiefs of the Creeks; the others were Big Warrior, and Little Prince, who died in April, 1828. - He was about six feet in height, dignified, generous, brave, and temperate; and the only chief who could converse in English with facility. About the year 1826 he was killed by his tribe on the charge of treachery, in bargaining away their territory to the whites. A chief, who assisted in killing him, made this speech: "Brothers! McIntosh is dead. He broke the law of the nation, -the law which he made himself. His face was turned to the white men, who wish to take our land from us. His back was to his own people. His ears were shut to the cries of our women and children. His heart was estranged from us. The words of his talk were deceitful. They came to us like the sickly breeze, that flies over the marsh of the journal his name was omitted. The subsequent great river."

McINTOSII, Duncan, a noble philanthropist, a native of Scotland and an American citizen, died at Aux Cayes in Nov., 1820. At the Revolution in St. Domingo he was living there, a merchant of immense wealth acquired by trade; he might have withdrawn, and secured his property; but he remained, and sacrificed his estate and risked his life in the sacred cause of humanity. broken their chains and were devastating the island and thirsting for the blood of the whole French population, and when all were flying for safety, there was found one man, who remained as the preserver and benefactor of the miserable. With his gold he bought the victims out of the hands of the executioners; others he rescued by force. In defiance of the decree of death against those who should conceal the French, he maintained them three months in the places where they were concealed. More than once was he thrown into a dungeon; but on recovering his freedom he engaged with new ardor in the work of benevolence. During the revolutionary storm, of seven or eight months' continuance, he was able, by his indefatigable exertions, to save, in vessels which he freighted for that purpose, more than nine hundred men and fifteen hundred women and children. While the heart is susceptible of the emotions of gratitude and admiration towards men of great virtues and heroic benevolence, the name of McIntosh will not be forgotten. - Portfolio, new series, I. 285-297.

McINTOSII, Ann, Mrs., died in McIntosh county, Georgia, in 1833, aged 100. Her parents, before her birth, came to Georgia with Gen. Oglethorpe.

McINTYRE, John, a Presbyterian minister, died in Robinson, S. C., Nov. 17, 1852, aged 102. McJIMSEY, John, D. D., died in Newburgh, N. Y., Aug. 27, 1854, aged 82: he was of Craw-

ci

li

tl

fc A

at

B

H

17

no

th

ford, Orange county. McKEAN, Thomas, governor of Pennsylvania, a patriot of the Revolution, died June 24, 1817, aged 83. He was the son of William M., an Irishman, who settled in New London, Penn.; and was born March 19, 1734. He was educated in the excellent school of Dr. Allison, at New London. Having studied law in Newcastle, he settled in that county. He was a member of the legisture in 1762; of the congress of 1765; and of that of 1774, having his residence at this period at Philadelphia. He remained in congress as a delegate from Delaware from 1774 to 1783; yet was he at the same time chief justice of Pennsylvania from 1777, being claimed by both States. He was present in congress July 4, 1776, and voted for the Declaration of Independence, and signed it as engrossed, Aug. 2d, yet in the printed signers, who were not present July 4th, were Mr. Thornton, B. Rush, G. Clymer, J. Smith, G. Taylor, and G. Ross. As a member of the convention of Pennsylvania, he urged the adoption of the constitution. In 1799 he succeeded Mr. Mifflin as governor, and remained in office till 1808, when he was succeeded by Mr. Snyder. In his politics he accorded with Jefferson. After the close of 1808 he passed his days in retirement. When four hundred thousand ignorant slaves had As chief justice for twenty-two years he was very

ing the e whole ying for emained iserable. t of the cued by ı against e maines where was he ering his the work ry storm, , ho was save, in se, more

McIntosh er parents, with Gen.

dred wo-

ısceptible

ration to-benevo-

forgotten.

minister, aged 102. Yewburgh, s of Crawınsylvania, 24, 1817,

m M., an enn.; and ducated in New Lonhe settled the legis-5; and of his period ngress as a 1783; yet f Pennsyloth States. 1776, and dence, and the printed subsequent , were Mr. th, G. Tayhe convendoption of d Mr. Mife till 1808, ler. In his After the retirement.

he was very eminent. His decisions were accurate and profound. He once had occasion to say, "No act of my public life was ever done from a corrupt motive, nor without a deliberate opinion that the act was proper and lawful in itself." - Goodric).

McKÉAN, Joseph, D. D., LL. D., professor of rhetoric and oratory at Harvard college, died March 17, 1818, aged 41. He was born at Ipswich April 19, 1776. His father was Wm. M., a native of Glasgow; his mother was a daughter of Dr. Joseph Manning of Ipswich. Having graduated at Harvard college in 1794, he for a few years taught a school in Ipswich and the academy in Berwick. In Nov., 1797, he was ordained as the minister of Milton; his infirm health induced him to ask a dismission, Oct. 3, 1804. He afterwards engaged in the business of instruction at Boston. He was inaugurated Oct. 31, 1809, as professor of oratory at Cambridge, in which office he was industrious and punctual. It was with him a maxim, that what was worth doing at all was worth doing well. He died at Havana, whither he went for his health in consequence of a pulmonary complaint, trusting in the mercy of God through the merits of his Son. His wife was a daughter of Maj. Swasey of Ipswich. Prof. McKean possessed a powerful mind, and was an impressive orator. He was an efficient member of the historical society. He published a valedictory sermon, 1804; two fast sermons on friendship and patriotism, 1814; at the ordination of J. B. Wight, 1815; of N. L. Frothingham, 1815; on the death of John Warren, 1815; at the installation of Dr. Richmond, 1817; memoir of John Eliot, in hist. collections; addition to Wood's continuation of Goldsmith's

McKEAN, Joseph W., M. D., died in Boston in 1839, aged 39. He was the son of Professor M., and graduated at Harvard in 1819. At the medical college of Vermont he gave a course of lectures. He was found dead in his chair.

McKEE, Robert, Episcopal minister, died

at Albany, N. Y., in 1840, aged 41. Mckeen, Joseph, D. D., first president of Bowdoin college, died July 15, 1807, aged 49. He was born at Londonderry, N. H., Oct. 15, 1757. His immediate ancestors were from the north of Ireland, though of Scotch descent. He was graduated at Dartmouth college in 1774, having evinced while in that seminary a decided predilection for mathematical pursuits. After eight years' employment in a school in his native town, and after being some time an assistant in the academy at Andover, he directed his attention to theology, and was ordained successor of Dr. Willard, as pastor of the church in Beverly, tion and usefulness seventeen years. Being cho- Alexander Phænix.

sen president of Bowdoin college, which had been incorporated eight years, but had not yet been carried into operation, he was inducted into that important office Sept. 2, 1802. He died of the dropsy, leaving the seminary, over which he had presided, in a very flourishing condition. His widow died in 1834. He possessed a strong and discriminating mind, his manners were conciliating though dignified, and his spirit mild though firm and decided. He was indefatigable in his exertions to promote the interests of science and religion. He was respectable for his learning and exemplary for his Christian virtues, being pious without ostentation, and adhering to evangelical truth without bigotry or superstition. He published a sermon at the fast, 1793; at the ordination of Rufus Anderson, 1794; of A. Moore, 1796; two discourses on the fast, 1798; at the election, 1800; at the fast, 1801; and some papers in the transactions of the American academy; his inaugural address, with Mr Jenks' eulogy, 1802.

McKEEN, Joseph, LL. D., died in New York April 12, 1856, aged 64. Born in Vermont, he came to New York in 1818, and was for some years a private teacher, then principal of the school in Mott street, then county superintendent. He also edited an educational journal, and was zealously engaged in the Sunday-school cause; being highly esteemed for his ability, diligence, and efficiency, and for the amenities of his character.

Mckemie, Francis, the first Presbyterian preacher in the city of New York, was imprisoned by the governor and company, for his preaching in a private house in Jan., 1707. He was confined two months before he was admitted to bail; the costs amounted to 200 or 300 dollars. The next year Mr. Anderson was settled in Wall street church. - Amer. Quar. Register, VIII. 323. MCKENDREE, WILLIAM, senior Methodist bishop, died in Tennessee March 5, 1835, aged 77. McKINLEY, John, judge of the supreme court of the United States, died in 1852. He was born in Virginia. McKINLEY, DANIEL, D. D., died at Chambersburg, Penn., Dec. 7, 1855. McKINSTRY, John, minister of Ellington, Conn., died in 1754, aged 77. He was a Scotchman, graduated at Edinburgh in 1712. He was the pastor of Sutton, Mass., from 1720 to 1728; then of Ellington from 1730 to 1746, when he resigned his place.

McKINSTRY, JOHN, minister in Springfield, Mass., son of the preceding, died Nov. 9, 1813, aged nearly 90. He graduated at Yale in 1746; was ordained at Chicopee, the fifth parish in Springfield, in 1752; and was dismissed on acin May, 1785. Here he continued with reputa- count of ill health in 1789. His successor was

McKNIGHT, CHARLES, M. D., a physician, Abeel, Rogers, Miller, and Romeyn, and Dr. Maof Irish descent, died in 1790, aged 40. He was born in Cranbury, New Jersey, Oct. 10, 1750, and graduated at Princeton college in 1771. He studied medicine with Dr. Shippen. In the Revolutionary war he was the senior surgeon of the flying hospital in the middle department. After the war he settled in New York, where he delivered lectures on anatomy and surgery. His wife was Mrs. Litchfield, daughter of John M. Scott. He published a paper in memoirs of London medical society, IV.

McLEAN, LAUGHLIN, Dr., a Scotchman, came to this country about 1740, and died at an advanced age. He lived in Wethersfield and Hartford, and was an ornament of his profession.

McLEAN, ALEXANDER, a faithful missionary in Maine, died at Neweastle Jan. 11, 1808, aged 63. Born in the island of Skye in Scotland, he was educated at Aberdeen. He came to this country in 1770, and was settled in Bristol, Me., from 1773 to about 1798, when he became a missionary, employed by the society for propagating the gospel. In its service he toiled zealously in the destitute settlements of the district of Maine during the rest of his life. He was plain and earnest in his preaching, zealous for the ancient doctrines of grace. The people of his first charge begged his body, and he was buried at Bristol. They remembered with gratitude his labors.

McLEAN, John, a merchant of Boston, died in Oct., 1823, aged 64. He once failed for a large sum, and was reduced to the necessity of resorting to the bankrupt act. Afterwards, while he was in Italy for his health, he engaged in such commercial pursuits as enabled him to acquire a large fortune. Having thus the ability, he honorably paid all his old creditors, although they had no legal claims upon him. In his last will, after providing for his wife, Ann Amory, he bequeathed the large sum of 100,000 dollars to the Massachusetts general hospital in Boston; also 50,000 dollars to the hospital and to Harvard university, on the death of an individual.

McLEAN, FERGUSON, died at Clear Creek, Warren county, Ohio, in Feb., 1837, aged 91. He was the father of Judge McLean, and a pioneer in the settlement of the Miami valley, removing to that place in 1797. His son William, a member of congress, died in 1839.

McLEOD, ALEXANDER, D. D., pastor of the first reformed Presbyterian church in New York, died Feb. 17, 1833, aged 58. He was the son of Rev. Niel M. of St. Kilda. He came to this country at the age of eighteen, and was educated at Union college, Schenectady; with a minister in the neighborhood he studied theology; settled in early life in New York, he formed the clerical a soldier under Washington. association with his brethren, Livingston, Linn, son. He married in 1805 Mary Anne Agnew. the daughter of one of his elders; his son, John N. M., D. D., succeeded him. A synod was formed, of three presbyteries, the northern, middle, and southern, in 1809. His disease was an enlargement of the heart and dropsy in the ehest. In his last sickness he was peaceful and happy; he said, with tears, "I have always loved to preach Christ." He was a powerful preacher. a man of learning and wisdom, and a devout Christian. He published negro slavery unjustifiable, 1802; Messiah, 1803; on the ministry, 1808; eatechism, 1807; life and power of godliness, a series of sermons, 1816; he assisted Dr. Mason in the Christian magazine, and wrote the articles on the atonement; lectures on the book of Revelations, 1814; sermons on the war, 1815; sermons on true godliness; articles for the evangelical guardian and review, 1817-18; reformation principles; and other pieces. A large memoir of him, by Dr. S. B. Wylie, was published in 1855, with a fine portrait.

McLEOD, John, died in Washington in 1846, aged about 80. Born in Ireland, he was for forty years a teacher in Washington.

MCMAHON, BARTHOLOMEW A., assistant minister of St. Peter's church, New York, died July 18, 1800, aged 44. A native of Ireland, he lived nearly twenty years in Italy; but on his return was compelled to flee to this country for safety. In the epidemic of 1799 he remained at his post, ministering to the sick. He published in Italy several books in the Italian language.

McMAHON, BERNARD, a gardener and florist, founded in 1809 a botanic garden near Philadelphia, and died in Sept., 1816. He published the American gardener's calendar, 1806.

McMANUS, John, died at Brunswick, Maine, in 1843, aged 83. He was at the surrender of Burgoyne, and received at Cherry Valley a wound which made him lame for life.

McMILLAN, WILLIAM, D. D., died at New Athens, Ohio, April 11, 1832, aged 52.

McMILLAN, JOHN, D. D., died at Canonsburg, Penn., Nov. 16, 1833, aged 80.

McMURRAY, WILLIAM, D. D., died at New York Sept. 24, 1835, aged 50. He was of the Dutch church.

McNAIR, ALEXANDER, governor, died in Missouri in May, 1826. He was among the first American settlers in Missouri, and took the field in defence of the frontiers against the savages. He held various offices, and an important station in the Indian department. He died of a prevailing influenza.

McNEIL, HENRY, general, died in Clinton county, N. Y., May 16, 1844, aged 81. He was

MCNEIL, WILLIAM G., general, died in Brock-nd Dr. Mane Agnew, s son, John synod was thern, midase was an psy in the eaceful and lways loved d preacher, a devout ry unjustifiistry, 1808;

godliness, a Dr. Mason the articles ok of Reve-5; sermons evangelical nation prinmemoir of ed in 1855, ton in 1846, was for forty ssistant mink, died July and, he lived n his return ry for safety. at his post, hed in Italy

r and florist. ar Philadelublished the wiek, Maine, surrender of lley a wound

lied at New 2.

at Canons-

lied at New was of the died in Misng the first ook the field the savages. rtant station d of a pie-in Clinton 1. He was

ed in Brook-

Point, he devoted himself for years to the pursuits of an engineer, building railroads and the dry dock at Brooklyn.

MCNUTT, ALEXANDER G., governor of Mississippi, died in De Soto county, in 1848, aged 47. He was born in Virginia, and graduated at Washington college. He was chosen governor in 1837 and 1839. It is mentioned, to his honor, that nlthough in earlier life he was intemperate, yet that he corrected his vices and gained general esteem. As a stump orator he had no superior.

McPHEETERS, WILLIAM, D. D., died at Raleigh, N. C., in 1842, aged 64. He was a theologian, a scholar, and a successful teacher.

McPHERSON, general, died in Philadelphia in 1813. He fought under Lafayette in Virginia,

in 1781.

McSPARRAN, James, D. D., an eloquent Episcopal minister in Rhode Island, died at his house in South Kingston Dec. 1, 1757. His family was Scotch, of the north of Ireland. He came as a missionary to Narraganset, as Kingston was called, in 1721. There was in 1720 no Episcopal church in Providence. Mr. Gay was his predecessor, employed about 1717 by the society for propagating the gospel. He published a sermon on the Christian priesthood, and a historical tract, entitled, America dissected, 1752. -Updike's Hist. Narrative; Cyel. of Amer. Lit.

McVAY, Hugh, governor of Alabama, died in 1851, aged 84. For thirty years he was connected with the legislation of Alabama.

McWILLIAMS, ALEXANDER, M. D., died at Washington March 31, 1850, aged 75. He was in the navy from 1801 to 1806; afterwards a physician in Washington; the founder of the Columbian institute; a man generous and worthy,

MEACHAM, Joseph, minister of Coventry, Conn., died in 1752, aged 66. Born in Enfield, Conn., he graduated at Harvard in 1710, and was settled in 1814. - Sprague's Annals.

MEACHAM, J. B., for thirty years a Baptist colored minister at St. Louis, died in his pulpit Feb. 26, 1854. He was a man of eminent piety and usefulness.

MEACHAM, James, member of eongress, died at Middlebury, Vt., Aug. 23, 1856, from congestion of the brain and lungs. · He was for a while the minister of New Haven, Vt., and a professor in Middlebury college. On the announcement of his death to the house of representatives, they adjourned for the day, neglecting the public business, yet receiving their pay, amounting to 2400 dollars or more, for doing nothing. Such a custom of adjournment for the death of a member does not exist in the British house of commons.

MEAD, JOHN, general, died at Meadville, Penn., in 1816, aged 64.

lyn, N. Y., in 1853, aged 51. Educated at West | died Oct. 26, 1831, aged 39. He was born at Meredith, N. H., in 1792, and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1818. His father was a Baptist. He studied theology at Andover, was ordained at Brunswick in Dec., 1822, and dismissed in 1829. After toiling for a few months as an agent of the temperance and peace societies, he was installed Aug. 18, 1830, at East Hartford, Conn., where he died of the typhus fever. His mind was vigorous, and he was conspicuous for industry. He always kept several sermons on hand, which he had never preached, and prepared his discourses for the Sabbath before the end of the week. While on a journey to Maine a short time before he died, he wrote five or six sermons. He died in peace and hope. His son, John Mooney, nearly five years old, a child of great promise and undoubted piety, died April 8, 1831. He published a discourse before the Cumberland conference, 1826; a call to the temperate, 1827; a sermon before the Hartford county peace society, 1831; a memoir of John Mooney Mead, pp. 92, 1831.

MEAD, STITH, a Methodist minister, died in Amherst, Virginia, in 1834, aged 67.

MEAD, SHADRACH, Dr., died at Greenwich, Conn., Sept. 16, 1856, aged 86. He was a graduate of Yale in 1779; and a devoted Christian. MEADE, WILLIAM, M. D., a mineralogist, died in Newburgh, N. Y., Aug. 19, 1833.

MEANS, ROBERT, colonel, died at Amherst, N. II., in 1823, aged 80. Born in Ireland, he came to this country in 1796, and acquired a large property as a merchant. His wife was Mary, daughter of Rev. David McGregore. His sons were Thomas, David M., and Robert; and of his daughters, Mary married Jeremiah Mason; Elizabeth married Jesse Appleton; and Nancy married Caleb Ellis, also Amos Lawrence.

MEANS, Robert, died at Columbia, S. C., Jan. 20, 1836. He was the minister of Fairfield district. He published several sermons, and an essay on the Pentateuch, in answer to Dr. Thomas Cooper.

MEEKER, JOTHAM, a missionary among the Choctaws for thirty years, died Jan. 11, 1855, at Ottawa. He died in peace, offering a prayer, clasping his hands across his breast, and closing his eyes.

MEETZ, J. Y., a minister, died at Lexington district, S. C., in 1833, aged 76.

MEGAPOLENSIS, JOHN, JR., a minister of the Dutch church in New York, died in 1669, or before. He came from Holland at the age of 39, and took charge of the Dutch church at Rensselaerswyck, or Albany, in 1642. He resigned his charge in July, 1649, and was settled in New Amsterdam, or New York. In 1652 he was joined by a colleague, Samuel Drisius; and by MEAD, Asa, minister of Brunswick, Maine, his own son, Samuel, M. D., in 1662. The inhabitants in New York were fifteen hundred in 1664, in 2 hist. coll. II. 227-247; and a summary of when the city surrendered to Col. Nicolls. He wrote an account of the Mohawk Indians, 1644. A translation is in Hazard, I. 517-526.

MEIGS, RETURN JONATHAN, colonel, a hero of the Revolution, died in 1823, aged 82. He was probably a descendant of John M., who lived in Weymouth in 1641; and was born in Middletown, Conn., in 1740. In 1775, immediately after the battle of Lexington, he marched a company of light infantry to the neighborhood of Boston. With the rank of major, he accompanied Arnold in his march through the wilderness of Maine in order to attack Quebec. His printed journal gives the best account of this expedition. In the assault on Quebec by Montgomery and Arnold, at the close of the year, he was made a prisoner, with Captains Morgan and Dearborn. In 1776 he was exchanged and returned home, and the next year was appointed colonel. His expedition to Long Island in May, 1777, was one of the most brilliant enterprises of the war, for which he received, Aug. 3, the thanks of congress and a sword. At the head of a few companies he attacked the British troops at Sagg Harbor with fixed bayonets, made ninety prisoners, and destroyed twelve vessels and much forage, without the loss of a man. In 1779 he commanded a regiment under Wayne at the capture of Stony Point, and was honorably mentioned by Washington. After the war, about 1788 or 1789, he was one of the first settlers of the wilderness of Ohio. For the first emigrants he drew up a system of regulations, which were posted on a large oak near the confluence of the Ohio and Muskingum rivers, the bark of the tree being cut away for the space of the sheet. Often was the venerable oak consulted. He was the agent for Indian affairs as early as 1816. He died at the Cherokee agency. The true origin of his name is of more interest than the reason why Mr. Preserved Fish was so called. His father lived in Middletown, Conn. When a young man, seeking a companion for life, he addressed a fair Quaker at Middlefield, in his neighborhood. He was unsuccessful, and repeatedly rejected. She said, "Nay, Jonathan, I respect thee much; but I cannot marry thee, for better is a dinner of herbs with contentment, than a stalled ox and contention therewith." But at length, as Jonathan had some spirit and wisdom as well as love, he told Ruth plainly it was his last visit. As he slowly mounted his horse the relenting lady beckoned to him to stop, saying sweetly, "Return, Jonathan! return, Jonathan!" These, the happiest words he ever heard, induced him to call his first-1 1 son Return Jonathan. His journal of the expedition to Quebec, from Sept. 9, 1775, to Jan. 1, 1776, is published in American remembrancer for 1776; ated at Harvard college in 1770; was ordained

it in Maine hist. coll. I.

18

P

de

17

de

lee

of

M

51 ha

po

рu

M

Ma

17

ภาเ

the

Un

a S

In

by

ret

doi

cisi

of

of

age

and pra

var

chie

tyr'

Ļit

Sep

All

min

Jea

ate

in I

one

Hе

and citiz

who

to n

mer

The

dist

1850 goo

N

I

MEIGS, RETURN JONATHAN, governor of Ohio, son of the preceding, died in 1825. He succeeded Mr. Huntington as governor in 1810, and remained in office until he was appointed postmaster-general, in the place of Mr. Granger. in Feb., 1814. He was succeeded by John Mc-Lean in 1823. He died at Marietta.

MEIGS, John, major, died at New Hartford in 1826, aged 75; an officer of the Revolution, in service seven years.

MELCHER, John, died at Portsmouth, N. H., June 9, 1850, aged 90. He was a printer. He commenced the Portsmouth Journal in 1793; he printed the State laws and many books.

MELISH, John, a geographer, was a native of Scotland; came to this country in 1809; and died at Philadelphia, Dec. 30, 1822, aged 52. He published travels in the United States, and in Great Britain and Canada, 2 vols. 8vo., 1812; a description of the roads, etc., 1814; traveller's directory, 1815; description of the United States, 1816; universal school geography and atlas; the necessity of protecting manufactures, 1818; maps of Pennsylvania and of the United States; information to emigrants, 1819.

MELLEN, JOHN, minister of Sterling, Mass., died July 4, 1807, aged 85. He was born at Hopkinton, March 25, 1722, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1741. He was ordained pastor of the church in Lancaster, now Sterling, Dec. 19, 1744. His connection with his society was dissolved in consequence of disputes, occasioned principally by his endeavors to maintain what he considered the order of the churches. In 1784 he became the minister of Hanover, Mass., where he continued to discharge the duties of the sacred office until Feb., 1805, when his infirmities induced him to relinquish it. He soon removed to Reading, and closed a long and useful life in the house of his daughter, the relict of Caleb Prentiss. His sons were John; Henry, a lawyer and poet, who died at Dover, N. H., July 31, 1809, aged 51; and Prentiss, chief justice of Maine, who was born in 1764. He was respectable in his profession, and many had an affectionate remembrance of his faithful labors as a minister of the gospel. He published a sermon at the ordination of J. Palmer, 1753; at a general muster, 1756; on the mortal sickness among his people, 1756; on the conquest of Canada, 1760; on the death of S. Smith, 1765; religion productive of music; at the ordination of Levi Whitman, 1785; on the duty of making a profession of Christianity; fifteen discourses on doctrinal subjects, with practical improvements, 8vo., 1765.

MELLEN, JOHN, minister of Barnstable, son of the preceding, was born July 8, 1752; gradury of or of . He 1810, ointed anger, n Mc-

artford ion, in

N. H., r. He 93; he tive of nd died . He and in 812; a veller's States, as; the ; maps

; infor-

Mass., orn at aduated rdained terling, society tes, ocnaintain es. In Mass., of the irmities emoved l life in Caleb a law-July 31, stice of respectffcetiona minmon at general ong his , 1760; produc-Whitofession octrinal , 1765. ole, son gradurdained Nov. 12, 1783; and died at Cambridge, Sept. 19, 1828, aged 76. One of his daughters married Prof. Frisbic. He published a sermon on the death of I. Dunster, 1791; masonic discourse, 1793; at thanksgiving, 1794 and 1795; at a dedication, 1795; at the election, 1797; Dudleian lecture, 1799; on the death of Mrs. Alden, 1797; of D. Davis, 1799.

MELLEN, HENRY, a poet, brother of Judge Mellen, died at Dover, N. 1L., July 31, 1809, aged 51. He was born at Sterling, Oct. 24, 1757; graduated at Harvard college in 1784; 'and, having studied law, settled at Dover. He wrote popular songs. A collection of his poems was published.

MELLEN, PRENTISS, LL. D., chief justice of Maine, died Dec. 31, 1840, aged 76. He was the son of Rev. John M., and was born at Sterling, Mass., Oct. 11, 1764; graduated at Cambridge in 1784; practised law in Sterling and South Bridgewater, and removed to Biddeford, Me., in 1792, and to Portland in 1806. He was at the head of the bar in Maine. In 1817 he was a senator of the United States; and when Maine was formed into a State, in 1820, he was appointed chief justice. In 1834, at the age of 70, he was disqualified by the constitution; and, leaving the bench, he returned to the bar. He was a trustee of Bowdoin college. He died at Portland. His decisions : nay be found in the first eleven volumes of the Maine reports.

MELLEN, GRENVILLE, a poet, the eldest son of Judge M., died in New York, Sept. 5, 1841, aged 42. He graduated at Cambridge in 1818, and afterwards studied law, which he for a while practised, and then relinquished. He published various poems and other writings; in 1833, the chief collection of his poems, entitled the martyr's triumph, etc. - Cyclopedia of American Literature.

MELVILLE, THOMAS, major, died in Boston Sept. 16, 1832, aged 81. He was the son of Allan, of Boston, and grandson of Thomas M., minister of Leven, in Scotland. His mother was Jean Cargill, of Londonderry, N. H. He graduated at Princeton in 1769, and was a merchant in Boston, a patriot and soldier of the Revolution, one of the "Boston tea party" in Dec., 1773. He served as a major in Rhode Island. For many years he was the naval officer at Boston, and surveyor. He was highly respected as a citizen and Christian. Of his family, a daughter, who died perhaps half a century ago, was engaged to marry one of the most eminent and venerable men of Massachusetts now living; and his son Thomas, who lived in Pittsfield, is also dead.

MERCEIN, THOMAS F. RANDOLPH, a Methodist minister, died at Sheffield, Mass., in Sept.,

MERCER, John, published an abridgment of the acts of assembly of Virginia, 1737.

MERCER, HUGH, brigadier-general, died Jan. 19, 1777, aged about 56. He was a native of Scotland, and educated for the profession of medicine. On his emigration to this country he settled and married in Virginia. He served with Washington in the war against the French and Indians, which terminated in 1763, and was by him greatly esteemed. He was with Braddock in the campaign of 1755. In the action at fort Du Quesne he was wounded, and, faint with the loss of blood, he lay down under a fallen tree. One of the pursuing Indians jumped upon the very tree, but did not discover him. Mercer found a brook, at which he refreshed himself. In his hunger he fed on a rattlesnake, which he had killed. After pursuing his solitary way through a wilderness of one hundred miles, he arrived at fort Cumberland. At the commencement of the war of the Revolution he abandoned his extensive medical practice and entered the army. He was distinguished in the battle of Trenton. In the action near Princeton, Jan. 3, 1777, he commanded the van of the Americans, composed principally of southern militia. While exerting himself to rally them, his horse was killed under him. He was surrounded by some British soldiers, who refused him quarter, and stabled him with their bayonets, and bruised his head with the butt-end of their muskets, leaving him on the field as dead. He died from his wounds. He was buried at Philadelphia; thirty thousand of the inhabitants followed him to the grave. He was a valuable officer. Wilkinson regarded him as second only to Washington. He was well educated, polished in manners, gentle and diffident, yet in the hour of peril ignorant of fear, patriotic and disinterested. Provision was made by congress, in 1793, for the education of his youngest son, Hugh Mercer. His son, Col. John M., who accompunied Monroe to France as secretary, died Sept. 30, 1817. - Marshall, II. 552; Holmes.

MERCER, SILAS, died in Georgia in 1796, aged 51. He was a Baptist minister, born in North Carolina in 1745; about 1776 he preached in Halifax county, and in six years preached more than two thousand sermons, more than one a day. At the close of the war he went again to Georgia, where he had previously lived. He published tyranny exposed and true liberty discovered.

MERCER, JOHN, governor of Maryland, died in 1821, aged 64. He was a soldier of the Revolution. In 1782 he was elected a delegate to congress from Virginia; in 1787 he was a member from Maryland of the convention which framed the constitution of the United States, and 1856. He published a work of merit on natural also a member of eongress from Maryland. He was governor from 1801 to 1803, when he was succeeded by Robert Bowie. He died at Philadelphia.

MERCER, JESSE, a Baptist minister, died in Georgia in 1841, bequeathing 60,000 dollars to Mercer university, and to the bible and home missionary and other charitable societies.

MERIAM, Jonas, minister of Newton, Mass., died in 1780, aged 50. Born in Lexington, he was graduated at Harvard in 1753, and was ordained in 1758. He published a sermon at the ordination of T. Smith, 1764; of S. Dean, 1765.

— Sprague's Annals.

MERRIAM, MATTHEW, minister of Berwick, Me., died in 1797, aged about 60. Born in Wallingford, he graduated at Yale in 1759, and was ordained in 1765, as the successor of J. Morse, the first minister. J. Hilliard was his successor.

MERRICK, JONATHAN, minister in Branford, Conn., died in 1772, aged about 67. He graduated at Yale in 1725, and was ordained in 1727. — Sprague's Annals.

MERRILL, NATHANIEL, minister of Nottingham West (now Hudson), N. H., died in 1796, aged 83. Born in Newbury, Mass, he graduated at Harvard in 1732 and was settled in 1737.

MERRILL, Gyles, minister of Plaistow, N. H., died in 1801, aged 62. He graduated at Harvard in 1759, and was ordained the successor of James Cushing in 1765. The third parish of Haverhill, Mass., was annexed in 1728 to Plaistow, in N. H. He was a sound scholar and learned divine, simple and earnest. His sons were James C. and Samuel.

MERRILL, John, for forty years a member of the Baptist church in Topsham, Me., died in 1828, aged 94. Born in Arundel, he came to T. in 1760, and was the principal surveyor in Lincoln county. He was a man of judgment and moral worth.

MERNILL, DANIEL, minister of Sedgwick, Mc., died in 1833, aged about 65. Born in Danvers, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1789; was ordained in 1793; became a Baptist in 1804; was immersed with eighty others, mostly members of his church, May 15, 1805, when a Baptist church was formed and he was re-ordained. He published on baptism seven sermons, tenth edition, 1812; eight letters on open communion, 1805; letters occasioned by Worcester's discourses; Balaam disappointed; thanksgiving sermon, 1815; ordination of P. Bond, 1825; of J. Billings, 1826.

— Sprague's Annals.

MERRILL, Moses, preacher to the Otoe Indians, died in 1840, aged 36. The son of Rev. Daniel M. of Sedgwick, Me., he was six years of the Baptist mission in Missouri.

MERRILL, NATHANIEL, minister of Lyndeborough, N. II., died in 1839, aged 57. Born at Rowley, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1809, and was ordained in 1811. — Sprague's Annals.

MERRILL, BENJAMIN, LL, D., died in Salem, July 30, 1847, aged 63. Horn in Conway, N. H., he graduated at Harvard in 1804. He was a scholar. As a lawyer he was a partner in business with Judge Putnam of Salem. He was a kind and generous man, remembered, not by any children, but by the partakers of his kindness.

Me

yea

died

gra

with

was nor past year

of (

day

the

Ho

pres

fore

Bro

Ho

1803

and a sin

N

mini

Yor

stud

not

a 80

publ M

mou

was

Han

was and

daug

and His

Rev.

mar

Ded

daug

Shar

ous,

15, 1 marı

Edw

magi

dure

Kent

75.

Kent

becar

M

M

M Mar

N

A

MERRILL, David, died in Peacham, Vt., July 21, 1850, aged 52. He was a graduate of Dartmouth in 1821, and minister of Urbana, O., and of Peacham, a colleague of L. Worcester. He published the famons "ox sermon" on temperance. The text is Exod. xxi. 20—" If the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death." The ox "goring" represents the effect of the sale of spirituous liquors, and the permission to sell is allowing the ox to go abroad, instead of "keeping him in," etc.

MERRILL, ELIPHAL, died at Northwood, N. H., Feb. 7, 1853, aged 98; a Free-will Baptist minister, a native of Stratham.

MERRILL, JAMES CUSHING, a lawyer in Boston, died of the palsy, Oct. 4, 1853, aged 69. He was the son of Rev. Gyles Merrill of Haverhil, and was born Sept. 27, 1784, and was graduated at Harvard in 1807. He was nearly twenty years a judge of the police court. As a scholar he was very skilled in the Greek language. His wife was Aona, a sister of Leverett Saltonstall.

MERRILL, THOMAS ABBOT, D. D., died at Middlebury, Vt., April 29, 1855, aged 75. He was a graduate of Dartmouth in 1801, in the class of Daniel Webster, holding a high rank as a scholar. He was a tutor both at Dartmouth and Middlebury, and the respected and useful sole minister of Middlebury, Vt., from 1805 to 1842, and senior pastor from 1842 till his death. During his service there were fifteen revivals of religion, and he admitted to his church one thousand two hundred and thirty-four members. For a long period his church consisted of more than five hundred members. Though not distinguished as a writer of sermons, or as a graceful speaker, he had power in preaching, especially in his extemporaneous labors, when he was often hold, strong, and lofty in his oratory. He was a correspondent of Mr. Webster, who highly respected MERRILL, JOHN, M. D., died at Portland, June 7, 1855, aged 73. Born in Conway, he graduated at Harvard in 1804. He was a skilful physician and a good citizen.

MERWIN, NOAH, minister of Torrington, Conn., died in 1795, aged about 42. He was ordained in 1776; dismissed in 1783; re-settled in Washington, Conn., in 1785. Salem, N. H., was a misiness a kind

n kind ny chilt. 't., July of Dart-O., and er. He temper-the ox ic past, and he killed a , and his The ox sale of "keeprthwood, Baptist

o sell is

in Bos69. He laverhil.,
raduated
ty years
ir he was
His wife

died at
75. He
the class
nk as a buth and eful sole
to 1842,
h. Durdls of rene thours. For ore than nguished
speaker,
his ex-

Portland, ıway, he a skilful

en bold,

as a cor-

espected

rrington, e was orsettled in MERWIN, J. B., died at Danbury, Vt., Sept. 6, 1851, aged 77, the oldest minister in the Troy Methodist conference. He had been fifty-one years a travelling preacher.

MERWIN, Sanuel, a minister in New Haven, died Sept. 3, 1856, aged 74. Born at Milford, he graduated at Yale in 1802. He studied divinity with Dr. Dwight and Dr. Backus of Somers, and was settled in 1805 over the United society or north church in N. H., and continued a faithful paster twenty-six years. He was next for some years the paster of Wilton; then, about the age of 60, returned to spend the remainder of his days at New Haven. He often preached in the chapel of the alms-house. He died in peace. He published a half-century sermon, which he preached in the north church a few months before his death. — Bacon's Funeral Sermon.

MESSER, Asa, D. D., LL. D., president of Brown university, died Oct. 11, 1836, aged 67. He graduated in 1790, and was president from 1802 to 1826. He was of respectable literary and scientific attainments. He died as he lived, a sincere Christian. He published an address to graduates, 1803; discourse, 1813.

MESSHEIMER, FRED. VAL., a naturalist, minister of the Lutheran church at Hanover, York county, Penn., devoted much time to the study of the entomology of this country, but was not encouraged. He died about 1814. He left a son, with similar intelligence and taste. He published a catalogue of insects of Penn., 1806.

METCALF, JOSEPH, first minister of Falmouth, Mass., died May 24, 1723, aged 41. He was born in Dedham, the son of Jonathan and Hannah; was graduated at Harvard in 1703; and was ordained in 1707. He was highly respected and greatly lamented. His wife was Abiel Adams, daughter of Rev. William Adams of Dedham, and grand-daughter of Maj. William Bradford. His widow removed to Lebanon, and married Rev. Isaac Chauncey. One of his daughters married Rev. Jonathan Lee.

METCALF, JONATHAN, died at Lebanon, Conn. March 30, 1739, aged 62, the son of Jonathan of Dedham, and brother of Rev. Joseph M. His daughter, Mary, married Rev. Peter Pratt of Sharon. He was a Christian merchant, generous, a henefactor of the church.

METCALF, WILLIAM, died in Lebanon June 15, 1773, aged 64, the son of the preceding. He married Abigail, the daughter of Rev. Timothy Edwards; she died in 1764. He was a faithful magistrate, and a Christian, who patiently endured long and extreme pain.

METCALFE, Thomas, general, governor of factor of the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Kentucky, died in Nicholas county in 1855, aged 75. Born in Virginia, his parents emigrated to Kentucky. He served in the war of 1812, and became a member of congress; was chosen governor of factor of the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Kentucky, He served in the war of 1812, and became a member of congress; was chosen governor of factor of the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Kentucky, He served of his chiefs and extended the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Kentucky, died in Nicholas county in 1825, aged Pequet war of 1637, several of his chiefs and many of his men joined Capt. Mason. It was estimated, at this period, that he had five thouse the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Kentucky, died in Nicholas county in 1825, aged Pequet war of 1637, several of his chiefs and many of his men joined Capt. Mason. It was estimated, at this period, that he had five thouse sand warriors: probably the number is much ex-

ernor in 1827; and was a senator of the United States in 1848. Once an apprentice to a stonemason, he became a man of great entinence and influence, able, firm, equal to all occasions.

METLIN, ROBERT, died in Wakefield, N. H., in 1787, aged 115. When eighty years old he walked from Portsmouth to Boston, sixty miles, in one day, and returned the next.

MEYER, HERMANNUS, D. D., minister of the reformed Dutch church, died in 1791. He was invited from Holland to take the charge of the church at Kingston or Esopus, New York. Upon his arrival in 1762, he was received with that respect and affection which were due to his character. But his preaching soon excited opposition. He was too evangelical, practical, and pointed, addressing the conscience too closely to suit the taste of many of his principal hearers. No plausible ground of opposition, however, could be found until his marriage. The Dutch churches in this country were at this time divided into two parties, called the cortus and the conferentic parties, of which the former wished to establish judicatories with full powers in America, and the latter was desirous of retaining the churches in subjection to the classis of Amsterdam. His marriage into a leading family of the cetus party, and an intimate friendship, which soon succeeded with other families and distinguished characters of the same party, furnished his enemies with an oceasion of standing forth against him. A number of the neighboring ministers were invited to attend and decide in the dispute, and they proceeded to suspend him from his ministry in that place. He was afterwards settled at Pompton, in New Jersey, where he continued to labor with much diligence, faithfulness, and success till his death. He died without ever being able to effect a reconciliation with the church at Kingston, greatly beloved and respected in all the other Dutch churches. He was a man of great erudition, of a mild and humble temper, polite and unaffected in his manners, and eminently pious. Appointed by the general synod of the Dutch church a professor of the oriental languages, and a lector or assistant to the professor of theology, as such he rendered very important services in preparing candidates for the ministry. - Mason's Christian's Magazine, 11. 10-12.

MIANTUNNOMU (or Miantonomoh), sachem of the Narragansetts, was the nephew and successor of Canonicus, and in the old age of the latter, took upon him the government in 1636. In the same year he made a treaty with the English at Boston. He was the friend and benefactor of the settlers in Rhode Island. In the Pequot war of 1637, several of his chiefs and many of his men joined Capt. Mason. It was estimated, at this period, that he had five thousand warriors, probably the number is much expend warriors.

aggerated. In 1638 he and Uneas, sachem of Mohegan, and the English, entered into an agreement at Hartford. The sachems engaged not to make war upon each other without first appealing to the English. In 1643 Uneas attacked Sequasson, a sachem on Connecticut river, killing and wounding about twenty men, and burning the wigwams. Miantunnomu, a kinsman and ally of Sequasson, took up the quarrel; he first complained of Uncas to the governor at Hartford; he asked, whether any offence would be taken if he made war upon Uncas? The governor replied, that if Uneas had injured him and refused to give satisfaction, Miantunnomu would be left "to take his course." This seems to have been submitting the affair to the judgment of the sachem. He accordingly marched to Mohegan at the head of eight hundred or one thousand men, and on a great plain in Norwich was defeated by Uneas, who had only five or six hundred men, and taken prisoner. Uncas applied to the commissioners of the United Colonies, Winthrop, Winslow, Eaton, etc., for advice as to disposing of his prisoner. They decided, after enumerating several charges, that he might be put to death in the jurisdiction of Uncas. This decision in regard to a prisoner in their hands, an Indian king, who had been their ally against the Pequots and a friend of the whites, was ungenerous and iniquitous, and a stain upon the character of the commissioners. The prisoner was taken to a place between Hartford and Windsor, where some of Uncas' men lived, and a brother of Uncas killed him with a hatchet. This is the account of Winthrop. Trumbull says, on the authority of a manuscript of Mr. Hyde, that he was put to death at Sachem's Plain, in the easterly part of Norwich, and that a pile of stones was placed upon his grave. He was "a goodly personage, of tall stature, subtle and cunning in his contrivements, as well as haughty in his designs." His execution by the advice of the commissioners roused the indignation of Canonicus and Pessacus, who the next year threatened war, but were induced to enter into terms of peace. Probably this unappy event contributed to light up the subsequent dreadful was of king Philip, who was assisted by the Narragansetts. It is known, also, that it fostered in the breasts of the Indians a contempt of Christianity. In every respect, generosity, forgiveness, and kindness, as well as justice, are advantageous.

MICHAUX, ANDRE, a botanist, died in 1802. He was born in France in 1746. He married in 1769 Cecilia Claye; but she died in 1770. After extending his bottuical excursions to Spain, and spending two years in Persia, he came to America in Cotober. 1725. During about nine years he travelled on the modelle, southern, and western States, and proceeded to the north to the neighborhood of Hudson's bay, procuring trees and shrubs for the establishment at Rambonillet. For the preservation of his plants he established botanical gardens at New York and near Charleston. On his return to Europe in 1796 he was shipwrecked, but saved most of his collections. He had sent sixty thousand stocks to Rambouillet, of which but few had escaped the rayages of the Revolution. His salary for seven years he could not obtain, nor any employment from government. In 1800, however, he was sent out on an expedition to New Holland. He died of a fever at Madagascar. He published histoire des chenes de Amerique septentrionale, folio, l'aris, thirty-six plates, 1801; flora boreali - Americana, 2 vols. 8vo., Paris, 1803, fifty-one plates.

MICHAUX, François Andre, son of the preceding, was born in 1770. He published the beautiful work, entitled the North American sylva, 5 vols., 8vo., Philadelphia, 1817, 150 colored engravings; and voyage & Pouest de monts, etc., 1804; the same, translated, entitled, travels in Obio, Kentucky, and Tennessee: London, 1805.

MIDDLETON, PETER, M. D., a physician in New York, died in 1781. He was a native of Scotland. In 1750 he assisted Dr. Burd in the first dissection in this country, and in 1767 was appointed professor of physiology and pathology. He published a medical discourse, 1769; and a letter on the croup, in medical repository, 1x. — Thacher.

MIDDLETON, ARTHUR, a patriot of the Revolution, died Jan. 1, 1788, aged 44. He was born on the banks of Ashley river, South Carolina, in 1743. His father was Henry, president of congress. He received an excellent education at Westminster and Cambridge, England, and then travelled several years upon the continent. After returning and marrying the daughter of Walter Izard, he again travelled in Europe. In 1773 he settled upon the banks of the Ashley river in Carolina. At the commencement of the Revolution both he and his father, a man of great wealth. entered zealously into the American cause. In 1775 he was one of the secret committee of defence, and also of the council of safety, and, the next year, on the committee to prepare a constitution. He was also sent a delegate to congress and signed the Declaration of Independence but resigned his sout at the named 1777. In 1.79 he suffered in his property, like others, by the ravages of war. At the capture of Charleston in 1780, he was taken prisoner and confined at St. Augustine nearly a year. At length, in July, 1781, he was exchanged, and proceeded in a cartel to Philadelphia. He was now again appointed a member to congress. He died of an intermittent fever. - Goodrich.

MIDDLETON, HENRY, president of congress

trees and ambouillet. established ear Charlen-796 he was collections. Rambonilravages of en years he it from govsent out on e died of a histoire des folio, Paris, ali — Ameri-

r-one plates. son of the ublished the h American 1817, 150 l'ouest de ted, entitled, iessee: Lon-physician in a native of Bard in the in 1767 was nd pathology. 1769; and a ository, IX. - ot of the Rev-He was born Carolina, in ident of coneducation at ind, and then tinent. After ter of Walter . In 1773 he shley river in f the Revolugreat wealth, an cause. In nmittee of deafety, and, the pare a constite to congress pendence but 777. in 1,79 others, by the Charleston in onfined at St. . in July, 1781, in a cartel to appointed a nt of congress

1810 to 1812. He was the son of Arthur, the first royal governor of South Carolina.

MIDDLETON, HENRY, governor of South Carolina and minister to Itussia, died in Charleston June 14, 1846, aged 73. After being in congress he was governor in 1810, and again went to Washington in 1814. Mr. Mourne sent him to Russia in 1820. He was hospitable and social, of polished and dignified manners.

MIDDLETON, ARTHUR, grandson of A. M., died at Naples June 9, 1858, aged about 60. He graduated at Harvard in 1814, and married at Rome the Countess Benlvoglio. He was favorably known by Americans at Naples.

MIEL, CHARLES, captain, a Revolutionary officer, died in Alleghany county, Maryland, in 1836, aged 102. He served under Wolfe and Montgomery at Quebec, and fought at Bunker

MIFFLIN, THOMAS, a major-general in the American army, and governor of Pennsylvania, died Jan. 20, 1800, aged 56. He was horn about the year 1744 of parents who were Quakers, and his education was intrusted to the care of Dr. Smith, with whom he was connected in habits of cordial intimacy and friendship for more than forty years. Active and zealous, he engaged early in opposition to the measures of the British parliament. He was a member of the first congress in 1774. He took arms and was among the first officers commissioned on the organization of the continental army, being appointed quartermaster general in Aug., 1775. For this offence he was read out of the society of Quakers. In 1777 he was very useful in animating the militia; but he was also suspected in this year of being unfriendly to the commander-in-chief, and of wishing to have some other person in his place. Itis sanguine disposition and his activity might have rendered him insensible to the value of that coolness and caution, which were essential to the preservation of such an army as was then under the command of Washington. In 1787 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of the United States, and his name is affixed to that instrument. In Oct., 1788, he succeeded Franklin as president of the supreme executive council of Pennsylvania, in which station he continued till October, 1790. In September, a constitution for this State was formed by a convention, in which he was president, and he was chosen the first governor. In 1794, during the insurrection in Pennsylvania, he employed to the advantage of his country the extraordinary powers of elocution with which he was endowed. The imperfection of the militia laws was compensated by his eloquence. He made a circuit through the lower counties, and at different places publicly addressed the militia on the crisis in From 1810 to 1813 he was pastor of the third in 1774, was governor of South Carolina from the affairs of their country, and through his animating exhortations the State furnished the quota required. He was succeeded in the office of governor by Mr. McKean, at the close of the year 1799, and he died at Lancaster. He was an active and zealous patriot, who had devoted much of his life to the public service. - Smith's Sormon on his Death.

MIGHILL, THOMAS, minister of Schunte, died in Feb., 1689, aged 49. He was the son of Thomas, and was born at Rowley; graduated at Harvard in 1663; and was ordained in 1684.

MIGHILL, DAVID, M. D., LL. D., died at Georgetawn in May, 1851, aged 65,

MILES, JOHN, minister of the first Baptist church in Massachusetts, was settled at listom near Swansea in South Wales, from 1649 till his ejectment in 1662. He soon came to this country, and formed a church at Rehoboth in Bristol county, in 1663. The legislature of Plymouth colony granted to these Buptists in 1667 the town of Swanzey, to which place they removed. He died Feb. 3, 1683. His wife was Ann, the daughter of John Humphrey. - Baylies' Memoir of Plymouth, 11. 239.

MILES, SAMUEL, minister of king's chapel, Boston, died in 1729, aged about 65. He was the son of Rev. J. M. He graduated at Harvard in 1684; went to England and received holy orders; and became rector of the chapel in Boston in 1689.

MILES, JOHN, minister of Grafton, Mass., was ordained in 1796 and dismissed in 1826. Horn in Westminster, he graduated at Brown in 1794.

MILES, NOAH, minister of Temple, N. H., died in Dec., 1831, aged 79, in the fiftieth year of his ministry. Born in Westminster, Mass., he gradnated at Dartmouth in 1780. He published a sermon on the death of Washington.

MILLAR, JOHN, first minister at Yarmouth, Mass., died as late as 1651 or later. He was first an assistant to E. Rogers of Rowley. He was in the ministry in England before he came to MILLEDGE, JOHN, governor of Georgia, was in 1780 attorney-general, and governor in 1802. He was afterwards a member of congress and a senator of the United States from 1806 to 1809. He died at his seat at the Sand Hills Feb. 9, 1818, aged 64. He was the principal founder of the university of Georgia.

MILLEDOLER, PHILIP, D. D., president of Rutgers' college, New Brunswick, died at Staten Island Sept. 22, 1852, aged 77. He was born in Farmington, Conn., Sept. 22, 1775; his parents were from Berne in Switzerland. At the age of twenty he became the minister of the German reformed church in New York, in May, 1795, preaching both in German and in English.

to 1820 he was a minister in Rutgers street collegiate Dutch church, New York. Afterwards in 1825 he became a professor and president of Rutgers college, New Brunswick, and continued seventeen years. He lived at the close of life in the family of his daughter. His wife, Margaret, the daughter of Gen. Steele of Philadelphia, died the day after him. At the funeral the two coffins were side by side on a bier in front of the pulpit; the sermon was preached by Dr. Dewitt. He was an eminent and most pious and useful minister of the Dutch reformed church; was among the founders of the bible and missionary institutions; and was the first president of the New York tract society. He published a sermon at the installation of Mr. Romeyn, 1808; of G. Spring, 1810; charge at Princeton seminary, 1812; address at Columbia college, 1828.

MILLER, JOHN, minister of Brunswick, Mc., died in 1789, aged 56. Born in Milton, he graduated at Harvard in 1752, and succeeded in 1762 R. Dunlap, the first minister. He was succeeded by E. Coffin, W. Bailey, A. Mead, and Dr. G. E. Adams.

MILLER, JOHN, minister of Dover, Delaware, died in 1791, aged 68. He was the son of John M., a native of Seotland, who married and settled in Boston in 1710, and was born in Boston Dec. 24, 1722, and experienced the power of religion under the ministry of Dr. Sewall. Having studied theology with Mr. Webb, he was ordained in the old south in April, 1749, with a view to his establishment at Dover, where he was a minister more than forty years, having the charge also of the church at Smyrna, twelve miles distant. Among his many sons, all of whom engaged in the learned professions, were Edward Miller and Samuel Miller, late one of the professors in the theological seminary at Princeton. Another son, a physician in the army, died in 1777. With a sound mind he was a good scholar, a faithful preacher, a great lover and maker of peace, and a centre of literary and religious influence.

MILLER, EDWARD, M. D., a physician of New York, third son of the preceding, died March 17, 1812, aged 51. He was born at Dover, Delaware, May 9, 1760; his mother was the daughter of A. Millington of Talbot county, Maryland. He was educated by his father, and at Newark academy under F. Allison and A. McDowell. Having studied medicine with Dr. Ridgely, he entered the army as surgeon's mate in 1780, and in 1781 went as surgeon in an armed ship to France. After attending the lectures at Philadelphia, he commenced the practice in Frederica, but removed thence to Maryland, and in 1786 to Dover, where he remained ten years. About 1793 he wrote an able letter to Dr. Rush, asserting the domestic origin of the yellow fever. In pelier, Vt., Feb. 17, 1847, aged 50. He was an

Presbyterian church in Philadelphia. From 1813 | 1796, in order to enjoy the society of his only surviving brother, he removed to New York. where his practice was extensive, and where he projected and published, with Drs. Mitchill and Smith, the medical repository, the first number of which appeared in August, 1797. This was the first work of the kind in the United States: he lived to see nearly fifteen vols, completed. In 1803 he was appointed resident physician of New York. In 1805 he drew up a learned report, maintaining the domestic origin of the yellow fever. In 1807 he was elected the professor of the practice of physic in the university of New York; in 1809 one of the physicians of the hospital. The typhus fever, succeeding an inflammation of the lungs, terminated his life. Four of his brothers, in two of the learned professions, died in early life. He was a distinguished scholar. and, in the opinion of Dr. Rush, "inferior to no physician in the United States." He was a man of probity, and honor, and charity, with a heart of sympathy, and courtesy of manners. His gratuitous services to the poor have been seldom equalled. In his habits he was remarkably temperate, seldom using any drink but water, and rejecting the use of tobacco in every form as an odious praetice, and a provocative to the love of drinking. He was a believer in Christianity, and devoutly perused the holy Scriptures. His medical works, with a biographical sketch by his brother, Samuel Miller, were published, 8vo., 1814. — Thacher, 385-392.

MILLER, HENRY, general, a distinguished officer of the Revolution, died in 1824 in Carlisle. Penn., aged 71. He was prothonotary of Perry county.

MILLER, JAMES W., a poet and miscellaneous writer, died in 1829.

MILLER, JONATHAN, minister of Burlington, Conn., died in 1831, aged 69. Born in Torringford, he graduated at Yale in 1781, and was ordained in 1782. He wrote much for the evangelical magazine. A few years before his death his mind broke down, and he had a colleague. He published a concio ad clerum, 1812. -Sprague's Annals.

MILLER, JOHN, died in Washington, Penn., Dec., 1832, aged 100. He was at the capture of fort Du Quesne, now Pittsburg, in 1758.

MILLER, ROBERT, an Episcopal minister, died at Mary's Grove, N. C., in 1834, aged 74.

MILLER, STEPHEN D., governor of South Carolina, died in Mississippi while on a visit, March 8, 1838. He had been a senator of the United States.

MILLER, JOHN, governor of Missouri, died near Florisant in 1846. He was an officer in the war of 1812, and a member of congress.

MILLER, JONATHAN P., colonel, died in Mont-of his only New York, id where he Mitchill and irst number 7. This was ited States: mpleted. In ician of New rned report. f the yellow professor of rsity of New s of the hosan inflammafe. Four of professions, ished scholar. inferior to no le was a mun with a heart anners. His been seldom arkably temut water, and y form as an to the love of distinguished 24 in Carlisle, tary of Perry ristianity, and

es. His med-

ketch by his

blished, 8vo.,

d miscellane-

of Burlington, rn in Torring-, and was orfor the evanfore his death l a colleague. um, 1812.—

ington, Penn., the capture of 1758.

l minister, died ed 74. nor of South

ile on a visit, senator of the Missouri, died n officer in the gress.

, died in Mont-). He was an in their struggle for liberty, carrying to them from New York a cargo of supplies, the distribution of which he superintended.

MILLER, WILLIAM, the so-called prophet, died in Hampton, or Low Hampton, N. Y., Dec. 20, 1849, aged 68. He was born in Pittsfield, Mass.; was a captain in the war of 1812, and then became a preacher. Fixing upon 1843 as the period for the beginning of the millennium, he preached on the subject for ten years in the northern and middle States, perhaps gaining thirty or forty thousand disciples, who soon disappeared after the year 1843 had passed over. He was one of the misguided fanaties, who, on account of their honest zeal, readily find followers among the ignorant.

MILLER, SAMUEL, D. D., died at Princeton, N. J., Jan. 7, 1850, aged 80. He was born in Dover, Delaware. His father, a native of Boston, was a minister many years in Dover. He graduated at Pennsylvania university in 1789; was ordained in 1793 as pastor of the brick church in New York; and was chosen at Princeton theological seminary the professor of ecclesiastical history and ehurch government in 1813. He was a man most amiable and polished in manners, learned and pious, and of great inflaence. He published many hooks: among them, letters on the Christian ministry, 1809; on the office of ruling elder; on baptism; lectures at the seminary, 1827, 1830; letters on elerical manners and habits; on the eternal sonship of Christ, addressed to Prof. Stnart, 1823; on Unitarianism; memoirs of J. Rodgers; sermon to society for liberating slaves; and other single sermons; retrospect of 18th century, 2 vols., 1803.

MILLER, NATHANIEL, M. D., died in Franklin, Mass., June 10, 1850, aged 79.

MILLER, JAMES, general, died in Temple, N. II., July 7, 1851, aged 76. Born in Peterborough, he was bred to the law. He entered the army in 1810, and was distinguished in the battles of Chippewa, Bridgewater, and Lundy's lane. When asked by his general, Ripley, if he would take the fort, he said, "I'll try, sir!" He was governor of Arkansas, and collector many years of the port of Salem, Mass.

MILLER, ELIJAH, a profound lawyer, died at Auburn, N. Y., Nov. 14, 1851, aged 80. He was father-in-law of Governor Seward, and the son of Samuel M., a patriot of the Revolution.

MILLER, WILLIAM S., died in New York Nov. 9, 1854, a member of congress. He was social and hospitable, had a cultivated mind, and was a liberal patron of the arts.

MILLER, Moses, the mountain paster, the minister of Heath, Mass., died about 1855, aged nearly 80. He was born in Worcester in 1776, and was the grandson of a much respected Dea- | plan of the united foreign mission society, which, opposer of slavery, and he encouraged the Greeks | con Miller of Dr. Austin's church. He graduated at Providence in 1800, and was then some years a tutor. He was ordained in the mountain town of Heath Dec. 26, 1804, and was a faithful paster more than forty years. He published a sermon to missionary society, 1824. He wrote his antobiography while living with his children in Nunda, N. Y.; and it was published in the Recorder in 1856.

MILLS, Gideon, minister in Simsbury, Conn., died in 1772, aged 56. Born at Windsor, the brother of Jedidiah M., he graduated at Yale in 1737; was ordained over the first church in Simsbury in 1744, and continued ten years. He was installed over the second church in 1761.

MILLS, JEDIDIAH, minister of Ripton, Conn., died in 1776, aged about 76. Born in Windsor, he graduated at Yale in 1722, and was ordained in 1724. He was a friend of Mr. Whitefield and David Brainerd. Mr. Ely was his colleague in 1771. He published a vindication of gospel truth, 1747; the state of the unregenerate, 1767. — Sprague's Annals.

MILLS, EBENEZER, minister of Sandisfield, Mass., died in 1799, aged 89. He graduated at Yale in 1738. He was first settled in Granby.

MILLS, SAMUEL J., agent of the American colonization society, died June 16, 1818, aged 35. He was the son of the minister of Torringford, Conn., and was born April 21, 1783. At an early period he had such a sense of his sin, that for two years - he regarded his existence as a curse. In answer to the prayers of his parents he was cheered with the Christian hope. He graduated at Williams college in 1809. While in that seminary his mind was deeply impressed with the importance of foreign missions, and he endeavored to awaken a similar feeling in the hearts of his fellow students. At the theological seminary in Andover he united with Newell, Judson, Nott, and Hall, in a resolution to undertake a foreign mission. These young men offered themselves as missionaries to the general association of ministers of Massachusetts at Bradford, June 27, 1810. In 1812 and 1813 he and J. F. Schermerhorn made a missionary tour in the western States. He was ordained with other missionaries at Newburyport June 21, 1815. He made a second tour with D. Smith in 1814 and 1815. He ascertained that in March, 1815, not a bible could be found for sale or to be given away in New Orleans; in that city he distributed many bibles in French and English, and visited the sick soldiers. Finding that seventy or eighty thousand families at the south were destitute of a bible, he suggested at the close of his report the establishment of a national society like that of the British. His efforts contributed to the establishment of the society, May 8, 1816. The however, accomplished but little, originated with him, while residing with Dr. Griffin at Newark, as did also the African school, which existed a few years at Parsippany, near Newark. attended the first meeting of the colonization society Jan. 1, 1817, which was established by the exertions of Dr. Finley. Appointed with E. Burgess, to visit England and explore the coast of Africa for the society, he sailed in Nov., 1817, and in a wonderful manner escaped shipwreck on the coast of France. As the ship was drifting towards a ledge of rocks, the captain despaired of preservation, and jumped into the boat with his two sons, all of whom were lost. A strong current as the ship approached the rocks carried her away from them. He sailed from England for Africa Feb. 2, 1818, and arrived on the coast March 12th. After a laborious inspection of more than two months, he embarked on his return in the brig Success, May 22, 1818. A severe cold, which he took, early in June, was succeeded by a fever, of which he died. He was buried in the depths of the ocean. He was eminently pious and benevolent; and, when the sea gives up its dead, he will rise to heavenly glory. memoirs by Gardiner Spring were published, 8vo., 1820.

MILLS, EDMUND, minister of Sutton, Mass., the successor of Dr. Hall, died in 1825, aged 72. Born in Kent, Coun., he graduated at Yale in 1775. He was pastor from 1790 till his death, a popular and successful preacher. He published an oration July 4, 1809.

MILLS, ELIJAH HUNT, a lawyer and member of congress, died at Northampton May 5, 1829, aged 51. He graduated at Williams in 1797. He published an oration to Washington benevolent society, 1813.

MILLS, THOMAS, D. D., Episcopal minister at Charleston, S. C., died in 1830, aged 87.

MILLS, SAMUEL, died at Torringford May 11, 1833, aged 89.

MILLS, JOSHUA, Dr., died at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1843, aged 46, an acceptable physician.

MILNOR, JAMES, D. D., rector of St. George's church, New York, died March 8, 1845, aged 70. A lawyer in Philadelphia, he was a member of congress in 1812; afterwards he was thirty years an eminent minister in New York; an able supporter of various charitable societies. He was a man of untiring and systematic industry.

MILTIMORE, JAMES, minister of Belleville church, Newbury, Mass., died March 23, 1836, aged 81. Born in Londonderry, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1774; was ordained in Stratham, N. II., in 1786, and dismissed in 1807; was installed at Newbury in 1808. He published a discourse on the death of J. Murray, 1793; to a musical choir, 1794; at a dedication, 1807.—Spraque's Annals.

MILTON, CHARLES W., minister at Newburyport, died in 1837, aged 69: installed in 1791. MINER, JESSE, a missionary at Green Bay, died March 22, 1829. -

MINER, Thomas, M. D., died at Worcester April 23, 1841, aged 63. A graduate of Yale in 1796, he practised physic first at Middletown, Conn., his native place, and was one of the founders of the medical institute of Yale, and of the Connecticut retreat for the insane. His autobiography was published by Dr. Williams. He was a man of integrity and of literary attainments. He published with Dr. Tully a work on typhus, which excited much attention. — Williams' Med. Biography.

MINNICK, Mrs., died in South Carolina about

1805, aged 108.

MINNS, THOMAS, died at Boston April 4, 1836, aged 62. He was the editor of the New England Palladium from 1792 to 1828. He was first associated with A. Young in publishing the

Mercury

MINOT, GEORGE RICHARDS, a historian, died Jan. 2, 1802, aged 43. He was born in Boston Dec. 28, 1758. Distinguished in early life by the love of learning, graceful modesty, and amiable manners, he was peculiarly endeared, while et school, to his excellent instructor, Mr. Lowell, and in college he secured the esteem of the governors of the institution and the warmest attachment of his companions. He was graduated in 1778. Having pursued the study of the law under the care of William Tudor, he began its practice with a high reputation and with fixed principles and habits. But his attention was immediately diverted somewhat from his profession by his appointment as clerk of the house of representatives in 1781, soon after the new constitution had commenced its operation. While in this station, the duties of which he discharged with the greatest fidelity and impartiality, the causes which produced the insurrection were operating, and he had an opportunity of being well acquainted with the proceedings of the house. Of these transactions he wrote a sketch, which was published in the Boston magazine for 1784 and 1785. After the insurrection was suppressed, he wrote a history of it, which was praised equally for its truth, moderation, perspicuity, and elegance. Of the convention of Massachusetts which considered the constitution of the United States, he was chosen the secretary. In Jan., 1792, he was appointed judge of probate for the county of Suffolk, and several years afterwards judge of the municipal court in Boston. Amidst the violence of parties his mildness, candor, and moderation gained him the respect of all. His conversation was interesting, for his mind was enriched with various knowledge, and there was a modesty and benignity in his character, which at Newburyd in 1791. Green Bay, at Worcester te of Yale in Middletown. of the founde, and of the His autobilliams. He erary attainlly a work on ntion. - Wil-arolina about ton April 4. r of the New 828. He was oublishing the historian, died rn in Boston arly life by the , and amiable ared, while et r, Mr. Loweli, em of the govarmest attachgraduated in y of the law he began its and with fixed ention was imhis profession house of repnew constitu-While in this ischarged with ity, the causes vere operating, eing well ache house. Of tch, which was for 1784 and suppressed, he praised equally uity, and ele-Massachusetts of the United ary. In Jan., probate for the ars afterwards ston. Amidst ss, candor, and et of all. His his mind was

and there was

haracter, which trusted entirely to the mercy of God for salvation. He published an oration on the Boston massacre, March 5, 1782; history of the insurrection in Massachusetts, 8vo., 1788; an address to the charitable fire society, 1795; eulogy on Washington, 1800; a continuation of the history of Massachusetts Bay from 1748 to 1765, with an introductory sketch of events from its original settlement. The first volume of this work, which is a continuation of Hutchinson, was published in 8vo., 1798; the second volume was almost completed at the time of his death, and it has since been published. The narrative is perspicuous, and the style simple and pure, and a model of historical eloquence. - Collections of Historical Society, VIII. 89-109.

MINOT, TIMOTHY, Dr., died in Concord, Mass., Aug. 1, 1804, aged 78. He graduated at Harvard in 1747, and was a respected physician, the founder of the Middlesex medical association.

MINTO, WALTER, LL. D., professor of natural philosophy in the college of New Jersey, died Oct. 21, 1796, aged 42. He was born in Scotland Dec. 3, 1753, and educated at Edinburgh. By the persuasion of the Earl of Buchan, he wrote a book to prove that the original discovery of logarithms was to be attributed to Napier, the laird of Merchiston. The earl sent him to America in 1786, being desirous of laying a foundation of mathematical science in the land of Columbus and of Washington. Soon after his arrival he was chosen mathematical professor in Princeton college. In this situation he was respected and useful. He was a sincere Christian and a truly learned man. Besides the book on Napier, he published a demonstration of the path of the new planet; researches into some parts of the theory of the planets, etc., 8vo., 1783; and an oration on the progress and importance of the mathematical sciences, etc., 1788.

MIRANDA, Don Francisco, general, was born of a Spanish family at Caraceas, of which province his grandfather was governor. In 1783 he visited the United States, and travelled on foot over a part of Europe. In the French Revolution he was a major-general in the service of France. From the prison into which he was cast, he escaped to England in 1797. Having been again banished from France for opposing the French consul in 1803, he resolved to emancipate South America from the dominion of Spain. Having obtained secret assistance and encouragement, he sailed from New York in 1806, with a number of American volunteers. At St. Domingo he chartered two schooners; they were captured on the coast, while he escaped in his ship. In 1810 he renewed his attempt, but was obliged to eapituattracted and delighted. Humble and devout, he! the agreement, treated him as a prisoner. He complied with the ordinances of Christianity, and was sent to Spain, and died after four years' confinement in the dungeons of the inquisition at Cadiz.

MITARK, sachem of Gay Head on Martha's Vineyard, being converted to the Christian faith by Mr. Mayhew, became a preacher. Of the English he was a faithful ally, and died regretted by all the islanders, Jan. 20, 1683. He said: "I have hope in God, that when my soul departs out of this body, God will send his messengers, who shall conduct it to himself, to be with Jesus Christ, where that everlasting glory is."

MITCHELL, JONATHAN, minister of Cambridge, Mass., the son of Jonathan M., died July 9, 1668, aged 42. He was born in Eugland in 1624. He was brought to this country in 1635, by his parents, who sought a refuge from eeclesiastical tyranny in the wilderness. His father first settled at Concord; afterwards he lived at Saybrook, Wethersfield, and Stamford; and died in 1645. Mr. Mitchell was graduated at Harvard college in 1647, having made great acquisitions in knowledge, and improvements in virtue. Under the ministry of Mr. Shepard his mind was impressed by the truths of religion. While at college he kept a diary in Latin. When he began to preach, he was invited to settle at Hartford, but he was ordained at Cambridge, as the successor of Mr. Shepard, Aug. 21, 1650. after his settlement Pres. Dunster embraced the principles of Anti-pedobaptism. This was a peculiar trial to him; but, though he felt it to be his duty to combat the principles of his former tutor. he did it with such meekness of wisdom as not to lose his friendship, though the controversy occasioned his removal from the college. In 1662 he was a member of the synod which met in Boston to discuss and settle a question concerning church membership and church discipline, and the result was chiefly written by him. The determination of the question relating to the baptism of the children of those who did not approach the Lord's table, and the support thus given to what is called the half-way covenant, was more owing to him than to any other man. Considering baptized persons as members of the church and liable to its discipline, he thought that their children should be admitted to haptism. He died in the hope of glory. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Mr. Shepard, his predeeessor. Ilis children were John; Nathaniel; Samuel, a graduate of 1681; and Jonathan, a graduate of 1687. Mr. M. was eminent for piety, wisdom, humility, and love. His vigorous powers of mind were diligently cultivated; his memory was very retentive; and he had acquired much learning. He wrote his sermons with eare and yet preached without notes, speaking with great late to Gen. Monteverde, who, in disregard of inajesty, and attaining towards the close of his and impressive. His delivery was inimitable. He was frequently called to ecclesiastical councils, and, possessing singular acuteness, prudence, and moderation, he was well qualified to heal differences. Attached to the institutions of the founders of New England, he frequently said, that if it should become a general opinion that all persons, orthodox in judgment as to matters of faith, and not scandalous in life, should be admitted to partake of the Lord's Supper without any examination concerning the work of saving grace in their hearts, it would be a real apostasy from former principles, and a degeneracy from the reformation already attained. He was faithful and zealous in the discharge of the duties of the sacred office. Besides his stated labors on the Sabbath, he preached a monthly lecture upon man's misery by sin, salvation by Christ, and holy obedience, which was much attended by persons from the neighboring towns. He published a letter of counsel to his brother, 1664; an election sermon, entitled, Nehemiah upon the wall in troublesome times, 1667; a letter concerning the subject of baptism, 1675; a discourse of the glory to which God hath called believers by Jesus Christ, printed London, reprinted Boston, 12mo., 1721. - His Life, by C. Mather; Magnalia, IV. 158-185; Hist. Soc. VII. 23, 27, 47-51.

MITCHELL, JOHN, M. D., F. R. S., a betanist and physician, came from England to Virginia about the year 1700. He died in 1772. His residence was chiefly at Urbana, a small town on the Rappahanock, about 73 miles from Richmond. He appears to have been a man of observation. acuteness, and enterprise, as well as learning. He wrote, in 1743, an essay on the causes of the different colors of people in different climates, which was published in the philosophical transactions, vol. XLIII. He attributes the difference of the human complexion to the same causes which have been assigned by Dr. Smith, to the influence of climate and modes of life; and he thinks that the whites have degenerated more from the original complexion in Noah and his family, than the Indians, or even negroes. The color of the descendants of Ham he considers a blessing rather than a ourse, as without it they could not well inhabit Africa. He published also an essay on the preparations and uses of the various kinds of potash, in philosophical transactions, vol. XLV.; a letter concerning the force of electrical cohesion, in vol. LL; and a useful work on the general principles of botany, containing descriptions of a number of new genera of plants, 4to. 1769. It is believed that he was also the author of the map of North America, published in 1755, which was accompanied by a large pamphlet, entitled, the contest in America, discourses a fervency which was most energetic and impressive. His delivery was inimitable. Ho was frequently called to ecclesiastical councils, and, possessing singular acuteness, prudence, and moderation, he was well qualified to heal differences. Attached to the institutions of the founders of New England, he frequently said. Thacker.

MITCHELL, Justus, minister of New Canaan, Conn., died in 1806, aged about 50. He graduated at Yale in 1776, and was ordained in 1781. — Sprague's Annals.

MITCHELL, DAVID, general, died in Juniata, Cumberland county, Penn., May 25, 1818, aged 76. He was a soldier in Bouquet's campaign, in 1764, and a friend of the Indian chief Logan. With the Indians he was capaged in twenty-seven actions. He fought also during the whole Revolutionary war. For more than twenty years he was a representative in the State legislature, and twice an elector of president.

MITCHELL, AMMI R., a physician, the son of Judge David Mitchell, died May 14, 1824, aged 62. He was born at North Yarmouth, Me., May 8, 1762. Having studied physic at Portsmouth, when, at the close of the war, the America, a seventy-four gun ship, was presented by congress to the king of France, he accompanied Dr. Mezubec, the surgeon of the ship, to Brest, where he enjoyed many advantages for improvement in surgery. On his return he settled at North Yarmouth, where he had extensive practice through life. He was also an eminent Christian; for twenty-one years a deacon of the church. He was found dead in the street, having been thrown from his gig, as he was riding. He published an eulogy on Washington, 1800; an address on sacred music, 1812. - Cummings' Sermon; Thacher.

MITCHELL, Alfred, minister of Norwich, Conn., the son of Judge Stephen Mix M., died Dec. 19, 1831, aged 41. He was born at Wethersfield, May 22, 1790; was graduated at Yale college in 1809; and, having studied theology at Andover, was ordained as the successor of Mr. Hooker Oct. 27, 1814. He was a man of intellectual power, of firmness and zeal, yet modest and retiring. Almost his last words were, "The will of the Lord be done." He published several occasional sermons. From the lines written on his death by Mrs. Sigourney, who once attended on his preaching, the following is an extract. She had heard that one of his last expressions was, "Am I so near my home?"

"Pure spirits should not pass unmourn'd.
This earth is poor without them. —But a view of better elimee broke o'er thee, and thy soul
Rose o'er its stricken tent with outspread wing of scraph rapture: for to reach a iome,
Where is no rootless hope, no vain desire,
No film o'er faith's bright eye, for love no blight,
Is glorious gain. —Teacher and guide, farewell."

the present nerica, 1767. s it appeared ands of Dr. nunicated to 318; 11. 367;

New Canaan. He graduned in 1781.

d in Juniata, , 1818, aged campaign, in chief Logan. d in twentyng the whole twenty years te legislature, an, the son of 4, 1824, aged uth, Me., May t Portsmouth, e America, a d by congress icd Dr. Meaurest, where he provement in at North Yaractice through Christian; for church. He g been thrown He published); an address ngs' Sermon ; r of Norwich, Mix M., died rn at Wethersd at Yale cold theology at ccessor of Mr. man of intelal, yet modest ds were, "The blished several nes written on once attended n extract. She xpressions was, nmourn'd. iut a view thy soul read wing sire, e no blight, e, farewell.'

MITCHELL, STEPHEN MIX, I.L. D., an emi- of Wolfe against Quebec, he served as brigadiernent lawyer, died in Wethersfield, Conn., Sept. 30, 1835, aged 91. He was born in Wethersfield Dec. 20, 1743, and graduated at Yale college in 1763. In 1779 he was appointed associate judge of the Hartford county court, and in 1795 judge of the superior court. From 1807 till 1814 he was chief justice. In 1783 and 1785 he was elected a member of congress, and senator from 1793 to 1795. His State was much indebted to him for the establishment of her title to the Western Reserve, in Ohio.

MITCHELL, DAVID B., general, governor of Georgia from 1809 to 1813, died at Milledgeville

April 22, 1837, aged 71.

MITCHELL, COLBY C., missionary to Mosul, died in June, 1811, on his journey to M., distant five days' journey. In a few days afterwards Mrs. Mitchell died at Mosul.

MITCHELL, NAHUM, judge, died at East Bridgewater Aug. 1, 1853, aged 84. He was the son of Cushing M., and a graduate of 1789 in the class of Dr. Kirkland. He sustained various offices; was representative in congress, treasurer of the State, chief justice of the court of common pleas. He published a history of Bridgewater, 1840; and with B. Brown he edited a collection of sacred music.

MITCHELL, SAMUEL LATHAM, M. D., LL. D., died in New York Sept. 8, 1831, aged 67. His father, Robert, was a Quaker farmer on Long Island, and, being adopted by his uncle, Dr. S. Latham, he was well educated. After the close of the war he studied medicine and natural history in Edinburgh. He was appointed professor of chemistry and natural history in Columbia college. In a discourse before the historical society, he gave an account of all books on American botany. For several years he was a member of congress and a senator. His practice was extensive; he was physician to the city hospital; with Dr. Smith he edited fourteen volumes of the medical repository. He published also life of Tammany, the Indian chief, 8vo. 1795; remarks on the gaseous oxyde of azote, 18mo. 1795; observations on the geology of America; picture of New York, 12mo. 1807; description of Schooley's mountain in New Jersey, 8vo. 1810; discourse before the New York historical society, 1813. -Williams' Med. Biog.

MIX, STEPHEN, minister of Wethersfield, Conn., died in 1738, aged 66. Born in New Haven, he graduated at Harvard in 1690, and was ordained in 1694 as successor of J. Woodbridge. His successor was J. Lockwood.

MONCKTON, ROBERT, governor of New York from 1762 to 1763, died in England, as governor of Portsmouth, in 1782. In 1755 he was lieut .governor of Nova Scotia, and in the expedition in 1758, on the Potomac, in Westmoreland county, general. He was succeeded by Sir H. Moore as governor of New York.

MONETTE, JOHN W., M. D., died in Louisiana March 1, 1851. He was the author of a history of the discovery and settlement of the valley of the Mississippi, 2 vols., 1848.

MONIS, JUDAII, the first Hebrew instructor in Harvard college, died in 1764, aged 81. He was a native of Italy, and after his arrival in this country began his instructions about the year 1720. Though a Jew, he embraced the Christian religion, and was publiely baptized at Cambridge in 1722. After the death of his wife in 1761, he resigned his oflice, which he had sustained for about forty years, and retired to Northborough. In that town he passed the remainder of his life in the family of Rev. John Martyn, who had married a sister of his wife. He bequeathed 46 pounds to be divided among seven of the neighboring ministers, and 126 pounds as a fund, the interest of which was to be given to the indigent widows of ministers. He published truth, whole truth, nothing but the truth, 1722; and a Hebrew grammar, 4to. 1735.

MONRO, GEORGE, M. D., a physician, died Oct. 11, 1819, aged 59. He was born at Newcastle, Delaware, Feb. 22, 1760; his father, George M., came from Scotland. At the close of the war he was a surgeon in the army. On the return of peace he spent three years in London and Edinburgh, and profited by the lectures of Cullen, Gregory, Black, Home, Brown, and Monro. He published at this period a Latin dissertation on Cynanche, which was commended by Cullen. In 1786 he settled on his farm at St. George's, Newcastle county; in 1793 he removed to Wilmington, where he passed the remainder of his life in extensive practice as a physician and surgeon. He was an Infidel till about 1800, when he publicly acknowledged his belief in Christianity, and joined the Presbyterian church, and ever afterwards exhibited the virtues of an eminent Christian. In all his habits he was simple. He drank nothing but water. His strict economy enabled him to be extensively charitable; his charities prevented him from accumulating property. Of uniform piety, he was punctual in attending upon every religious ordinance. The eternal welfare of his patients weighed upon his heart; he conversed with them on religion. His bible was always open before him; he relished no book, company, or employment, which was not spiritual. He died of ossification of the heart. His wife was Jemima, daughter of Col. John Haslet, who fell in the battle of Princeton. - Thacher.

MONROE, JAMES, president of the United States, died July 4, 1831, aged 72. He was born

an

sla

W

pla

res

ou

fell

pie

the

Th

arn

sur

120

Vt.

Lo

he

cial

ban

in 177

Irel

cell

edu

he s

Que

was

und

to 1

thou

bibe

risin

val i

Yor

mar

now

the

he v liber

his s

man

depa

Schi

of S

him

Nov

he t

nold

siege

dete

divis

mids

them

at th

St. L

riers.

guns

kille that λ

I

Spence, a mason. Having been educated at William and Mary college, he in 1776 entered as a cadet in the regiment commanded by Col. Mercer. Being appointed a lieutenant, he joined the army of Washington, and was engaged in the battles of Harlem Heights and White Plains. In the attack on Trenton, Dec. 26, 1776, he was wounded through the left shoulder, and for his bravery was promoted to be a captain of infantry. Being soon appointed aid to Lord Stirling, he served as such in 1777 and 1778, and was engaged in the battles of Brandywine, Germantown, and Monmouth. In 1778 he proposed to raise a regiment in Virginia, but, not being successful, he engaged in the study of the law under Mr. Jefferson, yet rendered good military service in the repulse of invasions. In 1780 he was military commissioner for Virginia, and visited the southern army under De Kalb. In 1782 he was elected from King George county to the assembly; the next year, at the age of twenty-four, he was a member of congress. His enlarged views at this period were evinced by his proposition, in 1780, which, however, was not adopted, to vest congress with power to regulate trade with all the States. Having served three years, he returned home in 1786. In the mean time he had married a beautiful young lady, whose person and conversation had attracted much notice in Paris and London. In 1788 he was a member of the convention of Virginia, which considered the constitution of the United States, - an assembly of illustrious and eloquent men, never equalled in any State. From 1790 to 1794 he was a senator of the United States. Washington sent him in 1794 as minister plenipotentiary to France. He was recalled in 1797. As he had been severely censured in a letter of Mr. Pickering, the secretary of State, of June 13, 1796, for not vindicating at the French court the British treaty, he published on his return the whole of his correspondence, with one hundred pages of preliminary observations. He was attached to the republican party as contradistinguished from the federalists. From 1799 to 1802 he was governor of Virginia. When Mr. Livingston was resident minister at Paris, he was appointed to join him as envoy extraordinary in 1802, for the purchase of Louisiana. This service having been performed, he repaired in 1803 to London as successor of Mr. King, minister at the British court. In 1805 he assisted Mr. Charles Pinckney in a negotiation in Spain, and then returned to London, where he remained two or three years, occupied in important duties. He remonstrated against the seizure of vessels under the orders in council. With Wm. Pinkney he 1756 he became a field-marshal, and was sent to negotiated a commercial treaty with Great Britain, Canada, where he succeeded Dieskau. He soon which Mr. Jefferson rejected, because it did not took Oswego; and in 1757 fort William Henry;

Virginia, on the land of his ancestor, one of the provide against impressment. After an absence first patentees of the province. His father was of five years, returning home in 1808, he passed the two next years on his farm in Albemarle county. In 1811 he was again elected governor of Virginia. Mr. Madison nominated him as secretary of State, as successor of R. Smith, Nov. 25, 1811, and he remained in office till 1817, being also secretary at war as successor of J. Armstrong, from Sept. 27, 1814, to March 2, 1815, when Mr. Crawford was appointed. Being elected the fifth president of the United States, he commenced his administration March 4, 1817, and, being subsequently re-elected, with only one dissenting vote, continued in his high office eight years, till 1825. His wife, the daughter of Lawrence Kortwright, died in Virginia at Oak IIill, his residence, in Loudoun county, Sept. 23, 1830. He died July 4, 1831. It was remarkable that Adams and Jefferson also died July the fourth, 1826. He left no son; one daughter married Judge George Hay of Richmond, and was left a widow in Sept., 1830; another married Samuel L. Gouverneur of New York, at whose house Mr. Monroe died. He was an attendant on the Episcopalian worship. Mr. Monroe possessed a very determined spirit and was distinguished for unwearied industry. There was much energy in the measures of his administration: the army and navy were strengthened; surveys and plans of fortifications were made; a cession of Florida from Spain was obtained; the independent States of South America were recognized; and the hold declaration was made to the world, that an interference of European powers in respect to those States would not be tolerated. Vigorous efforts were also made for the suppression of the slave trade; the pension for the Revolutionary soldiers was voted; and the generous La Fayette received from the United States the just acknowledgment of his services in promoting the establishment of American liberty. Though in the course of his life he had received from the public treasury for his services 358,000 dollars, he retired from the office of presidency deep in debt. He was, however, at last relieved by the adjustment by congress of his claims, founded chiefly on the disbursements made during the war.

MONSON, ÆNEAS, Dr., died at New Haven Aug. 22, 1852, aged 89, then the oldest graduate of Yale, in 1780. In the American army he was an assistant surgeon. Afterwards he was a merchant, and president of several banks.

MONTCALM, LOUIS JOSEPH DE, marquis of St. Veran, a distinguished French general, was born of a noble family at Candiac in 1712, and entered early in the army. He commanded with reputation in Italy, Bohemia, and Germany. In slaughter from the walls of Ticonderoga. When Wolfe in his attack on Quebec had gained the plains of Abraham, Sept. 13, 1759, Montealm resolved upon a battle, and accordingly marched out. The commanders of the two armies both fell, equally illustrious for bravery, and both occupied by the event of the battle at the moment they were about to exchange time for eternity. The former rejoiced that he should die in the arms of victory, and the latter that he should not survive the surrender of Quebec. - Wynne, II. 125, 141; Marshall, 1. 407, 414, 450, 456-164.

MONTEFIORE, JOSHUA, died in St. Albans, Vt., June 26, 1843, aged 81. He was a native of London, and had vigorous health all his days; he never used glasses. He published commercial dictionary, commercial precedents, on the bankrupt laws, and other works.

MONTGOMERY, RICHARD, a major-general in the army of the United States, died Dec. 31, 1775, aged 38. He was born in the north of Ireland in the year 1737. He possessed an excellent genius, which was matured by a good education. Entering the army of Great Britain, he successfully fought her battles with Wolfe at Quebec in 1759, and on the very spot where he was doomed to fall, when fighting against her under the banners of freedom. After his return to England he quitted his regiment in 1772, though in a fair way to preferment. He had imbibed an attachment to America, viewing it as the rising seat of arts and freedom. After his arrival in this country he purchased an estate in New York about a hundred miles from the city, and married a daughter of Judge Livingston. He now considered himself as an American. When the struggle with Great Britain commenced, as he was known to have an ardent attachment to liberty, and had expressed his readiness to draw his sword on the side of the colonies, the command of the continental forces in the northern department was intrusted to him and General Schuyler in the fall of 1775. By the indisposition of Schuyler the chief command devolved upon him in October. He reduced fort Chamblee, and, November 3d, captured St. Johns. On the 12th he took Montreal. In December he joined Arnold and marched to Quebec. The city was besieged, and on the last day of the year it was determined to make an assault. The several divisions were accordingly put in motion in the midst of a heavy fall of snow, which concealed them from the enemy. Montgomery advanced at the head of the New York troops along the St. Lawrence, and, approaching one of the barriers, he was pushing forwards, when one of the guns of the battery was discharged, and he was killed with his two aids. This was the only gun that was fired, for the enemy had been struck Bernardo del Carpeo, and translated into Spanish and in 1758 he repulsed Abercrombie with much | with consternation, and all but one or two had fled. But this event probably prevented the capture of Quebec. When he fell, Montgomery was in a narrow passage, and his body rolled upon the ice which formed by the side of the river. After it was found the next morning among the slain, it was buried by a few soldiers without any marks of distinction. In his person he was tall and slender, genteel and graceful. He was a man of great military talents, whose measures were taken with judgment and executed with vigor. With undisciplined troops, who were jealous of him in the extreme, he yet inspired them with his own enthusiasm. He shared with them in all their hardships, and thus prevented their complaints. His industry could not be wearied, nor his vigilance imposed upon, nor his courage intimidated. Above the pride of opinion, when a measure was adopted by the majority, though contrary to his own judgment, he gave it his full support. By the direction of congress, a monument of white marble of the most beautiful simplicity, with emblematical devices, was executed by Mr. Cassiers at Paris, and it is erected to his memory in front of St. Paul's church, New York. His remains, in consequence of an act of the legislature of New York, were taken up by his nephew, Col. L. Livingston, in June, 1818, - the place of burial being pointed out by an old soldier, who attended the funeral forty-two years before, - and conveyed to New York, where they were again committed to the dust in St. Paul's church with the highest civil and military honors. His widow was then alive. His life was written by Armstrong. - Smith's Oration on his Death; Marshall, 11. 302-311; Warren, 1. 259-268, 431.

MONTGOMERY, JAMES, D. D., an Episcopal minister at Philadelphia, died in 1834, aged 46. MONTGOMERY, WILLIAM B., missionary among the Osages, died of the cholera at the Hopefield settlement Aug. 17, 1834. A native of Danville, Penn., he was in the first family sent by the united foreign missionary society to the Osages of the Missouri, proceeding by the way of the great rivers from Pittsburg in 1821. He died triumphantly, saying, "Can it be, that in less than twenty-four hours I shall be walking the streets of the New Jerusalem? I know in whom I have believed." His wife, Harriet Woolley of New York, died Sept. 5, 1834. He had reduced the Osage language to writing, and translated various portions of Scripture. His book was printed at Boston about the time of his death.

MONTGOMERY, GEORGE W., died at Washington, being a clerk in the department of State, June, 1841. Born in Spain of an Irish family, he came early to this country, and died in the prime of life. He published an historical novel, ew Haven t graduate my he was was a mer-absence

passed

emarle

overnor

him as

th, Nov.

ll 1817,

r of J.

2, 1815,

g elected

he com-

17, and,

one dis-

ce eight of Law-

ak Hill,

23, 1830.

ble that

fourth,

married

ras left a

Samuel

ouse Mr.

the Epis-

ed a very

d for un-

mergy in the army

and plans

of Florida

ent States

I the bold

t an inter-

t to those

ous efforts

the slave

ry soldiers

e received vledgment

sliment of

arse of his easury for

from the

was, hownt by conn the dis-narquis of eneral, was 1712, and anded with many. In as sent to He soon am Henry;

0

tl

b,

11

of

hi

hi

do

W

de

fu

to u]

su

Q

M

11 liv

Re

17

an

of

of

w

80

all

bo

pe ne

go wl

"

I

on

co

to his

Sk

isl

an

of

Irving's conquest of Granada. He also published (dismission from the church where he was preacha narrative of a journey to Guatemala, and various pieces in the journals. MOODY, JOSHUA, minister of Portsmouth, N. H., died July 4, 1697, aged 64. He was born in England in 1633. His father, William, one of the early settlers of Newbury, came to this country in 1634. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1653. He began to preach at Portsmouth about the year 1658, but was not ordained till 1671. In the year 1683, when Cranfield was governor, one of the members of Mr. Moody's church was guilty of perjury in relation to a vessel' sent out of the harbor : but he found means to settle the affair with the governor and collector. The faithful minister of the gospel however believed that a regard to the purity and reputation of the church rendered it necessary that a notorious offence should be the subject of ecclesiastical discipline. The governor, when called upon, refused to furnish the evidence of the man's perjury, and even threatened Mr. Moody if he proceeded. But the servant of Jesus Christ was not to be intimidated. He preached against false swearing; he called the offender to an account; and even obliged him to make a public confession. Cranfield, in revenge, issued an order requiring the ministers to admit all persons of suitable years and not vicious, to the Lord's Supper, from the first of January, 1684, under the penalty of the statutes of uniformity. He at the same time signified to Mr. Moody his intention of partaking the Supper on the next Sunday, and requiring him to administer it according to the liturgy. As Mr. Moody refused to administer the ordinance to an unworthy applicant, a prosecution was immediately commenced against him, and he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment without bail or mainprize. Two of the judges, who dissented from this sentence, were removed from their offices. At length, by the interposition of friends, he obtained a release, though under a strict charge to preach no more within the province. He then accepted of an invitation from the first church in Boston to be an assistant minister, and was so highly esteemed that upon the death of President Rogers he was invited to take the oversight of the college; but he declined. In the days of the witchcraft delusion, in 1692, he manfully resisted the unjust and violent measures towards the imagined offenders. Particularly when Philip English, a merchant of Salem, was accused, with his wife, and both were imprisoned in Boston. Just before the appointed time of trial Mr. Moody preached from the text, " If they persecute you in one city, flee to another," and provided for their flight to New York, by which means they escaped a trial God never failed him. Some remarkable inand probable condemnation. His zeal against stances of answers to his prayers, and of correthis wretched delusion occasioned, however, his spondences between the event and his faith, are

ing. In the following year he returned to Portsmouth, where he spent the rest of his life in usefulness and peace. On the approach of his lost sickness, he went for advice to Boston, where he died. His son, Samuel, a graduate of 1689, was a preacher at New Castle, N. II. He was succeeded by Mr. Rogers. Though he was deeply impressed with his unworthiness of the divine mercy; yet he indulged the hope of glory, and was desirous of entering into the presence of the Redeemer, whom he had served in his gospel. He wrote upwards of four thousand sermons, He published a practical discourse concerning the choice benefit of communion with God in his house, being the sum of several sermons, 12mo., 1685; reprinted, 1746; an election sermon, 1692. - C. Mather's Funeral Sermon; Magnalia, IV. 192-199.

MOODY, SAMUEL, minister of York in the district of Maine, died Nov. 13, 1747, aged 70. He was the son of Caleb M. in Newbury, and grandson of William M.; was born Jan. 4, 1676, and graduated at Harvard college in 1697. He was ordained Dec. 29, 1700, as successor of Shubael Dummer, who was killed by the Indians, and was succeeded by Mr. Lyman. His son, Joseph Moody, the first minister of the north church in York, died March 20, 1753, aged 52, leaving a son, Samuel, who after being thirty years the distinguished preceptor of Dummer academy, died at Exeter Dec. 17, 1795, aged 69. He had many eccentricities in his conduct; but he was eminent for piety, and was a remarkably useful minister of the gospel. In his younger years he often preached beyond the limits of his own parish, and wherever he went, the people hung upon his lips. In one of his excursions he went as far as Providence, where his exertions were the means of laying the foundation of a church. Though a zealous friend to the revival of religion which occurred throughout the country a short time before his death, yet he gave no countenance to separations. Such was the sanctity of his character, that it impressed the irreligious with awe. To piety he united uncommon benevolence. While with importunate earnestness he pleaded the cause of the poor, he was very charitable himself. It was by his own choice, that he derived his support from a free contribution, rather than a fixed salary in the usual way. In one of his sermons, he mentions that he had been supported twenty years in a way most pleasing to him, and had been under no necessity of spending one hour in a week in care for the world. Yet he was sometimes reduced almost to want, though his confidence in the kind providence of reach-Portsin useis lost ere ho 39, was as sucdeeply divine ry, and of the gospel.

rmons. erning l in his 12mo., ermon, in the zed 70. ry, and 1, 1676, 7. IIe of Shuans, and Joseph urch in aving a the disny, died ıd many eminent minister ie often parish, pon his s far as e means hough a n which ort time ance to his charrith awe. volence.

pleaded haritable he den, rather n one of een sup-

asing to f spende world. to want, dence of able inof correfaith, are once came, and his table was unsupplied with provisions; but he insisted upon having the cloth laid, saying to his wife, he was confident that they should be furnished by the bounty of God. At this moment some one rapped at the door, and presented a ready cooked dinner. It was sent by persons who on that day had made an entertainment, and who knew the poverty of Mr. Moody. He was an irritable man, though he was constantly watchful against this infirmity. He once went into a tavern, and among a number of gamblers found a member of his church. In his indignation he seized hold of him, and east him out at the door. In one of his sermons the doctrine, which he drew from his text, and which was the foundation of his discourse, was this: "When you know not what to do, you must not do you know not what." He published the doleful state of the damned, especially of such as go to hell from under the gospel, 1710; Judas hung up in chains, 1714; election sermon, 1721; a summary account of the life and death of Joseph Quasson, an Indian. - Sullivan's Maine, 238; a Funeral Sermon on Moody.

MOODY, SAMUEL, Dr., died at Brunswick, Me., in 1758, while in command of fort George. He was the son of Rev. S. M. of Newcastle. He was at first a surgeon in the army in 1722, and lived at Portland. MOODY, JOSEPH, minister of the north church in York, Me., died in 1753, aged 53. The son of Rev. Samuel M., he graduated at Harvard in 1718; and then for years was register of deeds and judge of a court. He became the minister of a new church about 1732; but after the death of his wife he fell into a deep melancholy, and wore a handkerchief over his face, for which reason he was called Handkerchief Moody. Yet in all his gloom he had some gleams of wit. He boarded with his deacon, who was of a hasty temper, and who one day asked him to pray for a neighbor, chargeable with some fault, "who had got terribly out of the way." Mr. Moody asked, whether he might not possibly share in the blame? "No, no, no," eried the deacon. "If I thought I did, I would take my horse and ride fifty miles on end."- "Ah," said Mr. M., "I believe, Deaeon Bragdon, it would take a pretty good horse to outride the devil!" Mr. M. was respected for his abilities and Christian virtues. He published several religious tracts. - Sprague's Annals;

Sketches of the Moody Family.

MOODY, JOSHUA, a minister and teacher, died at Newburyport in 1768, aged 82. Born in Salisbury, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1707, and was soon ordained as a preacher for the Isle of Shoals; which place he left in 1733, and settled as a schoolmaster at Hampton, then at ble chart of Caseo bay. Newburyport. Once, as a fishing shallop had not yet forgotten in York. The hour of dinner | been lost in a northeast storm in Ipswich bay, he endeavored to impress this event upon his seafaring hearers at the Shoals in this way: "Suppose, my brethren, any of you should be taken short in the bay in a n east storm, your hearts thing but death before trembling with fear, and you; whither would your thoughts turn, and what would you do?"-" What would I do?" replied one of the hardy seamen, "why, I would instantly hoist the foresail and scud away for Squam.

MOODY, John, first minister of Newmarket, N. II., died in 1778, aged 73. Born in Byfield parish, Newbury, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1727, and was settled in 1730.

MOODY, SAMUEL, an eminent teacher, died in Dec., 1795, aged 69. He was the son of Rev. J. Moody of York, born in 1726, graduated in 1746, and commenced the business of teaching in York, but was soon ealled to take charge of the neademy in Newbury, founded by Governor Dummer. His fame as a teacher drew many pupils, and he toiled successfully nearly thirty years, till his infirmities caused him to retire from his field of labor. Many distinguished men were the pupils of Master Moody. He was conscientious, faithful, a man of piety and religion. -C. C. P. Moody's Sketches of the Moody Family.

MOODY, BENJAMIN, a very eminent Christian, adorned with all the virtues, died at Newburyport in 1802, aged 81. His character was described by his pastor, Dr. Dana, in a funeral sermon.

MOODY, SILAS, minister of Arundel, Maine, died in 1816, aged 74. He was of the fourth descent from William, who came from England; born in Newbury, the son of William; graduated at Harvard in 1771; and was ordained at Arundel, now Kennebunkport, in 1771. He was an excellent minister. He published a sermon on the death of Washington.

MOODY, Amos, minister of Pelham, N. H., died in 1819, aged 79. Born in Newbury, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1759; was settled in 1765; and dismissed in 1792. Dr. Church was his successor.

MOODY, PAUL, a memorable man in the history of cotton-spinning, died at Lowell in 1831, aged 52. He was the son of Paul of Byfield, He had the charge of the Waltham cotton company about 1813 or 1814, and made several important inventions, as the dead spindle, the governor, and others. About 1824 he was transferred as superintendent to Lowell. - Sketches of the Moody Family.

MOODY, LEMUEL, captain, died at Portland, Maine, August 11, 1846, aged 79; his father came from Newbury. He was active in erecting the observatory. He published in 1825 a valua-

MOODY, Anson, M. D., worthy of honorable aged 63; a victim to the ship fever, contracted in the faithful discharge of his duty.

MOOERS, BENJAMIN, general, died at Plattsburgh Feb. 20, 1838, aged 80. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and settled in the wilderness of New York in 1783. He held the rank of major-general, and commanded at the siege of Plattsburgh.

MOOR, MORDECAL, died in Clinton, Maine, in 1840, aged 103. He served in the French war.

MOORE, JAMES, governor of South Carolina in 1700 to 1703, and in 1719, undertook an unsuccessful and costly expedition against Florida. The expense occasioned the first issue of paper money under the name of bills of credit.

MOORE, ALEXANDER, Dr., died at Bordentown, N. J., Aug. 30, 1785, aged 74. He had been nearly forty years in practice, a man of skill and of a cheerful temper.

MOORE, ABRAHAM, minister in Newbury, Mass., died in 1801, aged 33. Born in Londonderry, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1789, and was ordained in 1796.

MOORE, HANNAII, died in Effingham county, Virginia, May 25, 1802, aged 111 years.

MOORE, John, colonel, died at Norridgewock, Maine, in 1809, aged 77. He commanded on the left of the troops at the battle of Bunker Hill.

MOORE, ALFRED, judge of the supreme court of the United States, died at Belfont, N. C., in 1810, aged 55. He was a native of North Carolina and a patriot of the Revolution. He was a captain in a Carolina regiment at the age of nineteen, and sacrificed a great portion of his ample fortune in the cause of his country. After the peace he studied law, and in his profession was the rival of Davie and acquired a large fortune. He succeeded Mr. Iredell as judge in 1800, but resigned the office in 1805.

MOORE, BENJAMIN, D. D., bishop of New York, died at Greenwich Feb. 27, 1816, aged 67. He was born at Newtown, Leng Island, Oct. 16, 1748, and educated at King's college, New York. His father was Samuel M., a farmer. He was chosen the rector of Trinity church in 1800; was president of Columbia college from 1801 to 1811; and was for some years a bishop. He was succeeded by Bishop Hobart. He published a sermon before the convention, 1804; on disobedience, in American preacher, vol. 1.; iniquity its own accuser, in vol. II.

MOORE, WILLIAM, M. D., a physician, brother of the preceding, died in 1824, aged 70. He was born at Newtown, Long Island, in 1754. In 1778 he went to Europe for his medical education. For more than forty years he was in extensive practice in New York, and highly respected for quired much knowledge of medicines and was remembrance, died in New Haven Feb. 11, 1855, his virtues and religion. He published various papers in the American medical register, the repository, and in the New York journal. --Thacker.

> MOORE, JACOB BAILEY, Dr., a surgeon in the army, died in 1813, aged 40. He was of a Scotch family, who settled at Georgetown, Me.; his father was a physician and a surgeon in a national vessel. He followed his father's profession in Andover, N. II., from 1796 until the war of 1812, when he entered the army. He was skilled in music, and wrote songs. Some of his musical compositions are in Holyeke's repository. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

> MOORE, JONATHAN, third minister of Rochester, Mass., died in 1814, aged 75. Born at Oxford, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1761: was settled in 1768; and resigned in 1792. Dr. Cobb was settled in 1799.

> MOORE, ZEPHANIAH SWIFT, D. D., president of Williams college and first president of Amherst college, died June 30, 1823, aged 52. He was born at Palmer, Mass., Nov. 20, 1770; was graduated at Dartmouth college in 1703; and was the minister of Leicester from 1798 till 1811. when he was appointed professor of languages in Dartmouth college. In September, 1815, he was chosen president of Williams college. Having co-operated in the ineffectual attempt to remove this college to Hampshire county, his situation was rendered unpleasant at Williamstown; so that when the collegiate seminary was established at Amherst in 1821, and before it was incorporated as a college, he was invited to preside over it. He died of the cholera at Amherst. His wife was the daughter of Thomas Drury of Ward, He published a sermon at the ordination of Mr. Cotton at Palmer, 1811; at the election, 1818; at ordination of L. P. Bates, 1823.

1

PS be seed that I will come a

MOORE, ELIZABETH, Mrs., died in Pitt county, North Carolina, in 1833, aged 100.

MOORE, Hugh, a printer, died at Amherst, N. II., in 1837, aged 28. He was editor of the Burlington Sentinel. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

MOORE, HENRY E., son of Dr. Jacob B. M., died at East Cambridge, Nass., in 1841, aged 38. He served as a printer with Isaac Hill; published in 1825 the Grafton Journal, at Plymouth, N. II.; and then soon devoted his whole attention to He published the musical catechism; collection of instrumental music; also of church music; the choir; the northern harp; anthems,

MOORE, JAMES, M. D., Rev., of Grand Bassa in Africa, died on his way to the United States in 1851. A slave in America, by his industry he was enabled to purchase himself und family. Living with a physician in Washington, he acvarious er, the mal. -- eon in was of n, Me.; in a naofession war of skilled musical - Cyel.

Rochesat Oxn 1761; Dr.

resident Amherst He was as gradand was ill 1811. unges in 5, he was Having remove situation own; so tablished incorposide over His wife of Ward. m of Mr. n, 1818;

tt county. Amlierst, or of the Lit. ob B. M., aged 38. published h, N. II.; ention to atechism; of church and Bassa ed States dustry he d family. on, he acand was anthems,

was a member of the Methodist church and a preacher.

MOORE, JACOB B., printer and editor, died Sept. 1, 1853, aged 56. He was the son of Dr. Moore of Andover, N. H. In 1818 and afterwards he was a partner with Isaac Hill at Concord, in the printing and bookselling business. He became an able political writer, and gave much attention to the history and untiquities of New England, assisting Mr. J. Farmer in his works. He established the New Hampshire Statesman. Receiving an appointment in the general post-office department, he removed to Washington. Afterwards he was at New York, librarian of the historical society. On the election of President Taylor he was sent to California in charge of the post-office department. By his great labors his health was broken down, and twice was he obliged to return to New England. He died at Bellows Falls, Vt. The present librarian of the New York historical society is his son. His sister married Dr. Thomas Brown, who died of the cholera at Manchester in August, 1849, himself a leader in the temperance cause. Mr. M. was a man of great intelligence and industry, and of great urbanity of manners. He published a history of Andover, and of Concord; and, with Dr. Farmer, historical collections, and a gazetteer of New Hampshire; the laws of trade in the United States, 1840. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

MOORE, SAMUEL, died at Albion, Maine, Oct.

21, 1854, aged nearly 106.

MOORE, DAVID, D. D., died at Richmond, New York, Sept. 30, 1856, aged 69, rector for forty-eight years of St. Andrews church, Staten Island. He was the eldest son of Richard Channing Moore, D. D., late bishop of Virginia.

MOORHEAD, John, minister in Boston, died Dec. 2, 1773, aged 70. He was born near Belfast in Ireland about the year 1703, and completed his education at one of the universities of Scotland. He arrived at Boston in 1729 or 1730, being invited to become the minister of some emigrants from the north of Ireland, who had sought in that town the peaceable enjoyment of civil and religious liberty. The first meeting for the election of elders was held July 14, 1730, and the church was formed according to the model of the Presbyterian church of Scotland. He devoted himself entirely to his benevolent work, and such was the success of his labors, and the accession of foreign Protestants, that the communicants in 1736 were about two hundred and fifty. His successor was Robert Annan. He visited once or twice in the year all the families of his congregation, for the purpose of imparting religious instruction, and he concluded his visit assistant physician to the African colony. He continually in view of was unweed in his on deavors to promote the edification and salvat of his people. His mind was not destitude strength, his imagination was lively, and his to be ner was solemn, affectionate, and pathetic Panoplist, 11. 393-390.

MOREHEAD, James T., governor of Kentucky, died at Covington Dec. 28, 1854, aged 58. He was a lawyer, and held various offices; was governor in 1834, and an eminent senator of the United States from 1841 to 1847.

MORELL, WILLIAM, a poet, accompanied Robert Gorges to this country in Sept., 1633, with a commission to superintend the ecclesiastical concerns of New England. But, as Gorges failed in his plan of a general government, Morell had no opportunity to net under his commission. He lived about a year at Weymouth and Plymouth, and then returned. The result of his observations on the country, the Indians, etc., he wrought into a poem, which he published in Latin and English. It is printed in the historical collections, I. The following is a specimen:

A grand child to earth's paradise is born, Well limb'd, well nerv'd, fair, rich, sweet, yet forlorn; Thou blest director, so direct my verse That it may win her people, friends, commerce; Whilst her sweet air, rich soil, blest seas, my pen Shall blaze, and tell the natures of her men."

MORELL, George, chief justice of Michigan, died at Detroit in 1845, aged 59. Horn in Lenox, Mass., he graduated at Williams' college.

MOREY, George, died in Aug., 1829, aged 70, in the 46th year of his ministry, at Walpole, Mass. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1776.

MOREY, SAMUEL, M. D., died in Norton, Mass., in 1836, aged 79, an excellent physician. He was a graduate of Yale in 1777, and a surgeon in the army; at last, for his services he received a pension.

MORGAN, ABEL, Baptist minister of Pennepek, Penn., was born in Wales in 1637, and came to this country in 1711. He died Dec. 16, 1722. He compiled a folio concordance to the Welch Bible, printed at Philadelphia; and also translated "century confession" into Welch, with additions. - Benedict, I. 583.

MORGAN, JOHN, M. D., F. R. S., a learned physician, died in 1789, aged 53. He was born in Philadelphia in 1735. When he had completed the study of physic under the care of Dr. Redman, he entered into the service of his country as a surgeon and lieutenant with the provincial troops in the last war which was carried on against the French in America. He acquired both skill and reputation as a surgeon in the army. In the year 1760 he went to Europe to prosecute his studies in medicine. After attendwith prayer, which he always performed upon his ing the lectures of William Hunter, he spent two knees. Keeping the great object of the ministry years at Edinburgh, where he received the inman reluct

feste:

life, a church

and d

in the

and a

of wa

gent.

sation

his ju

he exe

verano

lished

ton, S

Conn.

bury,

ordain

dismis MO

Revol

Major

boy, N

mason

Culper

battle

1815.

ton of Upper

of a l

by fire

Batavi

was th

lish n

free-m

free-m

punish

was fir

an alle

taking

carriag

attend

free-m

miles

a free-

he was seen si

put it

free-m

ably st

was tl

result

many deed.

being oaths,

MO

MO

MO

and Hope. He then published an elaborate thesis upon the formation of pus, and was admitted to the degree of doctor of medicine. From Edinburgh he went to Paris. He also visited Holland and Italy. During his absence he concerted with Dr. Shippen the plan of a medical school in Philadelphia, and on his arrival in 1765 was immediately elected professor of the theory and practice of medicine in the college of that city. He soon delivered his plan for connecting a medical school with the college. In 1769 he saw the fruits of his labors, for in that year five young gentlemen received the first honors in medicine that were conferred in America. He was active in establishing the American philosophical society in 1769. In 1773 he went to Jamaien to solicit benefactions for the advancement of general literature in the college. In Oct., 1775, he was appointed by congress director general and physician-in-chief to the general hospital of the American army, in the place of Dr. Church. He immediately repaired to Cambridge: but in 1777 he was removed from his office without an opportunity to vindicate himself. The dissensions between the surgeons of the general hospital and of the regiments, and other circumstances, gave rise to calumnies against him. After his removal he presented himself before a committee of congress, appointed by his request. and was honorably acquitted. His successor in the professor's chair was Dr. Rush. He published tentamen medicum de puris confectione, 1763; a aiscourse upon the institution of medical schools in America, 1765; four dissertations on the reciprocal advantages of a perpetual union between Great Britain and her American colonies, 1766; a recommendation of inoculation, 1776; a vindication of his public character in the station of director-general. - Rush's Address, etc.; American Museum, VI. 353-355.

MORGAN, DANIEL, brigadier-general, a distinguished officer of the Revolution, died July 6. 1802, aged 65. He was born in New Jersey in 1737. At the age of eighteen he emigrated to Virginia, in 1755, and being without property, dependent on his daily labor, he obtained employment from farmer Roberts of Berkeley co., now Jefferson. Afterwards he was engaged to drive a wagon for J. Ashley, who lived on Shenandoah river, in Frederic county. At last he became the owner of a wagon and horses, and was employed by J. Ballantine on Occoquan creek. A British writer mentioned it as a matter of reproach, that Gen. Morgan was once a wagoner. He shared in the perils of Braddock's expedition against the Indians, probably as a wagoner, and was wounded by a bullet through his neck and cheek. It is said, also, that in this campaign he was unjustly punished on the charge | few years to Winchester. Gen. Lee says, that no

structions of Monro, Cullen, Rutherford, Whyt, of contumely to an officer, and received five hundred lashes. From the age of twenty to that of thirty he was dissipated, a frequenter of tippling and gambling houses, and often engaged in pugilistic combats, at Berrystown, a small village in Frederic county. From this degradation he rose to usefulness and honor as a soldier. In civil life he might also have been distinguished, had he sought to educate himself. The profits of his business as a wagoner enabled him to buy a tract of land in Frederic, on which he built a house. and where he lived at the commencement of the Revolutionary war. Soon after the battle of Lexington he was appointed a captain by congress, June 22, 1775, and directed to raise a company of riflemen and march to Boston. Recruiting very soon ninety-six men, he arrived at Boston after a march of twenty-one days. In Sept., he was detached in the expedition against Quebec, and marched with Arnold through the wilderness of Maine. In the attack on the city of Quebec, Dec. 31, 1775, he was with the party which attacked on the northerly side, along the St. Charles. Arnold being wounded, Morgan and his riflemen assaulted the battery of two guns at the west angle of the town, in a street called. not Saint des Matelots, as Marshall says, but Sault au Matelot, or sailor's leap; and, firing in.o the embrasures, and mounting the barricade by ladders, soon carried the battery. Col. Green, who commanded, marched about daylight to attack the second barrier, which was just around the angle of the town. But this attack was ineffectual, as the enemy fired from the stone houses on each side of the street as well as from the port-holes, besides pouring over grape-shot from a cannon on a high platform within the barrier. In the rear also there was a strong force to prevent their retreat. Morgan and the survivors were taken prisoners. After his exchange he rejoined the army, and was appointed to the command of a regiment. Being sent to the assistance of Gen. Gates, he contributed to the capture of Burgoyne, though Gates neglected to speak of his merit. He afterwards served under Gates and Greene in the campaign at the south. With admirable skill and bravery he defeated Tarleton in the battle of the Cowpens, Jan. 17, 1781, taking upwards of five hundred prisoners. For this action congress voted him a golden medal. Soon afterwards he retired from the army, and returned to his farm. In the whiskey insurrection in 1794, Washington summoned him to command the militia of Virginia. He afterwards was elected a member of congress. In July, 1799, he published an address to his constituents, vindicating the administration of Mr. Adams. His health declining, he removed from his residence, called Saratoga, to a farm near Berrysville, and after a man better leved this world, and no man more reluctantly quitted it. In his last years he manifested great penitence for the follies of his early life, and became a member of the Presbyterian church of Winchester. He died after a long and distressing sickness. His son was a captain in the northern army in 1812.—He was stout and active, six feet in height, litted for the toils of war. In his military command he was indulgent. His manners were plain, and his conversation grave and sententious. Reflecting deeply, his judgment was solid, and what he undertook he executed with unshaken courage and perseverance. J. Graham's life of Morgan was published in 1856.

MORGAN, WILLIAM, doctor, died at Charleston, S. C., in July, 1809.

un-

of

ing

ıgi-

in 080 life

ho

his

rnet

use,

tho

of

one a

Re-

l at

In

inst

the city

arty

the

gan

tuns

lled.

but ทิเอ

by

een,

at-

und

in-

uses

the

rom

rier.

pre-

vors

e reom-

ance

e of k of

ates

Vith

cton

tak-

this

Soon

rned

794,

the

ed a

pub-

iting

ealth

alled

ter a

at no

MORGAN, Solomon, minister in Canaan, Conn., died in 1809, aged 59. Born in Cauterbury, he was not educated at college. He was ordained in 1709, over the second parish; was dismissed in 1804; and had a lingering sickness.

MORGAN, JOHN, general, a soldier of the Revolution, died at Philadelphia in May, 1817. Major-general James Morgan died at South Amboy, N. J., in 1822, aged 66.

MORGAN, WILLIAM, captain, a victim of freemasonry, died Sept. 19, 1826. He was born in Culpepper co., Va., about 1775. He fought in the battle of New Orleans under Gen. Jackson, Jan. 8. 1815. In Oct., 1819, he married Lucinda Pendleton of Richmond, Va. In 1821 he removed to York, Upper Canada, where he commenced the business of a brewer; but, his buildings being destroyed by fire, he removed to Rochester, and then to Batavia, in the State of New York. His trade was that of a mason. Having resolved to publish a book, disclosing the ridiculous secrets of free-masonry, and his intentions being known, the free-masons resolved to suppress the book, and to punish him for his anti-masonic conduct. He was first thrown into prison at Canandaigua for an alleged deht; a free-mason paid the debt, and, taking him out of the prison, placed him in a carriage at the door, Sept. 11, 1826; and, thus attended and guarded by a sufficient number of free-masons, he was conveyed eighty or ninety miles to Fort Niagara, commanded by Col. King, a free-mason. After being confined a few days, he was removed from the fort, and has never been seen since that time. The evidence elicited has put it beyond a doubt that he was murdered by free-masons in the night, and his body was probably sunk in the Niagara river. This murder was the consequence of the masonic oaths, the result of the principles of free-masonry; and many masons, in various places, have justified the deed. Capt. Morgan was a royal arch mason, being the seventh degree, and he had taken seven oaths, binding himself not to reveal any of the throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots," and having " his left breast torn open, his heart and vitals taken from thence and thrown over his left shoulder," and other penalties of similar Lorror. In the execution of these penalties Morgan was doubtless murdered by freemasons. Such an event as the abduction and murder of a fellow citizen for merely exposing the imposture of free-masonry, which he had engaged to keep secret, naturally aroused the indignant spirit of the people of this country, especially as free-masonry, too strong for the laws, still protected the murderers. Richard Rush, the minister to London and secretary of the treasury in the administration of J. Q. Adams, in his letter of March 2, 1832, says, "A fellow citizen in New York has been murdered by a large and daring confederacy of free-masons, for telling their secrets. The spirit that led to this deed has proved itself able to reseue the murderers from nunishment; for musonic witnesses would not testify against brother masons, nor would masonic jurymen convict them, although jurymen not masonic were satisfied of their guilt. This is enough. It shows the lodge to be too strong for the law. Can there he a greater reproach to the Republic?" "It has been demonstrated, that evil-minded men, or those of weak understandings, committed murder under color of these oaths." "Masonry works in the dark. an institution is dangerous. It ought not to be allowed to exist in a well-governed country." The writer of this article published the following remark a quarter of a century ago: "Whether the institution of masonry, with its false pretensions to antiquity, its mummeries, its ridiculous secrets, its horrible ouths, and shocking blasphemies, all exposed to full light, and red with the blood of its victim, can yet sustain itself in this land of laws, and of morals, and of Christianity, assailed by two hundred and thirty newspapers established for the special purpose of overthrowing the institution, and with ten thousands of intelligent, patriotic, and indignant men frowning upon it, remains to be seen." In the result the institution has disappeared: recent attempts have been made to revive it.

MORGAN, Asapu, minister of St. Albans, Vt., died in 1828, in the 24th year of his ministry.

MORGAN, ASBURY, a Methodist minister, died at Charleston, S. C., in 1828, aged 30.

MORGAN, CHARLES W., commodore, died in command of the navy-yard in Washington, Jan. 5, 1853. Born in Virginia, a nephew of Gen. Morgan, he entered the navy in 1808, and was distinguished in the Constitution. In 1849 he commanded the naval forces in the Mediterranean, and remained on that station three years.

MORRILL, Moses, minister of Biddeford, Me., died in 1778, aged 56. Born in Salisbury, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was settled in 1742. He succeeded S. Willard, the first minister.

MORRILL, ISAAC, minister of Wilmington, Mass., died in 1793, aged 75, having been a faithful pastor 52 years. Born in Salisbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1737. He published a sermon to Capt. Osgood and his company, 1755.

MORRILL, ISAAC, a respected physician, died at Natick, Mass., in 1839, aged 92.

MORRILL, THOMAS, a Methodist minister, died at Elizabethtown in July, 1839, aged 90. He was a major of the militia in the Revolutionary war, but after 1785 was a man of peace.

MORRILL, DAVID L., LL. D., governor of New Hampshire, died at Concord Feb. 4, 1849, aged 77. Born in Epping, from 1802 to 1811 he was a minister of Goffstown, N. II., but was afterwards in political life. He was a senator of the United States from 1816 to 1822, and governor from 1824 to 1826. He published a sermon on the death of Lieut. Roby, 1812.

MORRIS, Lewis, governor of New Jersey, died May 14, 1746, aged about 73. He was the son of Richard M., an officer in the time of Cromwell, who, at the Restoration, came to New York, and, obtaining a grant of some thousand acres of land in Westehester county, died in 1673. He was born a short time before the death of his father, and was adopted by his uncle. Once, through fear of his resentment, he strolled into Virginia, and thence to the West Indies. On his return, however, he was received with joy. He was for several years chief justice of New York. He was the second councillor of New Jersey, named in Cornbury's commission in 1702, and continued, with several suspensions, till 1738, when he was appointed the first governor of New Jersey as a separate province from New York. He directed his body to be buried at Morrisania, N. Y., in a plain coffin, without covering or lining with eloth; he prohibited rings and searfs from being given at his funeral; he wished no man to be paid for preaching a funeral sermon upon him, though if any man, churchman or dissenter, minister or not, was inclined to say any thing on the occasion, he should not object. He prohibited any mourning dress to be worn on his account, as he should die when divine providence should call him away, and was unwilling that his friends should be at the expense, which was owing only to the common folly of mankind. One of his sons was a judge of the court of vice admiralty; another, Robert, was chief justice of New Jersey, and judge of the district court, and died June 2, 1815, aged 71; and a third was lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania. He was a man of letters, and, though a little whimsical in his temper, was grave in his manners and of a most penetrating mind. No man equalled him in the knowledge of the law and in the arts of intrigue. Acute in controversy, when he had advanced an argument he would not yield it, unless it was disproved by demonstration almost mathematical.— Smith's New Jersey, 428-435; Smith's New York, 125, 126.

MORRIS, ROBERT HUNTER, chief justice of New Jersey, the son of the preceding, was for near twenty-six years one of the council of that colony, and was also lieutenant-governor of Pennsylvania from Oct., 1754, to Aug., 1756. The office of chief justice he resigned in the fall of 1757, and he died Feb. 20, 1764. His vigorous powers of mind were improved by a liberal education. As a judge he was impartial and upright. Insisting upon strict adherence to the forms of the courts, he reduced the pleadings to precision and method. His address was easy, and there was a commanding influence in his manners. He was free from avarice; generous and manly, though sometimes inconsiderate in the relations of life; often singular, sometimes whimsical, always opinionated, and mostly inflexible. - Smith's New Jersey, 438, 439.

MORRIS, Lewis, major-general, grandson of Gov. Lewis M., died Jan. 22, 1798, aged 71. He was born at the manor of Morrisania, N.Y., in 1726. He was the eldest of four brothers: Staats was an officer in the British service and a member of parliament; Richard was judge of the vice-admiralty court, New York, chief justice, and died in April, 1810; and Gouverneur was a member of congress. After graduating at Yale college in 1746, he settled down in domestic life at Morrisania, having married a Miss Walton, and being devoted to agricultural pursuits. In May, 1775, he was a member of congress, and no one was more zealous for the interests of his country. He was sent to Pittsburg to detach the western Indians from the British. Disregarding his private interest, he voted for the Declaration of Independence, although British ships were lying within cannon-shot of his house. His beautiful manor of Morrisania was soon desolated; his woodland of one thousand acres was destroyed; and his family driven into exile. He retired from congress in 1777, and was afterwards general of the militia. Three of his sons served their country: one as the aid of Sullivan and in the family of Greene; another as the aid of Lee; and a third as lieut. of artillery. One of these, I suppose, was Colonel Lewis M., who died at Morrisania in Nov., 1824, aged 70.

MORRIS, ROBERT, superintendent of the finances of the United States, died at Philadelphia May 8, 1806, aged 71. He was born in Lancashire, England, in June, 1734; when he was at the age of thirteen his father brought him to this country. About 1749 he was placed in he knowledge gue. Acute in an argument disproved by cal. — Smith's Yew York, 125, nief justice of eding, was for council of that ernor of Penn-., 1756. The in the fall of His vigorous y a liberal edual and upright. o the forms of igs to precision easy, and there manners. He s and manly, n the relations whimsical, alible. — Smith's l, grandson of 3, aged 71. He a, N.Y., in 1726. ers: Staats was id a member of of the vice-adustice, and died was a member Yale college in tic life at Moralton, and being In May, 1775, nd no one was of his country. ach the western garding his prieclaration of Inhips were lying His beautiful desolated; his was destroyed; He retired from ards general of rved their coun-

tendent of the lied at Philadel-He was born in 1734; when he her brought him e was placed in

nd in the family

Lee; and a third

hese, I suppose,

at Morrisania in the counting-house of Charles Willing, an eminent merchant of Philadelphia, after whose death he was taken into partnership by his son, Thomas Willing. The partnership lasted from 1754 to 1793, a period of thirty-nine years. At the beginning of the Revolution the house of Willing and Merris was more extensively engaged in commerce than any other house in Philadelphia. His enterprise and credit have seldom been equalled. In 1776 he was a member of congress from Pennsylvania, and his name is affixed to the Declaration of Independence. In the beginning of 1781 he was intrusted with the management of the finances, and the services which, in this station, he rendered to his country, were of incalculable value, being assisted by his partner, Gouverneur Morris. He pledged himself personally and extensively for articles of the most absolute necessity to the army. It was owing in a great degree to him that the decisive operations of the campaign of 1781 were not impeded, or completely defeated, from the want of supplies. He proposed the plan of a national bank, the capital to be formed by individual subscription, and it was incorporated on the last day of 1781. The army depended principally upon Pennsylvania for flour, and he himself raised the whole supplies of this State on the engagement of being reimbursed by the taxes which had been imposed by law. In 1782 he had to struggle with the greatest difficulties, for, with the most judicious and rigid economy, the public resources failed, and against him were the complaints of unsatisfied claimants directed. He resigned his office after holding it about three years. In his old age he engaged in land speculations, by which he lost his fortune, and in his last years he was confined in prison for debt. Surely those laws which send a man to prison for misfortune, and not for crime, will at last come to be regarded as discreditable to a civilized community. His wife was the sister of Bishop White. A part of his laborious correspondence is published in the Diplomatic correspondence, by J. Sparks .- Marshall, IV. 457-460, 557, 565.

MORRIS, RICHARD, chief justice of New York, died at Westchester in April, 1810.

MORRIS, ROBERT, judge, died at New Brunswick, N. J., May 2, 1815, aged 70. He was chief justice of New Jersey during the war; and was succeeded by Brearley. Washington appointed him district judge, which post he held till his death.

MORRIS, GOUVERNEUR, minister of the United States to France, the youngest son of Lewis Morris by a second marriage, died Nov. 6, 1816, aged 64. He was born at Morrisania, near New York, Jan. 31, 1752, and was graduated at King's college in 1768. Having studied with William Smith, he was chosen in May, 1775, a member of the provincial congress, and he served zealously in the same body in subsequent years; in Oct., 1777, he was a member of the continental congress. In 1780 he removed to l'hiladelphia. Being thrown from his carriage in the street, the bones of his leg were so fractured as to render amputation necessary. The loss was supplied by a "rough stick," which he never changed for a handsome leg. In July, 1781, he was an assistant to Robert Morris in the superintendence of the finances, and after the war engaged with him in commercial enterprises. They were not connected by blood. In Dec., 1786, he purchased from his brother, a lieutenant-general in the British service, the estate of Morrisania, and soon made it his abode. In the next year he was a member for Pennsylvania of the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States. He proposed a senate for life. From 1788 to 1792 he resided chiefly in Paris, engaged in selling lands and in money speculations. In 1792 he was appointed a minister plenipotentiary to France, and held this place till Oct., 1794. Afterwards he travelled on the continent. Returning to this country in the autumn of 1798, he was chosen a senator of the United States in 1800, to fill a vacancy till 1803. In the contest for the presidency he preferred Jefferson to Burr. The project of the great canal of New York was promoted by his efforts. He died at Morrisania. His wife, whom he married in 1816, was Miss Randolph of Virginia. He lived in hospitality, and was admired for his various knowledge and his copious and eloquent conversation; yet he was sometimes overbearing and indiscreet. He delivered two months before his death an address to the historical society, in which he points out the superiority of scriptural history to all other history. He regarded religious principle as necessary to national independence and peace. "There must be something more to hope than pleasure, wealth, and power. Something more to fear than poverty and pain. Something after death more terrible than death. There must be religion. When that ligament is torn, society is disjointed and its members perish." This final testimony in favor of Scripture is the more important, as Mr. Jefferson represents that he did not believe in Christianity. He published observations on the American Revolution, 1779; address against the abolition of the bank of North America, 1785; an eulogy on Washington; an eulogy on Hamilton; an eulogy on G. Clinton; an oration before the New York historical society, 1812; oration on the restoration of the Bourbons in France, 1814; inaugural discourse as president of the New York historical society, Sept. 4, 1816. His life, with selections from his correspondence, etc., was published by Jared Sparks in 3 vols., 8vo., 1832.

MORRIS, JAMES, an eminent teacher in Conn., died in Waynesborough, Ga., in 1820, aged about March 22, 1852, aged 82. A native of Pennsyl-65. He graduated at Yale in 1775, and was an officer in the Revolutionary war. Afterwards, in his native village of South Farms, in the town of Lichfield, Conn., he founded and conducted a very flourishing academy for the youths of both was also governor from 1822 to 1826, and subsesexes. - Dwight's Travels.

MORRIS, JACOB, general, died in Butternuts, Otsego co., New York, Dec. 13, 1843, aged 89, aid of Gen. Lee in the war of the Revolution. He was the son of Gen. Lewis Morris, and the patriarch of a numerous family.

MORRIS, CHARLES, commodore, died at Washington Jan. 27, 1856, aged 70, senior officer in the navy, regarded as the ablest naval commander in the world. A native of Connecticut, he entered the navy in 1799, served under Preble against the Barbary States, and was with Decatur at his destruction of the frigate Philadelphia from under the guns of Tripoli. In the war of 1812 he was first lieutenant in the Constitution. At the capture of the Guerriere he was shot through the body. During the many years of peace his advice and services were very important at Washington. He was chief of the ordnance bureau.

MORRISON, JOHN, first minister of Peterborough, N. H., died in 1782, aged 40. Born in her intelligence and virtues; she died May 28, Scotland, educated at Edinburgh, he was settled 1828, aged 61. One of his sons is distinguished in 1766, and dismissed in 1775.

MORRISON, NORMAN, Dr., died in Connecticut in 1791, aged 71. He was born in Scotland; educated at Edinburgh; came to this country about 1740; first lived two years at Wethersfield, then settled at Hartford, where his reputation ever stood high for science and skill. He instructed pupils. He died at the house of his pupil, Dr. Farnsworth, of Wethersfield. The following anecdote is related: A patient wished him to consult an ignorant Dr. Andrus, who was conversant with the Farmington Indians, and had learned their skill in herbs. He agreed, but sent him a note requesting a meeting, written in Latin. carried it to Rector Williams, who translated it. The Yankee was not to be outwitted; so he sent back an answer written in the Indian tongue, which it was beyond the power of Dr. Morrison to decipher. - Williams' Med. Biog.

MORRISON, WILLIAM, D. D., minister of Londonderry, N. H., a native of Scotland, succeeded David McGregore, and was ordained in the west parish of L., Feb. 12, 1783. He died March 9, 1818, aged 69, and was succeeded Jan. 16, 1822, by Daniel Dana, subsequently settled in Newburyport. He was an eminently pious and useful minister. He published a sermon at the election, 1792; installation of J. Giles, 1803; a sermon at the ordination of J. Walker, MORROW, JEREMIAH, governor, died in Ohio vania, he removed to the Northwest Territory in 1795; he assisted in forming the constitution of Ohio in 1802, and was the first member of congress, then a senator from 1813 to 1819. He quently canal commissioner and representative in congress. In all trusts he was distinguished for good sense and integrity.

MORSE, EBENEZER, first minister of Boylston, Mass., died Jan. 3, 1802, aged 84. Born in Medfield, he graduated at Harvard in 1737; was ordained in 1743; and resigned in 1775.

MORSE, JEDIDIAH, D. D., minister of Charlestown, Mass., died June 9, 1826, aged 65. He was a native of Woodstock, Conn., and a descendant of Anthony M. who lived in Newbury, Mass., in 1636. He was born in 1761; graduated at Yale college in 1783; and was installed April 30, 1789. His predecessors were James, Symmes, Harvard, Allen, the Shepards, Morton, Bradstreet, Stevens, Abbot, Prentice, and Paine. About 1821 he was dismissed and Mr. Fay was settled as his successor. He died at New Haven. His wife was Miss Breeze of New Jersey, a granddaughter of Pres. Finley, and was eminent for as a painter, and is known the world over by his electric telegraph; and two are the editors of the New York Observer. Dr. Morse established the publication of the Panoplist, and was for some time its principal editor, until it was committed to Mr. Evarts. His zeal for the orthodox faith caused him to be much engaged in controversy, particularly in regard to the election of the Hollis professor of divinity at Harvard college. He deserves the title of the American geographer. He first published geography made easy, 1784, and American geography, 8vo., 1789. In 1793 it appeared in two vols. and in many subsequent editions. He published also Dr. A. could make nothing of it. However, he the American gazetteer, 1797 and 1804. Ile published also thanksgiving sermons, 1795, 1798, 1799; fast sermons, 1798, 1799, 1812; on the death of R. Carey, 1790; of Thes. Russell, 1796; of James Russell, 1798; of George Washington, 1800; of Mary Russell, 1806; masonic sermon, 1798; address to the Andover students, 1799; before the humane society; at the artillery election, 1803; history of New England, with E. Parish, 1804; true reasons on which the election of a professor of divinity was opposed, 1805; at the African meeting-house, 1808; at the ordination of H. May, 1803; of J. Huntington, 1808; before the asylum, 1807; before the society for propagating the gospel, 1810; at the convention, 1812; before a moral association, 1813; appeal to the public on the controversy concerning , died in Ohio ve of Pennsylt Territory in onstitution of ember of conto 1819. IIe 26, and subsepresentative in tinguished for er of Boylston, Born in Med-1737; was or-775.

ster of Charlesaged 65. He n., and a del in Newbury, 1761; gradul was installed s were James, pards, Morton. ice, and Paine. d Mr. Fay was at New Haven. ersey, a grandas eminent for died May 28. s distinguished world over by re the editors . Morse estab-Panoplist, and editor, until it His zeal for be much eny in regard to or of divinity at the title of the published geogican geography, n two vols. and e published also nd 1804. He ns, 1795, 1798, 1812; on the . Russell, 1796; ge Washington, nasonie sermon, students, 1799; t the artillery ngland, with E. which the elecopposed, 1805; 808; at the or-J. Huntington, efore the society at the convenation, 1813; ap-

ersy concerning

Harvard college, 1814; at the annual meeting of the commissioners for foreign missions, 1821; report on Indian affairs, being a narrative of a tour made in 1820, 8vo. - Budington's History of Charlestown.

MORSE, NATHANIEL S., Dr., died in Sutton March 17, 1835, aged 84; an eminent physician and Christian.

MORSE, Mrs., widow of Asa M., died in Belchertown Oct. 3, 1843, aged 99. She had seven children, sixty-two grandchildren, one hundred and forty-four great-grandchildren, and ten great-great-grandchildren.

MORSE, STEPHEN, a soldier who bled in the war of the Revolution, died at Haverhill, N. H., in 1843, aged 88. Of his twelve sons, all but one lived to manhood.

MORSE, JOHN, minister of Green River, Columbia county, died in Otsego county, N. Y., Jan. 3, 1844, aged 80. Born in Medway, he graduated at Providence; studied theology with Mr. Sandford of M., whose daughter he married. From 1792 he was minister at Green River twenty-three years, and then twelve at Otsego. In both places his labors were much blessed. He was a sound theologian, a faithful preacher. Among his last words he said : " I long to depart, that I may be with Christ."

MORSS, JAMES, Episcopal minister in Newburyport, died April 26, 1842, aged 62; a graduate of 1800, nearly thirty-nine years in the ministry.

MORTON, THOMAS, an early settler in New England, and a disturber of the public peace, died about 1646. He was a lawyer in England, and came first to this country in June, 1622, with Weston's company, who made a temporary settlement at Weymouth. He arrived again with Capt. Wollaston in 1625, and settled at Mount Wollaston, now Braintree. Here the company, which did not consist of persons influenced by any religious considerations, "fell to great licentiousness of life, in all profaneness, and the said Morton became lord of misrule." He supplied the Indians with arms, that they might hunt for him; and in this way, as well as by his injustice, endangered the existence of the religious settlements. On May day, 1626, a new name was given to Pasonagessit, or Mount Wollaston, that of "Ma-re Mount," commonly written Merry Mount, on which occasion there was a revel. A pine tree eighty feet in length, with a pair of buck's horns nailed near the top, was brought to the place, with drums, guns, and pistols, and raised up; a barrel of beer and a case of bottles were provided; and the company danced around the May-pole hand in hand, while one filled out the liquor and all joined in a licentious song; which, says Morton, was "lamentable to the precise separatists at Plymouth." The magistrates, at was so infested by processes from the bishop's the common request of different plantations, after ineffectual remonstrances with Morton, sent Capt. Standish to suppress the pestilent establishment. Morton was taken prisoner and transported to England; but the next year he returned, and he was again seized by the governor of Massachusetts and transported, and his house was demolished, "that it might be no longer a roost for such unclean birds." He came again to this country in 1643, and after being arrested and imprisoned a year for his seandalous book, was dismissed with a fine in 1644. His age saved him from corporal punishment. He died in poverty at Agamenticus. He published New English Canann, containing account of the natives, a description of the country, and the tenets and practice of the church, 4to., 1632. The same work has the imprint, Amsterdam, 1637, pp. 188. It professes to he written upon ten years' knowledge. As a specimen of his skill in natural history, he says, that the humming-bird "lives upon the bee, which he eateheth among the flowers. Flowers he cannot feed upon by reason of his sharp bill." He describes the principal persons under fictitious names; Mr. Endicott is Capt. Littleworth, Winthrop is Joshua Temperwell, Standish is Capt. Shrimp. He relates that at Wessagusset a young man stole corn, and was tried by Edward Johnson, a special judge, and sentenced to death; when it was proposed to put the young men's clothes on an old, impotent, sickly man, that was about to die, and hang him instead of the young man; and "so they did." Such is my memorandum after examining the book many years ago; Mr. Savuge, however, says, that he states that the proposal "was not agreed to." In either case, this was the origin of the story in Hudibras. -Prince, 76-80; Hutchinson, I. 8, 31, 32.

MORTON, CHARLES, minister of Charlestown, Mass., died April 11, 1698, aged 71. He was born in England about the year 1626, and educated at Oxford, of which college he was fellow. He was at first a royalist and zealous for the church of England; but, observing in the civil wars that the most debauched generally attached themselves to the king in opposition to the more virtuous part of the nation, he was led to attend more to the controversy between the Prelatists and the Puritans. At length he became a Puritan himself. He began his ministry at Blisland. After his ejectment by the act of uniformity in 1662, he preached privately to a few people till the fire of London, in 1666, after which event he removed to that city and established an academy at Newington Green. Among his pupils was De Foe, the author of Robinson Crusoe. Many young ministers were educated by him. After about twenty years continuance in an employment for which he was eminently qualified, he court that he was obliged to desist from it. He came to New England in July, 1686, and was installed pastor of the church in Charlestown, Nov. 5, 1686. Here he continued till his death. He was succeeded by Mr. Bradstreet. He was eminent in every kind of learning. Having a gentle and benignant temper, he was endeared to all his acquaintance. He wrote a number of treatises, but they are chiefly compendious, for he was an enemy to large volumes, often quoting the adage, a great book is a great evil. In Calamy's Continuation there is a copy of his advice to those of his pupils who were designed for the ministry. Two of his manuscripts are still preserved in this country; the one in the library of the Massachusetts historical society, entitled, compendium physicæ ex authoribus extractum; and the other in the library of Bowdoin college, entitled, a complete system of natural philosophy in general and special. He published the little peace-maker; foolish pride the make-bate, 1674; the gaming humor considered and reproved; the way of good men for wise men to walk in; season birds, an inquiry into the sense of Jeremiah VIII. 7; meditations on the first fourteen chapters of Exodus, etc.; the spirit of man, meditations on 1 Thess. v. 23; of commonplaces or memorial books; a discourse on improving the country of Cornwall, a part of which, on sea-sand for manure, is printed in the philosophical transactions, April, 1675; considerations on the new river; letter to a friend to prove money not so necessary as imagined; the ark, its loss and recovery.

MORTON, NATHANIEL, secretary of Plymouth colony, died June 28, 1685, aged 73. He was born in England, and was the son of George M., who came to this country in July, 1623, and died at Plymouth in June, 1624, leaving a widow, the sister of Governor Bradford, and four sons; from John, one of these, descended Marcus M., and from Ephraim descended Perez M., distinguished men, in the State of Massachusetts. Mr. M. was appointed in 1645 clerk or secretary of the colony court, and continued in office forty years, till his death. He wrote in 1680 a brief ecclesiastical history of the church at Plymouth, in the records of the church, which is preserved by Hazard; and New England's memorial, or a brief relation of the most memorable and remarkable passages of the providence of God, manifested to the plantera of New England, 4to., 1669. This work, which is confined very much to Plymouth colony, was compiled principally from manuscripts of his uncle, William Bradford, extending from the year 1620 to 1646, and he had access also to the journals of Edward Winslow. This work has been of great service to succeeding historians. A second edition was printed in 1721; a fifth, with notes by Judge Davis, 1826; a sixth, with notes, by the Congregational board, 1855.

MORTON, John, a patriot of the Revolution, died in 1777, aged 55. He was a native of Chester county, Penn., now Delaware. In 1764 he was appointed a member of the assembly of Pennsylvania, and afterwards a judge of the superior court. Elected a member of congress in 1774, he in 1776 voted in favor of the Declaration of Independence. Had he voted on the other side, the voice of Pennsylvania would have been against the declaration, as the other delegates were equally divided on the subject. Of the committee on the system of confederation he was the chairman. He left three sons and five daughters. He was a professor of religion and a benevolent and excellent man. — Goodrick.

MORTON, JACOB, general, a man of prominence in the city of New York, died in 1836.

MORTON, Perez, attorney-general of Massachusetts, died at Dorchester in 1837, aged 87. He graduated at Harvard in 1771.

MORTON, SAMUEL GEORGE, Dr., died in Philadelphia in 1851, aged 52. He was for thirty years a member of the academy of natural sciences, of which he was president. He had a museum of crania, the most extensive in the world. He published crania Americana, and crania Egyptiaca; a work on consumption; and other works. After his death his types of mankind was pablished, with a memoir. — Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

MOSELEY, Samuel, minister of Hampton, Conn., died in 1791, aged 82, in the fifty-seventh year of his ministry. Born in Dorchester, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1729. He was an accomplished gentleman and scholar, a strict disciplinarian, a faithful preacher. — Cogswell's Sermon.

MOSELEY, Anner, a physician in Wethersfield, Conn., died in 1811, aged 45. He graduated at Yale in 1786, and studied with his uncle, Dr. Thomas M. of East Haddam, president of the Connecticut medical society. — Thacher.

MOSELY, SAMUEL, a missionary, died at Mayhew in the Choctaw nation Sept. 11, 1824, aged 33. His theological studies had been completed at Andover three years previously. He was a graduate of Middlebury in 1818. His wife survived him. In great peace he requested her to weep no more for him.

MOSHER, HANNAH, Mrs., died at Galloway, New York, in 1835, aged 100.

MOSS, REUBEN, minister of Ware, Mass., died in 1809, aged about 42. Born in Cheshire, Conn., he was graduated at Yale in 1787, and was ordained in 1792. — Sprague's Annals.

MOULTON, JEREMIAH, colonel, died at York, July 20, 1765, aged 77. He was born at York, Maine, in 1683, and was taken prisoner by the Indians Jan. 22, 1692, old style, when York was destroyed by the Indians. He was released, with other children, in gratitude for the humanity of e Revolution, tive of Ches-In 1764 he bably of Pennthe superior is in 1774, he ration of Ine other side, been against legates were he committee as the chaire daughters. a benevolent an of prominin 1836.

eral of Massa337, aged 87.

, died in Philas for thirty natural scienIe had a muin the world.
I crania Egypd other works.
kind was pub4mer. Lit.
of Hampton,

e fifty-seventh chester, Mass., . He was an ir, a strict dislogswell's Ser-n in Wethers-5. He graduwith his uncle, president of Thacher.

, died at May-11, 1824, aged een completed y. He was a His wife surquested her to

at Galloway,

Ware, Mass., rn in Cheshire, in 1787, and e's Annals.

, died at York, born at York, risoner by the when York was s released, with e humanity of Col. Church, who in one of his expeditions had released several Indian prisoners, old women and children. The savages were not ungrateful for acts of kindness. In August, 1724, he and Capt. Harmon, with two hundred and eight men and three Mohawk Indians, marched against the Indian settlement at Norridgewock, in consequence of attacks upon the frontiers. There being four companies, the other commanders were Capt. Bourne and Lieut. Bean. They left Richmond fort Aug. 8, old style, or Aug. 19; the next day arrived at Taconic, where they left their boats and a guard of forty men. August 21, they marched by land, and in the evening fired upon two Indians, who proved to be the daughter and wife of Bomaseen; the former was killed; the latter taken prisoner. Aug. 23, they approached the village; Harmon with eighty men marching circuitously by the fields, and Moulton with eighty men directly upon Norridgewock, which he surprised. The Indians, consisting of about sixty warriors, were defeated, and the chapel and village destroyed. Father Ralle was killed in a wigwam, and twenty-six Indians, among whom were Bomaseen, and his son-in-law, Mog, also Job, Canabesett, and Wissememet, all noted warriors. One of the Mohawks was killed, but none of the whites. Harmon earried the scalps to Boston, and, being chief in command, was made a lieutenant-colonel for the exploit of Moulton, who obtained no reward. At the reduction of Louisbourg, in 1745, he commanded a regiment, and was afterwards sheriff of the county, councillor, and judge of the common pleas and of probate. His son and grandson were sheriffs.

MOULTRIE, John, an eminent physician of South Carolina, was a native of Europe, and came to Charleston about the year 1733. For forty years he was at the head of his profession. He died about the year 1773, universally lamented. He was the idol of his patients. So great was the confidence reposed in his judgment, that those who were usually attended by him preferred his advice and assistance, even on the festive evening of St. Andrew's day, to the advice of any other professional man in his most collected moments. He possessed excellent talents for observation, and was very sagacious in finding out the hidden causes of diseases and in adapting remedies for their removal. On account of his death, a number of the ladies of Charleston went into MOULTRIE, John, M. D., son of the preceding, and eminent for literature and medical science, was the first Carolinian who obtained a medical degree from the university of Edinburgh, where, in 1749, he defended a thesis de febre flava. He was afterwards lieutenant-governor of East Florida. — Ramsay's Review of Medicine, 43; Miller, II. 364.

MOULTRIE, WILLIAM, governor of South Carolina, and a major-general in the American war, died in Charleston Sept. 27, 1805, aged 75. He was devoted to the service of his country from an early period of his life. In the Cherokee war, in 1760, he was a volunteer under the command of Governor Littleton. He was afterwards in another expedition under Col, Montgomery. He then commanded a company in a third expedition in 1761, which humbled the Cherokees, and brought them to terms of peace. He was among the foremost at the commencement of the Revolution to assert the liberties of his country, and he braved every danger to redress her wrongs. His manly firmness, intrepid zeal, and cheerful exposure of every thing he possessed, added weight to his counsels, and induced others to join him. In the beginning of the war he was colonel of the second regiment of South Carolina. His defence of Sullivan's Island, with three hundred and forty-four regulars and a few militia, and his repulse of the British in their attack upon the fort, June 28, 1776, gained him honor. In consequence of his good conduct, he received the unanimous thanks of congress, and in compliment to him, the fort was from that time called fort Moultrie. In 1779 he gained a victory over the British in the battle near Beaufort. In 1780 he was second in command in Charleston during the siege. After the city surrendered he was sent to Philadelphia. In 1782 he returned with his countrymen, and was repeatedly chosen governor of the State, till the infirmities of age induced him to withdraw to the peaceful retreat of dcmestic life. The glory of his honorable services was surpassed by his disinterestedness and integrity. An attempt was once made on the part of the British to bribe him, and he was thought to be more open to corruption, as he had suffered much in his private fortune. But, resolving to share the fate of his country, he spurned the offers of indemnification and preferment which were made him. He was an unassuming, easy, and affable companion, cheerful and sincere in his friendships. He published memoirs of the American Revolution, so far as it related to North and South Carolina and Georgia, 2 vols. 8vo., 1802. This work is principally a collection of letters, written by civil and military officers in the time of the war. - Hollingshead's Discourse.

MOUNTAIN, Jacon, first Episcopal bishop of Quebec, was consecrated about the year 1794, and died at Marchmont, near Quebec, June 19, 1825, aged 75. He was succeeded by Dr. Stewart.

MOURT, GEORGE, published a relation or journal of the beginning and proceedings of the English plantation, settled at Plymouth in New England by certain English adventurers, both merchants and others, London, 1622. This was abridged by Purchas and republished in historical collections, VIII. 203-239. The parts of the original relation which are omitted in the abridgment, are published in 2 hist. coll. IX. 26-74. This relation, probably written by different persons, includes a journey to Packanokik, the habitation of the great king, Massassoit. Concerning Mourt himself nothing is known; it is supposed that he was one of the merchant adventurers.

MOXON, GEORGE, first minister of Springfield, Mass., was born at Wakefield, in Yorkshire, England, and educated at Cambridge. Coming to this country as a preacher in 1637, he was in that year settled at Springfield, where he remained until 1652, when he returned to England. He preached in different places till disabled by age and the palsy. He died at Congleton Sept. 15, 1687, aged 84. He was succeeded by Mr. Glover. His son, George, was ejected from a parish in Essex in 1662. Some sermons on selfdenial were prepared for the press, but not MOXUS, an Indian chief of distinction at Norridgewock, in Maine, about 1690, was concerned, in 1702, in a treacherous but unsuccessful assault on Maj. March at Casco.

MUHLENBERG, HENRY MELCHIOR, D. D., the founder of the German Lutheran church in the United States, was born at Eimbeck, in Hanover, Germany, in 1711, and came to Philadelphia, where he was the paster of a German Lutheran church forty-five years, and distinguished for his piety and learning. He died in 1787, aged 76. His three sons, Peter, Frederick, and Henry, were distinguished men: Frederic Augustus, treasurer of the State, president of the convention which ratified the constitution of the United States, member of congress and speaker of the house in 1793, died at Lancaster June 4, 1801, aged 51.

MUHLENBERG, PETER, major-general in the army of the Revolution, son of the preceding, died Oct. 1, 1807, aged 62. In obedience to the wishes of his father he studied divinity, and officiated as an Episcopal clergyman in Virginia until 1776, when he was elected a member of the convention. He soon entered the military service in command of a regiment. In conducting a storming party at Yorktown, he and all his men were wounded. In Feb., 1777, he was appointed brigadier-general, and major-general at the close of the war. In 1801 he was appointed a senator of the United States from Pennsylvania, and in 1802 collector of the port of Philadelphia, in which office he continued till his death.

MUHLENBERG, HENRY ERNET, D. D., a botanist, the son of Rev. Henry M. M., died May 23, 1815, aged 61. He was born in New Providence, Montgomery county, Penn., Nov. 17, 1841, aged 32. She sailed with Mrs. Castle, two elder brothers to finish his education. On his return in 1770 he was ordained, at the early age of 17, and in 1774 appointed one of the ussistants of his father in the Philadelphia congregation. In 1780 he accepted a call from Lancaster, where he lived about thirty-five years in the exemplary discharge of the duties of his office. He died of the apoplexy. While he was a learned theologian and well acquainted with the ancient languages, and skilful also in medicine, chemistry, and mineralogy, he was particularly distinguished for his knowledge of botany. He was induced first to cultivate this science in 1777, when he was driven from Philadelphia in consequence of its being occupied by the British, From this time he corresponded with many learned botanists in Europe and America. Of many learned societies he was a member. Ilis herbarium was purchased and presented to the Amer. philos. society. He published catalogus plantarum Amer. septent. 1813; descriptio uberior graminium, etc., 1816. He left flora Lancastriensis in manuscript. - Encyc. Americana.

MUIR, JAMES, minister at Alexandria, Va., died in Aug., 1820. He published the virtuous woman, a sermon in the American preacher, II.; address to a public society, 1814.

MULLIKEN, ISAAC, Dr., of Townsend, Mass., died in 1837, aged 85, a fellow of the medical society.

MUNFORD, WILLIAM, a poet, died in Richmond, Va., June 21, 1825, aged 49. His father, Col. Robert, was a patriot of the Revolution. whose poems were published in 1798. The son was educated at William and Mary college; studied law; was many years a member of the house of delegates; then was appointed clerk till his death. He translated the whole of Homer's Iliad into blank verse: the work was published in two vols., 1846, at Boston. He published also an early volume of poems and prose writings. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

MUNGER, Mrs., wife of S. B. Munger, missionary in India, died at sea March 12, 1846, aged 45. Her body was committed to the Indian ocean in lat. 37°. Her name was Maria Andrews, of Middlebury, Vt. She arrived at Bombay with her husband in Sept., 1834. For several years she devoted herself to her missionary work; but ill health compelled her to visit her native country in 1842. It was on her return to India that she died in great peace. Her heart of benevolence was turned towards India; for India were her cares, watchings, teachings, prayers, and tears, in much weakness and painfulness. She could not lose her reward.

MUNN, LOUISA, wife of Bethuel Munn, missionary at the Sandwich islands, died Aug. 25, 1753. In 1763 he was sent to Halle with his She was the daughter of Deacon Eli Clark of ucation. On , at the early l one of the adelphia conall from Lan--five years in duties of his While he was quainted with also in mediwas particuge of hotany. his science in hiladelphia in y the British. l with many America. Of nember. His esented to the hed catalogus descriptio ubevnsend, Mass., of the medical

eft flora Lan-

Americana.

exandria, Va.,

d the virtuous

preacher, II.;

died in Rich-). His father, e Revolution, 798. The son Mary college; nember of the ppointed clerk e whole of Howork was pub-He published prose writings.

Munger, mis-12, 1846, aged to the Indian vas Maria Anrrived at Bom-. For several issionary work; isit her native rn to India that of benevolence ndia were her s, and tears, in She could not

uel Munn, misdied Aug. 25, h Mrs. Castle. 1 Eli Clark of Skancateles. She was a diligent teacher; her | Westbrook, Conn., he descended from the Procharacter was marked by humility, patience, and love to the Redeemer.

MUNSON, SAMUEL, minister of Lenox, Mass., died in 1814, aged about 72. He was graduated at Yale in 1763; was ordained in 1770; and dismissed in 1792.

MUNSON, ÆNEAS, M. D., a physician, died in New Haven June 16, 1826, aged nearly 92. He was born in New Haven, June 24, 1734; graduated at Yale college in 1753; and, having been a tutor, was a chaplain in the army in 1755 on Long Island. Ill health induced him to study medicine with John Darly of Easthampton. He practised physic at Bedford in 1756, and removed in 1760 to New Haven. For more than half a century he had a high reputation as a physician, and was in the practice seventy years. Of the medical society of Connecticut he was the president. He was a man of piety from an early period of his life. At the bedside of his patients he was accustomed to commend them to God in prayer. It was with joyous Christian hope that this venerable old man went down to the dead. - Thacher.

MUNSON, SAMUEL, a missionary, died June 28, 1834, aged about 28. He was born in New Sharon, Me., and graduated at Bowdoin college in 1829; at Andover seminary in 1832. He embarked in 1833 with Mr. Henry Lyman for the East, - both accompanied by their wives, - and both were murdered by the Battahs, as they were travelling in Sumatra. His wife was Abigail Johnson, of Brunswick, Me. In 1856 there was published a memoir of H. Lyman, which gives an account of the circumstances of the deaths of these friends. Mr. L. was shot; Mr. M. was run through the body.

MUNSON, ISRAEL, died at Boston Feb. 3, 1814, aged 78. He was a graduate of Yale in 1787, a native of New Haven; a physician, then a respected merchant in Boston, a liberal benefactor of several literary and charitable institu-

MURDOCK, JONATHAN, minister of Bozrah, Conn., died in 1813, aged 66. Born at or near Saybrook, he graduated at Yale in 1766; was for some years the minister of Rye, N. Y.; and was settled at Hozrah in 1786.

MURDOCK, THOMAS JEWETT, minister in Canterbury, Conn., died in 1827, aged about 35. Born in Norwich, Vt., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1812, and was tutor three years; was ordained over the chapel church in Portland, Me., in 1819, and dismissed in 1821; and was installed at Canterbury in 1822. - Sprague's Annals.

MURDOCK, JAMES, D. D., died at his son's house in Columbus, Miss., Aug. 10, 1856, aged 80 years. He had long been known as a teacher, testant Scotch-Irish. His father emigrated from Ireland about 1700, and lived at W. fifty years. It was in a very eminent class, that of 1797, that he graduated at Yale under Dr. Dwight. In his class are the names of Baldwin, Beecher, Day, Foot, George Griffin, Staples, and Seymour. He was ordained the minister of Princeton, Mass., in 1802, and was successful in his pious labors. In 1815 he was appointed professor of languages at Burlington; and in 1819 professor of ecclesiastical history at Andover, and assistant professor of eloquence. He resigned in 1829, and passed the remainder of his life in learned industry at New Haven. At an early period he made himself familiar with Hebrew, so as to read from the Hebrew bible into English at family worship. At Burlington he acquired the German. All his writings evince his learning. In consequence of his sermon on "the nature of the atonement," some zealous writers were led to call in question his soundness in the faith; but he rested his opinions not on old creeds, but on the obvious teaching of Scripture, and he did not feel himself bound to adhere to antiquated terms, if, as he thought, they ceased to communicate the truth. He was not an unbeliever in the atoning sacrifice and mediatorship of Christ. Relying on his mediation, he calmly awaited the approach of death.

Besides his sermon on the atonement, he published a sermon at the installation of W. Bascom, 1815; a translation of Mosheim's institutes of ecclesiastical history, 1832, and recently a new edition; a translation of Mosheim's commentaries on the affairs of Christians, 1851; a translation of Muenscher's elements of dogmatic history, 1830; sketches of modern philosophy, 1842; a translation of the Syriae new testament, 1851; the Congregational catechism, 1814.

MURPHY, John, died in Fauquier co., Va., in 1838, aged 105. He was born in Ireland.

MURRAY, Joseph, a friend of literature, was a native, it is believed, of Great Britain, and educated in that country. He was one of his majesty's council and attorney-general for the province of New York. He left the whole of his estate, consisting of books, lands, and other property, in value to the amount of about 25,000 dollars, to King's college. - Miller, II. 357.

MURRAY, John, a Presbyterian minister, died at Newburyport, Mass., in 1793, aged 50. Born in Ireland, educated at Edinburgh, in his twentieth year he came to America as a preacher; and was settled first in Philadelphia, then in Boothbay, Maine, from 1767 to 1779; then in Newburyport. He had a high degree of popular eloquence. Once, when recruits were wanted in the war, he was invited to the meeting-house, attended by a regiment under arms, to try the effect of his professor, and eminently learned man. Born at oratory on the project of enlisting a full company of officers and men for an emergency. Within cline being a candidate for re-election to congress. two hours after his address the company was filled; and in a few days marched to strengthen our weak army. He by his letters induced Mr. Milton to visit N., where he founded a new church. His last words were:

"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly! He is come, he is come, he is come! "

He published a sermon on the origin of evil; the last solemn seene; appeal in behalf of the oppressed, 1768; at a fast, 1779; a voice from the wilderness; tyranny's grave destroyed, at thanksgiving, 1783; justification by imputed righteousness, in three sermons; origin of evil; on death of Jona. Payons; of R. Cross; of Rev. J. Prince, 1791; at thanksgiving, 1795 .- Miltimore's Sermon.

MURRAY, WILLIAM VANS, minister of the United States to the Batavian Republic, died Dec. 11, 1803, aged 41. He was born in Maryland in the year 1761 or 1762. After the pence of 1783 he went to London, and resided three years as a student in the Temple. At an age when the passions are generally unrestrained, with a constitution of exquisite sensibility, and in the midst of a splendid and luxurious metropolis, he retained the resolution and the firmness to devote his time and attention to those objects which were to mark the usefulness of his future life. The observations of Dr. Price, of Mr. Turgot, and of the Abbe de Mably, on the constitutions and laws of the United States, being published during his residence in England, he studied them with persevering and honest research, and gave the public result of his reflections in a pamphlet, which was favorably received. In the summer of 1784, during a vacation, he made an excursion of about six weeks to Holland; and during this short time, in which he travelled over that country, he was most assiduous in the use of his pen. The minutes, which he then took, he afterwards digested and methodized into a regular work. The intelligence of the death of his father, to whom he was most affectionately attached, reaching him at a time when his health was precarious, he sunk under the affliction, and did not rise from his bed for six weeks. After a tedious convalescence of several months he returned to his native country. He immediately engaged in the practice of the law; but the voice of his country soon called him to her councils. He was first elected a member of the legislature of Maryland, and at three successive elections, from 1791 to 1797, to a seat in the house of representatives of the United States. This station he filled with distinguished honor. His eloquence in debate placed him in the same rank with Madison and Ames, Giles and Dexter. A regard to his fortune, which was not affluent, at length induced him, in 1797, to de- liever damned for not believing? He replied,

But his merit and talents had not escaped the discerning eye of Washington, who in one of the last acts of his administration appointed Mr. Murray as minister of the United States to the Batavian Republic. This station had been occupied about three years by John Q. Adams, who now received a commission as minister plenipotentiary at Lishon. Mr. Murray arrived at the Hague at a very critical period of affairs, for the misunderstanding between the United States and France was approaching to a rupture, and the influence of the latter over the Batavian councils was uncontrolled. But by a judicious mixture of firmness, of address, and of conciliation, he suceceded in preserving uninterrupted harmony between the American and Batavian nations. With Mr. Ellsworth and Mr. Davie, he assisted in making the treaty, which was signed at Paris Sept. 30, 1800, and which has contributed in a great degree to the prosperity of America. Immediately after signing that instrument he returned to his station as minister resident at the Hague. where he remained till his return to the United States in Dec., 1801, it having been judged unnecessary to continue the expense of supporting that mission. From this period he lived in retirement at his seat in Cambridge, on the eastern shore of Maryland. In private life he was remarkably pleasing in his manners, and at once amusing and instructive in his conversation. With a mind of incessant activity he united the fancy of a poet. He had a strong and genuine relish for the fine arts, a refined and delicate taste for literature, and a persevering fondness for the pursuits of science. The keenness of his sensibility and the rapidity of his conceptions gave him a sense of decorum which seemed almost intuitive. His facility in writing was proportioned to the vivacity of his mind. His letters, by their clegance, their simplicity, their poignant wit, and unbounded variety of style, might serve as medels of epistolary correspondence.

MURRAY, John, first Universalist minister in Boston, died Sept. 3, 1815, aged 74. He was horn at Alton, Hampshire county, England, about 1741. His father was an Episcopalian; his mother a Presbyterian. They removed from Alton to Ireland. In early life he believed the doctrine of election; then he became a Methodist preacher in Mr. Wesley's connection; and afterwards he was attached to Mr. Whitefield. Repairing to London, he soon forgot the character of a minister. Good company, music, dancing, Vauxhall, and the play-houses intoxicated him. He says, "I plunged into a vortex of pleasure." Visiting a young lady to convert her from the error of Universalism, the following was the argumentation. She asked, What is an unbecongress. aped tho ne of the nted Mr. es to the een occulams, who r plenipoed at the rs, for the States and nd the inn councils nixture of n, he sucrmony beı nations, re assisted d at Paris buted in a rica. Imie returned he Hague, the United udged unsupporting ived in rethe eastern he was rend at once nversation. united the nd genuine elicate taste ess for the f his sensins gave him almost inroportioned ers, by their minister in He was rland, about palian; his noved from elieved the e a Methoection; and Whitefield. the characnusic, dancintoxicated vortex of convert her llowing was is an unbe-

He replied,

int wit, and

e as models

For not believing that Jesus Christ is his complete Saviour. She again asked, Must the unbeliever of Lindley Murray, died Aug. 4, 1819, aged 61, believe that Jesus Christ is his Saviour? Must he believe a lie? Is Christ the Saviour of the unbeliever? By this argument he was overwhelmed. His own erroneous definition of faith was indeed refuted by the questions of the lady; but, instead of abandoning that error, and regarding Christ as the Savior only of them who believe, he was led to regula him as the actual Saviour of all men, believers or unbelievers. Having lost his wife and child, he came to America in poverty in Sept., 1770. He preached at Brunswick, New Jersey, Newport, and Providence, and first in Boston Oct. 30, 1773; afterwards in Newburyport and New London, in New York and Pennsylvania. In May, 1775, he was a chaplain in a Rhode Island regiment. After preaching in Gloucester, he was established in Boston about the year 1785, and passed the remainder of his life there. After six years of helplessness he died in peace. His widow, Judith, sister of Gov. Sargent, of Mississippi, a native of Cape Ann, died at Natchez June 6 1820, aged 69; she wrote the repository and gleaner, 3 vols., 1798, first published in Massachusetts magazine, with the signature of Constantia; she wrote also poetical essays, signed Honora Martesia, in Boston weekly magazine. Mr. M. was a Trinitarian. He regarded Winchester as a believer in purgatorial satisfaction, and as teaching that every man is his own saviour. He believed that myriads of men would rise to the resurrection of damnation, and would eall on the rocks to hide them from the wrath of the Lamb; yet he seems to have considered that damnation as ending at the judgment day, when the judge would separate all men from sin and death and from the evil angels. He supposed that in the day of judgment the devil and his angels would be placed, as the goats, on the left hand of the judge, and all men on the right hand, — in most obvious contradiction to the Scripture, which says that "all nations" will he gathered to be separated. This amounts in fact to a denial of the future judgment. But since his death Mr. Balfour has explicitly maintained that there will be no future reckoning day. At last this error of denying a future judgment, and thus subverting the moral government of God, appeared so great and perilous to a number of Universalist ministers, who assert a future retribution, and the punishment, though not everlasting, of the wicked, that in Aug., 1831, they announced their full and entire separation from the denomination of Universalists, and the establishment of a religious community by the name of the "Massachusetts Association of Universal Restorationists." Mr. Murray published letters and sketches of sermons, 3 vols. His life, by himself, was published in 1816.

MURRAY, Joun, a philanthropist, a brother He was born in New York, and after acquiring a fortune as a merchant, retired from business, and devoted his income and toils to enterprises of benevolence. He was a Quaker. The society for the manumission of slaves was promoted by his efforts, and he assisted in founding and supporting most of the benevolent institutions of New York, and was liberal in his benefactions. He exerted himself to effect the repeal of the criminal code and to establish the penitentiary system. For thirty-five years he was a governor of the New York hospital. Such men of beneficence deserve to be held in lasting honor.

MURRAY, ALEXANDER, commodore, died Oct. 6, 1821, aged 66. He was born in Chestertown, Muryland, in 1755. His father was a physician: his grandfather, banished from Scotland for adhering to the cause of the pretender in 1715, settled at Barbadoes. As a lieutenant and captuin in the army he fought in the battles of White Plains, Flatbush, and New York, and served till the close of 1777. He afterwards took the command of a letter of marque. Twice was he taken prisoner, the second time in the frigate Trumbull; he afterwards served in the Alliance under Barry until the close of the war. He then suceessively commanded the Insurgent and the Constellation, and went with a squadron to the Mediterranean to protect our trade against the Barbary States. He, at last, commanded the navy yard at Philadelphia, and died near Germantown. To great firmness and resolution he united a mild and serene temper.

MURRAY, JAMES, major, a military adventurer, died in 1806, aged 41. He was born in Rhode Island about 1765; his name was Lillibridge, which he changed to Murrny. In consequence of a quarrel with his family, he went to sea in early life; in 1790 he arrived at Tranquebar, on the coast of Coromandel, and, joining the Mahrattas, who were at war with the British, he encountered in their service, during fifteen years, every kind of peril and hardship. Having displeased Holkar, the chief, by preserving the lives of British officers, he abandoned his service, and, raising a large force, occupied as a sovereign a large district. At length he went over to the British with seven thousand native cavalry, the command of which he retained. At the close of the war, having acquired a large fortune, he determined to return to America. A few days before he proposed to set sail he made a splendid entertainment in Calcutta. After dinner, for the entertainment of his guests, he mounted a favorite Arabian horse, to leap over the table at which they sat, - a feat which he had often performed. But the horse, having his feet entangled in the carpet, threw his rider, who in a few days died of the injury. Thus died, the victim of his vanity, the best horseman in India, the soldier, unrivalled in the use of the broadsword, who had fought in many buttles.

MURRAY, LINDLEY, a grammarian, died near York, England, in 1826, aged 81. He was born of Quaker parents, near Laneaster, Pa. He became both a lawyer and a merchant. He published English grammar, and exercises, and key, etc., and power of religion; on reading the Scrip-

MURRAY, WILLIAM, died near Jonesborough, Tenn., in 1836, aged 111. He was born in Maryland.

MURRAY, WILLIAM C., a leading merchant of Charleston, S. C., died in 1856, aged 49.

MUSSEY, B. B., an enterprising and successful bookseller in Boston, died Jan. 12, 1857, aged 52. Born in Bradford, Vt., he came to Boston as a book auctioneer, and became a bookseller in Cornhill, accumulating a large fortune. Attached to the doctrine of the Universalists, he was a liberal donor to Tufts' college; and his bounty was not limited to his own sect. In politics he was an honest and generous member of the Republican party.

MUTER, George, chief justice of Kentucky, died May 9, 1811. He was a soldier of the Revolution. He was appointed in 1777 lieutenant-colonel of the regiment of artillery, under

Col. Marshall, in Virginia.

MUZZY, Mrs., missionary to Madura, died Dec. 3, 1846, aged 38. She was the wife of C. F. Muzzy, missionary: her name was Samantha B. Robbins, of Wardsborough, Vt. She had toiled ten years in the missionary service; at the time of her death there was great attention to religion in the boarding-school under her care. Multitudes of the natives mourned her loss; six or eight hundred attended her funeral.

NANCREDE, Joseph, died in Paris Dec. 15, 1841, aged 81. He came to America in the army of Rochambeau, and was wounded at Yorktown. He lived in Philadelphia and many years in Boston as a bookseller; he was also, about 1800, a teacher of the French language at Harvard college. He edited a French reader, L'Abeille Françoise, 1792; and other books.

NASII, Francis, brigadier-general, a soldier of the Revolution, was a captain in North Carolina in 1771, when he distinguished himself by his firmness and bravery in an action with the insurgents. In the Revolutionary war he was appointed a colonel by the convention of North Carolina in Sept., 1775, and brigadier-general in the continental army in Feb., 1777. In the battle of Germantown, Oct. 4, 1777, he was mortally wounded at the head of his brigade, which, with Maxwell's, formed a corps de reserve under Lord Stirling.

NASH, JUDAH, first minister of Montague, Mass., died Feb. 19, 1805, aged 76, after a ministry of 52 years. He graduated at Yale in 1748.

NASH, William, minister of West Boylston, Mass., died in 1829, aged 59. He graduated at Yale in 1791.

NASH, JONATHAN, first minister of Middlefield, Mass., died in 1834, aged 69. Born in South Hadley, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1789; was settled in 1792; and resigned in 1832. He published a sermon at end of 21st year of his ministry.

NASH, Ansel, minister of Windsor, Conn., died in 1851, aged 62. He was born in Hartford, Vt.; graduated at Williams in 1809; was minister of Tolland, Conn., from 1812 to 1831, when he was settled at Wintonbury in Windsor.

NASON, REUBEN, minister of Freeport, Me, died Jan. 15, 1835, aged 36. Born in Dover, N. H., he graduated at Harvard in the large class of 1802; was ordained Feb. 7, 1810, and dismissed in 1815; afterwards he was employed as a teacher. He published an account of Freeport in historical collections, second series, vol. IV. — Sprague's Annals.

NEAL, Daniel, Congregational minister in London, died in 1743, aged 65. He published a history of New England, in two vols., London, 1720; also, a history of the puritans, in four vols. Concerning his history of New England, Dr. Watts wrote a letter to Dr. C. Mather in 1720, which is in historical collections, first series, vol. v. He hoped that Neal's account of persecution would do good.

NEAL, Joseph C., died at Philadelphia July 18, 1847, aged 40. Born at Greenland, N. II., his father had been a teacher at Philadelphia, and was a preacher at G. Mr. N. was early an editor, first of the Pennsylvanian, begun in 1831, then in 1844 of Saturday's Gazette. He was a writer of humor, a good describer of the loafer. He published illustrated volumes, entitled charcoal sketches.— Cucl. of Amer. Lil.

NEALE, LEONARD, Catholic archbishop of Baltimore, died at Washington June 18, 1817, aged 70; the successor of Dr. John Carroll.

NEALE, CHARLES, a Catholic minister, superintendent of the Jesuits in the United States, died at Mount Carmel, Maryland, April 27, 1823, aged 74. He had been appointed for the third time to his station.

NECKERE, LEON DE, D. D., Catholic bishor of New Orleans, died in Sept., 1833.

NEFF, Mary, the brave woman, a prisoner with the Indians, who, with Hannah Duston and a boy, killed their Indian masters and gained their freedom, bringing home with them ten Indian scalps. This was in 1697.

NEIGHBORS, Mr., died in Laurens, S. C., in atague. a minale in oylston. ated at

Middle-Born in outh in in 1832. r of his

Conn., n Hart-09; was o 1831. Vindsor. ort, Me., r, N. H., class of ismissed teacher. istorical

prague's

nister in blished a London, our vols. ind, Dr. in 1720, st series, of perseohia July d. N. II., phia, and an editor, 1, then in writer of fer. He charcoal ishop of 18, 1817. roll. er, superd States. 27, 1823, the third

ic bishor

prisoner uston and id gained n ten In-

, S. C., in

were both from Pennsylvania, and had been married eighty years. - Ramsay's S. C., 11. 421.

NELSON, PHILIP, an early fanatie or impostor, died in 1691. He was the son of Thomas, and came to New England with his father in 1638, and graduated at Harvard in 1654, the only graduate of that year. He made trouble in the church of Rowley, by pretending to cure a deaf and dumb boy, in imitation of Jesus Christ, by saying Ephphatha. The ministers were called together and interrogated him; but "there he stood," as say the records, " like a deaf and dumb boy, as he was." It is not stated whether this inquiry cured the impostor of his pretence, or his dupes of their folly.

NELSON, Joun, a patriot in 1689, was the leader of the soldiers who made Gov. Andros of Massachusets, prisoner. In the opinion of Hutchinson he was not raised to merited office by the people, because he was an Episcopalian. While on a trading voyage he was captured and carried to Quebee, and confined two years. His providential release was as follows: A gentleman, who called at his grate, asked him what service he could render him; and kindly sent a letter which Mr. N. had written, to his friend, Sir P. Temple, in England, who procured his freedom. He afterwards fell into the Bastile at Paris.

NELSON, THOMAS, governor of Virginia, a patriot of the Revolution, died Jan. 4, 1789, aged 50. He was born at York, being the eldest son of Wm. N., a rich merchant. At the age of fourteen he was sent to England for his education. At the university of Cambridge Beilby Porteus was his tutor. In 1761 he returned to this country. Being a member of the general convention of Virginia in 1775, he introduced a resolution for organizing a military force. Aug., 1775, he was appointed a member of congress; in the next year he signed the declaration of independence; but ill health in 1777 induced him to resign his seat. He was soon appointed brigadier-general and commander-in-chief of the forces of the colony. He also aided the cause of his country by his property. In 1781 he succeeded Mr. Jefferson as governor of Virginia. His efforts in the prosecution of the war were very important, and were particularly noticed by Gen. Washington after the capture of York, in his general orders, Oct. 20, 1781. In about a month afterwards his ill health caused him to resign the office of chief magistrate. An act was passed, Dec. 31st, to legalize certain acts of his administration, which, owing to peculiar circumstances, were done without the advice of the council. He died at his estate in Hanover. His wife was the daughter of Philip Grymes of Brandon. He had four brothers, zealous iriends of the Revolution; of these, the last, Rebert N., 1798, aged 114. His wife died aged 109. They | died at Malvern Hills in Aug., 1818, aged 66. As a soldier he was active and intrepid. Most ardently was he attached to civil and religious liberty. He was refined in manners, social, and benevolent. - Goodrich ; Ency. Amer. ; Dwight's Sketches.

> NELSON, WILLIAM, chancellor, died at Williamsburg, Virginia, July 10, 1813; professor of law in the college of William and Mary.

NELSON, ROGER, general, a soldier and patriot of the Revolution, was for many years a distinguished member of congress from Maryland. He died at Fredericktown June 7, 1815, at an advanced age.

NELSON, JOSEPH, LL. D., the blind professor of Latin and Greek in Rutgers college, New York, died in 1830. He succeeded Dr. Brownlee, and was succeeded by Dr. McClelland. So great were the powers of his memory, that he was an excellent teacher. - Cyclopædia of American Literature.

NELSON, HUGH, American minister to Spain, died in Albemarle county, Virginia, March 18, 1836. He was speaker of the house, judge of the general court, and member of congress from 1811 to 1823.

NELSON, JEREMIAH, died at Newburyport in 1838, aged 60; a man much respected. He was a member of congress from 1805 to 1807, and from 1815 to 1823.

NELSON, DAVID, a physician and minister, died near Quincy, Illinois, Oct. 17, 1844, aged about 51, a native of East Tennessee. He had an epileptic illness of several years. Though his parents were pious, yet through the influence of irreligious companions he became a sceptic. Having studied medicine, he entered upon a profitable practice; but, after a while, as he thoroughly investigated the subject of religion, he was convinced of the truth of the gospel, and embraced with a sincere and earnest spirit the profession of a minister, and for the remainder of his life devoted himself to this method of doing good, preaching in wide circuits. He did not deal so much in argument and reasoning as in anecdote and analogous illustration. His work on the cause and cure of Infidelity was published by the tract society, 1841. He gives in it his own religious history. - N. Y. Obscrver, Jan. 4, 1845.

NELSON, LEVI, minister of Lisbon, Conn., died Dec. 17, 1855, aged 76, in the fifty-second year of his ministry. He was born in Milford, Mass., and was a faithful, useful minister, with scarcely any interruption in his long labors. He preached five thousand and one hundred different sermons. His death was calm and serene. He bequeathed 1000 dollars to his parish, provided they did not settle as his successor a man embracing what was called the New Haven theology.

NETTLETON, ASAHEL, D. D., a remarkable

Windsor, Conn., May 16, 1844, aged 60. Born in Killingworth, the son of a farmer in rather humble circumstances, he was compelled to toll in order to provide for his education. He gradunted at the age of twenty-five at Yale in 1809. He wished to be a foreign missionary; but he was led to a different field of labor. For ten years, from 1812 to 1822, he was constantly employed as an evangelist; and revivals everywhere attended his preaching; as in thirty-two towns of Connecticut; in Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, and Wilbraham of Massachusetts; and in Saratoga, Hallston, Malta, Milton, Schenectady, and Nassau of New York. In some of these towns a hundred or more of persons were through his labors added to the church. He usually preached three times on the Subbath and several times during the week. A long illness of typhus fever now occurred at the house of his friend, Rev. Mr. Parmelee of Holton, who eaught the disease and died of it. When his health was restored, he resumed his toils. He preached in Albany, in New York, and in Virginia. In 1831 he went to Grent Britain. When the theological institute was founded at East Windsor, in 1833, he was invited to a professorship, which he did not accept; but he resided in East Windsor, and gave lectures. Dr. N. had great discernment, judgment, and skill in promoting the cause of religion. He was solemn and earnest, and he presented important truths most clearly; but he was not endowed with a glowing fancy. Yet, in describing the condition of sinners, he ended with the words, "lost, lost, lost," with wonderful effect. He was never married. He published village hymns. - Sprague's Annals.

NEUFVILLE, EDWARD, D. D., long the rector of Christ church in Savannah, died Jan. 1, 1851. He was a native of Newport, R. I.

NEVELING, GILBERT W., paster of the German reformed church at Amville, N. J., died in 1844, aged 93. In the Revolutionary war he preached to the battalions in New Jersey in the cause of freedom.

NEVILLE, PRESLEY, general, died near Neville, Ohio, in 1818, aged 62. Born in Virginia, he graduated at the university of Philadelphia, and entered the army at the age of nineteen. He served several campaigns as the aid of Lafayette. He was a prisoner from the surrender of Charleston to the close of the war. The battles in which he fought were those of Princeton, Trenton, Germantown, Brandywine, and Monmouth. In the latter his horse was killed under

NEVINS, WILLIAM, D. D., died at Baltimore Sept. 14, 1835, aged 37. He was settled about evangelist or itinerant preacher, died at East | Nov. 27, 1853 | long a broker and banker. A member of Mercer street church, he devoted his last years to benevolent labors. The New York hospital shared his liberality.

fer

fre

th

da

nt

nn

let

she

Ye

YOU

de

me

wij

em

wa

hea

tiec

Att

die

has

of i

tion

suff

dice

gra

his

CC8

pul

182

in 1

For

pal

teac

fitti

pre

Cor

brick

Nec

the

arn

cole

into eom

ners

One

Sale

Sav

,

NEWHY, Mrs., died in Laurens, South Carolina, after 1800, aged 112. - Ramsay.

NEWELL, TIMOTHY, one of the selectmen of Hoston, kept a diary in 1775 and 1776, when the city was shut up. It is published in historical collections, 4th series, vol. I.

NEWELL, SAMUEL, minister of Bristol, once a part of Farmington, Conn., died in 1789, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1739, and was settled in 1747, and was succeeded by G. H. Cowles.

NEWELL, ABEL, minister of Goshen, Conn., died in 1813, aged about 84. He graduated at Yale in 1751.

NEWELL, SAMUEL, a missionary at Bombay, died May 30, 1821, aged about 35. He was born at Durham, Maine, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1807, and studied theology at Andover. With Judson, Nott, and Mills, he offered himself as a missionary to the general association of ministers at Bradford, June 27, 1810; was ordained at Salem with Hall, Judson, Nott, and Rice, Feb. 6, 1812; and sailed on the 19th for Calcutta. On his arrival he was ordered by the Bengal government to leave the country. Proceeding first to the Isle of France, he suffered the affliction of losing his wife and child: he afterwards went to Ceylon, and was useful in preparing the way for the subsequent mission in that island. He afterwards joined Mr. Hall at Bombay, and in 1817 was joined by Mr. Graves and Mr. Nichols. He continued at Bombay a faithful laborer in the service of Jesus Christ until his death. He was seized with the epidemic, spasmedic cholera, in the merning of May 29th, and died without being able to say any thing of his hopes, at one o'clock the next morning. The same disease in four years had swept over India, Burmah, and the Asiatic islands, and hurried millions to the tomb; in 1832 it prevailed in London and Paris. A few days before his death he visited at Taunah many of the sick and dying, from whom probably he took the disease, as it was At that time deemed somewhat contagious. from sixty to one hundred were dying daily in Bombay. Mr. Newell was very modest and humble, possessed great tenderness of feeling, and was entirely devoted to the arduous and important labors of a missionary. He wrote, with Mr. Hall, the conversion of the world, or the claims of six hundred millions, etc., 2d edit., 1818. -Sprague's Annals.

NEWELL, HARRIET, the wife of the preceding, the daughter of Moses Atwood of Haverhill, Mass., died Nov. 30, 1812, aged 19. She NEVINS, RUSSELL H., died in New York was born Oct. 10, 1793, and received an excellent el his York

Caro-

en of m the torical

, once

, aged), and G. 11,

Conn.,

ited at ombay. s born t Harlogy at ills, he general ne 27,

Judson, on the ordered ountry.

suffered ild: he in pre-

in that t Bomves and faithful antil his e, spas-

Oth, and g of his g. The r India, ried mil-London e visited

g, from s it was at time daily in nd huming, and l imporwith Mr.

ie claims 1818. -preced-

f Haver-19. She excellent fession of religion. She sailed with her husband from Calcutta for the Isle of France, Aug. 1, 1812; about three weeks before her arrival she became the mother of a daughter, who died on the fifth day, Oct. 13, and was buried in the ocean. In a few weeks Mrs. Newell died of the consumption at the Isle of France. She departed in the peace and triumph of an eminent Christian. In writing to her mother, Mr. Newell said: "Come, then, let us mingle our griefs and weep together; for she was dear to us both; and she too is gone. Yes, Harriet, your lovely daughter, is gone, and you will see her face no more! Harriet, my own dear Harriet, the wife of my youth and the desire of my eyes, has bid me a last farewell, and left me to mourn and weep! Yes, she is gone. I wiped the cold sweat of death from her pale, emaciated face. O Harriet, Harriet! for thou wast very dear to me, - thy last sigh tore my heart asunder, and dissolved the charm which tied me to the earth." Her mother, Mary Atwood, died July 4, 1853, aged 81; her father died in 1808. Her life, written by Dr. Woods, has passed through many editions. The cause of missions was greatly promoted by the delineation of her character and the description of her sufferings.

NEWELL, JONATHAN, minister in Stow, Mass., died in 1830, aged 81. Born in Needham, he graduated at Harvard in 1770. John Gardner, his predecessor, died at the age of 80. His successor, John L. Sibley, was settled in 1829. He published a sermon, 1783; review of fifty years, 1825.

NEWELL, HEPZIBAH, Mrs., died in Monson, Mass., Sept. 22, 1834, aged 103.

NEWELL, ISHAM, died in Durham, Maine, in 1846, aged 51, a graduate of Bowdoin in 1819. For thirteen years from 1822 he was the principal of Kimball union academy, Plainfield, N. II., teaching more than twelve hundred youth and fitting two hundred for college. He was a preacher. His wife was E. M. Whittlesey of Cornish. - Mirror, Feb. 19.

NEWHALL, TIMOTHY, general, died at Sturbridge, Mass., Feb. 5, 1819, aged 76. Born in Needham in 1742, he was at first a mechanic, then a merchant and farmer. He entered the army as brigade-major, and rose to the rank of colonel. In Shay's rebellion he was also called into active service; he was also a senator and councillor. Of a noble person and dignified manners, he was also a most agreaable companion. One daughter married Dr. Ephraim Allen of Salem, N. Y., and another married Judge C. J. Savage of New York .-- Washburn's Sketch of Leicester Academy.

education. At the age of fifteen she made a pro- | from 1658 till his death in 1661, was an agent to seek redress in 1653 from Stuyvesant, the Du'ch governor at Manhadoes, and was secretary under Eaton. He was a man of benevolence and picty.

NEWMAN, SAMUEL, first minister of Rehoboth, Mass., died July 5, 1663, aged 63. He was born at Banbury, Eng., in 1600, and was educated at Oxford. He came to this country in 1630. After his arrival he spent a year and a half at Dorchester, and then, becoming the pastor of the church at Weymouth, continued there about five years. In 1644 he removed with a part of his church and settled at Rehoboth, now Seekonk, While he was indefatigable in his study of the Scriptures, and animated and zealous in his preaching, he was also hospitable, charitable, and pious. In his last illness he sent for one of his deacons, and, after requesting him to make a prayer, said: "And now, ye angels of the Lord, come and do your duty." He then immediately expired. His daughter, Hope, married Rev. G. Shove. He compiled a concordance of the Scriptures, which was published in London in a thick folio, 5th edit., 1720. While he was at Rehoboth he revised it, using pine knots in the night instead of candles. It passes under the name of the Cambridge concordance. - Magnatia, 111. 113-116.

NEWMAN, Antipas, second minister of Wenham, Mass., died in 1672. The son of Rev. Samuel N., he began to preach at Wenham in 1657; was ordained in 1663; and married in 1668, Elizabeth, daughter of Gov. Winthrop. afterwards married Z. Endicott of Salem. -Farmer; Sprague; Miss Cuulkins.

NEWMAN, NOAH, the successor of his father, Samuel N., as the minister of Rehoboth, died April 16, 1676. He was settled in March, 1668. His wife was Joanna, daughter of Rev. Henry Flynt. After his death the people voted to give his widow 15 pounds and wood; a very creditable act. To his successor, Mr. Angier, they offered 40 pounds a year, of which 10 was to be money, with a prospect of augmentation. - Baylies' Plymouth.

NEWMAN, John, minister of Edgartown, Mass., died in 1763. He was graduated at Harvard in 1740; was ordained in 1747, and dismissed in 1758. The sermon at his ordination, by T. Balch, was published. His predecessors were Mayhew, Dunham, and Wiswall.

NEWMAN, SAMUEL P., professor of rhetoric and oratory at Bowdoin college, died Feb. 10, 1842, aged 45. He was the son of Mark Newman of Andover, now living aged 84, whose father lived in Ipswich, and died aged above 90. He was graduated at Bowdoin college in 1816. He was the first professor in his department from NEWMAN, Francis, governor of New Haven 1824 to 1839. Then he took charge of the State

an 18

in i of

hil

tur

par

Sej

fro

Ma

wa

wei

ing

froi eas

in

De

ves

was a f

178

wit.

and

to 1

he '

You

con

He

mai

Mo

of :

gon

day

Am

pre

age

of t cou

181 atec

was app

digi

spe

love

died

Wa

mai

cap

the

Yor

normal school at Barre, Mass. But disease soon cut him down in the midst of life. He published a system of rhetoric, and a treatise on political in 1820, as the wife of J. Seely. In 1827, after economy.

NEWMAN, MARK II., brother of Professor N., died in Brooklyn, Dec. 22, 1852, aged 47. His wife, Mary Dickinson of Amherst, Mass., died the same year, aged 43. He was a pub-lisher in New York, a man of enterprise and success in business, and a Christian held in high NEWMARCH, John, minister of Kittery, Me., died Jan. 15, 1754, aged about 85. He was graduated at Harvard in 1690. He lived at Kittery point, on the east side of the Piscataqua, opposite Portsmouth, in 1699, and had land as the minister, but a church was not gathered until 1714, when he was ordained, Nov. 4th. Col. Pepperell, the father of Sir William P., was a member of his church at its organization, consisting of eighteen men and twenty-five women. Mr. Stevens infirmity. - Sprague's Annals.

NEWTON, ROGER, the first minister of Farmington, Conn., died June 6, 1683, aged about 63. He was born in England, and ordained the first minister of Farmington about Oct. 13, 1652, and removed to Milford in 1660. He died greatly lamented. His wife was Mary, the eldest daughter of Rev. Thomas Hooker. To her eldest child Governor Hopkins bequeathed 30 pounds, out of respect, perhaps, to her father. His daughter, Sarah, married Rev. John Wilson of Medfield. -Sprague's Annals; Farmer.

NEWTON, ROGER, colonel and judge, died at Milford, Conn., in 1771, aged 86. He was distinguished in the expeditions of 1709 and 1710. These lines are a part of his epitaph:

> "Newton, as steel inflexible from right In faith, in law, in equity, in fight."

NEWTON, CHRISTOPHER, Episcopal minister of Stratford, Conn., died in 1787, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1740.

NEWTON, ROGER, D. D., minister of Greenfield, Mass., died Dec. 10, 1816, aged 79. He was born at Durham, Conn., May 23, 1737; was graduated at Yale college in 1758; was ordained Nev. 18, 1761, and had Gamaliel S. Olds as his colleague for a few years. His wife was Abigail 17, 1777, died at Amherst, N. H., in May, 1790, Hall of Middletown. His son, Roger, educated at Yale college and a tutor, died Aug. 19, 1789. He was a faithful, useful minister, prudent and courteous and amiable in all the relations of life.

NEWTON, Mrs., the wife of Samuel N., missionary to the Osages, died at Shawncetown, Ill., May 9, 1821. She was taken ill while descending the Ohio in a boat. Her end was peace.

NEWTON, Mrs., wife of Samuel N., mission-of Illinois in 1835, aged 33. Born in Rockaway N. J., she joined the mission among the Osages her marriage with Mr. Newton, they were transferred to the missionary field, where she died. She had been fourteen years in the service. She died in peace and triumph.

NEWTON, THOMAS, for thirty years a member of congress from Virginia, died at Norfolk in 1847, aged 78.

NIBLET, Solomon, died Oct. 15, 1815, in Laurens district, South Carolina, aged 143. Born in England, he emigrated to Maryland, and thence in 1765 to South Carolina. He never lost his teeth nor eye-sight. The public journal, which states these facts, also says, that a few days before his death he joined a hunting party and killed a deer. Whether in this account there is some mistake or some invention, there are no means at hand of deciding.

NICENS, DAVID, a Baptist colored minister, in 1751 became his colleague, on account of his died in Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 14, 1838, aged 43. NICHOLAS, WILSON CARY, governor of Virginia, died at Milton Oct. 10, 1820. He was an officer in the war of the Revolution, and a member of the convention which ratified the constitution of the United States. He was for years a distinguished member of the house of representatives and of the senate of the United States, being chosen senator from Virginia in Dec., 1799, in the place of Henry Tazewell, deceased. He ably supported the measures of Jefferson's administration. Accepting the office of collector of the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth in 1804, he resigned his seat in the senate. He was afterwards a member of the house; but he resigned his seat in 1809. In 1814 he succeeded James Barbour as governor, and was succeeded by Col. James Preston in 1817. He published a letter to his constituents, 1809.

NICHOLET, CHARLES, came from Virginia to Salem in 1672, and was assistant minister to Mr. Higginson. He was invited to settle for life; but a difficulty sprung up as to the manner of his support, whether by voluntary contribution or otherwise, and he removed to Lynn in 1674, but went to England in 1676.

NICHOLS, Moses, a physician and colonel, distinguished in the battle of Bennington, Aug. aged 49. He commanded the troops sent by Stark to the rear of the enemy's left wing. He held at last the rank of brigadier-general of the militia. He practised many years as a physician, and held various offices. His son, Moses, a physician and judge, lived in Canada.

NICHOLS, John, missionary to Bombay, was ordained at Boston with the missionaries, Swift, Graves, Parsons, and Buttrick, Aug. 2, 1817, and ary to the Arkansas Cherokees, died at the forks sailed for Bombay, with his wife and Allen Graves kaway 1817, and arrived Feb. 23, 1818. After toiling Osages in his benevolent work nearly seven years, he died i, after of a fever at Bombay, Dec. 10, 1824. trans-NICHOLS, PHINEAS, deacon, died at Havere died.

hill, Mass., in 1838, aged 98. He was at the capture of Louisbourg in 1758, and took an active part in the war of the Revolution.

NICHOLSON, JAMES, a naval officer, died Sept. 2, 1804 or 1806, aged 68. He descended from ancestors who were the early settlers of Maryland, was born in Chestertown in 1737, and was trained to the sea with two brothers, who were afterwards commanders in the navy. Having married, he resided in the city of New York from 1763 till 1771, when he returned to the eastern shore of Maryland. In 1776 he was put in command of the Maryland ship-of-war, the Defence, in which in March he recaptured several vessels which the British had taken. In 1778 he was intrusted with the command of the Trumbull, a frigate of thirty-two guns, in which, June 2, 1780, he fought a severe battle of three hours with the Wyatt, losing about thirty men, when the vessels parted. He was afterwards captured and carried into New York, where he continued to live after his release at the close of the war. During the controversy concerning Jay's treaty, he was at the head of the opponents to it in New York. In 1801 he succeeded Mr. Clarkson as commissioner of loans for the State of New York. He died near New York. His three daughters married Albert Gallatin, William Few, and John Montgomery, a member of congress and mayor of Baltimore: it is remarkable, that Mr. Montgomery and Col. Few were buried on the same day, in 1828.

NICHOLSON, SAMUEL, commodore in the American navy, and probably brother of the preceding, died at Charlestown, Mass., in 1811,

aged 69.

NICHOLSON, JOSEPH HOPPER, chief judge of the sixth judicial district, and a judge of the court of appeals of Maryland, died March 4, 1817, aged 47 years. His talents were invigorated by a good education. For man, years he was a conspicuous member of congress. He was appointed a judge in 1805. On the bench his dignity, integrity, and abilities commanded respect. In private life he was amiable and beloved. He was succeeded by Walter Dorsey.

NICHOLSON, JESSE, a Methodist minister, died at Portsmouth, Va., in 1834, aged 74.

NICHOLSON, JOHN B., commodore, died at Washington Nov. 9, 1846. He was a midshipman in 1805; was in the United States when she captured the Macedonian, and in the Peacock in the engagement with the Epervier.

NICOLL, JOHN, M. D., a physician in New and his wife, and Philomela Thurston, Sept. 5, tive of Scotland, and was educated at Edinburgh. Retaining the highest attachment to the doctrine, constitution, and discipline of the church of Scotland, after his arrival in this country he was one of the principal founders and benefactors of the first Presbyterian church in New York, which was established in 1719. He spent a considerable part of his estate in erecting a house of worship. As a physician he was unwearied in his attention to his patients. The poor he cheerfully visited without the prospect of reward. His life was distinguished for benevolence and piety.

NICOLLET, J. N., an eminent mathematician and astronomer, died in Washington Sept. 11, 1843, aged about 48. He was born at or near Sallenches in Savoy, between Geneva and Mont Blanc. He was a favorite pupil of La Place in Paris. For the last ten years he lived in this country, engaged in researches, chiefly in the employment of the government. He explored the regions beyond the Mississippi and the Missouri, and completed a map and partly prepared a report. He wrote various books, treatises, and memoirs. - Boston Advertiser, September 20, NICOLLS, RICHARD, colonel, first English governor of New York, was commissioned in 1664, with Carr, Cartwright, and Maverick, to determine complaints and appeals in all causes, military, criminal, and civil, throughout New England. Nicolls proceeded to Manhattan and obliged Stuyvesant, the Dutch governor, to capitulate Aug. 27, 1664, and gave to New Amsterdam the name of New York. Sept. 14th, fort Orange was captured, and called Albany. He established a regular government at New York. The purchase of lands from the Indians on Long Island was prohibited, except with a license from the governor. In 1667 he retired from the government with honor, and was succeeded by Lovelace, who purchased Staten Island from the natives.

NILES, SAMUEL, minister of Braintree, Mass., died May 1, 1762, aged 88. He was a descendant of John Niles, who lived in Braintree from 1639 till his death, in Feb., 1694; was born on Block Island May 1, 1674, and graduated at Harvard college in 1699. He afterwards preached for some time in Rhode Island, in a district called Ministerial Lands, from 1702 to 1710. In 1710 he removed from Kingston to Braintree, where he was ordained minister of the second church May 23, 1711. In 1759, sixty years after he received the first honors of the college, he took the degree of master of arts. His first wife, a daughter of P. Thacher of Milton, died in 1716; his second, Ann Coddington, died in 1732. He published a brief and sorrowful account of the present churches in New England, 1745; vindication of York, died Oct. 2, 1743, aged 63. He was a na- divers important doctrines, 8vo., 1752; Scripture

r to Mr. ife; but r of his tion or 674, but colonel,

She

mem-

folk in

315, in

. Born

l, and

ver lost

ournal.

ow days

rty and here is

are no

inister,

gcd 43.

of Vir-

was an

a mem-

onstituyeurs a present-

States,

e., 1799,

d. He admin-

or of the

, he re-

erwards

his scat

Barbour

. James

r to his ginia to

on, Aug. y, 1790, sent by ng. He d of the ıysician, s, a phy-

bay, was s, Swift, 817, and n Graves doctrine of original sin, in answer to Taylor, 8vo., | He published four discourses on secret prayer. 1757. His history of the Indian and French wars is in historical collections, third series, vol. VI., making one hundred and twenty-four pages, and unfinished. - Sprague's Annals.

NILES, THOMAS, first minister of Rumney, N. II., died al out 1788, aged about 50. Born in East Haddam, he graduated at Yale in 1758. He was settled in 1767 and dismissed in 1788.

NILES, SAMUEL, minister of Abington, Mass. died Jan. 16, 1814, aged 70. He was the son of Mr. Samuel N., who was distinguished in public life; was born in Braintree in 1743, and graduated at Princeton college in 1769. He was ordained Sept. 25, 1771; his predecessors were Samuel Brown, who died in 1749, and Ezekiel Dodge, who died in 1770. After suffering from the palsy about two years, he died Jan. 16, 1814, aged 69. His successor was Holland Weeks. His wife was a daughter of his predecessor, E. Dodge. He was a faithful, useful minister, and a man of a vigorous mind, inclined to metaphysical investigations. He published some remarks on a sermon by John Reed, 1813; a sermon on the death of Washington, 1800; before missionary society, 1801. - Panoplist, X.; Sprague's Annals.

NILES, SAMUEL, died at Lebanon, Conn., May, 1804, aged 93. He graduated at Cambridge in 1731, and was a councillor of Massachusetts and a justice of common pleas for Suffolk.

NILES, JOHN, a minister, died at Bath, Steuben county, N. Y., in 1812, aged about 35. He graduated at Yale in 1797.

NILES, NATHANIEL, judge, died in West Fairlee, Vt., in Nov., 1828, aged 87. He was the brother of Rev. Samuel N. of Abington, and was born in South Kingston, R. I.; graduated at Princeton in 1769. He was for a time a student of medicine and law, and then of theology under Dr. Bellamy, and preached in various places, but was never settled. He resided in Norwich, Conn., where he married a daughter of Elijah Lothrop, a man of wealth. Here he invented a method of making wire from bar iron, by water power,-the first invention of the kind. He also creeted a woollen card manufactory. Purchasing land in Vermont, he was the first settler in West Fairlee. He became speaker of the house and judge of the supreme court; also, a member of congress; and six times an elector of president. He was a metaphysician, a defender of the taste scheme. For twelve years he preached in his own house. He wrote the American hero, a celebrated sapphic ode on the war, which was set to music, and was the war-song of the Revolution. It begins with the lines,

"Why should vain mortals tremble at the sight of Death and destruction in the field of battle?"

It is in the New York Observer, Aug. 21, 1851; their territory to II. Atherton and his partners, also in the cyclopedia of American literature. and delivered possession by turf and twig at Pet-1773; two on confession and forgiveness; two on God the fountain of good, 1777; on vain amusements; a letter on the power of sinners to make new hearts, 1809. - Sprague's Annals.

w

ti

nı

bl

D

66

811

er

Aı

яŧ

the

up

suc

sta

ses

a s rep

stri

aeq

gua

His

to t

ola

ori

for

pen

nce

eve

con

of

kee

011

him

dec ent

inst

wit

and

the

tud

sim

this

che

que

miı

ma

mo

me

NILES, HEZEKIAH, died at Wilmington, Del., April 2, 1839, aged 62. For twenty-five years he was the edito" of Niles' Weekly Register, at Baltimore. In his character he was esteemed. He published his Register in twelve volumes from 1812 to 1817; in twelve volumes from 1817 to 1823; in eight volumes from 1823 to 1827.

NILES, GEORGE, died in Shaftsbury, Vt., May 19, 1846, aged 105 yrs. and 9 mos. He served in the French and Indian war at the age of 16.

NILES, WILLIAM WATSON, a minister, died at La Porte, Indiana, in 1854, aged 57, a graduate of Dartmouth in 1820.

NILES, JOHN M., died at Hartford May 31, 1856, aged 68; he was a senator of the United States eleven years, and the efficient postmastergeneral under President Van Buren. He died of a cancer on his cheek. He had no children. He published the life of Perry.

NINIGRETT, sachem of Niantick, or Nehantick, or Nayantick, was one of the Narragansett chiefs at the settlement of Rhode Island by the whites. His name is variously written, Ninegret, Ninegrad, Ninicrete, Ninicraft, Nynigrett. He was the uncle of Miantunnomu; but in the war of the latter with the Pequots in 1632 he did not participate. However, he assisted the English in the Pequot war of 1637, his country being in the line of march, and when the division of the two hundred surviving Pequots was made among the conquerors, he received twenty and Miantunnomu eighty. The commissioners of the United Colonies, Sept. 20, 1653, determined to make war with him, and ordered two hundred and fifty soldiers to be immediately raised. He was suspected of joining in a plot with the Dutch for the destruction of the English colonies, for he had spent the preceding winter at Manhadoes with Stuyvesant, the Dutch governor, and had visited the western Indians. The commissioner from Massachusetts was opposed to the war, and, as that colony did not concur in the measure, it was not prosecuted. In the mean while Ninigrett waged his war with the Long Island Indians; and, refusing to appear at Hartford, war was again determined on in Sept., 1654. Maj. S. Willard marched from Massachusetts into the Narragansett country to demand the Pequots under Ninigrett, and tribute; he brought off one hundred Pequots, but Ninigrett had fled. His country was not laid waste, probably from the forbearance of Massachusetts, averse to the war. Oct. 13, 1660, he and Scuttup and other chiefs mortgaged

prayer, two on amuseo make n, Del., years ster, at eemed. rolumes m 1817 827. t., May

erved in 16. died at raduate

May 31, United tmasterdied of en. He

Nehan-

agansett d by the Vinegret, ett. IIe the war e did not nglish in ng in the the two mong the tunnoniu ted Colonake war l fifty solsuspected or the dehad spent h Stuyveisited the m Massad, as that it was not ett waged ; and, reagain de-. Willard Narragannder Nini-

hundred

s country

orbearance

Oct. 13,

mortgaged

partners,

vig at Pet-

war, and in consequence his tribe escaped the ruin which came upon the other tribes. The time of his death is not known. In 1761 the number of his tribe was two hundred and fortyeight; and there was a sachem Ninigrett, probably his descendant.

NISBET, CHARLES, D. D., first president of Dickinson college, Penn., died Jan. 17, 1804, aged 66. He was born in Scotland, educated in Edinburgh, and was for many years minister of Montrose. During the struggle between Great Britain and her colonies, such was his attachment to liberry that he dared to lift up his voice in favor of When Dickinson college was founded America. at Carlisle in 1783, he was chosen its principal, though he did not arrive in this country and enter upon the duties of the office till 1785. successors were Atwater, Mason, and Neill. His imagination was lively and fertile, and his understanding equally acute and vigorous. He possessed a memory tenacious almost beyond belief, a solid judgment, and a correct taste. He could repeat with great facility all the beautiful and striking passages of the classic authors. He was acquainted both with the ancient learned languages, and with the modern languages of Europe. His lectures in the college, which were designed to communicate the elements of knowledge, were plain and simple, but rich in solid learning. In private life he was a most entertaining companion, for his humor was excellent and exhaustless. His penetrating mind perceived relations and connections among things which escaped almost every other, and he was constantly enlirening conversation with flashes of wit. He was master of the lively anecdote, the smart repartee, the keen irony, and the delicate rebuke. His remarks on men were often severe and cutting, for, being himself upright, he had a rooted abhorrence of deceit and chicanery in others. His independent mind scorned the idea of procuring favor or insuring popularity by any means inconsistent with the most dignified and virtuous sentiments, and he had no respect for the man who, to obtain the one or the other, would cringe to the multitude. His manners were gentle, unassuming, simple, and in the common affairs and traffic of this world he was a very child. His temper was cheerful, his morals unimpeached, his piety unquestioned. As the principal of a college, as a minister of the gospel, as a true patriot, as a good man, he has not often been surpassed. His posthumous works were published about 1806; his memoirs, by Dr. Miller, were published in 1840. - Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

NITSCHMAN, DAVID, died in Bethlehem April 14, 1758, aged 81. He felled the first tree at B.

and built the first house.

NIXON, JOHN, brigadier-general, a soldier of | massacre, 1775.

tequamscot in 1662. He did not join in Philip's | the Revolution, died March 24, 1815, aged 90. He was born at Framingham, Mass., March 4, 1725. He was present as a soldier at the siege of Louisburg in 1745. After serving in the army and navy seven years, he returned to his native place. But he soon again entered the army as a captain. He fought in the attack on Ticonderoga, when Abercrombie was defeated, and in the battle of lake George. Afterwards falling into an ambuseade, he cut his way through the enemy and escaped, but with the loss of nearly all his party. In the Revolutionary war, at the head of a company of minute-men, he met the enemy in the battle of Lexington; and in that of Bunker Hill he was distinguished by his bravery at the head of a regiment, and received a severe wound, from which he never entirely recovered. He was made a brigadier-general in Aug., 1776. Washington intrusted him with the command on Governor's Island, near New York. He was with Gates in 1777. In the battle of Stillwater a cannon-ball passed so near his head as to impair permanently the sight of one eye and his hearing in one ear. In bad health, he resigned his commission in 1780. He removed to Middlebury, Vt., in 1803, and lived with his children. His brother, Col. N., an officer of the Revolution, was drowned in a voyage to the district of Maine. For many years before his death he was a member of a Congregational church. He was respected and esteemed in the various relations of life.

> NOAH, an Indian preacher of good character, lived in 1698 at Nantucket, where there were then two Indian churches and five congregations. The other preachers were Muckamuek, Asherman, Quequenah, Netowah, Peter Hayt, Wunnohson, Spotso, and Codpogannut.

NOAII, MORDECAI MANASSEII, major, died of apoplexy in New York, March 22, 1851, aged 65. Born in Philadelphia, he was an apprentice, and in early life went to Charleston. He was consul to Moroeco from 1813 to 1816. On his return he established the National Advocate, and afterwards the New York Enquirer, which was merged in the Courier and Enquirer; and then the Evening Star, merged in the Times and Star. He also published a weekly paper, the Times. He was surveyor of the port, and sheriff. He published travels in England, France, Spain, and the Barbary States, 1819; on the restoration of the Jews, 1845.

NOBLE, OLIVER, minister in Newbury, Mass., died in 1792, aged 56. Born in Hebron, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1757; was ordained at Coventry, Conn., as successor of J. Meacham in 1759; was dismissed in 1761; settled in Newbury from 1762 to 1783; and then in Newcastle, N. H., from 1784 till his death. He published a discourse on church music, 1774; on Boston

18

pa

W

On

Hi

Br

of age

16

De

1

Αp

Jan

Ste

ndj

and

bur

Nov

luti

Phi

Cin

Spr

ting

ma

He

edu

lect

a n

labo

like

and

was

age

per

eon

who

pro

pre

occ

no

the

qua

he

effe

sub

N

N

NOBLE, GIDEON, minister of Willington, Conn., died in 1792, aged about 60. He was born in Westfield, Mass., and graduated at Yale in 1755.

NOBLE, JOHN, deacon, a man of benevolence, died in Portsmouth, N. H., in 1801, aged 67, leaving two bridge-shares to the parish poor.

NOPLE, DAVID, judge, an early settler of Williamstown, Mass., died March 4, 1803, aged 58. He was a lawyer, and a prosperous mer-

NOBI , ETH, died in Ohio in 1807, aged 64. He was the son of Thomas of Westfield, and minister of Montgomery, Mass., from 1801 to 1806. At an earlier period he preached in Bangor, Me., before the town obtained an incorporation; to procure which he carried their petition to Boston. They asked that the name of the place might be Lonfield; but, as he admired the tune of Bangor, he struck out that word and inserted Bangor; and such was the music-loving origin of the name of the city of the L'enobseot, which was incorporated in 1791. In 1792 it had only 169 inhabitants. — Holland's Hist. II. 100. NCBLE, OBADIAH, first minister of Orford, NCBLE, OBADIAH, first minister of Orford, N. H., died in Vermont Feb. 19, 1829, aged 90. Born in Sheffield, Mass., ho graduated at Princeton in 1763; was settled in 1771; and dismissed

NOBLE, Calvin, minister of Chelsea, Vt., died in 1834, aged 56. He was a graduate of Middlebury in the fourth class, in 1805.

NOBLE, PATRICK, governor of South Carolina, died in Abbeville district in 1840, aged 53. He graduated at Princeton in 1806; was a lawyer, a member of the legislature, and governor in 1838; as his term of office was not expired, the legislature chose a lieutenant-governor. He was intelligent, and of an amiable and irreproachable character, a member of the Presbyterian church.

—Boston Chronicle and Patriot, April 22, 1840.

NODDLE, WILLIAM, took the freeman's oath at Boston, in 1631. From him Noddle's Island was named.

NOEL, SILAS M., D. D., a Baptist minister, died at Lexington, Ky., in 1839, aged 55.

NORCROSS, NATHANIEL, a preacher at Lancaster, became a freeman in Massachusetts, in 1643. He was a first settler of Nashaway, as Lancaster was called in that year; and in the next he became the minister, but in one or two years returned to England. He was ejected from his living at Walsingham after the Restoration.

— Felt's Eccl. History.

NORDHEIMER, ISAAC, Dr., died in New York in 1842, professor of Hebrew and teacher of German in Union theological seminary.

NORMANDIE, JOHN ABRAHAM DE, a physician, formerly of Bristol, Penn., died at Bellefield, near Trenton, N. J., Sept. 22, 1805, aged 85.

NORRIS, EDWARD, minister of Salem, had been a preacher before he arrived in this country in 1639; he and his wife Eleanor first joined the church in Boston; he was ordained at Salem March 18, 1640, as a colleague with Hugh Peters: and died April 10, 1659, aged about 70, having been sole pastor eighteen years. His church did not adopt the platform of 1648; nor did they use the New England psalms instead of Ainsworth's till some years after his death. Mr. Norris was tolerant, and did not join in the persecution of the Gortonists and Anabaptists. In 1651 and 1654, when one person was executed for witchcraft in Boston and several others in the colony, he withstood the delusion of the times. Yet, with his excellent disposition and enlarged views, he urged, by his writings, the prosecution of the war against the Dutch, which the commissioners of the United Colonies had recommended in 1653, but which was deemed inexpedient by the government of Massachusetts. If they did not go to war, he thought the curse upon Meroz would be deserved. In this he erred in spirit and judgment. He lived in Gloucestershire in England, and was a teacher as well as minister. He published in London a treatise on asking for temporal blessings, and other tracts against Boye and Trask. - Felt's Eccl. Hist., 387.

NORRIS, JOHN, one of the founders of the theological seminary in Andover, died Dec. 22, 1808, aged 57. He was for many years a respectable merchant in Salem, Mass. March 21, 1808, he gave 10,000 dollars towards establishing the institution at Andover. This was a day of unequalled munificence, for on the same day Messra. Brown and Bartlett, merchants of Newburyport, gave towards the same object, the former 10,000 and the latter 20,000 dollars. Mr. Norris lived to see the seminary opened on Sept. 28th. His widow, Mary Norris, died at Salem in 1811, bequeathing 30,000 dotlars to the theologieal seminary at Andover, and the same sum to trustees for the benefit of foreign missions to the heathen. In such esteem was he held by his fellow citizens, that he was for several years elected a member of the senate of Massachusetts. Obtaining through the divine blessing upon his industry an ample fortune, he considered himself as the steward of God, and his abundant liberality flowed in various channels. Though his extreme self-diffidence prevented him from making a public profession of religion, yet his house was a house of prayer, in which the morning and evening sacrifice ascend d to the mercy-seat, and he was constant in his attendance on public worship. Being asked by a friend whether he did not entertain a hope that he was a Christian, he replied in a solemn manner, "I would not relinquish my hope that I am a child of God, for a thousand worlds."

NORRIS, Phebe, died at Birmingham, Pa., in storm obliged him to return. In the following 1811, aged 109. She had been maintained as a pauper the last fifty years.

Windsor, O., in 1840, aged 74.

NORRIS, ISAAC, chief justice of Pennsylvania. died at Germantown June 3, 1735. He was a Quaker, and a highly respected and useful man. His wife was a daughter of Gov. Lloyd.

NORRIS, THOMAS F., editor of the Olive Branch, died at Somerville, Mass., Dec. 21, 1853.

NORRIS, EDWARD, an ancient schoolmaster of Salem, son of Rev. Edward N., died in 1684, aged 69. He was a member of the church in 1639, and a teacher from 1640 to 1671. - Farmer's Register.

NORSWORTHY, THOMAS, died at Salem, in Dec., 1856, nged 99. He had been married six times and was the father of thirty-three children.

NORTH, Joseph, died in Augusta, Me., in April, 1815, aged 85.

NORTH, WILLIAM, general, died at New York Jan. 4, 1836, aged 83. He was aid to Baron Steuben in the Revolutionary war, and afterwards adjutant-general; a man of unstained integrity, and highly respected. He was buried at Duanes-

NORTH, CALEB, colonel, died at Coventry, Pa., Nov. 7, 1840, nged 88. An officer in the Revolutionary war, he was afterwards a merchant of Philadelphia, high sheriff, and president of the Cincinnati.

NORTH, MILO L., M. D., died at Saratoga Springs in 1856. For many years he was a distinguished physician at the Springs, and was a man of skill, of honor, and of Christian piety.

NORTON, JOHN, minister in Boston, died April 5, 1663, aged 55. He was born at Starford in Hertfordshire, England, May 6, 1606, and was educated at the university of Cambridge. lecture was at this time supported at Starford by a number of pious ministers, and through their labors Mr. N., who was himself a preacher, though like many others ignorant of his own character and unacquainted with the truth as it is in Jesus, was impressed with a sense of his sin, and by the agency of the Holy Spirit was brought to repentance. The view of his own heart and life. compared with the holy law of God, almost overwhelmed him with despair; but at length the promises of the gospel administered to him inexpressible joy. His attention had been hitherto occupied in literary and scientific pursuits, but he now devoted himself exclusively to the study of theology, and, being by his own experience acquainted with repentance, and faith, and holiness, he preached upon these subjects with zeal and effect. He soon became eminent. Unable to submit to the impositions of the establishment, he embarked for New England in 1634, but a violent is an instrument disposed and determined unto year he sailed again for this country, and arrived nt Plymouth in October, in company with Mr. NORRIS, JOHN, a Methodist minister, died at Winslow. He preached in this town during most of the winter, and was earnestly invited to take the charge of the church; but the state of things in the colony did not please him. Early in 1636 he removed to Boston, where he was highly respected, being consulted by the magistrates in some of their most difficult affairs. Before the close of the year he accepted an invitation to settle in Ipswich, where a church had been gathered in 1634. In 1639 Mr. Rogers was established as his colleague. While minister of Ipswich he wrote a number of books, which procured him a high reputation. He assisted in forming the Cambridge platform, which was adopted in 1648. After the death of Mr. Cotton at the close of 1652, the church in Boston applied to Mr. Norton to become their minister. He accordingly preached in that town for some time, with the consent of his people; but, after the death of Mr. Rogers in 1655, they reclaimed him. Though a number of councils, called upon the occasion, advised his removal to Boston, the inhabitants of Ipswich declined giving him a dismission. At length the governor and magistrates were under the necessity of summoning a council, whose advice or result was followed, as it was considered as partaking more of the nature of authority. From this period he was the minister of Boston, and was eminently useful. After the restoration of Charles II. it was thought necessary to address him. Mr. Norton and Simon Bradstreet were accordingly appointed the agents of Massachusetts for that purpose. They sailed for England in Feb., 1662, and returned in September, bringing with them a letter from the king, in which he promised to confirm the charter, but required that the administration of justice should be in his name, and that all persons of good and honest lives should be admitted to the sacrament of the Lord's supper, and their children to baptism. The agents, who had faithfully endeavored to serve the colony, on their return met with a cold reception, and the smothered grief of Mr. Norton, on account of the ill treatment which he received, it is thought, hastened his end. He died suddenly. He left no children. Mr. Davenport succeeded him in the ministry.

Mr. Norton was an eminent scholar and divine. In controversy he was very acute, for his powerful talents had been cultivated by an excellent education, and he was familiar with the subtleties of the schoolmen. The doctrines, for which he contended, were the following: that there is one God subsisting in three persons; that the will of God is the cause of all causes, and second causes the effects of the first cause; that the will of man untry d tho Salem eters ; aving ch did they Ains-. Norcution 1 and witch-

olony,

had

t, with ws, he he war ers of 1653, e govnot go would I judgigland, le pub-

mporul

Trask. of the cc. 22, s a reırch 21, blishing day of ne day f Newect, the s. Mr. on Sept. alem in heologisum to s to the by his ıl years dusetts. pon his himself iberality extreme g a pube was a nd even-, and he worship. not ene replied լաish my housand

H

an

N

pe

in

nη

Tr

his

Co

Ch

ha

1191

wa

Ne

in

Αr

da

rec

chi

Cli

 \mathbf{F}_{i}

an

An

we

rie

an

wh

th

th

far

se

ers

Wil ki

Se

bri

of

fes

its action according unto the decree of God, being as much subordinate to it as the axe is to the hand of the hewer; that man, even in violating God's commands, fulfils God's decree; that the infallible ordering of the existence of sin for a better end, and the forbidding of sin, are not at all inconsistent, but fall under the compass of the same one volition of God, which cannot be resisted or defeated; that God is not the author of sin, and yet that he does not merely permit it, since he has decreed it; that the reprobates freely commit such a measure of sin, as fits them for the intended measure of wrath; that man is a free agent, va, a real efficiency, though subfirst cause, which determines the ordinate to second in 113 operation; that all mankind participated in Adam's sin and also have it imputed to them; that original sin is the hereditary and habitual contrariety and enmity of the nature of man against the whole will of Ged; that God has elected whom in his wisdom and mercy he pleased to eternal life; that the conversion of these is the effect of God's Spirit; that good works are necessary as the way to salvation, but not as the cause; that the only meritorious cause of salvation is the active and passive ohedience of Jesus Christ, which is imputed unto those who believe. and is received by faith alone: that only the elect believe in the Redcemer; that their belief or faith is the effect of special, absolute, irresistible grace; and that the will is passive, not having the nature of a free agent, in the first reception of grace. His sermons were written with great care, and in his extemporary devotional performances there was a variety and fulness and fervor seldom equalled. A good man of Ipswich used frequently to walk to Boston, a distance of about thirty miles, to attend the Thursday lecture, and would say, that it was worth a great journey to unite in one of Mr. Norton's prayers. His example, according to Dr. Mather, was so much followed, that some young ministers were able to continue their addresses to God for more than an hour with great propriety; and without wearying those who joined with them. In his natural temper Mr. Norton was somewhat irascible, but, being taught by the grace of God to govern his passions, his renewed heart rendered him meek. courteous, and amiable. Still, a mistaken zeal for the truth made him, as it made his contemporaries, friendly to persecution. He was convinced that some difference of sentiment must be permitted, and wished that an erroneous conscience should be treated with tenderness; but when the fundamental doctrines of Christianity were denied, or errors were supported by a contumacious will, especially if they produced disturbance in the State, then he thought it indispensably necessary to be acquainted, to use his own words, "with the holy tactics of the civil sword." The was afterwards minister in Middletown, Conn.

disuse of this instrument, in his opinion, gave opportunity for the rise of the man of sin; the abuse of it maintained him; but the good use of it would tend to destroy him. With these sentiments he probably encouraged the magistrates in their persecution of the Quakers, who in return represented to the king and parliament. that "John Norton, chief priest in Boston, by the immediate power of the Lord was smitten and

Mr. Norton wrote in Latin a letter to the famous John Dury, which was signed by forty-three other ministers. A translation of it may be found in S. Mather's apology. In 1645 he drew up at the request of the ministers of New England an answer to a number of questions relating to church government, which were sent over by Apollonius under the direction of the divines of Zealand. This was the first Latin book ever written in this country. It was published with the title of responsio ad totum questionum syllogen a clariss, viro dom. Gul. Apollonio propositam, ad componendus controversias in Anglia. London, 8vo., 1648. He published also a discussion of the sufferings of Christ, and the questions about his righteousness, active and passive, and the imputation thereof, in answer to a dialogue of Mr. Pinchin, 12mo., 1653; this was written by the direction of the general court; the orthodox evangelist, or a treatise wherein many great evangelical truths are briefly discussed, 4to., 1654; election sermon, 1657; the life of Mr. Cotton, 1658; the heart of New England rent by the blasphemics of the present generation, a treatise concerning the doctrine of the Quakers, by the desire of the general court, 8vo., 1660; election sermon, 1661; a catechism; three choice and profitable sermons on several texts, being the last sermons which he preached at the election, at the Thursday lecture, and on the Sabbath, 1664. - Mather's Life of Norton; Sprague's Annals.

NORTON, JOHN, the second minister of Hingham, Mass., died Oct. 3, 1716, aged 66. He was the nephew of Rev. John N. of Boston, and the son of William of Ipswich. He graduated at Harvard in 1671, and was ordained Nov. 27. 1678. He published the election sermon, 1708.

- Lincoln's Hist. Hingham.

NORTON, JOHN, minister of Easthampton in Chatham, Conn., died in 1778, aged about 61. He graduated at Yale in 1737, and was settled in 1748.

NORTON, SETH, minister of Windsor, Conn., died in 1762, aged about 32. He graduated at Yale in 1751.

NORTON, JOHN, first minister of Bernardston, Mass., died March 24, 1778, aged 62. Born in Berlin, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1737; was settled in 1737; but resigned in 1741. He and Bowers.

ave op-

n: the

od use

these magis-

rs, who

iament,

, by the en and the fay-three

nay bo

e drew

w Eng-

relating over by ines of

k ever

ed with

n syllo-

proposi-

Anglia,

discus-

uestions

ive, and ogue of tten by

rthodox

at evan-

, 1654;

Cotton.

by the treatise

, by the election

ice and the last

ction, at

h. 1664.

Annals.

of Hing-

He was

and the

ated at Nov. 27,

n. 1708.

npton in bont 61.

s settled

r, Conn.,

uated at ernards-

2. Born

in 1737 :

41. He , Cenn.

NORTON, John, an Indian chief of the Six Nations, about the year 1807 translated the Gospel of John into Mohawk. The work was printed in London, at the expense of the bible society, and distributed among the Mohawks on Grand river in Canada. Norton's Indian name was Tryoninhokaraven. His father was an Indian; his mother was of Scotland. He was educated at an English school.

NORTON, ICHABOD, colonel, died at Granby, Conn., in 1825, aged 90. He was a soldier in the French and Revolutionary wars.

NORTON, MOLLY, widow, died in Chester, N. II., in 1840, aged 100; formerly of Green-

NORTON, ELIAS, Dr., died in Addison, Me., June 15, 1846, aged 99. He was surgeon's mate in the war of the Revolution.

NORTON, HERMAN, secretary of the foreign Christian union, died in 1850, aged 50. He was born at New Hartford, N. Y., in 1800, and graduated at Hamilton college in 1823. In 1831 he was pastor of the Union church in Prince street. New York. In 1837 he was pastor of a church in Cincinnati; and in 1843 was secretary of the American Protestant society. In 1849 he was associated with Dr. Baird. His widow was a daughter of Rev. Dr. Flint of Hartford. He had recently insured his life for 2500 dollars. He was faithful, benignate and a man of faith.

NORTON, JOHN , prefessor of agricultural chemistry at Yale college, died at Farmington, Conn., Sept. 5, 1851, aged 30.

NORTON, ASAHEL STRONG, D. D., died at Clinton, N. Y., May 10, 1853, aged 87. Born in Farmington, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1790, and was settled the first minister of C. in 1793. Among the members of his ordaining council were Mr. Kirkland and Mr. Sergeant, missionaries to the Indians. For forty years he exerted an important influence in western New York, when he was induced to resign in consequence of the new measures, so called, which had affected the quietude of his church. Yet, living on his farm, he officiated often as a minister, when his services were wanted. He was one of the founders of Hamilton college at Clinton. His wife was Mary C. Pitkin, the daughter of Rev. T. Pitkin of Farmington. - Sprague's Annals.

NORTON, ANDREWS, D. D., died at Newport Sept. 18, 1853, aged 67. His residence was Cambridge, where he graduated in 1804, was teacher of theology from 1813 to 1819, and Dexter professor of sacred literature from 1819 to 1830; also librarian from 1813 to 1821. He was a son of Samuel N. of Hingham, a descendant of Rev.

His predecessors were Russell, Bartlett, Eells, John N. of Ipswich and Boston. He married a daughter of Samuel Eliot of Boston. He published evidences of the genuineness of the gospels; a discourse on religions education, 1818; inaugural, 1819; review of trustees' address, 1823; of character and writings of Byron, 1825; of Channing's sermon, 1826; of Mrs. Hemans' forest sanctuary; address at the funeral of Mr. Frisbie, 1822; memoirs of Frisbie; thoughts on true and false religion, 1820; remarks on a report of overseers, 1824; speech before overseers, 1825.

NOTT, ABRAHAM, died in Saybrook Jan. 24, 1756, aged about 60; the first pastor of the second church in Pettipaug, or Pantapaug, now Essex. His father and grandfather both had the name of John, and lived in Wethersfield. He graduated at Yale in 1720. His wife was Phebe Tapping, probably the daughter of John T. of Southampton, L. I. He was the grandfather of two memorable men, Rev. Samuel and Rev. Eliphalet

NOTT, HENRY JUNIUS, died with his wife in the wreck of the steamer, the Home, off the coast of North Carolina, Oct. 18, 1837, aged 40. He was the son of Judge Abraham Nott of South Carolina, and was graduated at South Carolina college, and practised law till 1821, when he devoted himself to literature. On his return he was appointed in 1824 professor of belles lettres in his college. He published novelties of a traveller, 2 vols., 1834; and various articles in the southern quarterly. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

NOTT, SAMUEL, D. D., the son of Stephen, and grandson of Rev. Abraham Nott, died in Franklin, Conn., May 26, 1852, aged 98. He was born in Saybrook Jan. 23, 1754; was graduated at Yale in 1780; and was settled in Norwich. West Farms, now Franklin, March 13, 1782, so that he was a pastor of his flock seventy years. He died in consequence of a burn, his gown having caught fire from a stove. He had a colleague from 1849 to 1851. His eldest son, Samuel, was a missionary to the east. Two of his daughters married ministers, Eli Hyde and John Hyde; the former, a graduate of Yale in 1803, was the minister of Hampden and Preston in Connecticut, and of North Wilbraham, Mass., and died in 1848, aged 72. He published a sermon at the ordination of A. Hooker, 1812; of J. Aver, 1825; on the death of J. Hunt; two on the death of J. Gurley, 1812; of Mr. Williams; of J. Benedict, 1816; of Mr. C. Welch; of Z. Ely, 1824; of A. Lee, 1832; at the election, 1809; to a foreign mission society, 1814; halfcentury sermon, 1832; on the 60th anniversary of his ordination, 1842. - Sprague's Annals.

NOURSE, PETER, minister of Ellsworth, Me., John N., who was a nephew of the celebrated died at Phippsburg March 25, 1840, aged 64.

n

B

lı

h

N

h

n

tι

fc

g

80

as

lu

aı

as

le N

p 0: 1' 2'

ast es

C se ir fi

Born in Stow, he graduated at Harvard in 1802, wam to Newbury, he was established as his coland was librarian from 1805 to 1808. He was league in 1635, having the title of teacher. He minister in Ellsworth from 1812 to 1835.

NOURSE, JOSEPH, died near Georgetown, D. C., Sept. 1, 1841, aged 87. He was born in London in 1754; emigrated to Virginia in 1769; and entered the Revolutionary army in 1776. He was register of the treasury from 1789 to 1820, and vice-president of the American bible society. He was held in high esteem and respect.

NOWELL, INCREASE, secretary of the Massachusetts colony, died Nov. 1, 1655. He was chosen an assistant in England in 1629, and came to this country with Winthrop in the Arabella, 1630. He was chosen ruling elder August 27th, but resigned the office in 1632, being convinced that the offices of ruler in the church and state were incompatible. Of the church in Charlestown he was one of the founders in 1632, having been dismissed from Boston. In 1634 he was one of the commissioners for military affairs. He was secretary from 1644 to 1649. In 1619 he entered into the association against wearing long hair. He died in poverty. The name of his wife was Parnell, to whom one thousand acres of land on Cocheco river, New Hampshire, were granted, probably as a public acknowledgment of his faithful services. He left several sons, of whom Samuel, a graduate of 1653, was a preacher. an assistant from 1680 to 1686, and an adherent of the old charter; and Alexander, who graduated in 1664, was the author of several almanacs.

NOWELL, SAMUEL, died at Cambridge or Boston in 1688, aged about 55. He graduated at Harvard in 1653. He was 'a chaplain under Gen. Winslow in the Indian battle Dec. 19, 1674, and evinced the greatest courage while "the balls whistled around him." He was afterwards a magistrate and treasurer of the college.

NOWEQUA, an Indian, the brother of Uncas, in 1645 with one hundred and thirty Mohegans plundered the Nopput Indians of ten copper kettles, fathoms of wampum, henpen baskets, and bear skins. The next year he committed outrages on Fisher's island. The commissioners required Uncas "to regulate and continue his brother in a righteous and peaceable frame."

NOYES, James, one of the first ministers of Newbury, Mass., died Oct. 22, 1656, aged 47. He was born in Wiltshire, England, in 1608, and was for some time a student in the university of Oxford. After he began to preach, as he could not conscientiously comply with the ceremonies of the established church, he accompanied his friend, Mr. Parker, to New England in 1634. They arrived in the month of May. Mr. Noyes preached about a year at Mystic, now Medford, when he was invited to become the minister of Watertown; but, as he preferred a settlement with Mr. Parker, who had removed from Agga-

league in 1635, having the title of teacher. He continued to discharge with faithfulness the duties of his office more than twenty years. A long sickness he bore with patience and cheerfulness. He left six sons. Mr. Noves and Mr. Parker were the most cordial and intimate friends. In England they instructed in the same school; they came to this country in the same ship; they were ministers in the same church; and, as Mr. Parker had no family, they lived in the same house. Mr. Noves was very much beloved by his people, for he was humble, gentle, and constantly desirous of doing them good. He was the implacable enemy of heresy and schism. Though he could never submit to the ceremonies of the English church, he was not so averse to Episcopacy itself. He did not approve of a governing vote in the fraternity, and he thought that ecclesiastical councils should have the power of inflicting censures upon particular churches. He was eminently skilled in Greek, and he had read the fathers and the schoolmen. His memory was tenacious, his invention rich, and his judgment profound. While his manners were so amiable, and his disposition so truly benevolent and affectionate, that no one was ever acquainted with him who did not desire his friendship and society; he yet was resolute and determined in his defence of the truth. He was considered as one of the most eminent men in his day. He published the temple measured, or a brief survey of the temple mystical, which is the instituted church of Christ, London, 4to., 1647; a catechism, which was reprinted in 1797; Moses and Aaron, or the rights of church and state, contained in two disputations, the former concerning the church, the latter asserting the sacredness of the persons of kings against king-killing, 1661. This was published by Mr. Woodbridge of England. - Mather's Magnalia, III. 145-148; Hist. Coll. VII.

NOYES, JAMES, the first minister of Stonington, Conn., the second son of the preceding, died Dec. 30, 1719, aged nearly 81. He was born March 11, 1640, and graduated at Harvard college in 1659, being educated at the expense of his uncle, Mr. Parker. In the year 1664 he began to preach at Stonington, where he was ordained Sept. 10, 1674. He gave religious instruction to this people fifty-five years. He was a distinguished preacher, carrying an uncommon fervor and heavenly zeal into all his public performances. His ordinary conversation breathed the spirit of the world to which he was endeavoring to guide his fellow men. In ecclesiastical controversies he was eminently useful. Being a friend of literature, he was one of the first trustees of Yale college. He was also a councillor in civil affairs at some critical periods. As a physician he was much consulted, and he gave away annually the amount of his salary in medicines. But he most delighted in his ministerial work, for his tenderness and faithfulness in which he was highly esteemed and beloved.

NOYES, NICHOLAS, minister of Salem, Mass., died Dec. 13, 1717, aged nearly 70. He was the son of Nieholas N. and the nephew of Mr. Noyes of Newbury; was born in that town Dec. 22, 1647. He was educated at the expense of his uncle, Mr. Parker, receiving the first honors of Harvard college in 1667. After having preached thirteen years in Haddam, he removed to Salem, where he was ordained as colleague with Mr. Higginson Nov. 14, 1683. George Curwin was settled with him in 1714, but died in 1717. Mr. Noyes was never married. Acquainted with all the literature of the times, and having uncommon talents for his sacred work, his death was deeply and generally lamented. He was entertaining and useful in conversation, of eminent sanctity and virtue, and always solicitous for the welfare of his people. But with all his good qualities he unhappily believed the reality of witcheraft, and had some influence in promoting those legal inquiries in 1692, which reflect so much disgrace upon the age. He afterwards, however, publicly confessed his error without offering any excuse for himself, or concealing any eircumstance; and he visited and blessed the survivors, whom he had injured. asking always their fergiveness. Such conduct reflects the highest honor upon his character. A letter of his containing an account of James Noyes is preserved in Mather's magnalia. He published the election sermon, 1698; and a poem on the death of Joseph Green of Salem village, 1715. - Coll. Hist. Society, VI. 264, 267, 273,

NOYES, OLIVER, Dr., died in Boston in 1721, aged about 48. He graduated at Harvard in 1695. He was a representative of Boston, strongly attached to the popular party, and highly esteemed by the people.

NOYES, Moses, the first minister of Lyme, Conn., died Nov. 10, 1729, aged nearly 86. He was the son of Rev. James N. of Newbury, and born Dec. 6, 1643; was graduated at Harvard in 1659; was ordained in 1693, having preached there twenty-seven years before the church was

NOYES, Joseph, minister of New Haven, Conn., died June 14, 1761, aged 72. He was the son of James N. of Stonington; was graduated in 1709 at Yale college, where he was a tutor from 1710 to 1715; and was one of the corporation for many years. Ordained as the successor of Mr. Pierpont July 4, 1716, the church was happy under his ministry till 1742, when a separation was made. Many of his church were distrustful of the correctness of his sentiments, and every good work. He was of the firm of May-displeased with his seal against religious revivals. The church had been independent, but in Jan., 1742, he caused them to adopt the Saybrook platform. Those who withdrew were formed into a new church, and finally settled Samuel Bird at Whitehaven, Oct. 3, 1751. Of the ecclesiastical council on this occasion were Wheelock, Bellamy, Graham, Pomeroy, and Hopkins. Mr. Whittlesey was settled in 1758 as the colleague of Mr. Noyes. - Dana's Centen. Discourses.

NOYES, JOHN, the son of Rev. Joseph N., died greatly lamented in 1767, aged about 34. He was a graduate of 1753 and became a preacher; but from ill health was not settled in the ministry. His sons John and James were ministers. His widow, Mary, the daughter of Rev. Joseph Fish of Stonington, married in 1775 General Gold S. Silliman of Fairfield, and thus she was the mother of Professor Benjamin Silliman. -Sprague's Annals.

NOYES, EDMUND, minister of Salisbury, Mass., died in 1809, aged about 84. He graduated at Harvard in 1747. He succeeded S. Webster.

NOYES, NATHANIEL, minister of South Hampton, N. H., died at Newbury in 1810, aged 75. The son of Deacon Parker Noyes of Newbury, he graduated at Princeton in 1759; was ordained in 1763; and dismissed in 1800. For fifty years he preached constantly and faithfully without being confined one Sabbath by sickness. His last text was, " Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." - Panoplist, Jan., 1811.

NOYES, MATTHEW, minister of Northford, in Branford, Conn., died in 1839, aged about 74. Born in Lyme, he graduated at Yale in 1785, and was ordained in 1790. He was a member of the college corporation.

NOYES, THOMAS, minister of Needham, Mass., died in 1837, aged 69. He was born at Acton; graduated at Harvard in 1795; and was ordained over the second church in Needham in 1799, and was a faithful minister thirty-four years.

NOYES, NATHAN, M. D., died in Newburyport in 1842; graduated at Dartmouth in 1796.

NOYES, JAMES, died Feb. 18, 1844, aged 79; the minister of Wallingford, Conn. He was born in Fairfield, and graduated at Yale in 1782, NOYES, John, died in Weston, Conn., May 15, 1846, aged 84. He was the son of John, and grandson of Rev. James N. of New Haven. He graduated at Yale in 1779; was ordained pastor at Norfield, then a parish of the town of Fairfield, May 31, 1786. His wife was the daughter of Samuel Sherwood, his predecessor, who graduated in 1749, and died in 1783. He published a half-century sermon, 1836.

NOYES, DANIEL, deacon, died at Andover, April 8, 1852, aged 60; a man always ready to his colr. Ho e duties A long fulness. Parker ds. In 1; they ey wero Ir. Parhouse. people, v desirmplacaough he he Engiscopacy ing vote siastical ing cenadgment amiable. nd affected with society; defence e of the shed the e temple

as emi-

ead the ory was

f Christ. was rehe rights disputa-, the latrsons of

was publ. - Ma-Coll. VII. Stoning-ling, died was born rvard colcpense of 1664 he he was religious He was ncommon ablic perbreathed endeavorlesiastical

Being a first truseouncillor As a phynard and Noyes, Boston, druggists; whose ink has made its mark the world over. He was a member of the prudential committee of the American board of missions.

NOYES, ELI, D. D., died at Lafayette, Indiana, Sept. 10, 1854. He was a Freewill Baptist, a man of learning, and six years a missionary at Or.ssa in India. He published a Hebrew

NOYES, JOSLAH, M. D., died at Clinton, New York, Nov. 1, 1853. Born in New Hampshire, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1801, a classmate of Webster, concerning whose college life he wrote a memorial. He was a professor in Hamilton college.

NUNNENUNTENO, a Narragansett Indian sachem, was taken prisoner and put to death in 1676 on the Pawcatuck river, near Stonington. He was a blood-stained chief. Two Indians were employed to shoot him; when his head was cut off and carried to Hartford.

NURSE, REBECCA, wife of Francis of Salem village, was hung as a witch July 19, 1692. She had four sons and four daughters. The year in which this poor woman was hung was memorable for witcheraft in Essex county, Mass. Before the close of September, 1692, nineteen persons were hung; and one, Giles Cory, was pressed to death on the charge of witchcraft. More than a hundred women, many of fair characters and reputable families in Salem, Beverly, Andover, Billerica, and other towns, were apprehended and generally committed to prison. The evidence was of such kind as this: when the accused were before the magistrate, with the possessed or "afflicted" children as witnesses, and were directed to look upon the afflicted, these children cried out and fell into a fit; and this was proof. And then the old women were blinded, and ordered to touch the afflicted, and at their touch they came out of their pretended fits. In England, about eight years previously, many more persons suffered for witcheraft under such an eminent judge as Sir Matthew Hale. The spiritualism of the present day, dealing with the invisible world, may have as little evidence to support it as the witchcraft of 1692; but its adherents are no less the victims of a miserable delusion, NUTTING, JOHN, died May 20, 1790, nged 97. The son of Jonathan of Cambridge, he graduated in 1712, and was a school-master at Salem thirty-seven years. He was also custom-house officer at Salem.

NYE, SAMUEL, Dr., died at Salisbury, Mass., in June, 1834, aged 85; a graduate of Harvard in 1771.

OAKES, URIAN, president of Harvard college, died July 25, 1681, aged 49. He was born in England about the year 1631, and was brought to America in his childhood. A sweetness of disposition exhibited itself early and remained with him through life. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1649. While very young and small he published at Cambridge a set of astronomical calculations with this apposite motto;

O

ag

by

an

A

fle

to 18 th

Isl

In

by

the

be

Int

me

nt

he

the

arı

ing

kil

flag

ma

Un

18

800 vat

a t

Fa

he

fro

In

of

W

die

ho

17 bei

he

ya:

ea

ba

fro

W

Parvum parva decent sed luest sua gratia parvis.

He soon went to England, and was settled in the ministry at Titchfield in Hampshire. Being silenced in 1662 with the other nonconforming ministers, he found an asylum in a respectable family, and afterwards preached in another congregation. Such was his celebrity for learning and piety, that the church and society of Cambridge, on the decease of Mr. Mitchell in 1668, sent a messenger to England to invite him to hecome their minister. He accepted the invitation. but through various circumstances did not commence his labors in Cambridge till Nov. 8, 1671. Being placed at the head of Harvard college after the death of Dr. Hoar, he commenced the duties of this office April 7, 1675, still however retaining the pastoral care of his flock. But, Feb. 2, 1680, the corporation appointed him president, and persuaded him to be innugurated, and to devote himself exclusively to this object. He was succeeded by Mr. Rogers in the college, and by Mr. Gookin in the church of Cambridge. He was a man of extensive erudition and distinguished usefulness. He excelled equally as a scholar, as a divine, and as a Christian. By his contemporaries he was considered as one of the most resplendent lights that ever shone in this part of the world. He was very humble with all his greatness, like the full ear of corn, which hangs near the ground. In the opinion of Dr. Mather, America never had a greater master of the true, pure Ciceronian Latin, of his skill in which language an extract from one of his commencement orations is preserved as a specimen in the Magnalia. He published an artillery election sermon, entitled, the unconquerable, all conquering, and more than conquering Christian soldier, 1672; election sermon, 1673; a sermon at Cambridge on the choice of their military officers; a fast sermon; a long elegy on the death of Rev. Mr. Shepard of Charlestown, 1677. This is pathetic and replete with imagery. - Holmes' Hist. of Cambridge; Sprague's Annals.

OAKES, THOMAS, Dr., of Boston, the brother of Pres. O., died in Wellfleet in 1719, aged 75. He graduated at Harvard in 1662; was a representative in 1689; and went to England as an agent for Massachusetts, and aided in the new charter. John Dunton describes him: "He is an eminent physician and a religious man; at his first coming to a patient he persuades him to put his trust in God, the fountain of health."

OBBATINEWAT, an Indian sachem, subject to Massassoit, who lived at the bottom of Massachusetts bry. Tarentines, or Eastern Indians.

OBOOKIAH, HENRY, a native of Hawaii or Owhyhee, died in Cornwall, Conn., Feb. 17, 1818, aged 26. He was brought to New Haven in 1809, by Capt. Brintnal, from the Sandwich Islands; and benevolent friends educated him for several years under Mr. Mills of Torringford, and at Andover, Mass., and with Mr. Morris of Litchfield. Next the ministers of Litchfield county took him under their care, and he was placed, in 1817, in the Cornwall mission school. There, in the midst of companions from the Sandwich Islands, and of pupils from various countries, East Indians and American Indians, he was smitten by a fever, and the hopes resting on him were blasted. It was a mystery of Providence. He was, however, the cause of the establishment of the missionary school, in which, in 1820, the number of pupils was twenty-nine. He had translated Genesis into his native language. memoirs were published 1818.

O'BRIEN, JEREMIAH, collector of the customs at Machias, Me., died in 1818, aged 78. He was a Revolutionary patriot. May 12, 1775, at the head of thirty-two men, with muskets, he captured the British schooner Margaretta, completely armed with swivels, hand-grenades etc., and having thirty-five men, nearly half of which were killed and wounded. This was the first British flag which struck to America. He was a worthy man, a benefactor of the poor.

O'BRIEN, RICHARD, consul-general of the United States to the Barbary Powers, died in 1824, aged 72. He was in early life an active scaman; then a successful adventurer in the privateering exploits of the Revolution; afterwards a brave commander in the regular naval service. Falling into the hands of the barbarians of Africa, he was a slave in Algiers. After being released from slavery, he was appointed consul-general. In his last years he was a farmer and a member of the legislature of Pennsylvania. He died at Washington city.

OCCUISH, PHILIP, a worthy Christian Indian, died at Niantic, in Lyme, Conn., "in the sure hope of ever being with the Lord," March 20, 1789, aged 71. His wife Sarah died two years before, saying, "she saw heaven opened to receive her." Their gravestones are standing in a graveyard of the Niantic or Nehantie Indians, in the east part of Lyme, on the west shore of a little bay at the mouth of the Niantie river, a few miles from New London. The sachem of the tribe was Wequash. Their faithful missionary at an early period was Mr. Griswold, the ancestor of many of that name in Connecticut. - Boston Recorder, Jan. 8, 1857.

OCCOM, Samson, an Indian preacher, died in

He was in constant fear of the on Thames river, near Norwich, Conn., about the year 1723. His parents, like the other Indians, led a wandering life, depending chiefly upon hunting and fishing for subsistence. Not one then cultivated the land, and all dwelt in wigwams. None of them could read. When Occom was a boy, Mr. Jewett, the minister of New London, now Montville, was accustomed to preach once a fortnight at Mohegan. One man went among the Indians to teach them to read. During the religious excitement, about 1739 and 1740, several ministers visited these Indians, and the Indians repaired to the neighboring churches. Occom at this period became the subject of religious impressions, and was in distress of mind for six months. He then found consolation. From this time he was desirous of becoming the teacher of his tribe. He could read by spelling, and in a year or two learned to read the Bible. At the age of nineteen he went to the Indian sehool of Mr. Wheelock of Lebanon, and remained with him four years. He afterwards, in 1748, kept a school in New London; but soon went to Montauk on Long Island, where he taught a school among the Indians ten or eleven years, at the same time being the religious teacher of the Indians in their own language, and preaching also to the Skenecock or Yenecock Indians, distant thirty miles. During a revival among the Montauks many became Christians. He lived in a house covered with mats, changing his abode twice a year, to be near the planting-ground in the summer and the wood in the winter. Amongst his various toils for subsistence, he was expert with his fish-hook and gun; he bound old books for East Hampton people, made wooden spoons, stocked guns, and made cedar pails, piggins, and He was ordained by the Suffolk Presbytery Aug. 29, 1759, and was from this time a regular member of the Presbytery. In 1766 Mr. Wheeloek sent him to England with Mr. Whitaker, the minister of Norwich, to promote the interests of Moor's Indian charity school. He was the first Indian preacher who visited Eng-The houses in which he preached were thronged. Between Feb. 16, 1766, and July 22, 1767, he preached in various parts of the kingdom between three and four hundred sermons. Large charitable donations were obtained, and the school was soon transplanted to Hanover, N. H., and connected with Dartmouth college. After his return, Occom sometimes resided at Mohegan, and was often employed in missionary labors among distant Indians. In 1786 he removed to Brotherton, near Utica, N. Y., in the neighborhood of the Stockbridge Indians, who were of the Mohegan root, and who had formerly been under the instruction of Mr. Sergeant and Mr. Edwards. A few of the Mohegans and other July, 1792, aged 69. He was born at Mohegan, Indians of Connecticut, Long Island, and Rhode ng and nstrotto:

tled in Reing

nained

ted at orming ectable er conearning f Camn 1668, i to beitation. it com-3, 1671. ge after e duties retain-Feb. 2, esident. and to He was and by Hd was hed usear. as a part of all his h hangs Mather, the true, ich lanncement he Magsermon. ing, and r, 1672; mbridge s; a fast

empora-

nost re-

pathetic Hist. of brother nged 75. a reprend as an the new

Rev. Mr.

"He is n; at his im to pat

n, subject f Massa-

Island removed about the same time. The Oneidas gave them a tract of land. In the last years of his life he resided with the Indians at New Stockbridge, near Brotherton, where he died. Upwards of three hundred Indians attended his funeral. He had two sisters, Lucy Tantequiggen and Sally Maminash. The flattering attentions which he received in England might have awakened some emotions of pride, and ocensioned some discontent with his previous narrow circumstances. In a few instances he was betraved into excess and intemperance; but then he humbled himself and reformed. He did not, like many white men, destroy himself by strong drink. Dr. Dwight says: "I heard Mr. Occom twice. His discourses, though not proofs of superior talents, were decent; and his utterance in some degree eloquent. His character at times labored under some imputations. Yet there is good reason to believe that most, if not all, of them were unfounded; and there is satisfactory evidence that he was a man of plety." J. Johnson was another Indian preacher of the same tribe. An account of the Montauk Indians, written by Occom, is preserved in the historical collections. He says that they had a multitude of gods. He published a sermon at the execution of Moses Paul, an Indian, at New Haven, Sept. 2. 1772; as Paul's crime resulted from drunkenness, he said in this sermon, that he never heard of "drunken devils." - Buell's Ord. Sermon; Hist. Coll. IV. 68; v. 13; IX. 89, 90; X. 105; Dwight, II. 112.

ODIORNE, THOMAS, died in Boston in 1851, aged about 70. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1791. His ancester John was of Portsmouth in 1660. He published poems, 1792.

ODLIN, ELISIA, minister of Amesbury, Mass., died in 1752, aged 41. Born in Exeter, he graduated at Harvard in 1731, and was settled in 1744. His predecessors were E. March and T. Wells, the first minister.

ODLIN, John, minister of Exeter, N. H., died in 1754, aged 72. He was the son of Elisha of Boston, and grandson of John, one of the first settlers of Boston. He graduated at Harvard in 1702, and was ordained in 1706. His son, Elisha, a graduate of 1731, was minister of Amesbury. His son John, a physician, died at Concord about 1790, aged 72. He published a sermon, 1742.

ODLIN, WOODDRIDGE, son of the preceding and his successor, died in March, 1776, aged 57, and was succeeded by Isaac Mansfield. He graduated at Harvard in 1738, and was ordained in 1743. By his mother he was descended from J. Woodbridge of Andover.

OFFLEY, DAVID W., consul of the United States in Smyrna, Asia Minor, died there in 1846. OGA-NA-YA, a Cherokee Indian and Baptist minister of great ability and usefulness, died at Jefferson city, Mo., Sept. 6, 1852.

OGDEN, JAcon, a physician, died in 1779, aged 58. He was born at Newark, N. J., in 1721, and commenced the practice of medicine at Januaica, L. I., where he lived in high reputation as a physician nearly forty years. His death was occasioned by an injury, received in consequence of a fright of his horse. He published letters on the malignant sore-throat distemper in 1760 and 1774. He recommended the use of mercury. Perhaps he was the first to introduce in that disorder the mercurial treatment. — Thacher.

fi

h

11 el

nş

W

al

30

fa

H

br

th

eh

Vi

m

ce

his

ote

ver

Ed

of

rel

An

ica

of 17 ng

gi

in

arı

E

de

re

gu

80

re

me

ler

tru

801

OGDEN, MATTITIAS, died at Elizabethtown, N. J., in 1791. He was a brigadier in the army of the United States, took an early and a decided part in the contest with Great Britain. He joined the army at Cambridge, and such was his zeal and resolution, that he accompanied Arnold in penetrating through the wilderness to Canada in 1775. He was engaged in the attack upon Quebee, and was carried wounded from the place of engagement. On his return from this expedition he was appointed to the command of a regiment, in which station he continued until the conclusion of the war. On the occurrence of peace he was honored by congress with a commission of brigadier-general. He was distinguished for his liberality and philanthropy. He was generous, amiable, and endeared to his friends.

OGDEN, John Cosens, died at Chestertown, Maryland, in 1800. A native of New Jersey, a graduate of Princeton in 1770, he was ordained by Bishop Senbury, and succeeded Mr. Browne in Portsmouth, N. H., from 1786 to 1793, after which time he was subject in a degree to mental derangement. He resided after 1770 fifteen years in New Haven. His wife was a daughter of Gen. Wooster; his son, Aaron, survived him. He published election sermon, 1790; a masonic sermon; address at the opening of an academy; letters occasioned by correspondence between him and Dr. Macclintock; excursion to Bethlehem, 1800.

OGDEN, DAVID B., an eminent lawyer, died at New York, July 15, 1849, aged 80. He came from New Jersey to New York in 1802. He was the associate of great lawyers, as Spencer, Van Ness, Wells, Emmet; his chief practice was in the supreme court of the United States. He was a man of simple manners and of great kindness, OGDEN, AARON, governor of New Jersey in 1812, died at Jersey city, April 19, 1839, aged 83. He served as an officer during the Revolutionary war; for many years he practised law with reputation; and was senator of the United States in 1801–1803.

OGDEN, UZAL, D. D., died at Newark, N. J., in Nov., 1822, aged 70 or 79. He was rector of Trinity church. He published a masonic sermon.

1784; and the reward of inliquity.

OGILVIE, JOHN, D. D., minister in New York, was graduated at Yale college in 1748, and was for some time, nominally, a missionary to the Indians on the Mohawk, and had a salary as such, but resided chiefly as a preacher at Albany; he was afterwards assistant minister of Trinity church, New York, where he died Nov. 26, 1774, aged 51. His appearance, address, and manners were prepossessing and interesting; he had good abilities and was exemplary in his life. He left 300 pounds to a charity school, and other benefactions.

OGILVIE, JAMES, an orator, died Sept. 18, 1820, aged 45. He was a native of Scotland. His father, Rev. Dr. O., who died in 1814, was a branch of the noble family of Finlater. From the age of eighteen to thirty-five he had the charge of an academy at Milton, Albemarle co., Virginia. He relinquished his school in 1807, and delivered in the principal cities lectures as models of oratory. It was a hazardous but successful undertaking. He received much applause and for that he hungered. However, although his gestures were very graceful, there was a monotony in his voice. He wanted the fire and vehe-mence of passion. Returning to Europe, he was very unsuccessful in his lectures in London and Edinburgh, and was overwhelmed with disanpointment. In 1820 he succeeded to the lordship of Finlater, but died soon at Aberdeen. It was reported that he killed himself. He was in America addicted to the use of opium for the purpose of exhibitantion. He published philosophical essays, 1816.

OGHNY, JOHN, published in London a history of America, folio, 1670.

OGLE, SAMUEL, governor of Maryland from 1737 to 1742, and from 1747 to his death, died in 1751.

OGLE, BENJAMIN, governor of Maryland from 1798 to 1801, died at Annapolis July 6, 1809,

aged 60.

OGLETHORPE, JAMES, the founder of Georgia, died in Aug., 1785, aged 97. He was bord in England about the year 1688. Entering the army at an early age, he served under Prince Eugene, to whom he became secretary and aidede-camp. On the restoration of peace he was returned a member of parliament, and distinguished himself as a useful senator by proposing several regulations for the benefit of trade, and a reform in the prisons. His philanthropy is commemorated in Thomson's seasons. His benevolence led him in 1732 to become one of the poverty, to open an asylum for the persecuted Protestants of Europe, and to carry to the natives the blessings of Christianity. In the prosecution of this design Mr. Oglethorpe embarked in Nov. with a number of emigrants, and, arriving at Carolina in the middle of Jan., 1733, proceeded immediately to Savannah river, and laid the foundation of the town of Savannah. He made treaties with the Indians, and crossed the Atlantic several times to promote the interests of the colony. Heing appointed general and commanderin-chief of his majesty's forces in South Carolina and Georgia, he brought from England in 1738, a regiment of six hundred men to protect the southern frontiers from the Spaniards. A mutiny was soon excited in his came and a during attempt was made to assassinate vim; but his life was wonderfully preserved threagh the care of that Providence which controls all earthly agents, and superintends every event. After the commemement of the war between Great Britain and Spain in 1739, he visited the Indians, to secure their friendship, and in 1740 he went into Florida on an unsuccessful expedition against St. Augustine. As the Spaniards laid claim to Georgia, three shousand men, a part of whom were from Havana, were soft in 1742 to drive Oglethorpe from the frontiers. When this force proceeded up the Alatumeira, passing fort St. Simon's without injury, he was obliged to retreat to Frederica. He had but about seven hundred men, besides Indians. Yet, with a part of these he approached within two miles of the enemy's eamp, with the design of attacking them by surprise, when a French soldier of his party fired his musket and ran into the Spanish lines. His situation was now very critical, for he knew that the deserter would make known his weakness. Returning, however, to Frederica, he had recourse to the following expedient. He wrote a letter to the deserter, desiring him to acquaint the Spaniards with the defenceless state of Frederica, and to urge them to the attack; if he could not effect this object, he directed him to use all his arts to persuade them to stay three days at fort Simon's, as within that time he should have a reinforcement of two thousand land forces, with six ships of war, cautioning him at the same time not to drop a hint of Admiral Vernon's meditated attack upon St. Augustine. A Spanish prisoner was intrusted with this letter under promise of delivering it to the deserter. But he gave it, as was expected and intended, to the commander-inchief, who instantly put the deserter in irons. In the perplexity occasioned by this letter, while the enemy was deliberating what measure to adopt, three ships of force, which the governor of South trustees of Georgia, a colony, the design of whose Carolina had sent to Oglethorpe's aid, appeared settlement was principally to rescue many of the off the coast. The Spanish commander was now inhabitants of Great Britain from the miseries of | convinced, beyond all question, that the letter, in-

d at

aged , and nalea, phyoccaof a n the 1774.

er the itown, army ecided joined rhaps

s zeal old in ıada in a Quelace of edition giment, clusion he was briga-

his lib-

nerous,

ertown, ersey, a rdained Brewne 13, after mental en years hter of ed him. masonic eademy; between er, died le came He was cer, Van was in tes. He eat kind-

Bethle-

ersey in 39, agcd Revoluised law e United

rk, N. J.,

80

tv

th

tic

n٥

T

as กท

ev

di

ac

kil

wl

we

 U_i

Ju

M

wa

pre

till

In

Ne

Fr

ma

182

in

in till

wh

ho

and

die

ehi

au

pa

of

in

the

the ber

the

Aι

he

the

tw

pr

the

Pr

his

stead of being a stratagem, contained serious and fierce in fight. Once, when Queen Isabella instructions to a spy, and in this moment of consternation set fire to the fort, and embarked so precipitately as to leave behind him a number of cannon with a quantity of military stores. Thus, by an event beyond human foresight or control, by the correspondence between the artful suggestions of a military genius and the blowing of the winds, was the infant colony providentially saved from destruction, and Oglethorpe retrieved his reputation and gained the character of an able general. He now returned to England, and never again revisited Georgia. In 1745 he was promoted to the rank of major-general, and was sent against the rebels, but did not overtake them, for which he was tried by a court martial and honorably acquitted. After the return of Gage to England in 1775, the command of the British army in America was offered to General Oglethorpe. He professed his readiness to accept the appointment, if the ministry would authorize him to assure the colonies that justice would be done them; but the command was given to Sir William Howe. Upon his tomb, in Cranham church, Essex, is the following inscription:

"Religion watches o'er his urn, And all the virtues bending mourn. Humanity, with languid eye, Melting for others' misery; Prudence, whose hands a measure hold: And Temperance, with a rein of gold: Fidelity's transparent vest, And Fortitude in armor drest; Wisdom's gray locks and Freedom join The moral train to bless his shrine And, pensive, all around his ashes hely Their last sad honers pay in order melancholy."

His life was written by Rev. Dr. Harris. - Marshall, 1. 318-344; Thompson's Seasons, Winter, 359-388.

O'HARA, James, one of the founders of Pittsburg, Penn., died Dec. 19, 1819, aged 66. He was born in Ireland in 1754, and came to America in 1772, without friends or capital. Engaging in the Indian trade, he became qualified for employment by the government in frequent missions to the Indian tribes. Under Gen. Wayne he was very useful to the army as quartermaster-general. Duly estimating the fine locality of Pittsburg, he early purchased there an extensive real estate and laid the foundation of a princely fortune. The first glass works and brewery were established by him. Mary Carson, his daughter, married in 1823 Wm. Croghan. His intelligence and wit gave a charm to his conversation; he was most hospitable, liberal, and beneficent. The citizens mourned him as a father.

OJEDA, Don Alonzo DE, a follower of Columbus in his second voyage, was celebrated for his personal endowments and daring spirit. Of small size, he yet had great strength and activity, was was in the tower of a church at Seville, he walked out on a beam which projected twenty feet from the tower at a dizzy height. In Jan., 1494, he explored the interior of Hispaniola. After being besieged in a fortress by Caonabo, he treacherously seized the Carib chieftain. In the same spirit of inhumanity he made up his Cavalgada, or droves of slaves, carrying the unhappy natives to Cadiz, and selling them in the slave-market. He was afterwards governor of New Andalusia at Darien, but he failed about 1513 in his attempt to establish a colony there. In his voyage to Paria in 1499 he was accompanied by Amerigo. - Irving's Columbus.

OLCOTT, BULKLEY, minister of Charlestown, N. H., died in 1793, aged 59. Born in Bolton. Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1758, and was settled in 1761. J. Crosby was his successor in 1810. He published a masonic sermon, 1781.

OLCOTT, ALLEN, minister of Farmington, Conn., died in 1811, aged about 63. He graduated at Yale in 1768; was settled in 1786, and dismissed in 1792. He was born in East Hartford. J. Washburn and N. Parker succeeded

OLCOTT, SIMEON, chief justice of New Hampshire, died in 1815, aged 78. He was graduated at Yale college in 1761, and commenced the practice of the law at Charlestown, N. II. He was appointed chief justice of the court of common pleas Dec. 25, 1784, a judge of the superior court Jan. 25, 1790, chief justice March 28, 1795, and, from 1801 to 1805, a senator of the United States, in the place of Mr. Livermore, who had

OLCOTT, MILLS, died at Hanover, N. H., July 11, 1845, aged 71. He was the son of Gen. Peter O. of Norwieh, Vt., who removed from Bolton, Conn., in 1773, and was lieutenant-governor. His mother was Sarah Mills of Waterbury. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1790; practised law in Hanover; was secretary, treasurer, and trustee of the college; and a member of the Hartford convention. Becoming a member of the church in 1820, he was president of Grafton county bible society. His wife was a daughter of Col. Asa Porter of Haverhill, N. H. He had nine children. Of his daughters, Catharine married Joseph Bell, and Helen married Rufus Choate of Boston, Jane married W. T. Heydock of Lowell, Sarah married W. H. Duncan of Hanover, and Mary married Charles E. Thompson of Haver-

OLDHAM, John, a disturber of the church at Plymouth, arrived in the Ann, in 1623, and was associated with Lyford in 1624. They set up a separate worship on the Sabbath, and intended to alter, probably to assume, the government. He expert in all kinds of weapons, most adventurous lived after he left Plymouth at Hull and Cape Ana, sabella walked t from 194, he r being eachersame ilgada, natives narket. dalusia ittempt rage to merigo.

estown. Bolton, and was essor in 1781. nington, gradu-86, and t Hart-cceeded Hampaduated ced the H. He of comsuperior 28, 1795, United who had

H., July en. Peter Bolton, governor. iry. He tised law d trustee Hartford ie church inty bible Col. Asa ine chilrried Jo-Choate ef f Lowell, over, and of Haverchurch at , and was set up a intended nent. He Cape Ann, so that he recovered his lost credit. He had a spirit of adventure, and with Samuel Hall and two others travelled, in 1633, from Dorchester through the wilderness to a place on the Connecticut river, called by the Indians Mattaneaug, now Windsor. The sachem welcomed them. This led to the settlement. Afterwards, in 1636, as he went in his barque to trade with the Indians, and lay at anchor at Block Island, the Indians boarded his vessel and murdered him. event led to the Pequot war. John Endicot condueted the first expedition, and burned all the wigwams on Block Island. According to the account of Lion Gardiner, Oldham, when he was killed, had with him 50 pounds in gold coins, which the Indians, punching holes through them, wore upon their necks for ornaments. - Stone's Uncas.

OLDMIXON, JOHN, died in England in 1742, aged 69. He published, among other works, the British empire in America, 2d ed., 2 vols., 1741.

OLDS, GAMALIEL S., died at Circleville, O., June 13, 1848, aged 71. Born in Granville, Mass., he graduated at Williams in 1801, and was a tutor several years. In 1806 he was chosen professor of mathematics, which office he held till 1808, when he began the study of theology. In 1813 he was ordained a colleague with Dr. Newton of Greenfield, and remained three years. From 1819 to 1821 he was professor of mathematics in the University of Vermont, and from 1821 to 1825 in Amherst college, and afterwards in the university of Georgia. He went to Ohio in 1841, and discharged the duties of a minister till his death. On his return from Bloomfield, whither he had been to preach, his frightened horse threw him from his vehicle down a bank, and he was so wounded that in a few days he died; and he departed in peace. His wife and children were all soon dead. He published inaugural oration, 1806; eight sermons on Episcopacy and Presbyterian parity, 1815; a statement of facts as to professor at Middlebury, 1818.

OLIN, GIDEON, judge, died at Shaftsbury, Vt., in 1822. Born in Rhode Island, he was one of the founders of the State of Vermont, speaker of the house, judge of a county court, and a member of congress.

OLIN, STEPHEN, D. D., LL. D., president of the Wesleyan university, died in Middletown Aug. 16, 1851, aged 54. Born in Leicester, Vt., he graduated at Middlebury in 1820, and entered the Methodist ministry in 1824; he then spent two years in Charleston, S. C. In 1833 he was president of the college at Macon, Georgia, and thence went to Middletown as the successor of Pres. Fisk. In 1837 he travelled in Europe for his health. He was over six feet in height, of a

and was the representative of Watertown in 1634, | compass; but his gestures were stiff. He published various sermons, lectures, and discourses, and also travels in the East, in 2 vols. His life and letters were published in 1853. - Cyclopedia of Amer. Literature.

OLIVER, THOMAS, an elder of the church in Boston, died in 1657. He arrived in 1631. His sons, John, James, Peter, and Samuel, were noted and useful men in Boston. John died in 1646, aged 29, leaving five children. According to Winthrop, he was greatly lamented for the sweetness of his disposition and his public usefulness, being an expert soldier, an excellent surveyor of land, a good scholar; and he had been an able preacher for four years.

OLIVER, PETER, son of Thomas, and an eminent merchant in Boston, died in 1670. He was admitted a freeman in 1640, and was captain of the artillery company in 1669. Of his sons, Peter graduated in 1675; James graduated in 1650, was a physician in Cambridge, and died in 1703; and Daniel died in 1732, aged 68, being the father of lieutenant-governor Andrew Oliver and of chief justice Peter Oliver.

OLIVER, JAMES, Dr., died at Cambridge April 8, 1703, aged 43. He was a skilful physician, and eminent for his virtues.

OLIVER, DANIEL, a member of the council of Mass., the son of Peter, a merchant, and grandson of Elder Thomas O., was born in 1664, and died in Boston in July, 1732, aged 68. He was distinguished for piety, humility, and charity from his youth. He always rose early to read the sacred volume and pour out his heart unto God. Though mercantile business claimed much of his attention, yet he devoted Saturday afternoon to visiting the sick in his neighborhood. He was an overseer of the poor, and he maintained, at his own expense, a school which received thirty of their children. He built for this purpose a house which cost 600 pounds, and in his will he directed it to be devoted to the instruction of the poor forever. He contributed largely to the promotion of the gospel among the ignorant and vicious. - Prince's Fun. Sermon.

OLIVER, ANDREW, lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, son of the preceding, died at Boston March 3, 1774, aged 67. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1724. While he was secretary of the province, he was appointed distributor of stamps in 1765, but the Boston mob demolished his office, August 14, and compelled him to resign. He sustained the office of lieutenantgovernor from 1770 till 1774, during the administration of his brother-in-law, Mr. Hutchinson. No man was more disposed to promote the designs of the British ministry. His letters, which were sent over by Dr. Franklin in 1772, disclosed his subserviency to the British ministry, and the large frame, with a voice of great power and disclosure embittered his remaining days. He was hungry for office and honor. Yet in private influence would be important. In the Revolulife he was respected. He was succeeded as licutenant-governor by Thomas Oliver, of a different family, who died in England in July, 1816,

aged 82.

.OLIVER, PETER, LL. D., chief justice of Massachusetts, the brother of the preceding, died at Birmingham, England, in Oct., 1791, aged 79. He was born in 1713, and graduated at Harvard college in 1730. He was appointed a judge of the superior court, Sept. 15, 1756. His place of residence was Middleborough, and he had not been educated to the law. In the year 1774, when the general court called upon him, as they called upon the other judges, to receive the grant for his services, as usual, from the treasury of the province, and to engage to receive no pay or emolument except from the assembly, he peremp-In consequence of this refusal torily refused. the house voted articles of impeachment in February, accusing him of high crimes and misdemeanors. His son, Peter, died at Shrewsbury, England, in 1822, aged 81. He published a speech on the death of Isaac Lathrop, 1750; poem on the death of Secretary Willard; scripture lexicon, 1787. - Warren, I. 119; Gordon, I. 345.

OLIVER, THOMAS FITCH, Episcopal minister, first of Marblehead, then of Providence, died in 1797, aged about 42. He graduated at Harvard in 1775. W. Harris succeeded him at M. He published a masonic discourse, 1784.

OLIVER, ANDREW, judge of the court of common pleas for Essex, the son of Licut.-Gov. Andrew O., was born in 1731; was graduated at Harvard college in 1749; and died at Salem early in Dec., 1799, aged 68. He was distinguished for his attachment to literature and science. Of the American academy he was one of the original members. He published an essay on comets, in 1772; and theory of lightning and water-spouts, in American transactions.

OLIVER, ROBERT, colonel, died at Waterford in May, 1810, aged 72, an excellent Christian. Living at Barre, Mass., at the time of the Revolution, he was an officer in the army; afterwards he lived at Conway. In 1789 he erected at Waterford the first mills in Ohio. He sustained various civil offices.

OLIVER, THOMAS, lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, died in England in July, 1816, aged 82. He was a native of Dorchester, and a descendant of Elder Thomas O. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1753. After the death of Lieutenant-Governor Andrew O. in 1774, he was nominated as his successor by the advice of Mr. Hutchinson, though not related to him. He was a scholar, and affable and gentlemanly, and in the possession of a good fortune, residing in an elegant mansion, which he had built at Cambridge. Probably Mr. Hutchinson thought his tion he went to England, and lived at Bristol. He wrote in the pietas et gratulatio, a short English poem .- Eliot.

the

hu

caj

ch

de cus

chi

91.

It i

we

der

Ba

der

bat

De

Pot

Ne

fro

vea

bef

do

mis

He

pas

in 1

Chi

20,

N.

a gr

at !

Ila

ate

yok

erly

aca

me

one

He

epi

dia

rive

180 sul

reli

Bri

gov

(

(

OLIVER, NATHANIEL K. G., died at sea in the ship Potomae, of which he was secretary, May 1, 1832, aged 42. The son of Rev. Daniel O., he graduated at Harvard in 1809, and was for years the useful teacher of a public school in Boston. Ill health induced him to take a voyage to the east in the ship in which he died. He was a distinguished scholar, a man of exemplary vir-

OLIVER, ROBERT, an eminent merchant of Baltimore, died in 1834, aged 77.

OLIVER, BENJAMIN LYNDE, M. D., died at Salem May 14, 1835. He was a native of Boston, and grandson of Lieutenant-Governor Oliver. He was respected for his talents, learning, and philanthropy. He published hints on the pursuit of happiness, 1818.

OLIVER, DANIEL, a minister in Beverly, died in Roxbury Sept. 14, 1840, aged 88. Born in Boston, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1785; was the pastor of the upper parish of Beverly from 1787 to 1797; in later years was not the minister of any church. His wife, of the name of Kemble, was the sister of the wife of Caleb Bingham. He published nine discourses on baptism, 1806.

OLIVER, DANIEL, M. D., LL. D., died at Cambridge June 1, 1842, aged 54; professor of the theory and practice of physic and of intellectual philosophy in Dartmouth college. He was born in Marblehead Sept. 9, 1787, graduated at Harvard in 1806, and was for several years the associate of Dr. Mussey in Salem. From 1820 to 1837 he lived at Hanover; afterwards at Cambridge. He lectured at Cincinnati in 1841 and 1842. An exemplary member of the Episcopal church, of which his father was a minister, he died in peace. He was a man of mild deportment, gentlemanly, of a pure character; an accomplished classical scholar, skilled in various languages, having also a fine taste for music. He published first lines of physiology in 1835, and a 2d edition in 1840. Williams' Med. Biog.

OLIVER, WILLIAM, died in Dorchester in 1847, leaving his whole property, about 100,000 dollars, to be divided between the Perkins institution for the blind and the McLean asylum for the insanc.

OLMSTEAD, JARED, missionary among the Choetaws, died at Norwalk Sept. 19, 1843, aged 32. He was born in Ridgefield, Conn., and entered on his work in 1836, at first a teacher at Wheelock, then a preacher at Norwalk. He had the confidence and love of the Indiaus.

OLMSTED, GIDEON, died at East Hartford Feb. 7, 1845, aged 96. In 1776 in a privateer he was captured and carried to Jamaica, and evoluristol. Eng-

sea in retary. Daniel nd was nool in vovage He was ary vir-

ant of

lied at of Bos-Oliver. ig, and ie purly, died

Born in

85 ; was ly from minister f Kemingham. n, 1806. at Camthe thetual phiborn in Harvard associate to 1837 mbridge. 42. An iurch, of n peace. lemanly, in 1840. ester in 100,000 ins instiylum for iong the classical ving also

rst lines

343, aged , and eneacher at He had

Hartford privateer aica, and captured the vessel.

OLMSTED, DENNISON, JUN., professor of chemistry at Yale college, died Aug., 1846.

OLNEY, JEREMIAH, colonel, died at Providence in 1812, aged 63. He was collector of the customs at P.

OLNEY, THOMAS, minister of the Baptist church in Providence, died June 11, 1722, aged 91. He was born in Hertford, England, in 1631. It is supposed he was the son of Thomas O., who went with Roger Williams from Boston to Providence, and was one of the founders of the first Baptist church in this country.

OLNEY, STEPHEN, captain, died at Providence Dec., 1832, aged 77. He fought in various battles and was twice wounded. - Bost. Patriot, OLNEY, GIDEON W., Episcopal minister at Portland, Maine, died in Feb., 1838, aged 44.

OLYPHANT, DAVID W. C., a merchant of New York, died in Cairo, Egypt, on his return from China, June 10, 1851. Living in China for years, he redeemed the promise made thirty years before in a letter to Dr. Morrison, that he would do what he could for Christian missions. The missionaries found him a friend and counsellor. He was also liberal in giving to them in his ships passages free of charge. To the mission house in New York, he presented a thousand select Chinese volumes. - Observer, July 24.

ONDAYAKA, died near Oneida castle Sept. 20, 1839, aged 96; head chief of the Onondagas.

ORDWAY, NEHEMIAH, died in Pembroke, N. H., June, 1836, aged 93. Born in Amesbury, a graduate of Harvard in 1764, he was ordained at Middleton, N. II., in 1778; then was pastor at Haverhill from 1789 to 1794.

ORNE, Joseph, Dr., died in Salem Jan. 28, 1786, aged 36. He was born in Salem; graduated at Harvard in 1765; studied with Dr. Holyoke; and practised physic a few years in Beverly, then in Salem. He was an associate of the academy of arts and sciences, and wrote for the medical society. Dr. Holyoke regarded him as one of the best poets our country had produced. He introduced the cow parsnep as a cure of the epilepsy. - Thacher's Med. Biog.

ORONO, chief of the Penobseot tribe of Indians, died at Oldtown, an island in Penobscot river, three leagues above tide water, Feb. 5, 1801, aged 113 years. He cultivated among his subjects the principles of peace, temperance, and religion. In the time of the war with Great Britain he formed a treaty with the American government, and faithfully adhered to it. His people profess the Roman Catholic religion and thence ordered to a prison ship in New York; to an unusual degree in his old age. His hair but he and three others rose on the crew and had long been of a milky white, and this yenerable chief had lived to hunt in three different centuries. His wife, Madam Orono, died in Jan., 1809, aged 115. A notice of him by W. D. Williamson is in hist coll. 3d series, vol. VIII. His father was a Frenchman; his mother half French. His eyes were blue, his hair brown, not black, in early life. He understood both the French and Indian languages. He succeeded Osson as chief, and was succeeded by Aitteon, who died about 1811. His son, John Aitteon, succeeded in 1816. John Neptune was associated with him as lieutenant-governor.

ORR, HUGH, an enterprising manufacturer, died in Dec., 1798, aged 81. He was born Jan. 13, 1717, in Scotland, and was educated a gunsmith. About 1738 he settled at Bridgewater, Mass., where he first erected a trip-hammer and manufactured scythes and other tools. About 1748 he made five hundred muskets for the State. In the war of the Revolution he cast iron and brass eannon, from 3 to 42-pounders, and cannon balls. He also invented a machine for cleaning flaxseed, which he exported to Scotland, and constructed a machine for the manufacture of cotton. So highly was he esteemed by his fellow citizens, that he was for some years elected a senator. His widow, Mary, died in 1804, aged 80. His son, Robert, was armorer at Springfield. Dr. Hecter Orr of Bridgewater was his grandson.

ORR, John, died at Topsham, Maine, in Oct., 1799, aged 103.

ORR, John, an officer in the Revolution, died at Bedford, Mass., in 1822, aged 75. He served under Gen. Stark in the battle of Bennington, and was severely wounded, a ball entering just above the knee joint and lodging in the bone. In consequence of this he had a stiff knee and was a cripple, and subject to indescribable sufferings for life. For many years he was a representutive and senator of New Hampshire. His mind was vigorous; his judgment sound; and his Christian character exemplary. His son, Benjamin Orr, a distinguished lawyer, died at Brunswick, Maine, in Sept., 1828; his son, Isaac Orr, was the secretary of the African education society at Washington; his daughter was tho wife of Samuel A. Worcester, the missionary, whom the Georgians held a prisoner in their penitentiary in disregard of the solemn decision of the supreme court of the United States.

ORR, BENJAMIN, died at Brunswick, Me., in 1828, aged about 50. The son of John Orr of Bedford, N. H., a patriot, who died in 1822, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1798, and settled as a lawyer at Brunswick, holding a high rank in have a church. He retained his mental faculties his profession. He was a member of congress. His son, John Orr, is a minister in Alfred, Maine. He published an oration on the death of Washington, 1800.

ORR, ALEXANDER D., died at Paris, Ky., in 1835. He was a representative in congress from 1792 to 1797.

ORR, ROBERT G., minister of Paterson, N. J., died in 1837, aged 49.

ORR, ISAAC, died at Amherst, Mass., April 28, 1844, aged 50. Born in Bedford, N. H., the son of John Orr, a civilian and patriot of the Revolution, who was wounded at the battle of Bennington and made a cripple, - he graduated at Yale in 1818, distinguished as a scholar; afterwards he was a teacher in the asylum for the deaf and dumb at Hartford. He also was a preacher and missionary in Washington city. He labored for the colonization society. As a man of integrity and of pure character he was much esteemed. He was the inventor of the air-tight stove. He wrote a multitude of communications for the papers, journals, and scientific magazines, among them forty-five letters of Hampden in the Commercial Advertiser, and eighty letters of Timoleon in the Boston Courier. He left a commentary on Daniel and the Re lation.

ORR, HECTOR, M. D., died at East Bridgewater, Mass., April 29, 1855, aged 86. The same was his native town. He was the son of Colonel Robert Orr; and graduated at Harvard in 1792. He published history of free-masoury, a discourse, 1797; oration, 1801.

ORR, JOHN SAYERS, the "angel Gabriel," as he called himself, died in prison at Demarara, in 1856, aged 35. His crime in D. was stirring up an insurrection of the blacks. Born in England, he spent many years in this country. He thought, or pretended to think, that he was the angel Gabriel, and with a small horn he called together his audience in the streets or on the wharves of New York and other places, thinking he had a commission to preach against the Catholics.

OSBORN, John, a physician and poet, died May 31. 1753, aged 40. He was born at Sandwich, Ass., in 1713. His father, a native of Ireland, was the minister of Eastham from 1718 to 1737, and died at Boston, aged above 90. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1735. Uncertain for a time what profession to pursue, he directed his thoughts towards theology, and proeceded to far as to read before the association of ministers, with the design of being licensed to preach, a sermon which was not perfectly orthodox. Having afterwards resolved upon the study of medicine, he removed to Middletown, Conn. But little is known concerning him after this period. In 1753 he wrote to a sister that he had lingered almost two years a life not worth having. One of his sons was a physician in Middletown. His manners were open, plain, and agreeable, and his temper cheerful and mild. His clegy on the death of a young sister is preserved in the Boston mirror. His whaling song has been sang by whalers. It is published in cyclopedia of American literature. — Thacher's Medical Biography.

Oc

in

age

he

die

nea

He

Wit

the

the 166 lan

was dov

165

and

the era

crir

ma

Oli

lege

die

Hai

was

atec

at .

175

abo

whe

He

fron

Gui

frie

was

Ma

Hai

and

Uni

was

of

bor

son

bes

of

ber

an

a

app

Aft

me

C

(

OSBORN, SAMUEL, minister of Eastham, Mass., died in Boston, between 90 and 100 years of age. He came from Ireland; was ordained in 1718; the next year his church divided into two churches. He was dismissed in 1737 for heing an Arminian. He removed to Boston, and there taught a private school ten years or more. He taught the Cape Cod people the use of peat. He published his case and complaint, 1743.

OSBORN, SYLVANUS, minister of East Greenwich, Conn., died in 1771, aged about forty. He was graduated at Princeton in 1754, mind was ordained in 1757.

OSBORN, SARAH, died at Newport, R. I., in 1796, aged 82; a woman of distinguished piety.

OSBÖRN, BENJAMIN, minister of Tinmouth, Vt, died in 1818, aged 70. Born in Litchfield, Conn., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1775, and was pastor at T. from 1780 to 1787.

OSBORN, John, a physician, son of John, was born March 17, 1741, and after practising physic more than sixty years at Mideletows, died in June, 1825, aged 84. He was with the army at Ticonderoga in 1758. He was skilful as a chemist, and had the best medical library in the State. He published before the Revolution La Condamine's treatise on inoculation, with an appendix. — Thacher.

OSBORN, JOHN C., M. D., a physician, the cldest son of the preceding, died March 5, 1819, aged 52. He was born in Sept., 1766, and studied medicine with his father. He practised physic at Newbern, North Carolina, from 1787 till 1807, when he removed to the city of New York, where he was appointed professor of medicine in Columbia college, and afterwards professor of obstetries in the college of physicians and surgeons. He died of a pulmonary disorder at St. Croix. He had a taste for painting, and such skill in poetry that Barlow's vision of Columbus was submitted to him and Alsop for revision before it was published. — Thacher.

OSBORN, SELLECK, a poet, died at Philadelphia Oct. 1, 1826, aged 43. He was brought np a printer. He was born in Trumbull, Conn., and conducted a paper at Litchfield, about 1808, and was imprisoned for a libel, — a circumstance which excited much sympathy among his republican friends. He afterwards edited a paper in Boston, and the American Watelman at Wilmington, Delaware. He published a volume of poems, Boston, 1823. — Spec. of Amer. Poetry, II. 145.

OSBORN, SYLVESTER, major, died in Danvers

in the battle of Lexington in 1775.

OSBORNE, J. C., Mrs., died March 5, 1819, aged 115. Her husband died a few years before her, aged 110. - Jennison.

OSEOLA, or Powell, a Seminole Indian chief. died of a disease of the throat at fort Moultrie. near Charleston, Jan. 31, 1838, aged about 35. He was the master spirit of a long and desperate war; cool, subtle, determined in his hostility to the whites, he had a wonderful ascendency over the Indians.

OSGOOD, John, died at Andover, Mass., in 1651, aged 56. He came from Andover, England; was admitted freeman at Newbury in 1639; was one of the founders of the church at Andover in 1645, and the first representative in 1651. He had sons John, Stephen, Christopher, and Thomas. His posterity is numerous. Mary, the wife of his son John, was accused of witchcraft in 1692, and it was only by confessing the erime that she saved her life. She afterwards made a recantation. Twenty-five of the name of Oliver had graduated in the New England colleges before 1829.

OSGOOD, JAMES, minister of Wenham, Mass., died in 1745, aged about 41. He graduated at Harvard in 1724.

OSGOOD, John, minister of Midway, Georgia, was born in Dorchester, South Carolina; graduated at Harvard college in 1733; and was ordained at Dorchester March 24, 1735. He followed in 1754 a part of his society to a new settlement, about thirty miles from Savannah, called Midway, where he remained till his death, Aug. 2, 1773. He was succeeded by Moses Allen, Abiel Holmes from Nov., 1785, to June 21, 1791, and Cyrus Guildersleeve, Dec. 14, 1791. He was the father, friend, and shepherd of his flock, and by them was greatly beloved and lamented.

OSGOOD, Joseph, Dr., died at Andover, Mass., Jan., 1797, aged 78. He graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was an eminent physician, and for thirty years a deacon of the first church.

OSGOOD, SAMUEL, postmaster-general of the United States, died Aug. 12, 1813, aged 65. He was a descendant of John O., one of the founders of the church at Andover in Oct., 1645; was born in Andover, Mass., Feb. 14, 1748, being the son of Peter O. and Sarah Johnson; and was graduated at Harvard college in 1770. At the beginning of the Revolution he was a member of the board of war, and for some years a member of the legislature. In 1775 and 1776 he was an aid to Gen. Ward. In 1781 he was appointed a member of Congress. In 1785 the congress appointed him first commissioner of the treasury. After the commencement of our present government, Washington selected him in 1789 as post-

Oct. 2, 1845, aged 87. He was with G. Foster he held two years, when he was succeeded by Mr. Pickering. In 1801 he was supervisor of New York, and in 1863 appointed naval officer for the port of New York, where he died. He was an elder of one of the churches in New York. Though he cherished the hope that he became religious at the age of fifteen, yet he had many days of doubt and melancholy, and suffered keen remorse for doing so little in the cause of his Master. He published a work on chronology; remarks on Daniel and Revelation; a letter on Episcopacy, 1807; three letters on different subjects, addressed to J. B. Romeyn, J. Osgood, and A. Armstrong.

OSGOOD, JONATHAN, minister of Gardner, Mass., died in 1821, aged 60, in the twenty-first vear of his ministry. Born at Westford, he graduated at Yale in 1789.

OSGOOD, DAVID, D. D., minister of Medford, Mass., died Dec. 12, 1822, aged 74. Born in Andover, he was the son of Isaac Osgood, a pious farmer in the southwestern part of the town, near the borders of Tewksbury, at whose house, in a place of retirement, James Otis was a boarder, when at the door a flash of lightning struck him dead. This ancient house now stands. A print of it is in the memoir of Otis and in cyclopædia of American literature. Dr. Osgood was graduated at Harvard college in 1771, and ordained Sept. 14, 1774. His ministry was of nearly fifty years. His wife was Hannah Breed of Charlestown. He was one of the most distinguished preachers of Massachusetts. His style was perspicuous, energetie, and elegant. In his delivery he was accustomed to raise his voice occasionally to a high pitch. Those who heard him preach, may remember that now and then he took off his spectacles and laid them on the cushion, or held them in one hand, and then with an altered voice he would say, "My brethren," and would pour forth elaborate sentences of great energy and pathos. Sometimes he committed whole sermons to memory, especially on public occasions. With great care he wrote out all his sermons. His best ones he often preached. Once in his plainness he said to a young preacher: "You had gotten your sermons by heart; I do so sometimes, but never unless I am sure I have a good sermon, worth the labor; yours were not worth committing." His prayers were also studied; and some of them he committed to memory. Timothy Bigelow once had the courage to ask him the congruity of the imagery in the sentence: "Ride forth, king Jesus, triumphant on the word of truth; make it like a sword to pierce, and like a hammer to break in pieces, and dissolve the hard and stony heart into godly sorrow for sin." Once, in his preaching at Cambridge, he gave a home thrust to President Kirkland, which caused master-general, after Mr. Hazard; an office which much talk among the students. Having quoted at Wilolume of . Poetry, mild.

pre-

song

ed in cher's tham.

years lained

linto

or ben, and more. peat.

. He

d was

. I., in piety.

mouth,

chfield.

75, and

John,

ectising n, died

e army

al as a

in the

ion La

an ap-

an, the

5, 1819,

36, and

ractised

m 1787

of New

of medi-

rofessor

and sur-

r at St.

nd such olumbas

revision

Philadel-

night up

Com.,

out 1808.

ımstance

is repub-

paper in

3. Green-

Danvers

turned round and looked to the left walt, where the president and some professors were sitting, and said with energy, "What will our Sociaian brethren say to this?" One, who sometimes heard him in the pulpit, remembers well his odd habit of looking around the congregation while he was in prayer. Although he was a learned mar and a laborious writer, yet as a minister he might have been more useful had he lived less in his study and more among his people, whom he seldom visited. It may be doubted whether his usefulness as a minister was not impaired by the zeal with which he engaged in the political controversies of his day. He was a federalist of the Hamilton school, and he sometimes preached sermons of bitter invective against men of different polities. Quotations from them are given by Mr. Carey in his olive branch. He published a sermon at the installation of P. Thacher, 1785; at the artillery election, 1788; at the thanksgiving, 1783, 1794, and February and November, 1795; on the death of a child, 1797; of Washington, 1800; of J. Roby, 1803; at the fast, and convention, 1798; the devil let loose, etc., a fast sermon, 1799; at the ordination of Leonard Woods, 1800; of C. Francis, 1819; at the Dudleian leasure, 1802; the validity of baptism by sprinkling, and the right of infants, etc., 1804; at the election, 1809; a discourse at Cambridge, in the hearing of the university, 1810; solemn protest against the declaration of war, 1812. A volume of his sermons was published, 8vo., 1824. - Sprague's Annals.

OSGOOD, GEORGE, Dr., died at Andover,

Mass., in 1823, aged 65.

OSGOOD, EMORY, a Baptist minister, died at Utica, Sept. 12, 1824, aged 47. He was superintendent of the Oneida mission, and had been pastor of Henderson in Jefferson county.

OSGOOD, FRANCES S., the wife of S. S. Osgood, a painter, died at Hingham, Mass., May 12, 1850, aged about 38. Her father, Joseph Locke, was a merchant of Boston. She early wrote poetry with the signature of Florence. Being in England with her husband, she published in London a wreath of wild flowers from New England, 1839; and the happy release, a play. She edited at New York in 1841 the poetry of flowers; and in 1847 the floral offering. She died of the consumption. - Cycl. of Amer. Literature.

OSGOOD, THADDEUS, died at Glasgow, Scotland, Jan. 19, 1852, aged about 70. Born in Methuen, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1803, and began the study of theology with Dr. Lathrop of West Springfield. He began to preach in 1804. An invitation to settle was deelined, and he chose to act as a missionary in some texts to prove the divinity of Christ, he | England, and for the support of a school in Quebec collected 9,000 dollars, which was placed in the hands of a committee. He fitted up the old theatre, in which two hundred boys were taught to read extracts from the bible. The Catholies and Episcopalians also set up schools, which have ever since been continued. In 1825 he went to England and collected 5,000 dollars for a society to promote education and industry. In 1837 he caused a society to be formed in Canada to supply bibles to scamen and emigrants. and to aid in education. He toiled through life as a preacher, a distributor of tracts, and a founder of Sabbuth schools 24. O. had some skill in controversy. He once attended it hert Owen's Infidel meeting in London, with liberty himself to speak. He said to him. "You deny the future, and you cut yourself off from the happiness derived from the anticipation of future good." -- "No," replied Ower, "I be! eve netter will exist."—"And so," returned Mr. Osgood,

"your happiness is to hope that a clod of clay, called Robert Owen, will rise on as a goose, a jackass, or a calbage-head."

OSOOIT, ZACHARY, an Indian preacher at Gay Head, Martha's Vineyard, was one of the Indian ministers on the island, when certain commissioners visited Mashpee in 1767. He preached before them at Mashpee, being there agreeably to a good annual custom of a meeting for com. munion of the island and continental Indians. Solomon Bryant, the pastor, prayed; both performing "with apparent solemnity and devotion."

h

tl

81 fo

OSSON, an Indian chief on the Penobscot, succeeded Tomer, who followed Orono, and died about 1775, aged about 100. He was wise and influential. The government of Massachusetts made him a justice of the peace.

OSTRANDER, DANIEL, died at Plattskill. New York, in 1843, quite aged; a Methodist minister, who had completed the fiftieth year of his ministry.

OTIS, RICHARD, of Dover, N. H., was killed by the Indians with Major Waldron, June 27. 1689. His descendants remain in New Hamp-

OTIS, JOHN, colonel and judge, died Sept. 23, 1727, aged 70. He was born at Hingham, Mass., in 1657, and was the el son of John O., who lived in Hingham in 16 , and removed about 1662 to Scituate, where he died in 1684, aged 64. His father's name was also John, who was born in Barnstable, England, in 1581, emigrated with Hobart to Hingham in 1635 and lived at Otis' Hill, and died at Weymouth in 1657, aged 76. He settled, when a young man, in Barnstable, of which town he was for twenty years the representative. He was a councillor from 1706 for twenty-one years, and was also for New York and Canada. In 1812 he went to many years commander of the militia of Barnchool in s placed l up the ys were le. The schools, In 1825 0 dollars industry. imed in nigrants. thaongh 9. 11.d a ad si me 1 !: bert h liberty ou deny the hap-

of future

ve mutter

Osgood, l of clay,

goose, a er at Gay he Indian commispreached agreeably for com-Indians. both perdevotion." bscot, sucand died wise and sachusetts

Plattskill, odist minyear of his was killed June 27,

ew Hamp-

died Sept. Hingham, on of John d removed d in 1684, John, who 1581, cmi-1635 and ymouth in oung man, for twenty councillor vas also for a of Barnstable county, chief justice of the court of common pleas, and judge of probate. Joseph O., justice of peace at Plymouth in 1747, was perhaps his brother. His son John, a representative of Barnstable and member of the council from 1747 till his death, died in May, 1758. Col. Otis had fine talents, the power of wit and humor, and an intimate knowledge of mankind. He was also an eminent Christian, strict and exemplary in the performance of religious duties. - Eliot.

OTIS, Joseph, died in New London in 1754. aged 90. He was of the second church under Mr. Hillhouse. When the meeting-house was built, he was the owner of one of the four pews of the highest honor; which were on each side of the pulpit and of the opposito door. He came from Scituate and lived in the north parish, where he owned a large quantity of land. - Miss Caulkins' Hist. of New London.

OTIS, JAMES, colonel and judge, died in Nov., 1778. He was the son of Colonel John. Without the advantages of a collegiate education, he yet was distinguished for his intellectual powers and his knowledge of law. Gov. Shirley promised him, that, upon a vacane; in the superior court, he should be appointed judge; but he did not fulfil his promise. On the death of the Chief Justice Sewail in 1760, Col. Otis, then speaker of the house, applied to Gov. Bernard for the appointment of associate judge, and his son, James, seconded the request. But Mr. Hutchiason was nominated. To this disappointment Mr. Hutchinson attributes the flaming patriotism of the father and the son. He says: " From this time they were at the head of every measure in opposition. From so small a spark a great fire seems to have been kindled." In order to conciliate this family, Gov. Bernard, as, by the demise of the king in 1760, all civil and military offices must be renewed, proposed to Col. Otis to give him the principal offices in the county of Barnstable, with the right of nominating many of his relations and friends. Accordingly Col. Otis was appointed chief justice of the county court and judge of probate. Soon afterwards Mr. Otis, the son, supported the grant of the island of Mount Desert to the governor. It seems, however, that the reconciliation was not of long continuance. Col. Otis maintained the rights of the colonies; and the governor, in his speech in 1766, asks: "Shall this fine country be ruined, because every person in the government has not been gratified with honors or offices according to the full of his pretensions? Shall the private interests, passions, or resentments of a few men deprive this whole people of the great and manifold advantages which the favor and indatgence of their sovereign and his parliament body the powers of his eloquence, the keenness are even now providing for them?" Hutchin- of his wit, the force of his arguments, and re-son says, that the reference is to Col. Otis; but this is ascribing a great deal to one family. When chosen a councillor, he was repeatedly rejected by the governor. His wife was Mary Allyne of Wethersfield, Conn., a native of Plymouth, the daughter of Joseph Allyne and Mary Doten, who removed to W. His three sons were men of distinction. His daughter murried Gen. Jumes Warren.

OTIS, JAMES, a distinguished patriot and statesman, the son of the preceding, died May 23, 1783, aged 58. He was born at Great Marshes, or West Barnstable, Feb. 5, 1725, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1743. After pursuing the study of the law under Mr. Gridley, the first lawyer and civilian of his time, at the nge of twenty-one he began the practice at Plymouth. In about two years he removed from this town to Boston, where he soon gained so high a reputation for integrity and talents, that his services were required in the most important causes. It will be seen, under the account of his father, that Mr. Hutchinson ascribes his zeal for colonial rights to resentment. Dr. Eliot also says, that in 1775 he heard Judge Trowbridge remark, that Mr. Otis, in bis resentment, had said, "That he would set the province in flames, if he perished by the fire; " and he doubted not the war would have been delayed for years, if Mr. Hutchinson had not been appointed chief justice. But, allowing the resentment at the time, one would think the accommodation of the father as to office was pretty ample. Besides, new questions had sprung up, and the force of circumstances would easily render such a mind as that of James Otis earnest in the defence of the rights of the colony. In 1761 he distinguished himself by pleading against the writs of assistance, which the officers of the customs had applied for to the judges of the supreme court. His antagonist was Mr. Gridley. Of his speech John Adams said: "Otis was a flame of fire; with a promptitude of classical allusions, a depth of research, a rapid cummary of historical events and dates, a profusion of legal authorities, a prophetic glance of his eyes into futurity, and a rapid torrent of impetuous eloquence, he hurried away all before him. American independence was then and there born. Every man of an immense crowded audience appeared to me to go away, as 1 did, ready to take up arms against writs of assistance." Judgment was suspended in order to get information from England; at the next term writs were ordered to be issued on application to the chief justice by the surveyorgeneral of the customs. Yet they were never executed. He was, in this or the following year, chosen a member of the legislature, in which sources of his intellect gave him a most commanding influence. When the arbitrary claims of Great Britain were advanced, he warmly engaged in defence of the colonies, and was the first champion of American freedom, who had the courage to affix his name to a production that stood forth against the pretensions of the parent State. He was a member of the congress which was held at New York in 1765, in which year his rights of the colonies vindicated, a pamphlet, occasioned by the stamp act, and which was considered as a masterpiece both of good writing and of argument, was published in London. For the boldness of his opinions he was threatened with an arrest; yet he continued to support the rights of his fellow citizens. He resigned the office of judge advocate in 1767, and renounced all employment under an administration which had encroached upon the liberties of his country. His warm passions sometimes betrayed him into unguarded epithets, that gave his enemies an advantage, without benefit to the cause which lay nearest his heart. Being vilified in the public papers, he in return published some severe strictures on the conduct of the commissioners of the customs, and others of the ministerial party.

A short time afterwards, on the evening of Sept. 5, 1769, he met John Robinson, one of the commissioners, ln a public room, and an affray followed, in which he was assaulted by a number of ruffians, who left him and a young gentleman, who interposed in his defence, covered with wounds. The wounds were not mortal; but his usefulness was destroyed, for his reason was shaken from its throne, and the great man in ruins lived several years the grief of his friends. In an interval of his reason he forgave the men who had done him an Irreparable injury, and relinquished the sum of 2000 pounds which Mr. Robinson had been by a civil process adjudged to pay, on his signing a humble acknowledgment. He lived to see, but not fully to enjoy, the independence of America, an event towards which his efforts had greatly contributed. At length, as he was leaning on his cane at the door of Mr. Isane Osgood's house in Andover, he was struck by a flash of lightning; his soul was instantly liberated from its shattered tenement, and sent into eternity. His wife was Ruth Cunningham of Boston. President Adams, then minister in France, wrote respecting him: "It was with very afflicting sentiments I learned the death of Mr. Otis, my worthy master. Extraordinary in death as in life, he has left a character that will never die, while the memory of the American Revolution remains; whose foundation he laid with an energy and with those masterly abilities which no other man possessed." He was highly distinguished by genius, eloquence, and learning, and no American perhaps had possessed more extensive information. Besides his legal and political knowledge, he was a complete master of classical literature. He published radiments of Latin prosody, with a dissertation on letters, and the power of harmony in prosale composition, 12mo., 1760, which has been considered the most clear and most masterly treatise on the subject; vindication of the conduct of the house of representatives of Massachusetts in 1762; the rights of the British colonies asserted, 1764; considerations on behalf of the colonists, 1765. His life by William Tudor was published, 8vo., 1823.—Warren, 1. 47, 85-89; Montley Anthology, v. 222-226.

in

sei

03

Ot

wa

173

wa

of

the

me

of

he

wa

C-X

of

chi

0.11

He

He

on sed

co:

BJ.

Ne

cha fac.

wa

bui

giv

iste

18

de

an

his

so:

No

ar

or

giv

OTIS, JOSEPH, general, brother of the preceding, a Revolutionary patriot, died Sept. 23, 1810, aged 82. He was born in 1728, and was for many years a clerk of the court of common pleas, a member of the legislature, and brigadiergeneral of the militia. Washington appointed him collector for the district of Barnstable, an office which he held for many years. His residence was at the parish of Burustable, called Great Marshes. He died in the peace of the Christian, leaving four sons and two daughters, His daughter Maria, wife of Rev. Philip Colby of Middleborough, a lady of many attractions and accomplishments and eminent piety, died May 20, 1821, aged 33. His son William, clerk in the land office at Washington, died in 1837, aged 53. His son John, collector at Barnstable, died in 1854, aged 80.

OTIS, SAMUEL ALLYNE, secretary of the seaate of the United States, brother of the preceding, died April 22, 1814, aged 73. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1759, and settled as a merchant in Boston. In 1776 he was chosen a representative, and afterwards was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Massachusetts. He was also a member of the board of war. In 1787 he was one of the commissioners to negotiate with the insurgents. In 1788 he was elected a member of congress, and, after the adoption of the constitution, secretary of the senate, an office which he held, amidst the collision of parties, with exemplary fidelity and amenity of manners, without the absence of one day, more than thirty years, till his death at Washington. His first wife was the daughter of Harrison Gray, treasurer of Massachusetts; his second was the widow of Edward Gray. His son, Samuel Allyne Otis, died at Newburyport ia 1814, aged 44. Another son was Harrison Gray Otis of Boston.

OTIS, George, died in 1828, aged about 33. He graduated at Harvard in 1815, and was tutor and professor of Latin. He was an Episcopal preacher. He published perfectibility; address to humane society at Newburyport, 1818; sermon church, 1826.

exten-

olitical

ussical

Latin

nd the

12mo.,

t clear vindi-

esenta-

of the

rations life by —War-

ie pre-

pt. 23,

ind was ommon

igndier-

pointed

able, an lis resi-

, ealled

of the

ughters.

p Colby

tractions

ty, died

m, clerk in 1837,

rnstable,

the sen-

preced-

He was

d settled

ıs chosen

member

nstitution

er of the

the com-

ents. In ress, and,

secretary midst the

elity and

ce of one death at ughter of

setts; lis

ray. His

aryport in

ison Gray

about 33.

was tutor

Episcopal

; address

3; sermon

OTIS, GALEN, Dr., died at Woolwich, Me., Aug. 16, 1834, aged 73.

OTIS, CUSTING, M. D., died at South Scituate in 1837, aged about 70. He graduated at Harvard in 1789; and was much respected as a man and a physician.

OTIS, Isaac, captain, died at Otisville, N. Y., in 1833, aged 87. Born in Massachusetts, he served in the war of the Revolution five years.

OTIS, HARRISON GRAY, died at Boston Oct. 28, 1848, aged 83. The son of Samuel Allyne Otis, he was graduated in 1783. In politics he was associated with Ames, Lowell, Parsons, Cabot, and Gore. He was a member of congress in 1797 and for eight years, and in Massachusetts was the speaker of the house, and the president of the senate; he was also judge and mayor of the city. Of the Hartford convention he was a member. From 1817 to 1822 he was a senator of the United States. For the last twenty years he lived retired. For a graceful eloquence he was unequalled, as well as for the interest of his conversation. His wife was Sally, the daughter of William Foster, a merchant. He had cleven children: among them Sophia Harrison, who married Andrew Ritchie; William Foster, a graduate of 1821; and Allyne, a graduate of 1825. He published oration July 4, 1788; letter to W. Heath, 1798; eulogy on Hamilton, 1804; speech on restricting slavery in Missouri, 1820; on the sedition law; letters in defence of the Hartford convention, 1824; address in Boston; speech in Boston, 1830.

OTIS, JOSEPH, died at Norwich, Conn., March 11, 1854, aged 85. He had lived many years in New York, and was a man of great excellence of character and eminent piety. Among his benefactions to the church and people with which he was connected in Norwich, is a heautiful library building, well filled with valuable books, also given by him. He also bequeathed 3750 dollars to the free academy in Norwich.

OTTERBINE, WILLIAM, died at Baltimore Nov., 1813, aged 89. He was sixty years a minister, forty years at Baltimore.

OTTO, JOHN C., died at Philadelphia June 30, 1845, aged 70; clinical lecturer in the Philadelphia hospital. For his skill, philanthropy, and pure character, he enjoyed the confidence of his fellow citizens for half a century. He was the son of Dr. Bodo Otto, an eminent physician of New Jersey, and an officer in the Revolutionary

OUSAMEQUIN, one of the names of Massassoit, the sachem of Packonokik, or Pocanaukett, or Bristol. His deed, to Myles Standish and others of Bridgewater, is dated March 23, 1649, giving seven miles square for seven coats, nine at Cambridge at the re-opening of the Episcopal | hatchets, eight hoes, twenty knives, four moose skins, and ten yards and a half of cotton. His mark was possibly intended to represent a fish.

OUTEIN, NANCY C., Mrs., died in Gloucester, Mass., in 1814, aged a , a lady of distinguished talent, of piety, benevolence, and usefulness. A sermon describing her character was published, which was preached by Dr. Dana of Newburyport, before the Gloucester female society for promoting Christian knowledge. According to him, she had a mind of the first order, richly endowed with highly polished manners, and bowed most humbly at the foot of the cross, and toiling unwearied for the poor, the ignorant, the wretched, carrying to them, as far as possible, the means of knowledge and comfort, so that as she departed many were ready to exclaim:

"How blessings brighten as they take their flight!"

Such an example may do great good years une. her departure. What dazzling princess, shining only in the outward splendors of a court, can bear any comparison with her? What treasures are given us in many hundreds of such excellent women, scattered through our towns and villages?

OVANDO, DON NICOLAS DE, governor of Hispaniola, was chosen in 1501 to succeed Bobadilla, whose hunger for gold had caused the greatest miseries and disorders in the island. He arrived in April, 1502. In June he refused to afford a shelter to the squadron of Columbus in the harbor, and afterwards treated him with great neglect when he was in distress in Jamaica. Under the color of hiring the natives to labor, with the benevolent design also of teaching them Christianity, the chiefs were ordered to furnish a certain number of natives for six or eight months, who were subjected to severe toil, under the lash, with scanty food, and with no teaching but the ceremony of baptism. The indignant Indians, who fled to the mountains, were hunted like wild beasts. Such was Orando's method of promoting Christianity! He was indeed an unprincipled tyrant, greedy after lucre, and his name is infamous. Once he seized treacherously several of the caciques of Anacaona, and, after torturing them, set fire to the house and consumed them, and then sent the princess, Anacaona, in chains to San Domingo, and caused her to be hung. His various atrocities and horrible cruelties cannot here be described. Yet such is the man whom the Spanish represent as an enemy to avarice and venerable for his regard to justice. It is no wonder that the curses of Heaven have descended on the Spanish empire, chargeable with the blood by which the new world was drenched. He was superseded by Don Diego Columbus in 1509, but was permitted to retain his wealth, which he wrung from the natives. - Irving's Columbus.

OVERBAUGH, PETER, died at Poughkeepsic,

N. Y., in 1842, for many years the respected pastor of the Reformed Dutch church of Flatbush.

OVIEDO, GONZALO FERNANDEZ DE, historiographer of the Indies, was born in Madrid in 1478; in 1513 he was sent out to the new world to superintend the gold founderies, and was alcaid of the fortres. of St. Domiogo in 1535; and died at Valladolid in 1557, aged 79. He had lived thirty-four years in the colonies. He published a chronicle of the Indies, in fifty books, 1535 and 1547. A part of the work is yet unpublished. -Irving's Columbus.

OWANECO, or Neco, an Indian sachem, the son and successor of Uncas, died in 1710. He with his father signed, June 6, 1659, a deed of the town of Norwich, Conn., nine miles square, for 70 pounds in money. His mark was the figure of a bird. He also signed a deed of the use of certain lands to the Mohegans, March 6, 1693-4. Cesar and Ben Uncas were his sons.

OWEN, GRIFFITH, an eminent physician of Philadelphia, died in 1717. He was among the early settlers, and a Quaker and preacher highly esteemed. He held several stations in the civil department. - Proud, II. 99.

OWEN, JOHN, minister of Groton, Conn., successor of E. Woodbridge, died June 14, 1753, aged 54. Born in Braintree, he graduated at Harvard in 1723, and was ordained in 1727. Ilis first wife was Anna Morgan; his second, the widow of Rev. J. Hillhouse. His only son was the teacher of the grammar school of New London, and town clerk; but has no memorial stone. His gravestone remains at Pequonnuck, with the good words,

"God's faithful Seer."

He was a man of a liberal mind, an advocate of toleration .- Miss Caulkins' History of New London.

OWEN, ABRAHAM, colonel, aid to Gen. Harrison, was killed in battle with the Indians, near the Prophet's town, on the Wabash, Nov. 7, 1811. The killed, and those who died of their wounds received at Tippecanoe, were sixty-two in number. OWEN, DANIEL, died at Gloucester, R. I., in 1812, aged 81. He had been lieutenant-governor.

OWEN, John, governor of North Carolina in 1830 and 1831, died at Pittsborough in 1841, greatly respected for his talents and worth.

OWENS, JOHN, died at Carroll, N. Y., Feb. 24, 1843, aged 107; a soldier in the French and Revolutionary wars.

OXENBRIDGE, JOHN, minister in Boston, died Dec. 28, 1674, aged 65. He was born in England Jan. 30, 1609, and was educated at Oxford, where he was for some time a tutor. Becoming a preacher, soon after the year 1634 he went to Bermuda, and took the charge of a church. In 1641 or 1642 he returned to England, and of T. Cochran, 1805; Christian's manual.

was fellow of Eaton college. In 1662 he was induced, in consequence of the net of uniformity, to go to Surinam and thence to Harbadoes. He came to New England in 1669, and was settled pastor of the first church as colleague with Mr. Allen, April 10, 1670. He was a celebrated divine, and one of the most popular preachers of his time. He published a double watchword, or the duty of watching and watching in duty, 1661; a proposition for propagating the gospel by Christian colonies in the continent of Guiana; election sermon, 1671; seasonable seeking of God. - Wood's Ath. Oxon., 11. 536, 537; Magnalia, III. 321; Sprague's Annals.

11

bt

A

hi

w

31

fre

กร

flr

ni

wl

ea

ev

at

di

P

die

15

Ri

life

the life

an

rei

on

un

ch 18 pk Ca Hi vic

se lis

la

PACA, WILLIAM, governor of Maryland, died in 1799, aged 59. He was the son of John P., a gentleman of large estate in Harford county, was born Oct. 31, 1740. Having been educated at the college of Philadelphia, he practised law at Annapolis. He was appointed a member of congress with Samuel Chase in 1774, and continued in that body till the close of 1778. He signed the Declaration of Independence. From 1778 to 1780 he was chief justice of Maryland: then chief judge of the court of appeals in admiralty cases; he was governor in 1782, and again in 1786; in 1789 he was appointed the judge of the district court of the United States, His first wife was a daughter of Samuel Chew. He was a man of vigorous intellect and polished address, of integrity, patriotism, and moral worth.

PACKARD, ELIJAH, minister in Plymouth, died in 1766, aged about 36. Born in Bridgewater, he was graduated at Harvard in 1750, and settled over the second church in 1753, succeeding J. Ellis, the first minister, and followed by J. Hovey.

PACKARD, WINSLOW, first minister of Wilmington, Vt., died in 1784, aged 33. Born in Bridgewater, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1777, and was settled in 1781.

PACKARD, Asa, died at Lancaster, Mass., March 20, 1843, aged 84. Born in Bridgewater, he graduated at Harvard in 1783. He was thirtyseven years the minister of Marlborough, being ordained in 1785. Afterwards he assisted in forming the evangelical church in Lancaster. Being a soldier in early life, he bore a British bullet in his body sixty or seventy years.

PACKARD, HEZEKIAH, D. D., died at Salem April 25, 1849, aged 87. He was a brother of the preceding, and a soldier under Washington at the siege of Boston. He graduated in 1787 in the class of J. Q. Adams. For many years he was the minister of Wiscasset, Mc. Two of his sons were professors at Bowdoin, and in the Episcopal theological seminary of Virginia. He published thanksgiving sermon, 1795; fast sermons, 1799; at ordination of A. Beattic, 1797; ie was ormity, s. He settled ith Mr. brated hers of rord, or , 1661; pel by iniann : ing of ; Mag-hn P., a county. ducated sed law mber of nd con-78. He From aryland; s in ad-82, and ated the States. l Chew. polished al worth.

lymouth, Bridge-

1750, and

succeedved by J.

id, died

r of Wil-Born in artmouth r, Mass., dgewater, vas thirtygh, being ssisted in Lancaster. a British s. at Salem brother of ashington l in 1787 any years Two of ind in the ginia. He ; fast serttic, 1797; al.

PACKARD, THEOPHILUS, D. D., died Sept. | 17, 1855, aged 86. He was a native of North Hridgewater, and graduated at Dartmouth in 1796; was ordained at Shella Mass., in 1799, but relinquished his pastoral duties in 1842. About thirty young men studied theology with him, among them Pliny Fisk and Dr. Fisk. He was a trustee of Williams and Amherst colleges. His son, Theophilus, afterwards of Mount Pleasant, Iown, was his colleague for twenty-five years from 1828. Perhaps it ought to be mentioned as a monitory fact, that in his old age he was a firm believer in the spiritual visions or communications of a young woman of his acquaintance, which seemed to be of no value even to those who believed them. Some accounted for his easy faith from his habit of intense thought on every subject of inquiry. He published a sermon at ordination of J. W. Cannon; two on the divinity of Christ, 1808; before a missionary society; on slander, 1815; the life of his son, J. T. Packard, 1820. - Sprague's Annals.

PACKARD, LEVI, minister of Spencer, Mass., died at Stafford Springs, Conn., Jan. 11, 1857, aged 63. He was twenty-seven years at Spencer.

PADDOCK, JUDAH, published a narrative of the shipwreek of the ship Oswego on the south coast of Africa, 1818.

PADILLA, A. D., published historia de la provincia de Santiago de Mexico; folio, Madrid, PAGE, John, governor of Virginia, died at Richmond Oct. 11, 1808, aged 64. From his youth he was a man of pure and unblemished life. He was a patriot, a statesman, a philosopher, and a Christian. From the commencement of the American Revolution to the last hour of his life he exhibited a firm, inflexible, unremitting, and ardent attachment to his country, and he rendered her very important services. He was one of the first representatives from Virginia under the present constitution. In 1800 he was chosen one of the electors of president. In Dec., 1802, he was chosen governor of Virginia in the place of Mr. Monroe, and was succeeded by Mr. Cabell in 1805. His residence was at Rosewell. His conduct was marked by uprightness in all the vicissitudes of life, in the prosperous and calamitous times through which he had passed, in seasons of gladness and of affliction. He published addresses to the people, 1796 and 1799.

PAGE, HARLAN, died at New York in Sept., 1834, aged 43. A religious tract, widely circulated, describes his character.

PAGE, BENJAMIN, M. D., died at Hallowell, Me., Jan. 25, 1844, aged 73. A native of Exeter, he studied with Dr. Kittredge of Andover. He was a skilful physician, and a Christian.

PAIGE, REED, minister of Hancock, N. H., Harvard in 1748, and held various offices, as died in 1813, aged 52 Horn in Hardwick, Mass., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1786, and was ordained in 1791. He was a good preacher and useful minister. He published a sermon at ordination of J. P. Fisher, 1796; of J. Robinson, 1803; at election, 1805; at a fast, 1812; at Lyndeborough, 1815; oration 4th of July.

PAINE, Thomas, died in Boston in 1757, aged about 60. A graduate of 1717, he married Eunice, the daughter of Rev. Samuel Trent of Eastham, by his second wife Abigail, daughter of Rev. S. Willard; and was ordained at Weymonth Aug. 19, 1719, and preached his own ordination sermon, which was published. After a ministry of nine or more years he relinquished his office and engaged in commerce in Boston; the reasons for this course are not known. His sentiments seem to have been entirely evangelical. He was the father of Judge R. T. Paine. He published -besides the sermon mentioned - a Thursday lecture on original sin, 1724; on the doctrine of earthquakes, 1728.

PAINE, ELISHA, a Separatist minister, died in 1775, aged 84. He was a lawyer in Canterbury, when, during a revival in Windham under the ministry of Sol. Whiting in 1721, he became pious. About 1742 he deemed it his duty to preach, and for his unlicensed preaching he was imprisoned. He was the uncle of John and Ebenezer Cleaveland, who were expelled from Yale college for attending on his preaching in a vacation; they were afterwards very worthy ministers at Gloucester and Ipswich. A majority of the church of Canterbury followed Mr. Paine and his brother Solomon; the latter was ordained over the church, which built a new meeting-house. The bigotry of the State government and of the Saybrook platform ministers spread the separation widely; churches sprang up also in Marshfield, Windham, Coventry, Killingly, Plainfield, Voluntown, Preston, Lisbon, Franklin, Colchester, Norwich, Ledyard, North Stonington, Greton, New London, Montville, Lyme, Suffield, Windsor, Wethersfield, and Middletown. For rearing the teachers, a transient school, called the "Shepherd's Tent," was presided over at New London by Rev. Timo. Allen.

Mr. E. Paine became pastor of a church in Bridgehampton, L. I., in 1752; and there centinued a minister till his death. His brother, Solomon, died about 1754; he published a short view of the constitution of the church. The Separatists held a general meeting in 1781, and for twenty years afterwards. But some became Baptists, and they died away, as the eauses of separation, as to doctrines, ceased to exist.

PAINE, TIMOTHY, died at Worcester in 1793, aged 63. Born in Bristol, R. I., he graduated at clerk, register of deeds, and councillor. Mild and affable, he had good sense and solid talents. -- Lincoln's History of Worcester.

PAINE, Josutta, minister of Sturbridge, Mass., died Dec. 28, 1790, aged 65. A native of Pomfret, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1750, and succeeded C. Rice in 1761. He was a patriot of the Revolution, and gave up a portion of his salary for the relief of his people, and made a special contribution of a barrel of gunpowder to aid the struggle for liberty. Upon a salary of 222 dollars he educated two sons at college, one of whom was a minister, - doubtless Joshua, a graduate of Harvard in 1781, minister of Charlestown from 1787 till his death, in 1788, aged 24. -Washburn's Hist. Leicester Academy.

PAINE, THOMAS, a political writer and Deist, died at New York June 8, 1809, aged 72. He was born in Norfolk, England, ln 1737; his futher, a Quaker, was a stay-maker. He followed the same business; and then became an exciseman in Sussex, but was dismissed for misconduct. He came to Philadelphia in 1774, and in Jan., 1775, he was employed by Mr. Aitken to edit the Pennsylvania magazine. After the war commenced, he, at the suggestion of Dr. Rush, wrote his celebrated pamphlet of common sense, recommending independence. For this tract the legislature of Pennsylvania voted him 500 pounds. He was also elected by congress in April, 1777, clerk to the committee on foreign affairs; he chose to call himself " secretary for foreign affairs." At this period he wrote the crisis. For divulging some official secrets he lost his office in Jan., 1779. In 1780 he was clerk of the assembly of Pennsylvania; in 1785 congress voted him 3,000 dollars, and the State of New York gave him five hundred acres of land, the confiscated estate of Davol, a royalist, at New Rochelle. There was on it a stone house, one hundred and twenty by twenty-eight feet. In 1787 he went to Paris and London. In answer to Hurke's reflections on the French Revolution, he wrote his rights of man. In Sept., 1792, he was a member from Calais of the national convention of France. Voting against the sentence on the king, he offended the Jacobins, and, in Dec., 1793, was thrown into prison for eleven months. He had written the first part of his age of reason against Christianity and committed it to Joel Barlow; the second part was published in 1795, after his release. At this period he was habitually drunk. He returned to America in Oct., 1802, bringing with him as a companion the wife of De Bonneville, a French bookseller, having separated from his second wife. His political writings have simplicity, force, and pungency. But he died in contempt and misery. His disgusting vices, his intemperance, and profligacy, and irreligion made him an outcast from all respectable society. He commenced a newspaper, the Federal Orrery;

is represented as irritable, vain, cowardly, filthy, envious, malignant, dishoness, and drunken In the distress of his last sichaes he frequently called out, " Lord Jesus ; aci me." Dr. Manley asked him whether, from his calling so often upon the Saviour, it was to be inferred that he believed the gospel. He replied, at last, "I have no wish to believe on that subject," Mr. Cheetham published an account of his life. His writings were published in 1 vol., 1792. - North Amer. Review, 1845.

PAINE, ROBERT TREAT, LL. D., a judge of Massachusetts, died at Hoston May 11, 1814, aged 83. He was born in Boston March 11, 1731; his father, Thomas P., was ordained the minister of Weymouth Aug. 19, 1719, but in consequence of ill-health had been dismissed; his mother was the daughter of Samuel Treat and grand-daughter of Samuel Willard. Having graduated at Harvard college in 1749, he studied theology, and in 1755 acted as a chaplain in the army. He was induced to go to Europe for mercautile objects, and to provide for the support of his father; on his return he studied law, and settled about 1759 at Taunton, where he became distinguished in his profession. In 1770, in the absence of the attorney-general, he conducted the prosecution of Capt. Preston for the Hoston massacre. About the year 1780 he removed to Boston. Heing a delegate to the first congress, which assembled Sept. 5, 1774, he signed the Declaration of Independence, and continued in that body an efficient patriot until, on the adoption of the Massachusetts constitution, he was appointed attorney-general. He was a judge of the superior court from 1790 till his resignation, in consequence of his deafness, in 1804, at the age of 73. His wife was a sister of Gen. Cobb. He had a high rank as a lawyer. He had an inflexible regard to order and justice. His appearance on the bench was stern and ungainly. and in his manner there was an unpopular severity; yet, by his talents, integrity, and learning, he rendered good service to his country in the various stations in which he was placed. He was a firm believer in Christianity, and died in peace.

PAINE, ROBERT TREAT, a poet, son of the preceding, died at Boston Nov. 14, 1811, aged 37. He was born at Taunton, Dec. 9, 1773. While a member of Harward college he was irregular and subject to discipline. At the time of his graduation in 1792, he delivered a poem. Being placed as a clerk to a merchant, instead of applying himself to business, he penned stanzas. He was also often attracted to the theatre. At this period the law against theatrical performances was abrogated in Massachusetts. On the opening of the brick theatre in 1793, he obtained a medal for the prologue. In Oct., 1794, he but plea dist nati In ! with sepi rem live tion doll He the and mor stan

> Who Tho. Rob

tion

Infid

law,

pres

" She

first profe dissi duce wine of si of N poet beste had have mor hear ate, virtu poer pow hear biog 8vo. Am P in 1

at I in a wer I Ohi filthy. pleasure, made him neglect it, and it sunk into In disregard, and was relinquished in 1796. His iently satire drew upon himself personal chastisement. anley In 1795 he married Miss Baker, an actress, who upon withdrew from the stage; this marriage caused a lieved separation between him and his father, and his e no removal from his father's house. His poem, deet ham livered at Cambridge in 1795, called the invenritings tion of letters, brought him a profit of 1500 Amer. dollars; and in 1797, his ruling passion, 1200. He now was appointed master of ceremonies at the theatre, with a salary. His song of Adams and liberty, in 1798, yielded him 750 dollars more than 11 dollars for each line. There is one preservation:

" Should the tempest of war o'ershadow our land, Its bolts could ne'er rend Freedom's temple asunder; For, unmov'd, at its portal would Washington stand, And repulse with his breast the assaults of the thunder. His sword from the sleep Of its scabbard would leap,

stanza in it, which, for its high poetry, deserves

Of its scannard would leap,
And conduct with its point every flash to the deep.
For ne'er shall the sons of Columbia be slaves,
While the earth bears a plant, or the sea rolls its waves."

When at this time his name, which had been Thomas, was by act of the legislature changed to Robert T., he remarked, that now he had a Christian name, alluding to the name of Paine, the Infidel. By the advice of his friends he studied law, and was admitted to the bar in 1802. At first he was patronized; but, after neglecting his profession a few years, he gave up his office. His dissipated habits broke down his health and reduced him to want. Indolence and the theatre, wine and women ruined him. There is nothing of simple, natural beauty in any of the writings of Mr. Paine. His prose is in bad taste, and his poetry is entirely unworthy of the commendation bestowed upon it by his contemporaries. But, had he written the most beautiful poetry, it would have been worthless, associated with his own immoral character. No poet has power over the heart, if known to be a gamester, and intemperate, and a profligate lover of pleasure. The virtuous and ennobling sentiments found in the poems of Cowper and Montgomery have tenfold power, because known to have come from the hearts of virtuous, good men. His works, with a biography by Charles Prentiss, were published, 8vo., 1812. - Spec. Amer. Poet, 11. 93; Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

PAINE, WILLIAM, M. D., died it is supposed in New York, in 1833, aged 83. He graduated at Harvard in 1768. His name stands the second in a class of more than forty, when the names were arranged according to the dignity of families.

PAINE, EDWARD, general, died at Painesville, Ohio, Oct., 1841, aged 96. He was an officer of the Revolution, and one of the earliest settlers but indolence, the theatre, and comptations to of the northern part of Ohio. In the war he led on the first company that broke ground at Dorchester Heights, near Boston.

PAINE, ELBAH, judge, died at Williamstown. Vt., April 21, 1842, aged 85. He graduated at Harvard in 1781, and was a senator of the United States from 1705 to 1801. J. Adams appointed him a judge of the district court of Vermont. Of the Phi Heta Kappa society at Cambridge he was the first president. As a judge and citizen he was much respected and esteemed.

PAINE, ELIJAH, died at Ashfield, Mass., Aug. 3, 1846, aged 86. In early life he served his country; was graduated at Yale in 1789, and studied law; he was a State senator in 1810; a deacon of the church thirty years; a faithful, useful Christian. Three sons were ministers, -Elijah of West Hoylston, William P. of Holden, and John C. of Rehoboth.

PAINE, ELIJAH, judge, son of Judge E. Paine, died in New York Oct. 6, 1853, aged about 59, He graduated at Cumbridge in 1814, and practised law in New York, where he was a judge, He published reports of the circuit court; and a work on practice, with Mr. Duer.

PAINE, CHARLES, governor of Vermont, the son of Judge E. Paine, died in 1853, aged 54. He was born at Williamstown, Vt., April 15, 1799, graduated in 1820, and was a manufacturer many years, then president of the Vermont central railroad corporation. He was governor two years from 1841. His residence was Northfield; but he died in Waco, Texas. He had been engaged in exploring a route for a Pacific railroad.

PALLOTE, Joseph, died at Canterbury, N. H., in 1823, aged 105.

PALFRAY, WARWICK, JUN., died at Salem, Mass., in 1838, aged 51. He was a member of the senate of Massachusetts, and had edited for thirty-three years the Essex Register.

PALFREY, WILLIAM, colonel, a patriot of the Revolution, was aide-de-camp to Washington, when he was in the neighborhood of Washington, and was also paymaster-general. His son, John Palfrey, a Boston and New Orleans merchant, and then a planter, died at St. Martinsville in 1843, aged 76. And his son is Rev. Dr. John G. Palfrey, who inherited slaves from him and set them free.

PALMER, Solomon, Episcopal minister in Connecticut, died in 1771, aged about 62. graduated at Yale in 1729; succeeded Mr. Punderson in New Haven from 1763 to 1766; and then removed to Litchfield. Mr. Hubbard followed him at New Haven.

PALMER, Joseph, minister of Norton, Mass., died in 1791, aged 61. Born in Cambridge, he graduated at Harvard in 1747, and was ordained in 1753.

PALMER, ELIHU, a preacher of Deism, died

ge of 1814. ch 11, ed the but in ed; his at and laving studied in the or merport of nd setbeeame in the iducted Boston oved to ongress, red the nued in e adophe was udge of gnation, at the

a. Cobb. had an His apingainly. ular seearning, y in the He was

n peace. of the 11, aged 9, 1773. e was ire time of a poem. hstrad of stanzas. atre. At perform-On the obtained 1794, he Orrery;

ated at Dartmouth college in 1787. He was the head of the Columbian illuminati, a deistical company at New York, established about 1801, consisting of ninety-five members. Its professed aim was to promote "moral science" against religious and political imposture. The Temple of Reason was a weekly paper, of which the principal editor was one Driscoll, an Irishman, who had been a Romish priest, and who removed with his paper to Philadelphia. Mr. P. delivered lectures, or preached, against Christianity. according to Mr. Cheetham, he was " in the small circle of his church more priestly, more fulminating," than Laud and Gardiner of England; "professing to adore reason, he was in a rage if any body reasoned with him." He was blind from his youth. He published an oration, July 4, 1797; the principles of nature, 1802.

PALMER, GEORGE, a free man of color, died in Georgia in 1812, aged 121.

PALMER, STEPHEN, minister of Needham, Mass., died in 1821, aged 55. Born in Norton, he graduated at Harvard in 1789, and was ordained in 1792. He published a sermon on the death of C. Whiting; of T. Thacher, 1812; at ordination of I. Braman, 1797; a century sermon, 1811. - Sprague's Annals.

PALMER, DAVID, M. D., of Woodstock, Vt., president of the Vermont medical college in W., died at Pittsfield, Mass., in 1840. He was highly respected for his talents, acquirements, and character. His death was occasioned by imprudence in conducting some chemical experiment.

PALMER, JoB, died at Charleston, S. C., in 1845, aged 97 years and 5 months, a Revolutionary patriot. Born in Falmouth, Mass., in early life he settled at C.

PALMER, BENJAMIN M., D. D., died at Charleston in Oct., 1847, at an advanced age. His widow died within a few days afterwards. was settled at C. in 1817, and was eminently interpreter and sub-agent, and remained in office faithful and useful as a minister.

PALMER, DAVID, minister of Townsend, Mass., died Feb. 15, 1849, aged 80. Born in Windham, Conn., his father John was there a minister. At Dartmouth he graduated in 1797; he was ordained at T. Jan. 1, 1800, and dismissed in 1830. He was frank, social, agreeable, and successful as a minister. Some of his sermons were printed.

PARIS, Mrs., wife of J. D. Paris, missionary to the Sandwich Islands, died at Hilo Feb. 18, 1847, aged 39. She was the daughter of John Grant of Albany. When living at Johnstown she became a Christian at the age of 13: her parents afterwards lived in New York. She embarked with her husband in 1840, and settled at Kau in Hawaii. Notwithstanding her desire to live for the benefit of her children, who needed a moth-

at Philadelphia in 1806, aged 42. He was gradu- | trust. When the dark valley was spoken of, she said: "What does that mean? I do not understand it. I look upon death very differently." "What are all the dark valleys and rivers, if Jesus is with us?"

PARISH, ARIEL, minister of Manchester. Mass., died in 1794, aged 30. Born in Lebanon, Conn., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1788, and was ordained 1792.

PARISH, ELIJAH, D. D., minister of Byfield. Mass., was born in Lebanon, Conn., Nov. 7, 1762, and graduated at Dartmouth college in 1785. He was ordained in 1787. After being the minister of B. nearly forty years, he died Oct. 14, 1825, aged 62. Some of his violent political sermons are quoted by Mr. Carey in his olive branch. He published a sermon on the death of J. Cleaveland, 1799; at the ordination of A. Parish, 1792; of N. Waldo, 1806; of D. Thurston, 1807; of N. Merrill, 1812; of D. Smith and C. Kingsbury and of E. Pilsbury, 1815; at Hanover, 1801; orations, 1799 and 1800; on missions, 1807; before a charitable society, 1808; at a thanksgiving, 1804; do. 1807; at Hanover, 1806; at fasts, 1808. 1812, 1813; before the society for propagating the gospel; before convention, 1821; eulogy on J. Hubbard, 1810; history of New England, with Dr. Morse, 1804; with Dr. McClure, memcirs of Eleazer Wheelock, 8vo., 1811; gazetteer of the eastern continent; modern geography; gazetteer of the Bible. A volume of his sermons was published after his death. - Sprague's Annals.

b

h

h it

of

th

ar

te

lis

In W S

b so st w oil

PARISH, JASPER, died at Canandaigua in July, 1836, aged 69. An emigrant with his parents from Windham, Conn., to Lucerne county, Pa., he was captured in 1778, at the age of eleven, by the Delaware Indians, and was seven years a prisoner among the Six Nations. Being released in 1784, his misfortune proved of the highest advantage to him, for, speaking five Indian languages, he was employed under Washington as thirty years. From 1792 he resided in Canandaigua, N. Y, being respected as a husband. father, and citizen.

PARISH, H., died at New York, in 1856. He bequeathed 50,000 dollars in charity; to the American bible society 10,000 dollars; the New York orphan asylum 10,000; St. Luke's hospital 10,000; New York eye infirmary 20,000.

PARK, THOMAS, an officer in the Revolutionary war, died at Oswego, N. Y., in 1838, aged 91. PARK, Calvin, D. D., died at Stonghton, Mass., Jan. 5, 1847, aged 72. Born in Northbridge, Mass., he graduated at Brown university, 1797; and was a tuto: and professor of moral philosophy for twenty-five years. As an evangelist he was ordained in 1815. He became the minister of Stoughton, Mass., in Dec., 1826, but er's care, she bowed in quiet submission and firm resigned his office in 1840. He was known as a

of, she mderntly." ers, if nester. banon, 8, and

Byfield, , 1762, 85. He hinister , 1825. ermons branch. Cleave-, 1792; 07; of ngsbury 1801: 07; besgiving, ts, 1808, nagating logy on nd, with meirs of r of the azetteer was pubuls.

in July, parents nty, Pa., leven, hy years a released hest adlian lanngton as in office 1 Cananhusband,

856. He : to the the New s hospital evolution-, aged 91. toughton, in Northuniversity, of moral n evangeecame the , 1826, but nown as a great lover of truth, and as one fond of and canable of teaching; as a man of intellect and sound learning, of refined taste and a warm heart. He was buried at Wrentham by the side of his deceased wife, Abigail Ware of W. He was the father of Professor Park of Andover .- Storrs' Funeral Sermon; Sprague's Annals.

PARK, JASON, first minister of Barry, Michigan, died May 11, 1849, aged 70. He was born in Canterbury, Conn. Having studied theology with Dr. Strong of Hartford, he was sixteen years from 1816 the minister of Southbridge, Mass. Removing to the West, he organized in 1833 the church of Barry, the first in the county, and labored with them faithfully for the remainder of his life. He was benevolent, upright, conscientious; a friend of missions. He left children to deplore his loss. The general association passed a commendatory vote, on the death of the first of their body.

PARK, John, died at Worcester in March, 1852, aged 77. Born in Windham, N. II., a graduate of Dartmouth in 1791, for many years he was a distinguished politician, and was the editor of the Boston Repertory. He was the father of J. C. Park.

PARKE, John, a poet, died, probably in Virginia, after the close of the Revolutionary war. Born in Delaware about 1750, he was in 1768 in the college of Pennsylvania. He served in the army, and was at Boston and Valley Forge. After the peace he lived in Philadelphia. He published the works of Horace translated into English verse, with original poems by a native, etc., 1786. The odes are inscribed each to an American worthy. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

PARKE, BENJAMIN, judge, died at Salem, Ind., in 1835, aged 57. Born in New Jersey, he was appointed by Jesserson judge of the United States court for Indiana about 1801, and was respected in his office. He had been a delegate to congress from 1805 to 1808.

PARKER, THOMAS, first minister of Newbury, Mass., died in April, 1677, aged 81. He was the only son of Robert Parker, who was driven out of England for Puritanism in the reign of Elizabeth; was born in 1595. After having been for some time a student at Oxford, he pursued his studies in Ireland under Dr. Usher. Thence he went to Holland, where he enjoyed the assistance of Dr. Ames. He returned to Newbury in England, where he preached and was the instructor of a school. He came to this country with a number of Christian friends in May, 1634, and immediately went to Aggawam, or Ipswich, Mass., where he continued about a year as an assistant to Mr. Ward. In 1635 he commenced the settlement of Newbury, and was chosen pastor and pious and benevolent Christian. Through his incessant application he became blind several years before his death. Under this heavy calamity he was patient and cheerful, and used to say, in reference to his darkened eyes, "they will be restored shortly in the resurrection." Having never been married, he yet with parental affection gave several young gentlemen the advantages of a public education. In his views of church government he differed from the Congregationalism of New England, in consequence of which his church was unhappily divided. A bitter controversy lasted for years, an account of which, in forty pages, is in Coffin's history of Newbury. Some theses de traductione peceatoris ad vitam, written by him at an early age, were printed with some works of Dr. Ames. He also published a letter to a member of the Westminster assembly, on the government in the churches of England, 1614; the prophecies of Daniel expounded, 4to., 1646; a letter to his sister, Mrs. Avery, on her opinions, 1649. — Magnalia, III., 143-145, 147.

PARKER, Thomas, first minister of Dracut, Mass., died in 1765, aged 64. Born in Cambridge, he graduated at Harvard in 1718, and began to preach at D.

PARKER, James, a printer in New York, died in 1770. He was born in Woodbridge, New Jersey, and began business about 1742. He published the Post-Boy, and in 1752 a periodical work, The Reflector. A private journal of Moses Allen, while at college at Princeton in 1769, mentions that "the printer Parker's daughter, in New York, famous for sense and beauty, challenged a gentleman for some indecency, wounded him, and came off victorious.

PARKER, JONATHAN, second minister of Plympton, Mass., died in 1776, aged 71. Born in Barnstable, he graduated at Harvard in 1725, and was settled in 1731, the successor of J. Cushman. He was followed by E. Sampson.

PARKER, NEBEMIAH, first minister of Hubbardston, Mass., died in 1801, aged 59. Born in Shrewsbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1763; was settled in 1770, and resigned in 1800.

PARKER, SAMUEL, D. D., bishop of Mass., died Dec. 6, 1804, aged 59. He was born at Portsmouth, N. II., in 1745, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1764. He was afterwards nine years an instructor of youth in Newburyport and other towns. In 1773 he was ordained by the bishop of London, and, May 19, 1774, was established as assistant minister at Trinity church, Boston, of which he became the rector in 1779. During the Revolutionary war the other Episcopal clergymen quitted the country, but he remained at his post, and his church was saved from dispersion. After the death of Bishop Bass he was Mr. Noyes teacher. He left behind him the elected his successor; but he was at the head of character of an eminent scholar, and of a most the Episcopal churches but a few months. He died suddenly at Boston. Distinguished for his 1781. He was a physician in Bradford, Mass... benevolence, he was in a peculiar manner the friend of the poor, who in his death mourned the loss of a father. He published a sermon at the election, 1793; before the asylum, 1803; and some other occasional discourses.

PARKER, SAMUEL, minister of Provincetown, Mass., died in 1811, aged 70, in the 38th year of his ministry. He graduated at Harvard in 1768.

PARKER, ISAAC, LL. D., chief justice of Mass., died May 26, 1830, aged nearly 62. He was born in Boston June 17, 1768, and graduated at Harvard college in 1786. His father was a merchant, who met with reverses of fortune in his business. He commenced the practice of law at Castine, in the district of Maine, and was elected a member of congress. Adams appointed him marshal for the district of Maine; an office which he held till the accession of Mr. Jefferson to the presidency in 1801. Afterwards he removed to Portland. In 1806 he was appointed a judge of the supreme court, and in 1814 chief justice, as the successor of Mr. Sewall, of which office he with high reputation and faithfulness discharged the duties sixteen years. In 1820 he was president of the Massachusetts convention for the revision of the For several years he was professor constitution. of law in Harvard University. His father and several of his ancestors had died of the apoplexy. He died poor, but the citizens of Boston made provision for his family. On Sunday, July 25, 1830, he was suddenly attacked with the apoplexy, of which he died the next morning. His successor was Lemuel Shaw. He was a distinguished scholar and friend of literature. For eleven years he was a trustee of Bowdoin college, and for twenty years an overseer of Harvard college. He was a man of great moral worth, and a firm believer in the Christian religion. He published a sketch of the character of Judge Parsons, 1813; of Judge Sewall; of S. How, 1828; oration on Washington, 1800. - Ann. Reg., 1830-1831, p. 272-276.

PARKER, NATHAN, D. D., died at Portsmouth Nov. 8, 1833, aged 51. He was a graduate of Harvard in 1803. He published New Hampshire election sermon, 1819; a dedication sermon at Portsmouth, 1826.

PARKER, S. E., general, died in Northampton santy, Va., in 1836. He was an eminent lawyer, and a member of congress from 1819 to

PARKER, RICHARD E., judge of various courts, died in Virginia in 1840, aged about 63. He was also a senator of the United States.

PARKER, JOHN, a merehant, died in Boston May 29, 1840, aged 83.

PARKER, BENJAMIN, M. D., died in 1845, aged about 84. He graduated at Marvard in till in 1819 he removed to some other State.

lish

ven

age

nat

and

mu

ing.

cris

mis

deh

P.,

gra

tor

He

dea

mai

tion

Gaz

Mas

Gos

and

Hyd

Con

Kill

ter o

in 1

3pr

N.

ning

ford

ville

his

and

was vers

age

stud

Sald

169 in h

of a twe

acct

fam

and

Ind

tur

son

rap

app

pris

eus four

P

P

P

P

P

1

1

PARKER, BENJAMIN, first minister of the east church in Haverhill, Mass., died Nov. 29, 1790, aged 76. Born in Bradford, he graduated at Harvard in 1737, and was ordained in 1734. He published a sermon on the death of Edward Barnard, 1774.

PARKER, DANIEL, brigadier-general, died at Washington April 5, 1846. He was a native of Massachusetts. He was adjutant and inspectorgeneral, and chief clerk in the war department. He published army register, 1816.

PARKER, EDWARD L., minister of Londonderry, N. H., died in 1850, aged about 64. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1807, and was settled in the original or east parish in 1810. He published a century sermon at L., 1819; at ordination of A. Cross, 1824.

PARKER, John A., died at New Bedford Dec. 30, 1853, a rich merchant, at an advanced

PARKER, FREEMAN, first minister of Dresden, Me., died in 1854, aged about 78. He was born in Barnstable, Mass., July 13, 1776; was graduated at Harvard in 1797; and ordained Sept. 2, 1801. After twenty-five years he resigned and removed to Wiseasset. Though blind for more than forty years, he still preached. His last discourse was delivered at Dresden on the fiftieth auniversary of his settlement.

PARKER, GEORGE PHILLIPS, died in New York Jan. 19, 1856, aged 62. He was the son of John Parker of Boston, and graduated at Harvard in 1812. For some years he was engaged in the temperance cause, to which, from his ample means, he liberally contributed.

PARKHURST, BENJAMIN, died Dec. 15, 1842, aged 97. He was one of the first settlers of Rovalton, Vt.: his parents died at the age of 97; his grandfather died at the age of 100; his grandmother, at the age of 104.

PARKHURST, PHINEHAS, Dr., died at Lebanon, N. II., Oct. 16, 1844, aged 85. He was born in Plainfield, Conn. His father removed to Royalton, Vt., and was killed in an attack of the Indians from Canada, Oct. 16, 1780. Dr. P. was long a physician and prominent citizen of Lebanon.

PARKMAN, EBENEZER, first minister of Westborough, Mass., was graduated at Harvard college in 1721, and was ordained Oct. 28, 1724, the day on which the church was gathered. After continuing his ministerial labors near sixty years, he died Dec. 9, 1782, aged 79. His wife was a daughter of Rob. Breck; Samuel P., who died in Boston in June, 1824, aged 72, was a descendant. A short account of Westborough, written by him, is printed in the historical collections. He pubvention sermon, 1761.

PARKMAN, GEORGE, M. D., died in 1849. aged about 58. The son of Samuel P., he gradnated at Harvard in 1809, and was a physician and a man of large property in Boston. He was murdered by Dr. Webster in the medical building, and his body partly consumed, when the crime was discovered. The motive to its commission was the wish to avoid the payment of a He published a treatise on insanity, 1817.

PARKMAN, FRANCIS, D. D., son of Samuel P., died in Boston, Nov. 12, 1852, aged 64. He graduated at Harvard in 1807. He was the pastor of the new north church from 1813 to 1819. He published century sermon, 1814; on the death of J. Lathrop; at ordination of J. Parkman, 1837; offering of sympathy on the revolution in France, 1830.

PARKS, WILLIAM, printer of the Virginia Gazette, died in 1750.

PARMELE, ELISHA, first minister of Lee, Mass., died in 1781, aged about 26. Born in Goshen, Conn., he graduated at Harvard in 1778, and was settled in 1783. His successor was A. Hyde.

PARMELEE, PHILANDER, minister of Bolton, Conn., died in 1822, aged 39. Born in North Parris. Killingworth, he graduated in 1809; was minister of Victor, N. Y., five years; and settled at B. in 1815. He was an earnest, useful minister. -Sprague's Annals.

PARMELEE, Moses, minister of Stockholm, N. Y., was found dead in his bed after an evening lecture in 1838, aged 50. Born in Pittsford, Vt., he was first the minister of South Granville, N. Y., in 1816. His character was pure: his temperament ardent, and this gave unction and pathos to his address. His brother Simeon was the minister of Westford, Vt.

PARRIS, SAMUEL, the first minister of Danvers, Mass., died after 1711; if in 1713, he was ton Advertiser. aged 60. He was born in London in 1653; studied at Harvard college; and was ordained at Salem village, now Danvers, Nov. 15, 1689. In 1692 the Salem witcheraft delusion commenced in his family. His daughter, about twelve years of age, and his niece, Abigail Williams, cleven or twelve years old, pretended to be bewitched, and accused Tituba, an Indian woman living in the family, of bewitching them. Mr. Parris beat her and compelled her to confess herself a witch. Indian John, Tituba's husband, for his own safety, turned accuser of others. The "afflicted" persons increased; the "accused" also increased rapidly. More than one hundred women were apprehended, and most of them committed to prison. Even the wife of Gov. Phipps was accused. Aug. 19, 1692, George Burroughs and lished reformers and intercessors, 1752; a con- hung, and Gyles Corey pressed to death for not pleading. There had before been executed for witchcraft Margaret Jones of Charlestown, in June, 1648; then a woman in Dorchester, and another in Cambridge; then in Boston in 1655 Mrs. Hibbins, wife of an assistant; in 1662 Mrs. Greensmith and her husband; in 1663 Mary Johnson; in 1688 Mrs. Glover of Boston. This delusion at Salem lasted sixteen months. As Mr. Parris had been a zealous prosecutor, his church, in April, 1693, brought charges against him; and at last, although he acknowledged his error, he was dismissed in June, 1696. He removed to Concord. In 1711 he preached six months in Dunstable.

> PARRIS, MARTIN, minister of Marshfield, Mass., died in 1839, aged 72. Born in Pembroke, he graduated at Brown university in 1790; was settled at Marshfield in 1871, succeeding W

> PARRIS, SAMUEL, died at Washington Sept. 10, 1847, aged 92. A native of Pembroke, Mass., he was at Bunker Hill in 1775, and was an offieer of the Revolution. He settled at Hebron, Maine, and was a judge of the common pleas, and one of the electors of president at Madison's second term. He was the father of Gov. A. K.

> PARRIS, Albion K., governor of Maine, died in Portland in Feb., 1857, aged about 71. Born in Auburn, Oxford county, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1806, and was in public life nearly forty years. He was a member of congress from 1815 to 1818; the first United States district judge for Maine: was governor five years from 1821 to 1826; was senator of the United States in 1828; and judge of the supreme court of Maine from 1828 to 1836, when he was appointed second comptroller of the treasury, and removed to Washington, retaining this office till 1851, when he returned to Portland, on which city he was the mayor in 1852 .- Bos-

PARRISH, John, died at Baltimore in 1807. one of the oldest ministers of the society of Friends. He succeeded Benezet in pleading the eause of the African race. He published remarks on the slavery of the black people, 1806

PARRISH, Joseph, M. D., died at Philadelphia March 18, 1840, aged 60. He was a most eminent physician, a professor in the university, and a man of benevolence and many virtu . He was brought up in the principles and habits of the Quakers, and sought to be guided by an inward divinely-given principle. He ever recommended cool air, exercise, and cool drinks. His medical degree he received in 1805. He gave popular lectures on chemistry in 1807. In the prevalence of the typhus epidemic in 1812, he successfully substituted a stimulant practice for the prevalent four others were executed; in all nineteen were contrary one. He was chosen in 1816 surgeon to e pubination Bedford vanced

Mass.,

f the

v. 29.

luated

1734.

dward

lied at ive of pector-

tment.

ondon-

I. He

settled

f Dres-He was 6; was rdained he reh blind d. His on the

in New the son at Harengaged is ample

5, 1842, of Royof 97; s grandat Leba-

He was removed ittack of Dr. P. tizen of of Westvard col-1724, the . After ty years, ife was a o died ia seendant. a by him, He pubthe hospital. He had for years many medical his ministry. He graduated at Harvard in 1720, pupils. He died in peace. His character is delineated fully in Williams' book. Ilis beloved wife was the daughter of John Cox, an esteemed preacher in the society of Friends. He wrote many papers for the journals. - Wood's Memoir ; Williams' Med. Biog.

PARROTT, John F., a senator of the United States 1819-1825, died in Greenland, N. H., July

9. 1836

PARSONS, Joseph, cornet, the first of the name in Northampton, the ancestor of many families, died in 1683. He came from England in 1630 or soon afterwards. He came to Springfield at its first settlement about 1636, and married in 1646 Mary, the daughter of Thomas Bliss of Windsor. He, it is believed, was the son of Thomas Parsons of Great Milton, or Great Torrington near Exeter, who married Catherine, the daughter of Alderman Radeliff of London, and was knighted by King Charles I. The three eagles, with wings outspread, on his coat of arms, might well be regarded as indicating the flight of his sons to the distant new world; for Deacon Benjamin, another of his sons, came with Joseph. After living at Windsor and Springfield about twenty years, he in 1655 was among the first settlers of Northampton. But in 1679 he returned to Springfield, where he died, probably of the age of 70. His widow died in 1712. His brother Benjamin had a son Ebenezer, who was the father of Jonathan, born in West Springfield in 1705. Joseph had ten children; among them Joseph, John, Samuel, settled at Durham, Conn., Ebenezer, killed by the Indians in 1675, Josiah, and David.

PARSONS, JOSEPH, died in Northampton in 1729, aged 82. The son of Joseph, he was born at Springfield in 1647. His wife was Elizabeth. daughter of Elder Strong; and his daughter Elizabeth married Eleazar Strong, and their daughter Elizabeth married Rev. Dr. Lathrop. His other children were Joseph, John, Ebenezer, David, Josiah, Daniel, Moses, Abigail, and Noah.

PARSONS, DAVID, the minister of Malden and Leicester, Mass., died in 1737, aged about 52. The son of Joseph of Northampton, he graduated at Harvard in 1705, in the class of President Holvoke; was settled first at Malden in 1705, then at Leicester in 1721; and resigned in 1735. His successor was D. Goddard.

PARSONS, Joseph, minister of Salisbury, Mass., died March 13, 1740, aged 69. He was the son of Joseph of Northampton, and graduated at Harvard in 1697, and was installed over the second church of S. in 1718. He had been previously at Lebanon, Conn., from 1700 to 1708. He published a sermon at ordination of J. Blunt, 1733.

PARSONS, JOSEPH, minister of Bradford,

He published sermon at ordination of S. Welster, 1741; at artillery election, 1741; election sermon, 1759.

PARSONS, Joseph, minister of Brookfield. Mass., died in 1771, aged 38. Born in Bradford. he graduated at Harvard in 1752, and was ordained in 1757.

PARSONS, JONATHAN, minister in Newburyport, Mass., died July 19, 1776, aged 70. 11e was born at West Springfield, Mass., Nov. 30, 1705, and was graduated at Yale college in 1729. having given indications of an uncommon genius. He was ordained in 1730 minister of Lyme, Conn., where he continued several years. The last thirty years of his life were spent at Newburyport, in one of the largest congregations in America. His labors were incessant, and he sometimes sunk under his exertions. During his last sickness he enjoyed the peace of a Christian, He expressed his unwavering assurance of an interest in the favor of God through the Redeemer. He was a Presbyterian. As a preacher he was eminently useful. During some of the first years of his ministry his style was remarkably correct and elegant; but after a course of years, when his attention was occupied by things of greater importance, his manner of writing was less polished, though perhaps it lost nothing of its pathos and energy. In his preaching he dwelt much and with earnestness upon the doctrines of grace, knowing it to be the design of the Christian religion to humble the pride of man and to exalt the grace of God. He labored to guard his neople both against the giddy wildness of enthusiasm, and the licentious tenets of antinomian delusion, His invention was fruitful, his imagination rich, his voice clear and commanding, varying with every varying passion, now forcible, majestic, terrifying, and now soft, and persuasive, and melting. His zealous and indefatigable exertions were not in vain. During his ministry at Lyme, at a period of uncommon effusion of God's Spirit of grace, he indulged the belief that near two hundred of his people were renewed in the dispositions of their minds, and enlightened by the truth as it is in Jesus; and his labors at Newburyport were attended by a happy revival of religion. He was eminent as a scholar, for he was familiar with the classics, and he was skilled in the Latin, Greek, and Hebrew languages. Ile was accounted a dexterous and masterly reasoner. His church is now called the old south church of of Newburyport; it has been thoroughly repaired and ornamented. In a vault beneath the pulpit - a low vault, yet accessible and often visited rest the remains of Mr. Parsons, Mr. Whitefield, a Mr. Prince; three preachers, Mr. Whitefield's coffin being in the centre. Mr. Parsons' first Mass., died in 1765, aged 62, in the 39th year of wife, and the mother of all his children, was

Phel n we Who time daug He good 1756 in th in tw of G eccle 1774 volui deuti died 20, 1 in 17 labor spect serve ende and save June gave ence. easy judgn the k pande acqua vine : and C he ha purp ways Chris and, amoi by tl vain, his s ratu mean with with zcalo bitte of h open coule

coun

bene

civil

ica.

celle

brig.

P

Wellection aktiold.

1720.

adford. vas or-

wbury-0. He ov. 30. n 1729, genius. Lyme, The t Newtions in and he ring his hristian. of an indeemer. he was rst years correct rs, when greater ess polf its paelt much of grace, istian reto exalt l his peohusiasm, delusion. iou rich, ring with estic, ternd meltexertions at Lyme, d's Spirit near two the dised by the at New-revival of

ar, for he

as skilled

iges. He reasoner.

church of

y repaired

the pulpit

visited —

Whitefield,

hitefield's

sons' first dren, was Phebe Griswold, sister of Governor M. Griswold, a woman of fervent piety and uncommon talents. When his engagements were pressing, she sometimes wrote his sermons for him. One of his daughters was the mother of Simon Greenleaf. He published a sermon at Boston lecture, 1742; good news from a far country, in seven discourses, 1756; observations, etc., 1757; manna gathered in the morning, 1761; infant baptism from heaven, in two discourses, 1765; a sermon on the death of G. Whitefield, 1770; freedom from civil and ecclesiastical tyranny the purchase of Christ, 1774; sixty sermons on various subjects, in two volumes, 8vo., 1780. - Searl's Sermon on his death. PARSONS, Moses, minister of Byfield, Mass., died Dec. 14, 1783, aged 67. He was born June 20, 1716, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1736. He devoted a number of years to the labors of a grammar school, and, while the respect and the affection of his pupils were preserved by mingled dignity and mildness, he endeavored to impress them with religious truth, and to give them that instruction which might save their souls from death. He was ordained June 20, 1744. The Maker of the human frame gave him a most graceful and commanding presence, a quick conception, a fertile invention, an easy flow of thought and expression, a correct judgment, a resolute temper, and a large share of the kind and tender sensibilities. These, expanded by a liberal education, polished by a large acquaintance with mankind, and sanctified by divine grace, made him eminent as the gentleman and Christian, the divine and the preacher. When he had once deliberately fixed his opinion or his purpose, no opposition could shake him. He always carried the dignity and decorum of the Christian minister into his most cheerful hours, and, though he often indulged his pleasant humor among his hiends, yet he never degraded himself by the puerile jest, the boisterous hugh, or by vain, indelicate mirth. He usually mingled with his sprightly sallies some useful lesson of a moral ruture. He knew how to be familiar without meanness, sociable without loquacity, cheerful without levity, grave without moroscaces, pious without enthusiasm, superstition, or ostentation, zealous against error and vice without ill-natured bitterness, affable to all without the least sacrifice of his ministerial dignity. There was a generous openness in his language and behavior, and one could almost discern his heart in his frank, honest benevolence. He was a zealous advocate of the civil and religious interests of his beloved America. Eminent as a preacher, he yet greatly ex-anticipated the joy of dwelling in the presence of that divine Saviour, whom he had served in his church below. His wife was the daughter of Ebenezer Davis of Gloucester, whose mother was the great grand-daughter of John Robinson, of whom, therefore, Mr. Parsons' son, Chief Justice Parsons, was a descendant. He published the election sermon, 1772; at the ordination of J. Dana, 1765; of O. Parsons, 1773. - Tappan's Sermon on his death; Frisbie's Oration; Sprague's Annals.

PARSONS, DAVID, the first minister of Amherst, Mass., died Jan. 1, 1781, aged 68. The son of Rev. David I'. of Malden, he graduated at Harvard in 1729, and was ordained Nov. 2, 1739. His wife was Euniee Weed of Wethersfield, and he had nine children.

PARSONS, SAMUEL, second minister of Pive N. H., died in 1789, aged 77, in the fifty-third year of his ministry. He graduated at Harvard in 1730, and succeeded Nathaniel Morrill in 1736. ten years after the church was founded. He was respected and beloved. He admitted into the church two hundred and six persons, and baptised six or seven hundred.

PARSONS, SAMUEL HOLDEN, major-general, was drowned in descending the rapids of the Big Beaver river, O., Nov. 17, 1789, aged 52. He was born in Lyme, Conn., and was the son of Rev. Jonathan P., who removed from Lyme to Newburyport. His mother was the sister of Gov. M. Griswold. He graduated at Harvard in 1756. He settled as a lawyer in Lyme, and there married the daughter of Richard Mather, a descendant of Rev. R. M.; he removed to New London. He sustained various public offices. With him originated the first suggestion of assembling a congress, in a letter of March 3, 1773, to John Adams, "an annual meeting of commissioners from the colonies to consult on their general welfare;" a fact most honorable to him. He and others formed the design, which was executed by Ethan Allen, of capturing the forts. As colonel he was in the battle of Long Island, and in 1776 was made brigadier-general. Dr. Hildreth describes his many important services during the war. He was one of the board for the trial of Andre. After the war he resumed the practice of the law in Middletown. In 1786 he was a commissioner to negotiate with the Indians; and by a treaty the land on which Cincinnati stands was acquired. In 1787 he was appointed a judge of the Northwestern Territory; in 1789, chief countenance. He was influenced by enlarged judge. In the same year he visited the Wyandots, to arrange with them for holding a treaty, and on his return was drowned. His son is S. H. Parsons of Hartford. He published a piece celled in the gift of prayer. His last hours were describing the discoveries in the western country, brightened with the hopes of the gospel. He in Amer. Acad., vol. II. - Hildreth's Biog. Mem.

PARSONS, Obadian, minister of Oloucester, Mass., died in 1801, aged 55. Born in G., he graduated at Harvard in 1768, and was ordained in 1772, and dismissed in 1779. From 1784 to 1790 he was the minister of Lynn; then a teacher in G.—Sprague's Annuls.

PARSONS, Pittate, memorable for her piety, died Jun. 5, 1805, aged nearly 74. She lived in Northampton, and was the wife of Noah Parsons, but she died while on a visit to her son in Westhampton. Her name was Phebe Bartlett, and of her conversion at the age of 5 or 6 years, Pres. Edwards gives an account in his "Narrative."—

Life of Justin Edwards, p. 11.

PARSONS, THEOPHILUS, LL. D., chief justice of Massachusetts, the son of the preceding, died In Boston Oct. 30, 1813, aged 63. He was born Feb. 24, 1750. His early education was at Dummer neademy under Master Moody. After graduating at Harvard college in 1769, he studied law with Judge Bradbary of Falmouth, now Portland, and kept the grammar school. When the town was burnt by the British, he returned to his father's, and soon epened an office in Newburyport. In 1779 he was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Massachusetts; he was also in 1789 a member of the State convention which adopted the constitution of the United States. He removed to Boston in 1800. well skilled in the civil law and the law of nations. After an extensive practice of thirty-five years he succeeded Chief Justice Dana in 1806. He was himself succeeded by Judge Sewall. His wife was a daughter of Benjamiu Greenleaf; he left three sons and four daughters. He was of large size, broad, and corpulent, with a sallow complexion, and heavy appearance. His eyes were blue, tinged with hazel-grav, sunk in his head, but sometimes twinkling bright. His high, smooth forehead was partly covered with a reddish skullcap, which he wore, having been buld at the age of thirty. A bandanna handkerehief often proteeted his neek from the ehilly winds, which were his abhorrence. He was not more remarkable for his deep learning, than for the keenness of his wit. His repartees were often very cutting. Not only was he a profound lawyer, but an excellent classical scholar and a skilful mathematician. His political influence, in the party divisions of his day, was very great. He was a most determined federalist. Of his belief in Christianity he made a public profession in his last years, joining the ehurch in Boston of which Dr. Kirkland was the pastor. The first six volumes of the Massachusetts reports contain many of his judicial decisions. In the opinion of Judge Parker, had he lived in England he would have been made lord chancellor or lord chief justice. - Parker's Sketch; Knapp's Biog. Sketches, 37-77.

PARSONS, LEVI, a missionary to Palestine, died Feb. 10, 1822, aged 29. He was the son of Justin P., a minister; was born in Goshen, Mass., July 18, 1792. At the age of sixteen he became a Christian convert; but his graces were revived while he was a member of college, and he became earnestly desirous to be a missionary. During three revivals of religion his efforts were useful. He was graduated at Middlebury in 1814, and studied theology at Andover. After being ordained in Sept., 1817, he was an agent of the board of missions. In Nov., 1819, he sailed with Mr. Fisk for Palestine, and arrived at Smyrna in Jan., 1820; after passing half a year at Seio, he proceeded to Jerusalem, where he remained from Feb. to May, 1821. On his return to Smyrna he was seized with a distressing malady at Syra. In December he went with Mr. Fisk to Alexandria, where he died in great peace and triumph. He was a good scholar, and very amiable and interesting in his manners and de voted to his benevolent work. His life was written by his brother-in-law, D. O. Morton, 1824. He published a sermon, 1819. - Spraque's An-

PARSONS, DAVID, D. D., minister of Amherst, Mass., died at Wethersfield, Conn., May 18, 1823, aged 74. He graduated at Harvard in 1771, and succeeded his father as the minis er of A., Oct. 2, 1782. In 1795 he declined the appointment of professor of divinity at Yale college. During his ministry there were several revivals. In one, in the year 1816, one hundred persons were added to his church. He had a zeal for education, which led him to promote the establishment of an academy, which was followed by the college. He was dismissed at his request in 1819; D. A. Clark was his successor. Ilis widow, daughter of E. Williams of Wethersfield. died in 1850, aged 86. As he read his sermons he had but little action in the pulpit; yet his delivery was not dull. He had remarkable social qualities. He sometimes lamented his propensity to facetiousness, for which he once offered to his brother-in-law, Dr. Howard of Springfield, the poor excuse, "Grace does not cure squint eyes." He restrained himself in the pulpit: he might have laid restraints upon himself out of it. He published the election sermon, 1788; at the ordination of J. L. Pomeroy, 1795. - Holland's Ilistory of Hampshire; Sprague's Annals.

PARSONS, ELIJAH, minister of East Haddam, Conn., died in 1827, aged about 80. Born in Northampton, Mass., he graduated at Yale in 1768, and was ordained in 1772. He was a fellow of the college.

PARSONS, Silas, minister at Niagars, N. Y., died in 1839, aged 78.

PARSONS, ENOCH, the son of Gen. S. M. Parsons, died at Hartford about 1839, aged perhaps 60. He was president of the U. S. branch as the son in Goshen, sixteen he graces were college, and missionary.

efforts were ddlebury in over. After an agent of 0, he sailed ed at Smyrlf a year at here he ren his returu ressing malnt with Mr. great peace lar, and very

ners and de

life was writ-

Iorton, 1824.

oraque's Anister of Am-, Conn., May t Harvard in e minis er of lined the anat Yale colre several reone hundred . He had a promote the was followed at his request ccessor. Ilis Wethersfield, d his sermons t ; yet his de-arkable social his propensity offered to his oringfield, the squint eyes." pit: he might out of it. He

3; at the ordi-Holland's Hisnals. East Haddam, 80. Born in d at Yale in

He was a felliagara, N. Y., of Gen. S. H. 839, aged pere U. S. branch his politics. His son is Samuel H. Parsons of Middletown.

PARSONS, THOMAS W., M. D., died in Boston in 1854. He received his medical degree in PARSONS, Andrew, died in Corunna, Mich., in 1855. He was lieutenant-governor in 1853, and in the same year was governor by Gov. Me-Clelland's becoming secretary of the interior.

PARTRIDGE, GEORGE, died in Duxbury, Mass., July 7, 1828, aged 88. He graduated at Harvard in 1762; and was a delegate to congress, and a representative after the adoption of the constitution, from 1779 to 1791.

PARTRIDGE, BALPH, first minister of Duxbury, Mass., died in 1658, having been a preacher forty-nine years. He was born in England and became a minister of the established church; but by the severity of the bishops he was hunted, as C. Mather says, like a partridge upon the mountains, till at last he resolved to get out of their reach by taking his flight into New England. He arrived at Boston Nov. 14, 1636, and was soon settled at Duxbury. He was appointed with Mr. Mather and Mr. Cotton to prepare a model of church government for the consideration of the synod of Cambridge in 1648. He was succeeded by Mr. Holmes. His daughter Elizabeth married Rev. T. Thatcher, and her son, Ralph T., was settled at Martha's Vineyard in 1697. In the inventory of his property, four hundred volumes of books are mentioned, and between one hundred and two hundred acres of land. Such was his humility and self-denial, that, when most of the ministers of Plymouth colony left their places for want of a suitable maintenance, he was one of the few who remained with their people. - Sprague's Annals.

PARTRIDGE, SAMUEL, colonel, probably the son of William, died in Hatfield, Mass., in 1740, aged 96. Another Col. S. P., probably his son or grandson, died in 1799, aged 92.

PARTRIDGE, OLIVER, a member of the first colonial congress in 1765, died at Hatfield, Mass., July 21, 1792, aged 80. He graduated at Harvard in 1730; and was the son of Edward of Hatfield, who was the son of Samuel, the son of William, one of the early settlers on the Conneeticut river, who came from Berwick-on-Tweed, and died in Hadley. His widow, Anna, died in 1802, aged 85. His fellow delegates to congress were James Otis and Timothy Ruggles.

PARTRIDGE, OLIVER, Dr., died in Stockbridge in 1850, aged 99. He was born in Hatfield April 15, 1751. As a physician, unmarried, he lived from his twentieth year forty-three years in the family of Dr. Sergeant, they harmoniously visiting each other's patients. He was committed them in faith to the God of the widow hank at II.; a man of earnest whig character in skilful in diseases of children; at the age of 97 he still was in practice.

PARTRIDGE, ALDEN, captain, died in Norwich, Vt., his native place, Jan. 16, 1854, aged about 70. For nearly fifty years he was a teacher in all the branches of military knowledge. At first he was principal of the West Point academy; then of an institution of his own at Norwich, Vt. and Middletown, Conn., at Portsmouth, Va., and in his last years at Brandywine Springs, where his school-house was burnt. His fatal illness was very brief, lasting only twenty-four hours. His character was marked with indomitable perseverauce, and zeal for the promotion of military science. He lectured in many places on military affairs. He published an excursion, 1822; lecture on education; on national defence.

PASCALIS, Felix A. O., M. D., a physician of New York, died in 1833, aged 72.

PASSACONAWAY, an Indian sagamore, called the Merrimae sachem, and the great sagamore of Pannukog, or Penacook, died in 1660. About the year 1644 he held control over all the Indians in New Hampshire south of the northern extremity of lake Winnepisseogee. To him the sachems of Squamscot, Newichwannock, Pawtucket, and some tribes in Massachusetts acknowledged subjection. He was a chief of moderation, yet of sagacity and cunning. He had great reputation as a powow, or sorcerer. The Indians believed that he could make water burn, and trees dance, and that he could metamorphose himself into flame; that from the skin of a serpent he could produce a living one, and change the ashes of a leaf into a green lcaf. At a great dance and feast in 1660, he made his farewell speech to his people, and exhorted them to live in peace with the English, acknowledging that he had tried his arts as a powow against them in vain. In the war of 1675, Wonolanset, his son and successor, withdrew his people to some remote place, that he might not participate in the quarrel. - Felt's Hist. New Eng.

PATTEN, WILLIAM, minister of Hartford, Conn., died Jan. 16, 1775, aged 36. He was a grandson of William P., who lived in Cambridge from 1645 till 1668; was born at Billerica in March, 1738, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1754. He succeeded J. Cotton as the minister of Halifax, Mass., in Feb., 1758; but was dismissed by reason of ill health in 1768. He was afterwards the minister of the south church in Hartford, as the colleague of E. Whitman, about seven years. After languishing two years, and losing his voice, he died in his father's family at Roxbury. He was an eminently eloquent, popular, and faithful preacher. Leaving a wife and six children with little property, he and fatherless. His widow, the daughter of President Eleazar Wheelock, eminent for her piety, died at Hartford Dec. 5, 1831, aged 91. — 2 Coll. Hist. Soc., IV. 282.

PATTEN, GEORGE JAFFREY, an eminent teacher in Hartford, died March 17, 1830, aged about 56. He was the son of Rev. Wm. Patten and Ruth Wheelock; and, as his father died when he was a child, it was by the aid of his brother that he was educated. He graduated at Providence in 1792; then taught a grammar school in Hartford six years; and was subsequently engaged five years in commercial affairs. At length he established in conjunction with his sisters an independent school, to which he devoted the remainder of his life, thirty-two years. It was a school of great distinction and usefulness; he had under his eare three thousand youth of both sexes. Very many he prepared for college. All the virtues of a son and a brother were his. Only a year or two did his aged mother survive him. Mr. Patten was evangelical in his religious sentiments, and he cherished a hope that he was a Christian convert; but in his diffidence he never made a public profession of his faith. Yet he was a man of prayer in private and in the family.

PATTEN, WILLIAM, D. D., died at Hartford. Conn., March 9, 1839, aged 76. He was the son of Rev. William Patten; was graduated at Dartmouth in 1780; and settled as successor of Mr. Stiles in 1786 at Newport, where he preached for forty-eight years. He married Hannah Hurlbut of New London; she died at Brooklyn Aug. 30, 1855, aged 86. To the praise of her benevolence, it is said that she set up at Newport, forty years previously, the first ragged school in this country, aided by Mrs. Floride Calhoun of South Carolina. Her children were William, a lawyer of Providence; Joseph of New York; George W. a captain in the army; Ruth, married to F. W. Hotehkiss of Hartford; Mary Anna, married to C. S. Halsted of Brooklyn; and others. Dr. Patten was a distinguished theologian, but meek and lowly in heart, most kind and benevolent. He died after a short illness, in which he suffered little pain. He published a sermon after his ordination, 1786; on the slave trade, 1792; Christianity the true theology, against Paine, 1795; on the death of President Stiles, 1795; of Dr. Isaac Senter, 1799; before the African benevolent society, 1808. - Sprague's Annals.

PATTEN, RUTH, Miss, died in Hartford March 1, 1850, aged 86, daughter of Rev. Wm. Patten, and sister of Rev. Dr. Wm. Patten of Newport, and grand-daughter of Rev. Dr. E. Wheelock; a woman of an eminent Christian character and highly useful. Her sister Mary, also an excellent woman, who had always been her companion, fol-and fatherless. His widow, the daughter of Presdent Eleazar Wheelock, eminent for her piety, aged 83.

ek

Li

ce

of

οť

in; six

toi

col

the 801 nni

of

figl

Ch

Ga

170

gra Sip

Nu

Sila

bla

Λt

iste

ter,

wh

Ma

por

lig!

Ma

thr

You

four imp

PATTERSON, WILLIAM, governor of New Jersey, and associate judge of the supreme court of the United States, died Sept. 9, 1806, aged about 63. He was a native of New Jersey, and was graduated at the college in that State in 1763. He was a member of the convention in 1787 which framed the constitution of the United States, and his name is affixed to that instrument. When the new government commenced its operations in 1789, he was a member of the senate from New Jersey. He was chosen governor in 1790 as successor of Mr. Livingston. While a judge of the supreme court of the United States he died at Albany. In this office he was succeeded by Brockholst Livingston. He was an able statesman, an upright judge, and a disinterested friend of his country. He endured the sufferings of a lingering and distressing disease with exemplary patience. When he saw that death was at hand, he sent for a minister to receive from him the sacrament. The judge observed, that it had been for some time past his intention to receive that sacred rite, but that some easualty or other had always prevented him. Ho did not wish, however, to leave the world before he had fulfilled his duty. When the minister mentioned the qualifications which are required of those who partake of that holy ordinance, he acquiesced in them all, and remarked, at the same time, that he had always been a believer in the truths of Christianity: that the only point on which he had ever entertained any doubt, was the divinity of the Saviour; but he had long since examined that subject, and satisfied his mind upon it; that he had now no hesitation in professing his belief in all the doctrines of our religion. He then received the communion with the utmost devotion. When the minister, as he retired, expressed his apprehension that they should not meet again, he replied, "Yes, I trust we shall; we shall meet again in heaven." - Clarke's Fun. Ser.

PATTERSON, ROBERT, LL. D., president of the American philosophical society, died July 22, 1824, aged 81. He was born in the north of Ireland May 30, 1743. In 1768 he emigrated to Philadelphia. In 1774 he was appointed principal of the academy at Wilmington, Delaware. In the Revolutionary war he acted as brigade major. In 1779 he was appointed professor of mathematics in the university of Pennsylvania, and then vice-provost. He was succeeded by his son of the same name in 1814. In 1805 he was appointed director of the mint of the United States. In 1819 he was chosen president of the American peace society. In the transactions of the philosophical society he published many pa-

New court , aged

1850.

y, and tute in tion in United ument. operasenate

rnor in Vhile a States as sucwas an lisintered the disease aw that r to redge obpast his out that evented eave the When

as which hat holy and realways ity; that ertained our; but eet, and now no the doc-

ived the When is appreagain, he all mect

sident of

July 22, north of migrated nted prin-)elaware. s brigade fessor of nsylvania, led by his 05 he was e United ent of the actions of many pahis fervent piety. It influenced all his conduct from his youth. He was an elder of the Scotch Presbyterian church nearly half a century.

PATTERSON, GEORGE, M. D., a Baptist minister, died at Cincinnati in Dec., 1831, aged 44, the pastor of the church in Race street.

PATTERSON, JOSEPH, minister at Pittsburg, Penn., died in 1832.

PATTERSON, WILLIAM, a distinguished merchant, died in Baltimore in 1835, aged 85.

PATTERSON, James, died in Philadelphia Nov. 24, 1837, aged 50. Settled in the Northern Liberties in 1814, in his brief ministry one thousand six hundred and ninety persons were reecived into his church; and there were hundreds of converts as he preached elsewhere, the labors of no preacher since the days of Whitefield having been more blessed. Under his patronage sixty young men became ministers. He published many useful tracts.

PATTERSON, DANIEL T., died at Washington in 1839. He was a captain in the navy, and commander of the navy yard at W.

PATTERSON, ROBERT M., Dr., director of the United States mint, died at Philadelphia in 1854. He was president of the American philosophical society, and had been a professor in the universities of Pennsylvania and Virginia.

PATTISON, GRANVILLE CHARPE, M. D., died at New York Nov. 12, 1851, aged 60, professor of anatomy in the university.

PAUGUS, sachem of Pigwawkett, was killed near the pond in Fryeburg, Me., in Lovewell's fight, April 18, 1725. A man by the name of Chamberlain shot him.

PAUL, Silas, an Indian Baptist preacher at Gayhead on Martha's Vineyard, was ordained in 1763 and died in 1787. His inscription on a gravestone there is as follows: "Yeuuh' Wohhok' Sipsin' Sil' Paul' Nohtobeyontok' Aged 49: years' Nuppoop' Tah' August' 24th 1787." The corresponding English is this: Here, the body, lies, Silas Paul, an ordained preacher, died, then or in.

PAUL, THOMAS, African, Baptist minister of blacks in Boston, died April 13, 1831, aged 54. A few days before him died another African minister, Richard Allen, of Philadelphia, aged 70.

PAUL, NATHANIEL, a colored Baptist minister, died in Albany about 1842. His widow, a white English woman, died in Northampton, Mass., in 1853, aged 60, or more. She was supported by private charity. He was a mulatco, light colored. She loved him.

PAULDING, JOHN, one of the eaptors of Major André, died in 1818, aged 59. He was three times a prisoner with the enemy in New York: twice he escaped, the second time only four days before André was taken; from his third pers. A remarkable trait of his character was | The watch, horse, saddle and bridle of André, with 80 dollars in continental bills, were retained as lawful prize, being the property of an enemy, and were sold and the money divided among the three captors and four others of the party, who were keeping a look-out half a mile distant. Col. Wm. S. Smith purchased the watch for 30 guineas. Judge Henson states, that the watch was sent from a person unknown to Lient.-Governor Elliot in New York, and by him sent to the family of Major André. Paulding and his companions, Van Wart and Williams, received from congress a silver medal, on one side of which was a shield, inscribed "FIDELITY," and on the other the motto, "VINCIT AMOR PATRIÆ;" also an annuity of two hundred dollars. He died at Yorktown, or Staatsburg. The corporation of New York in 1827, erceted a marble monument to his memory in the church-yard, two miles from Peckskill village, Westehester county.

PAWLING, ALBERT, colonel, died in Troy Nov. 10, 1837, aged 88. As an officer of the Revolution he was engaged in various battles. He was the first sheriff of Rensselaer county. New York, and first mayor of the city of Troy.

PAYNE, WILLIAM, captain, died in Clinton, Virginia, in 1837, aged 83. He commanded the Fulmouth blues several years in the war; also a company of volunteers at the siege of Yorktown.

PAYNE, John Howard, consul at Tunis, died in 1852. He was the author of the song, "Home, sweet home," and of dramatic pieces and poems.

PAYSON, EDWARD, minister of Rowley, Mass., died in 1732, aged 75. The son of Edward of Roxbury; he graduated at Harvard in 1677, and was ordained in 1682. His sons were Samuel, Eliot, Stephen, Jonathan, David, and Phillips. He published two sermons on awful providences.

PAYSON, PHILLIPS, minister of Walpole, Mass., died in 1778, aged 74. Born in Dorchester, he graduated at Harvard in 1724, and was ordained 1730; and at his death was in the fortyeighth year of his ministry, highly respected. He published two fast sermons on the war with Spain. 1741.

PAYSON, PHILLIPS, D. D., minister of Chelsea, Mass., died Jan. 11, 1801, aged 64. He was a descendant of Edward P., who lived in Roxbury in 1649, the grandson of Edward P., the fifth minister of Rowley, and the son of Phillips P., minister of Walpole; was born Jan. 18, 1736. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1754. From the time of his ordination, Oct. 26, 1757, he continued to discharge the duties of the sacred office with zeal and fidelity till his death. He was succeeded by Mr. Tucker.nan. During the struggle, which terminated in the independence of America, Dr. Payson boldly advocated the imprisonment he was released by the peace, cause of his country. As a classical scholar he

th

ar

17

 Λ ;

dia

611 tiz

for ce

wl

lu

in

H

Ba

ore

17 ces

wh

ch

В.,

tin

list

nn

49

Da

n c

an

wa

lisl

He

his

rei

his

Ro

was stu

N.

he

De

liva

Ne

pat

wa

of

ver

Scl

rose to distinction, and many young men reecived the rudiments of their education under him. His acquaintance with astronomy and natural philosophy is evinced by his tracts in the transactions of the American academy of arts and sciences. As a minister he was the friend and father of his peo le, and he preached with energy of diction and pathos of delivery. He published an election sermon, 1778; at the ordination of his brother, John P. of Fitchburg, 1768; of his brother, Seth Payson of Rindge, 1782; on the battle of Lexington; on the death of Washington, 1800. - Barnard's Fun. Ser.

PAYSON, John, first minister of Fitchburg, died in 1804, aged 59. The brother of Dr. Phillips P., he graduated at Harvard in 1764, and was ordained in 1768. His successor was S. Wor-

PAYSON, SETH, D. D., minister of Rindge, N. H., brother of the preceding, was born Sept. 19, 1758; was graduated at Harvard college in 1777; ordained Dec. 4, 1782; and died Feb. 26, 1820, aged 61. His widow, Grata, died in 1827. He possessed superior abilities, and was a plain, faithful, and useful preacher. He was a trustee of Dartmouth college and a member of the American foreign mission society. He published preofs of illuminism, an abstract of Robinson and Barruel, 12mo., 1802; two fast sermons, 1805; on the death of S. Waters, 1802; of J. Cushing, 1806; of L. Pillsbury, 1819; at the ordination of E. Hill, 1790; of J. Brown, 1795; of J. Converse, 1806; of E. Payson, 1808; of J. Wright, 1812; before the Social lodge; election sermon, 1799. - Smagas's Annals.

PAYSON. EDWARD, D. D., minister of Portland, Maine, the son of the preceding, died Oct. 22, 1827, agad 4t. He was born July 25, 1783; was graduated at Harvard college in 1803; and for three years was the teacher of an academy at Portland. At this period the death of a brother had a favorable influence on his religious character, and he engaged with a pious zeal, which continued through life, in the cause of Jesus Christ. He was ordained as the colleague of Mr. Kellogg, Dec. 16, 1807; he afterwards became the sole pastor of a new church. His successor was Dr. Tyler. In his distressing sickness he displayed in the most interesting and impressive manner the power of Christian faith. Smitten down in the midst of his days and usefulness, he was entirely resigned to the divine will, for he perceived distinctly, that the infinite wisdom of God could not err in the direction of events, and it was his joy that God reigneth. His mind rose over hodily pain, and in the strong visions of eternity he seemed almost to lose the sense of suffering. His wife was Ann Louisa Shipman of New Haven. She died at Williamstown Nov. 17, 1848, aged 64. One of his daughters is ing orchards. But his chief aim was to teach the wife of Professor Hopkins of Williams college, and is known by her valuable writing . During about twenty years he was exclusively devoted to the work of the ministry, with increasing usefulness, being the instrument of the conversion to the Christian faith of some hundreds of his hearers. He repeatedly declined invitations to remove to Boston and New York. Among his uncomment intellectual powers a rich fancy was the most conspicuous. Without any of the graces of the orator, his preaching had the eloquence of truth and feeling. In his prayers especially there was a solemnity, fulness, originality, variety, pathos, and sublimity, seldom equalled. Some of his discourses, on which he bestowed labor, exhibit a polished taste and much grace and beauty of language. His eloquent address to the bible society has been published as one of the tracts of the American tract society. He published a discourse on the worth of the bible; an address to scamen; and a thanksgiving sermen. A memoir of his life, by Asa Cummings, was published, 2d edit., 1830; a volume of sermons, 8vo., 1828; another volume, 12mo., 1831.

PAYSON, PHILLIPS, died in Fayetteville, N. Y., Feb. 16, 1856, after an illness of four days, aged 60. Born in Rindge, the son of Dr. S. Payson, he studied theology at Andover, and was some years the minister of Leominster, and then elsewhere; but for a few of his last years he had not strength to preach. He was a scholar, a diligent inquirer after truth, an earnest, faithful man. Before his death he had the joy of seeing the last of six children converted to Christ, as he hoped.

His end was peace.

PEABODY, OLIVER, minister of Natick, Mass., and missionary to the Indians, died in peace Feb. 2, 1752, aged 53. He was born in Boxford in 1698, and graduated at Harvard college in 1721. He was the son of William and grandson of Francis, who came over in the ship Planter in 1635. He was pieus in early life, and while in college was preparing for the ministry. Employed by the commissioners for propagating the gospel, he preached first at Natick Aug. 6, 1721; there were then but two families of white people in the town. The Indian church, which the apostolic Eliot had founded, was now extinct, the Indian preacher, Daniel Tahhowompait, having died in 1716; and all records were lost. A new church was formed Dec. 3, 1729, consisting of three Indians and five white persons, and he was ordained at Cambridge Dec. 17th. Through his influence many of the Indians were induced to abandon their savage mode of living and to attend to husbandry as the means of subsistence; he had the happiness to see many of the Indian families with comfortable houses, cultivated fields, and flourish-them the religion of Jesus Christ. There were commended by Greene, R. H. Lee, and others. ns eolritings. persons, several of whom were Indians; in July, exclu-1713, he stated that in the two preceding years cimistry, about lifty had been received into the church. : unient Against the vice of intemperance among the Inof some dians he set himself with great zeal and much declined v York. success. During his residence at Natick he baptized one hundred and eighty-nine Indians, and s a rich four hundred and twenty-two whites; and he reout any crived to the church thirty-five Indians and thirty ing had whites; and there died two hundred and fifty-six prayers Indians, of whom one was 110 years old. Dur-, origining one season he went on a mission to the Moseldom hegans. Gov. Belcher was especially his friend. hich he His wife was Hannah, daughter of Rev. Joseph ad much Baxter of Medfield. His eldest and iver, eloquent ublished ordained at Roxbury in Nov., 1750. 1752; he had eleven other childre society. of the cessor at Natick was Stephen H whom the Indians degenerated, and anksgivchurch again became almost extinct. sa Cumvolume B., the ministers were Freeman, Sears, and Mane, 12mo., tia Moore. Mr. Peabody was eminently pious and greatly beloved and lamented. He published artillery election sermon, 1732; on a good le, N. Y., > 49-56; Sprague's Annals. PEAHODY, STEPHEN, minister of Atkinson, N. H., died in 1819, aged 78. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1769. It is said, that while he was a chaplain in the army he had occasion to administer reproof for profaneness to Cols. Cilley and Poor. Declining from strict Orthodoxy, he was regarded by some as a Unitarian. He published a sermon at ordination of J. Webster, and bad hope of salvation, 1742. - Panopl. vtt.

1799; of M. Dow, 1801; election sermon, 1797. PEABODY, NATHANIEL, a physician and Revolutionary patriot, died June 27, 1823, aged 82. He was born at Topsfield, Mass., March 1, 1741; his father, the son of Jacob P., was a physician, removed to Leominster in 1745 and died in 1759; his mother, Susanna, was the daughter of John Rogers, minister for fifty years of Boxford, who was the son of Jeremiah of Salem. Having studied with his father, he settled at Atkinson, N. H., and had extensive practice. In Oct., 1774, he was appointed a lieutenant-colonel, and in Dec. he accompanied Langdon, Bartlett, and Sullivan in the capture of fort William and Mary at Newcastle. As a member of the legislature his patriotic services were important. In 1778 he was adjutant-general of the militia, with the rank of colonel. Being appointed a delegate to congress, he took his seat June 22, 1779, and was a very useful member. In 1780 he was, with Philip Schuyler and J. Matthews, on the committee of congress to repair to head-quarters, for the general improvement of the military system. It was added to the church in the first year twenty-two. In the autumn he resigned his seat. In subsequent years he was a representative, senator, and councillor; in 1793 he was appointed a majorgeneral of the militia. During several of the last years of his life he was for debt confined to the limits of the prison at Exeter, where he died, This old Revolutionary patriot, and Robert Morris, whose financial operations contributed in a very high degree to the success of Washington and the establishment of American independence. both died in prison, not for erime, but debt. When will laws, which are remnants of a barbarous age, be repealed?-Gen. Peabody left no child; his aged widow survived him. He was a man of humor and wit. In his politics he was a decided republican. Notwithstanding his patriotism and public services, he had some faults; h was vain and obstinate, and in middle life ford dress and parade. Heing a good horseman, he spended much money in the purchase of elegant horses, and travelled with a servant. If there is no excuse for his extravagance, yet he asserted that his misfortunes were owing to his losses by suretyship, and the misconduct of his agents and pretended friends. - Farmer's Collect. 1tt. 1-16;

Thacher.

PEABODY, OLIVER, judge, died at Exeter, N. 11., Aug. 3, 1831, aged 79. He was born at Andover, Mass., Aug. 22, 1752, and graduated at Harvard college in 1773. Having studied law, he about 1788 settled at Exeter, N. H. He was judge of probate from 1790 till 1793; treasurer of the State from 1794 to 1805; sheriff of the eounty from 1805 to 1810; judge of the common pleas from 1813 to 1816; and repeatedly a senator. Three times he was an elector of president and vice-president. In all his stations he acquitted himself with dignity and integrity. His two sons, twins, Oliver Wm. Bourn P., and Wm. Bourn Oliver P., a lawyer and a minister, graduated at Harvard college in 1816.

PEABODY, David, professor of oratory and belles lettres at Dartmouth, died Oct. 15, 1839, aged about 31. He was born at Topsfield, Mass., graduated at D. in 1828, and was for a few years a minister in Lynn, and in Woreester as the successor of Mr. Abbott. He was in office in college only one year. Few young men have died of so high promise and so greatly respected for scholarship and character, for his intellectual powers and warm affections, for his skill and eloquence as a faithful preacher of the gospel. His widow, whose name was Maria Brigham, was for some years previous to her second marriage the eminent conductor of a female school in Hanover. Pres. Lord published a sermon on his death. He published a fast sermon at Worcester, 1836.

PEABODY, Joseph, a rich merchant of Salem, a laborious service; his zeal and labors were died Jan. 5, 1844, aged 86. He had built and hen elsehad not diligent an. Bethe last e hoped. ck, Mass., cace Feb. oxford in e in 1721, nys, aged Payson,

vas some of Franin 1635. n college ployed by gospel, he 1; there ple in the apostolic ne Indian died in w church three In-ordained influence

abandon

nd to huse had the milies with

d flourish-

to teach

IMAGE EVALUATION TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic Sciences Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET WEBSTER, N.Y. 14580 (716) 872-4503

freighted eighty-three ships, which made thirtyeight voyages to Culcutta; seventeen to Canton; thirty-two to Sumatra; forty-seven to St. Petersburg; ten to other ports in the north; and twenty to the Mediterranean. He was never involved in litigation .- Hunt's Mer. Mag.

PEABODY, WILLIAM B. O., D. D., Unitarian minister in Springfield, Mass., died May 28, 1847, aged 57. He was a native of Exeter, and a graduate of Harvard in 1816. Mr. Simmons was his successor. He published the lives of Wilson, C. Mather, and D. Brainerd; and a report on ornithology. — Holland's History.

PEABODY, OLIVER W. B., minister in Burlington, Vt., twin brother of the preceding, died July 5, 1848; a graduate of Harvard in 1816.

He published the life of Putnam.

PEABODY, WILLIAM A., died at Amherst, Mass., Feb. 27, 1850, aged 34. He was professor of Latin and Greek in Amherst college, late minister in East Randolph. His wife was a daughter of Rev. Dr. Codman.

PEABODY, EPHRAIM, D. D., minister of King's chapel, Boston, died Nov. 28, 1856, aged 49. He graduated at Bowdoin college in 1827. He was settled at New Bedford, Mass., in 1838.

PEAK, John, Baptist minister in Newburyport, was born in Walpole, N. H.; was settled at N. in 1809; and resigned in 1818. His church in Liberty street was burnt in the great fire of 1811, and rebuilt in Congress street. PEALE, CHARLES WILSON, the founder of the Philadelphia museum, died in 1827, aged 85. He was born at Charlestown, Md., in 1741, and was apprenticed to a saddler at Annapolis. He became also a silver-smith, watch-maker, and carver; he was a portrait-painter, a naturalist and preserver of animals, a skilful dentist, and the inventor of various machines. Carrying a handsome saddle to Hesselius, a portrait-painter in his neighborhood, he begged him to explain to him the mystery of putting colors on canvas. Repairing to England, he studied under Mr. West in 1770 and 1771. After his return he was for about fifteen years the only portraitpainter in North America. In the war he was at the head of a company in the battles of Trenton and Germantown. At Philadelphia he opened a picture gallery, in which were the portraits of many officers of the army. Opening a museum, he procured an almost entire skeleton of a mammoth from Ulster county, N. Y., at an expense of 5,000 dollars. His museum at length became extensive. He delivered a course of lectures on natural history; and zealously supported the academy of fine arts. His life was a life of toil and temperance. His sons were distinguished as painters. Raphaelle P., the eldest, died at Philadelphia in March, 1825, aged 52.—Encyclopedia Americana.

PEARCE, ELIZABETH, Mrs., died in Johnson eounty, N. C., in 1833, nged about 111.

PEARCE, WILLIAM, one of the "tea party" in the Revolution, died at Boston in 1840, aged 94.

PEARCE, DUTEE J., died at Newport, R. I., May 9, 1849, aged 60. He was a distinguished lawyer; a member of congress from 1825 to 1837; attorney-general of the State, and United States' district attorney.

PEARSON, ELIPHALET, LL. D., professor of Hebrew and oriental languages at Harvard college, died in Sept., 1826, aged 74. He was a descendant of John P., who came from England and settled at Rowley in 1647, and died Nov. 2, 1697, aged 82. Born in 1752, he graduated in 1773 at Harvard college, where he was a distinguished professor from 1786 to 1806; and after his removal from Cambridge, the first professor of sacred literature in the theological seminary at Andover from 1808 to 1809, when he was succeeded by Moses Stuart. He died at Greenland. N. H., at the house of his son-in-law, Rev. Mr. Abbot. His first wife was a daughter of Pres. Holyoke; his second, a daughter of Honry Bromfield of Harvard. This town was his last place of residence: it was on a visit to Greenland that he died. He left a valuable course of lectures on language, delivered at Cambridge. Dr. Pearson, besides teaching Hebrew at Cambridge, was also a lecturer on grammar and the teacher of rhetoric, in which capacity his taste and skill and severity of eritieism had a most beneficial effect on the style of composition at the college. He was a learned and able instructor. At the opening of the seminary, Sept. 28, 1808, he was ordained as a preacher. He published a lecture on the death of Pres. Willard, 1804; a discourse before the society for promoting Christian knowledge, 1811; on the death of Madam Phillips, 1812; at the ordination of E. Abbot, 1813; before the education society, 1815. - Sprague's Annals.

PEARSON, ABIEL, M. D., died at Andover, Mass., in 1827, aged 71. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1779.

PEASE, Lorenzo W., missionary, died at Larnica in Cyprus, Aug. 28, 1839, aged 30. Born in Hinsdale, Mass., he graduated in 1828, and at Auburn seminary in 1833, and went to Larnica in 1835. His wife, Lucinda Leonard, was born in Wareham.

PEASE, CALVIN, judge, died at Warren, Ohio, Sept. 17, 1839, aged 63. He was one of the earliest settlers, and took an active part in forming and administering the government of Ohio. For many years he was one of the judges of the supreme court of Ohio. A man of talents and integrity, he was greatly respected.

PECK, ROBERT, one of the first ministers of Hingham, was ordained Nov. 28, 1638, but sailed for England in 1641.

P Con and as tl He : does The fifty cess P in D P natu

bridg

Bost

geni 1776 Kitte pass Russ paire twen but c Wha foun of h fesso was o and He l ter o fathe erose which the 1 hand bapti ship

Me., the · P cour in T P in 18 and publi PI

accou

ican Hist

PI

Dr.] in th P died

in 17

Have

hem, motl y" in d 94. R. I., ished 25 to Inited เมรดก or of d cola deid and 1697, 773 at tished is reor of ary at s sueuland, c. Mr. Pres. Bromplace d that reslon earson, as also ectoric, everity on the was a ing of educandover, t Dartied at ined as

e death

re the

, 1811;

at the

ed 30.
1828, vent to conard,
1, Ohio,

of the of the n form-of Ohio. s of the nts and sters of it sailed PECK, JEREMAH, minister of Waterbury, Conn., died in 1699. He studied at Cambridge, and at a late period of his life was settled in 1689 as the first minister at Mattatuck or Waterbury. He is called Mr. P., senior, of Greenwich; but it does not appear that he was the minister of G. There were thirty families, and one hundred and fifty inhabitants. Mr. Southmayd was his successor.

PECK, S., minister of Rehoboth, Mass., died in Dec., 1788, aged 82.

PECK, WILLIAM DANDRIDGE, professor of natural history at Harvard college, died at Cambridge, Oct. 3, 1822, aged 59. He was born in Boston May 8, 1763. His father, John P., an ingenious shipwright, at the seige of Boston in 1776 removed to Braintree, and afterwards to Kittery, Me. After he was graduated, in 1782, he passed a few years in the counting-house of Mr. Russell, a merchant, in Boston; and then repaired to his father's house, where he spent twenty years of his life, seeluded from the world, but occupied in the pursuits of natural history. Whatever he attempted to study, he studied profoundly. It was chiefly for his benefit, that some of his friends promoted a subscription for a professorship of natural history at Cambridge. He was elected the first professor March 27, 1805, and subsequently spent three years in Europe. He left one son; his wife was Harriet, the daughter of Rev. Timothy Hilliard. Mr. P., like his father, was a most ingenious artist; he made a microscope, and the most delicate instruments, for which he had occasion. He found amusement at the lathe after he had lost the use of one of his hands by the palsy. At the age of thirty he was baptized by Bishop Bass, as he preferred the worship of the Episcopal church. He published an account of the sea-serpent in memoirs of American Academy, Iv., and a few other articles. - 2 Hist. Coll. x. 161.

PECK, GEORGE, colonel, died at Eastport, Me., March, 1834, aged 97. He was an officer in the war of the Revolution.

PECK, JAMES H., judge of U. S. district court for Missouri, died in 1836. He was born in Tennessee; a man of integrity and ability.

PECK, EVERARD, died at Rochester, N. Y., in 1854, aged 63. He was an early settler of R., and a useful citizen. He was a bookseller and publisher. In 1816 he published the Telegraph.

PECKER, JAMES, a physician in Boston, died in 1794, aged 70. A son of Dr. James P., of Haverhill, he graduated at Harvard in 1743. Dr. Rand successfully removed from him a stone in the bladder, with which he had been afflicted.

PEET, Josian, minister of Norridgewock, Me., died Feb. 17, 1852, aged 71. Born in Bethlehem, Conn., he was the son of Benjamin; his mother was Elizabeth Hendee, niece of Dr. E.

Wheelock. He graduated at Middlebury in 1808, and was ordained in 1814. He was a laborious, faithful, excellent minister; and he toiled in the new towns around him as a missionary.— Hathway's Sermon.

PEET, STEPHEN, died in Chicago March 21, 1855, aged 58. Born in Sandgate, Vt., his parents removed to Lee, where he became pious at the age of sixteen, and to Ohio. In 1823 he graduated at Yale, and was soon settled at Euclid. near Cleveland, which was then a small village; he remained there seven years, much blessed in his labors, wherever he preached. At Hudson, Ohio, by one sermon many were converted, and among the converts were five lawyers. After this he was devoted to the cause of the lake seamen, being chaplain at Buffalo, and editing the Bethel Magazine and Buffalo Spectator. In 1837 he became the minister of Green Bay; the bell for his meeting-house, the first in Wisconsin, was given by J. J. Astor. He next, in the employment of the Home missionary society, explored Wisconsin, and assisted in founding Beloit college and thirty churches. Then he settled as the minister of Milwaukie; he afterwards took charge of an institute at Batavia in Illinois, and then was the agent of an association in Michigan, which proposed to found a theological seminary. He was buried at Beloit. His piety, zeal, and energy made him one of the greatest benefactors of Wis-

PEIRCE, WILLIAM, an early settler of Boston, arrived in the Griffin with Cotton, Hooker, and two hundred passengers, in 1633. He was a selectman, and died in 1661 or 1669, for in those years one of the name died.—Savage; Farmer.

PEIRCE, WILLIAM, was a distinguished shipmaster at an early period in New England. He repeatedly crossed the Atlantic. He was muster of the Ann in 1623; afterwards of the Mayflower, and the Lyon. It was by his aid, in his vessel, that Bradford detected, by opening their letters, the designs of Lyford and Oldham. In 1830 he was at Salem, and visited the Arabella as that vessel came in sight. Our fathers called him "the Palinurus of our seas." He was cast away in Virginia in 1633, and suffered great loss, as did also Winthrop, in heaver and fish by him owned; in writing to whom he says, piously, "a happy loss if our souls may gain." In 1638 he carried Pequot captive Indians for sale to the West Indies, and he brought back from Tortugas negro slaves: this was the first slave traffic in New England, disgraceful and infamous in both its branches, carrying out red and bringing home black slaves. He was killed at Providence, one of the Bahama Islands, in 1641. - Savage; Felt's Hist. of N. E.

PEIRCE, NATHANIEL, published an account of his dangers at sea, 1756.

PEIRCE, BENJAMIN, librarian of Harvard college, died in 1831, aged about 50. He graduated in 1801, and was librarian from 1826 to his death. Mr. Folsom preceded him, and Dr. Harris followed him. He published a history of Harvard college in 1833.

PEIRSON, ABEL LAWRENCE, M. D., was killed by railroad disaster at Norwalk bridge May 6, 1853, aged 57. A graduate of Harvard of 1812, he settled at Salem, and was eminent in his profession, and a man of scientific attainments. He was the son of Samuel P. of Biddeford. His life and other lives were lost by reason of carelessness as to necessary signals on the railroad.

PELIIAM, HERDERT, one of the fathers of Mass., was an assistant from 1645 to 1649, and a commissioner of the united colonies of New England, in making a treaty with the Narragansett and Niantick Indians in 1645. His name, as affixed to the treaty, stands next to Gov. Winthrop's. Among the Indians present were Pessecus, Meekesano, Asumsequen, and Pummash. Pelham lived but a few years in America. In 1650 he had returned to England, where he died about 1676. The colony of Massachusetts intrusted him with some of their important matters. He was a member of the society for promoting the gospel among the Indians. Edward, his son, graduated at Harvard, 1673.

PEMBERTON, THOMAS, Dr., died in Boston

July 26, 1693.

PEMBERTON, EBENEZER, minister in Boston, the son of James P., one of the founders of the old south church, was graduated at Harvard college in 1691, and was afterwards a tutor in that seminary. He died Feb. 13, 1717, aged 44. His wife, Mary Clark, survived him, and married Henry Lloyd, the father of Dr. Lloyd. He left one son and three daughters. He was a very minent preacher. He wrote in a style strong mentative, and eloquent. With great pow mind and extensive learning, he united a zeal which flamed. His passions, when excited, were innetuous and violent; but when free from the excitement of any unpleasant circumstance, he was mild and soft. The talent of reasoning he possessed in a high degree; and he was a master of speech. He was a taithful servant of Jesus Christ, preaching the gospel with zeal, and exhibiting in his life the Christian virtues. In prayer he was copious and fervent. His sermons were illuminating, practical, and pathetic, and delivered with very uncommon fervor. Towards the close of his life he was afflicted with much pain; but under his weakness and infirmity he was enabled to do much for the honor of his Master and the good of his brethren. His election sermon, preached 1710, entitled the divine original and dignity of government asserted and an advantageous prospect of the ruler's mortality recommended, is much and justly celebrated. It is reprinted in a volume of sermons, which was published in 1727. - Sprague's Annals.

PEMBERTON, EBENEZER, D. D., minister in Boston, the son of the preceding, died Sept. 9, 1777, aged 72. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1721. After he began to preach, he was invited in April, 1727, by the Presbyterian church in New York to succeed Mr. Anderson, the first minister, with the request that he would be ordained in Boston. This ceremony was accordingly performed Aug. 9th. Through his benevolent exertions the congregation was greatly increased, so as to be able to build an edifice of stone in 1748. In 1750 A. Cumming, afterwards minister in Boston, was settled as his colleague; but both were dismissed about the year 1753, the former on account of indisposition, and Mr. Pemberton through trifling contentions, kindled by ignorance and bigotry. He was succeeded by Mr. Bostwick. Being installed minister of the new brick church in Boston, March 6, 1754, as successor of Mr. Welsteed, he continued in that place till his death. Dr. Lathrop's society, whose meeting-house had been destroyed by the British, united with Mr. Pemberton's in 1779. He was a man of a devotional spirit, who was zealous and respectable in his ministerial work. He published a sermon before the synod, 1731; before the commissioners of the synod, 1735; sermons on several subjects, 8vo., 1738; practical discourses on various texts, 12mo., Boston, 1741; on the death of Dr. Nicoll. 1743: of Mr. Whitefield, 1770; at the ordination of Mr. Brainerd, 1744; of J. Story, 1771: artillery election sermon, 1756; election sermon, 1757; salvation by grace through faith illustrated and confirmed, in eight sermons, 8vo., 1774. Smith's N. Y., 192, 193; Coll. Hist. Society, III.

PEMBERTON, THOMAS, eminent for his acquaintance with American history, was born in Boston in 1728, and for many years pursued the mercantile employment. He died July 5, 1807, aged 79, having lived a bachelor, devoting regularly a part of each day to his studies and to visiting his friends. He contributed almost a ninth part to the collections of the historical society. Of this institution he was a member, and he bequeathed to it all his manuscripts. He wrote a Massachusetts chronology of the eighteenth century, containing the remarkable events of every year, biographical notices of eminent men, etc., in five MS. volumes. This work was used by Dr. Holmes in compiling his annals. His MS. memoranda, historical and biographical, make about fifteen volumes. His historical journal of the war is in historical collections, II.

PEMBERTON, EBENEZER, LL. D., died in Boston June 25, 1835, aged 89. He was a graduate of Princeton college in 1765, a tutor; and he w vale class teacl Con Bille for t His . н his :

scho

bell the s his b the b schol Testa New His t of th and l PI S. C. PI man aged in 17

choic

electi

many peals

its p

he w

Virgi

of th

chara the appo giniia was diffic proa patri publi with PI India

tled super 1717 61. Cutt. New to 1' ical P died Lone of h he was addressed by Madison in a Latin address, | valedictory and complimentary on the part of his class to their teacher. His life was devoted to teaching, not only in Nassau hall, but in Plainfield, Conn., in Phillips' neademy in Andover, and in Billerica; and no teacher had a higher character for scholarship, manners, eloquence, and piety. His last twenty years were years of infirmity.

2, 16

He was elegant and dignified in his appearance, his manners, and utterance. By his law every scholar was to be in his seat when the academy bell stopped. He then entered and bowed to all, the scholars standing at their seats and returning his bow. He then ascended to his desk, opened the bible, and made a short prayer. Then each scholar, rising in his turn, read a verse in the Old Testament in the morning, and he read from the New at night; then he made the long prayer. His attitude, look, voice, and gestures were those of the orator. On Saturdays he read from Watts and Doddridge. - Sprague's Annals.

PEMRY, SARAH, Mrs., died in Spartansburgh,

S. C., in 1816, nged 103.

PENDLETON, EDMUND, a distinguished statesman of Virginia, died at Richmond Oct. 26, 1803, aged 82. He was a member of the first congress in 1774, and was again appointed at the next choice, but in Aug., 1775, he declined a third election on account of his ill health. He was for many years one of the judges of the court of appeals of Virginia, with Blair and Wythe, and was its president at the time of his death. In 1787 he was appointed president of the convention of Virginia, which met to consider the constitution of the United States, and all the weight of his character and talents aided its adoption. After the government was organized, he was in 1789 appointed by Washington district judge for Virginia, but, as he declined this office, Cyrus Griffin was appointed in his place. In 1798, when the difficulties between this country and France approached almost to a rupture, the venerable patriarch, as the late President Adams calls him. published a pamphlet, protesting against a war with a sister republic.

PENHALLOW, SAMUEL, judge, historian of Indian wars, was born in Cornwall, England, July 2.1665; came to this country in 1686; and settled at Portsmouth, where he was a judge of the superior court in 1714, and chief justice from 1717 till his death. He died Dec. 2, 1726, aged 61. His wife was Mary, daughter of President Cutt. He published a narrative of the wars of New England with the Eastern Indians from 1703 to 1726, printed 1726; reprinted in N. H. histor-

PENN, WILLIAM, the founder of Pennsylvania, died July 30, 1718, aged 73. He was born in London Oct. 14, 1644, and in the fifteenth year

a college in Oxford. His genius was bright and his imagination lively. Being impressed by the preaching of an itinerant Quaker, he, with a number of other students, withdrew from the established worship, and held meetings by themselves. He was fined for the sin of nonconformity; but this only confirmed him in his principles. He was then expelled, in the sixteenth year of his age. Next followed the discipline of his father, which was also ineffectual to reclaim him. Being sent to France for the refinement of his manners, he passed two years in that country, learned its language, and acquired its politeness. He then studied law in Lincoln's Inn till the plague broke out in 1665. He was sent to Ireland in 1666 to manage an estate of his father; but he there associated himself with the Quakers, and in consequence he was recalled. He could not be persuaded to take off his hat in the presence of the king, or his father. For this inflexibility he was turned out of doors; upon which he commenced the toils of an itinerant preacher, and gained many proselytes. Though sometimes imprisoned, he was persevering, and such was his integrity and patience that his father became reconciled to him. In 1668 he published a book entitled the sandy foundation shaken, for which he was imprisoned seven months. In vindication of the principles of this book, he wrote during his confinement his innocency with her open face, and also his famous work, no cross no crown. 1670 he was apprehended for preaching in the street, and was tried at the old Bailey, where he pleaded his own cause with the magnanimity of a hero. The jury returned their verdiet "not guilty." On the death of his father he received a plentiful estate; but he continued to preach, to write, and to travel as before. He was shut up in the Tower and in Newgate. On his release he preached in Holland and Germany. It was owing to his exertions, in conjunction with Barclay and Keith, that the fraternity was formed into order. Some debts being due to his father, at the time of his death, from the crown, and as there was no prospect of payment very soon in any other mode, Penn solicited a grant of lands in America, and in 1681 obtained a charter of Pennsylvania. The colony was planted in the same year, though before this time some Dutch and Swedes had settled in the province. In 1682 Penn himself arrived, and established a government, allowing perfect liberty of conscience. He made honest purchases of the Indians, and treated them with great tenderness. He formed a plan of a capital city and called it Philadelphia. Two years after it was founded it contained 2,000 inhabitants. In 1684 Mr. Penn returned to England. One great motive for his return was to exert his influence in favor of his suffering of his age entered as a gentleman commoner of | brethren in Great Britain. He exerted it with

It is was er in

pt. 9, d colns inreli in minied in

perexered, so

1748. ı Boswere

on acrough d big-

. Beirch in . Wel-

death. se had h Mr.

devoιble in ıdn besioners ıbjects, texts, Nicoll,

ordina-. 1771 :

ermou, strated 774.~ ety, III.

his acborn in ed the 5, 1807,

g reguto visa ninth

society. he bewrote a nth cenf every , etc., in

by Dr. memoe about

the war died in a grador; and

success, and 1,300 Quakers, who had been confined | self-taught lawyer, a distinguished advocate. In in prison, were set at liberty. While he remained in England he was suspected of being a Papist, and an enomy to his country, and was several times arrested. But he continued his preaching and increased his controversial writings. In 1699, after fifteen years' absence, the American Lycurgus revisited his province. Having made some alteration in the government, he sailed again for England in 1701. He resumed his favorite employment, and continued it for a number of years. In 1712 he was seized by a paralytic disorder, of which he died. Notwithstanding his large paternal inheritance, he was continually subject to the importunity of his creditors, and obliged to mortgage his estate. His death prevented his surrendering his province to the crown. His posterity held it till the Revolution, his last surviving son, Thomas Penn, dying in 1775. Mr. Penn was a man of great abilities, of quick thought and ready utterance, of mildness of disposition and extensive charity. He was learned without vanity, facetious in conversation, yet weighty and serious, of an extraordinary greatness of mind, yet void of the stain of ambition. He published a multitude of tracts, large and small. The following is the title of his principal works; no cross no crown, or several sober reasons against hat honor, titular respects, you to a single person, etc., 4to., 1669; serious apology for the people called Quakers, against Jeremy Taylor, 4to., 1669; the spirit of truth vindicated, in answer to a Socinian, 4to., 1672; Quakerism a new nickname for old Christianity, 8vo., 1672; reason against railing, and truth against fiction, 8vo., 1673; the Christian Quaker and his divine testimony vindicated, folio, 1674. His select works have lately been published, in five volumes, 8vo. - Belknap's Amer. Biog. 11. 381-450.

PENN, THOMAS, son of Wm. Penn, died at Stoke, in England, in 1775. His wife was the daughter of the Earl of Pomfret. He had four children. John, a minor, succeeded his father, and died in 1834, aged 75. He published critical and dramatic works, two vols., 1798; and poems, two vols. Grenville wrote a life of his greatgrandfather, Admiral Penn. Richard was a member of parliament, a man of classical attainments, and wenderful memory. Sophia married William Stuart, archbishop of Armagh.

PENN, John, a patriot of the Revolution, the son of Moses P., died in Sept., 1788, aged 47. He was born in Virginia May 17, 1741. His early education was greatly neglected; he went to school only two or three years. At the age of 18, on the death of his father, he inherited a competent fortune. Instead of plunging into vicious excesses, he resolved to acquire knowledge and ascribed his unparalleled success to the God of study law. The library of his relative, Edmund armies. The king, in reward of his services, cou-1774 he removed to North Carolina. Being a member of congress from 1775 to 1779, he signed the Declaration of Independence. - Goodrieh.

PENNINGTON, JOHN, a physician of Philadelphia, died in 1793. Had he lived a few years longer, he would have been very eminent, in the opinion of Dr. Rush. He published chemical and economical essays, 8vo., 1790.

PEPPERRELL, WILLIAM, colonel, the father of Sir William P., died at Kittery, now in Maine. Feb. 15, 1734, aged about 80. Born in Wales, he was apprenticed to the captain of a fishing schooner, employed on the coast of New England. At the ago of 22 he settled at the Isle of Shoals, near Kittery Point, to which place he removed, and where he found his wife, Margery Bray, the daughter of a man of property, who came from Plymouth, England. His business was various: the most lucrative was the fisheries; shipbuilding was also profitable. Mr. Newmarch was his minister; and, when the church was formed in 1714. he and his wife and several of his daughters with their husbands were members. He had two sons and six daughters. As Andrew died about 1713, he left his estate chiefly to William. His daughter Mary married first John Frost, and had many children; then married Rev. Benjamin Colman; then Judge Prescott of Danvers. Joanna married Dr. George Jackson. His widow died in 1741, aged 80, a woman of piety and exemplary virtues. She had the means of doing good, and her charities were constant; and her name should never be forgotten. She died in Christian peace. — Parsons' Life of Pepperrell.

PEPPERRELL, SIR WILLIAM, licutenantgeneral, died at Kittery, Maine, July 6, 1759, aged 63. He was born at Kittery Point, now Maine, 1696, and was bred a merchant. His brother was now deceased. One of his sisters married John Newmarch. About the year 1727 he was chosen one of his majesty's council, and was annually re-elected thirty-two years till his death. Living in a country exposed to a ferocious enemy, he was well fitted for the situation in which he was placed, for it pleased God to give him a vigorous frame, and a mind of a firm texture, and of great calmness in danger. He rose to the highest military honors which his country could bestow upon him. When the expedition against Louisburg was contemplated, he was commissioned by the governors of New England to command the troops. He invested the city in the beginning of May, 1745. He was aided by Commodore Warren. Articles of capitulation were signed June 16. There was a remarkable series of providences in the whole affair, and Mr. Pepperrell Pendleton, was opened to him. He became a ferred upon him the dignity of a baronet of Great tens of (cone pres othe vani prec two plen son dept he d frien befo guis wort Prov " holy in hi He scen pray dishe angi bun eign bless

Bri

on

liei

Ms

Gro

of .

at t

of '

the core

of t

to C lette mini " To He ' boa Tho the men one sickr of G own

of sa

his d

O ou

on a native of New England. He was appointed lieutenant-general in Feb., 1759. He married, March 16, 1723, Mary Hirst, the daughter of Grove Hirst of Boston, and the grand-daughter of Judge Sewall. When he first saw her in 1722 at the house of her relative, Rev. Samuel Moody of York, his visit was very unwelcome to Joseph, the son of Mr. M., who in his journal has recorded that he was bewildered by the attractions of the young lady. It is no wonder that the pretensions of the schoolmaster could not rival these of Col. P., the heir of a man of wealth, who also conducted the affair with much skill, making presents of gold rings, and a large hoop, and other articles of dress, thus awakening a little vanity, which drew upon Miss Hirst, who in the preceding year had made a profession of religion, the remonstrances of her sober friends. He had two children, a daughter and a son; but it pleased God to afflict him by the death of his son Andrew in 1751, at the age of 25. In the depth of his sorrow and the severity of his trial, he doubtless shared the tender sympathy of his friends. The following letter, written the day before the death of his son, exhibits the anguish of the parental heart, and shows how worthless, compared with other blessings of Providence, are high honors and distinctions:

"Dear Christian Friends, - The great, but holy, just, and good God is come out against us in his holy auger. O may it be fatherly anger! He is bringing our sins to remembrance, and scems to be slaying our only son. O pray! pray! pray! pray! pray for us, that the Lord would keep us from dishonoring his great name in our distress and anguish of soul, that he would support us under and carry us through, what he shall, in his sovereign pleasure, bring upon us; and, if it be his blessed will, that our child may be yet spared to us, and sanctified, and made a blessing. Pity us! O our friends, and cry mightily to God for us. "We are your distressed friends,

"WM. PEPPERRELL, "MARY PEPPERRELL.

"Dear Cousin Gerrish,— Let our case be known to Christian friends along the road, and carry this letter, as soon as you get to town, to one of the ministers to whom it is directed.

"KITTERY, Feb. 28, 1750.

"To the Rev. Dr. Sewall, Mr. Prince, Mr. Foxcroft, Dr. Chauney, etc., etc., at Boston."

He had a high relish for the pleasures of society, and was the life and spirit of every company. Though not without his faults, he yet respected the Christian character. He became in 1734 a member of the church of which his father was one of the founders in 1714. During his last sickness he spoke with gratitude of the goodness of God, which he had experienced, and of his own imperfections and sins; he admired the plan of salvation made known in the gospel; knowing his dependence upon the grace of God, he sought

Britain, an honor never before nor since conferred | the influences of the Holy Spirit; and, as he ever professed a belief of the transcendent dignity and glory of the great Saviour of munkind, of the fulness of his merits, and the atoning virtue of his obedience and sufferings, when he was just entering the eternal world he commended his soul into the hands of this Redeemer. His life. by Usher Parsons, was published in 1855, - a book of great interest. He was a man of great wealth. He owned in Saco 5,500 acres, being the site of that populous town; and then his possessions were large in Portsmouth, Hampton, Berwick, and other towns. His will was drawn up with great care; but he gave in it little to educational and charitable purposes. He had been liberal to his parish and church, and to New Jersey college. He had an only daughter and surviving child, Elizabeth, who married Col. Nathaniel Sparhawk; their descendants were Their son, William P. Sparhawk, numerous. was made the heir of Sir William on condition of dropping the name of Sparhawk. He graduated at Cambridge in 1766, and became baronet Sir William Pepperrell, in 1774. But, espousing the British side in the controversy, all his vast property was confiscated and swept away. Col. Cutts purchased most of the lands in Saco. In England he was treated with respect, and received 500 pounds per annum from the British government; he died in London in 1816, aged 70. The descendants of Col. Sparhawk are numerous, bearing his name, and among others the names of Spooner, Jarvis, and Cutts. Lady P., the widow of Sir William, built her a house near her daughter's, at Kittery, and survived her husband thirty years, dying in 1789. - Stevens' Fun. Sermon; Parsons' Life of P.

PERCIVAL, JAMES G., M. D., a poet, died at Hazelgrove, Illinois, April 25, 1856, aged 60. Born in Berlin, Conn., he graduated at the age of twenty at Yale in 1815. He was, in 1824, assistant surgeon in the army, and professor of chemistry at West Point; but soon resigned and removed to Boston. Dr. Noah Webster employed him two years as assistant in editing his quarto English dictionary. He became now a resident of New Haven. By the governor of Connecticut he was appointed State geologist: and finally he became, in 1854, the State geologist of Wisconsin. He was a bachelor and lived a recluse. His poetry was regarded as poetry of tenderness and melancholy sweetness. He speaks thus of New England, in a short poem of that title:

"Hail to the land whereon we tread, Our fondest boast; The sepuichre of mighty dead, The truest hearts that ever bled, Who sleep lu Giory's brightest bed, A fearless host: No slave is here; our unchain'd feet Walk freely as the waves that beat Our coast."

In ng a gned hilayears n the mical

ather

laine. es, he shing land. hoals, ioved, y, the from rious : iilding minis-1714. s with d two about

His

t, and njamin . Jowidow y and doing : nnd died in errell. tenant-9, aged Maine, her was l John chosen nnually

Living he was he was igorous of great est milw upon uisburg by the nd the ning of re Ward June f provipperrell God of ces, con-

of Great

He published Prometheus, a poem, in 1821; a it was not long before the tractors sunk into negmiscellaneous volume of poetry and prose, called Clio, in 1822; a third vol., 1827; dream of day and other poems, 1843; report on the geology of Conn., 1842; Malte Brun's geography, translated by him, 1843.

PERCY, WILLIAM, D. D., Episcopal minister in Charleston, S, C., rector of St. Paul's, died in London in 1819, aged 75. He was a zealous preacher of the Calvinistic doctrines.

PERINE, WILLIAM, died in Dansville, N. Y., in 1847, aged 02, a soldier of the Revolution. He became a Christian at the age of 76.

PERKINS, WILLIAM, minister of Gloucester and Topsfield, Mass., died in 1682, aged 75. He came from London, and succeeded R. Blinman at G. in 1650, and in 1655 removed to Topsfield, where he succeeded Wm. Knight, who also came from London.

PERKINS, WILLIAM, remarkable for longevity, was born in the west of England, and died at New Market, N. H., in 1732, aged 116 years. --Belknap's N. II., 111. 252.

PERKINS, DANIEL, second minister of West Bridgewater, died in 1782, aged 86. Born in Topsfield, he graduated at Harvard in 1717, and was settled as successor of J. Keith in 1721. His successor was J. Reed. He was a useful and much respected man.

PERKINS, JOSEPH, Dr., of Norwich, Conn., died in 1794, aged 90. Born in N., he graduated at Yale in 1727. He was eminent as a physician and surgeon, practising till near the close of life. He had brilliant talents, and was a man of science and of undissembled piety. Thacher describes a remarkable operation of his for the hernia. --

Thacher's Med. Biog. PERKINS, ELISHA, a physician, the inventor of the tractors, died in Sept., 1799, aged 59. Ho was the son of Dr. Joseph P., a distinguished physician of Norwich, Conn., who died in 1794, aged 90; - he was born in Jan., 1740. Having studied with his father, he settled in Plainfield, Conn., and had extensive practice. His habits were social; his mind active and inquisitive. About the year 1796 he invented the tractors, which are two instruments, one of steel and the other of brass, pointed at one end. Cures were effected by drawing the points for a few minutes over the part of the body diseased. Thus the head-ache, the tooth-ache, rheumatic and other pains were removed. A patent was obtained. The fame of Perkinism extended to Europe. The son of Dr. P. went to London, where a Perkinean institution was created for the benefit of the poor, of which Lord Rivers was president. The published cases of cures amounted to five thousand, certified by eight professors, forty physi-lect. Dr. P. invented an antiseptic medicine, and repaired to New York to test its efficacy against the yellow fever; but he took the disease from the sick and died of it. - Thacher.

PERKINS, BENJAMIN DOUGLASS, a bookseller of New York, the son of Dr. Elisha P., died in New York in 1810, aged about 36. He graduated at Yale in 1704. He visited England in the service of his father's tractors, and was there several years. He was a man of a fine appearance and of a high character; was discreet, frank, and honorable; of exemplary morals, and earnest in religion. As a bookseller, he was of the respectable firm of Collins and Perkins. As to the tractors, his father claimed that the metallic composition of them was important, and that was a secret. But they seemed to be only steel and brass. Having had myself for a great many years a pair of them, if they have ever relieved pain, I have found them also useful in picking walnuts. - Thacher's Med. Biog.

PERKINS, JAMES, a benefactor of Harvard college and of the Boston Athenœum, died at Roxbury Aug. 1, 1822, aged 61. He was born in Boston in 1761, and was the son of James P. Educated as a merchant in the counting-house of the Messrs. Shattucks, he settled in St. Domingo; but was driven away by the Revolution in that island. On his return he engaged in business with his brother, Col. Thos. Handasyd P., and conducted an extensive trade to the northwest coast and to China. His wife was the daughter of Timothy Paine of Worcester. He was an upright merchant. One of his last acts of liberality was the gift to the Boston athenœum of the house lately occupied by the institution, - an estate which was valued at 18,000 dollars. He also in his will bequeathed 20,000 dollars to Harvard college. His fine portrait is preserved in the athenœum.

PERKINS, ELIPHAZ, Dr., died at Athens, Ohio, in 1828, aged 75. A native of Norwich, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1776. He removed to A. in 1800, and was an excellent physician and patron of learning. He was treasurer of the Ohio university. He died in the peace of the Christian faith, of which he had long been a professor. His descendants are numerous and respectable. - Hildreth's Biog. Memoirs.

PERKINS, ALFRED ELIJAH, M. D., died in Norwich, Conn., in 1834, aged about 24. Born in Norwich, he graduated at Yale in 1830. He left 10,000 dollars to the library of Yale; 3,000 to the home missionary society; 1,000 to the colonization society; and 500 to Sabbath schools. PERKINS, NATHAN, D. D., died at West

Hartford, Conn., Jan. 18, 1838, aged 88, in the cians and surgeons, and thirty clergymen. Yet 66th year of his ministry at West Hartford. He was His 1 100 affa his 1100 gre triu had

for

nec

If s

rep

was

at 1

tin

yea

der

dete emp be succ revi the to n tere Dan 94. elcc

Wo

Mill

G. V

a fas

of I fiftie grat geli Rec P chui Mar Nat was

was resp che He Mo P age F Ohi Non was You

was born in Norwich May 12, 1749; was graduated | settled in Warren in 1801. His services were at Princeton in 1770; and ordained in 1772, continning to perform his ministerial duties until two years before his death. Many theological students were under his care. His wife, Catharine, was a daughter of Rev. T. Pitkin of Farmington. His predecessor was N. Hooker, who died ln 1772, aged only 32.

Dr. P. had a good inheritance, and a salary of 100 pounds; macer his own management his affairs went on well, but, intrusting them to another, he was impoverished. He died under his own mortgaged roof. He resolved, if he died poor, he would die a generous man. He had great influence with his people; his kindness triumphed over opposers. It has been said he had family pride, an aspiring spirit, an emulation for influence; that he wished everything connected with him to be rich, elegant, accomplished. If so, his final poverty may have been a useful reproof and admonition. Yet his urbanity, his determination to be a perfect gentleman, an exemplary Christian, a winning minister, are not to be ascribed to pride and ambition. He was a successful minister; he spoke of six extensive revivals among his people. In early life he spent the whole of Saturday in committing his sermons to memory. Dr. Sprague has published an interesting letter concerning him, written by Rev. Daniel Waldo, now chaplain in congress, aged 94. He published a volume of sermons, 1795; election sermon, 1808; at the ordination of S. Wolcott, 1786; of H. N. Woodruff, 1790; of W. F. Miller, 1702; C. Chapin, 1794; J. Brace, 1807; E. G. Welles, 1808; E. Mason and N. Perkins, 1810; a fast sermon, 1812; at the funeral of T. Pitkin, of N. Strong; account of a great revival; on his fiftieth anniversar; on his sixtieth; letters of gratitude; many pinces in the Connecticut evangelical magazine. - Sprague's Annals; Puritan Recorder, Oct. 25, 11 55.

PERKINS, NATH IN, minister of the second church in Amherst, Mass., died of the evoup in March, 1842, aged 35. The son of Ber. Dr. Nathan P., he graduated at Yale in 1793, and was for some years a magistrate and farmer. He was ordained Oct. 10, 1810. He was a man of respectable talents, prudent, kind, affectionate, cheerful, a persuasive preacher, and good pastor. He published a sermon at the ordination of E. Moody, 1818; on the death of Dr. S. Coleman.

- Sprague's Annals.

PERKINS, ABRAHAM, died in Ipswich in 1842,

aged 96, a soldier of the Revolution.

PERKINS, SIMON, general, died in Warren, Ohio, Nov. 19, 1844, aged 73. He was born in Norwich, Conn. At the age of twenty-four he was employed in the survey of new lands in New | York; afterwards in the western reserve. He spector of customs at Norwich. Others of his important in the war of 1812; bis skill as a financier caused him to be appointed a commissioner of the canal fund.

PERKINS, Cynus, M. D., died at Rossville, Staten Island, April 23, 1849, aged 70; a distingnished physician and surgeon. He was a native of Bridgewater; a graduate of Dartmouth in 1800; professor of anatomy and surgery at Dartmouth from 1810 to 1819; and afterwards a resident in New York. He was a physician of great skill, an excellent medical teacher, a man of kind and generous feelings, enjoying the confidence and attachment of his friends and ac-He married Mary, daughter of quaintances. I'rof. J. Smith, who survived him. He published an eulogy on W. H. Woodward, Hanover, 1818.

PERKINS, JAMES II., a literary man, died at Cincinnati in 1849, aged 39. He was the son of Samuel G. Perkins of Boston, the nephew of Thomas H. P. He was educated as a merchant and also studied law; but at last devoted himself wholly to literature. Settling at Cincinnati, he edited various papers, and wrote many articles for the North American Review. He was president of a historical society in 1844, and wrote annals of the west. He engaged also in various projects of reform and charity. In a state of depression he threw himself into the Ohio, and was drowned. - Cyclopedia of American Literature.

PERKINS, JACOB, an inventor, died in London July 30, 1849, aged 83. Born in Newburyport July 9, 1766, he early displayed a mechanical genius. At the age of fifteen his master, a goldsmith, died; but he carried on the business. Gold beads, worn by the old and young, he made in the best style, as well as plated shoe-buckles. He made dies at twenty-one for the mint; at twenty-four he invented the nail-machine for cutting and heading nails at once. He invented steel plates for bank-notes, which, as was supposed, could not be counterfeited. The misconduct of men, with whom he was associated in business, left him overwhelmed with debt. For several years he lived in England.

PERKINS, ERASTUS, died at Norwich city, Oct. 18, 1853, aged 101 years and 8 months. He descended from Jabez, who, with his brother Joseph, came from Ipswich in 1695, and purchased eight hundred acres in Lisbon for 70 pounds, near the junction of Quinebourg and Shetucket rivers. The descendants of Jabez were: Jabez, born June 3, 1699; next, Jabez, born 1728, married Aune Lathrop; this last was the father of Erastus, who was born Feb. 17, 1752. He was a soldier; and he was engaged in commercial business. For many years he was the in-

Athens. orwich, He ret physireasurer peace of been a ous and neg-

, and ainst

from seller

ed in

unted

e ser-

everal

e and

l hon-

in respect-

to the

com-

was a

el and many

elieved

sicking

arvard

lied at

s born

mes P.

nise of mingo:

in that usiness

P., and

rthwest

ughter

an up-

berality

of the n,—an s. He te Har-

rved in

died in Born 30. He ; 3,000 to the schools. t West 8, in the rd. He name reached a great age. Dr. Joseph Perkins died at N. in 1794, aged 90.

PERKINS, THOMAS HANDASYD, colonel, died in Brookline in Jan., 1854, aged 89, being born in Boston in King, now State street, Dec. 15, 1764. As a merchant he acquired a fortime of 2,000,000 dollars. He had an early partnership in business with his brother James, in the trade of the northwest coast, Canton, and Culcutta. He was a man of public spirit and great liberality; several splendid charitable institutions were founded by his munificence. The Perkins blind asylum, the mercantile library association, and the Boston atheneum shared largely in his bounty. In 1842 he made a speech in laying the corner-stone of the merchant's exchange. company of the blind pupils of the asylum attended his funeral. - Life, by T. G. Cary.

PERKINS, GEORGE WILLIAM, died at Chicago Nov. 15, 1850, aged about 52. He graduated at Yale in 1824; was minister of Meriden, Conn., many years, and had but recently gone to Chicago. He was a preacher of distinction; his zeal against slavery never grew cold.

PERLEY, SAMUEL, minister of Moultonborough, N. II., died in 1831, aged 89. Born in Ipswich, he graduated at Harvard in 1763; was minister of Scabrock, N. II., from 1765 to 1775; and was settled at M. in 1778, and at length dismissed .- Sprague's Annals.

PERLEY, HUMPHREY CLARK, minister of Methuen, Mass., died in 1838, aged 70. Born in Boxford, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1791; was settled from 1795 to 1815; then in Beverly, second church, from 1818 to 1821.

PERREIN, JEAN, eminent for his acquaintance with natural history, died at New York in 1805, aged 54. He was a native of France, and a member of the society of sciences and belles lettres of Bordeaux. With a view to the acquisition and diffusion of knowledge in botany and other departments of natural history, he travelled through Africa and most of the West India islands. To complete his collection of birds, plants, etc., he came to New York, where he spent several months; but he was cut down in the midst of his labors. In Sonninni's edition of Buffon's natural history, credit is given to Perrein as the author of many of the most valuable communications contained in that work.

PERRINE, MATTHEW LA RUE, D. D., professor of ecclesiastical history at Auburn, N. Y., died Feb. 12, 1836, aged 59. Born in Monmouth, N. J., he graduated at Princeton in 1797, and settled as the pastor of Battle Hill in 1802. In 1811 he became the first pastor of Spring street church, N. Y. He died in peace and hope. In his various relations in life he was wise and faithful.

PERRY, JOSHUA, minister in Hamden, Conn., died in Burlington in 1812, aged about 57. He graduated at Yale in 1775

PERRY, DAVID, minister of Richmond, Mass., died in 1817, aged 70. Horn in Huntington, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1772, and was minister of Harwinton, Conn., from 1774 to 1784, and installed at Richmond in 1784. - Sprague's Annals.

PERRY, OLIVER HAZARD, a naval commander, died Aug. 23, 1820, aged 35. He was born at Kingston, near Newport, R. I., in Aug., 1785; he was the sen of Christopher R. P., a naval patriot of the Revolution, and collector of Newport, who died in May, 1818; and grandson of Judge Freeman P., who died in Oct., 1813, aged 82. His earliest ancestor in America was Edmund P., a Quaker. Having served as a midshipman in the Mediterranean, he was in 1812 advanced to be master-commandant. In 1813 he was appointed to the command of the squadron on Lake Erie. Sent. 10. he achieved a complete victory over the enemy under Com. Barclay, after an action of three hours, capturing the whole squadron. In 1815 he proceeded to the Mediterranean in command of the Java; in June, 1819, he proceeded to the West Indies in the ship John Adams. He died of the yellow fever at Port Spain, Trinidad. His wife was a daughter of Dr. Mason, and niece of Christopher Champlin of Newport; he left four sons and one daughter. He once unhappily was engaged in a duel. Under a sense of a supposed injury, he personally assaulted Capt. Heath of the marines on board of his ship. A court martial censured both. Capt. H. however challenged him, and a duel was fought on the Jersey shore in Oct., 1818, though Perry refused to fire. The contemptible code of honor must explain how the opportunity of shooting off a pistol at Perry could soothe into quietness the irritated feelings of the captain of marines. Had the commodore refused thus to stand as a mark to be fired at, instead of violating the laws of his country, he would have been honored for a manly courage, which restrained him from doing wrong. Our rulers, whose business it is to execute the laws of the people, ought to have struck both their names from the rolls of the navy. PERRY, BAXTER, minister of Lyme, N. H., died in 1829, aged 37. PERRY, Joseph, minister in New Haven, Conn., died in 1829, aged 50.

P Mar died the grad mini thro Win her ! swee P Mass

P Plair 12 N.Y at fl and l'1

Perr

with a tre ers o Islan was I cus 1 Hist. Pl > brook Corn

> civil

wick, settle ried Wint and plain was sister P., a in 16 Sayb age, Bein

Pl dict. Fow Trini degr cense in th Meet confo muin with the c discla

been

he sa

PERRY, Jos. M. S., missionary to Ceylon, died | dsor. March 10, 1837, aged 30, of the cholera 1 his wife burn, died of the same disorder, March 13. He was 1755 the son of Rev. Mr. Perry, of Sharon, Conn., rards, graduated at Yale in 1827, and was settled in the ministry at Mendon. His wife, Harriet J. Laon on oker, throp, a native of Norwich, was the sister of Mrs. uals. Winslow and Mrs. Cherry, missionaries. Among Jonn., her last utterances were the words, " Sweet peace! . He sweet pence!"

PERRY, ALFRED, M. D., died at Stockbridge, Mass., in 1838, aged 57. The son of Rev. David Perry, he graduated at Williams college in 1803. PERRY, JAMES, a Methodist minister, died at Plainfield, Vt., in 1840, aged 82.

PERRY, ELNATHAN, captain, died at Rush, N.Y., June, 1849, aged 90. He entered the army at fifteen, and fought at Bennington, Saratoga, and Entaw.

PESSACUS, a Narragansett sagamore, who, with other sagamores and a Niantick deputy, made a treaty in 1645, at Boston, with the commissioners of the four colonies of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Haven. Punnnash was another of the seven Indian signers. Pessacus was the successor of Miantannoma. — Fell's

Hist. of New England.

PETERS, THOMAS, the first minister of Saybrook, the brother of Hugh P., was a minister in Cornwall, England, who was driven away in the civil wars, and came to this country with Fenwick, arriving at New Haven in July, 1639, and settled at Saybrook about 1641. Winthrop married his niece, a daughter of Hugh Peters. Gov. Winthrop, of Mass., speaks of his own brother and sister Peters. This perhaps is to be explained by supposing, as the wife of Thos. Peters was in America, that she was Gov. Winthrop's sister. Samuel Peters descended from William P., a brother of Thomas, who settled near Boston in 1634. A letter of T. P., written at Pequot, or Saybrook, to Gov. W., is published by Mr. Savage, dated 1645. Of his death there is no note. Being invited to return to his people in England, he sailed from Boston in Dec., 1646.

PETERS, Hugh, minister of Salem, Mass., itcl Oct. 16, 1660, aged 61. He was born at Fowey in Cornwall, in 1599, and was educated at Trinity college, Cambridge, where he took the degree of master of arts in 1622. He was licensed by the Bishop of London, and preached in the city with great popularity and success. Meeting with some trouble on account of his non-conformity, he went into Holland, where he remained five or six years. He arrived in America with Richard Mather in Aug., 1635. He took the charge of the church in Salem, Dec. 21, 1636, disclaiming the errors of Mr. Williams, who had been minister before him, and excommunicating his adherents. During his five years' ministry, one hundred and sixty persons joined his communion. He did not confine his attention to religious concerns, but took an interest in merenntile and civil affairs. He assisted in reforming the police of the town; he suggested the plan of the fishery, and of the coasting and foreign voyages; he procured carpenters, and engaged in trade with great success. His zeal in worldly concerns was probably the cause of his suppressing in Salem the weekly and occasional lectures, by which the good men of that day were nourished up unto eternul life. Being considered as a suitable person to send to England to procure an alteration in the laws of excise and trade, he was appointed for this purpose, with Mr. Welde and Mr. Hibbins, by the general court, and sailed Aug. 3, 1641. He never returned to America. During the civil wars in England he supported the cause of the parliament, and contributed much aid to it by his preaching. Burnet says that he pressed the king's condemnation with the rudeness of an inquisitor; but Mr. Peters in his legacy declares that he opposed it. He was appointed by Cromwell one of the licensers of ministers, and also a commissioner for amending the laws, though utterly disqualified for the business. After the restoration, he was tried for conspiring with Cromwell and compassing the king's death, and was executed. His wife was the widow of Colonel Read : her daughter married John Winthrop of Conn. His own daughter, Elizabeth, was baptized in 1640. She married a Mr. Burker; and was a widow, and living at Deptford, England, in 1709. For her he wrote his legacy in 1660. He was charged by his encmies with great vices; but it is not probable that the charges were well founded. He was, however, weak, ignorant, and carried away by his zeal. If he had confined himself to the proper duties of a minister of the gospel, and had not engaged in parties, nor become the tool of the ambitious, nor exerted himself to stimulate the furious passions of men, he would have been useful and respected, and might have died in peace. Though he was ignorant, he possessed a native and peculiar viger. He had the power of associating his thoughts in such a manner, as to prevent them from being easily forgotten. His coarse and familiar images never failed to answer his purposes, and his vulgar yet striking eloquence gained him thousands of hearers in London. Specimens of his curious sermons are to be found in the trials of the regicides. In an engraving prefixed he is placed in the pulpit with a multitude before him; his hour glass is turned, and he says, "Come, my good fellows, I know you like another glass." His verses for his daughter were entitled "my wishes." One stanza is this:

ague's ander, orn at

Mass.,

igton,

d was 1784.

orn at 1785; mayal 'Newson of 3, aged as Eda mida 1812 1 1813 squad-

a combarclay, e whole leditere, 1819, ip John at Port of Dr. plin of ughter. Under ally asoard of Capt. nel was though code of f shootquiettain of thus to ve been ned him

siness it
to have
he navy.
N. H.

f violat-

Haven,

13 I wish you neither poverty, nor riches, But godliness, so gainful, with content; No paluted pomp, nor glory that bewitches; A blancies life is the best monument ! And such a soul, that sours above the sky Well pleas'd to live, but better pleas'd to die."

The "rules" which he sent to his daughter from prison were these :

be Divine, awful, godly.
" Little, honest, true. " Let thy Thoughts Talk " Profitable, holy, charitable. Words Manner (irave, courteous, cheerful. Diet Temperate, convenient, frugal. 44 Auparel Sober, neat, come'y. Will " Constant, obedient, ready. 11 Moderate, quiet, seasonable Bleep " Short, devout, often, fervent. Prayers Lawful, brief, seldom Recreation Memory " Of death, punishment, glory."

He published a sermon before both houses of parliament in 1640; last report of the English wars; a word to the army, 1047; good work for a good magistrate, or short way to great quiet, 1651 (in this work he proposed the extirpation of the whole system of laws, and recommended that the old records in the tower should be burned as records of tyrainy, and that they should begin anew); brief aen den Vader la Chaize; a dying father's legacy to his only child, 8vo., 1600 and 1717. This has been spoken of with respect. It is preserved in the New England library established by Mr. Prince of Boston. - Young's Life of Peters; Sprayue's Annals; Cycl. Amer. Lit.

PETERS, ANDREW, first minister of Middleton, Mass., died in 1756, aged 55. Born in Audover, he graduated at Harvard in 1723, and was settled in 1729. His successor was E. Smith.

PETERS, John, died in Adams, Mass., Sept. 10, 1807, aged 107, retaining to the last all his

PETERS, SAMUEL A., LL. D., an Episcopal minister, died at New York, April 19, 1826, aged 90, and was buried at Hebron. He was born at Hebron, Conn., Dec. 12, 1735; graduated at Yale college in 1757; took the charge of the churches at Hartford and Hebron in 1762, but, being a Tory, he in 1774 went to England, where he resided till 1805, when he returned to this country. In 1817 and 1818 he made a journey to the West as far as the Falls of St. Anthony, claiming a large territory under Carver. He published a history of Connecticut, 8vo., 1781. It is embarrassed in its authority by a number of fables. Rev. Dr. Bacon, in his historical discourses, calls it "that most unscrupulous and malicious of lying narratives, Peters' history of Connecticut."-Cycl. Amer. Lit.

PETERS, RICHARD, judge of the district court of the United States, died Aug. 21, 1828, aged 84. He was born at Philadelphia in June, 1744, the son, as I suppose, of Richard Peters, D. D., an Episcopal minister, who died in 1775. He en-

Congress appointed him, June 13, 1776, secretary of the board of war. On resigning that post he was appointed in December, 1781, a member of congress; and, in 1780, judge of the district court, in which office he continued thirty-six years, till his death at Blockley, near Philadelphia. Of the admiralty law of the United States he may be deemed the founder. Ills decisions are preserved in l'eters' reports. He was a practical farmer. In 1797 he published a pamphlet on the use of gypsum, which introduced the culture of clover, and effected a beneficial change in husbandry. His various communications appeared in the memoirs of the Philadelphia agricultural society.

PETERS, John F., judge of the supreme court of Connecticut, died at Hartford in 1834, aged 60.

PETERS, Absalom, general, died in New York, March 20, 1840, uged 86. Horn in Hebron, Conn., he descended from William of Boston, the brother of Hugh Peters. His great grandfather was John of Andover; his grandfather was John, his father Colonel John, both of Hebron. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1780. He settled as a farmer at Wentworth, N. Y. In the war he rendered services to his country, and he sustained various offices. His first wife was Mary Rogers, a descendant of John Rogers the martyr. After his second marriage, in 1821, to the widow of Rev. John Gurley, he removed to Lebanon, Conn., and lived near his paternal home. He died at the house of his son, John R. P. Another son is Rev. Dr. Absalom Peters.

PETERS, SAMUEL A., judge, died at Colchester, Conn., Dec. 19, 1854, aged 85. He was one of the oldest lawyers in Conn., and a judge of New London county court.

PETERS, EDWARD D., a successful merchant of Boston, died suddenly of apoplexy at his house in Jamaica Plain, Oct. 20, 1856, aged 70. He was a native of Blue Hill, Me. ; a man respected for his integrity. He left four sons, active merchants in Boston.

PETERSON, SIMEON, a Freewill Baptist minister, died at Hermon, N. Y., in 1837, aged 40.

PETERSON, JOHN D., minister of a German Lutheran church, died in Upper Canada in 1848, aged 91. Born in Bremen, he was pastor at Harrisburg, Pa., from 1803 to 1819, when he became pastor of Markham and Vaughan in Upper Canada. He was faithful and zealous in his office until his labors were interrupted by infirmity.

PETTENGILL, Amos, died at Salem Bridge, Conn., Aug. 17, 1830. aged 50. Horn at Salem, N. H., he graduated at Cambridge in 1805. He was a minister for five years at Champlain, N. Y., till 1812, and was installed at Litchfield South Farms, Conu., in 1816. After an unquiet period tered successfully upon the practice of the law. of six years he removed to a more pleasant alux seve mini the ' ciety othe lishe rota 1820 and 1 at H Sim was tor c 1834 antiedite mini in 18 East antilectu 1811 eral ; Anne Pl died Yale

He d State Pheli Pl died 60. his m Whe PI chest

1828

temp

ΡÌ

gradi 1780 PI 1847 in 18 1819 PI Cana tion

pany Gene n ma gua, In t At L almo ter is in Si

abode, to Salem, Conn., now Naugatuck, for his seven last years. He was a respected and useful minister. A memoir of him, b, L. Hart, is among the volumes of Massachusetts Sabbath school society. He rendered service as a teacher and in other ways to the cause of education. He published a view of the heavens, for schools, 1826; a rotary celestial map; the spirit of Methodism, 1820; a sermon at the ordination of J. Johnson; and other discourses .- Sprague's Annals.

PHELPS, Amos A., minister in Boston, died at Roxbury, July 30, 1847, aged 42. Born in Simsbury, Conn., he graduated at Yale in 1826; was minister of Hopkinton two years; then pastor of Pine street church in Hoston from 1832 to 1834. Then he engaged in the service of the anti-slavery society, and was general agent, and edited the Emancipator; in 1839 he became the minister of the Marlborough chapel free church; in 1842 he was pastor of the Maverick church, East Boston, and afterwards secretary of the anti-slavery society at New York. He published lectures on slavery, 1834; book of the Sabbath. 1841; letters to Drs. Bacon and Stowe; and several pamphlets relating to slavery. - Sprague's Annals.

PHELPS, DUDLEY, minister of Groton, Mass., died Sept. 24, 1849, aged 51. He graduated at Yale in 1823, and was settled first at Haverhill in 1828; then at Groton in 1836. He published a temperance address at Haverhill, 1830.

PHELPS, John, judge, died April 14, 1849. He drafted the constitution of Vermont; which State he left, 1837, to assist his wife, Mrs. Lincoln Phelps, in conducting Patapsco female institution.

PHELPS, DAVENPORT, Episcopal minister, died at Geneva, N. Y., before 1816, aged about 60. His father was Alexander Phelps of Conn. ; his mother was the daughter of Rev. Dr. Eleazar Wheelock.

PHELPS, BENAIAH, first minister of Manchester, Conn., died in 1817, aged about 76. He graduated at Yale in 1761; was settled about 1780; and removed to Nova Scotia about 1795.

PHELPS, ELISIA, died at Simsbury, Conn., in 1847, aged 67. Born in S., he graduated at Yale in 1800, and was a member of congress from 1819 to 1821, and from 1825 to 1829.

PHELPS, OLIVER, died near Buffalo, in West Canada, May 4, 1851, aged 71, a man of distinction in western New York. He was born in 1779 in Simsbury, Conn., of a humble family. In company with Nathaniel Gorham he purchased the Genesee country in New York, and thus became a man of wealth. He lived much at Canandaigua, and also at St. Catharine's, in Canada West. In the Welland canal he was much interested. At Ludlowville he built the Presbyterian church almost at his own expense. His religious charac-

the church, a man of prayer, and who loved to meet with his fellow Christians. A few days before his death he visited the place of his birth; it was on his return that he died before he reached his home. In his memorandum book he made, near the place of his birth, this very interesting entry: "Here, on the top of this mountain, near my father's place, on the 19th of August, 1700, - on this same spot where I now stand, did God open my eyes to behold the glory of the Lamb. Fifty-one years last August here I bowed in prayer and praise to God for placking me as a brand from the burning. And here again, on this 23d of April, 1851, have I bowed the knee in prayer and praise, that his love and grace are still the same." Let our rich and great men ponder on these words. - Observer, Aug. 7, 1851.

PHELPS, ELIZABETH, died at Andover, Nov. 30, 1852, aged 36. She was daughter of Prof. Stuart and the wife of Prof. Phelps. She wrote an interesting book, entitled sunny-side, and much else which is instructive and useful.

PHELPS, Anson G., died in New York, Nov. 30, 1853, aged 74. A native of Canton, Conn., he resided in New York, a merchant and manufacturer. He was a member of the American board of missions, and was president of the New York colonization society, - a man of henevolence and piety. Of his property of two millions and a half of dollars, he left more than half a million to benevolent purposes: besides other bequests to twenty-two grandchildren, he gave to each 5,000 dollars, the interest of which to be annually devoted to religious charity. The asylum for the blind shared his bounty.

PHELPS, SAMUEL S., judge, died in Middlebury, Vt., March 25, 1855, aged 61. Born in Litchfield, a graduate of Yale in 1811, he for a while served in the army, then settled as a lawyer in M. He was a judge of the supreme court, and a senator of the United States from 1839

PHILBRICK, ABIGAIL, Mrs., died at Deerfield, N. II., May 22, 1841, aged 103.

PHILIP, sachem of Pokanoket, well known by the name of King Philip, died Aug. 12, 1676. He was the youngest son of Massassoit, and succeeded his brother Alexander in 1657. In 1662 he renewed the friendship which had subsisted with the English, and engaged not to dispose of any lands without their knowledge or appointment. In 1675 he commenced the war which desolated New England. It is said that he was pressed into the war by the importunity of his young warriors. As he foresaw the loss of his territory and the extinction of his tribe, if the English settlements were permitted to extend and increase without interruption, he was determined to make one mighty effort to prevent these calamiter is highly commended. He was a member of ties. He in consequence lighted up the flame of

. Of may e preictical on the ire of hus-

etary

st he er of istrict

years,

altural preme 1834,

New

n He-eared

f Bosgreat grandoth of 1780. Y. In ry, and ife was ers the 821, to wed to I home.

olchesras one udge of erchant is house

R. P.

0. He spected ve merist mined 40. German in 1848, at Harbecame er Cantlice un-

Bridge, t Salem,)5. He n, N. Y., d South et period pleasant war in various parts of the country. The first | don, in 1686, who then visited B., as very thrivattack was made Sunday, June 20. After doing much mischief, as he was endeavoring to escape from Captain Church, who had pursued him into a swamp, he was killed. The name of the Indian soldier who killed him was Alderman. By Church's order, Philip was beheaded and quartered! Thus, after deeds of heroism, fell King Philip of Mount Hope in Rhode Island. Mr. Eliot once preached before him, when he took hold of a button of the good man's coat, and said to him, "I do not value the gospel any more than that." - Drake's Ind. Biog. ; Baylies.

PHILLIPS, George, first minister of Watertown, Mass., died July 1, 1644. He was born in the county of Norfolk, England, and was educated at the university of Cambridge, where he gained a high reputation for learning. Having, as he believed, been made a partaker of the Divine nature through the renewing agency of the Holy Spirit, he devoted himself to the ministry of the gospel, and was settled at Boxford in Essex. But, becoming a nonconformist to the ceremonies of the established church, he came to New England with Governor Winthrop in the Arabella, and arrived at Salem in June, 1630. He immediately. with Sir Richard Saltonstall and others, commenced a plantation at Watertown. A church was formed July 30th, when about forty members signed a covenant, binding themselves to cleave unto the word of God, and "the true sense and meaning thereof." A confession of faith was afterwards added. The salary settled upon the minister was 30 pounds a year. He was succeeded by Mr. Sherman. He was much lamented by his church, who expressed their respect to his memory by educating his eldest son, Samuel Phillips, who was afterwards minister of Rowley, and eminently useful.

Mr. Phillips was well skilled in the original languages in which the bible was written, and such was his attachment to the word of God, that he used to read it through six times in every year, and he always found in it something new. As a preacher he was very faithful, and many were converted by means of his labors. Though very humble and modest, he was an able disputant. He published a judicious work, entitled, a reply to a confutation of some grounds for infants' baptism, as also concerning the form of a church, put forth against me by one Thomas Lamb; to which is added, a discourse of the verity and validity of infants' baptism, 1645. - Mather's Magnalia, III. 82-84, 162.

PHILLIPS, WILLIAM, major, lived in Saco, Maine, in 1659; his house was assaulted by the Indians Sept. 18, 1675, and afterwards burnt by

PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, an early bookseller in ing, as "young and witty, and the most beautiful man in the town of Boston."

10

174

seri

Chr

in o

seri

the

ndvi

you

peo

cide

acad

cedi

grad

for s

Han

Sam

ende

inco

to tl

calle

the s

a fu

acad

third

parti

this

ton,

Geog

of \ddot{T}

erno

50.

ter o

the c

Aug

uated

mem

of tl

wher

Mass

a m

from

the

held

indu

gove

31,

1820

and

and fello

prid

neve

publ

freq

ing

hou

pion

PI

P

PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, son of Rev. George P. was the minister of Rowley, Mass., and died April 22, 1696, aged 71. He was born in Boxford, England, in 1625, and graduated at Harvard in 1690, being educated at the expense of the church of Watertown; an honorable testimony of their gratitude to his father. He was settled as the colleague of Mr. Rogers. His widow, Sarah, daughter of Samuel Appleton of Ipswich, died in 1713, aged 86. His son, Samuel, a goldsmith of Salem, married Mary, daughter of Rev. John Emerson of Gloucester, and was the father of Rev. Samuel Phillips of Andover.

PHILLIPS, JOHN, colonel, of Charlestown, died March 20, 1725, aged 93. He was judge of admiralty, and treasurer of the province.

PHILLIPS, GEORGE, minister of Brookhaven, L. I., died in 1739, aged 75. The son of Rev. Samuel P. of Rowley, he graduated at Harvard in 1686, and preached a few years at Jamaica, L. I., before he was settled at B., in 1702. Though a good man, it is thought that he was too much addicted to facetiousness and wit.

PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, minister of Andover, Mass., died June 5, 1771, aged 81. He was the grandson of Samuel P., minister of Rowley, and the son of Samuel P., a goldsmith of Salem. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1708; began to preach in the south and new parish of Andover April 30, 1710; and was ordained Oct. 17th. He continued faithfully to discharge the duties of the sacred office for sixty years till his death. Being sincerely attached to those views of religious truth which were embraced by the first fathers of New England, he could not quietly see the efforts that were made to pervert the faith, which he was persuaded was once delivered to the saints. He exerted himself both by his preaching and his writings to guard his people against the intrusion of error. He contended that all mankind come into the world depraved in consequence of Adam's sin, and liable to punishment; that men could as easily create themselves anew, as believe in Christ by a power inherent in themselves; that God from eternity had elected those whom he would save, and on whom he would bestow his efficacious grace to prepare them for salvation; that men were justified on account of the righteousness of Christ, received by faith, and immediately upon believing; and that none, who were once in a state of justification, would finally be lost. He published elegy on Noyes and Corwin; a word in season, or the duty of a people to take the oath of allegiance to a glorious God, 1727; advice to a child, 1729; the history of the Saviour; the orthodox Christian, or Boston, was spoken of by John Dunton of Lon- a child well instructed, 1738; a minister's address hrivıtiful e P.

died Box-Ilarse of testiwas His

on of mucl, gliter l was er.

town, judge aven. Rev.

ovard naica. hough much dover, s the y, and ı. IIe began adover h. 11c of the Being ligious fathers ee the

, which to the rcaclıagainst hat all cousenment : s ancw,

i themd those uld beem for ount of y faith,

t none, , would Noyes ity of a a glori-

the histian, or address 1741; living water to be had for asking; election sermon, 1750; the sinner's refusal to come unto Christ reproved; the necessity of God's drawing in order to men's coming unto Christ; convention sermon, 1753; at the ordination of N. Holt; at the instalment of S. Chandler, 1759; seasonable advice to a young neighbor, 1761; address to young people, in a dialogue; a sermon to young people, 1763; on justification, 1766; sin of suicide contrary to nature, 1767.

PHILLIPS, JOHN, LL. D., founder of the academy in Exeter, N. H., the son of the preceding, died in April, 1795, aged 76. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1785. He was for several years a member of the council of New Hampshire. April 21, 1778, he with his brother, Samuel Phillips of Andover, founded and liberally endowed the academy in that town, which was incorporated in 1780. In 1789 he further gave to this institution 20,000 dollars. The academy, ealled Phillips' Exeter academy, of which he was the sole founder, was incorporated in 1781 with a fund of 15,000 pounds. He bequeathed to this academy two-thirds of all his estate, and onethird of the residue to the seminary at Andover, particularly for the benefit of pious youth. To this object his brother, William Phillips of Boston, also bequeathed 4,000 dollars. - Morse's Geog.; Holmes' Annals, II. 404; Constitution of Theo. Sem.

PHILLIPS, SAMUEL, LL. D., lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, died Feb. 10, 1802, aged 50. He was the grandson of Samuel P., minister of Andover. His father, Samuel P., one of the councillors of Massachusetts, died at Andover Aug. 21, 1790, aged 76. Mr. Phillips was graduated at Harvard college in 1771. He was a member of the provincial congress in 1775, and of the house of representatives till the year 1780, when he assisted in framing the constitution of Massachusetts. On its adoption he was elected a member of the senate, and was its president from 1785 to 1801. Being appointed justice of the court of common pleas for Essex in 1781, he held this office till 1797, when his declining health induced his resignation. He was chosen lieut .governor in 1801. His widow, Phobe, died Oct. 31, 1812, aged 69. His son, John, died in Sept., 1820. While he possessed a sound judgment and an ardent, persevering spirit, his integrity and patriotism gained him the confidence of his fellow-citizens. Such was his superiority to the pride of wealth and of power, and such his benevolence and humility, that, when honored with public applause and raised to eminence, he would frequently spend the interval between the morning and evening services of the Sabbath in the house of God for the purpose of reading some te his people, 1739; artillery election sermon, prevented them from returning home. He was careful to impart religious instruction to his family, and he led its daily devotions with humility, fervor, and eloquence. He appeared to be continually governed by love to the Supreme Being, and by the desire of imitating his benevolence and doing good. His deep views of evangelical doctrine and duty, of human depravity and mediatorial mercy, formed his heart to humility, condescension, and kindness, and led him continually to depend on the grace of God through the atonement of his Son. He projected the academy at Andover, and was much concerned in establishing that as well as the academy at Exeter, which were founded by his father and uncle. To these institutions he was a distinguished benefactor. His exertions to effect their establishment bring him the highest honor, for he was the natural heir of the founders. He bequeathed 1000 dollars, one sixth part of the interest of which he directed annually to be added to the principal, and the remainder to be expended in the purchase of bibles, and other books, to be distributed among poor and pious Christians in other towns, and also among the inhabitants of places where the means of religious knowledge are very sparingly enjoyed. After his death, his widow, Phoebe Phillips, and his son, John Phillips of Andover, evinced the same attachment to the interests of learning and religion by uniting with Samuel Abbot, and three others of a most liberal and benevolent spirit, in founding the theological seminary in Andover, which was opened in September, 1818. On their part they engaged to erect two separate buildings for the accommodation of fifty students, and for public rooms. By such acts of most honorable munificence has the family, which bears the name of Phillips, proved to the world that the blessing of wealth may fall into hands which shall employ it for the best of purposes. - Tappan's Fun. Ser.

PHILLIPS, WILLIAM, lieutenant-governor of Massachusetts, the grandson of Rev. Samuel P. of Andover, died May 26, 1817, aged 77. He was the son of Deacon William P., a merchant of Boston, a patriot of the Revolution, and a benefactor of Andover academy by the bequest of 5000 dollars, who died Jan. 15, 1804, aged 81; his mother was Abigail, the daughter of Edward Bromfield. He was born April 10, 1750, being an only son. His feeble health prevented his receiving a public education. He engaged in mercantile pursuits with his father, on whose death a large fortune came into his hands. In 1772 he made a profession of religion; in 1794 he was chosen a deacon of the old south church, and he officiated until his death. For several years, while Strong and Brooks were governors, he was the lientenant-governor of the State. pieus book to those whose distant habitations His wife, Miriam, the daughter of Jonathan about half a million of dollars. Abigail Bromfield married Rev. E. Burgess of Dedham. His daughter, Miriam, the wife of Samuel II. Walley, died March 26, 1827; his son, Dea. Edward P., died Nov. 3, 1826. Deacon Phillips was an active member of many charitable societies. During the last three weeks of his life he contributed 5,000 dollars to various objects. For a series of years his charities had been from 8 to 11,000 dollars annually. Many widows and fatherless children were by him rescued from want. He bequeathed to Phillips academy 15,000 dollars; to the theological institution at Andover, 10,000 dollars; to the society for propagating the gospel among the Indians, the Massachusetts bible society, the foreign mission board, the Congregational society, the education society, and the Massachusetts general hospital, each 5,000 dollars; to the medical dispensary, 3,000 dollars; to the female asylum, and the asylum for boys, each 2,000 dollars; in all, 62,000 dollars.

PHILLIPS, John, the first mayor of Boston, died May 29, 1823, aged 52. He was the son of William P., a merchant of Boston, who died in 1772, and grandson of Col. John P., also a merchant in Boston, and brother of Rev. Samuel P. of Andover; and was born Nov. 26, 1770. His mother, Margaret, a daughter of Col. Jacob Wendell, took the charge of his early education. After graduating at Harvard college in 1788, he studied law and settled in Boston. He was a member of the senate nineteen years, during the last ten of which he was the president. In 1809 he was appointed a judge of the common pleas. When the city government was established in 1822, he was elected the first mayor, in which office his course was conciliatory and judicious. For nine years he was one of the corporation of the college. He died suddenly of an affection of the heart. He had presided in the senate the preceding day. His wife was Sally, the daughter of Thomas Walley. Five sons and three daughters survived him. He was a man of sound judgment, of simple manners, of pure character, and of religion.

PHILLIPS, ALONZO, died at Newburyport in April 1838, aged 50. A graduate of Middlebury in 1815, he was sixteen years from 1820 the minister of Princeton, Mass.; faithful and successful. An extract from Dinmick's funeral sermon is in Boston Recorder, May 11.

PHILLIPS, TIMOTHY, captain, a soldier of the Revolution, died at Bradford, Mass., in 1840, aged 82.

PHILLIPS, JAMES, died in Chenango county, New York, in 1841, aged 90. At the age of 88 he made a profession of religion at Greenville.

PHINNEY, ELIAS, died at Lexington in July, seized by a malignant fever, he died of it. Ha

Mason, died May 7, 1823, aged 69. He had seven children; Jonathan of Boston inherited about half a million of dollars. Abigail Bromfield married Rev. E. Burgess of Dedham. His daughter, Miriam, the wife of Samuel II. Walley, died March 26, 1827; his son, Dea. Edward P., PHINNEY, Sturgis, M. D., died in 1841.

wa

W

110

sta

pri

the

hie

Ne

age

and

dic

Ne

a c

Phi

ver

sor

Per

the

He

in I

Lor

sur

tool

rose

heer

intr

He

Jud

thor

For

mor

lanc

wife

dau

ker

digi

olin

of th

80.

Ind

at t

pari

Sou

of C

mili

the

wou

to s

of o

trea

Pen

P

1

1

PHINNEY, STURGIS, M. D., died in 1841. He removed from New Bedford to New York in 1825.

PHIPS, WILLIAM, first minister of Douglass, Mass., died in Oxford in 1798, aged about 72. Born in Sherborn; he graduated at Harvard in 1746; was settled at D. the next year; and resigned in 1765. He was succeeded by I. Stone. He published a sermon on the death of J. Campbell, 1761.

PHIPPS, JAMES, came from Bristol, England, and settled near Pemaquid, Bristol, Me., before 1649. He had reason to be satisfied with the number of his children, as he had twenty-six by the same wife, twenty-one of them sons.—

Farmer.

PHIPPS, SIR WILLIAM, governor of Massachusetts, died in 1695, aged 44. He was born at Pemaquid, now Bristol, Maine, Feb. 2, 1651. His father, James P., was a gunsmith in humble circumstances, and his mother had twenty-six children, of whom twenty-one were sons. After living in the wilderness till he was eighteen years of age, he bound himself as an apprentice to a ship-carpenter for four years, at the expiratien of which time he went to Boston, where he learned to read and write. Determining to seek his fortune upon the sea, after a variety of adventures he discovered a Spanish wreck on the coast of Hispaniola, and fished up plate, and pearls, and jewels, amounting in value to 300,-000 pounds sterling, with which he sailed to England in 1687. Such was his honesty, and so liberal was he to his seamen, that his own share amounted only to 16,000 pounds. He was at this time made a knight by King James. Returning to Boston, he was in 1690 admitted a member of the north church, being baptized and professing repentance of his sins. In the same year he commanded an expedition against Port Royal, which place he captured. When the new charter of Massachusetts was obtained, he was nominated by Dr. Mather as the governor. In this eapacity he arrived at Boston May 14, 1692. He soon put a stop to prosecutions for witchcraft. In August he sailed with about four hundred and fifty men to Pemaquid, where he built a fort. In 1694, in a dispute with the collector of the port, Sir William was so far carried away by the passion of the mement as to have recourse to blows to settle the controversy. He was soon afterwards removed, and he sailed in November for England, where he received assurances of being restored; but, being

was succeeded by the Earl of Bellamont. Sir | disinterested patriot, and a skilful and brave sol-William, though his origin was very humble, was not elated by the great change in his circumstances. He was a man of uncommon enterprise and industry, of an excellent disposition, though he did not always retain the command of himself, and of perfect honesty and integrity. He exerted himself to promote the interests of New England. - Magnalia, II. 37-75.

PHIPPS, DAVID, died at New Haven in 1825, aged 86. He was a patriot of the Revolution and an officer of the navy.

PHŒBUS, WILLIAM, a Methodist minister, died at New York in 1832, aged 77.

PHYL, Mr., a native of Switzerland, died in New Jersey in 1810, or Jan., 1811. He died in a cave in which he had lived twenty-six years.

PHYSICK, PHILIP SING, M. D., died at Philadelphia Dec. 15, 1837, aged 69. He was a very eminent physician and surgeon, and professor of anatomy and surgery in the university of Pennsylvania. His father, an Englishman, had the charge of the estates of the Penn family. He graduated at the university of Pennsylvania in 1785. In 1789 he studied with John Hunt in London, and in 1790 was appointed for one year surgeon to St. George's hospital. In 1792 he took his medical degree at Edinburgh. He soon rose to distinction in his profession. He has been called the father of American surgery. He introduced the use of blisters to cure gangrene. He performed the operation of lithotomy on Judge Marshall. His own disease was hydrothorax, which was attended with great agony. For years he had studied religion, and every morning read a portion of Scripture. Dr. Delancy was his friend and pastor. His beloved wife was Elizabeth Emlen, the gifted, talented daughter of one of the most distinguished Quaker preachers. His countenance, as exhibited by a lithograph in Williams' book, is one of great dignity and beauty. - Dr. Randolph's Memoir; Williams' Med. Biog.

PICKENS, ANDREW, governor of South Carolina in 1816, died at Pontotoc, Miss., in 1838.

PICKENS, ANDREW, major-general, a soldier of the Revolution, died Aug. 11, 1817, aged nearly 80. He commenced his military career in the Indian war with the Cherokees in 1760. In 1779 at the head of three hundred men he defeated a party of Royalists on the western frontier of South Carolina. For his bravery in the battle of Cowpens, when he commanded the Southern militia, he received a sword from congress. At the battle of Eutaw Springs he was severely wounded. In 1782 he compelled the Cherokees to sue for peace. After the war he was a member dier. He was also gentle, beneficent, and hospitable. From early life he was a professor of religion and an influential member of the church.

PICKER, NATHANDEL, minister of Scituate, Mass., died in 1723, aged 37. Born in Dorchester, he graduated at Harvard in 1703; was settled in 1707; and was succeeded by S. Bourne.

PICKERING, TIMOTHY, secretary of State of the United States, died at Salem, Mass., Jan. 29, 1829, aged 82. He was a descendant of John P., a earpenter, who came to New England in 1630, and died at Salem in 1657; was born at Salem, Mass., July 17, 1746, and graduated in 1763. As soon as he heard of the affair at Lexington, on the morning of April 19, 1775, being colonel of a regiment, he marched the same day with the Salem militia to Medford, in order to intercept the enemy; but was not in season to participate in the fight. In 1775 he was appointed judge of the court of common pleas for Essex, and of the maritime court for the district including Boston and Salem. In the fall of 1776 he took the command of the Essex regiment of seven hundred men, and performed duty under Washington in New Jersey. In 1777 he accepted the appointment of adjutant-general and marched with the army to Pennsylvania. He was by the side of Washington in the battle of Brandywine, Sept. 14; and he was present also in that of Germantown, Oct. 4th. Congress soon elected him a member of the board of war, with Gates and Mifflin. The arrangement of the staff department was also intrusted to him and Mifflin. In August, 1780, he succeeded Greene as quartermaster-general, and discharged most faithfully its arduous and complicated duties. From 1790 to 1794 he was employed in various negotiations with the Indian tribes, being also postmastergeneral from 1791 to 1791, when he was appointed secretary of war as the successor of Knox. In August, 1795, he had the temporary charge of the department of State on the resignation of Randolph, and in December received the appointment of secretary of State, which he held till May, 1800, when he was removed by President Adams, as he was an adherent of Hamilton in his opposition to the policy of the president. Being in debt for new lands, he plunged into the back woods of Pennsylvania, with his son and a few laborers, and cleared several acres and built a log but for his family. The liberality of some friends in Massachusetts, in purchasing his lands, enabled him to return to his native State, and to become the owner of a small farm in Essex. which he cultivated with his own hands. From 1803 to 1811 he was a senator of the United of congress. In 1802 he was a commissioner to States; from 1814 to 1817 he was also a repretreat with the Choetaws. He died at Tumassee, sentative in congress. In consequence of the Pendleton district, South Carolina. He was a activity of his life, he had little leisure for literary rk in glass, ıt 72. rd in id re-Stone. Camp-

llent

tural

m to

nced

1830.

1841.

gland, before th the six by ns. — Massa-

s born

, 1651. umble nty-six After ghteen rentice expirahere he to seck of adon the te, and o 300,iled to sty, and his own ls. He James. 90 ad-

n, being nis sins. expedihe capchusetts Mather rived at stop to ne sailed o Pemaa dispute ved, and vhere he ut, being it. He liam was moment

the con-

pursuits; yet the productions of his pen do him | Whitefield. Some pamphlets were published in great credit as a writer of elegance and vigor. In public life he was disinterested, faithful, and energetic. His morals were pure, and from early life he was a professor of religion. His feelings were strong, and some of his political controversies were vehement. He published a letter to Gov. Sullivan on the embargo, and addresses to the people, 1808; review of the correspondence between J. Adams and W. Cunningham, 1824.

PICKERING, HENRY, son of Col. Timothy P., died in New York in 1838, aged 57. He was a merchant in Salem, and acquired a moderate fortune, of which he made a liberal and benevolent use. But his losses of property induced him to remove to New York. He wrote poetry.

Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

PICKERING, JOHN, LL. D., died in Boston May 5, 1816, aged 69. He was a son of Timothy P., and graduated at Harvard in 1796. He began the study of law in Philadelphia, where his father lived as secretary of State; but soon accompanied W. Smith, minister to Lisbon, as his secretary. There he prosecuted his studies, especially in various languages, as he did also in London, when secretary to Rufus King. He returned in 1801, and lived at Salem. In 1829 he was appointed city solicitor in Boston, where he then lived. He was several years a State senator. There were few so eminent in scholarship as he; none so skilled in the modern and Indian languages. He was familiar with seven languages besides Greek and Latin, and well acquainted with four others, and explored with some care ten or fifteen others. His memoir is in historical collections, third series, vol. x., with a history of his writings, the principal of which are vocabulary of words peculiar to America, 1815; essay on the orthography of the Indian languages, in memoirs of American academy, 1820; Greek and English lexicon, 1826; Indian languages, in cyclopedia Amer.; revised statutes of Massachusetts, 1813; eulogy on Dr. Bowditch; lecture on the uncertainty of the law; on the pronunciation of the Greek, in memoirs of American academy: also articles in various reviews and magazines. He was tall, of commanding presence, yet benignant and courteous. With a small, wellformed mouth, he had a Roman nose, and a serene and ample forehead.

PICKERING, GEORGE, died in Waltham Dec. 8, 1846, aged 77, for fifty-seven years an itinerant Methodist minister.

PICKERING, THEOPHILUS, minister of Ipswich, Mass., Chebacco parish, died in 1747, aged 47. The son of John P. of Salem, he graduated at Harvard in 1719. In 1725 he was invited to assist Mr. Wise; in 1727 he was ordained. In 1747 J. Cleaveland was settled over a new church. the supporters of which were attached to Mr.

consequence of this settlement. Mr. P. wrote also letters to N. and D. Rogers, 1742; a letter to Mr. Whitefield, 1745; bad omen to the churches, 1747. - Sprague's Annals.

PICKMAN, THOMAS, Dr., died at Salem in 1817, aged 43. The son of Benjamin, he graduated at Harvard in 1791, and studied | hysic with Dr. Holyoke. He had judgment, decision, and skill; was social, and endowed with a literary taste. - Thacher's Med. Biog.

PICKMAN, BENJAMIN, died at Salem in Aug., 1843, aged 80. A graduate of 1784, he was a merchant, and sustained various public offices: was a member of the senate and council; of congress in 1809; of the convention of 1820. He published an oration on the birthday of Wash-

PICKMAN, DUDLEY L., died at Salem, Mass., in 1846, aged 67. He was a man of intelligence, highly respected.

PIDGIN, WILLIAM, minister of Minot, Me., died at Portland in 1848, aged nearly 77. Born in Newbury, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1794; settled at Hampton, N. H., in 1796, and at Minot, Me., from 1811 to 1819.

PIERCE, ROBERT, an early settler of Dorchester in 1640. His widow, Ann, died 1695, aged about 104 years.

PIERCE, MICHAEL, captain, of Scituate in 1647, was slain in Philip's war, March, 1676, with fifty English and twenty Cape Cod Indians, near Providence.

PIERCE, THOMAS, minister of Scarborough, Me., died in 1775, aged 37. Born in Newbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1759, and was ordained in 1762.

PIERCE, BENJAMIN, governor of New Hampshire, died at Hillsborough, N. H., April 1, 1839, aged 81. He was a descendant of Nathaniel Pierce of Wohurn, and son of Benjamin of Chelmsford, and was born Dec. 25, 1757. He risked his life in the cause of human freedom. He fought in the battle of Bunker Hill, and continued in the army during the war, rising from the rank of a common soldier to be major by brevet. For many years from 1789 he was the representative of Hillsborough, to which town he went in poverty and built a log house. In 1805 he was brigadier-general; in 1809 sheriff, in which office he liberated the prisoners by paying for them 300 or 400 dollars. Among them was an old companion in arms, Capt. Moses Brewer, who had been shut up four years for debt. In 1827 and 1829 he was governor. He died in consequence of a paralytic affection. His daughter, by his first wife, born in 1788, married Gen. John McNeil. His second wife was Anna Kendrick of Amherst, by whom he had eight children, one of whom was the president of the United States, die die no 18. till bas vie ligi

1

die

Do

and

was par

wh

de

far

So

İibr cuti sala nex doll ner half buel half

the

colle Har dair the a fe offic coll the tim hun

Sat was his note dox aud whi niec The

bea

wer will to Chr say, not

to

abo

deceased except Henry D. Pierce, a drover and farmer in Hillsborough. Nancy married Gen. Solomon McNeil of Hillsborough; and Harriet married Hugh Jameson of Boston, both of whom died in 1837.

PIERCE, MARY E., Miss, missionary to Siam, died Sept. 22, 1814, aged 28. Born at Butternuts, N. Y., she embarked at Boston in July. 1839, and occupied her field of labor at Haugkok till her death. Mr. Johnson spoke of her as having a frame of mind calm and heavenly in the view of her departure, and as an ornament to religion.

PIERCE, John, D. D., minister of Brookline, died Aug. 24, 1849, aged 76. He was born in Dorchester July 14, 1773, the son of a farmer, and graduated at Harvard college in 1793. He was then preceptor two years in the English department at Leicester academy, from whose select library of moral and religious books, presented by Gov. Gill, he derived great advantage in prosccuting his purpose to become a minister. His salary was 200 dollars the first year, and 250 the next; but then the cost of board was less than a dollar a week. He wore a cocked or three-cornered hat; his hair queued with a black ribbon half-way down his back; he also had silver kneebuckles, and large plated shoe-buckles covering half his instep. He and the principal occupied the same bed, with the addition sometimes of a college friend. Afterwards he was a tutor in Harvard college. March 15, 1797, he was ordained at Brookline, and remained the pastor for the remainder of his life, having a colleague for a few of his last years. He resigned in July the office of secretary of the overseers of Harvard college, held for thirty years. He had preached the Thursday lecture in Boston one hundred times, and attended the lecture one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four times. The large and beautiful organ in his church was exhibited on Saturday before his death, when the sick pastor was carried into the church, where he indulged his great love of sacred music by listening to the notes which were awakened; he then read the doxology, which was sung in chorus by the entire audience. At his funeral, the arrangements for which had been made by Dr. P. himself, the meeting-house was not dressed in mourning. The preacher said, that his last words to one about to make a prayer with the dying man, were: "Ask that I receive with submission the will of my Father." He had also said, "Repeat to my friends around my remains the words of Christ, 'I am the resurrection and the life,' and say, that my faith and hope are these, - that I do not feel that I shall ever die, but only press on to a higher life." He left many volumes of his

who was born Nov. 23, 1804; all the others are ordination of S. Clark, 1817; Dudleian lecture, 1821; a sketch of Brookline in historical collections, 2d series, vol. II.

PIERCE, RICHARD, second minister of New Bedford, Mass., died in 1749, aged 49. He gradnated at Harvard in 1721, and was settled in 1735. His predecessor was Samuel Hunt; his two next successors, Mr. Cheever and Samuel West.

PIERCE, Sanan, Miss, died at Litchfield Jan. 19, 1852, aged 84. She was a celebrated teacher, long at the head of a well-known female school in Litchfield.

l'IERCE, Susan, wife of Epaminondas J. Pierce, missionary to Gaboon in Africa, died suddenly Feb. 24, 1855, expressing her confidence in the Saviour.

PIERPONT, BENJAMIN, minister in South Carolina, died near Charleston in 1698, aged about 30. He graduated at Harvard college in 1689, and emigrated from near Boston with a select company in 1691, to found an independent church in South Carolina. Mr. Adams succeeded PIERPONT, JONATHAN, minister of Reading, Mass., died in 1709, aged about 44. Born in Roxbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1685, and was settled in 1689. His predecessor was John Brock.

PIERPONT, JAMES, fourth minister of New Haven, Conn., died in Nov., 1714, aged 53. He was the son of John P., of Roxbury, Mass., who died in 1690, and grandson of James P., who came from England and died at Ipswich. He was born in 1661; graduated at Harvard college in 1681; and was ordained July 2, 1685. His predecessors were Davenport, Hook, and Street. One of the first persons he received into his church was un old man called James Daniels, but who was John Dixwell, one of King Charles' judges. He was succeeded by J. Noyes. He married Abigail Davenport, a grand-daughter of his predecessor, Oct. 27, 1691. But she died Feb. 3, of consumption, occasioned by exposure to cold on the Sabbath after her wedding, going to meeting in her bridal dress. He married Sarah Haynes, May 30, 1694, a grand-daughter of Gov. II. She died Oct. 7, 1696. He married Mary Hooker, July 26, 1698, a grand-daughter of the first pastor of Hartford. She was the mother of Sarah, the wife of Pres. Edwards, and lived till Nov., 1740. He was a man of uncommon prudence, amiable manners, and exemplary picty. The articles of discipline, adopted with the Saybrook platform in 1708, were drawn up by him. He published false hopes of heaven, a sermon, 1712. — Sprague's Annals.

PIERPONT, Samuel, the minister of Lyme, Conn., died March 15, 1723, aged only 22. The private journal. He published a sermon at the son of Rev. James P. of New Haven, and Mary v Hamp-1, 1839, Vathaniel amin of 57. He freedom. and coning from major by was the town he In 1805

ied in

wrote

letter

o the

cm in grad-

hysic

ecision,

iterary

ı Aug.,

was a

offices;

of con-

0. Ile

Wash-

, Mass.,

ligenee,

ot, Mc.,

Born

n 1794 :

t Minot,

)orches-

5, aged

tuate in 76, with

ns, near borough,

lewbury,

was or-

f, in which aying for m was an ewer, who In 1827 in consedaughter, Gen. John endrick of en, one of

ed States,

Hooker, he graduated in 1718, and was ordained Dec. 12, 1722. In crossing the river from Saybrook with an Indian waterman, the canoe upset and he was drowned. His body was found April 28th, at Fisher's Island, and buried there. He had an extraordinary gift, and was a Boanerges in his preaching. Great hopes rested on him.

PIERPONT, JAMES, died at South Farms, in Litchfield, in 1840, aged 79; a most worthy and esteemed citizen.

PIERREPONT, JAMES HENRY, M. D., died at Portsmouth in Jan., 1839, aged 70. The son of William P., of Springfield, he was graduated at Harvard in 1789, and studied medicine with Dr. Spring. He had lived since 1801 in P., and was a physician of character and eminence. - Burrough's Disc. on his Death; Williams' Med. Biog.

PIERSON, ABRAHAM, first minister of Southampton on Long Island, died Aug. 9, 1678, aged 70. Born in Yorkshire, E., he graduated at the university of Cambridge in 1632; and he preached some time in or near Newark, before he came to Boston; in 1639. In 1640 a number of the inhabitants of Lynn formed the resolution to remove to Long Island, and invited him to accompany them. Having first formed a church, they went and settled Southampton. These planters constituted a government by themselves. When it was found necessary to divide the church, Mr. Pierson passed over to the main land, and became the first minister of Branford, Conn., in 1644. He continued here till 1665, when he removed to New Jersey. He was one of the first settlers of Newark in 1667, and was the first minister of that town. His son, Abraham, was his colleague. His wife was a daughter of Rev. J. Wheelwright; he had eight children. His son survived him; and his successors were Prudden, Wakerman, Bowers, Webb, and Burr. He was a man of piety and learning. Having studied the Indian language, he preached to the natives of Long Island and in the several plantations of New Haven colony. - Magnalia, III. 95; Trumbull's Conn. 1. 289, 521; Sprague's Annals.

PIERSON, ABRAHAM, first president of Yale college, the son of the preceding, died May 5, 1707, aged about 60. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1668; ordained as colleague with his father at Newark March 4, 1672; removed to Connecticut in 1692, and was installed the minister of Killingworth in 1694. On the establishment of the college at Saybrook in 1701, he was chosen rector, and the students attended upon his instructions at Killingworth, although the commencements were held at Saybrook. His son, John, a graduate at Yale college of 1711, was the minister of Woodbridge, N. J. He was an excellent scholar, a great divine, a fuithful preacher, and wise and judicious in all his conduct. Mr. Andrew of Milford was chosen rector United States. He acquired a knowledge of pro tempore after his death, but a new president was not appointed till 1719, when Mr. Cutler was placed at the head of the college. He wrote a system of natural philosophy, which was studied in the college for many years. He published election sermon, 1700. — Sprague's Annals.

PIERSON, JOSLAH, died at Bergen, N. Y., March 7, 1846, aged 64. He was a minister who did much in the establishment of churches in Western New York. He was born in Killingworth, Conn., a descendant of A. Pierson. When not a preacher he was a member of the church in Bergen in 1808, the first church west of the Genesee, except the Scotch church at Calcdonia. In 1817 he began to preach.

PEIRSON, ABEL L., M. D., a very distinguished surgeon and physician of Salem, Mass.; was killed on the railroad at Norwalk, Conn., May 5, 1853, aged 59. He was born in Suco, Me., July 4, 1793, and graduated at Harvard in 1812.

PIERSON, Susan, died at Bridgehampton, L. I., Feb. 24, 1854, aged 71. For more than fifty years she kept her bed. Her bible was always in her hands. She was an eminent Christian. - N. Y. Observer, May 18.

PIKE, JOHN, a settler of Newbury in 1635, died at Salisbury, Mass., in 1654. His son John was one of the first settlers of Woodbridge, N. J., in 1669. Gen. Z. M. Pike was a descendant, His son Joseph was killed by the Indians in 1694.

PIKE, ROBERT, major, son of John P., died in Newbury Dec. 12, 1706, aged 90. He was born in England in 1616. He was assistant and councillor, a man highly useful and respected.

PIKE, JOHN, minister of Dover, N. H., died March 10, 1710, aged 56. The son of Major Robert, he graduated at Harvard in 1675, and was ordained the successor of John Rayner in 1681. · PIKE, JAMES, first minister of Somersworth, N. II., died March 19, 1792, aged 89, in the sixtysecond year of his ministry. The son of Joseph, of Newbury, who was killed by the Indians, he graduated at Harvard in 1725, and was ordained in 1730. He published a sermon on the duty of gospel ministers, 1751.

PIKE, NICHOLAS, the son of Rev. James P., was a descendant of John P., who lived in Newbury in 1635. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1766, and died at Newburyport Dec. 9, 1819, aged 76. He published a system of arithmetic, 8vo., 1788, which was long in general use in New England.

PIKE, ZEBULON MONTGOMERY, brigadier-general, died April 27, 1813, aged 34. He was a descendant of John P., who lived in Newbury, Mass., in 1635, and whose son, John, removed to Woodbridge, N. J., in 1669. He was born at Lamberton, N. J., Jan. 5, 1779, and was the son of Zehulon P., brevet colonel in the service of the ish l Mr. the retu the i he w pape a bri the l Cana zine few l the : cause was ! marr was c army tions 1810

matl

PI aged marr comp bath ferre

PH

Mass he gr daine PI gener Charl was t Carol land high and t his re ccssfi the e libert fence sion. to the When over, point capac of B the s the f passe the c ish languages. After the purchase of Louisiana Mr. Jefferson appointed him in 1805 to explore the sources of the Mississippi. Soon after his return he was sent on a similar expedition into the interior of Louisiana. On the Rio Del Norte he was seized by a Spanish force and lost his papers. He returned in 1807. Being appointed a brigadier-general in the late war, he commanded the land forces in the attack upon York, Upper Canada. In the explosion of the British magazine he was struck by a large stone, and died in a few hours on board the commodore's ship. When the British standard was brought to him, he caused it to be placed under his head. His wife was Miss Brown of Cincinnati; his only daughter married, in 1819, J. C. S. Harrison of Ohio. He was one of the most accomplished officers of the army. He published an account of his expedi-

PIKE, HARRIET, died in Albany in Sept., 1845, aged 19. Her name was Williams; she had been married to N. Pike eleven weeks. She was accomplished and pious. As the teacher of a Sabbath school, she often led her young charge in fervent prayer.

tions to the sources of the Mississippi, etc., 8vo.,

"She is gone! The young, the beautiful, the blest: Gone to her rest, Where shadows ne'er gather, nor sorrows come, To darken the sky of the spirit's home."

PILLSBURY, LEVI, minister of Winehendon, Mass., died in 1819, aged 47. Born at Dracut, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1798, and was ordained in 1801.

PINCKNEY, CHARLES COTESWORTH, majorgeneral, a soldier of the Revolution, died at Charleston Aug. 16, 1825, aged about 79. He was the son of Chief Justice Pinckney of South Carolina, and was born in 1746. Sent to England for his education, at Westminster he held a high rank; he afterwards removed to Oxford, and thence to the Temple as a student in law. On his return to Carolina in 1769 he engaged suecessfully in the legal profession. In a few years the encroachments of Great Britain on American liberty induced him to take up arms in the defence of his country, and in resistance to oppression. At first a captain, he was speedily promoted to the command of the first regiment of infantry. When the danger of immediate invasion passed over, he joined the northern army and was appointed nide-de-eamp to Washington. In this capacity he distinguished himself at the battles of Brandywine and Germantown. Returning to the south, he was intrusted with the defence of the fort on Sullivan's Island; but as the enemy the city to defend the lines. When at length a against Mr. Adams, endeavored to secure the mathematics and of the Latin, French, and Span- council of war was called to deliberate on the surrender of the place, as the garrison was reduced to extremity, and resistance in an unwalled city to a superior army would be unavailing, Mr. Pinekney gave his decided opinion in favor of the most obstinate resistance, hoping at least to eripple the enemy, and thus benefit other parts of the United States. His opinion, though seconded by the gallant Laurens, was overruled. The city was surrendered, and he fell into the hands of the British as a prisoner of war. His confinement was rigorous, in order to crush his spirit and intimidate others. He was even denied the consolation of attending the remains of an only son to the tomb. In his principles and devotion to his country he was unmoved by this severity, and unmoved also by flattering promises. After the peace he was appointed a member of the convention which formed the constitution of the United States, to which he was very instrumental in promoting the assent of South Carolina. Washington, when chosen president, offered him a seat on the bench of the supreme court; but he declined it. He was also offered the place of secretary of war in 1795 on the resignation of Knox, and in the same year that of secretary of State on the dismissal of Edmund Randolph. In 1796 he accepted the appointment of minister to France as successor of Mr. Monroe. The French directory refused to receive him; but he remained at Paris till Feb., 1797, when he was ordered to quit the French territory. He removed to Amsterdam. In a short time John Marshall and Elbridge Gerry were united with him as commissioners to France. When some unaccredited agents demanded a loan as a pre-requisite to a treaty, Mr. Pinckney replied, "Millions for defence, but not a cent for tribute." After a short. unsuccessful negotiation, passports were given to Pinckney and Marshall, while Gerry was invited to remain. On his return, Mr. Pinckney was by Washington, the commander-in-chief, nominated a major-general in the army which was raised in consequence of the difficulties with France. Although his rank was inferior to that of Hamilton. who was his junior in the Revolutionary war, and some friends urged him to resent this injustice, he replied with a very commendable spirit, although not of pride: "I am confident that Gen. Washington had sufficient reasons for this preference. Let us first dispose of our enemies; we shall then have leisure to settle the question of rank." In 1800 Mr. Adams and he were eandidates for the offices of president and vice-president of the United States, against Jefferson and Burr. At this period the offices were not diseriminated in the votes, but the person having the largest number of votes was to be the presipassed the island into the port, he hastened into dent. Gen. Hamilton, in his celebrated letter

Cutler wrote udied lished V. Y.,

ident

r who ies in illing-When church of the donia.

killed , 1853, July 1, mpton, e than de was

t Chris-

uished

1635. n John . N. J., endant. n 1694. died in as born

d coun-

I., died or Robind was in 1681. rsworth, ne sixty-Joseph, ians, he ordained duty of mes P. in New-Harvard ort Dec. stem of ı general dier-gen-

Ie was a Newbury, moved to born at the son ice of the ledge of election of Gen. Pinckney as president; but neither was elected. His wife, Mary, died Jan. 4, 1812, aged 60. He was connected with various benevolent societies. Of the Charleston bible society he was the president. In a letter, written in 1804, he reprobates the barbarous practice of There was a frankness in his manners duelling. Although at the which attracted confidence. head of a party in politics, he was free from the vindictive passions of party. "Religious and moral principles presided over all his faculties and pursuits, and gave a dignity to his character. An ardent youth and a vigorous manhood were succeeded by a screne and cheerful old age, and the reverence and love of the whole city attended him to the tomb." - Ann. Reg., 1825.

PINCKNEY, THOMAS, general, governor of South Carolina, the brother of the preceding, died Nov. 2, 1828. He was distinguished by his patriotic zeal and his military talents in the war of the Revolution. With the rank of major, he was the aid of General Gates. Having his leg shattered by a musket ball, he fell into the hands of the enemy in Aug., 1780. He succeeded Moultrie as governor in 1787, and was succeeded by Charles Pinckney in 1789. He was minister to London in the administration of Washington, and returned in Dec., 1796. In 1796 he was candidate with John Adams in the votes for president and vice-president, and he had the votes of his own State and fifty-eight other votes, but was not chosen; the next federal candidate with John Adams in 1800 was his brother, Charles Cotesworth P. In 1800 he was a member of congress. For his social virtues he was highly esteemed. He died after a lingering and painful illness. His wife died in 1796. His two wives were daughters of Jacob and Rebecca Motte, whose third daughter married Colonel William Allston. His daughter, Harriet, the wife of Colonel Francis K. Huger, died at Philadelphia in Dec., 1824.

PINCKNEY, CHARLES, governor of South Carolina, died Oct. 29, 1804, aged 66. He was born in 1758. His education was private. He was a patriot in the Revolutionary struggle. In 1787 he was a delegate to the convention which framed the constitution of the United States. He proposed that the president should hold his office seven years, and then be ineligible. The evils of the present system will probably lead to the adoption of a single term. He succeeded Thos. Pinckney as governor in 1789, and continued in office till 1792; he was again governor from 1796 to 1798; and again as the successor of P. Hamilton from 1806 to 1808, when he was succeeded by J. Drayton. In the year 1798 he was a senator of the United States, and afterwards ambassador at the court of Spain from 1801 or 1802 till to his dress was particularly attentive. In the possessed amenity of manners, great collequial powers, and fervid eloquence.

PINE, ROBERT E., an eminent historical and portrait painter, died in Philadelphia in Nev.

PINKNEY, WILLIAM, a distinguished lawyer, ambassador to England, died Feb. 25, 1822, aged 57. He was born at Annapolis, Maryland, March 17, 1764. His father, a native of the north of England, adhered to the British cause in the Revolution. He regarded himself as related to the South Carolina Pinckneys. His education was imperfect. He was admitted to the bar in 1786, and soon acquired distinction in his profession. From Harford county he was a delegate to the convention which ratified the constitution of the United States. As a member of the legislature in 1789, he eloquently resisted a proposed law to prevent the emancipation of slaves. In 1796 he was appointed a commissioner under Jay's treaty, and repaired with his family to London, where he resided eight years; his associates were Gore and Trumbull. On his return in 1804 he engaged anew in the practice of the law, which he had diligently studied during his residence in London. In 1806 he went as minister to England, and with Mr. Monroe negotiated a treaty, which Mr. Jefferson rejected. After a residence as minister for five years, he found that he was expending not only his salary but his own small capital, and therefore solicited a recall. He arrived in June, 1811, and settled at Baltimore. In December he was appointed attorney-general of the United States by Mr. Madison. He approved of the war of 1812. Commanding a volunteer corps for the defence of Baltimore, he marched to Bladensburg, in the action at which place he was severely wounded. After continuing his arduous labors at the bar for several years, he was induced, as he wanted relaxation, in March, 1816, to accept the appointment of minister to the courts of Naples and Russia. He, in consequence, resigned a seat which he then held in congress. From Italy he proceeded to Vienna, and thence to St. Petersburg. He returned in 1818. He took his seat in the senate of the United States, Jan. 4, 1820. On the Missouri question, he deemed it unconstitutional to make the exclusion of slaves a condition of admission into the Union. He was taken ill at Washington Feb. 17, and was for the most part delirious till his death. His wife was Ann Maria Rodgers, the daughter of John R., of Havre de Grace, and sister of Commodore R. Probably there was no lawyer in this country of so great eminence as Mr. P., for combined legal science and eloquence. He had a fine countenance, and elegant manners, and 1805, in the administration of Mr. Jefferson. He supremacy of his powers and fame, and in the

mids was . etern arout wus] PI

Willi aged the a man vears death to th timo He p is hi Revi ΡI Com the I and had a of hi PΙ field. PΙ olutio aged PΙ 1844 dent

PI

Marc

whic

edict

years

sever

chure

P died vard P Jan. P. dicd Har publ P

ated P land 1659 king guis an a cott. ΑV

Mas

loquial
and Nev.

awyer, 2, aged March rth of in the ated to ucation bar in profeselegate titution e legisoposed es. In under to Lonsociates in 1804 v, which ence in to Engtreaty, sidence he was n small He arore. In eral of pproved blunteer rehed to he was arduous was in-h, 1816, to the equence, ongress. thence 18. He

18. He
1 States,
tion, he xclusion
e Union.
17, and
s death.
laughter
sister of

Mr. P., ice. He iers, and In the d in the midst of his utmost efforts to maintain them, he was summoned suddenly to the retributions of eternity a tremendous warning to the great me around him. An account of his life and writings was published by Henry Wheaton, 8vo., 1826.

PINKNEY, EDWARD COATE, a poet, the son of William Pinkney, died at Baltimore in 1828, aged 25. He was born in London in 1802. At the age of 14 or 15 he was appointed a midshipman in the navy, in which post he continued nine years, visiting various parts of the globe. On the death of his father in 1822, he devoted himself to the study of the law. He also edited the Baltimore Marylander, an administration paper. He published in 1825 a volume of poems, which is highly commended by the North American Review.

PINNEO, BEZALEEL, D. D., died at Milford. Conn., Sept. 15, 1840, aged 80, a descendant of the Huguenots. During a ministry of fifty-three years there were in his town seven revivals; seven hundred and sixteen persons joined the church; and at his death there were five hundred and twenty members, all of whom but three he had admitted. He had followed eleven hundred of his flock to the grave.

PINNEY, BUTLER, a minister, died in Bloomfield, Conn., in 1850, aged 87.

PINSON, SARAH, widow of Simeon P., a Revolutionary soldier, died in Scituate Dec. 22, 1851, PINTARD, John, died in New York, June 21, 1844, aged 85; an eminent merchant, vice-president of the American bible society.

PINTARD, Lewis, died at Princeton, N. J., March 25, 1818, aged 85. He was of a family which fled from France on the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

PIPER, Asa, minister of Wakefield, N. II., died in 1835, aged 78. He graduated at Harvard in 1778.

PIPER, Susannall, Mrs., died at Baltimore, Jan. 24, 1841, aged 107.

PIPON, John, minister of Taunton, Mass., died in 1821, aged about 50. He graduated at Harvard in 1792, and was ordained in 1800. He published a masonic discourse, 1811.

PITCHER, NATHANIEL, minister of Scituate, Mass., died in 1723, aged about 40. He graduated at Harvard in 1703.

PITKIN, WILLIAM, came from Middlesex, England, and settled in East Hartford, Conn., in 1659, and died in 1694. He was a lawyer and king's attorney, and a farmer; and was distinguished for his talents and virtues. His sister, an accomplished woman, married to Simon Wolcott, was the mother of the first Governor W. A William Pitkin, many years a magistrate, "a great and good man," died in 1723.

PITKIN, WILLIAM, governor of Connecticut, died in East Hartford, 1769. He was lieutenant-governor and ex afficio chief justice from 1754 to 1769, and governor three years. The William P. who was chief justice in 1713 was perhaps his father. He was a man of strong mind and integrity. His son, Major William P., died in 1789. He went with the Connecticut forces against Canada, under Abererombic, in 1758 and was a gallant officer. In the Revolutionary war he was a member of the council.

PITKIN, TIMOTHY, minister of Farmington, Conn., died in 1812, aged 85. The son of Governor P., he was born at East Hartford, and graduated at Yale in 1747. After serving as a tutor, he was ordained in 1752, and dismissed on account of ill health in 1785. He was long a member of the corporation of the college.—

Spragne's Annals.

PITKIN, TIMOTHY, died at New Haven, Dec. 18, 1847, aged 82. The son of Rev. Timothy P., he was graduated in 1785. By profession he was a lawyer, and for fourteen years, from 1805, a member of congress. He published a statistical view of the commerce of the United States in 1816, republished in 1835; he published also political and civil history of the United States from 1763 to the close of Washington's administration.

1763 to the close of Washington's administration. PITKIN, EDWARD, M. D., died in East Hartford, April 11, 1851, aged 82.

PITMAN, CHARLES, D. D., died in New York, Jan. 14, 1854; many years an eminent minister of the Methodist church.

PLAISTED, ICHABOD, minister in Rochester, Mass., died in 1831, aged 35. Born in Gardiner, Me., he graduated at Bowdoin college in 1821, and was settled over the third church in R. in 1827.

PLANT, MATTHIAS, Episcopal minister in Newbury, Mass., died in 1753, aged 52. Born in England, he graduated at Jesus college, Cambridge, and was settled at N. in 1722. His church was called Queen Anne's chapel. His two predecessors were Mr. Lampton and Henry Lucas, both from England. Dr. Bass, the first Episcopal minister of Newburyport, was settled in 1752. A singular letter of his is printed. — Coffin's Hist. Newbury.

PLANTE, MARIE LOUISE, died in Cuthbert, L. C., in July, 1832, aged 117. Many Plantes sprung from her.

PLATT, JONAS K., M. D., professor of surgery in the university of Vermont, died at Plattsburg in 1824.

PLATT, Jonas, LL. D., judge, died in Peru, Clinton county, N. Y., in 1834. He had been a member of congress, and was a judge of the supreme court of New York.

PLATT, EBENEZER, judge, died in New York

tington, L. I. He was the father of Mrs. Phebe Rogers, the mother of Rev. Dr. E. P. Rogers.

PLATT, ELIPITAZ A., minister of East Palmyra, N. Y., died suddenly, Sept. 16, 1854, aged 46. He was faithful, and his labors for thirteen years were successful. He received one hundred and seventy-one persons into the church.

PLEASANTON, STEPHEN, died in Washingten in 1855. He was the sixth auditor of the treasury for fifty years, and during the administration of twelve presidents.

PLEASANTS, JAMES, governor of Virginia, died in Goochland county, Nov. 9, 1836, aged 67. He was a member of congress from 1811 to 1819, and senator from 1819 to 1822, and governor from 1822 to 1825. He was a man of rare modesty, respected and esteemed for his private virtues and public worth.

PLEASANTS, JOHN H., the son of Governor P., died at Richmond, Feb. 27, 1846, aged 39. After editing the Richmond Whig twenty-two years, he fell, as a fool dieth, in a duel with Thomas Ritchic, Jun. A hundred others, who have fallen in our country in like folly, depravity, and madness, could be enumerated; yet no murderer in private combat has yet been hung in our country. Does not the stain of blood in this respect rest upon our guilty land?

PLESSIS, J. O., Catholic bishop of Quebec, fell back in his chair, and expired.

PLIMLEY, HENRY, died at Trenton, N. J., in 1842, aged 98. In the war he fought at Trenton, Fort Stanwix, Whitehall, and Yorktown, and was severely wounded.

PLUMBE, WILLIAM, died June 2, 1843, aged 94. A graduate of Yale in 1769, he was a chaplain in the army: he lived to be the oldest grad-PLUMER, John, a worthy magistrate of Rochester, N. H., died Nov. 19, 1815, aged 95. Governor Wentworth appointed him a judge of the court of common pleas. He aimed to promote the amicable settlement of disputes, and was a peace-maker, greatly respected.

PLUMER, WILLIAM, governor of New Hampshire, died at Epping, Dec. 23, 1850, aged 91. He was born at Newbury, Mass., June 25, 1759, and removed to Epping in 1768, where he lived till his death. He practiced law from 1787 till 1809, was often in the legislature, and was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of New Hampshire. In 1802 he was chosen senator of the United States; and he was governor in 1812, 1816-1818. His last public employment was that of elector of president in 1820. Then for nearly thirty years he was occupied in literary pursuits. He published papers with the signature of Cincinnatus. He wrote well, though | was baptized. In 1616 she accompanied her hus-

In 1839, aged 85. He lived fifty years in Hun- he had not been favored with a public education. and knew no language but the English. His earliest ancestor in this country was Francis of Boston, in 1634, who died in Newbury. The others descending were Samuel, Sylvanus, Samuel, Samuel, the father of the governor, married to Mary Dole in 1755. Governor I'. married Surah Fowler of the Ipswich family; the died in 1852, aged 90. His brother, Colonel Daniel Plumer, died in 1852, aged 81. His sister married Colonel Daniel Cilley of Epsom. He published appeal to the old whigs, 1805; address to the clergy, 1814.

PLUMER, WILLIAM, son of Governor P., died at Epping, N. H., Sept. 18, 1854, aged 65. He graduated at Harvard in 1809, and was a member of congress from 1819 to 1825. He opposed the Missouri compromise. He was a man of taste and had an attachment to historical researches. His library was large. He published two small volumes of poems; address to agricultural society.

PLUMMER, CAROLINE, Miss, died in Salem, May 15, 1854, bequeathing 15,000 dollars to Harvard college to found a professorship of Christian morals; 30,000 dollars to the Salem athenæum; and 30,000 dollars to found a farm school.

PLYMPTON, SYLVANUS, Dr., died at Wohnen in 1837, aged 79. He graduated at Harvard in 1780.

POCAHONTAS, daughter of Powhatan, emdied Dec. 4, 1825. He was taken suddenly ill, peror of the Indians of Virginia, died in 1617, aged 22. She was born about the year 1595, When Captain Smith was taken prisoner in 1607, and it was determined that he should be put to death, his head was placed upon two large stones at the feet of Powhatan, that a number of Indians, who stood ready with lifted clubs, might beat out his brains. At this moment Pocahontas rushed to the spot and placed her own head upon his. From regard to his daughter, the savage king spared his life. In 1609, when but fourteen years of age, she went to James Town in a dreary night, and unfolded to Captain Smith a plot which the Indians had formed for the extermination of the English, and thus at the hazard of her life saved them from destruction. In 1612, after Captain Smith left the colony, she was for a bribe of a copper kettle betrayed into the hands of Captain Argal, and retained a prisoner, that better terms of peace might be made with her father. He offered five hundred bushels of corn for his daughter; but, before this negotiation was completed, a different and more interesting one had commenced. A mutual attachment had sprung up between her and John Rolfe, an Englishman of good character, and with the consent of Powhatan they were married. This event restored peace, and secured it for many years. Pocahontas soon made a profession of Christianity and at (Chri from fami 14 ter, c intox Davi army ricd the s A ge and ; of lif disgr band

disti

expi

jeets

19 8

man labor ence. and g litera unpri value by gr of vir he in are 1 and were nautic ume. PC

quen

longe

or L by his PO died a wro to Ai and was a PC man, 30, 1

Scud

at th

1838 days PΩ 1853 was Terri and murc

Terri

band to England, where she was received with added to the list of "honorable murderers," distinction at court. It is said that King James expressed great indignation that one of his subjects should dare to marry into a royal family. As she was about to embark for Virginia, she died at Gravesend. She is represented as a plous Christian. She left one son, Thomas Rolle; and from his daughter descended some respectable families in Virginia. - Beverly; Keith; Stith.

POE, EDGAR ALLAN, a dissolute, fantastic writer, died at Baltimore in consequence of fits of intoxication, in 1849, aged 38. His grandfather, David, of Maryland, served honorably in the army of the Revolution. His father, David, married un English actress, and went himself upon the stage. This, their son, was born in Baltimore. A generous merchant, John Allan, adopted him and provided for his education. But his course of life in college and afterwards was dissolute and disgraceful. His patron refused to pay his frequent drafts for gambling debts, and would no longer keep the ungrateful and profligate young man in his house. He was now thrown upon the labors of his pen, in prose and verse, for subsistence. With an indignant spirit must all virtuous and good men think of the degradation of our literature, by its falling at times into the hands of unprincipled men, who produce nothing of true value and worth reading; nothing to enlighten by great truths, nothing to animate to noble acts of virtue. Nor in fact can any great utterances be incitements to virtue, when we know that they are not sincere, but come from characters vile and contemptible. Poe's miscellaneous works were published, in four volumes, 1856. The wild nautical story of Pym occupies half the last volumc. - Cycl. of Amer. Lit.

POGGATACUT, great sachem of Pamanack or Long Island, died in 1651, and was succeeded by his brother Wyandanch.

POHLMAN, WILLIAM J., missionary at Amoy, died January 5, 1849, being drowned in leaving a wrecked schooner, in which he was proceeding to Amoy. The small boat was upset by the rush, and all who could not swim were drowned. He was a devoted and successful missionary.

POHLMAN, Mrs., wife of William J. Pohlman, missionary to Borneo, died at Amoy Sept. 30, 1845, aged 34. Her name was Theodosia R. Scudder of Freehold, N. J., living in New York at the time of her marriage. She embarked in 1838. Her companion, Mrs. Doty, died in a few days after Mrs. P.'s death.

POINDEXTER, GEORGE, died at Jackson in 1853; the second governor of Mississippi. He was a member of congress as delegate of the Territory, and then as representative of the State, and a senator from 1831 to 1835. In 1811 he murdered, in a duel, Abijah Hunt, in Mississippi Territory; and thus his dishonored name must be glorious immortality.

Does not the unaverged blood of the murdered in private combat call for vengeance upon our guilty land?

POINSETT, JOEL R., died Dec. 14, 1851, at Statesburg, S. C., aged 72. He was born in Charleston, of a Huguenot family. He travelled in Europe, Asia, and Spanish America. In 1825 he was minister to Mexico, and secretary of war under Mr. Van Buren. He labored for the preservation of the Union against the movements in his own State. He published notes on Mexico, made in 1812, with a sketch of the Revolution. · Cycl. of Am. Lit.

POLITEMUS, HENRY, a useful minister of the Dutch church, died in Ulster county, N. Y., Nov. 2, 1815, aged 46. His last two years he was the pastor at Shawangunk in Ulster.

POLITIS, PETER, a colored man, died in New York in 1820, aged 103: he was present at the capture of Louisburg in 1745.

POLK, WILLIAM, colonel, died at Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 14, 1834, aged 75. He was among the small band of patriots who declared independence in Mecklenburgh county, N. C., May 20, 1775. He was present at the hattles of Camden, Eutaw Springs, Brandywine, and Germantown. At the close of the war he held the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and was the last surviving officer of the N. C. line.

POLK, JAMES KNOX, president of the United States, died at Nashville, Tenn., June 15, 1849, aged 53. An ancestor, Pollock, emigrated from Ireland. Mr. Polk was born Nov. 2, 1795, in Mecklenburg county, N. C.; his father, in 1806, with ten children, removed to Tennessee, in the valley of Duck river, a branch of the Cumberland. He graduated at the university of North Carolina in 1815. In 1825 he was a member of congress, of which body he was speaker in 1835 and 1837. He was chosen governor in 1839, for two years. In Dec., 1844, the electors chose him president, the votes being for him 170, for Clay 105. During his administration the Oregon question was settled, Texas annexed, the Mexican wur waged, and New Mexico and California acquired. In his private life he was without reproach. Whether owing to education or to the influence of a pious, admirable wife, his arrangements in travelling never interfered with the Sabbath. He regularly attended church. Dr. Edgar attended him in his last sickness. He aeknowledged his unworthiness before God, and said, he had too long delayed to devote himself to the service of Christ to expect his mercy on a deathbed. Afterwards he professed to have obtained pardon and purifieation through the blood of Christ; and after he received the sacraments never expressed the slightest doubt, but died in the assurance of a ied in Daniel. o the 14. ., died He memsposed f tuste irches. small oa ln:

ation.

s cur-

Bos-

thers

Sant-

Mary

Fow-

, aged

Salem. o Har-Chrisutheschool. obien' ard in n, em-

1617, r 1595, n 1607, put to stones of Inmight aliontas d upon savage onrteen dreary t which tion of her life 2, after a bribe unds of t better father. for his as comne had sprung lishman of Pow-restored ocahonnity and her hus-

POLKE, WILLIAM, died at Fort Wayne, Ind., | In 1843, aged 68. Horn in Virginia, he emigrated to Kentucky in 1782. Captured by the Indians, he was kept a year at Detroit. In 1808 he settled in Indiana; in 1811 was wounded at the battle of Tippecanoe. He held various offices; was register of the U. S. land office; and was esteemed and beloved.

POMEROY, SETH, minister of Greenfield, in Fairfield, Conn., died in 1770, aged about 37, and was succeeded by Dr. Dwight. He graduated at Yale in 1753.

POMEROY, MEDAD, deacon, the ancestor of many families of the name, died at Northampton, in 1716, having ten or more children. He was the son of Eltweed Pomeroy of Dorchester and Windsor, who died in 1662. He married Experience Woodward, and also Abigail, the widow of Rev. Mr. Channey of Hatfield. Ehenezer, his son by his first wife, was the father of Seth.

POMEROY, SETH, brigadier-general, died at Peekskill, while in the service, in Feb., 1777. He lived in Northampton, and was the son of Ebenezer and grandson of Deacon Medad P. In the French war he was an intrepid soldier under Sir William Johnson. He was present at the defeat of Dieskau. In the battle of Bunker Hill he was a volunteer; and he lamented that he, "old and useless," had not fallen instead of Warren. He died of the pleurisy. He was an ingenious mechanic and manufacturer of arms, and a most zealous and devoted friend of his country, His five sons were Quartus, Asahel, Lemuel, Seth, and Medad.

POMEROY, BENJAMIN, D. D., minister of Hebron, Conn., died at Hebron Dec. 22, 1784, aged 80. He was a descendant of Eltweed P., who settled in Windsor in 1633; was born in Suffield; and graduated at Yale college in 1733. He was ordained in Dec., 1735. During the revival, in the time of Mr. Whitefield, he preached with great zeal and power. For preaching in disregard of the laws of Connecticut, he was deprived of his stated salary for seven years. He was also once arrested and brought before the assembly with Mr. Davenport. In his patriotic spirit he served as a chaplain in the French and Revolutionary wars. With great zeal, he and grandfather lived there before him. had a vein of wit and sarcasm. He was perse- POND, ENOUR, minister of Ashfor vering, just, polite, generous, charitable, frank. In the fervor and pathos of his preaching be . . unequalled. Rev. Dr. Sprague has 1 thish ? a letter concerning him, written by a native of Hebron, Rev. John Sawyer of Garland, Maine, in Aug., 1855, when he wanted but two months of being one hundred years old. In early life he was a hearer of Dr. P. He says: "I have a distinct recollection of his solemn and earnest manner in the pulpit, and of seeing the tears flow to be reconciled to God." His wife was Abagail. the sister of Dr. E. Wheelock; his daughter, Hannah, married Dr. McClure. Mr. Peters represents him as an exectiont scholar, an exemplary gentleman, and a thundering preacher. Dr. Trumbull describes him as a man of real genius. and as among the best preachers of his day. -Sprague's Annals.

POMEROY, JONATHAN LAW, minister of Worthington, Mass., died at West Springfield, in 1836, aged about 67. He was minister from 1794 to 1832. He bequenthed to the American colonization, education, home missionary, and bible societies 1,000 dollars each, and made them residuary legatees after the death of his wife, who soon died, to the supposed amount of 20,000 del lars. He also gave his brother, Col. Seth P., J. Boardman, his wife's brother, and Miss M. Billings, 5,000 dollars each. His Phary he cave to Rev. T. Shipman, of Southbary. Lie published a sermon on death of O. Pomeroy, 1799; of J. Wilbur, 1816; to a missionary society, 1806; reply to a Unitarian pamphlet, 1822; sermons, 1826.

POMEROY, SAMULL WYLLIS, died at Pomeroy, Meigs county, Ohio, in 1841, aged 77; an emigrant from Brighton, Mass., where he was a respected citizen.

POMEROY, JOHN, Dr., died at Burlington, Vt., Feb. 19, 1844, aged 80. Born in Middleborough, Mass., he was first a soldier; then settled in II. as a physician, in 1792, and in 1797, after occupying a log house, built there the first brick house. He was a leading physician and surgeon for forty years, and was professor of anatomy and surgery in the university.

POMEROY, THADDEUS, Dr., died at Stockbridge, Mass., in 1817, aged 82. He graduated at Harvard in 1786.

POMEROY, LEMUEL, died in Pittsfield, Mass., in 1849, aged 71. He was the son of Lemuel and grandson of Gen. Seth Pomeroy of Northampton. He was long engaged in very extensive business in iron works. His widow, an excellent woman, died in 1852, aged 70.

POMPONOIIO, chief of the Titicut Indians, sold lands to the people of Bridgewater, north of the Titicut river, by deed, in 1672. His father

POND, ENOCH, minister of Ashford, Conn., died in 1807, aged 50. Born at Wrentham, Mass., he graduated ! at Brown university in 1777. the was one year in the army; then taught music and one of the schools in Boston; and was ordained in 1789. During a revival in 1798. there were added to his church eighty members. He was a good man and affable, a scholar, and an acceptable preacher. - Sprague's Annals.

POND, JULIA ANN, wife of Dr. E. Pond, died at Bangor, Sept. 7, 1838, aged 41. A native of down his checks, while he was exhorting sinners Northford, Conn., and a sister of the New J.

Co tin ful lik HIS

Ka

list

18 eoi

ple

Mo goo her wil Th Col wei

> 16 ofte

nea

Po

uat at ter giv He hc olo

Ma

Ju Bu Ce of mo an till

ab in lel fire Malthy, she was on early Christian convert, and a | ards, who died in 1822. He was divided in death consistent, earnest, prayerful Christian, an example to those around her.

POND, CORDELIA E., wife of S. W. Pond, mis lonary to the Dakotas, died at Washington, Coult. Feb. 6, 1852. She was an emineut Christlan, pleasant, retlring, trustful. She gave faithful dying exhortations.

PONTE, LORENZO In DA, died at New York in 1840, professor of Italian language and history in the ut printy of New York.

PONTIAC, chief of the Sanks or Sacs, a warlike tribe of Indians on the Des Moines and Mississippi, was killed in a time of peace by the Kaskasklas and others. A desolating revenge was the consequence. F. Parkman, Jr., pullished a history of the conspiracy of Pontiae in POOLE, ELIZABETH, Miss, died at Taunton, Mass., May 21, 1654, aged 65. She was of a good family in Taunton, England 1 but she left her friends and prospects in the prime of her life, that she might enjoy freedom of conscience in a wilderness. She resided first at Dorchester. Then, in 1637, she commenced a settlement at Cohasset, now Taunton. She did good with her wealth. At the entrance of the new and beautiful cemetery, after the style of Mount Auburn near Boston, the ladies of Taunton have erceted a graceful monument "in honor of Elizabeth Poole." - Felt's Hist. of N. E.

POOLE, WILLIAM, of Dorchester, died in 1672. He was town clerk about forty years, and often a schoolmaster.

POOR, ENOCH, brigadier-general, died in New Jersey, Sept. 8, 1780, aged 43. He was a descendant of Daniel, who died in Andover, Mass., in 1713, aged 84.

POOR, DANIEL N., M. D., died in Newbury, Mass., in 1837, aged 78. Born in N., he graduated at Harvard in 1777.

POOR, DANIEL, D.D., missionary to Ceylon, died at Manepy, Feb. 3, 1855, aged 65. Mr. Meigs' letter, who was his fellow laborer nearly forty years, giving an account of his death, is in Missionary Herald. Born in Danvers, Mass., in June, 1789, he graduated at Dartmouth in 1811; studied theology at Andover; was ordained at Newburyport June 21, 1815, with Mills, Warren, Richards, Bushnell, and Meigs. He lived at Colombo, in Ceylon, from 1816 to 1823, when he took charge of the seminary at Batticotta. In 1836 he removed to Madura, in 1941 to Jaffna. In 1849 and 1850 he was in his native land. From 1851 till his death he resided at Manepy. He was an able, devoted, respected missionary, and he died in triumph: his last words were "Joy! joy! hallcluigh!" He was buried at Tillipally, near his first wife, an excellent missionary, Susan Bulfinch, of Salem, who died in 1821, and near Mr. Rich- vented a threshing-machine.

from Dr. Scudder only twenty-one days. Meigs and Spaulding survived him. He was taken sick of the cholera on Friday and died the next day, His second wife was Ann Knight from Fugland. - Sprague's Annals.

POPE, Joux, Dr., died in Boston in May, 1796, aged #5.

POPE, Joseph, minister of Spencer, Mass., died March 8, 1826, aged 70. He had a pulsy for eight years. His widow reached the age of 100, Dec. 16, 1854, retaining her powers of mind and body, excepting sight; and, it is thought, is still alive, in 1857. Horn in Pomfret, now Brooklyn, he was graduated at Cambridge in 1770. He was ordained July 17, 1778 He was a man of literary nequirements, and tary of the trustees of Leicester academy, rofessor Shartleff of Dartmouth married his de uphter. He was wise, courteous, fulthful his lite was honorable and useful.

POPE, NATHANIEL, juoge, died t St. Louis, Missouri, in 1850, aged 66. he was member of congress, and a judge of the istrict a Illinois.

POPE, LEMUEL presider of a loston insurance company, cird Aug. 5 1851, Roxbury, nged 74. He was for many year a rehant, much respected.

POPIIAM, GEORGE, presid f the first company of settlers in New En . safled from Plymouth, England, the last t v. 1607, with two ships and one hundred men, all necessary supplies. Capt. Popham had the ommand of one ship, and Ruleigh Gilbert, new of Sir Walter Raleigh, of the other. On the 11th of August they fell in with the island Monhegan, a few miles from the coast of Man and soon afterwards landed at the mouth of the Sagadahoc or Kennebee river, "on a western peninsula," and not on Parker's Island, as Gov. by ivan supposed. A sermon was delivered; the atent and laws were read; and a store-house tends, with a fort, which was called fort St. George. ships sailed on their return Dec. 5th, keeing a colony of 45 persons; Popham being pre dent and Gilbert admiral. The next year supplies were brought them; but intelligence being received at the same time of the death of Sir John Popham and Sir John Gilbert, and the president Popham being also deceased, the colony determined to return in the ships. The winter had been severe, and the stores had been lost by fire. Smith says, the country was esteemed a cold, barren, mountainous, rocky desert; and that this colony "found nothing but extreme extremities."

POPE, Joseph, an ingenious mechanic, died at Hallowell, Maine, in Aug., 1826, aged 72. He constructed a large and admirable orrery, which was purchased by Harvard college, and he in-genlus, day. ter of leld, in m 1794 in colod bible

bagail,

ighter,

rs rep-

mplary

Dr.

them ife, wl.o 15b 000 h P., J. M. Ililrave to lahed a

J. Wil-1826. Pome-.771 an e was a rlington, Middlethen setin 1797, the first ciun and r of anat-raduated d. Mass., muel and orthumpextensive

t Stock-

excellent Indians, north of lis father

d, Conn.,

rentham, y in 1777. nght muand was in 1798, members. holar, and nnals.

Pond, died native of e Rev. J.

Mas

N. 1

mini

then

For

He e ther

resu

adde

hunc

duri

field

philo

ia 18

1818

in 1

the f

Dec.

spen

publ

on t

serm

man

Palfr

theol

1834

Corn

gene

move

grad

dain

Sept

who

years

1811

and

chos

single of J

J. M

spiri

tion

socie

to th

on ( fast,

mar

fleet

rhet

stud

pub

tory

1

P(

P

P

P

P

POPKIN, JOHN SNELLING, D. D., died at | Cambridge, March 2, 1852, aged 80. Born in Boston June 19, 1771, he was graduated at Harvard in 1792, ordained over the Federal street church in Boston July 10, 1799, and dismissed in 1802. In Newbury he was a minister from 1804 to 1815, when he became professor of Greek at Cambridge. From 1826 to 1833 he was Eliot professor of Greek literature. For the rest of his life he resided in Cambridge. In 1844 and subsequently he had sudden attacks of disease, which impaired his memory. At last he had a fatal disease of the heart. As a preacher his discourses were sound, well-written, and useful; but he was not an orator. In his religious views he was not Unitarian but Evangelical. To a lady, who asked him if he was a Hopkinsian, he replied, "Madam, I am a Popkinsian." His sermon on the death of Washington contains passages of eloquence. He was never married. It is said that, fifty years after he was susceptible of attachment, he, contrary to the habit of his life, followed a venerable deceased lady to the grave. Whatever was in his memory, he never spoke of it. He published a sermon on the death of J. Kimball; on the death of Washington; on the memory of the rightcous; to recommend justice and charity; on leaving the old meeting-house; on the dedication of the new, 1806; on the seasons, time, and eternity; at the thanksgiving, 1813; thanksgiving for peace, 1815; on an affliction; two sermons before his removal to Cambridge, 1815; three lectures on liberal edueation, 1836. - Sprague's Annals.

POPMUNNUCK, ISAAC, an Indian, deacon of the church at Marshpec, died in 1758, aged about 80. He was an Indian magistrate of great reputation, the grandson of Popmunnuck, the sachem in 1648. His brother Josiah, a schoolmaster, died in 1770, aged about 85.

PORTER, Amon, first minister of Medfield, Mass., died in 1722, aged about 34. Born in Hadley, he graduated at Harvard in 1708, and was settled in 1713. His next successors were E. Turell and D. Osgood.

PORTER, Moses, captain, of Hadley, died Sept. 8, 1755, slain by the Indians while on a morning scott near Ticonderoga.

PORTER, SAMUEL, minister of Sherborn, Mass., died in 1758, aged 49. Born in Hadley, he graduated at Harvard in 1730, and was settled in 1734. His predecessors were D. Gookin and D. Baker. He published a sermon at ordination of W. Phipps, 1748; of J. Perry, 1755.

PORTER, Aanon, Dr., died at Portland at an advanced age. He came from Boxford, Mass., and settled in Biddeford in 1773; he removed to Portland in 1810. His wife, whom he married in 1777, was Pauline, daughter of Richard King of Scarborough.

PORTER, John, first minister of North Bridgewater, Mass., was graduated at Harvard college in 1736, and ordained in Oct., 1740. He died in the hope of the Christian March 12, 1802, aged 86. He was a man of respectable talents, of great prudence, and of a blameless life. As a preacher he dwelt with carnestness upon the great doctrines of the gospel. A crucified Redeemer was his frequent theme. Avoiding dry and barren speculations, he aimed to impart instruction, and to render men holy. His faithful labors were not in vain, for at different periods it pleased God by the influence of his Spirit to render them the means of converting many, who were chosen in Jesus Christ. He received four hundred and sixty-four into the church. At a donation visit in 1769, there met at his house ninety-seven young ladies, who presented his wife with four hundred and seventy-four skeins of varn, cotton, linen, woollen, by them spun, all dressed in homespun. He preached on "this woman was full of good works," Oct. 9. He had as colleague, for a short time, Asa Meach. After him the pastor was Daniel Huntington, more than twenty years. Mr. Porter had three sons, graduates at Cambridge in the same class in 1777, one of whom was Dr. E. Porter of Roxbury, He published a sermon at the ordination of Silns Brett, Freetown; the absurdity and blasphemy of substituting the personal righteousness of men in the room of the surety righteousness of Christ in the article of justification before God, 1749; reply to Mr. Bryant's remarks on the above sermon, 1751.

PORTER, NEHEMIAH, minister of Ashfield, Mass., died Feb. 29, 1820, aged 99 years and 11 months. He was born in Ipswich March 20, April 2, 1720; graduated at Harvard college in 1745; and was ordained Jan. 3, 1750, at Chebacco, now Essex, but was dismissed in 1766. He was installed at Ashfield Dec. 21, 1774. In June, 1819, at the age of 99, he assisted in ordaining his colleague, Thomas Shepard; he ascended the pulpit stairs without aid, made the consecrating prayer, and gave a charge to the people. By his first wife, the daughter of Rev. Mr. Chipman of Beverly, he had ten children, and two hundred and thirty descendants. He published a discourse July 4, 1811.

PORTER, Samuel, Dr., died at Williamsburgh Jan., 1822, aged 67.

PORTER, Mosrs, general, died at Cambridge, in April, 1822, aged 65. A native of Danvers, he was an officer of artillery in the battle of Bunker Hill; he was also in the battles of Brandywine and Trenton; he was with Wayne in 1791, and commanded at the capture of fort George in 1813. He was upright and honorable, dignified, a rigid disciplinarian.

PORTER, EXPERIENCE, minister of Belchertown.

Mass., died in 1828, aged 46. Born in Lebanon, N. H., died at an advanced age, about 1830 or N. H., he graduated at Dartmouth in 1803; was minister of Winehester, N. II., from 1807 to 1810; then of B. from 1814 to 1825. He followed J. Forward, and was succeeded by Lyman Coleman. He died of a consumption. During his ministry there were extensive revivals of religion, as the result of which, one hundred and seven were added to the church in 1812 and 1813, and two hundred and eight in 1818 and 1819; as many during his ministry as for eighty years before.

PORTER, MICAH, a minister, died in Plainfield, N. H., in 1829, aged 81.

ridge-

ollege

ied in

. aged

nts, of

As a

n the

d Reg dry

art in-aithful

iods it

to rea-

v. who

d four

At a house

nis wife

eins of

oun, all

" this

He had

After

re than

, grad-

77, one

y. lle

of Silas

sphemy

of men

f Christ

1, 1749;

ove ser-

Ashfield,

and 11

h 20, or

ollege in

at Che-

in 1766.

774. ln

ı ordain-

ascended

e conse-

e people.

Ir. Chip-

and two

mblished

Villiams-

mbridge,

nvers, he

f Bunker

andywine

1794, and

eorge in dignified,

chertown,

PORTER, WILLIAM A., professor of moral philosophy and rhetoric in Williams college, died in 1830, aged 31. He graduated at Williams in 1818, and was appointed Professor in 1827.

PORTER, THOMAS, died in Granville, N. Y., in 1833, aged 90. He was a soldier of 1755;

the father of Professor P. of Andover.

PORTER, ELIPHALET, D. D., died at Roxbury Dec. 7, 1833, aged 74. A graduate of 1777, he spent his life in the ministry at Roxbury. He published various discourses; a fast sermon, 1798; on the death of Gov. Sunner, 1799; new year's sermon, 1801; century sermon; before the humane society, 1802; at the ordination of J. G.

Palfrey, 1818.

PORTER, EBENEZER, D. D., president of the theological seminary at Andover, died April 8. 1834, aged 61. He was the son of Thomas P. of Cornwall, Conn., and a descendant of the sixth generation from Thomas of Hartford, who removed to Farmington, and died in 1697. He graduated at Dartmouth in 1792, and was ordained at Judea society in Washington, Conn., Sept. 7, 1796, the successor of Noah Merwin, whose daughter Lucy he married. After fifteen years of toil there, he was invited to Andover in 1811, as Bartlett professor of pulpit eloquence, and there passed the remainder of his life, being chosen president in 1827. He published many single sermons; among them, at the ordination of J. W. Putnam and A. Mitchell, 1815; of T. J. Murdock, 1819; on the fatal effects of ardent spirits, 1811; at the fast, 1816, 1823; at dedication of the new edifice, 1818; to the education society, 1820; to the pastoral association, 1827; to the society to give the gospel to the ludians; on God's immortality, 1829; two sermons at the fast, 1831. He also published the preacher's manual; a lecture on the analysis of vocal inflections; principles of rhetorical delivery; the rhetorical reader, 1831; a lecture on progress in study; lectures on homileties, preaching, and public prayer, 1834. - Sprague's Annals.

PORTER, GEORGE B., governor of the Territory of Michigan, died at Detroit in 1834.

PORTER, NATHANIEL, deacon, of Lebanon, | PORTER, ALEXANDER J., senator of the United later. He gave 12,000 dollars, almost all his property, to three charitable societies, for foreign and home missions and education.

PORTER, RACHEL, widow, died in Worthington June, 1834, aged 93. When above 90 she received for knitting six pair of mittens a premium, which she gave to the bible society, to which she had before given 1,000 dollars.

PORTER, ISRAEL, died at Cambridge May 28,

1837, aged 93, a respected citizen.

PORTER, NATHANIEL, D. D., died in Conway, N. H., Nov. 11, 1837, aged 92. Born in Tonsfield, Mass., he graduated at Harvard in 1768. He had been a farmer until of the age of 18. In 1773 he was ordained at New Durham, N. II.; in 1778 he became the first minister of Couway, and continued such more than thirty years. In his politics a zealous federalist, one of his sermons on the fourth of July displeased his people and caused his dismission. Subsequently he preached in the neighboring town of Fryeburg, even after he became blind, and after he was eighty years old. When unable to preach, he would make the public prayer, sometimes of the length of forty minutes, with great propriety. He was very poor: he used his seythe on his own small farm. He had scarcely twenty volumes of valuable books. Yet he was respected as a theologian, a moderate Calvinist. For the last twenty-five years living with a second wife, who had property, he had a comfortable subsistence. Two of his sons were masters of vessels, and perished at sea. He published two sermons on infidelity; on the death of Washington; before the legislature of New Hampshire, 1804; at the opening of an academy, 1806; on the fourth of July, 1811. - Sprague's Annals.

PORTER, ELIJAH, Dr., died at Waterford, N. Y., Jan., 1841, aged 67, one of the most distinguished physicians in Saratoga county.

PORTER, Samuel, died at Hadley April 23, 1841, aged 76; judge of the court of sessions.

PORTER, DAVID, commodore, died March 3, 1813, aged 63. Born in Boston, he was a midshipman under Traxton; he also sailed under Barron and Stewart. In an engagement with a corsair he was wounded. With Bainbridge he was captured in the Philadelphia in the harbor of Tripoli, in 1803. After five years he returned. From New York he sailed in the Essex July 3, 1812, and soon captured the Alert; he also captured a vessel with 11,000 pounds on board; and, doubling Cape Horn, he took many whaling vessels; but he was taken by the Phoebe and Cherub in the harbor of Valparaiso, March 28, 1814. He published a narrative of his cruise in the Essex.

He was a native of Ireland; a judge in Louisiana, of talents, learning, taste, and popular manners.

PORTER, HUNTINGTON, D. D., minister of Rye, N. H., died at Lynn March 7, 1844, aged 89. He graduated at Harvard in 1777, and was ordained as colleague of S. Parsons in 1784. From that time for thirty-eight years only eighty-four persons were received into the church. The sea-coast of Rye is perilous: forty or fifty persons, who have perished, have been taken up and decently buried. He published a century sermon, 1801; a funeral sermon; a new year's sermon, 1801; on a remarkable sickness, 1803.

PORTER, PETER B., general, died at Niagara Falls March 20, 1844, aged 71. Born in Salisbury, Conn., he was graduated at Yale in 1791. He was a useful officer of the army in the war of 1812. For a time he was secretary of war. His name is associated with important events in western New York.

PORTER, ISAAC, minister of Granby, Conn., died in 1844, aged about 76. Born in Farmington, he graduated at Yale in 1788.

PORTER, FIDELIA, died at New York Jan. 22, 1847, aged 76. She was the sister of Pres. Dwight, and married Jonathan E. Porter of Hadley; she afterwards lived in New Haven and New York. She was an intelligent Christian, of active benevolence. She toiled much for the benefit of seamen. - N. Y. Observer, March 13.

PORTER, WILLIAM, Dr., a descendant of Pres. Edwards, died at Hadley, Mass., Nov. 6, 1848, aged 83. He was a venerable member of the church, and one of the most respected of the citizens of Hadley.

PORTER, DAVID, D. D., died at Catskill Jan. 7, 1851, aged 89; his elder, S. L. Penfield, died the same day. Born in Hebron, Conn., he was nearly a year in the army, and then went to college, and was graduated at Dartmonth in 1784. For fourteen years he was the minister of Spencertown; then of Catskill from 1803 to 1831, when, after eminent usefulness, at the age of 70 he resigned. The last sermon which he preached to his people was the fifty-sixth anniversary of his ordination, Sept. 24, 1843, on the text, "The time is short." His wife was Sarah, the daughter of Mr. Collins, the minister of Lauesborough; and his daughter Laura, the wife of Mr. Hill, treasurer of the American board of missions, died in 1852. He published a sermon at the installation of D. Marsh, 1801; of R. Williams, 1812; of J. T. Benedict, 1816; at ordination of J. H. Hotelskin, 1803; of J. De Witt and of O. Lyman, PORTER, Moses, died at Hadley Ma, 22, 1854, aged 85, a grandson of Pres. Edwards. He was a Christian in early life, and a consistent,

States, died in Louisiana Jan. 13, 1844, aged 58. | rious commissions, civil and military. He visited the sick and prayed with them; and his hand was open in charity. To no man in the county was committed the trust of administering on so many estates. His death was very sudden.

I

1 dice

Lou

Ne

ter

he

riag

fam

Eas

71.

at ?

Bar

phi

of I

was

Pen

Pri

and

age

N. I

was wiel

qua

Ň. 1

lish

ľ

Put

em

wife

Top

ture

his I

die

N.

and

He.

182

and

tion

100 ten

sio

M

H

tor

die

co

In

ľ

ľ

I

1

PORTER, AMASA, a minister, died at New Haven in 1856, aged 85. He graduated at Yale

in 1793

PORTERFIELD, ROBERT, general, died in Augusta county, Va., Feb. 13, 1843, nged 90, He was a captain in the Revolutionary war, and a brigadier in that of 1812; a man highly es-

POST, WRIGHT, M. D., died at Throg's Neck. near New York, in 1828, aged 62. He was born at North Hempstead, Long Island, in 1766. From 1784 to 1786 he studied medicine in London. In 1792 he was appointed professor of surgery in Columbia college. He once tied the femoral artery and thus cured a disease of it, for which his patient paid him an annual visit of gratitude for thirty years. He was a physician of great eminence. He was a member of the Episcopal church, a strict attendant on religious worship. His eldest son, Edward, was a physician, who died in 1816, aged 24, having studied in England and France, and travelled in Switzerland and Italy. - Williams' Med. Biog.

POTTER, NATHANIEL, minister of Brookline, died in 1768, aged about 35. Born in Elizabethtown, he graduated at Princeton in 1753; was settled as successor of C. Brown in 1755, and was dismissed in 1759. His successor was J. Jackson. He published a discourse, Jan. 1, 1758.

POTTER, JARED, M. D., died at Wallingford. Conn., in 1810, aged 67. Born at East Haven, he graduated at Yale in 1760, and practised in his native town till his removal to W., in 1772. He was an excellent physician, and he kept a medical school. He loved also to discuss questions of theology and politics. He was frank and colloquial. Dr. James Potter, a kinsman, also eminent, was of New Fairfield .- Thacher's Med. Biog.

POTTER, ISAIAH, minister of Lebanon, N. H., died in 1817, aged about 70. He graduated at Yale in 1767, and was settled at L. in 1772. He published a masonic sermon at Hanover, 1802.

POTTER, ELISHA R., died at South Kingston, R. I., in 1835. For forty years he was a man of character and influence in the State. He was a member of congress in 1796, and from 1809 to 1815.

POTTER, MERCY, Mrs., died at Philadelphia

Aug. 21, 1841, aged 103.

POTTER, NATHANIEL, M. D., died in Baltimore in 1843, aged 73. Born in Maryland, he was an eminent physician, and for thirty years professor of the theory and practice of physic in earnest Christian all his days; he also held va- the university of Md. - Williams' Med. Biog.

POTTS, GEORGE C., minister at Philadelphia, died in 1838, aged 63.

POTTS, WILLIAM S., D. D., a minister in St. Louis, died in April, 1852. He was a native of New Jersey. He was a minister of high character and influence. For a short time, about 1837, he was president of Marion college. By marriage he was connected with Colonel Benton's

POTWINE, THOMAS, minister of Scantic, in East Windsor, Conn., died in 1802, aged about 71. The son of John P. of Boston, he graduated at Yale in 1751, and was ordained in 1754. S. Bartlett succeeded him.

POULSON, ZACHARIAH, died in Philadelphia, August, 1844, aged 82; long the proprietor of Poulson's Advertiser, a profitable paper. He was a Quaker.

POWER, JAMES, D. D., died at Greensburg, Penn., in 1830, aged 85. He graduated at Princeton in 1766.

POWERS, PETER, minister in Connecticut and Vermont, died at Deer Isle, Maine, in 1799, aged about 71. The first boy born in Hollis, N. H., in 1728, he graduated at Harvard in 1754; was ordained in 1756 at Newent society, Norwich, Conn., and dismissed in 1766 from inadequate support; then was pastor of Haverhill, N. H., and Newbury, Vt., till 1784. He published a sermon on the death of D. Bayley, 1772. - Sprague's Annals.

POWERS, Josian W., a minister, died in Putnam, Ohio, in 1840, aged 41. He was in the employment of the American bible society. His wife was the widow of Capt. Brewster, of the ship Topaz, who on his return from Calcutta was captured and murdered with his erew by pirates, and his ship burnt.

POWERS, GRANT, minister of Goshen, Conn., died in 1841, aged 56. He was born in Hollis, N. H., in 1784; graduated at Dartmouth in 1810; and was several years minister of Haverhill, N. H. He was afterwards settled at Goshen, Conn., in 1829. He was much esteemed for his talents and virtues. He published a sermon at ordination of J. D. Farnsworth; an essay on the influence of the imagination on the nervous system, contributing to a false hope in religion; a centennial address at Hollis, 1830.

POWERS, Mrs., wife of P. O. Powers, missionary at Broosa, Turkey, died at Phillipston, Mass., Feb. 15, 1842, aged 37. Her name was Harriet Goulding of Phillipston, but born at Paxton. Her return was caused by ill health. She died in great peace.

POWHATAN, emperor of the Indians in Virginia, at the time of the settlement of that colony in 1607, was the most powerful of the insidious, crafty, and cruel. After the marriage of his daughter to Mr. Rolfe, he remained faithful to the English. He died April, 1618.

POWNALL, THOMAS, governor of Massachusetts, died Feb. 25, 1805, aged 83. He was appointed to the office in 1757, in the place of Mr. Shirley. His measures were accommodated with great address to the state of the people, and he had the pleasure of seeing the British arms triumpliant in Canada; but, as he did not give his confidence to Mr. Hutchinson and his party, and as many slanders were propagated respecting him among the people, he solicited to be recalled. In 1760, when Sir Francis Bernard was removed to Massachusetts, he succeeded him in New Jersey, as lieutenant-governor. He was soon appointed governor of South Carolina; but from this station he was in about a year recalled, at his own request. In 1768 he was chosen a member of parliament, and he strenuously opposed the measures of the administration against the colonies. He declared that the people of America were universally, unitedly, and unalterably resolved never to submit to any internal tax, imposed by any legislature in which they were not represented. He retired from Parliament in 1780, and died at Bath, retaining his faculties in perfect vigor in his last days. His speeches in parliament were all published in Almon's pariamentary register, and he assisted Mr. Almon in his American remembrancer, in twenty volumes. He published principles of polity, 1752; administration of the colonies, 1764, of which there were afterwards several editions with improvements, and part II., 1774; the interest and duty of the State in East India offairs, 1773; memoir on drainage, 1775; description of North America, with Evans' map, improved; letter to Adam Smith on his inquiry into the wealth of nations, 1776; a memorial to the sovereigns of Europe on the state of affairs between the old and new world, 1780; two memorials, 1782; a memorial to the sovereigns of America; on the study of antiquities, 1783; notices and descriptions of antiquities of the provincia Romana of Gaul; intellectual physics; an essay on being; a treatise on old age.

PRATT, John, Dr., lived in Newton, Mass., in 1635. The assistants called him to account for an injurious letter sent to England. Mr. Felt gives an account of his ingenious apology. - Felt's Hist. of New Eng.

PRATT, John, an experienced surgeon, was admitted into Mr. Hooker's church at Cambridge in 1634. He sailed for England with his wife, and was lost in Dec., 1644, on the coast of Spain. - Farmer.

PRATT, PETER, an eminent lawyer, died at Indian kings. He was deeply versed in all the New London in Nov., 1730. Two of his daughsavage arts of government and policy, and was ters were drowned in a creek at Lyme in Sep-

's Neck, vas born n 1766. in Lonessor of tied the of it, for visit of physician r of the religious a physi-

studied

Switzer-

visited

hand

county

on so

at New

at Yale

died in ged 90.

r, and a

hly es-

rook line, Elizabeth-753; was 1755, and or was J. ı. 1, 1758. illingford, t Haven, actised in ., in 1772. ie kept a cuss queswas frank kinsman, Thacher's on, N. H., aduated at 1772. He r, 1802. th Kingshe was a State. Ilc and from hiladelphia

l in Baltiryland, he hirty years f physic ia d. Biog.

tember. He published the prey taken from the no wine nor any distilled spirits, and he was strong, the recovery of one from the Quaker errors.

The published the prey taken from the no wine nor any distilled spirits, and he was strong, the recovery of one from the Quaker errors.

The published the prey taken from the no wine nor any distilled spirits, and he was strong, the recovery of one from the Quaker errors.

PRATT, Peter, first minister of Sharon, Conn., died in 1780, aged about 64. He graduated at Yale in 1736. He was settled in 1740; his two next successors were J. Scarle and C. M. Smith.

PRATT, Benjamin, chief justice of New York, died Jan. 5, 1763, aged 53. He was born in Boston in 1709 of poor parents, and bred to a mechanical employment; but the misfortune of losing a limb was a great blessing to him, and made him a scholar and a man of eminence. He graduated in 1737 at Harvard college, and in the catalogue his name, in a class of thirty-four, is the lowest, the names then being placed necording to the dignity of parentage; yet his is the only name in the class which attained the dignity of being printed in capitals. Thus the lowest is the most honorable: the most degraded is the most dignified. He rose to distinction as a lawyer. He was a representative of Boston from 1757 to 1759, and ably supported the rights of the colonies. When Governor Pownall, by whom he was highly esteemed, was about to leave the province, he voted to send him away honorably and safely in the province ship, designed for the protection of the trade. This circumstance lost Mr. Pratt the favor of the merchants and mechanics of Boston; they in 1760 chose in his stead another representative, who, it is said, was skilful to ferment the populace against his rival. Truly it is not an easy thing, consistently with independence and honor, to retain amidst various exciting influences the popular good will. Mr. Pratt. however, was not forgotten by Gov. Pownall, who procured for him the appointment of chief justice of New York, in which station, though he retained it but a short time, he was admired for his penetration, learning, and eloquence. His wife was a daughter of Judge Auchmuty; he left a son and daughter; the descendants of the latter live in Boston. Judge Pratt was a writer of peetry, a specimen of which is preserved by Mr. Knapp. He also collected materials for a history of New England. No man in his day wrote in a better style. - Knapp's Biog. Sketches, 163-174.

PRATT, EPHRAIM, died in Shutesbury, Mass., May 22, 1804, aged 116. The grandson of John P., of Plymouth in 1620, he was born at Sudbury Nov. 1, 1687. At the age of twenty-one he married Martha Wheelock, and before his death he could number among his descendants about fifteen hundred persons. In the year 1801 four of his sons were living, the eldest of whom was ninety year. of age, and the youngest 82. Michael Pratt, his son, died at S. in December, 1826, aged 103 years. He was always remarkable for temperance. For the last sixty years he had tasted no wine nor any distilled spirits, and he was never intoxicated in his life. His drink was water, small beer, and eider. Living mostly on bread and milk, for forty years before his death he did not eat any animal food. Such was his uniform health, that before 1801 he had never consulted a physician. He swung a scythe 101 years.

ta

ea

pr

to

th

Se

pr

cit

P., cit

of lite

wa:

Wi

frie

to 1

por

Pre

lish

Ma

he

dair

Joh

dec

succ

Tha

of I the

ton

gra

173

tor

tow

Can

was

chu

He

whe

177

year

mor

Bre

175

Spi

Mas

F

I

PRATT, Levi, minister of Medford, Mass., died in 1837, aged 30. He graduated at Amherst in 1826.

PRATT, Horace S., professor of rhetoric in the university of Alabama, died at Tuscaloosa in 1840, aged 45. He graduated at Yale in 1817.

PRATT, BENJAMIN, deacon, died in Reading, Mass., in 1843, aged 84. He fought at Bunker Hill in 1775; and he died during the celebration at Bunker Hill in 1843.

PRATT, ALLEN, second minister of Westmoreland, N. H., died in 1843, aged 77. Born in East Bridgewater, he graduated at Harvard in 1785. He succeeded W. Goddard, who was ordained in 1764; he was settled in 1790, and over a second church in 1827.

PRATZ, LE PAGE DU, published histoire de Louisiane, 3 vols., 12mo., 1758.

PRAY, RUTULIUS R., died at Pearlington, Miss., in 1840, aged 45, judge of the high court of errors. He was an eminent lawyer and an upright judge.

PREBLE, EDWARD, commodore in the American navy, died Aug. 25, 1807, aged 46. He was a descendant of Abraham P., who lived in Scituate in 1637 and removed to Kittery; was the son of Brigadier-General Jedidiah P., who died at Portland, Me., in March, 1784, aged 77, and was born in August, 1761. About the year 1779 he served as a midshipman under Captain Williams, and in a short time was promoted to a lieutenancy on board the sloop-of-war commanded by Capt. Little, with whom he continued till the peace in 1783. In this station he performed a brilliant action. He boarded and captured with a few men a vessel of more than equal force lying in the harbor of Penobscot, under a furious cannonade from the battery and an incessant fire of the troops. In 1801 he had the command of the frigate Essex, in which he performed avoyage to the East Indies for the protection of our trade. In 1803 he was appointed commodore with a squadron of seven sail, and he soon made his passage to the Mediterranean with the design of humbling the Tripolitan barbarians. He first took such measures with regard to the Emperor of Morocco as led to a peace. He next, after the loss of the frigate Philadelphia, procured a number of gun-boats of the King of Naples, and proceeded to the attack of Tripoli. The Philadelphia was burned by Decatur, but the place was not taken. The bravery exhibited had, howwas s waly on death
us his never
e 101

Mass., Am-

orie in osa in 1817. ading, Bunker oration

West-Born vard in vas orad over oire de

Miss., ourt of an up-

Amer-He was n Scituthe son died at and was 1779 he Villiams, licutennded by till the rmed a red with rce lying ous cant fire of red with ree lying ous canto fire of nand of a voyage ur trade. e with a nade his lesign of He first Emperor ext, after ocured a ples, and e Philahe place had, however, its effect, for a peace was afterwards obtained on honorable terms. Such was the good conduct of Commodore Preble, that it extorted praise from the Bushaw of Tripoli, and even the Pope of Rome declared that he had done more towards humbling the anti-christian barbarians on that coast, than all the Christian States had ever done.

PREBLE, ENOCH, captain, died at Portland Sept. 28, 1842, uged 79. He was many years president of the marine society, and a respected citizen,—the son of Brigadier-General Jedidiah P., and the brother of Commodore Edward Preble.

PREBLE, HARRIET, Miss, died in Alleghany city, Feb. 5, 1854, niece of Commodore Preble, and sister of Mrs. Thos. Barlow. She was born and educated in Paris, enjoying all the advantages of wealth, skilled in French, English, and Italian literature. She lived in America perhaps twenty years. At first an unbeliever in the bible, she was converted to the Christian faith by reading Wilson's evidences. She read also carefully Dick's and Dwight's theology, and other works. To a friend she lamented the time spent on literature to the neglect of God's book, which utters all-important truth. She and her mother joined the Presbyterian church. Her memoirs were published by Prof. R. H. Lee.

PRENTICE, John, minister of Laneaster, Mass., died in 1746, aged 66. Born in Newton, he graduated at Harvard in 1700, and was ordained in 1708. He married a daughter of Rev. John Mellen of Chockset or Sterling. His predecessors were Joseph Rawlandson, from 1660 to 1678; John Whiting, from 1600 to 1697. His successors were Timothy Harrington, Nathaniel Thayer. He published a sermon on the death of Rev. R. Breck, 1731; before a court, 1731; the election sermon, 1735.

PRENTICE, SOLOMON, first minister of Grafton, Mass., died in 1773, aged about 91. He graduated in Harvard in 1727; was settled in 1731; and dismissed in 1747; he was next pastor of Easton from 1747 to 1754.

PRENTICE, THOMAS, minister of Charlestown, Mass., died in 1782, aged 80. Born in Cambridge, he graduated at Harvard in 1726; was ordained at Arundel, Me., in 1730, but the church was dispersed in the Indian war of 1737. He then was the minister of Charlestown; but when that town was burned by the British in 1775, he retired to Cambridge; but after three years resumed his labors. He published a sermon at thanksgiving for the reduction of Cape Breton, 1745; at a fast; on the earthquake, 1756; on the death of Mrs. A. Cary, 1755.—Sprague's Annals.

PRENTICE, CALEB, minister of Reading, for his writings. He published a poem at Brook-Mass., died in 1803, aged 56. Born in Camfield, also a satire, and New England freedom; ever, its effect, for a peace was afterwards obtained on honorable terms. Such was the good settled in 1769. His predecessor was W. Hobby; conduct of Commodore Preble, that it extorted his successor, R. Emerson.

PRENTICE, CHARLES, minister of Soath Canaan, Conn., died in 1838, aged 59. Born in Bethlehem, he graduated at Yale in 1802. He published a sermon at the ordination of C. T. Prentice, 1836.

PRENTISS, THOMAS, captain, of Cambridge village or Newton, died in 1710, aged 88. He was a freeman in 1652. He did good service in Philip's war, commanding a company of troops.—
Farmer.

PRENTISS, THOMAS, D. D., minister of Medfield, died in 1814, aged 66. Born in Holliston, he graduated at Harvard in 1766; he was settled in 1770. His predecessors were John Wilson, Joseph Baxter, and J. Townsend. His wife was a daughter of John Scollay, clerk of Boston forty years; his daughter, Mary, was the wife of Rev. Rufus Hurlbut of Sudbury. His four sons were educated at Cambridge. He was a man of character, and influence, and of zeal to do good. He was a leader in the temperance reform: he made successful efforts to establish in M. a large public library. He published a sermon at the ordination of S. Wright, 1785; of P. Clarke, 1793; of T. Mason, 1799; on the death of J. Haven, 1803; on the duty of brethren; on American independence; on idleness; religion and morality; Christians cautioned; on strengthening evil doers; fast sermon; to society for Christian knowledge .-Sprague's Annals.

PRENTISS, Thomas, Unitarian minister in Charlestown, Mass., died in 1817, in the year of his settlement, aged 25. The son of Rev. Dr. P. of Medfield, he graduated at Harvard in 1811. It is an almost unparalleled instance of the early death of a minister. Yet J. Paine, pastor of the same church, died in 1788, at the age of twentyfour, after having been the pastor a little more than one year.

PRENTISS, Samuel., Dr., died in Northfield, Mass., in 1818, aged 59. He was the son of Colonel Samuel P., of the Revolutionary army, and was born in Stonington, Conn. He studied with Dr. Philip Turner of Norwich, an excellent surgeon, and served in the war; then settled at Worcester, whence he removed to Northfield; and there his practice as a surgeon was extensive for twenty years. Of his four sons, Samuel was a judge in Vermont, and John H. of Cooperstown was twice a member of congress.—Williams' Med. Biog.

years resumed his labors. He published a sermon at thanksgiving for the reduction of Cape Breton, 1745; at a fast; on the earthquake, field, Mass., in 1820. He graduated at Harvard 1756; on the death of Mrs. A. Cary, 1755.—
Sprague's Annals.

PRENTICE. Cales. minister of Reading. for his writings. He published a poem at Brook-

on

len

was

a

ple

bei

set

in

Pro

1

me

No

gra

est

cdı

pui

dre

acti

I

N.

the

Ne

was

gen

his

Pro

who bia,

froi

in :

οť

ativ

die

at

ma

die

Oct

at

in

for

Jal

phy

con

and flict

and

sor

die

eig!

son

mo

tice

up

1

1

1

history of United States, 12mo.; life of Eaton;

PRENTISS, JOSHUA, died at Marblehead in 1837, aged 93, an officer of the Revolution.

PRENTISS, SERGEANT S., died near Natchez, July 1, 1850, aged 40. Born in Portland, the brother of Rev. Dr. P. of New York, he graduated at Bowdoin college in 1826. He went to the West and became a distinguished lawyer at Vicksburg. Gaining a suit involving a valuable portion of the city, he won not only a high reputation but a grand fee, which made him a very rich man. He was of brilliant eloquence as a stump orator, and also in congress. Becoming embarrassed in his affairs, he removed to New Orleans. He was admired for his talents and brilliant imagination, and for his social qualities and virtues endeared to his friends. A memoir, edited by his brother, was published by Scribner, New York, 2 vols., 1855.

PRENTISS, NATHANIEL SHEPHERD, a physician, died at West Cambridge in 1853, aged 87. He was born in Cambridge Aug. 7, 1766, was graduated in 1787, and practised twelve years in Marlborough. He was afterwards the teacher of the Latin school in Roxbury eight years, and was town clerk thirty years. He was a benefactor of the athenœum of R.

PRENTISS, SAMUEL, LL. D., judge of the district court of Vermont, died at Montpelier Jan. 15, 1857. The son of Dr. Samuel P., he was many years a senator of the United States, and a judge of the supreme court of Vermont.

PRESCOTT, BENJAMIN, a councillor, died at Groton, Mass., in 1738, aged 42. He was descended from John, who lived in Watertown in 1641. His wife was a daughter of Thomas Oliver of Cambridge, a member of the council. His sons were distinguished men, Oliver, James, and William.

PRESCOTT, BENJAMIN, minister of Danvers, died May 28, 1777, aged 89. The son of Jonathan of Concord, he graduated at Harvard in 1709; was ordained in 1713; and resigned his charge in 1756. He published a letter to the Salem church, 1735; one to J. Gee, 1743; to George Whitefield, 1745; on the controversy between Britain and the colonies, 1768. - Sprague's

PRESCOTT, WILLIAM, colonel, a soldier of the Revolution, died Oct. 13, 1795, aged 70. He was born at Groton, Mass., in 1725; his father was Benjamin P., a councillor; his mother was a daughter of Thomas Oliver, also a councillor. He inherited a large estate, and resided at Pepperell. Under Winslow he assisted in the conquest of Nova Scotia. His military talents being of a high order, he was intrusted with the com-

poems, 1813; trial of Calvin and Hopkins, 1819; | tion at Bunker Hill in the evening of June 16. 1775. In the battle of the 17th he was greatly distinguished. Colonel Swett has described his exertions on that day. He accompanied Washington to New York, and he served with Gates in the capture of Burgoyne. His brother James, a councillor, high sheriff of Middlesex, and chief justice of the common pleas, died Feb. 15, 1800.

PRESCOTT, OLIVER, M. D., a physician, brother of the preceding, died Nov. 17, 1804. aged 73. He was born April 27, 1731, and graduated at Harvard college in 1750. Dr. Thacher relates, that he was accustomed to sleep on horseback, while his horse proceeded at the usual pace. He was not only a physician of great eminence and usefulness, but a patriot of the Revolution, being about 1776 brigadier-general of the militia. and as such rendering important services, while the British occupied Boston. From 1777 to 1779 he was a member of the council, during which period there was no governor nor lieutenant-governor. From 1779 till his death he was judge of probate. He died at Groton of a dropsy in the chest. His son, James, succeeded him as judge of probate. One of his daughters married Timothy Bigelow. He was tall and corpulent. The versatility of his powers was remarkable. He early made a profession of religion, and was always an influential member of the church at Groton. - Thacher.

PRESCOTT, ABEL, Dr., died in Concord, Mass., in 1805, aged 88. He had been an eminent phy-

PRESCOTT, OLIVER, M. D., a physician, son of Dr. Oliver P., was born April 4, 1762; was graduated at Harvard college in 1783; studied physic with Dr. Lloyd, and settled at Groton, where he had extensive practice. In 1811 he removed to Newburyport, where he died of the typhus fever, Sept. 26, 1827, aged 65. He was an eminent physician, and he early made a profession of his Christian faith. He published various articles in the New England journal of medicine; also a dissertation on ergot, which was reprinted in London, and in France and Germany. - Thacher.

PRESCOTT, WILLIAM, M. D., died in Lynn in 1844, aged about 81. He graduated at Ilar-vard in 1783.

PRESCOTT, WILLIAM, judge, died in Boston Dec. 8, 1844, aged 82. He was born in Pepperell, descended from ancestors who came to America about 1640. His father, Col. Wm. Prescott, commanded at the battle of Bunker Hill. Prepared for college by Master Moody, he graduated in 1783. For two years he taught school in Beverly, and there studied law with Mr. Dane. At Salem he married the daughter of Mr. Ilickling, consul at St. Michael's. Such was his emimand of the troops who threw up the fortifica- nence as a lawyer, that he was twice offered a seat on the bench of the supreme court. From Salem he removed to Hoston in 1808. In 1814 he was a member of the Hartford convention. For a year he was judge of the court of common pleas. After forty years he retired from practice, being then at the head of the bar in Massachusetts. For the last sixteen years he lived quietly in retirement. His widow, the mother of Mr. Prescott the historian, died in Boston May 17, 1852, aged 84.

PRESCOTT, AARON, a lawyer of peculiar and memorable benevolence, died in Randolph, Mass., Nov. 24, 1851, aged 64. Born in Westford, he graduated at Harvard in 1814. He was honest and exemplary. He had no son; yet the education of youth engrossed his thoughts. He purchased a large and valuable library for children and youth, and kept it at his office; and, acting as librarian, loaned the books gratuitously. _ Boston Advertiser, Dec. 3, 1851.

PRESCOTT, JOSEPH, Dr., died at Halifax,

N. S., in 1852, aged 90. He was a physician in the Revolutionary army.

PRESTON, JOHN, Dr., the first physician of New Ipswich, N. II., died in 1803, aged 64. He was a patriot of the Revolution; a member of the general court, and a magistrate; and eminent in his profession. Perhaps his son was Dr. John Preston, a graduate of Dartmouth in 1791, and who died in 1828.

PRESTON, FRANCIS, general, died at Columbia, S. C., in 1835, aged 70. He was in congress from 1793 to 1797.

PRESTON, WILLIAM, died at Rumney, N. H., in 1842, aged 87; a Revolutionary pensioner, one of the first settlers of the town, and its representative in the general court.

PRESTON, JAMES P., colonel, governor of Va., died at Smithfield in 1843, aged 68. Wounded at Chrystler's field in the war of 1812, he was maimed for life.

PRESTON, AMARIAH, Dr., a remarkable man, died at the house of his son in Lexington, Mass., Oct. 29, 1853, aged nearly 95. His father died at the age of 95 in Connecticut. He was born in Uxbridge, and enlisted in the army in 1777 for three years; then studied medicine with Dr. Jabez Brown of Wilmington; afterwards practised physic forty years in Bedford. In his old age, in consequence of an indorsement, he lost his house and all his property; his wife died, and other afflictions came upon him. His business failed: and in 1832 he removed to Plymouth, where his son Dr. Hervey N. Preston lived. But his son died in 1837, when, in poverty, the old man of eighty resolved to commence life anew. Selling some furniture, he provided for his board for one | He was ordained in Philadelphia May 20, 1821. month, and entered again upon the medical practice, which soon became lucrative, so that he laid up 3,000 or 4,000 dollars, and again retired. | character was known at court, he was ordered by Such enterprise in an old man has seldom been witnessed; even in his last years he worked with his hands, being an ingenious mechanic. As a Christian he was eminent; a zealous professor during the ministry of Mr. Stearns in Hedford, he died a member of the church in Plymoutis. To a friend he said: "You mean to be a good man, but you are deluded; you can never get to heaven except through the blood of Christ; you must have repentance and you must have faith." His own end was peace.

PRESTON, WILLARD, D. D., president of Vermont university, died at Savannah suddenly of a paralysis of the heart, April 26, 1856, aged nearly 71. Born in Uxbridge, he graduated at Brown university in 1806, and practised law in Providence. He was then the minister of the third church in P. from 1816 to 1820; next of St. Albans, and president of the university. He removed to Georgia in 1829. In 1831 he became pastor of an Independent church in Savannah, in which office he continued till his death. He was a faithful and excellent minister. Fearlessly he remained with his people during the scourge of the yellow fever in 1854, visiting the sick and afflicted,-even the dark night saw him with a lantern in his hand on his errand of mercy. Ministers of various denominations attended his funeral. He published a farewell sermon at St. Albans, 1815; a sermon at Brooklyn, 1817.

PRICE, ROGER, Episcopal minister in Boston, was rector of King's chapel from 1729 to 1746. S. Myles was his predecessor; Dr. II. Caner suceeeded him.

PRICE, RICHARD, D. D., a friend of American liberty, was born in Wales, Feb. 22, 1723, the son of a Calvinistic minister. He was educated at an academy near London. In 1757 he became the pastor of a dissenting eongregation at Newington Green, and in 1769 the pastor at Hackney. In his religious sentiments he was an Arian. He died March 19, 1791, aged 67. His nephew, William Morgan, wrote his life and described his excellent character. He published a review of the principal questions in morals; four dissertations; observations on annuities, etc.; discussion concerning materialism and necessity, in a correspondence with Dr. Priestley; two volumes of sermons. His works, which procured for him great respect in America, were observations on civil liberty and the justice of the war with America, 1776; additional observations, 1777; importance of the American Revolution and the means of making it useful to the world, 1784.

PRICE, JONATHAN D., a physician and a Baptist missionary to Burmah, died Feb. 14, 1828. He arrived early in the next year at Rangoon, where his wife died May 2d. When his medical

d his Vashites in nes, a chief 1800. sicinn, 1804. gradıacher horsel pace. inence hition, militia.

ile the

779 he ie 16,

reatly

ch pegoverdge of in the judge d Tim-. The e. He was alırch at

, Mass., nt phyan, son

2; was

studied Groton. 811 he of the He was a prohed varnal of , which

n Lynn nt Har-Boston

nce and

Pepperame to n. Preser Hill. e gradt school r. Dane. r. Hickhis emi-

d a seat

W

m

di

ti

C

m

do

th

03 ot

he pł

re

ch

a tlı

vio

er

vii

hi

on

WE

th

hi

pr

tri

int

th

on

va

cri

lig

Re

ter of

th

wi

co

on

an ne

co 3

di

ma

lar

ar of

th

pa

ag Sc

ch

801

of

in

the king to repair to Ava, where he was intro- | year. Falling under the suspicion of Arianism, duced to the king, who gave him a house. When the British invaded Hurmah, he and Mr. Judson were thrown into prison, June 8, 1824. He was confined and subject to dreadful sufferings till Feb. or March, 1826, when he was released, and employed to negotiate a treaty with the British, who had advanced near to the capital. After the war he resided at Ava, in the favor of the emperor; ho engaged in the tuition of several scholars; and by his lectures hoped to shake the foundation of Boodhism. But he fell a victim to a pulmonary consumption.

PRICE, JOHN, a minister, died in Talbot co.,

Maryland, in 1831, aged 75.

PRICE, C. M., general, died at Jackson, Miss., Dec. 20, 1850. He was ten years editor of the PRIDGEN, WILLIAM, died in Bladen county, N. C., Oct. 14, 1845, aged 123. He was a soldier of the Revolution, and a pensioner. His sight had been lost for a few years, but he retained his mental faculties. He left one son.

PRIEST, DEGORY, one of the first Plymouth pilgrims, died Jan. 1, 1621.

PRIESTLEY, JOSEPH, D. D., an eminent philosopher and voluminous writer, died Feb. 6, 1804, aged 70. He was born at Fieldhead, in Yorkshire, England, March 24, 1733. His father was a cloth-dresser. At the age of nineteen he had acquired in the schools to which he had been sent, and by the aid of private instruction, a good knowledge of Greek, Latin, and Hebrew, French, Italian, and German; he had also begun to read Arabic, and learned Chaldee and Syriac. With these attainments and others in mathematics, natural philosophy, and morals, he entered the academy of Daventry under Dr. Ashworth in 1752, with a view to the Christian ministry. Here he spent three years. The students were referred to books on both sides of every question, and required to abridge the most important works. The tutors, Mr. Ashworth and Mr. Clark, being of different opinions, and the students being divided, subjects of dispute were continually discussed. He had been educated in Calvinism, and in early life he suffered great distress from not finding satisfactory evidence of the renovation of his mind by the Spirit of God. He had a great aversion to plays and romances. He attended a weekly meeting of young men for conversation and prayer. But, before he went to the academy, he became an Arminian, though he retained the doctrine of the trinity and of the atonement. At the academy he embraced Arianism. Perusing Hartley's metaphysical works, he was fixed in the belief of the doctrine of necessity. In 1755 he became assistant minister to the Independent congregation of Needham Market in Suffolk, upon a salary of forty pounds a

he became in 1758 pastor of a congregation at Nantwich in Cheshire, where he remained three years, being not only minister but schoolmaster. In 1761 he removed to Warrington as tutor in the belles lettres in the academy there. In 1767 he accepted the pastoral office at Leeds. Ilere, by reading Lardner's letter on the Logos, he became a Socinian. In 1773 he went to live with the Marquis of Lansdowne as librarian, or literary companion, with a salary of 250 pounds a year. During a connection of seven years with his lordship he visited in his company France, Holland, and some parts of Germany. He then became minister of Birmingham. At length, when several of his friends celebrated the French revolution, July 14, 1791, a mob collected and set fire to the dissenting meeting-houses, and several dwelling-houses of dissenters, and among others to that of Dr. Priestley. He lost his library, and was forced to take refuge in the metropolis. He was chosen to succeed Dr. Price at Hackney, and was a lecturer in the dissenting college of that place. But, the public aversion to him being strong, and his sons emigrating to the United States, he followed them in April, 1794. He settled at Northumberland, a town of Pennsylvania, about one hundred and thirty miles horthwest of Philadelphia. In this city for two or three winters after his arrival he delivered lectures on the evidences of Christianity. He died in calmness, and in the full vigor of his mind. He dictated some alterations in his manuscripts half an hour before his death. He was amiable and affectionate in the intercourse of private and domestic life. Few men in modern times have written so much, or with such facility; yet he seldom spent more than six or eight hours in a day in any labor which required much mental exertion. A habit of regularity extended itself to all his studies. He never read a book without determining in his own mind when he would finish it; and at the beginning of every year he arranged the plan of his literary pursuits and scientific researches. He labored under a great defect, which, however, was not a very considerable impediment to his progress. He sometimes lost all ideas both of persons and things, with which he had been conversant. He always did immediately what he had to perform. Though he rose early and dispatched his more serious pursuits in the morning; yet he was as well qualified for mental exertion at one time of the day as at another. All seasons were equal to him, early or late, before dinner or after. He could also write without inconvenience by the parlor fire with his wife and children about him, and oecasionally talking to them. In his family he ever maintained the worship of God. As a schoolmaster and professor he was indefatigable.

anism. tion at l three naster. itor in n 1767 Here, he beve with literary a year. is lordlolland, hecame en sevrevoluset fire several others rry, and is. He icy, and of that n being United 04. He Ponnsyls northtwo or ered lee-He died is mind. nuscripts amiable vate and nes have ; yet he urs in a cutal exitself to without ie would year he uits and a great considermetimes ngs, with ways did Though e serious as well ne of the equal to ter. He e by the out him,

is family

d. As a fatigable.

mind underwent a number of revolutions; but he died in the Socinian faith, which he had many years supported. He possesses a high reputation as a philosopher, particularly as a chemist. Commencing his chemical career in 1772, he di more for chemistry in two years than had been done by any of his predecessors. He discovered the existence of vital or dephlogisticated air, the oxygen gas of the French nomenclature, and other kinds of aeriform fluids. He always adhered to the old doctrino of Stahl respecting phlogiston, though the whole scientific world had rejected it. But his versatile mind could not be confined to one subject. He was not only a chemist, but an eminent metaphysician. He was a materialist and necessarian. He maintained that all volitions are the necessary result of previous circumstances, the will being always governed by motives; and yet he opposed the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination. The basis of his necessarian theory was Hartley's observations on man. The chart of history used in France was much improved by him, and he invented the chart of biography, which is very useful. Of his numerous publications the following are the principal: a treatise on English grammar, 1761; on the doctrine of remission; history of electricity, 1767; history of vision, light, and colors; introduction to perspective, 1770; harmony of the evangelists; address to masters of families on prayer; experiments on air, 4 vols.; observations on education; lectures on oratory and criticism; institutes of natural and revealed religion; a reply to the Scotch metaphysicians, Reid, Oswald, and Beattie; disquisitions on matter and spirit, 1777; history of the corruptions of Christianity; letters to Bishop Newcome on the duration of Christ's ministry; correspondence with Dr. Horseley; history of early opinions concerning Jesus Christ, 4 vols., 1786; lectures on history and general policy; answers to Paine and Volney; several pieces on the doctrine of necessity, in the controversy with Dr. Price; discourses on the evidences of revealed religion, 3 vols.; letters to a philosophical unbeliever; discourses on various subjects. He also wrote many defences of Unitarianism and contributed largely to the theological repository. After his arrival in this country he published a comparison of the institutions of the Mosaic religion with those of the Hindoos; Jesus and Socrates compared; several tracts against Dr. Linn, who wrote against the preceding pamphlet; notes on the Scriptures, 4 vols.; history of the Christian church, 6 vols.; several pamphlets on philosophical subjects, and in defence of the doctrine of phlogiston. Dr. Priestley's life was published in 1806 in two volumes. The memoirs were written by himself to the year 1787, and a short value in money. Though his abilities had not

With respect to his religious sentiments his continuation by his own hand brings them to 1795.

> PRIME, EBENEZER, minister of Huntington, Long Island, sixty years, died in 1779, aged 79. He graduated at Yale college in 1718. He was o grandfather of N. S. Prime.

PRIME, NATHANIEL SCUDDER, D. D., died at Mamaroneek, near New York, March 27, 1856, aged 70. He was buried at the cemetery of the evergreens. He was a native of Huntington, L. I., where his father, Benjamin Young P.ime, M. D., was a very distinguished physician and scholar. For fourteen years he was the minister of the church of Cambridge, N. Y. His sister, reliet of S. J. Wetmore, died May 20, 1841, aged 77, in New York. Dr. P. had the happiness of being the father of worthy sons, two of them ministers and one the principal editor of the New York Observer; one a physician; and one a lawyer now travelling in the east; and a daughter married to A. P. Cummings, one of the editors of the New York Observer. He published the history of Long Island, an elaborate work.

PRIME, NATHANIEL, an eminent merchant in New York, of the house of Prime, Ward, King and Co., died on the shore of East River in 1840.

PRINCE, THOMAS, governor of Plymouth colony, died at Plymouth March 29, 1673, aged 72. He was a native of England, and arrived at Plymouth in 1621; he wrote his name Prence. He was first chosen governor in 1634. Being appointed an assistant the next year, he continued in this office, except in the year 1638, when he was chosen governor, till the death of Mr. Bradford in 1657. At this time, as a disposition prevailed in the colony to discountenance regular ministers by giving the preference to the gifts of the private brethren, it was thought that his re-election to the office of governor would prevent the church from being overwhelmed with ignorance, and it proved highly beneficial to the interests of religion. He was governor from 1657 to 1672. He had been living at Nauset or Eastham, of which town he was one of the first planters in 1644; but after being chosen governor he removed to Plymouth. He was succeeded by Mr. Winslow. His second wife, married in 1635, was Mary Collier, whose sister Elizabeth married Constant Southworth; his third wife was Mary, the widow of Samuel Freeman, whom he married in 1662. He was a man of great worth and piety, and eminently qualified for his station. Strict in his religious opinions, he zealously opposed those whom he believed to be heretics, particularly the Quakers. As a magistrate, such was his care to be impartial, that if any person who had a cause in court sent a present to his family during his absence, he immediately on being informed of it returned its

t l

tÎ

t!

di

p: hi

be le

20 th

S

pu

th

lig

th

17

in

COL

va

the

di

the

als

an

wa

an

the

ha

arı

th

on

ch

H

wa

an

scl

ra

П

es:

co

he

mi

th

friend of learning. In opposition to the clamors of the ignorant he procured revenues for the support of grammar schools in the colony. - Magnalia, 11. 6, 7.

PRINCE, THOMAS, minister in Boston, died Oct. 22, 1758, aged 71. He was the fourth son of Samuel Prince of Sandwich, and grandson of Elder John Prince of Hull, who came to this country in 1633, and was the son of Rev. John P. of East Shefford in Berkshire. He was born at Sandwich May 15, 1687, and was graduated at Harvard college in 1707. Having determined to visit Europe, he sailed for England April 1, 1709. For some years he preached at Combs in Suffolk, where he was earnestly invited to continue, but his attachment to his native country was too strong to be resisted. He arrived at Boston July 20, 1717, and was ordained pastor of the old south church, as colleague with Dr. Sewall, his classmate, Oct. 1, 1718. In this station his fine genius, improved by diligent study, polished by an extensive acquaintance with mankind, and employed to the noblest purposes of life, rendered him an ornament to his profession, and a rich blessing to the church. In his last sickness he expressed a deep sense of his sinfulness, and a desire of hetter evidence that he was fit to dwell in heaven. When his speech failed him, as he was asked whether he was submissive to the Divine will, and could commit his soul to the care of Jesus, he lifted up his hand to express his resignation, and confidence in the Saviour. From his youth he had been influenced by the fear of God. He was an eminent preacher, for his sermons were rich in thought, verspicuous and devotional, and he inculcated the doctrines and duties of religion as one who felt their importance. The original languages, in which the Scriptures were written, were familiar to him. In the opinion of Dr. Chauncy no one in New England had more learning, except Cotton Mather. Firmly attached to the faith once delivered to the saints, he was zealous for the honor of his Divine Master. He was anxious to preserve suitable discipline in the church, that those who had been guilty of open sins might be reclaimed, and that the name of Christian might be preserved from reproach. He mourned over the degeneracy of the New England churches both in doctrine and practice. When Mr. Whitefield visited this country in 1740, Mr. Prince received him with open arms, and was always his friend. He always respected that Christian benevolence, which animated the eloquent itinerant; and he was grateful for those labors which were so eminently useful to his people and the town of Boston. In private life he was amiable and exemplary. It was his constant endeavor to imitate the perfect example of his Master and Lord been of incalculable value. He published also an been much improved by education, he was the He was ready to forgive injuries, and return good for evil. By the grace of God he was enabled to preserve a calmness of mind under very trying events. When heavy afflictions were laid upon him, he displayed exemplary submission to the will of God. Though he was a learned man, and was uncommonly diligent in study, yet he relished the comforts and faithfully discharged the duties of domestic life. It was no small part of his labor to impress on his children a sense of religion, and he had the happiness of seeing all his offspring walking in the truth. His wife, Deburah Denny, survived him, and died Juno 1, 1766. The only child who survived him was Sarah, who in 1759 married Mr. Gill, afterwards lieutenantgovernor, and died without children in August, 1771.

> Mr. Prince began in 1703, while at college, and continued more than fifty years, a collection of public and private papers relating to the civil and religious history of New England. His collection of manuscripts he left to the care of the old south church; and they were deposited in an apartment of the meeting-house, with a valuable library of books which he had established, under the name of the New England library. But the manuscripts were principally destroyed by the British during the war, and thus many important facts relating to the history of this country are irrecoverably lost. The books yet remain, and have been deposited in the historical library. He published an account of the first appearance of the aurora borealis; a sermon at thanksgiving, 1717; at his own ordination, 1718; an account of the English ministers at Martha's Vineyard, annexed to Mayhew's Indian converts, 1727; election sermon, 1730; on the day of prayer for the choice of a minister, 1732; on the death of George L, 1727; of Cotton Mather, and Samuel Prince, his father, 1728; a sermon on the arrival of the governor, 1728; on the death of Samuel Sewall, 1730; Daniel Oliver and Daniel Oliver. Jun., 1732; Mrs. Oliver, 1735; Mary Belcher, 1736; Nathaniel Williams, 1738; Mrs. Deborah Prince, 1741; Thomas Cushing, 1746; Martha Stoddard, 1748; the Prince of Wales, 1751; Hannah Fayerweather, 1755; Edward Bromfield and Josiah Willard, 1756; a chronological history of New England in the form of annals, 12mo., 1736, and three numbers of the second volume in 1755. In this work it was his intention to give a summary account of transactions and occurrences relating to this country, from the discovery of Gosnold in 1602 to the arrival of Governor Belcher in 1730, but he brought the history down only to 1633. He spent much time upon the introductory epiteme, which begins at the creation. Had he confined himself to New England, and finished his work, it would have food 1 iabled trying uron to the m, and elished duties of his of reliall his Debo-, 1766.

th, who tenant-August, ge, and tion of ivil and colleethe old in an aluable l, under But the by the imporcountry remain, library. carance sgiving, account ineyard, s, 1727; raver for death of Samuel e arrival Samuel l Oliver, Belcher. Deborah Martha s, 1751; romfield rical hisf annals, e second is intennsactions from the arrival of ught the uch time begins at to New uld have

d also an

the Christian history, 1744; a sermon on the attle near Culloden, and the destruction of the Marquis D'Anville's squadron t a thanksgiving sermon on the taking of Louisburg, 1716; a thanksgiving sermon for reviving rains, after the distressing drought, 1749; the New England psalm-book revised and improved, 1758. After his death, Dr. John Erskine of Ediuburgh published from his manuscripts six sermons, the last of which was occasioned by the death of his son, Thomas Prince. - Wisner's Hist. of Old South; Sprague's Annals. PRINCE, THOMAS, son of the preceding, was born Feb. 27, 1722; graduated at Harvard college in 1740; and died in October, 1748, aged 26. He died in Christian peace, as did also his three sisters, Deborah, 1744; Mercy, 1752; Mrs. Sarah Gill, 1771. The dying exercises of Deborah and devout meditations of Mrs. Gill were published at Edinburgh, 1785. Mr. P. published the Christian history, a periodical account of religion, beginning March 5, 1743, in 2 vols., 8vo., 1741-1745.

PRINCE, NATHAN, a distinguished scholar, the brother of Rev. Thomas P., died July 25, 1748, aged about 50. He was graduated at Harvard college in 1718. He was chosen tutor in 1723, and fellow in 1737; but he was removed in 1742. He in consequence published an account of the constitution and government of Harvard college from its first foundation in 1636 to the year 1742, in which he endeavored to prove that the general court had the sole power of dismissing members of the corporation, and are the only visitors of the college. In this work he also complains of the management of the treasury, and reprobates the injustice which he believes was done in arranging the students in the classes, and their names in the catalogue, according to the dignity or worth of their connections. He had before his removal refused to assist in this arrangement. The alphabetical disposition of the names was not made till 1773. Mr. Prince once had a deep-rooted aversion to the Episcopal church; but after his dismission he took orders. He died at Ratlan in the West Indies, where he was a minister. He was a greater mathematician and philosopher, and a much better classical scholar and logician than his brother; and is ranked among the great men of this country. He published, besides the book mentioned, an essay to solve the difficulties attending the accounts of the resurrection, 1734.

PRINCE, JOHN, LL. D., died in Salem June 7, 1836, aged 85. Born in Boston July 22, 1751, he graduated in 1776, and was ordained as the minister of the first church in Salem in 1779, so that he was pastor more than fifty-six years. He ful and successful pastor of the church in Salem, account of the revival of religion in Bosto , in and mer tient phillosophy. He made my rev ments in e nir-pun A memoir ! C. W. 1 phum is ist, coll merica, v He hehandre flity vol quenthed a lbrury to the use of the cos of howers. He published a fast seri . t7ftv; to . dtuble soclety, 1806; on the hof Dr. 1 anurd, 1814; before the bible society, 1816.

PRINCE, OLIVER II., died Oct. 9, 1837; lost with one hundred others in the wreck of the steamboat Home, near Ocracocke. He had been a member of the United States senate from Georgia. He was at Boston during the summer, editing the laws of Georgia, then in the press.

PRINCE, WILLIAM, died at Flushing, N.Y., April 6, 1812, aged 76. As the enterprising proprietor of a botanic garden and nursery, he was long a public benefactor.

PRINCELY, PHILIP, died at Northampton Sept. 9, 1855, aged 110. He was born in Ireland in 1745, and came to N. about 1780. Till the last three years he had voted at the town meetings. He left a son in N.

PRIOLEAU, Elias, a minister, the founder of a very respectable family in South Carolina, came to this country soon after the revocation of the edict of Nantes in 1685. He was the grandson of Authonie P., elected doge of Venice in 1618. A theologian of the name of P. died in 1734. Samuel P. died in 1792, aged 74. Dr. P. was a grandson, living in 1809. Among the other French names in South Carolina, were Bordeaux, Du Pont, Gaillard, Huger, Legare, Laurens, Marion, and Simons.

PRITCHARD, BENJAMIN B., the Kent giant, died in Montgomery county, N. Y., June 30. 1835. His weight was five hundred and twenty-five pounds.

PROCTOR, Johnson, captain, a Revolutionary patriot, died at Danvers Nov. 11, 1851, aged 86. He was a man of industry and integrity. For his last ten years he was blind.

PROUD, ROBERT, a historian, died July 7, 1813, aged 85. He was born in Yorkshire, England, May 10, 1728, and in January, 1759, arrived at Philadelphia, where he lived half a century. For many years he was a teacher in a school of the Quakers. In the Revolution he was a decided Royalist. About the year 1791 he devoted himself to writing his history, the publication of which was attended with pecuniary loss. He was tall; his nose was Roman, with " most impending brows. Domine Proud wore a curled gray wig, and a half-cocked ancient hat. He was the model of a gentleman."

PROUDFIT, ALEXANDER, D. D., died at his son's house in New Brunswick, N. J., April 17, 1843, aged 75. He was for many years the faithpossessed an uncommon knowledge of natural N. Y., being a colleague with his father from 1794

New York colonization society. He was an eminently pious, faithful, and useful minister. His works are instructive, and written in a fervent style of piety. He published a sermon at ordination of H. Davis, 1810; before American board, 1822; at installation of J. Proudfit, 1828; ruin and recovery of man, 12mo., 1800; theological works, 4 vols., 12mo., 1815. - Observer, June 10.

PROUDFOOT, WILLIAM, died at London, Canada West, Jan. 16, 1851, aged 63, professor of theology in the Presbyterian church.

PROVOOST, SAMUEL, D. D., bishop of New York, died in New York in 1815, aged 73. He graduated at Columbia college in the first class in 1758. Ilis name is sometimes written Provost, PRUDDEN, PETER, the first minister of Milford, Conn., died in 1656, aged 56. He was born in Herefordshire, England , arrived in company of J. Davenport in 1637; resided for some time at Dedham; and was settled at M. in 1640. His four next successors were R. Newton, S. Andrew, S. Whittlesey, S. Wales. - Farmer.

PRUDDEN, John, supposed to have been the son of Peter, died in 1725, aged 79. He gradnated at Harvard in 1668; was settled as minister of Jumaica, L. I., in 1670, and thence removed to Newark, N. J., in 1692, but resigned his charge in 1699.

PRUDDEN, Job, the minister of Milford, Conn., died in 1774, aged about 51. He was the pastor of the second church. He graduated at Yale in 1743.

PRUDDEN, NEHEMIAH, minister of Enfield, Conn., died in 1815, aged 65. Born in Milford, he graduated at Yale in 1775, and was ordained in 1782. His predecessors were N. Cellins, P. Reynolds, and E. Potter; his successor was F. L. Robbins. He published a treatise on marrying a sister of a deceased wife, 1811; a sermon to a missionary society, 1815. - Sprague's An-

PUFFER, REUBEN, D. D., minister of Berlin, Mass., died April 9, 1829, aged 73. Born in Sudbury, he graduated at Harvard in 1778. In 1781 he was ordained in Bolton, south parish, now Berlin. He died of a rheumatic fever. It is remarkable that he had prepared in advance, for preaching, about fifty sermons. By his first wife he had thirteen children; and one child by his second wife. He was a man of dignity and of suavity, acceptable as a preacher, orthodox in his faith. When he preached the Dudleian lecture at Cambridge, the students generously published it in a manner to furnish a sum of money to the preacher, who was a poor man with a large family, living on a salary of 80 pounds. He published the election sermon, 1803; Dudleian high Christian character, venerated and beloved to 1802. He was afterwards the secretary of the | lecture, 1808; convention sermon, 1811; address on fourth of July; two sermons on leaving the old and entering the new meeting-house. -Sprague's Annals.

PULASKI, count, brigadier-general in the army of the United States, died October 11, 1779. He was a Polander of high birth, who with a few men in 1771 carried off King Stanislaus from the middle of his capital, though surrounded with a numerous body of guards and a Russian army. The king soon escaped and declared Pulaski an After his arrival in this country he offered his services to congress, and was honored with the rank of brigadier-general. He discovered the greatest intrepidity in an engagement with a party of the Britisl. near Charleston in May, 1779. In the assault upon Savannah, Oct. Oth, by Gen. Lincoln and Count D'Estning, Pulaski was wounded at the head of two hundred horsemen, as he was galloping into the town with the intention of charging in the rear. Congress resolved that a monument should be creeted to his memory.

PUMIIAM, sachem of Shawomet, near Providence, put himself in 1643 under the government of Massachusetts, in order to escape the tyranny of Miantonomo. The government of Massachusetts made a grant of land to settlers from Braintree, being a part of the territory relinquished by Pumham. - Felt's Hist. of New England.

PUNCHARD, JOHN, deacon, died at Salem. Mass., Fob. 13, 1857, aged nearly 94 years. He was born April 12, 1763, in Salem, where all his paternal ancestors were born and lived, back to William, who emigrated to that town previous to 1669. His father was James, a shipmaster and a patriot. He was himself a volunteer soldier of the Revolution, and was probably the last survivor of a regiment stationed at West Point at the time of Arnold's defection, and was on duty at head-quarters on the memorable night after Andre was brought in a prisoner. At the expiration of his term of service he settled in Salem as a mechanic; but by his industry, intelligence, and integrity gradually raised himself to positions of trust and importance in his native town, county, and State. He was a member of the Tabernaele church in Salem seventy-four years. and one of its deacons and its clerk for about forty years. The succession of ministers in this church has been as follows: From 1774 to 1834, N. Whitaker, J. Spaulding, S. Worcester, E. Cornelius, J. P. Cleaveland, and S. M. Worcester. He was one of the founders of the Massachusetts missionary society, and its treasurer about thirty years. He encouraged the various enterprises of benevolence. He was a man of wisdom and energy, of integrity and trustworthiness, and of unslacked zeal in doing good, sustaining a

the an hig Ch of isn SOL

in

to

pe

S[)

in wa a t 173 Ne mo 1 ton

in

was

field stal 1 dice pilg fol., coll 1

8001

Cha

168 mo Wa ard I Ma ary tea

Tob

lſe em of . On of who pul: Am rial 11, wor

plai 185 cou

ddress ng the use. -

n the , 1779, with a is from ed with army. nski an try he onored discovgement ston in ah, Oet. Estaing. undrat

r Proviernment tyranny assachua Brainished by d. Salem.

wn with

ongress

ected to

rs. He e all his back to evious to er and a oldier of last sur-Point at on duty tht after the expiin Salem elligence, positions ve town, er of the ur years, or about rs in this to 1834. ester, E. Worcesie Massarer about 119 enterf wisdom orthiness, staining s 1 beloved in old age. As the great aim of his long life was | Washington in 1824. To his Indian companions to promote God's glory in human happiness, especially that happiness which is imperishable as springing from the reception of Divine truth into the heart, who is there among the prosperous merchants, great scholars, and illustrious jurists and statesmen, the boast of Salem, that can stand higher in the estimate of infinite reason and goodness, than this humble, zealous, unwearied Christian? Rev. George Punchard, the author of two valuable books, a view of congregationalism and a history of congregationalism, is his son

PUNDERSON, EBENEZER, Episcopal minister in New Haven, died in 1764, aged about 58. He was graduated at Yale in 1726; was settled over a new precinct in Groton, Conn., from 1729 to 1736; had the charge of the Episcopal society in New Haven from 1755 to 1762; and then removed to Rye. He was succeeded by S. Palmer. PUNDERSON, THOMAS, minister of Huntington, Conn., died in 1848, aged about 64. Born in New Haven, he graduated at Yale in 1804; was the minister of the second church in Pittsfield, Mass., from 1809 to 1817; and was installed at 11, in 1818.

PURCHAS, SAMUEL, a minister in London, died about 1628, aged 51. He published his pilgrimage, or relations of the world, five vols., fol., London, 1641, etc. It is a rare and valuable collection and abridgment of travels.

PURCHASE, THOMAS, the owner of Peiepscott, Me., settled there in the third year of Charles I., and lived there till the war just before 1683. His deed was from the council of Phymouth in England, given to him and George Way of Dorchester, E. His heirs sold to Richard Wharton of Boston.

PURKITT, HENRY, colonel, died in Boston March 3, 1846, aged 91. He was a Revolutionary soldier, and assisted in the destruction of tea in Boston.

PURSH, FREDERIC, a botanist, was born at Tobolski in Siberia, and educated at Dresden. He resided in this country from 1799 to 1811, employed in various excursions by Mr. Hamilton of Philadelphia and Dr. Hosack of New York. On going to England in 1811 with a collection of plants, he was patronized by Smith and Banks, who opened to him their botanical stores. After publishing his book in 1814, he returned to America, and, while engaged in collecting materials for a Canadian flora, died at Montreal June 11, 1820, aged 46. He published a valuable work, flora America septentrionalis, or the plants of North America, London, 8vo., 1814.

PURVIANCE, Joun, died in Baltimore in 1854, aged 81, nearly thirty years a judge of the

he said: "I shall die, but you will return to your brethren. As you go along the paths you will see the flowers and hear the birds; but Pushmataba will see them and hear them no more. When you come to your home, they will ask you, Where is Pushmataha? and you will say to them, He is no more. They will hear the tidings like the sound of the fall of a mighty oak in the stillness of the wood."

PUTNAM, DANIEL, first minister of Reading, Mass., died in 1759, aged 62. Born in Danvers, he graduated at Harvard in 1717, and was settled in 1720. His successor was E. Stone. PUTNAM, Isnael, major-general in the army of the United States, died at Brooklyn, Conn., May 29, 1790, aged 72. He was a descendant, like all of the name in New England, from John Putnam, who came from Bucki chamshire to Salem in 1634 with three sons, Thomas, Nathaniel, and John. He was born in Salem, Mass., Jan. 7, 1718. His mind was vigorous, by the was never cultivated. In running, lea-"tling he almost always bore awa Īπ 1739 he removed to Pomfret, Conn., where he cultivated a considerable tract of land. He had however to encounter many difficulties, and among his troubles the depredations of wolves upon his sheepfold were not the least. In one night seventy fine sheep and goats were killed. A she wolf being considered as the principal cause of the havoe, Mr. Putnam entered into a combination with a number of his neighbors to hunt alternately, till they should destroy her. At length the hounds drove her into her den in Pomfret, and several persons soon collected with guns, straw, fire, and sulphur, to attack the common enemy. But the dogs were afraid to approach her, and the fumes of brimstone could not force her from her cavern. It was now ten o'clock at night. Mr. Putnam proposed to his black servant to descend into the cave and shoot the wolf; but, as the negro declined, he resolved to do it himself. Having divested himself of his coat and waistcoat, and having a long rope fastened round his legs, by which he might be pulled back at a concerted signal, he entered the cavern head foremost with a blazing torch, made of strips of birch bark, in his hand. He descended fifteen feet, passed mong horizontally ten feet, and then began the gradual ascent, which is sixteen feet in length. He slowly proceeded on his hands and knees in an abode which was silent as the house of death. Cautiously glancing forwards he discovered the glaring eyeballs of the wolf, who started at the sight of his torch, gnashed her teeth, and gave a sullen growl. He immediately kicked the rope, and was drawn out with a friendly celerity and violence which not a little PUSHMATAHA, a Choctaw chief, died at bruised him. Loading his gun with nine buck-

R

tr

17

es

sti

m

mi

St

th

17

Ol

we

hir

on

the

rie

ha

of

po

No

po

17 off

of

mo

sti

ho

the gc: be ers

of sio his

pu

en

H

Pe

m

an

re

shot, and carrying it in one hand, while he held! the torch with the other, he descended a second time. As he approached the wolf, she howled, rolled her eyes, snapped her teeth, dropped her head between her legs, and was evidently on the point of springing at him. At this moment he fired at her head, and soon found himself drawn out of the cave. Having refreshed himself he again descended, and seizing the wolf by her ears, kicked the rope, and his companions above with no small exultation dragged them both out together. During the French war he was appointed to command a company of the first troops which were raised in Connecticut in 1755. He rendered much service to the army in the neighborhood of Crown Point. In 1756, while near Ticonderoga, he was repeatedly in the most imminent danger. He escaped in an adventure of one night with twelve bullet-holes in his blanket. In August he was sent out with several hundred men to watch the motions of the enemy. Being ambuscaded by a party of equal numbers, a general but irregular action took place. He had discharged his fusee several times, but at length it missed fire, while its muzzle was presented to the breast of a savage. The warrior with his lifted hatchet and a tremendous warwhoop compelled him to surrender, and then bound him to a tree. In the course of the action the parties changed their position, so as to bring this tree directly between them. The balls flew by him incessantly; many struck the tree, and some passed through his clothes. The enemy now gained possession of the ground, but, being afterwards driven from the field, they carried their prisoner with them. At night he was stript, and a fire was kindled to roast him alive; but a French officer saved him. The next day he arrived at Ticonderoga, and thence he was carried to Montreal. About the year 1759 he was exchanged through the ingenuity of his fellow-prisoner, Col. Schuyler. After the peace he returned to his farm. He was ploughing in his field in 1775, when he heard the news of the battle of Lexington. He immediately unyoked his team, left his plough on the spot, and without changing his clothes set off for Cambridge. He soon went to Connecticut, levied a regiment, and repaired again to the camp. In a little time he was promoted to the rank of major-general. In the battle of Bunker's Hill he exhibited his usual intrepidity. He directed the men to reserve their fire till the enemy was very near, reminded them of their skill, and told them to take good aim. They did so, and the execution was terrible. After the retreat he made a stand at Winter Hill and drove back the enemy under cover of their ships. When the army was organized by Gen.

to command the reserve. In Aug., 1776, he was stationed at Brooklyn, on Long Island. After the defeat of our army he went to New York, and was very serviceable in the city and neighborhood. In October or November he was sent to Philadelphia to fortify that city. In Jun., 1777, he was directed to take post at Princeton, where he continued until spring. At this place a sick prisoner, a captain, requested that a friend in the British army at Brunswick might be sent for to assist him in making his will. Putnam was perplexed. He had but fifty men under his command, and he did not wish to have his weakness known; yet he was unwilling to denythe request. He however sent a flag of truce, and directed the officer to be brought in the night. In the evening lights were placed in all the college windows, and in every apartment of the vacant houses throughout the town. The officer on his return reported that General Putnam's army could not consist of less than four or five thousand men. In the spring he was appointed to the command of a separate army in the highlands of New York. One Palmer, a lieutenant in the tory new levies, was detected in the camp; Gov. Tryon reclaimed him as a British officer, threatening vengeance if he was not restored. Gen. Putnam wrote the following pithy reply: "Sir, - Nathan Pulmer, a lieutenant in your king's service, was taken in my camp as a spy; he was condemned as a spy; and he shall be hanged as a spy. P. S. Afternoon, He is hanged." After the loss of Fort Montgomery, the commander-in-chief determined to build another fortification, and he directed Putnam to fix upon a spot. To him belongs the praise of having chosen West Point. The campaign of 1779, which was principally spent in strengthening the works at this place, finished the military career of Putnam. A paralytic affection impaired the activity of his body, and he passed the remainder of his days in retirement. retaining his relish for enjoyment, his strength of memory, and all the faculties of his mind. His only surviving daughter, Mrs. Mary Waldo, died at Conway, N. H., Nov., 1825, aged 72 years. His son, Col. Israel P., died at Belpre, Ohio, in March, 1812. Peter Schuyler P., his seventh son, died at Williamstown, Mass., in 1827, aged 63. Gen. P. was exemplary in the various relations of life, a constant attendant on public worship, and a worshipper of God in his house. For many years he was a professor of religion. In his last years he professed a deep sense of sin, yet a strong hope of salvation through the Redeemer of sinners. - Humphrey's Life of P.

PUTNAM, Amos, Dr., died at Danvers, Mass., July 26, 1807, aged 85.

ships. When the army was organized by Gen. PUTNAM, AARON, minister of Pomfret, Conn., Washington at Cambridge, Putnam was appointed died in 1813, aged 79. The son of Rev. Daniel

P., he graduated at Harvard in 1752; was or- 1852; and five other children were living, ranked dained in 1756; resigned his pastoral charge in with the most respectable citizens. - Hildreth,

PUTNAM, Rufus, general, a soldier of the Revolution, and the father of the western country, died at Marietta, Ohio, May 1, 1824, aged 86. He was born at Sutton, Mass., in 1738, and was a wheelwright. He first settled in Brookfield : in 1782 he bought and removed to a confiscated estate of Col. Murray in Rutland. He engaged in the war of 1756, and in the Revolutionary struggle took an active part. At the commencement of hostilities he commanded a regiment; and during the war was an engineer. His commission as brigadier in the army of the United States is dated Jan. 7, 1783. On the return of the peace he retired to his farm. For several years he was a member of the legislature. In 1786 and 1787 he was engaged in organizing the Ohio company for the purpose of settling the Northwest Territory. The affairs of the company were intrusted to him. April 7, 1788 he planted himself with about forty others in the wilderness on the west bank of the Ohio, at the mouth of the Muskingum, and called their settlement Marietta. He lived to see Ohio a flourishing State, having nearly seventy counties and a population of 700,000 souls. In 1789 Washington appointed him a judge of the supreme court of the Northwest Territory; and in 1791 he was appointed a brigadier-general under Wayne; in 1795 surveyor-general of the United States, which office he held till some years after the accession of Mr. Jefferson to the presidency. He was a member of the convention which framed the constitution of Ohio. He was liberal, generous, hospitable, a philanthropist, and a Christian. Of the Revolutionary army he was the last surviving general officer, except Lafayette. Mr. Robbins became his esteemed pastor in 1806. With others he in 1812 formed the first bible society west of the mountains. In Sabbath schools and missionary societies he was deeply interested. In his old age, in all kinds of weather, he attended public worship as long as he could walk. His end was full of hope and heavenly consolation. His wife, with whom he lived fifty-five years, was Persis Rice of Westborough: by her he had many children. He was nearly six feet tall, stout, and commanding, of strong features, with a calm, resolute expression: one of his eyes had an outward cast, from an injury in childhood: his manner abrupt and decisive. A long account of his life is in Hildreth's biographical memoirs.

PUTNAM, AARON WALDO, the son of Col. Israel P., died of the epidemic in Ohio, in 1822, aged 45. Born in Pomfret, Conn., he went to Ohio in 1788, with his father; he encountered at 1675, twenty-nine dwelling houses with barns; Belpre the perils of the early settlers. His elder but Maj. Pynchon's house escaped destruction.

PUTNAM, Jesse, regarded as the father of the merchants of Boston, died April 14, 1837, aged 83 years. He is one of the many who repose beneath a monumental stone at Mount

PUTNAM, SAMUEL, judge, LL. D., died in Somerville, Mass., July 3, 1853, aged 85. Born in Danvers in 1768, he graduated at Cambridge in 1787. As a lawyer he lived in Salem. He was a judge of the supreme court from 1814 to 1842; and was held in high respect.

PUTNAM, WILLIAM RUFTS, died at Marietta Jan. 1, 1855, aged 83. A son of Gen. Rufus P., he settled in M. in 1803, and was highly esteemed; was a legislator and a useful man.

PUTNAM, DAVID, died at Marietta March 31, 1856, aged 87. He was the son of Col. Israel and grandson of Gen. Israel Putnam, and was born in Pomfret, Conn., Feb. 24, 1769. He was the last survivor of the family of Col. Israel Putnam.

PYNCHON, WILLIAM, died at Wraisbury on the Thames, in Buckinghamshire, in Oct., 1662, aged 71 or 73. He came from Springfield, Essex county, England, in 1630, to Roxbury, and thence went to Springfield with Moxon, as one of the first settlers, about 1637, in which year the court at Hartford contracted with him for 500 bushels of corn, in which contract he failed. He published in England, in 1650, the meritorious price of Christ's redemption, which displeased the authorities of Massachusetts, who employed Norton to answer him. The book was burnt on the common, by order of the court, and he was deposed from the magistracy and recanted. He went to England in 1652, and a new edition was published in 1655. He taught, that Christ did not bear hell-torments for us, and that he bore not our sins by imputation. Vane was his friend. His descendants have been numerous. His son, Col. John P., died in 1703, aged 82; his grandson, Col. John P., died in 1721, aged 74; his great-grandson, Col. John, died in 1742, aged 68. His daughters married H. Smith and E. Holyoke, of Springfield, and Wm. Davies of Boston. Besides the book referred to, he published on the Sabbath, 4to., 1654.

PYNCHON, John, colonel, son of William Pynchon, was a man of distinction, for more than fifty years a magistrate of Springfield, and a chief promoter of the settlement of Northampton in 1654. He died Jan. 17, 1703, aged 76 years. His wife was Amy, daughter of Governor Wyllis, whom he married at Hartford Oct. 30, 1645. In the Indian war there were burnt, Oct. 5, son, William Pitt, lived on the homestead in Few lives were lost, as a friendly Indian gave now levies, eclaimed geance if rote the ulmer, a en in my spy; and fternoon. rt Montnined to ted Putongs the The camspent in finished alytic af-, and he tirement,

ength of

nd. His

ıldo, dicd

72 years.

, Ohio, in

renth son,

aged 63.

relations

e worship,

use. For

gion. In se of sin,

the Re-

rs, Mass.,

et, Conn.,

ev. Daniel

of P.

, he was . After

w York,

neigh-

was sent

n Jan.,

inceton.

is place

a friend

he sent nam was his com-

reakness

request.

ected the

he even-

vindows,

houses

s return

ould not

nd men.

ommand

ew York.

Glover, lost his valuable library with his house.

PYNCHON, JOSEPH, Dr., died in Boston, unmarried. He was the brother of John, born in 1646; graduated at Harvard in 1664; was the representative of Springfield in 1681 and 1682.

PYNCHON, John, the son of John, died at Springfield, in 1721, aged 73. His wife, Margaret, was a daughter of Rev. W. Hubbard. He was clerk of court and register of deeds. He had sons, John and William, born at Ipswich.

PYNCHON, CHARLES, a distinguished physician of Springfield, Mass., died before 1789. He was probably the son of John, who died in 1721.

QUADEQUINA, an Indian sachem, accompanied his brother, Massassoit, in his first visit to the pilgrims at Plymouth, Thursday, March 22, 1621, about three months after their landing. He received as presents, "a knife, a jewel to hang in his ear, and withal a pot of strong water, a good quantity of biscuit, and some butter."

QUANNOPIN, a Narragansett sagamore, bought Mrs. Rowlandson of the Indians, who made her prisoner in 1676; and by his means she was restored to her friends. The 20 pounds he received for her freedom were raised by Mr. Usher and the ladies of Boston.

QUANONCHET, prince or sachem of the Narragansetts, was captured by Capt. Denison in the Indian war of 1676, and was beheaded by the Indians of his company. The result of the fight was very extraordinary. Capt. D. had in his command sixty-six volunteers and one hundred friendly Indians, and he slew seventy-six of the enemy without the loss of a man on his side.

QUASON, or QUOSSEN, SAMUEL, was in 1762 sachem of the Monymoyk or Monamoy Indians in Chatham, on Cape Cod, only thirty in number. At an earlier period, in 1698, John "Quossen," was one of the rulers over fourteen houses at "Monimoy," as the names were then printed: John Cosens was preacher and school-

QUASSON, Joseph, an Indian, of whose life and death "Father Moody" of York published

QUINCY, EDMUND, a judge of the superior court of Massachusetts, died Feb. 23, 1738, aged 56. He was born at Braintree Oct. 24, 1681. His grandfather, Edmund Quincy, came to Boston with John Cotton in 1633, and became a proprietor of lands at Mount Wollaston or Braintree in 1635, and died soon afterwards, aged 33. His father, Lieut.-Col. Edmund Quincy, died Jan. 7, 1698. His mother, Elizabeth, was the daughter of Maj.-Gen. Gookin. He was graduated at chant in Boston; he afterwards lived on the Harvard college in 1699, and afterwards sustained paternal estate. His fourth daughter, Esther, several important offices, the duties of which he married Jonathan Sewall; she was the worthy discharged with ability and faithfulness. He was wife of an eminent man. Another daughter tice of the proposed attack. The minister, Mr. a judge of the superior court from 1718 till a short time before his death. Being sent as an agent to London for the purpose of settling the boundary line between Massachusetts and New Hampshire, he died in that city of the small pox. His wife was the daughter of Josiah Flint. He left two sons, Edmund and Josinh; and two daughters, Mrs. Wendell and Mrs. Jackson. The general court made a donation to his heirs of one thousand acres of land in Lenox, Berkshire county, and erected a monument at Bunhill-fields, London. His uncommon powers of reasoning and of eloquence were joined to the Christian virtues. As a member of the council, he, for twenty years, had great influence in giving direction to the proceedings of government. In his family it gave him pleasure to worship the God of all the families of the earth, and to impart to his children religious instruction. - Memoirs of J. Quincy, 3.

el

W

W

in

ye Be

pr

se

tic

vo

co

ar

A

of

the cal

the

to me

to sig

vie

gu

Br

fat

mo

en

17 wl

рo

M

th

de

80

rei

the

str

W

de

811

an

Th

ex

ho

car

fes

dι

QUINCY, JOHN, colonel, the son of Daniel Quincy, died July 13, 1767, aged 78. He was the grandson of Lieut.-Col. Edmund Quincy, by his first wife, Joanna Hull, daughter of Mr. Hull, an assistant preacher with Thomas Thacher in Boston, and was horn in 1689. Having graduated in 1708, he was early employed in public life, being appointed a major in the militia, and colonel on the resignation of his uncle, Judge Edmund Quincy. For forty years without interruption he was a representative and a member of the couneil. He was long the speaker of the house. He discharged the duties of his various offices with fidelity, honor, and acceptance, carefully avoiding all temptations to unfaithfulness, and retaining a high sense of accountableness to God. Ilis ample fortune did not corrupt him. He was just and devout, adorning by his holy conduct and attendance to the ordinances of the gospel the Christian profession, and being exemplary in the relations of private life. When that part of Braintree in which the Quincy farms lay, was incorporated, the general court, in honorable remembrance of his long and faithful services, gave it the name of Quincy. He left an only son, Norton Quincy, an amiable and virtuous man, who died without issue. His daughter married Rev. William Smith of Weymouth, and was the mother of Mrs. Cranch and of the wife of John Adams. His paternal estate, Mount Wollaston, became the property of his great-grandson, John Quincy Adams, president of the United States.

QUINCY, EDMUND, the son of Judge Edmund Q., died July 4, 1788, aged 85. He was born in Braintree in 1703 and graduated at Harvard college in 1722. For many years he was a mermarried Gov. Hancock. He published a treatise on hemp husbandry, 1765.

3 till a ns an

ing the

d New

all pox.

ıt. He nd two

ackson. heirs of rkshire

ll-fields.

asoning

hristian

he, for

g direc-

In his

he God ipart to

wirs of

' Daniel

He was

riney, by

Ir. Hull,

acher in raduated

life, be-

colonel

Edmund

iption he

he coun-

use. He ices with

ly avoid-retaining

od. Ilis

was just

duct and

ospel the

ry in the part of lay, was orable re-

ices, gave

only son, ous man,

· married

l was the

of John

Vollaston,

son, John

Edmund

was born

Harvard

ras a mer-

d on the r, Esther,

he worthy

daughter

States.

QUINCY, Josian, jun., an eminent patriot, died April 26, 1775, aged 31. He was the grandson of Judge Quiney; his father, Josiah, a mcrchant in Boston and a zealous friend of his country, died at Braintree in 1784, aged 75. He was born Feb. 23, 1744. While at college he was distinguished for unwearied industry, for the eager thirst for learning, and for a refined taste. With unblemished reputation he was graduated in 1763. His legal studies were pursued for two years under the care of Oxenbridge Thacher, of Boston, an eminent lawyer. On commencing his profession, his talents, diligence, and fidelity secured to him an extensive and profitable practice. At this period he wrote several manuscript volumes of "reports" of decisions in the supreme court, in which are preserved abstracts of the arguments of Auchmuty, Thacher, Gridley, Otis, Adams, and other lawyers. The circumstances of the times soon directed his attention and all the energies of a very sensitive mind to the political condition of his country. In opposition to the measures of the British government he began to write political essays as early as 1767. In the next year, after the landing of two British regiments at Boston, he made a most forcible appeal to the patriotism of his countrymen in a piece signed "Hyperion." Of the boldness of his views a judgment may be formed from his language in 1768: "Did the blood of the ancient Britons swell our veins, did the spirit of our forcfathers inhabit our breasts; should we hesitate a moment in preferring death to a miserable existence in bondage ?" - and from his declaration in 1770, "I wish to see my countrymen break off - off forever! - all social intercourse with those whose commerce contaminates, whose luxuries poison, whose avarice is insatiable, and whose unnatural oppressions are not to be borne."

After what is called "the Boston massacre," March 5, 1770, when five citizens were killed by the British troops, Mr. Quincy, with John Adams, defended the prisoners, Capt. Preston and eight soldiers. To undertake their defence against the remonstrance of his father and in resistance to the strong tide of popular indignation required a strong love of justice and a fixed purpose of soul. With great ability he plead their cause, and the defence was closed by Mr. Adams. In the result Capt. Preston and six soldiers were acquitted, and two were convicted of manslaughter only. This administration of justice in the midst of an excited and furious people was an event most honorable to Mr. Quincy and to the American cause. In 1771 and 1772 he continued his professional and political labors with accustomed industry and zeal; but in Feb., 1773, a pulmonary complaint compelled him to seek the renewal of the energy and grace of a Demosthenes." In his health or the preservation of his life by a voyage to Carolina. In Charleston he formed an acquaintance with the eminent lawyers and patriots of the day, who received him with wonted southern hospitality, - with Bec, Parsons, Simpson, Scott, Charles C. Pinckney, Rutledge, Lynch. and others. He returned by land to New York. In Philadelphia he met with J. Dickinson, J. Reed, J. Ingersoll, Dr. Shippen, Chief Justice Allen, and his sons, and Mr. Galloway. His iournal of this tour is found in his Life, published by his son. After an absence of three or four months he reached home, and soon wrote the bold essays under the title of Marchmont Nedham. His chief political work, observations on the act of parliament, commonly called "the Boston port bill," with thoughts on civil society and standing armies, was published in May, 1774.

