HE following memorials were drawn up folely for the King's ufe, and defigned folely for his eye. They must of course, containing matter of administration, be first communicated to his Majesty's Ministers. They were accordingly * communicated in the draught: and + afterward put into the hands of his Majesty's Secretary of State, appointed to the American department, that they might be communicated to his Majefty, with a most humble request from. the Memorialist, either of permission to lay them in perfon at his Majesty's feet, being ready to answer any questions which might arife upon them; to give any explanations which might be required; to state, to the best of his judgment, the line in which negotiation might train, if fuch was found advisable;

and finally, to make a tender of his fervices, as an old fervant of the Crown formerly employed in these affairs, to undertake fuch negotiation. Or, if there were any reasons which might render it improper for him to be admitted to his Majesty's presence, on the subject of these memorials; then praying that his Majefty would be pleafed to refer the memorials, and his fervant, who prefented them, to his Cabinet, or a committee of the fame; to whom, under his Majesty's orders, he was ready to make the fame communications. The Memorialist understood that this would not be difagreeable to his Majesty. The late Secretary, in whofe hands thefe memorials were, thinking them worthy his Majefty's confideration, would have prefented them. The Memorialist understanding that the other Secretaries of State, for the reafons they alledged, could not be of opinion to advife the opening of any negotiations, especially with the persons authorized to treat of peace, and therein referred to; and the memorials being delivered back to the Memorialist, fince the late Secretary delivered up the Seals; the Memorialist finds himself precluded even from the endeavour of rendering that fervice to his Majesty and to his country, try, which circumstances, confequent of the fituation he was formerly in, put in his power, and which his zeal led him to make the offer of undertaking without prefent pay or future reward, as his Majesty's late Secretary can testify.

Some points, both as to fact and as to opinion, which the Memorialist (with all due deference he speaks it) thinks his Majesty's Ministers are misinformed in, and of courfe hold mistaken opinions upon, must have arisen. These, under a sense of zealous duty, and the most profound respect to his Majesty, in the most humble manner would have been stated. Understanding these memorials to be inadmiffible by the Ministers, he knows no means but this, which he hath finally prefumed to take, of laying them at his Majesty's feet. He knows these are matters which ought not to come forward to public difcuffion : but, fince he hath understood that Ministers have entered the lifts in public debates on these points, and that feveral of his Majesty's fervants have given definitive opinions on matters, which should have found their definitions only in the conclusions of private negotiation, he hopes that he shall not be found offending.

He most humbly craves his Majesty's B 2 gracious gracious interpretation. He means nor to offend; at the fame time he thinks it his duty to declare, that he means this mode of making thefe matters public, as a juftification of himfelf to all who may be interested in this great event, and as an appeal to his Majesty and to his people against the opinions and conduct of the Ministers.

This memorial does not enter into the real or artificial reasons on which Ministers first advised his Majesty to carry force of arms into the governments of America. It was feen and declared, at the time, by those who knew that country, that although fuch measures might defolate America, they must, as they have done, separate them from, and nearly ruin, Great Britain in the end alfo. It goes only to the motives and views now given out to Parliament by the Ministers, as the reasons for continuing the It is faid, that although a faction, war. having arms in their hands, have declared all union with the nation diffolved, and all allegiance to his Majesty's government absolved; yet a majority in number of the people in America are difposed to submit to his Majesty's provincial government, and with to be under it. The truth is, there are in that country, try, as in all others where the people have a thare in the government, parties; but more effectially in a country wherein the curfe of civil war rages. Befides, the perfecution which the bad fpirit of man, in a predominate caufe, too often infpires; the many hard things which a government in a flate of war, and acting for the time with powers dictatorial, must necefarily do; alienate the fpirits of many; render others impatient under, and fome even enemies to, the very government which they themfelves had fet up. This is the cafe in America. But that there are a majority in number, or any proportion of numbers who with to fee his Majesty's provincial government established with fuch powers, and under fuch forms, as must be now necessary to give efficiency to civil power, when the confenfus obedientium does not accompany it, the Memorialist, who hath known the machine both in its composition and in its parts; who had once administrative powers in it, and who hath carefully watched every motion of it fince, thinks it his duty to declare, as he would have prefumed to have done in his Majefty's presence, is a mistaken opinion of the Ministers, and not fact. On the contrary, were his Majesty's arms so to pre-B3 vail, vail, as to place this supposed number of loyalists in the feat of government; and was that government established on civil power and authority only, it would be inefficient and impracticable. Was it combined with military establishments, and derived its fpring from military force, these very loyalists, if ever they submitted to it, would take the first opportunity of revolting from it. Even those of them who are living in this country under his Majefty's protection, and on his gracious bounty, will not venture (fome few excepted) to pledge their honour and character to the contrary of this. If they are ready to acknowledge this, his Majefty will find them more ufeful fubjects fettled in the government of Quebec than living here. This reafon, therefore, on which his Majefty's Ministers advise the continuance of the war in America, is unfounded, will always prove delufive in the trial, and hath misled them.

If the Ministers give hopes, either to his Majesty, or to the people, that they can at any practicable expence, or by any means, fend to America numbers, that shall be equal every where, wherever the service requires it, to meet the numbers which that country can at any given time bring into the field upon their own ground; ground; they not only totally over-rate the fources of Great Britain, both in men and money, but have no idea of the numbers which communities, in that state of civil progression, in which the American colonies are, have always been able to bring, and can bring into the field occafionally, fufficient to the obstructing the operations of his Majesty's arms. If they have hopes of fubduing by force of arms these people, as now connected with the French, and call this a French war in America-they should endeavour to have alliances alfo in America: they fhould endeavour to procure a fœderal union with the Americans, on the folid basis of the actual state of things. France would be conquered in America the moment that Great Britain formed an alliance with the Americans, or would be driven out of it. These very Americans would foon have occasion to call upon his Majesty's arms for affistance to drive the French army out of America, if they did not retire at the fame time in which his Majefty began to withdraw his troops.

His Majesty's Ministers, after the concessions which they have persuaded Parliament to make; after the concessions which they have suffered his Majesty's Commissioners to make, without disapproving their conceffions, but rewarding their fervices; cannot venture to fay to his Majesty, that they advise the carrying on the war in support of his Majefty's fovereignty in America. While they held out revenue, to be drawn from America in aid of fupply, as an object to the landed gentlemen of England, they gave up taxation over America: they have fpent more than fifty millions; and inftead of revenue have created a debt which these landed gentlemen must pay the increft of. While they prefumed to hold out to his Majesty the maintenance of his fovereignty over America, as the object of the war, they acquiesced in conceffions, offering to the American governments, specifically as flates, the power of the fword, the purfe, and the exercise of a perfect freedom of legiflation and internal government, and thereby, in effect, if not in fact, have made a ceffion of that fovereignty to these States; and have lost the country.

Sad experience has fhown, that they have not the least embryo of an idea as to the means of carrying on the war in America. They have neither object nor end in view: yet they have entangled his Majesty's affairs in a fatal necessfity of going on with war, because the Ministers know not how to make peace.

While

While at one time, "in the bour of their prefumption," they have pledged the honour of the Crown and Parliament to measures which they cannot effect; and at another, in the bour of their humiliation, have made concessions in the other extreme; they have brought forward the American colonies as States; they brought them forward to the becoming an object under so ftrange a predicament, as hath rendered it impossible and impracticable that even the mediation of friendly powers can interpose and take place.

And finally, while nothing remained which ought to be done, or can be done, fo as even to commence negotiations in Europe, but the making fome preliminary treaty for a truce that shall prepare the way to a congress, they have cut even the very grounds of treaty from under their own feet.

This ground, as flated in the memorial, contained the only path which lay open and could have led to the veftibule of the Temple of Peace. The Memorialift, trufting that the Americans even flill " retained too great a regard for the "kingdom from which they derive their " origin, to expect any thing in the manner if of treating which was inconfiftent with " her

" her honour," and that they would, " in " the mere point of honour, even help " out her Ministers :" also confident that those perfons who are authorized by America to treat of peace, notwithstanding the accounts received, and opinions formed, by the Ministers, are, though enemies, men of bonour and good faith; and confcious that he was known, both in England and America, known by his infignificance, never to have written, fpoken in Parliament, or acted in any one instance, on party grounds, in this great question respecting America, did presume to think he could meet these perfons on grounds of agreement, preparatory and preliminary to definitive treaty in a general congress of the Powers of Europe. The perfons who must have acted in this, not being fuch as the Ministers could advife the acting with, all confideration of the meafures propofed was precluded.

As the very idea of fuffering those perfons to communicate, who could perhaps have met on grounds of agreement, whereon negotiation in all its forms might hereafter have advanced, was inadmissible by the Ministers, the Memorialist did not communicate the line of treaty, nor the points through which that line might have been drawn. As he did not find himself himfelf called upon to communicate those matters to the Ministers, he should now think himself greatly unjustifiable, to make them a matter of public communication. He hopes that the opportunity of obtaining that preliminary ground, whereon the Honour of the Crown and Nation might have flood undiminished, will not be loft. That it may pleafe God to protect his Majesty's Honour; to blefs his arduous endeavours for the welfare of his people; and that the next opportunity which Providence shall fuffer to come forward, may fall into more acceptable hands, is the earnest prayer of his Majefty's faithful old fervant and devoted fubject. If unfortunately, by the high ton of fome part of the Ministry, in which things will not bear them out; by the contemptuous rejection of persons who could and would have helpt them out, an opportunity of the like should not arise again (the Memorialist ventures to express an opinion, he does not prefume to advife) nothing remains, but, by an act of real dignity, and from a felf-derived spirit of honour, To DECLARE THE AMERICAN COLONIES FREE STATES; and to treat with them on the ground of perfect reciprocity. If this country hath yet those friends in America

II

America which it is faid fhe hath, here they may actually and effectually ferve it : and if the old colonial affections, changing their nature, have not turned to bittereft hate, in the enemies which fhe hath there, fuch, when once become allies, will become friends IN SOME FA-MILY COMPACT.

As the Memorialist thought that no. one ought to prefume to offer modes of negotiation for peace, who did not know the flate of the fervice as to war, he prepared at the fame time for his Majefty's infpection, A State of that Service, in a fecond memorial; pointing to that line which by fuccess, if it should please God to give fuccels to his Majesty's arms, might lead to peace. This also was in the hands of the late Secretary, and would have been prefented. Candour, in an open way of acting, would have presented this, though perhaps differing in some points from ideas pre-conceived.

It did appear to the Memorialift, that, in the mode of conducting the war, which hath been adopted from the beginning, even fuccefs could not lead to peace. Peace is the end of all war; but the meafures of this war did not feem to have that object or end. He faw his Majefty's affairs fairs entangled in a fatal neceffity of going on with war, becaufe the Ministers know not which way to look for peace. He therefore pointed the measures of the fervice which he presumed to state, to objects which might give grounds to peace, and firm alliance hereaster IN A FAMILY COMPACT; by which Britons, and British Americans united, might once more become, on a more extended basis, the great and glorious Nation they once were.

The hopes which the Ministers gave of a fuccelsful iffue to this war, at the time when they commenced it, were, that his Majesty was at peace with all the world befide : yet they have fo contrived their measures, and have set the conduct of the war on fuch a principle, as hath brought almost every maritime power in Europe to be hostile to, if not enemies of, this country. The confequences of these measures in event, have so combined America with Europe, that the contest is become an American war in Europe, and a French war in America. The meafures of the state of the service which he prefumed to offer, tended to feparate this unfortunate combination; fo that by fuccefs, and a temperate use thereof, peace in Europe or America might train in feparate negotiations (each on its own grounds) grounds) and render it again poffible that, in that flate of bufinels, the mediation of friendly powers might take place.

These memorials in pure zeal, which the Memorialist hopes has not passed its bounds, and in perfect duty, are laid at his Majesty's feet, by an old servant of the Crown, and faithful subject.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

YOUR Majefty, by your speech from the throne, having, at the moment in which you are preparing to carry on the war with the greatest vigour, declared your wish of procuring for your subjects and their interest that protection by peace, which you are endeavouring to obtain for them by war; having, under the same confcious magnanimity as you put an end to the late war, expressed to the world your readiness to put an end to this.

The French King having, by his letter to the Archbishop of Paris, given pledge, in an act of devotion, to his royal word, that he is defirous of peace.

Two August and Imperial Sovereigns having offered their mediation in negotiations to the same end.

The Americans (the fource, caufe, and object of the war) having, by perfons authorized by them to treat of peace, declared, that any reasonable measures to that end, should have every assistance in their power, 3 whenever whenever Great Britain should be disposed to it. (Nov. 23, 1781.)

And these last notices having * come to your Majesty's Memorialist (as he did + immediately communicate to your Majesty's Ministers) he, an old servant of the Crown in this line of American service, practised and experienced in these affairs, prefumes to obtrude himself into your Majesty's prefence, and to lay at your feet the following memorial, as the last and only effort which Providence hath less in his power, of doing his duty to your Majesty and to his country.

If it were certain that a congress of all the Powers concerned in the present war, held under the mediation of the high Powers who have proposed the fame, would be productive of peace; yet no such congress can meet until the several parties, amongst whom parts of this great business form more particular relations, shall mutually amongst themselves settle fome preliminary articles, as to the manner in which they will meet, and as to the points in which they will (as our lawproceedings phrase it) join issue on the matters to be discussed. grounds of agreement, whereon your Majefty can fuffer the Americans to meet your Ministers, or to attend such congress, shall be settled by some preliminary negotiation, your Majesty will never acquisses in fending your Minister to any congress into which their agents are admitted as Ministers. This must be an act of your own, in which no foreign Power can interfere, so long as the Americans are your subjects.

This memorial on this point, from precedents of what hath been done in the like cafe, fuch at leaft as may exculpate his prefumption, endeavours to feek those grounds on which the way to peace may be cleared and plained.

He would not dare to hold in your ' Majefty's prefence, an opinion that any fuch treaty fhould be held with rebellant fubjects, did not the following precedent thew that an English Sovereign had for reasoned in the like case. In the year 1575, Queen Elizabeth offered her office of mediation* to Philip King of Spain, to the purpose of forming fome compromise between him and his fubjects : and fending Sir Henry Cobham on the occasion, directed him to represent the mischiefs which must ensue from the Dutch provinces falling under the French Jubjection; and to prefs King Philip earneftly to make peace, rather than run that danger. Afterward, when the Dutch Deputies declared, that if they were rejected by England, they must apply to France for affistance, the Queen was alarmed, and promiled to use ber instances again, to procure them a reasonable peace. In the year 1576, the fent accordingly Sir John Smith to Spain on the fame errand. Her Majefty's reasoning on this occasion took it's ground first from necessity, faying, that the greatest princes and monarchs that ever were, have been driven fundry times to yield to neceffity : Secondly, from policy, cautioning the King left the loss of these provinces should put in peril bis other states and kingdoms, being divided so far asunder as they were: And laftly from prudence, that by acceding to fome compromife he would spare infinite treasure, that was most unprofitably employed in the weakening of himself, by the destruction of his own natural fubjects. Not fucceeding in these advices, the entered into a league with the States, and fent, in 1577, Thomas Wilks to Spain, with a manifesto of her reasons. And

And Lord North's eldeft fon*, with feveral other noblemen, went and ferved in their caufe. Her Majefty ceafed not however to prefs the neceffity of fome compromife, and in 1578 fent the fame Wilks to Don John of Auftria, to advife him to yield to a truce. All was in vain. The King however, in the year 1609, did agree to a truce with them as with a free people +, under the guaranty of England and France, mediators \ddagger .

If any grounds of agreement, any preliminary terms, leading to peace, could thus be obtained, under fuch a truce as your Majesty might find it confonant to your honour to grant, your Memorialist most humbly proposes that such should be indefinite; at the will of either party, or if made under guaranty, with the confent of the guaranties, to terminate on notice given according to the law of nations and of arms : 1st, Because if it were definite it would fubfift only by cabals preparing for certain war, fo as to obstruct instead of open the way to peace: 2d, On the other hand, if the truce be definite, your Majesty, or (if there be guaranties) the guaranties, at any moment in which your Majesty or they faw any ill use or abuse made by mal-practices, or bad faith, to the diminution of your rights, or those of your people, might annihilate the ground on which fuch mal-practices took their courfe, by declaring the truce at an On the contrary, if the use of posend. fession granted under a truce were nor misused, but if so used as to lead to treaty for peace in future: fuch treaty might wait events, or take place as emergent causes called it forth; might have its true digestion of negotiation, and not rifque the being broken off t r the determination of a definite period; or it might continue, without falling back to a revival of all the difficulties with which this bufinefs must always be entangled and perplexed.

Under fuch a truce granted by your Majefty, the States of America (as the Commiffioners fent out from Parliament filed them) being in the poffeffion, ufe, and exercife of certain powers, as Free-States de facto (while your Majefty quitted no claim, but remained in poffeffion of your rights unaffected, and of your honour unimpeached) would, if the ftate and circumftances of Europe required their attendance at any congress, come there as fuch only by virtue of the truce under under which they held quiet possession, and had the use and exercise of their powers, and not by right claimed: for until other Sovereign Powers shall, as the French King hath done, acknowledge their independence, they cannot be received as independent States, the allies of any other Sovereign: On the contrary, fuch a truce would relieve all difficulties with those Sovereign Powers, who, though they did not acknowledge their independence, might see the necessity of thefe Americans being admitted as attendant, if not component parts, of any congrefs which shall meet.

The chief matters respecting the modes of poffeffion and the regulations of commerce, being by preliminary treaty, under the indefinite continuance of fuch a truce, arranged and fettled, would clear the way of the principal difficulties of negotiation in any congress to be held, both as to forms, matters, and perfons, and preclude all cafes wherein your Majefty's honour might be committed.

Further: The putting of any negotiation, which your Majesty might permit to be undertaken, on the ground of fuch a preliminary truce, in order to prepare matters for the meeting of a congress, will give (notwithstanding fuch treaties already already fubfifting as the Americans have with the French King, and to which they referred in the late propofals) both opportunity and right to negotiate feparately without France; as fuch preliminary negotiation would in no way contravene nor even bring into queftion treaties already fubfifting.

This memorial taking up the confideration of your Majefty's fervice in the affairs of America in this point of procedure, the Memorialift prefumes to offer his fervices to undertake a negotiation for the purpofe only of fettling a truce with the Americans, as a preliminary meafure, in order, the better to treat of peace in future; either feparately or in any general congress of the Powers of Europe.

The Americans, although they have hitherto declined offers of conciliation, and even of treaty, are yet, at this time, even fince the advantages gained for them by the arms of the French King, ready and willing to treat.

The character of all nations, where the power of deliberation lies with the people, fluctuates between the extremes of confidence and jealoufy. The peculiar characteristic of the Americans is, jealoufy to the extreme. Great Britain hath not have they optely nenor eady nfithe ceoffer tion uce ary t of : in i of ave on, ne, em hdy ere the nes iar not been without her jealousies, as unfounded as the other. That repercuffion of the fpirit of jealoufy wrought the breach in your Majesty's government in America, and brought on the war. The fame spirit is now fermenting in America, to jealoufy of their great and good ally the French King. That paramount fovereignty of the British Crown, which they feared in apprehension; actuated now by their General, fupported by a French army, they now feel in fact. The many points on which future union of fystem, and conjunct powers and operations, must turn; the many difficulties which must arise in eventual partitions of the advantages to be derived; the very different idea of remuneration which must naturally arife in the expectation of the French troops, and in the estimation of the Americans; the perplexities which must occur in arrangements that must be made in quartering and fupplying a regular army, that will not be shifted off, in the manner in which the poor wretches of an American army have been treated; the provoking infolence which the Americans must experience from the French; but above all (of which the greatest use may be made) the contemplation of the manner of getting rid of this army of C 4 allies, allies, when they want their fervice no longer, and defire their departure. Symptoms of the fenfe with which they feel these things begin already to show themfelves, and will foon work to jealoufies that will break out in open quarrel, if your Majesty's measures shall give scope to them. All these points conspire not only to make it the interest of the Americans, but their wifh, to commence fome negotiation with Great Britain before they are more entangled and involved with these suspected allies : if this crifis be neglected, they may bowever be fo entangled, that their endeavours to emancipate themselves, although confpiring with the efforts of Great Britain, may not be able hereafter to co-operate to any effectual purpose. Although the Americans have refused offers of conciliation, and propositions of treaty with Great Britain; yet, when the grounds and reasons of their conduct are compared with the nature of their circumstances, and the circumstances under which these offers were made, a man of bufiness will not only be not furprized that they did thus reject offers, and decline treaty, but, from the nature of the reafon, will take experience how to frame any future negotiation on more practical grounds.

The terms of conciliation which were framed by Parliament, and fent over to the feveral Governors in America, in order that they should lay them before the respective aff ... iblies of each province, became inadmissible to these people; 1st, because they were addressed to bodies of men, who had delegated the powers of treating of these matters; while they paffed by that body of men with whom that power did refide : 2dly, becaufe the receiving of them by the respective Affemblies would have been virtually to diffolve that union which existed collectively in the Congress only: and 3dly, because, under the questionable form under which they came to the Affemblies. had the people acceded to them, they must previously be supposed to have given up that claim of right, on the claim of which they had feparated from Great Britain. In the predicament therefore under which they flood, they could not receive them. The fame error of endeavouring to make ground to fuit the plan of a measure, instead of forming the measure to ground as it lay in fast, rendered all proffers of treaty in 1778 impracticable. The Congress could not commit itself by taking up propositions offered by the Commiffioners; because it faw, that in making ing these offers they had exceeded theipowers, and believed that Parliament. not bound even in honour to acquiefce, would not ratify them. Befides, however flattering the offered ceffions might be; the proposed union under which they were to take place, according to the plan of the Commiffioners, supposed a non-existence of, or an inefficiency in, the Congress as to flate-affairs, which for the future were to be carried on in each respective Astembly of each feparate Province. The United States, therefore, in Congress affembled, muft, before they could admit these propositions, concede deliberately to a previous act of abdication; the offer therefore of these ceffions became inadmiffible by Congress. Although these ceffions, which the Commissioners in the hour of their humiliation made offer of, were not admissible as propositions to be treated upon; yet the Congress took the ground which they gave, as ground existing in fact, and zaquired an explicit acknowledgment of their independence: or a withdrawing of the fleets and army.

The nature of the ground which both the conciliatory propositions, and the offers of the Commissioners, took, being fuch as the Congress could not meet upon without renouncing their existence; and iei. int, fce, ver: the e to the nce 8 35 vere emited uft, ons, t of hefe cfs. omiliaible the hey -3heir the oth the ing eet ce ; and which the feveral Affemblies could not meet upon without renouncing their union in Congrefs; was the true reafon why the one could not be accepted, and why the fecond was inadmiffible in treaty: not that the Americans were not willing to treat, or had not many interefting concerns to treat for, as will appear more fully in the following flate of the circumftances and relations in which they flood towards the fovereign Powers of the earth, amongft whom they declared themfelves to have taken their equal flation.

From the moment that they declared that their allegiance to the British Crown was absolved, and that their political connection with the British state was diffolved, they became aliens in Great Britain; a trading nation of aliens, without any treaties of commerce, such as regulate the commercial intercourse, under the like benefits which nations having treatics of commerce with Great Britain enjoy.

If they trade with other nations, and with to trade at large, and not by an exclufive trade with any one only, they must make commercial treaties particular with each nation, and settle the whole arrangement of tarifs peculiar to the terms terms of their special treatics for themfelves; as they have no longer any right to communicate in, or enjoy, the fæderal benefits which they had hitherto enjoyed under their allegiance to the British Crown, and during their continuing parts of the British nation. These rights, which the British Crown had, through a long series of wars and treaties obtained, they, by their separation, have lost all right to amongst the nations of the earth.

They ceafe to have any right to, or fhare in, any of the British fisheries, which are by treaties, and the laws of nations, the acknowledged appendages of the British Crown.

They have loft, lofing the benefits of the British act of navigation, the carriage of the American and West India trade to Great Britain.

The two last branches of navigation was the great fource of their ship-building business, and the creation of their feamen.

They have loft all right of trading to the British dependencies, by which they are cut off from their circuitous trade between the fisheries, Africa, and the West Indies, in fish, flaves, &c. and in molasses, the ground of their distillery.

They have loft all right of being protected tected under, or of being admitted to a fhare in, the flipulated privilege of cutting logwood in the bays of Campeachy and Honduras, which Great Britain enjoys under treaties with Spain. Under cover of this privilege, the Americans chiefly carried on, during their connection with Great Britain, an extensive and advantageous commerce, to a degree and in a manner, fometimes, fo as to involve Great Britain in mifunder(tandings with Spain on their fole account.

Finally, having renounced the protection of the British flag, they have to treat for the acknowledged establishment of their flag; as also for the terms on which, and the extent to which, it shall be respected by each nation. They have all these rights to settle with every nation of Europe; but more especially with the Barbary States and the Turkish Powers; as they can no longer profit of failing under the protection of the British Mediterranean passes settled by treaty with Great Britain.

They have no right to the benefits accorded to Great Britain by the Ruffian treaties of commerce, unless obtained by fome new treaty of their own, or enjoyed under fome tacit interpretation of her Imperial Majefty.

They can have no right to partake of, or participate in, the benefits of the treatics which Great Britain hath with the kingdom of Portugal, until they shall have made like treaties of alliance and commerce, unless under connivance for the present.

They have also to settle the terms under which they shall pass the Sound into the Baltic.

Nor is the manner in which their flag fhall be received into the Port of Oftend yet fettled.

This memorial does not enter into the predicament in which the A.nerican commerce must stand with respect of trade to and from Ireland, as that is become a business above, and beyond, the comprehension of the Memorialist. As they now stand, they have all these rights, both farderal and commercial, to negotiate for, many of which Great Britain obtained in consequence of great and fuccessful wars.

If they can obtain thefe under any reunion with their nation and mother country, inftead of having them to folicit and treat for in every Court (not ftanding on the vantage ground which Great Britain did when the obtained them) a people practifed and experienced will not be unfeeling to their own intereft, reft, nor at a lofs to fee their way to it, whenever any preliminary treaty shall have opened the way for them.

To fum up all, they do in fact feel all these matters and reasoning; and persons are authorized by them to treat of peace, and these perfons have declared that any reasonable measures to that end thall have every assistance in their power, whenever Great Britain shall be disposed to it.

It does not appear to your Memorialift (with the moft humble deference he ipeaks it) poffible, that any Minister from your Majesty, after the offers of cessions made by the Commissioners, and after the demands made by the Congress thereupon, can meet with the Congress upon ground of treaty, until some preliminary terms be settled, as they may be best settled, under the conditions of a truce as above stated.

Your Memorialift, from his experience in this bufines; from information of the ftate of things, being convinced that a preliminary negotiation may be commenced; from his knowledge of the perfons with whom such matters must be negotiated, as men with whom it was once his duty to act, with whom he has acted, with whom Le has negotiated bufines finels of the Crown, and whom, however habile and dextrous he found them, he always experienced to be of good faith; as men who have known your Memorialift in bufinels, and will have that confidence in him which is neceffary to the digettion of affairs; is bold to offer, by his fervices, to undertake this negotiation, and is ready, whenever your Majefty thall command him, to fubmit either to your Majefty or to your Ministers, as thall beft please your Majefty, bis idea. of the line in which it ought to train.

He does not prefume to vaunt of his former fervices in this American line, although he shall always be proud of the approbation they received. They are now forgotten; and his fole ambition is to establish new merit in your Majesty's eye by new fervices to your Majesty and to his Country: nor doth he desire, in any shape whatsoever, any other reward.

All which, craving your Majefty's moft gracious interpretation and pardon, if aught fhall appear amils, is with the moft zealous duty to your Majefty, and in extreme anxiety for his Country, fubmitted to your Majefty's wildom.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

TOUR Memorialist having, by his memorial previous to this; which he now begs to lay at your Majefty's feet, prefumed to state how, by negotiation for an indefinite truce; Great Britain, without committing the honour of the Crown, might advance to and ftand on, together with America, grounds of agreement; and having fuggested that, fo flanding, the might, without diminution or impeachment of the honour of the Crown, treat with the Americans as with free states de facto, under a truce; doth herein proceed, in cafe all compromife shall be found inadmissible in idea, and all accefs to grounds of agreement impracticable in fact, to submit his opinion of the state of the fervice in America.

Your Memorialist having been in the fervice of the Crown during the last war in America, in characters wherein it was his duty to be informed of and to study these objects; wherein it was his duty to D give give his opinion on military operations; wherein his opinions were formerly adopted; most humbly hopes that he shall not be thought to have gone too far in prefuming to give the opinion which follows.

Your Majefty's government is extended over the provinces Quebec and Nova Scotia; your Majefty's arms poffefs New York, and in fome meafure cover the poffeffions of the Staten and Long Ifland; poffefs alfo Charles-town, and have an afcendant command in Georgia and Eaft Florida. Between the frontiers of New York, New England, and Quebec, there is a diffrict poffeffed by a number of people, who having withdrawn themfelves from the revolted provinces, and taken as yet no part in the war, have fortified themfelves in a ftate of neutrality.

The pofieffion of the provinces Quebec and Nova Scotia, is neceffary to Great Britain fo long as fhe retains her plantations in the iflands of the Weft Indies: they are the fources from whence (at a certainty, under all events) thefe iflands can draw their neceffary fupply of lumber, fifh, and live ftock. The memorial does not here take notice of the fupply of flour, corn, and grain, nor of falt-provifions, which may in future be drawn from from thence, as he conceives that these may be more beneficially at present drawn, the first from England, the last from Ireland.

The possession of these provinces is neceffary to Great Britain as a naval power: without them, fhe can have no naval station, command, or protection in the American feas: with them, fhe may have all thefe, although they may not be able to fupply at prefent her navy with all the naval flores that fhe may want. They will, however, fupply fufficient quantity to ward off the monopoly which fome of the northern Powers of Europe have formerly endeavoured, and may again endeavour, to establish against Britain; and have, and may again, as far as fuch could be established, use it hostilely against he-.

The province Quebec, occupied to the extent that the variety of its natural products and capabilities go to, will become a much greater fource of trade, in all events, than may appear openly at first fight. This province, by the command which it hath of water-carriage (if the maintaining of that command shall be duly attended to and continued) will be the market to, and have the fupply of, not only the Indians, but of all the inhabit-D 2 ants ants of the back countries, as they fhall become fettled, be they fettled by whomfoever they may; for the merchants of this province, by advantage of their water-carriage, and by their eafe of communication, will be able to fupply the diftant market cheaper than any other can, and will of course have the custom.

To defend and to maintain command in this province, the Memorialist ventures to fay it will be necessified to maintain fuch a naval establishment on the great lakes, and on Lake Charaphere particularly, as shall hold command in them. This measure this Memorialist first had the honour to fuggest and recommend at a congress held at Albany in the year 1754; this measure was then adopted, was for the first time in 1755 put into efficient execution, and proved a decisive measure in the events of last war.

Such a naval power is neceffary for the defence of Montreal and Quebec; fuch is neceffary to the maintaining of authority with the Indians, and to the keeping open the courfes of trade and commerce; it is neceffary to cover the advancing fertlements of the province, as in time it fhall be enlarged in population and habitancy.

The poffession of the province Nova Scotia, Scotia, by the command that a naval ftation at Halifax may give, is neceffary to the protection of the northern fisheries in America, at least to fuch share as this country may hereafter have in them.

The fort of interest and power which may arife from a right occupying of these provinces, will always retain fome hold on the thirteen tribes which have gone off from Israel; and when war shall end. will make it their interest to seek the alliance of Great Britain : as, on the other hand, Great Britain will always find it her intereft to maintain a maternal alliance with the Americans, her defcendants.

It is an object of fuch interesting importance to the Americans and French, that Great Britain should not posses these provinces as an enemy, that they will certainly become an object of attack : Halifax and Penobscot will be attacked next campaign by the French and Americans, and most likely Canada alfo. The defence of these provinces, and the maintenance of thefe posts, is of such and fo great importance to Great Britain, that all the force which can be spared for the North American fervice, ought to be united at these points, and not divided. They ought not to be frittered away by being stationed at posts where the fervice is not fo decidedly neceffary, and where, not by the fatality, but but by the natural course of war, they must furrender.

The defence of the prevince Quebec depends, 1ft, on the maintaining of the naval command of the lakes; 2d, and next, on having within diftance of fupply and relief (and of mutual communication, where that can be contrived) ftronglyfortified pofts, with fufficient garrifons, at the heads of the waters of that province, on Lake Champlain, with outpofts on Lake George and Wood Creek, and on the rivers St. Lawrence, St. Francis, and Chaudiere.

The erecting the diftrict aforementioned, lately called Vermont, into a frontier province, under fuch eftablifhments civil and military, under fuch tenure of property, and fuch frame of government, as fhall make it worth the while of those individuals (both those who lead and those who are led) to wish to be under fuch government, would prove a measure that might be wrought to a principal part of ftrength.

Another part of defence and ftrength added to the province Quebec, would be a right establishment and administration of Indian affairs.

The fettling fuch of the loyalists, refugees from the Americans, as choose to live live under British government, in a way not to ruin but to preferve them, is not only a measure which honour, juffice, and humanity require: but the fettling of them in these provinces (if that be done as it ought to be) will in time become one of the principal means of defence and ftrength to them. The giving to these unfortunate and ruined people lands, in the common idea of that meafure, would be cruelty under the cloak of benevolence; but the purchasing for fuch of them, who had been farmers, farms, in part brought forward into culture (called by the Americans improvements) and the fettling them where they will be of the greatest use to the civil government, as alfo to the military defence, as a militia, would be an act wherein true wifdom and real benevolence would unite. To those who had not been ufed to farming, but were merchants, houses should be given, with the means of commencing again, in fome degree, their business. Those who were merely tradefmen and mechanics will be more eafily fettled and reinstated. Those who in their original homes, from whence they have been driven, were advanced, or were advancing, to honours, and a fhare in the government of their country, will of course become subjects. D 4 for for trust and employment with your Majefty.

The defence and ftrength of Nova Scotia will depend principally on a commanding naval force, whole port, dock, and ftation, will be Halifax; and on a ftrongly-fortified poft, with a r pectable garrifon, at Penobfcot; while the feat of government, removed from all interference of navy or army, refides at Annapolis-Royal.

When the present Memorialist was Governor of the province Maffachusett's-bay, knowing the importance of that post of Penobicot, he took poffession of it; and b. a fort there, which the people named The province paid the Furt-Pownall. expence of the measure, as also continued to provide for the maintenance of the garrifon there. He received the gracious approbation of his late Majefty, conveyed to him by Mr. Secretary Pitt; fo that the importance of this poil hath not been unknown, and is not new to Government. The people of Maffachufett know fo well the importance of it, that they will not only make it a point of their own fervice, but will never ceafe to urge their allies to affift them in getting possession of it. Your Memorialist doth apprehend that measure to be already concerted and determined.

This

This post ought to have, as part of it's garrifon, a confiderable body of light-infantry or wood-hunters, employed as partizans in a continual range of fcouting on the line of communication between Penobfcot and Chaudiere, which will then be the line of frontier between New England and Nova Scotia; on which there ought to be fuch temporary posts as the Romans used, and called stationes æstivæ. There ought also to be a number of whale-boats kept here, as by means of fuch the most efficient and most speedy application of force might be made, whenever, in cafe of irruption, it might be fuddenly wanted: and because, while we are always ready, the enemy would find it a hazardous enterprize, which they would fcarce rifque, to crofs the Penobfcot river, as they might be fo eafily cut off from retreat.

The having a fleet in the North American feas, which ought to be afcendant there, is neceffary; 1ft, to the defence of the provinces Quebec and Nova Scotia; 2dly, is neceffary to the maintaining the communication between them, and the communication of the forces posted within them, to the fupply of the fame, and to the maintaining free and open the navigation to and from them, to to the West Indies and to Europe. It is necessary to the protection of the North American fisheries.

New arrangements will become neceffary to be made, either by reforming the civil, naval, and military commiffioners, that they may no longer, as they have always hitherto done, both in jurifdiction and execution, interfere with each other, but confpire to the one great point, your Majefty's fervice.

This Memorialift would betray his duty, if he did not here mention the necessity which will arife of establishing a Free Colonial Constitution of Government in these provinces; but he does not now enter into it, as that is an important matter of confideration separate from the present. It will however mix itself essentially in the confequences.

The fquadron pofted at Halifax, and the fquadron flationed in the Weft Indies, unlefs they are united under one general command as at prefent, will of courfe have their orders to co-operate, and to join in part or the whole, as the fervice in its emergencies, for which no inftructions can be given, may require. The Weft India fquadron will, in the ordinary courfe of fervice, convoy the trade up to the latitude of Bermuda, where the North 8 American American fquadron will take it up, and convoy it to the Weftern ifles, or perhaps only to the Banks of Newfoundland, as the cafe may require; and the European Weftern fquadron will be ready to receive it at its approach to Europe : and fo by a like division of fervice from Europe back to America and the Weft Indies.

The confideration which arifes upon your Majesty's island Bermuda, will come more properly submitted to view at the fame point with that of Charles-town.

The possession of the city New York arifes next to view. As this memorial hath stated above the necessity of the command of the province Quebec being carried up to the heads of the waters of that country; fo if the command of New York had been, as it should have been. carried to the command of Hudson-river. the importance of it, and of maintaining it. could not admit a doubt. The command of the Hudson-river is the object: not the port of New York. This is not by its nature calculated for a dock-yard or a winter harbour; it may, if there were none elfe, be ufed as fuch, but with much inconvenience, and liable to accidents. Halifax is the place fuited beft to this purpose, and is at the fame time a fafer and more commanding station. The command command of the Hudson-river, as this Memorialist hath on repeated occasions explained, might have given communication, co-operation, and union of force, to your Majesty's arms and government; and would have cut off, in the very fpine, all that communication of reciprocal fupply, all that co-operation and intercommunion of force, which was necessary to the enemy; but from the moment in which the command of this river was abandoned, the terminus ad quem being given up, the terminus à quo was of no more use in that view of service: which experience hath fince fufficiently evinced. in the passing and repassing of that river by the enemy, as their co-operations of fervice required, or as it became neceffary to cut off all co-operation between the parts of your Majesty's fervice. As to the keeping possession of this post for the purpose of trade, that will much better go on where there is no military fuperintendency. If upon fyltem, looking and juftly directed to that point, the operations of your Majesty's service had been carried to a general possibility of All the trading ports on the coafts, Bofton, Newport, New London, Newhaven, New York, the Delaware and Chefapeak bays, and Charlestown, that would have been another matter; ter; but the possession of one or two only will have no other effect than the ordinary course of trade hath had, that of raising one port by the diminution of another, of raising that which is free, and depression that which trades fub hasta.

In a military view it becomes well worthy of confideration, whether this poft, inftead of being merely defensive and protective, may not, like Gibraltar, prove an unceasing post of war, which will exhaust the resources and distract the forces of your Majesty's service. Besides, this garrison, unless there be an army also in the field, can never, as a garrison, cover the Staten and Long Island, much less the rest of the province.

Those who have alternately taken and lost Charles-town, are the best judges how far it is capable of being maintained under the present state of the fervice; are judges of the communication, as part of a system, which it may have with other parts of your Majesty's fervice; of the certainty of adequate supply and necessary succour it may depend upon. On the other hand, consideration will maturely weigh how much more this post (like that of New York) may exhauss the resources and distract the forces of your Majesty's fervice; as also how the garrison fon itfelf will be conftantly exhausted by the nature of the fituation in such a climate, so as to become a perpetual draught on the rest of the service. A garrison thus pent up on a neck of land, leads to no command in or protection of the country; and in point of com. acree the same may be faid of this as of New York.

The Memorialist would not prefume thus to urge his opinion, did it not appear to him, that there is a port of much more use: much better calculated for general fervice ; a port by means of which, if not at which, the North American and West India squadrons may form an union of fervice : a stat' v which may be employed to the gre effect, both in the protection of the trade of your Majefty's fubjects, and in annoyance of that of their enemies : a place in which your Majesty's forces would live in the most healthy climate. If your Majesty fhould pleafe to order your troops garrifoning Charles-town to change their pofition, and part of them to take post at the island Bermuda: to order that island to be fortified as ftrongly as the nature of the place (ftrong also by nature) and as the art of military defence can make it; as strongly as the nature of the fervice requires it should be made; every good purpofe purpose of an important post would be answered. It would become an entrepost between the West Indies and North America, between the West Indies and Europe; a place of refuge to mercantile navigation in case of distress or danger in those feas; a station of annoyance, both by frigates and privateers, to your Majesty's enemies in case of war: and would be found of twenty times the importance which Minorca* now is in the Mediterranean sea.

As to the provinces Georgia and East Florida, if the Memorialist dared. from general ideas of the general fervice, to express an opinion on a particular point of fervice, where fasts have never yet been ascertained, as to the benefits of these provinces compared with the expence of their establishment and their use: as to the state of their command or defence ; and as to the effect of a British governm int there; he would fay, that if. on fome good occafion, and for good and fufficient confideration, they were ceded to Spain; the Spaniards and Americans might here make the first experiment of their alliance and mutual amity, in the fettlement of a line of dimarcation between their respective domains ; as also of articles of friendly commercial intercourse of their fubjects on these frontiers. This his opinion is founded, amongst other fentiments, on a belief, that the one of the other of these Powers would soon apply to your Majesty for your royal mediation, if not for your protection.

The fame, if not fomething more, and more particularly decifive, may be faid as to those parts, where the French military force (like the rider which the horse took to his aid) is ascendant in alliance with the Americans, of the effect of your Majesty's withdrawing your operations from interfering with the harmony of this alliance.

By these means (formed as the combination of events now is) the troops, instead of remaining possed in stations that give no protection, that have no co-operation: that are liable to distract the efforts of your Majesty's service, and that are liable to be cut off from communication of fupply and aid; would be 5 drawn together, as that they would have communication and co-operation; and give protection to your Majefty's subjects and provinces, and force and efficiency to your Majesty's command and government; and form a confpiring united fvstem of that command throughout your Majefty's dominions in America connect+ ed with Great Britain.

By

By these means your Majesty would foon find yourself holding the balance of power between these new allies of that country: a power that would carry command wherever it was called upon to interfere.

All which, in perfect zeal and duty, and upon his allegiance, is most humbly submitted.

APPENDIX,

CONTAINING SOME ARGUMENTS WHICH WERE IN THE FIRST DRAUGHT OF THE MEMORIALS, BUT LEFT IN THE SECOND DRAUGHT AS THEY NOW STAND AND WERE TO BE PRESENT-ED.

HAT the idea of the fovereignty which the British State claims over America, and against which, as it was claimed, America hath revolted, may no longer hang fufpended over that metaphysic ground on which it was at the commencement of the quarrel first stated, and on which it hath been labouring, until the bufinefs itfelf is quite ruined in operation and nearly rendered impracticable in negotiation : it is in the following paper stated on the ground of fact, as it flood in act and deed before the revolt of the Colonies, and as it now stands E 2 fince fince the journey of British Commissioners to America.

The British idea of the British fovereignty is, That the Americans as individuals, as also in their respective provinces, colonies, and plantations, are indiffolubly united to the British State, as fubjects thereof, without being participants in the governing legislature : That they are fubjects of a monarchy, in and over the limitation, fettlement, and establishment of which, wholly refiding in Parliament, they have no legislative controul: That they are fubjects of the King, not in the fame manner as a Briton, who is a participant in the will of the flate, is fubject to the King, but fubject to the King in Parliament. The Americans always held they are and ought of right to be fubject to the King in the fame manner as a Briton is a subject; but conceive that the King in Parliament is a compound monarch, in whom is united legiflative will and administrative execution, and who is therefore in effence and de facto abfolute and defpotic.

These two ideas, if there can be no modification in the one or the other, are fo remote, and have fuch incompatible disparity, that they could never be brought to, or stand on, the same ground together. together. They never could unite in administration of the government of the Colonies; and can never meet in any negotiation of their bufiness as they now stand towards each other.

No fystem of the administration of the Colonies could ever harmonize, much less unite these two repugnant and discordant ideas, so long as, or whenever the People on the one hand, and Officers of the Crown on the other, were extreme to mark, without any modification, the utmost bounds of either.

Those Governors, and other Officers of the Crown, who could not find in their administration to admit of any modification of the strict legal idea of fovereignty, fo as to fet it on the fame ground with that liberty which the people called conflictutional, and claimed : those who thus referred to an ideal fovereignty, which never did exift in America, and could fee and admit an actual liberty. which did exift, never could and never did govern these Provinces. On the contrary, they perpetually brought the rights of the Sovereign into difcuffion; and as confantly committed the honour of the Crown in difputes, wherein it always loft fome part, and have finally brought it into a contest wherein it hath lost the whole. This is the opinion, and was the fystem, of a poor practical Governor, who did govern his Majefty's provinces; this is the leaf out of his book, which the late Earl of Halifax directed him to give to his fucceffor, Sir Francis Bernard, that he might govern them as well as they had been governed by the forgotten fervant who writes this.

This idea of harmonizing, by practical modifications of Sovereignty and Liberty, the 8 proceedings proceedings of Government on conflitutional ground, was the idea by which the Americans drew the line of their rights and claims. This ground, on which the administration of the government of the Provinces had in fact always stood, was the old ground which they petitioned to be placed upon, and which they took and fortified, in order to maintain, at the commencement of this unfortunate contest.

When the Americans were told from authority, fupported by arms, * that " No line could be drawn between the fupreme authority of Parliament and the total independence of the Colonies"—when this alternative was the only ground left—they declared themfelves FREL AND INDE-PENDENT: And,

1st. That all allegiance to the Britifly Crown is abfolved.

2d. That all political connection with the flate of Great Britain is diffolved.

The contest issued in an appeal under arms to Heaven. Events, by fomething contrary to the estimation and ordinary course of buman affairs, have declared against Great Britain. She therefore, under powers originating in Parliament, and by Com-miffioners commiffioned and inftructed by the King, has de fatto acknowledged these Provinces, Colonies, and Plantations to be States. And by propositions made, hath offered to confent to the establishment of every State, with power, by its own legislature, Ift. To settle its own revenue.

2d. Its military establishment; fo that no military force shall be kept in the different States of America, without the confent of the general Congress or particular Affemblies.

3d. To exercise perfect freedom of legiflation and internal government. If now, in the fame view as this paper hath stated the actual existence of the fovereignty prior to the revolt, the Minister. of the time being shall examine what operation this state of fovereignty, which the Commissioners proposed to confent to, must have; they will find, that these States, thus become independent in legiflation and internal government, independent as to the purfe and fword ; and being removed from Great Britain at three thoufand miles distance; this proposed fovereignty left to the mother-country could in principle be but a half-fovereignty, and in execution no fovereignty at all.

Although these propositions were not accepted; although the government of Great Britain is by no law, human or divine; by no point of justice, express or implied · by no obligation, perfect or imperfect; bound to meet the fame parties on the fame ground : yet, this ceffion having been proffered by perfons authorised from King and Parliament, and these propositions not disapproved. but the perfons who made them rewarded; being made when America flood on the defensive; Great Britain, who retired back to this ground under the then predicament, can never, under the prefent circumstances of the British arms. advance forward de facto to better.

The writer of this paper, having fubmitted to confideration, on the grounds of fact: First, How the fovereignty existed in efficiency, prior to the revolt: Secondly, On what ground it must now stand, as the state of our negotiations have placed it: And, thirdly, having in his fecond memorial, by a detailed state of the fervice, shewn how it stands committed, in confequence of the events of war; cannot perceive that he exceeds the bounds of duty, which a faithful subject owes to his King and Country, when he recommended, in his fecond memorial, the withdrawing the APPENDIX.

the troops from a fubordinate contest in North America, which must be decided by other events elsewhere; or that he offends against the strictest bonds of his allegiance, when he recommends the treating with the Americans as with Free States, for a truce, on terms of uti poffedetis, as preliminary to a general congrefs of Europe; while, faving the honour of the Crown, he removes the ftumbling-block which lies in limite, and recommends what may be made practicable: Nor that he could incur the imputation of betraying the Crown, if he was a Minister, and should advise, in cafe the fovereignty can neither be preferved by arms, nor re-established by treaty, not a furrender or a ceffion, but a withdrawing from the difmantled ruins of a fortress, no longer defensible or tenable.
