Mr. Robinette's address to the jury in MacWherrell's behalf, impressed upon them the importance of the case and assured them that he could point out weak spots in the crown's case that must clear his client and prove to them, if not his innocence, at least that he was not guilty. He characterized the investigations of the detectives as having led to evidence that was incomplete and crude.

Mr. Robinette spoke for over two hours without interruption and concluded with an impressive appeal to the jury for a fair consideration of the detached chain of cir-cumstantial evidence that was just con-nected sufficiently to justify a weak sus-nicion.

Mr. McKay, on behalf of Walker, said that he need not claim their attention for any length of time. The crown said that they would produce evidence to show that the prisoner Walker was in the neighbor-bood of the Williams, house "Is there one word," said the counsel, one single word to show it? If they found MacWherrel not guilty, as he thought they would, there was not the slightest title of evidence to show that Walker had anything to do with the crime. Mr. Osler, in his address to the jury, went carefully over the whole ground and

The note sent by Walker to MaeWherrell in jail, asking him to tell the same story, was also significant. If the crime was committed on Friday, it would make the case much more serious for Walker. It would show that MaeWherrell spied out the work on Thursday and returned on Friday with Walker to help him do the deed.

OTTAWA, March 15.—The opening of Parliament to-day was attended by very large number of sightseers. His Excellency read the speech from the throns.

In the speech the Governor-General expressed his satisfaction at meeting the legislators for the first time in an official capacity, and expressed his sense of the heartiness of the reception accorded to him as her Majesty's viceroy and representative, a reception which has once more manifested the loyalty, the cordiality, and the public spirit of the Canadian people. The conclusion of the Behring Sea arbitration was mentioned, and the hope expressed that the Imperial Government would obtain redress for those Canadian subjects of her majesty, who were deprived of their property. The speech promises a revision of the Customs duties with a view to meet the changes which time has effected in business operations of all kinds througout the Dominion. It is not proposed, the speech says, "to change the principles of which the existing enactments on this subject are based, the amendments which will be offered for the consideration of Parliament are designed to simplify the operation of the tariff and to lesson, as far as can be done, consistently with those principles and with the requirements of the treasury, the imposts which are now in force." OTTAWA. March 17.—The whole time of the House yesterday was occupied in the debate on the address. Sir James Grant moved its adoption. He began by paying a high tribute to the recently departed Governor-General, paying special attention to the work that had been done by Lady Stanley to elevate her sex. He passed on from this to speak of the present incumbent of the office, to whom he paid high compliment as specially fitted to fulfill the duties devolving upon him, not alone by natural, but also by reason of his knowledge of Canada, gained during his former residence in the country. From this the speaker passed on to the present condition of affairs in Canada, contrasting it with that which prevailed twenty years ago or that which prevailed twenty years ago or at the time of Confederation. He spoke specifically of the C. P. R. as being the great link which binds the various pro-vinces together, and in this connection he referred to the great development that has taken place in the ocean traffic between Canada and foreign countries, a traffic that he expected to see even further de-veloped. that he expected to see even further developed.

After Mr. Lachapelle had seconded the motion, speaking in French, Hon. Mr. Laurier at once began an attack on the policy of the Government in delaying the opening of parliament for which no reason had been given in the speech from the throne. There was, he said, evidently some reason for the delay and that reason should be given to the House. One reason had been given in the press, which was that the Government was waiting to see what tariff legislation would take place in the United States Congress. This, he believed to be the real reason, giving as the ground for his belief a quotation from the speech of the Prime Minister at the banquet of the Toronto Board of Trade last February. Mr. Laurier next criticized the methods adopted by the commissioners in taking evidence throughout the country in reference to the tariff, especially condemning the holding of such meetings in secret, He read newspaper reports of the meetings at Montreal which referred to the affair as being in the nature of feeling the public

His closing points were as to what the speech did not contain, concerning which he first took up the subject of pro-hibition complaining that the report of House. He dwelt at some length on the France, closing with a general arraignment of the Government policy.

Sir John Thompson replied to the leader of the Opposition. He quite agreed with the eulogiums that had been passed upon the present and former Governors-General. He also agreed with what hal been said regarding the success had been achieved by Canadians at the Chicago Fair, but he said that the success had been achieved by the very class of persons, the farmers and dairymen, who were represented by the Opposition as being tariff-burdened and in such poor circumstances that they were leaving the country in large numbers. He then took up the point as to the late date at which the House had been called together, and claimed that in reality it was not late when it is considered that the budget speech will be ready for delivery

Sir Richard Cartwright followed the Premier. He took the ground that the

Mr. Blake at a Banquet LONDON, March 17.—Hon. Edward Blake responded to the toast of the 'Irish at Home and Abroad' at the St. Patrick's Day banquet on Thursday night. He said that the Irish abroad were loyal subjects of the countries with which they had cast their lot. Ireland was the only land in which the Irishmen had not attained the highest positions. The Government's success in working for Ireland's cause depended on the solidarity of the race all over the world. All dissensions should perish. The recipient of many of Queen Victoria's cast-off garments is Clary, a little draper in Windsor.

Clary is the personal friend of Queen Victoria's head-dresser. It is not a friendship to be despised, since to the head dresser falls all Her Majesty's cast-off apparel. As royalty never wears the same cap or nightdress more than once, the head-dresser is well worth "cultivating." Queen Victoria has very pretty feet. They are smaller and daintier than the feet of any of her children. She always wears an old-fashioned congress gaiter, and her last is in the keeping of the provincial bootmakers at Windsor and Balmoral, as well as the court-maker in London. Likewise have the provincial drapers the block upon which is fashion London. Likewise have the provincial drapers the block upon which is fashioned Her Majesty's caps. This block is made to fit her head closely, and in a quarter of a century the style has scarcely varied. The caps are always made of fine white crepe lisse. The light frame is edged with fine white silk wire. upon which three little crepe lisse frills are sewed, to meet in the back two long white streamers daintly hemstiched by hand. The streamers fall to the waist line. When completed the whole must not weigh more than three ounces.

The Queen orders these caps by the dozen. Six dozen caps generally suffice for a single sojourn at Windsor Castle. She took four dozen with her on her last visit to Grasse. Six dozen night dresses are crumpled during a Windsor visit. Never is the same nightdress worn a second time, even after laundering. Who gets them? Ah, that's the head-dresser's scret. It is suspected that she plies a fine trade in royal rubbish. lrapers the block upon which is fashio

The white mantles are worn when Vic-toria takes her daily drive in the vicinity of Windsor, where her presence excites little attention from the townsfolk. Indeed, so democratic is our ruler that she not unfrequently drives out through the stable door, to the chagrin of curi-ous strangers always congregated at the main entrance to the castle grounds. On the occasion of the opening of the institution founded in London in commemoration of Her Majesty's jubilee, the Duke of Connaught delivered in person to the provincial draper the order for Her Majesty's bonnet and mantles. The Queen was much disturbed. She retired before the mantle put in an appearance at the castle, but she could not sleep. She is fatter than ever!" Needless to add, the feathers were discarded.

Royalty suffers as much anxiety in preparing for public functions as does its brother of the common clay. There is as much excitement in the royal household in preparing for a state function as in the modest establishment. The effect each is likely to produce on the public beholder is weighed and considered as carefully as the personal like the public beholder is weighed and considered as carefully as the personal like or dishike of the wearer. Before she gets into bed they heat and spread between the Irish linen sheets a white blanket, part wool, part cotton, and bound with white silk ribbon, with the royal arms embroidered in the corner. Queen Victoria reclines upon the blanket until the body is thoroughly heated. The maids then withdraw the blanket, and the finest product of Ireland's loom embraces the Queen of England and the Empress of India.

Saginaw, Mich., March 12.-Lumb SAGINAW, Mich., March 12.—Lumber men interested in obtaining a log supply in Canada for stocking Michigan mills are greatly exergised over the discovery that their business in that direction may be entirely cut off. Under the provisions of the McKinley Act the duty on manufactured lumber was reduced from $2 to $1 per thousand feet, with a proviso that in the event of any country levying an export duty on saw logs the reduction in the duty on manufactured lumber should not be operative, but a duty of $2 a thousand feet perative, but a duty of $2 a thousand feel hereon should be conected.

Michigan capitalists at once entered Canada, purchased timber limits and in the last, two years rafted across Lake Huron to Michigan mills a total of 390,500,000 feet of logs. The Wilson bill as it passed the House, places manufactured lumber on the free list and contained no proviso as to retailation in the event of the Canadians reimposing the log export duty, hence if the bill became a law as it passed the House the Canadians awould not only hence if the bill became a law as it passed the House the Canadians would not only have a free entry for their manufactured lumber production to the United States, but they could also impose a log export duty that should practically prohibit the export of logs into the United States. Those interested have taken steps to have a proper restrictive clause inserted in the Senate bill, and will send some one to Washington to watch the matter and see that their interests are not slaughtered. These to me are very precious memorials and repay me ten times over for all the indignity and scoffling I have endured. Hardly and act of kindness in my cusy life, especially to my people, but now seems to be remembered. Circumstances long forgotten are new recalled by letters and messages from all parts of this continent, and if one wanted his good deeds to pass before him before the last great day, it would seem that some such fate should be endured as that which I have now to experience. I feel like saying with Daniel Webster, "Thank God, the past at least is secure." What the future has in store for me can be met with fortitude with such friends and such a record as with such friends and such a record as these letters make plain.'

POKER A GAME OF SKILL.

An Accused Gambler Escapes Conviction on That Ground. Hamilton, Ont., March 12.-James Hamilton, Ont. March 12.—James Henigan, a well-known man about town, was placed on trial on Saturday before Judge Muir on a charge of keeping a gaming house. The rooms kept by Henigan were raided bp the police and Henigan and half a dozen others were arrested. The raid was made by Sergt. Prentice and a squad of police. At the trial the prisoner's counsel objected to the evidence of the police being allowed, as it was primafacie evidence and the arrests should save been made by Chief of Police McKinnon in person. Judge Muir declined to admit the testimony of the police, except as ordinary witnesses. Three or four of the young men who were in the rooms when nary witnesses. WASHINGTON, March 12.—The statistical returns of the Department of Agriculture for March consist principally of estimates of the distribution of wheat and corn, the amounts remaining in farmers' hands, the proportion of merchantable corn and the average prices of both the merchantable and the unmerchantable. The returns also indicate that a very considerable proportion of the wheat now in farmers' hands comes from crops prior to that of 1893. also indicate that a very considerable proportion of the wheat now in farmers' hands comes from crops prior to that of 1893, and especially from the crops of 1891 and 1890. Such stocks have been held principally by the large growers. Some damage to such stores is reported from Michigan and Washington. The indicated stock of wheat in farmers' hands is 114,060,000 bushels, or 28.8 per cent. of the volume of the crcp of 1893. This is nearly 21,000,000 bushels less than the estimate for March 1 last year and 20,000,000 bushels less than the average of the past eight years. The amount remaining in farmers' hands in the eleven principal wheat growing States is about 73,000,000 bushels, or 63.8 per cent. of the amount in producers' hands in the country at large. The average weight of the crop of 1893 per measured bushel, as calculated from correspondents and millers and State agents, is 57.6 pounds, making the estimated product a little over 318,500,000 commercial bushels, as against 396,000,000 measured bushels, as heretofore reported.

When Landon met the erring woman her tears melted him to forgiveness and they left for home, swearing never to part they left for home, swearing never to part again. The repentant spouse suggested that her Louis take back the deed and give her $1.000 and call it square. Landon gave her the money. It is now said that she gave Dexter's family $750 of this amount and that the pair have left again for parts unknown. Mrs. Landon says "it was divine providence that put Garrett in my path. Being a Christian, I could not live happily with Landon, who is not very orthodox, anyhow."

Gladstone's First Speech.

Mr. Labouchere has come into possession of a photograph of a sketch of Mr. Gladstone making his first great speech in the House of Commons in 1833. The sketch, which is said to have been drawn at the time, represents Mr. Gladstone, then a member for Newark speaking from the front bench below the gangway in the old house that was burned down the next year. Mr. Gladstone's very first utterance in the House of Commons was made, not from the front bench below the gangway, but from under the gallery, where he was almost inaudible to reporters; and, curiously enough, it was in reply to Rigby Wasen, then member for Ipswich, and father of Mr. Eugene Wason, who now represents South Ayrshire as one of Mr. Gladstone's staunchest supporters.

PRESS INTERVIEWING.

"When you want anything go straight to the fountain head. Don't ever make a request on a matter of importance to an underling."

These words were addressed to me several years ago by a city editor who knew his business. I have interviewed a goodly number of men since and have come to the conclusion that his advice was sound.

viewed a goodly number of men since and have come to the conclusion that his advice was sound.

I have found that in most instances where an interview is requested from a man who has but recently sprang into prominence, or where he holds a subordinate position, or where he is ignorant, it is extremely difficult to accomplish your object. In the first instance the individual is so full of his own importance that he usually considers that it would be beneath his dignity to grant an interview. In the second case he may be quite in sympathy with you, but afraid of saying anything which might not accord with the views of his chief, and in the last instance you are likely to find the subject so susjicious that you are attempting to take advantage of him that your real object, namely, to secure his opinion, will be frustrated.

The thorougly well educated gentleman in any walk of life is the ideal subject for an interview. He is easy of access, in case you have good grounds for meeting him; he believes you honest until such time as you have given him cause to think otherwise; he listens to you, and immediately grants you the interview, or refuses, stating his reasons, and he always treats you with the utmost courtesy. There are men who, when asked by a reporter to grant an interview, appear to think that the granting all the while that he has been paid a great compliment, inasmuch as the newspaper offers to publish his views to

Perhaps the most pleasing duty to which I was ever assigned, in the interviewing line, was that which secured me an introduction to Hon. Wilfrid Laurier. I was detailed to ask him a series of questions bearing upon the policy of the Reform party. I found him at the house of a friend in Toronto and made known my mission. I was at once admitted to the presence of the great leader of the Reform party. He was sitting alone in the library writing. Immediately I entered the room he arose and extended his hand in friendly greeting.

"Are you visiting me as Koko, my young friend, or as an Empire reporter" he said, as he graciously motioned me to a chair.

important incident of the day. After you had stated the object of your visit he would reply at once and say whether or not he would grant the interview for publication. I know of cases where he would grant the interview, but request that it should not be published before a certain date in the future. He always seemed interested in young then. I never met him but in young men. I never met him but what he enquired as to my health, how I was getting along, how the different members of my family were, and always concluded with a word of encourage-

Patient Sir Oliver. Patient Sir Oliver.

Sir Oliver Mowat has the reputation of being a dyed-in-the-wool Tory. He is considered by many who know him intimately to be one of the most conservative of inen, and yet in the matter of granting an interview he is perhaps one of the most accessible in Canada. I have never yet left him after an interview without a feeling that the predominant feature of his nature is kindness. If he grants an interview for view without a feeling that the predominant feature of his nature is kindness. If he grants an interview for publication—which is rare in the case of Conservative journals—he does not begin by giving elaborate instructions. He says what he wants to and trusts implicitly to the reporter to do him justice. He seldom refuses point blank to grant an interview, but has an exasperating habit of telling you after you have had your interview that "Of course I have not said a word for publication."

I have observed him keenly during the session, when he almost daily receives deputations soliciting Government aid for various projects. No matter what twaddle he may omit, the Attorney General appears interested, and never for a moment allows the impression that he is bored to circulate. His usual answer is simply, "We will take the matter into our serious consideration," and usually that is the last heard of the affair. There are times, however, when he evinces great interest in what is said, and while he is always guarded in his rephies. I have known him to say of hand that he was much win to say of hand that he was much win to say of hand that he was much win to say of hand that he was much guarded in in rophes. I have know him to say off hand that he was muc impressed and that aid would be grante to this or that scheme under consider

Sir John Thompson has the power to put his ideas into fewer words than any other man I know. He wastes no time on formalities. If you have business with him he will see you, no matter what paper you represent. He does not make fish of one and flesh of another. You are expected to state as briefly as possible your business, and on the instant you will receive your reply. Like all men of powerful minds he seems to have thought out beforehand any question you might chance to ask him. He takes your word every time, but somehow you leave him with the impression that it would a terrible mistake to ever deceive him. He usually stands during an interview. Invariably he shakes hands before you begin. He asks no questions. After you have stated your case he gives you your, answer, and in most cases asks you to repeat your or tores that he may be sure that you have correctly caught his idea. That is all. He bids you a pleasant good-day, and is ready for the next of many callers.

About the hardest men to interview are railway officials, especially after an accident. None of them know anything, won't know anything, and try, so far as in their power, to prevent you knowing anything about the affair. They don't appear to be able to grasp the idea that all the particulars are bound to come out, and that the very fact that they refuse to give them stimulates the reporter to increased effort. In many cases the railroad officials could by giving the facts to the reporters, save themselves and the newspapers a great deal of trouble and annoyance. In every railway accident, where any people are injured, their friends or relatives are anxious to obtain particulars. In cases where the officials refuse to give them, very often the reporters, who are anxious to obtain facts, only secure data of an erroneous character from outsiders, and, as a consesquence, a great deal of annoyance ensues.

The chief requisite in a successful interviewer is a thorough knowledge of his subject before he approaches the person from whom he desires to draw opinions.—Koko, in The Empire.

COCOA.

The Oft times Query, What Is It, Full,

The Oft times Query. What Is It. Fall.
Answered.

Of the thousands who drink cocoa few know exactly how and where it is obtained. From an article in Good House-keeping on the subject we take the following description:

It is a popular error that cocoa and the cocoanut are in some way related—an error which is due to the similarity of the names, but to no other property in common. Cocoa is the product of the seeds of trees of the genus Theobroms—signifying "food of the gods." The trees are natives of the tropical portions of this continent, though they now grow, by cultivation in some of the low latitudes of the Eastern hemisphere. At the time of the discovery of Yucatan, it is said the Indians were using the seeds as money, while in Mexico, when it was first visited by the Spaniards, the Aztecs made from them a beverage which they called chocolate.—whence the modern name of chocolate. The first writer to state these facts was the Spanish explorer, Capt. Gonzalo Fernandez de Oviedo y Valdes, who wrote about the middle of the sixteenth century regarding the origin of the new beverage, which was at that time first about the middle of the sixteenth century regarding the origin of the new beverage, which was at that time first attracting attention in some of the European countries.

There are several species of the genus Theobroma, the most valuable of which is the Theobroma cacao, which is frequently spoken of as the cocoa tree, in distinction from other members of the genus. This tree is extensively cultivated in the countries lying near the equator on this continent, and has been introduced with success into similar latitudes in Asia and Africa. It usually grews to a height of some twenty feet, introduced with success into similar latifudes in Asia and Africa. It suaully grews to a height of some twenty feet, though occasionally attaining thirty or thrty-five feet. The trunk grows in a straight stem to the height of from six to ten feet, when it divides into numerous brasches. The fruit of the tree ripens twice a year, and may be compared to a cucumber in shape, being six to ten inches in length, red on side most exposed to the sun, and yellow elsewhere. The rind is hard and warty, enclosing a sweetish, pleasantly flavored pulp, embedded in which are about twenty beans, the size of large almonds, each of which is inclosed in a thin, reddish-brown scale or skin, which when broken and separated from the inner bean or kernel forms the cocoa shells of commerce, which are often used in the preparation of a very mild and healthful beverage. The tree attains its full vigor and productiveness when seven or eight years old, and will yield a satisfactory crop for perhaps twenty years or more. The average yield of a tree is from twenty to thirty pounds of dried beans in a year.

tree is from twenty to thirty pounds of dried beans in a year. The ripened pods are gathered twice a year, and after being picked from the tree are allowed to lie and ferment for some five or six days, being kept in earthen vessels or piled in heaps on the ground. They are then opened by hand, the seeds are removed from the pulp and dried, either by the sun or artificially. There is another method, not so agreeable in contemplation, but which is said to yield an even better quality of cocoa. In that case the fruit is buried in the ground till the pulp has decayed, when the seeds are dug out and the product is sold as cacao terre.

"It is a well-known fact," said a citizen, that men not habitually accustomed to wearing evening dress sometimes find difficulty in disposing of their hands to their entire satisfaction; indeed, it takes a "blooded" man to know what to do with his hands and to be able to forget them. The man with his hands behind his back is a familiar figure; and it is a curious fact that upon the signs which one may see in various parts of the town announcing dress suits for sale or to hire and displaying the figure of a man in evening dress, the man is almost always represented with one or both hands behind his back; even upon these painted canvases, while the man's face is bold, his hands are sly. This seems almost a pitv. It may be that the painters are moved by a subtle sympathy with the generality of mankind, or by the fact that the human hand is a pretty difficult thing to paint: but it seems as thouch, both for art's sake and for the public thist thing to paint: but it seems as thouch, both for art's sake and for the public thist truction, they should give to the man on canvas the appearance and the bearing of a trained society man. Belgian Marriage Certificates. Helgian Marriage Certificates.

In Belgium it is the custom to give certificates of marriages in the form of little books with paper covers. These books, which are often produced in course of law proceedings, and are taken in evidence, are apt to become dirty and dog's-eared. The burgomaster of Brussels, has therefore, hit upon a new plan. Henceforth a charge will be made for the books, which will be neathy bound in moroco and cilit-edged. They will be something more than a mere certificate. A summary of Belgian law on the married state is given in them for the cate. A summary of Belgian law on the married state is given in them for the use of young couples, and among a mass of other miscellaneous information are directions for the feeding and care of infants. There are also places for entering the names and birthdays of the children of the marriage, the authorities considerately affording space for twelve such entries. To poor persons the books will be issued free of charge. One of the two councillors was in favor of adding directions for obtaining a divorce, but it is needless to say his suggestion was not adopted.
