The Mystery of Rutledge Hall
—OR—
"The Cloud With a Silver Lining"

CHAPTER IX.

About half a mile from the tall iron gates leading into the extensive and well-kept grounds surrounding the fine old mansion where the terrible tragedy which had caused such excitement in Ashford and its neighborhood had taken place stood a substantial red-brick house, where a former butler in Mr. Rutledge's service had started in business as an innkeeper, calling his house the Rutledge Arms, in compliment to the family he had served.

It was a prosperous place enough, standing on the high-road in a conspicuous solitude, but sufficiently near Ashford to be a rendezvous of those Mr. Dant's men who frequented such places, and to walk out to the Rutledge Arms was a favorite amusement for the spare hours and holiday afternoons of the cloth-workers.

But, numerous as its frequenters were, it had never been so full as on the snowy afternoon of the second day after the Hunt ball, for the inquiry into the sudden and terrible death of the squire was taking place there, and in a large room on the first floor the corner and his jury were assembled.

They had been to the stately old mansion where the dead man had resided, and had seen him lying there in the last sleep, with a frown still lingering on his forehead and lips set hard and stern, and they had returned to the Rutledge Arms, looking pale and grave, for most of them had known the squire well, and the coroner sitting at one end of the long deal table had been a personal friend of his, and three days before had ridden by his side after the hounds, and had returned home to the Hall to dinner, and had perhaps envied the squire the beautiful young wife who sat at the head of his table in shining raiment, looking so queen-like and stately.

And now that beautiful young wife—where was she?

Standing by the painted mantelpiece of the room in which the inquiry was proceeding was a tall gray-haired man upon whom the eyes of most were constantly turned with an expression of interest and almost pity. He was a man of good appearance, tall and spare in form, with handsome

COULD NOT SLEEP NIGHTS

Pains and Headaches Relieved by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Dublin, Ontario.—"I was weak and irregular, with pains and headaches, and could not sleep nights. I learned about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound by reading the letters in the newspapers and tried it because I wanted to get better. I have got good results from it as I feel a lot stronger and am not troubled with such bad headaches as I used to be and am more regular. I am gaining in weight all the time and I tell my friends what kind of medicine I am taking. You may use my letter as a help to others."—Mrs. JAMES RACHO, Box 12, Dublin, Ontario.

Halifax Nurse Recommends
Halifax, N.S.—"I am a maternity nurse and have recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to many women who were childless, also to women who need a good tonic. I am English and my husband is American, and he told me of Lydia E. Pinkham while in England. I would appreciate a copy or two of your little books on women's ailments. I have one which I keep to hand. I will willingly answer letters from any woman asking about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. J. M. COLMAN, 24 Unalaska St., Halifax, Nova Scotia.

regular features, gray hair, and an expression so stern and forbidding that its present sternness was hardly greater than that usually visible in his cold eyes and sternly compressed lips.

Few indeed could have guessed from his external composure what intense emotion and anxiety were raging in a heart which had long been tutored to feel neither pain, nor compassion, nor sympathy. For years Mr. Francis Greville, or Lawyer Greville, as he was more generally called in Ashford, had been known as a cold stern man, first-rate in his profession and devoted to it to the exclusion of all other interests. He was respected by every one at Ashford, as his father and grandmother had been before him as a man of the nicest honor, scrupulously just, upright, and honest; but even those who respected him most did not like him. To win affection one must give proof of being able to return it; and no one in Ashford had ever seen Lawyer Greville's face change and grow kindly and sympathetic or heard his deep, sonorous, almost musical voice soften into tenderness—no one—not even the handsome young man who called him father, or the pretty golden-haired girl who looked at him with eyes so like the young mother's who had died in giving her birth.

And now, as he stood, tall and erect, in the bare whitewashed room, looking down upon the eager awe-stricken countenances of the jurymen and other of his fellow-townsmen, and saw on one and all the agitation they could not conceal, his stern handsome face showed no change, except that its usual pallor was intensified to ghastliness; and Dr. Arnold's keen, observant eyes saw how tightly the strong hand was clenched as it hung by his side.

And yet no one present knew so well as did the lawyer himself what the result of that inquiry would be. They all feared, but he was sure that, ere the dusk of the winter afternoon crept in at the wide uncurtained windows, the heaviest blow he could receive would have fallen upon him—a blow which would strike that which he held dearest on earth, his hitherto spotless name, a name respected during three generations, a name on which no spot of shame or dishonor had ever fallen, but which, from that day forth, would be on every lip in terms of opprobrium and contempt, dragged in the mire, coupled with a base and dastardly crime. And through whom? Through the one human being in all the world whom Lawyer Greville had ever loved, and who now had covered himself and all belonging to him with obloquy, who had given people the right to add to the name they both bore the shameful epithet of murderer—his only son!

For, as the inquest proceeded, the vague suspicion which had at first been only whispered grew into certainty. The rumor that a young man who had been born and brought up in their midst, a man whose good looks and attractive manner had made him a general favorite, who was engaged to a girl whom they all knew and liked—that Frank Greville was guilty of the crime which had so shaken them—had been received by the inhabitants of Ashford with incredulous horror. But soon the incredulity was to die away, and only the horror would remain.

One by one, with grave faces and unsteady voices, the witnesses gave their evidence; and the coroner's face grew graver as he heard. Most of them were servants in the household of the deceased; and, though none of them had very important evidence to give, it all tended to the same end. His valet, an elderly man who had lived with Squire Rutledge for many years, was the first witness heard. The man's face was very pale and his voice low and subdued as he spoke, answering the questions put to him, volunteering no evidence, suggesting nothing.

"You have been many years in the service of the deceased?"
"Twenty-four years, sir."
"You were his personal attendant?"
"I was, sir."
"Was it a part of your duty to attend him on his retiring to rest?"
"Yes, sir."
"How did it happen that you did not do so on the night of the 22nd?"
"My master did not require my services. He rang, and desired that the household should not wait up; he would sit up for my mistress himself."
"Who answered his bell?"
"I did, sir."
"What time was that?"
"It was eleven o'clock."
"Your master was in the library?"
"Yes, sir."
"Did you notice anything unusual in his manner?"
"He seemed rather put out; but

"Well?"
"But I knew that he was not pleased that my mistress had gone to this ball alone."
"How did you know that?"
"I had overheard some words between them earlier in the evening."
"How was that?"
"It was in my master's dressing-room, sir, putting out his things for dinner. He and my mistress were in the adjoining room. The door was open, and I heard my master say that he did not choose to go, and that she—my mistress—should not go alone."
The man spoke with some reluctance. He had, an almost exaggerated respect for the family that he had served, and it seemed to him humiliating that the differences between Squire and Lady Rutledge should be spoken of in public, although they had been the subject of conversation for many weeks in the servants' hall.

"Did Mrs. Rutledge make any reply?"
"She laughed."
"Will you tell us all you can remember of what passed?"
"My master seemed greatly annoyed, and spoke angrily, sir. He said that he was the laughing-stock of all his acquaintances, that the state of things should exist no longer, and he insisted that my mistress should alter her conduct. He spoke of—of—some young gentleman, sir, whom he called an impudent young idiot, and blamed my mistress for allowing his attentions."
"He mentioned no name?"
"No name, sir."
"Did Mrs. Rutledge mention any name?"
"No, she only laughed."
"Have you any idea who was meant?"
(To be continued.)

Village Rid of Three Plagues

RATS, WASPS AND CRICKETS.

The little village of Crowthorne, near Wokingham, free for the first time for many weeks from the combined plagues of rats, crickets, and wasps, could understand the relief of Hamelin at losing its only plague-rats.

Overnight the whole village had assembled round the great dump where their refuse had been tipped, just on the outskirts, to see the great fire that brought their miseries to an end. Crickets and wasps' nests were soon consumed by the flames, and only a few dozen of the many hundreds of rats escaped from the fire, quickly to be killed in their flight.

The great fire of Crowthorne originated when Major E. Ferguson brought the matter before the local council. He had seen rats and crickets he said, coming through the streets like a cavalry regiment. Keeping up the parallel to the Hamelin's story, the council determined to exterminate them.

The dump was the breeding ground responsible for all three plagues. It was riddled with rat holes, and thousands of wasps could be seen buzzing round rats that ventured into the open.

But the worst pest was the cricket. They jumped about the village in myriads, infested houses, and kept all but the hardest sleepers awake with their chirping chorus. Large numbers were found in beds, and an amount of closing of windows, doors, and apertures could keep them out.

Filming by Wireles.
Film cameras have been operated successfully by radio. A special device enables a camera to be placed at a point far distant from the operator and actuated by a transmitter. This is expected to be of great value in photographing scenes where several cameras have to be worked at the same time from different positions.

Telegraphing Cheques.
Telephotography is being used experimentally for telegraphing cheques. The signatures, figures, and so on are said to come out quite distinctly.

A family of women without fingernails or toe-nails was discovered in Italy recently by a scientist. For three generations no woman in the family has had a full-fledged finger or toe nail. In every other way the women are normal and healthy.

Safe-Guarding Trade PLANS TO STOP DUMPING.

One of the first problems which will confront Ministers when they re-assemble in London and consider the parliamentary programme for the autumn session will be the necessity for passing a short Finance Bill to give effect to duties on foreign goods recommended through the machinery of the Safeguarding of Industries Act.

It is anticipated that by November the applications of a number of industries for protection against unfair foreign competition will have been considered and in the majority of cases new duties recommended.

For obvious reasons, once the claims have been established the Government would not wish to delay longer than necessary in giving to these industries the assistance asked for.

But the prospect of such legislation recalls a hint dropped by the Chancellor of the Exchequer earlier in the summer session. This was to the effect that he should consider whether it is possible to amend the financial procedure of Parliament so as to allow that a new duty can be imposed by the passage of a money resolution.

Prevention of Dumping.
The object of this would be to avoid the long notice of the intention to impose a new duty which has now to be given by reason of the Parliamentary rule permitting a new tax to be imposed only by the passage of a Finance Bill. The effect of this is to give the foreigner many weeks' warning during which he can dump into the country great quantities of the goods that are to become subject to a duty.

It is gathered that the Government is seriously considering carrying out this reform during the autumn session if the time can be found, and also is likely to give effect to any recommended new duties without waiting for next year's Budget.

Woman M.P.'s Candour

Melbourne—Addressing the new South Wales Legislative Assembly, Miss Freston Stanley, the first woman member, in a maiden speech, said: "For many years I looked down from the women's gallery, wondering why so many old women got into Parliament."

I am not referring to the physical ages of the old gentlemen in question, but the mental ages and the obvious vacuity of mind of men who think women have no place in politics and who are still wrapped up in the moth-eaten trappings of an age that is gone.

Home Life in Denmark
The husband is a very important person in the Danish household. By that it is not meant to convey that the wife is a nonentity in her home. Far from it. Danish women had the vote long before English women. Also they share in masculine professions and avocations to an even greater extent than in this country. But the patriarchal idea is very strong, though perhaps not quite so much now as formerly, and the Danish husband is the head of his household not only in theory but in fact.

A Popular Actor.
Mr. Carl Brisson, one of the most popular actors on the English stage to-day, and a Dane by birth, illustrated this point when interviewed recently. "Take dinner in a Danish house," he said. "It is true that, except on Christmas Eve, when the husband dissects the goose, the wife always carves, but she does not distribute the food. When she has carved a portion, a servant, if there is one, or a member of the family, takes the dish to the master (unless a guest is present) and he helps himself. Guests, excepted, food is offered to him before anyone else."
"Danish children, though lovingly treated, have to render strict obedience and respect to their parents. They never address them as 'you,'

Borden's ST. CHARLES MILK
USE IT WHEREVER THE RECIPE CALLS FOR MILK

St. Charles is pure, country milk just as it comes from inspected cows in choice dairy districts. Nothing is added. Nothing is taken away except half of the natural water content which is "evaporated" that this pure milk may be put up in convenient form. If you desire a milk of creamy richness for your recipe use St. Charles just as it comes from the can—or, you can make it go twice as far by bringing it to the consistency of ordinary milk—on adding an equal quantity of water. Try the tasty recipes in the Borden book. For your copy address The Borden Co. Ltd., T. A. BORDEN & CO., St. John's, Nfld., Arenis, N.B. 18, 1925.

They are Content to Wait for a Four Like This Uncommon eagerness to own the new Chrysler Four indicates how far this latest Chrysler achievement is an advance over the usual standards of four-cylinder performance, appearance and value.

Never, perhaps, in history has a four-cylinder car been so heartily welcomed or so greatly desired.

The first showing of the Chrysler Four has attracted thousands to our show-rooms. Scores have placed orders, without demonstrations, after a first view of the car. So instantaneous has been its appeal that, already, public demand exceeds scheduled production.

It is especially significant of Chrysler value that buyers everywhere express their willingness to wait rather than purchase a car of lesser quality than the Chrysler Four.

Every facility of the great Chrysler plants is concentrated today on meeting the public demand for the desirable new Chrysler Four. Production is now running more than 500 quality cars a day, the greatest output of four-cylinder cars ever attained in a Chrysler plant.

Chrysler dealers today are making delivery with a rapidity not anticipated by the thousands who placed their orders content to wait until delivery could be made, knowing that a Chrysler Four is well worth waiting for.

We are eager to give you an immediate demonstration.

British officers interned during war. Most English people, however, drink coffee, not tea, at this time which is a movable feast.

"The distinctive features of the Danish home life," said Mr. Brisson, "are the predominance of the mother of the household, the pride the women take in housecraft, the good behaviour of the children, and the cheerfulness of the living, for a middle-class family of six can manage very comfortably on three hundred pounds a year."

As is general on the Continent, the Danish breakfast consists of coffee and rolls. Lunch at 12 noon is a substantial meal; dinner is taken between 7 and 8. In between is "5 o'clock tea," made fashionable by the home of fifty years ago as I have read about it."

Shortage of Servants.
The servant problem is as acute in Denmark as here. As a result, people began to develop the restaurant and flat habit, and home ties were being loosened. This, however, has been checked by the Government's action in imposing a 10 per cent. tax on hotels and restaurant bills. The duty is resented, and at present hotels and restaurants are more or less boycotted.

Doubts the Veracity
Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir:—As an old waltzian I was greatly interested in the report of trout fishing in Fortune Bay, given by Mr. W. R. Warren, in your issue of to-day. I suppose the fish referred to were salt water trout, as no man could very well carry four hundred and sixty-six pounds of fish from any far inland water, and no mention is made of a horse and wagon or other means of transportation. If they were fishing from a canoe, dory or motor boat, and the catches of the three men were about equal, as stated, then they must have had on board about ten quintals, or more, of green fish besides the anglers, which would mean probably another five cwt. I do not know the carrying capacity of these western boats, but I am a bit doubtful of the performance. Hoping this will result in eliciting further information, I am, dear Sir,
Yours truly,
S. J. TUCKER.
St. John's, Sept. 14, 1925.

[It is not surprising that our correspondent appears to doubt the veracity of the remarkable record published yesterday, but we may set his mind at rest as to the location and the means of conveyance. The motor boats used in a cruise round Fortune Bay are of necessity no frail skiffs, and are more than equal to the load mentioned. Further, at Old Bay the party would be fishing in or within a short distance of tidal water.—Ed.]

Snapshots in Colors
A simplified method of color photography recently demonstrated in Paris, may hasten the day when we all can take snapshots that will register green trees and blue sky.
Instead of the old color photograph method, requiring three separate exposures, Rousseau (discoverer of the new method), found that he could get better results by a single exposure of three films placed one upon the other in the camera. Only a single plate needs to be developed.
The first film registers blue and violet, the second green, while yellow, orange, and red are registered on the third.

To his sorrowing relatives and friends we extend our sympathy, and pray that his soul may rest in peace.—COM.

struggle for fame and fortune. Elliot Dexter whose recent triumphs on the screen are still very fresh in the minds of movie followers lends his skill and artistic finish to the part of a rich follower of the seductive gleams of the Great White Way.
Kathlyn Williams as Jean Valjean, a veteran in the ways and manners of the ever changing throne of Broadway, Miss Williams creates a character which actually lives on the screen. Richard Wayne, Harold Goodwin, Harry Northrup and Henry Barrows give convincing performances of the different types of men who frequent the glittering high spots of the great metropolis.
A Romance of the Great White Way into which are woven all the thrills of night life in the great metropolis. The story trends its way from "back-stage" of a Broadway Revue, through midnight scenes in a Gilded Palace, a mysterious murder, a thrilling auto smashup, into one of the strangest love stories ever told.
Coming two big specials, "The Man Who Came Back" and "Judgment of the Storm." Don't fail to see them at the Majestic.

BRIEF TREASURES.

Sir Aurel Stein who was commissioned by the Indian Government to lead an archaeological expedition to Eastern Turkestan and Westernmost China, is shortly about to publish his report. The most interesting part of his account is likely to be that which deals with his investigations at Khara-Khoto, the dead city in Mongolia which was laid out long ago by Genghis Khan, the eminent Russian explorer. Archaeologists are awaiting the volume with keen expectation, whetted by the exhibition of Sir Aurel Stein's fine new book, held at the British Museum. Col. Kostoff's discovery of Khara-Khoto is one of the ages for here archaeology breaks new ground.

How ancient the city is no one knows, but it is certain that it goes back to the period (about 1320) when left us to the Golden Horde when Mongolia, it seems, was a world power.

Some original fragments of the writings of Genghis Khan set down by the scribes from his own words were found amid the ruins; also business correspondence and the Debt Act of that period.

More wonderful still, part of the celebrated Persian writings of the Book of Sindbad, "The Stories of the Seven Sages" (or Masters), was found in the original. One Arabic text of the story is contained in the "Thousand and One Nights."

Whole libraries of books were recovered. 2,000 copies in all, including one of 34 pages of medicine for horses. Many were written on silk, and the binding was of blue. They were as new-looking as though they had been inscribed yesterday.

Several editions were printed; thus it is established that the art of printing was known in the East much earlier than had been thought. Nor was this all. Immense quantities of objects of all kinds were found, including hand-woven gobelins of exquisite beauty.

Buddhist Paintings.
But of these, perhaps the most valuable were 300 Buddhist paintings, chiefly on silk and thick linen cloth, which had been treated beforehand with a preparation of chalk and glue. The colors are fresh and even brilliant, some quite original tints are introduced, as, for example, a tender pinkish violet.

Looking at these Buddhist paintings, one is at once reminded of early Christian art. Often the Buddha is enveloped in clouds, and at each side to be seen the little figure of a monk, or in a corner that of a pious layman, censer in hand.

Some of these ikons are unimaginably fantastic.
The Mongols of those days, the days of Genghis Khan, was evidently a land of great culture, a land in which people from many distant parts of the civilized world assembled.

It would appear that the Mongols were not altogether the savages that we have imagined them to be.
Khara-Khoto, about which we now learn for the first time, is a strange and mystical city. The Mongolians of to-day call it the Black City, and believing that it is haunted by spirits, will not enter it. No one would even tell the expedition where it was located.

One night a woman, caught by a storm, was forced to take shelter there.

Next day, raking over the ruins, she found a magnificent necklace composed of three ropes of pearls.
It is said that the last ruling prince, when besieged by the Chinese, buried 80 cartloads of gold, silver and other treasure in the city. The Mongolians are confident that this treasure is there—but none dare seek it, lest harm befall him.

The city, which shows traces of having been well planned, contains a number of tapering towers and a temple of original design, with a cupola.

Preserved By Desert Air.

In one of these towers, called the praying tower, most of the books and the paintings were found. Some of them were strewn about, but others were neatly piled, as if they had been carefully stored away for centuries.

The dry air of the desert had enabled them to survive for hundreds of years in an almost perfect state of preservation.

The country around Khara-Khoto is as strange as the dead city itself. But it is beautiful beyond dreams.

Colonel Kostoff tells us that life in Mongolia is a magical fairy tale. Everything is fairy-like. In the daytime the sky is a perfect turquoise blue and at night the moon is surrounded by a ring of rainbow colors.

On the plain enormous herds of camels, horses, antelopes and sheep are to be seen—the explorer says that he has never seen so many animals assembled together before in his life. "But all the animals are of an original shape", even the bears which he came across looked unusual.

Every night the expedition was entertained by a concert of howls from hundreds and hundreds of voices which swept out.

Col. Kostoff saw lakes literally covered with ducks, geese, seagulls, and storms, while overhead flew immense flocks of cygnets. Of vultures there are an abundance, and of small birds, too; indeed, the desert is thickly populated with bird life.

The explorer frequently observed an eagle swooping down upon a hare, but on each occasion the hare leapt over the back of its enemy and made off. One curious fact is that hares are tamed and run about the houses of the Mongolians just as cats do with us.

Two Useful Inventions

A new kettle which has a shield round the lid so that the hands cannot be scalded has just been placed on the market. The shield is so arranged that even if the lid were to be knocked right out of the kettle the water could not reach the hands, and it cannot boil over, as the spout is specially made to prevent this happening. The kettle is obtainable in various sizes, made of tin, or of tin and copper, and is, moreover, no more expensive than an ordinary kettle.

Designed to save space, there is now obtainable a coat-hanger which can be expanded to allow four coats to be suspended from it. This coat-hanger, which is made of copper-oxidized steel,

Chinese Insult
White Wash
"KILL THEM"
ESCAPE FROM BAYONET

The following is, in part, a report from Chenku, Szechuan, the most remote of China's provinces by an American woman.

The insults to which the Chinese are being subjected are terrible. Americans are supposed to be treated as a matter of fact, we are a couple of days ago I was taken down from a neighbour's home. My uniform was that of one of the American companies here.

Just as I was on the edge of precipice coming down the side, a call was raised, "Kill the foreign dog!" Some of the men told us to kill and beat every signer.

Most of the mob was composed of farmers of the vicinity who knew me. They looted my coolies, calling them "slaves." I began pelting me with stones to drop the chair and legs. I know this would be fatal, because farmers were all armed with guns.

A Bayonet Lunge.

I made the coolies rush on as fast as possible, and we finally past, but the shock has affected me. The following day, a woman was treated in exactly the same way.

Mrs. B— (another foreigner) was almost run through by bayonet by one of the soldiers. She made a lunge at her. She lay aside, but received a serious wound on the arm.

Mr. M—, a Canadian who lives in his house on the hills, has been terribly persecuted. They entered his bedroom, said they were going to live there, and took his personal belongings from the room. Finally got them to leave him.

They then went to the Chinese (China Inland Mission) buildings, made themselves at home, and they would not depart until Mr. M. gave them a revolver.

I do not think that a single man on the hills has escaped harassment, students and agitators have cut most of the trees in the yards of foreign houses. Mrs. W—, they not to cut down her trees, they only laughed and told her this was nothing to what they tended to do to her last year. "We are going to cut down trees, then we are going to kill and live in your house."

Recently when the Japanese consul was coming through the city was attacked and stoned and his chair smashed to pieces. He had the authorities that if an apology was not forthcoming he would get the Japanese to shell the town, and the apology at once.

There are now eight gunboats and the patience of their commander is almost exhausted. A notice has been called for all employed Britons, and the Chinese want that anyone working for a British or a Japanese would be branded a hot iron, so that the mark would remain with them through life.

There is no doubt of the Bolshevik tendency. The anti-Christian sentiment so strong in one of the boys' schools that the Methodist Episcopal Mission is closing it.

Our chair-coolies here tell us that each has a room picked out in some foreign house to live in when they return. Dr. F—, one of the older men here, says the present situation is worse than the Boxer uprising, and that this is bound to have a disastrous effect upon missionary work in that part of China.

Channel Jetty
PLANS FOR A DOUBLE LINK
DOVER TO CALAIS.

A plan for the construction of a double jetty across the Straits of Dover has been laid before the Chamber of Commerce by M. Jaeger, a civil engineer, and is being considered. It is not yet, however, in view of British opposition to former schemes, how this plan would be viewed by the British Government.

Each jetty would be in two tiers, the upper carrying a roadway 40 feet wide and the lower two way tracks. The weight would be supported by piles embedded in the sea bed of the Channel. The operation which, according to M. Jaeger, would present no insuperable difficulties.

He maintains that there would be no military objection to the scheme by France or Britain, and that jetties could easily be enlarged to the channel between them would be a protection against enemy operations in France and Great Britain's allies.

The cost is estimated at between £64,000,000 and £72,000,000, which would be less than a tunnel if the latter were made wide enough for railway tracks.

"Recompense" a Truly Great Photoplay

Large Audiences See Robert Keable's Sensational Story.

Marie Prevost and Monte Blue achieved another triumph in "Recompense," the latest Warner Bros. Classic of the Screen that was transported onto the screen from Robert Keable's sensational "best seller," and which opened at the Nickel Theatre last night.

As Peter, the Army Chaplain, who is true to himself under all circumstances, regardless of how much personal anguish it entails, Monte Blue is powerful, sincere and entirely in tune with the character that Mr. Keable built up so carefully.

of 1920 gave the Chicago metropolitan district 3,178,924, which put her ahead of Paris five years ago. Oh, you Chicago boomers, to be sleeping on your job all this time! Boasting that Chicago has become fifth only in 1925, when she has been fourth for more than five years!

"Taking the metropolitan district figures, here is the way the five greatest appear to stand: New York, 7,910,415; London, 7,476,000; Berlin, 3,804,000; Chicago, 3,178,924; Paris, 2,833,000."

monorail will make railway accidents, if not impossible, rarer than ever. Hope for the Unemployed. At present, the tendency of the double rails to diverge from the vertical and parallel positions is one of the biggest problems the railway authorities have to face. Such divergencies cause oscillation when the train passes over the rails at the point affected, and may develop until they become a source of danger. True, the tendency is carefully watched for and kept in check, but this makes care of the lines in present conditions a very expensive item.

Nfld. Man Purchases

Schr. Mary F. Hyde

NORTH SYDNEY, Sept. 11—The schooner Mary F. Hyde, that figured so prominently in the newspapers on account of her illegal seizure two years ago by Capt. LaCoeur, of the cutter Margaret, together with her two thousand-gallons of the best Demerara Rum that was ever shipped from the latter port, of her being towed to Gaspe by the Margaret, and the rum stored in a warehouse, and the final return of the vessel and her cargo, minus some thousand gallons this spring when the Government transferred to the Hyde, of Halifax, a quantity of choice liquors, was sold yesterday by her owner, Capt. William Dieks, of Baddeck.

The price paid by her new owner, Capt. John Keeping, of Rames, Nfld., is said to be a fancy one, as the vessel is practically new and a great sea boat. She was delivered to Capt. Keeping to-day, her late owner taking her around from her moorings at Baddeck to North Sydney, where she will likely take a cargo of coal to a port in Newfoundland, and she will later be used in the export fish business.

British Views of Premier Baldwin's "Coal Surrender"

"The cringing surrender" of the Baldwin Government in granting a subvention to the coal-mining industry that will cost the British taxpayer $50,000,000, say adverse critics of the Conservative party, shows the way for all kinds of tyranny in all kinds of industries. Mr. Baldwin's predecessor in office, J. Ramsay MacDonald, in an address at the Independent Labor Party Summer School at Dunmow, charged that by its change of front at the last hour in the coal crisis, the Baldwin Government had handed over the appearance, at any rate, of victory to the very forces that sane, well-considered, thoroughly well-examined Socialism feels to be probably its greatest enemy, and the biggest chance that reaction has got in this country now." Mr. MacDonald added that "the Tory Government, in its foreign policy, its attitude to Russia, its attitude at home, and the methods that it adopted to bring this temporary settlement into being, has sided with the wildest Bolsheviks, if not in words, certainly in fact and in substance." The political correspondent of the London Daily Chronicle (Lib.), which has been known as "Lloyd George's newspaper," avers that about the subsidy itself, its nature or extent, there is "a complete mystery," and he goes on to say: "It is generally believed that Mr. Churchill has let himself in for a far larger figure than he imagined. At present even his experts will not commit themselves to a figure. "As far, however, as the terms of the Treasury offer are understood, one fact has escaped comment. Under the 1924 agreement, the proceeds of the district were taken, and after deduction of costs, 85 per cent. was devoted to standard wages and 15 per cent. to profits. "If, however, the percentage devoted to wages were insufficient to pay the minimum wage of 23 1/3 per cent. above 1914, then the 15 per cent. devoted to profits was taken for this purpose, and afterwards even the owners' reserves. "Under the Government's offer, however, it seems that the profits of the owners will not be called upon to make up the deficiency in wages, at least, only profits above 1s. 3d. a ton will be so used. The Manchester Guardian (Liberal) thinks perhaps the chief mistake in Mr. Baldwin's tactics was that he seemed not to have been influenced by any other motive than fear. But, it points out, there are some obvious reasons why a subsidy may be the right thing now for the coal trade, and the wrong normally for it or any other trade. This daily goes on to explain:

"It has been hit by circumstances outside its control, but not altogether outside the Government's control; it has been hit by Mr. Churchill's decision to restore the gold standard and by the previous Government's acceptance of the Dawes Report. It is unlike other industries in its size and in the part it plays in the national economy. Some of the most essential conditions under which it works are laid down by statute, and there is a strong demand not confined to the Labor party, that other conditions should be similarly brought under legislative control. This Government, like its predecessors, has neglected to study the possible organic reforms within the industry which can only be undertaken in peace. A subsidy now is, in part, the price we pay for past neglect. All this is not to say that the trade unions may not try to abuse their strength and to use the coal precedent as a justification. They may try, but it does not follow that they will succeed. They probably would not have succeeded on this occasion if the miners had not had a case so strong that they could command the sympathies not only of Mr. J. H. Thomas but of large numbers of the general public."

Among the defenders of Premier Baldwin's action is the London Daily Telegraph (Cons.), which says that when the announcement of "this subsidy-purchased truce" was made late in the eleventh hour, and with the stage set for a vast national strike—our view was that the Government had chosen the lesser of two evils." It has been confirmed on reflection, adds this newspaper, which then remarks:

"It is perfectly easy and futile to pour forth a stream of barren criticism, as Mr. MacDonald and Mr. Lloyd George did yesterday, upon the Government's action and upon the terms and conditions of the subsidy. The Government secured a breathing time and the whole industrial position was in danger of immediate collapse. If there is a will to peace, peace can be had, though the task will be of extreme difficulty. If there is no such will, then the Government and the community will have to take adequate measures for the protection of constitutional democratic Government and the preservation of the national well-being."

The London Morning Post (Ind. Cons.) cites Mr. Baldwin's remark in the House of Commons that it is easier "to be rattled into a fight than to be rattled into a peace," and it adds:

"But this caution and moderation would cease to be among the virtues—they would fall to impress the public mind—if they implied that there was no defense against the attempt to hold the community up to ransom by threatening to wreck its vital economy. And on this most material point Mr. Baldwin, though properly restrained in his language, was able to afford the much-desired assurances. He argued that the concession to the miners did not mean any submission to the idea of governing this country by a Council of Action. The validity of this argument, as we have said before, will be determined by the event; but at least Mr. Baldwin emphasized the danger which the country must brace itself to face. But—and this was his most significant statement—the nation, if it meant to be saved, must save itself. Its deliverance was in its own hands, and in none other."

"That plain warning is worth pondering. No man in a free country, Mr. Baldwin declared, has ever yet coerced the whole community. The mere instinct of self-preservation—the need to secure food supplies—must drive a community to protect itself. If the occasion arose, we believe with Mr. Baldwin that the response of the community 'with the full strength of the Government behind it' would astonish the forces of anarchy throughout the world."

To the London New Statesman the crisis in the coal industry is "the sign of a coming great crisis in economic organization," and though this later crisis may be "postponed for a time," who "can doubt that it is coming, and that in the near future some of the theories of Socialism may be reinforced by considerations of urgent and obvious public necessity?"

A Racier Ford

The announcement comes from Detroit that the Ford car is to don modern garb. Black will be succeeded by gayer colours, and its homely square lines give way to a racier conformation, with a longer wheel base and a lower centre of gravity. It is added, will eliminate the rattle which has made the Ford the butt of music-hall comedians.

Science and Industry

WHAT THEY OWE TO EACH OTHER

What is the real purpose of science and what is the common inspiration of the common ambition, of those who devote to it their energy and enthusiasm? That is the question which Professor Horace Lamb, the President of the British Association, asked at Southampton, where the association is holding its annual meeting, near Donovan's Head, on Sept. 12, 1925. The one of the speakers, which occurred on the first day of the conference, in the past, Professor Lamb said, the answer to the question summed up in an almost concise formula—"To subdue the forces of nature to the service of man." A better definition, he thought, would be to explore the facts of nature, to ascertain their mutual relations, and to express them as far as possible in a consistent and intelligible scheme. "The effects came later, if at all, and by a very indirect path."

I would be distasteful to science to affect to appreciate the material advantages which had come in the way of discovery; and science, in its own way, has been able to pay its own debts to industry. There was the impulse derived from the suggestion of new problems which the extended scale upon which experiments became possible. An example was the National Physical Laboratory, established mainly in the higher interests of industry, which are becoming a great industry, theoretical as well as applied science.

Old Antagonisms. The most momentous consequences of scientific discovery had, however, been on the intellectual side, and the old antagonisms between authority and science were becoming almost obsolete. Science had its limits. It could have no pretensions to improve the human nature. It might alter environment, multiply resources, widen the intellectual prospect, but it could not fairly be asked to bear the responsibility for the use made of those gifts any more than we would close our hospitals or condemn our doctors to cease medical science, in striving for longer and healthier lives, had not increased vitality to the wicked as well as to the just.

The efforts of science did lead to ten in unimagined ways to the intellectual and material and the aesthetic possessions of the world. Passing from the aims of science, Professor Lamb dealt with the constitution of the earth, mainly from the mathematical and physical standpoint. Speaking of the variation of gravity over the surface of the globe, he observed that a prospect of accurate gravity determination at sea had been opened up by the work of the Dutch Survey, with his pairs of pendulums swinging in opposite phases. He regretted that in this connection the observational side of geophysics was so little cultivated. Nothing had been done towards a gravity survey for more than a century. A modern beginning had been made at Capri, and with the help of the tide it might be possible gradually to fill in the gravity chart of the world, which was almost a blank so far as the oceans were concerned.

Earth's Age. Radio-active speculation had led to estimates of the time that had elapsed since the final consolidation of the earth's crust, and the conclusion was that it must lie definitely between a thousand million and ten thousand million years. Geologists and biologists were believed, willing to accept the latter figure as giving ample scope for the drama of evolution, but from the physical point of view an extension of this figure would be welcome for in that space of time, enormous as it was, the great mass of the planet could hardly have cooled very much from the temperature when it was a state of fusion.

Professor Lamb likened the earth to a steam boiler jacketed with a layer of asbestos, the Central portion whatever its nature, occupying about three-quarters of the earth's radius with an outer shell of rocks. If that were so then it would take at least a hundred thousand million years for the internal temperature to fall to half of what it originally was. The study of earthquake shocks during the last twenty years had thrown new light on the elastic properties of the earth, and he regretted that so little was being done in the way of interpreting seismic records. More and better equipped stations were needed, but what was more needed was the coordination of such records as was already available.

THOSE AFTER VACATION BLUES.

"Why did I ever go away on a each piece of work and get it done. Just as it calmly and systematically much harder to get back to work all at once..."

So say a friend of mine who passed yesterday through the throes of the fiercest of blue Mondays—the Monday after a vacation.

Of course he swears that. We all do for a few days. And then in a few weeks we begin to talk where we are going for our next summer's vacation.

That Terrible Vacation Reaction. But while it lasts, it certainly is trying—that vacation reaction. And the worst of it is that (in spite of having had the opposite experience every year since we had vacations) we expected to be so rested and so fresh that our burdens would be feather-light...

TIME.

On earth we creep. We cannot leap. Time's chasm at a bound; Through patient years And smiles and tears The crater need is found.

All growth takes time. Youth cannot elect. You wisdom in a day; And who would seek Life's topmost peak Must trudge a tedious way.

We cannot see What we shall be When youth has passed away; That next ten years Of dots and dashes We'll live from day to day.

One task well done. A new danger through; Faith holding fast Despite what's past. And thus a dream comes true.

Promises Novel About Canada

CONFEDERATION LIFE. — aug17.3mos

Baroness Orczy Finds This Country Prolific in Inspirations.

Several novels will come from the pen of Baroness Orczy as the result of her visit to Canada, she promised this morning. But the plots, the characters and the locale will not be decided upon for some time.

"There will probably be an historical novel of old Quebec, having to do with the French regime here, and I am sure the great open plains and the towering Rockies will inspire me to do more than one novel about modern life in the west. But what will be now I cannot say. That is what everybody is asking me. But I am sure the Pacific coast, before returning to England, where the novels which will result from the visit will be written.

How they are written was explained by the Baroness to-day. "I have an open mind on what I am to write," she said. "At present I am getting local color, for I find I have a great capacity for imbibing color and knowledge of the country in which I find myself. Then I return home and what strikes me most forcibly about the trip will suggest the romance I write. But it is a very difficult thing to say what really does suggest a story."

In amplification of this Baroness Orczy told of the genesis of "The Scarlet Pimpernel," of which nearly 3,500,000 copies have been sold, and the success of which placed the Baroness in the forefront of romantic writers.

"That romance," said the Baroness, "was actually born in the dirty proscenium of the Temple Station on the Underground Railway in London. Messrs. Pearsons had just started the Daily Express, and as I had written some short stories for them they asked me to write a serial. I was only a beginner, and had published but one novel of which, incidentally only 50 copies were sold, and I confess that I was a little bewildered.

"I left their office and went to the Temple station and whilst waiting for a train in what are perhaps the most unromantic surroundings it is possible to find, the idea flashed into my head of a woman who has become estranged from her husband because of political differences, and who, unwittingly, betrays him to his enemies, and then goes forth to save him.

"I have records of the sale of over three million copies of that book, and during the war, it, and others of the series, sold at the rate of 1,000 a day. Even in Germany the Tauchnitz people sold 150,000 copies during the war. It was a very, very lucky inspiration for me," said the Baroness.

What has attracted the Baroness to Quebec, is the fact that several of her novels have dealt with France and French life, and she finds in the history of Quebec a new and practically untouched phase of French life. Also between Quebec and Hungary where Baroness Orczy was born, is a great similarity, she finds.

"Both countries are primarily agricultural, even the styles of building the houses and the disposition of the rooms are the same, and there is a certain likeness between the peoples of the two countries," said the Baroness. "Only I think the people here are more advanced. I remember that my father installed a steam mill on his farm and the peasants were so angry they burned the crops that year. The mill still stands as a monument to that episode, which is included in one of my books 'A Son of the People'."

"Another thing that strikes the new-corner to this province, is the intense religious feeling among the people. It certainly surpasses anything of the kind in Europe," said Baroness Orczy.

"Just at present I am reading a lot about Canada. When my friends heard that I was coming, they showed copies of that remarkable book, 'Monte Chaudron' upon me. The Canadian Pacific Railway have a wonderful library in London which I often visited, in fact I have read about nothing but Canada for the last six months. And now I am busy with Parkman's history, a mine of information and a wonderfully fascinating book."—Montreal Star, Sept. 10th.

Millions Lost in China

BRITISH FIRMS ASK FOR ACTION.

The serious nature of the crisis in Canton and Hong-kong is revealed in messages reaching the London headquarters of firms which trade in the Far East. They indicate that the situation has now resulted in what is virtually a national strike, and show that British trade has this week come to a complete standstill.

In almost every cablegram in the last few days, commercial correspondents are appealing for representations to be made to the British Government not to delay definite action further.

Their unanimous recommendation is that the position will be best dealt with by the Foreign Office immediately sending an eminent person to Peking armed with a measure of authority to negotiate an agreement. The view of the British commercial leaders is that whatever policy is adopted by the Foreign Office, it must be one of firmness, and that offensive action, such as the blockading of Canton at the river mouth by excluding Chinese shipping, should be made the alternative to the cordial reception of a distinguished emissary.

The trade representative believed that the want of evidence of the intention of the British Government to act has become exasperating and is depressing morale in Hong-kong. "Every day's delay," states one telegram from Hong-kong, "results in increasing financial exhaustion."

Reports from Hong-kong and Canton state that the daily financial loss being incurred in both places is about £ 250,000.

Cotton Trade's Loss.

The Chinese situation has cost the Lancashire cotton industry, of which China is the second chief market, the whole of next winter's China trade, and the greater part of next summer's trade. Its losses during the last four months are estimated to have been nearly £ 1,000,000 a month. Orders for the winter's trade, receivable during the spring and early summer, were completely lost, and most of the orders for next summer's trade, which should have been fulfilled by the autumn and early winter, have been lost also.

Chinese ports are loaded with cotton goods and merchants are unable to effect deliveries.

Private telegraphic advice received yesterday, however, shows that, despite the embargo against British ships at Chinese ports, announced by the Canton authorities on Tuesday, many British ships with cargoes of cotton have got into Shanghai and are being unloaded.

A New Pacific Continent Forming

The United States is slowly acquiring a new continent. "Land waves on the bottom of the Pacific Ocean, caused, perhaps, by northward slipping of the Antarctic ice-cap and fortified by pressure from the American coast, the Japanese Archipelago, Alaska and the Aleutian Islands, breaking, at last, on the deep foundations of the Hawaiian Archipelago, seem now to be creating new land among the various islands and shoals of Hawaii." So, at least, says Edwin Fairfax Nautly, geophysicist, of New York, who has made a study of the oceanography of the seven seas over a period of years. He is thus quoted in the New York Times:

"There need be no cause for alarm, as it is unlikely that there will be a violent upheaval. The process is slow and steady and has already been at work for generations. Just now there seems to be unusual activity, and recent soundings show low shoals where only a few years ago the deepest lead gave great depths. This is particularly true of the region lying between Maui and Midway and of the famous Penguin shoal off Molokai.

"The expected upthrust of land, which is likely to come in this generation, will present as a gift of nature to the United States a territory in the mid-Pacific as long as from San Diego, California, to Queen Charlotte Sound, British Columbia, and as wide as California, or as long as from the tip of Florida to Boston.

Don't Wait!

Will you get sick. Use Minard's—the great preventative.

Massachusetts. Such a territory, based on the present population of Java of 35,000,000, would easily support a population of at least 25,000,000. It would be of tremendous strategic advantage to the nation holding it as a productive and trade base, and would grow enough sugar, rubber, Copra, coffee and tea to render the United States independent of other present sources of these articles.

"Great changes have been and are taking place in the bed of the Pacific Ocean. These changes are reflected in the seismic instability of all the coasts surrounding that vast deep. The modern epoch of these changes seems to have begun with the volcanic upheaval, itself the result of a remoter cause, that blew up the mountain of Krakatoa in Sunda Strait, on August 27, 1883, the effects of which were felt around the world, and to have continued through lesser outbreaks to the major disturbances of San Francisco, in 1906, Japan in 1923, and to present seismic activity. The last disturbance of July, 1925, extended from Kansas, west overland and under the Pacific as far as Honolulu.

"Recent soundings of the channels between the various island comprising the Hawaiian Archipelago, from Hawaii Island to Midway Island, show shallows of 24 fathoms in old depths of 2,357 and 2,429 fathoms between Kauai Island and Nihoa shoal; a new shoal of 12 fathoms between Nihoa and Necker Island shoal, with sounding midway of 20 fathoms against former 550 and 941 fathoms; of upthrust, at Brooks shoal, Gardner Pinnacles, St. Rigotten bank; a new bank, the Raiti (P.D.) and new shoalings around Dowsett and Maro reefs; the extension of Laysan Island shoal, with 13 fathoms depth; a new reef, just awash, to the south of Neva shoal, with a new bank of 25 fathoms depth to the east and a 14-fathom sounding between Pearl and Hermes shoal and Midway Island.

"These shoalings extend from Kauai to Kure, from 160 degrees west to 178 degrees west and from 22 degrees north to 28 degrees north, or as latitude mileage runs at that position, for over a thousand miles. It is evident from a check on past observations and reports that the shoalings of the last decade between the islands and between islands and other shoals and the upthrust of old shoals is not an isolated nor local phenomenon, but extends over a considerable area and partakes of the nature of seismic movement of slow motion but great scope. That the movement described has not earlier been noted and correlated has nothing to do with the facts in the case. The failure of seismographs to record it is due to the method of operation of earthquake recorders which announce shocks only and ignore gradual movements of the earth's crust.

"Were we dealing with theory only all this might be interesting only casually, but there are the stubborn facts of the shoalings around the Hawaiian. Land growth where there has been no land is not a casual thing."

Struggle for Manchuria

CHANG TSO-LIN AND JAPAN.

While China, from Peking to Canton, is racked with anti-foreign rioting, boycotts, and demands for "freedom" from foreign supervision, Manchuria is proceeding calmly in its development, with the aid of foreign capital as well as foreign engineers and the use of foreign material and machinery.

Chang Tso-lin, the Ruler of the Three Eastern Provinces that go to make up the vast dominion of Manchuria, is boldly carrying out a scheme of railway construction that will triple the wealth of his provinces and give him an independence of communication that will double his military strength.

One line is to connect Mukden, Jehol, and Kalgan, and to consolidate under his rule the territory he gained in his recent war with Wu pei-fu, which made him paramount in China. This line will furnish a new route into Peking. British engineers are now laying out the line, and material for a start on its construction has been purchased.

Take a map of North China and the two main Manchurian railway lines are seen to form a great "T" with the Chinese Eastern, from Manchuria, on the Siberian border, running south-east to Pogranichnaya, on the Ussuri border, forming the upper line of the letter, and the South Manchurian, running south-west from Changchun to Dairen, as the vertical stroke.

The traffic of this richest section of China, one of the greatest undeveloped corners of the globe, has been shared so far between Russia and Japan. Now its own ruler, the progressive Chang Tso-lin, proposes to run a series of lines east and west, connecting with and feeding into the Japanese line, but capable of being linked up ultimately as an independent, self-sufficient system.

Japan's Objections.

Two new lines are under way, one being the Taonan-Tsitsihar spur, to tap the territory of the Chinese Eastern, the other an extension of Chang's own main railway from Mukden north-east to Tungliac, via Changwui.

It can also later be linked up with the Chinese spur lines to the north and give Chang an independent connection with the Chinese Eastern. Thus his plans not only threaten Russia's hold on North Manchuria but also Japan's hold upon South Manchuria as well.

The Taonan-Tsitsihar line is one the Japanese desired to exempt from inclusion under the Consortium, claiming priority in any loans made for it.

Another line Japan fought to retain but ultimately abandoned, on the surface at least, is one to connect Mukden and Kalgan to the north of the Great Wall. This line will, besides opening up a vast territory of rich land, said to be particularly valuable as a poppy-growing country yielding a superior grade of opium, be of the highest strategic value.

Through The Great Wall

When the line is built it will command all the roads from the north into Peking through the mountain passes and the Great Wall. It will also give control over the routes from Urga, over which now is believed to be passing Soviet military supplies for the "Christian General," Fang Yu-hsian, alleged to be Moscow's ally against Japan, who, at least is playing Moscow's game to-day in China against Great Britain.

It must necessarily be years before this line can be built, under present financial conditions in China, but the first link has been completed in the spur running from Chichow, on the main Chinese Mukden-Tientsin line, to Chaoyang, over which trains will be operating by the end of this year.

In the railroad war that has been well launched in Manchuria Japan has the advantage to-day of her ice-free port of Dairen, with its modern system of warehouses and port facilities, and strong banks and exchange, Russia has Vladivostok, ice-bound for some months of the year, with its warehouse facilities, inadequate and slight financial security for shippers.

China, or at least Chang Tso-lin, has no first-class port at his command, but he has two very important possible ports awaiting development. One is Newchang, just outside the Japanese sphere north of Dairen, and the other is Chingwangtao, on the opposite shore of the Gulf of Liaotung, a port that could rival Dairen, for the development of which plans were made years ago, waiting for funds to carry them out.

Believed to be Skull of Missing Link

SOUTHAMPTON, Sept. 2. — The skull of an ancient alliean, who lived at Capernaum, some twenty thousand to thirty thousand years before miracles began to be performed there, may be taken as evidence that Europe was the cradle land, both of man and of his culture, Sir Arthur Keith, famous anthropologist, told the British Association for the advancement of science, yesterday.

The skull of which Sir Arthur spoke, a model of which lay on the table beside him, is that discovered by Francis Turville-Petre, of the British School of Archeology, a few months ago in a cave on the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee, near the site of the ancient city of Capernaum, where Christ performed many of his earlier miracles.

Together with the skull were found bones and implements similar to those relics of the Mousterian Age found in France, principally in the cave of Le Moustier, on the Peseres River, in the Department of Dordogne, from which this period of primitive culture received its name.

This discovery, Sir Arthur said, "makes all the biblically recorded events which heretofore seemed to mark the very beginning of history, become the happenings of recent days."

There was evidence, he said, that this early man was capable of performing a simple surgical operation, probably by means of a stone instrument.

"From this discovery," Sir Arthur continued, "we can say that in remote times as to-day the dominant type of mankind spread abroad from a cradle land, carrying their particular methods of life with them until a large area of the world was covered. The balance of the evidence found in this Galilean cave is in favor of Europe being the cradle land of both man and his culture."

The Capernaum skull, the speaker said, belonged to a species of mankind profoundly different in structure from all living races, who was "not our ancestor," but the cousin of our ancestor. "It was a mistake," Sir Arthur added, to look upon this man or the Neanderthal man as an ape, for while the features certainly were more ape-like than those of any man living now, this man had a brain living in point of size, if not in organization, "reached modern standards at least."

Mr. Petre's discovery, Sir Arthur said, "will always rank among the most important events of our prehistory."

Sir William Boyd Dawkins, professor of Geology and Paleontology, in Victoria University, an another noted Anthropologist, told the scientists that they had before them "the skull of a missing link." He added that all the Neanderthal men were missing links. He concurred in Sir Arthur Keith's view that the Galilean man was not a director ancestor of the human race but a member of a race that perished from the earth thousands of years ago.

Female Money-Lenders

HARPIES WHO MAKE THE POOR THEIR PREY.

(By LEONORA EYLES)

"I haven't tell my husband. He would never forgive me if he knew I had done such a thing."

How many times does one hear this tragic cry from a poor woman who has got into a money-lender's hands? And it is just the terror of being found out upon which the money-lender reckons.

She knows she can extort what she likes from the unfortunate woman who has been weak enough to go to her in a time of need. She knows that the victim will beggar herself and wear herself out in her attempt to pay an exorbitant interest.

Many of these money-lenders have never had more than ten pounds at a time in all their lives. One of them was recently brought to the courts by a strange accident. A woman has been arrested for theft. At her trial she said: "I sold the goods to give the money to Mrs. X."

"But why?" asked the magistrate. "I had borrowed a pound from her and couldn't keep up the payments, so she had threatened to tell my husband and I knew if she told him he would be very angry."

As a result the money-lender was questioned, and it turned out that she was unlicensed. An unlicensed money-lender cannot claim back the money lent, and will be prosecuted if she is discovered at her trade. This woman was given the option of a £50 fine or a term of imprisonment. She went to prison—because her husband, a labourer, could not raise more than five pounds to save her!

The only thing for a woman to do, should she be in the hands of such a harpy, is to tell her husband the truth. The trouble it may cause is as nothing compared with what it might bring later on. And if this point is driven home the husband will eventually realise the fact.

There is a woman I know who borrowed twelve pounds, and has been paying interest at five shillings in the pound each month, without getting the capital reduced. The only remedy for her, and others like her, is to let the money-lender sue her in the County Court for the debt, and pay what the judge shall order. It will certainly be less than this extortionate interest.

Certainly it is fair that money lent should be returned with reasonable interest, but for a woman to be twelve pounds to another whose husband is warning three pounds a week is a wicked thing. People living on such an income could never in life pay the debt.

Forty-Six Years in the Service of the Public—The Evening Telegram

Child Labor in China

Between 20,000 and 25,000 boys and girls under twelve are employed in modern or semi-modern industries in the Shanghai area alone, we are told, and many of the children in the factories are said to have been brought by their parents while still babies in arms. Other little ones there are just beginning to do odd jobs, while children of six and upwards, having taken their places as regular employees, receive from 4 cents to 12 cents for a twelve-hour day. This we learn from Henry T. Hodgkin, who in the London Spectator calls attention to the fact that:

"For many generations the children of China have been employed in labor, and such employment, on account of the present economic conditions, is still essential to the life of numberless families. It may be divided into three main categories. The vast majority of the child workers of China are engaged in farm work or in home industries. The child begins to work, broadly speaking, at the earliest age at which he is of any economic value.

"The second type of child labor is apprenticeship in shops and in the native industries. Recent investigations in the rug industry in Peking and in various trades in Ningpo show that this system is, in most cases, little short of slavery. During five to ten years of his life the child receives in many cases nothing beyond a bare subsistence. Living accommodation is often of the very worst. The child gets no general education and scarcely any personal attention. Hours of labor will be from twelve to fifteen in the day. At the end of this 'apprenticeship' he is frequently turned loose, as his old employer can get an endless supply of fresh 'apprentices'."

"The third type of child labor is the domestic service, which has recently come up for special attention in connection with the 'Mul-Tai' system in Hongkong. This is known in many parts of China. It is open to the gravest abuse. While some of these little slaves are kindly treated, there are many whose lives are lived in constant fear and misery. Many are used for immoral purposes. Many are ruined physically and morally for life."

The introduction of Western power factories, this writer tells us, has turned a certain proportion of the child workers of China into mills and work-shops in the few centers where modern industry has been established. The total number of such child workers is very considerable, although it is stated that relatively to the entire number of child workers it is not more than a mere fraction. Of the child workers in the Shanghai area, he tells us that a considerable number have been brought in by contractors, and also that:

"They are collected from the surrounding country, the parents getting about $2 (silver) a month, the child a bare subsistence, and the contractor $3 or $4. It is this large class of children whose condition is most urgently demanding attention. Their living conditions are abominable, and the whole system is virtual slavery."

"It is scarcely necessary to point out that the conditions in the factory are much more dangerous to the children than those in the fields or in the home industries. In the silk factories, especially, the atmosphere is damp and hot, and the actual work the children do is more tiring than through the day. The usual plan is in the cotton-mills. Most stand all a twelve-hour day with an hour or less for a midday meal. Occasionally there may be a second short break for a meal. Machinery is very rarely guarded in any adequate way. Illness and accident are, of course, very common. The Shanghai Child Labor Commission in their report on the children in the silk factories:

"In the main they present pitiable sight. Their physical condition is poor, and their faces are devoid of any expression of happiness or well-being. They appear to be miserable both physically and mentally. The adults are given a certain number of cocoons from which they have to produce a certain quantity of silk. Should they fall short of this quantity, they are fined. They then frequently revenge themselves by ill-treating the children working under them. The Commission is satisfied that the conditions under which these children are employed are indefensible."

That these conditions have been created without deliberate ill-will, says this writer, is no argument for leaving them alone now they have been brought to light. He adds that the movement to improve the conditions has come not from the workers themselves, but from interested persons who have observed matters from the outside. Attention was drawn to the facts, he reminds us, through the Washington Labor Conference, which led to the adoption by the Peking Government of a series of regulations. But it appears that these regulations remain a dead letter for lack of enforcement and for lack of factory inspection. In June, 1923, he relates, the Shanghai Municipal Council appointed a Commission which presented its report a year ago.

The difficulties faced by the Commission were very great. It is said, but if it had not been for the recent troubles in Shanghai "there is little doubt that new by-laws would have been passed." To look for a moment to the question as to how far the child labor situation is a factor in these troubles, it may be said that it is almost negligible, according to this informant, who proceeds: "To the mass of the Chinese the conditions do not appeal as very undesirable or urgently needing remedy. Those who have agitated the question have been mainly foreigners. The lead has been taken by the Christian forces. It is foreigners and Christians who are now being attacked. The workers of Shanghai are probably not in favor of the proposed limitation of child labor in the factories, as it appeals to them mainly as a means of reducing the family earnings. Students in their writings on the situation refer occasionally to the problem. But it is not unfair to say that it is simply advanced by them as propaganda, and that those who use the argument well know that it makes no popular appeal in China. "As one who has for several years been giving much time to the betterment of industrial conditions in China the writer will not be accused of wishing to minimize the actual evils which have been here referred to. But it can not with truth be urged either that these conditions in the matter of child labor are at all widely felt to be serious among the Chinese, or that they have entered into the situation as anything more than a side issue."

Abbey's New Dean

Expected Invitation to Dr. Barnes, Bishop of Birmingham.

Dr. Barnes, Bishop of Birmingham, it is expected, will be invited to succeed the late Dr. Ryle as Dean of Westminster.

Previous to his appointment as Bishop of Birmingham, Dr. Barnes had been Canon of Westminster and Master of the Temple. While no definite invitation has yet been extended to Dr. Barnes, who is on holiday, there is a strong belief that the bishop will accept such an offer.

Majestic Termed a Scab "Ship"

NEW YORK, Sept. 8.—The Majestic of the White Star Line, the first large trans-Atlantic liner to leave England since the beginning of the dock men's strike in British ports, was greeted upon its arrival by a group of 200 persons styling themselves as Communists, who termed the ship a "Scab."

The demonstration was aimed primarily at Morris Hillquit, one time candidate on the Socialist ticket for Mayor of New York City, and Jenny Goldstein Gabel, of the Jewish People's Theatre, who were passengers. The demonstrators carried banners criticizing them for travelling on a "Scab" ship.

Record Week-End Tourist Traffic

Between Forty and Fifty Thousand Visitors in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Sept. 8.—A canvass of various local hotels and boarding houses to-day resulted in the information that a record was established this week-end as regards tourist traffic, between 40,000 and 50,000 visitors having sought accommodation. At the largest hotels employees were busy until four o'clock Sunday morning trying to find places for the crowd of weary tourists who had nowhere to go and who had exhausted themselves searching for rooms.

Revealed in Dreams

Amazing Clues to Crime
Criminal records reveal many amazing clues to crime, but nothing so weird and unexplainable as those strange dream-clues that have come to persons in their sleep, and that have actually been the means of elucidating what otherwise might never have been brought to light.

A truly extraordinary case in point,
and one that will certainly rank as among the weirdest in the annals of crime and its detection, is the remarkable dream which led to the discovery of the body of George Tombe in the cesspool of a Kentish farm. Details of the mother's peculiar vision which led to finding of her son's body have been everywhere broadcasted, and there seems little reason to doubt that foul play was at the bottom of young Tom-be's mysterious disappearance.

Fully thirty years ago it was a mother's dream which brought the mur-derer to his just doom. In the case which gained such widespread notoriety as the "Red Barn Mystery" a young woman—Maria Martin by name—disappeared, and, although it was suspected that she had been foully murdered, the most careful search failed to reveal any trace of her.

When public interest in the matter was at fever heat her mother dreamt
that she saw the body of her murdered daughter beneath the floor of a barn, and, on investigation being made, there it was found. The man who was suspected of having committed the dastardly deed confessed
his guilt and was duly executed.

Are Women More Susceptible?
Women, to a greater extent than men, appear to be most strangely susceptible to those uncanny occult influences—call them what you will—which come to people in the form of dreams, dreams which in many instances have proved to be nothing less than the accusing finger of Fate!

A startling illustration of this occurred in connection with the murder of a man named Blew at an alchouse in Gravesend. Strange to relate, that very same night the murdered man's wife, who was living some miles away from the scene of the crime, had a dream in which she witnessed the performance of the brutal deed, even to the minutest details.

The following morning she received word of her husband's death at the place and in the manner revealed to her in her weird vision of the night.

As soon as the stricken and horrified wife recovered from the shock she furnished the police authorities with an exact description of the murderer
—even to the cut and colour of his coat. Within half a dozen miles of the spot where the crime was committed the culprit—a pedlar—was run to earth. He admitted his guilt when the murder was described to him as enacted in the dream, and he paid the usual death penalty on the scaffold.

It is not so many years since another murderer was sent to his doom through the strange agency of a dream. It happened in Ireland. One night the wife of a publican named Rogers, of Portland, dreamt that she saw two men enter the inn, obtain refreshment and leave. In her vision she followed them on their way, and was horrified to see one strike the other to the ground, murder, and rob
him, and bury the body under a hedge.

She told her dream to her husband
the following morning, and several hours later the two men she had seen in it actually arrived at the inn and partook of food and drink. Much impressed by his wife's dream, the publican begged his two customers to remain with him till next morning, but they insisted on it at once resuming their journey to Cork. Their names were Caulfield and Hickey, and the latter never reached his destination.

A report that he was missing coming to the ears of the innkeeper, he communicated the substance of his wife's dream to the police. The place where she had seen the body buried was searched, and at that identical spot it was found.

Caulfield was arrested, tried, and convicted of the murder, and then confessed that it had been committed exactly in the manner so strangely foreshadowed in the dream.

Vivid Details.
No less startling and unexplainable is the true tale of two Arcadians who, some years ago, went on a visit together with a friend at Megara. Their host, having but sleeping accommodation for one, the other put up at the local inn. During the night he appeared to his friend in a dream, begging him to come to his aid at once,
as the landlord was about to murder him for his money. Not believing in dreams, the dreamer went off to sleep again, and in a second vision his friend appeared, bleeding and terribly wounded.

"As you have not come to my aid," he said, "you will surely avenge my death." The ghostly visitor also stated that his murderer was about to place his body in a cart for removal.

Now thoroughly alarmed, the dreamer got up, dressed himself and proceeded to the inn. Outside he saw the cart which had figured in his dream, and on a search he made the body of his murdered friend was found beneath some refuse in it.

In another strange case the dream of a suspected person proved the guilt of the actual murderer. This occurred at St. Louis, in the United States, where a man named Thornton was murdered, and his wife was arrested on suspicion of having caused his death.

While lying in prison she had a vivid dream, in which she saw her husband being done to death by one, George Ray. She communicated full details of what she had witnessed in her vision to one of the jail officials, and, though sceptical, the latter caused RAY to be hunted down.

He was traced with the crime as perpetrated in the dream, and as the tragic tale was unfolded to him he turned deathly pale.

Small wonder, either, for the dastardly deed was described to him just as he had actually committed it. He finally broke down, and made a full confession of his guilt at the author of the crime.

An Unheeded Warning.
Of all the extraordinary experiences of life, however, it is difficult to conceive of anything more intensely wonder and terrifying than to witness in a dream the murder of one's self.

A case of the kind was, nevertheless,
reported from Antelope Valley, Mono County, California, a decade or two ago. The victim was a Mrs. Eggleston, who was the only living witness in some criminal proceedings that were contemplated against an unscrupulous attorney named Watkins.

From this man's point of view it was consequently eminently desirable that such an important witness should be put out of the way. A few nights before she was murdered, however, Mrs. Eggleston had a very strange and sinister dream. She dreamt that it was morning, and that, just as she was opening the door of the oven in her kitchen, the man Watkins appeared with a knife in his hand, and stabbed
her several times.

She awoke with a very peculiar feeling, and next day acquainted three or four of her neighbors with her very disquieting dream. They were deeply impressed by it, but the old lady reassured them by declaring that, as she was old and harmless, nobody would molest her.

A few days later Mrs. Eggleston was found dead in her house, from wounds inflicted in the manner indicated. In this way the neighbours had her weird dream brought vividly back to their minds, and the villain was figured in it was arrested. His guilt was proved up to the hilt; and thus was furnished probably the only case on record in which a dream of the victim sent the murderer to his well-merited doom.

Big Dock for Scapa

IMPORTANT ADDITION TO SAL-VAGE FLEET.

Fresh impetus is to be given to the salvage operations that for months past have been proceeding steadily at Scapa-Flow by an important development. This is the employment part of one of the two 40,000-ton floating docks which were surrendered by Germany. The dock was purchased from the British Admiralty by Messrs. Cox and Danks, Ltd., the firm engaged in the work of salvaging the scuttled German fleet. One of its six sections was towed to the scene of operations from the firm's shipbreaking yard at Greenborough the other day. The dock, one of the largest in the world, is over 700ft.
long and 200ft. broad. Certain alterations have been carried out on the section transferred, so that when one side wall is cut clean away and a 30ft square cut in the opposite wall, it can be put into service as a dry dock. So far the work of salvage has proceeded according to plan, and Gutter Sound is now practically clear for navigation. Seventeen destroyers have already been raised, and the next one to be dealt with lies on the Island of Para. She is in shallow water and is upside down, so that there will have to be a repetition on a smaller scale of the famous Italian achievement of the recovery of the Leonardo da Vinci. It is scarcely fair to make comparisons, for there is no relation in the matter of tonnage, but the two

26 destroyers will have been recovered.
Nothing has yet been done towards beginning on the Hindenburg and the Seydlitz, although preparation for the provision of plant is being considered in readiness for a start in the spring.
The usefulness of the dock at Scapa will be great. When the lifting docks bring in a ship, instead of beaching it on the shore of Mill Bay, which being tidal work, is somewhat long and costly, the new dry dock will be submerged and the prize will be placed on it, one end of the sunken ship being run through the aperture
in the wall, and the whole weight being taken upon the pontoon of the dock. The lifting docks being freed of their burden, will clear, and the dry dock will lift the ship high and dry, when all necessary patching and repairs may be done in hours instead of days. Messrs. Cox and Danks, Ltd., acquired the huge floating dock constructed by the Germans for the testing of their submarines, but Mr. Cox knowing the great capacity of the dock, wanted something big to lift,
and thought of the sunken destroyers at Scapa. Confident in the utility of the dock, he had it towed north. When the firm had lifted and dumped six destroyers on the foreshore last October, they decided that there was more to be gained by concentrating upon the disposal of those boats, which were lying in a string on the beach, than to continue bringing up additional ships. The whole organization was, therefore, concentrated upon shipbreaking. One raised ship, the V-70, was made watertight, altered, and put into commission as a salvage vessel. Since salvage began again in March last, progress has been continuous, but the arrival of the new dock will expedite operations.

Brighter Rain Coats

WOMEN'S AUTUMN FASHIONS.
Batik raincoats are to brighten the rainy days this autumn. The batik effect of one colour merging into another is particularly natural under the stress of wet weather. For this nature touch in a hand-painted red and black check batik waterproof women have to be willing to pay 7 1/2 guineas.

There is quite a choice of materials for raincoats, and as a result many have the appearance of ordinary coats rather than wet-weather wraps. Shot silk taffetas, treated with rubber, tailors well and is practical. Crepe de Chine and Jap silk in bright colours over this rubber are very light in weight and lend themselves to decoration. Thus collars and cuffs are piped with a contrasting colour and buttons smarten the sham slit up the back of the coat.

Fastened at the side, one coat of crepe de Chine has a suede collar to match, while another coat has the sleeve and shoulder-piece cut in one.
Cape sleeves appear on other raincoats and look well in various colours.

The fur coat waterproof is an innovation. The sleeves are made specially large to slip over the unusual bulk. They button in at the wrist so that the width does not admit the rain. No belts are added to the smartest models, which often have high collars.

Sou'westers are the correct head-wear for rain this autumn. Made in coloured leather to imitate crocodile, they are light in weight, smart and becoming. The ideal colour is to correspond with the shoes or in contrast with the coat.
