A SUPERSTITIOUS subscriber, who found a spider in his paper, wants to know if it is considered a bad omen. Nothing of the kind. The spider was just looking over the columns of the paper to see what merchants were not advertising so that it could spin its web across their store door and be free from disturbance. Even spiders are more intelligent than some people.

IF a town does not reach after the trade it will only come as fast as it has to and it will grow as it is forced to. But if our merchants go after business in the surrounding country, advertising in every possible way, and making good every word of their advertising, trade will come from an ever-increasing radius, the town will gain a reputation for being awake, and it will forge to the front. Now that the rush of the harvest is over, we would ask our correspondents throughout the country to try to keep us posted every week as to the happen-ings in their district. We do not ask any of them to let this matter become a burden but if each will try to send in the news of their section each week, if it be but a few items, it will help very materially to make the paper more interesting to everyone. THE sympathy of the entire community is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mc is extended to Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mc-Donnell in their trouble caused by the death of their daughter, Mrs. (Dr.) Quin-lan, which sad event occurred Wednes-day of last week. Mr. and Mrs. Mc-Donnell have had many sore trails dur-ing their fifty-two years of married life but the loss of their daughter Thereas, who was a bride and a mother within eleven months of her death, is a partic-ularly trying one. That they may be ularly trying one. That they may be given strength to bear their affliction with christian fortitude, is the prayer of their many friends and acquaintances. The news of the death of Mrs. Quinlan was a shock to her numerous friends in Watford. She was known to nearly every person in the town and by her cheerful disposition had endeared herself to both old and young, and her sudden taking off under such extremely sad circumstances brought sorrow to all who knew her.

There is a science in safety, as well as in everything else in the world. People can learn how to handle gasoline and gunpowder safe-ly, how to climb scaffoldings and cross railroad tracks, and do other things safely. This is the merit of the "Safety First" movement. It is a teaching campaign. It should accomplish something. Parents and teachers ought to re-inforce its lessons. The laws of gravity are a reality in this world of ours, which all the children should learn at their earliest opportunity.

A circular has just been issued by the Department of Immigration declaring its intention henceforth not only to warm all but agricultural laborers and domestics against coming to the Dominion, but also to reject them if they fall under any of the restrictive clauses of the immigration regulations. The fact that a man comes under the category has a promise of employment, will not save him from rejection as formerly. In such a case the department takes the view that if he secures such a position he does so by taking a job which might otherwise have been filled by one of Canada's unemployed, among whom every trade and occupation is already represented. The department is becoming alarmed at the applications for deportation which it is daily receiving from points where the unemployed are plentiful.

The Philosophy of Janey Canuck

THE BOOKMAN of London, England, has in its August number placed Mrs. Arthur Murphy of Edmontson in its "Gallery" and has given three pages to discuss her philosophy which it describes as having "literally sung its way through the Dominions." "Her work" says The Bookman" has the optimism of the true lyric; the song of the open road. AGASSIZ AND A HERRING.

In Making a Discovery.

A student enrolled in Agassiz's class For several days Agassiz paid no attention to him whatever. At length, tired of standing around idle, the student asked Agassiz to give him something to do. Agassiz's reply was to hand him a herring and to say, "Study this." The student was bewildered, but set about "studying" it. The next day Agassiz asked him what he had learned about the herring. The student replied that it had two eyes, so many fins and such and such markings.

"No, no!" Agassiz cried. "Study it more. Those things are not important." The next day and the next the experience was repeated. The fourth day Agassiz again demanded information about the now rotting specimen. In a desperate attempt at humor the student replied, "Well, it's the same on both sides."

"That's it!" shouted Agassiz. "That's it! A starfish isn't the same on both sides, an oyster isn't, thousands of specimens of the sea are not. When you find one that is, you've found a starting point in a new stage in the evolution of life."

Obviously, that student learned more from that one lesson about the scientific method of study than he would have learned in a year's reading and lectures. The textbooks would have taught him the facts; Agassiz taught him the method of learning all facts.— World's Work.

PARISIAN BEGGARS.

Clever Rogues Who Study the Weak Points of Their Victims.

An accomplished mendicant, like a clever salesman, studies his customers, discovers their weak points if he can and trades upon them. In this relation it is of interest to note the skillful methods whereby a certain class of Parisian beggars play upon the superstitions of their victims

There is a common saying in France that giving alms brings good fortune, a saying that has not been overlooked by the Parisian beggar. If one visits the Sorbonne on the days of examination for the bachelor's degree he will see an interesting sight. The collegians approach, each with his diction-ary under his arm, on his way to make the famous Latin version, on the success of which all his future depends. A crowd of beggars surround them.
"A sou, monsieur; a morsel of bread," the beggar will say to a collegian. "It will bring you happiness. The candidate hurries on. "You will be blackballed, monsieur," the beggar

This sinister prediction always takes effect. The collegian pulls out his purse, and the beggar turns away, chuckling. A similar scene may be witnessed at the Hotel de Ville on the days of examination for certificate of ability for teaching. When there are no examina tions in progress there may be races, and to them go the beggars, for game sters and sporting men are notoriously superstitious.-Washington Star.

WIGS, HOODS AND CAPS.

Shapes, Colors and Significance of Old Egyptian Headgear.

The reliefs and paintings on the walls of the tombs and temples of the Egyptians show that that race of people wore thick and elegant headdresses. Hats with brims were apparently unknown. Their headgear consisted of wigs, hoods and caps.

"The wigs were very likely made of hair or tow, for their great size could not have been made by dressing of a person's own hair; the caps were also very large and high and made of material which as to its kind can only be guessed at," says Charles E. Keater in a history and development of hats and

"The largest were cupola shaped, and The largest were culous snaped, and their use was probably confined," he further says, "to those of royal blood. They were yellow, white and red. It is supposed that the yellow ones were made of brass and were a kind of helmet, that the white was the crown of upper Egypt and the red the crown of lower Egypt. The pschent, a combina-tion of the white and red, was considered as the symbol of the rule over the land. Lower flat crowned caps were worn both alone and over a hood, and sometimes with a strap under the chin to hold the headpiece in place. The huge wigs were probably worn upon the shaven heads, as it is supposed that the clean shaven head was as prevalent in Egypt as it is now in tropical

A Reason For Tears. An amusing story about Dr. Archi-bald Pitcairne, the physician, Jacobite and scholar, is told by Francis Watt in "The Book of Edinburgh Anecdote."

Dr. Pitcairne was not often a churchgoer, but on one occasion he took refuge in a church from a shower of rain. The sermon was commonplace, but the preacher was emotional, and he went copiously and, as it seemed to Pitcairne, irrelevantly. He turned to the only other occupant of the pew, a stolid countryman, and whispered, What on earth gars the man greet (weep)?"

"You would maybe greet yourself,"
was the solemn answer, "if you was up there and had as little to say."

Census Reports Take Time. Each United States census report represents a compilation of statistics for the entire country, and much time is required to make an actual canvass and to publish the results. For example, in the census of manufacturers uniform reports must be secured from more than 270,000 establishments and in the census of agriculture from more than 6,000,000 farms. In collecting statistics from manufacturers, farmers, electric light and power plants, electric railways and other interests it is necessary to allow a sufficient time to fill out the schedule so as not to interfere with the conduct of private business.

ENGLAND'S PREMIERSHIP.

A Coveted Office That Brings Misery to Its Incumbents.

The lot of the British premier is like that of the policeman in the Gilbertian bailad—not a happy one. After Lord Derby had been prime minister be said that he had had only two happy days in office, one being the day he entered it and, the other the day be retired from it.

Peel wrote: "It is impossible for me not to feel that the duties are above all human strength; at least, above mine." Peel also once made the curious statement that if his nose had not bled every night during his premier-ship he could not have borne the load of his position.

Lord Palmerston was so much affected by his work that he had a special high desk built, which necessitated a standing position. He explained that if he fell asleep while trying to keep up with his work the fall would awaken him.

Disraeli frequently stated that no man could have any notion of the arduous life, and when Gladstone was released from the duties of prime minister he leaped head over heels down a grass bank at Lord Evans' through eer delight.

Lord Rosebery once wrote the following concerning the duties of prime minister: "He has to deal with the sovereign, with the cabinet, with parliament and with public opinion in its various kinds and degrees. Some of his colleagues he must convince, some he may have to humor, some even to cajole. It is a harassing, laborious and ungracious task."-New York Times.

A PAIR OF SLIPPERS.

Story of an Eccentric Man and a Curious Monument.

There stands in a church in Amsterdam an ancient and curious monument of white marble which always attracts the attention of visitors, and their curiosity is usually heightened by its inscription. On the monument are en-graved two slippers of a singular shape, with the inscription "Effen Nyt," which in English would be "even nothing," or, more colloquially put, "nothing else." The story that is told of this strange device is as follows:

A certain rich man who was very extravagant in his tastes became possessed of the idea that he had just so many years to live and no more, and he calculated that if he spent a stated portion of his principal every year his life and his property would expire together.

He was lavishly generous to others as well as indulgent of his own whims, and it so happened that he died the very year he had prophesied would be his last. He had furthermore brought to each a low ehh that aft. er his few debts were paid nothing re mained of all his possessions aside from the clothes in which he was to be buried but a pair of curious old slippers.

Some of his relatives to whom he had been kind during his life erected this strangely decorated monument to mark his burial place.-Washington

Human Strides. Many correspondents have been testing the length of their stride, even those small boys who pace out the length of a cricket pitch in assurance that twenty-two long steps make twen-ty-two yards. But a walker from the city avers he comes as near as most men to the yard to the step on a long walk. He stands five feet eight and one-half inches, has a swing from the hips and has always between mile stones stepped from 1,690 to 1,710 paces to the mile. That, of course, is a solitary walk. In a regiment the pace must be set by the average of the longest and shortest stepper.-London Opinion.

Death of Lambton's Oldest Resident

Resident

On Monday, August 24th Mrs. John Leacock, of Brooke, passed peacefully away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Isaac Newell, at the remarkable age of 99 years, 6 month and 15 days. The venerable lady who was known to nearly everyone in this neighborhood, had exceptionally good health throughout her long and useful life and was in possession of all her faculties until the time of her death. She was only confined to her bed for three days, death being due to senile decay. In her younger days she saw some stirring times and during the rebellion in 1837 witnessed the famous battle of Young Street and the burning of Montgomery's tavern.

Mrs. Leacock was a native of Antrim, Ireland, being the daughter of Isaac Williamson and Nancy McNeil. She was born Feb. 9th 1815, and was living in Glasgow when she was married to John Leacock in 1834. After residing for a time in Scotland and Ireland they came to Quebec in 1837, the year of the rebellion, and in 1838 they moved to Pittsburg, Pa., returning to Canada ten years later, and in 1852 came to Rooke, and

Her husband predeceased her on Feb. 24th 1899, in his 86th year. They raised a family of 9 boys and 2 girls, one born in Scotland, one in Ireland, four in the U. S. and five in Canada. The surviving children are Thomas, of Brigden, Mrs. Wm. Lucas, Gladwin, Mich., Mrs. Isaac Newell, Warwick, and David A., Brooke. By MAY C. ETHERIDGE ******************

I am fond of motoring and am con sidered about as good a driver as any woman in the town in which I live In summer I make long tours, some times extending over several weeks. One night while touring I stopped at a neat farmhouse, the owner and sole occupant of which was a young woman about twenty-seven and come ly, but there was a dissatisfied expression on her face as though she had met with some serious disappointment. She told me her name was Elizabeth

Wyman; her father and mother were dead and had left her the property on which she lived-a dairy farm. had nothing to complain of except lone liness. I suggested that an attractive young woman with a nice farm should have no trouble in getting a good husband, the best panacea for loneliness This brought about a confidence which resulted in her giving me the cause of her disappointed look. "The trouble about men," she said.

"is that they don't understand us wo-

"And perhaps," I interrupted, "we omen don't understand men." "When I was a girl living here with my parents a man named Warren bought a farm down where the road crosses the creek. He had a son named Abner. I first met Abner Warren at a cornhusking, and he picked the out among all the girls present, dancing with me oftener than with any of the rest of them. He seemed then to be a fine, manly fellow who could look any one straight in the eye. He didn't treat me right afterward, but however he acted he had that same honest pride in his look.

"Two or three of the girls made a dead set for him, and Agnes Walker got him. I thought at the time she must have managed it very adroitly, and I couldn't understand his engag-

"I SPOKE OF HER IN VERY HIGH TERMS." ing himself to her when he had-at least on our first acquaintance-favored me. Agnes was not well liked by us girls, and that was another reason why I was surprised at Abner's engaging himself to her.

"The engagement between these two didn't last long. I never understood why it was broken, and no one else seemed to know. Abner never said a word about it. As for Agnes, all she would say was that she didn't care. It was whispered about that she didn't confine her lovemaking to Abner, and he objected to having to divide it with some one else. It was the general impression that Agnes was one of that kind of girls who make, or seem to make, easy conquests of men, but who don't seem to have the faculty of holding them after they get them.

"As soon as Abner Warren broke with Agnes he renewed his attentions to me. I was glad enough to get him back, though his affair with her left a scar in me. He was very respectful scar in me. He was very respectful to me as well as attentive, and it was not long before he proposed to me. Before I accepted him I told him I thought I had a right to know what had passed between him and Agnes. He replied that he didn't think I had any such right. I gave up the point, though I was not satisfied to do so, and we became engaged. and we became engaged.

"All went well with us till one day Bettle Underwood came to see me, ostensibly to talk about some church matter, but I've always believed since that she had another object in view. While we were talking she asked me if I'd beard that Agnes Walker and Cyrus Buckley were engaged. 1 said I had not, remarking at the same time that if it were so Agnes had not been a long while getting over her affair with Abner. Bet replied that Agnes wouldn't marry Abner on any account. Naturally I asked why.

"'You don't know anything about that matter.' she said. 'You've, doubt-less, heard Abner's side of the story, but you've never heard Agnes'.' "'I've never heard either side,' I re-

"She went on talking about some thing else, but what she had said left a very unpleasant impression on me. I tried not to think of it, but the more I tried to banish it the more it persisted in coming back to me. At last I could stand it no longer and spoke to Abner about it, telling him what Bettie Underwood had said. "He seemed ill at ease and tried to turn the matter aside. This made me the more suspicious, and I told him that if he had treated Agnes badly I should know it, for if a man will deal wrongfully with one woman he will do so with another. To this he replied that a girl about to be married had best leave alone her lover's previous affairs with women. Her only concern was his treatment of her. "I insisted that he should make clean breast of it, and he refused. Then I took off the engagement ring he had given me and handed it to him. He looked at me for a few moments with a sorrowful expression, then told ne that I was making the mistake of my life, and would prove the truth of what he said. He wouldn't treat any woman badly unless she treated him or some one whom he loved badly, and then not for revenge, but for inflic-tion of a just punishment. He left me and has never been to see me

My hostess paused in her story, and saw that what her lover had said to her was true. She, not he, had made the mistake of a life. Doubtless there was something between him and the girl he had broken with that he could not speak of without casting blame upon her. If both were at fault there was all the more reason that whatever it was it should be kept secret. There are many affairs of little or much importance that cannot be unraveled without a regular trial, and even then it is often impossible to extract the

But I said nothing of this to the sta ry teller-at least, not then. I was curious to know what her lover meant by saying that he would prove that she was making a mistake in endeavoring to force him to make a clean breast of his relations with his first fiancee. So asked her if there was no more to tell.

"Yes," she continued, "there is one very important matter to tell. Soon after Abner's parting with me I heard that he had become attentive to Bettie Underwood. I inquired if Bettie accepted his attentions and was informed that she was very much pleased with them. Can it be, I thought, that she will engage herself to the man against whom she had covertly warned me? I had not long to wait for an answer to my question. It was soon generally understood that Abner and Bettle were engaged. One day I met Bet in the street and asked her if the report was true. She said it was and ounced away from me, evidently desiring to avoid a discussion of what she knew I had on my mind."

Again the narrator paused, and I asked her if she had finished her story. "There is little more to tell," she said. "The engagement between Abher and Bettie lasted just one month when it was broken off. Since Abner never came to see me after I returned my engagement ring I could not ask him what it all meant. I suppose he engaged himself to Bettie to show me how silly I had been to permit her to make a breach between him and me, and that she did it because she wanted him herself. I doubt if she was a girl of much feeling, for she married some one else within a year after she broke with Abner.'

I asked Miss Wyman if Abner Warren had married, and she said he had not. He had since inherited the farm on which he lived and kept house alone. Before leaving I asked to be informed of its location, thinking that I would like to meet him. It happened that my route passed his house, and I made up my mind I would find an excuse to have a word with him.

I bid my hostess a sympathetic good-by, promising to make her a visit on another occasion, then started again on my travels. When I reached the house of Abner Warren I left my car at the gate, and, seeing a man at work, asked him some questions as to the roads I was to traverse. In the course of the conversation I gave him an opportunity to tell me his name and learned that he was the man I sought. Then I asked him for a glass of buttermilk and sat on the porch of his house while

While drinking the buttermilk I told him that I had been entertained by a Miss Elizabeth Wyman, who lived a few miles down the road, and I spoke of her in very high terms. I told him that I wondered that so lovely and attractive a woman had not been appropriated and hinted that I surmised she had experienced a disappointment. I could not help being amused at the interest he took in the subject, and when I added that Miss Wyman was one of those true women who when they gave their hearts away would never withdraw them I hoped he would give me his confidence, but he did not, proving himself to be the kind of man I supposed him to be from the story I had heard. However, I thought it quite probable from the effect my words produced on him that something would come of my effort. I left him without having given him any reason to suspect that I knew his secret.

What I said to him bore quick fruit, for, returning that way, I stopped at Miss Wyman's and found a great change in her.

"What do you think has happened since you were here?" she asked, her face lighted by a radiant smile. "What?" I asked.
"Abner Warren has been to see me."

"You don't mean it? And all is made "Yes, and we are engaged again."

"The Lord be praised!"

The walls of the breathing tubes contract and it seems as if the very life must pass. From this condition Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Asthma Remedy brings the user to pertect rest and health. It relieves the passages and normal breathing is firmly established again. Hundreds of testimonials received annually prove its effectiveness, m HOMES OF THE NAVAJOS.

Stuffy Winter Hogans and Light and Airy Summer "Cottages."

The Navajos are the least gregarious of native American tribes, never congregating in towns and vilages and never forming permanent communities. Their homes, called hogans, are mere hovels, built of stones or the trunks and limbs of trees, with rounded roofs thickly covered with earth. A smoke vent in the roof and a door way in the side are the only means of ventilation. In cold weather these cavelike structures are kept tightly closed, so that no one but an Indian could live in them at all.

But when springtime comes the Navajo squaw constructs a summer cottage, sometimes consisting of no more than a windbreak of sagebrush around a circular clear space. Some times the summer hogan is a shady bower under a desert cedar tree, with leafy branches piled around as a measure of protection against winds and sandstorms. Sometimes it is a shelter formed by the utilization of old pieces of canvas, sheet iron and other cast away material picked up around the refuse dumps of the railroad towns. In any event, the dwellers in the summer hogans are practically in the open all the time. Fresh air is never for a moment excluded.—Christian Herald.

NAILS IN STONE WALLS.

Easy Method of Placing Them So They Will Remain Firm.

Few women know how to drive a nail into a brick wall, and yet it is what they often need to do for them-selves if there is no man about.

The following method is easy and has been found entirely satisfactory: Having decided upon the exact spot into which the nail is desired to be driven, which must be in the plaster between the bricks, provide yourself with a hammer and screwdriver. With these tools commence working out the hard plaster by tapping the handle of the screwdriver. As the plaster turns to dust it must be blown or dusted out so that the size of the hole may be seen.

When a space about one inch long and nearly one inch deep has been worked out get a small piece of wood about the same size and with the hammer wedge it tightly into the space. When it seems firm take the nail and drive it into the wood. It will go in nicely, without bending, and remain firm an indefinite length of time. This same method was used at one time when it was decided to hang a hammock be-tween the fence and the wall, with the exception that the hole was dug out little longer and deeper than for an ordinary nail.-Minneapolis Journal.

Homemade Barometer Those who love experimentation may try the following method of making a cheap barometer practiced in France: Take eight grams of pulverized camphor, four grams of pulverized nitrate of potassium, two grams of pulverized nitrate of ammonia and dissolve in sixty grams of alcohol. Put the whole in a long, slender bottle closed at the top with a piece of bladder containing a pinhole to admit the air. When rain is coming the solid particles will tend gradually to mount, little star crystals forming in the liquid, which otherwise remains clear. If high winds are approaching the liquid will become thick as if fermenting, while a film of solid particles forms on the surface. During fair weather the liquid will remain clear and the solid particles will rest at the bottom.

Reading Music. The literary man, writes a correspondent, may very well, when he is lying on his back, console himself with literature. But what is the scientific man, with no particular interest in literature, to do? A certain professor of my acquaintance once got through a month of painful convalescence by the aid of another kind of reading. He read through the scores of his favorite composers. He had no ear for the rhythms of literature, but a fine ear for the rhythms of music, and he assured me that he heard the music as he read the scores. He said that during that month he really came to understand Beethoven and that no performance of his work ever satisfied him afterward.-London Spectator.

A Bit of Blarney. An Irishman who was begging in the street was asked by a lady how it was that such a fine, strong man as he should be asking for alms. With native blarney he replied:

"Lady, begging is the only profession I know in which a gentleman can address a beautiful woman without having an introduction." The remark was quite profitable.-London Answers.

Moss Bread.

'Along the shores of the Columbia river a kind of bread is made by the Indians from a moss that grows on the spruce fir tree. This moss is prepared by placing it in heaps, sprinkling it with water and permitting it to ferment. Then it is rolled into nalls as big as a man's nead, and these are baked in pits.

NURSED A HOT TEMPER.

Something Had to Give Way When William Morris Broke Loose.

Though explosive tempers may not be admirable and temperamental explosions are not always harmlessly expended, they are always preferable to soreness, sullenness, brooding resent-ment or cold anger. Arthur Compton-Rickett in his study of William Morris —that "jolly vivid man," as he terms him—relates several new instances of Morris' violent thunderclaps of temper and swiftly ensuing sunniness and

Once while he was painting he was called from the room, and presently his startled model heard him furiously anathematizing some one outside whom he dismissed or ejected and then returned a moment later still boiling with wrath. He could not resume his work, but made wild dashes about the room, growling and muttering, un-til at last in a culminating access of rage he took a flying kick at the door and with a vast crashing and splintering smashed in a panel. It was too much for his model's nerves, and he started to flee, but at that moment Morris, with his ire entirely gone now that the explosion was over, turned with a beaming smile, and assured him

"It's all right, it's all right, but something had to give way!"

FLAVOR OF FOOD.

It is an Important Factor In Digestion and Good Health.

If it were not for flavor we should not digest our food properly. Epicureanism in eating is the handmaid of good health. Flavor has been called the soul of food. The viands that are most agreeable to our sense of taste. those we enjoy most, are those we are most likely to digest well and from which we are most likely to derive the maximum of nourishment.

A book was devoted to this subject by Henry T. Finck of New York. He called it "Food and Flavor." In a review of it the Scientific American says: "The psychic factor of desire must precede ingestion or results will be unpro pitious. To each cent spent for nutriment we add five more for flavor. vor, in short, has an appetizing value, a health value, a commercial value

"The evolution of a discriminating appetite and the education of the cook must go hand in hand. But your glutton is never an epicure. Rational mastication must accompany the highest enjoyment of food, and in this enjoyment lie perfect assimilation It is flavor that stimulates the flow of the digestive juices; it is the digestive juices that prepare the food for the extraction of nutriment."

The Professor Was Wrong Several decades ago a learned profes sor delivered a course of lectures, in one of which he proved to his own satisfaction that the Atlantic ocean could never be crossed by steam. Steam power had been discovered and applied on land, but he was confident it could never be applied to the ocean. Under the peculiar conditions of the heaving tides, the danger of storms, the rolling of the tide, and so forth you could never apply steam to navigation across the Atlantic. The book in which that lecture was published was on the first steamer that crossed the Atlantic. The captain took it along as a sort of curiosity. That book did not have a very large sale, but there has been quite a run of steamers ever since, and the professor ceased to argue that steam could not be utilized on the ocean.-Christian Herald.

Salting One's Smoke. The strangest way of taking his salt was probably Dr. Parr's. Telfourd records that he used to fill his pipe half with the finest tobacco and half with salt, After that it is not very surprising to learn that he smoked "with a philosophical calmness." On one occasion when the two met Charles Lamb's furious smoking of the strongest tobacco filled Dr. Parr with as tonishment. Gently laying down his pipe, he inquired how Lamb had arrived at his power of smoking at such a rate. "I toiled after it, sir, as some men toil after virtue," was Lamb's reply.—London Graphic.

Mrs. (Dr.) Quinlan Dead Popular Young Physician Sorely Bereaved on Wednesday Night

(Stratford Herald, Aug. 20-21.)
Death robbed Stratford of one of its most beloved young women when Mrs.
(Dr.) P. F. Quinlan passed away on Wednesday night at her home, 39 Nile St. The shock created among her many friends by her sudden demise was great, and grief is expressed by everyone. Sympathy goes out from the hearts of the people of the city and countryside to the oular young physician who is so ber-

Roman Catholic cemetery in Ellice. It is was largely attended by the many friends of the deceased, the doctors of the city attending in a body. The pallbearers were: Messrs. Joseph and James Quinlan, brothers of the bereaved husband; Allan McCabe, Strathroy; Timothy O'Meara, London; F. O'Meara, London; P. J. Lennon. Stratford. The service at the church was conducted by Father Quinlan, of Strathroy, assisted by Father Ronan, of St. Marys, and Father Lowry, of Stratford. The services at the grave were conducted by Father McKeown, of London, assisted by Dean McGee and Rev. Father Egan, of Stratford, and Father McKae, of Alexandria. The Stratford Beacon says:—"After a short illness of only five days the death occurred Wednesday evening, shortly after eight o'clock, of Theresa McDonnell, wife of Dr. P. P. Quinlan, at her residence, 39 Nile St. The late Mrs. Quinlan was an exceptionally fine woman. lan was an exceptionally fine woman, was well educated, and although only living in Stratford for eleven months previous to her demise, had won the respect of a wide circle of friends. Although pect of a wide circle of friends. Although of a somewhat retiring nature, she was liked by everyone, for her charming manner and sunny disposition. Born in Watford, Lambton county, the deceased was the daughter of Mr. Andrew McDonnell, an old time resident and respected merchant of that place, where she was a general favorite, and was in fact widely known throughout Western Ontario. Her primary education was received in Watford, after which she spent four years at the Sacred Heart Convent in London."

Jack Gets His Gun

Our Jack is off to the great big fight; He's out for trouble and not for fun; There's always a battle for the right, When Jack Canuck takes down his gun.

At Queenston's Heights, and Crystler's Farm,
'Gainst gallant foes he fought and won;
For somebody's sure to meet with harm,
When Jack Canuck gets down his gun.

All through the West, for many a day, He's had law-breakers on the run; The outlaw cries: "There's hell to pay," When Jack Canuck gets down his gun.

Brave Cronje threw up both his hands, At Paardeberg, 'neath southern sun; They mostly do put up their hands, When Jack Canuck gets down his gun.

Yes Jack can fight, if fight he must, He ne'er was known to turn and run; But the need is great, the cause is just, When Jack Canuck gets down his gun.

In Britain's war that's on to-day, He will prove himself a worthy son, We never doubt the end of the tray, When Jack Canuck gets down his gun.

Gladly, proudly we'll cheer him back,
When the war is o'er, the victory won;
His duty done for the Union Jack,
When Jack Canuck puts up his gun.
Forest, Aug. 1914. H. J. PETTYPIECE.

TO SICKNESS

Impure Blood Means a Break down in Your Health.

Impure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work day and night to maintain the health, and any lack of strength or purity in the blood is a weakness in the defence against disease. Anaemia is the doctor's name for lack of blood. There may be an actual loss in the quantity of the blood, or one or more of its constitutents may be lacking. Its truest sympton is pallor. Anaemia is popular young physician who is so bereaved.

The late Mrs. Quinlan's name before her marriage on the 23rd of September last was Miss Theresa McDonnell. She was the daughter of Mr. Andrew McDonnell of Watford, and was born in that town. She finished her education in Sacred Heart Convent, London, Ontario, being in that institution for four years. She is survived by two sisters and one brother. The sisters are: Mother McDonnell, of Sacred Heart Convent, Montreal, and Miss Kate McDonnell, of Watford. The one brother, Frank McDonnell, resides in Edmonton, Alberta.

During her residence in the city Mrs. Quinlan made many friends. She was of a cheery disposition, taking an interest in everything that was good, and being an ardent member of the Immaculate Conception R. C. Church.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Quinlan, There may be an actual loss in the quantity of the blood, or one or more of the quantity of the blood, or one or more ditis constitutents may be alacking. Its truest symptom is pallor. Anaemia is particularly common in young girls. It is not, however, confined to them alone, for it is this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe. For all recovery after la grippe, for its this same lack of blood that revents full recovery after la grippe. For all recovery after la grippe. For all recovery after la grippe. For all The funeral of the late Mrs. Quinlan, took place Friday morning from her late residence, to the Immaculate Conception R. C. Church, and from there to the Roman Catholic cemetery in Ellice. It was largely attended by the many friends of the deceased, the doctors of the city attending in a body. The pallbearers were: Messrs. Joseph and James Quinlan, brothers of the bereaved husband; Allan McCabe, Strathroy; Timothy O'Meara, before they were gone I could feel some improvement. I gladly continued their use until I had taken, I think, ten boxes, when I was completely cured, and I never was so well in my life as I have been since?" been since."
