Then he gives details of how it is brought about, and he shows how beautifully it works out when the whole of this tax can be passed on. He shows that the jobbers' profit is 25 per cent—I think he is wrong in his figures, I do not believe it is quite as bad as shown here because the retail profits are not as high—but he shows the jobber's profit is 25 per cent, the retailer's 50 per cent. Starting with the six dollar tax on a hundred dollars, the jobber's profit at 25 per cent is $1.50, making $7.50; the retailer's profit of 50 per cent on that is $3.75, making a resultant cost to the public, as shown by the author of this plan, of $11.25 to collect a six dollar tax. Obviously, my hon. friend has not had an opportunity of getting at the bottom of this thing, for he could not answer an elementary question dealing with it only half an hour ago. He will find difficulties without end in connection with it. Just take this one feature. My hon. friend realizing that this is a tremendous tax on industry provides for refunds of all previous taxes. My hon. friend will find when he goes into a warehouse for the purpose of getting at what these refunds are that the tax has gone into the stock, it is not kept in a little box for each special purchase at such-and-such a price. I do not know how my hon. friend is going to find out what those refunds are to commence with. I am sure ample opportunity is being offered there for the bleeding of my hon. friend's department in refunds. There will be practically no check at all. There might be some check if we had constant prices, but we have varying prices right through the year. I think my hon. friend is going to find it something interminable to get at, something very expensive to the country and something impossible to enforce equitably. I hope he will take power to himself to hold up the whole proposition.

Mr. GERMAN: Did I understand the minister to say that the tax upon the duty-paid value of goods is amended so that the duty is not paid when the goods are immediately taken out of bond?

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend will find the amendment on page 4 of the order paper.

Mr. BAXTER: I desire to call the attention of the minister to some matters in regard to which I have received communications. One of them I think he has had under consideration, and perhaps there is to be some change in respect to it. I refer to lumber. Messrs. Haley Bros. Limited, of St. John, write me as follows:

Dear Sir,

Our attention has been drawn to the following provisions in the new sales tax plans as amended May 23, 1923, as follows:

"(7) A refund of the amount of the said consumption or sales tax may be granted in the following cases,—

(b) To a licensed manufacturer in respect of goods on hand on the 1st of January, 1924, and which are to be used in the production of articles for sale, no refund to be allowed in respect of goods on hand after the 31st of March, 1924."

This provision regarding refund is going to be a hardship to a great many concerns such as ourselves, who have to carry a considerable quantity of material through the winter months, a great deal of which will not be sold until the following fall.

All the lumber which we would normally have on hand January 1st, and on which we have paid a 3 per cent sales tax, it would be possible to sell but a small proportion before March 31st, and we would therefore ask you to have this provision removed if possible, or at least the date of same moved forward for six months instead of three as stated in the clause.

Looking at the marginal note it says:

No deduction after 31st May 1924.

But the text reads the 30th day of June, 1924. I understood that the minister had in mind making some concession in this respect, and I should like to know what may be done. I would further call his attention to the increase from 4½ to 6 per cent on lumber. If it were in reference to lumber exported, I do not know that we would have very much to say.

Mr. FIELDING: There is no tax on exports.

Mr. BAXTER: I would not have very much to say if it were a tax on exports, but when we consider that this is a tax upon lumber which enters very largely into the construction of our houses, it becomes very much more serious. This parliament granted for several years considerable assistance, through the vehicle of the provincial governments, for the building of houses. I do not know whether the scheme produced all the results that were expected or not, but undoubtedly there was a good deal of expenditure in most, if not all, of the province. But to-day a man is face to face with the question of erecting his own dwelling. Lumber enters very largely into that and the tax must fall upon the man who intends to create a home for himself. It is worth while, perhaps, to consider the possibility of letting this tax stand at the old figure. I know the minister is faced with the question of raising revenue; on the other hand the housing problem is very acute especially in our cities. In order that I shall not take up further time later I will direct the attention of the minister to a telegram which I received—I assume he has received similar representations from an important brush manufacturing industry near the city of St. John. These are people who are not unwilling to pay taxes, who want to pay their just share, and I am sure that any objections that they make are put forward not with any idea of embarrassing the administration, but entirely to point out the practical difficulties that would be raised in their business. They say:

As applied to the brush industry it is unworkable due to the impossibility of tracing the identity of proposed sales tax on raw material through to the manufactured goods. The clerical effort alone necessary to implement this proposal would add to the cost, and the uncertainty of the refunds obtainable would make an addition to our selling price imperative in self protection. The proposal will inevitably increase the cost of goods to the consumer and any gain to the government will be more than offset by the cost of the army of clerks necessary to handle refund claims.

I have other telegrams and letters from people in the lumber business, but the minister no doubt has received these representations and many others besides. The gentleman who sends me that telegram with reference to the brush industry presents his case in a very few lines and I would ask the minister's most careful and favourable consideration for the facts put forward by these respective parties.

Mr. MEWBURN: Before the minister replies I would like to corroborate what the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter) has said. I think we have all received numerous telegrams; I have something like twenty telegrams here from various manufacturing industries throughout Ontario, one of which is a brush industry in Hamilton, similar to the one the hon. member for St. John has just referred to. I have representations also from the Westinghouse Company, and I would like to mention in this connection the case of Dominion Canners. They are large importers of tin plate which they use in the manufacture of cans at their can plant. Their requirements in a year would probably approximate anywhere between a million and a million and a half dollars. To tie up six per cent of this is to deal with no inconsiderable sum, especially when the cans require to remain in their warehouses for a year or two years, or even longer, according to the size of the pack and the conditions of trade. I need not go into the details; I understand that the minister has on the order paper a resolution which is in the shape of an amendment to section 6 of the sales tax bill which will probably meet many of these cases. If so, I do not suppose there is any necessity of my taking up the time of the committee in arguing the twenty or thirty cases I have before me, which are all of the same character.

Mr. FIELDING: All taxes produce criticism. The chief complaint reaching me, however, has been the proposal to tax imports and the argument advanced, as set forth in the communication referred to by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Mewburn), is that large stocks of goods have to be carried on hand and that the financing involved is a very serious matter. Then the further question is raised in connection with the difficulty involved in the matter of refund. These difficulties are covered by the amendment which I propose to move. With regard to the points mentioned by the hon. member for St. John City (Mr. Baxter), only in part can we give relief there. The former tax on lumber was 3 per cent. These various taxes pyramided; you had some imposed at one stage and some at another, and it can be shown by actual transactions that in some of these cases where there was nominally a small tax, the actual tax after it had passed from one stage to another was much higher than 6 per cent. In the case of lumber they paid a special tax of 3 per cent, and I frankly admit they will have to pay now a tax of 6 per cent. I cannot help that; somebody has to get hurt in the matter and I cannot see why lumber should be exempted. No business is very prosperous in Canada to-day, but certainly lumber is not less prosperous than the others; the price of lumber is high and the lumber industry is perhaps well able to bear the burden. The suggestion of the hon. member for St. John City with regard to the date at which some of these things should come into force has, I think, been met, but as to the main question—if it is the main question—namely, that the tax on lumber has been increased from 3 to 6 per cent, I do not see how we can promise any relief on that score. It would be most agreeable to the Minister of Finance if he could make a list of exemptions. Somebody has to get hurt in the readjustment of these taxes. In the end I do not think we shall get much more money; in fact, I am not aiming at that; the object is to simplify the tax, and if in the end we get any more money, it will not be very much. I think it will be found in a good many cases that the people will pay a smaller tax than they paid before. In regard to housing, there is some force in the suggestions made. If the lumber is imported it can be passed to the manufacturer without the immediate imposition of a tax, but when the lumber is produced at home a tax will have to be paid. That is to say, the saw mill men, those who produce the lumber, will pay the tax; I have no doubt that they will pass it on—although some hon. gentlemen have sought to show that these taxes are not passed on—to the contractor, and the contractor will pass it on to the house builder. But I am afraid we cannot help that. Several hon. gentlemen have spoken to me about the telegrams they have been receiving during the last few days, and I think the main difficulty complained of there on this question of the taxing of imports is fully met by the proposed amendment.

The CHAIRMAN: The discussion has been proceeding on section 6, but section 1 has not yet been passed.

Mr. FIELDING: I have taken the committee into a discussion of section 6, and I suggest that it be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN: With the consent of the committee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: On this matter of the tax on the lumbermen, which the minister has glossed over so gently and respecting which his heart is much moved because the lumberman has to pay, I just wish to say a word or two. The minister has not increased the tax on lumber from 3 to 6 per cent; he has increased it from 2 to 6 per cent. That is what the minister has done in his seventeen months of power. When he came into power there was a lumber sales tax of 2 per cent, because what we use everywhere in Canada for building purposes is our own lumber; and there was no pyramiding allowed—none whatever. The act was as clear as day. It said:

> Provided that in respect of lumber an excise tax of 2 per cent shall be imposed, levied and collected on sales and deliveries by the Canadian manufacturer and of 3 per cent on importations, and that no further excise tax shall be payable on re-sale.

That was the law when the minister came into office, and when that law was put on the statute book, hon. gentlemen who are now members of this government headed by the present Prime Minister—in this respect the present Minister of Trade and Commerce was the chief spokesman—denounced the administration for putting a 2 per cent tax on lumber—bewailed the fate of the pioneer, bewailed the fate of the farmer, bewailed the fate of the house builder, to the acclamations of hon. gentlemen of the Progressive party at the time, and called upon us to take the tax off as impossible for the pioneer to bear. And this committee sits quiescent while the present Minister of Finance imposes a tax of 6 per cent on lumber and allows profits on the 6 per cent—profits to the lumber dealer as against the contractor and to the contractor as against the consumer. This the minister has done because, he says, we have to get the money. Well, the House is faced to-night, two or three or four days before prorogation, with a set of estimates almost as big as the estimates that were produced in the middle of the session—estimates, page after page of them, that we ought to have had before us for weeks, even for months, before prorogation. I would like the minister to tell wherein the history of Canada estimates of that magnitude were ever brought down in the last week of the session. Occasionally there would be a single page and that would be all, and there would be a row over that. The members of the present government would then be screaming about the idea of bringing even that much before the House in the dying days of the session. It is unspeakable that this House should be presented with the estimates we are presented with now, running into I do not know how many pages; I have not counted them but it looks like nineteen or twenty pages of estimates entering into new votes and all kinds of votes, increasing salaries here, there and everywhere. Here is presented a second estimate almost equal to the first when we are only three or four days before prorogation, and the minister says we have to tax the settler six per cent on lumber to pay for this. He calls it a tax on the lumberman when it is not a tax on the lumberman at all. He cannot help but pass on a tax of six per cent. If it is a small tax much of it cannot be passed on, but when it is a large tax of six per cent all of it is passed. The minister has increased the tax on lumber three hundred per cent, and that is what he has done in respect of many other things. In many other lines he has doubled the tax to the consumer, but in respect of lumber, which is a staple article and has many claims to be within the exemptions, he trebles the tax and then he pleads he has to have the money for purposes of estimates like this presented to the House just three or four days before we prorogue. Has the minister wholly lost control of his colleagues? His colleagues are completely running away with the treasury when estimates like these are brought down. I cannot believe the minister is exercising the functions of the Minister of Finance when he allows his colleagues to present to parliament estimates of this character right on the eve of adjournment. Here is $14,711,000 in addition to supplementaries of $5,800,000. We have supplementaries already amounting to over $20,000,000—

Mr. FIELDING: Not for this year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We had supplementary estimates for last year, then we have this year five and a half milion dollars for the bonus and now $14,711,000. Here is over $20,000,000 of supplementary estimates presented just as we are preparing to prorogue. Is that really taking care of the finances of this country? Is that exercising any check whatever? What consideration can be given to these estimates now?

Mr. FIELDING: I think we will discuss the estimates when they come before the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We cannot discuss them.

Mr. FIELDING: When my hon. friend says the estimates are unprecedented and so forth, as usual he is making rash statements.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING: He will find that there are many precedents as to the time at which they are presented. I rather sympathize with the hon. gentleman in that respect. I think perhaps they should have been down earlier and that part of his criticism I will not resent, but when he says they are prodigiously large I would reply that they are not unusually large. Last year our supplementary estimates were about $15,000,000, and I do not know that my hon. friend thought we were extravagant then. But we will come to the estimates at a later moment.

On the question of lumber, again I say there is a readjustment of taxation. I am reminded of a saying of Sir John A. Macdonald in days gone by that there would be "readjustment and no increase." This is a readjustment of taxation. Somebody has to pay more and others will pay less, because the aim is not to get a large increase in revenue. I am sorry we cannot relieve them, but I cannot see any good reason why we should exempt lumber from taxation altogether or impose a lower rate than we have imposed on other lines of goods. It would be agreeable to me if I could concur in that view, but notwithstanding my hon. friend's observations we need the money. The estimates we can discuss at another time.

Mr. EULER: I have no desire to delay the committee but I would like to be perfectly clear as to the effect of the resolution as it appears on page 4 of the order paper. I think the intention when the budget speech was delivered was that there should be no tax on raw materials coming into this country. That I think was varied by the resolution introduced on the 25th of this month, where six per cent was to be collected on the raw materials and was to be refunded to the manufacturer when the goods were manufactured and actually sold. There were a great many protests with regard to that. I had a great many telegrams and letters myself protesting against it, and the minister has reconsidered the objections, which I need not repeat. I would like to ask: Does the resolution as it appears on the order paper actually in effect remove the objection that has been made with regard to the tax on raw materials?

11 p.m.

Mr. FIELDING: In the case of imports, yes.

Mr. EULER: That is what I referred to. The manufacturers who protested to me were in the main satisfied with the original budget proposals. I would like to ask whether the resolution as it appears here restores in effect the original proposal as made by the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: Substantially yes, but if the importer sells his goods to a licensed manufacturer no tax is paid under the amendment I now propose, but the goods are followed into the hands of the licensed manufacturer and he ultimately pays. The importer whom it was proposed to tax is not taxed by this resolution.

Mr. JACOBS: I would like to ask what the minister means by licensed manufacturer? Do I understand that under this new system manufacturers will have to take out a new license?

Mr. FIELDING: Most of the manufacturers of the country are now licensed under the sales tax system.

Mr. HOCKEN: The minister has not intimated whether he is going to afford any relief from the sales tax to magazine publishers. Is there any hope of us getting any relief for that particular industry?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not like to give my hon. friend an assurance that I might not be able to carry out. Under the act the Governor in Council has power to add to the list of exemptions, but I do not want to give the assurance that that will be done. The representations my hon. friend and others have made in the matter will receive the best consideration. There are, of course, two sides to the question, but sometimes we can only see one side. My hon. friend presented one side of the magazine question, but there is another side, and we believe there was a strong manifestation of public opinion against the course proposed. I do not want to give my hon. friend any guarantee. I would like to be able to give them something because my sympathies are with them, but I must not give an assurance lest I cannot fulfil it.

Mr. HOCKEN: Just as to the strength of that sympathy the minister has for my proposal I would ask him to consider the position of those engaged in that particular industry. An appeal was made in this House, and it received sympathy from all sides. A resolution was passed unanimously that some encouragement should be given to that particular industry.

Mr. EULER: Is my hon. friend making a plea on behalf of the newspaper publishers as well as the magazine publishers?

Mr. HOCKEN: No, for the publishers of magazines and periodical literature. The men engaged in that industry had a right to expect from the resolution that carried unanimously in this House that they would get some relief. The minister could not see his way clear to putting a tax either on the advertising or on magazines but later he brought down his budget, and I just want to fix this in the mind of the minister so that his sympathies will be strengthened. He brought down his budget and the magazine publishers saw some relief. They were going to be exempt from the sales tax of 2½ per cent. Well, that was something but before they got to the end of it that exemption was withdrawn, and instead of a sales tax of 2½ per cent there is now a sales tax of 6 per cent, so that as compared with the original budget announcement this particular industry is now suffering under an increase of six per cent, and that is what I want to fasten in the mind of the minister if he will allow me. Under the original budget proposals they were exempt from the sales tax, but now they have a sales tax of six per cent. That is too heavy, Mr. Chairman, and I think the minister, feeling as he does, ought to endeavour to bring his colleagues and the Governor in Council around to the view that this exemption should be added to those already in force.

Mr. MILLAR: I should not like this bill to pass without a protest on my part. I suppose it is hopeless to look for any change, but certainly what is proposed under this measure seems to be a very heavy tax that will fall upon the consumer. The increase is very great, and I notice that a great deal of discussion centres around, and seems to depend on whether it can be passed on or not. Not enough consideration has been given to those who are to pay the tax after it is passed on. I listened with care to the words of the leader of the Opposition and I took a note of their purport. I feel that I concur, and must do so, in what he has said in regard to expenditure. In fact after looking over the supplementary estimates that have just been brought down—I am sorry to say this but I feel bound to do so—it does look to me as if the ministers seem to be tumbling over each other to see how they can spend the money. When I look at the long list of items representing the expenditures that has been made in building or repairing harbour improvements or wharves, and when I refer to the further lengthy list of proposed expenditures which has come down, and then think of the vast expenditure in regard to other matters, to say nothing of the increase in the salaries of the deputies, I think that during the two sessions I have spent here I never felt as hopeless as I do to-night. Something has been heard already in this House in regard to the secession of the western part of Canada from the rest of the Dominion. I have always discouraged that idea, and I hope I shall always be able to do so, but if this expenditure goes on, I shall not be able to discourage it with the same fervour and feeling which have influenced me in the past. When you think of the industries that are languishing, and that are being starved to death; when you think of the suffering on the prairies—I know that hon. members do not like to hear this but I feel that I am discharging my duty when I bring this again to the attention of the government—when you think of the manner in which many families have been living—it is no exaggeration to say that in some cases the children have been clothed in sacks; that I believe is an absolute fact—when you think that many started farming years ago and have worked hard for the last three years but are poorer now than they were, without any bad luck; when you think of all these things and then look over the estimates that have been brought down, personally I cannot help but feel discouraged and I must protest against this lavish expenditure and the heaping up of burdens on those who are least able to bear them.

[Mr. Hocken.]

Mr. FIELDING: I think I will have to suggest to my hon. friend that he discuss the estimates on their merits. Each of these items will have to be considered and if there is no good reason in their favour they will have to be dropped. If there are good reasons for them my hon. friend no doubt will admit their propriety. However, we both agree this is not a good moment for discussing estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister tell us how in the world we can discuss these estimates? The notice is out for prorogation this week. The discussion of these estimates is a mere farce which may have been intended by the government who brought them down at this stage.

Mr. FIELDING: I hope my hon. friend is not taking part in a farce. I should like him to feel that he was discussing matters of a serious character; but if he feels that he is doing anything farcical I regret it very much.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister knows it is a farce.

Mr. CHISHOLM: It was always thus.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Waterloo): It seems to me that what is proposed is going to impose a hardship on a great many of our industries. I have received quite a number of communications from large manufacturing concerns in my riding with regard to this taxation and their chief objection is that it will tie up great sums of money that they need in their business. As I understand it this tax is to be applied on goods imported. After the goods have been manufactured and resold this sum of money is to be given back to the firms in the shape of a rebate. Now, I have in my constituency a firm doing the business of wood-working, a firm known as the Victoria Wheel Works. This firm import nearly all their material. That is to say all the hickory and white oak which they use in the manufacture of their wheels, spokes, and so on is imported; they cannot get this material in Canada. Now, they claim that if this tax is imposed they will be subjected to very great hardship and inconvenience because they have a large amount of money tied up in the sales tax and consequently are out of money to that extent. Another objection which I find is quite common is this. It will involve a great amount of extra book-keeping and no small amount of extra work in order to preserve the identity of these taxes. There will be considerable expense involved, and the objection, to my mind, on that score seems to be well sustained. I should like to ask the minister if the amendment which he has proposed will cover these points?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, I can assure my hon. friend that the case he has just mentioned is entirely covered by the amendment before the House. He is all right.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: There is just one comment I should like to make on this proposition. I have always been a believer in direct taxation because I thought it was the fairest and most economical form of taxation; in studying out the details of this bill and considering the objections which have been advanced during the discussion I am certainly very much strengthened in my opinion. I do not like this tax. I am not going to discuss it at any length because I know it is futile, but I should like to say this: I do not like it for two or three reasons. One is the inevitable pyramiding which this form of taxation involves. It is absolutely correct, as stated, that the tax will approximate 10 or 11 per cent by the time it is paid by the consumer. That means that the men who pay the taxes actually pay about double the amount the treasury receives, and to my mind it is a rotten form of taxation, if you will excuse the expression. I am not worrying about the manufacturers; I have always found they are very well able to look after themselves. The man I am worrying about is the poor fellow at the other end who finally has to pay the bill. To the manufacturer it is simply a matter of some inconvenience, of, perhaps, extra book-keeping, and of the tying up of a sum of money for a little time. Eventually the tax is passed on, and the ultimate consumer pays it. He is the man I am worrying about. I should not like this opportunity to pass without repeating the protest I have made before against this form of taxation. I do make the appeal to the Finance Minister to consider the matter and see whether he cannot do away, to as great an extent as possible, with this indirect taxation upon commodities which is bound to bear with peculiar hardship upon the consumer by its pyramiding, by the fact that it is not based upon a man's ability to pay but upon the amount of goods he requires to purchase, and must increase in direct ratio to the number of dependents he has in his family. It is not a fair basis of taxation at all, and I hope the time will come when the Minister of Finance, the government, and parliament will see their way clear to adopting some direct system of taxation as a result of which a greater proportion of the money obtained will find its way to the treasury, a taxation which will be based upon a man's ability to pay and will meet the necessities of the case.

Section as amended agreed to.

On Section 3—Exemption for stamp tax on receipts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where has the minister got all this from? I have not noticed it before. I suppose this is practically the manner in which the act is to be enforced.

Mr. FIELDING: This is taken from the English act, I am advised.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it all taken from the English act?

Mr. FIELDING: Practically, I am advised.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is there any machinery thought out as to how this is going to be enforced?

Mr. FIELDING: The machinery is provided largely in the act itself. If anything more is necessary, it would have to be covered by regulations.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Which clause covers the machinery?

Mr. FIELDING: Several clauses might be called the machinery of the act. What particular part does my hon. friend refer to?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with the stamp tax, I did not waste time going over the difficulties. I handed over the mass of rulings given in connection with the stamp tax. The whole thing is in an awful mess, and no attempt was made to solve the problem. The minister, however, had the help of the Bankers' Association in administering the act as regards stamps on cheques. Who is going to enforce this? Who, for example, is going to be charged with the duty of looking after it? Let us take the last clause (8):

> Save as aforesaid, a receipt liable to taxation under this section, shall not, except in criminal proceedings, be given in evidence, or be available for any purpose whatsoever, unless it be duly stamped in accordance with the law in force at the time when it was given.

How on earth can that be shown or proved? Is my hon. friend not going back to the old difficulty we had in the early days, in the fifties and sixties, when we had a law that said that a bill was no good unless it was stamped, and when a bill might be stamped just before it came into court?

Mr. FIELDING: Any court can enforce that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the court going to know about the matter?

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid, if there would have to be any prior knowledge in these matters, you would have to trust the department to exercise its authority in putting the matter before the court.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How would the department know about it?

Mr. MARTELL: By the evidence brought before the court.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Take the first two sections:

Section 14 of the said act as enacted by chapter 47 of the statutes of 1922 is amended by striking out paragraph (b) of subsection 4 and substituting the following:

"(b) a receipt or document in the nature of a receipt which is taxable under section 12 of this act.

(2) The following are inserted as subsections 5, 6, 7 and 8 of section 14 of the said act."

What is the effect of that?

Mr. FIELDING: Subsection (4) in the act reads:

The stamp duties imposed by this section shall not apply to the following cases:

Several are mentioned:

(b) A receipt or document in the nature of a receipt which is taxable under any other section of this act.

That is omitted.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is any suggestion made at all by the minister as to how this section is going to be enforced?

The following are inserted as subsections 5, 6, 7 and 8 of section 14 of the said act:

"(5) A receipt given without being stamped may be stamped within one month after it has been given, upon the terms following, that is to say."

How is the department going to be seized of the knowledge of receipts that are not stamped? What is the machinery?

Mr. FIELDING: If there is not ample machinery in the act, the minister will have to do this by regulations. I have no doubt this act will call for a vigorous administration, and that the Minister of Customs will see that the machinery is provided.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is not provided in the legislation.

Mr. FIELDING: If you impose penalties in the act, you can rely on the department to enforce them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know when this bill was distributed, but I have not had an opportunity of reading it carefully. It may provide for penalties; it may provide for imprisonment. I am asking how it is going to be enforced, and the minister cannot tell me anything about it.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member might ask how any part of our law can be enforced. He might ask how the customs law is enforced. It is going to be enforced by the vigilance of the customs officials.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The customs officials have their duties laid down. Is a whole host of new officials going to be appointed who will have the special duty of inspecting receipts, or are the people to make returns of their receipts to the department?

Mr. FIELDING: So far as I know, there is no intention of appointing an army of officials. As to the balance of the question, we shall have to leave the matter to the administration of the minister and his officials.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it to be the law that if a man puts a stamp on a receipt after the receipt has been signed, and not at the time it was signed, he must pay $10?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not wish to give any legal interpretation of the law. On most of these things the law is plain. If there is a doubt in the matter, I am going to leave the minister to interpret it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the minister desire the committee to pass a provision that if a man does not put a stamp on a receipt at the time it is signed, he must pay $10? The bill has not been long distributed, and the sections have not been read. Surely we have a right to know what we are supposed to be passing.

Mr. FIELDING: I think my hon. friend will find in all these things that the law is plain and distinct and can be read intelligently. If there is a debatable matter, I certainly will not want to be led into giving a definition of it at this hour. I would leave the matter to be interpreted by the proper officials of the Customs department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister does not know what the law is going to be. I am going to read it:

5. A receipt given without being stamped may be stamped within one month after it has been given, upon the terms following that is to say:

(i) The stamp shall be affixed to the receipt in the presence of any collector of customs and excise by the person who gave the receipt, and shall be cancelled in the same manner as provided by subsection 2 of this section.

(ii) Before such person may affix the stamp he shall pay to the said collector of customs a penalty of $10 for the public uses of Canada.

Where does the principle of the $10 fine come from? Does it come from England or is it fixed by the minister? What is the idea?

Mr. FIELDING: The penalty is $50, but the man may avoid it by paying $10 in the way described.

Mr. JACOBS: Subsection 6 provides with reference to the penalty of $20 that payment may be made "to the judge, arbitrator, referee or trustee". I think it would improve the subsection to amend it so as to read:

—and the receipt may, on payment of a penalty of $20 for the public uses of Canada, be received in evidence, etc.

Judges do not usually receive these penalties.

Mr. FIELDING: The amendment suggested by my hon. friend seems reasonable, but I should not like to accept it without first consulting the Department of Justice.

Mr. JACOBS: Judges as a rule never receive such sums of money; the clerk or some other authorized person receives it on behalf of the treasury of the Dominion. It is most unusual to provide that the penalty shall be paid to a judge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is new.

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend wants to press the amendment I shall delay the third reading of the bill in order to consult the Department of Justice. The amendment seems reasonable, but I hate to disturb a clause of this kind without consulting those who have drafted it.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Definition.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the proposed change in "19AA"?

Mr. FIELDING: It is to determine the question of "duty paid value." It differs slightly from the old clause but the purpose is the same.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is there any change in substance, or is it merely a question of form?

Mr. FIELDING: The words are nearly the same as in the old section. There is a slight departure, but the substance is the same.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Excise tax on wines.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the effect in this is to do what was mentioned in the budget resolutions?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It goes a little further, I think. It makes an exception of sparkling wines, "containing not more than 40 per cent of proof spirit."

Mr. FIELDING: There is no change in that respect.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take the minister's word at once, but my recollection was that it was 26 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING: I think that 26 per cent is used in the French treaty somewhere, but there is no change here from the resolutions.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Tax on sales.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 6 is amended, as will be found in the order paper of to-day, as follows:

That in section six of said bill, the third paragraph of subsection one of section nineteen BBB be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"Provided that the consumption or sales tax specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported; or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax, or on goods imported by a licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax; or on goods imported by a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection (7); or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection seven of this section."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been following the resolutions as brought down on May 11, and I assumed that the bill would be in keeping with them. Suppose a spinning manufacturer buys needles from another manufacturer for the purposes of turning out knitted goods, is any sales tax payable on the needles? As I read this, no tax is to be levied, but I have seen some discussion which rather indicates that if a licensed manufacturer buys from another licensed manufacturer goods which are not classed as materials, the tax must be paid.

Mr. FIELDING: You would have to pay the tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then my hon. friend is not doing what he said would be done in this resolution of the 11th May. I thought the bill would stick to the resolution, except where directly changed by an amendment. The resolution reads:

On sales by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufacturer or producer of goods To be used in the production of articles for sale.

Now, if one manufacturer sells thread to another, that thread is no more used than is the machine. It is another instance of where the department may apparently say that one thing is to be taxed and another is not. Surely my hon. friend's adviser is wrong there, or else we are using language in these resolutions, not to express our thoughts but to conceal them.

Mr. FIELDING: The bill, as is usual, is a little more full than the resolutions. I think my hon. friend will find that the bill deals with the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What section?

Mr. FIELDING: I think the amendment under consideration covers the point.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I think we are there dealing with the question of exports and imports. Here is something that is really of importance, and surely parliament knows what it is doing.

Mr. FIELDING: Sometimes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Surely we are supposed to know, or is the minister serious in proposing that we put through legislation that neither we nor he know anything about? If I am right in assuming that we are dealing intelligently with these matters, we ought to know what we are doing. I point out to my hon. friend that here what is sold by one licensed manufacturer to another licensed manufacturer for the purpose of manufacturing should pay no tax.

Mr. FIELDING: What is my hon. friend quoting from?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: From the resolutions.

Mr. FIELDING: The resolutions are not before the House; the bill is. If my hon. friend will quote from the bill he will be making a better choice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have only read the marginal notes of the bill. I thought my hon. friend would know what his bill is intended to provide for.

Mr. FIELDING: I refer my hon. friend to the beginning of the proviso at page 5.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That, as I understand it, has only to do with imported articles.

Mr. FIELDING: The amendment? Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If there is any dispute about it, let us get it settled. I am not speaking of imported articles at all. We will take the bill. I put the same question to my hon. friend.

Mr. FIELDING: Read the proviso.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (Reading):

> Provided that the consumption or sales tax specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported; or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale.

My question is perfectly plain. Does that exempt, for example, needles which are bought for the purpose of manufacturing?

Mr. FIELDING: I will have to answer my hon. friend that I am so advised.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That the sales tax would have to be paid?

Mr. FIELDING: In that case, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought the principle here was that no sales tax whatever was to be paid by the manufacturer except the 6 per cent on the goods he sold.

Mr. FIELDING: That is correct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that is correct, the answer given by my hon. friend two minutes ago is absolutely incorrect. If the manufacturer has to pay a tax on the stuff he is using for the purpose of manufacturing, he is paying more than 6 per cent on his manufactured article, he is paying 6 per cent on a whole lot of his raw material.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not quite grasp my hon, friend's contention. A needle is a part of the machinery, it is not one of the articles to be wrought or made into the finished article. My offhand opinion is that it would have to pay duty.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is all very well to say it is a machine, but it is something which wears out.

An hon. MEMBER: All machinery wears out.

Mr. FIELDING: It is not going to be wrought into anything else.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This section before did not use the words "wrought into" at all. It covered merely "sales by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufactured or producer of goods to be used in the production of articles for sale." It is absolutely clear that what I pointed out to my hon. friend was right in the first instance. I had an idea that the act was following the resolution. It does not follow the resolution, it contains the words "wrought into."

Mr. FIELDING: Surely.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then the minister's intention is to tax Canadian manufacturers 6 per cent on everything they buy for use in the production of their goods, that is, on the actual raw materials that go into the finished article; am I right?

Mr. BUREAU: Used in the goods, not in the production—"are to be used in, wrought into or attached to articles to be manufactured."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let me put my question to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau). Is it the intention that the sales tax, instead of being confined merely to the finished article, is to be paid on everything except the raw materials that actually go into the goods to be manufactured?

Mr. BUREAU: As against what,—the machinery?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, moving parts and everything else.

Mr. BUREAU: Machinery ought to pay a duty. It is not wrought into the goods, it is used to manufacture them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It has not been so considered. Those who have gone into business have done so on the faith of the resolution, and I have told them myself in reply to objections taken to the sales tax, that it was quite clear that the principle was just what the minister said himself originally, that the only tax, as against the manufacturer, should be on his finished product, and that needles and the like used—just following the words of the resolution—would be exempt. However, now we get the fact.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 6 as amended carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is subsection 1 of section 6.

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, pages 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 are all interlocked with section 6. The whole section is under debate because one relates to the other. I am not declaring the section carried, so it is debatable.

Mr. MacLAREN: On page 7 between lines 25 and 30 the date is given which is to apply to those who have considerable stocks on hand. I understand that there is no sales tax on stocks if they are held up to the 31st March, 1924. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FIELDING: I direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the words "not accounted for before the 31st day of March." The holders of these stocks must account for them so that it may be a matter of record. They are not obliged to dispose of them before that date.

Mr. MacLAREN: I am told that if the period could be extended to three months it would go a long way toward meeting the conditions affecting those who hold heavy stocks bought under the old provisions of the sales tax.

Mr. FIELDING: They may sell the stocks at any time after that date, provided they have rendered an account of them.

Mr. MacLAREN: My point is that until they have disposed of stock which they bought under the old provisions of the sales tax they will suffer some hardship if the collection of the 6 per cent at the source is now enforced. If the period be extended to three months, they will by that time have disposed of a sufficient amount of the stock bought under the old conditions to relieve them of a certain amount of disability.

Mr. FIELDING: If the requirement were that the stock should be disposed of before that date, my hon. friend's criticism would be well founded, but all that is required is that they shall be accounted for; they can be sold later.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is not a question of selling them. They will not have used up, during that period, the stock bought under the former conditions.

Mr. GERMAN: I wish to call the minister's attention to a telegram I have received regarding subsection 8 of section 6. It is from the Rogers Manufacturing Company, and it says:

> Subsection 8 of the proposed sales tax bill 230 of June twentieth regard proposed charging manufacturers sales tax on imported materials and refunding same when such materials are finally manufactured and sold seems impossible of administration because of manufacturing of large importations of raw metals into many thousands of individual items sold in thousands of lots throughout country which would require millions of refund claims. This particular change from the Finance Minister's proposal May twelfth would require manufacturers to carry investment of 6 per cent on cost—

Well, that is provided for, but this question arises: These people are manufacturers of flat ware,—knives, forks and spoons—which are made out of raw material that is imported. These are sent all over the country in small lots. Would it be possible to keep an account in order to get a refund of the amount of the sales tax paid?

Mr. FIELDING: I think the amendment to which I have already directed my hon. friend's attention is such that sales tax will not be paid on the raw material used in the manufacture; it will be paid on the finished article.

Mr. GERMAN: That is what I thought, but I wanted to have the point made clear.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the subsection carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is subsection 1?

The CHAIRMAN: We are on the whole of section 6.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought we would get along better if we dealt with the subsections separately. However, let me call attention to subsection (3) of 19BBB. It reads:

> If the minister determines that any manufacturer or producer, who does not manufacture or produce goods to the value of ten thousand dollars a year, uses a substantial portion of goods which are exempt from the tax in the manufacture of goods which are liable to the tax, as to which the minister's finding shall be conclusive, such manufacturer or producer shall take out a license as required by subsection six of this section.

Does the government desire absolutely a blank cheque here, or is it the intention to put some reasonable restriction upon the exercise of ministerial fancy?

Mr. BUREAU: Do not call it "fancy"; that is hardly right. Make it "discretion."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I think "fancy" is a pretty good word to use. They are leaving it wide open to the minister to say that certain people in this country shall be taxed or shall not be taxed simply because the minister for some reason thinks they ought to be or ought not.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know any system of taxation you can carry on without leaving a large measure of discretion to the officers in charge. If they abuse their privileges or exercise them in any oppressive way, the only remedy is discussion in this parliament. I could not offer any system of taxation to which my hon. friend's criticism might not apply.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Can my hon. friend mention any system of taxation from which he got that provision? I think it is one of Mr. Tinling's ideas. Is that taken from any act anywhere? Is there any precedent for it? If so, I have not been fortunate enough to run across it.

Mr. FIELDING: I am told it is designed to meet the case of the smaller confectioners who ordinarily will not take out a license but will use considerable amounts of material. There are cases of the kind which in the experience of the Customs department render this clause desirable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then this is entirely new? There is no precedent for it?

Mr. FIELDING: Well, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is right, is it not?

Mr. FIELDING: I think so, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are not following the precedent of other acts or anything else?

Mr. FIELDING: Oh yes, we had a precedent from England a moment ago.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Now, if there is any doubt about it, let us get it right. A moment ago the minister said there had to be wide discretion in the collection of these taxes. I asked if there was any precedent for this very extraordinary exercise of that quality of discretion—because it goes to the root of this question of taxation. Now my hon. friend tells me there is no precedent for it at all.

Mr. FIELDING: There is no need of any.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A moment ago we had it that there was no precedent; that it was something new. If I am wrong in that, I should be glad if the minister would tell me. That being so, this being something new, I am going to ask my friend what percentage is meant by the use of the words "a substantial portion of goods." What percentage will my hon. friend be content with? There should be some amendment there to make this something like a law, and not something which is going to allow this minister to do something this day and somebody else the next. There is no definition here whatever as to what will be regarded as a "substantial" portion, and the section itself says, that it shall be left absolutely to the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: Why not?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, generally parliament has been thought to be the proper source of taxation and not a minister. What parliament here is asked to do is to say that the minister can impose special taxes on special people as he chooses to designate.

Mr. JACOBS: That is already in the law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What law?

Mr. JACOBS: That the minister's finding shall be conclusive. It is left to the minister's discretion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not the point at all. What you have in the law there are matters in connection with quantum and the like, rulings on statutes. This is not a question of ruling on a statute. It is a question of the minister making his own law and saying that Jones shall pay and Smith shall not pay. He can do just as he likes.

Mr. BUREAU: If I read the section correctly what my hon. friend objects to are the words "a substantial portion of goods." The clause reads:

If the minister determines that any manufacturer or producer, who does not manufacture or produce goods to the value of ten thousand dollars a year, uses a substantial portion of goods which are exempt from the tax—

Now what would my hon. friend call a substantial portion?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is what I am asking. I want to know what the government proposes to do.

Mr. BUREAU: It is left to the minister's discretion. My hon. friend is proceeding on the assumption that the minister will determine that a substantial portion in one case is five per cent, in another case fifteen per cent, in another case twenty per cent, and so on. Otherwise his argument could not stand. The only objection he could take to this clause is that it leaves discretion to the minister as to what shall constitute a substantial portion of the goods. Well, he must give credit to any minister that is at the head of the Customs department not to play with that discretion and determine on five per cent in one case and eighty per cent in another. We have officers in the department, and recommendations can be made to the Governor in Council. I for one do not propose to have two rulings on two different measures. If fifty or sixty or seventy-five per cent is determined to be a substantial portion it will be the same for every one. My hon. friend's argument that we can play with this power is based on the assumption that the man who is going to be at the head of the Customs department is either a fool or a knave.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are a hundred and one different businesses that will be subjected to this, and a hundred and one different ways in which it could be worked.

Mr. JACOBS: To whom would the hon. gentleman give discretion if not to the minister?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we should have it fixed in the House whether a man is taxable or whether he is not. I do not think the parliament has the right to delegate its authority to tax, that is all.

Mr. BUREAU: Parliament does not delegate any authority at all. It simply gives power to interperet the words.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not desirous of delaying the committee. I understand we are on subclause 3 of 19BBB.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on section 6 generally.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish to draw the attention of the minister to what perhaps has been overlooked. I do not think there is any objection to this. The suggestion I have to make would properly come on page 5 after the section referring to "sale price" defined. It has reference to concerns which manufacture and retail direct to the people, perhaps dealing more particularly with confectionery, cakes and such like. That is, cases where a bona fide retailer is also a manufacturer. It is claimed by these people that at present the officials of the department presided over by the hon. Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue determine arbitrarily and without statutory power that the valuation for taxation shall be sixty per cent of the retail price. No objection is taken to that, but it is not provided for in the statute, and the suggestion is made that provision should be made in the statute for the minister to make regulations in that regard. I have to suggest to the minister an amendment to come in after the word "thereto" in line 8 on page 5 of the bill following the clause that reads:

For the purpose of calculating the amount of the consumption or sales tax, "sale price" shall mean the price before any amount payable in respect of the consumption or sales tax is added thereto.

I propose an amendment to add after the word "thereto" the following:

Provided, however, that the minister may in the case of goods manufactured for sale to the consumer by a person carrying on business exclusively by retail determine by regulation upon what portion of the actual sale price the tax shall be calculated.

In other words, that in the case of businesses where a retail manufacturer sells direct to the consumer the minister by regulation shall have the power to fix the price upon which the sales tax shall be applied. If it is provided for already in the bill I would be very glad to have it pointed out, but it is pointed out by those more directly interested that the bill does not provide for it at the present time. I know very well that it certainly intended to cover it but I do not think it is covered in the bill. If this amendment is acceptable I would offer it to the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend will turn to section 13 on page 8 he will find that that is covered. Section 13 reads:

Whenever goods are manufactured or produced in Canada under such circumstances or conditions as render it difficult to determine the value thereof—

That would be the goods described by my hon. friend.

—the minister may determine the value of the tax under this act.

I think that covers the point raised by my hon. friend.

Mr. STEVENS: I may say, so that the minister may understand the spirit in which I bring this forward, that I am quite prepared to accept his assurance that it covers the case if he will so assert, but the information I have is that it does not. At present in the case of a prosecution, for instance, while the interpretation given by many of the officials is that sixty per cent of the retail sale price is the amount upon which the tax should be levied, there is nothing in the act which authorizes the officials to make that price, and what I am after is that the act shall make it perfectly clear that the officials shall have the authority to fix such a price.

Mr. FIELDING: Under this clause I think they would have the power to fix the price, but not necessarily sixty per cent. I think my hon. friend ought to be willing to leave it to the judgment of the Minister of Customs. I think the words are broad enough, and unless it be found by experience that it does not interpret fairly I do not think the change my hon. friend asks is necessary. I have enough faith in Ministers of Customs, no matter to what government or party they belong, to believe that they are endeavouring to administer the customs and the sales tax laws in a spirit of fairness to all concerned. I hope my hon. friend will not press his amendment, I think he will find the point is covered.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. STEVENS: I might say, so that the minister will correctly interpret my remarks, that I am quite willing to accept his interpretation. That would be the purport of my amendment. If the minister is satisfied that under this clause any regulation made by him or his officials—that would be the Minister of Customs and Excise I understand —fixing the value at forty, sixty, seventy or any other percentage is legal, that is what I want to get at. If the minister is satisfied of that my amendment is unnecessary.

Mr. FIELDING: I think if the Minister of Customs made a regulation along these lines it would be absolutely certain that he could do so. As to whether it would be wise for him to do so, I would rather leave to his judgment than tie his hands.

Mr. STEVENS: In view of that I am quite willing to accept the minister's interpretation of the act in that regard.

Mr. FIELDING: Thank you.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had some discussion in connection with the question of 50 per cent. I did not get any answer to my question. Perhaps it is foolish to expect any answer in connection with this bill at all from anybody; but I did ask as to how subsection 7 was going to be worked out; how it was going to be ascertained as to the 50 per cent of the total sales so that this special privilege could be availed of; for how long that 50 per cent would have to continue; and what would happen when the 50 per cent was not maintained.

Mr. FIELDING: That I think you will have to leave to the minister.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am asking, though, a little information from the minister who is here. I suppose the government have some idea of what they are doing by this bill, but I am beginning to think they have not.

Mr. FIELDING: There were cases in the existing law when it was administered by my hon. friend where the Minister of Customs received large power, and my hon. friend did not see any danger in it at all. The Minister of Customs had power to define this, that and the other thing. My hon. friend did not then imagine any difficulty. I do not see why he should imagine difficulties now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is something very different. This bill goes further than any act we ever had.

Mr. FIELDING: We had this before.

This may seem at first sight a somewhat small thing; but if you take an area like Aylmer, Ontario, or the Okanagan valley, or many other sections where thousands of acres belonging to hundreds of individuals are devoted to the growing of tomatoes, this is an important matter. I would ask the Minister of Customs if it would be possible to do one of two things, either to interpret the act as it at present stands to include tomato plants, or to make the necessary amendment to include tomato plants in the exemptions.

Mr. FIELDING: I think the Minister of Customs was dealing with that. I can quite understand, upon all these questions, there may be possibly different rulings by the customs authorities. I really do not know what more the hon. member can do than to leave the matter to the judgment of the minister, and I hope he will give attention to what the hon. member has said. This does not require a change in the bill. If the ruling is wrong, I suppose he will make a ruling to correct it, but I presume he will not admit that it is wrong.

Mr. STEVENS: If the very genial and efficient Minister of Customs would intimate that such a ruling would be given, that would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BUREAU: A ruling was made by the Commissioner of Customs, and the question was discussed to-day again. My hon. friend says that tomatoes come in free. Supposing apples come in free, would that necessarily make the tree free?

Mr. STEVENS: The act makes the tree free and also the fruit of the tree.

Mr. BUREAU: One might go further. If milk came in free would you allow the cow in free?

Mr. STEVENS: The cow being a milk factory, I do not think the case is a parallel one.

Mr. BUREAU: The matter is under consideration, under an appeal from the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie).

Mr. STEVENS: Can the minister give some assurance?

Mr. BUREAU: I cannot give an assurance.

Mr. FIELDING: Hope, not assurance.

Mr. STEVENS: This "hope" business is rather discouraging at times. I see in the countenance of the Minister of Customs, some ray of, might I say, new hope reflected.

Mr. JACOBS: That means nothing. I have had experience.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was unable to get any information as to the clause relating to jobbers. If I cannot get any information from the ministers, I want to give them a little information which, I think, can fairly be considered in connection with this matter. I point out that a distinction is made between classes of jobbers, and that it is unfair to make a distinction between classes. I point out that business of the same character should be dealt with on a similar basis. I point out that the licensed jobber will be relieved of any burden as to refunds and such troubles and that he does not have to finance the tax on his purchases. The unlicensed jobber has to finance his tax, and in order to sell to the licensed manufacturer he must be in a position to know from whom he purchased the goods shipped; and he must keep his stocks separate. This is a very difficult matter in connection with bulk goods. The unlicensed jobber must also know when the goods were purchased and the prices paid. The government will have to keep a check on all this if we are to have anything like equitable treatment between the two classes. I have been met by the government with the statement that they cannot give any information, but I hope they will endeavour to inform themselves on the subject before they attempt to enforce this measure. I trust that something will be done to preserve a semblance of fairness in the matter. Is it possible to make these refunds? The minister cannot tell me anything about his machinery, but perhaps when we come to some of the other sections he may be able to ascertain from his deputy how the department will arrive at the amount of refunds that have to be made between now and the first of the year.

Mr. FIELDING: I understand that there are not likely to be any refunds in the way my hon. friend describes, but there will be deductions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The matter can only be adjusted by means of stocktaking. Who is to take the stock?

Mr. FIELDING: The man owning the goods will have to be prepared to show a stock record. All these things are matters to be determined by conference between the parties concerned and the department, and I do not anticipate the difficulty which my hon. friend seems to apprehend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is only one way of checking up these deductions or refunds, whatever you choose to call them.

Any business man will tell my hon. friend that the only way of keeping a check on the matter is to take stock of the goods.

Mr. FIELDING: In a hundred cases the departments have to check up statements, and I presume the same thing will be done in this case. The officials of the department will have to check up the statements of the party wherever necessary.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In other words, the man takes stock and the department checks his statement.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has the minister any idea as to what that will cost?

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is quite right that these deductions should be made in respect of unmanufactured goods, but why should not similar deductions be made in the case of manufactured goods unsold?

Mr. FIELDING: I understand that the same rule will apply in that case; there is no difference.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The section is exceedingly long and I do not see how anybody can read it in one breath and get the sense of it. If the minister says that it covers the completed article I am satisfied; but so far as I can see, it refers only to articles that must be further manufactured. If I am wrong the minister will correct me.

Mr. GERMAN: If the importer does not pay any duty where does the refund come in? How can there be a refund if no duty has been paid?

Mr. FIELDING: If a duty has been paid the manufacturer is clearly entitled to a refund, but obviously there would be no deduction if no duty had been paid.

Mr. GERMAN: This therefore would apply to goods already imported. It could not apply to goods to be imported in the future.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should be glad if the minister would clear up the point I have already raised. Does this refund apply to the finished article which is still on hand?

Mr. FIELDING: If the manufacturer has paid the tax he is entitled to the refund.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then we have it definite; the refund or deduction or repayment will apply to the finished article just as much as to the raw material.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. FIELDING: If they have paid the 6 per cent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes; but everything now has to pay the 6 per cent.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Failure or refusal to keep books.

Mr. JACOBS: There is an anomaly in this section. Subsection 19E reads:

19E. If a manufacturer or producer fails or refuses to keep adequate books or accounts, in English or French, for the purposes of this act, the minister may, by notice in writing, require the manufacturer or producer to keep such records and accounts as the minister may prescribe.

I would suggest that we strike out the words, "in English or French" because otherwise it would mean that a manufacturer or producer might keep books in any other language—Choctaw or Iroquois, for instance—and could not be proceeded against.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think my hon. friend is correctly reading the section. It means that the use of the Choctaw language would be an offence.

Mr. JACOBS: Why not strike it out altogether?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then Choctaw would be good. My hon. friend does not understand Choctaw.

Mr. JACOBS: Nor do I understand this section very clearly. If a man does not know either English or French, and keeps his accounts in Spanish or Italian, it ought to be a very simple matter for the department to find out whether his books are properly kept or not. He ought not to be penalized if he cannot keep his books in English or French.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is another argument.

Mr. FIELDING: If you are going to make an active requirement that the accounts should be kept, I think it is right to specify English or French. I do not agree with my hon. friend that Choctaw could be used.

Mr. BAXTER: I think some consideration should be given to the suggestion of my hon. friend from George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). Our English and French ancestors acquired this country by achieving mastery over the people for whom my hon. friend pleads. The minister might perhaps consent to an amendment to permit the use of English, French or Choctaw—and then my hon. friend's objection would be met.

Mr. JACOBS: As my hon. friend has helped me out of the hole, I would suggest that he include Micmac, which I understand is current in New Brunswick.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 8, subsection 19G—Refund on goods sold to province if province exempt from tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why should this refund be made? I always understood my hon. friend required the money.

Mr. FIELDING: The object of this, I am advised, is that a local government, for example, could import an article free of duty, but in the case of a manufacturer or producer producing the same article he would be subject to tax. In that case when he sells to the local government he could get a refund so he would be put on even terms with the importer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This shows the infinity of trouble my hon. friend is making for himself. I thought it was bad enough when we had a lot of refunds at the commencement, but now apparently claims can be put in anywhere.

Mr. FIELDING: They are all there for a good purpose.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not see why the principle that underlies the exemption of provincial governments should not be extended to municipal governments as well or else be denied to all.

Mr. FIELDING: Under the British North America Act I am afraid we cannot tax the Crown, that is, a provincial government, but we can tax a municipality. That is the ground of the difference.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think in cases under the Income Tax Act as to questions of priorities and the like we had the general right of taxing fairly well settled. As to the liquor case in British Columbia my recollection is that the Privy Council decided that we had the right.

Mr. FIELDING: For resale.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We put it on resale in that case. Does my hon. friend suggest that the provinces have not to pay customs tariff?

Mr. FIELDING: That is one of the interesting constitutional questions that arise in Canada. We are advised that in all probability we have not the right to impose the tax on provincial governments unless they have the goods for resale.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think to-day we are taxing for customs.

Mr. FIELDING: It is a nice legal question to put it mildly and I do not think we ought to put a tax on the provinces which would involve us in difficulties.

Subsection agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Government or provincial sales; use of postage stamps.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does that refer to?

Mr. FIELDING: Subsection 3 of section 19 is the clause which permits the use of postage stamps, which after a given date are no longer to be used.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Schedule 1 amended.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the effect of that?

Mr. FIELDING: The passages struck out relate to confectionery and beverages, which were the subject of discussion before.

Section agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. MORIN: Before you report the bill, Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct your attention to a defect in the French translation of the bill. In the English version, in the 25th line of subsection 8 of section 6, the words appear, "no deduction to be allowed in respect of such goods not accounted for prior to the thirty-first day of March, 1924." These words are translated as follows: "aucune remise ne devant être accordée concernant des marchandises possédées." The word "possédées" means on hand; it should be replaced by the proper French translation of the English words, "not accounted for."

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend having called attention to the defect in the translation, I have no doubt that it will be remedied.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Wednesday).

Wednesday, June 27, 1923

The House met at eleven o'clock.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. C. A. GAUVREAU (Témiscouata.) presented the fourth report of the Joint Committee on Printing.

INDUSTRIAL GROUP OF GREAT BRITAIN

GREETINGS BY WIRELESS TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have just received the following cablegram:

Honourable Rodolphe Lemieux,
Speaker, House of Commons,
Canada.

The members of the Industrial Group of the House of Commons visiting the Marconi Company's wireless telegraph stations send from Radio House, London, greetings to the members of the Canadian Parliament. They recall with pride the fact that the first long-distance wireless telegraph service in the world was established by Senatore Marconi between Great Britain and the Dominion of Canada.

Secretary, Industrial Group,
House of Commons,
Radio House,
London.

To this cablegram I have despatched the following reply:

Secretary,
Industrial Group,
London, England.

In the name of Canadian House of Commons I wish to reciprocate your greetings and to thank you for your thoughtful reference to Canadian pioneering experience in wireless which, if possible, links the Dominion more closely to Motherland.

Rodolphe Lemieux,
Speaker, House of Commons.

FUEL SUPPLY

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (Cape Breton South and Richmond) presented the third and final report of the Select Committee on Mines and Minerals, and moved:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the third and final report of the Select Standing Committee on Mines and Minerals the minutes of proceedings and evidence with reference to the possibility of an independent fuel supply for Canada be printed in blue book form and as an appendix to the Journals of the House, and also that rule 74 be suspended in connection therewith.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Postmaster General) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 246, to amend the Post Office Act.

He said: By an amendment to the Post Office Act in 1920 a new schedule of postal rates was applied to newspapers and periodicals. At that time the rate was one-quarter of a cent per pound. The new schedule raised the rate on an ascending scale until it reached the maximum of 1½ cents per pound, which went into effect January 1, 1922. Strong objection was made to this maximum rate, particularly on the part of publishers of small town dailies and of weekly newspapers circulating in the rural districts, and it was alleged that the increase represented an added expense of at least five hundred per cent to this class of publishers. They asked that the maximum rate be reduced to three-quarters of a cent per pound, or that in any event it be made not more than one cent a pound instead of the 1½ cents established by the amendment of 1920. This request has been repeated at frequent intervals during the past year and a half both by individual representatives of these publishers and by delegations and correspondents, and after observing the operation of the act the Government is of opinion that the maximum postal rate on these publications might fairly be reduced to 1½ cents a pound. It is to give effect to this decision that the present amendment is introduced.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Will the minister not add to his explanation a statement of how the present rate compares with the actual cost of carriage of these publications to the country?

Mr. MURPHY: I would be pleased to do so if I had a statement of that kind prepared. The proposal, of course, will represent a decrease in the receipts, but this decrease will be made up by increased business from other branches of the department. I will try to get information for my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it not a fact that the charge now fails to bring in anything like the cost to the country of the carriage of these publications?

Mr. MURPHY: My right hon. friend is correct. Of course, the disparity was all the greater two years ago when the rate was only a quarter of a cent a pound, and it was still greater prior to that time when newspapers used to be carried free.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

CANADIAN NATONAL RALWAYS—BRANCH LINES

*Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

1. Is it proposed to recommence construction on the Hanna to Warden and Loverna (Saskatchewan) to Warden lines, in Alberta?

2. If so, what are the proposed routes?
3. Where is it proposed to locate divisional points?
4. Will Big Balley and Hanna continue to be divisional points?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: Mr. Speaker, I can give no further information in answer to this question than has been given already in the discussion on the Branch Lines Construction Bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This question was placed on the order paper before the discussion the minister refers to took place. I am quite content to let the question drop.

Question dropped.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL

*Mr. SHAW:

1. What persons, firms and corporations in the province of Alberta supply coal to the Canadian National Railways?
2. What price is paid per ton?
3. Are the contracts for such coal awarded by tender?
4. For what period have such contracts, if any, been awarded?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: I think on reflection my hon. friend will agree with me that it would not be in the interests of the Canadian National Railway Company to make this information public. The purchasing of this coal is not an easy matter for the buying department of the railway company, and to make public to every coal dealer what business we are doing with the other coal companies would probably tend to a combine on their part which might very materially increase the cost of coal to the railway company.

HALIBUT FISHERY TREATY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The second resolution on the order paper I notice is worded, "In Committee of the Whole". I think this is a mistake.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is an error.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) has a resolution on the order paper relating to legislation arising out of the treaty, and I think it would be well to hold this resolution over until after the other resolution has been advanced a stage so that the treaty and the legislation pertaining thereto may be considered at the same time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

DR. F. G. BANTING

EXPRESSION OF THE NATION'S GRATITUDE TO THE DISCOVERER OF INSULIN

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That whereas the recent discovery of the insulin treatment for diabetes, by Dr. F. G. Banting of Toronto, as the result of devoted application and research, and the discoverer's disinterested and generous action in placing it at the disposal of the public, have conferred inestimable benefit, not only on the Canadian people but on sufferers in all parts of the world, it is expedient that Parliament should give some expression of the nation's gratitude to one who has rendered such distinguished service to science and humanity, and that such recognition should take the form of a vote of an annuity sufficient to permit Dr. Banting to devote his life to medical research.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary for me to supplement the words of the resolution by any comment; they speak for themselves. Moreover, the great service which Dr. Banting has rendered to science and to humanity is now known throughout the world. The government has felt that some formal expression by the parliament of Canada of the services of this distinguished Canadian would be fitting at this time and in giving it the form suggested by the resolution we believe we are interpreting the wishes of all Canadians. It is perhaps appropriate that I should recall that during the war Dr. Banting also rendered valuable services as a member of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, and was wounded in action. We feel that in Dr. Banting, who was born in Canada and is a graduate of one of our own universities, Canada has a citizen of whom all who belong to the British Empire are justly proud. He has brought added fame to our country and in return, as the representatives of the Canadian people in parliament, we desire to express our country's appreciation of the great work that he has performed for science and humanity. We hope that by the provision which the resolution suggests Dr. Banting may be enabled to devote his life to medical research in a manner which will add to the benefits his discoveries in the field of medicine have already brought to his fellow men.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the resolution, I think, constitutes a beginning, so far as public policy is concerned in this country, of recognition in any substantial way of scientific and humanitarian achievement. Dr. Banting being a Canadian and having achieved his fame and his contribution to scientific advancement in this country, it is appropriate that we as a nation should be the first to act in recognition of his services. I do not think, although not pretending to any particular scientific attainment, there can any longer be a doubt as to the supreme value of Dr. Banting's discovery and the beneficial, indeed the curative, properties which it possesses. Ample demonstration that this is the case has been made by those whose judgment may be taken as final not only in our own country but at various points in the United States and as well in other lands. What it means in the way of alleviation of suffering, in the way of contribution not only to the length but to the happiness of human life, it is impossible to estimate and quite impossible to exaggerate. That Dr. Banting should be especially rewarded and that at the same time the reward should take such form as would be to him an encouragement to pursue his scientific activities, seems to me axiomatic. I am personally aware—by those words I mean on the information of friends of his who undoubtedly know—that what this scientific man endured in the way of privation, in the way of personal sacrifice, in order that over a course of long years of experiment he might bring to fruition the objects he had in mind, is as yet, and probably always will be, unknown to the public at large. I can vouch for it that he made everything bend,—when I say everything I mean much that meant suffering to himself—he made all things subordinate to the attainment of his great goal; indeed, in doing so he only repeated what all men have had to do from the beginning of time to achieve any such wonderful result as he in this instance has brought about. Consequently it is only just to the people of our country, only just to the good name of Canada that this parliament should in a fitting way recognize what he has done for the nation and for the world. It is best from the standpoint of interest that we do it; for it will enable Dr. Banting from now on to pursue investigations along similar and other lines, from which investigations there is at least reasonable hope that results will ensue of great benefit to the human race. Therefore, as one who feels that the country should act in honour to its citizens; as one who feels as well that the greatest benefits to the world in the future are to come from scientific research and scientific achievement, I have real pleasure in seconding the resolution.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I feel very happy to have the privilege of being associated with the resolution now before the House. Dr. Banting's name is now known all over the world, and it is peculiarly gratifying to the Canadian people that a discovery so important and of such great benefit to humanity should have been made by a Canadian. I feel sure that money will have no peculiar attraction for Dr. Banting; that his great ambition is to achieve something for the benefit and the service of humanity. However, I am very glad that we are making some contribution which will in effect be opening the door of opportunity to him so that he can more consistently devote his time to the great work he has undertaken, a work which is a blessing to humanity and the results accruing from which bring honour to himself as well as to his country. I repeat that I am pleased to be associated with hon. members of the House in paying this tribute to Dr. Banting,—a man whom the people delight to honour.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister in charge of the Department of Health): Mr. Speaker, I desire to add just a few words in support of the resolution introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), and to unite with him, the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), and the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke), in paying tribute to the eminent physician who has achieved so much in the path of science, and particularly of medicine, in Canada. This move of the House of Commons will redound not only to its own credit, but, I submit, to the credit of Canada as a whole. It is a sincere though feeble endeavour to recognize the services of one who through many long days and nights has devoted his efforts unremittingly to forwarding the cause of science, and who has, as it were, drawn aside the curtain which hides from the human eye some of the numberless mysteries of science. The exact nature of Dr. Banting's discovery is still obscure to the layman. In a word, it consists in reducing or controlling pathological activities which are normal in the human body if not carried to exaggeration. Sugar is an element of nutrition, important—indeed, essential—to the life of man but if it is produced in exaggerated quantities the result is disaster to the human body. The discovery of Dr. Banting tends to check this exaggerated fabrication of sugar in the system, and it is hoped that the use of insulin will not only temporarily reduce that pathological activity but do away with it entirely. Canada is still a young nation. It has however in the spheres of industry, agriculture and commerce accomplished enormous results. Unlike the European countries its steps have been somewhat slow in the field of science, literature and the fine arts. Only a few months ago it was my inestimable privilege to preside at the opening of an exhibition of paintings in our Museum. Those paintings were exclusively the work of Canadians, and I cannot say how much impressed I was by the excellence of the exhibits. Time will come, and only time can accomplish that, when Canada will take her place among the older European nations in the field of fine arts, sculpture, music and painting. Dr. Banting's discovery does not rank as an achievement in the fine arts. It is a good deal more than that and will bring its own special advantages to humanity at large. And so I say it is the duty of the Parliament of Canada to take whatever steps are calculated to encourage men to devote their time with enthusiasm to scientific research, especially when the results of that work are to help humanity and relieve its sufferings.

Mr. Speaker, I think this House will accept the resolution unanimously, and as the minister presiding over the Department of Health I wish to say in the name of Canada that we extend our hearty congratulations and encouragement to this young physician, who has become illustrious not only in this country but in the world at large.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): When this question was before the House on the 27th of February last the minister took the position that he could not do anything for Dr. Banting. I notice that the resolution does not include the name of Mr. C. H. Best, Dr. Banting's co-worker and associate. I think the country will approve the action of this Government in granting this annuity to Dr. Banting. It is a step in the right direction to recognize these men who are Canadians and Britishers for contributing something towards the advancement of medical science. It is well they should receive some recognition before they have died or left the country. I should like to find out from the minister if the name of Mr. Best is going to be included, and if any recognition is to be given to Dr. Macallum, who has made important discoveries in helium, and to other Canadian scientists. The Government of the Province of Ontario has appropriated $10,000 per year to establish a chair in the University of Toronto for continuing Dr. Banting's work. I think something might be done as well for Mr. Best, Dr. Banting's associate and co-worker.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Fort William and Rainy River): I should just like to point out one fact in connection with this grant by the parliament of Canada to Dr. Banting which has not been mentioned, and that is the fact as I am informed on very good authority, that Dr. Banting could have exploited this discovery and was offered an almost fabulous sum for the purpose of exploiting the remedy which he has discovered. If you look down through the history of medicine you will find, with one exception I think, that every discovery that has been made by a medical man in an effort to cure disease has been given freely to the world. Take antisepsis, which was discovered by Lord Lister, anaesthesia by Simpson and Morton, vaccination by Jenner, three of the most outstanding discoveries in scientific medicine in the history of the world and without which much of the health of to-day would be impossible. All these discoveries were given to the world freely. It might be of interest to the House, and I do not wish to utter any word of ill-feeling against anyone in this connection, to know that the one exception that occurs to my mind where a medical discovery was exploited was the preparation 606 which was discovered by Erlich, of Berlin, Germany. I personally am particularly glad, as I am sure is every medical man in the House, to see Canada taking this attitude towards the discoverer of a health-giving remedy, for unfortunately in the history of medicine and surgery too seldom has recognition been given. There is one country in the world, however, which has on many occasions honoured its scientific men more perhaps than any other country, and that is the Republic of France. As you walk around the streets of Paris you will frequently come upon a street named after some distinguished scientist, the Avenue Pasteur, for instance, and you will find many statues and monuments commemorating the men who have shown great learning in scientific work. I wish as a medical man, like the Minister of Health himself, to congratulate the government and parliament upon having decided to do this worthy thing.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): As we in this corner of the House have so frequently criticised public expenditure it is a great pleasure to be able to recognize the justice of the principles underlying this grant. I am not quite sure that it is setting a very good precedent for parliament to make grants in special cases, since I presume this body is hardly in a position to decide exactly who most merits recognition of this character, but until we have some other body constituted for the purpose I am very glad to see that we are recognizing an achievement of this character. I take it from the remarks which have been made in this House and throughout the country generally that there has been a real contribution in this case and that we are proceeding along right lines when we recognize advances that are made in the scientific world. This action appeals, too, because in this particular case the achievement is one that is made in the interests of the saving of life, whereas very often we have honoured as our greatest heroes those who have made their achievements not in the saving but in the destruction of life. It is a decided advance when we begin to understand that the saving of life is infinitely greater than the destruction of life for any purpose whatever.

There is another point to which I would call attention, and that is that we are getting away from the idea that men will accomplish great things simply to attain monetary success and only under the spur of competition. These motives have been held before us as the only ones which control men's activities at the present time, and I am glad to think that we recognize that men can work and work hard for other than financial advantage.

I like the way in which the motion is expressed, that this grant is made not only as a material recognition of past work but in order that this scientist may be able to continue to carry on his work. We have had the statement put forth very frequently that unless men were driven by the necessity of achieving some financial success they would not do any work. I believe that idea is absolutely wrong. If they are at all assured that they will have a competency, the truest men will go forward to accomplish even greater results. This recognition is probably an act of justice in one case; but we must look forward to planning that a great many of the more obscure workers in the fields of industrial and scientific research, as well as in many other departments of our life to-day, shall be given the same opportunity which has been accorded to this one scientific student—that is the opportunity of carrying forward their work and of performing something worth while in the service of humanity.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): On behalf of the University of Toronto, and the other universities of Canada, I desire to thank parliament for this recognition of the discovery made by a worthy son of a Canadian college, Dr. Banting. Undoubtedly this action by parliament will have a beneficial influence within the University of Toronto, and the other universities of the country, and encourage their graduates, professors and students in the service of humanity and progress.

HALIBUT FISHERY

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee this day to consider a certain resolution respecting the Northern Pacific halibut fishery.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX ACT, 1916 AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee this day to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend subsection three of section 13 of The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and to remove the restriction of the said subsection by which the liability to pay the tax imposed continues for the period of only three years and by which the Minister is permitted at any time within three years only to assess such person for the tax, and to provide that the Act shall be construed as if the said restriction had never been contained therein.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Sir Henry Drayton: I assume that what is being done here is a rather circuitous method of extending the operation of the business profits tax until the collections are all made. The act was a temporary measure, and I assume that the legislation will be extended so that all collections can be made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may point out to my hon. friend that this is merely a motion to have the resolution considered later. The point to which he refers can be explained when the resolution itself is being considered.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That will be quite satisfactory, but my object in bringing forward the point now was that we might have some real, definite information on it when the resolution was under consideration. We had difficulty yesterday in learning anything.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT, 1917, AMENDMENT.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee this day to consider a certain proposed resolution for amendment of the Income War Tax Act, 1917.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

PROCEDURE—TORONTO VIADUCT.

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): When the House adjourned last night it was agreed that the representatives of Toronto should be allowed an opportunity this morning on the orders of the day, or on a motion to go into committee of supply, of discussing the question of the Toronto viaduct. At the request of the mayor and council of the city of Toronto—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman not to make any extended remarks or argument on the present occasion. Ample opportunity will be afforded when the motion is made for the House to go into committee of supply in a few minutes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was agreed last night that an opportunity would be given my hon. friend to take up this subject to-day. Perhaps he might move the adjournment of the House, or we can move to go into supply.

Mr. CHURCH: At the request of many Toronto organizations—

Mr. SPEAKER: I should call attention to the fact that it is against the rules, unless on a matter of urgent public importance, that an hon. member should move the adjournment of the House. All those motions for adjournment have been done away with in the rules and proceedings of the House. Let us live up to the rules. This question can be brought up when motion for supply is made to-day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The House will surely be going into supply pretty soon, and the hon. member will then have an opportunity to bring the matter up.

Mr. BUREAU: It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is desirable that this matter should be discussed, and the Government is quite agreeable that it should be brought up. We will proceed with supply when the orders of the day have been called, and the hon. member can then bring up the question.

ORIENTAL IMMIGRATION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I desire to call the attention of the Prime Minister to order No. 45, standing in my name, which reads:

Resuming the Debate on the Motion of Mr. Neill for the Second Reading of Bill No. 6, An Act respecting Immigration.

I introduced this matter very early in the session and the second reading was adjourned from time to time at the request of the right hon. Prime Minister, who stated his conviction that the object desired to be attained could be better attained by means of negotiations with the nations concerned. We are now near the close of the second session of this parliament, and the province of British Columbia will be asking, with ever-increasing emphasis, what she is to expect in the way of relief on this subject. Is the Prime Minister in a position now to make any statement relating to the progress of the negotiation? Further, if the Prime Minister finds during the recess that these negotiations fail, will he consider the adoption on behalf of the government of this bill in question, which has proved very successful in New Zealand?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As I mentioned to the House on an earlier occasion, the government received from the government of Japan representations to the effect that the Japanese government were prepared further to restrict the immigration of their labourers from Japan. It was pointed out in their communication to our government that any legislation on this subject by the Canadian government might be misunderstood in Japan, particularly if it appeared to be of the nature of exclusion; the Japanese government, it was stated, were anxious, on the one hand, to avoid any unrest in their own country, and, on the other to further the wishes of the Canadian parliament in a friendly way. We were asked if we would allow the Japanese government to show, as a result of its own action, what it might be in a position to do or was willing to do in this regard. Conferences have taken place between the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Stewart) and the representative of the Japanese government in Ottawa, as a result of which I think there is every reason to believe that a very substantial reduction in the number of immigrants coming from Japan to Canada will be made in the course of the ensuing months. If by any chance the facts should show that this endeavour on the part of the Japanese government to restrict its own people in the matter of immigration to Canada is not sufficient to achieve the object which we have in view of limiting the number of orientals coming into Canada, then, at a subsequent session of parliament, the matter may again be considered.

HOPPE AND ISENBERG LEASES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. SHAW: Can the Prime Minister tell me if the fiat issued in connection with the Hoppe lease has yet been cancelled by the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It has been cancelled, yes.

SUPPLY—TORONTO VIADUCT

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding for the House to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): At the request of many Toronto organizations, including the mayor and the corporation of the city, I desire to bring before the House this morning and discuss for about ten minutes the case of the city of Toronto and its agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway and its successors and assigns, now the government of Canada, and the Canadian Pacific Railway for the erection of a viaduct across the waterfront in Toronto. The lower end of the city of Toronto on Front street, between Yonge and York, resembles a city or town in Flanders or France, destroyed in the late war by the German government. The city of Toronto placed a contract with the railways before the Railway Commission, and after ten years of effort before that body, the other day a meeting was held at the City Hall in Toronto, at which meeting the Railway Board washed its hands of the whole agreement, and the matter is now in the hands of the government to decide. The statement of the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners delivered at the City Hall, Toronto, on Thursday the 7th June last, was as follows:

> This board has nothing to say as to whether the viaduct scheme will go through or not. It is out of our hands. We went so far as to say in Ottawa in 1921 that we would not interfere. It is now a matter for those concerned to raise the money.

The government is a party to the contract. The parties to the contract were the corporation of the city of Toronto, the Toronto Harbour Commissioners, and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada;—it is now the Grand Trunk Railway and their successors and assigns, who are now the government. The city of Toronto has been treated in a most unjust and unfair way, not only by the present government, but by the preceding governments, in failing to carry out this agreement. The disgraceful conditions in Toronto have made that city waterfront a by-word for more than twenty years. Behind the presidents of the railways, whose policy has been a compound of evasion and procrastination, is the Railway Commission, the members of which washed their hands of the case, after loudly declaring that final jurisdiction rested with them. The Railway Commission is supposed to enforce the agreement between the municipalities and the railways and they have washed their hands of the affair. A large revenue has been contributed by the city towards the National Railways. The only forum we can go to and ask for the enforcement of this agreement is the parliament of Canada. An agreement is an agreement in law, even if it is made by a municipal corporation and the Grand Trunk. The government can be brought into the Exchequer Court and adjudicated in that way. Matters have been allowed to drift along till the present time. We have a station there which the Grand Trunk built some ten years ago, and it is now ready to be opened. But that station is an eyesore to everybody coming into the city. It is an up-to-date station, made to fit in with the elevated tracks which were proposed to be constructed. When this agreement was entered into the Harbour Commissioners did not look upon it as "a scrap of paper," but considered it a binding agreement between the railways and the city. They laid their plans before the government for the rebuilding of the harbour at Toronto at a cost of $26,000,000. Now, $20,000,000 of that money have been expended to-day to provide a right of way for this viaduct, and to provide new piers and breakwaters, for the carrying out of the agreement. Why is this document treated as a scrap of paper? Can the railways of this country ride rough-shod over municipalities of Canada in this way, and treat a solemn agreement as a scrap of paper? An agreement is an agreement no matter by whom it is made; and we say that Canada is a party to it, because under the description in the agreement the party of the second part is the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada hereinafter called the railway company and their successors and assigns. They are bound by that agreement. The Grand Trunk is not bankrupt. The sum of $73,000,000 was voted by this government the other night for railways and $26,000,000 in addition was for the purpose of extensions and branch lines. Many of these lines, of course, are not revenue producing, but for many years the branch lines have been producing a revenue. The Grand Trunk made most of its money in Ontario, and if the Grand Trunk had not been made a link in the Canadian National Railways they would have made money. According to the Acworth Report on Railways of 1917 there was taken out of the old Grand Trunk in Ontario $22,000,000 cash and $122,000,000 credit for the Grand Trunk Pacific, with the result that the Grand Trunk became bankrupt and was not able to carry out its solemn agreement with the Harbour Commission. Now the party of the first part, the city of Toronto, has fulfilled its contract with the government;—and in making these comments this morning I want to have it understood that I am not criticising the present government, because I say that all governments since 1913 have treated this agreement as a mere scrap of paper.

Another contract was entered into with the city in connection with the sale of the lot on which the new union station stands. The Grand Trunk purchased a lot in 1905 and agreed to build an up-to-date station, and subsequently became a party to the erection of a viaduct on the waterfront so that the trains might be brought in that way and the city get the benefit of a proper terminal. The viaduct agreement has not been carried out either; like the rest, it has been treated as so much waste paper. It is signed by the four parties to the contract and it provides a penalty of $100 a day during the time of the failure of any of the parties to implement it. That penalty, accumulating from 1913, has now run into hundreds of thousands of dollars which the city could collect if it wanted to take steps in the matter. The city has no desire to institute legal proceedings, but the people of Toronto are absolutely tired of the way this whole question has been ignored. After ten years of waiting they are now impatient, and they are clamouring for proper treatment. When passengers arrive at the station they are treated like a lot of cattle. There are sixteen tracks across the waterfront at Cherry street, and almost as many at York and Bay streets. The level crossings are an eyesore to the city, and after the expenditure of such a large sum as $20,000,000 to prepare the right-of-way for the railway, it is not to be wondered at if the residents of the city of Toronto are now exasperated. Some of the tenants along the waterfront have been simply driven into liquidation through the failure of the parties to this agreement to observe their part of the undertaking. The railways cannot handle the business on these tracks, either in respect of passenger traffic or in the matter of freight. During the Exhibition 165 trains were assembled at the union station in the rush period, and this will given hon. members some idea of the state of congestion there at the present time.

I would point out to the government that after all it is only a short-sighted policy on the part of the National Railways to delay the execution of this contract, for if a proper terminal were provided for the people it would increase the receipts from freight and passenger traffic. The agreement it is estimated will call for an expenditure of $32,000,00, to which the city of Toronto is liable to contribute one-third. That $32,000,000 is made up in the following way: The new station, including land, represents an expenditure of $9,500,000. That sum has already been spent. For land damages, the sum of $7,500,000 was to be provided; and the amount to be spent on the viaduct construction was fixed at $16,000,000. As I say, the first item of $9,000,000 odd has been spent so that there is only approximately $22,000,000 remaining to be expended, of which the city of Toronto is to provide one-third. And the city is ready and willing to-morrow to put up its share if the Railway Board will proceed with their part of the contract. Now there is no use in the government going around a circle in this matter. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) made some reference the other day to Sir Henry Thornton in connection with this question. Well, I do not think that there is any room for argument, nor has either the Railway Board or Sir Henry Thornton, any option, so far as this contract is concerned. Here is a specific agreement to which we have the seal of the company; and neither Sir Henry Thornton nor the Railway Board can set it aside. A contract is a contract, and all that is required in this case is that parliament shall provide the money which is called for. The representatives of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Harbour Commission, the city of Toronto, and the Grand Trunk have held between twenty and thirty meetings in an endeavour to adjust the dispute. We inquired of the directors of the Grand Trunk what their stand in the matter was, and they informed us that they could do nothing. They said: "You have your contract; get the government to carry it out". Let me inform the House that we will carry out our part of the contract if parliament will provide the money to enable the railways to do their share. There is absolutely no use in vacillating on this question until Sir Henry Thornton comes back. Sir Henry Thornton, in the first place, is not a cure-all for the transportation ills of this country; and in any event the contract should be carried out. Why should the government have to wait for Sir Henry Thornton?

As I have stated before, there is only one course open to the government, and that is to include in the estimates a sum sufficient to begin the operations necessary under the National Railways' part of the contract. The Canadian Pacific Railway declared the other day that they were ready to carry out their bargain, and the Mayor of the city expressed the same preparedness. We are simply waiting upon the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific, and we have been waiting thus ever since 1913. The citizens of Toronto are absolutely disgusted at the way this contract has been ignored, and visitors to the city are impressed in any but a favourable way. Besides this, there is considerable damage being caused the business interests of the city through the failure of the government to observe its agreement. Lands on which we could get factories established are lying idle simply because the Grand Trunk will not make a move in this matter. Surely the Harbour Commission and those persons who are interested must have some recourse against the government for the damages they have sustained. They have been out their rentals from this $20,000,000 worth of revenue producing property. They have not been able to get any revenue from it, and are now drawing on capital with the result that deficits are being piled up. The people of Toronto are sustaining damages and cannot get the use of their own property. In England, in Australia and in the United States the railway legislation provides a summary remedy for situations similar to this; any municipality can enforce a contract with the railway corporation in the event of failure on the part of the latter to carry out its terms. But to-day in Canada the railways are altogether supreme. They can go into a municipality, enter into a contract and then ignore it, interfere with trade and commerce, occasion damage and ruin to business, drive people into liquidation, and apparently be immune from the consequences of their actions. That is the condition of affairs as we have it in Toronto at the present time.

In 1913, an act was passed, as Chapter 26, 1 and 2 of George V to consolidate the acts relating to the harbour of Toronto. By this act the docks were to be moved into the bay and new bulkheads and pierheads were to be built. The Minister of Public Works of that day, the Hon. Mr. Rogers, stated that the Harbour Commission would have to start building their works before the government would undertake any expenditures. The Harbour Commission then spent $20,000,000 The government, I may say, has not done so badly so far as harbour improvement is concerned. But certainly in regard to its contract in connection with the union station it has failed miserably. An order in council was also passed by the government in 1913, providing for the carrying out of these works in the harbour, and that order in council shows that the work was to be completed in the year 1916. It was provided in the main agreement between the railways and the city that the work should begin within one month from the signing of the agreement. Up to date not a spadeful of earth has been turned towards carying out this agreement. The work was to have been finished in 1916, when we were to have a new union station with elevated tracks across the waterfront. Seven years have elapsed and nothing has been done. It is not a question of law. The agreement has been validated by legislation, and althrough the railway companies appealed the judgment of the Railway Commission, the Privy Council declared it to be binding on all parties.

I regret that at this late stage of the session I have not an opportunity of laying all the facts before hon. members, because this is the only body that can give the people of Toronto the relief which the viaduct agreement provides for. The Grand Trunk Railway Company is a party to the agreement, and in the opinion of eminent counsel who have been consulted, the government of Canada are the successors and assigns of the company. It is no use now to refer us to Sir Henry Thornton and the directors of the Canadian National Railways. We were referred to the Grand Trunk Railway Company by Sir Robert Borden when he was Prime Minister, but repeated interviews with the Grand Trunk directorate and officials extending over a period of ten years did not bring us the slightest satisfaction. The city of Toronto has been treated very unfairly in this matter. Instead of building sundry branch lines for the Canadian National Railways that will not be revenue-producing for some years to come at least, I think the government would have been better advised to carry out this viaduct agreement, for the works covered by it would more than pay fixed charges.

Mr. H. C. HOCKEN (West Toronto): Mr. Speaker, I shall support the statements of my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) very briefly by informing the House of some particulars regarding this proposed work. For thirty years the city of Toronto endeavoured to protect its citizens crossing the waterfront, and when we reached 1913 interest in the question was revived and it was pressed upon the railway companies very strongly. The city submitted a plan for the elimination of the waterfront level crossings at a cost of about half that involved in the present plan. But the latter plan was the work of the engineers of the railway companies. They said to the city council: "Your plan is not complete. Here is a larger and better and more comprehensive plan." Some of us thought at the time that the railway companies were hopeful that the increased cost involved by the adoption of this plan would frighten the city council and prompt its rejection. I was a member of the council that year and I recall the circumstances very clearly. When the engineers of the railway companies submitted a plan which straightened out the line from the station to Cherry street at double the cost they said: "Any other plan is insufficient and we will accept nothing but the plan which we are now submitting to you."

Mr. GRAHAM: From the station east to Cherry street?

Mr. HOCKEN: Yes, a matter of a couple of miles. The straightening of that line involves the removal of millions of dollars' worth of buildings. But the city council said: "Yes, we will accept your plan and fit it into our harbour plan. It will increase the cost of our harbour, but it is a good plan and we want to make a complete job of the whole thing." I want to impress upon the House, Mr. Speaker, that the city of Toronto has acted as fairly, as generously and as honourably as any municipality could act.

The city has been forced to agitate for this viaduct in order to save the lives of its citizens. The crossings on the esplanade are really death traps, lives have been lost there on occasions, and it is a wonder to me that more fatal accidents have not occurred. We have opposite, across the bay, a beautiful park of 1,500 acres. On holidays as many as 100,000 of our citizens cross at Bay street, and they have to pass over ten railway tracks with cars shunting up and down all the time. This crossing is right at the throat of the coach yard of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and every Canadian Pacific train running out of Toronto comes over that crossing to the yard and back again to the station. Consequently there is more traffic at Bay street than at any other two crossings in the whole city. All through the summer tens of thousands of people use the Bay street crossing, and the only protection afforded them is by means of gates.

I should like the House to consider the urgent necessity for this work. One of the leading papers of the Dominion, the Toronto Globe, has during the past few months been constantly bringing this subject before its readers. I suppose we have perhaps one of the finest railway stations in the whole Dominion, but it stands there like a monument, with not a track near it, and with no preparations being made for running trains into it. Only the office portion of the building is being used. In the meantime over half a million people, possessing a beautiful modern station, are compelled to use perhaps the most inefficient railway structure to be found on the whole North American continent.

Mr. MACLAREN: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GRAHAM: Not as bad as St. John.

Mr. MACLAREN: There is one exception—the minister has mentioned it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I foresaw it.

Mr. HOCKEN: I rather take issue with my hon. friend there, because although a very small and inadequate station may be bad enough in a city of the size of St. John, in a city of half a million it is a good deal worse. Everyone who goes out of the union station must cross from two to five tracks, according to the track where his train is standing. This is bad enough for Toronto people who know the dangers to be guarded against, but for strangers it is a much more serious matter.

Mr. VIEN: You are always sober in Toronto.

Mr. HOCKEN: Well, if only drunken men were killed on these crossings we would have fewer casualties. But any person is liable to meet with an accident at the old station. We are forced to use it by reason of the refusal of the railway companies to carry out their agreement. Now, that agreement was not forced upon them, it was the outcome of their own proposition. I am not going to curse the former government, because this happened in the middle of 1913, and during the war we could hardly expect the necessary expenditure to be made. But I think the time is come when something should be done, when at least a start should be made in carrying this work to completion. It is going to take several years to construct, and during this time we will have to suffer more or less inconvenience, but we shall be willing to put up with this in the sure and certain hope of ultimately having relief. We have spent $20,000,000, and I presume before we are through we will spend another $10,000,000, on our harbour, and we hope that from the construction of that harbour our water borne traffic will largely increase. But every ton of freight that comes in by water now has to cross these eight or ten or twelve tracks at Yonge street, Church street, Bay street or some other street. That is a serious handicap against the development of water borne traffic that ought to be removed; there ought to be free access for the freight traffic as well as for the passenger traffic to the pier heads in our city. During the summer months the volume of passenger traffic out of Toronto to the St. Lawrence, to the Niagara, to Hamilton to Port Dalhousie and Grimsby is enormous, to say nothing of that which goes to the Island every day. A number of people approximating 25 per cent of the whole population of the city crosses these tracks every day. It is a condition that I do not think exists anywhere else on the North American continent, and it is one which the government really ought to take some steps to alleviate. I know the Minister of Railways is familiar with the situation there, and I do hope he will persuade his colleagues to put an appropriation in the estimates this session. It is not too late yet; we can bring down another list of supplementary estimates. That would give my hon friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Murphy) a chance, because I am told there is nothing for his department in the present estimates.

Mr. MURPHY: We are practising economy.

Mr. HOCKEN: Why not bring down, as my hon. friend from North Toronto suggests, an appropriation of two or three millions to get the thing started to get the surveys made and be ready to go on next year? It is a work that ought to be carried out and, the Lord knows, the city of Toronto has been a patient though helpless sufferer during all these years.

Mr. HENRI E. LAVIGUEUR (Quebec County): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of hon. members on this subject, especially those of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church), who has given the House some details of a certain agreement entered into between the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the city of Toronto, and later, I believe, the Canadian Northern Railway Company. It would seem that it was a habit of the late government to ignore or disregard contracts which had previously been entered into by the federal government with municipalities or cities throughout the Dominion. I have much sympathy for the situation in which Toronto, the capital city of Ontario, finds itself so far as railway facilities are concerned, but if I may be permitted I would like to draw the attention of the House to the position in which the city of Quebec was placed by the late government in the same connection. In 1910 the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, through the Transcontinental Railway Commission, of which Hon. S. N. Parent was chairman, entered into a contract with the city of Quebec for certain works and improvements which were to be carried out there. After the change of government in 1911, however, all the plans that had been agreed upon by the commission, representing the government, and the city of Quebec, were set aside. A written contract had been signed before notary Edmond Taschereau, of Quebec, for the erection of a union station on the Champlain market site in Quebec. The tenders had been called for and a contract had been entered into with Mrs. Gosselin, of the city of Levis, for the construction of a station building valued at $2,000,000. Moreover, by this contract the government undertook to spend not less than $2,000,000 for the approaches and other facilities connected with the union station. To that end they purchased three miles of frontage on the St. Lawrence river at Quebec city. Subsequently the government asked the city of Quebec to abandon the Champlain market property, which was valued at not less than $5,000,000, in order that it might be used for the purposes that I have described. The city consented to hand this valuable property over to the government at the nominal price of $100,000, having in mind the construction of these facilities that were so greatly needed. The city were therefore obliged to purchase another market property and erect another market building, and also to provide docks for the convenience of the small market boats that come to Quebec. The city purchased a new market site at the fot of Crown street on the St. Charles river and spent a very large amount of money for the erection of a market there, having in view the taking of action by the government to go ahead with the St. Charles river improvements. A contract had also been entered into with the government for these works before 1911. The then Minister of Public Works, Hon. Frank Carvell, who answered some of my interpolations at that time on the subject, told the House that the late government had spent $1,750,000 on the St. Charles river works. These works, however, were abandoned on account of the war. Moreover the contractors for the St. Charles river work were indemnified for resigning their contract, and I believe it cost the government between five and six hundred thousand dollars to take over the work. The government had spent on the St. Charles river work over $2,000,000, a very large part of which expenditure is now wasted by deterioration of the work through neglect. We repeatedly urged the late government to go ahead with these works which were abandoned for no reason whatever and to give the city of Quebec the railway facilities to which we are entitled. We were not asking any favour of the government, but simply for what was our due.

We asked the railway management to go ahead with the work under contract in Quebec and to go ahead with the St. Malo repair shops. These shops were erected in the city of Quebec at a cost of over $2,000,000 and we were promised that they would employ from three to four thousand men, but they were closed two years after they were erected. The result is that repairs of cars have now to be made at Moncton and Winnipeg when we had right in the city of Quebec shops that were perfectly equipped to do that repair work. Moreover, we were also promised that a main building would be erected in connection with these shops for the building of engines and passenger cars, but that main building has never been built. Sir Robert Borden when Prime Minister, and his colleagues the Minister of Railways, the Minister of Public Works, and the Minister representing the district of Quebec, Hon. Mr. Pelletier, all acknowledged that Quebec was entitled to these facilities, that it was her due under the contract, and all of them expressed astonishment that the work was not being proceeded with, and they promised the citizens of Quebec, that justice would be done to our city which had made sacrifices in order to get what was due to her. Since I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this House I have endeavoured on many occasions to see that justice be done to our city and to the district of Quebec, and over and over again we have been promised that justice would be done. We were in the same situation as the city of Toronto, about which my hon. friend has spoken this morning. The city of Quebec was neglected by the late government, just as it would appear that the interests of the city of Toronto have also been neglected.

I should like to refer for a moment to the declaration that was made by Sir Robert Borden on October 22, 1913, at the banquet tendered to him in the city of Quebec. I quoted this in a speech I made in the House of Commons on September 15, 1919, and it will be found on page 292 of volume 1 of Hansard of that year. At that banquet he promised on behalf of himself and his colleagues that the city of Quebec would obtain justice and that he would see to it that the government would carry out its obligations and the contract in regard to the city of Quebec. We all know that the city of Quebec was neglected by the late government, and we have repeatedly complained. I think our friends from Toronto who have spoken on behalf of that city to-day were not exactly in the same position that we of Quebec were in, because they were friends of the late government. But even they could not obtain what was due to their city, and so to-day they come before this House and ask for justice to the city of Toronto. I am quite sure that this government, which is animated by a good feeling towards every province of confederation and every city of this Dominion, will render justice to the city of Toronto, as I hope and indeed feel perfectly sure they will to the city of Quebec, whose interests were badly neglected by the late government. We had the honour and the pleasure of receiving lately in the city of Quebec the new president of the Canadian National Railways, Sir Henry Thornton, and he like all the officers of the government who have visited our city, admitted that the city of Quebec had been very badly neglected, and we have every confidence that Sir Henry Thornton will see that justice is done to our city.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): May I, on behalf of Toronto, express the sympathy of that city with the hon. member for Quebec County (Mr. Lavigueur) and the city of Quebec, of which he was at one time mayor, in having their grievances presented to this House. Toronto will help in any way it can to get justice done to Quebec. But the question really before the House and the one to which I must direct myself concerns the city of Toronto, and for just a few minutes I propose to deal with that—probably from my own point of view, but certainly from some knowledge of the situation.

Now what is the situation at Toronto? It is this: It is a city on the waterfront and every approach to it by means of rails except the old Great Western line—now Grand Trunk; Canadian National—is on the lake level. Every other railroad comes into Toronto on the high level of the plain immediately surrounding the city, and the elevation of all these roads before they enter Toronto is quite two or three hundred feet above the level of the lake. In the old days the Grand Trunk was only able to approach the city on the level, but was not in a position to bridge the rivers, and therefore it took the easier way of building on the lower level. Now, the problem is this: An agreement was made, and the city of Toronto is calling for the carrying out of that agreement by the companies. In the meantime there is an immediate relief for the situation. In what does the relief consist? First of all, the use of the new union station immediately. To do that you must take all the through traffic, and especially that of freight, from the front of the city by the cross-town line that now exists on the upper level, and remove a part of the existing difficulty, and to try and reduce the obstructions and inconveniences as they now exist to the public. Now, by building a cut-off line of four miles on the right of way of the Canadian Pacific from Leaside—and the National Railways now own one-half of all that double track right of way—from North Toronto Station on to Leaside—and then directly east from Leaside to a junction with the Canadian National railway tracks in Scarboro and to a second junction with the Grand Trunk at Scarboro junction all that freight traffic can be taken off the Esplanade to the north, and the only cars left on the front will be the passenger trains and the local freight traffic that must be handled on the lake level. Those four miles of double track can be built immediately at an expenditure of not more than $500,000, including one temporary lumber viaduct across the Don in addition to the two now existing, the high level bridge on the west Don and the high level bridge on the east Don. All that work can be done in four months. When that is completed all the through traffic which now encumbers the front of Toronto will be taken off the esplanade and across the city to the north. In that way thousands and thousands of dollars in the consumption of coal alone by the railways can be saved. Because here is what takes place now. Every train coming into and going out of Toronto, with the exception of the Hamilton trains must be lifted up two to three hundred feet in order to get over the rise whether westerly to Guelph, the rise by the old Northern to the north, or the rise on the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific to the north east by way of Agincourt and Scarboro in the east. But between these two heavy grades which exist to-day to the north and east of Toronto, and which are totally unnecessary, the cut-off line to which I have referred, including a temporary viaduct over the Don, can be built at a cost of less than $500,000. There will be immediate relief given and the new union station can come into use within three months. That is the practical proposition I wish to outline. I am not abandoning in any way the claims of Toronto to the carrying out of the esplanade agreement but you get an entirely new view point of the situation if you carry out the improvements I have outlined and take away this traffic on the front to the north. The fact is that the grade out of Toronto by the old Grand Trunk at Scarboro is a one per cent grade; it is one of the worst grades in Canada. The Canadian Pacific Company grade to Wexford is another one of one per cent. But between the two lines there can be obtained, and has been surveyed, a grade of one-half of one per cent which was discovered some years ago. The improved line on that improved grade can be built and put into operation for less than half a million dollars and the new station can come into use immediately. Later a permanent viaduct may have to be built and other things done. When you come to deal with the esplanade there will be immense claims for damages. This matter has got to be settled and settled immediately. The government and the railways are parties to it and an immediate settlement must be brought about. In the meantime all the trains can come in and go out in accordance with the plan which I have indicated. Trains to the west will go out on the esplanade where the grades have been separated. The trains that have to go east will proceed by way of Parkdale and Davenport to North Toronto, which is the proper place for a great new station for the city.

Mr. CHURCH: What is to become of the harbour?

Mr. MACLEAN (York) The harbour will be improved by this scheme. There will be an open front and everybody will be able to get to it by overhead bridges. In the meantime the best route—the best route for handling passenger traffic; one that is convenient to the street car system and the radials, that shortens the distance in the mileage, and reduces the cost of operating the railways—is by way of north Toronto. The saving in mileage alone for passengers coming into Toronto from every quarter by making the station at North Toronto will be immense. Then there will be the saving to the railways by the avoidance of the grades to which I have referred, the worst grades in Canada. Those grades can be avoided by taking the traffic to the north. If the scheme I have outlined is carried out relief will be afforded to the city of Toronto almost immediately. The Minister of Railways knows about these facts, also the engineers of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railway. In a word what I suggest is this that the new station which is one of the finest in the country, be put into use immediately; that the trains going west go along the front where there is now a complete suppression of grades, and that all east bound trains, go round by way of Parkdale and North Toronto, where there are no level crossings to be overcome.

Mr. CHURCH: That will mean scrapping the viaduct order.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): No it will not. My proposition will improve the harbour by taking a great deal of traffic off the front. It will also improve property in that part of the city. But it gives a real service and real use to the new union station. It will afford a much better point of distribution for the passenger traffic, not only the people who live in Toronto, but those who come to that city, if they can enter the city from the north rather than the south. At North Toronto, Parkdale, or West Toronto Junction or Davenport, there could be a better distribution of the traffic immediately throughout the city than exists to-day, I say that the agreement must be carried out and the esplanade situation relieved. What I suggest should be done this summer and it could be done at an expenditure of less than half a million. It would furnish relief in the southern portion of the city and a better entrance to the city could be secured. All the traffic that now encumbers the waterfront can be taken away, the distance can be shortened and economies can be effected. Toronto would then have a new front. Toronto is no longer the city of the old days on the waterfront, but it is becoming a great and growing city to the north end and west, because one of its developments now is to the north. The development cannot be to the south. The harbour would be much improved, if the approach to it were improved by taking away all freight and passenger trains. I hope we will have a declaration from the minister, on behalf of the government, that not only are they prepared to carry out the agreement which the railways and people have made and to which the government is a party, but that they will undertake to afford immediate relief in the direction I mentioned, and if they do that they will have made a beginning in the settlement of the Toronto harbour problem. It will take years to build the viaduct, and it will involve millions of dollars in damages, how large the damage will be I do not know. I cannot say who will find the money. I make the prediction that the moment claims for damages come to be adjusted, the claims will run up into twenty, thirty or forty millions. Everybody is waiting for an opportunity to present a claim for damages, and they have a right to put them in. There is a real and immediate solution of the problem, without interfering in any way with the claims of the city for the carrying out of the agreement.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): I do not intend to delay the proceedings of the House because I realise that hon. members are anxious to get home. But this is an important subject and I want to impress upon the government the urgency of action, and the desirability of some statement on the part of the Minister of Railways in regard to the situation in Toronto. There has been a lot of talk in this matter, but no action. I do not think the solution proposed by my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) will at all meet the requirements of the situation. I am fairly conversant with the condition of things in Toronto and I know that there is a great volume of business at the south end of the city that cannot be disregarded because there is a great traffic on the waterfront, the one working in conjunction with the other. The hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) have fairly submitted the matter to the House. They are both ex-mayors of the city of Toronto, and therefore know all about the agreement, and what they have stated is the absolute fact; the city of Toronto has not been given the treatment to which it is entitled. I was an ordinary member of the city council in 1913, when the agreement went through between the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the city of Toronto, and a solemn undertaking was given to build the viaduct. The government, I think, should carry out the contract of the Grand Trunk since it has taken over the line. I desire to quote briefly from the Toronto Board of Trade News of March, 1921, with reference to this agreement:

> The Harbour Commission upon the execution of the viaduct agreement of July 29, 1913, revised their waterfront development plans of 1912—

I think it is well that parliament should know all the facts in connection with this case. If it did I am inclined to think that justice would be done in this matter.

> —and immediately proceeded to prepare in detail plans for the development of the inner harbour waterfront between Cherry and Bathurst streets, a distance of approximately two miles. As a result of the viaduct agreement it was decided to extend the pierhead or harbour head line, a maximum of some 1,100 feet in the vicinity of York street, and to proceed immediately with the dock development between Cherry and Bathurst streets; also to reclaim an additional 295 acres of property along the inner harbour waterfront, in addition to the reclamation of some one thousand acres of property known as the Eastern Harbour Terminals, which was prior to 1912 Ashbridge's Bay marsh.

It would not be easy to have access to that property if this railway were diverted to any other part of the city. The improvements were all brought about as a result of the proposed plans of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk and the Harbour Commission.

The commission have proceeded absolutely along these lines in accordance with their undertaking and they and the Dominion government have to date expended approximately $19,000,000 thereon, reclaiming in the inner harbour to date 60 acres of new land and constructed three miles of modern dockage, of which 27 acres of land is now under lease and option. In the eastern section 450 acres have been reclaimed and 4½ miles of dockage constructed and 250 acres are now under lease and option. New industrial plant and equipment in the newly developed sections have been erected by private capital to the amount of approximately $8,000,000.

We must have access to these properties.

The main entrance to the eastern harbour terminals is, as is well known, via Cherry street, at which point there are 16 tracks, on the level. The viaduct order provided for the elevation of these tracks, and it was with the expectation that this would be done that the harbour commission undertook the reclamation and improvement of the eastern harbour terminals. Our tenants are still confronted with the necessity of having to use this dangerous crossing and times without number are subjected to unreasonable delay by the blocking of the crossing by freight trains and switching movements. Furthermore, the district is subjected to an added premium as regards fire insurance on account of the Cherry street level crossing.

Of course, matters such as these are of no consequence to railway companies as they apparently are not interested in the development of the eastern or central harbour terminals, and, just so long as they can operate trains in and out of Toronto at grade, little consideration will be given to this matter. The inconvenience or delay caused citizens in general in the carrying out of their daily business pursuits is apparently of little consequence in so far as railway interests are concerned.

All of the above moneys have been expended by the harbour commission in perfectly good faith and the interest and sinking fund charges have to be paid thereon from the revenue derived as a result of the improvement, and, if these properties are to be subjected to temporary approaches plus the closing of one of the main arteries, viz., Bay street, then there will be ninety acres of property in the inner harbour waterfront, between Simcoe and Church streets, valued at over four million dollars, a large amount of which will remain idle for many years—Why? Because the railway companies refuse to carry out their portion of an agreement made between them, the city and harbour commission. The effect will be strangulation of inner harbour waterfront improvements.

The harbour commission and the city have repeatedly pressed for the commencement of the viaduct construction since 1913, mainly for the reason that the harbour commission were, as a result of the viaduct agreement, constructing and reclaiming property in the eastern harbour terminals and along the inner harbour waterfront; little consideration was given to these repeated requests for the reason that the railway companies were not suffering as a result of the delay.

Furthermore, as a condition of the agreement waterfront properties being improved were to be provided with proper access thereto, and I have no hesitancy in saying that the work would never have been proceeded with by the commissioners had it been anticipated for one moment that the agreement of 1913, solemnly executed by all parties, would not be carried to completion.

I need not read further. Hon. members will see that a solemn agreement was entered into between the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the city of Toronto. The city is prepared to carry out the agreement. In view of the long delay by the railway companies to do their part, I think the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) should tell members from Toronto what action he proposes to take.

Mr. CHURCH: Are you in favour of moving the viaduct up to Donlands?

Mr. SPENCE: I certainly am not.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) shall have leave to withdraw his motion?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I was waiting in the hope that the government would say or do something in connection with the matter. Apparently there is nothing to be said, nothing to be done. I am not going to take up the time of hon. members further than is necessary to place this question fairly and squarely before the House and the country.

The genesis of this matter is to be found in the order of the Railway Board of December 30, 1908—fifteen years ago. In granting the order the then Chief Commissioner, Mr. Justice Mabee said:

I am free to confess that when I embarked upon this inquiry I thought the erection of bridges the proper solution of the problem, but the more it is thought out, keeping steadily in view the permanent welfare of a large and rapidly developing city, I am driven to the belief that if bridges are erected this year, ten years hence would see them all torn down.

The railways were not content with this order and appealed to the Privy Council, which decided in favour of the city in 1911. In the same year, on the 1st August, an order was made by the Railway Board providing for the commencement of the work within two years. Again the railways were not satisfied. Their apeal to the Privy Council, of course, was on questions of law; they now took an appeal to the Governor in Council on the merits. When the appeal came on for hearing in 1913 the railways brought down a plan for a glorified viaduct, and the hearing was adjourned for the purpose of the city considering it. Subsequently the city accepted the railways' proposal and the appeal was not proceeded with.

As a result of the city's acceptance of the proposal, in the place of a viaduct costing $9,000,000, a viaduct, then estimated to cost almost double that sum, was to be erected. The agreement between the railway companies and the city embodying the railways' new proposal was submitted to the Railway Board and aproved under its order of July 31, 1913. One would have thought the matter had been absolutely settled;—settled in the first instance by the order of the board; settled in the next instance by the judgment of the Privy Council; settled in the third instance by the railways themselves when the newer and enlarged programme was agreed to by the city; settled finally by the Railway Board when it put its imprimatur upon the agreement on July 31, 1913. As I recollect, the work was to be commenced within two years. Then the war came on.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church), the part of the work to be done in connection with the new and glorified structure proposed by the railways necessitated very large expenditures by the harbour commissioners of the city. On the faith and strength of that agreement the work has been done, and scores of millions of dollars have been spent.

Mr. VIEN: Is it finished?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why, it is not started.

Mr. VIEN: I am referring to the part of the work that was to be done by the harbour commissioners.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Every single bit of the work which is necessary for the building of the viaduct and which was to be done by the harbour commissioners has been completed, and we are out the interest on the capital expenditure all these years.

There is something further. As a result of this glorified programme we have had to do other work, part of which is governmental and part municipal. The government entered into an arrangement for the doing of their part of the work and a good deal of it has been constructed, such as the cribbing and the breakwaters, but it is not yet finished. I just want to point out, as showing how this matter has been neglected, that under the former administration we gave as much money as could be given for the purpose of getting this work done where it was most needed. The essential breakwaters were put up; the votes were $1,000,000 to $2,000,00 or $3,000,000 a year to that end. The work that was left to be done was largely the bridging of the approaches. That work has not been done, and the city has been trying in vain for the last two years to get these bridges built. I venture to say there is not a single public artificial highway anywhere else in Canada for which the government is responsible in connection with which the government has not constructed the necessary bridges. We have the artificial highway at the eastern gap, and on the other side there is a park largely used by the labouring people of Toronto, a park that was to have been connected up by this bridge over the artificial channel made by the government of Canada.

Not only is it a part of our common responsibility to do this work, but arrangements were made for it years ago; yet we can get nothing, not even a statement from the minister one way or the other. This is not merely a Toronto matter; it is not a municipal squabble. Even if it were, the fact that the municipality has spent millions based upon its faith in the honour of this country is surely sufficient. But it is much more than that; it is something that the whole hinterland of Ontario is interested in. Think of the spectacle we have to-day: a splendid station building that cannot be used; the placing of lives more or less in jeopardy every day through the use of a station that is obsolete. Why can the government not say something? What do they want us to do? Do they want us to understand that solid agreements mean nothing, amount to nothing? When is the agreement to be carried out so far as that bridge is concerned? Two bridges are called for, one over each of the artificial channels.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is the western channel finished?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Dredging is still going on there, but it is government work; the city part of it has been finished. So it is with the eastern channel—there is no difficulty about putting a bridge over the eastern channel to-day, but we can get nothing at all, one way or the other. Are we to understand that agreements mean nothing?—that unless some particular political influence is exercised no action is to be taken? I would have thought the matter was so clear that we would have without the slightest delay a statement from the government. Millions have been spent; nothing has been done. If we cannot get anything else, perhaps we could get a statement as to how much longer the government thinks nothing should be done, no relief should be given.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to hear my hon. friend scold so; he is generally good-natured. If the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) during all the years that he was head of the Board of Railway Commissioners had waited on Sir Henry Drayton and talked it over with him, we might have made some progress, because subsequent to 1913, the year of which he speaks, he was either head of the railway board or Minister of Finance. But he does not seem to have waited on that gentleman at all when he had all the authority. I am surprised, to use his own language, that he did not say anything. How much longer did he want Toronto to wait?

Mr. SPENCE: It was war time.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not after 1918.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon. friend permit a question? How many millions did we spend in that time for the purpose of implementing that contract?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know how many millions the then government spent in implementing the contract. I do know that all the money that was spent was in the erection of a station and the post office in connection with it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, no.

Mr. GRAHAM: The station was erected, I believe, by the Toronto Terminals Company through the sale of bonds, the shareholders of that company being the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I am not going to reply to my hon. friend in kind, but I think it is fair to point out that his great anxiety about the completion of this viaduct, seems to have possessed him only since the latter part of 1921. Previous to that time he had the power as a member of the government to do all the things he is asking this government to do, or very many of them. He had the power as Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners to insist that the agreement made in 1913 should be carried out, but it was not carried out and has not been up to this day. I am just saying that by way of supplementing my further remarks.

The problem is a difficult one. My hon. friend found it so when he was Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, otherwise he would have had the viaduct completed ere this; and he found it so when he was Finance Minister. The agreement having been made in 1913, there was every reason in the world for not proceeding with the work up to 1918, but there was no reason why it should not have been proceeded with following the close of the war; the necessity then was just as great as it is to-day. I agree with everything that has been said as to the situation in Toronto, except that I think one point has been exaggerated by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), who said that all the passengers had to cross the tracks when they got on and off the trains at Toronto. Well, if they wish to walk upstairs they do not have to cross so many tracks. I know it is not so convenient, but there is a way to go upstairs and go out to the upper level to Front street. Of course I, like all the rest, insist on going out on the lower level because it is more convenient, hence I have to cross some tracks. But the situation is far from ideal and I agree with everything that has been said with regard to it. The situation in Toronto is just the same now as it has always been so far as the Grand Trunk Company is concerned. The Terminal Company consisted of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the contract was made with the two railways.

Mr. MURPHY: And the city of Toronto.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, and the city of Toronto. The contract was made in 1913 and my hon. friend has correctly given the history of it. But the government to-day, as the only shareholder of the Grand Trunk, stands in identically the same position as that in which the shareholders of the Grand Trunk stood when that agreement was made. I think my hon. friends would not urge that the government should proceed to take from the Toronto Terminal Company, the Canadian National Railway Board or the Canadian Pacific Railway management their authority to proceed with the construction of the viaduct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not my hon. friend know that the whole reason for the delay was that the Grand Trunk could not finance their share?

Mr. GRAHAM: That was the excuse and possibly the reason.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not my hon. friend know it?

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not say—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does not my hon. friend know this further that his own directors have said that it is entirely that question, entirely a question for the government to say whether they will finance it?

Mr. GRAHAM: In a measure my hon. friend may be correct. To come back to the question, my hon. friend's suggestion and that of the other hon. gentleman is that the government without the recommendation of the Canadian National Railway Board should proceed to put a vote in the estimates to complete this work whether the board want it or not. I say that whatever negotiations are carried on and whatever arrangements are come to should be arrived at as between the companies. Following that, it is true that if any work is to be done the parliament of Canada would have to pass a vote for the purpose, but for parliament to pass the vote before something was decided upon as between the city of Toronto and the companies, and I understand that negotiations are going on continually, would be the wrong way of going about it. But I do not want to continue the discussion. My hon. friend from South York has taken a different view. I do not know whether he wants to take the tracks up to the Donlands or not, but there is something in his view that the whole trackage should be removed from the waterfront and an entrance made farther north. It is said that in a multitude of counsel there is wisdom, but when the counsel is so conflicting I do not know that I can get much wisdom out of it.

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): I want my hon. friend to understand that I did not for one moment abandon the rights of the city of Toronto to the construction of the viaduct.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not sure that my hon. friend if he adheres to the viaduct, could make out a good case for the removal of the tracks from the waterfront because that is the purpose of the viaduct. If the tracks were removed to the north the viaduct would not be required. This is a very large question and I agree absolutely that it does not alone interest the city of Toronto, it interests all the travelling public passing in and out of this great centre of the province of Ontario, which is the city of Toronto. The traffic originating in and around Toronto and in the province of Ontario is I presume the largest traffic of any province of the Dominion for the Canadian National Railways, and I am in hopes that before very long something will be arrived at of a definite nature between the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National and the city of Toronto so that the situation may be alleviated. Generally speaking at the present moment the work would not be a productive expenditure, but the traffic is increasing so rapidly in that particular centre that there should be a method of handling that great traffic that would save annual expenditure, and in that way be productive, because the traffic particularly, is handled at risk of life and the expense of handling traffic must be greater than it would be in a well conducted terminal. We have a station there costing I think my hon. friend said $9,000,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The station was $4,000,000. The original viaduct was to be $9,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Up to the present time, I am told, the station has cost $6,000,000, and in addition to that the government contributed some $2,000,000 for a postal station.

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask a question? The position taken by the city is that they want the contract carried out. They want the viaduct, the whole viaduct and nothing but the viaduct and that they will not consent to the new station being opened until they get the viaduct. Could the minister tell the House whether his law officers advise that the government is a party to the contract as standing in the shoes of the Grand Trunk Railway the party of the second part in the contract?—and being such a party the contract can be enforced by specific performance and the government taken into the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is always a difficulty in suing a government. In the first place if we say that the government becomes a party to the contract in place of the Grand Trunk, suit could not be entered against the government except by consent, that is by fiat, and that sometimes is not so easy to get. The better way is to have this thing straightened out amicably if possible, rather than by reference to the Exchequer Court. My hon. friend has asked me a question. I say that the situation so far as responsibility is concerned is not changed one iota by the transfer of the Grand Trunk stock. The Grand Trunk as a corporation is part of the Canadian National Railways, and the Canadian National assumes the responsibility formerly assumed by the Grand Trunk. There is therefore no change in the relationship of the Grand Trunk although the government is the shareholder.

As my hon. friends can understand, it is difficult to give a definite statement. I hope that when the president of the Canadian National returns from the West and the president of the Canadian Pacific from across the sea they will get together with the city of Toronto at close range and discuss this matter with the hope of coming to some amicable arrangement by which the situation in Toronto can be relieved.

My hon. friend from Quebec county (Mr. Lavigueur) made an eloquent plea this morning for the city of Quebec. I do not wish to go into details, but to express the view that I have great sympathy with him when he said that the original plans for the terminals at the city of Quebec were far superior to the ones later adopted.

Mr. HAROLD PUTNAM (Colchester): The advocacy of the hon. members from Toronto in the interests of their city reminds me of a duty, that I should bring to the attention of the Minister of Railways the fact that on lesser scale but in serious measure we have a corresponding situation in the town of Truro, the chief town of the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I shall be thankful if I am not told to go to the Railway Board, and if I go to it I shall be thankful if I am not sent back to the Minister of Railways; and I am speaking partly from surmise and partly from experience. Tennyson in his "Vision of Sin" describes a voice that came from a clear sky and in very clear tones but in language that no man could understand, and I am a little afraid of that mystery when I press for the rights of the town of Truro corresponding with the rights for which the hon. members for Toronto are pressing. Some who love that town regard it as a miniature of Toronto, with streets and physical characteristics resembling Toronto's, with the instincts and temperament of its people resembling those of the people of Toronto, and that to some extent would constitute a compliment in the opinions of some hon. members. On the other hand, by pointing out the resemblance, I run the risk of keeping away from Truro some of my good friends elsewhere in this parliament. The town of Truro has a population of about eight thousand, and it has those deadly level crossings in a very important and central part of the town. One of the hon. members for Toronto put forth the fact that the holiday seekers in his city were compelled to cross the tracks there to get to a picnic resort, which I appreciate not as a luxury but as a necessity. But a still greater necessity obtains in my own town because hundreds of the homes are so situated that little children have to cross some half dozen pairs of rails to get to school, and during the hours of their absence you can well imagine that the hearts of their mothers are suffering very unfair and very real anxiety.

The traffic is such that a subway is very urgently needed. The freight shed, wisely or unwisely, was put upon the side of the rails whereby it is necessary to haul the freight over these tracks. In the winter-time the snow is often missing from the tracks, and besides the inhumanity to the horses engaged in hauling the freight there is considerable loss in time, worry, wear and tear connected with the hauling, to use language which is mild in the very extreme, and to say nothing of multiplied danger in this freight traffic. This matter has been agitated for some time. Now and then a life is snuffed out on these rails just as is the case in Toronto. I do not think there is any fear that a great catastrophe will happen in the sense of a number of lives being lost by any one happening. I think that happening is just about as remote in the modern town where I live as in the great city of Toronto, or vice versa; but, Mr. Speaker, there is that continual danger present to individuals, and there is the periodical loss of life, the importance of which of course we cannot exaggerate. At a country crossing, where a driver is passing with a team of horses or automobile, we can with some fairness say that it is up to him to exercise due vigilance and allow nothing to distract his attention with some possible reverence we may say that an accident would be the driver's fault. But the matter is entirely different in a city like Toronto, or even in a town like Truro. In the case of persons coming home hurriedly, chatting in groups or wearied with the exertions of the day, it may be found that temporarily the human machinery has broken down and the necessary precautions may not be observed. There may be a lapse of memory due to causes that cannot be exactly analyzed. As lives have been sacrificed in Toronto and Truro at these level crossings in the past just as surely will such losses occur in the future. If the question of expenditure is involved in providing protection, the conditions are in favour of more prompt action in Truro than in Toronto, because in Truro it is not a matter of the expenditure of millions or even of hundreds of thousands to place a subway there which will serve the public. I commend this matter to the minister as being an entirely worthy and necessary object. I only regret having taken up even this much time of the House when I know there is a general desire that parliament should arrive at a close.

Mr. CHURCH: Might I ask the minister whether he could not arrange to be present at the proposed conference in Toronto on the matters we discussed this morning?

Mr. GRAHAM: All that I can say is that I will try to be present.

QUESTIONS UNANSWERED:

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): I wish to draw attention to the unanswered questions on the order paper. It is supposed that the House will prorogue at a very early date, and unless the answers to these questions come down very soon the session will terminate without the answers being given. The question that stands in my name, number 3, has been on the order paper for a number of days. There is nothing abstruse in what I am asking, and the answer would not require to be at all long. Furthermore, I am satisfied that the Minister of Railways is anxious to give me this information; I do not think he would wish me to return to my home without receiving an adequate reply. I cannot help thinking that if the minister would instruct his department to bring these answers to the House the matter might be expedited and the necessary information given to me.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will have the matter looked into. Of course, one reason why questions relating to the railways cannot be answered promptly is, that much of the information asked for is not in the possession of the department at all, and we have to send perhaps to Halifax, or to Moncton, or as far west as Edmonton, for it. However that is not the fact in this case. I will draw the attention of the department to the matter and ask them to expedite the answering of these questions. I want to give my hon. friend the information as soon as possible.

Mr. MacLAREN: I feel that is the case. However, I should like to point out that the third question is a matter entirely within the knowledge of the government, and will not require any reference to the railway board. In that case there is no ground for delay such as was referred to by the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM: I might answer that question. So far as the giving to the government by the National Railway management of any assurance that unrouted shipments will be transmitted only through Canadian ports my answer to that would be "Up to the present, No."

Motion (Mr. Fielding) withdrawn.

HALIBUT FISHERY

APPROVAL OF TREATY WITH THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask permission, Mr. Speaker, to return to government notices of motion in order to take up the resolution which appears in my name with respect to the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery treaty?

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

> Resolved by the..... House of Commons:—That it is expedient that Parliament do approve of the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific ocean, which was signed at Washington on the second day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, a copy of which has been laid before parliament, and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that this House do approve of the same.

He said: On March 6th, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) laid on the Table of the House a copy of a treaty between His Majesty the King and the United States with respect to the preservation of the halibut fishery on the Pacific coast. This treaty was signed on March 2nd, at Washington by plenipotentiaries representing the parties thereto. The purpose of the present resolution is to obtain from parliament approval of the provisions of the treaty. The treaty provides for a close season for halibut in the waters contiguous to the Pacific coast in the United States and in Canada. The period of the close season is three months, from November to February, to be observed over a period of five years. Either party may be at liberty, on two years' notice, to terminate the convention at any time after the five years has expired.

There is another provision in the treaty to the effect that halibut caught in those waters during the time that the convention obtains may be used for the purposes of food by the crews of vessels, fishing for other kinds of fish. If any quantity should be caught, the treaty provides that after being brought to the shore, they shall be transferred at once to officers of the Marine department of either Canada or the United States, and disposed of by those officers at such price as they may be able to obtain. The purpose of this provision is to do away with any element of profit in the catch of halibut and thereby remove all incentive to fishing for halibut during the close season.

The treaty contains a further provision for the establishment of an International Fisheries Commission to study the life history of the halibut, and to make recommendations to the governments of the two countries with respect to measures that may be required by way of the better preservation of this important natural resource. The treaty contains a clause to the effect that the governments of the two countries shall introduce legislation to make effective its provisions.

I may say that the treaty has already been assented to by the Senate of the United States, so assented to on March 4 of this year and recommended for ratification by that body, subject to a reservation which appears in the resolution assenting to the treaty. I shall read to the House the resolution itself:

> Resolved (two-thirds of the senators present concurring therein) that the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive D, sixty-seventh congress, fourth session, convention between the United States and Great Brtiain, signed March 2, 1923, for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean, including the Behring sea, subject to the understanding, which is hereby made a part of this resolution of ratification, that none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of any other part of Great Britain shall engage in halibut fishing, contrary to any of the provisions of this treaty.

In so far as we have learned the circumstances, it would appear that the "understanding" was added at the last moment, the treaty receiving the Senate's assent only on the last day of the recent session of congress. Apparently the reservation was thought necessary because of a fear expressed by a senator from one of the western states that while the citizens and vessels of Canada would be controlled ships coming from Great Britain not being included in this prohibition, their owners might feel free to fish for halibut in these waters. However, what was overlooked in that regard was the fact that legislation which will be introduced by both the government of the United States and the government of Canada to prohibit fishing during the period of the close season will provide that not only shall the nationals of the countries concerned not have the right to fish in the prohibited area but that the citizens of every country shall be prohibited from operating from a Canadian or an American base or from attempting anything by way of halibut fishing in those waters. If they are unable to find a base on the Pacific coast, either in the United States or in Canada, it is hardly likely that the citizens of any country would be able to carry on fishing operations in northern Pacific waters.

The legislation which will be introduced by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give effect to the provisions of this treaty will render it immediately apparent to the members of the United States Senate that the reservation they have attached as a condition to ratification is wholly unnecessary. We feel satisfied that under these circumstances the reservation will be withdrawn and the treaty assented to and ratified as it stood at the time it was signed.

I may disclose to the House evidence of the apparent haste in which the reservation was prepared by drawing attention to the wording. It reads as follows:

> That none of the nationals and inhabitants and vessels and boats of any other part of Great Britain shall engage in halibut fishing contrary to any of the provisions of this treaty.

If the expression "any other part of the British Empire" had been used, it would not have been open to exception. However, the intention is perfectly plain, namely, that of preventing the citizens of any other part of the British Empire from availing themselves of fishing rights which will be denied the citizens of Canada by the terms of the treaty. We hold that the intention has always been that the prohibition should extend beyond the citizens of Canada or the British Empire to apply to citizens of any country in any part of the world. Such will be the effect as soon as the contemplated concurrent legislation is passed.

I need only add in conclusion that, as will be apparent from the reading of the treaty, its provisions relate wholly to matters which, to all intents and purposes, are of exclusive concern to the United States and Canada. The two countries might effect without a treaty, by concurrent legislation as is intended, practically all that is proposed here. Inasmuch, however, as it was thought advisable to have on record the understanding of the governments in this matter, the governments of our respective countries decided to have their commitments given the form of a treaty. I believe the terms proposed are so manifestly in the interests of the country that parliament will readily give its approval to the treaty.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): The motion, I understand, is a motion adopting the resolution which appears on page 5. I wish at this stage to make a very few comments on the general question, and will reserve more detailed treatment perhaps—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member will allow me, it is by a clerical error that this matter has been placed on the order paper as one to be considered in committee of the whole. It is a simple resolution presented to the House; so that if the right hon. member has any remarks to make, he should make them now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood there was an error in the order paper. I desire first of all to read the resolution, which says:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific ocean, which was signed at Washington on the second day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, a copy of which has been laid before parliament, and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that this House do approve of the same.

I am not discussing at the moment anything connected with the matter of the treaty, but rather certain extraordinary circumstances that attended the preparations for and the execution thereof. These circumstances are called attention to by the wording of the resolution itself. Hon. members will observe that the resolution declares that the treaty was signed "on behalf of His Majesty the King acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that this House do approve of the same." I think the records of parliament will be searched in vain for any previous reference to His Majesty the King executing a treaty "acting for" Canada by the plenipotentiary. If it is merely a misplacement of the phrase, and if the words "acting for Canada" should appear after the word "plenipotentiary"—and I really do not know why they are not there, in a resolution of such importance as this—the effect is that the plenipotentiary in the execution of the treaty acted for His Majesty the King as a representative of Canada. His Majesty the King did not for Canada. The authority given the representative of His Majesty in the document on which he bases his right to sign clearly states:

Hon. Ernest Lapointe, one of our counsel, learned in the law, member of the parliament of Canada, member of our Privy Council for Canada, Minister of Marine and Fisheries of our Dominion of Canada, have named, made, constituted and appointed, as we do by these presents name, make, constitute and appoint him our undoubted commissioner, procurator and plenipotentiary, giving to him all manner of power and authority to treat, adjust and conclude with such minister or ministers as may be vested with similar power and authority on the part of our good friends the United States of America.

The treaty undoubtedly affects chiefly the Dominion of Canada and the United States; it is an exaggeration to say that it affects solely the Dominion of Canada and the United States. Our treaty with France respecting the tariff was a treaty which affected solely the Dominion of Canada and France; there were no others directly or indirectly bound thereby, and no others affected by the treaty as such. But here the case is different. Had it been a case where we alone had been affected it is nevertheless true, and in my judgment it is important to observe that anyone named by Canada and given his credentials by His Majesty the King executes that treaty as a representative of His Majesty the King—but in respect of Canada. I observe by the correspondence that the government attempted in the first place to make the treaty without so far as the title is concerned the interposition of His Majesty at all. The treaty as submitted by the United States of America was styled in the following language:

Convention between the United States of America and Great Britain concerning halibut fishery.

In the communication from the present government to the United States, and as well in that to the British government, it was insisted that the words "Great Britain" should be changed and the words "Dominion of Canada" substituted, although every previous treaty had been made between the United States, if that was the country, and His Majesty, the King. The error of this step on the part of the present government was pointed out and they yielded the point.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think my right hon. friend wishes to misrepresent the facts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Nor have I done so.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is he referring now to the nominal heading affixed to the convention, which nominal heading was drafted by the United States government, or is he referring to what is vital and material, namely, the sections of the treaty that refer to matters executive?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am referring to precisely what I said. In the title of the treaty submitted by the United States government in the first place the heading was:

Convention between the United States of America and Great Britain concerning the halibut fishery.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Which is the meaningless part of the treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister says that this is of no importance; but at the time he considered it sufficiently important to have his government address a message to the British Ambassador at Washington, for transmission, of course, in which the government took the stand that the words "Dominion of Canada" should be substituted for "Great Britain" in the heading. The government should have known, and I think it did know, that all treaties are made between His Majesty and whatever other country is affected thereby. Pursuing the matter, and on request that credentials be given and full authority be accorded, as was quite proper, to the representative of Canada to sign the treaty on behalf of His Majesty, this authority was immediately given; and then the notification came, no doubt in the usual way, from the British Ambassador, that the terms of the treaty being agreed to on the part of the United States and Canada he was given authority to sign and was prepared to sign along with Hon. Ernest Lapointe, who had been endowed with full authority from His Majesty. This, however, appeared to affront the dignity of the government or of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) and objection was immediately taken to that hon. gentleman having anyone else sign the treaty along with him. I note, with some regret the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) from the House during this discussion. The Minister of Finance, associated with the Minister of Marine, had previously negotiated without any great success, a treaty with France, and in the execution of that treaty and in the arrangements looking to its completion they had associated with them the British Ambassador to France, as in the case of Italy, the British Foreign Minister. When the terms of that treaty were under discussion I referred to this feature of the matter and the Minister of Finance very frankly stated that he approved of the association of the British Ambassador in British treaties and of his signature thereto whether those treaties affected a single dominion or affected the Empire as a whole; and he acknowledged the great assistance given by the British Ambassador in connection with the treaty. But when it comes to this Halibut Treaty the Minister of Marine and Fisheries declines to have the British Ambassador associated with him, and in this attitude he is supported by the government. He wants the signature of the Hon. Ernest Lapointe to stand alone as executory to that treaty; and representations to this effect were made persistently both to the British Ambassador and overseas until a message was despatched by the present Secretary of State for the Colonies to this government—after very many messages had been sent across from Canada, all representing that the greatest speed was necessary and that the treaty should be signed without delay—a message, I say, was finally despatched by the Secretary of State for the Colonies in certain terms which I shall now look up. I am now turning over a multitude of pressing epistles from the present government urging the point and asking for a hurried decision. Then I come to the message to which I have referred, dated the first of March, 1923.

> With reference to your telegram of February 28 regarding the Halibut Treaty the wishes of your ministers are being telegraphed to his Majesty's Ambassador at Washington by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Not desiring to continue a somewhat undignified controversy with the Canadian government as to preserving the historic form of execution of treaties and at the same time loath to proclaim that hereafter there shall be no unity of action at all in so far as foreign policy and foreign treaties are concerned the Secretary of State for the Colonies, acting for the British government, stated merely that the British government had telegraphed the wishes of the Canadian government to the British Ambassador at Washington; whereupon the hurry of the previous weeks was consummated, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries hied himself to Washington and had the exceeding and unprecedented honour of executing this treaty alone without being impinged upon in that glory by the presence of the signature of the British Ambassador. The British Ambassadors, as do the ambassadors of all countries, in keeping with historic custom, necessarily take a special part in the negotiations for and the execution of treaties with the countries to which they are accredited, and never has any exception been asked for, never has any exception been made until we come to this occasion of the execution of the Halibut Treaty. I wonder how much better off we are. Is our autonomy in the smallest degree enlarged? Does anyone understand just how we are advantaged by the supreme glory of having the Minister of Marine and Fisheries execute this treaty alone, having, figuratively speaking, kicked the British Ambassador out of the door in the execution of a treaty with a foreign power?

All the while the reasons given by the government in the negotiations were to the effect that Canada alone was interested, that the treaty was one which solely concerned this Dominion and no other part of the Empire. And no sooner was the treaty executed than there was the addition of a clause by the Senate of the United States bringing in the subjects of the whole Empire and although there was a fearful hurry up to the 1st March, the very stars in their courses were going—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend uses the expression that the reservation of the Senate brought in all the subjects of the British Empire. The words in the Senate reservation are, "every part of Great Britain." Does he say that this expression includes all other parts of the Empire?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly that is the intent of the Senate. Does anyone think that the Senate intends their reservation to apply to the residents of the British Isles alone, and not to the subjects of the Empire generally, as all other treaties have applied before? But the point is not of any importance to my argument anyway. The fact is that the reservation of the Senate brings in some other parts of the Empire. That is enough for my point at present. Although there was all this precipitate hurry up to the 1st March, we have since gone through nearly four months before any desire is evinced to bring forward the treaty for ratification. There has been no treaty in operation yet. I suppose the reason for the delay is because the Senate reservation completely destroyed the pedestal upon which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries wished to stand. Now we are asked to ratify the treaty. We are going to prorogue this week, and we are asked to ratify the treaty and accept the devout hope expressed by the Prime Minister that the Senate will yet retrace its steps and not make any special reservation applicable to other parts of the Empire. It would have been well, I think, if the grounds of this hope had been given. I do not think that intrinsically the matter is of such colossal consequence.

I do wonder what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries thought was going to be gained by this act with reference to signature by the British Ambassador which, if you do not call it discourteous, so nearly approaches discourtesy that the term applies as well as any other that can be thought of. Quite clearly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) holds a distinctly different view, as do other members of the government. What is the intention? Is this treatment to continue to be accorded the British Ambassador? Are these petitions to the door of the British government to be made in respect of future treaties? Canada has for years been not only engaged in but in charge of all negotiations concerning the terms of any treaty in which she is specially or solely interested. All that is ever done by the British Ambassador, I presume, is to see that any proposed treaty contains no terms that affect such general policy as all parts of the Empire are interested in. This being conceded as having been the practice for years, what more do we want? Why should we continue this process of offering one affront after the other in order, if possible, to magnify and emphasize before the world our desire to dissociate ourselves from the Empire in general?

We are in something of a quandary now. We are legislating, according to this bill, against Canadian fishing even on the high seas, as to which, as it involves extra-territorial jurisdiction, we have no legislative power at all. Let me repeat: As to which, being extra-territorial, we have as yet—though I think we should have, as respects our own citizens—no authority at all. We are legislating as well that no other subjects of the British Empire shall operate there, or if they do, they cannot use our ports. In effect, we are trying now to meet the American reservation by denying indirectly the right of any British subjects to carry on these fisheries in the close season in our own as well as in extra-territorial waters.

Now, I do not deny that the objects of the treaty can only be met by making it applicable to all British subjects. Undoubtedly from the beginning Great Britain should have been associated with us, so that we would be in a position to defend our course of legislating to the best of our power to make the treaty so universally applicable. As the reservation stands, the execution of the treaty by His Majesty will bind British subjects. Is it the intention that the Australian parliament shall ratify the treaty?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know what the idea of the government is in this regard. As far as this feature is concerned, I am not making any particular criticism. My criticism is directed against the unnecessary and, to my mind, indelicate action by this government with relation to the historic form of executing treaties in which this country is chiefly interested.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is in order for me to give a resumé of what preceded the negotiations which led up to the signature of this treaty. We have on the Pacific coast of this continent the greatest halibut fishery in the world, though it has been considerably diminished through over-fishing. The fishery started in 1888, and the industry has made wonderful progress in the interval, halibut being the best fish we have for shipping in fresh condition.

In 1913 or 1914 it was discovered that vast numbers of halibut go to the banks of Alaska during the winter time, and following that discovery winter fishing started on a considerable scale. To take halibut at that season of the year is especially destructive as the fish are then in a spawning condition, and from the reproduction standpoint their capture should not be allowed. Furthermore, the flesh is then in bad condition. This winter fishery is carried on at the worst season of the year, and it is then that all the accidents to the vessels occur. In addition to that, on account of the very rough weather then prevailing, the vessels engaged lose about fifty per cent of their equipment. And when it is borne in mind that the lines of every big vessel run to a length of forty-eight miles, with hooks at every ten feet, it will be realized what a heavy loss this entails, as also a loss of fish, because halibut at that time bite with avidity, and the dead fish pollute the fishing grounds.

The fisheries yield about fifty million pounds each year, of which about nine million pounds are taken by Canadian vessels, the greater proportion being taken by American vessels. But owing to the greater proximity of the Canadian coasts, seventy per cent of the fish caught by American vessels is shipped by the Canadian railways. So it is very important from many viewpoints that this halibut fishery should be protected.

In 1918 an international commission was appointed by the United States and Canada to study the condition of the fishery. At that time many special war measures were in effect in both countries, and as one of these the commission recommended the adoption of two treaties, one concerning the Fraser river run of salmon, and the other, among other things, this close season for the protection of the halibut fisheries. The first treaty was negotiated, was signed, but was not ratified by the Senate of the United States; the second treaty was drafted but was never signed. Meanwhile the fisheries authorities of both countries, though they were not in accord on some other points, were in agreement on this question of the necessity of a close season for the protection of halibut on the Pacific coast, and the suggestion was made that a special treaty be negotiated and signed to provide for that close season, quite independently of the other recommendations of the international commission. The United States government approached the government of Canada in the matter of the negotiation of that treaty; in fact, they drafted a treaty and sent it to Canada for the consideration of this government. This treaty, after the making of a few modifications, was signed, and it is the treaty which is now submitted for the approval of the House. As I have stated, it was drafted by our friends of the United States, not by us. Then, as my right hon. leader said, when the treaty came before the United States senate, a reservation was added that it should apply to the nationals of any part of the British Empire. The treaty was signed three days before the end of the term of congress; in fact, the term of congress expired the following Sunday—its last legislation was adopted on Sunday morning. The treaty was submitted in a great hurry and it is more than likely that this little rider, added at the last minute, was not given the consideration which would have been given it had the treaty been submitted at an early stage of the session.

We do not wish, after considering everything, to accept this reservation, for obvious reasons; though by the legislation which will be enacted the same purpose will be served, the same end will be reached. The legislation which both countries will adopt will make it impossible for the nationals of any country to carry on fishing operations in the waters covered by the treaty. In the first place, there is no discussion possible as to our right to prohibit halibut fishing in the territorial waters within the three mile limit; that will apply to the world. We have not the right or the power to prevent anybody from fishing in the extra-territorial waters, but it is physically impossible for any vessel to carry on halibut fishing operations in Pacific waters without using as a base either American ports or Canadian ports. So that the mere closing of our ports and the closing of American ports to fishing vessels during the close season will make it impossible for any national, the citizen of any country, to carry on fishing operations there.

Then, I may be asked, why should the reservation not be accepted? If we were to accept it we would have to submit the treaty for ratification to all the parliaments of the British Empire. We cannot bind the Australians or the New Zealanders not to fish in extra-territorial waters off our coast any more than we can bind the citizens of any foreign country not to do so; the only way that we can prevent it is by closing our ports, and this we will do. In the second place, it would be a discrimination against British subjects, against the citizens of Australia or New Zealand. But if it were possible to carry on fishing operations there we should exclude them and the citizens of Japan for instance—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the minister goes further, if he will permit me: Will he not admit that if the treaty were ratified by the British government then it would be binding in the way desired by the reservation?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he will look at section 132 of the British North America Act I think he will see that it would.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We do not want to do that. This treaty was asked for by the United States, the object being to prevent the nationals of Canada and of the United States from carrying on fishing operations during certain seasons. We accepted the treaty suggested by our friends of the United States and we are still prepared to abide by that decision. We do not want to apply the treaty to Australia, to New Zealand, to South America or even to the United Kingdom. It is a Canadian concern; we want this treaty to bind and affect Canada. As I was saying a few moments ago, if it were possible to carry on operations in those Pacific waters without the use of our ports or of United States ports, the Japanese would be far more likely to carry on fishing operations there than any citizen of the British Empire. The provision which we are going to enact and which will also be enacted by the United States will apply not merely to the citizens of the British Empire, but to the whole world. We have submitted the treaty for approval because we have reasonable expectation that the Senate of the United States will withdraw that reservation at the next session of congress. Moreover, with the legislation which we are going to enact and which will be put in force by the Governor in Council, it will be possible to reach the same end if the United States enact the same legislation, quite independently of the treaty.

Now, to come to the criticism of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). He started by commenting on the wording of the resolution submitted by the right hon. Prime Minister, laying great emphasis on that part of it which reads:

> —and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that this House do approve of the same.

My right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen), as usual, issued a sort of challenge. I said to him once that he was strong on mistaking assertions for arguments. He issued a sort of challenge that we would in vain search the records of parliament to find such a wording. Well, Mr. Speaker, this resolution was copied word for word from a resolution introduced into the House of Commons of Canada on October 20, 1919, by the government of which my right hon. friend was a member. That resolution was introduced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who was at that time Hon. Mr. Rowell, and it read as follows:

> That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the Convention between His Majesty and the United States of America, providing effective measures for the protection, preservation and propagation of the salmon fisheries of the Fraser River system, which was signed at Washington on the second day of September, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, a copy of which has been laid before parliament, and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting the Canada, by the plenipotentiaries therein named, and that this House do approve of the same.

Of course what was legal, what was good, what was right, what was constitutional in the time of my right hon. friend becomes a crime when those miserable Liberals do the same thing.

Mr. JACOBS: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman to say that there is a difference between the two, one dealt with salmon and the other with halibut.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I congratulate the hon. gentleman on getting something to the point. I take full responsibility. I had no part in it, but I had full constitutional responsibility for it. I do not think it is worded rightly, though.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My right hon. friend seems to think that many things that were done during his time were not right. He has to take the responsibility, but he did not tell us at the time that they were wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I had not charge of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Precedents have a great deal to do with the British constitutional system. We thought that by following the precedent created by my hon. friend's friends we were doing the right thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You usually are.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I think we will be more careful in the future in following in the footsteps of my right hon. friend.

Now I come to the famous signature to the treaty, which has been the subject of so many comments. First let me say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a great misapprehension, a great error on the part of a section of the press when it stated that the mode of signing the treaty had anything to do with the reservation that was added to it. The terms of the treaty would have the same meaning, the same effect, the same result whoever were the signatories to the treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never suggested anything else in the world.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not speak of my right hon. friend now, but of the press; I mentioned that. The member of the Canadian government who signed the treaty for His Majesty the King had full authority to act in that capacity, and another signature would have added nothing nor taken away anything from the merit or demerit of that agreement. This question of the protection of our fisheries was a purely Canadian question, purely a domestic question, and the government of Canada took the position that one of its members should represent His Majesty in the negotiating and signing of this treaty. Is that a crime? If it is a crime I confess that I am an unrepentant sinner. Our action in this regard is in line with the logical and natural sequence of the principles which have been asserted and accepted by all responsible authorities in the British Empire for the past few years. Nowhere, perhaps, are those principles more clearly asserted than in the memorandum circulated on behalf of the Dominion prime ministers in March, 1919, which I take from the British Year Book of International law for 1922-1923, page 32. The Canadian Prime Minister and the prime ministers of all the Dominions subscribed to that memorandum. Here is the language of that memorandum:

> All the treaties and conventions resulting from the Peace Conference should be so drafted as to enable the Dominions to become parties and signatories thereto. This procedure will give suitable recognition to the part played at the Peace Table by the British Commonwealth as a whole, and will, at the same time, record the status attained there by the Dominions. The procedure is in consonance with the principles of constitutional government that obtain throughout the Empire. The Crown is the Supreme Executive in the United Kingdom and in all the Dominions, but it acts on the advice of different ministries within different constitutional units; and under Resolution IX of the Imperial War Conference, 1917, the organization of the Empire is to be based upon equality of nationhood.

That is a fine principle and I accept it entirely as far as I am concerned. May I quote an extract from a despatch of the Canadian cabinet dated the 4th of December, 1918, to the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, then in London. I take this despatch from Mr. Rowell's book "The British Empire and World Peace"—page 176:

> Council is of opinion that in view of war efforts of Dominion other nations entitled to representation at Conference should recognize unique character of British Commonwealth composed of group of free nations under one sovereign and that provision should be made for special representation of these nations at conference.

My hon. friends opposite at that time were proud of saying that they had achieved a new status for Canada, that they had taken a step which placed Canada in the family of the nations of the world. We heard that many times in this House. As a matter of fact, Canada at the Peace Conference was represented an entity as were the other Dominions of the Empire, and the Peace Treaty was signed for Canada by Canadians appointed and having their authority to act as such by His Majesty the King.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And associated with another signature representing the British Government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: For the United Kingdom and the British Empire. For Canada they acted alone. They signed alone for Canada. The treaty says so, and my right hon. friend knows it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that.

Mr. McMASTER: Did they not also sign under order in council passed by the Canadian government and despatched to the Old Country?

Mr. LAPOINTE: So we were told, and I think it is so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is all right.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Now, by the League of Nations, which was constituted by that very treaty, Canada was given separate representation. Canada has a distinct representation on the League of Nations, we are an international unit, and Canadians should not be ashamed of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask the hon. member who is objecting to separate representation either in relation to this treaty or in relation to the other?

Mr. LAPOINTE: My right hon. friend has objection—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —to a Canadian signing a treaty for Canada—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: —authorized by His Majesty the King, without having somebody to witness his signature and endorse it. I do not. What did those hon. gentlemen say after this was done? This is an important question. Perhaps I am speaking too long, but this is history, and I think—

Mr. BOYS: Smile, though.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I will keep smiling. That has always been my habit.

Mr. BOYS: You were not smiling five minutes ago.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But I come back very easily to my natural mood. Here is what Sir Robert Borden said in an address on the British Commonwealth of Nations before the American Historical Association at New Haven on the 20th December, 1922. I have the address itself which I understand was published in the Yale Review of last month:

> The Dominions, as signatories of the Peace treaty, became members of the League of Nations and acquired at least vis-à-vis the other members of the League of Nations, a distinctive international status that they had not previously possessed. In accordance with constitutional usage the Peace treaties were submitted to the parliament of each Dominion for ratification, which did not take place until after the approval of each parliament had been secured.

And the Hon. N. W. Rowell, one of the ministers at the time, says in his very interesting book "The British Empire and World Peace," page 179:

> This is a great step in advance and opens the way to the Dominions obtaining full satisfaction of their national aspirations within the British Empire, just as the United States obtained the satisfaction of her national aspirations without the Empire.
> The only important nations which have not so far recognized and accepted this principle are the United States and Russia. Russia is not a party to the Treaty and has not been called upon to consider the question, but when she does one need not apprehend any dissent from her; there remains only the United States.

Now, I claim that by signing and accepting the signature of Canada on that treaty the United States have recognized the international status of Canada, and it should not be the part of Canadians to criticize that status.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman allow me. Why did he permit the British Ambassador to sign the French treaty?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why should my right hon. friend dodge the question all the time?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why are you dodging this question?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why speak of the French treaty now? I am discussing a treaty with the United States to which my right hon. friend has objected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You are dodging the question, but pretty clumsily.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is all right. Now, I have given the opinions of two members of the Canadian government of that time. I see my hon. friend (Mr. Boys) watching me; let me assure him that I am still smiling.

Mr. BOYS: I am watching.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have given the opinions of some of our distinguished public men who were members of the government at the time. May I now give the opinion of constitutional authorities on the new status acquired by the Dominions. I have here an extract from an article in the British Year Book of International Law for the year 1922-23, by Dr. Malcolm M. Lewis, lecturer on international law in England, page 33. It says:

> This process was carried a step further in the procedure adopted for securing ratification of the Treaty, which was debated and approved by each Dominion parliament and was ratified for it, not on the advice and responsibility of the government of the United Kingdom, but on the advice and responsibilty of the Dominion government concerned.
> The Dominions consolidated their newly acquired international status by becoming, and being recognized as, original members of the League of Nations. They are entitled to the same representation in the Assembly of the League as sovereign states, and there is no legal obstacle to one or more of the Dominions being elected to the Council of the League as the representatives of the Assembly. In fact, as far as the League is concerned, they have the same rights, and duties, as independent states, and these rights and duties are increased by the fact of their being appointed Mandatory States over certain former colonies of the German Empire. The Union of South Africa has been given a "C" mandate for German South-West Africa, New Zealand for Samoa, and Australia for certain islands in the South Pacific. It is significant that these mandates were received by the Dominions direct from the Secretariat of the League of Nations, and correspondence thereon is not being conducted through the Imperial government. That this is a deliberate policy is shown by the fact that New Zealand wished to take her mandate through the Imperial government, but in consequence of the attitude adopted by South Africa and Australia all the mandates were issued direct. The dominions concerned are, therefore, responsible for their mandates not to the British government but directly to the League of Nations.
> As original members of the League of Nations the dominions are also members of the International Labour Organization for which provision was made in the various treaties of peace. As such, they are entitled to direct and separate representation at all general International Labour conferences, and at the three conferences already held they have not only availed themselves of their right to be represented, but have, on occasions, indulged in cross-voting both amongst themselves and with the representatives of the British Empire.

Dr. Keith, another authority on constitutional law, says in his book "War Government in the Dominions," page 155:

> In one point only did the proceedings in the matter of signature and ratification vary from the forms which would have been employed had the dominions been independent states; the Dominion plenipotentiaries were nominated and authorized to act for the dominions by their governments, but they received formal full powers to treat and sign from the King on the advice of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the royal ratification for the Empire was signified on the advice of the Secretary of State.

What is the difference between the procedure, as demonstrated by Professor Keith in this article, and the procedure which has been adopted in his treaty? The same author, at page 156 of the same book, says:

Each of the units is a member of the League in its own right, possessing one vote in the Assembly of the League, and the right to be represented there by not more than three delegates. The covenant, moreover, recognizes the possibility of other dominions or colonies attaining membership of the League, and treats them as units of international law, possessing international obligations.

Now, what is the opinion of British statesmen on that subject. May I quote Mr. Lloyd George. I take his words from a recent book, "The Constitution of Canada," by Mr. W. P. M. Kennedy, page 370. On the subject of the Imperial Conference of 1921 Mr. Lloyd George spoke as follows:

He expressed himself satisfied with the progress achieved through full and free consultation between the prime ministers. He welcomed the idea of a Canadian minister at Washington. He emphasized that the dominions had been accepted fully into the comity of nations by the whole world, and that they were equal partners in the dignities and the responsibilities of the British Commonwealth, with "liberty as its binding principle. . . . based not on force but on goodwill and a common understanding."

I have here the words of Mr. Bonar Law, which are perhaps more emphatic than those of Mr. Lloyd George, but I do not like to weary the House by too many quotations. I will quote the words of Lord Milner, which appear in "Canadian Constitutional Studies," page 114;

The only possibility of a continuance of the British Empire is on a basis of out-and-out equal partnership between the United Kingdom and the Dominions. I say that without any kind of reservation whatsoever. It is very easy to say that; but undoubtedly the working out of it in practice without bringing about the severance of relations between us and the dominions will be one of the most complicated tasks which statesmanship has ever had to face. I am not afraid of it, and yet I have to admit that the difficulties are such that our best efforts may end in failure. I hope not. At any rate there is no other way out.

The new status of the Dominion is further exemplified in a recent act of the British parliament, the constitution of the Irish Free state. In the treaty between Ireland and the United Kingdom no mention is made any longer of the British Empire, but of the British Commonwealth of nations, and here is the oath that is taken by the members of parliament of the Irish Free state under that treaty—

I do solemnly swear true faith and allegiance to the constitution of the Irish Free state as by law established and that I will be faithful to His Majesty King George V, his heirs and successors by law, in virtue of the common citizenship of Ireland with Great Britain and her adherence to and membership of the group of nations forming the British Commonwealth of nations.

Professor MacNeill, K.C., in the Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law, page 53, says:

[Mr. Lapointe.]

The establishment of the Irish Free state preserves to Ireland her position and indefeasible status as an independent nation and her entrance into the British Commonwealth of nations as an equal member of that commonwealth confirms and strengthens the status of each member of that commonwealth as an independent nation, "in the fullness", to use the words of Mr. Healy, the Governor General, "of partnership in liberty with the nations co-operating in equal membership of a great commonwealth of free peoples".

Now, Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend said that it was the first time such a thing had been dreamed of. I think I have shown that at the Peace Treaty, in the negotiations for the League of Nations, in everything that pertains to the League of Nations, the Dominions act on their own behalf. But, Sir, I have here the text of the Royal treaty of the convention for the Safety of Life at Sea, signed at London, January, 1914. It was an international convention, signed by many countries of the world. Great Britain signed, through many gentlemen who are mentioned Lord Mersey was the president of the British delegation. For Australia Captain R. Muirhead Collins signed, and for Canada Mr. Alexander Johnston, General Director of Marine and Fisheries, signed. I understand this is mentioned by Mr. Keith in his work on Dominion governments. At the Radiotelegraph Conference in 1912 the delegates sat there and signed alone for their dominions, as the British delegates signed for the rest of the British Empire. In order to show that we have not done anything so revolutionary in that matter, may I say that what has been done has been according to the practice of Canadian statesmen in the past. I have here the text of a resolution moved in the House of Commons in 1882 on April 21st, 1882, by the Hon. Edward Blake, who was certainly a good Britisher and a good constitutional lawyer, and what was the motion moved by Mr. Blake? It was as follows:

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, that Canada no longer occupies the position of an ordinary dependency of the Crown; she numbers four million of free men, trained in the principles of constitutional government; she comprises one-half of the North American Continent, including seven provinces federally united under an Imperial charter, which recites that her constitution is to be similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom; and that she possesses executive and legislative authorities over vast areas in the Northwest out of which one province has already been created, and in time others will be formed.

Then the resolution reads:

That it is expedient to obtain all necessary powers to enable Her Majesty, through her representative, the Governor General of Canada, acting by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada, to enter by an agent or representative of Canada, into direct communication with any British possession or foreign State for the purpose of negotiating commercial arrangements subject to the prior consent, or the subsequent approval of the parliament of Canada signified by act.

I call attention to the fact that Mr. Blake advocated a step which was going much further than the one which my right hon. friend objects to. He moved that Canada should be represented in the negotiations of its treaties for Canadian people by the Governor General of Canada. Sir Richard Cartwright on the 18th February, 1889, moved the following resolution:

That it has become a matter of extreme importance to the well-being of the people of this Dominion that the government and parliament of Canada should acquire the power of negotiating commercial treaties with foreign states.

That a humble address be presented to Her Majesty praying that she will empower her representative the Governor General of Canada, acting by and with the advice of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, to enter, by an agent or representative of Canada into direct communication with any foreign state for the purpose of negotiating commercial arrangements tending to the advantage of Canada, subject to the prior consent or subsequent approval of the parliament of Canada, signified by act.

In 1891 the Hon. David Mills, who was subsequently Minister of Justice, moved the following resolution:

That all the words after the word "that" be left out and the following inserted instead thereof:

"It is expedient to obtain the necessary powers to enable Her Majesty the Queen through her representative the Governor General of Canada upon the advice of his ministers, to appoint an agent to negotiate commercial treaties with other British possessions or with foreign states, subject to the prior consent or subsequent approval of the parliament of Canada.

Let me quote the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he introduced the Naval Service Act in 1910:

This policy is in the best traditions of the Liberal party. This policy is the latest link in the long chain of events which following the principles laid down by the reformers of the old times, Baldwin and Lafontaine, step by step, stage by stage have brought Canada to the position it now occupies, that is to say the rank, dignity and status of a nation within the British Empire.

As I am quoting from distinguished men, I wish to quote words from my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). In a speech which I admired very much, delivered by the right hon. gentleman when he was overseas in 1921, and which is published in his "Overseas Addresses," I find the following at page 15:

We legislate each for ourselves unfettered; we advise through separate councils a common sovereign; we confer together in order better to understand the wider overriding common interest; between a sense of independence and a sense of unity there is no clash but harmony. On these principles our own league of nations has survived, and it has served the world wonderfully well.

These are fine words, but surely they must not be merely words; we must act upon them. But I find other words of my right hon. friend. I find them in Sir Robert Borden's book "Canadian Constitutional Studies" at pages 113 and 114. Sir Robert Borden says:

In May, 1921, the Canadian Prime Minister, in the Manchester Guardian Centenary number, May 5, 1921, declared that the relations between the constituent parts of the Empire must be based upon a conception of complete freedom and equality in national status. Further he observed that the practical need would be met by clearly understood and definitely acepted declarations of principle in so much of the form and content of the existing mechanism as may be found to be obsolete.

These, too, are fine words, and I think we acted in perfect harmony with the doctrine laid down by my right hon. friend in the position which we took in the present case. My right hon. friend declares that we were guilty of an act of discourtesy. I believe he said it was an affront; at least, it was an act of discourtesy towards the British Ambassador in Washington. Well, Sir, surely when a man is twenty-one years of age, as my right hon. friend has stated so many times that this nation is, it is not discourteous on his part to sign his promissory notes without asking his former guardian to sign with him. Is an obligation of the Canadian government to enforce regulations in Canada invalid, not binding, because it is not endorsed? We are not living in 1830; this is 1923 and everybody in this country should bear that in mind. But, Sir, I say that it was not an act of discourtesy; rather, I think it was an act of gracious courtesy on the part of his Majesty the King, to appoint Canadian men to sign Canadian treaties on his behalf. Far from impairing the unity of the Empire it strengthens it, it exemplifies it, while recognizing the autonomy of every part of the Empire.

I have heard somewhere or read in the newspapers, the silly argument that because we have not a strong navy and strong military forces we should not sign treaties. Mr. Speaker, Canada is much stronger than most of the independent nations; and force is not the only criterion of national status. We need no navy. After all, what have we done? We have contracted by this treaty to fulfil certain obligations, and we need not have any navy to fulfil our obligations. If we do not fulfil them we shall deserve whatever may come to us. Everything that has been done in Canada, and in every part of the British Empire for that matter, looking in the direction of responsible government and nationhood has always been assailed as a dangerous step; every move which has been made in this country in that respect has been made against the will and despite the clamours of those who are apprehensive of the future and imagine destruction and separation ahead. But, Sir, the fuller the liberty that has been given the greater the unity of empire that has been accomplished. Why, when the government of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman accorded responsible government to South Africa the action was attacked in the British parliament as a foolish one. I have here the words of a great and distinguished British statesman, Lord Balfour, who at the time assailed the action of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman as the most reckless experiment that political folly had ever conceived. Yet, Mr. Speaker, that folly is accepted to-day as having been the greatest piece of wisdom that Great Britain could have displayed in that day. We need not be afraid of having more liberty provided we maintain unity; and this all Canadians desire. In conclusion, I say that the treaty which is submitted for the approval of the House has the same force, the same strength, the same validity, being signed by a Canadian, as it would have if signed by anyone else.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): I am reluctant to say anything after the very eloquent and able address we have heard from the other side of the House; I rise merely to associate myself with the ideas that have been expressed. I do not think there is an hon. member in this House who is not a perfectly loyal and true Canadian; and whatever little differences there may appear in our expressions of that loyalty, I am inclined to think that ultimately it will be found that our views are essentially the same. As one who was not born in the Dominion of Canada I rejoice in the fact that step by step this young country is attaining to full national existence, a nation free and equal with other nations in the commonwealth. There is one encouraging circumstance that predominates in all the events that have taken place, and it is this, that with every apparent slackening of the legal bonds that unite the various parts of the Empire there seems to be a proportionate increase in strength in the common loyalty and in the other high sentiments that are, after all, more truly representative of "the ties that bind." I fully realize that there may be some difficulties ahead of us; no doubt there will arise some troubles which it will be difficult to solve. But knowing the temper of the people of Great Britain, their generosity, their freedom-loving spirit, knowing the loyalty of Canadians and their faith in their own young nation, and believing in loyalty to that common Crown to which we all pay fealty, I have no fear for the future. We know that no young man ever reaches the full stature of manhood until he has taken upon himself the responsibility and duties incident to manhood. And so shall it be with a nation. Until we too are ready and willing to take upon ourselves the responsibilities and duties of nationhood, Canada can never attain to that position which she should rightfully occupy. I repeat that I am only too glad to associate myself with the idea of Canada as a free and independent nation—a nation co-equal with her sister nations in the commonwealth.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended taking any part in this debate, but I am impelled to do so from the happy position which I find so many members apparently to be in. Only the other night the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in connection with votes of public moneys and the like said that what was wrong when he was in opposition is right when he is in power.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says what is deliberately untrue when he makes that statement.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I will leave it to Hansard. My right hon. friend said, "Certainly, there was another government—"

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So there is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There was another government then, and the answer made to his own argument, as read by me, was that to-day there is another government. Yes, there is another government to-day, and we are finding that while our friends across the aisle laughed at the Conservative government when it claimed that Canada had arrived at nationhood, to-day they are loudly proclaiming the very same doctrine. Why, those of us who were in the House at that time can recollect that we were told it was absolutely unnecessary for Canada to consider the terms of the Peace Treaty. Eloquent speeches were then delivered by our friends opposite, as members of the official opposition at that time, that it was entirely unnecessary for us to consider the terms of the Peace Treaty, that Canada was still a colony, not a nation. That is what a considerable portion of my hon. friends opposite then asserted.

Mr. McMASTER: The hon. member would be too fair to imply that all or nearly all, the speeches then delivered were of that character?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, I have not gone the length of saying everyone said so. I stated that a considerable portion of my hon. friends opposite held those views at that time, and that eloquent speeches were made and applauded to the echo just along that line. Why, I remember very well the eloquent speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) calling the government to account and holding it up to ridicule—for what? Simply because the administration of that day made the very claim which my hon. friends opposite now so fondly hug to their hearts. The whole truth is, we are talking to-day about something that should not be discussed at all. There is no issue on that head between us.

Mr. VIEN: Who started it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, some hon. gentlemen seem to want to say something. I have not the slightest objection to answering any questions, but I think we might have interruption from one quarter at a time.

Mr. VIEN: If my hon. friend will allow me—he stated, "We are talking to-day about something that should not be discussed at all." My remark was that he was the man who started it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I said that things were being talked about which there was no necessity to discuss—for instance, this very question as to nationhood that my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) has said so much about. And the reason I say so is that my hon. friends over there are all converts. The former administration had no doubt whatever as to the absolute freedom and independence of this country—of our nationhood. There is only one issue that will ever arise between us and our friends across the aisle on this head, and that is as to how those rights should be exercised; that is, as to what partnership means. There is the only difference. My hon. friend referred to the statement of Lord Milner on the question of partnership. He is absolutely right. What is the function of a partner? Is he to co-operate with his partners, or is he to look upon himself as having absolutely nothing to do with the partnership? Surely partnership means something. The only trouble, I think, we are ever likely to have with our friends opposite is this. We have the conviction that the force of this country can be best exercised in the closest co-operation with other component parts of the British Empire. We have the conviction that the British Empire is strong when it acts as a unit. This argument as to our rights being called in question is entirely beside the issue. There is no question about it. I honestly and thoroughly believe that Canada is, as is admitted now by everybody, a free and independent nation within the British Empire. And I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am not at all ashamed of the title, "British Empire," and do not want any substitute. The British Empire has stood for a lot, it has meant a lot, and it is going to mean a lot in the future.

Mr. VIEN: What about Canadian?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend suggest that there should be a Canadian empire? I wonder what the meaning of the interruption is?

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend is criticizing the government for the elimination of the British Ambassador at Washington from the signing of the treaty. Then my hon. friend says that we have obligations as partners within the British Empire. I ask him—and my remark was to this effect—whether this partnership is to go as far as the elimination of the identity of the representatives of the Canadian nation when signing a treaty on behalf of Canada?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the principles enunciated to-day by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not pay much attention to the ambassador's signature one way or the other. We had an absolute right to sign the treaty ourselves; but, as the hon. Minister of Finance said only the other day, it is a good thing to have a British signature on a treaty, that it did no harm and certainly lent dignity and strength to the treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my hon. friend mean to say that the signature of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is not a British signature?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is not going to get me into a debate on a question to which I have already said I attach no importance. Rather I attach importance to the trend of view of the government, not as expressed here, but as to its logical conclusion.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend says that he is not concerned with the question of the signature at all. Is not the whole question raised by the right hon. leader of the Opposition about the elimination of the British Ambassador in the signing of the treaty?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Speaker, I I think I had perhaps better try to answer one question at a time.

Mr. VIEN: It is one question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was asked a question by my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister, before, and I dealt with one from my hon. friend who has just spoken when he asked me something about "Canadian." Now, the position of the Canadian people as I see it is just this, that the Canadian people are absolutely free and independent, and that the first duty that the Canadian people owe not only to the British Empire but to Canada, is to Canada itself, is to have Canada just as strong and as free and as efficient as we can turn Canada into. That is what I think about our Canadian situation. But I also think that besides that first duty to Canada, that the best future not only for Canada but the best and greatest future, yes not only for the British Empire too, but for civilization in this world is that Canada ought to continue to act not as a unit but as a partner in a real partnership, that our influence for good and for peace is infinitely stronger if it be in joint union with the other kingdoms of the British Empire. I am convinced that there is something in unity, that there is still a whole lot in tradition, that there is still a whole lot in the different races of which this country is composed, that to-day we ought not to try and think that everything of the past should be discarded, but rather we should use this new nationhood of ours in such a way as to make better and stronger and more efficient the greatest influence for good that the world has ever seen—the British Empire.

Mr. VIEN: In what way did the signing of this treaty by Canadians hamper the work that my hon. friend now advocates or hamper our progress?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have much pleasure in again answering my hon. friend, for the third time now I think upon this particular issue. As I said before, I see nothing wrong in that signature as an isolated act. I see a great deal of good, though, in keeping in touch with British channels. They are ours just as much as they are British. We have a British Ambassador at Washington, and he is ours just as much as he is British, just the same.

Mr. VIEN: Would my hon. friend allow me a further question? If the British Ambassador is just as much our ambassador as that of the British Empire why did my hon. friend and his colleagues when in power negotiate to appoint a Canadian Minister at Washington?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad my hon. friend has brought that up. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) very justly pointed out that things have been done in the past for which we had to take governmental responsibility. He will also bear with me when I say that constitutionally, that government no longer existing, I standing here to-day on my own responsibility have a right to my own views. I want to tell my hon. friend this, that although that provision was made there was never an appointment made. Personally I think there ought to be no appointment made, and the money should be saved. Why is there no appointment made to-day? I am inclined to think that the real reason why it is not made to-day is that the government have been listening to the wise counsels of the hon. Minister of Finance who spoke so very, very strongly against that question of separate ambassadorship. I am inclined to think so. Following the subject that my hon .friend has given me, there is one way that we could get every benefit without cost and without any possible fear of entanglements one way or the other, and that would be if this government were to request the British government, and I have no doubt they would do it, to appoint to some high office on the staff of that embassy a Canadian who could be particularly charged with the carrying on of our business.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: As an assistant?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if my hon. friend thinks there would be any harm in a Canadian working for the British Empire?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: That is not the question at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If he does not think that, what is the force of his question? I may be wrong—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hon. gentlemen laugh. I have never claimed infallibility at any time. We have heard some claims in that direction, but I have never claimed it. I still think that it is a good deal better that there should be one ambassador at Washington representing the whole of us than that there should be an ambassador representing the Mother Country, and one for each of the Dominions, Canada, Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, the Irish Free State and India.

Mr. HOEY: Following out that argument would the hon. member be prepared to advocate the appointment of a Canadian British ambassador at Washington?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would be very glad to do it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that owing to the fact that we are so near, that so much of the business is Canadian business with Washington, that that would be a very proper solution of the whole question.

Mr. McMASTER: Would my hon. friend go further and suggest that it would be a wise thing to have a British assistant to the Canadian ambassador?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would say to the hon. member for Brome, it might be; I do not know. We might have such a good man that he would not require any assistance at all. But really, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that this is a matter to laugh over. It is a serious question. It is a matter which in the long run may have a great deal to do with the future efficient functioning of the British Empire. We ought not to laugh at it.

There is just another thing I would like to say in connection with the subject while I am on my feet. Most of our interests and most of our troubles with the United States are entirely financial; I do not mean financial in its narrow sense but in the broad sense of the word—trade questions. We are anxious to get business from them, and there is almost always something on which Canadian business interests could be helped. There are really few of those matters which involve diplomacy at all, one way or the other. Our business interests have little to do with diplomatic matters. They are business questions, the matter of getting trade and that sort of thing, and really what we want at Washington is not somebody who can make a great speech on a constitutional question like my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), but what we really want at Washington is a first-class business representative. That is what is required, and that is something which can certainly be done at any time without any trouble one way or the other.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, you will acquit me of any intention of speaking at any length. I hope you will have observed the fact that most of my remarks to-day have been provoked by questions from hon. gentlemen, and I apologize for taking up the length of time I have with this impromptu statement.

Mr. RENE MORIN (St. Hyacinthe-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, after the eloquent and exhaustive speech which has been made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) on this important question it ill becomes a modest back bencher to take part at some length at this eleventh hour of the session in the discussion of this resolution, but the subject is to my mind a most important one and I believe that the arguments to support the stand taken by the government have not been exhausted. I shall therefore take the liberty of giving my views to the House on some of the points that have not yet been touched upon.

There is first a very strong argument to make it seems to me, in reviewing the development which since confederation has marked the evolution of our international relations. I will, however, relieve the House from this historical development because while it is an argument that may have some value in itself it is not very conclusive. There is, however, an appreciation of this argument which I find in a book recently published by Mr. Porritt, entitled "Fiscal and Diplomatic Freedom of the Overseas Dominions," where he makes this appreciation of these developments:

> There is no law on the statute books of Westminster to support the existing diplomatic freedom of the dominions. It is a freedom, however, that may now be said to be recognized and guaranteed like so much else in the polity of Great Britain and in the polity of the Empire, by usage or the law of the constitution.

The strongest argument that I intend to make derives in my humble judgment from the position that Canada has taken in the Treaty of Peace and in the League of Nations. When the Treaty of Peace was signed at Versailles each of the self-governing dominions was represented by special delegates, distinct from those of Great Britain, having received their full powers directly from the King, on the advice of the Dominion cabinet, and acting separately each for his local government, as a separate entity.

When the League of Nations was formed, the self-governing dominions claimed and obtained the recognition of a distinct status, giving them an international existence, and were admitted into the league as separate states on the same footing as all the small independent nations, and were allowed their representatives as all the other members, the sovereignty of which was not controverted.

It may be said that from that moment a status separate and distinct from that of the Empire as a whole was fully recognized as appertaining to the dominions by the government of Great Britain and by the foreign nations which entered the League. Who will hold now when Canada has entered the League of Nations as a separate entity on a footing equal to that of other full sovereign states with her distinct representation that she should not necessarily enjoy a status and a diplomatic freedom enabling her to act alone in her intercourse with foreign nations in all matters which are her exclusive concern?

No one at the time thought of denying the dominions this new status which they had fully earned by their sacrifices for the cause of the Empire. It was recognized by all the leading statesmen of the Empire. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has given quotations from Lord Milner and Mr. Lloyd George. I have another one here which I think is most important from Lieutenant-Colonel Amery then Under-Secretary of State for the Colonies and now First Lord of the Admiralty. In a speech in the House of Commons on the 30th of July 1919, he was still more explicit. He said:

> That which has most impressed the outside world is the fact that at that conference—Paris—the full equality of the dominions with ourselves as nations, has been recognized not only by us but by the other governments. They have been treated not only as equal nations within the brotherhood of the British Empire but as equal nations with other nations outside the Empire and I know that there are some timid imperialists, I might perhaps call them, who think it is a beginning of the end of any effective imperial unity. My conviction is exactly to the contrary; I have always been convinced that closer imperial unity could only be based on the recognition of the fullest equality of status between ourselves and the other dominions of the Empire.

In the dominions expression is given to the same sentiments. You hear General Smuts in an address to the people of South Africa declare that

> The dominions have in principle authority and power, not only in respect to their domestic questions but also their international or foreign relations and. . . the questions of peace or war which may affect them. If a war is to affect them they will have to declare it; if peace is to be made in respect of them they will have to sign it. Their independence has been achieved.

This change in our status is to-day sanctioned by international law. In addition to what has been quoted by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries may I quote from Oppenheim's International Law, third edition:

> But the position of self-governing dominions underwent a fundamental change at the end of the world war. Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and also India were not only separately represented within the British Empire delegation at the Peace conference, but also became, side by side, with Great Britain original members of the League of Nations. Separately represented in the Assembly of the League they may, of course, vote there independently of Great Britain. Now the League of Nations is not a mere administrative union . . . . but the organized family of nations. Without doubt therefore the admission of these four self-governing dominions to membership gives them a position in international law.

[Mr. Morin.]

Now all these declarations were accepted in Canada and elsewhere as a recognition of a new order of things. This progress in our constitutional development is largely due to the untiring efforts of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and of the then Prime Minister of Canada, Sir Robert Borden; and the leaders of his party after him on many occasions emphasized this progress in this House particularly on the question of the ratification of the Peace Treaty and on that of the appointment of a Canadian Ambassador at Washington.

Is it possible in the face of all these developments of our constitutional rights, when we are told and we claim that we have acquired complete nationhood; that we are on an equality of status with any other part of the British Empire; that a partnership now exists between the different parts of the Empire—is it possible to maintain the practice of having our treaties, concerning our own particular commercial interests, having no relation whatever to any other part of the Empire—made in the name of Great Britain signed by the British Ambassador or ratified by the Crown on the advice of the Imperial cabinet?

To keep up such a practice is in my humble opinion absolutely inconsistent with the position which Canada now occupies in the family of nations and in the league; it is incompatible with the status that has been accorded to Canada; it would be a retrograde step injurious to those who have been the protagonists of our constitutional progress, and unworthy of our national dignity.

We have entered the League of Nations with our distinct representatives entitled to vote independently of those of Great Britain and even adversely to them. It is a position in which we necessarily find ourselves because if it was otherwise, the other nations by allowing the dominions a distinct status in the league, would merely have been granting Great Britain the right to have four times as many delegates in the assembly as any other member of the league, and it is not to be presumed that it was their intention to do so.

If, after having assumed that stand, we must in our diplomatic relationships with other countries, in matters relating exclusively to Canada, act as if we were in tutelage, appear only accompanied by our guardian, and become bound by our contracts only if they are made with the authorization of the Mother Country and signed by an Imperial delegate, distinct from the Canadian diplomatic envoy, is there a nation which will not think that Canada entered the League of Nations under false pretences and for no other purpose than to increase the British representation? Since we have agreed to enter the League of Nations, we are in honour bound to act as if we enjoyed complete diplomatic freedom and should get rid of all formalities which would imply a state of subordination and dependence. We are in association with the commonwealth of British nations but this should not prevent us from acting in accordance with our views and singly in matters which concern us alone. We may keep the Imperial government posted on our external relations; we may, and should, abstain from doing anything to damage or affect our co-partners, we may, and should, take the advice of the Imperial cabinet in all matters which have any bearing on the Empire at large, but all these are matters to be settled between ourselves.

In our dealings with foreign countries, regarding matters which affect Canada alone, we must act on our own behalf—without the participation of any tutor or guardian—under powers derived directly from the Crown, on the advice of the Canadian cabinet or parliament. To do otherwise would be to acknowledge a state of subjection incompatible with the status which we now occupy in the League of Nations.

Since the League of Nations was formed, Canada has tried to live up to her new status. When the Disarmament Conference took place at Washington in November, 1921, no invitation was sent to the dominions. The British government decided to appoint some representatives from the dominions, and was proceeding to appoint the delegates suggested by the prime ministers of the dominions when General Smuts protested against this procedure in a telegram addressed to the Canadian Premier on October 19, 1921, in which he says:

> Agitation in congress against our independent voting power in the League of Nations was a direct challenge to new dominion status. It is first great international conference after Paris and if dominions concerned are not invited and yet attend, it will be a bad precedent and dominions' status will suffer. If a stand is made now and America acquiesces battle for international recognition our international status is finally won.

A copy of this telegram was sent by him to the British Premier Lloyd George, who acknowledged the truth of the statement in a wire to the Canadian Premier on 21st October, 1921, wherein he said:

> I am completely in accord of course, with his (Smuts) view that dominion representatives should hold the same status as at Paris.

To which message Mr. Meighen replied on 27th October, 1921:

> Essential that Dominion representatives should hold same status as at Paris and that this status must not be allowed to be prejudiced by proceedings at Washington Conference.

As it was then too late to start negotiations for a direct invitation, the procedure concerning the nomination of the Canadian representative was altered to the extent that he received his full powers from the Crown, by direction of an order in council of the Canadian cabinet, and not from the imperial cabinet. The effect of the protest was noticeable, however, at the Genoa conference which took place a few months after, when, in January, 1922, the invitation was addressed directly by the Italian Ambassador to the Prime Minister of Canada.

There is no doubt in my mind, that under her new status Canada can act alone in her dealings with foreign countries in all matters of exclusively local interest, and this view is supported by an authority like Oppenheim, who states in the volume from which I already have quoted:

> International negotiations can be conducted by all such states as have a standing within the family of nations. . . It would be wrong to maintain that states which are not fully sovereign can never be parties to international negotiations on those points concerning which they have a standing within the family of nations.

And further he says:

> Not full sovereign states can become parties only to such treaties as they are competent to conclude. . . Ordinarily a vassal state can conclude treaties concerning such matters as railways, extradition commerce and the like.

Now, what are commercial treaties? The same author thus defines them:

> Commercial treaties are treaties concerning the commerce and navigation of the contracting states and concerning the subjects of those states who are engaged in commerce or navigation.

Undoubtedly the treaty which we have before us falls within these categories, and should have been made exclusively in the name of Canada.

It is an agreement which, to have any effect, must be implemented by local legislation. My contention is, that under the present constitution, as it has developed since confederation, Canada has sole and exclusive jurisdiction to pass legislation to give effect to that treaty. If Canada alone could give effect to that treaty then it necessarily implies that Canada alone could make it, and that it should not only have been signed by the Canadian plenipotentiary alone, but should have been made in the name of the Dominion of Canada.

There was another reason in this particular case why the Canadian government should assert its right to act alone. The American government only of all the nations which have participated in negotiations which led to the formation of the League of Nations, has refused to recognize the right of the dominions to a separate and distinct representation in the league, and this opposition to dominion representation was one of the grounds upon which the United States senate rejected the league. Under these circumstances the Canadian government was well inspired in insisting that the treaty should be negotiated directly by Canada and the United States, without the intervention of the British Ambassador, because this new procedure involved, to a certain extent, the recognition by the United States of our new status, and it would have been a mistake to allow the occasion to pass without taking advantage of it.

This is in accordance with the rules of international law. Oppenheim says on this point:

> A permanent diplomatic envoy needs no other empowering document than his general letters of credence, if he is not entrusted with any task outside the limits of the ordinary business of a permanent legation: but in case he is entrusted with any such task, as for instance if any special treaty or convention is to be negotiated, he requires a special empowering document, namely, "full powers."

It therefore follows that the full powers having been issued to the Canadian Minister of Marine, no other authority was required.

The action of the Canadian government in abstaining from requiring the signature of the British Ambassador, as had heretofore been the practice, did not mean any lack of consideration or courtesy to him. It was in duty bound to claim and assert the right of Canada to act under her own exclusive authority in the negotiation of her treaties. That was one way, and perhaps the only way to maintain a stand in full accord with the new position this country occupies within the comity of nations.

Some timorous people are inclined to dread the consequences which such a policy may have on our relations with the Empire. They say that the adoption of such a policy would bring about the disintegration of the Empire or would disrupt it, and that it is equivalent to a declaration of independence. As a matter of fact, I believe that is the only argument which may be brought forth against these views. But in Canada we are getting used to this argument, and experience has taught us that there is not much in it. As far back as 1837 the question of responsible government for the colonies was agitated At that time there were very strong objections to such a policy, and Lord John Russell, then Prime Minister, had recourse to this high sounding argument when he wrote:

> It is proposed that the executive council should be made to resemble the ministry in this country. I hold this proposition to be entirely incompatible with the relations between the Mother Country and the colony. The relations between the Mother Country and the colony require that His Majesty should be represented not by a person removable by the assembly but by the governor sent by the king responsible to the king and to the parliament of Great Britain. This was the necessary constitution of a colony, and if you have not these relations existing between the Mother Country and the colony you will soon have an end to the relations altogether.

A few years after responsible government was granted to Canada and the relations between the two countries were not affected in any way. Later, in 1859, when Galt increased the duties on British manufactured goods imported into Canada, the same argument was advanced. The Sheffield manufacturers in a memorial contended that:—

> The policy of protection to native manufacturers in Canada should be distinctly discountenanced by Her Majesty's government as a system condemned by reason and experience as being directly contrary to the policy solemnly adopted by the Mother Country and calculated to breed disunion and distrust between Great Britain and her colonies.

The firm answer of Sir A. T. Galt is well known. He said:—

> Self-government would be utterly annihilated if the views of the Imperial government were to be preferred to those of the people of Canada. It is therefore the duty of the present government distinctly to affirm the right of the Canadian legislature to adjust the taxation of the people in the way they deem best, even if it should unfortunately happen to meet the disapproval of the Imperial ministry. Her Majesty cannot be advised to disallow such acts unless her advisers are prepared to assume the administration of the affairs of the colony, irrespective of the views of its inhabitants.

It was this stand which finally won for Canada absolute fiscal freedom, and yet no disruption or disunion followed.

Again, you may recall the answer of the Marquis of Ripon to the demand of the colonies at the conference of 1894 to negotiate their own commercial treaties when he said that:

> To grant such a right would be equivalent to breaking up the Empire into a number of independent states.

The power to negotiate treaties was conceded to Canada in 1907 and the fatal results which were predicted did not materialize in this case, any more than in the others. We are justified in stating that not only is such an argument without foundation, but the reverse proposition is nearer the truth—that the greater the freedom granted to Canada the firmer are the ties which bind this country and Great Britain together. To-day these ties are apparently so elastic that on the 30th of March, 1920 in the British House of Commons the Right Hon. Bonar Law could say:

> There is not a man in this House who would not admit that the connection of the dominions with the Empire depends upon themselves. If the self-governing dominions, Australia, and Canada chose to-morrow to say: We will no longer make a part of the British Empire, we would not try to force them. Dominion home rule means the right to decide their own destinies.

And yet these ties, elastic as they are, are so strong that in the first days of August 1914, when war was declared between Great Britain and Germany, all the self-governing dominions, without being bound or even called upon to do so, but simply by a movement of their own free will, without hesitation, without discussion, flew to the side of Great Britain and fought with her, till final victory was won. Would Canada have made the sacrifices which she did make in this war if she had been compelled by a superior authority to take part in it? I believe not. No, Mr. Speaker, the argument that Canada cannot expect to enjoy a measure of sovereignty which will entitle her to make her treaties in her own name, to appoint her own commercial plenipotentiaries acting under powers derived from the King on the advice of his Canadian cabinet, without endangering the unity of the Empire is a pusillanimous one and must be set aside.

Now Mr. Speaker, some may find that I have been rash in my statements. I may have scared the "timid imperialists" of this House if there are any, but I think that we might as well face the situation squarely. At all times has our constitutional development pointed towards the goal which we have now reached; our position to-day, as I have outlined it, is the logical conclusion of the claims and actions of the former governments and of the former leaders of this House. When one studies the political history of Canada during recent times, he is astonished at finding to what extent the successive Premiers of Canada of both parties were of one mind in claiming for Canada, larger and larger powers, more and more liberties in her dealings with other nations. This movement for larger and more complete liberty has taken a new impetus on account of the war, and now I claim that Canada, by her sacrifices during the war; on account of the economic crisis through which she has to trend as a consequence of her participation in the war; by the efforts and foresight of her leaders, has acquired a status equal to that of the other small nations which compose the family of nations. I claim that this status has been acknowledged by the British government, by foreign nations and that she must not do anything which may be of a nature to prejudice that status; that on the contrary she must, on every occasion assert her right to full and complete sovereignty in her dealings with foreign nations in all matters which concern her alone.

By doing so her position in the comity of nations shall become more and more exalted and the ties which bind her to Great Britain will in no way be affected: if anything they will be strengthened because associations founded on freedom and natural inclinations are more solid and more durable than those founded on the domination of one partner and the subordination of the other.

Our actions in this respect are only in line with the aspirations of our forefathers who, as far back as 1851, in the platform of the Reform party claimed that:

> Canadian commerce and commercial intercourse with other nations, should be under the control of the legislators.

They would be in accord with the conception of our aspirations, as set forth by a famous statesman Lord Elgin, who in 1850 declared that he conceived it his mission:

> "To convince Canadians that without severing the bonds that united them with Great Britain, they might attain the degree of perfection and social and political development to which organized communities of freemen had the right to aspire."

If we are freemen our aim can only be freedom; freedom in our internal affairs, freedom in our commercial intercourse with other nations, the fullest freedom consistent with the maintenance of our association with the British commonwealth of nations.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): I am thoroughly in accord with what the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) stated to-day, and I am also in thorough accord with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, (Mr. Lapointe). I go further and I state my justification in a few words, by quoting from two of our poets. Tennyson says that the constitutional development of our country and of our Empire > broadens slowly down

> From precedent to precedent.

It is a constitutional advance which can be justified by every Canadian, by every other nation or British commonwealth. I wish to quote from another poet who says:

> Daughter am I in my mother's house,
> But mistress in my own.

I wish to say, in regard to the future of the world, that Canada is the equal of a benign mother in this regard. As far as this continent is concerned—and this continent has the making of a future world above any other, or equal to any other country—I say that Canada is here to stay by the grace of the United States, if they choose to accord it; but in spite of the United States if we must. When we are on this continent, the equal of any nation or power, we have the right to make our own treaties concerning this continent. We are the equal of the United States or any other nation in making treaties for ourselves, That is in line with what has been quoted here to-day from Canadian statesmen and from British statesmen, time after time. I am glad to see that almost the unanimous opinion of this House is that Canada has at least reached a national status, and that fact is recognized in the House and still more in the world at large.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the Prime Minister replies the debate will be closed; so that if any hon. member wishes to speak he must do so now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say at once, that after the comprehensive, eloquent and convincing address made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), and after the remarks of the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) and the scholarly and informative address of the member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Morin), I hesitate to avail myself of my right to speak again. Were it not that the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), in the course of his remarks, made one or two statements which I think should not be permitted to go wholly unobserved, I would not attempt a further reply. The first comment which my right hon. friend made on the action of the government was in the nature of some exception to the wording of the resolution as it had been given the House. My hon. friend read the resolution and quoted these words—

> The treaty was signed on behalf of His Majesty acting for Canada by the plenipotentiary named therein.

He took exception to the particular phrase "acting for Canada," coming after the words "on behalf of His Majesty." He said he thought that was not the proper order of wording, that the phrase, if used at all should have come after the word "plenipotentiary." When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries cited to him the wording of a treaty for which the government of which he was a member was responsible, my right hon. friend remarked that he did not think the wording was right, and he went on in characteristic fashion, to add, that he was not at that time in charge of matters himself. In view of my right hon. friend having claimed that when he is in charge whatever he does is correct, he will, perhaps, permit me to read to him an order in council passed at the time he was Prime Minister, and for which he himself was responsible. I am not at all sure that the order in council was not drafted by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister, might have added that I stated that I took the full constitutional responsibility for the order in council. I thought I was rather frank in doing so. I do not know why he criticized it. Whether I drafted it or not, I took the full responsibility.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will take full responsibility for the order in council which I am about to read.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There have been several treaties in the making of which Canada has had a part. There were several treaties which grew out of the war and which were signed at Versailles, and there were treaties signed at Washington, after the conference on the Limitation of Armaments. The representative of Canada at Washington was the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, formerly Prime Minister of this country. Sir Robert was appointed representative by His Majesty the King on the recommendation of the government of my right hon. friend opposite. In preparing the order in council recommending that full power be given Sir Robert Borden as the representative of Canada at the Washington Conference on Limitation of Armaments, my right hon. friend used language which I think deserves to be quoted here. Sir Robert Borden has thought it of sufficient importance to direct the attention of the country to it in the report of the conference which he prepared for presentation to this parliament. At page 43 there will be found the following statement by Sir Robert Borden:

> For convenience of reference I also set out herewith (2) the text of the order in council sanctioning the issuance by His Majesty the King of the Full-Power necessary to provide me with authority to sign, "for and in the name of His Majesty the King in respect of the Dominion of Canada", such treaties as might be concluded at the conference—

Exactly the form and order of words to which my right hon. friend takes exception.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a better expression; clearly it is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, Sir Robert Borden will no doubt be pleased to learn that the right hon. gentleman thinks the language he used is superior to that of his former leader. The order in council itself appears in the document at page 143. It is dated Thursday, the 27th day of October, 1921, at which time my right hon. friend was in office as Prime Minister. I think I had better read the entire order in council as it has a bearing on the present case. May I say that the present government, in the drafting of the order in council referred to in the resolution, followed verbatim et literatim, with the exception of the names, the wording of the particular order passed by its predecessor.

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on a report from the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, submitting that it is expedient, in connection with the forthcoming conference on the Limitation of Armament and on Pacific and Far Eastern questions, summoned by the government of the United States to meet at Washington on November 11th, 1921, to invest fit person with full power to treat on the part of His Majesty the King in respect of the Dominion of Canada with persons similarly empowered on the part of other states, is pleased to order and doth hereby order that His Majesty the King be humbly moved to issue letters patent to the Right Honourable Sir Robert Laird Borden, a member of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, G.C.M.G., K.C., naming and appointing him as commissioner and plenipotentiary in respect of the Dominion of Canada with full power and authority to conclude with such plenipotentiaries as may be vested with similar power and authority on the part of any powers or states, any treaties, conventions, or agreements in connection with the said conference, and to sign for and in the name of His Majesty the King in respect of the Dominion of Canada everything so agreed upon and concluded and to transact all such other matters as may appertain thereto.

I think, when we realize that the procedure in international matters respecting treaties was gone into very carefully by Sir Robert Borden and those associated with him at the time, our government might have justly been held remiss had we without good cause taken what I might describe as a backward step in asserting the manner in which this country should be represented in negotiating a treaty which has to do solely with its neighbour and iteslf.

The next point my right hon. friend ventured to criticize was a change in the wording of the draft. Nothing appears to have been too small for him to call attention to. The wording to which my right hon. friend has directed the attention of the House appeared as the heading of the draft which was sent by the United States government to the Canadian government for consideration. This heading was in the following words:

Convention between the United States of America and Great Britain concerning halibut fishery.

When the draft was presented in that form our government took the view that the convention was not between the United States of America and Great Britain, but between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Great Britain does not covenant to do anything by this convention. It would have been quite as appropriate and accurate to have stated that the convention was between the United States and South Africa, or New Zealand, or Australia, or Ireland or any other part of the Empire, as it was to say that it was between the American government and Great Britain. Had the American government wished to make reference to the British Empire as a whole the term "British Empire" might have been used. But the entire treaty has relation to the question of fisheries on the Pacific coast of the United States of America and of Canada, and the convention in that respect was therefore one between the United States and Canada. I might point out that the present government was not the only government that drew attention to the apparent error which had been committed in that regard. The British government were kept in touch with the negotiations and were asked for an expression of view on any phase of the proposed agreement. I will read the following telegram which was sent from His grace the Duke of Devonshire, the Secretary of State for the Colonies in Great Britain, to his Excellency, the Governor General. It is dated London, February 15, 1923:

Your telegram January 16th and your despatch January 24th,

Full powers for Mr. Lapointe sent by mail February 13th.

As regards text of draft treaty, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs suggests following modifications:

(1) Title of treaty to be Convention for the Regulation of Halibut Fisheries on the Pacific Coast of Canada and the United States.

That is the title the British government suggested should be given to the convention between the two countries.

(2) In accordance with the usual treaty practice title of his Majesty preamble to read "His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India."

Do your ministers see any objection?

It will be observed that the British government itself recognised that the convention related solely to Canada and the United States, and was careful in suggesting an appropriate designation to bring in the names of these two countries, making no reference to Great Britain or to any other part of the British Empire. Why does my right hon.

friend not take exception to the British government having ventured to make specific reference to Canada?

My right hon. friend had a word to say about preserving the historic form of the execution of treaties. I think I have already pointed out wherein the present government has sought to preserve what has come to be the accepted form in the making, signing and ratifying of treaties affecting different parts of the British Empire. The leader of the opposition suggested there had been some discourtesy; that the British Ambassador at Washington had been overlooked. I will not take up the time of the House to read the entire correspondence, but if anyone will peruse the communications that passed between the several governments he will observe our government was most careful to point out that it was as respects Canada that the signature of the Minister of Marine was desired. We were careful to point out that the treaty had to do entirely with a matter of concern to Canada and its neighbour to the south. We did not at any point say that the British government might not, if it thought desirable, ask the British Ambassador at Washington to sign. We did not say that we would take exception to his signing. What we did do was to point out that, the treaty relating as it did to Canada and the United States exclusively, it was not necessary, in our opinion, that more than the signature of our own minister, who had been given full powers by his Majesty the King, should appear on the agreement I might quote a paragraph from the communication referred to by my right hon. friend, which was despatched on February 28, from His Excellency the Governor General to the Secretary of State for the Colonies:

> My ministers are of opinion that, as respects Canada, the signature of the treaty by Mr. Lapointe alone should be sufficient.

And elsewhere:

> The view of my ministers, however, is that the treaty being one of concern solely to Canada and the United States, and not affecting in any particular any imperial interests, the signature of the Canadian minister would be sufficient, and they would respectfully request that his Majesty's Ambassador at Washington be instructed accordingly.

What does that language mean? It means by implication that had any Imperial interests been concerned Canada would have expected the British Ambassador as well as her own minister to sign the agreement. But inasmuch as the treaty related exclusively to a Canadian matter, inasmuch as it had no bearing of an Imperial character, we felt it was unnecessary in the circumstances that the British Ambassador should place his signature beside that of the minister who had negotiated the treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was there any imperial interest affecting the French treaty that does not affect this one?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Every treaty has, I think, to be considered in the light of the circumstances under which it is negotiated, and of which proper and full account should be taken. In negotiating the commercial treaty with France, the Canadian ministers, I think, used to a considerable extent the good offices of the British Ambassador at Paris. They were in a foreign European country, the British Ambassador lent his good offices in furthering the negotiations, and while there was no obligation, whatever, necessitating the signature of the British Ambassador, it seems to me wholly appropriate that under the circumstances he should have been asked by our ministers to join with them in signing the convention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What does my right hon. friend mean by "good offices?" What good offices were exercised then that were not similar to those offered in this case? I should like the Prime Minister to be more specific.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it will be quite evident that negotiations with the United States, owing to the proximity of Washington and Ottawa, can be conducted by ministers and officials in a way in which it is not possible to carry on negotiations of a diplomatic character between Ottawa and some European capital. As I say, each case must be considered on its own merits.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not the point I am raising at all. One may be verbally negotiated, the other may be written. But what good offices were necessary in the negotiation of the French treaty that were not necessary in these negotiations?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I have answered my right hon. friend. It is not a question of what was necessary, but what in the circumstances was appropriate. I would say in this connection, that in previous negotiations with France, my right hon. friend's minister had associated himself with the British Ambassador in Paris for the purpose of concluding a temporary arrangement, to take the place of which the new agreement was intended. Under such circumstances, I think it was only proper that the British Ambassador should have been associated with the treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the Prime Minister not admit that this correspondence shows that the good offices of the British Ambassador were proffered and given in just the same way in connection with this treaty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I will not admit anything of the kind. The correspondence speaks for itself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The correspondence discloses this.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wish to enter into a verbal discussion with my right hon. friend at the moment.

As to the "preservation of the historic form of execution of a treaty," which is the phrase my right hon. friend uses, without attempting in any way to set forth what in the opinion of the government is the proper recognition to be given different parts of the British Empire in matters of the kind, I should like, speaking for myself personally to quote from an article by Sir Robert Borden which has recently appeared, as expressing, in the paragraph which I am about to read, my own views as to the present position with respect to treaties of concern to Canada, and the course of action appropriate in respect thereto. In the Yale Review for this month there appears an article by Sir Robert Borden entitled, "The British Commonwealth of Nations." On page 12 the article contains references which have already been quoted by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe). In a copy of this article which has been sent to me by, I think, Sir Robert Borden himself, I find inserted the page which I have in my hand, with the following note at the head:

> The following paragraph was inadvertently omitted by the Yale Review. It should appear on page 12 at the place indicated.

The place indicated is at the end of the sentence quoted by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. This is Sir Robert Borden's view of the present position in the matter of treaty-making so far as Canada is concerned.

> Since the beginning of the present century Canada has in many instances negotiated treaties that concerned her special interests. In such cases the diplomatic unity of the commonwealth is preserved by the form of the treaty and by the method of execution and ratification.
> The King is named in the treaty as the High Contracting Party and the execution is under powers issued by him upon the recommendation of the Dominion government. Ratification takes place also upon the recomendation of the Dominion government; but any relevant question as to the effect of the treaty upon the commonwealth as a whole must naturally be the subject of consultation between the governments concerned prior to ratification. It is not improbable that in this respect usage, arising out of practice and experience as to the proper character, method and extent of such consultation, will develop into a recognized convention. There seems no reason to desire or to anticipate any modification in the form of such treaties. The ancient formula by which the King is designated as the enacting authority still subsists in the statutes of each dominion and in those of Great Britain; in form the King, in reality the legislature, enacts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let me direct attention to these words, "The king is named in the treaty as the high contracting party." That is precisely what we have in the treaty which the House is now considering. The treaty is between His Majesty the King, and the United States. "Its execution is under powers issued by him upon the recommendation of the Dominion government." There appears in the correspondence which lies on the Table of the House a copy of the order in council under which the Dominion government asked His Majesty the King to give full powers to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to act in his name in the negotiating and signing of this treaty The government in so doing acted with a full sense of its responsibility to this parliament. The power rests here with parliament. It is this parliament that in reality is enacting this treaty. It is enacting the treaty through the recommendation made by the ministry in office to-day, which is responsible to parliament, and which has made its recommendation to the king, which recommendation the king has accepted and on which action has been taken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister had better be a little more accurate in that regard. Does he wish to convey the impression that the king acted upon the advice of this government?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I am perfectly accurate, Mr. Speaker. I say the king's action in this regard was based upon the recommendation of this government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Prime Minister did not say so. It was the commencement of the negotiations that led to the king's action. But the advice tendered His Majesty to act would be the advice of the British government, of his own ministers, and this government communicated, not with His Majesty, but with the British government and got it to give that advice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend is resorting to the kind of hair-splitting of which he is so fond.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, this is very important.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The essential thing so far as this parliament and country is concerned is that this government made a certain recommendation to the king. It may be asked: How that recommendation was transmitted, and in what form it was sent? It was sent to His Majesty's ministers in Great Britain and transmitted by them to the King.

Mr. MEIGHEN: With their advice.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I am prepared to say, "with their advice." Which shows that they approved entirely of the action to which my right hon. friend now takes exception.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend is taking exception to the fact that the Canadian minister signed this treaty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I am not, and I will not permit the Prime Minister to misrepresent me. I object to no such thing. Nor did I object to the recommendation made to the British government for transmission to His Majesty with their advice. It is the proper method. I entirely approve of it, and I entirely approve of the appointment of the Canadian minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then what is my right hon. friend objecting to?

Mr. MEIGHEN: What I did object to was the change in the usual practice and the refusal by this government to permit the British Ambassador to be associated in the execution of the treaty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think, Mr. Speaker, I have made it plain that the usual practice, at least in the view of the one member of the Privy Council who has the largest experience, is that as respects matters affecting Canada, a Canadian minister should sign on behalf of His Majesty and be given full power for that purpose, That practice was established by the conference at Versailles and by the Disarmament Conference at Washington.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the Prime Minister give me an instance where the British ministers did not sign as well?

Mr. LAPOINTE: They did not sign the Peace Treaty on behalf of Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say for Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Those were matters of general and Imperial interest in which all parts of the Empire were concerned.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The French treaty?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The present treaty is not a matter which is of imperial interest; it is primarily of concern to this country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the Prime Minister permit an interruption, not a question? He says they were matters of general and imperial interest; surely he does not mean that. I do not wish to be always harping on the French treaty, but will he say that that treaty is of more imperial interest than this? Or the Italian and other treaties? Or the treaty negotiated four years ago with France? All those are as distinctly Canadian as this one. I wish the Prime Minister would not make such general remarks without being careful as to their real significance.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not say it is a question.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well, it is a lecture.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know my right hon. friend is a little restive. He realizes the position he is in, and is simply trying to extricate himself as best he can.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not at all. Try to be fair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am prepared to leave it at that. So far as the government's action in this matter is concerned, far from there being any desire or intention in any way to overlook the British Ambassador, the chief and sole aim was to preserve the recognition of the status of Canada as one of the self-governing dominions of the Empire and those full rights of autonomy and responsibility which she has acquired and which during recent years have been so often referred to by her public men.

I shall conclude with one further reference to a remark of my right hon. friend. He said that he could not understand why there was this desire—and he applied his words to this treaty—"to dissociate ourselves from the British Empire." I think I am quoting my right hon. friend correctly in that remark.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not quite sure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am very glad my right hon. friend is not quite sure, because I regard his remark as thoroughly disloyal, I marvel at any leader of any party in this House venturing to say that the government was seeking to dissociate itself from the British Empire.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say anything of the sort. The Prime Minister is imagining it in order to get an excuse to work up his heat. If the Prime Minister will take my remarks as they appear in the typewritten transcript of Hansard, and will wait until eight-thirty to-night, I shall be prepared to stand by the report of what I said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have the very words of my right hon. friend. I quote his words as I took them down. He said he could not understand why there was "this desire to dissociate ourselves from the British Empire." That is the sort of expression my right hon. friend is fond of using when he does not think he will be brought to book for it. I tell my right hon. friend that the government, in the action it was taking, far from being prompted by a desire in any way to estrange Canada from the Empire, believed that its action was calculated to strengthen the faith of Canadians in the greatness of the Empire, and to increase the respect which all other parts of the Empire and other countries have for Canada.

I wish to quote again words of Sir Robert Borden from the article to which I have referred. At page 15, Sir Robert says:

> I am of those who believe that the essential unity of the commonwealth has in no sense been diminished by its development into an organization which is virtually a Britannic League of Nations.

That at all events is the position which we on this side of the House take. We believe that the more the British Empire comes to be understood as a Britannic League of Nations, the more serviceable it will be to its component parts and to human society in general, and the more likely will it be to endure on a permanent basis. It is as a part of a league of Britannic nations, as one of a community of sister nations within the British Empire, that we have taken a course which we believe will afford recognition to that particular status. There never has been a time when the assertion of her autonomy by Canada has not been followed by some protest from one quarter or another. We believe that the more self-government is realized in all its phases, the more enduring and permanent will be the basis of the Empire.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, I am one who believes strongly in that community of free nations which comprises the British Empire, and I hope to live to see that community of nations grow stronger from year to year, and as time goes on to mean more and more to our great human society. I believe that in the British commonwealth to-day, we have the greatest example the world has ever known of a community of free nations in the nature of a League of Nations which is an inspiration and a model to the League of Nations itself. As the British Empire endures so will the League of Nations prosper on similar foundations of liberty and freedom, and consultation and co-operation between component parts. It is because I want to see the British Empire endure, it is because I want to see all its parts work together in closer harmony and co-operation—because I believe it is the greatest agency which the world has ever had for the preservation of freedom, liberty and justice—that I hope every effort will be made upon the part of each free nation of the British Empire to see that in the matter of self-government, it exercises to the full the rights which are conceded to it, as being a component part of the Empire. In that way it will help to illustrate and make for that freedom, justice and co-operation among the nations of the world which we pray all may come to practise and enjoy.

I shall conclude with but one further quotation. On the 24th of May, His Majesty, the King, addressed a message to the school children in all parts of the British Empire. Here are the words with which His Majesty concluded that address. They have been recorded in all the schools of the Empire:

> Get knowledge, be brave, honourable and kind, thinking of others before yourselves, and always play the game. So will you fit yourselves to hand down this community of free nations to your children and grandchildren as a great instrument for justice, peace and goodwill, which will deserve the respect and esteem of mankind.

I submit Sir, that we will not find anywhere a truer and nobler expression of what the British Empire is than in those words of His Majesty, wherein he speaks of it as a "community of free nations." If we are a community of free nations, is it to be said as my hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), has suggested with respect to the signing of a treaty affecting Canada but not affecting any imperial interest, that there is no question as to the right you have; you have the right but you must not exercise it? Mr. Speaker, we have passed that stage. We want not only the right, we want also to exercise our rights. We believe that in the exercise of all our rights we will gain more of strength and of influence as a nation; and, so far as the British Empire is concerned, we believe that its greatness will be proportionately greater as our strength and influence as a country increase.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I beg to move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by Mr. Lapointe; that a message be sent to the Senate to inform Their Honours that this House has passed the following resolution:

Resolved by the..... House of Commons:—

That it is expedient that Parliament do approve of the Treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, which was signed at Washington on the second day of March, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, a copy of which has been laid before parliament, and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty, acting for Canada, by the plenipotentiary therein named, and that this House do approve of the same.

and requesting that Their Honours do unite with this House in the said resolution by filling up the blank therein with the words, "Senate and."

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

HALIBUT FISHERY

CLOSE SEASON FIXED FOR CANADIAN TERRITORIAL WATERS

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure for the protection of the Northern Pacific halibut fishery, and to provide:

1. That a close season be established during which it shall be unlawful for any person to fish for, catch or attempt to catch halibut in the territorial waters of Canada contiguous to the western coast of Canada, or for any national or inhabitant of Canada to fish for, catch or attempt to catch halibut in the territorial waters of Canada aforesaid, in the territorial waters of the United States contiguous to the western coast of the United States, in the high seas extending westerly from the limit of the territorial waters of Canada and of the United States, also Behring Sea.

2. That making use of a Canadian port to outfit a vessel to engage in prohibited fishing, or permitting the departure of the same with intention to engage in such fishing, or entering any port in Canada while prosecuting a voyage to fish for halibut or with halibut intentionally caught in the close season, shall be an offence against the proposed legislation.

3. That the vessel, cargo and outfit operated or used for the purpose of committing an offence against the provisions of the proposed legislation shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture, and if such vessel is the property of a national or inhabitant of the United States or is registered in the United States the same shall be delivered as soon as practicable after seizure to an authorized official of the United States to be dealt with in accordance with the laws of that country.

4. That foreign ships found fishing or preparing to fish for halibut in such territorial waters shall be liable to seizure and to be forfeited, and that certain provisions of the Customs and Fisheries Protection Act be made applicable for the purposes of the proposed legislation.

5. That the Governor in Council may join with the government of the United States in appointing an International Fisheries Commission, consisting of four members, two to be appointed by the Governor in Council and two by the government of the United States, such commission to exist for a period of five years, and thereafter until two years from the day when either of the constituting governments shall give notice of desire to terminate it, and Canada shall pay the salaries and expenses of the members of the commission appointed by the Governor in Council, and one-half the joint expenses incurred by the commission.

6. That the Governor in Council may make regulations for giving effect to the recommendations of the commission, and to give full effect to the provisions of the proposed act, and such regulations may create offences and impose penalties, and that the said act shall come into force on a day to be named by the Governor in Council, and may be repealed by the Governor in Council at any time during the existence of the International Fisheries Commission.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On paragraph 1.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the general clause of the resolution. I do not wish to take the occasion to make any particular speech but to correct some misrepresentations of the speech I made, if you call it a speech, on the motion itself. I did not realize that I had committed such a grave attack or propounded some new and dangerous theory affecting our autonomy such as called for the long volley of reply that came from hon. gentlemen opposite. I did not know that my innocent remarks were really worthy of a whole afternoon of thunder from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), from the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Morin), and finally from the Prime Minister.

I have not any accusation of misrepresentation, certainly not of deliberate misrepresentation, to make against the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I think that so far as he referred to my own remarks he was quite fair. All I have to say about his reference to them is this: He seemed to assume, and he seemed sincerely to assume, that my objection was to the fulness of Canadian autonomy and the fulness of Canadian national rights, that I harboured in my heart the idea that domination from Britain would be advisable. There were protests in his speech repeatedly against some theory of domination, and these were re-echoed in very scholarly language indeed by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville. No one in this country would resist the going into effect of any such theory or idea more determinedly than would I. The thought of domination has long since ceased to be in the mind of any practical person or any prominent person in public affairs in either Britain or Canada. The talk of domination is only for the purpose of rearing something that can be struck at with venom, vigour and indignation in order, if possible, to gain applause. I have been accustomed to this sort of attack. No matter what I say, however clearly I say it and however simple and indeed axiomatic it is, it is always followed by representations wherever it will be believed they will pay, that I have delivered a ringing, imperialistic harangue.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear. Could I receive a better confirmation of what I have stated? Already it is declared by the "hear, hears" that I have delivered such a speech this afternoon.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now I place myself in the hands of the House. I wonder if hon. gentlemen will not realize what has been the basis of the campaign when the speech I made this afternoon is rejoiced in by hon. gentlemen opposite as giving them an opportunity once more to impale me before certain portions of this country as a wild and blood-thirsty Imperialist. I have not the least doubt that there will be newspapers in the near future, and one of them edited by an hon. gentleman opposite which will declare to their readers that I preached domination by Britain over the affairs of Canada. I ask hon. gentlemen now to be good enough to watch as I will do myself, and read with great interest the editorial attacks that will follow. But I am accustomed to it. I have become accustomed to it through many years.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Is my hon. friend referring to La Minerve?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not know that La Minerve was edited by the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret): I thought it was Le Canada.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I thought my hon. friend referred to La Minerve.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman did not think so at all. He thought he had a joke, but in such view he was mistaken. I was glad to hear the quotations made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries which constituted a large portion of his address and certain of them, I think constituted by far the best portion of his address.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Hear, hear. That is what I thought too.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The modest views of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries agree with my own. With those quotations enunciated I have no quarrel whatever; with some of them I had to do at the time of their creation, but I am no more loyal to them than I am to the others. I do not know any at this day who disagree. Nothing was said this afternoon on the part of any hon. member in this House out of accord with what was quoted by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, unless it was certain phrases that fell, I hope inadvertently from the lips of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville (Mr. Morin). Something has been achieved all right through these years, not against obstacles at all but simply as a matter of natural growth. Something has been achieved in that way of fuller national status for our country, fuller control over local affairs, fuller influence over those wider affairs that more and more affect us as we grow in stature and in consequence. I say again it has not been achieved against resistance. I have not witnessed nor come in contact with any resistance on the part of British statesmen or the British people—none whatever. But control of our own affairs, and increasing influence in other matters in which we are interested are quite consistent with the preservation of that co-operation and that unity upon which, at least, as much depends as upon the preservation of our autonomy.

I argued this afternoon against what I deemed an indecorous casting aside of one evidence of that unity without any purpose being served whatever, without any object being gained; nothing whatever being achieved in the way of control of domestic affairs or of control of our part in any affairs at all. Without anything to be gained I do not think it is worth while.

Now, I go further than I went this afternoon. I think his conduct has been a grave mistake, and I will tell the Minister of Marine and Fisheries why. In the conduct of our diplomatic affairs—using the adjective for want of a better—in the conduct of our treaty and other relations with other powers and nations of the world, it is essential, so long as the British Empire exists—whether you call it a commonwealth of nations or the British Empire; one title is as good to me as another, but the latter carries with it a tradition that I for one am not going to forget—it is going to be essential that in all these relations there shall exist harmony and a unity of purpose; in a word that all our outside relations are harmonized so that we present to the world not a discordant but a united front. I do not mean by this a hostile front but that we present to the world the fact that we are still together, and that we are not one of us pursuing a policy which conflicts and discords with the policy of the other. The means we have adopted in the past of doing so have been to associate with us in the maintenance of our outside relations the appropriate representative of the British government; and by means of such association we take care that we are not entering into covenants or commitments at variance with policies which, although they may be general, though they may be of British rather than Canadian origin, are nevertheless of consequence to us the same as they are of consequence to Britain. Such association we have always preserved, and I want to know what the reason is for not having the preservation of that association attested by the signature of the British representative? Would it not be better in later times, if anything should arise which would make it appear that we possibly had given cause for embarrassment in connection with other affairs to the British Empire, to be able to point to the signature of the British representative as attesting not only consent or approval, but rather attesting the fact that there is nothing within the four corners of the treaty that is in any way detrimental or embarrassing to other interests of the Empire?

Mr. VIEN: Does my right hon. friend mean thereby that a few matters concerning Canada alone should at all times receive the rubber stamp of the British Ambassador?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not referring to rubber stamps at all. Matters concerning Canada alone, purely domestic matters never have; but in the case of matters affecting the relations of this country with other countries it is better to have the attestation of a representative of Britain; because though they may appear—and though doubtless they often are—what one may call the sole concern of the Dominion it is not for us alone to say that such is the case. There may be others concerned, although, perhaps, not nearly so much concerned as we are; there may be other relations affected besides our own. Can we stand up and say to all the rest of this Empire "This is our concern and our concern alone" when the matter affects relations with an outside nation? If this is to be done hon. gentlemen say we still preserve unity? I do not know just what hon. genlemen are willing to preserve. What is there left to preserve if we are to make—as stated for example by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Rouville—what treaties we like, or as he expressed it, make treaties between the Dominion of Canada and foreign nations in absolute diplomatic freedom, to use his exact words. If we act in this way I ask again, what is there left to preserve? You may preserve a feeling. But a feeling may exist between any other country and the United Kingdom but, in a word what is there to preserve if there is not diplomatic unity to preserve.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Does my right hon. friend intend to start the debate over again? This is entirely out of order. I do not want to interrupt my right hon. friend but the treaty has been approved. Discussion of the signature to that treaty has nothing to do with the legislation now before the House. There is no question of the treaty in this legislation. We are asking merely the right to close our ports and impose penalties in the case of persons fishing in our territorial waters.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that I have not the right to start the debate over again, and I do not intend to. The extent to which I have gone is attributable in part to questions put and interruptions made. I will not proceed any further. I wanted to make my position on the subject clear. I will not start in to refute or attempt to destroy what has been said on the other side. I will make no reference to the alleged reply of the Prime Minister, inasmuch as from beginning to end it was based on a distortion of my own remarks.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 2.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would like to have the minister's views as to the validity of the proposed law in regard to extra-territorial rights. The committee will remember that this House passed an address two or three years ago, asking that there should be an amendment to the British North America Act giving this country the same power of legislation in personam, but in relation to extra-territorial rights or extra-territorial offences, that the British government itself possesses in relation to their own subjects. Certain objections were taken to it, but it passed this House anyway, and was forwarded, and I am not quite certain—I cannot recall definitely—as to the reasons why it has not yet been adopted; but until it is adopted, how have we the right to legislate even in personam? The minister understands me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister knows we have not the right to legislate as to what might be done by others than the citizens of Canada in extra-territorial waters. That is to say, if the offence is committed in extra-territorial waters, how can we legislate against it in the absence of an amendment to the British North America Act?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I quite understand the objection. I was not absolutely sure about it; but it was referred to the Department of Justice, and the resolution and the bill have been drafted by that department. Of course, where other people are concerned, there is no doubt we would have no right in extra-territorial waters; but it seems the Justice department are of the opinion that we can deal with Canadian citizens in those waters.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is the only way, of course, in which we can meet the obligations under the treaty, but I am inclined to think the Justice department is taking a flyer at it —taking the chance. I suppose it cannot do any harm.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend has the opinion of the Department of Justice. Certainly the Department of Justice once upon a time had a very different view. This House adopted the resolution it did adopt as a result of the opinion of the Department of Justice. The question then arose having particular regard to aeroplanes. We became interested in offences by Canadian citizens outside of our territorial jurisdiction, and the opinion of the Department of Justice then certainly was that we had no right to create an offence, whether by a Canadian citizen or anybody else, outside territorial waters. That is why they adopted that resolution. What new light has the department got?

Mr. FORKE: If the offence is committed on the high seas, who has the right? Surely some one has.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member has not quite got the drift of this question at all. The Mother Country has the territorial rights. We have all rights given us in connection with our own land. Those rights extend to the three-mile limit. What we wanted to do—and the reason this resolution was passed before—was to put ourselves in the position of being able to police these districts. Take the case of the aeroplane. Of course the law is different in reference to ships. We need not worry about that question. We wanted the right to be able to police outside the three-mile limit.

Mr. FORKE: Does the hon. member mean to say that Canada has no control over Canadian citizens on the high seas?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, that is the whole thing; and the House adopted the resolution that we should have an amendment to the British North America Act which would give us extra territorial rights? The whole House, on the advice of the Department of Justice, was told that we had not that control. I understand my hon. friend to say to-day that the Justice department has changed its mind. I think the best way of showing how it has changed its mind would be to read its opinion. I know of nothing that has turned up in the meantime to make a change.

Mr. LAPOINTE: In answer to my hon. friend's question, the Justice department prepared the legislation. We asked the Justice department to prepare the legislation to meet the requirements of the treaty, and to prepare it, of course, according to our laws, and this is the bill and the resolution which were prepared, not by us, but by the Department of Justice.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But the instructions to the department in that case would be just the same as in any other matter. Here is a treaty; we want an act to carry it into effect and provide for it, and among other matters, we have this question. Did the minister get an opinion from the department whether that bill if enacted would be the law?

Mr. LAPOINTE: We had the opinion of the Department of Justice before the bill was prepared.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Department of Justice would never vouch that this clause would be effective. It is put there, in the hope that people would follow it, and not in the belief that we have the jurisdiction to pass it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not admit that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They gave a previous opinion to that effect.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am bound by the fact that they have presented the bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the minister say the department has expressed the opinion that this House has jurisdiction to give effect to penalties for violation of these provisions?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I say the Department of Justice prepared the bill to meet what is contemplated by the treaty. They made a difference, as my right hon. friend will see when he has the bill, in section 2, as between the citizens of Canada and foreign citizens. In reference to territorial waters, it applies to everybody from everywhere. In extra-territorial waters it applies only to citizens of Canada, because we are supposed to have the right to prohibit only Canadian citizens in extra-territorial waters. They did this and prepared this legislation; they were asked by the Department of Marine and Fisheries to prepare legislation according to the law.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the Justice department—poor fellows—what else could they do? Here is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries bound by that treaty to give effect to certain things, one of which the government of Canada was not in position to give effect to. That is handed to the Justice department and they are asked to prepare a law to do that. They prepare this, and it is the best they could do. Certainly I could not have done it better if I had been asked to do it. But the Justice department will not say that we have power to give effect to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend knows that the Justice department would never lend itself to the preparation of a law which it knew to be illegal or to be one that could not be enforced.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know; they might have to. What else could they do?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am not a dictator to the Department of Justice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would be the duty of the Department of Justice to prepare a law to carry the treaty into effect. It is not their fault if we have not the power to give effect to that treaty; it is the fault of those who made the treaty. There are cases, which I shall not mention because I am not familiar with them, where the same thing has had to be done on other occasions; but on this occasion they could only do what they have done. The minister got them into that position.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes; and now he is making a treaty which in my opinion, as, I am sure, in the opinion of the Justice department as well, this country has no power to carry through.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 4.

Mr. STEVENS: Suppose the ships of some foreign country, say, Japan, come into extra-territorial waters off the Canadian coast, there would be no power to prevent them from fishing?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Mr. STEVENS: In that case does the treaty purpose to restrain the nationals of Canada and of the United States from fishing, while permitting foreign vessels to engage in the business?

Mr. LAPOINTE: As I explained this afternoon, it is impracticable for foreign vessels to come and fish off the coast without using our ports, and that we can prevent them from doing.

Mr. STEVENS: I heard the minister say that but I do not agree with him.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Well you are wrong.

Mr. STEVENS: I know a little about this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And so do other people.

Mr. STEVENS: The reason the Japanese do not fish halibut off the Pacific coast is that the market for this fish is in the New England states, in eastern Canada and elsewhere in America. There is a very small market for that class of fish in the Orient, where they get the cheaper fish. But within the last five years the Japanese have gone into the salmon canning business and have virtually put British Columbia and Alaska salmon off the British market. This appeared in a government report the other day and is also recorded in public statements. I apprehend that as soon as this restriction is imposed on the nationals of Canada and of the United States the Japanese will make efforts to find a market for this particular fish, because there is no difficulty in their coming across, fishing off the coast, icing the fish and taking it back to the Orient. The only trouble in their way at present is the lack of a market for this high-class fish. My hon. friend comforts himself with the thought that they cannot come and fish.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have the advice of experts on the subject.

Mr. STEVENS: The opinion of many to whom I have spoken, and my opinion also, is that they will come as soon as they find a market for this fish; and I expect that to occur in a few years' time. I suggest that we should be prepared in such an eventuality to know exactly what we are going to do.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then my hon. friend is opposed to the close season.

Mr. STEVENS: No, no. The minister is misinterpreting my remarks.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is no way of preventing Japanese vessels from coming and fishing off the coast if they can do so without using either our ports or the American ports. If they can come and fish under such circumstances we are unable to prevent them. Nevertheless, everybody in my hon. friend's province is asking for this legislation because it is highly important that there shall be a close season if the halibut, which are being destroyed in alarming numbers, are to be conserved. We have had representations from every source in British Columbia, and I have not heard one word against this proposed legislation and the treaty. We cannot meet the difficulty in any other way.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not for one moment suggesting that this legislation should not be passed. I merely want to know what we are going to do should foreign vessels come and fish during the close season.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have already pointed out that there is no means by which we can prevent them from coming and fishing. Perhaps my hon. friend can suggest one. We have no right to go into extra-territorial waters and stop anybody who wants to fish. If we had a treaty with the Japanese we might be able to do so, but we have not. But the advice of all experts on this subject convinces us that neither Japanese nor any other foreign vessels can carry on fishing operations in these waters which are covered by the treaty. In the extra-territorial waters our restrictions can apply only to our own citizens; similarly the American government will control its own nationals. But we believe that it is imperative that we should prevent our citizens from carrying on operations, and should make it impossible for foreigners to do the same, by closing our ports. That is the only way we can save the industry; otherwise we should have to let the halibut disappear in a very short time.

9 p.m.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 5.

Mr. STEVENS: When are the commissioners to be appointed?

Mr. LAPOINTE: When the treaty has come into force, after its ratification. They will not be appointed before next winter.

Mr. STEVENS: Not before ratification by the United States?

Mr. LAPOINTE: No.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Lapointe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 247 for the protection of the Northern Pacific Halibut Fishery.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 2—Interpretation.

Mr. STEVENS: I notice that paragraph (d) of clause 2 provides that the prohibited waters shall comprise certain waters in Canada and off the United States shore, and also the Behring sea. Why is the Behring sea included in this? It must be remembered that the Japanese, for instance, have far easier access to the Behring sea than our fishermen have.

Mr. LAPOINTE: As I said this afternoon, the treaty was drafted by the United States themselves. We were asked to include the Behring sea and I do not see any objection to doing so.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not in a position, perhaps, to offer any facts to back up what I am going to suggest; it may be that our interests there are nil. But it would appear to me as if we were legislating ourselves out of any right to enter the Behring sea, and that is not necessary for the purposes of this treaty. It must be remembered that one has to go away round the Aleutian islands, a couple of thousand miles or more from Prince Rupert, to approach the Behring sea, which is not near the halibut fisheries at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What will be the harm in including it if it is not near the halibut fisheries?

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot tell my hon. friend what the harm is unless he can tell me why it is in here. To me it is a purposeless thing, unless the United States government had some reason for putting it there.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not think myself that it serves a very important purpose, but I would not like to add a rider or reservation to the treaty to exclude the Behring sea. As my hon. friend himself says, the inclusion of the words "Behring sea" cannot have any effect, because there are no halibut there.

Mr. STEVENS: What I meant was this: The present halibut fisheries, so described, lie off the Queen Charlotte islands and the panhandle of Alaska, the southern narrow strip of the Alaskan coast running down the British Columbian coast. Up to the present the halibut fishing in the Behring sea has not been developed, but I am not so positive that there are no halibut there; it looks as if some information that we are not possessed of induced the American government to include the Behring sea in the treaty. It will certainly give a distinct advantage to the Japanese. If there is any need for including the Behring sea, in the absence of any other information we must assume there are halibut there, and if that is the case the Japanese will have access to those fisheries while we have not.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend may be sure that neither the United States nor Canada have entered into this treaty and have included the Behring sea for the benefit of the Japanese. I do not think the United States are trying to facilitate matters for the Japanese and to enable them to fish in their waters, any more than we are doing in our own waters. This is an honest effort to provide a close season and to prevent American and Canadian fishermen from destroying the halibut. Both countries have for years been trying to arrange this close season and the treaty has been drafted in such a way as to cover all possibility of fishing in violation of this close season.

Mr. STEVENS: Virtually the minister's answer to my question is that he does not know why the Behring sea is included.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Just to make sure that we shall have a close season wherever there is a possibility of halibut fishing being carried on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there not a danger in including the Behring sea? On the Atlantic I would not see very much danger so far as the extra-territorial waters are concerned, but in Behring sea you are very close to Japan, which is a fishing nation. Is not the ultimate effect just going to be to make the Behring sea a fishing preserve for the good of Japan alone? The minister says the United States would never do that. Well, what is the good of this parliament ratifying the treaty if we are only going to be able to plead in defence of our wisdom that we are relying on the good sense of the United States? We had better just refer the matter to the United States senate and tell them to act for Canada. We ourselves would like to know in ratifying this treaty what it is going to do for us. The minister says the inclusion of Behring sea will not do any harm. It looks to me as if it would; it looks to me as if it would shut Canadians out should they be disposed to go up there, and make of Behring sea a sort of reserve for Japan.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend may be sure there is no idea of making it a reserve for Japan.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is that not the effect?

Mr. LAPOINTE: This treaty has been carefully considered by the officers of the fisheries departments of both the United States and Canada. It is the result of their combined investigations and of what they know of the fishery conditions in these various waters, and they thought that Behring sea should be included. We cannot prevent the Japanese from going there; there is no doubt about that, but we want to have a close season in as considerable an area as possible.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot conceive of any possible reason for including Behring sea if it is the object to preserve the halibut fisheries of the Pacific coast. Furthermore, if a reason does exist, then we are simply abandoning the Behring sea to the Japanese. That is the effect of this legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If that is the effect, my hon. friend may be sure that both Canada and the United States will be willing to amend the legislation so as to exclude the Behring sea.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no doubt that is correct, but it is a remarkable plea to make in defence of a treaty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I do not admit that that would be the effect.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know the minister does not admit it, but this is his argument: I cannot see what good the inclusion of these words is going to do; I cannot see why it should not perhaps do harm, but if it turns out that way we shall be willing to amend the treaty.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Those are not exactly my words. The middle part of my right hon. friend's remarks is from his own lips.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is simply a plainer statement of what my hon. friend has just said.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Knowingly in possession of halibut unlawfully caught.

Mr. STEVENS: I want to point out again to the minister a possible effect of this. We have not developed on the Pacific coast the trawler system of fishing to any considerable extent for reasons that may perhaps disappear as time goes on and the country expands. If trawler fishing in the Behring sea is developed; if good fishing grounds are discovered there, Canadian and American vessels catching halibut in their trawls would be forced to comply with this act; the halibut would have to be turned in and sold, and so forth. But the Japanese, fishing right alongside, would have the full privilege of fishing with trawlers and keeping the fish. Within the past five or ten years the Japanese have developed a salmon fishery in the Behring sea which is rapidly displacing the fishing of the Americans and Canadians on the Pacific coast. I merely cite that to illustrate that fishing in that district is in its infancy and that its development under the conditions that I have described would result in disaster to us.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend knows that the close season is for three months only, during the winter. I do not think there would be any salmon fishing in the Behring sea in the month of January.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not talking about salmon fishing; I am talking about halibut fishing.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend suggested that while engaged in other fishing the Japanese might catch halibut and would be entitled to keep it. But there is no other fishing there during that close season.

Mr. STEVENS: But the Japanese can go in there with trawlers; they can trawl for halibut, and if they discover a halibut bed in the Behring sea they may take the fish and keep them. Does my hon. friend not see the force of that contention? If instead of arguing away from the point the minister would admit that he does not know why the Behring sea is included and that while it is too late to remedy it he would undertake to examine into the matter and if possible get the Americans to exclude the Behring sea, that would be a reasonable answer.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That far I can go, surely.

Mr. STEVENS: It is hardly sufficient to answer that it is not likely to happen. I rather expect that not only in the Behring sea but on the Pacific coast the old beds which we are seeking to preserve will within five years be fished quite extensively by the Japanese.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—International Fisheries Commission.

Mr. STEVENS: I have just seen the bill at this moment. I note that there are to be four commissioners, who are to be empowered to make recommendations concerning regulations.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This is to carry out the recommendation of the International Commission of 1918.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved the third reading of the bill.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a clause in this bill has just been drawn to my attention which does seem rather remarkable. Section 13 says:

> This act shall come into force on a day to be named by the Governor in Council—

So much for order in council.

> —and may be repealed by the Governor in Council,—

So much more for order in council.

> —provided that it shall not be repealed by the Governor in Council at any time during the existence of the International Fisheries Commission hereinbefore authorized.

Where is this government going to stop? Why not ask parliament for a bill authorizing it to make treaties with any country at any time of any kind and repeal them at any time and on any occasion? It would save a lot of the time of the House. The government asks for power of unconditional repeal; what is parliament for? If parliament deals with the passing of an act, surely parliament should be asked when the act should be repealed. There is no reason for asking parliament's authority to pass if you give the government unconditional authority to repeal. There have been cases where the power of repeal has been reserved to be exercised on the happening of a certain event named by parliament; thus parliament has the whole say. But here there is no event at all; the government decides when to repeal the act that parliament passes. Where is this order in council policy going to stop? I do not know anything else I could suggest to the government to enable it to take everything into its own hands and away from parliament that it has omitted. This is one art the ministers have mastered, and possibly having mastered something they ought to be left to its exercise.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): There is nothing very mysterious about this thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not mysterious; I did not say so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is certainly not mysterious.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is autocratic.

Mr. LAPOINTE: This close season cannot be enforced until the United States congress ratifies the treaty and until the exchange of ratifications takes place. We cannot have this law in force now—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not object to that, but—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Another condition may arise that would give occasion for the putting of the legislation into force. If the United States government, without the ratification of the treaty by the United States senate, passes similar legislation, enacting exactly the same clauses, the Governor in Council may then put this into force, and that cannot be done otherwise than by order in council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend—

Mr. LAPOINTE: Now, if the right hon. gentleman will permit me—

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will excuse me, I did not take any exception—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I would like to continue if my right hon. friend will allow me.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not want the minister to misrepresent me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I have not misrepresented anybody.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He intimated I was objecting to the government having power to call the act into effect. I was not. I objected to the government having power unconditionally to repeal it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It was not necessary for my hon. friend to interrupt me to say what he has just said. The difference between what this government is doing now and that famous government by order in council to which he referred is this: Parliament knows what we are going to do. We are asking parliament to give us the power to put this law into force if certain conditions arise. My right hon. friend was legislating by order in council. He was inaugurating policies in this country without parliament ever having been consulted on those policies. That is just the difference.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask the hon. gentleman now to name one single instance.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Oh!

[Mr. Lapointe.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Already the hon. gentleman is becoming the official jeerer for the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE: No, but my right hon. friend is something else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask him now to give one single instance in the ten years when the late government did by order in council anything which it was not authorized to do by the parliament of this country.

Mr. LAPOINTE: If it is quite in order I am quite willing to answer my right hon. friend. I can give him one specific instance if he wants it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: During two consecutive sessions of parliament the government of my right hon. friend introduced legislation in the House to appoint a purchasing commission. The bill was fought in parliament and the government had to withdraw it. The following session the same thing happened again, and the bill was withdrawn a second time, and then when every member of the House had gone home after the close of the session an order in council was passed instituting the purchasing commission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He has come to a specific case as he states. I tell the hon. member that the order in council which was passed was entirely within the power of the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A laugh does not answer. A laugh may be all that is within the power of hon. gentlemen, but it is no answer. Not only so, but the government obtained the opinion of the Justice department.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Read the opinion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Read it! The government obtained the opinion of the Justice department stating that we had the power to pass what we did. We did not pass indeed any order in council establishing a buying commission. We passed an order in council whereby through a commission the government could buy.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I did not say the government had no right to do it. The government had any right under the War Measures Act. They could do anything under that act, and that is what they did in that specific instance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman is wrong there. If it had been passed under the War Measures Act, the War Measures Act was passed by parliament and it was legislation of parliament the same as any other legislation. As a matter of fact, it was not passed on the authority of that act at all. The hon. gentleman should be more careful. It was passed under the authority of powers vested in ministers, under the various acts that give the department power. While I am on my feet the Minister of Justice once, not intentionally I know, made the statement last session that every order in council of the late government which had gone before the courts to determine our authority to pass it had been found ultra vires. Not being certain at the time I afterwards went into the matter with the Justice department and reviewed the whole case, and I found that never in the history of the late government was one single order in council which we passed reversed or declared to be illegal by any court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Unfortunately I have no right to answer.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX ACT, 1916 AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend subsection three of section 13 of The Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, and to remove the restriction of the said subsection by which the liability to pay the tax imposed continues for the period of only three years and by which the minister is permitted at any time within three years only to assess such person for the tax, and to provide that the act shall be construed as if the said restriction had never been contained therein.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: When the Business Profits War Tax Act was passed it was evidently treated as a measure of a temporary character. There was a clause in it which reads as follows:

Any person liable to pay the tax shall continue to be so liable for the period of three years from the time at which such tax would have been payable.

The business profits tax has ceased to be operative. No new taxes are being levied under the act, but there is a considerable sum of indebtedness to the government arising from past years, and of course we desire to preserve our right to collect these moneys. There may be some doubt arising from the use of that expression "liable for the period of three years", and we are bringing in this resolution to remove any doubt. The effect of it is that the parties shall be liable. It becomes a debt to the government of Canada to be collected at any time the government are able to collect it.

Mr. HANSON: Without any limitation at all?

Mr. FIELDING: As to time, certainly. It is like any other debt.

Mr. HANSON: But unlike any other debt there is no limitation. I do not see why the minister should make it perpetual without any limitation. If the government does not collect say within three years from the date of the assessment, why should the Crown be in any better position than an ordinary creditor?

Mr. FIELDING: Because the Crown is at all times in a better position than a private claimant.

Mr. GOULD: I understand that this will do away with the privilege that obtained in the past of taking notes from certain companies in payment of taxes.

Mr. FIELDING: It does not take away any privilege the government have, but it makes it clear the government have power to collect the debt in any way in which they think they can collect it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister is quite right in bringing down this bill if it is what I assume it is, that is, if it is to remove the limitation of three years and preserve to the Crown its full right of priority to these taxes over all other claims. Something has been said as to the necessity for this and the hardship it may work if collections are allowed to be made for a longer period than in the ordinary case. I would like to say in connection with all these collections that are being delayed, my hon. friend is doing just what I did, refusing to put business out of business. That is why he needs this bill. He has been in power now for eighteen months and more, and the reason that he wants this bill is that he wants Canada to continue to function. He wants to be able to give people time, and it is absolutely necessary to give them time. I think he is doing the right thing. What we did before was to enable people to carry on. They ought not to be allowed to escape payment of the debt on the one hand whenever the debt can be collected, nor on the other hand should the Crown lose its absolute priority. The Crown has absolute priority as to the course to be pursued, and unless the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) thinks that we should have sold out the three hundred odd farmers in his own province that were carried there is necessity for this kind of provision. I take it that what the minister is doing is simply carrying out the old instructions that were given. Those were that every man that could be made to pay should pay; but that if you could only collect a fraction of your debt by closing industries, shutting up factories, and adding to unemployment, it was not good business for the government to do it. I take it that that is what my hon. friend is doing.

Mr. GOULD: In reference to the statement made by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) that three hundred farmers were not sold out in Saskatchewan I should like to point out that when he was a minister of the Crown he seemed to consider it his duty to impose heavy penalties in the case of these farmers. Instead of granting concessions such as are proposed, a penalty of 7 per cent was imposed upon those farmers who were in arrears, while the company referred to was allowed to give a note for arrears. I did complain of that. That is the difference between the treatment extended to "big business' and that granted to small concerns.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There has been no difference in the procedure at all. Anybody who knows the facts knows that to be true. A whole lot of nonsense was talked and all sorts of allegations were made against the late government. I will ask my hon. friend the minister now if he has had to make any change whatever in the general instructions that were given in connection with these taxes. Further I am going to ask him this: Take for example the Riordon case that has been referred to. Why, pulp now is worth $30 or $40 a ton more than it was when it was thought we should sell out the Riordons. If we had done that we should have cut out the claims of hundreds of farmers in the north country. I am going to ask the minister now if he has sold the Riordons out or if he has in any way changed the instructions that were given?

Mr. CAHILL: I should like to ask if the Riordons have paid off their creditors through the country?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: You will have to ask the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: I cannot answer the first question. In regard to the question of my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) I think it has been the rule hitherto to refuse to give any information, regarding the government's claim against any particular person for income tax. I regard that as a confidential matter and I propose to adhere to the rule.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the position taken by my hon. friend is absolutely right. I should like to point out though just what is sometimes done by hon. gentlemen. The minister has said, and said properly that this is not a matter to which any publicity should be given. Why, the old government was charged with having brought down legislation which would prevent the giving of particulars in each and every one of these cases.

Mr. MARTELL: Does not my hon. friend think it is often a good policy to give people time to meet the claims against them?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is perfectly right, making sure that no claim is waived. There was no difference in the world made between any of these cases. Anyone who got time had to pay for it, and every man was forced to pay that could be made to do so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sorry the Minister of Finance cannot give information as to the Riordon case. However, I do not find fault with him for not giving it. So far as I know I do not think he had any part in the dishonest, virulent, and utterly disgraceful campaign that was carried on in connection with the Riordon note. Nothing was so likely to impose on the ignorant as a campaign of that sort. The Minister of Agriculture laughs in glee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What I was noting, Mr. Chairman, was that when my hon. friend stated the ignorant were imposed on he took a deliberate look towards the Progressives.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I had in mind, I admit, a real interrogation point as to why the campaign should have imposed on the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Gould), I did not know until this evening that it really had. I am sorry if my remarks necessarily included him. I knew that it had imposed on the Minister of Agriculture. I know that he stooped to use it. I knew that he filled the pages of his paper in Regina with the most scandalous advertisements deliberately intended to mislead the people of Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have no paper.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend does not know of it; he is not responsible for the Leader. In one sense I do not believe he is but he was the parent of this campaign, and the pages of that paper were filled with paid advertisements deliberately intended to deceive the hard-working people on the question, to deceive the honest electors. He did deceive them by the hundreds and he is responsible for the dishonest campaign that was carried on. The Riordons were treated just the same as everybody else, just in the same way as this government has treated them ever since they came into power—precisely the same. Whatever was done was done in the public interest. All that the note given in this case did was to fix the amount so that there could be no future dispute on the part of the Riordons. The note carried interest at the rate of 7 per cent, it was a demand note for which they were liable at any time.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not saying this in the spirit of fault finding but if the Riordons are trying to reorganize their affairs and get on their feet will not this discussion have the effect of preventing them from achieving their purpose?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think it will have that effect. I do not think it will affect them very seriously, if I thought it would I would not discuss the matter. I hope they will be able to get on their feet again; I believe an honest attempt is being made to do so.

Mr. FORKE: If this discussion is going to be kept up I hardly see how we are going to prorogue by Saturday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is just as well that the truth should come out in regard to this as in regard to other matters, especially when we find intelligent people like the hon. member for Assiniboia associating himself deliberately with those responsible for the campaign to which I have referred.

Mr. GOULD: I may inform my right hon. friend, and I wish to state most positively that I have never referred publicly to the Riordon incident, and this is the first time I have ever made mention of it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am very glad to hear the hon. member say so. I rather thought my allusion of a moment ago did him an injustice. I now know that it did. However, I have said all that is necessary and I think the whole situation is now clear to the House. Sometimes it is hard to describe a shade of difference in colour, but if there was one thing that was blacker and more indelibly disgraceful than all the rest it was the conduct of certain gentlemen opposite with respect to the Riordon matter.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the Minister of Finance give the committee any idea of the probable amount of arrears carried by the government?

Mr. FIELDING: I understand the question is in relation to the amounts unpaid. On account of the business profits, I am advised that about $8,000,000 remains unpaid out of $200,000,000 levied.

Mr. SHAW: I have no objection to the resolution, but, as a matter of information, I would like to know whether the three year restriction was imposed at the outset?

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member will admit that I am not in a position to answer. I think the idea was that the act was of a temporary character; and as a matter of fact it was suspended after a short time, but I cannot say definitely as to the cause. I am only guessing at it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was entirely an act of a temporary character. It was the same here as in England and other places, an emergency matter, and of such a character that it would never do for the permanent kind of revenue—absolutely unfitted for normal times—and it was renewed each year for the three years. Of course, when times were good and the money could be collected there was no trouble; but when deflation came we certainly did not want to throw off all these claims with one hand or to throw people on the street with the other hand; and the extension is necessary for the purpose of keeping the prior lien as against all the property these people had.

Mr. SHAW: Could the ex-Minister of Finance inform me whether or not the act contemplated operation for a period of three years; or whether, as far as the Crown was concerned, it could only recover for that period?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was renewed each year. It was only an act in the first instance for one year, and it was then renewed for another year.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 248 to amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE INCOME WAR TAX ACT, 1917, AMENDMENT BILL

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917, and to provide:

1. That in any case the income of a tax-payer shall be deemed to be not less than the income from his chief occupation, and if he has income from more than one source the minister shall have power to determine which one or more, or which combination thereof shall, for the purpose of the Act, constitute the tax-payer's chief occupation, and the income therefrom shall be taxed accordingly.

2. That such reasonable rate of interest on borrowed capital used in the business to earn the income, as the minister in his discretion may determine, shall be allowed as a deduction, notwithstanding the rate of interest payable by the tax-payer. To the extent that the interest payable by the tax-payer is in excess of the amount allowed by the minister, it shall not be allowed as a deduction.

3. That in computing the amount of the profits or gains to be assessed, a deduction shall not be allowed in respect of the disbursements or expenses not wholly, exclusively and necessarily laid out or expended for the purpose of earning the income, or any outlay, loss or replacement of capital or any depreciation, depletion or obsolescence, except as otherwise provided in the Act.

4. That further provisions be made respecting the exemption of the income of Consuls and Consuls General, and of officials or officers of a foreign country, and respecting the exemption of the income of officials of Great Britain or any of its self-governing colonies and of the pensions of any member of the military, naval or air forces of His Majesty's Allies.

5. That in the case of a return by an employer, the penalty shall be further limited to an amount equal to ten per cent of the aggregate amount of the tax payable by the employees who should be reported on such return, but in any case should the penalty be less than two dollars then in lieu thereof the penalty shall be two dollars.

6. That sections twelve to twenty-one of the said act be repealed and provisions be made regarding notices of appeal, and for an appeal on notice to the Exchequer Court of Canada from the decision of the minister, and further proceedings thereon.

7. That all taxes, interest and penalties payable under the act shall constitute a lien upon the assets of the tax-payer, both real and personal, and this lien shall be deemed to attach or to have attached, on the first day of May, immediately succeeding the taxation year in respect of which the tax was payable, or to which the interest and penalties relate, and shall have priority over any mortgage, conveyance or securities as shall be prescribed.

8. That when the minister has knowledge or suspects that any person is or is about to become indebted to a tax-payer he may demand of such person that the moneys otherwise payable to the tax-payer be in whole or in part paid over to the Receiver General of Canada on account of the tax-payer's liability under this act.

[Mr. Fielding.]

9. That further provisions be made regarding distress in default of payment, and for the recovery of all taxes, interest and penalties in the Exchequer Court of Canada, and for the registration of a certificate of the Commissioner of Taxation as to amounts remaining unpaid, and the enforcement thereof.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: I think, as far as these resolutions go, they are likely to have the entire concurrence of the House, and I am inclined to think two or three hon. members would be glad if we would go much further; but I am cherishing the hope that the resolutions will be found satisfactory. The resolutions do not introduce much that is new. In several instances they are really intended to clarify the existing law. Where a party is engaged in several lines of business, questions arise as to the particular branch of business on which the tax should be levied. It is desirable we should make it clear that whatever is determined to be his chief occupation shall be recognized as the basis of taxation; and as doubts have arisen in that respect, it is made clear here that the minister, in the event of a dispute of that character, shall have the right to determine what is his chief ocupation; and the tax shall be levied accordingly. It is, perhaps, debatable whether we have that power now, but this is designed to make it quite clear.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister goes a little further. I went through the resolution this afternoon. I think we have had the power always; but the minister is going a little further now. He is providing now that if a man holds two positions, or if he is in two businesses, the minister will have the right to say "both of these are main businesses," and treat them accordingly.

Mr. FIELDING: It is giving the minister the power to determine disputes of that character. That is one purpose of the resolution.

Mr. MARLER: Will this section of the act not permit the minister to distinguish what is class A income and what is class B income also?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, it will give the minister that power.

Mr. MARLER: In other words, the income will be the sum of the earning capacity of the tax-payer, no matter from what source.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Mr. MARLER: And also that the tax will be paid on the greatest income the tax-payer has; in other words, if a man's class A income exceeds his class B income, he has to pay on his class A income.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the old law.

Mr. MARLER: Would the minister inform the committee why no deduction is allowed from class A income, providing the deduction is of a character such as allowed on class B income? In other words, I will illustrate it in this way: the class A income of the taxpayer amounts to $5,000, and the class B income to $2,000. There are deductions allowed under the act with respect to the class B income of $2,500; consequently the deductions, taking a hypothetical case, are more than the man's class B income. The overplus of $500 is not allowed as deductions from class A income; hence the tax-payer is not paying on his net income.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He is paying on his net income, but he cannot deduct his collateral losses, that is all.

Mr. MARLER: No, it is not a case of loss at all. It is a question of actual carrying charges. When the income tax came into effect in 1917, people had many obligations; subsequently, under the administration of the act, and quite correctly so, the income was divided into class A or earned income and class B, unearned income, or income which the man derived from investments which the man had put aside. Unfortunately many people incurred various charges such as mortgages on real estate, interest on borrowed money and so forth, and cases have happened where these charges properly incurred are allowed as deductions from class B income. I should like the minister to explain the theory in the act by which a man does not pay on his net income but pays on the whole of class A income even if he has legal and properly deductable charges from class B income.

Mr. FIELDING: There can be no deductions from earned income. Whatever is determined to be the earned income becomes the income of the man's greatest occupation, and from that there can be no deduction.

Mr. MARLER: I hope the minister does not think me impertinent in pressing the point. If so, I will stop immediately.

Mr. FIELDING: I am sure my hon. friend would not be that.

Mr. MARLER: When the tax-payer's legal deductions under class B income are more than the total of that income, why should not the difference be allowed on account of class A? In other words, why should not the tax-payer pay on his net income? This is a very important point, because the tax bears very heavily on the people at the present time, particularly on professional men who have a small amount of savings and who, unfortunately, at times have charges which they acquired in past years and which in many cases are more than the whole of their class B income. They struggle along notwithstanding that, but under the income tax law they are not allowed to deduct anything on account of this. They are charged on the whole of their earnings, and I cannot see the justice of that feature of the act.

Mr. CHURCH: I hope the minister will see his way to amend the law in order that the tax may bear less heavily on those who are least able to pay. The income tax to-day is a great hardship on the man with comparatively small earnings and moderate means. It is not a very desirable form of taxation, for it strikes the smaller man at many points; it begins at his breakfast table and is double-edged. If the man has an income of $4,000 he has to pay his municipal tax on the 1st of May in one instalment, and then the federal authorities come along a few days afterwards and tax him a second time. In other words, the small wage earner is taxed to death. The Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin, when he brought down his budget on the 5th of February, announced a reduction in the income tax in Great Britain because the country was expecting it. The wage earners in Canada are expecting the same thing, because the present system of taxation is not equitable. In my own city I know of a man who was assessed on $50,000. He represented to the municipal authorities that his income was only $25,000, and they accepted his word and marked it down to that figure. A few days afterwards he took out an insurance policy for several hundred thousand dollars on his business. That instance is well known. But there is no difficulty in the tax collector getting after the small man, and he is hit hardest. There should be some co-ordination of the methods of taxation in this country. In the United States the federal, the state and the municipal authorities agree to allow certain fields of taxation to be exploited exclusively by each of these bodies respectively, and the system has worked out satisfactorily. This tax in Canada has been so onerous that charity is being starved. This is a fact so far as Toronto is concerned. When any business man is appealed to on behalf of the hospitals he declares that his subscription is already paid to the Minister of Finance of the country. The whole basis of taxation in Canada is wrong. If the war is to be paid for, and nobody suggests that it should not, some method should be found of distributing the burden as equitably as possible so that those who are able will pay more than the less fortunate tax-payers. I hope that next year the minister will provide that incomes up to $4,000, say, shall be exempt from federal taxation. And in the meantime some means ought to be found of co-ordinating the various branches of taxation in this country.

Mr. MARLER: Perhaps the minister would prefer that I should defer any questions I may have to ask until a later stage.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know that I can give any particular reason for the law as it exists. It is the law, and I have not been able to change it. I cannot enter into the reasons that actuated those gentlemen who framed the bill.

Mr. MARLER: The minister has his able assistant with him, but I cannot see where the justice of the law comes in.

Mr. FIELDING: The ruling of the department is based on the law, and I am informed that when the act was first introduced the Minister of Finance of that day so explained its purpose. However, the law will have to be judged as it is drawn, and if there is any doubt about the matter the Minister of Justice will be my adviser. The question arises at times respecting interest on borrowed money. It is claimed that the interest on borrowed money in whatever form it may be is a proper charge against a man's business and should be deducted before his income is declared.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That has always been the case.

Mr. FIELDING: I am informed that it is doubtful whether the law permits that now. We are proposing to make it clear that where interest is paid in any form in business it is a proper charge against the business and should be deducted before the income is declared.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole question was as to whether it was borrowed against the business. There is one point, however, on which I would comment. The minister is to fix the rate of interest. Why is that done? Suppose a man has to float a bond at 6 per cent and the annual rate of interest comes to 4 per cent. Is it intended that the actual expenditure which would be 6 per cent will be discounted and cut to 4 per cent? Surely the department should not interfere with the details of the actual costs of carrying on business.

Mr. HANSON: I may put a case to the minister. In the year 1921 a company which had made capital commitments prior to that time found themselves in the position of being compelled to borrow money on the market at what proved to be the peak price. Bonds at 8 per cent sold to the underwriters, we will say, at 90, 92 or 95. These bonds ran for a period of twenty years, and can only be callable—I am speaking of industrial institutions—after the stated interval, at a premium. Does the minister propose that as the current rate of interest drops from time to time it shall be allowed as against the income and that the business itself will have to absorb the difference? In the supposititious case I have cited the money cost nearly 110 per cent and the bonds were for a period of twenty years. That was a definite charge against the business as a capital expenditure. It seems to me wholly unfair that in a bona fide case of this character the company shall not be allowed to charge the full amount they have to pay. I quite appreciate that the bond discount is another phase of the question, about which I shall have something to say a little later.

Mr. FIELDING: The ordinary, reasonable rate of interest would be allowed. But suppose the bonds were issued at a high rate of interest, and produced a premium, that practically is not the real rate of interest at all. I hope my hon. friend sees the point.

Mr. HANSON: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: If the bonds are issued at, say, 7 per cent, and are sold at a premium, 7 per cent is not the real interest on that transaction. The object here is to give the minister power to fix a reasonable rate of interest, which would be the ordinary current rate. If under exceptional circumstances a high rate is paid, it would be for the minister to say whether he would allow it or not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Supposing the 7 per cent bond is sold at a premium of 110, this gives the man 6 per cent money. This presents no difficulty. The whole $110 goes into the business and he is really paying only 6 per cent, although the face of the bond says 7 per cent. If it is a case of fraud, and the money has not gone into the business, the department could look after that under the present law. I really think my hon. friend has not thought this out.

Mr. FIELDING: It is an extreme case, but just for illustration suppose the man issues his 10 per cent bond at 120, he is not paying 10 per cent, and he should not be allowed 10 per cent.

Mr. HANSON: He would not get it.

Mr. STEVENS: He is being allowed only 10 per cent on 100, not 10 per cent on 120.

Mr. FIELDING: But if the bond is issued at a premium, then you are paying a less rate of interest in reality than appears on the face of the bond.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Surely what he is allowed is the interest he pays, and this is really only 6 per cent on the money he gets. I have every confidence in the minister's adviser in such a matter as this, but either it has been wrongly stated to us or the principle is wrong. As the minister has it to-day, he can make any allowance he likes. He can allow me on what I owe my bank 5 per cent, whereas I may be paying 8. Usually the man whose credit is lowest pays the high rate. According to this, anyone who is in that position is going to have to pay on an income that he really is not getting. In a word, he is going to be penalized for his own poverty.

Mr. FIELDING: If he issues 10 per cent bonds at 110, and then claims he is paying 10 per cent and asks for a deduction accordingly, that is certainly not the real rate of interest he is paying.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But his income tax return does not show what rate he is paying. Supposing he issued a 10 per cent $1,000 bond and sold it for $1,200, he would pay on the $1,000 bond $100, and he would return in his income tax statement the $100 paid. The 10 per cent does not appear at all. That $100 should be allowed. It works out really to be a little more than 8 per cent interest.

Mr. FIELDING: The bond itself bears 10 per cent as the rate of interest, and he will be tempted to claim 10 per cent, and that is what he would be allowed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He cannot.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not so sure of that. What we are concerned about is that only a reasonable and fair rate of interest ought to be allowed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I may be charged more than is fair and reasonable. Hon. gentlemen to my left say that nearly all of their constituents are charged an excessive rate of interest and if they are, and cannot help paying it, it ought to be allowed them. Why should the minister be empowered to say: Here is a farmer paying 9 per cent, but we are going to allow him 6 per cent when he puts in his tax papers.

Mr. FIELDING: In the case cited of a farmer paying the ordinary rate of interest in his district, this would be a reasonable rate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why should the minister have any jurisdiction? A man is not going to pay any higher interest than he can help.

Mr. FIELDING: In the illustration I gave a man may claim he is paying 10 per cent because he pays that on the bond. Of course, that is only an illustration. I do not see any objection so long as the rate of interest to be credited is fair and reasonable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose he sells his 10 per cent bond at a premium of 25 per cent, he would get in cash $125. As against this sum which has gone into the business there is only a charge of $100. His interest payments, although 10 per cent on the face of the bond, are really only 7½ per cent on the actual money that is in the business. It would be just exactly the same, assuming that 7½ per cent was the proper rate, if he issued a 7½ per cent bond and sold it at par. The only room for fraud would be if the man sold his 10 per cent bond at a premium of 25 per cent and put only the $100 in his business, pocketing the $25. Then I would quite agree with my hon. friend, because the man is not paying interest for it. But that is something which could be checked to-day.

Mr. FIELDING: As a matter of fact, he could put that $25 anywhere he likes, but I am advised that according to the law and practice that $25 is not taxable and we do not get the benefit. If he sells at a premium a $1,000 bond bearing interest at 10 per cent he will claim that that is the rate of interest he is paying. Should he in such a case be credited with paying 10 per cent?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. FIELDING: Very well, then this law will say he is not.

Mr. STEVENS: Take the illustration advanced by the minister himself of a $100 bond sold at $120 bearing 10 per cent interest. As a matter of fact that means interest at 8 1/3 per cent. If the man puts the $20 premium in his pocket, he must show that as a return in his own personal income.

Mr. FIELDING: I am informed that that is not the custom.

Mr. STEVENS: Then it is a fraud. On the other hand, if he turns it into the business, it stands there as part of his capital and ought to be allowed the full interest charged.

Mr. FIELDING: I am told that according to the practice of the department, the $25, or whatever the amount, is not taxable. I repeat the case: A man says, "I am paying interest at 10 per cent," and he asks to be allowed that. Under this law he would be told, "No, that is not fair because you do not really pay 10 per cent, you pay 7 or 8 per cent, and we charge you that rate." What is unfair in that?

Mr. HANSON: Let me put a concrete case to the minister which came under my own personal observation. In 1921 when money was at a peak price and people had to take care of commitments made prior to the depression, they were obliged to go out and borrow in the market at 8 per cent par. Bonds were sold to underwriters at less than par and were put on the market at one point below par so that the money actually netted the investor 8.10 per cent. Three years later money eases away and is worth only 6 per cent, and these same bonds are quoted at that rate. As I understand it, the purpose of the resolution is to give the minister power to allow only the payment at the rate of 6 per cent on that money, although as a matter of fact the borrower is paying over $160,000 a year interest on the $2,000,000 borrowed. This gives the minister power to allow only $120,000. That is not fair; it is not just.

Mr. FIELDING: In the case my hon. friend mentions there would be no difficulty whatever. The man is actually paying 8 per cent or a fraction more; under the circumstances that would be a fair and reasonable rate and would be allowed.

Mr. HANSON: That is not what the resolution says.

Mr. FIELDING: So far as giving the minister power is concerned, I am not anxious to have that power; if it could be exercised by somebody else, I should be happy to agree to that. But I am told that in the experience of the department cases are arising which make this a necessary measure.

Mr. HANSON: I can understand cases arising where a man has deliberately bonded his property by the issue of high interest-bearing bonds and has taken the premium himself without putting it into his business. That, of course, is a form of fraud.

Mr. FIELDING: He has a right to do it.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. HANSON: I do not say he is doing it illegally, but he is certainly doing it with the idea of defeating the act. A case of that kind should be met on its own merits in a different way. Now, money may at a given time be worth five per cent while a man is paying over 8 per cent for a period of say twenty years. If the minister will give me an assurance that the department will in a bona fide case allow the actual amount of interest paid, I shall not have another word to say, but there is no such assurance in the resolution.

Mr. FIELDING: In the case cited by my hon. friend, where a man has paid 8¼ per cent; where that is the rate he is obliged to pay and he is going to pay it for twenty years, he should be allowed that rate. All these cases will have to be judged on their merits. In all laws of this kind somebody must have the responsibility and I do not know how you can do otherwise than leave it to the minister and trust him to exercise the power in a rational manner. As I say, though, if some other method could be devised it would be very agreeable to me.

Mr. STEVENS: Let us say that bonds bearing interest at 6 per cent and extending over a term of five years are sold at 90; that would make the rate of interest 8 per cent. As I understand it, in a case like that the department will not allow the spread of that capital loss as an interest charge over the succeeding five years, though in the ordinary course of business that is exactly what is done. When a firm sells a bond issue at a loss they simply calculate it as an added interest on the bond, and in my opinion that is the way it should be dealt with by the department. But as I understand it, unless the matter is rectified in this legislation, the department simply call that a capital loss and no allowance is made.

Mr. FIELDING: That is true.

Mr. STEVENS: Does my hon. friend look upon that as fair treatment?

Mr. FIELDING: That is the law as it has been administered for some time. I am not anxious to invent troubles; I meet those that come. We were advised by the Department of Justice that the discount was a capital loss and should not be allowed.

Mr. STEVENS: Undoubtedly the Justice department would give such a decision, based on the law as it stands, but what I suggest is that we should adjust the law so that what is in common practice recognized as an interest charge shall be so regarded by the law. Then the Justice department would certainly give the opinion that under the amended law the discount would be an interest charge and not a capital loss.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Unless my memory is all wrong, these difficulties have arisen since I had anything to do with the administering of the department.

Mr. FIELDING: Possibly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was not familiar with that decision of the Justice department; I had thought that everybody was allowed his proper disbursements connected with the carrying on of his business. Certainly bank charges of interest, bank charges on a man's overdraft, on the discounting of his notes and so on, are very proper charges against his business, and I have never heard that challenged. Nor have I ever heard challenged what actually happens when a loan is made. Suppose money is worth 6 per cent and a business concern making a bond issue puts it out, for the purpose of keeping its credit in good shape, at 5 per cent, selling it at a discount. Now, when the investor buys bonds at a discount he regards it as just so much more interest to him, and if he buys it at a premium it is the same thing reversed. Unless firms are permitted to make that discount up in the ordinary added charges the effect is to make one rate of interest for the man who sells up to the market and another rate for the man who sells below the market, and that does not seem to be fair.

Mr. BAXTER: I assume that the department acting on the advice of the Justice department, has been following certain English decisions which may or may not be applicable to our act; at all events they think they are. Under these decisions the interest that has been paid to banks on what might be called current accounts, temporary loans, has been deducted, but interest payable in respect of bond issue has not been permitted to be deducted. These at all events are the English authorities, and I understand that the minister is introducing this legislation for the purpose of allowing a deduction on bond interest on other permanent securities. I am in sympathy with what the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) says, but at the same time I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that all over the country outrageous means are being resorted to for the purpose of evading the income tax. Those of us who are putting in honest statements, rendering an account up to the last cent of our income, are being penalized for our honesty in favour of people who are putting in statements that are not a bit better than a tissue of lies. I want to see something that will protect the honest man whose case was referred to by the hon. member for York-Sunbury but that will give the minister or will give someone the power, if a company makes a sham issue of bonds at an outrageous rate of interest, payable perhaps in New York or elsewhere outside the Dominion, and not taxable, to allow that business only the fair and legitimate amount of interest that ought to be borne by it. So far as this legislation is intended to prevent fraud of that character I am heartily in favour of it, but I would like to see the provision accompanied by some rider to protect the man who had honestly issued bonds at a high rate of interest some years ago from having to submit to a smaller rate of interest merely because the price of money drops for the moment. At the same time I wish to reaffirm my adhesion to the principle that the department or someone should have ample authority to prevent these outrageous frauds that are taking place in almost every direction.

Mr. MILLAR: I would like to ask a question that is very much akin to some already asked, but it affects more particularly the man who borrows direct from the bank. When one borrows from a bank at 8 per cent the bank retains the interest at the time the loan is made. Suppose for instance one borrows $100 at 8 per cent, he will get only $92. The note is renewed every three months and the interest compounded would probably accumulate to almost 9 per cent. We will say 9 per cent for the purpose of illustrating the point. Would the borrower be allowed in connection with his income tax return the interest he has actually paid or just 8 per cent?

Mr. FIELDING: I doubt if you could reduce these various suggestions into writing. You must allow some measure of discretion to someone, and I doubt if any better discretion can be exercised than the minister can bring to bear on the question. Temporary interest has hitherto been allowed. I would think in the case cited by my hon. friend that whatever is the usual and customary rate in that part of the country an intelligent minister would say should be allowed. We must suppose that the minister has some intelligence, and if in one part of the country the interest rate is a high one, if it is the ordinary current rate the minister would allow it, and if in other parts the interest rate is low, I think the minister ought to be allowed to recognize that as the proper rate. You must give some discretion to the minister whoever he may be. The suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John commends itself very much to me, but I doubt if you could put it into writing to make it effective. I can assure the House that there is no desire on the part of the minister to get any power in this matter, but I do not see how you can conduct a department of this character without having someone with some discretion to determine these matters in dispute. There is a case I shall come to later where I am anxious to be relieved of authority. Far from seeking authority, I am trying to get rid of it.

Mr. STEVENS: In connection with the rate of interest to be added, and having in mind my hon. friend's illustration of a bond selling at 120, the minister takes power to determine what the rate shall be, but in the next clause in connection with discounts, that is of bonds sold at a discount, the minister does not take a similar power. Why should not the principle applicable in the one case be equally proper in the other? Why not take power in this act to determine whether the discount should be allowed as interest and not capital loss?

Mr. FIELDING: This matter has been settled in the practice of the department for some years, and I hesitate to depart from it. The department years ago ruled that the discount was a capital loss which should not be credited. I suppose something can be said on both sides of the question, but that has been the fixed policy of the department and I am reluctant to depart from it. In this matter I am rather disposed to take the doctrine "what we have we'll hold," and what we have not got we will try to get if it is necessary for efficient management.

Mr. STEVENS: Just one comment on the minister's explanation. Does he not see that the tendency is to drive issuing companies to issue at a high rate of interest so as to earn a premium rather than at a lower low rate of interest and sell at a discount? Just let me point out the advantages of a discount, if money happens temporarily to be dear. Very often a firm rather than fixing a high rate of interest on a long term bond would prefer to sell at a normal rate of interest and accept a discount spread over the term of the bond. That is preferable in my estimation in normal business to selling bonds at a high rate of interest and securing the premium. The legislation presented here will have a tendency to force concerns to sell their bonds at a high rate of interest, which is certainly not in the interests of the department or the revenue of the country. I think while my hon. friend is certainly right in not seeking trouble, he must recognize that it is good business practice to sell a bond issue at a discount and absorb the loss in the interest charge from year to year.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. FIELDING: I have no doubt that a law like the Income Tax Act will at all times be open to suggestions of possible changes. I am inclined to think it is desirable that we should have a consolidation of the income tax law, and when we come to deal with that consolidation in a proper way these suggestions may well receive consideration. I would not like to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend in this measure, which only aims to deal with a few points about which there ought not to be much difficulty.

Mr. GOULD: I had a question which I wished to ask the minister more particularly with reference to clause 1. I will cite a concrete case to illustrate my point. I think the business income tax forms are called Form T and the agricultural forms Form TA. At all events that will serve for purposes of illustration. The case which I cite is that of an individual whose activities may be partly business and partly agricultural. In 1921 this individual made out his income tax returns on his two activities as a total but he was advised by one of the zone commissioners of taxation that that was improper, and that he would have to segregate the two. In segregating the two it was obligatory for him to take all his exemptions and place them against his agricultural tax bill, and use the other sum total of his business activities as a basis for taxation, upon which he paid the sum of $28 I believe. I think this year the same man is allowed to take the two activities together. I may say that if in 1921 he had been allowed to do that the sum payable would have been considerably less than $28, but I am not prepared to say exactly what it would be. I have wondered whether the returns sent in covering the year 1921 or the returns covering the year 1922 were correct.

Mr. FIELDING: All I can say about that, if my hon. friend or anybody else is interested in a case and would be kind enough to send us a memorandum we would have it investigated. I would not like to answer offhand here. We get many applications and in most cases we are able to give satisfactory explanations.

Mr. GOULD: When I am around my home many visitors come to ask me to assist them in making out their returns, and I usually abuse the tax form because of its complications. I have in mind a thought suggested by the statement made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Baxter) that would be particularly applicable in our rural municipalities in the western country where we keep a clerk upon full salary the year round paid out of municipal funds. Our provincial governments ask for an inventory each year, not for taxation purposes, but simply for the purpose of collecting data as to how much stock, how many horses, cattle, how much agricultural machinery and so forth each individual owns. This goes through the municipal clerk's hands, and I maintain that this inventory would be of assistance to the minister, if the municipal clerk was allowed say a very small percentage of the income tax that would be derived, I think it would be one of the best investments the minister could make. People do not send in wrong returns wilfully as is sometimes charged, but in many cases they are absolutely unable to make the returns out right. I am sure it would be a very good investment for the minister to adopt my suggestion, which I believe I made to the ex-Minister of Finance when he was occupying the position of minister.

Mr. FIELDING: I think it might be to the advantage of the committee if I proceeded to state the object of the several clauses and then perhaps it will not be necessary to go into the matter more in detail. Under the present law a foreign consul who is a citizen of a foreign country residing in Canada and devoting his whole time to diplomatic work is exempt from income tax, but that exemption does not apply to the officials of his staff. We propose that those officials shall also be exempt if they are citizens of a foreign country residing in Canada and devoting themselves entirely to diplomatic work, provided that a similar exemption is extended to Canadian officials in the country from which the foreign consul comes. This is reciprocity as respects not only the consul himself but also his staff.

Mr. HANSON: Before the minister proceeds to section 5 would he give us a statement as to the necessity for section 3? I think he overlooked that.

Mr. FIELDING: The object of that, I am informed, is that the expenses of each year shall be considered in connection with that year, but that each year must stand on its own bottom

Now, in the matter of pension exemptions. We exempt pensions paid by the British or Canadian governments, but we do not exempt pensions paid by foreign governments. There are a number of citizens of Canada who have served in the armies of our allies and who have been allowed pensions. We propose to deal with them as we do those receiving pensions from the British or Canadian governments. The exemption, however, will apply only to those who served in the armies of our alllies during the war. That provision, I imagine, is not likely to be regarded with any objection.

Now in regard to the matter of penalties. I think much of the dissatisfaction with regard to the income tax—and I am aware that all tax laws must create dissatisfaction—results from the penalties which are imposed. The penalties that are imposed are of a substantial character, sometimes for very small offences. For example an employer fails to make a return as to those people in his employ as required by the act, and we impose penalties running up to as high as $50. We propose now to reduce that, and provide that the penalty shall not be less than $2 and shall not be more than $50, but it is to be governed by a percentage so that no more than 10 per cent of the amount of taxation would be paid in any case. The list of persons sent in in that way would be a list of persons paying only small sums, and we say the penalty for neglecting to send a return shall in any case be not more than 10 per cent of the taxation involved, with a further proviso that the penalty shall not be less than $2 or shall not be more than $50. In that way I hope we shall to a large extent meet the complaints that are made. The penalties undoubtedly seem to be severe for a small offence but I am hoping that in that respect there will be less complaint in future.

Now as to appeals. Under the present law provision is made for a board of appeal. I think I am correct in stating that neither in the time of my predecessor nor in my own has any one of these boards of appeal been created. The law is there and some people occasionally ask for an appeal. Experience has shown that by a little patience, correspondence, and negotiation we have generally managed to avoid the appeal and come to a settlement. However, I think there ought to be an appeal but not to the Minister of Finance. We hope, of course, that by continued correspondence, patient inquiry and good will we can avoid courts of appeal and come to a friendly settlement; but if in any case a cantankerous person is not satisfied with the representations that are made and the judgment of the local officers, he ought to have the right of appeal but he had better not go to the Minister of Finance. We propose that he have the privilege of going to the Exchequer Court. These are the main, in fact the only, provisions of the bill.

Mr. MARLER: I suppose we will have an opportunity of discussing section 7 of the resolution when the bill comes before us?

Mr. FIELDING: The bill will come up in a moment or two and I would rather my hon. friend spoke now.

Mr. MARLER: I should like to see that section in the bill.

Mr. FIELDING: Have you not a copy of the bill?

Mr. MARLER: I have a copy of the bill here but it has not been introduced, therefore I avoided speaking on it. What I wish to point out to the minister is that section 25 of the bill carries out the intent of section 7 of the resolution creating a prior lien on all the assets, movable and immovable, of the taxpayer. Under the law as it exists at the present time there is a lien I know in favour of the government for any income tax owing. I think it may possibly be a prior lien but it is not a prior secured lien at the present time. Under the bill as drafted a prior lien will be created on all the assets of the individual. There is a proviso in this section that an individual may alienate personal property, but there is no provision that he may alienate his immovable property. In addition to this the minister might, perhaps, bear in mind that income tax is payable by instalments if need be. It would mean, I take it under this section of this bill that anybody intending to borrow, anybody desirous of effecting a mortgage on a piece of real estate, would first of all have to show the person from whom he was borrowing his receipt in full for his income tax before that person would lend him any money. If the tax-payer had paid his income tax in toto for the year there would be no difficulty; but if the taxpayer was paying it by instalments I question very much, in the event of his wanting to borrow, whether he would not be very seriously jeopardized by the provision of the clause as it is now drafted. I certainly would think that if he were mortgaging his property he would be. I suggest very respectfully to the minister that the clause as drafted is likely to create difficulty.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. FIELDING: There is a lien now, I believe but the effect of this is that the tax falls due, say, on 30th April, and the priority of lien takes effect from that moment. I shall have to give further thought to the suggestion of my hon. friend arising out of the payment of instalments. Of course we want the prior lien to be maintained and broadened if we can. We want to get our money; I am becoming a very mercenary person in all these matters.

Mr. MARLER: I am quite aware there is a lien at the present time, and I think there is a prior lien. But this section of the bill as now drafted makes that lien an actual secured lien which is quite a different thing from an ordinary prior lien, and that is what I take exception to. Of course, if it is understood that way by the government, and the government does not think as I do that it would be a very serious matter for the borrowing public, I have nothing more to say. However, I think the point should be brought to the attention of the government. I might also say to the minister that this section will bear some discussion when the bill is brought down.

Mr. MILLAR: I have just one question I should like to ask and it is one in which many hundreds are interested. A short time ago I passed on to the minister a suggestion sent by a business man in the constituency from which I come. He was trying to find out if there was not some way to avoid the unnecessary trouble and expense to which many thousands are put to make out statements when they themselves know, and local authorities know, that their receipts only amount to a very small fraction of a taxable income. I know it is a difficult matter to adjust, but I can assure the minister if he can devise some way of saving that expense to those people he will confer a very great benefit upon them. It makes it necessary for most of them to go to a lawyer and have a statement made out, at an expense of from $2 to $5, and to a man who has lost his crop, or perhaps has had a very poor crop, that expense is quite an item.

Mr. FIELDING: I have difficulty in understanding how he can obtain the knowledge without the return. I do not mind confessing that, when I was on the other side of the House and talked about this question, I expressed the pious hope that the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) would be able to do something to simplify this matter. The returns were very annoying.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Much worse than that.

Mr. FIELDING: I am free to confess that having had the responsibility on my own shoulders, I see great difficulty in attempting to simplify. What seemed to me an easy job is a very hard one. I do not see how you can gather the information, unless you require the return.

Mr. MILLAR: The suggestion I passed to the minister from the business men was that a statement from the clerk of the municipality—and I think I might add also, on my own behalf, a statement from the banker —should surely be sufficient.

Mr. FIELDING: We want uniformity of practice. We cannot oblige the municipal clerk or the banker to make the return. I wish I could make it simpler. I know it is a worry. When I have to make up my own return I get very "mad."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister will remember when we were discussing the act last year I drew to his attention that I, during the latter term of my office, had heard that companies were being incorporated for the purpose of enabling them to avoid taxes. I was surprised the other day to have a gentleman dealing in rather a large way, come to me—he thought I was in business—with a view of getting an incorporation of a private holding company which would enable him to defeat the purposes of the income tax. I drew the matter to my hon. friend's attention last year, and he said he would look into it and follow it up. I have been told since that it has become a common practice. My hon. friend will very easily find lots of people within a very short distance who would do it. I would like to know the minister's idea.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid there is too much foundation for what the hon. member has mentioned. We are giving the matter some attention, and if we are fortunate enough to be able to complete before next session the consolidation which I referred to, I think we will have to deal with the matter very seriously. For the moment we are not able to deal with it. I regret to say that reports have reached me that there is too much foundation for what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. HANSON: I am glad to see the minister has arrived at that conclusion. He will find that reports that have reached him have not been exaggerated.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would require only a very short section of the act. Could protection not be put in now?

Mr. FIELDING: It is a difficult matter to deal with.

Mr. EVANS: I desire to bring to the attention of the minister a case which seems to me to be one of gross unfairness, where a tax is not levied on a man's net income. An acquaintance of mine, a farmer, met with crop failure for two seasons. Being a veterinary surgeon, he went out to make his living at his former profession. He made a little money, and had to pay income tax on it. His money all went to clear his debt on his location; and at the end of the year there was nothing left even to pay the income tax. It was a gross hardship to pay any tax.

Mr. FIELDING: I think the new section will cover the case. Where a man is engaged in two occupations difficulties arise, but under this section power will be vested in the minister to determine what is his chief occupation and on that he must pay.

Mr. EVANS: But that is a tax on a man's net income.

Mr. FIELDING: No, that is too broad a statement. He might make $20,000 in a year. which is subject to taxation; he might go out and speculate, lose it all, and have no income, and he would have no tax to pay. That is an extravagant illustration, but it is based on what has occurred. That which is his greatest income should be taxed. We cannot prevent a man speculating, but we do not want the income tax to suffer on that account.

Mr. NEILL: Does the minister think it is necessary to adopt paragraph No. 8 of the resolution, which says:

> 8. That when the minister has knowledge or suspects that any person is or is about to become indebted to a tax-payer he may demand of such person that the moneys otherwise payable to the tax-payer be in whole or in part paid over to the Receiver General of Canada on account of the tax-payer's liability under this act.

We already find the minister under paragraph 7 stating that all taxes, interest and penalty payable under the act shall constitute a lien upon the assets of the taxpayers both real and personal, a condition that does not exist in reference to municipal or provincial taxation. But has he a right to go out on a roving hunting commission, whenever or wherever he suspects a man to have any dealings with the taxpayer, and register a letter and send it to that man, and say "Do not pay that man what you owe him; pay it all to me?" I do not think, with all the other means they have of collecting, it is necessary to give the minister such extreme powers as those.

Is there any precedent in any other country where a man can make use of a mere suspicion and go out and take action of that kind? I object to the word "suspect." If he only has a mere suspicion, he can hold up this man and prevent the payment of money to him that would perhaps really be of substantial benefit to him at the moment. Meanwhile, while the consideration of the adjustment of his taxation goes on, which might last for two or three months, the money is withheld from him and he cannot make use of it.

Mr. FIELDING: I am told there is a precedent in the United States law, but that is not the best reason in the world. However, I am advised in the light of experience that something of this kind is necessary. All sorts of attempts are made to evade taxation, and we must have privileges in the method of guarding the revenue which in view of some people are not necessary. We ought to have the benefit of the doubt in the matter of saving the revenue. We all have a common interest in that.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister think the ordinary garnishee process is not sufficient? I rather think this is an extraordinarily wide power, and if arbitrarily operated it might work a very great injustice. I hate to see a power like this placed in the hands of the tax collector of any government, I do not care what the personnel might be.

Mr. FIELDING: Least of all, I do not think hon. members need fear that any power we have will be exercised in an arbitrary spirit. The manner in which the income tax has been applied by my predecessor and in my own day would indicate that there was no desire to use the power arbitrarily. I think every desire is manifested to make it as easy as possible. A few cases will arise under this provision, and if they arise, I think hon. members will not object to our exercising the power given to us.

Resolution reported.

On the motion for the second reading of the resolution:

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: I wish to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: Under rule 17 A this motion is not debatable. Later on the hon. member will have an opportunity to speak.

Motion agreed to and resolution read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 249 to amend The Income War Tax Act, 1917.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. FIELDING moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. JOSEPH ARCHAMBAULT (Chambly and Verchères): I must confess that I was keenly disappointed on reading this bill. I was disappointed at the fact that there was no provision, in the matter of earned and unearned income, no provision regarding exemption on account of children, and no provision with reference to persons married under the regime of community of property. No one realizes more than I do the tremendous task of the Minister of Finance; no one appreciates to a greater extent than I do his earnestness, his ability and knows the many demands that are made upon him. But surely when these demands are reasonable, when they are in the public interest, the minister should yield to some of them, to some extent at least. In this special instance I venture to say, from the discussion which arose on this question when it was brought up on a previous occasion, that it was the wish of this parliament that some amendment should be introduced regarding the proposal which was put before the House. When I submitted my resolution on March 21st touching these matters, it was passed unanimously; there was not one dissenting voice raised against it. On the 17th of May, when I renewed my proposal, I think it was evident that I had the sympathy of the whole House in the matter. There was not a single word of opposition. I am fully aware that in order to meet our obligations we must get as much revenue as we can. But I submit that we should get that revenue from the people who are most able to pay. I will not weary the House with the arguments that I have already advanced. I am sure that the minister is himself convinced of the soundness of my proposals, and he must have had very good reasons for not bringing in the amendments suggested. It is not asking too much, I hope, to request an explanation from the minister of the reasons why he did not incorporate these amendments into the bill. I feel confident that were I to submit an amendment to the House it would carry. But I will refrain from doing so until the Minister of Finance explains why these amendments were not included in the bill. I do not say that when the bill is before the committee I will not propose them. However, I shall listen to the reasons the minister may offer and I hope that before the bill reaches that stage he will give to the House some satisfactory reasons for not bringing forward the amendments and at the same time assure us that in the near future legislation will be enacted to provide for the readjustment of income taxation more in line with justice and equity.

Mr. FIELDING: I wish I were as free as my hon. friend to advocate all these popular notions, because they are popular, I am sure. But I regret to say that I am not, because I must have regard to the condition of the revenue. The hon. gentleman brought forward his motion last year and we took it into consideration. More than that, we made some concession. That, I think, should be evidence that I am not so absolutely unyielding as he pictures me. As to a larger review of the Income Tax Act, if it is necessary, I hope that my hon. friend will have patience enough to wait for that consolidation which, without giving any guarantee, I trust will be undertaken in time for next session. I am sorry that I cannot give any reasons that will be satisfactory to my hon. friend because I know how zealous and enthusiastic he is in the matter. But we cannot have everything we want in this wicked world; we must wait patiently for some of the things we much desire.

Mr. HERBERT MARLER (St. Lawrence-St. George): As I understand from the minister that next year there is likely to be a consolidation of the act I will in no way suggest to him any amendments I might have to submit to the bill he is now bringing down. On the other hand it is more than probable that no opportunity will be afforded myself or any other hon. member to study the proposed consolidation before it is brought down next year. It will therefore be as well for me now to suggest to the minister certain matters which I should like him to take into consideration when he does undertake the consolidation he has announced.

The first point I want him to consider in that consolidation is the question to which I referred previously this evening, as to the payment on net income of the taxpayer. Where the taxpayer has legal deductions under class B income, if those deductions exceed the total of his class B income, then I think he should be permitted to have a deduction for the surplus made from class A income. In short, the taxpayer should pay on his net income. There is another point which I would draw to the attention of the minister and that is in regard to the manner in which the tax is computed at present. There is the normal tax, there is the surtax, and there is the interest on the surtax or the supertax. This is not only exceedingly onerous on those who are unfortunate enough to have to pay income tax, but it makes it very difficult indeed to compute the tax. Another question that comes to my mind, and which possibly may not be very popular in this House or to the minister but which I would venture to suggest nevertheless, even at this time of the session. I believe that the income tax to-day is far too heavy. That tax under the act as it stands at present is not helping to stimulate savings; it is not stimulating business. I believe that the taxpayers, having to pay as they do pay to-day very heavy taxes, are utterly unable to invest any money in industrial concerns, and for that reason the progress of the country is seriously impeded. In the United States, if I might refer to that republic for a moment, a deduction is allowed, or a lesser tax is levied on account of the savings of a particular taxpayer. If a taxpayer can show a bona fide saving in any year, he is allowed a lesser rate of taxation on the amount actually saved. This encourages economy, which is very essential in this country and I think it is a very important question that should receive careful consideration when the minister comes to take up the consolidation that he has mentioned. Certain deductions are allowed under the present income tax law. Under the act as passed in 1917—this was during the war of course—deductions were allowed for contributions made to the Red Cross and patriotic funds. I am aware, as I think are other members also, that representations have been made to the minister to allow deductions for contributions to bona fide charitable or educational institutions. The deductions allowed under the 1917 act for contributions to the Red Cross and patriotic funds were subsequently withdrawn. The work which those funds carry on is far from finished, and there are numerous charities badly in need of funds not only in the city of Montreal but all over the country. These charities are having greater difficulty year by year in securing funds for carrying on their work, which, in part at least, is really the duty of the state. I ask that contributions made to bona fide charitable and educational institutions be allowed as deductions, or that they be taken into consideration when the new act is framed.

It is quite true that the minister will immediately say: Well, all these demands must mean a diminution in the revenue. I quite admit that, but still as regards charitable and educational institutions I do not think the state can claim for one moment that deductions allowed for contributions to them will not eventually enure ten times more to the benefit of the state. Again I quote the income tax law of the United States, under which individual tax-payers—not corporations—are allowed deductions up to 15 per cent of their taxable income, provided that these deductions are paid to a charitable or educational institution approved of in the proper way. There is no question that in allowing deductions of this description and allowing also a taxpayer to pay on his net income alone—which do seem to me perfectly fair and reasonable requests to make—there will be a certain reduction in the amount which will be collected under the income tax law. On the other hand, possibly it is pertinent to suggest that the income tax law was originally framed for the purpose of paying our war debt. Whether the amount derived from income tax can ever be segregated for this purpose I cannot presume to say, but I think I may go this far, that the time does seem to have arrived when the people are strained to the uttermost in their efforts to pay taxes. I am perfectly aware that without these taxes the budget cannot be made to balance as we are budgetting at the present time. The only suggestion I venture to make in these last days of the session is that we should really live within our income, and that our budgets should, if possible, be made to balance with the taxes that are collected. It is quite true that my suggestions would mean a certain decrease in the net revenue collected from income tax, but at the same time it would be an encouragement to people to be charitable and economical.

It seems to me that with our budget deficits year by year we must come to the point sooner or later, and the sooner the better, when we should live strictly within our income.

Mr. FIELDING: How?

Mr. MARLER: By spending less, by actually cutting out many, many things we now spend money on. Perhaps this is the most unpopular thing for any member to say in the dying days of the session, and I suppose everyone will criticize me.

An hon. MEMBER: Not at all.

Mr. MARLER: But let our expenditure be pared down ruthlessly. We should reduce our expenditure to the very minimum and restrict it to keeping our buildings and our public works in repair, in order that we may make our budgets balance without having to increase taxation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been greatly cheered to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman. We have heard speeches along exactly the same lines from this side of the House. We have deplored the increases both of taxation and of expenditure. We now find all our work has not been in vain, and we look forward to the early date when my hon. friend will cross over here—not to take a place down in the corner, but to take his seat among us and really do something to try to cut down expenditure. We are assured that so far as he is concerned none of these extra supplements were brought down until the thirteenth hour passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Income to be not less than income from chief occupation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Observing as I do that we are now almost through with the second budget of this government, and that it has left the income tax schedules in the same condition as it found them, and remembering also the aspirations—to use the most euphemistic term I can think of—of hon. gentlemen opposite and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) himself, may I inquire if after eighteen months he has not been able to invade the precincts of the profiteer and ease the burden on the masses? And does he hope by remodelling and changing the schedules at some later and undefined time to achieve this end? How is it we have had to wait eighteen months to get the burden on the masses eased and the profiteer brought to book? Is the progress of the future to be as slow as the progress of the past? Is there really any room left for hope?

Mr. FIELDING: I have not heard any allegations that anybody is engaged in profiteering. I had understood that the profiteering was usually carried on during the regime of my right hon. friend. Eighteen months, you know, is a short period in the life of a nation. We are not going to accomplish immediately all that he mentions, but I hope that as years roll on, with patience and courtesy and good will all round, some of these results will be brought about in the natural order of things. I suggest that my right hon. friends be patient and that they rather bear those ills they have than fly to others that they know not of.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I quite realize the solemn truth and wisdom of the Finance Minister's assertion that anything we may hope for will come in the natural order; it certainly will not come in the government order, we may be quite certain of that. Then, he advises the country to bear the ills they have rather than fly to others they know not of. Well, the country is already impressed with the necessity for that.

Mr. FIELDING: I gave the advice to my hon. friends, not to the country.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I also am, as the whole country is, thoroughly imbued with that truth, and I think the people are very regretful—the evidences of it are not a few—that they had not been imbued with it and acted upon it sooner. Yes, I admit that times were better in our day; profits were greater on the part of all classes of the country—I am compelled to admit it. We, however, enacted certain legislation to take for the nation a share of those profits, and we were assailed because we did not take more from the profiteer and less from the masses. Now I wonder how it is that in this session we are amending the very bill that apportions as between the profiteer and the masses, and still the Finance Minister can scarcely dot an i or cross a t.

Section agreed to.

On section 7, subsection 15—Notice of dissatisfaction respecting the decision of the minister.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That seems unfair and improper. If a man has a case that the minister himself thinks ought to be considered by the court, I do not know why as a preliminary to his going to the court he must put up security for costs.

Mr. FIELDING: The suggestion came from a very well informed source that that is a wise precaution. It has been well considered and I am confident that it will serve a good purpose.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I see it is entirely satisfactory to the minister; I hope he will assure us that no litigant who has the right under the act to go to the court will be denied that right.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend can be assured that the good spirit in which this act has always been administered will be continued.

Subsection 15 of section 7 agreed to.

On section 10—Taxes to be a lien.

Mr. MARLER: That is the section to which I had reference a moment ago. It creates on the property movable and immovable of every taxpayer a prior lien ranking before any other obligation of any description. In addition to that, the section as drafted is retroactive from the first of January, 1923. It means that any creditor lending to a debtor on any security, whether it is personal property or real property, will first have to satisfy himself whether or not the taxpayer's income tax has been fully paid I can say positively that no person would lend on mortgage in the province of Quebec without first satisfying himself that the income tax had been totally paid under this section. Moreover, the section allows the transfer of personal property to a bona fide purchaser but it allows no transfer of immovable property. The section is an exceedingly dangerous one. I do not complain in the least degree of the power it puts in the hands of the government, but I do complain of the difficulties it will put in the way of very many borrowers. The government should content itself with a prior unsecured lien, not with a prior secured lien on the property of the taxpayer.

Mr. FIELDING: As my hon. friend states it, we want a secured lien if we can get it. I realize there is something in what my hon. friend says, but I wish he would not press his suggestion now. It will be a short time, after all, before this matter can be reviewed again, and if experience shows that the trouble my hon. friend suggests has arisen we can deal with it in the consolidation. I am hoping the trouble will not be as serious as he suggests.

Mr. MARLER: There is not the slightest shadow of a doubt that the trouble will actually be there when this legislation goes into effect. I am not pressing anything on the minister; I am only explaining the exact effect this legislation will have on the borrowing public, particularly as affecting mortgages in the province of Quebec. If the minister wishes to press the section, of course I will do nothing else but agree to it, but I suggest the insertion after the word "personal" in line 19, of the words "and real"—in other words, differentiating between personal and immovable property.

Mr. FIELDING: Would my hon. friend read the clause as he suggests it be amended?

Mr. MARLER: The proviso reads:

> Provided always, however, that the lien or charge hereby created shall not follow or attach to personal property.

I suggest inserting here the words "or real" before "property."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would discharge the lien entirely.

Mr. MARLER: No. The effect would be that the purchaser would not have to follow whether or not the income tax had been paid. Without this proviso you could not purchase a stock or a bond or a piece of real estate without first inquiring whether this lien, which is an actual mortgage on the man's property, has been fully paid.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is simply a case of another search of taxes.

Mr. MARLER: Yes, but this tax may extend over a term of months. Are we going to insist on the taxpayer paying his whole tax at once before he can sell his stock, before he can sell a bond or a piece of real estate? It is unreasonable.

Mr. FIELDING: If it has the effect of inducing the taxpayer to pay up, that at least is one of the virtues. I hope my hon. friend will find that the evil is not so serious as he suggests. When we come to the consolidation possibly we may be able to meet his views.

Mr. MARLER: Might I suggest to the minister an amendment, to add after the word "personal" in the nineteenth line "or immovable." That does not affect the intention of the section in the very least because it intends to allow a bona fide seller to sell to a bona fide purchaser his personal property. I only want to make it clear that a bona fide seller may sell to a like purchaser his immovable property.

Mr. FIELDING: I hope my hon. friend will not press it.

Mr. MARLER: I dislike pressing my hon. friend, but what reason is there why it should not be included? I think I am entitled to at least get an answer.

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend will press I will delay the third reading and give the matter consideration but at this stage I think we might accept the section as it is.

Mr. BAXTER: I would like to ask whether the opinion of the Department of Justice has been taken as to the power of this parliament to enact section 7.

Mr. FIELDING: I understand that the Department of Justice has so advised.

Mr. BAXTER: With all respect I would like to differ from the department, and I do not think anyone would have much to fear about that. While parliament has the power to enforce, that must be within reasonable limits, and to say merely because it is a Crown debt it thereby operates as a lien on real and personal property goes far beyond any express or implied power of the Dominion parliament. A Crown debt takes priority and always will take priority in the administration of assets over other creditors, but that this parliament can legislate so as to constitute a debt due the federal Crown a mortgage upon any particular piece of property in the province I shall always doubt until it is resolved by some authority even higher than the Department of Justice.

Mr. MARLER: I think this section purports to create such a mortgage.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—Collection of tax from third party.

Mr. FORKE: Will the minister give us an explanation of this? It seems a rather unusual section. It says, "When the minister has knowledge or suspects that any person" and so forth.

Mr. FIELDING: I am told that this arises from actual events coming under the observation of the department. This is really necessary to prevent evasions of the law. The cases arising would not be numerous, but I think it will be a preventive measure in a large degree. There is a tendency in many lines for people to evade this income tax law. It is almost as open to evasion as the customs law when crossing the border, but all these changes are the result of experience in the department, I am assured. The cases are not likely to occur very often, but they will occur occasionally and I think the existence of a clause like this will help to prevent fraud.

Section agreed to.

On section 28—Certificate of default to be registered as judgment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the minister done anything towards preventing what is really the grossest system of evasion possible? That is to say, the formation of what are really personal companies to which are assigned the assets of an individual and out of which the individual draws an amount that is really not his income at all but merely the sum he lives on, allowing the rest to accumulate and thereby escape all the income tax except the corporation tax alone. I wonder if the minister has done anything to meet that situation which has arisen practically wholly in his own time.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. gentleman who sits behind my hon. friend raised that question in his absence and we had a little discussion on it. I cannot say that anything particular has been done. I realize that there is too much ground for the view that the law is being evaded. The matter is engaging our attention, and if the consolidation is brought about which we hope, it ought to be included. At the moment we are not sufficiently well advised to deal with it. I quite realize that there is something along the lines suggested by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is far more important than consolidation. It is a matter of millions upon millions. Other countries have met it, and why has this government spent eighteen months during which this evasion has been rampant and taken no step even to copy the legislation of other countries? It is a gross indictment of the administration, I may impress upon the minister.

Mr. MARLER: Does my hon. friend mean to suggest that these so-called companies have been incorporated since the present administration came into office?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Practically all.

Mr. MARLER: Surely my hon. friend is not serious when he suggests that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There may have been some incorporations taken place before. The income tax has not been in force for so many years, but the effect in the way of evading the tax has been since that time.

Mr. MARLER: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the hon. member knew before I wonder he has not impressed it on the government and tried to get some remedy before this. He apparently knew before 1921. Why has he not brought that to the attention of the minister?

Mr. MARLER: How does my right hon. friend know I have not impressed it on the government?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If he has, it has been rather an ineffective pressure. If the hon. member for the St. Lawrence-St. George division of Montreal (Mr. Marler) has no more effect on the government than to keep on pressing eighteen months and get nothing, it seems to me that it might be a good suggestion for him to go back to his constituents. He comes from a portion of Canada from which he ought to be able to speak with authority. Surely he can produce something more than pious aspirations from the lips of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MARLER: That is precisely the reason I spoke the way I did to my hon. friend, because I thought I did speak with some authority. This act has been in force since the 20th of September, 1917. My hon. friend comes forward to-night and charges that most of these companies have been brought into effect since this government came into power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The evasions have.

Mr. MARLER: My hon. friend has been so very kind in his remarks to me that perhaps he will allow me to continue. Companies were brought into existence during the administration of my right hon. friend. Did he take any action?

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend has asked a question? Now perhaps he will permit me to answer. He must remember that the income tax refers to the year previous and previous to a certain date in that year, and as a consequence the incorporation of the company would require to be about the year 1918 or 1919 to have any effect at all so far as our income tax collection was concerned. I never heard of such an incorporation myself within those years I want to tell my hon. friend, until virtually before we went out of office.

Mr. MARLER: I am prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's word but not his assertion that this government has not done as much as his government.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They had reason to do a whole lot more because the effect of the evasions has been since we went out of office. The hon. member knows that. The loss to the revenue has been in the last two years. The effect certainly has been recently even of incorporations in 1918, which would be the first year they were incorporated.

Mr. MARLER: I am sorry to differ.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course it has been. Does he mean to say it has not been in these last two years?

Mr. MARLER: It has not been wholly in these two years. That is the assertion I made at the commencement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: At all events it has been very nearly wholly, and you cannot get things cured just in a minute. The last time we were in office was in the year 1920-21, and I do not think that evasion had effect up to that time. It has only had effect since then

Mr. MARLER: Nothing but righteousness happened up to that time!

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mostly so, or punished crime. But now we find, it seems to me in the words of John Hay, "Nothing but unpitied suffering and unpunished crime."

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Act to come into force.

Mr. MARLER: May I make another plea to the Minister of Finance?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. MARLER: To suggest that section 25 of the act shall not go into effect until the commencement of the 1924 period of taxation. There is to be a consolidation of the act next year. I am only asking that this particular section 25 be delayed for a year. Six months of the year have already elapsed.

Mr. FIELDING: Will my hon. friend state his request again?

Mr. MARLER: I ask that instead of section 25 coming into effect at the commencement of the 1923 tax period as provided for in subsection 4 of section 11, it come into effect at the commencement of the 1924 taxation period. In other words that the operation of this section be delayed until the first of January, 1924, instead of making it retroactive on the first of January, 1923.

Mr. FIELDING: I will assent to the suggested amendment of the hon. gentleman.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved—1. That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may from time to time, advance and pay to the Corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, hereinafter called the corporation, such sums of money, not exceeding in the whole the sum of $10,000,000, as are required to enable the corporation to carry on the construction of terminal facilities in the harbour of Montreal for which plans, specifications and estimates have already been approved by the Governor in Council, and to construct such further terminal facilities as are necessary to properly equip the said port; in addition to the moneys heretofore authorized to be advanced to the corporation by the Governor in Council by any act.

2. That no advance shall be made in respect to the construction of terminal facilities unless such detailed plans, specifications and estimates for the works to be performed by the corporation, on which the money so to be paid is to be expended, as are satisfactory to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, have been submitted to and approved by the Governor in Council before any work on same is commenced.

3. That the corporation shall submit to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for approval monthly applications for such advances as they may be entitled to apply for, with statements, in detail, in such form as the minister may direct, and upon approval of the same, authority for the payment of the amount applied for may be granted by the Governor in Council.

4. That the corporation shall, upon any advances being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made, repayable within twenty-five years from the date of issue, and bearing interest payable half-yearly at the rate of five per centum per annum.

5. That the principal and interest of any sums advanced under any act founded on these resolutions shall be payable by the corporation out of all its property and assets, and out of all its tolls, rates, dues, penalties and other sources of revenue and income whatsoever, and shall rank as a charge thereon, and have precedence in regard to payment next after the payments provided for in section eight of chapter ten of the statutes of 1896 (First session).

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 4—Security for advances.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask the minister if the harbour commissioners are regularly paying the interest charges on the loans that have so far been made to them?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes, every cent of interest has been paid. Last year they paid in interest the sum of $1,138,062.12. They also paid the amount necessary for a sinking fund, and had a surplus of over $200,000.

Section agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Lapointe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 250, to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

On section 2—an additional $10,000,000 may be advanced to the corporation for the construction of terminal facilities.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This bill has not been distributed. Is it in the usual form?

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is exactly in the form of the preceding bill—word for word.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 83, respecting banks and banking.

Mr. SHAW: What is the nature of the amendments made to this bill by the Senate?

Mr. FIELDING: I think most of the amendments are of an unimportant character. One of the amendments relates to the question of insurance. There was much discussion in the Banking and Commerce committee, and a clause was put in the act preventing any bank agent from acting as representative of an insurance company. That is the substance of it. An amendment has been made which is designed to meet the case of the Weyburn bank. It was represented in the Senate that the agent of that bank received a considerable portion of his income from the handling of hail insurance, and if that were taken from him, it would practically destroy his income. I have no personal knowledge of this, but I understand that representations made to the Senate led them to adopt words which would practically have the effect I have stated, although they did not mention the name of that bank. The amendment proposed by the senate reads:

After subclause 3 of clause 76 insert the following as subclause 4:

"4. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the agent or manager of a bank, with chief office and branches in one province only, from acting as agent for the placing of hail insurance."

There is no mention made of the Weyburn bank, but I understand it is to meet that particular case. There is one amendment regarding the issue of stock not below par. That is technical, and there is no objection to it.

On page 45 of the bill, section 88, a clause was inserted by the Banking and Commerce committee protecting the unpaid vendor in certain cases. That clause has been stricken out by the Senate.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not concur in that amendment.

Mr. FIELDING: In section 91 the language in the clause relating to discount says:

The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note.

These words were struck out by the Senate. I think these are the most material alterations. The rest are purely technical as far as I remember.

Mr. ARTHURS: I desire to protest against the elimination of the protection for the unpaid vendor under section 88. I have no desire to delay the House at all. I think it is important that that clause should remain.

Mr. SHAW: I have no objection to the amendment regarding insurance, nor yet have I any material objection to the amendment to section 88; but I have a serious objection to the amendment proposed to section 91. I think the rate of interest or discount should appear in every case on the face of the note. I understood, while in the committee, that the bankers themselves had no objection to this provision, and I cannot understand what interest would be in any way jeopardized by having the rate of interest appear as the Banking and Commerce committee desired. I would, therefore, oppose the Senate amendment to section 91.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I was absent from the committee upon the occasion of the adoption of this amendment. I really never was able to see that it was of any particular value. For instance, I do not know that it does one man any good to know what rate of interest or discount a bank allows another man. Objection was made to the Senate by manufacturers or wholesale dealers who are accustomed to pass drafts upon their customers, and it was stated that frequently these wholesale men, for very good reasons, have a better rate of discount than the customer upon whom they might be passing the draft, and whom, in many cases, the wholesale men practically finance. If it were made apparent from the promissory note or the bill of exchange that the wholesale man was getting, say, a discount rate of 5½ per cent, and he was charging his customer 6½ or 7 per cent, it was stated that that was knowledge which should not be conveyed to the customer.

Mr. FORKE: Why?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why should it? Why should the dealings between one man and the bank be disclosed to another party? I do not think there is any serious objection to the amendment.

Mr. SHAW: In order to meet the situation my hon. friend suggests, why not exclude drafts from the operation of the section? The section, as I understand it, was designed as a deterrent to banks in charging an excess rate of interest.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): You cannot differentiate between a draft and a promissory note. If the objection is valid against one it is against the other. But I have never been able to see what purpose was served by having the rate of interest or the discount appear on the note. There might have been reasons given but unfortunately I was not present when the committee dealt with this clause.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT 1914 AMENDMENT

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of bill No. 241 to amend the Dairy Industry Act 1914.

Motion agreed to bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Definition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is a slight omission in the bill as printed. I move that a new section 1 be added as follows:

Paragraph (k) of section 3 of the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, chapter 7, of the statutes of 1914, is amended by striking out the word "or", in the second last line thereof, and substituting the word "and" therefor.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 2 (new section 3)—Minimum standard of fat in butter.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Paragraph (d) provides that no person shall manufacture, import into Canada, or sell any milk or cream which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk. Would it not make it more clear if, after the word "cream',, the words "or substitute therefor" were inserted?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It would do no harm if my hon. friend wants to make assurance doubly sure.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I move that the section be amended accordingly.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 5—Establishment of guilt for violation of act.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There may be some stocks of filled milk or filled cream on hand by some dealers and it was thought advisable that the section relating thereto might not come into force until the dealers have had time to get rid of those stocks. I therefore move that there be added to the bill as section 7 the following provision:

Section 3 (original section 2) of this act shall not come into effect until October 1st, 1923.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King, the House adjourned at 12.15 a.m. (Thursday).

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

Thursday, June 28, 1923.

The House met at eleven o'clock.

REPORT

Report of the Air Board for the year 1922—Hon. Mr. Macdonald (Pictou).

REDISTRIBUTION

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the third report of the special committee to whom was referred Bill No. 15 to readjust the representation of the House of Commons. The report is as follows:

Wednesday, June 27, 1923.

The special committee, to whom was referred the Bill No. 15, an act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons, beg leave to present the following as their third report:

Your committee held several meetings since its appointment on the 22nd of February last. The preparation of the schedules to be annexed to the said Bill was entrusted to sub-committees. The greater number of such sub-committees accomplished considerable work and have, from time to time, reported progress to your committee. It has been found, however, that differences of opinion exist, and your committee have decided that it would be unable to complete the schedules before prorogation.

They therefore have agreed to report back the Bill without amendment, and recommend that a similar committee be appointed at an early period at the next session of Parliament to consider such Bill.

Your committee also recommend that the letters, maps secured from the Department of the Interior and papers produced in the course of its proceedings remain in the possession of the clerk of the committee until the next session of Parliament, and that the same be produced by him at the first regular meeting of the newly-appointed committee.

Your committee also submit herewith a copy of the printed proceedings and evidence taken before them for the information of the House.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

E. M. MACDONALD,
Chairman.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON PRINTING

Mr. FRANCOIS J. PELLETIER (Matane): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) I move, seconded by Mr. Fournier (Bellechasse), that the fourth report of the Joint Committee on Printing of the Senate and House of Commons be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

HALIFAX OCEAN TERMINALS

*Mr. MacLAREN:

1. What is the policy of the Government with respect to capital requirements to complete the landing sheds and passenger station at the Halifax Ocean Terminals?

2. Have any arrangements been made for steamship sailings of the Canadian Government Mercantile Marine between Canadian and American ports, and British and European ports for the season of 1924?

3. Has the National Railway management given the Government any assurance that unrouted shipments will be transported only through Canadian ports? If so, in what form has the assurance been given?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: Paragraph 3 of question 3 was answered verbally yesterday. I am trying to get the other information and hope to have it to-day, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The last paragraph of question 3 is dropped?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is nothing to be gained by dropping it. Yesterday's answer had better appear with the answers to the other two paragraphs when they come.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not particular.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL

Mr. HANSON:

1. What was the value of the coal purchased from the United States by the Canadian National Railways, including all routes or systems embraced in its operation, in the following fiscal years: 1920-1921, 1921-1922, and 1922-23?

2. How was the amount distributed among the various units of the Canadian National System?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: I hope to have the answer to the first part to-day, but I do not think there is any possible chance of getting the information as to how the expenditure was distributed amongst the various units.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The answer to the first part is most important.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think I have that.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

CHARLES ED. BLONDIN

MR. HANSON:

1. Has Charles Ed. Blondin been dismissed as Postmaster at Pierreville, Quebec? If so, when and why?

2. Is the Government aware that the said C. E. Blondin is a returned soldier who served in the 22nd Battalion and was wounded in the battle of Amiens resulting in the loss of an arm?

3. Who has been appointed in the place of the said C. E. Blondin, or if no appointment has been made, who has been placed by the department in the position?

4. Is the person so placed related to one of the members of Parliament supporting the Government? If so, what is the relationship?

Hon. Mr. MURPHY:

1. No. Mrs. Boucher was dispossessed of the office on April 20, 1921, without investigation and without any order in council being passed for that purpose. Mr. Charles Edward Blondin was nominated by the Civil Service Commission for the postmastership of Pierreville on October 8, 1921, but the Department of Justice expressed an opinion on March 2, 1922, that the power of the Postmaster General to remove any postmaster without authority of the Governor-in-Council, had by implication been repealed by the provisions of section 28, sub-section 1 of the Civil Service Act, 1918. Consequently, no vacancy actually existed and the appointment of Mr. Blondin was invalid.

The facts are the following:—

On April 19, 1921, during a by-election in Yamaska County, in which Pierreville is situated, the following instructions were issued by the Honourable P. E. Blondin, Postmaster General: "Discharge Madame Boucher, postmistress at Pierreville on the ground that she has permitted strangers to handle the mail on its arrival in the post office on the 11th April and on other dates, contrary to the regulations, and appoint pro tem J. Simeon Letendre".

The stranger referred to was the son of the postmistress, who helped her on occasions to sort the mails, as he had been sworn in for that purpose. The date referred to in the Postmaster General's instructions on which the postmistress permitted a stranger to handle the mails in the post office, namely, April 11, 1921, was two days before the date on which the writ was issued for the by-election in Yamaska County, and for which election Mr. Aimé Boucher, the son, was a candidate. There is no evidence that Mr. Aimé Boucher helped his mother in the Yamaska post office on or after the date on which the writ was issued for the Yamaska election.

On receipt of the instructions from the Honourable Mr. Blondin, Postmaster General, Madame Boucher was removed from office on April 20, 1921, without any investigation being held, and without any order in Council being passed for that purpose.

Early in 1922, the question was raised as to the validity of this dismissal, and on the case being submitted to the Justice department, the ruling mentioned in answer No. 1, was given, on March 2, 1922. Upon receipt of this ruling, Mrs. Boucher was re-instated in office on March, 7, 1922.

2. The department is aware that Mr. Blondin was a returned soldier and a disability case.

3. See No. 1.

4. Mrs. Boucher is the mother of Aimé Boucher M.P. for Yamaska.

WILLIAM MANSFIELD

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. Was there a man in the employ of the Department of Public Works previous to 1914 named William Mansfield?
2. When did he enter the service?
3. When was he dismissed from the service?
4. What position did he occupy before he was dismissed?
5. What were the reasons given for said dismissal?
6. By whom were these reasons given?
7. Was it claimed that he had dispersed patronage in the shape of work, to a Liberal?
8. In what town was said work being done?
9. What was the precise stand taken by J. A. Armstrong, ex-M.P., for Lambton, in connection with the said dismissal?
10. What was the attitude taken in reference to said dismissal by the superior officer of the said William Mansfield?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) (for the Minister of Public Works):

1. Yes.
2. January, 1890.
3. September 11, 1914.
4. Inspector of heating and plumbing.

5 and 6. The departmental records do not state.

7, 8 and 9. In a report on file from the resident architect, Toronto, dated Sept. 4, 1914, it is stated: "What Mr. Armstrong, M.P. objects to is the bringing of a plumber from Sarnia which town is not in his constituency when there are plumbing firms in Petrolia competent to do the work."

10. There is on file a letter of September 15, 1914, from the late Mr. D. Ewart then chief architect, covering a communication from Mr. Mansfield, dated September 11, 1914. These two letters read as follows:—

"Re the dismissal of Mr. Wm. Mansfield, Inspector of Heating, etc., Dominion Public Buildings.

Having further reference to the above, I attach hereto a letter I have received from Mr. Mansfield, the enclosure speaks for itself.

I may state here that personally I have no knowledge whatever with regard to any occurrence in connection with the awarding of the work at the Petrolia public building. The instructions of Mr. Mansfield were, in this case, as usual, to consult local party in charge of patronage and to have the work required carried out."

"I am very much surprised to receive your letter of even date, dismissing me from the service of your department, seeing that I am not aware of any particular reason for this.

"I understand there has been some misunderstanding in connection with repairs to the heating apparatus in the public building at Petrolia and if this be the case I may state that I can readily explain what action I took with regard to that work, and show that whatever I did was in accordance with instructions received from the department and from the Liberal Conservative Patronage Committee of Petrolia, Ont."

PATRICK DESCHENEAUX

Mr. HANSON:

1. Has Patrick Descheneaux been dismissed as lighthouse keeper on St. Francis River? If so, when and why?
2. Is the Government aware that the said Patrick Descheneaux is a returned soldier who served with the 21st Quebec Regiment?
3. Who has been appointed in the place of the said Patrick Descheneaux?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes. He was dismissed by order in council of the 21st May, 1923, on the ground of political partisanship.

2. The department is not aware that he is a returned soldier. He was appointed by order in council April 10, 1912 to succeed Philias Desmarais, dismissed for political partisanship. There is no record in the department that he has been away from his work on military service.

3. A permanent appointment has not been made, but the matter is under the consideration of the Civil Service Commission. In the meantime, one Barthelemi Gladu is temporary keeper.

OFFICE OF AUDITOR GENERAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to call the attention of the House and of the government to the continued failure to fill the office of Auditor General of this country. The House realizes—certainly the country does—the supreme importance of this office. The late Auditor General died on the 8th January this year, close to six months ago. Previous to that it is worth observing, he had been ill, and consequently absent from his office since April 1, 1922, or very shortly after this government came into power. His absence from office, of course, I do not mention as attributable at all to the government or as due to any misconduct on their part, but it emphasizes the need of an earlier appointment after his decease. Six months have gone by, or nearly, and in the meantime, as has been very amply disclosed in parliament, moneys are being paid illegally. No supervision is being exercised, and the country's finances are virtually at the mercy of an unmanned auditor general's department. I would like to know what defence the government makes for this failure.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): In the first place, the statement of the right hon. gentleman that moneys are being paid illegally is without foundation. I am satisfied that no moneys have been paid by the Auditor General's department except upon proper legal advice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister will give us a fiat we will show him whether it has been paid illegally or not.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend asks for a fiat; I do not know what he means. But I do know that the business of the Auditor General's office has been going on—shall I say—fairly satisfactorily. The Acting Auditor General is an old and capable official, and I will give one evidence of his activity: I remind the House that, if not for the first time, certainly for the first time in recent years, immediately after the meeting of parliament the Auditor General's report was laid on the Table. That is a compliment to pay to the Acting Auditor General. Some little time ago when this question was raised I said we were contemplating some legislation respecting the auditing of the country. That legislation has now been carried, and at a very early day the office of Auditor General will be filled. In the meantime any suggestion that the finances of the country are going to the dogs, that money is being paid out illegally and all that sort of thing, is purely a creation of the right hon. gentleman's imagination.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A favourite expression of the minister's. I will recall to him that I pointed out to the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) that if he would grant a fiat in one case the same would apply to at least four I know of; and as to how many I do not know of, of course I cannot speak. There is no excuse whatever for the position of Auditor General being vacant for six months and virtually vacant for a year and a half.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

CHARLES BLAKE, OF BRANDON

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct attention to the nature of returns brought down by this government. I have in my hand a return brought down in answer to an order of the House dated the 5th of March —brought down, I may say, a great length of time afterwards. The motion asked for the correspondence in any way relating to the withdrawal of professional work from the Inland Revenue department formerly performed by Charles Blake, of Brandon. The motion asked for a number of similar series of correspondence relating to the withdrawal of work from other returned soldiers and the giving of it to party followers. In the case of Blake the return states that there is no correspondence. I am in a position to state to the government that there is correspondence and that it is of no confidential character whatever. I have since been informed as to the writer of several letters addressed to the department which were not even answered.

Mr. JACOBS: They may have gone to the dead letter office.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Dead government office.

Mr. FIELDING: No, the government is very much alive.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAYS

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): I would like to ask the government when the return requested two weeks ago respecting the St. Lawrence waterway will be brought down. In view of the great shortage of power in Ontario will the government during the recess of parliament take up with the government of the United States the further revision, adjustment and extension of the Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers for power purposes, and will negotiations be continued or reopened for the improvement of the St. Lawrence waterway? When will all the papers be brought down?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I had better say to my hon. friend that that will depend very largely on the representations made to the government of Canada by the government of the United States.

PULP EXPORT FROM FARMS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FRANK CAHILL (Pontiac): Is it the intention of the government to exempt from the operation of the legislation prohibiting the export of pulpwood the product of the land of settlers and farmers?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): It has been represented to the government that the legislation passed has created a doubt in the minds of some of the farmers whether they will be prevented from entering into contracts for the export of wood grown on their own farms. I wish to make it clear that any action the Government may take under the legislation will provide that wood grown by farmers on their property will be exempt from the provision prohibiting export.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PARIS OFFICES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): Can the Minister of Railways tell us whether the American syndicate has taken up the option on our property in Paris?

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways): In reply to my hon. friend I may say that I am not in a position to say.

ALLEGED UNREST IN WESTERN CANADA

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): The Toronto Globe of Friday, June 22, contains a despatch from Windsor, where the meeting of police chiefs was held, alleging that Superintendent Page, of our Canadian National Railways, made a statement to that association that in western Canada there was the same state of unrest from the activity of Bolshevists and other Reds as was in Europe ten years ago. This is an untrue and defamatory statement concerning the labouring people of western Canada and western Canada as a whole. I ask the Minister of Railways whether he will investigate the matter and see if Superintendent Page actually made such a statement? And if that official did make such a statement will he be dismissed from the service?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the minister rises, may I ask whether the statement referred to labouring people? I did not catch that in the statement.

Mr. McMURRAY: It refers to the whole of western Canada, undoubtedly including the labouring people there.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): It is difficult to base a charge on a newspaper report that comes second or third hand. I do not know what Mr. Page did. I may say that to my mind the remark was very improper, but neither the government nor parliament has the engaging of the officials of the Canadian National Railways, outside of the directors. If that official made the statement referred to, I will direct the attention of members of the board to it.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

MOUNTED POLICE—OTTAWA.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): I understand that the men who patrol the public buildings at Ottawa, the members of Division A, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, are working seven days in the week. As this is a matter entirely for federal jurisdiction and as indeed, in this case the government is the employer, is it not possible to ensure that these men will obtain one day's rest in seven?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The police come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), who is absent at the moment. I will draw his attention to the remarks of the hon. member, and he will doubtless give it such consideration as it merits.

Mr. MEIGHEN: May I ask how long the "moment" is that the Minister of Justice is absent for? I understood he was absent for the rest of the session.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not know why my right hon. friend asks me the question if he knows the circumstances.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not like the hon. member, (Mr Woodsworth) to be given the impression that he might expect an answer later when the Minister of Justice is not to be back.

RATES ON COAL

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. G. McBRIDE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I notice in the Ottawa Journal a statement quoted from the report of the Mines and Minerals committee which says:

> Your committee suggests that the rates quoted—

Referring to rates quoted by the railway officers.

> —are not cost rates but much higher.

I take this as an insinuation against the railway officials who appeared before the committee, and I dissent from that report. I think it ill becomes any member of this parliament to make such insinuations against the officers of our Canadian National Railway who cannot come here to defend themselves.

SALES TAX—THE UNION JACK.

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. D. DRUMMOND (West Middlesex): I wish to put a question to the government, particularly to the Minister of Finance, with regard to a matter that has been brought to my attention from various sources, namely, the application of the sales tax to the purchase of the Union Jack. I did not know that the tax did apply in that case. I ask the Minister whether it does, and if so would the government not consider it advisable to remove the application of the sales tax from our national flag.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I regret that my hon. friend's zeal for the Union Jack comes up at such a late stage; I think the matter is important enough to have been the subject of reference earlier in the session. I can give my hon. friend no assurance on the question. The law is the law and we shall have to enforce it, even if it imposes a tax on the Union Jack. I am as much an admirer of the Union Jack as my hon. friend is, but I want the Union Jack to be a symbol of the enforcement of the laws of the country.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SECURITIES.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 244, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On Section 2—Form, term and amount of securities to be approved.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The apparent effect of the bill—I say the apparent effect, because I dare say my hon. friend will have some answer to the statement—is to change the law only in one particular, namely, as to the right to endorse securities and to pledge the credit of the country. Section 26 of the act already controls the issue of these securities. The main provision here is for government control, and the next thing we have is the guarantee. Subsection 2 of this section reads:

> No securities, as defined in this section including in such definition equipment certificates or obligations in any form intended to be issued to the public, shall be issued for the purposes of or by the company or any of the companies designated in the schedule hereto except those approved as to form, terms and amount by the Governor in Council.

That is the first change made by the amendment to section 26, which already provides that the issue of bonds, debentures and securities can only be made with the approval of the Governor in Council. On that point, therefore, there is really no change in the law. The real change is to be found in subsection 3, which reads:

> The said securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty and any such guarantee may be in such form and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine, and may be signed by the Minister or Acting Minister of Finance on behalf of His Majesty.

This raises in a very serious form the same question that has already been discussed in connection with the act this year providing for railway construction. It was pointed out that under that act the government could make its advances and give its guarantees without including the amount in the estimates and without further authority from parliament. It can be said at least that that act defined the railways to some extent; it afforded a starting point and an ending point. It did not say how the lines were to go, it is true, but apart from that the provision had some definiteness. But here we have a blank cheque given to the government by parliament. Otherwise, why is the change made? Securities were guaranteed before without any trouble, on the authority of parliament given by enactment each year. If this is not a blank cheque, what is it for? If there is one way in which the project of the Canadian National Railways can be ruined it is by causing the people to lose confidence in it through their amazement at the things that are being done. I say that previously we had no difficulty on any question of new commitments, whether of security or of cash. These were new ventures; these were things that ought to be, we thought, considered by parliament. We ought to have some control over the capital issues and the capital activities. We were opposed, not on that score but on the ground that we would not give any details as to the management in such a way as to injure the operations of the companies. To-day the government not only take the stand which they formerly condemned, that is in favour of independence of management, they not only want independence of management, but they want the country's credit absolutely removed from the control of parliament. If there ever was a time when this proposition should be looked into closely and strictly that time is now. My hon. friends opposite say they have taken the National system out of politics. Why, they have thrown it into politics. I should like to know any better way of making this a political matter than appointing a purely political board. That is what we have. Keep it out of politics! Why, it is in politics now. Does anyone suggest that the Premier could give Mr. Sinclair any hints in the game of practical politics, as applied in connection with the operation of the line down in Nova Scotia? Does he think he could teach Mr. Dawson, manager of Reform campaigns in British Columbia, anything about practical politics in that province? Again, does he think he could teach Mr. Gough anything about practical politics in Ontario? Why, the only claims of these gentlemen to appointment were that they were good political hacks. That is all, and nothing else. Now we are to have a combination with this political railway board under which the government will have the right to pledge the credit of the country to any securities that the government's political friends may see fit to put forward and the government may see fit to approve of. If it is not for the purpose of getting this large over-holding right why have this legislation? No difficulty has been experienced in the past. What is the reason for the legislation to-day?

Mr. FIELDING: If it were not for the fact that my hon. friend is usually in a very genial frame of mind I would be tempted to apply to him that quotation with which we are all familiar, "Suspicion haunts the guilty mind." My hon. friend has read into this bill things which are not there, and which can only be carried into it by an extraordinary flight of the imagination. I am not going to discuss the political question at all. This is a business proposition, and I am going to confine my remarks entirely to the bill. My hon. friend has been wandering away from the question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not very far.

Mr. FIELDING: He wants to know whether Mr. A., Mr. B., or Mr. C. is a worthy man for the position. He has no right to reflect upon the character of these men. Those of them I know personally are high-minded gentlemen. He mentioned in particular Mr. Sinclair. There is no more honourable man in the Dominion of Canada than Mr. Sinclair, and the suggestion that he will not faithfully and honourably discharge his duty as a commissioner for the National railways is entirely unwarranted. I am sure that on reflection my hon. friend will see—and the same remark applies to the other commissioners—that what he has said is not justified. Now this bill—and it is only with the bill that I am concerned—says that no securities shall be issued by the National Railway Company or the subsidiaries connected with it except by the consent of the Governor General in Council. The hon. gentleman says that is already provided for. Possibly it is. In that case the worst that can be said of this legislation, as I remarked the other day, is that it is surplusage. If, however, the power is required at any time it is there. Will my hon. friend tell me what harm can come by stating definitely that under no conditions shall that board issue securities without coming to the government? What is wrong with such a provision as that? My hon. friend says the power is not needed. Whether we have it or not is debatable—I am not sure that we do have that power already,—but in any event what harm will be done by this legislation? That is the first purpose of the bill. Can anybody object to it? Surely not for a moment. I do not know on what ground the hon. gentleman bases his argument. How in the world can he connect this bill with some of the things he is talking about I fail to discover.

The next purpose of the bill is that the government may issue guarantees. This measure does not give the government power to do anything except to guarantee securities that can be legally issued. Now, if the Canadian National Railway Company has any power, given by this parliament, to issue a security it is better that that security should have the approval of the government and thus sell at a good price. That is the whole story. This bill does not give the government power to guarantee any issue that is not already authorized by parliament. I do not expect the power is going to be used to any extent at all. My hon. friend is imagining difficulties. I think it was the leader of the Opposition who said that the old borrowing powers had been extinguished. Well, I am advised that even that is a debatable matter. I am advised that some of these outstanding companies, subsidiaries of the Canadian National Railways, are still distinct entities and have powers and rights of their own. We certainly do not intend that these companies shall issue any bonds. There will be no guarantee given on any bond issue that is not authorized by this parliament. What greater assurance could my hon. friend ask? Now, they say this legislation is not necessary——

Mr. MEIGHEN: What does the hon. gentleman mean by the expression "authorized by parliament?" Suppose this bill passes, what will the company have to do to get a bond issue authorized by parliament?

Mr. FIELDING: If they have no legal authority to issue a bond, if they are not authorized by this parliament to do so, there will be no bond issue.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But they have it now.

Mr. FIELDING: Does my right hon. friend say they have not the power now? If so that ends it. If they have no legal right to issue bonds there will be no guarantee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Assuming they have the right what will they have to do, after this bill passes, to get an unlimited bond issue?

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend is now reversing his own argument. Only a moment ago he was claiming that this power did not exist.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let my hon. friend take it any way he likes.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend can have it either way, but not both ways. He has already stated that in the case of these companies the borrowing powers are extinguished. If so there can be no bond issue. How does my right hon. friend get away from that argument. I have already given my hon. friends an assurance in that respect. What more do they want? My right hon. friend thinks there is no need of this power at all. I will give him an illustration showing to the contrary. To-day there is a requirement of the Canadian National Railway for $15,000,000 on equipment bonds. I am advised that there is no authority under the law to guarantee these bonds. It is the only security that I contemplate will be guaranteed. I am told there is no authority under the existing law for the Governor in Council to guarantee these bonds and if they are to be issued, and they must be issued lawfully, it is better that they should bear the guarantee of the government of Canada and command a good price on the market than that they should have to be sold at a sacrifice. That is the whole story; there is nothing else behind it in the world. The suggestion of my hon. friends that this is a scheme devised for new guarantees for new and unauthorized securities is without any foundation whatever. That I can assure my hon. friends in all sincerity and good faith.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I doubt—and, I confess it, with some feeling of despair—whether I can succeed in convincing the minister, but I should like to convince the House. I am not certain that I can do that but I am going to do the best I can. Of the state of the law I do not think there is any doubt, but it does not matter a particle whether there is or not, so far as the merits of this legislation go. It is not always an easy matter to make a legal proposition clear. Fortunately, in this case it does not matter which end of the dilemma the hon. gentleman takes, not in the least. He says, first of all, that he wants to secure government control of bond issues of the Canadian National Railway Company, and I ask the House to remember there is only one such company which was created by the statutes of 1919, chapter 13. That company has included in its system other companies. Those companies had their own charters from parliament and their own powers, the parent company gets no power from those. That is my opinion. I do not care whether it is accepted or not, its acceptance or otherwise does not matter in the least. We are dealing in this bill with the parent company and no other, hon. members only need to read the bill to see that. The bill deals with the parent company and only the parent company. I say the parent company never had power to issue a dollar of security without the approval of the Governor in Council, and never issued a dollar, and how in the world the most elementary first-form student in the government can think of anything else I do not know. I do not think any of them do think anything else, and I will say what I really think in a minute. Section 26 which starts this way—

> The company—

The company is defined in the act. Nobody suggests that the company means anything except the Canadian National Railway Company.

> The company may with the approval of the Governor in Council issue bonds.

How can anything be more specific? It is just the language that is used here. This says that no security can be issued unless the form, and so on, are approved by the Governor-in-Council It may be asked, why is this put in? It is just put in as a smoke screen to get the second section through—no other reason at all. There is no more reason for that first clause than there is for the hon. minister to take an excerpt from a novel and put it there. It is merely as something to introduce the second section. The government thought it would look just a little too naked, and the object would be a little too clear if the second section appeared there alone. Let us come to the second section. The second section says that once they get the approval of the Governor-in-Council, which they always had to get, the government might guarantee the bonds. I have never objected to the government having power to guarantee the bonds. I do not object to it. I do not think there is the slightest need of it. The government has the power to-day to guarantee the bonds. If anybody has any doubt about it, I will accept his doubt and assume they have not the power. Does the minister not know we have to guarantee them over and over again? Why did he not tell the House last session of the brilliant sale he made in New York of government guaranteed bonds? Does he imagine the counsel for the purchasers did not examine the authority of the guarantee, to be sure it was legal? Why, of course they did, and there has never been a question raised that I have heard that they had the power to guarantee. But let me assume they have not the power, that somebody in the Justice department or in the Railway department has told them there may be a little doubt about having the power to guarantee. I will assume he is right. Here is what they are doing. They are taking the power to do it, without including the amount of the guarantee in the estimates, something which they never did before. That is the whole effect of the legislation. Just add to it that they have to place the amount of the guarantee in the estimates, and the government will reject the bill, and that is what they do not want to do. Why should this be? The minister did not mention it. Why does he not want that? Why did he not put it in the estimates? I do not see the object unless he wants to make the estimates appear low to the country and take carte blanche himself to give any guarantees he likes. The minister thinks it will be more advantageous to himself, his government or his party. I do not know why. The minister says we are very suspicious. Well, what is an opposition for?

Mr. FIELDING: To be reasonable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, to be reasonable. I will take the reason from the mouth of the minister himself. He called attention to the absence of this in a bill four years ago. I am not sure that he himself did it, but I am pretty sure that he did. I know the Prime Minister did. I know we acceded to it.

Mr. FIELDING: What restrictions will the hon. member put in?

Mr. MEIGHEN: That the amount of the guarantee shall be put in and voted by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: I will deal with that in a minute.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a wonder the minister did not mention it. I am prepared to let it go through, if that restriction is applied. That is all I am fighting for. Why should the minister not accept it?

Mr. FIELDING: Go on and finish and I will answer.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister might tell me now.

Mr. FIELDING: We are getting back to the old trouble. I am asked, why should we not put the guarantee in the estimates? Because it has never been the practice of parliament to put guarantees in the estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, oh.

Mr. FIELDING: In the annual vote that we make there is a provision including guarantees within the limitation of that vote; but the general powers to guarantee the bonds of the company are not usually expressed; and in the estimates there is no departure from the custom. The only exception you will find is in the regular vote for the railways, where the sum is voted, and you may apply that vote by cash or guarantee or any other way. But the statement that the guarantees of the Canadian Northern have always been voted in the estimates is absolutely at variance with the facts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister is simply wrong.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not wrong. My hon. friend will find that every act to guarantee the bond of a railway company has been an act in itself, and not shown in the estimates. And that is reason and common sense. What are the purposes of the bill? The hon. member says we have the power already to prevent the issue of bonds, without the consent of the Governor in Council. That may be debatable. I am advised there is a doubt about that. But assuming there is no doubt about it, will the hon. member tell me what harm is done when we make assurance doubly sure by making it clear this railway company shall not issue any securities without the knowledge and approval of the Governor in Council. What is wrong with that? Nothing. We come to the guarantee. We can only guarantee bonds which are lawfully issued, and if any bond is to be lawfully issued by the Canadian National railway, that is the bond of the government of Canada. If it is issued simply as the bond of the Canadian National Railway, it has only a diminished value. Since we are going to be responsible for it, why should we not make it in a form and condition which will enable us to sell it at the best price? That is the whole story. I will cite a case in point. My hon. friend says we have all the power. We have not. I am advised that with regard to the Canadian National equipment which the commission require, we have not the power to supply it without this bill. Without this bill the bonds would be sold in the market without the guarantee.

Mr. MEIGHEN: To a lot of what the minister has said, no reply is necessary.

Mr. FIELDING: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not care whether he is right or wrong; that is as to having the power to guarantee the equipment bonds. If he is right it serves my purpose just as well. If he is wrong, if he feels he needs additional power, I do not object to give it to him at all. But when he says this is what has always been done —unlimited of guarantee—

Mr. FIELDING: Not unlimited power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is the limit?

Mr. FIELDING: They can only guarantee the bonds where lawfully issued and the onus will be on the party issuing them.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If they should issue bonds for $5,000,000, have they not the power to issue them?

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where is the restraint?

Mr. FIELDING: They can only guarantee a bond that is lawfully issued and the proposal to issue $5,000,000 of bonds without legislative authority certainly would not come within the provisions of the act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Without any legislative authority?—Have they not just as much legislative authority to issue bonds for $5,000,000,000 as for $5,000,000?

Mr. FIELDING: No, the legislative authority will apply in each case. There is no power to issue for $5,000,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no special authority for any bond here—none whatever—no authority for a bond for $1,000. And there is just as much authority for a bond of $5,000,000,000. They have power to issue such bonds to-day, if they have power to issue anything. Consequently there is no limit here to the power of the guarantee. The whole point is this—and I ask the House not to be confused by the introduction of any other matter—whether the amount should be in the estimates or not. The minister says it never has been in the estimates, and he says we have given railway guarantees without it. The latter statement is right, but we never gave a guarantee to the Canadian National without it, and this bill is to guarantee the Canadian National railway bonds. Certainly, every time when we guaranteed the bonds of private companies we did not include it in the estimates.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is changing his ground.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not at all, and no one in this House thinks I am. What I say is this, that we have always included in the estimates, our guarantees as well as our cash advances. The minister cannot point to a dollar that was ever guaranteed the Canadian National that we failed to put right in the Estimates, so that the country knew the amount. I want to know why the minister wants that changed. What is the effect of all this? The minister, if this legislation passes, can guarantee just at his will, and the country will have no knowledge whatsoever, that is, in compact and unified form, of what the country's commitments to our National railways are. Instead of making cash advances each year to the railways and putting that in the Estimates if this legislation passes, the company can issue bonds, and the minister will guarantee them.

Mr. FIELDING: That is nonsense.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He will do that. Why should we pass legislation to let him do nonsense whether he wants it or not? I do not attribute lack of intelligence to the minister, but he cannot suggest honestly that he should have power to do that.

Mr. FIELDING: I say that we would have no power to do it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister is hopeless, if he takes a position of that sort.

Mr. FIELDING: I know he is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why would he not have power? Will he tell me anything he has not power to do if this passes? And then I will suggest something a minute afterwards.

Mr. FIELDING: The right hon. gentleman had better make his minute-afterwards suggestion now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All right. I will suggest the alternative now. Supposing the company issue a $15,000,000 equipment bond and the minister guarantees that. He says that if this passes, the company will have power to do that and the minister will have power to guarantee it.

Mr. FIELDING: Not by this legislation. The company have the power already. All we ask is the power to guarantee the bond.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not bothering about that. I am not asking about that. If this legislation passes, the company will have power to issue such a bond, and the minister will have power to guarantee it.

Mr. FIELDING: The power to issue is not in this legislation; the power to guarantee is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the difference? There is not a particle of difference. I am afraid the minister is trying to mislead the House.

Mr. FIELDING: That is unkind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will put the matter in this way. They have the power now to issue bonds, and if this legislation passes, the government has power to guarantee them. Supposing, instead of issuing bonds to cover equipment, they issued bonds to cover the deficit for the year—suppose they have a deficit of $10,000,000, and that they issue a bond for $50,000,000 instead of $15,000,000. The bond covers equipment and deficit. Does the minister say that if this legislation passes, the company will have power to do that, and he will have power to guarantee the bond?

Mr. FIELDING: I have some difficulty in understanding what my right hon. friend is driving at. I cannot understand that we have power to guarantee anything that is not already authorized by parliament. The Canadian National Railway Act does not deal specifically with equipment bonds. This is only an illustration. Equipment bonds are not issued in the usual way; they are not covered by an ordinary guarantee, and therefore it is desirable, if we want those bonds to be sold at the best market price, that they should be put before the public in the best possible form. If this bill does not pass, what will happen? The Canadian National Railways will issue $15,000,000 worth of equipment bonds on their own credit. They are a good class of bond. If they are issued on the New York market, they will not, perhaps, benefit very much by a guarantee. If they are issued on the Canadian market, the Canadian government guarantee will be helpful. The question is: Which of the two ways should we, who have the responsibility of dealing with the matter, pursue—put the bonds on the market in such a shape that they will command the highest price, or issue them with the full knowledge that they are going to be sold at a sacrifice price?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why does the Minister keep saying that, instead of answering the question in the form in which he asked for it himself? I do not object to his guaranteeing the bonds. Can I repeat that too often?

Mr. FIELDING: No.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I showed, I think, to everyone who wants to understand and who approaches the matter impartially, that either as the act now is, or as it will be when amended—I do not care which—the company can issue any bonds so long as the government approves.

Mr. GRAHAM: Could they issue a bond for a deficit?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly they could, with the approval of the government, issue a bond to pay their debts.

Mr. GRAHAM: A great bond!

Mr. MEIGHEN: With the approval of the government, they can issue a bond to pay their debts. That would be the least objectionable. Supposing they issued a bond for equipment to any extent whatever, say to $100,000,000, does the Minister suggest that they would not have power to do that?

Mr. GRAHAM: It seems clear to me. My right hon. friend—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why cannot the Minister answer that, "yes" or "no"?

Mr. GRAHAM: If the right hon. member does not want my answer, all right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let him answer anyway he likes, but I do not understand why he cannot answer, "yes" or "no". The Minister is trying to confuse the House over this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend is trying to confuse the House, but he is not making a good shot at that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If this bill passes, the company can issue bonds to any extent at all, and the government do not need to come to parliament and show what they are going to guarantee for a single year. All I ask is that the latter be conceded, and I give this House warning now, that no such power has ever before been given to a government in relation to our roads and no such power should be given. It is going to tend to confuse the country and parliament as to the actual financial history of the railways. It is going to change the whole method of presenting to the country the record of our railways. That is the purpose of it. Let hon. members read page 33 of the Estimates for last year, or practically the same page of the Estimates for this year. Let them read how the Estimates read in previous years, showing that the amount every time included not only the cash advances, but the guarantees. That had to be done.

12 noon

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister says, "no". It did. There is no use in telling the Minister anything.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let the Minister show me a dollar that was guaranteed that was not included in the Estimates. If he gets up, he will likely go back to private roads.

Mr. FIELDING: I will go back to the facts.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Let him adhere to the Canadian National Railways and tell me of a dollar that was guaranteed or a dollar that was advanced that was not included in the Estimates and authorized in the Estimates by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: The annual appropriation to make up what is estimated to be the possible deficit of the Canadian National Railways includes the statement that the advances to be made may be by loan, or by cash, or in any other way. It does not have reference to transactions like this at all. The right hon. gentleman got wrong first, and he has been wandering around ever since and trying to get right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman look at the very details given in the Estimates. It covers:

(a) Operating deficits whenever incurred or ascertained.

(b) Acquisition of property, materials and supplies.

Equipment.

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What?

Mr. FIELDING: Go on.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know what is wrong with the minister. (Reading):

(c) Interest and sinking funds on notes, securities or obligations.

(d) Principal and interest of maturing or matured loans secured or unsecured.

(e) Construction and betterments.

Is that the annual deficit on operations?

(f) Co-ordination or consolidation on railway lines and facilities.

(g) Guarantees of securities of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Everything is included, and the whole of the Estimates there includes what the government does by cash or guarantee in relation to anyone of them.

Mr. FIELDING: The right hon. gentleman began by getting wrong as to the relation between Estimates and railway appropriations. He began with a statement, made with a great flourish of trumpets, that previously the appropriations for these various purposes had been shown in the Estimates, and he flourished the Estimates. Then also with a modest flourish of trumpets, we pointed out that millions have been provided for railway aid without being shown in the Estimates. When he was beaten on that ground, he shifted around to the other.

Mr MEIGHEN: The minister knows right well and this House knows, that I have discussed from the beginning the Canadian National Railways and nothing else. There has been no shifting of ground, and I will not let anyone, who does not want to be, be confused by what the minister is trying to say about my shifting ground. I have referred to that and to that alone, and from the beginning stated I had no reference to our conduct as related to private roads.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend did not make any qualification at the beginning.

Mr. MEIGHEN: None was needed.

Mr. FIELDING: When I stated that appropriations for railway subsidies were not shown in the Estimates, he said I was mistaken; then he revised that and said he did not know. We have on the order paper today a resolution authorizing the loan of $10,000,000 to the harbour commission of Montreal. We have voted these appropriations again and again and not one is shown in the Estimates, and the hon. gentleman knows it. Therefore his contention that every appropriation is shown in the Estimates is absolutely wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never so contended.

Mr. FIELDING: Another point. The Railway department, following the usual practice, contemplated the issue of these bonds—as they had power to do—and they did not include them in the estimates sent to us. But they had the power to issue these fifteen million dollars' worth of bonds, and all we do by this bill is to say: Instead of issuing these bonds in the name of the Canadian National Railways, and selling them at a sacrifice, you shall have endorsed on them the guarantee of the government of Canada, and so sell them at a good price. That is the whole story.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minster's effort is getting plain. I have argued this on the basis of National Railway appropriations; in respect to other matters the question is not affected at all. If in the past we have had advances for harbour improvements and the like authorized by statute and not included in the Estimates, then there is going to be no confusion in making comparisons; but in relation to our railways, from this time on there will be kept out of the Estimates those things that were always in before. It is just as plain to the minister as to anybody else, but he has got to make a fight to get this through. He is determined to exclude these from the Estimates where they have always been in relation to our National Railways. If he thinks equipment is not included in supplies for railways, all right, put it in; but put it in where it has always been before, and where it ought to be in the Estimates. Let him amend his Supplementary Estimates and put it there, and I will raise no objection at all. Now it is plain what the minister wants.

Mr. FIELDING: It is, but it is not plain what my hon. friend wants.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if we connot agree upon some things without any unnecessary heat. After all, there ought to be no real object in anyone trying to mislead this House upon what is really a matter very important to public business. In connection with the railways we embarked upon something which is entirely new. It did not have anything to do with railway subsidies for private companies. It had absolutely nothing to do with advances to the Montreal Harbour Commission. It was something which, as I say, was not only entirely novel, but it was the particular business of the country; it was something that we were doing ourselves. It was not any question of how many thousand dollars per mile this House had authorized the government to guarantee for the Canadian Pacific Railway; it was our own business, the management and running of our own lines. We went about it under the act of 1919. We had extracts read the other day from the debate upon that act, and it was shown that the point had been raised under the statutes of 1919, that parliamentary control of capital account ought to be maintained. Why, the present Prime Minister said that the last vestige of parliamentary control would disappear if that was not done, and the then government very cheerfully agreed at once; they never expected anything else.

My hon. friend says that this has never been in the Estimates. I am sure he does not mean it. I want to give my friend every credit for sincerity just as long as it is possible for me to do so, and I think what he means is that the ordinary guarantees of privately-owned railway bonds did not appear in the Estimates. I tell the House that I believe absolutely that not one single guarantee was given, so far as I know, that was not included in the bulk amount voted by parliament. Does my hon. friend dispute that statement?

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. FIELDING: Go on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should like to get this thing cleared up, to get rid of the mists and come down to facts. If my hon. friend disputes that statement, now is the time for him to do so.

Mr. FIELDING: Go on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very good, there is no dispute.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not say that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, it cannot be disputed. Why, my hon. friend himself shows how it cannot be disputed. This year a different plan has been adopted. He himself a few minutes ago, speaking on this very question of the Estimates, says that this year the fifteen million dollars is not included in his seventy-two million dollars. We had an equipment guarantee last year—it was included without any such bill as this.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is wrong. We had no guarantee last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Did not my hon. friend guarantee the equipment securities that he reported to the House last session and sold in New York?

Mr. FIELDING: They were not equipment securities. My hon. friend is all wrong in the facts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of securities were they?

Mr. FIELDING: They were securities of the Canadian Northern Railway at one stage, afterwards they were securities of the Dominion government, upon which we borrowed one hundred million dollars.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was not speaking of those securities, but it makes no difference.

Mr. FIELDING: It does.

Mr. GRAHAM: Were there any equipment bonds guaranteed last year?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It makes no difference whether it is equipment or whether it is any other kind of security that is guaranteed, the principle is exactly the same. They may not have been equipment securities, but they were railway securities, and they were guaranteed without such legislation as this, simply because the amount of the guarantee was included in the Estimates.

Mr. FIELDING: No, my recollection is that it was not included in the Estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite sure my hon. friend will find that they were. If he could do so without their being included in the Estimates, however, what earthly justification is there for this bill? The whole idea of this measure is to see that the securities are sold properly. Were not the securities sold properly at that time? Did not my hon. friend get a good price for them? Of course, they were in the Estimates. The wording was carefully worked out to cover all these things, and my hon. friend practically admits it in his own statement when he says that this fifteen million dollars is not included in this main vote. Those having been included in the main vote, he had a right to guarantee them. I ask the government to look at page 31 of their own Estimates of this year and ask themselves whether that means anything except that power is taken for the purpose of guaranteeing securities of all classes. Why, we can even guarantee securities for operating deficits; it is not done, I know, but it could be done. The vote says, "Acquisition of property, materials and supplies," and to wind it up you have an omnibus provision, "guarantees of securities." The government said: We ask for all this and we agree to keep ourselves within the limit that parliament sets upon it. Then the estimate becomes a statute thus making the provisions enacted perfectly valid and binding. In fact that is how the business has always been done.

I am at a loss to understand my hon. friend's position. Bonds and securities have been successfully sold in the past without this act; he himself has done it. Yet he tells us that the whole object of this act is to enable the sale of securities. Why, his own record shows that that is nonsense, that his argument is pure piffle. This question of giving a blank cheque to the administration is a novel thing. We were told in connection with the construction programme that one reason why this unlimited power should be given was that works were contemplated which would run over more than one year and that the only proper thing to do was to arrange for the whole matter at once. That was the only argument that amounted to anything in connection with that bill, and that argument does not apply here at all. The only possible object of this legislation is to enable the government to put themselves in a position to do just what they please. What the Minister of Railways said is quite right, that there is a distinction between the right to issue a security and the right to guarantee, and it is also true that under this provision the government should only guarantee bonds which may be legally issued by the corporation. But under the statutory borrowing powers of the company they may raise $75,000 a mile on their whole mileage. I forget the exact figures of the existing bonded indebtedness per mile; the Minister of Railways will know it—but I venture to say that the exact amount of securities issued is much below $75,000 per mile.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think that is true.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course it is true; the minister admits it. Up to the extent, then, of $75,000 per mile the right to issue exists and the right to guarantee is given. There is no limit so far as the issue of bonds for equipment purpose is concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM: Is my hon. friend clear that the Canadian National Railway Company could issue securities against the Canadian Northern system? Legally and technically the Canadian Northern system has never been brought into the Canadian National system.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am surprised to hear that; I understood, the last time this subject was discussed, that we now had proper co-ordination.

Mr. GRAHAM: There are certain difficulties concerning a portion of the stock which the government is taking steps to get possession of. It had not got the possession yet, and legally and technically the Canadian Northern is not, as I am advised, a part of the Canadian National Railway system. That is why I asked the question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the act which deals with the question of borrowing powers makes that perfectly clear. If there is any doubt about it, I do not see how securities have been sold in the past. They have been sold under this act and they have been regarded by very eminent New York counsel as perfectly good securities. The act says that the company may with the approval of the Governor in Council issue bonds and debentures, then it takes out from the application of the computation of $75,000 a mile the government railways, but it leaves everything else in. The schedule specifically mentions the Canadian Northern and a great many other companies.

Mr. GRAHAM: That would be when they are in.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no limit, except the proper business limit; there is no legal limit to the issue of securities against equipment. The equipment itself forms the security.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Government by an estimate, I think, provided that twenty-five per cent of the balance could be issued by the company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In this legislation we are getting away from the provision of these things in the Estimates, and the fact is that there will be no limit. Are we going to do something which was excused the other day only because it covered a three-year programme and the work could not be done all at once? Are we going to do something which changes all our previous practice? Are we going to write this blank cheque to the government?

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend began his observations by saying he was unable to understand my position. Well, I think I can understand his; he got in wrong at the beginning and he is now trying to maintain an utterly indefensible position. What is the issue? This resolution does not create the power to issue any securities; not a dollar can be issued under this bill. If there is an outstanding authority granted by parliament to the Canadian National Railway Company to issue bonds, then in the judgment of the Governor in Council those bonds may be guaranteed. That is the essential feature. The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) and the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) say that every obligation that is assumed, every guarantee and every appropriation, must be shown in the Estimates; that is the great principle they are struggling for. Then my hon. friend in vain tried to bolster up that argument by saying that a year or two ago we issued an equipment security guarantee; why not do it now? Well, the answer is that we did not issue an equipment security guarantee then; he is materially wrong in his facts. Then he says that we issued guaranteed securities in New York at another time and asks why we should not do so now. We issued securities which were guaranteed by act of the parliament of Canada in the name of the Canadian Northern Railway Company. There was a law providing for it, and the issue was made under the provisions of that law. My hon. friend did the same thing a year or two ago and did not show it in the Estimates. He issued a guarantee for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and for the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and he did not show it in the Estimates; he did not do the thing he now says is essential.

Sir. HENRY DRAYTON: Will my hon. friend be kind enough to give particulars of any guarantee we made that was not shown in the Estimates?

Mr. FIELDING: I say he issued two loans —and I am not criticising him—guaranteed in the city of New York, one for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and one for the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and to the best of my knowledge and belief neither was shown in the Estimates. It is not customary to show guarantees in the Estimates. So in relation to all these material facts my hon. friend is wrong. Now, the whole story is this—and I repeat: not a dollar of bonds can be issued under this legislation. If there is already an authority to issue bonds, is it better that they should go on the market at a sacrifice price, or is it better that we should put the endorsation of the government upon them and sell at the best possible price?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I want to tell my hon. friend that so far as these Canadian government bonds he refers to are concerned, they were included in the total amount of the Estimates, and we never exceeded it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Never what?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They were included in the Estimates. It is true they were not included by name.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the "oh" for? We do not ask in this case that it be included by name; we simply ask that the country know what the total payment is, that is all. My hon. friend makes a splurge about the matter of equipment, but so far as that is concerned it does not make the slightest difference. These loans were made under previously existing powers, and there was no trouble. The whole truth is that the minister wants to get away from this limitation. What is the use of talking about wanting to issue bonds so that they will sell well; they were sold well before. That has nothing to do with it. I started out to give some reasons for this change, and I could give others, as I am sure my hon. friend could himself give them. For example, was there anything but a political reason for the appointment of the gentleman who now represents the city of Quebec on the board?

Mr. FIELDING: What has that to do with this matter?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Everything; they are the people with whom you have to deal; people in your own class, in your own scale.

Mr. FIELDING: Thank you.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: People into whose hands you put the whole of these matters. Take it out of politics, yes—and put it in the hands of your political followers.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that the appointment of the gentleman representing the city of Quebec on the board was a political one?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I asked whether there were any but political reasons for the appointment. The gentleman was the former member for Bellechasse, Colonel Talbot. We had a series of questions to try to find out something in this connection and there was some difficulty in getting at the facts; I think there were three series before we got them. We found that this gentleman had been given a position in the pay of the Quebec government at $2,000 a year; that he had remained in that position and has since been made one of the directors of the Canadian National system, his emolument thus being increased from $2,500 to $4,500 a year. My question was a perfectly innocent one; I merely asked if there were any except political reasons for his appointment.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I can tell my hon. friend the reason for the appointment of a representative of the city of Quebec on the board. The city and district of Quebec were so badly neglected by the late government, in which my hon. friend was Minister of Finance, that they were entitled to have someone to represent their interests.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I agree entirely with that.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: We are perfectly satisfied with the appointment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no doubt that you should have representation, but I would point out that when the matter was discussed before, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) said that the nomination came as a complete surprise.

The CHAIRMAN: The discussion of the board of directors at this stage is out of order. The matter under consideration is the question of guarantees. Shall section 2 carry?

Mr. EVANS: I have been trying to understand this question from the controversy that has been going on, but I do not know even yet whether the Minister of Finance has told the whole story. As I understand it, the purpose of this act is to give the government power to issue these equipment certificates or obligations without the consent of parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: The power is there already. All this gives is the right to guarantee.

Mr. EVANS: This will be done without the consent of parliament?

Mr. FIELDING: This is the consent of parliament now.

Mr. EVANS: Then the power is to be given to issue these guarantees without the consent of parliament and without having the amounts placed in the Estimates?

Mr. FIELDING: Oh no, no.

Mr. EVANS: If that is so it is a dangerous precedent to create.

Mr. FIELDING: I assure my hon. friend that this legislation creates no power to issue securities. If any security already authorized by parliament is to be issued, the government may in their wisdom guarantee it; that is the whole story. It guarantees nothing in the future; the legislation is confined entirely to authority already issued by parliament. We cannot grant a guarantee on anything not already authorized by parliament.

Mr. STEVENS: With respect to the financial railway commitments of this session, as I understand it we are committed in the main estimates to $73,000,000 for deficits and so forth. We are committed by the bill of the other day to $28,000,000 for construction. We are making a committal now for $15,000,000 or more for equipment, making a total of committals in respect of the National Railways for this year of $116,000,000, part of which will be expended over a period of approximately three years. That is, I think, a correct statement. The House should keep it in mind that unquestionably next year we shall be asked to make other commitments in the matter of extensions, equipment, and so forth, so that while the expenditure may be over three years, during those three years other commitments will be added. My point is simply this and I wish to make it clear that this session the parliament of Canada is committing the country to an expenditure of $116,000,000 to cover deficits, equipment bonds and new construction of branch lines for the National Railways.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is at all events not correct in regard to the equipment; we are not by this legislation assuming any new obligations; the power to issue the bonds for equipment purposes exists to-day. We have the choice of allowing those bonds to be issued without the guarantee and sold at a low price, or of putting our guarantee upon them and getting the best price. That is the story of the equipment bonds.

Mr. STEVENS: Surely the minister does not want to make the committee believe that we are not committing the country to expenditure, whether it is by guarantee, voting the estimates, or any other way.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is mistaken. The country has already authorized the issue of these bonds. If we do not put on the guarantee the bonds will still be issued, but they will be sold at a depreciated price, that is all.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand that perfectly, but I am not going to be—what shall I say?—diverted from this fact, and I want the committee to get it: under the present legislation certainly the bonds can be issued, and under the statutory legislation and the Estimates the bonds can be guaranteed. Now, let me state the case again: Under the statutory powers of the Estimates we are guaranteeing or paying out of consolidated fund, one or the other, $73,000,000; under the statutory powers of a bill passed the other day we are guaranteeing $28,000,000; under the statutory powers of this bill we are guaranteeing $15,000,000 or more, in all $116,000,000.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to find out from the Minister of Finance what objection there is to adopting the suggestion made to include these amounts in the Estimates. That seems to be very fair.

Mr. FIELDING: Because it has not been the practice in the past and I see no reason why we should depart from what has been practice.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister should not make that statement to the House. It has been the invariable practice in connection with the National Railways, and the minister does not do justice to the position he holds to lead anyone to suppose otherwise. With relation to the Canadian National Railways there has never been a dollar guaranteed—the minister cannot produce proof to the contrary; if he postponed the matter until next session he could not do so—that was not included in the amount voted by parliament for the purpose.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. FIELDING: What difference does it make as respects the obligation of the country whether we grant the money in the name of the Canadian National Railways or any other railway? The obligations of the country are the same with respect to a guarantee in either case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Now we are getting it.

Mr. GOOD: Even if this has not been the custom, if it is a good thing why not adopt it?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think it is a good thing.

Mr. STEVENS: It has been the invariable custom.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not yet, certainly not.

Mr. CHURCH: Sub-section 3 of section 2 of the bill reads as follows:

> The said securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty and any such guarantee may be in such form and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine—

And so forth. We have no control over the policy and administration of the National Railways Company. Now, as a matter of fact the success of an issue of securities, more particularly in the case of a railway system of this kind, depends upon the manner and method of administration. We have heard it said often in the last year or two that we should give these railways a free hand. Is parliament to be debarred from any say as to these expenditures? It was not public ownership that got the railways into the condition where they show such large deficits, it was private ownership. What is going to become of responsible government in this country if we are to continue to spend money on these railways at the rate we are doing? Just think of it, a deficit of $73,000,000; $28,000,000 to be expended on branch lines, and $15,000,000 to be spent upon equipment, a total of $116,000,000. Compare that expenditure upon the railway system alone and then recall the fact that in 1896 the entire Dominion expenditure amounted to only $36,000,000. It is all very well to talk about giving the railways a free hand but no country in the world would confer upon a railway company such powers as we propose to grant without adequate parliamentary control. At the rate charges have been accumulating on these railways I do not know how matters are going to end. And yet some people talk of the necessity of giving the National Railways a free hand. Now, we have these deficits to which I have referred, and the expenditure of the railway system is piling up at a rapid rate. It should be borne in mind that extravagance in operation is likely to seriously affect railway securities when they are placed upon the market. Is there ground for the assertion that extravagance has characterized the management of our railways? I think there is. For example, a sum of from $80,000 to $100,000 has been expended in fixing up a private car to enable the directors to travel all over Canada. I contend this is extravagance which should not exist, and it does not exist in the operation of railways under private management. I am friendly to public ownership, but I confess I am very much alarmed at the extravagance of the directors in conducting our national railways. Giving them a free hand, if carried to its logical conclusion, will bankrupt the national railways and, speaking metaphorically, drive them into the poor house. Look at the position in which the great railways in the United States find themselves. They are short of rolling stock, short of equipment in every respect, and their securities are not selling at nearly the former prices. Shaughnessy and Van Horne are said to have made a great success of railway administration in the United States a great many years ago, and afterwards they were identified with the Canadian Pacific Railway in this country. But not even the genius of a Shaughnessy or a Van Horne could have made of the Canadian Pacific the success it has been had it not been for the liberal "hand-out" given by this country. Of course there was also efficiency in operation. I doubt whether either of those railway magnates could make a success of the Canadian National Railways under the extravagant methods that now seem to prevail. The issue of bonds and securities by the Canadian National Railways should be made a matter of consideration and approval by the Railway Commission. What was the object of creating such a body if it was not to deal with matters of this kind. It is folly to talk about giving the management of our railways a free hand when there is such a lack of economy and efficient control. If parliament is going to give the management a free hand it will be a ruinous policy. We shall not, however, see any improvement until we return to the system of responsible government and parliamentary authority for expenditures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I want to take every step in my power to prevent this kind of legislation going through unguarded. I think the House as a whole now understands the attempts at concealment. There is only one thing in issue. It is not any question of the amount of the liability we are involved in, it is not a question of the powers we are granting, it is merely a question of whether we are going to depart from the custom we have observed from the commencement of the National Railways, of including the country's commitments in the Estimates. That is the whole question, and I do not think anybody can be honestly convinced to the contrary. When the same question was up before, in connection with new construction, the ministers had a better chance. They said, "Oh, this is for three years and we might not have enough in the Estimates to last just over the end of the fiscal year, and a contractor might have to stop," as if that would not apply to any other public work just the same. But they managed to confuse hon. members, and I have thought they must have had a good laugh in council, when they got through, over the way they did it. They cannot use that argument in this case, consequently they have been less successful. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Tolmie:

That there be added to subsection 3 of section 2 the following words:

Provided that before any guarantee is given the amount of same shall be included each year in the estimates and be voted by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: The principle involved is scarcely worthy of a moment's consideration. The right hon. gentleman takes the ground that every appropriation and every obligation for the year undertaken by the government of Canada must be set forth in the estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that.

Mr. FIELDING: If the right hon. gentleman did not say that it is the substance of his argument. That is a departure from the practice of parliament. We do not set forth every obligation. There are many cases—I have already given illustrations, I can furnish many more—where appropriations are made by special act and are not set forth in the estimates. It makes no earthly difference whether they are voted in the estimates or are authorized by special act; the essence of the whole thing is that these obligations cannot be assumed without the vote of the House; and whether you have it on this page or that page, in this blue book or that blue book, what earthly difference does it make to the people of Canada? The obligations are assumed on parliamentary authority and are set forth and shown in the public accounts. There have been cases again and again—there always have been under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, there were such cases under our administration, and there will be in the future—when it is deemed right and proper to provide for special appropriations in acts of parliament. You may lay down the rule that in every case the amount must be shown in the Estimates but I say it is a matter of no earthly importance to the parliament or the people of Canada so long as the rule is recognized of parliamentary control, and that no appropriation can be made unless it is made by this House. That is the essence of the whole thing. That is the principle for which we stand.

Amendment (Mr. Meighen) negatived: Yeas 37, Nays 67.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill 225, to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

He said: The amendment consists in substituting the words "prima facie" for the word "conclusive." We provided in the bill that the report of the analyst would be taken as conclusive evidence, and the Senate substituted the words "prima facie" in lieu of conclusive, which I think is right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is a very small verbal change, but it might have a vast effect—something like leaving out the word "not." Changing the word "conclusive" to "prima facie" entails the necessity of having some one competent and authorized to determine what is conclusive.

Mr. BUREAU: It does not bar anyone from disputing the report of the analyst.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The matter can wait for committee.

Mr. BUREAU: I objected to the word "conclusive," but I decided to let it go to the House. I thought it would not be right to bar a man from bringing evidence to dispute the evidence of the officers of the department.

Motion agreed to and amendment read the second time, and concurred in.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES MURPHY (Postmaster General), moved the second reading of Bill 246, to amend the Post Office Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

[Mr. Fielding.]

On section 1—Postage rates on certain newspapers and periodicals reduced from 1½ cents to 1¼ cents.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister might explain this section.

Mr. MURPHY: The explanation was given yesterday. Summarized it is a changing of the maximum postal rates on periodicals from 1½ to 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is a lot more important than appears on the surface. The minister did give a fairly full explanation the other day. The rate was formerly very low entailing a tremendous loss to the country for the carriage of newspapers; and it is only fair that the House should know—which the minister did not say—that this loss necessarily was borne by the whole country, except the few who got the benefit of it. While it is true in a slight degree that the small newspapers get some benefit, the newspapers which get the real benefit are the great big newspapers that travel all over the Dominion, that go out of Montreal and Toronto and circulate from end to end of the country. The Dominion, as a matter of fact, was shouldering a heavy obligation in carrying newspapers, entailing, I cannot recall just how much, but running into hundreds of thousands—yes, running into millions of dollars; I am pretty sure I am right on that point, the minister should be able to tell us. So that it really amounted to a subsidy. The late government started to correct that state of affairs, and by a graduated scale we provided—and parliament accepted the provision—that the rate should go up to, I think, 1½ cents per pound. My recollection was, and the minister confirmed it yesterday, that even then we had not overtaken the loss by any means, and that it cost a great deal more to distribute than 1½ cents per pound.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not think I was out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I had reference to the conversation in the chamber.

Mr. MEIGHEN I appreciate the importance atached to my words by the Chair, because certainly all ought to hear them. This government has evidently submitted to importunities and proposes to go back, not all but part of the road, and leave the rate at 1¼ cents. I do not know what is involved in this 1¼ cents. The quarter of a cent difference amounts to a charge on the treasury of a very substantial sum, and the benefit goes, not to the small papers—the amount that they are interested in, while of course it is something, is very little. The great benefit goes to the big newspapers. Let me emphasize this. The small newspaper is really hurt, I would think, by the low rate, for the reason that the field of the small newspaper is then more easily invaded by the large. The large newspaper gets into the small newspaper's field at the public expense, because of the cheap rate, and consequently curtails the circulation of the small newspaper. Is the minister not doing an injustice rather than a favour to the small newspapers? Ostensibly, perhaps, the small newspaper proprietor will think: "I would like to get my paper out as cheaply as I can, more cheaply than actual cost," but he will find his field more easily invaded by the big paper. According to the law, I understand the rate of postage is the same for a long distance as for a short. I am pretty sure I am right in that. Therefore a newspapr is carried from Montreal to Vancouver at the same rate as that for which the proprietor of a small newspaper gets his paper carried perhaps, a ride of eight miles. Thus, the more you go below the cost, the greater the advantage to the big newspaper in its competition with the smaller one, particularly in view of the statements that have reached the people through the press of the great economies the minister is effecting, all of which were due to the continuing of the ascending scale rate that we put into effect. I would not like to see the minister robbed of the benefit of that just as the time of fruition is arriving. I would like to see him get the benefit of the better showing which our legislation might bring forth. Why should he want to deny himself now? Would he not have been better to stand to his guns and be, at least, in a position to show the result of the legislation of others?

Mr. MURPHY: May I say, in brief, that the argument which my right hon. friend has just placed before the House from different standpoints, is incorrect from each standpoint? As regards what he said last, that the increase—

Mr. MEIGHEN: The better showing.

Mr. MURPHY: —the "better showing" was due to an act passed in 1920, that is not the fact. May I take the House into confidence for a moment, and say that when I came into office, I found that an order in council had been passed by the administration of which my right hon. friend was a member, taking away from the Postmaster General the right to make railway mail rates and vesting that power in the Board of Railway Commissioners? That was obviously done to make a better showing for the Canadian National railways, and it was of course acquiesced in by the other railways. I went to the trouble of taking a staff of officers to New York to investigate railway mail rates inasmuch as the order in council passed here was professedly based on American practice. After a week's intensive investigation in New York, I discovered, with the aid of my officials, that the Post Office Department was paying the railways of Canada as much to carry one mail bag in a baggage car, as the same railways charged to carry two passengers with their bags in a parlour car. Naturally, being a business man, I was not quite so innocent as to let that sort of thing continue. I had the order in council repealed and a new scale of railway mail rates adopted, as a result of which at one stroke we saved $400,000. In addition, I found that a considerable number of accounts for the carriage of mails of foreign countries across Canadian territory had not been attended to, nor had settlements been made. Settlements were negotiated, and eventually we succeeded in getting all those accounts settled, with the result that the treasury of the Dominion of Canada benefited to the extent of $950,000.

As a result of the International Postal Conference that was held last fall—and by the way it may surprise the committee to know that the work of that conference was concreted into a treaty which I signed, without any ambassador, British or American, intervening, acting solely under the powers conferred upon me as Canadian Postmaster General by the Canada Post Office Act—we saved at one stroke $110,000 which we formerly paid for the carriage of American mail across our territory from Buffalo to Detroit. Under the provisions of the treaty that we made last December the Americans agreed to relieve us of that payment. A further change that was made in consequence of the conference, was that we get from the United States payment on the excess parcels carried to Canada, an amount that will aggregate about $300,000 per annum. These are some of the new sources of revenue of the Post Office Department, without my going into the question of these rates at all.

As to the other argument of my right hon. friend that it is the small paper that is really affected, representations made to me are entirely contrary to that. The small papers are the papers that have pressed for this deduction. Only this morning I was informed by a gentleman engaged in the publication of a weekly newspaper, who is a very ardent supporter of my right hon. friend, that it is the small papers that will be benefited, because they are the ones that are most affected.

The other argument that my right hon. friend used—that the daily papers would invade particularly the field of the local papers—is not a fact, because the big newspapers do not, as a matter of fact, use the post office for transmission within short distances. They send their papers by express. In the act, there is a section with which my right hon. friend was not familiar, which provides that papers issued not more than once a week are carried free of postage within an area of forty miles. I think that disposes of my right hon. friend's arguments.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister has taken occasion to review matters not connected at all with his bill—

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, arising out of the economies.

Mr. MEIGHEN:—matters which consequently would not be investigated by hon. members for the purpose of replying to him. I notice that the one large item which he mentioned, was an item of collection of debts. I would presume that such items would appear almost every year. There certainly would be debts to collect, and while, sometimes, it is an achievement to collect them, I would fancy that in these cases, it would be practically no achievement at all.

Mr. MURPHY: These were three years overdue.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and if this government is in power for three years—and I doubt that—it will have debts which are overdue, too.

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some of them I can name now. As regards the savings in connection with his postal conference, I only hope they are correct.

Mr. MURPHY: They are correct.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not been able to go into them, and I only hope they are correct. There is no reason why there should not be improvement in this regard, nor in connection with the carriage of mails. I would not think it was a colossal achievement, warranting us in sending a wreath of flowers to the Postmaster General, that at a time when all rates are or ought to be going down, there should be some reduction in these rates. I understand from the minister the matter of railway mail rates was placed under the Railway Commission. I do not know myself why that should not be. That would seem to me to be the appropriate place.

Mr. MURPHY: That was done in violation of the act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then the commission would not have power.

Mr. MURPHY: They acted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know. I have not looked into the legal aspect of the matter at all, but it seems to me that the Railway Commission is the proper place in which to discuss the railway mail rates.

Mr. MURPHY: The Post Office Act empowers the Postmaster General to make all rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well. I am not speaking now as a matter of law but as a matter of policy. I do not know why one thing after the other should be taken from the commission unless we are to abolish it. I would fancy it was the proper body. I would expect that when reducing newspaper rates mail rates would also be reduced. But why should this rate be reduced when it is below cost? The minister says the small publishers want the reduction. There may be some who do. My recollection is that the pressure did not come from them, but I do recall very strong pressure indeed from other sources. I am just as anxious to help large papers as any others, but there is a limit to the help that ought to be given out of the Treasury. The minister says that he was terribly shocked in New York to find that the railways were getting the same for carrying a mail bag as for carrying two persons with their baggage. Such anomalies can be found anywhere in transportation service. Right under this bill—if the minister gets it through— he is providing the same charge for carrying the Montreal Star from Montreal to Vancouver, 5,000 miles, as for carrying the Portage la Prairie Graphic out to Carberry, 45 miles. Is not this disparity infinitely greater than that of the case he mentions? These disparities inevitably occur in railway transportation, so there is really nothing remarkable about what he found in New York. I have grave doubts as to the wisdom of this bill. I should like the minister to produce figures so that the committee may understand just what amounts are involved. How much are we losing now on the carriage of mails? And what does this mean in the way of voting money out of the Treasury?

Mr. MURPHY: In reply to my right hon. friend's request made yesterday, the department informs me that newspapers are carried as part of the general mails, and it is practically impossible to segregate the cost of their carriage. The difference in postal revenue under this reduction will amount to about $200,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The difference between the 1½ and the 1¼ cent rate?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not see why periodicals and newspapers should be given reduced rates unless the reduction is extended to other mail matter. The Postmaster General might well follow the example of his illustrious precedessor, Sir William Mulock, and reduce the postage rates to the pre-war level. There might be deficits at first but within a year or two the increased business would result in a surplus. There should be some way of separating the receipts of the postal department so as to show the revenue from postal business and from revenue stamps.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Murphy) is quite correct. I know that very complete statements were made up by the post office, and I would ask him to bring down the file showing the calculations made for the information of a sub-committee that went into this matter very carefully.

Mr. MURPHY: When?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: At the time the order went through for increasing these rates. The increase was not jumped at. Does my hon. friend know what the cost in the States is for the carrying of newspapers?

Mr. MURPHY: I have not that statement at hand.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Surely he knows the American rates?

Mr. MURPHY: What sub-committee does my hon. friend refer to?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was a sub-committee that reported on the cost of distributing this newspaper mail. There should be officials in his department capable of furnishing this information, unless he has got rid of everyone who knows anything. Dr. Coulter would certainly know, and also former Inspector Ross. Of course, these two gentlemen are no longer in the department. I ask my hon. friend to bring that report down, as well as information regarding the American newspaper rates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Corresponding to these.

Mr. MURPHY: I have not any of the information for which my hon. friend asks. If he insists on its being furnished we will have to adjourn.

At one oclock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I see that my genial friend the minister is here with the information that I was asking for.

Mr. MURPHY: Before the House rose at one o'clock the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) made reference to a sub-committee to consider the question of increased postal rates on newspapers in 1920. My hon. friend was unable to give me exact information as to the sub-committee in question, but I have found out since that it was a sub-committee of the cabinet and that the data was prepared for the information of that sub-committee. My hon. friend also mentioned that Dr. Coulter or Mr. Ross would be certain to have the information if they were available, but as they were not around he thought it might not be obtainable from the other officials in the department. As to that I may say that the data was prepared in 1920 by Mr. Webster, secretary of the department, and the same gentleman, Mr. Webster, handed me the data since one o'clock. I find that the United States rates, in regard to which my hon. friend as well as the hon. leader of the Opposition were inquiring, are 1½ cents a pound on the news section of newspapers, and from 2 to 10 cents a pound on the advertising sections, depending on the distance. That is, zones have been established varying from 150 miles to 1,800 miles and over.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That applies to the news sections as well as to the advertising.

Mr. MURPHY: Not to the reading matter. The rate applying to reading matter—that is, the news sections—is 1½ cents a pound.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rise not for the purpose of opposing the bill so much as for the purpose of showing why the rate was put in. The information the minister has been good enough to give me I also found upstairs. He did not tell me anything about costs, and I will give Mr. Webster's information on that question. The report reads:

> According to statistics taken in August, 1918, the total weight of newspapers carried by post is 87,501,490 pounds per annum. The sum collected for newspaper postage last year amounted to only $291,104. Newspapers now occupy 60 per cent of the floor space required for the transportation of the mails.

Just there I would ask the minister what proportion is now taken by the newspapers.

Mr. MURPHY: I think it would be about the same.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think so, too. The report continues:

As this is paid for by the car mile it means that for railway transportation alone papers cost the department over $2,000,000 per annum. This cost is for carriage alone and does not include a single cent for transfer to stations, transfer between trains and stations, sortation and distribution at the office of posting and on trains, mail courier service, handling and delivery at post office of destination, etc. The total expenditure for the carriage of mails and the cost of mail bags during the fiscal year 1918 was $8,293,-515.24. Sixty per cent of this amount, or $4,976,-109.15 might therefore be charged to newspaper service, in addition to a percentage of the salaries of postmasters and other post office employees, which it would be difficult to apportion.

In the last analysis the question is one of transportation. The department pays for the carriage of mails across the country by the car mile, and every car added means a very considerable amount added to the cost of transportation.

Then it is pointed out that newspapers are carried by post not only without profit but at an immense loss. What did the receipts from the carriage of newspapers amount to last year at the increased rate?

Mr. MURPHY: My information is, about $1,300,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So then if the figures of my hon. friend's clerk are correct we got $1,300,000 from a service that costs $4,900,000. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY: I would not admit that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am just taking the data my hon. friend has referred to—sixty per cent of this amount or $4,967,109.15 as the cost of giving this service. If my hon. friend has any other figure I would like to consider it now.

Mr. MURPHY: My hon. friend will appreciate that between one o'clock and now there has not been much time to check the figures, but roughly speaking the amount is between two and three millions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The whole difference that my hon. friend gave in cost was a small item of $400,000 in connection with the railways.

Mr. MURPHY: My hon. friend is confusing two things. That is what the railways charge the post office for carrying the mails.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not confusing them at all. One figure is $2,000,000 for railway transportation. There has been a saving in the whole transportation of $400,000. We have to take the same fraction in connection with the $4,000,000, which would give us $240,000, so in relation to a cost of $2,000,000 we would have a cost to-day of that sum less $240,000.

Mr. MURPHY: My hon. friend will appreciate that even the amount stated was only an approximate amount.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But my hon. friend has nothing else, and this was prepared by a gentleman to whom he gave a good character just a few minutes ago. Now as to the volume of business, I wonder if this is right: Over two-thirds of the newspapers the post office carries are dailies, or about 65,000,000 copies per annum. Has my hon. friend information on that now?

Mr. MURPHY: I would suppose the proportion would be maintained.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The postage on the dailies at that time was $162,500. What is the present postage?

Mr. MURPHY: I have only the details mentioned. I think it is $1,300,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then, as to the weeklies, there were only 20,000,000 pounds of weekly newspapers carried with a postage of $40,000. The net result would be that the rate at that time amounted to $200,000 roughly speaking, which has been increased to $1,300,000.

Mr. MURPHY: The quarter-cent rate prevailed at that time. It amounted to $290,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The memorandum goes on as follows:

No other country has as low a postage rate for newspapers as Canada. In fact, in every other country in the world, except Canada and the United States, postage on newspapers is prepaid by stamp affixed to each copy. In many cases the rates go from 3 to 7 cents per pound. The rate is really more than this when it is considered that it is not a bulk rate but that each paper must bear its own postage, so that advantage cannot be taken of fractions as is the case in Canada and the United States where the rates are on the bulk weight of the mailings.

I would ask my hon. friend if that same condition applies to-day.

Mr. MURPHY: I would expect it would, but I have not definite information.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then the memorandum says:

In the United States the present newspaper rates are 1½ cents per pound on the reading matter and on advertisements contained in the papers from 1½ to 5½ cents according to the distance the papers have to be carried, the rates on the advertising portions of the papers being settled according to the distance the papers have to be carried, and these latter rates are to be increased from a minimum of 2 cents to a maximum of 10 cents per pound, according to the distance, and becoming effective in July, 1921.

I would ask if the American government has put that increase into effect.

Mr. MURPHY: I am so informed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So, although the American rates were higher than ours they have been increased to a still greater sum.

Mr. MURPHY: I think the rates mentioned by my hon. friend are the rates in force at the present time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would be an increase from a minimum of two cents to a maximum of ten cents a pound according to the distance. In Great Britain the rate is a flat one of one cent per copy, which means a rate of at least three or four cents per pound on the bulk weight. Is that correct to-day?

Mr. MURPHY: I have no information as to that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Again, am I right in this, that there was practically no increase made in so far as the rural weekly newspapers throughout the country are concerned, as a large part of their circulation is carried postage free. Does my hon. friend propose to disturb those conditions?

Mr. MURPHY: There was an exception made for papers published not more than once a week. The weeklies were carried free within a radius of forty miles.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Quite right. could my hon. friend give me any other reasons for the adoption of the act other than those already given?

Mr. MURPHY: I do not know that I can add anything to the reasons already given. The representations made have been made, as I explained to the committee, at the instance largely of the smaller newspapers, the weekly papers, religious papers, technical papers, trade papers and other publications of that character.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It will be noticed from the figures supplied by the department itself, then, that it is the small end that is interested. The large end, the eighty per cent, are not interested in it at all. It used to be otherwise in days gone by. The big people, the eighty per cent, were the interested people and they thought they were paying a great deal too much and that we were doing a great deal for the small people in leaving them as they were left. What I am doing now is merely showing justification for the action taken by the former government. I am not now going to oppose what my hon. friend is doing. I know it is no good, but I think we have to show a complete justification for our course, Mr. Chairman, when on the admitted figures the revenues then obtained were $290,000 and the cost of carrying the service was over $4,900,000. The revenue to-day is bettered being $1,300,000 as stated by my hon. friend, but the cost apparently remains constant with the exception of sixty per cent of $400,000, or $240,000. Of course, my hon. friend does not dispute the original figures. What is my hon. friend's estimate as to the reduction in revenue when this change is made?

Mr. MURPHY: The estimated reduction will be about $200,000 on the $1,300,000. I would draw attention to the fact that the special committee of the cabinet, of which my hon. friend was a member, had before it all this data and with that data before it it decided not to impose a higher maximum rate, than 1½ cents.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it that my hon. friend agrees that we went far enough.

Mr. MURPHY: It has been claimed you went too far.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend evidently thinks we went far enough. Although the deficits were great we did not take it all up, I admit that. Has my hon. friend any figures in connection with the supplementary estimates that are brought down?

Mr. MURPHY: The Post Office has complied strictly with the request of the Minister of Finance to practise economy and has brought down no supplementary estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad to hear that, and yet I am sorry, because I wanted to discuss a matter with the minister. I was going to ask him when the orders and the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission are going to be given effect to in his department.

Mr. MURPHY: The orders and recommendations of the Civil Service Commission have been given effect to as rapidly as possible, and if there are any still remaining for attention they will receive my attention as soon as the House prorogues.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am very glad to have that assurance from my hon. friend, because it has seemed to be years before we could get any action out of the department.

The weather is warm and molasses ought to move freely now but in this case the molasses seems to be frozen all the time. There are appointments dating back for many months. If the minister looks into the matter he will find there was a list given to the House, but the Acting Postmaster General could not do anything about it in the absence of the head of the department. I do hope that something will be done now. I merely want to point out to my hon. friend that, so far as I have been able to ascertain, the period of time allowed in connection with temporary appointees is long since passed and that the payments made to them are entirely illegal.

Mr. FORKE: I almost hesitate to intervene in the dialogue between the Postmaster General (Mr. Murphy) and the ex-Minister of Finance (Sir Henry Drayton), but I should like to say a word in connection with the rate on newspapers. I do not think the rate affects dailies as much as some would suppose, but it is a matter of concern to quite a few very important weekly newspapers that circulate all over the Dominion. I must say that it benefits our people to a very large extent to be furnished with these papers at a reasonable rate. In the case of these weeklies I should think the increase in the rate per pound would affect them very seriously. For that reason I should almost be inclined to reduce the rate to one cent instead of one and a quarter cents. However, since the ex-Minister of Finance is pleased with it I think we might, perhaps, let the proposed rate go through.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I did not express any such opinion.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know whether this is the proper time to register a protest against the increasing size of the newspapers of to-day. I think they are becoming almost a nuisance on that account. It may be deemed presumptuous on my part to indulge in anything like criticism along this line, but it does seem pertinent when we hear the talk about the increasing cost of paper and other expenses in connection with the production of newspapers. I suppose the increased size of our daily journals is to be attributed to the volume of advertising. I sometimes pick up a newspaper and notice that it is entirely blank except for some such announcement as this: "This space is reserved. Watch out for to-morrow." I think that in the matter of size our newspapers are almost getting beyond the limit, and if this policy continues I should almost be inclined to add a little more to the postage rate.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

There is another thing to which I desire to refer. I do not want to waste time but I should like to take this opportunity of making this statement. I hope I am not lacking in a sense of humour, but I do not always like the funny page in our newspapers. I do protest against pages that are supposed to be funny but in reality are not so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do not cut out "Mutt and Jeff."

Mr. FORKE: Of course, other people may view this matter in a different light. I am pleased to see this reduction in the rate on newspapers. I think it will be of advantage to people living in rural communities. Living in this city, as I have been for the past five months, I appreciate the privilege city people have of getting the newspaper handed in to them at their door every morning, and I am prepared to encourage as much as possible anything that will promote the circulation of newspapers in the rural districts.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to ask the minister a question but first I will say for the benefit of the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) that probably the managers of some of the large newspapers in this country had better send for him so that he may tell them how to run their journals.

Mr. FORKE: Thank you, you are very kind.

Mr. HANSON: It reminds me of the statement made by some hon. gentlemen to my left that a great many people are telling the farmers how to farm. In this case the hon. member for Brandon is telling the newspapers how to conduct their business.

Mr. FORKE: Excuse me. I did not speak about the production of newspapers, I spoke from the viewpoint of the reader.

Mr. HANSON: It did not strike me that way. The Postmaster General was good enough to say to the ex-Minister of Finance that immediately after prorogation he would attend to cases where certificates of appointment have been given postmasters, and other officials of the department, by the Civil Service Commission, but had not been acted on. During the Postmaster General's absence we had a short discussion here on the appointment of a postmaster at Clementsport, Nova Scotia. I beg to draw the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the gentleman designated by—

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that such a matter can hardly come up in connection with the postage rate on newspapers.

Mr. HANSON: If you will allow me to continue my statement I will not occupy a minute. In the case of the Clementsport post office a certificate was granted in May, 1922, but the gentleman has not yet been installed in office.

Mr. MURPHY: I shall look into the matter immediately.

Mr. RINFRET: As a newspaper man I may be permitted to say a word on this subject. I have much sympathy with the view expressed, that in course of time the newspapers should defray the full cost of transportation through the mails. The reduction in this instance is an indirect subsidy granted to newspapers . At the present time there is a subsidy given to the Canadian Press. It is true that only applies to a limited number of newspapers, but nevertheless it is for the dissemination of news. In the present case one might almost say that the reduced rate is for the dissemination of advertisements. In this country, however, the material used by the newspapers is still rather cheap as compared with the cost in European countries. That, perhaps, accounts for the amount of space devoted to the publication of advertisements as well as to the publication of news. The time may come when the government will have to follow the example of the United States and in their postal rate have regard to the amount of advertising as well as to the amount of news published by the newspapers. But this point does not arise in connection with the present legislation. We agreed on the principle three years ago, when a discussion took place on this matter. I believe that Hon. Mr. Burrell introduced a bill dealing with the postage rates on newspapers, and there was a general agreement that a time would come when the newspapers could not be allowed to send advertising through the mails at the cost of the taxpayer. A certain graduated scale of rates was then decided upon. Three years ago the rate was only ¼ cent per pound, but it was afterwards raised to 1½ cents a pound, or six times the former rate. The only object of the bill is to relieve the newspapers to some extent of this too rapid scale of increase, and give them a chance to readjust their operations according to the new condition of things. I think it is very reasonable that we should give them that privilege. After the provisions of the bill are put in force the newspapers will have to pay five times as much for transportation as they did three years ago. I think that is a very rapid advancement. Although I support the bill, as a newspaper man I stand very strongly for the newspapers paying the full cost of transportation for the papers sent to their customers throughout the country. It will either come to a point where they will have to charge more for subscriptions, or reduce the number of pages, but, in either case, it would be unfair to expect that the taxpayers would be expected forever to pay these rates for the transportation of newspapers.

PENSION LEGISLATION—PETITION PRESENTED

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): I ask the House to receive a petition which has been sent to me for presentation to the House. I understand that, under the rules, petitions should be presented prior to the introduction of bills, but in view of the fact the House will close shortly I ask the indulgence of hon. members to have the petition read by the Clerk at this time.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the House, the hon. member may present the petition. Petitions are presented on routine proceedings, but by unanimous consent the petition can be presented now.

The petition was read, as follows:

To the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled

The petition of the Dominion Veterans' Alliance of Canada

Humbly Sheweth:—

That John Thompson, Chairman, John Paton, Secretary, Board of Pension Commissioners, and N. F. Parkinson, Deputy Minister, E. Flexman, Director of Administration, W. C. Arnold, Director of Medical Services, Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, be instructed to refrain from further expression of opposition to the enactment of legislation approved by the House of Commons upon the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-establishment; and that said officials be cautioned to exercise greater sympathy toward disabled ex-service men and dependents of deceased ex-service men; and that assurance as to the intentions of the Honourable Members of the House of Commons in this regard be conveyed to the various organizations of ex-service men, who unanimously support this Petition.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray that your Honourable House may be pleased to pass a resolution for the purposes above mentioned.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Dated at Ottawa this Twenty-eight day of June, A.D. 1923.

C. G. MacNeil,
Dominion Secretary-Treasurer,
The Great War Veterans' Association of Canada, and Chairman of the Legislative Committee of The Dominion Veterans' Alliance.

H. COLEBOURNE,
Dominion Secretary-Treasurer,
The Army and Navy Veterans in Canada, and Member of the Legislative Committee of The Dominion Veterans' Alliance.

J. S. KEELING,
Dominion Secretary-Treasurer,
The Tuberculous Veterans' Association, and Member of the Legislative Committee of The Dominion Veterans' Alliance.

J. MACKENZIE,
Representing the Imperial Veterans in Canada, and Member of the Legislative Committee of The Dominion Veterans' Alliance.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES FOR 1923-4

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the year ending 31st March, 1924, was presented by Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) read by Mr. Speaker to the House and referred to the committee of supply.

Mr. FIELDING: May I be permitted to ask that, to avoid delay, these supplementary estimates include two items, one of $30,000 for the administration of the Combines Act, and one for $10,000 a grant to the Canadian National Institute for the blind. These are two items omitted which should have been included.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION ACT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Argenteuil) (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 45, an Act respecting Chinese Immigration.

He said: I do not wish to concur in all the amendments without discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The usual move is for the House to receive the senate amendments and deal with them in the regular procedure, but a part of that procedure is a full explanation to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member might explain the nature of the amendments, and then the question could be put.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The senate has amended paragraph n of section 8. That paragraph reads:

(n) Persons over fifteen years of age, physically capable of reading, who cannot read the English or the French language or some other language or dialect. For the purpose of ascertaining whether aliens can read, the immigration officer shall use slips of uniform size prepared by direction of the minister, each containing not less than thirty and not more than forty words in ordinary use printed in plainly legible type in the language or dialect the person may designate as the one in which he desires the examination to be made, and he shall be required to read the words printed on the slip in such language or dialect. The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to Canadian citizens, or to persons in transit through Canada;

They have struck out the words—

The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to Canadian citizens or to persons in transit through Canada;

And they have substituted:

The provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to persons residing in Canada at the date of the passing of this act, nor to Canadian citizens.

I may say for the information of the House that evidently the intent of the Senate was that it should not apply to Chinese now resident in Canada. I have no serious objection to offer to this, because in cases where the question of deportation of Chinese nationals who are in Canada might come up, we would not be likely to utilize this method of deporting.

Then clause 10 reads:

10. (1) The controller shall have authority to determine whether an immigrant, passenger or other person seeking to enter or land in Canada or detained for any cause under this Act is of Chinese origin or descent and whether such immigrant, passenger or other person, if found to be of Chinese origin or descent, shall be allowed to enter, land or remain in Canada or shall be rejected and deported.

(2) The examination of persons of Chinese origin or descent applying for admission or entry to Canada shall be separate and apart from the public and in the presence of such persons only as the controller shall permit.

They have added to that this clause:

Provided that if, on the preliminary hearing, the controller is not satisfied that such person is entitled to remain in Canada, the hearing shall be thereupon adjourned for forty-eight hours or for such longer period as the controller may see fit, and an opportunity shall be given such person to consult with duly accredited legal counsel who shall be entitled to represent him upon the hearing and upon all subsequent proceedings.

What it means is that when a decision that involves deportation is arrived at by the controller, a further hearing is guaranteed the applicant after the period of forty eight hours to permit him to secure counsel. I do not know that one should object to that particularly.

An amendment is made by the Senate to clause 18. The clause reads:

Within 12 months after the coming into force of this act and subject to such regulations as may be made by the Governor General in Council for the purpose, every person of Chinese origin or descent in Canada, irrespective of allegiance or citizenship, shall register with such officer or officers and at such place or places as are designated by the Governor General in Council for that purpose, and obtain a certificate in the form prescribed.

The amendment is to insert the following:

Provided that those persons who may, during the time fixed for registration, be absent from Canada with authority to return, may register upon their return.

It will be somewhat embarrassing to registration officials to work this out, because it will have to be done at a designated time and over a designated period. If a resident of Canada is absent on permit and does not return within the specified time when the registration is going on, this is evidently for the purpose of allowing him to become registered or to make application for registration.

Mr. CARROLL: Does not the bill as introduced by the minister provide that when an oriental leaves this country and goes to his home, he may not return?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. He gets a permit upon which he may be absent for a specified time, and upon his return he presents that certificate.

Clause 26 has been amended. When the bill was in committee, one important amendment to clause 26 was submitted by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). The clause as passed by this House reads:

Whenever any officer or peace officer has reason to believe that any person of Chinese origin or descent has entered or remains in Canada—

The amendment of my hon. friend added to the officers who would have authority to demand the production of a certificate or to make an explanation of any who were thought to be in Canada illegally. Instead of this being confined to officers of the department, peace officers of the government were included. The Senate amendment is to strike out the words "or peace officer."

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister approve that? If he does, I should like to say a word in regard to it, but if not,—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): All I can say is that under the legislation I have authority, without reference to this section, to appoint anyone a peace officer. Therefore the amendment is not so important from that standpoint.

Mr. STEVENS: Does the minister mean to infer that under paragraph (d) of clause 2, the interpretation clause, he can appoint any peace officer as an officer of the department, giving him the same powers as would be conferred should this which has now been struck out remain in the bill?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is my understanding.

Mr. NEILL: Presumably the Senate were animated by some reason or motive. Did they hint at or give any explanation of what that reason was?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think representations were made to the Senate by people acting on behalf of the Chinese that this was rather drastic, and they thought, perhaps, it was too drastic to include the whole police force in this particular work. As I pointed out to my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), there may be some virtue in making selections of various persons throughout the country to do this particular work.

Further down, the same clause 26 reads:

The officer may detain such person in custody and bring him before the nearest controller for examination, and if the controller finds that he has entered or remains in Canada contrary to the provisions of this act or the Chinese Immigration Act or any amendment thereof, such person shall be deported.

The Senate have substituted the word "may" for the word "shall." We had some discussion upon the meaning of that particular word when we were discussing the bill in committee, but I do not believe this amendment makes much difference. It is in the discretion of the minister or the controller how he shall act in that particular case.

Clause 27 of the bill is struck out entirely and a new clause substituted. The new clause reads:

27. (1) Every person of Chinese origin or descent resident in Canada at the date of the coming into force of this act, who was admitted under the provisions of any act now or heretofore in force, and did not secure such admission by fraudulent misrepresentation, and does not belong to any of the prohibited classes of persons described in section 8 of this act, shall be deemed to be entitled to continue to reside in Canada: Provided, however, that any such person who was, subsequent to the 25th day of July, 1917, admitted without payment of the head tax because of his being a merchant and who has ceased to belong to such class, shall pay into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada the sum of five hundred dollars, and if he refuses or fails to make such payment he shall ipso facto forfeit his right to remain in Canada, and may be arrested by any officer without a warrant and brought before a controller for examination, whereupon he shall be dealt with to all intents and purposes in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as in the case of a person apprehended under section 26 of this act.

(2) Any person admitted under this act who at any time after admission ceases to belong to any of the classes admissible under this Act shall, unless he is a Canadian citizen, ipso facto forfeit his right to remain in Canada and may be arrested by any officer without a warrant and brought before a controller for examination, whereupon he shall be dealt with to all intents and purposes in the same manner and subject to the same provisions as in the case of a person apprehended under section 26 of this act.

It was not the intention of the department to do anything more than is contained in this amendment. That is, it was not the intention of the department to disturb any Chinese national who was in Canada legally at the time of the registration, because this refers to the registration. The intention was to deal only with those who were illegally in Canada at that time. It is alleged that in 1920 a very considerable number including many labourers, came in under a section permitting merchants to enter Canada. This amendment makes it a little difficult to deal with a labourer who came in two years ago as a merchant, but has been engaged in manual labour since, as it gives him the choice of paying the $500 head tax or being deported. In dealing with the nationals of any country who are admitted by making false representations, we have not very much leeway. The natural course would be to deport them. Probably not more than thirteen or fourteen hundred persons would be affected by this amendment.

Mr. CARROLL: Who would be the judge of whether a man is a merchant or a labourer?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is alleged that a number of these men never were merchants, and came in by misrepresentation. However, Mr. Speaker, rather than lose the effect of the balance of the legislation which we think it is in the interests of the department to have, I move that we accept the Senate amendment.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

FEEDING STUFFS ACT AMENDMENT

House again in committee on bill No. 238 to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Definition. Bran, pure shorts, etc.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Has the minister any explanation to give the committee regarding the proposed changes in the bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The committee will recall that this matter was pretty fully discussed under the resolution, which was changed to a certain extent. Since then the millers' representatives have discussed the bill with some of the members of the Advisory Board under the Seed Control Act, who informed me that the agreement arrived at between the millers, the live stock men and the produce dealers is, in their estimation, the fairest arrangement that can be devised. I pointed out to them that this House has the last word in respect to these matters, and that the consensus of opinion seemed to be in favour of keeping each mill by-product distinct. The millers' representatives pointed out that if this were done the millers would once more have to change their appliances, having already changed them to comply with the recommendations of the Advisory Board in such a way as to have four of the by-products pure, with a fifth consisting of a mixture of screenings and shorts. I have looked into the matter pretty carefully and I think that if we get four by-products of the mill in their purity it will be in the interests of buyers to allow a mixed feed of screenings and shorts, for which there must be a demand or the mills would not make it. Primarily the demand for this mixture must come from those who use it, mostly farmers. Naturally the millers want to meet that demand.

Mr. HALBERT: Has the department full knowledge that the millers could not buy screenings at Fort William for shipment to their mills, there to be ground and mixed with shorts?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is quite right, the millers could do so. But as far as I can make out screenings are not sufficiently popular down here for the millers to do so.

Mr. BROWN: Is the minister satisfied that the demand by farmers for mixed feed is sufficient to justify the mixture?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What else would induce the millers to manufacture it? I am trying to be fair to all sides. As far as I understand the situation, while the millers may defeat the purpose of the bill, it seems to me it is in their interests not to do so, because they must please their customers with this mixture. They have four by-products in their purity—bran, shorts, middlings and low grade flour, and it is at the option of the buyer to ask for a mixture of screenings and shorts. Really, in our own interests as farmers I do not think we should be so exacting in our determination to have all these by-products in such an absolute condition of purity. You cannot get the best-balanced ration of fodder without a mixture. I am not a miller, but I am placing the arguments of the millers before hon. members. They take this ground: If you do not permit us to mix anything with the screenings to make them more acceptable to the buyer, we have to lose money by selling the screenings unmixed. I understand that they are quite unpopular down here.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not because they are bad feed.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Yes, there is nothing else in it but screenings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The term "mill screenings" suggests refuse, more or less. I have bought mill screenings at the Saskatoon elevator that were as good a hog feed as I ever fed. I do not understand the prejudice against it down here, but it does seem to exist. If they have to dispose of these screenings without being permitted to mix them with anything to make them more acceptable, there will have to be a loss and I suppose they will have to make it up on something else. I do not know whether there is anything in that or not, but I am placing the matter before the committee. We want to do what is in the interests of both parties concerned, the mills and the buyers of mill products.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Waterloo): I understand that when the wheat is bought by the miller it is bought with a certain dockage; the screenings are the result of the dockage and cost the miller practically nothing. It should be insisted upon that an analysis of these different foods be set out on the label attached to each sack. I have in mind the situation that existed during the war where the millers in Ontario reground bran and sold it to the farmers as shorts. Had an analysis of that material been furnished, it would clearly have been shown to be bran, but as it was, the persons who bought it were deceived; they not only paid a higher price but they paid for something they did not really get. There has been a lot of deception in the case of mill feeds and I think we should provide every possible safeguard. I am against anything being done to allow the millers to mix feeds unless they will state on the tags exactly what the analysis of the mixture is. That is a necessary safeguard to the buyers of the product.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is fair enough. The bill provides exactly for that.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Waterloo): Not the analysis.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, the analysis is here; the exact fibre content is shown. If the bran is ground into shorts, that will be known, because the fibre content will be stated.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Waterloo): It will not state the amount of protein, carbohydrates and fat.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, you will have to go into that further. But the fibre content is an indication of whether the material is bran or shorts or whether one has been converted into the other. As to the cost, my experience has been that wheat stored in the terminals, from which the millers usually buy, is purchased out of the terminals and paid for on its gross weight. When it is inspected at Winnipeg the inspection certificate will state not only the grade but also the dockage, if any. When it is sent to Fort William the inspectors must see that when it is unloaded it is put into its proper grade, and the proper amount of cleaning is done to make it come up to the inspection certificate. When that is done and it is warehoused it is bought as wheat and paid for as wheat. That is my understanding of it, and I have reasonable knowledge of the conditions. What other system could you have? When that wheat goes into the Fort William or any other terminal elevator and is commercially cleaned, it still contains so much screenings that it cannot be ground out that way. You have to go further than having it commercially cleaned; as a miller you have to clean it yourself and take out certain commodities in the way of refuse. It is permissible for this stuff to go into the general bin and even to go over for export, but it has to be taken out by whatever miller uses the wheat. Yet it is paid for as wheat. Well, what are you going to do with it? It is really a mill by-product; it is what was grown by and bought from the farmers. The contention is that if a mixture is produced of these screenings and shorts and they are labelled accordingly, there will be no deception.

What I want to get at is the best possible way of dealing with this question that has been on the boards now for quite a while. I am afraid that the milling industry ran a little loose some years ago in the unauthorized mixing of screenings. Legislation was later brought in under which they were authorized to do general mixing, and you could hardly get a better brand of shorts which has none of these mill screenings in it. There is still the suggestion that a compounding of mill screenings and shorts be permitted. If the committee do not want that; if they think it is not in the interests of anybody, particularly of the buyer, let us have it out, but let us not, out of prejudice to the mill, hurt those who have to buy this product. I assume that the reason why the mills want to make it that way is because somebody wants to buy it that way.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: But the buyers cannot get anything else. They have to take the adulterated stuff; they have no option in the matter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh, they have the option.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is not available; the mills do not manufacture it.

Mr. BROWN: The minister laid emphasis on the fact that the millers buy wheat and pay for it as wheat, notwithstanding the fact that there is a certain proportion of screenings in it. That is true, of course, in regard to the wheat actually going through the terminals at Fort William. But how about the mills situated all through western Canada which buy wheat from the threshing machines, which buy large quantities of screenings that they do not pay for? In that case they get the stuff absolutely free. I saw something in one of the mills last fall that made me feel pretty strongly on this point. I saw not only screenings, but scourings, dirt, sweepings, going into the shorts, and when I remembered that that shorts was on occasions used for human food, I felt disgusted. It is unfortunate that we should have to make regulations governing the mills in the interests of the consumer, but I do not see how we can do anything else. These mills are equipped with the very best machinery to take out every grain of wild oats, every one of the smallest seeds. The wheat is ground absolutely pure, so that the flour is pure, the bran and shorts are pure. Now, are we to allow them to go back and mix in all kinds of rubbish? It may be said that the miller should be allowed to do what he pleases with his own product. But this stuff is palmed off on a helpless public, who, in the great majority of cases have no opportunity of knowing what they are buying, who are compelled to buy this stuff because they cannot get a pure product. I do not think we should countenance any other law than that these products should be kept absolutely pure. I am aware that many of our western screenings have good feeding value, such as wild oats, wild buckwheat, and that some of the screenings are made up of cracked and broken wheat, which has a large feed value. But there are years when our western crops contain large quantities of seeds that are of little or no value compared with these. Very often we have large quantities of pigweed seed, French weed, mustard and other weeds. These things are all ground up and put into the bran and shorts, and sometimes the bran and shorts are left in such a way that they are so unpalatable to the stock that they will not take them, and the man who has bought them has no redress. The minister knows this as well as the rest of us from the West. We do not need to convince him personally that the interests of the public are jeopardized so long as this mixing of screenings with good wholesome bran and shorts goes on. If it continues to go on, probably pure bran and shorts will be on the market in such limited quantities that it will not be possible for us to get them at all.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Does the minister know that the millers in the province of Ontario mix with the bran and shorts the dust and dust screenings from oatmeal? I know that hundreds of tons of these dust screenings are mixed in with other feed in the province of Ontario. I am strongly opposed to anything being mixed with these screenings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are two sides to the question. There have been abuses with regard to mixing feeds in the past, and the point is, shall we go from the one extreme of allowing indiscriminate mixing to the other extreme of not allowing any mixing at all? That is the alternative. Is there not a middle course of having a mixture for the buyer who wants to buy mixed feed? If there is I would suggest to every member of the committee that, after we are through discussing it, we have a vote regardless of where we are sitting, just on the merits of the question, and see if we cannot come to a decision. If we do that nobody can have any grievance; I am sure I will not have. I think that is the best course to take in regard to the matter because it seems to me unwise to rush from the one extreme of indiscriminate mixing to the other extreme of not allowing any mixing at all. I have indicated to the millers' representatives that if one mixture is allowed, that is the mixture of screenings and shorts, and they do not play fair with it in the next year, I shall be one of the very first to cut this mixing down to a minimum. We are giving them that advantage not in their interests alone but in the interests of the buyers of these feeds.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I suggest to the minister that the mixing can always be done, and it is done to a large extent to-day, by the producer of the stock. If I want a mixed feed I can buy the feeds and mix them myself. I much prefer mixing my own feeds to having them mixed by someone I do not know anything about.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not often done.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It will be done.

Mr. CALDWELL: I was not in when this discussion started and I am surprised at the trend of it now because I thought this matter was all settled on June 22 when the bill was up for second reading. On that occasion the minister moved an amendment which was agreed to by the House, and which will be found on page 4425 of Hansard, in which he proposed to cut out the word "pure" and the words "shorts and screenings."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am sympathetically that way yet.

Mr. CALDWELL: But now he talks of taking a vote. I had supposed that all we had to do was give this bill its third reading. There was no objection to this amendment when it was moved by the minister on the 22nd and I hope that he is not going to go back on the stand he took then, which I think was a very good one. I think he was absolutely right, and I hope he will stand by his bill as he amended it the other evening.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: One of the reasons the bill is before my hon. friend in the form it is, is that it was reprinted in accordance with the amended resolution, but unfortunately one page of it was left exactly the way it was, while the other was according to the resolution. We had to take something, so we took the original bill.

Mr. CALDWELL: The minister seems to have very bad luck in having his bills printed. Perhaps we should get a special proof-reader for his bills. But the minister's explanation is no excuse for going back on the amendment that was adopted the other evening, and I would suggest to him that if we do not make the corrections in committee here now, he had better withdraw the bill and have it reprinted.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister suggests that we take a vote. We cannot take a vote in committee unless there is a motion made to amend the bill or on a motion that the committee rise or a clause be passed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have not yet reached the stage of making a motion.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister permit the committee to discuss the motion before we vote on it? If he is going to have a motion let us have it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not going to move one. I am willing to take the bill the way it is, as a compromise.

Mr. KAY: Perhaps the committee will allow me to make a few remarks on this question. As chairman of the committee on Agriculture and Colonization, I was present as a member of the advisory council which met here in the winter. On that council were representatives of the feeders, the breeders, the millers—

Mr. BLACK (Huron): What were their names?

Mr. KAY: I have not a list of the names here.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): We would like to have them.

Mr. KAY: The department would have the list.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Who appointed this committee?

Mr. KAY: It was appointed, I think, by the department or by the Seed branch.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I forget the names of the members. They were from western Ontario. I think one of them was Mr. Brethour. Two of the millers were Mr. Cornell and Mr. G. B. Watts, of Toronto. There were twelve or fifteen representatives altogether, and I had met only two or three of them before. All interests were represented on that council. My hon. friend should not shake his head. It is a regular thing to have advisory boards of this character. There are advisory boards in connection with half of the acts we pass. He must not be disappointed if I cannot remember all the names.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is it not on the recommendation of the minister that this board is appointed? He names the members of the board.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, the live stock associations select their own representatives, the produce men and the millers theirs. The department has one or two representatives on the board including Mr. Clark of the Seed branch, but the others are appointed by the different interests.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Section 14 of the act clearly provides that the minister shall have power to appoint an advisory board who will at his request prepare and recommend to him such regulations as appear to them advisable to make under this act. This is the authority of the minister to appoint this advisory council.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We will do the formal appointing, I have no doubt, on the recommendations given to us by these respective bodies.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In view of the fact that there are seven pages of regulations in connection with the act made on the recommendations of this board, I think it is proper that the committee should know the status of this board and the names of those who were present considering this matter.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Who were the live stock men?

Mr. KAY: I remember that Mr. Stonehouse was there, representing the Eastern Dairymens' Association; Mr. Brethour representing the Swine Breeders' Association, and two or three other members representing live stock associations. I was appointed to represent the committee on Agriculture on that board. Dr. Grisdale was also there, Dr. Shutt, Mr. Archibald, Mr. White, all of the Department of Agriculture; and Mr. Clark, the Seed Commissioner, was the chairman. After three days' discussion on the various matters relating to live stock industry, on feeds and other questions of interest to the breeders, a day was spent in discussing bran, shorts, and middlings. This bill practically represents the conclusions which were arrived at at that meeting. The live stock men there felt that it was most desirable that all the mill feeds—bran, shorts, middlings and feeding flour—should be absolutely pure. That is the aim which all the live stock men hope to attain ultimately. But during the conference the point of view of the millers was advanced. And we came to the conclusion that under the present conditions—so long as the farmers will grow weeds and produce weed seeds and screenings, and in view of the fact that the millers buy these screenings and must dispose of them after having bought them—the best interests of the live stock men would be served by having bran, middlings, and feed flour always pure, but allowing the screening, to a certain extent, to be mixed with the shorts. Feeders will remember that for many years screenings have been mixed with shorts, bran and feed flour, and it was with the object of having the screenings in one place and one place only that this agreement was arrived at

The hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Halbert) asked the minister, if the mills could buy screenings as such by the car load, and bring them in and mix them up with their shorts. I understand that Mr. Clark, of the Seed branch, and the department know or can ascertain where every car load of screenings goes which leaves Fort William. Now, it is no doubt true that the mills who buy from the interior elevators buy their wheat subject to dockage—

Mr. HALBERT: You say the department know where every load of screenings goes? Knowing that why can they not prohibit the millers from grinding screenings and mixing them with shorts?

Mr. KAY: The department are enabled to ascertain whether the millers are doing this or not. If the millers buy any quantities of screenings separately from the wheat, the officials of the department know that and steps can be taken to prevent their buying screenings in order to mix them with shorts. As far as the wheat bought from the elevators at Fort William is concerned I understand it contains a certain percentage of weed seeds or screenings up to about three per cent. Those screenings the millers pay for as wheat and wish to incorporate in the shorts. Now if there is not more than three per cent of screenings from the wheat which the millers buy and that is mixed with the shorts, I do not think the farmers will suffer to any great extent, because it was brought out at that meeting by many of the breeders that they desired to buy screenings as they were valuable for food. The chemical analysis given by Dr. Shutt of the value of screenings is very high, showing that they are worth more as a feed than shorts. Farmers well know that you cannot use screenings, however, for feeding young animals. If young pigs, for example, are fed with screenings to any extent it will cause indigestion and very often death.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): I have seen screenings mixed with shorts and hogs refused to eat it. Other farmers have seen the same thing happen.

Mr. KAY: Of course, screenings should not be fed to young pigs or young calves, but they appear to be an excellent food for mature stock.

Mr. HALBERT: You say the department knows where every car load of screenings goes. Now, suppose the department finds that a miller is buying screenings and mixing them with shorts, is there no way of penalizing the miller for doing so? What procedure does the department take in such a case?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the past it has been legal for them to do so.

Mr. HALBERT: But will it be under the bill as now proposed?

Mr. KAY: I do not think there is anything in this bill to prevent it. But the minister says that if the millers are found to be buying screenings and mixing them up with their feeds he will bring down legislation to prevent it another year. I do not think the millers could do that to any great extent without being found out.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Waterloo): Do you think the millers would undergo any hardship in being compelled to grind screenings separately and selling them for what they are? My impression is that if you allow this privilege to the millers of mixing feeds we are going to have feeds foisted on the purchaser that are not of the character he thinks they are. I think there can be no hardship, none at any rate that I can see, in saying to the miller "You grind your shorts separately and sell it as shorts, grind your screenings and shorts separately." The purchaser can mix them if he wants to.

Mr. KAY: To hark back to this advisory council. I am quite frank in saying that my own desire, and the desire of the breeders and the department officials who were present at the conference, was to have all the mill offal from wheat absolutely pure. I make no bones about that. I look forward to the day when that will be brought about.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not now?

Mr. KAY: I will explain why the advisory council came to the decision they did. The millers have their point of view. They pointed out that they were paying for these screenings and were entitled to sell them. They pointed out that if they were compelled to keep the screenings separate and not mix them with one of the three by-products it would entail very heavy expense in changing the machinery of the mill. It would mean that every miller would have to add another conveyor to his mill, in order to have the screenings separated from the other feed.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Why did the millers not wait till the bill went through before doing anything? They fixed the mill over before the bill went through, and now they want the matter arranged after we pass the act. Why did they not wait till the bill went through the committee? You say millers have changed their mills.

Mr. KAY: No, they would have to change them. If you do not allow screenings to be added to the three by-products, the millers will have to change their mills, and will have to add another conveyor, in order to keep the screenings away from the mill feeds.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is it not a fact that the screenings and shorts are now separate, and they have to have a conveyor to convey them together? Would it not simplify the matter to keep them separate when they are separate?

Mr. KAY: I am afraid I am not an expert on milling; I know very little about it. But the millers who appeared before this committee were able to convince the committee that they had a good case, and that was the argument they put up. The members of that committee were a pretty representative body of men. They had a desire for pure feed.

Mr. CALDWELL: Just to make my question a little clearer, is it not a fact that the screenings are all separate in wheat before it is ground, and when the wheat is ground and the shorts separated from the bran and other mill feeds, they are all apart? They have to put in conveyors to convey their screenings into the shorts at the present time and mix them again.

Mr. KAY: Well, I have stated the argument that they put up. I am not going to undertake to go into the details of the milling business. I understand that it would entail a very heavy expenditure on each mill, if they were compelled to keep their screenings separate. I understand there is a conveyor for bran, another for shorts and another for middlings—three conveyors. This is to convey the ground feed to the mixing room. They can take the screenings and mix them with one of the three products, or mix them with all three, and use the machinery they have. That is the argument which they presented to this committee. If you compel the mills to add this expense and make the extra investment, the result will be that the cost of our feed will go up.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): I would like the hon. member to show where the extra expense is; because certainly the waste is taken away from the wheat before it is ground. It is then reground and run back through the same spout as the other wheat.

Mr. KAY: If my hon. friends who are asking questions are experts on milling I would be glad if they will tell us the process of milling and grinding. I have said that I do not know. I only know what was stated before the advisory board. The arguments were advanced by the millers and feeders, and this bill represents the best judgment of that committee.

Mr. HALBERT: Perhaps the hon. member would let the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) tell us about the expense.

Mr. KAY: I think I had better finish my remarks, and the other members may then address the Chair.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Would the hon. member consider it more advisable to allow the millers to continue the present process by having some machinery in, rather than to discourage the breeding of live stock in this country? Which is the more important?

Mr. KAY: I do not quite get the gist of my hon. friend's remarks. I hope ultimately to have all the by-products of wheat pure; but I believe, and the members who were on this committee with me believed, that for the present the best interests of the farmers of this country and the interest of the breeders would be served by allowing the screenings to be mixed with the shorts.

Mr. CALDWELL: May I ask a question?

Mr. KAY: I think I should be permitted to finish and then I shall be pleased to answer questions later.

Mr. CALDWELL: This is not a technical question. I would like to ask the hon. member, just in what way did the committee consider it would benefit the breeders of live stock to have filth and screenings mixed with good feed?

Mr. KAY: There is a demand from many breeders for recleaned screenings. The millers said, "If you compel us to make all the by-products of wheat pure, we will have to put up the price of the bran and shorts, feed-flour and middlings." It seemed to the majority of the members of that committee—and they were practically unanimous—that this was the best arrangement we could arrive at. That was the feeling after the meeting was over, because it was thought the screenings were a good thing. There is a certain demand for screenings, and screenings for the feeding of mature stock are a better food than shorts alone. So long as the farmer knows what he is buying,—so long as the container is marked "shorts" and "screenings," in letters the same size, or "pure shorts," or "pure bran," or "pure middlings" or "pure feed-flour," it was thought the farmers would be adequately protected against feeding screenings to young stock, to which it would be injurious, as against compelling the mills to make it all pure. The reason was that we would get our other feed at a cheaper price. That sums up the argument as presented to us. I understand that the amount of recleaned screenings which left Fort William for the East last year was 12,000 tons, and 24,000 tons left the elevators to go West; and the total output of all the mills for the same year was 600,000 tons.

Mr. CALDWELL: Of what?

Mr. KAY: The output of the mills of bran, shorts and feed-flour.

Mr. CALDWELL: And flour too?

Mr. KAY: No.

Mr. BROWN: If the mills would only grind that recleaned screening there would not be any necessity for mixing it with anything else in order to have it sold at its feeding value. It is only because they want to mix in some of that dirt that has no feeding value that they want to cover it up in the bran and shorts. That is the plain situation—that our cleaned screenings are good feed, and no one will refuse to buy them at their value. We have seen them composed of a certain percentage of wild oats, cracked wheat and the flax and stuff that is real good, and will sell at their value anywhere; and it is only because the millers want to cover up the mustard and dirt and the wild unpalatable stuff that they put this in at all.

Mr. KAY: The weeds that go into the large mills are very thoroughly cleaned. The mustard and the similar weeds are all taken out.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The contrary is absolutely the case.

Mr. KAY: I am not talking about screenings which come from an elevator. I am talking about screenings which come from a mill after the wheat is cleaned ready for grinding. That is what goes into shorts at present. For the last year the mills, following this bill almost exactly, have been putting their screenings into their shorts, and they have been making bran middlings and feed-flour, clean.

Mr. BROWN: On the advisory council, did these gentlemen mention anything about the point I brought up, about scourings being put in? I say that scourings are put in, and I know whereof I speak.

Mr. PRITCHARD: I agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown). The millers in the first place clean that wheat as thoroughly as it is possible to clean it from all foreign substances. Now they want to pollute the by-products with mill sweepings and dirt of all kinds, and to make the mixture so that it is not fit for animal food. In my experience as a cattle breeder, I have come across instances where this was adulterated to such an extent that it was not fit for food at all. If they want to sell rubbish, let them sell it on its merits; if they want to sell screenings, let them sell that on its merits; but let them sell bran and shorts for what they really are as they come from the mill.

At the end of paragraph (d) clause 2, there are two lines which read:

> No person shall manufacture pure shorts and shorts and mill screenings at the same mill.

What does that mean?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It was decided the other day to cut that out.

Mr. KAY: There is only one way by which we will get all our feeds pure, and that is when our friends in the West will have their grain cleaned as it leaves the elevators and will keep their dirt, weeds, and so forth, on their own farms.

Mr. BROWN: That is our business.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): What does the hon. member think of Ontario where we feed hundreds of thousands of tons of that stuff that comes east? How are we going to keep our farms in Ontario clean? No mill can grind all that stuff so as to kill all the weeds. We on this side of the House would like to know who on that committee were real farmers. I am afraid on that committee there were only one or two men belonging to the farming industry. The rest were millers and sympathizers with the millers.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think my hon. friend should make that statement. Why make a reflection—

Mr. BLACK (Huron): It is no reflection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: —of that nature, when there is no justification for it?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): He is not making a reflection.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The hon. gentleman pointed out that, with the exception of two men, the rest were sympathizers with the millers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All right.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was at a luncheon with them. Am I to be classified as a sympathizer with the millers?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Perhaps.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend may take that attitude if he likes. I said that I did not believe in going to the one extreme of mixing things indiscriminately, or to the other extreme of prohibiting mixing altogether.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let us do the mixing ourselves.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my hon. friend knew a little more about the matter, he would know that that was not practicable. As regards what the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) says, if these mills all bought their wheat directly from the farmers, he is absolutely right that they could do what they liked with the screenings; that they could 5 p.m. throw it into the gutter if they liked. It did not cost them anything except for handling. I do not know what percentage of wheat is marketed in that way, but a comparatively small quantity is purchased directly from the farmers, when one considers that our wheat is spread over the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Let us forget the millers and think of those who are using those by-products. What is in their best interest? I am confident, if a waste ensues as a result of millers buying these screenings as wheat and not being able to sell it to advantage, or if a loss ensues thereby to the millers, they are bound to make that up by larger profits on some other branch of their activities. This is not like farming. If a farmer loses, he has to lose—I do not know how that comes about, but that is the way the thing works—if a manufacturer loses, he has some way of tacking that on to something else. You may think that is not right, but that is what happens. The miller is going to make more on his bran, shorts, middlings and low-grade flour, probably on his high-grade flour, to make up what he loses on the wheat. I am not arguing that that is right, but that is the way in which the thing works out. Is it in our interest to make a provision that results in that, and possibly to disappoint many farmers who want to buy that mixture? I see the hon. member for Glengarry and Stormont (Mr. Kennedy) having a good time listening. I do not suppose there is in this chamber an hon. gentleman who has more experience than he with regard to feeding by-products. I do not profess to have such recent knowledge as he has, and I should like to hear what he has to say. My impression, as I say, is against any form of mixture. My judgment is that it is not wise to go to the other extreme and to prohibit it altogether. There are certain people who want to buy a blend. Why prevent them from buying it? There would be no deception. The fact that it is a mixture will be marked on the bag. If you do not like to buy it, you do not need to do so. You can take the pure stuff. You have the two choices, the mixture on the one hand, and the pure bran or shorts or middlings on the other. Let us forget that we have any sympathies or prejudices, and let us just use our judgment and get the best bill possible under the circumstances.

Mr. HALBERT: Would we have any way of knowing what quantity of shorts and screenings there were in the mixture? There might be a gallon of shorts and the rest screenings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know that is hard to regulate, but it is spoken of as "mill run."

Mr. BLACK (Huron): The minister says that there is no deception. Why not keep the screenings by themselves and let us do the mixing ourselves? Then there will be no deception.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the committee is willing, I am agreeable.

Mr. HAMMELL: I would like to give the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. Black) a list of the members on that committee. He stated that there were no members there representing the farmers. The chairman was Mr. Clark, Seed Commissioner of Canada. There was Dr. Grisdale, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, who could not be said to be in sympathy with the millers. Mr. J. E. Brethour, representing the Swine Breeders' Association of Ontario was a member. My hon. friend will know him as one of the best and biggest farmers in western Ontario. Mr. Stonehouse, of the National Dairy Council, was another member who was there representing the Eastern Dairymens' Association. The hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) was a member, and he is a farmer of some repute. I do not think the hon. gentleman will doubt that statement. I happen to have had the privilege of being there myself. There were only three other gentlemen there representing the millers, as compared with six of us representing the farmers.

The CHAIRMAN: The debate is getting away from clause 1 which we are considering.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. LOVIE: There seems to be a good deal of discussion how bran, shorts and flour are manufactured. In my district there has been for the last thirty years, a mill to which we take wheat and get back flour, bran and shorts. Only those three products, nothing else, are manufactured at that mill. The wheat is certainly cleaned before it is ground, and the screenings are crushed and sold. These are the products: flour, bran, shorts, and the ground screenings can be purchased as chop which is good feed for either cattle or hogs. As regards the quantity, that miller would always give 36 pounds of flour, 10 of bran and 10 of shorts. There was thus 4 pounds left to take care of anything left in the wheat. They figured this a loss of four pounds on every bushel. Consequently the miller is suffering no loss at all. We know with certainty that the milling companies, having their elevators all over the three prairie provinces, are able to buy wheat extensively and it is docked as bought. The farmer is not paid for any screenings; these are made a present of to the miller and the freight is paid to Fort William. Besides, the millers are able to purchase wheat at the street price, that is, the Fort William price less storage and transportation charges; consequently if they ship those screenings out the freight is already paid. Therefore we who want pure bran and shorts demand the opportunity of getting them absolutely pure. Those of us last winter who wanted to buy pure bran could not get it, —there was 7 per cent of screenings in it. No mill in the country is so equipped as to be able to grind these screenings, they can be ground only at the big central mills. In a word, the mixture of screenings in our feed stuffs is a fraud, and we do not want to see it carried on any longer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We are getting a little light on this question of commercial feed stuffs. The minister (Mr. Motherwell) states that he is sympathetic with the desire to have all mill feeds pure, and the chairman of the committee on Agriculture (Mr. Kay) states that that is his view also, and that he hopes ultimately we will arrive at this desirable state of affairs. It seems to me that we are becoming a little more involved from year to year in dealing with this question. In 1919 the millers' representatives gave evidence before the committee on the Cost of Living, evidence which does not bear out the conclusions reached by the chairman of the committee on Agriculture. They claimed there was no difficulty whatever in keeping screenings separate, in fact it was stated that the wheat had to go through seven different processes before it was in a condition fit to be milled into flour, and that the large mills contained up to date appliances by which the screenings could be ground and distributed equally among the by-products. It was claimed by the millers' representatives at that time that if they were not permitted to dispose of the screenings in this way they would have to increase the price of their flour. This was the excuse put forward. And in face of that we had abundance of evidence to show that thousands of animals were being poisoned as a result of this stuff being fed to them.

Mr. KAY: I do not think my hon. friend wishes to misrepresent me. I do not say that the millers cannot separate the screenings from the other mill feed, but if they do separate them it will entail a heavy invesment on the part of each mill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Mr. Black, of the Ogilvie Milling Company, in his sworn evidence before the committee on June 23rd, 1919, was asked the question:

Nothing to do with the mills?

And he said in reply:

Nothing whatever. However, we could eliminate that if it was so desired, but we then would turn it over and sell it for what we could get. That might mean that you would have to increase the cost of the flour to some extent, because we might not be able to get as much for it in some other form as in bran or shorts.

They know very well they could not dispose of it as flour, but owing to the dark colour of the bran and shorts they could mix screenings and other dirt with it and in that way dispose of it. We had some very good evidence from the Minister of Agriculture and the member for Saltcoats (Mr. Sales) this session with regard to the methods pursued in the West. Apparently the latter has had practical experience, and so has the Minister of Agriculture. The member for Saltcoats was explaining how easy it was to take out most of these objectionable seeds right at the farm when the grain was being threshed. It is a very simple process. The thresher is paid so much per bushel but when there is a lot of weeds in the grain he stated that the farmer will not pay the thresher for the weed seeds if separated from the grain, consequently the thresher closes the shoe and allows all the weed seeds to come out with the grain, in this way getting paid for his threshing. "Everyone knows that," the minister called out across the House; "that is exactly what they do." Or words to that effect.

So we might as well look at this matter fairly and squarely. In fact the wheat purchased in western Canada that does not pass through the terminal elevators contains as much as 10 per cent weed seeds. Evidence before the committee showed that that is very often the case. Naturally, there is a great inducement for the millers to utilize this stuff in some way and dispose of it at a profit. I do not think there is any other way of dealing with this adulteration than by absolutely prohibiting millers mixing screenings with feed stuffs. Of course, they cannot possibly adulterate their flour in this way, but, so far as bran and shorts are concerned, the millers should not be permitted to put this dirt back into the bran and shorts.

Mr. LOVIE: Did the millers pay for the 10 per cent screenings in the wheat they purchased?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Not in the West. Where wheat is purchased at the elevators and cleaned and contains less than 3 per cent, the millers do pay; but not on grain purchased on the street and shipped direct without passing through the terminal elevator, unless they dock the seller of the grain. I do not know whether they do or not. In 1919 as a result of the evidence then obtained a bill was introduced by myself and referred to the committee on Agriculture for their consideration. The committee recommended that the bill should be put into effect. Thereupon the House passed the bill, which absolutely prohibited the adulteration of mill feeds such as bran and shorts in any way. The following session a Department of Health was created, and it took over part of the machinery for enforcing the act. I believe there is a fragment of this act on the statute books to-day. In the following session the present act was passed, and at the time I pointed out what I thought would be the result. I regret to say that exactly what I predicted has happened. I might be permitted to read one paragraph of my statement:

The effect of this clause will be that mill feeds of this kind will be mixed and you will get but a very small proportion of pure bran and shorts. This clause is a departure from the old act, and instead of being an advance along the lines which we desire, it is going in the opposite direction. It is making provision for the mixing of all these feeding stuffs and having the mixture disposed of to suit the convenience of the mill feed men.

What have we experienced since that time? We have found in Ontario—which I know better than any other part of the Dominion—that it is absolutely impossible to buy pure bran and shorts, although provision was made in the act for keeping those pure. But there is a distinction. These are sold as feed stuffs; the other is sold as commercial feed stuff, and must have printed on the container, "Screenings not exceeding mill run." You will find these words on the bottom of the container, but it gets covered over and no one realizes it is there. Under the present act a farmer is not often able to purchase pure mill feed, but has to take what he can get at the price demanded. This stuff is being palmed off on the farmers and their stock poisoned in consequence. The Department of Agriculture has abundant evidence to show that this is the case. This evidence has been put on record on previous occasions, and I shall not take up the time of the committee in referring to it. But the minister says he has intimate knowledge of the conditions both in western and in eastern Canada, and he says that his sympathies are with the keeping of mill feeds pure. He should, therefore, take steps to see that that is done. I wrote the minister a year ago in regard to the matter and was informed that some steps were to be taken to provide a remedy. I directed his attention to the subject on two or three occasions during the present session, and I was informed that a bill to this effect would be brought down. I have only to-day had an opportunity of looking over the bill;—I was not here when the resolution was discussed last week,—and I must say I am very much disappointed to find that there is to be no progress along the desired lines.

What is the use of trying to make the people believe that the millers cannot overcome the difficulties? The millers can adapt themselves to these conditions very quickly, if a change is demanded and if they do so they will find it much more satisfactory in the end; they will find that there will be a greater demand for mill feeds than there has ever been. The farmers are passing through a trying period. The one hope for the future of agriculture is the live stock industry, and you cannot successfully engage in that industry without an abundance of mill feeds such as bran and shorts. Under the old system of milling there were only the three products, but with the modern system there are four or five different products. By the way, this matter of an increase in products was referred to the committee on Agriculture two years ago and it was then decided that the sale of a new product of the milling of wheat would not be permitted. I was amazed to find that notwithstanding that attitude of the committee on Agriculture, the department did put this measure into effect. The recommendations of the committee were adsolutely ignored and the requests of the millers were granted. I am afraid the millers are the only ones who are receiving consideration to-day. I regret very much to have to speak in this way, but I have taken a stand on this matter for the last ten years, and the conditions instead of getting better are getting worse from year to year. The farmers are getting discouraged. Buildings that have cost them hundreds, in some cases, thousands of dollars, are to-day empty. They are not engaging in the raising of hogs, a branch of farming that should be very profitable, to anything like the extent desirable. Now, something should be done. The minister does not appear to realize that this advisory committee was appointed on his recommendation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The names were recommended to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The member for Muskoka (Mr. Hammell) has given us some information as to who they were; I believe there was authority for appointing about sixteen members on that committee. Now, we have had a special committee on Agriculture sitting from almost the beginning to the end of this session; they could have looked into this matter had it been referred to them, and I think they would have been better employed than they were, because apparently not much consideration was given to this question. Let me inform the committee as to something that happened in 1917. A very strenuous debate has taken place for several sessions with regard to the manufacture of oleomargarine. It is important to note that the first steps taken to destroy the commercial feed stuffs and the grain standards of this country were taken by order in council in December 1917 on the recommendation of the then Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Crerar). I have copies of the orders in council here. Steps were taken also to purchase the screenings at the terminal elevators at $35 a ton, and for some time they were disposed of to the farmer. In view of the mixture which was permitted I have come to the conclusion—because the Oleomargarine Act was put through just about the same time—that the idea was to obtain a feed for a dairy cow with a view to producing oleomargarine instead of butter. There is an item in the supplementary estimates of $700,000 for the health of animals. I say that if you put something in this bill that will prevent the adulteration of mill feeds you will do more for the health of animals than the voting of this $700,000 to which I refer, or than the payment of $900,000 for veterinary and lay inspectors in the abattoirs and elsewhere throughout the country, as now provided for.

Mr. MILLAR: I do not wish to delay the committee very long, because several members have already referred to the extent of the practice of mixing foul seed with mill feed. For many years it has been most difficult to get bran that is fit to feed to the stock, in fact in many cases the stock turn from it. One hon. member has stated that if we do not enact the legislation now before us, it will be necessary for the mills, at considerable expense, to change their machinery. But I assure the committee that unless a change is made very soon it will be a case either of the mills changing their machinery or of some of the live stock changing their digestive apparatus. When foul seed, which are bitter in taste, are ground up and mixed with the bran the resulting mixture is not only unpalatable but injurious to the health of the animals. At first it appeared to me to be not unwise to allow this bill to go through, the Minister of Agriculture having said that the purchasers would have an opportunity of buying or of not buying, as they pleased; they could get the pure bran or they could get the mixture. On second thought, however, I do not think it would be wise to do that. There has been much abuse in the past, and in all probability very little of the pure bran would be offered for sale if this was permitted. The farmers who wanted feed very badly would be willing to pay a higher price for the pure feed if they could get it, but the pure feed not being available they would be forced to buy the impure stuff. I do not see any reason why any suggested necessity for change in machinery should be allowed to affect the case. That is a mere excuse; there is really no good reason in it at all. It has been pointed out that the seeds must be cleaned from the grain in any case. I would point out that it is often cheaper to handle a large quantity of one kind of commodity than to have it divided up into a large number of classes. This bill will provide for several such classes, and the result will be to add to the expense. I feel certain that those who are feeding the stock will be better served if they can have the bran in its pure state.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The bran cannot be put into the screenings—shorts and screenings is the mixture we are dealing with. Bran will be sold in its purity.

Mr. MILLAR: My argument, then, would apply to shorts only, not to bran. I think it is better to have shorts in its pure state and that the screenings be sold for what they actually are. If that is done the result will be more satisfactory to the buyers. They have experience enough to know just what they are suitable for, and I know quite well that this material can be fed to advantage. For that reason I feel I must support the amendment. I do not know that it has been moved yet, but I understand an amendment is to be moved to have these mill products sold for what they really are.

Mr. ROBB: The debate this afternoon has shown that the country is unanimous in its desire for pure feeds for live stock, and with that view I am entirely in sympathy, but may I point out that there is one way, and a primary way, in which we could help to provide the eastern dairymen and the western breeder with pure feed for live stock that would avoid the mixing of weed seed, and that is not to grow weed seeds. Do hon. gentlemen object to that?

Mr. FORKE: It is utterly impossible.

Mr. ROBB: How is it that we cannot get the good mill feed to-day that we could buy some years ago, is a question often asked. Well, some years ago the millers of this country were able to buy grain that was comparatively free from dirty weed seeds.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is it not true that the weeds purchased with these mill feeds have been distributed all over the old provinces?

Mr. ROBB: I was just coming to that. But there developed a method of farming in this country, surface farming, what is called in western Canada mining a farm, the result of which has been that the pure virgin soil on which good clean grain used to be grown has now reached a condition through careless methods of farming where it grows a very large percentage of dirty weed seeds. I think all hon. gentlemen will admit that. These dirty weed seeds have been carried over to eastern Canada through the mill feeds and the grain bought, and they have dirtied all the farms so that as you drive through the countryside you notice the deplorably dirty conditions of the farms.

Mr. SALES: Where did the seeds come from into that grain grown in the West?

Mr. ROBB: I have had some experience. I was brought up on a farm and day after day we were sent out to weed mustard and keep the farm clean. I admit that that cannot be done on a large farm in the West, but I say that that is one way in which everyone can help to eliminate these weed seeds.

There is another way in the meantime which will help, and it was pointed out by my hon. friend from Oxford county. There is, I am told, a threshing separator that cleans these weed seeds fairly well on the farm, and if the farmers would help in that way and take out as much of the weed seeds as they could on the farm, there would be that much less to go to the mill. You would really believe to listen to the debate to-day that the average miller wanted dirty weed seeds. Surely no one believes that. The better and cleaner the wheat, the more the miller is willing to pay for it and the more profit he can make. In anything the Minister of Agriculture can do to compel the sale of pure mill feed I am with him. I am in the business. I represent two firms that pride themselves on pure mill feeds, but I also know that if a man goes out and offers a mill feed with some dirt in it for 25 cents less the feeder is ready to buy the dirty feed. There are a very limited number of mills in Canada, and I know them, that are running their dirty seeds into the mill feed.

There is another danger, however, to live stock that in my judgment is far more feared than the weed seeds coming from the run of the mills or from the elevators, and that is the oatmeal mill that grinds out the hulls and runs them into the bran and shorts. I think that is a greater danger to the stock than the seeds if they are ground up fine. I have said enough, I think, to indicate that I am in favour of pure mill feed, and in favour of anything that can be done to secure a larger supply of pure mill feed.

We have had a complaint from some hon. gentlemen that bran was unobtainable, that they could not buy bran at any price. That is true in a degree, and possibly the more restrictions we impose and the more we hamper trade the harder we make it for ourselves to get what we want, for after all there are only a limited number of mills that follow this practice of mixing their seeds. The majority of mills in Canada pride themselves on putting out good mill feed. I will give hon. gentlemen one reason why mill feed is scarce in this country. I have here the records of exports for the years 1921, 1922 and 1923, and I find that in the year 1922 the total export of bran, shorts and middlings was 729,718 bags of 100 pounds each. In 1923 the total export was 2,300,353 bags of 100 pounds each, so we exported in 1923 almost three times the quantity exported in 1922. I am not stating that the regulations imposed had anything to do with this increased export, but it is clear that the export business was more profitable to the miller and consequently he put his stuff in another market. I am reminded that quite recently we in Canada were very much disturbed over certain regulations that the British government proposed to impose on the import of flour to that country. They were going to compel all importers of flour to import along with a bag of flour its equivalent in mill feed so far as weight is concerned. That shows the importance of supporting such measures as will secure to us good feed, but let us not put such restrictions upon mill feed in this country as will make it more profitable for the millers to export their mill feed to another country. I am with the Minister of Agriculture in anything he can do in this matter. I favoured the bill he had the other day for pure bran, pure shorts and pure middlings, and for the sale of screenings as screenings and branded as screenings. If that is done, Mr. Chairman, it is not the Canadian miller who will suffer. It will not hurt his business but it might hurt the man who is growing weed seeds.

Mr. SALES: There is a difference between the situation in the West and in the East.

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Mr. SALES: In the West—there are very large mills situated at Calgary, Medicine Hat, Moose Jaw, Saskatoon and Winnipeg into which the farmer's wheat goes directly and is graded and docked. The millers get the screenings and the seeds absolutely free, with the freight paid not only into their mills but as far as Fort William; it costs them nothing. I say that if this regulation goes into effect it will be absolutely impossible for the western farmer to buy shorts at all, that is pure shorts, because whether the percentage of seeds is one per cent, 2 per cent, 3 per cent, or even 8 per cent the millers will endeavour to get rid of the whole thing, which is a gift to them, as shorts and screenings. With regard to the eastern miller the situation is somewhat different. If the inspector at the head of the lakes is not doing his duty, and is allowing screenings and seeds to go through there, it seems to me the course for the millers to take is to appeal against that inspection. I find there is a provision in the Grain Act for a grain survey board. It is provided that on the recommendation of the boards of trade of Toronto and Montreal respectively there may be appointed for any eastern division a grain survey board composed of such number of fit and skilful persons in each case as is considered necessary. There is also a provision that when the owner of any inspected grain is not satisfied he may appeal to the chief inspector; and further, if he is not satisfied with the decision of the chief inspector he may appeal to the board. I think that is the proper course for the eastern miller to take in this regard, instead of trying to pass off a camouflaged adulteration. We have far too much adulteration in this country. The minister of Agriculture says that if we do not want to buy this so-called shorts we need not. I may say, however, that time and time again we cannot buy either bran or shorts unless we are prepared to take the flour with it.

Now as to the point the Minister of Trade and Commerce made when he quoted the figures that seven hundred and some odd thousand hundredweight had been exported in 1922. I happen to have here figures prepared by the Bureau of Statistics and they show 854,829 hundredweight were exported in 1922. But there is another interesting point which the minister did not mention—

Mr. ROBB: There seems to be a difference in the figures. To what period do my hon. friend's figures apply?

Mr. SALES: To the period ending March 31st.

Mr. ROBB: The figures I quoted were for the period ending in May.

Mr. SALES: But the interesting point is this: The value is also given and it is $939,910. This works out at $1.02 per hundred weight, showing a value of over $20 a ton. I should like to ask any hon. member sitting near me, from the West or from the East, if he was able to buy either bran, or shorts, or middlings at $20 per ton in 1922.

Mr. ROBB: Will my hon. friend allow me right there?—the explanation will run in line with his figures. These exports are based on the f.o.b. price at the point of shipment. Now, most of this mill feed is exported from western mills so that the figures are based on the price f.o.b. at that mill. To arrive at the price at which the feed is sold in eastern Canada you would have to add the cost of the freight, seeing that the shipment may have been made from Alberta or western Saskatchewan.

Mr. SALES: That does not quite explain the situation either.

Mr. ROBB: It may not as regards the West but it does in the case of the East.

Mr. SALES: That will not explain the situation in the West where no freight cost is incurred whatever. For instance take Saskatoon or Moose Jaw where the farmers live around the mills. When the feed is sold to them there is no charge for freight to Fort William. The millers grind the wheat there and yet at times we have not been able to get sufficient feed at any price. The price to us has been $24 a ton when apparently they were willing to ship feed out at $20. That situation is not right. The same thing occurs in the case of flour. We pay very nearly the same price for flour right at the point where it is ground, without any freight on it, that Montreal flour is quoted at. I am glad to receive the minister's assurance on the matter because I did not understand at what point the freight was added, but even with his explanation I contend that the farmers of the West are suffering a great injustice by reason of the price they have to pay for flour and for bran and shorts. If any amendment is moved I shall certainly support it. I should like to see the words "shorts" and "mill screenings" cut out altogether and make it read "pure bran, shorts, feed flour and screenings." I understood the hon. member for Missisquoi (Mr. Kay) to say that these screenings had a great feeding value, and that they were even worth more than shorts. If the screenings are so good let the millers sell them for what they are and get all the profit they can out of them; we do not want to deprive them of that profit when the screenings are sold separately.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is no amendment before the committee. The unfortunate thing is we have not a bill here based on the amended resolution. I have one of the other bills that has been amended in accordance with the resolution. There is nothing for it but to pass the bill in conformity with the resolution, or else get a new bill drafted.

Mr. CALDWELL: In conformity with the amended resolution?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The amended resolution. If we strike out the word "pure" in subsection (d) of section 1 it will be in conformity with the resolution as amended the other day.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the word "pure" be struck from the sub-paragraph (d)?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Sub-paragraph (d) refers to "bran, shorts or middlings when unmixed with other materials." I am unable to grasp what the minister means by proposing to strike out the word "pure." The bill is so ambiguous that I doubt whether anyone can make head or tail of it in its present form. It appears to me as though the object were to enable people to evade its provisions.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not necessary to have the word "pure." The clause was drawn that way when it provided for a mixture of shorts and screenings. That would imply that there is another kind of shorts that is not pure. Consequently it is thought better to omit the word "pure."

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The minister will understand that there is really no difference between bran and shorts except that one contains about one per cent more protein. The bran is gound up fine now and disposed of as shorts. This has been the custom in the past. By adding some of the screenings or lower grade flour, they were able to dispose of the bran as shorts. To-day it is almost impossible to purchase pure bran, notwithstanding it is claimed they are not permitted to adulterate it now but it is ground up and disposed of in this way. I think the minister would be well advised, even at this late date, to alter the bill, so that it would conform with the view expressed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The importance of this bill to the live stock industry under present conditions is so great that I think it would be most unfortunate if this session should end without something being done along this line. I am satisfied that pure mill feed would mean more to agriculture in this country than all the money that is being spent for agricultural purposes. I am so firmly convinced as to this that I will venture to make that statement. The millers admit there is absolutely no difficulty; and if you put this into effect you will find the millers will be quite competent to take care of themselves, that nobody will be able to sell weed seeds to the millers and get anything for them, and that consequently it will encourage better farming, and overcome the great difficulty which we have. These weed seeds came into the country in an insidious way, and obtained a foothold before the people realized in many instances what they were at all. I can understand the difficulties they have to contend with in farming in western Canada. In fact, weed seeds were introduced into western Canada and even into Ontario from Europe, but it is only recently that people have become acquainted with the fact, and if it continues for a few years, it will be almost impossible to eradicate them. Better farming will be of immense benefit to the country, and live stock is the basis on which agriculture must be built up.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the word "pure" is to appear before the word "shorts," it should be placed before every one of these by-products, middlings, feed-flour and so on. I think we will have to either cut out the word "pure," or if we leave it in, we will have to place it before each one of these commodities. Therefore, I think it should be eliminated and that the words "when sold separately and unmixed with other materials," should be struck out, because that implies the other. Then, after cutting out those words, the word "screenings" should be inserted, because it is a fifth by-product. It appears in the next section. It will then read, "bran, shorts, middlings, feed-flour and screenings."

Mr. SALES: If the minister consents to cutting out the word "pure" and to the other changes, will he allow section 9 on page 2 to stand?

Mr. CALDWELL: No, that will be cut out, too. The words "shorts and" would require to be cut out as well.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It will have to be made to conform to the idea of a pure article all through.

Mr. SALES: The point I am making is that adulteration or misleading tagging or labelling, and so on, is absolutely prohibited.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think when we get to that, it will have to be made to conform with the idea that every one of the five must be in itself distinct with nothing attached to it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Before the motion is carried, would it not be well for the officers of the department to look into this matter, and have the amendment made, so that the bill will operate successfully.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The worst is past, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think the consensus of opinion is the same as in 1919. I will read a resolution which was moved by me which was passed by the committee of Agriculture at that time, when my bill was referred to it. It reads:

> That in view of the serious results from the feeding of adulterated bran and shorts by adding thereto great quantities of weed seeds both ground and unground annually resulting in the death of many animals and serious injury to the health of others, besides distributing harmful weed seeds throughout the country to the detriment of those who engage in agriculture, this committee would respectfully recommend that immediate action should be taken to deal with this question by passing and putting into effect at the earliest opportunity bill No. 7 an act to amend the adulteration act.

That resolution absolutely prohibits mixing.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the word "pure" be struck out?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Strike out the word "and" before the words "feed-flour".

The CHAIRMAN: Then the words "the products of wheat" are to remain, and the words "when sold separately and unmixed with other materials" are to be struck out.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is what we agreed just now should be cut out.

On the "yeas" and "nays" being called:

The CHAIRMAN: I declare the amendment carried. Then paragraph (d) will read—

Bran, pure shorts, middlings, feed-flour, and screenings, the products of wheat.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I did not hear the amendment read.

Mr. CALDWELL: There seems to be a contradiction. Screenings are not a product of wheat.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The product of wheat and wheat screening. You will get the wheat as the result of screening, and the other four by-products as the result of milling.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is this not merely a definition as to what constitutes food stuffs? The commercial feed stuffs are left as they were.

Mr. ROBB: Have the words "when sold separately and unmixed with other materials" been struck out?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Mr. ROBB: I think it should read this way, "when sold separately and unmixed."

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But that is implying that it is mixed. That will be a mistake, because it is giving a tip for them to go on mixing.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2, paragraph (a)—By-products resulting from cleaning, etc., of wheat forbidden, except when properly tagged.

The CHAIRMAN: An amendment has been proposed by Mr. Caldwell that the words, in the 23rd line, "shorts and mill screenings" be struck out.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is in subsection (a)? In the same line I think the word "pure" should be struck out, before the words "shorts and mill screenings".

Amendment agreed to.

On Section 2, paragraph (b)—When free from certain admixture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move that the word "pure" before the word "shorts" be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

On Section 2, paragraph (c)—Percentage by weight in each case.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move that in the first line the word "pure" before the word "shorts" and the words "shorts and" be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL: I should like to call the minister's attention to line 9. The words "shorts and" should be struck out and the words "mill screenings" left.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the schedule, showing the percentage of fibre, I move that the word "pure" before the word "shorts" be struck out and the words "shorts and" before the words "mill screenings" be struck out. The other classifications remain the same.

Amendment agreed to.

On Section 2, paragraph (d)—Registration and contents.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move that paragraph (d) be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section 2 as amended agreed to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Might I point out that there is possibly a considerable stock of old mill feed on hand? What date does the committee think would be a suitable date on which to bring this legislation into force? It occurred to me that the date should be the 1st of October. That would give us an opportunity of getting these pure mills feeds for the fall litters of pigs, so that they would not have too much fibre in their feed.

Mr. CALDWELL: Carried.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Should this act come into force on the first day of October, 1923, or had we better let it come into force by proclamation?

Mr. CALDWELL: It would be better to name the date.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move an amendment that there be added section 4:

4. This act shall come into force on the 1st day of October, 1923.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: It being six o'clock, I do not suppose you wish to sit further?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

Public Works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $533,884.60.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that we take this vote item by item?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Before doing so, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will make some general explanation as to these further estimates brought down, as they are, in the very dying days of the session when we have a great deal of work to dispose of. I would point out to him that we now have our Main Estimates of $466,000,000, the supplementaries of $14,000,000, the construction programme of $28,000,000, the additional supplementaries brought down for the year closed of $18,000,000, the bonus supplement of $5,500,000, the liability to be undertaken in connection with the endorsement under the bill which has received second reading of $15,000,000, and the Supplementary Estimates tabled to-day of nearly $15,000,000—making a grand total of $548,750,714. With a very large deficit this year, and with an estimated revenue much less than last year, how does my hon. friend expect we are going to pay for all this—where is the money coming from—what is the loaning programme—how is the country to be financed? Surely we should have some idea where the money is coming from in connection with this vote.

Mr. FIELDING: I regret, Mr. Chairman, that it has been deemed necessary to bring down these estimates at a late stage of the session. If that is a criticism, I am willing to admit there is some ground for it. The only explanation is that we have all been pretty busy—I plead guilty to having had an occasional busy day myself. However, apart from that there is nothing in these estimates that calls for any special criticism or any special explanation. The money is to come from those projects which we have disclosed to the House. If my hon. friend knows any part of these estimates which is not fair and reasonable, it is his pleasure and his duty to point it out to us and, if necessary, challenge the vote of the House upon it. If he is not prepared to do that, I tell him he is not going to alarm the country by rolling up all these figures. Each estimate must stand on its merits. I do not think my hon. friend is going to scare the people at all by his figures. I see nothing remarkable in the situation at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, Mr. Chairman, I thought we had done something. We at least did our best to criticize the estimates that have already been brought down, but our protests were absolutely unavailing and, indeed, some people think we talked too much upon them. That is all we can do. As I pointed out, there is more than the mere voting of the estimates. Here we have a deficit on last year's operations of $58,000,000—

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend knows that that is not correct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think my hon. friend is doing himself justice when he makes that remark. He got a credit from other years' operations of $8,000,000 on exchange. He taking credit—

Mr. FIELDING: I am not taking credit for it. The item appears in the accounts. There is no other place to put it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He taking credit for that, reduces the total sum of the deficit. There is no doubt about that. He never for one moment tried to conceal it. Therefore my hon. friend is not doing himself justice when he says I am saying something that I know is not so. I do not think he meant to say it. At any rate I am going to think that he did not mean it. We will take the deficit as we have it with the adventitious fund of $8,000,000. Such a windfall will not occur again this year, and even with it the deficit is bad enough. Now in the face of this total vote of over $548,000,000, surely my hon. friend cannot think that one is merely trying to alarm the public by referring to what he is doing. There is no attempt at alarming the public. We are all interested in trying to get things down to something like a normal working basis. The income called for by my hon. friend's budget falls very far short of this huge total. I did ask him in all sincerity where the money is coming from. He is not telling me. I can do nothing more than I have done already in connection with the votes that have been passed—simply register my protest.

Mr. PAPINEAU: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman (Sir Henry Drayton) who has just taken his seat called attention to the lateness of the tabling of the Supplementary Estimates. Last Tuesday, after they were tabled, the right hon. leader of the Opposition asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to tell him when in the history of Canada such estimates had been tabled during the last week of the session. I have taken the trouble to go through certain records and have found one precedent. In the session of 1921 when the right hon. leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister—

Mr. FIELDING: And my hon. friend was Minister of Finance.

Mr. PAPINEAU: On Monday, the 30th May, 1921, at about one o'clock in the morning, Supplementary Estimates for $23,959,842.14 were tabled. The House prorogued on the 4th of June; that was the Saturday following. That was I think the precedent which the right hon. leader of the Opposition wanted, and he himself is the one who created this precedent when he was then Prime Minister.

The Montreal Gazette of the 31st of May speaking of the Supplementary Estimates amounting to $23,959,842.14 tabled on the 30th of May says:

> The figure is low and indicates a close scrutiny of expenditures. The Main Supplementaries last year totalled $62,000,000 and the year before $36,700,000.

That was not including the bonus for the Civil Service which the leader of the Opposition wanted to include in the supplementaries this year. There may be, I admit, some discussion as to whether these supplementaries might not have been brought down a little earlier in the session, but I do not believe that the strong protest of the right hon. leader of the Opposition was justified in any way, shape or form.

Mr. FORKE: I wish to say a few words with regard to these Supplementary Estimates, and what I am going to say I am sure is without prejudice. I do not think it makes a great deal of difference to consider this right or wrong now because it has been done before. I notice that the Supplementary Estimates for public works in Nova Scotia are larger than the main estimates for that purpose.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend allow me a question? Does he not believe in the principle "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone?"

Mr. FORKE: I hardly know where I have sinned anyway. The thing is in bad practice. I have no great experience with procedure in the House of Commons, but just from a common business standpoint I think it is bad practice to bring down such a large amount of estimates at the end of the session. Among the items that appear in these estimates I might mention the increase in salaries to the deputy ministers. I am not in a position to make any criticism as to whether that is right or wrong. I believe in paying what the work is worth, and if we get efficient servants to do our work we ought to pay them a reasonable sum, but I do claim, Mr. Chairman, that this must have been within the knowledge of the government when the Main Estimates were brought down, and I should like to know why it was not included in the Main Estimates. I want to register my protest against such a large sum being brought down at the end of the session when we have not time to get the information to enable us to criticise these different items. Take the estimates for Nova Scotia for instance. What information have we in this part of the House, at all events, upon which we could offer any intelligent criticism other than that we think this is a large sum of money for the purpose?

Mr. CARROLL: I would ask the hon. member, does he take exception to any specific vote for Nova Scotia in these Supplementary Estimates, and if so which one?

Mr. FORKE: I was just on that point when the hon. gentleman interrupted me. I was saying that it was a large sum of money, and that we were not in a position to criticize. It is a large sum of money to vote without any particular knowledge of the circumstances. Had these been brought down at the time of the Main Estimates we could have made inquiries and got some information before we were asked to vote this money. We are not finding fault if the money is properly spent. You can be extravagant in spending a little, and you can practise economy in spending a great deal. It all depends on how you spend it. I want to register my protest against this practice. I believe it is a wrong principle, and because hon. gentlemen opposite are not able to cast the first stone does not make it any better.

While I am on my feet I just want to say that we are nearing the end of the session, and I think we are all anxious to get through. I do not want to be critical, though I think that intelligent criticism is all right, but I should like to say that we waste a good deal of time in this House in wandering into by-paths and raking up old things that took place years ago and that are of no interest to us in this part of the House at all events.

I am not referring to intelligent criticism. I would like if possible to come right down to business. Let us get on.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would like to say just a word in reference more particularly to the remarks of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance and the right hon. leader of the Opposition. As far as I have been able to gather, the impression they have sought to convey is that the government in some way or other has sought to delay bringing down the estimates till the last of the month. I think it is important that not only the House but the country should understand that so far as the Main Estimates are concerned, and they are the large amounts covering the business of the government as a whole, the entire Main Estimates with the exception of one item had been passed on the 15th of this month. There has been no effort whatever in any way to prevent full discussion of the estimates. It has been a part of the government policy to begin almost immediately after the opening of the House with the estimates, and distribute them day by day over the session so that there would be ample opportunity for the members of the House to discuss every department and every branch of government. What we took such strong exception to in opposition was that the government of the day, while it brought down its estimates at a certain time after the opening of the House, refrained from bringing before the House for purposes of discussion a very large part of the Main Estimates until the last few days of the session. I think if one will look through the records of parliament one will find that the last week or two of parliament during the last few sessions at least—I know that when we were in opposition the end of the session was taken up almost entirely with discussing Main Estimates. Not only that but a great proportion of the Main Estimates were discussed after midnight and until five in the morning. I remember sitting where my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) is sitting now while the government of which he was a member was busy putting through estimates here at night to the amount of millions, and sitting right on until daylight came in through the windows above. I protested strongly, and pointed out that the government was trying to railroad the estimates through the House at a time when it was impossible to have any discussion and I maintained that if ever the then opposition came into office we would see that nothing of that kind was repeated. I just wish to demonstrate to the House the truth of what I have said. If members will look at the Orders of the Day they will find there the dates on which the different supply has been put through this House. They run as follows on the order paper: February 20, February 23, February 27, March 2, March 6, March 8, March 9, March 15, March 22, March 23, March 27, March 28, April 10, April 11, April 12, April 13, April 16, April 19, April 23, April 24, May 4, May 8, May 11, May 28, May 29, May 30, May 31, June 7, June 8, June 11, June 12, June 13, June 14, June 15.

That is the manner in which the present government has submitted the estimates to the House for the purpose of discussion. They have been distributed as evenly as possible over the entire session, giving notice to members always in advance of what was in contemplation so that there would be ample opportunity of discussing fully every item of supply.

Might I draw the attention of the House to this further fact? While we were discussing the estimates I do not think there was a single night, unless by consent all round, that we sat beyond eleven o'clock. What I took strong exception to when in opposition was the fact that items would be passed in supply long after it was possible for members of the press gallery to take any record of what was being said or to send any communication to the press of the country as to the discussion that was taking place here. It has been a deliberate part of the government policy to see that the members of the House had the fullest opportunity of discussing supply, that the country should know every word that was said by any member which might be deemed by the press to be of importance in that regard. We have presented our estimates in consequence in that way and all the main supply was completed by the 15th of this month.

The Supplementary Estimates are possibly a little late in being brought down but, as hon. members know, we have been very busy discussing the budget and there has not been time to give to the Supplementary Estimates, until the greater part of the budget was out of the way, the careful consideration which should be given. But let me say in regard to the Supplementary Estimates—and I say it particularly to my hon. friend from Brandon who has just spoken as to the matter of time, we are all anxious I think to get away at the end of this week if possible—if any member feels that in any particular it is going to prevent or even shorten discussion for the House to prorogue this week I hope he will at once dismiss from his mind any intention on the part of the government to have it so prorogue. I purpose to-night to have the House adjourn at twelve o'clock so that there will be no discussion on estimates after midnight, and if we are not through tomorrow by midnight we will rise and continue on Saturday till midnight, and if we are not through then we will adjourn and reassemble for discussion of the estimates on Tuesday. I would like that to be thoroughly understood. The government is not going to seek to railroad these estimates through in any particular. Members may have all the time they wish.

Let me add further so far as the Supplementary Estimates are concerned, we have sought to avoid bringing down in the supplementaries items which we thought in any particular would be contentious. My hon. friend from Brandon says that these Supplementary Estimates so far as public works in the province of Nova Scotia are concerned are larger in amount than the Main Estimates, but did my hon. friend take close cognizance of the nature of the Main Estimates? If hon. gentlemen will look through the estimates they will find that so far as new work is concerned, the government both in the Main Estimates and in the supplementaries has resisted to the very limit the demands that are coming from the different constituencies of this country to start any new public works or public buildings. Here and there there are one or two public buildings which have become an absolute necessity and the commencement of which the Minister of Public Works felt he could not possibly longer delay, but looking through the list one will find that practically all the items for public works set forth in these estimates are in the nature of repairs, and looking through the Main Estimates also one will find that practically all the work is in the nature of repairs. May I point out this to my hon. friend? It is not until the spring of the year very often that it becomes possible for the officers of the Department of Public Works to discover what is essential in the nature of repairs. These are largely repairs to wharves and the like. It is the damage done in the winter that necessitates this work. We could let all of that go if hon. members thought it was in the public interest, but it is to save the property belonging to the Dominion that makes it necessary to bring in these estimates. The Public Works estimates so far as the province of Nova Scotia and all the other provinces are concerned are absolutely wanting in anything in the nature of public expenditure for new work. We have I think gone a little too far in that regard. Members of all three groups have pressed the government hard in regard to necessities in particular constituencies in the way of new buildings, and we have steadily refused. So far as these Supplementary Estimates are concerned while the amounts may be a little larger for the repair work and the like than in the Main Estimates it is due to the circumstances I have mentioned. The need for repairs has become more apparent after the winter months, and we refused in the Main Estimates to consider anything in the different constituencies until we had some opportunity of getting further particulars as to these necessities.

In these Supplementary Estimates there are a few amounts occasioned by the legislation that has been passed this session. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance drew attention to the last items brought down to provide for the administration of the Combines Investigation Act. That was inadvertently overlooked. I suppose I am primarily responsible. It was my fault that it was left out of the Main Estimates, and I asked the Minister of Finance to put in a sufficient amount to administer the act which this parliament had assented to.

As to the deputy ministers, I might say a word on that at this moment. There are so far as the increases there mentioned are concerned no general increases in the salaries of the deputy ministers. What the government has done is this. We have ascertained, we have had reason to know, that some of the men who hold these responsible positions in the public service are staying on in the public service to-day resisting offers much more considerable in amount than the salaries they are receiving at the present time.

Mr. HOCKEN: Well, well.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I tell my hon. friend it is true.

Mr. HOCKEN: Which one?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I could name several. One of the deputy ministers refused an offer of $20,000 to stay in the service at $10,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I will tell my hon. friend if he wishes to know. It was Major Bell, the Deputy Minister of the Department of Railways and Canals. He was offered $20,000 to leave the service and go into other work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He is not on this list.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The government found it necessary to give him $10,000 to retain him, and having given him $10,000 with the extra duties he has, the government felt that where there are members of the public service that have been deputy heads of departments for ten years they were entitled to receive an increase to the extent of making their salaries $8,000. That is what is meant by the increases here set forth. Any deputy who has been at the head of a department for ten years or over is named here for an increase in salary. It is not an increase to the office, it is not an increase to the department; it is an increase to the deputy head who has served ten years, simply recognizing the system is general through the Civil Service that length of service be remunerated at perhaps a larger figure. I think if hon. gentlemen opposite will go through these estimates with an eye to the necessity of presenting them in this form at this particular time they will find very little to criticize.

May I add this? Of these estimates brought down at the present time the amount of $5,800,000 is not in the nature of an appropriation for some new work. It is in the nature of a loan. There is one item here of $4,000,000 for loans to provinces for housing advances. Why is that item here? The government in the Main Estimates made it plain to the House that we had felt that previous administrations had made a mistake in voting such large sums of money to the provinces for a number of different purposes to enable the provinces to carry on work which they themselves should carry on. Large sums of money have been voted out of the federal treasury by past administrations for road making, for instance, several millions for aid in agricultural instruction, several millions for aid in technical education, several millions in the form of loans to the provinces for putting up houses in cities and towns. All of this was work which this present government inherited, so to speak, in virtue of the statutes under which these provincial grants were made. They were grants running over a term of years, and if the total of our estimates seems large it is in large part because we have had to carry on from year to year commitments made before we ever came into office at all. We tried to stop certain of these grants from the federal to the provincial treasuries, and among the number we stopped the grants to the provinces for housing loans. We thought it was a mistaken policy on the part of the federal government to be assisting the provinces in the erection of dwellings in cities and towns. Earlier in the session some reference was made to it and I confess I agreed with an hon. gentleman opposite that it would be much better if we were to spend money for the purpose of housing, to spend it on housing for farm dwellers rather than city dwellers. But we discovered that under the plan previously made a number of the provinces had made commitments with the municipalities that had not exhausted their full amounts to advance them sums which they were expecting to get from the federal treasury. and which they became responsible for in the matter of loans paying us interest on them. When we discovered that we were faced with the alternative of having to say to our friends "well, we will have to go back altogether on the undertaking that has been given by the previous government or else make good this amount." That is why this item of $4,000,000 appears in the Supplementary Estimates at the present time. But I have made it plain, in that once the present year is past further advances shall not be continued. I apologize for taking up so much time, but if hon. members will look carefully at the estimates they will see that the government has, if anything, erred on the side of refusing to do in the way of public works throughout this country a great deal that is very much required at the present time.

Mr. HOCKEN: I want to protest against the increases in salary to the deputy ministers.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the three leaders of the respective groups have dealt generally with the estimates. At present we are considering one item for wharf repairs in Nova Scotia, and I think it is only fair to the committee to say that a general discussion is out of order.

Mr. FIELDING: We will reach the vote for the increase in the salaries of deputy ministers shortly.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member will defer his remarks on the subject of the increase in the salaries of the deputy ministers until that vote comes up, he will be acting more in accordance with the rules.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the Chair rule that there is to be no answer to the speech of the Prime Minister?

Mr. LAPOINTE: You have made your statement.

Mr. GOULD: Seeing there is an item concerning Nova Scotia under consideration I have made a note in regard to some items in the estimates, and I think the inference which I draw should be placed before the committee and before the country. Undoubtedly during the progress of the discussion upon the various items endeavours will be made to explain what I look upon as an anomaly. I have gone carefully over these estimates and have eliminated the details of civil government, the administration of justice, and so forth. The items I have taken are: Railways and Canals chargeable to income, Public Works chargeable to capital, Public Works chargeable to income, and telegraph and telephone lines. I have segregated these items and I wish to draw the attention of the committee to the figures I have compiled and the inference I draw therefrom.

The CHAIRMAN: We are now dealing with a specific item, and I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that while he may be able to deal with some of the items, I question the relevancy of a general discussion of the estimates, main or supplementary, at the present time. It is usual in committee when the Supplementary Estimates are taken up, I am told, for the leaders of the respective groups to deal generally with the estimates as a whole, but I doubt the right of any other member to debate the general question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: On the point of order, may I suggest that we have had very little chance of discussion. A great deal of new matter has been brought up by the Prime Minister and I had no opportunity of answering his statements in that regard. I do not think his statements are very important and I am not worrying very much about them. However, may I not avail myself of what I think ought to be my right of reply to the remarks of my hon. friend friend from Assiniboia?

Mr. FIELDING: Then would he have a right to reply to you?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not replying at all.

Mr. GOULD: I wish to comply with your ruling Mr. Chairman.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a question of order to be settled. When we consider the effect of the estimates surely we have a right to take them in bulk. Surely we have a right to consider, having regard to any particular part of the country, the total amount that is going to be expended there bearing in mind the total requirements and the sums that are going to other districts.

The CHAIRMAN: Generally speaking, that discussion should be on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, and not on any individual item.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite sure that no one could have got ready for a discussion on a motion to go into Committee of Supply on these estimates. There is this further fact, that we went into committee to-day without a motion. Now, if your ruling be correct, Mr. Chairman, we can have no general discussion on these supplementaries.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend say that now is the time to raise that point?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I certainly say we should have the right to discuss these estimates generally. We would have the right to discuss them on a motion to go into Committee of Supply according to your ruling, but as we went into Committee of Supply to-day without a motion no opportunity has been afforded for such discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: Let me read to the hon. gentleman the rule which is applicable in such a case as this; I refer to paragraph 165, page 42, of Beauchèsne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

> Each grant is a separate motion which must be proposed and discussed as a distinct question, and when it has been formally carried, no reference can be made again thereto. Neither is it regular to discuss any resolution before it has been formally proposed from the chair.

Now, what I am suggesting is this: While there may be, for the purposes of comparison, a reference to certain items, or to an aggregate of items, I feel that I am bound to declare that a general discussion such as the respective leaders have indulged in would not be within the rules for other hon. members.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do not let us have any misunderstanding about the matter. I do not propose to go to that length at all. As I understand it, the object of the member for Assiniboia is to present the totals having regard to specific votes and specific places which he has compiled. Now, let me deal for a moment with the rule which has been read. No doubt there is a certain limitation in regard to particular items, but there is a very broad discretion as to what can be considered in connection with them. For example in connection with every single item we have a right to consider the manner in which it can be financed, where the money is coming from, the necessities of the country, and the like. In connection with every item we can not only consider the item itself, but the cumulative effect having regard to other items of the same character in the same district.

Mr. GOULD: I do not wish to depart at all from the ruling of the Chair but I desire to present the facts which I have prepared in a manner altogether different from the way they have been advanced before. I think the information I have should be placed before the committee and before the country as well. Under the circumstances I think I should be accorded this privilege if privilege it be. As I stated before, ample opportunity will be afforded to other members to explain what I may term an irregularity or an anomaly. The statement I wish to make will not occupy more than one or two minutes. I was proceeding to enumerate the headings under which I have compiled my figures, and I stated that I had eliminated items from the total which I considered had no bearing upon the case. I may add that I had prepared a more elaborate statement along the same line in connection with the Main Estimates for the purposes of illustration last year, and in previous years, but being a young member my courage failed me when it came to submitting it to the House. However at this late period I have taken my courage in my hand and now wish to make a comparison in connection with the Supplementary Estimates. I wish to assure the committee that my computations for the past have borne out the results which I show here. I have a statement of the per capita return to the provinces out of the expenditures provided for by these supplementary estimates. We find that under the several items the per capita returns are as follows:

	Per capita return
Nova Scotia	$1.25
Ontario	$1.05
Prince Edward Island	.45
British Columbia	$1.05
New Brunswick	.66
Manitoba	.36
Alberta	.09⅜
Saskatchewan	.04½
British Columbia	1.06

It is quite possible that this may be explained, and I think it is due to the committee, and likewise to the country, that we should have a real explanation of this condition. It should likewise be explained whether in the Main Estimates, not only of this year, or last year, but former years, the returns average up according to the illustration which I have just given.

Mr. MARTELL: Will the hon. member state whether he embraced, in his per capita expenditure as regards Alberta and Saskatchewan, the amount which this country is spending in the West for railways; and whether he will find breakwater and wharves that need improvement in Alberta? He might possibly require something to keep the gophers off the land.

Mr. GOULD: I have not taken into consideration any of the items in the Main Estimates yet. I think the hon. member will accept my word that my computation of the Main Estimates will bear out what I have stated.

Mr. WALLACE: I would like to point out that there is a vast difference between the amounts voted for railway construction and the amounts voted for other purposes. In connection with the railways we have the whole debt carried on from year to year and charged to capital account while ordinary expenditures are charged against revenue.

Mr. FIELDING: May I express regret that any hon. member should enter into abstruse calculations regarding per capita expenditures? That is a distinctly provincial view. One province may require one class of work, and another province may require another class. If it can be shown in any province of Canada that there is any deserving public work requiring attention which is not receiving attention, no matter what the per capita shows, it is a just complaint. But if the estimates are devoted to the practical things of a province, one province having wharves and breakwaters and another province having railways, I earnestly implore hon. members not to bring it down to a per capita basis. If there is any public work in any province in Canada deserving of consideration and not receiving it, that will be a just cause of complaint.

Advocate—wharf repairs, $2,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: In this connection I would like to voice my protest against the majority of the items in this vote for Nova Scotia. I believe the proper course for the government would have been to bring these items down in the Main Estimates. It is impossible for any member of the House tonight, without obstructing, to obtain any reasonable figures as regards most of those votes. I may say that 60 per cent of the towns or places mentioned in this vote for Nova Scotia cannot be found in any geography. They are not there, and as a result there is no means by which we can tell whether we are voting money to be spent in a wilderness or in a town. The first item is for wharf repairs at Advocate. That is one place that is on the map, but in the last 20 years the population of that place decreased from 1,598 to 798, or 50 per cent. The next place mentioned is not on the map. I think it is absolutely unfair that the government should bring down a large vote of this kind so late in the session when we have no reasonable chance to discuss it, unless we obstruct.

Mr. LOGAN: Put these places on the map.

Mr. ARTHURS: The estimates should have been brought down earlier in the session, or the votes included in the Main Estimates.

Mr. PUTNAM: What map does the hon. member refer to?

Mr. ARTHURS: The Gazette of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MILLAR: I am going to ask a question which I have asked before, and to which I have not received a satisfactory answer. If I possibly could get an answer I would like to have it. The government has spent a lot of money in building wharves at very small places. Some of them are very, very small. I know of one case for which $3,500 appears in the estimates. It is only a little place, where nearly all the boats are small craft which are pulled up on the mud flats by men.

Mr. CARROLL: Where is that?

Mr. MILLAR: There are lots of them.

An hon. MEMBER: Ecum Secum.

Mr. MILLAR: If the government follow this policy, I suppose they have some good reason and believe they are right in the course they are pursuing. If they spend money in building wharves at the very small places where there is no national or international trade, why do they not spend money in the same way in other places? Would it be sound policy to spend money in an outlying district where they have no creamery? The only argument I have heard in favour of these expenditures is that if you did not build a wharf you would not have any settlement. There are lots of districts where you would have a settlement if you built a creamery, but you never think of doing it. There are other places where they need an elevator. Why not build one? Is it sound policy? I wish the minister would not side-step. I have put the question and there has been too much side-stepping.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MILLAR: The Minister of Finance has stated that some of us are taking a provincial view of this matter, and he is perfectly right. Looking at the matter broadly, if all the provinces are receiving fair consideration, even though they are not getting it in the shape of wharves but are getting it in some other way, there is no need to complain, provided the policy is a sound one. However, it looks to me as if Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta are not getting their fair share, because they have not places to put wharves. Being young in the House, I have the temerity to ask that the minister should show us how it is a sound policy for the Dominion government to pursue. I can see that it would be more justifiable in the case of a provincial government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) (for Minister of Public Works) My hon. friend is quite right in asking for the fullest information in reference to all the items appearing in the Supplementary Estimates, and I shall be delighted to give him all the information. When we speak about the general question as to whether or not the policy of this or any federal government should be to provide accommodation for the people who make their living by the sea, I say my hon. friend has advanced a novel argument because every government which has been in power since confederation having to do, as we have to do, with trade and commerce, has followed the policy of encouraging the erection of wharves and facilities by which the people who live by the ocean and who have their traffic on the ocean, can pursue their vocation to the best advantage. As the people in the district my hon. friend comes from make their living on the prairies, they should have proper access to the land. The Maritime provinces generally are made up of a class of people, particularly in the southern portion of Nova Scotia, whose business is entirely on the sea. In the county of Lunenburg there is a tremendous fleet of fishing vessels which goes out on the Grand Banks, catches the fish, cures them, and sends them to the Mediterranean and West Indies. These fishermen do not all live in the bigger towns, but they live in the little inland towns and in places where they and their fathers have been accustomed to live. They must have access to the seas for their trade and commerce. I may say that the total expenditure for this year, so far as new works or repairs in that province are concerned only amounts to $533,000. The past winter was the worst that we have had there for 25 years; there were storms in which wharves and breakwaters were destroyed and conditions created that unless the government followed out the policy of maintaining this means of access to the sea, the result would be that those people who make their living on the ocean, would not have the most ordinary facilities found in every civilized country for doing business. With regard to each one of these items, I would be glad to give my hon. friend the information he desires.

Mr. CHURCH: On what principle is this vote of over half a million dollars for Nova Scotia justified? The people of Ontario see the Maritime provinces getting everything on a plea of lack of transportation facilities. On what principle are these votes for harbours made, for example? Canada never had a definite programme as regards improvement of harbours, or canal improvements. Money has been spent on some canals when it should not have been spent, and in other instances, money has not been spent when it should have been spent. It seems that all of a sudden the walls of old wharves in the Maritime provinces fall down. I understand that the policy of the government is economy. I did not see in the Speech from the Throne at the opening of parliament, any statement referring to Supplementary Estimates of fifteen or sixteen million dollars. Every country in the world to-day is reducing its capital debt. France, the United States, England, are reducing their capital debts and also their maintenance charges. In Canada we have a very heavy debt. This year, $73,000,000 for railways must come out of the taxpayers of this country, and the taxpayers have to pay huge sums to maintain the public services of the Dominion. In my opinion, these improvements in the Maritime provinces to breakwaters, wharves and other public works are unnecessary.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that a specific item which has been called from the Chair is being dealt with, and a general debate is not in order upon it.

Mr. CHURCH: I was debating item No. 504, in connection with the Maritime provinces.

The CHAIRMAN: By agreement of the committee, we are debating the first item of vote No. 504. We are taking up each work as it appears in the list.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Mr. CHURCH: I am discussing the principle of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN: It is too late to discuss the principle at this particular time.

Mr. CHURCH: The government is proposing a great deal of expenditure that, in my opinion, is not necessary. I do not think these are public works within the meaning of the British North America Act. In the United States, this class of work is done under the local improvement system, by which as regards a harbour or a depot port, there must be some revenue from that port to meet the expenditures. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) is not here.

Mr. MACDONALD: I have to ask the committee a little later on to vote some $600,000 for some harbour improvements in Toronto. I wonder if my hon. friend will be as economical when that item is under discussion.

Mr. CHURCH: How much revenue is derived from these wharves throughout the country?

Mr. HANSON: How many of these 68 items are in the constituency of Cape Breton North and Victoria, and what is the aggregate amount for items in that particular constituency?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): If my hon. friend will keep track of them as we go along, he can add them up himself, because I never attempted to add them up.

Mr. HANSON: The hon. gentleman should tell me how many are in that constituency.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will tell my hon. friend as we go along.

Mr. HANSON: Point them out as we go along.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I desire to give my hon. friend the pleasure that he so earnestly asked for a few minutes ago, of having an opportunity to give us full details on this appropriation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This work is required for the purpose of re-topping 135 feet in length of the wharf, with occasional renewals over the whole work, including a large portion of the sheathing. This is the only wharf in the locality situated 33 miles from a railway. About 400,000 lineal feet of piling, 2,000,000 feet of lumber and farm produce valued at $15,000 is shipped from this wharf annually, and general supplies for the locality are landed there. The Department of Marine and Fisheries in letters of February 28, 1923, and January 31, 1923, state that "Advice has been received that a great deal of the sheathing of the public wharf at Advocate harbour, N. S., is loose and will be carried away by ice in the spring unless something is done to save it." The wharf was constructed in 1899-90. No departmental works are in the immediate vicinity. The nearest public wharf is the breakwater at West Advocate, about 3 miles west of this wharf.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What county is it in?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Cumberland county.

Item agreed to.

Abbott's harbour—breakwater extension, $1,350.

Mr. CHURCH: How many ships of the Merchant Marine have come into Abbott's harbour in the last year?

Mr. HOCKEN: What is the geographical location of this harbour?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is situated in Yarmouth county. It is proposed to construct a cribwork extension 50 feet long and 12 feet wide to the existing breakwater. This is one of the fishing villages of which I spoke a few minutes ago, where the fishing business on the Atlantic is carried on by the people who live in the vicinity. The wharf is their only convenience.

9 p.m.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Do the local people take any part in the repairs to these breakwaters? In Ontario, along the lakes, where a breakwater is established, it is paid for by the municipality.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am informed by the official here that my hon. friend from Kingston is hardly accurate about that. In our province, where we require to protect low-lying settlements by a system of dykes, those are carried on under provincial authority, but works along the lakes are carried out by the Dominion authorities.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I am asking about breakwaters. There is no question about protecting low-lying land in Ontario. That work is undertaken by the provincial legislature, but in Ontario a local breakwater is usually paid for by the municipality.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No. My hon. friend will find, if he looks at the estimates, that there are appropriations for breakwaters in his province.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): There is one in Kingston, but it is the military college.

Mr. LOGAN: If the hon. gentleman will look at the Estimates he will find a certain amount provided for "Repairs to drydock at Kingston, Ontario."

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): That is government property.

Mr LOGAN: That is government property too.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): The drydock is for the protection of government property.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend has not studied the Estimates. On page 11 he will find two items for Ontario.

Mr. CHURCH: What is the necessity of this item for breakwater extension at Abbott's Harbour? It could well have been included in the Main Estimates. Why sell the Canadian Government Merchant Marine if this harbour is to be kept up?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. CHURCH: I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend's question was answered some time ago in replying to other hon. gentlemen. I am sorry he did not hear the answer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What county is this in?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Queen's and Shelburne.

Item agreed to.

Bass river—improvements, $1,500.

Mr. HANSON: What county?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Colchester.

Item agreed to.

Battery point—breakwater extension, $9,600.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What county?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Annapolis.

Sir HENRY DAYTON: This looks like another new item. I understood from the general remarks of the Prime Minister that there were to be no new works at all, only repairs. An extension is a new work. Why is the Prime Minister's rule being departed from here?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend should not be querulous about this item. When he was minister in 1920 his friends proposed to make an extension to the breakwater —which is nothing more or less than building an addition to it to better protect access to the harbour—and in 1920 my hon. friend's Minister of Public Works asked for tenders for a proposed expenditure of $12,000 or $14,000. There is no new work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: An extension is new work.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend must know that an extension of a breakwater is not new work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is putting on new work for extending an old one. We might as well be frank and honest with each other.

Item agreed to.

Broad Cove marsh—replacement breakwater-wharf, $8,400.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in Inverness county.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the engineer's report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This vote is for the construction of a cribwork wharf, 200 feet long and 28 feet wide, to replace the existing structure, which is in a dilapidated condition through storms.

Item agreed to.

Burlington Centre—wharf extension, $7,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What county?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Hants.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What justification could there be for any new work in Hants?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is a cribwork extension to a public wharf, 20 feet by 50 feet. The extension is asked for to give more room at this wharf for shipping.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would feel more comfortable about this vote if it were supported by the eloquent member for Hants (Mr. Hanson).

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): You want to hear speeches, not to pass votes.

Mr. GOULD: Is the work to be carried on by public contract, or is the money to be given to individuals or municipalities to look after the work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Tenders will be called for and the work let to the highest tender—I mean the lowest.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Canada creek—rebuilding shore end of breakwater, $1,300.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is this?

Mr MACDONALD (Pictou): Canada creek is in King's county.

Item agreed to.

Cariboo island—breakwater reconstruction, $6,000.

Mr. HANSON: Where is Cariboo island?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In the county of Pictou.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is going to be done with the wharf?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is not a wharf. This work is to raise the level of the breakwater from two to three feet for a length of fourteen feet and a width of sixteen feet. The storms of last autumn and winter practically destroyed this breakwater.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this to be done by day labour, contract or what?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): By contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have any advertisements been issued?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, we do not ask for contracts until the House permits the money to be expended.

Mr. BOYS: I see there are no less than sixty-eight of these items for Nova Scotia. Are there any wharves whatever in the whole province that are not being either extended or repaired. If so, I should like to know where they are.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am afraid my genial friend from South Simcoe has not visited our province or he would realize that it is an island.

Mr. BOYS: I know it is an island. I do not want a geographical description. I asked the minister: Are there any wharves in the whole province that are not being either extended or repaired? I should like an answer.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not relevant to this particular item.

Mr. BOYS: I submit it is, Mr. Chairman.

M. MACDONALD (Pictou): My officer informs me that we have no data to indicate the total number of wharves in Nova Scotia. If my hon. friend is really sincere, I will get the information and give it to him tomorrow.

Mr. BOYS: I am sincere, for certain reasons. I do not want to be too critical of the acting minister, but I made a most modest request—I do not know whether this is in order or not, but it seems an appropriate place to refer to it—for a very small expenditure in connection with a government proposition, and could not get $6,000 for it; yet here are sixty-eight items in one single province involving an expenditure of over half a million dollars. In the face of this we are told that Canada has not enough money to build a decent road over which expensive government trucks attached to Camp Borden are being damaged daily. The road is nothing but an Indian trail. I am not speaking for my riding or politically, I am speaking for something that is absolutely essential for the ordinary user of Camp Borden. This road is used by thousands of people every year. Camp Borden is a wonderful camp, and I trust it will be kept up. But what startles me is that we find this tremendous number of items here for one province, while we cannot get $5,000 to improve a government property in another province in order that damage which is now daily done to trucks owned by this government may be avoided. I do not blame the acting minister; it is true this has not been pressed upon him for very long. But it has been pressed for a long time upon others; and it does arouse my interest when I see these sums of money being voted here—$5,000 or $6,000, $40,000, $50,000 when we cannot get the small amount required for this much needed work. I am not asking the acting minister to expend a large sum of money; I merely ask for an ordinary gravelled road so that the people using this camp can get in and out and so that the trucks can be used without being seriously damaged. I do think the government should give some attention to a matter of this kind; we should not be called upon to vote huge sums in certain provinces while a small but important work of this kind is ignored. Is every wharf in Nova Scotia receiving attention? I know that Nova Scotia is represented by sixteen Liberals; they are all first-class fellows as far as I know them and I do not blame them for asking for what they think they are entitled to. Personally I should be prepared to support what they are entitled to, but I do not want to support that while the needs of other parts of Canada are passed over.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I think my hon. friend is hardly fair in the position he has taken. During the war these wharves and breakwaters in the Maritime provinces were neglected owing to the demands made by war necessities; hence it is that attention must be given to them now. Moreover, last winter was the worst we have had for a quarter of a century, and the injury to these harbours and wharves was very great. As to the road to Borden, the committee will recall that there has not been much disposition these last two years to be very liberal in expenditures connected with national defence or the militia, and the amount of funds at the disposal of that department is not very great. I know that my hon. friend called my attention not more than two weeks ago to the necessity of having improvements made on that road to Borden.

Mr. BOYS: I called the attention of my hon. friend's predecessor to it as well. I have said that I am not blaming the acting minister; nevertheless the records ought to be in his department.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): When my hon. friend called my attention to the condition of this road I made inquiries from the officers of the department, who reported that there was good ground for the complaint made, but that a large vote would be necessary to give the matter proper attention. I gave instructions that the matter be looked into fully and that plans be prepared for submission next year so that we might consider the question of asking parliament then to provide something for that purpose.

Mr. BOYS: I want to say right here and now that this business of getting extensive plans is a farce. During this recent campaign I travelled on a road, for instance, in the county of Grey from Meaford to Clarksburg, a first class gravelled road, about twenty-two feet wide, on which a motor car can travel fifty miles an hour with safety. That road cost $8,000 a mile. The road to which I have been referring is a mile and a quarter or a mile and a half long. The matter was brought to the attention of the previous minister, not by myself, but by one of the most enthusiastic Liberals in the county of Simcoe. If the country has so much money to spend as is indicated by these Supplementary Estimates, I do not see why we cannot get a work of this kind done. You do not need plans for it at all. It is nothing but an Indian trail at present; all you have to do is to grade the road and put some gravel on it so as to make it fit for travel. In its present condition it is utterly unfit for travel. I say that if these huge sums are to be voted so freely; some expenditure might well be made on the road of which I speak. I ask the minister, are there any wharves at all in the whole of Nova Scotia that are not being either repaired or extended? I shall be pleased to have that information.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend ought not to assume that attitude. I can tell him that there are hundreds of wharves in Nova Scotia that are not being repaired or extended.

Mr. BOYS: Is my hon. friend serious in that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am serious.

Mr. BOYS: Hundreds of wharves?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Surely.

Mr. BOYS: The minister will give me the information?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will get the information.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend is exercised over the fact that there is certain work in his district that has not been done.

Mr. BOYS: I am; I admit it.

Mr. BELAND: That is probably right, but I would point out that in 1920, when the party he supports was in power, the same item for harbours and rivers in Nova Scotia, No. 490, contained fifty-five items for wharf repairs and extensions and piers. Most of them are not mentioned in this one.

Mr. BOYS: Then if there were 55 in 1920, there is no earthly reason for having 68 now.

Mr. CHURCH: I suggest that the minister should read the report of the Deputy Minister of Public Works regarding the necessity for this work, because in all expenditures of this kind the report of an engineer is furnished as to the utility of the work, and so on. What do the Progressives think of an expenditure like this? The Progressives were elected on a policy of economy and retrenchment.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he must deal specifically with the item under consideration.

Mr. CHURCH: I think it is quite relevant.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not relevant; the hon. gentleman must deal specifically with the item.

Mr. CHURCH: This work is not a work for the general advantage of Canada. I would like the minister to give the figures of the expenditure on this harbour for the past fifteen years. It is my opinion that the work is not necessary at all. In view of the large deficits on our National Railways; in view of the heavy debt under which Canada labours, there must be retrenchment. England the United States, France—all these countries are trying to live within their income. I would like some information about this item. Is this expenditure to be a capital charge or a maintenance charge, and is the money to come out of revenue?

Mr. GOULD: This vote involves an expenditure of $533,884.60, and the greater part of it is for the repairing of wharves and breakwaters. A few moments ago I asked the minister if the tenders had been received for these works, and he replied in the affirmative. It occurs to me that as this is a hardy annual and as the province of Nova Scotia has grown old in the receipt of these payments, it would be a good business proposition if the government would have a small crew with equipment to go round this island or peninsula and complete the work. That might result in a material saving from year to year.

Mr. CHAPLIN: In the Main Estimates the items for harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia, totalled $293,000. Evidently those estimates were prepared when the present Minister of Railways was in the office, and since the new minister has come in he has brought down Supplementary Estimates amounting to over $533,000. If this is the spirit of the new minister coming in I think probably we were wrong in getting a new minister. We might as well have left the old one there.

Mr. BAXTER: I understand that the item that we have not passed yet is this Canada Creek.

The CHAIRMAN: That is passed.

Mr. BAXTER: It is not passed. I have been trying to speak for the last fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN: The Canada Creek item is passed.

Mr. BAXTER: I have been trying to speak to it for the last fifteen minutes. If it is passed I am going to refer to it just the same, and for this purpose. I heard the minister giving some figures. I have heard him imperfectly as the House has not been as quiet as it might have been, but I rather gathered from the quantity of material that was mentioned that the sum of money was not likely to accomplish the work. Now I want to ask the minister a general question in regard to all these items because I think we might just as well have it clearly in the minds of the committee now as item by item. I would ask the minister to distinguish in each instance between the amounts that will complete the whole work and the amounts that will only partially complete it. In other words I want to know, and I think the committee would like to know whether these amounts embrace everything that is to be done or is it only to cover a part of the work. The minister will recognize that it is a perfectly fair question to ask, and if that principle is applied right through by the minister I think we shall save time.

I am not going to criticize particular items because being fortunate enough to come from the Maritime provinces I know the extreme necessity there is there for a great deal of work, and it would not hurt the Dominion very much if perhaps the suggestion of the hon. member were taken and we had a sort of wharf built all around some of our provinces if we could induce the other provinces to make use of our Maritime provinces in the way we would like to be able to do. We still like to feel we are a part of Canada. We do not want to be the only part of Canada, but we do not propose to be excluded from confederation even by some of our too zealous allies. The only criticism I have to make is this, and it reflects on the Department of Public Works, it shows gross carelessness to my mind: There is no reason in the world, despite a hard winter and all that sort of thing, why these items should not have been in the Main Estimates. The information that was available for the Main Estimates was of precisely the same class as we are getting on the supplementaries, and it shows a want of grip in the department that the acting minister is not responsible for but that someone is responsible for, that the House should have to be asking these questions at this hour when these matters might just as well have been dealt with in the Main Estimates.

Mr. HANSON: I understand the hon. member for St. John to ask the acting minister to state in every case whether the amount mentioned in the estimates was the total amount required to complete the work, or whether it was simply a partial vote and the item would come back to us another year in this or some other form. That is a practice that has been quite common in the last few years.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I shall be very glad to give the information. The engineer's report in regard to Canada Creek is to the effect that $1,300 is ample to complete the work.

Mr. BAXTER: May I trouble the minister to repeat the dimensions of that work? I might not have heard him correctly, but if the figures were as I understood them $1,300 would not do it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The proposed work consists of tearing down and rebuilding a portion of the breakwater, 40 feet long, 10 feet wide and 21 feet high. In regard to Cariboo Island $6,000 is stated by the engineers to be ample for the purpose of completing the work.

Item agreed to.

Cheverie—wharf repairs, $1,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Hants county.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this sufficient to cover the whole work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Item ageed to.

Colloden—breakwater extension, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. FIELDING: Digby county.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does my hon. friend say as to the sufficiency of the estimate?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The estimated cost of this work is $15,000. The amount of $5,000 is asked for to provide for the construction of a crib and extension, 100 feet long and 30 feet wide, to the existing breakwater.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is only a partial vote? I understood my hon. friend to say the total cost would be $15,000. I thought my hon. friend was going to distinguish between the items that would be completed for the amounts stated here and the partial votes, as suggested by my hon. friend from St. John.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I gave no general answer. I said I could give the answer in each particular case.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then what is the necessity for going on with this work that is going to cost $15,000 ultimately?

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I asked a question. I do not know whether I have to stand all the time for the answer. We find that this is really a $15,000 item instead of a $5,000 item, because this $5,000 is merely going to start the work, and I venture to ask what was the evidence as to the necessity.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The necessity for this work was reported on by the district engineer. It was asked for by a very largely signed petition containing 215 signatures. It is claimed that the present breakwater is too short to afford the protection required.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the population of this place?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In addition to the fishing village itself, in which there are about fifty families, this breakwater serves the whole settlement and district around. There are many people scattered along the shore.

Item agreed to.

D'Escousse—wharf repairs, $3,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We want to know the county in each case.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): South Cape Breton.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And whether this is the final estimate or only a partial vote in each case.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is to complete.

Item agreed to.

Dartmouth—pier and dredging, $75,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of a repair job is this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend has misread the item I think.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I was remembering the remarks of the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I said most of them. I did not say all.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Dartmouth is a very prosperous town with a population of between six and seven thousand. It is situated right across from the city of Halifax. This is new work. There is no wharf accommodation at Dartmouth and has not been. Some years ago my hon. friend's friends constructed a railway running from Dartmouth to the eastern part of Nova Scotia, and through that railway there has been brought to Dartmouth very large quantities of lumber. The opening up of the district has resulted in great development. The necessity of the work has been vouched for by the people of Halifax county generally and has been favourably reported upon by the engineers. I am satisfied my hon. friends will not make the slightest mistake in supporting it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend is right about that vote.

Mr. CHURCH: Does the Prime Minister approve of this extravagance? In the case of all works calling for an expenditure of over $3,000 will tenders be called for, and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer after fair competition in the open market? Does the Prime Minister approve of this extravagant expenditure on wharves in harbours where there is no business, and where the government derives no revenue? I think I could better justify an expenditure to enable vessels of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine to carry coal from Nova Scotia to Montreal for consumption in central Ontario where it is needed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my hon. friend asking me a question or making a speech?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Both.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In answer to what I gather to be my hon. friend's question I wish to say that the statutes provide—in the case of public works, where the amount to be expended exceeds a certain sum—that public tenders must be called for. Other conditions are also set forth. The provisions of the law in this respect will be fully complied with. I may say further that any public works for which the government asks an appropriation are required in the public interest.

Item agreed to.

Digby—dredging, $15,100.

Mr. HANSON: What part of Digby harbour is it proposed to dredge; also, how much money has been spent in dredging in that harbour in the last five years?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou), I will give the information we have. The purpose of this work is to deepen the berth between the two piers so that steamers with a loaded draught of twenty-four feet can load at low water, ordinary spring tides. The area to be dredged is 53,000 square feet. A report on the necessity of this work was made by the regular district engineer. Digby is a very important place in the province. It is on the bay of Fundy as my hon. friend knows very well.

Hr. HANSON: Is there a government pier at Digby?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Was there not a vote in the main estimates for dredging at Digby? I think there was a vote of some kind.

Item agreed to.

Eastern Harbour—improvements, $38,000.

Mr. HANSON: Where is Eastern Harbour?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Eastern Harbour is in Inverness county.

Mr. HANSON: This is a large expenditure, and, I take it, a new one. What is the nature of the expenditures, and how many people live in Eastern Harbour?

Mr. CHISHOLM: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say—

Mr. HANSON: I was addressing my question to the minister. He has his memoranda before him and can answer the question.

Mr. CHISHOLM: I think, possibly, if my hon. friend will grant me the courtesy of allowing me to speak occasionally, I do not take up as much time of the House as my hon. friend does. Let me tell him that he is not going to get me to sit down in the House when I am in order. This expenditure is for dredging Eastern Harbour which is surrounded by a population of five hundred families. There is a large gypsum deposit there and a new industry has been started. A very substantial amount has been spent in erecting a gypsum plant which was closed down during the war. Capital is once more being invested in the industry which is to be operated on a large scale. At present gypsum cannot be shipped from Eastern Harbour until some dredging has been done. Unfortunately we are about fifty miles from a railway. The harbour is a very good one, but there is not enough water at present for ships to come in and load in connection with this industry. For fishing and such like needs the depth of water is sufficient. For the purposes of the gypsum industry larger vessels, having a draught of between twenty and twenty-one feet are necessary. That is the object of this dredging. Were it not for this new industry I would not press the department for this vote.

Mr. HANSON: I should like to say that I meant no intentional discourtesy to the hon. member. I asked the minister a very courteous question in a very polite way. I do not think there was any necessity for a threat from the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Chisholm). He has taken as a personal affront a purely harmless question. Now, I asked the minister for a statement and perhaps we had better have it now.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend asked how many people there were in that vicinity, and I thought the representative for the county was in a better position to give him the information.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Can the minister tell us how it happens there are dredging items here, whereas in the main estimates a blank cheque for $600,000 was given to the Maritime provinces for dredging? How is it that the department is not using its own dredges on this work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The general vote for dredging in the main estimates is for the purpose of operating the dredges which belong to the government. They have to be used continuously in certain portions of the Maritime provinces for maintaining access to the harbours. These special votes are for dredging to be done by private parties. Tenders will be asked for and contracts awarded for the work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister tell us what we are spending the $600,000 on so that we can be sure there is no overlapping here.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am informed by the deputy minister that that information was given earlier in the session when the main items were under consideration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am asking for the information now so as to be sure that we are not voting the same expenditure twice.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): We are not asking for money for the same purpose twice as my hon. friend knows very well.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No I do not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am instructed by the deputy minister that when the vote in the Main Estimates was passed complete information was given to the House as to the number of dredges and everything connected with them. This work is not intended to be done by government dredges but by contract after calling for tenders.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I again ask my hon. friend what dredging the government dredges are doing? Why cannot they be employed on this work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will be very glad to give my hon. friend that information in detail to-morrow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let the item stand until we get the information.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That will be a matter for the committee entirely. I have asked a perfectly pertinent question and I have not yet received the information.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend does not apprehend what I say. These votes are for the purpose of dredging other than by government dredges. I shall be glad to give my hon. friend full information to-morrow as to where the government dredges are, the work they are doing, and so forth.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should have thought that that information would be given before we were called upon to vote the item.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That was all explained on the main estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That cannot be so, because at the time on the main estimates we were not discussing this item, and we were not endeavouring to ascertain whether this dredging could be done by the government dredges.

Mr. CHAPLIN: It seems to me that in a town so close to the main centres as Digby or Dartmouth our own dredges should be able to do the work instead of the government hiring dredges from private individuals. Dartmouth is right inside the Halifax harbour.

Mr. FIELDING: If the government dredge is already employed how can it do the work? The minister has explained that the government dredges were covered by the earlier vote but the amount of dredging is far in excess of what the government dredges should do, and therefore private contracts are made.

Mr. HANSON: I think certain friends of the government in that district own dredges and have been looking for work. They have always been looking for work, and have always received it from this government.

Mr. FIELDING: I think there are more private dredges seeking work in the city of St. John than in the city of Halifax.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) should not be so ungenerous. I am in a position to state that one of the difficulties in carrying out these works is to find dredge owners in Nova Scotia who are willing to tender for the work.

Mr. HANSON: The minister should ask some of his friends in St. John to tender.

Item agreed to.

East Sandy Cove—wharf, $9,350.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Digby and Annapolis.

Mr. BAXTER: Is this the whole estimate?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of repair job is it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is to construct a cribwork approach 100 feet long by 25 feet wide, and a pilework wharf 100 feet long and 25 feet wide including a head 40 feet by 30 feet. This place is a port of call for a small steamer and the present wharf is inadequate. The value of freight landed annually is from $20,000 to $25,000. The value of fish, fresh and salt, annually shipped amounts to about $10,000.

Mr. CHAPLIN: What is the population?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Seven hundred.

Mr. HANSON: Did the engineer report in favour of it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: When did he make the report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In the spring of the year.

Mr. BOYS: In the spring, or in January.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have not the exact date. It was since the main estimate was brought down. I will get the date.

Mr. BOYS: Are all these items supported by reports from the engineers, and were all reports made subsequent to the introduction of the main estimates?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Not all.

Mr. HANSON: How many were made subsequent to the main estimates?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know.

Mr. HANSON: The deputy minister could give the information. Is Sandy Cove the summer resort just east of Digby on the main shore, and does the minister say there are 700 people at Sandy Cove? There might be one or two days in the summer time when there would be that many people there, but they would not be there the year around.

Mr. SPENCE: I think according to the census, there is no population there.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is not a good authority in that regard, at least not as good as the engineer of the department because the engineer says the returns from the census of 1921 showed 685 people.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have a serious question with reference to the accuracy of all these engineers' reports. Here is the government's census return showing no population and the engineer's report giving a population of 600 odd. I wonder whether the hon. member has the right address down there.

Mr. CAHILL: Has my hon. friend the right address?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we will have to rely on the census, because it has been published by the government.

Mr. LOVETT: I am very well acquainted with that district. It is in my constituency. The engineer's report is quite correct. That district serves a large part of the country outside.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. LOVETT: Digby Neck.

An hon. MEMBER: It may have a boil.

Mr. SPENCE: I think the minister ought to get the name changed.

Ecum Secum—completing wharf and building road, $6,100.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We were to get the dates of these reports. The minister said he would let us have the dates as we went along, and he would let us know whether it was a full or partial statement.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will be glad to do so, but the hon. member is talking all the time and I have no chance. This is in the county of Halifax and the engineer's report was made last winter. I have not the exact date. Two reports were made upon that, one in March, 1922, but I have not the date of the report last winter. The necessity of this work is as follows:

District Engineer Dodwell reported that the proposed work was necessary to complete the wharf which has settled to a greater extent than was expected from the time it commenced in 1913 until it was recommenced in 1920. Owing to the lateness of the season when labour and material could not be procured it was found impossible to complete the work in 1920.

Again, my hon. friend started out to do the work when he was in power.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this the final estimate?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Five Islands—wharf extension, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in the county of Colchester. This is the amount expected to be necessary to complete the work as requested by the district engineer, Mr. Dodwell, in estimates of 1922-23.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many people are there?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The number of people is 524. It is a very good district in the county of Colchester and very well known in the province.

Item agreed to.

Fruid's Point—wharf repairs, $4,900.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is in the county of Shelburne. The amount proposed will complete the work and it was reported upon, November 23, 1922, by the engineer.

Mr. HANSON: Why was it not included in the Main Estimate?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The question was as to whether or not it should be dealt with by the Department of Railways and Canals or by the Public Works department.

Mr. HANSON: Why the Department of Railways? Why should there be any question about it? Is there a railway there now?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The railway runs along the southern shore.

Item agreed to.

Gillis Point—wharf repairs, $1,100.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in the county of Victoria. These are ordinary repairs to the wharf which are recommended by the engineer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend would remember the particulars we want, I would not have to repeat my question so often. My hon. friend has not told us whether this is a complete estimate or not.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is.

Item agreed to.

Grand Narrows—wharf extension, $2,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is also in the county of Cape Breton North and Victoria. It was reported on by the engineer. This is to construct pile work extension to the wharf. The amount voted is expected to complete the work.

Mr. SPENCE: I should be glad if the acting minister would speak a little louder. Hon. members on this side who are interested in these matters cannot hear what is said.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask the members of the committee to cease the conversation that is going on in the chamber. It is very difficult sometimes to hear even here.

Item agreed to.

Half Island Cove—rebuilding breakwater—further amount required, $1,650.

Mr. SPENCE: Is this on the Atlantic coast or not, or does it go into a private home? We do not seem to be able to get any information on these items. These breakwaters and wharves seem to be about every hundred yards. These places are summer resorts pure and simple. In the census of 1921, more than nine-tenths of the whole of them are not mentioned at all, having no population. This is simply buying a vote here and a vote there.

An hon. MEMBER: If there is no population, how can you buy a vote?

Mr. McISAAC: For the benefit of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, who, like another colleague of his, either never went to school, or never studied geography, I want to tell him that Half Island Cove is a very important seaport on the Atlantic ocean, 20 miles east of Guysborough. It is a very important fishing district.

Mr. SPENCE: Do many boats come in there?

Mr. McISAAC: Yes, a packet calls there three or four times a week, and there is quite a fleet of fishing boats and schooners there. The quantity of fish shipped from there yearly is very large. If my hon. friend along with other Ontario members would take advantage of their passes over the Canadian National Railways and visit the Maritime provinces, some light would be shed on them, and they would not make such an exhibition of themselves in this House. Millions of Money are expended on Toronto harbour every year, and they think it is the only place on earth. Some people go bathing in that harbour, and I pity the people who have to bathe in the muddy water of Toronto harbour. If they would visit the Maritime provinces and give themselves some nice, clean bathing in the salt water on the coast of Nova Scotia, they would have a more intelligent understanding of public questions, and they would be better physically and intellectually.

Item agreed to.

Hampton—breakwater repairs, $8,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder whether we could not have another statement from the hon. member on this item.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This work is in Digby county. It is to rebuild a crib work 80 feet long, 30 feet wide, and 22 feet high. The amount proposed will complete the work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): April 23, 1923.

Item agreed to.

Inverness—repairs to piers, $4,400.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This will complete the work; it is to close-pile 120 feet of the channel face of the east pier and construct 150 feet of the sea-wall—to complete the improvements commenced in 1922-23. This is not a new work.

Item agreed to.

Little Anse—in full and final settlement of T. D. Morrison's claim in connection with contract for construction of a breakwater, $3,234.60.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister give us the report in connection with this work?

Mr. MACDONAID (Pictou): On May 31, 1911 a contract was let to Mr. T. D. Morrison for the construction of a breakwater at Little Anse, for the sum of $21,500. The work was completed and the final estimate paid—$21,800, but while the work was in progress—on December 27 and 28, 1912,—a gale which attained a maximum velocity of 53 miles an hour destroyed the outer 70 feet in length of the uncompleted structure to a depth of 10 feet and emptied the ballast out of a further length of 160 feet of the breakwater to practically low water mark. The contractor put in a claim of $3,500 for additional work rendered necessary by the damage done by the storm.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was that claim put in?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Last year—I am informed by the deputy that it was made some time before that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the work done?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In 1912-13.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the storm?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): December 27-28, 1912. The claim was referred to the district engineer who, after careful and thorough review of the circumstances, stated that the contractor was fairly and properly entitled to be paid the amount of damages claimed.

The following is the value of the work of reconstruction for which the contractor claims conpensation:

15,120 cu. ft. cribwork at 8c per cu. ft...	$1,209.60
Extra material in partially damaged 160 ft. ..	325.00
850 yds. ballast replaced at $2.00	1,700.00
	$3,234.60

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was that a lump contract or a quantity contract, or what?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The information I have at hand indicates that the contract was let for $21,500, but the deputy informs me that he is unable to say at the moment whether or not it was for a lump sum, or a quantity contract.

Mr. HANSON: Is this a compassionate allowance to a man who lost money through an act of God, or is there a legal liability to pay his claim? Let us have the truth in regard to this matter.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I, of course, acting in the absence of the minister who has unfortunately had to go to his province to attend an engagement, am speaking without personal knowledge of these matters, and am giving the information which comes to me through the officers. I am informed that this has been a frequent practice followed by all governments, where there was a contract and work was destroyed under unfortunate circumstances as a result of the elements. This case is an ordinary one, and the claim has been recommended by the engineer.

10 p.m.

Mr. CHAPLIN: When was the claim first made on the department?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Immediately after the completion of the work, at the time when the storm occurred and the necessity for the additional work arose.

Mr. CHAPLIN: I presume the engineer of that time must have made some report on this matter. This is 11 years ago. What report was made at the time by the engineer in respect of this claim?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I would fancy myself, for the information of my hon. friend, it was because Mr. Morrison, this gentleman who happened to have this contract, was a Liberal and my hon. friend and his friends who came into power in 1911, did not want to recognize a claim which was perfectly legal.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If that is the only suggestion my hon. friend has to make, there is another suggestion which would be much more in point at the present time; that is, that because Mr. Morrison is a Liberal, and probably a Liberal worker, this government is going round resurrecting an outlawed claim. My hon. friend has no right to make that statement in connection with his engineers. Has he no trust in the honesty of the engineers of the department? Does he insinuate that the engineer then in charge made a false report because this man was alleged to be a Liberal? Surely my hon. friend is not serious.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What is the matter with my hon. friend? I told him that the information here disclosed that this matter was dealt with on the report of the engineer of the department. My hon. friend seems to have forgotten.

Mr. BOYS: What was the report of the engineer when this claim was presented? Why was it not paid?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): After a careful and thorough review of the circumstances the engineer thought the contractor was fairly and properly entitled to be paid.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of this report? Mr. Chairman, in a case of this kind the least the committee is entitled to is production of all the papers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What does my hon. friend want?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The file.

Mr. BOYS: We want the report that was made when this was a living claim. As I understand, the contract was let in 1911.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): On May 31st, 1911.

Mr. BOYS: I take it for granted that the contractor made his claim, if not in the latter part of that year, at least in the early part of the following year. I presume the claim was investigated and that the engineer made a report on it. I go further. I take it for granted that the present minister, before he would resurrect an outlawed claim more than ten years old, would investigate and find out what the report of the engineer was. Before we are asked to deal with a matter that is now twelve years old, I think we ought to know exactly what was reported at the time, and why the claim was not paid.

Mr. KYTE: This work was performed in the county of Cape Breton South and Richmond. During its progress a storm of unprecedented severity occurred along the coast and a great deal of property was destroyed. As a matter of fact buildings were washed off the wharves and along the waterfront. The oldest records in the community recount no such high tide or so severe a windstorm as on that occasion. Mr. Morrison had his work well under way when the storm overtook it. As a result he suffered very substantial loss. It has not been an unusual practice of the Public Works department under both governments to come to the assistance of a contractor who while carrying on work under his contract suffered loss under these circumstances. As to the politics of the contractor, I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, if the matter is of any interest, that he was not a supporter of mine nor a worker at all in the last election. He came to me, however, after I was elected, being a resident of my county. I felt that he had a strong claim to be recompensed for his loss, otherwise he would be in very serious financial difficulties. I beg to assure hon. members that the claim is one which merits the favourable consideration of the committee, and that it is not presented on account of political considerations.

Mr. BOYS: My hon. friend was a member of this House from 1911 to 1917. I presume he knew of this claim during that period?

Mr. KYTE: I knew—

Mr. BOYS: Just one minute until I put my question. I would not have anything ruffle the most delightful relations that have existed between my hon. friend and myself during this session. I would ask him whether or not during that period of six years he investigated this claim and pressed it upon the former minister? If he did, was there an engineer's report in favour of it? And if so, why was the claim not recognized during the years I have referred to?

Mr. KYTE: Mr. Morrison did not consult me in regard to his claim; he went to other sources of support. I think he did consult the gentleman who was my political opponent in the election of 1911, but he never came to me or gave me any information in regard to it until the last two years.

Mr. BOYS: Then did my hon. friend himself investigate this claim and ascertain whether or not there had been an engineer's report favourable to it? Or did he simply, as it were, "go it blind," desiring to be kindly when the matter was pressed upon him? If my hon. friend cannot answer that, then I think we must once more turn to the acting minister and ask him for this information. Surely it is not proper for the committee to pass a claim that is absolutely outlawed. I am not suggesting that the government should plead the Statute of Limitations; surely that would never be done to defeat a righteous claim. But the committee is entitled to this information now, and we have not got any from the acting minister or from my hon. friend who is more or less familiar and sympathetic with the matter.

Mr. KYTE: I have no information with regard to any report. All I did was to ascertain the correctness of the claim with respect to the severe storm. I did investigate that and I furnished the information to the department within the last year. I know nothing about any further report.

Mr. HANSON: Mr. Chairman, the minister has enunciated a principle which, to me at all events, is brand new: That when a contractor enters into a contract with the government and assumes the ordinary risk under it, if by any fortuitous circumstance, whether by act of God or anything of that sort, he loses money, he can then come back to the government for compensation, and that it has been the practice of all governments in days gone by to make good such losses. That is not the practice of the government in the other departments. It certainly is not the practice of the Railway department with contractors who have built bridges and substructures of bridges, I can assure the committee. If that be the practice of the Public Works department, there must have been a report adverse to the payment of this claim, and I ask the minister in all fairness to give us the full facts. Or is this simply a compassionate vote? If he will put it on the true ground, and say it is purely a compassionate vote, and that it has merit, I am not going to oppose the vote, but I should like to have it put on a proper basis. Was there a legal liability in the first place—we will waive the Statute of Limitations; I do not think the government ought to plead the statute, although it has been done, and no doubt will have to be done again—or is it a compassionate allowance? Let us have the truth.

Mr. KYTE: Mr. Chairman, if I might be permitted, there was a similar claim made upon the late government in respect to a contract carried on at Chimney Corner in the county of Inverness in 1919 and 1920. The contractor suffered loss, which he alleged was in the neighbourhood of $800. His claim was paid by the late government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, the only information we have as to this claim is that it was taken up and advocated by my hon. friend's political opponent. Evidently he did not have as much influence with the department as my hon. friend has.

Mr. KYTE: My opponent was not elected.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I congratulate my hon. friend upon his influence with the department in getting this old claim resurrected. Mr. Chairman, I again call for the file in this case. I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) what in his view is justification for placing a claim as old as this in the list of supplementary items? Here is a claim that not only was known about when this parliament met, but it had existed since 1912. It is brought down here without a single bit of information; we cannot get the files, we cannot get the reports. What possible justification is there for bringing up a thing of this kind and putting it in the supplementary estimates? Under the circumstances I think my hon. friend ought at least to take the item out of these estimates and have it considered in the main estimates next year.

Mr. FIELDING: I admit I am sometimes suspicious of old claims, almost as suspicious as my hon. friend is when there is no ground for suspicion. But after all, the question is, is the money due? This matter came to my notice only recently; I did make inquiries of the department, and I was satisfied that investigation by the departmental engineers had shown that the money was due. The Minister of Public Works gave the matter much consideration and I had his assurance that his engineers and officers were decidedly of the opinion that the money was justly due, and upon that statement I consented to its going into the estimates.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I press for the production of the files.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not debating that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is there any objection to producing the file? Is there any objection to the committee getting the facts in the matter?

Mr. FIELDING: I would not think so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I ask for the file.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In contracts for the construction of work of this character a clause is inserted which provides that where the work is prevented or interfered with by storm or other action of the elements, and so on, compensation may be had or performance of the contract would be regarded as having been made. I understand that in 1918, the then government had the question before them, in a case I have in mind, as to what should be done in such circumstances. I am instructed that investigation has shown that the parties acted in good faith and that they are entitled to settlement of the claim. I shall be glad, however, to have the file brought down, and to that end I ask that the item stand.

Item stands.

Little Harbour (Lower L'Ardoise)—breakwater extension and repairs, $2,000.

Mr. HANSON: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In Richmond county. The vote will cover the total cost of the necessary work—extension to wharf.

Item agreed to.

Little Harbour—breakwater repairs, $1,500.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is the county of Shelburne and Queens. The amount voted will complete the work. It is a matter of repairs.

Item agreed to.

Livingstone's Cove—wharf repairs, $1,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is in Antigonish and Guysborough. The vote will complete the repairs.

Item agreed to.

Lunenburg—dredging, $40,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think this item and the next—Malagash, dredging, $15,700—might be considered together; the same question is involved that we were dealing with before. Here is a lot of work in connection with which the government dredges might well be employed.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is this an annual expenditure, or is it only for the present year?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Lunenburg is an important fishing town as well as a shipbuilding centre. The docks have to be cleaned out to provide adequate means of docking vessels and handling supplies at all stages of the tide. The channel has to be dredged along the face of the wharf so that approach may be possible at low tide. The estimated cost of the dredging is $103,000. The work will be done by tender and contract. The population of Lunenburg is 3,000. It is in the immediate vicinity of Chester, an important summer resort. I should think that this expenditure would be amply justified. As to the next vote, in regard to Malagash, this point is in the county of Cumberland, where three or four years ago a very valuable and extensive deposit of salt was found. Salt mines have been operated there and large quantities of it are shipped. This dredging has to be done to enable shipments to be carried on by vessels of such size as would transport material of this kind to the larger centres. I may say that information as to the disposition of the government owned dredges may be had by reference to Hansard of the earlier part of the session when the Main Estimates were under consideration. We have no adequate government dredging equipment to carry out the work that is necessary in these particular places. The same thing applies to the vote in connection with Pictou. No dredging of any kind has been done there for twelve years. A great deal of lumber is shipped from that port, and the dredging is necessary in order that the steamers can go in there and take freight. It is only with great difficulty that dredges can be found to do this work. One has been found and has been operating there for some little time. The information with regard to the government dredges my hon. friend will find in Hansard.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The trouble is that we cannot find it so that we can put it to any useful purpose now. I am confident we have not any information in Hansard which will enable us to draw any conclusions in the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am informed by the deputy that the whole programme is there.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As to this particular matter?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Government dredging.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the price per yard for dredging here?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That would be determined by the tenders.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How is the amount of this estimate arrived at?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The estimate of the engineer is 102,000 cubic yards scow measure of mud to be removed at 65 cents a yard; broken rock at $1 per cubic yard; solid rock at $7.

Mr. GUTHRIE: These items have been before the committee for the last couple of hours and there has been a good deal of discussion which certainly would give the committee the impression that we on this side are not in favour of these items, although we have not expressly challenged them by a division of the committee. This is an item, I think, upon which we may well have an expression of the opinion of the committee in regard to the whole of the expenditure contemplated in item No. 504 of the Supplementary Estimates, which amounts in all to $533,884. I am not selecting the item with respect to the dredging to be done at Lunenburg for any particular purpose except that it appears to be one of the larger items. The government contemplates an expenditure of $40,000 this year on work for which they have an estimate showing that a total of $103,000 or thereabouts will be required. There has nothing been offered to the House by the minister or by others to show there is any urgency in the matter, to show that the expenditure must be made at once. In fact the minister only proposes to do a little over one-third of it during the present year. The objection which we take on this side of the House is this: All these expenditures or the greater portion of them should have been in the Main Estimates.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Perhaps my hon. friend does not know that we are simply carrying on the work that was started by the government with which he was connected. Money was voted for this work in 1914-1915, 1915-1916 and in 1916-1917, so my hon. friend might well spare his eloquence.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I am not going to spare my eloquence on that explanation. The contemplated expenditure is $103,000 for the whole work. This year the government proposes to expend $40,000. Now the objection which we in this part of the House take to the whole vote is that in the majority of instances these various items should have appeared in the main estimates, which were considered in this House in February, March and April of this year. But instead of that course the government has taken another. It has come down here in the last days of the session at a time when the opposition in this House has had practically no opportunity to inquire into or investigate the proposed expenditure. Now I submit that that is not good practice. I submit it is not fair to the House or to the country. We are entitled on this side of the House to just as full information in regard to each item as is the government. The government may have the knowledge but we have not and we are practically asked to vote these amounts blindly with very little information and practically no intelligent discussion or criticism. I for one at least, speaking for myself, object to that procedure. I have sat in this House and I have heard my hon. friend the Minister of Finance take a similar objection. In the last two sessions under the late government he complained that in the last hours of the session the government was bringing down heavy votes for the expenditure of large sums of money. I know that I shall be met by someone saying: Oh, your government did the same thing. The acting minister has already interrupted me to say, your government did the same thing. Of course, there is hardly a day passes in this House when that retort is not made from some quarter on the government benches, but it is the principle I am arguing for now, and I say the principle is a bad one. I say it is unsound to bring down in the dying hours of the session proposals for the expenditure of large amounts of money involving millions of dollars, which, if voted at all, is voted upon the scantiest information. There is nothing in the nature of urgency in regard to this particular item. For all we know the expenditure of five or ten thousand dollars this year would be just as well as an expenditure of $40,000. It is a matter of dredging, and I suppose some of it has to be done every year. Why the amount of $40,000 has been fixed upon I do not know, but in order to take the sense of the committee and to test the matter not only in regard to this item but in regard to all the items, because if we do not test it it will be said of us in the future that we did not vote against it—why did we allow it to pass? why didn't you move to reduce it?—if we merely sit here and utter our protests as we have done on item after item that gets us nowhere. Those protests, strong as they may be, are not put down as any opposition to the actual passage of the item, and for all that appears in the records of the House these items pass practically unopposed. Now to test this matter and to take only a single item, but to apply it to all the items comprised in vote No. 504 I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for South Simcoe:

That the item of $40,000 for "Lunenburg—Dredging" be reduced by the sum of $15,000.

That will leave $25,000 for the expenditure this year.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think we can find any fault with the hon. gentleman's making a motion. I am rather glad he couples with it the statement that he intends it to mean the condemnation of all these items for the province of Nova Scotia. Let it go on record.

Mr. FORKE: I would rather the hon. member who has moved this amendment had not made that declaration in regard to all the other items because I feel like supporting his motion, but I do not feel like subscribing to his declaration. I do not want to criticize unduly, but it does seem strange to me that there is no item for dredging at Lunenburg in the main estimates, while here we have an item of $40,000 for that purpose. For this reason I would support the amendment, but not subscribe to the statement in regard to all the other items because I cannot see the room for the same criticism in regard to them. I might say while I am on my feet that I think it would save time if the Acting Minister of Public Works would answer a few stock questions right away when each item is called.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I really do not know why my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) has assumed this sudden attitude of virtue and horror at the government bringing down these supplementary estimates. It is rather a new role for him, though I have noticed a disposition along that line lately on his part. But my hon. friend is not logical in this matter, and he knows it. There can be no suggestion of impropriety about this proposal for dredging at Lunenburg. My hon. friend has sat in this House long enough, and I sat with him long enough to know that this attitude of virtue on his part is largely assumed. It is really not sincere. My hon. friend will not venture to lay down the principle or attempt with any sincerity to argue that there can be any reasonable objection to this dredging proposal at Lunenburg. That port is a little Gloucester in Canada, and there is probably more business carried on there in connection with fishing than in any three or four other places in Canada. There are piers and business places along the waterfront and this dredging work which was initiated by my hon. friend's friends and carried out by them on a regular programme—a contract was let for the dredging, and in one year the work was done by government dredges—is absolutely necessary. Does my hon. friend mean to say that this dredging should not be done? What does he mean by this fantastic theory that this should have been in the Main Estimates? My hon. friend knows that that is not a practical proposal. He is not taking a sincere stand, and why he assumes this attitude I do not know. I think he ought to meet the issue squarely and say that there should be no dredging and repairs to public works in Nova Scotia. If he is speaking for his party let us know it.

Mr. BOYS: As the seconder of the motion I say that there is no such suggestion. There is not the slightest ground for the Acting Minister of Public Works throwing out such a thought. Many items have already been passed. We are entitled to information, and we are not getting it as fully as we should.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What do you want?

Mr. BOYS: I have asked for some information and it has been promised. The minister challenges me as if I had asked for something that I had got. The minister has promised me the information and I suppose I shall get it to-morrow. With respect to these items that are being submitted to the committee, we say that many of them should have appeared in the Main Estimates, and I have not heard anything from the minister which would indicate that this item in particular should not have been in the Main Estimates. He justifies it on the ground that it was commenced years and years ago. If that be the case there is every reason why the government should have known about this in January or February and submitted it earlier. No reason has been given why it was not submitted. All this amendment does is to say that this item should be reduced by $15,000. It does not in any way condemn all the works in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. ROSS (Simcoe): When are the main estimates compiled? As I understand it they are compiled about November of the year before. I am a little interested in this matter because in the Ontario estimates there is an item for dredging in Collingwood harbour. That is not new work; it is unfinished work which has been laid over since 1917. However, it is absolutely needed in the interest of navigation in Collingwood harbour where grain is brought down by large boats from the head of the lakes to the elevators. I do not feel that I can support the amendment because the estimate for this work appears in the supplementary estimates. That is because we did not know that the main estimates were made up; we did not know anything about it at that time. Even so I shall be prepared to defend the item when the proper time comes.

Mr. GRAHAM: May I say a word. My hon. friend the member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) says this is to be a reduction. Well, it might apply to the whole list of items, including those in Ontario, Quebec and everywhere else. It will not do to single out one province and make all the reductions there. This fact should be remembered when we come to deal with the vote of $600,000 for the continuation of the work in Toronto harbour.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Cut it out.

Mr. GRAHAM: In that case might we not expect the same principle to be applied?

Mr. RYCKMAN: Is not that appropriation being made in pursuance of an agreement. This government has agreed to expend that amount of money and we expect it to implement its promise.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not arguing against the expenditure I am just indicating how the argument of my hon. friends might be applied. It is just as well that we should know where we are heading. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. Ross) made a very good point. Every member of the preceding government knows that the estimates are made up in the autumn, and information continues to come in with respect to them month after month in the manner which has been described. If we are going to say that supplementary estimates must be brought in at a certain date after the opening of parliament let us establish that principle some day next session, so that members of parliament will be made aware of the fact and will have ample notice of it. But to begin to establish that principle now, to re-organize the whole system that has prevailed ever since I have been a member of parliament, is something that cannot be done. This practice has been in vogue ever since I can remember. I say frankly that my office has frequently been filled by members of parliament from both sides ever since the session opened. The majority of them do not come to Ottawa until their sessional duties demand their presence. Have we not right to listen to representations from any member of the House on the subject of estimates? The main estimates are made up and closed, as a rule, before any member comes here and information which is needed from members as to any particular item cannot be collected until the House meets. Practically every government that has ever been in power in Canada has recognized that fact. Have not hon. members the right to come and discuss these matters with the minister? I am free to say that I am glad to see members on either side of the House. I do not object to meeting them and I think none of them object to coming to see me about any of these matters relating to my department. When in opposition I have sat up in this House until very late in order to put through estimates at the end of the session. I do not think my hon. friend from South Wellington stayed to help me; he went home and did not remain the greater part of the night. With three or four Liberal colleagues I have remained until four or five o'clock in the morning when my Conservative friends were putting their estimates through, and prorogation took place the next evening.

Mr. BELAND: No, on the same day.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. Circumstances sometimes arise when you have to do these things. The hon. member for South Wellington at first said he was laying down a principle, but he took that back. He said he did not take any exception to the principle of voting the estimates but only to the amount. It is not a principle then which is involved but only an amount. The question here is should we spend $25,000 or $40,000. That is not a statement of a principle. If the House wished to establish a principle the proper thing to do would be to have a discussion early next session, as to whether the Supplementary Estimates should be brought in late except under the most extraordinary circumstances. Let the question be discussed then and settled so that the members will all know there will not be any Supplementary Estimates brought down after a certain date. We cannot get away by a vote of this kind from the principle and practice that has been followed by every government ever since there has been a parliament in Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that my hon. friend is quite fair in his statement of the position in this case. There is no objection whatever to Supplementary Estimates. We have to have Supplementary Estimates, there is no question about that. He is also not quite fair when he says that the estimates are finished the autumn before. Why, the Estimates this year were not finished until after the return of the Minister of Finance from overseas.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend knows that every department had its Main Estimates well advanced, if not actually completed, before the new government came into power.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It seems to me my hon. friend did not ask a question, he made a statement.

Mr. GRAHAM: I apologize.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Everyone who has been in a government knows that the estimates have to be got out in time and that parliament generally meets before they are printed. This very year parliament was in session and the Speech from the Throne was being discussed before the estimates were printed. You also have to have Supplementary Estimates, there is no question about that either. Nor is there any doubt that the ministers have to meet members of parliament. The only thing we want to do is to find out what the view of the House is on this question. That is, admitting the necessity, as we do, of these Supplementary Estimates, and admitting the necessity of a lot of the things we have heard, the question is whether the Supplementary Estimates are to be brought in at a time which will allow discussion and investigation or not. That is all we are trying to establish.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I said before this House will remain in session for another week and discuss these estimates if any single member desires it and we will not sit later than midnight. There will be ample time afforded for discussing these items if it is desired.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know about that at all. My right hon. friend knows very well that arrangements have been made for members to leave.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No arrangements have been made.

Mr. BELAND: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I cannot resist my hon. friend's smiling countenance.

Mr. BELAND: What has been the custom in the past in dealing with Supplementary Estimates? How many days before prorogation have they been discussed?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Ah, I am ready to remember some of the admonitions of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and one in particular about "Those Bourbons that never forget and never learn."

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend forgets but he does not learn.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are learning.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am going to teach you something else.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not saying it was not done in the past. Of course it was. I do not know whether we did it in the past when there was such a rush of legislation as we have had in the last two or three days. But is it the idea of the House that this is the proper thing to do? Do not run away with the thought that the Minister of Railways, has propounded, that we are against supplementary estimates. We know that we have to have them, but we are of the view that they should be brought down in time, not only for discussion but for full investigation. So far as this vote is concerned, it is merely to register what the feeling of the House is upon the question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will take the opportunity of presenting Revised Hansard of March 9, 1923, page 1009, where the minister gave in detail the work of the government dredges for the coming year, and dealt with the whole matter. With that information before the House, which my hon. friend for North Wellington could very well have got, if he had had any curiosity on the subject, by sending for Hansard, I should like to know what he means by the motion. Are we going to have a motion to reduce an estimate by $15,000 because, forsooth, the estimates should have been brought down sooner? What possible logic is there in a request to reduce the vote by $15,000, because he thinks the estimates should have been brought down sooner? The reason why the item was not brought down in the main estimates was because the programme of the government dredges for the year had to be made up, and it was not known during the winter months whether or not Lunenburg could be included in that programme?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister can hardly say that, when he gives me the whole programme back in March.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Of course, I can. This motion is perfectly absurd.

Mr. GARDINER: I have listened with a great deal of interest to this little squabble which has been going on all evening. I am not particularly interested in the controversy between the two parties in the House, but I am particularly interested in the question as to whether this $40,000 is actually required or not. The minister has not given the House the information as to this particular vote, that he should give if he expects the vote to go through. If he does not, I will consider that the vote is not necessary.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): If the hon. member will tell me what information he wants, I will give it. I have mentioned the quantities of material and have told hon. members the kind of place Lunenburg is, the necessity for the work and the estimated cost. If he wants to know anything more I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. GARDINER: Any information the acting minister has given has been more or less in a conversational tone, with his friends on the opposite side. We have heard nothing at all of the discussion which has been proceeding all evening, and if the minister does not wish to give us the information we ask for, I am going to vote against the amendment.

The committee divided on the amendment (Mr. Guthrie) which was negatived. Yeas, 27; Nays, 91.

Item agreed to.

Malagash—dredging, $15,700.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister seriously suggest that any portion of the product of the salt or potash works at Malagash will be taken out by steamer?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend has a fashion of uttering innuendos. I know that some of the most important men in my county are interested in this matter and some friends of the hon. member. I have a letter on the subject from Messrs. Chambers and MacKay, miners and manufacturers of Malagash salt, asking for the completion of dredging, to permit steamer shipments from the Malagash salt mines, and stating further:

When the dredging is completed within the areas shown to the proposed depth of 15 feet at low water, and a cut provided so that a 250 foot steamer can move back and forth to load all hatches under a conveyor that we will require to build from the shore to the wharf head, which provision your engineers have in mind, we will be able then not only to load the craft supplying the fishing trade, but also to load lake steamers and thus be able to go after the general demand and the chemical and pulp requirements for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

And so they go on. The nature of the deposit there is unquestioned.

Mr. HANSON: No doubt about that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend lives so close to Nova Scotia that he ought to know what is going on. The estimated cost is the amount of the vote. My memorandum of the proposed works reads:

To increase the area of the basin to a length of 250 feet, and width of 400 feet, and provide a depth of 15 feet at low water.

It is recommended by the engineer and there is no question about it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that the complete estimate?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Dredging.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it getting down to a new basis, or is it just maintaining the present channel?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): New requirements.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is it new work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I read the letter from Messrs. Chambers and MacKay about the steamers.

Item agreed to.

Margaree harbour—repairs to harbour works, $9,700.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is the estimated cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Date of report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Requested by engineer Dodwell in estimates of 1923-24.

Item agreed to.

Margaretville—repairs to breakwater, $2,400.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in the county of Annapolis, and this will complete the work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the report in that case?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The report is from the district engineer in his estimates for 1923-24.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is the general report making up the requirements for the year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No apparent reason why that was not in the Main Estimates.

Item agreed to.

Meteghan—wharf extension, $7,600.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is in the counties of Yarmouth and Clare.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the minister give the explanation in a little louder voice?

The CHAIRMAN: I would like members of the committee to desist from conversation. There are several members of the committee, in different groups, discussing various matters, making it absolutely impossible sometimes for the Chair to hear the questions put or the minister's response. I would urge that conversation be not continued. It makes it very difficult for us to hear.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This proposal is for the extension of a wharf in the village of Meteghan in the county of Clare. It is to construct a cribwork extension 60 feet long, 28 feet high, to the existing wharf. The estimated cost is the amount contained in the vote and should complete the work.

Mr. ARTHURS: What is the population?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My information is that there is a population of 1,000. I know the district surrounding it is a very progressive part of the county of Clare and Yarmouth.

Item agreed to.

New Harris—wharf, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this a repair again?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is to construct a block and span wharf with creosoted timber substructure extending to 12 feet at low water. The estimated cost is $5,000. It is to enable the steamer "Marion" which passes here daily during the season to call with freight and passengers. The nearest wharf is 6 miles distant, and the roads around are on the side of a steep mountain and are at times impassable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not a repair?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. BOYS: Is it inland?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, on the shore.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this the final amount?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is there to show the necessity of a new wharf there?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The steamer "Marion" which is the steamer which travels in that vicinity, comes in there. The engineer's report is as follows:

The steamer plying between Sydney and Whycocomagh goes by this settlement during open navigation three days a week, going up to Whycocomagh and three days a week coming down. There are also various other boats, some of them subsidized, passing through the Bras d'Or lakes, and they could call at some suitable point at this district if there was a wharf, but there being none, the people in this section of country have either to travel to New Campbellton or to Big Harbour in order to take advantage of the boats going through the lakes.

Item agreed to.

Nyanza wharf repairs, $1,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is in North Cape Breton.

Item agreed to.

North Ingonish (McLeod's)—reconstruction of breakwater and dredging, $34,700.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Will the minister give us some general information in regard to this item which is a pretty large one?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is to reconstruct the destroyed portion of the breakwater on a length of 277 feet, width 22 to 24 feet and height 12 feet. Creosoted timber to be used to 3 feet above low water level, and native timber above this level. It is also to construct a concrete retaining wall 90 feet long, 2 feet wide at top and 5 feet wide at the bottom. There is dredging to be done at the outer end of the breakwater involving the removal of 10,500 cubic yards of sand and gravel and the removal of 5,000 cubic yards of sand and ballast from the inside of the breakwater where it has been carried from the destroyed section of the dock. The estimated cost is $34,625, or about the amount of the vote.

This work was seriously damaged some years ago, and at present the superstructure of the outer 277 feet is completely destroyed. The inner portion of the breakwater which has not been wrecked, is to be protected by a concrete wall, to prevent it from being carried away. For the safety of the structure, it is necessary that the whole of this work be done. There are 105 boats that fish from this harbour, and the value of fish landed annually is approximately $52,000. There was an appropriation voted on this wharf in 1920. Tenders were called for the work, but a contract was not awarded.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is the fishing trade of $52,000 all the trade that is done at this point, or are there other trades?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): North Ingonish is one of the famous spots in Cape Breton county. In addition to its being a fishing centre, for the fishing between Cape Smoky and Cape North, it is also the centre of a very large lumber business. I think from North Ingonish shipments of pulp are being made, and a very large business is being carried from there into the centre of the county by the Oxford Paper Company.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Is there any railroad to that point?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

North Sydney—breakwater repairs, $3,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is this county?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in North Cape Breton. It is right near the town.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What does the report say on this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is the breakwater which protects the harbour of North Sydney which was damaged by the storm of last year.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How is this $3,000 worth of work proposed to be done?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): By tender and contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What are the present rules of tender and contract? I forget them. How long has the advertising to continue?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am told there is no change since my hon. friend's time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I said that I had forgotten. I am asking for information.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Surely not.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Surely yes. What are the rules as to advertising for tenders?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): About three weeks in the newspapers in the province where the work is to be carried on.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In this particular case, is there any restriction as to plant or anything else?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The amount is not very great. It is only to get the 16,000 cubic feet of native timber, and place it in position. That is practically all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is a pretty simple matter.

Mr. GOULD: As regards the various items, what supervision does the department take over the completed work to see that the work is built to specification?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): An engineer inspects every work to see that the specifications are lived up to.

Item agreed to.

Parrsboro—repairs to breakwater and shed on wharf, $1,350.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is in the county of Cumberland.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the report there?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): May 28, 1923.

Item agreed to.

Pictou Light Beach—repairs and reconstruction of protection work, $1,200.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is to protect a sand beach at the end of which a lighthouse stands. There have been encroachments by the sea, and if this is not protected, the whole lighthouse might be cut out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose this is in the county of Pictou?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. GOULD: This item reads: "Reconstruction of protection work." One might infer from that that some neglect of work had happened in the past.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No. In many cases in the Maritime provinces at entrances to our harbours, sand bars run out. The whirling of the sand by the surrounding waters of the ocean for years, causes sand to accumulate. At the mouth of Halifax harbour, which is one of the greatest harbours in the country, a sand bar runs out, and at the end of the sand bar a lighthouse is erected. The same is true at Pictou and Sydney harbours. In order to preserve the sand bar so that it will not be destroyed by storms cutting it completely, works have been erected continually for years. As the wood is destroyed by the teredo nivalis it has to be renewed, otherwise the lighthouse would be lost and there would be no protection to the mariners. The life of these protected works is somewhere between eight and nine years. If the wood is not creosoted the works will not last long.

Item agreed to.

Piper's cove—wharf repairs, $1,100.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): North Cape Breton county.

Item agreed to.

Point Aconi—breakwater, $10,000.

Mr. GOULD: What will this be constructed of?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Creosoted timber will have to be used in order to prevent destruction by the worm or teredo as it is called. This breakwater will cost $25,000 according to the estimate. It is recommended by Mr. Dodwell, the district engineer. It is situated between the entrance to great and little Bras d'or channel. The work is necessary for the protection of the coast as well as for the fishing and farming population. The breakwater is 492 feet long.

Mr. GOULD: What is the total cubic feet of the completed work?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): 108,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose we cannot work that in as a repair, anyway?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Item agreed to.

Port Beckerton—wharf repairs, $2,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Antigonish and Guysborough county. It is the estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Port Greville—further amount required for breakwater repairs and harbour improvements, $18,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in the county of Cumberland, and the estimated cost of the work is the amount of the vote. It consists of repairs to the breakwater and wharf to overcome damage occasioned by storms.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much is repair and how much harbour improvement?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Repairs to breakwater, $12,000, wharf $3,000, beach protection, $3,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is all repairs. This is wrongly worded.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. GOULD: What is the estimated price per thousand feet on the timber?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Estimated by the cubic foot, creosoted timber 35 cents, native timber 15 cents.

Item agreed to.

Portuguese cove—breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Halifax county. The repairs comprise construction of cribwork breakwater. This is one of the most exposed locations on the Atlantic coast where supplies for the wireless station at Camperdown are landed. It is one of the best known fishing villages on the coast.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I daresay, but most of the heavy items are not repairs at all, they are new works.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I was not quite accurate. District Engineer Dodwell reports that the old work was so badly damaged by the storm in 1919 that it is not considered advisable to attempt to repair it, as the money expended would exceed the cost of a new breakwater.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is in substitution?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Pictou—dredging, $15,200.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in Pictou county and is to provide for coal and lumber shipping.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the dredging to be done in the harbour at Pictou?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Pembroke—wharf extension, $3,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Hants county. This is an extension of the existing wharf. The estimated cost is the amount of the vote.

Item agreed to.

Port Lorne—breakwater extension, $9,600.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is the estimated cost. Digby and Annapolis county.

Item agreed to.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Riverport—revetment wall for dredged soil, $20,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is to provide towards construction of retaining wall barriers to retard the flowing of the material back into the channel which is being dredged near the mouth of the Lahave river. The estimate for 1922-23 is $12,000 to provide for construction of a retaining barrier between Parks island and the mainland. The material dredged last season was dumped behind this barrier, which worked successfully. The district engineer proposes to raise the height of the barrier at a cost of $14,000 To construct the barrier between the north end of Parks island and the mainland will cost $6,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: Is the dredging being done by the government dredge?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. GOULD: The Atlantic ocean being on the eastern side and the bay of Fundy on the western side of Nova Scotia, on which side does the minister find it most expensive to keep the various wharves and breakwaters in repair?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It depends whether native wood be found in the vicinity of the work to be constructed. Where the material has to be carried a long distance, of course the cost is increased.

Mr. GOULD: Native wood is used?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): As well as creosoted.

Item agreed to.

Round Hill—wharf repairs, $1,700.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Digby and Annapolis county. Estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Sanford—retaining wall, $1,800.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Is that used for navigation too?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes. It is in Yarmouth county. Full estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Scott's bay—rebuilding part of north breakwater, $8,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): King's county. Full estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Scotch Cove (White Point)—breakwater repairs, $2,600.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Estimated cost. North Cape Breton county.

Item agreed to.

Shad bay—wharf repairs, $1,500.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Halifax county. Estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Sheet Harbour West—rebuilding wharf, $5,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Halifax county. Full estimated cost.

Item agreed to.

Shelburne—wharf repairs, $4,500.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): County, Shelburne and Queen's. Estimated cost to renew stringers, guard rails and planking in the wharf.

Item agreed to.

Smith's cove—breakwater extension and beach protection, $2,400.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: What is this beach protection?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is at Smith's cove in the county of Inverness. The amount to be expended is the estimated cost.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Is that to protect the village? ?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes

Item agreed to.

Sonora—purchase of wharf and rebuilding same, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What county is this in?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Antigonish.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is the wharf repurchased from, and why?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This amount is to purchase the McCutcheon wharf at Sonora. The district engineer reports that the owners of the wharf asked $5,000 for it, but as the wharf is in a dilapidated condition they considered the price too high and recommended that the owners be offered $3,500, which is their own price less the cost of rehabilitation. The owners are reported to have spent $5,000 to $7,000 in repairs during the last three years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the idea of purchasing this wharf? Apparently you are purchasing a liability.

Mr. McISAAC: This is an important fishing district, and the fishermen there have petitioned for a wharf. This wharf at Sonora was owned by McCutcheon Brothers who were in business some years ago, but they went out of business lately and are not going to continue to keep the wharf in repair. When the engineers were sent down to report on the matter they examined several localities in search of a suitable place for a wharf, and they found that it would be cheaper and in the public interest to buy this wharf rather than build a new one. The owners asked $5,000 for it, but the engineers offered only $3,500, and with an additional $1,500 the wharf can be made as good as new. It is necessary to have a wharf in that locality, because the needs of a large and important fishing community will thereby be served.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where do the boats go now?

Mr. McISAAC: From there, but they have to pull their boats up on the shore and perhaps get them smashed to pieces, as frequently happens in other places.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What are the dimensions of this wharf?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) The wharf is 150 feet long and 36 feet wide. The outer end is on the river channel and is 20.5 feet high along the outer face, the shoreward 120 feet of its length averaging 6.5 feet in height.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is this wharf in a private water lot, or in open water, Crown property?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It would be private property under our law.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then what about the approach? Is that included in the purchase?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) What has been obtained is not only the wharf but the approach to the main highway.

Item agreed to.

South lake—breakwater extension, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Antigonish. It is for extension and repairs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much for extension and how much for repairs?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The estimated cost of 48,600 cubic feet of cribwork at 20 cents is $9,400. The district engineer reports that the channel has shoaled so that it is of little service. A wing addition to the south breakwater is proposed to narrow the channel so as to create scour and make it navigable for small boats.

Item agreed to.

Ship harbour—wharf repairs, $4,200.

Mr. GOULD: I suggest that as Nova Scotia owns her own natural resources she might at least be called upon to build the approaches to these various wharves.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I did not say we were going to build the approaches to the wharves. The reference in the last item was to the narrowing of the channel so as to make it navigable for small boats. Ship Harbour is in Halifax county. The estimated cost is the amount of the vote. It is to construct a pilework wharf 80 feet long and 20 feet wide with an ell 20 feet by 30 feet. The purpose is to provide shipping accommodations for the residents of Ship Harbour and the surrounding districts by shortening the haul from the mills to the now only available wharf by a distance of about 4½ miles, over a very hilly road. It is a farming and fishing district.

Item agreed to.

Summerville—wharf repairs, $5,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is in Hants county. It is for repairs to wharf, consisting of the building of the outer fifty feet destroyed by ice in April, 1923.

Item agreed to.

Windsor—wharf, $22,000.

Mr. GOULD: The good things of life do not appear to be very evenly distributed. There seems to be too much salt water down in the Maritime provinces, and too many bluenoses.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Too few, the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. GOULD: The capital expenditures are not, in my estimation, exactly what they should be.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of repair work is this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The conditions along the shore of Hants county are very difficult to appreciate. The tide in the Bay of Fundy rises and falls about sixty feet, a condition which does not prevail in any other part of the country. The result is that the maintenance of wharves and approaches is very difficult indeed, because when the tide is out there may be nothing there but the bottom of the bay. The wharves can only be approached at high tide. This extension work is to consist of a public wharf along the water front in a westerly direction from the railroad wharf. The only wharf owned by the Public Works department is a small pier made of cribwork having a 70 foot frontage, which is inadequate for the shipping to and from this port. There are very large shipments of gypsum and lumber made from Windsor. There is a tremendous industry carried on there by the King Company who carry gypsum from Windsor to Bayonne, New Jersey. Hants county is also one of our greatest lumbering counties. There have been grave complaints about the lack of wharf accommodation at this place for a long time. There were four million feet of lumber shipped from there last fall and the possibilities of greater shipments and greater trade are very bright. Favourable reports are made on the proposal by the engineer for the department and by everyone who has investigated the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it the local member has not very much objection.

Mr. MARTELL: Hants county is all right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And its member.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Prince Edward Island—Beach Point—wharf, $7,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of repairs are to be done at Beach wharf?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is to construct a cribwork wharf 238 feet long and from 20 to 30 feet wide. The estimated cost is $7,500. The only wharf accommodation in this vicinity is a small privately owned structure known as Prowse and Sons' wharf, located at the extreme outer end of Old Store Point immediately at the harbour's entrance, the road approach to which is over a long sand beach very unsuitable for heavy traffic, and further, drifting sand frequently shoals up the water in front of this wharf to such an extent that at times it becomes entirely useless for shipping purposes.

The residents of Beach Point and vicinity, numbering several hundred, who have surplus farm produce to ship each season estimated in value at $50,000, and also desire to import their coal, and so forth, by water, therefore, request that suitable accommodation be provided for this business as well as the fishing industry, by constructing a small wharf or landing from the shore, near Irving's Lane, to keep water in the basin recently dredged.

There are 50 to 60 fishermen at this place whose season's catch of lobster, cod and other fish is estimated at from $30,000 to $40,000 annually.

Georgetown—to take over and repair C.N.R. wharf, $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the justification for taking over the Canadian National wharf at Georgetown? Is this another scheme to relieve the railway of its ordinary obligations?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I can give some explanation of this matter having been in Georgetown a year or so ago. Formerly Georgetown was the port in Price Edward Island through which communication was maintained in winter between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. A very large expenditure involving a very great annual loss was begun in 1912 by the construction of the works at Cape Borden and Cape Tormentine and the standard gauging of the railway in Prince Edward Island, and the maintaining of the very expensive boats for carrying the trains over. This wharf at Georgetown was the only wharf available for the people of the town for carrying on their business. It had been built by the railway and was used by the steamers in connection with the town's export business. When the change came in regard to the connections with the mainland and the boats ran no more to Georgetown in winter, the railway simply let the wharf go into absolute decay. It spent no money on it and in consequence the business people of the town had no means by which they could ship by water. The railway had no further interest in it on account of the change in the management. That I think is the situation and the warrant for this vote.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was the wharf originally put up?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It was constructed in 1905, creosoted piling being used, and it is assumed that such portion is still in serviceable condition. Here is a letter from Sir Henry Thornton with reference to the wharf:

I am in hopes that the Public Works department will see their way clear to take this wharf and shed over, because so far as the railway is concerned, there is practically no business handled over the wharf and there is no justification for the company being called upon to stand the expense necessary to repair the dock. We would be willing to turn the wharf and shed over to the Public Works department on a reasonable valuation, and it really seems to me a public work that should be looked after by that department of the government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is being paid to the system for it? It seems to me the Public Works department is taking over a liability. I think they should be paid by the railway for taking it over instead of paying the railway.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is expected by the department that they will be able to get control of the wharf without paying anything to the railway. Sir Henry Thornton states that it is of no further use to the railway.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is taking over a responsibility, it seems to me. What about this $20,000? How is that divided?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The estimated cost is as follows: Renewal of approach, $10,000; renewal of dock on west side, $9,000; renewal of dock on east side, say $1,000; making a total of $20,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That would put it in good shape, would it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—New Brunswick—Negro Point—breakwater extension, $8,000.

Mr. BAXTER: I am not complaining at all but I just wanted to ask the minister a question in regard to the Negro Point breakwater extension. We are very glad to have this amount voted, but I think the estimate was considerably over a million dollars for the whole work and with this $100,000 very little can be done. There would be some danger in the winter season of possible dislocation of what might be done with only $100,000. Since we are having supplementaries, would it not be possible to raise this to at least one-fourth of the amount that will be required and make a more substantial commencement this season?

Mr. ROBB: How much would the hon. member suggest?

Mr. BAXTER: I suggest putting $250,000 in the estimates.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): As my hon. friend knows these are the last estimates that are coming down this session, and I would not like to take the responsibility in the absence of the regular minister of increasing this amount, although I am sure he sympathizes with my hon. friend's ambitions.

Mr. BAXTER; Just change the figure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we might as well take all the votes in bulk unless hon. gentlemen have objections. We have tried to get information item by item on the first province that was called and we know no more about the necessities of any single vote than if we had not asked a question.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Do not say that after my talking all night.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Quebec—Rimouski—in full and final settlement of claim of Messrs. Raymond and Talbot in connection with their contract for harbour improvements, $51,892.85.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We should have a little information about this item.

Mr. BAXTER: While the minister is getting the information asked for I should like to ask him if the statement in the St. John papers that the department intends to close the gap at Negro Point by a solid structure is correct? I also notice in the press that there is a possibility of using some system of compressed air that would be available during storms?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am informed the matter is now being investigated and the probabilities point to the course my hon. friend has spoken of being adopted.

Now as to the Raymond-Talbot contract: This contract was entered into on March 21, 1914, with Messrs. Raymond and Talbot, and it was to have been completed in 1916. One of the stipulations of the contract was that it was to have been completed within two years of its being signed. On April 18th, 1914, the contractors were ordered to go on with the work. During the summer of 1914 the war broke out. Early in 1915 the contractors were advised not to go on with the work until further orders. In 1915 the government did not ask parliament for a vote for this work. In 1916 the contractors were to go on with it. They did so during the seasons of 1916-17 but claimed that on account of the great increase in the cost of labour and materials due to the war, and for other reasons, they had incurred certain losses. By authority of an order in council passed on the 4th November, 1918, a copy of which I will send to my hon. friend, it was provided that the department should take over the contractor's plant at actual cost less depreciation, and that the chief engineer should make a careful investigation and report as to the fairest and most equitable final settlement with the contractors after careful consideration of their claim for compensation in connection with alleged losses and reasons for the same.

[Mr. Baxter.]

The chief engineer went fully into the matter and came to the conclusion to recommend a payment of $48,384 with interest. He did this in pursuance of the terms of an order in council passed in 1918.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister has given us information from the engineer's report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I notice in vote No. 507 which we are now considering this item:

Ste Petronille (Island of Orleans)—to purchase and repair wharf, $37,100.

I should like to know whether this wharf has been purchased and from whom?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This amount of $37,100 is required to purchase or expropriate from La Cie Maritime & Industrielle de Lévis its timber wharf as Ste. Pétronille. The wharf is at the south-western end of the island in the most suitable place, away from bad currents and sheltered against prevailing winds. The district engineer's valuation of the wharf is $21,819; his valuation of the land $3,000; and the estimated cost of repairs required $12,250.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Would the minister tell us how many wharves there are already on the island?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Perhaps I would be permitted to answer the question. There are six wharves on the island but this one affords the most convenient outlet. The wharf is in very bad condition. It is owned by La Compagnie Maritime Industrielle de Lévis. The whole population of the island, which consists of six very important parishes, has united in asking the government to purchase this wharf and put it in good condition so that it might be available for the use of any one.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Ontario, $564,171.

Mr. MEWBURN: Now that we are taking up the items for Ontario I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a remark he made earlier in the evening. I think I am correct in attributing to him the statement that where any government wharves were carrying on a proper commercial business it would be a very fair subject for criticism if attention was not given to them. I regret the Minister of Railways is not in his seat; I should like him to have heard the statement I am about to make. For the last two years representations have been made to the government regarding the piers at Port Maitland on Lake Erie. I may say this is not in my constituency so I am not personally interested in it. The parties who were making the representations for the repairing of this wharf were referred from the Public Works department to the Department of Railways, both departments refusing to take charge of the "baby." However, this year the latter department admitted they were responsible for it and it was represented that some provision would be made in the Supplementary Estimates. I may say this pier or wharf at Port Maitland is badly in need of repair. Some 250 or 300 feet of the east pier have been washed away, seriously menacing the safety of the channel and the west pier. A great deal of expense has been incurred by the government in dredging this channel and the Toronto, Hamilton and Buffalo Railway Company have been running for some time a car ferry across lake Erie. Last year they carried 5,462 loaded cars representing 244,296 tons, which tonnage would have been very much higher had it not been for the coal strike. The commodities carried on that ferry north bound consisted of coal, coke, steel, sand and brick, stone, chemicals, oil, meat and miscellaneous. South bound the commodities consisted of machinery and implements, foods, carbide and ore, scrap iron, paper, pulp, lumber, asbestos and chemicals. The wharf is in such a dangerous condition that it is a menace to the other pier there and it will only be a very short time before the government will have to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars whereas a moderate expenditure at this time would effect a large saving. I should like to have some explanation from the government as to why an important work of this nature should have been ignored, whereas sums amounting to $100,000 are being spent elsewhere.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The wharf or pier to which my hon. friend refers is under the control of the Railway department. I am sorry the minister is not in the chamber at present, but I will be very glad to direct his attention to the matter.

Jackson's Point—to purchase and reconstruct wharf, $8,000.

Mr. HARRIS: Will the minister be good enough to tell us what amount of this item is required for the purchase and what portion for reconstruction—not necessaarily whose riding it is in.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The object of this vote is to purchase or expropriate from Mr. J. M. McDonald a timber cribwork wharf 159 feet long by 36 feet wide, including a warehouse and right of way thereto, and to reconstruct the wharf superstructure. The district engineer's estimate of the value of the wharf and right of way is $6,000, and to reconstruct the superstructure will cost $2,000, making a total amount of $8,000. The request for this work to be done came from Mr. A. B. Anderson, secretary, Sutton and Jackson's Point Board of Trade, Sutton West, Ont., in which he forwards a petition with reference to the harbour and wharf at Jackson's Point, together with letters from Mr. T. L. Church, M.P., Mr. T. Herbert Lennox, K.C., M.P.P., and a letter and blueprints from Mr. J. M. McDonald the present owner of the property.

Mr. HARRIS: How much was paid for it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Nothing has been paid.

Mr. HARRIS: How much is going to be paid?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is estimated the value of the wharf is $6,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think in looking over the Ontario vote we will not be able to get rid of it very quickly. I suggest that we let it stand and go on with the next.

Item stands.

Harbours and rivers—Manitoba, $71,650.

Mr. CALDWELL: Evidently there are not many docks in Manitoba, but there seem to be some sewers. What is meant by this?

Item agreed to.

Mr. CALDWELL: I asked the question, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: It was explained several times. Surely the hon. member heard the explanation.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Saskatchewan and Alberta, $13,000.

Mr. GOULD: Pretty small vote.

Item agreed to.

Public Works—Chargeable to Income—Roads and Bridges:

Grand Etang—Construction of bridge	$13,200 00
International bridge over river St. John between Edmundston, N.B., and Fort Kent, Me., the state of Maine to provide $15,000, county of Aroostook $10,000, and town of Fort Kent $5,000—revote of lapsed amount	29,000 00
Interprovincial bridge over the Ottawa river at Hawkesbury, the Ontario and Quebec governments to each contribute one-third of the cost	40,000 00

Interprovincial bridge over Ottawa river between Ottawa and Hull—paving of approach 5,000 00

Mr. FIELDING: There is an error in this item. Strike out the word "Edmundston" and insert "Clair."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the interprovincial bridge over the Ottawa river at Hawkesbury? When was the agreement arrived at? Is that a new matter or one of the old things?

Mr. MACDONALD: Arrangement was made, as indicated in the vote, between the Ontario and Quebec governments for the construction of an interprovincial bridge across the river between Hawkesbury and Grenville, the Ontario and Quebec governments each to contribute one-third of the cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the agreement?

Mr. MACDONALD: There is no actual agreement in writing between the parties. This vote is proposed to be taken, so that if an agreement is arrived at between the parties it will be available for the construction of the bridge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What authority is going to build the bridge?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The federal government.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone lines—Nova Scotia, $9,600.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: These telegraph items are practically all the same?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The House could get no explanation at the present time that would be any good, but some of the items look rather serious. There is one of $20,000. Some time ago the question of doing away with all these poles that are a constant source of expense was under consideration. I know that the late government determined to get rid of the constant expense and to put in wireless. Has that matter been proceeded with? We are going on spending a lot more money, and we are going to lose it. It is only a question of time till the change is made.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think that applies principally to the northern line in British Columbia running through to the Yukon. That line has been practically abandoned. Annually, it appears to have cost a good deal of money. These small lines are not in that particular locality but in the general estimates there are considerable amounts for these particular lines. There was also a sum voted for the construction of wireless equipment at Dawson City. We are now asking for a further amount of $19,000 to connect with Dawson.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are spending money on these lines now. Here is $45,000 for a service which ought to be performed by wireless. What is the good of going on with wireless while maintaining all these other lines?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That will not be done. This money will not all be spent—that is not for the whole line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is for the whole line in the supplementaries.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had a number of these lines at one time, and got rid of them. We made a lot of money by disposing of them for nothing. The provinces turned them into telephone lines. This was done in Alberta and Saskatchewan. It is a source of expense to the government and they are getting nothing out of it. We are spending money looking after the old lines. I hope before another year we will have a definite plan.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Some of the work comes under the Department of Public Works, but I understand there will be no overlapping. In British Columbia there appears to be a considerable number of these lines still remaining.

Item agreed to.

Dredging—Maritime provinces, further amount required. $25,000.

Dredging—Ontario and Quebec, further amount required, $50,000.

Dredging—British Columbia, further amount required, $16,000.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Would the minister give us some information in regard to this dredging item? The Main Estimates contain item No. 164 for dredging in the Maritime provinces, $600,000. When that estimate was under discussion, I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. King) what dredging it was proposed to do, and the answer he gave me appears in Hansard of March 9 last. Out of that amount of $600,000, he proposed to dredge Lunenburg harbour. To-night a couple of hours ago, for Lunenburg again, we voted another $40,000, and in this item we have a further amount required for dredging of $25,000. I do not understand on what principle this money is asked for, and I would be very much obliged if the minister would enlighten the committee.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I shall be glad to give my hon. friend the places in the Maritime provinces which have to be dredged in addition to the list given before. My hon. friend will find that these total $45,000 approximately:

Nova Scotia
Canso (Antigonish-Guysboro Co.)	9,600
Cape St. Mary (Yarmouth-Clare Co.)	3,400
Deep Brook (Digby Annapolis Co.)	1,000
Eastern Points (Lunenburg Co.)	771
Jordan Bay (Shelburne & Queen's Co.)	1,340
McLeod's Harbour (Lunenburg Co.)	1,021
Port Medway (Shelburne & Queen's Co.)	1,000
Wolfville (King's Co.)	2,000
		$20,132
New Brunswick
Cocagne Harbour (Kent Co.)	1,150

Mr. GUTHRIE: That hardly gives the information I desire. My point is that we voted $600,000 in the Main Estimates, and the minister gave us a list, as appears in Hansard of March 9, of the dredging work he proposed to carry on. In that list, Lunenburg is mentioned for 200,000 cubic yards. To-night we have been asked to vote, and have voted, $40,000 for Lunenburg. Now comes a third vote of $25,000 for dredging in the Maritime provinces. What is the necessity of three votes? Why were they not all put into one, or at most, into two? It is certain, when the minister made his statement on March 9, he intended the $600,000 which we then voted, to cover Lunenburg, and I assume he also intended that amount to cover the other dredging in that part of the country. I cannot understand what this extra $25,000 is intended for.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the minister will like to say something upon this point. I do not think he would like it to be thought for one minute—and I am sure he did not do so intentionally—that he deceived the committee. I asked for a delay at one time for the purpose of looking into this very question, to see whether the dredging under the main vote was to be allocated for the particular work we had in the item then under discussion. He sent the information to me after the vote was finished. He assured us that it had absolutely nothing whatever to do with the places we were discussing. I am quite sure my hon. friend did not have the information before him, and he would like to straighten out the matter to the committee.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The matter is quite simple. If my hon. friend would stop and think for a moment, he would at once see it. What the Minister of Public Works did on March 9 was to give to the committee the programme of the number of cubic yards that he expected to be handled at that time. When they came to work the matter out in an endeavour to work in the government dredge, in order to get this work actually done, they found, so I am instructed, that it was impossible to do this with the item of $600,000 that was voted. Therefore they come to parliament in order to get the extra amount of $25,000. This extra work, the items of which I gave to-night, will have to be done by private dredges, outside of the government dredges, all of which are employed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Surely my hon. friend knows what we wanted this information for. It was to see whether the government could put the dredges in the places where the work was to be done. I certainly understood the minister to say that this had nothing at all to do with those places. He says, however, that the matter is perfectly simple. We have three different jobs going on all at once!

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not understand my hon. friend. I think the explanation is very clear. I did not see the statement when I was speaking about Lunenburg, but the statement I made about Lunenburg stands good. This is the programme made out during the winter of what the government wanted to do at that time. They figured that $600,000 would cover it. They found, with all the demands that were made, that more money was required for dredging and they came here to get it. When they came to work the matter out, so that the government dredge could be in that place or in this place, they found that it would pay them better, in order to get the work actually done, to call for tenders at Lunenburg, the work at which at that time they may have thought they could accomplish by the government dredge. This is merely a case of allocation.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I do not think it is. The minister will see that in the statement of the Minister of Public Works, Lunenburg is included for 200,000 cubic yards in the appropriation of $600,000. In my hon. friend's statement to the committee to-night, if I remember the figure, he said that the quantity at Lunenburg was 102,000 to 103,000 cubic yards. If 200,000 cubic yards were included in the $600,000 in the Main Estimates, that certainly more than included the 102,000 cubic yards that he speaks of as the total dredging to be done there over a period of three years. It staggers one to find a further Supplementary Estimate of $25,000 for dredging in the Maritime provinces.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I intimated earlier in the evening that my hon. friend was developing some new qualities. My hon. friend is endeavouring to lead the committee to believe that in the item that was given on March 9, dredging in Lunenburg was included. That is not correct.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is as I understood it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Oh, as my hon. friend understood it!

Mr. GUTHRIE: If I am mistaken, I am ready to be put right.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What is here is not dredging at Lunenburg, but dredging at Riverport, Lunenburg county, an entirely different place where the dredging is being done by the government dredge.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The House did not have that explanation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend might know very well when he saw that, that it was not Lunenburg but Riverport, Lunenburg county, and my hon. friend was either misleading the committee—

Mr. GUTHRIE: I did not know, and my hon. friend himself has only discovered this after a great deal of discussion in the House. He passed it over in the earlier part of the discussion, without ever seeing it. I am glad he has given us the explanation, but it took him a long time to do it, although he is himself from Nova Scotia and has charge of the estimates. It would strike anyone as being very extraordinary that after having voted several specific items we should be called upon now for another $25,000.

Mr. FIELDING: It being twelve o'clock I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate advising this House that the Senate do insist upon their amendments made to Bill No. 84, an act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, for the following reasons:

1. Because the provisions of the act should be equally applicable to employer and employee.
2. Because the selection of the third arbitrator by the chief justice of a court would remove any possible objection that the person selected might be more closely associated with either one of the contending parties.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST AND SECOND READING

Bill No. 251 (from the Senate), for the relief of Flossie May Pinkham.—Mr. Stewart (Leeds).

HOUSE OF COMMONS STAFF—ORGANIZATION

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to recommend to the House that the organization of the staff of the House of Commons, adopted by the House on June 20, 1922, be amended by making the changes set out in the details which I am laying on the table.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I move, seconded by Mr. Fielding, that the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker, laid on the Table of this House, respecting certain changes in the organization of the staff of the House of Commons, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.05 a.m. (Friday).

Friday, June 29, 1923.

The House met at 11 o'clock.

MINES AND MINERALS

Mr. W. F. CARROLL (South Cape Breton) moved:

That the third and final report of the Committee on Mines and Minerals be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. JAMES MALCOLM (North Bruce) moved:

That the second and final report of the special committee appointed to inquire into the operation of Chapter 12, 8-9, George V, an act respecting the Civil Service of Canada, be concurred in.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The report of this committee was placed before the House only a day or two ago. It contains a number of recommendations and is somewhat lengthy, and I doubt if hon. members of the House other than those who were members of the committee have had an opportunity to study it carefully. Among the recommendations there is, for example, an important one suggesting the introduction of a superannuation scheme. The report says:

Your committee is of the opinion that the adoption of a superannuation scheme substantially on the lines of that above described would remove one of the greatest deterrents to efficiency and curtailment of staffs in many of the departments of the public service and it therefore recommends that such a scheme be adopted by parliament at the earliest possible date.

In reference to that recommendation I may say that were it contemplated that the House should continue in session for any considerable time the government would be prepared to bring down forthwith a superannuation bill along the lines suggested by the committee. But as there will hardly be time to consider as important legislation as that at the present session, I may say that at the beginning of next session the government will be prepared to present to parliament a bill along the lines of the recommendations made. As to the other recommendations, some of them are of a minor character; some of them require a little more careful consideration, and I think it is only right that the government as well as hon. members should have an oportunity to go into them very thoroughly during the recess. I would not like to say at the moment that they will all be adopted or that any of them will be adopted; the disposition of the government would be to meet the wishes of the committee as far as appears to be in the public interest. With this assurance, Mr. Speaker, I hope my hon. friend will not press his motion for the adoption of the report, but will allow the report to remain on the Table.

Motion withdrawn.

REDISTRIBUTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. FRED JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): May I ask the government if an opportunity will be given to consider order No. 39, which has to do with Bill No. 15, an act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons? The report was tabled yesterday by the chairman of that committee.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Acting Minister of National Defence): My hon. friend spoke to me yesterday in regard to this matter. A motion for the adoption of the report will be made later in the day or tomorrow morning. I will let my hon. friend know.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Will there be an opportunity to discuss this—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is quite impossible for anyone at this end of the chamber to know what business is being carried on in the House. It is impossible to hear what is being said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think in view of what the hon. member says the last conversation at least might be repeated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We have no idea of what it is about.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is aware that queries are usually put at this stage, and perhaps he will hear better in future if he moves up. What I was saying in reference to the matter of moving the adoption of the report of the Redistribution committee—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I might interrupt, I heard neither the question nor the answer

An hon. MEMBER: That is true.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is rather early in the morning, and the auditory part of my hon. friend's make-up is probably not working. The hon. member for Last Mountain—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I simply ask the privilege of knowing what is going on in this House. At this end we cannot hear what is said in the tone that has been used this morning.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am anxious that the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) and all other members should hear my question. It was, whether the government would give the House an opportunity of discussing order No. 39 which has to do with the report from the special committee appointed to deal with Bill No. 15, an Act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In reply I stated to my hon. friend that a motion would be made for the adoption of the report either later in the day or to-morrow, of which I would give my hon. friend notice.

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to return to the order of motions for the purpose of laying a return on the table?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Louder.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The acoustic properties of the House are far better this year than they were last, and I do not see why the members should have to strain their voices to be heard by the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We cannnot hear at all down here.

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

HARBOURS AND RIVERS

Supplementary Estimates, 1923-4—Harbours and rivers—Ontario, $2,860,090.06.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I find some astonishing items in this vote, but no worse than practically all the rest of these estimates. I was not here when these estimates were first submitted, but I want to say now that the conduct of the government in submitting estimates of $14,700,000 accompanied by other commitments that aggregate at least $70,000,000 or more, probably $170,000,000 in the last week of the session is an affront to parliament, an affront to the country. To say that it is a blazing violation of their own professions when they were seeking office is, of course, only to repeat what everybody now knows. So bad indeed is it that I understand their own followers not far from here have expressed disgust and resisted their conduct; indeed, cast it out the door. The fact of bringing in estimates of this character and pretending that they can get consideration at the hands of the House when we are a few hours from prorogation, a few days at the most before they ever come down—and those days crowded with legislation the most important of any submitted the whole session, more important than all that the government has submitted to parliament in all the five months of the session—is a reflection of the character of the administration and the way it is serving this country.

I would ask particularly for some statement as to what is to be spent on the second item. The first I do not know just where it is, but what is to be done in the way of harbour improvements at Belle River?

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. HEALY: As the town of Belle River is in the constituency I come from I may take it upon myself to answer the right hon. leader of the Opposition. This is the only port on that shore of lake St. Clair. It is used at the present time for the distribution of gravel which goes to build the provincial highways and the county roads in this district. Every government for the past twenty years has wasted money on this harbour by attempting to keep it open without putting in any permanent protection. This vote provides for a permanent protection on one side of the harbour. It may be necessary that both sides of the harbour be permanently protected. If so I am going to advocate doing that work. This locality has been the centre of a fishing industry. And there is a great demand for gravel and sand there. The people of that district are entitled to have this harbour protected, the expenditure is justified in every way, and the total capital invested will pay for itself in two years by the amount of gravel and sand used. Every municipal and provincial purpose in the district will be served by this improvement.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister tell us just what is intended to be done under this vote? The hon. member for the riding tells us there is to be some protection on one side of the harbour, and that he hopes it will go on to the other side, and that this expenditure will pay. I should like to know just the basis of it. I think we are all the more entitled to know because there has been a recent by-election there, and it is just possible that this vote has some relation to that election. One might almost imagine that, at least. I never had representations made to me as to the business value of this investment, in fact I think I had representations that were quite the contrary—that this is a purely political placing of money in order to take care of political obligations.

Mr. HEALY: I would be very pleased to answer the leader of the Opposition, in fact I am glad he has brought up the subject of the election at this time. We of the locality were delighted to have a visit from the leader of the Opposition. I am sorry, but I think his attitude in regard to this vote represents, perhaps, the disappointment he felt over the result of the election. I am also sorry that the applause my right hon. friend received in this very town of Belle River did not represent the real feeling of the people. When distinguished gentlemen such as the leader of the Opposition visit our locality we attempt to show them every respect; and the party to which my right hon. friend belongs went so far as to hire, or have donated, about twenty-five automobiles. They filled these with political friends and made a tour through the county. If I were to use an expression common in theatrical circles I might say that those who followed the right hon. gentleman on that occasion were professional claqueurs. At any rate I can inform him that the applause he received on his visit to Belle River came from the gentlemen who followed him from the city of Windsor, and other places, and did not emanate from the people of Belle River. Consequently, when the election resulted as it did the right hon. gentleman was disappointed, because he had been received with applause and the vote did not bear out that applause. I also wish to thank the leader of the Opposition for the many speeches he made in this district during the election. He orated, I think, from milkstands and in town halls and in school houses—I do not think he spoke from any barns, but he did speak from nearly every other description of building in the riding. When I advocated this very vote which was then proposed, for an improvement so urgently needed, he said, I believe, that it was log rolling. I do not like to make that statement, for this reason. During the by-election the leader of the Opposition sought to have the press correct so many statements published about what he said that I am afraid he will call upon me to make a retraction. However, I will leave it to the right hon. gentleman if he did not use that term on the occasion referred to.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the term?

Mr. HEALY: "Log rolling."

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very probably I did.

Mr. HEALY: Well, I am awfully glad to get that acknowledgement from you at least. As far as this vote is concerned, the people of this locality are entitled to it. My information is that it makes a breakwater on one side of this harbour and gives eleven or twelve feet of water thus permitting coal to be brought in through the channel, also the sand and gravel needed in the locality which comes in under a contract made with the Dominion government. I may say that the provincial government insists on sand and gravel being furnished to the people of the locality at a cost of forty or fifty cents a yard less than they can buy it from private individuals. The engineer has reported on this work, the late representative for the riding was in favour of it, and this expenditure is justified in every way. I will take the responsibility for this vote because I, not the leader of the Opposition, represent the riding. I repeat that it is justified in every way and I am going to insist on it going through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am sure the House must have been impressed with the exceedingly argumentative and able presentation of the business value of this investment made by the member for North Essex. He says that I am very much disappointed that this vote is in the estimates. No, I am not disappointed in the least, I fully expected this vote; I had every reason to expect it. Nor was I very much disappointed in the result. I wonder if the hon. member feels that a great tribute was paid the government of the day by the vote in North Essex. I am not usually in the habit of arguing that election results are a reason against any public action. I leave that to those who can find no real reasons; but when the hon. member for North Essex—

Mr. HEALY: I understood you to say that this was a political appropriation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and I will show a little reason for that in a moment. I leave the mere boasting of votes to those who are not competent to advance any other argument. But when a majority is reduced from 7,195 to about 1,000 it takes a pretty self-satisfied representative to initiate the subject himself in the Commons as a matter of self-congratulation. No, I am not disappointed in this vote being introduced. When I used the word "political" I used the most euphemistic adjective I could think of. During the campaign the promise of a vote of this kind was the chief argument on behalf of the hon. member. Indeed, I can recall no other. As for correcting press misrepresentations, the correction I made was against the Minister of Finance and I made it out of a Liberal paper. The report of the Liberal newspaper of Windsor was right but the Minister of Finance was all wrong. He based his statement on some contortion appearing in the Globe from the Canadian Press, and I have in my office an apology from the Canadian Press for making a wrong report. So much for that. What has that to do with the proposition?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I hope the hon. member takes the castigation that these "hear, hears" imply.

Mr. HEALY: You started the political discussion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, and I intend to end it. I hold in my hand a poster containing the announcement of this harbour improvement. This is the first of the literary efforts of the hon. gentleman's friends in regard to this marked achievement at the expense of the taxpayer. I will read it:

Vote for Healey and get $86,000 Gov. Docks and Breakwater
$25,000 Waterworks
Free gift from James Cooper.
$75,000 Brick and Tile Yard to employ 30 hands the year round.
Vote for Robinson and get nothing but hot air.
King needs Tim; so do you.
Tim and King—that is the thing.

This is worth repeating. Of course it is illegal and it is a violation of the law which this government is sworn to obey; published without a statement as to who publishes it, but it is published on behalf of the member, by the man whose name appears here, and who is chief henchman in the riding. Everyone knows who he is. Everyone knows what he did to elect the hon. member and all about it.

Vote for Healy and get $86,000 government docks.

The note is maturing now and the country is paying for it.

And the breakwater; and the $25,000 waterworks—when that is to come is a matter, of course, in the hands of the gods—and, I suppose, of Tim. The information I have—and it comes from the people of Belle River—is that this is utterly worthless, that it is chiefly for the personal benefit of the man who got out the dodger and for the political benefit of the representative of the riding. This vote is brought down the last few days of the session. I have a letter, which I will have here shortly, which deals with this matter. It is dated the 24th March, just a few days after the election, and states that the Liberals are now boasting that a vote of—I forget how many thousand dollars—will be in the estimates, but not in the main estimates. It will be held for the supplementaries, in order to carry out this pledge to the people, held till the last few days of the session so as to be jammed through in the dying moments, because "King needs Tim; Tim and King, that is the thing."

Mr. JACOBS: It would be interesting to have that letter read.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I had it here a day or two ago, thinking this matter would come up then. I will get the letter; the hon. member need not worry. And I have two or three others. This is no worse than the rest of the administration of this government. It is just of a piece with all the rest. This is how they purpose to carry these estimates, with appropriations of the money of the people of Canada, looking to the by-elections that will probably be held this summer. I have often wondered what it is going to cost the Dominion to provide a Liberal successor for the prospective judge of the Exchequer Court? This is part of the cost of having this House adorned by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Healy). The information I have—and I believe it is correct—is from citizens of the town, that this is chiefly for the benefit of the man who got out the dodger and for his business and in pursuance of his pledge, contained in an illegal dodger, to elect illegally the hon. member.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The records of the Department of Public Works show that my right hon. friend is very unjust to the member for North Essex. The record here shows that this matter was first brought to the attention of the Department of Public Works during the lifetime of the late lamented Hon. Mr. Kennedy by a resolution dated 7th April, 1922, of the municipal council of the township of Rochester, concurring with the village of Belle River and other municipalities re the urgency of the Belle River improvements. Later there was a letter from the Reeve of Belle River stating:

That this is the only place on North shore of Essex county which could be made fit for a port and is the logical place for distribution of coal, gravel, etc., resulting in a saving of $5 a ton on coal.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Could the hon. member give the House any information of the chief article that is included in the word "etc."?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am reading from the representations which were made by the reeve of Belle River—and I take it that that gentleman is a man of responsibility, and that the municipal council of the township of Rochester, who verify what the reeve of Belle River says, are also responsible. I think this House, recalling the late Minister of Railways who promoted this matter long before there was any election to fill the vacancy occasioned by his lamented death, will hardly credit my right hon. friend with all he says as to the reason of the vote being due to the by-election. The reeve of Belle River stated:

A tile and brick yard is building which will use 2,000 tons of coal a year, in addition to other industries. It would re-establish the local fleet of sand boats which used to operate from here and have had to lie idle on account of the mouth of the river filling up.

The record shows that this little discussion about the North Essex by-election had no relation whatever to the consideration of this question by the Department of Public Works. The local municipality of Belle River, and the municipal council of which it formed a part, and the late Hon. Mr. Kennedy, had been pressing this matter, on the Department of Public Works, on behalf of the locality and the constituency, long before the death of the late minister.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is it a dock or a piece of a dock? Or what is it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I should have thought my right hon. friend ought to have known a little more about it before he denounced everybody indiscriminately.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I just know what is here. I am asking what the vote is for.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will give the hon. member the information, if he will wait and forget there was a hand-bill and a North Essex election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will not forget it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): One of the troubles of my right hon. friend is that he belongs to that school of people known as the Bourbons. The work here is:

To construct 1,500 lineal feet double sheet pile wall, consisting of double three-inch sheeting for the length of 1,000 feet, and double 4-inch sheeting for the length of 500 feet, sheeting to be from eight to twenty feet in length, securely walled to round piles on each side of sheeting placed at 5-foot centres; also seven round pile stone filled cribs, 18 feet by 18 feet in area.

The memo I have reads:

The original estimated cost of this work was $72,500, the sheet pile wall being estimated at $60,000 sufficient to provide for an ultimate depth in the channel of 18 feet; but after further consideration it was decided that a wall to provide for the maintenance of a 10-foot channel would meet the requirements for some time to come at the above greatly reduced cost.

Mr. HOCKEN: Perhaps the minister could tell us whether the merchandise which comes in under the heading "etc." comes in by motor boat.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am not versed as to the Ontario Temperance Act operation or matters of that kind. Perhaps my hon. friend would know more about that.

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not live there.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am giving to the House the information from the Department of Public Works coming from sources I have indicated, and this is to justify the expenditure which has been made there. Everyone is aware of the movement of the sand and the important business that has grown up in gravel along lake St. Clair. I am free to say that the record I have, showing the representations made by responsible people in the constituency and the efforts of the late Hon. Mr. Kennedy to have this matter dealt with before he departed, is so clear that it cannot be doubted.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I understand from what my hon. friend says, that the basis of this appropriation is representations made by the former member, the Hon. Mr. Kennedy.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): And the reeve of Belle River and the municipal council.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who joined with him in those representations, as I understand the matter. What possible excuse is there for this delay? We were told before that the reason why these supplementaries were bought down now was that there was no time to include them in the Main Estimates. Now we have something which, on the confession of the minister, is old, hoary, with nothing at all done recently to draw it to the attention of the government. The only excuse and reason for the late date of these supplementaries is that the matter could not be considered before. The government, on their own showing and their own admission, show that they have deliberately delayed the submission of this appropriation for the purpose of these supplementaries.

Mr. FIELDING: Might I add a word of comment on the first part of the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen)? He said that it is an affront to parliament and the Canadian people to bring down estimates of this character at this late stage. I wonder if the word "effrontery" is a matter of parliamentary privilege. I am afraid it is not, and therefore I shall have to substitute a more moderate word. If I were not so familiar with the methods of my right hon. friend in dealing with public questions in this House, I would be amazed at the audacity of the statement he made to-day. The right hon. gentleman waxed indignant in the words he uttered to-day, and he repeated what he said a few days before in the evening when these estimates came down. He said "I would like the minister to tell where in the history of Canada"—a pretty large story—"estimates of that magnitude were ever brought down in the last week of the session." If my right hon. friend had been here last night, he would have had the information which he apparently had neglected to obtain. He is indignant because we in these last days of the session have brought down estimates of $15,000,000. In the last session of the government of my right hon. friend, the session of 1921, and in the last week of that session, to use the very words he used, they brought down estimates of $23,000,000. At that time the Main Estimates were not all through the House, but that point is not important. According to the records, the message was brought down on a Monday, but, as a matter of fact, it was brought down in the small hours of Tuesday morning, according to my information, and the House prorogued on Saturday. They used all the machinery to crowd those estimates through the House. What can the country think of the right hon. gentleman who, in parliament, is virtuously indignant because we bring down estimates amounting to $15,000,000, and who challenges anybody to show anything of the kind in the history of Canada, when the record shows that he brought down in the last week of the session of 1921 estimates amounting to $23,000,000. It is things like this which prevent the public from having confidence in the statements of the right hon. gentleman. It is his utterly reckless manner of discussing public affairs which has tended to discredit him and to put him in the position which he now occupies.

Let me again repeat what the Prime Minister (Mr. Makenzie King) said the other day. There is no desire to rush these estimates through. If this House desires time to consider them, time shall be given, so far as the government is concerned. There will be no closure to crowd these estimates through, there will be no coercion—nothing that is not consistent with the principles of sound parliamentary government and free discussion. But when the right hon. gentleman indignantly challenges anyone to show when, in the history of all Canada, a government had brought down estimates of this magnitude in the last week of a session, and I point out the fact that, in the last week of the session of 1921, he brought down estimates amounting to $23,000,000, I think the right hon. gentleman will come to the conclusion that, perhaps, he had better think before he speaks.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would like to wait until hon. gentlemen have a good chance to get this off their chests, because they will get a rude disappointment in a moment. When I spoke the other day as I spoke to-day, I referred to all the government was committing the country to this last week.

Mr. FIELDING: No. His challenge was: "When did a government bring down Supplementary Estimates like this in the last week?"

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think we ever did. Those estimates were nothing like the length of these, nor were the commitments of the last week of that session a fraction of what this government has brought down this last week. The minister himself is responsible for coming to this House and keeping out of the estimates, an amount which, I believe, will run to over $100,000,000. He brings this down in the last week of the session, and merely because it is in separate bills, he says that it is not estimates. The conduct of the minister, instead of being more to be commended on that account, is on that very account the most discreditable to a government in the history of our country. This government this week is down, in the dying hours of the session, with commitments that will run to $150,000,000 to this Dominion—commitments so preposterous that his own followers, not far from him, some of them the most loyal he ever had, have cast them ignominiously out of the door. That is where the government stands. What does the minister think of this kind of conduct? The minister says: "Oh, you have plenty of time; we are in no hurry." In the last week of 1921, I stood as Prime Minister and told the House that all the time the House wanted would be given to consider the estimates we had, and that was all we had. There was no closure.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There was.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think there was.

Mr. VIEN: There were sittings all night.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, there were sittings all night, but I am satisfied they were not on the estimates. That does not matter anyway; there was plenty of time given for consideration of the matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The vote for the Merchant Marine was put through under closure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That was not an estimate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not a supplementary estimate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It represented an expenditure of $70,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was in the Main Estimates. The question was considered for days, and there was no hurry whatever. Hon. members stood up and asked us to put on the closure. That was what they were asking for. That was what they were keeping us all night for. It was the greatest bluff that was ever put up. During the last week of that session I said that all the time wanted would be given for the consideration of what was brought down, and there was not a fraction or, at least, only a small fraction, of the commitments that this government has brought down.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Did not the right hon. gentleman each evening resist strenuously the request of the opposition to adjourn at twelve o'clock, so that time might be given for proper discussion of the estimates? Did he not keep the House in session until the early hours of the morning, refusing any opportunity to consider them?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has this government not kept us sitting until the early hours of the morning?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it has not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This House has sat in the morning time and time again.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The House this session, and last, has not sat past eleven o'clock a single night without the consent of every member; and during the discussion of estimates, the minute there has been a request that the House should adjourn, and if there has been any indication that that was the wish of hon. members, the House has adjourned.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am prepared to admit that the opposition has been much more reasonable than was the opposition of that day. The opposition of that day kept the talk going merely in order that they might force closure if they possibly could, and even in certain cases they got up and asked for it. That was the character of the opposition then, and I do not see that there has been much improvement now that those of that opposition have come into power.

On this estimate, in reply to the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), who did not think I had the letter, I will read now from a letter I have from a private citizen of Belle River. This is dated the 24th March, the date I gave the House.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Who signed it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I stated that it was a private letter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some hon. members think it would be of great value to know the name. Do they think I have not the letter?

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely under the rules of the House an hon. member may not read part of a letter, which he makes public by the reading, and then say that the rest is private.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He can.

Mr. GRAHAM: He might by following the example of some of my right hon. friend's followers in Toronto. But it is a rule of the House that any document from which a quotation is made must be laid on the Table.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is a rule, which I think my hon. friend has been in the House long enough to know, that if a member of the government quotes from a government document that document must be laid upon the Table. There is no rule that every member must divulge the name of a private citizen because he wishes to read from any letter written by such a person. Even if he quotes from the letter he is at liberty to divulge the name or not, as he sees fit, and that principle has been acted on time and time again.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member knows better than that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know that what I have stated is absolutely correct. However, I have no particular objection to disclosing the name if I can obtain the consent of the writer to do so. But I will not give the name until I do obtain that consent.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not objecting to the fact that my hon. friend does not give the name. I do object, however, as I think I have a right to object, to his making public a part of a letter which he says is private and asking us to take it for granted that the letter is from some citizen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the hon. member be good enough to recall the incident? I did not say I was going to read from the letter until the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) inquired whether I had it, suggesting, I think, that I read from it. Now I am only answering his challenge.

Mr. FIELDING: Apart from the point of order, which I do not raise, does my right hon. friend not admit that the force of a letter must be drawn from the signature? And if the right hon. gentleman reads a private letter—his right to do which I am not questioning—surely he must realize that no one will pay respectful attention to it if its source is concealed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not very material to me whether I read the letter or not, but when I am challenged by an hon. member to read it and I am ready to do so it does seem strange, to say the least, that the same hon. gentlemen should raise an objection. However, I think the country will draw the same inference from the objection as it would draw from the letter, if I read it.

Mr. JACOBS: The most important part of the letter would be the signature of the person who wrote it. It might have been dictated to an office boy, or an office boy might have written to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The signature appears on the letter; there is no doubt about that; and I have so much respect for it that I am ready to disclose the name to my hon. friend. These are some of the words it contains:

The Liberals here seem confident that a government dock will be built at Belle River this year, and state that the cost of same is to be included in the Supplemental Estimates.

The date of the letter is March 24, 1923. I have further communications to the effect that while some dredging, so as to allow a certain depth, could be justified, the work the government contemplates cannot be justified on any business ground whatever.

Mr. CAHILL: Are they signed?

Mr. MEIGHEN: They are signed, just as all letters are signed. I thought the hon. gentleman had attained a business eminence that would have acquainted him with that fact. Now, this is merely the payment of a political debt.

Mr. CAHILL: Anyone could write letters of that kind.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will move that the vote be reduced by $30,000. The fact that the debt is a fulfilment of a bribe is sufficient to nullify it in the judgment of the House. The hon. minister (Mr. Macdonald) says that someone wrote about the matter before the election. I do not doubt that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Pardon me; I did not say that someone wrote about it before the election. I stated that this municipality had passed a resolution concerning the matter and that there was a communication from the reeve of the municipality on the same subject. I further pointed out that the late Hon. Mr. Kennedy, for over a year before he departed this life, had been dealing with the question with the Public Works department. The committee will see how my hon. friend argues. He said that I made the statement that someone had written about the matter before the election. What I said was precisely what I have just stated.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Some one had written; the reeve, I think, wrote about the matter. The minister states that a resolution was passed by the municipal council, and that is the justification for going on with the work. Well, you can get resolutions of council for anything; and anyone who publishes a poster such as the one I have read, and has the ingenuity of the man that did it, can engineer such a resolution, even if it is to his own advantage to have the money spent in the municipality that passes the resolution. What I note is that the only commitment made was made when the by-election was on. There was no commitment made by the Hon. Mr. Kennedy; it was made as a bribe at the time of the by-election.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Not at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the bribe is now being paid. I shall move that the item be reduced by $30,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): On this question my right hon. friend is speaking recklessly. The evidence points conclusively to the fact that the matter was initiated the same as any other public work of importance in any locality originates. It was first dealt with by the local authorities over a year ago, and I can inform the committee that there had been improvements at Belle River, but owing to a movement of the sand 12 noon the proposed wall extension became imperative. The municipality considered the matter and it was placed before the late Mr. Kennedy long before there was any probability of his death or the possibility of any by-election. There is some question that this matter should have been brought down in the Main Estimates. The Main Estimates were laid on the Table immediately after the opening of the session, on the 1st of February, and the death of Mr. Kennedy did not occur until after that date, so that the by-election did not take place until March. Let me read what the engineer reports:

Wall extension proposed is of a public nature. Local municipality wishes to have entrance channel redredged and proposed protection work constructed to permit bringing in coal, lumber and building materials, the carrying on and development of fishing industry and the taking out of sugar beets by water to Wallaceburg and Chatham. They have also asked for proposed extension to west pier to prevent the prevailing westerly winds from filling up bar across entrance to channel. New brick and tile works under construction and to be placed in operation at this point.

This shows why, beyond all question, the Department of Public Works took the matter into consideration. Having gone through the various reports touching these items, I am struck forcibly by this fact, that in these estimates there is no item behind which there is such an accumulation of evidence to establish an independent interest in behalf of the municipal and local authorities as in the case of this particular item. My hon. friend cannot forget that there was an election in North Essex or that bills were posted in that campaign, and for that reason we have had this exhibition this morning.

Mr. GARDINER: What was the date of the engineer's report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have not the exact date; it is not in the record. The deputy tells me it would be about two months ago.

Mr. HEALY: Really the merits of this vote have been lost sight of in the political discussion that has arisen upon it. The first knowledge I had of any vote, or of any work proposed at Belle River, came to me one night when I was attending a meeting there. I was confronted with the engineer's report and a letter written by the late Minister of Railways in which statements were made that the people of the district were desirous that the work should be gone on with; and the vote mentioned in the poster was $86,000. I made the statement that any promise made by the late Minister of Railways would be carried out so far as my influence could bring about this end. I made that statement then and I stand by it now. And this is the only opportunity I had of getting anything placed in the estimates, because I was not elected until the first of March. The letters with reference to this matter are contained in the files of the Public Works department and if my right hon. friend wishes to secure the information he can consult them. He can see the letters written by the late Minister of Railways as well as the report of the engineer and that of the municipality. The vote is entirely justifiable. It may be true that the handbill was circulated in the district, but I want to tell the leader of the Opposition that it was the first circular I had ever seen.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have some others.

Mr. HEALY: I heard that such a circular was published, and the wording of it follows the wording of a circular that was used extensively by the leader of the Opposition. There is no doubt in my mind that the gentleman who wrote the circular considered that, while the effect would be different in this case, the phraseology was quite appropriate.

Now, I am not responsible for that circular. As a matter of fact the whole proposition comes from a squabble between two gentlemen who lived in Belle River, two gentlemen, I believe, who got into trouble between themselves over a shipment of goods that came into Belle River. One gentleman happens to be a strong Liberal; the other happens to be a strong Conservative. That is the secret of the whole thing. That accounts for the letters being produced. That accounts for this poor little vote for the poor little town of Belle River, which happens to be in the north riding of Essex, being attacked by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. A local political squabble, and it is brought up here at this time. The vote is justified; the people are entitled to it. They have been recognized by every government of this country for twenty years, but it is the first time that an intelligent effort has been made to put money where it belongs, where it will make a permanent improvement at a small cost, thus avoiding the expenditure of large amounts each year on dredging. This expenditure has been reduced from $86,000 to $30,000 at my own insistence. I conferred with the engineer and with the people of the district, and decided that a breakwater costing this amount would do the work as well as a larger expenditure. Any member of the House who knows the locality, or who would agree to visit the locality, would come to the same conclusion.

Mr. FIELDING: The right hon. leader of the Opposition is the happy possessor of many good qualities to which I freely offer the tribute of admiration. Unfortunately, like most of us, I suppose, there are some qualities on the other side, and one of his unfortunate habits is that when his mistakes—I use the word very mildly—are pointed out, instead of frankly admitting them he runs off at a tangent and tries to divert attention; he adopts the policy of abusing somebody else. It is not a good policy for any man, least of all is it a good policy for a man holding the distinguished position of leader of the Opposition. Now, what was the issue? The right hon. gentleman said, two or three days ago, that the bringing down of these supplementary estimates—and he held them up and flourished them—was an affront to the people of Canada, an outrage, an incomprehensible thing. Now, we are not discussing the broader question of all the expenditure, if necessary we can still discuss that before the House closes; but we are confining our discussion to this particular point: The bringing down of these supplementary estimates at a late stage in the session—just that and nothing more. This is what the right hon. gentleman said, flourishing the estimates above his head:

> Well, the House is faced to-night, two or three or four days before prorogation, with a set of estimates almost as big as the estimates that were produced in the middle of the session—estimates, page after page of them, that we ought to have had before us for weeks, even for months, before prorogation. I would like the minister to tell where in the history of Canada estimates of that magnitude were ever brought down in the last week of the session. Occasionally there would be a single page and that would be all, and there would be a row over that.

That is the statement I am challenging. May I point out that the right hon. gentleman in his own last session of parliament, three or four days before prorogation—to use his own words, in the last week of the session—brought down estimates not for $15,000,000, but for $23,000,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. gentleman the Estimates with him?

Mr. FIELDING: No; but is my right hon. friend challenging the accuracy of my statement? Now, I quoted the Montreal Gazette before on another matter and he was not pleased; he does not like the authority of the Montreal Gazette. But here is a quotation from that paper:

> Supplementary estimates tabled in the House this evening by Sir Henry Drayton, Minister of Finance, totalled $23,959,000.

This is from the Montreal Gazette of May 21, 1921. Someone now hands me a copy of those Estimates; I did not have them at hand. I suppose my right hon. friend would like to say I imagined it. Here are the Estimates; but I am willing to take the Montreal Gazette's statement of the total without reading the document.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He will deny even the Estimates.

Mr. FIELDING: I want to say to my right hon. friend in all seriousness that he should not recklessly plunge into these rash statements. He should endeavour to have some regard for his position as ex-Prime Minister of this country and as leader of a political party—a once great party.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, they are going strong.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend, having regard to the position he occupies, should not attempt to mislead the House by rash and reckless statements. Now, here is the only point; he defiantly challenged me to show a case where in the whole history of Canada any minister of finance ever brought down such supplementary estimates in the last week of the session. I do not go back to earlier history; I go to the very last session when the right hon. gentleman was in power.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, I must congratulate the minister on his energy.

Mr. FIELDING: Thank you.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The unfortunate feature is that what he has stated pretty well goes to prove what I said.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We knew it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The estimate that was brought down—indeed, I have not the date in my mind of the closing of parliament, but if the date of the article he read was the twenty-first of May—that is what he read—

Mr. FIELDING: The thirty-first. If I read the twenty-first that was wrong.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister gave it as the twenty-first.

Mr. FIELDING: The thirty-first is the date in the memorandum I have. Parliament prorogued on the fourth of June.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman gave the twenty-first as the date; it would require my looking into it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order. I should like to know whether this discussion is on the item at present before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: The discussion is on the general vote, item No. 508, for the province of Ontario. It is being dealt with generally, as agreed by the committee last night; so that the discussion is not on any specific item of the vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am disposed to think that when I get time to go into it—

Mr. FIELDING: Confess and have it over.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There will be no confession from me; the confession will come from the minister—that is to say, if he is honest with himself: I have not the exact date before me, but if the hon. member was right in the date he gave the House the estimates were brought down a long while before the end of the session.

Mr. FIELDING: They were not.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But one item of those estimates was a revote of $12,000,000 in connection—

Mr. FIELDING: What difference does it make what the items were?

Mr. MEIGHEN: All the difference in the world.

Mr. FIELDING: The amount of the estimates was the question. What is the difference what they are?

Mr. MEIGHEN: All the difference in the world, even considering, as the minister insists on doing, that all we are comparing are the supplementary estimates of ours and the supplementary estimates of his, which are only a fraction of all that he has asked this House to put through in the last few days, only a fraction of the appropriations that he has concealed from the House under the cover of supplemental bills. One item of those estimates of ours was a revote of $12,000,000 loaned to the provinces—loaned, mark you—for housing. The hon. member will find it—a revote of $10,456,000—on page 4552 of Hansard of the 4th June.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would point out to my hon. friend that $4,000,000 of these Supplementary Estimates is for the same purpose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Four million is very different from twelve million. That leaves only ten million and a fraction. I have not had time to go through it and see the rest, but I notice it is a whole lot less to be considered and covers a whole lot less for parliament than does their Supplementary Estimate alone. It is merely a small portion of the size and consists in the main of items which parliament had already considered and which are merely loans—a different thing altogether. I put myself in the judgment of the House if ever the conduct of this government in trying to gulp down these tremendous vast amounts and present a whole new area for consideration in the last few days was ever equalled in the history of this or any other parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I just take the words with which my hon. friend has concluded when he asks if ever in the history of this country there had been an effort made to gulp down such a vast amount as we are presenting at the present time? Fortunately it is possible to refer to the records of parliament in this matter and put the whole question beyond dispute. I have in my hand the Journals of the House for the last year in which my right hon. friend was Prime Minister, and I am going to ask the attention of the House to what took place in this House on the last three days of the session while my right hon. friend was Prime Minister and his colleague was Minister of Finance. This is the record of what was considered by the House on Wednesday 1st June, 1921, and I would ask the House to remember that parliament was prorogued that year on Saturday, 4th June. Here is what was forced on the House and forced through parliament on that day. I shall read only some of the items appearing under miscellaneous:

Railways and Canals—chargeable to income—Miscellaneous—Board of Railways Commissioners, $206,000.

Other items, $200,000, $5,000, $53,000, $10,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Those were in the Main Estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but parliament never had an opportunity of considering the Main Estimates until the Wednesday prior to prorogation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Because you obstructed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will permit me I should like to read this list. I think it will amaze even himself. The other items are as follows:

Loan of $50,0000,000 to the Canadian National Railways.

Loan of $89,000,000 to the Grand Trunk.

Loan of $26,000,000 to the Grand Trunk System.

There were several other miscellaneous items and finally this:

To provide salaries and expenses in connection with an arbitration of the railways, $1,000,000.

There are a couple of hundred million dollars, in these items alone, put through this House within a few hours by the force of the majority which my right hon. friend had and the manner in which he used it. But this is only a fraction. Other items put through on the same day were as follows:

Canadian Government Railways, Railways and Canals, $7,000,000; Canals—staff and repairs, $2,270,000; Railways and Canals—to pay claims for right of way, $35,000; Miscellaneous railway equipment, $1,903,000; Hudson Bay Railway—Port Nelson terminals, $100,000.

Supplementary Estimates—Railways and Canals—chageable to income, $20,500; To increase the amount of loan authorized by vote 478, $1,520,000.

There were other items $1,000, $200,000, $24,000, $10,000, $50,000.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—Canadian Government Railways, $2,000,000.

Civil Government—Department of Railways and Canals, $1,800, $1,500.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—various items for the railways as follows: $3,000, $1,400, $97,000, $4,500 $70,000, $50,000, $47,500, $50,000.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to income—Railways, $80,000, $50,000, $130,000.

That was the day's work for Wednesday, and the records of the House show that it adjourned at 1.55 a.m.—practically two o'clock in the morning. As I recall that day most of these estimates were passed between the hour of midnight and two o'clock in the morning against the strenuous protests of the Opposition, and the items ran into hundreds of millions of dollars.

Now as to the next day, Thursday. The House according to the Journals sat until 3.20 in the morning. That was to jam through a whole lot of other legislation. Estimates were not touched on that day. But on Friday, though parliament was prorogued on the following day, in addition to a great deal of legislation that was jammed through, the following estimates were also passed—I am giving only the round figures.

Main Estimates—Scientific Institutions—Department of Interior, $55,000, $14,000; Geodetic Survey, $325,000; International boundaries, $37,000; Government of the Northwest Territories, $125,000, $70,000; Government of the Yukon Territory, $35,000, $45,000, $20,000, $20,000; Dominion Lands and Parks—salaries—outside service, $515,000, $250,000, $600,000, $2,000; Protection of timber in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, $1,000,000; Other items, $4,000, $367,000, $15,000, $284,000, $300,000, $1,000, $800,000, $60,000, $105,000, $10,000, $1,500, $1,000, $500,000, $325,000.

Supplementary Estimates—Civil Government—Department of Interior, $57,000; Government of the Northwest Territories, $30,000; Dominion Lands and Parks, $40,000, $3,000, $65,000.

Main Estimates—Indians, $23,000.

Supplementary Estimates—Mines and Geological Survey, $140,000, $140,000.

Main Estimates—Indians, $23,000.

Supplementary Estimates—Indians, $200, $300, $19,000, $8,000, $19,000, $6,000, $1,000, $5,000, $5,000, $9,000, $5,000, $12,000, $4,000, $9,000; Agriculture—for purchase of seed grain, $1,500,000; Agriculture—other items, $100,000, $100,000, $100,000, $25,000, $10,000 $300,000, $20,000; Civil Government—Department of Agriculture, $3,900, $1,000, $1,900, $2,000, $2,000.

Main Estimates—charges of management, $100,000, $15,000, $400,000, $100,000, $100,000, $6,000, $3,000, $80,000; Civil government—Governor General, $33,600, $66,600; Privy Council, $38,000, $10,000; Secretary of State, $190,000, $33,500; Mounted Police, $31,500, $9,000; Auditor General, $218,500, $22,000; Finance, $416,000. $50,000; Insurance, $58,000, $50,000; Public Archives, $66,000, $12,000; Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, $61,000, $10,000; Civil Service Commission, $192,000, $160,000.

Main estimates—Legislation. Senate, $142,500; House of Commons, $238,800, $77,600, $46,800, $60,000, $141,000; Library of Parliament, $41,900, $18,000, $1,000, $12,500; General, $125,000, $16,000.

Main estimates—Pensions, $1,200, $1,000, $1,000, $30,000, $7,000; Pensions—European War and active militia, $30,500,000; Board of Pension Commissioners, $625,000.

Main estimates—Superannuation, $90,000; the Naval Service, $2,500,000; Labour, $50,000; Civil government, $1,200,000, $156,000; Post Office—outside service, $13,600,000, $10,100,000, $1,000,000, $195,000.

Supplementary Estimates—Civil Government—Post Office Department, $1,000, $9,000, $5,000, $9,000; Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions, $19,000; Post-Office—outside service, $365,000; Post Office—miscellaneous, $25,000, $235,000, $3,000, $2,000; Civil Government—Administration of Justice, $10,000; Penitentiaries, $200,000; Civil Government—Post Office Department $15,000; Post Office—outside Service, $86,000;—Mail Service by railway, $4,380,000.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, reading lists of this kind was ruled out of order by you last night.

The CHAIRMAN: The right hon. member is quite in order.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not wonder my hon. friends are ashamed of the record. In addition to those I have read the following were also passed on that same day:

Supplementary Estimates—Administration of Justice, $2,500, $3,000; Penitentiaries, $10,000; Miscellaneous, $30,000, $5,000, $20,000, $1,000; Demobilization, $6,000.

Main Estimates—Royal Canadian Mounted Police—Pay, $1,718,000, Subsistence, $1,800,000, Contingencies, $5,000; Soldiers' Land Settlement, $17,000; Advances to soldiers settling upon the land, $35,000,000; Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment: Capital, $200,000; Care of patients, $5,250,000; Vocational expense, $325,000; Salaries, $6,000,000; Pay and allowance (treatment), $3,750,000, (vocational), $2,000,000; Vocational Loans, $150,000; Interest on war service gratuity balances, $10,000; Operating expenses and working capital, $1,500,000; Miscellaneous—Canada Gazette, $51,000; Printing Bureau, $20,000; Distribution of parliamentary documents, $40,000; Miscellaneous printing, $100,000; Contribution towards publication of international catalogue of scientific literature, $600; Expenses under Canada Temperance Act, $500,000; Other items under Miscellaneous, $31,000; $40,000, $68,000, $25,000, $2,000, $6,000, $35,000, $10,000, $50,000, $8,000; to provide for the administration of the Business Profits War Tax Act, $2,000,000; Other items, $5,000, $5,000 $5,000, $2,000, $8,000, $2,500, $905,316, $3,000, $15,000, $80,442, $15,000, $5,000, $1,000, $15,000, $50,000, $15,640, $2,000, $12,000; Demobilization—Dominion Bureau of Statistics (including census 1921), $1,860,000; Trade and Commerce—Secretary of State, $50,000.

Supplementary Estimates.—Provisional bonus, allowance for inside and outside service of the Civil Service, $9,375,000.

That is as large as the whole of our Supplementary Estimates, exclusive of what is provided by way of loans.

Supplementary Estimates—Charges of Management—Offices of the Assistant Receiver General, etc., $12,000; Printing Dominion notes, $75,000; other items, $60,000, $1,000, $66,000; Civil Government—Printing etc., $1,700,

$4,800, $10,000; Department of Labour—contingencies, $20,000; High Commissioner's office, $7,000; Civil Service Commission, $4,800, $5,120, $10,000, $10,000, $25,000, $10,000; Legislation—Senate, $6,259, $7,800, $9,000, $4,700, $11,000, $8,800; Immigration and Colonization— contingencies in Canadian, British and Foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, $150,000; Exhibitions, $5,000; Pensions—Salaries and contingent expenses of the Board of Pension Commissioner for Canada, $350,000; Militia and Defence—Royal Military College, $35,000.

Then follow a number of votes for pensions of different amounts, and a gratuity. Next come these items.

Labour—Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $5,000; Conciliation and Labour Act, $24,000, Emergency relief, $500,000; Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—care of patients and limb factory operations, $1,600,000; Unemployment relief, $1,100,000; Miscellaneous—Printing Bureau, $13,000; Grant to Navy League of Canada, $5,000; Administration of the Business Profits War Tax, 1916, and the Income War Tax Act, 1917, $600,000; Expenses under the Naturalization Act, $12,000; Trade and Commerce—Canada Grain Act, Administration of, $60,000; Trade commissioners and commercial agents, $40,000; Weights and Measures, $10,000;

Civil Government—Department Secretary of State.

The items under this head relate to the departments of Secretary of State, Agriculture, Public Works, Trade and Commerce, and include the following amounts: $3,375, $1,125, $2,600, $2,400, $1,890, $1,800, $4,800, $2,880, $1,800, $1,800.

High Commissioner's Office, $7,000; Department of External Affairs, $4,000; Department of Public Archives, $5,500; Civil Service Commission, $7,100; Legislation—Senate, certain sessional indemnities, $3,000; House of Commons, contingencies, $17,000.

There follow other items respecting the House of Commons and the Parliamentary library. Now these items:

Immigration and Colonization, $28,000; Pensions, $700; Militia and Defence, $10,000, $5,000, $20,000, $3,000; Royal Military College, $25,000; Public Works—chargeable to capital, $100,000.

Let me take the votes for public works:

Public works—Nova Scotia, $1,500, $6,000, $3,000, $3,000; Public Works, New Brunswick, $5,000, $1,500; Public works, Quebec, $2,200, $25,000, $1,400, $2,750; Montreal, General Post Office, $30,000; Quebec, Immigration building, $15,000; Quebec, Post Office, $10,000; Quebec, Savard Park Hospital, $10,000; Three Rivers, Public Building, $4,750.

Now the votes for Ontario.

Public works, Ontario, $1,600, $2,600, $30,000, $2,000, $7,500, $1,000, $1,131, $4,000, $25,000, $2,000. $8,500, $2,000, $10,000, $13,000, $3,000, $5,400, $22,000, $9,000, $5,500, $100,000, $10,084, $2,500, $4,500, $350,000, $6,000, $7,500, $4,252.

Other items of public works are:

Public works, Manitoba, $1,300; Public works, Saskatchewan, $7,500; $2,000; $4,500; Public works, Alberta, $3,800, $1,000, $7,000, $2,400; Public works, British Columbia, $14,000, $3,500, $2,175, $6,000, $4,000; Generally—Public works, Armouries, $87,000; Dominion Public Buildings, $30,000; Rents, Repairs, Furniture Heating, etc.— Ottawa Public Buildings, $125,000; Telephone Service, $3,000; Dominion Public Buildings, $60,000.

In the matter of harbours and rivers there is a list of items as long as that presented in our estimates. The estimates for Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick cover a page of the official record for simply harbours and rivers. The items for Quebec and Ontario occupy almost the same. The next page is covered with estimates for Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and Yukon territory. The votes for roads and bridges run into many thousands, if not millions. The estimates for British Columbia occupy half a page. The mail subsidies and steamship subventions cover part of a page. For public works chargeable to capital—Marine department—there is a vote of $85,000. There are also votes for lighthouse and coast service, labour, soldiers' civil re-establishment —oustside service—and miscellaneous. There are two votes under soldiers' civil re-establishment one amounting to $600,000 and the other to $623,000. Under miscellaneous there is a vote of $45,000 for the Printing bureau, and one of $24,670 for the Conservation commission.

These items, Mr. Chairman, were passed in the very closing days of the session. I could quote many other items from the record, but I will simply direct the attention of the House to the time at which the House adjourned; it was 5.28 in the morning. My right hon. friend has appealed to his record. Very well, I have given it. If there ever was a worse scandal in the history of parliament in the passing of estimates I should like my right hon. friend to point to it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the object of the Prime Minister in making this long and rather wearying harangue must have been to take up as much time and leave as little for consideration and discussion as possible. I do not know what other relevancy his speech had.

Mr. ROBB: We have all next week before us.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The estimates enumerated were the main estimates. All that the Prime Minister has been reading had been before parliament for weeks and months; before parliament during weeks and months of persistent obstruction by these same hon. gentlemen in order that at last they could claim that a terrible injustice had been committed in getting them through. Nor was closure passed on that occasion. My hon. friends had the right to discuss those estimates as long as they liked. They had been debated time and time again during the session, and went through the same as other estimates.

Let me recall the facts. The large items were loans to the railways, $75,000,000 and so forth. It will be remembered that those were the cases in which my hon. friends opposite used to make their great speeches against public ownership. When these items were up during the session they took occasion to harangue against the disastrous character of public ownership, and for days and nights they kept this hall ringing with denunciations and the scandal of putting $75,000,000 in the estimates for this public ownership that was going to ruin Canada and bring it to the brink of bankruptcy—yea, push it over the precipice. By such speeches they held up the estimates all the session, and then at the last—with their own consent the same as in any other case—those estimates had to go through; there was no closure applied. What relation on earth, all this has to the subject we are discussing to-day—I am entirely at a loss to understand.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will not discuss the remarks of the leader of the Opposition in regard to public ownership at the present time. An occasion will come probably, before the House closes, to point out who really are the enemies of public ownership in endeavouring at every step to wreck the Canadian National Railways.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAHAM: The right hon. gentleman referred to "another place." I will not make any reference to it I will only say that I am surprised that the right hon. gentleman has such intimate knowledge of what is going to go on over there.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not, at any stage, make a reference to what was going to go on, I referred only to what had gone on.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend referred to a certain bill being kicked out, and the vote had not been taken at the time he was talking.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think it had. I was so informed; perhaps I was wrongly informed. I was informed it had been done on the motion of a Liberal Senator.

Mr. GRAHAM: There was a motion made in another chamber last night by the leader of my right hon. friend's party in the Senate for the six months' hoist for a certain bill, but unless the vote was taken a few moments after the House met this morning the matter was still undecided. However the facts as to that will develop in time. I wish to suggest to the committee that we get back to this item. I want to say this with respect to any circulars that were issued: I suppose there is not a party represented in this House but has at some time or other issued such circulars. I remember some beautiful illustrations on the bill boards in the last general election containing my right hon. friend's physiog., and an inscription stating that the country would be wrecked if he did not stay at the helm.

Mr. LAPOINTE: "Arthur will lead us through."

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. "Let Arthur do it". This is not a new work at Belle River. Up to this date $28,000 has been expended in keeping the harbour at Belle River open. Those who understand the situation will know that that vicinity is a flat country, almost on a level with lake St. Clair. Belle river runs in from the lake. Consequently in that entrance to the harbour up into the river there is constant silting, which has to be dredged practically every year. The proposition made now will be an economic one, to my mind, to put up a protection wall along the side of the channel and dredge it out, in the hope that this protection wall will do away with the necessity of an annual grant, which both sides of the House have been giving for years, to keep the channel open. As to coal and other commodities which are used and handled there, the desire is to make the channel deep enough to take a boat of a fifteen-foot draft. That is the whole story, and it is absolutely defensible. It will be an annual saving instead of being an annual grant to keep this channel clear.

I am not going to discuss the question of the election. I suppose even in Grenville there may have been some discussions. I have no doubt that it was said that when the Welland canal was finished they would have the elevators at Prescott. But I want to point out that one of the things impressed on me—and I urged strongly to have it go into the estimates—by my predecessor in office was this very item, and before he went South he handed me a memorandum of this item to have it put in the estimates, stating that it was absolutely necessary for Belle River. If there had been no election and our late lamented friend had not been called away—and nobody ever dreamed of the sad occurrence that necessitated the by-election—the item would have been in the estimates just the same. This item can be defended on the ground of utility and economy.

Mr. FORKE: I do not want to enter into any lengthy discussion in connection with this vote. Of course we are all anxious to know the right thing to do under the circumstances. The right hon. leader of the Opposition referred to harangues that have been delivered in this House this forenoon. I quite agree with him, and perhaps they can be placed in the proper category by those who have been listening to them. Referring to the posters and bills that have been exhibited in the House, I am not very much interested in them. I understood something about the procedure that took place in elections under the old-time system of carrying on elections. I wish to make a statement, but I do not make it in any boasting spirit. Some happenings have been taking place in Ontario that seem to have created a different atmosphere in the House for the last day or two. I want to tell this House that the spirit that brought the Progressive party into existence is alive to-day, and I may say that party is not satisfied with this system of carrying on public debates on public questions; and if hon. members think for one moment that that same spirit I speak of is decaying or going back, they are very, very much mistaken. I am more convinced as the days pass that that spirit is growing in this country and the country is tired of this method of discussing public questions. We are discussing an item of public interest, and we have had to listen almost for hours to lengthy speeches as to how elections were carried on. I protest against this. I know that it may seem presumptuous for a new member in this House to deal with such matters, but I think we have reached such a serious stage in Canada that we are entitled to discuss questions on their merit, and I am satisfied that a good deal of the discussion that has taken place to-day has not been directed to the question, whether the vote is right or wrong. I do not want to throw blame on any party, but I would like to say to members of the House that they can go into the constituency of Brandon, or they may go into any constituency in Canada, and if they can find any circular of the description which has been discussed, supporting the Progressive candidate, I will take back what I am saying just now.

Mr. HANSON: My hon. friend's party adopts the "Holier than thou" attitude.

Mr. FORKE: We can deal with my hon. friend some other time. We are not at all afraid. It may seem presumptuous for some members who have not been in parliament very long to make a few remarks and compel some of those of superior wisdom to keep quiet during the time we have the floor. We are very much enlightened by the remarks which come from these quarters. I do not know if I understand just exactly whether this is a proper item or not. It has been said that dredging has been carried on year after year. Now, if the government has been incurring this expense for years, and if this vote will obviate that expenditure in the future, I think it should pass. I am anxious—and I know the members behind me are anxious—to do what is right in this matter. I will confess that the quotations made by the Prime Minister a few moments ago were something of an eye-opener to me, in regard to passing these large sums of money in the closing days of the session. But that does not make it right. I think it is bad practice and should be discontinued as far as possible. At the same time I think I will have to vote for the appropriation in this particular case.

Mr. BAXTER: I think, perhaps, the item sinks into relative insignificance compared with the principle, or the lack of it, which has just been enunciated by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). On many occasions in this House we have been treated to declarations by the hon. member, and by some of the members of his party that the two old parties, not venerable at all because of their age, were absolutely worn out, and that we must look to these members to give us a lead and direction, and—shall I say—an uplift, in matters of public life. Yet we are read another lecture this morning, and we are told that matters which have been discussed are matters of utter indifference to this would-be great party. If there is anything in the matter being discussed this morning it is the question of whether the expenditures made by this parliament should be dictated by necessity and by principle, or whether the moneys of this Dominion should be flagrantly and openly used for the debauching of a particular constituency. And the hon. member for Brandon is utterly indifferent to such a thing as that. He refers to the two old parties and says that he will take no part in what he terms the squabble between those parties. If that be his attitude and the attitude of his party, he need not be at all surprised that the public is treating that party just in the way that that party deserved to be treated, in proportion to its hypocrisy with regard to the needs of public life. If debauchment is a matter of indifference to this party, if they care not whether expenditures are right or wrong, if they see no principle or lack of principle, if they will not rise and condemn a violation of principle in public life, what shrift can they expect from the electors who sent them here to represent the higher principle of driving these errors of the two old parties out of public life?

What my hon. friend wants to know is only this, not whether this wharf is to be used for bootlegging or for some suspicious boat or boats to be tied up to, but where it will be located and how much it will cost. It is a matter of utter indifference to him whether it is applied to a constituency or not. As he speaks in the name of his party, so may he expect his party to be judged by the electorate of Canada—and the handwriting is pretty plain upon the wall at the present day. You have been "weighed in the balances and found wanting." You have lickspittled to the government through the whole of one session and part of another, and you have traded upon the rights of the rest of Canada. You have got what you could; you have got your small pittance, and in the hour of your disappointment you say to the people of Canada: "These matters in connection with the two old parties are of no interest to me." It is not a new road in the West; it is not a question of grain rates; it is only a violation of public principles, only a lowering of the standard of national honour—and these things are all matters of indifference to the men of the great, boundless sweep of the prairies.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I said that I wanted to ask a question with regard to this item. We were told that there was a recommendation for some large sum of money. This item is for only $30,000. I should like to have it clearly stated what the estimate was on the recommendation made by the engineers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The original estimate by the engineer of the cost of work of construction was $72,500, the sheet pile wall being estimated at $60,000 sufficient to provide for an ultimate dredging of the channel to a depth of eighteen feet. But after further consideration it was decided that a wall to provide for the maintenance of a ten-foot channel would provide a channel for some time to come at a greatly reduced cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been waiting to see what answers would be made by the sober and sensible members of the government in connection with the charges made and admitted in regard to this by-election.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Admitted in what way?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member (Mr. Healy) said that he knew of this circular although he had not seen it. I do not know how he managed to dodge it. It must have been hard to dodge, but I take his word that he did dodge it.

Mr. HEALY: Might I be permitted to ask a question? I am afraid the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I have known for some time that the leader ot fhe Opposition (Mr. Meighen) had in his possession a circular which he proposed to use at an opportune moment. I have never seen the circular. I had heard that circulars were issued, but this is the first time I have ever seen it or heard it read. Whether it was issued by a friend of mine or by an enemy, I do not know. But I do know that the leading Conservative of Belle River and the gentleman who is mentioned in the circular got into a personal row over a shipment of a cargo of beer into that locality. Probably the gentleman whose letter has been produced here to-day, but whose name has not been given to us, is the man. I am not prepared to say. There is a circular, the only one I have ever seen. Whether it was issued by a friend or an enemy, I do not know. It is in print and there is no signature to it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know what the hon. gentleman interrupted me for. His interruption was certainly not to ask a question. What I said was that he said he had not seen this circular, and I did not know how he could dodge seeing it. He says that he does not know whether it was printed by a friend or an enemy. Let me tell him that it is printed by his friend, Mr. James Cooper.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And paid for.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How does the right hon. gentleman know that?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is printed. I do not propose to be drawn away from what is a real matter of public moment, and that is this: Does this government that wants to enforce the law, propose to be a party to this kind of illegal treatment and illegal practice? It is admittedly illegal. Or does the government intend to argue that this poster is legal? The government cannot do that; it knows that this is illegal. I will assume for the minute that it would be quite impossible to expect this government to enforce the law against its friends—let us assume that that will be too high a standard altogether to expect from this government, and that the law as against one of its friends will never be enforced. Let us go a step further. Is this government of the view that public moneys ought to be voted by it for the purpose of implementing a corrupt election practice? That is the grave question to which we want an answer. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said that he had never seen a greater scandal than what went on in former years when votes were being put through. I think the scandal consists rather in what is being done than in the amount of business that is being performed. I would ask my hon. friend if he could find in any of those votes consideration for value received, for goods delivered, for votes purchased? "King needs Tim'—So do you. Tim' and King. that's the thing." "Tim" is the first in this wonderful organization.

Mr. MARTELL: Quite a good organization.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They are delivering the goods, I admit. "Tim" starts the thing, but "King" is the man who is now supplying the money which enables this thing to be done. Hon. gentlemen say something about other circulars. They know that has absolutely nothing to do with the question. They know there can be honest circulars; they know there can be dishonest circulars which affront every single principle of our election law. It is cheap, easy, to refer to circulars, placards, of my right hon. friend adorning fences and that sort of thing. There was absolutely nothing wrong in that. No bribe was offered in any of those. We were not trying to bribe the electorate, nor did we.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Hon. gentlemen laugh. They think it is a matter for laughter that their party and their name can be associated with direct illegal promises, with direct bribes; and when anyone tries to say anything in connection with the matter, he is to be met with laughter, which is the only argument that can be advanced against a criminal proceeding.

Mr. PUTNAM: Will the hon. gentleman permit a question? Does he honestly say that that is what we are laughing at?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know what my hon. friend could not or would not laugh at. He laughs when he thinks that will serve any party advantage. I do not know how many of them are real laughs and how many are forced laughs or laughs of another character.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What kind is my hon. friend's laugh?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This, of course, is the only sort of argument.

Mr. JACOBS: The laugh that "speaks the vacant mind."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then there must be an awful lot of rooms to let over there. The government is responsible for the proper conduct of public business; it is responsible for the enforcement of Dominion legislation. Have hon. gentlemen no sense of decency left at all? When the result of this purely, absolutely, admittedly, illegal thing is brought to their attention it is met by bursts of laughter displaying the "vacant minds" which the hon. member (Mr. Jacobs) alludes to. Is that their idea of public decency? The Prime Minister talks about "scandal." Well, he is exhibiting the biggest kind of scandal; he is showing that the government are prepared to implement corrupt promises by votes.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I want to say on behalf of the government that this is the first time their attention has been called to the fact that there was such a circular in use in the by-election. Both the leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) know very well that the question of infractions of the election law is one that can be dealt with by the persons who engage in elections; and he and his friends, if there was any breach of the law, might very well have taken proceedings long ere this. My hon. friend is not fair: he entirely ignores the evidence, which is overwhelming, as to the representations to Mr. Kennedy of the municipality interested in regard to the expenditure of the money on this very work which was made by my right hon. friend's government in 1919, recognizing the necessity for keeping up an avenue of communication at Belle River. This proposition which we are submitting to parliament was originated long before the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Healy) came to the House. It was considered and reported upon by the engineers as a necessary public work which has been recognized by everyone in the country.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why does the hon. member not withdraw the vote now that he knows it is wrong?

At one o'clock the committee took recess

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question is on the amendment. Moved by Mr. Meighen that vote No. 508 be reduced by $30,000 by striking out the item, "Belle River—harbour improvements."

Amendment, (Mr. Meighen) negatived; Yeas, 5; Nays, 29.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—
St. John Harbour—improvements—further amount required..	$ 8,000
Toronto — Harbour improvements — further amount required..	600,000
Port Arthur and Fort William—Harbour improvements—further amount required..	192,200
	$800.200

Mr. MEIGHEN: Was the Ontario vote carried before the estimates had time to be opened?

The CHAIRMAN: No, they were opened.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know why the question was not put before one o'clock, or at one o'clock, when hon. members were here. However, the lesson is obvious.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I notice there is a vote of $600,000 for Toronto harbour improvements. The government is under a contractual obligation in connection with works in that harbour. The order in council is old, I know, and it could not be all carried out at once, but the work is much overdue. Is my hon. friend going to start the bridge this year under this vote?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The following are the items which make up this $600,000:

(a) Reconstruction in concrete of a further 478 lineal feet of the east pier of the eastern entrance; (b) to pay R. Miller & Sons, Limited the drawback held in connection with their contract for the construction of the western breakwater, if item (c) is not proceeded with.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What are the amounts?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): They are: $67,000 for the first and $50,000 for the second. Then:

(c) Toward the completion of the western breakwater, involving the construction of 4,270 lineal feet of breakwater, including returns, in 9 sections, fronting on approximately 4,760 feet of shore line along the exhibition grounds; total estimated cost, $1,033,340; amount required for 1923-24, $471,000. Then, (d) office maintenance, salaries, etc., further amount required, if breakwater to be completed, $12,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would point out that all that has been done here is in large part the work necessary to maintain the harbour itself; nothing is being done to implement the undertaking with the city. The city has a very vital interest in the question of the bridges which were agreed to be constructed before the war. As the amount is cut down so much in connection with this programme, and as the city has spent over $20,000,000 on its part, when is the bridge to be built, and why is there no provision for it now?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am instructed that a deputation representing the Toronto city council, the Exhibition commissioners and the city generally conferred with the Department of Public Works, and what is proposed to be done under this vote is the carrying out of their ideas. I am advised that they prefer that that should be done now rather than that the work should proceed on the bridges.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am quite sure they did not abandon the question of the bridges.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Oh, no.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And I am sure that this does not represent anything like what they wanted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I can only say what I am advised by the department.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. GOULD: By way of preface to an observation I wish to make on this item, I may say that hon. members opposite are very anxious to have these items passed without proper discussion.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Not at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. GOULD: That is shown by the frequent and insistent shouts of "carried." It would be a signal lesson to hon. gentlemen if by chance their names could be recorded to show how earnest they are in the matter of attention to what should be, and what is considered by this side, as the country's business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. GOULD: We have the right here, perhaps, to administer little political lectures as well as to receive them.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): If my hon. friend will permit me, I trust he will not misunderstand the attitude of the government. We are very anxious to have the fullest and freest discussion and to give all information.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The taking of a vote at 2 o'clock, before hon. members were in, looks like it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I had nothing to do with it.

The CHAIRMAN: I wish to say to the right hon. gentleman that the vote was taken considerably after 3 o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I meant 3 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: There was ample opportunity for all members to be present who desired to be here at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not very much after 3 o'clock now. I was detained for one minute by a man calling me at the door, and just as I came in the vote carried after discussion of only one item, although a great many other hon. members were anxious to discuss other items in that same vote.

Mr. BELAND: May I ask my right hon. friend who, in his estimation, is responsible for the passing of the item?—the committee?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would think so, yes. I think the committee knows who is responsible all right.

Mr. BELAND: What else could we do?

Mr. GOULD: I appreciate the statement of the minister in charge of the estimates, but I think that statement might well be directed to the hon. gentleman of whom I have complained; it might have cooled their ardour and their anxiety for the passing of these estimates as indicated by the continuous shouting of "carried, carried." I wish to make an inquiry with regard to the sandbars, to which reference has repeatedly been made in connection with these estimates. These sands have accumulated in the harbours and around the wharves; it seems to me they must be of some commercial value, and I rose to ask whether any commercial utilization was made of them as a sort of salvage by the government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am not an expert on that subject. With regard to the conditions that exist on the Atlantic coast I can say for my hon. friend's information that this sand is used in a great many cases in connection with building operations. Owing to the tremendous storms on the Atlantic the sand bars that are to be found around our harbours are continually moving from one part to another, and wharves and breakwaters are put up to regulate and control the movements of the current and the shifting of the sand so that the harbours can be kept open for navigation purposes. With regard to conditions on the St. Clair river near Detroit, the land there is very low-lying, almost on the level of the water, and there are also very large marshes. The sand shifts with the river current and breakwaters are necessary in order to maintain access to the harbour.

Mr. GOULD: Since the House rose at one o'clock I had the opportunity of having a conversation with a gentleman who resides in the vicinity of this flat land that is spoken of by the minister. I do not know the man's politics, I do not think he was speaking politically; but he told me, when I asked for information, that these lands were so flat that no matter what sort of breakwater was built—

Mr. CAHILL: What item is the hon. gentleman speaking to?

Mr. GOULD: I am speaking of Belle River.

Mr. CAHILL: That is passed.

Mr. GOULD: It has passed but the information might be useful to the committee. This man stated that in his opinion, no matter in what position a breakwater was put to block the sand it would not prevent the filling up of this harbour, because the land was so flat. The dredging of the harbour, he thought, would be another of these "hardy annuals" that I spoke of last night. If he is right, it does seem to me that the department or the government—not only this government but any government in power in this country—should always make an investigation first and determine whether it is possible in view of the current to prevent the movement of the silt and sand by means of a breakwater.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Any government or any responsible body that has to do with the expenditure of money must rely, not upon casual opinions given by gentlemen in the vicinity, but upon the opinions of their engineers who have been trained for this particular purpose. The recommendation to parliament in this case was made only after a study of the situation by the engineer of the department who has had long experience in this work. This is a technical matter, and we must rely upon the judgment of the engineer in each case.

Mr. GOULD: Again referring to sand bars, a large number of these items in the Supplementary Estimates are for dredging operations that must be carried on close to urban centres where sand is required for construction purposes, and it seems to me that the government should have before them some evidence to show that they have salvaged a lot of this sand for use in that way.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is in the records of the department, and I am sure the deputy minister will be glad to let my hon. friend have the information.

Mr. GOULD: Is there nothing on the records before the minister?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In the western part of Ontario there is an arrangement between the Public Works department and the province of Ontario by which the sand is distributed among the various municipalities and to individuals at a set price agreed upon.

Mr. GOULD: That is good information.

Mr. ARTHURS: I should like to ask how it comes that the engineers are so unanimously in favour of improvements in the constituency of Muskoka? There are four votes here out of about thirty-five for that county, and it just happens that the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. Hammell) has recently changed his seat in this chamber.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know anything about that, myself.

Mr. HAMMELL: If I have the permission of the Chair I can tell the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Arthurs) the reason why there are two or three small items here for that constituency.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why did you change?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why are you over there?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. member please tell us why he is sitting where he is?

Mr. HAMMELL: I am not sitting at present.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You won't be, very long.

Mr. HAMMELL: There is an item here of $2,700 for a breakwater in the town of Bracebridge. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Parry Sound has been at Bracebridge at some time during his career. Bracebridge is such an important centre, in fact, that the right hon. leader of the Opposition thought it worth his while to board a special train and deliver some of his eloquent speeches there during the campaign of 1921. The town wharf at Bracebridge is situated close to a large falls, and every spring during the freshet season sand is washed down from the foot of the falls to the wharf, making it necessary for considerable dredging to be done there every spring and summer. The engineers, some two or three years ago, reported that by the construction of a small breakwater the current could be diverted and this continual dredging be obviated. That is the reason why that item is there. Another item is for the village of Grassmere.

Mr. ARTHURS: What is the population?

Mr. HAMMELL: The population is quite considerable.

Mr. ARTHURS: How many?

The CHAIRMAN: I would like to draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that this vote has been passed, and he is not in order in discussing it now.

Mr. HAMMELL: I am quite satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN: We are on resolution No. 491—St. John harbour improvements, Toronto harbour improvements, and Port Arthur and Fort William harbour improvements.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This seems rather an unusual procedure. We took the other resolutions item by item and passed them that way.

The CHAIRMAN: It was agreed by the committee that the Ontario vote should be taken in bulk. It was asked by the hon. gentleman leading the opposition that the Nova Scotia vote be taken item by item, and it is only with the consent of the committee that the votes have been taken that way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Just to be accurate, Mr. Chairman, I did not ask that they should be taken item by item. The Chair did it, and perfectly properly. Then, later on, we thought we might save time by taking them in bulk, and we did so.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member leading the opposition was asked if we should take the first vote item by item. He gave his assent and the committee gave its assent also. That is the reason they were taken that way. We are now on resolution No. 491. Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution agreed to.

Public buildings—Nova Scotia, $146,650.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no doubt that it is the pleasure of the government, and probably of the hon. member for Halifax, that this vote carry. I notice that three of the items composing it are for the city of Halifax.—Halifax immigration building, $95,900, Halifax quarantine station, $17,000, and Halifax Rockhead hospital improvements, $25,000. Further on in the estimates very large sums will also be found for Halifax, and any who may have had any doubt as to the probability of a by-election in that riding this summer may now have their doubts set at rest.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The first of the three items is really an inter-departmental matter, it involves a payment to the Railway department who are the owners of pier No. 2 which is used in connection with the immigration business. The second item, repairs to the quarantine station—in this the Department of Public Works bears its share. The vote for the quarantine station is one which was made at the request of the Department of Health. They are remodelling the quarantine buildings throughout the Dominion so as to afford better facilities for the treatment of people who happen to be ill when they come to our shores. In the case of parties suffering from measles, or diseases of a like character which are not very dangerous, instead of requiring the ship to be sent to quarantine and holding the patients at some inaccessible point, necessitating also the holding up of people in sound health who are travelling at the same time, arrangements are being made now by the Department of Health not only at Halifax but at Quebec and other points where quarantine stations exist, whereby persons afflicted with disease of the character mentioned are brought ashore quickly for detention and treatment without detaining the other passengers. The request for this vote has come entirely from the Department of Health and from no other quarter.

Item agreed to.

Mr. HANSON: In regard to the vote of $5,000 for a public building site at Edmundston, I desire to offer my congratulations to the department for making this provision. Has the site been selected yet and if so what price has been paid and on what street is it located?

The CHAIRMAN: I have just declared resolution No. 492 carried. The hon. member would be more in order in speaking on resolution 493 which includes the item to which he refers,

Public buildings—New Brunswick—
Edmundston—public building site	$ 5,000
St. John quarantine station—new buildings, repairs, etc..	15,000
Sackville—public building..	15,000
Sussex—public building—improvement—revote	4,500
Tracadie lazaretto—installation of electric light system—improvements, etc..	6,500
	$46,000

Mr. HANSON: I simply wish to know whether the site at Edmundston has been purchased. If so, what is the purchase price and where is it situated?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) My information is that on account of the construction of the new international bridge at Edmundston there is necessity for this public building. No site has yet been purchased. I understand that it is desirable that the site, if possible, should be near the bridge.

Mr. HANSON: There has never been a decent post office at Edmundston since it has been a town. I had great pleasure in calling the attention of the minister last year to the necessity for this building. I am glad now to see that my efforts are bringing forth fruit.

Mr. BROWN: I suppose it has not been suggested that this vote is prompted by any political motive on the part of the minister?

Mr. HANSON: You could not elect a Tory there no matter what you did.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In this resolution, No. 493, there is an item of $15,000 for a public building at Sackville. May I ask the minister what practice the government follows in connection with these new public buildings? Is the contract let by tender, or in what way is the work carried out?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): All this work is done by contract after calling for tenders. Nothing is being done by day work.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is a new building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. HANSON: Sackville is a university town of very considerable importance, and a very large community would be served by this building. If the members of the House could see the structure that has served as a post office in Sackville since 1894, when I first knew that community, they would realize that this vote should have been made years ago. I should like to know if this is the total vote for the purpose? I do not think it is adequate.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is intended merely for the purpose of obtaining a site and preparing plans so as to provide for building next year.

Mr. GARDINER: What is this public building used for?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): For a customs house and post office.

Mr. GOOD: Are we considering these votes item by item or in bulk form?

The CHAIRMAN: We are considering the bulk vote. If the committee desire to consider these resolutions item by item, and so intimate, we will do so. We are now considering resolution 493.

Mr. GOOD: I suggest it would take up very little more time if we considered the resolution item by item.

Mr. BUREAU: The committee have already passed upon that.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. member moves a resolution to that effect and it carries that procedure will be adopted during the consideration of these estimates.

Mr. GOOD: I protest against considering these resolutions in bulk form.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): A great many of these items are of a purely routine character and it would be a waste of time for the committee to discuss them. If my hon. friend, or any other member, wants information on any particular item as we go along I shall be very glad to give it.

Mr. GOOD: It will take very little more time to read over each item and if we have no particular objection they can be carried. I think that would be a very much better procedure: it would give an opportunity to any hon. member to say anything he wished with respect to any matter that arises.

The CHAIRMAN: The opportunity is given to every member of the committee to discuss any item he wishes. The items are all read out. Now as to resolution 493, what is the pleasure of the committee?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: One question more. In regard to the item of $15,000 for the quarantine station at St. John, what is the purpose of this station? Is it to segregate and quarantine immoral politicians, or what is the purpose?

Mr. GRAHAM: At St. John? The idea!

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If it is, I will vote for it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The Department of Health recommends this vote.

Mr. BELAND: I do not want at all to delay the proceedings, but my hon. friend (Mr. Speakman) is generally so fair that I think his question should be answered. St. John quarantine station is the second most important station in Canada. It is a winter station for use when the station at Quebec is closed. We receive through St. John a very large number of immigrants.

Resolution agreed to.

Public buildings—Prince Edward Island—Charlottetown—old bank building—repairs to roof, $4,000. Souris building—installation of electric wires, $1,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Purely repairs.

Resolution agreed to.

Maritime provinces generally—Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs etc.—further amount required, $5,200.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the minister to explain this vote.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is required for the following improvements and repairs: Halifax customs house, repointing the exterior walls; North Sydney naval station, repairs to roofs. The latter was established during the war and the roofs are found to be in such a bad condition as to result in complete decay unless repairs are made. The other item has been reported on in the regular way by the inspectors of public buildings.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister, I think, was talking of resolution 494. I was addressing myself to resolution 495.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is what I was speaking of.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are there two public buildings to be dealt with?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend will see that the vote applied to Dominion public buildings in the Maritime provinces. I gave the two purposes for which the vote was required; $4,000 in Halifax for repointing the exterior walls of the custom house; and $1,200 for repairs to the roof of the North Sydney naval station.

Resolution agreed to.

Public buildings—Quebec—repairs and improvements, $180,000.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that we consider this resolution item by item, or deal with it generally?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): If any hon. member desires information with respect to any particular item I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. ARTHURS: I should like to ask the minister what the policy of the department is in regard to new public buildings. I see this item in the resolution:

Terrebonne—new public building—re-vote $15,500. $22,000.

When we have asked for public buildings in various districts in Canada, we have been met with the objection that the country was poor and could not afford it. The people wanted some buildings in my riding, and I think other districts were in the same position, but they were put aside owing to the war. Large sums have been voted, but the construction was delayed owing to the war. If the policy of the government is to start a new programme now, and commence to erect public buildings in very unimportant places, I think the House should know it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Unless the necessities of the district require the building, it is not the policy of the government, except in exceptional cases, to indulge in the erection of any new buildings. But hon. members will recall the terrible fire that took place at Terrebonne last winter; they will remember that the town and all the facilities for carrying on the public affairs, post office and customs, were destroyed, and at present they have no building. In such a case the government feel it is only right the building should be replaced in order to enable the community to do business.

Mr. BUREAU: The whole town was swept out of existence.

Resolution agreed to.

Public buildings—Ontario, $316,400.

Mr. HANSON: One item here is "Haileybury—Armoury and post office $35,000." Surely this government is not building a new armoury?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The town of Haileybury suffered from a disastrous fire. The building was insured, and we are simply taking insurance money to replace the buildings. There are no other new buildings.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was insured by the municipality.

Mr. GOOD: Does the committee decide by the majority vote to take the estimates item by item, or otherwise?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. GOOD: Then I move that these estimates be taken item by item.

Mr. BUREAU: That point was decided yesterday. The hon. member was not in the House yesterday, but that was not the fault of the committee. I do not see that we should reverse our decision simply because the hon. member did not see fit to attend the sessions of the committee yesterday. However, I am willing to stay here till September.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not know that the decision yesterday would bind the committee during all its sessions. It was simply decided to adopt that course yesterday.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member stayed away yesterday, but returns to-day and objects to these items being taken in the manner we decided yesterday.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The Chairman will read each item, and if the hon. member wants any information in regard to an item as we go along, I will be delighted to give it to him. If any new expenditures are being inaugurated, it is only right and proper that they should be discussed. In the case of simple repairs, which have all been reported upon by the permanent engineers of the department, it seems to me that no good purpose will be served by going over them all. I hope the hon. member will adopt my suggestion.

Mr. McDONALD (Timiskaming): With regard to the armouries and post office at Haileybury, I may inform the committee that practically about all that is asked for in this $35,000 vote is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $1,000. If you consider interest on $33,000 since the 10th of last October up to the present time, it will bring the amount close to $34,000, or about that sum. The armouries in Haileybury have been rented. It seems that the Public Works department or the Militia department do not rent their buildings, but they give them on the understanding that they shall be insured. The people of Haileybury were insuring these buildings any time they got the use of them for tombolas, dances or other entertainments, and they found it was expensive to insure them by the day—or night—or by the week. The board of trade and city council got together and decided to take out a yearly insurance. They placed $33,000 on the armouries, and about two months after the insurance had been effected the armouries were burned. Immediately afterwards, about the 10th October, the money was turned into the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and all they are asking here is practically $1,000, in conjunction with their own money and interest to build a post office and put a roof on the armouries; so that they will be available for use.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think that is quite a fair statement of the situation. I do not pretend to know the conditions at Haileybury, or whether the armouries are needed or not. I never had very much sympathy with this talk about nothing being needed in military expenditure because of the League of Nations and because the last war was fought. That never appealed to me. It appealed more to hon. members of the government.

Mr. McDONALD (Timiskaming): Would the hon. member be in favour of voting $1,000 to the people who have been burned out and lost everything they owned there, so as to provide them with a post office, leaving out the question of the armouries?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not saying whether the vote is right or wrong. I do not think the statement of the hon. member was an exact statement of the facts.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The fact that the armoury has been burned does not make the insurance money the property of the people of the district. It is the property of the people of Canada. It may be the insurance premium was paid as and by way of rental for the building, for the privilege of using it, because the danger of fire is greater in that case. That is the usual practice. That does not establish any claim on the insurance money. What we are deciding is whether we should erect the building. I am not objecting to that, but I do not want the hon. member's statement that it is the money of the district to go unchallenged.

Mr. GRAHAM: If it had not been insured the government would not have got anything, and we should have been asked to vote this money just the same; but in the Militia department they endeavour to exact the protection of the public building by asking those who use it to insure. In this case the armoury was being used continually by the people of Haileybury. They carried the insurance and it did not cost the government anything. In the vote of this amount of money, we just place our building, with the insurance money, where it was before, and put up an armoury more suitable to Haileybury. It must be remembered that Haileybury was wiped out. I received a cheque for the insurance myself and handed it in to the Receiver General.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think any one is disputing the receipt of the cheque. My hon. friend is buying some new building in Ottawa. Where is it? We start with $26,000. The item is:

Ottawa—towards purchase of building for government work shops, $26,000.

The CHAIRMAN: While the hon. minister is looking up that information, does the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) desire to have his motion put to the committee, that we should deal with these estimates item by item while they are being passed?

Mr. GOOD: I was interrupted. I was going to speak again on that matter. I am sorry I was not present yesterday, but I do not understand that the vote was that all the contents of these pages should be voted in a lump sum. I thought it referred only to certain specified blocks of items. If I was misinformed, and if this committee and all the component parts of it agreed to a general principle of putting through the items, I shall have to abide by that decision. But it seems to me a very foolish kind of decision, if I may say so.

The CHAIRMAN: I call the hon. member's attention to the fact that each numbered item is a vote made up of certain parts, any one of which, or the whole item, can be debated, and amendments introduced.

Mr. GOOD: If we had had time to go through these lists carefully and to mark those items that we wished to take up, the situation would be different. As it is, we are considering this very largely for the first time; and at the rate at which you read, it is pretty hard to form any adequate understanding of what is in one of these blocks of, maybe, twenty-five items. Very little longer time will be consumed if we take each item by itself, and if there is no objection, let it go through. If, however, the committee has come to a decision, I shall have to abide by the consequences.

Mr. CARROLL: While we are considering this as a bulk vote, that does not prevent any hon. gentleman from discussing any item in the vote to his entire satisfaction.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Good) claims that he has not had time to read the item. I would suggest that in order to make progress, we might suspend proceedings for about ten minutes, in order to give him an opportunity to read it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The workshops in connection with the Public Works department in Ottawa have been reported on by the foreman of heating and plumbing, the assistant mechanical engineer and the junior mechanical engineer, as being absolutely unsanitary, and having conditions which have resulted in illness to the employees who work therein. Recommendations have been made to the department that they should obtain a building known as the Wine Vault building on George street, for government workshops in place of the Harris and Campbell building at the corner of Queen and O'Connor streets.

Mr. CALDWELL: What is meant by "government workshops?" What kind of work is carried on?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Carpenters, plumbers, masons—all men of that character who are employed, I understand, permanently in connection with carrying on all the repairs of this building and every other public building in Ottawa belonging to the government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who is the owner of the building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Labelle & Brulé.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the assessed value of the property?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not think we have that here. Negotiations have not been closed.

Mr. ARTHURS: Has the government not a large number of buildings on Wellington street which are at present unoccupied?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am going to take that matter up in a moment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why are we voting this money to purchase another building when we already have buildings unoccupied?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend will remember that a plan of a most comprehensive character was prepared a number of years ago. If he looks at item No. 490, he will see that it reads:

Ottawa—new departmental buildings—compensation to architects for designs submitted, $30,000.

Hon. gentlemen are, perhaps, aware that a large tract of property running from the Supreme Court in a northwesterly direction along Wellington street was expropriated a number of years ago by the government. It was planned that there should be erected, in place of those old buildings which are very dilapidated, a series of permanent buildings where all the departments might be housed, instead of having them as they are to-day, in rented buildings scattered throughout Ottawa.

In 1912, the then government asked for competition among architects for the submission of plans and designs for buildings that would cover that particular part of the city, so as to carry out the idea of the then government. Owing to the war and the financial conditions that followed, all proceedings in connection with those plans were abandoned. Until the country is in a position to carry on a comprehensive plan for dealing with the situation, it is the policy of the government not to spend any money in connection with it. I am instructed by the departmental officers that reports are on file in the department, having regard to the health of the men employed in the present workshops, as to the impossibility of their carrying on under present conditions. This building is situated in the immediate vicinity of and convenient to the Hunter building where the present offices are. The whole matter has been reported upon and recommended by the officials.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister himself shows that nothing is being done with the large plan. There are some very good buildings on the site. I do not think that the Minister of Finance is of opinion that we ought to embark on that large and expensive plan for many years. Why could we not use some of our own property and stop buying property that we do not require?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The deputy minister advises me that all buildings there suitable for present governmental purposes are occupied and used by other departments.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will this amount be sufficient to buy the building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. CALDWELL: Is this only a starter? I really think the government should consider the withdrawal of this item for the purpose of buying a new building at this time, especially in view of the fact that the other Chamber is likely to give our bill in connection with railway extensions the six months' hoist on the ground that we have not the money to build branch lines to feed our present system of railways. It looks as if we were casting about in the archives of the old departments for plans or suggestions that we might spend more money. At this time we should consider very seriously any new expenditures. There should be a great objection to bringing down Supplementary Estimates of this size at this late date of the session, but I am not going to discuss that feature of the question now. I have no objection even at this late date to Supplementary Estimates being brought down for necessary repairs for carrying on the necessary work of the country, but an item for the purchase of a new building should not be put in the Supplementary Estimates, and I would urge strongly on the minister that he consider the advisability of withdrawing this appropriation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is proposed to sell the present building which, according to the sanitary authorities, the medical authorities and the engineers, is not suitable, owing to the conditions under which the men have to work. It is proposed to negotiate for the purpose of the other building, using this particular vote for the purpose. That, I am instructed by the department, is the only reason why this should be done.

Mr. CALDWELL: Where is the building that is probably to be sold, and what price could the government get for it? Have we any idea what the new building will cost?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The building at present used is situated at the corner of Queen and O'Connor streets. It is the policy of the department that they should utilize the sale of this other building as a site for building purposes in connection with stores for the purpose of obtaining the new building. Under the exchange which, it is expected, will be made, this appropriation will cover the whole of the cost of making the change, with the result that the men who work in Ottawa permanently will work under better conditions.

Mr. CALDWELL: Could the present building not be remodelled and made so that it would answer the purpose just as well? I do not wish to delay the discussion on this item, but I feel very strongly that this should be cut out. In order to facilitate business, I move that this item be reduced by the sum of $26,000, so as to cut out the item in connection with purchasing a building for government workshops.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a queer way of not delaying the proceedings.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): On this matter the government has no policy except the desire to do what is absolutely necessary. I think that the committee will pretty generally agree that the government cannot allow to continue a state of affairs in which carpenters, plumbers, masons and other workmen who are permanently employed by the department must carry on their work in unsanitary conditions that inevitably lead to bad health and sickness.

[Mr. Caldwell.]

Mr. CALDWELL: How much of the plumbing, or of the masonry, on this house is done in buildings in some other part of the city? It seems to me that men who are engaged on a particular building should not have to spend very much of their time in some other part of the city.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am neither a carpenter nor a mason, nor do I believe my hon. friend is. I know enough about these occupations, however, to be convinced that these men must have some shops or some place where they can prepare their material before working on the particular building on which they are engaged. I am instructed by the officials that the conditions under which these men work are not satisfactory. As a matter of fact they are unsanitary, and it is imperative that they be improved. My hon. friend must realize that a carpenter uses a variety of tools and a great quantity of accessories which it is impossible for him to carry around with him. He simply must have a shop; at least, every carpenter and every plumber that I have ever known have found it necessary to have some place in which to store their tools, and all the appurtenances of their trades. Of course, if the workman is an itinerant gentleman and is content to walk around with his hat on his head then the conditions to which my hon. friend refers might exist.

Mr. CALDWELL: I quite realize that a plumber needs a shop; but the minister's idea of a carpenter's work seems to me to be somewhat like a story I once heard of a tramp. He asked a farmer for dinner and was told to go and hoe some beans. The tramp wanted the dinner first and he got it, and when the farmer asked him, "What about the beans?" he replied, "Bring along your beans if you want them hoed." Evidently there are a lot of carpenters engaged on this work who want the work taken to them.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Let me read from the report:

> Ever since the Hunter building was built our men have had to work with electric light all day long. Think of mechanics having to work their whole day in a place like this. Lots of coal mines have better conditions than our shop, and as far as convenience is concerned, I can take a hand lawnmower in, but anything larger than that has to be taken apart as there is no door other than down a flight of stairs. The Ottawa Car Company of this city used to have their shop underground but the health authorities, through complaints of the factory inspector, compelled them to put their shop on the ground level. But they seem to have no jurisdiction over a government shop, therefore our employees have to suffer with conditions that lots of commercial firms would not tolerate.

If my hon. friend wants this condition to continue then he can press his motion.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are these shops underground?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Apparently they are.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think anybody wants an unsatisfactory condition of affairs to continue. That is not the point. But here is a government that owns any amount of property in the city, a great deal of it idle.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is not correct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, a great deal of it, as anyone can see for himself.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am instructed by the deputy that that is not correct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let anyone look for himself and see the vacant land owned by the government which is not being put to use.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend's government tried architects from all over the world and arranged for people to supervise the plans of this building. Does he mean to say that all that was done must be rendered futile?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend told us before that the government had to stop on account of financial conditions, and he knows perfectly well it will be many years before the plans can ever be gone on with. He knows also that we have any amount of property which we are renting at nominal rates because we cannot get any use for it; and this is the case both east and west. We have large tracts which are bringing in nominal rents of a dollar a year and the like. And yet the government at a time like this, undertakes new investments. The thing is ridiculous.

Mr. MARTELL: I think my hon. friend would be the first to oppose any suggestion on the part of the Department of Public Works that we should vote $10,000,000 to put up new buildings. It should be done, but he would oppose it because this government is in power.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I appeal simply to the sense of fairness of the committee. I happen to be one of the members representing the city of Ottawa and as such I think I might offer an explanation. If any hon. member who has spoken against the purchase of this property will go and examine for half an hour the building that now stands at the corner of Queen and O'Connor streets, and after that declare that the men working there are working under conditions that would be put up with in any civilized country, then he is not fit to be a member of this House. In that building at present there are about two or three hundred employees. It has been stated that some carpentering goes on there, and that is true. All the furniture that is repaired for the various departments is sent there, and the upholstering is done there. The masons and the plumbers have their quarters in the building, but their work constitutes only a small portion of the activi-

4 p.m. ties that are carried on in the place. The men employed in the forge and those who are welding pipes are working underground in the areas under the sidewalks along Queen and O'Connor streets. These men are using drills and machinery weighing two or three tons, some very much heavier than that; besides presses of all kinds. Molten metal is also taken out of some of the machines and formed into the equipment that is required in connection with the various departments. These men have to work in artificial light, and the only ventilation they have comes through the small windows situated immediately between the sidewalk and the ceiling. This condition has not been condemned by the provincial authorities because they have no power in the matter. In over ninety per cent of the offices there is no light because they are hemmed in by the adjoining buildings. There is a system of ventilation, it is true, but in all the offices the employees work in artificial light from morning till night the year round. It is true that the government owns large tracts of land along Victoria street and along Sussex street, and hon. gentlemen ask, why not establish the workshops in some of these buildings? Have they considered the practicability of installing the forges in these buildings in Victora street that are in a ramshackle, tumble-down state? Why two or three turns of the flywheel and the buildings would fall. Right along Sussex street, where this proposed purchase is to be made, there is the old Geological Museum now used for some purposes similar to those of the workshops in question. Next to that there is the large tract of land now used by the Department of Public Works for the storage of their cranes, trucks, sand, stone, piping and the like. This building is the only one that the architects have found suitable for the purpose, because of its reinforced concrete walls, ceilings and foundations, which will permit of the installation of the plant and will provide workable conditions for the employees. It was proposed in 1920 that this item should form part of the estimates. In 1921, it was recommended that the item go in, but for reasons of economy, probably, it was not included. I have always stood for economy, but I refuse to stand for economy when it is to the detriment of the working people. The government has had this building for eight years at a rental of $8,000 a year, so that the building will in due time pay for itself. There is no doubt that, if not within the next few years, at least some time in the future, the proposed development in the matter of departmental buildings for Ottawa will take place, and in that event this building is just where it will serve the best purpose. I appeal to the spirit of fair play of the committee on behalf of the workingmen now engaged in the public service of Canada.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Does the government own the building on the corner of Queen and O'Connor streets?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): What is to be done with that building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have explained that it is the intention to sell it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I am sure that hon. members have no desire to keep our masons, plumbers and other workingmen in unsanitary surroundings, and the proposal of the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) that this item be reduced should not be coupled with any suggestion of that kind. Why, there are offices in the Parliament buildings where the members cannot carry on their work without the continuous use of artificial light, and where there is no ventilation except what is afforded through a window or door. So that the conditions are similar in some parts of this building to what has been described by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevier). The government owns a considerable quantity of land in the city upon which they intend ultimately to erect departmental offices, and I rather think the present is a poor time to embark upon the purchase of more property. If this building is unsanitary, why not fix it up; why not make it sanitary? That would be much better than starting out on the purchase of new property. This item is for $26,000, but the minister tells us that will not complete the purchase.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I said it would, when the proceeds for the sale of the present building are added.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): Will that complete the entire plan which is proposed?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is what I am instructed.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: How many buildings in Ottawa are used by the government?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon friend has asked me a big question. I think he had better wait till the Minister of Public Works himself is here.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: When we are voting this item, it is important to know what buildings are used by the government.

Mr. CALDWELL: This is not an item that should be in the Supplementary Estimates. The condition is not one that arose within the last month or two months; it seems it has been a permanent condition. I still think we should cut this item out and if necessary put it in the Main Estimates next year. We will have a chance then of considering it.

Mr. McGIVERIN: My hon. friend and colleague (Mr. Chevrier) has stated the present condition of the shops: it is simply disgraceful. The present building was purchased sixteen or seventeen years ago at a price of, I think, $42,000; to-day it is worth two or two-and-a-half times that amount. The point is that it is not now suitable for the purposes for which it is used.

Mr. CALDWELL: How long has it been used for its present purpose?

Mr. McGIVERIN: Ever since it was purchased—I think about seventeen years if my memory is correct.

Mr. CALDWELL: How long is it since the government found it was not sanitary?

Mr. McGIVERIN: It has been complained of for the last four or five years. The question has been raised whether any of these other buildings which were purchased in 1912 could be used for this purpose. The answer to that is that they are practically all old buildings which were taken over in connection with the plan for the erection of the new departmental offices. It seems to me that this is a very good exchange. The old building is in the central part of the city, and is very valuable. It could either be changed in some respects so that the upper parts could be used as offices, or it could be sold, and if it is sold I am convinced that the government can make a very good deal in connection with it. We do hope in time to have proper departmental buildings in Ottawa so that the payment of heavy rentals may be avoided. That may not be a very popular thing for me to say, but it is the sane, businesslike way to deal with the matter. I speak subject to correction on the advice of the Deputy Minister of Public Works, but I am sure that the government has no building suitable for this purpose. I think, therefore, that we should carry the item, not only because to do so will be in the interests of the workingmen, but because it is a sound business proposition.

Mr. ARTHURS: Has the government an option on this property?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes—$116,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: What will be the cost of repairs, installation of machinery and so on?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The estimate is $25,000.

Mr. CALDWELL: Has the government any assurance as to what it will get for the old building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Valuations have been made upon it.

Mr. CALDWELL: But no offer?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The whole thing is to go through subject to that.

Amendment (Mr. Caldwell) negatived; Yeas, 38; Nays, 74.

Mr. GOOD: I should like a little information on two of these items, the Toronto casualty clearing station and the Toronto building for the Seed branch.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In regard to the casualty clearing station item, which is in full and final settlement of all claims of the Canadian National Railways for property expropriated, this is really nothing more than a book-keeping entry; it is required to pay the Canadian National Railways in full and final settlement of all claims whether for compensation or otherwise in respect to the expropriation and possession of land lying west of McLennan Avenue. These lands originally belonged to the railway and they were taken over by this department during the war for the purpose of building a casualty clearing station. There is no further use for it, and this is simply a book-keeping entry to clear up the matter.

In regard to the building for the Seed branch this is simply a preliminary vote which has been placed in the estimates at the request of the Department of Agriculture, who desires to obtain a building in Toronto in connection with their seed work.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have had difficulty for a good many years now in securing proper accommodation for our seed laboratories. It is very essential to have a northern light for seed inspection and examination, and this vote is for the purpose of securing a site for such a building so that we shall not be dependent forever on rented quarters that invariably are not suited for the purpose.

Mr. BROWN: Why is this money being spent in Toronto?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That has been the headquarters of the seed laboratory work for many years. It serves all of western Ontario and is the centre of a large portion of the clover and grass seed work which are two of the most important items in connection with our laboratory work.

Mr. HALBERT: I notice that $113,000 is being spent in Toronto. Is the minister sure that none of this is to debauch the Tory electors of Toronto?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend lives closer to Toronto than I do, but it seems to me it is pretty difficult to lead those Toronto Tories back to the true faith.

Mr. CHURCH: What about a custom house for Toronto?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We have a number of experimental farms and is there any reason why this laboratory could not be located on one of them?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is only one experimental farm on which it could be located, and that is the Central farm at Ottawa. That is not the centre of the work. You would have to bring the whole of the work of western Ontario to Ottawa. Besides, the headquarters have been in Toronto since the inception of this laboratory work, right in the centre of the field where the work is required. The work has grown into great importance especially for export purposes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the great urgency for going on with this work this year? Cannot we wait a year or two longer? We have been doing very well, you know.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The urgency is that we have been constantly changing our quarters in the past on account of having to rent, and we have had great difficulty in getting quarters with the proper light. We think the time has come in the importance of this industry when we should have quarters of our own. Why not wait?—the hon. member says. Because we have frequently to change our quarters, and we have great difficulty in securing the proper light, and good light is the first essential in this work.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the minister can give no better reason for going on with the work this year—

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the hon. gentleman does not know enough about the work to know if it is a good reason or not.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That may be the honourable and parliamentary retort of the minister. He usually retorts that way when he gets into difficulties. But may I suggest that he has not, in my opinion given a sufficient reason? And if there is no better reason I do not think the vote is justified this year. It may be that the time will come when it will be justified, but not under existing financial conditions. In two short years of parliamentary experience I have come to the conclusion that this government, which came into power on an economy platform, has been spending money like a drunken sailor. I think this item may well stand over.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Clark, the Seed Commissioner, tells me that in some of our laboratories we are not getting over sixty per cent efficiency, due to the bad light. If you can scarcely see to do your work you have to take just so much longer time. Mr. Clark has made a close analysis of the work performed by the staff under different lighting conditions and has found that between good and bad lighting conditions there is just the difference of between one hundred per cent and sixty per cent, and in addition you do not get proper results with a poor light. Why should we give excuses for this work? These are absolute reasons I am giving. Why should we object to spending money in Toronto on work that is required? This accommodation has been required for some years, and the need is becoming more urgent all the time because of the increased importance of the work.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not ask for any excuse when I asked my question. I asked for a reason and I have not yet obtained it. Why could not the laboratory be located at the Experimental farm? There is good light there, and the only reply I got was that the laboratory has always been in Toronto. That is no reason. If Ottawa is sufficiently central to carry on experimental work of all kinds I cannot see why it would not be suitable for this work rather than spending money here, there and everywhere all over the country for buildings. I asked if there was any underlying reason why this work could not be done in connection with an experimental farm, and the minister has not yet given me an answer.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend speaks of this as experimental work.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not use the expression that this was experimental work. I asked why it could not be carried on in connection with an experimental farm.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes, implying that it was experimental work. My hon. friend is familiar with the quarters in Winnipeg where the grain inspection is performed, and knows that the very first essential in this work is light. It is the same with this seed inspection work, only even more essential because the grass seeds are much smaller than the cereal seeds. Ottawa is not sufficiently central. Toronto is a more central city. Therefore if we are to give the proper service such as we want to do the building must be suitably located for the work necessary to be performed.

Mr. GOOD: Will the minister tell us what this vote is for? Is it to buy land and construct a building suitable for the purpose?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know the details of the vote; that information can be given by the Public Works department. I presume it is for the purpose of making a start. The first investment usually is to secure a site.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to have information on this point. I know something in regard to the subject.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): As far as the department of Public Works is concerned the position of affairs is this. The amount is required towards the purchase of a site on which to erect a building for the Seed branch of the Department of Agriculture. No plans or specifications have yet been decided upon. The matter was initiated for the first time by the Department of Agriculture a few weeks ago. Dr. Grisdale the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, writes as follows:

> The department has been looking into the possibility of acquiring certain land and erecting a new building for our Seed branch in the city of Toronto. A site has been located for this purpose at 84 Collier Street, about two blocks north of Bloor street and about 200 yards east of Yonge street. This property contains a frontage of 84 feet and a depth on the level of the street of about 120 feet where the lot drops into a ravine 60 or 70 feet below the level of Collier street. The total depth of the lot is said to be 164 feet.

Nothing has yet been done beyond this request to the Department of Public Works to provide a vote for enabling a commencement to be made.

Mr. SHAW: What is the proposed cost of this site? Surely we can have some general estimate of that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): As a department we have no information on the subject.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is not the site for this building very far up? What is the reason for the selection of such a site?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Dr. Grisdale, Deputy Minister of Agriculture simply suggests the site on Collier street as a possible one. Nothing has been done by this department in the matter of making a purchase. The whole matter will be reviewed by the officials of the Public Works department before anything is done in regard to it.

Mr. BROWN: Is this building intended to serve for the province of Ontario, and therefore Toronto chosen, or is it intended to serve the whole Dominion?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Dominion is divided into, I think, six areas for seed purposes. This is the one for the province of Ontario. There is one at Calgary, another at Winnipeg, and still another in the Maritime provinces—five or six in all. There is a centre selected for each area and Toronto happens to be the centre for this particular one. If any better centre could be secured I suppose there would be no objection to taking it. Toronto is the centre for Ontario just as Winnipeg is the centre for Manitoba, and Calgary the centre for the western part of the prairies.

Mr. MARTELL: I do not think the minister can be accused of partisanship in this matter. If he desired to germinate political seeds in favour of the government he would hardly go to Toronto.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think hon. members may be well assured of one thing: Any single advantage that this government gives to Toronto is given because it cannot be helped.

Mr. GOOD: It seems to me, from the letter which was read from Dr. Grisdale and from the other information which we have had, that this is a new idea, in fact the statement was made that it originated only a few weeks ago. It occurs to me that the vote should stand over for further investigation. I happen to know something about the University buildings at Toronto and the buildings of the Agricultural college at Guelph, and I should like to see whether some arrangement could not be made to utilize the buildings of these two institutions, which are empty for a great part of the year and where the most excellent facilities may be enjoyed. I am not in a position to say that it would be convenient to do so, but it seems to me we should go rather cautiously in a proposition of this kind. I would strongly recommend that the matter be held over for further investigation. I do not think we have sufficient evidence at the present time to justify this expenditure.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I desire to say on behalf of the Department of Public Works that the department will not regard itself bound to any particular site. It will go into the whole question with the greatest possible care in order to have the site for this building located in the proper place with the least expense and with a view to promoting the best interests of the country. Nothing whatever has been done to commit the department in any way, and the whole matter will be carefully considered before any expenditure is made.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Is this vote for the site only?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is only for the site.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): What further expenditure is anticipated? Where is it going to end?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Nothing further can be done without parliament voting the money. But you cannot start to build without securing a site. My hon. friend will see I am sure, that fault would be found if we proposed to parliament a large expenditure without making all necessary inquiries and having complete information. We are proceeding cautiously. Nothing has been settled about a site; we have simply had a recommendation from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. Nothing further can be done without coming to parliament for authority and I say, on behalf of the department that nothing will be done without the greatest possible care and thorough examination of the location.

Mr. HOCKEN: Who are the present owners of this property on Collier street?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have no information on that point. The only information the department has is contained in the letter from Dr. Grisdale.

Mr. HOCKEN: He selected the site apparently?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, he suggests a site on Collier street. He does not say anything in his letter as to whom it belongs to.

Mr. CHURCH: I see an item here for Postal Station "A", Toronto. The receipts for the past fiscal year from the post office at Toronto amount to nearly $6,000,000 and the accommodation is not what it should be. It is deplorable to have a building of that character in the city of Toronto. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) asked the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bureau) the other day what the government intended to do in the way of improvements, and was told that he would find that out from the Minister of Public Works, (Mr. King, Kootenay) when the Supplementnary Estimates came down. The receipts from the post office, customs, and other sources bring the total revenue which Toronto yields to the government up to $90,000,000. Cannot the minister give us better facilities than we now have there in the customs building? The building is a very dilapidated one and the business men are complaining very much. I should like to find out what is going to be done to improve matters in the next twelve months. The custom house is a public utility, but business men cannot satisfactorily transact business there with the existing facilities. Surely when Toronto is giving the treasury a revenue of $90,000,000 the government should do something better than they are doing in the matter of providing improvements. Business men say that the existing facilities at the custom house are a positive detriment to trade. I should like the minister to look into this matter during the recess, and see whether something cannot be done to meet the wishes of the industrial community, to say nothing of the general public. I warn the government that if better facilities are not provided the treasury will suffer a great loss of revenue.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am instructed by the deputy in regard to this vote of $30,000 to complete postal station "A" in Toronto, that it is the end of an expenditure of over $1,000,000 for that particular purpose. I am also instructed that the postal station in Toronto, when completed will be one of the finest stations of the kind in the Dominion. The other matter to which my hon. friend refers has been engaging the attention of the minister and of the officials of the department.

Mr. CHURCH: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the vote for Ontario is most inadequate. You cannot take care of the post office and the custom house for the next fiscal year with this vote. You have no custom house in Toronto; you have simply a vacant lot. Surely you will not leave matters for another twelve months in the position in which they are at present, when the customs house does a business of $50,000,000 a year. Money is being spent in other parts of the country to provide facilities for doing business, but in the case of Toronto you are not giving anything back to the business men, from whom you are getting the money. I hope the minister will take this matter up.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have not a local knowledge of the wonderful city which is so ably represented by the distinguished member who has just spoken; but I may say that he has some ground of complaint in reference to the inadequate facilities in the customs house. I am sure the permanent minister of the department will read what the hon. member has said, and I will personally direct his attention to the necessity and wisdom of providing better facilities.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with the casualty clearing station, will the minister tell us what is the reason of that vote?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is for the purpose of settling up with the Canadian National Railways for the site.

Mr. GOOD: I do not see what possible harm can come from leaving this matter over until we have further information. It is evident that nothing can be done this year—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Oh, yes.

Mr. GOOD: —other than to purchase the site, and we have not had sufficient information to enable us to decide as to whether or not that is justifiable.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): What information does the hon. member desire? I have told him that this vote does not commit us to any particular site. Its purpose—and this is the uniform practice, and the only way in which it can be done—is to enable the department to find a suitable piece of ground on which a building can be erected. If we came to the House next session and said "We have bought a site and erected a building for seed purposes," my hon. friend would tell us we had no right to do it, because no vote had been passed. There is only one way by which these things can be done properly, and that is by taking the course we have adopted.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): What is the cost of the building?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): We will have to come to the House next year and get the House to authorize the vote. We cannot spend a five-cent piece without the authority of parliament.

Mr. GOOD: I will tell the minister what we want, and why I think we should object to this item at the present time. We should not embark upon an enterprise of this kind without seeing our way clear and realizing the need. We do not know the need at the present time, and I would want some further information from the Seed Commisisoner himself in regard to the need for this particular building, and also in connection with the impossibility if such there be, of using some of the buildings already in existence for that purpose. I know that at the agricultural college at Guelph, which is not far from Toronto, They have a fine building largely devoted to the same purpose; and in the University of Toronto there are many places which might be used, so far as I know, for a large part of the year for this purpose. At both these places there are fine buildings which are not being used for six months of the year. I would like to have some information which would enable us to justify such an expenditure. What is the use of voting the money for the land, unless we are satisfied the whole project is justifiable? What is the objection to letting this matter stand over? We have been getting on well to-day; let us have full information in the Main Estimates next year. I am not taking an out-and-out stand against this proposition, but we have not sufficient information to justify the appropriation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am afraid it is most difficult to satisfy the hon. member. Here is something primarily and solely in the interests of agriculture, and my hon. friend objects to it. I am afraid I will have to ask my colleague the Minister of Agriculture to explain.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not want to press this matter unduly. If the hon. member has any information he can give the department in regard to some other site where we can get better accommodation, we want it; but I can assure him the work demands accommodation such as we have not had in the past. The work has been neglected for some time for lack of accommodation, We have been in rented quarters not suitable for the purpose. We have not been located permanently, and have had to move from time to time, thus disorganizing the work. What would the hon. member do, if he were in my place? This proposition has grown to great proportions. A large proportion of it is an export trade for which we must keep up the quality of the seed; and to do good work we must have good accommodation. Does the hon. member propose we should defer taking steps for another year? If he, in turn, has some reasons to give me, I will be agreeable to the suggestion to let this stand over until I get such information as will assist me in providing better accommodation in a better city or in a better location. I do not want to be exacting in regard to the matter; but, on the other hand, these are the requirements of my department, as I understand them. We have had difficulties in other cities in getting accommodation. In the city of Quebec, after spending a long time, we have got similar accommodation by renting premises. If my hon. friend has anything that he can furnish me as justification for dropping the matter and neglecting the work for another year, and seeking new temporary accommodation, it may be to our advantage in the end to drop it. I would like to hear from him along that line.

Mr. GOOD: I am not objecting to the carrying on of the work. I know it is important work; but I do object to going into this expenditure, the extent of which we do not know at the present time, without any definite idea as to the needs of this particular matter of looking after our seeds. I have already made suggestions to the Minister of Agriculture regarding the possible utilization of buildings in Toronto and Guelph, which I think are very well suited for the purpose. I think the minister should have something definite from the seed commissioner himself in regard to the expenditure. If he has this information and will submit it to the House and give us the details, we may be in a position to approve, and I for one do not wish to withold my endorsation of the scheme, except that at the present time I do not know and have no information to enable me to form a judgment.

Mr. ROBB: It may be thought a bit extraordinary that a man from Quebec should rise in defence of a proposition in Toronto—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is not a Toronto proposition, and that is the reason the minister is up.

Mr. ROBB: I wish to point out that, if a better building is required for the inspection of seed grain and particularly clover and grass seed, for a central location in Ontario, I submit Toronto is the right place to have that building; and I think I can convince the committee why it is more economical. For instance, we have a department of inspection under the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the headquarters for inspection are in Toronto. This grain for export must be inspected and when it goes to the markets of the world must carry the inspector's certificate. There is another reason; the largest exporters of clovers and grass seeds have headquarters in Toronto, where there are two very large firms, and the centre of the clover trade gravitates into Toronto; and I submit, without arguing whether the building is necessary or not, we must accept the statement of the men who are at the head of it, that it is necessary and that Toronto is the proper location; and I am convinced by what has been submitted to us that a better building is required. You cannot put up your machinery for inspecting grain and be under the necessity of moving about every year or two. We should have a permanent building for this work because the clover and grass seed export trade is becoming of enormous benefit to the agricultural districts of this country.

Mr. GOOD: Have we any idea of the total expense which will be involved before this project is completed?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend apparently does not appreciate that all that is being done here is to enable a site to be bought somewhere, not necessarily in Toronto Nothing can be done, no money can be spent in connection with a building, without everything in connection with the matter being submitted first to parliament. All that is involved in this appropriation is a sum of money to purchase a site. If the government comes to parliament later on for an appropriation to erect a building, my hon. friend will be able to go into the question.

Mr. GOOD: The minister would not recommend spending $25,000 to purchase a site if there was some possibility of having the whole thing negatived next year owing to some outrageous expenditure for a building. The first thing we should do is to decide what kind of building is necessary.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): There could be no outrageous expenditure for a building or a dollar spent upon a building without the leave of parliament next year.

Mr. GOOD: I know that.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Then why is my hon. friend talking about the country being committed to an expenditure of an outrageous character?

Mr. GOOD: What is the use of buying the land without having an idea as to what sort of building is to be put on it?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is putting the cart before the horse. If it is desirable—and the Department of Agriculture says it is—to have a building in connection with their Seed branch, before you can get a building, you must have a property somewhere to put it on. That is all we are proposing to do. Nobody has been committed to an expensive building, and we are not suggesting that anybody should be. Next year the government may ask for an appropriation for a building. If my hon. friend thinks the amount is too large, or the building is in the wrong place, he can argue that out then. The only question at present involved is: Can a site be purchased for the building, not necessarily in Toronto, but anywhere the government may decide that it should be purchased?

Mr. GOOD: Has the Minister of Agriculture a definite recommendation from the Seed Commissioner in this connection?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. The primary object of this laboratory is to give service to the farmers who grow the seed and to maintain the quality, especially for export. I shipped carloads of seed before the western laboratories were opened. I am surprised my hon. friend, who is familiar with the grass seed and clover seed industry, would seem to stand in the way of this enterprise, because it is urgently required. Mr. George Clark is one of the most careful and efficient officers in the service of the Department of Agriculture, and he certainly entered into this matter very carefully before making his recommendation.

Mr. GOOD: Would it not be better for the minister to bring in an estimate next year covering the cost of the land and the building, and then we could consider the whole thing on its merits.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): We are proposing to ask the committee to vote this money. If my hon. friend wants to move against it, he can, but I think we have given him all the information that can possibly be given.

Mr. SPENCER: I wish to support the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) in his stand. If you are going to buy an expensive lot, surely you have an idea of what sort of building you want to put on it. We should know what expenditure is involved in this. This reminds me of an incident where a lot was bought in a western town some ten years ago for some $10,000, to put a building on. The government never erected a building on that lot, and that lot is worth less than $200 to-day. We should have more details. The hon. member for Brant is on very good ground in the stand he is taking.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is again putting the cart before the horse. He is suggesting, if you are getting a place to install the Seed branch in, you should decide to buy your building before you buy your lot. The first question to be decided is where you want to put your building in Toronto or anywhere else; then you come to parliament and submit your proposal for the building you intend to erect.

Mr. GOOD: I do not suppose there is any use in discussing this particular matter any further. There is another matter, not a very popular subject, to which I wish to call attention, because I think it is my duty to say something about it. Last year I made some comment upon the expense of Government House. There is an item in this appropriation for alterations and improvements to Rideau Hall, $17,100. I have the highest regard personally for the Governor General; but last year I figured up the expense that this country was put to in connection with this institution, and I think the total last year amounted to about $225,000. If I remember aright, there was in the estimates of last year an item of somewhat the same amount for improvements and alterations to Rideau Hall. It seems to me that at this time, when so many people in this country are in dire distress and want, these expenditures are totally unjustifiable. In that particular direction we ought to cut down.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend's policy is one that should be considered, but it is never a wise thing for people to allow their buildings to fall down or into disrepair. It is true economy to spend money in order to keep buildings in the necessary repair. Otherwise, when the catastrophe comes in the end, one will find that one was penny wise and pound foolish. This amount of $17,100 is required for alterations to the palm house of the conservatory at Rideau Hall, which is in a very dangerous condition and must be renewed. The work includes alterations to the iron superstructure and steel framing, including the necessary glass, and also repairs to the substructure and foundations and the heating and water services, The reports are that this work is entirely necessary, or otherwise the building will not only fall into disrepair, but be in danger of falling down altogether.

Mr. GOOD: If this is simply a matter of repairs to prevent decay and dilapidation, then I withdraw my objection.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: On that matter I notice in the Main Estimates an item has already been passed for Rideau Hall including grounds improvements, and so on, amounting to $60,000. I am glad this matter has been brought up by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good). I know some may hesitate to speak of a matter which concerns an official who may be regarded more or less as a guest of this country. However, when we put together the various items concerning the upkeep of Government House, they amount to a very large figure. I am inclined to think the Governor General has been very poorly advised with regard to conditions in Canada and the temper of Canadian people if this style which he has undertaken to keep up, is maintained. I should like to call attention to certain items which I have noticed in various departments and which have their bearing on this particular item: Governor General's salary, $48,666; Governor General's Secretary, $2,400; Governor General's Secretary, office, salaries, $31,915; printing and stationery, $3,000; sundries, one item, for which we have not the detail, $63,000. Under Public Works there is an item in connection with Rideau Hall of $60,000, and now in the Supplementary Estimates the sum of $17,100. Further allowance for fuel and light $19,000. In connection with another department, that of Railways and Canals, we find that for repairs to the Governor General's cars there has already been voted $10,000, and I notice that there is still an item in the Supplementary Estimates of not less than $40,000 additional for repairs. I cannot conceive at all what items can be involved in these large sums. There is nothing whatever down in the list for travelling expenses and I do not know how far the railways supply the equipment for that. I presume, however, that it amounts to a considerable sum. I have not seen in what department that comes or how it is arranged for, but these items alone that we know of total $295,081.66. When you have an expenditure of nearly $300,000 on one individual whose functions in this country are purely formal, then I suggest that the Governor General has been very ill-advised indeed in maintaining things on such a scale. I think I can speak for a considerable number of people when I say that we have no desire to set up anything like a feudal state over in this country. I take it that the great purpose of the Governor General's having been sent here is that there should be maintained cordial relationships between the Mother Country and Canada. But if this kind of thing persists I am of opinion that instead of maintaining cordial relationships it will rather work the other way and we shall have very strained relations. I do not think that these burdens should be placed upon people who are finding it exceedingly difficult as it is to obtain the merest necessities of life.

Mr. GOOD: I think I called attention last year to the unprecedented extravagance which Ontario, in my judgment, was guilty of a few years ago in building a palace on the Don river, and to the fact that during a coal famine some time ago, when the citizens of Toronto and the people of the province generally were pretty nearly freezing, a single house for just one functionary consumed about one thousand tons of coal. This sort of thing is bound to excite a great deal of resentment and uneasiness in the country and it must come to a stop some time or other.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I realize that a man is on rather dangerous ground when he undertakes to discuss a subject like this; he is apt to be charged with a lack of patriotism if not something worse. But the time has come, I think, when we ought to protest against such expenditures. I do not agree with the member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) in attaching any blame in this regard to His Excellency. I think the matter rests entirely with the government; I do not believe His Excellency has anything to do with it; in fact I doubt very much whether he is aware that these votes are in the estimates. The government ought to consider all the circumstances very carefully before asking for these expenditures to be sanctioned.

Mr. BANCROFT: What is the reason for putting in the Supplementary Estimates $75,000 for the Royal Military College at Kingston?

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The question as to why certain items were not included in the Main Estimates has already been discussed at some length. It has always been the practice for the engineers to recommend supplementary estimates to cover any expenditures that could not have been decided upon in the Main Estimates. There has never been any objection to this course until the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) developed one of his freak notions on the point. With regard to the expenditure on the Royal Military College, there is an attendance of between 25 and 30 boys who have not proper dormitory accommodations. At present two sleep together and this vote is to provide for a new dormitory.

5 p.m.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have listened with some interest to explanations regarding military colleges, clearing stations, and one thing and another, but when it comes to spending $2,800 for the installation of revolving doors in a Hamilton public building I confess I am somewhat puzzled.

Mr. MEWBURN: I move that that item be struck out. We want to be consistent; we are trying to practise economy and there is no sense in $2,800 being voted for revolving doors in Hamilton.

Resolution as amended agreed to.

Public building—Manitoba—
Brandon—public building—alterations.. —	$ 2,500 00
Emerson public building—improvements to lighting..	1,200 05
Winnipeg—Elmwood postal station site—local improvement taxes..	1,008 06
Winnipeg—Fort Osborne barracks—improvements to heating..	11,200 00
	$15,908 06

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The first item in this estimate relates to Brandon; some alterations are necessary to the public building. There is an item for improvements to lighting in the Emerson public building, and the sum of $1,008 is being asked for local improvement taxes on the Elmwood postal station site at Winnipeg. The department must pay these taxes the same as any other owner of property. The fourth item is for improvements to Fort Osborne barracks.

Mr. BANCROFT: What is the building at Emerson?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The post office and custom house.

Mr. FORKE: I wonder whether the government is not making a mistake in voting this large sum of money for Manitoba.

Resolution agreed to.

Public buildings—Saskatchewan—
Maple Creek public building—improvements to heating—revote..	$ 2,100 00
Moose Jaw public building—local improvement taxes..	3,427 14
Moose Jaw customs examining warehouse —local improvement taxes..	1,708 50
Prince Albert public building—local improvement taxes..	1,306 36
Regina public building—improvements to heating..	7,500 00
Weyburn public building—improvements to heating..	4,700 00
	$20,742 00

Mr. SHAW: What is the necessity for so much heating improvement in the Northwest this year? I notice, not only in Manitoba but in Saskatchewan and Alberta as well, large amounts have been necessary for the purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM: Would it not be due to the fact that the heating apparatus is being transformed to permit the use of Alberta coal?

Mr. SHAW: I think not.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Evidence given before the committee on that subject has shown that very little if any change is required for the use of Alberta coal.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In regard to the Maple Creek building the Chief Architect states that in his report, dated September 4, 1920, Mr. Thomson, mechanical engineer at Winnipeg, reported that the heating apparatus was in a deplorable condition, that the boiler was totally unable to carry the present load of radiation, and that the latter was inadequate. None of these proposals are made except on the reports of the engineer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: As to the High Commissioner's office in London: I understand from what has appeared in the public press that at one time we had an option on the Cox Bank building for something like £500,000. If my information is correct—and I do not say that it is; I simply want to get the facts—that option was allowed to lapse and a further option was taken on the same property at about £600,000. That option also has been allowed to lapse, and in the meantime the present premises have been rented over our heads and we have to get out. I would like to know what the real situation is. What is going to be done? Has a syndicate been formed to look after this?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: For about twenty years the different governments in office have sought to obtain suitable quarters in London for the High Commissioner's office. The governments of Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa all have suitable buildings there—very much better, indeed, than anything Canada has. I think each government that has been in office has felt that our Dominion was being placed in a false light before all citizens in London at the heart of the Empire. Efforts were made by the late government to secure a suitable building, and when this government came into office the effort was continued. The High Commissioner has gone into the matter very carefully. Last year we thought we had obtained a building that would be suitable, but on giving the matter careful consideration we abandoned the idea of purchasing it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was that the Cox Bank building?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; I forget at the moment what building it was. However, this year the High Commissioner did think there was an opportunity of securing the building to which my hon. friend has referred, namely, the Cox Bank building. This building was in course of erection; it was almost completed and there was an exceptional opportunity to obtain it. At one time the government thought it might be wise to secure it, having in mind, of course, the subletting of the greater part of it to different Canadian firms, banks, and so on, that have their offices in London. The High Commissioner went into the question very thoroughly; he felt that if that building could be secured it would pretty well carry itself through the rents to be obtained. However, when he began to negotiate in the matter there were one or two conditions that he did not feel he would be justified in accepting, and he abandoned altogether the thought of taking over the Cox building. He has since been looking at one or two others, but has not yet decided what building he will recommend; and that is where the matter stands. A suitable building in London is urgently required. As my hon. friend has suggested, notice recently had to be given of our intentions regarding our present offices; unless we took a lease for another term of years it was represented that we would have to relinquish the premises at the expiration of the present lease, about the first of July. The High Commissioner was willing to let the lease lapse rather than renew it for a term of years. As the offices will very shortly have to be vacated and transferred to other quarters until a new building is secured, this item is put in to meet any expenses that may arise in that connection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it from what the minister says that we are abandoning our present quarters; that we have no other quarters in view, and that this sum is to keep the office running for the year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To cover the period of transition, yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Nothing else is being asked for that purpose?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the government taken an option for the purchase of a building in London?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not that I am aware of. As I said before my right hon. friend came in, negotiations were under way for the possible acquisition of the Cox Bank building. Those negotiations have been dropped, however, and I think the High Commissioner is at present considering the possibility of securing another building, but has not taken any official action upon it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No option has been secured?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say that an option has not been secured. I think the High Commissioner has arranged that at any rate before a certain building is disposed of he will be given the refusal of it. More than that I cannot say.

Mr. BAXTER: Sir Henry Thornton may possibly have bought a castle or two in London, and perhaps the thing may come in that way.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): May I ask whether the question will be considered of assembling all the Canadian offices in London? It seems too bad that the Ontario office should be in the Strand, the British Columbia offices in Pall Mall, and the High Commissioner's office in Victoria street. In the Strand one finds practically all the Australian offices combined in one building, the result being a splendid advertisement for Australia. It struck me as being too bad that a similar situation could not be created for Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad my hon. friend asked that question, because he has reminded me of the fact that last year we tried to acquire the British Columbia building. The federal government would have been prepared to take that building over had the British Columbia government been willing to part with it, but they have found that in that large building, which is so favourably located, they have an excellent investment; as a matter of fact I think they are making money on it. The present situation is that Canada has a much inferior building to that maintained in London by one of its provinces. The federal government rents part of the British Columbia building for offices connected with immigration work. The government has felt that Canada has been handicapped as compared with the other dominions in having its offices scattered about in various buildings throughout London—not only the offices of the different provinces, but the different federal offices that were created during the war. The office which has to do with the soldiers' overseas work is in one part of the city. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has offices for his agents in another part of the city. The immigration offices are in still another part and the High Commissioner's offices are elsewhere. We felt that it was desirable to acquire a building in which all these offices could be brought together and which would be large enough also to accommodate the representatives of the different provinces, but that kind of a building in London is not easily acquired, and rather than make a purchase which would not meet with the general approval of the country we have proceeded slowly in the matter. But the object is to do the very thing my hon. friend has said—to acquire a building that will serve all these purposes in a way that will reflect credit on the country.

Mr. GOOD: I would like some information on the first item in this list "experimental farms, $75,000."

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): This is for additional buildings, and alterations at the experimental farms throughout the Dominion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What money is to be spent on each farm, and for what purpose in each case?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The statement is as follows:

Ottawa Central Farm	$76,000
Charlottetown, P.E.I.	5,100
Kentville, N.S.	4,000
Nappan, N.S.	3,200
Fredericton, N.B.	6,900
Ste. Anne de la Pocatiere, Que.	1,700
Cap Rouge, Que.	1,600
Lennoxville, Que.	350
La Ferme, Que.	3,700
Kapuskasing, Ont.	1,200
Morden, Man.	6,500
Brandon, Man.	2,900
Indian Head, Sask.	2,900
Scott, Sask.	1,500
Lethbridge, Alta.	1,500
Lacombe, Alta.	500
Summerland, B.C.	5,200
Agassiz, B.C.	2,200
Invermere, B.C.	1,150
Sidney, B.C.	1,900

The total asked for is $130,000 while this vote is for $75,000 and it will be allocated among the different farms.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What are the new buildings referred to, and what are their purposes?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): These are buildings which have been recommended by the Department of Agriculture at the different places indicated. I could give my hon. friend the details of any particular place if he wishes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are not all going to be new buildings. There are going to be additions and alterations, according to the item. Where is that going to be done?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have given a list of the places where the Department of Agriculture is asking for expenditures to be made, and my hon. friend will find them all in Hansard. The requirements are stated to be $130,000. We are voting here $75,000 which will be spent by the Department of Agriculture among these different places.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I express my opinion in regard to this voting of money for experimental farms? A great deal of it is well expended; it is good work. But I think a great deal of it might well be saved. I would like to have a re-allocation of the expenditure in connection with the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. We are often taunted in this quarter of the House with the amount of money spent on agriculture in this country, and these expenditures on farms and such like are all linked together and the whole sum is hurled at our heads. Now a vast sum of money is spent on the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa for a park. It is a magnificent, delightful show place, it is really a credit to the Dominion and affords delight especially to visitors coming to Ottawa. But at the same time there is no justification for charging up all the expenses of the maintenance of that park to the Department of Agriculture or to its estimates. I would suggest that these expenses be segregated and the money that is spent on the park be charged against the Parks Branch of the Department if the Interior.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I have very grave doubts indeed whether any of these experimental farms are of any practical use to the farmer at all. It is true, they raise some very excellent stock and grow fine varieties of different farm products, but these are all produced at a loss. Now, is it any consolation to the ordinary farmer to exhibit to him some very excellent products that are grown at a loss? I think the minister will agree with me that they cannot be grown except at a loss, and I think it is something we should take into serious consideration.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like a little further information in regard to the amount being spent at the Central Experimental Farm at Ottawa. I think the minister said the amount was $76,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The details are as follows: Division of Botany, field laboratory, $4,500; new botanical building, estimated cost, $30,000; extension to chemistry building, $22,000; division of forage plants, frame barn 30 x 50, ground floor and root cellar, $2,000; division of horticulture, greenhouse addition, $15,000; poultry division, new buildings, breeding house, $2,500; making a total of $76,000. That is $1,000 more than the amount we are voting, but my hon, friend will understand that in addition there is the difference between $75,000 and $130,000 which is said to be the estimated expenditure in all parts of the country. This $75,000 we are voting is to be allocated among the whole of these farms after a conference between the Department of Public Works and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The original amount asked for by myself and my staff was $200,000. The amount before parliament is $75,000, and in consequence we shall have to eliminate for the present a lot of the work that can with least disadvantage be done without, though it is all required. This $75,000 will have to be re-allocated to satisfy the most pressing requirements. A lot of the requirements we shall be unable to supply. During the four years of the war no expenditure was made by the late government on buildings for experimental farms. I am not blaming the former government for that, because they could not very well do otherwise nor in the years following the war could they take any other course. But now the time has come when we must equip these farms with proper buildings or close them up. Is anybody prepared to close them?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let us close them.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We would like to have some applications during the recess from any province that wants these farms closed. I cannot undertake the responsibility of operating these farms in a half-equipped condition.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Let us close half of them, anyhow.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There is not a single dollar asked to be expended that is not most urgently required. I wish some of my friends would go out to the Central Experimental Farm, it is looking very beautiful now. And look at the accommodation we have for the botanical laboratory. You will find, if you put two or three good-sized beds there, you could hardly turn around without knocking over some chemicals. There are three or four men in a cubby-hole of an office where there should be only one. It is a most disgraceful building for an experimental farm system such as we have. Generally speaking, our experimental farms compare favourably with those of other countries, but some of the buildings are disgracefully out of date. I wish hon. gentlemen would go and see that botanical laboratory. We have just recently moved out of another laboratory, the biological laboratory, that we have had to put up with since 1904. There has been absolutely no extension to it for nearly twenty years and this year we were moved into a private building on Wellington street. So far as the departmental buildings and the buildings on the experimental farms are concerned there is not another department of agriculture that I know of on this continent, or anywhere else, that is housed in such poor buildings as the Department of Agriculture of Canada. To the buildings of the experimental farm system the same remarks will apply. I can assure my hon. friend that there is a clear lack in Ottawa in this respect. There are certain laboratories, particularly the botanical laboratory, which are decidedly lacking in suitable accommodation. The botanical laboratory does not possess the accommodation it should in order to cope with such diseases as rust—one of the most virulent and contagious in the entire list—that affect our cereals. Such important problems as these are being studied and dealt with, and yet the quarters of the staff are nothing like what they should be. For experimental work intended to evolve a remedy for rust, an equipment and accommodation of the most efficient character should be provided, and yet we have undertaken an investigation of some of these big problems with accommodation which limits you to 50 per cent of efficiency.

Mr. EVANS: I shall not go as far as the hon. member for Mackenzie and say that these experimental farms are of little or no value. I would say, however, that the Dominion is top-heavy with these institutions at the present time. While agriculture is languishing from one end of the Dominion to the other we are lavishly spending money year after year on these institutions, and I do not think it is right. Very much of the work done, we will say at Ottawa, is also undertaken by the provinces and there is a great deal of overlapping. I wish to protest against the lavish expenditure year after year on these farms.

Mr. GOULD: The minister spoke of the need of more extensive offices in order to enable the scientists attached to his department to carry on their experiments. Let me tell the minister that some of the best work ever done in the interest of agriculture in the Dominion was done outside—it was not done in those offices. I have in mind a certain incident which occurred some years ago in connection with cut-worm. An active educational propaganda was being carried on by the department in order to try and combat the ravages of the cut-worm, and a number of pamphlets were issued on the subject. I know a boy, only twelve years old at that time, who collected evidence out in a summer fallow field that entirely upset the theory advanced in these pamphlets in respect to the cut-worm. According to that theory cut-worms were supposed to hide themselves beneath the surface of the ground during the hours of daylight. Yet this boy I speak of gathered no less than sixteen different specimens out of thousands, yes millions, of worms, which were crawling all over that field between the hours of eleven and twelve o'clock in the day. At that time the rays of the sun were pouring down with intense heat; I would say the temperature must have been 90 degrees in the shade. According to the teaching of the pamphlet these cut-worms should all have been under the surface of the ground at that time, but there they were travelling in all directions—north, south, east and west.

Now as to the expenditure on experimental farms. The actual work of agriculture is carried on, in many cases, hundreds and thousands of miles away from the Central Experimental farm. This vote proposes to expend $75,000 on the Central farm, and the balance on experimental farms at other points. In my opinion this proportion is not right. We who come here for a number of months every year, and have an opportunity of visiting the Central Experimental farm, are pleased to know that its status compares favourably with that of similar institutions in other countries, but it is on the provincial farms that the actual work is carried on and the facilities there are not such as they ought to be. I think the allocation which is being made is not in proportion to the necessities of the case; a larger amount should be expended at outside points, particularly in the grain areas of the West.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend did not catch my statement when I pointed out that inasmuch as the vote for outside work had been reduced by more than one-half we would have to have a re-allocation. I will keep my hon. friend's suggestion in mind when we make that re-allocation. We were to get $200,000 when the estimates were first sent in. The amount has been reduced; therefore we will have to have a re-allocation.

Mr. GOULD: I would urge upon the minister that when he is making a re-allocation a larger proportion should go to the provinces.

Mr. GOOD: When the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were under consideration on a former occasion the question of overlapping as between the provincial departments and the federal department was mentioned. This has been a serious matter for some time and undoubtedly there has been a waste of money in that way. I think the minister stated last year that the matter was under consideration. I should like to ask him if anything has been done in the meantime to prevent that overlapping, and if not whether he contemplates taking any action?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a work which has to be undertaken gradually because it always involves a certain amount of disruption, especially when the provinces are more or less associated with the federal authorities. I may say that I have been in touch with the provinces in regard to the matter of overlapping and there is a satisfactory desire to co-operate in the matter. I had an opportunity of visiting the outside experimental farms and inspecting their work, more particularly in the province of Saskatchewan. We have a large number of illustration farms there consisting of forty acres each. The University of Saskatchewan has the province mapped out into areas and is engaged in the same kind of work. We arranged that as soon as their plans were completed for this class of work we would retire and leave the field to them. Inasmuch as there has been no capital expenditure there will be no loss involved. In the live stock line, and every other activity, we are working in the direction suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. CHURCH: Has the minister any hundred dollar coal scuttles out at this farm?

Item agreed to.

Ottawa—new departmental building—compensation to architects for designs submitted, $30,000.

Mr. GOOD: We should like to have some explanation of this vote?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The committee will remember that earlier in the afternoon I referred to the fact that a large number of buildings and a tract of land on Wellington street had been expropriated and taken over by the government in 1913 with a view of doing away with the present system of renting buildings throughout the city and concentrating all the offices that were not in buildings owned by the government in that particular area. On April 14, 1913, an order in council was passed providing for a competition for designs for a new departmental block on Wellington street to cost from ten to twelve million dollars. That amount seems very large to-day when we look at the proposals for the construction of buildings, but that idea was in the mind of the government of the day in 1913. The Minister of Public Works appointed assessors to judge the designs. Conditions governing the competition were drawn up. The competition was advertised. Plans were received up to April 2nd, 1914. British and Canadian architects to the number of 59 submitted designs. Each set of plans consisted of from 18 to 30 drawings. It is estimated that the draughtsmanship alone cost the architects not less than $177,000. This only takes into account draughting—not the higher work of designing. Up to the present no competitor has received any return for his labour or expense. The conditions provided that of the competitors six should be chosen. These six were to make any further preliminary drawings required by the assessors. The assessors were then to choose from the six the one having the best design. The one selected was to be employed to carry out the work. The others were each to receive $3,000

Mr. GOOD: The others of the six.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The others of the six were each to receive $3,000. The assessors out of the designs submitted selected the best six. Beyond this point the competitors did not proceed. The immediate delay was said to be caused by the desire to wait for the report of the Federal Town Planning Commission. Finally the war put an end to the whole thing. The six best designs having been chosen, the other competitors had no grievance. They were out of the race. The only question remaining was the remuneration which should be paid the six architects successful, in the first stage. The six successful competitors asked for settlement, but nothing satisfactory was offered. One of them, Saxe & Archibald of Montreal then took the matter to the Exchequer Court. Suit was brought to recover $100,000, the amount allowed by the architects tariff for the province of Quebec for preparing and furnishing preliminary plans, being 1 per cent on $10,000,000, the estimated cost of the buildings. The matter was dealt with in the Exchequer Court. The Crown had tendered $3,000, and judgment was given for this amount. Last session $3,000 for each of the six architects was placed in the Estimates. This the architects refused to accept, and they put forward this claim:

1. The plans called for were not mere sketches. They consisted of from 18 to 30 large drawings. The sum of $3,000 would not pay for the work of the draughtsman alone.

2. In addition to what the architects had to pay for draughting they had other expenses incidental to studying the problems presented. One of the architects has produced vouchers showing that he actually disbursed over $9,000.

3. This work was done prior to April 2nd, 1914. The architects have been out their money for nine years. The lowest prize offered, namely $3,000, would with interest now amount approximately to $5,000.

4. This was no ordinary undertaking. It was the designing of a public building to cost over $10,000,000. The plans represented all the thought and genius these men were able to bring to the work. Other plans would have been necessary, but they would have been a matter of elaboration merely. The conception with all the effort involved was in these plans.

5. Among the six men was the one who must have been entrusted with the work of erecting the building. No one of these architects would have considered competing for a prize of $3,000 or of $10,000. What each struggled for was the first prize, the honour of doing the work and the fee that went with it. It is submitted that it is unfair for the government of Canada to set 59 architects or firms of architects working for prizes and then when they have done the largest part of their work to say that there shall be no first prize—merely consolation prizes. Since it is now impossible to say which of the six should get the first prize the only thing that remains is to divide some part of it at least among the six.

Clause 28 of the general conditions provided that if the government abandoned the work or failed to give instructions within twelve months from the selection of the successful architect he should be paid a sum equal to 1¼ per cent of the amount of the estimated expenditure. The amount to be divided by the government amongst these six architects would therefore have been as follows:

1¼ per cent on estimated cost of $10,000,000..	$125,000
$3,000 to each of the five other competitors..	15,000
	$140,000

The architects think that they should be given at least $10,000 each. This would not do more than cover the ordinary draughting and other expenses incidental to the work. It would leave nothing for the work of the architects themselves. That is the whole situation, and the department submits to the House the suggestion that it is reasonable under the circumstances that these men having done this work should be paid. It is only honest and proper on the part of the government to do that which any individual would have done if he were in the same position. That is the position in which ths vote stands. Among the first six whose plans were approved by the assessors this amount of $30,000 would be divided.

Mr. FORKE: Has the minister the names of the different architects and their places of residence?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Messrs. Saxe and Archibald, Montreal; MacFarlane and Ranie, Montreal; Robb and Mitchell, Montreal; Hutchinson, Wood and Miller, Montreal; W. E. Noffke, Ottawa and D. A. Moodie, London, England. The men who submitted plans were from all over the world. These men whose names I have mentioned were among the first six.

Mr. FORKE: How long is it since these first plans were drafted?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In 1913-14

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do recall this matter. I recall resisting these claims for some years. Apparently, the government has let it be a case of "heads I win and tails you lose." Archibald went to court and got $3,000, which was the amount to go to each of the six leading architects. So the government introduced an estimate to pay the same amount to each of the others. It seems to me that was right. But now the man who went to court and got the judgment for $3,000 is going to get $5,000 more. The government brings in an estimate which will pay them a total of $8,000 apiece.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, $5,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought there was $3,000 apiece paid last year?

Mr. MACDONALD: No, that was not accepted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That collapsed?

Mr. MACDONALD: No, the architects took the ground that, as professional men having given their very best services in the matter, they would not take it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood they got the $3,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They have not received anything yet?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What was the value of the Exchequer Court action?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The situation was that the Crown at the time tendered $3,000 to Messrs. Saxe and Archibald.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then Archibald withdrew his action?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, the court held, on purely technical grounds, that the war rendered it impossible for the Crown to proceed with the buildings, and that therefore the Crown could not carry out its contract. One of the matters among the questions of law decided by the Exchequer Court was that the Crown was not liable technically but the Crown had tendered $3,000. The conclusion of the judgment reads:

> The suppliants are not entitled to any portion of the relief sought by their petition of right but through the benevolence of the Crown expressing its willingness to pay them $3,000, there will be judgment accordingly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is rather an amusing incident.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is peculiar.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We know they do some funny things through the use of the word "technical." The court held that as a matter of law, because of the intervention of that Great War—at least such was one reason—the government was not liable. How was that technical? I do not think anything could be very much more substantial. The court held the government was not liable, but the government came along and offered, as a matter of grace, $3,000. Judgment accordingly was entered for that amount and the government is ready to pay it—I do not think any exception is made—but because they do not take it we are ready to pay $2,000 more apiece. Does the minister propose to come back next year in case they do not take this?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia, $533,884.60.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is Resolution No. 502 carried?

The CHAIRMAN: This resolution, No. 504, is the only Public Works vote left, and one item of it, in connection with Little Anse, is still not carried.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That stands.

Resolution stands.

National Defence—award to Major H. R. Northover in full settlement of all claims for inventions on Colt machine guns during the war, $5,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL: May we have some explanation in connection with this matter?

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence): It is proposed to ask this amount in full settlement of all claims made against the government of Canada for inventions used on Colt machine guns by Major Northover. This officer claimed, from the Canadian government, a sum of $47,267 for royalty on his inventions as follows:

1,001 gas cylinders at $20 each	$20,020
1,196 side attachments at $20 each	23,920
363 auxiliary mountings at $5 each	1,815
5,688 belt boxes at 25 cents each	1,422
Samples and drawings	90
Total	$47,267

These were articles which were used during the war. The British government awarded him £1,700 as royalty on the following:

100,521 feed belt boxes	£1,500
210 gas cylinders and gas lever attachments thereto	200

Canada's award on the same lines would be $12,475.27. The department, however, offered Major Northover, and he has agreed to accept $5,000 in full settlement of his claim. This is in full discharge of his claim. It is a relic of the war situation.

Item agreed to.

Annual drill—further amount required, $8,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) here?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is this going back to militarism?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No. This is to assist the gathering of the clans which I hope my right hon. friend will attend when the Highland regiments of Nova Scotia will be together on the 15th July.

Mr. GOULD: I notice, taking the two items 470 and 471 in conjunction, that the same condition obtains under the present regime which obtained under the past regime, and of which I frequently complained. I refer to the fact that the amount for salaries and wages exceeds the amount for annual drill.

The CHAIRMAN: Let me call this carried, and then my hon. friend can speak on item 471.

Mr. GOULD: I was just drawing the attention of the committee to the fact that the amount for salaries and wages exceeds the amount for annual drill.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Annual drill is one item and salaries and wages another.

Mr. GOULD: Then I maintain that the order should be reversed. That is my protest. If proficiency in annual drill is the thing that we are after we should change the order of things.

Mr. GRAHAM: The $10,000 item is civil, not military.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Item 470 is "annual drill, further amount required." Why should it be put in that way, if it is really a vote to make a success of this gathering of the clans?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is not that. The situation is this: In Nova Scotia, this amount is to be used supplemental to the general vote for annual drill, because the Highland battalions in Nova Scotia are going to camp for some twelve days. This was not contemplated at the time the regular vote for annual drill was put through last winter. It is also due to the fact that they are going to camp in greater strength and numbers than they otherwise would. That is the explanation of the extra amount?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I suppose they are going in greater strength and numbers on account of this celebration?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou) That is one of the reasons.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the Hector appropriation of $15,000 is towards the same celebration?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That does not come under the Department of National Defence.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: But it is toward the same object.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will these events synchronize in any way with the byelection in Pictou?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Not at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I wish to protest against votes being granted for local purposes, such as celebrations of this kind. If some of the people down in Nova Scotia want to have a celebration in connection with some historic event, they have a perfect right to do so; but the situation is different when the whole of this country, with commitments as they are at present, is asked to contribute money for that purpose. We can just as well get up a celebration in Manitoba, or the people of British Columbia could do the same. There are a hundred local places which have a perfect right, since they have some historic background, to get up a celebration, and if one particular section does this, I cannot see why a hundred other sections cannot do so with equal right. I for one object decidedly to granting appropriations of this character. This is evidently a camouflaged item, this being brought under the military department, and another item being brought under a different department entirely.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Is this connected with another item, the Hector item in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Are these two different celebrations?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have already answered the right hon gentleman (Mr. Meighen) who is my hon. friend's leader. The Highland battalions of Nova Scotia are going to camp early in July. This was not contemplated at the time when the main vote for annual drill was decided upon. The vote for the celebration has nothing to do with the military side of the matter.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): I have no objection to the annual drill, but if this is in connection with the historical celebration, I have something to say in connection with the matter.

Mr. GOULD: I would gather from this that the activities that took place on the water last year, as represented by the $5,000 appropriation for the international boat race are being repeated on land this year, and the amount is increased by $3,000.

Item agreed to.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): In the Main Estimates the vote for salaries and wages for 1923-24 was $250,000. This was an increase of $25,000 over the previous year and was intended to cover additional salaries required to be paid to civilians employed at the Tuxedo barracks hospital formerly used for war patients, but lately converted into a station hospital for the permanent and non-permanent militia. When this hospital was used for war patients, the cost of maintenance was charged to adjustment of war claims, but now it is chargeable to militia votes, the civil salaries being chargeable to salaries and wages. Upon completing the reorganization of the hospital on a peace basis, it was found that the salaries of civil employees would make an annual charge of $29,000 for which only $25,000 additional was included in the estimates, leaving an excess of $4,000 for which no provision was made. Although the most rigid economy has been exercised in the past year, it has been impossible to avoid an overdraft of $1,634.99 notwithstanding that the staff of caretakers, and so forth, for building and properties generally has been reduced to the minimum essential to the proper care and prevention of damage by frost and other causes.

With the additional amount now asked for there will be provided only enough funds to pay the staff now employed in which there have been no increases over 1922-23, except as mentioned above, and a small margin of $4,-365.00 for contingent and unforeseen purposes.

Mr. CALDWELL: Do I understand that this vote No. 470 is to provide for the drill of Scottish Highlanders in connection with the Scottish celebration that is to take place in July?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): No, this is for the regular drill.

Mr. CALDWELL: But it will come off at the same time. Shall we be allowed to discuss these two votes together?

The CHAIRMAN: Item 470 has been carried.

Mr. FIELDING: The Hector item comes up later.

Mr. CALDWELL: If these two events are going to be held in conjunction with each other—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): They have nothing to do with each other.

Mr. CALDWELL: Then in that case I will reserve my remarks in regard to the Hector vote until it comes up.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): Will these two things come off at the same time?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I am really surprised that my hon. friend, who is a good Scotsman, should be so incredulous. The two regiments in Nova Scotia comprising about 1,000 men go into camp about the 7th of July. They are usually in camp for ten days and this vote is to defray the expenses in connection with that annual drill. On the 15th, 16th and 17th of July there is to be held in the same county a celebration commemorative of the landing of the first Scottish settlers in Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): If the minister will come out openly and say that these two matters are one and the same—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): They are not.

Mr. ROSS (Kingston): —I will hold up both hands for it. But I do not think it is fair to combine the annual drill and the Scottish celebration in this camouflaged way. I think we deserve something better.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is displaying an attitude which I do not think is quite Scottish in character. An annual camp has always been held in eastern Nova Scotia, in Pictou and in Cape Breton. This year they are being concentrated in Pictou county and arrangements are being made for the regular annual drill. The fact that this Scottish celebration takes place at the same time is what Sir Thomas White would call "a mere coincidence."

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not want it to be thought that I am opposing anything in connection with that celebration because I have a great admiration for the Scottish people, being of Scottish descent myself. We have a very excellent Scottish colony in my riding. They arrived here fifty years ago next month, and I have an invitation to assist in my small way at the fiftieth anniversary to be celebrated on July 10. Will the minister extend any assistance in that case?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Have you any Highland regiments in New Brunswick?

Mr. CALDWELL: My hon. friend is minister and he can answer that question better than I can. I do not know whether we have.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not think so.

Mr. CALDWELL: But I have seen the kilts in New Brunswick on many occasions.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is no doubt a coincidence that the holding of the camp and this celebration should occur at the same time, and if it is I think it is a fortunate and happy coincidence. It is something that will give many people in this country a great deal of pleasure and I believe that it will contribute to the success of the celebration of a great historic event in this country.

Mr. SPENCER: In what part of Nova Scotia is the camp being held?

Mr. MACDONALD: In the county of Pictou.

Item agreed to.

Compassionate grant to C. Peachy, $33.

This man was caretaker at headquarters at Regina and the grant is made on account of his having been hurt in the execution of his duties.

Item agreed to.

Engineer services and works—further amount required, $16,700.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The following is the report on this item.

Since the Main Estimates were submitted a considerable amount of work has become necessary which could not be foreseen previously.

The following two services, which could not be foreseen when the Main Estimates were put forward, are now considered to be very necessary:

(a) To provide accommodation for ordnance stores, Esquimalt, by utilizing certain naval coal stores, Esquimalt, $7,700.

(b) To provide accommodation for Royal Canadian Regiment, Wolseley Barracks, London, Ont., $9,000.

The ordnance stores at Esquimalt are at present situated in a rented building, for which the government pays a rental of $3,600 per year. Naval coal sheds No. 2 to 5 have been offered for use as ordnance stores but are required to be fitted up, at a cost of $7,700. A saving in rental will ultimately be made.

Certain of the temporary buildings erected during the war at Tecumseh barracks, London, were reported on by the Colonel Commandant as infected with dry rot to such an extent that, in the interest of economy, it will not be advisable to make any further repairs. These buildings are also very inflammable and loss of life might result in case of fire.

The Colonel Commandant recommends that these buildings be condemned as quarters for soldiers and that a portion of Wolseley barracks be fitted up at an estimated cost of $9,000 to accommodate about 90 all ranks of the Royal Canadian Regiment, including regimental orderly room, cook house, etc. The portions of Wolseley barracks being refitted are:

Block "A",
Old barrack store building, block "B",
Old A.S.C. bunk house, block "G",
Old supply store, block "K",
Old supply store, block "L".

The above have been used chiefly as offices and barracks stores and have to be fitted up as single officers' quarters, barrack rooms for single men and other necessary regimental accommodation.

Item agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. MEIGHEN

Mr. MEIGHEN: Before the House rises I want to refer to a report in the afternoon papers of my remarks this morning. There is nothing substantially wrong with the report, but it uses an expression which I did not use and which I do not care to have attributed to me. The report states that I said that the Belle River wharf was in the hands of "God and Tim." There must be something wrong with the hearing apparatus of the representatives of the press.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

PRIVATE BILL

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 251 (from the Senate), for the relief of Flossie May Pinkham.—Mr. Stewart (Leeds).

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

SUPPLY

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The desire was expressed by some of the hon. members of the House that an opportunity should be given for discussing the Imperial conference and the Imperial Economic conference. I think possibly it would be advisable to take up these items at once so that there may be opportunity for the members to discuss them perhaps at greater length than if we delayed the discussion till another sitting.

Amount required for expenses of delegation to Imperial conference, $10,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: One would hardly think that this was such an occasion that hon. members had in mind to discuss what should be the conduct of the Canadian representatives at this conference or at the Imperial Economic conference. The House is the place to discuss that, and a day should have been set. This is not doing anything. Of course, we have a right I suppose to discuss the subject on this vote and in committee, but there is no concession here by the government at all. I understood from the answer given to an hon. gentleman on my left—I do not remember who it was—that a day would be fixed for this discussion, and that hon. members would know when it was so that they could prepare themselves for the occasion. This is no time for a discussion of that sort, and for a statement by the government of its intentions at the conference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my right hon. friend that I stated on two or three occasions when the opportunity would be given. I have before me the remarks I made and which appear in Hansard. On two occasions I mentioned that when the Supplementary Estimates were brought down they would contain an item with reference to the Imperial Conference and the Economic Conference, and that ample opportunity would be afforded members to discuss the whole question when that item was considered. The government as a matter of fact felt there would be greater freedom if the discussion took place in committee in the form in which it is now suggested. The last reference I made to the subject was in reply to my hon. friend the member for Brant (Mr. Good). The hon. member's question and my reply thereto appear in Hansard of June 22nd, as follows:

Mr. Good: When will the House have an opportunity of discussing the agenda of the Imperial Conference and the Economic Conference to be held this fall?

My reply was:

I have mentioned, I think, several times, that when the supplementary estimates are brought down, they will contain an item to make provision for the Economic Conference and the Imperial Conference, and that will be the appropriate time, I think, for the discussion to take place. I hope the supplementary estimates will be brought down possibly by Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

I think it is perfectly clear to every member of the House that this was the time when the discussion would take place.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is not a discussion in the House at all, this is a discussion in committee; the main point is not there. It is not appropriate to discuss in committee a subject of this magnitude and character and it has never been the practice to do so. We do not know—

Mr. VIEN: Will my right hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, yes.

Mr. VIEN: What is the difference between a discussion in committee and a discussion in the House? Everybody is present now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, everybody is present, but if the hon. gentleman does not know the difference I do not think I will take time to explain it.

Mr. VIEN: You will be much freer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My point is this: No hon. member of the House knew this item was coming up now. We are called upon without one moment's notice to discuss what is to be the policy adopted by Canada at an economic conference, and if the government think that is reasonable I am quite sure the House does not. The papers on the subject are not yet down. Some time ago I asked for and obtained what was described at the time as a partial list of the subjects that had been suggested for discussion—suggested from Great Britain. I cannot speak with certainty as to the exact words of the Prime Minister, but I have the impression that he promised to give later any other subjects that were submitted for discussion so that we would have the agenda and have some little time to consider it before the time would be fixed for discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will allow me to say to him that I complied with that intention on the 5th June. I then gave to the House such further statements as I had received from the Home government. I would further say to my right hon. friend that there is before the House at the present time all the information that the government has received and which it is at liberty to place on the table. All the papers are down.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the full agenda now ready for discussion?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The whole agenda so far as the government has received it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the government prepared to state what its position is to be in reference to these subjects?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In so far as it is possible to state it. I notice that when my right hon. friend was similarly situated he indicated that he did not think he should be asked to state what his position would be at the conference, inasmuch as it was impossible to do so until he was in conference with the other parties.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think that is absolutely the right stand but I did not expect it to come from the Prime Minister because he took the other view. I think the stand I took is right and should be his stand to-day. I was, however, met with a resolution of instructions which the Prime Minister supported, or rather which he moved. I was supposed to go tied round the neck with a lasso on a resolution moved by himself. I am glad his opinions in that respect are now reformed.

Mr. VIEN: No, you needed it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman seems to have risen to be a critic on this subject now.

Mr. VIEN: I say no, that you needed it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Possibly that is the opinion of the hon. member. As to whether it is the opinion of the country or not I will offer no comment at the moment. However, I am glad the hon. member is not to be one of the delegates himself. What I am asking for was a discussion in the House. If the government insist upon having that discussion in committee they will have to carry their insistence, but I do think the House is entitled to a little notification in advance of the time when discussion will take place on such an important matter as this.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. Jacobs and Mr. Good rising at the same time.

Mr. GOOD: Are we discussing the item?

The CHAIRMAN: We are.

Mr. GOOD: I came in about two or three minutes late.

Mr. CAHILL: Try and get here on time and save us a lot of trouble.

Mr. GOOD: I wonder, Mr. Chairman if the Prime Minister would agree to bring this matter up to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Not at all.

Mr. GOOD: I am prepared to go ahead with whatever information I may have in regard to the question if the rest of the committee are satisfied.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, I came down without any notes or papers and, perhaps, the committee will be very glad. In fact my experience this session has led me to believe that sometimes the support which one may expect or get will be in an inverse ratio to the amount of evidence one can bring forward to support his position. At least that might be a logical deduction from our experience in one of the committees.

Mr. NEILL: I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) has the floor or had.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He thinks he has.

Mr. JACOBS: It is usual for the Chairman to decide who has the floor. He has decided against me.

Mr. NEILL: I beg to draw attention to what happened. The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier was on his feet and the hon. member for Brant interpolated more or less on a point of order, wanting to discuss the course being pursued on the same lines that the leader of the Opposition did. When he concluded his objections it appears to me it was then the privilege of the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier to go on with his remarks. The hon. member for Brant having told us that he has not got his notes, he can avail himself of the opportunity to obtain them while my hon. friend (Mr. Jacobs) is speaking.

Mr. GOOD: I did not know that the hon. member had begun to discuss the matter. I will gladly give way to him.

Mr. BUREAU: It will give you time to get your notes.,

Mr. GRAHAM: Everybody would make better speeches without notes.

Mr. JACOBS: I gladly accept the support of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I hope when my remarks are concluded he will still continue to give me support.

At the last Imperial Conference, Mr. Chairman, a resolution was proposed and carried in the following terms:

> The conference while reaffirming the resolution of the Imperial War Conference of 1918, that each community of the British Commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction of immigration from any of the other communities, recognizes that there is an incongruity between the position of India as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in other parts of the Empire. The conference accordingly is of the opinion that in the interests of the solidarity of the British Commonwealth, it is desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognized.

This resolution was supported by the then Prime Minister, now the leader of the Opposition, who was present at the conference; and in passing I wish to say that I commend the conduct of the right hon. gentleman on that occasion. No matter how opposite political views may be, I am glad to bear public tribute to him, putting it in the words of Kipling—

> 'E's a poor benighted 'eathen,
> But a firstclass fighting man

The leader of the Opposition receives a considerable share of support from the people of the province of British Columbia. I do not say they are benighted heathens away out there, but for reasons which I am not going to discuss here, a large portion of the delegation on the other side of the House supports the hon. leader of the Opposition; and notwithstanding that, he was prepared to back up this resolution, which I understand is not particularly popular in British Columbia. No matter what the views of the people of any particular province may be on a matter of this kind, I submit they ought to give way to the generally accepted views of the people of the Dominion of Canada as a whole and to the views of the Empire of which we are always proud to say we form an integral part. The question of the Hindu franchise is of great interest to this country. There is no reason in the wide world, so far as I can see, why British subjects domiciled in Canada should be deprived of the franchise. They are British-born. Their skins may be a little duskier than ours, but they belong to the Aryan race, and in all respects they are quite as capable of using the franchise as any person who resides in this country. The franchise is given to the Chinese and the Japanese in eight provinces. I understand that in British Columbia they do not vote, but there is a vast difference between the Chinese and Japanese and the Hindu. The first difference is that these latter people are British subjects and are part of the British Empire.

Mr. McBRIDE: Does the hon. member think it is right that a lawyer should have the privilege of pleading his client's case in this House?

Mr. JACOBS: In answer to the hon. member, I would say that these people are not clients of mine. I would be very glad, indeed if they were because I understand they are a highly moral people, a respectable people, and that they pay legal fees when they are due. I cannot say as much for many of the white clients who come to my office. I was going to remark, Mr. Chairman, that the Hindu citizens have a big claim upon us by reason of the fact that they are part of the British Empire. The Chinese and Japanese come to this country. They have to be naturalized as British citizens. They forswear their allegiance to the country from which they come, and they are essentially a different race from the Hindus. They belong to what is known as the yellow race. I do not want to go into the question as to whether it is well to permit large numbers of people of this kind to come into this country or not because it is not a matter which concerns me just now. This question was urged upon the delegates at the Imperial Conference by the Right Hon. Mr. Sastri, who travelled through the country last year, and made what I consider an irrefutable case for his people who are resident here.

There are, I understand, 1,200 Hindus resident in Canada to-day. These people came here ten or twelve years ago. Hon. members will recollect that there was some question about their landing at the time. But they subsequently were permitted to land, and from that time until now they have been denied the right to which they are entitled; that is the right of the franchise which every person coming to this country ought to be given. It may be argued that if we give these people a foothold in this country they will increase and multiply, and after a time this country will no longer be a so-called white country. In answer to that objection, I say that no Hindus are now permitted to leave India for the purpose of coming to Canada to reside. Before it is possible for any of these people to leave their own country they must obtain a passport and a certificate from the Indian government, and that has been consistently refused in the interests of harmony with this country. No more of these people are permitted to come to Canada, and consequently we are only dealing with a handful of 1,200 people, who are, as I understand, all residents today in British Columbia. Mr. Sastri stated when he was here that he was delighted to know at the time that our government was going to fall in with the views of the representatives and delegates at the conference, but he said he found to his bitter experience that the intellectual acceptance of a theory sometimes was very far from its practical application, and he found, so far as this government seemed to be concerned, that there was no intention of putting into effect the promise given by the then Prime Minister of Canada at the conference.

If that be so, Mr. Chairman, it puts the right hon. leader of the Opposition in a very peculiar position. He found that he was putting his signature to a document which was not recognized, or is not recognized, by the present government. He is very much in the position of Mr. Woodrow Wilson after he had signed the Treaty of Versailles and returned to Washington, and found that the Senate refused to back up the solemn undertaking given by him. Surely, we do not want the present leader of the Opposition to become the Woodrow Wilson of this country. No, I think it is our duty to see to it that this undertaking given by him, properly delegated as he was, should be carried out. Those of us who had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Sastri when he was here were very much struck by his argument in favour of the inclusion of his countrymen in the franchise of this country. He pointed out that India at the present time was disturbed by sedition. The Ghandi propaganda was generally accepted throughout India, and these people in India were making capital out of the fact that the sister commonwealths were not carrying out the undertaking which had been given to them at the conference.

I submit this is a very serious matter, and it is a matter of Imperial concern. We can understand 300,000,000 of people who are being fed with seditious matter using objections of this kind with the very greatest effect in their own country. Hon. members will recollect that last September,—I think it was September or October—we were nearly drawn into war in the matter of the Angora situation. The people of India, as we know, were practically on the crater of a volcano. It is a very simple matter to declare a civil war in Islam, and if that were done, the fat would be in the fire as far as India was concerned. All those considerations were something to be carefully thought over, and I am sure the statesmen gathered round the board at the Imperial conference did think matters of this kind over before they came to the conclusion, that in this particular matter, the commonwealths ought to listen to the combined reason of those who were present, and carry out the views of Mr. Sastri and the Indian delegates.

It was also pointed out some time ago that, as regards India nationally and in its relation to the sister Dominions that country stands practically in the same position as any of the self-governing nations constituting the British Empire. It may be—and I concede the point—that as regards the internal affairs of India, they may not have the same degree of constitutional liberty which we in this country have or which the other commonwealths have. But as I said before, with regard to the dominions constituting the British Empire, India is treated in exactly the same way as the other dominions, and consequently when we deal with the inhabitants of India we have to deal with them in the same way as we deal with the people of South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and the other self-governing commonwealths. I should like to learn if it is the intention of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the other delegates who attend this conference, to carry out the undertakings given by our delegates at the last conference, or whether we intend to embark upon some new policy and to deny to those people the right to which I claim they are justly entitled.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the undertaking?

Mr. JACOBS: The undertaking as conveyed in this resolution which I read at the opening of my remarks.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To what extent does my hon. friend read into that paragraph an obligation on the part of the government of Canada?

Mr. JACOBS: I think the moral obligation is clearly seen there:

> The conference while reaffirming the resolution of the Imperial War conference of 1918, that each community of the British commonwealth should enjoy complete control of the composition of its own population by means of restriction on immigration from any of the other communities, recognized that there is an incongruity between the position of India as an equal member of the British Empire and the existence of disabilities upon British Indians lawfully domiciled in other parts of the Empire.

They say that this was the incongruity and that this was recognized by the conference of which the Leader of the Opposition was a member, and he agreed to the resolution.

As I said before, I should like to learn what will be the position of the Prime Minister on this important question before the conference. It might be well that there should be an expression of opinion from this House on the matter so that his hands may be strengthened when he appears before that body as a member of the conference. So far as I can see, no valid reason can be urged against granting this franchise to those people. I have yet to learn any good reason which can be urged. I am sure the leader of the Opposition still has the same views on this question as he had in 1921. I heard him in a public address in Montreal, at a meeting at which Mr. Sastri was present, declaring that his views had not changed up to that time, and I have reason to believe that they are identically the same as they were then.

It is not a good thing for any country to have within its borders any people or class of people who are half slave and half free. Any person who is permitted to live in this country and who is denied the franchise, although he is a tax-payer of the country, is deprived of some of his liberties and is half free. I would rather keep those people out of this country altogether, debar them at the gates and not permit them to enter, than allow them to enter and then treat them as if they were not the equals of ourselves and as if they were slaves. I know the Prime Minister has certain notions on this matter, and I should be glad to hear them. It might be argued that this rule excluding the Hindus from the franchise obtains only in British Columbia; that British Columbia is one of nine provinces; that in the other eight provinces or in eight-ninths of the Dominion of Canada they have the same rights as people of the white races, and that they ought to be satisfied with eight-ninths of the bargain and let it go at that.

Mr. CARROLL: Are the Hindus debarred from the federal franchise in British Columbia?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes, and debarred also from the local franchise in British Columbia. It ought to be borne in mind, and I am sure it will be noted by every person in this House that inasmuch as the twelve hundred of these Hindus are residing in that one-ninth of the country where they are debarred the privilege of voting, the eight-ninths amount to nothing at all; that we may as well bar them altogether as bar them in the province in which they have elected to reside. Therefore, I claim we would be doing our duty as citizens of the British Empire in granting this franchise to the Hindus. We would be carrying out the undertaking of the leader of the Opposition, and we ourselves would be benefiting by the fact that every person who comes to this country, who has a stake in the community, who pays his taxes and who is an honourable citizen, should be given the same rights as we have, whether his skin be dark or fair. I should be glad to hear the views of the Prime Minister on this subject.

Mr. NEILL: I propose to deal only very briefly with the remarks of the hon member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs), who has expressed the desire to allow Hindus to vote in Canada, and to deal for a moment with the allegations—I will not call them arguments, because that would be sophistical —with which he attempted to buttress his position. I apologize to the House for proposing to take up time at this late hour of the session. It is only the urgent necessity of the case that compels me to do so. I wish the limits of the narrow confines of parliamentary language allowed me to express as the poet says "in language warm as could be breathed or penned" my opinion of the hon. gentleman in precipitating this subject into the political arena at this late hour. I am sorry to see that several of the members for British Columbia either are not in the House or have left. Consequently it behooves the one or two who are here to speak for the province. There is little difficulty in that because we know British Columbia is a unit on the subject. I can well say that this is neither the time nor the place to discuss this subject.

The hon. gentleman based his remarks upon the resolution which he read from the order paper, a resolution which stands and has been standing in his name for nearly five months. We have been sitting through the apparently interminable length of this long weary session, not having accomplished very much either, as some people think, and that resolution was on the Order Paper and it was passed over again and again either at the wish of the hon. member himself or because he was not present to do his duty in the House, while members from British Columbia have been sitting here in session day and night attending to the business. The hon. member reminds me of a beautiful butterfly; he descends at periods. Or like a comet he comes along with a very doubtful periodicity and tells the House to do thus and so, and then flits away to some other scene or field of activity, or of rest and repose. Whether it is relaxation in the way of business, pleasure, or passion, I know not. It is for him to say. But I do know that if he had been doing his duty this matter would have been debated in the proper way by hon. members long ago. The hon. member mentioned the number of Hindus in British Columbia and he was careful to say that he had been "told" there were 1,200. Let me inform him that he has been told wrong; the number of Hindus that came into the country in the years prior to July 1st, 1920, was 5,297. I suppose some of them have gone since then to the country from whose bourne no traveller returns, but not many of them; and there is a long distance between 5,000 and 1,200. But that statement by the hon. member is quite as near the facts as most of his other logic on the subject.

Mr. JACOBS: Where did the hon. member obtain his figures?

Mr. NEILL: The statement from which I obtained them is headed "Nationalities of immigrants for the fiscal year ended March 31st, 1920, and total immigration since July 1st, 1920." It begins with the British and goes through the list of other nationalities. It is a long statement and I will not weary the House by reading it. It was prepared by the librarian and the statistician of British Columbia.

Mr. JACOBS: Has the hon. gentleman the census figures from the department at Ottawa?

Mr. NEILL: I got these figures from the librarian and the statistician of British Columbia.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand the hon. gentleman to say that they were prepared by the librarian.

Mr. NEILL: And the statistician as well, I said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not observe that the figures do not take account of emigrants, a great many of whom have gone South.

Mr. NEILL: We are told that if we do not pass the resolution or adhere to the principle suggested by the hon. member there will be a sore spot against Canada in the minds of the people of India. That point was dwelt upon very strongly on a previous occasion. Well, we shall not be alone in that respect, for the same precise conditions prevail, as regards India, in New Zealand, South Africa and Australia, and if you add Canada to the list what considerable portion of the British Empire is left for India to be sore at? She will have to be sore at the whole Empire and not against this one particular section of it.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the hon. member pretend that Australia and New Zealand were not parties to the understanding that the Hindus should be given the franchise?

Mr. NEILL: I am not pretending anything. The subject is too serious for any pretence, and indeed no pretence is needed to bolster up my arguments; for what I say is true. In New Zealand the people of the Orient, including Hindus, are not allowed to vote, and if the hon. gentleman insists on corroboration I may say that I have the Australian act here from which I can quote if necessary. I do not want to detain the House however. It will be sufficient for me to observe that in Australia the Franchise Act says that no one born in Asia shall vote. I think that covers Indians. And as regards South Africa, the delegates from that part of the Empire hurried to put themselves right on this subject at the conference. They said, "We have no part nor lot with this principle and will not countenance it." They spoke right up and said they would have nothing to do with it.

Mr. JACOBS: That was the only Dominion that did protest and my hon. friend knows it.

Mr. NEILL: They went further in their opposition, because as late as April 18th in a press cable from Capetown the Minister of the Interior in the government of South Africa is reported thus:

> He proposed to introduce a measure providing for residential and trading segregation next session.

[Mr. Neill.]

That was in reference to Indians and it does not look as though they propose to take the Hindus to their heart and bosom in the matter of the franchise or in any other way. That disposes of that portion of the British Empire.

Now my hon. friend drew a pitiful picture of the condition of these poor suffering people who are deprived of something which he represented as being almost as priceless to them as freedom itself, namely, the right to vote. Well, let us see what their condition was in the country from whence they came. The hon. member suggested that India was in the same position as Canada in regard to this matter. I am surprised that he should advance such a statement. Why, it is only since 1921, which is only two years ago—and all these Hindus came to this country long before that, when there was not even the faintest pretence at suffrage in India—that there was any form of popular legislature established in India. I have by me the year book, but I will not read from it. But there are 103 elected representatives in India at the present time in addition to a few nominated members; and as against 103 elected representatives there is a population in India of 247,000,000; so that on the basis of manhood suffrage each representative would have a constituency of 2,500,000. That is patently absurd, but it shows how much restricted is the franchise in India; and yet the hon. gentleman wants to give them the full advantage of our Canadian manhood suffrage. A constituency of 2,500,000! How I should like to be a member there. On the basis of our population and our unit of representation it would mean that one Hindu in 8,000 would vote in Canada, and if the hon. gentleman will whittle down to that proportion the representation which he would like to extend to these people in Canada I should not mind that fraction voting. But that is the proportion; it would be one in 8,000 of these downtrodden people who would have the right to vote in Canada if they were subjected here to the conditions that exist in India—conditions that did not come into being until long after they left their own country.

Mr. JACOBS: Surely the association with men like my hon. friend would be beneficial to these 1,200 Hindus in British Columbia?

Mr. NEILL: The 5,927 Hindus in British Columbia do not associate with me. Now if it were thought advisable in any part of the world to give these people the vote or to allow them to have a voice in their government it surely would be in India where they have lived all their lives and where they would be conversant with all the conditions and all the peculiar troubles that concern them. But no; they are to be transplanted here to a country of which they are ignorant in the extreme. They know not our language nor do they know our customs; and what is more, they do not want to know them. Yet we are to bring them here and give them the franchise such as we and our women enjoy, although we deny to the aborigines of Canada, the native sons of the country, brought up and educated here, the very privilege which the hon. member is anxious to give to the same class of people born in some other country. An effort was made a year or two ago to give to the native Indians in this country the franchise in a limited degree but it proved a failure; but notwithstanding that denial to the aborigines of our own country the hon. member desires to give to the same class, so far as their position in the strata of society is concerned, people of the same standard of intelligence, the right to vote. He wants to give this right to people born in India, a heathen and many of them a debased class of people.

Mr. SHAW: Would my hon. friend deny entirely the franchise to these Hindu citizens, or would he be prepared to give them a limited franchise?

Mr. NEILL: So far as British Columbia is concerned I deny them that right absolutely, but I will suggest a scheme later on for partially meeting the hon. member's proposal. Now we are told we must give way in this matter to that good old stalking horse "Imperial reasons." I think I am as much an imperialist as the hon. gentleman opposite, and I recall that a few weeks ago I suggested that it would not besmirch our reputations as Canadians if we accepted a title of honour from the sovereign that reigns over us. I cannot recall that I got much sympathy from the hon. members in that respect, but that surely was an indication of my imperialism.

Mr. MARTELL: I hope I may be allowed to interrupt my hon. friend in order to explain my position on the question he has just introduced. Notwithstanding the vote of the majority of hon. members on this side, I did my utmost to see that honours should be accepted in this country so long as Canada formed a part of the British Empire. I only desire to make my position clear on this question.

Mr. NEILL: I am glad to find that there is one more intelligent man in the House.

Mr. JACOBS: May I tell my hon. friend that my imperialism and love of Empire is based on something that is sounder than mere ribbons or orders or decorations.

Mr. NEILL: I could not help thinking the other day, when we were passing the annuity to Dr. Banting and seeking in that way to do him honour, that that was one occasion on which perhaps it might have been well if Dr. Banting had been able to receive a title of honour from the sovereign and the people he has so well served. It is said that we are asked to lay on the altar of imperialism this right. Mr. Chairman, we are not asked to do so by imperialism at all; we are asked by Mr. Sastri and a few amiable faddists who follow him—that is all. Their audacity in asking is equalled only by their ignorance of what the granting of the request would mean. Amiable they are, I admit it; faddists they are—the class of people that send bouquets to the cell of the condemned prisoner. Faddists they are from beginning to end, not imperialists. But Mr. Sastri, with his beautiful and flowery language, captivates their shallow minds, and they are following him.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the hon. gentleman referring to the members who compose the Imperial Conference when he speaks about shallow minds?

Mr. NEILL: No, I am not. Did the hon. member think I was? Now, let us pause for a moment and see how the Imperial authorities regarded this question. The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier says they promised —"promised" was the word he used a few minutes ago—the Hon. Mr. Sastri this concession; and in speaking to the Prime Minister he used the word "undertaking;" he said that an undertaking had been given by the leader of the Opposition. Now let us see what the Imperial authorities think. I suppose it will be admitted that the Hon. Winston Churchill

9 p.m.

—if that is his title—is an Imperialist; he was Secretary of State I think, or Secretary of the Colonies at the time. Here is the report of the conference that the member alludes to at which this question was brought up, and this is what Winston Churchill says—I will quote only two sentences:

> I think there is only one ideal that the British Empire can set before itself in this regard, and that is that there should be no barrier of race, colour, or creed which should prevent any man by merit from reaching any station if he is fitted for it.

Note that—"fitted for it." He then goes on to say:

But such a principle is to be very carefully and gradually applied, because intense local feelings are excited, and there is no doubt that extraordinary social stresses arise when populations are intimately mingled in some of these new countries and brought into severe economic competition.

Can we find in that anything that suggests a promise or undertaking? That is the very cautiously worded opinion, after hearing the full debate, of Hon. Mr. Churchill, and on that slim foundation the argument is based that we must give way, and we in Canada alone of all the British Empire. Why, Hon. Mr. Sastri himself is not so confident of success as my hon. friend opposite for we find him quoted in the press as saying that he is "not hopeful" of the franchise—and that in spite of the pledge or undertaking that my hon. friend reads into what is not there. I quote from the press:

With regard to the provincial and municipal franchise he is not so hopeful of immediate results.

It all comes down to a hope. Well, there are a lot of things we may hope for, but we do not look upon them as undertakings; we do not call them promises. That is the expression Mr. Sastri used when he returned from Canada—that he had hope.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the hon. gentleman not see a difference between being hopeful of obtaining the franchise in a municipality in British Columbia and obtaining the franchise from the parliament of Canada? There is surely some difference.

Mr. NEILL: He also said he was doubtful about getting it in the Dominion. I am hopeful of going to Heaven some day, but there is no undertaking in that connection. The hon. gentleman tells us—and here I may be treading on dangerous ground, because he is a skilful lawyer—that the reason the Hindus do not now come to Canada is that they have to get a passport which is not obtainable from the Indian government. Well, I may be wrong in that regard, but my recollection of it is that they are not allowed to come to Canada unless they come by direct route. It is a quibble put in by this government to stop them from coming, because there is no direct steamship lines operating between India and Canada. Otherwise, they would be eligible to come in; but the order in council, I think, is worded in that way—they cannot come unless they come in a ship direct from the point of origin. That is a different reason from that given by my hon. friend. Now, he says there are only twelve hundred of these people who would be affected. We will say there are five thousand; according to my hon. friend's argument we would grant them the franchise and that would be the end of it. Well, that would not be the end of it. Five thousand voters in British Columbia would have a very powerful influence on the electorate and on the result of the election. They would be skilfully handled; they would vote in a mass and for one object, and the result would be to swing perhaps two or three seats. What would that object be? Would it be the advancement of Canada as a whole or of British Columbia as a province, or would it be to secure some advantage for that colony of Hindus? Would it not be the latter? Would it not be a case of those five thousand votes going to the candidate who would undertake to let these people bring in their women, their relations, or their friends? These votes would go solidly for the man who would do that or the party that would do that, and five thousand votes, especially in a provincial election, would cut an important figure. Moreover, the voters would soon cease to be only five thousand in number; they would increase very rapidly.

Another point is this: If you grant this privilege to the Hindus, can you deny it to others under similar conditions? The hon. member says there is a difference between these people; that the Hindus are British-born subjects and that differentiates them from Orientals such as Japanese and Chinese. But Japanese and Chinese are born in British Columbia, which is far more than the Hindu is. He too is a British subject, I admit; but when the oriental is born in British Columbia of naturalized parents how can we logically and with any sense of decency withhold the vote from him when he attains the age of twenty-one when we have given it to the Hindu, a worse fitted man, a man untrained, unaccustomed to our language? If we grant it to the Hindu how can we deny it to the oriental born in British Columbia who speaks the same tongue as we do? It follows as the night the day that if we grant it to Hindus we must grant it to the other orientals.

Mr. MARTELL: Is it not a fact that a person born in any part of the British dominions, whether of British parentage or not, is regarded as a British subject? Japanese who are born in a British dominion are British subjects, whether their parents are naturalized or not.

Mr. NEILL: Certainly they are; I was not dealing with that aspect of it. I was saying that if we give the Hindus, who are British subjects, the vote, we should have to give it also to Japanese British subjects born in British Columbia. It is logical that we should do so. Let me quote from what the Bishop of London said at a big meeting at London—I saw it in the paper only yesterday. He evidently had been over here, and this is what the report says:

> He had been preaching in London, immigration to Canada, but he found it very unpopular, for the following reason: There were, he said, 38,000 Chinese in British Columbia and 5,000 Japanese babies were born every year on the Pacific coast. He gave it as his opinion that unless Canada was populated to a larger degree by people from the British Isles, the white inhabitants would eventually become extinct in the Dominion.

That is an exaggerated statement, as we know, but it indicates the influence that these conditions have upon the point of view in England. You know, they think the world of bishops in the Old Country—much more than we do; and when a bishop gets up and says that British Columbia is swarming with orientals they are liable to take that as a piece of advice. We know that in the years to come, especially if we give these people the vote, there will not be a white British Columbia but a yellow British Columbia.

I would not for the world—in fact, the rules forbid me—reflect upon the hon. member's motives. But this resolution is what I might call a chart which guides his course to the goal he has in view. If you will look at the next resolution on the order paper following the one upon which he has based his remarks, you will find that it is also by him and it embodies a proposal that all the bars should be let down and that wholesale immigration into Canada should be permitted. I wonder if these two resolutions could have anything to do with each other? I wonder if the one is the doormat leading to the door of the other? I saw the other day in a medical journal that a new alkaloid had been discovered; I believe the name of it is scopolamin; I cannot pronounce it correctly. It has this peculiar quality that if it is administered in small doses it prevents, to put it in the medical sense, the inhibition of will, or to put it in plain language it compels a man to speak the truth without removing from him his ability to speak. I wonder if we applied a small dose of this to the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier whether we would find that his motion was actuated by the imperialism of which he talks or with a desire to reach the next motion on the order paper and open the door to practically every kind of immigration. In case the hon. gentleman should be upset by my suggestion I would inform him that I would only prescribe for him a very small dose because I understand that if too strong a dose is given the effects are permanent, and I know he is a lawyer and might find that awkward.

Mr. JACOBS: Will the hon. gentleman tell me if he has any large quantity of that drug on hand and if he is able to spare a little of it?

Mr. NEILL: Just one word more and I am done. I said at the beginning that this was not the place to discuss the question, and it is not. It is not a Dominion matter. It is a British Columbia problem. Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's. Let us settle this problem in British Columbia. It has no more to do with the other provinces than if I were to interfere with some of the local customs and traditions of the province of Quebec. It is a British Columbia problem for this reason: the franchise invariably originates in the province. It is entirely a provincial matter. I would quote Sir Wilfrid Laurier who in 1917 laid down in most emphatic language in paragraph after paragraph that the true basis of our Dominion franchise under the British North America Act is the provincial franchise. He used the word "originates". The franchise originates in the province and then has to be translated into the Dominion act. The right hon. leader of the Opposition last year is on record in Hansard to substantially the same effect. He said that where prohibitions existed in the provincial franchise we carried them into the Dominion franchise, and if that is correct, and here we have two of the ablest men of our time on this subject, then the thing for us to do is to take this subject up in British Columbia and deal with it there, and the province of British Columbia would know how to deal with such a subject in the best interests of Canada as well as the best interests of the province. I would ask this House, therefore, not to force upon us in British Columbia a thing which is unconstitutional, and is against our customs and bitterly against our desires. There is no precedent for it whatever. Talk about creating a sore spot. Do this and you would create a canker in British Columbia that we as a nation would never recover from.

Let us go back to Quebec. I use that province as an illustration because it is the most united in its population and in its characteristics. If the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier is so enamoured of this proposition of which he has talked to us let him go to Quebec and get Quebec to pass a franchise law giving the Hindus and all kinds of orientals the right to vote there. Let him try that out for a while in the province of Quebec, and if these people value the franchise so highly British Columbia will gladly send them down to Quebec. We will wish them God-speed and pay their fares. We will be delighted to see them go, and see how the hon. member will get on under those conditions. Is it not fair to use the hon. gentleman's own argument against himself? He wants to give them the franchise. Then let him give it them in his own province. Then such a wave of reform will spread from Quebec that perhaps we in British Columbia may follow his example—perhaps. But let him begin with Quebec. Let him ask the French race, those men who have maintained for scores of generations the purity of their race, of their language, and of their religion and traditions to give up all that and to take on the same plane of equality as themselves the lower strata of these orientals such as I have described, take them on the same level of political equality, take them on the same level of business equality, for the one follows the other, and take them on the same level of social equality for you cannot stop at business equality. Take them on the same plane of domestic equality, for you must go the whole length if you make a start. Ask the people of Quebec if they want to do that, and see what the answer is. I am sure they would repudiate the suggestion with scorn and indignation, and therefore I ask these Frenchmen, of whom our hon. Speaker is such an illustrious type, courtly sons of a courtly race, to give us in British Columbia only the same privilege that they would ask and demand for themselves. We ask no more and demand no less. We only ask that they shall treat us as they themselves would like to be treated, and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope and trust that our representatives at this conference will go there with a determination to see that they preserve at that conference the right of British Columbia and of every other province to prescribe its own franchise, a right which I venture to suggest is the free right of a free people.

Mr. McBRIDE: It is not my intention to take up the time of the House for the ground has been fully covered by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I say this though, that we in British Columbia want no more Hindus. Never did I value Canada and the laws of Canada more highly than when a boat-load of Hindus came from India to the port of Vancouver and was refused admittance to this country and sent back home by the previous government. I hope this government will maintain that stand. We have on the coast of British Columbia, Chinamen and Japs running our stores. They are running the white people out. We have the Greeks there running our hotels and we have the Jews running our second-hand stores, and now some people want to bring in the Hindus to run our mills. We have had enough of that in the past, and if this government wants to cast British Columbia adrift let her cast it adrift and let her cast it adrift before any more orientals come in. If they do, we white people out on the Pacific will prevent any more orientals coming to British Columbia.

Mr. JACOBS: It is not my purpose to answer the wild harangue of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. It would be impossible for me to do it. It does not require an answer. It is not susceptible of an answer. I notice that these gentlemen from British Columbia as soon as any subject is brought before the House see in it danger. They see in the Japanese, the Chinese and the Hindus something which they have reason to fear. So far as I know these people, they not only work but they seem to be the only men who do the work in that part of the country. But it is not for me here to criticize British Columbia. I am looking at this matter from the wider, from the national standpoint. I do not care what franchise the British Columbians have for their provincial legislature. That is a matter that does not concern me. But this is a matter which concerns the Dominion of Canada, and that is the reason why I raise it here in this House.

My hon. friend referred to the fact that I had had this resolution on the order paper for a considerable time and only brought it up in the last hours of the session. Well, he knows very well, and I need not tell him, I think he is a victim like myself of the fact that private members' day was taken away somewhat early in the session and consequently private members could not discuss the resolutions standing in their names on the order paper. There were all kinds of resolutions placed on the order paper, some of them by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member's resolution is dated February 21st.

Mr. JACOBS: It is dated February 23rd, and I did not have an opportunity of bringing it before the House before private members' day was taken away. I will admit as the hon. member has referred to it that I did not attend perhaps as assiduously as he did, and it is very possible that when the resolution was called I was not here to go on with it, but that ought not to be a reason for not debating the matter when it can be legally brought before the House. The hon. member seems to make a point of the fact that some British Columbia members have left for their homes, and he insinuated that I had taken occasion to bring this matter up in the absence of these members, but I can assure the hon. member that he is a host in himself and it is not necessary for any British Columbia member other than himself to be here when the subject of oriental immigration or franchise is brought up. I want to put upon Hansard a despatch from Simla, India, which has appeared in the daily papers. It is dated June 26:

Indians would retaliate against the Dominions

Simla, India, June 26.—In connection with the problem relating to the status of Indians overseas, there is a growing demand here for retaliatory legislation imposing on subjects of the dominions and colonies similar disabilities to those imposed on Indian settlers in those countries. A leading democrat has given notice of a private permissive bill in the legislative assembly and three unofficial resolutions have also been laid on the table urging the government to legislate in the direction of reciprocity.

The adverse decision by the United States supreme court regarding the naturalization of Indians has strengthened the elements favoring retaliation.

Mr. NEILL: What is the date of that?

Mr. JACOBS: It was dated June 26, 1923. It is a despatch from Simla, India. May I also refer to an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of this week which is quite favourable to British Indians.

Fair play for British Indians

During last winter Rt. Hon. Mr. Sastri, a member of the King's Privy Council, visited Canada for the purpose of impressing upon the government the right of British India subjects resident in Canada to exercise the franchise. The request was so reasonable that on every hand Mr. Sastri received sympathy.

Mr. NEILL: Is my hon. friend going to give the name of the writer of that article?

Mr. JACOBS: I can assure the hon. gentleman that I did not write it nor did I inspire it.

Mr. NEILL: The House would be interested in knowing the writer.

Mr. JACOBS: This is an editorial in the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. NEILL: I thought it was not customary to read extracts unless the writer's name was given?

Mr. JACOBS: Editorials from the Montreal Gazette have been read in this House. With some of them I agreed, with others I did not. This is one with which I agree.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps Sastri wrote it?

Mr. JACOBS: Let me continue:

Yet no action has been taken. The parliamentary session is now drawing to a close, and it may be too late to initiate new legislation despite the apothegm that it's never too late to mend. Yet it is disappointing that the government has not moved to the end of justice, regrettable from both Empire and Canadian standpoints. Chinese enjoy and exercise the franchise, but East Indians are deprived of the right. Why? Surely not because the latter are British subjects? The larger question of opening the door to admission to Canada of all races is not involved in this matter. What Mr. Sastri urged was the fairness of granting to Indians domiciled in Canada the same political rights as other classes of Canadians enjoy, and it is difficult to understand the delay of the government in granting the concession. There is more than moral right involved, and more than Empire interest. Canada does some trade with British India, and desires to extend the same, but if the East Indians conceive the notion that Canada is a country of prejudices, narrow views, and illiberality, it may easily happen that British Indians will turn from trade with it, and look askance at the pretence of Empire solidity. Antipathy to Canadian business agencies in India is already being cultivated. A straw serves to show how the wind blows. The Parsee Chamber of Commerce recently adopted a series of resolutions of which the preamble was as follows: "Whereas the treatment meted out to Indians in the colonies has been unsatisfactory and has continued to be so in an acute form notwithstanding the efforts of the Indian public and the government of India to get the situation altered, this Assembly now resolves that the government of India should henceforth, and until the matters complained of are fully remedied, adopt the principle of retaliation towards the nationals of the colonies."

The spirit of that resolution does not make for Empire unity, nor give hope of increasing connection commercially between Canada and India. It may be that the larger question of an open door to Indian immigration may be referred to the coming Imperial Conference, though that is debatable, but of this there is no room for doubt East Indians domiciled in Canada should be given the right of franchise on the same terms and conditions as are applied to other residents. That was the request of Mr. Sastri, and it ought to be complied with.

Mr. McBRIDE: If my hon. friend had a daughter would he want her to live and associate with the Hindu?

Mr. JACOBS: I would say this: I have three daughters, and I would rather see them associate with respectable Hindus than with some white men I know. But that is not the question which comes up here to-night. It is not a question of the association of white men with the duskier races or anything of the kind. The question—

Mr. McBRIDE: That is exactly what it is, Mr. Chairman. It is forcing these coloured races in among white people, and making the people of British Columbia associate with them.

Mr. JACOBS: Let me remind my hon. friend that the people of British Columbia are associating with them now.

Mr. McBRIDE: Yes, and it is not a credit to this country.

Mr. JACOBS: They are associating with them and would not associate with them any more if they had this right than they do now. The Hindus are there now and they are there to stay until, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni says, they go to their reward. None of these people are now coming into the country. As I have already stated they are prohibited by the Indian government from leaving their own shores to come to Canada and the non-continuous journey clause of the order in council regarding immigration does not apply at all to those coming from India direct. That is an added restriction that has been put upon them. They can neither come now by non-continuous route, nor can they come direct. That is the point I wish to make. As I say, these people are there now. They are tax-payers. There is nothing against their receiving a franchise except the fear on the part of the people of British Columbia that when they do receive this franchise, as the member for Comox-Alberni said, when they elect a representative to parliament or to the legislature they might work some injury to the white people of that province. I trust this parliament will rise above these narrow considerations which have been mentioned by the member for Comox-Alberni and do its duty. I think it will be generally admitted that my hon. friend (Mr. Neill) is perhaps not the best person to speak on this matter without prejudice. He is one of the most prejudiced members in this House—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JACOBS:—from British Columbia on the question—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JACOBS:—of orientals. He positively glories in it. He says: "I am against orientals in every form; I am against their immigration, I am against their franchise." He has constituted himself the authority in matters of this kind; I think he would look upon it as a piece of flattery if I were to tell him publicly as I do now, that in the matter of oriental immigration and oriental franchise there is no more prejudiced person in the House than he is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We perhaps are somewhat in the dark in entering upon a discussion such as this, because of not having placed before us any very definite agenda as to the subjects that are likely to come before either the Imperial or the Economic conference. A great deal will depend on the general intellectual background and attitude of our delegates there. When we had the discussion the other day on the Halibut treaty I am sure a great many of us must have been very much pleased indeed at the attitude of the Prime Minister with regard to the relationship which should exist between Canada and the Empire; and I feel very confident that if he can retain that position, in the midst of the surroundings in which he will find himself placed on the other side of the water, Canada will be comparatively safe.

It is, perhaps, rather fitting in a way and yet somewhat of an ill omen, that accompanying the Prime Minister there should be the Acting Minister of National Defence. Unfortunately, in the past imperialism and militarism have been very closely associated, but I trust that this appointment does not mean that the matters chiefly to be discussed are military in character.

Just in passing I have often wondered as we have sat here during these last months, as to how long it will be before the appointment of the Acting Minister of National Defence shall be endorsed by the people. It has seemed to me that it is of the very essence of our British institutions that a man should not become the head of an important government department without his appointment being definitely endorsed by the people.

I could think of no better development that could take place in international affairs than that we should have the whole question placed on some other than a military basis. Ideally, I have no doubt whatever that the appointment of the Minister of Justice is the best that could be made. From a practical standpoint, I wish the Minister of Justice were not so closely associated with the big financiers of this country. Some of us believe that the big financial interests ought not to dominate the Imperial or Economic Conferences. I wish that in some way it were possible that the great producing classes of this country, the farmers and the labouring people, could be represented on the Economic Conference. I do not propose to-night to discuss the legal and constitutional aspects of our relations to the Empire. These have been dealt with by our constitutional authorities and our legal friends. A great deal of stress has often been laid by them upon precedent. It seems to me the time has come when we shall have to make new precedents, when we shall have to view the situation as it actually is to-day, and act, having regard to the developments which have taken place in recent years. We all recognize that there are certain sentimental attachments—I do not use that word in a disparaging sense at all—which unite Canada with the Motherland. We remember our common origin. We remember that we have a common language, that we have common traditions and common institutions. These things, after all, are the most fundamental in maintaining the ties that unite this country with other countries composing the British Commonwealth of nations. But I should like to emphasize that loyalty does not in any way mean subserviency. Too often we have people on the floor of this House and elsewhere throughout the country deprecating any criticisms of policies which are regarded as British, or which are named British. Rather it would appear that in the effort to decide our own policies according to our best lights, we are preeminently British in spirit. Some people have still the colonial mind. They think of themselves as inferiors. They have what I suppose the psycho-analysts would call inferiority complex. I cannot conceive that we can take our real place in the British Empire until we outgrow that and remember that we in Canada are just as fit to discuss the affairs of the Empire as are the people in any other part of the Empire.

I should like to endorse a great deal of what has been said by the member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). It seems to me he has placed the whole situation on a proper basis. I cannot but deprecate the attitude taken by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) with regard to the orientals. He has tried to disparage almost every other nationality than our own, the Chinese, the Japanese and the Greeks and the Jews. No, I think it was the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) who enumerated these particular groups. I cannot see that we are going to get very far by a narrow bigotry of that kind. The member for Comox-Alberni, in referring to the fact that the orientals have no vote, said he was afraid that if the Indians should be given a vote it would result in a vote being given to other orientals. I should like to ask why not? I admit that I do not believe in admitting large numbers of these people at the present time because we are not in a fit position to take care of them. I do not believe we can have an intermingling of these races under existing conditions, but it is one thing to say to the orientals "it is not well for you to come in at the present time," and it is quite another thing after we have allowed them to come in and they are citizens with us, rate-payers with us and all the rest of it, to deny them the fundamental rights of citizenship. Last summer when I was walking through Stanley Park I could not but think of the member for Comox-Alberni. At one spot I stood before a beautiful monument erected to the memory of the Japanese soldiers who had fallen during the great war in the cause of what we were told was British liberty. I cannot quite see just where is the British justice in accepting the sacrifice which these people made for the British Empire and then refusing them the common rights of citizenship. The member for Comox-Alberni spoke of the Indian people as a heathen and debased class. Any one who has had the most elementary knowledge of the great philosophies of India must realize how far the member is from at all correctly representing the situation. Even out in British Columbia several years ago, when I visited the Sikh temple in Vancouver, where several hundred Indians were met, and heard one educated Indian speaking to his fellow countrymen, and holding before them the very highest ideals, I could not help but realize our narrowness. I believe that, in dealing with these matters, difficult as they are—and I know they are difficult—we should rise above narrow prejudice and look at them from a little bit more of a world point of view.

There are several principles that have occured to me, to which I would like to refer very briefly, which it would seem to me we ought to adhere to at this Imperial Conference; the first, clear understanding that from this time on Canada must be essentially autonomous. We need not worry as to our exact relationship to the other parts of the Empire. I suppose in time some arrangement will develop, through a series of conferences or something of that kind, which will enable us to keep in touch with other parts of the world, but the biggest thing we can emphasize is our own autonomy. I do not know that the position of labour on this point has ever been closely defined, but I would say that, on the whole, labour in this country echoes the thought of labour in the Old Country, and hence I should like to read a paragraph or two of the famous draft programme of the British labour party, as published several years ago.

Mr. McBRIDE: Let us hear from British Columbia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are other parts of the world than British Columbia. The paragraph I refer to reads:

> We desire to maintain the most intimate relations with the labor party overseas. Like them, we have no sympathy with the projects of "Imperial Federation," in so far as these imply the subjection to a common imperial legislature wielding coercive power (including dangerous facilities for coercive imperial taxation and for enforced military service), either of the existing self-governing dominions, whose autonomy would be thereby invaded; or of the United Kingdom, whose freedom of democratic self-development would be thereby hampered; or if India and the colonial dependencies, which would thereby run the risk of being further exploited for the benefit of a "White Empire." We do not intend, by any such "Imperial Senate," either to bring the plutocracy of Canada and South Africa to the aid of the British aristocracy, or to enable the landlords and financiers of the Mother Country to unite in controlling the growing popular democracies overseas. The autonomy of each self-governing part of the Empire must be intact.

And again, in speaking of international relationships:

And we carry the idea further. As regards our relations to foreign countries, we disavow and disclaim any desire or intention to dispossess or to impoverish any other state or nation. We seek no increase of territory. We disclaim all idea of "economic war." We ourselves object to all protective customs tariffs; but we hold that each nation must be left free to do what it thinks best for its own economic development, without thought of injuring others. We believe that nations are in no way damaged by each other's prosperity or commercial progress; but, on the contrary, that they are actually themselves mutually enriched thereby. We would therefore put an end to the old entanglements and justifications of secret diplomacy and the formation of leagues against leagues.

I would not urge a narrow nationalism in this regard. There are some who have even on the floor of this House suggested that we should cut ourselves almost entirely free from either the Motherland or international councils. The world has developed past that stage. There is such a close interrelation between its different parts to-day, such an essential unity, that no one nation can any longer live to itself. Canada cannot possibly turn the clock backward. Canada canot possibly play the role of an independent nation. We must meet with the other nations throughout the world; but let us meet with them recognizing that we are full grown and free to co-operate with them in all that will make for the common welfare.

We have been very frequently told that we in this country have nothing to do but to endorse what has been called British policy. I should like to pause for a moment to ask: What is British policy? Surely we do not have to read history very closely to recognize that British policy is as changeable as the policy of any other country; that it changes with each successive government; that it changes from year to year. I suppose we might talk about Canada's National policy. That, perhaps, is the most stable thing that I know anything about, because the Liberal party may come or the Conservative party may come, but there is little difference—we have the self-same protective policy as we have had it for many years. At the same time we remember that there are considerable changes of policy from year to year. We cannot speak definitely of a British policy. It was the British policy a few months ago to bring Great Britain to the verge of another great war. A few months later the particular group that advocated that policy was discredited, and we had a new British policy. So I would suggest that the policy called the British policy, to which we have often been asked to subscribe, has been a policy simply of a little group of militarists and imperialists. I would venture to suggest to the Prime Minister and others who go in this delegation, that possibly they would be a great deal more nearly in line with the fundamental sympathies and ideals of the Canadian people if they followed not so much the representations of some of the old-time diplomats of Great Britain, as the representations of the more humble people represented by the British Labour party.

With regard to our international relations, there are several points, I think, that ought to be held before us clearly at this time. I should like to quote a few paragraphs from a recent debate in the British House of Commons and to put forward the positions taken on the floor of that House as fairly representing the positions taken by many of us in this country. On May 10, in the House of Commons, Sir John Simon raised the question of a certain decree issued by the commission which is governing the Saar, or rather misgoverning it under the League of Nations. Mr. Asquith supported Sir John Simon. Lord Robert Cecil broadened out the debate and raised the general problem of Franco-German relations. In the course of that debate Mr. E. D. Morel gave utterance to some sentiments which I should like to place before this House. He said:

The real issue in this matter is not reparations. It never has been reparations. It is not security. It never has been security. The real issue in this matter is whether or not the present rulers of France are going to succeed in their fixed determined aim of disrupting Germany. That is the real issue. It is an issue of very great importance not only to France and Germany, but to the whole of the continent of Europe and to ourselves. All these discussions about reparations and security are really completely artificial when you are faced with a situation such as you are facing to-day—when a French army is paralysing the heart and lungs of industrial Germany, when the Saar valley is being virtually annexed to France under the cloak of the League of Nations, when the whole of the civil administration of the Rhineland is being ruthlessly stamped out and the whole country is being gallicized. Deportations to-day amount to over 23,400 persons, including 33 editors, 5 Roman Catholic priests, 10 Protestant clergymen, and 150 teachers. This, I repeat, is the real issue—whether France is going to succeed in disrupting Germany. This country can no longer afford to ignore the real issue. The interest of our working classes, the interests of our commercial classes, and our national security are being more and more affected, and French policy is threatening more and more the peace, the immediate peace, of the world. . . . .

What is the truth? Put bluntly—and I shall make no reference whatever to French armaments as to which a great deal has recently been disclosed—the truth is this: The French General Staff is organizing the new Europe for war.

And he goes on to give in some detail the conditions which warrant him in making that statement. With regard to the Saar valley, Mr. Charles Buxton stated:

Here is a great miltary occupation going on, not by the League of Nations at all, not under the Treaty at all, because the Treaty says that you have to have a force formed of the population of the Saar itself. There is nothing of the kind. The French troops began, I think, speaking from recollection, at 2,000 or 3,000. They rose to 4,000, and have now risen to 10,000 men, for a wretchedly small district as regards size, and for a population, as I have said, of considerably under 1,000,000. Moreover, as I am reminded, they have their wives and families with them quartered on the country.

With regard to the Ruhr he said:

The hon. member for Thanet (Mr. Harmsworth) has said something about the smooth and easy working of this occupation of the Ruhr.

Mr. McBRIDE: I would like to know what bearing this has on the Hindu question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is hardly necessary to remind the House, although it might be necessary to remind the hon. member, that the Hindu question is not the only question that has to be discussed at the Imperial Conference.

He has ignored the fact that there prevails a reign of terror among the workers. He did not even pay any regard to the fact that a very large number of them have been shot down. The number amounts, if I have added up the figures rightly, to 52 who have already been killed, the majority of them working men, generally on the way to or from their work, suspected for aught I know of some evil intention or other, but in many cases with no overt act proved against them whatsoever, but simply shot as they were going about in the ordinary course of their business.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: From what paper is my hon. friend quoting?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: From the Official Debates of the British House of Commons. With regard to the Russian situation, too, I desire to give another brief quotation as to the attitude taken by those whom we labour people in this country regard as essentially representing our position in the Old Land. Mr. Ponsonby said:

The bottom of the trouble is our refusal to recognize The Russian government. The question of recognition is one of very great importance. Recognition of a government does not depend on its quality or its methods but purely and solely on its stability. That is the only point that ought to be taken into account in recognizing the sovereignty of another nation. I would refer the hon. gentleman in charge of the vote to the books on international law, and he will find there is no instance in history of so long a period elapsing in which a government—which has shown stability from the fact that after five and a-half years it is more firmly established—has been denied recognition in the way we have denied it.

Mr. MORIN: Who made the speech in the British House of Commons from which the hon. gentleman has quoted?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The first quotation was from Mr. Morel, the second from Mr. Charles Buxton, and the third from Mr. Ponsonby.

Mr. MORIN: I thought you mentioned Lord Robert Cecil and Sir John Simon.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I mentioned them as taking part previously in the debate, but the quotations I gave were from those whom I have just mentioned. Without going at all into the details of these great questions which are before Great Britain and Europe I would suggest that the representatives of this country urge upon the Imperial Conference the necessity for a modification of the Peace Treaty of Versailles, looking towards getting a little bit nearer the terms of the Armistice. I shall not weary the House to-night by quoting from that standard book of Mr. John M. Keyne's, in which he shows the iniquity of the Peace treaty and how far it is from the terms under which our enemy laid down his arms. I would refer anyone seeking information to that book by an expert.

Mr. LAFLAMME: We have all read it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure it is sufficient to convince anyone who has read it.

Mr. LAFLAMME: Did the hon. member read Tardieu's answer to that book?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have read a number of them but not that one.

Mr. LAFLAMME: You have a one-sided view of the situation if you have not read it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would also urge upon our representatives that they insist upon the fixing of reparations in some form that will allow for the reconstruction of Europe and the bringing about of those stable conditions on which alone permanent peace depends. With regard to the League of Nations, I would point out, as I did in a previous discussion, the importance of making the league inclusive and democratic in its character.

The whole world has looked forward to some sort of institution, some super-national assembly, that would be a meeting place for the various nations for the interchange of opinions, where relations could be explained in order better to be understood, and where in some way discussion would be substituted for war as the arbiter in every dispute. I cannot see how this can be accomplished so long as any nation is excluded from what purports to be a league of the nations of the world; nor do I think it can be brought about until such a league has become more democratic than the existing one. It should be clearly recognized that the old policy of regarding armaments as a guarantee of peace has absolutely failed; and instead of fortifying Singapore, as I believe is being done at the present time, with the consent of, if not under pressure from some of the other dominions—instead of going still further on the road towards the preparation for war by air, we should recognize frankly that war has been a failure so far as the establishment of international peace is concerned. If these principles could be successfully maintained at the conference and some progress made in the direction of having them implemented the conference would serve an eminently useful purpose. Undoubtedly at the present time there is need for a better understanding between the various peoples of the world. But that is not sufficient. As the editor of a farm paper wrote me only a few days ago, until definite economic reforms are achieved war is inevitable; so long as the condtions making for war remain there can be no escape from it. I would urge upon men who have the great responsibility of representing Canada that they carry these ideals with them across the waters. We know that when President Wilson crossed to the great conference in France he carried with him the ideals of the majority of the people of America, and I think of a very great many other countries. Unfortunately, owing to a series of circumstances, he seemed to have been unable to impress his ideals upon that conference so that we find the treaty altogether different from any instrument which would really express those ideals. The result has been the disturbed condition that has existed in Europe since that time. I should like our representatives in going overseas to carry with them some of the ideals that are so common among the ordinary people of this country. We are longing for peace and for economic justice. We are a people whose forefathers came to this country prepared to work hard in the hope that they might be able to found homes for themselves and their children. We are a people who in the pioneer days knew a great deal of neighbourliness. We are not anxious to interfere with other people's affairs; we are anxious to live and let live; and if we can only carry out these homely virtues in international relationships then the coming conference will be of value not merely to us, but as well to the world at large.

Mr. FORKE: I would call the attention of the committee to the conditions that existed in pre-war days. Europe at that time was an armed camp. Large nations were arming one against the other, and the only epoch in history to which that time can be fittingly compared was the Napoleonic era. But conditions have changed considerably since then. A conference was called in 1909 when the different communities comprising the British commonwealth assembled to discuss some very important questions. I believe that Australia undertook at that time to establish the nucleus of an Australian navy, while Canada undertook some naval contributions and New Zealand gave a promise of cash. Then came the war and all the concomitant conditions of war, and we find to-day an entirely different world from that which we knew before 1914. The great nation of Germany has almost, if not entirely, disappeared from the face of Europe as a military power and Russia is practically beyond the pale of international co-operation. In fact in Europe to-day we have about twenty-five nations in a more or less disorganized condition, each of them trying to maintain an army, all of them, perhaps, weak economically and in almost every other way. It seems to me to be one of the tragedies of the time that instead of getting together to hasten the day of peace and goodwill, the countries of Europe to-day are engendering quite a different feeling by hostile armies and hostile tariffs. They are building around themselves; they are shutting each other out; they imagine they are going to bring about prosperity in their own respective countries by having no communication with their neighbours. What is the world's greatest need at this time? I think it can be best expressed by the word that Bonar Law used when he came into power—"tranquillity." What the world needs is tranquillity, stability, in order that men may devote themselves to the work of rebuilding, to the work of bringing back a condition of contentment and prosperity.

I would like to say just a word here in connection with the position that the United States occupies. We all realize the great power and influence that the United States of America can have for good or for evil in the world. The United States occupies a position that has never been occupied by any other country. We speak of the United States as a nation; in reality it is a galaxy of nations, almost self-contained. They could almost build a fence around themselves and be complete in themselves. I know they require certain commodities that are necessary to civilization; yet the United States more than any other country can stand upon its own feet, can carry on almost without entering into communication with other lands. I do not believe, however, that anything like that is ever going to happen. I know there is a movement in the United States the purpose of which is to have that country live unto itself, to look only to its own welfare and its own prosperity. But it is only a passing phase; it will soon disappear and the United States will come back to the great position she should occupy in the world's affairs. Now, what is the view that the United States takes of the British Empire? I know we always speak of ourselves as a community of nations, each of which is complete in itself. Yet I venture to make the assertion to-day that outside of the politicians and the diplomats 10 p.m. in the United States, the general impression there is that Canada is little more than a colony of Great Britain. The great masses of the people of the United States do not, I believe, understand the position that Canada and the other nations occupy in the British Empire. The war has changed the whole aspect of our national life. I think I am correct in saying that during the war the supreme executive was composed of the British cabinet and the prime ministers of the different dominions. Canada during the war, through her sacrifice and the price she paid in that conflict, reached what may be called the status of nationhood; we realize that from the part she took in the framing of the Peace Treaty and the formation of the League of Nations. Conditions have entirely changed, and at the coming conference many important questions will have to be discussed and at least partly settled. Lloyd George's famous telegram with regard to the Chanak affair brought us very quickly to our senses and made us realize that some day we shall be forced to come to a rapid decision bearing upon the question just what position we occupy in the British Empire. I think the sentiment that was expressed in a great many quarters by a large number of the people of this Dominion in that connection was that no action should be taken by the government of Canada without the consent of parliament. But that has not been settled; nothing is definite. These questions all remain to be settled in the future and I hope that when the decision is taken they will be settled rightly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman repeat that? What question is it that is not settled?

Mr. FORKE: I was speaking about that famous telegram that came from England during the Chanak affair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Chanak affair?

Mr. FORKE: The Near Eastern question. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was just asking what question it was that had not been settled.

Mr. FORKE: That is the question that is not settled: What position was Canada going to take when the requisition came from Great Britain? Or should war arise and assistance be sought from Canada and the other nations of the Empire, what position should we take? That is the question that is not settled. Does my right hon. friend understand my point?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I do not. I do not know any question that is not settled.

Mr. FORKE: I imagine that a great many questions have not been settled. If the right hon. leader of the Opposition has settled the exact position of Canada in the Empire I hope we will get the benefit of his views when he speaks on this question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought the hon. gentleman said there was some question as to who decided what we would do in case of requisition. I do not know of any requisition. I certainly do not know of any question as to who decides.

Mr. FORKE: Perhaps we will leave the question, because the right hon. gentleman does not understand me, and I do not understand him; we will call it quits.

India has been mentioned several times to-night. In discussing these questions we can hardly take India into consideration. India occupies a different position from that of any of the other nations making up the British commonwealth. We speak about India as a country; in reality India comprises many countries. There are eleven distinct languages in India, to say nothing of a great variety of dialects, and I suppose for the time being at least we shall have to leave India out of consideration. I wish only to dwell for a few moments on certain conditions affecting the position occupied by the British commonwealth as a whole.

We are all a little disappointed, perhaps, at the extent of the influence the League of Nations has had upon the world's history during the last few years. I believe that in that same league is the germ of something that will in the years to come be of inestimable benefit to the civilized world. I like to think of the British commonwealth, or of the British Empire if you will—because it does not make any difference what phrase you use to express the same meaning—I do like to think of the British Empire as being in itself a League of Nations, a beginning of that wider and better league that we hope some day will embrace the whole civilized world. I only hope the day is not far distant when the United States will enter the League and thereby lend its great influence to the cause of promoting the peace and welfare of humanity.

As to what will take place at the conference, let me say a word. While retaining our own individuality as a nation, working out our own salvation, I wish to see no slacking of the ties that bind us in that Empire, the ties of sentiment and loyalty to the British Crown. I believe, however, that any attempt to bind the ties more tightly by any agreement will perhaps have the worst effect possible—will, in fact, have results that are not anticipated. I believe that nothing can bind us with stronger chains than those feelings of loyalty and those ties of sentiment that are the strongest feelings within the human breast, and I would warn those delegates who go over to represent Canada at that conference to be very, very careful in entering into any agreement that will be binding or constitute a legal tie of any kind that might be irksome because I do believe that there is no question of the loyalty of this country to the British Empire or of our remaining an integral part of that great Empire. The world to-day is in need of a partnership of nations. That is its greatest need, to live down the feelings of hatred and envy that are so rampant everywhere. If we need a commonwealth of nations I come back to where I began and say, shall we do anything that will lessen the ties that bind the nations of the British commonwealth into one? I say no. By every means in our power let us strengthen those ties by those feelings of affection and loyalty that I have already mentioned.

What of the future? There has been some little misunderstanding about what I have said to-night as to our future not being settled. Our future is not settled. Our position is not settled. We claim that we are a nation, that we are, as was quoted the other night, "daughter in our mother's house but mistress in our own." That is a very good phrase and perhaps it explains our position. But, Mr. Chairman, there are a great many things to be taken into consideration. A great many difficult problems will have to be solved, and I would only hold out this idea to those who go over to Great Britain to represent Canada, and that is to be careful, to go slow, to make no rash promises. I know the temptations will be great. I have read something about those conferences that were held during Chamberlain's time, when every influence was brought to bear to tie up the daughter nations a little more firmly than they were at that time. But it came to naught and I believe that any such attempts along the same lines at the present time will work nothing but evil. I have faith in the loyalty of the people of this country. I have faith that they will do the right thing when the occasion arises, that they will be loyal. Should the Mother Country be ever in necessity I know that this country will be ready to rise to the occasion. But there is danger in making an attempt to fix hard and fast lines. I believe the safe thing, to quote again, would be "to go on from precedent to precedent" until finally the stage has been reached when we shall know exactly what our destiny is to be.

I shall not take up any more time. I have not uttered anything I know that will help those who go over to represent us other than this, that they should be very careful in making any binding promises that may be irksome, and which would perhaps do more than any thing else to disintegrate this Empire that is founded upon feelings of affection and reverence and love for the Mother Country.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I have no intention to broach the subject of the Hindus and Japanese or of any other people in the world. I rather wish to speak in behalf of the Canadian people. You are not without knowing, sir, what have been my views in the past and what they are to-day.

In the last war, the Great War as it is known, I was in favour of participating within the limit of our means. I was, however, against taking part to the extent of bringing ruin upon us, as we did. That is why I rise this evening to again warn, inasmuch as my humble voice can he heard, the right hon.

Prime Minister and his colleagues who will soon cross the Atlantic to confer with the statesmen of England. My sympathy accompanies them, for British diplomats have a way of outwitting all others. Therefore, let us pray God that our own statesmen may hold their own.

The right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) sailed across the seas in 1921. He took part in an Imperial Conference. A report of this conference was tabled in the House; however, before laying down reports of that nature, it seems that great care is taken to withhold anything that one does not wish the Canadian people to know. I might ask the right hon. leader of the Opposition if he understands what I am saying. If not, let him say so, and I shall repeat it in English. I might ask him if it is not a fact that we never have an exact report of the Imperial Conferences? I wish to know what took place; not only for myself, but for the electors whom I represent in this House, the whole country wants to know whether he has pledged himself to build naval stations here and there with a view to participating in future wars of the Empire?

For my part, sir, I shall not oppose those who wish to go and fight for the British Empire, so long as they do so at the expense of that Empire that they follow the example of the Frenchmen who were in our country when war broke out, and fought for their flag but always at the expense of the French government. I, myself, wish to uphold the British flag, but I want to do so within the limit of our means and no more; for one must not go beyond such means.

I do not think that the present Prime Minister, in whom I have faith, is the greatest advocate of imperialism in this House; on the contrary, I believe he has somewhat of my ideas on the subject, for I have read a little the biography of the Prime Minister's grandfather and I am led to believe that he is not an Imperialist but has at heart the interest of the Canadian people.

When I listen, very attentively indeed, to the right hon. leader of the Opposition who always shows ability as a debater, besides being very entertaining, when I witness his attacks against the government in regard to moneys voted here and there on wharves amounting to very little, when I note that he has become close, I might say like a Jew, I then ask myself how a man like him can still think of going to England to pledge Canada to the extent of hundreds of millions even billions of dollars. I cannot understand my right hon. friend's actions, at present, because we, the citizens of Quebec, those bad people to his mind, know fully well that he is one of those who ruined our country. Every one admits it. The ex-Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Sir Robert Borden, as well as the late Prime Minister, the present right hon. leader of the Opposition, declared time after time that they would sacrifice our last man and last dollar to win the war. Just as if we had been left alone to win the war! But, Mr. Chairman, I have often stated and I do so again, we were not alone in this war; there must have been people in the British Isles, in the other colonies, in Belgium and in Italy. We were three against one German, at the beginning of the war. There must have been some people who did not take seriously to the war. I have reason to believe that the colonies were wiser than the remainder of the British Empire, at the outbreak of the war. However, let us change the subject.

The right hon. leader of the Opposition, as I previously stated a few moments ago, does not want any wharves; he says we are spending too much; in fact, I admit it. However, last year, he told us that we were spending only 17 cents per capita for the navy and that we should be ashamed to spend so little for such an object. I put the question to the right hon. leader of the Opposition: Why this navy? With whom shall we go to war to-morrow? With our neighbours, the Americans? We do not need to make preparations to fight them, we are beaten in advance; they are 12 to 1. Now, if in the near future, war breaks out in Europe, and that England is still more interested than we are in these wars, I wish to tell the right hon. leader of the Opposition, For heaven's sake, let England first fight; and if she cannot do so alone, let her call upon our men and let her pay them to fight. At the present moment, England is paying off part of her debts while we are accumulating deficit after deficit, from year to year. Would it then be fair that we should take part again in European wars? I say no.

Why all these trips to the Imperial Conferences, if it is not to trap the Prime Ministers of the self-governing colonies, to make them take on responsibilities towards the Empire, like when the question of the Near East cropped up, when the late Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Meighen) wanted us to immediately declare ourselves in favour of participating in the mix-up. The right hon. leader of the Opposition seems to think that the moment Canada will enter a war, the enemies will say: We will fight no more, because these Canadians wipe out everybody and we are afraid of them. If that is his opinion, such is not mine.

Does England need a navy? She certainly does need a navy to protect her trade over the whole world. Her existence is dependent on that trade! That is why she fought against Germany, for she feared Germany might displace her in the world's trade. England needs her merchant marine and her navy is absolutely indispensable to protect the former; but that is her business and I do not see what we have to do with it. Let us not disturb our mother-in-law, England, and let us go about our own business in this country. That is all I ask. During the last general election, in 1921, I proclaimed before the people of the county I represent, that I had not, so to speak, any recognized leader and I state in this House, in the presence of the leader I recognize to-day, that if I were again candidate in my county, and should the Prime Minister be in favour of taking part in the Imperial defence, either by a contribution in money or by the building of a Canadian navy in peace time, but for the defence of the Empire in war time, I declare now that I would not be that Prime Minister's candidate and that he would hear from me, should he blunder to that extent. I wish to always be consistent with my past and faithfully represent the electors that have sent me to parliament.

Mr. JACOBS: Inasmuch as the right hon. leader of the Opposition was a delegate to the conference of 1921, and took part in the deliberations with respect to the Hindu franchise, would it be unreasonable to ask him to let us have the benefit of his views on this important question. If the discussion were to close without any expression of opinion from him it would be like playing Hamlet without the melancholy Dane.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I was not aware that I still was Hamlet. I observed when the hon. member spoke first that he asked that the Prime Minister state what his position was, that he already knew mine. He repeated his appeal two or three times, but I do not see that it has been very successful. Since that I notice he has been down sitting with the Prime Minister. Now he has decided to ask me to state my position. I will answer him in one word: I stand just where I did, and my words are fully on record in the conference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my right hon. friend one question. The resolution of the conference, or at least one clause of it is as follows:

[Mr. Lanctot.]

The conference accordingly is of the opinion that in the interests of the solidarity of the British commonwealth, it is desirable that the rights of such Indians to citizenship should be recognized.

The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) has said that these words imply an undertaking on the part of this parliament, or rather on the part of Canada, to see that the federal franchise is granted to the Indians in British Columbia. Is that correct or not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The words are English and the words are simple. I understand them fully, and if the Prime Minister does not I will have to leave him just where he is.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the House is entitled to an answer from my right hon. friend. He represented this country at the Imperial conference. He knows better than anyone else what interpretation he placed on these words. I ask him, seeing he represented Canada at the Imperial conference when that resolution was passed, whether he understood that Canada was at that time giving an undertaking to the Indians in British Columbia to the effect that they would be entitled to the franchise.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No human being understood anything of the sort. The words are very plain and there is no misunderstanding them. The right hon. gentleman is now Prime Minister and he had better take his responsibility.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am ready to take mine. I wanted to find out where my hon. friend stands.

Mr. HUMPHREY: I do not wish to prolong this discussion in any way. I wish to say, however, that I associate myself with the remarks made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), particularly as one of the representatives of the province whose population is largely composed of industrial workers. These workers are fully in accord with the views that have been expressed by my colleague from British Columbia to-night.

I should like to refer for a moment or two to one or two remarks made by the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). That hon. gentleman stated that the representatives from British Columbia are opposed to oriental or Hindu immigration, or words to that effect. I should like to assure the House that the members from British Columbia are a unit on this question with which they have been identified to a greater degree than the members from any other province. You will understand, Mr.

Chairman, that the climatic conditions in British Columbia are such as to appeal to immigrants from the Orient. In the eastern provinces the climate is such that it is hardly likely to attract any very great number of the immigrants, and therefore those provinces will not be troubled with the problem that confronts us on the Pacific coast. Some few years ago a test case was made in British Columbia in regard to the admission of Hindus into Canada. The stand then taken by the people of the province was not based on any narrow ground. They did not look upon the question from the point of view that it was going to interfere with the industrial workers of the province, or with industrial activities carried on there. The stand they took was with the desire to reserve the province for the people for whom it was meant. The position that the people of British Columbia took at that time was very sound, and they have carried out that position from year to year. Some few years ago certain regulations were made which restricted the immigration of Hindus to this country, and if it were not for those regulations we would have in British Columbia, not 1,200 or 1,500, not 5,000, but we would have at least 500,000 or 1,000,000 Hindus. That, in a few words, is practically the situation, that is why the people of that province have taken this firm stand, and that is why the members from British Columbia are a unit on this question. At the present time there are only some few hundred, perhaps anywhere around 1,500 or 2,000 Hindus there. But the people of that province have expressed themselves very forcibly in regard to extending the franchise to these Hindus in reference to provincial and federal questions, and it is our belief that that expression of opinion should still be maintained. It is only through necessity that we have adopted that opinion and taken that firm stand in the past, and that we wish to maintain that attitude on it in the future. I can only add my few remarks to those expressed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) in saying that we can only urge the Prime Minister to keep in view the sentiment of the province of British Columbia and the position that we have taken in the past. We respectfully urge that at the coming conference the Prime Minister give every consideration to the views of the people as they have been expressed in British Columbia, and to the views that have been expressed in this House by members representing that province, particularly upon the oriental and Hindu question. I might also add that the people of British Columbia do not take any second place with the other provinces in respect to their loyalty or the broadness of their views.

Mr. GOOD: When I rose before I was under the impression that we were discussing item 563. I perceive, however, that we are discussing the Imperial Conference vote, and I shall confine my remarks at the present moment to that question, and reserve what I had in mind before for the subsequent vote on the Economic Conference.

I think the question under consideration is one of the most important that we can possibly give attention to. I am reminded of a statement which H. G. Wells makes in, I think, the concluding chapter of his Outline of History where he says that modern civilization faces three great classes of problems; those pertaining to property, those pertaining to currency, and those pertaining to international relations; and if any one will read his war novel Mr. Britling Sees it Through, I think he cannot help being convinced, if he had not been convinced before by his own observations, of the intimate relations that exist between what we might call foreign policy or international relations and the life and welfare of the individual. It seems to me that our citizens do not generally attach sufficient importance to the question of foreign relations. Sometimes I think of a little group of what we have called German junkers, sitting down prior to the great catastrophe, and, like a couple of men playing chess, figuring out how they were going to play the game of war. Little did they think at that time of the awful misery, bloodshed and loss that was to follow. Little did the people of the world think that those few men could plunge the whole world into such chaos. However, Mr. Chairman, unless the rank and file of the people of the world wake up, and take an interest in questions of this sort, at any time we may be plunged into the same sort of disaster. Our children may be slain, our fields devastated, and our cities razed to the ground. Therefore, I think it is of extreme importance that at this Imperial Conference, where the issues of war and peace and other matters of great importance will be under consideration, our delegation should keep in mind, not the playing of the game, not the old kind of diplomancy, but the interests and welfare of the rank and file of the masses of the people. I suppose most of the hon. members present, some at least, will have read that eloquent passage in Carlyle's Sartor Resartus, where he speaks of the twenty Britishers going to meet the twenty Frenchmen, who had no quarrel with them, and each blowing out the brains of the other. This awful tragedy is something that statesmen will have to grapple with, that those who elect statesmen to office will also have to grapple with.

In regard to this matter, which no doubt will be considered at the conference, I would like to endorse what the member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) has already said in that connection. The condition in Europe at the present time is an object lesson to us, and we ourselves have suffered, and are suffering at the present time, from that condition. We are suffering directly and indirectly. Our farmers are suffering at the present time from dislocation of trade, from the loss of Europe as a purchaser of our commodities and I hope that the most serious consideration will be given at the approaching conference to some amendments of the Treaty of Versailles which would look towards the restoration of normal conditions in Europe.

In regard to questions which we might call domestic, I want to suggest to the Prime Minister and to the House one very definite matter which might possibly be taken up, and which I think ought to be taken up at the Imperial Conference, and that is the question of the right to amend our own constitution. I do think that this is a matter of prime importance. I was going to say it is a disgrace, but at all events, it is an anacronism, and an anomoly that Canada should not have the right to amend her own constitution, and if there were any way of submitting the matter to the House to be voted on, I would be only too glad to test the feeling of the House in regard thereto. I know these things have to develop gradually; but I submit in all earnestness that our delegation should take up with the British government, this question of obtaining the right to amend our constitution. I wonder whether some resolution could not be drafted in that direction. Perhaps this is premature; but may I at all events earnestly urge the Prime Minister and our delegation to discuss the matter, and when he comes back next session, to have something definite to report to the House in regard to ways and means and prospects of getting through such a constitutional change? I presume this would be simply an amendment to the British North America Act enabling us to change the act without the consent of the British parliament.

Now with regard to the question of the Hindu franchise, I should like to offer just one or two brief comments. We have not yet fathomed this question. I think the discussion has been, if I may say so, without offending hon. gentlemen who have spoken, rather shallow in respect to that matter. I sometimes think of the old and well-known statement "God hath made of one blood all nations of men." We will at some time or another have to recognize that truth.

Mr. McBRIDE: He put the sea between them to keep them apart.

Mr. GOOD: Perhaps so, but the sea at the present time is not something that keeps nations apart. It is rather a well-travelled road, a pathway between nations, and we have arrived at a stage in the history of the world when we have to think a little deeper than we have in the past in regard to these relationships between nations and races. I recognize full well the difficulties, but I would submit to the House that this is a matter that we ought to consider with the greatest possible degree of sympathy for those whose skins do not happen to be of our colour.

I venture, in conclusion, to ask some definite questions of the Prime Minister. I hope he will pay attention to those questions because I want him to answer them if possible as definitely as he can. I will ask the questions in order so that he can answer them. Have any recent proposals come to this government from the British government in connection with these conferences?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The agenda speaks for itself, and the agenda has been placed on record in Hansard.

Mr. GOOD: Has there been nothing further?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would not say that there has been nothing further, because there has been in the agenda a reference to one or two matters which the British government asked should, for the present, be regarded as confidential. I therefore am not at liberty to give to the House a statement in regard to them. Whether before I leave for England, the British government will take a different view of that or not, I cannot say.

Mr. GOOD: This is what I wanted to find out, namely whether or not there was anything of a confidential character that had come to the government's attention apart from the agenda which we had placed before us.

The next question is this: Will the Prime Minister give to the House to-night some declaration of general policy on his part or on the part of the government regarding their attitude as they go to this conference? Will he, before this discussion is over, give some statement to the House?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I find a little difficulty in appreciating what my hon. friend means by a definite statement of attitude. If he asks me as regards any particular matter, I will endeavour to convey to him what the attitude of the government is. But I could not attempt in a statement to convey to my hon. friend what view the government may take in regard to every question that will come up at the conference.

Mr. GOOD: I quite understand that the Prime Minister cannot go into details in a matter of this sort. but it is very desirable that before the delegation goes to the conference, this House should have some rough idea of the point of view, shall I say, of the government. Let me ask one or two further questions. Are there likely to be raised any questions as to constitutional changes? Does this government propose to raise any such questions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I can speak only for this government; I cannot speak for the governments of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Great Britain. So far as we are concerned, we do not propose to raise any questions of constitutional changes. I may say further that in that regard the position of the government would be very much that expressed in a resolution which I moved when in opposition in reference to the conference which my right hon. friend the present leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) was about to attend:

> That the House, while recognizing the propriety of Canada being represented at any Imperial Conference or conference of the Prime Ministers of the Empire that may be called, desires to record its opinion that at the coming conference no steps should be taken in any way involving any change in the relations of Canada to other parts of the Empire.

I would feel that that is the attitude which the country would expect us to take if a question of that kind came up.

Mr. CHURCH: I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he would kindly place the United Farmers of Ontario platform, which was one to get in on and not to stand on, before the conference.

Mr. GOOD: Does the Prime Minister expect the question of imperial preferential tariffs to be raised? Does he propose to raise it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I imagine the question of imperial preferences will be raised. I understand that Australia has intimated that she would like to raise that question. If it is raised, the attitude which I will take as regards Canada will be that the matter of a preference is a matter for each parliament to decide for itself.

Mr. GOOD: Does the Prime Minister expect the question of imperial federation to be raised?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am inclined to think the question of imperial federation has gone to sleep for a time.

Mr. DICKIE: I wish to say a few words on the Hindu question, a subject which has been pretty well ventilated in this House to-night. I hardly agree with many of the sentiments enunciated by hon. members who have spoken about those people, and who have prated about the brotherhood of man. If they lived in British Columbia, they would have different ideas with respect to the oriental races.

With respect to the Hindus, it is generally understood that there are between 1,000 and 1,200 Hindus in British Columbia. If they were all of the caste or calibre of Mr. Sastri, the question would be a different one entirely; that gentleman seems to have hypnotized people throughout Canada by his brilliance. As regards the 1,200 or so Hindus we have in British Columbia, I should judge that about 1,000 at least were low caste Hindus. If they had a vote, they would not know what to do with it; they would simply be voted as a unit by the other 200.

Mr. JACOBS: Is there not a chance that they would vote for the Tory party?

Mr. DICKIE: The hon. member might believe that such might be the case, if they were enfranchised, but I do not think the Tory party would want them. We do not need their votes in my constituency, in which there are many of them. They would vote when they got the promise that something would be given them in return. That is the way with the low caste Hindus. But the question of caste is too complex a one for me to enter into to-night, even if I were familiar enough with it to do so. Hon. gentlemen must realize this important fact, that these Hindus are not men such as we are; they have the mentality of children without childhood's innocence. You cannot comprehend the eastern mind unless you have lived among the people. They are shack-dwellers, men who do not make any effort whatever to improve the country, and they live under conditions that we could not tolerate for a moment. The Hindus will not work for us for any length of time, and they cannot adapt themselves to our methods. In their natural community spirit, they club their funds together and erect a sawmill or engage in other undertakings, and it is impossible for us to compete with them. Those of them who go into the dairy business can live upon 10 or 15 cents a day. Our old fellows who are about ready to cross the divide used to be able to exist by means of market-gardening and from the sale of milk which they got from the one cow or so they kept. But that day has gone by, as a result of the intrusion of these orientals. I think it would be unwise on our part to grant the franchise to the Hindus. If they were all of the type of Mr. Sastri the question would be somewhat different, but as a broad principle it should be definitely laid down that we cannot afford to admit to the full citizenship of Canada any people with whom or their descendants we or our descendants cannot intermarry. On the Pacific coast we have only a strip of land, and yet we are the melting-pot for these orientals. The question is becoming a very grave one for us indeed. Since the advent of the Japanese, whose mode of living is like that of other orientals, it is exceedingly difficult for the poor white man to get along on the outskirts of any of the cities in British Columbia. The disability of the Hindus, so far as their not being allowed to vote is concerned, is a matter that is by no means so serious as some people would lead us to think. The fact that 1,000 low caste Indians in Canada have not the vote should not be a matter of grave consequence to India, for if these Hindus were in India their vote would not amount to anything, if indeed they would have any vote at all. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has pointed this out quite clearly and I need not emphasize this particular point. Most of these people at home would be subservient to some native prince, and without the vote in Canada they are very much better off and a great deal more satisfied than they have ever been in their lives at home. I have never heard any one of them express a wish to be enfranchised. They are getting along perfectly well without the vote they are living within their means and are prosperous. If they had the vote they would simply become tools in the hands of unscrupulous politicians of one party or another and in all probability the very first thing they would ask is that their families be brought out to this country. We have no room for them. If the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) lived in British Columbia I am sure he would not father any such resolution as this. But he does not understand the question as we do; indeed, he cannot understand it because he is living apart from the facts. I claim to be absolutely unbiassed in reference to my attitude towards oriental people, whose economical virtues I quite recognize, but I repeat we have no room for them; and for the Hindu of low caste we have still less room than for others of the oriental races.

Mr. SHAW: I regret that on account of the short notice which was given of the debate any remarks I may have to make on this important subject must necessarily be fragmentary. The prospective Imperial Conference seems to follow the lines laid down at prior colonial and imperial conferences. These conferences have, I think, quite frankly had in view one definite purpose, namely, of co-ordinating as far as possible the naval, military and air forces of the Empire for purposes of common defence. It has not always been expressed just in that language but I believe it will be admitted that this has been clearly the object since the first colonial conference was held. In the development of these conferences it was soon realized that the meetings could not ultimately result in the greatest success unless some method were devised by which each of the component parts of the Empire secured adequate representation. In other words, the various communities constituting the Empire were not prepared to spend their money without having control over the objects for which that money might be used. And so to-day we have developed a system of consultation, so-called, by which —usually subsequent to the event—the various component parts of the Empire are notified as to what has taken place, and are kept informed to some extent at least as to the progress of affairs. This problem will undoubtedly receive consideration at the Conference, but it is going to be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to evolve any system of consultation which will be adequate to serve Canadian purposes. Let me suggest that the consultation by the prime ministers of the various dominions, even during the period when the conference is in progress, is not adequate; and I want, if I may do so, to cite an incident of the last Imperial Conference in support of what I am stating. The conference in 1921, at which Canada was represented by the present leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), approved of a certain policy which Lord Curzon had given effect to with regard to Egypt. Subsequently, so far as we are informed, after the conference had given its approval to Lord Curzon's policy and had disbanded, Lloyd George, in consultation with Lord Allenby, completely reversed the policy of the conference with regard to Egypt and set out upon an entirely different tack, the dominions not being consulted.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. gentleman say to what resolution he refers? I cannot recall any action by the conference respecting Egypt.

Mr. SHAW: That point I shall come to in a moment. The information with regard to this conference is so inadequate that one finds it difficult to get at the facts. But I am judging only from a statement made by Premier Hughes in Australia when he said that the conference had given consideration to the situation in Egypt and had come to a conclusion in connection therewith.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps I should say that there is no conclusion of the conference that is not embodied in a fitting resolution; none whatever; it does not matter what anyone says. The report of the conference speaks for itself.

Mr. SHAW: Well, the report of the conference as it is presented to us is very inadequate indeed; that is all I can say. We have little information as to what purposes invited the various resolutions that were before the conference. Unfortunately I have not before me the proceedings of the conference itself, but I state that the Egyptian policy as presented by Lord Curzon was approved of by the conference and subsequently after the conference had disbanded, the policy was reversed without any reference to the various dominions of such a vital and material change.

Not only that, but I suggest that if the policy approved by the conference had been maintained, this country and the other members of the Empire would probably have found themselves in the position of fighting Egypt. Now, if this difficulty prevails in regard to consultation when the conference members are present, what must the difficulty be when the various representatives of the dominions are scattered about the four quarters of the earth? I just want, in that connection, to point out what Premier Hughes of Australia said, speaking at this 1921 conference:

> But the position in regard to policy in the future is very difficult. Every day a new situation arises, or may arise. How is it to be dealt with? We shall be scattered to the four quarters of the earth. How are the dominions to have an effective voice on foreign policy when, as things stand, they can only be told after things have been done, and are not consulted beforehand.

I may say also that the Prime Minister, Lloyd George, said in a reference to consultation:

> Communications by cable are not a means by which you can have real consultation, because you may have a particular point in view, and may alter it after hearing what is to be said on the other side.

Lord Milner apparently was of the same opinion, because he is reported to have said:

> Experience has shown that the consultation which is necessary in order to keep the different interests of the Empire in line cannot be properly effected by telegrams and despatches, between half a dozen different governments.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier many years ago refused to have any part in consultation, because, he said, consultation meant responsibility. I suggest that if we are going to take part in the foreign policy of the Empire, then we must have a hand in the framing of that policy and in its execution. But if this prevailing system of consultattion is the only part we are going to have in that policy, the method is not only ineffective but absolutely dangerous.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. gentleman say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier never took part in consultation on foreign policy?

Mr. SHAW: No, I make no such statement. I simply say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier laid down the principle that consultation meant responsibility. I think he was correct in making that statement. Whether or not he adhered to it fully is a matter for argument. A question of foreign policy may, of course, be a question of peace or war. We realize fully in Canada to-day the significance of war, we realize what result it may have so far as our own people are concerned. We realize it is dangerous, not only to the manhood of our country but also to the wealth of our country. Canada must know, before she engages in any future war, several things. She must know whether or not the cause is a just one. She must know whether or not it is a war in which Canada should properly be involved and in which Canadian interests are involved. In the third place, she must know whether or not the war is unavoidable. These things can only be determined by Canadian representatives having a voice in the formation of the policy which may ultimately lead to war, and in addition, in the execution of that policy. I suggest that the 11 p.m. Prime Minister has laid down the proper principle for this country to follow with regard to peace or war, namely that there shall be no commitments, no declaration of war involving this country, unless the parliament of Canada first gives its approval to such a course. That, I think, is solid ground upon which to predicate our future.

I wish to speak very shortly about another matter which has been referred to by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) and that is whether or not it is proposed to discuss at this conference the advisability of subsequently holding a constitutional convention. I was very much interested in listening the other day to the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) during the discussion on the Halibut treaty, and also to the remarks of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Morin). We hear many expressions of gratification at the status which Canada has achieved. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was not in his place at the time, otherwise I think he might have taken issue on that question of exactly what is Canada's status to-day. I remember reading last summer a statement reported in the press of that distinguished Canadian, Sir Allen Aylesworth, who suggested Canada was still a colony. Well, I suggest to hon. members of this committee that an important question is, what is our status? It is variously defined —sometimes as a partnership, sometimes as one of a league of nations within the Empire, sometimes as a component part of the Empire; and various other glittering terms are used to describe our present position. Sir Clifford Sifton, in a statement, claimed, and I think with much justification and truth, that we were allowing ourselves to be flattered by the language of the stump, and that really these terms did not correctly disclose our real status. In 1917 it was deemed advisable that at an early day a constitutional conference should be called for the purpose of defining, as far as possible, the exact status of Canada and the other dominions. In fact, it was on the programme for the 1921 conference that preparation should be made for such a constitutional conference, but, for reasons that I am not aware of, the conference was postponed. I think that was a very regrettable circumstance, and now early steps should be taken to hold a constitutional conference in order more adequately to determine the exact status of this country. That is a matter of importance for us, because when the distinguished statesmen in this country, as I have indicated, disagree, what can we expect statesmen in other countries to say? We may call ourselves a nation as much as we like, but unless foreign countries are prepared to take us at our own valuation it is simply a case of trying to lift ourselves by our own bootstraps. So I suggest the urgent need for that constitutional conference, and I trust that the Prime Minister will see to it that steps are taken in that direction. I know Premier Hughes of Australia has stated that it would be a very dangerous thing to do; that all sorts of catastrophes would be invited. I am not sure whether that prediction is justified, but I do know that the opposite is, in any case, equally true, namely, that if we proceed in the vague and indefinite course we are pursuing we may ultimately come to disaster.

I think the time has arrived for the appointment of a Canadian ambassador to Washington. Whatever misunderstanding there has been in the past with regard to that appointment, I think the Prime Minister should make it part of his duty at that conference to state our position frankly and clearly and to indicate that we as Canadians desire to have a representative at our neighbour's capital. Our interests are largely interwoven with the interests of the United States, and it is important that our representative should be there at the earliest possible date. I need only refer in proof of that to the latest instance we have had, the Halibut treaty. There is a case in which a triangular correspondence resulted not only in delay but in embarrassment, and in many cases in the future it might even result in disaster. I suggest that we want in Washington a Canadian who is thoroughly conversant with our conditions, who is familiar with our problems and who can speak authoritatively on behalf of the government of Canada. I trust that the Prime Minister will take adequate steps to see that whatever difficulties there may be in the way of that appointment are promptly removed in order that this much to be desired end may be accomplished.

One would think in listening to the members from British Columbia that this problem of the Indian question was a very simple one, that exclusion was the only adequate remedy, and that the question could be justly settled by that quick and easy method. May I suggest to the Prime Minister that this question will be one of the most serious problems that will confront the Imperial Conference? The question has been raised in the colony of Kenya in East Africa and is there to-day a vital problem. Representatives I believe of the various conflicting interests in Kenya colony are now in London and propose to take this matter up before the Imperial Conference. It is important that this matter be decided not on narrow, sectional lines but in a broad spirit of fairness and of justice, and I have no doubt that the Prime Minister will give to that problem the sincere and deep study that it merits.

I have just one other suggestion to make and it is this. We have heard much of late years about secret diplomacy and its perils. I trust that steps will be taken in order that the fullest publicity may be given to the proceedings of this Imperial Conference. I see no reason at all if peace be the object of that conference why the whole proceedings should not be made public. I know no reason for keeping from the Canadian public at least the full facts involved in all the problems and in addition the remarks of all the statesmen who may attend the conference and the conclusions at which they arrive. If we ever hope to get anywhere in this country it is by a full, frank and fair statement of the facts and by an equally frank and candid discussion of those facts. I therefore trust that the Prime Minister will leave no stone unturned to see that the fullest publicity is given to the proceedings of this conference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just before the resolution carries I would like to say a word in regard to the granting of the franchise to the Indians which has been referred to. Perhaps I cannot do better than to state to the House just what I said to Mr. Sastri when he was in Ottawa. As hon. members will recall, Mr. Sastri made a trip through the different parts of the British Empire, visiting the several dominions, and came to Canada, I think, last of all. While he was in this country he was the guest of the country, and when he came to Ottawa we invited him to meet the members of the government in cabinet council. We discussed with him there very freely and openly the situation as we view it in Canada, pointing out the difficulties which we have in endeavouring to solve that problem, and seeking to gain from him the difficulties with which India is confronted through the situations that may arise in other parts of the Empire. When Mr. Sastri left I sent him the following letter expressing the government's attitude in the matter:

OTTAWA, September 5, 1922.

The Right Honourable V. SRINIVASA SASTRI,
Chateau Laurier, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. SASTRI,

In reply to the representations made by you at the interview with my colleagues and myself on Friday of last week, and which were the subject of further conference betwen us yesterday, I desire to assure you that, at the earliest favourable moment, the government will be pleased to invite the consideration of parliament to your request that natives of India resident in Canada be granted a Dominion parliamentary franchise on terms and conditions identical with those which govern the exercise of that right by Canadian citizens generally.

The subject is necessarily one which parliament alone can determine. It will be submitted to parliament for consideration when the franchise law is under revision.

In conveying to the government of India an expression of the attitude of the government of Canada in this matter, we hope that you will not fail to make it clear that at the present time, in eight out of the nine provinces of which our Dominion is composed, the federal franchise is granted to natives of India resident in Canada, on terms which are identical with those applicable generally to Canadian citizens.

Your sincerely,
(sgd) W. L. MACKENZIE KING.

I might say that the point on which particular emphasis was laid in conversation with Mr. Sastri was the fact that our Dominion is a federation of provinces, that in the distribution of seats in this House regard is had primarily to the provinces, each province being allowed a certain proportion in relation to the others, and that at all times the provinces of the Dominion have had regard for each other's problems, that nothing could be more unfortunate than that an effort should be made on the part of any province or group of provinces to coerce, so to speak, any other province in regard to any matter which was of great concern to it, that the federal government could not afford to ignore the prevailing sentiment in any province. I pointed out to Mr. Sastri that when the Dominion franchise law would be under review, mentioning in that connection that it would come up for review in all probability before any general election was held, doubtless it would be referred to a committee of the House to consider and that the representations which he had made would be presented to the committee, but that what was of most importance was how the members from the province of British Columbia themselves would view the matter. I said quite frankly that if the members from the province of British Columbia regardless of political party were to be favourable to having the franchise granted to the Indians in British Columbia, the rest of parliament would fall cordially into harmony with their view, that on the other hand if there was no agreement among the members of the province of British Columbia on this question, if it were clear to the members of this House that so far as British Columbia was concerned instead of being in favour of granting the franchise they were all pretty much the other way, it was hardly probable that the members of parliament generally would seek to impose any view upon them which would be contrary to their wishes. In other words, that it was very doubtful how any situation of unrest in one part of the British Empire could be improved by creating a new condition of unrest in another part. That was broadly the nature of the representations made to Mr. Sastri. I believe it is the true situation. I cannot see unless there is among the people of British Columbia themselves some general agreement as to what is wisest and best in regard to this matter, and that after all is best attested by the members for the province of British Columbia in this House, that the rest of the Dominion would be helping the situation materially by forcing a view contrary to that which is entertained by its members in that province. If, however, the members of the province of British Columbia are divided on the matter and there is any preponderating view one way or the other, I think that is a circumstance of which parliament would take account, but the important factor is that the question of whether or not the franchise is to be granted to the Indians of British Columbia is a matter, so far as I can see, not to be determined at any Imperial Conference, but to be decided by this parliament in settling the franchise for membership in this House.

Amount required for expenses of delegates to Imperial Economic conference, $25,000.

Mr. GOOD: When I rose before to speak on this question I remarked that I had left my notes upstairs. I continued to leave them there because I think the House is not deirous of hearing any long speech from me, or from anyone else, at the present time. I will be very brief. I simply want to suggest to the House and to the government that one matter of prime importance be submitted by this government to the Economic Conference—I refer to the question which we had under consideration in the committee on Banking and Commerce: that of the stablizing the purchasing power of money. I do not suppose there has been any economic question or any economic problem which has been more serious, in recent years at all events, than that problem. We had before the committee Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University, who has made a special study of this matter for some twenty years, and he gave us his assurance that a solution of the problem was quite within the realm of possibility or probability. Now, I have given some little thought and consideration to this matter, particularly since Professor Fisher was here and I want to state to the House that all authorities which I can find on the subject are agreed that the problem is one of tremendous importance—that the stabilizing of the price level, or in other words the stabilizing of the purchasing power of money, is fundamental to prevent succeeding periods of what we call business booms and business depressions. Moreover, through the fluctuation in the purchasing power of money, great injustice has been done and is being done to our citizens. Dr. Fisher stated when he was here, that one of the economists in the United States had figured out that during the war years and shortly afterwards there had been an unjust transfer of wealth—what he described as wholesale pickpocketing—in the United States—to the extent of 40 billions of dollars; and he enumerated at considerable length the continued misfortunes, disasters, difficulties and miseries that follow upon the fluctuations in the purchasing power of money. Dr. Fisher has written a number of books on the subject and recently, I presume owing party to his influence, the matter has been brought to the attention of the congress of the United States. Indeed, a bill was presented during the last session of congress dealing with this particular matter, a bill providing for stabilizing the purchasing power of money or, as Dr. Fisher puts it, "stabilizing the dollar." Now, in the course of the discussion which we had in the committee, it developed that there were two ways of doing this highly necessary and important thing. The first method was to regulate the amount of gold in the dollar where a country was on a gold basis, or, to use Dr. Fisher's phrase, to standardize the gold standard. The second method was to control the volume of credit instruments through the regulation of the interest rate. This matter was referred to by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) the other day, and has received a good deal of attention from modern economists. When Dr. Fisher was here he suggested that probably the most feasible means of stabilizing the purchasing power of money was through international action. The question was indeed considered to some extent at the Genoa Conference, and he suggested that at any future conferences this matter should be further considered. I should like to suggest therefore—if I were permitted I should like to move in the committee, although I do not know just in what shape we can put a motion through—that this question be sent forward from this parliament to the Economic Conference at London for consideration; because if something could be suggested in the way of joint action between the constituent parts of the British Empire I think it would be very easy to enlist the co-operation of the United States, particularly in view of the fact that the matter has already entered the field of practical politics over there. Therefore, it is not unlikely that we might get all the English speaking nations of the world to take the matter up, and thus a very great gain might be secured in a relatively short time. I wish I were fully able, I wish I had the time—if the House was in the mood to listen—to submit evidence in support of the suggestion and recommendation that I make. But I will simply leave it at that. If the House will support the suggestion I shall be very glad; but if the matter continues to be ignored I shall at least have done my duty in bringing it to the attention of the House.

Civil government—Department of Justice—
To provide for a law clerk-stenographer..	$1,020
To provide for a clerk -stenographer..	960
Salary of James White, technical advisor..	6,000
Exchequer Court of Canada—one statutory increase omitted in the main estimates.. ..	180

Mr. GOOD: Could we have some explanation of the item of $6,000 in this resolution?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. White is an expert who has for some time past been devoting special study to one of the boundary disputes into which the Department of Justice is inquiring at the present time. For years he was secretary of the Conservation Commission. He has a very wide knowledge of scientific and technical problems, and is being retained in the Department of Justice where this inquiry is going on.

Mr. GOOD: Is he being added to the staff of the Department of Justice, or has he been transferred from another department?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He was there last year, but has not completed his work as yet.

Mr. GRAHAM: He went to the Department of Justice from another department.

Item agreed to.

Civil government—Department of the Interior—to increase the salary of W. W. Cory, Deputy Minister of the Interior, to $8,000 per annum, $2,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In connection with the increases we have here I observe that while there are a good many departments in which increases are made all of them do not appear in the list. I observe, for example, that the Department of Customs is not there. Nor is the Department of Agriculture there. I do not know why it is; because my hon. friend justly claimed that there was a great volume of work done there, and as great responsibility in that department as in any other. But the Department of Customs is omitted. I would like to get some idea as to the lines on which the government is proceeding, and also as to whether the government really think, irrespective of the merits of these deputies, that in a year like the present, with a budget such as has been presented, it is advisable to advance salaries that are already as high as $6,000 a year.

Mr. FIELDING: With regard to the particular deputies mentioned, I can assure my hon. friend that there is no desire to discriminate. The Deputy Minister of Customs, to whom he referred, is a most faithful, able and efficient officer, and I would be the last to permit any discrimination against him. The salaries of the deputies is a troublesome question at all times. We have adopted a rule which, when I mention it, I think will be accepted. It was felt at first that the salaries of the deputies were not high and that there was fair claim for consideration. Then it was argued with some force that regard must be had to length of service, and the decision we reached was that in the case of any deputy in active service at the head of a department who had a service to his credit of ten years or more, we would consider that he was entitled to an advance; but those whose term of service were less than ten years were left out, not because they were not capable or efficient, but because it was held, and I think with reason, that some regard should be had to the term of service. At all events, that is the explanation. In every case where a deputy has served for ten years or more, and is in active service at the head of the department, he receives the increase, unless he already has the increased salary; but as to the others there is no discrimination, except that which arises from the term of service.

Mr. MARTELL: The Minister of Finance has stated that it required ten years of service in order to get the increase. I have only to say that I happen to have had the honour of serving for five years under one of the best deputy ministers in any of the departments at Ottawa, Mr. Alexander Johnston; and I want to say there is not a man in the Dominion of Canada more capable of presiding over a department than Mr. Johnston. He happened to have had the extreme privilege of being born on the Atlantic seaboard, and he had received a good education which is backed up by good common sense. Mr. Johnston is a man who is capable of earning money outside of the department to a very much greater amount than he is receiving here. I believe that on one occasion he was offered a position at $20,000 a year, but he is in love with his present work. Being a maritime man he knows the work, and knows what is required of a man in the position of Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries; and I believe if the government of Canada never did anything else than to give Mr. Johnston a salary of $10,000—and it is only one-fifth of what he is worth—they would be doing sufficient to justify their being returned to power in this country. His salary should be $20,000. I know what I am talking about, because I served in that department and I have had practical knowledge which is more than most of the members of this House have had. I have this knowledge from having been born on the seaboard, having been a sailor, and having served under Mr. Johnston.

Mr. SHAW: I am not one of those who would refuse to give faithful servants adequate pay. I think that the move of the minister is a desirable one. I think if we are going to get competent men to handle these big departments of the government service, we must pay them adequate salaries. I desire to make it clear that I have no objection to the proposed increases. I do not know that I would go to the extent the government indicate in applying the increase after ten years to every officer of the standing of a deputy minister. There are some of these departments which must be more or less insignificant, when compared with large departments like the Departments of Marine and Fisheries and the Interior; and I do not know that I would apply the principle that far. I also want to make this suggestion: The deputy ministers in charge of large departments can, if they so desire, save thousands of dollars annually to the country. I do not know whether they are doing it or not. I think steps should be taken to see that the public services are properly co-ordinated, in order to ensure our getting the greatest possible efficiency. One can realize the tendency of deputy ministers. They are human as well as anybody else, and as soon as they get control of a large department, I suppose there is a desire to secure by accretion, other services, regardless of whatever services may be carried on of a similar nature in other departments. I have had occasion to look into this matter to some extent and when one finds that dredging service is carried on by three separate departments, apparently without much justification, when one finds surveying services are carried on by three or more departments, it makes one wonder whether these deputy ministers are themselves co-ordinating the services. They apparently have not done it. I think the government should make it one of its first duties to see that these services are co-ordinated, to prevent overlapping and over-manning, and in this connection I am sure that if they do not secure, they will at any rate demand, the hearty co-operation of the ministers concerned.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member (Mr. Martell) suggests that Mr. Johnston, the deputy minister, did have an offer a good deal bigger than his salary. That is true and Mr. Johnston did go with the British Steel Corporation but now he is back again, to take his $6,000. I think the manner in which the government is going about this matter is simply to follow the line of least resistance, and the worst line it can possibly take having any regard to efficiency or economy. Work ought to be paid for having regard to its importance. We have some departments here where the work is only a multiple of the work of other departments. There is no question about it. Everyone who knows anything about the matter knows that is perfectly true. That whole question of efficiency and of results is to be absolutely discarded for the purpose of adopting some safe and easy road, which will enable the government to increase the salaries of some picked deputies. That is being done. Merit has nothing to do with it at all. It only depends upon how long the man has been drawing his pay. Merit has absolutely nothing to do with this particular increase, which is merely on account of length of service. I would like the Finance Minister to tell this House what possible justification there is for the consideration of the increases in the Supplementary Estimates brought down now. What excuse can be given that would satisfy the most credulous that these matters ought not to have been considered in the Main Estimates instead of the Supplementaries? I am going to ask my hon. friend whether he does not think efficiency should have something to do with it, and whether he does not think that the weight of work ought to have something to do with it. I do not want to pick out a department here or a department there. I need not do it. He knows them just as well as I do and better, but he knows that some of the heaviest departments are not represented here. He mentioned Customs. I mentioned Customs myself. What about Agriculture?

Mr. FIELDING: Suppose we admit, for the sake of argument, that it would have been wiser that these things should have been brought down in the Main Estimates. Having dealt with that point, let us now consider the merits of the question. If we need a deputy minister in this country and if a man is capable of filling that office, a salary of $8,000 a year is not too much to pay him. If he has had long service added to his merit and strength of character, $8,000 is not too much. The trouble is, I think, that in our higher positions we do not pay men enough, and men are therefore being drawn away from the service of Canada and taken into private service because we cannot pay them enough. I have a case in mind of a man I should very well like to have had in the service of my department. I could not keep him because the ordinary custom of the House would not allow me to give him a proper salary, but he went to another place and received twice as much as he could get here. We must pay some regard to the dignity of this office, to the importance of the duties. But my hon. friend must have found in his day that it was exceedingly difficult to distinguish. The law fixes the salaries of nearly all the deputies at one figure. When I came into the department first the deputies, with one or two exceptions, received $3,200 a year. Their salaries have been advanced from time to time and, I think, with regard to the changes that have taken place, the increases in all lines, $8,000 is not too much to pay a deputy if he is competent and has had ten years' service. Length of service is entitled to some consideration. I do not know how you can discriminate. You cannot make the minister of any department believe that the position of his deputy is inferior to that of any other. We all magnify our offices a little. The minister magnifies his and the deputy magnifies his. I know there are differences; I know there are some departments which are much heavier than others, but it is by no means an easy thing to distinguish between them. As regards the increase, I do not know any deputy who is getting $8,000 a year who is not deserving of that amount if he is capable of filling the office.

Mr. GOULD: I rise to ask a question: Are there any perquisites attached to the office, for instance, rent-free houses, motor cars, chauffeurs?

Mr. FIELDING: Nothing that I know of. I think in the Department of Agriculture some of the officials are provided with houses on the farms, but I think that is taken into consideration. As regards the deputies concerned in this vote, they have no perquisites whatever.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the case of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture the amount, $500, is taken off his salary.

Mr. KAY: I do not often agree with my hon. friend from West York (Sir Henry Drayton) but I think he has improved so much to-night that I can almost agree with some of the things that he has said. I find it difficult to understand on what principle some of the deputies receive $8,000 a year, some $6,000 and some $10,000. There are in the service four deputy ministers receiving $10,000 a year. At least two of these gentlemen have not been in the service or have not held the position of deputy minister for anything like ten years. The Commissioner of Taxation, I understand, receives $10,000 a year and he has not held that position for anything like ten years. I have nothing to say against the increases which are being proposed to-night. I think, as a rule, the higher civil servants are underpaid; but I wish to say a word on behalf of the deputies of two of the departments, who are not receiving this increase. I refer to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture and the Deputy Minister of Customs and Excise. Both of these departments are very large and the work is very heavy and important. Both are manned by men of exceptional ability and particularly suited for their positions. Doctor Grisdale, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, is a man of very great ability, a man who has devoted all his life to the work of that department and of the experimental farms. He has been in the service of the government for some twenty-three or twenty-four years, and surely that length of service should be taken into consideration when we are considering raising the salaries of deputies. I do not wish to delay the committee at this time, but I would strongly urge the Minister of Finance to consider the work that these gentlemen have to do, the importance of their services to the country, the length of time that they have given to the service of the government, and that he grant the increase, a well-merited increase it would be, to the Deputy Ministers of Agriculture and of Customs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I agree with the Minister of Finance that it is always difficult to do the right thing. Of course it is difficult to discriminate. It is always difficult to pick who is right and who is wrong. It is always easy to do the opposite.

Mr. FIELDING: What does my hon. friend think would be right?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: To pay the salary where it is earned. My hon. friend is discriminating. I have discriminated; but when I became Minister of Finance, if I remember aright, the Deputy Minister of Justice was getting $10,000 a year. I increased the salary of the Commissioner of Taxation to $10,000 a year. I did that for very specific reasons.

Mr. CARROLL: What were they?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I could not lose him. If there was one man who had heavy responsibilities in an almost unchecked position, it would be the Commissioner of Taxation. A man, who, as the present Minister of Finance told us the day before yesterday, has handled $200,000,000 of taxation under regulations which had to be fixed and determined by him under the most intricate act, and who has collected everything except $8,000,000 to date, was a man who was worth keeping, and he was kept. My hon. friend comes in, and he in his turn does some discriminating. The present Deputy Minister of Finance was appointed three years ago, I think, say three and a half, certainly not more than that. My hon. friend makes his salary $10,000. My hon. friend did not deal with the matter on a question of a ten-year service. He dealt with it from a question of merit. What has been done here is merely to apply an arbitrary rule of length of employment, with absolutely no regard to the volume of work or to the importance of the department. The reason for the adoption of this plan, we are told, is the difficulty of making a selection. I think that the whole idea is entirely wrong. The increases ought to have been brought down in the Main Estimates and we should then have had an opportunity of looking into the various departments. But there is very little chance of doing that now. Were we not told that generally speaking these were votes that could not have been put in the Main Estimates? Yet here we have something that has stood for so many years when the cost of living, according to my hon. friends, was higher than it is to-day and when the financial conditions looked as well as they do now, if, indeed, not better. If the government are determined to put this matter through in this way I do not want to delay them, but there is neither fairness nor any business idea in what they are doing. One would suppose that they would be anxious to economise, but if they insist that the salary of $6,000 paid to certain persons should be increased they can increase it. If they want to deal with an important question of this kind in the Supplementary Estimates, a method that deprives one absolutely of all opportunity for consideration, and of any means of answering the arguments advanced by my hon. friend from Missisquoi (Mr. Kay), they are, I suppose, at liberty to do so. But again I say, the responsibility is entirely theirs; and we have the spectacle of a party that prates about economy adopting this attitude in connection with this important matter.

Mr. MILLAR: It is rather regrettable that this increase must be made at this time when the financial condition of Canada is so appalling. I can understand the difficulty of the government in retaining really good men when other concerns are willing to offer them more than they are now getting. But my mind goes back to two instances that came to my notice, one of which no doubt the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) will recall. An able deputy minister left the service on a question of salary alone. He was a very good man and I well remember that it was not very many years after he had left the service before he discovered, when he went to sell his labour in the markets of the world, that his experience with the government had imbued him with very little appreciation of the value of money, and for that reason he did not make a success. The result was that he was very ready to come back; I think he was one of the most willing men to enter the service again. Another case I have in mind is that of a gentleman in the employ of the late government managing one of the farms. He was offered a large sum elsewhere and he thought he was going to be able to make twice as much as he was getting from the government. He left the service and after six or seven years—in fact, last fall—he was eager to return. I am not sure that he is under this government, but at any rate he is in a similar position to the one he held before. Both gentlemen, I am sure, were able in their respective fields, and I am convinced that from their experience neither of them would now think for a moment of leaving governmental employment. In my opinion, if any of the deputies contemplate taking such a step they would do well to consult these gentlemen to whom I have referred. If they did, and they acted on the advice they would no doubt receive, I believe they would reconsider their decision. It depends, I suppose, on the comparison you make in deciding whether deputies are receiving what they are worth when they get $6,000. When you compare a salary of $6,000, as paid to a deputy minister, with salaries ranging from $15,000 to $20,000 paid to men engaged in occupations with big interests, the discrepancy would of course suggest that the deputies are being underpaid. But compare their salary with the salaries paid to the thousands of men in their own walk of life who are equally efficient and whose remuneration is by no means $15,000 or anything like it,—as a matter of fact, not a quarter as much in many cases as the deputies receive—and you will realize that the deputies are not so ill-paid after all. It is difficult to say just what a man is worth, and we have nothing but the bald statement that gentlemen who fill these positions efficiently are worth $8,000. I believe that a deputy would be worth this sum if he were willing to save the thousands that he could save by standing firmly against the pressure brought to bear upon him by his staff in urging larger salaries for themselves. But I fear that in some departments, particularly in the Public Works and the Interior departments, there has not been anything like a firm stand against such pressure. It is apparent that in some departments there has been a considerable practice of economy; but in others this has not been true. All things considered, it would have been well had the government tried to get along for the present without raising the salaries in the way they propose, because there is no possibility of getting them down again. Not only will the present recipients get this extra $2,000, but it is altogether likely that the increased sum will stand for all time as the fixed salary for the office. It is very easy to raise salaries but not so easy to lower them. Not only that; the mere raising of the salaries of the deputies will have a tendency to excite an agitation for increases on the part of those subordinate to them. As soon as the deputies get $8,000 the employees will want their salaries raised, and it will mean on the whole a very much larger expenditure for the Dominion than if the government could get along with the salaries at present paid.

Mr. LOGAN: Personally I think this is a wise move that should have been made long ago. On the second page of the Supplementary Estimates there appear certain names the first of which I read is that of Sir Joseph Pope, to whom it is proposed to pay $8,000. Here is a man who has been forty years in the service of the country. He has been the trusted and loyal deputy of ministers of different political faiths and is probably the best informed man in Canada on external affairs. Yet he is being paid just $8,000.

Mr. MARTELL: Six thousand.

Mr. LOGAN: I am referring to the new estimates. On the other hand there are men employed in most inferior positions in big houses in the cities of the country that are drawing fifty per cent more than this proposed salary to this excellent officer. Take the next name, Mr. Alexander Johnston.

Mr. MARTELL: One of the best fellows in Canada.

Mr. LOGAN: He is not only a good deputy, but is probably one of the ablest men we have in the Dominion. Does anyone say that $8,000 is too much for this man who protects the interests of the Marine and Fisheries department as if he owned the department? I think he devotes not eight hours a day, but eighteen hours a day to his work. Take the third man, Mr. J. B. Hunter, of the Public Works department, an extremely able man with an experience in the department extending over twenty-six or twenty-seven years. Mr. Hunter is a very competent official who never thinks of the hours he devotes to the service of the department. Then, take Mr. Thomas Mulvey. There is no doubt that Mr. Mulvey could go out of the Department of State and secure a position as counsel in any legal firm in Canada at a salary of $20,000 a year.

Mr. MARTELL: Is Mr. Mulvey the author of Mulvey's Company Law of Canada?

Mr. LOGAN: He is the same man.

Mr. MARTELL: He would be knighted if we had titles in Canada.

Mr. LOGAN: The hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) has contended that we should pay deputy ministers according to the extent and importance of the work of the department. Does that apply to ministers?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It ought to.

Mr. LOGAN: It does not; it has never been claimed that it did. Ministers are paid the same, whether Secretary of State, or Minister of Public Works, or Minister of Justice. There are two reasons why these men should receive adequate compensation: First, as a return for faithful and loyal service, and, second, as an inducement to them to remain in the service. Take the Deputy Minister of Justice. Why, not long ago there was a discussion about certain legal charges made in connection with the Grand Trunk arbitration.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is my hon. friend seeking to delay this estimate? There is no suggestion of increasing the salary of the Deputy Minister of Justice. He is already getting $10,000.

Mr. LOGAN: I am saying a word on behalf of men who are deserving and I am also objecting to the inference made by the hon. member in reference to my friend Alex. Johnston of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Do you mean to tell me that Mr. Newcombe could not have left the Department of Justice years ago and have received, not $10,000 a year, as he is paid now, but $50,000 a year, or, at the rate of remuneration given in the case of the Grand Trunk arbitration, $100,000 a year? He has remained there not for the money that is in it, but out of loyalty to the department and to the service of this country. I believe in paying a man a worthy wage.

Mr. CHURCH: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that these officials are very much underpaid. You cannot get a good man in the Civil Service to-day unless you pay him well. Any of these deputy ministers could go into the outside world and earn twice the salary they receive in the service. As a matter of fact, the whole civil service is underpaid. I hope the government will next session bring down the cost of living bonus and make it permanent. There has been a period of high prices for five or ten years now. This increase of salaries is very well merited; it is but a small return for the service rendered.

Mr. TOLMIE: Before this vote passes I would like to point out that the men who are listed here are all rendering excellent service. We as members have more or less to do with them, and we find them competent and obliging and quite capable of filling their positions. But I regret that one of the most important deputy ministers in the whole service, the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, has not received an increase in salary. No industry in Canada is more capable of improving the business of the country or of bringing about prosperity than agriculture. In my opinion there is no more important industry from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and in the office of no deputy minister is a greater or more varied knowledge required of the work in hand than in that of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. As minister in charge of that department for about two years I had an opportunity of working with Dr. Grisdale, who had already made a reputation for himself as Director of Experimental Farms and who as a deputy minister speaking both French and English was acceptable to the farmers in all parts of Canada. He rendered and is rendering most excellent service. I regret that he has not been included in this increase and I hope that the government will take the earliest opportunity of seeing that he is included.

Mr. MARTELL: Does my hon. friend not believe that a man who is capable of being the deputy minister of any department should start on at least $8,000 a year? I agree with all he said about Dr. Grisdale. There should be a minimum of $8,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has been stated that the higher paid civil servants are underpaid. I should like to call attention to the fact that the lower paid civil servants are very much underpaid. I have stated here before that in Winnipeg postal employees are receiving a smaller wage than the amount that it has been found necessary to give for the sustenance of people who are accepting municipal relief. It seems as if we ought not to advance the salaries of these higher officials, however much they may deserve it, until there has been a general revision of salaries and the lower paid employees are looked after.

12 m.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I mentioned last night that in order that no one should be under the impression that the government is anxious to hasten through the estimates I would move that to-night the committee rise at twelve o'clock. Now, the government is quite prepared to do that—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —unless there is a desire on the part of all present to continue a little longer. I understand that the Senate are pretty well finished with their work and are waiting for the Supply Bill to come from this House, and there is a possibility of our proroguing to-morrow if we conclude the estimates in time. There is nothing further in the way of legislation except a few items. But of course it is entirely for the committee to say.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend might just as well conclude now as in the morning; we have no time to get information on these things anyway. We can work just as well now as we could to-morrow morning; we shall get just as much information. We are not saying anything about the length of time we are talking about these things; it is the length of time we require to get information so that we can talk intelligently—that is all. So far as going on to-night is concerned, I think we ought to do so.

Mr. BELAND: The Pension bill has been returned to this House by the Senate and it has been so amended by that body that I shall find myself unable to agree with some of the amendments. If it is the desire of the committee to sit all night—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. BELAND: —or two or three hours more. I suggest that the committee rise in order that we may consider the Pension Act and make whatever suggestions to the Senate we have in mind; then we can return to Supply. In the meantime we can consider the Pension Act and make whatever suggestions we think necessary to the Senate, and then resume Supply.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly my hon. friend might agree to continue with the estimates for an hour and then take up the matter he has in mind.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall item 438 carry?

Mr. GOULD: In regard to the proposed salary increases for the various deputy heads I wish to place myself on record that I am not opposed to paying adequate remuneration where merit and competence is shown. I have since being honoured with this position looked upon the deputy ministers both in the capacity of supervisors of their respective departments and advisers to the ministers at the head of the departments. So far as supervision is concerned I have no criticism to make or any comments to offer, but in their capacity of adviser to the minister I have frequently drawn to the attention of this committee that I would like evidence placed before it as to their interestedness in showing why these huge sums of money are being asked in the estimates from time to time. I have made these representations to the committee from time to time simply because I have not been satisfied in my own mind that the deputy ministers themselves have appreciated the value of a one dollar bill or the importance of getting one hundred cents for a dollar, and as a result of that inappreciation they have presented large amounts in the estimates to the ministers, who in turn present them on the floor of this House and ask parliament to vote them. It seems to me that another word reiterated not alone by myself but by other members of the House that the deputy ministers show greater interest in that phase of the question might be a very good thing at this time when these increases of $2,000 for the deputies are before the committee. This is just another word that I have to offer on the subject at this time, and I think it is a word that should meet with serious consideration on the part of everyone concerned.

Mr. GOOD: I do not think we ought to be niggardly in paying our deputy ministers, but I do think that this House ought to consider the financial situation at the present time. We are going behind every year and the Finance Minister does not hold out any hope of our catching up next year. There are a lot of people in this country who are paying this money who are not getting $6,000 nor $2,000 a year. I do not want to say anything in disparagement of these gentlemen, but it does seem to me that this is an inopportune time for increasing their salaries.

Item agreed to.

Department of National Defence—to increase the salary of G. J. Desbarats, Acting Deputy Minister of National Defence, to $8,000 per annum, $2,000.

Mr. GOOD: Has the gentleman mentioned here undertaken any additional work this year?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The gentleman named here is a civil servant of long experience. He was in charge of the Department of Naval Defence and then came to the Department of National Defence. He is an experienced official in every way, and in addition to the duties he performed before, he has had assigned to him the duties pertaining to the Militia department as well as the Air branch.

Item agreed to.

Patent and Copyright Office—to increase the salary of Geo. F. O'Halloran, Commissioner of Patents, to $8,000 per annum, $2,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: In confirmation of what the ex-Minister of Agriculture has suggested I would call attention to the fact that while this item provides for an increase of $2,000 for the Commissioner of Patents and Item 445 provides for an increase of $2,000 for Mr. Doughty, the Dominion Archivist, there is no provision for an increase in the salary of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture who has been just as long in the service.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Oh no.

Mr. ARTHURS: He is just as valuable an officer as the Dominion Archivist and more important to the country. I have nothing to say against the Archivist, but it seems to me unreasonable that he should be granted an increase of $2,000 while the Deputy Minister of Agriculture with all his experience is not granted anything.

Item agreed to.

Auditor General's office—contingencies—additional amount required for salaries of temporary clerks, $20,000; additional amount required for travelling expenses, $1,500.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the occasion for the very large increase in salaries, $20,000, for the Auditor General's clerks?

Mr. FIELDING: We have generally adopted the rule to give the Acting Auditor General all the assistance he requires in order to induce him to get out the documents promptly. I do not know how it was with my honourable friend, but I have always told the Acting Auditor General that I relied on him to be reasonable and I have never refused him any increase in staff at a time when it was urgent that the public documents be got out promptly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have to plead guilty to following a different course and holding up his appointments.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And the reports were not out in time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that we lost anything by it. Here we are paying out $20,000.

Item agreed to.

Administration of justice, $20,560.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister be good enough to give us particulars of this item?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Everyone is aware of the pride that the Canadian people have taken in maintaining justice in the extreme northern country. There are six Eskimos now in custody at Herschel island up in the Arctic charged with murder and preparations are being made for their trial this summer. An expedition left Edmonton on the 12th of June for that purpose taking a judge and two counsel. The estimated cost of the expedition is $15,000. The amount here is appropriated for the purpose of carrying on the administration of justice in the extreme north.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Who are the counsel?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Howat of Edmonton and Mr. Cory of Ottawa.

[Mr. Arthurs.]

Legislation—House of Commons—

To provide for the full sessional indemnity of members of the House of Commons—days lost through absence caused by illness, official public business, or on account of death during the present session—Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, an act respecting the Senate and House of Commons or any amendments thereto—payment to be made as the Treasury Board may direct.. .. .. $12,000

Expenses of committees, witnesses, etc.—further amount required.. 7,000

To purchase, for the use of Senators and members of Parliament, 350 copies of the Canadian Annual Review, Edition of 1922—further amount required.. 350

To provide for the full sessional indemnity of the two members of Parliament, successively representing the electoral district of Nicolet, during the session of 1923, to which indemnity the two members shall be entitled, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes, or any amendment thereto; the share of each member to bear the same proportion to four thousand dollars as the number of days during which he was a member of parliament during the said session bears to the total number of days of the session during which both together were members of parliament. Payment to be made as the Treasury Board may direct.. 4,000

Mr. ARTHURS: Will the Minister of Finance give an explanation of the last item?

Mr. FIELDING: That is a case where a by-election occurred, the two members—that is to say the former member and his successor—dividing the sessional indemnity in proportion to their time.

Mr. ARTHURS: According to the wording each gets $4,000.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh no, they divide it.

Mr. BUREAU: In proportion to the number of days.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—for experiments in the dehydration of fruits and vegetables, $10,500.

Mr. GOOD: I think we should have some explanation of this from the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This is to provide for experimenting with the drying of fruit. We have a big crop again this year, and we will require all the facilities that are available for the purpose of taking care of fruit during the fall season, and extending the period of marketing by every possible means. Experiments will be conducted in the matter of dehydrating.

Mr. GOOD: Was this work under way last year, or is it new work?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No it is just beginning this year.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—for expenditures in connection with trial shipment of chilled beef and fat cattle to Great Britain, $25,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How much of that is for Duncan Marshall?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: None of it at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Sure?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We expect to make chilled beef of him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I don't know but that might be a useful purpose. Is it correct that Duncan Marshall is now called "High Commissioner of Canada for chilled meats"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a new one.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is he now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He is commissioner.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is he doing over in England now?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He is not over there now.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is he at the present time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I expect he will arrive in Ottawa to-night.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is immense.

Mr. BUREAU: He will chill you in the morning.

Mr. SPENCER: Would the minister give a few more particulars in regard to this item?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I went into the matter very fully on the Main Estimates. We made an experiment with about 100 to 125 head of cattle that we fed on the experimental farm. We sent some of them to be killed immediately on arrival there, others of them to be sold as stockers, and still others to be killed in Montreal and sent over as chilled beef. We have not got any reports of the first experiment yet. The intention is to continue the experiment during the three or four months of the summer for the purpose of keeping chilled beef on the British market and, if possible, finding out what advantage the chilled beef trade has over the stocker trade, or if it has any.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—for the suppression of foul brood in bees, $5,000.

Mr. SPENCER: We should like to have some particulars in regard to this item?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This foul brood is a very fatal and infectious disease which attacks bees when they are in the larva stage. It has affected a large number of bees not only throughout this province but also throughout some of the adjoining provinces. Some time ago I had the opportunity of discussing this matter with the Hon. Manning Doherty and he agreed at that time, on behalf of this government, to put up $10,000, if we would put up $5,000 for the suppression of this disease. That is what we are doing.

Mr. GOOD: Under whose supervision is this work being done?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Under the supervision of the Bee Keepers' Association. That is, they will have charge of the work. R. F. Holterman, I think, is the president or secretary.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—for the salary and expenses of an agricultural produce marketing agent in Great Britain, $7,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister explain this item?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For the last year or more there has been a great deal of agitation to have in Great Britain a representative of the farm produce of Canada, to have somebody on the British market to look particularly after the exports of the farmers of Canada. Take dairy products and bacon. When they arrive on the British market if anything is wrong, or requires reporting on, or does not meet the requirements of the market, we want to be apprised immediately. I might illustrate the value of that by an incident that occurred last year. Bacterial action had taken place in a few cheese from Canada that went over there and the fact got into the British newspapers. It so happened that Dr. Grisdale was there at the time, and he corrected a false impression that went abroad in England, otherwise serious results might have ensued to our dairy industry. We need some person to take care of our exports.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the salary and how much will be allowed for expenses?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The gentleman is not appointed yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is his salary to be.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The minimum salary set by the Civil Service Commission is $5,040.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Fixed for this job? Has the minister got this job arranged by the Civil Service Commission already?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The Civil Service Commission has already classified the position, but it has not been advertised yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose this position will be advertised, there will not be any appointment by order in council?

Mr. MARTELL: I think the man selected should have the rank of a deputy and should be appointed without going to the Civil Service Commission. We should have the very best man available in the country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is this salary of $7,000 fixed by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. BUREAU: The salary is not $7,000 it is $5,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The salary is $5,040, and the balance is to cover expenses incidental to the position.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The appointee will be recommended by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Agriculture—further amount required for health of animals, $750,000.

Mr. GOOD: We should like some explanation of this item?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This work is expanding very rapidly. It has been behind—that is to say the payment has been behind—ever since I have had anything to do with it. I have received a great many complaints from hon. members, especially from Alberta, that there was a good deal of delay in securing compensation for animals slaughtered. That has been due, to some extent, to not having enough money to make the necessary payments. This vote will catch up with the deficit of last year and we hope to take care of the entire work this year.

Pensions—annuity to Dr. F. G. Banting, $7,500.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to know if Dr. Banting is getting any similar grants from other sources?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say, but whether he is or is not I think this is the least the parliament of Canada could do for him as an expression of national gratitude.

Item agreed to.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Canadian Government Railways—Prince Edward Island Car Ferry Terminals—to pay claim, $196,417.63.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think I can let this vote go through at the rate we have been going. As I am instructed, the vote ought never to go through. I had a file sent over to me exactly three minutes ago. This is the size of the file, as hon. members can see. I have not been able to assimilate much information out of the file in that time. Has the Minister of Finance gone into this matter? I have been told—and I am speaking from partial memory—that this matter was entirely settled, that there was an agreement which covered the whole matter, and that this is something which need not be considered. If it should be considered, I submit Mr. Chairman, it ought not to be considered without some chance of going into it. I do not think it should have been put in the Supplementary Estimates. If the claim be a just one, I can see no reason in the world why it could not stand. I am going to ask the minister whether it may stand.

Mr. FIELDING: I have not read the file but I have heard the case explained by the Minister of Railways, and supported by his officials. I was satisfied from the information furnished that it was a fair and just claim, and I consented to having it put in the supplementaries. I am sure the Minister of Railways will be prepared to explain the matter to the hon. member.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is a claim that perhaps will not be understood unless you know the men in connection with the claim. The government wished to do this work at Prince Edward Island which was a very difficult work to do. The gentlemen in question are Roger Miller and the late Mr. Caudel. The word of each of these gentlemen was as good as his bond. Because of the relationship of Mr. Roger Miller, the contractor, to the department and the confidence the department always had in him, whenever I became embarrassed or in difficulty over a contract, although he was a contractor, I called him in for consultation, and I gave him work to do that I felt could not be reliably done elsewhere. This difficult work at Prince Edward Island had to be undertaken. The minister advertised. He got one tender, I think, and the tenderer did not accept the contract.

Mr. SHAW: What was the nature of the work?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was the building of the terminal for the Prince Edward Island car ferry, and a very difficult job.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM: It was started in 1913. The first contractor that tendered did not take it. Then Mr. Roger Miller was called in, as I often called him in, to discuss with Mr. Cochrane the difficulties of this contract. There is no doubt in the world that Mr. Roger Miller was not looking for the contract. He was induced to take this contract by the minister. When I was minister I often induced him to take contracts for which he was not tendering. Tenders were called for in the regular way, and Roger Miller, as I absolutely believe, was asked to tender low, so that he would get the contract. In addition to that he was told by the minister that any loss he sustained would be made good, but he wanted him to tender and get that contract. Any person who has been at the head of the department can readily understand that attitude in a work of this kind when one contractor has backed out. He proceeded with the work. The legal gentlemen will say that when there is a written instrument it is the bargain, but not in this case. Roger Miller, whose word was as good as his bond, somewhere in the documents has made an affidavit pointing out that he took the contract with the distinct understanding mentioned and I can understand it thoroughly. He was to go on and do the work, and if it cost more than the contract he was to lose no money. He went on and did the work, and I think it ended in 1917 or 1918. His affidavit is in the file. I may be told that it is an old contract. Well, it is, but in 1917 under the contract, if this be taken as the bargain—which it is not at all in my mind; I am absolutely certain it was not—he could not perhaps be allowed anything. The chief engineer thought so, under the strict terms of the contract, and he emphasized in his report the words "under the contract". Now the reason the matter was not settled before was this: It was necessary to purchase a special plant for this work, and as with all the contractors, a contract cannot be finally settled until the plant is disposed of or valued. From the conclusion of the contract until this spring there was no opportunity of disposing of the plant, and the department had sent auditors to find out, not any profit of Roger Miller, but what the absolute loss to him on this contract was, and this is the amount the auditors returned to me as the amount of loss. The affidavit of Mr. Miller, whose ability as a contractor and whose integrity are above reproach, points out that he did the work under these conditions, and I absolutely believe it to be true, knowing the man and understanding how under the circumstances he took the contract under the conditions stated. We have had the books audited to find out what the loss was, and this is the result.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like to find out one or two facts. I cannot get anything out of this maze of documents. The contract was in 1913. When was the work done?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it was completed between 1917 and 1918.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What was the date of the final certificate?

Mr. GRAHAM: I might say the contractors would not at any time accept any payment as final.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is a letter at the commencement of the file. The file I am interested in is the file with the contract in it, to show something about the inception of the matter. On the 29th January the Department of Railways forwarded the cheque of the Finance Department for $6,728.72 in payment of the final estimate, and then it is quite true that this letter of receipt from the Roger Miller Company shows that they do not accept it as a final cheque. The letter says:

> We do not admit the validity of the claims amounting to $1,631.26, nor do we accept the cheque in question as a settlement of our final estimate, owing to the fact that there are matters pending between us and the department which will have to be gone into before the amount of the final estimate can be arrived at. We are sending you this intimation now, so that there may be no misunderstanding on the subject.

I point out that the final estimate and cheque were forwarded January 29 last. I wonder if the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are at all serious when they say that they want proper consideration given to these items. This is just a little bit of the file. Surely my hon. friend must see that this is a farce, and that the only proper thing to do is to transfer this item to the main vote of next year.

Mr. GRAHAM: I try to run my department just as I would run my own business, and no person has accused me of doing anything else. It is a matter of straight business between man and man, and I think no government ought to do anything else. I have investigated this, and I am as convinced as I am living that the Department of Railways and Canals owes Roger Miller this money under the arrangement he made with Mr. Cochrane. If we were to go at the matter technically and work it out, I believe Roger Miller would have a bigger claim.

In fact, he claimed more than this, and we sent an auditor down for the purpose of going through his books; Mr. Miller threw all his books open; the auditor went through them from one end to the other, and he brought in a report. It is on the basis of that report that I am asking that this settlement shall be made.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is the contract?

Mr. GRAHAM: The contract would be in the law branch. I thought I had the whole file.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I told my hon. friend this afternoon that this was a matter which I thought ought to be looked into in the interest of the country.

Mr. GRAHAM: A synopsis of the contract is in the order in council on the file.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It may be a synopsis. Are there two contracts?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was the work done as originally proposed?

Mr. GRAHAM: No, it was much more expensive than originally proposed. They put in concrete instead of wood.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There was a change. Was a contract entered into after the change was made?

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have been told explicitly that a contract was made for a specific sum.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that there was nothing of the kind; that there was only the original contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then if the appropriation passes in this way that these files will be all open for our investigation, and that an investigation will be given into the whole of this matter, I do not propose to take up any more time.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend has a right to get these papers at any time he wants them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The only time that they are any good is now, unless we have an understanding that the whole of this is subject to re-opening.

Mr. GRAHAM: What does my hon. friend mean by "re-opening?"

[Mr. Graham.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I mean an investigation at the time the next House sits.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend would have a perfect right to do that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I could be and would be voted down easily.

Mr. GRAHAM: Our majority is not so big.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It might be big enough then.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the vote carry?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not saying that the vote carries until I get information on the subject. Of course if we are to get no information, all right.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have given my friend all the information.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I asked for the files this afternoon. I get part 7 at exactly twenty minutes past twelve. The item was called at twenty-three minutes past twelve, and what I started with was the final certificate. That looks like giving full information, does it not?

Mr. GRAHAM: My deputy tells me that the entire file is there. I did not expect this item to come on to-night. I gave the file to my hon. friend just as soon as I got it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Might I suggest that the item stand until the hon. gentleman has time to peruse it? I think that would be satisfactory to the committee. I should like further information on the subject, and if he can find it for me that would be very satisfactory.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then it will stand until Tuesday.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It can stand until next session. I see the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Finn) laughs. He is the author of the bill that was so described in this House this session that I would have thought he would withdraw from his party after the description given of it by the Minister of Justice. I do not know what he knows about this matter.

Mr. FINN: I would like to ask the leader of the Opposition if it is a crime for any hon. gentleman in this House to laugh? I was not laughing at the right hon. gentleman. I do not know what bill he refers to. If he would be more specific, perhaps he would do me the honour of giving me a definite answer instead of the uncalled-for insinuation on his part.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The bill transferring land in Nova Scotia.

Mr. FINN: I was not the author of that bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: My hon. friend was chairman of the committee that put it through.

Mr. FINN: My right hon. friend has been long enough in this House to know that a gentleman who is chairman of a committee is in no way, because of his occupying that position, the author of a bill.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He is just as responsible.

Mr. BUREAU: Not a bit of it.

Mr. MARTELL: Can a chairman of a committee be shown by parliamentary procedure to be the author of a bill?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is sufficient responsibility to be chairman of the committee. These are simply settlements being made out of court of claims that should not be paid unless established in court. They have been attempted to be settled in this way time and time again, and they have been refused, but now they have been yielded to by this government at the expense of this country. If there are estimates that are fitted for Main Estimates alone, they are these. Perhaps the minister would remember—he was not in the House—how in a Supplemenary Estimate brought down in 1921, an item was included to pay some $40,000, a judgment of the court of Quebec, taken to the Court of Appeal in Quebec and affirmed, taken from the Court of Appeal in Quebec to the Supreme Court of Canada and affirmed. Then an item was put in to pay that claim after it had gone through three courts, judgment being given. I think, in every court unanimously. But a terrible row was raised because this was put in the Supplementary Estimates. When it was raised, I withdrew the estimate because there was an allegation of wrongdoing. I promised an investigation and appointed a judge to investigate, and then those who raised the row ran away and declined to give any evidence. Here are three cases that have not been proven, that are simply being paid out of the public treasury without any attempt to establish them before courts of law.

Mr. SHAW: I think the suggestion made by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is reasonable. I understand from the minister that this claim of the contractor mentioned for this particular sum rests only on a verbal contract. That is a rather strange thing at the outset. It seems to me it is only reasonable that he should be asked to prove his claim in a court of law, and then the country would be justified in paying it. Short of that, I must oppose the item.

Mr. GRAHAM: I explained fully to the committee that as a matter of law—the hon. member as a lawyer would raise the point—if that were upheld, many claims that are settled could not be settled in court, and technically that is not the ground on which I put this thing. The hon. member would know that in a court of law, under this contract there would be no case. I pointed that out. I know if Mr. Cochrane were alive this question would not be asked and the claim would be paid. I have not the file as I sent it to my hon. friend, but on the file there is a long affidavit from Mr. Roger Miller pointing out how he undertook this work; that he was sent for and asked to undertake it under those conditions. He makes an affidavit to that whole statement and we owe him the money just as much as I should owe a board-bill if I stayed at an hotel.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend (Mr Shaw) is a lawyer of years' standing and he knows that often a person is unable to go to court because there is no written memorandum in reference to the contract. There might be a perfectly good verbal contract that could not be enforceable at law but there would be a claim in equity. My hon. friend knows that in many cases no action can be brought unless a note or a memorandum signed by the party can be produced. Nevertheless there is recourse in equity. As I understand the situation, the minister is not taking advantage of a technical objection, but is accepting what in equity would be a claim of contract.

Mr. SHAW: I am not suggesting for a moment that the statute of frauds should be raised in defence of this action; the minister need not raise that defence unless he wants to. Certainly it should be established to the satisfaction of the court that there had been made some sort of verbal contract or arrangement. The mere affidavit of the individual should not be sufficient for the purpose in a matter of this kind, however reputable he may be. Let the finding of the court on that issue be the determining factor, and in addition let the court ascertain the exact amount due.

Mr. MARTELL: Whether there is a verbal contract or not—

Mr. BUREAU: This is not a court of law.

Mr. MARTELL: —in many instances no case can lie unless there is a note or a memorandum producible.

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend is mistaken in his law. The statute must be pleaded before it is taken advantage of.

Mr. BUREAU: Why argue points of law here?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is a report from the chief engineer—

Mr. GRAHAM: I quoted it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —dated April 30th, 1919. It reads:

It is true that in connection with this work there existed some unusual hazards, but the contractor is in error in implying that the department encouraged tenderers to accept the hazards at a lower cost than was warranted.

The whole claim was that he was coaxed into it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not use the word "coax."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The report goes on:

These hazards like all other parts of the work were subject to competitive tender and a comparison of the bids received shows that the bid of the Roger Miller & Company anticipated the risks that would be encountered.

There were three offers.

Mr. GRAHAM: And this was the lowest.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The chief engineer states further:

During the progress of the work, certain changes were made which necessitated the construction of an additional piece of cribwork. This was ordered and paid for on the basis of cost plus 10 per cent as provided for in the contract. Such payment to the contractor for this additional piece of cribwork does not involve us in any liability for the cribwork constructed under the lump sum in the contractor's tender. The claim presented for the contractors by the Hon. Charles Murphy cannot be entertained as a claim under the contract.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is what I said.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It appears that in 1919 the claim was not admitted.

Mr. BUREAU: Under the contract. My hon. friend is basing his argument on the legal right of the man under the contract. The minister has explained that such is not the view that is taken of the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend desires to discuss that phase of the question I think I can with perfect justice claim that apparently the Postmaster General (Mr. Murphy) has more influence today with the present government than he had with the last one.

Mr. BUREAU: That would be a fair insinuation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is the claim presented and here is the report of the engineer. This is all I have been able so far to glean from this exhaustive file. If the government are determined to press the matter through without our knowing anything about it I will not hold them up. It is idle to talk about postponing it until Tuesday; it is not fair to hon. members, and I do not think they should be detained when it is evident that the government are determined to put the thing through. Will the government concede this much? Will they decide to take no action on this vote until we have had some opportunity of going through the files and of satisfying ourselves as to the fairness of the transaction?

Mr. BUREAU: That is childish. The government is responsible.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am submitting a perfectly fair offer.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member is not. Never in his time did we ever ask that the government should not assume responsibility for anything of this kind. We never asked that we be allowed to decide.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In our time reckless charges of graft were made and the government promptly withdrew the item. If my hon. friend is referring to us to support his contention then he should withdraw this item.

Mr. BUREAU: We never asked that we should be the judges of what should go through.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We never attempted to push things through.

Mr. BUREAU: You probably felt guilty.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I am not to have an opportunity of reading this file?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are some 200 pages which we are given three minutes to read. If the government are determined to press the matter through, then all I can say is that they will have to take the responsibility.

Item agreed to.

Hudson Bay railway—construction, $350,000.

Mr. KNOX: I am rising not to criticize this vote, because if I had any criticism to offer it would be that the vote is not as large as it should be. We had hoped that a vote would be brought down which would indicate that something was going to be done towards the completion of this project. However, I feel that the government intends to carry out the statement made in the House when the resolution regarding the Hudson bay project was discussed, that the portion of the line on which steel was laid would be brought up to standard this year. I assume that this is the amount figured on for the work. Am I right in that assumption, and can we rest assured that work will be undertaken in the near future?

Mr. GRAHAM: I cannot give the assurance that this amount will complete the work we have on hand. That cannot be decided until the engineers are on the line. It might take more, but this is all we can spend this year. My instructions are that the work of reclamation will be proceeded with.

Mr. KNOX: In view of the rumours we have heard to-night in regard to the branch lines in the West, may we take it for granted that there will be plenty of opportunity for men and equipment for this work?

Mr. GRAHAM: I should think so.

Mr. KNOX: We might also hope, I think, for more than the completion of that portion of the line on which steel has been laid being brought up to standard.

Mr. GRAHAM: We can only spend this amount of money.

Mr. MacLAREN: Has this item been recommended by the Canadian National Railway Board?

Mr. GRAHAM: The amount, as I outlined last year, was recommended by the board. About 114 miles of the road have become dilapidated and the board has recommended that that portion be repaired. That is what this money is for.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand that within the last two years certain of the rails were ordered taken up.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was proposed that some heavy rails should be taken up on this portion of the line, but the line was in such bad shape that they did not even get in to do that.

Mr. CHURCH: The construction of the Hudson Bay railway has been a political proposition from start to finish. I am sorry to say that the two old political parties have had a hand in it, and now the Progressive party is taking part in it as well. Canada has had too many political railways, and before any more money is spent on this project I think an account should be taken. The Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways have not had time to consider this matter, notwithstanding what has been said in that regard. I say this is a political matter and it becomes very active around election time. One reason why the taxes of the working classes have been so heavy is that an extravagant railway policy has been pursued in this country. Before any further expenditure is made on this road the following considerations should receive attention:

1. The navigability of Hudson straits.
2. The probable volume of eastbound and westbound traffic available.
3. Local conditions and prospects for colonization.
4. Operating revenues and expenses.
5. Storage at Hudson bay.
6. The linking up of the Hudson Bay railway with the transportation systems of the West.

The minister should be able to answer these questions before we pass this item. Ontario has a railway similar to this, the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario. They applied to the federal government for a subsidy, and what did the federal government say? They said it was not a work for the general advantage of the Crown as a colonization road, and of Canada. It was looked upon by the officers of the Crown as a colonization road, and Ontario is extending that road right up to James Bay. The condition is the same in Manitoba as respects the Hudson Bay railway; it is a colonization road, and if the federal government has regarded the Timiskaming and Northern Ontario as a colonization road, as a work not for the general advantage of Canada, then the same should apply to the Hudson Bay railway. In the first place, the Hudson bay route will not get the grain trade. I venture to say there are some seasons when the channel there is not open two months in the year. Grain which is sent to the head of the lakes can go out 365 days of the year—in the summer months via the lakes, Buffalo, and the St. Lawreence, and in the winter months via Chicago and New York and Montreal. This route was reported upon by a royal commission appointed by the government of Canada. That commission made a very extensive examination of the feasibility of this project, taking into account all considerations affecting finance, the movement of grain, the probable volume of traffic, and so on. I am sorry the two old political parties have not heeded the report of that commission, because it is the report of experts. We have enough deficits to meet now —Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Pacific, Canadian National. Roads which were built under private ownership have had to be taken over by the people of Canada. Public ownership is not responsible for this condition. Now, let me read one paragraph of the report of this commission, which consisted of the present member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), Mr. W. M. Acworth, and Mr. A. H. Smith, president of the New York Central. It says:

1 a.m.

> We understand that construction work on the Hudson bay line has been suspended. We think that the work should not in any case be recommenced till more urgent needs have been met and money is more easily procurable. And if work on the line is begun again, we think it should be done in the most economical manner possible, and only up to the standard of a local line, bearing in mind that it cannot be expected for many years to come to be self-supporting. Considering the small advantage in rail mileage from the grain-growing areas, which the Hudson bay possesses over the existing routes to Port Arthur, and that from many districts it possesses no advantage at all; considering further the short and uncertain period of navigation in the bay, and that grain consigned to port Nelson will consequently always be liable to be detained there for nine months till navigation is again opened; considering that higher ocean freights may be expected to absorb, if not more than absorb, any possible saving in rail rates, we cannot believe that this route will ever secure any serious share in the export trade. Still less can we think that it will handle an import business. Unless considerable mineral wealth should be discovered in the territory which this line will open up, it must we fear, continue to be almost indefinitely a burden upon the people of Canada. And everything that can be done should be done to make this burden as small as possible.

I may say further that since the Hudson straits are open for specially constructed vessels between July first and the end of October, only the crop of the preceding year could be counted on for traffic. A good deal of that traffic would have to be at Port Nelson by the opening of navigation, so that there will have to be immense storage facilities at that point. But who would think it wise to lock up his export wheat at Port Nelson knowing that it could be shipped through only between July first and the end of October? The question answers itself. Now, let me quote further from an article on the subject:

> Wheat is always somebody's property. It moves at the direction of its owner, and the owner wants it where he can be sure of making delivery by a specified date. The very essence of the export wheat business is time of delivery, and it is precisely that condition which, practically every year, from October 20 to December 5, forces nearly 70 per cent of Canadian export wheat out by way of Buffalo and New York, although the St. Lawrence route to Montreal offers from 2 to 5 cents per bushel lower carrying charges. There is nothing more definitely established than that our export wheat does not follow the cheapest channel or shortest channel, all economic theories or assertions to the contrary notwithstanding. It does the reverse, and that astounding fact cannot be ignored in considering the possibility of finding enough traffic to load one train per day, for six months in the year, for Hudson bay. People who merely look at a map and then become dogmatic about transportation have thus far done all the talking about this Hudson Bay railway.

We have wasted money enough on this project, money that the old central provinces have had to pay as well as the rest of Canada. The railways of the United States have also got into a deplorable condition; they have gone on making extensions against the reports of experts. Where is Sir Henry Thornton on this proposition? Has he had a chance in the short time he has been here to go over this district and find out if the route is feasible? Talk about giving the board a free hand, if this is how the government is going to do it I have no hope of the railways being a success. At this late hour I do not wish to detain the committee any longer, but I wish to protest against this expenditure on the Hudson Bay railway. I think it is a waste of money. I think the road will never pay the fixed charges on the investment. Talk about navigation. Why, you have not considered the question of terminals, the type of boats and many other questions from a navigation standpoint. If this road is to be built it should be built by the province of Manitoba just like the province of Ontario built a similar road to James bay.

Mr. MacLAREN: Has the minister the report of the Railway Board on this construction?

Mr. GRAHAM: This is not construction. Although the Hudson Bay railway is under construction, this is not for new construction. As I explained to the House last year, 114 miles of the road already built is being put in operating shape. There is nothing being done in the way of new construction.

Mr. MacLAREN: It says "construction" in the item.

Mr. GRAHAM: The line is under construction until it is completed.

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand that the Railway Board have recommended this construction. May we have their report?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have not that report with me. I thought I went into this matter pretty fully last year. Before any further work is done there will be no other reports. The boards, if for no other reason, but this is not my reason, felt that even if only to take out these rails my hon. friend has spoken of they had to put the road in shape to the end of the steel to bring them out. All that material would be wasted if the road was not put in shape.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister gave the impression when he spoke earlier this session that the decision to take up the rails on the Hudson Bay railway had been made prior to the arrival of Sir Henry Thornton, and that the reversal took place afterwards. I looked over the file immediately afterwards and found that the impression given by that language was entirely wrong. The recommendation of Sir Henry Thornton came to that effect. The recommendation to council, and I think the order in council itself by which the government decided to approve of the taking up the rails includes a reference to Sir Henry Thornton as agreeing thereto.

Mr. GRAHAM: Oh no.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh yes, it does.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think my hon. friend is absolutely wrong, because Sir Henry Thornton was not here at the time.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He came here afterwards.

Mr. GRAHAM: My deputy was then acting chairman of the board.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the file is here I will show the minister. I went into it carefully. I have it upstairs. The government approved of it and the file shows that Sir Henry Thornton approved.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not agree with that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish the minister had the file. I know the impression he gave before, and it was distinctly wrong.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not agree with that either.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It does not matter whether the minister agrees with it or not. I do not know why the minister is objecting because if he looks at the correspondence he will see what changed the decision of the government. What changed the decision of the government at least, whether it changed the decision of the board or not I will leave hon. members to conjecture, were the appeals and protests from Liberal associations in northern Manitoba and northern Saskatchewan. When they arrived the opinions of both the government and the board changed.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not want to argue with my hon. friend but he is absolutely incorrect as to why the decision was changed.

Mr. HANSON: I want to add my protest against the expenditure of another dollar on the Hudson Bay railway. I want to tell the minister that the whole of eastern Canada is opposed to the expenditure of another dollar on this railway.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member for Grenville is not.

Mr. HANSON: I cannot help what the hon. member for Grenville thinks. It does not bind my conscience in this matter.

Mr. GRAHAM: He represents the East.

Mr. BUREAU: And you cannot bind that of the East.

Mr. HANSON: All the expression we hear from eastern Canada is directly opposed to the expenditure of another dollar on this road, and the government might as well appreciate the force of public opinion in the East on this matter. At this late hour I am not going to say anything more about it, but eastern Canada will vote against this and against any government that spends any money on that road.

Mr. BAXTER: I want to know if this vote is simply an attempt to carry out the pledge given by the Minister of Agriculture in a recent by-election in the West that the Hudson Bay railway would be completed before next Christmas. I agree with the hon. member for York-Sunbury who has just spoken that eastern Canada is absolutely opposed to this railway, and the common sense of all Canada is equally opposed to it. I would say further that I understand, and I am not going to quote my authority, which besides is excellent, that Sir Henry Thornton himself started the operation of taking up the rails on this bit of road, which in my judgment should never have been built as it was nothing but a wildcat enterprise built to satisfy a demand from western Canada, which was absolutely misled as to the purpose that could be served by the construction of this road. Sir Henry Thornton as a railway man started to take up the rails, my informant said, when "they" stopped the operation. When I asked who "they" were I was told, "Oh, there was a Mr. Stewart who was a director." I do not know who he is, but he was a director and was in touch with western interests, and apparently political influence was more powerful than the business aspect of this question. As far as I can see it, with the ice-bound bay, with the shifting sands and the danger of the route, it would be far more sensible to direct the trade of Canada in some other direction. Other parts of Canada which could be vital to the carrying on of overseas trade are being absolutely neglected, and in the hope of getting somehow or other the support of certain members in this House who never will give their support to either party because they think themselves superior to both, the government is prepared to waste $350,000 more to get that which will never be delivered and they are willing to do it at the expense of all the rest of Canada. I want to put myself and the part of the country from which I come as absolutely and definitely on record against the flagrant misuse of the funds of Canada in building a railway that cannot serve either the farmer or any other interest adequately.

Mr. MacLAREN: Would the minister give the committee an explanation of this point? It was stated that it was the decision of the Railway Board to remove the rails to make use of them in other directions, and a certain number of rails were removed to be used in other portions of the country the view being taken that it was a useless railway. Now the vote here for $350,000 is to restore that railway. What I wished to ask the minister was if he would inform the committee of this change of attitude?

Mr. GRAHAM: As a matter of fact the Canadian National Railway Board, with Major Bell in the chair, passed a resolution not to abandon the Hudson Bay railway but to secure these rails for the time that were not being used and use them on branch lines. But when they came to discuss the question practically they found they could not rescue these rails or ties without first virtually reconstructing the road or repairing it for about one hundred and some odd miles. If my hon. friend knew the locality he would understand thoroughly what I mean. Now, even if the road were not to be proceeded with to Nelson or Churchill, this money would have to be expended to put the road in shape out to the end of steel to bring in the material to rescue the rails and ties. I suppose there is a million dollars worth of material there. I am not saying this is to be done, but even if it were to be done this money would have to be expended before a yard of rails could be brought out.

Mr. MacLAREN: Is it proposed to bring any of the rails out after this is done?

Mr. GRAHAM: That will be a matter for further consideration, but at present no. It does not look from what has taken place that we will need them for branch lines in the West.

[Mr. Baxter.]

Mr. MacLAREN: I record my dissent to this vote.

Mr. BAXTER: Did I understand the minister to say that we are asked to vote $350,000 without being assured that it is the government's intention, or the intention of the board that apparently advises the government, to take up the rails, or that this money is not to be spent for the completion of the line? Are we asked as sensible men to vote this money without knowing what we are voting it for? I cannot grasp what is contemplated from the statement of the minister. He says it may be necessary to spend it in order to save another million dollars worth of property and yet he says in the same breath it may be advisable to extend the railway to completion. I cannot follow his statement and I want to know what I am asked to vote this money for. If it is for the completion of the railway I am unalterably against it. It is one of the mad fancies the people of Canada have gone into, and the sooner it is abandoned the better.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is not a dollar of this for the completion of the road.

Mr. BAXTER: What is it for?

Mr. GRAHAM: I pointed out three or four times that for 114 miles the line is absolutely in such a condition that the trestles have rotted down; there has not been anything done on it for years in the way of operation. The first thing the government must do before it can either take out the material or start the completion of the line for the last ninety miles is to put this portion of the line in a state of repair.

Mr. BAXTER: I ask the minister to tell me whether the government have resolved to build the line or take the rails up. I want to know which course they are going to pursue. Surely the people of Canada are entitled to know what is going to be done with their money.

Mr. GRAHAM: If a vote should be asked to complete the line that will be proof that the government intends to do it. This is the commitment the government agreed to last session in this House and that is what this vote is for. Whether the line be completed or not this vote, and more too, will be necessary to put the line in a state of repair that will permit the taking out of the material.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What is the object of putting this portion of the line in a state of repair if the railway is not to be completed ultimately?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have just given the reason. There is approximately, I am told, a million dollars worth of ties, fish plates, and other material which cannot be brought out unless this road is put into a condition for operating.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Is the vote necessary to complete the line, or is it just to move this material?

Mr. GRAHAM: This vote is necessary no matter what may be done.

Mr. BAXTER: Surely we are not to be asked to vote $350,000 without having a definite statement from the Railway department that they are going to carry the line to completion, or that they are going to take up the rails? Let us know which it is. They must know now which object they are going to carry out, unless we are going to have a repetition of the Hotel Scribe incident in Paris, and the government does not know what is going to be done by superior authority. If we are to be asked for an endorsement by somebody who has not yet indicated his views to the government, tell us even that, but let us know along what line we are asked to vote the money?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have fully informed my hon. friend of the reasons for the vote.

Mr. BAXTER: We have not got any reason yet; I do not know what is going to be done.

Mr. KNOX: I wish to say that I object most strenuously to some of the statements that have been made here by the hon. members for St. John. I think the statements come with a very bad grace from either of these hon. gentlemen considering the amount of money which has been voted for harbours on the Atlantic coast from which we expect to get no revenue whatever. My hon. friend (Mr. Baxter) in his superior way told us this is purely a political matter. I wish to assure him that it is not a political matter in the West; it is a matter of bread and butter to the people out there. Because, unless we will get something that will enable us to get our produce on the markets of the world a little cheaper than we are doing at the present time I do not know what the future of the West is going to be.

Mr. ARTHURS: Will the taking up of these rails help?

Mr. KNOX: We are not taking up the rails.

Mr. BAXTER: The minister will not tell us whether they are being taken up or not; we do not know.

Mr. KNOX: I presume some of my hon. friends to my right would like to see the rails taken up, judging from the way they are talking. I wish to assure them that the West will not stand for anything of the kind.

Mr. BAXTER: Reference has been made to the position of the members for St. John. I think I might point out that the hon. member who has just spoken cannot possibly know from the cryptic utterances of the Minister of Railways whether the rails will be taken up, or whether they will be nailed down. Of course, it is only in keeping with the attitude of his party to which I referred earlier in the day. He is quite prepared, if he thinks he can get anything in the way of expenditure, no matter how useless, that will be directed towards his particular section of the country to follow the government with perhaps the hope of something more tangible than that. But for the rest of us, we want to know most definitely whether these rails are to be taken up, or whether the railway is to be extended. I would not expect a member from the West, that is from the Progressive party, to be at all interested in whether there would be at the end of the railway any machinery by which grain would be taken care of. I would not expect him to care whether it was a single track or a double track railroad. I would not expect him to care anything about the question of a possible congestion of cars at the end of the line. I would not expect him to care anything about the conditions of ice in Hudson bay. From what I have seen during this session I would not expect them to require anything but the expenditure of money in a fanciful attempt to carry out their purpose without regard to the uselessness to Canada of that expenditure. But the rest of us have a different idea. We want to know what is going to be accomplished by this expenditure. We want to know whether the government has decided to take up the rails or not, or whether the government has decided to build this railway to tide water. The hon. member, however, does not care so long as money is spent. The rest of us do care and we want to know what the government proposes to do?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Minister of Railways was very direct and not any too considerate in his denial of my statement that Sir Henry Thornton had agreed with the government's decision to take up the rails, he could scarcely have been more specific than he was. Although some months had elapsed since I had read this I felt sure of my ground, and can as surely confront the minister with a most definite confirmation of what I said. The government's order in council authorizing the taking up of the rails was passed on the 24th November. That order in council cited a report dated 22nd November from the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, representing in connection with the operation of the Hudson Bay railway that the vice-president and general manager of the Canadian National Railways had presented a report relative to the advisability of lifting the rails between miles 214 and 334, consisting of 120 miles of No. 1, eighty-pound rails the same to be used on the main line subdivision between Vermilion and Edmonton to replace sixty pound rails urgently requiring renewal.

There are certain other recitals not necessary to refer to, but this is the end—

> The minister observes that until such time as the financial condition of the country would warrant the completion of the Hudson Bay railway project the using of the lifted rails on another portion of the system would appear to be an economical procedure, as if left where they are they would in short time deteriorate to such an extent as to become of no value.

The preceding paragraph reads:

> The minister, upon the advice of the said board, concurred in by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, accordingly recommends that authority be granted to take up the track on the Hudson Bay railway from mile 214 to mile 334, and to use the material therefrom at such points upon the Canadian National Railways as the said board may deem expedient.

That is the order in council which decided the matter dated 24th November. To be brief, I will pass now to a document which is on the file dated 19th December. This order in council refers to a resolution, a decision, come to by the directors on the 20th October. The directors decided to the 20th October to take up the rails. That was included in a report in November, and the whole thing was given effect to in an order in council dated 24th November. On the 19th December the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals wrote the following letter to James Stewart, who at this time was director of the roads, and who had written the letter protesting against this policy: The letter reads:

> In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, I may state that following meeting held by the Directors of the Canadian National Railways on the 20th October while inspecting the western lines, a communication was addressed to the Acting Minister of Railways, pointing out to him the views expressed by the directors at this meeting, and requesting him to submit the matter to the Governor in Council for approval. This has been done, and an order in council has already been passed, authorizing the Board of Directors to proceed with the taking up of the rails between miles 214 and 334.
> Since the arrival of the chairman, Sir Henry Thornton, this matter has been discussed with him at some length, and he has expressed his approval of the action taken by the Board of Directors during his absence. In view of this, I do not see that any good object would be served by having the matter brought up for reconsideration at the present time.

I hope the minister will now accept the situation.

Mr. GRAHAM: I accept it absolutely. My right hon. friend and I were discussing two different things.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh no.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend will take an hour to straighten out a thing that needs no straightening. The decision to take up the rails was made before Sir Henry came here. That is what I had in my mind, and I pointed out to him—

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said that Sir Henry Thornton had agreed to it, and the minister distinctly contradicted me. That is all there was to it.

Mr. GRAHAM: He would not even let me agree with him if I wanted to. He would interrupt me if I were trying to agree with him. The decision to take up the rails was passed by the board before Sir Henry came here. I never heard anything of this letter between the deputy minister and Mr. Stewart. It never came to me and as far as my connection with it is concerned Sir Henry Thornton was not present when the decision was arrived at. If he agreed to it afterwards that is another thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said he had agreed to it and that is what the minister contradicted. I do not say he knew he was wrong but he should not have contradicted me unless he knew he was right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have had a chance of going through the next file while the matter is being discussed and I think I can tell hon. members what the government's policy is in connection with the Hudson Bay railway because I see that the next item is a refund to J. D. McArthur & Co. of $90,000 and I find from the file that under the contract and the arrangements that money can never be paid him until the railway is completed. I think the minister will agree with me.

Mr. GRAHAM: I could not tell until I had read the file. That is not the way I read it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the road is not to be completed the money can be paid, but if the road is to be constructed the country has no right to give up the $90,000. Mr. McArthur states that the $90,000 is in the hands of the Department of Railways and Canals and is held pending the completion of the Hudson Bay line. I know that. Then I note that he got impatient about it, and made application to the late minister, the Hon. W. C. Kennedy, on August 9, 1922. Mr. Kennedy handed the letter over to the deputy, and this is what Major Bell says:

> Your letter of August 9th to the minister is now before me. With reference to the agreement of the 5th April, 1919, you will note that the use of the word "temporarily" is relevant only to the suspension of the work at the time your contracts were in force. The agreement cancelled these contracts and provided for the retaining of $90,000—
> "until such time as His Majesty shall complete the works—".
> The word "temporarily" is not found in this latter connection, and I am advised that the time for completion of the work is entirely within the discretion of His Majesty. It is not necessary, nor in order, for me at the present time to deal with the contingency suggested by the expression in your letter—"if the government decides not to proceed with the work at all".
>
> If your legal advisers entertain the opinion that a petition of right to obtain a refund now of the above sum will have any profitable result, this department will not, I apprehend, interpose any objection to the granting of a fiat, but, in the opinion of our legal department, such a proceeding would be absolutely futile. Under clause 8 of the agreement the Exchequer Court would have no jurisdiction, as the chief engineer is the sole arbitrator in all disputes.
> In looking upon this $90,000 as an asset to be hypothecated, regard must have been had to the fact that it really was the payment of an estimated loss if the contracts were completed under conditions such as then existing, even though coupled with a prospect of some refund if construction costs were lower at some future time when the government might decide to complete.

The whole thing is that if the man had not been let off his contract he would have lost $90,000. As a matter of fact, I think it would have been more. It is quite obvious that this refund never should be given unless the government has definitely abandoned the Hudson Bay project. If the Hudson Bay railway is to be completed, in granting this refund the government is adding just that much to the cost and the country's expense.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will make a statement of the other side of the case. My hon. friend has a little advantage of me in all these things, because he has the files.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister has had them a long time. I have only had a chance to skim over them.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member has done pretty well. This is the situation for the committee to decide. McArthur had a contract to complete the Hudson Bay railway, and the late government had paid him so much money, but retained $90,000 as stated clearly in settlement to pay any loss that might accrue to the government if they proceeded to complete the road. That is, if the government in completing the road were compelled to pay more money than McArthur had contracted to build the road for, this $90,000 was to meet the loss. The engineers, under the estimate of that time, thought the loss could not be more than $90,000. If in completing the road, a greater cost was not incurred than was included in McArthur's contract, the whole $90,000 would come back. As a matter of fact, this $90,000 is McArthur's by the settlement, retained by the government as against the completion of the road. The only question is this: This has been retained for five years, perhaps, nearly six years. Is it fair for the government to sit down and keep McArthur's $90,000 for all eternity? It is his money.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that when this road is going to be built?

Mr. GRAHAM: You cannot compare time with eternity. It is his money retained by the government in case loss was incurred in connection with the completion of the contract. We cannot go on with the work this year. It does not look as if it would be gone on with next year. How long should the country retain this $90,000 belonging to McArthur? If the committee thinks five years is not long enough, my opinion is that if this had been a matter between private individuals, this $90,000 would have been handed back to him. When the matter comes up again, the contract will be made under new conditions and new terms; a new contract will be entered into. McArthur cannot get the money unless we vote it for him; but it is his money, as I say, retained by the government. Does the committee think it is time to give him back his $90,000?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not quite the way in which the matter should be put.

Mr. GRAHAM: What is the right way? I want to be fair about it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In 1919 he wanted to get rid of his contract and he got a good, big settlement. He got a just settlement. He got a settlement which he should be absolutely satisfied with.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Was Mr. McArthur prepared to go on with the contract, or did the government stop it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He certainly did not want to go on.

Mr. GRAHAM: Did the government not stop the contract?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The deputy is there and he can give the minister the information.

Mr. GRAHAM: The deputy informs me that the work was stopped earlier than this time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly, and I think the deputy will say something else too.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The hon. member has not answered the question. Did the government not stop the contract?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am trying to get the information from the minister.

The CHAIRMAN: The item before the committee is the Hudson Bay railway construction, and the discussion is proceeding in connection with the McArthur claim.

Mr. GRAHAM: We can pass the other one if the committee is willing.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All right.

Mr. BIRD: No. I do not wish to detain the House more than a few minutes, but I desire to add a word of protest to those uttered by the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Knox) against the spirit of opposition manifested towards this western aspiration by one or two hon. members to our right. I trust that spirit is not widely shared by the members in any corner of this House. It would be very regrettable if a spirit of that kind prevailed in this House. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Baxter) seems to be obsessed by twin antipathies, one to the Progressive party and the other to the western part of Canada. Usually his judgment is to be relied upon. When his mind is working in a sphere with which it is familiar, we delight to listen to his utterances; but when he is under the influence of those pet aversions of his, his judgment seems to wander far from sound logic. I want to say, as I have tried to say before in this House, that the Hudson Bay railway transcends a mere political matter. It is an aspiration of the West and of the whole of the West. When hon. members stand up and say with superficial finality that the East will not do this and the East will not do the other, we can do what we regret to do, what we think it is always inadvisable to do, we can stand up and say that the West will do this and the West will do the other. That is a spirit that ought not to be engendered in this House by responsible members. It is a spirit that ought to be avoided if possible. Where will this Dominion arrive at if hon. members deliberately on every occasion take the opportunity to stir up that kind of spirit of blind, unreasoning opposition between one part of Canada and another? I would not mind, no hon. member would mind, if that kind of thing was supported by facts and reasons; but the hon. member for St. John and the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) have had ample opportunity in this House to array their facts upon this question, to stand up in a reasonable manner and to meet argument with argument previously in this session and in the last session. Did they do that? At this moment, in a totally unsupported manner, without a single fact, without the least suspicion of acquaintance with the facts, they stand up and deliberately tell this House and the West that the East is forever and for all time opposed to this aspiration of western Canada. One trembles almost to think what the repercussion in western Canada will be of a recent act of the Senior Chamber of this parliament. We want to know how far responsible statesmen in this country are going to go with matters of that kind. If some of these hon. members were a little better acquainted with the sentiment that prevails in western Canada, they would be a little more careful before adding fuel to fires that are already burning pretty briskly. Hon. members will stand up and proclaim their love for this wide Dominion of ours, speaking in superlatives, and yet when it comes to practical matters wherein all the sympathies of all parts of Canada may be legitimately sought these men will deliberately try to drive in the wedge and make it impossible for the country to work harmoniously and in a practical way I would advise these gentlemen to make their patriotism a little more practical. Let them use their imaginations in trying to visualize what the future of Canada can only hold if the communities in all parts of the country will co-operate under some form of reasonable compromise.

The CHAIRMAN: I would recall the attention of the hon. member to the fact that he has already dealt rather fully with the question of the failure of certain hon. members to appreciate certain things. There is a definite item before the committee, however, and I would ask him to confine his remarks thereto.

Mr. BIRD: The item is an important one, but the issue raised by the hon. gentleman to my right is of still greater importance.

The CHAIRMAN: It does not happen however to be the item before the committee. The hon. member must confine his remarks to the subject matter under discussion.

Mr. BIRD: Perhaps I am taking hon. gentlemen too seriously.

An hon. MEMBER: You certainly are.

Mr. BIRD: If that is the feeling of the committee I am prepared to let the matter go so far as that particular aspect of it is concerned. With regard to the vote itself, what is provided now is a very small start, but I must be grateful for small mercies. I cannot understand just how this $350,000 is going to put that 300 miles of line into anything like its original condition. I understand the minister to say that it is to be applied to the northern 100 miles, but I gathered from the deputation that was down here some weeks ago that the whole of the line was in very bad repair. The first 200 miles, although it had been in partial operation some time, appeared to be in very poor condition, and if that is the case I can see that this $350,000 will not go very far.

Mr. MacLAREN: Does the hon. member not think that $350,000 is sufficient for the purpose of taking up the rails?

Mr. BIRD: So far as I can understand, the question is not of taking up but of putting down rails, or rather of repairing the rails that already exist. Now this should not be a political matter but it seems to me that there is a strong attempt being made to use it for political purposes. With regard to the original intention of the board to take up these rails, it was by accident that I was instrumental in making that fact generally known to the public, and from the knowledge I have of the circumstances I am of the opinion that Sir Henry Thornton's acquaintance with the question was subsequent to the action of the board. Even if he did approve of the board's action, that can be easily explained. Sir Henry Thornton was newly arrived in this country, and he would naturally know little of the necessities of western Canada; and had he been here before and been acquainted with the conditions that have existed so long it is inconceivable to me that he would have approved of that action of the board, which I will not begin to explain. I am not going to offer any criticism; probably the board considered themselves justified. No doubt the desire was to get out the material; and so far as my knowledge goes, whenever Sir Henry Thornton knew the state of public opinion in the West concerning this matter he must immediately have disapproved of what had been done. Has the minister any expert advice as to what this amount of money will accomplish, and to what extent this 300 miles will be restored to its original condition? This is an important question and it would be useless spending all this money on the last 100 miles if the first 200 miles, which constitutes the most useful part of the line, is to be given no attention.

Mr. GRAHAM: The first 185—not 200—miles is occasionally operated. As regards the condition of the line beyond that, no statement can be made until the engineers are on the ground. This $350,000, as I explained at the outset, will not put the entire line in proper condition, but it is all we can spend just now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to make a single reference to one statement of the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird) with regard to the responsibility of another Chamber concerning the Branch Lines Bill. The hon. member would know, if he had read the addresses, that all that has to be done if the government really want to go on with the branch lines is for them to add to the estimates already here such an amount as it deems sufficient, and no hon. members, at all events on one side of the Senate, would have the least objection to accepting it, and certainly none in this House.

Item agreed to.

Refund to J. D. McArthur & Co., $90,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) asked me a question, but I see he is not in the House. Let me read from a letter on the file. It was written in September 1918 from McArthur to the Minister of Railways and it shows how the matter in question came about:

> As you are aware, it is impossible, owing to war conditions, to proceed at present to build at schedule prices the Hudson Bay railway referred to in contracts between myself and the Dominion.

Then he states what is being done. In September, 1918, the man found that he could not go on with the contract owing to increased prices. About that time, perhaps a little later, the government had on hand of his moneys $400,000 odd. They let him out of his responsibilities; they merely held back $90,000 as against the losses which they will have when they come to build the line. I think the deputy would tell his minister, if his memory is at all good—and I think it is—that Mr. McArthur at that time was very much pleased to receive the money; that it was a very good settlement. He has no right to this now at all. There is the deputy's letter of only last year, there is the action of Hon. Mr. Kennedy only last year. It is absurd to bring down in a supplemental estimate a claim like this: Surely the government do not want to put themselves in the position of forcing a thing like this through at the present stage of the session. It is idle to say that the government will only have the House sit when hon. members want to sit; that is nonsense, piffle of the purest kind. The government know that hon. members want to get away. They know that members have made their arrangements. They know it is wrong to keep this House sitting longer. It is a first-rate foundation for a reputation of forcing through in the dying days of the session—yes, in the dying seconds of the session—claims, settlements which have no basis in law, which have stood for years, and of forcing them through in this way because it is the only way of getting them through.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is no desire to do that at all. I have sat up until four or five o'clock in the morning when Sir Robert Borden's estimates were being put through and when there would be only three or four members behind me—sat up two nights before the closing of the session—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not object to that at all.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then why make a fuss about it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is nothing to be accomplished by misrepresenting my position. I am objecting because this is not a proper vote to be considered in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have not much objection to what my hon. friend says about the contract. The only question is that they made a contract, McArthur accepted it, they kept $90,000 of his money—have we kept it long enough? An arrangement of that kind would not be tolerated five minutes between men in business.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, the claim would not be tolerated.

Mr. GRAHAM: Ninety thousand dollars was to be handed back when there was no work being done and no prospect of it in the immediate future. Contracts must be construed in the light of reason. Is five years a sufficient time to withhold a man's drawback as against some loss you may make in construction when there is not even a proposal before the House to build the road?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The order in council went through in 1919. When my hon. friend says it is five years he is a year previous.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is strange that this is just the right time to decide that the $90,000 is to go to Mr. McArthur. Why is it not in the Main Estimates this year? Why can it not be held over for the Main Estimates of next year? This kind of estimate should not be in the Supplementaries which are considered in the last few days of the session, and the minister knows it. Let him wait and just see what investigation reveals. Let him wait and see what will be said about this vote if it appears in the Main Estimates when hon. members will have a real opportunity, as he knows they have not now, to look into it and discuss it. Let the minister hold this one as the one was held at the end of the session of 1921; let him have an investigation—and I will guarantee we will not run away from it.

Mr. SHAW: If I understand the arrangements correctly, the $90,000 is held by the government against any possible loss when the line is completed. That is the definite arrangement between the government and Mr. McArthur and it seems to me the first thing for the government to do is to determine whether or not they are going to build the railway, and then, in the light of that fact, make the arrangements with Mr. McArthur. I do not think Mr. McArthur is entitled to the money under the circumstances; the people of Canada should hold it against any possible loss that may be incurred in the completion of the railway. If the government had decided not to build the railway, then it would be proper to consider whether or not the money should be returned, but that not having been decided, I say there is no reason why the right of the people of Canada to any portion of that money should be forfeited.

Item agreed to: Yeas, 40; Nays, 24.

Welland canal—Port Colborne elevator—extension, $350,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why has it been necessary to bring this item down in the Supplementary Estimates?

Mr. GRAHAM: We appointed a committee consisting of the manager of the Montreal Harbour Commission, Mr. Smith, the manager of the Grand Trunk elevators, and Mr. Henry, to make an investigation as to the whole situation. They brought in a report after the Main Estimates were down. It is very urgent to get this elevator in use if possible this season.

Item agreed to.

To provide for full and final settlement of claim of Telesphore Paradis, $15,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many more ancient claims have we got?

Mr. GRAHAM: A settlement of this claim has been offered for years. Dr. Reid offered to put in the estimates $17,500, but Mr. Paradis refused to take it and continued pressing his claim. I propose to offer him $15,000, and if he does not accept it the item will never appear again.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the claim for?

Mr. GRAHAM: He claims a loss of $57,000 through sparks from an Intercolonial railway engine burning his property.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many years ago?

Mr. GRAHAM: Quite a number. All the ministers have made him offers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the older the claim the more reason for a supplementary.

Item agreed to.

Rideau canal—improvements—repairs and replacement of dams—claims, $9,036.62.

Mr. SHAW: I understand from remarks made by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) last year that it was necessary for the government to maintain this canal on account of some arrangement made with the Imperial government at the time it was built. I suggest on account of the more or less uselessness of this canal the Prime Minister when in England this year should endeavour to have this arrangement terminated so that the liability of the country will be thereby lessened.

Mr. GRAHAM: He will have a nice time doing it.

Item agreed to.

Trent canal—improvements—roadway north of Buckhorn lock, $4,000.

Mr. ARTHURS: As I have not had an opportunity earlier this session I might on this item, as it is for a roadway, bring to the attention of the minister and the House the needs of a town known as Depot Harbour, which is the terminus of the Ottawa line, the old Canada Atlantic. This town is situated on an island, an Indian reserve. It has no connection with the mainland and these people are absolutely isolated. It has a population of from 1,000 to 1,500. The engineer of the department has made an estimate of the cost to provide a short roadway one and a half miles long to connect with the mainland. The difficulty in the past has been that the Ontario government had no right to build a road this being an Indian reserve, and there is no authority for the building of it except by the Railway department. While it was under the jurisdiction of the Grand Trunk Railway we had a difficulty in another way, but now that the government has taken over the Grand Trunk I think there is absolutely no justification for withholding a small grant for this purpose in order to give these people access to the outer world. It is not a boomer town; many of the inhabitants have resided there for many years. Many of them have to send their children forty or fifty miles to a continuation school, whereas if we had a road they would have only a very short distance to travel. This matter has been brought to the attention of the department, and I am only repeating now what I have said before in order to impress it on the minister. I trust that before another session a grant will be made to give these people some relief. It would be justifiable in every way.

Item agreed to.

Governor General's cars—repairs, $40,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like some explanation of this item. In the Main Estimates there was a vote of $10,000 for repairing the Governor General's cars. I cannot conceive at all what this item may involve.

Mr. GRAHAM: The other item was for ordinary repairs to these cars, Two cars had to be repaired, but as a matter of fact, when they came to be stripped at the shop it was found that a great part of them had to be absolutely rebuilt and steel under-frames put in. That accounts for this estimate, which I admit is a very large sum.

Mr. CALDWELL: Are these railway cars?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Surveys and Inspections—railways—including expenses of Advisory Fuel Committee—additional amount required, $5,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask what amount of this is attributable to the expenses of the Advisory Fuel Committee?

Mr. GRAHAM: One cannot tell just what their expenses will be, as it depends on what travelling they will have to do. Last year they did very important work, and did it very quietly and unostentatiously. Mr. Magrath and Mr. McCourt made many trips to Washington and other parts of the States trying to protect Canadians against a coal shortage, and they succeeded admirably. They work for nothing. This is merely to provide for their expenses. If they do not travel the money is not used. They would not accept any remuneration whatever.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to take the opportunity on this item of making a few remarks with regard to that very question. I am more convinced than I was even before the Fuel Committee took up the question of Canada's fuel supply, that this is a national question of practically the first importance. At the present time we find that the American anthracite supply is rapidly running out. It will run out within man's age at the rate it is now being used. The visible supply of anthracite in Wales is reduced to a very low amount, about 5,000,000 tons a year. Over half of this amount is at the present time consumed by Great Britain, and the balance goes to Norway, Holland and to some extent Denmark. We can never rely upon even Welsh coal for an adequate supply of fuel. We cannot rely on Pennsylvania coal in the future for very long, and the time has come when this country must turn its attention towards the establishment of an all-Canadian fuel supply. That ought to be the aspiration of hon. members of this House who are true Canadians, as I hope we all are, to develop the hope of an all-Canadian fuel supply. Few hon. gentlemen can conceive the vast amount of money we are spending in the United States annually for coal. In the last ten years we spent $580,000,000 or a little better than that in the United States for coal. Had that amount of Canadian money been spent in this country one does not need to exert his imagination very much to see what the result would be. We have in the province of Alberta, it is estimated, over 17 per cent of the world's total coal supply. Great Britain, famous for many years as one of the greatest coal producing countries in the world, has only 5 per cent, and that will perhaps give Canadians some conception of the potentialities of our coal supply. We have recently established definitely that in the northwest portion of the province there is an area of 100 square miles of almost exposed semi-anthracite higher in heating value than the Pennsylvania anthracite, and 80 miles of road would bring that into the markets of the Pacific and possibly as far east as Winnipeg. We have in that deposit of coal the power to practically control the coal supply of the west coast. We have in that portion of the country every known form of coal adaptable for every known purpose, domestic, industrial and shipping. We could coal every boat on the Pacific ocean and every householder from the Yukon to San Francisco, and it is a practical proposition. It would be a national question to open up these coal fields and develop them as a national industry, and I submit that it is in the interest of Canada that that should be done as speedily as possible.

Many recommendations have been made by the Advisory Fuel Board whose estimate we are considering. Some of them are of great value and some of minor value. The one of greatest value I think is that our attention should be turned to the solution of our transportation problem in connection with the coal supply. There is no coal problem in Canada. We have so much coal that one cannot form an adequate conception of it. Think of it—1,234,269 millions of metric tons. That is the calculated coal resources of Canada. I hope hon. members will realize from the little picture I have given the necessity of solving the transportation problem. We have the coal and all we need is transportation, and that problem we must solve. I hope the government will digest the report that was made by the Fuel committee the other day, and just here I want to pay a tribute to the excellent way in which the chairman conducted that committee, and to his extreme courtesy to both witnesses and members. I hope the government will take that report into very serious consideration, and more than that, put into active practice the recommendations of that committee.

Item agreed to.

To increase the amount of loan authorized by vote 139, Main Estimates, 1923-24—additional amount required, $1,550,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is this to cover.

Mr. GRAHAM: This covers 25 per cent of the cost of 2,000 freight cars.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I see. This is in connection with the equipment that has been ordered?

Mr. GRAHAM: For equipment required by the board. There was a vote in the Main Estimates but the board decided it needed more two or three weeks ago and made the request.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the total amount of equipment bought this year?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think I gave that in a general statement I brought down.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have trouble in getting complete statements.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think I laid a statement on the Table the other day.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I got a statement from the minister the other day and I wrote him this letter on 15th June, that is fourteen days ago:

Dear Mr. Minister,

I have perused the statements supplementary to statement No. 1 set out on page 3790 and following pages in Hansard. In the main statement you have given the headings or grouping of the vote, but it does not appear that proper details have been given in the supplementary statement. Take for example, in item (e),—

Mr. GRAHAM: What are you reading from?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am reading from a letter written to you on the 15th June.

Take for example, in item (e), estimates for construction and betterments, Canadian Northern Railway system. The vote for western lines is $3,355,432, for eastern lines, $1,650,000, and special items $766,262.33. Electric lines, $950,000. No information whatever is given as to what construction is to be made on the one hand and betterments on the other. The items are left mixed up.

What I wanted were particulars showing where the money is going to be spent, where the new construction would take place. Under this heading lands required for construction purposes could be included. There is nothing whatever to show how much of this vote is for land and where the land is.

The House has no idea what it is doing.

The particulars should indicate where the lands required are situated and what vote is asked for each parcel. The ordinary details supplied to you as Minister of Railways should give full particulars.

My hon. friend was very angry with me the other day when he said that no one before had been asked—

Mr. GRAHAM: Never.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —to table his little black book.

Mr. GRAHAM: Never.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I said I only did it to save the hon. gentleman's time. I pointed out to him at that time that I had written for this information. I have not yet got it.

Why are these not submitted, and if insufficient, accompanied by proper details? Is parliament not entitled to the full information as to where the money it votes will be applied?

I have not gone over the other items of the statement in detail, but what I have already said will indicate what is required, having regard to all the different items.

Of course I have had no answer. I do not know yet what lands were covered by this grant. My hon. friend may know whether the lands bought in Toronto are covered by this grant.

Mr. GRAHAM: The matter is in the Exchequer Court.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The Exchequer Court does not give the money.

Mr. GRAHAM: The details are given. I think the money is paid out of consolidated revenue fund.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: But the payments should be voted.

Mr. GRAHAM: They should be voted after the payments are made. I think the Exchequer Court payments are made out of the consolidated revenue fund and then an estimate is brought down to cover them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Have the payments been made?

Mr. GRAHAM: The transaction is not completed yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I suppose we will be told about that next year; we shall get the details then. Now, this $1,500,000 is for the 2,000 cars is it?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, it is 25 per cent of the cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Twenty-five per cent for 2,000 cars?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What kind of cars?

Mr. GRAHAM: One thousand automobile cars and a thousand freight cars.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where have they been ordered?

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine they have not been ordered yet.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is it proposed to order them?

Mr. GRAHAM: Tenders will be called for in the usual way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend does not know his deputy may be able to tell me, whether it is in Canada or the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM: They are going to be ordered in Canada.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All of them are to be ordered in Canada?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think there is any question of buying them anywhere else.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: A considerable proportion of others were ordered in the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is trying to leave a wrong impression altogether. The Canadian National Railway Board advertises for tenders, but my hon. friend is endeavouring to lead the committee to think that Canadian money is going to buy American cars. Now, as a matter of fact, the Canadian National Railways have a big mileage in the United States and it would be reasonable to buy a proportion of their equipment in that country for some of our railways are there. That is all that is being done. I do not think the system could be carried on otherwise.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know what my hon. friend is talking about. I was simply asking whether he was buying cars in the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend said "I know some of the others were bought in the United States" endeavouring to create a wrong impression.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How many were bought in the United States?

Mr. GRAHAM: I gave the whole list the other day.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Purchased where?

Mr. GRAHAM: I gave a return of the equipment bought since October.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Purchased where?

Mr. GRAHAM: I brought down a statement showing where they were purchased and the price paid. All that information was put on the Table.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would ever get round to giving me this information. I suppose I may hope to get it some time after the House is closed.

Mr. GRAHAM: As a matter of fact, without telling any tales out of school, I have never seen the letter my hon. friend read. It was passed on to the department for answer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if my hon. friend is blaming me for that.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not say so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When I mentioned it the other day my hon. friend knew about it.

Mr. GRAHAM: This information will be given to my hon. friend as soon as we get it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When it is no good.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not say when it is no good. Information is good at any time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the government, through the minister, if they would consider increasing this vote to meet the requirements for branch lines in western Canada? There is a grave suspicion in this part of the House—nay more than a suspicion—that the Railway Bill recently passed forward from this House has been hoisted into the ethereal regions through the process known as the six months' hoist.

Mr. GRAHAM: We have no information on the subject from the other House as yet, I suppose I shall get it later on in the morning.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Will the minister have any objection to holding this item over? If he wants any more specific information we have very good ground for believing that the bill has been destroyed. I think in the interests of western Canada some arrangements should be made by this government to take care of the requirements there. It is an intensely serious problem. I do not intend to go into the matter in detail, but I tell you that the future of this country depends entirely on what action may be taken by the government in this matter. The people out there are not going to stand for this very much longer. There is a very grave and serious condition arising. There have been several cumulative instances of it towards the end of this session, and the government is not doing anything to lessen this condition.

Mr. GRAHAM: That would not have anything to do with this vote. You cannot increase the vote. You can bring in other votes and estimates at some other time, but the committee has not power to increase the vote.

Mr. GARLAND Bow River): I am under the impression the government has the power to increase the vote when it wishes to, and if the government is sincere and earnest in this matter, if it really wishes to give the western lines which it knows are needed, this is the opportunity of doing it. I suggest the item stand till the government has the information it requires.

Mr. GRAHAM. That has not anything to do with this vote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: All that is necessary is to increase this item 139, simply to bring down a slip of paper similar to the one the government brought down yesterday afternoon, with as many words as there are here in this item.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is a different thing. You require to bring down a further estimate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is what I am seeking to explain.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): You want to amend this.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I am trying to make this clear. It cannot be added to this item, but all the government has to do is to bring down the slip of paper similar to the one brought down yesterday. It is quite clear this is the proper course to pursue if the government wants to go ahead with the work. Here is an item for the purpose of equipment, $25,000. The balance will be by an equipment trust bond which the government guarantees. Why should the $25,000 be here and the rest never appear in the estimates at all.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The hon. member knows why.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know why. If the hon. member thinks he can elighten us, let him do so. Item 139 appears on page 31 of the estimates and it covers about a page, and it reads:

Amount not exceeding $73,000,000 to meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred (where amounts available from net operating earnings may be insufficient by or on behalf of the Canadian National Railway Company, hereinafter called "the Company", or any Company specified in the first schedule to the act incorporating the Canadian National Railway Company, being chapter 13 of the Statutes of Canada, 1919, or by the Company in respect of any railways, properties or works entrusted to the Company from time to time under the provisions of section 11 of the said chapter 13 of the Statutes of Canada, 1919, or by or on behalf of any Company specified or referred to in chapter 13 of the Statutes of Canada, 1920; or any one or more of them, on any of the following accounts:—

(a) Operating deficits whenever incurred or ascertained.

(b) Acquisition of property, materials and supplies.

(c) Interest and sinking funds on notes, securities or obligations.

(d) Principal and interest of maturing or matured, loans secured or unsecured.

(e) Construction and betterments.

(f) Co-ordination or consolidation of railway lines and facilities.

(g) Guarantees of securities.

Then it goes over on the next page and reads:

The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time, in the discretion of the Governor in Council:

(a) To meet expenditures made or indebtedness incurred by the Company in respect of railways, properties and works entrusted to the Company as aforesaid.

(b) By way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other, subject, however, as follows:

If by way of loans, the amount or amounts advanced shall be repayable on demand, with interest at the rate fixed by the Governor in Council, from time to time, payable half-yearly, secured if and when directed by the Governor in Council by mortgage or mortgages upon such properties, in such form and containing such terms and conditions, not inconsistent herewith, as the Governor in Council may approve.

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be of the principal and interest of the notes and obligations or securities of one or more of the said Companies specified by the Governor in Council, and may be signed by the Minister of Finance, on behalf of His Majesty, in such form and on such terms and conditions as the Governor in Council may determine to be appropriate and applicable thereto.

Consequently this covers loans and guarantees for all these purposes, including construction of the Canadian National railway. Therefore, all the government needs to do is to bring down an estimate, which it can do in a few hours, and just simply add what it wants for construction purposes. The government knows that the severest attack on its own conduct comes from its own friends.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the hon. member be willing to support such an amendment?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes; as to the action of the other House there is no question whatever judging from the speeches made there.

Mr. GRAHAM: We must not discuss the other House. The hon. member says the only reason they did not pass the other bill was because it was not brought down in the way he thought it should be brought down. If he says this item is not in proper form—

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I say it is the right form and in the form in which the other should be put. Why should a quarter of the vote for equipment be put in the estimates and not the balances? Because the equipment vote covers both. The whole thing should be there. There should be no bill to ostensibly authorize the guarantee of the balance of the equipment, but really to enable the government to do it without bringing it into this estimate, because if the government simply added this to the estimates the other three-quarters, as well as the quarter, then it would be enabled to guarantee the three-quarters under the provisions of the last quarter of the estimates.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member brought it down this way.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. we brought down the amounts.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend on December 1st 1919, though the act was passed on June 6th, 1919, issued bonds for $7,500,000 not in the estimates. The balance is in the estimates. Then on May 1st, 1920, bonds were issued for $15,000,000, not in the estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were those bonds guaranteed by the government.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think they were.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Why would it be in the estimates?

Mr. GRAHAM: How is the government going to guarantee these equipment bonds? As I understand it, the Finance Minister had no authority under the act to guarantee equipment bonds.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no objection in the world to giving him authority but I object to having out of the estimates any comitment in relation to our railways. When these bonds were issued they were not guaranteed by the government.

Mr. FIELDING: Were they not obligations chargeable on the country?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, they were not obligations on the treasury of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: The treasury of Canada is responsible for every obligation now issued by the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister had thought for a moment, he would not have made that statement. The treasury of Canada is not responsible in relation to bonds it does not guarantee.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, it is responsible for any securities issued by the Canadian National Railway Company, whether guaranteed or not.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: The company is responsible.

Mr. FIELDING: Who are the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We own the stock of the railway. The minister is trying to confuse the stock of the company with ownership. It is true we have to protect it in order to protect our stock but nobody would suggest that there would be anything in the estimates unless the treasury were directly bound. They know they cannot confuse me on the matter and they should not try to confuse the committee.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend should not try to confuse anybody else.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never try to confuse anyone.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not me in particular. As a matter of fact, this estimate is exactly according to the method adopted by my right hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is perfectly right. I am not objecting to it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, and my right hon. friend said twice: "Why should you not put the whole amount in the estimate?"

Mr. MEIGHEN: If you are guaranteeing it, yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: The government has no right to guarantee it. Does my right hon. friend say that we have the right to guarantee the bonds?

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the government have not, let them put their bill through to give them the power.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not discussing that. This estimate is inserted in exactly the same way as my hon. friend inserted it in 1919.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We did not guarantee the bonds.

Mr. GRAHAM. Our legal adviser says that we have no right to guarantee equipment bonds.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend is preventing the bill from going through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not. I am only preventing that feature of it in which an effort is made to escape the responsibility of putting the amount in the estimate.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend's friends in another place—I must not mention it—denounced the passage of the bill of the Minister of Finance just as they are denouncing the other bill, and it will probably meet the same fate if it ever gets there. At the present moment that bill is not through; there is no power to guarantee the equipment bonds, and we are advised under those conditions that this estimate is in the same position as the estimate put through by my right hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How have we been guaranteeing bonds for the last three years?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not for equipment.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: None of them?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not think so.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We bought some equipment two or three years ago. Does my hon. friend say that there was no guarantee at all?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not on equipment bonds.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Why does he make a distinction between equipment bonds and the other bonds? We guarantee the other bonds all right.

Mr. GRAHAM: We are advised that the law makes a difference; that we have not any authority.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be until the hour when the bill goes through which gives the power to guarantee. While I do not think it is a fact, it may be that they have not the power. But the government knows all it has to do is to strip from that bill as from the construction bill the clause which enables them to escape the responsibility of putting the amount in the estimates, and they will both go through without the least difficulty.

Mr. GRAHAM: How does my hon. friend know that?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know it just the way the minister knows it.

Mr. GRAHAM: As a matter of fact, the Upper Chamber objects to many of the lines on the ground that they are not needed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were chiefly of a minor character.

Mr. CALDWELL: I have been endeavouring for some time to call the attention of the committee to a condition that exists with regard to equipment on the government roads and which, I think, might obviate the necessity of building so many cars. I believe there is an arrangement between the railroads of Canada and the United States that if either retain cars of the other beyond a certain number of days, they pay one dollar rental a day for those cars. I think this is a very unwise arrangement for Canada for this reason: In a time of congestion when freight cars are badly needed, they are worth more than a dollar a day. During the season we are shipping a large amount of produce to the United States, and they retain our cars while the rush is on. I may be wrong in this, and if so I am subject to correction. I understand they are able to retain them by paying a dollar a day rent for them. I think our railroads realize that this is no rental for a car, because if a Canadian occupies more than the 48 hours which is allowed for either unloading or loading a car, he is charged demurrage of one dollar for the first day, two dollars for the second day, and five dollars a day after that. If some such arrangement as this were made with the United States, they would return our cars much more promptly. I am informed on very good authority that hundreds, yes thousands of our cars are retained by the United States during the grain-moving period, while our railroads are starved for cars to haul grain.

Mr. GRAHAM: This matter is in charge of the Car Association. There is no way of tracing a car up unless you keep right after it. When a Canadian car gets into the United States, it may be sent as far as possible from home and a dollar a day rental does not make much difference.

Mr. CALDWELL: I realize that in a charge of one dollar a day, there is nothing to induce the railways to send those cars back. I understand this is an international matter. During the grain movement, we send far more cars to United States' ports than we receive, so that they have a great advantage over us. The management of our government railroads would be well advised to endeavour to get some new arrangement in this particular, because this would help us out in the car shortage.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The Minister of Railways and the leader of the Opposition have very successfully placed this whole question in a state of confusion so far as I am concerned and, I think, as regards most of the other hon. members, if not all of them. I should like to ask the Minister of Railways if he is willing to seek some properly legal means by which the western lines can be supplied. Is he willing to do something at this session before we prorogue to enable western Canada to get the lines that he acknowledges are required?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is a very easy question to ask and a very hard one to answer. The government cannot sit down, and in two or three hours go over the whole system and take a line out that my hon. friend wants and think that will be all right.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister should not make inferences of that kind.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will put it on somebody else.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not asking for any particular line.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend should not be so sensitive. I will say some other line. This is a list of 28 lines that have been selected after week after week of study and consideration. The bill, according to reports I have heard, has been kicked out of some other place. We have no right to discuss that; but at this time in the session it is a pretty large order to endeavour to work this out in some other way than the only real practical way there was. I do not intend to be put in the place of so easily doing what people call "passing the buck."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Personally—and I think I may speak for members in this corner of the House—I think I can say that time is of no object to us in a matter of this importance. We will wait and allow him all the time he wants to bring in the necessary legislation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: About ten seconds would be enough if the will were there. The estimate for the roads in the bill was, I think, $28,000,000. All the minister has to do is to estimate what would be spent the first year. I guarantee that $10,000,000 would cover a good deal more than would probably be completed. All he has to do is to add $10,000,000 to this estimate—that means eight figures—and it is all through. Personally I am in no hurry; I will give him time to write eight figures or eight thousand.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My right hon. friend after arranging with his friends to kill the government measure in regard to the Government railways is endeavouring once more to draw a herring across the trail.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will not allow the hon. member to say such things about me. I made no arrangement whatever. Every effort of mine was the other way, and the hon. member knows that too.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I do not know it.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: All the government has to do is to put the amount in. Let them try that and see if there is any difficulty.

Mr GARLAND (Bow River): I want to have a direct answer from the government in regard to this matter. Perhaps the government would like to have a day or two to consider it, and I would suggest that it be allowed to stand.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no necessity for the item to stand.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the item is going to carry I should like to have an answer.

Mr. CALDWELL: I want to add my voice to what the member for Bow River has said in regard to some method being found of proceeding with the branch lines as proposed by the minister a few days ago. If the bill is not passed by the other Chamber I would strongly urge the minister that he take some definite action in the matter.

Item agreed to.

To provide for surveys and investigation of a railway from a point on the Canadian National railway towards Peace river, $50,000.

Mr. McBRIDE: I think the committee will agree that I have not been taking up the time of the House to any great extent, and in view of that fact I will claim the indulgence of hon. gentlemen for a short time in order that I may place before the government the facts in regard to this item. I have been responsible to a certain extent for having this $50,000 included in the estimates and when I am through, if the committee think that it is not good business to spend the money then I would ask that they vote against it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is no objection to it.

Mr. McBRIDE: This is too serious a matter to let slide without informing the House concerning it. I intended explaining this question when the budget was under consideration but I was asked to let it stand until some other time, for the reason that it was desired to take the vote on the budget on the 23rd of May. Now the Peace river country embraces an area of 74,000,000 acres, the greater part of which is good agricultural land. Of this amount 43,000,000 acres are in Alberta and 31,000,000 acres in British Columbia. The Dominion government also owns 3,500,000 on the British Columbia side of the boundary. Some people have stated that the Peace river is a navigable stream. I say it is not; it is a difficult stream to get at. The banks of the river are from 500 to 1,500 feet high, and even if the river were navigable you cannot get up and down the banks to take anything to the river. In that district there is a water power at Hudson's Hope, which is supposed to be second only to Niagara, and it would be capable of furnishing power for all the trains of the Canadian National railways west of Lucerne. At Findlay Fort, above Hudson's Hope, where some five rivers meet, it has been stated by men who have prospected in the district for many years that if a pulp mill were erected in the locality there is timber enough to supply the mill with pulpwood, enough to turn out 1,000 tons of paper per day for 100 years. This is on the British Columbia side of the boundary. At Hudson's Hope there are to be found some of the best anthracite coal fields in Canada, and the Imperial Oil Company has bored a number of wells and is installing machinery to drill more. I am referring, of course, to the British Columbia side. On the Alberta side there are railway facilities. There is the Edmonton and Dunvegan line which was built by Mr. McArthur and later on taken over by the Alberta government. That line runs about 130 miles north from Edmonton then West to McLellan, a branch of it runs north again from McLellan, crosses the Peace river at Peace river crossing, and extends about 25 miles north of the river. The other branch runs east to Spirit river and there is still another branch running south from Spirit river to Grande Prairie. These lines provide the Alberta side of the Peace river country with a fair railway proposition; it gives ample railway transportation.

It is suggested that a line be run from Brule lake to Grande Prairie, and this is the line to which I want to direct the attention of the government. At Brule lake it would strike the Canadian National line at an elevation of 3,265 feet above the sea level. The Peace river country is from 1,300 to 1,400 feet above sea level, therefore it is obvious that the line would have a heavy grade from the Peace river country up to Brule lake. At Brule lake there are coal mines from which is obtained almost all the coal used by the Canadian National railways west of Edmonton and north of Kamloops. It has been stated that this coal is of first-class quality. That is not correct; only about 20 per cent of it is of first class quality; the rest of it, I should say, is third class quality, although the Canadian National Railways are using it. I might say that before the Canadian National railways were taken over by the government a contract was entered into by the owners of these mines which were directly connected with the railways to supply them with coal for a number of years. That contract, I understand, has not yet expired.

The CHAIRMAN: I must point out to the hon. member that he is very much limited in his discussion of this particular item.

Mr. McBRIDE: Mr. Chairman, I took this matter up with you personally and you practically consented to give me a free hand.

The CHAIRMAN: I could not consent to give the hon. member a free hand. He must keep within the scope of the item.

Mr. McBRIDE: I am dealing with the question before the committee in regard to the extension of the railway from Brule lake to Grande Prairie, and why it is suggested that this line should be built. There were three men around this building lobbying for over three months in connection with this line.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no objection to the vote carrying.

Mr. McBRIDE: But I object to the vote being carried so far as this particular line is concerned. This line is supposed to tap some coal fields about half way between Brule lake and Grande Prairie, and it is suggested that these are the finest coal fields in Canada. Well, I question that for I have it on the authority of men who know these fields that this statement is not correct. It has been stated, and evidence was given to the effect before the committee on Mines and Minerals that these coal fields would look to Vancouver for their market, and the statement was also made that they would give from 3,000 to 4,000 tons a day to the railways to carry. I want to say that they have no market in Vancouver; and will not be able to sell their coal there.

Mr. CARROLL: Why?

Mr. McBRIDE: I will tell you why. I have said that Brule is 3,265 feet above the sea level. In his evidence before the committee Mr. Errington said:

> The market is undoubtedly on the Pacific coast.

Then he was asked:

> I suppose this coal is better than most coal in the West?

He does not answer that question. Then he was asked where he could get a market for it, and he said, the Pacific coast, Vancouver. He was asked how much he expected to get for the coal, and he said $4 or $5 at the mines. He said he would deliver it at Vancouver at $7 per ton. He says in another place in his evidence that the grade going in there is something the same as the Crowsnest pass. Now if Crowsnest pass has a good grade is the railway prepared to haul the coal at $2 from there to Vancouver? It costs $12 a ton to haul potatoes from Prince George to Vancouver, which is practically the same distance. I will cut that in two and take it at $6 a ton; add $5 to that and the cost in Vancouver would be $11. The Comox coal on Vancouver island is pronounced by the British navy to be the best coal not only in Canada but in the world. According to engineers' report there is enough coal there to last over a hundred years and it can be bought to-day for $8 per ton. Yet these men say they will take that coal from Brule lake to Vancouver and sell it at $7 a ton, whereas at the very least, according to their own figures, it would cost $10 to get it there. How can it compete under those conditions? Not only that, but you can buy oil in Vancouver at $1.25 a barrel, and four barrels of oil are equal to a ton of coal. Three men will do the work of twelve on a steamer when oil is burned instead of coal. Then where is the market for coal out in Vancouver? There is absolutely no market for it, yet these people come down here and want the government to invest $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 in the building of a line to take coal to Vancouver.

Mr. CARROLL: Does my hon. friend not think that the propaganda carried on in connection with that road was more on behalf of the wheat interests than of the coal business?

Mr. McBRIDE: Well, I am coming to that. I will admit that if that line was built to Grand Prairie many million bushels of wheat would come out that way. The Grand Prairie district is one of the best mixed farming districts in Canada, but why should this government build a line in there to take the freight away from a railraod that has been built in good faith at the request of the people? What right has this government to tap a country that has been already tapped, when there is another section of this country equally as good without any railway facilities? Some years ago a line was supposed to be built from Vancouver into the Peace river country, known as the Pacific Great Eastern, but that line has practically been abandoned. I would just like the committee to note a few of the grades on that line in order to show that it would not be possible for it to carry grain or anything else out of the Peace river country at a fair rate to the farmer. It starts at North Vancouver and it runs out 12½ miles to White Cliff. Then, because it gets into a difficult country, it skips 29 miles and starts in at Squamish. At Squamish it is on the sea level, but at Alta lake a little distance above Squamish, it rises to a height of 2,100 feet; then it drops down again to 700 feet. Then at Birkenhead it rises to 1,600 feet, and at Lillooet it drops again to 750 feet. Then at Kelly's lake it rises to 3,500 feet and it drops again at Clinton to 3,200. Then it rises again at Horse lake to 3,860 feet and at Quesnel it drops to 1,600 feet. How in the name of common sense could that road ever take grain out of the Peace river country to compete with a line which has a good grade? I am referring now to the Grand Trunk Pacific grade which is the best that can be found on the continent of America. About two years ago the provincial government got an expert engineer, Mr. Sullivan, to examine that railway and report upon it. That was done after they spent $42,000,000 on the Pacific Great Eastern Railway. I will read just a few lines of the engineer's report. Speaking of that portion of the road from Quesnel to Prince George which runs 82 miles south of Prince George, he says:

> I have never before seen such a large area of country so adverse to railway construction and if built the maintenance of this section would be almost prohibitive.

He says further:

> If such conditions had been encountered at the Panama canal I do not think the undertaking would ever have been completed. I therefore recommend that the road between Quesnel and Prince George be abandoned at once and that the tracks be taken up and sold.

I give this simply to show that that line will never be able to take grain out of the Peace river country; it is absolutely beyond reason. If the farmers would charge a sufficient freight rate to justify operation, the people would be prohibited from raising grain in the Peace river country. What I suggest is that there is a line started at Prince George: The highest altitude from Prince George into the Peace river country is less than 2,400 feet. When you leave Prince George if you take the Parsnip river you would be going through good agricultural land practically all the way. If you go through the Pine pass, which is a shorter route, there would be a portion of land that would not be very good for agricultural purposes, but that area extends only about half the way. Now, you may ask: Why start the line at Prince George? Prince George is a divisional point on the Grand Trunk Pacific. It has a population of over 2,000. It is built where the Fraser and the Nechako rivers meet. It is a good townsite; it has a never-failing supply of water, and there are good routes from there into the Peace river country.

As I have already said, the highest point between Prince George and the Peace river country is 2,400 feet, which would make a very small resisting grade from the Peace river country to Prince George. There you could connect with the Grand Trunk Pacific, and it would only be a little over 500 miles from Prince George. In other words, you would bring the Peace river country within about 600 miles of the seaport at Prince Rupert. That would put the Peace river country in a position to raise wheat, and the freight rate would be less than any other section of the prairie. There is nothing to equal it. There are great possibilities in that country—and this government owns three and a half million acres of the land in the Peace river district. Within a few years of this line being built there are possibilities of anywhere from ten to fifteen to twenty million bushels of wheat being raised every year. It is a splendid country, and if the government wants to connect up with the Edmonton-Dunvegan line, that line is graded through to the boundary at Pouce Coupe. There are some fifty-two miles of the line from Pouce Coupe to Spirit river. The grade is in but the rails are not laid. If this line was built in there it would supply freight enough to the western section of the Grand Trunk Pacific to put the road on a paying basis. If it is not built in there, I do not see where the road is going to get freight to put it on a paying basis. I do not ask the government to build this line if it is not a good business proposition, but I ask them to investigate and see what the possibilities of that country are. I may say that the Canadian Pacific railway has four parties in that country at the present time investigating and if the government cannot see their way to build that line after investigating I would ask them to leave the course free to the Canadian Pacific. Do not hold the country back. If the government will not build a line let the Canadian Pacific build out of Prince George and have running rights over the government railway on a rental basis. From the information I have the Canadian Pacific, if the government are not prepared to build, are quite prepared to go ahead and build.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): When the hon. member got up to address the committee I understood that he was in favour of this vote but after hearing his address I am rather confused about it, and I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. GRAHAM: He is only joking, Mr. Chairman.

M. KENNEDY (Edmonton): Is it the intention to survey from the east or the west side of the Rockies north to the Peace river or both?

Mr. GRAHAM: That will have to be determined by the Canadian National Railway management. They are going to take charge of this work and I hope they will have the opportunity of making quite an investigation in addition to making the survey.

Item agreed to.

Mail subsidies and steamship subventions—Halifax, Louisburg and Bay St. Lawrence, via way ports, steam service between, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I just want to make a general observation on these steamship subventions. We have an awful lot of them, and the map is fairly criss-crossed with them if you try and follow them all along the coast. I am going to ask my hon. friend what is the necessity of having these new services? We have a tremendous lot now.

Mr. ROBB: There are four new ones, Items 523 and 524 for instance, but they are all serving new districts. The service provided by Item 524 is across the St. Lawrence to serve some people who are very far away from a railway. There is another item for $2,000, in settlement of a debt that was contracted last fall when we provided for getting fish out for the fishermen at a time when they could not get it out in any other way. I admit they are pretty hard to follow.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Everybody knows perfectly well that this is a time to get rid of subventions instead of multiplying them. I am going to ask my hon. friend, will he take the trouble between now and next session to look at the map which he will find in his own department just criss-crossed with these services, and get busy and bring some order out of this chaos.

Mr. ROBB: Last year soon after the estimates were put through I instructed Mr. Tupper to make a very careful survey of the situation with a view to trying to eliminate some of these lines. He came back and I am bound to say that we did not succeed very well, but I could see that there was some reason for running these services into places where the people are without railways and would not have other means of communication.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has subsidized services going over practically the same routes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the general nature of these services? Is it purely a mail service or traffic and mail?

Mr. ROBB: Both. They nearly all carry mail.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is there any specific number of trips to be provided in connection with this service?

Mr. ROBB: That is provided in them all. This amount is required to provide for a service between Halifax and ports on the south shore of Cape Breton and thence to the north shore. The service is performed by the Mayflower Shipping Company of Halifax, with the steamer May Queen, which is 114 feet long, freight capacity 150 tons, and a speed of 9 knots. It performs a freight service but has no passenger accommodation. This service will give communication between Halifax and the east coast and enable fishermen to market their fish in Halifax. At the present time the people on the north coast can do nothing with their fish but send it to Sydney, which, of course, is not a fish market.

Item agreed to.

Indians—Nova Scotia—miscellaneous and unforeseen, further amount required, $25,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The insertion of this item is a mistake. It is not necessary to vote this $25,000. It got in through an error.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that resolution 535 be withdrawn?

Resolution withdrawn.

Government of the Northwest Territories—purchase and maintenance of new ship, further amount required, $40,000.

To establish and operate wireless station at Mayo, $19,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Why is this new ship required, and what is the character of the vessel?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The committee will remember that when the estimates for the northwest territory were going through I explained we were buying a ship from the British Admiralty, and that a further amount of $40,000 would be asked to complete the payment. The sum of $40,000 was voted in the original estimates; this is to complete the payment for the ship.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the ship required for?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): To go to the Arctic.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): For what purpose?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): To visit the ports in the Arctic.

Item agreed to.

Dominion Lands and Parks—
Compassionate allowance to T. W. Dwight,	$1,000
To provide for the payment to Mrs. F. T. E. Fortier of a compassionate allowance equal to the retiring allowance her husband would have been entitled to under the Public Service Retirement Act, chapter 49, 11-12 George V..	1,440
Canadian National Parks—
Further amounted required..	25,000

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is this further amount of $25,000 for the Canadian National Parks required for?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We require this amount for the slaughtering of the buffalo in Wainwright park. The sum of $13,000 was voted for repairs to buildings but we need to hire men and must pay them their wages. As a matter of fact we cannot take the money from the sale of the meat, therefore we have to have a further amount for the purpose of carrying on this work of slaughtering the buffalo.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do I understand that this $25,000 is to hire men to slaughter buffalo?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is not merely for that, it is to cover the whole work in connection with it. We expect to slaughter a great number this year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I can inform the minister that if he needs men we can get a large number of competent persons in this district, anxious to get a little loose cash, who are quite willing to slaughter buffalo at a much lower rate than is involved in this amount of $25,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is not only to pay for the labour, there is the shipping and care of the meat. We have to put this meat into cold storage, and ship it to Edmonton or points eastward wherever we will be able to sell it. There are a great many expenses connected with it but we hope to make some money out of this work. We may not spend $25,000. I wish to assure my hon. friends we will not spend any more than is necessary but it is estimated we will require that amount in this work.

Item agreed to.

Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment—amount required to provide salaries, transportation, travelling and general administrative expenses of Federal Appeal Board and District Boards of Review, etc., including provision for transportation and travelling expenses of applicants to and from seat of Appeal Board or District Boards of Review, remuneration to official soldiers' advisors and partial refund of expenses incurred in presentation of individual cases to the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment and Board of Pension Commission, $357,996.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Are we, in passing this vote, taking it for granted that in another place they are going to allow our bill to go through?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is through, I understand.

Mr. BELAND: The bill has just been reported to the House. I have had the opportunity of looking over it for a moment and the provisions for the creation of District Appeal Boards have not been agreed to in the Senate. I will be in a position to give all details at the morning sitting later.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Will this vote be required?

Mr. BELAND: An estimate must be prepared and the money voted in advance.

Mr. SHAW: I do not want to delay the committee except for a moment. I was asked to present a petition to the House dealing with the conduct of a certain official in connection with the legislation, I believe, before the Senate. I want to direct the attention of the minister to the fact that apparently his officials have taken a contrary attitude to that legislation in the Upper Chamber. That must create a rather interesting situation between the minister who is responsible for the legislation and the deputy minister. I suggest that it will probably have the effect of lessening the confidence of ex-service men in the officers of the department. I simply want to mention that to the minister for his consideration.

Mr. CLARK: This item should be considered at the same time as the legislation out of which it arises. I do not see how the minister can estimate what amount will be required for this purpose until he knows the purpose for which the money will be required.

Mr. BELAND: My hon. friend knows it is usual to prepare an estimate on the legislation which goes through the House. We could not, for instance, wait to make an estimate until the bill was reported to the Senate and any amendments that were acceptable had been concurred in by the House. In some quarters the opinion is held that the estimates have been laid on the table rather late. I do not think we could have waited much longer.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is claimed in four quarters.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: All quarters.

Mr. BELAND: I may say that in 1920 my hon. friends laid Supplementary Estimates on the table on the eve of prorogation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: They were not of such a character as these.

Mr. BELAND: They were brought down on the eve of prorogation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We do not object to this item.

Mr. FIELDING: I think the Supplementary Supplementaries in 1927 amounted to $62,000,000.

Mr. BELAND: The Supplementary Estimates to which I refer were brought down on the eve of prorogation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If the hon. member wishes to have a debate on this subject now we can oblige him.

Mr. CLARK: It is only a matter of a few hours. We ought to know what we are going to require the money for. Surely the minister can tell us what amount of money will be needed. I cannot see the object of voting money until you know what you are voting it for.

Mr. BELAND: We know what it is for. My hon. friend, of course, will realize that the Senate having done away with these boards certain central machinery will have to be provided for, and I understand the amount will be larger than the provisions already in the bill. If the whole amount is not needed it will not be spent.

Mr. CLARK: The Senate has made certain amendments to the bill and surely the minister has those amendments before him. I think the minister should tell the House whether the government proposes to accept the amendments.

Mr. BELAND: I cannot say until I have considered them.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of a technical investigation under the supervision of the Department of Insurance, into the merits of the various forms of roof coverings from the standpoint of fire prevention, $15,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Could we have some explanation as to this item?

Mr. FIELDING: It is to provide for an investigation to be held into the various roof coverings which are being offered to the country, as having an important bearing on the question of fire protection.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Lord Selkirk Association towards the erection of a Monument to Peguis, the Saulteaux Indian Chief, $1,200.

The CHAIRMAN: Carried.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is one of the items that continually appear in the estimates for monuments and things of that character. I wish to enter my protest against the general practice of voting sums for these monuments. I rose to my feet as the Chairman was reading that item, and was speaking when he said the item was carried. I claim the item was not carried.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member was in his seat when the item was declared carried The item was declared carried and there were not five members who rose to vote.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I object to rushing business through.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is jamming the business through.

The CHAIRMAN: Does any hon. member desire to speak to the item?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Item agreed to.

British Empire Exhibition—further amount required, $150,000.

Mr. SPENCER: Can we have an explanation of that?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The committee will remember that when the $500,000 item was going through I notified the committee that I had been informed that that was not sufficient to carry the work of the exhibition forward far enough, and a further vote would be required. It is estimated that the exhibition will cost Canada all told about $900,000. I told the committee that we were not spending as much money as Australia, or some of the other overseas dominions. We were informed that Australia was spending $1,200,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is Duncan Marshall to be in charge?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. he is not employed in the department over which I have charge. Mr. Tolmie is the man in charge.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Purchasing Commission—salaries and contingency including salary of L. H. Beer as Salvage Officer at $5,000 per annum, $5,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is that a new office?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, an officer appointed for the purpose of salvaging property of the government. An officer of this character could save the government many thousands of dollars every year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Where does the Civil Service Commission come in?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This particular person has had a wide experience in matters of this kind, and has himself prepared a plan which he submitted to the government for consideration, and on account of his experience in the work the government wish to retain him. That is why parliament is asked to vote this amount.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Putting the name in the Estimates is just a way of getting around the act—the only way it could be done. If he has all these qualifications the presumption is the commission would appoint him; but I presume he has certain political qualifications that might not be taken into account by the commission.

Item agreed to.

Loans to provinces to encourage the erection of dwelling houses, on the terms and conditions set forth in the Order in Council of the 3rd of December, 1918, and amendments thereto from time to time made—to be applied only to cases in which the respective provincial governments have already made commitments with the municipalities; the appropriation to cease entirely at the end of the present fical year, $4,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY: Could the minister tell the committee how the $4,000,000 is distributed and if any part of it is available for British Columbia.

Mr. FIELDING: It is the aim of the government to terminate this expenditure, and we thought we were able to do so, but it has been represented that in several of the provinces they have come under obligations to the municipality, and they have asked us to make provision to cover these matters. I think the province of British Columbia is not concerned in the matter. It is Quebec chiefly, and Nova Scotia has asked for a moderate sum. The bulk of the money is to fulfil obligations which the government of Quebec has entered into with its municipalities. I do not think British Columbia has asked anything.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I assume that both of these provinces had not drawn their full quota.

Mr. FIELDING: No, Quebec had not drawn its full quota and I think Nova Scotia is in the same position. There has been no extension of the original quota.

Mr. HUMPHREY: If any obligations have been entered into by the other provinces, will any of this money be available?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, if the quota is not used.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Scottish Pioneer Association to assist in the "Hector" celebration, $15,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to have an explanation of this item.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): A hundred and fifty years ago there came from the western islands to this country of ours certain Scottish settlers who laid the foundation of the future development of Canada through their successors. They landed in the province of Nova Scotia, and an association of Scottish Pioneers has been formed which has at its head as hon. president the Right Hon. Bonar Law, the former Premier of Great Britain, and as vice-presidents distinguished men in all parts of Canada. This association was formed to commemorate the landing of these Scottish pioneers. The celebration will take place, beginning the 15th July next. The monument has been obtained by subscription entirely apart from this grant. The monument is to be unveiled by His Excellency Lord Byng, and the events which usually follow an occasion of that kind will take place in the town and county during that week. Men of the Scottish race in all parts of Canada, including prominent men in British Columbia and in the western provinces, are interested in this event. I hope the committee, in appreciation of those men who came out in days of privation and difficulty and whose successors have gone to all parts of Canada, will gladly give this grant which will be expended by an organization made up of men whose character and reputation are undoubted in the celebration which everyone ought to attend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Ross) was interested in this matter. I think he wanted to find out why this grant was recommended, in view of the fact that refusals were made of requests for grants for exactly similar purposes. He told me that he did not expect to be here himself. He said he had asked my hon. friend for a grant for a celebration of a very historic event at Kingston, and that my hon. friend had told him that he would have to reject it, having rejected a similar request for Nova Scotia, having reference to this same vote. Apparently the Nova Scotia request which was refused is now being granted, and the Kingston request remains refused. He also said that a large gathering was to be held at Belleville of the United Empire Loyalists, and a grant was refused on the same grounds. Perhaps my hon. friend can tell me what difference there was to change his mind other than the fact that we have now as a member of the cabinet the acting Minister of National Defence—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The matter is not a local one at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —who represents the country and whose by-election is not yet fixed.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not remember any applications made for a grant either at Kingston or Belleville, but I would have to know something more about these matters before I could speak definitely. I am quite sure it was nothing of a similar character because I know the applications would be dealt with on the same basis. There is a grant further down the list to aid in the construction of a monument at Orillia. While I do not say that no applications were made either by Kingston or Belleville, I should like to look into these matters before speaking definitely.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Orillia case is not a parallel one at all.

Mr. FIELDING: They are both to celebrate great events.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The grant at Orillia is to aid in the construction of the Champlain monument.

Mr. FIELDING: It is to celebrate a great event.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This "Hector" celebration is a different kind of a celebration, and our money is going to the celebration itself. The Champlain monument is not paralled to this case at all. I do not know what the Kingston case is.

Mr. FIELDING: Does my hon. friend object to the celebration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I certainly do not.

Mr. FIELDING: Then we agree. Let us carry the item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does it follow that because one approves a celebration, he must pay for it out of the Dominion treasury?

Mr. FIELDING: If he approve the celebration, does he not the grant for the celebration?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister was not drawing a parallel case. If there was a case at Kingston of the same character as this, it should have been dealt with on the same basis. A distinction should not have been made.

Mr. FIELDING: Is my right hon. friend prepared to state the nature of the Kingston case?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know.

Mr. FIELDING: If he does not know, he had better not complain in connection with it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): It is not fair to speak of this celebration at Pictou as being purely local. The British government are sending four warships of the North Atlantic squadron. The United States government are sending two of their war vessels. The Governor of Massachusetts is to be in attendance, and His Excellency, the Governor General, is to be there. There will be no celebration at Kingston, in regard to anything relating to Scotch people coming to this country, that would be at all comparable with this one. One of the things the people of Nova Scotia take pride in is that Sir John A. Macdonald came to Ontario via Nova Scotia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: A number of Scotchmen came into the Red River valley about a hundred years ago. Would the Minister of Finance consider an appropriation to cover a picnic in Winnipeg?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The acting Minister of National Defence a moment ago made a little appeal to us on behalf of those pioneers who had come to this country in times of stress and hardship. We in western Canada went into that country in times of stress, and we have been suffering a considerable amount of hardship. In western Canada we require railways; we are not getting them on the plea that the expense is too great; but we are still voting sums of money of this size for little picnics on the Nova Scotia coast. I, like all Irishmen, love Scotchmen, but I do not love Scotchmen dearly enough to vote them money like this at a time like this. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) that this item be reduced by $14,000.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. SHAW: I think this is establishing a very bad precedent. I have sufficient confidence in Scotchmen generally to believe that in those 150 years the descendants of the particular gentlemen who came over have long since accumulated much more than $15,000 and can readily put up the money.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A few years ago we celebrated at Quebec the tercentenary of the landing of Champlain. I think it was a source of pride to all citizens of Canada that in that manner there was celebrated the beginning of the French settlement in Canada. This particular celebration is to commemorate the landing of the Scotch for a first time in this country. It was the beginning of the settlement of the Scotch race throughout the Dominion of Canada. It is not a local celebration. As every hon. member knows, there are different strains that go to make up the composition of our people. There are the French, the English, the Scotch and the Irish. I hope in some appropriate way the country will take cognizance of the beginning in this country of settlement from Ireland and from England as well as the beginning of settlement from Scotland. I think it is advisable that these landmarks in our history should be celebrated. The children of the country grow up to know a little more about their country's history. This is a small amount that we are voting at the present time to commemorate the first migration from Scotland to this country, when one thinks of the part the Scotch have played in the settlement of Canada. This is something, I think, this parliament is entitled to pay some attention to.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): What about the Japs?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I do not think my hon. friend regards the Japanese as being a part of the Canadian population in the same way.

Mr. SPENCER: We have heard a great deal of this band of Scotsmen that came 150 years ago, but we have not heard much tonight about that other band that came a few weeks ago and went to western Canada. I think that some money might have been spent in connection with them.

Amendment negatived.

Item agreed to.

Grant towards the expenses of the Canadian Athletic Team at the International Olympic Games in 1924. $15,000.

Mr. MacLAREN: Where are the Olympic games to be held and what arrangement has been made in regard to the selection of the Canadian team?

Mr. MARTELL: As we are celebrating the advent to Canada of one of the greatest races in the world I would suggest that we devote the money under this item towards that celebration. If we have any money to spend I think it should be spent on such an object as this.

Mr. CHURCH: I wanted to ask the Acting Minister of National Defence what was being done to fix up the forts in the Niagara district, but the item has apparently been rushed through. So far as this particular vote is concerned I think that the government should see to it that the money is given to the actual contestants representing Canada in the Olympic games. The province of Ontario has contributed $5,000 to the fund on the understanding that the money is to go to the competitors themselves and not to enable persons in an executive capacity to have a free trip, and I think that the government should insist on the same thing in connection with this vote.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is desirable that we should send a team from Canada representative of our best athletes, and the committee would no doubt like to know how the selection is to be made.

Mr. FIELDING: We shall have to be assured before the money is paid that proper means will be taken to see that the athletes of all provinces are given a fair show. I have forgotten the names of the gentlemen of the delegation that waited upon me, but I think they were introduced by the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church). We felt that the object was a good one, because undoubtedly we are all proud of our athletes, and their participation in these games will be a splendid advertisement for Canada. We shall take pains to see that the various provinces are well represented, and I have not the slightest doubt that before the money is paid over we shall have satisfactory assurances on that score.

Mr. MacLAREN: I am not objecting to this vote for a single moment, because I am sure the object is an excellent one. Indeed, representations were made to me to try to ensure that the principal athletic organizations of the country should be given a voice in the matter. I do ask the minister to see that these various organizations shall be heard and that the matter shall not rest with any one association.

Mr. FIELDING: That is a reasonable request and we will endeavour to meet it.

Item agreed to.

Public Archives—arrears of cost of living bonus, $110.96.

Mr. FIELDING: I move that this item be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Further amount required for passport office, $2,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the government any knowledge yet of the reported establishment of a Canadian publicity bureau in London under a Mr. Cranfield? I inquired in regard to this subject some weeks ago.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): One-third of the cost of this publicity work is borne by the government, one-third by the Canadian Pacific Railway and one-third by the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MEIGHEN: How is it Mr. Cranfield was selected?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): He was simply selected by the railways and the government for the purpose of carrying on publicity work in connection with immigration. The work is under the control and supervision of Mr. Obed Smith.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the annual expenditure?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It is not very considerable. I do not remember whether it is $15,000 or $25,000. I have the information in the office, but not here.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What qualifications has Mr. Cranfield? That is the point I am raising.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I understood he had been employed for some years by the government in publicity work.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I never heard of him.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is my information.

Mr. GOULD: Is it the purpose of the department or of the government to continue the issuing of passports between Canada and, say, Great Britain or does this pertain to foreign countries?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When the subject of passports was discussed in the House before, a question was asked as to the necessity for issuing passports to persons going to the British Isles. The Department of External Affairs, after the discussion which took place in the House, drew the attention of the British government to the circumstances and to the opinion expressed by some of the members that the time had come for the discontinuance of the issuing of passports to persons going to Great Britain from this country. A reply has not yet been received from the British government. The passport regulations are imposed by the British government; we have nothing to do with them.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the removal of the span of the bridge over False Creek, B.C., to permit of the movements of vessels up to the end of 1923, $6,065.92.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is this bridge span moved again? We have had this item before.

The CHAIRMAN: $4,000 is a revote.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is not mentioned here.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do we vote a large sum like this every time the bridge span is moved?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is there nobody in the government who can answer the hon. gentleman's question? Surely there is someone with the information at his disposal. I remember this item last year; it is here again this year. I support the hon. gentleman in his request for information.

Mr. MURDOCK: I understand this is a stationary bridge which occasionally has to be lifted and moved to let certain traffic through. The Canadian Pacific Railway is paid a certain amount every time that is done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Do we originate the traffic?

Mr. MURDOCK: As to that I do not know.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understood that something of the first expense was in connection with certain government boats that were built up False creek, but I presume we are not continuing to build boats there, thus requiring the taking down of the bridge.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to mention a railway matter here, because we are getting quite close to the end and an appropriate time may not come again. I have a report to the effect that the entire traffic staff of the Canadian National is being removed to Halifax from Truro. Can the minister give us any information as to whether that is correct?

Mr. GRAHAM: I was asked that question to-day by some hon. member. I have not heard a word of it.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: While on the point, may I direct the minister's attention to a question on the order paper as to coal purchased by the Canadian National Railway? It has been on for some time, and if the next sitting of the House is the last for this session I have to draw the minister's attention to it to-night to be sure that we get the answer at the next sitting.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think I have the answer upstairs.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As long as I get it at the next sitting, that will be quite satisfactory

Mr. GRAHAM: I think the only trouble is as to the distribution. I am not sure we have that, but I think we have the other.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will agree to get the other information asked for as well. The Minister of Public Works is absent and his deputy is not available at the moment. I will have the information at the next sitting.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to pay the creditors of the late Prince Rupert Dry Dock and Engineering Co., Ltd., for services rendered, material supplied or moneys advanced in connection with the construction of the Scottish and Britisher in Prince Rupert, B.C., $68,000.

Mr. TOLMIE: May we have some explanation of this vote?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The same appplies as to the other one. I will have it to-morrow.

Mr. TOLMIE: I would point out that in connection with the construction of two fishery cruisers at Victoria the builders got into difficulties. The merchants supplying goods to the contractors visited the marine office and the marine agent there promised that the government would guarantee payment of their bill. I understand that they have not been able to get any satisfaction in that respect. I simply draw the minister's attention to the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will make a note of it.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company towards construction of bridge over the Second Narrows of Burrard Inlet, B.C., being revote of portion of subsidy authorized by statute, chap. 46, sec. 3, 1913, $100,000.

Mr. SPENCER: May we have some information as to this item?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The municipality—I am speaking from memory—are constructing a bridge over the Burrard inlet. I have forgotten what the amount is—

Mr. CLARK: $1,000,000.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is a contribution to the construction of that bridge over navigable waters.

Mr. CLARK: I would refer the committee to the statutes of 1913, under which subsidy in the amount of $350,000 was granted for this purpose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the minister will explain why it is in the estimates if it is a subsidy granted by statute.

Mr. FIELDING: Speaking from memory, I think the subsidy expired; it was granted some years ago but they were not able to use it. That is my recollection, though I am not quite certain of it.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the expenses of a Royal Commission to inquire into proposed prohibition or restriction of the export of pulpwood, $20,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What does the government hope to accomplish by the appointment of this royal commission?

Mr. FIELDING: The question whether or not it is expedient to prohibit the export of pulpwood is quite a controversial one. I know some people think it is a very one-sided question, but we have abundant evidence that there are two sides to it. Our purpose is to afford all parties interested an opportunity to state their views.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The government has already stated that there will be no prohibition of the pulpwood grown on farms, and if you except the pulpwood grown on farms and the pulpwood grown on Crown lands the rest of the pulpwood is hardly worth the commission. We have the bill now, and we have the commission, and we have to pay for the commission, and I may just venture the prediction that we will end up with the same policy with which we began.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is the provinces that prohibit on Crown lands, is it not?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This would appear to me to be a matter that the government ought to be able to decide without the appointment of a commission. In any event there are enough officials in the employment of the government to obtain any information that any commission could obtain. This certainly should be a question of policy. This seems to me a most absurd vote in view of the stand the government have already taken as pointed out by the leader of the Opposition with regard to the exportation of pulpwood from lands owned by private individuals. I therefore move to reduce the item by $19,999.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is one aspect of this question that I think is important and should be taken into account by the committee. There is probably no single economic problem more important than the conservation of our forests, and the extent to which the forests are being depleted partly through insects, largely through fires and to a certain extent through the export of our pulpwood is a factor that should become more generally known than it is. If pulpwood is to be prohibited from export it will be because of the rapidity of our forest depletion. The commission will be most helpful in helping to educate the public as to the extent to which the forests are being depleted, and if such action became necessary as to prohibit the export of pulpwood, will make it perfectly apparent to our neighbouring nation that the government's action in the matter is not prompted by any thought of retaliation for any purpose, but that the reason is an important economic one. I think that is one factor that the House should take into account in considering how very necessary and advisable it is that a commission should be appointed at this time to help give the country the fullest information with respect to the extent to which our forests are being depleted.

Mr. GOULD: It has occurred to me that if in connection with this commission appointed to look into the depletion of our forests as outlined by the Prime Minister some provision were made for cruising our timber limits to find out just what our timber resources are, a good purpose might be served. A vote of $20,000, of course, would not be sufficient to carry on that work in addition to what this commission is going to do. I think such a cruise would be worth while from an economic point of view, for then we would know just what our timber resources are.

Amendment (Mr. Sutherland) negatived; Yeas, 12; Nays, 44.

Canada Grain Act, administration of—additional amount required, $80,000

Mr. SHAW: What are the particulars of this?

Mr. ROBB: This is to provide for a reclassification and salary increases for the grain men at Fort William and other points. The records show that the Board of Grain Commissioners have recommended these salary increases after discovering that most of the grain houses in Canada are paying higher wages than the board, and the board was in consequence losing many of its good men. This is to provide for the increase recommended by the board.

Mr. SHAW: Are the officers in this branch under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Were these salary increases recommended by the Grain Commission?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, to the Civil Service Commission. The procedure is this: The Grain Commissioners make a recommendation for classification and salary increases which is submitted to the Civil Service Commission, and if approved by them the minister puts through an order in council covering it.

Mr. GOULD: The minister states that private companies can afford to pay larger salaries than the Board of Grain Commissioners. That is undoubtedly due to the exorbitant profits they have taken from the people in the West through their practices in the past. If their profits were cut down to a legal point it is possible they would not become such great competitors with the Board of Grain Commissioners for help as the minister indicates, and consequently there would not be the necessity for increasing the salaries of these employees.

Mr. ROBB: I would not admit that.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the government any method or any habit of inquiring into a request for increased expenditure, or is it the invariable rule to grant whatever is asked?

Mr. ROBB: Oh, no. Every request is gone into very carefully and sometimes it is rejected.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am glad to hear that. The minister might give me an instance of anything that has been rejected.

Mr. ROBB: I will tell my hon. friend right now, and I think it will come before the House at its next session if there are any amendments to the Canada Grain Act. We find that it is not easy to get men on the Grain Commission staff. For instance, one man who came to us recently claims that the Saskatchewan Co-operative Elevator Company were offering more money than was paid him by the Board of Grain Commissioners.

[Mr. Robb.]

Mr. GOULD: I have in mind a return that was brought down by the Department of Trade and Commerce for one of our members here a short time ago, in which I noticed that the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur weighed out 19,000,000 bushels more in 1922 than they had taken in. I know part of this goes into the consolidated revenue fund but I wish to point out to the minister that the profits rightly belong to the people of the West who grew those nineteen million and odd bushels of wheat. In view of the profits made by these private companies it is no wonder they can afford to pay such salaries, and that the Grain Commissioners find it necessary to increase the stipends of their officers.

Mr. ROBB: I am not disputing the statement because there is really no evidence to prove it but I will give my hon. friend the other side of the shield. The eastern millers and grain buyers contend they have to pay for a shortage, because there is a shortage in the shipments that come across the lakes.

Mr. SHAW: Has the judgment of the Supreme Court as to the validity of the Grain Act been received yet?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the salaries and expenses of the Grain Inquiry Commission, re lake grain rates, $13,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What salaries are paid to the commission, is there any special amount?

Mr. ROBB: I have not the order in council with me. My recollection is that it is $20 or $25 a day, I am not sure.

Mr. HOEY: This will not meet the entire cost of the commission.

Mr. ROBB: I think it is to pay the balance. There was a vote last session.

Mr. HOEY: You could not give us the entire cost?

Mr. ROBB: The amount voted in 1922-23 was $40,000 and the expenditure was $28,695 leaving an unexpended balance of $11,304. It has been estimated that about $13,000 will be required for the expenses of 1923-24. My hon. friends will understand that the vote for last year lapsed on the 31st March.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What steps are the government taking to make this commission of any value? Perhaps the minister would give a list of Liberal lawyers that have been retained?

Mr. ROBB: That is under another item.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought this was the commission.

Mr. ROBB: The other one is passed I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not heard much about the work of the commission. It has been pretty quiet so far.

Mr. ROBB: The commission only opened at Edmonton this week, on Monday, I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Who has the minister employed and what are his instructions? Is counsel instructed to go into all the practices of the grain exchange and the grain dealers?

Mr. ROBB: That is covered by an order in council. I have not a copy with me. I will get a copy and send it to my hon. friend.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The order in council appoints the commission and it directs an inquiry into this and that. What I want to know is what are the instructions to counsel. It is counsel that really conducts matters the commission act as judges. What are the instructions to counsel and who are the counsel?

Mr. ROBB: The order in council is a mandate to the commission and the commissioners give the instructions. The order in council is a mandate to the commission to go on and make this inquiry. If my right hon. friend will examine the order in council he will discover that it is wide open. No person is to be protected; we desire the fullest and freest inquiry with an idea of bringing before parliament such amendments to the Canada Grain Act that will cure alleged abuses if such abuses are discovered by the commission.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Can the minister tell me who the lawyer was? Did the government exercise as good political care in the appointment of the lawyers as they did in the appointment of the commission? Who is the head counsel if the minister cannot state the entire list?

Mr. ROBB: We asked Mr. Justice Turgeon to visit Winnipeg and pick out whom he thought the best man available. Mr. Justice Turgeon recommended Mr. C. P. Wilson. Perhaps my hon. friend will know him.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The initials are those of Mr. Wilson.

Mr. ROBB: The government decided that $100 a day was ample recompense for a lawyer. We thought that was a reasonable fee but Mr. Wilson asked for $150 a day.

An hon. MEMBER: Shame.

Mr. ROBB: As Mr. Justice Turgeon thought Mr. Wilson was the best man available we said "You can give him $150 a day". Then he telegraphed declining to accept that amount unless we could guarantee him the price paid to a certain lawyer in Toronto, unnamed, who had conducted similar investigations, and we said "No, you will have to look elsewhere."

Mr. MEIGHEN: What similar investigation?

Mr. ROBB: I could not tell my hon. friend, I am reciting what the telegram contained. Then we offered it to Mr. D'Arcy Scott, who had been for ten years a railway commissioner in Canada and had a wide experience in the grain trade. Mr. D'Arcy Scott was appointed with Mr. Fisher, of Winnipeg, as junior counsel.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister made a bad slip there. He first said it was the commission that was looking after counsel. Afterwards, in a moment of weakness, he said "We offered it to Mr. D'Arcy Scott." I was pretty confident that is who really did offer the appointment. And Mr. Fisher is the junior?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No political mistake in the case of either of them.

Mr. ROBB: I am bound to say I do not know the politics of Mr. Fisher. I am told that Mr. D'Arcy Scott was willing to be a Progressive candidate at the last election.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That might be a great guarantee of his political character anyway. The Minister of Agriculture would know. I think I can give a reasonable estimate now of the results of the commission. What is to be paid Mr. D'Arcy Scott?

Mr. ROBB: One hundred dollars a day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And what to Mr. Fisher?

Mr. ROBB: I am not sure whether it is $50 or $75, I think it is $75.

An hon. MEMBER: What was paid to Mr. Kelly?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Kelly's work was just about a thousand times as important and heavy, and if this commission is as successful as the other I shall be more astonished than at any other time since I have been in parliament.

Item agreed to.

Additional amount required to provide for the Canadian Exhibition in France, $60,000.

Mr. CAHILL: I would like to have an explanation of this vote?

Mr. ROBB: The sum of $50,000 was voted in the Main Estimates for 1923-24. A similar amount was provided in the estimates for 1922-23, and of the said amount $6,504, was expended. The additional amount required is for the purpose of installing the exhibition for two or three months in L'Orangerie, in the Place de la Concorde. The French government have expressed their intention of spending in the vicinity of $100,000 to prepare the interior of this building for the Canadian Exhibition.

Item agreed to.

British and Foreign News Service, $21,333.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is this for?

Mr. ROBB: This is to provide a service through Reuters, to send out news of business conditions generally throughout Canada and other matters that will interest readers overseas wherever Reuters have a connection. There will be a contract made with Reuters to put out 10,000 words monthly of Canadian news, designed to promote the interests of Canada. There is to be, in addition to the news which Reuters already cable to Canada from the world at large, and which they undertake to maintain at the present standard, the general dissemination throughout the United kingdom and the British dominions, of mail news calculated to arouse and maintain an interest in Canada and Canadian activities commercially, industrially and agriculturally.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Who engaged these writers?

Mr. ROBB: Reuters is a world news service.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I thought the hon. member said "writers." This is simply another subsidy for this particular news firm.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member may call it what he likes. We call it an advertisement for Canada, and of Canada. The government has nothing to do with putting out news. It is left to the representative of Reuters in Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot see, with all the services that we have at present, that we require to still subsidize another service. We have exhibitions of all kinds, and are simply spending untold money advertising the country. If conditions were as they ought to be in this country I think the regular news services would look after that.

Mr. ROBB: That is the unfortunate part of it. The news going out from Canada is not such as would place Canada in a right light in another country. I hold in my hand—and my hon. friend may have observed the item, because it has been published in the press—a despatch from London, England, dated 25th June, intimating that while the news going to England from Australia, New Zealand and South Africa placed those countries in a favourable light before the British people, the news going out from Canada sent out by news agents did not have that effect. The clipping goes on to state:

> On the other hand, the Canadian news of the past month has dealt with such matters as the murders by Rogers, the North Bay bandit, the trial of Father Delorme for the alleged murder of his half-brother, the doings of bootleggers on the border, forest fires, floods and the difficulties of the emigrant party who recently left the Hebrides to settle in Canada.

We want to put Canada in a better light.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: You will admit these things take place?

Mr. ROBB: I will admit it is not the best kind of advertising.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The things that go on in this House are not the best kind of advertising. At the same time these conditions prevail, and I might say that nearly all the labour papers in the Old Country are carrying news, a great deal of it taken from Hansard, which is not the best advertisement for Canada.

Mr. BUREAU: It is the fault of those who make the speeches.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is the truth nevertheless.

Mr. BUREAU: We deny it.

Mr. FIELDING: Would the hon. member tell the House from whose speeches they quote?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They make their own selection, but they are quoting Hansard in the Daily Herald as well as in the Glasgow Forward and the Labour Leader. You might find extracts from speeches given during the last few sessions in which are stated the actual conditions which prevail in western Canada.

Mr. SHAW: I would like to ask the minister about a grant of $50,000 to the Canadian Press. I have never come across it.

Mr. ROBB: That is not in this department. It is in the main estimates and we will come to it later.

Mr. SHAW: It has not been reached.

Mr. ROBB: Not yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In connection with this item, I do not know what control the minister has. I fancy Reuters will get the news that sells, as well as the other people. It is the news that sells that is dealt with.

Mr. BUREAU: And it favours the Tory party.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Rogers murder at North Bay, and those terrible things that have occurred lately, would indicate that we have not got the new Heaven and earth under this party although we were promised it. The kind of news sent out is frequently the product of the conditions that the times are cursed with. A little while ago I asked the minister if he could think of anything in the way of appeal for money or a voracious demand that this government had refused? Looking back over the years and seeing them one by one yielding to these requests, I thought I would inquire if anything had been refused at any time. The minister did not give me any answer at the time. Perhaps he can think of an item now.

Mr. ROBB: The proposed scheme is not new. It was originally presented to the government three years ago. It was recommended to council for acceptance by Sir Robert Borden on June 11th 1920, but action was deferred until September of that year, when the proposals were reconsidered by Mr. Meighen at a conference with Sir Roderick Jones, chairman and managing director of Reuters. The proposals however have since been left in abeyance, owing, it is stated, wholly to various other exigencies, though the scheme went as far as having the Justice department prepare a draft agreement.

Mr. GOULD: The item for British and foreign news service, $21,333,34, suggests to me that it is a third of the total item.

Mr. ROBB: I should have told my hon. friend that the contract is for $32,000 a year, but as the service will begin on the 1st of August, this amount is for the balance of the fiscal year.

Item agreed to.

Towards the construction of a grain elevator at Halifax, N.S., $200,000.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The information I have is that there was an elevator there that had a little grain in it some years, and for some years none. I fancy it was burned down. Any way it is not there now. I had a return on this the other day. I think it was used substantially just once. I believe it was partly built by the railway and partly by the city. At any rate there were joint contributions. Can the hon. member tell us just what special event the government has in mind that caused it to deem it the part of wisdom to build a large elevator there?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am rather at a loss to understand just what the right hon. leader of the Opposition means by the remarks he has made and the remarks which he has previously made, but which I did not hear. He was criticizing the remarks of another hon. member this evening and suggesting that the hon. member was tired or sleepy, possibly dreaming. This may be the reason of the remarks of my hon. friend in respect of certain expenditures in the county of Halifax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The estimates are no dream.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I might say that the construction of a grain elevator at Halifax was projected in 1912, under the government then led by Sir Robert Borden, and which my hon. friend supported. In that year my right hon. friend will remember that it was decided that the railway terminals of Halifax were to be properly or improperly—improperly, I think—removed from one end of the city to the other, and the erection of this elevator was a portion of that project. The present elevator, which was constructed jointly, I think, by the city, the government of Nova Scotia, and the Dominion government many years ago, cannot now very well be used by reason of the fact that the railway terminal facilities have been moved to another end of the city. Further, the present grain elevator is obsolete and not suitable for the handling of grain.

I cannot say, and I am sure my hon. friend cannot very accurately tell us, what quantity of grain has gone through the Halifax elevator. It is true that port is not a big grain exporting port. The business men of Halifax hardly expect it to be a large grain exporting port, but still a certain quantity may very profitably find an outlet through Halifax. I have been personally advised by two or three of the largest shipping companies using that port during the past winter, that a modern elevator of a million bushels capacity would be of great service to the port and to shipping. At the present time a great deal of shipping might go to Halifax were it not for the reason that they are unable to secure grain as a partial cargo.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Could the hon. gentleman not think of something that might be useful to Halifax and at the same time would cost a little less money?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax) I am told by shipping men and business men of Halifax that this expenditure would be extremely useful to the port of Halifax. I believe that is a fact. The quantity of shipping which enters or leaves any Canadian port is largely determined by whether or not they can obtain a partial loading of grain. That is necessary as regards the port of Halifax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that Halifax has not handled grain for years, except during the war. When there was the grain to handle, the elevator handled it all right. But the business there is absolutely negligible and must be so as long as we have a charge for hauling grain on the railway and railway costs are heavy.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): My hon. friend is entirely wrong in saying that very small grain shipments have gone through the port of Halifax. It is true that grain shipments from Halifax have not been large in any one year, but a substantial quantity of grain has gone through that port. There is a difference in the freight rates as between St. John and Halifax of one cent per 100 pounds. I hope, however, this differential will be abolished as it should be. I am instructed that it costs more to move grain from St. John to St. John West where the grain is placed on board steamers than it would cost to move that grain to Halifax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have that from persons who have actual knowledge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend thinks any business for the elevator is going to come in that way, he is very much mistaken. I think my hon. friend really knows there is no business there. How much is to be the total cost of this elevator which may be very useful in another direction in a very short time?

Mr. ROBB: We have put this amount in the estimates primarily to prepare the plans and to be in a position, if such is deemed proper, to start work on that elevator early enough so that it will be ready for next season's crop. There is no probability of getting it ready for this season's crop. We shall be guided by the advice of experts as to the capacity of an elevator that would pay at that port. My hon. friend has hinted at a reclassification of rates. That will be taken into consideration.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Is the situation this that the government has no idea of the quantity of grain likely to go through that port or the capacity of the elevator required? They are sure of nothing except that there is to be an election.

Mr. FIELDING: Did the large and expensive scheme of terminals constructed by the late government not include an elevator? They spent, I do not know how many millions there. I would almost think this elevator would be as useful as the terminals.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That may be; but the elevator was not gone on with for a very good reason, and that was that the business was not offering for it. Business is not now offering for the elevator. If I am wrong, I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to correct me. According to his own statement, he does not know what size of an elevator he has to put up or the business likely to be obtained. He is to have somebody inquire into the matter.

Mr. CAHILL: Why did the late government spend $22,000,000 there on terminals?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend overlooked one thing, namely that the quantity of grain moved depends upon whether ships will be available to carry it. Contracts to carry grain are not made by the railway people themselves, and the grain broker who wants to ship to Liverpool will ship via Halifax if there are facilities and ships there to carry the grain. During the past few years merchants have not been regularly shipping to Halifax because there has not been space. Indications are that this space will be obtained and work will come for the elevator. My hon. friend ought surely to encourage the idea that we should have facilities in our ports in winter for shipments of grain instead of sending the ships to American ports. If he wants to oppose the idea that we should have within our own boundaries and harbours facilities by which Canadian produce can be carried abroad and imports can be brought to our ports, that is a very curious policy. If he wishes to have the ships in winter going to Boston and other American ports instead of to Canadian ports, that will be the policy of my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend always conveniently forgets everything he likes to forget. There is another winter port, that is neither Portland nor any other American port, and that is St. John. He also forgets that usually grain travels by the cheapest railway route.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Halifax is the nearest port to the British Isles.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose he says it is just as cheap to carry grain by rail as by water.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I have not said that at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is the same thing. You have an extra 276 miles' haul, if I remember rightly. That, however, is getting away from the point. What information has my hon. friend as to the income of the port and the quantity of grain to be handled?

Mr. ROBB: My information is, according to the estimates of the previous government, that the requirements of that port would be for an elevator with a capacity of from 750,000 to 1,000,000 bushels.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My recollection is that we used to use about 60,000 bushels in trimming during the busy period.

Mr. ROBB: Each trip?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In a day when things were busy—60,000 bushels in and 60,000 out.

Mr. ROBB: That is an admission that an elevator is required.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That was during the war period.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No grain went through the port of Halifax during the war.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had at one time a movement of as much as thirty cars a day.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think so.

Mr. ROBB: I would not like to get into a dispute between my two hon. friends who were members of the same government at that time.

Mr. FINN: It seems to me that the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) takes a very pessimistic and gloomy view of the development of an eastern national port, namely the port of Halifax. It is equally as pessimistic a view as my hon. friend took when, as chairman of the Railway Commission, he laid down that very explicit doctrine that geographical disadvantages should not be taken into consideration in the fixing of rates. We are a part of this great confederation; and the great leaders who have passed to the beyond held out to us in Nova Scotia and to the citizens of Halifax the promise that if the province remained in confederation Nova Scotia and Halifax would become the Atlantic frontage of the Dominion. And if my hon. friend will only go and look at the motto above the entrance to this magnificent structure, raised and reared by his government, he will see there written these words:

> The wholesome sea is at her gates,
> Her gates both East and West.

We may have the wholesome sea but we have not the gates. But it was in the wisdom of the late Liberal Chieftain, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to foresee the future and build the Transcontinental, taking the road to Moncton as a common centre for the shipment of grain and other products of the West in winter, from Halifax and St. John. When the short line is completed from a point above Port Arthur on the Canadian National up to the Transcontinental, with easier grades and shorter mileage, the people of Halifax feel that it will be the duty of the Canadian National system to see that grain and other products of the West not routed through any other ports shall be carried to the ports of Halifax and St. John in winter. If these things are not done then perhaps some of the things spoken of by a gentleman in the legislature of Nova Scotia and referred to in the press of the Maritime provinces may come to be more than mere words and cold type. I regret that the state of my health to-night forbids my entering as largely into this subject as I should like. But it is vital to the interests of Nova Scotia, it is vital to the city of Halifax, that proper attention be given this matter. I say it is vital to the city of Halifax, which Sir Charles Tupper declared would be, as a result of this national policy, a forest of masts if that province remained true to confederation. We are spending to-day millions of money for the development of the port of Portland, and this is the result of an act of administration on the part of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen in the taking over of the Grand Trunk and the terminals at Portland. This was a legacy bequeathed to the present government, who have in turn handed it over to Sir Henry Thornton and his board of management. I believe that Sir Henry Thornton is willing to do the right thing by the Maritime provinces, and my hon. friend must know that Sir Henry has recommended that an elevator should be built at Halifax with a capacity of at least 750,000 bushels, if not a million. It is his intention to divert to Halifax, as he has a right to do, that proportion of the grain and other products from the West that can and ought to be carried through this port. The rate to Halifax will then be the same as to St. John or Portland or

New York. Montreal carries one cent less and when the differential referred to by my hon. colleague (Mr. Maclean) is removed as between St. John and Halifax, then New York, Portland, St. John and Halifax will be on a parity. There is no sound reason why Halifax should not share as a national port in the shipment of products of the West and of central Canada to the Old Country and the Mediterranean in future. These are my hopes; and I regret that my hon. friend should take the gloomy, pessimistic view he has displayed in reference to the future of Halifax as a port. I do not share that view and I am sure that if we both live a few years longer and Halifax is given an opportunity he will have reason to revise his opinion and will be quite willing to help to make it what it was always intended to be, the eastern gateway, one of the national ports of Canada.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have listened with a great deal of interest, not to say amazement, to some of the remarks which have been made in this House by the representatives from the East and the West, who suggest that, if certain concessions are not granted them, certain veiled threats which they make are going to be carried into effect. I have almost come to the conclusion that the government are prepared to outdo that last awful night in the city of Toronto, a few sessions ago. We are nearing the dawn of another day and we hear now the story of the building of the Transcontinentl railway and what it is going to bring about in this country; and this is the justification for an expenditure of $200,000 to be voted in the Supplementary Estimates, which certainly, at any rate, should have appeared in the Main Estimates. There are two items here of a similar nature, notwithstanding that there are many parts of this country where the government would be much more justified in expending money in the building of elevators than at these particular points. I refer to the province of Ontario where there are no internal elevators for the accommodation of the farmers. They are not receiving any consideration of this kind, but we are not coming before the government and making all sorts of veiled threats as to what may take place; we are not hinting at secession if certain concessions are not made. I never heard a more absurd argument advanced in support of any proposition than that which has been offered by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Finn). No doubt the nature of his argument is due to the fact, which he mentioned a moment ago, that he is not in good health to-night.

[Mr. Finn.]

Mr. FINN: When I made the remark in regard to threats I said that the leader of the Opposition in Nova Scotia, the gentleman that was responsible for the statement, was the leader of the Tory party in the legislature of the province; and the Halifax Herald, the leading Tory paper in Nova Scotia, echoed the same thing.

Item agreed to.

Towards the construction of a grain elevator at Edmonton, Alta, $200,000.

Mr. JELLIFF: In whatever I may say on this vote I do not want to be construed either by the administration or by the people of Edmonton as opposing any legitimate wish that might be expressed founded on the necessities of the grain trade there or of the railways for the construction of an internal elevator at that point. I object to the government overlooking a claim that has been admitted by Dr. Magill, Chairman of the Grain Commission, and that has been on record for the last ten or twelve years, a claim for the establishment of an internal storage elevator at Lethbridge. I was very much surprised when I saw this item of $200,000 in the Estimates. I want to point out the difference between the crop production and the facilities afforded at Edmonton compared with Lethbridge. Three transcontinental railways run into Edmonton, the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific, and two of these lines run to western ports. On the other hand, in the Lethbridge district we are tied up to one railway system, the Canadian Pacific, which, in spite of a most efficient administration, has always fallen short of its ability to cope with the demands connected with the handling of our grain in that district. One of the main reasons for the establishing of this elevator at Edmonton is to facilitate the movement of grain westward to the Pacific coast and to try to effect a saving for the farmer. I heartily agree with that, but I would point out that last year in the freight district of Lethbridge we produced 22,000,000 bushels of wheat, over one-third the entire production of Alberta, a condition which, however, resulted in a serious shortage of cars in that district. At one time last season there were in Cardston at least one hundred four-horse teams with loads of wheat, some of it drawn from a distance of twenty miles, and that wheat was there from one to three days because of lack of elevator space, due, in turn, to the lack of cars. The same was true at Woolford Station, east of Cardston and at other points throughout that district. In 1915 we had a crop in the Lethbridge freight district of 41,000,000 bushels of wheat, nearly one-half the entire crop production of Alberta. The result was that the elevators were filled up and the delivery was continued until June and July of the following season. I believe the ex-Minister of Finance was given that record when he was out in our country investigating the railway situation. Thousands upon thousands of acres of wheat remained in the stook all winter, simply on account of that car shortage and lack of elevator space. Thousands upon thousands of bushels of grain were threshed into open bins in the fields; the grain bleached and deteriorated in quality and the farmers suffered losses running into hundreds of thousands of dollars. If there is a district in Canada that needs an internal storage elevator it is in Lethbridge district. This whole system of internal storage elevators originated in the Lethbridge district.

5 a.m.

Mr. CAHILL: With what government?

Mr. JELLIFF: That was in 1904 or 1905. The whole thing was founded upon the acute shortage of cars which was occurring year after year and of course, the large crops we were producing in that district. Lethbridge is one of the largest coal producing districts in Canada, and the season for the hauling of coal is concurrent with the period during which the heavy hauling of wheat should proceed. At least 200 cars a day are required to move the coal product at that period, and it is natural that when there are two demands of that kind the more urgent should be met, namely, the transport of coal to the people of the prairies. I have two telegrams here that I want to read. The first is dated at Lethbridge, June 27, and reads as follows:

Press despatch to-day states supplementary estimates provide internal elevators Edmonton. No mention Lethbridge. Urge you press our claim. One-third Alberta wheat last year grown on Lethbridge Railway division. Manifestly unfair government overlook this district where grain grown and elevator badly needed.

That is from the president of the Lethbridge Board of Trade. Here is another telegram I got early this morning from the secretary of the Lethbridge Board of Trade:

Our board passed strong resolution to-day urging you to protest government's action locating proposed elevator at Edmonton. Northern Alberta heaviest crop is oats—

That means in the Edmonton district.

—which is not exportable commodity via Vancouver and the Panama canal. Provincial government estimates between forty and fifty million bushels wheat crop on Lethbridge Railway division this year. Dry lands crops augmented by future irrigation crops warrant and will sustain elevator here. Farmers in this district have been led to belive that favorable consideration would be given to Lethbridge when any additional elevators were establishd.

They have been led to believe that for years. The movement for the construction of these internal storage elevators, as I have already stated, began in that district, and began on account of the yearly shortage which we experienced there of cars necessary to handle our grain crop. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I claim that I am the parent of the internal storage elevator idea It is the only thing in the country I can lay claim to being parent to. On account of the difficulty of securing sufficient storage and sufficient cars in southern Alberta a conference was called some twenty years ago by the Hon. Mr. Rutherford, at that time premier of the province of Alberta. Mr. Rutherford kindly sent me an invitation to attend that conference, which was composed of farmers, business men, railway men, grain men and bankers. At that conference the main subject of discussion was the western shipment of grain. Delegates were there from Vancouver, Victoria, New Westminster, from all over Alberta, and one or two I think from Saskatchewan, and the burden upon their thoughts at that time was shipping by the A.B.C. route as it was called, which meant the Alberta-British Columbia route. At that conference the question of car shortage came up. I was asked to open the discussion on what was known as our old Manitoba Grain Act, and in connection therewith I advocated the building of internal storage elevators to relieve the shortage of cars for one thing, in the second place to encourage the development of the milling industry in our principal cities in the West, and in the third place to minister to the wants of our mixed farming industry. These were the three points that were involved.

A short time after that convention this matter was taken up by the Board of Grain Commissioners. They came out to Lethbridge and held quite a long sitting there. I was before the board at that time and this question of the establishment of internal storage elevators was thoroughly canvassed. The board returned and presented their report to parliament recommending the building of these internal storage elevators for the purposes to which I have referred. Then the board went out again through the western country to determine where they should locate these internal storage elevators. They thoroughly canvassed every locality in which their meetings were held, and they decided that Lethbridge was one of the points where one of these elevators should be located, and they so reported to parliament. The recommendation was made by Dr. Magill, the chairman of the Grain Board. The Minister of Trade and Commerce will find that recommendation in his files. I do not know how it happened but the government built three of these storage elevators, one at Moose Jaw, one at Saskatoon, and one at Calgary. It is not for me to comment upon the location of these elevators, but the government overlooked the one place where the movement had orginated and where the car situation is at different times the most acute of any place in the country that I know of. They placed these elevators at these other points. Now continually from that time up till now, born of necessity of the situation there, petition after petition, letter after letter, presentation after presentation has been sent to Ottawa urging the construction of an internal storage elevator to meet our needs at that point, and I cannot see why that request has not been granted. I cannot see why these other elevators should be provided for at this time and Lethbridge again be left out. We have here in this telegram the statement, and I am sure this will be pleasing to the Minister of Finance because he was speaking of the prospects of the West a few nights ago, that the estimate of the provincial government is that we shall have a wheat crop of from forty to fifty million bushels in the Lethbridge district this year. If that is the case the same situation will be repeated that occurred in 1915, and all over that part of the country grain will be standing in the stook all winter, and there will be a loss of thousands and thousands of dollars to those farmers. Now I am going to make this appeal to the government. I am not finding fault with these elevators. If they need that elevator at Edmonton in order to facilitate the shipment eastward or westward—

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Is there any reason why the farmers in the West cannot have granaries to take care of their grain?

Mr. JELLIFF: It is impossible to build granaries in the condition we are in to house all that grain. The condition is largely one of car shortage, and that can only be met by giving your rolling stock a shorter journey, letting them run back and forth to the internal elevator, for in that way they give ten times the car service that you get when the rolling stock is moving 1,200 miles to Winnipeg or 780 miles to the west coast. That is the kernel of the whole situation. Now I am going to appeal to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture, who knows what that situation means to these mixed farmers to bring down a further Supplementary Estimate and provide for the construction of an elevator at Lethbridge.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Let us get to bed and we will give you half a dozen elevators.

Mr. JELLIFF: I think the government is the cause of the lateness of the hour and not I. I sincerely beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman, for delaying you so long but this cause is one that has been dear to my heart for the last twenty years. It is time it was attended to, and attended to right off. I appeal to the Prime Minister to bring down a further Supplementary Estimate and build that elevator.

Mr. ROBB: Into the division of opinion as to Edmonton and Lethbridge, I am not going to enter. It is only fair to my hon. friend to say that he has urged upon the government the construction of an elevator at Lethbridge, and as I listened to his speech to-night it almost seemed as though we were back in other days because I can recall when the former member for that constituency, Mr. Buchanan, had tried with equal force to impress upon previous governments the importance and necessity of an elevator at Lethbridge. But another thought came to my mind when my hon. friend was speaking. Listening to the account of the crop they had in his district last year, the crop they expect to have this year, and the number of cattle and sheep they have, it occurred to me that the hard luck stories we have been hearing have not been quite well founded.

Mr. JELLIFF: If I may interrupt, I may say that some time ago the Lethbridge Board of Trade prepared a statement as to the situation last year. One copy was presented to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, a second to the Prime Minister, and the third to the Minister of the Interior. The facts which I have recited as to last year's crop are given there. They were carefully taken from the Canadian Pacific Railway records and I am very sure they are correct.

Mr. ROBB: I do not dispute that. I am quite of that opinion.

Mr. JELLIFF: I do not think I painted a very gloomy picture myself. I believe there is the very greatest hope for the future of Alberta, although we did have two or three seasons there when we ran badly behind.

Mr. ROBB: It is true there are three railways running into Edmonton to fill the elevator there, but the door has not been closed to Lethbridge. In order that my hon. friend may take something home, I may say that the Grain Commissioners have promised to review the whole situation and make a recommendation to us.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. JELLIFF: Just a minute. I want to point out to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the situation was very carefully canvassed out there years ago by the grain commission. The facts are all known; there is no need of any further investigation. Lethbridge has been side tracked without reason, and I hope that the Prime Minister will do as I have suggested, bring down a supplementary estimate to help our cause.

Mr. CHURCH: I agree with what the hon. gentleman has said about the necessity for an elevator for this district. Additional elevator accommodation is needed for the whole of Canada. We are behind the times in that respect. I also agree with what has been said regarding the dire need of a terminal elevator in central Ontario. In the debate the other night I read the remarks of Mr. Julius H. Barnes, one of the ablest transportation and grain men on the American continent about the elevator capacity of this country and the United States. This statement, which was published in the last month's issue of the National City Bank shows that the elevators across the border, from Dakota right down to Buffalo are congested and cannot contain any more grain. We are going to be in the same position in this country unless additional elevator accommodation is provided. What is needed for Canada is a big, forward elevator policy which will provide for elevators all along the great lakes and the St. Lawrence. On the 2nd of May, 1919 a deputation came down to Ottawa to interview the government. I prepared a memorandum for the deputation which was laid before the government of the day. Mr. Manning Doherty, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, was present on that occasion, with representatives of the United Farmers of Ontario, the United Farmers' Co-operative Company, and representatives of the grain trade.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the item relates to the elevator at Edmonton, and that what he is saying is not relevant to the question.

Mr. CHURCH: But you have allowed the hon. member for Lethbridge to urge the need of an elevator in that district.

The CHAIRMAN: That does not make any difference.

Mr. CHURCH: We have as much right to urge the establishment of an elevator for central Ontario as the hon. member in question has to argue in favour of an elevator for Lethbridge. The government must adopt a forward and progressive policy upon this elevator question.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not a question of policy at all.

Mr. CHURCH: I have a memorandum here but I do not wish to read the whole of it. It urges the need and utility of a terminal elevator, such as is being built in Edmonton and Halifax, in central Ontario. There was an election the other day in the province of Ontario and one of the main questions argued at that time was the need of these elevators.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: I must again draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that he is out of order.

Mr. CHURCH: Surely I am in order in making a few quotations from the memorandum. We were told that when the estimates for the construction of elevators were brought down opportunity would be afforded for a discussion of the whole elevator policy of the country and yet we are not to be permitted to discuss it. I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce when his estimates were before the House, and we would not have allowed those estimates to go through so quickly if the minister had not promised to afford me an opportunity of bringing the need of a terminal elevator in central Ontario before the committee. I shall only occupy four or five minutes. An elevator is not a luxury; it is a necessity.

Mr. CAHILL: I must rise to a point of order. The hon. member has been out of order for some time. If he wishes to appeal against the decision of the Chair he may do so by calling for a vote of the committee, otherwise he is entirely out of order. If the hon. member does not call for a vote let us pass this item and proceed to the next one.

Mr. TOLMIE: It is only fair that the hon. member for North Toronto should be afforded the same opportunity as the hon. member for Lethbridge who spoke on the necessity of an elevator in his section of the country. The hon. member for North Toronto is giving reasons why there should be a terminal elevator for central Ontario.

The CHAIRMAN: The difficulty is that the hon. member cannot move a capital expenditure or a public charge. The distinction is that the hon. member for Lethbridge was suggesting to the committee that, instead of the Edmonton elevator there should be a provision for the construction of an elevator at Lethbridge, for that same province, but in a different part. In this debate the hon. member for North Toronto is speaking of the establishment of elevators and the general policy of elevator construction in Ontario which is altogether different.

Mr. CHURCH: I may say that Ontario produces approximately 200,000,000 bushels of grain annually. In 1919 that total aggregated nearly 225,000,000 bushels, but this was an exceptionally favourable year for grain crops. It will be seen that in the average year Ontario produces enormous quantities of grain. A very considerable quantity of this grain is used for live stock feeding as the live stock industry is a prominent one in the province of Ontario. At the same time there is no doubt but that millions of bushels change hands each year the grain being sold either in the local trade, in interprovincial trade, or for export. At the present time there is no government interior terminal elevator in the province at which grain may be officially weighed and graded, as is done in the other provinces. At the present time the Grain Commission is endeavouring to purchase over 500,000 bushels of oats in Ontario, but there is no central point at which this grain can be officially assembled, weighed and graded. The absence of these facilities in Ontario has proven a loss to the farmers, a great inconvenience to those engaged in the grain trade, and a handicap to the province in competing in these lines with other provinces which have the benefit of such facilities.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): When the Chairman of the committee rules an hon. member out of order, there is no justification for the member disregarding the rule. If the member wishes to apeal from the decision of the chair, he can do so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: With regard to the point of order, I am a litle surprised that the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Jelliff) should be permitted to discuss the situation with regard to Lethbridge, because it is a little nearer to Edmonton than the points the hon. member for Toronto wishes to discuss. I can hardly conceive of such a provincial idea creeping into a discussion of this kind.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that there is a rule of the House that the judgment of the Chair cannot be criticized when it has once been given. I do not think a point of order was raised with respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member for Lethbridge spoke at considerable length.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What is the point of order? I do not think this item has been passed. It is still before the committee, and we have a perfect right to discuss it. The objection raised by the hon. member for Lethbridge with regard to the item of $200,000 for an elevator at Edmonton was based on what he contended was the advantage of having an elevator capacity in western Canada, that would permit short hauls on the railway to those elevators. The same arguments might be used in other parts of the country, and I am surprised that this provincialism should be drawn so strictly that we are barred from discussing that question, but I am not going to dispute the ruling of the Chair. I have respect for the rules of the House, and while I may differ, I am going to strictly confine myself to the item before the committee with regard to the building of a $200,000 elevator at Edmonton. The member for Lethbridge argued that the short haul would enable so many cars to be used. This is an old question in this country. The western farmer has been contending for years that he should have cars available as soon as he threshes, in order to take care of his grain; consequently we are bound to have a car shortage at certain times in the year, and now we are asked to meet this condition, to enable those people to avoid this cost. The people in Ontario have always had to take care of their grain, and I believe that if the farmers in western Canada would pursue the policy carried out in other parts they would not have as many difficulties as they have to-day, and you would not find a glut of wheat on the market at one time, and then for several months nothing for the railways to do. Western farmers are not able to take advantage of the market to the same extent that they would if they were carrying their own grain, as the farmers do in other parts of the country. It may be said that, owing to the immense quantities of grain grown by the farmers in the West, it is absolutely impossible for them to do it.

Mr. LOVETT: I thought the hon. member for North Toronto had the floor?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the hon. member has any question to ask I will be glad to answer it.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh no, you will talk all night.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not know that the House is called on to pay any attention to what the hon. member thought.

Mr. LOVETT: Exercise a little courtesy and give the member the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member for North Toronto is quite capable of taking care of himself.

Mr. LOVETT: He has been trying to get the floor.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This item of $200,000 is just another example of what has been done particularly with regard to the estimates which are now before the House. I question if there has ever been a more glaring example of an attempt being made to satisfy certain sections of the community, without regard to the public interest, than we have had in regard to the estimates passed by this House to-night, which have been jammed through. We have sat till broad daylight, and the government is still endeavouring to crowd these estimates through. An item of $200,000 in the supplementaries is altogether too large to be passed in this manner. There was ample opportunity to have these items passed in the main estimates, if it was desired to put them through, or if there was any justification for putting them through. The fact that they appear in the estimates in the dying hours of the session indicates that they are not items such as should be passed by this House without reasonable discussion.

Mr. CHURCH: As I understand the ruling on the point of order when an item relating to a post office is before the committee you can discuss the needs of any post office in another part of the country. Now, I am not preventing the committee from rising. I would have been glad to see the House rise two months ago. We have tried to play the game with the government and we have done our best but we do not want anything unfair. The counties which are asking for this particular item are Liberal counties and have gone Liberal. Regarding these particular elevators at Edmonton and at Halifax, I would like to ask the minister one or two questions. I think it is necessary when an elevator is to be built that it should be constructed in the proper place. Some mistakes have been made in erecting elevators in certain localities. Can the minister tell the committee whether these elevators will provide sufficient accommodation for weighing, drying, cleaning, storing and grading of all kinds of grain in Nova Scotia and Alberta? Second, will they be of advantage to individual farmers of those two provinces by enabling them to ship carload lots of grain which would be officially weighed and stored and for which there would be issued an official certificate which would be recognized by the bank at once, thus broadening the farmer's market, and will similar accommodation be available to the grain trade? Another point in connection with these elevators is this: Will the erection of these two $200,000 elevators provide facilities for the storing, cleaning and grading of different kinds of seed? This would be of great advantage to the farmers of Nova Scotia and Alberta, particularly with reference to grass and clover seed. Will they be of much advantage to the live stock industry of those provinces by facilitating the distribution of feeding stock from one section to another in the case of short crops in the local districts or in the provinces as a whole? Will these elevators be able to perform a distinct service in preventing the deterioration of certain crops in the provinces in years of too much moisture, as was illustrated in the bean crop in recent years? The crop of buckwheat in one year had to be dried because of wet weather which prevailed at the time of harvesting. Special emphasis, I might say, should be laid on the fact that such an elevator as these two elevators, should be a public elevator, and certificates should be issued that would be official government certificates, both of which are advantages affording great protection to the public and not available in the same sense from private enterprise.

From the commercial side, I believe these two elevators may be a success. I am not speaking in order to kill time. I appreciate the work of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, (Mr. Robb). I think he has been a very fair minister. He has no doubt been very busy in the past, and I should like to be fair to the ministers because they are overworked. I should like the Minister of Trade and Commerce to come up to Toronto, meet the United Farmers, the Harbour Commissioners, the Peterborough people, and the other people interested in this matter and see if something can be done to relieve the situation.

At flag stations, throughout central Ontario, the railways will not take the crops, there is a great hardship owing to lack of these facilities. For that reason I presented this memorial, which I hold in my hand, to the government in 1919, but not a thing has been done since. The central counties of Ontario, the Yorks, Peel, Brant, the Simcoes, and many other counties have no way of putting their crops into cars at a railway station; they have no place to leave their crops and in some cases they are rotting in the ground for lack of transportation.

Item agreed to.

Harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—Little Anse—In full and final settlement of T. D. Morrison's claim in connection with contract for construction of a breakwater, $3,234.60.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Last evening this item stood on account of the fact that I did not have before me full data in connection with the matter. The committee is aware of the circumstances under which I was dealing with the estimates. The situation regarding this matter I will put very briefly before the committee. Mr. Morrison obtained a contract in 1911-12 for the construction of a breakwater at Little Anse. He had proceeded with the construction of the work, and it had been completed, when on December 28, 1912, one of those abnormal storms and, in fact, gales which sometimes sweep the eastern coasts of our country, came up and destroyed the outer end of the breakwater. In the contract which he had signed for its construction was a clause providing that the contractor was to take the risk of a storm. He proceeded to replace the part that was destroyed, and then he made a claim upon the department asking that he should be compensated for this extra work which he was compelled to do by reason of the storm. The engineer at that time, Mr Bernasconi, took the ground that by reason of the strict terms of the contract no allowance should be made to him on account of this. The next year, 1913, a broader construction was placed upon contracts under conditions like these. The department, in the case of a contract at Devil's Island was authorized by order in council, to pay the contractor $4,813, to compensate him for the extra work which he was compelled to do as a result of the storm. In the next year, in a place called Sandy Cove, a contracting firm called John E. Bigelow & Son was paid amounts which together reached $1,995, under exactly similar circumstances. Again at Dipper Harbour and again at Three Fathom Harbour, amounts were paid by the department to contractors whose work had been destroyed by storms. The Department of Public Works proceeded to change the form of contract by which the liability occasioned by result of abnormal gales was taken from the contractor and admitted by the department.

This contractor, Mr. Morrison, then came to the Department of Public Works and asked that his claim should be reviewed. It was considered by Mr. Locke, who was second in command amongst the engineering staff of the province of Nova Scotia. Mr Locke, reviewing the whole circumstances, held that this storm of 1921 was an absolutely abnormal one, one which could not have been contemplated at the time the contract was made, and his report winds up as follows:

I, therefore, beg to report that Mr. Morrison's claim for extras be allowed and as to what the amount of this claim should be I respectfully submit the following figures:

He goes into details and makes the figures to be $3,234.60. Going into the matter in detail, he further concludes:

I would, therefore, recommend that Mr. Morrison be paid in connection with this work the additional sum of $3,234.60. As to the question of whether interest should be allowed or not for the nine years which have expired since that time, I consider this a matter for the higher officials of the department to decide upon.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the date of that report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): June 27, 1922. Then Mr. Dodwell who has been Chief Engineer of Public Works in Nova Scotia for the last twenty-five years, a man of long experience who has served under every government, appointed originally by the government of Sir John Thompson and who has been an official ever since, reviewed the claim of Mr. Morrison. Speaking of the conditions he said:

The evidence goes to show that this was a storm of extraordinary and almost unprecedented severity. It was a whole gale from the S.S.E., the direction of greatest exposure, and it was accompanied by a tide or tidal wave of a height unknown for many years.

He went on to say:

It is true that Morrison's contract explicitly provided that he would be responsible during the whole period of the construction for all damage done thereto by gales, storms and other causes, and no relief from responsibility is given or implied in the case of a storm of extraordinary or unprecedented magnitude. That this provision in the form of contracts in vogue in 1911 was deemed of an arbitrary or unfair severity is shown by the fact that in contracts of later date, as for instance the one at Sandy Cove, clause 21 of the specification provides that the contractor is responsible for all damage . . . . . "excepting in such cases of an uncontrollable action of nature which it would be impossible to guard against." It is admittedly difficult to draw a line between an ordinary storm doing damage that the contractors must make good at their own expense, and an extraordinary one with its resultant damage for which a contractor is not liable.

but if we suppose that the breakwater at Little Anse before its completion had been damaged or destroyed by an earthquake, the department would hardly be justified—not in equity at least—in penalizing the contractor for such a catastrophe.

After a careful and thorough review of the circumstances of this claim, I find myself unable to reach any other opinion than that Mr. T. D. Morrison is fairly and properly entitled to be paid the amount of damages estimated by Mr. Locke in his report attached hereto at $3,324.60. If, moreover, he is entitled to this amount as principal, he would also be entitled to interest and the amount payable to him would therefore be

Principal..	$3,234 60
Nine years' interest at 5 per cent.. ..	1,455 57
	$4,690 17

Here is a case in which the two leading officers of the department have recognized the claim. I am aware that Mr. Bernasconi in 1920 reported against the claim. He was a young man and a junior engineer who had charge of the construction, and he reported, on account of the contract at that time making the explicit provision in regard to the liability of the contractor, that he was prevented from considering the claim. But inasmuch as my hon. friend's government changed the form of contract and allowed in proper cases in which the evidence was clear that the work of the contractor had been destroyed by storms of unusual severity, that compensation should be made, the minister of this department felt that he had a right to ask that the money be paid. I submit with absolute confidence, after going through the records and speaking not from any legal standpoint but with full responsibility as acting minister, that the vote is justifiable.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: This is a very good kind of case for discussion, because it shows what can be done if a minister wants to put through a supplementary estimate. One of the best things to do is to bring in witnesses afterwards who knew nothing about the facts at the time. For example, if you want to obtain a different decision from the one that was previously arrived at just send an engineer who was not originally on the work, and have his report considered by some one who was not the original engineer either.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Both Mr. Locke and Mr. Dodwell have been in the service 25 years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I did not say anything to the contrary.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend spoke about sending an engineer down.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly; they were sent to look into the claim.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Mr. Locke was.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Now I am going to try to get at the facts. This contract was entered into in 1911 or 1912 and the report on the storm was made on January 7, 1913. There was no claim put in for damages as a result of the storm; at that time no reform politician had come upon the scene to tell this gentleman that he might get his claim settled. The final estimate under this precious contract was given on August 27, 1913, and in that final estimate there was an allowance for $300 extra, the original contract being for $21,500. These extras were accepted, and the first reference I find to any claim appears in the file on the 29th of July, 1920. The claim was referred by the then minister to the local engineer, Mr. Bernasconi and he reported upon it in the ordinary way. The district engineer reported against the claim on October 22, 1920, to the chief engineer, Mr. St. Laurent, who endorsed the report. The report of the chief engineer is dated November 8, 1920, and a letter was written to Mr. Morrison refusing his claim on November 10. The next thing I find is a letter from the initial engineer to the minister who at that time was the Hon. Mr. McCurdy. The matter was again considered and referred to the engineers, and again on March 14, 1921, a letter was written to Mr. Morrison stating that his claim could not be acceded to. Then a long petition is worked up winding up with a statement that is forwarded "through our worthy and popular representative Mr. George W. Kyte". When this petition comes in Mr. St. Laurent gets hold of it in the first instance. The memorandum filed by Mr. St. Laurent on the 21st of April, 1922, is against the claim, and so it is necessary, of course, that there should be a new set of engineers, if this claim, which never really existed at any time between 1913 and 1920, was to be made alive. There were therefore two other engineers whose names we have heard. Now there is only one thing I can say about this matter. The claim had been refused regularly by engineers that were familiar with the whole thing, and it was declined when appeal was had to the former Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MARTELL: Was the engineer who recommended it a senior engineer?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The engineer who did not recommend it was the chief engineer. There is just one moral to be drawn from the whole matter and that is as to what politics can do.

Mr. MARTELL: You are measuring every one by your own half measure.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not at all. The minister talks about a compassionate allowance. When he first introduced the matter he said, in answer to a question, that he fancied it was because Mr. Morrison, the gentleman who happened to have the contract, was a Liberal and his hon. friends who came into power in 1911 did not want to recognize the claim although it was perfectly legal. That is the kind of hypothesis on which the minister has acted.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): We have lots of precedents for it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So far as any legal claim is concerned, of course there is none. How easy it is to be generous with somebody else's money—that is the whole moral of it all. What justification the minister of Finance can put forward for a claim of this kind, standing under a contract made in 1911; what justification he has for bringing it up in the supplementary estimates, absolutely passes my understanding.

Mr. SHAW: I have not heard the previous discussion in connection with this item, but it is rather peculiar that a claim so long out-lawed as this can now be resurrected. If the circumstances narrated by the ex-Minister of Finance are correct, this claim would look very suspicious. Apparently it was rejected by the department during the regime of the late government, and now it is resurrected. The minister suggests that after giving it careful consideration he comes to the conclusion that there is a legal claim. If the contract provides that the responsibility in the case of the eventuality mentioned rests with the contractor, how can legal liability now be imposed on the government?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): The construction placed by the government on contracts of that kind is that that is the proper course where there is the intervention of a storm of unprecedented severity. The ex-Minister of Finance has given a very jaundiced and distorted version of the facts, and he impugns the engineers who made the reports and who have been in the department for twenty-five years. Mr. Cameron, Acting Chief Engineer for the Department of Public Works reviews the whole case, and he cannot be accused of dealing with the claim in any way other than what he thought was proper.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When was Mr. Cameron's inspection made?

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He made no inspection.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then how could he report?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He is Acting Chief Engineer for the department. Contracts of all classes come before him.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Now, my hon. friend said I had given a jaundiced version of the facts and that I have made misrepresentations. Wherein did I make a misrepresentation?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend's speech was one continued accusation that this was a matter of political dealing by the department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then let us get down to the facts.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend cannot find any evidence of political interference with these engineers.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend will tell me wherein my facts are wrong. The first engineer who reported was Mr. Bernasconi. The minister said that he always reported against it. Is that right?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes, but why? I know the young man; he had not had much experience and did not know anything about the law. According to his construction the contract did not permit of the interpretation that Mr. Morrison
6 a.m. was entitled to this money. But he admitted the facts; he admitted the storm and all that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: He reported against it. Then Mr. St. Laurent went over it and also reported against it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He did not visit the work.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Neither did the Mr. Cameron you spoke about. Mr. St. Laurent was chief engineer; he went over that report and found it was correct?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes. But what about Mr. Locke, who visited the place?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He went to the place, interviewed everybody connected with it, and made his recommendation at that time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The truth is that the one man who saw this at the time anything could be learned about it was Bernas-coni. Then there was another storm, as shown by the file, on February 4, 1915, and the very next report my hon. friend can refer to is in 1916. So the man who knew reported against it; the chief engineer with him reported against it twice. As to the two engineers upon whom my hon. friend is basing his case, neither of them reported in favour of the claim, but the two new engineers did. Was I wrong in saying that?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Two new engineers? My hon. friend has been talking all through this matter as if some engineers were dug up from somewhere and sent down to report on the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Two other engineers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Two regular engineers in the Nova Scotia district, Mr. Locke, and Mr. Dodwell, Mr. Bernasconi being an understrapper who undertook to construe the law. He agreed, however, that the storm was of exceptional severity, though he undertook to say that under the contract there could not be a claim. Mr. Locke, who was his superior, visited the place and ascertained the facts before making his recommendation. Mr. Dodwell is a man of long experience who was appointed under Sir John Thompson's government. My hon. friend's suggestion about politics is therefore perfectly ridiculous. Who in Nova Scotia would ever think of Mr. Dodwell being influenced in a matter politically in the interests of the Liberal party or anyone connected with it? My hon. friend's insinuation about the utilizing of engineers is wholly unwarranted. Mr. Cameron, the successor of Mr. St. Laurent, to whom the whole matter was referred, recommends to the minister, with a full sense of his responsibility, that he should go to parliament and ask for this money. Why should there be any question about it?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There are lots of reasons. When did my hon. friend send Mr. Locke down?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): He was sent down by my hon. friend's government in 1916.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Has my hon. friend the report from Mr Locke in 1916 in favour of this scheme?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Yes, it is here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would like him to show it. In fact, if my hon. friend produces the file and leaves it here I can show him that there was no claim made until 1920, so what is the use of his saying that Mr. Locke went down in 1916 and reported in favour of it? If this be so proper and right and legal why does not the government waive any question of statutory limitation and give a fiat and let the man sue?

Mr. BUREAU: The fiat game is played out.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course it is. The money could never be collected in the world. Other people's money could not be given with the fiat.

Mr. BUREAU: That is an insinuation against the courts, that they are prejudiced.

Mr. KYTE: I am rather surprised at the unwonted heat displayed by my hon. friend from West York with regard to this matter. As to his suspicion that this is a political matter I desire to say what I stated when this matter was before the committee before, that Mr. Morrison is not a supporter of mine and was not a worker of mine in the last election. Mr. Morrison is a contractor in a small way. He belongs to my county, and the only interest I have had in the matter at all was because he was a resident in my county, and whether he was a Liberal or Conservative I would be very glad to make such representations to the department as would put his case in a proper light.

This matter was pressed upon the department for some time, but the information that I had was that they had not evidence as to the character of the storm which was represented to the department as being an unusually severe one. I went to the gentleman who kept the meteorological records in the county town of Richmond county, and he gave the information which satisfied the engineer that the storm was of an unusual character. At the present session of this committee we had a claim brought down by the Minister of Railways and Canals of $196,417.63, and my hon. friend from West York argued that it was an illegal claim and that the Minister of Railways had no right to place it in the estimates. His own leader sitting beside him argued that it was an illegal claim, but strange to say they did not press it as strenuously as my hon. friend from West York is now pressing against this claim this morning. Note the distinction. In the one case the claim was for $196,000 made by a big contractor, whereas the man having the claim for $3,000 is only a small contractor. The small contractor apparently must be treated differently from the big contractor.

Mr. BUREAU: And they call that democracy.

Mr. KYTE: I do not know what they call that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend calls that logical?

Mr. KYTE: I call it inconsistent on the part of my hon. friend and his leader. I have nothing further to say in regard to the matter. It is a matter of absolute indifference to me whether the claim is paid or not. But this man did the work for the government and he suffered very great loss for a person of his means. Shortly after the government, in order to provide against such losses changed their form of contract and assumed liability for losses in respect of storms of that character. Is this man going to suffer loss because the change in the form of contract was not made a few months earlier than it was?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend says that I showed unwonted heat. If anything was displayed it was displayed after the minister in charge of this matter accused me of unfairness. If heat was displayed it is then it was displayed. He is not quite as sympathetic and as good natured as our genial friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, and if people want trouble they can get it without very much trouble.

So far as my hon. friend from Cape Breton South and Richmond is concerned, I am surprised at him. I thought better of him than to think he would say we are only opposing this because it is a small claim.

Mr. KYTE: That is the inference.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend is a very poor drawer of inferences. This claim is something which has absolutely no legal foundation—absolutely none. My hon. friend is a lawyer, and he says, why should the man lose money because his contract was a hard contract and the form had not been changed? He signed it, and my hon. friend who is a lawyer knows he has no claim at all.

Mr. KYTE: My hon. friend said that the man who presented a claim for $196,000 had no claim at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Ah, but on the other hand—

Mr. BUREAU: He had the money.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I believe the hon. Minister of Customs is speaking from the fullness of his heart and showing what would most influence him.

[Mr. Bureau.]

Mr. BUREAU: I am never influenced by anything.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister had a very different story. He spoke of his own personal knowledge of the man, and he practically pledged himself to it, and besides that he had an affidavit which he said he could absolutely rely on. In this case no claim was made until 1920. Of course, as I say, it is awfully easy to be generous with other people's money, and all we can do is to protest. You cannot make a very much better case of it: contract, 1911; damage, winter of 1912-13; no claim made till 1920; passed upon by the department's engineers and thrown out; appealed from them to the former minister who had some regard for other people's money; the claim again thrown out; two other engineers sent to inspect; the claim allowed. I am going to ask whether the government have any objection to the file being tabled.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I shall have to consult the officers of my department with regard to that.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Do I understand there is any objection?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend has been browsing through the file the whole afternoon. I do not see why the department should give possession of a file like this upon which a claim is based to the Clerk of the House. I have not sufficient experience myself in the department to be able to say anything about it. I shall have to consult the officers of the department.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Let me correct my hon. friend. He let me have the file not this afternoon but earlier, and he got it back. He has had a chance of going through it after I have. Can my hon. friend give me any reason why a public document when requested to be filed and on which this extraordinary action is taken cannot be tabled?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend will have access to this file in the department at any time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I will undertake to see that he does.

Item agreed to.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is another matter a little more pleasant which I wonder if I could speak about now, Mr. Chairman, before my hon. friend the Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establisment drops off again. I want to mention a matter that I know must have been drawn to his attention before. I have received representations from a large number of very estimable societies in connection with the case of Mrs. Van Koughnet, a very estimable lady who did a tremendous amount of work during the war, who worked eight years for the government without salary at all, and who apparently has been released from her job without anything more one way or the other. The societies appear to be very indignant about it. They are certainly most sincere in their representations, and I would ask my friend what the position is.

Mr. BELAND: Mrs. Van Koughnet was the honorary superintendent of the Soldiers' Comfort branch. The activities of the department in the regular hospitals have greatly decreased, and it was thought advisable by the officials of the department in conference with me, that with a view to effecting economy in the service the branch should be merged with the regular activities of the department. The cost per year is between $30,000 and $40,000, and we expect to effect an economy of from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars by merging the two. Mrs. Van Koughnet has rendered valuable service in a very disinterested manner and it is a pleasure for me to render testimony verbally, as I have done in writing, to the work which she has performed on behalf of the returned men generally. She is not the only one in that category. Many other ladies in this country have rendered like service since the war in the same kind of work. I have taken occasion by letter to express my personal thanks, and those of the department, to Mrs. Van Koughnet for her great services.

Item agreed to.

Canadian Press, Limited—Canadian telegraph service, $50,000.

Canadian Press, Limited—British cable service, $8,000.

Mr. CAHILL: It is usual to pass such estimates as these during the dark hours of the night. The first of these items should properly come up in the dark rather than in daylight because it is undoubtedly a case of blackmail when the Canadian Press are permitted to take from the people of Canada the sum of $50,000 for a press service in this country. The second item of $8,000 for an Imperial or overseas press service is no more justifiable than is the $50,000 grant. I think the government are ill advised in voting $50,000 of the people's money for a press service, especially at this hour in the morning. I think the government should at least hold this vote over until we have had time to reconsider the proposition, and sleep over it; no harm will be done by deferring it until later in the day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think we are all anxious to conclude the consideration of the estimates. These are the last items and there would be no advantage in holding them over until later in the day. The item of $50,000 is one which has appeared in the estimates for a number of years. No exception has been taken to it until this year when there was some reason to believe that possibly the Press more or less controlled a number of papers that might be entitled to news which, perhaps, they were receiving notwithstanding the government's assistance. I confess there was considerable doubt in the mind of the government as to the wisdom of continuing this vote in view of that circumstance. However, the government has gone carefully into the matter and, as far as we are able to learn, the immediate cancellation of this vote would simply mean that some of the smaller papers of the country would lose considerable news which they are at present receiving. It would make no difference to the larger papers; but we are told, and I believe on reliable authority, that a few of the papers in the Maritime Provinces and some in western Canada would suffer a considerable cut in the news they receive if that course were pursued. Under the circumstances, and bearing in mind the fact that this item appeared in the estimates before this matter came up for consideration, and inasmuch as the Press may have counted on it, the government has thought that for this year the item should be allowed to stand. However, I should like to intimate to my hon. friend that the government has decided that in subsequent estimates these amounts will not be included.

Mr. CAHILL: I should like to make just one thing clear. Since I have been in this House, and I entered it in 1917, I have always opposed this item in the estimates. The present leader of the government, who came in in 1919 I think, agreed with me in opposition to this amendment when we sat on the other side. The estimate ever since it came into effect has always been opposed by the Liberal party. It originated in 1917, and I never could see any justification for it. I never could see why the press of Canada should tax the people of this country to the extent of $50,000 in order to put over on the Canadian public the propaganda that they wish to put from year to year. I opposed this item when we were in opposition, I was opposed to it last year when it was voted, and I am opposed to it to-day. I think the principle involved is a wrong one. I can see no advantage to the Canadian people in this vote, and if I have any support in this House this morning I will have much pleasure in voting against it. The Canadian Press have no more claim on the Canadian people than any other enterprise. I am sure that the members of the official opposition in the House will oppose this vote. I repeat the Canadian Press have no more right to a vote of $50,000 of the people's money to carry on their enterprise than any other business organization has. Not only should they be debarred this vote, not only should they fail to receive the support of the people, but they are a big combine in Canada. When the Liberal party applied for a newspaper franchise in Ottawa the Canadian Press told those who made the application they could not have it. This vote looks too much like blackmail for me to support it. I think the government are using bad judgment in voting $50,000 towards the support of this enterprise, and I shall oppose it.

Mr. HEALY: I am going to take up just a few minutes time in stating facts which I think should be made known to the members of the committee at this time. I do this because I personally was brought into the controversy in regard to the Canadian Press during the discussion which occurred when Bill No. 54 was before the House. Fortunately we have the report of the annual meeting of the Canadian Press, we have the official report of the gentlemen who are working for and receiving this donation from the people of Canada, and I wish to draw the attention of members of the committee to the attitude taken by the directors at their annual meeting. I wish simply to quote one clause from the by-laws of this association. The gentlemen who control the Canadian Press took it upon themselves to define the business conditions and public service that should govern in the granting of a new franchise. They say that such application should not be granted "except under conditions which, in the opinion of the Board of Directors are essential to commercial success, and lacking which no real, adequate permanent and satisfactory service can be rendered to the country." Two cases occurred this year in which the question of granting a franchise arose. The first was in my home city of Windsor, and finally, after a writ had been issued, after these gentlemen were to be brought before a judge and jury, after the facts were to be disclosed to the public, the franchise in that city was granted. The next case occurred in Ottawa when these gentlemen took it upon themselves to say that because the franchise in this city was owned by three individuals they would not grant a franchise to any other individual or company that desired to start a newspaper. These gentlemen have already received from the people of Canada the sum of $350,000. The government may feel that they are committed to the grant this year and perhaps it will be necessary in order to give these gentlemen a fair deal. This is a news gathering association. They gather the news at cost to themselves and they sell it at a tremendous profit to the public. For that reason I do not believe that the people of Canada should be asked to grant a subsidy year by year to this association. If the government feel it is necessary in order to be square with this association that the grant should be given this year, I am not going to say it should not be given, but I simply wish to point out that I do not believe the government, or parliament, or the people of this country, should be called upon to support what is really the creation of monopolies throughout this country. I will show how it works. I know of one company which owns a string of five franchises, and I know another which owns eight or ten franchises. In the province of Ontario when a man goes into a city and purchases two papers, he combines them into one; that gives him an absolute monopoly in that city, and the privilège of charging what he wishes for advertising and for subscriptions and it is a notice to the other newspaper men in this country that, for all time to come, no other paper can be established in that locality. It is absolutely an offence against British fair play and free speech. That has been carried to such an extent that an inside ring controls the Canadian press of this country. The great newspapers of Canada are not in accord with this monopoly, because when a writ was issued, and these people brought into court and were going to be placed in the position of being compelled to tell their sordid tale to a judge and jury, the great newspaper owners were men enough to say "Grant this franchise." I do not know whether it was the fear of the law or the desire for fair play of the newspaper men that caused them to grant the franchise in my own city.

Mr. SHAW: I am opposed to this subsidy, but in view of the fact that the government is going to grant it, I desire to say that I am informed that the association uses the Canadian Pacific Company as the means of its telegraph communication. Is there no way by which a large proportion of this sum might be used by our own telegraph system? The grant might be made subject to the use of the Canadian National lines.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not believe we will have a free press, if it is to be subsidized. There is a strong prejudice against this vote. There are many industries in Canada which have been driven to the wall and are not receiving help; but here is an industry which is self sustaining and yet coming to parliament for a subsidy. The people of Canada are sick and tired of this organization receiving a subsidy. They have never made out a case for it and it is wrong in principle.

Mr. CAHILL: If the rules of this House are carried out and the committee continues until 11 o'clock, and if no other member will take the floor between now and that hour I will attempt to occupy the time until then rather than submit to having this vote carried over my head. It is a wrong vote and never should have been authorized by the parliament of Canada. There never was any authority from the people of Canada to vote $50,000 to the subsidized press. There was never any authority for it from any government, let alone a Liberal government. I fought this matter when I was in opposition. I fought it in the country during my election, just as I have fought other things in my life, and I say it is not a Liberal principle. I want to tell the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister that Canada cannot afford to spend $50,000 of the people's money to subsidize the press, or to prostitute the news. This vote will defeat this government as it would defeat any government. We have voted many million dollars to-night, and every member of this government has attempted to justify the different expenditures; but not one has attempted to justify this expenditure. I ask the leader of the Government to try and justify this vote which is designed to prostitute the press of Canada. Can any minister defend it?

Mr. FIELDING: There are two items grouped together. One is an old item. It is for a cable service between Canada and England, established very many years ago. I remember the circumstances very well, because I had something to do with it. It was established in order that we might get a more efficient cable service between Canada and England, and I think in the early days it was certainly a useful service. We had been getting our news from the Old Country entirely by New York. It was coloured, and when things of Imperial concern occurred on the other side of the water we did not get a fair presentation of it. The press of that day proposed this arrangement and it was agreed to. I remember that the government of the day had nothing whatever to do with the control of the service; as a matter of fact it was in the hands of a gentleman now dead and gone, John Ross Robertson. He was an enthusiastic supporter of it. I think his brother conducted the service in London. In the main, I think the service was very satisfactory. It gave us what was a scarce article in those days, good reliable British news. That system has been continued to the present day. I have not had occasion to look into it of late, but I knew the circumstances when it was first voted. It was a wise vote. The other service was of more recent origin, and it was created when I was not a member of the House. I understand the purpose was this: There is a large section of country, a bridge, between eastern and western Canada, thinly populated, little or no population; and if there is to be an efficient service between eastern and western Canada some help should be granted. That is the argument for it. I think the object was a good one. My hon. friend speaks of it being a blackmail. I do not think that. I think the idea was that eastern and western Canada needed to know more about each other. Many of our western people who have come from the Old Country landed at Halifax, St. John or Quebec and went West at once by the Canadian Pacific without knowing anything of eastern Canada. We in the East know nothing of western Canada. It is, therefore, desirable that we should have an interchange of views. The bigger papers do not care for this; but if this grant will help the smaller papers to exchange the news and give the people a knowledge of what is going on in the country that they would not otherwise receive, there is very much to be said in favour of it. Whether or not it is a wise policy to continue this grant in the future, I am prepared to support it in the present session.

Mr. CAHILL: Who made the demand on the government for this grant?

Mr. FIELDING: I have not seen any human being on the subject. I am speaking from my knowledge of the public service.

Mr. SHAW: Would the minister be good enough to answer the request which I addressed to the Prime Minister, that is, whether or not the government will attach a string to this grant to see that the benefit of it accrues as far as possible to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not mean not to reply to my hon. friend. The government is not in a position to know at the present time what contracts the Canadian press has entered into for its communications. I cannot say at the moment whether my hon. friend's view is right or wrong that the Canadian press send their despatches over the Canadian Pacific line. I imagine that any arrangements they would have would be arrangements that would bind throughout the year. Under the circumstances I do not think the government would be justified in adopting the particular condition which my hon. friend suggests. Three months of the year have already gone by during which the Canadian press have had reason to believe that parliament would vote this amount. This is simply an obligation, perhaps not the most urgent in the world, but nevertheless one which the government should respect and having regard to the sum in the estimates, I think we should vote it at least for the present year.

Mr. SHAW: If there is any obligation, certainly the government must meet its obligations. But as regards the Canadian National Railways receiving fair consideration, I would like the assurance of the minister that that would be taken into consideration now, and if the grant is continued next year that due consideration will be given.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have intimated that it is the intention of the government to discontinue this grant at the end of the year, not to renew it.

Mr. CAHILL: What is the information of this government with regard to this vote? When did it originate? I understand in 1917 there was a vote of $7,000 or $8,000 for the overseas service. In 1917, when many of us had to suffer in this country, my hon. friends who are now occupying the opposition benches voted $50,000 to the Canadian press. For what purpose? For the pure purpose of propaganda, against whom? Against the Liberal party and against the people of Quebec, against my province. There is no justification for this vote in past history. There never has been any justification for a vote of $50,000 of the money of the people of this Dominion to the Canadian press. It was promoted by the Union government in 1917 and they could not justify the vote. I opposed it in 1917 and I have opposed it ever since. It has been proposed in this parliament from that time to this, and I think the government are making a great mistake to-day in again proposing it. They say that the vote has been going on for a few years. Is that any justification for the vote? Should the government not treat every estimate that comes before them on its merits? Should they not take the vote when it comes before them as a business proposition? No, they say that this vote has been in the estimates for the last five, six or seven years, and they propose to pass it now because it has been in the estimates in the past. Who is asking for this vote? The government do not propose to tell me. They do not know who is asking for it. This vote of $50,000 for the Canadian press is being proposed without any justification on the part of the government. The Liberal party of Canada a few months ago asked the Canadian press for a franchise for a Liberal paper at Ottawa and they waved their hand at the Liberal party and said: "No, we do not propose to grant you a franchise; we are a law unto ourselves." They did not grant that franchise. It was intimated, I understand, to the Canadian press that this appropriation of $50,000 might not be voted, but they said: "Oh, I guess it will; it is all right: we will leave it at that." The $50,000 item was not proposed in the main estimates, but it came in the supplementaries.

Mr. MACKENIZE KING: I beg my hon. friend's pardon. It is in the Main Estimates.

Mr. CAHILL: It is in the Main Estimates, but it was not proposed before now.

Mr. MACKENIZE KING: It has been in the Main Estimates before the House.

The CHAIRMAN: This is two-thirds of $8,000 and two thirds of $50,000.

Mr. CAHILL: The Chairman of this committee should know better than to quibble about calling an item—

The CHAIRMAN: This item was called by me in the House one evening and was asked to stand.

Mr. CAHILL: This item was called for one-twelfth or one-sixth of the amount. It is well understood in this House that a proportion of a vote is not considered as a vote of the estimate. I told the leader of the Government that this was bad legislation and that I proposed to oppose it. I object to voting the money of the people of Canada and of the county of Pontiac to be given to the press that will not allow the establishment of free and independent newspapers throughout Canada. The press of this country should be as free as trade. You must have freedom or slavery. If you do not stand for the freedom of the press and freedom of speech, what do you stand for? You must have a free press and a free and a liberal government, or you have nothing.

Mr. McBRIDE: Let us have a vote on it.

Mr. CAHILL: Hon. gentlemen spoke at great length last night on the freedom of Hindus, who are an infinitesimal proportion of the population of this country; but their freedom is of absolutely no account compared to the freedom of the press. If you are to be hobbled and bound by a press that is subsidized by the government to peddle news that is paid for you cannot be a free people. The leader of the Government knows that as well as I do. Let us get away from this bondage. Is the government afraid of the press of this country? If it is, I can tell the Prime Minister that the people are not.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend and I talked this matter over and we know each other's mind fairly well, I think. It is not the intention of the government, I can assure my hon. friend, to renew the subsidy another year. The government has viewed the matter from all aspects in the endeavour to see that there is no injustice, or misunderstanding, or misrepresentation regarding its attitude, but we have thought it well to allow the vote to pass this year.

Mr. CAHILL: What justification is there for voting $50,000 of the people's money for this purpose?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is very much in the interests of the whole Dominion that the various parts of the country should be kept in touch with one another. This subsidy has been used to distribute news throughout Canada to a greater extent than would have been possible but for it, particularly in the West and in the Maritime provinces. We are informed, and I think reliably, that if the subsidy were cut off immediately the effect would be very injurious, not to the large newspapers but to the smaller ones which would not receive that amount of news, concerning various occurrences in different parts of the country, which in the interests of the people as a whole should be circulated. I think hon. members will agree to let the vote go through when they realize the loss that would be involved in its withdrawal.

Mr. CAHILL: I am informed by some of the newspaper men of the country that the subsidy has not the effect which the Prime Minister suggests, of distributing news to the East and the West. In my opinion it is simply used as a threat to the smaller papers. The larger newspapers say, "If we do not get the subsidy we shall have to charge you a higher rate for the news service you get." I am also informed by people who I think are fairly conversant with the facts that the cost to the smaller newspapers would be a trifling matter, not more than $200 or $300 a year. This grant, or dole, or subsidy, has been opposed by some of the newspapers of Canada for a great many years.

Mr. SHAW: I wonder whether the government would consider the advisability of allowing this matter to stand until the next sitting of the House. It is getting so near the breakfast hour now that it might be well to postpone the matter until we meet again.

Mr. CAHILL: I am willing to allow it to go over until eleven o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a Supply Bill to follow which it is absolutely necessary to get to the Senate. That Chamber is meeting at eleven o'clock, and, if I may be permitted the remark, I think the object in view is to dispose of Supply now.

Mr. CAHILL: There are no items in the Supply Bill except this one. All the other items of supply are in the Supplementary Estimates. I do not see any necessity for rushing this matter now; it could very well stand over until eleven o'clock.

Mr. BUREAU: What would be gained?

Mr. CAHILL: That is for you to answer.

Mr. BUREAU: Then my answer is that nothing would be gained.

Mr. CAHILL: My hon. friend is a poor guesser.

Mr. BUREAU: It is not a guess, it is a question of fact.

Mr. CAHILL: He has proved so in the past and I should not be surprised if he were the same in the future.

Mr. BUREAU: Fortunately I know your judgment.

Mr. CAHILL: Just as I know your inclination.

Mr. BUREAU: What is it?

Mr. CAHILL: There is nothing to be lost to me in pressing this objection. I am speaking purely on principle.

Mr. BUREAU: Does the hon. member want to keep the House sitting until eleven o'clock? If he does we are prepared to stay.

Mr. CAHILL: If the government is going to continue to vote money at this rate they will find themselves in a very difficult position. I have not heard any reason why this vote should be in the estimates. What is the benefit to the Canadian people? Is it proposed to propagate the idea of the protected interests, of the financial interests of this country? I asked the late government how they justified a similar vote; they were not able to answer the question, and their failure to answer it was responsible to some extent for the result of the election of 1921. The people cannot afford to subsidize a press in order that they may be fed with the kind of news that the interests of this country wish them to be provided with. It is not legitimate; it is not Canadian; it is not free; it certainly is not Liberal. Every item of the estimates that has been voted, with the exception of this vote to the Canadian press, has had some justification and has been accompanied by some reasonable explanation. But this item should not be in the estimates. It should not have been voted in 1917. It should not have been voted in 1918, and I opposed it. It should not have been voted in 1919, and I opposed it, as members of the Liberal party did. It should not have been voted in 1920, 1921, and in 1922, and there is no justification for its appearance this year. The people of Canada are suffering from excessive taxation, from business depression, and from bad conditions generally, and they are not prepared to sanction additional taxation for the benefit of the newspaper publishers of this country. They are willing to bear the burden of taxation provided that the purposes of that taxation are legitimate. They felt that the Liberal party would, when they came into power in 1921, give them a new deal, give them less taxation, bring about better conditions, and they are still hopeful that conditions will be better. But with the present newspaper propaganda they are beginning to doubt, and that doubt is increased when they are asked by this vote to contribute $50,000 to the Canadian Press. I think the government should leave this matter over till eleven o'clock and reconsider it, and give this House some reason why this vote should be continued. If the elimination of this vote would work a hardship on the smaller papers I think the Minister of Finance should tell the House just how they would be affected, and how it would affect the dissemination of news between the East and the West and as between the different provinces. If the government wishes to give us this information as to the news service that is to be distributed among the different provinces I am quite prepared to hear their representations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think all the members of the House are anxious that we should prorogue to-day, and as there are still some measures on the order paper that have not been disposed of and which it is important should get over to the Senate as soon as the Senate reconvenes. I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Progress reported.

CONCURRENCE

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): I move that the resolutions reported this day be now read a second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions read a second time and concurred in.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 244, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie):

That the said bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions to amend same by providing that the amount of any guarantees binding on the country given under the said bill be first included in the estimates and voted by parliament.

Amendment negatived on division.

Main motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 43, to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou): The Senate have made several amendments to this measure, some of which I propose that this House concur in. The first amendment is to paragraph (c) of section 1 in which they strike out the words "or brewer" wherever they appear in that paragraph. Paragraph (c) is also amended by adding after the word "distiller" the following "under the supervision of the Department of Customs and Excise." The next amendment is one relating to placing the burden of proof upon the person with liquor in his possession. It reads as follows:

And where the person accused is a person duly licensed by the Government of Canada to carry on the business or trade of a distiller, the burden shall also be on him of proving that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is imported solely for the purpose of being used for blending with or flavouring the products of the business or trade of a distiller carried on by him in the province and that all intoxicating liquor imported and kept by him in the province is kept in a place or warehouse which conforms in all respects to the requirements of the law governing such places or warehouses and that all intoxicating liquor imported by him is used solely for blending with or flavouring the products of his said business or trade.

To that amendment I propose that we should agree. The objectionable amendment is the one that relates to clause 5. The clause as it left this House provided that:

Upon receipt by the Secretary of State of Canada of a duly certified copy of an order of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of any province in which there is, at any time, in force a law vesting in His Majesty or the Executive Government of the province authority for the control and sale of intoxicating liquor in the province, or in any board, commission, officer or other governmental agency the right of selling intoxicating liquor in the province, requesting that the prohibitions contained in subsection one of this section be brought into force in that province, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette, declare the prohibitions of subsection one of this section in force in that province and the same shall thereupon be and continue in force therein.

The Senate have struck out that clause and substituted the following:

(5) Upon receipt by the Secretary of State of Canada of a duly certified copy of an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of any province in which there is at any time in force a law vesting in His Majesty or the executive government of the province authority for the control and sale of intoxicating liquor in the province or in any board, commission, officer, or other governmental agency, the right of selling intoxicating liquor in the province requesting that the votes of the electors may be taken for or against the following prohibition, that is to say:

"That the importation and the bringing of intoxicating liquors into such province may be forbidden."

The Lieutenant Governor in Council may proceed to take a vote on such question in the manner provided in section 152, and the provisions of sections 152 and 152a and 153 shall as far as applicable mutatis mutandis apply to the taking of such vote.

5b. If the prohibition is declared to be in force, the Governor in Council may by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette declare the prohibitions of subsection 1 of this section in that province, and the same shall thereupon be and continue in force therein.

To that clause I would ask the House to disagree. I therefore move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this House hath agreed to their amendments to Bill No. 43, an Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act, with the exception of those made to subsection 5 of section 163 of part V of said bill for the following reason:

1. Because it proposes that the federal authority should impose an wholly unnecessary expense upon the provinces affected.

And that the clerk do carry this message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

BOARD OF AUDIT ACT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 245, to Constitute the Board of Audit.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain?

Mr. FIELDING: The amendment consists of a mere verbal change.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (for the Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 102, to amend the Criminal Code.

He said: The House will recall the proposal that was made by the Minister of Justice in regard to the question of prohibiting other than the publication of betting information. The Senate have struck out that section and substituted therefor the following:

3. Section 235 of the said act is hereby amended by adding to paragraph (f) thereof the following:

(11) Imports or brings into Canada any matter, whether printed or in writing which from the nature of its contents or other evidence adduced is not a newspaper published in good faith mainly for the purpose of supplying news and comment, other than information intended or likely to promote, assist in or be of use in gambling, book-making, pool-selling, betting or wagering upon any race of any kind, fight, game or sport whether held within or without Canada and whether published before, during or after such race, fight, game or sport; or is not a magazine or other periodical published in good faith mainly for the purpose of supplying literature and comment, other than such information as aforesaid; but is intended or likely to afford such information as aforesaid; or

The effect of the provision is to prevent the importation of the paper known as "Racing Information." The amendment falls short of the provisions adopted by the House but in order that we may get the advantage of the prohibition it contains I would propose that the House agree to adopt it.

The Senate have struck out section 4 raising the age of consent from fourteen to sixteen years. They have also struck out section 5 with respect to carnally knowing girls between fourteen and sixteen.

They have introduced another amendment with respect to the percentages collectible in the case of money staked on race tracks, but there is no very material change from the law as it formerly stood. It is only to make more clear the intention of the law. The Senate have also added a very important provision by which there is given to a person who has been convicted the right of appeal upon grounds which never existed before. This measure had been very carefully drawn and followed the principle of the law which had been established in England with regard to the right to appeal in the case of persons who had been convicted.

Motion agreed to.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 232 to Amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

He said: The amendment which the Senate has made to this bill is the addition of the following section:

38A. The Senate or the House of Commons may respectively make regulations, from time to time, by rule or by order, rendering more stringent upon its own members the provisions of this act which relate to attendance of members or to deductions to be made from the sessional allowance.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 203 to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

He said: In connection with the three bills passed by this House relating to returned soldiers, that to amend the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act is not so long and not so important as that relating to the Pension Act. The Senate has made several amendments to this bill, but they are of the same nature as applied to the three different bills. The intention of the original bill was that in cases where the insurance policies had been refused for certain reasons and on account of certain regulations, the policies should now be issued without any question. The bill was prepared with that end in view. The Senate provides in the amendment to the preamble that only those soldiers with actual dependents may have their policies revived; and only in the case of deceased men having, at the time of their death, actual dependents can the benefit of insurance be availed of. When the amendment to the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act was under consideration in the House last year, some restrictions were provided for in the schedule which was attached to the act. On that occasion the member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) moved that all applicants for insurance before the 1st January, 1903, having dependents should not be subjected to the schedule attached to the act. Originally the insurance was available to every returned soldier; but the main object was to provide insurance for the dependents of returned soldiers, and the same clauses of the original act, if they are perused, will tend to reveal that that was the spirit that permeated the House at the time of the passing of the original measure. I think, as only 71 cases are involved, and as the majority of them had dependents when they died we can concur in the Senate amendments. I will therefore move accordingly.

Mr. HUMPHREY: It seems very regrettable that we should be called upon to pass this legislation at this hour of the morning and at this stage of the session. Asking the House to pass upon these amendments to the Insurance Bill is really not giving the members of the House, the people of the country and the returned men as a whole, the fair chance they should have. After one solid year's consideration of this question by a commission appointed by this government, this bill with others has been passed. Now it is returned to us in its present shape; and it does not seem right that we should be asked to pass it before we really have a knowledge of it. I do not wish to obstruct any legislation, but I desire to place my own personal views upon record in connection with the manner in which this legislation has been returned to us and the reasons given for it. It is a well known fact that these amendments have been made on account of the increased cost of administration and other reasons. I have not hesitated to attend the sessions of the committee and devoted my time to the consideration of these matters.

Mr. BELAND: There is no desire to press for the passing of the amendment before the House. The most important bill by far is the Pension Act, but I have no objection to postpone the consideration of the amendment until the next sitting of the House at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HUMPHREY: I was prefacing my remarks in a general way, in order to cover the three bills at once, perhaps extending over a little wider area than the insurance question. I do not wish it to be inferred that this legislation is being hurried through in any way; but I think adequate time should be given to this legislation. Whatever action this House takes, I wish it to be made clear in every way that I feel that I cannot concur in the changes which have been made. I simply wish now to cover, in a brief manner, some of my objections to this bill, and perhaps at the same time cover the amendments to the Pension Act. The principal reason, as I have gathered, for the changes which have been proposed is the expense of the administration, particularly in regard to the Insurance Act. After the country has gone to the expense of appointing a royal commission which went into the matter thoroughly and brought reports to this House, it is only fair that members of the House should stand firm, and insist upon passing the bills as they left the House of Commons. Although we are in the dying days of the session, if it is necessary to stay another week or month I am quite prepared to remain in order to see that legislation which will be to the advantage of the returned soldier is enacted. I have followed with great interest the discussion during the night, and have noticed how the government, with the sanction of the House, have approved money grants, which probably are justified, for celebrations and monuments. I wish to assure hon. members this morning that there are throughout the Dominion of Canada to-day many walking monuments without any provision. I wish again to assure hon. members that the only way the returned men throughout the country have of presenting the different cases and of asking what they consider is within their rights, is through their united efforts and their organized method of procedure. I feel sure that the changes that are now taking place in the Insurance bill, the Pension bill, and the Re-establishment bill will not meet with the approval of this country, and this is going to continue in every way the dissatisfaction that at present exists. I am well aware of the attitude assumed by the present government and of the attitude assumed by the minister. I am well aware of the opposition with which they have met. On the other hand, while I hesitate delaying this legislation, I feel so keenly on the subject that I wish to place on record my views on this legislation, the changes that have taken place regarding the Insurance Act, and in respect to other changes that have taken place contrary to the findings of the royal commission and contrary to the sanction of this House of Commons. I do not wish to be a party to those changes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is desirable that there should be ample opportunity to discuss the changes made by the Senate to this legislation, and for that reason I think it would be advisable if we postpone further discussion at the present time and take the matter up at the next sitting of the House.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I quite agree with my right hon. friend's suggestion, but it is also of importance that we get something; that the legislation ought not to be wasted in any way. I would assume the House would appoint managers to go into conference with the Senate, and we should make that provision at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

[Mr. Humphrey.]

SUPPLY

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It will take some little time to have concurrence to Supply moved and I think that if possible we should immediately complete the voting of the Supply. I therefore suggest that the House return to Supply.

The House in Committee of Supply, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Canadian Press, Limited—Canadian telegraph service, $50,000.

Canadian Press, Limited—British cable service, $8,000.

Items agreed to.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

Mr. FIELDING: I beg to ask the consent of the House to motions for concurrence. I beg to move the following resolution:

Resolved, that two-thirds of the amount of the resolutions reported from Committee of Supply from the 20th February last to the 20th March last, inclusive, forming a total of $33,540,785.30; and two-thirds of the amount of resolutions reported from Committee of Supply from the 27th March last to the 8th June last, inclusive, forming a total of $103,857,326.70; and two-thirds of the amount of the resolutions reported from Committee of Supply from the 11th June instant to the 29th June instant, inclusive, and forming a total of $41,477,010.06; granting to His Majesty amounts voted of the Main Estimates, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to, and resolution concurred in.

Mr. FIELDING: I beg to move the following resolution:

Resolved, that two-thirds of the amount of the resolution reported from Committee of Supply on the 13th April, 1923, providing provisional bonus allowance for the Inside and Outside Services of the Civil Service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1924, and forming a total of $3,666,666.67 be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to, and resolutions concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

On motion of Mr. Fielding the House went into Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1924, the sum of $196,870,229.79 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the Supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1923, the sum of $18,202,105.66 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 252 for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the fiscal years ending respectively March 31, 1923, and March 31, 1924.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

HALIBUT TREATY

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their honours that this House doth agree to their address to His Excellency the Governor General respectfully requesting that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit our joint resolution that parliament do approve of the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the northern Pacific ocean, which was signed at Washington on the 2nd day of March, 1923, a copy of which has been laid before parliament and which was signed on behalf of His Majesty acting for Canada by the plenipotentiary therein named, by filling up the blank therein with the words "and Commons".

Motion agreed to.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 190 to amend the Companies Act.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the adjournment of the House.

He said: The House reassembles at eleven o'clock. I think the Government is fairly safe in assuming that it will be possible to arrange prorogation for three o'clock in the afternoon. It is impossible to fix the time definitely, because there is no telling what debate we may have after we assemble at eleven o'clock. There are one or two matters to be taken up, but for the time being we might assume that prorogation will be at three.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 7.55 a.m. (Saturday).

[Mr. Fielding.]

Saturday, June 30, 1923.

The House met at eleven o'clock.

PENSION COMMISSIONERS

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): I beg to lay on the table of the House the annual report of the Board of Pension Commissioners for Canada for the year ending March 31, 1923. The report for the previous year was laid on the table of the House at an earlier date this session.

REDISTRIBUTION

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): Mr Speaker, I beg to move that the report of the Special Committee appointed to consider Bill No. 15, an act to readjust the representation in the House of Commons be now concurred in.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I have not had time to read the report in extenso. I have only been informed as to its contents, and if my information is correct it merely is a report—

Mr. SPEAKER: Perhaps, for the information of the right hon. gentleman and the House, the Acting Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), who laid the report on the table of the House on Thursday might give a brief explanation. I simply throw out the suggestion.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I had the honour of being selected as chairman of the committee to which was referred Bill No. 15 to provide for a redistribution of seats in this House. I may say that the history of redistribution measures in this country has varied in later years from the practice in a previous period in our history. In days gone by the bill was prepared by the government of the day and presented to the House, and without reference to any committee it went through its various stages just like any other bill. It was treated as a government measure and the redistribution was described as a "gerrymander" of the seats on the part of the government.

In 1903 the procedure of dealing with the question of the redistribution of seats was entirely changed. The government of the day introduced a bill drafted for the distribution of seats generally, but with a schedule, to be filled in describing the various seats, their boundaries and names, this being left to a committee of the House to settle by agreement. I think the committee in 1903 was made up of five members of the House, and the method by which the schedules were settled upon was by discussion, negotiation and agreement among the members of the committee. The bill was thus more a matter of production by parliament as a whole than by the government of the day. In 1914, when the next redistribution took place, a similar procedure was adopted. A bill providing in general terms for the redistribution was introduced into the House by the government, the schedule to be filled in. This was referred to a committee of nine representing all parts of the country and the parties in the House at that time. I had the honour of being a member of that committee, and well remember the procedure which was adopted. Sub-committees were appointed from the general committees made up of groups of two representing the Maritime Provinces, Quebec, Ontario, the western provinces and British Columbia. Each of these groups of two met together, and by discussion, friendly overtures and negotiation settled the boundaries of the various constituencies, discussed and determined the various units of population both urban and rural, and by this method agreed upon a measure which was presented to the House and adopted practically unanimously.

When the present bill was introduced this year by the government and referred to a committee of nineteen I foresaw immediately, with my previous experience, the difficulties that were going to arise in dealing with this question by arrangement and negotiation. Following the best methods, and in an endeavour to arrive at a consistent conclusion, the large committee was divided into sub-committees each composed of three members representing the several groups in the House. There was an exception in the case of the sub-committee on the representation of the province of Ontario. That sub-committee had a membership of six. In the several sub-committees the endeavour to arrive at an agreement met with some success. In the case of the province of British Columbia I think the points of difference narrowed down to a very small question. So also—although that was only ascertained at a very late date—in the case of the prairie provinces, with the exception of the province of Manitoba where there was a very sharp and marked difference of opinion amongst the representative of the several groups as to how the matter could be adjusted. In the case of the Maritime provinces the claim was made on behalf of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia that a minimum representation should be fixed in each of these provinces. The Attorney General of the Province of Nova Scotia and the representative of the Attorney General of New Brunswick appeared before the committee and advanced these claims and gave reasons why this proposal should be carried out. In the case of Ontario my colleague and friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Low) was chairman of the sub-committee. I may say that it did not appear that very much progress was being made with that sub-committee and this might be attributed to various reasons. In any event the representatives of the regular opposition, and our Progressive friends, claimed that the government should prepare and submit plans in detail for the redistribution of that province. There were a great number of adjustments necessary to be made in the case of Ontario but the government did not feel that it was their duty, in any one of these cases, to prepare an arbitrary or settled plan of division; that was left for each representative of each group to submit and to endeavour to arrive at a conclusion by negotiation. Ultimately, however, a plan was prepared by the hon. member for South Renfrew, and several meetings and continued discussion took place. I am not aware of what went on at those meetings, but as the provincial elections in Ontario drew nearer there were absences at various times from the sub-committee and the possibility of an agreement being arrived at seemed to grow "smaller by degrees and beautifully less" as the time went on. Then conditions arose, it seemed to me also as a result of the elections in Ontario, on account of which it seemed reasonable to suppose, having regard to the changes that had taken place, that the representatives of the several parties would not be able for a considerable time to arrive at an exact idea of what ought to be done.

Finally it was apparent that we were approaching the close of the proceedings of the House and that prorogation was at hand. The committee met as a whole and discussed the question very carefully and in a calm and deliberate manner. It was found at this time that two of the members from British Columbia, whose presence was really essential in order that we might get matters adjusted—the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McQuarrie) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Stork)—had returned to their homes, thus reducing the membership of the committee to seventeen. Now the question arose as to whether, in view of the near approach of the end of the session it would be prudent to ask the House to prolong its sittings for the purpose of awaiting the results of the deliberations of the committee, which committee to my mind, speaking in the light of experience, had very little hope of arriving at an agreement; or whether we should report to the House and suggest that consideration of the bill should be deferred until next year. The result was that the committee decided that we should report to the House asking that the bill be deferred until next year.

I am aware that the suggestion has been made that deferring the bill until next year means some substantial danger or difficulty particularly to the western provinces where the representation is to be increased. For the information of the House, however, may I call attention to the experience in regard to the passage of redistribution bills in 1903 and in 1914 respectively. In the case of the former bill, the census which had been taken in 1901 was completed in 1902 and came up for consideration before the parliament which met in 1903. The bill providing for redistribution was not passed, however, until October 24, 1903, which is considerably later than is the present time. In the succeeding decennial period, the census was taken in 1911, and completed in 1912 but the matter was not dealt with by parliament until 1914. In other words, by a parallel illustration, if we were dealing with redistribution as in other years it would not be undertaken until the meeting of parliament next year. The bill of 1914 was introduced on February 10; it was referred to the committee, the final report by that committee was made on June 10, and the measure received its third reading on June 12. Thus it was that there was no redistribution in the last decade until a period a year later than the present period in this decade. Having regard to all the circumstances, it seems to me, and it appeared to the committee representing the various parties, that no injury or harm could arise by reason of the postponement of the measure for a year.

A fear was expressed that a general election might occur before the end of the year, and that parties entitled under redistribution to increased representation might suffer. There is no such possibility, to my mind, as a matter of law. Anyone who will read carefully the provisions of section 51 of the British North America Act will come to that conclusion, I think.

We have heard discussions about redistribution. Reference was made to promises alleged to have been made in 1920 and 1921, that there would be a redistribution before an election. Let it be understood clearly and positively that there is no way by which any redistribution can take place until the full and complete returns of the census have been made to the government. Hon. members will recall that in the session last year the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us, in the last days of the session, that full returns were not in at that time. But the suggestion that there might have been a distribution in 1921, or at any time anterior to the full completion of the census, could not possibly be carried into effect. Because section 51 of the British North America Act says:

> On the completion of the census in the year 1871 and of each subsequent decennial census, the representation of the four provinces shall be readjusted by such authority, in such a manner and from such time as the parliament of Canada from time to time provides, subject and according to the following rules:

So that it is very clear that the census must be completed before the right of redistribution arises; and before it is possible to carry out the mandate of that section. Then there is a subsection which says:

> Such readjustment shall not take effect until the termination of the then existing parliament.

Which means that any redistribution or readjustment of population made after the completion of the decennial census shall not come into effect until the next general election. I have no doubt—speaking with whatever experience I may have had in my profession and expressing a view in which I am supported by others with whom I have discussed the point—that if by any possibility the government of the day were defeated, or if they desired to have an election, it would be the bounden duty of His Excellency the Governor General to refuse the dissolution if any government asked for it after the completion of the census and before redistribution. It would be the duty, I submit, of His Excellency to say to any one who came asking for dissolution, that parliament must proceed to readjust and redistribute before a general election could take place. That is the position of affairs, apart from any other consideration. After full deliberation, I say that there need be no difficulty or no doubt in any quarter whatever as to the fact that no election can take place in this country, under the constitution, until after completion of census without redistribution first being completed.

That being the case, Mr. Speaker, we have reached a stage of the session where the public business is completed and the time for prorogation has arrived. I think that the report of this committee recommending to the House that this matter be deferred until next session is one which should meet with the approval of the House. Ten years ago redistribution was not dealt with until the session of 1914—not touched in any way. We have followed the same practice this session, and the session which will meet in the winter of 1924 will have to deal with the question. In the light of past experience in these matters, if the present motion is carried and report adopted, the question will come up to be dealt with next year. This is a matter quite as much for the House as for the government, following the practice and procedure adopted by the government, 20 years ago, 10 years ago and to-day of leaving the consideration of parliament as a whole the question as to what the redistribution shall be. It will be the duty of the House to seriously consider the composition and formation of the committee which shall deal with this question, if we are going to work out a bill along the lines of those adopted in the previous years.

In my opinion, the committee this year was too large to deal with the question along the lines on which it was considered, and it will be a matter for consideration as to how best to continue the system followed in the two last redistribution years, when Parliament, in the desire to do that which was right and proper and to give full consideration to the parties interested, got together and formulated a bill which was agreeable to all as far as possible. A great deal of information has been gained, and this data is in the possession of the secretary of the committee, and it will be open to all parties between now and next session to consider the situation. They can then come to parliament next winter with their data prepared, and their lines laid down, and they will be in a much better position to deal with the matter than was the committee which held meetings during this session. This session no party had any data or any map, and no one was prepared to deal with the matter in an effectual manner. All this can be obviated and these things put in proper shape, and any committee, no matter how it is constituted, will be able to deal with the whole matter in an effectual and satisfactory way.

It has not been the desire of the government in dealing with the question to impose any views on the committee. The whole question was left to parliament to deal with, unfettered by any political lines, and imbued solely with the view that we should make a redistribution of seats under the constitution which would be eminently fair to everyone. There were great difficulties met with in Ontario which cannot be minimized. There was a tremendous shifting of the population in the last decade. The population in some districts had increased in number while in others it had decreased. How to readjust the boundaries of the constituencies so that there might be fair representation for the rural and urban districts, without any discrimination against either, was a problem that was probably the most difficult that had to be faced by the representative of any of the provinces of the Dominion. The problem in Quebec was not so difficult although there was a sharp contrast and conflict of opinion in regard to one matter in that province. So also in Manitoba, difficulty was experienced. These things require study, thought and attention. It was a matter of great difficulty to proceed to redistribute the province of Ontario in a manner fair to all parties concerned without very great preliminary consideration, and attention to the claims which naturally attached to those who lived in the rural districts; that they should have a lower unit of population than those living in the city. There was the question of continuity of interest which existed among people who had lived in the same municipality for a great many years, there was the consideration that it is well not to disturb county boundaries, if you can possibly avoid it, because that was one of the rules laid down by all who had to do with redistribution in the past. These matters require careful study and thought, I believe, in the interim between the present session and the next session of parliament. If thought and study are given to the subject, no time need be lost in bringing forth next session a measure that will be satisfactory. Indeed, the time will be well spent by representatives of the different parties, knowing where the conflicting interests lie and the difficulties that were met with and will be met with. When we meet together again next year, we shall be able to solve the problem in a manner that, I think, it would not be possible to achieve without greatly prolonging the session. Supposing, with all the business before this parliament substantially disposed of, the suggestion were made that we should continue to sit awaiting the report of this committee, we would be sitting, in my judgment, for over a month, with the House having practically nothing to do in the nature of business, waiting for the termination of the squabbles, uncertainties and difficulties of the committee in dealing with a matter requiring so much thought and care as this does. Therefore, having regard to the fact that no general election can come on without this parliament proceeding to redistribute, to the fact that the problem is one which requires care and attention, and to the further fact that a delay will result eventually, I believe, in producing a bill which will be in the interest of the country as a whole, I submit this motion is one which should be adopted by the House.

Mr. J. FRED JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, I wish to say a few words in connection with the report and the remarks which the minister (Mr. Macdonald, Pictou) has just made. I was glad to note that the minister said that it was decided on division in the committee that the matter be deferred at this time. In looking at the report as it is to be found in the Votes and Proceedings of the 28th day of June, I find that it is stated in the third paragraph:

They therefore have agreed.

There is no mention of a division in that committee on the report as brought down to this House. The chairman of the committee, the minister who has just spoken, and all members of the committee know very well that the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and myself did dissent from that motion.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That is quite right.

Mr. JOHNSTON: My reasons for so doing can be briefly stated. Every one knows that redistribution is due. As regards the prairie section of Canada, we are entitled to eleven more seats, and that is a big consideration. While the chairman has made the matter very easy for all members of the committee in his statement that certain work had been undertaken and something accomplished, I cannot share his view that anything like the amount of work that could have been accomplished was undertaken by members of that committee. In saying that, I want to be fair to all, and unfair to none. But members on the government side put in charge of the sub-committees were men with too much to do. Consequently, the sub-committees were never, or very seldom, called together, with the result that we never got down to the point of attacking the problem as it should be and will have to be attacked.

It is all very well to say that we have reached that stage in the session when every one is looking for prorogation. That is true, and no other hon. member is more anxious to get through and to return to his home than I am—I have been here for five months now—but as I said at the outset, redistribution is due. The electors of my province are entitled to five more seats in this House, and they are going to hold me and every other member from that province accountable for the fact that redistribution is not put through at this session. The minister says that there is no likelihood of an election. I do not know as to that; but I hope if this motion is concurred in and redistribution is put off, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) will see fit to say to this House and to the country that, in so far as the government can say there shall be no election during the interval, or before another session is held and a redistribution bill is put through. But even with that I do not feel that I would be doing what my electors have a right to expect me to do, if I concurred in the report. There is a time for everything, and the time to redistribute the country is the present. I believe if the members of that committee got down to actual work, it would not take very long to put the bill through. I am not going to move in a formal way that this motion be not concurred in. I do not think that such a motion would get much support. I think I know the temper of the House, and I know that the majority of members with the exception of those of us in this corner who come from western Canada, are anxious to get away and would not support such a motion. But I do want to put myself on record as being opposed to concurrence in the report, and to say that redistribution should be completed at once.

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): Mr. Speaker, as I happen to be a member of this committee, and in view of the remarks made by the chairman of the committee and the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston), I feel that I could not very well allow the motion to pass without offering a few observations. I was a little surprised at the remarks of the chairman of the committee in endeavouring to make it appear that a good deal of the delay was caused by the attitude of the sub-committee for the province of Ontario. I must take exception to anything of that kind. The committee was appointed over four months ago. I think I can fairly state that no very serious attempt was made, for a long time after the appointment of the committees, to arrive at any understanding as to how redistribution should be brought about. I appreciate the difficulties of redistribution where the unit of representation is increasing by about 500 every decennial period, and some of the constituencies are decreasing in number, while other are increasing, so that a general redistribution will be necessary. It is somewhat significant, that from the time that the committee was appointed, at practically every meeting of the committee, some reports were being given to the press as to how the proceedings were being conducted. The inference was left that certain members of the committee were responsible for the delay. This applied on several occasions, and I did not think, when the report, which was adopted at the last meeting of the committee and which is now before the House, would be discussed in the House, it would be necessary to refer to this matter in the way I find it necessary to do.

The sub-committee for Ontario were appointed and sent off to bring about a redistribution for that province. But the main committee did not come to any definite understanding as to how redistribution was to be brought about. Efforts were made to get the committee together on several occasions with a view to coming to some decision, and the sub-committeees were instructed to begin work. They did this, but, one province not having any relation to another, hon. members will realize how unfair and unworkable such a system must be. The minister suggests that the committee was too large and he thinks that possibly when parliament reassembles it may be advisable to reduce it in size. Personally I have no particular desire to be on the committee if I am not wanted, but I do think that some satisfactory arrangement ought to be made. The minister made the further statement that prior to the redistribution based upon the census of 1901 the constituencies had been more or less gerrymandered.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): I did not suggest that this was the issue; I merely meant that the matter had been spoken of.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We finally succeeded in getting before the committee a proposition which, while I will not describe it by the word "absurd," undoubtedly was absolutely unworkable, as anyone might have expected. I do not think that very much progress has been made by the commitee. It is true that the Attorneys General of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, were heard with reference to the question of having a fixed representation for these provinces; but outside of that, very little work has been done and I think it is hardly fair for the Chairman to impute blame to any of the other hon. members of the committee. During the four months that parliament has been in session the sub-committees were called together several times, but on no occasion was anything attempted, and if the chairman of the committee had been as anxious to see redistribution materialize this session as his words would lead one to suppose, I think a considerable degree of progress might have been made. In view of the fact that we were almost unanimous I do not see that the near approach of the end of the session need have made it impossible to bring about redistribution after the last meeting, which was called on the 27th or 28th of this month. Nor can I see that the elections in Ontario had any material bearing on the situation. These, at any rate, are my views on the subject.

I had thought that the chairman would give an outline of what was discussed at the last meeting of the committee and that the matter would end there, rather than that the House should be left with the impression that the sub-committee for the province of Ontario was really the stumbling-block in the matter.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): I do not intend to say very much, and certainly I have no desire to reflect on any members of the committee. I believe that we were all somewhat slack, some hon. members more than others, by reason of pressure of work and the onerous nature of other duties to which they were compelled to attend. I simply wish to associate myself on this occasion with the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston), in the House as I did in the committee, representing as we do very directly those parts of Canada that would be most deleteriously affected in the event of an election being held before the realization of redistribution. I believe we were right in our contention, not that there was any great danger of an election, but because we should have been untrue to our trust, having had the interests of these provinces committed into our hands, had we not at least most vigorously protested against even the possibility of such an event occurring. The main reason for my rising just now, however, is to suggest that the report be slightly amended in order that it might conform more closely to the facts. Instead of stating, as the report does, that the committee "therefore have agreed" I would suggest that it state "therefore have agreed, on division."

Mr. JOSEPH T. SHAW (Calgary West): As a westerner I cannot help expressing my regret that, despite the apparently very strenuous labours of the committee over a period of four months, their efforts have so far been fruitless. The position of the committee was not such as would ensure of necessity that any redistribution measure would have been presented to the House; nor yet does the fact that the sessions of the committee are held in secret assist in any way to bring about a conclusion. Personally I had very grave fear of the effect of these secret sessions, although I understood that it had been the practice for two preceding redistribution committees to hold their meetings in that way. I do not think that this is desirable. There would be a greater urgency to action if the meetings were held in public. I have no knowledge at the present time as to what the boundaries of Alberta were; I have no means of getting information unless from a secret source, and I am not prepared to secure it in such a manner. The fact that these sessions are held in secret necessarily increases the tendency towards political log-rolling. It is undesirable that the meetings of the committee should be held privately; they should be held in public so that anyone who desires to attend them may do so. However, I do not want merely to join in a futile dissent; I want to make a suggestion to the House which, not necessarily at the present time, but at some time in the future, may be of value. We have in this country a chief electoral officer whose duty it is to look after the conduct of elections. In connection with redistribution there are only two or three general principles which need consideration and determination. There is, of course, the matter of determining the census and the unit of population. Then there is the necessity for determining the difference between the unit for urban and the unit for rural representation. Of course a certain discretion must be exercised in order to preserve the existing county boundaries; that is to say, a discretion either to increase or to decrease, as necessity may require, the population unit so to preserve the homogeneity of the constituency. I suggest that the House agree, in public session here, upon these fundamental principles, and having determined them relegate the whole matter to an officer such as the chief electoral officer for determination. It would be a comparatively easy matter for him to undertake that work if he had the principles determined for him by parliament. which could be done in public. There is no necessity for political log-rolling, and it would be in the public interest that some such action should be taken.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reference to the remark made by my hon. friend from Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) I would point out that, as already expressed by one or two members of the committee, the power of dissolution rests with His Excellency the Governor General and it would be impossible therefore for anyone to say how or when His Excellency might see fit to exercise that power. So far as the government is concerned I do not hesitate to say that I would, if consulted in the matter, advise His Excellency not to permit a dissolution of this parliament without first having enacted a redistribution measure. The government has no intention of bringing on a general election without a fair redistribution measure being enacted in the first instance.

Motion agreed to.

RIGHT HON. W. S. FIELDING

CONGRATULATIONS ON HIS BEING CALLED TO THE IMPERIAL PRIVY COUNCIL

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): I hope, Mr. Speaker, before the House closes the leaders of the three parties will express their appreciation of the honour conferred on the Right Hon. Minister of Finance in having been called to the Imperial Privy Council. No one is more worthy of it, and no one is held in deeper respect for the very courteous and fair way he has on all occasions facilitated the despatch of public business.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was informed, only a few seconds before the hon. member (Mr. Church) rose, of the happy fact to which he has referred. May I say, it comes as no surprise to me. Indeed, I have long felt that the delay in his being thus honoured must have been attributable more to his own reluctance than to any failure on the part of the authorities overseas to tender to him this honour.

Personally, and speaking for all those who serve with me in this House, I say that the honour is not only due but overdue. Long years of public service, both provincially and federally—a record of service which in point of time and of eminence of station has rarely, if ever, been equalled in the history of our Dominion—abundantly place him within the circle of those who are honoured by admission to His Majesty's Privy Council. I congratulate the Minister of Finance earnestly and sincerely.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted personally, and also on behalf of the group in this part of the House, to join in the congratulations to the Minister of Finance on his being made a member of the Imperial Privy Council. His has been a name to conjure with in this Dominion for many years. He has a place secure in the history of our country, and not only now but in all the years to come the name of the Right Honourable William Stevens Fielding will be honoured. I have very much pleasure in extending my congratulations to him on this occasion.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no announcement could have occasioned more genuine pleasure to members on this side of the House, certainly none has given me more personal pleasure since the opening of this parliament, than the word received by cable this morning that His Majesty the King had honoured our venerable Minister of Finance by inviting him to become a member of the Imperial Privy Council. I think it will be apparent to all that not only has the minister himself been honoured, but that our parliament and our country have been honoured as well. I know I express the feeling of the House when I say to the Right Hon. Mr. Fielding that it is a source of great pride and great pleasure to us all that His Majesty has thus honoured him. We hope and pray that he may be preserved in health and strength for many years to enjoy this distinguished honour, and to remain a source of strength and inspiration to us all.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, on behalf of the province of Nova Scotia, which regards the Minster of Finance as one of her most distinguished sons, to say to this House how proud we are of the distinction which His Majesty has conferred upon the right hon. gentleman. Few of our public men have such a long and distinguished political career to their credit, and few enjoy so fully the respect and confidence of their province. I wish to associate the people of Nova Scotia in these congratulations and to express the hope that the right hon. gentlemen may long be spared to adorn the public life of our Dominion.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the House that the Labour party adds its congratulations to those already tendered to the right hon. gentleman on this occasion. I do not suppose there is any public man in Canada who enjoys the respect of the whole country to a greater degree than does the Minister of Finance by reason of the great national services he has rendered. If for no other reason, I think the infinite patience which he displayed in the transactions of the Banking committee this session fully merits the hon. our which has been conferred upon him.

Right Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate more deeply than words can express the great kindness which is shown to me to-day by the members of the House. Politics has its troubles, its trials and its strife, but it has its pleasant side, and it is always a pleasure for me to think that amidst the hard fighting of politics—and I have had my share—I have always had the happy fortune of enjoying pleasant relations with the men who have differed from me as well as with those who have given me loyal support. I think it is quite possible to fight one's battles in an honourable way, to do the right thing for your own side believing you are doing it for the country, and at the same time win the respect and confidence even of those who differ from you. I shall not say any more than to express to my right hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition—with whom I have occasion once in a while to cross swords—to my hon. friend the leader of the Progressives, to my colleague from Nova Scotia, to my hon. friend also who last spoke representing another party, and last but not least to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, how deep a pleasure their warm appreciation has given me. I thank them sincerely for their good words.

COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINERALS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. CHURCH: I would ask the right hon. the Prime Minister what disposition the government proposes to make of the fine report of the committee on Mines and Minerals relating to the coal question, and especially their strong recommendation as to the National Railways becoming busy by carrying coal at cost without any dallying?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report has been adopted by the House, and certainly the government will take into consideration all its recommendations.

Mr. CARROLL: I may tell my hon. friend from North Toronto (Mr. Church) that the report was concurred in by the House a few days ago, and I have no doubt the government during the recess will make it possible to carry out the representations which the committee has made.

PENSION ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to consider amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 205, an act to amend the Pension Act.

Mr. KNOX: Have we passed the Orders of the Day, Mr. Speaker? We have no order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: On account of the long sitting yesterday the Orders of the Day could not be placed before hon. members this morning, but I am quite willing to send this one to my hon. friend.

Mr. KNOX: I had a matter that I wished to mention. Should I be in order, Mr. Speaker, in bringing it up now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If I might make a suggestion to my hon. friend; the Minister of Soldiers' Re-establishment has some amendments to a bill which it will be necessary for the Senate to consider, and if it is agreeable to my hon. friend to allow that matter to be discused at once so that the bill can go across to the Senate, I will suggest to Mr. Speaker when the matter is disposed of that we return to the Orders of the Day to give my hon. friend an opportunity to ask his question.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): About ten days ago the House passed a bill intituled an act to amend the Pension Act. That bill had been carefully prepared. It was based on the recommendations of the royal commission which had been appointed to investigate the questions of pensions and re-establishment, and also to look into some charges that had been brought against the Board of Pension Commissioners. The bill as I introduced it in the House was rather a lengthy one, and contained two outstanding principles. The first principle was the restoration in the Pension Act of the so-called "insurance" principle as against the "due to service" principle. The second principle of the bill was that which provided machinery for appealing from the decision of the Board of Pension Commissioners. These, I repeat, were the two outstanding principles that were a special recommendation of the royal commission.

The bill passed this House, and so far as these two principles are concerned they were not affected at all by the action of the Senate. In the Senate a committee was appointed, and for a time we in this House were all more or less filled with apprehension that some radical amendments might be made to the bill which might destroy one or both of those principles which were contained in the original draft. Happily those apprehensions were not well founded. It is true that the Senate committee amended the bill considerably, and a copy of the bill as reported from the Senate committee was distributed yesterday to the hon. members of the House. Reading over that bill one would find, naturally, that the insurance principle of the bill had been done away with, but when the report of the Senate committee was considered in the Senate chamber last night the insurance principle was restored in the bill exactly as it was passed by this House. So, to make a long story as short as possible at this late stage, both of the principles incorporated in the bill as presented to this House have been preserved in the Senate. As far as the insurance principle in the awarding of pension is concerned, it is left intact as it was passed by this House. As far as the provision for appeal from decisions of the Pension Board is concerned, that has been altered, but not substantially.

The original bill provided for a district appeal board in every one of the nine units of the department, and also for a central appeal board. That was the recommendation of the royal commission. The Senate has amended that part of the bill in so far as it did away with the district boards as such, but has preserved the provision for appeal in the creation of a central federal appeal board composed of not less than five and not more than seven members appointed one-half for two years and one-half for three years. Provision is also made in the Senate amendment for members of that central board to come in contact with the appellants in every unit of the department. So if one stops to consider carefully the amendment of the Senate regarding the appeal provision, one comes to the conclusion that the privilege which had been secured for the men to appeal personally before the district appeal boards is preserved, inasmuch as a section of the central board will sit in the different units of the department. So, though I would have preferred that the district boards be preserved—that was the wish of the returned men generally I think, and also the recommendation of the royal commission—while I would have wished that provision to have been passed integrally I do not see any reason why we should not concur in the amendment, because the provision for appeal is preserved and the appellant in each case will have the privilege of appealing personally or through his representative before the appeal board.

Some other minor amendments have been made to the act which I think we can very well concur in, inasmuch as some of those amendments do away with provisions that were meant to more or less meet individual cases. The Senate, in doing away with some of those clauses that were passed during the consideration of the bill the other day, introduced in the bill a new clause which I shall take the liberty of reading to the House. Some hon. members are concerned about some individual cases which they claim are meritorious and in which pension should be awarded, but in the clause introduced by the Senate, hon. members will see, those cases will be dealt with notwithstanding the disappearance from the bill of some two or three small clauses:

> Any individual case which, in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Pension Board and the Appeal Board acting jointly appears to be especially meritorious and for which in said opinion no provision has been made in this act, because such case did not form part of any class of cases may be the subject of an investigation and adjudicated by way of compassionate pension or allowance irrespective of any schedule to this act

That provides for discretionary power, outside any other provision of the bill, to deal with those special individual cases of which there are one or two, I think, within the knowledge of every hon. member.

Now, I do not think there is reason to refuse to agree with the amendments the Senate made last night to the Pension bill as passed by the Commons. We have worked conscientiously in this House, I think, to provide legislation that would meet the reasonable requests of the men generally, and that would also remove some of the grievances under which they labour. I think it is my duty to thank the House generally for the support they gave me in this respect. I think I can say that nothing has been spared to render the situation as satisfactory as possible for the men who have deserved so much from Canada.

Mr. J. A. CLARK (Burrard): I do not know that this is the time to discuss the various amendments that have been made to the bill, but if I am in order I want to refer to one or two points. In the first place, I do not think any member of the House has had the opportunity of scrutinizing the amendments made by the Senate, and which the minister has advised the House to adopt. It is very difficult, therefore, for me or any other member of the House to express an opinion as to whether or not these amendments will do justice to the soldier body. The minister made some point of a section which he read covering individual cases. The Senate has passed a provision which gives the appeal board and the Board of Pension Commissioners power to award a pension in meritorious cases. Now, while I do not doubt that the Senate and the minister have it in their minds to cover those meritorious cases, I am just as satisfied that they will not and cannot be covered by the amendment as introduced, and I will give an instance showing how impossible this is—either it is impossible, or else the example I am going to cite is not a meritorious case, one or the other. We will take, for example, the case of a man who died the other day and who comes from the constituency of the leader of the Progressives (Mr. Forke)—Private MacPhail—while this is an individual case there are hundreds of such cases in Canada to-day, and probably if they were all covered it would mean a considerable increase in the annual pension bill, not a material increase but probably an addition to the public expenditure of an odd hundred thousand dollars per annum. Private MacPhail was severely wounded in France, one of his eyes being shot out; and he was taken prisoner. He was operated on without chloroform by the Germans about eight days afterwards. He had no attention up to that time. Both eyes were removed and no anaesthetic was given him. Private MacPhail was one of the first men exchanged. He came back to Canada and was discharged more than five years ago. Now section 33 of the act provides that if a man dies more than five years after the date of his discharge his dependents cannot be in receipt of a pension unless his death is directly attributable to military service as such. But this man, like many others, died from some disease —I have forgotten what it was but his death was certainly not due to his wound. His widow cannot be given a pension as a "meritorious" case under the amendment referred to because of section 33. The minister stated distinctly—I wrote down his words—that the case was one for which no provision has been made in the act. Therefore, the Pension board and the appeal board cannot award a pension to the dependents of that man because it is otherwise provided for in the act.

Mr. BELAND: Not in this case.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, in this case.

Mr. BELAND: What was the reason he did not get a pension?

Mr. CLARK: Because he died of a disease not directly connected with his eye—his wound. It was a hundred per cent disability case owing to the fact that this man lost his sight through a wound. I forget what he died of, but we will suppose that it was diphtheria.

Mr. BELAND: Did he die within five years?

Mr. CLARK: He did not.

Mr. BELAND: Then he does not come under the act.

Mr. CLARK: He does come within the act, excuse me.

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. CLARK: Excuse me. I know my point and if it is necessary to explain it again I will. The act provides that if he dies more than five years after dscharge then the disability must be directly attributable to his military service. Now, if he dies of diphtheria it is not attributable to military service is it?

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. CLARK: Therefore his dependents will not be paid a pension will they?

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. CLARK: Is it a meritorious case?

Mr. BELAND: Certainly.

Mr. CLARK: Assuming it is a meritorious case the minister, I take it, thinks it should be provided for by the act. Is that right?

Mr. BELAND: It is.

Mr. CLARK: Then I say the minister is absolutely wrong and does not understand the principle of the bill, because the amendment he has cited says that the Pension board and the appeal board may award a pension in a meritorious case where that case is not otherwise provided for by the act. Now, the act distinctly provides that if he dies more than five years subsequent to his discharge his dependents cannot receive a pension.

Mr. BELAND: Why?

Mr. CLARK: Unless his death is directly attributable to military service. That is the law, and no provision of this sort can affect it, because it must be a meritorious case which must be provided for by the act. That is clear as daylight, and I am certain that if the minister will take the advice of the Department of Justice there can be no question at all about my argument.

[Mr. Béland.]

Mr. BELAND: His case does come within the provisions of the act since he died more than five years after his discharge. If he died within five years the act would apply.

Mr. CLARK: Yes.

Mr. BELAND: There is no provision for him is there?

Mr. CLARK: There is provision in this way: It is expressly provided by the act that if he dies after a period of five years his dependents cannot be awarded a pension unless the disability is directly attributable to military service.

Mr. BELAND: There is no provision in the act under which he can be awarded a pension?

Mr. CLARK: No.

Mr. BELAND: Then he must come under the "meritorious" clause.

Mr. CLARK: I say there is no clause in the act which would give his dependents a pension, but there is a clause which denies them a pension, and as long as that clause denying the pension is in the act, no such clause as the minister has referred to can right that wrong. Because this section is expressly reserved to cases which are not provided for by the act. This case is provided for, it is provided that this man's dependents shall not get a pension.

Mr. BELAND: I do not see the case in the same light as my hon. friend. If the case is unprovided for in the act this man's dependents have a right to present their claim as a meritorious case to the appeal board. That is the intention of the Senate amendment I think.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think the minister has quite caught the point, and I am not so sure that I can state it to the committee more clearly than the hon. member (Mr. Clark) did. My hon. friend would be quite satisfied if the case in question—a case described purely by way of illustration—could come within the "meritorious" cases clause. All he argues for, as I understand it, is that it should have a right to come within that class, and I presume if the case were meritorious it could be dealt with. But he says the only cases that can come within that class are those composed of another class, and these, not being within the compass of the other class, are denied the right to come within it. He only wants the right to come within that class, as provided in the bill before it was amended.

Mr. BELAND: I see the point very clearly, but I will cite another case. If, for instance, the case referred to by my hon. friend were that of a widow dependent upon this soldier who was in straitened circumstances; though there is a section in the act which says that if he died within five years the widow would receive a pension, and if he died after five years she is not entitled to a pension, still the case may come before this board as a meritorious case.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister says others can, but he cannot; he is denied the right, for the reason that he does not come within the class. He is specifically denied the right to come within the class of those who may come to the board on a meritorious basis.

Mr. CLARK: She may come before the Board of Pension Commissioners and the appeal board, if no provision has been made in the act for such a case.

Mr. CARROLL: Under the broad principle of the act, there is a class entitled to a pension and a class not entitled to pension. I think the Senate amendments will give all those meritorious cases, to whom the act is directed, the power to come before this board composed of the pension commissioners and the appeal board, not that they are entitled to a pension—they may be debarred from it —but they may come before the board on compassionate and meritorious grounds. Some people are entitled to pension under the act and others are debarred from it. If there is a meritorious case, to which compassion will be extended, I think the amendment if it means anything, will bring the case within the class. I am glad that the apprehensions which some of us felt a day or two ago, when the report came out that the Senate was likely to reject the amendments passed by this House to the Pension Act founded on the report of the royal commission, have disappeared. I have discussed this matter with some gentlemen who are deeply interested in the returned soldiers, members of the Great War Veterans; and while they feel that, perhaps, an injustice has been done in some respects, they think the broad insurance principle of the act and the appeal board generally has been maintained in the amendments proposed by the Senate. I hope that the gentlemen who are placed on these appeal boards will have a broad-minded sympathy towards the returned soldiers. I do not think either the soldiers, or their dependents or friends, are anxious that returned soldiers who are not entitled to pensions should receive them. But many cases have been decided by the Board of Pension Commissioners where justice has not been done, in my opinion, to returned soldiers in the past; and this was the ground on which the Great War Veterans Associations and kindred organizations of this country asked for the royal commission. That commission made its report, and while they did away with the nine appeal boards, representing the nine units under the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment, I think the broad principle of the act as introduced in this House has been maintained; and all I ask at the present time is this: although the Minister of the Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment has no real jurisdiction over the Board of Pension Commissioners, I think he should make it known in some way, publicly or privately, that it is the desire of himself and of this House that a broadminded sympathy should be extended to the soldiers in this country, because it is better that one soldier who is not entitled to a pension should receive it than that one soldier concerning whose right there is some doubt should be denied the pension. I have no doubt in the world that if the minister expresses this opinion to the Board of Pension Commissioners, and appoints men of broad sympathies to the appeal boards the problem of pensioning soldiers in this country will have been, I think, properly dealt with.

I feel that a great thanks are due to the royal commission for the efforts they put forth to do justice to the returned men of this country. They showed a broad and keen sympathy in their report for the soldiers, which I think the public are anxious should be shown.

Mr. MURRAY MacLAREN (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert): I trust the minister will make the section relating to the widow in meritorious cases a little clearer. It would be unfortunate if this act were to pass with a clause that is open to argument. The cause of much of the difficulties in the history of the Pension Act has been the obscurity of the wording and difference of interpretation. I think, therefore, the minister would do well if, by the insertion of two or three words, he could eliminate the possibility of an argument or difference of opinion as to the meaning of this clause. At the same time I believe the section as it stands would enable those in charge to carry out the act satisfactorily. As there is this doubt, now is the opportunity of putting it beyond doubt. I would place the claim on the ground of a compassionate allowance. The act does not say that any special case shall not receive compassionate allowance. This is substantially and in essence a compassionate allowance. While that is quite true it would be wise to make this matter clear beyond all question.

Mr. L. W. HUMPHREY (Kootenay West): I am sure that I and many other members of the House appreciate the action taken by the minister this morning in postponing the presentation of these bills to the House until this sitting, so as to enable some of us to obtain a little more information. I am sure the minister realizes that at the time these bills were presented this morning some of us did not know the real effect of them. Since then we have had an opportunity of studying them a little more closely and have gained some information. I should like to say just a word as regards concurring with the remarks made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll), and particularly to emphasize the fact that I think each member of this House has been watching the proceedings of the Ralston Commission, the action taken by the other legislative body, and the action of the different departments connected with the Board of Pension Commissioners and the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment. I am sure each member of this House knows the attitude of the minister, and they know it is his intention so far as possible to assist in enforcing and carrying out these amendments to the act. By studying the findings of this commission, we shall find that the charges that were laid by the different representatives and the evidence given before that commission in regard to the administration of the Pension Act in past years were well founded. It was proven, in my opinion, that the act was not administered as it was intended it should be. I was wondering if it were possible for members of this House to give a further expression of opinion in regard to the administration of this act as it affects departments under the control of the minister. We must realize that the success of these changes of the act as amended, depends entirely upon administration, and if it is proved by any investigation that the administration has not been what it was intended to be, better satisfaction will be created, not only amongst returned men, but throughout the country as a whole, if it is possible for this House to take any steps that will assure the country that this act will be administered as it was drawn up and intended to be administered. If possible, I should like to urge that thought upon the minister, in a way not bearing against or reflecting upon him at all, but with a view of furthering and bettering the carrying out of the Pension Act.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise only for one purpose. I wish to say a word as regards the pension commissioners. I do so speaking for myself alone, and not in this regard intending to represent the views of others. It has become somewhat the habit to attribute all disappointments in relation to pensions to the pension commissioners. It may be popular to do so. I know how difficult the position of many is. Whenever anything is declined, it is easier, of course, to blame the commissioners than to take any other course. But really I have a sense of justice, and I know nothing has come to my observation—and I have had many complaints all of which I have traced right through—to impair the confidence I have always felt in the chairman of the commission, or in its other members. The chairman of the commission is a man who, in the early days of the war, gave his services in a very difficult capacity, a capacity that men shrank from. He did so vigorously, with great devotion to duty, and with marked ability, for a period of many months, I think at least two years, or close to that. Entirely without remuneration, he gave his services to the country. Thereupon he went overseas and endured the worst that the war had to offer in the way of peril, privation and suffering. His ability is too well known to need words from me; it is well known to hon. members of all sides of the House; but if his ability is excelled by any other quality, it is by his integrity. I know his sympathy would be wholly with the men; indeed, I have heard from his lips expressions that have left, and will leave their impression upon my mind for many years, expressions that have convinced me once and for all, where his sympathy lies. But such is his integrity that no sympathy in the world would sway him from what he felt was his duty under the law. I am just as confident that John Thompson will administer the law truly, accurately and carefully despite all pressure whatever, as I could be of another man in his position.

If parliament wants the law to be different, and parliament does, the right thing to do is to enact it; to make the duty of the commissioners under the law more a duty of sympathy to the men, to make clear just what parliament intends, and the intent of parliament will be carried out in the law. I say that without any reflection on Colonel Ralston, whom I do not know so well by any means. It is very easy for a commissioner to review this case and that, and, perhaps, to be of a different opinion. I do not impugn the sincerity of his opinion; but nevertheless, no matter who are the commissioners, no matter what is the law, and no matter how long we have experience in these matters, we shall always be able to say that in respect of this, that or the other case, a lack of sympathy was shown. Such is inevitable and inevitable, not only in a small degree, but in a great degree, and it is going to be the case from this on. It will be the case no matter who in the world sits in those seats. I thought it my duty to say this for Mr. Thompson. I have seen very little of him during the discharge of his duties as Pension Commissioner, but I know him well enough to say that he has been actuated by nothing but a desire to carry out the law as he comprehends the law.

Right Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to be permitted to add a word. Busily engaged as I have been in other things, I have not had an opportunity to pay as much attention to this very important question of pensions for soldiers as I desire, and I do not wish to discuss anything that has happened as between the pension commissioners and others. But I ask permission to say a word or two from my personal experience, not so much as a minister, as a member of parliament. Many of my constituents had, as they thought, claims against the Pension board, and like other members, I received complaints. In every instance when I went to the Pension board I am satisfied I received from Colonel Thompson and his associates absolute justice. I say that in strict justice to them. I have the highest respect for Colonel Thompson, and while he may have erred in some of these matters, from my personal knowledge of him, representing as I did a number of people in my constituency who had complaints which they desired to have considered, I can say that he brought to the performance of his duty a high sense of responsibility that bore testimony to his eminent qualification for the position he fills.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): I feel that I am bound to say something on this question, because I represent a constituency in which there are between 25,000 and 35,000 pensioners. Now I realize that the Senate is a very useful body and performs a serviceable function in this country. But in this instance I think that Chamber has not acted in the best interests of the people of Canada. The legislation was passed by the House of Commons after the most mature consideration. Last session a special committee went thoroughly into the whole question, holding some 47 meetings during the three or four months that it functioned. It utilized the material that had been established by its predecessors and heard various witnesses from all parts of the country. Before that committee evidence was given by the Pension board and by pensioners from every part of the country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The findings of the committee were crystallized into legislation, and after their work had been concluded a royal commission was appointed to investigate the entire subject relating to the pensions of returned soldiers. That commission visited many cities and took copious evidence, and the legislation that has now been passed by this House has been based on the soundest and the most complete inquiry that has ever been held into any subject of so important a character. The legislation was not hastily drafted; it was not ill-advised, nor ill-considered. The minister himself devoted a large part of his holiday to a study of the situation and he was assisted very efficiently by his deputy. They went exhaustively into the whole question, gathering material from every conceivable source, so that their investigation might be of practical assistance in the preparation of the legislation that was subsequently submitted to the House of Commons and adopted thereby. When brought down in this House the bill was considered very carefully clause by clause and the committee in a laudable manner forgot party for the time being, bearing in mind only the good of the soldiers themselves. The bill finally received its third reading and was sent to the Senate. I repeat, the Senate performs certain useful duties; and hon. members of that body, like hon. gentlemen in this Chamber, have the proud distinction of having had sons who participated in the war. But I do not think that the Senate was well-advised in dealing with the bill as it has done.

We are spending millions of dollars in this country on railways, on breakwaters, on canals and on other public works of various descriptions, and when we can devote such expenditures to the material necessities of the country, I think it should be the first duty of every member of parliament, whether of the House of Commons or the Senate, to see that the country's supreme duty by the soldiers is adequately discharged. These men went to the front and suffered for $1.10 a day, and 7,000 of those that went from my city will never come back. In the position of Mayor of Toronto, which I had the honour to hold for seven years, there came to my attention, during a great part of that time, between fifty and sixty cases of returned men every day. The matter took up a great deal of my time, which, let me say, I never grudged for a moment. But my experience served to inform me of the great need of these men. I am therefore exceedingly sorry that the Senate should have interfered with a matter of this kind which comes altogether within the purview of this House, composed, as it is, of members who represent directly the people of the country. The Senate, I think, would have been well-advised to have left the question entirely to this Chamber. I hope, therefore, that the minister will maintain his position in this matter. If this bill were carried as originally passed by this House I am sure it would work satisfactorily in the interests of the returned soldiers.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Calgary East): The representatives of Labour in this country are not satisfied with this bill as amended by the Senate. I am sure that the House of Commons has very well expressed its opinion concerning the obligations which Canada owes to all her returned men who have suffered in any way in the discharge of their duties in the late war. Those obligations, we are all agreed, should be made good; that was the opinion of this House as embodied in the bill that went to the Senate and which now comes back more or less mutilated. It is deplorable that a body that is not responsible to the country should have the power to frustrate the wishes of the people's representatives in this way. Notwithstanding the expressions of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) with regard to the Pension board, I have an idea that they did more than their duty. I do not take issue with the right hon. gentleman as to the ability of the members of the board, but I do think that the representatives of the returned soldiers had some grievance inasmuch as it appears that the Pension board exceeded their duty. I think we should carry out our obligations to the returned men; of this there can be no question. It is the opinion of parliament, and there is plenty of money for the purpose. The Senate need not be concerned about saving the people's money in the way they evidently propose. The cry of economy so far as it affects the returned soldiers is false, for these men have well earned much more than we can give them. I very much regret that the act was mangled in the way it has been, and I hope that next session it will be again introduced and at that time carried into effect.

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. M. N. CAMPBELL (Mackenzie): It seems to me that Canada has assumed two distinct classes of obligations as a result of her participation in the world war: One, the financial obligations to those who loaned money to the country at that time; and the other, a moral obligation to the men who went overseas and fought in the service of their country and who have come back suffering disabilities which have incapacited them for their duties in civil life. It would be just as logical for the Minister of Finance to inform the bondholders that their interest rates were now reduced to three per cent as it is to inform these men that we must practise economy at their expense, and thus fail to discharge a moral obligation by which the country is bound to them. I must admit I have not given the matter a great deal of study, but from my rather superficial view of it I am inclined to think that after all it is not legislation that is needed. This House gave its opinion in no uncertain way that it desired the Pension board to interpret the law in the most generous manner possible, and I believe that even though the Senate may have seen fit to reject the legislation precisely as passed by this House, an expression of opinion from the House of Commons itself should be almost sufficient to impart to the board the spirit in which it is desired the law should be carried out.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

DEPARTMENT OF SOLDIERS' CIVIL RE-ESTABLISHMENT ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Consideration of amendment by the Senate to Bill No. 204 to amend the Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment Act.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): Mr. Speaker, the only amendment is intended to fit in with the new federal appeal board. There can be no objection to the amendment, and therefore I move that it be concurred in.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

RETURNED SOLDIERS' INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Further consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 203 respecting the Returned Soldiers' Insurance Act.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): Mr. Speaker, though these amendments to a certain degree restrict the privileges contained in the original act, I think they should be concurred in. As explained this morning, these amendments provide that all returned soldiers who previous to July 1, 1922 applied for insurance, and were refused, shall, without medical examination, be given the benefits of the Insurance Act if they have actual dependents. There are only seventy-one cases involved, and I hope the majority of them have dependents. Therefore I move concurrence in the amendments.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

HALIFAX TERMINAL ELEVATOR

Mr. MacKELVIE:

1 When was the public elevator at the Halifax terminals first erected, by what bodies was the money supplied for the purpose and in what amounts?

2. What was the capacity of such elevator?

3. How much grain was put through it in each of the years of its existence?

4. For what period, if any, was its capacity used?

5. Have representations been made to the government by the Canadian National Railways to supply capital requirements for a new elevator at Halifax? If so, when, and what is the government's policy with regard thereto?

6. Have representations been made to the government by the Canadian National Railways to supply capital requirements for the construction of a railway pier terminal at Dartmouth? If so, what is the policy of the government with regard thereto?

7. Have representations been made to the government by the Canadian National Railways to supply capital requirements to construct a terminal pier at Sydney? If so, what is the policy of the government with regard thereto.

8. Is it intended that the Canadian National Railways shall grant the Canadian Pacific Railway running rights over the Atlantic division of the Canadian National Railways?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Elevator was built in the year 1898 as a capitial expenditure of the Government Railways at a cost of $110,622.

2. 500,000 bushels.

3.

Year	Bushels
1903	71,826
1904	75,611
1905	139,739
1906	30,283
1907	Nil
1908	17,925
1909	350,318
1910	222,822
1911	198,685
1912	Nil
1913	959,390
1914	1,518,092
1915	639,666
1916	975,242
1917	1,850,400
1918	4,700,097
1919	3,825,000
1920	901,211
1921	149,790
1922	10,468
1922	10,077

4. On several occasions elevator has been filled to capacity. It will be seen from answer to question 3 that the largest quantity of grain handled was in 1918. The superintendent advises that elevator could have handled double the quantity if worked to full capacity between the months of November and May.

5. Provision has been made by the government in supplementary estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce to build a new elevator at Halifax which will be operated by Canadian National Railways.

6. No.

7. No.

8. No application has been received by the Canadian National Railways to grant such running rights to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

HALIFAX TERMINAL FACILITIES

Mr. MacLAREN:

1. What is the policy of the government with respect to capital requirements to complete the landing sheds and passenger station at the Halifax ocean terminals?

2. Have any arrangements been made for steamship sailings of the Canadian Government Mercantile Marine between Canadian and American ports, and British and European ports for the season of 1924?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. The policy of the government in such matters will depend upon the recommendation of the chairman and board of directors, Canadian National Railways, and the financial conditions of the country

2. No arrangements have as yet been made for sailing of Canadian Government Merchant Marine steamers between Canadian and American ports and British and European ports for season 1924.

IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT—QUEBEC

Mr. LAVIGUEUR:

1. What is the number of permanent employees or officials, at present, in the Department of Immigration at Quebec and how many of them speak French fluently?

2. How many residents of Quebec have obtained positions in the Department of Immigration, at Quebec?

3. How many outsiders have been transferred to the Department of Immigration, at Quebec?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

(1) 34; 18 speak French fluently.

(2) 27 of permanent employees mentioned in number 1 are residents of Quebec; 23 other residents of Quebec have been appointed for the navigation season.

(3) Eight, temporarily.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL PURCHASES

Mr. HANSON:

1. What was the value of the coal purchased from the United States by the Canadian National Railways, including all routes or systems embraced in its operation, in the following fiscal years: 1920-1921, 1921-1922, and 1922-1923?

2. How was the amount distributed among the various units of the Canadian National System?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Announcement respecting coal purchased by Canadian National Railways during preceding year is made by Minister of Railways in his annual statement to Parliament. This information gives total quantities, average price and source of supply. The attached statement gives this information for the years 1920-21-22, as regards the Canadian National Railways distinct from the Grand Trunk, and for the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the years 1921 and 1922. The Grand Trunk was privately-owned and operated in 1920.

2. The Railway Management has been asked to supply a statement as to the distribution of these coal purchases among the various units of the Canadian National System. As this information goes back three years, and covers each of the several groups, it will take some time to secure the information.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAY—ALBERTA COAL

Mr. SHAW:

1. What persons, firms and corporations in the province of Alberta supply coal to the Canadian National Railways?

2. What price is paid per ton?

3. Are the contracts for such coal awarded by tender?

4. For what period have such contracts, if any, been awarded?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. Brazeau Collieries, Big Valley Collieries, Blackstone Coal Company, Blue Diamond Coal Compaay, Bush Mine Coal Company, Coal Valley Mining Company, Ellis Coal Company, Lakeside Coals, Coal Sellers Limited, Spicer Coal Company, Tofield Coal Company, Marcus Collieries, Mountain Park Coal Company, Rosedale Coal Company, Cadomin Coal Company, Humberstone Coal Company, Mount Cavell, Superior Collieries, Sterling Collieries.

2. The management does not consider it in the interests of the Canadian National Railways to publish this information.

3. Yes.

4. Such contracts run from April 1, to March 31, each year.

PUGSLEY COMMISSION—REPARATION CLAIMS

Mr. HARRIS:

1. Has the government authorized Hon. W. Pugsley to investigate claims for reparations for atrocities committed during Great War?

2. Are the claims for reparation for atrocities being disposed of before the claims for property damage?

3. Are the claims for reparation for atrocities already filed being reviewed by Pugsley Commission?

4. Is Pugsley Commission calling claimants to give evidence in said cases?

5. Are claimants being advised of the time and place of sittings?

Hon. Mr. COPP:

1. The government has appointed the Honourable William Pugsley, K.C., LLD., to investigate and report upon all claims that have been submitted for reparation, and to ascertain whether or not they come within the meaning of the following subsections of Annex I to Article 232 of the Treaty of Versailles:

Annex I

(1) Damage to injured persons and to surviving dependents by personal injury to or death of civilians caused by acts of war including bombardments or other attacks on land, on sea, or from the air, and all the direct consequence thereof, and of all operations of war by the two groups of belligerents wherever arising.

(2) Damage caused by Germany or her allies to civilian victims of acts of cruelty, violence or maltreatment (including injuries to life or health as a consequence of imprisonment, deportation, internment or evacuation, of exposure at sea or of being forced to labour) wherever arising, and to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(3) Damage caused by Germany or her allies in their own territory or in occupied or invaded territory to civilian victims of all acts injurious to health or capacity to work, or to honour, as well as to the surviving dependents of such victims.

(4) Damage caused by any kind of maltreatment of prisoners of war.

(8) Damage caused to civilians by being forced by Germany or her allies to labour without just remuneration.

(9) Damage in respect of all property wherever situated belonging to any of the Allied or Associated States or their nationals, with the exception of naval and military works or materials, which has been carried off, seized, injured or destroyed by the acts of Germany or her allies on land, on sea or from the air, or damage directly in consequence of hostilities or of any operations of war.

(10) Damage in the form of levies, fines and other similar exactions imposed by Germany or her allies upon the civilian population.

2. No. All claims are being heard on an equal footing.

3. Yes.

4. Yes. All claimants are permitted to give evidence upon oath in support of their claims.

5. Registered notices advising the claimants of the time and place of sittings are sent to each applicant who has filed a claim in this office, and furthermore notices are published in the press prior to the commencement of the sittings.

On the motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House returned to Orders of the Day.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—BRANCH LINES

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ANDREW KNOX (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, a report appears in the papers this morning in regard to the disposition of the Canadian National Railways Bill by the Senate, to which I wish to call the attention of the government, although I hardly think it is necessary. This report will come as a death knell to the hopes of thousands of people in the West. It will reach the outlying districts to-morrow or the next day, some it may not reach for a week, but it will bring keen disappointment to all those who for many years have been promised railway facilities.

In view of the situation, more particularly in the prairie provinces, I would ask the government if there is no possible way of overcoming the present unsatisfactory disposition of the bill? The people in the West who would have been served by the construction of the branch lines proposed in the legislation which went through this House have had their hopes deferred for many years, and now when there appeared to be every prospect of their at last obtaining relief we see their expectations suddenly dashed to the ground. Is there no possibility of bringing in a supplementary estimate or in some other way meeting the situation so that some of these branch lines may be proceeded with?

Right Hon. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the government introduced the bill to which my hon. friend has just made reference it was proceeding in accordance with the wishes of the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways. The board in this matter acted in a manner similar to that in which the Board of Directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have acted. In other words, these large companies in planning their work seek to have it so arranged that it may be distributed over a period of years. Sometimes it is not convenient to go on with work in one locality or at one particular time, while it may be convenient to go on with other work, depending largely on circumstances, sometimes even upon climatic conditions and the like. For that reason we felt when the Board of Directors of the National Railways presented its programme that it was the government's obligation to present the programme to the House in the form in which it had been received and recommended. This was done, and I think the Minister of Railways made quite clear to the House at the time why the matter was presented in that form. Now the measure has finally been defeated in the other House. It is not for any of us in this House to comment upon the reasons, but so far as one is able to gather from reading the debates it would appear that the objection has been primarily that of additional expenditures on the National Railways. I cannot see, if that is the reason, how the bringing in of an estimate to cover the amount for this year would help to meet the situation. However, apart from that, the preparation of estimates involving expenditures of that kind is not quickly or easily made. The government would have to take into consideration not the estimate for this year only but the amount that was suggested in relation to its distribution over three years. I should feel that having accepted the recommendation of the Board of Directors of the railway, it would be advisable for the Minister of Railways to have the opportunity of conferring with the board before he attempted to do anything in the way of meeting the situation that has arisen.

As hon. members have heard, His Excellency has sent word that he hopes to prorogue the House this afternoon at three o'clock. We have all been doing our utmost to arrange for prorogation to-day, and I think it would be impossible for the government to prepare and submit to parliament further Supplementary Estimates at this time. Hon. members, moreover, will recall that notwithstanding the Estimates were presented on Tuesday or Wednesday of this week the government was very severely taken to account yesterday on account of the lateness at which these particular Estimates were brought down.

I think the circumstances regrettable. I am inclined to feel that my hon. friend has perhaps used words not too strong to express the seriousness of the action which has been taken by the other Chamber. So far as the government during the recess can find any way in conference with the Board of Directors so far as the Board of Directors can work out any way, if they can, towards helping to meet the situation, the government of course will co-operate with them to that extent, but beyond that I imagine that matters will have to stand over until the House meets again at a subsequent session.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that this is practically all the business that the House has before it, with the exception of a bill that is before the Senate, and which I understand the Senate is amending. It is the bill respecting the Canadian National Railway Act, 1919: I have just been informed that the Senate suggests an adjournment of this House until half-past two. The Senate is taking a similar adjournment to have a conference with the hon. Minister of Finance in the interval. If it is agreeable it might be understood that the House will adjourn to reassemble at 2.30.

Mr. T. W. CALDWELL (Victoria and Carleton, N.B.): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, might I ask if the government would consider sitting on Tuesday next to take up resolution No. 58 standing in the name of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Denis), under the head of Public Bills and Orders.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend can secure the unanimous consent of the House, the government will be pleased to do so.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2.30 o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS ACT, 1919, AMENDMENT

SENATE AMENDMENT

Right Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in an amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. 244, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.

He said: The amendment to this bill reads as follows:

Nothing herein contained shall be construed as granting power to guarantee any securities, the issue of which has not been authorized by parliament.

Motion agreed to. Amendment read the second time and concurred in.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

May it please Your Excellency:

The Commons of Canada have voted Supplies required to enable the government to defray certain expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1923 and 31st March, 1924.

To which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by command of His Excellency the Governor General, did thereupon say:

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks his loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to these Bills.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Fourteenth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

In bringing to a conclusion the work of the present session of parliament, I desire to express my gratification at the many useful and important measures which have been enacted.

The passing of the Bills respecting Treaties with France and Italy completes Canada's part in the desired commercial arrangements. Early completion on the part of the Governments of France and Italy and the exchange of ratifications necessary to give effect to the Treaties are confidently expected. It is anticipated that the operation of these Conventions will promote our trade and increase our good relations with these two nations, which were among our great allies in the late war.

The decennial revision of the Bank Act deservedly received careful attention at your hands. It is confidently hoped that the amendments made, in the light of experience, will, so far as legislation can, provide the safeguards required to ensure the efficiency of the banking system.

The changes made in the customs and excise laws will, it is believed, make for a simplification which is desirable and at the same time strengthen the financial position of the Dominion.

Pursuant to the recommendations of the Royal Commission appointed by the government prior to the opening of the session, legislation has been enacted with respect to lake and river transportation which, it is hoped, will prevent the control of freight rates and insurance upon grain shipments such as has hitherto existed.

The whole subject of the handling and marketing of grain in Canada and other matters incidental to the buying, selling and transportation of grain is being further investigated.

The Act to provide for the investigation of Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers will afford the public a much needed safeguard against possible undue enhancement of prices or unfair restrictions of trade.

Several legislative enactments in pursuance of the report of the Royal Commission on Pensions and Re-establishment have shown your desire to take every possible means of fulfilling just obligations towards the ex-service men, and their dependents.

An increasing immigration has been a significant feature of the present year. Agreements have been negotiated with the British Government for co-operation in an Assisted Passage Scheme; and closer co-operation has been effected between the Railways, Shipping Companies and the Department of Immigration and Colonization which, it is anticipated, will produce a large increase in the number of desirable settlers.

It is gratifying to note that the position of the Government railways has steadily improved, as the co-ordination of the national lines and facilities has become increasingly effective.

The important agricultural enactments of the session should prove of substantial service in the development of the fruit, live stock, grain and dairying industries of the country.

The revisions and amendments of the Acts respecting Patents of Invention, Trade Marks and Designs, Copyright, and Naturalization render these measures more effective and give to their provisions a wider international significance.

The approval given the treaty between His Majesty and the United States of America providing effective measures for the preservation of the halibut fishery of the Northern Pacific Ocean, and the legislation incidental thereto, make possible the conservation of this great natural resource to the mutual benefit of our country and of our neighbour to the south.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The many evidences of a returning prosperity which, with the passing of the months, have become increasingly apparent, are now supplemented by the promise of a bountiful harvest. For these and other blessings I join with you in humble thanksgiving to Divine Providence.

This concluded the Second Session of the Fourteenth Parliament.
