OFFICIAL REPORT

Monday, June 18, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

REPORT

Fifth Report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into Agricultural conditions —Mr. McMaster.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION

Mr. G. H. BOIVIN (Shefford) moved:

That the First and Final Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament, appointed to consider:—

1. The forms of Bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both Houses of Parliament;

2. The better distribution of the work of legislation between the two Houses;

3. The practical operation of the provisions of The Senate and House of Commons Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, chapter ten, respecting the attendance of Senators and Members of the House of Commons, and the expediency of making any alterations in those provisions,—which said report was presented to the House of Commons on Thursday, June 14th, 1923, be now concurred in.

He said: Before the motion is put to the House, I should like to say a very few words concerning the report which was presented on Thursday last as the unanimous finding of the Joint Committee of both Houses of Parliament concerning the matters which were referred to us. Let me say at the outset that this report is nothing more than a recommendation to parliament and to the government concerning the matters therein mentioned and that any action which the House may take to-day will be merely a direction to the government, and will have no effect in changing the law as it now stands upon our statutes until it is implemented by legislation introduced by the government.

The first matter referred to the committee was the form of bills and the best means of affording information and assistance in the consideration thereof at all stages of legislation in both Houses of parliament. I do not desire to take up much time in my remarks on this subject, because the report is very complete and any hon. member reading it in the Votes and Proceedings of Thursday last will see that the committee recommends that when an opportunity presents itself, the rules of the House of Commons be amended for the purpose of altering the form in which bills are now printed for presentation to the House. At the present time, bills merely show enactments and amendments which it is proposed to have approved by parliament, and there is no explanation whatever of the changes which are made in amending acts. The committee unanimously considered that, if it were possible to print on the opposite pages of the bill, the full section or subsection which it is desired to amend, showing in brackets or in italics the changes to be made, and also to print in a parallel column the section or subsection as amended, it would be a great time-saver and would avoid the necessity of many members asking the minister in charge of the bill: What is the present form of the section?—What is the nature of the change?—Why is the change being made? —and a great many questions which are very essential to a proper understanding of the bill, but which could be dispensed with if all this information were included in the bill when it was presented to the House. However, this is merely a recommendation. The rules of the House of Commons, as we all know, are made by the House itself, and it was not thought by the committee that the rules should be amended at this late stage of the session, but it was hoped that our recommendation might be given consideration and that the rules might be amended at the opening of the next session of parliament.

The second matter referred to us was the better distribution of the work of legislation between the two Houses of Parliament. There was a long discussion concerning this matter in committee, and while some members thought that rigid rules should be enacted to the effect that all private legislation should be divided equally between both Houses, it was pointed out by the majority of the committee that this might work a hardship upon senators and members of the House of Commons who might be requested by their constituents to take charge of a bill at the time of its introduction, and to see that it was safely piloted through its initial stages in that house in which the hon. member occupied a seat. For that reason, in order not to deprive any member of parliament or any senator of the right of introducing a bill which might be specially confided to his care, it was decided merely to recommend that the distribution of all Private Bills be regulated by the Speakers of both Houses jointly, so that as far as practicable, all private legislation should be divided equally between the Senate and the House of Commons. The hon. members of the Senate who were members of this committee seem to be very anxious to do their share of work. They claim that during the opening weeks of the session they are often obliged to adjourn the Senate while waiting for legislation from this Chamber, and that if private legislation was introduced equally in both Houses—with the exception of divorce bills, which of course must be introduced in the other House—the time of parliament could be saved and that many days which are now devoted to private bills by the committees of this House could be better devoted to such government legislation as is sometimes referred to special committees.

The third, and perhaps the most important natter which was referred to the committee, is the practical operation of the provisions of the Senate and House of Commons Act 1906, respecting the attendance of senators and members of the House of Commons, and the expediency of amending these provisions. Let me say at once in this connection that I would not have considered it necessary to make any reference to the report had it not been for certain statements and editorial articles published in the press on Friday and Saturday of last week intimating that it was the desire of the committee to make it easier for senators and members of parliament to earn their sessional indemnities. This idea was far from our minds, and our only desire was to correct certain inconsistencies and anomalies existing in the present act. It will be found that section 32 of the amended act provides that

> For every session of parliament which extends beyond fifty days there shall be payable to each member of the Senate and the House of Commons attending at such session a sessional allowance of $4,000 and no more.

Section 38 provides:

> That in each session of parliament of less than fifty days there shall be allowed to each member of the Senate and House of Commons attending at such session $25 for each day's attendance.

This means, if the law is to be strictly interpreted, that in the event of a session lasting exactly fifty days, no indemnity whatever shall be paid to any member of parliament. This anomaly can be corrected by amending section 32 to read:

> For every session of parliament which extends over a period of fifty days or more,

Another anomaly which we desire to have corrected is the following condition which now exists. If a member of the House of Commons is called away from the House on Thursday afternoon and does not return until the following Monday, he is penalized for three days' absence. If he leaves on Friday afternoon and does not return until the following Tuesday, he is penalized for only one day's absence. We believe this to be unfair and we recommend that in both cases, the member should be treated in the same manner.

Another inconsistency requires correction. If a member from western Canada is called home in the month of March owing to the serious illness of a member of his family, and is absent for fifteen days, but is regularly in attendance throughout the remainder of the session, he receives his full sessional indemnity. If an hon. member for some distant constituency is obliged to return home during the month of June by reason of family sickness, even if he has not been absent during the preceding months of the session, he is fined $25 for each day that he is absent. We recommend that in both cases, the member should receive the same treatment.

The press in some of its articles has led the public to believe that our desire was to allow any member to leave this House during the last fifteen days of the session without being fined. That is not the spirit of our recommendation which is merely to extend the same rule from the beginning to the end of each session. We consider that important legislation may be introduced in the first part of a session as well as in the last days, and that a member who is called away by any matter of urgent importance in his constituency or for any well recognized personal reason should be treated in the same way whether he is absent during the first or the last days of the session.

There is only one other important change proposed. It has been pointed out that under our resolution we have done away with the clause in the amended act which provides that a member must be present for at least three-fourths of the sitting days of the session in order to be entitled to his full sessional indemnity. It is stated that in certain sessions this may operate to the advantage of a member. It must also be said that in many other sessions it will operate to his disadvantage. In the case of a session lasting eight or nine weeks, under the law as we propose to amend it, every member must have at least fifty days of attendance in order to receive his full sessional indemnity. If not he receives only $25 for each day of attendance. Under the old law if the session lasted more than fifty days, and the member was present for three-quarters of the sitting days, he received his full indemnity. We did not find this to be absolutely just and right, owing to the fact that the entire membership cannot receive its indemnity unless the session extends over a period of fifty days, and we considered that like under the old act, the individual member should be treated the same as the entire House. This amendment would certainly not relieve a member from any hardship in earning his sessional indemnity and in many instances, it would necessitate a longer attendance than that which is necessary under the present law.

May I be allowed to repeat that the finding of the committee in all these respects was absolutely unanimous. I submit the report to the House in the firm hope that it will be adopted with equal unanimity. When concurred in, this report will not be binding upon the government but I feel sure the government will be directed by the unanimous voice of the House, and that as requested by the committee the required legislation will be introduced during the present session to correct and do away with the anomalies and inconsistencies to which I have briefly referred.

Mr. SHAW: What were the reasons given in parliament for the legislation which it is now proposed to amend?

Mr. BOIVIN: I have before me the debates of the House of Commons of June 28, 1920, when the amending bill was introduced by Sir Robert Borden. That was one of the last sittings of the session, and no detailed reasons for all the amendments were then given, except that the sessional indemnity was being increased from $2,500 to $4,000 and that it was desired to make the rules concerning the attendance of members in the House more rigid than they had been under the then existing act. This intention is carried out by the amending legislation now proposed. Under the old law, the attendance of a member and the length of session necessary to enable him to receive the full indemnity was only thirty days; that has been extended to fifty days. Under the old law the absence allowed a member was fifteen days; that has been maintained in spite of the fact that sessions are now much longer. Under the old law the penalty for every day of non-attendance was only $15; that has been increased to $25.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Just a word as the seconder of the motion. It has always been the rule in this House not to oppose the unanimous report made by a committee to the House. I hope that in connection with the present report, no departure will be made by the government from this very commendable custom.

Mr. LOGAN: I would point out that there is another anomaly that has not been rectified. If a member is ill and confined to hospital in Ottawa, he may come in on the last day of the session and draw his full indemnity of $4,000, whereas if he is so unfortunate, as I was, to be confined to a hospital in Montreal, he is penalized, as I understand I am, to the extent of something over $1,000.

Mr. GAUVREAU: No.

Mr. LOGAN: Yes, because I was not in hospital in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. LEWIS: It seems to me there is another anomaly. If a member from the West goes home because of illness in his family, it takes him fifteen days to get there and back. If the House sits only fifty-five days, under the new rule that member will lose his right to get the full sessional indemnity. Moreover, the House has to be forced to sit sixty-five days before any member who has taken fifteen days leave of absence can get in his full time. I do not know that it is wise always to force the House to sit sixty-five days if the business to be transacted does not call for it.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 223, to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.

He said: This bill provides that the annual fee for salmon canneries shall be $20 a year. It is to follow the recommendation of the committee on Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Instead of what?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Instead of $500; but they are paying in addition to that a fee for every case of 48 one-pound cans.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FOREST FIRES

PROPOSED RELIEF FOR SUFFERERS IN TEMISCOUATA, GASPE, BONAVENTURE AND NEW BRUNSWICK

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. C. A. GAUVREAU (Temiscouata): I would like to place before the government what I consider to be a case of urgency. The county of Temiscouata, which I have the honour to represent in this House, is passing through a severe calamity. Bush fires have already swept away more than six villages; churches, homes, barns, implements, cattle and crops are in ashes. I have in my hand a wire which I received last night from the parish of Sully, asking the government for support and relief for the unfortunate settlers in that part of the country. I am told by the press that over six hundred families are without shelter, food or clothing. May I ask the government, may I ask this House, if it is possible to vote forthwith a sum of money for the relief of these settlers? It is true that as yet there is no loss of life, but the loss of property certainly runs into millions of dollars. I appeal to the right hon. Prime Minister and his colleagues to come to the rescue of these poor people who have lost in a few hours all that they had in the world. I appeal especially to the Acting Minister of Defence (Mr. Macdonald) to do as was done for Ontario last year, namely, to send food, clothing and supplies, and especially to send all the tents that are available in order that temporary shelter may be afforded to the settlers, their wives and children, in the devastated area.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I might say to my hon. friend that I received a wire on Saturday night along somewhat similar lines to that which he has received, and immediately I got in touch with the Department of National Defence, and word was sent that the department would be very glad to render assistance such as was rendered in former cases where there has been suffering through fires. It was pointed out, however, that in these matters the federal government has generally proceeded in co-operation with the provincial governments, and it was suggested that the parties affected should immediately communicate with their provincial government, and have the provincial officers communicate with us. The matter will be followed up.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I would like to support the application made by the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau), and as the Prime Minister is inquiring into these fires I would point out that great damage to property has been done by fire in other constituencies. I understand that the county of Gaspé, represented by His Honour the Speaker, is suffering in that respect, as well as the county of Bonaventure and other counties in that region. So, if the matter is to be investigated, I hope these constituencies will not be overlooked.

Mr. PIUS MICHAUD (Restigouche and Madawaska): I should like to say a few words on behalf of New Brunswick, one of the smallest provinces of the Dominion, but the one that has practically suffered the most. Conditions there, judging by the morning papers, are very regrettable. A great many families there are without shelter, and, as the hon. member for Temiscouata has said, without food and clothing also. I hope the Prime Minister will take into consideration not only that part of the province of Quebec where assistance is asked at this moment, but also the province of New Brunswick.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

REGIMENTAL FUNDS

Mr. MAYBEE:

What was the amount of the regimental funds at the end of the war, and what was the disposition of same?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD:

In the case of units of the Canadian Expeditionary Force other than those of a draft producing nature or which had a constantly changing personnel, the regimental, canteen and other funds were, upon the unit being depleted, handed over to trustees appointed by the unit, to be used for the benefit of ex-members of the unit and their dependents, in accordance with the terms of Order in Council P.C. 1445, dated 29th May, 1917. No information is available in the department as to the amount of the unexpended balances of these funds held by the trustees at the end of the war. In the case, however, of units of a draft-producing nature or which had a constantly changing personnel, the regimental, canteen and other funds were, upon the unit being depleted, transferred to the Receiver-General in accordance with Orders in Council, P.C. 1856, dated 6th September, 1919, and P.C. 3144, dated 18th December, 1920.

According to the records of the Department of National Defence, the amount held by the Receiver-General in the special trust account created under Order in Council No. 1856, was $102,663.69, as at 31st August, 1921, the official date of the end of the war. According to the records of the Department of National Defence, the amount held by the Receiver-General in the special trust account created under Order in Council No. 3144, was $313,-764.94, as at 31st August, 1921, the official date of the end of the war.

There have been no withdrawals except to satisfy claims received after deposits had been made and which claims were properly chargeable to the units' funds.

TORONTO VIADUCT

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Does the government intend to carry out a certain contract and agreement regarding the erection of a viaduct at Toronto, dated 1913?
2. If not, why not?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Minister of Railways): The Toronto viaduct question will be dealt with, not by the government, but by the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways in conjunction with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the city of Toronto. It is understood that the present management is giving attention to the question of terminal arrangements at Toronto, and that the matter will be dealt with in due course.

BANK OF VANCOUVER

Hon. Mr. STEVENS:

1. What was the date of the failure of the Bank of Vancouver?
2. Was the government a creditor? If so, for how much?
3. What was the amount of the preferred claims, and have they been paid in full?
4. What was the amount of claims by depositors, what per cent of their claims have they received up to date, and are any further payments being made to depositors?
5. Do depositors in this case rank as ordinary creditors?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING:

1. 14th December, 1914.
2. No.
3. $463,388.60, not paid in full.
4. $349,590.46, on which no payment has yet been made. The liquidation has not been completed.
5. Yes.

TRAFFIC, HUDSON STRAIT

Mr. KNOX:

1. How many trips were made by tramp steamer, lighters and other craft carrying construction material through the Hudson bay straits to Port Nelson in each of the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917?
2. Was the cargo successfully delivered at Port Nelson in each case?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Minister of Railways):

TABLE showing the number of trips made by steamships, sail ships, lighters and other craft carrying construction material through the Hudson Straits to Port Nelson in each of the years 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917, with particulars as to the successful delivery of the cargo.

Season	Number of Trips				Particulars as to successful delivery of cargo
	Steamships	Sail ships	Department tugs and lighters	Total trips
1913.....	9	.....	2	11	Two steamships under ton rate charters (Cearense and Alette) grounded in the Nelson Estuary, but cargoes were partly salvaged by the Department's forces at Port Nelson. Both steamers were a total loss. Ten per cent of the cargo of the steamship Alcazar was not delivered through lack of facilities for quick discharging at Port Nelson. All other cargoes were successfully delivered.
1914.....	9	2	4	15	All cargoes successfully delivered.
1915.....	10	1	.....	11	All cargoes successfully delivered.
1916.....	4	.....	.....	4	All cargoes successfully delivered.
1917.....	1	.....	.....	1	Cargo successfully delivered.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ARCTIC ISLANDS EXPEDITION

Mr. PARENT:

1. Does the government intend to send an expedition to the Arctic Islands during this year? If so, for what purpose?

2. Has the government at its disposal, for the said purpose, a vessel by the name of Arctic?

3. Has said vessel ever made trips into Arctic regions?

If so, (a) On what dates;

(b) Who were the members of the crew;

(c) How many government departments were represented on said vessel, and what are the names of said representatives and their respective salaries;

(d) What was the cost of said expeditions, and expenses incurred by each department?

4. Does the government intend to specially equip one or more vessels for the Arctic regions? Is so, what amount has been agreed upon for each of these vessels?

5. Has the department established Mounted Police Posts in certain localities of said regions? If so, how many men are at present in said localities and what are their duties?

6. Does the government intend to send artists to above regions to take moving pictures?

7. Has the government any knowledge of a murder being committed in those regions? If so, what measures have been taken to bring the supposed murderers to trial?

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT—MISSISQUOI AND BROME

Mr. KAY:

1. How many farms have been bought by the Soldiers' Settlement Board for returned men in the counties of Missisquoi and Brome, up to January 1st, 1923?

2. How many have been bought since that date?

3. How many returned men are still on these farms?

4. How many farms have been sold owing to the failure of settlers, and what are the names of these settlers?

FEEDING STUFFS

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act, chapter forty-seven of the statutes of 1920, and to provide,—

1. That no person shall import into, manufacture, sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale in Canada, any flour mill by-product resulting from the cleaning and milling of wheat for the production of flour by the usual commercial processes, unless,

(a) the container or tag or label attached thereto is branded or marked as prescribed;

(b) the bran, pure shorts, middlings or feed flour are free from admixture of any foreign materials;

(c) the bran, pure shorts, shorts and mill screenings, middlings or feed flour meet the requirements as to protein and fat content, fineness and quality established by the regulations, and contain no crude fibre in excess of the percentage by weight as prescribed;

(d) the shorts and mill screenings are first registered as a commercial feeding stuff and contain not more than the mill run of screenings and scourings removed from the wheat from which shorts was obtained.

2. That no person shall manufacture pure shorts and shorts and mill screenings at the same mill.

3. That the sale in Canada, or the importation, of any feeding stuff found to be adulterated or incorrectly or misleadingly tagged, labelled or named, shall be a violation of the act, and the minister may cancel any registration and prohibit the further sale or importation of any such feeding stuff.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

EXPORT ACT—PULPWOOD

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend section seven of the Export Act; chapter fifty of the Revised Statutes, 1906, as enacted by chapter thirty of the statutes of 1914, by providing that the Governor in Council may by regulation prohibit the exportation from Canada of pulpwood of the variety, kind, place of origin or having the particulars of identification or ownership or production described in the regulation.

He said: His Excellency, the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Would the minister say whether or not, if the legislation contemplated goes into effect, it is the intention of the government still to appoint the commission he referred to in his budget speech, and if it is the intention that the government be empowered to act by order in council on the report of that commission?

Mr. FIELDING: We may decide to take that course but I would suggest that my right hon. friend renew his question when the resolution is being considered in committee; it is not debatable at the present stage. When we take the matter up in committee I will be happy to answer my right hon. friend.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—ISSUE OF SECURITIES

Mr. Fielding moved that the House go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Canadian National Railways Act, 1919, and to provide that no securities as defined in section 26 of the said act, including in such definition equipment certificates or obligations in any form intended to be issued to the public, shall be issued, except those approved as to form, terms and amount by the Governor in Council, and that such securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

MOTION FOR COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE NOT DEBATABLE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

On motion of Mr. Fielding for the House to go into committee on Bill 83, respecting banks and banking.

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is not debatable according to rule 17A, of the rules of the House. I had anticipated, after inquiry from some hon. members as to the procedure at this stage of the bill, that possibly there would be some proposal to move an amendment or engage in some debate. I have looked very carefully into the question and find that the present motion is not debatable—that is, the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair to go into committee of the whole, is not debatable. This opinion is based on the decision of Mr. Speaker Rhodes, my immediate predecessor, on 15th October, 1919, when Hon. J. D. Reid, then Minister of Railways and Canals, moved that the House go into committee to consider certain resolutions regarding the Grand Trunk Railway system—see Hansard for 1919, second session, volume 2, page 1012-13; also upon the decision of Mr. Speaker Rhodes on 29th August, 1917, that a motion for the reading of resolutions from Supply and concurrence therein was not debatable—see Hansard for 1917, volume 5, page 5095; also upon the opinion of Sir Robert Borden in explaining the meaning of rule 17A. I quote Sir Robert Borden's very words—see Hansard, 1912-13, volume 4, page 7406:

> What we have sought to do is to provide that all substantial motions, which bring into question the propriety of passing any bill, measure, or vote, shall be debatable. . . . but that purely formal motions, which, under the existing rules, would be used only for dilatory purposes, shall not in future continue to be debatable.

I wish to draw the attention of hon. members to rule 17A, which, probably, might better be explained by its author, whom I see in his seat now, the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen), which rule must be read very carefully. The rule says:

> Every motion heretofore debatable made upon routine proceedings, except adjournment motions and every motion standing on the order of the proceedings for the day, or for the concurrence in a report of a standing or a special committee, or for the previous question, or for the third reading of a bill, or for the adjournment of the House when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, or for the adoption, in committee of the whole, or of supply, or of ways and means of the resolution, clause, section, preamble or title under consideration shall be debatable; but all other motions shall be decided without debate or amendment. As hon. members will see, there is not in the enumeration of debatable motions, made under this rule, any such motion as the present one.

There can, however, be a vote on this motion but there can be no debate. I also call the attention of hon. members to rule 28 which says:

> Bills reported after second reading—

Which is the present case, the bill having been read a second time and referred to the committee on Banking and Commerce—

> —from any standing or special committee, shall be placed on the orders of the day following the reception of the report, for reference to a committee of the whole House in their proper order next after bills reported from committees of the whole House. And bills ordered by the House for reference to a committee of the whole House shall be placed, for such reference, on the orders of the day following the order of reference in their proper order, next after bills reported from any standing or special committee.

The present bill is therefore regularly on its way to the committee of the whole House and the motion has been made that I do now leave the chair. It is a purely formal motion. When the bill is in committee of the whole amendments can be moved to the various clauses or sections of the measure. When the bill is reported from committee of the whole to the Speaker, and consequently to the House, the occasion again presents itself to those who may have some opposition to offer to advance their views and their grievances. And finally when the third reading comes, the opponents of the bill, or of some of the principles involved in it, can again ventilate their views. Therefore at the present stage, as this is a formal motion and being supported in my opinion by the author of rule 17A and by the precedents which apply, I rule that the present motion is not debatable. Nevertheless, as I said a moment ago, a vote can be taken on the motion that I do now leave the Chair if there is any objection to the bill.

Mr. BIRD: I would not presume to question the authorities cited in your ruling Mr. Speaker, but just to indicate the usage, or rule, upon which my action is taken I will refer to page 606 of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure in which that authority expresses himself as follows:

When the order of the day for committee has been reached and called in due form, the Speaker will put the question, "That I do now leave the chair". Now is the time to move any amendment to this question. Members opposed to the bill may move that the House resolve itself into committee that day three or six months; or may propose motions adverse to the principle or policy of the measure.

It has been frequently decided in the English House that on the motion for the Speaker to leave the chair, a member is at liberty to discuss the main provisions, but not to proceed in detail through the clauses nor to discuss amendments to the same until the bill is regularly in committee.

It was my purpose not to discuss amendments of details, but rather to bring to the attention of the House certain very important principles that are involved in the recent Merchants Bank case.

Mr. SPEAKER: In order to be fair to the hon. member, I might recall to himself and to the House that when Bourinot, and later, Flint, commenting on Bourinot, expressed the views which the hon. member has just read, rule 17A was not in existence. This is a new rule. It was enacted in 1912-13. I was a member of the House when it was enacted. I opposed it strenuously, and I was defeated at that time with many others. I was aware of the views expressed by Bourinot and by Flint, but they fall to the ground when one realized that rule 17A was enacted after those views were expressed.

Mr. GOOD: May I speak to the question of order?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GOOD: Would it be possible by unanimous consent to waive the rule?

Mr. SPEAKER: I have given my ruling, and as I stated a moment ago, if it is not the wish of the House that the Speaker leave the chair, a vote can be taken. But I take it for granted that the motion is carried and, therefore, I leave the chair.

BANK ACT—IN COMMITTEE

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. GOOD: We have received no copies of the amended bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It was distributed on Friday.

The CHAIRMAN: Copies have already been distributed. If the hon. member will look at his file, he should find a copy.

Mr. GOOD: It is not on my file; it is not in the post office, and I have not received any copies. I understood that we would not be expected to proceed with the bill unless we had copies.

The CHAIRMAN: The bill was distributed on Friday.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think it is fair to the members to rush on in this way until they can locate their copies of the bill. I know I was given a copy of the bill and I put it on my desk on Friday; but I cannot locate it myself, and it is not on my file. I am quite sure that the bill was distributed, but copies are not on our files.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A copy is on my file, and I think a copy should be on everybody's file.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see it is in the middle of the file.

Mr. FIELDING: It is in the proper place having regard to its number.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Bank charters continued to July 1, 1923, as to some particulars.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I think the time has come in the discussion of this bill, when I may with perfect propriety make a few remarks; also probably at the close of my remarks, I may find occasion to move an amendment. During the discussion of this bill before the Banking and Com-
4 p.m. merce committee, I took occasion to bring forward a resolution asking for postponement of the revision of the act and asking that charters should be extended for one year. This proposal was not acceptable to the committee. As a matter of fact, the proposal itself was ruled out of order in the committee as not being within our powers at that time. My reasons for bringing forward that motion were several, but I shall state them very briefly. I am speaking now, not for purposes of obstruction, or simply because I wish to be contradictory to the action of the committee or of this House, but because, rightly or wrongly, I have come to the conclusion that the best interests of the country will not be guaranteed by passing this particular clause in this particular shape.

In the first place we have had a great deal of discussion in committee and have taken an enormous mass of evidence. I think the committee has worked faithfully and has tried fairly to bring out all the information along most, but not all, of the points which have been suggested. During the course of that discussion several points came up in my mind very strongly. The main points that impressed me—or amongst the main points—were these: Throughout the evidence, throughout the statements made by the leading bankers of this country who were there to testify it became so evident as not possibly to be gainsaid that the present banking system, as carried out under the present Bank Act, did not wholly meet all the financial requirements of the various industries in this country. It became apparent, in fact it was admitted, that, in regard to the principal industry of this country, that of agriculture, the Bank Act was not functioning satisfactorily. Statements were made and evidence was adduced which covered that point, and I think it was established to the satisfaction of the majority of the committee that one industry at least, that of farming, was not able to take full advantage of the provisions of this act, and was not able to secure the credit requisite to the carrying on of their business under the present banking system It was shown that the system which was embodied in the act, and carried on under the provisions of this act, was adapted very admirably for the purposes of commercial banking, for the carrying on of the ordinary classes of industry; but, by reason of the fact that advances could only be made under the provisions of this act by our present banks as at present constituted for a short term, it became absolutely ineffective for the needs of agriculture. That, I think, was admitted. It was admitted by many of the bankers, though contradicted by others, and I think it was the consensus of opinion, not only in the committee among the experts, the financial men themselves who gave evidence before that committee, that, under the way in which the banks were carried on, under the methods by which they secured the funds with which they carried on their work, they could not make provision for the industry of agriculture on any general scale. It was shown that, whereas in ordinary commercial life, a loan for three or six months might be amply adequate by reason of the fact that the turnover occurs three or four times a year, the case with the farmer was absolutely different. It was shown, and had to be admitted by everyone cognizant of the conditions under which farming was carried on, that a loan, in order to have any effect, to enable farmers to carry on under any system of credit, should be at least for one year; and in the case of a farmer engaged in the cattle business, should be extended for three years. I am not speaking of long loans for capital outlay, but for current loans to carry on the yearly operations of the farm. I think that was distinctly proved.

The point of controversy then came up, could this be carried out, or could these loans be made by the banks at all, and could it possibly be comprehended within the Bank Act? And there is where the difference of opinion occurred. I think I am correct in my first statement that the general need was admitted, and the general inadequacy of the banks to fulfil that need was admitted, and the difference of opinion arose as to whether, under any act or any circumstances, the banks could supply that need. I may say that it was on that point that I personally was not at all satisfied with the attitude of some of the witnesses who appeared before the committee, men who were fully familiar with the details of the banking profession, who had, for many years past, the handling of the savings of the people of this country and the use of those savings as applied to the various industries of the country. They acknowledged in many cases that the banks as at present carried on were inadequate. They acknowledged that in many cases the banks did not and could not meet the requirements of agriculture in particular; and yet at the same time, although those men were supposed at least to have full knowledge of their subject, and to have given a full and complete study of banking, the business of their lives, they were not prepared to accept any responsibility for this failure or to bring forward any suggestion of value in order to meet the needs. In that respect I was dissatisfied, and I may say I was disappointed in their attitude.

We do not come here speaking for farmers simply, we do not come asking for anything which would be to the public detriment, and we do not come advocating, at the present time at least, any violent departure from any stable system of banking or economics. Those ideas were brought forward and discussed, though not given the consideration that I think was due them. But at the present time we are not advocating, and I am not advocating, the establishment of any system of banking which would not be for the public good and which would not be founded on sound and sane business principles. But we do look to these men who have taken the place in the commercial life of this country, as being the men most familiar with finance, to offer some remedy to meet the obvious conditions which prevail. But they did not. They absolutely failed, and I, for one, am not prepared to absolve them from responsibility in the matter. I am not prepared to say to them: The system under which you have been working is perfect, and the method under which you have carried it on is absolutely beyond reproach. I am not prepared to say to them: We will give you the power to carry on under the same act, in the same way, until you are able to show we can get relief in some other way. At the present time—and, of course, this was brought by way of objection to any discussion of this point in our committee—the subject of rural credits is being examined into, and is under discussion before another committee. That committee has not yet reported. Until that committee does report, and until we know what the suggested remedies to meet that existing condition may be, we do not feel—many of us in this corner of the House at least—that the present banks should be given a charter extending over ten years, enabling them to tie up and utilize practically all of the available capital in the country, all the savings of the people, some of which would have to be applied to any system of rural credits. We ask first to be told what the suggestions are and what the legislation may be to bring those suggestions into effect, and to what extent, if any, it will affect our present banking. These are reasons why I object to passing this clause at the present time and in its present shape.

There is another reason, a supplementary reason. When this act came up for discussion, we received, and the Minister of Finance no doubt received, communications from many public bodies in this country. We received communications from the legislature of Alberta, asking that the final revision of this act be postponed for one year, and that the present charters be extended for one year, and one year only. The reasons they gave were the reasons I have mentioned. They are confronted in that province with a serious situation as regards financing their agricultural conditions. Agriculture is the one great outstanding industry of that province, and not only is that industry of outstanding importance there, but we believe—and I do not wish to speak sectionally—that agriculture in those western provinces is, and must be of paramount importance, to the whole industrial life of the country. They are faced with the condition that they are being continually requested to establish provincial banks to provide some way of financial relief, some system under which agriculture can receive its due quota of the money of the country, and they feel that they should not be tied up for a term of ten years until they have had time to study the points brought forward in the Banking committee, until they have had time to confer with the government and with the bankers to see whether they can jointly bring forward some change in the present Bank Act which will enable our banking system to adequately meet that condition. The government of Manitoba made a request on similar lines. They requested that the charters should be extended for one year only, in order that the provincial government might be able to weigh the evidence which has been adduced before the committee and have an opportunity, in consultation with their financial experts, with the bankers, with the Finance department and with the Dominion government, to suggest such amendments as they might deem necessary. The Canadian Council of Agriculture, representing agriculture as a whole throughout the Dominion, made the same request from the same point of view exactly, recognizing the inadequacy of the present system to meet the needs of the farmer, recognizing the paramount necessity of prosperity among the farmers in its relation to the national welfare, and recognizing that in the short space of time at their disposal they could not possibly make the suggestions which they thought might be made to the bankers and to the Dominion government. Therefore, they asked that the revision of the Bank Act be postponed for one year to give them an opportunity to take the necessary action in the meantime. The same request has come from our labour organizations. Of course, they are not treating the subject from exactly the same point of view. They point out that the banks have failed to some extent in their functions, that they are not financing the exchange of goods in a manner satisfactory to the people.

I am simply speaking for the people I know. We have no objections to a sound banking system being put into effect, a system that stands foursquare and sound from every point of view—from the point of view of industry, of commerce, of agriculture. We believe in a banking system which is sane, but which also, as I say, is equitable and will function satisfactorily for the benefit of all people requiring banking assistance. This, I think, the present banking system was proved before the committee not to be doing today.

There are other points of view which I might take into consideration and discuss, and one of the most important to my mind is this. It is a fact well known to members of parliament, and particularly to members of the Banking committee, that great dissatisfaction with our banking system has arisen throughout a large part of the Dominion. It is a dissatisfaction which is not based on absolutely accurate knowledge, and it has given rise to all kinds of suggestions for improving the system. The people are demanding improvements with the nature of which they are not altogether familiar; they are asking for things which may not be sound; they are following men who may not have made a thorough study of the subject. I am not discussing whether that is so or not, but the fact remains that the number of people looking for relief in this way is increasing daily. Consequently, one of the reasons why I am so strongly in favour of having a thorough investigation into the whole system of credits is because I am convinced that, if the people were given an opportunity of having these men before the committee and having their ideas criticized by those who at least are supposed to be capable of criticism, and the people at home might read the evidence and judge how those ideas might or might not work out in practice, then if they came to the conclusion that they had been following false gods, that the theories placed before them were not sound, they would turn their attention to better and sounder ideas.

But what is the fact now? The people amongst whom this dissatisfaction is growing know that this subject has been under discussion most thoroughly before the committee; they know that the men in whom they have come to believe in great measure have submitted their suggestions to the committee, and that those suggestions have been criticized; but the people are not aware of everything that has been brought forward by way of suggestion or criticism. And if this act goes through now for a term of ten years, what will they think? They will simply say: What is the use of reading the evidence, what is the use of studying the various systems proposed, what is the use of the committee on Banking and Commerce working for three or four months upon this Bank Act if parliament ties everything up for another ten years before we have an opportunity of studying the matter? It seems to me they will think that all these weaknesses which have been stated to be inherent in the Bank Act actually exist. I am not taking that view, but I do know that a great many people will think as I have indicated.

But it has been said, and said rightly, that the foundation of every good banking system lies not in its gold reserve but in the unshaken confidence of the people, and that this is the only way in which any such system can function satisfactorily. I think the best way to secure that unshaken confidence is to have the people thoroughly acquainted with everything that led up to the granting of these charters. Let them know exactly what the Bank Act means, let them know exactly what suggestions were made and why they were not acceptable. If our banking system is sound, the best way to convince the people of the fact is to let them study the Bank Act before it is crystallized for another ten years. That is one of my strongest reasons for opposing the passing of the act in its present form. As others, no doubt, desire to speak on this subject, and as I only wished to bring forward what to my mind were some of the strongest points against this proposed revision, I shall simply move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke):

> That section 5 of Bill 83 be amended by striking out the words "thirty-three" in the fourth and eighteenth lines thereof, and substituting the words "twenty-four" therefor.

Mr. FIELDING: Mr. Chairman, the views presented by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Speakman) and by others along the same lines and in relation to various other aspects of the banking question, were put before the committee very fully and in many cases, I can say, with great zeal and great ability. The whole matter was fully considered with the utmost care, and I doubt if any measure submitted to the House has received more careful consideration than was given by the committee to the bill now before us. The best judgment of the committee, after hearing witnesses, after doing all that could be done for the intelligent discussion of the subject, was that the objections raised by these gentlemen were not very well sustained. There is a condition of affairs in the West which has alarmed some hon. gentlemen. I am largely of opinion that one good crop in the West—let us pray Heaven that it come this year—will remove very much of the irritation that exists among our western friends. At all events, after the discussion before the Banking committee, after the publication of the evidence—for every word was printed and is available, the newspapers have printed it very largely and the whole question has been threshed out in the light of public opinion—I believe that to-day the people of Canada are fully informed of all the essential questions involved in this present motion.

I think no good purpose can be served by our engaging in an extensive discussion of the question. I am going to presume—it may be presumption—to offer a suggestion to my hon. friends opposite. It is their right and their duty to place themselves on record against a measure of which they do not approve. But I point out to them that in committee they cannot reach any very satisfactory result, because they cannot get their names recorded in a vote. May I suggest, if it be not inconsistent with the general purposes of my hon. friends opposite, that they facilitate the passing of this bill through Committee of the Whole and let it come as quickly as may be to third reading? Then they will have the right to discuss, not a particular clause but the whole bill; they will have the right to make any motion they wish to offer by way of postponement, or in any other form, and they will have the right to get then what they cannot get in committee, a recorded vote. I can only make the suggestion to my hon. friends. I want, if I can, to put myself in their position, to see things from their point of view; and I think that would serve their purpose better than an extended discussion in committee. I recognize, however, the fact that it is the right of these hon. gentlemen to pursue the course they think best. But I repeat that in view of all the discussion that has taken place, in view of the printing of all the evidence; in view of the widespread publication of the discussions of the committee in the public press, I do not think the people will expect us to engage in a very protracted discussion of the subject in the House.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) suggests that we ought not at this stage to discuss the question. I would remind him that he made the same plea on the second reading of the bill, and that the bill went to the committee without any discussion on the floor of the House. It is true that there has been a lengthy discussion in committee, extending over some five weeks, and it is for the very reason that we have had a full discussion there that some of us feel that the matter ought not to be hurriedly passed through the House. It was very clearly revealed in the committee that, with respect to a vast number of considerations that came under review and were the subject of more or less discussion, there was undoubtedly no opportunity for the public to form an opinion or to express an opinion in any effective manner. It is for that reason that I should like to support the resolution for the postponement of this whole question for another year.

[Mr. Fielding.]

This is not a question that affects merely the banks. Some have been inclined to regard the matter as one very largely for the bankers; and we had in the committee five or six representatives of the bankers who were following the discussions very closely indeed. But it is not a matter merely for the financial or legal experts; if it were, some of us would have very little to say with regard to it. But the very fact that the banks must come before parliament and obtain their charters and secure the conditions under which they must operate is an indication that in this as in other important matters the voice of the people must be the deciding factor. After all, the great majority of the common people look at these things in a different way from that in which they are regarded by the bankers. So I see no reason why those of us who represent the people should not call attention to the need for further discussion of this measure.

In the very first place, the banks are seeking an immensely valuable public franchise; they are claiming the right to issue currency, a right that is given to no other private corporation. But, more than that, under the act they secure a virtual monopoly of the credit system of the country. Let us consider what that really means. It means the power to determine very largely what can be produced, where it can be produced and under what conditions it can be produced. Financial considerations are vital to the whole of the industrial life of this country; they underlie all our industrial and commercial life. They are therefore closely related to the life of the people and cannot lightly be passed by.

The clause now under consideration would give to the banks certain privileges for another ten years. I understand it is possible to alter these clauses from year to year, and I think a good many of us would like to give notice that if this amendment is voted down we propose to bring in legislation in subsequent years. It cannot be regarded as final legislation whichever way it goes; still we are told that there are opportunities for a complete revision, given every ten years that cannot be granted so readily during intervening years. This amendment shows no very great change from what we have had in the past and from what is regarded by a great many people as unsatisfactory. After all, why not delay? It seems to me that the burden of proof is on the bankers and those who are seeking to hurry through this legislation. We were told in the committee by the bank presidents that they did not want to pass through the ordeal of being cross-questioned in committee. Well,

I am sure that cannot be a very weighty consideration. We were told also in the committee that if the facts of the case were given to the public they might cause such general unrest as would produce very disastrous effects upon our financial system. I submit that we ought not to be afraid of full light being thrown upon all questions; and as to rushing through legislation for fear there may be disastrous effects, the sooner we know what is wrong with the existing system and the sooner the evil conditions are exposed, the better for all concerned. We submit that the evidence brought forth in the committee has shown that the present Bank Act, which is virtually the bill now before us, fails to meet all the needs. There is no provision whatever for the establishment of small banks; there is no safeguard against mergers on an even vaster scale than they have taken place in the past; there is no provision for long-term loans; no provision for work and the capacity to work being regarded as the basis upon which public loans may be obtained. On that latter point I put some questions in the committee to one of the bank managers, Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor. I asked him:

> Then what do you mean by collateral, what form has it to take?

He replied:

> Well my early teaching tells me that there are three forms of wealth in this world. There is the wealth of silver and gold and precious stones, cattle, houses, and lands. Physical wealth. Then there is the wealth of credit, which is based to a large extent on the possession of the first form of wealth, but not entirely and not necessarily wholly on the possession of physical wealth, and then there is the wealth of labour.
> Q. It was with regard to the third that I wanted to ask. Supposing I stand as a labourer, a man skilled in a certain trade, and I want to go to work. Would you regard that as in any sense security for my obtaining a loan?—A. No, that is not a basis for a banking loan, Mr. Woodsworth, because your ability to labour depends entirely on your ability to wield a spade or a pickaxe, or whatever it is you are going to labour at, and if an unkind fate, or if Providence should remove you from this sphere the day after you borrowed the money, the bank would have no security at all, because your labours would have ceased.
> Q. And yet labour is the basis or one of the bases rather of credit, Sir Frederick?—A. So it is. In the hypothetical case you put, you could borrow money from your grocer, doubtless, if you have a job, and from your bootmaker if you want a pair of boots, and so on; but it is not a good basis for a banking credit a man's mere ability to labour, unbacked by any form of security of any kind. Am I clear?
> Q. Yes sir. I had in view the case given to me by the Bureau of Labour the other day; of a thousand men waiting in my own city of Winnipeg, willing to work on farms, having farm experience and having families to look after, is there no way the bank would feel that their ability to work, taking the whole thousand of them, would form a basis on which money or credit could be given?—A. No, in no country in the world that I am aware of could a workman borrow merely on his ability to labour. Borrow from a bank.

Now, in view of the actual situation that we have about us, it is very clear that the institutions to which we grant a monopoly of the credit facilities of the country ought to make provision for some of these outstanding needs. I would charge that essentially this is class legislation, it is legislation in the interests of a comparatively small group in the community. As one studied this act during the weeks we have been sitting in the Banking and Commerce committee I think that a good many of us have felt that from the banker's standpoint it was a case of "heads I win, tails you lose." Further than that, it is not based, I take it, on solid economic foundations. We were assured by the bankers themselves again and again that they were not economists. We were told by the few economists that appeared before the committee that many of the principles enunciated were not in accordance with the established conclusions that are generally held in the world of economics to-day. It would seem that until we have further opportunity of studying this question and of bringing our banking arrangements into harmony with well known economic laws we should not pass this legislation. I notice in a recent number of the Montreal Standard of June 9th an editorial from which I quote this paragraph:

> It looks as if Liberals and Conservatives could not do better than bury the hatchet for the nonce, get together on a non-partisan measure—as the Bank Act is—and press it to a vote. What the Progressives think about it is comparatively unimportant, but it is important that this land of Canada should have a sound banking system.

Well, it may be unimportant what the Progressives or any other section of this House thinks about the Bank Act, but I submit that we are sent here, whether we are Progressives or not, in order to try to present the views of the people and to check up this legislation by what the people need and what the people think they need,—and there are a great many outside the circle of the bankers who are quite sure that we need a more extensive modification; indeed, I think that the Minister of Finance must confess that the discussions which have already taken place in the editorial columns of our papers would warrant us in urging that more serious consideration be given to the question.

We have been told that the amendments which have been proposed are altogether too radical in character. One writer in ridiculing some of the amendments brought forth by Labour and Progressive members suggested that they were merely tomfool amendments. Well, what are some of these amendments that have been urged? One was that in view of the near-failure of the Merchants Bank—I think we were told that it was not a failure, that we must call it a "fiasco"—that in view of the fiasco of the Merchants Bank it was well worth studying what were the weaknesses of the banking system that made that fiasco possible, and how those weaknesses could be remedied. Another amendment related to keeping down the exorbitant rates of interest, and that surely is a matter of tremendous importance when some people in the West at least are required to pay nine and ten and even a higher per cent of interest. Another amendment that occurs to me was that a government auditor or inspector be appointed so that the whole of the statements of the banks would be brought under definite supervision. Other amendments related to the question of ensuring that the statements as made by the bank should be accurate statements. We were told that at least with regard to real estate holdings the statements as at present given to the government were not at all accurate. This was asserted by Sir Edmund Walker. Other amendments related to providing for small banks and co-operative banks. As we all know these exist in large numbers and have proven themselves very successful in other countries. Why should we not at least have the opportunity of establishing these banks in this country? We did not plead that the government should immediately proceed to establish the banks but we did ask that provision be made in the Bank Act that if men wanted to start small banks they should have a chance to do so, that if they wanted to establish co-operative banks they should have a chance to do so. There is no such opportunity in the Bank Act as it now stands.

I should like very briefly to summarize my conclusions with regard to some of the facts that were brought before us by the various witnesses who appeared before the Banking and Commerce committee. It was clearly shown that money was to-day the measure of all things and quite properly; that this was so much the case that in many instances money has been confused with capital. I think most of us recognize that capital after all consists of the natural resources and the equipment for working them, and it is only by an extension of the term that it is applied to include credit. To-day the title deeds to the great natural resources and the equipment by which they are worked are in the hands of a comparative few. I submit, though, that ownership itself is an empty thing unless there are some means by which a man can exploit those things which he owns, whether they be mines or water-powers or anything else. Yet under modern industrial conditions it is impossible even for the owner of these natural resources to exploit them without having to go to the banks in order to obtain credit. Money, then, is the key that opens the door to capital. Give me the key and you give me practical ownership. The bankers, I submit, hold to-day the key that admits us to the capital of this country.

Again, we are told that money is the medium of exchange. Since the discontinuance of the system of barter, it is quite necessary that we should have a recognized medium of exchange. But that means that the men who control this medium control the whole of our commercial operations, and this control, under present conditions, is centred in the hands of a comparatively small group. I am not going into an academic discussion to-day as to what money is. I think it was clearly shown by the various witnesses that Walker was right when he said years ago that "money is that money does." It does not make much difference whether money is coin, or paper, or various kinds of cheques, or victory bonds. Any of these things is really money if it performs the functions of money. So that to-day we find that money has come to occupy a monopolistic position as a medium of exchange. Exchange to-day has passed beyond the earlier stage of barter; it has become an impersonal thing We need some clearly recognized medium. Money has come to take that place and hence it is all-important that this medium of exchange should be understood, because the men who control the medium of exchange control, as I have said, our commercial life of to-day.

Let me pass to one more conclusion in this connection and that is this. It appears to be true, as the economists have told us for a great many years, that the quantity of money determines its value. We were told by some of the leading bankers that they had never heard of the quantitative theory of money; and yet, when questioned they had to admit that the amount of money in circulation, together with the rapidity of the circulation, had a very decided effect upon the value of money itself. Now under this act you give certain institutions the right to circulate a large amount of money. It is true that their circulation of gold is very limited indeed, it is true that the circulation of their bank cheques is limited; but the greater part of money to-day is not gold, is not bank cheques, it consists of credits and these can be extended or limited by the action of the banks. Hence, to no small extent, they control the value of money itself. The money that buys one bushel of potatoes to-day may buy tomorrow two bushels of potatoes, or only half a bushel; and I submit that the people who control the money situation can very largely decide the value of that money. Or to put it the other way about: The value of money really means the price of other things. If we decide to issue a larger amount of money we cheapen money, and send the price of commodities soaring. That, at least, is the accepted view of political science. I submit that no such power as this should be placed in the hands of any groups of private individuals. It means that they control the whole life of every individual, it means that we cannot buy a single box of groceries, we cannot buy a suit of clothes, we cannot live in a house, we cannot go abroad to enjoy ourselves, without paying out money the value of which is determined by a group of people over whom we have no control whatever.

We were told, of course, by some of the bankers that we could not get away from the gold standard. And yet they had to admit that since the war we have no gold standard. I do not intend to enter at this time, at any length upon this question of the gold standard. I can remember in my college days we used to debate at considerable length the whole question of bi-metallism, but I submit that in the last few years we have learned a great deal more about the gold standard than we knew before the war. The fact is that Canada is not to-day on a gold standard. I have my own suspicions that all along the gold standard has been, after all, nothing much more than a barometer which recorded certain changes in the financial conditions. But to-day all that is passed. We know perfectly well that although our bank notes call for payment in gold, no gold is forthcoming. The bankers say that we are going to return to the gold standard. That may or may not be; it is altogether another matter. So we are faced with this situation: That not being on a gold standard and the banks having no obligation whatever to pay in gold, they are still coming to us and asking for a franchise that will extend for ten more years. Without considering the advisability of a return to the gold standard, I would suggest that the bankers might well offer to return to this standard before asking for a renewal of charters that are so valuable. On the question of the gold standard I was rather interested in a little illustration of how very ridiculous the gold standard is in actual practice. D. H. Robertson in his book on "Money" gives the following:

> It is said that there was once a mine manager in Johannesburg who had a glass eye. When business called him away he would take his eye out and leave it in a prominent place; and while the master's eye was on them the workmen continued to work like blacks, as indeed they were. But one day one of the workmen, more daring than the rest, stealthily approached the all-seeing orb and covered it up with an inverted cigarette tin: whereupon he and all his fellows promptly went away and got drunk.

Some of my Progressive friends and my colleague here (Mr. Irvine) would like to use inverted cigarette tin and cover up the glass eye. I would submit there is a great deal bigger question involved than the cigarette tin and that is, if the gold standard is no more than a glass eye, a bogey to frighten people with, we may well ask ourselves what is its stability as the very basic of our whole financial system to-day. Let me give you still another illustration which, I think, will do more to drive home this point than anything of an abstract character that I might advance. This is quoted by Mr. Robertson from the Economic Journal of June, 1915, page 281:

> There is among the Caroline Islands an island called Uap, whose money consists solely of huge stones called fei, many of them so large that they cannot be moved, so that even when they change hands in the course of business their physical location is left unchanged. . . . Some time ago the natives allowed the roads of the island to fall into disrepair, and steadily refused to mend them; and the Germans, who were at that time in possession of the island, had to devise some means of inflicting a fine. It was clearly useless to attempt to remove any of the stones from the island. "At last," so the account runs, "by a happy thought the fine was exacted by sending a man to every failu and pabai throughout the disobedient districts, where he simply marked a certain number of the most valuable fei with a cross in black paint to show that the stones were claimed by the government. This instantly worked like a charm; the people, thus dolefully impoverished, turned to and repaired the highways to such good effect from one end of the island to the other that they are now like park drives. Then the government despatched its agents and erased the crosses. Presto! the fine was paid, the happy failus resumed possession of their capital stock, and rolled in wealth.' Just so gold is a fetish, if you will, but it does the trick.

That is a plea for the gold standard by a man who clearly recognizes how little it really amounts to if one could understand its real meaning.

Now, my main reason for pleading for delay in the granting of these charters is that we have developed in Canada a financial monopoly, and that by granting the charters we legalize this monopoly. The banks are reservoirs for the collection of deposits from the people from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The banks have the right to issue currency, a very valuable franchise, and they have the giving of credit. Perhaps these powers would not be so bad if they were very widely distributed. But the fact is that in the last few years we have seen merger upon merger taking place, and bank managers, according to their evidence, are inclined to think this amalgamation will continue. One of them at least said that he thought it was a very good thing to eliminate weak banks. But until such time as mergers actually take place, we have a Bankers' Association, formally recognized, that more or less accomplishes the same purposes as a merger, because we are told that the rates of interest were fixed by an arrangement made within the Bankers' Association. Thus you have a little group, practically a combine, that determines rates of interest and the terms upon which credits can be given. But, more serious perhaps than that, is the system which has grown up of interlocking directorates, by which men who control banks also control a considerable number of subsidiary financial institutions as well as various industrial concerns. I do not know if this is any discovery to some hon. members; but if we had not known of this fact before, it was very clearly brought to us as the investigations of the Banking committee proceeded.

Just recently I have been looking through the Annual Canadian Financial Review, and I should like to call the attention of the committee to some facts as revealed by a study of that publication. I quote from the issue of June 1922. I notice a large number of the gentlemen whose names are prominent in banking affairs, are also prominent in governmental circles. Perhaps that is to be expected. I notice a good many of them have the title "Sir" prefixed to their names. Under the old regime they were regarded as the most honourable and most worthy of honour amongst our Canadian citizens. I notice that a number of them are very prominent in educational work, in military activities, in all the social life of the country. That too, perhaps, is to be expected. I am not laying any blame upon those individuals because of the prominence that they have attained; but I should like to show that these men, because of acquiring a monopoly of the finacial credit of the country, have been able to dominate many of our industrial and commercial affairs. Let me take the Bank of Montreal, as an example. That bank is generally known as the government bank as it does a good part of the business of the government. The president is Sir Vincent Meredith, of Montreal. I notice he is also a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—a rival, by the way, of our own Canadian National Railways—he is president of the Royal Trust Company and a director of the Guarantee Company of North America. Thus the committee will see the group of companies in which one man can exercise a very large measure of control. Let me in this connection quote a paragraph from a book published some years ago by Judge Brandeis, of the United States Supreme Court. He says:

> Directors, officers and employees of banking institutions should, by a similar provision, be disqualified from acting as directors, officers or employees of life insurance companies. The Armstrong investigation showed that life insurance companies were in 1905 the most potent factor in financial concentration. . . . and now instead of the life insurance companies controlling the banks and trust companies the latter and the bankers control the life insurance companies.

Again he says:

> Combination and control of other people's money and of other people's businesses are the main factors in the development of the money trust.

A few weeks ago I took the trouble to glance through the lists of shareholders of a number of the leading banks in Canada. It is quite true that there are no very large holdings by wealthy men. It is quite true that a very considerable number of the shares are held by comparatively poor people. That is the very point I want to make—that the savings of comparatively poor people are all pooled in the banks and then the control of these institutions is put into the hands of a very small group.

I see that the next name on the list of directors is Sir Charles Gordon, G.B.E., vice-president, Montreal. He is also a director of the Royal Trust Company—I might note in passing that the names frequently occur in groups; certain group domination is evident. He is also president of the Dominion Textile Company, president of the Montreal Cottons, president of the Montreal Cotton

5 p.m. Company, president of Penman's Limited, that is of companies manufacturing many articles which every household in the country requires and which more or less receive certain privileges through the tariff from the government of Canada. Further, he is a director of the Ogilvie Flour Mills,—that brings us to what we eat. He is also director of the Tuckett Tobacco Company, manufacturing one of the luxuries. He is also director of the Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company, president of the Dominion Glass Company, director of the Provincial Paper Mills, and president of the Hillcrest Collieries. I do not think any hon. member would claim that one individual, even Sir Charles Gordon, has any expert knowledge of these various industries of which he is direc tor or, in many cases, president. I think we can clearly see that the only reason why he should be on those boards is because of his financial ability. That is, we have had the division of labour go on until the financial men form a group by themselves, and the people who actually do the manufacturing, whether the employees or the employers, the organizers and managers, do not really own the factories. The real ownership is with the financier. He controls, not merely one line of industry, but a host of industries widely varying in character. We have been told recently in the papers of the danger in Germany of such men as Stinnes getting control of a very large number of industries of different classes, not merely perpendicular control, but horizontal control; yet we have that selfsame system prevailing in Canada. Perhaps it is not without significance that this director of the Bank of Montreal who is director of so many other companies should have been last year appointed by this government as a member of the Canadian Economic Commission.

Again let me quote a paragraph from Judge Brandeis. Speaking of other people's money and how the bankers use it, he says:

> The control of these institutions means the ability to lend a large part of these funds, directly and indirectly to themselves; and, what is often even more important, the power to prevent the funds being lent to any rival interests.

He further says:

> But far more serious even than the suppression of competition is the suppression of industrial liberty, indeed of manhood itself, which this overweening financial power entails. The intimidation which it effects extends far beyond the banks, trust companes and other institutions, seeking participation, from this inner group, in their lucrative undertakings, and far beyond those interested in the great corporations directly dependent upon the minor group. Its blighting and benumbing effect extends as well to the small and seemingly independent business men, to the vast army of professional men and others directly dependent upon "big business", and to many another.

And he goes on to elaborate his argument. I think it is hardly necessary to comment on the criticism of Judge Brandeis on the system which had grown up a few years ago in the United States, and which is so rapidly developing here in Canada.

The next name on the directorate of the Bank of Montreal is R. B. Angus, of Montreal, director of the Royal Trust Company, a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, a director of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie railway company, a director of the Laurentide Paper Company, a director of the Canada Northwest Land Company. Thus we see the organization extended not merely to Montreal and its vicinity, but away to the western country. The next name is that of Lord Shaughnessy, K.C., V.O., Montreal, director of the Royal Trust Company, director of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, director of the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, director of the Canada Northwest Land Company. The next is C. R. Hosmer, Esquire, Montreal, director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, director of the Commercial Cable Company, director of the Sun Life Assurance Company, director of the Royal Trust Company, director of the Canadian Cottons Company, director of the Dominion Textile Company, president of the Ogilvie Flour Mills Company, president of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, director of the Canada Paper Company, director of the Laurentide Company, vice-president of the Kaministiquia Power Company, director of the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Company.

Let me quote another paragraph from Judge Brandeis:

> Senator Owens, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Commerce said: "My own judgment is that a bank is a public utility institution, and cannot be treated as a private affair for the simple reason that the public is invited, under the safeguards of the government, to deposit its money with the bank, and the public has a right to have its interests safeguarded through organized auditors.

And he goes on to point out that the practical difficulty is that these men who are at the head of these industrial concerns are not fitted by their training to conduct industrial enterprises successfully. He says the failure of bank management is due mainly to two reasons: First, that no man can serve two masters, and, secondly, that a man cannot at the same time do many things well.

I return to the list of directors of the Bank of Montreal. The next name is Huntley R. Drummond; he is also vice-president of the Royal Trust Company. The next name is that of D. Forbes Angus, Esquire, Montreal. I am not aware how closely he is related to R. B. Angus who was a member of the Canadian Pacific Railway group. It is strange how some of the old family names crop up. I am reminded that two generations ago in this country a fight had to be made against what was then known as the Family Compact, I am reminded that there are those in this House whose forebears took a very active part in that fight. I submit we have, in the financial oligarchy of to-day, a far more serious menace to the welfare of this country than was the Family Compact in our grandfathers' day.

The next name on the list is William McMaster, Esquire, Montreal, also a member of the Royal Trust Company, a director of the Guarantee Company of North America, the president of the Montreal Telegraph Company, a director of Penman's Limited, a director of the Belding Corticelli Company, a director of the Asbestos Corporation of Canada, the vice-president of the Dominion Glass Company, a director of the Dunlop Tire and Rubber Company, director Sherwin Williams, director Tooke Brothers, director Canadian Car and Foundry Company.

Here let me quote a further paragraph from Louis D. Brandeis:

> The compelling reason for prohibiting interlocking directorates is neither the protection of stockholders, nor the protection of the public from the incidents of inefficiency and graft. For even more important than efficiency are industrial and political liberty, and these are imperilled by the money trust.

I submit that, side by side with the governments of this country, there are growing up other rival powers that have an immense influence, and that our so-called political democracy is valueless if we allow these institutions to develop which have such a large power over the life of every man, woman and child in the country.

I go back now to the list of directors, and the next one is Lieut.-Col. Herbert Molson, C.M.G., M.C., Montreal, director of the Royal Trust Company, director Canada Paper Company, director Canadian Consolidated Rubber Company, director Goulds Manufacturing Company. The next is Harold Kennedy, Esquire, Montreal. I think he is the only one who is not a director in other companies. I have no idea at all as to whether he is devoting his attention to the work of the Bank of Montreal, or whether he is one of those who are frequently described as dummy directors, who would carry out the policies of others more powerful outside. The next is H. W. Beauclerk, Esquire, Montreal, director of the Brompton Pulp and Paper Company, a director of the Canadian Car & Foundary Company, a director of P. Lyall & Sons Construction Company. The next name is G. B. Fraser, Westmount, Quebec. Yes, here is another who is not listed in the Financial Review as a director of any other institution outside of the Bank of Montreal. The next is His Honour Henry Cockshutt, Esquire, Brantford. He is a director of the Cockshutt Plough Company. I presume when the Labour representatives a few weeks ago were accorded the honour of shaking hands with the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario, they were in reality shaking hands with a director of the Bank of Montreal. No doubt His Excellency was there as representing some of these financial and industrial interests. His Honour is also a director of the National Life Assurance Company.

The next is J. H. Ashdown, Winnipeg, Manitoba, the only western name on the list. He is director of the Ashdown Hardware Company and director of the Northern Trust Company. Those of us who happen to know Winnipeg recognize very clearly that in the case of Mr. Ashdown—as I have no doubt whatever in the case of all these other men whom I have named—he is also prominent in provincial matters, in civic matters, in the board of trade and in the educational, religious and philanthropic life of the city. I am not saying this in any disparagement whatever of these men, but merely to point out that they who secure such great financial power have also a very dominating influence in every concern of the entire community.

The next name is that of E. W. Beatty, Esquire, K.C., as we all know, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am afraid that if I started in as a western member to speak of the Canadian Pacific Railway and its power it would take a very long time to exhaust what might be said on the subject. We in the West know the strength of that great corporation. I think in one of the songs which were sung by members of the Press Gallery last year there was one which went something like this:

> God save the C.P.R.
> Long to reign over us,
> Happy and glorious,
> God save the C.P.R.

Well, I am inclined to think that we have in these great corporations rival institutions that stand in power side by side with, if not superior to, those which are recognized as governmental institutions. Mr. Beatty is also a director of the Royal Trust Company.

The next name on the list is that of Sir Lomer Gouin, K.C.M.G., of Montreal, who is not only a director of the Bank of Montreal but also of the Royal Trust Company, of the Mount Royal Assurance Company, of the Mutual Life Assurance Company, of the Cockshutt Plow Company, of the Laurentide Company, of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power Consolidated, of the Shawinigan Water and Power Company. I am sure that a good number of the Progressive members will feel satisfied that the interests of the West are being well looked after by the director of the Cockshutt Plow Company in the person of the Minister of Justice. A few weeks ago the member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll) objected to the Mayor of Glace Bay having taken action officially in connection with some trouble there because he was a labour man. The hon. member stated that the mayor was an official in a labour union. That, I believe, is not in accordance with the facts, but it was implied by the hon. gentleman that a man connected with the labour movement could not dispassionately perform his duties as mayor. Now, if that is true, I am not quite sure how the Minister of Justice or any other member of the cabinet can adequately perform his duties when he is so closely connected with big financial and industrial corporations. Again I am saying this not in disparagement of the Minister of Justice, but merely to point out the actual conditions that exist to-day and to emphasize the need for careful consideration lest we perpetuate and aggravate these conditions. In a recent discussion respecting closed towns on the west coast the member for Skeena (Mr. Stork), I think it was, pointed out that very frequently the men were so held down that no one was even allowed to land from a boat until a company policeman standing on the gangplank had decided in his favour. I have seen standing beside the company's representative a mounted policeman, and I remember that he is responsible to the Minister of Justice. The Labour people across this country cannot forget that the Minister of Justice is also interested in paper companies and other big industrial concerns. I say this simply to drive home—

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the section under discussion is "that bank charters continue to be granted to July 1, 1933, as to some particulars," and that he is not given the same freedom in committee as when discussing the principles of a bill on the second or third reading. Rule 13, section 5, provides that:

> Speeches in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I am merely drawing this to the hon. member's attention so there will not be any danger of his wandering from the point.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, I shall bear this in mind. I think I have not wandered very far. It seems to me that these remarks are very pertinent indeed when we are considering the advisability of extending the franchises to the companies represented by these very individuals.

The next name on the list is that of General Sir Arthur Currie, G.C.M.G., of Montreal. I do not think he is a director in any of the industrial companies listed, but we all know he is president of McGill University; and it is rather interesting to find that our universities also are so closely tied up with the financial interests. The trouble is that in the Canadian Financial Review we do not have the educational institutions listed, or else we would find that the universities, as also the newspapers, are more or less controlled by these same individuals.

Now that is the list of directors of the Bank of Montreal. Just a few minutes more with regard to one or two other prominent bank directors. I notice that the vice-president of the Bank of Commerce, Sir John Aird, is also a director of the British America Insurance Company, of the Imperial Life Insurance Company, of the Western Insurance Company, of the National Trust Company, of the Cockshutt Plough Company, of the Western Canada Flour Mills and of the Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company. This reminds me that in the Financial Review there do not appear foreign investments. The fact is, as brought out in the Committee on Banking and Commerce, our banks are more and more going into foreign investments, and no doubt many of these gentlemen are privately interested in these foreign concerns. I note that there is the very closest co-operation between the Canadian Bankers' Association and the American Bankers' Association. I also note, by reference to some of the English publications, that the British Empire Producers' Association has as one of its units the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. Thus we see that these concerns are linked up very closely with American institutions and those of other foreign countries, and also to the big financial and industrial corporations of Great Britain.

I am not going to more than mention some of the other outstanding financial figures—Sir Thomas White, vice-president of the Bank of Commerce; Sir Joseph Flavelle, vice-president of the Bank of Commerce; Sir Herbert S. Holt, a director of some nineteen financial and industrial enterprises; Sir Augustus Nanton, a director of a large number of enterprises, including the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Winnipeg Electric Railway. I need not do more than mention the Wolvins' and J. W. Norcross, who have come to the front in connection with the investigation into lake freight rates. I need not mention American capital, which is coming from Boston into Nova Scotia and up through Detroit into western Ontario, to be used in the operation of the mines, timber limits and fisheries of northern Ontario and British Columbia—one of the more recent developments is the sale of our bonds in New York. I would note in passing that although we have had the near failure of the Merchants Bank, those who were prominent officials and directors of that institution are still directors in important financial and industrial companies in Canada. Not only have they not been punished, but they are proceeding to carry on their work. Whether or not the near failure was owing to anything culpable or to inefficiency, the fact is that they still occupy prominent positions in financial and industrial affairs. According to the statement made by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) last year in connection with some figures that he presented, sixteen corporations through interlocking directorates control over $4,000,000,000 of Canadian capital. May I quote a paragraph to show how this concentration of capital is proceeding in the United States? Mr. Roger Babson, of Babson's Statistical Service, says:

> We said that the employing class was immensely more powerful than in 1914. There is more money at its command. Eighteen thousand new millionaires are the war's legacy. This money capacity is more thoroughly unified than ever. In 1914, we had 30,000 banks functioning in a great degree in independence of each other. Then came the Federal Reserve Act and gave us the machinery for consolidation and the emergency of five years' war furnished the hammer blows to weld the structure into one.
> The war taught the employing class the secret and the power of widespread propaganda. Imperial Europe had been aware of this power. It was new to the United States. Now, when we have anything to sell to the American people, we know how to sell it. We have learned. We have the schools. We have the pulpit. The employing class owns the press. There is practically no important paper in the United States but is theirs.

That was published in the Grain Growers' Guide of June 30, 1920. The most serious indictment against the present banking system is summed up in a sentence by Louis D. Brandeis: "The bankers control the people through the people's own money." In this great money trust which has grown up we have, as I have pointed out, a monopoly of the collecting of deposits, a monopoly of the issuance of credits, a monopoly of the issuing of our currency. Through this means the bankers have it very largely in their power to say what shall be produced, where it shall be produced, and at what price it shall be produced. This great money trust levies tribute on everything required by the consumer. As I read that long list of directorates one could not but be impressed by the fact that these companies represented the control of almost all the commodities that were commonly in use by the people. Further than that, this great money trust, in the judgment of some of us at least, to no small extent controls the governmental machinery. Men in high government positions are men who are prominent in these banking concerns. There is at least a very close interrelation, and I think we may say assuredly that it is the same group that controls in both cases; hence the policies adopted are very largely the policies of the great money trust.

And lastly, this money trust seeks as well to dominate the educational agencies. That to me, is the most serious of all, because it means that in time we are not going to be free. I do not mean for one moment to insinuate that these moneyed men go out deliberately to buy people; I do not mean to say that they go out deliberately to threaten people. But we do know that a very large number of those in the employ of all sorts of private concerns are afraid to speak out their minds because, when they desire to carry on business they may be denied credits or otherwise be forced to succumb to the power of the financial men.

I would point out that this group resists even the most moderate reforms. I think there was not a single resolution introduced in the committee—well, possibly with the exception of one that I recall at the moment—that was generally considered to be in the interests of the people when that interest seemed to conflict with the interest of the bankers—not a single resolution of that kind that was not voted down. We were pleading for public inspection; we were pleading for the prevention of usury, for the formation of small banks, and so on; for limiting the period of charters, as we are to-day; but these moderate resolutions were resisted. How can we claim that we are doing our duty by our constituents if, in the face of their expressed dissatisfaction with the present system, in face of the widespread discussion that has gone on in the newspapers, showing that the public generally are in favour of these reforms—how can we, I say, proceed to grant charters for a ten-year period on practically the same terms on which these charters have been held in the past?

In closing, let me say just a word from the point of view of labour. Labour is not consciously and definitely interested in this question, but generally takes the attitude that all these questions belong to the capitalist, that all this is part of the present system, which they desire to see superseded. I urge however that when we touch the financial system we touch the very nerve centre of our present system. We understood its operations a little better, I think, as we observed how things were managed in the Banking and Commerce committee. I think of one little amendment that I should like to reintroduce on the floor of the House—it shows how far this group goes—asking on behalf of the bank clerks the recognition of their right to organize for any legitimate purpose, a right guaranteed to all employed people under the Treaty of Versailles; yet even an innocent little resolution like that is voted down. It is obvious that we cannot hope to get much through this House; the most we can do is to protest. Let me say, as has been said elsewhere, that either we as a people must own and democratically control these great financial institutions, or they will absolutely own and control us.

Mr. WALLACE: Mr. Chairman, several sound reasons have been advanced in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and seconded by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). These reasons have been elaborated, and I do not propose to go over the same ground, but I do wish to register my support of the principle of the amendment, namely, that we extend the charters of the banks for one year, thus allowing further time for the consideration of the mass of evidence taken before the Banking committee. To my mind the Banking committee have done excellent work in the taking of evidence. There is a large amount of material available for the consideration of the members of the House, but unless the members have ample time to give it their considered judgment I feel that the evidence will not reach its full value to us as a parliament. Probably a great many of the members of that committee feel that they have had time to consider the evidence, but I know that a number of them do not; much less have the members of this House who were not on that committee had time to consider it. The Minister of Finance has said that the evidence has been before the country in the publications of the committee and in the press, but I do not feel that the country has had sufficient time to give it the consideration that is required. A number of letters have been received by many members of this House urging that the consideration of this act be postponed for another year. The hon. member for Red Deer has referred to the requests of the Alberta and Manitoba governments for postponement of consideration, and I think that these requests should carry considerable weight. Organized agriculture through the Canadian Council of Agriculture has also asked for a postponement of consideration, and I believe that organized labour is also of the same opinion. I think, Sir, that this weight of opinion should not be passed over lightly.

We are not in this amendment asking for anything for which there is not a precedent. I believe the same course was followed in May, 1911, and also in April, 1912. I feel that there is no sound reason why we should hurry this thing through unduly. I do not see why there is such a terrific rush to consider this act and get it out of the way. The banking system of this country is one of the most vital questions that we have to consider and I cannot help feeling that we should have further time to consider the evidence. I cannot see how any public interest will be prejudiced by a postponement of consideration of the act. I do not think that the banks themselves have anything to fear from that. We are men of reasonable judgment I think in this House, and I believe that the public interest will best be served by a postponement of consideration of the act for one year. For this reason and for the reasons that have been given by the hon. member for Red Deer I propose to support the amendment.

Mr. KELLNER: In rising to support the amendment which has been moved I desire to make a few comments on the continuation of our banking system as we now have it. I think all members will agree that conditions at the present time are very unstable. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction throughout the country at large and I think it would be a very unpopular thing to renew these bank charters as we now have them. It would almost be a proclamation that we had decided that our banking system was as good as we could hope to make it, or that we had decided that we would not go to the trouble of studying it and investigating other systems which have been proposed.

May I also call attention to the fact that at the present time marketing conditions from a world standpoint are almost an impossibility. We find many countries that are badly in need of the produce we are able to grow in Canada, but we find that their currency is so depreciated that they are unable to buy our produce. On the other hand, our banks are making a very strenuous effort to get back to the gold standard. I do not think that anything could be done that would so much retard the development of Canada as that, for if we get back to the gold standard and some of the countries to which we hope to sell have a greatly depreciated currency it would mean that those countries already debt-ridden would have to pay three and four times the ordinary price to buy what we have to sell, and we would have to take less. It is an impossible position, and I do not think it can be continued.

There have been placed before the Banking committee three different proposals for a banking system which might give better satisfaction than the one we have at the present time. I venture to say that there is not a member of this House or a member of the Banking and Commerce committee who fully understands any one of those three systems, and surely there could be no objection to renewing these charters for another year in order to give us time to study these systems and find out if there is not a possibility at least of adapting one of them to our needs.

I would also add that in practically every country there are students at present studying the financial problem. Now if we renew our bank charters I should think it would discourage those students who are making a study of the banking system of Canada. I would almost think that they would interpret it in one of two ways: They would either say that we have a banking system and banking institutions in this country which cannot be improved upon in the opinion of this parliament, and that therefore there was little to be gained from a study of our system, or they would say that this government has taken an arbitrary stand, and therefore even if they study our system with a view to trying to improve it there would be no prospect of bringing an improved system into force.

I am also convinced that if we pass this act renewing the bank charters and the banks continue to function as they have been in the past, some of our industries will be forced to seek other sources to enable them to carry on their business. I do not know that I would be prepared to suggest what might happen in that line, but it would almost seem that they will have to devise something to take the place of money. It is possible that our agriculturists instead of selling grain will go out and sell bonds. It might be a good idea to encourage that, but I do not believe that we should actually make it necessary for them to do so by the imposition of a banking system which evidently has never met their demands at least.

I should also like to make a few remarks about the inefficiency of our present banking system, especially in regard to the banks carrying on their own business. We have very recently had what has often been referred to as the Merchants Bank catastrophe. We have seen some of the managers of that bank tried, and we have seen them whitewashed. We know that that bank lost several millions of money and the courts have proclaimed that no one was to blame. Now, if there is something the matter with our act so that when a man who has not used due discretion or honesty in handling the funds of the public cannot be convicted under it, I think we should know what it is, and I very much doubt if any member of this House does know wherein the weakness of the act in that respect lies. If it is our criminal code that is at fault, an investigation into that, which we shall probably never have if we renew these charters now for more than one year, would probably give us very valuable information.

It would be still better if an investigation were held to see if our juridical authorities might not be persuaded to at least consider the law in the light that parliament intended. Where the law is ignored entirely you have occurrences like the Merchants Bank catastrophe. If we were to go through another period of stress and some of the other banks were to get into a similar condition, I am a little afraid the managers of those banks would feel they were quite entitled to go ahead and make such disposition of the funds at their command as they saw fit; that there would be no punishment coming to them if they did so. The impression is going abroad that where a large sum of money, well up into the thousands or even into the millions of dollars, is involved there is little need for a man to fear the law; in some way or other he always seems to evade it. On the other hand it is held there is no escape for the offender if the amount lost is insignificant.

One other argument, I think, can be advanced against an extension of these bank charters for ten years, and it can be based on the statement that domination, in the end, will be eliminated. I do not believe that as matters stand we are getting very close to the elimination of that domination. I am convinced that the vast majority of the money which the banks have lent in the last few years has gone to pay interest on debts. Now, I ask you where are matters going to end if it is going to take our entire production to pay the interest on our borrowing? I do not think that anyone will argue that we can keep making fresh loans if it takes more than it is possible to raise in this country of ours to pay the interest on those loans A good deal of evidence was given before the committee on Banking and Commerce showing that many of our industries, and in particular that of agriculture, have found it impossible to pay the rate of interest which the banks claim they require in order to be able to operate. It would seem to me, under all the circumstances, that we have reached this stage: We must either find a better banking system or we are faced with the elimination of agriculture. I believe that is one of the things we should consider very seriously before we decide to give the banks a new lease of life for ten years. Personally, I am convinced it would be much more important to the country to have a prosperous farming community, or at least have that community carrying on under decent livable conditions, than to have a dominating banking system in Canada. The present conditions, in my opinion would be greatly ameliorated if the government would only be brave for awhile and see if it were not possible to, at least, bring about a reduction in the interest we are compelled to pay. It is all very well to talk about a safe banking system, or a safe monetary system, but if that system gets "too safe" it is liable to become very weak. I think that fact was pretty well demonstrated at some of our committee meetings.

Now, the Bank Act, as I understand it, is in reality a contract between the banking institutions and the people and, I suppose, it is more or less assumed that this agreement is reasonably fair to both parties. But many hon. members will recall that there were quite a number of lobbyists operating in connection with the Banking and Commerce committee, and I think, perhaps, it is not too strong a statement to say that these lobbyists were encouraged, and probably paid for their attendance, by the banking institutions. It therefore seems scarcely possible—when one party is represented by active lobbyists, and the other party is left unrepresented—that the agreement arrived at can be absolutely fair. In conclusion I desire to say that I shall support the amendment, and that in my opinion it would be a fatal mistake to renew these charters at the present time for a longer period than one year.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BIRD: Before I proceed to the few general remarks I am about to make, I should like to pay a moment's attention to the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and I do so very deferentially because of the unfailing tolerance that the hon. gentleman always shows towards opinions that differ from his. But in his remarks he showed himself to be under some misapprehension as to our motives in taking up the time of the committee in further debating the Bank Act. I do not think we are anxious for publicity; at least we are not more anxious for it than other people are to avoid it. Our motive is pretty straightforward, and it is simply that due attention should be given to a very critical matter, I might say matters. I was referring more particularly to the one I had personally in mind. The hon. member implied that the Bank Act had already received a very thorough and searching revision, but I wish to take exception to that. The investigation into the Bank Act up to the present time has been of a rather perfunctory character with the exception of the part played by the small group representing this corner of the House. The word "revision" is almost a misnomer. What we have had has been a rather monotonous re-affirmation of the sanctity, inviolability and general unimpeachability of the Bank Act of this country.

I do not think we have had a very earnest and whole-hearted inquiry into the weaknesses and the failings, the demonstrated failings, of our present Bank Act; that in spite of the fact that in the last decade we have had one of the most unprecedented bank failures in the history of our country. The fact that we have had such a failure seems to have had very little influence upon this House. This House, or at any rate, a large section of it, is counting upon the shortness of the memory of the public. It is adopting the wisdom of the proverb that instructs us to "let sleeping dogs lie." I believe the memory of the public is short. I think it all too soon forgets the wrongs and injustices that take place from time to time. The lessons go unlearned. The people are unprofited by these things that hurt their interests, that inflict serious wounds upon the body politic. They forget them all too soon, and I am sorry to say that our statesmen and members of parliament exploit that weakness with regard to the public. I am not saying this on the strength of my own judgment, for it is well known that the press of this country, after the trials in connection with the Merchants Bank case, were clamorous for some kind of public inquiry, some efficient investigation. Those demands were widespread and unequivocal. Yet here we are almost at the end of this session; this matter has been smoothed over, passed over, and the proposition is to let it go.

I do not intend to take up the time of the committee, but I wish to make my earnest protest against this action of the House. Some one will say that attempts have been made to remedy the act so that these things will not occur again. I want to give the Finance Minister, who is responsible for the amended act, due credit for a sincere attempt to remedy the act, so far as it can be remedied by words; but I do not think the act can be remedied in that way. One scrap of paper cannot amend another scrap of paper. The old section was just as plain, as explicit and as watertight as ingenuity could make it. You can pick out any one of the Ten Commandments, and you will find that it is not more explicit than the old section, but in spite of that fact $10,000,000 disappeared. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that an act of parliament that has a hole in it big enough to allow $10,000,000 to slip through needs, not merely to be tinkered in the gingerly fashion we have attempted to amend it, but requires a new bottom, and an overhauling through and through. I do not think we have attempted to learn from the things that have befallen us. We have been bitten once, and we are still as bold as ever. We have not only left the stable door open but it seems to me we are about to open the paddock gate too. By our passivity we are inviting a recurrence of this affair.

Just a word on another phase of this question. I imagine that the side of the Merchants Bank question that is most interesting to the public has to do with the transactions that occurred previous to the false returns that were the basis for an action in court. It was not so much the lending as the borrowing that interested the public. One paper, I remember, came out very boldly in this regard, and made the suggestion that behind the Merchants Bank case there was all the sinister evil of stock exchange gambling. I think it was the Finance Minister who assured us some time ago that there was no mystery about the Merchants Bank case. It was just bad loans—injudicious loaning. I wish to say that I think he has left out the most important phase of the question. It was not the injudicious loaning that was the important thing, but it was the judicious borrowing—the very judicious borrowing, I would say—and the public has a right to know something at any rate of the influences that so worked upon our bank officials as to make them commit the error which they committed, if you like to call it an error. I would not characterize this borrowing as being in any sense criminal, although some of the public papers went so far as to suggest that it was almost verging upon criminality. I do not want to go so far as that. It reminds me of the reproaches that Reynard, the fox, made when the cat charged him with stealing a goose. He said, "Do not say 'steal' pussy, that is not courteous or kind; but say that I obtained it through my superior ability." Well, there is a lot of that kind of acquisition going on unknown to the public, and I think the public has a right to know the methods by which people can get into the inside of our banks and get away with astounding sums of money, as they did in this case. We have heard a lot about the business acumen of our bank presidents and our bank directors; but how can they hold up their heads again before the world and claim that they are supermen in all things that pertain to sound finance when, under their very noses, people entered into their institutions and took out $10,000,000? I am sometimes amazed at the futility of the ordinary bank robber, the man who undertakes all the risk attached to an ordinary bank robbery, where he breaks into the bank in the dead of night, fully armed, ready to take all the consequences. I wonder at men being content to go on in the old-fashioned way doing these things and taking all the risk, when this other kind of thing goes on, and when men go into financial institutions and take out all this wealth, get away with it and nothing is said.

With reference to those false returns, the courts of this country—and we do not need to reflect upon their decision—said that these returns were not false, but that they were involuntarily misleading. The disappearance of all this money occurred in a fit of absence of mind. It was done without anybody being consciously blameworthy. It was not a fault or a criminal action. It was an involuntary action, misleading, it is true, but misleading in an involuntary sense. Now the public's interest in a thing of that kind is clear. It does not matter to the public whether it was voluntary or involuntary. It is dangerous just the same. It makes no difference whether it was done wilfully or not, the same amount of money is missing. And this is what we are concerned about. It seems to me that the only way of preventing a recurrence of such a scandal is for parliament to see to it that in future the government make its own returns. I am not going to enter into all the threadbare arguments against outside inspection—arguments which appeal only to those who represent our big financial interests and who are jealous of having their privileges inquired into. The view taken by the average man in the street is that the government should be able to make certain that this sort of thing does not go on in our banks. The evidence before the courts showed that two government officials after only two days' inspection of the books of the Merchants Bank discovered that millions of dollars were missing. We are not asking for any elaborate inspection and audit, we are not asking that all the petty accounts of the myriad branches should be investigated. We are simply asking that an efficient man in the pay of the government should have the right to scan the ledgers at the main offices of these banks and at their more important branches and so ascertain the actual condition of affairs. Common sense would dictate that such a man, almost by a single glance, could tell if there was serious mismanagement. I think that is what the public expects and what it would demand if this question could only be kept before the public mind, for, as I said before, the public has a knack of forgetting these important things and waiting until the next financial disaster occurs before rousing itself to renewed action.

Now, a word in regard to the merger of the Merchants Bank with the Bank of Montreal. In announcing this merger the Minister of Finance regretted the trend of the concentration of financial control in a few hands, and yet he saw no alternative but to impose this merger upon the country. He proposed to cure one evil by inflicting another. Our banking system had been affected, so to speak, with scarlet fever, and he straightway inoculated it with typhoid in the hope of eradicating the first disease. He stated that we were passing through serious times, that the public mind is fickle, and therefore we must not hesitate or delay but must plunge into this recognized evil in order to escape another. Some of our newspapers strongly criticized—not the action of the Minister of Finance, but the action that instigated the merger, and one prominent journal called it a cowardly action not justified by the circumstances.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Minister of Finance—and he is about the only spokesman for the forces of hurry in this House; there are not very many others who are bold enough to stand up and plead for rushing the Bank Act through—I do not think the minister advances any other argument but that of stability. And to stabilize has become characteristic of him. We know that he has stabilized our tariff. Now he proposes to stabilize our financial system.

We have seen a very significant combination of forces brought about in this House to prevent us in this quarter securing what we consider to be a very reasonable delay in the revision of the act. It is said that trouble makes strange bed-fellows. Well, sometimes even the unfounded anticipation of trouble has the same effect. We have had the spectacle of Liberal members joining hands with Conservative members in trying to thwart the very reasonable desires of the Progressive party. The other night I saw what I thought was the extreme of incompatibility —a lion riding on the back of a mule; but during the progress of this act through parliament we have seen an equally strange sight—the Conservative party in an "unholy alliance" with the Liberal party in an attempt to block free discussion of the Bank Act.

Mr. GAUVREAU: That is a shame.

Mr. BIRD: The trouble is you do not feel the shame. To me it is strange how enthusiasms evaporate in this House. Last session when the Progressives were not saying very much about inadequate discussion of the Bank Act, we had some very eloquent speeches from the Conservative side urging a thorough discussion of the act in view of the Merchants Bank fiasco, and the House will pardon me for reading at length a few extracts from last year's Hansard because I know hon. members will find them very interesting. At that time a prominent member on the Conservative side said:

> Let me turn to another subject that has not been mentioned in the Speech from the Throne. I refer to the Bank Act. I understand that next year is really the time for the amendment of that act. I was of the opinion that it should have been amended this year to conform with the practice of the past, but in that perhaps I am mistaken. Whether that be the case or not, however, I think that the Banking and Commerce committee might very properly make a careful examination this year into the workings of the Bank Act, that is to say, into some of its evident weaknesses. I am not one of those who subscribe to the statement that our banking system has not proven workable, or that it is an unsuccessful system which is not in the best interests of the people. I am not ready to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for East Calgary (Mr. Irvine) made this afternoon—statements which seemed to me with great facility and despatch to dispose of this great problem with a complacency that one might well envy, if, indeed, the remarks of the hon. gentleman could bring about a solution of the problem. I believe that our banking system is, in the main, a sound one; it is one of the best systems in the world. Nevertheless, we have to consider the incident of the Merchants Bank during the past few months to realize that there are weaknesses, or, shall I say, loopholes in the Bank Act, and that it is necessary, if not to reconstruct, at least to amend it, so as to render impossible a recurrence of the failure of the Merchants Bank.

And the word "failure" is not mine.

> Perhaps that word is too strong; at all events, let me say the incident of the Merchants Bank. For instance, the Merchants Bank directorate or management must have made false returns to the Department of Finance for several months before the crash came. I do not see how the returns that they did make could approach accuracy in view of the sudden collapse, or partial collapse that confronted us. If it is true, as I surmise—and I think the evidence strongly supports the assumption—that the bank made false returns, then this parliament ought to know it, and I believe that the Banking and Commerce committee should summon before it the management, the president and any other officials of the Merchants Bank who might throw light on the matter, in order that parliament might be fully seized of all the steps which led up to this very regrettable incident in the banking life of this country. Furthermore, the Banking committee could very well make this examination for the purpose of preparing amendments to the Bank Act, when it comes up for general revision next year.

Mr. GOOD: Whose speech is my hon. friend quoting from?

Mr. BIRD: The hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), I think. I might supplement that by a quotation from another hon. member on the Conservative side of the House, just to show that we on this side are not doing anything at the present time that need be taken as unwonted or extraordinary; we are taking an attitude which was taken by others last session. Another hon. member said:

In conclusion, I want to refer to three or four other matters which I think should be mentioned in this debate, because this is the only opportunity we have of doing so under the rules of the House.

This is the utterance of a member for Toronto—one of the greatest financial centres in Canada—who was specially interested in this subject.

If there ever was in this country an act that needed overhauling, it is the much-heralded Bank Act. Some newspapers are beginning to wonder whether there is to be one law for the rich and another for the poor in this country.

I think it is necessary for me to say again that this is the utterance of a Conservative member, otherwise the committee might think I was quoting from the speech of one of the representatives of labour.

I have read, in some very reputable newspapers, in Canada, articles referring to some people who stole $8,000 out of a bank, and some other poor fellow who took $1.25 out of a postal envelope. The people who stole $8,000 got a life sentence because they robbed the bank with violence; the poor postman, on a small salary without bonus, who took $1.25 out of an envelope, was sent down. This matter of the Merchants Bank should not be left to any superior or high court judge of the province of Quebec; or the Appellate division either; there should be an independent inquiry by the High Court of parliament and no whitewash. We should find out whether we have a Bank Act, whether it is a mere scrap of paper or not, and whether the monthly returns made by the bank to the minister are scraps of paper or not. I believe the losses will run to twelve or thirteen million dollars before they get through. What protection has the investor, the stockholder? I know one man in my city who has started to sell out every dollar's worth of stock he has in some small banks. When I asked him the reason, he said that he was very doubtful if, in some of the smaller banks, the shareholders have the protection which they should have. This parliament should be big enough to go into the whole question of the Merchants Bank. The banks have been allowed to increase their note circulation; they have been given many special privileges, and a thorough inquiry should be made into the whole matter. The House and the country expect us to do our duty in this matter. Where do the Progressives stand upon it?

[Mr. Bird.]

I notice that the hon. gentleman is not in the House to-night to say where he stands.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Whose speech was that?

Mr. BIRD: I have difficulty in remembering where these hon. gentlemen come from; that was the hon. member for North Toronto, I believe. Well, why has this enthusiasm evaporated to such an extent that the battle is left entirely to us? I can understand why hon. members on the other side have not expressed themselves, but I cannot understand why the enthusiasts to my right should have dropped this matter and left us to wage the fight alone. Now,—

Mr. STEVENS: Will my hon. friend permit me? He has quoted at some length from a speech I made last year. May I point out to him and to the committee that that speech was delivered before the prosecutions were launched against the officials of the Merchants Bank, and it was with the distinct understanding that these prosecutions were going on that I dropped a motion that I put on the order paper last year. Any further discussion would have done a grave injustice to those who were being prosecuted in the criminal courts of the country. If, as is common to a committee of parliament, evidence were brought forward in a loose manner while this case was pending, the parties would hardly have a fair chance in the courts; accordingly, this matter was not proceeded with last year. The prosecution having been held and a very complete threshing out of the whole problem having taken place, the needs presented there do not stand this year as they did at that time before any prosecutions were commenced.

Mr. BIRD: The hon. gentleman's explanation is all right but I think he must have been aware that the prosecution was pending while he uttered those words.

Mr. STEVENS: It had not been launched; and the Minister of Finance if he were in his seat, would bear me out, I am quite sure. It was subsequent to that speech and subsequent to the placing on the order paper of a resolution to refer the whole question to the Banking and Commerce committee that the knowledge, even the preliminary intimation, that the prosecutions would be launched was brought to my attention.

Mr. BIRD: My point is that the hon. gentleman must have known that this thing was going to the courts.

Mr. STEVENS: I beg to correct my hon. friend; I have done so once. I knew absolutely nothing about it until it was conveyed to me subsequent to both the speech and the placing of the resolution on the order paper. I consented to let the resolution stand for the reasons I have mentioned.

Mr. BIRD: Well, I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's word in regard to his lack of knowledge, but in regard to the prospective action in the courts, if my memory is correct the knowledge was pretty well diffused throughout the country that the Finance Minister had decided that this thing should be investigated in the courts. However—

Mr. STEVENS: I must correct my hon. friend. I cannot allow him indirectly to impute lack of accuracy to my statement. What I say is this, and I state it again most positively; that the prosecutions were not launched, there were no intimations to the public that they were to be launched, until subsequent to both the speech and the resolution going on the order paper. If the Minister of Finance were in his seat I would appeal to him for permission to make a statement that would prove that beyond peradventure. I ask my hon. friend not to impute inaccurate statements to me, even indirectly.

Mr. BIRD: I assure my hon. friend that I have no intention of doing that. But I quoted from his speech in good faith rather to show his enthusiasm in the matter last session, and I think that part of his speech shows that he had great enthusiasm. The point of his interruption is valuable only if the action in the courts fulfilled the earnest desire he expressed in that speech and I think it will be very hard for him to contend that it did.

Now, I want to refer again to the course which the Minister of Finance has taken. I wish to make the charge of inconsistency against the Finance Minister with as light a hand as I possibly can, but in the light of his actions when the revision of the Bank Act was up some ten or twelve years ago I think it will be difficult for him to escape that imputation at least to some slight extent. The revision of the Bank Act was up before this House in the sessions of 1909 and 1910, when our present Minister of Finance occupied that same office. Early in the session in answer to Mr. Borden, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said with respect to the Bank Act revision, "This matter was very well advanced," and would be presented "early this session."

Later in answer to a question he said, "It is contemplated to provide a Bank Act this session." On February 14 of the same session, in reply to Mr. Foster, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) said that he was bringing forward an act which "would not be much longer delayed." In reply to Mr. Foster later on he said that the act was in an advanced condition but that all would depend on other business. If the session was protracted, it would be that session; if not, the next session. Towards the end of the session, in reply to Mr. Emmerson, he said that there would not be sufficient time that session. The next year the opposition got very clamorous and the bill was introduced on December 15, 1910, in the early part of the session, but was not proceeded with until March 31 the following spring, when Mr. Lennox asked for action. The contention of Mr. Lennox was that some very serious bank failures had taken place during the decade. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) replied:

> If circumstances make it necessary to bring in a temporary bill carrying the banks over for another year, I think no harm would be done. A little further time will not be to the disadvantage of any interest concerned. . . . I do not think that any great public interest will suffer.

Mr. Foster also urged strongly that the government proceed with the bill. On April 4, 1911, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) further put off the matter, and on May 11 of that year he announced that a bill would be introduced for extension of the bank charters for one year. But they were not fated to proceed with the bill, for the next session found others in possession, and in the Hansard of that next session I find that the new government adopted the same delaying tactics. Mr. Lemieux early in the session inquired whether action would be taken that session, and Mr. Borden replied that it was simply a matter of time. Later on Mr. Macdonald also inquired, and he too was put off. So I think that the House cannot claim that this group on this side of the House is asking for anything that is unprecedented. We are asking for a course that was pursued at the last revision of the Bank Act, and the delay that we are asking is only for one session, and for a very good reason. On that former occasion the revision was delayed from session to session without any good reason except the urgency of other business. Now as a young member of this House, as a politician very much in the green, I find we have to go back at least ten years in the lives of our prominent public men to find out what is proper to do to-day. We find out what they did about ten years ago, and then we go and do the opposite and we get the unanimous approval of this House. I wish to put that on record, not to charge the Finance Minister with any grave inconsistency because he may have justified himself, he surely will have justified himself in his own mind for the transformation of his conduct between now and then, and again I want to allude to the distinct courtesy and tolerance of the Minister of Finance as exercised towards us as we have endeavoured in our inexperienced way to put these objections of ours before him. The hon. minister kicks us downstairs with such infinite grace that you might think he was helping us up, and I for one have no objection to the way in which he has met our objections. I am sorry he should be such a lone mouthpiece in this unjustifiable policy of rush and hurry. I am sorry there are not more articulate exponents of that mystical doctrine of "get this thing through as quick as you can," for no ascertainable reason. I think it is very significant that he should be left alone to bear the burden of this contention.

I want to say in concluding that although we may have gone about this thing in a somewhat unrestrained manner at times, yet we have been acting in good faith and with the belief that we were carrying out the dictates of public opinion, and I believe that public opinion will sustain us in the action we have taken. I think it will be very hard for both the other parties to explain to the public why they carried this thing through as they have done against the reiterated protests from the group on this side of the House.

Mr. BLACK (Huron): Mr. Chairman, I rise to protest not so much against the Bank Act, for I was not a member of the Banking and Commerce committee, but for the purpose of protesting against extending without further consideration the bank charters for another ten years. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have mentioned the muddle into which the Merchants Bank got, and most of us here, particularly those from the province of Ontario, will remember that it was only a few years before that the Farmers Bank failed, and I really believe that that bank was in a bigger muddle than the Merchants Bank. Some of the managers of that institution although they had condemned themselves were let go by the courts. One of them skipped out of this country just as soon as the failure took place and was hounded round and found at last in the city of Chicago, I believe. He was brought back to this country and haled before the courts, and a verdict of not guilty was brought in about one minute before the man passed into the other world, and no man in this House or any other house can make me believe that he was not guilty.

The same kind of thing took place in connection with the Merchants Bank, and I rise to protest against extending the charters of these banks for another ten years until those men are brought before the bar of this House. My hon. friend from Nelson has covered the case of the Merchants Bank pretty fully, and I shall detain the House only for a few minutes to ask the Minister of Finance if he thinks the people of this country are going to stand for seeing millions of dollars squandered by these institutions and the men responsible let go scot-free. Do the bankers of Canada think they have special privileges entitling them to squander that money? Let me cite a few of the items showing the manner in which the money has been squandered. Loans to the extent of two millions were made to the officers of the bank for the purchase of automobiles and fancy homes. Little of this money came back. Advances to the total of four and a half millions were made to one stock broking firm that engaged in gambling and exploitation, and only $500,000 of it came back. To protect a debt owed by one of the manufacturing firms amounting to $65,000 a total of $1,300.000 was advanced and $1,000,000 was lost. This accounts for probably only one-half of the total amount that was squandered, I do not think I am using too strong a term when I say "squandered." The details of the other half are probably even more shocking than the ones I have mentioned, but I do not see any advantage in enumerating any more of them and occupying the time of the House unduly. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to enter my protest against making such advances. As I have not studied the Bank Act, not being a member of the committee, I shall merely enter my protest on that phase of the subject and leave the matter there.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to make just one observation as to the point raised by the hon. member for Nelson. He drew the attention of the House to a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) last year in which he distinctly recommended that some of the officers of the late Merchants Bank should have been brought before the House, or before one of its committees, to give information. When this fact was brought to his attention by the hon. member (Mr. Bird) he defended himself on the ground that at that time the prosecution had not been taken. Subsequently it was undertaken and therefore he sees no reason to make the same request this year. Now, I want to submit to him, and to the House, that the information which was elicited during the trial is entirely irrelevant to the purposes for which we would wish to have that information in this House. Therefore, I contend that the defence which my hon. friend put in is entirely outside the point. The information that we wish to get is not that connected with the particular indictments brought at the trial, it is information of a very much wider character. I consider the defence of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in that respect is very weak, and I am sorry that he has not joined with us this year in renewing the demand that he made last year.

Mr. BANCROFT: As one of the western representatives I want to take this opportunity of placing myself on record in favour of the amendment. A very significant feature in connection with the consideration of the Bank Act this year, was the fact that thousands of representative citizens throughout the country were consulted by letter and asked for their opinions as to the revision of the act. The replies received would indicate that people throughout Canada believe there is a direct relationship between the credit system or the banking system of this country and the recovery of the agricultural industry. I think it is only fair to Canadian agriculturists to state that they have put forth almost superhuman efforts in an endeavour to solve this problem, apart from federal aid. In this regard it is well to remember what has been done in several provinces of Canada. Farm loans, rural credits, and provincial banks have been established in an effort to meet the situation and, as far as western Canada is concerned, have proved inadequate only because of the limit of capital at the disposal of these institutions. It is owing to the fact that the people have realized their limitations in this respect that they now appeal to the federal government to come to their assistance. And Mr. Chairman, even though a more adequate system cannot be evolved in the immediate future a free and frank discussion of the whole situation would tend to allay suspicion, and would also tend to strengthen the hands of the banks themselves. It would restore the confidence of the people in the banks, and great institutions such as these cannot be carried on successfully for any length of time unless they enjoy the confidence of the people. For the reasons I have given I intend to support the amendment.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I wish to say a word or two with respect to the remarks that have been made by hon. gentlemen since the committee commenced the consideration of the bill. It is not necessary for hon. gentlemen opposite to defend their motives in criticizing the measure. I am sure ample opportunity will be given to every hon. gentleman to make any observations he desires on the bill, or to suggest any amendment which he wishes between now and the time the measure will come from the committee. I do say however that when hon. gentlemen undertake to say that the revision of the Bank Act should not have been proceeded with they should give reasons for that statement, and the reasons should be substantial, they should be reasoned, and they should be based upon something, whether that something is strong, weak, or indifferent. Hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon have not, in my judgment, given reasons for a delay in the revision of the Bank Act.

One hon. member, just a moment ago, referred to the fact that in 1911 a bill for the revision of the Bank Act was introduced and was deferred. Hon. gentlemen need only to recall the political incidents of that year to appreciate what happened. It was the session of parliament in which the Reciprocity treaty with the United States came before the country as a political issue. The session of parliament closed rather hurriedly, and the whole country was engaged in a political contest over that particular issue. The government of the day was defeated and in 1912 the new ministry asked for a delay in the matter of the revision of the Bank Act. That was quite natural because the new government, with the many duties which constitutionally devolved upon them, would expect the country to justify them in asking for an extension of time. Accordingly, in 1912 an act was passed extending the term of the Bank Act. The reason for not proceeding with the revision of the Bank Act then was a very good reason, and it proved satisfactory to the country at the time.

Hon. gentlemen say that many demands have been made for delay in the revision of the Bank Act during the present session. I heard it said this afternoon that there was a body of men in my own province of Nova Scotia favourable to delaying the revision of the act. I venture to say that if you canvassed the entire population of the provinces you would have difficulty in finding twenty-one out of the whole half million who had so expressed themselves. I believe a resolution was passed at some farmers' convention. I had the privilege of inquiring of two prominent persons who were present at that convention and they could not even recall that it was considered. That resolution must have come before the convention in the most informal and perfunctory manner.

Mr. DUFF: There were only fifteen there anyway.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): My hon. friend from Lunenburg suggests that there were only fifteen present, but I think there were more. But I venture to say that in the Maritime provinces there was no body of public opinion favourable to a postponement of the revision of the Bank Act. They desire reasonable, fair and proper amendments to it, of course, as do the people of every other section of Canada. There is no reason for asking for a delay in parliament doing its duty, namely extending the bank charters of this country when such charters expire at the end of the decennial period. The duty rests upon parliament and upon every hon. member to extend those charters, and they should be extended except for some strong, substantial reasons which as yet have not been given to parliament, nor to the Banking and Commerce committee. Again I venture to give as a reason why parliament should insist upon the renewal of the charters at the present time, the fact that the whole banking system has been challenged and foolish, dangerous substitutes have been suggested. I think it is wise that parliament and the country should express their disapproval of those suggestions. Hon. members say that we are rushing this bill through parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): An hon. member opposite in very subdued tones says "hear, hear," and I fancy that the tone in which that interjection was uttered is an indication that he did not feel very strongly in that direction himself. So far as I know, no effort on the part of the government, or of the committee, or of any hon. member has been made to rush this bill through the House. It was a long while in the committee. The Bank Act itself was well considered, and before it went to the committee it has had the consideration of the Department of Finance. Important amendments appeared in the bill before it went to the committee, and the House approved the bill as amended before it was sent to the committee. It was considered in the committee, section by section, and clause by clause, and no very important amendments were suggested by any hon. members opposite. I commend them for their energy and the attention they gave to the bill while it was being considered by the committee, but I say in all frankness and kindliness that they did not propose any amendment of a substantial nature to the bill. It is true that other important questions came up; but as regards the Bank Act itself, members of the Progressive party who were members of the Banking committee, made no very serious and important suggestions, and if amendments of that character were made, the committee gave ample and due consideration to them. How long do hon. members think a bill of this character should be considered in parliament or in committee? Are we going to sit month after month, year after year, decade after decade? How long is it going to take hon. members to make up their minds as to what a bill means, and what their decision will be about the matter? We would have no laws anywhere if hon. members engaged in legislative halls were to say: "You must not rush; we must have time to consider." Everybody, I think, has had ample opportunity to make any suggestion and to propose any amendment that was of any value.

We have in Canada a banking system which has been in existence since confederation and which is known as the branch bank system I think it has functioned well and successfully in this country. Like everything else it may have its weak points, and it is our duty as parliamentarians to eradicate those weak features if we can put our fingers upon them. But we must have a Bank Act, because if we did not have some banking system under the authorization of the statutes of our country, commerce and trade could not be carried on and everything in this country would stop. I think, speaking generally, every hon. member feels that our banking system on the whole is a pretty sound system, and that it has operated pretty well in the past. It stood the strain of the war test as well as any other banking system in the world. I think our bank managers and directors deserve credit for the management of Canadian banks during the war period, and it should be said of them, that they came through that ordeal in as good shape as did banks of any other country in the world.

Hon. members have referred to the Merchants Bank failure, and they spoke of money having been lost. They talk as if by some act of parliament, the recurrence of such a thing should be prevented. Bank failures cannot be prevented by legislation any more than the commission of crime can be prevented by criminal laws. Even the Ten Commandments to which one hon. member referred this evening are violated though they came to the sons of men amid the lightnings and thunders of Mount Sinai. It is perfect nonsense to think that you can eliminate human weakness, errors in human judgment, by acts of parliament. Of course we must do everything we possibly can to prevent bank failures in the future, but I do not hesitate to say that they will occur in the future. After all a bank is in essence no different from a cross-roads country grocery store. The country store sells general groceries, or something or another, and the bank merchandisers' credit. There is quite a contrast, it is true, as to the exact character of the businesses, but after all each buys and sells something. As long as human nature is what it is, we shall have failures at the country cross-roads store and in banks in Canada. To say that because the Merchants Bank of Canada failed, we should delay re-enactment of Canadian bank charters, is reasoning that I cannot understand.

Mr. FIELDING: The Merchants Bank did not fail.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The Minister of Finance reminds me, and it is true, that the Merchants Bank of Canada did not fail. They decided to go out of business, as many concerns and corporations are deciding to do to-day and will to-morrow in these distressing days in commercial life the world over. The Merchants Bank extended their loans too freely. Somebody made a mistake; the management made mistakes, and in my judgment some of their mistakes are not very easily condoned.

Mr. IRVINE: Will the hon. member say whether he knows or does not know why the Merchants Bank failed?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Because in the course of business they lost a certain amount of their assets by weak loans. They became weak, just in the same manner as ordinary business concerns become weak and fail.

Mr. SPENCER: Will the hon. member admit that they failed?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There is not much use in discussing that. I said a moment ago that they did not fail, and as a matter of fact and of law, they did not fail. The noteholders were paid. The depositors were paid. The shareholders possibly suffered a loss in the value of their shares, but by their vote they agreed to the sale of the assets of the bank. The Department of Finance instituted criminal proceedings against two officers of that bank. After trial in the courts of the province of Quebec these men were acquitted. What more could be done? How ineffective it would be to have an investigation in the Banking and Commerce committee. Would there be any tribunal as ill-fitted in all Canada as parliament to investigate a failure of that kind? We have had bank failures in the past and the country was satisfied with the public inquiry or the investigations in the courts concerning these particular failures. I think in connection with some of the bank failures preceding that of the Merchants Bank some bank managers went to penitentiary. That did not happen in the case of the failure of the Merchants Bank. But I ask hon. members, what more could be done, and why is it made the basis for the suggestion that we should postpone the further consideration of the Bank Act.

I said a moment ago that very important amendments had been made to this act, and I particularly refer to the new clauses in respect of the shareholders' audit, and to the provisions which require the shareholders' auditors to bring to the knowledge of the directors all the facts which should come before them in connection with the business of the bank. The latter I regard as an important amendment, for if by any audit system you can bring to the attention of the directors the important facts in connection with the business affairs of an institution, particularly its weak and doubtful points, I think you have gone just about as far as you can go in the way of legislation to give security to depositors and shareholders. But if these amendments are not sufficient, further amendments can be made upon the suggestion of any hon. member, and that is our business here while the bill is before the committee.

Reference has been made to the financial conditions of the country, and it is said the present banking system is not of a character to meet effectually the present situation. Many hon. gentlemen in this House fail to distinguish between banking institutions and credit institutions. It was felt by many hon. members in the committee, and I think in the House, that there was possibly a field for some financial institution operating between the banks and mortgage corporations which might be filled by some financial institution, call it what you will. We generally refer to them as rural credit associations. This particular form of credit is being tried in the United States to-day. In Europe we find they usually operate under the name of some co-operative association, and splendid things have been done there, and I do hope that some day soon we may have them in Canada. The conditions in western Canada, I admit, are deplorable. Therefore, the minds of many hon. members opposite belonging to the Progressive party are centred upon the conditions prevailing in their own particular section of Canada. We all appreciate that. In some sections of the province of Alberta, where they have had a failure in crops for three years, the conditions are particularly distressing, but that is not due to any economic law or any weakness in the banking institutions of this country. Nobody on earth is to blame for that condition, and if blame is to be attached, hon. gentlemen opposite will have to go into another sphere to find who is to blame. The chief difficulty in the western country to-day is that many farmers overborrow. That is admitted. That has been admitted by pretty nearly every hon. member from the western provinces who took part in the deliberations of the committee on Banking and Commerce. I understand this admission was made frequently by western men before another committee. The real problem in the western provinces to-day—at least in one of them, and possibly in two of them—is to devise some scheme by which the present indebtedness to banks, to mortgage corporations, to merchants and others could be lifted from the shoulders of the people and spread over a long period of years. That probably concerns the farmers of the West more to-day than the question of rural credits for the future. The member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) said to-day that several schemes were presented before the Banking committee which are not to be found here. Well, there were some schemes presented to the Banking and Commerce committee, and some of them were very fantastic.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes.

Mr. IRVINE: Does the hon. member think it is fair for him to make a lot of statements about what was presented in committee, but were never considered in committee? He is only offering his opinion, which is as good as anybody else's, but no better. He is not speaking for the committee in that regard. The committee came to no conclusion on that question.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why did the hon. gentleman not make his remarks to the hon. member behind him (Mr. Bird) when he was stating to the committee that these suggestions were not incorporated in the bill, and urging that as a ground for delaying the consideration of the bill?

Mr. IRVINE: If the hon. member who spoke on this side of the House made a mistake in referring to them, does the hon. gentleman think he is doing any better by making these statements concerning matters which were never considered in committee?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think I have made any mistake in the statements I have made, and I am not apologizing to the hon. gentleman at all. I was perfectly within my right in making the remarks I did.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member has not answered my question.

Mr. MACLEAN: I do not propose to discuss the schemes of Mr. Douglas, or Mr. Bevington, or Mr. Fisher, because this is not an opportune time. I think the opportunity will come later. A great many other remarks have been made since this bill was taken up by the committee this afternoon. I thought it desirable to make a few observations regarding some of the criticisms which were made, but I do wish to say that I think, if hon. gentlemen are serious in urging a postponement of the consideration of this bill and its enactment, really some more substantial reasons should be given. I am not objecting to the discussion or criticism. I have been merely attempting to answer some of the criticisms, and I trust the committee will soon see fit to proceed with the bill.

Mr. HOEY: Mr. Chairman, I was not a member of the Banking committee, nor did I attend the sessions of that committee with the regularity that would entitle me to pose as an authority on the subject matter in the discussion of which we are now engaged. However, there is an impression in my mind that the revision of the Bank Act this year received consideration equal to, if not greater than, the consideration accorded any previous revision. The members of the Banking committee met regularly, worked strenuously, and I think the House as a whole is indebted to them for what they have already accomplished.

And yet it seems to me that the demand embodied in the amendment is reasonable—a demand supported by several representative organizations throughout the country, a demand made upon myself by at least twenty or thirty correspondents who have written to me from various sections of the Dominion.

If we penetrate beneath the surface of things in an attempt to answer the question put by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), I think we will discover that this demand is based, first of all, upon a growing tendency in the minds of the Canadian people to-day that our electoral system—that is, the mere mechanical process of holding an election—does not place at the disposal of the people in parliament a sufficient number of specialists to undertake to pass upon a subject so technical, so involved, so abstruse and so far-reaching in its effects as the revision of the Bank Act undoubtedly is. Not only do they lack faith in the ability of their elected representatives, but they are frequently reminded of the limited time at our disposal to undertake and carry to a successful conclusion this Herculean task.

But the senior member for Halifax will remind me that on this occasion specialists were summoned, authorities on banking were brought before the committee and gave evidence, which evidence has been published verbatim. I want to be honest with myself and with hon. members. How many members of the Banking committee have read through that evidence? And of those who have read it through how many fully understand it? But in the last analysis it is not the members of the Banking committee before whom that evidence was taken who are going to be responsible for passing this legislation, it is the hon. members of this Chamber; and again I want to be honest with myself and with hon. members. How many members of this Chamber have read that evidence through? And of those who have done so how many fully understand it? How many could get up here, or before a public audience, and give an intelligent lecture of one hour's duration on the evidence submitted? Has the Prime Minister read that evidence? Doubtless the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has. But, if so, is it not a reasonable request to make of him that he present to this House a brief synopsis of the evidence, showing that in the light of the knowledge that has come to us from the evidence the present measure is the best possible act that can be evolved in the next decade? Again I say, if we penetrate beneath the surface we find that while the people may have faith in the honesty of their elected representatives, they have grave doubts as to their specialized knowledge. That is to say, Democracy's ability to return members to parliament at this time has outdistanced Democracy's ability to discover and return to parliament the right type of man. Hence we have to-day the demand for government by commission. We have a Railway Commission. We have a Civil Service Commission. We have a Board of Grain Commissioners. Last year we had a Royal Commission on Pensions and this year a royal commission inquiring into lake freight rates. I do not know but what the time is rapidly approaching when we shall, in response to this growing demand, have to appoint a commission on banking—a commission on finance. Now, I say to the senior member for Halifax—and I say it in all kindness—that in my humble judgment no government, if it is wise, can afford to treat with impunity and with contempt such tendencies on the part of the people they are seeking to govern. A wise government, a government that is well advised, will take note of such tendencies and attempt to reconcile them with the theory of responsible government.

Turning to the banks for a moment, it would be too much for us to expect that our banking institutions could escape from the storm of criticism, the force of which has been felt by almost every institution within the circle of our national life. The fact that there has been a tendency towards the centralization of financial control, coupled with the fact that our banks have been paying dividends on a normal basis during a period of the most acute financial stringency in Canadian history, has created an impression in the minds of many people that these institutions enjoy advantages and privileges not enjoyed by other institutions in this country.

Then I want to say that this demand is inseparably bound up with the demand for a rural credit scheme. Some scheme or proposal for an extension of rural credits is, in my judgment, indispensably essential if we are to stimulate production in the western sections of this country, which production when stimulated will enable us to meet our financial obligations. Representations have been made to the hon. Minister of Finance with regard to a commission on taxation; it is proposed to hold a conference to which will be invited all the provincial treasurers. It seems to me that that would be an opportune time not only to discuss taxation, it would be an opportune time to discuss the whole problem of rural credit, the funding of farmers' obligations and a thousand and one questions related to that subject. What could be more appropriate than that the present Minister of Finance, after years of service, after his splendid devotion to the cause of duty in this country—what could be more fitting, than that he, in co-operation with those who are willing to assist him, should in the immediate future evolve some system of rural credit, not a slavish imitation of systems already existing in other countries, but something new, something original, something worthy of Canadian statesmanship, something that will meet our present needs?

So much for the mere economic aspects of the question. When the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) suggests that we are opposed to this bill, he is, not deliberately but unintentionally, misrepresenting our position. We are prepared to support this bill for at least a year, but we are not prepared to support it for a period of ten years, with the information at our disposal. Then, there are other considerations, the least worthy of all—what I would call political considerations. It would scarcely be fair to say that the demand for this postponement comes wholly from western Canada, but I think it is the case that the demand is more pronounced in western Canada, because of the peculiar economic conditions prevailing there. As I listened to the speeches this afternoon I thought of the effect those speeches would have upon the present government.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is the hon. gentleman worrying much about it?

Mr. HOEY: I am not worrying at all. But I wondered if those speeches, broadcasted from one end of this country to the other, would have the effect of rousing the Canadian people and sending thousands to the polls who up to the present have refused to vote. If I thought such speeches had that effect, I would encourage them, but I am inclined to think, and I say it in all seriousness, that utterances of this kind will have a tendency to embitter the Canadian people, to set class against class, to set one section of the country against the other, and to undermine the faith of the Canadian people—that is, the little bit of faith they have left—in political institutions as they exist. I am not persuaded that the present leader of the government has decided to scrap western Canada so far as his future political plans and ambitions are concerned. A gentleman told me to-day he was convinced that the present Prime Minister had pulled down the curtain so far as western Canada was concerned. I am rather inclined to think that the Prime Minister—and I have considerable faith in his sincerity; I wish I had the same faith in his political sagacity—is still willing to make an attempt to unite the different sections that go to constitute the Canadian nation. I do not believe that the Prime Minister extracts pleasure from the division that at present exists. But what are the facts? I should be out of order here if I referred to a budget for the creation of which and for the adoption of which the present administration was responsible this year, but I do not think it is an exaggeration to say that that budget, for weal or for woe, caused dismay in the minds of the government's most loyal and devoted followers in the western section of this country. And then they come along with a proposal, the psychological effects of which are going to be tremendous, a proposal and an attitude on the part of the government which if persisted in, and coupled with the speeches that are going to be made, will definitely line the present administration up with the eastern interests. But the Prime Minister says: We have taken a certain position, and we cannot, and maintain our dignity, give way to an irresponsible minority in this House. But I want to remind the present government that if they do not seriously consider the advisability of giving way to a so-called irresponsible minority in this House they are going to be accused of lining up with an irresponsible minority outside this House.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is my friend quoting me when he uses the expression that he has just employed?

Mr. HOEY: I think the Prime Minister misunderstood me. I have not quoted him to-night. I was speaking rhetorically when I said: The present government may say that it cannot, and maintain its dignity, give way to an irresponsible minority in this House. I can only say that if the government do not seriously consider the advisability of giving way to a so-called irresponsible minority in this House they will be accused, they are being accused now, of being dominated by an irresponsible minority outside this House, namely, the eastern interests. If I were interested in the triumph of mere political parties—and I do not give a continental for the growth or triumph of any party—I would not ask for a better basis upon which to build up the party to which I am attached than the present attitude of the government on the revision of the Bank Act. I do not mean to say that it is a great thing in itself; there is a lot of merit in the argument of the hon. member for Halifax. But if you exercise your imagination and think that men in the paralyzing grip of economic necessity to-day are willing to blame almost anybody in the present crisis—exercise your imagination in that sense, and then think of the future political result.

I am interested in the attitude of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) on this question; I will await his speech with considerable interest. He has much less political sagacity than I give him credit for if he supports the government in putting through for a ten year period this Bank Act, in view of the state of public opinion throughout the country. I have tried to be fair in my remarks; I have tried to be conciliatory; I have no desire to stir up bitterness or to awaken hatreds. I simply submit these considerations to the government for what they are worth, and I wonder if even yet some compromise could not be reached that would be satisfactory to all concerned, some compromise that would awaken hope in rural Canada that the present administration is at least making an honest, a sincere, a supreme attempt to come to their rescue and to help them out of their present difficulties.

Mr. LUCAS: I shall not delay the committee at any great length, but I wish definitely to place myself on record in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) this afternoon. I was not a member of the committee which considered this bill, but I took advantage of any opportunity that presented itself to visit the committee and see it in action. Yet in spite of all that has been said here this evening and what I heard in that committee the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) says that no substantial reason has yet been given for postponing the revision of the Bank Act. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that one of the reasons why the Conservative party went down to defeat in 1921 was because they did not have their finger close enough upon the pulse of public opinion in this country, and the result was that the people placed in office in their stead a new government thinking that it would respond more readily to public opinion. I would like to ask the government now what good reason they can give why this Bank Act revision should not be postponed for another year. Are we asking for anything unreasonable in view of the widespread unrest prevailing throughout Canada to-day?

I might say that our demand is backed up by resolutions from organizations from almost every part of Canada. I shall not weary the House by reading them, but I have here resolutions from the government of Manitoba, which is no small organization but represents the people of that whole province, from the government of Alberta, and from the Canadian Council of Agriculture, which represents thousands of organized farmers throughout the whole of Canada. I have also a letter here signed by Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labour Congress, which I propose to read:

> Dear Sir,—Communications received from a number of our affiliated organizations, including the Trades Councils at Victoria, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Toronto, London, Montreal, St. John and Halifax, all indicate that there is a widespread interest amongst the organized workers regarding the Banking Act.
> Labor opinion is strongly favorable to a thorough revision of the Banking Act and entirely opposed to hasty action on such an important matter. It is strongly felt that the mass of evidence submitted to the Banking Committee during this session should be thoroughly analyzed before final decision is reached as to what amendments of benefit to the public could be properly made to the Banking Act and that the present session of parliament is apparently too far advanced to admit of this being done.
> We would therefore respectfully urge that the revision of the Banking Act should be postponed until the next session of parliament and would greatly appreciate any assistance you can render to bring about such action.

Mr. JACOBS: Is the writer of that letter a director of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. LUCAS: The letter is signed by Tom Moore, president, and P. M. Draper, secretary-treasurer, of the Trades and Labour Congress.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Mr. Moore was before the committee and he never suggested that the revision of the act be postponed. Furthermore he said he had nothing to propose by way of an amendment.

Mr. LUCAS: Here, of course, Mr. Moore is speaking for organized labour throughout Canada, and his letter speaks for itself. I am not going to argue with the hon. gentleman as to Mr. Moore's views, but I have his letter here above his own signature. One of the reasons we in western Canada especially have for postponing the revision of this Bank Act is the lack of confidence that a great many of our farmers have in our banking system as it exists at the present time. I have here one of our farm papers containing a lengthy article headed "Financing the Farmer." It was put out by the superintendent of the Rural Credits branch of the Merchants Bank before that institution went out of existence. I shall quote only one short sentence:

> The farmer who takes his banker into his confidence at all times and under all conditions is making satisfactory progress, and he seldom finds it necessary to seek credit outside the bank to carry on his season's undertakings.

We have had advertisements in our farm papers out in that country along this line:

If you are sick, you go to your doctor for medical advice. If you are in legal difficulties you go to your lawyer. When in financial trouble, why not go to your banker? In this very article it says, "Place your confidence in your banker." I should just like to point out what happened through a man placing confidence in a banker. It is a case that happened in my own district involving an immigrant, one of the finest type that has ever landed in this country. He came from the Jersey islands and was worth considerable money, just the class of settler we are all anxious to see in Canada. He came over and settled in the town of Sedgewick. He went to his banker and placed his full confidence in him, and the result was that on the advice of that banker this settler placed $10,000 in a partnership which was in a very unstable condition. Just to prove that this partnership was in an unstable condition when this man invested his $10,000 in it, I wish to read a letter from the general manager of the Merchants Bank at Montreal which was produced at the trial, and just here I might say that our head bankers often claim that they are not quite responsible for all that the branch managers may do or say. This letter from the general manager of the bank at Montreal goes on to say, speaking of the condition this partnership was in at the time this immigrant invested his money in it:

> The inspector suggests that J. Burn has Mr. B. mesmerized, and we think you too. This account is on anything but a satisfactory basis and we want it cleaned up without delay. You say it is impossible to confirm our figures representing wheat, oats, flax, and barley, covered by the bank's pledges, but it is your business to know that the commodities are there.
> The door is wide open for perpetration of fraud, and we have seen it happen so often. On the lines of the authorized credit we shall not object, but you have given double the amount we have authorized. Bring it within $10,000 without delay and do not arrogate so much authority again. There is evidence in your liability list that Burn is getting into deep water. Send us a statement of the grain covered by the bank's pledges after you have seen it, obtain also a statement of stored grain and ask Burn to explain to you how he proposes to separate and identify the two classes of grain on hand.

I want to call particular attention to the last paragraph:

> If you don't get this account into line quickly I will relieve you of the management. Note that. Now get to work.

This manager got to work, and he was responsible for getting this settler freshly landed in Canada, and who had placed his confidence in that bank manager, to invest $10,000 in that partnership which inside of one year was in such a condition that it was wound up. I want to say that this new settler holds a very bitter feeling against the banks in western Canada in consequence. He sued the bank for fraudulent misrepresentation, and in summing up the judge said that it was not a matter of justice; he had to administer the law, and that the bank took shelter under an old law dating back as far as 1826. He said: "The advice was given verbally and not in writing, and therefore damages could not be recovered."

We heard Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, who is head I believe of the Canadian Bankers' Association, before the committee, and when asked if there was sufficient credit to meet the demands of the country he said:

> The demand for credit in Canada is less than the banks of Canada are able to take care of, substantially less, and the banks of Canada at the moment have large sums unemployed.

Now in view of the conditions the farmers of western Canada are up against at the present time it is hard to understand that statement. When we were asked to subscribe for victory bonds we were all told that those bonds were as good as gold at any time and that they would form a good basis of security if we wanted to borrow. What are the facts? We find that farmers in the West with victory bonds in their possession, who had met with losses in carrying on their farming operations, could not get loans on these bonds and were forced to sell them out and out. In view of that fact it is hard to understand Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor's statement that there is no lack of credit in Canada.

A short time ago I came across this extract from an article by Lord Milner in the London Observer:

> Labour is more and more inclined to question the competence of the bigwigs of industry and finance. There is a loss of confidence in the management.
> Such loss of confidence may not be wholly justified, but, in view of the extraordinary happenings of the last three or four years, it is not unnatural. Let us try to picture the impression which his experiences during those years are likely to have left on the mind of any fairly intelligent workman, a man, say, good at his own job, but with only so much information about the general affairs of the world as he could gather from the steady perusal of his daily paper. For months and months after the close of the war he had it dinned into his ears that the world was suffering from a shortage of goods, and he was overwhelmed with exhortations to him and the men of his class not to spare themselves, but to work with intensified energy to make up the deficiency. That, he was vehemently assured, was their duty to their country and the world, and at the same time the one sure road to the improvement of their own condition. Such was the unanimous appeal made to him by all the highest authorities in the world of industry and finance. And he obeyed it to the best of his ability, but only to find, a year or two later, that the warehouses of his employers were choked with goods which they could not sell, and that his services were no longer required.

We all remember very well, when the war was on and afterwards, the advice which was sent out by the financial institutions of this country, especially when we farmers in Canada were complaining about the conditions we have to meet, "We have all got to make our sacrifices, we have all got to be patriotic." I should like to ask the chairman and the members of this committee whether the banks of Canada have taken their share of the losses, whether they have borne their share of the sacrifices undergone by the masses of the people of this country? We found that when the great mass of the people were suffering—not only on the farms but in our cities as well—banks were holding their annual meetings and declaring their usual dividends. At the annual meeting of every bank, while other people were undergoing sacrifices and enduring suffering, it was announced that the year had been a prosperous one and the customary dividends would be paid.

One of the things we hear a great deal of in Canada to-day is the necessity for an aggressive immigration policy. We all realize that we are staggering under a tremendous burden of debt and that in order to develop this vast country we should have more people here. But what inducement can we offer to bring immigrants to Canada? We find that in New Zealand, in Australia, and in the United States they have inaugurated some form of rural credit scheme in order to assist the farmers. We are spending millions of dollars on an immigration policy in order to bring settlers to Canada and what inducement are we offering these settlers? Let me compare what is being done for the farmer in the United States at the present time with what is being done in Canada. If a farmer takes out a loan for $1,000, under the present rural credit scheme, an amortization plan they have over there, in thirty-four years he will have paid back a total of $1,870. The farmer in Canada who takes out a loan of $1,000 must pay interest at the rate of 8 per cent and I may say there are a great many loans that bear a much heavier rate than 8 per cent. Taking out a loan on that basis in thirty-four years, instead of paying back $1,870 as in the case of his American cousin, he will pay back the much larger sum of $3,700. What inducement, therefore, is there for immigrants to come to Canada when if they settle in this country they have to compete in the same market with people who are much better situated.

I think the hon. member for Halifax admitted, I know many others have admitted, that there was a gap between our present financial system and the farmer. In view of that fact the government would give a great amount of satisfaction, especially to the members on this side, if, instead of trying to force this bill through at the present time, they would await the report of the special committee on agriculture and its recommendation in favour of some rural credit scheme, and give us some assurance that action along that line would be taken. In the absence of such assurance from the government it is our duty to protest that the bill to revise the Bank Act should not be put through at the present time.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Would it not be better to take some of the time now being consumed in trying to develop a rural credit scheme or some financial institution which might meet the situation my hon. friend says prevails to-day in the West? Is there any relation between commercial banking necessarily and a rural credit scheme?

Mr. LUCAS: That is what I was trying to tell the hon. gentleman. The special committee on agricultural conditions have spent practically the whole of this session in developing some such scheme, and yet this bill is being forced through in advance of that committee's recommendation.

Now, I do not wish to occupy time unnecessarily. As I said at the beginning of my remarks I did not intend to make any lengthy argument, but I do feel that it is the duty of the government, in view of the existing conditions, to try and evolve some rural credit scheme that will meet the needs of the agriculturists of Canada. One of the things that I know for a fact is this: As a result of the economic conditions that we are now struggling against the farmers are getting into a condition almost of despair, and unless we can take back to those farmers from this long session of parliament some hope—some little ray of hope—that relief is going to be given them to enable them to get out from under the tremendous burden they are carrying, there is going to be a greater exodus from Canada than has been witnessed in the past. I want to give credit to other hon. members in this House. I believe we are all sincerely desirous of building up this country, but I think that after the months we have spent in session here, this government should try to establish some rural credit scheme that would afford relief to our agriculturists. We find that in practically every other country of the world some scheme of this character has been evolved. To-day the people of Canada are looking to this government for leadership in the matter, and I hope that before this session closes the government will come forward with some scheme calculated to remedy the existing situation.

Mr. FORKE: I rather hesitate to take part in this debate feeling as I do the lack of information which other members in this group possess in relation to the question of bank revision. Before dealing with this subject, I should like to pay my tribute to those members of the Banking committee who have devoted their time so assiduously and who have studied so carefully the different phases of the banking question. I for one, reading only cursorily the reports in the newspapers, have been rather surprised at their astuteness and the careful consideration that has been given to many questions that have come before the Banking committee. I admit that the question has now become rather tedious; it is taking a long time; it has been carefully considered; but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that a question is never settled until it is settled right, and I question very much if we have reached the place where we can say that this question has been rightly settled.

Perhaps some little trouble was occasioned at the beginning by certain theories being propounded before the Banking committee that rather alarmed some members in the committee and in this House. I might say that they were needlessly alarmed when one takes into consideration who at present occupies the position of Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and the composition of this parliament. I think hon. members may rest assured that nothing very radical or serious is likely to happen in this parliament as regards the Bank Act. I have every respect for the Minister of Finance—I will take second place to no one in that regard—but, perhaps, having been in that position for a long time, he has seen things working fairly smoothly; he is certainly well content with things as they are and he is rather careful that, at least, if he should err, he would err upon the side of safety. He has been very safe in this case. From what I can learn, no very great difference has been made in the Bank Act; it is substantially the same Bank Act that we have had during the last ten years.

[Mr. Lucas.]

I believe throughout the country at the present time there is considerable dissatisfaction with our financial conditions, and I for one would like to see this question carefully considered. I can speak from personal experience. I have in my room upstairs a large volume of evidence that has been taken before the Banking committee. I have not had time to read a single issue of that evidence and I am perfectly certain that, perhaps, the majority of the members of this House are exactly in the same position. They are asked to vote for this Bank Act, and they do not know what all this is about, or what all the evidence is that has been taken before the committee. I do not think in the history of parliament has such a volume of evidence been taken, or has the question been shaken up so thoroughly as during the time evidence has been taken on the stand before that committee. I claim that as one reason why I think the members of this House and the people of this country should have time to consider this question in all its bearings. I have had requests from bankers to send them some copies of the evidence, and I am sure the bankers of Canada are not acquainted with the evidence, nor have they given it sufficient consideration to enable them to make to their members the suggestions they might make if they were familiar with all that evidence. Perhaps the people who are anxious to go too far have played into the hands of those who do not want to go at all. I do not know if hon. members will understand just what I mean. They have made people afraid, and those who might have been willing to go a little further have been afraid to move just for fear some of the ideas that have been propounded should be put into practice. As I said before, this revision will not be final in any case. There should be no antagonism between the different classes in our country. It should be very evident to everyone that banks can live only by the business they do with the people of the country; and if a system is adopted that is detrimental to the business of the country, it does not matter whether that business is agricultural or industrial, in the long run the banks also will suffer, so that the banks and the people after all are interested in seeing that we have a proper financial system.

I have a short extract from an article written by Colonel MacLaren in the last issue of the Financial Post. I will read this, and I want hon. members to pay particular attention. The article reads:

The proceedings before the Bankers' committee have not improved matters in spite of the efforts of the chairman, A. K. Maclean, one of the most tactful men in the House, aided by the very broad knowledge of the Minister of Finance. The financiers and the farmers across Canada are drifting into real antagonism.

I for one deplore the fact that there should be any antagonism between the different classes in this Dominion of ours. It should have been the business of the financiers of this country to come forward and give all assistance in their power to provide the very best possible financial institutions. From what I hear—I cannot speak from actual knowledge—the stand taken by the bankers has been that we have an admirable banking system and that it cannot be much improved on. Such an attitude of superiority of great knowledge should not be taken when people know things have not been functioning just as well as they really should. The writer goes on to say:

> The blame does not rest with the farmers. The farmers are not radicals.

I want hon. members to pay attention to that, because I know hon. members in this part of the House are sometimes looked upon as bolshevists and radicals who are willing to upset everything and to create disturbance in every branch and line of industry. Nothing is further from them than that. The writer continues:

> They are capitalists themselves, very closely allied to and in deep sympathy with good business and sound finances, and with little real sympathy for political interference in business. They want some sound way of temporary borrowing.

I might go on to say that they want longer credits even than our banks are willing to give at the present time. I should like again to emphasize the statement that farmers as a class are not radicals, nor are they bolshevists. There are no people in this country as able and willing to stand up for the institutions and the welfare of the country as are the farmers of Canada. If you will allow me to make an interjection at this point, I remember the strike in the city of Winnipeg, when the people lost their heads, and the cry heard then was "The farmers will save them; the farmers will save them". Why was that? Because they were the most stable element in the whole population of this Dominion.

There are going to be changes in the coming years in any case. I do not care how this committee votes on the present division; I will make the prophecy,—and I am perfectly sure of it,—that within ten years there are going to be changes in the Bank Act. To my mind, one of the things of greatest importance at the present time in connection with our banking institutions is the matter of credit getting into the hands of a few men. Have hon. members ever considered what credit means, what power it gives? If ever the credit of Canada gets into the hands of a few men, they can make and unmake industry, institutions, individuals just as they like, and I for one am alarmed to see the banking institutions of our country gradually converging into the hands of a few people. I listened with great attention and pleasure to the very eloquent speech of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey). Like myself he hesitates to discuss currency and banking. They are intricate and rather difficult matters to understand, but I think I know enough to realize that currency and banking are really international affairs and go wider than the bounds of our own Dominion.

I do not intend to make any lengthy speech, for the simple reason that I have given this question no particular study; but I think the members in this part of the House are making a very reasonable request. They are asking nothing out of the way; they are not going to upset any industry. Business can be readily assured that this House is not going to do anything tremendously radical, and business can go on during the years to come, quite confident that nothing is going to happen that will hurt it very much.

Not very much attention has been paid by members on the government side of the House to the fact that we have had requisitions and resolutions passed by governing bodies, two provincial legislatures and a large farming association in the West, asking that the revision be held over for a year, or, at least, that charters be only granted for one year. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has said that he has not heard us give any reasons. I think several reasons have been given. One is the fact that we feel the need at the present time of some intermediary system of banking between short-term credits and what may be called the farm loan system of long-term credits. We need some system of rural credit, and as a member once said in the House, we have only one system of banking at present. We have no other. We do not know of any proposition the government is likely to make. I was disappointed when the Minister of Finance made his speech that he did not give some promise that the government was going to look into some system of rural credits for financing the farmers for some three or four years which could be done; and if we allow the Bank Act to go through now, I feel certain that we are not going to see a Dominion system of rural credit for some considerable length of time. I do not wish to discuss the matter further, because I am not very well posted. I have not had the privilege of attending the meetings and hearing the evidence placed before the committee. I can see nothing unreasonable or out of the way in making the request that the bank charters be extended for one year only. I am sure that members on the other side of the House do not understand public opinion in the West. The statement of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) that the government had received one shot already is perfectly true, and the second shot might be fatal as far as the government is concerned.

Mr. EVANS. There are several reasons why clause 5 should be amended. I think it has been apparent to us now for many years that our Canadian banking system does not adequately meet the needs or the interests throughout this Dominion. I think this is particularly true as regards the basic industry of agriculture. As one of those concerned with that industry, I shall endeavour to give some reasons why the revision of the act should be deferred for another year. A mass of evidence has been secured by the committee on Banking, which, if properly sifted and digested by men capable of dealing with this question would give us a lead by which we could evolve a system which would adequately meet the needs of the basic industry, and serve the needs of the industry of this country in a fair and impartial manner, particularly the basic industry of agriculture which is now mostly suffering. Now, Mr. Chairman, some of those gentlemen who seem so anxious that this revision should take place, have in the recent past given utterance to statements and opinions which would go to show that they themselves realized, to some extent at least, that the present system does not adequately meet the needs of the interests of this Dominion. For instance, Sir Vincent Meredith realized the helplessness of the present system to adequately finance our export trade so as, he said, to keep our factories open and give employment to our workingmen. He said:

> If foreign trade can be revived it will solve many of our difficulties.

In fact speaking at the annual meeting of his bank in 1920 he became emphatic and declared that sooner or later this question must be dealt with by the banks, and the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that Sir Vincent Meredith, in this speech to which I now refer, December 6, 1920, realized the helplessness of the banks, to aid the industries and take advantage of any opportunity which fate might offer. So we see that even our bankers are beginning to realize that our much-lauded Canadian banking system has fallen down in that it fails to meet the immediate needs of the country. It is not merely agriculture that is suffering; in fact it is plain to everyone that our cities to-day are suffering, and that our workingmen have had to migrate to seek work. I think, Sir, it would be a crime to extend the charters for the present inefficient system—yes, admitted to be inefficient—for ten years, without profiting by the experience which has been furnished us by the evidence of those who appeared before the Banking committtee this session. Theoretically, our system is as efficient as it was twenty years ago when we had money to assist in the harvesting of the United States crop, according to William Long Baker, who has written a very able treatise on banking in Canada. But, I think the most interesting point of this candid confession of weakness is that, in so far as the public is concerned, no move has been made to cure the trouble. Two whole years have gone by since Sir Vincent Meredith recognized this, and our bankers who have realized their own weakness have done nothing to improve the trade of the country, and the responsibility for that certainly rests on the shoulders of such a body of men, seeing that it is they who control the circulation of the very lifeblood of industry—finance. Our factories have not been busy, and were it not for our close proximity to the United States we would, this last winter, have had an unemployment problem on our hands such as we never saw before, and indeed, it is questionable if our Acting Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) would have been able to cope with the awful disturbances that would surely have ensued.

All these conditions exist in Canada, while an unprecedented era of peace and industry prevail in the United States under a more elastic system of credit. But agriculture is not the only industry that has fallen down. If the capitalistic system of our country is all right, why are not our industries working? Now, while a patriotic minority in this House seeks to put off the revision of our banking system for another year, we find the present banking combine able to control parliament to such an extent that the representatives of the people jealously guard the present inadequate and contracting system at the expense of industry. The banks are semi-public institutions. They are joint stock companies founded for private gain, but they accomplish this end with the earnings of the public. A question which should be answered to-day is: What are our seventeen bankers doing in the public interest? It is time, in the interests of this country, that this awful monopoly controlling industry and credit should be broken, and this House will commit a crime against the workers of the land if they renew the present system with only such minor amendments as are contemplated in the amended draft before us.

The banking system is a monopoly and has been for years until to-day it is able to entirely control industry in any way it chooses. Under this system the public have no voice in the direction in which their earnings are loaned. Taking September 30th last, the total paid-up capital of the seventeen chartered banks I find to be $125,004,717; the total liabilities $2,342,980,663; the deposits amounted to the tremendous sum of $1,648,647,555. So we see to what extent the banks are indebted to the public for the deposits on which they make so large a part of their profits. We also see to what extent the people have trusted the banks until they have become such a complete monopoly that they are bound by no law whatsoever. They take the people's deposits at 3 per cent and loan them out for anything up to 9 or 10 per cent. All renewed loans this year in the West, so far as I can find out, are made at 9 per cent, unless interest is paid in advance. In a letter from an old friend in my constituency who lives adjacent to the town of Asquith he has this to say:

> I told you they had increased the rate from 8 to 9 per cent. This time I wanted to know what the rate was, and was told I could have the note renewed at 8 per cent. When the note was being made out I was asked if I intended paying the interest then. I asked why. Why should I pay interest for a period of service before the service began? He replied that I could pay at the end if I like, but it would be some more, and altered the note accordingly to 9 per cent.

And he asks:

> Is it not time the paying interest beforehand, or alternately paying interest on interest, for which no service has been given was changed? Why not have a straight rate to be charged after the service has been given? The present system seems only useful to confound the average customer until we don't know exactly what we are paying.

I submit, Sir, that as things are at present the farmers cannot pay 8 or 9 per cent. I think a commission of inquiry between now and next session could do splendid work in establishing these facts, and then we could deal with the revision in an intelligent manner.

Our banking monopoly is given privileges not equalled in any other country in the world. The banks may, without making any deposits in the central gold reserve, issue notes up to the full amount of their unimpaired capital, and it is incorrect indeed to suppose, as we did in the past, that the whole of the bank notes in circulation are backed by deposits of gold. It is not so. This is a very valuable privilege, and it enables our banks to open branches throughout the whole country. They say they do this to serve the needs of the people. I am not so sure of that. Sir Edmund Walker, giving evidence before the Banking committee in 1913, admitted that it was the profits from the note issue that permitted the banks to open such a large number of branches. At present I think the seventeen chartered banks have about four thousand branches throughout the country. It is time that this privilege was curtailed and some check placed upon this free issue.

I know the banks are required to make monthly returns. The Minister of Finance, too, may call for special returns at any time. But what value we may attach to these returns in the face of what transpired in the Merchants Bank failure, when the president and other officials were exonerated from all blame, is more than I know. It is hardly to be expected that a concern of this kind would let the public know its exact condition, particlarly if it happened to be on the down grade.

I think one of the chief reasons why this revision should be delayed, or granted only for one year, is the fact that our banking monopoly has the power in its hands to enhance the price of any commodity and, on the other hand, to cripple any industry by withholding credit. This is certainly a power that should not be given into the hands of any class of men. The branch banks exist for collecting the people's earnings, to be used in any other part of the country instead of for the development of the community in which those earnings were made. Now, Mr. Chairman, the trouble with different parts of our country to-day is that the branch bank system collects the earnings of the people to be used in enterprises far remote from where those earnings have been gathered, and I submit that the West in particular is suffering from this evil to-day. We have no industries in western Canada, nor are we likely to have as long as our earnings are tapped for the benefit of industries in other parts of the country. Indeed, there is only one banking concern that has its headquarters west of the Great Lakes. I say it is a real objection to our banking system as at present constituted and carried on that no profits, or practically none, are distributed in the locality where they are made. The whole monopoly is used for the benefit of the monopoly and is more and more impoverishing the rural parts of the Dominion. Indeed, Sir, it is to be regretted that to this accursed system of centralization of capital and industry the Dominion to-day stands indebted for a contracted population of eight or nine million people instead of more than double that number, as we should have.

I have said that the banks are a law unto themselves. In the West they have always charged what interest they chose to exact, and they have always compelled the payment of notes at any time they pleased to name. Indeed, it is not so long ago, in 1907 in fact, when the banks took part in a great conspiracy to compel the western grain grower to ship his grain through the Grain Combine's elevator instead of using the loading platform. I think the banks went outside their proper sphere of business in taking that action. I think they should be prevented from purchasing agricultural products, particularly for speculative purposes. I do not think it is a healthy state of affairs for any people when they are at the mercy of a combine or of combines who dictate the methods they shall use to market their products. No one can estimate the possibilities of Canada's future. No one knows far ahead what problems we may have to solve. Our financial system is the pivot on which everything else revolves, and it is surely in the public interest that this revision should be put off until the people in the country can make their wants known along lines of experience as brought out before the Banking committee of the present session.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, I want to protest against this shoving of the Bank Act through and the granting of the charters for another ten years—which is speaking in favour of the amendment. I believe that the charters should be granted for one year only. I have not prepared a speech, but I do not feel that I should let this opportunity pass without adding my voice to the volume of voices that has arisen in protest against the undue haste of the bankers and their friends in this matter. Our request is surely a very reasonable one, and it has that which is necessary in parliament to give it an air of respectability; it has a precedent. Now, I was a member of the Banking committee—not an able one, I am willing to admit that, but at least an interested one and one who attended the meetings quite regularly. I found that it was generally the bankers who came there to give evidence; that the small manufacturer—in fact, the large one—the businessman, the representatives of basic industries, did not come to give their evidence and to tell how the Bank Act as at present constituted affected their business. To me this is a very good reason why the final revision of the Bank Act should be postponed and the charters granted for one year only. The attitude of members of the Banking committee and the harmony with which the two old traditional parties worked together there brought me to the position where I felt it would be well to grant the charters for one year only instead of for ten.

Now, the question of national currency is a very large one. A great many people to-day think we should have a national currency instead of the bank currency; others think that either the bankers or the government should go into the issuing of currency, but not both. Then, there are a great many who think that this privilege of issuing currency is a valuable one for which the banks do not pay sufficiently either in the form of taxes to the government or in the form of services to the public. That would seem to me a very good reason for asking that the revision be postponed for one year. In talking to manufacturers—not only to a few, but to many—I found that all honest manufacturers objected most strenuously to section 88 and were very anxious that it should be changed. They should be given a hearing, surely; they are usually given a hearing by the government of Canada, I think, and I do not see why they should be discriminated against in this particular instance. On the other hand, from the banks' point of view, they claim that the Bank Act is perfect. Well, if it is, it will stand being looked at for another year—because perfection will bear scrutiny. Indeed, if the Bank Act is perfect, the bankers, their eminent counsel, the government and their friends in the opposition, would gain by allowing the public to have a good look at it, because it would strengthen their position; it would show that we who are attacking it are wrong, and you would then have the club over our head. So from your own point of view, since you people who know so much about it are sure it is perfect, it would be well for you to let us have a look at it; it would, according to your argument, simply strengthen your own position.

It seems to me an odd thing for a Liberal government that stands for a fuller life and larger freedom—or is it a larger life and fuller freedom—to insist on rushing the Bank Act through this year. I am going to give you a little warning. I am not anxious to save the government, and never have been, as my course in this House has proved. But I am going to tell you this: You may unite with the official opposition; you may work with what I am quite convinced is great pressure from behind, but if in opposition to the just demands of legitimate industry, not only farming but other basic industries, and not only basic industries, but the key industries that are usually called the secondary industries—if in opposition to these you insist on forcing it through, you are only bringing destruction on yourself. It is written, I believe, that "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad;" so it is your affair—and it will be your funeral, not ours. You see, the very fact that you people who stand for rushing it through are so anxious to do that makes the general public suspicious that there is some particular reason for the hurry.

Of course, bankers have ever been moral cowards; they have always been afraid. When two leading banks in England many years ago decided to give out bank books and allow people to issue cheques against their deposits, the other banks said it would be the ruination of the financial system, but as everybody knows the financial system is standing strong and steady yet. You remember what Professor Fisher of Yale University said—and we cannot discount all his statements—that bankers were natural standpatters; that they were afraid of change. Some of the people who know these bankers well ought to tell them to buck up and not be so utterly frightened; they would gain more by not being so fearful about these things. I was in the country for four days and I talked Bank Act everywhere I went. I asked everybody I talked to privately what they thought about it—business people, manufacturers, farmers, professional men—and I met none who said they thought the Bank Act should go through this year. They were of the opinion that it had been too long a session—whether a fruitful one, at least a wearisome one; that something had to be discarded unless we were to stay here a great length of time yet; that it was reasonable to leave the Bank Act over, particularly in view of the fact that the evidence had not been considered, that it was a rushed affair.

I said, too, when this matter came up in committee, and I would like to say it again: If the rush was so great, why did the government not start sooner? It is a wonder it was left until after Easter if the rush was so great. I was willing to have come here much earlier; I was willing to have sat in committee long before Easter, and I think a great many other members were too. This hurry, I say, does seem odd, and I know it seems odd to a great many others. A large number of the people think the banking system as at present constituted does not serve productive industry; that it much more generously serves speculation. If once that idea gets fastened in the public mind it will be a very disastrous thing for the banks and for the friends of the bankers. So, I say, why not be reasonable while you have yet the chance? At least if you are unreasonable, and if some years from now you wish you had not been, remember that I warned you.

Mr. IRVINE: I rise to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), and I hope that I shall be able to give at least one reason that will be considered to be such by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). Of course, the debate has advanced considerably since that hon. gentleman made the remark that no reason had been offered why the bank charters should be extended for one year only instead of ten. It is difficult for me to decide what would constitute a reason for the hon. member for Halifax, for we all reason somewhat differently. I am sorry, however, that while he did not consider as arguments what were put forward as such by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, he did not do them the courtesy of even considering their utterances as arguments at least from their own point of view and answering them accordingly. However, he chose to sweep them aside with a mystic wave of the hand and say, they are not arguments at all. That is the easiest way I know out of a difficulty on the floor of this House or anywhere else in debate, simply to say that what the opponent has said is not an argument and leave it at that.

Another thing that the hon. member for Halifax said was that he did not know how long it was going to take hon. members over on this side of the House to make up their minds. Were they going to take all day, a week, a month or a decade to make up their minds, was his query? Well, I cannot speak for the Progressives in that regard. I do not know how long they are going to take to make up their minds on this question, but I would say to the committee that it would be better for us to take ten years to make up our mind and make it up right than to pass an inadequate act that will last ten years, an act that has no mind in it at all. That would be a better proposition. I would suggest, however, that it did not take the hon. member for Halifax very long to make up his mind on this matter. He did it with great haste seemingly. In fact, I think he was always ready to pass the act even before we began to consider it, judging from his attitude in committee.

I was surprised, however, when the hon. member for Halifax confessed to knowing about the Merchants Bank collapse. It has been advanced by hon. members on this side of the House that an investigation should be held into the Merchants Bank failure. The reason they are asking for that is that one of the functions of the Bank Act, or at least of the act as it should have been revised, would be to prohibit any such recurrence as the collapse of the Merchants Bank, but we cannot make an act that will safeguard against a recurrence of the Merchants Bank incident unless we know why it was that the Merchants Bank failed. When we were in committee, Mr. Chairman, nobody knew why the Merchants Bank failed. The hon. member for Halifax did not know why the Merchants Bank failed. The Finance Minister declared that he did not know. Sir Edmund Walker declared that he did not know. Nobody knew in committee why the Merchants Bank failed, but now the hon. member for Halifax knows. In fact, he comes in with a huge blanket, a blanket that is broad enough and long enough to cover up every crime in history, and he places that right over the Merchants Bank condition and says that it was due to human frailty. He goes further than that. After he has told us why it failed, he proves to us that it did not fail at all. That is good reasoning. He says it only weakened a little in the joints, so to speak, and when it got wobbly it fell gently into the arms of a larger institution. Now it might be necessary for us to find out just how the arms of the other institution came to be there to receive the Merchants Bank when it got wobbly in the joints. That might be a good reason why the revision of the Bank Act should be postponed for another year. If the Merchants Bank did not fail, did not something worse happen to it than that, something far more dangerous to the people of Canada than even a bank failure?

Mr. JACOBS: Will the hon. gentleman permit me to tell him that the Merchants Bank did not fail?

Mr. IRVINE: I thank the hon. gentleman for restating what I had just stated, that the opinion of the hon. member for Halifax, which I think in this regard ought to be a good one, is that the Merchants Bank did not fail, it only weakened. I am saying that if it did not fail it constitutes a more dangerous situation for the people of Canada and for the industries of this country than if it did fail, because it suggests a condition which permits a fuller development of banking mergers in this country. The banking merger is growing apace. We are reduced now, I think, to seventeen banks—seventeen banks with one single voice. They meet together in association, they fix the rate of interest on deposits, they fix the rate of interest on loans—a huge co-operative monopoly. If, I repeat, the Merchants Bank did not fail, if it was swallowed by a larger institution of the same kind, that is a menace far more to be feared than the mere failure of the bank would have constituted.

Now, I cannot speak about the Merchants Bank failure because I do not know why it happened, or if it was not a failure, I do not know what it was. All that I know is this, that the Merchants Bank, which was one of the largest banking institutions in this country, suddenly stopped doing business as the Merchants Bank, and as a result of the stoppage some $5,500,000 of the shareholders' money was lost and the whole institution passed into the hands of the Bank of Montreal at a very, very low price indeed. It is true I believe that when the Bank of Montreal took over the Merchants Bank, the Merchants Bank had some one and a half million dollars still in reserve, and I also believe that it was considered to be in a solvent condition. If so, how did it come that the Bank of Montreal got such an excellent deal in taking it over? That is another thing that ought to be explained. Perhaps it would be wise to have an investigation into that alone. That is a matter of interest to the Canadian people; it is of interest to the shareholders of that bank; it is of interest to the shareholders of all banks because the same thing may be repeated in connection with another bank next year. That in itself in my opinion, Mr. Chairman, constitutes an argument why this act should not now be passed extending these charters for ten years. If it is not an argument I would like the hon. member for Halifax to tell me what is the weakness about it. What is the matter with the argument? I would like him to tell me and answer it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I have no hesitation in telling my hon. friend that it is no argument at all. Perhaps he might inform the House by telling us what relation there is between the failure of the Merchants Bank, or the losses it sustained which later induced it to sell out to another bank, and the present act which we are considering. Can my hon. friend inform the House of that?

Mr. IRVINE: I am glad, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member has pointed out to me that I have failed to make myself clear to him. I shall now take the opportunity of restating very briefly the relation between the present act and the failure or non-failure of the Merchants Bank.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member has been discussing the case of the Merchants Bank, he must confine himself to clause 5 of the bill.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman, I quite understand that. What I am discussing is the amendment to clause 5 and that amendment asks for the renewal of the bank charters for one year instead of renewing them for ten years, and I am trying to make an argument why the renewal should only be for one year instead of ten. At the same time I am answering a question bearing upon the particular point. I am going to advance the argument that the failure of the Merchants Bank has a direct connection with this bill and with this particular clause, and I shall do it in this way: As a result of the trial which took place over the Merchants Bank nobody was punished. I presume they were not punished because it was discovered that they had not violated any clause of the Bank Act. If what happened in the Merchants Bank case transpired without violating any clause of the Bank Act then it is clear that there was nothing in that act which prevented such an occurrence from taking place. My argument then is, that seeing we are now revising the Bank Act we should have a clause or clauses which would make it impossible for that kind of thing to take place and for people who commit such malpractice to stay out of gaol.

The next step in the argument is this: It is the duty of this parliament to amend the Bank Act in such a way as to make the Merchants Bank case impossible of recurrence. We cannot do that unless we know what happened in the Merchants Bank case. We cannot know what happened there unless we investigate it, and we cannot investigate it unless the bill be referred back to committee or unless we have an opportunity which an extension for another year would give us. If we pass this bill and let the matter go for ten years, and if in the meantime two or three other banks fail in a similar manner—in such an event what argument then will the hon. member for Halifax bring forward when we confront him with the opportunity which is afforded now of amending this in a way that would render it impossible for such a thing to occur without those affected being able at least to put their hands on the guilty parties? That is the argument which connects the Merchants Bank case directly with this bill and with the particular clause under discussion.

Now, as I was saying when the hon. member interrupted me, the Merchants Bank was seemingly in a solvent condition when it was taken over. One of two things seems to be certain so far as I have been able to gather from the evidence that was brought out during the trial, as well as from questions which were put in committee. Either there was very bad management which might have been safeguarded by legislation, and was not, which accounted for the position of the Merchants Bank, or else there was a frame-up for a merger from which frame-up the Bank of Montreal profited. Now, there are the only two possible solutions of the difficulty that I can conceive, and I do not think it is fair that the people of Canada should be left in doubt as to which of these two things was the correct reason. Again I say the only way to settle that is by an investigation, and the only way to get an investigation is to pass this amendment and to grant the charters for one year, then take the bill up again next year and revise it and pass it for ten years if desired. That is the argument. The cause is not known. We have, as I pointed out, two probable causes and I have given them to you. We have, in addition to the two probable causes with regard to the Merchants Bank case, one anticipation and one certainty. The anticipation is that under the present Bank Act some other bank might come into the same difficulty as we found in the case of the Merchants Bank. The certainty, the only certainty we have in regard to the whole affair is that the confidence of the people of Canada has been shaken in the banking system. It is all very well for the hon. member for Halifax to stand up and say, with a smile of complacency and virtue," We have the greatest banking system in the world," but when we have a banking system which allows such a thing as happened in the Merchants Bank case, we have an argument that is far more potent in the public mind that the mere statement of even such a gentleman as my hon. friend.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): May I ask my hon. friend not to state that I said it was the best banking system in the world because the hon. gentleman must know I did not say that.

Mr. IRVINE: If I misquoted the hon. gentleman I must apologize but I understood him to say that. If he did not say it was the best system in the world I would like him to tell me just how good it is.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would rather my hon. friend devote his time to showing why we should postpone this bill; he has not started on it yet.

Mr. IRVINE: As I pointed out at the outset, as to what constitutes an argument depends as much upon the mentality of those who listen as upon the mentality of the man who is making the argument. With that remark I shall leave my argument to the judgment of the House and to the judgment of those who may some time enter the sarcophagus in which we are now to bury this argument and look at what is said on this issue.

Mr. JACOBS: Before the hon. gentleman quits that part of his argument will he tell me whether he is prepared to state that if this delay is granted he will be able to frame an act which will prevent any bank getting into trouble in the future?

Mr. IRVINE: That question, Mr. Chairman is unworthy of the brilliance that I know the hon. member who asked the question possesses. I am not called upon to make any prophecy as to what might be the possible outcome of the investigation. True we might investigate and discover nothing but even if we did that it would be a certain amount of satisfaction. Then we might investigate and find out something wrong and not be able to rectify it, in which case our plight would amount to a defeat of the intelligence of this parliament. But to expect me to make now a definite promise that I will frame an act which will meet any difficulty we may encounter in the investigation requested is asking something that I think is altogether unreasonable.

Now, let me proceed with another argument and I do hope that the hon. member for Halifax will see there is reason in this. Just before doing so I want to go back for a minute to the statement which has been made, I think in the Banking and Commerce committee if it has not been made in Committee of the Whole, that the Bank Act as it is now is not a fixed thing, that it may be changed once a year if we so desire it. That is a very plausible argument and I want to deal

11 p.m. with it for a moment before I advance another reason why this bill should be postponed as we require. It seems to be democratic, it seems to be theoretically right, when we say that this act is not fixed at all, that it may be amended any day, that parliament is supreme in this matter. That sounds good but if we just puncture that bubble there is nothing left of it. Let us see how we would begin to puncture it. In the first place there is a moral obligation involved in this franchise, a moral obligation which I do not hesitate to say would be very speedily advanced on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite if we were to bring in next year a clause to amend some fundamental principle in the Bank Act. But leaving that aside, how is it going to be amended, who is going to do it? I do not see the government doing it; I have no vision of that at all. If there was going to be any amendment whatsoever in this Bank Act next year, or the year following, or any year within the decade we are allotting it, such amendment would have to be brought in by some private member. What opportunity has a private member to get a bill through this House? He has an excellent opportunity theoretically. Why, if I were over in the United States and boasting of the fine parliamentary system we have in this country I could say in my speech that I could pass any act. But as a private member in this House, I cannot even get one before the House. I brought in a private bill this year. the first one I think on the order paper. It is still there, and it will be there next year and I have no assurance that next year will be more favourable. Again let us not forget that there is always the opportunity of ruling it out of order because it involves a public expenditure. We cannot pass a private bill without printing it on paper, and if we print it on paper, that involves a public expenditure. If public expenditure is involved, then no private member can bring in a bill. Who is going to amend the Bank Act?

Mr. JACOBS: The Bank Act was amended three times between 1913 and this year.

Mr. IRVINE: If the Bank Act was amended three times, I would not be surprised if the amendments came as a suggestion from the bankers, were carried out by the government of the day and did not constitute a fundamental amendment. I think you will find Sir Edmund Walker congratulating himself and the Bankers' Association on the fact that any amendment that has ever been made to the Bank Act has been the direct suggestion of the Bankers' Association. That, to my mind, does not constitute an amendment of the character I am speaking in favour of now. I have no doubt amendments will be made, if they are in the interests of the bankers; but if they are in the interests of a new financial system, they will not be introduced, they will not be made.

Let me come to another reason, and, I think, even a more important reason why the charters should be granted for one year only than that of the investigation of the Merchants Bank case. I propose to show that, at this time the charters should not be extended for ten years by this parliament to the banks of Canada, because there must be.

I believe, a readjustment of the financial system to meet modern industrial conditions if a serious disaster is to be prevented in the near future. In support of that contention, let me say to the committee that at the present time our ideas, the ideas of the civilized world, are not moving as fast as events are moving. Events are moving much faster than we are thinking. If the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) will assure me that he is thinking in finance ten years ahead of the industrial situation, I would pass this bill with at least, a greater measure of confidence. But I doubt that very much; I doubt whether any of us are capable of thinking ten years ahead. In the face of the swiftness of the changing industrial panorama of the present time, we cannot think that far ahead. If we fix the Bank Act now, and five years from now changes come which might practically tie up the whole industrial system, what are you going to do? Would it not be better for us to consider this carefully as we go, to take into consideration as far as we possibly can all the factors before we fix an act for ten years? Will the present financial system last ten years? Will the government assure the committee that it will? If the government knows that the system is going to last ten years will they inform the House as to the ground for their faith; what are the reasons that this act must be passed this year? What are the reasons the government can give to assure us that the financial system will last for ten years more. It will take more than the Bank Act to stop the financial system from falling. The Bank Act is not an act which will support the financial system; it is an act which will support the bankers. It will hold up the bankers as long as the system stands, but it will not hold up the system. The system is greater than even the Bank Act and greater than even the government is. The life of the system depends, not upon the Bank Act, but upon economic conditions.

In support of my contention that in ten years some very serious problems will arise involving fundamental changes, I wish to say first that there are at least, two ominous signs that there will be great need of change before ten years are up. Let me refer in the first place in this connection to the great industrial paradox which ought to challenge the thought of all thinking people. The paradox is this: On the one hand we have a superabundance of raw material, of plant equipment and of labour, sufficient by all calculation to bring into being all the goods civilization requires for its necessities. On the other hand, we have communities in dire need of those very commodities we have the potentiality to produce. That is the industrial paradox, and the financial system, as I shall show, has a very close and direct connection with that industrial paradox. The situation is growing worse; it is growing serious, and before ten years go by a condition may develop which will compel, on the part of those in command of affairs, speedy action which may afterwards be regretted if it is not taken after serious and careful consideration. But there are other examples of this kind. Let me give the committee a sample. Nearly all the victorious countries in the last great war, for instance, claimed that Germany should be compelled to pay; but they discovered that the more Germany paid, the worse it was for the recipients. There is another paradox. There was a time when our financial system was at such a stage of development that it was possible for one nation to pay another without making the nation that received worse off than it was before. But the industrial situation has developed to such an extent that the more Germany pays Great Britain, for instance, the worse it becomes for Great Britain. That is a fact that we have to face. What does that mean? It means that the events in the industrial world have changed much faster than the financial ideas of financiers, changed so fast that the financier is defeated in his own purpose. That is an argument, I submit, in favour of our taking time and going slowly with the revision of the Bank Act, because in ten years more serious developments may have taken place, and the financial system may utterly collapse beneath the industrial demands.

The second sign of this decay is in what I am going to call the impotence of governments and of industrial masters to deal with the developing situation. If there were in the action of the present government any assurance that it was capable of handling a situation such as I have hinted might develop, if there were any assurances given that the actions of the government would be such as to guarantee the continuation of the industrial system producing goods for human needs, no matter what might take place, I would support this bill with much less reluctance. But let me summarize the advice of governments generally and the advice of leaders in the industrial world with respect to the problem which I have just suggested to the committee. First of all, I think nearly every government, certainly our present government in Canada, consoles itself with the idea that the present industrial situation is one that grew out of the war; that similar occurrences have followed war throughout history.

in short that depression is the inevitable result of war. It advises the people of this country to grin and bear it. Just keep on grinning and bearing it. It will come out all right in the end somehow; we do not know just how but it is coming. I submit it is going; it is not coming at all. That is merely a more or less blind consolation. I think nearly all governments have followed that example in taking consolation to themselves from the platitudes of the centuries past, but the platitudes of the centuries past have proved themselves entirely incapable of meeting immediate practical problems. Then the next consolation which we get from our government is that it is not so bad in this country as it is in other countries. That is the next step the present government takes, and that is what other governments say to the people who are troubled about having no work to do, or about their inability to meet the financial situation, or the tremendous percentages of bankruptcies that have occurred. They say, "We are told these things are not so bad here as they are in other countries". When you come to Great Britain they say the same thing. In the United States they say the same thing, and in Germany the same thing is repeated. I would like to know who is right in that case, but it is poor consolation and poor argument after all. It is like a man standing on the street watching a block of houses burning. His house is one of the block, and all the rest of the houses are blazing, but he turns to the man next to him and says, "Never mind, my house is not blazing nearly as badly as yours, and the situation is not so bad for me as it is for you". That would be poor consolation for a man, and so it is poor consolation for the people of this country, or the people of any other country to be told that the people of other countries are in just as bad a condition. Then the government take another step and they say "Produce more; the only solution for the present situation is more production, grow more wheat and more everything, and manufacture more, and that will help matters". But, unfortunately that advice was taken in this country after the war, and it resulted in adding to the large amount of unsaleable goods on hand, and when that great addition came in the increased production, the wheels of industry stopped and the unemployed masses walked the streets and threateningly challenged the whole basis of civilized order. The next advice which they had to give us is that we consume less.

The CHAIRMAN: The question under consideration by the committee is the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) that section 5 of bill 83 be amended by striking out the words "thirty three" in the fourth and eighteenth lines thereof, and substituting the words "twenty-four" therefor. I do not see the relevancy of the hon. gentleman's remarks.

[Mr. Irvine.]

Mr. IRVINE: I think I can show the relevancy, if the Chairman will bear with me for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN: Under the rules speeches in Committee of the Whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

Mr. IRVINE: I certainly do not want to appear as not speaking to the matter under discussion, but I feel certain in my own mind that I am in order, and if the Chairman will bear with me, I would like to show him the purpose for which I wish to use the argument. I am contending that the industrial condition that is developing before our very eyes is so serious that before another ten years it may threaten the civilized world, that it has a very close connection to finance, that if we pass a Bank Act determining the disposition of money and credit for ten years, the industrial crisis that is brewing may come upon us. I am advancing arguments to show further that the government so far is not aware of the situation and I am offering their own words and opinions as proof that they do not know, I contend that my argument bears directly upon the clause of the bill before the committee. But still, as I develop the point, Mr. Chairman, if you decide it otherwise, just tell me so, and I shall have to abide by your ruling. When the government in power tells the masses of the people that the only solution of the problem is to consume less, then they find that if less is consumed, more goods are left on hand which are unsaleable. Moreover, they find it is difficult to invite people who have not enough to consume now, to consume less. So they abandon that position. Then again they say, "We will fix the situation for the farmer in Canada, not by the Bank Act, but by giving him a foreign market." That is what other governments say. All governments try to console the people by saying that somewhere they are going to find a foreign market which will stimulate trade in the particular country concerned. This foreign market promise does not merely mean the exchange of goods for other goods, but it means that we shall ultimately build up a favourable balance of trade with other nations.

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to section 5 of rule 13, which says:

Speeches in committee of the whole must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

On that clause, I rule that the line of discussion pursued by the hon. member is not strictly relevant to the item under discussion.

Mr. GOOD: On the point of order, it seems to me that in considering the question of whether or not the charters of the banks should be granted for one year or ten years, practically unlimited latitude is necessarily involved. I would very respectfully submit that, in considering a matter of this sort, the widest possible light that can be thrown on any aspect of the financial situation is entirely relevant.

Mr. JACOBS: Would the hon. gentleman from Brant say whether the hon. member for Calgary East should be permitted to talk for one year or for ten years on this question?

Mr. IRVINE: If the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) wishes to limit the hon. member for Calgary East to any specific time, then I would ask him to introduce his closure, but until he does that the hon. member for Calgary East is going to take advantage of the privileges which are offered to hon. members of this House. I am prepared to abide by your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but, perhaps, if I sum up the point I have been leading up to even the Chairman will admit that it is entirely relevant. Here is the summing up. Under the present industrial situation there is not enough being consumed to keep the wheels of production going round. That has transpired, because there is not sufficient purchasing power to enable the people to get all they want to consume. There is not sufficient purchasing power, because we have had a Bank Act in force for ten years, which placed the matter of public credit in the hands of a few individuals. There is the point at issue, and if the Chairman had permitted me I should have marshalled the argument so as to make that connection; but since I am ruled out of order, I leave the conclusion to the committee, and will allow members to use their imagination in developing the argument for themselves. Then, before another ten years, the conflict between science and the money system on the industrial field may possibly have come to a head. Here is the argument. There is a conflict between science as applied to production and the financial system which should function as the distributing agent of what is produced to the consumer. If we pass an act now which fixes for ten years the financial system of Canada, or the handling of the financial system of Canada, and if during that ten years this conflict between science and the financial system should come to a head, then we are due for a collapse, and for that reason I urge that we pass this act for only one year, that we extend the charter for only one year, and that subsequently we prepare, in the light of the industrial conditions that are threatening civilization, a banking act with a view to meeting these conditions, adequately.

Apropos of that point, let me say that the conflict I have mentioned is simply that in the industrial world to-day we have two great factors which tend to displace human agency. The first is the invention of new machines, and we have the application of science in the harnessing of solar or atomic energy. These two factors, combined and applied to the producing system, take the place of human agency. Now, Mr. Chairman, before you rule me out of order, let me show the connection. When solar energy is applied to machinery, or when machines are improved, less human labour is required, and when less labour is required less money will be paid in wages. The money paid out in wages or dividends under the producing system is the extent of the purchasing power of a nation, and the more machinery is applied to the producing system the more human labour is displaced, the less wages will be paid, and therefore the less money will be in circulation. The less purchasing power the nation has in proportion to what is produced, the greater will be unemployment, the more acute will be the industrial problem. For this reason we would not be wise to pass a Bank Act to remain in force for ten years in the face of these developing conditions, so fraught with serious consequences for all the peoples of the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. IRVINE: I have no doubt that hon. members opposite are very anxious to carry this measure, but I am not in such a hurry. I am quite prepared to consider the bill before we carry it. Simply because hon. members opposite do not need to give the subject consideration is not an argument for this side of the House failing to see their duty to consider the bill very carefully.

I have one more point to make, Mr. Chairman. It has been referred to already. The evidence taken before the committee on Banking and Commerce in relation to the bill under discussion has not been considered by that committee. I presumed that that evidence was taken with a view to amending the Bank Act, but I discover now that it was taken merely as a gesture, seemingly to appease the public. But let me assure the public that whether the evidence was of value or not has had no effect whatsoever upon the revision of the Bank Act, indeed, it has not been considered at all in that connection. Now, from that point of view I cannot see why the proceedings should be called a revision of the Bank Act, there has been no revision. The act might just as well have been read over casually and passed. If the evidence taken is to give value for the money expended in taking it, it must at least be considered. If it is going to be considered, it ought to be considered before the act is revised for another ten years. So without belabouring that point overmuch, Mr. Chairman, I urge that as an argument why this act should not be now passed for another ten years.

For the benefit again of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), let me point out to him the three reasons which I have attempted to bring forward why the charters should be granted for one year only. In the first place, I have shown that until the facts are known we cannot amend this act to intelligently meet the weaknesses which must have been inherent in it when the Merchants Bank could be wrecked without anyone being found responsible. We must know what was the cause of that failure; the only way to know is to investigate the circumstances, and the only way to investigate the circumstances is to put this revision off until next year. My second point is that industrial conditions, not only in Canada but universally, are developing with such rapidity that old financial ideas are absolutely incapable of handling the situation, that if we fix our banking system now for another ten years in the face of the speedy change that is taking place before our eyes, we are inviting financial and industrial catastrophe. We ought at least to be in a position to keep an open mind on the question as the changes take place, and be prepared to meet them. In the third place, the Bank Act has not been in any way affected by the weight of evidence which was presented to the committee, that if there was any reason for collecting the evidence concurrently with the revision of the act that reason was presumably that it might in some way affect the wording or change the act. But it could not possibly affect the act in any way if not considered. Therefore I urge that it should be considered before this act is disposed of for ten years.

These are the three reasons I have presented, Mr. Chairman. I could give three more—and I probably will after I have had a rest—but I submit now that these three reasons have to be answered by the hon. member for Halifax or some other worthy representative from the other side before it is necessary for me to advance any further argument. In my estimation what I have urged is sufficient for the carrying of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman).

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Chairman, in the course of the remarks made by the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) I had occasion to interrupt and draw his attention to the fact that the Bank Act has been amended on several occasions and in very important particulars between the revision in 1913 and the present day. The hon. gentleman, with that manner which is characteristic of him, brushed my interruption aside with a so-called or alleged joke. He stated that if the act was amended as I claimed it had been, it must have been done at the behest of the Bankers' Association and by the government, which I gathered from his remarks was considered merely a weak instrument in the hands of the Bankers' Association. Now, I should have thought that after fifty sessions, during which this Banking committee functioned—fifty sessions, at most of which the hon. gentleman was heard with great effect—he might have learned something about the Bank Act. But I find that he has not even read the act. In that respect he reminds me of the story of a famous reviewer of books, who said he never read a book before he reviewed it, because if he did it would prejudice him. Now, I would ask the hon. gentleman what he thinks of these amendments which were passed after 1913, the date of the last revision.

Mr. IRVINE: Do you ask a question now?

Mr. JACOBS: No, I am making a statement.

Mr. IRVINE: Because I might answer it.

Mr. JACOBS: Take the amendment passed in 1915, two years after the revision:

> The bank may lend money to the owner, tenant, or occupier of land for the purchase of seed grain upon the security of any crop to be grown from such seed grain.

I should like to know in what respect the Bankers' Association only were benefited by that amendment. Again I would refer him to the amending act of 1916, in which it is stated:

The bank may lend money to a farmer or to any person engaged in stock raising upon the security of his live stock.

I would imagine that these amendments were for the benefit of the party of which he is presumed to be the leader, or one of the leaders. The hon. gentleman, in his very voluble remarks to-night, as on all occasions, reminds me of a cuttlefish. The cuttlefish is a kind of fish which when closely pursued emits a murky fluid from its body, and when the water is thoroughly darkened it escapes. That is the position in which my hon. friend finds himself to-night. Now, I suggest that when he presumes to talk upon the Bank Act—

Mr. IRVINE: What is the connection between my hon. friend's remarks and the point under discussion?

Mr. JACOBS: The hon. gentleman talks upon the subject of the Bank Act with the same facility with which he talks on every other question which comes before this House —volubly and at great length. But, as he himself put it somewhat pointedly, when you puncture the bubble, you find there is not very much in it.

Now, the hon. gentleman gives three alleged reasons why this Bank Act should not be proceeded with this year. He spoke about the Merchants Bank and the trouble into which that institution got some time ago— he spoke about it as a failure. Well, I am not going to bandy words with him, but I would like to know what the Merchants Bank, or the failure, if he likes to call it that, has to do with the revision of the Bank Act. After all, the Merchants Bank trouble arose through what was claimed by the department to be failure on the part of the manager to make proper returns as provided in the act. That is all found within one clause of the Bank Act; why hold up the entire Bank Act in order to deal with that particular clause? If it is found later after investigation that there is something in the Bank Act that should not be there or which brought about this trouble in connection with the Merchants Bank, we can easily amend the clause in the act. But to hold up the charters of the seventeen banks of Canada, to interfere with the stability of our financial institutions because of some alleged trouble which arose in connection with the Merchants Bank, is what I would call, if I were not in this House, silly.

Then, the hon. gentleman speaks about the "speedy changes" which are taking place. He says we cannot keep up with the industrial and economic changes which are going on; therefore we should put over the consideration of the Bank Act until next year. Well, will the changes then be any slower? Shall we slow up next year? I do not think we will; but so far as I can see, the speedy changes which are taking place now have no relation at all to the revision of the Bank Act. The Bank Act is the creature of the parliament of Canada, and we can change it whenever we like. We can come here next year, and, by the introduction of a proper measure, completely change the Bank Act, if we find it is not right. But why should we be tied down to passing the law, say next year, which is going to do for the next ten years? The hon. gentleman does not seem to understand; he does not seem to realize that this Bank Act can be changed whenever we wish to change it, and to my mind it is nonsensical for him to talk about its being rigid for the next ten years. This kind of talk may have some effect in the back concessions when my hon. friend appeals to the electors at the proper time, but he cannot make it go down with the hon. members of this House.

Then the hon. gentleman gives a third reason, something which my poor mind refuses to receive. Perhaps it is because it is late in the evening; at any rate, I fail to understand what he means. He says the Bank Act as it exists now is not affected by the weight of evidence which was adduced before the committee. I do not understand that. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would enlighten us before the House adjourns, because I should like to have it go forth that all arguments which the hon. gentleman adduced this evening amounted to nothing. I have already referred to two of them, these, I hope, have been successfully answered; as to the third, I wait for further information from the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this all-important subject I wish to say that I intend to support the amendment placed before this committee by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman). To begin with, I would like to take the committee back to what occurred during the last three months in the Banking and Commerce committee. We held very regular sessions, and it occurred to me that any stranger going to that committee might wonder who were the members of parliament and who were the visitors, because it was usually the case that for some time after the hour was called we had as many visitors as we had members. I say one might wonder who comprised this visiting class. But as we sat in that committee week in and week out we gradually got to know the faces; we realized that they represented people interested in finance. They were representatives of interested banks; they were legal advisers of the bankers—and those legal advisers were not there, I might say, for the benefit of their health. It looked strange to me that when the banking institutions of this country were on their trial, as it were, they should have so much legal support working steadily in the committee.

Mr. JACOBS: I suggest to the hon. gentleman that perhaps they were there to explain to some members of the committee, including the hon. gentleman himself, something about the Bank Act.

Mr. IRVINE: It is a pity the hon. member himself was not there.

Mr. SPENCER: Unfortunately we did not hear very much from the gentlemen I speak of. They reminded me very much of picture shows; you see the movements of the actors, but you do not hear their voices. They passed from member to member; those who were supporting them gave their vote, conscientiously, perhaps, but always on the one side; and that I think, was the reason why those gentlemen who, as I say, were not there for the good of their health, were in their places in the committee day in and day out. I had heard something about an hon. member of this House being called the gramaphone of Mackenzie and Mann, but I never realized the real meaning of that term until I went into the Banking and Commerce committee. Then I realized it in all seriousness, for if there ever was a gramaphone or a continuous hum of gramaphones it was those that played for the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think the hon. member should be allowed to make a remark of that kind with impunity; I think he owes it to the committee to withdraw it. It might very well be retorted of my hon. friend that he is the gramaphone of the United Farmers of Alberta, who directly say to their federal representatives that they must obey the directions of that organization and that they have no right to voice their own opinions in parliament. I might make that statement with truth concerning every hon. gentleman from that province, and they would not be in a position to deny it. I say, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend has no right to make the insinuation which he does against members of parliament.

Mr. SPENCER: I submit that I am on perfectly safe ground. I do not mind the hon. senior member for Halifax calling me the gramaphone of certain interests that I was trying to defend in the Banking committee. I think it is a perfectly proper appellation to give anyone who is supporting a particular cause.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I said the hon. member had no right to take one side or the other; he has to do just what he is told, or be recalled.

Mr. SPENCER: The hon. member for Halifax will appreciate the fact that more independent spirit was shown by those members who come from that part of Canada from which I have the honour to come, than by those who come from any other section.

Mr. JACOBS: You admit it.

Mr. SPENCER: There were many tunes, but one song seemed to be continuously played, and that song was: "Why, the system is perfect, so leave it alone." That was the song always sung to us when we tried to make amendments.

The CHAIRMAN: I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that what took place in the committee and the inability of some members to make amendments is not relevant to the particular amendment before the committee.

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to bow to your decision. Perhaps I shall be in order if I refer for a moment to the case of the Merchants Bank, and present that as a reason why we should not now give the banks a charter for ten years. Here is one of the largest banks in Canada which, with very short notice indeed and under very suspicious circumstances, goes to the wall. Some of the largest papers, some of the best known dailies of Canada, demand a full investigation, but no investigation is allowed. We have Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor as a witness before the Banking and Commerce committee, but he is particularly silent in regard to that collapse.

Mr. JACOBS: Was he asked any question about it?

Mr. SPENCER: I will refer the hon .gentleman to the minutes of the Banking and Commerce committee.

Mr. JACOBS: I was present. Let my hon. friend say what questions he was asked in that respect and what his replies were.

Mr. SPENCER: Another gentleman who came before that committee, Sir John Aird, denied the necessity of the Merchants Bank ever losing its identity. Sir Edmund Walker, another gentlemen who came there as a witness, claimed that somebody should have been punished. But later when the question was brought up of giving the committee an opportunity to investigate the matter further, the committee saw fit to refuse to permit that investigation. That is another reason why I am in favour of this amendment, and why I believe we should not grant the charters now for ten years, but rather for one year for the time being.

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend propose to ask that a new clause be inserted in the Bank Act providing for an investigation into the affairs of the Merchants Bank?

Mr. SPENCER: No. I did not make that statement. I am going to lay something before the House which I hope will prove that the banking system as it now exists is not giving the required support or filling the needs of the greatest industry in this country. We all know of the vast amount of advertising this country has done in the past to try and get settlers, and settlers of a particular kind, to come to this country. When they come here one of the institutions that they have to deal with, either directly or indirectly, and they can deal with no other if they deal in money at all, is the banking institutions. I am going to bring to the notice of this House a particular case of some people who were brought to this country some thirteen years ago, and who although starting then with the very best of chances have to-day through the actions of our present banking institutions not only gone to the wall, but are willing to get out as soon as they can. I am sure the committee will be interested in hearing read a letter of introduction that I have in my hand from Lord Strathcona. It is written to Mr. J. W. Dafoe, Manitoba Free Press, Winnipeg, Canada. It is sent from 17 Victoria Street, London S. W.

Mr. CANNON: What is the date of the letter?

Mr. SPENCER: The 7th of November, 1910.

Mr. MERCIER: Is that the original?

Mr. JACOBS: Did you find it in the Archives?

Mr. SPENCER: Hon. gentlemen will probably be sorry I did find it by the time I get through. This letter was sent to Mr. Dafoe recommending Mr. T. Hicks who was coming to this country, and this is what Lord Strathcona said:

> This letter will be presented to you by Mr. T. Hicks who sails by the S.S. "Montcalm" on the 9th instant to join two of his sons who are already settled at Sedgwick, Alberta.
> Sir Walter Gilbey, Bart., at whose request I furnish this introduction, informs me that Mr. Hicks will prove an acquisition; that he is not only a practical farmer, but an exceptional judge of all stock, and very many thousands of all kinds of stock have been bred and sold by him.
> I commend Mr. Hicks to your consideration, and am sure he will much appreciate any advice and assistance you can kindly accord him.
> Believe me,
> Your very truly,
> Strathcona.

Mr. Hicks came over to this country with his wife, one daughter and seven sons.

Mr. MERCIER: Have you found anything strange about that letter?

Mr. SPENCER: I will show you the results of it. Mr. Hicks, as you will recognize from this letter of Lord Strathcona, was one of the very best type of settlers that we could possibly get into this country. He came here with his seven sons and started up. He was doing very well, but now I want to read a letter from the reeve of a municipality in the vicinity of Mr. Hicks' place showing what his condition is to-day. He says:

> Please find enclosed letter from Mr. Hicks who is residing close to Provost—

The CHAIRMAN: I must ask the hon. member to come within the rule of relevancy. If he wishes to read the letter of some eminent banker and apply it in his argument on this section that will be in order, but certainly not a letter of introduction.

Mr. SPENCER: This is not a letter of introduction, but a letter from the reeve of a municipality which shows what is happening to the people of this country through the action of the banks, and this man believes that the charters should not be extended for more than one year. He says:

> This is one of the worst cases I have come across, although these last few days I have found several similar but on a smaller scale.
> This man Hicks came in with money and established himself on land suitable only for raising stock. By the enclosed letter you will see what the banks have done to him. He happened to be one of the few who had property that the creditors could sacrifice. The debate on the immigration policy showed the government the state that this country is in. I do not need to dwell on that except to say that the people are leaving this district in hundreds, and the chief thing that is driving them out is the debt and the banks holding a chattel mortgage on everything they possess.

If your committee do not persuade the government to take control of credit out of the hands of private individuals who are using it for their own profit instead of for the good of the country, I tremble for the future of this country. People are freely talking of resistance to these inhuman methods of collecting debt.

I would earnestly suggest that your committee make an investigation into this particular case in the interests of this ruined man and also the balance of the farmers who will be in the same position when there is enough value in the amount of stock they have to make them worth selling.

Yours truly,
Thos. Patridge,
Reeve M. D. of Stewart.

An hon. MEMBER: Is he a banker?

Mr. SPENCER: He would make a very good banker. This is the letter he refers to. This is from Hicks. He says:

In August 1921,—

Mr. CANNON: I rise to a point of order. I call your attention, Mr. Chairman, to rule 16 and the decision given under number 202 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the House and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

If we are going to hear letters written fifteen years ago by people in England commenting on the Bank Act I do not know where this debate will end.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not understand the letter is reflecting on the proceedings in this House or denying anything said by an hon. member. I would say that the hon. member has not proceeded sufficiently far for me to give a ruling on his intention.

Mr. SPENCER: I will read this letter. It is from Mr. Hicks, the man referred to. This letter, I may say, is dated April 23rd.

Mr. JACOBS: Not April 1st.

Mr. SPENCER: Is that my hon. friend's birthday? The letter is to the following effect:

In August, 1921, I owed the Merchants Bank at Provost $3,900. They made me give a chattel mortgage on 100 horses, 100 cattle, 250 sheep; amongst the horses were 2 valuable percheron studs worth $3,000. I bought them as colts for $1,800. I paid $900, and I owed $900. I said I had better not include them as I must sell one to pay the $900, but the manager promised if I included them they would pay the note when asked. I thought this fair so they were included. In the fall of 1921 I sold my beef cattle for about $540. This I paid in. Early in 1922 the bank asked for another $1,000. I had nothing saleable, but at last they made me sell my ewes. They explained not many farmers kept ewes and they were not necessary; anyone could farm without them. Well they worried them out of me.

[Mr. Spencer.]

I would like to point out to the committee that this man was worth $28,000 in total assets; his liabilities amounted to about $4,000. That is the reason I am bringing the case to the attention of the committee: The bankers are not giving even to substantial people a fair show under present conditions. That is the reason why I am asking the bank charters be only granted for one year. Now referring to sheep he said:

I made $6.75 each. A total of $1,284; 164 were ewes in lamb, remainder wethers. The ewes were just lambing. They were all shipped to Vancouver and slaughtered. I started with 10 ewes in 1911. I used a pedigree ram every year, so they had 10 crosses of pure blood in them, and they were in lamb by 2 rams; cost me $112. The drover who took them through and had them killed said there were 207 large lambs in them, lambs made $7 each here last fall.

I may say that the total for the lambs would have been $1,449 or more than the sheep yielded.

Just after I sold the ewes the man asked for the note for the studs. I went to the bank for the money, but the manager said they did not want to let out any new money, but as I had lots of horses if I had a sale he would settle the note. I had a sale Ap. 1, 1922, I was very ill at the time, my son managed the sale. It was at Provost. When he returned he said the manager sent word "as you are ill you are not to worry at all about the stud note, he will fix it all up for you." A month after the man wrote to say he had not received any money. I sent his letter to the bank and the manager wrote saying they could not pay all the note but he would send $500. Another month went, the man wrote the bank about it as he had had not received any money. The manager actually replied saying I had drawn the money and spent it, but I never had a dollar. The man then went to the Chief Office, Calgary. They admitted that the manager had done wrong, but yet they would not think about paying his stud note, but they agreed to liberate the studs off their mortgage and advised the man to claim them. I had no choice, no voice in the matter. The man came after the studs 3 weeks ago. He gave me the note and a poor specimen of a 2-year old stud with a large hock and bad front joint which he hits every time he walks. I had to pay $30 freight on him and that is about his value. The man took my studs right to Calgary Fair and took first prize in all age class, beating George Lane. . . . he was also reserve champion both places. His name is (Milton of Acme) Some people, good judges too, value him at $3,000. It has to be a good horse to take 1st at Calgary. I showed him at the Provost Fair in 1921 and 1922 and took 1st both years and champion horse at the show.

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that it is doubtful whether a long recital of some difficulties a farmer had with an individual bank manager has any relevancy to the general principle of whether the bank charters should be extended for one year or ten years.

Mr. SPENCER: To meet your wishes I will—

The CHAIRMAN: I am not giving a ruling at present. I am just suggesting to the hon. member that there is doubt in my mind as to whether the matter he is reading is relevant to the question.

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to read the following letter—

Mr. JACOBS: The letter does not appear to be accompanied by an affidavit.

Mr. SPENCER: I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the letter is signed and furthermore to satisfy hon. members opposite I may say here is another letter from the same man received a few days ago. He says:

I would like the case made public. Don't put initials down or say a man in the West, but tell exact my name and address, besides the bank causing me to lose $3,000 in actual cash.

I hope that will satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. JACOBS: Is it the Merchants Bank he had dealings with?

Mr. PUTNAM: Is the hon. member always so easily satisfied with the insolvent's own account of how he came to go to the wall?

Mr. SPENCER: I did not quite catch my hon. friend's question. This man was pressed absolutely unnecessarily by the bank. He had several times the amount of assets that he had liabilities with the bank, and several times they broke their promise to him. The bank saw fit to remove their manager and they have not thought fit to make good to Hicks up to the present time.

Mr. PUTNAM: I suppose the hon. gentleman knows, as a matter of general practice that an insolvent generally gives a one-sided account of how he came to go to the wall; he generally puts the blame upon the other fellow.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to say that I have had this case corroborated from five different sources and my informants are all very reliable men.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the hon. gentleman not think that inasmuch as it was the Merchants Bank that was concerned, the rule "Speak nothing but good of the dead" ought to apply?

Mr. SPENCER: With the Merchants Bank this man had very reasonable treatment. But the Montreal Bank treated him as I have stated.

I should like to read a very short account from a local paper as follows:

District court sitting held May 17th.

This is in regard to the same bank.

A very interesting case was decided at the sitting of the district court which was held in Provost last Thursday before His Honor Judge Lees. The case was at the suit of Lambert Haan against the Bank of Montreal.

Haan alleged that the Provost manager of the defendant bank had agreed to pay his thresh bill on some 1,400 bushels of wheat which the bank had received. The bank denied making the agreement and claimed that for various reasons Haan's threshing lien was invalid. The court, however; held both that the agreement had been made and that Haan's threshing lien was in order and gave Haan judgment against the bank for the amount of his claim and costs.

Mr. PUTNAM: Was there any appeal?

Mr. SPENCER: No appeal that I know of. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to another case to show what satisfaction, what service, the people of that particular province are getting from the banks at the present time. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated this evening that the farmers of western Canada had borrowed too liberally. Would it not be just as fair to say that the banks in western Canada had lent too liberally, and that the fault on the part of the farmers is only equal to the fault on the part of the banks?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Will my hon. friend allow me to suggest that he cannot prove or disprove everything by citing individual instances of what, perhaps, are real hardships suffered by a borrower on the part of a bank. We might admit that the case to which my hon. friend referred just a moment ago was one in which the borrower, perhaps, did not receive fair treatment.

Mr. STEVENS: That was admitted.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes, and the bank manager was suspended. Might the same thing not happen in any country in the world and under any banking system? Does my hon. friend think he is contributing anything to the debate by referring to instances of this kind?

Mr. SPENCER: I am very glad the hon. member for Halifax has brought this point to my notice, because in a very few minutes I am going to bring confirmation from many other sources along the same lines.

The CHAIRMAN: I am going to tell the hon. member that it is not relevant to the particular subject matter under discussion for him to do that. There is a definite resolution before the committee, and the debate has gone rather beyond that this evening. The question is whether the bank charters shall be renewed for ten years or for one year. Reasons may be given why they should not be, but individual instances of failures, of loans, of insolvencies, cannot possibly be a reason why there should not be a renewal of the charters for either ten years or one year.

Mr. SPENCER: I will try to keep within your ruling. I am in favour of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) because of the notice I have in my hand, which, in my opinion, proves that there is something radically wrong with our financial system in that it has allowed the country to get into the state in which it is at present. I am reading now a few lines from the Alberta Gazette, part 2, dated Edmonton, Tuesday, May 25, 1923. It is headed:

Notice under the Tax Recovery Act, Department of Municipal Affairs, Province of Alberta.

Notice is hereby given that proceedings have been begun under the Tax Recovery Act, 1922, against the following lands in the improvement districts in the South Alberta land registration district, and unless the lands named herein are redeemed before the 14th day—

The CHAIRMAN: How can the hon. member contend that this tax notice is relevant to the particular amendment that has been moved?

Mr. SPENCER: If you will allow me half a minute—

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to have a reason because, in my opinion, it is clearly irrelevant.

Mr. SPENCER: The very fact that there are advertised in this Gazette no less than 2,207,360 acres of land for sale, is proof that something is wrong, and I contend that our financial system is wrong. If our financial system is wrong, I do not see why we should give the banks a charter for ten years.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the hon. member is in order in reading a tax notice.

Mr. SPENCER: I will come to the last matter that I will bring to the notice of the committee. We on this side of the House have made certain statements during this session in the Chamber and in the various committees, and these statements have been, at least, very much doubted, if not denied. To be sure that the statements we were making were correct, I sent out a questionnaire in regard to banking in order to find out the relationship between the banks and the people throughout a very large constituency. I have a synopsis of this, and I am going to read it—it is short—because it is a reason why we should extend these charges for only one year at the present time. The heading of the questionnaire I sent out reads:

I will be very much obliged to you if you will at your earliest convenience fill in the answers below in as accurate a manner as possible. I would ask you to make your estimates, when in doubt rather conservative than otherwise, so that I may be sure of being within the truth in any use that I may make of the information.

[The Chairman.]

The first question reads:

What bank or banks are in your vicinity?

The banks included in the answers were the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank, the Union Bank, the Bank of Toronto, and the Hochelaga Bank. The second question reads:

What is the average term of farmers' notes in months?

The answer was: Three and a half months. Imagine an industry that has a turnover usually only once in twelve months, having to renew its obligations every three and a half months! The third question reads:

Do you consider this a long enough term?

One hundred per cent said. No, decidedly not. The fourth question reads:

What is the average interest charged?

Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, chairman of the Bankers' Association, when giving evidence before the Banking and Commerce committee, stated at first that he thought the average throughout western Canada was 7 per cent, and later he raised that to 7 or 8. In this instance, if we strike an average, the rate comes between 8 and 9 per cent. I want to give the committee just the facts. The fifth question reads:

Does the bank charge what is usually known as bankers' discount, that is, deduct interest from a note prior to money being given to borrower?

Eighty-eight per cent of the answers were: Yes; twelve per cent were: No. The sixth question reads:

About what month are notes dated to become due?

The answers were that notes are renewed every few months, but they are forced to meet their notes in the fall, very often at the expense of having to sell their products on a falling market. The seventh question reads:

Is this beneficial to agriculture?

As the committee will understand, the answer was one hundred per cent: No. The eighth question reads:

Have many caveats been issued against grain which prevented the farmer from getting his money at the elevator?

Twenty per cent of them say: Yes; eighty per cent say: No. I might say that in one of the answers that was "yes," they said "Yes, over one hundred caveats were issued at the local elevator." The ninth question reads:

Did the farmers borrow heavily to buy feed for the cattle during the winter of 1919-20?

Or otherwise the hard winter. Ninety-two per cent said that they did, and only eight per cent said that they did not. The tenth question reads:

Did the banks in the spring of 1920 encourage farmers to buy stock, because in their opinion they would rise in value?

Eighty-four per cent answered yes, and sixteen per cent answered no. The eleventh question reads:

Did your bank try to force farmers at a later date to sell cattle bought on their advice, even if said stock had to be sold at a loss?

Seventy-six per cent answered yes, eight per cent answered no, and sixteen per cent did not send a return. The twelfth question is:

Was this a general practice?

Fifty-six per cent answered yes, sixteen per cent answered no, twelve per cent answered some, and sixteen did not answer. The thirteenth question reads:

What percentage of satisfaction is the bank giving to your district?

This is rather interesting to the committee. Fifty-two per cent answered "Not very good." Thirty-two per cent say "None at all." Twelve per cent say they are getting some service, and four per cent send no reply.

Mr. DUFF: What class of people gave those answers?

Mr. SPENCER: The class of people such as Lord Strathcona—

Mr. DUFF: He is dead now. What class of people made those answers? Lord Strathcona is in heaven.

Mr. SPENCER: Men qualified to run a business.

Mr. DUFF: What class of people made those answers?

Mr. SPENCER: The clients of the bank.

Mr. DUFF: Were they business men or professional men?

Mr. SPENCER: Business farmers.

The CHAIRMAN: I would like to know how the hon. member can make all these questions relevant to the particular matter before the committee. I cannot see the relevancy. I do not like to rule the hon. member out of order.

Mr. SPENCER: I do not wish to go against the ruling of the Chair, but I think this is very valuable information.

The CHAIRMAN: That is no reason why it should be introduced in this discussion. It must be relevant.

Mr. SPENCER: This questionnaire was sent to find out the feeling between the people and the bank, and whether they were willing that the charter should be granted for ten years.

The CHAIRMAN: That is not relevant to this particular amendment.

Mr. SPENCER: The answers I am giving are the reasons why I am voting that the charter be extended for one year only at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN: These questions and answers are altogether irrelevant, with one exception perhaps.

Mr. SPENCER: I have a few more questions. The fourteenth question reads:

Has your bank requested payment of their clients' liabilities in full, with the promise of extension of credit?

Eighty-four per cent answered yes, and sixteen do not reply at all.

The CHAIRMAN: I am going to rule that question out of order.

Mr. SPENCER: I am very sorry that that is the Chairman's ruling, but I will just give the House the last one.

Mr. GOOD: May I speak—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. GOOD: May I speak to the point of order. I would like to submit that if the hon. member for Battle River shows, as he is attempting to show, I think, that the banks in western Canada are not giving satisfaction, that is relevant to the question of whether or not the charters should be extended one year or ten years. It seems to be absolutely relevant.

The CHAIRMAN: I refer to Denison's Decisions, where I find the following:

A general argument on a bill cannot be allowed on a particular clause.

Mr. Speaker rules that the question at present being whether this particular clause should pass a general argument can hardly be allowed upon the question.

I am reading from Denison, page 56. There is no question as to the rules. In committee the discussion must be relevant to the particular question or clause or amendment under discussion, and a statement as to conditions industrially or otherwise in different parts of the country have only a remote bearing on it, and not a direct bearing which would be necessary to bring it within the rules.

Mr. GOOD: I submit there has been no opportunity given for debating this bill in the House. It received the second reading formally. It was referred to the committee. There was plenty of opportunity for discsussion in committee, but there has been no opportunity in the House. Our move this afternoon was ruled out of order. We are reduced to this position: Are we going to be ruled out of order—

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Will the hon. gentleman tell the committee why, if he had any fundamental objection to the measure, it was not brought forward on the second reading when the whole question could be discussed?

Mr. GOOD: I think I can answer the question frankly. The Minister of Finance stated on that occasion, if my recollection is correct, that he desired the fullest possible discussion in the committee and he hoped the second reading would go through without discussion, and it went through.

Mr. FIELDING: The motion was that it be referred to the committee on Banking and Commerce, and I suggested that there should be the fullest discussion there, and we had the fullest discussion in that committee.

Mr. SPENCER: I will not go against the ruling. I will not give the House what I consider is a lot of valuable information. I assure this House and the committee, that if they are going to shut their eyes to the conditions that exist, they will wake some day to a scene that they will be very sorry to see.

Mr. FIELDING: Do not threaten us.

Mr. BIRD: I would like to raise a point of order. I refer to page 68 of Beauchesne's Rules, section 248, which reads:

> Whilst a member is addressing the House no one has a right to interrupt him by putting a question to him or by making or demanding an explanation. A member will at times allow such interruptions through a sense of courtesy to another, but it is entirely at the option of the member in possession of the floor to give way or not to an immediate explanation.

Then again at page 75—

> A member must not interrupt any member who is speaking by disorderly noises or in any other manner.

The CHAIRMAN: There is no question about the rule being a correct one.

[The Chairman.[

Mr. BIRD: I think the rule I have read has the specific application at the present moment.

Mr. SPENCER: If I had not been interrupted I would have been through about ten minutes ago. Does the Chairman rule me out of order?

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member can answer questions put to him if he wishes, but if he does not desire to answer questions he need not do so.

Mr. BIRD: If I may be allowed to pursue that, there has been a continual fire of questions—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BIRD: I draw the Chairman's attention to the fact that throughout the speech of the hon. gentleman there has been an uninterrupted fire of questions and inarticulate comments, which I think altogether unjustified, in view of the rules I have read to the House just now.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask hon. members to permit the hon. gentleman who is speaking to continue without interruption.

Mr. SPENCER: You do not rule me out of order in regard to this information I am trying to give?

The CHAIRMAN: On the questions and answers, yes.

Mr. SPENCER: All right, I will abide by your ruling. I just want to say that these questionnaires and answers disclose conditions in the country from which we come that no member of the House can afford to ignore. I wish to tell the House—and this is relevant to the point at issue—that with the enormous sums of money that this country is spending year in and year out in trying to bring people to this country, that questionnaires prove that we are losing people in vast numbers, and that the few that are returning are simply renting. I would remind hon. members that these replies show a mortgage indebtedness in the county that most of them would refuse to credit. It is because the people there have not got the sympathetic ear of the financial institutions which enjoy a monopoly, that they are crying out for relief. And when we, their representatives, put the case fairly and squarely before this House what reception do we get? We simply get ruled out of order, ridiculed, laughed at—anything but sympathy. But we are not looking for sympathy, we are looking for justice. One of the things that we are asking in justice to our people is that these bank charters should be renewed for one year only, to give us an opportunity of reviewing the vast amount of evidence that has been placed before the committee.

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has stated that hon. gentlemen who were putting forward amendments before the Banking and Commerce committee, were advancing something that was not of very great value. He may not have thought our suggestions were of very great value, but the hon. members who sponsored them thought they were, and put a great deal of time on their preparation. I would point out that one of the reasons why we should have these charters extended for one year only for the time being, is because of the fact that the greater percentage of the arguments we put forward in favour of our amendments were ignored, and the amendments were turned down by a silent vote. As an instance, take section 91 in regard to interest. Masses of evidence were adduced why, if we are to have a clause regulating the rate of interest, there should be a penalty for any attempt to exact anything in excess of the stipulated rate. Very few spoke against the proposal, I think only two members, yet when it came to a vote, however convincing the arguments put forward might have been, they failed to influence the committee, and the amendment was defeated by the silent vote which never failed to function on such occasions.

Mr. DUFF: It showed their good sense.

Mr. SPENCER: It may have, but it showed that they had not the good sense to speak to the question. The hon. member for Halifax also stated—and I was very sorry to hear him, because personally I have a very great regard for him—that foolish and dangerous ideas had been put forward. I cannot understand why he should make that statement in view of the fact that so few of these so-called foolish and dangerous ideas were considered. At any rate, if that was his opinion as the chairman of the committee, it was natural that he would not be in favour of them. He asserted that ample and due consideration was given to all amendments. I am sorry to say that I cannot agree with him In the last few days some very important amendments were put forward, in some cases without the slightest criticism being offered against them, indeed, with several members of the committee speaking in their favour, but those amendments were solidly turned down by the silent vote.

It is for these reasons, and for many others that I could mention if I cared to take up any more time of the committee, that I am in favour of, and intend to vote for, this amendment that the charters be extended for one year only.

Mr. McBRIDE: It was not my intention to say anything on this subject to-night, but it seems to me that a change of programme would be acceptable to the House. Now, I have been thirty-one years in this country and have been doing business with the banks off and on during that time, and I have always found them ready to do what was right. I have always got money when I wanted it, and at a fair rate of interest; and when I had any money to deposit I always got a fair rate of interest. The fault with most people at the present time is that they want to start in at the top of the ladder. They do not want to do as men did thirty years ago,—work to get a start. The fault of many people is that they borrow all the money they can get, and instead of repaying it when they sell their crop they will go and buy an auto and run around the country. I state the facts of the case.

As I have already said, I have no fault to find with the banking system, and I think it is up to the House to give an extension of the bank charters for ten years in order to create business stability in the country. If we begin extending the charters from year to year, what confidence will any person have in the country? It is going to do harm, and, I repeat, I think it is up to the House to extend the charters for another ten years. If a certain class of people want loans there are other means of securing them.

Mr. DUFF: They have not got any security to give.

Mr. McBRIDE: If they have the security they can get all the loans they want without any trouble. I have always found that if you do the right thing with the banks, the banks will do the right thing with you. If I have any fault to find with the banks at all it is that they are too free with their money. I believe that the curse of this country to-day is too much borrowing and not enough production. If people would only work for what they want it would be better for the Dominion as a whole.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, as there are a number of other members who wish to speak to the question, I would suggest that it might be advisable to adjourn the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. GOOD: I am prepared to go ahead, Mr. Chairman. It seems to me that the amendment is very reasonable indeed. We are accepting the revision so far as it has been accomplished up to date, and we are simply asking that the charters be granted for one year, so that between now and next session we may have an opportunity to study the mass of evidence dealing with the whole question of our financial and banking system. It seems to me that the government would be well advised to consent to such a fair and moderate suggestion.

I had intended to speak at some length, but there will be other opportunities for dealing with certain phases of the subject that I wish to take up, and therefore I will content myself for the present by simply pointing out very briefly the situation that faces us to-day. There is no doubt that Canada, along with many other nations, is in a very serious condition. This is doubtless partly due to the war—how much it is hard to say; but whether it is due to one cause or another the condition is admittedly serious. Now, in the face of that condition; in face of the fact that a very large volume of evidence has been submitted to the committee; in face of the fact that a number of other amendments have been suggested to the bill by members of the committee; in face of the fact that a number of further investigations, such as that into the Merchants Bank fiasco, have been demanded by members of the committee, the government apparently propose to wash their hands of the whole affair; to clean up, so to speak, and enact legislation for another ten years. I submit that that is a very dangerous procedure. It has been admitted by a good many members of the committee on all sides after hearing the evidence that, possibly, very fundamental changes in our financial system will be necessary during the next ten years. If that is so, surely we would be well advised if we simply granted the charters for one year, meanwhile looking into the evidence so that next year we shall be in a position to decide what should be done.

I want to make one or two remarks on the Merchants Bank case. There has been a good deal of confusion of mind regarding the motion that was moved in the Banking and Commerce committee some time ago respecting this matter. The purpose of the proposed investigation is not to again try Mr. Macarow and the others. They were indicted on a certain specific charge; they were tried, and they were acquitted. So far as the wrongdoing is concerned, nobody knows who is to blame. Evidently there was some falsification of returns. We have a situation which I think is almost without a parallel. The trial has come off, somebody must have been guilty, but we do not know who. The purpose of the proposed investigation is not to try these men over again but to get from men who know the inside of this affair information that is highly necessary if the various clauses of the Bank Act, especially those having to do with inspection, returns, and so on, are to be properly drafted so that the future may be safeguarded. I submit that the calling of Mr. Macarow, the general manager of the Merchants Bank, would be entirely in order, entirely proper; and the turning down of that suggestion in the committee created in my mind grave suspicions as to what lay behind the action, particularly in view of rumours that have been circulated regarding the affair. I do not know what truth there was in these rumours, but in view of the circumstances; in view of the mystery surrounding a number of these matters, it was entirely in order that these men should come here and give any information that members of the House should think fit to ask them to furnish.

Mr. DUFF: What are your suspicions?

Mr. GOOD: I do not propose to be led into that to-night.

Mr. DUFF: Because you have not any.

Mr. GOOD: I have.

Mr. DUFF: Why not tell us what they are?

Mr. GOOD: They have already been referred to in the discussion. I am not going to deal at length with the Merchants Bank case to-night.

Further there is great need in Canada for some rural credit legislation. We do not know at present how far this may be worked out independently of our present banking system or how far it may be necessary to link it up with the latter. Therefore, until we have something more definite, more concrete, more specific with regard to the whole question of rural credits, in my opinion it would be the wisest thing to give a temporary extension of the charters of the Canadian banks, and then if any changes are desirable between now and next year when we have the report of the committee on rural credits and when the matter can be gone into to some extent, we shall be in a very much better position to decide what should be done. There is no doubt that this is a matter that needs immediate attention; it has been admitted in the committee by men on all sides that that is the case. It is therefore, a very fair proposal indeed that until this matter takes shape we should not give any very considerable extension to the bank charters under the present terms.

In addition to that there has been submitted to the committee, but hardly discussed at all, the question of a federal reserve bank. This is a most important question not only as it relates to our present banking system, but also as it may be linked up with the whole question of rural credits and smaller banks. We shall have to give it some consideration. I am inclined to think from what little information I have on the question that it is almost a necessary part of a rural credit system. This thing is as yet undiscussed, uninvestigated by the committee.

I submit also that the whole question of co-operative banking, which has been so successful elsewhere, is something we ought to consider before our financial system is crystallized in its present shape for another ten years.

We heard something in the committee also about the Australian Commonwealth Bank, a government bank in Australia which seems to have given a great deal of satisfaction. This, too, in its possible application to the Canadian financial system has not received any consideration; it has been mentioned once or twice, but we have not had time to look into the matter.

There is another matter which in my judgment is one of prime importance, concerning which I had intended to speak at some length. I shall only refer to it now; I will leave the discussion of the stabilizing of the purchasing power of money until we reach the clause on interest, where I think it may appropriately be brought up again. But this is one of the most vital questions in the entire field of economics. The whole world has suffered tremendously in recent years from fluctuations in the purchasing power of money. Professor Irving Fisher, of Yale University, who has evolved a plan for the stabilizing of the purchasing power of money, gave evidence before the committee. But it has not been discussed by the committee, although it is very closely linked up with our whole banking system, so far as the control of interest rates is in some degree a means of stabilizing prices. Moreover it has already been stated that a number of representative bodies throughout Canada have asked that the charters be extended for just one year so that time may be afforded for examination of the evidence which has been submitted. As the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) said not very long ago, there are a great many members of this House who have not been privileged to attend the meetings and follow the evidence, who have not had time yet even to read it, and who, I think, should not be called upon to express themselves in a vote at the present time in any final way. I think they would appreciate very much the opportunity which a year's extension of the bank charters would give them to look into this evidence which has been placed on record. In that connection, Mr. Chairman, I want to say something that is not very pleasant to say, but I think perhaps it is necessary. I have seen some things this year that I never thought I would see in a Canadian parliament and I must say that my faith in the sincerity and integrity of people who have the control of policy has been somewhat shattered by what I have seen this year. I do not like to make a statement like that, but I think perhaps I had better.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): If the reflection is intended for a member of the House, the hon. member's remark is certainly out of order.

Mr. GOOD: I will say no more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUFF: Speak for yourself.

Mr. MARLER: What does the hon. member mean? Why talk in this cryptic way? Have we got integrity in this House or in the committee or have we not?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): I think the hon. member on consideration will admit that applying such a term to gentlemen who are in control of policy in this House is certainly unparliamentary. The expression had better be withdrawn.

Mr. GOOD: I will explain myself, Mr. Chairman, if hon. gentlemen wish me to.

Mr. MARLER: Go ahead. Do not talk in innuendoes all the time.

Mr. DUFF: Explain.

Mr. GOOD: I want to mention one matter, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DUFF: You could not back up your statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): If necessary I can read the hon. member the rule of the House. I think that his words should be withdrawn.

Mr. GOOD: Then I will withdraw at your request, Mr. Chairman. During the hearings of the committee we learned just about enough from the accountant, Mr. Edwards, who made some partial investigation into the Merchants Bank affair, to make it very necessary indeed to carry out a fuller investigation. I would like to recall the evidence he submitted in connection with his partial investigation. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said during the course of his remarks that bank failures cannot be prevented by legislation. Now I want very respectfully to call that statement in question. What is the purpose of the efforts that we have made this year on the committee to stop some of the loopholes, to remedy some of the defects, if it is not to make more difficult such failures as have taken place in the past?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I said that.

Mr. GOOD: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member left a very different impression on some members of the committee. He did on my mind at all events.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I said it was our duty to strengthen our legislation so as to make failures as difficult as possible to occur, but I did express the view that I did not think legislation would make absolutely impossible bank failures or any other kind of failures.

Mr. GOOD: I am very glad to have this explanation from the hon. member because I think now he and I agree absolutely in regard to this matter. The purpose of our legislation is to make these things more difficult to occur. Of course, everybody admits that you cannot remedy the defects or frailties of human nature altogether by legislation, but I submit, Mr. Chairman, that legislation can do a great deal in many directions for assisting in that particular way.

The hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs) wanted to know what the Merchants Bank affair had to do with this Bank Act. I would like to reply to that question in this way: If we do not know, as we do not at the present time, what lay behind that situation we cannot take the necessary precautions except in so far as we may apply general rules to provide safeguards—

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask the hon. member a question? I have never been a supporter of Canada's banking system, but I would ask the hon. member for Brant this question. I understand he is one of the directors and vice-president of the United Farmers of Ontario Co-operative stores. Would he mind reading to the committee a report of the meeting at Toronto last fall of the shareholders of the United Farmers Co-operative stores, which have been far from a success to their shareholders, and tell the committee why he did not apply the advice he is giving now in the administration of these stores? We had a Farmers Bank in Toronto in which 2,690 widows and orphans lost their all. The bank was run on theory and such lines as the hon. gentleman talks of. Will he please read to the committee the press report on the row at the United Farmers of Ontario Co-operative stores meeting last fall and the result of the failure of the Farmers Bank?

Mr. GOOD: I am afraid that is rather a large contract for me at this hour of the night. I wish to submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is no clear idea present before the committee at this moment as to how far the Bank Act may be changed at any time. The statement has been made that it can be amended at any time. Now, how far is that true? If it is true that fundamental changes may be made at any time, if it is true that the significance of granting a ten-year charter is practically nothing at all, then of course there is no practical difference between the granting of charters for one year and the granting of charters for ten years, but I do submit that unless we are going to interpret the granting of ten-year charters differently from what we have understood in the past, it is entirely unwise and improper under present conditions, and in view of all these questions which have been presented to the committee and which the country has to solve in some way or other in the near future—it is entirely unwise, I say, to crystallize in any way the financial system by granting ten-year charters.

This afternoon, Mr. Chairman, an effort was made to move the following amendment which I would like to put on Hansard in connection with the Merchants Bank affair:

Whereas the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce decided by resolution not to hear evidence dealing with the collapse of the Merchants Bank, and its subsequent amalgamation or merger with the Bank of Montreal;

Mr. CHURCH: May I ask the hon. member if he will kindly answer the question I put to him: Why does he not apply the same principle he is advocating here to the United Farmers of Ontario Co-operative stores?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Make him speak.

Mr. CHURCH: Will the hon. member answer the question?

Mr. GOOD (Reading):

And whereas it is in the public interest that the conditions which led to or were connected with said collapse should be made public, in order that any weaknesses and deficiencies in the existing Bank Act may be remedied, and the interests of depositors, shareholders, and the general public may be safeguarded.

Mr. FIELDING: I draw attention to the fact that the motion the hon. gentleman is reading has no relation to the clause under discussion.

Mr. GOOD: I submit that it is entirely relevant to the question of the Merchants Bank.

Mr. FIELDING: The Merchants Bank case is not before the committee.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing the Merchants Bank and its collapse at considerable length to-night and have been urging that the investigation of the affairs of that bank is related to the propriety or impropriety of granting bank charters for one year or for ten years. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution is entirely in order as expressing the demand for an investigation. It simply states in brief form that the demand for an investigation should be granted before the bank charters are extended for more than one year.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): According to parliamentary practice a general argument cannot be allowed upon a particular clause. An amendment is now before the committee to which the hon. member must address himself and the rule as to relevancy therefore applies. The question is as to whether the words "twenty-four" should be substituted for the words "thirty-three" in the fourth line. Argument such as my hon. friend is indulging in is altogether irrelevant.

Mr. GOOD: I think it has been conceded to-night that the demand for an investigation into the Merchants Bank is debatable under this clause we are discussing.

The CHAIRMAN: The moment objection was taken I gave a ruling. The point may not have been raised before but the moment it was raised I ruled that it was well taken.

Mr. GOOD: Do I understand that I am ruled out of order in reading this resolution?

The CHAIRMAN: It is not relevant to the motion or to the amendment before the Chair as far as I can see.

Mr. GOOD: I submit it is entirely relevant.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: There has been a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. GOOD: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, if you so rule.

The CHAIRMAN: I rule that it is not relevant to the subject under discussion.

Mr. GOOD: As I mentioned some time ago I intended to deal at some length, during the course of this debate, with the stabilization of the price level but I can do that under another heading. As there are a number of other members who wish to speak on the subject of granting bank charters I shall leave my remarks for a future occasion.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow-River): Mr. Chairman, very much of what I desire to say had I been able to speak earlier in the evening has already been said, but I wish to join my voice with those who are protesting against the jamming through of this bill for ten years at the present session. I share the opinion of hon. members in this quarter of the Chamber who have held that a proper investigation must be made into the Merchants Bank case before the House, or a committee of the House, is competent to deal with the Bank Act in a manner that the public of this country desire as the result of the fiasco that has been witnessed. No due consideration has been given to the mass of evidence adduced before the committee. That point has also been raised by hon. members sitting round me and I share the opinion of those who have made known their views upon it.

There was a refusal during the last few days of the sittings of the committee on Banking and Commerce to investigate or to discuss the Federal Reserve system of the United States. I should like to call the attention of this House to the answer of the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) when this question came up. He said: "It is not worth calling witnesses half a mile, that all the evidence, all the stuff that was required, could be secured in the library." What an extraordinary statement to be made by an opponent of an investigation into the Federal Reserve system of the United States, one of the greatest and one of the most famous systems in the world, "that you could find all the information about it in the library". Why did we go into committee to deal with this matter if you could find all about it in the library? Why discuss anything if you could find all about it in the library. That is one of the chief arguments of those who seem to be particularly interested in passing the Bank Act this session. Now, the refusal to investigate the Merchants Bank case by that committee—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): —has been in my opinion one of the most disastrous things the Liberal party has ever perpetrated in this country, and it will react to the discredit of the Liberal party everlastingly. There will be protests by the people of this country in a short time that will astonish hon. members sitting opposite. They, perhaps, cannot yet conceive the immense feeling that is already gaining ground in connection with the matter.

Mr. DUFF: Where is it?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I read from the Montreal Star of April 28, 1923, an expression of opinion on the subject:

> The sudden wreckage of the Merchants Bank shocked the people of Canada. Even yet they do not fully understand what happened. They are not convinced that it was necessary to close the doors on an ancient and honourable institution and have its assets turned over to a rival. It is true that the shareholders suffered most and that there is no more reason to protect holders of bank shares than those who invest in other enterprises, but the whole banking system was put under suspicion by a collapse and an absorption for causes which are still imperfectly understood and as to which no explanation has been offered which has seemed to be adequate.

On this ground of lack of information alone, an investigation of the Merchants Bank case, in conjunction with the whole discussion of the Bank Act, should have been taken by the committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. JACOBS: May I be permitted to ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. RINFRET: Does my hon. friend believe in the Montreal Star?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I suggest to the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier most quietly and respectfully that the very ethics of his profession ought to have been sufficient to have prevented him from interrupting me when I was discussing the Merchants Bank case, seeing that the hon. member, I understand, was attorney for one of the parties in the case.

Mr. JACOBS: I do not take lessons in ethics from the hon. member for Bow-legged River, or whatever his constituency is.

Mr. GARDINER: I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has just made a reference to the constituency of my hon. friend (Mr. Garland), which should be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gordon): I did not understand the hon. member to reflect on Mr. Garland's integrity.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I ask my hon. friend from Medicine Hat not to deal too drastically with the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier, but rather to sympathize with him.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. RINFRET: Take your medicine.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In regard to the investigation into the Merchants Bank fiasco another question arose—apart altogether from that appalling collapse itself—in the minds of the public, and that was the question of mergers. But before I pass on to that I would like to quote, as another reason why the bank charters should not be renewed for ten years at the present session, a statement from the Canadian Annual Review, 1921. The quotation, I can assure hon. members will not be lengthy. I have no more desire than they have to prolong this discussion, but I do desire to put myself on record on this important question. At page 40 of the Canadian Annual Review of 1921, after a lengthy and very clearly defined statement of the history and standing of the Merchants Bank, the following is written:

> On December, 16 Montreal heard with astonishment and the country with absolute amazement that the chairman of the Montreal Stock Exchange had received from Sir Montague Allan, president of the bank, the following letter:
> "You are requested herewith to withdraw Merchants Bank of Canada stock from your list as arrangements have been made with the Bank of Montreal, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council and the shareholders of both banks, to take over the Merchants Bank."

Mr. JACOBS: I rise to a point of order. Is it relevant for the hon. member to read this matter before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN: I should not like to give a ruling until the reading proceeds a little further.

Mr. CANNON: On the point of order, in justice to the hon. member for Brant, (Mr. Good), I might say that it was decided a short while ago that the hon. member for Brant had no right to discuss the Merchants Bank. If the hon. member who now has the floor has that right, the hon. member for Brant should be recalled and given an opportunity of discussing the question.

Mr. GARLAND: (Bow River): Hear, hear; I am very grateful to you, Mr. Chairman, for your permission to continue in the matter, and I submit that the recent failure or fiasco of the Merchants Bank, involving the question of suspicion, and it did inevitably give rise to suspicion in the minds of the people of Canada, and as a consequence of which there should be some very drastic changes in the Bank Act, changes which, in my opinion, have not yet been made, is one of the reasons why this revision should be deferred.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the hon. member not anticipating a future clause in the bill which provides for forms of returns, the necessity of returns and signatures of certain officials? I am just drawing that to the attention of the hon. member. I fear he is anticipating another clause.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think so, for this reason: In the discussion of clause 5 and the amendment thereto, I frankly confess that I cannot see how any aspect of banking or the banking system cannot be made relevant to the question. It is true that on other questions some of these matters would be utterly out of order. For instance, on the interest clause, you could discuss interest ad lib., its effect on the people and conditions arising out of it; but on this particular clause which refers to the extension of the charters for a term of ten years, if I happened to be in the chair—and I am glad I am not—I would find it difficult to rule against any discussion of the banking system of Canada.

Amongst other matters that I would like to call to the attention of this committee—and as an indication of my goodwill in this matter, I will lay aside any further quotations concerning the Almanac and the Merchants Bank—is that one of the most astonishing things to the people of this country is that at that time the Merchants Bank stock was worth $157. There is involved in this question, as I said, a moment ago, the question of mergers. The people of Canada are becoming more and more satisfied that the development of a money oligarchy in this country is not in the best interest of Canada. The development of that oligarchy has gone on under this Bank Act. No provision has yet been made in the Bank Act to prevent that. There are no restrictions on mergers; everything in that connection is left to the Minister of Finance. We find that in 1904 there were thirty-four banks in Canada with about 1,100 branches. In 1920, there were only eighteen banks, and to-day there are only seventeen with fully six or seven thousand branches. These banks were absorbed, swallowed up in the most extraordinary fashion. A few failed, but most of them were absorbed by larger banks. There seems to have been a contest between the Bank of Montreal and the Royal Bank of Toronto to see which would absorb or grab up the largest number. I am quoting from a book written by Mr. Baker, called "Money Monopoly vs. The Community Dollar" at page 84:

> It will be remembered that in an earlier chapter it was stated that in 1904 bank capital was equivalent to 11 per cent of total assets, while in 1920 the ratio had been decreased to 4 per cent. Therefore, not only did the banks fail to maintain their position in this respect, but they carried on a policy of expansion until they had four times as many branches with only a ratio of 4 per cent between capital and total assets.

This is but one of the evils that follow in the train of mergers. That question has not been properly or duly considered. Leaving aside this matter of the discussion of the investigation of the Merchants Bank, and that is one of the reasons why this amendment should carry, I should like to ask the following questions in the hope that some hon. member opposite will answer them. This would, perhaps, clear the minds of hon. members in this part of the chamber on this matter and not make them so convinced that the rights of the Canadian people are in jeopardy as their present position would indicate:

> Is it a fact that the directors of the Merchants Bank were compelled to sell out for protection of creditors or shareholders? Or were there other considerations which played a part in the impelling process?

These are questions I should like to have answered, possibly by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) or by the Minister of Finance when he speaks:

> Did the Bank of Montreal pay any more for the Merchants Bank than it was worth? If it did should the public not know how it covered up its loss? If it did not, and it is not likely that the Bank of Montreal did so, how is it that a corporation with capital intact and a surplus of 15 per cent of its capital. could be impelled to sell out to protect its shareholders and depositors? Since when have corporations become insolvent because they could pay their creditors, pay their stockholders, and distribute a dividend from surplus of 15 per cent? If the institution was strained for ready cash to meet its clearing obligations, why could it not have borrowed from the government just as other banks do when they are strained? Why did not the Bank of Montreal and other banks assist the Merchants Bank if its stock was worth 115?

In fact, it was worth more than that at one time, just prior to the merger:

> Is it possible that the associated banks did not like the business methods of the Merchants Bank, such as founding and advertising Christmas clubs?

There are many other questions, but I will leave these with the hon. members, and if they can answer them they can satisfy me more than I expect to be satisfied by the members of this committee.

Perhaps the greatest reason that can be put forward for the extension of these charges for one year only at this time is that we have in this country admittedly, admitted by the greatest bankers that those who are interested could get before the committee on banking, a gap in the credit structure of Canada, a gap for which no provision is made and for which they say no provision can be made under the banking system. Yet no one of those bankers came to us, nor did the Bankers' Association come to us with any proposal designed to cover the gap. As we have no suggestion offered in this regard, to whom shall we go? Hon. members opposite have suggested a rural credit scheme. All rural credit schemes in Canada to-day are based in the final analysis on the banks, and yet we know that the banks are antagonistic to rural schemes. They have shown that only too clearly in Manitoba and Ontario. Hon. members opposite say: Be calm; be quiet; we will get a rural credit scheme for you some time, we do not know just when, but some time. I ask: What are you going to do? There is no proposal in this regard before the committee. There is no justification for the statements they are making. If they have a rural credit scheme, we would be delighted to consider and discuss it.

There are in this country three great papers, in particular the Financial Post, the Montreal Star, the Winnipeg Free Press, and indeed many others that have asked that these bank charters be extended for only one year at this time. You have heard hon. members around me speak of organizations that have asked for the same thing. Mention was made by the hon. member for Victoria, Alta. (Mr. Lucas), to the effect that Mr. Tom Moore had sent him a letter embodying or containing resolutions from various trades and labour councils of Victoria, Calgary, Edmonton, and various other places. The senior member for Halifax interrupted him, and suggested that Mr. Moore had been before the committee but that he had not brought that question up, that it had not been discussed and he had no suggestions to offer. I would submit to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) that perhaps Mr. Moore had a few weeks in which to consider this question since he left the committee and had decided that it was in the best interests of the Canadian people, and in addition to that had secured these resolutions from the Trades and Labour Councils. May I say further, Mr. Chairman, that when the senior member for Halifax says that no good and sufficient reasons have been brought before this House for the extension of the charter for one year, I would submit that when these bodies of highly organized, and I say, highly intelligent people — labour, the farmers, the governments of Alberta and of Manitoba —have seen fit to make this request, surely that alone should be a good and sufficient reason. The people have not had time to consider the evidence. They have not had time to digest the matter properly and to come to a decision. Many proposals have been brought forward. None of them has received due consideration. We hope they will soon. They will have to, in my opinion some time or other.

In closing, let me emulate the example of the member for George Etienne Cartier, who is an adept at facetiousness and telling humorous stories. The hon. gentlemen likened the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) to the cuttlefish. May I say that the hon. member himself (Mr. Jacobs) reminds me of the story of a darkey I once read about, who lived in the cornfield country of the South. In the midst of a thunderstorm this darkey was driving a team of mules home late at night. Between the flashes of lightning there was dense darkness, and he could see nothing, not even the road, he was terror-stricken, and the mules were getting more restless all the time. When the lightning flashed he would see the road for a moment or two, and it temporarily renewed his courage. After a time the poor old darkey could stand it no longer, and then he prayed as I do, "Oh, Lord, let there be less noise and more light".

Mr. COOTE: I regret that the government has seen fit to compel the House to sit to this late hour for the consideration of what I think is the most important subject that will come before this parliament this session. There is no subject of any greater importance to the people of this country than the revision of the Bank Act. The matter of currency and credit is one of prime importance to the people of this country. I feel that the inquiry by the committee on Banking and Commerce into the working of the Bank Act during the past ten years was very inadequate, but so far as the inquiry was carried on, it seemed to me that it was amply proved before the committee that the banking situation in this country was very far from satisfactory. If that is the case, I cannot see why the Finance Minister is so determined that the charters must be renewed for ten years. I believe that some of our own bankers are quite concerned in regard to the situation which exists in Canada to-day; yet the Finance Minister says we must put this act through and he will brook no delay. He says: "You must do nothing which will interefere with the confidence of the public", but he has done nothing to find out whether the public confidence has been misplaced. I wonder whether he has heard any rumours to the effect that one of our banks, possibly more than one, is not in very good shape to-day. I wonder whether he is expecting that before another year passes he will have applications for the approval of one or more mergers.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Two hon. gentlemen from the Progressive party told us that the whole thing is going to the bad inside of ten years.

Mr. COOTE: If one or two go each year, they might all be gone before long. I do not want to make any prediction, but those are possibly not idle rumours that we hear.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It does not do much good to talk about them.

Mr. COOTE: No, it does not. I wonder what would do some good about it. It might be just as well if we knew more about it, but I may say very frankly that it did not seem to me that it was the wish of that committee that we should know anything we could be prevented from finding out. I hope that is not unfair, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to be unfair. I simply said it appeared to me that way. In this country we have seen our chartered banks decrease from 34 in 1901 to 17 in 1923. In 1911, the paid-up capital of our banks was $96,000,000. In 1923, it had increased to $135,000,000. I am giving round figures. That is a very small increase, a trifle over 25 per cent, but in the same time our deposits in the Canadian banks had increased from $926,000,000 to $1,995,000,000. That is considerably more than double. In the same time our total trade in Canada has increased from $741,000,000 to $2,450,000,000, an increase of over 300 per cent. In the same time the bank loans have increased from $986,000,000 in 1911, to $1,851,000,000 to-day. That is practically double. When we consider the small amount of paid-up capital which our Canadian banks have, the amount of business they are transacting, and the amount of deposits of the public they are handling, to use a slang expression, I think we could say they are doing business on a shoestring. This large expansion in Canadian trade which has taken place in the last ten or thirteen years has made necessary a large increase in the amount of money for circulation; and to meet this demand for an increase in circulation, our banks, instead of increasing their paid-up capital, as I think they should have, had to resort to other expedients to meet the demand for the circulation. First, they got the privilege of an increase of 15 per cent—

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but it has been held —and there is no question about it—that general argument on a bill cannot be allowed on a particular clause. I fear he is getting along that line, and I am drawing his attention to it.

Mr. COOTE: I will discontinue that line of argument. Possibly, we have had enough of it, and I may be ruled out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I draw the hon. member's attention to it. I do not say he has reached that point yet.

Mr. COOTE: I want to lead up to this fact, Mr. Chairman; that the bank business of Canada is now in the hands of the directors of seventeen banks, and, through the Bankers' Association, the directors of three or four of the different banks are able to dictate the financial policy of this country.

I think, Mr. Chairman, it is quite relevant to bring that to the attention of the committee as one reason why it would be quite proper to accept the amendment offered by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) and see if we cannot within the next year amend the Bank Act to free the country from the control of these few men. If, Mr. Chairman, I might be allowed to use the expression of Sir John Aird before the committee on Banking and Commerce in referring to certain railway corporations, I would say we are now in the hands of a banking octopus, and if we have any more mergers the hold of this octopus upon the general public will be that much stronger.

The present state of affairs is particularly unfortunate in that the directors of some of our larger banks are controlling the board of governors of our leading universities. Quite recently I was told by a professor that he dared not criticize the Bank Act as some members of the board of governors of his university were bank directors and he might lose his job. These directors not only control our universities but also our industries, and, indeed, it might even be said that they control our government. Our peculiar banking system has made this possible, as the whole tendency is toward centralization. The savings of the people are taken from the smaller towns and rural communities to build up a few of the large cities. The funds of the banks are used to finance schemes under the control of the directors, and very often I imagine at a lower rate of interest than can be secured by those engaged in these industries in the smaller towns and cities, making it very hard for them to compete with the larger organizations. Right in this connection, Mr. Chairman, I might be allowed to quote two or three paragraphs from an address by Mr. Andrew Jay Fame, Chairman of the Board of Waukesha National Bank, Wisconsin, at a Bankers' Association meeting in the United States in reference to our banking system. He says:

> In Canada some seventeen central banks (reduced from more than thirty some years ago) now skim the cream from over 4,000 branches, leaving only the skim milk for the rural and suburban populations. Branches have no local stockholders, no presidents, or cashiers. They practically pay no taxes and have figureheads for managers, subject to alien officers' orders. The most serious objection is practically no profits are distributed locally where they are made, thus impoverishing the nation at large for the sole benefit of monopolizers in the great centres.
> Statistics clearly show that failures of banks and losses to depositors in Canada, compared with our National Banking System, exceed ours several times over. These facts are confirmed by at least one ex-manager of a big central bank in Canada and by other authorities I am not at liberty to quote. Her banking power is less than little Massachusetts alone. She is asleep compared to our progress.

He then quotes from an article in the Toronto Star of some years ago on the Canadian branch banking system.

The CHAIRMAN: I must really stop the hon. member. I do not see how this could be relevant to the question of whether the bank charters should be renewed for one year or ten years. The quotation deals with the general principle of banking.

Mr. COOTE: I was using this argument, Mr. Chairman, because I thought the committee should investigate to see whether our Bank Act might not be improved in respect to this particular system.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member knows that this committee has very limited powers of investigation. The bill was referred to this committee for the purpose of discussing these sections and reporting or not reporting it. This committee has not the powers of a standing committee.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, if I might be allowed to quote one sentence from this editorial I will be satisfied. It says:

> Monster banking monopoly a leech at Canada's throat killing local industry, depopulating rural districts. Centralization of almost entire financial power in the hands of a few capitalists has resulted from our much vaunted banking system. Almost total extermination of local banks.
> Planting of a "branch" to suck our local earnings, etc.

I should like to read a little more of this editorial, Mr. Chairman, but it will keep. The small percentage of the paid up capital of our banks compared to the deposits results, I think, in our banks becoming panic-stricken in times of financial stringency, and they close down on their customers when they think deflation is imminent. There is no doubt that in the past this has caused great loss to their borrowers and very often to the banks themselves, I think, because the assets under forced liquidation were not sufficient to pay the debtors' liabilities. Our whole credit structure is built up on the confidence which the public have in the system—

The CHAIRMAN: Surely, the hon. member is dealing with the general principle of banking and the credit system. I do not see how it is possible by any stretch of the imagination to connect this with any reason why bank charters should not be granted for ten years but for one year only. It is my duty to rule the hon. gentleman out of order.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I was just about to bring to the attention of the committee what I think is one of the main reasons for this postponement, namely, that the committee on Banking and Commerce absolutely refused to call a witness who was acquainted with the actual working of the Federal Reserve Banks in the United States. I wished to argue that the special committee should have called the witness.

The CHAIRMAN: Any failure of a special committee, or a ruling of its chairman, is not reviewable by this committee, and is not an argument presentable in this committee on this particular section.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know what argument would be relevant if that is not.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not relevant, and I have so ruled.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know what better reason could be advanced, Mr. Chairman, and if that is your ruling I have very little more to say. I wished, Sir, to put before this committee the action of the special committee on Banking and Commerce with regard to one or two other matters.

The CHAIRMAN: This committee has no power to deal with the ruling of a special committee. If the chairman of that committee submitted the question, and it was decided in the affirmative or the negative, it cannot be reviewed by this committee.

Mr. COOTE: Then I will have very little more to say, because that was my chief reason for asking for support to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer. It does seem to me that the bill as brought down is very inadequate to deal with the situation which exists in Canada to-day. The Minister of Finance, if he had been well acquainted with the situation in this country, should have done something more to meet the situation than he has done in the legislation now proposed. I have some other information here that I would have liked to put before the committee, particularly in regard to the Commonwealth Bank,—how it would be applicable to this country; how it would improve, I think, the banking system of this country if it were introduced here, and the benefit it might be to this government and the country at large. But owing to the narrow limits within which we are compelled to keep by your ruling, Mr. Chairman, I do not at this time care to say anything further except that I trust this amendment will be given honest consideration by the members of the committee.

Mr. GOOD: I would like again to protest against the exclusion of evidence of this sort. It does seem to me that the presentation by the hon. member for Macleod of certain matters dealing with the Commonwealth Bank of Australia, as bearing upon the question of postponements, would be entirely relevant.

The CHAIRMAN: I have ruled that it is not relevant, and I cannot in any way see that it is relevant. The question is on the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Speakman) negatived; Yeas, 27; Nays, 65.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Particulars of Act of Incorporation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the government if it is their intention to press on with the Bank Act all night?

Mr. FIELDING: No. At a very early stage, as soon as we meet a clause to which an amendment is proposed, we will let it stand over and have the committee rise We might run through these uncontested clauses.

Section agreed to.

On section 13—First meeting of subscribers.

Mr. COOTE: I intended to move an amendment to section 20 asking for permission to establish smaller banks, and it would necessitate—

Mr. FIELDING: We may go on until that clause is reached; then I shall be glad to move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I submit that the hon. member for Macleod has not been fully heard. I think he was going on to explain when interrupted that this section if passed now would prevent the formation of smaller banks under section 20.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. gentleman desires to move an amendment to it, I will move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 1.40 a.m. (Tuesday).

Tuesday, June 19, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

REPORTS

Sixth report of the Special Committee appointed to inquire into Agricultural Conditions; also seventh report of the same, with evidence and other documents.—Mr. McMaster.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted again to present the petition of W. J. Bartlett and a number of other residents of British Columbia in regard to the naturalization of Japanese and also in regard to the further immigration of Japanese into this country? You will remember there were some irregularities on the former occasion; I think the petition is now in order.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING

Bill No. 224 (from the Senate), for the relief of John Samuel McDonnell.—Mr. Jacobs.

SOLDIERS' HOSPITALS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (North Toronto): Have the government decided to close Euclid Hall, Toronto, and Brant House, Burlington, soldiers' hospitals? If so, who recommended it and why, and when will the hospitals be closed? I would ask the government whether arrangements could not be made to have Euclid Hall and Brant House continued as convalescent homes. It is no economy to close them.

Hon. H. S. BELAND (Minister of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment): The question of closing Brant House is under consideration. It had been the intention of the department to close the hospital very shortly, but in view of some representations made by delegations who waited upon some of my colleagues and myself a few days ago, we have decided to defer definite action until I can personally visit the place.

Mr. CHURCH: I think it should be kept open until September at least, when the warm weather is over. Many of the patients in that institution are incurable cases.

Mr. BELAND: The matter does deserve serious and sympathetic consideration.

RULING OF MR. SPEAKER

NON-DEBATABLE MOTION—EFFECT OF PROCEDURE UPON THE PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I desire to take occasion to call attention to a ruling made by you yesterday, a ruling to which I did not take exception at the time, as I could clearly see it followed a ruling similar in every respect made by Hon. Mr. Rhodes, the previous Speaker of this House. I have given some attention to the subject, because I think if the ruling is to stand it is very serious, and because I believe the ruling not to be right. It was given upon the calling of an order of the day, numbered, I think, 45. The order merely read, "House in Committee of the Whole" on a certain bill, namely, the bill to amend the Bank Act. The ruling was—

Mr. SPEAKER: Of course, there is nothing before the Chair at the present moment. The right hon. member, I am sure, is not appealing from yesterday's decision.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: He desires to call the attention of the House to the ruling and its consequences.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent that might be allowed.

Mr. FIELDING: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we can appeal from your ruling if we do not like it, but I do not think we have a right to call it in question the day following.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not asking for an appeal. My reason for bringing the matter up on the Orders of the Day is that I think it is as appropriate as any other matter on the Orders of the Day; it is a matter that concerns the privileges of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the right hon. gentleman make it a question of privilege, a matter affecting the privileges of the House?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The privileges of the House.

[Mr. Beland.]

Mr. SPEAKER: Then, I think he is in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am not making it in any spirit of complaint against the ruling, because I realize it is fully in accord with the precedent quoted by Your Honour in giving the ruling. As I stated, it was upon the calling of an order which merely read, "House in Committee of the Whole" on a certain bill. It was held there could not be debate upon a motion which was called from the Chair as appertaining to that order, the motion being that the Speaker do leave the Chair for the House to resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on that bill.

Mr. VIEN: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Meighen) were appealing from your decision of yesterday, he would be out of order, as he himself admits. Otherwise it would be a question of changing the rules of the House. Either Your Honour's decision was right or it was not. If your decision was right, then the right hon. gentleman can only move to change the rules of the House; if it was wrong, then he had the right of appeal from it yesterday. If the right hon. gentleman wishes to amend the rules of the House he may proceed in the ordinary course, but I do not believe he is entitled to take that matter up on the Orders of the Day. Moreover, there is in the point raised no question of infringement of the privileges of the House. It is only when there has been such an infringement that the privileges of the House may be brought up in this way; otherwise, I do not believe the question can be raised at this stage. Therefore I respectfully submit that my right hon. friend is not in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not propose to argue the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I thought it was as convenient to bring the matter to the attention of yourself and of the House now as at any other time. If hon. members feel they do not want to have the discussion now, I will wait until a time when the decision may come again, and then I can discuss it. I do not know what the House is going to gain by the delay. I had hoped that by having the matter presented now we might avoid a precedent which I think would be serious later.

Mr. FIELDING: Will there not be a more serious precedent if my right hon. friend claims the right to discuss a matter which was decided by the Speaker on a previous day? I think that would be a very awkward precedent to establish.

Mr. SHAW: In order to settle the controversy, may I suggest that the House will be going into Committee of the Whole in a few moments, and the same question may then be raised?

Mr. SPEAKER: I was going to suggest that the right hon. gentleman make his objections or representations when a similar motion comes before the House in the course of the regular proceedings to-day. I quite agree that the right hon. gentleman is not appealing to-day from the decision that was rendered yesterday. I gather from his remarks that he more particularly refers to another ruling which was given the other day on a notice of motion that the House do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole. There was on that occasion a little discussion about the right to debate the question before the Speaker left the Chair, and I think that is the phase of the question which the right hon. gentleman wishes to make clear to-day. He will, however, have an opportunity to raise the question again when a similar motion comes regularly before the House.

HINDU FRANCHISE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): There is a resolution standing in my name on the order paper respecting Hindu franchise, and I am unable to proceed with it owing to the fact that private members' day has been taken away. That being so, I should like to know if the government would be prepared to fix a day upon which this question might be discussed. I understand that this matter is likely to come before the Imperial Conference in London next October, and inasmuch as the Prime Minister, who I understand is going to be present at the conference, might want to have his hand strengthened by a decision from this House on the question, I was wondering if we could not have a day or part of a day set aside for the discussion of this important question.

Mr. NEILL: Christmas Day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I would think that the most appropriate time to discuss this matter would be when the Franchise Act itself is up for consideration. Of course, it is not possible that this measure will be discussed this session, but if my hon. friend wishes to touch upon any aspect of the coming Imperial Conference, this among others he will be free to do so when we have that item under consideration.

GREAT LAKES SHIPPING COMBINE

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. R. A. HOEY (Springfield): I should like to embrace this opportunity to ask the government if it is their intention in the immediate future to take action, criminal or otherwise, against the men who together constituted the Great Lakes shipping combine. It is some weeks since the report of the commission was tabled. The people of Canada are deeply interested in this question. I do not know that proceedings could be taken under the Anti-Combines Act that we passed this session, but I know that any action taken would be in complete accord with the spirit of that legislation which we have passed.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government is presenting to the House legislation which it is hoped will deal with the matters that are referred to by my hon. friend. Just as to whether any prosecutions should be instituted for actions that are past will depend, I think, pretty much upon the law as it stands at the moment.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

The House again in committee on Bill No. 83 respecting banks and banking, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I asked last night that this clause might be allowed to stand over as it was my intention to submit an amendment. I have decided, however, not to bring that amendment forward as I am of the opinion that it would not receive the support of the committee. I would like to say a few words in regard to this section.

I think it is a mistake for this committee to say that people should not be allowed to start a bank in this country unless and until the new organization has a subscribed capital of $500,000. I would urge upon the minister the desirability of making it somewhat easier for any group of individuals in this country to get together and start a bank if they so desire. At the present time the banking business in this country is in the hands of a very small group of individuals, and I do not see that there is any possibility of relief from the present situation unless the act is amended to allow banks to start with a smaller capitalization. The reason I am not moving an amendment is that I do not know just what figure to suggest that might meet with the approval of this committee, but I do want to point out that by this legislation we are making it impossible for the people in any town or village to start a bank even if they desire to do so and have money sufficient for the purpose. I do not think it is right for this parliament to say that these people should not be allowed to start a bank. Surely, that is carrying the prohibition too far. I would respectfully urge upon the Minister of Finance to take this matter into his most serious consideration and see whether it would not be wise to allow the banks to be started with a smaller subscribed capital than is here provided. The banking system in the United States has been built up through the formation of very small banks in the main. There are many banks in the United States which started with a capital of $25,000 and which have now a paid up capital of $1,000,000 or more, and it does seem to me that it would be possible for us to build up some banks in Canada under that same system, particularly as we now have upon the statute books the War Finance Act which allows banks to re-discount their securities with the Finance Department. Without discussing the matter at any greater length I would earnestly urge this upon the Minister of Finance for his consideration.

Mr. FIELDING: The question referred to by my hon. friend is undoubtedly one of much interest and importance. It has been well considered by the department, and I think I may say it was pretty carefully considered by the committee. There is certainly something to be said in favour of the hon. member's suggestion. On the other hand, there are several reasons which I think can be properly urged against it. To begin with, in these days of big things a small enterprise in any line of business will have trouble in competing with the larger concern. A small bank will have a great difficulty in competing with a larger institution. There are certain expenses incidental to management which have to apply to a small bank and also to a large one, and it is only because these expenses can be distributed over a large area in the case of the larger institution that the cost of the organization and management may be deemed reasonable. That in itself is the reason why, I think, a small bank would have, from the very beginning, great difficulty in holding its own.

Then there is another consideration. The argument for a small bank is that it appeals to the local feeling, appeals to the local pride. There is certainly force in that. But that which is an argument at one moment in its favour is really a good argument against it. The tendency of the small bank, appealing to local feeling, appealing to local pride, is to become so identified with local affairs that it, so to speak, puts all its eggs into one basket, and when trouble occurs the small bank, dependent upon local business, has an exceedingly difficult task to exist. I think, take it all in all, that any bank which is organized in Canada at a smaller capital than that which is required under the existing law would have a poor chance of success. I doubt whether any honourable member who thinks it out would do well to advise anybody to put money into a small bank in Canada with the expectation that it could compete successfully against the larger institutions.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister has said that the danger in connection with the small local banks is that they are apt to become localized in their activities and, having put all their eggs in one basket, to use the illustration he mentioned, would have greater difficulty in existing when trouble came. Does he not think that a rediscounting system in connection with the local bank would overcome the danger which he anticipates?

Mr. FIELDING: That raises another question. I think the activities of the small bank would be localized. Even though it might utilize a system of rediscounting in the way suggested to my hon. friend it would still be a local institution. The danger is that it would become so local and so interested in a few local enterprises that, I think the experience has shown in Canada—I do not want to discuss the American system—the small bank would be a menace to the financial situation, and would not tend to promote that stability in financial affairs which, I am sure, hon. gentlemen opposite are as anxious to maintain as I am.

Mr. GOOD: I would like to question the argument of the Minister of Finance when he refers to the alleged difficulty the small banks might have in competing wtih the larger banks. As a matter of fact in the United States they have developed a vast number of smaller banks. These banks, it is true, have failed in a number of cases, but I think the statistics given in the committee on Banking and Commerce showed that the proportion of failures was considerably less than in Canada. Now, these are facts, and while everyone would admit the existence of certain difficulties the small banks would have to face, those who look at the matter fairly must also admit that there are certain very distinct advantages, not only from the standpoint of utility to the neighbourhood, to the community, but from the standpoint of actual efficiency and operation—for example the low overhead expenses. We ought, I think, as a matter of principle, to allow free competition between the large branch bank systems such as we have in Canada and the local bank system. Nobody knows which is the best? How can you tell if you do not try? If the legislation practically prohibits the formation of any small banks the argument surely is not valid that the small bank cannot compete against its larger competitor and is of no use. I submit that in the United States, a country very like our own, the small bank has proven entirely satisfactory, particularly since it has been linked up with the federal reserve system of that country. I feel that this is a matter which must receive consideration sooner or later, and we might as well face the situation now. The experience in Canada has been referred to by the Minister of Finance. I presume he refers to a number of failures of small banks years ago; but we have had a number of failures of larger banks, and I do not know that any evidence has been submitted in the standing committee or in the Committee of the Whole which would show that the proportion of failures in small banks has been any greater in volume than the proportion in our larger banks. I quite agree with the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) that there is not much prospect of getting anything like this system in operation, particularly as it was turned down in the Banking and Commerce committee. However, I would like to place myself on record as stating that in my opinion we ought to allow a fair field and no favours and not prohibit the smaller bank, which has been very useful elsewhere, from getting a start in Canada. I think it may be particularly useful and particularly stable when we link it up with the federal reserve system, or with the Treasury Board under our Finance Act.

Mr. LOGAN: I believe that the capitalization of the banks at the present time is entirely too large. The Minister of Finance has referred to the disadvantage of localizing banks. In the Maritime provinces we are suffering from the disadvantages of centralization. Twenty years ago, Mr. Chairman, we had, if I remember rightly, fourteen banks with their head offices in those provinces. We had fourteen boards of directors, comprising the leading and best business minds of the Maritime provinces, sitting around the boards of those respective banks and considering the needs and necessities of the Maritime provinces to a large extent. They knew our difficulties, they sympathized with our ambitions, and we were able at that time to secure banking accommodation in a rather liberal way. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have not a single bank with bank directors sitting round the board in the Maritime provinces; and it has been said by someone, and I guess it is probably true, that there is no individual, and no board of directors in these provinces having the real right to-day to advance even $20,000 on a credit without the matter being referred to the head office in Montreal or Toronto. Now, I am not attacking the bank directors in Montreal and Toronto, nor am I attacking the banking system as it exists to-day. I think, taking it all in all, that it was, in its inception at any rate, a very great banking system. But there may be, and I think there is necessity to-day for some amendments. Nevertheless, the fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the man in the Maritime provinces in order to get credit must first go to a local bank manager. This manager may not understand very many of our difficulties, but the system is to report to the head office, and the board of directors in the head office will issue or deny that credit, depending largely upon the recommendation of the local manager. The local manager may so report as to cause the application to be received with considerable favour. He may be a local banker in whom the head office has very great confidence, and his recommendation may receive more consideration than that of some other bank manager.

Mr. VIEN: Has not the Bank of Nova Scotia its head office in Halifax?

Mr. FIELDING: Nominally.

Mr. LOGAN: Nominally it has its head office in the city of Halifax where you would think the head office of the Bank of Nova Scotia should be; but practically the head office of that bank is one thousand miles away from the province from which it derives its name.

Mr. VIEN: How does my hon. friend explain the disappearance of these small banks and the location of the headquarters elsewhere?

Mr. FIELDING: It is not a small bank, it is a large bank.

Mr. VIEN: It is a large bank, yes. Moreover, how would my hon. friend prevent the same thing occurring to the small banks of which he advocates the creation?

Mr. LOGAN: I presume the reason for the change of head office to Montreal and Toronto lies in the tendency in Canada towards centralization along all lines. I am not asking that legislation be passed here to compel the formation of banks in the Maritime provinces; but what I do say is that we should not shut the door against the formation of new banks, even though we may lose later on. I know of individual cases of clients of mine who have suffered very serious injury through a lack of knowledge on the part of the local bank manager, on one hand, and, on the other, a lack of knowledge on the part of the directors sitting a thousand miles away considering the case. It is natural that men in Nova Scotia or in the Maritime provinces should know more about that part of the country, the men, the character of borrowers, than any body of men can possibly know sitting a thousand miles away. I was not a member of the committee on Banking and Commerce; in fact, I was not here during the greater part of the session. But I have taken the trouble to read the minutes of the proceedings of that committee, and I find that a motion was made there to reduce the amount to $50,000. I would vote against that, because I think the amount is too small. On the other hand, however, I certainly think that $500,000 is too large a sum to fix as the minimum in this day; we might very well reduce it to $150,000 or $250,000 in order that it might be easier for men in the outlying parts of the Dominion to form banks to deal with local affairs. People ask, what is the matter with the Maritime provinces, and why is it that we are losing our population? Well, there are several reasons, one being of course the high cost of transportation. But among the several reasons that may be offered for this condition, one of the most outstanding is the fact that we have lost our money control in the Maritime provinces, so that it is exceedingly difficult to secure for local enterprises sufficient capital to carry on when we have to appeal to a board a thousand miles away who very often know us not.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): If the question of small local banks were possible and practical I would very heartily endorse it; I fancy that nobody, in principle, is opposed to smaller local banks operating within a limited area. Indeed, the present Canadian act is not against small banks because it expressly provides that a bank with a capitalization of $500,000 may start business. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) deprecates the fact that in the Maritime provinces we have no small banks. I might say to him, however, that in the city of Halifax as well as in St. John, there would not be the slightest difficulty whatever in securing $500,000 of capital with which to start a bank and operate it locally if the people thought that it could exist and successfully continue in business.

[Mr. Logan.]

Mr. LOGAN: You have not tried it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It has been tried in Nova Scotia, but without success. Now, hon. members refer to the experience of the banking system of the United States. In banking, as in a great many other enterprises, if a system is once instituted it is difficult to abandon it and immediately inaugurate a new one. The branch bank system of Canada is as old as confederation. I am not saying whether it is best or not, but I do say that it has fairly well provided for the necessities of the country in the past; in fact, I do not know what other kind of banking system could have prevailed in Canada. When one reflects that we have in this country a population of eight or nine millions occupying vast stretches of territory, one is forced to ask where the capital would have come from to establish in the cities and the towns and villages of Canada the banking offices that exist to-day, were it not for the branch bank system. I do not think it would have been possible; and whatever the defects of the system may be—and I presume it has defects—I say, nevertheless, that it has served Canada well.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has referred to the experience of small banks in the country. I remember in my own time, in the province of Nova Scotia, there were two local banks, which, I think, had not a single agency. Within the last twenty years they have gone out of business. And I might refer to other banks much more substantial, such for example as the Northern Crown, of Winnipeg. That bank merged with the Royal Bank either in 1918 or 1919. It was in a fairly liquid position, yet they found they could not safely loan their resources and protect their depositors and shareholders. They therefore had to go out of business. Nothing was said about the matter at the time; that particular merger was not criticized. But in banks, as in every other business institution, there is likely to come a time when the shareholders decide that they must liquidate or sell. And that very substantial bank, the Northern Crown, was obliged to do that. Or take the case of the Bank of Ottawa—a very strong institution, well entrenched in the Ottawa valley and with a splendid body of directors. A few years ago that bank found its position was in danger; at least, it could not sustain its position unless it spread out through the various provinces of Canada, which it had neglected to do in previous years. It was a bank in which a few persons were the principal shareholders, who thought they could not get additional capital by appealing to the public. And so they declined to put further capital into the enterprise and in the end decided that it was better to merge with the Bank of Nova Scotia. The same thing happened in the case of the Bank of British North America, which was largely a Canadian bank without the shareholders' double liability. They had not established agencies throughout Canada in many places and they found the competition of the stronger banks, which had established themselves freely in all the provinces, so keen that they were obliged to sell.

There is one thing that may be said of the branch bank system which perhaps may be regarded as somewhat in the way of criticism: It makes it difficult for the small local bank to succeed. As the Minister of Finance has pointed out, however, we know very well that the small bank with local directors unfortunately succumbs to local influences, and too soon its resources are held by a few borrowers in the locality. And that is the difficulty. Under good management this might be avoided; but unfortunately our experience in the past only confirms this opinion.

Now, in these days, is $500,000 too much capital to require of a bank starting in business? It is no more than the equivalent of $200,000 or $250,000 ten years ago. A bank with just that volume of assets could not engage in a very heavy banking business even in a small locality. There might be considerable to say for the reduction of this minimum of $500,000; but the question arises, at what sum will you fix the minimum? Furthermore, is it wise to take the responsibility in view of the history of banking in Canada, and our experience in the past?

Again, there is the difficulty of obtaining good bank managers in Canada to-day. The present banks complain—they complained before the committee on Banking and Commerce—of this very matter. Further, I would point out that the small local bank will not receive deposits against the stronger banks doing business throughout Canada, and that is another consideration.

Mr. MILLAR: Would the hon. member admit that the experience of the Weyburn Securities Bank is an exception?—it has succeeded against the larger banks.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am very glad to say that it is an exception. It is a small bank with seventeen branches.

Mr. STEVENS: It is operating under this act.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes, it had the minimum capital of $500,000.

Mr. MILLAR: It is a small bank.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes, and I am glad to see that it is developing and becoming stronger. I only wish there were a great number of such institutions in the West. But there is this to be remembered in connection with the Weyburn Securities, it is a bank the shares of which are held by just two or three people, and I am informed that frequently they have had to come to the assistance of the bank. Then, the general manager has had an experience which peculiarly fits him for operating in the particular territory in which that bank conducts its business. That bank has great difficulty in earning dividends, and it is very important for a bank to earn dividends. Some hon. gentlemen across the way last night deplored the fact that in these days banks were paying dividends. As soon as a bank ceases to pay dividends, it ceases to do a banking business. You cannot compare a bank with an ordinary commercial business. Ordinary commercial corporations may suspend indefinitely the payment of dividends; but as soon as a bank fails to earn its dividends, its shareholders require the liquidation of the company in order to avoid the double liability; depositors will leave them, and for these and other reasons it is very important that banks earn dividends. I am glad, however, to express the hope that the Weyburn Securities Bank will continue to do business in the West. It would be very desirable if it could be brought about that other banks of that size could be established in that area.

The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) suggested that possibly with a discount system in Canada, local banks might have an easier course to travel. There may be something in that, and probably the day will come when we shall have a rediscount bank in Canada. Then the establishment of local banks will perhaps, become a practical question. But there will always be this difficulty, that the small local bank will not be likely to have the kind of security which will be acceptable to rediscount banks; the better classes of securities will go to the stronger banks. I am not saying that in an absolute or dogmatic fashion. I might be wrong in that respect; but I think when we have functioning in this country an organized rediscount banking system, it is just possible that local banks may successfully venture into the local banking business. The whole question is whether, in these days particularly when capital is timid, is it worth while to authorize the inauguration of banking business by banking companies with a smaller capital than $500,000. Personally, I do not believe that within the next five or ten years you could get capital to engage in a purely local banking business anyway, except, perhaps, under exceptional circumstances such as prevailed when the gentlemen came over from the United States and started the Weyburn Securities.

Mr. IRVINE: There is a good deal of force in the argument which the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has just put forward, as well as in that of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). I think the committee will realize and agree that in the past there has been a decided tendency towards mergers. I do not think any legislation that we can make will successfully combat that, because it seems to me a natural response to conditions generally. I agree also 4 p.m. that the present branch bank system has been peculiarly fitted to the conditions of a new country, and it is doing a very great service. I see also the force of the argument of the Minister of Finance that a small bank would, perhaps, have a great deal more difficulty in maintaining itself against the competition of larger institutions. But, at the same time, I do not think it is entirely wise for us to shut out small banks from making the attempt. In view of all these things, it is not likely that many will make the attempt —I think that is true. And so I would like to ask the Minister of Finance this question. In his opinion, what possible harm could come by reducing the amount required to start a bank, say, to $250,000? If no serious harm could be foreseen, would the minister entertain the idea of reducing the initial amount of capital stock?

Mr. FIELDING: I would not think it was wise to induce people to put their money into a small bank. I think any money that is put into a small bank is not wisely invested, for the chances are that it will not be a successful institution. I think the amount of $500,000 is not an excessive sum. May I say with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) that I deplore, as he does, the fact that so many of our Nova Scotia banks have moved their headquarters to Montreal or Toronto? But I do not see how that can be prevented. I do not see anything in the Bank Act which created that situation, and I do not know of any provision in the Bank Act which could prevent it. It is one of the results of what I might call evolution under confederation. Many institutions which were prosperous in the Maritime provinces in the days before confederation are complaining to-day. I do not want to discuss the question of confederation; I simply state a fact. I remember when there were twenty wholesale houses in Halifax all doing a prosperous business; to-day there is hardly one of them left. They have all been driven out by Montreal. As regards the banks which we had in Nova Scotia, the shareholders who built up the banks in that province found it convenient to sell their stock to other people. I have never found any complaint coming from the Maritime provinces as to this particular part of the act. There have been suggestions from other parts of the country that they would establish banks if they had the opportunity; but I never had any complaint from the lower provinces. And if they had an opportunity, I do not think any banks would be established in the lower provinces with a capital of less than $500,000, because their knowledge and experience of banking would satisfy them that the smaller institution could not have a fair chance in the competition for business.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to say just one word in reply to a point raised by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), that is about the Northern Crown Bank being amalgamated with another bank. I do not remember the particulars, but I understand this was a profitable venture for the people who founded that bank and afterwards found it wise to amalgamate. I suppose the same thing would apply to the Bank of Ottawa, and if I mistake not, the same thing would apply to the Bank of British North America.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think it was a profitable sale for the Northern Crown because they had lost a great deal of their capital, and they had to furnish additional capital. The amalgamation was made after they found they could not succeed. It seems to me the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Hudson) had something to do with that bank, and he might inform us upon that point.

Mr. HUDSON: I do not recollect the particulars altogether; but in a general way the shareholders of the Northern Crown, when they transferred their stock, as they did under the amalgamation agreement, got out just about what they put in. I think some of them may have lost a little in the way of premiums which they paid on their stock, but they certainly got out as much as they put in, apart from any question of premiums.

Mr. COOTE: Just a word, Mr. Chairman, in regard to how this capitalization should be fixed. A lot of communities in Canada might be able to start a bank to take care of their local needs. Possibly none would want to do so, but I do not think we should by this act forbid any community from embarking on such an undertaking. It seems to me less money has been lost in bank stocks in Canada in proportion to the total investment than in any other line. Possibly one of these small banks would fail once in a while, but I do not think such a failure would entail nearly as much hardship as the failure of one of our large banks. I do not think it is right for this committee to arbitrarily fix an amount of half a million dollars as the capital which must be subscribed. If any set of people want to invest their money in a bank with a smaller capitalization, I do not see why we should take it upon ourselves to prevent their doing so.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I cannot recall the particular section, but is it not a fact that a bank can start business with a paid up capital of $250,000?

Mr. FIELDING: That is section 13.

Mr. COOTE: Yes, but if I remember rightly the subscribed capital must be half a million dollars.

Mr. FIELDING: There must be subscribers for half a million dollars, and they are liable to be called upon, but the bank can start in business on $250,000. Surely that is low enough. It is hardly fair to speak of half a million dollars being necessary.

Mr. COOTE: I trust the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) does not forget that there is a double liability clause attached to the stock.

Mr. FIELDING: That would be so in a small bank too.

Mr. COOTE: Certainly, and if a smaller amount were fixed it would be that much easier to start the bank. I think the minister is a little too determined to prevent people starting a bank if they want to. That is the point in my mind. I think he is taking a wrong view. He might think that even a quarter of a million dollars is not a very large amount, but, as I said before, it might be really more than was necessary for a bank to function in some particular locality.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): In regard to small banks, down in our province there is such competition for business among the chartered banks that as soon as it is thought the conditions warrant a branch is established in any village. I could cite cases where branches were established by the larger institutions for the benefit of the locality and the business offered was not sufficient to meet expenses, but the banks were willing to lose money in order to cater to the needs of the people. Where the banks are willing to meet every reasonable demand of the borrower, and also to take care of the deposits entrusted to them, I cannot see that any great advantage would be gained by the establishment of small, local banks, as there would be a greater risk to the depositors and the borrower would not get any cheaper money.

Mr. SPENCER: Criticism has been made in regard to the smaller banks because the managers and directors often get to know their clientele too well. I am afraid that this criticism does not apply to the present system of branch banks. I know of one locality where there have been six managers of the branch bank in the last ten years. It will be readily understood that under these circumstances, and with the directors residing about three thousand miles away, the bank has very little in common indeed with the localities where their branches are established. A few weeks ago we passed a Combines, Monopolies, Trusts and Mergers Act. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if we prevent competition by forbidding the establishment of smaller banks we are encouraging such combinations among the banking fraternity. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) referred to a sudden changing of the system. But the change would be very gradual indeed and business would not be upset in the slightest degree. It is simply a case of asking for a fair field and no favour. The criticism has often been made that more branch banks are not established because there are not sufficient local deposits to warrant their establishment. I should like to see that criticism confirmed by figures showing what deposits are placed in the banks in the Maritime provinces, the prairie provinces and British Columbia. We do not seem to have those figures given to us very readily. I think probably they would disclose that vast deposits are placed in the banks in those parts of Canada.

There is one other argument, and I think it takes some answering. We have two countries side by side, the United States with an independent banking system, Canada with a branch bank system. Both countries have many things in common, including vast stretches of thinly populated country. One, however, has developed very fast indeed, the other has practically stood still. And, in the words of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good), the banking system in the United States has had less failure on a percentage basis than the much-vaunted system of branch banks in Canada.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—Who shall be directors.

Mr. GOOD: I beg to move that this section be amended by inserting after the word "election" in the second line the words, "but not less than a majority of the votes cast."

Mr. FIELDING: Would the hon. gentleman explain that?

Mr. GOOD: This House some months ago endorsed the proposition that members of the House be elected by a majority vote, and I think it is customary for the directors of any concern also to be elected by a majority vote. I simply ask by the amendment that what is generally recognized as good practice should be incorporated in this clause. I do not know whether or not there is any particular need for it, but the clause as it is leaves it quite open for the directors to be elected by minority votes. I do not think any possible harm can come from requiring the shareholders of a bank to see to it that they elect their directors by a majority.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A fair and equitable principle is involved in the proposal of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good), and I think it should meet with the approval of the committee and of the minister. No harm can be done by it; much good might result from it.

Mr. FIELDING: I have never heard of any trouble arising under this clause, and I do not think we need look round for any.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

Mr. GOOD: I think we ought to have a better reason than that.

Amendment (Mr. Good) negatived; Yeas, 23; Nays, 38.

Section agreed to.

On section 30—Appointment of officers, etc.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like to move that section 30 be amended by adding thereto, as subsection 4, the following:

4. Such officers, clerks and servants shall have and be deemed to have the right of association for all lawful purposes.

Under the Treaty of Versailles all employed persons are guaranteed the right to organize. Canada and this government are definitely committed to the principle of that clause of the treaty. The phraseology here is, I may say, taken direct from the treaty. In connection with a great many other institutions and organizations the right of employees to organize is specially recognized, and it seems to me it should be in this connection. We are here providing for various things—that the directors may appoint these officers and employees, may require of them certain bonds, and so on, and it is reasonable that the employees should be definitely guaranteed their natural rights. In this act we are giving special privileges to certain corporations. We are definitely recognizing the Bankers' Association, which is, of course, an association of employers. We are recognizing professional associations such as that of the accountants. There seems to be no reason whatever why we should not recognize that the employees should have the right to organize. At the present time the employees of the bank are absolutely at the mercy of their employers. If they should wish at any time to ask for an increase in their wages or a betterment of their condition their case is almost hopeless. I know that theoretically they may organize, but whenever that has been attempted it has been frowned down upon by the bankers, and the men who have attempted to effect the organization have been thrown out of their positions or transferred to other positions or prevented from receiving promotion. This is what actually takes place. I have had various representations made to me from bank men both in the West and in the East in regard to this matter.

Take the question of wages. I am informed that in some of the leading banks a great many of the clerks are receiving, to start with, some $350 a year. Sometimes that is supplemented by living quarters, and in other cases it is not. I am informed that in a great many cases the wages of bank employees amount to only $500, $600, or $700 a year. I received a rather pathetic communication the other day, since introducing this matter, from a young man who stated his position. He is an employee in a bank, married, with children, and is receiving only some $1,500 a year and finds it very, very difficult indeed to manage on that.

Take, again, the question of marriage, and the conditions under which the bank clerks must live. We have the banks stipulating that a bank clerk may not marry until he has such-and-such a salary. That works out in practice, I am given to understand, that certain employees who have special friends among the bankers are able to obtain this privilege, while others are not able to do so. It seems as if any employer is going a very long way indeed when he undertakes to dictate to his employee what his social condition shall be, whether or not he shall have the right to exercise legitimately the normal functions of manhood. These things are vital, and these conditions are very difficult to improve or alter unless you allow the employees the primary rights of freedom of speech and of association. I cannot see any good argument against such a clause being inserted. This was proposed in the Banking committee, and I am glad to know that the Finance Minister is favourable to its incorporation. I feel quite confident that a great many members of the House, irrespective of party, will feel in favour of definitely ensuring to the bank clerks that which all other people are supposed to enjoy.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 23; Nays, 42.

Section agreed to.

On section 32—One vote for each share.

Mr. GOOD: Before this clause carries, I would like to have an expression of opinion from the Minister of Finance as to the propriety of returning to a system of voting which, I understand, was in vogue in the banks some years ago, that is that there should be a limitation upon the principle of one share one vote. I think it is generally recognized among all co-operative organizations that the principle of one man one vote ought to prevail. The principle that is adopted in most joint stock companies is one share one vote. I have been informed that some years ago some of the Canadian banks voluntarily adopted a sort of compromise between the two principles so that some recognition would be given to manhood whether or not it was accompanied by dollars. I would like to have an expression of opinion from the Minister of Finance on this question.

Mr. FIELDING: Whatever might be said in favour of the principle of one man one vote in the political sense, I think when it comes to money matters the old phrase "money talks" has to be recognized. I do not think it is reasonable to say that the man who owns only one share in a bank should have the same say as the man who has two. I think that is too chimerical.

Mr. GOOD: I think my hon. friend has misunderstood me. I did not suggest that we should adopt the principle of one man one vote, but if a man had one hundred shares say, he should not be allowed voting power beyond that amount. There should be some limitation upon his voting power.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think that can be done.

Section agreed to.

On section 54—Statement to be laid before annual meeting; liabilities; assets; other particulars; profit and loss account, etc.

Mr. SPENCER: I notice that in the draft of the original bill the minister had two paragraphs, one called "appropriation account" and the other "contingent reserves, including undistributed profits." Would the minister explain why these two clauses were withdrawn?

Mr. FIELDING: After the bill was introduced we had many criticisms from all quarters. Whenever any suggestion was made that seemed to be reasonable I was very happy to concur in it. The suggestions made in regard to these paragraphs seemed to me to be reasonable. We discussed the matter in committee and the committee agreed to the changes as herein made.

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the minister if "from all quarters" included anybody but the Bankers' Association themselves?

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, yes. I had letters and suggestions from various members of parliament, from outside citizens, suggestions came to me in a variety of ways. I think even the public press undertook to give me some advice in the matter.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister be good enough to tell us why these amendments were put in the draft bill as first brought down? Was there not some good reason for having them inserted there?

Mr. FIELDING: It seemed to me at that time, in the best light we had, that the way there proposed was the best way to deal with them. Better light came to us and we acted accordingly.

Mr. COOTE: I was just wondering if the minister would tell us where the light came from?

Mr. FIELDING: I get light from various sources, occasionally from my hon. friends, and I am very glad to avail myself of it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It seems to me there should be a provision requiring an accurate statement to be made with regard to the value of bank premises. There is no such requirement in this clause. I should like to call attention to the evidence given by Sir Edmund Walker before the committee on Banking and Commerce.

He was asked:

Q. Are the figures that are given in the returns made to the Minister of Finance, showing the value of the bank premises, exactly correct and complete?

He replied:

A. We tell our shareholders almost every year that our bank premises are entered at half their value, we tell them that our bank premises are worth twice as much as they are stated at in our statement—in the first place, they are $7,236,000, in the last statement, those are the premises that the bank owns directly, the bank owns premises through a realty company as well—that is about half of the value of those particular premises.

Q. That is the value of the premises held by the Bank of Commerce is some 15 millions?

A. About 14 or 15 million.

Q. What was the purpose of holding bank premises in the name of a holding company?

A. We had to replace the landlord that I spoke of as existing throughout Ontario, but did not exist in the West. We created a realty company, and as we built our buildings we provided out of our currency profits for half the cost of the building, and took that in stock in the realty company, and wrote that stock off. This realty company mortgaged the premises of the bank for the other 50 per cent, and the bank rented offices from the realty company at a rental which in 20 years would amortize the last of the debt.

Q. What would be the value of the holdings of your subsidiary realty company?

A. 8 or 10 millions. I think 10 millions.

The CHAIRMAN: I would call the hon. member's attention to section 147b which provides for neglecting to make a return for the value of property. This seems to be a provision of the kind the hon. member has referred to.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): And section 79 which calls for a return to the minister in regard to the value of real and immovable property.

The CHAIRMAN: There is section 147b and section 79. In the former a penalty is provided for neglecting to comply with the terms of the section.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In paragraph (r) of the clause we are now considering the statement of assets is required to show:

"bank premises, at not more than cost, less amounts (if any) written off."

It seems to me that, in some way, a fair valuation of the bank premises should be definitely required in this statement. If the statement is worth anything it should show the exact value both of the real estate held directly and that held through any holding company.

Mr. FIELDING: Paragraph (r) provides for a return of the bank premises.

The CHAIRMAN: That is the one under discussion now.

Mr. GOOD: It seems to me this matter is one of very great importance. There was a good deal of discussion about it in the committee on Banking and Commerce and I understand the Minister of Finance took the position then that so long as the real estate assets were not over valued no harm was done. I should like to dissent from that view. The banks are essentially public service corporations, and if the value of their real estate assets are written down, it is possible to conceal a very large amount of profits in those assets.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There is this exception: Under section 79 the bank must every year make a return to the minister showing the fair market value of its real estate and property.

Mr. GOOD: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the hon. member called my attention to that. There is that provision, but I think the House should also make provision for return in another place. Why should we not provide in the item in the clause we are now discussing that there should be a statement of the fair market value of the assets, and not have the banks possibly writing them down to a very small fraction of the real value?

I might call the attention of the committee to the other paragraphs, (m) and (n), which were withdrawn by the minister during the course of the consideration of the bill in committee. They are now hidden under a new (m) and (n)—"other current loans and discounts in Canada, after making full provision for all bad and doubtful debts," and "other current loans and discounts elsewhere than in Canada, after making full provision for all bad and doubtful debts." The point is whether or not the banks should be permitted to conceal the amounts which they have appropriated for bad and doubtful debts. I want to place myself on record as being somewhat doubtful of the decision which the committee reached in that respect, and of the propriety of following the suggestion made by the Minister of Finance in the first place that these appropriations should be disclosed in the statements.

Mr. COOTE: It would be only fair to the shareholders to have the bank premises shown in the annual statement at their fair market value rather than as it is shown at present. This statement as it is made out now is misleading. I think the shareholders are entitled to know how much of the bank's money, capital or accumulated profits, has been put into bank premises. I have here a statement issued by Dickinson & Walbank, of Montreal, in regard to the merger of the Merchants Bank with the Bank of Montreal, in which the following statement appears:

It is evident from the government reports and statements made at the meeting in February, that the entire capital of the Merchants Bank was in premises of the bank. In that case, the shareholders' equity, as shown above at $12,826,189 and $12,041,761, in December and January respectively, has against it a bonded liability on bank premises account, approximating $5,000,000 which must consequently be deducted, thus bringing the total book-value down to $7,041,761 or $67 per share, at the end of January.

In the bank returns of February 28 I observed that one bank with a paid-up capital of $15,000,000 gave its bank premises as being valued at $7,000,000, and the general manager of the bank, I believe, made the statement that the value shown is only 50 per cent of the cost of the premises. A lot of the profits or of the capital of the bank has been invested in bank premises and it is not shown in their annual statement, as it ought to be. This is misleading, and the Minister of Finance should amend paragraph (r) so as to show bank premises at their actual value or their fair market value.

Section agreed to.

On section 56—Shareholders' audit.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have an amendment to offer. I move that section 56 be amended by adding thereto the following subsections:

(17) The Governor in Council shall appoint a competent person who shall be an officer of the government with the title of Government Auditor, whose duty shall be to examine all reports of auditors made under this act and require all such auditors to report to him upon the adequacy of the procedure adopted by the bank for the safety of its creditors and shareholders, and as to the sufficiency of their own procedure in auditing the affairs of the bank, and he may enlarge or extend the scope of the audit, or direct that any other or particular examination be made or procedure established in any particular case, as the public interest may seem to require.

(18) The Government Auditor shall have all the powers of inquiry with respect to the duties to be performed by him conferred upon commissioners appointed under the Inquiries Act.

(19) The Government Auditor shall annually make report in writing to the minister of all examinations and inquiries made by and directed to be made by him and his finding and recommendations in respect thereto, and such report shall be laid before parliament within twenty-one days from the commencement of each session thereof.

After the near-failure of the Merchants Bank there was a very general request by the public as voiced through nearly all our newspapers, that there should be some more definite government audit or inspection. The amendment submitted does not look to the appointment of auditors who will go over the entire work of all the banks. That would seem to me to be quite unnecessary, and of course it would involve an enormous expenditure. That is not contemplated at all. It is proposed, though, that some one should be expressly charged with the responsibility of supervising the various bank audits and of seeing that they are standardized and are sufficiently wide in scope to cover all requirements and to bring to the notice of the minister, and subsequently of parliament, all the essential facts in the case. It has been objected by the bankers that the government is not in a position to audit the accounts of the banks, because it is not able to command the services of any one sufficiently competent for the purpose. I cannot see the validity of that objection, for the government of the country, charged with the responsibility of safeguarding the interests of the public and of the bank shareholders, should undoubtedly be able to secure the services of competent men. Further than that, it has been objected that if the government undertook such an inspection it would assume a certain responsibility. Well, that is precisely the reason why such an inspection should be made. The government cannot avoid a very considerable measure of responsibility with regard to the banks. Under this bill which we are passing the banks are given special privileges. They have almost a monopoly of the credit system of the country and, besides, they enjoy the very valuable franchise of issuing currency. Under these conditions the public have a vital interest in all that transpires in the banks.

Mr. VIEN: How can the hon. member say the banks have a monopoly when any group of persons with $500,000 can organize a bank?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If another group entered, the number of such organizations would be increased from seventeen to eighteen, and those eighteen groups would still have that monopoly.

Mr. VIEN: And why not fifty or sixty groups? There is no monopoly when it is open to any other group to come in. There is no restriction to the number of banks that may be organized.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since the hon. member raises this question I may point out that as a matter of fact, within the last few years, instead of banks multiplying they have been reduced in number from thirty-four to seventeen; and that is a sufficient indication of the likelihood of other groups breaking into the ring. I repeat, there is virtually a monopoly on the part of the banks of giving credits to the people, and there is the further valuable franchise of the issuance of currency. Under these circumstances the government cannot escape its responsibility, and it would seem that the best way of meeting the situation would be to appoint some one definitely who shall be given the responsibility of supervising the auditors. I fancy if this were done and if there was any weakness in any bank, it would be brought to the attention of the minister in time to save the situation.

One other objection that I have heard alleged against this amendment, is that the business of a bank is private in character. Surely, sufficient evidence was produced in the Banking committee and on the floor of this House last night to show that essentially the banks of to-day are in the nature of public utility corporations. Their concerns are not entirely private. With the special privileges they are granted, with the franchises and charters they are given, they can no longer be considered as carrying on a private business. The public is interested to a great extent; a section of the public as shareholders, another and larger section of the public as depositors, another and still larger section of the public as borrowers—those who technically make deposits and are given checking privileges;—these large sections of the public are tremendously interested in what is taking place. For these reasons, it is highly desirable that we should have an officer charged with keeping in close touch with the affairs of the bank, who would bring this information to the minister and to parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: We had a very full discussion of this matter before the committee. The clauses which we have already passed or which we are about to pass give adequate powers and protection to the public in the matter of audit, and I do not think it is wise to ask us to go any further.

Mr. GOOD: When this matter was under consideration in the committee, Mr. Edwards gave us some information about associations of auditors who met together from time to time to discuss methods, to standardize methods, and to confer over their work. He gave it as his opinion—and I think his opinion is certainly worth while noting—that this collaboration and conferring amongst auditors was very useful for them. It occurs to me that if a government auditor were appointed, as has been suggested in this amendment, he could very well function as a sort of presiding officer over those bank auditors who had been selected by the various banks to audit their affairs, and that in that capacity, as president or chairman, he would not in any way dominate the auditors, but he would bring them together to confer over their methods and he would also, in his position of government auditor, be able to examine their methods and to report upon them regularly to the minister. In that respect too, he should be able to convey information to the department of any incipient difficulties that might be discovered in the banks' affairs.

There seem to me to be two advantages in this proposal, one the advantage of regularly reporting to the minister and to parliament, and the other, that of regular conferences—"get-togethers"—amongst the auditors. The latter advantage would, I think, very largely ensure better auditing methods, so that what has happened in the past to the Merchants Bank, as far as we have been permitted to get information on that affair, would be less likely to occur. The auditors who confer together amongst themselves and discuss their work are in a much better position to do good work than those who work in an isolated fashion. I think the suggestion is well worth considering. It would be comparatively inexpensive, and it is well worth while. I want, in conclusion, to call the attention of the committee to what the minister said in defence of turning down this proposal in the select standing committee. It has reference to the next clause 56A where it is provided that:

> The minister may direct and require any auditor appointed under the next proceeding section of this act, or any other auditor whom he may select, to examine and inquire specially into any of the affairs or business of the bank, and the auditor so appointed or selected, as the case may be, shall, at the conclusion of his examination and inquiry, report fully to the minister the results thereof.

I should like to submit to the committee and to the minister that this is very inadequate, because the minister will not order a special inquiry until he receives some information of a serious or threatening character. He will not be on his guard unless he is receiving the information regularly. The door will be shut after the horse is stolen, and the expense will have to be incurred when it is too late to correct the difficulties and mistakes. By providing for a government auditor, one who may function as president of the bank auditors at regular conferences, you are going not only to get better service on the part of the auditors but also to ensure that regularly, once in every six months or once a year, the department shall be in receipt of a report from this government auditor upon the auditing methods. It seems to me very obvious that this is a wise provision. As I said, it is not an expensive provision at all; it probably would cost very little more than the special inquiries which the minister is empowered to make at any time.

Mr. IRVINE: Before this innocent amendment moved by the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) is finally slaughtered, I should like to say a word or two about it. It asks for government inspection of banks. The only thing that I do not like about it is that it asks the government to do anything. I am not very much enamoured of any proposal that places more responsibility upon government. I am in favour of government being asked to do just as little as possible: for two reasons. First, you are likely to get little from a government; second, no organized body is less capable of carrying things out in a practical way—I am not referring to the present government, I am speaking of all governments. However, this is one of the capacities in which the government might be able to act, namely, that of a policeman to walk up and down the country and club people when they violate a certain law. That is about all that is involved in this clause which is sought to be amended by my hon. friend. This has been the practice ever since governments were organized. I am in favour of the amendment. As to the right of the government to do this, there can be no question at all. As the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) said, this is one of the powers which the government, as the representative of the people, must exercise in its supervision of our banking system. Therefore, the government having the right to inspect the institution to see that it is doing what it was intended by the law to do, and being, as I believe, eminently fitted to act in the capacity of a policeman, I am in favour of this amendment.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Chairman, I think the proposal contained in the amendment cannot be as lightly dismissed as perhaps the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) would suggest. It seems to me that in the existing regulations of the Bank Act the government recognizes its responsibility in this matter by the minister being empowered, when he sees fit, to employ an auditor to investigate any bank. This amendment does not ask for a full-fledged system of government inspection, but for the appointment of a particular individual whose duty will be to do continuously what otherwise the minister under the statute can do from time to time—in the past always too late; a government auditor whose duty it is to examine the reports as they come in, as only an auditor can examine them, to ascertain any discrepancies there may be between these and former statements, to keep, as it were, a watch on the bank's affairs from time to time through the medium of its statements and otherwise from information he can obtain under the powers committed to him by the proposed section—he is an eminently desirable official. In other words, you would have a watchdog on guard all the time comparing these various financial statements, dissecting them, calling for further statements if necessary, and so relieving the minister of that burden and perhaps, in some cases, ascertaining unfortunate circumstances before any harm was done. For instance, the Merchants Bank, of which we have heard so much, issued statements from month to month, all of which were false and fraudulent. That situation existed for a period of at least six or seven months. But how can you expect any employees in the Finance department to scientifically dissect a bank's financial statements and discover whether or not they contain any discrepancy, and whether or not any investigation should be made? It may be that a government auditor appointed in the manner suggested by the member for Centre Winnipeg would be able to disclose such a situation as existed in the Merchants Bank long before the failure took place, and the minister was called in as an undertaker to look after its affairs.

Mr. STEVENS: There would be a great deal of force in the proposal of the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg and in the arguments of those supporting his amendment if no amendment had been made to the provisions of the old act. But this clause which we have under consideration is almost new. There have been some vital amendments made in it, and I consider that clause 56 is perhaps the most important and significant in the whole act so far as it relates to the practice of banking in this country, and having particular reference to the Merchants Bank case. As a matter of fact, the changes now presented to the committee in this bill cover completely the discrepancies in the old act. Let me just cite one or two. Under the old act there was one auditor under the control of the banks, without any limitation. In this amended clause we have two independent auditors appointed with a very strict limitation, and in addition, in subsection 9 of clause 56 and also in clause 56A, we have the minister specifically empowered to do exactly what this amendment asks to have done. The only difference between the amendment of the hon. member and the two provisions to which I have referred is that his amendment calls for the setting up of an officer, while in these clauses the minister is empowered to do all that the hon. member asks to have done.

Now, what I wish to impress on the committee is this—and it has certainly been very forcibly impressed upon my own mind—that by adopting the amendment proposed by the hon. member there is a danger that you make the minister, or the government, responsible for the accuracy of the bank audit. I do not think we are prepared to go that far. But under the provisions as they now stand are contained all the powers that are in this proposed amendment, only the sign of approval of the minister upon the audit to the public is not given. This is a difference and a distinction which I think is to the advantage of the public. Besides, the auditors report to the directors, and a copy of their report is then sent to the shareholders. All of this is more or less new. So I consider, Mr. Chairman, that in the amendment made by the committee to the clause as it stands we have safeguarded the various points raised in this discussion.

Amendment (Mr. Woodsworth) negatived.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries I would refer the committee to subsection 9, where it says:

> The minister may from time to time require that the auditors of a bank shall report to him upon the adequacy of the procedure adopted by the bank for the safety of its creditors and shareholders, and as to the sufficiency of their own procedure in auditing the affairs of the bank; and the minister may at his discretion enlarge or extend the scope of the audit, or direct that any other or particular examination be made or procedure established in the particular case as the public interest may seem to require.

It will be noticed that the minister himself is here proposing procedure under which he will incur this moral responsibility which on most occasions he apparently desires to evade as far as possible. It does seem to me that if the minister is going to have the auditors inquire into the affairs of the bank the inquiry should be made regularly before the bank comes under suspicion. I would move that subsection 9 be amended by prefixing thereto the following words:

> The auditors shall report to the minister at least once in each year upon all loans exceeding five per cent of the paid up capital of the bank, and shall state specifically whether or not in their judgment such loans are adequately secured.

It does seem to me that if the shareholders' auditor would forward to the Minister of Finance a statement covering the loans exceeding five per cent of the paid up capital of the bank and state specifically whether or not in his opinion these loans are adequately secured, we shall have taken a step toward safeguarding the interests of the banks.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): How often would that be done?

Mr. COOTE: At least once a year.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What would be the good of it if it was not done daily or weekly?

Mr. COOTE: As a rule, loans run for more than six months before they become bad. I will not attempt to urge that it is possible to safeguard a bank from bad management. But in the case of the Merchants Bank I think it could be demonstrated, if we had any investigation, that some of these loans had been bad for four years but were allowed to run on as current loans. If the auditor in the case of the Merchants Bank had been required to make a return of this kind to the minister it is possible that some of these loans would have been looked into before they got into such bad shape. There are a good many people in Canada who believe that the governments are behind the banks and that their deposits are guaranteed. That belief was expressed to me by a very intelligent woman about a week ago. I would not say that that opinion is prevalent, but it is held by some. I do not see why the Finance Minister should try so hard to evade responsibility. I think the people would like him to assume some responsibility if it would in any way help to secure the position of the banks and in that way, of course, to secure the depositors.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member has stated that quite a few people feel that the government has something to do with the banks. Well, that opinion will grow if the view expressed by some members of this committee is repeated, here or outside; and that would be unfortunate. The banks have been referred to several times today as public institutions. In one sense that is quite correct, but if by that term is meant that the state have some interest in the assets of the bank or in its control, then I say it is not correct, and that it is an unfortunate term to employ. Now, what is a bank?

Mr. COOTE: Did I use the term that the hon. member has suggested? If I did, I do not remember doing so.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No, I was not complaining so much about any expression used by my hon. friend as about those used by some other members of the committee.

Mr. SHAW: Sir Edmund Walker in his evidence indicated clearly that a bank is a public service corporation. Is that not so?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I suppose it is a public service corporation, but I do not think it is one which must be controlled in all its operations by the state. Some hon. gentlemen seek to develop that idea, and I say it is not in the interests of the state or of good banking. The first thing we know some people will begin to think the state is the shareholder and the depositor. The shareholders own the capital; the business is done largely on the depositors' money. The shareholders are all free individuals; they may dispose of their stock at any time; the depositor may withdraw his deposits. So, provided that we set up every safeguard we can devise for the protection of the public in their relation to the banking corporation in all its activities, we have done about all we can. What good could be served by having a bank auditor make an annual statement to the Finance department setting forth a list of the loans equal to or exceeding five per cent of the capital stock of the bank? It would be of no value, because the condition of a borrower's loan with the bank changes in some cases every week or every month—at least every three months. Why not put the responsibility upon the directors and the manager? They are following the transactions of the bank daily; they are intimately acquainted with every detail of its operations. Now, a very important clause which forms part of this section is in the act for the first time.

It reads:

> It shall be the duty of the auditors to report individually or jointly as to them may seem fit to the general manager and to the directors in writing any transactions or conditions affecting the well-being of the bank which are not satisfactory to them, and which in their opinion require rectification—

And so on. I submit that no better safeguard than that could be devised; the shareholders' auditors are required to sumbit in writing to all the directors any information respecting any account the condition of which they think may affect the welfare of the banking institution. After all, it is only those who audit frequently and who become intimately associated with the bank's methods of business who can audit properly. So I think the clause which I have read affords more protection than the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). I further submit that it is not necessary, at least at the present time, to interject any government official into the auditing of the banks' affairs.

Mr. COOTE: Just a word in reply to the hon. member for Halifax. I would not like the committee to get the idea from what he has said that I was proposing in any way to interfere with what was proposed under subsection 10, providing for a report of the auditors to the directorate. I was simply trying to enlarge on that idea a little bit and am proposing that the return go to the minister. If the hon. member for Halifax were logical it does seem to me that he would object to subsection 9, as well as to my amendment, because under subsection 9 the minister is given power to have these auditors make a report and is assuming some responsibility in connection with the affairs of the bank. The reason, I think, that we attempt by legislation to exercise some control over the banks and their actions is because we give them very special privileges, and when we do that it seems quite proper that we should exercise some legislative control over them.

Amendment (Mr. Coote) negatived.

Section agreed to.

On section 60—Cash reserves in Dominion notes.

Mr. COOTE: I would like the Finance Minister to be good enough to explain the reason for requiring the bank to hold in Dominion notes not less than forty per cent of the cash reserves which it has in Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: That is a very old provision in the Bank Act. It really amounts to a loan which the banks make to the government; that is really the effect of it.

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whether I am asking the minister for something which he is not prepared to give. I asked him if he could give us the reason why it is there. Perhaps that is asking too much.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not old enough to remember.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I then press the question and ask the minister if he is not old enough to remember why it was originally put there, can he tell us why it is there to-day?

Mr. FIELDING: It is one of the little things which we exact from the banks. The banks to that extent loan that amount of money. They have to get that amount of Dominion notes, which is equivalent to loaning the money to the Dominion government. I think my hon. friend is not anxious to give the banks greater privileges.

Section agreed to.

On section 61—Issue of notes.

Mr. COOTE: This deals with the privilege given to our banks of issuing notes. It seems to me we have come pretty near to the time in this country when the government should issue the notes on which we are to transact business. At the present time it is impossible for anybody to get any money in this country without going to the bank, and the bank can issue its own notes. I would like to point out to the Minister of Finance, and I think it may interest him, that in Australia all paper currency is issued by the Note Issue Department of the Commonwealth Bank, and the profits, which amounted in the year ending June 30, 1922, to $6,130,802, go into the federal treasury and help to reduce taxation. We have on the statute books at the present time the War Finance Act, which provides for the issuing of Dominion government notes and the furnishing of these notes to the banks against deposit of securities by the banks, and on that issue the Dominion government gets five per cent interest. Our Canadian banks have made considerable use of this privilege of securing money from the Finance department, and I do not see why that might not be gradually extended and the banks compelled to use a larger percentage of Dominion government notes to transact the business of this country, and at the same time curtail their own note issue. I think we are giving to the banks here a special privilege which is denied to any other person in this country, and I have never been able to see just how we were justified in doing that, particularly when we limit the amount of capital upon which a bank may be started to the amount of $500,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Just what would be the advantage to the country?

Mr. COOTE: The first advantage would be that the holder of a Dominion government note would know that the money it represented was as good as his country. A bank note, on the other hand, is of questionable value, or it might be. The next advantage would be that this country would secure an additional revenue of I think five or six million dollars a year if the banks were charged a rate of only three per cent. On what ground can the giving of this privilege to a bank be defended? In Australia the privilege of issuing notes has been retained by the government since the year 1910, and the banks in Australia seem to be able to function and to furnish the people with money at as low a rate of interest, and probably lower, than the banks charge in this country. I do not think that our banks are in any way making a return to us for this special privilege which they enjoy. I think some reason should be given, if there is any, why the banks should have this privilege of issuing notes. I might quote briefly from a pamphlet issued by Mr. Ward, of Winnipeg. He says:

> A bank note is simply a promise to pay. If you want to borrow money from the bank and draw the cash you hand the banker your note, which is your promise to pay, and in exchange he hands you his notes, which are also promises to pay. The chief difference between them is that you have to pay interest on your note, but he pays none on his.

Exactly how much profit the banks make on their note circulation cannot be determined, as their method of accounting does not show this, but according to the figures furnished by the Commonwealth Bank of Australia, that bank has made something over two per cent profit on its circulation.

Mr. SPENCER: Has the Minister of Finance ever given consideration to the idea of the government issuing all the notes of the country?

Mr. FIELDING: I have given no particular consideration to that theory. I think the present system is working very well, and while I give consideration, perhaps not as much as I should, to all these financial propositions, I cannot say that I have ever thought it would be at all a desirable thing to deprive the banks of this privilege.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I should like to refer to a point or two, although I do not profess to understand very thoroughly the advantages to the state in issuing its currency as against its being issued by a bank, as in this country, I think that originally the right of note issue was given to the bank for good reasons. In the early days in Canada it was desirable that bank branches should be opened in the interest of the development of the whole country. If a bank's capital had to be invested in bonds, as is required in the United States, and they had not the right of note issue, they could hardly open up agencies. And the capital was not in this country at that time to carry on business in any other way. There is no doubt in the world that the right of note issue is of some advantage to a bank. At the same time it is of some advantage to the country, because our Canadian banks could not otherwise have had anything like the present number of agencies that they have opened throughout Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Does the hon. member think we would be better off if there were fewer agencies opened?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is another question altogether; possibly we would. However, we can never settle that question here, and I do not know where it can be settled. Ten years ago many of the representatives of the people in parliament were complaining that there were not enough banking facilities in Canada. Strange to say, with the passage of the last decade the complaint now is that we have too many banking agencies or offices, and there is some truth in it. But I do say that in the past, and at the present time as well, it has been of some advantage to communities to have branch banking offices opened as we have them to-day, and I do not believe it would have been possible without giving to the banks their present right of note issue. I admit it is of some advantage to them. Now, my hon. friend says it would be of some advantage to the state to issue notes. At the present time the country issues the one-dollar bill, the two-dollar bill, and the four-dollar bill, and up to the extent of $50,000,000 without requiring it to be covered by gold. In addition to that, we issue the copper and silver coin. Well, that is some advantage to the state, because we must always have till money and pocket money in circulation, and redemption is never demanded for this currency issued by the government; it is always outstanding, it can be issued freely without any fear of a demand for redemption ever being made. Above an issue of $50,000,000 our Dominion Bank Note Act requires there be dollar for dollar in gold, so if we took from the banks, say, the right of note issue of the $5 bill, under the terms of the Dominion Bank Note Act as it stands, we would have to put up gold to the extent of dollar for dollar. That is, the treasury would have to go out and buy $5 worth of gold, and against that they would issue the note and sell it to the bank. There may be some profit in it, but I do not quite see where it lies.

Mr. SPENCER: It what way would they buy?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): They would buy the gold in the gold market of the world where you can buy bullion or coin.

Mr. COOTE: Does my hon. friend refer to the issue of notes under the Finance Act of 1914?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am referring to the Dominion Bank Note Act which requires that all notes issued by the government, outside of $50,000,000, must be covered by gold, dollar for dollar. Of course, that provision has been modified by the Finance Act of 1914.

Section agreed to.

Mr. COOTE: In regard to subsection 6, which provides that the circulation fund shall bear interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, it does seem to me rather an imposition to ask this country to pay interest on the circulation redemption fund. I would therefore move that subsection 6 be struck out. For this reason, Mr. Chairman: The banks are given the privilege of issuing notes to the amount of their paid-up capital. The privilege that they get there is surely worth the little bit of interest, they would lose on the money deposited with the government.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is a cheaper rate than the rate at which the government can borrow money from the banks.

Mr. COOTE: Yes, but the advantage to the banks of being able to issue their own notes will compensate for any loss they may sustain in this connection.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to support the amendment. We have given the banks sufficient privileges without adding this one to the number. The circulation fund might well rest with the government without paying any such interest to the banks.

Mr. IRVINE: I shall support the amendment and will not occupy time unnecessarily by speaking in its favour.

Amendment negatived.

Section agreed to.

On section 76—Business and powers of the Bank.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I move an amendment to paragraph (d) of subsection 2 of section 76 by inserting after the word "bank" in the third line of the paragraph the following words:

> Or any agent or other person acting on behalf of the aforementioned officers, managers, clerks or servants of the bank.

The intention is to safeguard as fully as possible the principle involved in the amendment which was carried by the committee. Owing possibly to an oversight in the committee and in the drafting of the original amendment, adequate provision does not seem to have been made for what I conceive to be a legal possibility of brokers or agents of the managers or clerks securing these loans. That is the reason for the amendment I offer, which in no way affects the section.

Mr. BAXTER: I would ask the hon. member this: If any one lends to the agent of a man does he not lend to the man himself? The amendment is only an addition of words that in my judgment are absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The words may not be absolutely necessary, but as they do not in any way alter the principle involved they can do no possible harm, while I think they may do some good.

Mr. PARENT: The hon. member might suggest the words "directly or indirectly." They would probably convey the same meaning, while they have the merit of brevity.

Mr. SHAW: That refers only to security.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think the words proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Garland) are needed. As the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Baxter) has pointed out, the section as it stands now would cover any application for a loan or any loan actually made.

Mr. BAXTER: Further, how is the bank to know in all cases that it is lending to an agent for a principal?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think this is only another example of the futility of trying to legislate against all possible evasions of an act, and such meticulous nicety can get you nowhere.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member, I think, is imagining futility before he has proof of it. I suggest that we allow the words to be inserted, because, as I have stated, they can do no harm and they may do some good. I am ready to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend (Mr. Parent), and I would propose the words "directly or indirectly" in substitution for what I have already submitted.

Mr. BAXTER: On the principle suggested by the hon. member there would be no reason why the Ten Commandments should not also be inserted: they can do no possible harm and they might conceivably do some good.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Would the words "directly or indirectly" be satisfactory to my hon. friend (Mr. Garland)?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, provided they are inserted in the proper place.

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Will the hon. member answer my question first? Is he satisfied with the words "directly or indirectly?"

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Well, they are there now.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Where?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): At the top of the subsection:

> Except as authorized by this act, the bank shall not, either directly or indirectly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, but they are not included in subsection (d).

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Oh, yes; you read them into subsection (d).

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member desire to drop his amendment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, Mr. Chairman, I might as well. I desire to move a further amendment to the subsection 3. The subsection now reads:

> 3. No agent or manager of any bank shall act as agent for any insurance company or for any person in the placing of insurance, nor shall any bank exercise pressure upon any borrower to place insurance for the security of such bank in any particular insurance agency, but nothing herein contained shall prevent such bank from requiring such insurance to be placed with an insurance company which it may approve.

I move to amend this by adding after the word "bank" in the third line the words, "nor any officer or employee of any bank." In the last line of the subsection I would have all the words deleted after the word "placed." The intention of the first insertion is obvious. The deletion of the last words I recommend to the committee because otherwise there would continue a practice that now prevails of discrimination against the mutual insurance companies; and we know only too well in western Canada that a grave injustice has been done to these companies in this regard. When you go into a bank to secure a loan, we admit, the bank is right in asking you to take out insurance upon your crop or upon whatever the loan may be given. But we do not admit the right of the bank to state in what company the loan insurance shall be placed. You are giving them that full right in this, to the detriment, I say, of the mutual insurance companies.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Supposing a bank was interested in an insurance policy to be placed by way of security against a loan, or insurance against loss of property pledged as security for a loan, surely the lending party, in this case the bank, would have the right of saying, for instance, that they would not allow that insurance to be placed in a company the solvency of which was very much doubted. That is the purport of this clause.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would not object to that idea in the least, but I say that this clause, as at present drafted and under the present practice of banks in western Canada, will react against the interest of the mutual insurance companies. We are very anxious to develop the mutual insurance companies, and this will work an injustice upon them.

Mr. GARDINER: I have had a little experience with this proposal as outlined by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). I remember some years ago when I was doing business with a bank, that if I went into the bank in the spring and asked for a loan, the manager of the bank would say to me: "Yes, I will give you a loan, but you must put hail insurance on your crop." The effect of that was that the manager acted as agent and he collected the commission. If you were not willing to put on hail insurance through the particular company that he was representing, the manager would invariably turn down your application for a loan, no matter in what financial circumstances you might be. I could give the committee many cases where—

Mr. STEVENS: This is exactly what the Banking committee wrestled with and corrected in this clause. If the hon. member will read the first part of the clause, he will see that it covers all this.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

Bill No. 221 (from the Senate), respecting The Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Hudson.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

House again in committee on Bill No. 83 respecting banks and banking, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 76, subsection 3. The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland).

Mr. FIELDING: I think it has been shown by the discussion, Mr. Chairman, that what the mover of the amendment is aiming at is already covered by the section as it stands.

Mr. GARDINER: When we rose at six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was discussing the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) and was attempting to point out certain restrictions that I believe should be imposed on branch bank managers acting as agents for insurance companies. I have some information in regard to this particular matter that I know to be correct. Some five or six years ago branch bank managers used to act as agents for hail insurance companies, and many farmers desiring to get loans had to place their hail insurance with the company represented by the bank manager before any accommodation was granted them. A year or two later the bank accountant took the place of the manager as insurance agent. Under these conditions we can well understand that it is not in the best interests of the banks themselves that this practice should continue, for I know of many farmers who because they placed their hail insurance as required by the bank's officials received loans which they were not entitled to, while other farmers, not desiring to place their hail insurance through the particular company represented by the manager or accountant of the bank, were refused the accommodation that they were justly entitled to. Therefore it is necessary to include in this particular section any employee of the bank, otherwise some employee will merely become agent for the manager, and I think this part of the amendment should be accepted.

With regard to the latter part of the amendment, to delete all the words, "with an insurance company which it may approve," I think this also should be accepted. We find that many managers of branch banks in the West discriminate against mutual insurance companies. We have some very fine mutual companies in western Canada, and the branch bank managers, usually being interested in one of the ordinary line companies, refuse to accept insurance in these mutual companies.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is it not a fair condition for anyone to require that an insurance policy shall not be carried in a mutual company? Many people do not desire that insurance in which they are interested shall be taken out in a mutual company. Surely it is not fair to force them to accept such insurance? There are many strong mutual companies, but on the other hand many of them are doubtful—some are not even that.

Mr. GARDINER: In reply to the hon. member, I would say that we have many sound mutual companies in western Canada. But whether they are sound or not makes no difference to the branch managers, they object to the insurance being placed through these companies. The municipal Hail Insurance Company of the province of Alberta is to all intents and purposes a mutual company, and it is one of the strongest hail insurance companies in the province. This organization is really composed of the rural municipalities in Alberta. It carries about 55 per cent of the hail insurance in that province, and the rates are much lower than those charged by the ordinary line companies. Its operations have been very successful. Moreover, this organization gives its insurance on time; the rate is not set until the losses are known in the fall. The rate is applied as a tax on the land, consequently the security is of the best. Our branch managers, of course, object very strongly to that class of insurance, notwithstanding the fact that it enables the farmer who cannot pay for insurance on his crop in the spring to get the insurance on time, and to get it at cost, the rate being considerably less than that at which the line companies can carry the risk. I therefore suggest that the amendment proposed by the member for Bow River should be accepted. It would be in the interests of the banks themselves, and I am satisfied that it would be in the interests of the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. LEWIS: I think the amendment should receive the support of the committee. I happen to be secretary-manager of a mutual hail insurance company in Saskatchewan. In fact, I, in company with a few others in Saskatchewan, was the first to start a mutual hail insurance company in that province. I believe there are two such companies in existence now. Some years ago the banks were quite willing to accept our insurance as collateral security, but during the past few years some bank managers or accountants have become agents for various other companies and have refused to accept our insurance; they will only lend money to the farmers to buy insurance in the companies they represent. To that extent it seems to me they are catering to the capitalistic companies and, in another respect, are endeavouring to destroy any mutual arrangement we may make among ourselves for our own protection. We need to encourage co-operation among the farmers, and this is but one instance of co-operation. I may give a little history in regard to our company: Where the line companies have a 6 per cent rate or an 8 per cent rate where there is a note, during the last six years the company I represent has paid every loss in full and has at no time charged a higher average rate than 3 per cent. In one year when we had a heavy loss we charged 4 per cent, but in other years we have charged as low as 1½ per cent. We have carried that insurance; we have paid all losses. It does seem to me that this clause gives the banks and their agents an opportunity to discriminate against mutual insurance. I feel sure that in this regard we should have the support of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell), who believes in co-operation. I trust that this amendment will pass, not simply because it comes from this side, but because it will give a fair deal to our mutual insurance societies in the West. I hope the committee will see to it that there is no discrimination against any mutual hail insurance company organized among the farmers for their own protection.

Mr. McBRIDE: I am fully in sympathy with this amendment. The mutual insurance companies out West are certainly doing good business, and they are making it possible for a great many people in the rural districts to carry insurance that otherwise could not afford to carry insurance. No one should be under an obligation to insure with the banks; in fact, it should be against the law for the banks to require that to be done. However, it was not on that point that I rose to say a few words. I think this government would be well advised to appoint a commission of, say, three persons to look after the bank interests and banking generally in this country. I would suggest that one member of the commission be appointed by the government, one by the banks themselves, and the third possibly by the prairie farmers. As it was brought out in the evidence before the Banking committee, that it is by them that credit is most needed, I think a commission of that kind could do good work. They might be empowered to prevent the duplication of banks in small villages and thus go a long way toward reducing the costs of the banking system. I know certain locations where there are three banks but not enough work for one. If the banks and branches were charged a license, such a commission as I suggest could exercise control by being able to cancel the license at any time when in their opinion there were too many banks, or to prevent a bank being started in a place where one was not needed. If it is possible in this way to reduce the expenses of the banks in the outlying districts, the banks would be given a chance to make loans at a lower rate. I am not moving an amendment to this effect, but I think it is something that ought to be considered by the government.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The purpose of the section as it now stands is to prevent any agent or manager of a bank from acting as an insurance agent; he is prohibited from collecting insurance. This is a new section. The principle involved is very doubtful, as was suggested by some hon. members in the committee. However, the committee decided to adopt the clause, and that, I presume, is satisfactory to hon. members here; at least, there is no objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What is implied in the word "agent"?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): A man who is carrying on or conducting a business at any place on behalf of a bank; a man who represents a bank as agent or manager. The latter part of the clause enables the bank to give its approval or disapproval of any insurance which has to be written and in which they are interested. Well, you cannot very well take that power from a bank. If I were lending money on real estate I would insist that the borrower insure the premises upon which the money was being lent. It is only fair to leave to the bank the right to insist that the insurance be placed in a solvent company. The mortgagor may want that insurance placed in a company which the public generally know to be insolvent or the solvency of which at least is doubtful. You cannot take that right away from a man, and it should not be taken away from a bank.

We have heard something about the mutual hail insurance companies in the West. I know nothing of them. Mutual insurance companies may be very strong to-day, but when they fail they are gone, they are no good, and they do frequently fail. I remember when I was a boy there were mutual marine insurance companies in the province of Nova Scotia. They were quite a common thing, but none are to be found to-day. So long as mutual insurance companies can pay their liabilities they are all right, but when they fail to do that, they are no good. They are not as good as the old line insurance companies as a rule, especially when those old line companies have built up a reserve. But what I say is that the first part of the section effects the intentions and desires of the special committee and apparently meets with the approval of this committee. The latter part of the clause leaves with the bank that is interested in any insurance that is to be placed the right of approving or disapproving of the company selected. Now can that right be fairly taken away from a bank? It cannot be taken away from the ordinary individual engaged in busniess, and if the principle is sound in the one case I think it is sound in the other. I think the committee should adhere to the section as it stands.

Mr. FIELDING: This is another case where under the guise of restricting the bank you are in effect restricting the borrower, because if the borrower is not prepared to meet the terms of the bank regarding insurance he will not get the loan. So by placing such a restriction the borrower may not get his loan at all. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River) If the Minister of Finance and the committee decline to accept the amendment I venture to assert here that the result will be that you will deal a disastrous blow to the mutual insurance companies of western Canada, possibly of all Canada, but certainly of western Canada. Our experience out there is that the banks will not if it is possible to avoid it, allow the insurance to be taken out in mutual insurance companies. When we tell you that is a fact, and that we are anxious to develop these mutual companies, that it is in the interests of agriculture and of Canada that we should develop them, are you going to help us or not? The matter is really up to this committee. I think it will be a fatal mistake if this amendment is not accepted.

Mr. FIELDING: There is no discrimination against mutual insurance companies or any other companies. There is simply a recognition of the right of the lender to require that the property shall be insured in a company satisfactory to him. If you do not satisfy him he will say: Very well, gentlemen, if you cannot meet me in that way I do not want to lend you the money. Under the guise of aiming at restricting the bank you are in effect going to restrict the borrower and prevent him from getting a loan when the bank is ready to give it to him.

Mr. FORKE: The argument of the minister sounds plausible but in actual practice it does not work out that way. My knowledge of loan companies and banks is that they generally do their insurance business with certain companies, and no matter what the rates are those are the companies they deal with. I would be inclined to support this amendment even at the risk of the borrower not being able to get the loan.

Mr. FIELDING: You are not the borrower

Mr. FORKE: I might be.

Mr. SPENCER: The Minister of Finance says that if the customer will not meet the banker's wishes in regard to taking out insurance with a certain company he may not get his loan. It would be just as well to point out here how very serious the situation is. The client, whoever he may be, has only seventeen institutions in the whole of Canada to go to for a loan. Those seventeen institutions have a monopoly of the business, and it is putting a tremendous weapon in their hands to allow them to dictate to a customer the company he shall insure with.

Mr. LEWIS: I might point out that these mutual insurance companies are operating under provincial charter recognized by the provincial government. They have the legal right to insure, and certain conditions have to be met before they can be organized into a mutual company. It seems to me they have a right to be on the same footing as the other insurance companies.

Mr. GOOD: The farmers in my district in Ontario are almost entirely insured in mutual farmers' companies so far as fire, wind and weather are concerned. We have no hail insurance in Ontario, but I can assure the Minister of Finance that so far as I know, it is the almost universal practice in Ontario for the farmers to insure with the mutual companies. It seems to me that the passage of this clause as it stands would leave very considerable powers in the hands of the chartered banks if they wished to use them amiss. If there were no connection between the directorates of banks and the directorates of the larger insurance companies the danger would not be so great, but as has been pointed out more than once there are interlocking directorates, and for this reason it is not improbable that there may be a general understanding that a certain bank will insist on the property being insured in the company in which it is interested, and in that way discriminate most unfairly against a company that may be absolutely sound. I do not know what would be lost by leaving the matter open and not stating specifically that the insurance shall be placed with an insurance company which the bank may approve If you leave that out, the other party to the transaction has an equal chance in the bargaining at all events. I would think it would be well worth doing.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 28; Nays, 46.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to make just one remark in regard to paragraph (f) of section 76. This is a new subsection which I think was brought in by the Minister of Finance as the result of an amendment which I had offered previously and which was left over from one meeting to another for some improvement. The amendment as originally proposed I think required the unanimous approval of all the directors present at a special meeting called for the particular purpose of approving of the loan. So far as I can see the amendment which is now incorporated in this bill is practically useless so far as achieving the effect that was sought, because now the loan may be approved at a regular meeting of the board and it is possible that not more than three members out of a large board may be present at this regular meeting. The other directors will have absolutely no notice of the meeting, will know, possibly, nothing of the loan and will be able to say, after the bank got into difficulty that they knew nothing about the matter. It seems to me that we have spoiled the whole effect of the amendment by omitting to require the notice which, in the amendment as originally proposed, was required to be given to all directors that this loan would be passed on at the meeting of the board. I should like to point that out to the Minister of Finance. I do not know whether the change in the clause was made at a meeting of the committee or not.

Mr. GOOD: When this matter was under consideration in the Banking and Commerce committee I submitted that some notice, at all events, of this particular business should go out to the directors before they could authorize the loan at the meeting called. As the clause now reads, you simply have to have a regular meeting or a special meeting, but there is nothing said about sending out notice to the directors that business of such and such a nature will be up for consideration at either meeting. I do not quite agree with the hon. member for McLeod, if I understood him rightly, in insisting that this business should be settled only at a special meeting, but I do think that the directors ought to be given notice of the particular kind of business to be transacted. If a notice of that character were sent out I should think the worst feature of the present amendment would be eliminated. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he would not consider making that slight change, and require that notice of the particular business to be transacted should be sent out?

Mr. FIELDING: The point was considered in committee, but I really do not think the suggested change is necessary. We are bound to assume with this clause in the law that the directors will understand their responsibility, and as a rule it will be found that the directors are not going to be so negligent of their duty in the future as they have been in the past. I really do not think, Mr. Chairman, that we can make this clause much more effective than it now is.

Mr. STEVENS: May I point out to the minister also that we have already passed a clause requiring the auditors to report to the directors where any loan exceeds one per cent of the paid-up capital of the bank.

Section agreed to.

On section 80—Mortgages and hypotheques of realty and agreement of sale.

Mr. KELLNER: In the Banking and Commerce committee I brought forward an amendment to the effect that a chattel mortgage should not apply to any goods which were exempted under provincial statute, and I think it was the sense of the committee that the exemptions proposed went a little too far; I believe they would have accepted the exemption simply of personal property. I changed the amendment to cover only personal property, but the chairman asked me to defer the amendment for the time being and it never came up again. I should like to move that amendment now.

That section 80 be amended by adding after the word "property" in the third line thereof the following:

"Provided however that no mortgage or hypotheque shall be taken, held or disposed of in respect to or be deemed to include any property which by any statutory provincial enactment is exempt from seizure under writs of execution."

I should like to make a little further explanation of that. The custom in the West has been—where a farmer, in particular, gives a mortgage on his farm stock and implements—in the avent of having to foreclose, to take all he possessed, and there have been some men who have had to leave their farms without any equipment whatever. I should think it would be in the interest of the country to leave them at least this small amount of stock in order to enable them to carry on. I do not think it is any material benefit to the bankers to have it, because I do not think they lend money on such a small amount of goods at all. In other words, in case this farmer made an application for a loan, and the banks were satisfied those goods were all he had I am quite satisfied he would not get a loan on them at the present time. I may say that I have consulted several men from the West in regard to this amendment and they have invariably supported the idea embodied therein. This amendment had favourable consideration in the committee on Banking and Commerce and, I think, is entitled to receive favourable consideration from this committee to-night.

Mr. LEWIS: I wish to say a few words in regard to a matter that was brought to my attention in the West some time ago. For example, a man received a very large loan from a bank and gave as security a great many farms that he happened to own. In consequence of not being able to pay this loan the bank took over and worked those farms themselves. They took everything the farms produced and then absolutely refused to pay the taxes. They had the farms, they had the produce which came from those farms, but they refused to pay the taxes. As a result the lands were sold for taxes at a tax sale, but the man who owned them had absolutely no chance to redeem them because the bank had taken absolutely everything those farms produced. I say the banks should not be allowed to enjoy this power. They should not be allowed to take a man's property and everything it produces and refuse to pay the taxes incurred.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How many farms did he own?

Mr. LEWIS: I understand he got a loan of $50,000 and gave in security farms representing a value of $150,000. The bank had ample security but nevertheless acted in the manner I have described.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: How much cash did this man pay to get these farms?

Mr. LEWIS: I understand the man owned the farms but he got a loan of $50,000 to carry on.

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: Then he gambled in farming?

Mr. LEWIS: Perhaps he did, but there are lots of hon. members opposite who gamble too.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think the hon. member for Swift Current has strengthened the case by the example which he brought out.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. FORKE: The man to whom he refers was a pretty large speculator when he went into the business on the scale he did, and I think the case is not going to have very much effect in influencing the committee. But I really have sympathy with the small farmer, the man who is farming on a small scale, who gets into difficulties and whose property is seized. I do not think it would work any great hardship to the banks if the small amount of personal property was exempted as asked for in the amendment.

Mr. VIEN: Does not my hon. friend think that would work against the borrower more than against the bank? The bank does not lend except on security, and if you exclude such security as the borrower is in a position to offer, and which may happen to be unattachable under the law, does not the hon. member think that the borrower's credit will be accordingly restricted?

Mr. FORKE: I was not a member of the committee on Banking and Commerce but I hazard the suggestion that this very objection has been raised a great many times. Of course, just as surely as you place a restriction on the scope of the bank's lending you limit to some little extent the possibility of the borrowers being able to secure loans. But in law and equity, and in legislating in the public interest, it is sometimes well for us to protect people even against themselves; and I really do not think that it would work any hardship whatever to provide that a few personal belongings of some man who is down and out should not be potential security against any loan he might wish to obtain. These few belongings would make no difference whatever to the bank; the bank would not consider them as security.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): We should no doubt all like to see transactions of the kind to which my hon. friend has referred dealt with in the fashion he suggests, but we must build our laws on a sound basis which will stand the test of reason. If we carelessly put into the statute enactments of one kind or another that are illogical and that have no sound basis, the inevitable result will be that our laws will become the laughing stock of the country. The case in point is that the bank loans money and takes a mortgage on movable personal property

The hon. member who proposes the amendment wishes to provide that when the debt becomes due the bank shall not be able to exercise its right under the mortgage; that is to say, it shall not foreclose on that part of the property of the borrower which is not subject to execution under judgment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I understand that to be the purport of the amendment. If I am wrong, then of course my remarks are irrelevant. That may be all right; but do not let us give the bank the power to loan money on the security of certain property and then say that it cannot exercise its right under that security. Let us go back to section 76 and incorporate a prohibition to the effect that loans shall not be made on the security of property which is not leviable under writ of execution.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All right; hear, hear.

Mr. SHAW: Would not the proposed amendment have exactly the same effect?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think my hon. friend appreciates the point I make.

Mr. VIEN: I think that the proposal which the chairman of the Banking committee (Mr. Maclean) has just suggested was fully discussed in committee and rejected for the simple reason that it did not in any way tend to injure the banks but would rather hurt the prospective borrower. In the province of Quebec there are certain personal effects which are declared unattachable under judgment. At first the courts decided that a tenant could not waive the unattachable privilege in respect of certain goods. But we found afterwards that tenants could not secure premises to rent because they had nothing to offer as a guarantee, and finally the system worked to the detriment of poor people who, wanting tenements were unable to secure them under this condition. I think the same thing applies to the proposed amendment. If you prevent a man from giving as security whatever he has, whether in the way of personal effects or otherwise, you restrict his borrowing power and thus impose a hardship upon him.

Mr. IRVINE: The hon. member might tell us what amount of property is exempted in his province, so that we might be able to gauge the extent to which the individual might be able to obtain credit if the proposed amendment were adopted.

Mr. BUREAU: The hon. member will have to consult the court procedure of the province of Quebec to find out what exemption is made in regard to bed and bedding, and so forth.

Mr. IRVINE: I was asking the other hon. member.

Mr. VIEN: The exemption amounts to $50 in the case of personal effects and $200 in professional tools or the instruments by which a man earns his living. But I do not see that the question has any bearing on the subject before the Chair.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I may be wrong, and if so hon. members opposite will correct me; but I think it came out in the committee that in the province of Alberta a quarter of a section of land in a larger block was not liable to seizure under execution; and that is a very strange provision of law which does not obtain anywhere else. The proposition is that if a man voluntarily gives, as additional security on a loan due the bank, a mortgage on a quarter of a section of land, he may say that the bank has no right to foreclose on that quarter section. That was the point that we had before the committee and it was objected to.

Mr. KELLNER: I remember that this was what defeated the amendment before the committee. But I would point out that I am leaving out the real property. Nothing is referred to except the horses or the oxen required to put in a crop, the seed necessary for the crop, the necessary clothing, furniture and household goods, food for the family during six months, to include grain and flour, harness, and two ploughs. I do not think that this amount of equipment would be of any great value to a bank, and I remember pointing out in detail to the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Vien) in committee that we were not restricting the credit which a man might get. If what I have enumerated were all the assets which a man had to give to a bank in western Canada for a loan to-day, I think I may safely assert that he could not get the loan of a postage stamp.

Mr. FIELDING: I suggest that we let the section stand. We shall return to it later.

Section stands.

On section 83—Property to be sold within certain time.

Mr. SHAW: Does the bank hold much property under this particular section for which further extensions are required as provided for in the act?

Mr. FIELDING: I could not answer my hon. friend offhand. If it is desired I can get the returns. This is not a very common thing. The banks take these properties as securities for loans and if the market is unfavourable, they ask for an extension of time. There is no object to be gained by asking a bank to sell property at a sacrifice. Such transactions occur so seldom that I cannot say much offhand about them, but I shall be glad to get the information at a later stage.

Mr. LEWIS: Is it the usual procedure, when we are passing a bill of this magnitude through committee, that you, Sir, simply name the clause and say "carried," or have we time to read the clause and look into the matter? I have been in this House for two sessions, and I have seen certain bills passed through, but the Chairman has read the clauses.

The CHAIRMAN: Does the hon. member say that the Chairman, as a rule, reads the clauses in committee of the whole?

Mr. LEWIS: I have heard them read.

The CHAIRMAN: That is not and never has been the practice.

Section agreed to.

On section 86—Warehouse receipts and bills of lading.

Mr. GOOD: Has the committee a right to ask the Chairman to read a clause?

The CHAIRMAN: If the committee decides by vote that the Chairman shall read the clauses he will do so. He is only bound to read the marginal notes.

Section agreed to.

On section 88, subsection 1—Loans to certain wholesale dealers.

Mr. KELLNER: What is the idea of having loans to wholesale dealers in subclause 1, then inserting subclause 2 in connection with loans to farmers upon grain, and then going back to the wholesaler in subclause 3?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Subclause 3 refers to the manufacturer, the man who converts the raw material into a manufactured article, and who desires a loan covering the period during which the manufactured process is going on.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 88, subsection 7—Same rights as upon warehouse receipts.

Mr. GOOD: I think, in the standing committee, there was a notice of motion for reconsideration in regard to part of subclause 7. I should like to know if the matter is to come up now or what is to be done with it?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The notice of motion for reconsideration was ruled out of order by the chairman of the committee at the time, and the amendment as passed by the committee was allowed to stand as it stands now.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wonder if the hon. gentleman would be willing to give us the assurance that this amendment of his will not die in the Senate.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Personally I wish that it should live. If I can do anything when it goes to the Senate, I will do so. If the Senate kills it, I am not responsible; I shall be no party to its being killed.

Mr. SHAW: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance or the chairman of the Banking committee if it is proposed that this should stand as it is found in the bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I would rather expedite the bill than have a debate on this matter. Therefore I am not going to oppose this subclause.

Mr. SHAW: Is the Minister of Finance satisfied with this subclause?

Mr. FIELDING: Not entirely. If I had been voting on it in the committee, I would have voted against it. I do not, however, think it is a matter of vital importance, and I am not going to move to strike it out. If anyone else wants to raise the question, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) is very curious about the matter. It was suggested to me that possibly the Banking committee of the Senate might have an opportunity of bringing further evidence upon this question. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that the amendment should be struck out, and if anybody wishes to move that now, I will support such a motion. I think we really ought to do that.

Mr. FIELDING: I think we can safely let the subclause stand and let it go to the Senate. If they can get further information on the question, that is a perfectly proper thing for them to do. This bill has been so well coopered up that there is not much for the Senate to do. Therefore, I think we might allow it to go to the Senate and give them an opportunity of doing some work on it.

Section agreed to.

On section 88, subsection 10—First lien upon seed grain and crop.

Mr. LEWIS: I am just wondering whether this is altogether in order, but it seems to me that if a person gets up on this side of the House he is immediately told that reason and logic are on the other side. As regards this subclause, I understand the bank does not have the first lien upon threshed grain. The man who threshes the grain has the first charge against it. He has the preferential and first lien upon the crop after it is severed from the ground and threshed. According to the law in Saskatchewan, the man who threshes the grain has the first charge against it, and then the bank's lien comes second.

9 p.m.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think the rights covered by this clause would prevail.

Mr. LEWIS: If they prevail, then no man will get his crop threshed. Supposing a man owns a crop and he wants another man to come and thresh it. Unless the man who is asked to thresh the grain is assured that he will have the first chance to get his pay, he will not thresh it. The man who threshes the grain has a claim before that of any bank.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I suppose for labour he would.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not think there is any change in this.

Mr. GOOD: Does that mean that the law has been and is being violated? This matter ought to be cleared up.

Mr. LEWIS: I think any of the western members even on the other side of the House will bear me out that the thresher's lien is the first lien.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Subclause 7 provides that the bank's lien shall prevail except as to wages, salaries or other remuneration unpaid for three months previously.

Mr. LEWIS: When we are speaking of reason and logic, there is only one first and preferential claim. There are not two first claims. If there is an anomaly in this subclause, we can easily remove it.

Mr. SPENCER: I have in my hand the result of a case that, I think, came up under this very subclause in Provost the other day. In regard to Haan vs. Bank of Montreal I have the following:

A very interesting case was decided at the sitting of the district court which was held in Provost last Thursday before His Honor Judge Lees. The case was at the suit of Lambert Haan against the Bank of Montreal.

Haan alleged that the Provost manager of the defendant bank had agreed to pay his thresh bill on some 1,400 bushels of wheat which the bank had received. The bank denied making the agreement and claimed that for various reasons Haan's threshing lien was invalid. The court, however, held both that the agreement had been made and that Haan's threshing lien was in order and gave Haan judgment against the bank for the amount of his claim and costs.

I think that covers the point completely, Mr. Chairman.

On section 88, subsection 12—Loan for live stock raising.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would call the attention of my hon. friend from East Edmonton (Mr. Kellner) to the fact that this subsection has something to do with the amendment which we were discussing a few moments ago. Does it meet his case in any degree?

Mr. KELLNER: The amendment in this particular subsection is all right. The other amendment was slightly different.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 89, subsection 2—Prior claim of bank over unpaid vendor.

Mr. GOOD: Is there any inconsistency between this and the other amendment in section 88 that was allowed to stand over?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 91, subsection 1—Interest at 7 per cent may be charged.

Mr. SHAW: This subsection received very lengthy consideration in the special committee, but the matter is of such importance that I think it merits further consideration by this committee. The first question which naturally occurs to one when approaching a restrictive interest clause is whether or not it is proper to have such a clause in the act. I am frank to confess that if the law of supply and demand operated, and the forces of competition were actively at work, there would be little value in a section of this character. I recall that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) in the discussion of the principle of this clause before the special committee harked back to the Middle Ages in order to get some comfort for his view that such a restriction should not be imposed. He called to his aid Bacon and, strange to say, he also placed great reliance on the remarks of Adam Smith, although just why he singled out that great political economist as an authority on this particular subsection alone is rather difficult to understand. However, it is perfectly clear that Bacon wrote long before the days of organized banking, and Adam Smith wrote many years before the industrial revolution in England changed the whole industrial and economic fabric, before the day of mergers, trusts and other combinations of capital which have largely resulted in monopoly.

There can be no doubt that at the present time our banking system is a monopoly. This parliament has created certain corporations to which are delegated the business of banking, and it has prohibited all others from engaging in the business except on compliance with certain conditions. Unless a corporation has received the imprimatur of this parliament and has complied with the provisions of the Bank Act it cannot carry on a banking business. I disagreed with the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) this afternoon when he practically suggested that a banking corporation stands in exactly the same position as any other corporation. A banking corporation is a public service institution. It was so stated by Sir Edmund Walker before the special committee, and he is perhaps one of the greatest of our authorities on banking. Such a corporation derives large monopolistic and special privileges from the people of Canada, including the privilege of issuing bank notes, which is of great value to it from a financial point of view. A banking corporation, to my mind, is in substantially the same position as a railroad corporation. The latter must comply with the provisions of the Railway Act in detail, and under that act the rates which it may charge for the transportation of passengers and freight are regulated by our Board of Railway Commissioners. When one has in mind the monopolistic nature of the business and the conditions which exist to-day in the way of mergers and combinations of capital, it is reasonable to urge that a maximum interest rate should be fixed. I do not say that the rate chargeable on a particular transaction should be determined, but certainly a maximum controlling interest rate should be established. Parliament has recognized that principle for many years. Not only do we fix a maximum interest rate in the Bank Act, but in the Interest Act we fix what we call the legal rate; in the Pawnbrokers Act we fix the maximum interest charge which can be made by a pawnbroker, and similarly in the Money Lenders Act. So I say that regardless of how we may view the principle, under the circumstances it is essential that a maximum rate be fixed. That brings me to a consideration of the present section in the Bank Act. This section has been in the Bank Act for many years in a similar form. One would think from a casual reading of the provision that it was very clear and very definite that the bank could not exact a higher rate of interest than 7 per cent. But the section as it stands is burdened by a decision of the Privy Council which gives an altogether different interpretation to it. The case I have in mind was decided, I think, in 1913, immediately prior to the last revision of the Bank Act; I believe it was referred to in the discussion at that time. In that case the Privy Council held that the bank might charge any rate that it could agree upon with the borrower, notwithstanding the provisions of section 91. They held also that as the borrower knew that the charging of an excessive rate was illegal, he was therefore estopped from recovering back any amount in excess of the fixed rate. So that the section, although apparently clear in its wording, means something altogether different from what that wording indicates. The section has no teeth at all; it simply provides a smoke screen behind which the banks can charge excessive rates. In the case to which I refer it was also decided that if a bank charging a rate of interest in excess of the statutory rate, sought to recover, it would be able to recover only 5 per cent per annum, the legal rate. But the banks, in order to prevent any possibility of recovery back, and any possible loss, discounted the notes in advance so that the borrower was estopped from setting up any claim to the excess interest charged. Now, that is the situation in regard to the present section. It is ineffective for the purposes for which it was framed. It is useless; it is simply a deception; it is a camouflage which permits the banks to charge any rate upon which they can agree with the borrower.

Now, the section has been abused. As I suggest, the banks, in order to get round the section, have charged discount rates in advance. It was brought out in an investigation conducted in Alberta a year or so ago that there was apparently some understanding among the banks with regard to this discount rate. Where previously there had been no arrangement regarding this practice, it appears that within the last year or so the banks have universally adopted the practice of discounting. That practice is very objectionable indeed to borrowers; it simply means that when a borrower goes to a bank for $100 and gives a note for that amount, he will probably get—I am speaking of Alberta at the present time—$91, and then at the end of the three months' period he will be called upon to pay the full $100. In other words, it simply means taking the interest in advance.

Mr. STEVENS: That would be at the rate of about 36 per cent. My hon. friend must mean 9 per cent per annum.

Mr. SHAW: Yes; I thank my hon. friend for calling my attention to that. I mean at the rate of 9 per cent per annum; the result would be that the borrower would get the amount he applied for, less $2.75. In addition, the banks have followed the practice of compounding the rates of interest. That is not particularly objectionable except when a high interest rate is charged, in which event, as hon. members will appreciate, the interest amounts to a very substantial sum indeed. The banks have charged very high rates of interest in the western provinces. I do not know what the situation is in eastern Canada. I understand that practically all loans there are made at the rate of 7 per cent or less, and that ample money is available to borrowers at that rate. In western Canada, within my memory at least, we have never been able to borrow money from the banks at less than 8 per cent per annum, unless, perhaps, in the case of a few choice and favoured borrowers. During the last two or three years, which have been years of considerable stress in the western provinces, the rates have increased. The rate of 9 per cent is very common; 10 per cent is by no means uncommon, and I am sure that hon. members from the western provinces can give many instances in which 12 per cent has been charged. There can be no question, therefore, that excessive interest charges are made in that part of the country to-day. It may be that eastern Canada is more or less indifferent as to this particular interest rate section. I readily appreciate that an easterner will not understand the situation, when he is called upon to pay only the maximum rate fixed by the act, or perhaps even less. But I suggest to the committee that in the West the burden of an excessive interest rate has been felt very heavily for many years. I am sure the committee will not tolerate a condition under which the West feels that it is suffering unduly through an economic exploitation, in this regard and in regard to other matters as well—an exploitation which seems to work in favour of the East alone. What is needed is an effective interest section in the Bank Act, a provision that will mean something to the borrower, a provision that will be a real safeguard to him and that will not allow the banks to exploit him at their pleasure. It is with that purpose in mind that I propose to move an amendment to this section. When in committee I moved an amendment somewhat more drastic in its character. I have tempered the amendment to some extent, and I trust that the members of this committee may give it favourable consideration. I do not propose to deal with subsection 2. The amendment which I propose and now move reads as follows:

That subsection 1 of section 91 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(2) The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note, bill or other evidence of debt.

(4) In any suit, action or other proceeding concerning a bank loan wherein it is alleged that the amount of interest paid or claimed exceeds the rate of seven per centum per annum, the court may reopen the transaction and take an account between the parties, and may, notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account, or any contract purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation, reopen any account already taken between the parties, and relieve the person under obligation to pay from payment of any sum in excess of the legal rate of interest and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the bank to repay it, and may set aside either wholly or in part, or revise, or alter, any security given in respect of the transaction.

I would point out that the amendment does not affect subsection 2 of section 91 at all. In other words I have endeavoured to draft a clause which I firmly believe is an effective controlling clause as far as the maximum interest rate is concerned. I have endeavoured to give to the borrower who has been charged an excessive rate of interest the right of action to recover back the excess charge, and I have also sought to give the court power in the event of a transaction being reopened to revise the transaction and adjust the rate of interest, at the legal rate which is five per cent per annum.

Mr. LADNER: May I ask the hon. member, apart from the political aspect of such a proposal, does he think that on sound economic grounds it is practicable to fix a maximum rate of interest on capital or money in the banks and leave the rate of interest on all other forms of money entirely unlimited?

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend is not altogether right when he suggests that all other obligations are left unrestricted so far as the rate of interest is concerned. I have already indicated to the committee that restrictions will be found in the Interest Act, in the Pawnbrokers' Act and in the Money Lenders' Act.

Mr. LADNER: But those only apply to amounts of two or five hundred dollars and the like. That is to stop the sixty percenters. That is not in the ordinary course of business.

Mr. SHAW: I am not so sure that it is not done so frequently in the ordinary course of business. The legal rate of interest is fixed in the Interest Act, and that is a matter we are concerned with every day. As I say, Mr. Chairman, my object is to present to the committee an effective interest section. I am not wedded to the rate mentioned in the amendment, and if any reasonable argument can be advanced why that should be increased by a very moderate amount not over one per cent, I would be quite prepared after some consideration perhaps to agree to such an increase if the argument warranted it. But I think we should either have an effective section or no section at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who moves the amendment that this is a very important section. It was the occasion of a great deal of discussion and comment in the Banking committee, and I have no doubt that it is usually the subject of a great deal of discussion in the western provinces, where the discount rate is higher than it is in the East. That is not an unusual thing because in new countries the interest rate is always higher than in older countries. You go to the western states and you will find there a very much higher rate of interest than you do in the eastern states. You will also find in the American states that as they grow older and become more settled, as they advance in mixed farming and mixed products the rate of interest gradually falls. That, of course, is due to the fact that as the settlements become older there is an increase in accumulated wealth.

I agree also with the hon. member that the section is not in a very satisfactory state. Personally I do not like to see stated in a section that a given rate of interest shall be recovered, and yet it is possible for the banks by a system of discount, quite lawful, however, to recover a greater rate of interest than that stated which may be recovered at law. However, a problem was confronting the legislators of the day who framed that section, and I suppose it represents the best that could be done at the time. Personally I think it would be better and sounder if there was no reference at all to the rate of interest in the Bank Act. After all money is much like everything else. It should carry its market value. If in 1919 the Canadian banks in the East had raised the rate of interest to eight or nine or ten or fifteen per cent at a certain time, we would have escaped a great deal of the deflation that occurred and would have avoided the effects of the deflation from which we afterwards suffered. The American banks have been criticized by the most eminent bankers and economists of that country for not increasing their rate of interest in 1919. The American Federal Reserve Bank in 1919 was charging only 4½ per cent instead of charging 6 per cent and over, and had that higher rate been charged the United States would not have suffered from the great deflation which afterwards occurred, much to their detriment. The same thing occurred here. The leading economists of the world say that the best way to control the level of prices is to put up the interest rate when inflation is on and prices are rising, and to reduce it when the reverse is the condition. I believe that is sound doctrine. I could quote to the committee this evening, if time permitted, a statement from, I think, the most eminent economist of the world to-day who, writing upon the control of price levels, says that the only practical way of doing it is by putting up or lowering the interest rate.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the name of the economist referred to?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Gustave Cassel, of Sweden. However, I am not going to propose that the clause in question be struck out; it would be very much resented, I suppose, by a very large section of the committee. The section in its present state is not perhaps quite acceptable to me; at least I do not care to see the provisions of the law stated in that way. However, it is perhaps better that there be some reference to the rate of interest which banks may charge.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) says there is no competition in banking. I say that statement is not correct. In money there is greater competition than anything in the world because there is absolute free trade in it. Millions of dollars come to Canada from the United States every year. In normal times millions of dollars come from Great Britain. Money can flow into this country without any legal impediment, without any tax whatever; and if there is one thing in the world that is absolutely free from monopoly it is money.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): My hon. friends laugh but I venture to say they cannot contradict that statement.

Mr. IRVINE: I think so.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member for Calgary West compares money with a railway, and he says the railway is a monopoly. Well, the railway is a monopoly. It always was, because it has not been the custom of the country to let people build railways anywhere and as they liked. The public must be protected. Therefore before any corporation can construct a railway they must receive permission in the form of a statute from the state. There is a monopoly in that, but I say again there is no monopoly in money, there is no semblance of it.

Mr. hon. friend (Mr. Shaw) seeks to affirm that there is a monopoly in banking because the rate of interest is the same in specified areas. That is true. Take the British market, the freest money market in the world. The rate all over England is the same any one day in the week, and that rate is effective among forty-five millions of people. The rate in Paris is the rate all over France on any given day. The rate in New York is probably the rate in the eastern sections of the United States for commercial loans. The Chicago rate may be the effective rate in the middle western states, or in a certain area, and on the other hand Seattle, Portland, and San Francisco may fix the current rate on the Pacific. The rate in the West, of course, is higher than it is in the East, and I suppose there is a reason for it. I suppose there is a reason for the city of Calgary to-day, by authority of a statute of the province of Alberta, charging interest on overdue taxes to the extent of two-thirds of one per cent compounded monthly. I do not know what that amounts to, but that is what they do in the very city from which my hon. friend comes, and by authority of the legislature of Alberta.

Mr. SHAW: My hon. friend will realize that is not an interest rate, that is a penalty.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Well, penalty rates are always well within interest rates.

Mr. SHAW: No.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There is no use exacting penalty rates which will take the property away from the taxpayer.

Mr. FORKE: That is what is happening right along.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): In the West to-day the rates on private loans, as between individuals, are, I am told, far in excess of the rates charged in the East as between private individuals. I venture to say that if any of the hon. members from Alberta across the way were money lenders in that province they would exact 8, 9 and 10 per cent, and once in a while for very proper reasons would exact probably 10 or 12 per cent. Mortgage corporations charge a higher interest rate in Alberta and Saskatchewan than they do in the eastern provinces. I need not argue the reasons for that, they are very obvious. As I said before in new districts where there are no accumulations of wealth, where investment capital must come from a distance, higher rates of interest will be charged. Now, there was before the committee on Banking and Commerce—

Mr. IRVINE: If, as my hon. friend suggests, money flows freely from one country to the other, or from one province to another, wherever the market for the money is good, how does it happen that it never flows sufficiently into the money market to equalize the interest rates between the East and the West? How does it happen that the interest rates in the western and middle states in the United States are always higher than they are in the eastern states if money flows freely? Will my hon. friend kindly explain that?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Money flows from Canada into the United States almost daily because there are attractive investments there. The interest rate is better than they can secure in the investment market in Canada, and the security is satisfactory to the investor. The reason why the rates are higher in the middle and western states and in western Canada is because the security offered for investment is not so satisfactory to lenders or to investors. There is no class of securities that can be quickly cashed, there is no market in which they can be sold daily, and that is the reason why investment rates are usually higher in the West than in the East.

Mr. IRVINE: In that case Mr. Cassel and the hon. gentleman had better remove their argument from interest to security.

An hon. MEMBER: One governs the other.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I shall be quite content to stand by any opinion that Mr. Cassel expresses in preference to any view enunciated by my hon. friend.

Mr. IRVINE: May I interject here that I agree with the hon. gentleman in that regard, and I would much rather have the opinion of Mr. Cassel than that of my hon. friend.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I admit that is a very fair statement, and I am so modest that I would have made it myself without being encouraged to do so by my hon. friend. The interest rate in the West is, after all, a practical question. Reference was made to-day to the Weyburn Security Bank, a bank operating in the province of Saskatchewan, with seventeen agencies. The general manager of that bank is Mr. Powell. He appeared before the committee on Banking and Commerce and was asked as to what would be the effect if the bank interest rate was fixed at 7 per cent, and I want to read that portion of his evidence. The question was put to him by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens):

> I would like to ask you three or four questions as to matters which are in the bill now or on notice of motion. From your experience in the West, what would be the effect upon your business as a banker if the rate of interest was fixed by law at say 7 per cent?
> A. We would go out of business.

Now, I say to this committee: The manager of the Weyburn Security Bank is a practical man, an experienced banker, and I should say an honourable gentleman, and I do not think he would make that statement if he did not honestly believe it, and did not feel confident the actual situation justified the answer made. The same question was put to—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I interrupt to ask the hon. gentleman a question on that point? The hon. member ascribes to the manager of the Weyburn Security Bank certain attributes which I think are warrantable. Would he not ascribe similar attributes to those who presented the case for the western farmer? If he would, does it not then amount to a question as to whether agriculture is to be catered to, or the banks' interests are to be considered?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not quite apprehend the purport of the hon. member's question. Who particularly presented the case of the farmers before the committee apart from the members of the committee?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Exactly.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I failed to observe any desire on the part of the members of the committee from the western provinces to indicate by argument or by the presentation of facts, anything which would go to show that the banks could do business in western Canada under 7 per cent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member misunderstands me. We did not attempt to prove that the banks could do business under 7 per cent in western Canada. We did state, however, that under present conditions agriculture could not continue to exist in western Canada at 8 per cent and over. That is the point.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Hon. members talk about interest rates being 9 and 10 per cent in the West. I want to point out that the evidence before the committee was to the effect that these rates did not generally prevail. Many loans are raised at 6, 7 and 8 per cent.

Mr. COOTE: Did Mr. Powell state what the average rate of interest charged by the bank was?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think he did. He said that the average interest rate was about 9 per cent. That is what he said. Sir John Aird, the general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, was also questioned upon this particular point. Probably there is no bank in Canada that has had so wide and extended an experience in the loaning of money in western provinces as has the Canadian Bank of Commerce. This question was put to Sir John Aird by the hon member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael):

Q. That is a point I wish to get at. If the interest rate were kept strictly at seven per cent or below, you think your dividends would have to decrease to three per cent?—A. We would withdraw from a great many places in the West; we could not make money, because our margin of profit on small branches is very narrow, and being cut narrower every day by the action of provincial governments in introducing iniquitous legislation granting exemptions. I think they are realizing that now and that some of this iniquitous legislation is being repealed. I know of cases where first mortgages held by companies in the East have been wiped out by some of that iniquitous legislation. Again the governments are going into competition with us in opening banks. They pay a higher rate for deposits than we do. Well, we cannot do business if the provincial governments take our deposits. We either have to let them go or pay a higher rate.

In another portion of his testimony he gave reasons as to why the cost of doing business was higher in the western provinces than in the East. It is very easy to say that the West is over banked and that a great many of the existing institutions in that part of the country should be closed. But that was not the story ten or fifteen years ago and I do not know how you could very well eliminate those banks; it could not be done very well by process of law. I have no doubt that many of the banking agencies in the West will be closed particularly in Alberta, and possibly in Saskatchewan, from now on. I doubt very much, however, whether that will be satisfactory to the people of the West. Let me say again that it is not a correct statement of the condition of affairs to say that there is no competition among the banks. The competition is not determined by the question as to whether or not the rate is uniform throughout a large area, or whether it is the same throughout a very large country at a given time. I should think it would be a quite serious matter for many sections of western Canada if these banking agencies were closed. They perform a public service and are of great convenience to the communities which they serve. I for one, at any rate, am not going to assume the responsibility of altering the section. I think we should consider very carefully the wisdom of changing the section to fix a rate of interest at 7 per cent. That would be a very unwise course to adopt, and I trust the committee will decide that it is not advisable to accept the amendment.

Mr. SHAW: Is the hon. member prepared to wipe out the section altogether?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not speaking for the government. So far as I am concerned I think it would be a good way to have the law in reference to interest, but I fear it would meet with opposition from hon. members from the western provinces and I should not like to take the responsibility of saying it should be done.

Mr. LADNER: I do not think that hon. members in this part of the House can be accused of monopolizing the discussion of the bill now before the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LADNER: I am glad that the culprits concede that much. This is an exceedingly important section and to my mind it is an economic absurdity to provide in the Bank Act anything that purports to fix the rate of interest when it does not fix it. That is more than foolish. This question was thoroughly considered in the committee when arguments pro and con were advanced, and the committee finally disposed of it by making some additions with respect to the question of discounts. As a matter of fact, I submit, it is impossible to fix the rate of interest on money or capital which is invested in a bank or used by a bank for advances to the community, if you leave unlimited or unrestricted the rates of interest on all other forms of capital invested throughout the entire world. Money as it is represented in capital or in bonds and credit instruments, in bills or exchange and acceptances, is nothing more or less than a commodity, and in every money market in the world this commodity is given for exchange. It is bargained for, it is sold and purchased, and the rate of interest is adjusted accordingly. So that if, according to the arguments of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw), the rate of interest in connection with money in the banks were fixed at seven per cent, there would be no reason for the shareholders or other people to retain their money in that form of investment. After all we must consider the question from the point of view of the general public and not of any particular section, and if the rate were fixed at seven per cent, then the shareholders might as well invest their money in any other form or take it to foreign countries where the rate of interest would be higher. I cannot conceive how any hon. member can argue for a moment in support of such a theory.

Mr. MILLAR: Will the hon. member mention one of the countries where the interest is higher?

Mr. LADNER: It may be higher at times in the western states. Money is, in fact, something that is essentially international. When rates are attractive here, it flows across from the States to this side. When they are attractive on the other side, the money flows there. Likewise it may go to Europe, and the credit facilities of banking institutions will deliver money or money credit in almost any part of the world. Nothing is more capable of distribution in small and great quantities than money.

There is no doubt that portions of the western provinces have a grievance as regards interest rates. We saw produced in the committee that considered this question promissory notes bearing 10 to 12 per cent rates of interest, mainly because they were from remote districts. Some hon. members opposite say that there is substantially keen competition in the banking world. I think that is so. That is the case in some towns in the West. I know in the little town of Ladner, British Columbia, there are the Royal Bank, the Bank of Commerce and the Bank of Montreal, and I have it on the best of authority that only one of those banks is actually paying, but the competition to get business is keen in the extreme. The presence of so many branch banks has largely brought that about. I noticed the other day that, in 1890, we had 38 principal banks making returns to the government, with a total capital of some $60,000,000, and we had 402 branch banks. In 1900, we had 36 principal banks with a total capital of $67,000,000, and the number of branch banks had increased to 663. In 1910, we had 33 principal banks, with a total capital of $100,000,000 and the number of branches had increased to 2,368. In 1923, we have the number of principal banks reduced to 17, with a total capital of $125,000,000, but the number of branches has grown in the last thirteen years to 4,472. Every banker knows that these branches do not all pay. There is competition, but there is also the expense of maintaining those branches.

My main purpose in rising at this juncture of this question is to suggest to the members of the committee that the way to remedy the question of the rate of interest is not by non-economic principles, nor by legislation, but by the ordinary methods of demand and supply. I suggest to the committee that the remedying of this question will not take place in Canada, just as the remedying of a number of other questions cannot take place until we have in this country a federal reserve bank system. In the United States, Great Britain and, in fact, Spain and Italy, in all the principal commercial countries of the world, the federal reserve bank system is in existence. This is a centralized system. A bank of rediscount, in its practical operations in the United States, handles the question of high or unfair rates of interest in remote portions of the country by the system of open market operations. Let us say that in the remote district of Calgary, say an out-of-the-way place, the rate of interest is 25 per cent, and it is necessary to correct that situation. Under the open market operations such as we have in a federal reserve bank system, the board of the federal reserve bank, which has an obligation to the government, to the people at large, as well as an obligation to the banks and other financial institutions, immediately takes steps to place its own money in that area in competition with the money of the ordinary banks, in order to force the rate of interest down. Let us say, in order to carry out the illustrations of the 25 per cent rate of interest in Calgary, that a federal reserve bank through its board would first notify the banks that were charging those excessive rates that the rates were too high. If the banks did not see fit to correct those rates, the federal reserve board would take its own money, and through the agency which it has established in Calgary, it would go into that city and say to the people: "You can come to us and borrow money for 6 per cent." How long are any other banks going to lend money for 25 per cent, 10 per cent, or 8 per cent, when a competing institution will lend money at 6 per cent? In other words a federal reserve banking institution will correct an injustice of that kind by the ordinary, sound, economic principle of supply and demand just as it will assist the industrial and commercial community at large in times of stress through facilities of rediscounting paper, and just as in times of elasticity it will correct an undue increase or boom by utilizing the money rates to raise the rates of discount. I wish to lay before the committee the advantages of a federal reserve bank so far as it pertains to and is able to remedy such a question as rates of interest. The Chairman has properly ruled that the discussion must be confined strictly to the clause under consideration, and I hope I have followed his ruling in my remarks.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I wish to make just a few remarks to voice my objection to subclause 1 of section 91 as it stands in this bill. I notice there has been an addition to subclause 1, which is really a beneficial addition. It reads:

> The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note.

That is one amendment that we were able to get through the committee. Out of the many amendments proposed, that was one of the very few that received favourable consideration. I am quite aware that this matter of interest rates was debated at great length in the committee, and of course we did not accomplish anything in regard to setting a maximum rate. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated in his remarks that the interest rate in the West is a practical question. He uttered a truism when he made that statement. It is a practical question. People in the West run up against real, hard, practical facts in the matter of interest rates, and it is not only those who are in financial difficulties who have to pay high and what we might call exorbitant rates of interest. A rural municipality in western Canada with assets of between three and four million dollars must pay 7 per cent, or 7½ per cent, or possibly 8 per cent interest. I think Mr. Powell, manager of the Weyburn Security Bank stated that they charged 8 per cent interest to rural municipalities. No person will discount the security offered by a rural municipality, and yet the rate charged by the Weyburn Security Bank is 8 per cent. In our western country an agriculturist must be in exceptionally good circumstances to get money at 8 per cent. The majority pay 9 per cent and a large number pay 10 per cent interest on the money they borrow. If the banks were paying out a correspondingly high rate of interest for the use of the deposits made with them, possibly there would not be the same objection to the high rate which they charge on loans, but we find they pay but 3 per cent for the large bulk of the money that they loan out at 7, 8, 9, or 10 per cent.

I might here make an observation in regard to the Weyburn Security Bank. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) stated that if the interest rate were set at 7 per cent this bank would go out of business. Well, it is only fair to say that they pay 4 per cent on deposits; therefore a 7 per cent maximum rate would militate against this bank.

We find that the banks control something over two billion dollars of the people's money, for the use of which they pay 3 per cent. In our western country at least the banks turn that money over at a spread of 5 or 6 per cent and possibly more. Now, it has been argued in the special committee—I do not know to what effect—that if the banks were limited to 7 per cent they would go out of business. I do not believe it, Mr. Chairman; but I do believe that if they were limited to 7 per cent they would curtail some unnecessary expenses. In the town of Weyburn, Saskatchewan, with a population of 3,500 we have seven banks. That is altogether unnecessary. Two banks could handle the business there. In the small town of High River, Alberta, with a population of 1,200, we have five banks—another unnecessary expense. And I need not remind you, Mr. Chairman, that the banks do not do business in shacks or in the same class of buildings that the majority of agriculturists have to live in from whom the banks make their profit. I hope that is quite clear.

Now, it may be asked, have we any proof whether the banks could continue in business if the rate were set at a maximum of 7 per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: Before my hon. friend leaves that part of his remarks dealing with Weyburn, would he tell me how it is that the Weyburn Security Bank, which pays 4 per cent interest on deposits, or 1 per cent higher than any of the other banks pay, has not attracted the deposits which go into the other six banks, if there is no such thing as competition in the banking business?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I think the Weyburn Security Bank did get a large amount of western money before they opened up a banking business, that is, when they carried on a mortgage business. At that time they paid 4 per cent on deposits. When they launched into the banking business they continued to pay the same rate of interest. Whether they will be able to continue to do so in competition with the other banks I am not prepared to say.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the spread between what the banks pay on deposits and what they realize on loans is to my mind exorbitant. I do not know whether it would be wise to set the maximum at 7 per cent throughout Canada, for the reason that in western Canada possibly the risks during the past years have been greater than in eastern Canada on account of crop conditions. But according to reports from the West at the present time, risks out there will be fewer in the future possibly than they have been in eastern Canada.

Looking across the Pacific to the island-continent of Australia, we have what to my mind is an ideal system for controlling bank rates of interest. There they have established a government banking system known as the Australian Commonwealth Bank. I stated in the special committee that the bank started without capital and has not issued any since. The statement was challenged and it was asserted that the bank did raise or levy a certain amount of capital. In the absence of any further information I am not prepared to admit or refute the statement. But the information I had was that the bank commenced business on deposits taken from the post office and from the people, and has been able to carry on business for ten years by paying from 3 to 4 per cent on deposits and charging a maximum of 6 per cent on loans. And in the decade it has made a profit of something over $18,000,000. Now, it seems to me that if we are not going to be able to set a maximum rate of interest in the Bank Act, we shall have to resort to other ways and means to regulate the bank rate, and I think one good way to effect this regulation is to set up a competitive system that will operate alongside of our present banking system, and so control its rates.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I assume my hon. friend was in the West about 1900. Was there any fall in the average interest rate, say, between 1900 and 1914?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am prepared to admit that when crops and prices are good and the people in general prosperous, interest rates are low; but when we run up against adverse conditions, as we have for the past few years, interest rates are high. That is, our financial institutions unduly penalize the country at a time when it is suffering from depression. They should not be permitted to do this.

I would be quite prepared to vote for the amendment, but I am not optimistic enough to hope that the committee is likely to accept it. It seems to me that we are just talking here for the sake of putting forth what we think, and that we hope to attain nothing in the way of any very drastic relief from our present banking system.

Mr. CARROLL: Does the hon. member really mean that?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Yes, I do.

Mr. MILLAR: Mr. Chairman, not having been a member of the Banking committee I have taken very little part in the discussion, nor do I intend to, but I want to make a few observations on interest rates—a subject that appeals to me very strongly. I notice that in the discussion remarks are frequently made to the effect that this committee sympathises with the difficulties the West is passing through at the present time and would like to give some relief. But unfortunately that sympathy seems to fall short of reaching the point where it might bring relief. In fact, it is rather a passive sympathy. I have listened to the discussion with a great deal of interest, and I may say at the outset that I believe we have a good banking system. Indeed, I am not in favour of upsetting those institutions which have served us well in the past and have weathered the years of trial successfully, without feeling absolutely certain that we have something better to put in their place. For myself, I am willing to go to the extent of supporting only those amendments to the Bank Act that would seem to be almost beyond doubt a benefit. With regard to the high rate charged in the West —the hon, senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) referred to that—I would point out that during the years when we had cheap land, virgin soil which could be conveniently and cheaply cultivated; when weeds were entirely absent and when the farmers, owing to the increase in the value of their land, were growing fairly wealthy without the crop—in those days it was quite natural that the banks and other institutions should charge high rates in the West, because the trade would stand it; and having secured these higher rates they are now very reluctant to give them up. I have thought this matter over carefully, and I have failed to see why in the West, where the security is certain—in many cases being victory bonds; in many cases wealthy men borrowing small amounts —where, in fact the security was almost as good as the bank itself and the losses of the banks in interest were nil—I have failed to see why a bank in the West doing a good business could not profitably lend money at 7 per cent as they are doing in the East.

Let me make a comparison. Walking the streets of Ottawa I was struck by the great number of bank branches that we have here. One sees a branch of the Bank of Montreal on one corner; he walks a few blocks and sees another branch of the same bank, and so it is with the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Union Bank and others. If it is possible, at the rates of 6½ and 7 per cent charged here, for the banks to keep up so many branches within a few blocks of each other, built on land for which a very high price is paid, carried on at great expense, it seems to me that in the comparatively small institutions maintained in western Canada, where there is no loss year after year and where even over a considerable period of years the aggregate loss would be very slight—it seems to me that in those districts the banks could be made to pay at the same rate of interest charged in the East. I believe it is true that in many cases, as the bankers say, they have lost money in the West. Why is that so? They loaned too freely in the arid districts, where the risk was great. They made the same mistake in lending too freely that the farmer made, in many cases, of borrowing too freely. But there is just this difference: in the case of the banks they are assured against loss resulting from their bad judgment, resulting from their lending money where they should not have loaned it.

It was argued in the Banking committee and it has been argued in this committee—if it was not specifically stated, it was implied—that because of these losses the banks in the West should be allowed to charge higher rates of interest. In other words, those who are paying their debts are penalized in order to ensure the banks against the results of their bad judgment. The farmer who made the mistake of borrowing too much must carry his own burden, and he is asked also to carry the burden of the banks where they have used poor judgment in the lending of money. I am inclined to think that what Mr. Powell and others have said is partly true—that if the rates in the West were reduced to 7 per cent the banks would quit business. I say that is partly true. They would quit business in towns where there are twice as many banks as there should be; they would quit business in arid districts where the crop fails four and five years in succession. I would be sorry to see the people in those districts subjected to any hardship, but in some parts of the country it does seem to me there is necessity for a clean-up in this connection. The banks and the government cannot continue forever to carry the people in an arid district, and I see no reason why those who live in districts that are not arid should, because of the conditions in the arid districts, be penalized so far as the rate of interest is concerned. I think it is unfair and unjust.

Reference has been made to the charge of two-thirds of one per cent imposed after taxes become due. Let me point out that that is not a rate of interest; that is a penalty which is imposed in order to induce people to pay their taxes when they are due. In fact, in our own municipality higher than two-thirds of one per cent per month is charged; the rate is one per cent per month, yet we have not looked upon it as a rate of interest and it cannot fairly be so considered.

It has been suggested that the law of supply and demand should regulate the interest charge, and the hon. senior member for Halifax has pointed to the fact that so far as deposits are concerned there was competition in Weyburn, for instance, in the matter of interest rates. But that competition affects very few people; it gives no relief. It is the interest on money loaned that is the important thing. It is true that there is a great deal of competition in an effort to get the business, but that competition does not reach the rate of interest on borrowed money. The rate of interest charged by two or three banks in the same town will be exactly the same—that is, the rate they will charge for money loaned. What good would it do if in a town forty or fifty miles away from where the borrower lives some of the banks were charging a lower rate of interest? What relief would that give? I cannot go fifty miles away, present my credentials at a bank in that place, and borrow money. They would say, "Why do you not borrow at home?" The only bank from which I can borrow money is the bank that is close to me that knows my financial standing, that keeps track of my business.

It has been stated by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner) that it is impossible, ridiculous—I think he used the word "absurd"—to think of controlling the rates of interest charged by the banks while you allow money lent by other institutions —I suppose he meant mortgage companies and other institutions of that character—to go untrammeled and uncontrolled. I admit that I have a doubt whether a reduction to a rate of 7 per cent in the West might not be too great a cut, but I believe that a move in that direction might well be made. It is just possible that if the banks lent money at a lower rate of interest their competition would compel the loan companies and the private lenders also to lower their rates. Is it not just as reasonable to expect that that will be the effect as that such a change is impracticable? Is it not quite as reasonable to believe that the other concerns will be compelled to come to the 7 or 7½ per cent rate in order to meet the competition as to believe that it is impossible to control the rate of interest charged by the banks while no control is exercised over the rate charged by other institutions? Very few changes have been made in the Bank Act—I am sorry that more were not made—but I think the committee would be well advised to take this suggestion into their serious consideration. If it is thought that a reduction to 7 per cent is too great a cut, at least it could be made 7½. For my part, if it comes to a vote I would take the risk of voting for the 7 per cent. I know the conditions pretty well in the West, and I feel that while the banks would have to make some readjustments, while they would cease business in certain places and a little hardship might be caused, the change might not be such as to compel them to withdraw from business. I have no doubt that for the most part they would continue as they are, and I am sure that the benefit would very much more than compensate for the loss. It is difficult to get any great reform without some little loss, but I say that in this case the benefits would undoubtedly more than outweigh the loss.

There is a general tendency towards monopoly, and a general tendency so far as the government goes to control monopoly. Recently we had a report handed in by the commission that investigated the Great Lakes freight rates, and one of their recommendations was that a maximum price be set for the carrying of grain upon the Great Lakes. We have never done that in the past. They have in the United States in a partial way, but we have not in Canada. That is a step forward that we have not yet accepted, but I have not very much doubt that when that matter comes before this committee we shall take that step forward in regard to the rates on the Great Lakes, and I believe it will be a wise step. When we control the rates on the railways, and we are going further in that direction every day of necessity because we must do so to protect ourselves, why is it such a disastrous thing to take such a step in connection with our banks? Surely when we consider the accumulation of money in so few hands we must realize that our banks are becoming more and more monopolistic every day. I hope the committee will look upon this amendment quite seriously. While the Banking committee have thought, I believe, that too many theories have been presented before it and perhaps have been a little frightened lest too drastic changes should be made, I feel that perhaps the tendency will be to close the door too tight and prevent such reforms as would be in the interest of Canada as a whole. We all know that there have been strong objections to reforms from time immemorial, and it sometimes takes considerable discussion and a lot of educational work before the country can be brought to that stage where they are willing to try something new. As I have said before I am not sure that the risk is too great, and if it comes to a vote I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. JELLIFF: I do not wish to prolong this debate unnecessarily. I know this committee is tired and that perhaps this particular phase of the discussion has been carried on too long already, but this subject is one that particularly appeals to me from a practical standpoint. I do not look at it from a theoretical standpoint at all. I have in view when I consider this question of the interest rate, the practical needs of this country and its condition at the present day and hour.

I must confess, Mr. Chairman, to a very keen sense of disappointment in some ways over the outcome of the revision of this act and the form in which it has come before parliament at this time. I was in hopes when the act was referred to the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce, of which I was a member, when it was fully considered there, when all the conditions prevailing throughout this country were laid bare so fully and completely, and when it was reported back to this House that we would have had something more in the way of a detailed statement either from my hon. friend the Minister of Finance or from the chairman of the Banking committee setting forth in brief at least what had been covered in the investigations of that committee, what they had found as to the conditions of the country, together with some concrete suggestions as to how they were going to meet the situation in the West. I felt all through that hearing that these gentlemen had a large sympathy with and interest in the people of the West under prevailing conditions, and I repeat, I am somewhat disappointed that they did not go into that phase of the question and have some suggestions to make when this act was reported back to this House.

In regard to this interest clause, I am heartily in sympathy with the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw). I do not believe that this country in any part of it is in a condition to-day to pay a higher rate of interest than seven per cent. I know that in my part of the West we have piled up in the banks thousands upon thousands of dollars in notes and securities of farmers which are bearing very high rates of interest, eight, nine and ten per cent, and if those notes in the hands of the banks continue to accumulate at the rates of interest they are now bearing I do not see how our farmers are going to lift the load and get on their feet. The only practical thing that can be done by this act to help them is to reduce the interest rate, and even that will help to only a limited extent, but to my mind, Mr. Chairman, it is the one essential thing. It will open the road, it will implant a feeling of hope and confidence in the minds of the farmers of the West, and if there is anything that is needed above that in this country I hardly know how to express it.

The hon. Minister of Finance said to-day that we had in prospect a very good crop in the West. The reports to that effect I think are true. I have had similar reports, and of course a good crop will have some effect upon the situation, but I cannot see how it can carry us to any very great extent towards the liquidation of the debts that are upon that country. My feeling after carefully canvassing the matter is that not only one good crop will be needed to even help move that load, but seven or eight or nine or ten good crops will be required to accomplish the object which he is hopeful we shall attain. I wish I could be as hopeful of the situation as he is, and I am a man of hope myself. I appreciate the fact that he feels even a little encouragement over the present situation. But suppose this rate is reduced to seven per cent? Is the disaster to the banking institutions of this country that has been apprehended going to occur? I do not believe it. I believe on the other hand it will result in good to the banks.

I believe that the banks need to have faith and confidence in our great West to a greater extent to-day than even the farmers. I came from the state of Illinois. In that state, from the days of my birth, they have had a maximum rate of interest of 7 per cent. Did that rate of interest ever injure the state of Illinois? Did it ever wreck its banking system, its great commercial institutions or its great factories? But in the last sixty years Illinois has risen from a young state to one of the greatest states in the whole world. Her manufacturing institutions alone turn out each year three billion dollars worth of manufactured goods; more than does the entire Dominion of Canada. Within the last sixty years of the existence of the live stock markets in Chicago over 750 million animals have passed through that market. The Chicago grain market is also one of the great grain markets of the world. Is there any evidence to show that the limitation of the rate of interest to 7 per cent has done any harm there? Can you point to an instance where there has been greater general development, or greater improvement in the welfare of the people?

The same is true of a number of other states. The state of Michigan has had a maximum rate of 7 per cent for a great many years, and it is to-day one of the greatest states in the Union. One of its cities alone has produced a manufacturer who has made greater use of his wealth than possibly any other individual on the American continent to-day. In the state of New York the same beneficial results have been witnessed. There they have had an even lower maximum rate for their general loans, 6 per cent, for many years; and in many other states a low maximum rate of interest has been the rule. Has that low rate of interest ruined those states? Has it injured the state of New York? Do we not go to New York when we want to get the millions that are sometimes necessary to tide us over our own difficulties here? I cannot help but conclude when I look this situation squarely in the face, that neither our banks, nor our financial institutions of any kind, nor any class of our people, have the least reason to fear the fixing of the maximum rate of interest at 7 per cent.

I know what it means to the men out on the farm if we continue the existing rate; if they have to go up against the burden of accumulated indebtedness in our banks at existing rates. It will mean the continual and further crowding down on the perspiring brow of the husbandman of this country a crown of thorns; the man who, by his industry, is producing year after year not only the food for his own family but for the families of those engaged in other occupations, and for the hungry and needy across the seas; the man by whose industry a new stream of golden wealth is produced each year to vitalize and keep up our transportation systems, and to bring strength and prosperity into all the avenues of our commercial and industrial life. We must take these things into consideration. We must do all we can, when revising this Bank Act, to bring needed relief to our people. They are looking for that relief and they will be disappointed if they do not get it. I picked up and put into my pocket this evening a little volume from which I desire to read a brief extract. It is from the speech which a great American, Abraham Lincoln, whom the world has always loved and admired, made on the subject of slavery —I will merely read this fragment from the speech:

> Free labour has the inspiration of hope; pure slavery has no hope. The power of hope upon human exertion and happiness is wonderful. The slave-master himself has a conception of it, and hence the system of tasks among slaves. The slave whom you cannot drive with the lash to break seventy-five pounds of hemp in a day, if you will task him to break a hundred, and promise him pay for all he does over, he will break you a hundred and fifty. You have substituted hope for the rod. And yet perhaps it does not occur to you that to the extent of your gain in the case, you have given up the slave system and adopted the free system of labour.

That is what I believe we should all do at this time in regard to our country if we have in mind its future development. Implant hope and confidence in our people and with it will come prosperity and happiness. Let us do this much in the way of limiting this burden; restrict this interest rate to seven per cent, help the people out of this difficulty, and throw light upon their future pathway. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, this amendment will be accepted.

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not desire to delay the House at any great length, but I wish to put myself on record as being in favour of the amendment now being considered. We have at present in the Bank Act a clause which pretends to make the maximum rate of interest 7 per cent, but it has never been effective. I think, in view of the evidence that has been adduced this session before different committees of the House, we cannot help but believe that the banks can do business on a 7 per cent rate of interest. We have the evidence of different rural credit associations in Canada who are doing business on a spread of one per cent in interest between what their money cost them and the rate at which they loan it, and they are making surpluses on that margin of one per cent. At the same time we have banks, or bankers coming before different committees of the House and plainly stating that they cannot do business on a spread of less than 5 and 6 per cent. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the present banking system is as efficient as our leading bankers would lead us to believe, why is it that they cannot do business as cheaply as amateur organizations, as you might call the rural credit associations of Canada? Because, when these rural credit associations were first started it was said by the banks and the bankers that they could not function at that cheap rate of interest, they could not carry on their business on a spread of one per cent, but they have proved conclusively that this is possible.

There is another feature that would look to be in favour of the banks. The turnover of the rural credit associations is slow, it is on long terms; the turnover is once in thirty years. If they can do business on a turnover of one per cent, it does not look logical to me that the banks cannot do business on a spread of less than 5 and 6 per cent on their turnover, especially when they turn their capital over several times during the year.

As I said, I do not wish to detain the committee, but these are some of the thoughts that have occurred to me. It has been said that if the maximum rate of interest is made low, and the banks are compelled to live up to it, that a good number of the branch banks in the West will cease to do business. Personally, Mr. Chairman, from the information I have, I think it would be a good thing for the country if some of the branch banks did cease to do business in some of the towns, not only in western Canada but in eastern Canada. We have the spectacle of three or four branch banks in a town, surrounded possibly, by a good farming community where there is only about business enough for one branch bank. We thus have two, or three, or four branch banks competing for the business, which means that the people who patronize these banks must pay the overhead expense of four banks when there should only be one. I think the fact that there are too many branch banks is one of the reasons why the banks have been charging a rate of interest that is not justified by actual practice in other lines.

There is another feature which was very well brought out in the committee investigations this session, and that is the fact that agriculturists pay a higher rate of interest than people engaged in any other industry in Canada, and also higher than those in any other country one might mention. Nearly every other country has an extended rural credit scheme whereby the farmer can get cheap capital; and I hope that the government will see fit to institute in the very near future, some form of rural credits financed federally. The report submitted today by the special committee on agriculture will, I presume, be under discussion later on when I shall have something to say in this connection. I quite realize that anything I might say on the question now would be out of order. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee, but I must go on record as being in favour of the amendment.

Mr. LEWIS: I, too, want to go on record on this subject, and I want at the same time to deal with two matters referred to by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). Speaking with regard to a certain economist, that hon. gentleman said that in practice there was such a thing as putting the rate up under certain conditions, while it came down on other occasions. So far as we are concerned, I want to say that we have never known the rate to come down; it has always gone up in the West. Another thing that seemed rather peculiar to me was the fact that while the hon. member would have the banks charge seven per cent, he would also allow them to charge a much greater rate; and we have it on record that the average rate in the case of the Weyburn Security Bank is 9 per cent. The hon. member for Halifax quoted the manager of the Weyburn Security Bank and observed that we all considered him honest in his statements. The question is, however, did he submit any facts? Did he produce his books to show that his institution could not continue in business on a seven per cent basis? It was simply a matter of evidence, and before a man makes a statement of that kind he should be able to back it up with facts. This gentleman should have been able to prove that his bank would go out of business under different circumstances. We have it on the authority of western members that many of the farmers are going out of existence because a higher rate than seven per cent is being charged. The senior member for Halifax said that there was competition among the banks. Well, if there is I have not had the pleasure of seeing very much of it. I believe there is competition in the United States because the banks are very easily multiplied there. But it is difficult to multiply the banking institutions in this country. The trouble is that on the contrary, they are reduced in number here until to-day they have a monopoly of the credit situation in Canada.

The hon. member continually referred to the issuance on the part of the banks as money. I do not altogether agree with that. It is a matter of credit; and Siegel of the United States says, in regard to interest, that the credit of a bank is valuable only when it can be changed for real money. We have not the gold standard in Canada, and I do not think you could go to an ordinary bank to-day and get real money for the credit they offer you. Yet, notwithstanding that they are privileged to extend credit, they are given the further privilege of monopolizing the interest rate. I for one protest against this; and I say that if the government make regulations in regard to banking in this country they ought to have the same authority in the matter of rates and should be able to stipulate what should be the legal rate for the banks in the West to charge the farmers who borrow money from them.

The hon. member for Halifax also declared that as we became an older country and entered a little more extensively into mixed farming the time would come when we should have a cheaper rate, as in the East. By that time, however, many of us will be under the sod. No; what we want is something that will help us in our present situation. We are not looking so much to the future; we are very much concerned about what can be done to remedy the evils that exist under present circumstances. Now that there is deflation in the West and conditions are not optimistic, it does seem to me that the present time is most opportune to lower the rate, as suggested; and for that reason I am heartily in support of the proposed amendment. I believe it is quite within the authority of parliament to enact that 7 or 7½ per cent shall be the maximum rate legally chargeable by any bank which is given a charter by federal legislation.

Mr. IRVINE: The only hon. member on the government side of the House who has spoken against the amendment is the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). It is rather unfortunate that we should find it necessary to bombard one hon. member all the time, but as he has avowed himself the protagonist of the Bank Act and—shall I say?—the apologist of the bankers in this regard, there is nothing left for us but to deal with the arguments he has presented to the committee. In opposing the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) the hon. member for Halifax said that money was much like anything else; and upon that basis he proceeded to build up an argument. Now, as a matter of fact, money is in no respect like anything else, and that is where the hon. member erred. On that false hypothesis he argued that interest could not be fixed because money flows to points where the highest rates are paid. In other words, he placed money on the basis of ordinary commodities which rise and fall with the demand. If this were absolutely true, money would flow to the highest interest point in such volume as to reduce the rate of interest to the lowest possible minimum. That is what happens in the case of potatoes or in the case of clothing: the commodity flows in such quantities to the place of greatest demand,—which is naturally the place where the highest price is offered—but as the demand is satisfied there ensues a reaction. The price drops, and the commodity must find some other outlet. This is not true in regard to money. In order to refute the theory used as argument one may refer to the hon. member's own statements. He showed that the rate of interest in New York was different from that in Chicago or in the western states of the American union. It is true in Canada that the interest rates are low in the East as compared with the West. If money flowed, as the hon. member says, to the point where interest rates are highest, it should flow in such volume that in western Canada one would find it at reduced rates of interest, in a short time and ultimately at the minimum. But as the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) has pointed out, we have no experience of any falling of rates in the West. The only thing we know about them is that they are climbing up.

Take the case of Great Britain as compared with Canada. Money is a free trade commodity, and it flows from one country to another declares the hon. member for Halifax. Now this is clearly not true. Interest rates in Great Britain are much lower than they are in Canada. Therefore, if his argument were sound, money ought to flow from Great Britain into Canada just like the Gulf stream going the opposite way, and ultimately we would have as low and even a lower rate of interest at times in Canada than they have in Great Britain. But that is not so. There must be something wrong then with the basis of the hon. gentleman's argument. While he accepted this principle, it seems to me that he departed from it before he finished with his argument, because he said in reply to a question which I put to him in this connection, that this flow did not continue in a volume sufficient to reduce the rate of interest to western Canada because the security was not good. This argument then must be applied to Canada as a whole in relation to Great Britain which is to say that Canadian security is not good enough to attract money from Great Britain. But that this form of reasoning means that my hon. friend either does not think the rate of interest is the important thing or else that he is confused in his thinking, for he virtually abandons his first contention and says now that the security for money, not the rate of interest, is the important thing. Therefore, it is the security of the investment, more than interest rates, that guides the price level. If that is so, then the whole argument of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) falls to the ground, and it cannot be applied to the present debate.

He also referred to the statement of Professor Gustav Cassel to the effect that price levels are controlled by interest charges. But after accepting this, the hon. member for Halifax proved that securities controlled interest, and therefore securities must control price levels. Therefore, he is not in agreement with Professor Cassel as he declared himself to be; he is in opposition to him. But let me for the moment accept the statement of Professor Cassel, although I have no more reverence for that professor than I have for a hundred others, and simply because he says it, is not a conclusive argument to my mind that it is so. I am prepared to admit, for the sake of argument, that there is something in the statement of the professor, namely, that the rate of interest may have some relation to prices. Even so, it can still continue, for the proposal of the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) fixes only the maximum rate of interest. There is a great range from 7 per cent to 1 per cent; that leaves plenty of room for the affecting of price levels. So even accepting the statement of Professor Cassel as being sound economics, we still may utilize the truth of that after having passed the amendment which has been moved.

I am not prepared to admit that the rate of interest is even an important factor in fixing prices. Let me give you a parallel to this. It used to be believed that profits were regulated by the prices charged for goods, and those who handled goods naturally supposed that the higher the price they charged the more profit they would make. But after a while they found that turnover was more important than high prices; they found that if they could cut their prices just a little above the cost of production and overhead, they could double or redouble their sales, and they could make more money than by charging high prices. That is just as true when you apply it to money, since money is used as a commodity, as it would be in the case of any other commodity in the market. If you cut the price of money by reducing interest charges, you have immediately the effect of increasing the loans, and by increasing the loans that are made, you increase the business that will be done by the banks. There is no loss; in fact, there might be an increase of the interest charges on the whole, and thus the price levels would still be affected in a similar fashion providing of course that interest rates do affect prices.

But the chief point to be considered in this argument is that while the hon. member for Halifax argues strenuously that interest rates cannot be fixed, and I think the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Ladner) said that the proposal was an economic absurdity, yet against all these the fact remains that interest rates are fixed in Canada to-day. They are fixed in Great Britain; they are fixed in New York, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman for Halifax. If they are fixed by the banks, why cannot they be fixed by this government in the interest of the people? If these hon. gentlemen are to be logical in their argument, they must face their own logic. After proving to us in one part of the argument that interest rates could not be fixed at all, they quietly tell us that interest rates are fixed now; that they are the same throughout Great Britain at any one given time; that they are the same in New York; that they are the same in eastern Canada. If they are fixed already by the Bankers' Association of this country, by the financial associations of other countries, they are fixed by them in their own interest.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): When I said that the market rates for money were fixed at certain centres, I did not say that they were fixed by bankers or by law. I meant that they were fixed by market conditions.

Mr. IRVINE: As a matter of fact, they are not fixed by market conditions, as I have shown to hon. members, because in that case we would have the same rate of interest all over this country, or at least the rates would be at some time lower in the West than in the East, caused by the flow of money to the highest market, but this never happens. The rate of interest in this country is fixed by the Bankers' Association. Therefore, the very point that is characterized by an hon. member as an economic absurdity is now in practice in Canada, and the very point which the hon. member for Halifax says would, perhaps, result in the destruction of the banking system, although he did not say that in those terms, is already in practice in Canada. The point is, if the Bankers' Association, having a virtual monopoly in this country, has already fixed interest charges both east and west, fixed them on the loans they make, on the deposits they take from the people, fixed them in their interest in order to make profits for the bank, it is highly desirable and practicable that this committee and this parliament should fix the rate of interest so as to take care of the well-being of the people.

Let me say that I would be in favour of no restriction whatsoever if the banks did not have a monopoly. Break up your monopoly, and we do not need any such restrictions. Ordinarily we should have a clean-cut competition in banking, and if that were so interest rates would depend upon the amount of money available for loans. But in a country where there are seventeen banks meeting in one association, fixing interest rates in each community at the same rate in every bank, then as regards interest rates we have a monopoly, and the only possible protection that the people have against such a monopoly is such a restriction as is proposed in the amendment under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Many hon. gentlemen in this House to our right and on the treasury benches seem to take it for granted that the only problems in western Canada are those of poor crops and they refer repeatedly to the drouth districts in the south and southwest. I live in the northeastern part of Saskatchewan where we always have good crops, where in twenty years we have not had an actual crop failure, where we have abundance of rain, where we have the best of soil —in a word, where nature has indeed been most kind to us. Yet we have problems so acute there that whole districts are being deserted. If you were to ask the average citizen there to-day as to what these problems were, he would in all probability summarize them under four heads: tariff, transportation rates, markets, interest. And if I were asked to put my finger on the most urgent need of the community and on its most vital problem I would say, without a moment's hesitation, interest. Hon. gentlemen who come from the old settled parts of the Dominion perhaps do not appreciate the difficulties in a newly settled country. Your farmers as I know them in the Maritime provinces, and to a lesser extent in Ontario, are in a great many cases either on inherited farms or farms that they paid for years ago, so that the interest problem does not enter into their production costs at all. But in a new country it is generally the poorer classes of men who come to carve out a home in the wilderness, and interest with them is a very vital problem. Indeed, I think there is nothing that would put western Canada more quickly on the map to-day than a reduction in the rate of interest. Our hon. friends on the government benches and on our right are boosting immigration, and some very hard things have been said against hon. gentlemen in this section of the House because we have pointed out the fallacy of any such policy at the present time. To hon. gentlemen to our right and to hon. gentlemen on the treasury benches I would say that if they are really sincere and want to attract immigrants, if they want to re-establish the farmers of Canada to-day, they can do this in no better way than by assisting us in securing a reduction of interest. The interest paid by the average farmer in the West to-day is crushing out his economic life and is driving tens of thousands off the land. I am not entirely clear in my own mind whether this question should be dealt with through the Bank Act or under a rural credit scheme. But if nothing can be done here—and I take it for granted that our friends are not seriously considering this amendment—then in all seriousness I say: If you are sincere and want to see people come into the country to help in its development and to share our financial burdens, then by all means assist us to get some form of rural credits that will cut the interest rates which are so burdensome on our western farmers to-day. Tens of thousands of these men are plodding along in such poor financial shape that they can see no possible chance of getting through. The rate of interest every year means to them more perhaps than the whole profit on their crop under the most favourable circumstances. But if some scheme can be devised for the reduction of the interest rate, and their indebtedness spread over a long period of years, I can assure hon. members opposite and on our right that they will no longer hear the bitter complaints from western Canada that they are hearing to-day, for they will have solved one of the greatest problems of the West. To our good protectionists—and I refer to my hon. friends on the treasury benches, because they are just as much protectionists as hon. members to our right—I say if you want to hear less about the tariff from us and to get us to accept it under protest, help us to reduce this interest rate. We will never be favourable to the tariff, but we will be prepared to accept it under protest, as well as a good many other things, for the sake of peace and harmony if you assist us in this one vital, urgent need of the western country to-day.

Amendment, (Mr. Shaw) negatived: Yeas, 38; Nays, 64.

On section 91, subsection 2—Return to minister.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that this amendment has been defeated, but I think it is an amendment that is very necessary for—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COOTE. Mr. Chairman, am I in order or not?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): The hon. member cannot reflect on a vote of the committee, if that is what he intends doing. Or does he intend moving another amendment. Subsection 2 is now before the committee.

Mr. COOTE: I want to speak to the motion, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to move another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): All right, that is in order.

Mr. COOTE: I want to bring to the attention of hon. members some figures that they may not be familiar with, showing the rate of interest that is being charged by the chartered banks of Canada to-day. This is from a return brought down by the government a few weeks ago. The first return shows a 90-day loan on an amount between $1,000 and $25,000, drawing 10 per cent interest. The same bank shows a loan of the same amount in another part of Canada at 8 per cent interest, and another in still another part of Canada at 5 per cent. The next return I have here shows that on an amount between $250 and $1,000 this bank is charging 12 per cent on a loan for a period of three months made in one part of Canada while at another of their offices they are charging on a loan of the same amount for the same length of time, 5 per cent. They also show that at three different branches the rate was 10 per cent while at another it was 12 per cent. The next return shows a charge on notes for three months of 12, 11 and 10 per cent at offices located in western Canada, and at three offices in eastern Canada, on loans of the same amount, a rate of 5 per cent.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend tell us what were the securities offered for these loans?

Mr. COOTE: I am sorry, but the return does not show the securities offered. I have no doubt that the security was all right, or they would not have made the loans.

Mr. ROBICHAUD: My hon. friend says that loans of the same amount were made in one part of Canada at 12 per cent and in another part of Canada at 5 per cent. Were these loans made under similar circumstances?

Mr. COOTE: They are shown under the same heading in the return. The return shows on the first line loans between $50 and $250; on the next line loans between $250 and $1,000; on the next line, loans between $1,000 and $25,000; on the next line, loans of $25,000 and over. The term of the loan is the same in most cases, or practically the same, and the amounts are the same. The next return shows the maximum rates of interest to be as follows: Three at 10 per cent; one at 8 per cent; and the minimum rates: Two at 5 per cent; two at 6 per cent. The next return shows that on loans of over $1,000 for three months a rate charged in a western office is 10 per cent while on the same amount in a town of eastern Canada its rate is 5 per cent. The next return shows a very fair comparative rate. It is 8 per cent in one case; the maximum rate in the next line is given at 7 per cent and the minimum as 6 per cent. I am glad to say that that is what we generally term a French bank. The next return shows loans running from 8 per cent down to 4½ per cent; all these loans are in Canada. It is shown that in Toronto they have money lent at 3 per cent, on overdraft. The next return shows loans ranging from 4 per cent in eastern Canada to 10 per cent in Manitoba. There is one item here which I hope the hon. member for Halifax will take note of: It is a loan of over $250 for a period of seven months, on which the rate of interest was 13 per cent.

Mr. FIELDING: Is my hon. friend giving the averages in each case, or only in special cases? The return shows the average.

Mr. COOTE: I shall be glad to give the averages too. The maximum rate is 13 per cent as shown in the return.

Mr. FIELDING: And the average?

Mr. COOTE: The average is 7.18.

Mr. FIELDING: That is not so bad.

Mr. COOTE: The minimum rate is 5 per cent.

Mr. VIEN: May I ask whether the interest rates are given according to the territory in which the loan was made?

Mr. COOTE: The one I just quoted was made at Three Hills, Alberta, and one of the same size was made at Winnipeg, at 5 per cent. There were three in eastern Canada at 5 per cent. I may say here that I would be quite satisfied if the committee would set the maximum rate of interest at the average rate shown by these returns.

The next bank shows an average rate earned of 7.06 per cent and it shows loans at all the way from 5 to 10 per cent. I may say that some higher rates are shown here, but they are on loans for very short periods, and I have tried not to cite the figures for any loan of that kind. In the next return I find that the rate on a loan between $1,000 and $25,000 for a period of one month was 10 per cent, while several loans of the same amount were made elsewhere at 5½ per cent. Now, these returns are pretty much alike, and I do not know that anything is to be gained by reading anything more from them. But I would like to give the average rate of interest shown in each of these returns. They are as follows: 7.27; 6.5; 7.39; 7.20; 7¼; 7.06; 7.18; 6.596; 6.20; 7.57; 6.69; 7.17; 7; 6.8; 7.44.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend admit that the rate of interest varies according to the territory in which the loan is made and also according to the security offered? For instance, the rate of interest will be much smaller against government guarantees than against personal security. In a territory where the cost of management is very high owing to the small volume of business transacted, the rate of interest increases. Does my hon. friend object to the rate varying according to the cost of management and to the kind of security offered?

Mr. COOTE: That question is too complicated for me; I cannot answer it all at once. But my hon. friend asks whether the rate varies according to the security offered. I would simply tell him that we have to pay eight per cent interest on a loan against a victory bond. I do not know what better security than that could be offered. I do not see why in western Canada I cannot borrow money against a victory bond at seven per cent if it can be borrowed in eastern Canada at six per cent.

Mr. DUFF: Sell the bonds.

Mr. COOTE: Well, I am afraid that next year the bank might change its mind and not give me any credit, and I would then have to have the bonds to fall back on to keep the wolf from the door. If the members of this committee absolutely refuse to limit the rate of interest charged I want them to do it with their eyes open. I have shown something of the rate of interest charged by these banks, and now I should like to give the dividends some of them are earning.

Mr. VIEN: Will my hon. friend say that it is a general rule out west to charge eight per cent on a note secured by victory bonds as collateral, that that is the common practice?

Mr. COOTE: To the best of my knowledge in the small branches at any rate in western Canada—I do not know anything about the larger ones—there is no money loaned on the security of victory bonds at anything less than eight per cent, and in addition to that you cannot usually borrow for more than three months. I do not know if they feel that the bond is liable to be no good at the end of three months or not.

I have here a little circular put out by Aemilius Jarvis Company regarding bank stocks and recommending the purchase of these stocks as a good investment. The first bank which appears on this circular is the Bank of Nova Scotia. It shows profits amounting to $2,000,000 odd earned in 1922 after making provision for everything. During the seven year period from 1916 to 1922, its earnings averaged 20.49 per cent per annum on the capital stock. I should say in all fairness that this is the highest rate of dividend paid by any chartered bank. Dividends of 10 per cent per annum were paid from 1903 to 1905 inclusive.

Mr. FIELDING: And it has the highest reserve of any bank.

Mr. COOTE: The rate of dividend has steadily increased until now 16 per cent is being paid.

Mr. MARLER: Is the hon. member aware that the Bank of Nova Scotia has a larger reserve than its capital, and that the earning power of its capital represents also what its reserve earns? It means that as regards the whole capital and reserve the earning power is very likely to be not more than eight per cent. I think my hon. friend does not mean to be unfair.

Mr. COOTE: I do not wish to be unfair at all, but I would point out right here what a splendid opportunity there is for a bank in Canada that is managed properly when the Bank of Nova Scotia can show such a result. I think the Bank of Nova Scotia has been the best managed bank in Canada for a great many years. It just shows the possible earning power if the bank is properly managed.

Mr. MARLER: Is the hon. gentleman also aware that the Bank of Nova Scotia's reserve has been built up by sale of stock at a premium? I only throw out these suggestions.

Mr. COOTE: I will admit what the hon. member says. A part of its reserve is built up out of premiums on sale of stock, but the whole reserve was not built up from that. If the bank had not been making splendid earnings there would have been no premium on the stock. There is no reason why some of the other banks in Canada should not show just as good a record as the Bank of Nova Scotia, if they had been just a little more careful of the loans which they made. Just so that the members of the committee will not run away with the idea that that is the only bank in Canada making good profits I will take one or two others. Here are the figures for the Dominion Bank. I have not looked to see what earnings they made but I am satisfied that the dividends will be large enough. Dividends at the rate of 12 per cent per annum have been paid each year from 1906 to 1922 and a bonus of 2 per cent was paid in the years 1913 and 1914, and 1 per cent in 1920, 1921 and 1922. During the past seven years the earnings on the capital stock averaged 17.56 annually. For the current year a dividend of 12 per cent per annum was paid, with a bonus of 1 per cent.

Now I will give one of the small banks, a bank which some years ago I believe was on the point of being merged with one of our other banks, but the Finance Minister, quite wisely I think, prevented that amalgamation. I refer to the Bank of Hamilton. The last financial statement shows that for the twelve months ending February 28, 1922, the bank showed a net profit of $850,672. Its earnings for that year were at the rate of 17.01 per cent on the capital stock, while the earnings for the past ten years have been in excess of 17.30 per cent. The bank's dividend record shows 10 per cent per annum paid from 1905 to 1910 inclusive, 11 per cent per annum in 1911 and 1912, and 12 per cent per annum from 1913 to 1922 inclusive. The current dividend rate is 12 per cent per annum.

I will simply quote one more and that is the Royal, one of the large banks. Its earnings last year were equivalent to 16.95 per cent on the capital stock, while for the eight-year period from 1915 to 1922 its earnings averaged 18.80 per cent annually. At the present time the balance to the credit of profit and loss account is $1,007,514. The current rate of dividend is 12 per cent per annum with a bonus of 2 per cent. I want to remark right here that the men in whose interests we are asking for a limitation of the rate of interest are not paying dividends on their business, neither dividends nor bonus. Furthermore, I would like to point out to the government particularly that they are spending something like $3,000,000 this year on an immigration policy, and the larger part of it is to be devoted to bringing farmers to this country. Most of these farmers will need a little banking accommodation, and I am sure that in the lands from which they come they have not been paying 13 per cent interest. When they want a little banking accommodation in this country and are asked to pay that rate there will be as much dissatisfaction among them as among the Hebrideans whose case we discussed in the House a few days ago.

There is one other thing I would like to mention as a justification for limiting the rate of interest charged by the banks, and that is that they have a very special privilege granted to them in being able to issue notes. That is a privilege which other corporations or private parties who may charge a higher rate of interest do not have and surely we have a right to expect some return from the banks for this very special privilege. The hon. member for Halifax referred to the statement of Mr. Powell of the Weyburn Security Bank that if the rate of interest were limited to 7 per cent they would go out of business. I want to say that a great many farmers in western Canada, I think the majority of them, would come to this House if they had the opportunity and tell hon. members that at the present prices they receive for their products and the present cost of production, if they have to pay more than 7 per cent they will go out of business. It may be a case of choosing whether you want banks or whether you want farmers in western Canada. I do not think the banks will produce anything that will furnish traffic for the railroads to enable them to earn the dividends of which we have heard so much, but the farmers, if they are considered in this matter, will produce something for these railroads to haul. I think in this House we should try to be fair to all parties.

The general manager of the Bank of Commerce, Sir John Aird, when he was before the Banking committee when this very subject was under discussion—I think that was the time—gave as one excuse for the high rates of interest which they charged in the West the high cost of doing business there. And one of the reasons which he gave for their high cost of operation was that they had opened branches in western Canada to provide positions for returned men. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to put this up to the members of the committee very squarely: Is it a fair proposition to place upon the producers in western Canada this task of furnishing positions for returned men? If the banks want to furnish positions for these returned men, and I think they should, they might do it in some other part of the country that can stand the expense better than western Canada can.

The banks in western Canada are charging this high rate of interest because of the mad rush of the banks there to establish branches. In the year 1919 there were approximately 900 branch banks opened in Canada. Does any hon. member of this committee think that the banks were justified in opening that number of new branches? I have not the figures here, and I am sorry that I have not, showing the increase in population in Canada in that year. I do not think it was very great, and I cannot for the life of me see that there was any good reason for the opening of 900 branches in the Dominion in that year. Why the banks should attempt to saddle on the people the result of their own—I think I may say—foolish action in this case is more than I can understand. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that if the majority of our Canadian banks had been as well managed as they should have been—as well managed for instance as the Bank of Nova Scotia—they would all be able to return a very handsome dividend if the maximum rate of interest they were allowed to charge had been 7 per cent.

Now, in connection with the expenses which the banks have in western Canada I want to show how they spend some of their money. I have here "A Farm News Letter" issued by the Canadian Bank of Commerce. It tells "How to grow sweet clover." "When to sow vegetables," "Managing a dairy herd," "Experience with Siberian alfalfa," and "Improved method of summer fallow." There is an article on "The Olds School of Agriculture" and another on "Why a bank charges commission when cashing an out-of-town cheque." It does seem to me rather a serious reflection on the Minister of Agriculture. Some may think the minister is not doing his duty, but I want to say right away that possibly the Bank of Commerce is in error. I think the Minister of Agriculture is keeping the people well supplied with these publications, and their issue by the Bank of Commerce is an error in judgment on the part of that institution. An hon. member suggests to me that possibly the minister and the Bank of Commerce have been in consultation. Well, perhaps so, co-operation is a fine thing; and if they are going to continue issuing these pamphlets they would do well to consult with each other so that there will not be needless duplication. To use an expression which, I think ,was used last session, they should "synchronize" their efforts.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is only one of the many publications which some of our banks in Canada are issuing. I should like to see some limitation on the rate of interest if for no other reason than to stop the banks from publishing so much information gratis. The people of this country are burdened with advice. If the farmers read all these pamphlets, circulars, and publications of one kind and another that come to them I am afraid they would not have time to get their work done. I really think the Bank of Commerce would show better judgment if they would cease the publication of their "Farm News Letter," and a great deal of other literature which they circulate among the public free of charge. They issue every year what I think they call a year book; they issue an annual statement containing a very carefully prepared address by the general manager, and I think, by the president. They issue, I think, a weekly commercial letter and several other publications. The Bank of Commerce is not the only bank which pursues this practice, but I just happened to have its publications in my possession to-night. I hope no hon. member will think I am reflecting on the Bank of Commerce particularly, but I happen to know more about its publications—at any rate more of them come to me. I think, Mr. Chairman, if our banks were managed even as efficiently as our farms they could operate and do so very safely and get a very handsome return on a maximum rate of 7 per cent.

Now, I am sure the statement, made, I think by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), that the rate of interest on money loaned was regulated by the law of supply and demand—is not borne out by the facts of the case because away back in 1906, I think, or 1907, I can remember that the rate of interest, in the locality where I live at any rate, was exactly the same as it was two or three years ago when the banks were urging us to borrow money. In 1907,—or was it 1908?—the banks said that money was very tight, but as I remember it the rate of interest was just the same as it is now.

In regard to what the hon. member for Halifax said about competition regulating the rate of interest I want to quote if I shall not be wearying the committee by talking at too great a length,—I do not want to do that,—a little from the report of Professor McGibbon which will enable my hon. friend to see how much competition there is between the banks. I will select the particular part which I want so that I will not make the quotation too lengthy. There was before Professor McGibbon the superintendent of the Alberta branches of the Bank of Commerce and towards the close of the evidence the report says:

A. That arose there perhaps from the fact that some clerk, to save him trouble, found it easier to put it through that way.

He is referring to the practice of discounting as opposed to the practice of charging interest.

These are checked up by our auditors every year and if they find that it has been done they draw attention to it. The desire is to maintain a uniform practice.

Then this question by Professor McGibbon:

Q. Going back to the Winnipeg arrangement, there was a general understanding?

A. I would not say that. On that question you cited you have the evidence of a bank manager and (at) another point that all the time he was stationed there he never discounted a farmer's note.

Q. It was an understanding as far as you were concerned?

A. So far as we were concerned we decided it was a wrong practice to depart from the old custom.

Q. You discussed it?

A. We discussed it with the other banks, Yes. Those things come up at the meeting of the men interested in that business the same as in any other business.

Q. And the bankers naturally discuss very—discussed various aspects of that with a view to deciding upon a general policy?

A. Yes, that I presume was the purpose of the Canadian Bankers' Association.

Q. I understood it was a meeting in Winnipeg, it was the Canadian Bankers' Association was it?

A. No, but I say that was the purpose. No doubt the purpose of the (for which) Canadian Banker's Association was organized. There is a subsection of the organization in Winnipeg.

Q. And it was in that section that it was discussed?

A. Yes, I think so.

Then over on the next page the evidence of the supervisor of the Royal Bank for Alberta, who was being examined by this commissioner, is given. The question put was:

Q. Now, with regard to the compounding of interest, do you consider that equally vital to a review of the loan?

A. In our institution it is founded on practice entirely, it has never been objected to by a very large proportion of our desirable farmers.

Q. And in a general way you actively began to insist upon that within the last year or year and a half?

A. Yes, in a general way as the result of the understanding.

It goes on to state that the effect of the agreement is to impose a higher rate of charges on the clients of the bank. Now, as the result of a good number of years' experience in western Canada, I make the statement that there is very little competition among the banks in the matter of interest. There is some competition in service, of course. For instance, the banks like to get your business if your account is good, but they endeavour to secure it through courtesy and attention, just the same as one grocer hopes to attract, by means of a better service, the custom that goes to his rival. I do not think there is anything new in the statement I am making, that there is no competition among the banks so far as the rate of interest is concerned. As a matter of history you can find the same thing stated in the evidence of Mr. McLeod before the banking committee ten years ago.

Now, I think I have taken up about all the time I should, but I trust that at least I have given the committee some information of which it was not possessed before. It may well be, of course, that I have not; but in that event I should be disappointed. Before I sit down however I want to read to hon. members some of the rates of interest paid by our banks last year, which of course was, we are told, a bad year for every one, banks included. The lowest rate of dividend paid was 6 per cent; then I find two at 7 per cent; one at 8 per cent; one at 9 per cent; two at ten per cent; 7 at 12 per cent; one at 14 per cent; and, I think, 1 at 16 per cent.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): When the hon. member finds bank stock paying 12 per cent —and I have in mind one that does pay that rate—he must bear in mind that in a good many cases the shares are worth $200 each, and that much and more in some cases was paid for such shares so that a dividend of 14 per cent would as a matter of fact be only 7 per cent. It is not fair for the hon. member to put the statement in the way he has submitted it to the committee without a further explanation.

Mr. COOTE: The present market price of Bank of Commerce stock is $199, yielding 6·53 per cent; the present price of Royal Bank stock is $218, yielding about 6·42 per cent; the present market price of Bank of Hamilton stock is $170, yielding 7·06 per cent; the price of Imperial Bank stock is $188, yielding about 6·91 per cent; the price of Standard Bank is $212, yielding 6·60 per cent; Dominion Bank is $200, yielding 6½ per cent; the price of Bank of Montreal stock is $240, yielding 5·83 per cent. I am simply trying to show the splendid earnings which these banks in Canada have made, indicating the sound position they are in. I am sure that if our banks were carefully managed, so that they did not incur the loss of so many million dollars, as was shown in the case of the Merchants Bank and some other banks that I will not mention—some of these losses having been incurred outside Canada—they could return a very good rate of interest even at the present market price of these stocks, and even if they were limited to 7 per cent.

Mr. VIEN: Does the hon. member think that the Canadian banks can do better in Canada than the United States banks can do over there? And does he think that we should limit the Canadian banks to 7 per cent when the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States charges from 6 to 10 per cent interest, according to the districts in which they do business?

Mr. COOTE: I am not aware that the Federal Reserve Bank is charging 10 per cent. I am sorry I have not the information here but the statement was sent to me a few days ago by a man—

Mr. VIEN: The hon. member was in the committee when the documents were read and when that particular information was given.

Mr. COOTE: I do not remember these figures having been given to the committee; if they were they must have been wrong, because I am informed by an hon. member that that bank is limited by statute to 7 per cent.

Mr. VIEN: I would remind the hon. member that when the hon. member for Vancouver spoke on the question of interest he gave the rates charged by the Federal Reserve Bank in the United States, varying from 6 to 10 per cent according to the district.

Mr. LADNER: The hon. member was mistaken.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LADNER: The maximum rate is 7 per cent.

Mr. VIEN: When I referred to the member for Vancouver I had in mind the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. COOTE: I assure the committee I am glad to have the support of my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. Ladner).

Mr. STEVENS: With the permission of the hon. member I may straighten this little dispute because it is really of importance. The document I quoted from was the Federal Reserve report for April of this year; if I remember rightly it was dated April 15th. It gave the rates of interest charged in some 12 or 15 leading American cities, ranging from 6 per cent to 10 per cent. These were the rates charged by the commercial banks of the country throughout the United States for prime commercial paper.

Mr. COOTE: Is the hon. member stating that 10 per cent was charged by the Federal Reserve Bank?

Mr. STEVENS: I thought I had made it plain. I said that these were the rates charged by the commercial banks of the United States for prime commercial paper.

Mr. COOTE: Possibly we have it straight now. I move in amendment that subsection 1 of section 91 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(2) The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note, bill or other evidence of debt.

(3) In the event that a greater rate than 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the Bank, then the person by whom it has been paid or his legal representative, may recover in any court the excess interest thus paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time such excess interest was paid.

The latter part of the amendment is the same as that moved by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw). I hope this amendment will receive the support of the committee. Surely we have met any reasonable objections which hon. members might have to the amendment which was moved previously. I think most hon. members will admit that 8 per cent is the limit which any man should pay if he has security to entitle him to a loan. If he is not entitled to a loan on account of the security which he has to offer unless he is willing to pay 12 or 13 per cent, I feel exactly like Professor McGibbon who said in his report that it would be better for that man if he did not get a loan. I hope that this amendment will meet a better fate than the one moved by the hon. member for Calgary West.

Mr. IRVINE: Before we enter upon a discussion of the new amendment, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if it is his intention that we should sit as late as we did last night. It is now nearly midnight, and I should like to ask if the intention is to keep the committee in session for an indefinite time?

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is mistaken. We have not been keeping the House in session.

Mr. IRVINE: Then I move that the Chairman do now leave the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: All right. That motion is always in order.

Motion (Mr. Irvine) negatived.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Possibly the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) was under the impression that if we raised the ante one point, the committee might consider his amendment more favourably, and I have no doubt in the world that if someone would move that the rate of interest should be raised to 25 per cent, everybody on the opposite side of the House would vote in favour of that. May I, however, before opening my remarks on the amendment, express my regret that the Minister of Finance cannot see his way to accede to the request of the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine) to allow this debate to continue to-morrow? You will have noted that to-day every facility has been given on this side of the House, until this very important clause came up, to the passage of amendments as well as clauses. We have progressed very well, as well as we have done on any other important bill, and again I say that it is with regret that I find myself compelled to continue debating this clause at this late hour. As far as observation can show me, it is practically futile for any hon. member in this corner of the House to try to present arguments, good, bad or indifferent, that will have any influence whatever on hon. members, both opposite and to my right. To some extent their position may be governed—I do not say that it is, but it is a probability—by the extraordinary attitude of a part of the press. For example I find in the Standard of Montreal a long editorial, rather scurrilous in character, dealing with the Bank Act. It is headed: "Put the Bank Act through." And it ends up with this paragraph. Hon. members are entitled to know this if they have not already read it, and I am surprised that some of the hon. members in either of the two historic parties have not taken exception to it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): I do not think the hon. member would be in order to read a newspaper extract discrediting or written in a manner to discredit the proceedings of this House.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It is not discrediting to those who adhere to partisanship. The editorial—and I need not read it; I can give the important part very briefly to you—ends up with a paragraph somewhat to this effect, that now is the time for the two historic parties to bury the hatchet and to unite in order to force through the Bank Act at this session. It is sad to say that there are only too many of such editorials and such articles appearing in the free press of Canada at this time.

Mr. COOTE: Get them to unite and bring down the rate of interest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hopeless. This question of interest rates is, without doubt, the most vital one facing western Canada to-day. Because of a series of bad years in places, because of low prices for the crops that were raised in other places, because of a general process of deflation involving live stock, grain and other produce of all kinds, because, to a large extent, of the Fordney tariff practically prohibiting the entry of cattle from Canada into the United States, because of the tariff which this country has imposed and which bears heavily upon the people of western Canada, because of the high transportation rates and combines, but especially because of high interest rates, the condition of the farmers of western Canada is reduced to a state of almost insolvency. You find to-day by far the greater majority of the farmers of western Canada carrying great accumulated amounts of debt, upon which they are paying interest rates that have been increasing during the last two years and that are now at a point that the farmers cannot continue to pay them and stay in the farming business. What is the use of filling up that country with immigrants if they cannot live when they come there? We cannot contend that this is not a national question, and it is a sad sight to me to see hon. members opposite dealing with the matter in the most perfunctory manner, disregarding every argument brought to bear on it from this side. It seems utterly useless to endeavour to influence their minds in this matter, and we have no hope of being able to. Hon. members have no proposals before the committee for a rural credit scheme, and I venture to say that it is impossible that they will have one at this session. Therefore, there is no hope. We will come back next year—at least some may; we cannot tell what may happen—and there may be another discussion, but we have no guarantee that there will be a discussion of this question.

May I for a moment endeavour to intimate to hon. members who will listen—and some ought to listen—the manner in which loans are taken out in western Canada? A farmer may happen to require a loan in the spring to carry on the year's farming operations. He goes to the bank manager, and he makes out a statement. He states to him every asset he has, the amount of the stock and its value, the amount of the improvements and their value, the amount of his land and its value, and if he does not own it all, his equity in the land, the number of buildings he has and so on. In short he gives him a regular bank statement of all his assets. The bank manager will then say to him: "I will refer this matter to the office at Calgary"—or Saskatoon or Winnipeg, as the case may be—"and I will let you know the result in a week or ten days." At the end of that time the farmer goes in, and if he is very fortunate, the manager extends the loan at a rate of eight per cent. That is the general procedure until, as I say, recent years. With the rate of eight per cent the farmer is about to leave satisfied, but on reading the note he discovers that it is made out for three months and he tells the manager that he cannot pay it in three months; that that will be in the midst of his summer operations, and he will have nothing to sell at that time of the year. The reply is that that is a mere formality, and that the farmer can come in at the end of the three months and renew the note. At the end of three months the farmer goes back to have that note renewed, and the bank manager generally informs him that unfortunately, conditions are not as good as they were when he issued the note, or he gives some other excuse. He may say that money is tightening. He has got to call in the loan. If the farmer cannot pay now he is told, "Well, we will renew the loan all right, but you will have to give us additional security and perhaps an increased rate of interest or both." However, it has not been the general practice of the banks to increase the rate of interest until the end of the year. At that time, if it has been impossible for the farmer to pay his full indebtedness—and I may say that owing to present conditions there have been very few who have been able to pay their debts in full in western Canada—the procedure is to increase the rate of interest and, whenever possible, obtain all additional security.

The banks go further. If the farmer has any liquid assets, such as live stock, then, disregarding entirely market conditions, he is absolutely obliged to put them up for sale. My constituency is about 12,000 square miles in area and is situated in the most densely populated portion of Alberta. My hon. friend from Battle River (Mr. Spencer) represents a constituency which runs into the north country and is entirely a mixed farming district. The southern half of my constituency happens to be devoted to grain growing entirely, but the northern portion is like that of my friend from Battle River a mixed farming district. We sent out a questionnaire to our constituents some time ago, and the answers we received indicate that wherever stock-raising was engaged in a few years ago the banks encouraged the farmers to purchase more stock. I can give the committee my own practical experience in this respect. I happened to attend a stock sale at the Pat Burns Imperial ranch at Rumsey a few years ago and the manager of the local bank was also present. As a matter of fact he was sitting on the top rail of the corral beside me. I happened to have plenty of feed that year and I said to him, "Do you think this stock would be a safe investment?" He said, "You cannot make any mistake in such an investment." I asked him, "Will you advance me the necessary money to purchase some of this stock if you think it is all right?" "Certainly," he said, "you can have as much credit as is necessary to stock your farm." I accepted the offer and was encouraged to purchase stock at $75 to $85 a head. I admit that I should not have been so foolish, but I took it for granted that the bank manager knew conditions, and so I followed his advice. That kind of advice has been followed unfortunately by all too many farmers in western Canada. Credit has also been urged upon them by a system of propaganda something like this: Do not put all your eggs into one basket—go in for mixed farming—if you want to go in for hogs come and see your branch manager—if you want to go in for cattle come and see your branch manager—we advise you to go into dairying, see your bank manager. We were encouraged, we went to see our bank manager, and as a result we invested in these things—many of us to our great regret. After having held that live stock for two or three years the market, as you know, fell to pieces when the Fordney tariff was put into effect. But no mercy was shown by the banks. Our stock was there, our productive capacity was there, but owing to causes over which we had no control the price of cattle broke badly. Did the banks of western Canada help the farmers to tide over that period? Did they say to us, "We will not press you, we will help you to carry on until conditions improve and you can find a market for your stock?" I mentioned to one bank manager the possibility of the removal of the British embargo on cattle. He laughed at me and said, "That is simply a political football; it will never be removed." And the farmers were forced to sell their cattle. I use the word "forced" advisedly. A farmer who had a poor crop and could get little or nothing for it was compelled to sell his other liquid assets to meet his bank loan. In many cases after such forced sales the farmers still owed money to the banks. Many of these farmers had to give additional mortgages at 9 per cent. At the present time I am paying 9 per cent on a ten-year mortgage.

We cannot any longer pay that rate either to the mortgage companies or to the banks, and if this committee does not take some steps to restrict the profiteering banks I cannot without hesitation tell hon. members what will happen. Certainly I hate to think of the future condition of western Canada. After all, this is a national question. Our prosperity out there will influence conditions in the East. If we ever get out of this morass of debt, not only will the country generally be improved immensely through productive development by hopeful farmers, but this prosperity will have a reflex effect on the business of eastern Canda. If hon. members will discuss the present situation with any business men in this city, they will be answered as I was answered the other day. I asked one business man what he thought were the prospects for the fall trade, and he replied, "They do not look good." But I said, "We are going to have a good crop in western Canada this year." He said, "Yes, but I am afraid you cannot pay your debts." And it was only too true.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to place on record one or two examples, not at great length, of the oppressive character of banking practice in western Canada. This is a letter concluding answers to the questionnaire received from Mr. Ç. A. Wynn of Carmangay, Alberta, and is typical. He writes:

> This particular district was settled up by people from eastern Canada and the States some eighteen years ago. They have built up comfortable homes here only to find themselves faced with the situation where it will take practically all their crop to pay the interest on their loans. So for this reason quite a number are contemplating leaving the country almost at once, crop or no crop, unless there is some relief in sight.

Here are a few of the questions set out on the questionnaire with the answers received:

14. Has your bank requested payment of their clients' liabilities in full with the promise of extension of credit?
A. Yes.
15. Has your bank ever broken its promise to reissue credit as per previous question?
A. Yes.
16. If so, in about what percentage of cases?
A. Could not say definitely, but perhaps 25 per cent.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that those bankers who may read some part of these proceedings would be well advised to take to heart this admonition: Do not encourage or permit local branch managers to urge a farmer to liquidate a debt regardless of cost at the end of the year on the promise of a renewal of credit for the coming years' operations unless the bank is willing to extend the line of credit. Only too many cases have arisen where the banker has encouraged liquidation at all costs and promised a renewal of credit, but has afterward broken his pledge. That is not going to improve conditions in western Canada, nor is it going to increase the confidence of our farmers in the banking system.

Touching briefly on the answers to the questionnaire I sent out, I would say that the term of a note to the farmer in western Canada is three months. Hon. members can well undestand that that is altogether too short. The interest charge in all districts is never lower than 8 per cent, and in most of the 12,000 square miles—and my hon. friend from Battle River has exactly similar answers covering another 12,000 square miles corroborating in every degree the answers I have received from the southern part of the province—it is 8 per cent compounded, or over. Now, that situation cannot continue. In by far the great majority of cases, all notes are discounted, at time of issue. But it is not a constant practice; there are a few cases reported where a farmer, observing that the banker is discounting the note at the time of issue protests so vigorously that the banker has been known not to insist on the discount. But too few farmers have the courage to insist, and I do not know whether they would be successful if they insisted as a whole.

Every one of these reports—and I have roughly one hundred of them—indicates that it is impossible under present conditions in western Canada to carry on at 8 per cent or over. A large number of these reports deal with caveats filed by the bank against grain so that as soon as a farmer has hauled his grain to the elevator the elevator company makes the cash ticket out to the bank instead of to the farmer. I do not know whether in most of these cases there was collusion with the elevator companies, but I had a letter from Mr. H. W. Leonard, secretary of the Constituency Association at Tudor, Alberta, near Rockyford, in which he stated that an attempt had been made by the bank manager there—I believe it was the Bank of Commerce—to get the elevators to act as collectors for the banks last year at harvest time when the grain was coming in; but fortunately the elevators refused to act. The depletion of the population due to the condition out there is so appalling that I hesitate to give the facts to the committee. But reverting for a moment to the question of interest rates, may I say that in respect to those 12,000 square miles I have received reports from twenty-seven large districts in which the interest is 8 per cent compounded, 9 per cent, 10 per cent, and, in some cases 12 per cent. For example, in the district of Morrin notes are issued compounded every three months at 8 per cent. In the district of Craigmyle, the rate is 9 per cent, Royal Bank; Big Valley, 9 per cent, Royal Bank and Imperial Bank; Delia, 9 per cent, Bank of Montreal and Bank of Commerce; Hanna, from 8 to 10 per cent and in some cases 12 per cent, Bank of Toronto, Bank of Commerce, Union Bank. In the district of Parr the average is 9 per cent—and by the way, in case a question may be asked me, I would inform the hon. senior member for Halifax that these are averages; they are not isolated instances. The average at Parr is 9 per cent; that is the average for the whole district. At Richdale, it is 10 per cent, Bank of Toronto; at Gleichen, 8 per cent, Bank of Commerce and Royal Bank; at Sunnynook, 8 per cent, Union Bank and Bank of Toronto; at Pandora, 9 per cent, Bank of Toronto; Lonebutte, 9 per cent, Union Bank and Bank of Commerce; Carolside, 9 per cent, Union Bank and Bank of Toronto; Cessford, 10 per cent, Bank of Toronto; Clivale, 8 and 9 per cent, Bank of Commerce and Union Bank; Halliday, 9 per cent, Union Bank; Carmangay, 8 per cent, Bank of Commerce; Vulcan, 9 per cent, Bank of Hamilton, and so on. That will give hon. members a fairly accurate idea of the situation there and the rates of interest we have been charged. The hon. senior member for Halifax refers to the costs of operating branch banks, of the expansion of operations of the banks, as one of the causes for the higher rates of interest in the West.

May I remind him in that connection that efforts were made in the committee on Banking and Commerce to recall the bankers in order to ask them specifically for that information. We had no evidence before the committee on Banking and Commerce that would justify the hon. member for Halifax in making that statement—not one tittle of evidence to that effect was adduced. We had simply the bald statements of two bankers, but no evidence. We made an effort to secure that evidence, but the request was refused by the committee; we who asked for it were voted down.

I need not deal further with the question of competition; it has been gone into very fully by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). But I would like to touch on the other aspect of the western Canadian banking conditions that have led to high interest rates, and ask the question, is it our fault, or is it the banks' fault? I wish to quote from page 88 of a book by Mr. William Long Baker entitled "Money Monopoly vs. the Community Dollar." Mr. Baker was formerly supervisor of branches for the Standard Bank of Canada, but he left that position to endeavour to form and secure a charter for a commonwealth bank in this country. He says:

It was remarked at the beginning of the preceding chapter that while the banks act in concert in matters furthering their own interests, such as interest rate, legislation and all subjects and phases likely to culminate in organized opposition, yet they are engaged with one another in a struggle for supremacy in business and we have seen a contest between two banks for leading place as Canada's greatest bank. Every bank is trying to show larger totals, larger business than its class competitor. This has led to one of the most insane practices imaginable, that of opening branches where they are not required.

Now, that is only too true, I will not delay the committee in going into the aspect of the question, Mr. Chairman, but you have heard the statements of hon. members around me. The hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) dealt with that point; he mentioned High River as an example, as well as some other towns. I could mention dozens of places where two or more banks are operating but where there is not business enough for one. I quote further from Mr. Baker's work:

It seems hardly possible that men who preach economy, efficiency and avoidance of unnecessary expansion—

And that is the advice we have from bankers.

—would themselves practise the very reverse. Two banks have been known to open their offices in a village on the same day, in fact this may be said to be a common occurrence. Bank A and Bank B may each have a branch at X. A few miles away is a small farming locality where Bank A has deposits of $100,000 lodged at their X office. Bank B conceives the idea of opening a branch at the smaller locality and Bank A jumps in immediately to protect its business. There is not enough business to warrant one branch but the fight for business, no, for deposits, goes on, at the expense of the public, and at the expense of clerks who eke out a bare existence on half pay. An analysis of Canada's branches made some time ago, showed the following:

I would ask hon. members of the committee to listen to this statement of fact:

1,970	places	with	1 branch
515	"	"	2 branches

Of the branches located in points where there is only one bank, there are probably 300 which could be closed with profit to the bank and without serious inconvenience to the people.

I wish to support that statement.

Five hundred and fifteen offices at two-branch points—

"Two-branch points"—points where there are two branch banks.

—could be closed, as there are no towns with only two banks where one could not do the work. It is not necessary to deal with each class, but anyone may estimate that 1,600 branches could be closed releasing probably $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 of capital— and making an annual saving of $12,000,000. This would be allowing an average of less than $8,000 for salaries of manager and staff, rents and all incidental expenses. Additional staff might be required at many points to handle the increased business and there would naturally be some additional expense, but in the majority of cases it would be found that no extra staff would be required. Think of it! Wasting, we shall say, eight or ten million dollars each year in a race for supremacy, in a mad scramble for deposits while bank clerks live or try to live on starvation salaries.

That alone is not the whole story. Not only did they expand into these places where they are not needed, not only did they double and treble the number of branches at places where the business would justify but one, but they built as one hon. gentleman has said, the most expensive buildings in the town. They fitted them with the most expensive furnishings, and filled them with the most luxurious flowers and ferns and creeping plants so that you enter a most gorgeous palace when you go into the bank, hat in hand, and go down on your knees to borrow money. When I came a homesteader to my present town nearly eighteen years ago, there was no bank, but there came to it two years later an assistant bank manager from a town in that district. He came up by train twice a week to a little shack about twelve by sixteen with a counter in it, and he performed all the functions of a bank in that district admirably. But that was not good enough. Just as soon as the bank could get around to it a contract for a store-shaped building was made and a large frame structure secured. Into it were placed most expensive fittings, with elaborate counters, swivel chairs and costly furniture of all kinds. But still that was not enough. Within eighteen years they had jumped from a shack to a one-storey frame shack, to a two-storey frame building with solid oak partitions between the offices and the outer public hall and with a specially built floor, and as I said, the inside was festooned with green creeping things in order to harmonize with the green things that came in there to borrow money.

That is not an isolated case by any means, Mr. Chairman. It is a common everyday sight in the West. Sixteen miles to the south of that town there are two large banks, one of them a large two-storey brick building and the other an expensively-built frame building. One of these banks of half the size could accommodate all the business that is to be done in that town, but there you have two immense banks with all these expensive fittings. That is one of the reasons possibly why the rate of interest is so high. The other reason may be because it is necessary to pay the large and persistent dividends. That deals with the waste and extravagance, and that may be the answer to the manager of the Weyburn Security Bank and to Sir John Aird and all the others who told us they could not carry on in western Canada if the rate of interest was reduced to 7 or 8 per cent. Their argument holds no water. No evidence has been adduced by them in support of it. We asked for someone to come before the committee and give evidence as to the average cost of managing a bank in western Canada, and we did not get them before that committee.

I have one last suggestion to make. If the hon. members of this House do not see fit to pass the amendment offered now by the hon. member for Macleod I would ask them to be logical and strike out something that is useless. If you will not pass the amendment to this section, strike the section out. It is a camouflage, or worse, a futile falsehood. It does not guarantee anything to anybody, but the section is in the act in order to give confidence to the people. "There is a rate of interest fixed in Canada, and the banks cannot charge any more than the legal rate," is the false message conveyed. That is an utter farce, Mr. Chairman. Why perpetuate it? Cut it out, and let us be honest with ourselves and with the people who borrow money from the banks of Canada.

Mr. SHAW: I just want to make one or two observations because I am anxious to see the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Agriculture vote against this particular amendment. I want to commend to the attention of the House this amendment. It will be observed that the maximum statutory rate of interest it proposes to fix is 8 per cent. The facts which have been disclosed in this debate indicate that the average earnings of all the banks in Canada are in every case less than that figure and consequently I think we can urge in sincerity and with fairness that a maximum rate of 8 per cent should certainly not under those circumstances be considered unreasonable.

I think there is one thing on which the branch banking system of Canada prides itself, and that is that the system allows of a great deal of fluidity so that money flows rapidly from one section where it is in excess to another section where it is needed. If that is the fact, it is a strange thing that from the reservoirs of wealth in eastern Canada it costs so much to supply the needs of western Canada. This supplying of needs is not a one-sided arrangement. It is not something done by the East for western Canada without compensation. As a matter of fact the development in western Canada has made possible the great development in eastern Canada within the last ten or twenty years. Each is dependent on the other. If you are going to stifle any one part, your action necessarily has the same effect with regard to the other part. So while I am prepared to say the rate is in excess of what it ought to be, I urge the committee to accept the amendment in order that a maximum rate may be set.

There is another matter I want to point out to the committee. If you will observe the recent legislation in the United States you will find that the farmers of that country, western farmers as well as eastern farmers will shortly be provided with money at rates varying from 5½ to 7 per cent. Those farmers must compete in exactly the same market in which our farmers compete. They must compete in the world market under practically similar conditions. Now how can our farmers expect to compete successfully with their competitors in the States who can secure capital at a very much less rate? I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that to simply ignore the demand of western Canada in this connection is to bang the door in its face and say: We have no concern with your affairs in this matter—and indirectly to say: You have no concern with your own affairs. I think the amendment proposed is not an unreasonable one and that it should commend itself to the House.

Mr. GOOD: I had expected yesterday to speak at considerable length on this question of the interest rate, but I do not want to speak to-night and I do not think anybody here wants me to speak. I would think the Minister of Finance would be courteous to the House if he would permit it to adjourn the debate until to-morrow. If not, it simply means that he is exercising the power which he has to suppress discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. GOOD: I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to speak to-night under the circumstances. I simply give expression to this view that we ought after last night's experience to have a little chance of debating this matter to-morrow.

Mr. FIELDING: It is always possible for a minority to insist that they are right and that everybody else is wrong. May I suggest to my hon. friend there is just a possibility that those who differ from him may be right. That is all.

Mr. GOOD: I am not questioning that at all. I simply say that under the circumstances I do not feel justified in saying what I would under ordinary circumstances feel obligated to say.

Amendment negatived: Yeas 24, Nays 50.

Section agreed to.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. (Wednesday).

REPORT

Eighth report of the select standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.—Mr. Maclean (Halifax).

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 225, to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

He said: The bill explains itself. The old clauses appear in the bill and the amendments are shown in italics. The first clause extends the interpretation of the word "chemist." When prosecutions were taken under the act it was often the case that the certificate of an assistant or junior chemist in the department, by whom the work was actually done, was refused by the court, and it became necessary to send our chemist down from the department to the court. The interpretation is extended to include any employee classified as junior chemist, assistant chemist or chemist in a laboratory in the Department of Customs and Excise or of any department of the government. The second clause makes the presentation of the certificate of the chemist prima facie evidence of his capacity to act as such. The third clause is to provide a penalty for those who deodorize denatured alcohol. Under part 10 of the Inland Revenue Act, only methylated alcohol was mentioned; we now add denatured alcohol.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GRAIN SURVEYS

Mr. BOWEN:

Is the original official sample of grain on which the grade is determined by the inspection department used in case of a survey (or re-survey) of this grain?

Hon. Mr. ROBB: The party asking for a survey on any car of grain has the privilege of requesting that the survey be held on the original sample, or on a fresh sample, drawn by an official of this department, if and when the car is in such a position or location that a fresh sample can be secured.

It has always been the practice of this department to secure fresh samples for survey purposes when requested, if at all possible to do so.

The great majority of samples placed before the Survey board are fresh samples.

WELLAND CANAL—TOWING

Mr. BENOIT:

1. How much of the towing on the Welland Canal, given by the Department of Railways and Canals, since 1917, was done by Captain William Hand, and what was he paid for this work?
2. Does the Superintendent of the Welland Canal open the tenders for towing and does he make recommendations thereon?
3. Did Captain Hand tender for towing, in December, 1921, at $5.50 per hour?
4. Was he awarded the tender at a greater amount?
5. What are the names of others who tendered on this towing, and what were the amounts of their respective tenders?
6. Who opened these tenders submitted in November and December, 1921?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING (for the Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. Of the total paid by the Department of Railways and Canals for towing on the Welland canal since March 1, 1917, amounting to $26,035.57, Captain William Hand received $3,810.50 for this work. The total amount he received is made up as follows: 3 days at $100; 38 hours at $20; 22 hours at $17; 27 hours at $13.50; 127 hours at $10; 11 hours at $7; 80 hours at $5.50.

Return trip from Port Dalhousie to Port Maitland and Dunnville—$225.

2. Usually tugs are engaged at established rates, time not permitting the calling for tenders. When desirable to obtain quotations, the superintending engineer opens the letters and accepts the lowest offer.

3. Yes.

4. No.

5. John Harrigan—$6 per hour.

6. L. D. Hara, superintending engineer, Welland canal.

GRAIN ELEVATORS

Hon. Mr. MANION:

1. For what term is the lease of the G.T.P. elevator at Fort William, and the C.N.R. elevator at Port Arthur?
2. To whom are they leased?
3. When will their leases terminate?
4. Are tenders being called, or about to be called, for the leasing of these two elevators?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING (for the Minister of Railways and Canals):

1. The lease of the Grand Trunk elevator at Fort William is for a term of ten years; for the C.N.R. elevator at Port Arthur, one year.

2. The G.T.P. elevator is leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific Elevator Company, Limited; the C.N.R. elevator to the Port Arthur Elevator Company, Limited.

3. Grand Trunk Pacific lease will expire on August 1, 1930; C.N.R., on August 31, 1923.

4. For Port Arthur, yes; Fort William lease in effect until August 1, 1930.

COMMUTED PENSIONS

Mr. BLACK (Yukon):

1. Is it the intention of the government to introduce at this session legislation for the relief of returned men who have been induced to commute their pensions?
2. If so, of what nature will such relief be?

Hon. Mr. BELAND: No men were induced to accept final payment of pension. Pensioners who voluntarily accepted final payment, who are dissatisfied, have been afforded an opportunity to present their complaints to the government through the medium of the royal commission appointed to investigate questions relating to pensions and re-establishment, and it is expected the matter will be covered in the final report of the commission.

MORNING AND SATURDAY SITTINGS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.): I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the government have considered the advisability of having the House sit Saturday next, and also holding morning sittings beginning with to-morrow or at a very early day, with a view of reaching prorogation by the 28th or 29th of this month? Perhaps the Prime Minister would like to have the opinion of the House on this question.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government has had both these points under consideration. The government is as anxious as the members to prorogue before the end of the month, but we have not thought it necessary to begin morning sittings this week or to sit this Saturday. In all probability we shall begin morning sittings next week.

HALIBUT TREATY

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): I would like to ask the government what is proposed to be done in connection with the halibut treaty?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries): It will be submitted to the House in a few days.

CATTLE EMBARGO—INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. DONALD SUTHERLAND (South Oxford): I would like to make an inquiry of the government with reference to an order for return passed on the 12th of February last asking for the correspondence between the Canadian government and the government of Great Britain regarding the embargo against Canadian store cattle. I would also like to know if it is the intention of the government to withhold this information until after the provincial elections in Ontario are over. In view of the reckless statements being made by the Premier of Ontario and others—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND:—I think it is important that the return should be brought down.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The return will be brought down almost immediately. I may say to my hon. friend that it has been represented to the government through the High Commissioner that the British government desire that part of the correspondence should be regarded as confidential; however, the government will see to it that all the correspondence is presented to the right hon. leader of the Opposition and he may judge what in his opinion should be so regarded. I think that any correspondence that is not laid on the Table will be simply of a character that might create embarrassment overseas, but which will not affect the situation so far as this country is concerned.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT

The House again in committee on Bill No. 83, respecting banks and banking, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: I would ask the attention of the House for a moment to be permitted to return to section 80. A suggestion was made by the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Kellner) for a certain amendment to that section in regard to exemptions in the western country. In substance we desire to accept the hon. gentleman's amendment. The wording is slightly different in the amendment I propose, but I am quite sure he will be content with it. I beg to move that section 80 be amended by adding after the word "property," in the third line, the following:

> Provided, however, that no mortgage or hypotheque shall be taken, held or disposed of in respect to or be deemed to include any personal property which at the date of the coming into force of this act is by any statutory enactment exempt from seizure under writs of execution.

I think that is substantially the same as my hon. friend proposes.

Mr. KELLNER: The amendment is satisfactory to me. It is practically what I had intended.

Amendment (Mr. Kellner) withdrawn.

Mr MEIGHEN: The effect of this would be to disenable a man from mortgaging to a bank anything that would be exempt under the laws of the province in case of writ of execution.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, confined to personal property.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am disposed to think it will be more injurious to the public than to the banks.

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That was pointed out.

Amendment (Mr. Fielding) agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 92—Percentage chargeable for collection.

Mr. KELLNER: I would like to point out that in this section the maximum and minimum rates of discount are both fixed. When we were discussing section 91 yesterday the government argued that it would be impracticable to fix a maximum rate of interest. It seems to me very peculiar that in section 91 we decide that it would be wholly impossible for us to fix a maximum rate of interest and then in section 93 we fix both maximum and minimum rates of discount. I would suggest to the minister that it might be desirable to strike out section 93 entirely.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): There is no similarity between the rate charged in the way of exchange and the rate of interest charged. Section 91 referred to the rate of interest charged for the loan of money. This section refers to charges made for banking service.

Mr. COOTE: Might I ask the hon. member if it is fair to the bank to insist that they shall collect a cheque on some branch located, say, in the Yukon at the same rate as a cheque on a branch located in the same province?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is a matter of practice, I suppose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is there any restriction in the act as to what a bank may charge on foreign collections, which are practically all or nearly all in the United States?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think there is any special mention of foreign collections.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think there should be.

Section agreed to.

On section 99—Bank may sell assets to another bank.

Mr. SHAW: The sections from 98 on to 103 I think are the sections under which mergers of banks are consummated. As I read the sections they are in substantial conformity with the provisions of the act as it was revised in 1913. In other words there has been substantially no change. Now, in view of the fact that the banks have decreased from the number of twenty-four I think it was, to seventeen, does not the minister think it advisable that some restricting clauses should be enacted which would prevent an undue centralization of money?

Mr. FIELDING: I think my hon. friend would have difficulty in defining any way to accomplish that. I suppose he approaches this question from the point of view that a merger is necessarily a bad thing—

Mr. SHAW: Not at all.

Mr. FIELDING:—I am not able to concur in that view; I think there may be cases in which a merger is a very good thing. I have known cases in the past where a bank in fairly good position was on the down grade, and by being taken over by another bank it was saved; every good interest was promoted by the merger. There may be a similar case in the future. I am quite prepared to admit there may be need in the future of some mergers. I think as a rule they should be discouraged, but circumstances may arise which may render a merger necessary and proper. It has been suggested that a merger should only be made by a special act of parliament. I could not approve of that because the circumstances under which a merger may be deemed necessary may be very urgent, and to wait until parliament could convene might be to destroy the possibility of the merger going through and to lead to serious trouble. I am not anxious to promote mergers unnecessarily, but I cannot conceive of any arrangement that could be made which would be better than that which we already have.

Mr. SHAW: I observe that under the provisions of this bill the minister is empowered, if he considers it in the public interest, to give his consent to a merger. Well, during the last ten years one such application has been refused.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes?

Mr. SHAW: And the remaining applications, I think some six or seven have been granted. Now, what I should like to have if possible is an enunciation of the principles upon which the merger should be allowed. What is meant by this vague term "in the public interest?" For instance, I understand that the Bank of Hamilton sought to merge with some other bank, but the application was refused on the ground that it was not "in the public interest." Surely there should be some limitation to that very wide and vague term which means something to everybody and nothing to anybody in particular. It is like the phrase "adequate protection" which covers—

Mr. FIELDING: A multitude of sins.

Mr. SHAW: Yes, it covers a multitude of sins.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid that if my hon. friend were asked to suggest what conditions could be laid down he would have as much difficulty as I have in the matter. If it were a case of two large banks where the amalgamation involved a diminution, a material diminution, in competition it might be held there is no particularly good reason for the merger except some profit-making motive; there might be no public reason which would indicate its necessity. May I suggest to my hon. friend that all applications or suggestions for mergers do not come before the public in a formal way. Ministers of Finance are approached sometimes informally and are asked what they would think of a merger, and if they give an intimation that they do not think the merger is likely to be a useful thing that would probably be the end of it and there would be no formal application. As I said a moment ago I am not anxious to promote mergers but I quite realize, and I should expect, that if, after this bill passes, there should be applications for mergers, the minister, and the government acting co-ordinately with the minister, will decide what the circumstances call for and what ought to be refused. I really have difficulty in defining the matter more clearly than it is defined at present.

Mr. COOTE: I wonder if the minister would care to state whether he has received information already regarding further mergers in Canada or not?

Mr. FIELDING: I have no proposal before me for any merger nor do I anticipate any coming at any early date.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether in his opinion it is not in the interest of the public that there should be competition in banks as well as in all other organizations. The whole tendency is in the direction of mergers and I must say that I would look upon the movement with some degree of favour if we should see established a Bank of Canada. Such an institution would be a national bank, and more or less associated with smaller concerns. Something in that direction may be effected which would serve the interests of the public. Apparently, however, the tendency is to remove the competition that now exists in banking. Heretofore we have had a great many banks in this country serving the public, and when those desirous of getting accommodation cannot get service at one they may go to another. Still, the tendency is towards mergers, and if it continues there will not be very many banks left in the country. They will all be merged. The same thing has occurred in Great Britain. An enormous amount of merging has taken place there. I cannot say what the net result has been in Britain, but certainly there has been a great diminution in the number of banks, and the same thing is going on in many other countries. It is taking place in the United States. There have been mergers there, and especially mergers in connection with the railways. There have also been extensive mergers in Great Britain in connection with the railways. Where is this merging business going to end? We have got through a great war, and a great disturbance, and there have been many mergers and consolidations of this kind. Is it in the public interest that there should be these consolidations without having some explanation as to the underlying principles that ought to obtain in connection with mergers, especially of banks? While the minister says he has not heard anything of any likelihood of other mergers, there have been hints in the public press of other mergers coming, and coming in the city of Montreal. There may be other mergers under way which are directed from Toronto, and the public certainly have some interest in knowing what ought to be the underlying principles. Those principles, if possible, ought to be embodied in the Bank Act with which we are now dealing. I do not see why there should not be a more explicit statement by the minister not only on behalf of himself and the department but on behalf of the public, as to what the government's attitude is toward this question of bank mergers. There is rather an attitude on the part of the public that they do not know exactly what is transpiring and the extent to which these mergers are going on. If up to date they have been all right, well and good, but I do not think such is the case.

There is another thing that has transpired in connection with the revision of the Bank Act this session and that is a direct refusal to permit the creation of smaller banks. Now, in the United States, which is a country very similar to ours, they have a provision in their banking laws which allows the establishment of smaller banks ,and these banks have been of great service to particular localities. In these localities the capitalists get together and establish a small bank for the encouragement of their particular district and the local industries, and I think they have done very substantial service to the country. But we have gone so far as to say that we do not want small banks, and we are allowing mergers to go on without any direct definition of the underlying policy or principle which should govern. We have heard from members from the Maritime provinces what has happened in that particular part of Canada in regard to the disappearance of banks. One of the strongest banks in the Dominion today came from one of the Maritime provinces. The administration, for example, of the Bank of Nova Scotia—and it is one of the best and most successful administrations in Canada, has been moved from the Maritime provinces. We have heard Maritime province members say that they look with a great deal of suspicion upon the disappearance of the local banks. I do not know how many strong Maritime province banks have disappeared during the last twenty years. The present Finance Minister, and previous Ministers of Finance, could doubtless justify this, but there is a suspicion in the minds of the public that there should not be this widespread merging of banks, and that there should not be this direct refusal to grant charters to small banks without a declaration of policy by parliament. If there is one good reason why the bank charters should only be granted for one year it is because all these questions are coming up.

Before we renew the charters for ten years we should settle the underlying principle on which mergers are to be allowed. We have the refusal of parliament at this time of revision to make any proper provision for the establishment of smaller banks. I am a great believer in the success of the small banks in the United States, notwithstanding the disasters which accompanied the administration of some small banks. I challenge the proposition that it would be a good thing for Canada to have more bank mergers. Competition is a good thing for trade, as has been said by many exponents of fiscal policies. I subscribe to that doctrine.

Mr. BUREAU: How are you going to compete?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Do not merge them. Leave us what we have at least, or give us a good reason for having mergers.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I thought the hon. member believed in putting all our banks together?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I said that I would not object to one large Bank of Canada, and not only one national bank, but one national reserve for all the banks, and a national system of currency, instead of the creation and widening of the principle of bank-note issue. We are now strengthening the right of the banks to issue their own notes, and they actually destroy the national notes as fast as they can get them; they put them out of business and substitute their own notes for the use of trade. We are now making the third revision of the Bank Act; we are revising it for ten years, notwithstanding the disclaimers that have been made; we are doing all this without a declaration of the underlying principle that ought to govern bank mergers, without a real declaration in regard to what we ought to do in connection with the establishment of smaller banks, and we are declaring that this revision should be for ten years. If there is anything incumbent on parliament to-day it is that they should make a declaration in regard to these matters I have mentioned. We have a report presented by another committee which states, after careful study, that they are not prepared to say what ought to be done to widen the basis of credit, as it is called and this matter has been very carefully considered by the committee on Agricultural Conditions. In view of all these things, we ought to have a care at this time, and should not grant a renewal of the bank charters for ten years without an absolute declaration as to the underlying principles in the matters of mergers. Yet we are doing this at a time when there are hints of other mergers coming. I leave it to the members from the Maritime provinces to say whether they appreciate the disappearance of all the local banks which were doing business in their provinces. The world has been turned upside down by the war, and a new alignment is now under way, and I ask whether in view of the re-adjustment that is taking place, this new alignment should be on broad progressive lines, or in the direction of a conservative movement and the consolidation of capital in very few hands. If there is to be consolidation of capital, there will soon be a political movement in this and other countries for the distribution of the power of these immense consolidations of wealth, especially in connection with the banks, because the life of trade is banking, and the life of the farmer is banking. To-day the farmer is asking for an improved banking system, something he never had before and for which he has great need. One thing he asks for is the recognition of the smaller bank; yet the mergers are proceeding. The number of banks is now down to seventeen and later on the number will be down to twelve, then ten and perhaps nine. They will centre in Montreal; perhaps many of them will centre in Toronto. I maintain that it is not a good thing. In the Mother Country there are very powerful banks that have their influence outside of London, although the concentration is all in the direction of London, as the concentration of banking in the United States is in the direction of New York. In the States however they have something which we have not got, and they dealt with it in connection with their banking act. I refer to the creation of a national reserve bank system. I am not going into the detail of that, but I have read enough, have seen enough and studied enough to realize that the American national reserve bank system is the very thing we want in Canada.

Another thing we want is to have no issue except the national note for public business. If any public representative in the United States proposed that the banks should be allowed to destroy the national notes, what we call legal tenders—put them out of business and substitute their own issue in place of these notes—he would not get a hearing, and would not be re-elected. The tendency of the banking system in Canada is to put the national notes out of existence and substitute bank notes in their place. There is some reason for this, and I suspect that there is a great advantage to the banks in it. I maintain that there is some reason for the action of the banks when they take away the national notes and destroy them. They are putting the legal tenders out of business so fast that we will never see them. If the banks were very anxious to issue their notes for the purpose of serving the public, I would not have any great objection, but the whole tendency of the legislation this session has been to strengthen the banks, to increase their power, to destroy the national notes and the national reserve. I challenge the Minister of Finance, and I challenge his party and the banks of this country, to say why there should be two issues of notes in Canada, a bank note and a national note, and why the banks should be given an opportunity to put the national notes out of existence and substitute their own notes. That occurs very frequently.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Carried.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is the hon. member for Halifax a merger man? Does he speak on behalf of the government? That is the issue? It is very easy to say "carried." Of course they can carry it, if that is the attitude of the party. I will give the government credit for trying to make things a little better for the country, but they have not succeeded.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Somebody had better carry out the hon. member. Call in the carrier. I repeat that it is incumbent on the Minister of Finance to say whether he approves of mergers. So far he does not disapprove. But a public man in office, when his party has to assume the responsibility of carrying on the government, must deal with these questions as they arise. This question has arisen all over the country. Great scandals have been started in connection with one merger and we have not got the explanation of it yet. We cannot get it. We cannot get the witnesses before parliament. I am not going to name the merger, but hon. members know that one of the finest banks in the country disappeared not long ago. It was a splendid bank and had customers all over the country. The bank gave these customers a good service, and in the time of war these people were let out. Probably the bank that took over this bank took over the customers. But that is not a good merger. I hope before this discussion is over—and I am quite sure it is not over just yet, and that the section will not be carried in a moment—that we will have a definition of policy in regard to mergers and a further enlightenment as to whether it is the policy of the government, now that we are revising the Bank Act for ten years, that there should be two sytems of bank reserves in this country, and two issues of notes, namely bank notes and national notes. We want a final declaration from the government whether it would not be wise for this parliament under present circumstances to renew the Bank Act for another year or for two years, in order to allow parliament to take up all these questions of mergers and revisions, even the establishment of a national bank reserve system, and in connection with that a system of credit for the farmers. They want that, and they ought to unite in order to secure it. A national bank reserve system and a system of credit for the farmers ought to be part of this policy, or you will not afford relief where relief is asked for by the people of the West. For a moment I am going to leave the discussion, in order to give my hon. friends from the Maritime provinces an opportunity to say whether they are pleased with the mergers which have taken place, and to give some of the other members of the House an opportunity to say whether they think that for ten years longer we should prevent smaller banks from getting charters on a much smaller capitalization.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I join my voice with those who have pointed out to the government the danger of permitting the continuation of mergers in this country? I have little to say as to the merits of concentration. I am not prepared to argue in favour of or against it at the present time; but the people are not at all satisfied that it is in the best interest of Canada that there should be a steady concentration of the money of the country in the hands of fewer and fewer men. The danger must be obvious to hon. gentlemen, when the control of capital is placed in the hands of private individuals who are not always actuated by the interest of the nation, but are more frequently actuated by their own gain. I think I may speak at any rate for my own constituents when I say that they are absolutely opposed, possibly for their own reasons, to the continuation of mergers in this country.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not think mergers can be stopped. I think the attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is correct in this regard. At the same time, I do not think they should be encouraged for their own sake. Mergers are merely a passing phase of the economic system. I look forward to a time when they will be merged to the uttermost. Then, perhaps, we shall discover how to decentralize them in the interest of the people. I hope that before the next bank revision, we shall have only one bank in Canada and one financial king upon the throne. Then, perhaps, we shall be in a position to do something better. Therefore, I hope the Minister of Finance will encourage as much as he possibly can the growing tendency to merge.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): We are dealing with a clause relating to the purchase of the assets of a bank. People designate this as a "merger," and this word has been made unpopular, being often unfairly and improperly used. Hon. gentlemen talk about a merger as if it were a thing that could be prevented. The Minister of Finance has stated the government's policy, which is a sound one, namely, that it is not disposed to consent to the merging of banks each of which occupies a sound position merely for the sake of their being merged or for the sake of profit-making. But we must have in this act some provision whereby a bank may purchase the assets of another bank. Most mergers that have taken place in Canada were induced by the fact that the selling bank was in, or approaching, an insolvent position and the management were not disposed to carry on business further. It is in the interest of depositors and shareholders that there be a legal procedure to dispose of the assets of one bank to another. There could be only one other procedure for a bank approaching insolvency to adopt, and that would be to wind up; and it is preferable to give such a bank an opportunity of disposing of its assets under favourable terms to a bank already in existence. It would be a great mistake on the part of parliament to prevent that from being done. Further, I should like to point out that a bank cannot continue right up to a position of insolvency as an ordinary business concern might do. The slightest intimation of a weak position by a bank is the sign for withdrawal of deposits, and loss of credit, which mean the destruction of the bank. Personally, I have never been able to understand the criticism which has been directed against the merging of banks. Of course, we all believe that banks which occupy a strong solvent position should not be permitted to merge. When their solvency is threatened, when their business is on the decline and is bound to end some time, they should have the right under the law to merge with other banks.

On section 101—Agreement of sale to be submitted to selling shareholders at meeting.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps I might say a word or two anent the remarks of the hon. member who has just sat down (Mr. Maclean), as this clause has to do with the carrying out of provisions of sale. My conception of the position is this. The attitude of the government against the merging of banks, while not obdurate and not absolutely antagonistic, should be just as close to that as there is any possibility of getting. I do not think it is right that there should go out word that as soon as a bank feels itself to be approaching insolvency, it can apply for and obtain consent to a merger. There might be conditions under which insolvency would be the best course. It is conceivable that a bank might bring itself into, at least, a seeming position of approaching insolvency in order that merging might result. But, even if it does not do that, the utmost resistance should generally be given against a merger until it is found to be absolutely impossible to do anything else, short of definite insolvency. I believe that was the attitude of the late Minister of Finance. I know representations were made that the descent to insolvency had commenced, where still resistance was given, and where finally there was no merger because there was no consent, and at the same time there was no insolvency I do not say that the directors, in the case I have in mind, were insincere in their representations that merging was absolutely necessary; but I know the resistance was successful in preventing a merger, and that the trend of events did not finally reach insolvency.

What I want to say is this. In my judgment, the fewer mergers we have the better, that is, of the banks that we have to-day My information is that in England they have fewer than we have in Canada, although they have a much larger population. Of course they have a somewhat different system. But the fewer we have the better, and the more adverse the attitude of the government and the Minister of Finance is towards mergers, the better for us. At the same time I quite admit that the hon. member who has just sat down is correct when he says that there comes a time when merging is the only way that can prevent very great hardship to shareholders or possible loss to depositors—in a word, to prevent the very things which the safeguards of the Bank Act are intended to prevent. But it should be the last resort, and the very last resort; and the bank should understand that such is the attitude of the government. It should understand that it is only as a rescue from inevitable insolvency that a merger can be assented to. I can think now of no other justifiable case.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would add just a word or two after what the right hon.

gentleman has said. There should, I think, be some provision in the Bank Act to obviate the necessity for any banks approaching insolvency, which is the very thing complained about now. Probably the best safeguard against such a condition would lie in still more stringent regulations under the act. After some little observation of bank mergers in this country I have come to the conclusion that provision should be made in the act for an earlier examination into the condition of banks. Most of the mergers that have taken place ought to have been known either directly or indirectly to the Deputy Minister of Finance who, not by any public examination but by an examination of some sort, should have a way of finding out a year or two ahead the exact state of affairs in connection with the banks in order to prevent the things that lead to insolvency. As it is, we have no such provision. That is one reason why the Bank Act should be extended for only one year, so that at another session of parliament we might deal with this question, which is associated with the creation of a national reserve bank system and a system of credit for the convenience of farmers.

Mr. FIELDING: With most of what my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) said regarding mergers I am heartily in accord. But he was perhaps too rigid in his statement that a merger should be allowed only when a bank could prove that it was on the eve of insolvency. That, I think, is too strong a statement to make. I have in mind the case of a merger which is not by any means recent having occurred some years ago, in connection with which the bank that was absorbed was entirely solvent when turned over to the other bank—it was not insolvent, nor indeed was it on the edge of insolvency. The directors, capable business men, reviewing the whole situation, saw however that the bank was on the decline, and that the day was coming when it could not be successful. They realized that if they persevered their shareholders would lose money, and in good time, before insolvency was absolutely in sight, they asked for a merger. I
4 p.m. do not know who was Minister of Finance at the time, I do not believe it was in my day; but they got permission and the merger took place. I am not dissenting from what my right hon. friend has said, but I would not suggest that a bank should prove that it was absolutely insolvent before being allowed a merger. The whole situation should be reviewed from the point of view of not desiring mergers; but at the same time you do not want to sacrifice any existing institutions or destroy the property of shareholders if by allowing a merger in time you can safeguard that property.

On section 107—Further conditions.

Mr. KELLNER: Has any effort been made to withdraw the notes of the Merchants Bank which are in circulation?

Mr. FIELDING: I am not quite aware whether any special arrangement has been made to have them withdrawn, but they are as good as the wheat, there can be no objection to them.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They certainly are not good to eat.

Mr. FIELDING: The notes of the Merchants Bank are as good as those of any other bank because the Bank of Montreal has agreed to redeem them.

Mr. KELLNER: I was not questioning the validity of the notes, I simply wanted to know what was the policy of the government in a case of that kind. Is it the government's policy to let such notes circulate until they are all finally in?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): As they are presented they will be redeemed. I do not suppose there are many of them in circulation now.

Mr. KELLNER: I understood it used to be the function of the Merchants Bank to cancel them.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): They will now be presented to the Bank of Montreal.

On schedule G.

Mr. COOTE: I would like to ask the minister for a little information on this schedule. I refer to paragraph 2, "Balance due to Dominion government after deducting advances for credits, pay-lists, etc." I would like to ask the minister what method is used in his department in allocating deposits to the different banks. Or, is there any such method?

Mr. FIELDING: There is no special rule in the matter. The chief banker of the government is the Bank of Montreal, but we have more or less business with all the banks of Canada. Sometimes the convenience of the various departments in making their deposits influences the matter.

Mr. COOTE: Are advances under the Finance Act shown in this column at the present time? I am referring to the return for February 28th which was posted in the first report of the standing committee on Banking and Commerce. It shows a total balance due the Dominion government of $32,000,000. Does this include advances to the bank under the Finance Act?

Mr. FIELDING: My recollection is that the advances under the Finance Act would come under the list of securities and not be included in that item.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It would appear under paragraph 3 of the liabilities.

Mr. COOTE: It just struck me as being rather significant—that one bank is shown in this return to have $10,832,000 of a balance due the Dominion government out of a total balance due the Dominion government of $32,000,000.

Mr. FIELDING: In the new form of return there is a special item showing advances under the Finance Act.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell me whether this includes such advances?

Mr. FIELDING: I think not. My impression is they would appear under a different heading, but hereafter they will have a special heading of their own.

Mr. COOTE: Just what is meant by item No. 11 under Liabilities, "Bills payable." The total shown in this return under that heading is $10,364,000.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Bills payable to the Dominion government?

Mr. COOTE: I do not know whom these bills are payable to. I would like a little information from the minister.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): If those are the bank returns that my hon. friend is quoting from, that means bills payable by other banks and by the public, I presume.

Mr. COOTE: This is under "Liabilities."

Mr. HANSON: It is a matter of acceptances on the part of the bank.

Mr. FIELDING: There might be bills payable on both sides of the account. The bank might have in its liabilities certain outstanding bills.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me rather significant that the total of bills payable by Canadian banks is $10,364,000 and of this amount one bank has $7,773,000. Could the minister give me any explanation of that?

[Mr. Fielding.]

Mr. FIELDING: That is under "Liabilities?"

Mr. COOTE: Yes, item No. 11.

Mr. MITCHELL: It is item No. 12 in the amended bill.

Mr. FIELDING: The return shows the liabilities of the bank to all creditors, and the banks might have bills payable to other banks. This does not refer to the government at all. It refers to the ordinary transactions between the banks and the public.

Mr. COOTE. Then might I refer to Item No. 10 "Due to banks and banking correspondents elsewhere than in Canada and the United Kingdom." This return shows a total borrowing by Canadian banks from outside banks of $34,000,000, and of this amount one bank has $16,000,000. Can the minister give us any explanation of why one of our Canadian banks should have such a large amount borrowed from the other banks?

Mr. FIELDING: I could not give my hon. friend any explanation without inquiry from the bank. It is a matter between the banks themselves. It is not a matter between the bank and the government. These are the ordinary commercial transactions.

Mr. COOTE: I just wondered if it had been drawn to the minister's attention by any officer in his department. This is a very large amount for any bank to have under that heading.

Mr. RYCKMAN: I might be able to offer a word of explanation. That item includes all the amounts which the correspondents of the bank have on deposit. Take a foreign bank: it will have sums on deposit in Toronto, Montreal and all through this country, and the Canadian bank has to show those sums on deposit under Item No. 11 "Due to banks and banking correspondents elsewhere than in Canada and the United Kingdom." Every deposit that a bank has from any correspondent is put under this item. It does not represent borrowing at all.

Preamble agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: May I remark that an hon. gentleman who differs from us with regard to this bill has intimated, as they have been kind enough to facilitate the passing of the bill to-day, that they want it to be understood that on the third reading they will propose four amendments. It is expected they will not be debatable but they want to have recorded votes upon them. It may be as well understood that when the third reading is called that is what is expected by way of procedure.

Mr. HANSON: When will the third reading be?

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps to-morrow. If not, the next day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that I understood the minister aright. He said that he anticipated on the third reading there would be four amendments and that they would not be debatable.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not say they would not be debatable. The hon. gentleman who gave us notice of them said that his expectation was they would not be debated. Of course, they are all debatable. I understood that it was not their intention to debate them, however, but they wanted their votes recorded. Every one of them, of course, is debatable.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish simply to place my position before this committee. If hon. gentlemen opposite or hon. gentlemen to my right take it upon themselves to debate these amendments I shall reserve the right to myself of reply.

Mr. FIELDING: Anybody can cause a debate who moves an amendment.

Bill reported, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. GOOD: May I ask the Minister of Finance what time to-morrow the third reading will be taken?

Mr. FIELDING: If it is brought up to-morrow it will be the first order.

Mr. GOOD: In the afternoon?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I wish to express the hope—I do not put it in the form of a request because I have nothing to back the request with—that the Bank bill will not be called, in that case, until next week. I do so merely for a personal reason; I should like to be present when the amendments are moved and the vote recorded on each one. However, that is not a sufficient reason for making a request.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not sure but that it might be convenient to myself not to proceed with it to-morrow. I do not see any reason why it could not be understood that it would be made the first order for Monday. I would be quite content with that, only the quicker the better. In view of the suggestion —I will not call it a request—made by the right hon. gentleman, I am content that we should make the third reading the first order for next Monday. That is ample notice.

Mr. GOOD: Monday is election day in Ontario and a good many Ontario members will be away.

Mr. FIELDING: What is my hon. friend's suggestion?

Mr. GOOD: I say Monday is election day in Ontario and a great many Ontario members will be absent. It would be a very unfortunate day to choose.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As far as I am concerned I am quite prepared to go on with the third reading now.

Mr. FIELDING: Would hon. gentlemen opposite be content to proceed now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. FIELDING: Very good. Then Mr. Speaker, by consent of the House I ask for the third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent, Mr. Fielding moves, seconded by Mr. Motherwell, that Bill No. 83, an Act respecting banks and banking, be now read a third time. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. GOOD: I beg to move in amendment as follows:

> That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> That Bill 83 be not now read a third time but that it he referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions that subsection 1 of section 5 of said bill be amended by substituting the word "twenty-four" for the word "thirty-three" in the fourth line thereof, and that subsection 2 of said section be amended by substituting the word "twenty-four" for the word "thirty-three" in the third line thereof.

I have a few remarks to make in that connection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Who is the seconder?

Mr. GOOD: The hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey). I had intended some days ago speaking at some length on the situation that presents itself in connection with the revision of the Bank Act, and the granting of bank charters for a period of ten years; but I have concluded, after seeing the way things have been going during the last day or two, that it would be useless and inexpedient to speak of any of the matters I had in mind. I shall take another opportunity elsewhere to put myself on record.

Now, the substance of the amendment has already been debated in Committee of the Whole and therefore there is no need at present to cover the ground again. But I should just like to say, Mr. Speaker, that in my judgment this matter, and the fundamental questions which are involved, have not been given any adequate consideration in the committee on Banking and Commerce. The economic situation in Canada is admittedly very serious at the present time, and that fact, together with all the circumstances which were outlined the other day in Committee of the Whole makes it highly desirable that the bank charters be not extended for the full period of ten years. Of course, if it is generally understood, as has been to some extent intimated, that the Bank Act is open for revision at any time, that may be satisfactory; but it has not, I think, been clearly and definitely so understood, and for the purpose of clearing up what has been left in a rather indeterminate condition I think this amendment is necessary.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there has been, perhaps, a good deal of feeling in the committee over some of the proceedings. I have personally felt that investigation, very necessary investigation, has been stifled. I have felt that at times very necessary discussion has been choked off, or that an attempt has been made to choke it off. I want to say further that the opposition to the course which has been taken by a number of the Progressive members has seemed to me to be entirely unworthy of those concerned. In that connection, and in conclusion—for I do not wish to speak at length—I want to refer to an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Standard of 9th June, which was referred to yesterday, but not read, by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). I should like to submit this editorial to the judgment of the House as the sort of thing which we ought not to have in discussions on any public question. I think, Mr. Speaker, I am in order in reading this editorial or a part of it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member will find that according to paragraph 202 of Beauchesne's parliamentary rules and forms:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the House and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

The hon. member will find that this is supported by Bourinot, page 336.

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Speaker, referring to the point of order, it seems to me that if you give the interpretation you seem inclined to give, it would cut out the reading of comment in any newspaper upon the proceedings of this House, or on any matter that is being dealt with here. I must confess I do not quite understand the rule. There is nothing in this editorial that reflects especially upon the integrity of any particular member so far as I know. It is simply comment such as we see continually in the public press upon the proceedings in this House.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Does it reflect upon some hon. gentlemen who are in the House?

Mr. GOOD: Not by name.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Does it insinuate something in regard to them? If not, perhaps it would be in order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Perhaps the article was written by a humourist and therefore should not be regarded as serious.

Mr. GOOD: Do you rule me out of order in advance, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: I am simply directing the attention of the hon. member to the pitfall. I do not know what the contents of the article are or the subject to which it refers. If the hon. member will give the gist of the editorial to the House, I might be in a better position to rule as to its admissibility.

Mr. GOOD: I would be very glad, Sir, if you would give me permission to read the editorial and you could stop me if at any time you thought I should be stopped.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Go on.

Mr. GOOD: The editorial, only part of which I shall read is as follows:

> Time to digest the evidence—

This has reference to the position which the Progressives had taken in asking for more time to consider the evidence placed before the committee.

> Time to digest the evidence is obviously a ruse, because one part of the evidence is indigestible save by progressive gastric juices and the other part formed a lump in their stomachs long ago. It is this lump, rejected by commonsense and good business, which gives rise to all their windy futilities in committee and in the House. The evidence has been chewed and rechewed by the paper money theorists time and again and any further chewing will not make it taste or smell better.
> The brethren from the West, who are bent on turning the banks inside out for their own benefit, are in no hurry to get home. They can make more money at Ottawa. It takes a lot of wheat to equal $4,000, almost all of it net profit and no particular toil involved.

I will omit a few sentences referring to two of the members of the committee by name. The editorial continues:

> Of course there is no danger of the government being defeated by the Progressives. They are not anxious for an election which would lead them into the wilderness, and no doubt the boldest held their breath when the government squeezed through with a majority of eight on the budget. But their pose is in peril and a display of firmness on the part of all the sound thinkers in the House will soon bring them to terms. We can also depend on the hot weather to take the starch out of their souls and the stiffening out of their necks.

Such being the case it looks as if Liberals and Conservatives could not do better than bury the hatchet for the nonce get together on a non-partisan measure—as the Bank Act is and press it to a vote. What the Progressives might think about it is comparatively unimportant, but it is important that this land of Canada should have a sound banking system.

I hope my reading of the editorial does not transgress the rules of the House. I just wanted to cite this as a sample of the sort of opposition which we sometimes have to meet, but I am not greatly worried over this kind of opposition.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is a misunderstanding. I thought it proper to let the hon. member read the gist or the substance of the editorial to the House. As a matter of fact it is out of order, because it has no bearing on the present amendment moved by the hon. member, but I must say that what the hon. member has just read might be the subject of a question of privilege, because it contains a reference to some hon. members of the House, but it has no bearing on the present amendment.

Mr. GOOD: I am not as familiar with the rules of the House as I would like to be, and if this particular matter should have been referred to under another heading, I must, of course, apologize for bringing it up in this connection. I submit, however, that it has a very distinct relevance to the question under discussion, because the amendment is for a reference of the bill back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions as to the amending of clause 5, and the editorial which I have read seems to me to have specific reference to the amendment which I have just moved in that it refers to our claim made hitherto, as to the need for further time for considering this question. However, I do not think there is any need at the present time to prolong the discussion on this matter. It received a good deal of ventilation in the Committee of the Whole the other day, and I presume every one here has made up his mind in regard to it; so that I shall say no more.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Before the question is put, I want to put, in a word or two, the reasons for my vote. I cannot review to any advantage what the hon. mover of the amendment has said. I was not a member of the committee and I do not know personally of its conduct. He charges that there was a stifling of discussion and blocking in that committee. I hope the allegation is not correct; I would be sorry to think it was correct as against the Chairman, or indeed against the majority of those present. But, remembering that it was not long since I was charged with being a stifler and a blocker myself, I want to be charitable to those who, the assailants of that day, are now charged with the same offence. I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that you did not enforce the rule by prohibiting the reading of the editorial, because I remember that that rule has been always more honoured in the breach than in the observance. In fact, I can recall the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), at a very recent date, quoting the Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Gazette in support of the theory that he made a very excellent budget speech; consequently I am glad it was not enforced on this occasion against the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good). As to the allegations in the editorial about Liberals and Conservatives getting together in order to defeat the Progressives, I have to say that I am unmoved. I purpose to take my position on this clause on the same principles I endeavour to apply with regard to all public questions, that is on my judgment of its merits. From that judgment I do not intend to be swayed either by the adhesion of a proselyte or by the antagonism of a foe. The question is whether the act should be extended for ten years or only for one. To commence with, unless there is strong reason to the contrary, it is, of course, presumable that it is better to extend it for ten years. If one-year extensions would serve the purpose of the country generally speaking as well as ten, it is presumable that they would have been adopted long ago.

It does not take any reflection to convince one that one-year extensions would not be favourable to the conduct of public business. I do not know how public business could be carried on if there was a sword of suspension hanging over the whole financial fabric of the nation that might be brought down every twelve months—

Mr. GOOD: May I ask a question?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes.

Mr. GOOD: Does the hon. member understand the amendment to mean that the charters shall be granted year by year?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I was merely saying that it was presumable that, unless there were strong reasons to the contrary, it was better for public business that the extension be for ten years, and I fortify that by saying that otherwise it would have been the practice of this parliament to grant yearly extensions. The reason yearly extensions are not granted is because, under yearly extensions, anything in the nature of stability and continuity of business would be impossible.

But hon. members say, here is a special case, and there should now be only a yearly extension for this one time. I listened to arguments the other day in support of that contention. As I grasped them—and I may not have succeeded in getting them all, or perhaps in getting any of them right, although I listened to four or five speeches—they may be summarized as follows: First, that there is in contemplation on the part of those who favour the amendment and, perhaps, generally, certain legislation looking to the establishment of rural credit banks or some other system that will take care of the demand for loans now not capable of being met by either the loan companies or the banks, and that if when it comes to the point of considering such legislation, we are confronted with a definite ten-year extension of the Bank Act, we shall not be in favourable circumstances to establish this competing institution. I have stated this in the best terms I can. Stated in that way, I do not see any force to it. Wherein will conditions be unfavourable for its establishment, conditions that would be favourable if there was an extension for only one year? One hon. member suggested that the funds would be in the financial control, as he expressed it, in the hands, of the banks. Any funds in the banks at that time are withdrawable at once or on very short notice, and if depositors, the owners of the funds, wish to transfer them to the new institution, I do not know what would stand in their way, nor do I know of anything that would stand in their way that would not likewise stand in their way if a yearly instead of ten year extension were given. What is meant by "financial control?" There has to be somebody in control of our banks, but there would be just the same control on a one-year as on a ten-year extension. I do not know whether I grasp the argument as sought to be presented. Perhaps I do not. It really does not strike me as being capable of expression in a plausible way at all.

But it was said, if at that time the heads of our banking institutions find themselves secure behind a ten-year extension, they will not be disposed to come to parliament and to give the assistance that might be expected of them towards the working out of legislation for a rural credit system. This is more plausible, but I do not think it has force. For myself, I do not like to think the establishment of a rural credit system would at any time depend upon the assistance it would get from those who are now responsible for our chartered banks. I think it will have to get its inspiration and its support mainly from other sources. I do not think it will be wanting in either inspiration or support because the established institutions do not look with favour on it. It seems to me that we shall be just as well equipped a year from now as we are to-day or a year from now as we would be in ten, though there is an extension for ten years. I think the management of the banks will give us what is their opinion at that time, nowithstanding the fact that they have a ten-year extension; but as managers of going institutions that have been established for a long time, their opinions will naturally, and conscientiously, be formed in the atmosphere of those institutions, and they will not be favourable to something which is in the nature of an intrusion.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In the case of the establishment of a rural credit system, if the banks were unfavourable, where would the right hon. member suggest that we could get the money from?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think a rural credit system will ever be established on the basis of a forced extraction of money from the banks. It could not be established on that basis. Consequently, it will not matter at all whether the answer to the hon. member's question is, "yea" or, "nay." In a word, so far as money is going to be necessary for rural credits, the will of the owner of the money will have to be brought into a favourable state of mind to apply the money to that purpose and towards that institution.

Mr. IRVINE: Would the right hon. gentleman be prepared to admit that if the bank charters had not been extended for ten years, the bankers would be more likely to take a co-operative attitude with a rural credit system, in the way of supplying the requirements?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think that will make a bit of difference to them. I do not expect they will be in a co-operative attitude at any time; I do not think the rural credit system depends upon that at all, it depends upon the soundness of the priciples on which it is worked out. One of those principles can never be the compulsory taking of money from banks or from any individuals whatsoever.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who suggested the compulsory taking of any money from the banks?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth). He wanted to know where we were going to get the money from if the banks' charter were extended. The question has no meaning unless it is intended to get the money by compulsorily taking it from the banks.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not think that inference is fair.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know, then, what the intention was.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): In the United States they have made the national reserve bank system, every bank, the Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of the Treasury—as a matter of fact, the whole banking system of the United States—a part of the rural credit system. It might be necessary to do so. I shall have something to say later, but I am just intervening to say that, so to speak, this is a part of the national banking system of the United States to-day.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. gentleman says that the national banking system was under some compulsion to the reserve banks. Undoubtedly. I do not know that it was under any compulsion to the rural credit system.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Yes, it is.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not think it is. I do not pretend to have very recent knowledge at hand, but at one time I went pretty thoroughly into the question. I do not think the rural credit system of the United States rests in any degree at all upon compulsory contribution of banks. If that could be established, there would be some force in the observations of some hon. gentlemen who have argued in favour of the amendments. I fancy I have reviewed all that has been argued in favour of the amendment, save one observation which had to do with another sphere of the discussion altogether. It was stated that there was this overdue investigation into the conduct of certain officers of one of our banks, the Merchants Bank, and that the extension should be temporary as a lever to make certain investigations. Again I do not see the force of the lever. I do not see how a temporary or a ten-year extension has anything to do with bringing about, or deferring, or squelching, an investigation. It does not appear to me that the objects sought to be gained, though they may be valuable, will be in the least prejudiced by the ten-year extension. Very well, unless there is a forcible reason, one is not justified in voting for a one-year extension. This has been a pretty barren session, but I do not want to contribute to make it more barren than it appears likely to result now. If we have a one-year extension, we have to go over all the work that this committee went through this year. We shall likely have plenty to do next session without that. From what I have learned of the committee, I believe it certainly went very laboriously and, I am disposed to think, pretty thoroughly about its task. Do we want to face next session with the whole thing to be reviewed once more? If we do, it means just that much less attention next session to other business that is going to demand all the time of hon. members of this House. Besides, it is undoubtedly correct—and I would not do justice to myself if I did not say it—that anything in the nature of a twelve-months' extension at this period in our commercial history, when a strain is being felt everywhere, would result in an instability and a sense of insecurity, the reflex action of which would come right back upon the borrowing public of the country. Of that there seems to my mind to be no reasonable or logical doubt whatever. Consequently, I feel like voting against the amendment and in support of the clause as it stands.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr Speaker—

Mr. RINFRET: Have you anything new to say?

Mr. COOTE: Yes, I assure the hon. member that I shall have something new to say before I am through. I had no intention of speaking on this occasion, but the remarks of the leader of the Opposition necessitate my rising. I regret that the right hon. gentleman was not a member of the committee on Banking and Commerce so that he could have seen just how the inquiry was conducted. I understood him to say that he thought we had gone into the matter thoroughly. Well, I may observe that we went into the matter as thoroughly as we were allowed to do. In the subcommittee of the committee on Banking and Commerce, which was charged with the duty of calling witnesses, an application was made at its first meeting, I think, to have Mr. Macarow of the Merchants Bank called to give evidence. That application was refused.

Mr. MITCHELL: If the hon. member will permit me, I might inform the House that Mr. Macarow's name was not suggested at the first meeting. It was suggested subsequently and the committee decided to postpone the decision as to whether or not he should be called. The subcommittee did not meet again and the matter was dealt with by the general committee.

Mr. COOTE: In that case I am corrected by the hon. member. At any rate, the fact remains that the application to have this gentleman called was refused. That subcommittee also recommended that Mr. Baker be requested to give evidence before the committee, but Mr. Baker did not appear. Later on it was moved in the committee by one hon. member that this gentleman should be summoned to give evidence; the committee voted that proposition down and we were not allowed to have the benefit of Mr. Baker's evidence. Sir John Aird and Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor both appeared before the committee and if I remember correctly on both occasions the chairman of the committee gave the assurance that these gentlemen would be back again. The questioning of these witnesses was largely in regard to the investigation, in connection with the motion of the hon. member for Calgary East (Mr. Irvine), into the basis of credit, and not very generally in regard to the Bank Act as it was presented to us. Later on in the committee I moved that these gentlemen be recalled with the particular purpose in view of securing some details of the cost of running their western branches, in view of the statement they had made that they could not carry on under a maximum rate of interest of 7 per cent. This request was rejected by the committee, although, as I say, we had the assurance of the chairman previously given that the witnesses would be before the committee again. It was also moved that a witness should be called who was familiar with the operations of the federal reserve bank system in the United States, something entirely new within the last ten years. The committee, I think, took a very unreasonable attitude and absolutely refused to call any witness, although I believe that in the revision of the Bank Act ten years ago several bankers from the United States were called, and that at a time when the federal reserve system was not yet in existence in the United States.

The principal question, it seems to me, has not been touched upon, and that is the very serious situation that exists to-day in the banking business of Canada, and the utter inadequacy of the present Bank Act to deal with that situation. I made the further request that a statement be called for from the banks of Canada showing their losses by provinces during the last two years. The question did not come to a formal vote in the committee. I was requested by several members not to press the motion because it would not be wise to do so, that if the losses were made known they might be so large as to shake the confidence of the public in our banks. I yielded to that view. But if that is the case I do contend that the present act, as we have passed it through the committee to-day, is totally inadequate to deal with the situation.

Before I sit down I want to say something new for the benefit of my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Rinfret). Has that hon. gentleman heard that a certain chartered bank in Canada has borrowed to the extent of quite a few million dollars from the firm of J. P. Morgan & Company of New York? If so, does he think that such a situation in Canada, which is brought about under the present Bank Act—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): What has that to do with your motion? What is wrong with the borrowing?

Mr. COOTE: I wanted to introduce something new for the benefit of the hon. member.

Mr. FIELDING: It should be something relevant.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It should be something relevant and sensible.

Mr. COOTE: The bankers told the committee that they had plenty of money to loan, but I am told that the conditions are such as are suggested by the statement I have made. I do not know as to the accuracy of this report, of course, but it is possible that if the committee had carried on its investigation as fully as we wished they might have found that what I have stated is substantially true. Now, I do not think that the situation in Canada is so good as to warrant the hasty passage of this act. As was pointed out on a former occasion by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Bird), our banks carried on business from 1910 to 1913 under a charter which was renewed yearly and I never heard that there was any feeling of insecurity at that time on that account.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Centre Winnipeg): Just as the leader of the Opposition sat down I was about to rise to explain in a word what I had in mind when I asked the question I did while he was speaking. It was not my thought that any force should be applied to the banks in order that they should help any rural credit scheme. But, as I understand it, under present conditions the banks have very largely a monopoly of the deposits which are made by the people throughout the country, and if this rural credit scheme would in any way tend to take these deposits from the banks I am quite sure there would be a decided opposition, as there has been in some of the provinces which have attempted to establish rural credits; and there might very well be an objection that there was more or less an infringement on the recognized rights of the banks. Further, there is the question of currency. The banks have the right to issue currency, and they are the only institution outside the government that have that right. It is quite conceivable that if a rural credit scheme were put forward it might be necessary to issue some other kind of currency than we have at the present time. I can understand that we might, in that connection, be met with the argument of certain vested interests; but more important than even that is the question of the giving of credit. It was said again and again during the course of the investigation that the giving of long-term credits was not a part of legitimate banking business, but I cannot see how we can arbitrarily distinguish between the kinds of credits that may be given. When it is urged that we should have short-term credits or that we should have only those kinds of credits that can be readily cared for by the banks, I can see that there may be very considerable danger of invading the province which the banks have claimed for themselves. By this act we are granting certain privileges to these institutions which, if we later attempt to introduce something like a rural credit scheme, may be found to be seriously infringed upon. That is what I had in view when I asked the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) where the money would come from if it should be found wise to introduce some such scheme in the near future.

5 p.m.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Mr. Speaker, while I am in sympathy with the motion, I am an absolute believer in the supremacy of parliament in the matter of legislation; in the right of parliament to change the Bank Act or any other act at any time. I may add that we shall be forced to change the Bank Act, in my opinion, at a very much earlier day than ten years from now, having regard to the circumstances that are developing. So I am here to vote for this limitation in order to allow parliament to deal with the question, but I point out that we have the right to reopen it at any time—the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has stated it; the chairman of the Banking committee (Mr. Maclean, Halifax), has stated it. Parliament has the supreme right to reopen any question, notwithstanding any limitation that may be imposed at this time. The Criminal Code can be amended at any time; so can the Railway Act. But privilege is coming forward and saying that there shall be an amendment to the Bank Act only once in ten years. Well, that is not in the British North America Act; that has not formed part of the parliamentary policy of free people, of people subject to the democratic and the progressive rule that we have here and that they have in the Mother Country. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and the hon. members of the committee generally will, I am sure, agree with me in this view. We are giving now the greatest privilege that can be given in connection with our financial institutions, and while I agree that there should be stability I object to its being stated here to-day that a privilege should be created for the banks of this country for a period of ten years and should not be interfered with during that time.

The House divided on the proposed amendment of Mr. Good, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. SHAW: Last evening when the House was in committee on this bill, I proposed what occurred to me to be an effective interest rate controlling section in substitution for section 91, which is admittedly legally ineffective for the purpose for which it is intended. I do not propose to argue the question again, I will simply submit my amendment which reads as follows:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

That Bill 83 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions that subsection 1 of section 91 of said bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(2) The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note, bill or other evidence of debt.

(4) In any suit, action or other proceeding concerning a bank loan wherein it is alleged that the amount of interest paid or claimed exceeds the rate of 7 per centum per annum, the court may reopen the transaction and take an account between the parties, and may, notwithstanding any statement or settlement of account, or any contract purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation, reopen any account already taken between the parties, and relieve the person under obligation to pay from payment of any sum in excess of the legal rate of interest and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the bank to repay it, and may set aside either wholly or in part, or revise, or alter, any security given in respect of the transaction.

Mr. SPEAKER: Call in the members.

Mr. BELAND: The names will be recorded.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question now is on the main motion.

Mr. COOTE: I desire to move an amendment to the main motion. The amendment is the same as the one I moved last night, and it is to the same effect as the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw), excepting that the rate mentioned is 8 per cent instead of 7 per cent. I do not propose to speak on the amendment as the matter was thoroughly debated from the affirmative side last evening. The amendment reads as follows:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

That Bill 83 be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to committee of the whole with instructions that subsection 1 of section 91 of said bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

(2) The rate of interest or discount charged by the bank shall appear on the face of the note, bill or other evidence of debt.

(3) In the event that a greater rate than 8 per cent per annum has been paid to the Bank, then the person by whom it has been paid, or his legal representative, may recover in any court the excess interest thus paid, provided such action is commenced within two years from the time such excess interest was paid.

(4) In any suit, action or other proceeding concerning a bank loan wherein it is alleged that the amount of interest paid or claimed exceeds the rate of 8 per centum per annum, the court may reopen the transaction and take an account between the parties, and may, notwithstanding any statement of settlement of account, or any contract purporting to close previous dealings and create a new obligation, reopen any account already taken between the parties, and relieve the person under obligation to pay from payment of any sum in excess of the legal rate of interest and if any such excess has been paid, or allowed in account, by the debtor, may order the bank to repay it, and may set aside either wholly or in part, or revise, or alter, any security given in respect of the transaction.

Parent,

Mr. T. W. BIRD (Nelson): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to prolong unduly this very interesting series, but I have an amendment which introduces a very important subject. I may say that, in substance, it is the same amendment that I attempted to bring into the House on a previous occasion, and it deals with the matter of the Merchants Bank. Since the Bank Act was last revised, there has occurred a very vicious and cynical attack upon the principles of rectitude and integrity that are supposed to lie at the very root of our Canadian civilization, and the flagrancy of that act seems to be exceeded only by the complacency with which some hon. members in this House are prepared to see it sink into oblivion. I will content myself with reading the amendment. Some of us on this side of the House think the responsibility for pushing through this Bank Act without an inquiry into the Merchants Bank case ought not to rest upon any committee, but ought to be laid where it belongs, at the door of the House as a whole. I therefore beg to move:

That all the words after "that" be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

"Whereas the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce decided by resolution not to hear evidence dealing with the collapse of the Merchants Bank, and its subsequent amalgamation or absorption with the Bank of Montreal;

And whereas it is in the public interest that the conditions which led to or were connected with said collapse should be made public, in order that any weaknesses or deficiencies in the existing Bank Act may be remedied, and the interests of depositors, shareholders, and the general public may be safeguarded:

And whereas it is in the public interest that the facts surrounding the said amalgamation or absorption should be made public, in order that appropriate action may be taken by parliament, to prevent improper financial combinations and undue centralization in the control of financial credit in Canada.

Therefore be it resolved that Bill No. 83 be not now read a third time, but that the said bill be referred back to the standing committee on Banking and Commerce, with instructions that it have power to call and hear evidence concerning the said collapse and the said amalgamation or absorption, and that it have power to make such recommendations in the premises as may be deemed advisable."

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in supporting the amendment moved, I desire to take this opportunity of making a few observations, not that I for a moment am labouring under the misapprehension that whatever remarks I may make, will make the slightest impression upon the House. But I think it is only reasonable that an opportunity should be given to this House to express its views in connection with the recent collapse of the Merchants Bank and its more recent absorption by one of the strongest banks in this country. The decennial revision of the Bank Act gives us a casual opportunity, at least, of surveying the whole field of banking legislation and the whole credit field, and to observe whether or not in the preceding decade the Bank Act has really functioned in the interest of the people. It gives us at this revision period an opportunity to study and to appreciate conditions which have arisen in the intervening time, and it allows us, if we are students of the problem, to add to our experience and, perhaps, to make necessary corrections and alterations in the act itself. The outstanding incidents of the last ten years may be placed under two categories. There is first of all the fact that during that period some six mergers have taken place. There has been the merger of the Royal Bank with the Quebec, the Traders and the Northern Crown banks.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. SHAW: I shall be there just in a moment.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member should not depart from the question.

Mr. SHAW: I desire to lay the basis in a few introductory sentences for what remarks I have to make, and I ask the hon. member for Halifax to be patient with me and to listen to the facts, however unsatisfactory he may deem them. The Bank of Montreal has joined hands in the past decade with the Bank of British North America and the Merchants Bank, and the Bank of Nova Scotia has absorbed the Bank of Ottawa. That is one set of circumstances. Another circumstance is the collapse of the Merchants Bank. In connection with the collapse of the Merchants Bank, with which this particular amendment has to do, I want to give a very short history of that institution and to observe, if possible, the place which it filled in the financial history of this country.

This bank was organized in 1864 and at the time of its collapse had 389 branches functioning in all parts of Canada, except the province of Prince Edward Island and the Yukon. It stood third among the chartered banks of Canada in respect of the number of branches. It made a special effort to minister to the agricultural requirements of the country, for we find that of its total number of branches 147 were located in the three western provinces; and in the province of Alberta it led all other chartered banks with a total of 75 branches. In this connection I would observe—because I do not want to be misunderstood—that the losses that caused the collapse of the Merchants Bank did not arise in western Canada; they clearly arose in eastern Canada.

The success of this bank is not measured by the number of its branches, because I find that in the value of its assets, according to the last statement submitted, it stood fifth among the chartered banks of Canada, with assets totalling $182,000,000. Its liabilities to the public were $161,000,000, of which amount the responsibility to its depositors totalled the not inconsiderable sum of $130,000,000. It had an unimpaired reserve, according to the figures submitted, of $9,500,000. In addition to that I might point out that this bank, for a number of years paid a dividend of 12 per cent to its shareholders, and its shares immediately prior to the collapse brought on the market $160 each. So that generally speaking it may be said, so far as the public was concerned, that the Merchants Bank of Canada has an apparent financial stability, and merited in no limited degree the public confidence and esteem which it enjoyed. Very suddenly the scene is changed. Early in December, of 1921, the president of the bank, Sir Montagu Allan, issued a statement in which he pointed out two or three rather important facts. He pointed out that there had been large losses suffered by the bank which losses had been undisclosed to the directors, and that as a result there had been a very serious impairment in the reserve. He also stated that one Mr. Mackenzie, who, I believe, was general manager of the Royal Trust Company—an institution which has been called in this House the back-door of the Bank of Montreal—had been employed for the purpose of making an audit some months before and had disclosed the particular facts to which I have alluded. Finally, the president stated that an absorption into the Bank of Montreal had been arranged, and among other details he mentioned that two Merchants Bank shares, would be exchanged for one Bank of Montreal share and the sum of $10.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was detailing the statement made by the president of the Merchants Bank in the preliminary announcement he gave to the public in December, 1921. Needless to say, an announcement of that character and made under such circumstances created considerable consternation. By the shareholders it was received with feelings of dismay, because the proposed arrangement made with the Bank of Montreal represented a loss to them alone of approximately five and a quarter millions of dollars. In addition to that it represented a very severe loss to the employees of the Merchants Bank, because the pension fund to which they were entitled and which formed part of the inducement held out to them in connection with the services they were rendering, was represented in the form of shares of that bank. After a short delay the Finance Minister of the day gave his preliminary consent to the absorption, pointing out that the only alternative was insolvency and loss. As required by law the shareholders of the Merchants Bank subsequently met, I believe, on the 8th of February for the purpose of approving the arrangement which had been entered into with the Bank of Montreal.

According to the published reports, the president of the Merchants Bank, Sir Montagu Allan, gave some further facts at that meeting. He pointed out that a firm of stockbrokers in Montreal which had become insolvent owed the Merchants Bank something like $4,500,000; that the debt of this firm to the bank had increased from $579,000 in April, 1916, to over $4,500,000 at the time of the firm's collapse in July, 1920, and that owing to the appalling inadequacy of the security and collaterals held by the bank, the bank suffered a loss of approximately $4,000,000. The president further pointed out that a debt owing by an organization called Exclusive Ladies' Wear and two or three allied organizations amounted in December, 1916, to almost a quarter of a million dollars, but that it had increased until in 1920 it stood at a total of $1,300,000. As a result of these two transactions alone the bank lost considerably over $5,000,000. The president himself described the transactions to which I have referred as adventurous banking, but it seems to me that the amazing insufficiency of the security which was held by the bank justified the use of a very much harsher term.

By reason of these and other minor transactions the president pointed out that the bank's reserve had been reduced to meet these losses from nine and a half million dollars to one and a half million dollars. The shareholders at the meeting in question approved of the agreement and voted down a resolution that an inquiry should be conducted by the Dominion government to ascertain the responsibility for the situation which existed. It is only fair to say that the resolution was voted down not by the shareholders in person, but by reason of proxies held by the officers of the bank.

In addition to these facts mentioned by the president at that meeting to which I have referred, there were one or two other interesting facts disclosed. It was made apparent there that the Bankers' Trust Company, a subsidiary of the Merchants Bank, had in the months of October, November and December preceding the collapse sold some seven hundred shares of the bank stock at the market price then prevailing. The Bankers' Trust Company had in these sales secured the prices which prevailed for the Merchants Bank stock prior to the decrease caused by the announcement of the collapse.

Another fact disclosed was that on December 9th a committee had been appointed by the bank directors, consisting of the president, the vice-president, and I think Mr. Ballantyne, for the purpose of entering into negotiations with any bank or banks which might have a proposition to offer in connection with the sale of the Merchants Bank's assets. That, mark you, was on December 9th. It also transpired at the same meeting that on December 8th, the day preceding the Merchants Bank directors had received the offer from the Bank of Montreal which was at that meeting approved and which subsequently was carried into effect. In due course the Bank of Montreal shareholders met and approved of the arrangement. One of the officers of that bank in giving his reasons for the approval suggested that the acquisition of the Merchants Bank would give to the Bank of Montreal a number of branches in places where formerly they had very little representaton.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): May I interrupt my hon. friend? Is he not now discussing the merits of the merger? Let me ask him to frankly answer the question as to whether or not he is speaking to his amendment.

Mr. SHAW: If the hon. member for Halifax will read the amendment carefully he will find that it calls for an inquiry not only into the collapse of the Merchants Bank but into its subsequent absorption by the Bank of Montreal. Now surely my remarks are appropriate to the resolution.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The substance of my hon. friend's amendment is that the Bank Act be referred back to the committee with a direction that an inquiry be held into the merger of these two banks, but my hon. friend is arguing the whole thing out now himself. He is giving the committee all the facts as he has them. He is deciding the whole thing now.

Mr. SHAW: Surely my hon. friend is not going to deny that in order to justify this resolution I must present to the House some facts which would warrant action being taken on it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): My hon. friend must show the relevancy between the merger and the Bank Act. He must show that it is reasonable that we have all the facts before us in order to consider the act.

Mr. SHAW: I am trying to narrate the facts as they have been disclosed, and if my hon. friend will bear with me patiently I think he will subsequently discern some relation between the facts I am giving now and the motion before the House.

When interrupted I was about to say that the final act in the drama was presented by the approval to the merger by the Minister of Finance, so that in a period of two months the threatened collapse had been translated into absorption, and the Merchants Bank with a long and honourable history had yielded up its life, and its obligations and its assets had been assumed by its historic competitor. Not only was there a genuine feeling of regret among the customers of the bank that an old and established institution should have disappeared in this manner, but there was left to mourn its loss a long list of penalized shareholders and employees. In addition I might say, Mr. Speaker, that public confidence in our much vaunted banking system was very severely shaken.

The next question to which I shall address myself is as to whether or not any inquiry of the facts has been undertaken. That has been suggested I think by the hon. member for Halifax himself and other hon. members, and they have argued that therefore it is unnecessary that this resolution should be presented. The government was urged to take some action and finally a criminal prosecution was instituted against the president and general manager of the Merchants Bank. They were both charged with making false returns. There never was any doubt that false returns were made to the Finance Minister concerning the affairs of that bank. The only question at issue in the criminal trial was whether or not those false returns were knowingly made by Sir Montagu Allan and Mr. Macarow. That was the only issue at the trial. The facts in connection with the collapse and the facts in connection with the absorption of the Merchants Bank by the Bank of Montreal were largely immaterial to that issue and unless they related directly to the knowledge of these two individuals as to the false returns such facts were not only irrelevant but were absolutely inadmissible on the criminal trial. So I suggest that it cannot be urged with justice or with truth that the criminal prosecution of Sir Montagu Allan and of Mr. Macarow was a sufficient inquiry into the facts in connection with this particular matter. In justification of that position I would like to quote from an editorial which appeared on November 14, 1922, in the Montreal Star, a paper, I think, perhaps, not unfriendly to this government. It reads:

> It should have been realized by the government that as a rebuke—if it was intended as a rebuke—of the conduct of a section of the bank's directors, and as a deterrent to other directors, the recent prosecution were utterly inadequate and futile. If the object of the trials was to propitiate the victims and to strengthen public confidence, they have failed.
> A real earnest inquiry should have been made into the suspicious circumstances surrounding the bank's surrender, the sinuosities of the deal and the motives controlling the transaction.
> In the meantime huge expense has been incurred for the extenuated trials, and the sham claim will be set up that justice has been done to the shareholders and to public sentiment. The Merchants Bank sacrifice will live long in the minds of the people of Canada as a cowardly transaction, and the court procedures as a fiasco, while 20,000 direct sufferers, many of them distressed widows and orphans, are left to mourn without a remedy.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that so far as we have been informed the essential facts are as I have narrated. The circumstances are shrouded in considerable mystery, and as a result it is not to be wondered at that the public generally hold divergent views as to what actually took place. There are those, and there are numbers of them needless to say, who hold that this fiasco was caused by extravagance and reckless mismanagement and that the absorption was the only way out to protect the shareholders, to protect the depositors, and to protect the credit of this country.

There are others who are prepared to admit that there was gross mismanagement, but they are not prepared to admit that there was such impairment of the banks' reserves as would justify the action taken by way of absorption, and among this class of the community there was genuine indignation, I think, and genuine dismay, at the surrender of the Merchants Bank to the Bank of Montreal. There is indeed, another class who feel that there was something behind the transaction, who feel that a small section of the Merchants Bank directors—under somewhat mysterious and questionable circumstances—yielded to the desires of the Bank of Montreal and in a moment of panic, did not exercise their judgment in the best interests of their shareholders and in the best interests of the public. That phase is dealt with in the same editorial in the Montreal Star. I read it because it expresses that view much more effectively than I can. It reads:

> A transaction such as the sacrifice of the Merchants Bank, effected by a small group of its directors, while a majority of them were kept in ignorance of the scheme, bewilders the public, and the spirited condemnation of the transaction throughout the Dominion proves that there is appreciation of the extent of the mischief likely to ensue from such an avoidable calamity.
> The revelation regarding the Thornton, Davidson and Co.'s transaction with the Bank proves that there was bad banking and woeful error of judgment in the failure to recognize the fact that the brokerage firm was being bolstered and manipulated by dangerous men using that agency to unload worthless stocks. The Davidson loss and another bad debt were in themelves conclusive proof of the absence of discretion, but these losses, known to some of the directors for months, were no justification for the panic that led to the sacrifice.
> If the three directors instrumental in the surrender had taken half the pains to save the bank that they did to get it off their hands the institution would have been saved. During the past forty years many banks have found themselves in a more critical position than the Merchants Bank at the time of the sale and still were rescued by courage and fortitude on the part of their directors, and the support which they claimed and secured from the other banks and governments.
> Strong banks are always anxious for the stability of other institutions, and ready to help in any reasonable way to stabilize them.
> If the three manipulating directors had used reasonable arguments with the Finance Minister at the time to help to induce the government to get the bank over a rough spot, instead of pressing him to acquiesce without investigation in a sale he knew nothing about, and if Directors Allan, Ballantyne and Wilson had sought in a courageous way to get from the other banks the support to which they were entitled, and which doubtless would have been given, the bank could have been continued as a promising institution.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are the three varying views held by the people of the Dominion. Two of them must be wrong. The conclusions can only be drawn from the facts so far as they are known, and the public can not fairly be blamed for coming to an erroneous conclusion under the circumstances. I am not so sure, Mr. Speaker, that this House is yet fully apprized of the facts. Indeed, I am confident that the members of this House are not aware of the full facts, and the public have not yet been informed. May I, in that connection, read a statement made by Sir Edmund Walker to substantiate the view which I hold. This question was asked Sir Edmund Walker when he gave evidence before the select standing committee on Banking and Commerce:

Q. Do you agree with Sir John Aird, if I understood him correctly, that the merger should not have been allowed to take place between the Bank of Montreal and the Merchants?

A. Of course that depends on what the real condition of the Merchants Bank was, and none of us have been allowed to see that. Sir John makes that statement upon the basis of a statement made at the time by those who seemed to be in authority, that the Merchants Bank still had a surplus of about $1,000,000 odd; and his opinion was, that if it had its original capital and a surplus of $1,000,000 then it should not have been allowed to fail.

He was asked:

Q. Would you concur with him in that view?

A. I would. I would also recall the fact that the Merchants had once a capital of $9,000,000 and lost its entire reserve and $3,000,000 of its capital and began business again and succeeded. It altogether depends on what the real conditions with the Merchant's Bank were, and none of us know that.

Q. Why don't we know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Why should we not know?

A. Well, I don't know that either. I may tell you that my feelings are with the feelings of the most of the people in Canada on that subject.

He was further asked:

Q. So that so far as being a banker is concerned, you have no more sources of information than the ordinary people?

A. No, we have never been allowed to know anything more.

Q. Don't you think it is desirable that the public should know the whole history of this particular transaction?

A. Well as a fellow banker with the Bank of Montreal and the rest, I hesitate to answer that, but I may say we were all of us very indignant that we have not known more.

And then, I think, he suggested in another place that it certainly would be desirable to have the full facts disclosed. And so, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that if Sir Edmund Walker and Sir John Aird, bankers of the highest eminence in this country, are not apprized of the real facts in connection with the Merchants Bank disaster, and are anxious to know the facts, then surely the members of this House cannot be criticized harshly in suggesting that they too would like to know the facts in order, if possible, to make such amendments as may be necessary to repair those provisions of the Bank Act, which rendered this collapse and this merger possible.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that an effort was made in the Banking committee to have these facts disclosed, to have them thoroughly investigated. A motion was made for the purpose of calling certain witnesses who would know about these facts. That resolution, I regret to say, was voted down by the committee. In order to secure a discussion on this matter in the House, in order to get the direction of the House on this important question, a further motion was moved that the committee should report to the House the action it had taken on the previous resolution and, strange to relate, the majority of the committee refused to even present to the House the action which they had taken in that connection. Consequently by the action of the committee this House has been effectively barred from discussing the Merchants Bank matter, or the advisability of inquiring into it, until the present moment. May I say that at that time it was urged by the Minister of Finance that it was not desirable that Sir Montagu Allan and Mr. Macarow, should be tried a second time. Nobody suggested they should be tried a second time. Nobody desires they should be tried a second time. The fact that a man has been tried on a particular criminal charge does not justify this House in refusing to call witnesses to ascertain material facts in the matter, and, as I have already pointed out, these defendants would not in the slightest degree be placed in jeopardy again; they would be entitled to claim and would secure from the committee the usual right which anyone secures under such circumstances, that any evidence given by them could not, under any circumstances, be used against them in any subsequent proceedings—unless, of course, it was necessary to use it in the event of perjury having been committed.

The point is this, Mr. Speaker: Under the existing Bank Act, the Merchants Bank collapse took place. Under the existing Bank Act the merger with the Bank of Montreal took place. Surely it is not unreasonable to suggest that the facts and circumstances in connection with these two matters should be investigated thoroughly, if you want to adequately provide, as far as it is humanly possible, against similar disasters in the future. I think that is not an unreasonable position. On the other hand, I think it is entirely businesslike, and is what is expected of this parliament. In addition to that fact there can be no question that under the provisions of the Bank Act there is an increasing concentration of the credit power of this country in the hands of a decreasing number of people, and despite that fact, despite the absorption under these circumstances by the Bank of Montreal, we leave these particular sections of the act dealing with mergers in exactly the same form they were ten years ago. We have no improvements to offer, because, of course, we have not the facts upon which to base any improvement.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that we. as the trustees of the people's interest, cannot stand by indifferently and see the interest of shareholders, of depositors and even the public credit of this country imperilled. It is, if I understand it correctly, our duty and our obligation, as far as we possibly can, to prevent, by legislation, like disaster in the future Suppose, for instance, that the Bank of Montreal had not come to the rescue of the Merchants Bank, is there any one in this House who can set a limit to the disaster which would have followed? Depositors, shareholders and creditors would, alike have gone down in a crash of insolvency, and the credit of this country would have been seriously injured for years to come. Now, surely we are not going to allow, if it is possible to prevent, a creature of this parliament imperilling and placing in jeopardy the intersets of the people and the country, and rely only upon either the ambition or the generosity of a competing institution for safety. That is the suggestion which I make. For forty years in this country manufacturing industry has leaned upon parliament. Do we propose now that parliament, in order to preserve the interests of its people and preserve its own credit, shall rely upon a creature of its own creation? It seems to me that the position which we take in this matter, as designated in this resolution, is absolutely sound. The facts should be fully disclosed. In the light of these facts it may be that such legislation may be proposed as will prevent a similar unfortunate fiasco and disaster in the future.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, with all the respect I desire to accord to my good friend from Calgary West (Mr. Shaw), and to those who agree with him in this matter, I am going to submit to the House that of the many reasons that are given for the delay of this Bank Act, the weakest of all is this story about the investigation of the Merchants Bank. There is no greater delusion in the whole discussion than the allegation that the public are demanding an investigation into the Merchants Bank. There is no foundation for it in the world. There is no indication that any person who has a penny of interest in the Merchants Bank is asking for investigation, and there is no shadow of connection between the Bank Act and the Merchants Bank investigation. If you had all the investigation in the world, and produced all the results you could produce, you would not bring forth any reason against the Bank Act. Who are complaining? The failure, as you call it, of the Merchants Bank, did not involve a penny of loss to any person in the country, except the shareholders. The hon. member speaks of depositors. The depositors have not suffered any. They are not grumbling. The note holders did not suffer. They are not grumbling. The shareholders did suffer, and they are not grumbling. There is not an application from any shareholder to interfere in this matter at all. I think they have the good sense to see that by letting the matter alone they get the best results. At all events, though at the time there was some irritation, the fact to-day is that the demand for investigation into the Merchants Bank comes from people who, at all events, whatever their good motives may be, have not a penny of interest in it. There is no public interest to-day which demands an investigation into the Merchants Bank. The people who have interest in the matter have their remedy, and apparently they are content. If any shareholder of the Merchants Bank—and he is the only one affected—feels that he has been unjustly treated through the action of the directors or the neglect of the directors, or that he has suffered a penny of loss, he has his remedy in the courts of the country and knows it.

What is the use of talking about shareholders being treated badly? The institution was an unfortunate one. Why constantly talk about the mystery of the Merchants Bank? There is no mystery in the world about it. There is no transaction in public affairs better understood than the Merchants Bank affair—no mystery about it. One hon. member thought it was an extraordinary thing that the Bank Act allowed $10,000,000 to slip away between the bars. There is no mystery about a ten cent piece of the money of the Merchants Bank. They got into trouble by reckless mismanagement. They lent money without security. They lent money to a brokerage firm in Montreal and they should not have done it. They lent money to many people, and the evidence and the whole record are there. There is no mystery about it. Everybody knows the cause of the disaster, and in a certain sense it was a disaster. Hon. members will find out that the people who are really interested are not grumbling. The world is full of idle curiosity. I suppose some persons would like to know more about it, but no public interest would be served by further investigation. Every weakness in the Bank Act that was disclosed by the Merchants Bank failure has been met and covered in the bill now before the committee. Accusations were made. The only charge that could be brought against the Merchants Bank by the government was that they had falsified the return. That accusation was made. It was sustained, so far as the department is concerned. Proceedings were taken. The trial took place. These two gentlemen who were accused were acquitted. Hon. members may have their opinions as to whether they should have been acquitted or not. What odds about that? They have been tried by the courts of the country. My hon. friends have an idea that either the Minister of Justice or the Finance Minister should have gone down to Montreal, seized Sir Montagu Allan by the scruff of the neck and taken him to prison. Those men were tried by the courts of the country and acquitted.

What more could be done? There is no mystery about it. Every penny that was lost is known to the public. The shareholders know all about it, and so far as I know they are all content—not content in the broadest sense because they have lost money, but I think they have come to the conclusion that, if things had not proceeded in that particular way, they would have lost more. I submit there is no connection between an investigation into the Merchants Bank and the bill we now have before the House. There is no reason in the world why we should delay this bill for one minute for the sake of an investigation into the Merchants Bank which could not accomplish anything and which nobody who is really interested in the bank's affairs seems to want.

Mr. W. C. GOOD (Brant): The Minister of Finance has made a very brave attempt to defend a very bad case. I had a letter the other day from a shareholder of the Merchants Bank, whom I do not know at all and never did know, who happens to be in the United States now. I am sorry I did not bring the letter down here. I have it upstairs.

An hon. MEMBER: Go and get it.

Mr. GOOD: A very irate letter indeed, endorsing, if I remember the terms of it, most emphatically the stand that we have taken in this connection. I simply offer that as a bit of evidence in refutation of the statement made by the Minister of Finance that there has been no demand from the shareholders for an investigation.

Mr. FIELDING: Is my hon. friend aware that if that shareholder has a grievance he has his remedy in the civil courts and does not need to come here at all?

Mr. GOOD: It is a small fact to which I refer, not for the purpose of attaching any great importance to it, because I do not know that the shareholders are primarily interested. I think the people of Canada are interested in this matter far more than the shareholders. The Minister of Finance says that there is no mystery about this matter. All I have to say is that if we had an investigation, we would be in a position to know. We have had no investigation into the material facts, into the really essential and vital facts of the case, I mean the facts that are important to the Canadian people. We have had an investigation into the facts of the case in so far as they relate to the specific charges that were made against the two gentlemen mentioned. But those are not the facts in which I am interested. I am not a shareholder of the Merchants Bank; but I am responsible for some of the business and the institutions of this country, and so far as my share of the responsibility goes on behalf of the Canadian people, I think this is a matter that ought to be sifted to the very bottom.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why did my hon. friend not in the month of February make a motion in parliament to grant an inquiry? Or, if he forgot this in February, why did he not make it in March? If it escaped his attention in March, why did he not do it in April? Then he had all the month of May in which to do it.

Mr. GOOD: I did what I could on the committee to have investigation made.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The hon. member should have done it in parliament.

Mr. GOOD: The facts of the case have already been presented by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw). If the demand which was made in the committee for the summoning of those two or three gentlemen who were in a position to give the facts, had been acceded to, I should have been satisfied. Why did I not make a demand in parliament earlier? Well, perhaps I thought the committee was the right place, at all events the first place where the demand should be made. The committee was instructed to revise the Bank Act, and as has been shown, this particular inquiry is entirely relevant to the revision of the Bank Act. We did what we could; I did what I could on the committee, to secure the presence of these men in order that we might get information from them. As has been already stated, we failed. On two occasions we were voted down. The committee even voted down a request that the action of the committee taken at an earlier time should be reported to the House, so that the House might then take action if it thought fit to get those men here. That was voted down also. The matter was pressed twice before the committee, and on both occasions the lid was kept screwed down. Sometimes one gets suspicious by reason of the very effort that has been made to prevent an investigation. I do not know whether there is anything wrong or not; but when an effort is made to stifle investigation, I cannot help being suspicious.

There is another aspect of this situation that I would like to mention to-night before the vote is called. I refer to the question of mergers, to the question of financial concentration. I have in my hand a book by a man who is now, I think, one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. I refer to Louis D. Brandeis. His book is entitled "Other People's Money and How the Bankers Use It." I have referred to this book on one or two occasions in the committee, and I would like to refer to it again here.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who is Mr. Brandeis?

Mr. GOOD: He is one of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, and I gather from reading the book that he had to do with a number of investigations in the United States some years ago in regard to "big business," if I may use that expression. I may say that the book is descriptive of conditions in the United States, and I think it has a direct bearing upon the situation in Canada and upon the case which we have now under consideration. I should like to quote a paragraph which the writer quotes from a statement made by ex-President Woodrow Wilson in 1911. I read:

> The great monopoly in this country is the money monopoly. So long as that exists, our old variety and freedom and individual energy of development are out of the question. A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men, who, even if their actions be honest and intended for the public interest, are necessarily concentratd upon the great undertakings in which their own money is involved and who, necessarily, by every reason of their own limitations, chill and check and destroy genuine economic freedon. This is the greatest question of all; and to this, statesmen must address themselves with an earnest determination to serve the long future and the true liberties of men.

That was written by ex-President Woodrow Wilson in 1911. Further on in the first chapter of this book, the writer refers to the way in which the financial oligarchy in the United States extended their operations and gained control of the security makers on the one hand and the security buyers on the other—the large insurance companies and so on. I will read just one or two other extracts from this book. Here is a paragraph under the sub-heading, "Why the banks became investment bankers":

> These large profits from promotions—

He is referring to the operations of J. P. Morgan and Co.

> —underwritings and security purchases led to a revolutionary change in the conduct of our leading banking institutions. It was obvious that control by the investment bankers of the deposits in banks and trust companies was an essential element in their securing these huge profits. And the bank officers naturally asked, "Why then should not the banks and trust companies share in so profitable a field? Why should not they themselves become investment bankers too, with all the new functions incident to 'big business'?" To do so would involve a departure from the legitimate sphere of the banking business, which is the making of temporary loans to business concerns. But the temptation was irresistible. The invasion of the investment banker into the banks' field of operation was followed by a counter invasion by the banks into the realm of the investment banker.

Then he goes on to mention a number of United States banks which did this very thing.

The next chapter is entitled:

> How the combiners combine.

Further on chapter 3 is devoted to interlocking directorates, the question which was discussed in such an illuminating way last year in this House by the hon member for Brome (Mr. McMaster). I want to read one or two paragraphs from this chapter. Here is the first paragraph.

> The practice of interlocking directorates is the root of many evils. It offends laws human and divine. Applied to rival corporations, it tends to the suppression of competition and to violation of the Sherman law. Applied to corporations which deal with each other, it tends to disloyalty and to violation of the fundamental law that no man can serve two masters. In either event it tends to inefficiency; for it removes incentive and destroys soundness of judgment. It is undemocratic, for it rejects the platform: "A fair field and no favours,"—substituting the pull of privilege for the push of manhood. It is the most potent instrument of the Money Trust. Break the control so exercised by the investment banker over railroads, public service and industrial corporations over banks, life insurance and trust companies, and a long step will have been taken towards the attainment of the new freedom.

I refer now to a rather humorous specimen prospectus cited by Judge Brandeis on pages 106 and 107.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Has he chapters on the Merchants Bank failure and on the Canadian Bank Act in that book?

Mr. GOOD: No.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): If he has not, I submit that my hon. friend should cease reading it.

Mr. GOOD: I submit that the material I have in hand is entirely relevant to the issue under consideration.

Mr. DUFF: Quite the contrary.

Mr. GOOD: This specimen prospectus is as follows, and I think perhaps it might relieve the feelings of the hon. member for Halifax if I were to read it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): If it is pretty humorous and we can get away from the hymn of gloom my hon. friend is always singing, I will stand it.

Mr. GOOD: I am very glad that I shall satisfy the hon. member for once.

Mr. DUFF: That remains to be seen.

Mr. GOOD: I read the following:

A. B. & Co.
Investment Bankers

We have to-day secured substantial control of the successful machinery business heretofore conducted by..... at..... Illinois, which has been incorporated under the name of the Excelsior Manufacturing Company with a capital of $10,000,000, of which $5,000,000 is Preferred and $5,000,000 Common.

As we have a large clientele of confiding customers we were able to secure from the owners an agreement for marketing the preferred stock—we to fix a price which shall net the owners in cash $95 a share.

We offer this excellent stock to you at $100.75 per share. Our own commission or profit will be only a little over $5.00 per share, or say, $250,000 cash, besides $1,500,000 of the common stock, which we received as a bonus. This cash and stock commission we are to divide in various proportions with the following participants in the underwriting syndicate:

C.D. & Co., New York.
E.F. & Co., Boston.
L.M. & Co., Philadelphia.
I.K. & Co., New York.
O.P. & Co., Chicago.

Mr. DUFF: Where is the joke?

Mr. GOOD: If the hon. member cannot see the joke I am afraid I am unable to point it out to him. Now, there is a chapter that deals with big men and little business.

[Mr. Good.]

Mr. DUFF: I think it is little men talking about big business.

Mr. GOOD: This chapter is particularly pertinent to the situation in Canada, because there is an inevitable tendency on the part of a number of businesses of various kinds to become concentrated in the hands of a few men. The result is a growth of serious inefficiency in the operation of these businesses.

Mr. RINFRET: Is that the case with the Bank of Montreal?

Mr. DUFF: Or the Farmers Bank?

Mr. GOOD: At page 151 there appears the following quotation from ex-President Wilson:

I am not saying that all invention had been stopped by the growth of trusts, but I think it is perfectly clear that invention in many fields has been discouraged, that inventors have been prevented from reaping the full fruits of their ingenuity and industry, and that mankind has been deprived of many comforts and conveniences, as well as the opportunity of buying at lower prices.

Then Mr. Brandeis continues:

The fact that industrial monopolies arrest development is more serious even than the direct burden imposed through extortionate prices. But the most harm-bearing incident of the trusts is their promotion of financial concentration. Industrial trusts feed the money trust, practically every trust created has destroyed the financial independence of some communities and of many properties; for it has centred the financing of a large part of whole lines of business in New York, and this usually with one of a few banking houses. This is well illustrated by the Steel Trust, which is a trust of trusts.

He goes on at considerable length to show how the steel trust was formed.

Mr. DUFF: Read chapter 6, verse 4, on co-operative stores.

Mr. GOOD: I shall be glad to read it if the hon. member wants me to.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I am asking you to read it. Read chapter 6, verse 4.

Mr. GOOD: The hon. member evidently is not acquainted with the book. Chapter 10 is the one that deals with co-operation.

Mr. DUFF: Well, I made a slight mistake.

Mr. GOOD: The first two lines in the chapter read:

We must break the money trust or the money trust will break us.

That is perhaps enough on that point.

Mr. DUFF: That has nothing to do with co-operative stores.

Mr. GOOD: I have in my hand a type written document sent to a fellow-member by a man who, I understand, lives in western Canada. This document is entitled "Canada —a Dictatorship," and in it there is an examination of the system of interlocking directorates and the concentrtaion of control of Canadian credit, industry, and so forth. I do not wish to quote from it because I have not yet had an opportunity of verifying the statements it contains, but reading it over I can see that the writer has evidently looked into the matter rather carefully. I might mention some of the headings. There are references to "The Power of the Bankers," "The Canadian Cabinet," "The Bank of Montreal," "The Grip Upon Industry," "Financial Corporations," "Fourteen Autocrats," and "A New Phase of Capitalism." I wanted to refer to this document to show that there are some Canadians who are seriously exercised over the situation in Canada, of which, I think, the absorption of the Merchants Bank by the Bank of Montreal is a typical case I mentioned the fact that Judge Brandeis gave a great deal of consideration to the matter on the other side, as have also a great many other prominent Americans. The same drift of affairs is evident on this side of the line as has been evident in the United States, and I would respectfully suggest to the House the great importance of this question and would like to impress upon hon. members the seriousness of the menace that threatens us to-day in the concentration of control in the hands of a very few men. It is not that the few who form the interlocking directorates of a number of large enterprises actually own those concerns, but they are so placed that they exercise effective control. It is pointed out in this document that one group of men in Canada pretty well control assets to the extent of about three and a half billions of dollars. I think, therefore, that I am justified in endeavouring to impress upon the House the very serious nature of the situation and the need of investigating to the very bottom this recent collapse and amalgamation so that we may know what the facts are. Probably we do not know what the extent of the danger is; nor can we know until we have ascertained the facts. Ugly rumours are afloat, and I do think that we should sift the thing to the bottom. As pointed out by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw), there are two purposes in view. The first is to be able intelligently to revise the Bank Act, particularly with respect to those sections that deal with inspection and returns; and the second is to find out whether or not there have been intrigue and shady transactions in connection with this affair, as has been rumoured. I trust that the amendment will secure the support of the House.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I desire in a few words to state my reasons for the vote I shall give. I do not want to be understood as voting against any investigation into the Merchants Bank or any other episode; I always feel that if, in cases of alleged wrongdoing, the public is affected, then when a member assumes the proper responsibility for such an allegation, no investigation should be denied. And also there might be a case for investigation, were any wrongdoing alleged, if it were essential for the purposes of intelligent legislation. So the question really is: Is an investigation into this episode necessary to enable us intelligently to legislate as to the Bank Act? I have waited for argument to convince me that it is. One must consider what the public interest is in the Merchants Bank affair.

I do not quite agree with the Minister of Finance that we have no interest merely because—if it were the case—the shareholders alone were affected; it seems to me it is the duty of parliament to guard the interests of shareholders in banking legislation. But we would have an interest much wider and more direct if the depositors were so imperilled, if not actually affected by such actions as we might by legislation prevent the repetition of. Or if holders of bank notes were affected, then our interest would be still more general, more direct and more important. Now, is there reason to believe that there is something connected with the episode still undisclosed that would enable us in this act to protect better the interests of shareholders, or of depositors, or of the holders of bank notes? And there could be one more interest—the general interest of the public who do not want to see a repetition of events that end in the elimination of another bank. I know that in western Canada the case of the Merchants Bank was very widely discussed, as was the case of the Farmers Bank, and I believe the people of that country want to see every precaution taken against the recurrence of such things as result in the elimination of a bank as a separate institution.

Let me inquire again: Has it been shown, has it even been intimated, that there is anything we do not know in connection with the episode that would help us to protect the shareholders, the depositors, the note holders, or help us to prevent the repetition of the incident? If any hon. member had brought out a tittle of evidence in support of that, there would be something substantial to discuss. The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) did read from the evidence of Sir John Aird and intimated he had read before I came in from the evidence of Sir Edmund Walker, to the effect that there were some things unknown in connection with the occurrence that led to the merger. Well, I fancy what they must have had reference to was this: They felt, and I believe the bank they were connected with felt, that up to the time of the consent to the merger there had not been disclosure to other banks that might have been just as much interested as the Bank of Montreal, of the exact situation, respecting the Merchants Bank, in order to enable those others to discuss what had taken or was to take place. I think it was felt that there had been too much confinement of the information to one single institution. It may be they had in mind that some facts were still undisclosed that they had a right to know the same as any other bank. I do not know whether they did or not; what those facts could be I do not for the life of me know.

Mr. SHAW: I suggest that that is exactly what we want to find out.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, shall we postpone revision of the Bank Act simply because some witness suggests that there is something he does not know? What is it? I agree with the Minister of Finance that there were some things connected with the disaster to the Merchants Bank which would help us in the framing of this act. But were these not all brought out in the trial? What are we interested in? We are interested to see that every precaution is taken to prevent the non-disclosure to the government of Canada of vital information, of essential information connected with the management. Everything associated with that came out in the trial of these men. I wonder how many hon. gentlemen in this House have read the evidence taken at the trial? I cannot boast of having done so myself—that is to say, in the original though I have done so very carefully from more than one newspaper that reported the evidence pretty fully. So far as I could see, everything connected with that subject came out in the trial and it should have been known to the committee when the committee sat What perhaps did not come out was an answer to the question why these loans were made. Well, how in the world can this House ever legislate to prevent the making of bad loans? Hon. gentlemen say that $10,000,000 went through a hole. I suppose it did; but I can name more than one company right now through a hole in whose organization more than $10,000,000 has gone. I venture to say it would not be hard to name other banks and to point to an end of this country that might be called a hole through which $10,000,000 of the money of these banks has gone. How this can be prevented unless by making men wiser than they are I do not know. Now, everything that we are interested in is to know what precautions can be taken by parliament. All that parliament can do is to get the best information, to get all the information, required from time to time. We know that now; what other information can we ask for that is not asked for in the act? If there is any other, let us put it in. I understand that amendments have been made to the act as a result of the evidence at the trials and of the findings of the committee. Perhaps they would have been in anyway, I do not know; but I am informed that they are the result of the findings. One of them, for example, is the double audit system; another, a better definition of the responsibility of directors; another, the protection of the employees' insurance fund.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): And another, contact between the shareholders' auditors and the directors.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well; I was not aware of that. The facts that affected the government, that affected the public, that affected parliament, were disclosed in these hearings. The facts that are undisclosed—if there are any, I do not know what they are—are connected with the making of a loan to a brokerage firm in Montreal that evidently should not have been made. But you may frame acts of parliament until parliament is grey and you cannot prevent bank managements from making loans that are bad. Consequently, I do not see why we should defer the passing of the Bank Act in order that there may be further investigation into this failure, or into this episode, however you may describe it. As soon as anyone can show me that by the holding of an investigation there is something to be gained in the way of light upon the Bank Act itself or how to frame it, then, whether wrong-doing is alleged or not, I will not vote against the investigation. But merely because someone says, "Well, if we fished along a bit there might be something," then I feel I would be giving a reckless, an arbitrary, an unreasoned vote in supporting delay for a year on that account.

WAYS AND MEANS

ONTARIO ELECTIONS AND PETAWAWA CAMP

On the motion of Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) for committee of Ways and Means:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer on this motion to two matters. The first is to recall a question which I put to the government last Friday, and in which I called attention to the inability of certain of the active militia to vote in the approaching provincial election in Ontario and asked that arrangements be made in such a way that those members would not be disfranchised. The Acting Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) went into the matter as he had promised, and in conversation with officers of the department, ascertained that the date had been fixed three or four months ago and two or three months before the date of the Ontario elections was announced; furthermore that as, under present estimates, only eight days' training is allowed, anything in the nature of a three-day break in the middle would, of course, destroy the effect of the entire training and, as was urged and as, I believe, was right, was out of the question. A deferring would have meant a cost of many thousands of dollars. The Acting Minister of National Defence reported those circumstances to the House; he stated that he was sending to the Attorney General of Ontario a telegram setting out the facts I have recited and requesting that the attorney general instruct the returning officers affected in about five cities to admit these votes at the advance polls, and he undertook if legislation were necessary to ratify, to support such legislation in the next House if he were still in the government. I acquiesced in that telegram being sent, and I undertook, on behalf of the Conservative party in the House, that that legislation would, if necessary, be ratified by them, should they be returned. Similar action, I might say, was found necessary in the late election and was acquiesced in by all parties affected. There should have been no difficulty whatever in this case. I wish to ask the Acting Minister of National Defence what has been the attitude of the Attorney General of Ontario toward the matter and whether we are going to be faced with the disfranchisement of members of our active militia merely because they are doing their duty.

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has reviewed the facts in connection with this matter up to the point of sending the telegram which was despatched from the department on June 15 addressed to the Hon. Mr. Raney, Attorney General of the Province of Ontario, Toronto. The telegram reads:

> Detachments of batteries from Gananoque, Belleville, Peterborough, Guelph, Hamilton, Cobourg, schedule to train at Petawawa overlapping polling date June 25. Impractical to permit voters to return home for election. Alternative is for you to permit votes to be cast in home towns prior to departure under terms of advance polling provision your election act. If legislation does not give power suggest that above action be taken and ratified at next session of your legislature. Am informed Mr. Ferguson who is now here will agree to this proposal. Premier King approves of this proposal. If you agree public announcement should be made at once. Reply.

On the 16th, the following reply was received, not from Mr. Raney, but from Mr. A. M. Dymond, the chief election officer of the province:

> Your wire addressed to attorney general referred to me, no authority whatever for action suggested by you. Would advise postponement of entrainment for camp until after polling day, announcement made more than month ago of date of pollings.

In answer to this the following telegram was sent to the Hon. Mr. Raney himself. It was not addressed to Mr. Dymond, because we felt that the attorney general of the province ought to deal with an important matter of this kind himself. On the 18th of June we addressed this telegram to the Hon. Mr. Raney:

Following wire received:

Here we quoted in full telegram received from Mr. Dymond.

Dates of training Petawawa fixed over three months ago. Detachments from Ontario, Quebec and Maritime provinces involved. In view of heavy expense entailed and interference with private arrangements of members non-permanent active militia no alteration dates practicable. Propose publish my wire June 15th.

That was on the 18th of June, and so far there has been no reply. I shall briefly state the situation. Six batteries of artillery consisting of 38 officers and men each, or a total of 282 men, entrained on Friday to go to camp at Petawawa, where they will spend eight days, including the day occupied in going out and the day in coming back. Their training is of a special nature which can be given only at Petawawa, and includes three days of shooting in addition to other necessary drill and training in other respects. I may observe that Mr. Hay, the leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, was communicated with on the day on which the telegram was sent to Mr. Raney. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) properly states that the only way in which these men can exercise the franchise, if they go into camp at Petawawa, will be for the provincial authorities of Ontario to arrange for the taking of advanced polls. I am informed by the officers of my department that it would involve the country in a loss of between $7,000 or $8,000 if any change were made now in the dates fixed for this training, which dates were settled upon long before any provincial or other election was in prospect. I am surprised that the authorities in Ontario have not responded to our suggestion. I do think that an arrangement might have been made between the different political parties by which the votes of these men might be taken to-morrow or Friday before they entrained for camp. As Petawawa is a little to the west of the main line of the Canadian Pacific railway in the northern part of the province there would be great difficulty, even if it were practicable, for any of the officers or men to get to their homes to vote, for it would take them at least three days to accomplish this purpose. Obviously therefore the only means of having them exercise the franchise is that which we have suggested.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I understood, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) would go on to-night with the bill to repeal the Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill. I should be glad to have this bill proceeded with.

Mr. FIELDING: There is one remaining budget resolution which it was announced would be taken up to-day. I do not suppose that it would take up very much time, and I should prefer to dispose of it and make way for the Lake of the Woods bill. Has the hon. member any objection?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We cannot be sure how long the resolution will take. If it lasted very long it would not be convenient to me.

Mr. FIELDING: If the debate is protracted I will postpone the resolution.

Mr. MEIGHEN: If the minister withdrew his motion and we took up the Lake of the Woods bill he could go into Ways and Means afterwards.

Mr. FIELDING: That rather interferes with our plans, but I will accede to the request. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the motion be withdrawn and that the order for the second reading of the Lake of the Woods bill be proceeded with.

Motion withdrawn.

LAKE OF THE WOODS REGULATION

Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 175 to repeal the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister might give us a statement of the present position of this matter, having regard to the attitude of Ontario on the one hand and of Manitoba on the other, as well as that of the Dominion government.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: This bill is the same as the one that was introduced last year and accepted by the House of Commons, but rejected by the Senate. The purpose of the bill is to repeal chapter 38, 11 and 12 George V, passed in 1921 and assented to on the 4th of June of that year. In 1920, there was an understanding between the Ontario government and the Dominion government to the effect that a commission composed of four members, two to be appointed by the Ontario government and two by the Dominion government, would control the waters of the Lake of the Woods, Lac Seul, English river and Winnipeg river. It was agreed that legislation should be submitted to the legislature of Ontario and the parliament of Canada for the purpose of organizing that com-

10 p.m. mission. The Dominion government accordingly introduced a bill which passed as chapter 10, of 11 and 12 George V, which was assented to on the 3rd of May, 1921. The government of Ontario, proceeding also in accordance with the agreement to which I have referred, introduced similar legislation; but the premier of the province, facing an opposition to the measure, withdrew it. Under these circumstances the government of the day, considering it important that some commission should have authority to control these waters, passed another bill, which became chapter 38 of 11 and 12 George V, to which I referred at the outset. The second clause of that act provided that—

All dams, structures and other works of whatsoever description which have heretofore been or may hereafter be constructed in, upon, over, about or across,—(a) any outlet of the Lake of the Woods, (b) the Winnipeg river at or about its junction with English river, or (c) English river at the outlet of and below Lac Seul, which do or may or can in any wise control, regulate or affect the outflow of water from the said lakes, or either of them, or the natural levels of the water in the said lakes, or either of them, at any time, or the natural flow of the water in the Winnipeg river or in English river, at any time, are and each of them is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada.

The last clause reads as follows:

If the necessary legislation of Ontario referred to in the preamble of The Lake of the Woods Control Board Act, 1921—

That is, chapter 10.

—be enacted by the legislature, the Governor in Council may, by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette, repeal or suspend this act and the regulations made thereunder at any time when or after The Lake of the Woods Control Board Act, 1921, shall come into force: Provided that notwithstanding any repeal or suspension of this act in the manner provided by this section the works and each of them hereby declared to be for the general advantage of Canada shall remain and continue to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

Acting under the provisions of that statute the government of the day appointed a commission, also composed of four members, as agreed upon. I understand that the government of Ontario was asked to appoint two of the members of the commission but they refused to do so, contending that this statute should never have been passed and that the works of the Lake of the Woods, the English River and the Winnipeg river should not have been declared works for the general advantage of Canada. Last year the then Solicitor General introduced a bill similar to the one now under consideration. I may say that in the session following the Act of 1921 the legislature of Ontario did pass the legislation which had been agreed upon, and last session the then Solicitor General thought we should simply repeal chapter 38 of the statutes of 1921. After some debate the bill was adopted by the House but was subsequently rejected by the Senate. After prorogation, at the instance of the premiers of Ontario and Manitoba, a conference took place in Ottawa in which the premiers of those provinces and the Prime Minister of Canada took part. After discussion and deliberation the representatives of the three governments arrived at an understanding which was put in writing and signed by them. The first clause of that agreement reads as follows:

This agreement, as a working basis for the regulation of the English and Winnipeg rivers, is entered into on the understanding that all parties are agreeable to the repeal of the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921, but Ontario does not bind itself to the terms of this agreement in the event of that act not being repealed.

Then follow the different clauses which were accepted by the three parties. Consequent upon these circumstances we introduced the present bill. After it was read the first time representations were made to us first by the government of Manitoba and afterwards by the government of Ontario. The government of Manitoba urged that chapter 38 of the Statutes of 1921 should not be repealed until the provisions of the arrangement of November last had been fulfilled. We had a conference and listened to the arguments of the representatives of Manitoba. We told them that this bill would come into force only by proclamation, and that that proclamation should be made only when the essential conditions of the arrangement entered into had been fulfilled. Subsequently the representatives of the Manitoba government wrote a letter to the Prime Minister stating that they could not accept the suggestion that we should proceed with this bill at the present session. In reply the right hon. Prime Minister wrote the following letter to Mr. Farmer, the mayor of Winnipeg:

Dear Mr. FARMER:

I have duly received the letter dated the 29th instant signed by yourself and Messrs. Preudhomme, Sanger, Guy and Johnson, with respect to the above.

You are quite correct in your understanding that the repeal act should not become effective until the conditions of the agreement of November last have been complied with. You suggest that the repeal bill should be amended in such a way as to provide that it shall go into effect on proclamation only after Ontario and Manitoba respectively have so requested by order in council. With reference to this suggestion I would like to point out that the bill has been drafted in a matter which would permit of no exception being taken by the Ontario government to its provisions. Were the conditions you propose incorporated, it might only serve to raise a fresh obstacle to the final settlement of this whole matter, which is now so near the point of satisfactory adjustment. Our government has in view but the one object of effecting a settlement of the question in a manner which will be wholly satisfactory to all parties concerned. We are as favourably disposed toward the province of Manitoba as toward the province of Ontario, and, inasmuch as the federal government, not less than the governments of Ontario and Manitoba, is a party to the agreement of November last, I think you may take it for granted that we would not take any action or permit any action to be taken which would prejudice the right of either Manitoba or Ontario under any of the conditions of the agreement.

With this assurance I hope you will feel that Manitoba will be justified in withdrawing any opposition it may have to the Repeal Bill in the form in which it has been presented to parliament.

With this assurance, Mr. Speaker, given by the right hon. the Prime Minister of this Dominion speaking for himself and for his colleagues, I do not see that the government of Manitoba can persist in any opposition to the measure.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the government of Manitoba persisting in opposition, may I ask?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have here a letter which was written by the Hon. Mr. Johnson, counsel for Manitoba and the power interests, dated June 18th, which reads as follows:

On the 31st ultimo you wrote a letter to Mayor S. J. Farmer of Winnipeg on this subject, and you very kindly sent me a copy thereof. Immediately on the return to Winnipeg of the delegation which waited upon you in Ottawa the Manitoba power interests conferred and discussed your letter with the greatest care.

We note that you desire to take no step which would permit of any exception being taken by the Ontario government to the repealing of the above act. We would, however, point out that the order in council passed by the province of Ontario in connection with the agreement entered into last November makes the absolute repeal of "The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921," a condition precedent to the coming into force of the agreement, and also to the empowering of the minister mentioned therein to finally negotiate and settle upon the conditions to be carried out; this attitude of Ontario will make impossible the carrying out of the conditions of the agreement prior to the proclamation of the repealing act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That letter was written on behalf of the Manitoba government as well as the power interests?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: For Manitoba and the power interests.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill. I have listened to the recital of the history of the legislation leading up to this bill from the lips of the Minister of Justice with much interest, and speaking in the main I take no exception so far as it was a statement of facts, but a review of the question will surely, I believe, bring home to hon. members of this House the unwisdom of passing this legislation at this time.

Everyone understands that in the Lake of the Woods and in the waters flowing therein and thereout the Dominion has a very substantial and indeed a varied interest. We have an interest, first of all, because it is an international body of water. We have an interest, secondly, because it is a navigable water and is navigated, and we have an interest thirdly, because the whole body of water is interprovincial, and in respect of the flow of the water the interests of two provinces are very great. We have an additional interest as yet, and perhaps permanently. We are the owners of the resources of Manitoba and responsible for their administration, and among the resources, and among the most valuable, are the water-powers constituted by the waters that flow out of the Lake of the Woods into lake Winnipeg. So from those four standpoints all of them important, the first and the last being the greatest, and the last being really in practical results the greatest of all—from those standpoints we have a very vital interest in the proper administration of all works affecting those waters. This was recognized years ago, and as a consequence there was referred, with the assent I believe of all concerned, to the International Joint Commission the question as to the best method of control. The International Joint Commission had the case presented by the United States and by Canada, because being an international stream the United States had an interest in it. They had an interest as well because of certain powers that are developed on the inflowing waters. The International Joint Commission after the fullest evidence, and after I believe a remarkably successful presentation of Canada's case made a report, and for some five or six years we have been endeavouring to carry out that report, endeavouring against great obstacles.

In the body of that report it was recommended that in respect of the exercise of certain powers a joint board be established half by Ontario and half by the Dominion, the Dominion representing Manitoba as well as all Dominion rights, which board was to have control of the levels of the lakes so long as those levels were maintained between two definite fixed heights. If the levels got above or below, the jurisdiction of the board ceased and another board was recommended to be established to exercise jurisdiction—an international board. Pursuant to the report, conferences were held between the governments of Manitoba, of the Dominion and of the province of Ontario, and the difficulties that intervened were smoothed away to the extent that the government of Ontario agreed with the government of Canada that concurrent bills would be introduced as government measures, and pressed as government measures, looking to the establishment of the joint board. The Dominion government carried out its part of the undertaking to the full. The measure was introduced, and against considerable opposition passed this House. It passed the Senate and became law. It was later introduced in the legislature of Ontario, and on a show of opposition was deliberately withdrawn by the Premier of Ontario.

I am quite within the fact when I say that the withdrawal of the bill without any attempt to put it through right at the close of the session was in no way a fulfilment of the undertaking that the Premier of Ontario made not only with ourselves but in the presence of representatives of Manitoba. We were then left in the position of having our own statute that was passed totally ineffective, and consequently having so far as statutory power was concerned no real authority, no real statutory basis upon which to rest our control of those waters. It is true that up to that time or up to a time shortly before, a board had operated to control the waters in a measure without statutory powers. The board found itself helpless to achieve its ends and appealed to the government for statutory powers. In such a position of helplessness we found ourselves upon the collapse of the legislation in the legislature of Ontario. I thereupon introduced as Prime Minister a bill called "The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act," wherein it was provided that a board should be established and be given certain powers, namely, the powers recommended to be given the joint board by the International Joint Commission, this board to be established by the federal authorities.

The bill went further and provided that the works named in the recital read by the Minister of Justice, works built in the outlets of the Lake of the Woods at the junction of English river and Winnipeg river, and in the English river below the outlet of Lac Seul, should be declared works for the general advantage of Canada. Hon. members, of course, know that in the provisions of the British North America Act the parliament of Canada has power to declare any works to be for the general advantage of the Dominion, works which presumably theretofore were works over which the provinces had legislative jurisdiction. That power on the part of the parliament of Canada is unrestrained, but in practice is exercised wherever the works are such as affect the people of more than one province, where the works are such that, in the judgment of parliament, federal legislative control is preferable to provincial control. Now, I desire to point out that in the understanding that was arrived at with the Prime Minister of Ontario and after hearing by the government on the part of the government of Manitoba, there was no provision for the declaring of these works to be for the general advantage of Canada, nor was there anything done or agreed to which in the least degree restrained the power or the right of the government or of parliament to so declare if it saw fit; the matter was entirely left without reference at all. In a word, nothing that was done was at all inconsistent with this being done, but the government did not recommend its being done until the time came when the government of Ontario failed to go through with its undertaking with the government of Canada.

In the legislation that was introduced, as the Minister of Justice has clearly pointed out, it was provided that this board be established by the federal government to do the work the joint board was to have done under the previous concurrent legislation. It was also provided that as soon as the province of Ontario should pass that concurrent legislation, then the provisions of this bill establishing the board should be repealable by order in council of this government. For the purpose of the repeal of all the provisions establishing the board and giving it its powers the government needs no legislation here; they may repeal it all by order in council. The portion that declared the works to be works for the general advantage of Canada was not repealable by order in council. This bill is to repeal that portion too. I want to say, supplementary to what the Minister of Justice said, that in the legislation now sought to be repealed, the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, though a new board was to be appointed to do the work that it was originally intended and agreed should be done by a joint board under the concurrent legislation, it was stated at the time by myself that it was intended to appoint by the federal government the very same men who had acted before, half of them being appointed by the provincial government. This we actually set out to perform but the Ontario government failed to permit—such is my recollection—failed to permit its employees, to take part as members of that board, refused to allow them to do so. Last session, that is the year before this one, the legislation was put through in the province of Ontario. Why it was not done the session before I do not know to this day. It was done last session, a year ago. Then this government instead of repealing the bill establishing the board by order in council, as it might have done, came to parliament and said "We want to repeal the whole bill, and we want to restore the provincial jurisdiction," that is the provincial legislative jurisdiction over the works in this body of water. To that I made opposition at the time.

I urged then, as I urge now, that these are works that ought to be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada, because they really are works for the general advantage of Canada. We have declared over and over again a few miles of railway wholly within a province to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. Here are works as respects which the province of Manitoba, though the works are in Ontario, is perhaps even more interested than the latter province. The power assets that the flow of the water constitutes are, to the extent I think of about 80 per cent, in the province of Manitoba, and the future commercial development of Manitoba is dependent upon the just and equitable legislative administration of those works. I repeat what I said a year ago: If there ever were works that ought to be declared works for the general advantage of Canada, that are appropriate for such declaration, these are the very works. Now, if you declare works to be for the general advantage of Canada you may if you wish, and I am quite prepared we shall, agree to a joint board for their administration. Quite right and proper. So long as the joint board continues it may be all right, and it may not, I do not know; but the legislation establishing that board may be repealed at any time by the government of Ontario, and also there may be things done under it that will be unfair and unjust to one of the provinces concerned; and, consequently, the reservation of the legislative jurisdiction in this parliament should not be lightly thrown away.

It will be recalled—and this is most interesting at this time; it is most interesting, and indeed it is illuminating—that when this legislation was before the House last session the Prime Minister of this country, in an endeavour to put it through, referred to the conduct of the late government—my own conduct in particular—in introducing the Lake of the Woods Regulation Bill, because of the failure to pass concurrent legislation in Ontario, as a piece of sharp practice. How interesting it is now to find that this government has agreed in writing to maintain that sharp practice on the statute books of Canada up to a certain time and after this bill passes, agreed that it is right and just to do it in the interest of the province of Manitoba. What an illuminating fact! The letter read by the Minister of Justice, signed by the Prime Minister of Canada, agrees with the province of Manitoba that this legislation that rests on sharp practice must be continued on our statute books even after the bill empowering its repeal passes, and until certain events transpire, to safeguard the interests of Manitoba. I do not refer to the language with any particular resentment; I leave hon. members to judge of it themselves and to say what they think of it. But would anyone want a more ample vindication of the need of the legislation when it passed, than the fact that this government—so anxious to denounce it in order to strike a blow at the late government—nevertheless finds itself compelled to agree in writing to its continuance as part of the law of Canada, a continuance for an indefinite time to come, until Ontario does certain things that Manitoba has enjoined in that agreement, and that this government has enjoined in this agreement with Ontario.

Now such is exactly the situation. What is the present precise position? The minister says we want to repeal the act, but we are putting in a clause that this repeal will not take effect until, later on, we declare by order in council that it shall, and our Prime Minister has given a letter to the government of Manitoba in which he says, we will not, by order in council, declare that this repeal shall take effect until Ontario does the various things recited in an agreement as binding upon Ontario to do. Manitoba states that the things Ontario is to do are concurrent with the repeal, and she will not agree to the repeal until Ontario does them, or until she by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, requests this repealing bill to be called into effect.

Manitoba stands to-day opposed to this legislation, and I am glad that Manitoba does oppose it. I only say this as respects the attitude of the Manitoba government: if the Manitoba government at this time looks far enough ahead, if it sees all round the question and the dangers involved in it, it will make its resistance to this legislation absolute and conditional on nothing at all. The only safeguard for the permanent preservation of the varying interests of the various parties in these great powers is the reservation of this section. With the section there there need be no difficulty and there need be no danger at all, because the parliament of Canada, which has concern for one as much as the other, has its legislative control intact; so that, as far as my advice will go—and it will go very far, I fear—I will say to the government of Manitoba: Maintain your resistance; do not make it conditional, as you do to-day; do not say that it will lapse when two or three things are done by the province of Ontario that may be done any time, but make it continuous and absolute; reserve this section as it is the safeguard of the whole situation. With this section reserved, it is quite right and proper that there should be joint administration of it, because by that joint administration, under a board, appointed half by one and half by the other, the various details, from the point of view of each, are sure to secure adequate presentation and discussion.

But I protest against a repeal of the legislation. This House is in no way bound to repeal this legislation, by no compunc- to of honour, certainly by no compunction of interest. Both honour and interest demand that we keep it just where it is, and I appeal to the Minister of Justice, who has not the same tortuous record in respect of this that his Prime Minister has, to look upon the matter from a long Canadian point of view. Does it not seem to him that it is going to be best in the long years to come that these works, some of them the most important, that could well be conceived from the general standpoint, continue to be works for the general advantage; and, therefore, continue to be works under the ultimate legislative control of parliament? Let the Minister of Justice ask himself the question, why should they not continue? Why should there be anything in Canada declared to be works for the general advantage of the country, if these works now declared to be so, are to be undeclared by this act? I cannot conceive of anything that more appropriately or usefully comes within the category to which the section of the British North America Act was intended to apply than the very works contemplated by this legislation. I hope, in the interests of Ontario and of Manitoba, that the Minister of Justice will come to my point of view, or that parliament will come to my point of view, and defeat the legislation.

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): I find that I cannot support the Minister of Justice in the bill he has introduced to-night. In fact, I find that I must strenuously and forcefully, and to the best of my ability, oppose the measure which he proposes to pass. I find myself, Sir, substantially in accord with the well-reasoned argument of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). The history of the relationship of the Dominion government, of the province of Ontario, of Manitoba and of the United States, in connection with this inter-provincial and international body of water, really one body of water, the Lake of the Woods, the Winnipeg river and its tributary the English river, I shall not review at any length, but only incidentally, as that has been covered in previous debates in this House and well reviewed to-night by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. Suffice it to say that there are very large and important interests involved in this question, the interests of the province of Manitoba, and the interests of this Dominion; because this Dominion holds the resources that are involved in the Winnipeg river as trustees for the people of the province of Manitoba, and has all the duties and responsibilities that attach to a trustee.

What is the legislation that the hon. the Minister of Justice proposes to repeal? What is that bill? Does that bill contain anything more than the protection of the interests of this Dominion and of the interests of the people of the province of Manitoba? Now these interests are very large, particularly so far as this Dominion and the province of Manitoba are concerned. There is a water-power valued altogether at some $60,000,000, as horse-power is generally sold. It is necessary to preserve those interests by regulating the flow of the water from that river, and this legislation centres around the regulation of the flow of water. There are facts brought out in connection with the investigation which show that, by proper regulation, the amount of water flow, 220,000 horse-power now so far as Manitoba is concerned, would by better regulation be almost doubled, and would amount to 416,000 horse-power, having an added value to the province of Manitoba of some $20,000,000. The proper regulation of that flow would also make a gain to the province of Ontario of some $9,000,000. The bill that it is proposed to pass will withdraw an act that has protected the interests of this Dominion, and that is a matter to be considered very carefully in the interests of the Dominion itself.

Now, it appears that there was a possibility of some arrangement being effected between the province of Manitoba and the province of Ontario through the medium of, and by negotiation with, the Dominion government. The proposal made by the province of Manitoba was a reasonable and fair one. It simply said that they entered into an agreement, and that agreement made certain provisions. The representatives of Manitoba contend that this was a tentative agreement, that certain antecedent things should be done, and when they were done the province of Manitoba would agree. Those things have not been done. I may recite a portion of the agreement, and show what it is that the province of Manitoba demands to be completed before this bill becomes law. The provisions read:

1. That the Lake of the Woods Control Board should immediately investigate and report to the three governments concerned the possibility of an alternative structure above Norman dam, or failing such being found under what procedure and auspices should the Norman dam be expropriated.

2. The same board was to canvass the situation and make proper representations to Canada and Ontario as to the regulations necessary to make practically effective the unproclaimed concurrent legislation.

3. Provision for storage rights on Lac Seul upon application by Manitoba interests.

Those were antecedent conditions. Those have not been fulfilled. This Dominion government says through its ministers: "These must now be subsequent." This seems really too bad when we were approaching what might be a settlement. I think, as the leader of the Opposition has urged, Manitoba is conceding a good deal. He urges Manitoba to maintain the last clause passed in the bill that it is now proposed to repeal. To me this seems a reasonable and proper thing. Surely these works are works for the general advantage of Canada. It is proposed in this bill that the Dominion government shall not proclaim the bill; that it shall not become law until the Dominion government is satisfied that the agreement entered into by the three governments or representatives of the three governments shall have been fully complied with. The interests of Ontario in this are more or less incidental. To Manitoba, her people and particularly the city of Winnipeg, this is absolutely vital. The city of Winnipeg has its industrial life in the wonderful water-powers of the Winnipeg river. Vast development can be made there in the future. There is or will be before this House a measure in connection with a hemp proposition. If that works through, it will use vast quantities of water-power, giving employment to large numbers of people, and producing great wealth to western Canada, in fact to Canada as a whole. Already vast quantities of horse-power for various projects are being taken from this same river. The industrial life of the city of Winnipeg, a large and populous city, depends upon this river. The ancient Romans worshipped the Tiber, but the Tiber was not as important to the great city of Rome as the Winnipeg river is to the city of Winnipeg and its inhabitants.

Why should Manitoba make the Dominion of Canada its trustee, or its guardian, or its mouthpiece, or its appraiser, to say that Ontario has complied with the agreement? Why should Manitoba appoint a substitute to act for it? Let Ontario comply fully with the conditions of the agreement, and complete the undertakings it has agreed to carry out to the satisfaction of Manitoba, which is greatly and vitally interested. When Manitoba says that it is satisfied and Ontario says that it is satisfied, it will be time for this bill to pass this House; then it will be time for this House to take the proper and necessary action to carry out the agreement between the three parties. There are always dangers of misunderstandings. There may be verbal misunderstandings, and always the interpretation of written documents brings about misunderstandings. What this Dominion government and its ministers may understand, Manitoba and the various interests that entered into the negotiation may have a different view of altogether. It is because this is so absolutely vital to Manitoba, because it is its very industrial life, and because it is only incidental to Ontario, that Manitoba can afford to take absolutely no chances upon this matter. I believe Manitoba has conceded altogether too much in consenting to the withdrawal of that legislation which says that these works are for the public interest of the Dominion. Manitoba has reason to view with suspicion the situation that exists in connection with the Winnipeg river, not to view with suspicion the action of this government, which I believe to be sincere and earnest and to have an absolute desire to carry out the contract. I maintain, however, that the government is mistaken in its attitude and view, and it is proceeding wrongly. Conditions that were antecedent should not be made subsequent.

But into this there enters another element to which neither of the previous speakers this evening has alluded. A private person has secured large interests upon those waters that feed down the Winnipeg river into Manitoba. This man has reaped a fortune out of the timber limits of Ontario bordering upon Manitoba. He has secured unusual and large rights from Ontario. His attitude in dealing with those, from the first time he appeared before public bodies in negotiations between this Dominion and the United States, was unsatisfactory. He secured a dam known as the Norman dam, and I understand, being secure in that position, he proposed to sell that to Manitoba at an exorbitant, unwarranted and extraordinarily high price. When this negotiation was going on and we had more or less secured control over the Norman dam, we find a remarkable thing; we find this man securing power rights at the White Dog rapids lower down on the Winnipeg river, and this again placed completely in his hands a control which we had more or less taken away from him. Later on we find him advancing from this position to secure large timber limits upon the English river, which is a large and majestic stream, much larger than the river which flows by this House. He is now in control of that water-power there. The people of Winnipeg fear this adventurer; they fear that he will not hesitate at all to reap to the full any advantage that he may have there. They have observed the relationship existing between him and Ontario; they have noticed the remarkable manner in which he secured these valuable timber limits, and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, they are very valuable. It is this man Backus that we particularly fear in Manitoba. He is not possessed, in our opinion, of the fine, jovial and genial qualities of the god Bacchus of old, but more of the horns and cloven hoofs, at least, as he is seen by the people of Manitoba situated at the head of the waters of the river that gives them their industrial life. It is because of this uncertainty; because of the peculiar situation in connection with the refusal of the government of Ontario to pass that bill a year ago; because of the relationship of Backus to that government and the large interests he has acquired on that river; because of the suspected disposition of Backus —it is because of all this that we are opposed to this measure. I do not know the man at all, but I am speaking of his repute so far as his relationship to these water-powers on the Winnipeg river is concerned.

Man naturally is selfish. As he increases in wealth the tendency is that he will become more selfish; and taking human nature as it is, not alleging that Backus is any better or worse than any of the rest of us, but simply taking human nature as we find it, it is a dangerous thing for the province of Manitoba and its people to have this man at its head waters to control the very life of the city of Winnipeg and its industrial interests. I find myself, therefore, strongly opposed to this bill. By the passing of it the Dominion is releasing control over rights to which it is entitled. By passing this bill it deprives the province of Manitoba of the protecton that it now enjoys and leaves it in an unprotected position. The attitude taken by the province of Manitoba is reasonable in the extreme. They have only demanded that the bill should not become law until the agreement referred to by the Minister of Justice and myself, should be completed, not to the satisfaction of the Dominion alone, but to the satisfaction of the Dominion and of the people of Manitoba, to the satisfaction of those who signed the contract. I strongly oppose the bill.

Mr. A. B. HUDSON (South Winnipeg): The subject matter of the bill has been discussed in the House on a number of occasions, and while I do not propose to go into the facts at any great length there are some circumstances which I think might fairly be brought to the attention of hon. members. At an early stage it was agreed by everybody, that is to say, by those representing the Dominion, the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba, that the waters in question should be controlled and regulated. The question then arose as to how this should be accomplished and by whom, and as a result of negotiations which the Minister of Justice has referred to concurrent legislation was introduced in this parliament and in the legislature of Ontario. That concurrent legislation was to my mind defective in one very vital point: it created a board of four, two to be appointed by Ontario and two by the Dominion, nobody having a casting vote. That legislation was agreed to, not because it was satisfactory, but because it was the best kind of agreement that could be got under the circumstances. But everyone will see that it opened the door to trouble in the future when it provided for no casting vote; for the moment the interests of Ontario conflicted with those of Manitoba there would be a deadlock and control would cease. However, it was agreed to, and, as has been stated, it was introduced into this parliament and the bill finally became law. So far as Ontario is concerned it failed, and upon its failure the Premier of Manitoba addressed to the then Prime Minister of Canada a letter which I shall read to the House. It is dated May 13, 1921, and was produced with a return in the session of 1921 when this Regulation Bill was first introduced. It is as follows:

11 p.m.

Dear Mr. MEIGHEN,

re Lake of the Woods Control Board

I have a letter from Mr. Drury advising me that he was obliged to withdraw his bill in the Ontario legislature, and that he has since asked you to continue the present board which was established by concurrent orders in council.

As you are aware, the present board lacks the authority necessary to make its orders effective. Anyone interested in opposing its directions can do so with impunity.

For this reason, the Manitoba government asks your government to take the steps necessary to secure a proper and adequate control of the flow of the waters in question.

The steps which I wish to suggest are:—

First, that the Dominion government should at once acquire the Norman dam. The propriety of and the necessity for this action requires the support of no argument. It was suggested at the conference in your office on the 30th of January last and no objection was raised by anyone. The structure affects navigation and is necessary to carry out your international obligations. Every one must admit that it should not remain in private hands.

The second suggestion is, that parliament should be asked to declare at its present session, that works erected or to be erected in any of the waters in question are and shall be works for the general advantage of Canada under the authority of the British North America Act. Sec. 92 s.s. 10 paragraph (c).

As Mr. Drury wishes to have the present board continued, parliament might, at the same time, empower it to make regulations.

Once it is conceded that control is necessary and that this control should be exercised by a board, it follows as of course, that this board must be given adequate pwer to perform its duties.

It may be suggested that this second proposal involves an improper invasion of provincial rights. It does not appear so to me. The waters in question are navigable waters and the Dominion thereby has already very extensive powers in respect of same. The proposal is for the purpose of ensuring justice as between residents of different provinces in respect of an interprovincial stream. The waters of this stream are not the property of any one riparian owner, but are the common property of all on the banks of the river. The proposal is that there should be control. This does not affect the ownership of the water powers. The effort made to establish effective control by joint action having failed, the proposal now made is the only available method of achieving what was agreed upon. If any set of circumstances could justify action under the above section of the British North America Act, it must be justified here.

The interests of the Dominion as a whole, in the matter are considerable. As you know, it owns all of the water-powers within Manitoba. Some of these powers have been developed by lessees who have established their works in accordance with plans approved of by your government officers and on the assumption that there was to be a regulated flow of the waters in question. Many millions of dollars have been spent in these developments and on this basis. The value of the undeveloped power on the river within Manitoba is also very great. Your government has also spent large sums of money in making most complete and accurate surveys of the river and its potentialities. Under these circumstances, I submit the Dominion cannot stand by and see jeopardized, not only its own subtantial interests but the interests of those whose duty it is to protect.

Any delay will only create new difficulties. For example, only to-day I was informed that Mr. Backus, who owns the Norman dam and who also has an arrangement with Kenora as to the municipal power plant there, has published a notice in the Kenora paper of an intended application to the Department of Public Works for leave to make substantial alterations in the Kenora plant. These alterations may seriously affect the water power interests as well as those interested in navigation. This same Mr. Backus has also acquired from the Ontario government some right to erect works at White Dog Falls, He may be proceeding at once with these works and this might also affect the flow of the water.

For the reasons above mentioned, I would urge you most strongly that immediate action should be taken along the lines above indicated.

In closing, I might explain that the interest of the Manitoba government in this matter arises, first because of its duty to care for the interests of its citizens, more than one-half of whom are dependent on the development on the Winnipeg river for electrical power, and in the second place, because the Manitoba government is a user of a large quantity of power developed by the city of Winnipeg on the Winnipeg river and turned over to the government at Winnipeg for transmission to Portage la Prairie and other points in the province.

Following that letter the legislation was introduced which is called the Regulation Act, a section of which it is now proposed to repeal—a section which has been the chief cause of trouble and disappointment since that time. I think a great deal of trouble arises from a misconception of the nature of this general advantage clause. The general advantage clause does not transfer the property in the powers; it simply gives the Dominion the right to pass regulative legislation. Legislation of this kind is not new. As the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has said, we have had legislation of this kind in respect to railways. But it is not confined to railways; it is a very common provision included in power charters. When the Niagara powers were being developed, this parliament passed acts incorporating the Toronto and Niagara Power Company, the Ontario Power Company and the Hamilton and Erie Power Company. In the charters of these three companies this general advantage clause was inserted. In other words, the powers owned and operated by companies at Niagara are operated under Dominion legislation declaring them to be for the general advantage of Canada. Now, one of these bills, the Toronto and Niagara Power bill, was fully discussed in this House; the House divided on the question, and many of the gentlemen now sitting on this side voted for that bill. As I have said, the general advantage clause does not take away any property rights; it simply gives the power to regulate. Let me illustrate the distinction in this way: under the British North America Act the Dominion is given authority to deal with fisheries and fishing, but the provinces still own the fish. The Dominion may make regulations concerning the times when and the manner in which the fish may be caught, but the province may lease the fishing rights, and that illustrates the difference between the taking away of property rights and the exercising of the power of regulation.

There is a much more opposite case in the situation in Switzerland. There they have a number of streams that are of very great value for power purposes. A few years ago, when hydro-electric development began to become important, there was a great demand throughout that country that the federal government should take over all these power sites and develop them as federal enterprises. But as against this view there were a large number of people who were very much concerned about the maintenance of state rights—the states there have much larger jurisdictions than our provinces have. So they fought the proposal, and eventually a compromise was arrived at by which the federal government was given the power to regulate much as we have the power to regulate under the present act. If we repeal this act now, it seems to me it will not be long before parliament will be called upon to take similar action in other cases. It is unfortunate that no satisfactory arrangement has been concluded in the matter. I think that in the end there must be some final voice, and that voice should be that of the Dominion. For the reasons expressed by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) and the right hon. leader of the Opposition, I think parliament would make a great mistake, having regard to the interests of Canada as a whole, to repeal this legislation.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (Minister of the Interior): Mr. Speaker, it would be needless for me to enter into a rehearsal of what has been so well said by many of the previous speakers. It is sufficient to say that all these things would work out very acceptably if you could get the various parties to agree, but so far that condition has not been attained. I want to point out some of the difficulties that are in the way of a settlement of this dispute. In the first place, when this government took office we found, as has been pointed out by the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and the other two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken, that there had been an attempt to bring about joint legislation, and that an agreement in the matter had been entered into by the governments of Ontario and Manitoba and the federal government. Now, if the federal government have an interest in one province more than in another, it must of necessity be in the province of Manitoba. The Dominion are trustees for the water-powers of that province, powers which are of immense advantage to the people there, who will eventually be its owners. But what is the situation? We find that the governments of Manitoba and Ontario and the federal government agreed to the adoption of joint legislation for the control of the waters of the Lake of the Woods. We find also that a private individual has secured important rights from Manitoba and that he is a very potent factor in any attempt to make an adjustment of this matter. The federal parliament passed the legislation Premier Drury on his part undertook to put through the legislation on the part of the province, and we must take his word when he says he was unable at first to do so. Subsequently, however, he did so. Both those acts are in existence to-day. The bill passed by the legislature of Ontario is contingent upon certain things being put into effect by proclamation of the Governor in Council; until that is done these enactments do not come into effect. The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) has pointed out a weakness in the arrangement, namely, that the board consists of four members and that there is likely to be a deadlock. That is true, but that is what was agreed upon. Subsequent to the passing of the act by this parliament representations were made to this government that the Ontario government had failed to pass the legislation agreed upon, and therefore some other action became necessary. The parliament of Canada undertook to pass and did pass the act that is now objected to so strenuously by the government of Ontario, what is known as the general advantage clause legislation. I would point out that no one has mentioned the fact that the Ontario government strenuously opposed that legislation. As was well pointed out by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, the first paragraph of the agreement, and of that I shall speak later, provides that this legislation must be repealed, and this has been the rock upon which attempts on the part of this government to settle this question have broken on every occasion.

Mr. McMURRAY: Who thought it was necessary that that should be done?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Premier Drury.

Mr. McMURRAY: The province of Ontario?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, absolutely. I thought I had made that clear. At the last session of this parliament we did attempt to repeal that particular clause, as that appeared to be the way leading to a final settlement of this question. I would just like to state in connection with the argument of my hon. friend that he does not question Ontario's right to the ownership of the powers in question, but that the regulation of the power would be better in the hands of the federal government. I have not had a legal training and I do not intend to enter into an argument on that question. Suffice it for me to say to the committee that Premier Drury claims to have been advised, whether rightly or wrongly, that this is an infringement on provincial rights, and he intends to fight it to the limit and carry the case to the Privy Council. He may not succeed, but he will certainly succeed in doing one thing—he will prevent action being taken for a settlement of this question.

Mr. BAXTER: He will not have much to say about it.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not pretend to have a legal training and I cannot say whether he will succeed or not, but I do say that in the meantime it will prevent action by this government for an adjustment of this question even if we have the right.

Mr. STEVENS: So long as the general advantage clause remains, how can he prevent action in a matter that is declared to be for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): By taking action against the government or against any attempt at a settlement of this question.

Mr. STEVENS: How will he take such action?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): He is at liberty to submit it to the courts for decision and carry the case to the Privy Council.

Mr. McMURRAY: Is this government bringing in this bill because pressure or intimidation is being brought to bear by the Ontario government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I thought I had made myself clear when I said that my sole desire, speaking for myself personally, because I have been the means of bringing these people together on two or three occasions, was to get a settlement of this question. The representatives of the province of Manitoba very recently signed an agreement that they were prepared to accept the legislation that exists now, notwithstanding what my hon. friend has said. They were prepared to accept the board for the regulation of the waters of Lac Seul. But the rock on which we split is that the general advantage clause legislation be repealed.

Mr. McMURRAY: I beg my hon.. friend's pardon. May I put this question to him?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Let me read the letter sent by Mr. Johnston on behalf of the power interests and the government of Manitoba. It has been read once before tonight, but I will read it in part again. It is addressed to the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King, Prime Minister, Ottawa, and reads:

> On the 31st ultimo you wrote a letter to Mayor S. J. Farmer, of Winnipeg, on this subject, and you very kindly sent me a copy thereof. Immediately on the return to Winnipeg of the delegation which waited upon you in Ottawa the Manitoba power interests conferred and discussed your letter with the greatest care.
> We note that you desire to take no step which would permit of any exception being taken by the Ontario government to the repealing of the above act.

Mr. McMURRAY: Precedent?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not denying that. I am simply pointing out to my hon. friend that there is no desire on the part of the government of Manitoba as was intimated by him and the other hon. member from Winnipeg, that this legislation should not be passed. It is a question of when. That is what I wanted to make clear.

Mr. McMURRAY: I admit that, so far as the regulating clauses are concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am answering the contention of my hon, friends that this legislation should stand irrespective of what may be done. They contend it would be a mistake to repeal the legislation, and in effect are sustaining the position of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I am pointing out that the Manitoba government and the power interests do not expect that. They are content with the legislation, but they say this one thing: We do not want this legislation repealed until the provisions go into effect by order in council.

Mr. McMURRAY: Why does this government want it done before those provisions are complied with? This government was a party to the contract and should support the contract in its entirety.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am not particular except that we desire to bring about a settlement of this vexed question.

Mr. McMURRAY: But you are introducing the bill, bringing the matter up here.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am sorry my hon. friend takes this attitude. The bill was brought in here last year. We failed to reach an agreement, and that was largely the reason why we failed to reach an agreement. So far as the government of Canada is concerned we are quite prepared to protect the interests of Manitoba. Not only that, but we secured at the conference the signature of the Ontario government to cancel the agreement entered into with the Sioux Lookout for water power that would interfere with the level of Lac Seul and the water supply for the city of Winnipeg. I do not want to be understood as opposing any interest of Manitoba. I want to be understood rather as making an honest endeavour to bring the two conflicting parties together without litigation, if at all possible, and settle this question. If I thought for a single moment that any interest of Manitoba was being jeopardized, I certainly as trustee for the natural resources of Manitoba would stand up for Manitoba's interests as against Ontario's. My sole desire is to bring about a settlement of this question. But how are you going to settle it if certain gentlemen say: We will not agree to the repeal of the general advantage clause legislation under any consideration. It is true that the Ontario government representatives may be changed on the 25th.

Mr. HALBERT: No chance. They will be right on the job.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): But we have to meet the situation as it exists to-day. If they maintain that position then my hon. friends will say "Well, let the Dominion government step in. Let them expropriate the dam held by Mr. Backus. let them fight Mr. Backus and the Ontario government." I doubt very much if that will get us very far.

Mr. McMURRAY: I do not wish to be too troublesome in my interrogations, but why be in such a hurry to put this measure through? Why not make Ontario complete her arrangement? Why should the Dominion government be so insistent in the matter?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The Dominion government have never been insistent. We have called these conferences at the request of the representatives of Manitoba.

Mr. McMURRAY: Then will my hon. friend agree to allow the bill to stand if the government is not insistent?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Let me point out to my hon. friend that this is one of the rocks which cause difficulty. If it is out of the way we can make progress. He has heard the letter read the letter ridiculed by my right hon. friend which points out that we are prepared now to maintain this legislation until an agreement is entered into and which will allow us to bring Manitoba and Ontario together. It is in the interest of all parties that the clause which is offensive to Ontario be removed as a bone of contention in the negotiations. Now, we do not say for a single moment that we are pledging ourselves that the legislation shall not go into effect until the agreement in its entirety is accepted by both governments and by the power interest concerned. Let me again say, that acting for this government, as I have done on one or two occasions, I have no other interest in the world to serve except to try to get a settlement of this very vexed question, and to bring together the parties concerned if it is humanly possible. I admit the weakness that four on a board may find the day when they will come to a deadlock, but I wish to point out that that is agreed to by legislation, that that is agreed to by this letter.

Mr. McMURRAY: Why not carry out this agreement?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If Ontario and Manitoba persist in their course; if one says on the one hand "You must remove what we consider an infringement upon provincial rights before we will move" and the other province says on their part "If you remove that we will not budge" then we are at a deadlock, and there is just one other thing for us to do: Proceed on the legislation declaring the works to be for the general advantage of Canada, and fight Mr. Backus and fight the Ontario government. Now, that is the alternative. On the other hand we have tried to be the friendly arbiter. We have tried to keep in line the interest of all parties concerned. If I thought otherwise I would not be advocating this method of settling this difficult question. And it is important that this question be settled. It is important, very important, in the interest of Manitoba that it be settled. Not only that. We cannot carry out our international agreement to regulate the levels of the Lake of the Woods until we get control of the Norman dam; and in the agreement the Ontario government has undertaken to adopt measures, by one method or another, to secure control of that dam which it is so necessary for the board to have before they will have the right to regulate the international waters at that point. That is all. I am not expressing an opinion as to the validity of the legislation.

I may frankly state that my experience in the provincial arena has made me rather anxious about provincial rights. Probably I view this matter from a different standpoint to some of my hon. friends who are sitting around me. However, I want to dismiss that altogether and try to find common ground for a settlement of this very vexed question with sufficient safeguards around it to meet the vews of all parties concerned.

Mr. HOEY: What objection would the minister have to not bringing this legislation into force until the two governments entered into an agreement and ask that it be done?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The letter my right hon. friend read points out that the existing legislation only comes into effect by proclamation.

Mr. HOEY: But not at the request of the provinces concerned.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): At any rate the Prime Minister has placed this government on record as being agreeable to that method of dealing with this question.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver Centre): I hesitate very much to have anything to say in this matter, but knowing the very deep interest that my right hon. leader has taken and the very important part he has played in it from its inception, I feel that I should make one more appeal to the Minister of Justice, and to state as briefly as I can a few reasons why I think this legislation should be laid over. In the first place I should like to say this: If the House wanted an argument for the staying of this legislation I think they would find it in the remarks of the Minister of the Interior. I am not saying that with any desire to reflect on him, but his presentation of the problem—indicating the complexity of it, the differences between these two provincial governments and the somewhat stubborn attitude of the Premier of Ontario—would demonstrate, to my mind at least, that it was desirable for this government to retain control of the situation until something like a better spirit of agreement obtains between the two governments. For instance, my hon. friend said a moment ago that he was quite prepared to protect the interests of Manitoba, which are admittedly very vital interests to that province; I think the House, perhaps, ought to give very careful thought to that—Manitoba's vital interests. My hon. friend says that he is quite prepared to protect Manitoba's interests, but how can he, or this government, protect Manitoba's interests with any effect by the repeal of this clause which was passed by this parliament after previously trying without it to compose the situation and finding on the authority of their experts and advisers that the situation was untenable as far as administration is concerned? Let me repeat that question, perhaps I did not make it very clear: In the early stages of this dispute this government endeavoured to compose the differences between the two provinces and on the report of their advisers and experts, they found they could not do so, because they could not make anything they did effective; and in order to make their decisions effective they had to pass this legislation declaring the works to be works for the general advantage of Canada. My hon. friend now says that in order to get together the two provinces that are estranged we should withdraw from the legislation that was found very necessary two years ago in order to make the federal influence effective.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Does my hon. friend know that any advance has been made since the passing of that legislation?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, I would say this is clear to me—and I speak with some hesitancy and perhaps with a certain apology to the House for trespassing—it is clear to me that a very distinct advance was made in this agreement which was made last fall. My hon. friend said it was a few days ago but it was in November if I am correct, and the minister will tell me if I am wrong—it was in November, eight months ago, that this agreement was entered into, and yet Ontario has failed to live up to its terms, and we find Manitoba coming back now feeling actually alarmed that the agreement into which it had entered was not only not being observed but there was not even an attempt to observe it in all its terms. Now, that is a condition which, to my mind, not only justifies this government but makes it imperative for them to retain control of the situation until that condition is thoroughly cleared up. Now, another point—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend—my object is to have the situation clarified and put clearly before the House—but the Minister of Justice read the first paragraph of that agreement, and I thought I made it clear to the committee that that was the rock which caused all the difficulty. With that paragraph in, we were able to get that agreement.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish to speak on that later on. My hon. friend points out that the two governments had been working on this thing and had more or less failed, and he suggests virtually, though he does not say it in so many words, that the control of the situation should be turned over to Ontario. In other words, coming to my hon. friend's last question, the province of Ontario all through these negotiations from 1920—I remember it from the first discussion in the House—down to a week or two ago have taken the stand that they will do nothing until this clause is repealed.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes that is right.

Mr. STEVENS: He says he wants to stand between the two governments, but he says to Manitoba, "No matter what your rights may be or how much you are injured, no matter what attitude Ontario may take towards you, we insist that you agree to Ontario's stand in this regard." That is not a reasonable position. My idea of the situation is that the Canadian government ought to take a very distinct stand, and say; No we will remain in control of the situation as an independent party.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: That is what we do.

Mr. STEVENS: But you are giving that away virtually.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: No.

Mr. STEVENS: You are saying, "We are retaining the power to bring this into operation by order in council." Let me ask the hon. member—and this is really my appeal to him—if the condition of things is such that it is not necessary to pass this act now, in the final form, why not let it wait until these two goverments can compose their differences?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I am sorry I did not make that clear. All this legislation between the two governments and what we purpose now is contingent upon certain things being done, and when they are done the legislation goes into effect. If the bill passes this House to-night, and the Governor in Council never makes the declaration, it will never come into effect.

Mr. STEVENS: Why take the power?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Simply to get a vexed question settled.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think the minister will settle it, because he tells us that Ontario will consent to nothing until this proclamation is made, or the act repealed. Manitoba comes along and says, "We are alarmed at having our interests subject to the caprice of Ontario, and we must realize that once this thing is out of the way, if there is a dispute between the two, Ontario is in control of the situation, and naturally will legislate in its own interests, and we cannot expect it to do otherwise."

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): How will Ontario be in control until this government takes the final step and asks for the proclamation of the repeal of this act?

Mr. STEVENS: I admit that.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Will my hon. friend not agree that it puts this government as an arbitrator, if you will—because that is the position they are to occupy—in a very much better position to settle this question than if the act remains on the statute book and the government has no power to touch it till next session?

Mr. STEVENS: There is a very clear answer to that in the correspondence brought out to-night. If the Ontario government had kept faith with the Manitoba government, I would say your position was sound.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I do not want to be in the position of a pleader for Ontario, because I am not; but that is the contention of Manitoba. There may have been things they could have done more rapidly, we do know they have been moving all the time, but have not succeeded in completing the arrangements provided for.

Mr. STEVENS: I simply say that in the absence of my leader, who was called out of the House, realizing his interest in the problem, and the interest of many others who will not have an opportunity to be heard, I would ask the Minister of Justice not to press this legislation at the present time.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg Centre): As one of the representatives of Winnipeg, I should like to join in urging that this legislation should not be pressed. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) seems to be very anxious to settle the question that, from the standpoint of Manitoba, there is danger of imperilling some of Manitoba's rights. It is not necessary for me to go into the legal and historical aspects which have been so fully discussed by the other members for Winnipeg and by the leader of the Opposition. There are, however, just a few points I should like to emphasize. Coming from Manitoba, we have almost to appeal to the generosity of the Dominion government, because we have no legal rights ourselves in this matter, and, as has been recognized, the Dominion government acts as the trustee; and hence, if possible, greater care should be exercised because of the responsibility which the Dominion government carries in this regard. The present situation is that since 1921 Manitoba's interests are safeguarded, because as has been suggested, all the works in this area are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. So that, whatever may take place in the future, we feel that at the present moment we are comparatively safe and stand on solid ground. I think I must agree that Manitoba has been willing to concede a great deal, and has consented that under certain conditions this legislation should be repealed. The memorandum on the agreement which was made was read by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray). I should like to point out that these clauses are very general indeed. The first clause says—

> That the Lake of the Woods Control Board should immediately investigate and report to the three governments concerned the possibility of an alternative structure above the Norman dam, or failing such being found, under what procedure and auspices should the Norman dam be expropriated.

This is a general clause, involving a very careful examination and report by engineers and so on, and it is not at all clear that when these reports come in they can be readily agreed upon by the parties concerned. It is the same with the other clauses of the agreement. No details whatever are given but the understanding is that certain conditions must be fulfilled precedent to the repeal of the Lake of the Woods Regulation Act. I take it, however, that the governments have come very near to a settlement of the matter by Manitoba conceding almost everything. Manitoba, as I understand it, is desirous that the repeal bill should be so amended as to provide that it shall come into force on proclamation to be made only after Ontario and Manitoba respectfully so request by order in council. That is simply that, with a view to the large number of details that have to be decided that are not given at all in this general agreement, Manitoba ought to be satisfied before the proclamation should be made. That, it seems to me, is not an unreasonable request, and if there is anything at all in legal safeguards, Manitoba is right in claiming that these legal safeguards should be left in, until such times as there is full agreement. Let me turn, for one moment, to the practical side of the question. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the industrial life of Winnipeg is bound up with the power on the Winnipeg river. We need the light and power, and even the heat, that we get from the power generated there. We need it in our domestic economies as well as in our industrial concerns. It is very very important to the life of that City of the Plains that we should have this water-power safely guarded. This is at present imperilled. A private corporation could put the city in a very serious position, indeed, in the course of twenty-four hours. Private corporations would be in a position to cut us off entirely from our heat, light and power. The power that they might exercise by a very little change in the water levels could be illustrated by the case of the power at Pelican rapids. Let me read a paragraph or so from a memorandum with regard to that:

> In 1922 the town of Sioux Lookout was promised a lease by the Ontario government of the Pelican rapids power site on Lac Seul.
> This power site is so situated that it can only be of commercial value provided that the water level on Lac Seul is maintained at its normal height, hence the raising of the lake level for regulation and storage purposes destroys Pelican rapids as a power site.
> The promise of this lease was immediately recognized by Manitoba as a serious menace to the scheme of regulation recommended for adoption, as it sacrificed the development of 160,000 horse-power on the English and Winnipeg rivers for a possible 3,000 horse-power at Pelican rapids. A net loss of 157,000 horse-power to the two provinces.

That is just an illustration of what might happen in a number of places if rights to vater-powers are not carefully safeguarded. I would urge that the river is a continuous thing, physically continuous, and that cannot be, as it were, chopped off by arbitrary political boundaries. If the levels were raised hundreds of miles away up the stream, it might produce serious results. It is absurd to say that action in one section of the country—in Ontario—should determine the usefulness of waterpower in which Ontario is not nearly as much interested as is Manitoba. Just to show the absurdity of the situation, if Manitoba should seek to retaliate, I suppose Manitoba could readily construct a dam which would flood Ontario and destroy the powers up in that part of the river. No one would suggest that Manitoba is likely to build, as it were, a spite fence, or anything of the kind. I give that merely as an illustration of how absurd it is to try to work out this problem strictly along the lines of provincial boundaries. Further it would seem as if it would be very difficult in the case of water-powers to distinguish sharply between ownership and control. I submit this with some diffidence, because I know there is a legal distinction made on these lines, and it has already been suggested tonight that the ownership might lie with the province and the control with the Dominion. That might be true in the case of fisheries; it might be true in other instances; but in the case of water-powers it would be sometimes difficult to apply the distinction, because control and ownership are inextricably bound up with one another. Unless you give a certain measure of control, ownership becomes absolutely valueless because the power ceases. I would urge that we must get away from a narrow interpretation which stresses provincial rights, provincial ownership of natural resources, and we must in place of that adopt a rather broader view, basing our action upon general principles, as indicated in the phrase in the legislation as it now stands, that is that we should have regard to the general advantage of Canada. I, therefore, urge that this safeguard for the people of the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba should not be taken away until Winnipeg and Manitoba, as well as Ontario, are satisfied.

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words in connection with this matter, because I want to place myself on record in regard to the situation. I have tried to follow the discussion this evening as carefully as I possibly can. I realize that this is a question of very great importance, at any rate to Manitoba. I can hardly offer a solution. I can see that the representatives of Ontario are pretty much worked up over the matter, although I do not see that they have a great deal to lose in the situation. It seems to me that as regards Ontario, this is largely a matter of claiming a right that is of no particular advantage, so far as I can see. Manitoba, on the other hand, is desperately interested in this situation. By certain manipulations of the water-powers, the power could to a very large extent be taken away from Winnipeg, and this in reality would be a tragedy and a disaster. Looking at the matter dispassionately and from the outside, wanting to do justice to both parties, I cannot understand why the government should be so anxious to repeal this act at the present time. It seems to me that Ontario and Manitoba ought to be able to come together in some way, and to arrive at some arrangement on this matter before this bill is repealed.

Mr. HALBERT: Why was the late government so anxious to shove it through?

Mr. FORKE: I suppose that was done to save Manitoba at that time. I cannot begin to argue the question, because I am not aware of all the conditions, but I know the situation. I know the position the city of Winnipeg is in, and I know if these water-powers are hampered or interfered with, a disaster and a tragedy will be caused to the city of Winnipeg. There is no question about that. I am perfectly sure my hon. friends from Ontario do not wish to do any harm or injury to the city of Winnipeg, nor do I wish to do any injury to the rights and privileges of Ontario. What we want is justice and something to the advantage of both provinces in this matter.

I would venture to make another statement, and I do so with a good deal of hesitation because I am no authority. But when I look at a matter of such importance, affecting two provinces, I question very much, if I were in the position of Manitoba, if I would ever have agreed to have this privilege taken away from the Dominion of Canada proclaiming this to be for the general advantage of Canada. Manitoba, perhaps, went too far when she agreed to that. She having, however, agreed to it, the only solution I can see would be for the two governments to try to make an agreement, and then if this legislation is passed, as it may be, to arrange that it would come into force only upon a requisition from the two provinces concerned. I do not think there should be any heat over this matter. It is a matter of trying to do justice, what is right to both provinces. If this is only a matter of provincial rights, it is very foolish to get excited over a theory when, in actual practice, some solution of the question can be reached in a sensible and just manner.

Hon. J. B. M. BAXTER (St. John city and counties of St. John and Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to add very much to this discussion, especially at this time; but the matter is being treated or was treated last year as if it were practically entirely a question of provincial rights. It does not seem to me that it is that at all. As I understand it, the greater part if not the whole of the waters involved fall under the operation of the joint commission which has been established between Canada and the United States for the regulation of the waterflow. That means that this country, by asking the intervention of the Mother Country in the making of a treaty, has already treated this water as something that cannot pertain in its regulation to any one province, by the very fact that the treaty deals with it; and we are bound by our legislation to give effect to all treaties that are made on our behalf or which touch our interest. The whole point in introducing this bill seems to be not to get at the earlier sections of the legislation but at the last one, the vital one, the one which makes the work one for the general advantage of Canada. As has been pointed out repeatedly, even if the government of Ontario had fulfilled its undertaking and the Dominion government had done the same, and there had been no mention, as there was none in that agreement, of the work being for the general advantage of Canada, yet from the standpoint of the necessity for giving to the commissioners of the international waters the power over these waters we should have had to declare it to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. That would not alter one iota of the property in the dams or the waters or anything else. Wherever the property is, in whatever province it may be, it would still remain, and all that would be implied would be that no advantage could be taken by any provincial legislature with regard to the use or the withholding from use of that water. The rights of all parties would be preserved subject only to the supreme right which ought to rest in this parliament to prevent injury being done in the case of the exercise of provincial rights. It seems to me that the case is absolutely clear against the repeal of the former legislation if that repeal is to involve the last section which makes this declaration. If the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) wants to repeal only the other sections, I do not see that any harm will be done. But there should be left on the statutes a declaration that will do justice to all provinces and safeguard all interests, a declaration that the legislative authority of Canada will embrace this and all works connected with it.

Hon. Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice): The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) told us in the course of his remarks that if there were works that should be declared for the general advantage of Canada under subsection 10 of section 92 of the British North America Act, these were the works. In 1920, when an agreement was reached between the Dominion government and the government of Ontario, that section 92 was in force, and these works were in existence. The leader of the Opposition was then in power. Why did he not at that time declare that such works were for the general advantage of Canada? Why did he not make any declaration to that effect when the two governments came to the agreement that concurrent legislation should be passed by the legislature of Ontario and the Dominion government? Why was there never any mention about any such declaration when the two bills were introduced concurrently in the Ontario legislature and in the Dominion parliament? The reason is this: The province of Ontario has always protested against such a declaration being made by the parliament of Canada. That province has always contended, as it still contends, that these works are provincial works, that the powers are provincial powers, and that the Dominion government has no right to declare them for the general advantage of Canada. There was no desire to precipitate any litigation with the province of Ontario; the object was to help the province of Manitoba to deal with Ontario in regard to Lac Seul, where there are powers that may be developed for the advantage of the province of Manitoba. There was another reason. The Dominion government of that day and the provincial governments interested were desirous of obtaining a treaty with the government of the United States in regard to the Lake of the Woods. This could be done only if an agreement could be arrived at between the government of Ontario and the Dominion government. It was therefore for that reason that the understanding was reached. In 1921, when the leader of the government was informed that the executive of Ontario could not pass, at that session of the legislature, the legislation promised, he introduced the bill which is now chapter 38. On that occasion he addressed the following remarks to the House. I quote from Hansard of May 26, of that year, at page 3903:

> The previous bill, already passed, was intended to be concurrent with legislation by the province of Ontario which did not go through, so our former bill is valueless. The present measure is designed to hold the situation in the meantime, until, if it should come to pass, the Ontario legislature enacts the concurrent legislation contemplated.

Ontario since then did pass concurrent legislation, but in spite of that the leader of the Opposition says that we should retain that proviso which we find in section 10, of chapter 38. If it had not been for that proviso, we should not have had the quarrel which has given rise to so much discussion for nearly two years. It was to arrive at a settlement of that dispute that the three governments met and entered into an agreement under which they expressed themselves as willing that chapter 38 which we are now discussing should be repealed. It is said that this can only be done when the conditions set forth in that agreement shall have been complied with. I do not see anything of that kind in the agreement, but supposing it is so and even if the conditions were complied with, the right hon. leader of the Opposition says that for no consideration, under no circumstances, would Manitoba consent to the repeal of that declaration that these works are for the general advantage of Canada. I think the House should trust the government to the extent of believing that we will not proclaim this statute before making sure that all the conditions of the agreement of November, 1922, have been complied with. If we take the attitude that we should wait until everything is perfect and complete, what would Manitoba obtain from Ontario? Manitoba has already presented to Ontario a request that they be given the right to store waters in Lac Seul. Ontario says, "We are prepared to enter into an arrangement with you provided that the statute of 1921 is repealed." If we do not repeal that proviso; if we proceed to exercise control through the board over the dam at the Lake of the Woods and all the other works on English river and the Winnipeg river, we shall render ourselves liable to action any day, next month or next year, by the government of Ontario. We are asked, how could Ontario proceed? There are many methods of procedure; there have been cases in the past where similar questions have been taken as far as the Privy Council. If this bill does not become law, the province to suffer most will be Manitoba, because they will never get from the province of Ontario the rights for which they are asking.

We are told that we should not repeal this proviso because such action might give rise to trouble in the future. Well, we have had no trouble in the past, Mr. Speaker, when we had a board appointed under order in council only by the province of Ontario and by the Dominion government. It was not because the commissioners were quarrelling that the legislation was passed in 1921; it was simply to give them the necessary authority to control the waters of the Lake of the Woods and of the rivers mentioned. It cannot be said that the commission is of no value because it consists of four members and that they may not always agree. We can at any time make a change so far as the commission is concerned; we can provide that the quorum shall consist of three members; that the chairman shall have a double vote, and so on. That is only a question of detail. If this bill becomes law and it is found next year or in subsequent years that the board is not operating in the interests of the provinces of Manitoba and of Ontario and of Canada as a whole, we can at any time again declare these works for the general advantage of Canada. Mr. Speaker, in the interests of the country; for the good of the province of Manitoba; for the protection of those who have invested millions in these powers on the Winnipeg river, I say we should pass this legislation. We are told by the members for Manitoba that they will be satisfied to let the bill pass provided that it is proclaimed only with the consent of Manitoba. We only ask our hon. friends to trust us in that respect. The government of Canada can only be satisfied if the province of Manitoba is satisfied, because the rights of Manitoba are the rights of the Dominion. These resources, these powers, these waters are under the control of the Dominion; why should we sacrifice any of our property in favour of one province as against another. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the proposal we put before the House in this matter is in the interests of the province of Manitoba as well as of the Dominion as a whole, and I hope that the measure will be accepted by the House.

Maclean (Halifax),	Guthrie,
Fournier,	Hanson.

Mr. DESAULNIERS: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Wilson); otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. GENDRON: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Garland); otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. FIELDING: I was paired with the hon. member for West York. I do not know how I might have voted. What I mean is I think probably the hon. member and I would have agreed, but in his absence I have not voted.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Queens, P.E.I.): I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria. Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. HUDSON: I would ask that the bill be not now read a third time but that it be taken up to-morrow.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why not?

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the House.

WAYS AND MEANS

SALES TAX

The House in committee of Ways and Means, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the Chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915, and amending acts and to provide:

3. That the existing provisions respecting tax on sales be amended by providing for the imposition of a consumption or sales tax of six per centum on the sale price of all goods produced or manufactured in Canada, including the amount of excise duties when the goods are sold in bond, the tax to be payable by the producer or manufacturer at the time of the sale thereof by him, and of a like tax upon the duty paid value of imported goods, the tax to be payable by the importer, or transferee who takes the goods out of bond, at the time when the goods are imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption, subject to the following conditions, that is to say:

Mr. FIELDING: The essence of this proposal is that we adopt one general sales tax instead of the varying rates which were hitherto in force. I may say the aim of the resolution is not to raise additional revenue, though it may produce some, by overcoming the evasions of the past. If it brings us more revenue we shall find it very welcome, but that is not the object. The object is to simplify the sales tax. Instead of having varying rates we have one tax of 6 per cent which will apply practically everywhere. That is the underlying principle. The machinery by which it is worked out is not without some difficulty, but the officials of the Customs department assure me it is quite workable. I think with that explanation the committee will understand all that is involved in the resolution.

Mr. BAXTER: I have had representations, and I have no doubt the minister also has had, from people in the lumber business, who point out that this will seriously affect them. I received a telegram on the subject from a large manufacturer to-day. Messrs. Haley of St. John also called my attention to the fact that the stocks they carry would not be used up until a much later period than that at which the change goes into effect. I would therefore ask the minister, I have no doubt he has had representations on the matter, as to whether he will be prepared to make some modification to cover cases of that kind?

Mr. FIELDING: The bill which will be introduced deals more in detail with the matter, and I think I am safe in saying that as to the time referred to the criticism of the hon. gentleman can be met. The bill will contain all the details, and if it is agreeable to the House instead of going into an argument about it to-night the resolution might be passed, the bill founded on it introduced, and the whole matter then remain over for further consideration. I think it will be found later that the particular point in question has been met.

Mr. ARTHURS: Will that apply to all the purchases of lumbermen throughout the Dominion?

Mr. FIELDING: The tax will apply to the lumbermen at the first stage.

Mr. STEVENS: Then we are to understand that any matter coming up in this resolution can be discussed when the bill is brought forward?

Mr. FIELDING: Quite so.

Motion agreed to.

(1) A manufacturer or producer who produces goods to the value of ten thousand dollars or more during any fiscal year shall take out an annual license, the fee therefor not to exceed two dollars; the Minister may direct that a manufacturer or producer, who does not manufacture or produce goods to the value of ten thousand dollars a year, and who uses a substantial portion of goods which are exempt from the tax in the manufacture of goods which are liable to the tax, shall take out a license and shall be subject to the same conditions as the licensed manufacturer or producer.

(2) A wholesaler or jobber who sells not less than thirty per cent of his total sales of goods to a licensed manufacturer or producer to be used in articles to be produced for sale, may be granted an annual license, the fee therefor not to exceed two dollars. Such licensed wholesaler or jobber shall give security that he will keep proper accounts and render true statements of sales to licensed manufacturers or producers and pay any tax imposed by the said act.

Mr. FIELDING: I move to amend subsection 2. The amendment is to strike out the word "thirty" in the first line and substitute the word "fifty". The first two lines will then read:

A wholesaler or jobber who sells not less than fifty per cent of his total sales of goods to a licensed manufacturer or producer—

And so on.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: The other sections are unchanged until we come down to resolution No. 5:

(5) The said consumption or sales tax shall not be payable in the following cases, that is to say:

(c) on goods imported by a licensed manufacturer or producer to be used in the production of articles for sale; or

Mr. FIELDING: There is no change down to resolution No. 5. I move that paragraph (c) subsection 5, of resolution 3, of May 11th be struck out. It is provided for in another part of the resolution.

Amendment agreed to.

(d) on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to, or on goods imported by, a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for in accordance with the provisions of paragraph two of section three of this resolution.

Mr. FIELDING: I move that paragraph (d) of subsection 5 of the resolution be amended by striking out the words: "on goods imported by."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: I want to put in a new section No. 7, as follows:

A deduction from the consumption or sales tax may be granted in respect of goods imported by a licensed manufacturer or producer when such goods are further manufactured and liable to the consumption or sales tax, such deduction not to exceed the amount of the said tax paid on importation.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Fielding.]

(7) A refund of the amount of the said consumption or sales tax may be granted in the following cases, that is to say:

(a) to a wholesaler, jobber or other dealer on goods sold to a licensed manufacturer or producer to be used in articles produced for sale; or with the consent of the wholesaler, jobber or dealer a refund or deduction may in the like case be granted to a licensed manufacturer or producer; or

Mr. FIELDING: Then I move that paragraph (a) subsection 7 of the resolution be amended by inserting at the beginning of the said paragraph the words:

(a) To a licensed manufacturer or producer; or

The numbering will be changed. What was 7 now becomes 8.

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

(b) to a licensed manufacturer or producer or a licensed wholesaler or jobber, in respect of goods on hand on the 1st of August, 1923, and which are to be used in the production of articles for sale, no refund to be allowed in respect of goods on hand after the 31st of December, 1923; or

Mr. FIELDING: I beg to move that paragraph (c) of subsection 7 of the resolution be amended so that it will read as follows:

To a licensed manufacturer or producer or a licensed wholesaler or jobber in respect of goods on hand on the 1st day of January 1924 and which are to be used in the production of articles for sale, no refund to be allowed in respect of goods not accounted for prior to the 31st day of March, 1924.

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: The lettering will be changed to correspond; (b) becomes (c), and (c) becomes (d), (d) becomes (e) and (e) becomes (f). Number 8 becomes 9.

On subsection 9, paragraph 5:

5. That Schedule II, to the said act be amended by striking thereout the item respecting beverages and by adding to the said schedule the following item:

"Carbonic acid gas in cylinders per pound, one cent."

Mr. FIELDING: There is an item respecting beverages and carbonic acid gas. I had the impression we passed it, but there was a motion to strike out the words "in cylinders," which I think has been overlooked. I will ask you therefore to open up the item and strike out the words "in cylinders."

Amendment agreed to.

Item agreed to.

4. That the said resolutions be amended by striking out resolution No. 7 and by adding thereto the following resolutions:—

"7. A deduction on account of the sales tax may be granted in respect to goods sold at a price fixed by bona fide contract of sale made before the twelfth day of May, 1923, and still in force at the time of delivery of the goods; provided that such deduction shall not exceed the difference between the amount of the sales tax calculated at the rate in force on the eleventh day of May, 1923, and the amount of the consumption or sales tax paid or to be payable under the provisions of these resolutions, and that no such deduction shall be made in respect of goods delivered after the thirty-first day of March, 1924, and claims for such deduction must be presented to the Department of Customs and Excise with complete evidence on or before the 30th day of June, 1924, otherwise the same shall be rejected."

Mr. FIELDING: These resolutions were supplemented by resolutions of the 23rd May, to which I will draw attention. I move the adoption of this resolution.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: Resolutions 8, 9 and 10 have been passed I understand. There is a change of words in these resolutions; but they do not alter the general purpose as I have stated.

Mr. STEVENS: While the minister is on the adjustment I should like to draw attention to something which I think is an oversight. In clause 9, page 3, the words "earthen drain tiles for agricultural purposes" are used. It has been represented to me that a lot of drain tiles used for draining farms are made of concrete or cement, just the same as the earthen tiles exactly, made in the locality and used very extensively, particularly in western Ontario. An hon. member drew this to my attention, and asked that the word "earthen" be dropped.

Mr. FIELDING: It would not cover cement tiles, if that is what my hon. friend means. Would he like cement to be included?

Mr. STEVENS: Or leave it "drain tiles for agricultural purposes."

Mr. FIELDING: Then strike out the word "earthen" and leave it "drain tiles." I will move that amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: I move the following resolution:

"10.That said paragraph 4 of subsection (1) of section nineteen BBB of The Special War Revenue Act, 1915, being the list of excepted articles not liable to tax, be amended by adding thereto the following item:—

'syrups enumerated in Customs Tariff item 140;' "

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. FIELDING: I move the following, resolution as No. 12:

That any enactment founded on resolutions Nos. 4 and 5, shall come into force on the 1st day of June, 1923; and any enactment founded on resolutions Nos 1 and 6 of the resolutions of May 11th, 1923, shall come into force on the 1st day of August, 1923 and any enactment founded on resolutions Nos. 3, 7, 8 and 10 shall come into force on the 1st day of January, 1924.

You will see these are all set out fully in the bill, and they can be better understood then.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 230, to amend the Special War Revenue Act, 1915.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Fielding the House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Thursday).

Thursday, June 21, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANK ACT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 231, to amend the Quebec Savings Bank Act, 1913.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DISMISSAL OF JAMES CONLEY

Hon. Mr. BAXTER:

1. Why was James Conley dismissed from the position of keeper of Noel Light on Noel wharf, Hants county, Nova Scotia?

2. Upon whose recommendation was the dismissal made, and upon whose recommendation was his successor appointed?

3. At the time of making the dismissal, or subsequently, was the Department of Marine and Fisheries aware that Conley had permission from the Inspector of lights to have the light attended to by his wife during his absence?

4. What was then, and is now, the remuneration for keeping said light?

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. He was dismissed on the ground that he did not attend to the duties of lightkeeper, contrary to the rule and practice of the department.

2. The dismissal and appointment were made on the recommendation of the Hon. Jacques Bureau, at the time Acting Minister of the department.

3. Subsequent to the dismissal of Conley, the department was informed that he had permission from the Inspector of Lights. The inspector, however, had no authority to vary any rule or practice.

4. Conley was receiving $150 per annum. His successor is receiving $120 per annum.

METAPEDIA BRIDGE

Hon. Mr. BAXTER:

1. How much lumber was used in the repairs to the Interprovincial Bridge at Metapedia, Quebec, last fall?

2. (a) Who supplied same, (b) what was the price per thousand feet, and (c) the total amount paid for the lumber?

3. What men worked on the bridge, at what wages and for what time were they respectively paid?

4. (a) What men hauled the lumber, (b) at what wages per day for horse and man, and (c) what was the total amount paid for this service?

Hon. Mr. KING (Kootenay):

1. 30,385 feet.

2. (a) Chas. H. Nadeau and Jas. H. Adams; (b) $25 per M. feet; (c) $759.63.

3. S. M. Adams, conductor $4 a day, 21 days in November, 6 in December; Jas. H. Adams, sub-conductor, $3 a day, 21 days in November, 6 in December; D. F. Adams, labourer, $3 a day, 20 days in November, 6 in December; Alex. Gallant, labourer, $2.50 a day, 19 days in November, 5 in December; Herbert Adams, labourer, $2.50 a day, 16 days in November, 6 in December; John Firter, labourer, $2.50 a day, 8 days in November, 6 in December; Malcolm Lawlor, labourer, $3 a day, 1 day in November; Octave Gallant, labourer, $2.50 a day, 1 day in November; John A. Adams, labourer, $2.50 a day, 6 days in November.

4. (a) Gordon Lawlor and D. F. Adams; (b) $4 a day to Lawlor for 17½ days, and $4.50 a day to Adams for 1 day; (c) $74.50.

WOOLLEN INDUSTRY IN CANADA

Mr. CHURCH:

Is it intended to introduce any legislation this session to assist the woollen industry in Canada?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING: No legislation with special reference to the woollen industry is proposed.

[Mr. Fielding.]

CATTLE EMBARGO—INQUIRY FOR RETURN

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. STEVENS: I should like to ask again if the correspondence requested yesterday, and which was ordered on February 12th, regarding the removal of the cattle embargo, is ready yet for presentation to the House?

Mr. FIELDING: I am not personally familiar with the matter. I will inquire of the Minister of Agriculture and ascertain during the day.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House do this day resolve itself into committee to consider the following proposed resolution.

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, chapter ten of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, by providing—

1. That the present sessional allowance of members of the Senate and House of Commons shall be paid to every member of either House who attends a session of Parliament extending over a period of fifty days or more; that a member shall not be entitled to the sessional allowance for less than fifty days' attendance but that his allowance for any less number of days shall be twenty-five dollars for each day's attendance; and that the said allowance may be paid on the last day of each month to the extent of twenty dollars per day for each day's attendance;

2. That a deduction at the rate of twenty-five dollars per day shall be made from such sessional allowance for every day beyond fifteen on which the member does not attend a sitting of the House, if the House sits on that day; provided that in the case of a member elected or appointed after the commencement of a session, no day of the session previous to such election or appointment shall be reckoned as one of such fifteen days, and that each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day, shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session, for the purpose of the indemnity; and

3. That the above amendments with the exception of that concerning the payment of the indemnity on the last day of each month at the rate of twenty dollars per day, shall apply to the present session of Parliament.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, and recommends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Before the resolution is reported I should like to ask if the purport is to permit the bringing in of a bill to remove some of the restrictions that formerly existed? For example, I understand there was a regulation that if a member were absent any day during the last fifteen days of the session he was fined $25 for that day's absence. Does the bill to be founded on this resolution remove that restriction?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, I understand that it does.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I wish to protest. I shall vote against the resolution.

An hon. MEMBER: Very good.

Mr. RINFRET: You do not have to take the money.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 232, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On the motion of Mr. Fielding for the second reading:

Mr. SHAW: I wish to make one or two observations at this time. In so far as this bill proposes to lift the restrictions which were imposed, as I believe for very good reasons I am opposed to it. In so far as it proposes to clarify the situation, I have no objection

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. FIELDING thereupon moved that the House go into committee of the whole upon the bill.

Mr. GARDINER: Is this bill printed and distributed?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know whether it is distributed. I have a printed copy.

Mr. GARDINER: I desire to protest against the bill proceeding any further until it has been distributed.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. member objects, the bill will have to stand, and we will take the second reading to-morrow.

Mr. SPEAKER: The second reading has taken place now by common consent.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member objects

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion for the second reading has been carried, and it has been moved that I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GARDINER: I desire to enter a protest.

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is not debatable, according to rule 17A. The hon. member will have plenty of opportunity to object when the bill is in committee.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Sessional allowance and allowance for attendance less than 50 days.

Mr. GARDINER: I still desire to enter an emphatic protest against considering this bill or any bill, until such time as the bill has been printed and distributed to the members of the House. I will, therefore, move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. BOIVIN: I wish to say—

Mr. SPEAKER: This motion is not debatable.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. member seriously objects to the motion, I will not press it any further to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: I object to the motion, and I object to the principle that members of this House should be called upon to consider bills which are not printed and not in the hands of members; because we should have an opportunity of considering the details.

Mr. FIELDING: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

LAKE OF THE WOODS REGULATION

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 175, to repeal The Lake of the Woods Regulation Act, 1921.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONSTRUCTION

On motion of Hon. Geo. P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways) the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the construction of Canadian National Railway lines, and to provide,—

1. That the Governor in Council may provide for the construction and completion by the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called "the Company") of the lines of railway mentioned or referred to in the schedule to these resolutions (hereinafter called "the said lines of railway");

2. That any of the said lines of railway connecting with the Canadian Government Railways may be declared by the Governor in Council to form part of the Canadian Government Railways. Lines of railway so declared (hereinafter called "Government Railway lines") shall be constructed by the company on behalf of His Majesty and the company shall cause the title to the necessary lands or interests in lands to be acquired in the name of His Majesty.

3. That with respect to Government Railway lines the Governor in Council may authorize advances to be made to the company from the Consolidated Revenue Fund to cover the necessary expenditure in acquiring such lands or interests in lands and in constructing and completing such lines of railway.

4. That with respect to the lines of railway mentioned or referred to in the said schedule other than Government Railway lines (which other lines are hereinafter referred to as "National Railway lines") the Governor in Council may authorize the guarantee of the principal and interest of the securities of the company issued under the provisions (save as herein varied) of section 26 of chapter 13 of the statutes of 1919, to an amount approved by the Governor in Council but not exceeding $40,000 per mile of such National Railway lines.

5. That the certificate of the minister as to the mileage of the National Railway lines shall for these purposes be conclusive, but the minister may issue interim certificates from time to time based upon the estimated mileage and a final certificate to accord with the miles and fractions of miles actually constructed, each line of railway being treated as a separate line.

6. That the mileage of the said lines of railway and the cost of construction thereof mentioned in the schedule hereto shall be deemed to be merely estimated distances and costs.

7. That the nature and form of securities to be issued and guaranteed shall be approved by the Governor in Council and signed by the Minister of Finance, and may, as the Governor in Council decides, be secured by mortgage or deed of trust.

8. That to enable the work of construction and completion of the National Railway lines to proceed forthwith the Governor in Council, pending the issue and disposal of such guaranteed securities, may authorize advances to be made to the company from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, such advances to be reimbursed to His Majesty by the company from the proceeds of the sale or disposition of such guaranteed securities.—The Minister of Railways and Canals.

On clause 1:

Mr. GRAHAM: I wish to make an explanation. The suggestion was made last night by the hon. member for Vancouver in reference to another bill that the resolutions might be allowed to go through their formal course, and that we should get these resolutions in the shape of a bill, so that every member could have it in his hands. I have a bill drafted on these resolutions. If the House would consent, we would get these resolutions in the form of a bill, and then let the matter stand for two or three days, till each member has a copy of the bill and can look over it.

[Sir Lomer Gouin.]

Mr. HANSON: When does the minister suggest that consideration should be given to the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM: Very soon, for the simple reason that when we go into the details of the bill it will be necessary to have some members of the staff from Montreal here.

Mr. HANSON: I think that is a reasonable request.

Mr. STEVENS: I would suggest that the consideration of the bill be taken up on Monday, if that is agreeable to the minister.

Mr. FIELDING: No objection.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): I do not desire to object to proceeding with the resolution, but I wish to draw the attention of the government, and the Minister of Railways more especially, to the fact that they are going into an expenditure of about $25,000,000 for the construction of branch lines. I scanned the resolution very rapidly, and I observed that 71 miles are located in Nova Scotia, 25 miles in New Brunswick, 14 miles in Quebec, and 29 miles in Ontario, and all the rest goes to the west. I do not object that the proposal be adopted. I have had the honour of representing my constituency for twenty-five years, and his Honour the Speaker (Mr. Lemieux) has represented Gaspé, the adjoining constituency, for a longer period. We have on several occasions called the attention of governments in the past to the singular position in which the people of the Gaspé peninsula are situated. In twelve years from now the four-hundredth anniversary of the landing of Jacques Cartier on Canadian soil will occur in this the oldest-inhabited part of Canada. And we are still asking for a decent railway service. When Sir Wilfred Laurier took office in 1896, one hundred miles of railway had been built, as far as New Carlisle, following out a proposal made to the parliament of that day by Sir Hector Langevin and Sir Charles Tupper in 1882. Sir Hector Langevin at that time was Minister of Public Works and leader in the province of Quebec, Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways. In 1882, parliament voted an amount for the construction of this branch of the Intercolonial railway from Matapedia towards Gaspé Basin. This undertaking was handed over to a private company, and the misfortunes of that district began with that date. Sir Wilfred Laurier took office in 1896, and the present Speaker of this House asked, very fairly for his constituency—because at that time Gaspé was the only constituency in Quebec which had no railway service whatever—that the line should be continued from New Carlisle to Gaspé. The remaining one hundred miles were completed, making in all two hundred miles of railway. The late Minister of Railways (Mr. Cochrane) had a law passed through this House by which any two hundred miles of railway connecting with the Intercolonial or with government-owned railways might be merged into the Canadian National system. We have urged this for many years without success. The present two hundred miles of railway line are owned by two companies, the shareholders of which reside in England. They give service merely to keep the railway alive, and the result is that that part of Quebec, which is the most interesting from its maritime aspect, from its valuable resources, from the attractiveness of its territory and from its very energetic population, has remained to this date the most poorly served part of Canada in the matter of railways. It seems strange to these people, inhabiting the oldest part of Canada, while we are voting millions for new parts of Canada which are barely settled at the present time, or which are yet to be settled by newcomers to this country whom we welcome—that the oldest settlers, the people of the oldest part of Canada, should remain still without any adequate railway service.

Lately we have called the attention of Sir Henry Thornton to this state of affairs. Sir Henry Thornton volunteered to have an inspection made of these lines and to have them operated as if they were the property of the Dominion, as branch lines of the Intercolonial railway, because they are de facto branch lines of that road. The two counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure are inhabited by 60,000 people, and we could easily have three times that population if we had a proper railway service. These two constituencies cover 10,000 square miles of the most fertile territory in the province of Quebec, with a double advantage of being situated by the sea, having thousands of miles of timber and pulpwood, mineral resources, fertile soil, and splendid fisheries producing some of the finest fish of the North American continent. Our rivers are visited yearly by the cream of American and Canadian society, from His Excellency down, and that has been the case for the last forty years. A member of the Royal House has gone to the extent of establishing a residence at New Richmond to take advantage of the fisheries in these attractive regions. Nevertheless the district has remained in a quiescent state. During the first ten years that I had the honour of representing the constituency in this House, the population increased in one county alone by 5,000. During the next decade, from 1911 to 1921, the population increased by only 500. Why? Because the industries in both Gaspé and Bonaventure, one after another moved away across the Baie des Chaleurs to the Intercolonial where they could get service over which they could send their produce. At Nouvelle, to begin with, the Province of Quebec Lumber Association transferred all its lumber over to Dalhousie, and it is operating on the main line of the Intercolonial. The same thing happened at Bonaventure and New Richmond where the mills of the McLean Lumber Corporation were transferred to Bathurst, and to-day we witness the spectacle of this lumber being cut in these two countries and being transported in booms across the Baie des Chaleurs, a distance ranging from 25 to 50 miles to be sawn and placed on board cars to be exported to the Canadian and American markets at great disadvantage and loss. The result of this is that the young people are leaving these two counties daily, and settling, unfortunately a large number of them, in the United States. We are losing our population, and this because we have not an efficient railway service which would develop the resources of these two constituencies as they should be developed. I know the Minister of Railways or the government has handed over the operation of the Canadian National Railways to a board of directors. Sir Henry Thornton is willing to operate these lines as branches of the Intercolonial. We find ourselves in presence of these two companies holding these roads for a price, and between the two the people are not getting the service. There must be a solution to this, and I wish to attract the attention of the Minister of Railways and the government of Canada to this fact. Hon. Mr. Carvell and some of his associates on the Railway Commission visited the constituencies two or three years ago and made an elaborate report, which is now in the possession of the Minister of Railways, pointing out that these two constituencies did not have the railway service to which they were entitled. And if an application were made to the Railway Commission to-morrow, I have no doubt that an order would be issued which would place these two English companies in the position of having to give up the operation of these railways, because I understand their resources are not sufficient to give the country the service to which it is entitled.

We have on these two roads some very antiquated locomotives. We have no rolling stock whatever. The rolling stock that we have comes from other roads, and still every pound of freight and every passenger coming over these 200 miles of territory cannot reach any other railway than the Intercolonial. After the hon. the Speaker had succeeded in having the second hundred miles of this road completed, I had the honour of introducing in this House in 1904 a bill to authorize the contruction of the interprovincial railway bridge over the Restigouche river between Cross Point and Campbellton, the reason at that time being to link up these two railways with the Intercolonial Railway at Campbellton. We have now communication with Matapedia by which we can easily reach Montreal, Quebec, Ontario and the West. But our communication with the American market and with the Maritime provinces is defective. By the construction of this bridge over the Restigouche river between Quebec and New Brunswick, we would have an easy access to these railways, to the Intercolonial going east and west, to the International running from Campbellton to St. Leonards and the border of the state of Maine, where it would connect with the American system of railways and would place the entire Gaspé Peninsula within 24 hours of Boston, the great fish market of the United States. We have in the Baie des Chaleurs some of the most magnificent fish in the province. We have pulpwood galore. We have untold wealth in minerals. We have all these resources, but we need a much better railway service. Before the Minister of Railways proceeds much further with this railway legislation, I trust he will give this state of affairs his serious consideration. He will find in the archives of his department a very elaborate report issued last year by one of his officials, Mr. Fraser, who went down there and made a thorough investigation into the whole system. In this report Mr. Fraser points out that these 200 miles are the most valuable branch of the Intercolonial east of Montreal. Still they are inadequately unoperated, the people have not the service, and the Canadian National Railways are without the proceeds that would be derived from the proper operation of these roads. We have a huge deficit in connection with our Canadian National Railways and the only way in which that deficit can be reduced is by obtaining business for the system. Here is an excellent opportunity. People are willing to stay at home here and are anxious to develop the place. We find here large families, and the people are not troubled with any advanced hour or any eight-hour-a-day system, nor are they bothered with labour unions. They are of the old type of Canadians who inhabited this country years ago. This is an ideal country for the development of all our industries and, as I have observed, there are large families—families of ten, twelve and fifteen children are frequent. We have lately seen at Gaspé itself the creation of a new diocese, which in the province of Quebec means the centre of a large district; and the absorbing powers of the French-Canadian race are strikingly exemplified in the fact that the first Roman Catholic bishop of this diocese is the Right Rev. Monseigneur Ross, the descendant of a Scotsman, though a French-Canadian himself. This part of the province of Quebec has thus become the nucleus of a new district, and when the Minister of Railways is considering this development of the National Railway system generally he will find a very notable example of what has occurred in the Lake St. John district as well as in the Chicoutimi district in the fact that this part of the province of Quebec has been erected into a diocese with a bishop in charge. He will also see in the Three Rivers district a section of the country that is fast becoming the industrial centre of the whole of Canada.

I am in favour of immigration, and during the past twenty-five years I have voted for the expenditure of millions untold for this purpose, for the construction of railways, and for the advancement of Canada generally. But really I consider that this part of the province of Quebec has been overlooked; and when His Honour the Speaker and myself placed the matter before Sir Henry Thornton on a purely business basis he was amazed at the state of affairs that actually existed. To such an extent, indeed, did it appeal to him that he offered at once to undertake the operation of these railways as branch lines of the Intercolonial. But we are held up by these English companies who are keeping the roads alive merely for the purpose of obtaining their price. Now, there must be a solution for this condition of things, and I call upon the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin), who is familiar with the province of Quebec, his colleague, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), and the government, to provide this solution as soon as possible. We are not asking for the construction of railways; we are merely asking for the operation of a railway that has already been constructed, a portion of it forty years ago and the other portion within the last fifteen years. We simply want to give to the people the service to which they are entitled; and that they are entitled to this service is admitted by the Railway Commission and all officials who have gone over the ground. I trust therefore that proper attention will be given this matter before long and that the people of Gaspé peninsula will receive that consideration which they have a right to expect at the hands of the country.

Mr. HANSON: I am sure the Minister of Railways must have a heart of stone if he does not give heed to the eloquence of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). While this subject is under consideration I want to call to his attention the position of a branch line of the Intercolonial railway.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the hon. member be kind enough to allow me just a few more words before he proceeds?

Mr. HANSON: I should rather like to continue; the topic I propose discussing is akin to the one just dealt with by my hon. friend. There is in the province of New Brunswick a line known as the Kent Northern railway, the only branch line in the province which has not been taken over by the Dominion. That line was included in the scheme projected by the Minister of Railways in the late government, and but for the attitude of the owners it would ere this have formed a part of the government railway system. I understand that the only difficulty in the old days was with regard to the price. The government at that time were willing to pay $60,000 for the twenty-eight miles of railway line, while the company that owned the property expected considerable more. It has lately come to my knowledge, however, that the company is now willing to sell at the offer originally made by the government, and I will ask that the Minister of Railways, while he is taking into consideration the appeal of the hon. member for Bonaventure, to give serious heed to the request of the people of the county of Kent in New Brunswick, that that line be taken over. During the recent very severe winter the people of that county, numbering some 25,000, were for forty-two days without railway communication. This is a great handicap to a part of the country, such as this is, that is well settled and is thriving industrially, besides being a considerable farming and fishing community. These people are entitled to a better service and the only possible means of providing such a service is for the government to take over this branch line. Again I ask the minister to take into earnest and serious consideration the question of acquiring that line.

Mr. CASGRAIN: While in opposition I took the opportunity on various occasions to call to the attention of the Minister of Railways the situation in regard to certain branch lines which were at that time needed in the county I have the honour to represent, the county of Charlevoix. These two branch lines extend respectively from Baie St. Paul to St. Urbain and from Murray Bay to Nairn fall. The distance between St. Paul and St. Urbain is nine miles and the line would cost approximately $200,000. I had the assurance of the Minister of Railways at that time, Hon. J. D. Reid, that he would send his engineers to look over the site with a view to seeing whether something could not be done in the immediate future. This, I might observe, was in the year 1920, or perhaps in 1921. There is a great mine operated by the Titanium Ore Company in this district; and the General Electric Company of the United States, during the war, successfully operated a mine next to it. I have no doubt that if proper facilities were afforded by a branch line the people that now own the capital stock of the Titanium Ore Company, and who belong to the province of Quebec would be able to carry on operations that would prove of great benefit to that district. At St. Urbain there is a national park which the Department of the Interior has set aside as a special reserve for fishing and hunting, while there are a great number of clubs under the control of the provincial government in this locality. As in the case of the county which my hon. friend (Mr. Marcil) represents a great number of visitors from various parts of Canada, as well as from the United States, and indeed, from other parts of the province of Quebec, pass through this district of which I am speaking, every year, spring, summer and fall, and I am sanguine that if this branch line were built it would increase that traffic and bring more money and people to the place. This district is also a great farming centre, from which butter, cheese and other products are shipped to other parts of the province of Quebec. Then there is the other branch line to which I have referred, from Murray Bay to Nairn fall. It was constructed eleven years ago before the main line of the Saguenay railway was built. But up to the present time the government has not officially taken possession of it. The line has been leased for a nominal rental to a pulp company. I am informed that about $100,000 would put the line into proper shape. A great deal of cheese and butter is produced in this district and extensive lumbering operations are carried on, so that there is plenty of freight business for the railway. Although the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Graham) and the new board of directors of the Canadian National Railways have apparently overlooked the transportation requirements of my district, I hope that they will take the matter once more into consideration and do something. There is also the completion of the Quebec and Saguenay Railway, to Chicoutimi from Murray Bay, a distance of about 55 miles, which has to be undertaken in the very near future if the main railway is to be made to pay. The previous government was very free with assurances that in the very near future they would do something for these people, but apparently these were merely election promises. I hope the new government will do better than their predecessors. To this end, I would extend to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals another invitation to visit this district next July, when I am sure they will agree with me that Baie St. Paul and Murray Bay for scenic beauty are not equalled anywhere else in the Dominion—in fact they will be charmed with the delightful county of Charlevoix-Montmorency.

Mr. LEGER: I can assure my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) that the railway in Kent was looked after by those more closely concerned in the interests of the county long before he was politically born. If we have not control of the branch lines down there it is not the fault of the Conservative government; they made an offer to the provincial authorities, which offer was declined. I for one have done all I could with reference to the matter, without bringing it before the House as a complaint against any government, and to-day it is being looked after by this government in a way which I think will be for the advantage of my county. I can assure my hon. friend that this business is in good hands and that we can get along fairly well without his interference.

Mr. HOCKEN: Mr. Chairman, here is a very interesting situation for the Minister of Railways. The pathetic plea made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has at least excited the sympathy of my hon. friend from York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) because they have a fellow-feeling; they both have railways in their respective counties that have been built for forty years, operated by private companies during all that 4 p.m time, and now that these companies are unable to go on any longer my hon. friends want to dump the lines on to the government. They want to attach them to the National Railways, notwithstanding that my hon. friends from the province of Quebec are always complaining about our National Railway deficits. There is no hope of escaping these deficits—

Mr. VIEN: If my hon. friend will allow me—does he know that in the province of Quebec we have the shortest railway mileage per thousand of population in the whole Dominion, and that our railways always show a surplus?

Mr. HOCKEN: If there is a deficit on the National Railways it is not due to lack of traffic in the province of Ontario.

Mr. VIEN: Nor in Quebec, either.

Mr. HOCKEN: I do not think my hon. friends will deny that in the province of Quebec there is a strong sentiment against government ownership and operation of railways, and I base my remarks upon that fact.

Mr. VIEN: If I might correct my hon. friend—the sentiment is much less strong since the new management took over the National Railways.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is very interesting, Mr. Chairman, and, to me, very satisfactory. It has really been worth while to have a change in the management if it has resulted in removing the antipathy to government ownership and operation of railways that formerly existed in the province of Quebec. With the hon. gentleman's province in favour of public ownership, I think we may safely say that the whole Dominion is favourable. So I am very glad to hear from my hon. friend of this change of sentiment in his province. I have a good deal of sympathy for my hon. friend from Bonaventure with his two hundred miles of railway built forty years ago and still in the hands of a private company. We are told, mostly by the press of the province of Quebec, including the Montreal Gazette, that the only way to run railways is by private ownership. Yet here is a railway in the beautiful county of Gaspé, a county of fertile soil and rich in natural resources, where the traffic is so light that no private capital can be induced to continue the operation of this forty-year-old road. Therefore what private capital has thrown aside parliament is urged to transfer to our National Railways. I am not taking the position that some relief should not be given to that beautiful county, but I just want to draw the attention of the House to the remarkable situation. Not only in the county of Gaspé, but down in the province of New Brunswick there is a line that excites sympathy.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The first part of the line I referred to was built forty years ago, the other part at a later date Every year there is a surplus on the first hundred miles of between $50,000 and $60,000, but on the second hundred miles there is always a deficit; so one practically balances the other. What we are urging the government to do is merely to give service on these branch lines that they give on the other branch lines of the Intercolonial Railway. Last September although four hundred cars were required only forty were received in the district, and of course this means that business is being lost. I merely want Sir Henry Thornton to operate these lines as if they were branches of the Intercolonial Railway The Dominion has spent a million dollars in subsidies, for which no results are being obtained.

Mr. HOCKEN: That is very interesting, too, but the fact still stands out that the private ownership of this railway has not been a success; and not being a success, my hon. friend turns to national ownership and wants the burden of this unsuccessful railway to be assumed by the National Railways.

Mr. VIEN: Was it not the same in respect to our National Railways?—that their unsuccessful operation under private ownership prompted my hon. friends to try government ownership?

Mr. HOCKEN: I see, Mr. Chairman, I have got myself into a lot of trouble in merely trying to elucidate a point which I thought it well to bring to the attention of the House. I may inform my hon. friend that it was the failure of private ownership, supported—unwisely supported, extravagantly supported—by the government of my hon. friends opposite which built the National Transcontinental.

Mr. GRAHAM: Who built the Grand Trunk?

Mr. HOCKEN: Who built the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Mr. GRAHAM: Not the government.

Mr. HOCKEN: The Grand Trunk Pacific never would have been built but for the support and assistance given by the government of that day.

Mr. GRAHAM: They all got support.

Mr. HOCKEN: Yes. I admit that private ownership failed. But not in the province of Ontario; it was always profitable there. It was when we went out into the West and built thousands of miles of railway through a wilderness that private ownership failed, and this country had to face the alternative of handing over to private corporations anywhere from fifty million to one hundred million dollars a year or else take over their failing railways. There was nothing else to do, as I see it, but to take over the system. My hon. friend has drawn me a little away from the point I was making. I am not raising any particular objection to the pathetic plea of my hon. friend from Bonaventure, but I wanted to point out the change that has taken place when the men who have been condemning private ownership now turn to public ownership to escape the burden that private ownership will not carry.

Mr. VIEN: Is there not a greater change in my hon. friend's attitude? He advocated public ownership when private ownership failed in his province and elsewhere, and he is now contending that we should not now carry out the same principle in respect to a railway in a province where the population per mile of railway is less than anywhere else in Canada. It is all very well to talk of public ownership in provinces where there is great density of population, but when it comes to assisting a certain branch line that cannot carry on by itself in the province of Quebec, where we have the smallest population per mile of railway, my hon. friend reverses his principles. He is opposed to the taking over of that railway by the National system, though he advocated the taking over of the railways in his own province and elsewhere that had failed under private ownership.

The CHAIRMAN: I would like to draw the attention of the members of the committee to the fact that this resolution deals with specific lines of railway, and the question whether public ownership or private ownership is the more profitable is really beyond the bounds of paragraph 1 and the schedule which forms a part of it.

Mr. HOCKEN: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend has made four speeches while I am on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN: I am simply informing the committee what I must rule in regard to this paragraph.

Mr. HOCKEN: You will permit me to say, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend misrepresented my attitude absolutely. I thought

I had taken pains to say that I was not opposing what my hon. friend from Bonaventure asked. I did not oppose that.

Mr. VIEN: I did not understand you to approve of it.

Mr. HOCKEN: Perhaps I was not as clear as my hon. friend from Lotbiniere, but I tried to make it clear that I was not opposing it. I was drawing attention to this particular situation—

Mr. VIEN: Must we understand that you approve of it?

Mr. HOCKEN: The Chairman will be ruling you out of order.

Mr. VIEN: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Must we understand that my hon. friend is in favour of it?

Mr. HOCKEN: I am in favour of this: If the president of the National Railway says that this is something that ought to be done I think this parliament ought to listen with very careful attention and give fair consideration to his recommendation. The other fact to which I wish to draw attention—and I think I am within the rules in this, Mr. Chairman —is the generosity of the Minister of Railways towards our friends in western Canada. I think it was something like five million dollars that we voted for the Hudson Bay Railway. I find that this totals up an expenditure of $21,133,900 for railway extensions in western Canada.

Mr. FORKE: It is a paying proposition.

Mr. HOCKEN: It may be, but I doubt very much if it will pay for some time. And even if it is a paying proposition I want to point out that the Minister of Railways is very generous in his treatment of the West. I am not objecting to that.

Mr. FORKE: It is good business.

Mr. HOCKEN: But I say that our friends in western Canada ought to feel grateful for it. They ought to go home and tell their friends that this parliament of Canada representing the effete East as well as the West is not unsympathetic with the men who are growing grain on the prairies.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not so much so as the late government my hon. friend supported.

Mr. HOCKEN: I think that is out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. VIEN: You invited it.

[Mr. Hocken.]

Mr. HOCKEN: Because if I attempted to answer it I am afraid I should take all afternoon.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot prevent interjections if the hon. member does not object to them.

Mr. HOCKEN: You know, Mr. Chairman, that I am not accustomed to wasting the time of the House, but I could make a defence of the late government particularly in its treatment of the West. I say that over $21,000,000 is to be spent for railway construction in western Canada, and if you include the Hudson Bay Railway it is nearly $27,000,000; and only $7,276,000 is to be spent in all the rest of Canada. I want my friends from the West to go home and tell their constituents that this parliament is just as anxious for the prosperity of the West as the men who are growing grain on the prairies, and we are proving it by voting this large sum for railway extensions in that part of the country. I do not object to the cost because I conclude—

Mr. FORKE: May I ask a question? Does the hon. member realize that the city of Toronto will benefit more by the extension of these railway lines than the people living in the West?

Mr. HOCKEN: No, I do not realize that at all, but I realize this, that of the money that will be spent in this direction the city of Toronto will pay more than any other part of the country.

Mr. FORRESTER: Where do they get it?

Mr. CASGRAIN: What about Montreal?

Mr. HOCKEN: Montreal will also contribute. Every large centre of population and of industry and wealth will pay its share.

Mr. FORKE: Where do they get the wealth?

Mr. HOCKEN: I might tell my hon. friend this, but I am afraid I am out of order, Mr. Chairman, that the city of Toronto and the city of Montreal were flourishing and prosperous before there was any West. Their prosperity may have been increased by the West.

Mr. FORRESTER: You were only a camp of gypsies.

Mr. HOCKEN: I think my hon. friend is out of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. HOCKEN: I am trying to point out to my hon. friends from the West and to this House with what generosity they are being treated in the matter of railway construction. When they charge the constituency I represent with deriving the greater part of the profit from such extensions as this, I say that is not the case. The city of Toronto, the city of Montreal, and all the big cities in this country are the tax-paying centres of Canada.

Mr. FORRESTER: Rats!

Mr. HOCKEN: Somebody said "rats." Look at the tax returns and especially the income tax and sales tax returns, the post office and custom house and all the rest of it, and what I say will be proven. This government derives its money, and its collection is made easy, because of the concentration of wealth in those cities.

Mr. FORKE: What about that four hundred million bushels of wheat from the West?

Mr. HOCKEN: That contributes a great deal to the prosperity of the railways, but it also contributes to the prosperity of the men who grow the wheat. My attitude in this House has always been, and is now, that the best thing that parliament can do for the West is to improve its transportation, and that is what we are doing. The only way you can get more money for your grain and obtain lower rates is to improve the railway and all other forms of transportation. I just rose for two purposes and I have been drawn over several different concession lines until I have diverted from those purposes. I wanted to point out to people interested in public ownership throughout this Dominion—not only in Ontario and the West, but also in the province which up to the present time has not been very sympathetic towards that policy—that the West is getting a tremendous railway expenditure of $27,000,000.

Mr. FORKE: That was a business proposition, to the advantage of Canada, and the city of Toronto would benefit from this expenditure as well as the West.

Mr. HOCKEN: That may be true, but I wonder if my hon. friend disputes the logic of my statement. Are we spending $27,000,000 in the West or are we not?

Mr. FORKE: We have not spent it yet.

Mr. HOCKEN: Is that not what is proposed and are you not going to vote for it?

Mr. FORKE: I am not in the witness box yet.

Mr. HOCKEN: Then my hon. friend does not know whether he is going to vote for it or not.

Mr. FORKE: Indeed he does.

Mr. HOCKEN: I venture the guess that he will vote for it. Now, what I hope is that the members of this House who represent western constituencies—and I believe since they came here they have changed their viewpoint as to what the attitude of the East is towards the West—will tell their friends when they go home that there is nothing the parliament of Canada is more deeply interested in than contributing to the prosperity of the western part of this Dominion.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I only intend to speak for two or three minutes and I do not propose to say anything about public ownership as against private ownership other than this: The people have before them to-day evidence of the development of the Canadian National system, which is based on public ownership, and in which system they are the shareholders. If you wish to see a further illustration of the success of public ownership look at the local street railway in Toronto and the development of power distribution in the province of Ontario. Then wait for the verdict of the people of the province in that respect on Monday next.

I want to deal with a matter of railway service which has apparently been ignored in the proposal before the House. In the province of Ontario it is proposed to spend nearly $2,000,000 on the Lac line which connects the Canadian Northern and the Transcontinental railway, and effects a great economy in the consumption of coal alone representing a saving of millions of capital. I thoroughly approve of the vote for this purpose and I am glad to see the item in the estimates.

Mr. HOCKEN: It will improve transportation from the east to the west and from the west to the east.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): It is in reality a work for the general advantage of Canada and I am glad to see a vote for this purpose. I should also like to see the present management of the Canadian National Railways take up and carry out improvements in connection with their system at Toronto which would involve a comparatively small expenditure. Toronto believes in public ownership and supports it, and yet obstacles still exist to the complete unification of the government railways running into that city. The old Grand Trunk, the old Canadian Northern, and the "new National," as it is termed, have been consolidated. An evidence of that is given in the connection proposed with the Long Lac lines. But Toronto would like to see the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National Railways entering that city under better conditions than now prevail. The two tracks entering the city by the east are four miles apart and the grades are over one per cent. Between the two tracks there was discovered some years ago a grade of one-half of one per cent which ought to be used. This could be done at very small expenditure, and I was under the impression there would have been provision made this year for that purpose. It would help to put the new station at Toronto, which represents an expenditure of four or five million dollars into use for it is not in use yet. The reason for the delay, I presume, is that the president and managing board of the National Railways have not yet prepared an estimate to lay before the government for the unification of the National lines running into Toronto. While an expenditure of four or five million dollars might be involved—perhaps a little more—the saving in the consumption of coal alone, in the overcoming of grades and the taking of a whole lot of traffic from the front of the city across town and farther to the north, would be so great, and would facilitate the economical handling of business to such an extent, that it would be worth, I imagine, three times the expense which may be involved. Therefore I would like to suggest to the minister—not that I hold him absolutely responsible for the administration of the National roads at the present time, seeing that the administration is now in the hands of the new president and his co-directors—the necessity of drawing the attention of the new management to that condition of affairs, and to ask for improvement there even though it necessitate a considerable expenditure. Because, as I have pointed out, the economies and benefits to be gained would more than compensate for the expenditure in question, I hope, therefore, the Minister of Railways will take an early opportunity of bringing to the attention of the board of management the statements I make here to-day. Probably the minister knows more about the situation than the directors do because he is cognizant of what has occurred in the past. And there may be other parts of the country where similar improvements can be carried out. The unification of the system of railways that we have taken over has not been accomplished yet. There are a great many places where improvements like that proposed at Long Lac can be carried out at comparatively small expense and the great saving in the upkeep to say nothing of the improvement in the service would more than pay for the outlay in the course of three or four years. Unification is certainly most desirable in connection with the National railway system in the city of Toronto. At present there is an agitation going on rather to the discredit of the National system of railways. The public press are taking the matter up now and are wanting to know why the new union station—in reality it is not new it is five years old—has not been used. I hope the minister will draw the attention of the president and the board of management to this situation. Perhaps there will be an item in the supplementary estimates yet to be brought in that will make provision for this purpose. If that proves to be the case the government and the administration of the National road will be taking a still further step towards earning the appreciation of the people of the country.

As to what my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has said here to-day in regard to the local railway in his constituency —and I imagine that he is also expressing the views of the present Speaker (Mr. Lemieux) in regard to the railway condition in Gaspé—the situation referred to ought to be cured. Perhaps it will be cured by the installation of gasoline engines capable of drawing passengers cars as well as freight cars. This will be a great advance in transportation in that district. I notice that the Canadian National Railway board is taking up that matter in various parts of Canada and perhaps relief may be found in that direction. While I do not want to interfere in any way with the freedom which has been given to the president and directorate of the National system in dealing with the railway question, I think no mistake is made in drawing the attention of the House, as well as the board of management, to the railway grievance that exists in Toronto and to the need for improvements which will effect a saving of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year in the maintenance charges, greatly assist the movement of traffic, help the development of Toronto, and make the investment we have made in these railways a striking success.

And this is all the more in favour of public ownership as against private ownership, and probably I have a right to bring it up now. I repeat what I said the other day, that company ownership has been an absolute failure in the United States. There is no provision for the recovery of the privately-owned companies and railways in the United States, except the intervention of the national government and the payment of immense subsidies to them for the reconstruction, electrification and re-equipment of the company-owned railways in that country. They have absolutely failed in the United States, the people there have no longer faith in them, and the only relief ahead of them, as far as I can see is public ownership. We shall hear the announcement in the speeches which will be made by President Harding when he goes to the people—as he intends to go to them on the railway question almost in the next few days—that private ownership has failed. The New York Central railway and the Pennsylvania railway have failed. They cannot finance for reconstruction, electrification, or re-equipment.

Referring to my hon. friends from Quebec, I do not propose to say anything offensive to them, but I will compliment them on getting behind the movement for the nationalization of the railways and the improvement of the railways in the direction of giving the people better transportation facilities, especially in connection with the waterways. We have not only to regulate the railways and take them over, but we have to find the money to improve the waterways, and at the same time we must regulate the steamships which now use these waterways to levy unjust charges upon the people who use their system.

Mr. DAVIES: I do not intend to enter into a discussion of the railway branch line problem of this country, but I was rather constrained to speak for a moment because of some of the remarks of my hon. friend to my right (Mr. Hocken). From the tenor of his speech. I would say that he came from Toronto. I am not quite sure about that. He was reading a lecture to the western members, saying how grateful they should be that, in these appropriations, out of a total of some $27,000,000 the West is receiving the sum of $21,000,000 for railway extension in their district. In my opinion it is not a matter of gratitude, but a matter of straight business. We in the West are grateful that we have at the present time at the head of our National Railways a gentleman who thoroughly understands conditions, and he is making the proposal to build lines in western Canada because it is a straight business proposition. He is looking to western Canada and the products of that country to pay the deficits upon the National Railways that probably were incurred in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec—

Mr. HOCKEN: Not Ontario.

Mr. DAVIES:—and the Maritime provinces. I would ask the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), when he goes home at the end of the week, and probably makes a political speech, to quote these figures to his constituents. During the last ten years, from 1913 to the year 1920-23, the Public Works department, or the government. have spent in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario the sum of $98,916,428 on public buildings, dredging, docks and so forth. In the three western provinces during that period they spent a total sum of $10,465,000. When I go to the west I am going to tell them that we are rather grateful to Sir Henry Thornton for the proposal to spend these large sums of money on the western Canadian roads. I am also going to quote these figures of expenditures made in the East. No good purpose is ever served in this House, or on the hustings or anywhere else, by making such speeches as were made by my hon. friend from West Toronto in this House this afternoon.

Mr. RINFRET: I think some consideration should be given to the stand we are taking on this matter. This is a demand on parliament for the construction of branch railways to the extent of 1,000 miles, representing an expenditure about $25,000,000. Before the day is over I suppose there will be a demand from members of the House for an additional 1,000 miles of branch lines and an additional expenditure of $25,000,000. I may be permitted very frankly to state the awkward position in which some of us are placed concerning the management of the railways. This is another instance where we have a clash between control and responsibility. Speaking in Montreal some time ago before the Cartier Club, the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) stated that we on this side had abandoned our policy in railway matters to rally to his viewpoint, and that you could not point to a Liberal who would dare advocate private ownership. But on the estimates of the Minister of Marine (Mr. Lapointe) the leader of the Opposition took the opposite stand, and after vigorously setting forth his policy, stated that we were merely carrying out the scheme laid down by Mr. Ballantyne; and I suppose, after we have allowed this resolution to pass and approved of it, he will say that we lack consistency, and that events are bearing testimony to the excellency of his own policy as against ours. The hon. member for West Toronto only a minute ago took the occasion of this resolution to raise once more the question of public and private ownership coming into conflict.

Now, we have to deal with facts. The question now is not whether or not we should enter into a scheme of government ownership, but it is how best we can deal with the situation as it is and as we found it when we came into power in 1921. The choice is not to be made, it was made by hon. members opposite when they were in power, and it was the late government which loaded on this government the system that we have now to deal with. In opposition we said, and still say, at least I still say, that it was a mistake to acquire these roads on the conditions on which they were purchased, by accepting at par all the obligations and debts which these railways carried at the time. We said in opposition, and we also believe now, that it was a mistake for the late government to complete the ship programme of the late government, when it became evident that these ships might as well be burned or sunk, because they would be useless. But, as a matter of fact, we have the railways and we have the ships. The fact that we have resolved to submit them to a fair trial is no indication at all that we accept the principle against which we voted, or that we withdraw anything of the criticisms which we offered when these matters were first before parliament. It ill behooves the leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) to sneer at the government now or at some of the Liberal members, when he more than any other is responsible for the present situation. We are now asked to add a number of miles of railway to this system.

Mr. HOCKEN: What alternative had the country at the time the railways were taken over?

Mr. RINFRET: My point is: What alternative have we to-day?

Mr. HOCKEN: I am asking what alternative there was when the railways were taken over.

Mr. RINFRET: I am not discussing that It was ruled that it was out of order.

An hon. MEMBER: Side-stepping.

Mr. RINFRET: I say that after we have decided to submit these railways to a fair trial, it is unfair for the leader of the Opposition to claim that we have abandoned our principle of private ownership. I will not discuss what alternative there was some years ago, because that is not the question here; I say that we have no alternative now I will go further, I have no hesitation in saying that if we had an alternative, I for one would favour at once the disposal of these railways to private ownership.

An hon. MEMBER: At what price?

Mr. ARCHAMBAULT: One dollar.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not think anybody would buy the roads if they had to take the fixed charges with them.

As for the resolution, I may say that at first sight I am very reluctant to add one inch to a system that is already so extensive; but it is a well-known fact in railway matters that often a connecting line at a small cost may work a great deal towards the general revenue of the main line. I am conversant with the facts concerning the proposed line in the province of Quebec. I may say that I have some sympathy with the opinion expressed this afternoon that the proportion we are going to get is very small. This is a very small line, intended, I understand, to connect the trunk line to Ottawa with another railway which goes to the Laurentide mountains. There is a great traffic of passengers in that direction, especially during the summer. They generally have to use the Canadian Pacific from St. Jérôme to Montfort junction, and then take the Canadian National line. The construction of this branch line is well warranted, and I am quite willing to hear what can be said in support of the other lines that are proposed. But again I say: The question is not, to my mind, as to the advisability of constructing these lines, the question is this: Are we going to decide on this point, or should we not rather trust the administration who have been placed in control of the railways? If there is to be a fair trial of our present system, that means that we should be very careful not to interfere in any way with the proper carrying out of that trial. Last year the leader of the Opposition bluntly stated that there could be no fair trial of these railways, because we had in the government members who were opposed to the very scheme. This year he repeated the same thing when he discussed the Merchant Marine, and he said that he did not believe in the management of an enterprise by people who were unsympathetic to it. I suppose my right hon. friend himself does not follow that line of conduct. My right hon. friend the other day made a violent speech against the buying in Paris of real estate by the Board of Management of the Canadian National Railways. If I were to-day to object strenuously to these branches being built, or if some criticism were offered from this side of the House, it would be contended that we were not sympathetic to a fair trial, or that we were carrying on a propaganda on behalf of a private company. On the other hand, if we do not do that, and if we refrain from offering any remarks, we are treated as abandoning our policy and lacking consistency. Some people achieve greatness, but this is a case in which greatness is thrust upon us. A fair trial does not mean final endorsation. Our party has not taken the initiative in government ownership in this country, and it would be a great mistake thus to misinterpret our sincere efforts to draw the country out of the difficulties it was placed in when we inherited power in 1921. But if we are going to have a fair trial, we must provide the means, and we must rest some confidence in the men in charge of the railway. I do not say that it should go unlimited, either as to the amount involved, or as to the duration; but I am willing to admit that this resolution remains within the bounds of such a trial. I do not need to stress the fact, though, that any addition to the fixed charges of the roads should be made only with the utmost care and reserve. It must have struck everyone in this House when the Minister of Finance (Mr Fielding) brought down his budget that, in 1921 and again in 1922, we had a surplus in our finances over all expenditures, current and capital, and that we were prevented from balancing the sheet only because we had in the one year to provide $98,000,000 for the railways, and in another year to provide $95,000,000 for the railways. We may say to-day that the railways alone are responsible for our adding annually to the national debt. I hope these facts were not lost sight of by the commissioners when the demand for these lines was made to the government. I hope they are of that character that they will by themselves more than repay their cost to the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am afraid that the discussion has, perhaps, gone beyond these resolutions. I do not, however, object to anything that has been said, because I feel that the committee and members of parliament have a duty to perform. I think we could expedite the business of parliament if we could let these resolutions go through and get into the hands of every member the bill based on them with all the details. Then they would be prepared to discuss it, taking as much time as they like. I am not going to discuss government ownership, because we have it. We want to do the best possible in the circumstances, and the sentiment of the House seems to be in that direction.

The hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has stated the case of the railway in which he is interested, and all he has said is true. Some years ago, the second portion of this railway was built, heavy subsidies, excess subsidies being paid on account of the many bridges, and the construction was very expensive. But of late, at least, the operation of that line has been anything but satisfactory. Sir Henry Thornton, I think, had a conference with the president of that road, and he expressed a willingness, on terms, to take over the operation, but up to the present time no arrangement has been arrived at. I agree that there ought to be some way, particularly as regards a line that was largely built by the government, by which the people in the district who depend upon that line might get some service.

The thing that appealed to me in the remarks of the hon. member for Charlevoix-Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), was the invitation to come down. I understand the situation in which the lines that he spoke of are placed. I assure him that I will bring his remarks to the attention of Sir Henry Thornton and the board. I might point out that in these resolutions there is not a single line that has not been recommended by the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): Do all the lines included in these resolutions connect with government-owned railway lines?

Mr. GRAHAM: These lines are divided into two classes. Those of one class are called government railways, including the old government line. These are dealt with separately in these resolutions. Then these other lines that are proposed will become branches of the Canadian National system. As to the county of Kent, New Brunswick, the Kent Northern railway is twenty-seven miles long, and I quite appreciate the fact that it might just as well have been twenty-seven inches long so far as its operation has been of any practical value. The question has been discussed as to how these people can best be served in that section of the country, because they are not served now. An effort was made by the previous government to take over the Kent Northern, and large petitions have come in from the county of Kent asking that the Moncton-Buctouche line be extended 18 miles to serve a greater number of people outside of the town of Richibucto, or Rexton, I believe, through which it passes. These matters are under consideration, and I have asked the management of the Canadian National Railways, as soon as they can possibly do so, to make a thorough investigation of the situation in the county of Kent, because my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Leger) has made my life miserable for the past three months over the question and will continue to do so, I am afraid, if I do not do something. However, I am awaiting reports from the Canadian National board. Under the Branch Lines Act lines connecting with the government railways can be dealt with, but any bargains made must be approved by parliament.

The question of the Inverness railway has also come before the Canadian National board, and so far as I can ascertain from previous reports, the people of that section are not being served by that railway. It was owned by a coal company; and while I must not say harsh things, it has been represented to me, nevertheless, with some fair show of credibility, as I think, that, like some of the big railways in the United States, this company has squeezed out any other that tried to do business because it gave all its traffic to the railway it owned itself. This is the situation in regard to the Inverness railway and it is possible that something practical may be done in the matter before another session of parliament.

With regard to my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Hocken), I like that hon. gentleman because he keeps good-natured every day, except on the Twelfth of July, and he is always a strong advocate of public ownership; in fact he could not get elected in the city of Toronto if he were not. But he made this mistake, though not intentionally, that the programme will only extend over three years, the amount of money he suggested for the whole project being some $27,000,000 or $28,000,000. So that for the present year the appropriation would be one-third of that.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): There are some lines that ought to be completed, such as, for instance, the Long Lac line.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is under construction now. As to the Hudson Bay railway, nothing has been voted yet, so that the hon. gentleman was in error in that regard. There was a small vote, but it was for the purpose of protecting works that we have there now. I might intimate to the committee, however, that believing that the promises of the government and of parliament should be carried out, I shall consider putting a certain amount in the Supplementary Estimates in this connection. Now, my hon. friend from East York—is it? or South York? I do not know which, for they have changed the designation of the constituencies since I used to campaign against him (Mr. Maclean)—suggests amalgamating these lines at once. Towns and villages have sprung up outside Toronto, and they need railway accommodation. You cannot very easily or quickly make any change in that respect, however. The question of grading has something to do with it. The old Grand Trunk tried to get a better grade from Scarborough Heights into Toronto, but they discovered that to go by the lake front would raise a riot, and my hon. friend's paper kicked up a fuss about it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): What was needed was a real scheme.

Mr. GRAHAM: There was another scheme my hon. friend suggested, but it would cost a great deal of money. However, these things will no doubt be accomplished in time. At present the board is endeavouring to uniform the whole system as expeditiously as possible, and so far as this is concerned there is no difference in opinion as regards east or west, north or south. What I have submitted is the Canadian National board's programme, as handed to me, and which I think is a good thing for the railways and for the country generally. One of the reasons for this three-year programme being placed on the statutes is that the people may understand exactly what they are going to get for some time. It has been stated, and quite properly so, that the psychology of those who advocate a thing has a great deal to do with influencing its promotion. Many of these branch lines in the West are not new structures; very many miles of these lines have been graded, some of the grades having been constructed since the war, although the rails have not been laid down. There are some four hundred miles of grading already done, and all we propose to do is to lay the rails. Surely, no one would suggest that it is bad business, if after investigation the previous board decided to build these lines, for the present board to complete the work. It will be a good investment for the company and for the country as well. If the committee will agree to my suggestion and let us get this matter embodied in a bill I think it will expedite our business. Every member will have the bill before him and we shall bring it up on Monday in order to discuss the details.

Mr. GOULD: I will comply with the request of the minister and defer my remarks until the bill is distributed.

Mr. LUCAS: In view of the minister's request, I do not want to enter into any discussion of this matter now, but I want to know whether he can give us any information as to why a certain branch line in the province of Alberta has been eliminated from this schedule. The line to which I refer is known as the Bruederheim railway. In the month of March the Alberta members, realizing that Sir Henry Thornton is a very busy man, got together and decided that one meeting with him should be made to cover all the various points which they desired to submit to him. We all had railway troubles in our constituencies, and we laid our grievances before Sir Henry Thornton, who presented to us a schedule which I understood at the time—as I think other hon. members from Alberta will bear me out—was practically along the same line as that which we have before us to-day. In that schedule was this proposed railway commencing at the town of Bruederheim and extending easterly for a distance of 31 miles. The people have been asking for this railway for a number of years, and they had the assurance of Sir Henry Thornton that it would be undertaken; at least it was in the schedule, which was submitted to the delegation and all it required was the attention of parliament. But before going any further, some few weeks later, he being out of town, I telephoned to the deputy minister. He was not in at the time, so I asked the gentleman who answered the telephone to ascertain if it was correct that the schedule which had been presented to me by Sir Henry Thornton was O.K.. A couple of hours later he telephoned me that my information was correct. Naturally, I am very much disappointed to find that this line is omitted from the schedule to the resolution. If this is an oversight, I hope that before the minister brings down the bill he will make good the omission.

Mr. SPENCER: I wish to confirm the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Lucas). The line he mentions is very, very badly needed. I understand it was promised about twenty years ago to the people in the country through which it will run. In my own constituency men are hauling their grain to the railroad for distances up to thirty miles, and this, as is well known, is such a severe handicap that they cannot possibly carry on their farming at a profit. On account of the continued failure to build this line many people have left the district, and the only way in which we can induce those who are still there to remain, and can also encourage new settlers, is to construct this railway without further delay. I sincerely hope therefore that there is an oversight in not including this line in the schedule of proposed branch line construction; and, if so, that it will be included at an early date.

5 p.m.

Mr. FORTIER (Translation): Mr. Chairman, it is a real pleasure to rise and express my appreciation for the happy thought the government has had in extending into the county of Labelle, one of the main branches of the National Railways. Indeed, in this proposed measure before the House we note that fourteen miles have been added to the National Railways in the province of Quebec. These fourteen miles, I am happy to say, lend themselves for the most part to the development of this important branch which projects from the main line, near Montreal, and penetrating into the region of the Laurentides extends to the county of Labelle.

I therefore wish to express my thanks and those of my electors to the government for having realized this important work of extending this railway. In fact, twelve of the fourteen miles will be built for the purpose of connecting the main line from Montreal to Ottawa at a place known as Frenierè with another point called Rinfret Junction which is the beginning point of the railway known as Montfort, and which has existed for a great number of years in that region. These twelve miles of rail will therefore be built in such a way as to link up the Montfort railway with the National main line from Montreal to Ottawa. This connection is very important; it is absolutely necessary and will contribute in making of this branch line one of the important lines of the province of Quebec. I especially wish to thank the government for having completed the branch line of the Montfort railway which was later on acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway and finally was included in our national system of railways. This completed work comprises the construction of about two miles of railway, from a point called China Clay extending to the village of St. Rémi d'Amherst which is situated close to the centre of the county of Labelle. These two miles of rail were only laid down so as to complete the main branch line. In fact, for a great number of years, the railway existed up to the village of Huberdeau, situated on the borders of the county of Argenteuil. Later, so as to help the mining industry, the rails were extended about nine miles into the county of Labelle, on the borders of the townships of Ponsonby and Amherst; however, this extension covering nine miles was simply built for the transportation of freight and the products of the mine. Heretofore passenger trains had not been in circulation as far as that point. For ever so long the people of Labelle have petitioned the government. I had the pleasure to accompany their delegations to request the late government to finish this work by building these few miles which were absolutely necessary to connect this railway with those southern settled districts of the county of Labelle. As a result of these steps, I am glad to see that the Liberal government has generously acceded to the request of the electors of my county and that in the proposed measure there is an item of $65,000 for the construction of these two miles of railway which will extend the National Railway up to the village of Saint Rémi d'Amherst and which, later on I hope, will be followed by a further extension, as conditions render this work indispensable and which, I again state, will make of this line one of the most important branches of the National Railways in the province of Quebec. By thus establishing, through this branch line, its terminus at St. Rémi d'Amherst, the National Railway Company comes to the rescue of the parishes which are settled in that region for a great number of years. The government desires to help colonization, this so important work, a truly national effort, that we propose to develop in the province and especially in the district of Labelle. The government assures itself, by linking these parishes, of an increase in traffic which will, I am sure, make of this line one of the most paying propositions of the National Railways.

The question of the National Railways is certainly one of the most important problems of the day. Since the beginning of this debate the subject has been dealt with most ably by the members who have preceded me. It is absolutely important, in a young country like ours, to further the work in connection with our railways. It is in settlements like those we have in the province of Quebec that we note the immense progress accomplished thanks to railway construction. I have but to point out, as an example, the north west of Montreal the beautiful region of Labelle, which was opened up by the Canadian Pacific Railway. This region like the one still older found in Gaspé, has now its diocese, it is inhabited by numerous and intelligent settlers who have made the heart of the Laurentian hills like a new province. It is due to the development of railways that this region has been settled —the work shall be carried on, I know, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, for I have their promise, as far as the distant valley of the Lièvre, to the north of Mont Laurier, in the parishes of Ferme-Neuve and Sainte-Anne du Lac—and we will witness great strides in colonization in that part of the province which is so dear to us. The same thing is being enacted in the centre of the county of Labelle, and it is thanks to the work done by the government through the extension of this line of the Canadian National Railway, as far as Saint-Rémi d'Amherst that the settlers may rejoice in having new means to develop that part of the country. Numerous and rich mining industries are already established at Saint-Rém. d'Amherst, the farming industry has been progressing in that place for many years and this parish is surrounded by other flourishing parishes situated in the heart of Labelle county, which, at present, is at a distance of 20 to 40 miles from the northern system of the Canadian Pacific railway, and which now is directly connected, through this branch line of the Canadian National Railway, with the metropolis of Canada.

By opening up the colonization region of the county of Labelle the government insures the progress of the National Railways, because as it was pointed out with a great deal of truth, probably the chief cause of the deficits of our railways rests in the fact that we own, up to the present, great transcontinentals. only, which however, were necessary at the time of their construction. These branch lines which will extend to the northern parts of our province, to the extreme limits of settlements, and will afford us the advantage of opening up new districts to settlers, will also afford us the means of considerably increasing the traffic of our railways, owing to our rich natural resources which are unlimited in the northern parts of our province. Thereby, I say, will the government ensure the successful operation of our National Railways. We congratulate them and I heartily thank them both in my name and that of the electors of the county of Labelle, for the happy thought they had in developing the National railway and extending it as far as Saint-Rémi d'Amherst.

Mr. KENNEDY (Edmonton): I would ask the minister if provision will be made this session for a railway survey between Grande Prairie and the Canadian National Railway?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend has heard me being chastised a few moments ago for disclosing arrangements prematurely. I shall have to follow the lines of the Minister of Finance and say, "Wait and see."

In regard to the other matter, I might say that perhaps a hundred lines are being pressed on the board, and as my hon. friend from Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) said in reference to the amendment to the act providing for the indemnities, I told them to take it back and clarify it. We can only spend so much money, and the clarified list is the one I have here now. It will take some years to get around to the point where we would have been had there been no war, but if members will be patient, as fast as the Canadian National Railway board can see its way clear after investigation to recommend further construction, the government, so far as the finances of the country will warrant, will meet the situation. The Canadian National Railway board had a much larger list for consideration, but on account of the financial situation they were asked to "clarify" it, and this is the "clarified" list.

Mr. McCONICA: There is one point that I think has not been brought to the attention of the House as to these western lines. I think I am correct when I say that there is not a single new line under contemplation here. They all represent, as I understand it, the continuation of work that was started before the war; they are rounding out the system—connecting up all the loose ends, as it were. Now these loose ends having been laid out, located, and in some cases work commenced upon them, the territory along these lines has been filled up with settlers. They have been waiting there for years, and the completion of these lines will mean an immediate increase in the tonnage of the various roads. This is not new construction. It is not like starting out to build a new line somewhere, but is simply carrying out the plans that were agreed upon and the finishing of work that was interrupted by the war. I would ask the minister if I am not correct in that.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think my hon. friend is in the main correct. His remarks might not apply to every case, but practically they cover the case.

Mr. LEWIS: I would ask the minister when the bill comes up on Monday, if that is the day set, to bring down as much definite information as possible in regard to No. 19, the Dunblane branch to Mawer, Saskatchewan, about which I spoke to him last night. I have received further telegrams to-day asking that from the standpoint of economy the existing line up to the river be utilized as far as possible. It was pointed out to me to-day that if the line was to be built as proposed it would open up no new territory and bring no more traffic to the Canadian National line, but would involve the construction of about thirty miles of new road. We have a road already existing in that territory, and if the minister could see fit to utilize this existing line as far as the river it would give a more direct connection and be more economical. An expensive dam was built on the river about a year and a half ago; it is a divisional point and within eight miles of the Beachy line, and I can see no reason why the connection across the river should not be made as direct as possible, unless it is that there are insurmountable difficulties in the way of bridging the river at Riverhurst. I would ask the minister to bring down all the information when this matter next comes up.

Mr. GRAHAM: I expect that when the bill comes up next I shall have to have here with me one or two railway men from the head office in Montreal.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Before paragraph 1 of the resolution, which I believe embodies the schedule, carries, I would point out to the minister the need for a correction in the spelling of one word in Item No. 15 of the schedule. It says the "Eaton Branch." There was some years ago a town a few stations west of Eston called Eaton, and there was such a mix-up in mails that it became necessary to change the name of Eaton to Eatonia. The word here should be Eston, not Eaton, and I would suggest that the correction be made in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the word "Eston" be substituted for the word "Eaton"?

Amendment agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Graham thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 234, respecting the construction of the Canadian National lines.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BANKRUPTCY ACT AMENDMENT BILL

On motion of Sir Lomer Gouin amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 139 to amend the Bankruptcy Act were read the second time and concurred in.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL

On motion of Hon. Charles Stewart (Minister of the Interior) for the House to again go into committee on Bill No. 222, to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a bill that the right hon. leader of the Opposition is particularly interested in, and if the minister is agreeable, I would prefer to have it stand There are other bills that can be gone on with unless some particular reason exists for proceeding with the present measure.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I know there is one clause the leader of the Opposition is interested in.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps the minister would like to proceed with the bill, with the consent of the House, and hold that particular clause in committee.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think we had better proceed. We can leave the bill in committee and allow the clause to stand that the leader of the Opposition is interested in.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 2—Transfer of holders of letters patent in pre-emption and purchased homestead area to another homestead, by provincial certificate.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is the clause the leader of the Opposition is particularly interested in. We could let it stand.

Section stands.

On section 3—Issue of patent after death of applicant.

Mr. STEVENS: I think it would be better if the minister, as we take up each clause, were to give reasons for the amendments and changes proposed.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Section 3 provides that when a homesteader dies before completing the duties necessary to earn patent, his legal representatives are excused from doing any further residence duty. The act as it stands calls for the erection of a house and the completion of cultivation, but as no further residence is required it is considered unnecessary to insist on the erection of the house, it being frequently the case that a house so erected will deteriorate in value before the estate could secure the opportunity of disposing of the land. In cases of decease this dispenses with the necessity of constructing a habitable house to earn patent.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Issue of patent if applicant becomes insane.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The same thing applies where the applicant becomes insane.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. McTAGGART: Would the provisions of this section apply in cases of pre-emption as well?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, there is a little different provision in the case of pre-emption. This applies only to a homestead.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Sections 11 and 29 in each township, together with gold and silver and other minerals, set apart as school lands.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This section is to make it clear that the minerals belong to the provinces. There was necessity for clarity here. The lands themselves are the property of the province, and all receipts from the lands are treated as trust funds, at least for educational purposes. We are now putting minerals in the same category.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Is it not a fact that some lands other than sections 11 and 29 are considered as school lands?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That has happened in some cases of transfer, and in other cases.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Would they be covered by this?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, all lands that are designated school lands would be covered.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Terms of payment for school lands.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: In connection with this clause, I notice that the provision for selling applies after the first day of January, 1923, the purchase price being divided into twenty equal amounts. I was wondering if the department is going to do anything to relieve the settlers who have purchased school lands under the old agreement. There are a great many settlers with whom I am acquainted who have purchased school lands on the old conditions providing for payment in ten years and have made payment of one-tenth of the purchase price. Some of them have improved that land, brought it all under cultivation, built houses and barns, and put down wells. A purchaser has such a place as this home but he has been unable to make, possibly, any further payment or, if any, only a very small one, and the interest has been accumulating. Now, I have had correspondence from several to the effect that they are unable to pay the principal and unable to meet even the interest, and in different cases they have requested that some concessions be made to them to enable them to carry on. I believe, generally speaking, they are quite willing to pay the original purchase price, but in some cases they ask that the interest be deleted from the agreement. In view of the fact that a special concession is to be made for all new purchasers would it not be consistent that some concession should also be made for the old purchasers who have been struggling along for several years, who are good settlers, and who are anxious and willing to make good if given a chance. Has the minister any plan in view that is likely to be adopted for relief in such cases?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I might point out to the hon. member that, in the position we occupy, our trusteeship is of rather a limited character. The provinces are consulted as to the areas that shall be sold and as to the terms upon which the lands shall be sold. They were consulted in this instance as to an extension of the periods over which payment of principal might be made. This matter came up in the discussion. The amendment as outlined by my hon. friend makes the period for the payment of principal twenty years instead of ten years, as under the old provision. The provinces agreed to this. Indeed, it is at their request, because they think the land will bring a greater price than it would under the old provision. The question of making it retroactive is a little difficult; but as we are acting as a trustee we can be lenient in the collection of the principal. I think many of the contracts that are outstanding to-day will run twenty years. We have not pressed for payment of principal. Very frequently there are large delayed payments of interest; but if the cultivation is going on we do not press for payment. So that, without touching the contract in existence, the party who has the land under contract may run for fifteen or twenty years before he has finally paid up his principal.

Mr. BROWN: In regard to the interest charged on the amounts overdue, a few years ago a regulation was issued charging 7 per cent on agreements entered into at 5 per cent on payments that were overdue. Is that still the policy of the department?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, that still stands. That also was an arrangement with the provinces.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not fully satisfied with the explanation, because this morning I received a letter from one of my constituents who was on the land referred to, and he enclosed a letter which he received from the department, which pointed out very clearly and explicitly that he was in arrears several years on his contract for principal and interest, and that unless he showed very good and sufficient reason in the near future why he should be carried any longer, without paying up some of the arrears, the contract would be immediately cancelled. That is the kind of thing the settler is up against. He is in constant fear of having his contract cancelled, unless he appeals to the department for special extensions of one year at a time. In view of the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I believe, has written up all its own contracts for a long period of time, to give settlers a chance, I would think it almost incumbent on the department to do likewise. Will the minister state if it is within the jurisdiction of the department to do this, without first getting the consent of the provincial government?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I think we could do it without consent, but I do not think it would be wise for us to do it without consultation and consent. So far it has not been done. We have kept the provinces fully informed of any suggested changes, and usually the changes have been suggested by the provinces themselves. The difficulty in the case the hon. member mentions is not particularly the arrears of principal, but the failure to pay interest. We do not wish to be hard on any one but as trustee for the province, without being unduly harsh and without creating hardship, we will have to try to collect the interest. That is one of the very serious complaints. I could produce innumerable letters, particularly from the departments of education of the prairie provinces, complaining bitterly that we are neglecting the collection of the interest payments due on these school lands sales. In the case of Alberta, I think the ordinary amounts of interest payments received this year by the province have fallen off over $100,000, and the province is largely, though not altogether, dependent upon that fund for carrying on its schools. It is of very real assistance to it in carying on its school work, and the pressure comes from the province to collect the interest. The provinces are not vitally interested in the collection of principal, because if they are receiving the interest the principal is a trust fund for that purpose anyway. They do insist on our trying to collect the interest, and while we are not desirous of creating hardship yet we look upon it as a duty to try to collect, as far as possible, the interest which has accrued on these sales.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Has the question of making the amendment retroactive been discussed with the provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes, I thought I mentioned that. It was discussed at the time we discussed the extensions, but it was felt, inasmuch as we did not press for principal payments that no great harm was being done. It would not make any change in the situation. It might, to some extent of course, relieve, if that were possible the payment of the 7 per cent, or the 1 per cent additional, on money that was overdue; but that would be a somewhat involved process, because of the difficulty that probably six per cent of the people under contract have paid. Clearly the only relief that could be given would be to those who did not pay; and it would be discrimination against those who did pay, so that it presents a somewhat difficult problem.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In that point of view, I would like to support the contention of the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael), not in regard to the department making no effort to recover the interest—I quite see the position in that respect—but in reference to making the amendment dealing with the payment of interest retroactive; because, while I recognize that the department has in very few cases pressed for the payment of the principal, at the same time I think it would tend to reassure the purchasers that the principal payments which they were expected to make from year to year would be reduced by that amount. I believe the precedent set by the Canadian Pacific Railway is a sound one in that respect. I believe the precedent set in our amendment to the Soldiers' Settlement Act was in the same direction; that is to re-assure these people that year by year the payments would not be greater than they could reasonably be expected to meet. Although pressure is not being exerted, I do think the moral assurance to the men in knowing that they could take advantage of this provision, and that they would not be expected to pay the principal, would have a beneficial effect. A good many cases have been brought to my notice, and I mentioned to the people concerned that I thought an amendment to this effect would be brought down in the bill which would be introduced, and that there would probably be an extension of time for payment of principal. I hope the minister will see his way to make the bill retroactive in that respect, thus affording the men who have already purchased and are in difficulty the same opportunity of extending the payments as will be afforded under the new act.

Mr. McTAGGART: Would the minister state what is the practice of the department in reference to the school lands which were sold and afterwards abandoned? Some of them were broken up and a good many were abandoned.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far as possible we tried to lease them. There was a suggstion—if not a suggestion, a complaint—I think from the hon. member for Last Mountain (Mr. Johnston) with respect to the number of sales that have taken place in recent years where prices were very high, running well over $50 per acre for raw land. Those people who have contracted to pay that price, find themselves in serious difficulties. He was asking if some relief could not be afforded in those cases. That is a very difficult matter, and I do not know how to get around it unless we do this: Where an individual, under a contract of sale, finds himself in difficulties, we lease to him, indeed we are glad to lease to him if he surrenders his contract, and then on the next occasion when the sale comes around, if the lands do not sell for the prices they did formerly, he can become a purchaser under the new contract. In the meantime he can be a tenant until such time as it is deemed advisable to re-sell the land. But of course we try in every case, if possible, to lease the land and to keep it from getting dirty and weedy.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince, P.E.I.): When the sale of these lands is completed and the money as I understand, is turned in to the Dominion government, do you still continue to pay a rate of interest to the schools on that money for the benefit of the provinces?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are simply trustees in the matter. We turn over such money as we collect, less cost of collection only, to the provinces, for them to distribute to the school districts of the provinces. They, in turn, distribute it.

Mr MacLEAN (Prince, P.E.I.): Is the money derived from the sale not turned in to the Dominion government?

Mr. STEWART. (Argenteuil): Yes, we are trustees, the money comes to the Dominion government.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince, P.E.I.): The government does not keep it indefinitely without interest?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No. We simply turn over such interest as we collect. The trust fund itself is an interest bearing fund, of course, and the interest is turned over to the provinces as well. The trust fund is in the hands of the Dominion government.

Mr. GOULD: I have in mind a certain district in my part of the country where a sale of school lands took place some years ago, and the residents, because of that, formed themselves into a school district. Some of the lands were abandoned later on, and I believe the secretary-treasurers of the districts have endeavoured to collect taxes on these lands from the Dominion government. When I took the question up with the department, the advice which I received was that they did not feel bound to pay the taxes to the school districts. I merely call to the minister's attention the circumstance that the school districts thus formed are in a very precarious position because of those abandoned lands, and because the government does not assume the responsibility of paying school taxes. I have particularly in mind an area in the Moose mountain country, districts that were opened up in 1916, the lands being sold in 1917.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Would the minister take the question of making this amendment retroactive very seriously into his consideration during the recess, take it up with the provinces further and, if they are agreeable, bring down an amendment to the legislation? Because I believe this would be a great benefit, would lift a certain load, and would give an amount of moral reassurance to the men who purchased under the act.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Inasmuch as we hope to get through shortly, I was going to suggest that I would be very glad to take this matter up with the provinces during the recess. There will be no pressure during the year, and if the provinces are agreeable, the matter is immaterial to the department.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That was my idea.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): It was felt that really no hardship would result unless the Dominion government pressed for payment of principal on those lands. If we pressed for payment of principal money, of course there would be a very serious hardship; but so long as the provinces were content to allow extensions to be granted, provided, of course, that the interest or reasonable amounts of interest were being paid, then the individual holding the contract would suffer no great hardship. That was the feeling, I may say, when we discussed the matter before. But I will undertake to take it up again with the provincial representatives and to present the views of members of the committee on the matter.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am very glad, because I feel that although no actual hardship may be suffered, except by reason of the accrued interest, still there is a certain amount of hardship in feeling that heavy payments are impending, when they know that they will not be able to meet them; that they must apply for an extension year after year with the certainty that they will not be able to pay the principal.

Mr. GOULD: The minister has not replied in regard to the point that I brought up.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): My hon. friend is back to the vexed question of Crown lands paying taxes. So far as possible, we insist on the tenant, where land is leased, paying the ordinary taxes of the municipality; but where land is unoccupied, held by the Crown, I could not enlarge on what I have already said in respect to the matter.

Mr. GOULD: I do not think I have had any requests from a municipal point of view. The requests have been merely from the school districts themselves. These lands are unoccupied. There was another question which I have mentioned a couple of times, I believe, during the session. It is prompted also by correspondence which I have received from people who, in former years, have bought school lands, that is, who have made a contract with the Dominion government to pay principal and interest based on a rate of interest of 5 per cent. I myself was one of the guilty parties in the year 1916. The minister knows, and the committee is well aware of the fact that we have visitations of hail, grasshoppers, drouth and various other things, which oblige people to defer interest or principal payments. I believe an order in council was passed by the former minister, which penalized the people by raising the rate of interest to 7 per cent. That was quite a hardship on people residing in the West, and I have received several protests from people who were under that disability. They have asked me to present their case in order to see if some concession could not be made, if the interest rate could not remain as it was before to all bona fide purchasers who are keeping up their payments, so that no penalty, by way of an increase of 2 per cent in the rate of interest, might be imposed upon them by reason of a visitation of Providence.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This matter was discussed at a provincial conference. I believe I must pead guilty to being the Alberta representative. Mr. Martin represented Saskatchewan, and, I believe, Mr. Norris represented Manitoba. Inasmuch as the interest received from the sale of school lands played such an important part in the revenues for the running of our public schools, we were anxious that large amounts outstanding should be collected. It was suggested at that conference that this was one way to hasten that collection, and we all agreed to it. I must take my share of the responsibility. The object that we had in view was to get in those large outstanding amounts of interest that had accrued against those lands and to utilize them, of course, for the carrying on of our educational work in the provinces. Therefore, in fairness to the federal government, I think they should be given only their share of the responsibility. That was our hope. Unfortunately, in subsequent years, we have had drouth in most of the western provinces, and this is somewhat of a hardship on people owning school lands. I think, however, my hon. friend will agree with me that we did this with the best intention in the world, in the hope that we would assist struggling school districts who needed so badly the distribution of the school funds in all the provinces.

On section 7, paragraph (b)—Limits of areas of timber limits.

Mr. STEVENS: There is possibly an error in paragraph (b), or, perhaps, I do not read it correctly. The paragraph reads:

Permits to cut timber as cordwood, pulpwood, fence posts or telegraph poles for mining purposes.

Should not that be "telegraph poles or props for mining purposes?" There are no telegraph poles for mining purposes?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I had not noticed that before; the hon. member is right.

Mr. STEVENS: While the minister is making the correction I would ask him this question. Does this amendment relate to the order in council which was passed early in the year? I cannot recall the exact terms of it, but I read it some months ago and I remember that it provides for certain things with reference to pulpwood areas in Manitoba.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No, this is a different matter. Our difficulty, I may explain, lies in the areas where we want to give permits to individuals to take out pulpwood, cordwood and so forth. Take British Columbia, for instance. In a large part of that province these areas are under the forestry regulations and can be let under lease only so that the small man has no opportunity to get in at all. We cannot at present give him any permit to cut his fence posts or take out cord wood, and this gives the small man the opportunity he has not heretofore enjoyed.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it not a pretty wide and general power that is taken here? It is all to be done by the Governor in Council, apparently without any restrictions.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are subject to restrictions, with the exception that in the burnt areas the dues are one-half those that obtain in the green timber areas; and when the cut wood is measured the full dues are charged on all that is not burnt.

Mr STEVENS: That is provided for elsewhere, I suppose.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Yes. I move to amend paragraph (b) by inserting after the word "poles" in line 38 the words "or props for mining purposes."

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 9—Governor in Council may authorize inquiry before or after issue of patent.

Mr. STEVENS: This appears to be a rather important section; it empowers imprisonment in a common gaol. Is this a new provision or is it an adjustment of one that already exists?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): The department are not very clear as to whether they have statutory authority. But if fraud is committed in the securing of a patent and it is afterwards discovered they can take action.

Mr. STEVENS: Is that action taken through ordinary procedure in the courts or at the instance of the departmental officials?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Through the officials of the department. Under paragraph (g) of section 76 the Governor in Council has authority to institute an inquiry in respect of Dominion lands.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—No employee to purchase or acquire interest in Dominion lands.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This merely extends to the officials of all departments the prohibition which hitherto applied only to the Department of the Interior. There has been a provision that no official of the Department of the Interior could be interested in the lands in question or have any mining rights therein. That provision now extends to all departments.

THREE RIVERS HARBOUR

The House again in committee on Bill No. 217, respecting the Three Rivers Harbour Commissioners, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 10—Expropriation of lands.

Mr. BUREAU: This is a copy of section 25 of the act in reference to Vancouver harbour.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—By-laws.

Mr. LAPOINTE: These are the usual clauses.

On section 14—Borrowing powers.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I move that this section be amended by adding after the word "of" in line 22 the word "constructing" so that it will now read——and for the further purpose of constructing, repairing and improving.

I also want to amend the section by striking out the word "the" before "wharves."

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the third reading of Bill No. 218, to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. 223, to amend the Fisheries Act, 1914.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—License fee:

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister give a brief explanation of this?

Mr. LAPOINTE: The annual fee for a salmon canner's license was $500. In addition to that the canner has to pay a fee of 4 cents on each case of forty-eight 1-pound cans of sockeye salmon and 3 cents on each case of forty-eight 1-pound cans of any other species of salmon. The object of the bill is to reduce the license fee from $500 to $20. It has been the intention of the department to do that for some time, and it was recommended unanimously by the Fisherise Commission.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved the second reading of Bill No. 225, to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Has this bill been printed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes, but copies are not on the table. We have sent for copies and they will be distributed in a moment.

Mr. BUREAU: The bill has been printed a long while.

Mr. STEVENS: Perhaps while we are waiting for copies of the bill the minister will give us an explanation.

Mr. BUREAU: The old clauses are being repealed, and the amendments are shown in italics. One of the amendments is to extend the interpretation of the word "analyst." Heretofore the meaning of the word has been confined to the analyst in the department.

Mr. STEVENS: I think my hon. friend did explain this the other day.

Mr. BUREAU: Yes, I explained the whole thing. This is to give a wider meaning to the word analyst so that the juniors who really make the analysis may be heard in court. The other amendment is to provide a penalty for those who deodorize denatured alcohol. Heretofore a penalty could only be imposed in the case of methylated alcohol.

On section 2—Departmental analyst.

Mr. STEVENS: I remember the minister explaining this bill yesterday. I understood him to say this provision was made necessary owing to some difficulty that had been experienced in proving the case in prosecutions, or something to that effect. Would the minister tell the committee if the bill has been submitted to the Justice department and a satisfactory assurance given with respect to it? Because the matter is apparently a technical one having to do with the administration of the law.

Mr. BUREAU: In cases where a junior chemist or one of the chemists in the department made an analysis the judge of the court refused to accept the certificate because the term "departmental analyst" was defined in the act and the junior chemist or officers of a lower grade were not included. Moreover the old clause only applied to prosecutions under this section. It is proposed to make a new definition of "analyst" which will include any employee classified as junior chemist, assistant chemist or chemist in a laboratory in the Department of Customs and Excise or of any department of the government, and this will apply to all prosecutions under the act. The definition will be general in its application.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Tobacco cultivated for private use.

Mr. STEVENS: What has made this necessary?

Mr. BUREAU: This is made necessary for the following reasons: In 1914 the act was amended, and in subsection 3 of section 27, the rate was changed from five cents to ten cents. In 1918 the subsection was further amended and the amount was increased from ten cents to twenty cents. On both occasions it was forgotten that there was another section purporting to have the same effect. That section is useless, it only creates confusion, and we are asking that it be repealed.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. A. B. COPP (Secretary of State) moved the second reading of Bill No. 190, to amend the Companies Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

[Mr. Stevens.]

On section 2—When company may be created a private company:

Mr. STEVENS: This is apparently a very important bill. I notice the minister has it very well prepared, the explanatory notes being printed on the opposite page, but I think it would be wise to have an explanation as each clause is called whether it is asked for or not. We do not want to interrupt too much, but any important changes ought to be carefully explained. This is one of our most important statutes. Personally I have not had time to go over the bill, and I have not gathered what these changes really mean.

Mr. COPP: The matter has received very careful consideration at the hands of the legal branch of the department, and we also took the trouble of referring the bill to a large number of corporation lawyers in different parts of the country, particularly Montreal and Toronto, for consideration. The majority of the sections make really only verbal changes and the idea is to have them conform with other sections passed when the act was formerly amended. In section 43c of the principal act a private company is defined, but there is no provision for the creation of a private company. The present section simply provides for the creation of a private company that is already defined in that section.

Section agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 1—Issue of shares without nominal or par value.

Mr. STEVENS: This clause is either new or it is a departure from the old act. Will the minister give an explanation of it?

Mr. COPP: The amending act of 1917 provided for the issue of shares without nominal or par value. This is a method of company organization which has prevailed for many years on the continent of Europe. After a prolonged consideration and discussion, the first legislation authorizing shares without par value was introduced in the state of New York in the year 1912. It was from this statute that the amending act of 1917 was adopted. Even at that time the legislation was, to some extent, experimental. It was doubtful whether complications would arise in the organization of companies under these provisions and whether they would meet with the approval of financial interests. In the United States the legislation has been very successful, and the number of companies having shares without par value is steadily increasing. Many of them are quoted on the exchanges, and it is quite apparent that this method meets business interests.

Since 1917 this legislation has developed in the United States. Moreover it has been found that this development has been due to business requirements. The principal change has been brought about to meet the following circumstances.

As the act stood in the amendment of 1917, a company could not commence business until the total amount of its preferred shares of $5 on each share without par value had been subscribed and paid up. In cases of reorganization this created no difficulty, but it largely prevented new enterprises being undertaken under this method. The regulations of the Department of the Interior require that all oil companies holding leases in the Northwest Territories must be incorporated under this provision. For such companies this section created almost impossible difficulties.

Under the section as amended, section 26 of the act is applicable under paragraph (b) of subsection 4, and the company may commence business as soon as 10 per cent of its capital is subscribed. This would, undoubtedly, mean 10 per cent of the preferred shares and one tenth of the number of shares without nominal or par value.

Moreover, under the amending act of 1917 there was some doubt whether preferred shares without par value could be issued. Many of the companies' acts of the different states provide for preferred shares without par value where the preference is only to the extent of dividend. The section, as amended by the bill, also permits the issue of such shares. Subsection 7b was taken, with verbal alterations, from the legislation of the state of New York for the year 1912. This has been the law of several of the states in the United States since 1912. This section is intended to give us a little more definite information as to the working of the act.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Can the minister say that this provision would probably be applied in the case of the Dome Mines Company and the Ontario Gold Fields in Porcupine?

Mr. COPP: I think the section will apply.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Will it apply to the case which has been before the public in connection with the Dome Mines of Porcupine?

Mr. COPP: I am informed that company would come under it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Then it may be a good measure, though I think perhaps it is more in the interest of booming the stock market than anything else. If there is a company in regard to which inflation might be justifiable it is this company which has one of the richest mines in Porcupine. Its capital stock, as I understood, consisted of $5 shares paid up, and not long ago the company repaid a one dollar capital bonus to the shareholders. Now you propose to declare these shares to be of no par value. This clause is introducing an absolutely new factor. I want it clearly understood that from my point of view, though it may be a good measure, it is more or less for the advantage of those who deal with these stocks on the market, and the net result, as it affects this mine, will be that while these shares run to $30 and $40, by possible inflation these shares will go to two and three times their present values on the stock market. As long as the public know that this is the object of the proposition, perhaps it is all right, but it should be carefully considered, because if we introduce this provision, then in all the prosperous mines this conversion will take place and they will be issuing no par value shares, and one man will have five no par value shares where at the commencement he had only one five dollar share. The net result will be that the Dome Mine shares, which are now quoted at $30 or $40, may go to four times that amount. I hope the result will justify the bill, but it is a new departure, and it is following the American practice. If we are to follow the American practice, the matter must be looked into carefully and the public ought to know what the object of the amendment really is.

Mr. STEVENS: When the minister is dealing with that point, will he make this further point clear: In the case of a company issuing no par value shares, is it necessary under this section that before any such block of shares may be issued it must clearly set forth, either in a registered agreement or in the letters patent, the value for which the shares are to be issued.

Mr. COPP: That may be fixed in the charter or by the directors.

Mr. STEVENS: It is not may, it is "must." It must be so fixed. I am only reading this casually, but subsection 3 of section 5 says:

> (3) The issue and allotment of shares authorized by this section, other than shares of preferred stock having a preference as to principal, may be made from time to time for such consideration as may be prescribed in the letters patent, or as may be fixed by the board of directors.

When shares of no par value are issued, must the aggregate amount of money or value be set forth in the letters patent? Is it obligatory?

Mr. COPP: It is not obligatory to set it out in the letters patent, but it may be fixed by the board of directors.

Mr. STEVENS: Then it is not necessary to disclose it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): No, and in no way will the public know what the actual issue of shares of the company was in connection with the shares now converted. There is a conversion to shares of no par value, and it may be a justifiable conversion. In the case of the Dome Mines it was a five dollar proposition when the shares were issued, together with a one dollar bonus. These shares may each be converted into four shares I think the public should know about this conversion, so that when they are purchasing no par value shares they will have some idea what they are dealing in. I am quite sure that all the high-priced and successful stock mining companies will take advantage of this provision, and there will be a great inflation of the value of these shares. Let there be inflation, but I think the public ought to know, by some declaration or record made by the company, what the shares are worth and what their original value was and how much has been paid on them in each particular company. They should know the original amount of capital that these shares represent to the company. It is only fair to the public that some statement of that kind should be provided, because, if it is not, you will see a wide conversion of the capital stock, especially of these mining companies, there will be a complete change, and shares will be dealt in which have no par value, nominally at least; but still they have a value.

Mr. COPP: The Dome Mine my hon. friend referred to is not affected by this section any more than any other company. After the organization of the company and when they proceed to sell the stock, the information is all set out in the prospectus. To-day, under the old act, they have the privilege of issuing no par value stock in that way. This does not change to any extent the situation as we have it to-day, and it is not the purpose to interfere with or change the organization of any particular mine or company. Of course this bill will apply to any mining or other company in the future.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The effect of that is that soon we shall have an issue of no par value government bonds. Where is this to end in the issue of stock of no par value? This may be all right in mines, and it may be perfectly justified in the case of this particular mine. I will not say that it is a danger; but it is a principle that must be carefully guarded, and while I do not say that the minister can guard it at the present moment, I suggest to him that he should give the matter further consideration later on. I am sure there will be an agitation in this country for a clearer definition of what a no par value share is, and in that way the public can be protected. With that suggestion I am going to leave the matter, but I hope the minister will take it into consideration.

Mr. COPP: I shall be glad to take the matter into consideration. I do not know that I can do so just as this moment.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The matter will certainly come up again.

Mr. BAXTER: I think sometimes from the public standpoint the no par value share has an advantage over the par value share. When the par value share is used, there is an assumption, for instance, that a $100 share has $100 behind it. One is apt to criticize anything that may have the appearance of deceiving the public, and that is quite right. When you issue no par value stock, there is no deception, because a stockholder is entitled simply to an aliquot part of the total assets or surplus. There is nothing on his certificate or in the external record of the company to deceive anyone. There is no misleading on the face of the certificate. You are not handed a certificate with a gilt seal on it and a statement that this represents $100. The certificate states simply that you are entitled to a share, without the value being indicated.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): In view of stock operations of this kind, the matter should be put into concrete form. Heretofore, there was supposed to be some protection as to the amount of money involved in the certificate, but clearly we are having an absolute change in this matter. I say that this should be very carefully looked into, and if the bill is passed, should be passed with the reservation that later on it may be in the interest of the public more clearly to define the rights of the public in connection with these issues.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 4—Amount of capital required.

Mr. COPP: I move to amend this subsection by striking out the words "received as" and inserting instead thereof the words "of the." The subclause will then read:

The amount of capital with which the company shall carry on business shall be not less than the aggregate amount of the consideration for the issue—

And so on.

Mr. BAXTER: The consideration may not necessarily be money; it may be property?

Mr. COPP: Yes.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): When a prosperous company like this issues more stock, it will give the buyers shares of no par value, and that may be a good proposition; but it is a proposition that should be carefully defined, and the rights of the public should be protected in some way. The public should know that, at least, they are protected in connection with mining companies in this country where the stock is set out to be of no par value. Perhaps, as my hon. friend (Mr. Baxter) has said, it may be a good thing to do away with these gilt seals on certificates, and where there is a large amount stated as capital, the public will be, perhaps, more careful hereafter. If this is done, it must be carefully watched, and it may be necessary to change the legislation later on.

On section 6—Company may obtain change of name.

Mr. COPP: I move to amend this clause by striking out the words "in value of the shares represented" and substituting in place thereof the words "of the votes cast."

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Can the shareholders vote by proxy?

Mr. COPP: Yes, just the same as before.

Mr. BAXTER: Has the minister had in mind the possibility of a company regulating its voting powers by by-law, as I think they do under the Dominion act? As long as the method is "one share, one vote," which is the normal principle, this is all right; but what would be the effect, if, for instance, in some way, a shareholder had to have ten shares in order to have one vote, and then receive so many votes for each additional share, or some scheme like that? I am not quite sure how that would work out. The wording "two-thirds of the votes cast" would seem to be a protection, but it might be very difficult to do the business the company desires.

Mr. COPP: I am informed that this makes it easier. This is the statement in regard to the matter. It refers to a number of sections, and I may not refer to them all. The memorandum reads:

Sections 6, 10, 11, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 23 are all for the purpose of unifying and simplifying the phraseology defining the vote at special meetings of shareholders in certain cases. As the act stood, the phraseology was not uniform. For instance, section 34 provides for a vote of shareholders "representing at least two-thirds in value of the subscribed stock." Section 44 provides for a vote of "not less than two-thirds in value of the capital stock represented at a meeting." This phrase is doubtful because it is open to two constructions, whether it is two-thirds of all the subscribed capital or two-thirds of those represented at the meeting.

The situation is rendered more difficult in the case of companies having shares without par value. It is then impossible to comply with the provisions of these sections. A further complication arises where preferred shares are issued without any right to vote.

It is considered advisable to make the language uniform and to provide that the resolution or by-law is to be carried by two-thirds of the votes at the meeting. The charter and by-laws define who should be entitled to vote. Everyone entitled to vote must be given notice of the meeting, and it seems preferable that the control should be placed in the hands of those present or represented at the meeting to the extent of two-thirds.

That refers to all the sections.

Mr. BAXTER: I think it is good. I am entirely in accord with the legislation so far as it is directed to having one uniform rule whereas, as the minister has stated, we have heretofore had more or less conflicting practices. If I may say so, we had some sections of rather doubtful interpretation. What I am trying to point out, however, is this: If a company is to take action under the voting power of the shares it might make it somewhat difficult to apply this section. The section must be broad enough to apply to non-par value as well as to the ordinary class of shares. The words "in value" might therefore very well be left out. But still I think that the phrase "two-thirds of the shares represented," would be the best expression. I would suggest two-thirds of the shares represented, whether par value or non-par value; that would be dealing with the very structure of the company itself. This would make it impossible to have any interference by special by-laws that might restrict voting powers and you would really have one uniform rule, instead of allowing companies to do something that might to a certain extent interfere with the general principle proposed. The words "in value" do not really mean anything, because a man would have equal voting power, even though his share were not paid up, with the man whose shares were paid up. The words "two-thirds of the shares represented," whether par value or non-par value, would go to the very root of the voting structure of the company, and I would suggest to the minister that expression.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I still think that the committee should give the proposed legislation the fullest consideration and time given to the public interested in such non-par value securities to look into it.

Mr. COPP: I do not think that the suggestion of my hon. friend from St. John would make very much difference.

Mr. BAXTER: Perhaps some of the shareholders might lie back quietly and take an attitude of indifference. They might say that they do not care how the thing is run. We do not want that, and I think it is too much to ask that two-thirds of the total capital or total number of shares should be represented. All the shares might not be represented at any meeting, but there should be a vote from at least two-thirds of those who are actually present, and unless you can secure a vote from two-thirds of the shares represented then an important change should not be made. Some shareholders might say, "Well, you people called the meeting and now we are here we shall sit back as spectators and see how far you will get"; but two-thirds of the votes cast would decide the matter.

Mr. COPP: I have no particular objection to the amendment my hon. friend proposes, but I really do not think it makes very much difference. The matter has been carefully considered by the department.

Mr. STEVENS: Is this the principle that runs through all the sections of the bill, namely, that two-thirds of the votes cast will decide any question?

Mr. COPP: Yes, that is the principle.

Mr. BAXTER: It seems to me that "two-thirds of the shares represented" would express as accurately as possible what it is intended to convey.

Mr. COPP: I move then that the section be amended by striking out the words "in value" in line 37.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 8—Commission for procuring subscriptions.

Mr. COPP: This is a new provision taken from the English act.

Mr. STEVENS: Is it an exact copy from the English act?

Mr. COPP: It is taken wholly from a corresponding section in the English act which allows a company to pay a commission on the shares it may sell. It is a universal practice, and while there is some doubt as to its legality, it is considered well to regulate the practice.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Repeal.

Mr. COPP: The section which is being repealed provides that the situation of the office or head office shall be published in the Canada Gazette. It is always published when the letters patent are received, and the present provision calls for a publication if any supplementary letters are issued.

Mr. BAXTER: That is, a separate publication?

Mr. COPP: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Company may authorize directors to apply to extend or reduce powers.

Mr. COPP: The principle in this section is the same as that in section 6. I move that the words "in value" in line 18 be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 11—How private company may become public company.

Mr. COPP: The words "in value" should also be deleted from this section.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 13—Requirements as to particulars in prospectus.

Mr. STEVENS: What is new in this section?

Mr COPP: Instead of requiring that the objects of the company be set out in detail in the prospectus this amendment permits a summary.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—Conditions on which company may purchase stock of other companies.

Mr. COPP: The words "in value" should be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 17—By-law to be sanctioned.

Mr. COPP: The words "in value" should be stricken from this section too.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not think there is any change in the last lines of this clause, "or until the same shall be unanimously sanctioned in writing by the shareholders of the company." This is the present law, but as there is no provision for authenticating the act of the individual shareholders, I doubt whether there is any value in the words I have quoted and I think they might be struck out.

Mr. COPP: I beg to move that the words:

—or until the same shall be unanimously sanctioned in writing by the shareholders of the company.

be stricken out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 18, subsection 1—Increase of capital.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not see any point in fixing the percentage at ninety.

Mr. COPP: Many requests have been made to fix it at even less than ninety.

Mr. BAXTER: That is what I would think.

Mr. COPP: We thought we had better leave it at that arbitrary figure.

Mr. STEVENS: As the law now stands it assumes that a company will not increase its capital until it has virtually exhausted its treasury stock. But that may not be the reason at all. A company may organize, for instance, with a capital of $1,000,000 and find that that is altogether inadequate and want $5,000,000. It may be that it is unable to function simply because of the inadequacy of its capitalization, and yet it may have a perfectly good proposition and by raising its capitalization to $5,000,000 be able to function properly and sell its stock. So I certainly think that that arbitrary figure of ninety per cent is not wise. It is not based I think on any sound principle in practice.

9 p.m.

Mr. COPP: What would my hon. friend suggest?

Mr. STEVENS: I think sixty per cent would be ample, but I do not know that there is any need of fixing a figure at all, because this is assuming that there is only one reason for increasing capital, namely, that they had exhausted the assets in the treasury. But that may not be the reason at all. The common reason is that either because of expansion of business it is desirable to increase the capitalization, or because the capitalization is insufficient to realize what they anticipated in the way of provision for business. So unless there be some definite objection I see no reason why it should not be reduced to fifty per cent in both cases.

Mr. COPP: I see no reason for retaining that figure. We have had many requests to reduce it to fifty per cent, but ninety per cent was in the old act and we have left it in

Mr. MACLEAN (South York): Where did the requests come from, and what reasons did they give for asking the change?

Mr. COPP: This has not been changed. Many lawyers suggested that it be reduced to a lower percentage. I have no objection to making it fifty per cent, and I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. COPP: I move that the words "in value" in line 13, subsection 2 be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 19—Borrowing powers.

Mr. COPP: I am adding a new clause 19 and renumbering the present section 19 and following sections. The new clause which I now move will read as follows:

No by-law for reducing the capital stock of the company shall have any force or effect whatsoever until it is approved by at least two-thirds of the votes cast at a special general meeting of the company duly called to consider the same and afterwards confirmed by supplementary letters patent.

The old act read:

No by-law for reducing the capital stock of the company, or for subdividing the shares, shall have any force or effect whatsoever, until it is approved by the votes of shareholders representing at least two-thirds in value of the subscribed stock of the company at a special general meeting of the company duly called for considering the same, and afterwards confirmed by supplementary letters patent.

We can change the amendment to read two-thirds of the shares represented, to make it conform with the other sections.

Mr. BAXTER: I was just going to ask the minister as to that. In the other cases I do not think you could do any harm, but when you deal with a reduction of capital it may work in two ways: You may have a reduction of capital because the company is contracting its business but is yet solvent, and you may have a reduction of capital for the purpose of trying to avoid liability. Of course, the sanction of the minister has to be obtained I believe, but it is a question of whether there might not be some different rule in regard to the shareholders in this case. I submit that for consideration.

Mr. COPP: If we make it two-thirds the sections would then be uniform. I do not think there is any danger.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the wording the minister proposes?

Mr. COPP: The amendment reads:

No by-law for reducing the capital stock of the company shall have any force or effect whatsoever until it is approved by at least two-thirds of the votes cast at a special general meeting of the company duly called to consider the same and afterwards confirmed by supplementary letters patent.

We can make that two-thirds of the shares represented to conform with the other sections.

The CHAIRMAN: It is proposed that section 19 be struck out and the amendment submitted be substituted therefor. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Mr. STEVENS: I rise to call the minister's attention to what appears to be a mistake in the motion put by the chairman. I do not think the minister intends to strike out the clause, does he?

Mr. COPP: No, it is a new clause to be added.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amended clause to be known as section 19.

Mr. STEVENS: You want that to harmonize with the others, do you not? Are you not going to strike out the words "in value"?

Mr. COPP: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 19 as amended carry?

Section as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Then section 19 appearing in the bill will now be section 20 and the following sections will be renumbered.

On section 20—Borrowing powers.

Mr. COPP: I move to strike out the words "in value" in line 23 of the bill.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The original section 20 is now section 21.

On section 21—Dividends payable out of funds when assets of a wasting character.

Mr. STEVENS: We ought to have an explanation as apparently this is a new section.

Mr. COPP: Section 70 of the principal act reads as follows:

No dividend shall be declared which will impair the capital of the company.

That is the whole section. Now, companies such as mining companies have wasting assets because their value is decreasing as the mines are worked. This section makes provision to pay the dividends out of the profits made even if, to a certain extent, the assets are wasting.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Why was the doubt raised about this? I think there is a little danger in it because where you have wasting assets, and there is a bond issue, there must always be a sinking fund. Some directors might think this provision would relieve them of the necessity of providing a sinking fund. I cannot understand how doubts could ever have been raised about the law as it stands at present.

Mr. COPP: The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) introduced a private bill dealing with this subject earlier in the session and as we decided to introduce some general amendments the provision was incorporated in the present bill. It was brought to my attention that doubt has arisen in the minds of the directors of some mining companies and that is why this particular legislation is required. There is a clause in the Ontario act covering the same point.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would ask the Secretary of State whether he does not think this bill should be reprinted and circulated a day or two in advance of its being taken up in the Senate? Then those who are interested in the measure—and there is a very large interest growing up in this country in connection with our mines—and the general public, will have an opportunity of learning exactly what is contemplated. These changes are being made just at the end of the session and inasmuch as the House will be sitting for a considerable part if not all of next week, by the reprinting and circulation of the bill those interested and the general public will have an opportunity of studying the changes and if any objection is taken it can be given expression to in the Senate later on. Has the Secretary of State any objection to that course being pursued?

Mr. COPP: I have no objection at all but I hardly see the necessity for it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): As I understand the bill it is far reaching in its effects.

Mr. COPP: I do not think it is. However, if the committee thinks it better to have the bill reprinted I will give the matter consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The advantage will be that those interested will have an opportunity of studying what is proposed before the bill passes its final stage in the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS: I had not had time to read the clause when I asked the minister a question. Now I clearly see the force of what is proposed and I must say I am thoroughly satisfied with this amendment which seems to be in the interest of mining companies.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Does my hon friend object to my proposition for the bill to be reprinted and circulated so that the public will be given time to consider it?

Mr. STEVENS: Not at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I hope the Secretary of State will consent to that being done.

Mr. COPP: The bill will be reprinted before it goes to the Senate.

Section agreed to.

On section 22—Qualifications of directors elected.

Mr. BAXTER: The first subsection seems to be all right but I cannot say the same of subsection 2 as to the requirements on the part of the person to be named as director. When are we going to get rid of this minute in our legislation? The subsection reads as follows:

(2) A person named as a director or proposed director in any prospectus or in any statement in lieu of prospectus, issued by or on behalf of the company, shall not be capable of being appointed director of the company, unless, at the time of the publication of the prospectus or statement in lieu of prospectus, he has by himself or by his agent authorized in writing,—

(i) Signed and filed with the Secretary of State of Canada a consent in writing to act as such director; and

(ii) Either signed the petition for incorporation and memorandum of agreement and stock book for a number of shares not less than his qualification or signed and filed with the Secretary of State of Canada a contract in writing to take from the company and pay for his qualification shares.

It is owing to requirements such as this that we find when we come to consider the estimates of civil government such an appalling number of filing clerks and other unnecessary officials foisted upon the country I am going to ask the minister to display a little common sense, and let a company do its own business.

Mr. COPP: This is an exact copy of the provision in the act of 1917—

Mr. BAXTER: It was a very bad House that passed it.

Mr. COPP: I am not making that as an argument, but with a single verbal change it is exactly the provision we have been working under since 1917. The change just seeks to correct one word in the existing act. This clause is a substantial part of the legislation respecting prospectuses which has been in force in England, and many of the provinces for twenty years, and the elimination of this clause would perhaps nullify the prospectus clauses.

Mr. BAXTER: I do not think you ought to have it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): In view of the government's desire to reach prorogation at an early stage I think this bill ought to be reprinted forthwith and copies furnished to the public so that they will see exactly what is proposed. They would also have the benefit of reading this discussion.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 23—By-laws for increase or decrease of number.

Mr. COPP: I move that the words "in value" in line 34 of this section be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Section agreed to.

On section 25—Annual meeting.

Mr. BAXTER: What is the verbal change there?

Mr. COPP In the 1917 act the words were —"the place named in the special act or letters patent as the place of." These words are struck out.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—Amounts in annual return.

Mr. COPP: There is a change in the wording here—just a transposition of the words. The old section reads:

The total amount paid on shares otherwise than in cash, showing severally the amount paid by services commissions or assets acquired since the last annual return.

Section agreed to.

On section 27—Subscriptions in return.

Mr. BAXTER: What is the change?

Mr. COPP: The old section read:

The total amount paid on such shares.

We are adding the words "of subscriptions."

Mr. BAXTER: Are you making it any better? If you pay the money in you are paying it on account of the shares.

Mr. COPP: They might make payments annually.

Mr. STEVENS: I think the wording of the new section is not nearly as good as the old. I think it is making it more obscure.

Mr. COPP: I do not think it makes any difference.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not like to quibble over it, but I cannot see any improvement.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I think there is a little improvement. In the first place the section is designed to obtain information as to payments on shares other than in cash, and if you take the words of the old section it might have reference to notes given in payment which would not be cash.

Section agreed to.

On section 28—Summary to be filed, signed and verified.

Mr. BAXTER: What is the change there?

Mr. COPP: This section says:

(2) The said summary must be completed and filed in duplicate in the Department of the Secretary of State of Canada on or before the first day of June aforesaid. Each of the said duplicates shall be signed by the president and the manager, or, if these are the same person, by the president and by the secretary of the company, and shall be duly verified by their affidavits. Provided that if one or both of such officers be unable to sign the said summary on account of absence or any other cause, the summary shall be signed instead by such other director or directors as shall be authorized thereto by the company and the affidavit of verification of the signature of each such substitute director shall include an explanation of the reason for failure of the absent or incapable officer to sign and of the authority of such substitute so to act. The said affidavits shall also verify that the copies of the said summary are duplicates.

This provision is made in case the president or other officer is absent and cannot sign. In that case, some director can do it.

Mr. BAXTER: All right.

Section agreed to.

On section 29—Meetings of creditors ordered by Secretary of State. When compromise binding on all creditors.

Mr. COPP: I move in amendment to section 29, that the original section 28 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

112A. (1) Where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a company and its shareholders or any class of them affecting the rights of shareholders or any class of them, under the company's letters patent or supplementary letters patent or by-laws, the Secretary of State may on application in a summary way of the company, or of any shareholder, order a meeting of the shareholders of the company or of any class of shareholders, as the case may be, to be summoned in such manner as the Secretary of State directs.

Mr. BAXTER: I understand it. I tried to give a little attention to this and there are three classes dealt with. The first is where there were some compromises between the company and its shareholders or class of shareholders—a thing within the company. The second is where the company is being dealt with under the Winding-up Act, and, third, where it is being dealt with under the Bankruptcy Act. I think it is a perfectly proper thing for judicial sanction. I would suggest that, instead of having the Secretary of State direct the manner in which the meeting is to be summoned, it should be left to judges in the provinces where the head offices of the company are situated. Let them all be dealt with judicially. I do not think my hon. friend wants to have his department used as a half court or something of that kind. It is not at all advisable. Get some general term. It should be a judge of any superior court. I do not know whether the words "supreme court" would be the proper ones. I think it should be a judge, not necessarily of an appellate court, but of a court of the highest jurisdiction. What is a superior court judge in the province of Quebec? Where does he come in? I am trying to get a little information if the minister could give it us as to the status of the superior court judges in his province. Is that the highest rank of judge, outside of the appellate judges.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Yes.

Mr. BAXTER: Well, that will be all right—a judge of the supreme or appellate court in the province in which the head office of the company is situated.

Mr. COPP: I agree. I prefer that the power be delegated to a judge.

The CHAIRMAN: I have struck out the words "the Secretary of State" in the sixth line of the amendment and substituted therefor the words "a judge of the Supreme or a superior court".

Mr. BAXTER: Of the province in which the head office of the company is situated.

The CHAIRMAN: The subclause will read in part:

A judge of the Supreme or a superior court of the province in which the head office of the company is situated, may on application in a summary way of the company or of any shareholder order a meeting of the shareholders of the company or of any class of shareholders, as the case may be, to be summoned in such manner as the said judge directs.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

On subsection 2.

The CHAIRMAN (Reading):

If the shareholders, or class of shareholders, as the case may be, present in person or by proxy at the meeting, by three-fourths of the votes cast—

Mr. BAXTER: If the minister is going to use "three-fourths," we had better continue our desire for uniformity, by saying "three-fourths of the shares issued", so as to keep this uniform with the other clauses.

The CHAIRMAN: It is moved that the words "votes cast" shall be stricken out, and the words "shares represented" inserted instead thereof. The subclause will now read:

If the shareholders, or class of shareholders, as the case may be, present in person or by proxy at the meeting, by three-fourths of the shares represented agree to the compromise or arrangement either as proposed or as altered or modified at such meeting, such compromise or arrangement may be sanctioned by a judge as aforesaid, and if so sanctioned, such compromise or arrangement and any reduction or increase of share capital and any provisions for the allotment or disposition thereof by sale or otherwise as therein set forth, shall be confirmed by supplementary letters patent which shall be binding on the company and the shareholders or class of shareholders, as the case may be.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I should like to ask the minister if in the English Companies Act, from which this clause is apparently taken, the jurisdiction is given to the recorder or registrar there.

Mr. COPP: It is given to the courts.

Subsection 2 as amended agreed to.

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: A new section is submitted to be known as section 30:

(1) Where a compromise or arrangement is proposed between a company which is subject to any pending proceedings under the Winding-Up Act chapter one hundred and forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, and its creditors or any class of them or its shareholders or any class of them, affecting or cancelling, conditionally or otherwise, the rights of shareholders or any class of them under the company's letters patent or supplementary letters patent or by-laws, the court having jurisdiction in such pending proceedings as aforesaid may on application in a summary way of the company or any shareholder or liquidator order a meeting of the shareholders or class of shareholders to be summoned in such manner as the court directs.

Subsection agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: As regards subsection 2, it is suggested that in line 3 the words "votes cast" shall be struck out, and the words "shares represented" be substituted therefor. Subsection 2 will read:

(2) If the shareholders or class of shareholders, as the case may be, present either in person or by proxy at the meeting, by three-fourths of the shares represented agree to a compromise or arrangement, as proposed or as altered or modified at such meeting and if the requisite majority of the creditors or class of creditors under any relative provisions of the Winding-Up Act also agree to such compromise or arrangement, the court having jurisdiction in such pending proceedings as aforesaid may sanction such compromise or arrangement, and if so sanctioned by the court, a certified copy of such compromise or arrangement as so sanctioned and of the order or judgment of the court sanctioning the same shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and such compromise or arrangement and any reduction or cancellation of share capital and any increase or creation of new share capital, and any provisions for the allotment or disposition thereof by sale or otherwise as therein set forth, shall be confirmed by supplementary letters patent, which shall be binding upon all the creditors or class of creditors and shareholders or class of shareholders, and on any liquidator or contributories concerned.

Should that not be "and" all the way through?

Mr. COPP: All right.

The CHAIRMAN: It will read:

And on any liquidator and contributories concerned.

Subsection agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Subsection 3 reads:

(3) Where a compromise or arrangement proposed between a company which is subject to any pending proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, chapter thirty-six of the statutes of 1919, and its creditors or any class of them or its shareholders or any class of them, affecting or cancelling conditionally or otherwise the rights of shareholders or any class of them under the company's letters patent or supplementary letters patent or by-laws, has been approved by the court having jurisdiction in such pending proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, a certified copy of such compromise or arrangement as so approved and of the order or judgment of the court approving the same shall be deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, and such compromise or arrangement and any reduction or cancellation of share capital and any increase or creation of new share capital and any provisions for the allotment or disposition thereof by sale or otherwise as therein set forth shall be confirmed by supplementary letters patent, which shall be binding upon all the creditors or class of creditors and shareholders or class of shareholders and on any custodian or trustee concerned.

Subsection agreed to.

Section agreed to.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): When the old clause 26, the new clause 27, was being considered, I spoke upon it thinking that the preceding clause was under consideration, and my remarks must have appeared unintelligible to the committee. My attention has since been called to that fact, and I do not think that the clause is very intelligible as it reads. I think it would be better to say "the total amount paid on such subscribed shares."

Mr. STEVENS: It is perfectly clear that it is the shares that you pay for.

Mr. COPP: I am prepared to accept the amendment. I move that the section be amended by striking out the words "of subscriptions" and inserting after the word "such" the word "subscribed."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

LAKE GRAIN RATES

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure with respect to freight rates for the carriage of grain by lake and river navigation, and to provide,—

1. That any shipping company or any shipowner or person who carries or who offers, advertises or proposes to carry grain for hire between Fort William or Port Arthur and any other port or place in Canada or the United States of America, by lake or river navigation, shall within a prescribed period file with the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada the tariff of rates which is proposed to be charged, and also any change or variation of such tariff of rates.

2. That the said board shall receive and tabulate all such tariffs and rates, and ascertain by all available means the rates of freight which prevail or are exacted for the carriage of grain as aforesaid, and report to the minister the facts in respect to deficiency of cargo space, excessive freight charge, or discrimination in rates, and all shippers shall upon request furnish the board with such information as they possess relating to these matters.

3. That when in the opinion of the board the rates are unreasonable and excessive, the board may prescribe such maximum rates as it may consider reasonable, which may be varied or limited in their operation as the board may prescribe.

4. That provisions be made as to the posting in the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and in the office of the Board of Grain Commissioners by vessel brokers and agents of statements in detail of cargo space, time for shipment and destination on contracts or charters made on the day last preceding, and to prohibit any vessel broker or agent from soliciting any risk, or issuing or delivering any receipt or policy of insurance, or collecting or receiving any premium in whole or in part, or inspecting any risk or adjusting any loss upon any consignment of grain to be carried.

5. That penalties be enacted for the violation of the provisions of the proposed legislation.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. STEVENS: This is a very important resolution, dealing with a matter of more than passing concern both to the country and to the various interests affected I do not rise at all for the purpose of unfairly or unkindly criticizing the resolution, but I am anxious to have as much information as possible on a number of questions. I trust therefore that the minister will not feel that I am in any way trying to embarrass him. If the questions I ask do not seem particularly relevant to the first subsection under consideration I would ask that they be allowed notwithstanding that fact, because the whole discussion might very well centre to a large extent around the first section. First of all, I should like to know what reason there is for submitting to the Grain Commission rather than to the Railway Board the question as to the fixation of lake rates. The Grain Commission have no machinery, nor have they experts as in an established department; whereas the Railway Board, having the advantage of many years' experience, and equipped with the necessary technical and clerical machinery, are well organized and able to study any question of this kind. First of all the minister might outline the reasons why this important matter should be placed under the jurisdiction of the Grain Commissioners rather than before the Railway Board.

Mr. ROBB: The Grain Commission have charge of the handling of grain, and are in touch with the elevators at the head of the lakes and the interior elevators. Furthermore, they have a perfect knowledge of the grain, first back in the country and next at the terminal elevators at the head of the lakes and in the elevators east of them. The bill to be introduced based upon this resolution provides not only for the fixing of the maximum rate, but for the regulation of the method of shipping and for the advising of the public as to space available. Early last summer, I think in the month of July, the government had complaints from certain shippers, some of them large shippers, that there was discrimination in the freight rates on the upper lakes as between Canadian and United States ports. There was a difference of opinion between the shippers and the lake carriers. The government tried to induce the lake carriers to remove this discrimination, which they themselves admitted. The carriers, however, contended that the rates quoted to Buffalo were what are known as "distress" rates; on account of strikes in the United States in the coal areas many vessels that otherwise would be carrying coal and iron were offering to carry freight from Fort William and Port Arthur to Buffalo at very much lower rates than the rates charged generally by Canadian companies. We urged upon the Canadian companies that if they could afford to carry grain to Buffalo at rates they themselves admitted, they should at least carry it to Port Colborne at a very small percentage over those rates. The experience of past years was that, generally speaking, they got a quarter of a cent a bushel more to Port Colborne than to Buffalo; in some cases the rate charged was considerably more—almost double. Unfortunately we were unable to induce them to deal fairly with Canadian shippers, there being no machinery that we could invoke for the purpose.

Now, based upon this resolution a bill will be introduced providing that shipowners and ship brokers shall file with the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada the rates at which they charter vessels. It will be the duty of the board to secure such information and have it on file for the minister. Certain penalties will be imposed upon shipowners who refuse to file their rates. I may say that they now give this information to our statistical department, but it comes to us too late to be of any use. If in the judgment of the board the rates charged out of Fort William or Port Arthur are excessive as compared with the rates charged for similar traffic from United States ports, it will be within its power to fix a maximum rate. Of course, this power must be exercised with discretion. A maximum rate must be a fair rate based upon the traffic available for the ships that are doing business. If this maximum rate is fixed too high, the shipowner may consider it the minimum rate; on the other hand, if it is fixed too low it may drive shipping away altogether from Canadian ports over to Duluth, and it might divert our grain to that port, or the shipowner might tie up his vessels. I admit at once that in my judgment we cannot compel any shipowner to run his boats if he is not satisfied with the maximum rate we fix. Therefore, as I say, care and discretion must, and we expect will, be exercised in this regard. We believe that the Board of Grain Commissioners at the head of the lakes, being conversant with the conditions of the grain trade from day to day, are in a much better position to handle this rate question intelligently than a board located at Ottawa far away from the scene of operations. This is one reason which induced the government to select the Board of Grain Commissioners for this purpose.

Right here I may say that in addition to these powers the bill will provide for the preventing of what is regarded by the producers and shippers of grain as an unfair method of booking space; that is, of the vessel broker or agent saying to the shipper: "Unless you take insurance with me you cannot have the space you require." We propose to get rid of this trouble by prohibiting the broker or agent from either writing the insurance or inspecting any risk.

This, generally speaking is an outline of the bill. The government invites advice from the House. We do not believe that this proposal will be a cure-all, but it is an honest effort, through publicity primarily, to obtain reasonable rates for the shippers of grain.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Are there any penalties besides publicity?

Mr. ROBB: Yes, quite severe penalties. We do not want to go through the experience of last season. Early in the season it was complained that there was discrimination as between Canadian and United States ports; later on the complaint was that the rates were unduly advanced. As regards the latter complaint, I am bound to say that from the information I have gathered the blame was not all on one side. I understand the exporters sold for export large quantities of grain without taking the precaution of securing lake space. They bought their ocean space and intended to route the grain by Buffalo to American ports. As soon as the coal strike was settled and cars were requisitioned to carry coal, Buffalo fell down and instead of putting out a thousand cars a day the number fell to about two hundred, and, of course, Buffalo became congested. Thereupon the grain was brought around to Montreal and Quebec and the exporters put their brokers in the pit and offered the shipowners advanced rates. As a result a good many of the exporters lost money, particularly the United States exporters. Now, while the exporters lost money on the grain exported early in the year, the loss backed up on the crop in the country and depressed the price of the grain which later came on the market. We are attempting to regulate this traffic so there will be more reasonable rates for the carriage of grain, and so that the shippers will have every day during the shipping season at Fort William, Port Arthur and Winnipeg information as to what space has been booked and what is still available. We hope through publicity—which after all is the great curative agency—that the rates prevailing during the coming season will be fairer than they were last season.

Mr. STEVENS: Did not the government have power last year to suspend the coasting laws?

Mr. ROBB: That power was exercised by our predecessors under the War Measures Act, and we exercised it last year, to cover grain carried across the lakes for storage so that we might have the business for our own railways. But if the matter had been taken to the courts I am not sure whether our action could have been upheld.

Mr. STEVENS: If there is discrimination against Canadian ports in relation to the rates obtaining to American ports, is not that the obvious and quickest method of overcoming it? Under this legislation you cannot empower the Grain Commission to 10 p.m. fix a rate from Fort William to Buffalo, or from Duluth to Port Colborne. To put it another way, it will be impossible for parliament to confer power on the Grain Commission to fix rates from a Canadian port to an American port or vice versa. Now if we recognize that, then there is but very little force in the law to fix it from one Canadian port to another, because the diversion from the Canadian port to the American port will then follow as a natural sequence to the limit of the capacity of the American receiving ports. I think that is obvious. The only remedy would be to suspend the coasting laws. Then you effectively cover the discrimination or the excess rate. What I am trying to impress upon the minister, and what I really think the committee should consider, is whether it is advisable at all to frame a law which may give the impression that you are going to deal with a problem but which in its essence will not deal with the problem at all. That is, I think, the point we ought to consider in this committee, and it is a very important consideration.

I do not want to embarrass the minister with too many questions, but he is well acquainted with this matter and will follow me, and then I shall not have to bother him so much later on. Take the question of demurrage. If the Board of Grain Commissioners is to have power to fix rates they certainly will have to take into consideration the question of demurrage. Now I submit this, that no shipping company can possibly gauge or anticipate what would be an exactly fair rate unless it knows what the demurrage is going to be. If they take a chance on demurrage and the demurrage seems to be threatening seriously, the rates are going to go up. There is no question about that. It is the only protection the shipping company has. So if a shipping company anticipating a demurrage increases its rate for its own protection, which it would have a right to do, the Grain Board might step in and say: Your rates are too high, and it would reduce the rates and the shipping company would lose unfairly because of demurrage over which it has no control at all. These, I think, are very important considerations.

While I have the most profound sympathy with the desire to lower the cost of transportation I am very, very doubtful if you are going to do it by this bill at all. In fact, I really think that the net result of this bill will be to maintain generally speaking a higher rate. As it is to-day there have been and very frequently are periods when rates are abnormally low. Then occasionally like last year there comes a period when the rate is abnormally and perhaps unfairly high, but these periods of excessively high rates are comparatively rare, so that in the main I think in the past the lower rates have fairly well compensated for the higher. But if you give power to a commission such as the Grain Board to fix rates I am firmly convinced of this from my study of the question, and this same problem was threshed out in the House on several occasions in years gone by, that the average cost for transporting grain over the Great Lakes year in and year out will be higher than if there were no fixation of rates. What I do think is this, that the minister or the government could adequately and safely provide against these abnormal, excessive rates in occasional periods by a vigorous yet careful application of the suspension of the coasting laws. Let it be clearly understood and known that that may happen; let that weapon be ready at hand and be looked upon as a remedy.

The minister perhaps has already given consideration to all these points. I would like to ask him to give to the committee the fullest possible information and answer to these suggestions because to me they are very important. I am very, very much afraid that the net result of this legislation in its working out will be to make the average rate year in and year out higher than it has been in the past.

Mr. ROBB: I am not finding much fault with the observations of my hon. friend. I thought I had made it clear that in my judgment the power of fixing a maximum rate would have to be exercised with great discretion and only after very careful consideration. If the resolution itself does not say so, the bill provides that the Grain Commissioners have that power, but I have tried to make it clear that the power should only be exercised after the most careful consideration because I realize, as my hon. friend has said, that there is a possibility of driving shipping away from our ports. If my hon. friend will look at the very next item on the order paper he will observe that my colleague the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) is providing for an amendment to the Shipping Act which will give us the very power he is now advocating, so that we shall then have two levers. We shall have the right to suspend the coasting laws, and we shall have this machinery here to give the fullest publicity to rates. We believe that these two will go a long way towards giving the producer a fair deal.

Mr. MILLAR: May I point out in reply to what my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) has said that at the present time the American government are exercising a similar power of fixing a maximum rate. It does not apply to bulk freight, I believe, but to other freight.

There is also this point: During the last shipping season the rates between Canadian ports were higher than the rates from Canadian ports to American ports. Also the rates charged by Canadian boats from one Canadian point to another Canadian point were higher than those charged between American points. While some are under the impression that this power ought to be placed in the hands of the Railway Commission it seems to me that it would work much better if it were placed in the hands of the Board of Grain Commissioners, and for this reason: The Board of Grain Commissioners are more closely in touch with the producers, and the producers are practically the only losers when rates go astray as they did last session. Whenever the rates go astray the producers are practically the only losers.

Mr. ROBB: I would not admit that they were the only losers last year.

Mr. MILLAR: Let me follow that up. The price of the grain that we sell, even though it may be sold right at the elevator, is based on the price of the same grain at Liverpool or London less all the costs of transportation, insurance, and so forth. If you will read carefully the report of the Grain Commission which has just been handed in you will find this statement: That so far as insurance is concerned the shippers do not care very much what insurance they pay so long as they can get as good a rate as their competitors. In a report that was handed in by the commission that investigated the grain trade in, I think, 1914—I refer to the commission appointed by the Saskatchewan government—you will also find this statement:

> That the shippers care very little what lake rates they pay provided they can get as good rates as their competitors.

Now, that is the point. Some people suppose that the shippers are very anxious to fight for low rates, but that is not the case. They care very little what the rates are so long as their competitors get no better rates than they enjoy. The Board of Grain Commissioners at the present time is composed of three men. Two of the number grew up with farming in the West, grew up with the various organizations that were established there, and I think members of this House will recognize that those who have once lived on the farm and know the difficulties that have to be overcome are likely to have a greater sympathy and understanding of the problem, and the obstacles that need to be surmounted, than those who have not had that experience. I wish to connect with this the statement I made a moment ago, that it is the producer that should be considered because practically all the losses sustained are encountered by him. The minister has just said he will not admit that is the case. I suppose he means that the shippers sometimes sustained losses last year. To a small extent that may be the case but let me point this out: I could not refer exactly to the page of the report of the commission, or to the specific statement in any investigations that have taken place, but I think it has been shown that the shippers follow this practice: If they do not know exactly what the rate is going to be and if the rate ranges from six to nine cents they will buy the grain on the basis of nine cents and if they get a lower rate than that estimated they do not suffer any loss.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. MILLAR: No, not carried yet by any means. This is too important a matter to be passed without discussion. Later perhaps, I may enter more fully into this question, show the nature of the monopoly which exists, and present a great deal more information, but as we progress now I shall only deal with one point at a time. It would seem to me to be a more rational proposition to place the control of rates under the Board of Railway Commissioners. Such a course as that would be likely to give better satisfaction and work out more successfully. Had the proposition to place the matter under the Board of Grain Commissioners been made a year and a half or three years ago before the change in the personnel of the commission took place, it would not have been received with the same approval as at present. Let me go back a great many years. I can remember the time when Mr. Castle was the warehouse commissioner and Mr. Snow, who is now on the Board of Grain Commissioners, acted as his deputy. Whenever complaints in writing were sent in by any producer, or grain handler for that matter, he was the gentleman sent at the government's expense to look into the matter and adjust the claims. There came a time after that when a commission was appointed and that commission might as well have been in Jerusalem; I think the western public had practically no confidence in it. That is a strong statement to make but if hon. members had suffered as long as the western farmer has suffered by reason of neglect they perhaps would be ready to make statements just as strong. The change now accomplished has been very much for the better. I have heard the present chairman of the board spoken of very highly. I know the other two gentlemen and I have the greatest confidence in their integrity and ability. I therefore am inclined to look with favour on the placing of this matter under the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to ask the minister what legal position he thinks the government were in last year with regard to the suspension of the coasting law? I understood him to say that the suspension under the former government was made under the War Measures Act. But there was a suspension of the coasting laws in 1913, and I understand that this government could have exercised last fall the same power that was exercised by the former government in 1913.

Mr. ROBB: The suspension of the coasting laws is not dealt with in this resolution. It will come up later in a resolution to be brought forward by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. FORKE: I wish to make a few remarks at this particular time but not at any great length; we will have an opportunity of further discussion when the bill to be founded on this resolution is taken up in committee. At the risk of being tedious I must say a few words by way of introduction about the condition of the western farmer and the interest he feels in the provision of this resolution. I know that sometimes the producers of the West are very much sympathized with in this House. I should like to say, however, that, perhaps, the epic of the western prairie provinces has never yet been written. The story of the struggles, the courage, the patience, and the industry of those determined and courageous people who developed the prairies has never yet been adequately recognized. I know very well the problem to be solved is looked upon with a great deal of sympathy but sometimes, unfortunately, misstatements and misinformation distort peoples' vision so that they do not get a proper perspective.

As has already been stated, the great problem we have to deal with in the central prairie provinces is that of transportation. The agricultural potentialities of that part of Canada are great indeed but unfortunately those rich alluvial soils are located in the very centre of the Dominion and for all time to come transportation will be one of the greatest problems we shall have to solve in developing that country and furthering the prosperity of the people who live there. Last year we waged a strong fight in connection with freight rates and hon. members will not think that I am boasting if I say that we went home thoroughly satisfied with the struggle we had maintained and the conclusion come to in regard to railway rates from the West. But after producing a large crop, after having secured reduction of railway rates, what was the consternation of the people in the West when they learned that all the advantage that had been gained in that freight rate reduction was to be absorbed by an increase in lake freights.

I have listened to the remarks made by the minister (Mr. Robb) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). Those remarks were very fair I admit and each gentleman perhaps, presented the case from his own standpoint. But we are always met with the same story when we attempt to remedy an abuse—we must be very careful for fear we shall hamper business in any way. Now, I realize the situation just as well as any hon. member of this House but I must confess I think the members of the lake shipping combine, if you will let me use the term, are quite capable of taking care of themselves. They will be able to do so no matter what kind of legislation you pass here. I have heard the same story before, it is not new to me. "That if you hamper trade we will move over to the United States and leave you in the lurch altogether." I do not think there is any danger of that. These people will stay just as long as there is any business for them to do, and they will get their share of that business and get their profits—there is no doubt about it.

Now, what happened? I am not going to review the whole situation because there will be other opportunities of doing that, but we know that at the beginning of the season the rates had been fixed at three cents per bushel from Bay ports to Buffalo. Then came this enormous crop, and we had that famous meeting that took place in Toronto in May 1922, when half a dozen shipping companies got together and formed what you may call a combine, because there is no other name that would be appropriate for it, and they agreed to fix the rate at 7 or 8 cents immediately after. I do not think there was any congestion at Buffalo at the time these rates were increased to that amount. The rates went even higher than that. I will mention another fact in connection with the brokerage and shipping agents. As has been stated already, the brokers had claimed the right of getting the insurance when they gave space, and I think we find it in the evidence in this report,—at least the evidence was submitted, or published in the papers, during the time that commission was taking evidence—that when a shipper would go to a broker in the city of Winnipeg and ask for space, even although he knew the rate had been fixed at 3 cents, he was frequently told the rate was 7 cents, and when the question of insurance was brought up he made the remark that he was able to insure himself, and he was told, "If you do not place the insurance with me you cannot have space." We know that in the season of 1922 the brokerage agents got about $448,000 of commissions for selling insurance. As high as $2,000 commission was paid on insuring some cargoes of grain.

Mr. DUFF: Did the Winnipeg brokers charge a greater premium for this insurance than it could be got for outside?

Mr. FORKE: Just 100 per cent more than the rate which could have been obtained from private operators or companies furnishing insurance themselves. It was double in many cases. There is another peculiar situation in regard to this matter. When the question of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine came up—and I think the hon. member for Lunenburg will be wide awake now—

Mr. DUFF: I am awake all right.

Mr. FORKE: When the Canadian Government Merchant Marine came up for discussion, we were told the government had no vessels fit to carry grain. I find in the evidence submitted before the commission that at the very time the trouble was taking place on the lakes the government had 10 or 11 boats fit for carrying grain, and they had leased two grain carrying boats to one of the shipping companies in that combine. I do not know why these vessels were tied up, or not in commission, and why they were not carrying grain or doing something to break up that combination on the lakes at that particular time. Perhaps the minister will be able to give us some information on that point. I think perhaps there is an idea sometimes of driving the trade to Buffalo instead of to the Bay ports or other Canadian ports. We hear a great deal about mixing grain, and it pays the shipper sometimes to mix grain, and perhaps it is a disadvantage that our grain should be shipped by Buffalo any more than we can possibly help. I believe in letting the grain go to the ocean by the cheapest route no matter where that route is. That is the only method and system that will stand the test of time. We were told that those government vessels were unfit for carrying grain. I was rather chagrined the other day, on reading the report of the Senate proceedings, to notice that Senator Bennett had made some nice statements about my sincerity and honesty, but he was rather sorry for my ignorance in regard to this matter, because I had innocently asked if there were no Canadian boats able to carry grain. He immediately stated that there were five or six Canadian ships suited for carrying grain on the Great Lakes. I do not know the facts, but these are the statements made, and I have no doubt the speaker had some reason for making them.

Mr. ROBB: I think there were six government boats in commission last fall on the upper lakes.

Mr. FORKE: The phrase used was that they were "tied up" on the lakes.

Mr. ROBB: The hon. member is quite right. They were tied up until the government came in and insisted—notwithstanding the statement that we should not interfere in their management of these roads—that these ships should be put into commission, and that was done.

Mr. FORKE: At what rate?

Mr. ROBB: The government has nothing to do with the operation of the roads. The government keeps its hands off that. That is done by the management of the railway.

Mr. FORKE: I have an idea that this Canadian Government Merchant Marine entered the combine and charged the same rates as the other boats were charging. I know there is that old school of politicians known as the Manchester School, that never believed in interference in trade but wished to remove all restrictions and allow each individual to operate for himself; claiming that everything would come right by competition. But a great deal of water has passed under the bridge since that time, and a great many things taken place that those economists knew nothing about. Combinations in restraint of trade and gigantic combines were not known in those days, and, if hon. members will allow a vulgar phrase, sometimes you have to fight the devil with his own weapons, and when we take into consideration combinations and restrictions to prevent the free interchange of trade, it becomes absolutely necessary that there should be some law guiding and controlling freights and other methods of doing business with these combinations.

I would like to say a few words in regard to who pays the bill. I know that it gets tiresome in this House to be continually falling back on the farmer, but really, Mr. Chairman, I have forgotten all my economics if I cannot see that the cost always falls back on the producer—I do not care what line of business it is. I have had a good deal to do with business in the way of paying taxes, and I find among the men and merchants doing business on the prairies there is a great deal of grumbling about taxation. How is taxation levied? Simply on the cost of doing business, and it has to come back to the production of the soil, and the man on the farm is paying the taxes. The man on the farm in western Canada pays the bill, I do not care what restrictions you put on.

It may happen that in the raising of freight rates, or in some other way, the shipper loses money on one ship load, but, take it on the whole, the cost of doing business and the increased cost of transportation must fall back on the producer.

Last year we heard a great deal about the enormous crop produced in western Canada. We heard about 400,000,000 bushels of wheat being produced there. We were told about the great stream of wealth that flowed from the western prairie down to eastern Canada and helped to revive trade and set things moving all over the country. Is it not a tragedy, and is it not something to be sorry for when we realize that the people who raised that great amount of wealth have not reaped the benefit, and are worse off to-day than perhaps a year ago? Is it not strange that there should be perhaps a little work-up over any combination that will put a charge on every bushel of wheat the farmers produce? Already we are beginning to hear that next year we are going to produce 500,000,000 bushels of wheat; and what is happening? We find the price is dropping rapidly, on the theory that there is going to be a large production next season. No one can tell what the crops will be on the prairie. Those who know anything about western conditions will know that in two weeks' time the crops will either be made or broken, according to climatic conditions. The prospects are good to-day, but no one can tell what they will be in the month of August.

[Mr. Forke.]

I will not take up any more time at the present. We have the recommendations made by the commission which sat and took evidence in this matter. For my part, I would be inclined to accept those recommendations as they have been made by the commission. I have no fear that they will not work out to the benefit and advantage of everyone concerned. I have no fear of any commission ever fixing maximum rates at a figure that will damage lake shipping to any great extent. Producers even are reasonable, and I think they will be willing to pay a fair rate for getting their grain shipped across the Great Lakes. I shall have an opportunity of speaking to this question again. I have made only a few remarks, and I hope the committee will give the matter very serious consideration, because it affects, not only western Canada, but the prosperity of the Dominion.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I cannot profess that I know very much concerning the facts at issue in this particular matter which is before the committee, but I am somewhat perplexed as to what should be my duty upon this measure. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Forke) has minimized my difficulties in the matter, because he has hardly made reference to the legislation which is before the committee; that is, he fails to demonstrate whether or not it would be effective and, in the ultimate end, a measure in the interest of the people of Canada and in the interest of the particular class in which he is concerned.

Mr. FORKE: I failed to say that, perhaps, the publicity which will be given to the whole affair will be the best cure for the conditions complained of.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not mean to suggest that my hon. friend has yet exhausted all his arguments. I merely mean to say that, up to the point reached in his remarks, he did not touch upon those features of this proposed legislation which, to me at least, are objectionable, unless I have some explanation to the contrary. For those whose products must find their outlet to the ocean, in this particular case through the Great Lakes, I have every sympathy, and I presume every hon. gentleman in this House has. The question, however, is: Will this legislation bring about any desired end? Is it wise legislation? Ultimately, will it be in the interest of the producer, the shipper or the country generally?

Mr. HOEY: It is better than no legislation at all.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I doubt that very much. Ineffective legislation is frequently worse than no legislation, and I may refer to that before I take my seat. As I said before, I hardly know the facts that were revealed before the commission, but I understand that the charge is that unconscionably high rates were exacted by owners of shipping on the Great Lakes. If that is true, it was wrong, and the question before the committee is: How are we going to remedy that wrong? We ought to approach the question in that spirit, and it should not be said by hon. gentlemen who are, perhaps, particularly interested because many of their constituents are shippers, that because one is disposed to doubt the efficacy of the legislation, therefore, he is opposed to the interest of those people. I resent that form of argument, and it should not be tolerated in legislative halls. I hope it will not be too frequently made.

Mr. FORKE: I do not think I was guilty of that.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No, but somebody else said that. The newspapers have discussed this matter; but again I say that my reading would be quite casual, and I would not like to predicate an argument upon it. I suppose a great deal of evidence was taken, and I presume it will be printed before we proceed much further with the bill. A few days ago we were discussing the Bank Act, and the evidence was printed daily. The Bank Act was a fairly simple subject. It might be discussed in a young ladies' seminary or a kindergarten school with great ease and be made plain to everybody. I do not mean to say that banking itself or finance generally is an easy subject; but when you are dealing with a concrete question such as the Bank Act, it is quite easy.

Mr. SALES: Has the hon. member seen to-night's paper with the report of the Union Bank in it?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Yes. I do not know what my hon. friend wants to draw from that.

Mr. SALES: Is it a very simple matter?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not think it is anything that will reflect upon the actions of the majority of the committee. It might cause some misgivings on the part of some other hon. gentlemen, including, perhaps, my hon. friend. The point I want to make is this: Last night I heard for, I suppose, the hundredth time, that it was unfair and unjust to proceed to the consideration of a measure which had been before a committee for two months, until the people had had an opportunity of reading and studying the evidence. The evidence in that case had been printed daily, and it was before the country and parliament. I want to suggest to the minister that he is going to meet with tremendous opposition from our hon. friends directly opposite, because I am sure they will not consent to a favourable consideration of the bill until the evidence is printed, so that they may know what they are doing.

Mr. HOEY: How long is it since the report of the commission was tabled?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is the report of a commission, a report made by three men who are not infallible.

Mr. HOEY: Were the members of the Banking committee infallible?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I did not allege that at all. I merely mean to say—and I am sure everybody opposite to me will agree and they must say that later this evening—that it would be unfair and unjust to proceed further in this matter until the evidence is printed, so that we may know what we are doing and whatever course we shall take—

Mr. HOEY: They will have stolen another crop if we wait that length of time.

Mr. GARDINER: I might suggest that we put them in gaol first, and then wait for the evidence.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is the hon. member aware that the fact of a combination between the shipping companies was proved and is within the knowledge of the House now?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not quite understand my hon. friend's question.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Perhaps the hon. member does not wish to answer.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I thought it was a good opportunity to remind my hon. friends right opposite me that this might be a good chance to be consistent upon such an important question.

Mr. SHAW: Do I understand that my hon. friend now adopts the arguments that were propounded from this side of the House yesterday?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No. I do not go even so far as to say that I would personally demand the printing of the evidence. I am simply advising the minister that he must expect most powerful opposition from hon. gentlemen opposite to this bill being proceeded with further until the evidence is printed, so that they may know what they are doing.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member for Halifax thinks misery likes company. He would like to see the minister in the same box.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The subject involved in this resolution has been before this House on many occasions in the past. I was always opposed to it and I think the majority of members of parliament were usually opposed to it. I shall still be opposed to the principle involved in this resolution, unless I hear some stronger reasons to the contrary from some hon. gentlemen who may yet speak. I refer to the motions that were made annually by Mr. Armstrong, one of the members from Ontario, motions which practically covered the same ground as this resolution purports to cover. In so far as the bill proposes taking powers to suspend the coasting laws, I do not object to it. Perhaps that is a fair power for the Governor in Council to have for many reasons, and in view of the report of the commission, I do not complain that that power is proposed to be taken by the minister. If there was a combine, and if there was exacted excessively high, unconscionable rates, it is our duty, by amending the general law, the Combines Act, to meet that case. That surely is a fair proposition; and if it is possible to meet that particular situation, then I say it should be met by an amendment to the general law. I object to paternal legislation and to all efforts to meet by means of specific enactments every little grievance.

I should not like my hon. friend to go the length of adopting the laissez faire policy of the Manchester School of economists. I remember that when I first learned that Bright and Cobden had opposed some labour legislation which seemed obviously defensible I was astounded. I do admit that, as we progress, special legislation must be introduced to meet special conditions of the day; but I do not think that this is a case in which we should adopt the legislation proposed in the resolution. The resolution proposes to control prices. Now freight is a commodity like anything else, and I do not know of any case where prices have been successfully controlled. It is possible that during the war many countries successfully exercised some control over prices in different directions.

Mr. KNOX: Does the hon. gentleman not think that there is some comparison between this question and the Railway Commission?

[Mr. A. K. Maclean.]

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): No; I shall come to that later. I was observing that during the war, when imports and exports were controlled, a control of prices was possible and perhaps successful, although since then economists who have studied the question have declared that price control was unsuccessful and disastrous. I was reading only yesterday a book by an eminent European economist who, discussing this very matter, contends that during the war high prices were due not to the exactions of middlemen, or of trusts, or of any combinations of that character, but to great inflation of credit, which produced competition for the world's output. I think the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Good) and one of the hon. members for Calgary would agree with that view; the rise of prices was due to that cause rather than to any great profits exacted by producers and sellers. I admit, of course, that in many cases there was profiteering of a very objectionable nature.

Mr. MILLAR: If the hon. member has read the report carefully he will find that the commissioners state that the rates on all commodities on the lakes except grain are controlled in one way or another. By a contractual arrangement the rates on ore, which is one of the largest cargoes carried, and on coal as well, are controlled. The commissioners declare that everything is controlled except grain.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not contending that there was not a combination and that, perhaps, some remedial legislation is not necessary. I am simply arguing that the proposal contained in the resolution does not provide the proper procedure. Some hon. gentlemen asked me a few moments ago whether, if it was fair to control railway rates, it was not equally fair to control shipping rates. I say there is no analogy whatever between the two cases. The railways constitute a monopoly in this country, as in all countries. The construction of railways must of necessity be limited, so that in all respects railways are a monopoly that should be controlled. No person or corporation is permitted to build railways in this country in competition with existing lines without statutory authority because it is not deemed prudent to allow people to build such railways everywhere they please; it is not considered in the national interests. On the contrary, it is considered wise from the national point of view to select the corporations who shall be allowed to build and operate railways. So that with deliberation the state constitutes a monopoly in this regard. In shipping, the analogous case would consist in confining steamship operations on the Great Lakes to one or two or three lines and then controlling rates. That would be analogous to the railway situation, and the control of rates in that case might be justifiable. Still no one would support that view. Again I doubt whether this parliament has the jurisdiction to enact the legislation proposed in the resolution. I do not believe there is one single proposal in the resolution that ultimately will be held to be within the legislative powers of this parliament. More than that, I doubt very much the wisdom—

Mr. CARROLL: Would the hon. gentleman specify his reasons for doubting parliament's jurisdiction?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): As I say, I doubt very much the wisdom, if there is any doubt about the jurisdiction, of enacting this legislation. We do not want to go through the same experience we had in connection with the Board of Commerce. I am not going to give my reasons for my doubts as to the competency of this parliament to pass this legislation. The opinion of the law officers of the Crown should be made known to parliament and whatever it is it will be acceptable to me.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) approved of it

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I really do not know that he has.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Well, he has through his government.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): For that matter legislation is frequently presented to parliament by governments without any special attention having been given to the question of jurisdiction or constitutionality

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Then he is not competent to be Minister of Justice.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Whenever the question is raised I think it will be the duty of the Department of Justice to give it consideration and advise parliament in the premises. Now, if it is fair to introduce this legislation in respect of shipping on the Great Lakes, someone will come along and say that the same thing should be done on the Pacific coast or on the Atlantic. We have free trade in shipping.

Mr. GOOD: No, we have not.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Well, subject to the alleged combination; it is qualified of course, to that extent. But there is nothing to prohibit anybody going into the lake freight business.

Mr. FORKE: When you recollect that there are six strong companies doing business on the lakes, is it possible for a single competitor to do business against that combination?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Such competition might be difficult. But what would happen if this legislation had the effect of decreasing that number? I do not say that this will happen, but I simply put the question to my hon. friend. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite, who stand as exponents of legislation which permits an equal opportunity to all; and if those hon. gentlemen take the same point of view as they take in connection with analogous matters, then I am sure they will be opposed to this legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the first place, I doubt the power of parliament to legislate. In the second place, if this measure is put on the statute book I say it will be ineffective. It is an attempt to control prices, and this is always ineffectual. It is unsound, and I do not believe that hon. gentlemen who have spoken in support of the resolution believe in the control of prices. It never gets you anywhere; it hurts everybody and accomplishes no good results.

Mr. KNOX: Does the hon. member believe in this scale of rates last season running from three to eleven cents?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am not discussing rates at all. Let me repeat, if the rates charged were so excessive as to become what we might term unconscionable, and we think that something should be done to prevent a recurrence, let us amend the Anti-Combines Act or pass general legislation which will be applicable to the whole country.

Mr. HOEY: Will the minister tell us if the government have consulted the law officers of the Crown with regard to their power under the Criminal Code to prosecute the men who constituted this combine? I understood that during the investigation two or three of these—I hesitate to call them what their conduct merits; I certainly would not call them Canadians—were down at Palm Beach. But it is altogether likely that they have since returned to Canada. Numerous representations have been made to me on the subject and I am convinced that western Canada in its present mood is going to demand the prosecution of these men. Before I leave the Chamber to-night I should like to know if the government have consulted the law officers of the Crown with regard to their power to proceed under the Criminal Code. If not, what justification has the minister to give to the House?

Mr. ROBB: Mr. Chairman, I imagine my hon. friend has in mind a prosecution under the Criminal Code. I am not a legal man, but I would advise my hon. friend that if any one in western Canada desires to prosecute the persons referred to, the Criminal Code is open to him as to anyone else. In reply to my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) I gather he is in favour of the legislation proposed in the next resolution for the suspension of the coasting laws, but that he objects to the government gathering the very information necessary before we can intelligently decide whether or not we should suspend those laws.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I do not object to the proposal to suspend the coasting laws, because there seems to be a general demand for such suspension and many people think it might prevent a repetition of what occurred last year. I do not believe in it as a matter of principle, but I conceive it may be necessary at the present time.

Mr. ROBB: But the government before deciding whether suspension is necessary or not must have certain information. This bill will empower the Board of Grain Commissioners to gather such information from time to time. This should satisfy my hon. friend that part of the legislation at least is necessary. My hon. friend doubts the legality of this proposed legislation. I am bound to admit that it may be challenged before the courts and declared illegal. The Grain Act was taken into the courts, but the gentlemen who did so are sorry to-day because they have cast some doubt upon that legislation. It is always possible to destroy the usefulness of measures which are enacted for the good of the people generally, for there are always clever lawyers ready to plead their clients' case. I am not prepared to say whether some one might not successfully contest the validity of this bill after its enactment, but it has been prepared by the law officers of the Crown, and the government believe in its legality.

Mr. FORKE: Would the minister state upon what advice the Governor in Council would be prepared to act in suspending the coasting laws?

Mr. ROBB: That would be determined later after the necessary information was secured. Last year the government received telephone messages urging the suspension of the coasting laws. We replied that we must have something in writing, and eventually we received telegrams. But other gentlemen telegraphed the government that it was not necessary to suspend the coasting laws. This shows the necessity of some machinery for gathering the information we require before we can act intelligently, and what better machinery can we have for this purpose than the Board of Grain Commissioners who understand the necessities of the grain trade?

Mr. FORKE: That is all right.

Mr. SALES: I have followed with interest the ingenious arguments of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean)—

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): They were not ingenious at all.

Mr. SALES:—in his attempt to convince us that we should vote against this bill. As usual, he tendered us his sympathy. We have had a good deal of sympathy already and will have a lot of it to take back to our people in the West. Of course, it is a very cheap commodity. But I can assure him that he will not find any objection to this bill from this quarter of the House unless I am very much mistaken. His whole argument is against the fixing of the lake rates. I would reply, Mr. Chairman, that it all depends on who does the fixing. These rates have been fixed a long, long time for us—but not by us. Yesterday the fixing of the bank interest rate was objected to. It has been fixed a good long time. I want to know, Mr. Chairman, why the lake rates should not be controlled. Here we have a magnificent waterway, we have spent millions of dollars on it and we are still spending many more millions. And the people who settled in the West have always hoped that this waterway would be used to convey their grain at very cheap rates. We have been told time and again—by our friends on the right especially, who are so strong in advocating the St. Lawrence route—that the opening of this route will mean a saving of at least five cents a bushel to the farmer on his grain. I have never believed it because experience has shown that the more money we spend on these waterways the higher the rates go. I wonder how the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) would explain this situation—that Canadian boats carry grain from American ports at rates 50 per cent cheaper than from Canadian ports. We find many instances of this discrimination in the evidence taken before the special commission. Here are a few of them: Fort William to Port Colborne, 3¾ cents; Duluth to Port Colborne, 2¼ cents. These rates were in effect the same day for practically the same distance—perhaps a little farther from Duluth. Fort William to Port McNicoll, 3 cents; Chicago to Depot Harbour, 2 cents. And so on all the way down the line. The finding of the commission is that the rates are practically 50 per cent higher from Canadian ports than from American. How would my hon. friend justify that? Does he wonder that we think some sort of control is necessary? My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) argued that the producer pays the bill. He certainly does. When the exporter finds it is costing him so much to ship his grain, he makes his bid on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange in accordance with that cost, and the price for the day is communicated to the elevators in the country, thus affecting the farmers' price.

With regard to the situation last fall I know that representations were made to the minister to put into effect the suspension of the coasting laws. They were asking a price for May even during the winter which affected every bushel of wheat marketed in the West during all the winter months. But no action was taken by the government until late last fall when boats were used for winter storage. As to the legality, I would point out that such action was taken years ago by the then existing Conservative government by order in council, and its action was never challenged at all.

I was very greatly disappointed with the answer given by the minister that no action would be taken against these men who had been found guilty of fleecing the western producer of millions of dollars. I was very greatly disappointed with his reply that it is open to anybody in the West to prosecute these men. To my mind that is not a satisfactory situation at all, and if this government has the interests of the producer at heart they should if at all possible take action against these men. There is sufficient evidence I think to prove that a combine in restraint of trade existed not only in regard to rates but also in regard to insurance.

Mr. ROBB: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend's argument, but may I remind him that the administration of the criminal law is left entirely to the provinces.

Mr. SALES: Then will the minister explain to the committee how he expects to get action under the new anti-Combines Act?

Mr. DUFF: The provinces will have to prosecute.

Mr. SALES: I did not understand it that way. I thought when we passed this legislation it had teeth in it and that this government would be able to take action.

An hon. MEMBER: Sold again.

Mr. SALES: Sold again as my hon. friend says, I believe is correct.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Just in order to make that point clear, under the British North America Act the administration of the criminal law and its enforcement rests with the Attorney General of any province where the offence is committed, and if there was a combine in regard to rates formed in Winnipeg last year constituting an offence under the Criminal Code, the Attorney General of Manitoba would be the person who should prosecute. The anti-Combines Act passed this session provides for investigation and lays down how all proceedings may be taken under it, and so far as any of its provisions relate to this government they will be carried out.

Mr. FORKE: This combination was formed in Toronto, Chicago and Winnipeg.

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): That just illustrates the difficulty, which I am sure my hon friend will appreciate, of this government undertaking to legislate in regard to matters that affect not only Canada but the United States.

Mr. FORKE: But the offence was committed in Canada.

Mr. SALES: May I ask for information how you would deal with a combine that was shipping grain from Fort William to Montreal, operating in two provinces, Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): Wherever the combine is formed, if it is a criminal offence the law would be enforced by the Attorney General of the province.

Mr. SALES: Supposing as they did in this case, that they move from Toronto to New York, and that we found in conference not only representatives of the shipping companies but representatives of the government owned lines. It was brought out in evidence that the representatives of the government line attended those meetings with Mr. Wolvin, Mr. Enderby of the Canada Steamship Lines, and Mr. Matthews of the Matthews Line. Will that combine be considered to have been formed in New York and therefore be regarded as outside the jurisdiction of this country?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend is confusing the question of the administration of the Criminal Code with the carrying into effect of the provisions of the anti-Combines Act. The anti-Combines Act that passed this House would not have any effect as regards a combine formed last summer unless it is in existence now. No act is retroactive unless it is specially declared to be so. My hon. friend is familiar with the provisions of the anti-Combines Act, and so far as its provisions relate to this government they will be carried out, but the administration of the Criminal Code rests with the province where the offence is committed.

Mr. SALES: I was simply taking my hon. friend's statement that the party who should prosecute would be the Attorney General of the province where the offence was committed, and I went on to say that this combine was formed in New York, and wanted to know whether the Criminal Code could be applied in that case, or would it be considered as being outside the jurisdiction of this country?

Mr. MACDONALD (Pictou): My hon. friend had better ask the hon. member for Calgary West, who I understand supplies the law for that side of the House on legal questions.

Mr. SALES: Why should I be given an answer like that when the Minister of Justice is sitting in his seat? If the disposition of the government is to pass us by with answers such as was given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the one that is now given by the Acting Minister of National Defence, what is the use of our trying to get information? If the Minister of Justice would care to give the information I should be very pleased to receive it.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: If the hon. member will be good enough to put his question I will try and answer it. What is the question please?

Mr. SALES: The question is this: Three of these shipping men who practically control the whole shipping on the Great Lakes so far as Canada is concerned meet in New York with representatives of our government-owned lines and make a combine to fix rates. Now would action against that combine be considered to be outside the jurisdiction of this country?

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I would prefer to have a little time to consider the question, but answering offhand I would be inclined to say that this would not constitute a combine on which prosecution could be instituted in this country.

Mr. SALES: I do not intend to take up any more time at this stage. Anything I have to say on the insurance and brokerage clauses I will say when they come up.

Mr. CARROLL: This question of shipping on the Great Lakes is rather an old one. For twenty years or more the shipping interests of the United States have been endeavouring to gain a foothold in what we might call local Canadian shipping. I have been told that some ten or twelve years ago the government, which at that time owned the elevators at Montreal, offered to certain men who were prepared to put up a certain amount of capital for shipping on the Great Lakes the use of the elevators at Montreal without cost providing that they would ship through these elevators five million bushels of wheat. While we may talk about combines, the fact is that certain men in this country made a proposition that they would put their money into a shipping enterprise which would carry wheat and other commodities from the head of the lakes to Montreal. In those days it was a marvellous thing to think that at any time in the future 5,000,000 bushels of wheat might be shipped to the grain elevators of Montreal. So huge an enterprise did it appear that the gentlemen who had the proposition in hand refused to give any undertaking in the matter. But what do we find to-day? Instead of 5,000,000 bushels of wheat, over 150,000,000 bushels last year went through the elevators of Montreal I believe, that a development of such a character is in the interest of Canadian shipping and of Canadian business. My hon. friend from Saltcoats (Mr. Sales), I think it was, said that we had little sympathy with certain propositions which he had to make. Well, personally, as a general rule I am more or less in sympathy with propositions intended to benefit Canadian industry and the Canadian people; but I do not believe we should consider a proposition which will place Canadian shipping on the Great Lakes in the hands of American companies, as will be the case if this bill becomes law. May I say that I have been reading American papers for some days past, ever since the announcement of this proposed legislation was made, and it is a marvellous thing to consider that within twenty-four hours from the time it became known an American company was formed at Duluth for the purpose of interfering—shall I say?—with Canadian and American trade—

Mr. McMURRAY: Competing would be better.

Mr CARROLL: No I say interfering; it is not a case of competing. I will answer my hon. friend by saying this: If our government had made certain propositions whereby our Canadian coasting vessels on the Great Lakes would be given the same rights in the United States as this bill proposes to give American shipping in Canada, I would say it was a fair proposition.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We have got that provision in our law.

Mr. CARROLL: I should like to see it.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is to be found in section 958 of the Shipping Act which provides that:

> The Governor in Council may, from time to time, declare that the foregoing provisions of this part shall not apply to the ships or vessels of any foreign country in which British ships are admitted to the coasting trade of such country, and to carry goods and passengers from one port or place to another in such country.

So we already have this provision in our law.

Mr. CARROLL: Has the minister had any undertaking on behalf of the American government that the thing will be made effective? Certainly not, but we are giving away certain rights that we have on the Great Lakes which I think we should hold dear and sacred. While I do not wish to oppose a government measure I consider the time has come when we as Canadians should uphold our rights and privileges, and treat as they deserve any company or any combine who may propose to take away from us those trading rights which American companies will enjoy if this bill goes into effect.

My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) made some observations as to the constitutionality of this question. Well, I think he is right. However, I am not going into that question at all. I say we have developed a trade on the Great Lakes which we are foolish to abandon to competitors in the United States.

Mr. BANCROFT: Whom does my hon. friend mean by "we?"

Mr. CARROLL: I mean we Canadians. Perhaps my hon. friend does not belong to that class; I am afraid he does not. I mean that we Canadians have developed a trade on the Great Lakes which we should preserve to the utmost of our ability. My hon. friend asks "Who are we?" Propositions were made years ago, as I have already said, to various shipping interests to g\ into this business and attempt to draw the \rain trade from Fort William and the various lake ports to Montreal. They have done that successfully but I do say this: If they have combined to charge unjustifiable freight rates on the upper lakes they should be brought to task; but it is unfair, and the argument cannot be justified, to maintain that we should throw open our ports to American interests, and permit them to divert our grain trade from Montreal or Quebec to United States ports. I am that kind of an American—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARROLL: Or I should say rather that kind of Canadian.

Mr. MILLAR: Is my hon. friend aware that the amount of grain going through American ports has increased steadily during the last three or four years, and that at the present time the Canadian boats are giving the preference to Buffalo—that is carrying grain much cheaper to Buffalo than to Canadian ports?

Mr. CARROLL: I am not aware of that.

Mr. MILLAR: It is a fact all the same.

Mr. CARROLL: I am aware of this fact—that twelve years ago we were shipping 5,000,000 bushels a week to the ports of Montreal and Quebec and to-day we are shipping 150,000,000 bushels to those same ports.

Mr. MILLAR: I rather think you must be wrong in your dates.

Mr. CARROLL: Then let my hon. friend correct me.

Mr. MILLAR: The port of Montreal was under the Harbour Commission more than twelve years ago.

Mr. CARROLL: Perhaps I should say thirteen years ago. I obtained authoritative figures from the Department of Trade and Commerce and Marine and Fisheries.

There is another aspect of this question I would like to discuss very briefly. A commission investigated the freight rates on the Great Lakes, and I have no hesitation in saying that the three gentlemen that composed it were three very excellent men. But I would suggest to you, Sir, that if, when this government appointed a commission to investigate the operations of the Pension Act, they had selected as commissioners a farmer, a blacksmith or a lawyer there would have been a great outcry against the proceeding.

And why? Because those men would not know anything about the question of pensions.

An hon. MEMBER: What about a lawyer?

Mr. CARROLL: A lawyer would not know very much about the pension question unless he was directly connected with the Pension Board or acted in some similar capacity. What do we find here? We appoint a commission. I ask hon. members: Who were on that commission who knew anything about rates on the Great Lakes or elsewhere? They make a report. Are we bound to accept a report which comes from people who know as little about freight rates on the Great Lakes or elsewhere in Canada as I do? I know nothing about it. This is a proposition which should be carefully considered.

Mr. MILLAR: May I point out that Mr. Symington of Winnipeg who is perhaps one of the greatest rate experts in Canada was solicitor for this commission.

Mr. CARROLL: He may have been a fine solicitor. I understand he was not a member of this board. He may have been a solicitor for the board—I do not know. Can the hon. member tell me who was connected with that board who knows anything about shipping rates or transportation?

Mr. MILLAR: I have pleasure in answering the question. I am not personally ecquainted with Mr. McLean who was chairman of the commission but I have read in the papers that he was a very great expert on this matter.

Mr. CARROLL: Who told the hon. member that Mr. McLean was an expert on any question of freight rates? He never had any experience in the world. Mr. Thomson, who was a member of this House at one time, a very estimable gentleman, was on the board.

Mr. FORKE: Does the hon. member see the position he is putting the government in just now?

Mr. CARROLL: I am not particular about it.

Mr. HANSON: Why should the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) be worried about it? He is altogether too anxious about the government.

Mr. FORKE: It really seems a very strange position that we from this side of the House should be defending the actions of the government, while a member from the other side of the House is condemning the government; but I am not worried.

Mr. CARROLL: I am not worrying, my conscience is clear.

Mr. FORKE: A member on the Conservative side is worrying.

Mr. HANSON: I am pointing out the incongruity of it.

Mr. FORKE: I think the hon. member is lacking in a sense of humour.

Mr. CARROLL: I appreciate what the leader of the Progressives has said; but I am as independent as he is, when it comes to a question whether I should take a certain stand. I cannot agree with my hon. friend for South York (Mr. Maclean) because his anxiety is shown in this particular connection.

Mr. BANCROFT: The member for South York was anxious yesterday.

Mr. CARROLL: But my hon. friend the leader of the Progressives must not forget that we on this side of the House are not bound down. We are not slaves to any policy the government may bring down. On this side of the House we sometimes use our common sense and judgment; and I hope, Mr. Chairman, that our judgment is generally correct. If the leader of the Progressives were following this government, he would sit down in a servile manner and support any proposition they might introduce. I think that is his position to-night. But if there is a proposition brought forth which I consider to be unfavourable to Canadian interests, un-Canadian in the extreme, I will oppose it. I did not read very extensively the report of this commission, but I would just as soon take the report of three seamen on grain or freight rates as I would accept the proposition which has been placed before us by this commission. I take the stand—and my friends on the government benches do not like my proposition very much—

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Go right ahead.

Mr. CALDWELL: I do not think they are paying much attention to it.

Mr. CARROLL: My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) has taken the course which perhaps lets him out rather easily—a constitutional course. I would rather suggest to my hon. friend from Halifax that he should take the common sense of this thing, and let the constitutional aspect be governed more or less by the Minister of Justice, who is always ready and willing to give an opinion, and I think any decision coming from his department is right.

I would ask the government to take into consideration, quietly, calmly and deliberately, the proposition as to whether or not we are going to destroy a Canadian industry which has taken some 15 years to build up, in favour of American industries, and American companies, which to-day are being organized in the various states along the Great Lakes, to the detriment of our Canadian trade. I would think, although not having given very serious thought to the question, that there must be some way of dealing with exorbitant rates on the Great Lakes without throwing into the hands of a foreign government the shipping interests on those lakes. We might have another commission, for example, composed of a fisherman, a blacksmith and a banker, who know nothing about shipping interests on the Great Lakes, who would advise the Minister of Trade and Commerce as to how he could control those rates. I do not think any person can see that I am very antagonistic towards the government, but I for one, as a Canadian, do not like the proposition to throw open an industry which has taken twenty years to establish, which has in a few years increased our grain exports from Montreal from 5,000,000 bushels to 150,000,000 bushels. I do not think we should rush in and give those interests which were opposing us the right to interfere with our lake freight rates, unless we get the same treatment from the United States.

Mr. ROBB: I did not wish to interrupt my hon. friend in his speech, because I noticed that he has given careful consideration to this subject; but apparently he was under a misapprehension and thought that it was another resolution that was under consideration. The resolution now before the House has nothing whatever to do, more than the gathering of information, with the suspension of the coasting laws. The objections of my hon. friend would come quite correctly in the consideration of the next bill to be placed before the House. All we are doing now is to provide publicity; so that the shipper will be compelled to publish his rates, and to publish the space available; If the Board of Grain Commissioners so determine, they may fix a maximum rate. I will not follow this any further than to make this statement. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) referred to the enormouse increase in the export of grain through the port of Montreal, and he objected very strenuously to Canada permitting American ships to come into our waters. May I say right now that most of the grain going through the port of Montreal comes in now on American ships?

Mr. CALDWELL: American grain.

Mr. ROBB: This does no injury to Canadian trade. It gives labour to Canadian citizens; it makes revenue for Canadian merchants and shippers, and incidentally the taxes come back in a degree to the government.

Mr. CARROLL: Is that coast-wise trade?

Mr. ROBB: No.

Mr. CARROLL: Certainly not.

Mr. ROBB: A few days ago when we had under consideration something regarding shipping, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Millar) questioned my statement and asserted that no grain went through the Quebec elevator last year.

Mr. MILLAR: No. The statement I made was that last year no boats carrying export grain were diverted from Montreal to Quebec.

Mr. ROBB: As I think Hansard will show, and as my recollection goes, my hon. friend stated that no grain or very little was put through that elevator. I will, however, accept my hon. friend's correction. Last year there was put through the port of Montreal 147,564,328 bushels, and of that quantity, 83,944,389 bushels consisted of United States grain, as against 63,000,000 bushels Canadian grain, or about 20,000,000 bushels less Canadian grain than American grain were put through the port of Montreal. Through the port of Quebec we put a total of 5,968,765 bushels last year. My hon. friend who represents that city in this House, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) tells me that already in the first month of navigation, the elevator at Quebec has put through something over a million bushels. We have had a very reasonable discussion upon this resolution. We have in some regards got away from it—

Mr. CAMPBELL: Did the grain that went through the port of Quebec come in by boat or rail?

Mr. ROBB: I have not the information for last year, but I gather that part of it must have gone in by boat. This year it is going in by boat. Last year there were 13,000,000 bushels of United States corn, and corn is always largely shipped to this country by water. This is a better route for corn than the southern route. The corn cools off with the transshipment, and it carries better.

I was proceeding to say that we have had a reasonable discussion upon the resolution, and the bill will come along to-morrow. It is getting late, and while I do not want to stop any further discussion, I would ask that if hon. members discuss this resolution, they keep to the question of the resolution, and we will take up the coasting laws later on.

Mr. McBRIDE: I should like to say just a word in connection with this resolution. A couple of hon. members asked a question why grain was carried from Canadian ports into American ports more cheaply than it was between two Canadian ports. While I am frank to admit that I know nothing about shipping regulations on the Great Lakes, I know a little about them in Vancouver. I may say that I was interested in some trading steamers on the Pacific coast, and we always gave a better rate into an American port than we did from one Canadian port to another. I will tell you the reason why. We could go into Seattle, for instance, at 6 o'clock in the evening, and we could get discharged and leave at 6 o'clock the next morning We could never get that in a Canadian port. If we went into Victoria at 6 o'clock in the evening, we would have to wait until 8 o'clock the next morning before we started to unload. Time counts, more particularly when you are paying your crews and other expenses. We gave a better rate and we made money by doing so.

A good deal has been said on this side of the House in connection with freight rates I understand that six of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine are on the Great Lakes, and I am going to put up a suggestion to the government, namely that this government give the grain commissioners a charter of those six steamers for a dollar each per annum; that they operate them, and that the profit they make on those steamers for the season control the rate that is charged on the Great Lakes, they to put their own crews and their own captains on the ships, and be responsible for the ships. All the government should ask them to do is to pay a dollar each and to cover them with insurance.

Mr. DUFF: The rates will be twice as high as they are now.

Mr. McBRIDE: I think the people on the lakes would be perfectly satisfied with the rates that this would establish.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to make a reference or two to some statements that have been made this evening. The hon. member for South Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll) seems to question the ability of the commissioners to examine into this question. While, perhaps, it is the prerogative of the government to defend those men, I submit that it is impossible to get men of the same profession or of the same class to examine into a business of this kind. According to the hon. member for South Cape Breton, it would be necessary to have grain shippers themselves examine into this matter. Could we get a fair decision from men engaged in grain shipping? According to his argument, if you had a liquor case to investigate, the prosecution would have to have a bootlegger to conduct the investigation. That is the sum and substance of his argument.

As regards the remarks made by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) I think he has not read very carefully the report of the commission, because it conclusively proves that unloading conditions and conditions with regard to return cargoes and everything else were just as favourable at Canadian ports as they were at American ports. The commissioners point that out most conclusively, and state that there was no particular reason whatever for the discrimination. I should like to make just one reference in this respect. They refer particularly to the Standard Shipping Company, which charters or controls, and still does to-day, 54 per cent of the Canadian space on the Great Lakes, and which controls 27 per cent on the American lakes. They make this reference:

> It seems clear that competition on the Canadian side is not nearly so keen as on the American side. In fact, among Winnipeg brokers—

That is those who are handling or who have control of all the space on the lakes.

—it is almost non-existent.

Mr. SALES: In order to correct the misapprehensions of the hon member for Cariboo who spoke of unloading from a Canadian port into an American port, I may say that this is not the case at all. I am going to quote just four examples:

August 31, Duluth to Port Colborne, 2¼ cents.
Fort William to Port Colborne, 3¾ cents.
August 4, Chicago to Port Colborne, 2 cents.
Fort William to Port Colborne, 3¾ cents.
July 31, Chicago to Port McNicoll, 2 cents.
Fort William to Port McNicoll, 3 cents.
August 4, Chicago to Port McNicoll, 2 cents.
Fort William to Port McNicoll, 3 cents.

These are all unloaded in a Canadian port. The argument advanced by my hon. friend does not apply. May I ask the minister when we may expect to have the bill, so that we may study it?

Mr. ROBB: That will depend on when the argument is through. If my hon. friend is going to talk all night—

Mr. SALES: It is through so far as I am concerned, if the minister will give me the information.

Mr. ROBB: I can give my hon. friend no information until the resolution is passed

Then I shall be prepared to give him the information immediately.

Mr. GOULD: The minister stated that the bill will compel shippers to show the rates, amount of space available, and so on. According to the evidence adduced before the commission, and as I think myself, that would tend to give these men an opportunity of submitting to the government statements similar to those which they have placed before the commission,—statements advancing their own point of view but entirely out of keeping with the facts as they were proved to exist. These men have deceived us twice: they deceived us when they erected this combine on the lakes, and they deceived, or at least attempted to deceive, the commission which the government appointed to investigate their activities. This notwithstanding, however, the government proposes now to accept their word again in regard to the advertising of rates, and so forth. I am not in the mood now to tolerate that. They burnt us twice, and I think we should be careful now. There is particular mention in the introduction of the reasons that impelled the government to institute a commission to investigate the whole matter, as it applies to western Canada. I am pleased to note that special reference is made to that part of the country, because we feel that we have been oppressed time and time again. We do not want to rehearse the various ways in which we have been harassed, and our products practically stolen from us, but we undoubtedly want the government to do something by way of legislation to prevent these people from taking an unfair advantage of us again. An exhibition should be made of some of these men instead of their word being taken again after they have deceived the community as they have done. Does the minister not think that we have a right to demand other tribunals to show to the government what the facts and the conditions warrant in the way of rates?

Mr. McBRIDE: Would the hon. member be in favour of the Grain Commission taking over the six steamers the government has on the lakes?

Mr. ROBB: I am reminded that a few moments ago the leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) thought that he was rising to the defence of the government. If this legislation is not satisfactory to my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Gould) then he might offer some suggestions as to how it can be improved. When we get into committee he can submit those suggestions; but if hon. gentlemen are disposed to delay the legislation, if they do not want to let it go through, I do not see why we should press it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Robb thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 235 with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Mr. ROBB: I hope to proceed with the bill either to-morrow or Monday.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to repeal section 958 of the Canada Shipping Act, as enacted by chapter sixty-four of the statutes of 1908, and to enact in lieu thereof that the Governor in Council may, from time to time, by order in council declare that the foregoing provisions of this part shall not, for the period specified in such order in council, apply, either throughout Canada or in any specified waters of Canada, to the ships or vessels, or to any specified, ascertained or ascertainable class or number of the ships or vessels, of any foreign country.

Mr. DUFF: Is it the purpose of the government to suspend the laws in regard to American ships if the American government does not suspend its laws so far as Canadian ships are concerned?

Mr. LAPOINTE: Under the law as it is we have the power to suspend the coastal laws as they affect a foreign country if that country is willing to reciprocate. We are seeking to change the law to give the Governor in Council power in any emergency, if the necessity arises, to suspend the coastal laws for a time in any particular district or in regard to certain vessels. Of course, this power will be exercised with discretion and will be invoked only when it is absolutely necessary. I think we may safely trust the government not to injure Canadian shipping. What we propose to do is intended not for the benefit of American shipping but in the interests of the Dominion, and will be resorted to only to serve that end.

Mr. STEVENS: Under what power were the coastal laws suspended last fall, and also by a previous government a few years ago?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I really am not in a position to answer that question. Under the law as it stands there is certainly nothing to entitle the government to suspend the coastal laws. I understand that in 1913 they were suspended, but only by virtue of an agreement with the companies themselves who submitted without questioning the legality or otherwise of the action. Last year I believe they were suspended only for one or two trips of the season. The government undoubtedly took a chance, because under the law as it stands they have no power in the matter.

Mr. FORKE: I would point out to the minister that when the coasting laws were suspended the suspension was a dead letter. The chances were that if any ships went into the Bay ports at that time they would never get out again.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Lapointe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 236 to amend the Canada Shipping Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. LAPOINTE: If there is no objection I shall be willing to proceed now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent—

Mr. SALES: Next sitting.

Mr. SHAW: Next sitting.

Mr. SPEAKER: Next sitting of the House.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice): I understand that the bill to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act has been distributed. If the House is willing, we might consider this bill now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: When this bill was called this afternoon its consideration was fixed for the next sitting, and unless the House agrees to revert to that order the bill cannot be considered to-night.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Sir LOMER GOUIN moved that the House go into committee on Bill No. 232 to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On clause 1—Sessional allowance.

Mr. BOIVIN: Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that after discussing this clause with a certain number of hon. members of the opposition and ministers of the Crown it has been decided to amend it to meet the objection which was made the other day upon the motion for concurrence in the report of the committee, by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) . He pointed out that if a session of fifty days or more did not exceed sixty-five days, some hon. members might receive a full sessional indemnity, whereas other hon. members who were unavoidably absent for only a few days would only be paid at the rate of $25 per day. There is a general desire to meet any legitimate objection and I therefore move to substitute for the word "fifty' in the second line of section 32, the word "sixty-five."

Amendment agreed to.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, all last session and this session we have heard economy preached in this House not only by one particular group but by all groups. Unfortunately no economy can be practised without hurting somebody; it must stop works which would give employment to people, or less wages must be paid. Yet it would seem that at the rate at which expenditures are increasing and the earning power of a great portion of the people decreasing, something will have to be done in the way of rigid and painful economy. I believe that economy, like charity, should begin at home. Possibly it would hurt the other fellow less, he who has been practising economy until it does hurt, if we here practised a little economy of our own. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) on May 23, 1922, said:

> I must to-day present two thoughts which ares of paramount importance. The first is as to the need, the deep and earnest need, of economy. That means that we must appeal both to members of parliament and to the people to pass what I may call self-denying ordinances.

I believe that when the indemnity was increased in 1920 the chief argument in its favour was that the price of everything had gone up. If that argument was good then, it is surely true that the opposite argument is good now, because the cost of living is surely, if slowly, becoming less. Farm products have almost lost their value. I have heard members in this House admit that last year they took part of their indemnity to make up the deficiency on their farms. That makes me wonder how the man is getting along who has a farm but no indemnity.

I intend to move an amendment to this clause which will ask members to place upon themselves a self-denying ordinance. If we do this we shall then have much more weight in explaining to our constituents that it is bad policy to ask for what might be called "grab" improvements for any particular constituency. There is no need to dwell upon the severe economic depression through which we are passing. Some believe that we are through the worst of it, and I hope they are right, but at least it can be said that Ontario agriculturists to-day are suffering more acutely than for many years past. I am led to move this amendment because I know a great many people have been forced this year to do without telephones and daily papers, not because they are luxuries, but because they must do without something in order to make their income and their expenses meet.

The real reason however, that I am anxious to amend this clause is that those who are suffering because of the rigid economy which they must practise would be helped in spirit by us here passing upon ourselves a self-denying ordinance. Of late years the impression has gone abroad that members of parliament are more concerned about themselves—which would include their pay—than about anyone else. This is not a desirable condition, and possibly if at great suffering to ourselves we decreased our pay, ultimately this suspicion would be removed and our self-denial would really do a great deal towards putting heart into the people who to-day are suffering.

Now possibly it will be said, or at least it will be thought by a great many members that it is expensive to be a member of parliament, that we are supposed to give to all charitable and all sporting and all literary needs in our constituencies. My own opinion is that generous giving to many things in a constituency is a subtle way of buying popularity. I do not mean by that that we should be robbed of the privilege as individuals of giving where we think we should, but this wholesale sort of giving that one associates with politics and politicians is, I am convinced, bad for the giver and bad for the receiver of the gift. That is one thing on which I took a rigid stand during my campaign. I carefully explained that I would not give to people who came begging for gifts, and I have lived up to that, with I believe no disastrous results either to myself or those asking for the gifts. It is true that a member of parliament between sessions because of an awakened and interested electorate works much more strenuously now than in days gone by. I think that sort of thing should be increased and encouraged. I for one intend to cover thoroughly as I did last recess my riding, but I do not think the cut which I shall ask at the conclusion of this speech will prevent any member so inclined from meeting his electorate.

I believe that another one of the chief pleas that was put up by the members of the government of 1920 when this increase was made was that it would do away with the party fund, that if the members were given $4,000 a year they would not be slaves to the party nor to the party fund. The best proof that that is not true is the voting as we have witnessed it in this House. Then is it asking too much—

Mr. VIEN: Would my hon. friend allow me a question? Does she mean that we are voting to-day in this House because we are dictated to by those who subscribed the electoral funds? Is that what my hon. friend means?

Miss MACPHAIL: The hon. member who asked the question knows the answer better than I do.

Mr. VIEN: Then, Mr. Chairman, I protest, and I rise to a point of order. I am extremely sorry to call my lady colleague to order but I cannot bear either her or anybody else to say that my vote in this House is being dictated by those who contribute my electoral funds. I for one received no electoral funds from anybody under the sun either in my election of 1917 or my election of 1921, and I would like to know how much my hon. friend received herself from the associations who support the party that sends her here. My hon. friend in committee and in the House—

Mr. GARDINER: Order.

Mr. VIEN: I am speaking on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: It is the point of order that is being discussed.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend in committee as well as in the House is prompt to say that our votes are dictated by the powers that be or by big interests. I for one at least protest against that habit, and I for one at least may say that my votes are dictated only by my conscience. I trust that the votes of my hon. friend are the same.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have the right to ask my hon. friend to withdraw that aspersion.

The CHAIRMAN: Does any other hon. gentleman desire to speak on the point of order? Does the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) desire to speak on the point of order?

Miss MACPHAIL: If I have anything to say on the point of order I would say that the hon. gentleman doth protest too much. I did not accuse anybody. I simply said this. I will quote from the member who is now the Speaker of the House.

Mr. BUREAU: Withdraw.

Miss MACPHAIL: When I have explained my position it will be time to withdraw.

Mr. BUREAU: Explain or withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I would ask the hon. member for Southeast Grey to proceed. I understand that she was going to repeat what was said. I did not get it very clearly and I am anxious to get that.

Miss MACPHAIL: I simply said that one of the pleas in 1920 for increasing the indemnity was that it would do away with the party fund, and the fact that it did not do away with the party fund is best proven by the voting in the House.

Mr. GAUVREAU: That is a reflection on the whole House. That is what you should take back.

The CHAIRMAN: Unless the hon. member is going to speak to the point of order I will give my ruling.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am speaking to the point of order. The present Speaker of the House of Commons in 1920 said:

> The independence of parliament will be secured by the adoption of this measure. Let us extirpate the corruptions which the party fund at the general election engenders, creates and perpetuates.

Mr. VIEN: I rise again to the point of order. I think that the hon. member is not arguing the point of order. I will listen with great pleasure to my hon. friend arguing the point of order, but I think I am entitled to a ruling if my hon. friend continues her main argument.

Miss MACPHAIL: This is on the party fund entirely.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is whether the language of the hon. member reflected on the honour and integrity of the members of the House of Commons. If she desires to speak on that particular point as to whether her words should be so interpreted, I shall be very pleased to hear her before giving my ruling.

Miss MACPHAIL: I thought that if I quoted what a good man who had been in the party I believe for as long as twenty-five years had said about party funds, that would be on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN: The question is whether the words used by the hon. member should be interpreted as reflecting on the honour and integrity of the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. SHAW: I would suggest that the hon. member for Lotbiniere has perhaps put too literal an interpretation on the words used by the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I think that she had no desire to pass any reflection on the members of the House at all.

Mr. GAUVREAU: Let her say so then.

Mr. SHAW: If the hon. member will give her an opportunity perhaps we may have the privilege of hearing what she has to say, but I did not understand her to say she had any desire to pass any reflection on any member of the House of Commons.

Mr. MORIN: She did the very same thing in the Banking committee.

Mr. PUTNAM: What would the hon. member from Calgary West (Mr. Shaw) take from the words which are under challenge?

Mr. SHAW: Perhaps the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Putnam) can tell us how he would interpret her language.

Mr. PUTNAM: I would take it that its significance was a general accusation of bribery, that the members of the House of Commons are following the behests of those who supply the party funds. I am sorry to say that the words were not ambiguous.

Mr. FORKE: Speaking on the point of order, I think probably the member for Southeast Grey made a mistake, but had she been more accustomed to the rules of the House of Commons and had the experience of a great many members she would have been able to convey exactly the same thing and keep within the rules. I do not think the House is very much hurt by what has been said. I would advise the hon. member to withdraw, but I do not think there is very much to be gained by this terrible excitement over the simple remark she made.

Mr. VIEN: If the hon. member for Southeast Grey would only say what the leader of the Progressive party has just said I would be satisfied, but we do not hear those words from her lips.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have no desire to reflect on the honour of any member of this House.

Mr. VIEN: Then I shall have to ask my hon. friend what she meant by her language.

Mr. BIRD: I should like to know specifically what rule has been infringed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I think the charge made is a very general one and if there is such a rule of the House I think that rule has been violated many times during last session and the present one.

An hon. MEMBER: What are you speaking to?

Mr. BIRD: I am speaking to the point of order if there is one.

The CHAIRMAN: There is a point of order.

Mr. BIRD: Mr. Chairman, will you kindly state the point of order so that we may know what to do.

The CHAIRMAN: A point of order was raised that the hon. member for Southeast Grey had made a statement which reflects upon the independence of the members of the House of Commons and upon their integrity. That particular point is under discussion; that is the point of order.

Mr. BIRD: I remember distinctly that last session, I think it was in the debate upon the Address, two distinct charges were made from the benches to my right that the government had been returned to power by certan interests in this country. Those charges were allowed to go unchallenged. I think it is the rule in this House to permit general charges of that character as long as they are not personal. I do not know how this applies. On page 63 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms I find this paragraph:

> If a member should say nothing disrespectful to the House or the Chair, or personally opprobrious to other members, or in violation of other rules of the House he may state whatever he may think fit in debate, however offensive it may be to the feelings, or injurious to the character of individuals;

There is nothing personal in the statement of the hon. member for Southeast Grey but the general charge she made has been interpreted as being something personal. If a charge is personal it is against the rules of the House but that cannot be said of a general statement such as the hon. member made.

Mr. BOIVIN: I desire to say one word upon the point of order. If I understood the hon. member for Southeast Grey correctly, in the course of her remarks she made the statement that one of the reasons why the sessional indemnity had been increased in the year 1920 was the fact that it would do away with what is commonly known as an election fund, and she proceeded to base her statement upon a remark made in 1920 by the present Speaker of this House. Up to that point there was certainly no infringement of the rules of order. But the hon. member for Southeast Grey proceeded immediately afterwards to say that the increase of the indemnity did not have this effect as was proven by the votes given in the House at the present time. That is the statement complained of. If that statement means anything, it means that hon. members of this House owing to the fact that they have received campaign funds, or that they expect to receive campaign funds from some source, vote according to the dictates of the sources from which these funds are supplied. There can be no other interpretation to these words. I respectfully submit that under the ordinary rules and usages of parliament, it is forbidden for any hon. member to cast a reflection upon the honour and integrity of any individual member, or upon the honour or integrity of the House as a whole. If a reflection has not been cast upon an individual member, it certainly has been cast upon the integrity of the House as a whole, and for that reason the words should be retracted. If not retracted the hon. member for Southeast Grey should at least explain to the House that such was not the significance that she desired to give to the words that were uttered.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to ask the hon. member who has just spoken how he applies his present position and argument to the charges that have been frequently made in this House, according to my recollection, that the government or a certain party has been assisted into power, so to speak, by certain large financial interests. We have heard these charges commonly. I should therefore like to know how the particular point of order applies to cases like that?

Mr. BOIVIN: I may be allowed to reply to my hon. friend without departing from the point of order. The answer is very easy to give. In the one case, certain interests are accused of having elected members to this House and the accusation is levelled at some person or persons outside of the House. In this particular instance, the members of this House are accused of voting in order to please those interests. There is a great difference between the two cases.

Mr. BIRD: I want to raise the point as to whether the remark in question is a reflection upon the honour of any member of this House, because I have heard it seriously contended that it is the duty of members who associate themselves with a party to vote according to the views of that party—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BIRD: —and for the reason that they are supported in this House by the party caucus. I am saying that quite seriously. That is seriously contended by those who argue against group government. And so I would say there is no direct onslaught upon the honour of any member of this House by the general reflection just made by the hon. member for Southeast Grey. I think it is stretching the point a little too far to say that is an attack upon the honour of any member of this House.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to point out that the hon. member for Southeast Grey qualified her remark. She stated definitely that she had no intention of reflecting on the integrity of any members of the House. That is a sufficient qualification and retraction of what she said before. As it has been customary to accept such a statement as a retraction I think we ought to pursue that course in her case as well as in others.

Miss MACPHAIL: I will withdraw the statement if it is unparliamentary and beg everybody's pardon. The thing I want to say, if I may be allowed to do so, is this: When some of the good party men have declared their views outside on certain questions and we see them come in and vote in the opposite way what are we to think? Let me continue with the quotation of what the present Speaker of the House said in his speech upon the increase in the indemnity He said:

> A party gets funds to elect its candidates, the men who contribute to that party fund expect the member elected in return for the aid received, will do the bidding of those who have paid the election expenses. Sir, I am right in saying that with the increased indemnities, the party fund will be a thing of the past, and if for no other reason the people of Canada would approve the action of parliament in this regard.

Recalling the argument that was advanced in 1920 for the increase in the indemnity, an argument in the very opposite direction can be made now in favour of a decrease. I believe that out of sympathy for the people in general because of the severe economic depression through which we are passing—we should do all we can to help and if we practise economy we will do much to strengthen the morale of the people and make them feel that we are indeed their servants and their brothers. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) that the words "four thousand" as they appear in section 32 be struck out and that the words "three thousand five hundred" be substituted therefor.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Mr. Chairman, if I might be permitted to make a few observations I should like to say that in 1920 I voted for the increased indemnity and I am prepared now to vote against this amendment. Furthermore, if I had a seconder I should be inclined to move an amendment providing that the indemnity should be $5,000 instead of $4,000 and I think the majority of the House would support me.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Especially those who have many children.

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: Well it may come to that. I was under the impression in 1920 that members of parliament should be paid a reasonable indemnity to permit them to discharge their duties in a satisfactory manner and to give all time necessary to the affairs of this country. I think that by giving a fair indemnity, by paying a reasonable amount, men who are qualified in every way will be attracted to the service of their country. If that is not done professional or business men will not be induced to abandon their profession or their business, sometimes for eight months in the year, to attend to the affairs of the people in this House.

Mr. CARROLL: What about the children?

Mr. LAVIGUEUR: I will leave the answer to my hon. friend. It is well enough for any hon. member who has not very many obligations, who does not keep up a house in his own locality, or maintain a large family, to say that an indemnity of $2,000 a year is quite enough. It may be quite enough, and probably too much for some of those hon. members; but for anyone who has to leave his business for a certain period and keep up his household and family, and come here to Ottawa and remain for a few months under double expense, I think $4,000 is really too little under the circumstances. If the members of this House were well paid, I think it would be the means of attracting the best qualified men of the country to the House to represent the people of their districts.

Mr. STEVENS: I feel that something ought to be said in regard to this amendment. I have been in this House, as many other members have, for a great many years. I have witnessed from time to time resolutions of this kind moved with variant motives for a reduction of the indemnity paid to members. I happen to be in, perhaps, a fortunate position to-night, as far as I am personally concerned because, before the last election and subsequent to the increased indemnity, I was publicly asked, before an audience in Vancouver of perhaps two or three thousand citizens, my reasons for supporting the increased indemnity I answered the question as briefly as I could in such words as this, that if the electors of Vancouver did not consider that my services as a representative of that city were worth $4,000 the proper course would be to vote against me and leave me at home. I returned to this House with a majority of some 5,000 votes, which I consider at least vindicates my personal position in this matter.

I want to say something further, not perhaps so personal. I am inclined to think, Mr. Chairman, that if I attended the House not too assiduously, if I were present in my seat half of the time, if I did not give that attention to the matters coming before the House which I considered they certainly merited, and my conscience was still alive, I might hesitate to accept the full indemnity. I am not constituting myself a judge of the action of any member. It may be that some members do not give close attention to their duty. It is not my purpose or duty to judge of them. I am responsible for my own action, but I will say this with all the emphasis of which I am capable: that when I leave my home and family, maintain that home on the Pacific coast and live in Ottawa for approximately six months—and I think it will be fully six months by the time I get back to my home again—and attend to these duties as assiduously as I can, an indemnity of $4,000 a year is certainly not too much. There are members who have few responsibilities, or perhaps no responsibility, no family connections, no particular expenditure in maintaining a house, and no losses in business. They are happy and fortunate, from a monetary standpoint perhaps, and ahead of the game. If such a member feels that the indemnity under those circumstances is altogether too high, the remedy is very simple. Let him return to the coffers, as has been done by individual members, that portion of the indemnity which he feels he is not entitled to take. But I do wish to say that a member fortunately, or I think perhaps unfortunately, placed in that position, who has no responsibility or no ties of this kind, should not constitute himself a judge of what is due to those who certainly lose and lose heavily.

It might be advisable to say this—and I think I will be acquitted of any censoriousness in saying it—that a member should attend the sessions of this House closely and assiduously, should be in his seat regularly, sometimes perhaps for very long hours, should attend the committee work of the House and the variant duties which devolve upon a member of parliament in this country, and during the recess should give careful attention to the public welfare. If he does that, there is not too much in the indemnity for the services rendered. Furthermore I do not think the people of Canada begrudge any member of parliament who gives conscientious attention to his duties along these lines the indemnity which members have been drawing. Of course we all know perfectly well that there is a certain amount of glamour surrounding the so-called sacrifice of boldly moving in the House for the voluntary reduction of the indemnity, when that is positively or practically safeguarded by a general committal of the House to the indemnity before the question is brought up. That is a situation which has arisen in the past, and sometimes does present itself; but I do not appreciate very highly the action based on conditions and circumstances of that kind. It is not usual for a bill of this kind to be introduced in the House until it has been considered carefully by a committee, and until there has been knowledge of it, and an opportunity of expression of opinion, so that there may be reasonable unanimity; and that is a reasonable proposition. Under cover of that known unanimity or approximate unanimity, occasionally there are those who will say: So far as I am concerned I do not intend to accept this indemnity and I move for its reduction. I cannot very highly appreciate that course of action. Perhaps I have spoken plainly, but I do think when we are discussing a matter of this kind it is desirable to be very frank and very plain as to the position that we take.

Mr. FORKE: I do not wish to shirk stating my opinion upon this matter. I should like, in commencing, to pay a tribute to the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) for her sincerity of purpose and for the absolutely honesty of the attempt that she is making at the present time to reduce the indemnity. I do not know for a certainty, but I am credibly informed that she returned $1,500 of her salary last year—I may be wrong, but I think that was correct—and that is a very good proof that she is quite in earnest in the move that she is making.

Mr. DUFF: She can do that again this year.

Mr. FORKE: That is so. Still, every member has a right to his or her opinions, and probably the moral effect may be worth thinking about if some sacrifice is attached to the action. I do not believe for one moment that the thing has been done for any spectacular effect. I am perfectly convinced that the action is sincere and honest right through.

As regards the amount, I cannot support the amendment. I know my own circumstances. I have rather a large farm; I have no boys of my own, and I have four hired men engaged there at the present time running my farm. I shall be away for nearly six months, and anyone who knows about conditions, knows exactly what it means to neglect the business for that time. I know what the expense of keeping a house in Ottawa is, and the expense of keeping a house in Manitoba and running back there. I am perfectly satisfied that I for one could not be in public life if the salary is going to be reduced very much lower than it is at the present time. I state that opinion sincerely, and I am quite prepared to take the verdict of my people at home. I am speaking simply because I want to place myself on record. I believe that members should conscientiously try to do their duty in the House; that they ought to give serious consideration to all questions that come up; that they should take their duty seriously. We are here in the parliament of Canada, and our actions have a tremendous effect for good or evil throughout this Dominion. Although not taking a very large part in the work of the House at times, I feel the responsibility of every act that we take, and I think, perhaps, the country will not begrudge us the salary of $4,000. In conclusion, let me say again, because I want to emphasize this, that I sincerely believe in the honesty of motive and purpose of the hon. member for Southeast Grey.

Amendment (Miss Macphail) negatived.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Deduction for non-attendance.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, if you can hear my voice above the din of conversation, I should be glad to make a few remarks with regard to this clause, clause 3 of the bill dealing with section 35 of the original act. If hon. members will look at the act as it originally was, they will find that in the present bill before them, there has been deleted from subsection (1) the following words:

> Provided also that the deduction shall be made for every day on which a member does not attend a sitting of the House of which he is a member, during the last two weeks of any session of parliament.

The effect of the bill now introduced will be to relieve the members of that restriction. It is indeed significant that such a proposal should be brought to this House at this time. I would ask you, Sir: If there happened to be a provincial election in British Columbia or in Alberta and members from those provinces were to press for such a proposal as this, would it meet with the general approval of members of this House, or if it did, would it meet with the approval of the people of this country? Of the latter, there is no doubt in my mind. Their rejection of a proposal of that kind would probably be very loudly voiced. During the last two weeks of the last session, which is the only one excepting this one that I have had the privilege of being in this House, and during any other sessions of which hon. members have spoken to me, it appears almost a certainty, a constant happening, that during those two weeks there comes up the greatest bulk of the most important legislation. When that restriction was formerly introduced into the act, it was for the purpose of keeping members here who might otherwise be anxious to go on a holiday or to go home on business.

Mr. DUFF: That is rather a reflection on the members of parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member will find that in Hansard if he will hunt it up.

Mr. DUFF: It does not matter where it is, it is a reflection.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It would not have been a reflection, but if it was, my hon. friend and his colleagues in those days supported the reflection. I see no good reason why that restriction should be lifted, especially this year. There is a great bulk of most important legislation to be dealt with. There is unfortunately only too great anxiety on the part of hon. members to dabble in provincial matters. I do not think it is in the best interest of this country that the restriction should be removed, and it is my intention to vote against this clause.

Mr. LANCTOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, with your kind permission, I wish to say a few words regarding the question under discussion. My impression was that a number of members would give their views on the reduction of the parliamentary indemnity, because at the opening session of this Parliament, I was requested by a number of the Progressive party to give my opinion on this matter. They wanted me again to bring up the question; however, my answer was that I would support them if they would follow the course that I had taken.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that, in 1920, when the increase of the parliamentary indemnity was moved by Sir Robert Borden, then Prime Minister, he had stated in this House, on the 23rd of June, that he could not meet the wish of hon. gentlemen owing to there being too many pressing needs in behalf of the returned soldier and too many public works to be carried on in the country. A caucus took place on the following day, that is the 24th.

An hon. MEMBER: A Liberal or Conservative caucus?

Mr. LANCTOT: A Tory or rather a Unionist caucus. I was not present, however, it was rumoured that a revolt had broken out to the effect that should the Prime Minister not acquiesce to the wish of his party a strike would be called in the workshop. He had already been threatened with such a fate a few weeks previous because the Unionist party of the day had seen its majority of 71 dwindle down to 5. It was therefore agreed at that caucus to increase the parliamentary indemnity. The following day, on the 25th, a bill to that effect was brought down and the parliamentary indemnity was increased to $4,000 per year. At that time, I made my position clear: I moved an amendment against the parliamentary increase, not however, that I thought at the time no more than I do to-day that $4,000 was too much for the members to receive as an indemnity, but to me, it was a question of principle, I would not accept that amount from the hands of the master of the day, because I was fully aware that he would not be long at the head of the affairs of this country. This is the reason, I was the strongest opponent of the measure. We had at that time, as we have to-day a great deal of war expenditures; we had purchased a number of railways and I foresaw that once this increase was granted it would be difficult to remedy it. The hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) must have noticed it even to-day by the behaviour of those who induced her to propose that amendment when this measure was first introduced, I made up my mind to strongly oppose this increase of indemnity, and, should it be voted, to abstain from applying it to my own pecuniary advantage. My views in the meantime, have not changed. If the hon. members opposite me were sincere—especially those from Ontario as I am informed—when they proclaimed to the people, in 1921, that it was not worth more than $2,500 to be a member at Ottawa; if they were sincere at that time, they must necessarily be now, as I am, and if they always believe that this increase of $1,500 should never have been granted, why do they not distribute it to their electors as I have twice done. They must not pose to-day as champions of economy, preach against this increase and at the same time pocket the money for their personal benefit. That is why I thought it appropriate to make a few remarks. I insist on it, my views have not changed any and when I gave my word to this House that I would not benefit by this increase, I kept my word. I state in all frankness that I did not profit from such an increase. It has cost me $3,000 and I am not complaining over it.

Mr. LEADER: I want to register my protest against removing the restrictions in regard to the last fifteen days of the session of parliament. I am very sorry I was unable to grasp what was said by the last hon. gentleman (Mr. Lanctôt).

Mr. LANCTOT: Too bad.

Mr. LEADER: I am sorry, but I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is consistent; I quite believe that what he has been saying is in harmony with the language he used in this House a couple of years ago.

Mr. GERVAIS: He was simply saying that you were not consistent. He was complaining that your attitude was not consistent with what you said privately.

Mr. LEADER: I do not know what he said.

Mr. POWER: Do not talk about it then.

Mr. LEADER: The hon. gentleman made a speech in this House on the 29th day of June, 1920, and while I do not understand what he has said to-night I have no doubt his sentiments are the same as those he expressed at that time.

Mr. BOIVIN: They are the same.

Mr. LEADER: Let me quote what the hon. gentleman said:

> Now, even if it be true that an increase in salary is necessary, should this increase be made during the present session? When a business man has hired a clerk in his office for $2,500 and this clerk comes to his employer three or four days before his year is up and says: "I want an increase of $1,500 for the work I have done this year," what does the boss say? He says: "That is out of the question. Finish your year and I'll settle with you." Well, that is the position of hon. members in this House, for the present session at any rate. The session is over. It has already come to an end for several, since they have taken their trunks and gone back to their homes. So the argument that members of parliament should receive more money does not apply to the present session at least, because the session is over, and the amount allowed was $2,500.

The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) opposes this clause for practically the same reasons. When hon. members get up and declare that it is the duty of public men to keep to their seats in this House and diligently perform their duties, I would ask them to look behind the hon. gentlemen who now sit in the front row to my right. Now I want to quote what the hon. gentleman who to-day dignifies the Speaker's chair said on the same occasion to which I have already referred.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): I must remind the hon. member that the committee is discussing section 3, which relates to the deduction of indemnity for non-attendance. A general discussion is not permissible under that section and I must request the hon. member to confine his remarks to the subject matter under consideration.

Mr. LEADER: I respectfully submit that I am discussing a matter that is relevant to the section under consideration. However, if I am out of order I bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and shall endeavour to confine myself to the subject matter before the Chair. The present Speaker of the House, speaking in favour of an increase used these words:

> There has been no regular attendance as there was in the old days when the indemnity was sufficient to keep members at Ottawa, to enable them to give their time to matters connected with the administration of public affairs. For many sessions now I have seen empty seats during sittings of the House, sometimes a practically empty Chamber. I do not say it boastfully, Mr. Speaker, but you know that I am a regular attendant at the sittings of the House, and time and again I have seen the House debate measures when there was hardly a quorum of members in attendance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): Order. The hon. member must confine his remarks to the section under discussion. A general debate is out of order at the present juncture.

Mr. FOURNIER: Why do you not make a speech of your own?

Mr. LEADER: I am reminded of a statement that is ascribed to the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier who, being unduly assailed in the House, declared that the lion always hunted alone, but the wolves hunted in packs. Now I do not pretend to be lion-like, but I do think that the latter truth might apply to hon. gentlemen opposite.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): I must ask the hon. member to withdraw that remark.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Be a sport.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): The last remark made by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) should, I think, be withdrawn. Any language that reflects directly or indirectly upon the character of hon. members is unparliamentary and should be retracted.

Mr. LEADER: I was only following an eminent precedent, Mr. Chairman. However, I withdraw the remark.

Mr. BUREAU: Give the lion a chance.

Mr. LEADER: (reading):

> Why is it that there is not the attendance at the sittings of the House which the people have the right to expect from their representatives?

Mr. MERCIER: The hon. gentleman should not be quoting irrelevant matter on this section.

Mr. FOURNIER: When he is paid $4,000, he ought to make a speech of his own.

Mr. LEADER: In order to expedite the business of the House—because no one is more anxious to get home than I am, although I am prepared to carry out my duties to the fullest extent—I shall bring my remarks to a close, especially in view of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite are apparently determined to obstruct me. I simply wish to declare myself opposed to any attempt to remove the restrictions with regard to the last fifteen days of the session of parliament.

Mr. BOIVIN: Before the motion is carried I think a word should be said in answer to my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) who, I am sure, was sincere in the remarks he made concerning the removal of the special restrictions applied to the last fifteen days of a session. I must point out, and I should like the press and the country as well as the House of Commons to understand, that the present bill has not for its object the giving of any permission to hon. members to leave the House during the last fifteen days any more than at any other time during the session. If any hon. member is absent from the House for more than fifteen days during the session he is penalized to the extent of $25 for every day beyond the fifteen, whether the absence occurs at the beginning or during the latter part of the session. I am prepared to admit that much important legislation is introduced during the last days of the session but I also maintain that very many important measures are introduced during the first weeks. The budget speech and tariff resolutions, for instance, generally come before the last two weeks of the session, and there is nothing more important than the budget. The hon. member says that we should remain during the last weeks. I say we should remain all the time. The government cannot be blamed for the date or period when legislation is introduced. There is no desire on the part of the government to leave important legislation until the dying days of the session. This is due to the natural trend of events. Measures are submitted and sent to committees, and engage their attention during nearly the entire session, and it is only after the committees have reported to the House that such measures can be finally dealt with. I maintain that it is just as important for members to be present while those measures are being considered by committees before presentation to the House as when they go through the final stages in the House itself.

Apart from that, the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) says that this legislation should not be amended as proposed owing to the fact that certain members are now absent taking part in a provincial election. And he asks: What would be said if a provincial election were being held in Alberta and we were to leave the House to take part in it?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I suggested that in the event of a provincial election being held in Alberta, and we pressed for such an amendment, we might be criticized.

Mr. BOIVIN: I was just coming to that. He suggested that if in order to take part in such an election he pressed for this amendment, he might be blamed. I respectfully submit to the House that his electors are really the persons to say whether an hon. member should take part in a provincial election or not. The result of a provincial election may be very vital to the welfare of his particular riding, and his electors will seldom blame him for not attending to his duties in the House of Commons at that time. If the electors in the various constituencies where federal members are taking part in the provincial elections—and are therefore in their own way looking after the interests of their constituents—think it would be better for their representatives to remain in the House of Commons, they have their redress, they can vote against those members in the next election and so punish them. But it will be found that in every instance where a provincial election does take place, the electors are keenly disappointed if the federal member takes no part in it but remains at Ottawa to draw his indemnity. Furthermore, a provincial election might take place at some other stage of the session, and under the law as it now stands upon the statute book hon. members could be absent for fifteen days to take part in that election and would not be fined if they were regular in their attendance during the rest of the session.

But there is another view to take. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Lewis) in suggesting an amendment which we were glad to accept and incorporate in the bill, stated that if a session lasted for fifty days or over, and some hon. members were absent during the first fifty days, it would be necessary to keep the House in session for another fifteen days in order that they might draw their full indemnity. In the present instance if some hon. members desired to allow their colleagues to take part in the provincial elections in Ontario or in any other province at any other time, they could certainly block legislation for fifteen days to enable those members to come back and escape being fined for their fifteen days' absence. The result would be to put the country to extra expense and nothing would be gained. I respectfully submit to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the committee that when this matter was discussed by the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate there was no desire to relieve any hon. member from attendance in this House. The desire was to make the rule fair, just and equitable for all members at all times during a session. We felt, as I have already explained, that if an hon. member was called away for some reason of urgent public importance in his constituency or for legitimate family reasons during the latter part of a session, he should be treated absolutely the same as the hon. member who happened to be called away for similar reasons during an earlier period of the session.

There is no doubt that when the law was amended in 1920 it was done hastily. If I remember rightly the hon. leader of the party then in power declared in the House about two weeks before the law was amended that there would be no amendment and that the indemnity would not be increased. Pressure was brought to bear upon him and he became convinced by the arguments of his supporters —and I say this with no intention of disparaging the hon. gentleman—that the indemnity should be raised to $4,000. Thereupon legislation was hastily prepared and introduced for the purpose of making the rules more rigid. We have carried out that intention in the present amending act. We have fixed the duration of a session at sixty-five days instead of thirty before any member of this House can draw his full indemnity of $4,000. We have also increased the attendance of the individual member from thirty to fifty days. In spite of the lengthy sessions we have not sought to increase the days of absence although the question was raised in the committee and we have been requested by some hon. members to increase the number of days during which a member could be absent without sacrificing any part of his indemnity. We did not think such a change would be in the interests of the country. The fine for absence has been increased from $15 to $25 a day. I want once more to make it perfectly clear that this legislation does not give wholesale permission to members to be absent during the last fifteen days but only treats those days on the same basis as all the other days of the session which are equally important.

1 a.m.

Mr. LEADER: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the remark of the last speaker that the electors are the best judges of whether their representative should be here or not. I would suggest, in view of the fact that the electors are not always cognizant of the attitude of the member in the House and at times have no means of finding out, that we have some form of registration such as obtains in the Senate—that every day the roll be called and each member's name be taken down. I might add that the present Speaker of the House in 1920—

Mr. VIEN: Would my hon. friend allow me a question?

Mr. LEADER: —made this same suggestion. Sir Robert Borden in reply said that he had discussed the matter with Sir Wilfrid Laurier who agreed that it was the proper course to take, but he said that the other members of the committee chased them to the tall timbers or words to that effect. I suggest most respectfully that that rule be adopted and that we register the members every day in the House.

Mr. VIEN: I respectfully suggest that I respect the oath of a member of parliament who declares at the end of every month his days of attendance as much as an attendance record kept by a servant of the House.

Mr. LEADER: Then why object to the roll call?

Mr. BUREAU: We do not want to go back to school.

Mr. BOIVIN: There is a slight amendment which must now be made. It is merely a consequential amendment and arises from the fact that the length of the session in section 1 has been increased from fifty to sixty-five days. It is to amend clause 3 by inserting after the words "any session" in the second line of section 37, which is the seventeenth line on page 2, the following words, "extending over a period of sixty-five days or more." I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BOIVIN: There is another consequential amendment rendered necessary by the same change. It is now provided that in every session of parliament under fifty days the member shall be paid a salary of $25 for each day's attendance. I beg to move that clause 3 be amended by striking out the word "and" in the first line by inserting after the word "thirty-seven" in the same line the words "and thirty-eight" and by adding at the end of the said clause, the following:

"38. In every session of parliament covering a period of less than sixty-five days, there shall be payable to every member of the Senate and House of Commons attending at such session, twenty-five dollars for each day's attendance."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

On the motion of Sir Lomer Gouin for the third reading of the bill:

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Medicine Hat): This legislation has come before the House in a very hurried manner and I feel that the House has not had sufficient opportunity to go properly into this question in order that we may be assured of exactly what we are voting for. It is very regrettable indeed that legislation should have been brought down to this House and decided upon in such a short space of time. Therefore, I move:

That Bill No. 232 be not now read a third time but that it be read this day six months.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): I beg to move:

That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following words be substituted therefor:

That bill No. 232 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions to amend section 32 thereof by striking out the words "four thousand" wherever they appear in said section and substituting therefor the words "three thousand five hundred".

Amendment negatived.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. JOS. T. SHAW (Calgary West): In connection with the main motion I want to suggest that this question of fixing the indemnities of members of parliament by the members themselves is a very unfortunate matter. It would be very desirable if the indemnity could be fixed by some other organization, by somebody outside.

Mr. PARENT: The Civil Service Commission.

Mr. SHAW: Mr. Speaker, I think I am entitled to order and to be heard in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SHAW: I want to suggest that at the time the application was made for an increase in the indemnity in 1920, in my humble judgment, and I only offer it as a humble judgment, no adequate reason was given for the increase of the indemnity to the amount suggested. I have no doubt that facts did exist which justified an increase of some character, but whether it justified an increase to $4,000 is more than I know. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey this evening also, if I may respectfully suggest it, contained no adequate reason for a reduction to the amount suggested. I want to say, however, that so far as I am concerned I would have no objection if called upon, to vote for the reduction proposed by the hon. member for Southeast Grey, not that I think any substantial reason was urged but simply as an earnest of the desire of the House to economize wherever possible and for the other reason that I feel it is unfortunate that motives should be imputed to members of this House. It is one of those matters in which no matter what action you take you are, so far as the public is concerned, damned if you do one thing and damned if you do the other.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

YUKON ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. STEVENS (for Mr. Black, Yukon) moved the second reading of Bill No. 44, to amend the Yukon Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

On section 1—Recovery or defining of claims, mining property or mineral locations.

Mr. STEVENS: I will briefly explain this bill and in doing so I wish to expressly thank the Minister of Justice for his courtesy in permitting it to come up. This is a somewhat technical and formal amendment to the Yukon Act. The Yukon Act, as originally drafted, provided for trials, and so forth, but did not include provision for jury trials in certain cases. The reason for it was this: When Yukon was first opened up and this act was originally passed it was in the days of what was known as "the stampede." Conditions there were in an exceedingly disturbed state, and it was felt that it was not desirable to place such cases as mineral claims and disputes under jury trial as was the case in all other provinces. That condition has long since passed, twenty years ago or nearly so, and to-day Yukon is just as settled and as sober --shall I say?—in its thought and in its administration as any other part of Canada. All the feverish excitement has long since passed. This is simply to give to Yukon rights which are enjoyed by the other provinces.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: I have an amendment to offer to this section. The first clause provides for an appeal on interlocutory and final judgments in mining property cases. I do not think it would be advisable to permit appeals on interlocutory judgment; we should limit the appeal to final judgments. I therefore propose to amend the clause so that it will read:

1. Section forty-six of the Yukon Act, chapter sixty-three of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, as enacted by section two of chapter fifty-six of the statutes of 1912, is amended by adding at the end of subsection two thereof the following:—"or if the action be for the recovery of a claim, mining property, mineral claim or location, as defined by the Yukon Placer Mining Act, chapter sixty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, or by the regulations for the disposal of quartz mining claims on Dominion lands in the Yukon territory, or of any interest therein or to establish title thereto, or for the definition of or establishment of the boundaries of any such claim, mining property, mineral claim or location, or to establish the right of a claimant to any such claim, mining property, mineral claim or location or interest therein, or to have included within said claim, mining property, mineral claim or location, any land or property, or if the action be for divorce or judicial separation.

This will give an appeal in mining property cases for final judgments only.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2—Action for recovery, etc., of claims, mining property or mineral locations.

Sir LOMER GOUIN: Section 2 provides for a jury trial in mining property cases, as in the province of British Columbia, and also in cases of divorce and judicial separation.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Sir Lomer Gouin the House adjourned at 1.20 a.m. (Friday).

Friday, June 22, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF INQUIRY

Mr. COPP (for Mr. Malcolm) presented the second and final report of the special committee appointed to inquire into the operation of the Civil Service Act.

He said: I beg to give notice, on behalf of Mr. Malcolm, that he will move on Monday next that the second and final report of the special committee be concurred in.

PRIVATE BILLS

SUSPENSION OF RULE

Mr. H. B. McGIVERIN (Ottawa) moved that rule 103 relating to the posting of private bills in the lobby and in the votes and proceedings be suspended for the remainder of the session.

Mr. STEVENS: I think, if I recall rightly, the custom has been to make a motion with regard to any individual bill that appears to be too late for the usual notice at the end of the session, and not to propose an omnibus resolution of this kind.

Mr. McGIVERIN: This has been the custom for many years toward the end of the session on account of bills coming from the Senate. There are three or four divorce bills coming over on Tuesday or Wednesday which will have to be considered by the Private Bills committee, and a delay of twenty-four hours at this stage might prevent one or more of these bills from being passed this session.

[Sir Lomer Gouin.]

Mr. STEVENS: I think such a motion should be preceded by a report from the Private Bills committee.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING

Bill No. 223 (from the Senate), for the relief of Jessie Anne Epstein.—Mr. Duff.

PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 237, to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.

Mr. STEVENS: Explain.

Mr. BUREAU: If hon. members will look at the bill they will see that the measure speaks for itself. The amendments proposed are indicated in italics. The object of the proposed change is to permit the sale of naphtha. Under the present act the Governor in Council can regulate the possession, storage and transportation of naphtha and its sale is restricted except for certain purposes. In its present form the act reads:

> Naphtha shall not be sold or offered for sale in Canada for illuminating purposes except,—
> (a) for use in street lamps in which only the vapour is burned; or
> (b) for use in dwellings, factories and other places of business when vapourized in secure underground tanks outside the buildings in which the vapour so generated is used for lighting.

We want to make regulations so that the sale will be permitted for lighting purposes. This is rendered necessary by the invention of the Coleman lamp which has been put on the market and is going into general use. Doubtless hon. members are all familiar with the Coleman lamp. The insurance companies and the best experts in the United States have declared that it is perfectly safe. As the law now stands, a dealer or a man who has naphtha in his possession cannot sell it for illuminating purposes except as restricted by the general statute. The purpose of the present bill is to permit the sale of naphtha for illuminating purposes under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council.

Mr. SPEAKER: Strictly speaking this bill should have been preceded by a resolution but, perhaps, at this stage of the session that requirement might be dispensed with.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. BUREAU: Now.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. SPEAKER: This bill will be considered later on, under government orders.

Mr. BUREAU: It has been printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MORNING SITTINGS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved, seconded by Sir Lomer Gouin:

That on and after Tuesday the 26th day of June until the end of the present session, the House shall meet at 11 o'clock in the morning of each day, except Sundays, and that in addition to the usual intermission at 6 o'clock, p.m., there shall be also, an intermission every day from one till 3 o'clock p.m., and that the various committees of the House be at liberty to sit during the sessions of the House.

Motion agreed to.

AUDIT BOARD

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister, for the Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide:—

1. That the Governor in Council may appoint a Board of Audit to hold office until the first day of July, 1925, and to be composed of four members, one of whom shall be the Auditor General, one the Deputy Minister of Finance, and the two remaining members shall be public accountants of high standing;

2. That the public accountants, members of the said board, may be paid for their services such reasonable sums, not exceeding $3,000 each, in any one year as the Treasury Board may allow; and that the Treasury Board may allow the payment, out of any available appropriation, of necessary amounts for skilled assistants engaged by the board;

3. That the said board shall have the following duties and powers:—

(a) to inquire into and report upon the present system of audit of the public revenue and expenditure of Canada and to make recommendations for the more effective control of the same;

(b) to inquire into the systems of accounting employed by the Canadian National Railway Company and its constituent companies and any commission or other public body whose operations are carried on by appropriations from the treasury, and such other undertakings or services belonging to or receiving aid from the government of Canada as the Minister of Finance may direct, and to make recommendations with respect thereto;

4. That the members of the board shall for the purposes of these resolutions have the same power as is given to the Auditor General of Canada with respect to the various departments of the Dominion government.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and commends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE ACT, 1914

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister, for the Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to continue in force certain of the provisions of The Finance Act, 1914, and to provide:—

1. That the Minister of Finance may make advances to the chartered banks and to the Savings banks to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act, 1913, applies by the issue of Dominion notes upon the pledge of certain securities, such advances to be repayable within one year with interest at such rate as may be from time to time fixed by the Treasury Board.

2. That the provisions of the proclamation dated 3rd September, 1914, made under the authority of the Finance Act, 1914, so far as they authorize the chartered banks to make payments in their notes instead of in gold or Dominion notes, and so far as they suspend the redemption in gold of Dominion notes be continued in force for a period not exceeding three years after the date of the coming into force of any enactment founded on this resolution; provided that the Governor in Council by proclamation may declare and proclaim an earlier date for the termination of any enactment which may be founded on this resolution; and

3. That the Governor in Council during a period not exceeding three years after the date of the coming into force of any enactment founded on this resolution may by proclamation from time to time and for any period or periods declare and proclaim that the export of gold coin, gold bullion and fine gold bars from the Dominion of Canada shall be prohibited except in such cases as may be deemed desirable by the Minister of Finance and under licenses to be issued by him; provided that the Governor in Council by proclamation may declare and proclaim an earlier date for the termination of any enactment which may be founded on this resolution.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General has been informed of the subject matter of this resolution and commends it to the favourable consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION —Mr. GERVAIS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. THEODORE GERVAIS (Berthier): Before the orders of the day are called, I would like to explain a statement reported in yesterday's Hansard when I interrupted the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader). I am reported to have said:

He was simply saying that you were not consistent.

These words are quite correct, but they did not apply exclusively to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. The hon. member for Laprairie and Napierville (Mr. Lanctot) in his speech, had referred to the Progressive members sitting opposite, mainly those coming from the province of Ontario, and when the hon. member for Portage la Prairie spoke of consistency, I used the words I have just quoted. My allusion was to the members designated by the member for Laprairie and Napierville, and not exclusively to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie.

REDISTRIBUTION

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): A matter of great public importance was referred to in the Speech from the Throne. The session is now nearing an end. I do not know what has happened, but no mention has been made of the question of redistribution. Is it likely that that committee on that subject will make a report? Or what steps will be taken in connection with this matter? Can the government give any information?

Hon. E. M. MACDONALD (Pictou, Acting Minister of National Defence): I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I had expected to hold a meeting of that committee this week, but owing to the fact that a great many members, the larger number being from the Ontario constituencies, were absent, I have been unable to hold the meeting. I propose giving notice of the meeting for Tuesday next, when these members will have returned from the elections, and the matter will be dealt with.

THE UNION BANK

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. FORKE: I ask leave to move the adjournment of the House, under rule 39, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely to call attention to certain statements appearing in the press, apparently of an authentic nature, regarding the financial position of the Union Bank of Canada and the necessity of safeguarding the public interest in every possible way.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Perhaps my hon. friend will consent to allow this motion to stand over until eight o'clock this evening. I think the Finance Minister will be in his place at that time. I think it would be preferable to take up the matter then.

Mr. FORKE: That will be quite acceptable, with the stipulation that we have the right of way at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Certainly, that is understood—after Private Bills.

[Mr. Gervais.]

APPEALS FROM CONVICTIONS

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. W. G. McQUARRIE (New Westminster): I desire to ask a question of the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) in reference to Bill No. 106, which stands in my name on the order paper. This bill is entitled "An Act to Extend the Right of Appeal from Convictions for Indictable Offences." That bill, of course, cannot be reached at this session. I wish to ask the Minister of Justice (Sir Lomer Gouin) if he would consider the advisability of taking over this bill as a government measure for next session. It is a very important measure. It was passed unanimously by the Senate after a full and complete investigation by a special committee, whose report also I believe, was unanimous. I think Canada is the only country in the world where the right of appeal is not given.

Sir LOMER GOUIN (Minister of Justice): I cannot make a promise that I will take the bill over as a government measure. I understand this is a very important question, and we are now in communication with the attorneys general of the provinces in regard to it. The provinces are interested because they have to pay for the administration. I am now studying the question. I do not promise that next session I will ask my colleagues to make this a government measure; but it is a very interesting point and it is possible that we shall make it a government measure.

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE AND ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

On the Orders of the Day.

Mr. GOOD: When will the House have an opportunity of discussing the agenda of the Imperial Conference and the Economic Conference to be held this fall?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have mentioned, I think, several times, that when the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, they will contain an item to make provision for the Economic Conference and the Imperial Conference, and that will be the appropriate time, I think, for the discussion to take place. I hope the Supplementary Estimates will be brought down possibly by Tuesday or Wednesday of next week. I cannot give my hon. friend a definite assurance, but I will endeavour to see that that item is brought up at an early stage.

Mr. GOOD: Will it be brought up not earlier than Tuesday?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I will promise my hon. friend that it will not be brought up before Tuesday.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT, 1914. AMENDMENT

Hon. Mr. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, by providing:—

1. That a minimum standard of fat in butter be established;

2. That the Governor in Council be empowered by proclamation to permit the importation, manufacture and sale of renovated butter in Canada;

3. That the manufacture, importation, selling, offering or having in possession for sale of milk or cream which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk be prohibited;

4. That regulations may be made respecting (a) records being kept by manufacturers and dealers in butter, renovated butter and cheese, and for the examination of such records by inspectors; (b) the importation, manufacture, inspection, marking, advertising and sale of renovated butter; (c) the registration of all cheese factories and creameries in Canada, and the compulsory use of an assigned number on the product of each factory or on the packages containing said product;

5. That penalties for violation of the regulations be increased, and methods established for proving the guilt of persons charged with infractions of the act as amended, and for the procedure to be followed in all such cases.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On clause 2.

Mr. TOLMIE: Can we get an explanation of this from the minister?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This whole resolution was associated with the Dairy Industry Act, which was discharged from the Order Paper two or three weeks ago, with one important difference, that difference being in clause 2 which we are now discussing. The reason that I have incorporated this clause in the present resolution and did not have it in the resolution when it was previously before the House, is this. Last year when the discussion was up on the oleomargarine question, I took the ground that, in my opinion, a better solution of the question of a cheap spread for bread was renovated butter and not oleomargarine. Last year the House did not take my statement very seriously, and as the question was not before the House, I suppose they were justified in assuming that attitude. At the same time I gave my assurance that if the oleomargarine resolution met with the same decision last year as it has this year, I would immediately advise my colleagues that in my estimation it would be a good idea to remove the prohibition on the manufacture of renovated butter. Inasmuch, however, as the vote of the House last year was in favour of continuing the manufacture of oleomargarine, there was no call for such action. This year I had no occasion to make any remarks with regard to the question of oleomargarine, as the matter seemed to be in a fairly good condition, and I was afraid that possibly I might spoil it by saying anything. Nevertheless, had I said anything, I would have re-stated my position as regards renovated butter as a cheap bread spread for the poor man. I feel called upon to implement that pledge of last year. I will read from Hansard just one extract indicating what I said, and I will not read any more than is necessary. I said:

I am prepared, if my colleagues will agree with me, to take that prohibition off by legislation this session—

That was last session.

—as a means of giving real relief; as a means of giving butter which is not 2 per cent butter—some of my friends here claim that they have had enough 2 per cent—but 100 per cent butter with 100 per cent food content.

That was my statement last year and although I did not repeat it in the House for the reasons I have indicated, I have repeated it in letters to various individuals throughout Canada. I stated to these parties that I recognized that there was an argument in favour of some kind of cheap spread for bread for people who could not—or felt that they could not—afford to buy creamery butter; that inasmuch as oleomargarine was a commodity of which nobody knew the ingredients, it was, in my estimation defective in food properties. As the House has decided to revert to the old order of things by a resolution passed recently, I am here to carry out my statement as regards the manufacture of renovated butter.

As this is a comparatively new question, the people of Canada do not know much about renovated butter. It has been prohibited for twenty years, and because it has been prohibited for so long it is a comparatively new question to possibly ninety-five per cent of the people. What is this new article and what is the history of its prohibition? In order to give an answer to that question, we have in this resolution and in a bill associated with it, merely asked that the Governor in Council be given power by proclamation to provide for the manufacture of this product. It is not proposed to authorize this immediately. A period will elapse, to be determined by the amount of requests for the manufacture of renovated butter. If nobody calls for the manufacture of it, if the labour organizations, the women's organizations, the miners' organizations, the lumber organizations, and any others, make no requests, the chances are that no proclamation will be issued, inasmuch as this would indicate that there was no demand.

Why am I bringing in this bill? In the first place, because I want to carry out my statement; and, secondly, because I believe there is room in our domestic economy for such a product as renovated butter. The question is a considerable one that presents many phases, and later on, if the discussion is protracted, I may find it necessary to deal with some of the details. In the meantime my primary object is to meet a demand which I am convinced exists. There has been some criticism with regard to the question of importation. Some critics take the ground that there would be no objection to providing a market for the dairy butter made by the pioneer settler, by putting it into proper shape to be sold before it deteriorated to too great an extent. It sometimes happens that butter shipped to an outside market becomes bad when it is a long time in transit; occasionally it is not shipped in refrigerator cars, and by the time it reaches Minneapolis, say, or New York, it is in a worse condition than renovated butter manufactured and sold on the Canadian market. There is the assurance, as embodied in the resolution, that the manufacture of renovated butter will be legal only upon the issuance of a proclamation; and personally I would not mind incorporating in the bill a provision that no such proclamation should be issued within a year, or at least until there was an evident demand from those most concerned. I want to assure the committee that I have no desire whatever to thrust anything like this upon the market if there is no demand for it; but there is undoubtedly a certain amount of demand on the part of the wholesale produce dealers who handle our dairy butter. People have repeatedly written to me, particularly from the West, wanting to know, inasmuch as this article is produced by farmers, and was the only kind of butter we had fifty years ago, why it should be banished from the country in summary fashion, having to climb a tariff wall of eight cents a pound to get into the United States. It is further pointed out that the local country stores experience considerable difficulty in finding a market for it. It is urged that provision should be made for the manufacture of it in Canada, and I think it may very reasonably be inferred from all the circumstances that there is at least sufficient demand to warrant the action we propose taking. The night the oleomargarine debate concluded, about ten days ago, some hon. gentlemen asked me why I did not bring down a measure with regard to renovated butter; and one person particularly pointed out that inasmuch as the poor people were going to be deprived of oleomargarine there was no reason why this other substitute, or rather this form of butter, should not be manufactured. That, Mr. Chairman, is briefly a summary of the situation. I may remark, by the way, that I have referred the matter to my colleagues who have agreed to the proposal, believing it to be a good one.

Mr. GOOD: Will the minister explain to the committee how renovated butter is made? What is the composition of it? Is it defined?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have been trying to ascertain the quality of the product during the past five or six years; in fact, before coming here at all I was interested in the subject. The moment that the manufacture of oleomargarine was permitted there immediately arose the question why this product should be banished from the market. I have had some correspondence with American manufacturers in reference to this matter, and one letter that I have received is particularly interesting. I shall not read the whole of the letter because I think it is rather too long to put on Hansard. But it is from an authority in Chicago, a man who, I may say, is not a manufacturer of renovated butter but a real dairyman whose interests are rather, if anything, opposed to this product. Still inasmuch as renovated butter is a recognized and standard article on the market, being quoted just the same as creamery butter, it is well that there should be no misapprehension regarding its nature and value. Renovated butter is usually quoted about halfway between creamery butter and oleomargarine. About a fortnight ago oleomargarine let us say, stood at 30 cents—I am not giving the exact figures, of course, but the proportions are true—while creamery butter was quoted at 40 cents. Renovated butter then would fetch 4 cents more than oleomargarine and 6 cents less than creamery butter. Sometimes the variation is exactly midway between the two extremes of oleomargarine and creamery butter. The letter to which I have referred comes from Mr. G. L. McKay, secretary of the American Association of Creamery Butter Manufacturers. It is not addressed to me personally, because I am not acquainted with Mr. McKay, but my department is constantly in touch with the organization of which Mr. McKay is secretary, and the letter from which I am about to quote was written to Mr. J. A. Ruddick, the Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner. Mr. McKay gives a good deal more information than we asked for, but it is all very interesting. We merely inquired, by telegram, the value of renovated butter as a food product as compared with butter and other articles: we were anxious to know what part these mysterious vitamines played in this particular foodstuff. Mr. McKay says:

There is nothing about renovated butter that should make it in any way unwholesome. Ladles or farm butter is gathered together and melted at a moderate heat. The pure butterfat or oil is pumped from the melting vat into funnel shaped tanks and air is blown through it, and that removes any odours that may adhere to the fat.

I may explain here that one of the reasons why dairy butter does not always keep is the fact that it is salted with exceedingly coarse salt, and often there is too much water left in it. Frequently, too, an excess of buttermilk or curd is left in the butter and its keeping properties are consequently impaired, so that it becomes rancid if not kept in cold storage.

When the oil becomes odourless it runs into cold water where it goes back into butter flakes, looking very much like butter granules. A starter is added to this,—

Sometimes people take this word "starter" to indicate a chemical compound, but it is nothing more nor less than sour cream. It is put into the churn to promote acidity. Seldom do we find dairy butter made from entirely sweet milk; there is always a slight acidity to it.

—and the granules in the same conditions stay in the starter for some time, and it is then worked in the usual manner. Some pour the starter into the oil, I understand, before it runs into the water to be congealed; in other words, renovated butter is butter that has not been made right on the farm. It contains too much salt, or too much water, or too much curd. It is usually churned at too high a temperature and contains a lot of curd. Coarse salt is frequently used, and butter of a poor character is the result.

I will venture the suggestion, without knowing much about the business of some of my hon. friends opposite, that they have often been tempted themselves to raise the temperature of cream to make it "come."

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister speak from experience?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do.

Mr. SHAW: Might that remark be considered a reflection on members on this side?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all; I think it ought to be taken as a compliment. If hon. gentlemen are not familiar with these things, then there is something lacking in their agricultural knowledge. Mr. McKay says:

The business has gone back in this country—

That is, the United States.

—very much due to the fact there are not as many farmers now making their own butter. The centralized system has extended so much in our country and covers such a wide territory and cream is shipped such a long distance that the farmers that used to make their own butter and trade it for groceries are selling their cream to the centralizers. Cream buying stations are scattered all over the United States. The farmer now brings in his cream in a crock or pail if he only has two or three cows, and if he has more he brings it in a can. It is only in scattered districts that the farmer is still making butter.

As far as purity goes, I can see no reason but what renovated butter is as clean and pure as any butter that is made.

As hon. gentlemen know, it depends on the buttermaker. I think half the people of Canada would prefer dairy butter if they could get it of good quality. In many instances they can and do get a good quality, because the product of a home dairy, made from one herd, under the supervision of one person who is a capable buttermaker, is at least quite equal to the average creamery butter.

I have seen some of it that would score 94 or 95. This depends somewhat upon the quality of the raw material, or the quality of the butter that was melted and the manner of making it. In scoring contests I have run across it several times put in as creamery butter. I invariably have been able to detect it by letting it dissolve in my mouth.

One of the reasons why renovated butter was prohibited was not because of its quality generally, but because those in charge of the dairy industry at that time were afraid that it might be mixed with creamery butter and jeopardize our market in the United Kingdom. Since then, however, we have instituted a grading system, so that this objection does not apply to-day as it did twenty years ago.

There is a slight oily taste. Then if it is broken apart on the trier, the grain is rather fine and glistens a little more than the ordinary creamery butter.

The word "grain" is not used very much now; we speak of "texture".

I talked with Mr. W. S. Moore, commission merchant, who used to be head of a large process factory, after receiving your telegram.

It used to be called "process butter".

He recommended it very highly although he is not dealing in it at the present time. He said that he has bought as much as ten or twelve carloads of ladle butter from northwest Canada a year, and he thinks in a country where there are a lot of farmers butter made especially of an irregular quality that a renovated factory would be a good thing.

In the wire sent to this gentleman there was no suggestion that we wanted information of this kind. Apparently in view of the situation in the United States he wondered why Canada did not renovate its homemade butter. This is a long letter and I do not think I need read any further.

Mr. FORKE: During the debate on oleomargarine the trouble feared seemed to be the mixing of butter with oleo. Is there any danger in this case of the mixing of oleomargarine with butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not anticipate any danger from oleomargarine inasmuch as the right to manufacture it will expire in August and it cannot be offered for sale after March next. But there is a danger of this renovated butter being mixed with creamery butter, and therefore if its manufacture is permitted it will have to be subject to the stipulation that it be manufactured in an entirely separate building, so there will not be the least temptation to work it into creamery butter. That is the danger which exists to-day with regard to oleomargarine. As a matter of fact "manna" consists of oleo mixed with butter. This bill prohibits the mixing of any foreign fats with butter. It provides that butter shall consist of eighty per cent butter fat, and this leaves no room for foreign fats as the other 20 per cent consists of salt and water.

Mr. KNOX: Where does the minister expect to get a market for the renovated butter?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very much the same market that oleomargarine now supplies—those who want a cheap spread. In the United States renovated butter is made of such a generally high standard that the market is not confined to the poorer people, the price being within six cents of creamery butter. I hope the committee, Mr. Chairman, will not look upon me as an ardent advocate of the use of inferior butter. I am not anxious to press renovated butter upon an unwilling country. I simply want to redeem my promise that this opportunity of obtaining a cheap spread would be given.

As a pioneer in Manitoba, I am sure the hon. leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) must have made a considerable amount of butter. I can recall the time, too, when the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Hopkins) was a trail blazer in improving dairying in the old Northwest Territories. They will remember that at that time there was nothing but dairy butter made; and this has always been the case with our early settlers. At the present time, the surplus of our dairy butter after supplying the home requirements has to get over the eight-cent American tariff wall and the handicap of express and freight charges. The result is that the price paid to the frontier man is very very small, especially since the Fordney tariff went into force. Consequently this is one of the advantages of introducing renovated butter at this time if the people want it—a home market will be provided. Nobody is going to force renovated butter on the people; and that is why we want an educative campaign throughout the country. The people do not understand what renovated butter is. It is simply the dairy butter that most of us were brought up on, which, having become rancid, is put in a condition fit for food. I am sure that any pioneer in Canada who had to keep the wolf from the door, as I and many others did, by making dairy butter, will have compassion upon the frontier man who still relies on his output of dairy butter during the summer for his grocery supplies. It is an advantage that works both ways: The use of renovated butter creates a market for the man who produces dairy butter and affords a cheap spread to those who desire to use it.

Do not imagine that I am trying to press this matter unduly; I want to give hon. members an opportunity to say what they think about it. Those who were in favour of a cheap spread being provided when we were discussing oleomargarine should hold up both hands for this measure. I am satisfied not only as to the quality of renovated butter, but as to its food content. I could read further on in this letter a statement about the vitamines that it contains, and if half the value attaches to vitamines that the scientists claim, that consideration is a very important one, especially when comparison is made with the other cheap spread that we have discussed. I merely want to give an opportunity for an educative campaign by bringing this enactment into effect by proclamation. If the committee likes, I will incorporate in the bill a provision that the proclamation shall not issue for at least twelve months, so that the country may have an opportunity of discussing it. The hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) when Minister of Agriculture, brought down one of the best pieces of legislation introduced by the late government, namely, the Dairy Produce Act. That act was put into force by proclamation and the proclamation did not take place until nearly two years after the act was passed. That act met with a good deal of opposition from certain members. We are always fearful of changes in procedure which we have followed for forty years or so. It is not often I am in a position to speak in complimentary terms, not of the hon. member for Victoria City, but of the late government. I want to say to their credit, however, that they did put this progressive legislation on the statute book, and we waited for two years before it was proclaimed law. During that time an educative campaign was carried on; the dairymen were finally ready to accept it, and you do not hear a murmur about it now. The system of grading butter and cheese as provided by that act simply glided into force, without leaving even a ripple on the surface. I am sure the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy) will corroborate what I say as to the wisdom of that procedure. So it will be with this legislation; in 4 p.m. fact, the proclamation will not issue at all if the people do not want it—I am sure I am not going to force it on them. But if they do want it after oleo goes out in March, I think it would be fair to give them the opportunity—that is all.

Mr. TOLMIE: With regard to clause 2 of this resolution, I may point out that for a number of years the manufacture or importation into Canada of renovated butter has not been permitted. During those years Canada has made greater progress in her dairying than in any other period of her history. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) in describing renovated butter. He said it was a product made from butter that contains too much salt, too much water, or too much curd—and he stopped there. The description would have been more accurate had he added, too much smell. He also said it was one hundred per cent butter fat, but he neglected to say it might be one hundred per cent rancid butter fat. If ordinary dairy butter does not have any of these objectionable features, there is no reason why it should not find a market in this country without any difficulty whatever. He speaks also about the pioneering that was done in the past, about our frontier farmers and about how we had to sell our dairy butter when there were no creameries. I remember those days very well indeed, but even then we had people who made butter of first-class quality in the dairies, and others who turned out a product that was as much butter as axle grease and commanded about the same price. I remember well the introduction of the creamery system, a step which put dairying on its feet in British Columbia. If in these outlying districts they cannot turn out a good quality of butter by the ordinary methods, then the next best thing is to encourage a co-operative creamery system. By doing that we can get away to a good start in the dairy business in these districts. A good deal of objection can be urged against the introduction of this renovated butter. There is this about oleo: It is made from fresh ingredients, under the strictest possible inspection, with sanitary conditions prevailing in the abattoirs or packing houses in which it is manufactured that do not obtain in the average dairy. It is proposed by this resolution to permit a man to make any kind of dirty butter; to keep his cream separator as dirty as he likes—to wash it once or twice a week instead of twice a day; to milk his cows with dirty hands and as a result to get dirty cream; to keep the cream too warm; to churn the butter badly, with the result that it is off in colour, in odour or in texture We propose to say to that man: Never mind; we are going to make you prosperous; we will provide a place where you can take your butter and have it deodorized so as to make it fit to eat. In my opinion it would be much better to begin with the farmer himself, to do what we can to teach him how to keep the cream; to impress upon him the necessity for cleanliness in his dairy; then, where there are three or four hundred cows in one locality, to encourage if possible the establishment of co-operative creameries. The dairyman should be taught right from the beginning that he cannot make a living out of the dairy business by milking a scrub cow and by producing a brand of butter that has to be deodorized at one of these factories before it can be sold. By following a system of that kind we can help to put the dairying of Canada on a much firmer basis than by any such proposal as is offered in clause 2 of this resolution.

Now, what is butter? According to United States law and the regulations governing its manufacture, butter is a food product made exclusively from milk or cream with or without salt or colouring matter. Renovated butter is described as butter which is subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified or refined and made to resemble genuine butter. So you see the United States does not recognize renovated butter as genuine butter. In the United States large quantities of adulterated butter are manufactured; and I notice that the hon. minister has not referred to this in his resolution. The United States Government defines adulterated butter to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, re-working, re-churning in milk or cream, refining or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter or butter fat in which any acid, alkali, chemical, or any substance whatever is introduced or used for the purpose or with the effect of deodorizing or removing therefrom rancidity; or any butter or butter fat with which there is mixed any substance foreign to butter as herein defined with intention or effect of cheapening in cost the product; or any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk or cream. In the United States special taxes are applied to these products. On renovated butter there is a tax of a quarter of a cent per pound, and on adulterated butter a tax of ten cents per pound. Now, the general practice followed in renovating butter is to melt it at a temperature of fifty or sixty degrees. I wish to draw attention to this fact: That by melting at that low temperature you do not obtain any of the effects you might look for in properly pasteurized cream or milk, so that any germ contained in that butter may still remain. The water is separated from the oils that have been melted and then the impurities, the soluble impurities are washed out with clean water. Then it is aerated to remove the bad odors. After being laundered in this method it has neither taste, nor colour, nor odor, and to make it taste like butter it is necessary to restore its granular texture. This is done by spraying the liquid with ice cold water. Then butter colour is added to make it look like June butter. Finally the lactic sharp flavour which is so much in demand in good butter by adding a starter, or in other words lactic acid bacteria. Then the product is rolled out and worked in the ordinary way. It has been shown, though, that an oxidization takes place in this bleaching process. You will remember that in the oleo discussion it was brought out that the absence of vitamines was indicated very largely by the colour of butter; that the white winter butter was very low in vitamine content, while the June grass butter was highly yellow in colour indicating a richness of vitamines. So when this butter is washed out and bleached in this laundering process I have just described it has been lowered in vitamine content to a considerable extent. It therefore has not the same food value that ordinary butter would have. But, dressed up as it is in its new clothes, with a new smell, a new colour and so forth, it is quite suitable for fooling the public as far as butter buying is concerned. Then it has been shown not to be a good keeper. Professor Clayton, Master of Science, of Liverpool University, says:

[Mr. Tolmie.]

Cleanliness is most essential at every stage during renovation and even then the keeping qualities of the product are much inferior to those of ordinary butter.

Showing you how necessary it will be, if renovated butter is allowed to be produced in this country, to carefully guard against its being mixed with any product which we export to the Old Country.

In my opinion the legislation proposed is a retrograde step. As I pointed out a while ago the dairyman who has a cow perhaps that is giving 125 pounds of butter fat a year, is being jollied into the belief that he can continue to make butter in a creamery in which his cream is carelessly kept, whilst his cow is housed in a dirty stable in winter, he is to be permitted to send the product down to the butter laundry where it will be deodorized and sold to the people. I do not think we should do anything of that kind. The sooner this man is informed that he cannot hope to carry on dairying successfully either with a scrub cow, or with such scrub methods on his dairy farm, the better it will be for him and for the dairy interests of Canada. In fact the government will be doing him a special favour to inform him on that point. There is nothing in this proposition for the farmer as far as I can see. The average dairy cow of Canada will yield from 125 to 150 pounds of butter fat in the year. Let us say, to give her the benefit of the doubt, she averaged 150 pounds and that her lactation period lasts 300 days. This would give her average as half a pound of butter fat per day. This bad butter, I understand, sells at from ten to thirteen cents a pound according to smell and appearance. We will give the benefit of the doubt again and allow twenty cents as the average for the year. That would be a return of just ten cents per day per cow for that farmer, and perhaps that butter needs deodorizing before it can be sold. Anyone will see that this is a hopeless proposition; it will benefit somebody. The man who operates that factory will buy this butter just as cheaply as he can, will put it through this renovating process, and then sell it at a fairly good price. It will also be a benefit to the butter speculator who will buy a certain quantity of butter when it is cheap, place it in cold storage, and then wait for a rise in the market. Quite frequently that butter goes off colour and goes off in condition, and if there is a renovating factory in the country he can always send the product down to the laundry, have it done over, and then serve it up again. This is decidedly unfair to the maker of good butter in Canada—to the man who keeps a good herd of cattle, who is careful about his dairying methods, who observes cleanliness in the care of his separators, and milking utensils and milking operations. It is particularly unfair to the producer of butter in British Columbia where we have a fine creamery system established for a long time and which has rendered very excellent service to the dairy business. In addition to making butter of very excellent quality in British Columbia we are also importers; we bring in hundreds of tons of butter from outside points into that province to supply the wants of the people there. Therefore, if renovated butter is permitted then the British Columbia producer of good butter will have to compete with this much cheaper and inferior article. There is also a very great danger, as the minister has pointed out, of mixing this renovated butter with our export butter for the Old Country. I should just like to quote what has happened in the United States in this regard. I quote again from "The Butter Industry in the United States," page 157:

> The amount of butter exported from this country has decreased considerably since 1890, when nearly 30 million pounds were exported. In 1914 the amount exported was less than 4 million pounds. This decline is due to several causes. With the appearance of oleomargarine and renovated butter large quantities of this stock were sent abroad marked as finest American creamery butter. This deception soon destroyed our reputation for making good butter, just as our reputation for making good cheese was lost by exporting adulterated and filled cheese.

Let me quote the Dairy and Food Commissioner of Michigan. In a report which deals with renovated butter he says:

> One can scarcely conceive how the ill-made and spoilt country butter, after lying for weeks in the hot storeroom of the country merchants and becoming positively nauseating, can be worked over and made sufficiently deceiving as to be sold for creamery butter. The fact remains that that is done, and in Michigan, at least, tons of this worked-over renovated butter are sold for good butter with greater or less deceit.

Now, with regard to the mixing of oleo with butter, the test for oleo is very similar to the test for this renovated or process butter, making it easy to find oleomargarine when it is added to creamery butter for the purpose of fraud, but being rather more difficult to discover whether any process or renovated butter has been added to the good article. Mixing this inferior butter with the good article which we propose to send over from Canada to Great Britain would have a tremendous effect on our British market, if we are going to get any hold on that market. With regard to the proposal to import this inferior butter from the United States, I think this is nothing short of outrageous. Why should we furnish a market in this country for this outcast material from the country south of the line? We are about twenty years behind the times, too, in our move to introduce renovated butter into Canada. Let us see what has happened in the United States. In the year 1903, 54,658,790 pounds of renovated butter was made in the United States, and in the year 1921 this had decreased to 6,099,110, or a decrease of something over almost 90 per cent. In the meantime creamery butter has increased very considerably. To meet the situation of this man on the outskirts, who is situated in the newer provinces, distant from the market, my idea would be to instruct him as fully as possible, perhaps in co-operation with the provincial government, giving him full knowledge of the necessity of having the right kind of cow in his dairy and of dairying along the proper lines. This can be done through the Farmers' Institutes. It was done that way in British Columbia. I had to do with the organization of several creameries in that country, and I was working on institute work for the provincial government. It can be done through our printed matter, which is turned out by the Department of Agriculture in very large quantity every year, and it is very excellent matter. The encouragement of the establishment of co-operative creameries, the buying of the cream on grade, and then the full education of the farmer to the fact that if he wishes to succeed—and I stress this many times over—he must get the right kind of cow, and produce the turned-out products that will promise to him the largest possible price. Every one of us who has had any experience in the dairy business knows that we must get the highest price by producing the highest priced article, if we ever hope to succeed, which means that we must work 365 days each year. We should do everything possible to develop our export market, and I do not know what effect, with our butter, perhaps, falling back a little on the British market, it will have to advise the Britishers over there that we have now taken up the renovated butter making in Canada —something we never did before. I am sure it will not improve our position. I think we should turn out the best possible article, inspect the butter very very carefully, and add, as I have proposed "Canada approved," such as we have attached to many of our agricultural products in this country, as an indication that we stand behind the goods. I think it is very regrettable that the hon. minister has brought this important resolution before the House at this late date. We are very short of information.

What I would like to know before coming to any final decision on this matter is: What proportion of the 240,000,000 pounds of butter manufactured in Canada last year was it necessary to find a market for in this country, and what proportion of that butter that has to be marketed was in such bad condition that it would require renovating before being sold? Then again what proportion, if any of this butter that is not fit for use comes from our creamery establishments? With this information and other information at hand, we would be in a very much better position to go into this matter in an intelligent way, and I sincerely hope the hon. minister will kindly consider postponing this part of the resolution until next year, when the matter can be brought up early and we will have plenty of time to get the information.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friend has made the very best of what I think is not a very good case. I cannot help feeling some sympathy with the phase of the situation he suggested, namely, not dealing with it at the present time. That is exactly what the resolution does. We are not taking action at once. We are asking power to take action by proclamation. We can insert in the proviso that that proclamation will not issue until twelve months have elapsed, to afford an opportunity to discuss it in the House or in the country or next session, or if the committee thinks otherwise exclude it altogether. I will run over some of the objections raised by my hon. friend. He has raised a lot of objections, some of them very ingenious, and I have to compliment him on his remarks. He refers to the butter, and says that the chief characteristic is too much smell. Of course, it has a bad smell. Anything that you let deteriorate has a bad smell. My hon. friend has spoken about the cream this year that goes to some of our centralized creameries standing around until the top is blown off the can. Of course that would produce one of the most objectionable odours you could get—

Mr. FORKE: No, it is pungent, but not disagreeable.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is a matter of taste.

Mr. FORKE: No, it is a matter of smell.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is a question of neglecting it. I wonder how eggs would smell if not put in cold storage and if let lie around like butter. We all know the story of the dairy butter; after you have supplied the home markets, it is taken to the store and the store accepts it, reluctantly as a rule, and usually trades it off. They accept it in exchange for goods. They have not enough of it to make a small shipment. It takes ten days or two weeks to accumulate enough for a shipment and it is not in cold storage during that time, it is usually in the warehouse where conditions are not favourable for it; and it is sent down to some wholesale produce dealer, perhaps in Edmonton, Winnipeg or Regina. It is accumulated in carload lots and sent out to the country. What can we expect it to be like? It must have a certain amount of odour. Use creamery butter in the same way, and what would it smell like? Use any article, the finest food in the country, in this way and what would it smell like? You can get a bad smell very easily. You can get it sometimes off the breath of very healthy people and you would not like to annihilate them or banish them from the country because of the odour. Lack of care will develop this smell in any food product so that there is nothing in that argument, except a rather clever presentation that does not really go very far, because it applies to anything which is neglected and there is sometimes the grossest kind of neglect in the handling of the dairy products of Canada. What are we going to do with this material? That is the proposition. Can we make any better use of it?

My hon. friend speaks of permitting this, or encouraging this. We are not encouraging it. We are dealing with a question that is unavoidable. There will always be a frontier in Canada for the next hundred years, or maybe longer. I have known of this for fifty or sixty years. My father before me was for seventy-five years experiencing frontier conditions, and the men who follow us will experience them. Can we take care of this matter? It is not encouraging dirt. The finest creamery butter in the world has dirt in it. It is said that the people of the city of New York eat a ton of manure every year. That is unavoidable. You cannot avoid some dirt in the finest creamery butter or milk. I am calling things by their names, and before I am done, I have a few more names to deal with. My good friend cannot get away from oleomargarine. We are not exactly dealing with oleomargarine.

Mr. FORKE: We are going to deal with it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It has been brought up. The hon. member for Battleford (Mr. McConica) in his very excellent address on oleomargarine, took the ground that he did not want it because he did not know what it was. The ground was well taken. Hon. members and the people do not know what is in it, and if they did, they would not want to eat it. What is oleomargarine? Homemade oleomargarine is nothing more than ordinary gut fat, such as we used to make, and still make, soap out of. The leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke) knows that.

Mr. TOLMIE: Would the minister kindly define "gut fat"?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is not kidney fat at all events. Gut fat is any fat that may be found on the alimentary canal from the esophagus to the rectum.

Mr. TOLMIE: That is just according to the minister's definition, but that is not generally accepted. Oleomargarine is manufactured from the caul and ruffle fats, good, clean, healthy fats, and they are recognized as edible fats. There are edible and non-edible fats. The edible fats are those that are generally defined as those that are obtained without real danger of becoming contaminated by the breaking of the intestines. These fats, I may say, are just as wholesome as any part of the muscle adjoining them, or any other part of the viscera, such as the liver, heart, and so on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There are plenty of things that you can get from the animal that are clean, that you would not want to eat. The fat that oleomargarine is made of is not kidney fat. The fats are to be found on any part of the abdominal duct or the alimentary canal, or anything you choose to call it, the stomach and the caul go into it with the rest. I have taken this fat off animals when I was a young man, and I know exactly what it is. I know the source from which it is got. When my hon. friend was describing the beauties of this article the other day, he spoke of it as "selected." To what extent is it selected? If one of the intestines breaks, it is selected from the rest, and that is the extent of the selection. None of the kidney fat goes into oleomargarine, except in one particular, and I will describe that, seeing that we are discussing this—

Mr. STEVENS: The minister is out of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am, but I did not raise this question.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, the minister did.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think my hon. friends have had enough of the ingredients of oleomargarine, and we will leave the rest for a future date, if that is desirable.

Mr. TOLMIE: I want to say that all this is absolutely selected under the close supervision of the minister's employees.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course it is.

Mr. TOLMIE: And they are just as good inspectors as are to be found in any other country in the world. Their certificates are accepted in other countries. The minister says that if an intestine breaks, that passes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No, I said if it does, that is selected. I have had one of my chief inspectors come to my office voluntarily and tell me exactly what goes into oleomargarine. He is the one that knows, because he supervises the process, he stands over the cauldron.

Mr. TOLMIE: I have dissected these animals from one end to the other, and I have seen the work of the inspectors.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I said that when an intestine breaks, it is selected out. That is the selection. You would not have it remain in.

Mr. FORKE: I do not know whether I am in order or not, but from the minister's remarks, one would imagine that oleomargarine was past and gone, buried forever.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say that.

Mr. FORKE: I want to point out that the question stands now entirely on its merits. It is not settled.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certainly.

Mr. FORKE: Some day the decision will have to be made for or against oleomargarine.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certainly.

Mr. FORKE: The minister was very clever during the debate on oleomargarine, but we shall get even with him yet.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not speak at all on the oleomargarine debate. That was not necessary.

Mr. FORKE: I am not making insinuations of an unpleasant character at all. I do not mean that.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not take it that way. I did not make a speech on the question of oleomargarine when the matter was up this session. A year ago I did, and I then gave a promise that an opportunity would be given to the committee to discuss the question of renovated butter. I am carrying that out. Apart from that, there is a very decided merit in connection with the question of renovated butter. Let me continue my remarks, because my hon. friend has made a number of very interesting statements, and I think they require a little investigation and examination.

My hon. friend said that I did not refer to re-churning. I did not—I did not refer to a number of things; I thought everybody knew that renovated butter is re-churned. I knew that in the old days, and even to-day a farmer who puts away a tub of butter in the fall, or even in the spring of the year, for his own use, quite frequently has some of that butter left over when the next freshening season comes around. When he makes new butter—I do not know whether this is done now, but it was done—the old butter is cut into small particles, and it is churned up with the first new churning just as the cream is breaking into butter. The whole thing is mixed together. That is exactly the process which we are speaking of now in connection with renovated butter, with the additional advantage that it is melted in the factory, and it was not melted in the home.

Mr. STEVENS: Does my hon. friend commend the practice?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not for sale, but if a farmer chooses to use up the last twenty or thirty pounds of old butter by re-churning it —and that is the very essence of renovation— and he uses it at home, that is his own business. My hon. friend displays his whole ignorance of home practice. This is being done yet.

Mr. STEVENS: Not so much now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is perfectly correct for them to do that. Why should they waste butter?

Mr. STEVENS: Does my hon. friend approve the practice?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not for the market.

An hon. MEMBER: What for?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: For home use.

Mr. STEVENS: How does the minister know this is done?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I know it is done. How do I know my hon. friend does not know anything about the matter? Because that is so apparent. It is spoken of as having no taste and colour. It has both. How could it be sold for export if it had neither taste nor colour? I want to reassure the committee that I am merely trying to search out for some more excellent method of getting a cheap spread for the poor man's bread than we have had yet. If we cannot find one, we shall have to do without it. As regards the yellow in oleomargarine, do hon. members know what the yellow comes from? It comes from the kidney that is in the old dairy cow that is made into canners and cutters. It is the skeleton of where fat used to be on the kidney, but this is dried up and there is just the skin to it. The marrow out of the old dairy cow is shot into the oleomargarine, and that gives the yellow colour and the appearance of vitamines. That information came directly from the chief inspector of the Health department, whom my hon. friend considers as good authority and the information was not asked for but was given voluntarily.

Mr. FORKE: May I interject that I am going to be a vegetarian from this day on.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We have to make a choice between two things that are not first-class; we have to take the thing that is nearest to first-class. I am not advocating renovating butter on the ground that it is as good as creamery butter. It is a second-rate article. Do we not have second-rate wheat, third-rate wheat? Would you depreciate that as an article of diet because it is not all first-class? That is nonsense. The letter which I read a few moments ago indicates that the essential fats are all in renovated butter. That, I think, is as good an authority as has been produced yet.

Then it is said that this is good to fool the public. It is not good to fool the public, for everyone knows what it is; and at all events, whatever it may taste like, it is certainly butter. It is not an aggregation of intestinal attachments coming from those questionable places where they produce soap grease. I do not believe our people deserve to be fed on that sort of thing even if they are poor. If hon. gentlemen want to revive the question of oleomargarine I can discuss it at any time with them. In the meantime I must impress upon the committee the fact that the charge is wholly unfounded, if anyone does make it, that this article is not wholesome. The further statement is made that renovated butter is not a good "keeper." Well, that is true. When you make anything of this nature you cannot expect that it will keep for any length of time, for the simple reason that the fibre of it, if I may use that term, is destroyed. Nor does anybody seriously suggest that it is a good keeper; it is not recognized as such; it must be used as quickly as possible, for it is not intended to keep. It has been rancid, and we know perfectly well that once any foodstuff becomes rancid, while you may be able to restore it to its original state for a time, it unquestionably will not keep. This product is decreasing in quantity in the United States and they are coming to Canada for it. I want the committee therefore to know as much about the matter as does my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie), my hon friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) or any other hon. gentleman who undertakes to speak about it.

We are told that this is a retrograde step. To the superficial it may seem a retrograde step to manufacture an article that was formerly banished from the country. But the question has been forced upon us as a result of the war: can we possibly find a cheaper spread for the poor man's bread than creamery butter? That is the issue we have to settle. We never had to consider it before the war because creamery butter has always seemed to be more or less within the reach of all. And inasmuch as we have always had a frontier people in Canada, in most of the provinces except the Maritime country, whose frontier is the sea, we must recognize the fact that there are places where the people cannot have access to creameries, so that the manufacture of this product under proper conditions should not be prevented.

The suggestion is made that the manufacture of renovated butter will encourage dirt, and that the product will have to be sent to the butter laundry. How will it encourage dirt? I should like to know. Let me inform the committee that some of our best butter makers are frontier people. The difficulty consists simply and solely in the lack of facilities for making the best butter that will keep; and if the very best creamery butter made in Canada were subjected to the same conditions, in regard to temperature, as a good deal of renovated butter is, you would have the same results. This, I think, is a libel on the makers of dairy butter themselves. Very often these people have not the proper facilities; they have no ice, nor have they any milk house. They have to get along in the best way they can, and the trouble does not lie in the fact that scrub cows are kept for dairy purposes. Scrub cows have nothing whatever to do with the matter.

Mr. TOLMIE: I never suggested for one moment that you could not make good butter from a scrub cow. What I said was that you could not make butter profitably from that kind of cow. I pointed out clearly that it was possible to make good dairy butter in the country with the facilities generally found, but that the trouble was due to carelessness on the part of the butter makers. Sometimes you find two butter makers side by side, one making good butter and the other a product that is little better than axle grease, the difference being entirely in the care or the lack of care as the case may be. I was an inspector under the provincial government for a number of years and I ought to have a fair idea of the situation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I say that the scrub cow should not be introduced into the subject at all. For that matter there is no reason why a scrub cow may not give good milk, though it may be little in quantity. If it is healthy and free from tuberculosis it should be able to produce milk with a fair percentage of butter fat. Renovated butter is described as being worth so much. I indicated a little while ago the most recent price, which was quoted at 34 cents in Chicago; and the fact that it was only 6 cents lower than the price quoted for creamery butter seems to me to show that there could not have been very much wrong with the smell of it.

It is stated that the manufacture of this article is going to benefit the factories. I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman is ready to admit that someone will be benefited. But, we are told, the frontier people will be gouged. Now, how can anybody say that the factory people, in the manufacture of renovated butter, will gouge anyone to any greater extent than they are gouged at present? There will not be any superfluity of renovated butter factories because the number will be limited by license; and a thorough system of inspection will ensure that the product is properly made, so that no deleterious compound will be allowed to enter into its composition. The fact is that these are all imaginary difficulties that are suggested to make the best possible case against the product; and the same arguments would hold with reference to anything else.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had some more notes of what has been said but I cannot put my hand on them; evidently they are so bad that they thought it best to hide themselves. No wonder, because they were so ridiculous that they were not worth talking about. The question of importation, however, is one that we might discuss. It is one thing to take care of poor butter made on the Canadian frontier, but it is ridiculous to worry very much about the foreign article, because none of it is going to come in over a 4-cent tariff wall that is raised against ordinary butter. The United States people want our butter; it is not we who want theirs, because our butter is going into that country over an 8-cent barrier. It is simply impossible for imported butter to come from the United States into Canada. But even if it did come in, what would you do? Would you suggest putting an embargo against it? I have thought the matter out, and such a course I cannot countenance for a moment. If there were a possibility of butter coming from the United States I would discuss the matter with my colleagues, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), to see what practical steps could be taken to meet the situation. But we do not want to put on an embargo; we do not want to do anything unfriendly. And the fact is that an embargo is not necessary under the present market conditions. We have discussed on previous occasions the undesirability of embargoes in reference to coal, pulpwood, and one thing and another, and anything of that character should be considered with exceeding care before being proposed and internationally discussed.

Let me say once more that the quality of this class of butter depends upon the care that is taken of it. Originally a great bulk of this butter was quite edible and good; but it is made under such primitive conditions in the matters of temperature, salt and facilities for keeping it, that there is a danger of its becoming bad soon after manufacture. The drawback is the lack of cold storage facilities; and many people have no milk houses, so that the keeping properties of the product are not very good, and it is apt to get rancid if it is delayed too long a time in transportation. Notwithstanding all these things, however, renovated butter has been found to be a good article of diet, as is shown by the very fact that the price is only 6 or 7 cents lower than that of creamery butter.

I am the last one on earth to advocate anything that would put our dairy industry in jeopardy. In the short time I have been in office I have done everything possible with the money at my disposal to get a new stride on our dairy industry. One of the first steps has been to get rid of these spurious substitutes masquerading as real dairy products. If the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) were here, I am sure I would have a valiant champion of this resolution with respect to filled milk and filled cream. These are prohibited, as is also the filling of butter with foreign fats. The whole tenor of the measure I have introduced in the last two years has been to aid the dairy industry of Canada. If the provision of renovated butter for the poor man's spread is going to jeopardize the dairy industry to any extent, we will have to seek some other solution; because Canada will have to depend on its dairy industry as the cornerstone of agriculture.

[Mr. Motherwell.]

Mr. CARROLL: We have had many kinds of butter offered for sale in this country, some bad, some good, but the name of the latest variety, renovated butter, is more or less misleading it seems to me. In the old days a class of people went around the country collecting old rags and bottles. My hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) is developing a new industry, for in a few days, if this bill passes, we shall see another class of people going around our backwards calling for old dairy butter. Then after they have renovated this rancid butter the minister says it is good enough for the Canadian people.

Renovated butter and oleomargarine were dealt with by the Privy Council during the war. For some reason, good, bad or indifferent, those who had control of our dairy interests in those days refused to have anything at all to do with renovated or adulterated butter, but they did suggest that as a war measure we should allow the manufacture and importation of oleomargarine. In the United States renovated butter is described as:

> 22 Butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified and refined and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting adulterated butter.

A few days ago the minister took very strong exception to oleomargarine because it was made to resemble butter. But the statute of the United States, which I have no doubt he is following in this matter, says very distinctly that renovated butter is melted and refined and made to resemble genuine butter. Is there anything wrong about that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: It is butter.

Mr. CARROLL: It is rancid butter. If it was genuine butter it would not need renovation at all.

Mr. HOCKEN: It is decayed butter.

Mr. CARROLL: Yes. The minister says it is for home consumption, but he is not putting it on the market. How is he going to get it into the homes of the people if it is not marketed through some medium?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not say that. Some hon. gentleman asked me how it was made. I said it was made in the farm homes to-day and used for home consumption by those who made it. It is not melted, it is cut into fine pieces and churned.

Mr. CARROLL: If it is renovated it is not genuine butter. The dairy industry in the United States has been safeguarded by the imposition of a 2 per cent tax upon renovated butter and a 10 cents per pound tax upon adulterated butter. I read a report a few days ago to the effect that it is absolutely impossible to distinguish between renovated butter and adulterated butter. This is the definition of adulterated butter in the United States statutes:

"Adulterated butter" is hereby defined to mean a grade of butter produced by mixing, reworking, rechurning in milk or cream, refining, or in any way producing a uniform, purified, or improved product from different lots or parcels of melted or unmelted butter or butter fat, in which any acid, alkali, chemical, or any substance whatever is introduced or used for the purpose or with the effect of deodorizing or removing therefrom rancidity, or any butter or butter fat with which there is mixed any substance foreign to butter as herein defined, with intent or effect of cheapening in cost the product, or any butter in the manufacture or manipulation of which any process or material is used with intent or effect of causing the absorption of abnormal quantities of water, milk or cream.

In the United States they treat rancid butter with an acid, alkali or chemical and make it into what is called adulterated butter. My hon. friend is going to take this rancid butter —which is picked up in our back yards, and which the dairy people refuse to market—and renovate it without treating it with any acid, alkali or chemical. Butter may be renovated and be without smell or taste, as the hon. minister said. But I say it is all taste and all odour, and will so remain notwithstanding its being designated as renovated butter.

If this butter is to be allowed to be brought into the Dominion, we are likely to have another industry. At present we have the rum bootlegger, and last year we had the cigarette bootlegger. Now we are going to have the renovated butter bootlegger, who will see to it that butter renovated or adulterated in the United States is brought in here without paying any tax. My hon. friend is being led astray by the fact that there is a loud cry in Canada for a butter substitute. Renovated butter is not a butter substitute: it is a bad butter; it is a rancid butter; it is a rotten butter. If the minister can show the committee any means whereby he can renovate a butter without using an acid and thereby making it an adulterated butter, then he is a chemist for whom this country has been looking for some time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was just wondering where my hon. friend got his authority for what he says about using acids. Is there anything else in it except the lactic acid that is generated in milk or cream that is sour?

Mr. CARROLL: I am glad my hon. friend admits that degeneration takes place.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Not at all.

Mr. CARROLL: Why impose upon the people something that is degenerated? If from 1914 to 1918, when the people were considering the matter of substitutes for butter and other foods, they refused to have anything to do with renovated or adulterated butter, then I cannot understand why in a time of peace, when there is no cry for substitutes, we should go back to a period that we have long since outlived. My hon. friend talks about a spread. Is he aware that the official spread for bread to-day in the British navy is oleomargarine? The British navy is developing the best athletes in the world. I do not say they are doing it on oleomargarine, but I do say that the physicians of the English navy, who are noted for their judgment and fair-mindedness, have approved of a regulation making oleomargarine the official spread for the navy's bread.

Mr. McBRIDE: We are not talking about oleomargarine now; we are debating the question of butter.

Mr. CARROLL: Well, I am talking about both. But I shall not disturb the dreams of my hon. friend very much longer. I am not a dairyman; I have not a cow and perhaps never will have one, but I have some interest in the people of this country. A week ago the minister stood in his place and opposed the manufacture and importation of a product which is recognized in the British navy as a substitute for butter. He now tells the committee that it is necessary for the poor man of this country that the manufacture and importation of renovated butter be permitted. I do suggest that in view of all the circumstances he should give the matter a little more serious consideration than he has given it.

Mr. GOOD: I have been listening very attentively to the discussion, but I have not got complete light on the situation yet. It has been stated that it is more difficult to detect renovated butter when mixed with ordinary butter than it is to detect oleomargarine when used in the same way. If that is the case, it will be difficult to prevent fraud. What means will be adopted as a protection against fraud or misrepresentation? Furthermore, in regard to the chemical changes which may be produced in butter through its being kept for long periods at a fairly high temperature, how far is it possible to remove the various products of decomposition which result from these changes? It may be fairly easy to deodorize the product to a certain extent by aeration, but it strikes me it is a very much more difficult process effectively to remove the products of decomposition. Then, I should like to know something about the question of sterilizing. It has been maintained that butter used in the manufacture of renovated butter would be not so good on the average as creamery butter. Of course, a good deal of the butter manufactured under primitive conditions is perfectly clean, or at least as clean as the average creamery butter. But I am inclined to think that the butter that will find its way into the renovating factories will be a product which has been manufactured by careless people under conditions which may bring about contamination. I do not think there is anything in the renovating process which is designed to afford protection against disease germs, and I would like to have some information on that point. It does seem to me that the minister is adopting a very extraordinary attitude after his vote the other day on the oleomargarine question.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I did not speak on it the other day.

Mr. GOOD: I was not referring to the minister's speaking on it; I was referring to his voting on the question. It is not necessary on all occasions to speak to a subject in order to indicate one's attitude. I have always been of the opinion that, under proper regulation and supervision to guard against fraud and misrepresentation, oleomargarine is a perfectly suitable food product, and I sincerely hope that before the end of the present session, perhaps in connection with this bill, the House will have a chance to declare itself on this particular issue, wholly apart from the issues that entered into the discussion and the vote the other day. The minister talks about the poor man's spread. It is necessary for us to have some regard to that phase of the question, but it seems to me that this renovated butter is likely to be a poorer, a more dangerous poor man's spread than oleomargarine. I have no objections to renovated butter; in that respect I hold the same view as I do in regard to oleomargarine. I do not object to it provided that we can certify as to its quality, as to its wholesomeness, and provided also that we can protect the public against fraud and misrepresentation. Until we get more information on these points it seems to me that we are, to quote the old saying, "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel." I hope the minister can give the committee some further information on these questions. Let me repeat them again, because I think the minister was not paying attention when I started to speak.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I heard the questions.

Mr. GOOD: There is the question of misrepresentation, the question of removing the products of decomposition, and the question of sterilization.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think the hon. gentleman's attitude is quite reasonable. But the resolution provides exactly what he asked for. We are not going into this matter in such a tremendous hurry. The hon. member for Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Carroll) seemed to think that to-morrow or the day after the bill became law, we would be shouting renovated butter round the streets. That is not so. Here is my proposal: If the House sends this bill to the select standing committee on Agriculture my intention is to follow the same course that we have adopted in the case of three or four other bills, bring the experts of the Department of Agriculture before the committee to give evidence on the very things my hon. friend speaks about. What else can you do? You cannot bring these experts before the House. Furthermore, I am prepared to suggest now that the word "importation" be struck out from the bill. I will discuss the matter with the proper authorities and see if that can be done without doing violence to our international relations, or being accused of anything that would look like unfriendliness towards other nations. I do not like to see that word "importation" used. I will be quite frank with the House and say that the experts in the Dairy branch differ on this question. Some of them do not like it. After this has been prohibited for twenty years they do not like the idea of reintroducing it. Others take the ground that it never should have been prohibited, that it should have been permitted all along. We will submit evidence to the committee from experts, and to the extent the witnesses seem to favour a departure in the matter we will give the industry the benefit of the doubt. But let us try to get to the bottom of the matter.

Mr. GOOD: Does the minister propose to submit this bill to the committee on Agriculture after its second reading?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When reference of a bill to a committee is proposed it is always done after a second reading. Any section of this bill could be eliminated in the Agriculture committee without destroying any principle embodied in it. As a matter of fact, the bill to amend the Live Stock Act was so completely changed in committee that we had to reprint it.

Mr. GOOD: When will the bill be submitted to the committee?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just as soon as possible. I understand we are going to have morning sittings next week so that we would have to do it on Monday.

Now, just let me run over two or three matters that have been raised during the discussion. Certain members have described the product we are dealing with. It was stated by the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie) that this renovated butter is so good that it is sent over to the United Kingdom from the United States and passes there for creamery butter.

An hon. MEMBER: It is mixed with other butter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, it is mixed if you like. But even so, it cannot be as bad as it has been described; you cannot fool people that way.

Mr. TOLMIE: The minister is hardly giving to what I said the interpretation I intended. What I tried to point out was that there had been so much fraudulent shipping of oleomargarine and renovated butter to Great Britain that it had caused a serious falling off in the export of American butter to that country.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: But we cannot have the product so good that it is taken for creamery butter, and at the same time so bad that the smell of it is enough to knock you down. I have promised to have this bill referred to the committee on Agriculture. I believe there is a question involved that is worth looking into, and worth solving, for the purpose of meeting the dairyman's views on the one hand and the views of the man who wants cheap butter on the other. If we can do that we shall be performing a good service. Let the bill go to the committee on Agriculture, and if they feel that any section is wrong or is unwise it can be eliminated. There is nothing mysterious about that. We removed three or four sections from the bill to amend the Live Stock Act. I should like to see the word "importation" struck out and I will move that that be done now. I do not like the thought of importation, but I am not a bit afraid myself of any importation taking place. I think it is only an imaginary difficulty, something that will never arise. But even imaginary difficulties sometimes hurt more than difficulties that are real.

Mr. STEVENS: This resolution and the matter it deals with are very important. It will not do for the minister to answer a civil question put to him across the floor by a somewhat crude intimation that the questioner is ignorant of the subject he is talking about. I must say that outside of the Minister of Agriculture I think I can compliment most of the members of the government, when in committee of the whole, with at least behaving with attentive courtesy and giving civil answers to those who question them in a polite and proper manner.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is terrible.

Mr. STEVENS: The Minister of Agriculture seldom presents anything to the House which calls for debate without making more or less of a burlesque of the whole proceedings. He has not abandoned or departed from his record in that respect this afternoon. I therefore think it would be better for me to address what observations I have to make more to the Prime Minister than to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is politeness itself.

Mr. STEVENS: My remarks have greatly to do with the propriety and desirability of advancing this legislation at this late period in the session. May I point out to the Prime Minister this: In the first place there is decided opposition to this legislation in the country. I have in my hand a telegram from the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association. This association consists of 1,800 farmers in the Fraser valley who have banded themselves together for the marketing of their products, that is milk, butter and other products. It markets its products direct to the consumer, and perhaps is one of the best and most highly organized co-operative associations in existence in Canada. The telegram reads as follows:

> We understand that resolution is being introduced in parliament permitting the importation, manufacture and sale of renovated butter. We strongly protest against the government granting such permission. Same will be very detrimental to the dairy interests of this country.

I submit this to the Prime Minister. I have already submitted it to the Minister of Agriculture and I think it would perhaps add to the burlesquing of this matter if I read the minister's letter to the House.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Will my hon. friend read his own letter as well?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, if it is desirable.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If my answer is read I should like my hon. friend to read his letter to me.

Mr. STEVENS: I will read them both.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Sure.

Mr. STEVENS: I have received another telegram from George Sangster, on behalf of the Vancouver Island Milk Producers' Association, incorporated in which are, perhaps, the main dairymen and producers of Vancouver Island. The telegram reads as follows:

Milk producers of Vancouver Island absolutely opposed to resolution to permit importation, manufacture and sale of renovated butter. Please use every effort to defeat this measure as we consider it would impose unfair and impossible competition and deal a death blow to the dairy industry.

Here are two large associations—and I submit this to the Prime Minister in particular—I suppose numbering upwards of 3,000 members, of dairymen, with mostly large herds, 20, 30, 40, or 50 head of cattle, all marketing their products directly to the people, and both these associations declaring that this measure is very very detrimental. On this request I base my argument. This product has been barred from the Canadian market for 20 years. Why, within one week of the end of the session, introduce legislation to permit the manufacture of this product in Canada—I shall deal with the proclamation feature later—without giving opportunity to such interests as these to whom I have referred—and doubtless there are other interests in other parts of Canada—a fair opportunity to be heard before the committee on Agriculture? It will be at once recognized by this committee that there is no possibility whatever of the dairy interests of Canada being heard next Monday morning. That is an absurdity. It is only an evidence of the insincerity of the minister and the deliberate desire on his part to rush this measure through, not only without due consideration, but without a remnant of fairness to the industries so vitally interested.

Mr. NEILL: Did these two large dairying interests in British Columbia not make similar representations against oleo, which the hon. member ignored?

Mr. STEVENS: Not to me. I am merely reading what I have received. I admit, with reference to the mild indictment of my hon. friend that, perhaps, I am not as well posted, or as well qualified, to speak on this question, as some hon. members. I see across the way my hon. friend from Fraser Valley (Mr. Munro) who, I know, is well qualified to speak. He represents one of the best dairying districts in Canada, but, on the other hand, let me say to the minister that I am not altogether void of knowledge of the dairy business. I spent a great many years in my early days on an Ontario farm, and I have been interested in western farming for the last ten years. I do not parade that fact, because I think it is inadvisable for one who is not actually and definitely a farmer to emphasize the fact that he knows something about farming. I used that fact as a retort that I am not wholly ignorant of the subject. The minister challenged me to read my letter to him and his letter to me. I will do so. My letter to him is dated June 18, and reads:

OTTAWA, June 18th, 1923.

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL, Minister of Agriculture,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. MOTHERWELL,

I enclose herewith two telegrams from the Vancouver Independent Milk Producers' Association and the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association, Vancouver, objecting to your bill to provide for the manufacture and sale of "renovated" butter.

I beg to advise you that it is my intention when this matter comes before the House, to urge for the withdrawal of this bill for this session and suggest the submission of the whole subject to the Agricultural committee next year. I see no reason for haste in the passing of such legislation and, furthermore, I most respectfully submit that your action in promoting this bill is wholly inconsistent with the attitude you took, as Minister of Agriculture, in recently opposing the manufacture and sale of a perfectly wholesome food, namely, oleomargarine.

You undoubtedly know that in the process of manufacturing so called renovated butter deleterious chemicals are used and I am amazed that you, as Minister of Agriculture, would be so indifferent to the creamery and dairy interests of this country as to introduce such a bill.

I therefore earnestly suggest that you withdraw this bill for this session and refer the whole question to the Agricultural committee next session.

Yours very sincerely,
H. H. STEVENS.

That is the letter I wrote to the minister. His reply is dated June 19th, and reads:

OTTAWA, 19th June, 1923.

The Honourable H. H. STEVENS, M.P.,
House of Commons, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. STEVENS,

Your favour of the 18th instant just received.

Replying I have to thank you for your quite decided views regarding renovated butter. I may say that I have myself been endeavouring for a number of years to estimate the value of this product as a cheaper spread than creamery butter for those who do not feel they are warranted in paying the higher price.

Last year when the oleo. discussion was up I promised the House that, in the event of oleo. being prohibited, I would advise my colleagues to make legislative provision to remove the prohibition of the manufacture of renovated butter, on the ground that the fat of the latter consists of 100 per cent butter fat, contains all the essential vitamines and growth properties, and consequently would seem to be a more logical, cheap spread than ordinary gut fat, which has usually been used as soap grease in times past and even yet. However, even in a matter so obvious as this, experts seem to differ.

It is my intention to have this question discussed before the Agricultural committee—not next year but this year, when a number of authorities can be asked to give evidence in the same manner as I have done with my other bills this session.

I think you are a member of the Agricultural committee and I should be very pleased to have the benefit of your advice and suggestions when the matter is then under discussion. I might point out also that the provision with respect to renovated butter is merely one section of a bill, the balance of which, I feel confident, will meet with your entire approval. Your suggestion, therefore, that the bill be withdrawn will, I think, be opposed by yourself when you understand all the circumstances.

Thanking you for your favour, I remain,
Yours very truly,
W. R. MOTHERWELL.

There is nothing in that of any importance, but I read it because my hon. friend desires to have it read.

Let me turn to one or two other phases of the matter. My hon. friend says he mentioned this a year ago. Now he says that one of these resolutions provides that the legislation will be ineffective for a year at least. He will promise the House that the proclamation will not be made until after next March. This is what I want the committee to consider: After mentioning this over a year ago why did the minister not introduce it early in the session and let the committee deal with it while the sittings of this House were proceeding? If, on the other hand, it was not desirable to introduce it early this year, so the committee could study it, and it is not his intention to bring the legislation into effect until after next March, why not let it stand over till next year and give the committee of Agriculture an opportunity to discuss it properly, and give the interests affected an opportuninty to appear before the committee? In order to take that stand, it is not necessary for me to be opposed to the matter on principle at all. I am merely dealing with the desirability of forcing matter through during the last days of the session. Surely, nothing will be lost by postponing this for a year, when for over twenty years there has been no such commodity produced in Canada. Who is to be hurt? The minister himself says, "If there is no demand for it"—I have his words here, because I always find it necessary to write them down, if I wish to put a question in regard to them—"the proclamation will not be made; if there is a demand we will issue the proclamation." Why not wait and delay the legislation, to see if there is a demand? Why not wait to give those affected an opportunity to express their views pro or con?

There is another matter I wish to refer to. Most able reference has been made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) who speaks on all such subjects with authority, and not only with authority, but with ability, and in a manner becoming the dignity of the House. He referred to the fact that the whole effort of the agricultural departments of the provinces and the Dominion in connection with the pure foods administration of the country has been pressing towards making a highclass product, and obtaining better methods of dairying and creamery butter production, and he pointed out that one of the effects of encouraging the use of renovated butter was to encourage the reproduction of inferior or carelessly made butter. The minister said that butter would deteriorate. He said "It will get rotten and does get rotten." He also said, "If you expose eggs to the weather, to the sun and the warm temperature, will they not get rotten?" But is the minister proposing next session to bring in a measure for renovated eggs—to make rotten eggs marketable? That is the next thing we shall hear about from the Minister of Agriculture. As I listened to the minister this afternoon going through that effort to ridicule the splendid and scientific presentation of this question by the hon. member for Victoria City (Mr. Tolmie), I thought his indictment of the dairy industry of this country was one of the most damning that I had ever heard. If anyone took seriously the utterances of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, that the butter products of this country were produced as he intimated they were, that the slaughtering of animals and the extraction of the various parts were carried out in the manner he described, that would be one of the most injurious things to the dairying industry and the butter production industry of Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What has the slaughtering of animals to do with the dairy industry?

Mr. STEVENS: I wondered myself when my hon. friend pictured, in a somewhat disgusting fashion, the puncturing of the intestines of an animal.

Mr. FORKE: I would suggest that this argument is getting a little rotten.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not talking about butter then.

Mr. STEVENS: The presentation by the minister of the case from his standpoint this afternoon was not in the interest of the promotion of the production of butter in this country.

Mr. McBRIDE: Is the president or the manager of this Fraser Valley Milk Association the same person who, when the question of reducing the price of milk in Vancouver was up, said: "To hell with the public"?

Mr. STEVENS: I do not remember the incident mentioned by my hon. friend, nor do I know. I do not quite see the pertinence of the question. All I know is this—and I know this from personal acquaintance with many of them—that the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association is what I said it was, namely a combination of some 1,800 farmers, dairymen, producing milk, marketing it directly to the people of Vancouver, New Westminster and other centres, and manufacturing very large quantities of butter. Outside of that I know nothing more of what the president may have said in a fit of temper or may not have said.

While the minister may accuse me of ignorance of some matters which may seem to be very familiar to him, I, at least, as a public man, or as a private citizen, ought to have some interest in the promotion of the dairying business and the foreign trade of Canada. One of the things we have been striving as a nation to do for the last twenty years is to raise the general standard of our products, to bring these products to such a uniformity of standard that they will earn a place on the British or European market in competition with the highly developed dairy industry of Denmark. In the very interesting booklets sent to me day after day by the minister—and if the minister issues these booklets, surely he expects us to read them—I was reading an indictment of the Canadian dairy industry to a certain extent on the very point that they were not keeping up the standard of uniformity of butter in Canada in competition with Denmark. Within a week they showed us figures that the Denmark exportation to the British market had increased enormously, while the Canadian exportation had decreased. That is something in which I am interested, and I do not intend to be silenced by the rebuff from the minister that I am supposed to know nothing about the subject. I am not speaking dogmatically, but many feel that the introduction of this resolution as regards the production of renovated butter in Canada on a large scale, will tend to lower the general standard of Canadian butter produced for export. Let me tell the committee why. We know perfectly well that renovated butter is deodorized; the objectionable visible features, shall I say, are taken out of it, that is the question of odour and the question of bad taste, by certain chemical processes. It is washed in lime or lime materials and other things, and these are eliminated. When it is manufactured, as I am told by those who know and who are in a position to advise, there is, perhaps, difficulty at a glance to tell the difference between it and fairly good creamery butter, but the minute the inspector sees it, he discovers it. Take a shipment of say 60,000 cases of butter going on the London or Liverpool market, or wherever it may go. They test every one in 10 or 20, as the case may be, according to the usual method of test. It might be possible to slip into such a shipment quite a large number of cases of butter not up to standard. That has been one of the complaints against Canadian butter, that running through our Canadian butter there are at times inferior cases. What I wish to impress upon the minister, and particularly on the Prime Minister at this time, is that many of us think the introduction of this legislation will tend to vitiate the policy followed by this government and previous governments, namely of raising the standard of general dairy products. We do not wish that to be brought about. I am not saying it will, but at least let us have a reasonable time to study the question.

Mr. PUTNAM: Does my hon. friend know whether the renovation prevails in any country except the United States?

Mr. STEVENS: I am not in a position to answer that question. I would not answer it because I cannot answer it correctly and definitely. Let me say this, in conclusion: It will be utterly impossible to give a fair hearing to this matter this session before the Agricultural committee. We begin sitting in the morning next week, and we hope to get through by the end of next week. These interests, therefore, cannot be heard. I have made certain representations, very weak, on their behalf; but they and other interests cannot be heard. The minister says that he does not intend to bring this proclamation in for a year. Then why pass the legislation? Why fix upon the country a definite statutory law, when you acknowledge that you have not had time for consideration, and when it is clear that these interests cannot be heard. So I ask the Prime Minister most earnestly that this measure, as regards renovated butter, should be allowed to stand over until next year, and that all interests should be heard before the Agriculture committee. Personally I shall be glad to abide by the decision of that committee, after a reasonable and fair hearing of the subject.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister has intimated clearly that his intention is to refer the bill to the Agriculture committee. That committee is, perhaps, in a better position than the House to decide whether it would be wise to have this particular clause stand over for another year. If the committee has the slightest doubt as to the wisdom of proceeding with that clause, the government would be only too happy to accept the finding of the committee on that point. It will, perhaps, facilitate matters, seeing that we are discussing the resolution merely at the moment, if the committee were to pass the resolution and let the bill go to the Agriculture committee, with the understanding that if that committee is in the slightest doubt about the wisdom of proceeding with that particular question, the government will not press that part of the bill. Moreover, coupled with that, the members may take into account the minister's assurance that he will see that the proclamation under which this would become law, will be, at least, one year's time distant from the present, and this would give the opportunity of another session of parliament to consider the matter if it were thought advisable to do so.

Mr. STEVENS: That is really my strongest point. I wish the Prime Minister would consider it again after we pass from this stage. If you are going to consider the question in the interim between the assumed passing of the measure and the proclamation, would not it be better to consider the matter before the legislation is passed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have had the misfortune once or twice of treading on the toes of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens). That hon. gentleman does not like my style of debate. I am sorry for that; but I seem to get along very well with it, and as it is the only kind of style I have I am afraid my hon. friend will have to put up with it, however distasteful it may be to him. He calls that style a burlesque, and strange to say he appears to think that I should accept that description with good grace. I was not very long in the House, as a matter of fact, before the hon. gentleman began to apply such descriptive phrases to myself, as "the Minister of Agriculture's burlesque." And when I modestly suggest that he does not know anything at all about dairying, why, he gets mad. I do not see why he should take umbrage at a statement so obviously true. Now, we cannot expect to give without occasionally being asked to take, in return; and surely, as a sportsman, my hon. friend should be ready to take what is coming to him, especially when it is so richly deserved as on this occasion.

Just one word or two, however. The hon. gentleman says that I have not given a civil answer. I replied to the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Tolmie) in the only way that I could possibly have replied to him. Sometimes such strange things are said that one can answer them only by ridicule, which, by the way, is very often the most effective method. An attempt is made at a description of chemicals. Is lactic acid a chemical? What do we usually mean when we talk of chemicals? Surely no one will describe as decomposition the natural process that takes place in the course of the manufacture of many excellent articles of diet such as bread, for example. Is there any decomposition in the manufacture of silage, or of any of those things in which certain necessary bacterial action takes place? If the decomposition which takes place in the manufacture of these things were the harmful process which hon. gentlemen seem to suggest, then some of the finest products we have would be noxious. So that when hon. gentlemen talk about "decomposition" in the way they do they only display a lack of knowledge of which it surely is no harm to remind them. If I delved into any question involving legal technicalities hon. gentlemen would most undoubtedly be justified if they reminded me that I was discussing a subject with which I was not particularly conversant.

Mr. TOLMIE: I did not say that the putrefaction that took place was not due to bacterial action. There are four or five kinds of bacteria responsible for the changes that occur in the process of decomposition.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was replying in this instance to my hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Carroll). Now, I am not trying to force this thing through, and I do not think that I have appeared to be particularly wedded to the question. I have as open a mind in regard to the matter as anyone in the committee, and I recognize that it would take a great deal of explanation to show why, after a prohibition of twenty years, the manufacture of this product should be permitted. It would be much easier for me not to introduce the subject if I wanted to take the course of least resistance. If the committee will accept the Prime Minister's suggestion, of referring the matter to the committee on Agriculture, I promise to use no more influence than my unassisted vote, if it does come to a vote, to put it through. And if there is any doubt on the part of the committee as to the wisdom of the action we propose, we will defer the question not for a day or a month only, but, so far as I am concerned at any rate, forever. We do not want to jeopardize in the least degree the dairying industry of the country, but we do want to take care of a situation that may arise when butter suddenly runs up in price beyond the reach of poor people. If the suggestion of the Prime Minister is acceptable to the committee we will eliminate this section. There is no need for any heated controversy over the section. We will drop it and go on with the rest of the measure in the usual way.

Mr. GOOD: One serious objection to the procedure proposed by the minister is that Monday forenoon is apparently the only time the committee will have for the consideration of the matter, which is one of much importance. Moreover, the attendance in the committe on Monday will in all probability be very small, owing to the fact that the election takes place in Ontario on that day. It seems to me that the wise policy would be to defer the whole matter for a year, so far at least as this particular clause is concerned, so that we may go into the particulars of it more fully in the meantime.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I realize the situation that will exist on Monday, but inasmuch as the House will not meet next week until eleven o'clock there is no reason why the Agriculture committee could not meet at ten o'clock so that we might have a full hour for as many days as might be necessary to discuss the subject. Indeed, I do not think it would take many days to dispose of the question after the committee had heard the evidence of the experts.

Mr. GOOD: There will be practically no members from Ontario present on Monday.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am speaking of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

Mr. LADNER: I do not wish to let the occasion pass without joining in the protest not only against the principle of this legislation, but more particularly against the decision of the government to introduce it at this time. All hon. members are aware that many of the representatives from the dairy districts in Ontario are at this moment engaged in other matters than agriculture, and we have not their advice on this important question. It is very apparent that few people who are really interested in this legislation have had an opportunity of presenting their case to the minister, and certainly they will have no opportunity of appearing before the committee. The Prime Minister has suggested that when the matter is before the committee the government will not press this particular part of the bill. The minister himself has stated that he has an open mind with reference to the matter and is not particularly biassed one way or the other. At least, I regard that as his attitude. This legislation has been waiting 20 years now, and parliament has been sitting for the past six months. Yet the government desires to press this matter through in six days. On what ground are they justified in endeavouring to railroad this legislation through parliament in so short a space of time? The minister himself has told us that if there is any doubt in the matter he is prepared to defer it not only for a day or a month, but forever. In other words, he expresses the willingness on the part of the government to do the fair thing by everyone interested and give the matter proper consideration. Under these circumstances, is there any reason why the whole subject, without being referred to any committee, cannot be allowed to stand over until next session in order that full justice may be done all persons interested? Large institutions like the Fraser Valley Milk Producers' Association are vitally interested in this matter; and this particular organization, comprising some 1,800 members, have sent me a telegram stating their point of view. The wholesale producers who deal in this product as well as the consuming public, as represented in various organizations, will also undoubtedly desire to declare their position in the matter. For my part therefore I cannot see any reason why the minister or the government should object to the reasonable request of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), which if voted on would, I am sure, be supported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Since this subject has been on the order paper we have had no protests against the legislation apart from the telegrams that have come from British Columbia, where I am sure the people are not acquainted with the real facts of the case. From among all the members of the National Dairy Council I have not had one protest against it. However, with a view to getting into touch with some of those who are interested in the subject, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Progress reported.

FEEDING STUFFS ACT AMENDMENT

On motion of Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Minister of Agriculture) the House went into committee to consider the following proposed resolution, Mr. Gordon in the chair:

That it is expedient to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act, chapter forty-seven of the statutes of 1920, and to provide,—

1. That no person shall import into, manufacture, sell, offer, expose or have in possession for sale in Canada, any flour mill by-product resulting from the cleaning and milling of wheat for the production of flour by the usual commercial processes, unless,

(a) the container or tag or label attached thereto is branded or marked as prescribed;

(b) the bran, pure shorts, middlings or feed flour are free from admixture of any foreign materials;

(c) the bran, pure shorts, shorts and mill screenings, middlings or feed flour meet the requirements as to protein and fat content, fineness and quality established by the regulations, and contain no crude fibre in excess of the percentage by weight as prescribed;

(d) the shorts and mill screenings are first registered as a commercial feeding stuff and contain not more than the mill run of screenings and scourings removed from the wheat from which shorts was obtained.

2. That no person shall manufacture pure shorts and shorts and mill screenings at the same mill.

3. That the sale in Canada, or the importation, of any feeding stuff found to be adulterated or incorrectly or misleadingly tagged, labelled or named, shall be a violation of the act, and the minister may cancel any registration and prohibit the further sale or importation of any such feeding stuff.

Mr. ROBB: Section 2 provides:

That no person shall manufacture pure shorts and shorts and mill screenings at the same mill.

It occurs to me that if this were put into force every mill in Canada would have to go out of business.

Mr. STEVENS: It is rather interesting to hear the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb). I was anxious to learn his views on the resolution. As far as I know, there should not be very great objection to the main idea behind this proposed legislation, but I do not want to appear to commit myself and others here to the principle in detail when we come to the bill, because I see there is some difference between the bill and the resolution, the details being more clearly set forth in the former.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think it might be well to explain how these amendments came to be proposed. As the committee are aware, the adulterating of mill by-products with screenings has been authorized by law during the last few years. A number of complaints have been made to the department, particularly by farmers, as to the bad effect that some of these mill feeds containing screenings has on young pigs, the deaths of a number of animals being attributed to such feeds. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) and the hon. member for South Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) brought the matter to my attention some time ago, and I promised to bring down legislation to deal with the trouble. Before doing so I thought it well to consult the advisory board which the Seed Control Act provides for. This board represents the milling, live stock, dealers and other interests concerned. It met in this city and this bill is the result of their cogitations. The very section the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) calls attention to is a compromise. Mr. Cornell, secretary of the National Millers' Association, and Mr. Watts, secretary of the Dominion Millers' Association, were present, and they, on behalf of the milling interests, accepted this as a compromise. Middlings have to be sold in their purity because this is the only article that can be fed to young pigs, there being too much fibre in bran for them to assimilate. The millers take the ground that inasmuch as we compel them to sell middlings and bran in a pure state they should be allowed to make some disposition of the screenings the farmers sell with the wheat. They suggest that they be permitted to mix shorts with screenings as a feed for dairy cattle, to whom it would not be deleterious. Shorts is simply fine bran.

Mr. LOVIE: The millers pay nothing for the screenings, which really belong to the farmer, being treated as dockage. What right, therefore, have the millers to mix these screenings and sell them as cattle feed?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I am not pleading that the millers have any right to do so. I am simply pointing out that several interests are involved in this matter and that after discussing it for two or three days this resolution was the compromise they reached. I appreciate the point raised by my hon. friend, but the fact remains that screenings do get into wheat to a certain extent and are paid for as wheat.

Mr. GOULD: Were the western millers represented in the conference?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Watts and Mr. Cornell between them represented the organized millers of Canada. I expected that the question would be raised, because there was a feeling of resentment against mixing these products at all. Inasmuch as a certain amount of dairy feed is required, it is suggested that screenings should be mixed with shorts for the purpose. I should like to have the views of the hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) and the hon. member for Glengarry and Stormont (Mr. Kennedy), both of whom I understand have had a good deal of experience in dairying. There was a three day discussion on this somewhat involved question—the advisory board is there for this very purpose—and it does seem to be a fair compromise. It is now provided that you cannot put any of these things into this mill stuff, even after you have bought it from the farmers and paid for it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): I would like to commend the minister for the main principle involved in this resolution. When the Feeding Stuffs bill was introduced in 1920 I took occasion to suggest to the then Minister of Agriculture that he provide in his bill that bran, pure shorts, middlings and those feeds that are generally looked upon as standard feeds be sold in their pure state. The bill which was passed at that time contemplated the mixing of screenings and other things with those feeds. I was glad to see the minister bring down a measure for the purpose of ensuring that these feeds particularly should be sold in their pure state, but I am a little sorry to see him weakening to the extent of suggesting that he does not care about the rest so long as middlings are sold in their pure state. That principle is just as important in its application to bran and shorts as it is in its application to middlings.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does my hon. friend think it makes the shorts a less desirable dairy feed if the screenings are ground and mixed with it? I am not too sure about that myself. If they are good screenings, the result is an excellent feed, but I admit that it depends on the nature of the screenings. Shorts is only fine bran; there is very little middlings in it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Glengarry): The mixing of screenings with shorts or bran or any of the feeds specified in this resolution will certainly lower their feeding value. If a miller wishes to compound a feed or to make a feed out of the screenings he takes out of the wheat, why should he not, if it has any feeding value, sell it on its own merits, having the contents set forth on a tag as specified in the regulations applying to all feeds? If there is any feeding value in his product he can do that and sell it at a lower price, but he should not be allowed to mix screenings which are of low feeding value—some are and some are not—with these feeds. I suggest that the minister carry out the main principle of his resolution.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the House took recess.

After Recess

The House resumed at eight o'clock.

THE UNION BANK

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I promised my hon. friend from Brandon (Mr. Forke) that we would take up the matter to which he referred this afternoon as soon as the private bills were disposed of. I understand it will be nine o'clock before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will be able to take his seat, and if my hon. friend from Brandon will allow that matter to stand till that time we will take it up then.

Mr. FORKE: All right.

FEEDING STUFFS ACT AMENDMENT

House again in committee on the resolution of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) to provide for the amendment of the Feeding Stuffs Act, Mr. Gordon in the Chair.

Mr. GOOD: It seems to me that the point raised before six o'clock is worth a little further discussion, as to whether or not the miller should be permitted to incorporate any of the ground screenings in the mill offal. I do not think this matter has received very much attention, and I think it should receive further attention before the resolution is adopted.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I may say that after six o'clock I took advantage of the opportunity of discussing this matter with a number of members opposite, including the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy) who is not in his seat and I understand will not be in the House this evening. I have the suggestion made by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb), and the intimation that he did not think the resolution as drafted practicable with respect to the mixing of screenings with shorts, especially under subclause 2 which says:

> That no person shall manufacture pure shorts and shorts and mill screenings at the same mill.

That provision he thinks, as a practical miller, is impracticable, and I am disposed to give some heed to an authority of that nature, especially when it is accompanied by such a practical suggestion as that made by the hon. member for Glengarry and Stormont (Mr. Kennedy), who suggests that all the by-products of the mill should be manufactured in their purity and sold in their purity. That is to say, we would have pure bran, pure shorts, pure middlings, and pure low grade flour. This is my suggestion: Inasmuch as the screenings are bought and paid for as wheat, millers should be permitted, in grinding those screenings, to mix with them any of those by-products that they may think are necessary in order to make those screenings acceptable to the market as long as they call the product screenings. In other words, these mill screenings, let us say, are ground and mixed with a portion of either bran or shorts or middlings, if the millers so desire. They will not mix middlings, because that is too expensive, but they may find it convenient to mix some shorts with the screenings. So long as they sell that as mill screenings, I can see no objection, particularly in view of the fact that they have bought and paid for the whole gross product as wheat. That is the alternative proposition. Because of its simplicity and the opinion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce that the present draft, with the exception of the first section, is not practicable, I should like to have the other suggestion of the hon. member for Glengarry discussed by the committee. If that is acceptable to the committee as a practical solution after it has been discussed, I am disposed to accept it.

Mr. CALDWELL: I am pleased that the minister is inclined to accept the logical suggestion made by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Kennedy), and I hope concurred in by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I think this is the logical conclusion. There should be no objection to selling mill screenings if there is any feed value in them, but they should not be camouflaged as shorts or anything else. If the millers see fit to mix bran or shorts in the screenings to make the mixture more palatable and of a better feed value, I can see no objection to that, so long as it is sold as screenings; but I do object to screenings being sold as shorts, or as a mixture of shorts and screenings, because, though it is provided in the bill that they should use only the run of mill screenings in the shorts, that is the screenings taken from the wheat from which the shorts are made, I see a difficulty in carrying out the regulation. It would be almost impossible to carry it out, and I think the minister's suggestion is the logical solution of the situation.

Mr. GOULD: Before the House rose, I asked the minister a question concerning this. I might state that on all occasions when bills of this nature have come up, since I have had the honour of being in this House, I have protested against the conduct of millers in the past when they have mixed buckwheat, wild oats, and so forth, in bran, and have sold that as bran. I have been charged as high as $30 a ton for supposed bran which contained a large proportion of wild oats for which they paid nothing. It is a fact that milling companies in western Canada have their initial points throughout the country, and invariably their elevators are constructed without cleaning machinery. As a result of that, they gather in wild oats and buckwheat, which is prevalent and current in the West. They deduct the weight of this largely by guess, and no remuneration for this at all is offered to the individual, although they, in selling back feed stuffs put this value on it. I have protested against milling companies being allowed to use wild oats and even pigweed, and then returning the product to us as bran, shorts and various mill feeds, although they paid nothing for these things. As the minister explained this afternoon, these have a deleterious effect on young stock. With the provision that bran shall be sold as bran, and shorts as shorts, and the other by-products similarly, possibly a provision might be incorporated that, as pigweed has not much milling value, it might be mentioned in the bill that pigweed could be screened out and whatever there might be in the way of other oats, tame oats, flax, wild buckweat, would make a very good commercial feeding stock to be sent back and sold as such. I commend the action of the minister in segregating the bran and shorts and things of that nature. I might protest that under the Grain Act milling companies at initial points, might be obliged to pay somewhat more for these foreign seeds found in grain, because milling companies which have gathering points on the prairies have an advantage over straight grain companies, in that not having cleaning facilities at their elevators throughout the West, they do not pay for these things.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is it correct that wild oats are sown on the prairies?

Mr. GOULD: Wild oats have not been particularly sown. Persons who sow wild oats do not boast of how many bushels they reap per acre. Some wild oats may make fair feed, but not for young calves.

Mr. NEILL: I would go further than the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture. I would have not only the bran and shorts pure, but the screenings pure. There is no necessity to allow people who are selling screenings to mix shorts or anything else with them, even though they are going to be compelled to call that screenings. I know how soon an arrangement of that kind can enlarge itself, so to speak, and pretty soon there would be a great deal of shorts in it, and it would be called by some composite name, more or less calculated to deceive people. Let us have these things pure. Let those who want to buy or who have that class of stock that can eat screenings mixed with something else, buy it themselves and mix it themselves. Then they will know what they are doing, and there will be no possibility of adulteration or fraud, or even of renovating. It is just as illogical to mix shorts and screenings, as, I dare say, to mix oleomargarine with butter and then sell it as butter.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My hon. friend thinks that will appeal to me.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to suggest that the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr Neill) should be given serious attention. I can very easily see how the opening might be used for the gradual admixture of various products with the screenings, disguising them and probably defeating the very object we have in view. It seems to me that the legislation contemplated is, in the main, admirable. It is something that has been needed for a long time, and I should like to endorse it very much. The minister, however, might go just a little further and make it necessary for those who wish to feed screenings, to do their own mixing, and not to have the mixing done at the point of manufacture. I might mention, too, in that connection, that I think it is very necessary to have these screenings tagged—probably that is compulsory anyway—with tags stating the composition of the feed. I should like to know also whether or not provision is made for the elimination of unpalatable and poisonous weeds from these screenings. Is there any law applying to that?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The argument of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) seems quite logical on the surface, but when one remembers that these screenings are bought and paid for as wheat it would seem to partake of the nature of poetic justice that the millers should be allowed when grinding the screenings to mix with them a proportion of shorts in order to produce a better compound for the market. I am not an advocate of the millers, but I certainly do not think that we should go so far in our restrictions as to hurt unreasonably not only them but ourselves, in refusing to concede to them what I regard as nothing but an elementary right. There is a certain amount of dockage in wheat no matter how excellent in quality it may be, and I do not think it is too much to ask that the millers should be allowed to mix with the screenings some amount of shorts to make it more acceptable to the market. I know that there are certain screenings that cannot be improved by any addition of bran or shorts, but there are others that possibly might be improved by the admixture, and I cannot see any objection to the permission to the millers so to mix their screenings, provided that the product is sold as such. As I say, I am not advocating the cause of the millers and I merely put forward this suggestion with a view to eliciting the opinions of the committee. We are interested in seeing that justice is done everybody, and at the same time we want to be fair to ourselves.

Mr. HOCKEN: I suppose this might be called "renovated feed?"

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know.

Mr. HALBERT: I want to support the minister in the proposal he makes. We must be fair to everyone and if the millers desire to turn out a certain grade of screenings I do not see that there can be any harm in their being permitted to add a certain amount of shorts so long as they label the article as screenings. The millers want to bring the stuff up to the market demands, and what the minister suggests is, I think, only fair.

Mr. CALDWELL: I want to impress upon the minister as forcefully as I can the necessity when making regulations to insist that all screenings shall be ground as finely as possible. There are certain noxious weeds which are very small and are exceedingly difficult to grind. This is true particularly of mustard seed, and the regulations should provide that the grinding shall be so thorough as to preclude all possibility of these noxious weeds passing into the feed with the likelihood afterwards of germination.

Mr. NEILL: I can see no necessity, from any sense of poetic or any other form of justice, for granting the request of the millers that they be allowed to mix shorts with their screenings. I have a long experience with the habits and methods of millers from the point of view of the purchaser and I am not a bit afraid that they will fall into bad financial waters through any such act. They are perfectly capable of taking care of themselves, and we need have no concern about them so far as this matter is concerned. This proposed adulteration will work out, as adulteration in all cases works out, in this way. The agent of the milling company comes along and says: "We have a nice line of stuff we call screenings at $20 a ton." The dealer says, "Well, that is a big price to ask for it because you don't pay anything for the stuff except the price of the sack and the filling of it." "Oh," he says, "but there is 50, 60, 70 per cent of shorts in it. While we call it screenings to comply with the law it is really mostly shorts, and the mixture is so much better." Now, no one will know exactly how much shorts the screenings will contain, because the percentage will not be marked on the sacks, and you will really buy a pig in a poke, as the saying is. The fact is that nobody will know what he is getting if this mixture is permitted, whereas if the screenings were sold by themselves the consumer could mix it to suit himself. Young pigs will require a different food from that which is given to older animals, and the main thing is to sell a pure article. This principle animated hon. members in discussing the question of oleomargarine. Hon. gentlemen were opposed to any adulteration creeping into the manufacture of butter, and the same thing should apply here. There is no question whatever about justice in the matter; if the millers have bran to sell let them sell it as bran; if they have screenings to sell let it be so labelled. But do not allow any adulteration.

Mr. GOULD: The hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) expressed the same opinion I hold in regard to noxious weeds. It is a well-known fact that in the grinding of mill feeds the smaller weed seeds are not crushed, especially mustard seed, with the result that they are capable of germination subsequently. I think that mustard seeds should be eliminated from the feeds. These seeds are a burden and an expense to the man who ships them and milling companies naturally look upon them as a nuisance unless they can be allowed to re-ship them in some other form. The Minister of Agriculture knows very well that to send these seeds back to the country is merely to intensify and perpetuate a menace. I think that the bill should provide at least that the percentage of these seeds that are included in mill feeds shall be stated. This principle was embodied in a bill which was discussed in the Agriculture committee on a former occasion, and I believe it is an important safeguard. With regard to the question of mixing bran and shorts in screenings, I think the sense of the committee is rather against the suggestion. If there is to be sold good shorts properly milled and kept dry I do not think there will be any difficulty in securing a good market for it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: To meet the consensus of opinion in the committee in regard to paragraph (c) of the resolution, I move that it be amended by striking out the word "pure" in the first line, and the words "shorts and mill screenings," and inserting after the word "flour" the words "or screenings," so that the paragraph will read:

—the bran, shorts, middlings, feed, flour or screenings meet the requirements, etc.

With regard to the matter raised by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni, that is something that will be dealt with by regulation and we shall try to meet his views as far as possible.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I move that we strike out sub-paragraph (d) and paragraph 2, because they are contingent upon the first paragraph and can be dispensed with now. Then paragraph 3 will become paragraph 2.

Amendment agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Motherwell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 233 to amend the Feeding Stuffs Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With the consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. CALDWELL: When does the act come into effect?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In the absence of any stipulated time it comes into effect when assented to, I understand.

Mr. GOOD: We have no copies of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Progress reported.

PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. JACQUES BUREAU (Minister of Customs and Excise): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the bill to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act was given second reading, and then you thought it advisable to postpone the committee stage until later during the sitting. I think we might take up the bill now.

Mr. SPEAKER: By unanimous consent.

Mr. BUREAU moved that the House go into committee on Bill 238 to amend the Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Regulations for sale and use of naphtha for illuminating purposes.

Mr. GARDINER: Can we have this bill distributed?

The CHAIRMAN: There are only proof prints here. I will read the sections.

Mr. BUREAU: Naphtha is not sold for illuminating purposes now except under certain regulations for street lighting or whenever the vapour of naphtha can be used from tanks placed outside the building. There has been a lamp on the market for a number of years called the Coleman lamp, in which naphtha can be used without any danger whatever according to reports of experts, but as the law stands you cannot buy naphtha for this lamp. These amendments are intended to do away with this disability by giving the Governor in Council power to control the sale of naphtha.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that Bill No. 236, to amend The Canada Shipping Act, be read the second time.

Motion agreed to and bill considered in committee and reported.

Mr. LAPOINTE moved that the bill be read the third time.

Mr. CALDWELL: Will the minister explain the provisions of this bill?

Mr. LAPOINTE: I gave the explanation yesterday. The law as it is gives the Governor in Council power to suspend the coastal laws as applying to vessels of a foreign country which extends similar privileges to Canadian vessels. We are asking the power to suspend the coastal laws in other circumstances in cases of emergency when it is in the interests of the Canadian people that such action should be taken. The coastal laws have been suspended on two or three occasions in a way that was hardly legal, and that has demonstrated the necessity for this amendment.

LAKE GRAIN RATES

Hon. J. A. ROBB (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill No. 235, with respect to Freight Rates for the Carriage of Grain by Lake and River Navigation, be read the second time.

Mr. GARDINER: Has the bill been distributed, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. ROBB: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: I suggest that if any other bills that have not been distributed to the members of the House are to be considered to-night, they should be immediately placed before us so that we shall know what we are voting for.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand that copies of this bill were distributed this afternoon.

Mr. E. J. McMURRAY (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Centre Vancouver (Mr. Stevens) spoke truly last evening when he said that this bill was one of paramount importance and should receive the careful consideration of the House.

9 p.m. At the outset I may say that I am entirely in accord with the action of the government in bringing forward this much-needed measure, and I extend to the government and to the hon. minister who is fathering the bill my congratulations for their courage in taking this step. Undoubtedly they are dealing with large and powerful interests that are dominated by prominent men in this country; they are dealing with a subject which must, as the minister himself said, present considerable difficulty so far as legislation bearing upon it is concerned. The people of Canada are to be congratulated that the government, upon these matters being put before them, moved promptly and with despatch. It is courageous legislation, and the result of its enactment should be greatly beneficial to the people of western Canada in particular and to the people of Canada as a whole. The rates affecting the transport of the products of that part of our country which is far removed from its market, situated as it is in the centre of this wide continent—freight rates by rail and by lake—constitute one of the most important problems that we in the West have to deal with.

It is quite appropriate that the Liberal party, which broke the Canadian Pacific Railway monopoly by the effecting of the Crowsnest pass arrangement in 1897, an arrangement which was practically re-established last year, should, upon accession to power in these latter times, break the shipping monopoly that had fastened itself upon the people of western Canada. But the present government have gone further than that: During this session they have enacted an anti-combine bill, a measure that will enable those administering the criminal law to secure the necessary evidence in connection with any alleged combine. Under the criminal law as it existed the great difficulty was that you could not get the evidence, but under the anti-combine bill the evidence can be procured if a case exists. That, together with the bill that has just been passed enabling us to bring in legitimate competition against those who are dealing unfairly in the matter of privileges they enjoy under our shipping laws, should be ample protection, so far as the Great Lakes are concerned, to the producers of western Canada and should result in benefit to the whole Dominion.

There was appointed in February of this year, following the reports made to the government, a royal commission composed of three able men. Mr. Levi Thomson, a man who had lived for long years in western Canada, a man thoroughly familiar with the grain trade, a man who had had parliamentary experience and also was trained in the reception and weighing of evidence, was on that commission—undoubtedly a very suitable appointment. Mr. McLean was also there, a man with experience in dealing with rates; and Mr. Tremblay, a business man. Now, it was suggested last night in the course of the debate that this board should be composed of shippers who knew something of the shipping trade. That was not necessary at all, because the shipping interests were represented by the very ablest counsel that money could procure. All the facts that they could possibly present in their favour were laid before this commission. The government was represented by an able western counsel, a man of great experience in rate matters, a man whose practice for the last four or five years had been very wide in that particular field. That gentleman knew exactly where to go to get evidence, and how to bring it before the commission. So that, after all, it is not a question of the knowledge of the commissioners themselves. If you get fair-minded men, of moderate and reasonable view, men of sound and capable judgment, who can weigh and appraise the evidence brought before them by experts you make a judicious choice. In that respect the government selected, very wisely, an able commission, a commission against whom no charge of partiality could be advanced; and those hon. members who have read that commission's report will find that the statements made therein are moderate, reasonable, thoughtful and fair. There is in it nothing extreme, nothing unusual; the report is judicial in tone and judicial in language and thought.

Now, the story which the report of that commission unfolds is one of the most remarkable stories of trade and commerce ever told in this or any other country. The Great Lakes afford the only real outlet for our grain because the cost of transportation by rail is, as you all know, too high to permit it to be used entirely as a roadway for that grain. Some thirteen or fourteen years ago two enterprising young Dutch-Americans by the name of Wolvin, who had had their training in the western United States and were operating from Duluth, came up into Canada and in company with one Norcross engaged in shipping on the Great Lakes. They gradually worked up a combination and this monopoly became very strong. For thirteen years it grew stronger and stronger, and bolder and bolder as each year went by. Finally, apparently undaunted by anything, they imposed on the shippers and producers of western Canada extortionate and unusual freight rates which culminated last year in discrimination against the very country that gave them its protection under its shipping rules. Finally there was created an organization which proceeded to intimidate its victims whom it compelled to take shipping space at its own rates over their own lakes. Like a leech or a weasel it fastened itself on the main artery of western Canada's trade and proceeded to bleed the West and the western producer slowly to death. Not only was that the prospect in sight, but there was even the likelihood of competing Canadian shipping being driven from our Great Lakes as Van Tromp the countryman of the Wolvins, once boasted he would drive British shipping from the seas.

The evidence shows that the method pursued by this company was to secure the co-operation of the Canada Steamships Limited. The Canada Steamships Limited was formed on the 17th June, 1913, with its head office in Montreal, and an authorized capital of $25,000,000. Among the directors we find the names of prominent men, at least one of whom is a member of this House, and another the head of the Canadian National Railways at this time.

Mr. DUFF: Sir Henry Thornton is a director.

Mr. McMURRAY: Yes, and R. M. Wolvin, one of the individuals to whom I have alluded. There was formed in Winnipeg about the same time a company known as the Standard Shipping Company. The latter entered into an arrangement with the $25,000,000 company, the Canada Steamships Limited. This arrangement was most unusual in the shipping trade in the fact that it was reduced to writing. The purport of the contract was that this company, with headquarters in Winnipeg, was to have the sole right, so far as Canada Steamships Limited was concerned, to charter all space upon its vessels. In return for this it was to be given insurance placed upon all cargoes. These companies insisted that all grain shipped should be insured. There was an insurance company in the United States with whom every man in the West, who is shipping grain, was obliged to place his insurance, and this insurance was set at just twice the rate which could be obtained in other places. The loss incurred by all those who shipped grain was very large. I think the United Grain Growers last year claimed they lost $36,000 by being compelled to take this insurance; and the total loss in respect of all shippers ran into thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. DUFF: Do the grain shippers of the West simply insure their grain from Fort William to Montreal, or do they have a through rate from Winnipeg to Liverpool or some other point on the other side?

Mr. McMURRAY: My understanding is, the rate is from Fort William to the port on the lakes to which the grain is shipped. If it is going to Port Colborne the rate is to that place; if to Montreal the rate is to that port.

Mr. DUFF: Why do they not get through insurance from Fort William to Liverpool?

Mr. McMURRAY: The Standard Shipping Company, to which I have just referred will not permit them to do so.

Mr. DUFF: What do you mean by the Standard Shipping Company?

Mr. McMURRAY: The Standard Shipping Company is the company in Winnipeg which made this bargain with the Canada Steamships Limited that they would insure all the cargoes that were placed on board its vessels. Now, a singular thing in connection with this matter is, that before the contract would expire—I think it was to expire 1928—it was renewed for another period of twelve years, so that it would not terminate until 1940, the full intention being that this monopoly that had been settled upon by the shippers of western Canada was to be continued for a long period of time. The commission found as a fact that a combination existed. They found that these various shipping companies on the lakes met in Toronto on the 4th of May and entered into what the commission found to be a combine. Then they met on the 8th May; and again on the 28th July they met in the city of New York. Their finding was that there was a combination. What did this combination do? They first exacted a tribute from the people of western Canada of double insurance on every cargo sent out. They discriminated against Canadian ports. They shipped from Fort William to Buffalo at a lower rate than they would ship from Fort William to the Georgian bay ports, although there was a difference in distance in favour of the Georgian bay ports of 316 miles. These rates were found to be actually fixed at the meeting to which I refer, and confirmed at a subsequent meeting. Apparently all the shipping interests on those lakes were in this combination. We find them going so far that a grain buyer, I think it was in Chicago, declared that he would not be held up under these conditions at all, and proposed to charter a boat, to send it up to the head of the lakes, and bring down the grain independently of them. This proposal was met by a warning given to the shippers in Winnipeg that they would have difficulty in securing space for the shipment of grain. Probably it was not in those words, but to that effect. It would be interesting to read the summary of the findings of this commission. The first thing they find is as follows:

> In the opinion of your commission a tacit understanding between these operators as to those rates existed during the whole season, and measures should be taken to prevent its continuation.

The second thing they found was:

> Rates on grain between Canadian ports were discriminatory as compared with rates charged by Canadian operators on grain and other bulk freight between Canadian and United States ports, and as compared with those charged by American operators on grain and other bulk freight between United States ports.

It was contended by the shipping companies, as suggested by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), in his illustrations before the House last night, that this discrimination might be caused by congestion in the ports, but in the fourth paragraph of the summary of the findings of the commission they say:

> Congestion was as bad at Buffalo as at Port Colborne, and was worse than at Bay ports; Therefore, discrimination cannot be justified by congestion.

Another contention set up by these shippers was that the advantage was with the American ports and that the vessels going in could operate at a lower rate on account of the fact that there was a return cargo—that was coal—going northwards; but the evidence showed that coal only constituted on this occasion some 22 per cent, and I think over a period of years some 29 per cent; so that all these vessels were coming back light, American as well as Canadian, and the concluding words of the commissioners were as follows:

> It would seem, however, that in general, the advantage possessed by the American vessel in respect of coal is not so great as represented.

As an offset to that the commission state in paragraph 7 of their finding:

> On the other hand, it has been admitted that labour costs were lower on the Canadian side than on the American.

They find these rates were unjustifiably high, and in paragraph 8 they say:

> After making due allowance for additional cost of operating and handling to which the grain was subject, but which did not apply to ore and coal, there is still an excess of earnings from the transportation of grain between Canadian ports over earnings from the carriage of other bulk freight, which shows high and unjustifiable rates.

Then they say in paragraph 9:

> The increase of the 1922 rates over those of 1921 by Canadian vessel operators was so great as to be high and unjustifiable.

Paragraph 11 reads:

> The season of 1922 was characterized by high levels of rates which cannot but have been detrimental to all those engaged in the production and disposal of grain.

They found that it was injurious to the farmer who produced the grain, and the reason for that was forcibly explained yesterday by the hon. member for Saltcoats (Mr. Sales). Paragraph 11 continues:

> And it is therefore essential that through control of the upper levels of rates the competitive principle which has been relied upon by parliament in the case of water transportation should be permitted to be operative.

That is there must be free competition on the lakes. Paragraph 12 of the report reads:

> The difficulties in the way of controlling rates on lake-borne grain are such that your commission is of the opinion that the only feasible method of rate control through a regulative tribunal is through maximum rates.

They have considered apparently, as they naturally would, all the possibilities of restoring competition among the shipping interests, and they came to the conclusion that the only possible release that could be given would be by the fixing of a maximum rate. They also suggest the power to suspend the coastal laws in respect to the grain trade be conferred upon the Governor in Council. It is suggested in this connection that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics should keep statistical records of the port cargoes in the coasting trade, such records to be based on returns from the vessel or vessel companies operating. As the bill was just put in my hands a short time ago, I do not know what provision there is for the suspending of these coastal laws. My own impression is that these coastal laws should be suspended on recommendation made to the government by the board or commission which deals with these rates. I believe that that would be a fair thing, because we are putting the control of this matter in the hands of an independent tribunal. We are giving them power independently of parliament to fix the rates. Why should we not also give them power to lift the coastal shipping regulations. It is possible that we are lifting this matter as far as possible out of politics. It is said that we have lifted our railways out of the control of politics, in order that they may be fairly and properly operated in the interest of the people; and I submit that it would give satisfaction to the people of this country to feel that there was a tribunal independent of parliament, independent of the people and of these shipping companies, to deal with the question of the lifting of these coastal laws. It is in the interest of the government itself to prevent any criticism that might be fairly levelled against it through some misunderstanding on the part of the people of Canada, if they thought the coasting laws should not be lifted. A charge might be made against the government in the future, and the government be absolutely innocent. But if there is an independent body that has the confidence of all concerned in the country, that charge would not be levied against the government; the government would consequently be in a better position, and the people of Canada would be fully satisfied. I do not know whether that clause is in the bill or not; I have not read the bill; but speaking for myself, I would respectfully urge the minister and the government to give it consideration.

The commission points out the inequality of this insurance "hold-up." I use a common term, an opprobrious term, but that is the correct term to use. I am glad to see that the minister has inserted in his bill a drastic and strong provision, making it prohibitive for a chartering broker to have anything to do at all with placing insurance. It was charged in our Banking committee not long ago that banks are interfering with the functions of insurance, and compelling people who placed their securities with them for loans, to insure through them. That is absolutely unfair in this case. A man shipping his grain should have the right to go out into the market and to buy insurance in open competition if such can be had.

Some questions have been raised in connection with this bill by hon. members on this side of the House. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), last evening expressed a sentiment, that is no doubt believed in by many members on both sides of the House, when he enunciated the old doctrine of "laissez faire" of the Manchester School of economics, holding that legislation cannot ultimately correct; that the only corrective thing can be competition. I would remind my hon. friend that in the days when the Manchester School flourished, England was reaching out for wider and wider markets, and competition existed in the effort to secure those wider markets. A great change has come over the economic world since then. Large combinations in restraint of trade have come into existence. The principle of watered stock now exists, and as regards practical measures, the doctrines of Cobden, Bright and John Stuart Mill are almost useless when it comes to devising an instrument curtailing monopolies that exist to-day. The condition is exceptional in that we have a monopoly, like that of the old German robber barons of the Rhine, who levied toll on all who passed up and down the river, controlling the single outlet for our grain, and I do not believe that if those members of the Manchester School were situated as the people of Canada are to-day they would contend that the doctrine of "laissez faire" applies or could apply. Can you tolerate licensed robbery under an economic doctrine of "laissez faire?"

Mr. SALES: Does the hon. member wish to infer that there is watered stock in the Canada Steamships Company?

Mr. McMURRAY: Does the hon. member suggest that there is not?

Mr. SALES: I did not. I was asking the hon. member.

Mr. McMURRAY: If I suggested it?

Mr. SALES: Yes.

Mr. McMURRAY: I made no suggestion at all. I said simply that they had $25,000,000 worth of stock. My hon. friend can draw his own conclusions.

The second point made by the senior member for Halifax, was that he doubted the legality of this measure which we now are placing on the statute books. I gathered from his speech that he had two points, first, that this is not sound economics; second, that it is not legal. He did not state in what the illegality consisted, but I presume he thought it was an interference by the Dominion government with matters that were purely provincial. I do not think lake Superior or lake Huron is part and parcel of the province of Ontario. They are Dominion waters; they are international waters, and navigation laws belong solely to the Dominion. I respectfully contend, because I have a very high opinion of my hon. friend's standing as a lawyer, that in this he is wrong. In my opinion if the government has jurisdiction anywhere, it is in regard to navigation on inland waters. I would go further and say that if there is any doubt at all about the matter, we shall put the law into force and let the other fellow, the monopolist, fight it.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), feared that we could not fix rates from American ports to Canadian ports and vice versa. He seems to think, if I gathered his remarks correctly, that there was a danger of driving this shipping from Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not affirming or denying whether that is correct or not. I did not make the argument or the deduction which my hon. friend makes.

Mr. McMURRAY: Did he simply raise the query then, that that might happen?

Mr. STEVENS: I made the statement that we could not fix rates between a Canadian port and an American port, or between an American port and a Canadian port, and that that would affect the usefulness of the measure.

Mr. McMURRAY: Then I misunderstood my hon. friend's argument. What we can do is this, we can fix rates that will be fair and reasonable. The tribunal appointed will, I submit, be composed of men of reputation for fairness and ability. They will probably have associated with them an efficient staff that will gather all data that is needed in order to arrive at a right and proper rate. I think the shipping interests need have no fear whatever that they will not receive at the hands of this properly-appointed tribunal, fair and proper treatment. If they are treated fairly and properly, there need be no fear of their discriminating against Canada. As a matter of fact, they cannot discriminate against Canada more than they have done already. Even if there is danger of their withdrawing from operation in Canada, there exists in this country a condition of affairs that no self-respecting government, when the facts are laid before them, can possibly tolerate any longer, and the government must act in the matter irrespective of consequences. The government must not be intimidated by any argument of that nature.

This combine that had the audacity to charge these terrific rates and to impose an illegal and altogether improper insurance on the shipper had the temerity to intimidate the people of Winnipeg. There is a series of interesting telegrams that passed between the members of this combine. They appear at page 19 of the report and I think that in all fairness to those who may come after us they should be placed on Hansard so that there may be no misapprehension if the subject ever comes up again for discussion. These telegrams display the same intimidating attitude to those who had the courage to appeal to this government for protection against the injustice and the predatory measures practised against them. When one reads and carefully studies this report, when one ponders the evidence, one is appalled at the boldness of these men who secured control of the only shipping channel for our western grain. The name "Wolvin" is significant, and it is difficult for anyone to speak dispassionately and calmly as he realizes that significance in its fullest extent. The nearest synonym that I can suggest for it, if it has any English equivalent, would be the word "wolverine." The wolverine is described as a "voracious, sagacious and ferocious animal," and apparently these men exhibited all these qualities, because they were certainly voracious, they were undoubtedly sagacious, and to the shippers of western Canada they were beyond any question "ferocious." Hon. members will realize the audacity of this whole matter when they read the telegrams that were exchanged, as disclosed in this report. Mr. Enderby, of the Canada Steamship Lines, despatched the following message to Mr. L. H. Wolvin, the man handling the Standard Steamship Companies in Winnipeg which collected this illegal insurance. The telegram is dated September 27, 1922:

> Better get those instructions to Winnipeg in writing about booking no more cargoes until this coasting law question settled. Our agreement was now (no?) new business. Make your instructions to them absolutely definite.

That is to say, if the government delayed in settling this coasting law question they would hold up the entire grain movement at the head of the lakes. On September 15, 1922, the following telegram was sent:

> L. H. WOLVIN, Esq.,
> Central Shipping Co.,
> Postal Telegraph Bldg.,
> Chicago, Ill.
>
> We are not chartering any more Canadian boats for September loading. Think it best to clean up what we have and if we have open space we can get pretty nearly whatever we ask for it. We are doing some October but thought perhaps we had better hold off on this also except with Sid Smith he is figuring half million lastaff abstract which we should supply him and then raise rate. Answer.
> W. W. HALL.

This man had to get his grain out on the market and he started to curry favour with these shipping barons; so he was to be given an opportunity of getting his half million out before the rates were raised. On October 3, we find the following telegram from the same man, Hall:

L. H. WOLVIN, Esq.,
c/o R. A. & W. M. Williams,
Kirby Bldg.,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Hope you are able to advise us soon with regard to ore and want to point out to you that before taking care of O'Donahue we had better take care of Sid Smith who was first to wire Minister of Marine this morning at length explaining situation as it really is with regard to shipping, and he is as badly in need of tonnage to fill his sales as any other shipper in the building and will be in very bad hole if we cannot help him out on some grain on or before tenth. He just showed the difference between willingness to help us and careless attitude that most of others had.

W. W. HALL.

All this occurred in Canada, and it is nothing but straight intimidation. These people dared to punish those who would not openly advocate the rates under which they themselves were operating.

Mr. MARTELL: Does not my hon. friend believe that people who own shipping should have a right to barter in the market for the highest possible price for their commodity, and if they refuse to accept any other than their own price should they be compelled to do so? In other words, ought not the matter to be regulated by the law of supply and demand?

Mr. McMURRAY: In open competition, yes; but not under combines, which are illegal.

Mr. MARTELL: Where has any combine been proven?

Mr. McMURRAY: If the hon. member had been listening to me for the last forty minutes he would agree, I think, that it has been absolutely proven.

Mr. MARTELL: I should like the hon. gentleman to state in two or three words where there has been proved to be a conspiracy in restraint of trade.

Mr. McMURRAY: The hon. gentleman evidently has not read the report of the commission. If he has, then his memory is foggy.

Mr. MARTELL: Not in the least.

Mr. McMURRAY: The very first paragraph in the summary states that there was a combine:

—and in the opinion of your commission a tacit understanding between these operators as to those rates existed during the whole season, and measures should be taken to prevent its continuation.

I have not found that there was a combine; the tribunal appointed to consider the question unanimously decided that there was.

Mr. MARTELL: Who were the practical shipping men on the commission?

Mr. McMURRAY: I went into that question before the hon. member came in.

Mr. MARTELL: I am not trying to offer any factious opposition.

Mr. McMURRAY: There is one more telegram I want to put on record. On October 11, 1922, there was a telegram from L. H. Wolvin, Cleveland, Ohio, to W. W. Hall, Winnipeg, as follows:

OKay Smith's Bay charter. Keep this strictly confidential. Do not want to offer Stewart anything just now account of Ottawa. Where can I telegraph Stewart?

Stewart was the man in Winnipeg who had the courage and the backbone to protest against this combine and to appeal to the government for protection. Smith, who was the first to wire the Minister of Marine, was to have protection; he was to be taken care of by these concerns. But Stewart, the manly man, the man who had the courage to stand up and fight for himself as a man should, was to be punished. I should like to see the telegram that Sid Smith sent to the Minister of Marine.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is disclosed in this very brief report, which is evidently written by reasonable and fair-minded men, such an appalling condition of affairs as I do not think has ever before existed either in this country or in the United States. No school of economics can justify this abuse or apply a remedy; parliament itself must intervene. Who is going to compete against this gigantic organization known as the Canada Steamships Company with its $25,000,000 capital in ships? One company that did try in Winnipeg was intimidated and told it could not get space. The head of that company, rich and wealthy though he was, and a powerful magnate in the United States, could not get his grain down the lakes, and I presume he had either to cancel his contract or take space at the rates dictated by the combination. Where such a combination is in absolute control, and there can be no competition, can any hon. member seriously and honestly argue, whether he be committed to the policy of free trade and the doctrine of the Manchester School —and I believe in it very strongly myself, but I recognize that changing conditions have modified its applicability and, indeed, made it impossible of application, such as when strong forces absolutely shut out competition —can any hon. member contend for a moment that the government should not intervene? I do not think so, I feel confident that he will agree with me in my submission that the government must take action. In the United States government control is exercised on the regular routes by virtue of the Alexander Act, which is referred to in this report. Even with this limited jurisdiction the commission finds that competition is kept alive on the American side, but it found no evidence of any competition on the Canadian side.

I congratulate the government upon having the courage to introduce legislation that will, I believe, curb these great and powerful interests, prevent their again exacting extortionate rates from our shippers in the West, and put an end to the discrimination which those interests have exercised against our ports in favour of American ports. I do not think that this legislation will drive our grain away from its natural outlet down the St. Lawrence river to Montreal and Quebec. It is undoubtedly in the interests of western Canada, as well as of Montreal and Quebec, it is undoubtedly in the interests of all people, including our millers, that this combine should be broken. I do not think that we may have to deal with it harshly. I think that the publicity which will attend the work of investigation and examination by the Grain Commission, coupled with the power of suspending the coasting laws, will effectually curb this combine without inflicting any injury upon it.

I feel that criminal proceedings should be taken against these men who have so flagrantly and audaciously defied the laws of this country—the very laws that gave them protection and enabled them to operate their business. When the labouring men of Canada were charged with illegally combining—as happened in western Canada a few years ago—the Dominion government did not hesitate to invade the jurisdiction of the province of Manitoba and insist upon their trial. I think this Liberal government should deal fearlessly with large interests, no matter how powerful they may be, in the same way as they deal with the humblest citizen in the land when occasion demands it. The question came up last night as to where the jurisdiction lay for prosecution. As was properly stated by the Acting Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald), the criminal law of Canada is administered by the provinces. I believe that the criminal prosecution undertaken in Winnipeg by the Dominion government serveral years ago was a most unusual invasion of the provincial field and was done under the War Measures Act. This government to-day cannot come into the province and prosecute this combine without invading provincial rights. The province of Manitoba has full jurisdiction to arraign its citizens for misdemeanours against the state, a jurisdiction which is common to all the provinces, and would not tolerate any invasion of its jurisdiction by the Dominion authorities. It would be a breach of the constitution for the Dominion government to attempt such invasion. In a word, while we desire to punish these men severely, we must ourselves respect the law of the land. But there is nothing to hinder the government laying criminal charges against these men in the proper courts of Manitoba, and then it rests with the attorney general of the province to proceed. I am sure that so far as western Canada is concerned, the attorneys general would co-operate with the Minister of Justice in any criminal proceedings that may be considered advisable. I think the men forming this oppressive combine should be dealt with under the criminal law. Such a course would be a step towards wiping out this stain on Canada's honour. And I am confident that the men in question would receive a fair trial in our criminal courts. I am also confident that the passing of this legislation will ensure fair treatment of our shipping interests. Therefore I am strongly in favour of the bill with the exception which I have mentioned.

Mr. L. P. BANCROFT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) has read some very interesting telegrams regarding the combine on the Great Lakes, but there is one message that the hon. member did not read, and as I am sure it will interest the House I propose to put it on Hansard. It is from Mr. Roy Wolvin to his Winnipeg agents, and reads as follows:

Nye Jenks—

This is the Chicago firm.

—working for another cargo Chicago-Buffalo, trying to write their own insurance.

This is the crime.

I am getting very tired of trying to uphold the situation of the vessel-broker. We are in a wonderful position to break every vessel-agent on the lakes, and I want you to notify our Winnipeg agents that if one of them produces a boat to load at Chicago that I am absolutely through and will do business for nothing until everyone of them are out of the game, which you know I can do and will do. Solicit them all. Show them this telegram and tell them I mean every word I say.

I just wanted to add this to the telegrams read by the hon. member.

Mr. CAHILL: Who signed that?

Mr. BANCROFT: Roy Wolvin.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Lunenburg): The bill introduced this evening in pursuance of the resolution moved by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) last night purports to regulate freight rates for the carriage of grain by lake and river navigation. Before that bill passes I would like to express my views in regard to it. Last evening the hon. leader of the Progressive party (Mr. Forke), referring to some of the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine carrying grain on the Great Lakes, made the witty remark that he saw I was waking up. Well, Sir, I not only woke up on that occasion but I have been rubbing my eyes a good deal since. When I read this resolution on the order paper and had a chance to read the bill which was submitted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) I rubbed my eyes and wondered exactly where I was. I remember that three or four years ago in different sessions of this House, Mr. J. E. Armstrong, then a member of this parliament, introduced a resolution providing for the regulating of freight rates on the Great Lakes. At that time Mr. Armstrong was sitting on one side of the House and the present Minister of Trade and Commerce and a number of gentlemen now sitting on this side were occupying benches opposite. I listened at that time with a great deal of interest to the able speeches Mr. Armstrong made in his attempts to prove to the government and parliament of that day that freight rates should be regulated, and I listened also with interest to the speeches made by my political friends sitting with me on the opposite side. As I say, I have been rubbing my eyes to-night, as I realize that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce is trying to regulate freight rates on the Great Lakes. The party which I supported two or three years ago, in different speeches, opposed Mr. Armstrong's motion, and, I think I am correct in saying, voted against him on more than one occasion.

Mr. McMURRAY: The conditions have become worse since then.

Mr. DUFF: It is all very well to say that, but to my mind the conditions are no worse today than they were then.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DUFF: It is not a matter of fixing the freight rates; it is a matter of getting after the combines. I want to say right here and now, with all due respect to the different hon. members who have spoken in favour of the resolution and the bill which is now introduced based upon it, that they have not put up one argument in favour of fixing the rates. Any argument they did put up that had any force was in favour of getting after the combines, and I am with them as far as they want to go in that regard. But neither the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray), the leader of the Progressive party, nor any other hon. member who spoke on this question proved to my satisfaction that it was necessary to fix rates on the Great Lakes; what they did prove was that a combine existed between different shipping companies on the Great Lakes. Well, just a few days ago we introduced a combines bill, and I say that if there is a combine the government should go after these men and prevent a recurrence of what has been happening during the last few years. But the various speakers kept clear of any argument in favour of the fixing of rates on the Great Lakes. Their whole case was based on the alleged existence of combines; their whole wail was that these steamship companies had amalgamated to fix rates and to make the shippers pay double rates of insurance, and that there also was a combine in regard to the brokerage and the making of arrangements respecting cargoes for the different boats. That was their whole argument.

10 p.m.

Mr. MILLAR: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. DUFF: I suppose so.

Mr. MILLAR: I would like to ask if he read paragraph 9, page 52 of the report of the commission, which says:

> The increase of the 1922 rates over those of 1921 by the Canadian vessel operators was so great as to be high and unjustifiable.

Mr. DUFF: I do not know why my hon. friend asks me that question. All I have said is this, that in their speeches to which I have had the pleasure of listening, the hon. member for North Winnipeg, the leader of the Progressive party and others have made out no case for the fixing of rates by the government on the Great Lakes or anywhere else. I did say that those speeches had proved that there was a combine. that different vessel owners on the Great Lakes had combined to fix rates and to make shippers insure their cargoes with them; and I say that condition should be remedied. It is the duty of the government to try to remedy it if at all possible.

Mr. McMURRAY: May I ask my learned friend a question?

Mr. DUFF: I am not your learned friend.

Mr. McMURRAY: My hon. friend—I beg his pardon.

Mr. DUFF: I am a sea lawyer.

Mr. McMURRAY: May I ask my hon. friend what he would require in the form of evidence to satisfy him as to the necessity for fixing rates?

Mr. DUFF: That is rather a large order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DUFF: If my hon. friend had given us any evidence to demonstrate the necessity of fixing rates, he would not have had to ask me that question. I repeat that my hon. friend although he is an able lawyer, has given this House no reasons why the government should bring forward this bill to fix the rates on the Great Lakes.

I was saying that my hon. friends on this side of the House who opposed the fixing of rates two or three years ago are now bringing in this legislation. There must be some reason for that. I have been rubbing my eyes; as the hon. leader of the Progressives said, I have been waking up and wondering what is the reason.

Mr. McMURRAY: My hon. friend had better rub them a little more.

Mr. DUFF: I am going to rub them a little more, and perhaps the hon. member for North Winnipeg will rub his and my western friends will rub theirs when they hear what I am about to say. I have a good deal of sympathy with the people who live on the prairies. The hon. member for "Bowlegged" river laughs again, but I repeat that I have a good deal of sympathy with the people on the prairies, and I proved it last year when I was a member of the special committee on freight rates and on the Crowsnest pass agreement. I have sympathy for my western friends, because I believe in a lower tariff. I do not believe in protection, and I say to my western friends that in my opinion you could not have a worse kind of protection than that which is contained within the pages of Bill No. 235. If my western friends were consistent in regard to Liberal principles they would not, in my humble opinion, support this legislation.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: We will suspend the coastal laws, then. That will produce the desired result.

Mr. DUFF: Will that satisfy my hon. friend?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Certainly.

Mr. DUFF: Well, we have done that; so you do not need this legislation at all.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I did not understand that it was already done.

Mr. DUFF: Oh yes, it is done. You are satisfied; you will vote with me, so that is all right.

Mr. FORKE: I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I would call his attention to the fact that this legislation does not exactly fix rates. It will only fix a maximum rate; it will not interfere with competition. When the rates get so high that they are out of reason, then the board can fix the maximum rate. It is not a case of fixing the rates all along the line—I do not suppose that will ever occur.

Mr. DUFF: Then the legislation is not necessary.

Mr. FORKE: It is there as a safeguard.

Mr. DUFF: I say it is bad legislation; I say it is not Liberal legislation. I want to tell my hon. friends from the West that the man who is most anxious to get this legislation is Sir Clifford Sifton, a director of the British Empire Steel Corporation and of Canada Steamships Limited. Now, there is a nigger in the woodpile somewhere, and before my hon. friends from the West throw up their hands and vote for this measure they had better ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce to put it back for a while and find out why Sir Clifford Sifton is so much interested in the matter. I say it is not going to help the farmers in the West at all. I do not know whether Sir Clifford Sifton has some interest in Winnipeg or not, but I find that these rates are going to be fixed by the Board of Grain Commissioners in the city of Winnipeg. There is something wrong when we find Sir Clifford Sifton's name associated with this project. I do not say he had any influence on the government in the matter of bringing in the bill, but the fact remains that Sir Clifford Sifton, a director of the British Empire Steel Corporation and Canada Steamships Limited, is one of the men who wants this thing more than anybody else.

Mr. FORKE: I would ask the hon. member whether he has any proof for that assertion?

Mr. ROBB: I would like to say to my hon. friend right now, in justice to Sir Clifford Sifton, that I have here a registered list of the directors of Canada Steamships Limited, dated March, 1921, and that the name of Sir Clifford Sifton does not appear upon it. It is a sworn list.

Mr. DUFF: Perhaps Sir Henry Thornton has been put on in his place. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce wants to take the part of Sir Clifford Sifton in this matter all right, I am satisfied; but if this is true of the Canada Steamships Limited it is true of the British Empire Steel. Both are very closely associated.

Mr. McMURRAY: May I ask my hon. friend what the relationship is between the Canada Steamships Limited and the British Empire Steel?

Mr. DUFF: Well, I should like to say to my hon. friend that if he brands them both as wolverines they are the same brand of wolverines, if that will satisfy him. But Mr. Wolvin and Mr. Norcross are two gentlemen who are connected with both the British Empire Steel and Canada Steamships Limited. I would not refer to them as wolverines. I think they are gentlemen and big business men in this country, men who have done a lot for Canada; and even if they do charge excessive rates on the Great Lakes that is no reason why they should be called wolverines or wolves in sheep's clothing.

Now, Sir, this bill provides that the Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada, with head office in Winnipeg are to fix the rates—

Mr. ROBB: Fort William.

Mr. DUFF: I thought the head office was in Winnipeg.

Mr. ROBB: No, Fort William.

Mr. DUFF: They are to fix the rates on grain on the Great Lakes. Well, it seems to me, in the first place, that they are not the right people to do it even if it were necessary.

Mr. McMURRAY: Fix the maximum.

Mr. DUFF: It does not make any difference, I said fix the rates. I say the Grain Commissioners are too close to the grain trade to have the fixing of the rates on other peoples property, on vessels which are owned by other people and not by the government who appointed those commissioners. I also want to say that if we are going to have paternal legislation of this kind—and it seems to me we are running mad in the matter of restrictions, regulations and paternal legislation of all kinds—we should also get the Grain Commissioners, or somebody else to fix what should be the maximum price of grain. For instance, we who come from the Maritime provinces and from the province of Quebec and who have to buy flour, may petition this government to fix the maximum price of grain. Why not? If the western representatives and the government think it is necessary to fix the price for the carriage of grain why should it not also be necessary to fix the price of the grain itself?

Mr. FORKE: Does the hon. member not see how absurd that argument is?—and I do not wish to make the remark in any way at all offensive. Does my hon. friend imagine that any combination of farmers is possible in the Dominion of Canada to fix the price of grain in any shape or form? How can my hon. friend make such a comparison? How can he put the farmers in the same position as six vessel owners combining to fix prices for the carrying of grain; there is simply no comparison.

Mr. DUFF: I was not aware that the farmers fixed the price of grain.

Mr. FORKE: You assumed that they did.

Mr. DUFF: Oh, no.

Mr. FORKE: You wanted the maximum price of grain fixed.

Mr. DUFF: When I referred to the western farmers I meant the men who fixed prices in the West. I say it is just as reasonable that the price of grain should be fixed—it makes no difference whether by farmers or the grain exchange at Winnipeg—

Mr. FORKE: You mean the government should fix the price of grain?

Mr. DUFF: Yes, I say it is just as reasonable for the government to fix the price of grain in the interest of the Maritime provinces, the province of Quebec, and the province of British Columbia as it is for it to fix the rates for the carriage of that grain from Fort William to Port Colborne, or to Montreal, or anywhere else. I say the principle is bad, and if the government is going to make a practice of introducing paternal legislation, it has as much right to go on and fix the price of everything.

An hon. MEMBER: Fish.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, fix the price of fish, lumber and everything else. I say this is legislation that is not in the interest of the country. I am sorry to see the Minister of Trade and Commerce bringing in a bill to try and fix the maximum grain rates on the Great Lakes.

Now, Sir, if the government want to help the western farmers they can do so without interfering with private enterprise. We must not forget that whether these shipping companies have been charging too high a rate or not, the fact remains that the vessels engaged in that trade belong to those who fix the rates. If the rates are higher than the shipper thinks is justifiable there is no reason why he should use these boats. The government can provide a remedy. The government has a remedy in its own hands without interfering with private enterprise. And what is that remedy? We have two lines of railway, one running from Winnipeg to Quebec, and another from Winnipeg to Montreal. I would suggest that if the government wishes to do something in this matter, if it really wishes to help the western farmers, it should reduce the rate on grain carried on the Canadian National Railways from Winnipeg to Quebec and Halifax. That would be the proper way to act in this matter, not to introduce legislation which interferes with private enterprise.

Mr. CALDWELL: Why not lower the rate on the Transcontinental railway to Quebec?

Mr. DUFF: I am not saying they should do that. What I say is, if the government desires to help the western farmer, instead of interfering with private enterprise, instead of interfering with men who have invested, as we have been told, $25,000,000 in building this one line of steamships, it should lower the rates on its own railways. If the government is going to fix the rates for the carriage of grain, or other commodities, on the Great Lakes why should it not do it everywhere else? Most of this grain from the western prairies crosses the Atlantic ocean to the old country, or goes from Alberta to Vancouver and thence through the Panama canal to the United Kingdom. If the western people want the government to fix the rate on grain on the Great Lakes, why not ask it at the same time to regulate the water rates on grain from Vancouver through the Panama canal to the old country? There is just as much reason why it should be done in the one case as in the other, and just as little reason for that matter. The whole principle is wrong. The leader of the Progressive party speaking last night, I think, asked why more ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine were not used to carry grain on the Great Lakes. My information is that some of them did carry a small quantity of grain. Of course those ships can carry grain. The canoes which are used for pleasure on the Rideau canal could carry grain. So could the boats used on the Winnipeg river. But the question is whether or not such a canoe or boat is fit to carry grain from Fort William to Port Colborne and Montreal. The same thing applies to the ships of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine. The question is not whether they can carry grain, but whether they are adapted to the carriage of grain at a rate that would be profitable.

My contention would be—and I am only saying this for the benefit of my hon. friend the leader of the Progressives—that the Canadian government ships are not suitable for the carriage of grain, they are not equipped for it, and they cannot either load or discharge their cargoes as quickly as the boats which were built purposely for the business. The Canadian Government Merchant Marine boats cannot carry grain at the same rate that either the American or Canadian boats owned by the other shippers on the Great Lakes can carry it. Consequently it is useless to encourage them to put these boats on the lakes to compete with the other boats. If you encourage them too much they are liable to put some boats in the service and, the boats not being suitable for it, they would lose a great deal more money than they are losing at the present time.

It is said that grain is carried from Canadian ports to American ports cheaper than it is carried from Canadian ports to Canadian ports. How is this bill going to help in that matter? Grain will still be carried by American tonnage or American bottoms from Canadian ports to American ports at whatever rate the owners of the ships desire to fix for the carriage of that grain. This bill cannot regulate rates on the American boats. I understand also that grain is carried in American bottoms from American ports to our Canadian ports of Montreal and Quebec, and certainly this government has no power at all to fix the rates which these boats shall charge for the carriage of grain. It is also a well-known fact that the amount of grain carried by the Canadian boats is very much smaller than the amount carried by the American boats. How is the government going to regulate this matter and accomplish any good to the western farmer, when the great bulk of the grain is carried in American bottoms and tonnage, over which the government has no control. In my opinion this bill will benefit the western farmer very little, if at all, and will have the effect of putting the Canadian steamship lines and other lines on the Great Lakes out of business.

It is quite possible that the Board of Grain Commissioners are experts on grain and also other lines of business; but it is rather a difficult matter for anybody who has not had any experience, and has not the knowledge, to decide how much should be charged by these steamers for the carriage of this or any other commodity. For instance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb), approves of the freight rates charged by the steamers which were subsidized by the government. But I venture to say—and I think the minister will admit—that he cannot in parliament to-night say whether in his opinion these rates which the different steamships charge are reasonable or low or excessive. In my opinion, if there is going to be any rate fixing, it is not fair to the owners of these steamship lines that the Board of Grain Commissioners at Fort William should fix the rate at which they should carry the freight. It is a different thing altogether for the Railway Commission to fix freight rates on the railways, and I think hon. members will agree with me. I have heard them protest against rates which were fixed by the present Railway Board. Even the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) protested, and my friends on the other side have told me on different occasions about the way the Railway Board fixes rates. There is a difference between the Railway Board fixing rates and the Board of Grain Commissioners fixing rates for this reason: That the Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway as the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said are really monopolies, because they run through certain territory, and nobody else can do business in that territory but themselves; therefore the government has a right to control rates. But the Board of Grain Commissioners is not the right and proper body to fix rates for steamship lines. How are they going to know what rates should be fixed? For instance, under this bill the Board of Grain Commissioners will meet some time or other and fix a rate. How are they going to fix it? What are they going to base the rate on? To show the silliness of the whole business, if there is a combine to-day, and if the steamship companies get together and increase the rates, will hon. members tell me they are not going to fix their costs and charges, if they want to? Will hon. members tell me that, when they lay their statements before the Board of Grain Commissioners, they cannot show that commission that they should get certain rates? And the Grain Commissioners are in such a position that they will not know whether their statements are correct or not. I say this measure is not going to help the western farmer, and that the rates under this bill will be just as high, as far as the western farmer is concerned, as they are at the present time. It would be far better in my opinion if the hon. members who are now supporting the bill should say to the government "Get after the combine, if any exists, in regard to the present rates; make the steamships go into competition with one another," because when there is competition there can be no fixing of rates for more than a few days at a time.

Mr. FORKE: The hon. member has already said that the Board of Grain Commissioners is not a fit body to say what the rates should be.

Mr. DUFF: I did not say they were not a fit body. I said I doubted it.

Mr. FORKE: That they were not competent.

Mr. DUFF: I do not say that; but go on.

Mr. FORKE: How would they know when a combine existed, if they did not know it by the results, by finding out that exorbitant rates are being charged on the lakes? How would they find out that a combine existed? We only know about a combine when there is no competition and when excessive rates are charged. Who would be the judge to say when the charges were excessive? You have thrown doubt upon the ability of the Board of Grain Commissioners.

Mr. DUFF: I do not know exactly how to reply to my hon. friend. He has said there was a combine. I do not know about that. I am taking his word, and the word of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) that a combine exists. I am saying that some doubt has been cast on these three gentlemen in regard to their ability to say whether a combine exists or not. I am not saying so, but I am told that not one of these gentlemen knows anything about shipping or the cost of operating steamships. I do not know whether a combine exists or not, but I am willing to take the word of the hon. leader of the Progressives, and the hon. member for North Winnipeg. But I do say that you are going to have a combine when you get the Grain Commissioners to fix the rates, because the rates will be all the same.

Mr. FORKE: Oh no.

Mr. DUFF: And I say if the matter is left open, and people are allowed to secure their space as they require it, and bid for the space with different companies, that will break up the so-called combine, and the western farmer and grain operator will have a better chance to get lower transportation rates on the Great Lakes than they will by the operation of this bill. The whole thing is the combine; and the leader of the Progressives and his friends and my hon. friend from North Winnipeg should unite with me in saying to the government that the combine should be broken up; and if you break up that combine we will not need the legislation proposed to-night which, in my opinion, is bad legislation.

Mr. FORKE: Who is going to prove the combine? Tell us some way to find it out?

Mr. ROBB: Hear, hear.

Mr. FORKE: When can we prove a combine?

Mr. DUFF: I am sure there are certain ways of proving a combine. That is not very difficult. We have proven a combine in connection with the Canadian Government Merchant Marine, for instance, on the Atlantic ocean. That was not very hard to prove.

Mr. MARTELL: Under the Combines Bill as passed through this House this session, is it not possible for any person who has reasonable cause for believing, and who will state on information that he has reasonable cause for believing and does believe that a combine exists, to have that combine investigated? I think that is the whole tenor of the Combines Bill, which was put through this session.

Mr. PARENT: Has it been sanctioned?

Mr. MARTELL: We must hope that it is going to be sanctioned. We have as much reason to hope that it will be sanctioned as we have to hope that this bill will be sanctioned.

Mr. DUFF: I agree absolutely with the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Martell), that anybody who has a reasonable belief—

Mr. FORKE: Six persons.

Mr. MARTELL: It would not be difficult to get six persons out west, if they thought so.

Mr. DUFF: Exactly. There is no difficulty to prove a combine. What this government should do is to get after the combines or profiteers under the act which the hon. member for Hants cited. I am satisfied, from the speech of the leader of the Progressive party, and from that of the hon. member for North Winnipeg, that there is a combine. I say that a combine has been proved with regard to insurance rates, if the statements of my hon. friends are correct. If it is true that the Canada Steamships Company or their agents or officials or anybody else, refuse to give space in their steamers to shippers of grain, unless they insure with them at double the rates which other companies charge, that is proof that it is time to get after them under the Combines Bill, and to show them that they cannot do that sort of thing any more. But this government has no right to fix rates on water carriers any more than to fix rates on anything else. That is not Liberalism, and it is the height, and the worst kind, of protection. I am surprised to see my hon. friends from the West who want lower tariffs, and who believe in free trade and Liberal principles, coming to parliament and asking for protection, when it suits themselves to do so. I should like to know who asked for this legislation, because in looking up Hansard and reading the debate which was introduced in this House by Mr. Armstrong, I notice that amongst other hon. gentlemen who spoke against legislation of this kind, was the late Minister of Railways and the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). In the speech of the latter hon. gentleman, I notice that he read a letter from the Montreal Corn Exchange Association. I need not read it, but it refers to a speech made by Mr. Armstrong, and they say:

> The committee of management of this association earnestly hopes that you will use your influence towards procuring the rejection by the House of that bill....
> It is needless to recapitulate them—

That is the reasons why they oppose the bill.

> —here further than to say that, in the interests of the grain trade via the port of Montreal, the continuance and growth of which is of such vital concern to the port and indeed to the country, it is important that water carriers be left free to make such rates as market conditions may warrant from time to time, and that grain shippers may be, in the future, as they have been in the past, in a position to take advantage of the lowest rates they may be able to secure by negotiation with the water carriers.

I presume the Montreal Corn Exchange Association are users of large quantities of space or tonnage in ships on the Great Lakes. It seems to me that the opposition coming from them is worth while considering. I cannot believe that it is in the interest of shippers to have this legislation go through. I feel that if there is open competition, and if this combine which is alleged, were broken up, there would be no necessity for this legislation, and in fact, whether the combine is broken up or not, this legislation should not pass this House. No case has been made by the minister himself, or by other hon. members who have so far spoken, to prove that fixing of rates will be beneficial to the western farmer in the shipping of grain. I, for one, protest against the passing of this bill, and I say that it should not go into effect.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon Mr. Fortier in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. ROBB: Before proceeding with the consideration of the clauses, I wish to make some observations out of courtesy to my hon. friends the preceding speakers. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) made reference to the Armstrong bill introduced at previous sessions, and I am frank to admit that I am opposed to the Armstrong bill, but the Armstrong bill was quite a different measure from the one under consideration. Admitting, however, for a moment, that it was not a different measure, conditions to-day and conditions existing last season, were quite different from conditions that prevailed at the time the Armstrong bill was introduced. I have under my hand the rates for the seasons from 1913 to 1922. For instance, in 1913, the average rate for the season from Fort William to Port Colborne, was 2.43 cents a bushel, and the average rate to Buffalo was 2.43 cents a bushel. In 1914, the average rate to Port Colborne was 1.48 cents a bushel, and the average rate to Buffalo was 1.63 cents a bushel. In 1915, the average rate to Port Colborne was 1.71 cents a bushel, and the average rate to Buffalo was 2.63 cents a bushel. Let us come to 1922, and we find that the average rate to Port Colborne was 3.81 cents a bushel, and the average rate to Buffalo was 4.49 cents a bushel. But during the months of May, June, July, August and September, there was a discrimination ranging from three-quarters of a cent to one and one-half cents a bushel against the Canadian ports. The change in the rate to Buffalo was because at that time the port at Buffalo became congested.

As regards the two measures before the House running concurrently, the measure just passed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe) and this measure, the real teeth of the legislation are in the bill passed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We found very little opposition to that measure; it went through. But the opposition to this bill is because this bill provides the government with the information which they must have in order to consider intelligently the situation in suspending the coasting laws. I respect the opinions of my hon. friend from Lunenburg because I know that he is a shipping man with considerable experience in all departments of the business. I am sure that he is perfectly competent to speak upon all shipping questions, and I gather that he is fully aware of the importance of this matter. The importance of this measure does not consist in the fixing of a maximum rate; we find the importance of it, the teeth of it, in the gathering of the information, the tabulating of it, the publication of that information, and the publication from day to day, during the season, of the space that has been booked and the space that is available for shippers. That is where we find the very teeth of this measure; and it is in that respect that it is opposed. It is opposed not because there happens to be in it a clause that gives the board the right, if they deem it wise, to fix a maximum rate, but because the measure provides machinery upon which the government can act intelligently and arrive at a decision that will justify the suspension of the coastal laws.

Mr. FORKE: I do not see any provision in either of the bills enjoining the board to report to the government in regard to the abrogation of the coastal laws. The government will have to secure information and it seems to me that the board would be the proper authority to secure it. It would therefore appear necessary to incorporate a provision to that end in either of the bills.

Mr. ROBB: As we proceed with the bill my hon. friend will observe that a part of the duties of the Board of Grain Commissioners will be to advise the minister from time to time concerning conditions. Of course, they will be in a position at any time any complaint comes in to supply such information as is found necessary. The coastal laws are themselves a question of international importance. Would it be right to confer upon a commission the duty of recommending their suspension? The government of the day must take the responsibility; and the government that had the courage to bring in this measure will not lack the courage to suspend the coastal laws if that is considered in the public interest.

Mr. GOULD: I had intended asking the minister a question but he has anticipated it.

Mr. MARTELL: Do I understand the minister to say that the Board of Grain Commissioners, who know absolutely nothing about shipping, will be charged with the duty of advising the government in regard to the suspension of the coastal laws, to allow foreign ships to come and ply between one Canadian port and another?

Mr. ROBB: The preceding government and this government have both taken the responsibility of allowing, at certain seasons, United States vessels to come into Canadian ports.

Mr. MARTELL: You could always do that.

Mr. ROBB: We have the right to give a permit for that purpose, but we have not the right to allow foreign ships to ply between one Canadian port and another.

Mr. MARTELL: Does the minister propose to create a law permitting foreign vessels, either American or any other, to ply between one port in Canada and another? If that is the intention I must protest against it. The minister is very much older in politics than I am, and he no doubt is aware that this matter of permitting vessels other than Canadian or British to ply between various ports within Canada has always been a very vexed question with our people.

Mr. ROBB: It is a vexed question to-night.

Mr. MARTELL: In days gone by governments have been memorialized and pamphlets circulated in protest against such permission. It was always pointed out that trade would follow the flag, and Norwegian and other vessels, it was stated, were driving our own ships from our own seas. If the minister proposes to pass any laws by means of which foreign vessels can come in and ply between different Canadian ports in competition with our own vessels, then I will vote against the bill.

Mr. ROBB: My hon. friend apparently has not been in the House all evening. My colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Lapointe), to-night amended the Shipping Act along these very lines to enable the government to suspend the coastal laws in certain waters during certain periods if necessary, for instance, in connection with the carriage of grain on the upper lakes.

Mr. MARTELL: Surely that cannot refer to the Atlantic seaboard, because if it did I can tell the minister that few members from Nova Scotia would support it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It covers the Atlantic as well.

Mr. MARTELL: Well, it should not be done.

Mr. LAPOINTE: My hon. friend knows that there is no intention to apply it there.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The power is general.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes; of course, it must be.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Interpretation—"Board".

Mr. MARTELL: Does the minister say that the members of the Board of Grain Commissioners are qualified to deal with shipping matters? It is all very well to establish a board at the city of Winnipeg, but these men can know absolutely nothing of shipping, which is a peculiar branch of trade. It is almost impossible to estimate what the costs will be. You may insure your vessel, or you may not get insurance at all. In other words, you are governed to a very large extent by the waters in which you are engaged and by the elements, so that it is absolutely impossible for anyone living in an inland city like Winnipeg, unless he has been a seaman brought up on the shore and has been engaged in the shipping business all his life, to be able intelligently to advise upon the various questions that may arise in connection with the shipping business. The more I see of this sort of thing the more it strikes me that there is growing a tendency towards paternal legislation; and by and by there will be no such thing as private enterprise in the country at all. If this continues men will be loath to invest their money in any industry, particularly in the shipping industry if it is to be subject to governmental control; because there is no business which is more at the mercy of fortuitous circumstances of various kinds than is the shipping industry. I do not see why there should be any desire on the part of governments to interfere with the law of supply and demand; and in this particular instance, with regard to the shipping business, I cannot see wherein this interference can be justified. There are so many peculiar hardships and risks to be encountered in the shipping industry, which are not to be met with in any other business, that under the best conditions a man is circumspect in any investment he makes in this direction. But when the industry is to be controlled in this manner, when shipowners are not to be allowed to hire their ships at the best rates they can secure, it will certainly tend to discourage enterprise. I am firmly convinced that the best course in this connection would be to leave the matter to the law of supply and demand. I certainly think that it is an absurdity for the government of a country to step in and dictate what rates shipowners shall charge for the carriage of certain cargoes. This session we have passed through parliament an Anti-Combines Bill which provides that any six persons who have reasonable and probable cause for believing that a combine exists may lay information accordingly and have the matter thoroughly investigated by a commission; provision being made for punishment, if the case is proved, of those who constitute any such combine, or those who are accessory either before or after the fact. Now we are giving power to a board to fix rates. So with respect to shipping combines this Anti-Combines Bill is apparently intended to be ignored by the minister in the belief that it is worthless. I voted for that measure, believing it was in the interests of this country to regulate combines and restrict unlawful combinations in restraint of trade. But here we have the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Robb) admitting that he has no faith in the bill put through this House by the government of which he is a member.

Mr. ROBB: Not at all.

Mr. MARTELL: Well, that is the only reasonable inference to be drawn. We have the minister endeavouring to restrict all sorts of private enterprise and initiative. I claim that the sooner we get away from this paternalism the better it will be for the Dominion at large. It is all very well for my friends from the West to come here and prate day after day and night after night about their grievances. We all have grievances. We in the East are just as hard hit in regard to our local interests as are the people in the West, but we do not come to the government and expect it to be a fairy godmother and legislate against every private industry in the country in order that our particular grievances may be set right. We are prepared, as the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Duff) aptly expressed it, to stand upon our own legs.

Mr. GARDINER: Would the hon. member be willing to apply the same rule to our protected industries?

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend is getting into the question of protection versus free trade. I am just as much a low tariff man as is my hon. friend, but I have sense enough to know that we cannot do away with tariffs to-day and have sufficient revenue to run the country. I declare to-day that a tariff for revenue is absolutely essential because our people are not prepared to bear any more direct taxation. Now, my hon. friends from the West, who know absolutely nothing about shipping, who do not know the stem of a ship from the stern, the rail from the keel, or larboard from starboard, come here and ask the government to introduce legislation to kill the shipping industry of the country. I am surprised, Mr. Chairman, that the government has been so lax as to listen to the importunities of these men in their endeavour to place upon the statute books legislation intended to build up western Canada, or to remedy some imaginary grievances of the West, at the expense of the shipping interests of the Dominion. We of the Maritimes are shipping people, and, as I said before, are prepared to stand upon our own legs, to give fair treatment to every industry in the country. But in the name of everything that is fair, if we believe in this Anti-Combines Act, why do we not allow it to operate in this instance? The act contains full power for the regulation of shipping rates or combines. If it is workable, and I believe it is, then in the name of Heaven let us get away from this paternalism and work out our destiny ourselves without constantly coming to the government and asking it to be a sort of fairy godmother to us.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I quite agree with most of what my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Martell) has just said, but I am afraid it will be very ineffective in this committee to-night. If hon. gentlemen would take the time to study the bill and appreciate all that is involved in it, it would have very little sympathy or support from them. When we come to control rates we get into the biggest problem the human mind can grapple with. I doubt very much if hon. gentlemen have given to this question the amount of consideration it deserves. It cannot be treated in a cynical fashion and laughed at as if it were not important. It is important. It would not be possible, I believe, to make this legislation apply in my province of Nova Scotia, nor in New Brunswick, nor in Prince Edward Island. Our people would not submit to it, no matter who approved or supported it. It would not be possible to get a hundredth part of one per cent of the population of the Maritime provinces to support such a proposition as is contained in some of the clauses of this bill. I have in mind particularly the references to rate control, which is price control. But I rise especially to call the attention of the minister to paragraph (d) of the interpretation clause:

> "Lake and river navigation" includes all the rivers, lakes and other navigable waters within Canada.

I want to make sure that this legislation is not going to extend beyond a certain area. I turn to section 3 and I see that the words "by lake or river navigation" are imported into the section. Just what the effect of this will be I do not know. I thought this bill was expressly limited in operation to the area of the Great Lakes, but "lake and river navigation" is capable of a very wide definition, and is made applicable to "all the rivers, lakes and navigable waters within Canada." It is possible to read into section 3 the meaning that while the filing of rates with the Board of Grain Commissioners is specifically applicable to those shipping companies that "carry grain for hire between Fort William or Port Arthur and any other port or place in Canada or the United States," it is also applicable to the hauling of grain between Montreal and Halifax, St. John or Sydney.

Mr. ROBB: How?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): By reason of the definition given to the words "lake and river navigation." I call the attention of the minister to this. I do not know what suggestion to offer at the moment to make the meaning clear.

Mr. DUFF: Subsection (d) of section 2 distinctly states:

"Lake and river navigation" includes all the rivers, lakes and other navigable waters within Canada.

In other words as the hon. member for Halifax says, the Board of Grain Commissioners may attempt to fix the rates not only on the St. Lawrence river but on every small river and stream in Canada.

Mr. EVANS: I did not mean to say anything on this bill, but after the insults thrown out by the member for Hants (Mr. Martell), and after what the member for Halifax has said, I can hardly forbear to enter the discussion.

Mr. DUFF: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that some members had thrown out insults in regard to this matter. I submit that the hon. gentleman is out of order and should withdraw this remark.

Mr. EVANS: I abide by your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but when a reflection is cast on our intelligence and on the class we stand for, I take it as an insult.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUFF: Withdraw.

Mr. EVANS: In the discussion—

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I ask for your decision.

Mr. EVANS: On this lake rate discussion—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Fortier): Every member has fully explained his position, and I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. EVANS: In the discussions of this Great Lakes question we are faced with the same problem this year as we had to deal with last year in connection with the railway rates—the same, indeed, as we had before us this year in regard to the banking question so far as rates of interest are concerned—where the laws of supply and demand are set aside as having nothing to do with the question. The part of western Canada—

Mr. MARTELL: Do I understand my hon. friend to say that in connection with the railway rates question the law of supply and demand should be set aside? If so, would he apply that principle to questions of tariff and trade?

Mr. EVANS: The hon. gentleman will have the floor later.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend cannot answer.

Mr. EVANS: The part of Canada particularly interested in this bill is the agricultural part, the part adapted to the growing of grain and the raising of live stock—an ever-growing industry. Agriculture on any considerable scale commenced only with the advent of the railroad somewhere about 1885. Since that time the agriculturist in that part of the Dominion has had a continuous fight against the protected interests of this country. We have practically no industrial concerns in western Canada, and the organized interests of eastern Canada have taken advantage of our position in that regard, with the result that all the earnings of our people have gone east and have not been used for our benefit; the greater our earnings have been the greater has been the bondage we have laboured under. I say now the time has come when we can no longer stand the elimination of competition among all with whom we have to do in the way of distribution of commodities, the public utilities, and so on. The lake freight question is only one of others, but it is a case in point to show how our position has been taken advantage of; it is a marked factor in increasing the cost of production to a point where we can no longer compete with our products in the world's markets. Two or three years ago one of our farmers' companies, in an effort to keep down the cost, tried to go into the export business for at least a part of their grain, but we found ourselves up against one of the most complete and ruinous combines that ever existed in this country as regards shipping and insurance on the Great Lakes. It was not until the last crop moving season that the situation became unbearable.

In order that we may have some conception of what actually took place in the fall of last year and that we may have some figures before us for the purposes of comparison, let us consider for a moment what were the rates that previously prevailed. In 1914 the average rate to bay ports was 1.46 cents and in 1915, one rate went as low as .69. In 1914 the average rate to Montreal was 11 p.m. 4.58 and in 1915, 4.22. In 1921 the rates of Canada Steamship Lines to bay ports were as follows: Up to September 3, 2¼ cents; September 9, a contract was entered into at 3 cents; September 24, 2½ to 2¾ cents. On September 30 they reached 3 cents all round and stayed at that the rest of the season, except that at one time in November the rate went up to 3½ cents. Mr. Playfair, with a lifetime of shipping experience, chartered a boat for the whole season of 1921 to bay ports at 2½ cents. In January, 1922, Canada Steamship lines contracted with the Armour Company to carry to bay ports 1,000,000 bushels at 2 cents and 2,000,000 bushels at 1¾ cents, and later in the year they contracted to carry wheat from Chicago to Montreal at 7½ cents. Now let me quote some of the rates prevailing in November, 1922: November 21, to Port Colborne, 8½ cents; November 18, to Montreal, 13 cents; November 12 to Montreal, 13 cents; November 7, to Montreal, 15½ cents. There is one case on record where the charge to bay ports and Goderich was 11 cents per bushel; that was on November 4. There was also one case on November 3 of a rate of 9¾ cents to bay ports. No cause was shown why the rate should be higher than in the corresponding months of the previous year, when 2¼ and 2½ cents were the prevailing rates. There was some complaint as to the difficulty in getting the right grade of coal, but the situation in that respect does not seem to have been greatly different from that of former years. The fact remains, Sir, that all our public utilities are owned and operated by interests entirely outside the areas where the bulk of our grain is grown. Any undue charge in this respect always rebounds on the farmers of the plains; whether it is the cost of the distribution of commodities or the handling of our surplus for export—wheat, cattle, dairy products and so on—we are charged for the service a price out of proportion altogether to the cost of rendering it. If some way is not soon found whereby the western farmer will be able to sell his own products, agriculture is going to dwindle in that part of the Dominion until it becomes a thing of the past; or it may be that the bitterness already existing and finding vent in other ways will lead to some untoward movement that will operate with a velocity which may endanger the very structure of confederation itself.

The privileged interests subsidized by this government and the politicians have always maintained the policy of having all the trade of this country go east and west. They have done this for many years now, and as far as the agricultural products of western Canada are concerned they have been successful. But it has been a different tale as regards the raw product of the manufacturers; they prefer getting what they need for their factories anywhere else than in Canada. This is the point I want to make. Since the government has followed a policy to this end, the people in those remote parts have a right to expect that all the facilities for the moving of their produce, all the public utilities that we need to use, should be so regulated as to the prices charged as to encourage us to follow that policy. But instead of that, after the fetters of bondage have been placed upon us the mad dogs of privilege are let loose upon us and no one seems to be able to call them off. It will surely take some explaining, Mr. Chairman; why our vessel owners follow the practice of discriminating in favour of American ports and American shipping. They have carried wheat from Chicago and Duluth to Georgian bay ports, Port Colborne and Montreal, at from one to two cents a bushel less than the rate from Fort William to the same ports. Why they should charge a rate from Fort William to Port Colborne 50 per cent higher than that which is charged from Fort William to Buffalo is rather hard to understand. I say it is time that the traffic on the Great Lakes was thrown open to all the competition possible. There is no longer any reason why Canadian steamship companies should be assisted by any coastal laws to go out of their way to help our rival and keen competitor, the American farmer, to beat us.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Receiving and tabulating of such charges.

Mr. GOULD: I should like to ask the minister if he would accept a recommendation from the Board of Grain Commissioners if in their opinion they deemed the time opportune for the cancellation of the coasting laws?

Mr. ROBB: We are asking the Board of Grain Commissioners to assemble the information that will enable us to decide.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

Monday, June 25, 1923

The House met at three o'clock.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

Mr. McMASTER (Brome) moved concurrence of the House in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh reports of the committee charged with the investigation into agricultural conditions.

He said: These reports have been on the Table of the House for some days, and it is my desire now, with the unanimous consent of the House, if I may obtain it, merely to move formally their adoption, and to defer any remarks I may have to make until I see whether there is any criticism offered in connection with these reports.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to postpone until to-morrow what he wishes to say in regard to these reports. Notice can be given for to-morrow.

Mr. McMASTER: I bow to the ruling. I give notice that to-morrow I will move the adoption of and concurrence in these reports.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN—CATTLE EMBARGO

On the Orders of the Day:

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not observed that the order is yet down which called for the correspondence respecting the cattle embargo. I would think that all the objections the minister could have to bringing down the correspondence would be over to-day about five o'clock. Perhaps, we could expect it then.

Mr. FIELDING: Seven o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps we can expect it this evening.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was not aware there was any objection to bringing it down. We have been busy getting the files ready. They required a good deal of sorting. I think they are all ready and some of them are now in my office in this building and I will be ready to submit them to my hon. friend this afternoon.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When the file comes down we will see how much it is that requires the government four months to sort out.

UNITED STATES LIQUOR LAWS

On the Orders of the Day:

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I call attention of the government to a despatch from Washington which, no doubt, all hon. members have read, to the effect that a communication has passed from this government to the United States intimating an unwillingness to comply with a request that had been made for co-operation in the prevention of shipments of liquor against the law into the United States. Would the government intimate what correspondence has been sent from Washington to this government and from this government to Washington on the subject?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I am obliged to my right hon. friend for bringing up the matter, because, having read the despatches to which he refers, I think they are calculated to create an entirely erroneous impression. It is true, the government has received from Washington a communication asking if it would be possible for the Canadian government to assist in promoting the observance of certain liquor laws of the United States. The communication relates to matters particularly appertaining to the export of liquor. When the communication was received it was referred to the departments of government concerned. The reply sent to Washington related exclusively to a statement of the law as it stands and the position of the Canadian authorities in meeting the request that has been made. There has been nothing sent forward to Washington with respect to the government's policy in the matter of endeavouring to co-operate with American authorities in securing observance of their laws. So far as the government's policy in that matter is concerned, I would say that we have every desire to co-operate with the American authorities in helping them to secure the observance of their laws in precisely the same manner as we would hope to have the American authorities co-operate with us in securing the observance of our laws. Such action as has been taken up to the present has been entirely of a departmental character. The government is sending a communication to Washington intimating that, as soon as the present session is over, we will be pleased to receive at Ottawa an officer from the American government to discuss with our officials possible ways and means of helping to meet the situation to which they have referred. Our attitude in this matter is entirely a friendly one, in an endeavour to further, so far as it may be possible for us so to do, the best of relations with our American neighbours.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When did the request come? And, was there not time to receive the American delegate so that the government's policy might get beyond the bounds of desire and into legislation? I noted that the Prime Minister stated that they had taken care that the delegate would not come until the session was through, when it is impossible to put any more legislation on the statute books for another year. When was the request received and why was action not taken before?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The request was received some little time ago. When it was received, it was referred to the departments of government concerned, and I think such delay as has taken place has arisen out of the circumstance that legal opinion had to be given by the law officers as to the position of the law, and the extent to which it would be possible to go under the law as it stands in meeting the situation as presented to us. My impression is that it was about three months ago, the request was received. There was no intention of delay in the matter. It was dealt with entirely departmentally. As regards the larger question, that of policy, the government would like to be able to view all sides of the situation before taking final action.

THE UNION BANK

Mr. ROBERT FORKE (Brandon): Mr. Speaker, I beg to ask leave, under rule 39, to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, to call the attention of the House to certain statements appearing in the press, apparently of an authentic nature, regarding the financial position of the Union Bank of Canada; and the necessity of safe-guarding the public interest in every possible way.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member shall have leave to move the adjournment?

And leave having been granted:

Mr. SPEAKER: Might I remind hon. members of rule 39, paragraph (c) which reads:

> The motion must not revive discussion on a matter which has been discussed in the same session.

I merely wish to call the attention of hon. members who might desire to speak on the motion, that they must speak strictly to the the motion.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. FORKE: Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavour to keep to the motion as closely as I possibly can, although I realize that it will, perhaps, be a little difficult to deal with this matter without in some way alluding to what has been taking place in this House and in different committees for some time past. The House has only passed the third reading of the Bank Act renewing the charters for another ten years, and now the affairs of one of our large chartered banks has been made public, and the people are made aware that the bank has suffered some losses, so that, perhaps, it is in the public interest that this question should be discussed to some extent at the present time.

A statement has been made by the president and directors of the Union Bank of Canada. I may say that for some time back there have been persistent rumours in the country that all has not been well with some of our banks. We have heard this in the corridors of the House, and I have heard it mentioned in other places. We are assured by an examination of the bank's affairs by auditors, president, directors, and an independent high official of the Bank of Montreal, that the Union Bank is in a fundamentally sound position. It seems strange, though this may be only a coincidence, that just immediately after the third reading of the Bank Act had passed this House, the statement was made public. This may have been only a coincidence, and just happened; but on the face of the matter, it seems rather strange that this should have taken place. I have no wish by word or act of mine to do anything that will in any way throw doubts or cause uneasiness in regard to the position of the Union Bank of Canada at this particular time. I want, however, to call the attention of the House to a statement issued by the Union Bank of Canada on November 30, 1922. The statement in part is as follows:

Capital..	$8,000,000
Net profits for the year after all bad debts and doubtful liabilities to the bank are eliminated..	1,131,060
Paid in dividends up to date..	800,000
Balance of profits carried forward..	483,000
Rest account..	6,000,000

I am sure everyone must have considered that to be a most reassuring statement. The bank was prosperous, everything was going well, and no one had any reason to believe, even as late as November last, that anything was wrong. We have another statement issued just the other day. The capital remains the same, $8,000,000; the rest account has now shrunk to $1,750,000, and the profit and loss account is only $159,360. What has happened? A sum of $4,250,000 has disappeared from the rest account of the bank. We are told that this has been withdrawn from the rest account, and placed in the contingency reserve account, presumably to cover up losses that have occurred in the bank's business during those months. The business of the bank has suffered losses from high officials of the bank. The president's statement is that this was through unauthorized transactions in sterling exchange. That is the explanation we get. I said previously that this all becomes public after the bill renewing bank charters for ten years had passed its third reading in this House.

Another question might be asked. There have been persistent rumours, as I have already stated, and the condition spoken of must have been in existence for months. Had the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), or the Department of Finance, any knowledge of the condition of things during the time the Bank Act was before the committee on Banking? It might be worth while to inquire how the losses have been incurred. Have they been incurred by granting loans at branch banks where loans have been made by managers of branch banks at from 8 to 10 per cent interest? We have often heard it stated that a high rate of interest has to be charged in the prairie provinces because the risks there were much greater than in other parts of the Dominion, and 8 per cent and 10 per cent have been named as the rates of interest that had to be charged in order to carry on the bank's business successfully. What is the fact? The losses that have been incurred are not made in the branches, but through loans made at the headquarters of the bank. We know that branch managers are not allowed to make any loans over $500 without applying to headquarters for authority to do so. The facts of the case seem to be that the really serious loans made by banks are made at headquarters and by the general managers. We might say that this is due to rather reckless financing on the part of some of the managers at headquarters; witness the case of the Merchants Bank and the loss at this time incurred by the Union Bank. The thought of many people may be: Have we just escaped another merger? A concentration of one or two banks in one of the financial centres would be a misfortune, something that the Progressive party has been fighting very strenuously against. The Union Bank is the only large bank with headquarters in the West. No one wants to see it disappear; no one wants the control of credit to fall into the hands of a few privileged individuals or corporations, and I believe that this is true of the majority of our people irrespective of their views on banks and banking.

Now, let us for a moment examine some of the occurrences of recent date in banking circles. We will take the case of two banks, the Merchants Bank and the Union Bank of Canada. The Merchants Bank suffered losses through bad loans much in the same way, I think, as the Union Bank of Canada has no doubt suffered. Still its capital was intact and it had a rest account of $1,500,000. After certain negotiations, however, it capitulated—shall I say?—to the Bank of Montreal in which it was swallowed up. This, of course, resulted in a loss to its shareholders, and inconvenience and hardship to many individuals. And now, there remains of that institution no more than a name,—a name, I might say, "to point a moral or adorn a tale." The Union Bank of Canada, the one more immediately under discussion, like the Merchants Bank of Canada, has its capital stock still unimpaired, with a rest account of $1,750,000. These are almost parallel cases you may say, and you naturally ask the question, why so different a conclusion? To the ordinary layman outside, there does not seem to be very much difference between the respective positions of the two banks, and one naturally wonders why the ending is not the same in the one case as it was in the other. Well, the Union Bank has shown courage in the situation in which it finds itself. I think it may be commended on its courageous facing of the facts and its taking the people into its confidence. It has set its house in order, having learned from experience that the policy it has adopted is the best under the circumstances.

Now, we are told in the statement made public that there is to be a policy of economy in operating and overhead expenses. I believe I heard that same statement made not very long ago when it was declared that all the banks in Canada were running at a minimum of expense. It was stated that no reduction could be made in the matter of operating and overhead expenses, the banks apparently, as one would infer, being already run as economically as possible. Yet here we find a bank to-day making the public announcement that it will inaugurate improvements in this direction. It must be perfectly evident to a great many persons, I should think, that the operating and overhead expenses of banks to-day are much too extravagant in the present condition in which the country is struggling. There have been some dismissals, and perhaps this is well. I want to pay a tribute to some of the directors who are still on the board of the Union Bank. Personally I am acquainted with some of these gentlemen; they are men of probity, courage and honesty, whose names, I think, ought to be a tower of strength in restoring confidence in the stability and the fundamental soundness of the Union Bank of Canada. I have no desire for a moment to cast any shadow of doubt on the soundness of this bank. True mistakes have been made, but the right course has been adopted, and the bank deserves the support and confidence of the public in view of the courage with which it has faced the situation. But what assurance have we that the same thing may not occur again? I anticipate the probable reply, that you cannot prevent men from taking chances and doing foolish things, that you cannot make men honest by any preventive measures; honest,—shall I say?—with other people's money. Well, that does not make for stability or public confidence and I claim that something ought certainly to be done to ensure the public against any disastrous happenings in connection with the banks, at least, with the authority of any directors. In the light of experience, and in view of the facts that are now made public, parliament, by extending the bank charters for ten years has given the O.K. to things just as they are. Some hon. members may be excused for thinking that it might have been the part of wisdom for this House to have thought carefully over our whole banking system in relation to commerce and agriculture, and in relation to the needs of the common people, before partly committing itself for ten years.

Taking up the newspaper to-day I saw a short report of a speech that had been delivered by President Harding during the course of a tour through the United States. I would direct the attention of the House to some remarks he made on that occasion. He said:

> For the first time in the history of agriculture in any country adequate investment and working capital will be furnished farmers on terms as favourable as those accorded to commerce and industry. The farmer is receiving nothing more than is coming to him, nothing more than he needed, nothing more than was good for him, and nothing that was not also good for all our national interests.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just a word in conclusion. I do not want to cast any reflections upon any bank or banking system at this particular time, but I do not think that the moment is opportune when something should be done to meet the situation that exists in Canada to-day. We have not yet reached a solution of the banking question; it is still open; and it would have been in the best interest of every one concerned if a little more consideration could have been given to this public question in the light of some of the revelations that have come to our knowledge in the last few days. I have just read some of the remarks of President Harding, and I realize that in this House there is a very different attitude towards the trouble of agriculture from that which was evident long ago: it is true we get a good deal of sympathy. But sometimes it is thought that those who represent the agricultural interests are sectional in their outlook on things and do not take a wide enough view of conditions as they generally prevail throughout the country. Here is President Harding making the statement that in the United States agriculture is of national importance and that anything that helps the industry must be for the general welfare. How much more is this true of a country like Canada whose great basic industry is this same agriculture? I repeat, therefore, that all our banking and our commercial interests should be viewed in their relation to the interests of agriculture in this Dominion. I do not desire to detain the House any longer, but I hope that nothing will be said to-day that will be regarded as casting any doubts on the fundamental soundness of the Union Bank. Its managers have taken the proper step, but mistakes having been made in the past, I think something should be done to obviate a recurrence of them.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): If I am to keep within the compass of the ruling laid down by you, Mr. Speaker, as to the nature of the present discussion, I am afraid that I cannot follow my hon. friend (Mr. Forke) in the consideration of the recent address of President Harding. President Harding's notions of what is good to help agriculture do not happen always to be in harmony with our own. For example, he thinks that one way to help agriculture is to put an enormously high tariff against the Canadian west, and so I am not disposed to regard him as a high authority on matters of that sort. I am unable to see the connection, if there is any, between the Bank Act and the present affairs of the Union Bank of Canada. If all that we know about the affairs of the Union Bank had been before us from the beginning of the session, I fail to see what bearing it would have upon the amendments to the Bank

Act. I would welcome, even at this eleventh hour, any useful suggestions that might be offered by way of amendment to that act; and the act, let me inform my hon. friend, is not yet absolutely through parliament. At this moment, it is before another branch of parliament, and if hon. gentlemen feel interested in any question touching the Union Bank trouble, if they will frame some reasonable amendment dealing with the matter, I am sure that even to-day hon. gentlemen of the Senate would be willing to consider it.

My hon. friend asks two questions. First, he wants to know whether the information concerning the Union Bank was in the possession of the Minister of Finance before the Bank Act passed. Yes; and under what circumstances I will tell him. He also asks the question, what assurance have we that this thing may not be repeated? I can tell him that we have no assurance, and so long as human nature is as it is we cannot have any assurance, that misfortunes may not occur to any bank. We cannot guarantee the banking skill nor the moral character of any banking officials. Do not let us run away with the idea that we can make men moral, in the matter of banking, by act of parliament. Men will always receive positions of trust, and if they betray that trust or display bad management in the execution of it, we can only regret the weakness of poor humanity. My hon. friend, however, asks a more important question: Did we know anything of this trouble of the Union Bank when the Bank Act was still before the committee? I personally knew about it, yes; and I will tell my hon. friend the circumstances. About a month ago the president of the Union Bank, Mr. Allan, sent a special messenger to me from Winnipeg. He brought a return of the last month's operations of the bank. He filed that return in accordance with the law, and the messenger, speaking for Mr. Allan, said, "While the president files this return, and while it is in accordance with the statements in the books of the company and is correct in that respect, he feels anxious. He is not himself satisfied with the return. He finds a condition has arisen which calls for investigation. He is not prepared to make a definite statement now, but he believes the bank has suffered losses which need to be accounted for in a different manner from that indicated in the return." He was kind enough to ask my judgment and advice as to what should be done. I told him the only advice I could presume to give, although probably it was not necessary, was for him to have a thorough investigation into the affairs of the bank to ascertain the exact condition; that if losses had been incurred, his proper course was to ascertain them as absolutely and definitely as possible, and then come before the public and make a frank statement of the whole situation. Mr. Read, the auditor, who brought the message to me, intimated that that was exactly what was in the mind of the president and directors of the bank. He told me their officials were making an inquiry into the bank's affairs and intended to call in the expert of another bank to confirm, if necessary, their judgment.

They reached a conclusion and in due course a statement was made to the public. The only communication I received at that time is the one which I shall now read. As I said, Sir, the message came to me by special messenger from Winnipeg, President Allan did not come himself but sent the auditor, Mr. Read. On June 5 I received the following letter from Mr. Allan:

Dear Sir,

As you will remember a verbal statement was made to you on my instructions by Mr. E. S. Read, the auditor of the Union Bank of Canada at the time of the filing of our April statement with your department to the effect that while the statement was correct according to the books of the bank, I had reason to fear the existence of losses the extent of which I was unaware of: that as a consequence I had instituted a revaluation of the Bank's assets, the result of which was not then known but which it was feared might necessitate the deduction of a considerable sum from the Rest Account, and that our April statement was filed in your department subject to the outcome of that revaluation. Its completion has been delayed beyond the date anticipated but I expect that within ten days or two weeks I shall be able to intimate the result to you and that our statement for May will be prepared in accordance therewith.

I am, Sir,

Yours sincerely,

W. R. ALLAN,
President.

Now, I have every reason to believe that the action of the president and directors of the Union Bank of Canada was in accordance with the advice that I ventured to give them—indeed, my advice was not necessary, they had already undertaken to do this. The statement has been issued to the public and the House is familiar with it. I commend the action of the president and directors in the course they took. When they discovered there were losses beyond those for which they had made provision, they had courage to face the music, to make an investigation, to ascertain the exact extent of the losses, to make reasonable provision for those losses by writing down their assets, and then to come before the country with a full, frank statement. In that way, I believe, they have deserved and have won the confidence of the country. I have no reason to doubt that the Union Bank is in a sound and strong position, and again I congratulate the president and directors upon the courage they have evinced.

Beyond this I do not know that I have anything to say regarding the Union Bank of Canada. This is the whole story.

Motion (Mr. Forke) withdrawn.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 221 (from the Senate) respecting The Calgary and Fernie Railway Company.—Mr. Hudson.

SECOND READING

Bill No. 223 (from the Senate) for the relief of Jessie Anne Epstein.—Mr. Duff.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GRAIN DOCKAGE

Mr. McKILLOP:

1. If dockages are all binned together and terminal elevators clean that which belongs to them, how do they deliver to the purchaser the quality which they themselves (the elevators) receive?
2. Is it possible to obtain sample from the inspection department representing quality of dockage used by inspectors when grading dockage shipped and as shown by inspector"s test as provided for in the tariff?
3. Who determines the standards by which inspectors inspect and grade dockage for which no standard has been set by the Standards board?
4. What provision is made for the inspection of spelts and mixed grain?
5. In case of dispute can survey be held on spelts and mixed grain?

Hon. Mr. ROBB:

1. Terminal elevators are required to deliver all screenings free from domestic grain other than broken wheat, and to deliver to the owner of said screenings what would be considered a fair average of original screenings after separation of domestic grain is made.

2. No. It is not possible to obtain sample from the Inspection department that would represent quality of dockage, as the Inspection department do not grade dockage; but it is possible to obtain sample from the Inspection department representing quality of dockage covering any particular shipment after same is loaded.

3. There are no standards set by the Standards board covering dockage. The only standard which the inspectors use is that defined by the Seed Commissioner for "Standard Re-cleaned Screenings."

4. No provision is made for the classification of spelts, but dockage would be assessed if not reasonably free from weed seeds. No provision is made in the Canada Grain Act for the classification of mixed grain. The following general rules for classification were adopted by the Inspection department for the guidance of inspectors, in Septemher, 1919, and have been in use ever since.

Mixed grain No. 1 shall consist of a mixture of wheat and oats, with wheat predominating.

Mixed grain No. 2 shall consist of a mixture of oats and wheat, oats predominating.

Mixed grain No. 3 shall consist of a mixture of wheat and barley, or barley and wheat.

Mixed grain No. 4 shall consist of a mixture of oats and barley, or barley and oats.

Other mixtures of grain, such as wheat and rye, or rye and wheat, are classified as such.

5. A survey could not be held on spelts as there is no provision for classification. A survey could be held on mixed grain.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—LEGISLATION

Mr. HUMPHREY:

1. Does the government propose to introduce legislation to amend section fourteen of chapter thirteen of the statutes of 1919, "An Act to incorporate Canadian National Railways Company and respecting National Railways," which provides that the provisions of The Railway Act respecting the operation of a railway (as distinguished from the provisions of such Act respecting the construction or maintenance of a railway) shall apply to such Canadian Government Railways as would but for the passing of this act be subject to the Government Railways Act, during such time as the operation and management thereof is entrusted to the company?
2. Why are the construction and maintenance thus excluded?
3. Is it the intention of the government to introduce a measure to amend the said section with a view to removing such exception?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: The government does not intend to introduce any further railway legislation this session.

GRADE THREE POST OFFICES

Mr. WHITE:

1. What revenue must a post office have to become a semi-staff office or a grade No. 3 post office?
2. What post offices in Ontario have such revenue?
3. What post offices in Ontario having such revenue are semi-staff offices and what grades?
4. What post offices in Ontario having such revenue are not semi-staff offices or are low Grade No. 3?
5. If any, why are they not so graded or classified?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Postmaster General):

1. (a) Semi-staff offices discontinued on April 1, 1918.

(b) Grade 3. Change from Grade 1 and 2, (that is, Revenue Offices), to Grade 3 and up (City Offices) is not decided entirely upon revenue. Population and local conditions are also most important factors. Under present conditions population 12,000, revenue $25,000 are working guides, but final decision is a question of adequate public service.

2. The offices in Ontario with a revenue of $25,000 and over are: Barrie, Belleville, Brantford, Brockville, Chatham, Cornwall, Fort William, Galt, Guelph, Hamilton, Kingston, Kitchener, Lindsay, London, Niagara Falls, North Bay, Orillia, Ottawa, Oshawa, Owen Sound, Pembroke, Perth, Peterborough, Port Arthur, Renfrew, St. Catharines, St. Thomas, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Smiths Falls, Stratford, Sudbury, Toronto, Waterloo, Welland, Windsor, Woodstock.

3. None of the above mentioned offices are semi-staff offices. The grades of the various offices are as follows:

Office	Grade
Barrie	2
Belleville	4
Brantford	6
Brockville	4
Chatham	5
Cornwall	3
Fort William	5
Galt	2
Guelph	5
Hamilton	8
Kingston	6

4. Offices with revenue of $25,000 or over which are lower than Grade 3 are the following: Barrie, Galt, Orillia, Oshawa, Pembroke, Perth, Stratford, Renfrew, Sudbury, Waterloo, Welland.

5. The reasons the offices mentioned in Question 4 are not graded higher than 2 are:

Barrie—Population not sufficient. (Letter carrier delivery already given).

Galt—Preliminary arrangements already made for change in status. (Letter carrier delivery in operation).

Orillia—Office under review.

Oshawa—Arrangements already made for change. (Letter carrier delivery already established.

Pembroke—Letter carrier delivery already established. Change of status under review.

Perth—Not sufficient population.

Stratford—Preliminary arrangements already made for change in status. (Letter carrier delivery already established).

Renfrew—Not sufficient population.

Sudbury—Not sufficient population.

Waterloo—Not sufficient population.

Welland—Not sufficient population.

TRENT VALLEY CANAL

Mr. McBRIDE:

1. What is the total amount which the Trent Valley canal has cost the Dominion of Canada to the most recent date convenient to the department?

2. What are the amounts of this total cost chargeable to:—(a) Construction; (b) Interest during construction and since; (c) Maintenance and repairs; (d) Operation?

3. What is the amount and kind of traffic which has passed through the Trent Valley canal in the last ten years respectively?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM:

1. $23,367,848.22.

2. (a) Construction, $19,027,762.21; (b) Interest during construction and since (no interest has been charged on the cost of construction); (c) Maintenance and repairs, $3,203,099.81; (d) Operation, $1,136,986.20. total, $23,367,848.22.

3. The following is the traffic statement:

MR. W. R. LITTLE

Mr. LAVIGUEUR:

Was Mr. W. R. Little, Chief Inspector of the Department of Immigration at Quebec, last year, at the time of the mysterious escape of Little George who was sentenced to be deported?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

FRANCOIS D'AMOURS

Mr. HANSON:

1. Was the mail contract held by François d'Amours, of Trois Pistoles, Quebec, cancelled? If so, why?

2. Were tenders called for a continuation of the mail carriage service at Trois Pistoles, Quebec?

[Mr. Graham.]

3. If so, how many tenders were received by the department, by whom were tenders submitted, and what was the amount of each tender?

4. To whom was the contract awarded?

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (for the Postmaster General):

1 and 2. Representations having been made that a better service could be given at a lower cost if public tenders were invited, steps were taken to invite tenders with a view to ascertaining the cost of a new contract for the Trois Pistoles Rural Route No. 1.

3. The following tenders were received: Joseph Therriault, Trois Pistoles, $445; Thomas D'Amours, Trois Pistoles, $450; Joseph Therriault, Trois Pistoles, $550; Chs. Eugene Larocque, Trois Pistoles, $625; Xavier Gagnon, Trois Pistoles, $650; Elizee Rioux, Trois Pistoles, $696; Jean Leblond, Trois Pistoles, $700.

4. As the contract held by Mr. Francois D'Amours involved payment at the rate of $665 per annum, the Postmaster General acted upon the provisions contained in the contract authorizing him to annul the agreement on three months' written notice to the contractor whenever, in his opinion, the public interest shall require it, and awarded a new contract to Mr. Joseph Therriault, the lowest tenderer, at the rate of $445 per annum.

WATERHEN LAKE DRAINAGE

Mr. KNOX:

1. What is the total cost of the Waterhen lake drainage project up to the present time?
2. How much of this was expended on survey work?
3. What is the estimated amount yet required to complete the scheme?
4. How many acres of unproductive land, not including wild hay land, will be rendered arable?
5. Have any experiments been carried out to determine what the soil is best suited for to produce?
6. What disposition will be made of these lands?

Hon. Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil):

1. Total cost of Waterhen Lake drainage project to 31st March, 1923, $164,887.62.

2. Expended on survey work, $16,716.86.

3. Estimated amount required to complete scheme, $30,000.

4. Approximately 11,000 acres.

5. The analysis of soil samples taken from the bed of the lake shows that the soil is very rich in plant food and suitable for the production of farm crops.

6. To be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of the Reclamation Act.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—COAL

Mr. HANSON:

1. What was the value of the coal purchased from the United States by the Canadian National Railways including all routes or systems embraced in its operation, in the following fiscal years: 1920-1921, 1921-1922 and 1922-1923?
2. How was the amount distributed among the various units of the Canadian National system?

Hon. Mr. GRAHAM: Passed as an order for return.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no reason in the world why this question should be passed as an order for return, and I ask the government to reconsider the matter. The answer to the first question can be given in three amounts; the answer to the second question would not be half an inch long. To have it pass as an order for return simply means that the government is shifting it past this session.

Mr. GRAHAM: The difficulty is that we have not at headquarters the information asked for. We shall have to get it from all the different entities that go to make up the whole system.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, one present member of the government two years ago stated what the expenditure had been the year before – pledged his fidelity, pledged his word of honour; so he must have known it then. I do not see what difficulty there would be in getting information as to the amount purchased. It cannot affect the management now; it is all past and gone.

Mr. GRAHAM: The difficulty is the time it would take to get it. However, I am willing to let it stand as a question, and we will see what we can do with it.

Question stands.

UNOPPOSED MOTION FOR PAPERS

CLOSING OF SOLDIERS' HOSPITALS

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all reports, letters, telegrams, and other correspondence relating to the closing of soldiers' hospitals Euclid Avenue Hall Toronto, and Brant House, Burlington, by the government.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONSTRUCTION

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 234, respecting the construction of Canadian National Railway Lines.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this bill has very recently come down and I have not had an opportunity of studying it in detail. As to the construction of the lines contemplated by the legislation I do not wish at the moment to raise any objection. But I do not want the second reading to pass without a protest against one feature of the legislation, a protest which I can carry into committee, but which I want to enter now because in my judgment it does affect in some degree the principle of the measure.

In this bill, as I read it, the Governor in Council will be able to guarantee bonds of the Canadian National Railway, thus pledging the credit of Canada to such bonds as may be issued. By following this procedure the government will not come before parliament and ask for an appropriation in the estimates in the regular way, either for the provision of money direct or by way of guarantee. Hitherto the plan followed has been to include in the estimates the amounts representing the credit of the country, so far as it goes, extending to the road. This is only right: the nation should know, by one complete and clear statement, what the annual commitments are. We have been accustomed to getting that information from the estimates, and I am opposed to any scheme to submerge our commitments in some separate bill, thereby making impossible a fair comparison of the estimates of a given year with those of previous years. As I have suggested, I do not rise to object at all to such construction as may be deemed to be necessary; I rise to protest against the plan of the measure as introduced, enabling the administration to appear to be diminishing or contracting estimates when in fact they are not doing so. Why is clause 5 in the bill? Why does the government not have the matter dealt with in the regular way so that comparisons can be made and the country can know, from the production of the estimates for each year, what it faces in the way of expenditure and commitments for the next year? On a previous occasion, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will remember, I urged that the estimates should show separately and distinctly what was intended to be provided in cash and what by way of guarantee, and the Minister of Finance approved of the suggestion and promised to endeavour to work it out. I think that rule should apply to the estimates. Hitherto the entire vote, whether by guarantee or by express appropriation in cash, has been included in one item or two or three different items, the guarantee and the cash not being distinguished. Nevertheless, we knew what the country's entire commitment was. On the other hand, if this bill passes, a large portion of the country's obligation for the year to come will be hidden away under the covers of this legislation and will not be disclosed in the estimates for the year.

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, the provision of money for public undertakings by legislation rather than by yearly estimate is not at all uncommon; I think I could refer to several statutes of the same kind. One of the difficulties in this: Amounts passed each year in the estimates get through, say, in June; no money is available for work until after the session, and in the ensuing autumn very little can be accomplished. The bill states the entire estimated cost for three years, and when any of the railway estimates are up in the House, anything done or left undone in connection with this legislation can be discussed. Take the good roads movement: a certain bulk amount was voted for a number of years, but that did not deter the House from discussing in detail the—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Was the amount not provided for it in the estimates each year?

Mr. GRAHAM: The amount was not in the estimates; the discussion this year took place on the salaries of the officials. Under the statute the appropriation of that money was spread over a definite term of years; so it is in this case, except that we are dealing with railways, not highways. The purpose of the bill is not to hide anything or to keep anything from parliament; it is merely to enable the practical working out of the projects without delay. By this legislation the House says to the Canadian National Railway Board: Proceed for three years, up to a certain limit, in the construction of railway lines. As to the other point which my hon. friend had in mind, and concerning which his remarks were perfectly true, a portion of this expenditure would be by guarantee and a portion by direct vote through legislation, but by section 3 I think it is any lines of railway connecting with the government railways can be delivered by order in council to be government railways and be constructed out of the consolidated revenue. So there will be a distinct cleavage through the orders in council between those to be guaranteed and those to be paid out of consolidated revenue. I can assure the House that it is merely for the sake of expediting the construction that the legislation is brought down in this way. There will be no effort to hide any amount, only it is an amount for a three-year period instead of one year.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): My experience is that railway subsidies, which are almost akin to this appropriation, are always voted separate from the estimates, so I think there is nothing unusual in this.

Hon. J. B. M. BAXTER (St. John City and Counties of St. John and Albert) would like some explanation from the minister of this vote for providing money. I know that provincial governments when they guarantee the bonds of railway companies have always had this difficulty, that the bonds brought and always have brought a lower price even though with a government guarantee than they would if they were the direct issue of the government itself. That must obtain here, and I fail to see why something should be lost on the sale of the bonds when, after all, it is the credit of Canada that is at stake. The country must pay it, and I do not see why we should sell in a lower market when we can sell in a higher by making the bonds a direct obligation on the country. That is all I want to say regarding that.

Despite some criticism I have seen in my province I think that the proposition, if it is carried out, of practically crossing New Brunswick with a railway will ultimately be a good thing, not for the southern portion of New Brunswick, but for the extreme eastern and central portions, and looking at it from the provincial standpoint I regard it as an excellent thing. I cannot understand, however, why it is not accompanied by the taking over of the St. John and Quebec railway and the completion of that line, which would give the government a network of railways over the province and relieve the province of a national undertaking which was imposed upon it because this parliament had cut the Transcontinental railway across New Brunswick in a place where it would be useful to no one, never has been useful and never will be useful, and a fertile section of the province was left without railway connection which is absolutely necessary. The province has to-day a very heavy load, a quarter of a million dollars a year, and it would be easy in a programme such as this for the government to take over that road and make it function along with the others.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON (West York): I take it that this being a three-year programme for the railways, it is all we are to expect for a three-year period. In the first place, I think that the government ought to let us know what this year's programme is going to be and give us some idea how many of these things are going to be dangled in front of certain constituencies and not going to be gone on with. Let us know what railway construction is going to be done. This bill, as I see it, is a very convenient bill for my hon. friends from more than one standpoint. In the first place it gives them a larger bunch of carrots to wave than they otherwise would have, and they like that.

In the next place, when we get down to an entirely different system of book-keeping in connection with the railways, it is going to be difficult for the House to institute any methods of comparison one way or the other. Indeed, apart from any matter of comparison, it is going to be difficult for the House even to keep track of what is going on. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways did point out that there were two distinct classes of credit that would be used by the railways, there is the consolidated fund, and there is borrowing. So far as consolidated fund payments are concerned they would have to stand in a different position, he said, and I presume he meant they would have to be voted just as they are now. But if the House is to have the satisfaction of getting some part of the definite particulars in connection with the annual vote, I would have thought it would have been better that the House should get them all.

Then again—I suppose we can deal with this when we are in committee—it looks to me as if the bill was drawn in such a way that irrespective of votes the treasury in some way or other was to be opened to the railways under this bill merely looking to a subsequent repayment out of other loans. I do not know whether that is a point that has been considered by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, but I do not believe if he has considered it that he is going to agree with it.

4 p.m.

Speaking to the principle of the bill, this being a three-year programme I would like to know if it means that the government have closed their eyes for a period of three years to other requests for railway construction work. Is this the government's programme for three years? I would just like to point out one thing in this connection and that is that the government as the owner of the railways, in addition to the position it occupies as such owner, having regard to the necessary construction to be done in order to enable the business of the country to be carried on, is also obligated contractually to certain construction. It is obligated in certain sections of this country, not by contractual relations I admit, but by work already done and by statements already made it is practically obligated to construction. Some of the items in to-day's bill of fare are obligated in that manner. I mean obligated by partial construction, by representations, and by people going into the district on the faith of the work that has been done and on these representations. They are mixed up with a three-year programme, and I think that the government ought to let us know whether these works that have already been started and on the faith of which people have gone into the country are going to be given the right of way in this three-year schedule.

Again, I point to the other class of construction, the class of construction that the government is bound to do as a matter of contract. I am going to mention in the first instance, and it is quite enough for my purpose, the viaduct in Toronto. There is not a single word of that in this three-year programme—not a word. I want to remind my hon. friends of this, Mr. Speaker. Speaking from recollection it is now something like eleven years, ten years at any rate, since the contract was signed to build a viaduct at Toronto, but so far the city has been unable to get anything whatever from the government. Last year a deputation waited upon the government, which very courteously promised serious consideration. Well they have got nothing yet, except that "serious consideration." I did not know this matter was coming up to-day. I am again speaking from memory and subject to correction, but my recollection is that on the faith of that agreement the city of Toronto has spent upwards of $26,000,000. The minister will correct me if I am wrong. I have no doubt these reports were made to him.

Mr. FIELDING: By whom was the agreement signed?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was signed, Mr. Speaker, by the only people who could at that time sign it.

Mr. FIELDING: Not the government.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was signed by the officials of the Grand Trunk and the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In so signing that agreement the officials of the Grand Trunk, as well as the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, bound their shareholders, whose shareholders are this government to-day. The government is absolutely bound, just as much as any other shareholder, by the signature of the executive. The signature is there and has never been repudiated. Do I understand my hon. friend's question to mean that the government to-day desire to repudiate that obligation?

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend should state who made the contract. That was all I asked.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not the slightest objection. I do not think there can be any doubt as to what the real position is.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member implied that the government made that contract. They never made any such contract.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh, no, all I said was that there were certain commitments, that the government, as a matter of contractural obligation—

Mr. FIELDING: Grand Trunk commitments.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Where is the Grand Trunk to-day?

Mr. FIELDING: That is a debatable question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not very much debate about it. Who is running the Grand Trunk to-day? My hon. friend's appointee and his board. He is paying the shot and getting the receipts, and I am glad to see the receipts are increasing.

Mr. BUREAU: Did my hon. friend's appointees not run the Grand Trunk previously?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We had started. However, I do not know that we gain anything by running up side lanes. On the strength of this agreement the city of Toronto has spent, again speaking from memory the tremendous sum of $26,000,000.

Mr. McMASTER: What amount of money does the hon. member think the government of this country should spend at this time, to match the expenditure of Toronto?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am not going to ask this government to match coppers with my friend, or the city of Toronto, or any one else. I am only going to ask the government whether it considers its obligation as a "scrap of paper" or not, and whether the government can turn around and allow —no, not allow but be a party to, as it was all done as the result of the agreement—this $26,000,000 of other people's money being invested in this way? I do not suppose it is any worse because it happens to be Toronto's money; it would be all the same if it were the money of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster). Can the government allow this $26,000,000 to be invested on the strength of their contract and then pay no attention to it? I do not think the government want to take that position.

Mr. McMASTER: Is it the idea of the hon. member that the government, having taken over the Grand Trunk in the manner in which it took it over, is bound by all the obligations of the Grand Trunk no matter what they amounted to?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I wonder if my hon. friend could give me any other obligation they disavow. But be that as it may. Here the Grand Trunk is working and operating in Toronto under a certain agreement. It is being operated to-day for the benefit of the government and of the country. Is the hon. member serious in thinking that an agreement dealing with the manner in which the right of way is to be looked after, and the protection given and the like, is to be disregarded and no attention paid to it? The thing seems to be entirely preposterous. I am not talking for Toronto only. What is the matter, practically, with the whole of that large part of rural Ontario served by Toronto? Has my hon. friend ever been so unfortunate as to go into the Union Station and have to risk his life on the low levels?

Mr. McMASTER: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does he like it?

Mr. McMASTER: I was not unduly alarmed.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has always had a good nerve, and he had it with him then. But, speaking seriously, the railways have built a first-class station: it is not being used, and cannot be used until this problem is settled. And my hon. friend (Mr. Graham) has done something; here he is with his three-year programme. And of course, we had a beautiful photograph of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) during the last election in Toronto, and we had a statement in the advertisement for election purposes as to what would happen in connection with the viaduct and other Toronto works. But let that go; let us assume for a minute that there is some possible jusitification for the attitude that Toronto can get nothing. But what about the safety of the people generally? What about maintaining the frightful mantrap the minister is operating in Toronto to-day? Everybody knows that something ought to be done. Is the government not going to make any move in this matter at all? Do they want the people to be driven into a long and tedious lawsuit? Or what do they want? Surely they are not satisfied with the mess things are in in that city. Surely, they do not suggest that, after spending $26,000,000 in order to get a decent waterfront, Toronto ought to pay any more money. Or are we to understand that that would be their idea? Surely, before this bill goes into committee, including as it does a three-year programme, it ought to include the essential improvement I am speaking of.

Hon. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure): I do not quite agree with the interpretation placed upon this matter by the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), that this constitutes the government's railway programme for three years, because if such were the case, I think a great many sections of the country would be disappointed. I am not familiar with the position of the viaduct matter in Toronto. I am sorry that the hon. member has not given us more particulars as to what has been done in regard to that proposition during the last ten years. If he had done so we might have been better able to judge of the position of matters. But in allowing this motion to carry I am not by any means binding myself to the proposition that this present measure constitutes the government's whole railway policy for the next three years, because other sections of the country require attention. Only a few days ago I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to the situation down in the Gaspé Peninsula. I understand that an official of the government railways is now investigating that state of affairs, which has existed for more than twenty years. I hope that when he has reported progress, after a full investigation, means will be found not to build a new railway because the road is already built, but to provide the service which the public have been clamouring for for many years. I want to give notice that I do not consider that this measure is closing the matter in regard to railway works for the next three years to come.

Mr. J. FRED. JOHNSTON (Last Mountain): I had intended to postpone my few remarks on this measure until we got into committee, but on account of what the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton), and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) have just said, I think probably this is the right place. I, too, would not want to think this was the government's proposal for a three-year period as regards the construction of branch lines in my province. The minister will know there are in Saskatchewan, certain surveys that are not touched upon in the schedule as to have it in this bill.

I wish to refer particularly to a branch line that has been surveyed from Watrous to Swift Current, a branch of the Grand Trunk Pacific. This survey was put through in 1914, and it touches districts that are first class for wheat production, but unfortunately are a considerable distance from existing lines of railways. The minister knows enough about railways and about western Canada to realize that you cannot expect people to go into these districts and to settle there for a great period of time without transportation facilities. A few weeks ago when the minister was named as Minister of Railways, there was great rejoicing in that part of the country. They look upon him as the godfather, at least, of the Grand Trunk Pacific out in the West, and they thought that now he had been made minister, this branch line would be constructed, and that surely he would not leave himself open to the charge of not giving sufficient nourishment to his own child. The minister knows very well that trunk lines are useless without branch lines, and we in western Canada are proud that our branch lines of railway pay. I want to put up this plea on behalf of people in that district.

There is a branch of the Canadian National from Dunblane to a point on the line of the old Canadian Northern near Aylesbury. That line has been surveyed for some time and no mention has been made of it. There is also the branch line from Yorkton, 25 miles of which have been built to a point named Willowbrook. Neither of these has been touched upon in the bill. Like the hon. member for Bonaventure, I hope this is not the railway board's programme, covering a period of three years.

In making these remarks, and my plea to the minister, I do so in the hope that he will bring pressure to bear upon the president and the board of directors that these lines be gone ahead with. If he will look about his office, he will find petitions there with thousands of signatures, petitions that I have had sent to me from settlers in those districts. Those petitions, as the minister knows, entail a great deal of work. They are not made for play; they are made because there is a great need, and I hope the minister will look into the matter and before another session he will be able to bring down a bill that will give to these people in those districts the railway facilities that they need.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

[Mr. Johnston.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. H. B. McGIVERIN (Ottawa): With the consent of the House, I beg to move that the following bills from the Senate be now read a first and second time, and be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills:

Bill No. 239 (from the Senate) for the relief of Herbert Hugh Keller—Mr. Euler.

Bill No. 240 (from the Senate), for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire—Mr. Rankin.

Mr. SPEAKER: By rule 115, such a motion may be allowed if the case is considered to be one of urgent and pressing necessity, in order to facilitate the business of the House before prorogation takes place.

Mr. McGIVERIN: If the rule was observed, it would carry these bills over the meetings of the Private Bills Committee, and in that event they would not come up for consideration at this session. This has been done every previous session in my experience in cases of this kind. If they are read a first and a second time now, they will be referred to the committee and considered by the committee in the usual way.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 239 (from the Senate), for the relief of Herbert Hugh Keller.—Mr. Euler.

Bill No. 240 (from the Senate), for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire.—Mr. Rankin.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONSTRUCTION

On motion of Hon. George P. Graham (Minister of Railways) the House went into committee on Bill No. 234, respecting the construction of Canadian National railway lines, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

On Section 2—Power to construct and complete lines described in schedule.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister prefer to discuss the details of the schedules at this stage, or later on?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is immaterial, so long as we do not discuss them in both places.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to ask the minister where the junction point will be between the Hanna-Warden branch and Loverna-Warden branch? Will they both run directly into Warden, or will the Hanna-Warden branch touch the Loverna line at some point south of Warden?

Mr. GRAHAM: The junction point between these two lines will be approximately twenty miles from Warden.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the reason for building the line from Hanna to Warden? Perhaps I should explain to the minister my reason for asking this question. Under the old survey, the line was to run from Loverna to Big Valley, which is at present a divisional point with all necessary water facilities, coal supplies and mines ready at hand. Besides, there are the round-house and the engine shed, and every proper equipment for a divisional point. For some purpose or other the survey has been changed and is now to run to Warden. I want to know the reason.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is mainly to shorten the haul of coal to Hanna and points east.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is it the intention of the railway directors now to change the divisional point from Big Valley to Warden?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is difficult to say just now. We shall need to operate the line first. It may be better to leave it as it is, or it may be deemed wise to make the change. It is a matter of operation.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wish to protest, basing my protest on my knowledge of the conditions there, against the change of the divisional point from Big Valley to Warden. There is every facility at Big Valley for a divisional point, whereas at Warden there are none of these facilities. You will have to construct everything, drill new wells, build an engine house and a round-house and altogether you will experience considerable difficulty.

Mr. HANSON: I want information with respect to one of the branches which it is proposed to build under this legislation, as it happens to lie wholly within the constituency I have the honour to represent. I am referring to Meductic, New Brunswick, westerly to the international boundary. The Minister, of course, is aware that the government to-day does not own the railway extending up and down the St. John Valley, of which this would be a branch, but operates it under a contract with the St. John and Quebec Railway Company, the stock of which is owned by the provincial government. This, as no doubt the minister is also aware, is not by any means a new scheme, but was originated when the government railways were being operated by Mr. Gutelius; and it was intended to give the railway lines in New Brunswick an independent outlet to the United States, making them independent of the Canadian Pacific Railway to which company all the traffic originating on the government lines in the province of New Brunswick and destined for New England points is at the present time handed over. The arrangement has been commended by railway men of experience who have looked into it. But I want to point out that there are certain considerations which the government, in providing the money for the construction of the line, and the management of the Canadian National Railways in putting their seal of approbation on the project, should bear very positively in mind. The first consideration to which I allude is this, that this line should not be built until it is determined with definiteness, and after the very greatest possible care has been exercised, as to who is to build the extension to the boundary line between New Brunswick and the Maine Central railway. And one question I desire to ask now is, with what connection is this branch line to be yoked up? What railway company, what body of men, are building from the boundary to the Maine Central connection, which I understand is to be some miles west of Vanceboro? If it is to be the company known as the Eastern Maine Railway Company I want to ask the minister to have a care before making any arrangement or entering into any contract with that company. While I would be the last one to do any injury to any promotion of that character in the state of Maine, I have very considerable doubt as to the ability of that company actually to build its lines. I do not think that this branch line should be undertaken until the Canadian National Railway directorate is assured not only of the bona fides but of the financial ability of the parties to build the connecting link that will be necessary. I have heard it rumoured within the last few weeks that the government itself is to build the part that is to lie within the state of Maine. I cannot credit that rumour because no provision has been made here for such work, and in fact I do not think it would be a very good policy. But there are a few other considerations to which I would call the attention of the minister. If the Canadian National Railways are to build the connecting link on this side—and I believe that in the end it will be good business—there are two other things that should be taken into account. First, they should extend the St. John and Quebec Railway to Grand Falls on the Transcontinental as originally contemplated, in order that it may get the business originating in northern New Brunswick; and, in the second place, it should rebuild the railway bridge of Fredericton which was built by the late Senator Temple, the promoter and owner of the Canada Eastern Railway now part of the government railway system and which is wholly inadequate to bear the traffic of modern locomotives. These two things seem desirable. Another question which I wish to ask the minister is of much importance. Is it contemplated that the work shall be started this year, or is it to be held over until the eve of the next general election? I am very much interested in that question personally, as the minister can very well understand. I will tell him now that it will not get him any votes to hold the matter over another year, while it might get him votes if he started it now. I want him to be sure also that the Maine connection is a bona fide one.

Mr. GRAHAM: The last question in regard to the election is important.

Mr. HANSON: It is important to me personally.

Mr. GRAHAM: The government has no desire, nor has the Canadian National board, to use any of the lines at the time of construction for political purposes. There is nothing of the kind in my mind, because if I were undertaking any of this work for political purposes I would build lines in other places before I would do anything in some of these districts.

Mr. HANSON: What about the Hudson Bay?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is not contemplated to do much work this year. We shall do the surveys and twenty-five miles of grading.

Mr. HANSON: Only the surveys this year?

Mr. GRAHAM: That is about all you can do this year the season being far gone already. With regard to the question of my hon. friend concerning the connecting up of the railway with the United States, this branch on the Canadian side is to be constructed only on the distinct undertaking that the line on the other side will be built to meet it, and I think I can tell my hon. friend that the work will not be begun until such time as the Canadian National board has assurance that those who take up the work will be financially in a position to carry it through.

Mr. HANSON: Has the minister information as to who is to build the American end of this line, or is there any definite proposition before the management with regard to it?

[Mr. Hanson.]

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at the present time.

Mr. MANION: The building of No. 6, the Long Lake branch, shortens the distance between Toronto and Winnipeg quite materially, and I have no doubt that freight from the Grand Trunk Pacific can be sent down this branch instead of coming via the head of the lakes, thus lessening operating cost. I have no criticism to offer in this regard. At the same time, there would be perhaps an inclination on the part of the management to switch along this loop the daily passenger train running over the Canadian National via Port Arthur, Fort William, Fort Frances, Rainy River and other points. The section of the Canadian National line to which I refer serves at least one hundred thousands people, and I would urge that very serious consideration should be given before diverting this passenger train and so inconveniencing the people along the present route. If the utilization of the Long Lake branch would improve the passenger service and cut down operating expenses, I do not know that the people at the head of the lakes and the rest of the district would object, but personally I doubt very much if there would be really any saving to the system by diverting this passenger train from its present route. I would suggest to the government that before any change is made they should thoroughly investigate the operating costs and the traffic returns of the train which serves more than a hundred thousand people, because it would be both injurious to that section of the country and to the railroad itself from the financial standpoint if a change of route were decided upon.

Mr. MacLAREN: It is disappointing on looking over the schedule not to find included the extension of the St. John and Quebec railway to Grand Falls. If the minister holds the view that this is to be practically the list of construction for the next three years, I trust that he will draw to the attention of the directors of the National Railways the importance of this extension, for it involves only a few miles of construction and would accomplish more than any similar length of railway that might be built in the near future. Another matter I would draw the minister's attention to is the lack of station accommodation at St. John. Beyond the site there is practically nothing there in the way of a station, and passengers are unprotected from the weather. The people have been very patient regarding this condition of affairs, wishing that perhaps even more urgent works should be undertaken first, but at last they feel that something should be done and that to allow the present condition to continue is a discredit to the country. The third matter is in reference to conveyor and freight shed accommodation. Such accommodation is required on the west side, and the attention of the government was drawn to this not very long ago. Trade is restricted through insufficient facilities. I would ask the minister to give his attention to these matters.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): With regard to No. 10, "Thunderhill line, northwesterly to Prince Albert branch," will the minister indicate which branch is termed the Prince Albert branch, and what point is to be the terminus?

Mr. MacLAREN: Before replying to my hon. friend, perhaps the minister might give some information on the points I have raised before they escape his memory?

Mr. GRAHAM: I venture to say that my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) will not let them escape my memory. The extension of the terminals at St. John is being considered by the Railway department in connection with the Public Works department, it being essential from the railway point of view that certain things be done at the harbour, which will make it easier to determine just what ought to be done in the way of railroad terminals. As to the Quebec and St. John railway, it belongs to a private company, and this year the charter was renewed for another term.

Mr. MacLAREN: The line is leased to the government. The completion of these few miles would connect the railway with the Transcontinental. The Transcontinental could build the connection.

Mr. GRAHAM: This railway may be leased to the government, but it is not a government railway.

Mr. HANSON: But you are building a branch from the St. John and Quebec railway to the Maine border, and this branch does not touch the government end of the railway at all, nor the leased line.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is true, but my hon. friend will not object to that. In fact, it looked so good to the people down there that I got a hint from a very prominent man the other day that if that branch were built it was probable that the New Brunswick government would not care to give up the St. John Valley Railway.

Mr. MacLAREN: I think there is a stronger argument for the completion of the St. John and Quebec Railway so that it will connect with the Transcontinental. Has the minister anything to say in reference to increased accommodation—warehouses and so on—for the railway business?

Mr. GRAHAM: That has all been considered by the board. The government would not care to make an announcement concerning these things, as to what ought to be done and when it ought to be done, except on recommendation of the board.

Mr. CALDWELL: I would like to say a few words in regard to item No. 3 in the schedule, to which reference has been made by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) and the hon. member for St. John (Mr. MacLaren). I am a little disappointed to hear the minister say there is no agreement with the Eastern Maine or any other railway to build their share of the connecting link between the Eastern Maine Railway and the St. John and Quebec Railway. As long ago as 1920 I brought this matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways of that day and arranged a meeting between him and representatives of the Eastern Maine Railway and the St. John and Quebec Railway. The then Minister of Railways was very much impressed with the plans that were under consideration. I believe that preliminary surveys had been made and an estimate prepared some years ago of the cost, and the railway men who had it under review regarded the project very favourably indeed. The then Minister of Railways asked the representatives of the Eastern Maine Railway what guarantee we would have that they would build their section of the road in Maine if we built ours. I am speaking from memory now, but I think my recollection is correct. The representatives of the Eastern Maine Railway said: "We will give you better than a guarantee; if you will agree to build your portion of the line in 1921 we will build our portion of it this year; that is, we will do our work one year ahead of yours." So I think that the Minister of Railways or the general manager of the Government Railways should have no difficulty in making an arrangement under which the Maine portion of the road would be built; in fact, I understand that the offer still holds good. As to the completion of the St. John and Quebec Railway to Grand Falls there can be no difference of opinion as to the advisability of taking that step. In fact, that should be the logical outcome of the building of the connecting link mentioned in this schedule, because otherwise you will have to bring the traffic from northern New Brunswick and eastern Quebec over the Transcontinental to McGivney Junction around by Fredericton—a very roundabout route indeed. The portion of country north of Centreville through which the St. John and Quebec Railway has been projected is without railway facilities, though it is a very fertile and productive farming district, to say nothing of the through traffic that originates on the Transcontinental in northern New Brunswick and Quebec. Another point that has not been touched on is the necessity for the construction of a ten mile section between St. John and Westfield. If we build this necessary connecting link from Meductic westerly to the international bounary to give an outlet to the United States—for that is the object of it—it will be necessary also to build that ten mile section between St. John and Westfield. At present we are paying for running rights over that section of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have endeavoured time and again, without success, to get particulars as to the agreement under which those running rights are granted; I understand that the charge is fairly heavy, and that is one of the reasons why the deficit on the St. John and Quebec Railway has been so large. I pointed out to the minister a few days ago when his estimates were up that owing to lack of siding facilities, freight which originates on the St. John and Quebec Railway and arrives at West St. John has to go across the reversible falls to East St. John and back. A toll of one and a half cents per hundred pounds each way has to be paid on this freight. Then I believe we pay the Canadian Pacific Railway a switching charge of three cents per hundred pounds, whereas if we had proper facilities on the west side of the river we could do the switching there ourselves. I believe we own the tracks and the docks at West St. John, yet we have to pay the Canadian Pacific to do the switching for us. The member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) tells me we do not own the tracks. Well, that is worse still—we certainly should own them. This situation is most unheard of, and it surely should be remedied in the near future. The connecting link which is now to be built is a project which I have urged on the department very strongly every year I have been here, and I am pleased to see that the work is at last to be undertaken. However, I would strongly urge upon the minister that he consider very seriously the taking over of the St. John and Quebec Railway from the government of New Brunswick. It is the only railway in the Maritime provinces that has not been taken over; it is at present operated under lease by the Dominion government. This road is needed to round out the system of National railways in the Maritimes, especially in view of the building of the connecting link mentioned in this schedule.

Mr. PREVOST (Translation): With your kind permission, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks relative to item No. 4 of the schedule appended to this bill. In this measure brought down by the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham), it is proposed to add 995 miles to our National railway system. Of these 995 miles, 856 will be built in the West; this fact has afforded an opportunity to one of our hon. colleagues representing the city of Toronto, to say with a good deal of truth to our western friends, that they would be wrong to doubt our good intentions and generosity towards them, since we are ready to vote them, without any hesitation, a sum of $21,000,000 for railways in which they are specially concerned. Out of the 139 miles in which the East is interested, the province of Quebec is given for its share 14 miles of new railway. I do not rise as a protest against this small proportion allowed to my province, but on the contrary, to rejoice in the fact that the 14 miles in question are all to be found in my home district. Indeed, I have the advantage of living at the entrance of the Laurentian hills, that chain of mountains whose wealth and beauty are, each day, becoming better known. The surest way to get returns from this capital which that mountainous country, rightly called a second Switzerland, represents to us, is to build good roads, construct railways that will facilitate reaching this landscape of indescribable beauty and penetrate into this paradise of tourists. The Canadian Pacific Railway has, for a number of years, traversed the Laurentian hills. The Canadian National previously known as the Great Northern Railway, reaches it also at St. Jerome and extends as far as Huberdeau. However, there has never existed up to now a direct line from Montreal to these beautiful mountains. Notwithstanding that this part of the Laurentides is at least as delightful as the one which the Canadian Pacific Railway crosses, the former contains numerous lakes, magnificent forests and most picturesque mountains. Some of these local places have become famous, namely, the Lake of the Sixteen Islands, comparing favourably with the most beautiful Laurentian lakes; Arundel, Huberdeau, through which the Rouge flows and called "the Garden of the Laurentides," by Curé Labelle, the first pioneer of this beautiful region. The wealth and prosperity of a province contribute to the wealth and prosperity of the whole country; that is why, sir, I consider, that the Laurentides are a national asset for Canada. This part of the country, to-day, is beginning to be better appreciated; the influential press recognizes, describes and praises the charms of the Laurentian hills. For the last twenty-five years, in my own humble sphere, I have praised their most picturesque attractions, highly commended the advantages of the sports to those wishing to settle there, and proclaiming as well their natural wealth, the farming and industrial development of this remarkable region situated to the north of Montreal. The Laurentian mountains have been advertised first, by means of the railway, then the motor car and finally by the building of good roads, and all have contributed in drawing an ever-increasing flow of tourists. The Montreal and Mont Laurier highway started by the provincial government and subsidized by the Dominion Government, is being completed. In a few months, we shall be able to travel from Montreal to Ste. Agathe on an almost perfect road. The latter will, before long, be further extended to Mont Laurier. It is also said that another road will be built in the county of Argenteuil, from Lachute to Arundel, and will join the road connecting Mont Laurier, Ste. Agathe and Montreal with the Canadian Pacific trains already packed with travellers; and the Canadian National, once connected to Montreal, will also have numerous tourists, these together with the improvement of roads, will lead to twice even thrice the number of tourists directing themselves towards the Laurentian hills.

Without ever losing sight that farming, colonization, industry and the development of the ore fields will greatly benefit from the easier and more rapid transportation facilities in a region which contains in its natural state vast wealth and numerous hopes, I wish to especially point out the great benefit that the country may derive from the Laurentides in the way of sport, summer resorts and touring trips, should access to our mountains and lakes be made easier to the lovers of beautiful vistas. It would be a great pity to leave unknown and untouched scenery like that which abounds in the Laurentian hills, to the north of the Metropolis of Canada. We would be displaying an ignorance of the true nature of things if we allowed any further our tourists to transfer to other lands, especially to the United States, millions of dollars each year, owing to our not making easy the means of access to the mountains which are in no way inferior to those of our neighbours to the south in regard to beauty of landscape and abundance of game. With railways and good roads, not only shall we keep in our province Canadians that leave it during the summer season, but we shall draw here hundreds of American tourists anxious to visit our mountains. The mountainous regions in Europe, as well as those of the United States, have become prosperous owing to the influx of tourists that railways and good roads attract to these places. Take as an instance Switzerland; the Adirondacks, the White mountains, in the United States, and many others. What has been done in Switzerland, in France, in the United States, Canada must and shall accomplish. The Government has thrown the foundation of this project; they must persevere, carry it out without delay, and that is what they are doing. Then only will they be in a position to offer to the curiosity and admiration of travellers in this enchanted country, a scenery nowhere else equalled. Indeed, I again state, no country offers a more picturesque concourse of mountains, lakes, cascades and forests filled with game, the whole enclosed in an immense territory offering the most pleasing variety of views, to which the traveller may find easy access, providing railways and good roads are placed at his disposal. There may be found in other parts more lofty mountains, deeper ravines, thicker forests but nowhere will there be found a country more filled with thrills, more serene landscapes, sports easier of enjoyment and a more agreeable sojourn than in these mountains. Along this Laurentian route which stretches from Montreal to Ste. Agathe, by way of the Canadian Pacific, and which, before long, will reach from Montreal to the Lake of the Sixteen Islands and Huberdeau, by way of the Canadian National, along this Laurentian route, I say, which is opening up on stretches of hundreds and hundreds of miles, at times parallel to the river Du Nord, at times skirting sky-coloured lakes, and still at other times winding along a mountain or traversing refreshing forests, one may choose among the most picturesque sites which dot it here and there throughout its length, those that are conspicuous either for their rustic beauty or for their special features more in harmony with each one's taste. A tent is put up, a bungalow or a sumptuous villa is built according to one's inclinations and here is the ideal spot already found to rest and live in peace, far from the worries of strenuous life and close to one's place of business; conditionally, of course, on there being a good road or railway to reach the spot.

By building the 12 miles which appear in the schedule submitted, that is to say, from Grande-Frenière to Rinfret Junction, in other words, from St. Eustache to St. Jerome, the Government ensures a direct communication between Montreal and these parts which I have just mentioned, a region that is not only one of the most beautiful as regards variety of scenery but which is equally one of the richest in natural resources. In fact, this territory contains immense possibilities in farming, the same may be said of its industry and mining. Lumber of the best quality is to be found there, the dairy industry is highly developed, a number of carloads of cheese are weekly exported via the Canadian National Railway; mica, graphite and other minerals have lately been discovered in that part of the country. In a word, this portion of the Laurentides which is in the county of Argenteuil, is no less beautiful and rich than are the regions which the Canadian Pacific traverses and better known because the trains of that railway reach it directly from Montreal. It is most astonishing that the Canadian National which traverses this enchanted part of the Laurentian hills is not yet directly connected with Montreal. Travellers are forced to travel by the Canadian Pacific, to a junction called Montfort, near St. Jerome, where they change trains to take the Canadian National. It is a serious drawback for tourists. So far as traffic is concerned—and it is considerable—both freight and express trains must pass through Joliette to reach Montreal, that is to say, a distance of 74 miles from St. Jerome. When the projected line from Grand-Frenierè to Rinfret Junction, about 12 miles, shall be built, the distance from St. Jerome to Montreal will only be 30 miles. One may imagine the inestimable advantages that will result from this line both for tourists and traffic, as St. Jerome is the centre through which passes all the traffic coming from the north of the counties of Argenteuil and Labelle, served by the Canadian National railway. Moreover, St. Jerome has a population of 7,000 inhabitants and its trade is considerable. The transportation of products and goods from Montreal to the north or vice versa, at present controlled by the Canadian National, is effected by a 74-mile route instead of 30 which it will be when the branch line in question appearing at No. 4 of this schedule is constructed. The Canadian National is, however, one of the Government railways concerning which we deplore those enormous deficits. Well, I have no hesitation in saying that through the operation of this new line, which will directly connect the north with Montreal, the Canadian National will realize profits that will contribute to diminish, in a small way perhaps, but nevertheless in an appreciable ratio, the deficits that we are bound, though regretfully, to admit. When the Canadian National reaches the Laurentides, by way of the branch line in question, when this link between the Metropolis and the Laurentian hills has been established, this line will give as much return as does the Canadian Pacific Railway in the north. It is more than 30 years since the Canadian Pacific inaugurated its line in the Laurentides. It proved a success from the start. It is ever so long that this branch line has been considered as one of those that give the best returns to that company. The same will be said of the Canadian National, when direct communication between Montreal and the Laurentides has been established.

Mr. Chairman, whoever has at heart the general interest of the country will be pleased to approve of this project which will, at last, connect by a state railway the northern parts of Montreal to the Metropolis. One last word, I hope that all the branch lines appearing in the schedule submitted to us may be as useful and timely as this one.

Mr. GRAHAM: I might say in two or three words that I appreciate the beautiful description of the fine country to which my hon. friend refers. I have been there, and found it a little difficult to get in as rapidly as I wanted to, and difficult to get out rapidly at the particular time I wished to. I think, perhaps, it was late in the evening. Any person who has looked over that section of country will see the disadvantage of the Canadian National Railway in not having a direct connection with Montreal; and while the building of this section to which my hon. friend so eloquently referred would be a good thing for that portion of the country, I am sufficiently hard-hearted to say that I think it will pay real money to the Canadian National Railways over and above all cost of operation.

Mr. MacKELVIE: I wonder if the minister could give me any assurance that the work on the Okanagan branch—No. 27 on the schedule—will be carried forward this year? This branch has now been something like eleven years under construction. I think if ever there was a people who had a right to invoke the proposition that hope deferred maketh the heart sick it is the residents of that district. In conversation with the president and some of the officials of the National Board this year, they very cordially agreed with me when I made the statement that in Canada there would not be a better feeder for the Canadian National Railway than the Kamloops-Okanagan branch. It embraces one of the most beautiful as well as one of the most fertile parts of Canada; and if the war had not intervened I have no doubt its completion would have been a matter of history several years ago. It must be remembered that, as a revenue producer, a line running through a horticultural section has many advantages over a line traversing a grain-growing portion of the country. Although it may take from thirty to fifty acres to produce a carload of grain, perhaps two acres or less of horticultural land will fill a car with fruit or vegetables. The member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride) could speak better than I can from personal knowledge of the easterly end of this section. But coming down a little further towards my own home, we pass through the Falkland and Salmon river district, both of which are capable of great development. In Falkland there is the largest shipment on the continent probably awaiting transportation facilities. In the Salmon river district they have large lime deposits and great timber resources; and the district from that point to Armstrong is a very fertile agricultural district indeed. From Vernon the branch spur runs 16 miles to Lumby, one of the most progressive districts in our country, and the hinterland of that section contains untold wealth in the way of timber and minerals. Down the Okanagan lake to Kelowna it runs through a section that produces about two-thirds of the 5,000 cars of freight which are sent out in the season. It can easily be seen that this will be a great feeder to the Canadian National, once it is in operation. I would like to be able, if possible, to convey to the residents of this district the assurance that they will not have to wait another year before it is completed.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not like to go that far. The hon. member asks the question, and expects me to answer, I suppose. The closing words of my hon. friend's remarks were very succinct. He asks that he be given the assurance that the road will be completed this year. I think he scarcely meant that. The work is going to proceed, but owing to the fact that the season is very far advanced, although there are many miles already graded on that line, it would be hardly possible to finish it this year.

Mr. MacKELVIE: Could the assurance be given—and I think it might reasonably be done—that before another fruit crop is ready to ship, the line will be completed?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think that is the hope of the board.

Mr. McBRIDE: Just a word in connection with this line. I do not think the Canadian National line will have a feeder, west of Edmonton, anything like the Kamloops-Kelowna line when it is completed. In my opinion that line, within a year after completion, will not only be paying interest and operation expenses, but it will furnish a good revenue to the Canadian National Railways. There has been some opposition to this road, but no person who has the best interest of the Canadian National Railways at heart has anything to say against this line. Indeed, I think that it is the people who are interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway who are circulating this propaganda that it would be money wasted. The Canadian Pacific Railway and its officials know the amount of freight that road will take from their railway. Not only will it be a benefit to the Canadian National in getting freight, but it will be a benefit to the farmers in the prairies in that it will give them direct connection with the Okanagan. The railway will be able to take grain from the prairies down to the coast, and the same cars can be loaded with fruit on the return trip. It will work both ways, and I would like to see that line completed with the least possible delay.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): I wonder if I could recall the minister's mind to the question I asked a little time ago. Perhaps while he is travelling between the Atlantic and Pacific he could rest half-way and give me an answer.

Mr. GRAHAM: What was the question?

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Regarding the Thunderhill branch, which runs northwesterly to a point on the Prince Albert line. I asked him, what branch is termed the Prince Albert branch, and what is the terminus of the Thunderhill branch?

Mr. GRAHAM: Largely the location of the line depends on the possibility of two things, the traffic and the engineering difficulties. This is the information that is given to me. There are four miles of the line graded. We propose to grade 17 miles in 1923 and to lay 21 miles of track. In 1925, it is proposed to lay track on the line for 23 miles at an estimated cost of $368,000, thus completing the line to tie into our Prince Albert main line near Tisdale.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): That, then, is not the survey that was originally made, and that it had been expected would be followed in connecting up with the Humboldt-Melfort line?

Mr. GRAHAM: No, it is not.

Mr. HANSON: Would the minister give the general route of the Thunderhill branch?

Mr. GRAHAM: The route of that line has not been finally determined.

Mr. HANSON: What is the intention?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have given it as nearly as possible. The line must have been surveyed, because four miles of that particular line have been graded.

Mr. HANSON: The minister has his engineers in front of him, and he might inform the committee what, in general, is the route proposed to be traversed by this line between the two termini.

Mr. GRAHAM: From the present terminus, generally speaking, it takes a northerly direction to Tisdale.

Mr. HANSON: What points does it touch?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know that.

Mr. HANSON: Could the minister get that information?

Mr. GRAHAM: We could get the information approximately, but it might not touch those points at all when the final survey is made. It may be impossible to touch the points I might name.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): I have no objection whatever to the branch that the minister proposes to run in a northwesterly direction from Kelvington to Tisdale, I believe would be the point. I would like, however, to call his attention to the fact that although that branch is needed there, I do not know why it should be called the Thunderhill branch. I am not sure when the Thunderhill branch was first surveyed. There have been a number of surveys since 1908, and the district between the end of the steel at Kelvington and the point north of Humboldt where it was anticipated that would meet another branch of the Canadian National railways, has been settled, some of it, at least, for fifteen or sixteen years in anticipation that that road would come through. This would seem as if the Thunderhill branch had been abandoned and a new branch has been named the Thunderhill branch. There are two soldier settlements that can well be served by the branch proposed by the minister, and I would not suggest that it should not be built. But I wish to voice a most emphatic objection to the abandoning of the old route which has been surveyed. I do not know the definite route, but it runs generally in a westerly direction from Kelvington to Lake Lenore, or possibly Wakaw.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think I am fairly familiar with that country, and while what my hon. friend has said with regard to the western extension of the Thunderhill line is quite true, its construction has been delayed so long that several railways have been built ahead of it. I refer more particularly to the Grand Trunk north to Prince Albert, upon which Wakaw is situated. Then there is the Humboldt-Melfort line, and I think the Canadian Pacific has also a line in there somewhere. Therefore, there was no necessity for extending this line through the original route, for the reasons I have indicated. Accordingly, they have swung north and tied up with the Prince Albert line near Tisdale, connecting up those large soldier settlements The change was unavoidable on account of those developments.

Mr. LUCAS: Was the minister able to give any consideration to the request I made a few days ago when this matter was under discussion on the resolution, in regard to the reinstatement of the Bruederheim line in this schedule?

Mr. GRAHAM: I thought I answered that pretty fully the other day. I pointed out that there were many lines on a tentative list, but there were altogether too many to be undertaken at one time. The Canadian National board was asked to revise its list, and the line to which my hon. friend refers, in not in the latest list. Some hon. gentleman has asked me if this means that nothing is to be done during the next three years except the lines mentioned in the schedule. Parliament is supreme every session to do as it pleases, and each case has to be dealt with on its merits. But the government thought it a wise thing, and I think the House and the country will agree, that the lines the board think the most pressing to be constructed, should be proceeded with under a three-year programme. That does not, of course, tie the hands of parliament at any time.

Mr. HANSON: Does the minister think that remark would apply to No. 2, the Sunny Brae-Guysborough branch, a line of 67 miles of railway proposed to cost $3,500,000, a line that has been promised more by political candidates in Nova Scotia than any other line of railway that I have ever heard of. What is the justification for spending $3,500,- 000 in building a line from Sunny Brae to Guysborough? The minister must know, if he knows anything, and his officials must know, if they know anything, that that branch line could not pay on such a large capitalization. All the lumber produced in the Guysborough district is freighted by water. There is a good harbour there, and the people who own the large limits there would never consider freighting the lumber out by rail when they can get it out by water. Water navigation is available all the year round. What is the justification for this branch line, and is it proposed to let a contract for it next year?

Mr. GRAHAM: Tenders were asked for the construction of that line many years ago.

Mr. HANSON: That is right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It never got further.

Mr. GRAHAM: It never got further, because another line that had no greater justification was constructed right away in the same district.

Mr. HANSON: What branch would that be?

Mr. KYTE: Halifax-Musquodoboit.

Mr. HANSON: That is not in the same place.

Mr. GRAHAM: No, but it was in the district of my good friend the then Prime Minister. It was constructed. I did not, however, suggest this line. The board suggested this line to me without any suggestion on my part directly or indirectly, as all the lines were recommended to me. I think they must know what they are about. The purpose of this line is to open up the local territory for the lumber industry and to provide better facilities for agricultural products, as well as to give direct communication to Guysborough for its fishing and allied products. On part of the route there is considerable agricultural development and quite extensive hardwood forests which the railway will make it possible to develop. I might say that originally the line was intended to be so constituted as to become the main line. Under this construction, it will not be so extensive, but it can eventually become the main line. The other line has some grades that would have to be eliminated for heavy traffic.

Mr. McISAAC: To hon. members of this House who have been in the last two or three parliaments, the Guysborough railway question is a very familiar one; but as there are many hon. members present who were not in the last parliaments, perhaps I should take up a few moments in explaining the question. I think the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Hanson) is one of those in the present House who should receive some information in connection with the matter. In the session of 1910, this resolution was passed in this House by both of the then parties, Conservatives and Liberals:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the time has arrived in the commercial and industrial development of the province of Nova Scotia, when the Intercolonial Railway of Canada should be extended into the non-railway counties of the eastern section of the province.

I am of course interested in this matter and probably it will be considered that anything I say in behalf of the interests of Guysborough must be more or less exaggerated. But I can tell the House that the county of Guysborough has never had any railway except the service of a few miles in the extreme northeastern section of that large county. This is one of the largest counties of the province, extending along the sea coast from Halifax county down to the strait of Canso a hundred and fifty miles, all consisting of the best fishing grounds that are to be found in the whole Dominion. The fishing business is undeveloped because there are no facilities; and the timber limits in the county are quite extensive. These resources would contribute traffic to a railway for very many years to come, and in addition the agricultural districts of the county are second to none while the undeveloped mineral resources of Guysborough have great possibilities.. But apart from all these, I would mention particularly the fact that Country Harbour in this county is one of the best harbours in the world. I see my hon. friend from York laughing.

Mr. HANSON: I was not laughing.

Mr. McISAAC: Well, the hon. member was smiling at any rate. But I do not want him to take my word on that point. I will read from Hansard a speech delivered by Sir Robert Borden in the session of 1910 with reference to this very subject. At page 1182 of Hansard of that year Sir Robert Borden is reported as follows:

> I passed along the shore of the county of Halifax to the county of Guysboro last summer. I travelled altogether about 500 miles through districts not served by railways at all, and where railway development would mean a great deal to the people and lead to considerable development in that little province. I can tell the Minister of Railways—

The present Minister of Railways, (Mr. Graham) was minister then too.

—a great many things I saw, I could speak of a great many districts where railway facilities might mean a great deal to the people, and might lead to very great progress and advancement in that little province. I saw, in the county of Guysboro,—

I would ask the hon. member for York (Mr. Hanson) to note that.

—just across the line from the county of Halifax, one of the most splendid harbours that can be found anywhere in the world—Country Harbour. This harbour stretches back 10 miles from its mouth, with water close up to the shore everywhere from forty-five to sixty feet in depth, landlocked twice, and with a splendid roadstead outside where, in almost any weather, ships can ride in safety—and have ridden in safety—without going inside. And in what condition did I find the place? Not more than a dozen families are living around that harbour. There was no railway development, no opportunity for commerce, and the fishermen had gone to the adjoining Isaac's Harbour or Fisherman's Harbour, for the reason that these smaller harbours would subserve their purposes better than this magnificent Country Harbour of which I have spoken. All along that shore are opportunities of development. The people of Hailfax county, and those of other counties in the province of Nova Scotia to which allusion has been made, have, it seems to me, fairly good reason to complain that their interests in respect of railway development, have not been properly attended to in the past.

He concluded:

This is no time for hesitation and vaccilation. Make up your mind—and I hope you have made it up in the direction I have indicated then give to the Intercolonial railway the branches, feeders, extensions which would be given, if it were owned by any of the great railway corporations.

That is what Sir Robert Borden had to say on this subject in 1910. The House unanimously passed the resolution and in the year 1911 the government called for tenders for this very road covering a distance of 67 miles. At the same time, they called for tenders for another road in the county of Halifax extending from Dartmouth eastwards to Musquodoboit. These tenders were called for at the time of the election of 1911, but unfortunately for the government, and for the county of Guysborough, and Canada as well, the Liberals went out of power and the Conservatives came in. What happened? The government of Sir Robert Borden cancelled the proposed contract for this particular railway in the county of Guysborough and proceeded with a railway in that gentleman's own county. Well, I suppose he was perfectly right in going on with a railway in his constituency, but I say that it was unfair to cancel the contract for this railway, simply because a Liberal was returned to represent the county of Guysborough. That was in 1911 and nothing has been done since in connection with this matter. The question was brought up year after year by the representative of that constituency, Mr. Sinclair, while the Conservative party was in power. When Hon. Frank Cochrane was Minister of Railways, he returned the same answer to Mr. Sinclair on every occasion, that the government was looking into the matter, and hoped to build the Guysborough railway at an early date. The work however, was never undertaken and I have every reason therefore at this time to congratulate the present Minister of Railways, on the step he is about to take. I brought the matter to the attention of the late Minister of Railways, Mr. Kennedy, the first time I saw him on his only official tour of the province of Nova Scotia. I represented to him the rank injustice that had been done the county of Guysborough in ignoring for so many years its undoubted claim to a railway. That honourable gentleman promised consideration of the claim of Guysborough, but unfortunately he did not live long enough to bring the matter before the House. So that I am more than pleased to congratulate the present minister on his dicision to carry out the recommendation of the board to give to that county a railway to which it is entitled and of which it has been deprived for so long.

This line will be a splendid feeder to the Intercolonial railway. In 1911 before tenders were called for, another branch line known as the Sunny Brae branch from Ferrona to Sunny Brae a distance of 12 miles, a completed road, was purchased by the government of that day from a private company. The sum of $100,000 was paid by the then government for this branch, and in addition to that they spent between $85,000 and $100,000 in surveys. This was all done in 1911 for the purpose of extending the road from Sunny Brae to Guysborough to connect up with Country Harbour, which as Sir Robert Borden himself stated is one of the best harbours in the world. It is open the year round, and if this branch line is extended to connect up with it the result will be a shortening of the distance to European ports. I have heard hon. gentlemen on the Progressive side speak of the advantage of the Transcontinental railway down in Quebec, because it shortens the distance by about 200 miles in the shipment of freight from the West to the seaport. This would shorten the distance still further by about 50 or 75 miles. No branch of the Intercolonial railway was ever built that would prove of greater benefit not only to the county it will serve, but also to the railway generally, for this railway besides providing much-needed facilities for Guysborough would also be a great feeder to the Canadian National Railway, so that it would be advantageous all round. The Minister of Railways is now going to see that justice, long deferred, is done to Guysborough, and I congratulate him.

Mr. KYTE: Mr. Chairman, the programme which the minister has brought down for the construction of branch railways interests me considerably. For many years certain sections of Nova Scotia, in addition to that portion which is so worthily represented by my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. McIsaac), have been in need of further railway advantages. In 1901 a company undertook the construction of a railway to the southern shore of the island of Cape Breton from the strait of Canso to the historic town of Louisburg. Thirty miles was constructed from Point Tupper to St. Peter's, and was operated as a branch railway until 1919, when I think the late government purchased it from the owners and it has since been operated in conjunction with the Canadian National Railways. I desire to point out to the minister what it was my privilege to bring to his attention years ago when he held his present portfolio, and that is the necessity for constructing the line from St. Peter's to Louisburg. As is well known, Louisburg is the only open winter port on the southern shore of Cape Breton through which Newfoundland traffic passes. Unfortunately during the winter months the harbour of Sydney is usually blocked with ice floes so that passenger and freight traffic from Newfoundland has to be diverted to Louisburg. But on disembarking at Louisburg passengers have no railway accommodation except a coal train running to Sydney, where it connects with the Canadian National Railways. Of course, it is well known that the historic town of Louisburg was a very important military post during the French regime. It is now an important fishing centre.

We are suffering very much in eastern Canada, particularly in Nova Scotia, under prevailing conditions. When I heard my good friends from the West speaking of the hard times in their constituencies, I was inclined to make comparisons between western and eastern conditions. Without wishing to minimize in the slightest degree the conditions described by them, I beg to assure my hon, friends from the West that conditions in Nova Scotia today call for as favourable treatment as is required in any other part of the Dominion. I shall not go into the reasons in detail and so delay the progress of this bill. I have listened with very much interest to the minister's answer to the question put to him by several hon. members opposite as to whether or not this programme constituted all the railway construction during the next three years. Neither last session nor this have I pressed for the construction of this railway, because I had reason to believe that the financial conditions were not such as to justify any new construction. But the magnificent and varied programme of railway construction in western Canada satisfies me that the government has overcome its greatest difficulties with regard to finances and finds itself in a position to undertake further railway construction. Therefore I would remind the minister that my constituency is very much in need of this branch line. I serve notice upon him now that at an early date in the next session I shall renew this request in the expectation that provision will be made for the construction of this railway in the Supplementary, if not in the Main Estimates next year.

Mr. KNOX: In regard to Nos. 11 and 12, both short branch lines, I should like to have the minister's assurance that these will be completed this year. The Paddockwood line is practically all graded, the other line, the Melford branch, is partially graded, and the people to be served by these branches are very anxious to have some assurance that steel will be laid this year. The Paddockwood line runs through a district which was largely settled by soldiers, and was mentioned in the report brought down by the Pensions board last year.

Mr. GRAHAM: It would be foolish for the minister to give assurances of what can be done this year. However, there will be some work done on these lines. I hope they will be completed, but I cannot bind the board or the construction company. The best that can be done will be done.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is really meant? On the one hand we are told that the work and financing will be spread over a three-year period; then on the other hand we hear that it is not anything of the kind.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend's memory is short; I did not say that it was not anything of the kind.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, other members say so and you say nothing.

Mr. GRAHAM: Silence is golden sometimes. I did say a few moments ago that parliament is supreme, that while this is a three-year programme parliament can do anything.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the real intention?

Mr. GRAHAM: We hope to have this programme completed in three years. I can readily see some reason for my hon. friend's statement, because in looking over this carefully I see nothing to confine the programme to three years. I propose to move an amendment to insert in the second line of section 2 certain words which I have handed to the Chairman, to make it clear that it is a three-year programme.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that that helps us very much. We are trying to find out what is the real intention of the government. Of course parliament can turn the government out—very likely it would if it were at all wise.

Mr. GRAHAM: That would be a bad thing.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the government now declare that this programme represents their railway construction for the next three years?

Mr. GRAHAM: I did not say that at all.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am trying to find out what the fact is.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps my hon. friend will listen carefully this time. I said that parliament can do anything it likes—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have that already.

Mr. GRAHAM: —and that the government can introduce anything it likes. As I pointed out a few minutes ago, if it is thought wise to have the Canadian National Board select the most pressing cases out of several hundred and give us a three-year construction programme, that does not mean that there will be no other work undertaken during that three years. Nobody is bound by this three-year programme being absolutely definite.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Then I take it that it is a three-year programme which you may depart from as much as you like.

Mr. GRAHAM: As much as parliament likes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We will have to leave it at that. What are the business reasons for the Sunny Brae branch? We have had the political ones from various politicians interested as well as their advice. I ask for the engineering and traffic reports on this proposed line.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not suppose that in the case of any projected railway a report could be produced showing it is going to pay right away. Every enterprise of this character has to depend for its justification either upon an expectation of early success or upon the prospect of opening up and developing country. We do not always insist that a railway enterprise should pay immediately, even that there should be an assurance of early profitable operation. As the hon. member for Antigonish and Guysborough (Mr. McIsaac) has pointed out, here is an old settled country. Let us be reasonable in this matter. When the people in old settled districts in the Maritime provinces who for generations have not had the advantage of railway communication find that large enterprises are being undertaken in the construction of new lines in the West, it is natural that they feel that some consideration should be had for the development of that eastern country. We find no fault with the West for its ambition; we are glad to encourage the building of roads there. But if you are going to do anything to check the unrest in the eastern parts of the country you must help the construction of roads in old settled districts where for ages there has been a lack of communication That must be done if the country is to develop. This line from Sunny Brae into Guysborough county will develop an excellent agricultural district and a fine lumber district, and will touch the valuable fisheries. I think it has ultimately as fair a prospect of success as most new lines, but whether it is going to pay or not, I say it is one of the enterprises which will help to develop the Maritime provinces and I ask the committee not to be too critical as to the prospect of its paying at once.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend means that this railway is going to be built not because it will serve a useful purpose, but because it is going to please a few people.

Mr. FIELDING: That is one reason.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is probably the chief reason; otherwise some better business reasons would be offered. The usual thing in connection with the building of railways is to have a report from an engineer on its possibilities, and I do not know why we should not have that information in this case. It rather looks to me as if the Minister of Finance was afraid of the information. What is wrong with it? It may be of course, that this board, being, apart from the president and the official connected with him, entirely a political board, do not think it necessary to have these ordinary reports. But surely it is reasonable to ask that the minister should read to the House the engineer's report as to the traffic possibilities in this case.

Mr. GRAHAM: I did that a few moments ago; perhaps my hon. friend was not in. I read the reasons given by the board why they believed a railway line should be constructed through this territory.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I heard that. But I was asking for the report of the engineer which the board, unless, as I have said, it is purely a political board—

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is altogether too suspicious.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was asking for the report which would be a justification for their recommendation.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose my hon. friend is making an exception of this line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not at all.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps with some excuse. I am going to read all that the board states in the matter; it is what their engineers, of course, have said. This memorandum reads:

> The purpose of the line is to open up the local territory for lumber industry and provide better facilities for agricultural products as well as give direct communication to Guysborough for its fishing and allied products. On part of the route there is considerable agricultural development and quite extensive hardwood forests which the railway will make it possible to develop.
>
> The original intention of the surveys for this line had in view a low grade line with the idea of making it the main line. The results of the surveys indicated that to obtain this character of line it would be very costly, and on account of the fact that the present main line could not be abandoned, and would have to be maintained and operated, it could not be shown that such a line, with its excessive cost of construction, would be justified. The present intention is to construct a line to open up the local territory and build it to cheaper standards of construction but keep in view the eventual use of it for an alternative main line or at any time this would be warranted, Therefore the line will be located so that eventually a low grade could be obtained, but employ steeper grades for the immediate construction.
> It has been estimated that there are 250 million feet of hardwood and 200 million feet of softwood available to the line, and also some possibilities in gold and iron mining which have not been developed, possibly due to lack of transportation facilities.
> The justification for this line is that it will serve a section of the country that has been in long need of railway communication in order to give it a real chance for development and to put the town of Guysborough in direct rail communication with the Canadian National system.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, that does give us some information. It says we have in sight a traffic from 250 million feet of one kind of wood and 200 million feet of another kind. How much of that wood is being taken out now and carried by water?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have no idea.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It was stated by the member for York-Sunbury—

Mr. KYTE: Who does not know anything about it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am told he was altogether mistaken.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does the engineer say that lumber operations are now carried on in that district?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that the lumber operations are not being carried on now in the district through which this road is to run.

Mr. KYTE: Lumber operations are carried on now at the mouth of the St. Mary river below Sherbrooke. It is carried from there by water, but it does not touch the territory in question.

Mr. GARDINER: In regard to the Hanna-Medicine Hat branch in the province of Alberta, I may say that the grade south of the Red Deer river has been built for some time, but no steel has yet been laid. I see nothing in this schedule which indicates that any work is contemplated on that line. What is the board going to do with this particular piece of grade?

Mr. GRAHAM: I can only give the same answer that I have already given to another hon. member: Out of the great number of projects submitted to the board and investigated by them, a few were selected—many were called but few were chosen. A certain number were designated as active lines; these are being proceeded with under the present programme. Others are known as inactive lines; these are projected to the extent of 584 miles at different points in the West. I could not make any promises, but I suppose there will come a time when these will have to be transferred to the active lists. At present, however, no immediate action is to be taken with regard to them. The Hanna-Medicine Hat line is in this category.

Mr. GARDINER: The grade south of Red Deer has been built for over three years and it is deteriorating all the time. There is just the possibility that when they do come to place steel on it they will have to do some more grading in order to bring the road-bed up to the required standard. It will be unfortunate if steel is not laid this year, because the grade is going back all the time. Besides, a great deal of money would be saved if the work was proceeded with at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): The minister has sent across to me a map which shows the proposed location of the branch line to which I referred a short time ago. As I said before, I have no objection to the branch line running in the direction indicated by this map but I do want to object emphatically to the abandonment of the original route if the building of this new branch means that it will be abandoned. The Minister of Agriculture came to the defence of the new branch by stating he thought that the district was being served by a line built at right angles to the proposed line and some one hundred miles farther west. It is absolutely absurd to suggest that the building of a line at right angles to the proposed line and at such a great distance from the end of the steel could possibly serve the people in through that whole area.

There is another objection I have to make to the proposed line as shown in this schedule, and it is that it parallels and at no point appears from the survey to be seven miles away from the Canadian Pacific Railway line which is being constructed this year. It seems to me that it is not the policy that should be followed. The Canadian Pacific apparently intend to get that line through. They are building it at the present time and I can see no good service that will be done by paralleling it with the National line when there are territories which by travelling in a westerly instead of a northerly direction could be served by this line. It is advisable perhaps to swing north for a short distance to serve the Soldier Settlement areas that I mentioned when speaking before, but it should not in my estimation go north paralleling the Canadian Pacific till it strikes the Prince Albert branch. It should turn westerly after reaching the soldier settlement areas, and then traverse the section that was originally laid out for it, and which was settled as far back as fifteen or sixteen years ago and has had settlers in there farming in anticipation of this line through all these years.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is the construction work on the Hanna-Warden line to commence this year, and is Hanna to continue to be a divisional point?

Mr. GRAHAM: Surely hon. gentlemen do not expect me to say where the sectional or divisional points are going to be. That is for those in charge of the operation of the road. I might as well say who the trackmen are going to be. I cannot go into that. I have to bring before the committee certain branch lines that the Canadian National Railway Board have unanimously recommended for construction. Further than that I cannot go. The season is so far advanced that one cannot say what can be done this year. It will depend upon the conditions. Autumn will be coming soon and the men will be in the harvest fields. If we had had our appropriations through the House by early spring it would have been different, but we had not and I fear there will not be a great deal done this year.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 2—Power to construct and complete lines described in schedules.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have an amendment to move to this section.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been moved in amendment that in section 2, after the word "completion" in the second line, the following words be inserted "— —prior to the 31st day of August 1926.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Will the minister be good enough to give me the rate per mile which is adopted for the railways having regard to road construction as apart from the special cost? Of course he does not know where he is going to put his stations? I suppose he knows whether he has bridging to do or not.

Mr. GRAHAM: Some of these lines have bridges. One of them has a bridge that will cost a million and a half. You cannot compare that to any other line, because no other line might have a bridge of that kind.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is not the point but I am glad the minister has the information as to the bridges. Perhaps he will give it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I have given one bridge.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is that?

Mr. GRAHAM: Dunblane branch to Mawer, Saskatchewan.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That is the bridge over the Saskatchewan?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. With reference to some of the lines, the surveys are not definitely made, and the lines not definitely located. You cannot give the actual cost in a case of that kind. The engineers made a general estimate. My hon. friend asked me for the stations—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, I stated that you could not tell where the stations were going to be.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then take a short line with four stations as an example. You could give an estimate for four stations, but what is the good of asking for estimates and advertising what it is going to cost? Engineers never give out their own private data as to what things ought to cost. The engineers make an estimate, but they do not publish it. They might as well throw up their hands when they ask for tenders, if they are going to announce what they think the work ought to cost.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Taking the very first one, $150,000, is that an estimate of what it ought to cost?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes that is everything complete on the line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Everything is covered in the $150,000 in connection with the first item.

Mr. GRAHAM: That includes everything.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Suppose we take them all, so as to save time; do these figures include the cost necessary in order to have these lines built and ready for operation?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, so far as it is humanly possible to estimate what the cost will be. This is to complete the line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: So that all the work is covered. Whose estimates of cost are these?

Mr. GRAHAM: They are prepared by the engineers in the locality, and passed on to the chief engineer at the head office.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And checked by the chief engineer?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to ask the minister some questions in regard to what is generally known as the Oliver-St. Paul railway. That is the railway running from Edmonton to North Battleford. It is completed as far as St. Paul. It runs from the east as far as St. Walburg, leaving a gap of about eighty miles. This railway has been promised the people in that vicinity for some fourteen years. The country is well settled. It is a very good country, but it is particularly handicapped, because to the south runs the Saskatchewan river, across which there are no bridges in the particular part to which I am referring, and they have to use ferries. At the present time the railway has a double haul on all produce being taken to St. Paul, which would bring the extra distance to about 300 miles, taking the run to Edmonton and back again via Vermilion. It seems to me it would be in the best interests of the country if that gap were completed. I see in the schedule under item 25 it is only proposed to build the railway to a point twenty-one miles east of St. Paul. As this is a three-year programme, would the minister kindly give me the reason why the plans were not made to carry it further than mile 21? I will have more questions to ask later.

Mr. GRAHAM: This is for hon. members whose lines are not taken in the programme but not so much for those whose lines are partially taken in. The same answer is applicable to all the requests of members in whose constituency no extensions are being made. This is all the Canadian National Board thought it wise at present to include in the programme. Every one will realize that the financial condition of the country will not allow us to launch out into what might be useful enterprises. We have to go along very slowly, to show our good intentions, but hope the conditions will continue to improve until all our hopes are realized in the development of the country and the development of the railways as well.

Mr. SPENCER: I appreciate very much what is being done, but if there is no guarantee of some sort that work is going to be continued for probably several years to complete the line from St. Paul to St. Walburg, we will not be able to keep the settlers in that country. The settlers have been there for a good many years. They are hauling in some instances upwards of 100 miles and if they have not some sort of guarantee that the gap will be completed, I am very much afraid we will lose a great many of them. I would ask the minister if we can look for the completion of that line within the three-year limit?

Mr. DAVIES: I should like to corroborate what the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has said regarding this line. I do not intend to add to what he said, in order to save the time of the committee. Is it the intention of the Board of Directors of the Canadian National Railways to change the location of the line, the construction of which is necessary to fill that gap? I understand a more northerly route has been surveyed?

Mr. GRAHAM: There is a difficult problem in connection with that line, my hon. friends know, between a small extension at one end and this larger one at the other. These are supposed to meet. The engineering staff and the Canadian National Railway Board have given a good deal of consideration to the question of route. There seems to be—and I speak subject to correction—a greater population nearer the river, but I am told by the engineering staff that the difficulties of construction are almost insurmountable in some places owing to the great cost.

Mr. DAVIES: Would that appertain to the northern route or the southern route?

Mr. GRAHAM: The southern route is the expensive one. Another and full investigation is going to be made of the proposed route or routes before a final decision is reached During the winter a very strong deputation waited on me with all the information. They impressed me, but I do not know anything about the practical construction. The question, however, will be fully considered, and what is thought best in the interest of the whole country will be decided upon.

Mr. CARROLL: I wish to refer the Minister of Railways to certain evidence which was brought out during the present session before the committee on Mines and Minerals. This evidence showed the grave necessity, if we wish to develop our coal industry, of extending and building certain lines of railways. I understand my colleague from Cape Breton South and Richmond (Mr. Kyte) this afternoon directed the attention of the minister to the necessity of extending the Point Tupper-St. Peters road into the town of Louisburg.

Mr. GRAHAM: How many miles?

Mr. CARROLL: Sixty miles. According to the evidence which was brought out before our committee, that proposition would develop a very large number of mines in the vicinity. Then there should be the extension, if the government takes over the road, of the Inverness and Richmond railway, which now runs from Port Hawkesbury to Point Tupper, to the town of Inverness. In the committee there was also a proposition for a railway in the Peace river district to connect with the Grand Trunk railway. This line would develop a trade between that country and the Pacific coast. I am not interested locally in that matter, but I think the minister might find it worth his time to read over the evidence given by western gentlemen before that committee in connection with that line. He might also find it worth his while to read the evidence of eastern gentlemen before that committee as to the necessity of extending and building those eastern lines. We in this country, I hope, are attempting to arouse the people, governments, coal operators, transportation agencies, to the necessity of having a national fuel supply for Canada. Those gentlemen have come to Ottawa and have developed those ideas which I am suggesting to the minister, and I do not think I could make the cases any stronger for those roads than did those witnesses who under oath gave evidence in connection with those matters. While this year I am not asking for the extension or building of these lines, the reason why I personally am not doing so, is because I understood the government was not going into new operations of this kind. If I had so understood, I would have been after the minister day and night in connection with the matter. I do not think I can make the case any stronger for those three roads than the gentlemen who gave evidence.

Mr. GRAHAM: What are the three roads?

Mr. CARROLL: The extension of the line from St. Peters to Louisburg; the extension of the Richmond-Inverness road to Inverness, a distance of 18 or 20 miles, which would develop and open up one of the great resources of coal in this country. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) probably would mention the road in the western country, concerning which road much evidence was given before our fuel committee. Those are the three roads. I would respectfully suggest to the minister that when he has some spare time, he might, perhaps, read over the evidence given in connection with those roads. This evidence given before the committee on Mines and Minerals will be laid on the Table to-morrow or the day after. If he does, I am sure next year, without any exhortation on the part of any one in this House, he will be glad to bring down legislation for the construction and the extension of the lines I have mentioned.

Mr. GOULD: I realize the limitations that are placed upon the government in regard to the matter of spending money to provide the many branch lines of railways which have been asked for, but I think my case has precedence over a goodly number. I have thought that the last government attempted to do penance, in that the road had been promised a long time ago, and they had even had graded some 16 or 18 miles. The farmers living along that grade did most of the work in their anxiety to have the road built. I speak of No. 9, the road from Peebles to Lampman. In my humble opinion, the road was commenced at the wrong end, simply because, had it started from the town of Lampman, it would have connected with the branch line to Bienfait and the coal fields north of the town of Lampman about 9 miles. That is a very urgent question in our part of the country, in that we are deprived of an adequate supply of fuel. The road likewise would have terminated on our own lines of railway, and this would have given an opportunity to our farmers to get their grain out. At the present time, all the grain in that territory is drawn to the lines of the Canadian Pacific. The road starts at Peebles in the district of Qu'Appelle, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Millar), and it comes into the district of Assiniboia about 6 miles, coming down the west side of the Moose mountains. There is a very high, mountainous country to the east of the road. If the road had been continued another 7 or 8 miles, even while it would not have tapped the coal fields, it would have facilitated the getting of grain to this railway much better than at the present time.

A further thing I wish to say in connection with this matter, is that materials, ties and steel, had been brought along the graded road in quantities sufficient, I think, to grade 11 miles, and last year the larger part of that material was removed. I cite this as an argument why we should have more consideration, if further consideration is to be given. I know the people living south of the present line of road will feel quite keenly disappointed,, in that the survey had been through there for a number of years to the town of Lampman, and provision is not made in the bill to carry the road further than Mile 22. I think that under this programme it should really go another 7 or 8 miles, or a total of 30 miles, to Lampman. In that way it would give direct access from our own line of railways to the coal fields. I am not urging this on the minister, and I am thankful that provision is made for the 22 miles. But if opportunity offers in the very near future, to extend this line further, I trust due consideration will be given to the matter.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has not said what he is going to do for us in Toronto, in connection with the tremendous deadlock that we have at the union station there. We had a long and eloquent speech which I enjoyed very much, but I should have appreciated it to a greater extent had I been able to understand completely why emphasis should be laid upon the construction of more railways in Quebec in preference to the carrying out of work in other parts of the country. As I understood the hon. gentleman, he wanted more work done in Quebec, and he pointed out in very beautiful language the advantages of the country through which the railways would run. He showed how much more important it was to have done what he was advocating than it was to do the little work in Toronto to which I referred this afternoon. He declared that little was done for the province of Quebec. I do not ask that anything be done especially for one part of the country as against another; I do not think that we have any right to consider at all whether any work is to be carried out in Ontario, in Quebec, in Manitoba, or anywhere else. The whole question should be whether it is right that such work be gone on with. The statement was made that it was very much more important to look after this new line of railway in Quebec than to right what is a flagrant wrong which has been going on for some time and is getting worse all the time. If we are to discuss this question of the relative importance of various works in different parts of the country, I would point out to the committee that the system that is making money down in this section of the Dominion, the Grand Trunk system, earned in Ontario $26,000,000 largely through that very terminal business in Toronto, as against the sum of slightly over $5,000,000 in the province of Quebec. It is utterly idle for people to try to make these comparisons: As I say, the whole question in regard to expenditures that are to be made anywhere should be as to whether or not those expenditures are justifiable. Surely my hon. friend should indicate to the committee where we shall land if we neglect the matter to which I referred this afternoon and of which I am speaking now. Surely he does not want the municipality to spend more money. It is out $26,000,000 now, and I cannot believe that the hon. gentleman would want to subject it to further inconvenience and harass it any longer. The people of Toronto have been menaced too long now. Thousands, yes sometimes eighty thousand, ninety thousand, and even a hundred thousand people using the crossings have been held up in one day, often in imminent peril. Does the hon. gentleman want that condition of affairs to continue and to be aggravated? I am sure that the board must have some policy by this time in connection with this matter, and the serious complaint of central Toronto demands by way of answer more than mere silence on the part of the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend was not here this afternoon. The reason I have said nothing on this question is due to the fact that an arrangement exists between the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church) and myself that Wednesday next be set apart for the discussion of the matter. I realize, however, that my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) is as much entitled as any other hon. member to raise the question.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I did not know about the arrangement to which the minister refers; I was not here when it was made.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose, though, that this would be an opportune time to discuss the whole situation, even though the hon. member for North Toronto is not present. He can make his representations when he is ready in any event.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If my hon. friend is going to take the matter up on Wednesday I do not want to put him to the trouble of dealing with it twice. All we want is a fair opportunity to discuss the subject on Wednesday, if that day is understood to be set apart for the purpose.

Mr. GRAHAM: The hon. member for North Toronto wrote to me asking whether Wednesday would be convenient and I replied that it would.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In the meantime I have a question to ask the minister. He has given us the report of the engineers in regard to the construction of line No. 2. I am familiar with the prairie provinces, about whose necessities I have some knowledge. I am fairly acquainted too with the reports in connection with that part of the country. But I am not at all so conversant with the first proposed line in the list. Would the minister be good enough to give us the gist of the report of the engineers recommending the first line?

Mr. GRAHAM: The town of Lockeport is four miles from the station of Lockeport and has no direct communication. The spur line is intended to connect the town and the intermediate country with the station of Lockeport. The situation is somewhat similar to that in the case of the town of Cardinal in the county of Grenville where there is a two-mile spur.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: How long has the present station been where it is?

Mr. GRAHAM: It has been in its present situation a good many years, I think.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is one of the original stations?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the report in regard to line No. 4—Grande Freniere, Quebec, to Rinfret Junction?

Mr. GRAHAM: An hon. member discussed that line this afternoon.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not No. 4.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes. He referred to the Laurentian mountains when discussing this particular line.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think he discussed it only partially.

Mr. GRAHAM: The purpose of this line is to shorten the route into Montreal. The right of way has already been secured. It is intended to make direct communication between Montreal and the Laurentian mountains, and it would pay to make that connection direct.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What about No. 5—Long Lac to Nakina, Ontario?

Mr. GRAHAM: The China Clay branch line is to provide direct communication with St. Remi d'Amherst.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the population of that place?

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not know.

Mr. BOYS: The minister says that the question in regard to Toronto will be discussed on Wednesday at the request of the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Church). Will that discussion come up under some item, or is it the intention of the minister to leave the bill in committee stage for the purpose? I want to support to some extent what has been said by my hon. friend (Sir Henry Drayton) in connection with the union station. If the subject is to be taken up on Wednesday I do not want to delay the committee by discussing it now, but I should like to get some information. If the discussion is to be allowed on the third reading I do not think it would be very satisfactory.

Mr. GRAHAM: It was not intended that the discussion should take place particularly in connection with the bill. The hon. member for North Toronto simply wished to present Toronto's case to the House.

Mr. BOYS: But how would he do it?

Mr. GRAHAM: The Prime Minister gave him the assurance that he would be able to raise the question on going into supply or on the Orders of the Day. The hon. member wrote me a letter to that effect to which I agreed.

Mr. BOYS: Has the question of the completion of the Union station been considered by the government?

Mr. GRAHAM: Parliament will have to provide in some way eventually for the Canadian National Railways' share of the cost, but the government has not yet considered the question. I agree with everything that my hon. friend can say as to the Toronto union station and I am in hopes that some arrangement can be made between the companies and the Toronto Terminal Company, which is really composed of those concerns, to find some way out of the difficulty.

Mr. GOULD: What is the explanation of the extraordinary difference in the cost per mile of these lines? I find that in Alberta the estimated cost per mile is $26,502; in Saskatchewan, $25,944; in Manitoba, $19,174; in Quebec, $30,142; in New Brunswick, $50,400; in Nova Scotia, $51,563.

Mr. GRAHAM: The cost per mile varies according to the nature of the country through which the line is built. My hon. friend gave the reason when he pointed out that the mileage in his own vicinity has been graded, in which case of course the cost is that much less than where the grading has not yet been done. For instance, we have already spent $5,000,000 on the Okanagan valley line.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Do these proposed branch lines have to be approved by the Railway Commission?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think perhaps I can help my hon. friend. Under the general law the route map is approved by the Minister of Railways, and afterwards the Railway Board approve the line within deviation limits of one mile.

Mr. STEWART (Humboldt): Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Railway Commission could not change the route more than a mile from that laid down on the route map?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The Railway Commission decide on the best route within deviation limits of one mile of the route laid down on the route map.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am not quite certain whether the Canadian National Railway Act of 1919 changed that.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 3—lines to part of Canadian Government Railways and constructed by company.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the idea of this section? I thought our National Railways were all under one system? Are they still being kept separate?

Mr. GRAHAM: Parliament does in a measure build lines that are really government-owned lines—something like the practice under the old Branch Lines Act.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I see, the real distinction is this: The government owns the property of the government lines, but it does not own the property of the National lines; the company owns the property and the government owns the stock.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The distinction, I presume, is necessary. But why is it necessary when new branch lines are being built? Might they not just as well be built by the National Railways and made a part of the National system even though they do connect, say, with the Intercolonial railway?

Mr. GRAHAM: It is thought that that would not be the better way to do it. We take the whole government-owned system through the Maritime provinces, say, and treat the branch lines as part of that system. I think it would be a little difficult to work out in detail if the Canadian National Railways started to build a little line here and another there. It seems to me that it will be better, for the present at any rate, to keep all the government-owned lines together.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know that there is any real distinction, unless the idea is that it is just as well to keep the government-owned railways separate from the National lines. I would have thought it would be easier if the tail went with the hide—if everything went into the pot. The government controls the whole thing either as owner or shareholder; and, further, the government is building both sets of branch lines. I think it would be easier for the officers if they had the one set of capital books. Is this distinction going to be carried out in connection with everything, so that we are to have two sets of accounts, and so forth?

Mr. GRAHAM: It will have to continue until parliament decides to issue securities against the government-owned railways. Personally, I do not think that would be a good idea to-day.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does it not really turn on whether you think it is a good idea to work these absolutely into one property or not? If we are to have two sets of accounts —and apparently we are—it is costing just so much more money. Is it not a good deal better for the government to show what the property is charged so the net debt will not look any worse than it really is? I cannot see anything in the objection. Of course if the idea is that the whole system is to be kept so that it can be unscrambled at any time, and in the meantime we are to have merely temporary joint management instead of one hundred per cent co-ordination with one hundred per cent economy, it is all right.

Mr. GRAHAM: I would not think that. There is a strong feeling against bringing the old government-owned lines under a mortgage which they have never yet carried. I think separate accounts will have to be kept. The capital account of the government railways is simple, but I admit there is difficulty in keeping the accounts separate as between the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern, a difficulty which we are trying to eliminate. It costs a lot of money, it is true, but in this respect I think it is not expensive.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Apparently there is nothing but a sentimental objection to having the mortgage that we really owe cover our own lines. All the government need do is simply to convey the government-owned lines to the Canadian National Railway system. This would be merely a conveyance of the fee simple. Once this is done, instead of continuing about five different systems of book-keeping one should be sufficient. I do not doubt at all that it would save the country—well, close to a million dollars a year.

Mr. GRAHAM: I still think that for the present at least the better way is to leave it as it is. It does not cost a considerable amount to keep the separate accounts. For example, the accounts of the Grand Trunk and the Grank Trunk Pacific have to be kept separate because the interest on the Grand Trunk Pacific guaranteed debenture stock is payable contingent upon the earnings of the old Grand Trunk, and you have to keep the accounts of the Grand Trunk separate for that purpose. We are trying to unscramble it, as my hon. friend says, but it is not so easy.

[Sir Henry Drayton.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is true; you have to keep the accounts separate in order to be able to determine whether the Grand Trunk has sufficient earnings to meet the interest on all these Grand Trunk Pacific debentures, and the same applies to the Canadian Northern income convertible bonds. Well, I suggest that at the earliest possible day the government make some sort of settlement with both. I think it would pay if the settlement were arrived at in a proper way and on a very modest basis to get rid of all this necessity for separate systems and separate book-keeping. But I hope the government will have the matter fully discussed here before they do that; I do not like to trust them to make any outside deal. Perhaps, while I am on my feet, I might ask how that syndicate is getting along in New York. Have the names got to the surface yet? Are they still on Fifth avenue?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have not seen the names yet.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Is the minister yet able to produce that lawyer's letter guaranteeing the legality of the transaction? I would like, I think, to suggest that a reward be offered for the production of that letter.

Mr. GRAHAM: How high?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Pretty high. I have struggled with this government to get the verbal opinions verbally boasted of, but I have not unearthed one yet; I have not found a crowbar strong enough to dig one up. As the subject is sure to come up again, I here and now challenge the minister to get any lawyer in the employ of the Canadian National Railway Company, to recite what this company has done in connection with that hotel and say it is legal.

Mr. BOYS: Is it intended that the lines of railway mentioned in the schedule shall form part of the Canadian Government Railways?

Mr. GRAHAM: Oh, no.

Mr. BOYS: I thought not, because section 3 says:

> Any of the said lines of railway connecting with the Canadian Government Railways may be declared by the Governor in Council to form part of the Canadian Government Railways.

What is to determine whether or not they shall? I see lower down that the title to the necessary lands or interests in lands is to be acquired in the name of His Majesty.

Mr. GRAHAM: Canadian National Railways are not of necessity government railways; they are owned by a company. Take No. 1 branch line, for instance, which is four miles long, and which will be constructed in connection with the Halifax and Southwestern; that may or may not be called a government railway. My idea is that every branch line that connects with and becomes a part of the Canadian Government Railways, strictly speaking, might well be called a branch of the government railways.

Section agreed to.

On section 4—Advances for government railway lines.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What machinery does the government propose to adopt in order to give effect to this section?

Mr. FIELDING: It simply provides that in the event of the issue of securities the government may advance the money out of the public treasury.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not think my hon. friend quite grasps the effect of the whole of this clause. The minister may advance the money, but the money must come from somewhere. It may come from the consolidated revenue fund, but moneys advanced from that fund are usually applied to a certain specific object, and it is usually thought best that they should be applied only to that object—that they should not be switched from one object to another. I admit we have departed from that rule in connection with the Hotel Scribe. Is it to be the same thing here, or does my hon. friend intend to put an amount in the estimates each year to provide for sums of money which are to be made subject to the call of the railways and are to be replaced afterwards by moneys raised by loan?

Mr. FIELDING: The authority to issue the bonds will be sufficient authority, I think, for the purpose. I have not looked very closely into the point my hon. friend raises. He suggests there would have to be a special appropriation out of which these moneys could be paid; I am rather assuming that will not be necessary, because we shall have the general borrowing powers which the government have for various purposes. However, the point is one which the legal authorities, perhaps, have not looked into as fully as they should. I shall be very glad to have the matter inquired into further.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The difficulty would not arise if my hon. friend had surpluses unappropriated by parliament. But the position is that the whole of his moneys are appropriated by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: It is only a permissive authority, anyway; I am not anticipating we shall desire to use it very often. But I will give attention to my hon. friend's suggestion.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I notice that the minister is bringing down a bill in connection with audit, which may cover this point as well as others.

Mr. FIELDING: It will cover authority to inquire into these matters.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Still, it would provide a check.

Mr. FIELDING: The resolution is now on the order paper.

Mr. BOYS: The total estimated cost of the construction of the lines mentioned in the schedule is not given, but apparently it will be about $30,000,000. Is it the intention that any portion of that amount should come out of vote No. 139, the amount of which is $73,000,000?

Mr. FIELDING: That vote is for the ordinary working expenses of the road.

Mr. BOYS: Item 139 of the estimates, page 32, says:

> The amount herein authorized may be applied from time to time, in the discretion of the Governor in Council. . . . by way of loans in cash, or by way of guarantee, or partly one way and partly the other.

One would imagine that the amount necessary for these branch lines could come out of this vote, having regard to the language used. What I want to know is whether it is the intention that that will be done, or is this $30,000,000 odd to be in addition to the $73,000,000?

Mr. FIELDING: The latter amount certainly does not cover these capital expenditures.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is exactly what I take objection to. The minister says that the $73,000,000 that we have already voted, and which either may be expended in cash or may take the form of a government guarantee, does not include any of this money; that all this is extra, the $73,000,000 being simply the ordinary expenditure of the road. I submit to the minister that in other years the money voted in the estimates covered everything—covered lines that were extended, lines where the rails were laid—all these extensions in western and eastern Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: New construction?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Undoubtedly, new construction, in western and eastern Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: Surely for new construction the new lines would have to be specified?

Mr. MEIGHEN: What the money was applied to was embraced in a statement that was laid on the Table.

Mr. FIELDING: It would not only have to be laid on the Table; it would have to be in the statute itself.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would not have to be in the statute at all. As long as the House was informed as to what the money was for, that was all that was necessary.

Mr. FIELDING: That is not enough.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course it is enough; the minister will find it is plenty if he will think the matter over. Take the case of the Merchant Marine. We did not specify the boats in the statute; we passed a vote to enable them to be built and then laid before parliament all the facts connected with their construction. This is money voted for the railways for such purposes as parliament has intimation of in a statement submitted to parliament. Where was the bill before about extensions? I have no recollection of it. Can the minister tell me? These were covered in the regular vote. Now then what the government is seeking to do, and I warn the House in time, is to be able to show a difference through this vote between the total estimate for the year and the previous year, and at the same time be spending the money under cover of another bill without its appearing in the Estimates. That is the effect of it all. In the past the votes have appeared. The country has known when the budget for the year was presented to the nation what it was going to be committed to for the ensuing year. But if this policy is followed it is not going to know. It is true that in a case like the agricultural education grant where a certain definite amount and no more was granted each year for a certain period, ten years I think, towards agricultural education, that was a statutory vote and so much per year was paid out, but there was no previous system of doing it otherwise in that case as there has been for this. Furthermore the country knew each year from the statutes what its commitment was, but here we do not know what our commitment is for any year. This government is simply asking for a blank cheque to be spent at any hour of any day within the next three years and avoiding putting an amount in the Estimates any year. Now that is something new. In fact, there is scarcely ever a statute this government submits to parliament that has not concealed in it an attempt to draw more power all the time into the administration—more of this order in council authority. This is definitely and irrefutably an attempt of that kind.

Now what I ask the government to do is this: If you want to go ahead with a special act, all right, but put in that special act the usual clause that the money for the purpose shall be voted by the Commons of this country. Then we shall know just exactly what we are doing and what the money is going to be applied to. I raised this point on the main motion and I intend to press it now. The government should not ask for a blank cheque covering three years when the country does not know how much is going to be spent in any year at all. It should not ask for power to spend this money at any time and at whatever time it suits the government best, whatever time it suits the exigencies best. Let the government add a clause here that the Appropriation Act that covered it in the past shall cover it in the future.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is entirely wrong. He is assuming that in the past all expenditures have been set forth in the Estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not state that.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend has repeatedly said so.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I said there was an exception in the case where there was a definite amount per year, but not in the case of railway appropriations.

Mr. GRAHAM: What about railway subsidies?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not looked up subsidies, but if subsidies have been, go ahead and do it the same way but do not take something that was in the Estimates before and jerk it out of the Estimates and put it under cover of a separate bill in order to mislead the country as to the actual commitments year by year. The country should know what it is going to spend.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is entirely wrong. There is no blank cheque in this particular transaction. There is a list of proposed railways and the amount appropriated for each is set forth. How does my hon. friend get the notion of a blank cheque? Here is a distinct appropriation of every amount set forth and it is to be voted by parliament. That is what we are doing now. So why does my hon. friend talk of a blank cheque? I emphasize the fact that railway subsidies running into the millions were always voted in a separate and distinct bill. I cannot recall a case when it was not so under both governments. Surely my hon. friend knows that his whole argument is wrong. Subsidies have always been voted distinct and separate from the Estimates. We are making no departure here. We are just following the usual practice. We are not voting railway subsidies here but railway appropriations under precisely the same method.

Mr. MEIGHEN: In previous years these have been in the Estimates.

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, but they have. Does any hon. member of the ministry say to me: We have not in the past since the National Railway Act came in made extensions in western Canada? And where is the special act calling for it? We advanced the money under the authority of the Appropriation Act to the National Railway Board. Now then the government is changing what has always been the practice in that regard in order to mislead the country. There may have been some excuse in the case of railway subsidies. There certainly was in the case of the agricultural education grant. I have not looked up subsidies and I am not going to say yes or no whether it was done in that case or not. But in any case the government had nothing to say about it once it passed the act. If the railway went on they got the subsidy, and if it did not, they did not.

9 p.m.

Mr. FIELDING: The government had nothing to say about it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. They had of course to pass the order in council, but the railway was entitled to the subsidy if it went ahead, and it could wait ten or fifteen years. There was reason in that case. But here the government knows, or should know, because we own the stock, what they are going on with and what they are are not going on with, and there is no reason why they should not show in the Estimates just what they are going to spend. Why is this done? What is going to be spent? What is the reason for taking it out of the Estimates? The reason is clear to my mind. The government wants to be able to draw an unfair and unjust comparison of its Estimates this year and in future years with those of previous years.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend will be here to see that that is not permitted, and I know he will do it well; he always does.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is all right, but when the minister gets before the country he will hold up the Estimates, and I cannot follow him through the country or even through the papers.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will take him with me next time, and as for my paper it has been mighty decent to him at a time when he needed it. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has explained fully to the committee why this is necessary. He spoke of subsidies. Now the reason why that method might have been necessary was because the government did not know how many miles would be constructed in any year, and that is the answer here to a large extent. The Canadian National Railway Board is going to construct these lines. This season they cannot construct much, but next year on account of this act, through not having to wait for construction to begin until after the estimates are through, construction can begin early in the season and be continued right along. The board know what they can do and how much they can construct, but if they have to wait year after year until the Estimates are through before they can start construction, experience shows that that is impracticable. The construction of these railways ought to be rushed wherever they are being constructed at times when labour can be secured between busy seasons. If we have to wait every year until the estimates are through construction will be held off for three months. The financial year ends March 31 and there would be no more money to go on with construction until the last estimates were through the House. Hon. gentlemen know that the men who would wish to get on this construction work during the summer would probably be needed on the farms later on in the year for harvesting. It is very difficult to get labour at such times.

There is no endeavour to hide anything here. It is simply to place a three years' programme and vote the money so that we shall not have to wait every year until the estimates are through before we can start construction. If this work were all going to be completed this year, it would be a different matter. We could say we are going to need this much, and clean it up, but we do not pretend that all this construction will be completed this year. The programme is for three years, and there is no attempt whatever at deception. Under the old estimates there were certain small extensions and so on, and my hon. friend will appreciate the difficulties under that method. He graded 372 miles, yes, 500 miles, in the West and then stopped. Now under a three years' programme at least some of these lines would have been completed in the three years, but as it was they were not. Many of these lines have rails on them; they are graded now, but the grade in some places is partially destroyed, I suppose. To my mind it is merely a matter of horse sense to proceed by this method. Let the company know for three years what they can depend on. Here are the amounts and it is no trouble to keep track of them. Parliament will have full opportunity to discuss them. I think this is the absolute business way to carry on this project.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend has cleared up the situation rather well. He has put it so we can understand it, at any rate. It is a change, just as my hon. leader said. It is a complete change from what was done before. It makes a complete change in the basis of the estimate. He points out that of course this was not done before. We had it from the Minister of Finance that it was done before—no change at all. Of course there is a change and of course all this capital construction was controlled and voted by the House. There is no doubt about it and the minister makes it clear. Now, he says there is an objection to that and that is that you cannot spend all your money in the one year. If it is a good objection that you cannot spend all your money in the one year, there is no reason why parliament should ever look after the estimates at all. There is hardly an estimate of any size in which there is not that item of revote. Every department has its revote. Is that any reason why some irresponsible commission should have the right of looking after the whole thing without coming back to parliament? Is that any reason why the departmental estimates should not still be submitted? But there is the whole thing: You do not know how much you are going to spend, and, therefore, you should not do it by way of estimates! You do not know how much you are going to add this year or next. The whole truth is that there is just one thing that is of any importance here, and I have not been able to get it. If we can have definite estimates of such a character laid on the Table that we know that the whole work is going to be done under the one vote, without coming back again, it will be a good thing. I could not get anything definite today—not a thing. There is absolutely no guarantee to the House in connection with it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Was there ever in connection with any public work?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am saying that is the only thing that is of any use, if you can get it in connection with the three-year lease, so that you will not have the officials coming back time after time with the larger votes. We have not anything more definite here than we have in connection with the building of a $500 post office. We have practically no details at all in connection with the $28,000,000 programme. My hon. friend says we have rights of way and dumps and all that sort of thing and that we did not go on with them. That did not make a bit of difference as to any three years' business—not the slightest. It was the inescapable condition that we and the country were in. That was all and nothing else. The mere fact of a bill would not have produced any money, and the mere fact of this bill will not produce any money. The country might just as well understand that this is a complete change from the former method of accounting under which, in connection with the railway estimates each year, the country knew just exactly what their railways were costing for everything. But the whole commitment, whether on capital account, construction account, guarantee or deficit, was all there. Now the country wants to know about it. There is nothing in the bill to say the return is to be made from the commencement, showing how many miles have been constructed, and where, and showing how much money has been expended. Has the minister taken any precaution in connection with these votes to prevent switching of public funds from one purpose to another? What guarantee have we, for example, that when we vote $3,000,000 for the purpose of a railway that the money is going to be spent there and not somewhere else—that the money, perhaps, is not going to be spent in Germany next time, instead of in France, as the other vote was spent?

Mr. GRAHAM: I think the auditors should be depended on to look after that. They are more competent to deal with that phase than I am. As to everything being in the Estimates, I can point out to my hon. friend that refunding of the Canadian Northern was provided for under the statute and not under the Estimates.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of what?

Mr. GRAHAM: Of Canadian Northern securities.

Mr. MEIGHEN: A refunding does not involve any further liability. That is simply changing the loan from one person to another person.

Mr. GRAHAM: Sometimes it had to go in the estimates of other railways and refunding might be very important.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is important, but it does not add or subtract from the country's liabilities.

Mr. GRAHAM: If a certain amount were in one estimate under a bill refunding, and allowed for that amount, it would change your method of book-keeping altogether, and the Estimates would not be comparable for the two years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I am afraid that is going a long way. It is a poor excuse.

Mr. MARTELL: I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that the Canadian National Railways have taken in the Canadian Northern, along with the Halifax and Southwestern road, and I would like to ask whether or not the present government has considered the advisability of constructing a railway from Windsor in Hants county to a point at or near Chester in the county of Lunenburg? This has been a political question for years and has been made a polical football by every party in this country. A railway from Windsor in Hants county to a point at or near Chester in the county of Lunenburg would pass through Martock, Windsor Forks, Leminster or Chester Road, a magnificent lumbering country, and would supply a great deal of wood for shipment over the Halifax and Southwestern which is now owned by the government. I am not going to enter into a discussion of the merits of the question, but I would like an assurance from the minister that he will have Sir Henry Thornton look into the advisability of proceeding with this branch, because it would be a very valuable line for the people in that section of the country. It is particularly necessary to have the question looked into, now that the government owns the Halifax and Southwestern, and I would like to have a promise from the minister.

Mr. GRAHAM: I shall note the remarks my hon. friend has made and place them before Sir Henry Thornton.

Mr. MARTELL: I have more confidence in the minister than in Sir Henry Thornton.

Mr. LEWIS: I do not know whether there can be said to be any political advantage in providing for a bill of this description. If, as we understand, the Canadian National Railways are outside of politics, then I understand that the schedule has been presented by the National Railway to parliament to vote this amount of money, and if parliament votes this amount of money for three years, it seems to me that no party will be able to go out in the ridings and claim any political advantage. If I understood the minister aright as to how this sum is voted, there is only one way in which it can be spent, and that is on the particular lines which have been indicated in the bill.

I wish to say a few words in regard to item No. 19—Dunblane branch. I had an opportunity of speaking to the minister and those in charge before recess, and I have the arguments in regard to the matter. Yet, at the same time I have received a great many telegrams from county councillors and also farmers in the vicinity, against the expenditure of this money in the particular way in which it is proposed to spend it. There is one thing to be considered as regards this branch line that proceeds from Moose Jaw to Riverhurst. It was generally understood by the people in that vicinity that at some time or another the line to Riverhurst would be extended beyond the river to link up with some of the other National lines. With that result in view, Riverhurst has become an important town. In 1921, a large sum of money was spent near Riverhurst in providing for a dam for a splendid water supply for the town and for the railway to Moose Jaw. Furthermore, Riverhurst is a divisional point. If this proposed railway is constructed, Riverhurst will become simply a dead end so far as we are able to understand the matter. I do not think there is any agitation at present from the people in the vicinity for the line to take the route which it is proposed it should take. As regards the railway situation, I know the whole country like a book, and the two railways, the Canadian Pacific to Elbow and the Grand Trunk to Riverhurst practically run parallel. There is no place where they are 20 miles apart. On the Canadian Pacific side for the last 15 to 20 miles, the country is simply sand hills, and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) a short time ago brought down a bill whereby the people in that district had the right to relinquish their lands, to give them back to the government and to receive lands in territory where they might be able to farm. After this railway proceeds a few miles north of Lawson and then in a northwesterly direction to Elbow, I do not think for 15 miles it will pass a single inhabited house. A person taking an automobile ride from, say, Lawson, north to Elbow, where this railway is about to run, after proceeding 6 miles north, would for the next 10 miles, hardly see a dwelling house for the simple reason that the northwesterly winds sweeping over the sand hills have covered even the good lands with sand, with the result that the people have gone to more fertile fields to farm. I understand from the engineers' report that this line is taking this particular direction, on account of the easier grade. It will be an easier grade for the railway, and it will be able to link up with the system across the river. The line, however, will not be any shorter. It will certainly mean, at last, building a line 30 miles longer than they would have to build if they continued the present line. The people south of the railway line have always expected that this line some day would be completed and would cross the river at Lucky lake and be linked up with that system. I can readily understand, if the railway which is contemplated in the bill ever is constructed, the government will never see fit to build another railway bridge, at least 20 miles south, with the result that the people on the fertile land south of the Grand Trunk will have to depend simply on a tri-weekly service, where on the other hand, if it is linked up to Dunblane with a line across the Saskatchewan river, they will have the advantage of the good service; but there will be no service for the railway to perform so far as that particular stretch of line is concerned.

I understand from the report that no part of this line will be built this year; that it will be proceeded with next year. I do not wish to stop this expenditure, nor to make any protest as to this item going through; but if the money must be spent in the particular way in which the minister states, it would be wise to hold the matter over until an investigation is made. Surely the engineers who built the railway in the first place from Moose Jaw to Riverhurst never intended that Riverhurst should become a dead end. They had something in view, or they would never have built 80 miles of line, made a divisional point at the far end, and then built a splendid dam costing thousands of dollars, with the intention of that town becoming a dead end. They intended to cross the river somewhere in the vicinity of Riverhurst, and to link it up with the line across the river. This proposed line will run through a territory that is not even calling for the line west and north to Elbow, and it crosses the same Saskatchewan river. It is true on the east side of the Saskatchewan river there is no great bank difficulty to overcome; but when you come to the other side, in order to reach Dunblane, you have to have a bridge that will be high enough to surmount the hill which is hundreds of feet high, and at the same time the line must pass through a very sandy territory to get there. It seems to me the pledge to the people living in the good territory who are producing wheat and making the railway pay, should be carried out, and they should have an opportunity of seeing the line extended across the river into the same kind of territory where the same service will be rendered to the same people, and where the line at the same time will cost a good deal less. I understand there is a report on the situation, and before I can speak definitely and intelligently on it, I should like to hear the minister's report as regards this particular line. I hope he will again look into the matter, and although I do not think we have any right to interfere with the policy of the National Railways, yet due consideration should be given to the people who are living in that territory and to the pledges that were made to them some years ago when they went into that territory and also formed a town.

Mr. GRAHAM: According to my hon. friend the farm furthest from the stub end would be only 12 miles?

Mr. LEWIS: Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM: That would be the furthest farmer away at that end. I do not blame my hon. friend for putting in a strong plea for those people. They are pretty well served now. But in order to make a through connection between the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific, to get a through line with good grades from Regina to Moose Jaw, the engineers say that it is necessary to build this other line in the manner proposed. It is through traffic they are after with the best grades possible. The best grade it is possible to get on the line proposed by my hon. friend is a full one per cent. In the other case, they can easily get a grade of one-half of one per cent. This makes a great difference in the load that can be hauled on through traffic and on the cost of transportation. If it be true, as it is, that the lower the grade, the cheaper the transportation, surely it is in the interest of the farmers themselves, who are not too far away from the railway as none of them are, that they should have the best standard of railway that can be constructed for the through traffic. In addition to that, the cost of those 42 miles to the bridge, I am told, will be little if any more than the cost of the 12 miles with the bridge at the point where that road would cross the river.

Mr. LEWIS: As regards the question where the bridge is going to be placed, I should like to make a suggestion. So far as I know at present, there is no possible way of getting across the Saskatchewan river. This government owns the resources of the province of Saskatchewan. I understand the rivers are also under federal jurisdiction, so at present the only way in which the people have a chance of getting across the Saskatchewan river, which is a very deadly river, is by a ferry. I hope when such a bridge is contemplated, not only will they contemplate a bridge for trains, but they will consider an additional expense whereby a traffic bridge can be built. At the present time one would have to go right to Saskatoon, one hundred miles north, before one could find a bridge for traffic to cross the river.

I do not wish to say anything derogatory about the engineers, but let us consider just for a moment the methods of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That line starts from Moose Jaw and goes up to Elbow, in identically the same locality the government intends to run its railway. At Elbow on the Saskatchewan river the Canadian Pacific Railway decided that the crossing was not a good one and so it goes immediately north about thirty miles before it crosses the Saskatchewan river. Now if the Canadian Pacific Railway thinks that Elbow is not a convenient place at which to cross and its engineers find it necessary to go straight north thirty miles to Outlook before crossing the Saskatchewan river, it does seem rather strange that another set of engineers should come along a little time afterwards and decide that the crossing which the Canadian Pacific engineers considered undesirable is good enough for the Canadian National Railways. I say it does strike me at least as somewhat peculiar. But wherever the bridge is built I trust that traffic accommodation will be provided and that the people will have the fullest opportunity of crossing the river.

Mr. GRAHAM: That will be a question between the railway company and the provincial authorities.

Mr. LEWIS: I hope it will be taken into serious consideration.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I wish to call the minister's attention to a very serious situation that exists in the city of Toronto, a city of some account.

Mr. GRAHAM: Evidently my hon. friend does not know that the Prime Minister by arrangement with the hon. member for North Toronto has agreed that this matter shall be brought up on Wednesday.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I may have something about the matter then, but I want to refer to it now.

Mr. GRAHAM: It has nothing really to do with the matter before the chair.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I think it has, and I want to point out that the most serious railway situation in Canada to-day exists in the city of Toronto, which I repeat is a city of some account, with a large business. The question there simply must be solved. It turns on the existence of two of the worst grades in Canada, that is, the Grand Trunk grade at Scarboro and the Canadian Pacific Railway grade through North Toronto. There is joint ownership of both lines on the north of the city. Between these two grades, of the Canadian Pacific of one per cent, and the Grand Trunk of one per cent, not three miles from either line there is a grade of one-half of one per cent; and there is a huge station at this place that is of no use. Besides this, there is a demand on the people of Toronto for the construction of an elevated esplanade at a very great cost, running into millions. I see that in item 26 in this schedule provision is made for a joint construction between the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but there is no solution suggested in reference to the Toronto situation, except by way of co-operation or joint action between the two roads.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand that the item under consideration has reference to branch lines. My hon. friend is dealing with a situation in Toronto which I think is irrelevant. I submit that he is out of order.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): And I contend that I am not.

Mr. JACOBS: Then I will ask for the Chairman's ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): Does the hon. member desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not out of order inasmuch as we are voting moneys for the construction of railways and the matter to which I am referring has direct relation to the subject of railways.

Mr. GRAHAM: We are dealing with branch lines.

Mr. JACOBS: Is my hon. friend discussing branch lines?

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I am referring to the improvement of an existing line. I do not intend to take up much time discussing the question to-night, but I certainly want to bring to the attention of the minister the urgency of the situation in Toronto.

Mr. JACOBS: I would ask for the ruling of the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil): The committee is discussing section 4 with reference to a certain schedule at the end of the bill. I rule therefore that any discussion beyond that is out of order.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): There is a provision in the bill, in item 26 of the schedule, for a joint line with the Canadian Pacific railway between certain points, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I am in order in directing the attention of the committee to the situation to which I have referred. If the question is to come up again on a day set apart for the purpose I shall deal with it then, but I take the opportunity now of calling the attention of the minister to the serious state of affairs in Toronto at the present time in regard to which there is no proposal either in this bill or elsewhere looking to a solution. When the vote is under consideration I am going to ask the minister if he has any scheme in contemplation to deal with the question.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Chairman has ruled this discussion out of order, but I might inform my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) that the hon. member for West York (Sir Henry Drayton) who brought up the same question earlier in the evening, when informed that the Prime Minister had arranged with another hon. member to deal with the subject on a subsequent occasion, readily agreed to postpone his remarks until then. The discussion, so far as my hon. friend's remarks are concerned, is really out of order, but I do not wish to press my objection to his proceeding; I simply want to ask him to do as his colleague has done.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I certainly will do that, but I do not think I am out of order. Hon. gentlemen from other parts of the country are bringing up questions and grievances touching their constituencies, and I submit that I am perfectly in order in presenting the case of Toronto to the committee. However, I shall allow any further remarks I have on the subject to stand over until Wednesday.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. GRAHAM: Thank you.

Mr. MILLAR: I was alarmed a few minutes ago when I heard the minister state that in connection with branch lines not much could be done this year. I do not know whether I understood him rightly or not, but that is what I gathered at any rate. And the more am I alarmed when I realize how near we are to the first of July and how short a part of the season is left. Is it the intention of the government to do very little on the branch lines this year? If so, and very little can be done because of the shortness of the season, why could this matter not have been brought down several weeks ago? We have been passing estimates now for nearly two months and I do not see why this matter could not have been attended to before now. I can assure the minister that there will be the most bitter disappointment in the country with regard to item No. 9 if the proposed line is not dealt with this year. This is a district that is well settled. It has been settled now for fifteen or twenty years and the people are obliged to haul their produce seventeen, eighteen and nineteen miles over roads that are not like the Ontario roads by any means. Can the minister imagine what it must mean to haul grain that distance over mud roads? Not only that, but most of the grain is now going to the Canadian Pacific Railway, whereas if this branch line were built it would go by the Canadian National. I am sure that the people of this district will be very grateful to the government for undertaking to build this line even in the next three years, but at the same time they will resent the injustice of postponing it even beyond this year. The road has been graded for some time and the ties are waiting to be laid down; and very little more expenditure would have been necessary to complete the work, so that the settlers could have taken their grain out this fall. I shall be sorry if anything is done to delay the work and prevent this line being built until next year.

Mr GRAHAM: My hon. friend can realize the difficulty in this matter. Every hon. gentleman feels that his particular case is the most urgent and there are about ten times as many interested parties outside who have to be heard. All this must be considered and sifted and resifted and it is not easy to select from so many when there is such a diversity of representation. The company hopes to conclude the line to which my hon. friend refers this year.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I would draw the minister's attention to item 26, which is a joint section with the Canadian Pacific Railway. There are millions of dollars to be voted for the expansion of our railway system in competition with the Canadian Pacific. We are entering on a period of rival construction between the two great systems. Probably a question of absorbing interest to the people to-day is whether there is to be a policy of rival construction between the two roads with the resultant waste of money and lack of efficiency of service which co-operation and co-ordination would avoid. It is time that we scrutinized all these votes to see whether they are for lines to compete with existing lines, in whcb case the money might better be devoted to provide railway facilities in those portions of the country which require them. I would ask the minister if a policy has been decided upon between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway so that instead of blind competition in the building of roads where they are not needed there will be co-operation to serve the best interests of the people at large. We should not conclude this session without making a declaration in regard to this matter. It is not only up to the government but up to the administration of the National Railways and the Canadian Pacific to say whether they intend to embark on a policy of rival construction. We want efficient construction in this country, not mad rivalry. I should like to hear from the minister on this point.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is largely something to be worked out between the railways. I think the day for mad rivalry is over in the interests of economy. As an object lesson, there are a couple of items in this schedule where two railways are running over the same track for a certain distance.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Again I ask, are we going to discontinue the practice of including in the estimates our railway commitments? Some members think it is not a serious matter, but I venture to say that those who have given expression to this thought will be coming to parliament in future sessions complaining of conduct that is possible just because of this legislation. We never had any trouble—and I think I should know—in going ahead with any work because of delay in voting the money in the House; the only trouble we had was in getting money to go on with. The government comes every year and asks for interim appropriations, and if there is money needed these appropriations take care of the need. As a matter of fact, as everyone knows, we usually end the year without the money being spent. I repeat, we have never had any difficulty at all because of the restrictions the estimates contain, namely, that the votes must be spent in that year. There is no earthly reason why we should vote money for three years instead of one. We may just as well give up the whole system of presenting estimates to parliament for each year if we pass this bill and are not to know how much is to be spent in any single year and what work is to be undertaken. In other words, parliament is to know nothing; the government can do just what it likes with this enterprise. We give the government carte blanche now, and the minister persuades hon. members that it is all right. Further, under a subsequent section of this bill the minister can drive a coach and four all through the divisions that are set out in the schedule. He can take the money voted for one road and apply it to another, because section 7 simply wipes out all limitations and puts the minister in supreme command. I therefore propose to let hon. members take responsibility for the vote now by moving.

That there be added to section 4 by way of amendment the following proviso:

Provided that money for this purpose shall first be voted by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend would accomplish nothing by such an amendment. This money will be appropriated by parliament if the resolution passes. Therefore why say this is subject to an appropriation made by parliament? Parliament is at this moment appropriating it. I really cannot see any force in my hon. friend's contention.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Parliament should only authorize the works to go on. All other works are subject to appropriation by parliament.

Mr. FIELDING: But we are appropriating the money now.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I know, but we should not.

Mr. FIELDING: But we are appropriating it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But attach this proviso and we will not be. We will simply authorize the work to go on, but parliament will know every year what money is being spent.

Mr. FIELDING: I cannot understand my hon. friend's objection. I think there are many cases in which it is absolutely desirable that a department shall not be tied up from year to year, but shall be able to carry on without delay. I think the resolution itself is effective, but the general proviso he prefixes would interfere with construction of public works and cause delay when urgency is necessary.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister might be good enough to make that clear to the House. We vote money for every single thing every year.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh no, not for every single thing.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh yes, I might mention railway subsidies.

Mr. FIELDING: Those cover many millions.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, but in a railway subsidy you have no means of knowing what year it applies to. Here we have a way of telling, for we are absolutely in charge of the whole situation just the same as we are of the completion of this building. I say again, adopt this three-year method and you will so blur the estimates that the country will not know what is going to be spent every year. In a word, it is equivalent to simply destroying the estimate system in toto. Consequently it seems to me that hon. gentlemen will later have to give good reasons why they vote for the vesting of such a power in the government.

Mr. FORKE: If I understand this matter rightly, the right hon. leader of the Opposition would have the money to be spent each year placed in the Estimates for that year and the same each subsequent year until the expenditure is completed. When I heard the explanation made by the minister I really was inclined to favour his view, but upon hearing the arguments afterwards advanced I cannot see that much harm would be done by adopting the method advocated by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. The House will likely meet in December or January, at any rate sufficiently early to enable the voting of the sum required for the ensuing year. I can also see the force of the objection advanced that this is a separate bill and that the money will not appear in the Estimates, the result being somewhat misleading. I would not count so much on that, however; but I do not know that the principle is a very good one of voting a lump sum for three years. It would be all right to have it stated that the estimated cost of these lines would be so much in three years, but I would rather see the amount for each year voted as required. I make this statement with a good deal of hesitation, because the subject is new to me. I am not acquainted with the rules and methods of procedure in voting money, and if any members behind me think differently it will not make any difference. In fact, I have not had enough experience in the matter to enable me to express what might be called a definite opinion, but that is my present view of it and I take it that I will vote that way.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not only are the present rules and the ordinary procedure being departed from, but the minister is not yet sure of his own bill, not yet sure of his own moneys; he wants to be able to turn his funds here, lengthen his mileage there, or contract it in the other direction. He takes complete control unto himself. We have a section here which ordinarily would bind the minister and bind parliament to vote the sums of money required. But I invite the attention of hon. gentlemen to this section so that they will know what they are doing:

The mileage of the said lines of railway—

And remember, your $40,000 is to be fixed on that mileage.

—and the cost of construction thereof, as mentioned or referred to in the schedule of this act, are merely estimated distances and costs for the information of parliament, and shall not be taken to restrict the minister in the issuance of such certificates nor the company in the performancee of the work of construction and completion nor in the issue of its securities.

The truth is that someone is determined that the whole of this matter is to be left up in the air for somebody to handle just in the way somebody wants to handle it. When the minister gets an omnibus power like this, how is he going to see that the public funds are not switched from one purpose to another? I indicate to him what happened in the case of the Hotel Scribe, and he says the auditors can look after it. Well, the point is the auditors did not look after it in that case; the transfer of funds was made; the illegal arrangement was entered into. And here we are enabling this thing to be done on a large scale; the control of parliament is removed.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend is making a mountain out of a molehill. In the case of subsidies for which he has voted, payments have been based on the reports of engineers as to the progress estimates. These subsidies were given to private companies, and the powers were the same as those for which the Canadian National, the people's company, are now asking. Suppose a line for which provision is made as to a specific distance and so on has to be constructed a half mile or a mile longer in order to get a better entry into a town, or to escape a big bridge, or for some other good reason. If this power is not given that extra mile or half mile could not be built unless we first came to parliament and got the authority to build it. Does parliament want that? Quite often a circuitous route is followed in order to get into a town or municipality in the most desirable way, and unless the minister be given some such power as this you might have to stop your line a mile out of town. The power asked for is no more than parliament has voted time and again to private companies. It is simply a case of our own company now asking the same latitude in the construction of its own lines.

Amendment (Mr. Meighen) negatived: Yeas, 15; Nays, 45.

Section agreed to.

On section 5—Guarantee of securities of other lines up to $40,000 per mile.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Chairman, I propose to move a similar amendment to clause 5. I am quite certain the committee will vote to give the government power to commit the country to as much one year as it wishes, to as much the next year as it wishes, and so on, without any return to the country at all. But I will put myself on record; I will put all hon. members on record if I can. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Boys) that there be added to this clause the following words:

Provided that the amount so to be guaranteed shall first be included in the estimates and voted by parliament for that purpose.

Amendment (Mr. Meighen) negatived: Yeas, 14; Nays, 51.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Nature and form of securities to be approved by Governor in Council, and signed by Minister of Finance.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We are now coming to the sections which put in concrete form just what we have been saying. We have on the one hand the guarantees to be given under this act, and on the other hand the guarantees given under the vote already made by this House. Now I ask my hon. friend what portion of the main vote is for a similar purpose to what we have here.

Mr. GRAHAM: I can inform my hon. friend that there is nothing in the $73,000,000 vote passed this year except for betterments and co-ordination between the various lines. There was nothing for building.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: If it is, it is different to any other vote we have had. It may have been prepared with that end in view. I would go further and say that if there is no construction whatever contemplated in the vote this year of $73,000,000 it is a bigger vote than we had last year. I asked my hon. friend for full particulars as to that vote. I did get a subdivision from him, and the day I got it I wrote to him pointing out that it was not at all full and did not give definite details as to what we were voting. I wonder if he has any objection to giving now the information asked for, or whether the information is to be withheld from parliament.

Mr. GRAHAM: We prepared what we understood my hon. friend wanted and we gave that to him. Further details are being prepared, but it will take some little time to get that done. My hon. friend knows that in the operation and management of any big railway system the estimates presented to the board of railway directors are not inflexible in their application, because the directors could not meet any exigency if they were unable to make any change from their first plans. I think my hon. friend will find if he looks into the operation and management and even the betterments of any of the great railway systems that while generally they have to proceed along certain lines, exigencies might arise which might make a difference altogether in the original plans, and if the appropriation were inflexible the management would be practically precluded from operating successfully. I do not mean that they should be wide open but there must be a certain amount of flexibility, particularly in the operation and management and even in the betterments of a railway.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend knows perfectly well what I want. How the situation looks to me at present, and I indicated it at a previous sitting of the House, is this: We have got a vote within $4,000,000 of the whole vote of last year. We had a deficit running into several million dollars, and now according to the statement my hon. friend made to the House, and I suppose the statement is true, and I want to continue thinking the statement is true, he showed that instead of that deficit he had a surplus of $4,000,000; but notwithstanding that surplus of $4,000,000 and notwithstanding the fact that the estimates this year, as we have been told, do not include five cents for construction there is only a difference of $4,000,000 between the vote this year and last. My hon. friend talks about elasticity. I think there has been a great deal too much elasticity. I believe if there had not been such a lot of elasticity the amount used could not have been used. My hon. friend asks me what was done. I know that we have had pages and pages of details giving us information as to the estimates to be voted before they were brought down to the House, and my hon. friend must have those details. If the work is being carried on in the way it used to be, the minister and the department is given full information as to the commitments here, there and everywhere. Why, it is a matter of hours going through those details, and if the proper details have been given my hon. friend for the purposes of this vote there is no difficulty in him giving that information to the House. He can table the information now in two minutes because he has it.

Mr. GRAHAM: Would my hon. friend table all the details of notes he had from his department?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Certainly I would give the details.

Mr. GRAHAM: He never did, and that information was never asked for before.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would certainly detail every bit of information I had leading to an estimate. My hon. friend has those details and he has not given me the information. Now we might just as well know where we are about it. The department have the details and there is only one reason for not giving them, and that reason is that moneys that are voted for this purpose can be applied to that. That is just what my hon. friend calls elasticity, and that is just what is absolutely wrong.

Mr. GRAHAM: There is not one iota of change this year from last year or any other year. My hon. friend from his own intimate knowledge knows that there are a lot of things he never gave to the House and a lot of things that nobody ever asks for in the House. I say quite candidly I would have notes. He did himself many a time have notes from his subordinates, but he would not lay them on the Table. They are notes of particular information for the minister. My hon. friend has asked me questions by the score to-day that never were asked before in this House by any other member. In his time he never pretended to give any such information to the House. I have been a member of the House as long as he has, and I have put through some railway estimates in my time, more than he ever did, and never in my time were the details that were given to the minister in his book in order to answer questions, placed on the Table of the House or asked to be placed on the Table of the House. There are many things in that book that are not public property. There are many things in it for the information of the minister alone, and my hon. friend knows that.

10 p.m.

Now as to showing a surplus, that was not to glorify the present government or the National Railway Board, because that was the result of the work of my hon. friend's board except from the month of October. If we had wished to minimize what they had done we could have made it appear very bad last year and make it look good this year, but we gave an honest statement of what had occurred, and it was to the credit of the board headed by Mr. Hanna. The credit was not taken for this by the government or the government's board. I tried to get every possible bit of information. I said we were endeavouring to make another statement. We sent my hon. friend one. I thought, and my deputy thought, it covered everything. Now he asks that we place on the Table of the House private information,—I say semi-private information,—some of it absolutely public, given to the minister in order to answer every question, right or wrong, incidental or otherwise that might be asked, and he asks that that be placed on the Table of the House—something never heard of in the world before.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend knows very well that the answer is not at all in line with the argument I made. I made no complaint whatever about the surplus being discussed.

Mr. GRAHAM: If he intimated anything. he hoped it was true—an intimation that we have falsified the books.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I said I hoped it was true but the figures brought down tend to show, if they do not absolutely show, that it was not true. We have a betterment from $16,000,000 of a loss to an operating surplus of $4,000,000.

Mr. GRAHAM: Of $3,000,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Very well, take $3,000,000. It was four in the statement according to my memory, and in my hon. friend's statement too, if I am wrong I wish to be corrected.

Mr. GRAHAM: For the calendar year, approximately three million.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister corrected me when I made it three million in my remarks immediately following his speech, and he said it was four.

Mr. GRAHAM: Perhaps we both got a little muddled as between the calendar year and the fiscal year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, no.

Mr. GRAHAM: The railway books are closed at the end of the calendar year, we discussed these matters in the House up to March 31, and I gave a lot of details in the statement I presented to the House of the material bought in this calendar year of 1923 that did not apply to last year at all; but I gave the statement up to March 31.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Whether it be four or three, there is a difference on the one hand of twenty million and on the other hand of nineteen million. I am not quarrelling with that statement, I am accepting it and hoping it is true, irrespective of what my hon. friend says when he puts in his estimate this year. If the operation of the railway has improved as much as the auditors show it has what on earth is the reason for showing such an amount in charges against the estimates of last year, unless every single thing that could possibly be included, whether it is for this or that purpose, be applied irrespective of how it is voted? That is what I am talking about. I think the House has a right to know the particular thing we are voting money for, and to know whether it has been applied for that purpose or not. My hon. friend says that information was never laid on the table.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not in my time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know whether it was asked for or not. I know that no information in connection with my estimates asked for was refused by me, and I know I had it for the purpose of making up my mind what would go through, as far as the Department of Finance was concerned. What is it that is confidential in this? What item is confidential in connection with the estimates? My hon. friend knows there is none. That has not anything to do with the amount of the contract, the details of management and the like. There is no use getting these things mixed up with the estimates. They are entirely different, and I ask, when did we refuse to give any information asked for, having regard to an estimate before the House?

Mr. GRAHAM: I have never said my hon. friend did. I have said it was absolutely contrary to practice to ask the minister to place his book of information given to him on various matters on the Table of the House. It never was done in my time, and never asked for till to-day. An information asked for by hon. members concerning my estimates when they were going through was given just as my hon. friend states was done in the case of his estimates. Now he asks me to place on the Table of the House the book prepared for me, with all the side lines and everything else, concerning the information I had in my possession as to my estimates. I am prepared to give any information with regard to my estimates, if I can get it. But this information he asks for never was placed on the Table of the House. He would not think of such a thing.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The only reason I suggested it was because the minister said he had the information. He said it would take a long time to make the statement. I wanted to get it before the House adjourned. If he does not want to table his estimate, then let him prepare the statement. But I never had an estimate which I was interested in that I would have objected to produce, nor would I have been ashamed to table the fullest information that I had in connection with it. I again say—and I challenge my hon. friend to deny it—that no such information was refused at any time. Now the minister does not want to put the book on the Table. I only suggested that, so as to make it a little easier for him. It is not necessary to make a long statement, but there is far more in the book than there would be in the statement. I still think parliament is entitled to have the particulars of the money voted. My hon. friend was going to give me a statement. I wrote to him over a week ago, pointing out where the details were not given. I have not heard from him since. He tells me the statement is in course of preparation. I hope he will let us have it before the House adjourns.

Mr. GRAHAM: I will try to.

Mr. STEVENS: I wish to ask the minister a question. I know that this point has been discussed to-night on a previous section, but I think my question is pertinent and ought to be clearly answered, particularly in face of the comments made a moment ago by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke). Section 8 which is now before the committee empowers the issue of certain securities in a manner which shall be determined by the Governor in Council from time to time, and then it goes on to provide that these securities may be secured by a mortgage or deed of trust, and so forth. From that it would appear that this particular expenditure of some twenty or twenty-five million dollars is to be made in an issue of new securities distinct from those provided for in the issue. What I want to ask the minister is this: Why is it necessary, in connection with this work set forth in the schedule to this bill, to authorize this issue of new securities when, in the estimates we provide for the sum of $73,000,000 in connection with which I read this in subsection (e), of the description:

Construction and betterments: guarantee of securities.

And then it says:

If by way of guarantee, any such guarantee may be of the principal and interest of the notes and obligations or securities of one or more such companies specified by the Governor in Council.

And so forth.

In other words, in the estimates out of the $73,000,000 we are providing for the issue and guarantee of securities for construction, for extension, principal and interest of maturing and matured loans, and so forth. Yet for this particular schedule of branch lines we are making a separate issue of securities which will not appear in the ordinary statements of the government next year, or as an increase, for instance, in the public debt. It will not appear in any definite form. In the past—that is last year and the year before—we had these votes and the public were told that the National Railways had a deficit of a certain amount. Then this amount was segregated into losses on operation, refunding and so forth. These particular works provided for in this bill are not distinct and separate from works being carried on under the Main Estimates. I am quite aware that the minister may reply that this is capital expenditure; as a matter of fact, we have provided in the $73,000,000 item for what is just as clearly capital expenditure as is this item in this bill. I do not wish to weary the committee by asking for information that, perhaps, has been given already. Yet I have failed to see the need of this being done in this particular form, especially since the minister has refused to make provision in the estimates. I would have no particular objection to this bill, if the actual expenditure of the money to provide for the work were contained in the estimates from year to year, but that has been decided in clauses 4 and 7. The minister has refused to include those in the estimates, and he makes the provision in this form. I do not wish the minister to answer if he has already done so; but I do not think this has been answered. I should like the minister to explain why we have capital expenditures in the main Estimates, and this item appearing in a different form in the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM: I imagine it would not be satisfactory to parliament if, under the appropriation that we have, we launched out on a great construction scheme such as this.

Mr. STEVENS: No.

Mr. GRAHAM: Any work that was done under the powers of a guarantee, or issuing of securities, or estimates is work in connection with co-ordination, minor work, betterments and all that kind of thing, no large construction of the dimensions of this. For practical purposes it is thought better to take this special construction in this way, and I believe parliament will find this the better way. As regards information, the Minister of Railways in the annual statement that he makes before coming to parliament with his ordinary estimates, will be compelled to give in detail what has been done during the year in this connection, and the public accounts committee will have an opportunity of going into the matter. This railway system amounting to 22,600 miles is a new thing, and we have to do these big things in a somewhat different way from what we did when we had just the Intercolonial. This system is many thousands of miles longer than it was a year ago. This method is only for practicability, there is nothing whatever to be hidden, and I do not think my hon. friend believes that anything is to be hidden. Everything possible will be given in the minister's statement, which, I believe, will be the proper place in which to give the information.

Mr. STEVENS: These items in the estimates to which I have referred, will all appear in the public accounts, and will be placed before parliament at the end of the year. These items in the bill will not necessarily be included in the public accounts unless in some form, possibly as a supplement. That might be done, but so far as I can see, under the law, it is not necessary to include them in the public accounts.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed that it is, that any expenditure of public money must go into the public accounts, and surely expenditure on these lines will get into the public accounts.

Mr. STEVENS: I do not think the minister is any more sure about that than I am, and I am very suspicious about it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I am informed by my deputy, who knows something about the routine, that these accounts must go into the public accounts.

Mr. STEVENS: Then why cannnot the minister bring down an estimate, just as has been done in the case of the other items? Let me give another example. There is in the Main Estimates, an item for principal and interest for maturing and matured loans, secured or unsecured. In other words, you provide in the Main Estimates for paying off principal, because that is what this amounts to. In this other case, we are incurring a principal charge. Why could that not be covered in the estimates, as well as the matter of paying off a principal charge? There is no difference in the principle of the thing. That is the point I want to make. This has already been suggested and turned down; but I would still suggest that this bill should pass as a general authority to do these works and then a special estimate, not necessarily included in the Main Estimates, but a special item in the Supplementary Estimates should be brought in for this year for, say $10,000,000. I wish the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Forke) would listen to me, if he would be good enough, on this point. Every year that I have been in this House we pass ordinary Public Works estimates covering contracts which are already let for amounts away in excess of the amount voted. For instance, we let a contract for a million dollars for some public work. All we vote during the year is, perhaps, $500,000, knowing that during the year we shall require only that amount of money on the contract. The contract is let; the country is committed to the work; but the amount required for the year is estimated, and the amount inserted in the estimate. That is exactly what we are asking should be done in this case. Grant the authority to the railway company to go on with the capital expenditures, and then bring in a supplementary estimate covering the amount you want to spend this year. In my estimation, there is no difference in principle in providing the amounts in the Main Estimates in a proper and ordinary parliamentary fashion, and that called for in this bill in a special and extraordinary manner.

Mr. GRAHAM: I do not want to delay my bill, but I have tried to point out the practicability of the matter. If my hon. friend has had any experience in public works, he will see one of the difficulties. This happens time and time again, and it should not happen with railway construction, particularly in the position in which the country is as regards labour. Construction should not be held up. What happens is that contractors are allowed to go on after an appropriation has run out; they finance themselves, and the cost of that public work is the cost plus the interest on the money which they advance. The counry in this way loses money. If the United States were to build the Welland Canal, they would pass a lump sum, and they would have to give an account each year. Until, however, the appropriation was exhausted, they would not have to come back to Congress for a further appropriation.

Mr STEVENS: My hon. friend is not answering my argument at all. He is condemning the whole system of our estimates. I am not discussing that at all. That is the regular sysem, and I question the minister's expression of opinion as to its not being as good as that of the United States.

Mr. GRAHAM: For large works, I am free to say that I believe it is not. I have given my hon. friend one reason; I will give him another. Under the United States system, where a lump sum is voted, the work can go on without cessation and contractors can take advantage of every situation. With us, the work is sometimes halted for reasons pointed out by my hon. friend. With large works, our system is not the best for this reason: For a work that will cost, say $200,000, an amount of, perhaps, only $10,000 is voted. Unless some person reads Hansard with the explanation, he will believe that the work is going to cost only $10,000. Then, perhaps, he looks up Hansard the next year, and he finds there is $25,000 or $50,000 more. I believe the safe way in the public interest, is to put down at once the estimate for the entire amount, and to account each year to parliament. That is really what this is.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend evidently thinks all these payments are to be shown in the public accounts. Do the payments made by the Canadian National Railways appear in the public accounts?

Mr. GRAHAM: The amounts we advance them certainly do appear in the accounts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Yes, but my hon. friend knows that is quibbling.

Mr. GRAHAM: Not at all. I object to the use of that word "quibbling". As in the case of the Merchant Marine which was under discussion the other day and in regard to which the Auditor General's report for the past three or four years was turned up, the advances that we make are really loans and they appear in the public accounts.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend knows perfectly well that the payments as such on the National Railways do not appear in the public accounts, what appear in the public accounts are the payments which we make to the system. Of course, the deputy may say "sure," but we do not want that; we want to get the exact facts as to where the money goes. What the public accounts show is that so much money under such a vote is given to the railways. That is all, we do not get anything else. But that is not what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens) was asking for, nor is it what my hon. friend says. I know that the minister replied in absolute good faith to the hon. member that these advances appear in the public accounts, but they do not.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Advances pending issue of guaranteed securities.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps the minister can tell us how the money will be raised, how the accounts are to be charged, what appropriations will be necessary in order to enable the work to be done, whether the funds will be raised by overdraft, or in what other way.

Mr. GRAHAM: It might not, say, this week be an opportune time to issue securities for the work. This section gives the Minister of Finance power to advance a loan temporarily to the company for immediate needs, the amount to be reimbursed the moment the securities are sold; and it is in the interests of the company that the best possible price shall be received. The sale of securities will be altogether controlled by the Minister of Finance and the Canadian National Railways, and this section gives to the Minister of Finance the power to go to the bank and borrow for the work to be done.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose that this is what the Minister of Finance will have to do in any case. The section simply gives him the power to go to the bank and borrow money.

[Mr. Graham.]

Mr. GRAHAM: I should think he would have to do that.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

DAIRY INDUSTRY ACT, 1914, AMENDMENT

The House again in committee on the following proposed resolution, Mr. Gordon in the chair:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914, by providing:

1. That a minimum standard of fat in butter be established;

2. That the Governor in Council be empowered by proclamation to permit the importation, manufacture and sale of renovated butter in Canada;

3. That the manufacture, importation, selling, offering or having in possession for sale of milk or cream which contains any fat or oil other than that of milk be prohibited;

4. That regulations may be made respecting (a) records being kept by manufacturers and dealers in butter, renovated butter and cheese, and for the examination of such records by inspectors; (b) the importation, manufacture, inspection, marking, advertising and sale of renovated butter; (c) the registration of all cheese factories and creameries in Canada and the compulsory use of an assigned number on the product of each factory or on the packages containing said product;

5. That penalties for violation of the regulations be increased, and methods established for proving the guilt of persons charged with infractions of the act as amended, and for the procedure to be followed in all such cases.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: When this resolution was last before the committee there seemed to be rather general objection on all sides of the House to the second paragraph. I move therefore that section 2 be struck out.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS: Does section 3 cover "filled" milk?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Yes. In line 2 of section 4—now section 3,—the words "renovated butter" must be struck out, as also paragraph (b) with regard to the importation, manufacture, inspection, marking, advertising and sale of renovated butter. I move that the new section 3 be amended accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in. Mr. Motherwell thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 241 to amend the Dairy Industry Act, 1914.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXPORT ACT—PULPWOOD

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend section seven of the Export Act, chapter fifty of the Revised Statutes, 1906, as enacted by chapter thirty of the statutes of 1914, by providing that the Governor in Council may by regulation prohibit the exportation from Canada of pulpwood of the variety, kind, place of origin or having the particulars of identification or ownership or production described in the regulation.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Mr. Chairman, I am a good deal in sympathy with the general principle of the resolution, but I should like my hon. friend to inform us whether he has made up his mind at all as to the regulations to be made respecting ownership and the like.

Mr. FIELDING: I am afraid the resolution can hardly be explained better than in its own words. It is to give the government power to make regulations having in view the prohibition of export of pulpwood. It might be a general prohibitory regulation without any qualification, or a regulation prohibiting export under certain conditions. For example, it has been suggested that it would be wise and expedient to exempt farmers who have pulpwood to clear off their land. We have not any plan in detail. If a plan is evolved we might put it in operation in a general way or subject to qualification; this would be a matter for further inquiry. The wording of the resolution implies that it may be desirable to distinguish respecting quality and character of wood.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I take it that this matter will receive the government's immediate attention and will not be tied up by the commission that was referred to at an earlier date.

Mr. FIELDING: Under the terms of this resolution we would not be restricted, but much can be said in favour of having the report of a commission before acting.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I rose to express the hope that my hon. friend would really go on with the prohibition. I do not think he will gain any further information from a commission. The questions of ownership and so on would be just as real—if there is any real difficulty about them—after as before the report. I know my hon. friend is conversant with the whole matter.

Mr. FIELDING: I can assure my hon. friend that there are two sides to the question. Sometimes a commission has a good effect in educating the public in a matter which is not generally understood. I think there is more than one side to the question, and I do not wish to commit myself beyond that at the present stage.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps my hon. friend will go a little further and say that if there is to be a commission it will proceed with all speed and submit an early report.

Mr. FIELDING: It is desirable. More than that I could not say.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): The prohibition of the export of pulpwood from farms owned by settlers would be very serious in the province of Quebec, especially in my own constituency. When new land is taken up by a settler he must clear it and dispose of the wood in some way or another. If his export to the United States is forbidden, he is at the mercy of the local dealer, if there is one, otherwise he has no market at all. The legislature of Quebec has refused to go that far; it prohibits the export of wood from Crown lands only. I presume the Dominion government will be guided very largely in this matter by the feeling in my province as expressed by the legislature. I certainly would view with alarm any action taken by this government to prevent the farmer or the settler from exporting his wood to the United States or anywhere else, because this is his only source of revenue until he has a crop to sell. Therefore I hope the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will give us an assurance that these settlers will be exempt from any such prohibition.

Mr. MICHAUD: Mr. Speaker, there is not a county in all the Dominion where there are so many new settlers who have gone into the wilderness in the last ten years and established new homes as in my constituency. Along the National Railway about five hundred families have settled recently and cleared their holdings, and now they are looking to the American market to export their pulpwood. They are getting a better price across the line than they are getting on the Canadian side. These people expect that the law will remain as it is, and I hope that when the Minister of Finance gets the report of the commission that is to be appointed, he will take the requests of these people into consideration. I speak not only on behalf of the new settlers, but on behalf also of farmers in my constituency who own land and what might be called lots in second, third and fourth tiers and which are being retained for the purpose of cutting the wood thereon. They make a business out of it; they export these woods to the very best market. I know that many pulp mills in Canada own their own land, but they also buy from the farmers. I ask that these new settlers as well as the longer established farmers be protected by the minister in this respect.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should think that the minister could look after both interests without trouble. The mill owners who are given certain rights in connection with these great national resources have some obligation to the state, I do not know why the regulations should not go further than they do, and I do not know why the farmers and others should not be assured of a market for their pulpwood. After all, it is in the interests of the pulp people to preserve the forests; in many cases they have not much as it is. The pulpwood rates in the States are always low. The railway haul from Canadian points to American points is always expensive. It would be no very great hardship on the paper companies of this province if they had to buy the settlers' wood at a price which would equal the American price less the freights that the farmer would otherwise be out. The farmer would lose nothing and the country would be able to conserve its resources.

Mr. POWER: Is it the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the government should fix a maximum price or a minimum price for the purchase of pulpwood?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: No, there is a market price; the matter of regulation would always be in the hands of the government. If they thought the farmers were being unfairly treated, they could act accordingly.

Mr. POWER: Who fixes the market price?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The public demand in the States is fixing it every day.

Mr. POWER: It varies from county to county.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It varies, but on what? Not on what affects the main price, but on the freight rates in that particular county and also on the man who is making the contracts in that particular county.

Mr. POWER: It varies with the man who is making the contracts.

[Mr. Michaud.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course the government cannot look after all that, but there is a general scale in the market that is now being talked about, that is, the American market. It costs just so much to get into that market, and it should be no hardship to the Canadian manufacturer to take that pulpwood without the cost of the freight.

Mr. EVANS: What is the real purpose of prohibiting the export of pulpwood?

Mr. FIELDING: It is argued that the forests are becoming destroyed, that we need to put on some general restrictions, and particularly that this is a very valuable article that we need at home. There is much to be said on both sides of the question, but generally speaking the argument is that we should use it at home instead of exporting it. I am giving the current view on the subject; just how far we may act on this resolution is a question that remains to be considered.

Mr. EVANS: There are two sides to the question. One is that we are asked to prohibit the exportation of pulpwood in order to preserve our forests.

Mr. FIELDING: Anything which diminishes the cut.

Mr EVANS: But we ignore the very element that is laying bare millions of acres of our forests every year, something that is quite preventable, and that is fire. In prohibiting the export of pulpwood we give a monopoly to our own manufacturers and enable them to fix a price. They are the only ones who will benefit. The result will not be to preserve our forests; there will be none the less wood cut; there will be no less devastation of the forest areas. We may bring in more pulp and paper companies from foreign lands, or we may cause more paper mills to be established by people in our country, but our forests will not be preserved. What does the minister propose in order to give fair play to those who are now owners of pulpwood? Take the case of the farmer who cuts a little pulpwood to keep the pot boiling during the winter; is he to be at the mercy of one concern, one combine in Canada, so far as the price of his wood is concerned? Who is going to regulate the matter? There might be a great unfairness in this proposed legislation. A little while ago we talked about giving some advantage to our newspaper proprietors or to our Canadian magazines, but it seems to me that this provision is bound to increase even more largely the cost to every paper user in Canada. I repeat that this provision will not bring about any greater preservation of our forests. If we want to conserve our forests we had better get after the fires.

Mr. MacLAREN: I notice that the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) holds the view that should an embargo be placed upon the export of pulpwood the opportunity of the sale of that wood would be lost to many of our farmers; and I suppose that applied more particularly to the county of Gaspé. The hon. member must disregard the market that is now available in Canada. I cannot quite see how he entertains the view that the placing of an embargo on the export of pulpwood would result in substantially the elimination of the market. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure): If you bar out the American purchaser our farmers will be at the mercy of the Canadian paper makers, who will pay any price they like. Gaspé is far removed from Toronto and other places where they have mills, and our railway accommodation is very poor. The result of any such embargo as is proposed might cause those engaged in this industry to flock into the cities or go to the United States, as they are doing even now.

Mr. MacLAREN: I must confess I do not share that outlook. First of all, if the embargo is put on there will still be the market as it exists to-day; there will be an increased market, as I believe. The paper mills will increase their output for sale in this country rather than for export and manufacture into paper across the line. The hon. member for Bonaventure says there will be a lack of competition and therefore a low price for the pulpwood. I think there are too many pulp mills in Canada to-day to admit of any fixed price. The putting on of an embargo will increase the number of our pulp factories; it will prevent the establishing of any set price, and will lead to competition as it does in any other industry. At the present time I presume that the hon. member for Bonaventure would not suggest that there is a combine among the pulp mills in Canada. Still less is it likely to be the case in the future when there will be an increase in the number of pulp factories.

Mr. LEGER: I would draw the attention of the minister to the situation in our part of the country. In the county which I represent most of the land is Crown land. The farmers have wood on their land and almost every year cut a certain number of cords of pulpwood which they offer for sale in the best market. For the last few years we have had to ship our pulpwood to the United States. In the latter part of last summer right in the little town where I live there were over two thousand cords shipped to the United States by water. These people are poor and have to work hard and I do not think we should deprive them of this chance to sell a few cords of pulpwood in the best market and if the market is not sufficient in our part of the country they should be allowed the chance to export to the United States. I would therefore ask the minister to reconsider the situation and not to do anything that will place at a disadvantage these poor people who have to work very hard for their living and who are making only a few dollars a year in this way. This measure is certain to cut their living, and I think that it should not be made applicable to pulpwood on Crown lands.

Mr. FORTIER: I want to support the views expressed by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). The settlers in the constituency which I represent will certainly suffer if this measure goes into effect. There is probably a remark that should be made as to the different kinds of pulpwood that can be cut. It has been said by a previous speaker that the mills in Canada would buy all the pulpwood of our forests. For spruce and balsam there is a good local market I am told, but for poplar and basswood there is no market in this country or a very restricted market, and if this prohibition of export goes into effect the settlers will certainly suffer and not be in a position to sell all the pulpwood on their farms. Consequently I trust that the resolution will not be carried into effect.

Mr. MANION: I should like to say a few words in support of the resolution because I believe that generally speaking it is worth trying. It is quite possible that the point made by my hon. friend from Saskatoon may have to be taken into consideration later, and that is one of the reasons why I believe the matter is better left in the hands of the Governor in Council, because if it was found that the farmer was really suffering because of this restriction on the export of pulpwood he should get consideration. I think that would be the desire of everybody. But we must not forget that the real market for pulp and paper is in the United States. Last year our exports of pulp, paper and forest products to the United States amounted to something like $200,000,000, and the competition for pulpwood will go on even though the export of pulpwood is discontinued. I made it my business recently because my part of the country is very much interested in this matter—we have many pulp and paper mills there, and the farmers are cutting and selling pulpwood from their land just as they are in the county of Bonaventure and other sections of the country that have been spoken of—I made it my business to make certain inquiries among those in a position to know and the general opinion was that if the export of pulpwood is prohibited the price will not decrease, because the internal competition among the mills is sufficient to keep prices to about the same level as at present. Yet if it were found that that was not the case and that the farmers were being injured by the fact that export was prohibited it would be a wise precaution on the part of the government to protect the farmer to that extent. But I am influenced more by the articles of Mr. Frank Barnjum. I have had the privilege of reading many of his articles for a long period now, and he knows the pulp and paper business I believe from the bottom up. I believe that he is absolutely sincere in making a stand at his own expense in the interests of the forests of this country. He has not only told us in his writings but I have had the pleasure of having him tell me personally on a number of occasions that one of the greatest cures for the depletion of our forests is this very action that the minister proposes to take. I did not know that the minister was going to bring in this resolution. I had not seen any notice to that effect, and I had intended putting a resolution on the order paper next year along similar lines myself for the good of the country. I repeat, if we find that the farmers are suffering because of an order of this kind I believe that the prohibition of export should be taken off, but in the meantime I think that the minister is bringing forward legislation which should be supported by this House and be given a fair trial.

Mr. POWER: I rise to oppose this resolution. I may say at the outset that I am somewhat interested in that should the resolution pass my somewhat attenuated pocketbook will be still further attenuated. I may say also in order to be perfectly frank with the House that if they consider that my judgment is not altogether disinterested they may at any rate give me credit for some knowledge of the question that is being discussed.

[Mr. Manion.]

In the province of Quebec and in the province of Ontario at the present time the exportation of pulpwood from Crown lands is prohibited. This measure will have for effect the prohibition of the exportation of pulpwood cut from off private lands, that is, 11 p.m. lands held in fee simple, lands the entire property of which is vested in the owner. As the House is aware under the laws of Ontario, and I think notably in the province of Quebec certain very large tracts of timber lands are held under what is called license. The license amounts to a lease for which a yearly rental is paid, and this lease is practically everlasting provided the lessee fulfils his obligations and pays his rent. But what this measure aims at is to take control of the timber belonging to the owner of the land. It is just as if the government were to say to some of my Progressive friends from the West: Every bushel of wheat which you grow on your farms must be sold in Canada to the Canadian millers. I ask the government to tell us why there should be a discrimination between the farmer and the holder of timber lands. Take a farmer on one lot and alongside of him a man who owns a timber lot. The farmer may export to the four corners of the globe. The owner of the timber may only sell to five, six, ten or fifteen paper companies, most of whom have timber limits extending over an area of many miles and if the price does not suit them they can cut their own timber. Should this legislation go into force I foresee that the price of pulpwood in Quebec, at any rate, and I should imagine in Ontario, will hardly pay for the cost of taking it out of the bush. It has been said I think that arrangements are to be made to exempt the farmer from this prohibition. How these regulations are to be made has not been explained to me, nor do I quite conceive of any means to be taken by the government to make such regulations. For instance, they say that a man who owns 100 acres of timber land is a farmer, and the man who owns 1,000 acres is not a farmer.

We have in Quebec seigneurial lands, some of them held since the early days of the French colonies, granted by the Kings of France. In 1854, it is true, a great many of the feudal rights of these seigneurs were taken away, but even at that time compensation was given, and it was not thought proper to destroy the rights of ownership in the holdings of the seigneurs. These lands are held in some cases by the same family; in other cases they have been transferred from one to another for two or three centuries, and they will be affected by this regulation. In some cases these seigneurs are farming their own lands, but they may have so many acres of timber lands held in fee simple. They may be farmers. Are the government going to say that because a man has more than 200 acres he shall not be treated as a farmer? Are they going to take away from these men rights which have been held for generations? To give an example of the manner in which some of these seigneurs have carried on their business, I quote the Seigneur of Lotbiniere, in the county of my hon. friend from Lotbiniere. The De Lotbiniere family have been there for a number of generations. The late governor, I think, of British Columbia, Sir Henry Joly de Lotbiniere, took a great interest in reforestation and forestry questions. He set to work many years ago, and planted trees all over the estate, brought experts over from Germany and other countries in Europe; so that to-day he has a very fine estate, and the land is worth a great deal of money. Is it fair or just for this government to simply, by a stroke of the pen, say to the present owner of this estate, "You may not export this timber" and thus diminish the value of the seigneury by about one-fourth? I submit it practically means confiscation. It is neither fair, just nor right.

It has been said we are taking this step to preserve our forests, yet, if I understand the meaning of the minister aright, we are to allow the settlers to continue to ship the pulpwood which they cut to the United States but we are to prevent the seigneurs and other freeholders from doing so. Without having the figures before me I will venture to suggest to the government that at least 60 per cent of the pulpwood which is now being exported to the United States is being exported from the settlers' land. In a great majority of cases large companies or other people who own freehold lands have been very careful about getting rid of them because they have a considerable value owing to the very fact that pulpwood can be exported and with very few exceptions they have been carrying on reforestation and endeavouring, as it were, to farm their holdings. In view of the fact that within the last two or three weeks the eastern provinces have been devastated by vast conflagrations, and in view of the fact that the timber which was affected thereby must be cut next winter, otherwise it will have to rot in the bush, we will find in the spring of 1924 large quantities of pulpwood on the market. If I would be allowed to make a suggestion to the provincial governments of Quebec, Ontario, and New Brunswick, I would say that, instead of prohibiting the exportation, they should permit the exportation of pulpwood to the United States, at least for two or three years, in order to stabilize the pulpwood market; so that this timber which has been destroyed, or partially so, by fire and which will be eventually destroyed unless it is cut within one year may be exported to the United States and that the price will be, at least, sufficient to cover the cost of cutting down and taking it to the railways.

There is another phase of the situation. We have in this House, and particularly on this side of the House, been talking about and arguing at great length for freer trade, and for doing away with the barriers of trade, asking that we be given a chance to go into the American market. Here we are putting up, not a tariff but a Chinese wall, which prevents us selling to the American market. I submit we are inconsistent, and that we are not carrying out our programme, our platform and our promises. Should such legislation be passed, we will be denying the very principles on which we are supposed to stand and we will be going back on everything the Liberal party holds sacred.

There is another phase of the situation. During the war and shortly afterwards I remember the chamber in the Victoria Museum building ringing with vehement utterances in which we decried government by order in council. Is there any more striking example of government by order in council than this resolution which is being brought down?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. POWER: We have a blanket resolution which tells us nothing, and simply says that regulations will be made regarding pulpwood. I have every confidence in the government but I am sorry to say it must have been badly advised when it brought down this resolution. I have no doubt the time has come when a commission should be appointed to study the question. I have no objection to a commission, I think it would be a good thing. The people of this country have much to learn with regard to pulpwood and its exportation. Let us appoint a commission and let them make a full study of the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Does the hon. member know of any potential commissioners who are still at large?

Mr. POWER: No, but if the hon. member will give me the names of any I may recommend them. If the government announces its intention of naming a commission, there will be no difficulty in finding the commissioners. Let the government make a full and complete study of the question and if, after a study of the question, the commission brings in a report that the exportation of pulpwood shall be prohibited, I think the majority of the people will be willing to back up that statement, but until such time as the government has fuller information than it has, and until such time as this House has full information, I submit we should not enter hastily into any such legislation as that now before us.

Mr. BAXTER: This subject requires I think and will obtain the most careful consideration of this committee. I want to say something from the standpoint of the province of New Brunswick. I do not pretend to know the whole lumber or pulpwood situation in New Brunswick; but I can say to members of the House that, as in Quebec, there are the government lands which have unfortunately been most disastrously ravaged, first by the bud worm and in the last two weeks by fire. Our resources in that respect are considerably affected, and the government of that province must be seriously concerned with the question of what policy it shall adopt. We have also privately owned lands. For some reason the policy of New Brunswick has been to prohibit the export of pulpwood cut from government limits; but that prohibition has not been and, perhaps, could not be applied to privately owned lands, on all production of privately owned lands where there is not enough to support one pulp mill, because to impose a prohibition of exportation in absolute terms, would be really to throw people into the hands of local buyers. The government of New Brunswick has not compelled that course to be taken. Where an owner of freehold lands has also been a leaseholder from the province, the government has permitted him to export from Crown lands a quantity equal to that which he might have taken off his privately-owned lands, but so that the total quantity would not be greater than that which he sent out of the province. It was necessary to pursue a course of that kind. The policy I speak of is the one which was first adopted by New Brunswick. Then a succeeding government prohibited the exportation absolutely, and they had to come back to the original proposition because of the extreme difficulty of adjusting the pulpwood business.

Under these circumstances, I think legislation by order in council or directly requires the very closest co-operation and concurrence of the provincial governments. This, I think I may say, is a matter of vital importance to the government of New Brunswick as regards revenue. I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will say to me that his government will take all these things into consideratiton. But may I ask: When will they do this? Between now possibly and the next session of parliament. But is it to be expected that any regulations in the nature of absolute prohibition would be brought into effect so quickly as that? Would not a period of time be given to allow the very serious readjustment which must take place of people's business? I would say that an anticipatory note of at least a year would only be fair, and yet I want to see every bit of forest value preserved for the people of this country. So far as the legislation is in that direction, it has my sympathy and it should have my support; but I want it to be brought into operation in such a way as to cause just as little dislocation of industry as possible. Therefore, I think I am right in assuming, and I think the minister will be one of the first in the House to concede that a change of the character ought not to be brought into effect instantaneously or with a notice of only two or three months. If that is conceded, I accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power), which I think has great merit, that there should be a commission. I understand the minister is favourable to that. As regards naming commissioners, I do not think that there will be the slightest difficulty in obtaining them without resort to the ranks of party supporters on any of the three sides of this triangular House. One name, that of Mr. Frank Barnjum, stands out pre-eminently. He is a man who has spent a great deal of his money and who has devoted his energy to the work of endeavouring to preserve to the people of Canada that heritage which they possess in standing timber. A man of that character with another similar to him, associated with him, could give a report that would be of value, and it would come in quite time enough if we had it at the next session of parliament. I am not going to inveigh any more strongly than my hon. friend (Mr. Power) has just done, against government by order in council. It is sufficient that the emergency of war has passed, and I think all parties agree that there should be as little government by order in council as there may be. Very much of the administration of the government of the country must be conducted by order in council; but when we come to a matter of such great importance as this, to a complete change of policy, I do not think it would be out of the way to ask that a definite measure should be laid before and receive the sanction of parliament. Reading this resolution, how do I know, how does any other hon. member know whether this is a move—and it might be a right and proper move—on the part of the Minister of Finance in the direction of bargaining with the United States? It may be simply intended to force them to better terms with regard to their tariff. I would not reprobate it if it were for that purpose. Perhaps the minister cannot state that very publicly, and I would possibly vote for it if that element were in it. On the other hand, how do I know that with the comparatively limited view of the subject that must be taken in government circles, immense injury might not be done, not only to private interests, but to public interests in the provinces which would be principally affected? Therefore I say, before anything is done, there ought to be first a proper investigation. If that investigation is made by competent men and if the recommendation seems at all suitable to the conditions which they find, those recommendations ought, if possible, to be accepted by this House. But even before that, there ought to be an opportunity for discussion, for proper representation, for consideration, before we enter upon this thing which, however praiseworthy it may be in itself, may very easily lead to an absolute dislocation of a very important branch of industry, may stop employment, may drive people to the wall, and may seriously impair in the province from which I come the very funds upon which the government must rely in order to carry on the everyday business of that province. Therefore I join the hon. member for Quebec South in pressing, so far as I may do so, upon the minister the advisability of proceeding now by commission and letting the result of that commission come before the next session of parliament. Then let us have a government policy which will be clear and distinct, which we can debate here and to which, if we see any objection, we can suggest amendments, and perhaps suggest to the government some better course which will do good to all and harm to none.

Mr. LOVETT: I must congratulate the government on the resolution now before the committee dealing with the question of an embargo on pulpwood.

In the recent budget debate, I spoke at some length on the subject of forest conservation; but I wish again to urge on hon. members of this House the great necessity of immediate and drastic steps being taken to conserve our forest wealth, and as a means to this end, to support this resolution which empowers the government to take prompt action.

No element of consideration for what is considered individual rights of the estimated two per cent of Canadian farmers who wish to export pulpwood from Canada should be allowed to blur our vision or influence the hon. members of this House on whom rests the grave responsibility of safeguarding our national interests. This is not a matter of the moment; it is not a matter of respecting minority rights; it is a matter which makes for the weal or woe of Canada in the future. And in the light of clarified vision which will surely come in the future on this question, the parliament of 1923 will either in the future appear as the protector and preserver of Canada's great forest wealth or it will be blackened by its failure to act decisively and promptly in what must be considered a serious situation. We have often heard the argument advanced that the restriction of pulpwood export is a violation of individual rights and liberties.. In answer to this argument let me say that all laws for the benefit of a country as a whole must infringe on personal liberty. Where would this or any other country be if individual liberty of action were not controlled by laws when that action was detrimental to the general good? As well might one say that we should not control the personal liberty of our fishermen by establishing fishing seasons, or of our huntsmen by defining hunting seasons, as well as to say that we should allow pulpwood to be cut from fee lands at the owner's will regardless of the loss to the country as a whole. All are natural resources and as such can never be wholly individually controlled. An embargo on the exporting of pulpwood cut on fee land might apparently work hardships on a small percentage of the estimated farmers who wish to export it but ultimately it would result in public good by forcing pulp and paper companies to locate in Canada, thus increasing the home market for their products, both forest and agricultural and increasing the chances of employment for their children, capitalized industries sharing the weight of taxation under which Canadians labour to-day and will labour for some time to come.

Other countries, notably Norway, Sweden and Finland, the very countries which our Canadians meet as competitors for the world's trade in pulp and paper products have not hesitated to prohibit the export of pulpwood, and these great industrial countries are looking upon Canada with amazement that for a few petty obstacles she is acting the spendthrift with her forest wealth

The United States' capitalists whose business acumen is undoubted will accept this embargo as an evidence of ordinary business sense and already they are preparing for it by buying large tracts of available pulp lands; and they will locate plants here for the manufacture of raw material unless they are still allowed to get it out of the country to be manufactured into the finished article by their own workmen. It is estimated that the United States have only enough timber of their own to supply their mills for five or at most ten years. Are our Canadian forests to be depleted as under present conditions they surely will be by the United States while that country's supply is conserved? These are facts. Let me recite some of them. The original virgin forests of the United States amounted to 830,000,000 acres; at the present time they have only 130,000,000 acres. Their annual deforested areas from all causes total 26,000,000 acres. The United States depends on Canada for 50 per cent of its newsprint and 30 per cent of its pulp. Canada exports yearly of pulpwood 5,000,000 cords. Forest fires in Canada last year totalled 5,000 while the ravages of the bud worm destroyed 150,000,000 cords. The capital invested in Canada in pulp and paper industries approximates $380,000,000, with a yearly productive value of $200,000,000, providing employment for 30,000 people, with wages amounting to $28,000,000. The industry uses 644,805 horsepower or nearly one-third of the developed hydraulic resources of Canada. It is estimated that some of our large pulp and paper plants in Canada have barely five years' supply of wood in sight. In 1920, of Canada's cut of pulpwood, 31 per cent was exported to the value of $16,000,000. If exported as manufactured pulp instead of raw wood, the value would have been $84,000,000 and exported as paper, it would have been $105,000,000. If the collected data of indisputable facts can not convince us of the seriousness of the situation we must admit that as in olden times the Heavens have displayed signs of warning. The dense pall of smoke that has hung over Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific during the past few weeks, pervading even this building, is indubitable evidence of the wiping out of our forests, and their approaching extermination if every possible method is not applied, and quickly applied, to stem this devastation. We must recognize these facts. Our commercial and agricultural prosperity will largely vanish with our forests; our hydraulic powers will be diminished; our farming country will be left bare and arid; our pulp and paper industries forced out of existence by lack of raw material, while Canadian money invested in these industries will be lost. More than that, the exodus of our population in search of employment will be greater. Our game and fur-bearing animals, a source of great wealth to Canada, will be homeless and will disappear, and Canada, the land of primeval forests with their priceless value will be a tragic monument to the blunders of its legislators. This is not a party problem and we should not so consider it. It is far above the realm of party. It reaches down to the very foundation of Canada's national existence, and the way in which we solve it means our continuance as a prosperous people or our speedy retrogression into national bankruptcy. It has been truly said that a dying forest means a dying nation. Let me urge hon. members of all parties in this House to disregard any local situation that may influence their action and support this resolution which authorizes immediate and effective action for the preservation of our forests.

[Mr. Lovett.]

Mr. McBRIDE: I am fully in sympathy with the resolution. If the people of Canada do not look after their own interests and protect their forests, who will? Last fall I was up in the Cariboo country and I saw a lot of men working in the timber. I went over and found about two hundred Japs cutting our forest down. They were towing the logs down to Vancouver and putting them aboard Japanese ships for Japan. What was Canada receiving from her forests? Absolutely nothing.

Mr. POWER: Was this in the form of logs?

Mr. McBRIDE: I said logs.

Mr. POWER: This resolution covers pulpwood only.

Mr. McBRIDE: Well, what is pulpwood but logs cut into small portions? I have seen in British Columbia the finest logs ever taken out for pulpwood. You do not grow the class of timber down here that we grow in British Columbia. Some years ago I noticed that on every dollar's worth of manufactured goods shipped out of the United States 85 per cent represented labour, while for every dollar's worth shipped out of Canada only 10 per cent represented labour. It is about time that we manufactured our natural resources and got the utmost out of them. If this pulpwood exportation is stopped it will only be a few years before the American concerns will be establishing factories on the Canadian side of the line and giving employment to our people; and that is what we want.

Mr. DICKIE: I endorse the remarks of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. McBride). I think it is time we also drew the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) to the exportation of raw material from British Columbia in the form of logs. Ruthless destruction of our forests is proceeding and in another generation the forests of Vancouver island will pretty well have disappeared. I have seen one of the grandest forest areas of America wiped out in one generation,—the forest area of the state of Michigan is now a farming country. We do not want our potentialities to be wasted without getting some proper return. I do not think we fully realize what we lose by the exportation of pulpwood. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken quoted some figures. I have other figures which I think will prove conclusively that it is time we did something.

In 1920, 31 per cent of our pulpwood was exported for which we received in round numbers, $16,000,000. We exported 28 per cent as pulp with a value of $76,000,000; 25 per cent as paper worth $87,000,000. Had the $16,000,000 worth of pulpwood exported—been converted into pulp, it would have had a value of $84,000,000; if into paper, $105,000,000,—making a loss to labour, to capital and to Canada of from $68,000,000 to $89,000,000 in one year.

Surely, Sir, this exportation of raw material is the acme of economic folly. In 1921 we produced 2,180,578 cords of pulpwood which were converted into pulp and paper worth $108,677,520. We exported 1,902,533 cords of pulpwood to the United States for which we received only $14,617,610. "And so the play goes on." The folly of it must be apparent to all honourable members.

In Canada we have invested in pulp and paper plants $380,000,000 and an army of men are employed. Why not keep all raw material at home and with it another capable army of men that is leaving for the United States following our raw products to engage in their manufacture. They are following our raw products just as they are following our $172,000,000 which constitute our adverse trade balance with our American neighbours. We are being bled white by our neighbours. Certainly no company would conduct business along these lines, and no country can persist in doing so and not precipitate national disaster. The cry of the world is for lumber and paper. Let us take full advantage of our splendid opportunities and aim for maximum results. Despite substitutes, the demand for lumber is continually increasing. Yet, Sir, we of British Columbia sit idly by while immense booms of our saw logs are being towed across the line to the state of Washington and our men are following to work in the mills of that state.

It is time we awoke to the necessity of doing something. It is said that if we prohibit the export of pulpwood the Americans might retaliate by placing an embargo on anthracite. I think if we got our house in order this is the best thing that could happen. In Alberta we have immense areas of coal which even at present prices would make it good policy for Ontario to buy in preference to looking to Pennsylvania for her fuel requirements. In British Columbia we also have immense coal areas, but it is out of the question to ship our coal so far east as Ontario. In Nova Scotia there are also immense supplies of coal available which could be placed on the market in Ontario at a price just as cheap as that charged for American coal. Why not burn Canadian coal and so save the many millions of dollars that we pay the Americans every year?

We send our pulpwood over to the American side and our men follow to engage in the work of manufacturing it into paper, which is worth many times more than the raw material. We are simply throwing ourselves into the arms of those people who say, "We do not want a pound of your butter unless you pay an import tax of eight cents a pound." At the same time we allow their butter to come into Canada on payment of a duty of only four cents a pound. Why turn our cheek to these people? For every cord of pulpwood that goes over there we may say that six dollars is lost in labour for every dollar that comes into this country. When we consider that we are losing from $70,000,000 to $90,000,000 by the exportation of pulpwood, is it not time that we quit temporizing and took a bold stand even if somebody has to suffer? And somebody must suffer, but we can easily recompense the five hundred farmers or so who may be hurt by the prohibition of the export of pulpwood. I would impress on the minister the urgent necessity of looking into the exportation of saw-logs from British Columbia. There, by adroit legislation, we have what amounts to an export tax on all timber cut in the country on privately-owned land, but if the wood is worked up in sawmills the tax is remitted. I think the tax runs to about $1.50 per thousand, but that is not sufficient to repay the national loss. We have many American companies operating in British Columbia, and I know one institution that has spent over a million dollars on a logging railroad. Every log from that camp is sent across to the American side and our men are following the logs to work in the American mills.

How can we expect to succeed unless we take a bold step? Let us use our own coal and manufacture our own forest wealth, and see if we cannot set an example to the world of a country that does not have to tell its people: We cannot pay our way year by year.

Mr. LEGER: In my part of the country the people cut most of their wood in the month of June, and therefore if this prohibition of export went into effect at once it would mean a great loss to them. As they are dependent on the returns from their wood to pay their taxes and expenses, I trust the government will defer putting this proposed legislation into effect for this season, so that the people I have referred to may have sufficient time to become acquainted with the regulations and act in accordance therewith.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am entirely in accord with any effective steps that may be taken to preserve our timber supply,and I think something along the lines of this resolution is necessary as one of those effective steps. But I do not think it will get us very far alone, it must be part of a much more comprehensive policy. In the matter of principle I associate myself very earnestly with the views expressed by my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. Dickie). Indeed, I believe that the law and the prophets is pretty much in his words. I am of course compelled to admit that his sentiments, while good horse business sense for this Dominion, are sadly out of harmony with those idealistic principles of free trade which we once heard so frequently from hon. gentlemen opposite, but which we now hear no more. I had some sympathy with the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) when he displayed an abhorrence of broken pledges and principles and showed that in its every feature this was a violation of those things for which his party was professing, and had in the past very emphatically professed, to stand, and which it yet proclaims as some beautiful ideal that it loves but is sorry that it cannot reach much sooner; all the while it is moving directly the other way. I know they have to fly in the face of every profession to pass this legislation. There is only this to be said: They must always do this if we are ever to get any sensible legislation. We must either do without the government or do without the sensible legislation. But my objection to this resolution is mainly another urged by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power). It is not legislation at all. It does not even foreshadow legislation; it is simply a proclamation of the government to the House of inability to frame legislation. They say: We cannot bring any legislation before you; we cannot work it out; we have not any policy, but if you will give us the summer we will try to frame something, and we want authority now from the House to make it legislation. In other words, they say: We who almost destroyed our vocal organs for years denouncing order in council government come here and ask for power to pass any orders on earth respecting this new form of policy. Nor is this bill different from any other bill. The hon. member for Quebec South thought this perhaps the most audacious yet offered to get order in council powers, but it is not a particle worse than the last bill. In the worst days of the war—and war times are very different from peace times—powers of this kind were not asked for save on matters directly concerning the prosecution of the war.

Mr. POWER: What about the Grand Trunk?

Mr. MEIGHEN: As to the Grand Trunk, we came down with all the conditions, all the principles affecting the legislation.

Mr. POWER: By order in council.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, in the bill. Look at the act. Look at the Canadian National Railway Act; look at the Grand Trunk Acquirement Act.

Mr. POWER: Was not the acquisition accomplished by order in council?

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, not at all. Why, the Grand Trunk Pacific was laid at our door, pitched at us by the management. They wrote us a letter on the third of May and told us that on the tenth of May they would be out of business.

Mr. POWER: The right hon. gentleman is right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly I am right. In acquiring the Grand Trunk we asked parliament for all the powers and stated the terms upon which the road would be acquired. Had we proceeded as I will describe in a moment, we would have followed the course adopted here now. Had we brought in a resolution which read as follows: The Governor in Council may acquire the Grand Trunk railway upon such terms and conditions and at such price as may be fixed and according to such regulations as may be passed by the Governor in Council,—that is the resolution we would have introduced had we followed the course this government is following in introducing this resolution; nor would it have been a bit more audacious. Look at the Grand Trunk Acquirement Act and compare it with this. There is nothing left to regulation except the merest detail. The whole principle of acquirement, the terms of acquirement—everything is there. That is what the government ought to have here. That is legislation; this is not legislation at all. It is merely a flouting of parliament, by those who were supposed to be rescuing the country from the evils of order in council government, by those who were going to bring back the days of control by legislation. What control is parliament going to have here? The government may do something or it may not. If it does anything, it may do it on whatever terms it likes. It may exempt whomever it likes; it may bring within the circle of the legislation whomever it likes. It may bring one province in and let another province out; there is nothing it may not do if legislation following this resolution passes. Again I say this is not foreshadowing legislation; it is merely asking for a blank cheque from the House of Commons that the government may pass what legislation it may deem wise or expedient for itself later on. It is to be expected that those who talk the loudest about the return to control by parliament are those who act the most defiantly in the very face of parliament when they are in power. I protest against that feature of the resolution and I ask the government to come down with a bill stating upon what terms they propose to prevent the exportation of pulpwood. If the terms are reasonable, I will support them. I am in favour of the principle. I know there are some who will be injured by it, but the individual interest, subject perhaps to proper compensation, must needs bow to the general good. I say I am in favour of the principle, but I ask for legislation. I do not like being asked day after day, sometimes half-a-dozen times a day, simply to sign a parliamentary cheque to an administration which hopes at some later time to be able actually to evolve a bill.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 242, to amend the Export Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BOARD OF AUDIT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide:

1. That the Governor in Council may appoint a Board of Audit to hold office until the first day of July, 1925, and to be composed of four members, one of whom shall be the Auditor General, one the Deputy Minister of Finance, and the remaining two members shall be public accountants of high standing;

2. That the public accountants, members of the said board, may be paid for their services such reasonable sums, not exceeding $3,000 each, in any one year as the Treasury Board may allow; and that the Treasury Board may allow the payment, out of any available appropriation, of necessary amounts for skilled assistants engaged by the Board;

3. That the said board shall have the following duties and powers:

(a) to inquire into and report upon the present system of audit of the public revenue and expenditure of Canada and to make recommendations for the more effective control of the same;

(b) to inquire into the systems of accounting employed by the Canadian National Railway Company and its constituent companies and any commission or other public body whose operations are carried on by appropriations from the treasury, and such other undertakings or services belonging to or receiving aid from the government of Canada as the Minister of Finance may direct, and to make recommendations with respect thereto;

4. That the members of the board shall for the purposes of these resolutions have the same power as is given to the Auditor General of Canada with respect to the various departments of the Dominion government.

Motion agreed to, and the House went into committee, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On clause 1.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose that in the absence of the Auditor General the Acting Auditor General would be on the board or would there be no representative from the Audit office?

Mr. FIELDING: I anticipate that the appointment of an Auditor General will be made very shortly and the real Auditor General will be the chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2.

Mr. FIELDING: I am not sure that we have been very generous in the allowance for this matter. The men to be appointed while they will not give their whole time it is true would have to be gentlemen of high professional standing, and I suggest that it is possible we may find it necessary at a later session to ask for some extension of this amount.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would suggest that my friend put it in now if he thinks it is necessary. We want to get results.

Mr. FIELDING: We could not change it without a special resolution, but I am glad to have the assent of my hon. friend. If we find it necessary we will feel free to enlarge the sum and come to parliament for a supplementary vote.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What I am anxious for is that we should get real efficiency here. It is something much overdue, and I would like to help my friend in getting a really effective instrument.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think the failure to give a larger sum will prevent organization at the start, but I quite agree that we have not been too generous in the sum we have named.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It seems to me it would be better if they were to have the absolute right of inquiring into these systems, but I suppose the line as to the minister's direction is merely intended to apply to other undertakings or services belonging to or receiving aid from the government.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: In other words they must inquire into the system of accounting by the Canadian National Railway Company and its constituent companies and any other commissions or public bodies for which we provide appropriations.

Mr. FIELDING: That is right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And if my hon. friend wants them to do anything else they are to do it.

Mr. FIELDING: Quite right.

Clause agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 243, to constitute a Board of Audit.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 4—Auditor General Chairman.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I was going to ask the minister whether he thinks that should be put in the act or whether it should not be left to him? A great deal would depend, of course, on what he intends to do in connection with the office. I am perfectly free to confess in view of past performances that unless he is intending to bring in new blood I would hesitate to say that the Auditor General should be the chairman of the Board of Audit.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend may be satisfied that there will be nothing wrong in that respect. I am sorry to say that a slight amendment of a purely formal character which I intended to move seems to have been mislaid. I cannot find it among my papers, and I shall be glad to let the bill remain in committee for that purpose. It is of a purely formal character regarding moneys out of appropriations voted. After having passed the various clauses perhaps the chairman will be good enough to hold the bill in committee.

12 m.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend thinks it will be quite all right in connection with the chairmanship. I want to emphasize that we are really looking for changes and improvements and I do not think we could get them under the chairmanship of somebody whose experience is confined to that office as it now is.

Mr. FIELDING: While I have very great respect for the Acting Auditor General who has rendered most admirable service, still I think probably he is not at the time of life when it would be desirable to appoint him Auditor General. Frankly I do not contemplate his appointment. I desire to speak in the highest terms of his services and I may at a later stage request that he receive some recognition.

On section 16—Act not to impair authority of Auditor General.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The effect of section 16 is to make the board advisory?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Perhaps it is just as well to leave it that way, but it means that we get nothing done for this year.

Mr. FIELDING: They may report from time to time.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There is nothing that would give the minister the right to change the authority given by the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act.

Mr. FIELDING: I do not think any changes will be necessary which will require legislative authority. I should think they would be within our executive authority.

Mr. JACOBS: Is it not contemplated they should only be employed for a certain time and then replaced by others?

Mr. FIELDING: No, this is a temporary organization and in a period of two years they should review the whole business, and advise such changes as may be necessary. They are not to audit any particular accounts but to review the audit system. It applies to the whole system generally, and I think it can be done in two years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think the real underlying principle is that we want to have a real audit, rather than to have a mere audit of disbursements. We want a commercial audit of our business, something that will give effect to the pre-audit system, which is the audit system of all properly conducted establishments.

Mr. FIELDING: We want them to inquire into and report on the very things my hon. friend has mentioned.

Section agreed to.

Progress reported.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT

The House again in committee on Bill No. 117 to amend the Insurance Act.

Mr. FIELDING: This bill was practically disposed of in committee, except that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Baxter) offered a suggestion by way of amendment which we thought we should consider. The matter has received consideration, the Superintendent of Insurance has conferred with the hon. member for St. John, and an amendment has been suggested in which I entirely concur, I now ask the committee to receive it.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment submitted by the hon. member for St. John appears on the last page of the bill. It will be section 6, and reads as follows:

> In any case where there has been imperfect compliance with a statutory condition as to the proof of law to be given by the insured, or as to any matter or thing to be done or omitted by the insured after the maturity of the contract, and a consequent forfeiture or avoidance of the insurance in whole or in part, and the court deems it inequitable that the insurance should be forfeited or avoided on that ground, the court may relieve against the forfeiture or avoidance on such term as it may deem just.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 7.

The CHAIRMAN: Section 7 will read as follows:

> No such company shall issue in Canada a valued policy of automobile insurance.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

SENATE AMENDMENTS

Consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. 84, an Act to amend The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907.

Hon. Mr. MURDOCK (Minister of Labour) moved:

> That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House disagrees to their amendments to Bill No. 84, an act to amend the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, for reasons that the said amendments defeat the objects aimed at in the bill and would complicate rather than simplify procedure.

He said: This bill as originally introduced into the House of Commons had as its object the amendment of sections 15, 27 and 58. No new features were proposed, the amendments seeking simply to convey more clearly the intent of those sections as they had been generally understood; also in the case of section 58 a specific penalty was provided for an offence with regard to which in the statute as it had stood a penalty was implied but not stated. The principal amendment was that whereby in section 57 it is provided that where employer or workmen intend or desire to make a change in wages or hours "it shall be unlawful for the employer to make effective a proposed change in wages or hours or for the employees to go on strike until the dispute has been finally dealt with by a board and a copy of its report has been delivered through the registrar to both the parties affected." This proposed amendment in no way varies the intent of the clause but makes its meaning indisputable. In the amending bill this same section 57 is further amended by requiring that "the application for the appointment of a board shall be made by the employers or employees proposing the change in wages or hours." Whilst it has seemed clearly the intent of the statute that an application for the establishment of a board should proceed from the party proposing any such change as contemplated, yet this is not expressly stated, and, in the case of the several hundred boards which have been established in the past sixteen or seventeen years, the applications from the employers have been few in number, not, in fact, exceeding more than two or three per cent, a situation which has worked serious injustice to the workmen and has naturally aroused their resentment. Under the amendment proposed by the Minister of Labour when the employer proposed a change it would be his duty to make application for a conciliation board.

The amending bill passed the House of Commons without change. As the bill has been returned to this House, its object with respect to clarification of section 57 is entirely defeated, whilst an additional clause affecting the appointment of the chairman of a board has been added to the bill, which, if accepted, would tend seriously to delay and embarrass those administering the statute. The bill as it is now before parliament leaves section 57 without the clarifying additions proposed in the amending statute, but with a clause added which is quite inconsistent with and contrary in its effect to the main clause, for whereas clause 57 as it now stands provides quite clearly that a change with regard to wages and hours cannot be made effective until any dispute arising has been "dealt with by a board and a copy of its report has been delivered through the registrar to both the parties affected;" yet the proposed amendment of the upper House apparently seeks to have the proposed change effective as soon as the application for a board has been made.

The effect of this portion of the proposed addition to section 57 is therefore to render the whole section contradictory and confusing as between its different paragraphs. The remainder of the clause proposed as supplementary to section 57 adds to the confusion by introducing a reference to the retroactive character of the findings of a board. The reference in question does not actually add to the authority which a conciliation board has always been free to exercise, and, with regard to the declaration contained in the last sentence of the supplementary clause that "on the failure of either party to abide by the decision of the board, the other party may have recourse to a strike or lockout as the case may be," this also in no way increases or extends the rights or powers of the parties to a dispute beyond those which they would in any case possess under the statute. The amendment of the upper House with respect to section 57 would, therefore, have the effect of confusing, complicating and delaying procedure, without bringing compensating benefit of any kind.

The amendment proposed by the upper House with regard to section 8 respecting the appointment of a chairman introduces a new feature. The statute as it stands provides for the selection of a chairman by joint agreement when possible of the other two members of a conciliation board, and requires that, where no agreement is reached, the minister shall make the necessary appointment. In about one-half of several hundred boards which have been established a chairman has been secured by agreement. It had become a general though not invariable practice for the Minister of Labour, when called upon to appoint a chairman, to select a judge, but this practice ceased when two or three years ago the Judges' Act was so amended as to prohibit the acceptance by a judge of the fees ordinarily payable to a chairman or member of a conciliation board. It is true that the Minister of Labour is not under the Judges' Act, as it has been amended, prohibited from asking a judge to act as a chairman, nor is a judge apparently prohibited from accepting a chairmanship; but since fees are no longer payable in such circumstances to a judge, it has not been thought reasonable as a rule to request a judge to undertake the duties involved in a chairmanship; such duties, it will be understood, are frequently of a severe and arduous nature and in nearly all cases are of the highest moment to employers and to large numbers of workmen, as well as frequently to the public. In two cases since the amendment of the Judges' Act, judges have been, however, appointed, once by the Minister of Labour of the late administration and once by the present Minister of Labour, but in the latter case the appointment was made on the joint recommendation of the other board members. In both cases the judges concerned accepted from a sense of public duty; no fees were of course paid them. It may be said that there is every advantage in a chairman being secured by joint agreement and the Minister of Labour appoints a chairman with reluctance. Inquiry shows that this has been the case with most previous ministers. The chances of an agreement are manifestly increased when a chairman is secured by joint request of other board members. The method or system, however, under which different Ministers of Labour have made appointments has not been the subject of any known criticism, and certainly the files contain no communications requesting or suggesting a change in the present practice. The objections to the system laid down in the Senate amendment are obvious. In the first place, the appointment of a chairman by a chief justice, whether the Chief Justice of a province or of the Supreme Court of Canada, would entail inevitable delay. Such delays would be particularly unfortunate since, despite every effort under present procedure, one side or other of the disputing parties is sometimes disposed to object to the time necessarily occupied in procedure. In the second place, a chief justice or other judge cannot possibly be as intimately seized of the nature of the dispute involved and of the particular type therefore of man wanted for the chairmanship as would be the Minister of Labour, who has established the board and has been in touch with details of procedure from its inception. It would be impossible to convey to a judge at a distant point by correspondence, which would of necessity be as a rule by telegraph with consequent expenditure and some danger of inaccuracy, all the particulars which should be properly at hand to enable the judge to reach a correct conclusion as to the type of person apparently best suited for the important duties involved. The judge would exercise his best judgment and the appointment might or might not prove to be a good one. In any case the minister who is charged with the administration of the statute would be freed from responsibility on this most vital aspect of administration and the judges would become involved in the technicalities of departmental procedure. Since a considerable proportion of the disputes dealt with under the statute extend to two or more provinces, the task of naming the chairman of conciliation boards would under the proposed Senate amendment fall most frequently to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who from the nature of his functions may be presumed to be furthest removed from contact with industrial disputes and necessarily therefore the more dependent on the advice of others as to the type of person best suited for a chairman. Despite the high legal and other attainments which a chief justice would undoubtedly possess, it is submitted that, in addition to the complication and delays in procedure which the proposed system of appointing chairmen would entail, the suggested change would be highly detrimental to the successful administration of the statute. I would, therefore, move that the amendments of the Senate be not concurred in.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I was not in at the moment the minister started. Would he tell the committee what he was reading from?

Mr. MURDOCK: A carefully prepared statement indicating the views on the amendments that have been made to Bill No. 84 since it left this House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Indicating whose views?

Mr. MURDOCK: The reader's views.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have no objection to that. I did not know the minister was reading his speech. I thought he was fortifying his position from some real authority. In fact, I rather commend the intiative the minister has shown to-night in being very careful to read his speech.

Mr. JACOBS: Does the right hon. gentleman not consider the Minister of Labour a real authority on labour matters?

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are certain things he is not a real authority on as I am compelled to admit reluctantly.

Mr. JACOBS: In the matter of labour legislation, the right hon. gentleman will admit that the Minister of Labour is a good authority.

Mr. MEIGHEN: As regards legislation he may be a very good workman, I have no doubt. If there is to be a difference between the Senate and the House of Commons in this matter I think I can offer a solution. In general I have no objection to the minister naming the third arbitrator in cases where it is essential that an outside party be named to act in that capacity. I think I may say it has been very general up to a certain time, as set out in the memorandum read by the minister and prepared by himself—well, I do not know that I can say that it was prepared by himself—that the person appointed was a judge. But as the memorandum states, since the time when by statute of this parliament, the judges were forbidden to accept outside remuneration, there has been some difficulty apparently in having judges act in such cases. I want to say very frankly that I do not think there should be any difficulty in having judges act in these matters, and in my opinion the statute should be amended so as to provide that the taking on of work of this kind shall be obligatory on the judge. I believe that the judges of this country to-day receive ample remuneration for the work they do, particularly the county court judges, who formerly did act under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. There are county court judges in this province who have not enough work to keep them—I almost said warm—at the present time, and why they should not be willing to serve the country by officiating as arbitrators under the Industrial Disputes Act I do not know. At the time the bill was passed which prevented their taking extra remuneration for commission work, the judges' salaries were very substantially raised, and if they decline to act in such an appropriate capacity as that of arbitrator under the Industrial Disputes Act then, I ask, why does not the government bring in a measure to make this work a part of the duties of county court judges, or, for that matter, of other judges?

Mr. FIELDING: Can we define their duties?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Of course.

Mr. FIELDING: Are you sure?

Mr. MEIGHEN: We have done so.

Mr. FIELDING: The constitution of the courts is within provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The constitution of the courts is a matter of provincial jurisdiction, of course; but we can add to the duties of the judges. As a matter of fact we have done so. For example, we make the duties of judges obligatory under our Elections Act.

Mr. MARTELL: The constitution and procedure of the courts comes within the jurisdiction of the provinces. The only matter that appertains to federal authority is the appointment of the judges. Does not my hon. friend think that it would be ultra vires for the federal authority to impose extra burdens on any judge?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The first proposition of my hon. friend is right, that the constitution and the procedure of the court are matters of provincial jurisdiction. But as to what a judge shall do is not a matter of procedure nor does it relate to the constitution of the court. Under our Dominion Elections Act and under our Controverted Elections Act, for instance, we assigned duties to judges.

Mr. BUREAU: Within the province.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes, within the province. And we assign duties to the judges under the Criminal Code. In fact, there are statutes galore of this House assigning duties to judges.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend is a clever lawyer. We should like him to explain that point.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I thought I was explaining it. I say that in our Criminal Code we assign duties to the judges.

Mr. MARTELL: The Criminal Code is federal in its constitution.

[Mr. Meighen.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: Certainly, and so is this a matter of federal jurisdiction or we should not be passing it.

Mr. MARTELL: Does that assign duties to judges?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Yes. The regular judges are assigned duties under these various federal statutes, for the purposes designated, and this has been the practice for a great many years. It is immaterial whether or not they are assigned the duties in their function as judges; so long as they are assigned those duties it becomes obligatory on the judges to perform them; and why they should not perform these particular duties, which are pre-eminently of a judicial character, I cannot see. They are the proper persons to perform those duties. If the judges are made eligible I do not object to the minister being given the power to name the third arbitrator. I apprehend that what those who object to the bill in the form in which it passed this House have in mind is that the minister, not being able to appoint judges, will appoint some person whom he wishes to favour or who in his opinion will give a judgment suitable to himself. It is that fear that has no doubt animated the amendments, and we could remove it by making it compulsory on judges to accept this work. I cannot speak for the other House, of course, but it seems to me that it might well be agreed that if this work is made the compulsory duty of judges, the objections which the Senate entertained to the bill as it passed the House of Commons would be removed.

Mr. MARTELL: Does not my hon. friend think it would be advisable in the case of any dispute in a province to let the Governor in Council of the province name the arbitrator, seeing that they would be more familiar with the conditions?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not like the principle of this House passing legislation to enable another government to appoint anyone.

Mr. MARTELL: I was not suggesting that; I was merely asking my hon. friend for his opinion.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, my opinion is in the negative, and I will argue the matter more in detail when a bill of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) comes up. To my mind the right thing to do is to assign these duties to the judges. That done, it seems to me that the basic objection to the legislation would be removed.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I gather from what my right hon. friend says that he assumes that the Senate had in mind in its recommendation that the minister might make a partisan appointment or appoint someone for personal reasons. I think my hon. friend is mistaken in any view that the minister has done anything of the kind, or that the records of the past will show any such thing. If one looks over the list of those appointed as chairmen of boards of arbitration, one will be struck with the circumstance that for the most part the chairmen have been remarkably free from partisan bias.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That would not apply to Alex. Smith.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Alex. Smith is an able lawyer and his part as arbitrator went to show that his selection was a remarkably good one. We can only judge of the worth of appointees by the nature of the service they render, and my hon. friend will find that the chairmen of practically all boards have really given remarkable satisfaction in the generality of cases so far as the discharge of their duties is concerned. It is not for us, I think, to assume what the motives were, but one realizes that in the other Chamber they are inclined to look to the courts for many matters to which we in this House would look to ministers responsible to the House and through the House to the public; and it would be a mistake to get away from that responsibility which ministers of the Crown have to parliament for appointments that are made. There is a large field to draw from apart from the courts. There are many business men of wide experience such, for example, as college professors, and men of the legal and other professions, and there is a very large body of public-spirited persons who take interest in social and economic questions. That whole field is open from which to select chairmen for boards of arbitration. I agree with my right hon. friend that the judges have in many cases made excellent chairmen. In the case of county court judges I think it ought to be made possible to have them selected in any event as chairmen of boards of arbitration; but I certainly would be strongly opposed to giving to the chief justice of a province the naming of the third arbitrator. I think the appointment should remain where it is at present, in the hands of the minister.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion speaks again he will close the debate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: He simply read a memorandum.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. minister, I understand, takes a different position to that taken by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. If any other hon. member desires to speak on the motion he should do so now before the debate is closed.

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (George Etienne Cartier): I heartily concur in the remarks made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Murdock), and submit that the amendments made by the Senate ought not to be accepted. The right hon. leader of the Opposition stated that in some provinces county court judges should act as third arbitrators.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say in some provinces, I said everywhere.

Mr. JACOBS: In the province of Quebec we have no county court judge system; our judiciary are either judges of the superior court or of the circuit court. From my province frequent demands are made on the Department of Justice and the government for the appointment of new judges, our present judges not being able to cope with the work. But the question before the House is whether a judge of the Supreme Court—or as with us in the province of Quebec, a judge of the superior court—should have the appointment of third arbitrator after one has been named by each of the contending parties. I submit that this has a tendency to drag the whole judicial system more or less into the political arena. When we have strife between employers and employees there is always a good deal of tension, and it seems to me that is just the time when the Minister of Labour, a responsible member of the government, should appoint the third arbitrator.

I look with certain misgivings upon the Senate interfering in labour matters to the extent they have done in this particular case. The Senate, as we know, cannot deal with money matters, these being peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the Commons. Now, it seems to me that labour matters are something in which labour is particularly concerned, and consequently I think that an irresponsible body like the Senate ought to have enough wisdom to refrain from interfering.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the hon. member tell us what the Senate should deal with?

Mr. JACOBS: I submit that they ought to be a kind of rubber stamp to concur in the legislation sent up by the Commons in labour matters.

Mr. BUREAU: Order.

Mr. JACOBS: I am not speaking generally, but I think labour matters ought to be peculiarly for the Commons alone to deal with and not an irresponsible body like the Senate. The Minister of Labour in the past has been making these appointments, and there has been no complaint whatever. If any appointment does not meet with the approval of the people, the minister is responsible and, indirectly, the government of which he is a member. Surely that ought to be satisfactory to this House and to the Senate, and I must protest most vigorously against the Senate interfering in labour legislation affecting, as it does, the people.

We have under our constitution three divisions of government—the legislative, the judicial and the administrative. Now, our judges pass upon cases submitted to them, they address juries, they sift evidence, and they give their judgment in accordance with the facts. But when you have a judge mixed up in disputes between capital and labour, where the decision is bound to react upon the judiciary, I say—

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend as a lawyer of many years' standing must know that the law is for the judge while the facts are always for the jury to find.

Mr. JACOBS: I think we can pass that remark off with a laugh. It does not deserve anything better.

Mr. MARTELL: My hon. friend does not know the difference.

Mr. JACOBS: The hon. gentleman probably wished to sidetrack me, and to that extent I think he has succeeded. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am most vigorously opposed to the amendments to this legislation, and would suggest that they be sent back in order that that august body may have another opportunity of pondering the legislation and passing it in the form in which it was first sent up by this House.

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): I am not rising for the purpose of absolutely contradicting my friend, but I have every respect for the gentlemen who constitute the upper Chamber and deprecate their being reflected upon in any way. There was a time in my short life when I was wont to oppose the second Chamber, but my experience as law clerk in the legislative council of Nova Scotia has led me to believe that an upper chamber is absolutely essential. It is the good old English system and I think it is good enough for Canada. All I ask in regard to this particular piece of legislation is this: I am thoroughly in accord with the principle that the judges should have the right to deal with all things that come before them, and if it is necessary to appoint a judge to act as arbitrator in a particular matter, the minister should have that right. The minister should retain the right to appoint an arbitrator where there is a difference of opinion between the employer and employee. The Senate has said that in such cases the tasks should be undertaken by the chief justice in the province concerned. In many cases the chief justice does not know the facts of the case. The minister has an opportunity of knowing all the circumstances. He gets the representations of the employees as well as of the employer, and he is in a position to name a man who should act. I believe that the judges should not have to deal with any controversial matter which may be of political significance. They are appointed to administer justice as between plaintiff and defendant in a civil matter and as between the King and his subjects in a criminal matter, and they should not be called upon to adjudicate in anything of a controversial character. I repeat that the upper chamber is what may be called a sober second thought in the matter of legislation and when they undertake to relieve the adjudicators of this land from dealing with matters which may be of a controversial political character, they are doing the right thing.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Calgary East): I do not wish to make any extended remarks on this amendment, but I desire to oppose it, not merely because the Senate has offered the amendment, or because I think the judges are opposed to labour when they act as arbitrators in matters of labour disputes, but because I think the Labour department, as representing at least to some extent the voters of the country, is surely in a better position to act in this matter than the judges would be. The bill as drawn meets with the approval of organized labour; therefore I oppose the amendment made in this regard and hope the bill will be sent back to the Senate as originally drafted.

Mr. MURDOCK: Mr. Speaker, just one word.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I may inform hon. members that when the Minister of Labour speaks he will close the debate.

Mr. MURDOCK: The department would be glad indeed if it were possible to utilize the services of judges as heretofore. I was rather surprised to hear my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition suggest that we might go back to that desirable system, because it was in 1921 when he led the government that provision was made under which it became impossible thereafter to utilize the services of judges in such cases. We have found that judges are like other working men, like ordinary labourers—no pay, no overtime. In other words, with their regular duties and responsibilities before them and a specific salary for the performance of those duties, they are not willing—and I am not criticising them—to take on additional responsibilities without the additional compensation that is given to a private person who undertakes such extra work. But the amendments made by the upper House to section 57 are the most important, because their effect would be to make section 57 confused and complicated and to delay the procedure connected with the handling of boards of investigation, to say nothing of delay in getting results under the provisions of the act.

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—PRIVILEGE, Mr. MARTELL

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. L. H. MARTELL (Hants): Mr. Speaker, before the House adjourns I wish to rise to a question of privilege. It has been stated in the daily press that a unanimous report has been presented from the Civil Service Committee. I want to say that I never signed that report. So far as the Civil Service of Canada is concerned I am in favour of going back to the Civil Service Act as from 1908.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie King the House adjourned at 12.48 a.m. (Tuesday).

Tuesday, June 26, 1923.

The House met at eleven o'clock.

AGRICULTURAL CONDITIONS

Mr. ANDREW McMASTER (Brome) moved concurrence of the House in the fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh reports of the committee charged with the investigation into agricultural conditions in Canada.

He said: I would just like to ask the House to grant me permission to postpone any remarks I have to offer until I see whether the reports are open to criticism. I take it that informally moving the concurrence of the House in these reports I do not exhaust my right to speak.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): I do not know what the object would be of the House adopting now four reports just recently presented, certainly ill-digested, so far as the House is concerned, if digested or read at all. If legislation is contemplated this session, then there would be some object in a discussion now of the merits of the reports. But if no legislation is in view—and we had the intimation yesterday there was not—it seems to me that we are not using very well the short time that remains in discussing these four reports. I do not make these remarks in any spirit of antagonism to the reports, because I am frank to admit I am doubtful whether I have read them all. I know I have read a good deal of them; but I venture to say that a great number, if not the vast majority in this House, have not read any part of them. I would think it would be better to defer consideration of them, until we were in a position to legislate, if legislation was thought desirable. We are not in such a position now.

Motion agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOUR COMMISSION

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister, for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries) moved that the House go into committee of the whole to-morrow to consider a certain proposed resolution concerning advances to the Corporation of the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

Motion agreed to.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT, 1915, AMENDMENT BILL

On the Notice of Motion:

The Minister of Finance—In Committee of the Whole on Bill No. 230 entitled "An Act to amend The Special War Revenue Act, 1915," the Minister of Finance will move:—

That in section one of this Bill there be inserted after clause (iii) of subsection two the following:—

"and every adhesive stamp affixed to such cheque shall be cancelled by the bank at which the cheque is payable at or before the time of payment."

And he will move:—

That in section six of said Bill, the third paragraph of subsection one of section nineteen BBB be struck out and the following substituted therefor:—

"Provided that the consumption or sales tax specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported; or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax, or on goods imported by a licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax; or on goods imported by a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection (7); or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection seven of this section."

Mr. FIELDING: This is a motion for consideration in committee. It does not call for action at this moment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the usual notice been given of a motion to go into committee on this resolution?

Mr. FIELDING: It will be considered in Committee of Ways and Means. This is a proposed amendment that could be moved in Committee of Ways and Means without notice, but I thought it better to put it on the Order Paper.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It should be moved in committee on the bill.

Mr. FIELDING: I think my right hon. friend is right. It will be taken up in committee after the second reading of the bill, and not in Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It will be pretty hard to keep up with all these amendments to the budget.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We shall have to take some schooling in arithmetic.

Mr. FIELDING: My right hon. friend will recollect that at an earlier stage he asked me how many amendments there would be, and I said as many as were found necessary to make things right.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is no budget to which so many amendments have been necessary as the budget of the present Minister of Finance. It seems to be a matter of continuous amendment throughout the session.

Mr. FIELDING: Every budget which has to deal with such a variety of things will be open to the same comment

Mr. MEIGHEN: There has been the same variety of things covered by budgets for the last twenty years.

Notice of motion stands.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT BILL

House again in Committee on Bill No. 222, to amend the Dominion Lands Act, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 2—Transfer of holders of letters patent in pre-emption and purchased homestead area to another homestead, by provincial certificate.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): At the request of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens), this clause stood, and I did not make any explanation at the time in connection with it. The explanation is that for some considerable time, the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have made representations asking that individuals who have homesteaded in the southern areas known as the drier areas of those provinces be given the privilege of securing a second homestead if they were desirous of doing so, in the northern area of the particular province, where more fertile lands were available. To meet this, we have embodied in this clause a provision that where an individual has had a homestead and has made failure owing to no fault of his own, but rather to climatic conditions that exist in those areas, he be given an opportunity to take a homestead in the northern area of the province under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act. It is necessary that he be armed with the certificate from the provincial government showing that in their opinion he is entitled to consideration. We have confined this matter to the area south of township 31, not including all the district formerly known as the pre-emption area across the two provinces. That is all we propose to do in the matter. I may assure the committee that we propose to make a careful inquiry to make sure that we are not being imposed upon, and to confine our operations absolutely to those who have been unsuccessful in this particular area.

Mr. KELLNER: How does the minister intend to dispose of the lands that are being vacated?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): If the land owned by the individual is unencumbered it will revert to the Crown. This section is designed to cover the case of the individual who has failed in due course and loses the land he homesteaded within the boundary described in this section.

Mr. CALDWELL: If the original homestead is mortgaged does the government propose to assume the obligations in respect of that land?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): No.

Mr. CALDWELL: How is it intended to meet such a situation? If the land reverts to the government, I presume from the minister's answer, it will be unencumbered, but what about the homestead on which there is a mortgage?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): There is no difficulty in relation to the man whose title is clear; but the government will certainly not assume the obligations on encumbered property.

Mr. CALDWELL: I should hope not.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): This is rather for the purpose of assisting the individual who has failed and who has to surrender his homestead. If a man loses his homestead by mortgage or otherwise, we do not assume the responsibility for those obligations, but we assist him to settle in the northern portion of the province rather than have him go out of the country altogether, as unfortunately too many do. A large number of men in such circumstances go South, and this is intended to retain them in Canada.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I certainly favour the working out of a plan for granting second homesteads or, in other words, giving a second opportunity to those who are in the dry areas. The opening up of these dry areas was one among other mistakes of the former government —I mean the next antecedent one in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was then in the same office. The lands were opened up for homesteading when they should not have been, and they have been a source of disappointment and penury ever since. I realize the minister's difficulty in now trying to find some remedy for the consequences of that mistake, but while I fully appreciate that difficulty I do not think he has met it very well. The hon. member for Victoria and Carleton (Mr. Caldwell) mentioned a point which, in my judgment, is not as important as another one that I shall suggest later on. Still it has not been answered. Suppose a man has his homestead in the dry area and it is mortgaged—this can be taken to be the normal condition, for I fancy that if the homestead were not mortgaged that would indicate that the party could not get a mortgage on it; such has been the history of the district, the man would be compelled to mortgage the property if he could—we assume, therefore, that the homestead is mortgaged. This, of course, puts a premium on the individual's leaving and going North. The Government does not get his homestead; it certainly cannot step in and defeat the mortgagee of whatever asset he has in the homestead, little as it may be. Consequently the land will simply be foreclosed and become the property of the mortgagee. The difference between the man who has his land clear and the man who has not such a title to it is that in the one case the government gets the land and in the other the mortgagee gets it. I presume the minister intends to let the fellow with the mortgage have a second homestead, because if he does not then the legislation might as well be wiped out; for I should think that nearly all the homesteads would be mortgaged, and those who have mortgaged and failed are those who need the second homestead. The minister has not said whether he purposes to let those whose land is mortgaged get a second homestead. If he does he is putting the country in the position of losing the first homestead altogether and turning it over to the mortgagee.

The second point is this. It is stated that any one can get a second homestead who has a certificate from the provincial government showing that he has failed at farming through no fault of his own but through adverse circumstances. But the minister has his officers all through the districts; he has homestead inspectors—and I can remember some of the criticism that was offered in regard to the number of them when the vote to pay them was passed. Why should they not report on the condition and history of these homesteads? Why should the provincial government be asked to give any certificate? The provincial government will simply have to appoint another set of officers, putting additional taxation on the people; no other result can follow. They will be obliged to have another set of homestead inspectors to examine all these cases and that means a squadron of them. But even aside from the question of expense to the public, which will be very considerable, it is not right for one government to rest on the responsibility of another, it is not consistent with our system of government at all. This government should use its own judgment on the advice of its officers in this matter as in anything of a similar nature. I suggest to the minister, therefore, that he wipe out that provision. I would rather see something done that removes the question of discretion altogether; in fact I think that otherwise the minister will get into interminable wrangles and utterly inescapable conditions of unfairness and partiality. He cannot help it. Throughout the length and breadth of the country farmers can be selected in hundreds, yes, thousands, who have failed, not through any fault of their own at all, and not in this particular area. Farmers all over Canada have failed because of continual visitations of drought, continual visitations of hail and frost and one misfortune or another; and what answer can the minister give those men who come and say that they are just as entitled to relief as the farmers over there to the west? They will say, "You give relief to these men on this especial ground; very well, apply it to us in the same way." And what answer can the minister give? I have not the least doubt, although none of this area is in the province of Manitoba, that the Manitoba government could certify to hundreds and thousands who have failed through no fault of their own, who perhaps succeeded for a time and now are worth nothing. How can the minister refuse them new homesteads? On these grounds I do not think the minister's relief is an efficient working out of the problem. In my judgment it would have been better to have simply declared certain areas to be homestead areas and then said to those men: Select new homesteads there. In this case, I am free to admit, there would be some unfairness to those outside.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): You would have exactly the same difficulty.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, because those are areas that never should have been opened. And you do not rest upon the favour of a provincial government, you rest simply upon the cold, bald fact that areas were opened that should not have been opened, and you say to the men who went in there "Go and take homesteads somewhere else." Let me repeat; I object to a government shifting its responsibility on to another government. Let it take its own responsibility. But I am free to admit that if ever a government should shift responsibility it is this one.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): The debate so far has brought up a question which I imagine will be discussed on the adoption of the report of the Agricultural Conditions committee—the creation of a national land bank for the relief of the farmers of the West. If that is so, there will have to be some discussion later on in regard to it, and perhaps the Government will announce a policy which, besides allowing farmers to re-homestead, will give them a measure of relief such as the farmers have in the United States, through a national bank credit system with the credit of the nation behind it. So this is only a partial measure. It must go further, it must be supplemented by giving the farmer a better system of credit. This bill really ignores the main issue, which is a land bank system similar to what they have adopted in the United States to enable the farmer to get on his feet financially. We ought to have such a system in this country.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Mr. Chairman, I would remind my hon. friend from South York (Mr. Maclean) that this is not a question of banking.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): It is.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I beg my hon. friend's pardon, it is a question of giving relief to certain areas, whereas the question of banking would cover the whole Dominion.

My right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) states that there are certain well defined areas on which we should offer individuals another choice of a free homestead to give them a fresh start. There is absolutely not a particle of difference in the proposal embodied in this section and what he suggested a moment ago in criticism of this bill. We are told that mistakes were made by former governments. Well, I do not know whether we should criticise former governments for what they have done in this respect. I know I have had a good deal of anxiety in regard to the southern area of Alberta and that in all efforts to alleviate the distress of the people in that territory the two governments have worked hand in hand. It is not suggested that we should put upon the provincial government the responsibility of saying who shall and who shall not have homesteads, but inasmuch as the western provinces are claiming their natural resources, we thought it only right that if any individual was to be given a homestead the provincial government should be informed of the fact. It is for this reason that the provincial government is being brought into the matter at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What is the reason?

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): In every effort that has been made for the alleviation of distress in these areas the two governments have acted together, practically.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I beg my right hon. friend's pardon. As an instance, take the distribution of seed grain.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The two governments have co-operated, I do not object to that; but the Dominion government never acted on the responsibility of the provincial government. The Dominion government, for example, did not give seed grain relief to a man recommended for it by the provincial government.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): I beg my right hon. friend's pardon, they did.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): They did it in Alberta. The practice has been followed for the last six years. Not only that, but relief has been distributed by the provincial officers to the homesteaders.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That may be, but the provincial government does it on its own responsibility. We did not make a condition that the man should be recommended by the provincial government, we took the responsibility ourselves.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): That is the result of what you did do.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, it is not. I think I ought to know.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): For instance, by whose authority did you advance seed grain to a homesteader? True, the provincial government were advancing it to those with unpatented land, but you took the word of the provincial officer, you advanced the amount of grain, your own officer purchased the grain and put it in your elevators. I know what I am talking about.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No. If the minister looks at the law he will see he is mistaken. I administered the act and know what was done. We decided on our own responsibility whether an unpatented homesteader needed seed grain or not, we did not rely upon the recommendation of the provincial government. We made arrangements by passing legislation providing that the banks should advance the money in the first place and we guaranteed five per cent.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So did the province.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Very well. That shows we did not collect it through the province.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): Every application passed through the hands of the provincial authorities. I am speaking of the practice in recent years.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It was not the practice under me.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): But that is aside from the question. By this clause it is simply intended that the provincial government shall be consulted and that we shall accept their certificate.

Mr. MEIGHEN: But you cannot grant a homestead without their certificate.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): We are anxious to have their co-operation to clean up a very difficult situation. I admit everything my right hon. friend has said about the difficulty. It would be very much easier for the government not to do anything at all—and perhaps it would be fairer taking all things into consideration. The very fact that a person who has selected land in this particular territory has made a failure—I admit my right hon. friend's argument—is not a good reason why he should be given a preference over the man who has tried in some other territory and has made a like failure. But we have a difficult situation to deal with. I am not unmindful of the difficulties at all, I see every one of those presented by my right hon. friend, but rather than have the people across the line we thought it well to devise ways and means to enable them to make a fresh start in the northern portion of the province if they were desirous of going there. And if any individual is to be given a privilege, it seems only reasonable that the provincial authorities should at least be consulted in the matter.

Not that they are to step in and shoulder any of our responsibility. We are not delegating any of our responsibility to the provincial government. My own idea with respect to the settlement of this vexed question would be if possible to move the settlers off these very dry areas and return these areas again to ranching lands. In doing that, of course, regard must be had to obligations that are already upon the lands—mortgage obligations, school bonds, and so on. I am speaking now of lands which cannot be irrigated. There is a demand that the department try to solve the problem and we are prepared to make an effort. I do not anticipate that a very large number of people will take advantage of the legislation. For instance, a man who has a mortgage on his land is not going to relinquish that land unless he thinks there is no chance of his making good. It is my experience, after eight years of intimate knowledge of the conditions affecting the people who live in these localities, that they invariably stay until they have to leave—and their leaving means that there is no equity left in the property at all.

Mr. MILLAR: I am very glad indeed that the minister has undertaken to solve this very difficult problem; it has been a nightmare to banks, merchants and provincial and federal governments for some time. Undoubtedly there are areas that should never have been taken from the rancher—good ranching districts that were destroyed to make a very poor farming district. In 1914 I had occasion to travel over some five hundred miles of this dry area for the purpose of gathering some information and looking into the facts. You will remember that 1914 was a very dry season, but some of the farmers in that district had good crops. I inquired why it was that one farmer had a good crop while perhaps fifty or one hundred round about had nothing, and I found that the men on the farms that had given a good return had been doing their work in a scientific way and had conserved all the moisture that was humanly possible to conserve. Now, it might appear from that experience that the difference was simply a case of good farming as against poor farming, but I believe that is not so. The year 1914 followed several comparatively wet years, and there was some moisture to conserve. Subsequently there were a number of dry years—up to two years ago we had had four or five dry years—with the result that there was no moisture to conserve; the subsoil was as dry as powder. That leads me to believe that in these dry areas, no matter how well the soil is farmed, it is impossible to attain success. A great many of the people who settled in those districts came in with considerable amount of money; their buildings are comparatively new and in many instances are better buildings than those we find in the older areas. For that reason I think it is well that opportunity should be given to those who wish to do so to move to areas where they can succeed.

With a part of what the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) said I must agree, namely, that it would be wiser to base any action taken on the conditions affecting each individual farmer in the area in which he resides. If it is simply a case of the farmer failing through no fault of his own, why, you would have applications made from all over the country. But the difference is this: Many farmers are living on land where, if the economic conditions were made right, they could succeed. They are living on land that can be profitably worked and which can reasonably be expected in the future to yield a fair return. On the other hand, those who live in these arid districts are on land where no farmer, be he ever so good, could possibly succeed. In 1915 the crop in these arid districts was an enormous one, perhaps the greatest that western Canada ever saw—fifty, and even sixty bushels to the acre being not uncommon. The extent of the crop was almost unbelievable. And perhaps that was one of the worst things that could have happened to some of the farmers there, because it gave them hope; they believed they could go to almost any extent in their schemes of expansion, and they hung on year after year for three or four or five years. If another good crop comes, the same thing will happen again, but any temporary measure of success in a given year simply prolongs the agony. It does seem to me that farmers living in these arid districts where it will always be impossible for them to succeed should be entitled to a new homestead, if they take it within a specified time. Of course, the door should not be left open, after this regulation is passed, to those living in other parts of the country to move to another homestead after they have tried one in the arid district for say six months. It should apply, however, to those who settled in these arid districts in good faith. The minister has said he does not think that very many are likely to take advantage of this opportunity. Well, the reason for that is not that the chances of success under their present conditions are good, but simply that they have invested their all. To my mind they would be well advised to take advantage of this opportunity and accept new homesteads.

Mr. KELLNER: I hestitate to criticise this legislation, because I suppose it applies to all the prairie provinces, but I doubt whether it is going to be very beneficial to the province with which I am best acquainted, Alberta. It seems to me that this is the way it will work out: Four or five of these homesteaders will go up in the north part of the province and get a desirable piece of land; then they will get after the provincial government for schools and after the municipality for roads, and neither of these organizations will be prepared to accede to their requests. I do not think there is any need for the adoption of this course. I am quite convinced that these people could go up to that north country and either buy or rent land much cheaper than they could get a homestead to-day. The legislation may be all right theoretically, but I very much doubt whether it will work out when an attempt is made to put it into practice. I would also point out to the minister that the day cannot be much longer delayed when he will have to give consideration to the demand for the return to the western provinces of their natural resources. Every acre that the government disposes of will simply add to the barrier existing between the Dominion government and the provinces when that day of reckoning comes.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Perhaps the minister will tell us how close that "day of reckoning" is that the hon. member refers to.

Mr. STEWART (Argenteuil): So far as the minister is concerned it might happen to-morrow. I am not, however, speaking for the government in that regard.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is just as likely to happen to-morrow as it was eighteen months ago.

BOARD OF AUDIT

House again in committee on Bill No. 243, to constitute a Board of Audit.

Mr. FIELDING: When this bill was about to be reported last evening I mentioned that there was a small amendment of a purely formal character which I was unable to find at the moment. It is simply this: I move to add as paragraph 17 the following:—

Any expenditure necessary to carry out the provisions of this act shall be made out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

That is the usual course.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. GOOD: There are no copies of the bill distributed as yet, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FIELDING: I think the bill must be found on the files. It has been printed for several days. The bill is simply a transcript of the resolution which was on the order paper for some days.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON MANILA FIBRE

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 188, to repeal the acts respecting bounties on manufactures from manila fibre in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Bounties on binder twine and cordage repealed.

Mr. GOOD: Would the minister state briefly the purpose and effect of this legislation?

Mr. FIELDING: The Act which it is proposed to repeal was passed some years ago, arising out of a then existing condition in relation to the export of manila fibre from the Philippine Islands. At that time an advantage was given to the United States and for compensation this bounty act was then passed. In later years the condition has entirely changed and no bounty has been paid for some years. It is practically a dead issue, but we thought it better to have the act repealed.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON COPPER BARS OR RODS

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 189 respecting the payment of bounties on copper bars or rods.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. FIELDING: This matter was very fully considered when the resolution was before the House and I do not think any further explanation is required at this stage.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—Limitation.

Mr. McMASTER: I beg in connection with clause 3 to move an amendment by adding a clause 3A. I regret that I have not had an opportunity to prepare a copy for the Minister of Finance, but I will send over my original to him forthwith.

I am utterly opposed to this bounty business. I think it is eminently unsound. I think the business men who want to start business in this country, if they have got a meritorious proposition should reap the benefits and run the risks. In this case we encourage people to ask the state to help. The state runs the risk while others receive all the benefits. That being the case I move:

That the following paragraph be added to paragraph 3 to be known as paragraph 3A:

3A. Any amount so paid out shall be considered as advances by way of loan to those receiving the same and shall be repayable to the Crown as follows: One-fifth of the amount received on the 1st day of July, 1930; one-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1931; one-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1932; one-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1933; one-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1934; with interest on any overdue instalment at the rate of six per cent per annum. Any failure to pay any instalment when the same falls due shall cause subsequent instalments at the option of the Governor in Council to become due.

Now, if there is any merit in the bounty system the amendment gives to these people who want to make copper bars an opportunity of using the public money without interest for some considerable time, but the interest of the public will be protected to this extent: If the proposal works out well and the company that receives this bounty continues in existence, one of the first charges upon it will be the repayment to the people of the amount advanced by the state. We have seen, in connection with the bounties that were paid on iron and steel in Nova Scotia, the company re-organized from time to time on fictitious capital, and we have seen them from time to time paying dividends on that fictitious capital, thus capitalizing again the benefits that the people gave them. I wish, if possible, to avoid such an eventuality, and, therefore, I humbly and respectfully submit this resolution for the approval of the House.

Mr. FIELDING: One of the rules of the House is that an amendment must be relevant. I submit that this amendment does not come within that rule. The House has already resolved that certain bounties, certain grants of money, shall be made under the conditions specified. The hon. gentleman's amendment entirely negatives that proposition. The amendment proposes that the grant be converted into a loan. I submit, therefore, that it is not relevant and is not in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know that I have any special interest in the amendment, but I have in the rules of the House. I take very direct exception to the appeal of the Minister of Finance. I cannot conceive of anything that is more relevant than the present amendment. The House has resolved that aid be given, that grants be made, to this industry, but that does not in the least restrict the power of the committee to amend the bill pursuant thereto. If that be so, what is the use of having first a resolution and then a bill—why not just have the one? Both are subject to amendment. The grant is made but the amendment makes it subject to return, that is all.

Mr. FIELDING: Oh, no.

[Mr. McMaster.]

Mr. MEIGHEN: For my part I cannot see that there is any objection to it so far as the rules are concerned. When it comes to the merits of the resolution I will have something else to say.

Mr. FIELDING: I am sorry to say that I cannot agree with my right hon. friend. I say the amendment must be relevant. The House has already decided that it is going to make these grants—as gifts if you like to make use of that term. Whether it is wise or not is another question. The House has decided it will grant these bounties by way of gift and my hon. friend has moved that it be converted into a loan. I submit the amendment is not relevant. I do not think the right exists to make any such amendment to any measure of this kind. The amendment must be subject to the rule of relevancy, and my impression is that it is not relevant to the bill at all.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I think the minister is wrong in his statement as to the amendment not being relevant. I cannot really see a ground for argument even. The minister argues that the House has decided to make this grant. What the House has done has been to resolve that it is expedient to bring in a bill. That is all the House has done and here is the bill. The amendment is as relevant as anything can be.

Mr. FIELDING: The bill is for the purpose of granting bounties. The amendment proposes that the bounties be converted into loans. That is entirely negative of the purpose which the House has already resolved.

Mr. McMASTER: May I submit this, speaking to the point of order: If instead of moving this amendment I had moved that the bounties be reduced to a point where they would have been merely equivalent to the value of the use of the money for the time this company will have it, would that have been held out of order? I hardly think so.

Mr. FIELDING: I would say that a motion to reduce the bounties would be entirely within the rule of the House as to relevancy, and would be in order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The argument would apply just the same.

Mr. FIELDING: No.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The House has resolved to introduce a bill to grant bounties of a certain amount. That is all the House has done. Here is the bill, we can amend it just as we like.

Mr. POWER: I submit that the amendment introduced by my hon. friend from Brome amounts to a reduction of the bounty. He proposes that there should be no interest paid for five years. Therefore there is a gift of the interest for that period, and the amendment only proposes a reduction of the bounty.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the well-known rule is that in committee a very wide discretion in the matter of amendments is allowed, in fact each clause of a bill or resolution may be negatived by a vote. While the amendment varies the nature of the grant and makes it rather a loan than a bounty, I feel that it is in order and may be considered.

Mr. FIELDING: The hon. member for Brome alluded to the bounties on iron and steel. He said that the company concerned had seen fit to make certain issues of capital, to declare certain dividends and so forth. All of this is probably correct. Whether or not it is wise to grant bounties is a debatable question; nevertheless in my judgment, but for those bounties there would have been no steel industry in Cape Breton.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I should like to ask whether the copper rods upon which this bounty is to be given are to be made from copper produced in the nickel mines of Canada, say at Sudbury?

Mr. FIELDING: They are to be made from copper mined in Canada, that is all I can say.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I should like to point out that in the current Blackwood's Magazine, a leading Conservative organ in Great Britain, this month there is an article which states that the fact that immense quantities of copper, which were more or less controlled by British firms, got to Germany during the war was a scandal. Among the things which went to Germany throughout the war was the product of the nickel mines of Canada. I happened to draw attention to that fact some years ago, but nothing was done. Now is the time to correct that mistake in connection with the copper mines of Sudbury. There is something else worth pointing out: The people of Canada are entitled to know the content of precious metals in these ores such as platinum, palladium, iridium, and so forth. The companies that will get the benefit of this bounty may be producing these ores, but notwithstanding the fact that the Ontario and Federal governments, and the public, have asked to know the content of precious metals they are still in the dark on the subject. I insist on the government refusing to give a bounty now to any copper mines in this country unless the owners disclose the actual content of precious metals in their ores. This matter has been an outstanding scandal as far as Canada is concerned, and in saying this I am only repeating what I have said heretofore, namely, that people outside of this country or our own companies who refine that copper ore or nickel ore have never yet disclosed the content of precious metals, including platinum, in that ore. Surely we are entitled to have that information.

12 noon.

The CHAIRMAN: I would draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that the clause which he is discussing at the present time refers strictly to payment or non-payment of bounties.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): And I say that there should be no payment to any company which refuses to disclose the precious metal content in the ore. That is the scandal of the war that has not been disclosed yet. As a matter of fact, Germany had an unlimited supply of Canadian copper, nickel, platinum and several other metals, and the country never knew that Germany was getting it.

Mr. EVANS: I oppose the revival of the bounty system. The people of this country are overtaxed already. We have a precedent in the steel industry to which we granted bounties in former years. The Minister of Finance declares that we would have had no steel industry but for the bounty. I think he is entirely mistaken; I can well remember the time when we were granting, I think, $7 a ton bounty on steel rails that were used in this country, and the Nova Scotia Steel Company at that time was cutting prices against the whole world on steel rails. While we, with a bounty added, were paying $39 a ton for steel rails which we used on the Transcontinental, similar rails were being delivered in the southern Punjab at $24 a ton. I maintain that the steel industry did not need that bounty; I maintain that the copper industry will not need this bounty, and until any company can show us the need for a bounty of this kind, I shall strenuously oppose it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have a great deal of sympathy with the hon. member (Mr. Evans), and I think the minister should show to the committee, first of all, that unless something is done, there will not be the industry, and that what he proposes has a reasonable chance of producing the industry and the extent of it, so that hon. members will know whether the country is going to get any benefit therefrom. Of course he will say that if there is no industry, there will be no bounty; but we do not like passing purely futile legislation. If there is a reasonable chance of the industry going ahead under this bounty and the industry is of such magnitude as to make this worth while, I favour it. I would prefer to see the matter dealt with in another way. But one way is better than no way. I do not want to have my vote or any influence I have stand in the way of the revival of any industry in this country. Next, the minister should show that the plan suggested by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) in his amendment, will not produce the industry. The minister at least owes an explanation to the committee, because if the amendment will produce the industry, the hon. member for Brome is right in his amendment. We should not do anything more than is essential to achieve our ends in the public interest, and if they will be achieved by a loan without interest for seven years, that is a great deal better than making a money grant. The minister should show to the committee that such is futile, if that is his belief.

Mr. FIELDING: It is not always easy to prove a negative, nor is it always easy to prove an affirmative. I cannot give the right hon. member an absolute assurance that this bounty will create the industry. All I can say is that the people most actively promoting it have assured me that the business will be done. I can give no assurance beyond that. I think they are acting in good faith, and that this bounty will create the copper industry in the way the industry is described. I am bound to give to the right hon. gentleman and the committee any information as it comes to me.

As to the effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Brome, if my right hon. friend asks me if I can give him any assurance that this will not be satisfactory, I have never before heard such a proposal, and I cannot tell what view will be taken of the amendment. My judgment is that they will not move a foot if this amendment is passed, but I cannot guarantee that such will be the case.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I should like to press for an answer to my question whether the government, in view of the statements I have made and statements heretofore made in other quarters, are going to take such means as to compel companies to whom this bounty is given to disclose the actual content of precious metals and nickel in those ores. Are we to have that or not? And are we to subsidize those companies in view of the disclosures that have been made? If such a provision is inserted, I shall be glad to support the motion. If the minister consults the Department of Mines, he will find that they do not know the value of the precious metal content in those copper ores, and that, as regards Ontario, that has never been disclosed. Those metals are subject to taxation there, and the Department of Mines and the Department of Finance of this country ought to insist on these facts being disclosed before any bounty is given to any company, and especially to companies outside of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is referring to the question of companies refusing to disclose something during the war. I cannot answer that, as I had nothing to do with the administration of those affairs during the war. I know there was a great deal of talk of shipments of nickel to Germany during the war. I understand that was investigated by the government of the day, and that they were satisfied that the law was observed and that there was nothing wrong. So far as I know, companies have never been asked to disclose this, and I know of no reason why they should be asked.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Are we still to continue in the position that we are not to know what the content is? Now is the time, if we are to bonus those companies, to compel them to disclose the content of precious metals, or the minister should produce a report from the Department of Mines showing that there is not a large content of precious metals in those ores. If that department says that there is not a large content of precious metals, I will accept the statement. I want an answer now to my question, and I will direct the attention of the government to the statement in Blackwood's of this month that those metals—and it is claimed that this is the scandal of the war—went to Germany throughout the war; that they were supplied largely by British and American firms, and that they came, as a matter of fact, from Canada. That has never yet been proved. When the question is up and we are subsidizing those companies with bounties, parliament ought to make this condition, that any company that gets a bounty on copper rods that come out of, say, our nickel mines, should be compelled to tell us how much of precious metals is in those ores. This may give the government a source of taxation. We want systems of taxation as well as bounties in this country, and if outside companies control our mines, if they are taking these metals out of the country, and if Sir Alfred Mond, of the late British government, for years has taken the nickel of this country in matte form over to Wales and treated it and taken out those precious metals from our ores, that ought to be disclosed. Sir Alfred Mond has never disclosed that, and he has defied disclosure of it. His agents in this country have been very active to hide the fact from us. I ask the minister to insist on those companies disclosing the whole content of the ores from which they get these rods.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think it is nearly time in this country that we should cease harking back to the war about everything. The question is not what we have done. We have done our duty pretty well, we have had many troubles and trials during the war, and the people are now looking to see what we are going to do and not at what has been done. I do not think anything is gained by discussing these old issues, no matter on which side we may be. This is the situation in connection with the copper industry and something should be done to meet it. The raw copper of British Columbia goes to-day to the United States, where a large quantity is required. It is refined there and we buy it back again. That is a condition of things which even free traders would not, I suppose, care to have continue. We have an abundant supply of raw copper in this country, but the new companies that undertake to develop this industry cannot stand up against the outside competition of old and well-established businesses in a country like the United States. Concerning any other question there might be greater room for differences of opinion; but this is a case in which we are developing an industry that gets its raw material from the bowels of the earth, that raw material being of no value in its undeveloped state. I think, therefore, that it is well that we should do something to develop this potential asset. I believe in aiding this industry, which has for its object the development of one of our greatest national assets in the way of natural products. Under the present law, a manufacturer, say, of copper bars, can get his raw material free of duty, but if he attempts to manufacture a partly finished product to a further stage and sell it to his neighbour in Canada, though that neighbour lives across the street, he has to pay a duty on his importation. A man three miles from him, on the American side of the line, can send the manufactured article to the purchaser in Canada free of duty. This is an anomalous situation, and as a matter of fact, under present conditions, instead of giving the natural products of Canada a square deal our legislation is absolutely against them in favour of the American manufactured article, as well as the American raw material. I cannot see anything inconsistent with straight business methods in doing what the government proposes to do in order that the copper industry of Canada may be developed, and those who are manufacturing further products of the copper mines may be given a chance at least equal to that enjoyed by the American who can send in his goods now free of charge.

Mr. HUMPHREY: I realize that this is a debatable question and I do not wish to touch upon any disputable point to-day. The principal arguments that have been advanced in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) have reference to the taxation that will be imposed upon the people by granting a bounty to the copper industry. The question is also asked by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) as to what benefit the country will derive from the granting of this bounty. Laying aside the principle involved in the matter of his bonus, I think that it is good business for the Dominion of Canada to grant such a bonus, and I offer this opinion not from any particular point of view, but from the point of view of business generally. If any hon. member were interested in a business proposition by means of which, through the investment of $200,000 a year, he would derive a revenue of three and a half or four million dollars, there can be no question whatever that he would consider it excellent business. Well, that is precisely analogous to the present case; by the investment of $200,000 a year we shall save to the people of Canada between three and four million dollars which now goes to the United States. By granting this small concession we shall establish an industry in Canada providing returns such as I have stated, besides employment for from 1,000 to 2,000 persons who are now idle. I believe that hon. gentlemen will take this question into consideration favourably, purely from the business point of view, and altogether irrespective of the principle involved in the granting of a bonus. This parliament to-day is legislating for the welfare of the Dominion as a whole, and I consider that this is one instance in which it might do something to help a particular industry and, further than that, the whole country. The taxation that will be incurred in connection with the bounty will, in my opinion, be greatly offset by the increased benefits that will be derived in the way of added revenue and greater prosperity, particularly to the province of British Columbia and the other provinces that are interested in copper mining.

Mr. GOOD: I am afraid the hon. member who has spoken (Mr. Humphrey) has fallen a victim to that hoary fallacy about keeping money at home. I do not think many hon. members will attach great importance to that argument. As to the amendment, it seems to me to be worthy of very serious consideration, even from the standpoint of the government. Personally, I do not believe in the bounty system, but, as I have said on a previous occasion, if we are bound to give some sort of assistance to industry it is a better form than tariff protection. Looking at the matter solely from the standpoint of those who believe in giving assistance to industry, it seems to me that the amendment is well worth considering. Because there will be no re-payment coming from the company until, I believe, 1931, and by that time, if there is anything in the proposition at all, the industry will have been well established, and will be well able to repay the money advanced to them. I do not suppose that the Minister of Finance would recommend the bounty unless there were reasonable prospect of the industry becoming established. Surely it would be very poor policy to grant a bounty if there were no prospects of permanent success. But if there is such a prospect then by 1931 the company will be established and can afford then to pay back to the people of Canada the small advance that will be made. I do wish to commend to the House, therefore, a sympathetic consideration of the amendment.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Something of evidence has been given to the committee as to the need of the bounty; I am thoroughly convinced of that myself. But I think the minister owes it to the committee to give us some information, and I really do not know why he has not got it, to show how the figures are arrived at. I can recall in connection with the lead bounties how the figures were arrived at, the basis of making the bounty being the equivalent of the handicap under which the industry would suffer were it existing. Surely the corresponding information should be forthcoming here. It seems to me that the committee is entitled to that information. Just what is the disadvantage that the industry would be at, without the bounty, as compared with its competitor? If there is any substantial disadvantage there will be no industry; we all know that by long and bitter experience. The theories in regard to all these things are fine, but their application is a different matter. How many people support those theories only until it comes to a question of their application?—the application shows them to be utterly futile. But we should have that information.

I have not the slightest sympathy with all the talk about a crime having been committed against this country in the export of nickel or any other of our minerals during the war. I had peculiarly to do with the export of nickel from the beginning to the end of the war, and I know the entire system adopted and the result. I would not contend for a moment that there was not a modicum of failure, but I do not think that in anything we undertook during the war was the success so complete as in the case of the control of the export of nickel. No matter what anyone may say in Blackwood's or any other magazine on the subject, he is simply talking rubbish for the sake of getting entry into the paper and probably making some money for himself.

As to the composition of our metals, while I have not gone over all of them seriatim, I do not doubt that the content of every metal that has been discovered in this country can be ascertained by examination of the records and reports of our Mines department. There is not the slightest doubt as to the ore covered by this bill. I guarantee that every detail of its composition has been on record for years in the Mines department. There is nothing to be found out in that regard, and I do not see that the subject affects the merits of the bill, but on the point where it does, I should like more information besides that given by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Humphrey) and the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) in order to show that this is the right amount as nearly as we can tell that will overcome the handicap under which the industry would labour were it existent without the bonus.

Mr. FIELDING: If the hon. gentleman will specify substantially and clearly any information he wants, and if that information is available, I shall have a great deal of pleasure in getting it for him. I can only say that we have adopted these figures after discussion with the promoters of the industry. Of course, it is not what they want. They want more. But we believe that on these rates the industry will be established. That is our reason for proposing them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I became somewhat familiar with this matter about two or three years ago. I do not think there is any dispute that it does seem to be ridiculous that the brass manufacturer—the man who is manufacturing the product of the copper—although he uses Canadian copper, as a result of the present protective tariff—which in this instance is not protective at all but is a tax upon the Canadian producer—is worse off than if he moved his plant to Buffalo. That is, as a result of the duty on the raw material of copper, given for the purpose of aiding the first industry, the production of copper itself, unaccompanied by proper compensatory duties upon the more finished article, while it gives an apparent protective duty of 10 per cent to the brass manufacturer, it actually leaves him at a disadvantage of 2 per cent. Therefore, although we have a duty on the raw material, we are getting the benefit of the first process only, the extraction of the copper from the ground. Those were the figures two years ago, and I am quite confident they are the figures to-day. Consequently, where we ought to have large employment of labour in connection with all the different processes of this industry, we are just simply producing the raw material. I take it that my hon. friend has had those figures before him and has calculated what he could do in order to offset the difference.

I might say that the result of it all comes from an accident. Things are overlooked from time to time. There used to be no duty whatever upon the by-products of copper. We had no industry in connection with them. When the war came we had to have these by-products. There was no competition when the industry started and those engaged in it had the further protection given by the 7½ per cent customs tax imposed for war purposes. It is by reason of the tax being cancelled that we are in this position to-day, because while reductions have been made on the import duties, on the other hand the striking off of that tax, which before gave the industry a net protection of 5 per cent, leaves it in a position where it is at a disadvantage to the extent of from 2 to 2½ per cent. I do not think there is very much doubt about these figures. Of course, I should like to see the fullest information given, but, speaking frankly, I can see absolutely no reason why this industry should not be bonused.

Mr. GOULD: I am not yet clear as to why we should have to subsidize this industry. We have practically a monopoly of copper, because we are told that the United States must get her main supply from Canada. Therefore it seems to me that having this monopoly we can charge the United States a high price for any material she requires. The question asked by the right hon. leader of the Opposition is the sort of question we have been asking many times in reference to tariff and other matters, that is: What is the reason for the disability, and what is its extent? The question is asked in regard to this proposed bounty, but it is unanswered. A similar question has been asked to my own certain knowledge during the last four years in regard to all the tariff items that have come before this House. But it always remains unanswered. The people would like to have a satisfactory answer. In all cases it does appear that the cards are absolutely stacked against the people. Indeed, it is demonstrated by the fact that this and similar questions asked by the representatives of the people remain unanswered. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Graham) stated that we should not be always referring to the war period. I quite agree with him. But in almost the very next sentence the hon. gentleman stated that the highly organized industries of the United States would force Canadian industry out of business were it not protected. This is getting to be quite as common a warning as references to the war years; or quite as common as the remark by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who invariably retorts to certain objections, " Well, we have precedent for this; you people did it; consequently we are doing it."

Mr. VIEN: If the remark is true why does my hon. friend object to our repeating it until he understands it?

Mr. GOULD: Well, until those who have the spending of the money produce evidence that we are wrong, we are entitled to our opinion; and the people of Canada have on many occasions spoken in favour of the opinions which we express.

Mr. VIEN: Not yesterday.

Mr. GOULD: No, not yesterday, but Ontario is just a small part of Canada.

Mr. CALDWELL: That was not a federal issue.

Mr. GOULD: I approve of the amendment which is before the committee, on the principle that those who receive these subsidies shall consider the amount advanced to them in the nature of a loan and that it shall be repaid to the people of Canada. That will be one factor at least in restoring confidence in the minds of the people.

Mr. FORKE: I wish to say just a word in regard to the suggestion that if certain things are not done certain people will have to go out of business. I have had perhaps more experience this session than I otherwise would have had because of the position I have occupied in this group, and the most disheartening thing I have met with has been the continuous stream of people I have had up in my room who have told me it is impossible for them to carry on business in Canada unless they get a little more protection. Now, the psychological effect of that statement, repeated over and over again, is that those who make it themselves finally come to believe it. If the manufacturers and business men would only recognize their own ability, would only recognize the virility and industry and intelligence of the people of this country and attempt to put their businesses on a paying basis, they would succeed much faster than they will by this everlasting cry of "a little more protection." I do not think the amendment offered by the member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) is at all out of place. If this industry is going to be a paying proposition, they will have four or five years to repay the amount now advanced; why should the people of Canada not at least get their money back? I am prepared to support the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. McMaster) negatived: Yeas, 42; Nays, 77.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY ON HEMP

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 215, respecting the payment of bounties on certain manufactures of hemp.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the bill, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 3—Limitation.

Mr. McMASTER: I desire to propose the same amendment to this clause which I proposed in connection with the bounties on copper. The same principles apply, and I do not propose to detain the committee in arguing the point.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. McMaster moves: that the following paragraph be added to paragraph 3, to be known as paragraph 3A:

[Mr. Gould.]

3A. The payments so made shall be considered as advances by way of loan and the amounts so paid to those receiving the same shall be repayable by them to the Crown as follows: One-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1935; one-fifth, on the first day of July, 1936; one-fifth on the 1st day of July, 1937; two-fifths on the 1st day of July, 1938; with interest on any overdue instalment at the rate of six per cent per annum. Any failure to pay any instalment when the same falls due shall cause subsequent instalments at the option of the Governor in Council to become due.

Mr. McMURRAY: The object of this bill is to establish in western Canada very largely and in the province of Manitoba particularly, I believe a new industry for the growing of hemp and its manufacture into binder twine. I understand that an experienced man from the north of Ireland, where this industry has been developed as highly probably as in any other part of the world, came to Canada some years ago and made investigations as to the possibility of growing this hemp in Manitoba. I understand that it was established to his entire satisfaction that hemp of the very finest quality could be grown there, of a quality equal to that which the factories in the north of Ireland had been purchasing from Russia before the war. Hemp has been grown in the West for some three years. I have seen it growing, and while I do not know anything about its quality I know that it grows very readily and very high. I have been assured by this gentleman from Ireland that this hemp is of the very best quality and will produce the very finest twine when manufactured. Another feature of the situation is that the twine which we use in Canada is very largely manufactured outside of Canada, manufactured practically by one company ,the International Harvester Company, a large American corporation with a vast capital. Twine has gone up in western Canada to a very high and unusual price, and is more or less absolutely in the control of this company. The object of this bill is to create a new industry. I agree that there is a proper place for the granting of bounties and subsidies. This is a new concern with a reasonable prospect of being successful. I would be opposed to the granting of a bounty if there was not a reasonable prospect of success.

Mr. McMASTER: May I ask a question? If there is a reasonable chance of success why should it be objected to that the industry should repay to the state the amount which the state is now advancing to it?

Mr. McMURRAY: I will answer my hon. friend as I proceed with my argument. We have western Canada in the grip of this monopoly I spoke of. We have a field out there for the building up of a magnificent industry. We have a large market in western Canada for binder twine, one of the largest markets in the world. The great trouble with our manufactures in Canada has been that their market has been limited as compared with the United States, and for that reason on account of the greater overhead expense they were unable to compete with the American factories. But for this binder twine industry we should have a field as large as that of the United States, and one in which we can compete against them successfully. There is I think no doubt at all that this industry will succeed if the bounty is large enough in the first instance to enable them to compete against this monopoly that now holds the people of western Canada in thrall.

The establishment of such an industry should have the following effects: First there should be a reduction in the price of twine for the farmers of western Canada. My hon. friend from Springfield (Mr. Hoey), speaking the other day alleged that he believed that this would create a rate war between this new company and the monopoly in the United States, and that in his opinion the price of binder twine would be lower in western Canada for a number of years to come. He apparently was solicitous of the welfare of these capitalists who propose to come to Canada and establish this industry. They were quite willing to come to this country and risk some four or five million dollars in establishing such an industry. Their experts had come over here and looked over the field and were satisfied the industry would succeed if given a reasonable opportunity. I do not know on what ground my hon. friend sets up his opinion against that of these experienced men who had investigated the matter. I was rather surprised with his argument. I would have thought that a reduction in the price of twine to the farmers in western Canada would have appealed to him, and I was rather surprised that he set up his opinion against those of these experts who had looked over the field.

Mr. HOEY: Does not my hon. friend see where his reasoning is leading him to? When the price is reduced and the hemp factory is in jeopardy we will have a demand for a protective tariff on binder twine coming to this country from the United States.

Mr. McMURRAY: My hon. friend is setting up his opinion against that of the experts who looked over the ground and on whose opinion these capitalists were willing to risk four or five million dollars in this industry.

Mr. HOEY: Anticipating protection.

Mr. McMURRAY: There is a large field for this industry. In that respect it stands out from most other manufactures in this country. It will have a larger field in which to sell its product than its competitor in the United States. Now what will this do for Canada? Annually there is going out of this country from fifteen to sixteen million dollars for binder twine purchased at an exorbitantly high rate. Supposing this new industry did not lower the price of twine, this fifteen or sixteen million dollars would remain in Canada and help to build up industries in this country, and would give labour to thousands of our own people here. One hon. member immediately opposite me suggested the other day that we should give a bounty to the farmer who grew the hemp. The farmer who grows the hemp is in an entirely satisfactory condition, and this industry will mean giving him another market right at his own door in which he can sell his products. If he can get more for the production of hemp than he can for the wheat he produces he will grow hemp; if he cannot get a price for his hemp equal to that he gets for his wheat he will not grow the hemp. So what we are really doing is to bring a market right to the farmer's own door.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Does not that same argument apply to the manufacturer of hemp —that if he could secure an adequate return he would produce?

Mr. McMURRAY: The argument is this: The industry will be fighting against the monopoly in the United States, something my hon. friend is always prepared to fight. We have an abundance of cheap power that could be used in the manufacture of hemp into twine. The production of hemp will also assist in giving a diversified crop production on the farms of western Canada. The lands surrounding the city of Winnipeg are more or less fallowed and infested with weeds. The production of hemp will take the place of summer fallowing very largely and will be exceedingly profitable. By reason of the cheap power to be had by the manufacturing industry, by reason of the closeness of the market, by reason of the fact that the hemp manufactured will be produced on farming lands in western Canada and should be sold to the manufacturer at a cheaper price than it can be produced for on the higher priced lands of the United States, I believe this industry should succeed against the competition of the United States.

Mr. SPENCER: Why is the land surrounding Winnipeg polluted with weeds?

Mr. McMURRAY: Because the farmers of western Canada have not been farming properly.

Mr. SPENCER: Does not my hon. friend realize that flax is the worst possible thing to pollute the land?

Mr. McMURRAY: My hon. friend represents a farming community but he has a most indefinite idea of what is produced upon a farm. Flax grows about two and a half feet high, and hemp eight or ten feet high; they are two different products altogether. In addition to what I have already said as to why we should encourage this industry there is the fact that employment will be given to the working people of western Canada. For that reason this legislation should have the support of the hon. member for Centre Winnipeg (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Hudson), as it will have the effect of bringing to Winnipeg, or to the immediate environments of that city, a large enterprise which will take care of our working people there the year round. This proposition is a very desirable thing and should be supported not only by the members for Winnipeg, but by all the farming representatives from western Canada. I appeal to these hon. members to support a bill that will bring to the west a concern that should free them from the monopoly from which they are now suffering by reason of the International Harvester Company. I appeal to them to endorse a proposition which will create a market for a large acreage of hemp produced in the West, will assist in better farming methods, will keep millions and millions of dollars in this country, and will have the effect of freeing us from the domination of the United States. The farther we can advance along this line the better it will be. In the interest of some of our needs in the future it may be very desirable that we should have industries in this country that will render us absolutely independent of the United States.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about the binder twine manufacturing plant at Brantford?

Mr. McMURRAY: That is a small plant and does not, I believe, sell binder twine in western Canada at all. It is so insignificant that this great monopoly does not bother to fight it. But if a real competitor comes into the field then you may expect to see a war in connection with the sale of binder twine.

[Mr. McMurray.]

In reply to the very fair and reasonable proposition advanced by my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. McMaster) I have this to say by way of argument: We are to-day fighting a powerful monopoly. The manufacturers who propose to establish themselves in Canada contemplate investing a very large sum, probably some four or five million dollars. There is every prospect of success as I view the matter. Still, these men are going into a very hard fight, and I think it is only fair, in view of the benefit to be derived by our working people and the farmers of Canada as a whole, that they should receive some encouragement when they are undertaking to establish a new concern. It is not like making a new establishment in a line which has been in existence for some time; these men are venturing into a new field. And while the prospects look good, difficulties may arise. If the promoters are willing to undertake the risk why should we not support them to a reasonable extent? The proposed bounty is not extravagant in its nature; in fact it is rather small. If I have any quarrel with the government, or with the minister, as I said before, it is that it is not proposed to give a bounty of such a character that assurance may be made doubly sure even from the very commencement. The bounty is small; it is not given for a lengthy period of time; it is on a sliding scale. Nevertheless the prospects for success are very bright. There is an opportunity here of establishing in western Canada an industry that will be indigenous to the country, that will stabilize conditions in the west, that will stimulate the farmer, that will provide employment for our people—in a word the proposition is one that should have the support of every western representative in the House.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I could hardly be expected to let the opportunity pass of making a few observations on the speech of the hon. member for North Winnipeg.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 3 o'clock.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not favour as a rule this method of encouraging Canadian industry, or to put the matter in this way, this method of securing Canadian industry. It is an attempt, however, to re-establish the making of binder twine in Canada, and I am only anxious that that should be done. But I feel a sense of humiliation that the industry should at the present stage of our history be in the condition in which it is. It has a history; a very few words will review that, and it is worth reviewing. We had for many years a protective duty on binder twine, never a very high duty, always a low one. It was reduced from 12½ per cent to 10 per cent in 1897, and then with a great flourish of trumpets it was abolished, wiped entirely away in 1898. This was the offering which the government at that time laid on the altar of western Canadian opinion, in order that it might atone in some degree for the apostacy of that date. The prophets of the administration marched through western Canadian hills and rolled the ball of binder twine from every platform, accompanied by professions of great interest in the agricultural industry of our land. Indeed, for those who adhered to the free trade notions of ancient days, the supposed success of the binder twine industry, notwithstanding the absence of duty, was a perennial argument; it never failed to be presented on all suitable or non-suitable occasions. In the last two parliaments, the old wiping away of binder twine duties came back as an article of discussion in the House, with redoubled vigour, re-doubled because the vigour of hon. gentlemen across the way in the cause of free trade was itself re-doubled, multiplied many times over by the fact that they had gone out of office. On the part of those who in the course of time came to form the Progressive party, the stock contention was, year after year, debate after debate, that the binder twine industry of Canada was flourishing, demonstrating to all and sundry that all this claim for duty as a necessity for progressive industry was a pure figment of the imagination. We have now come through the experience of this session. In olden times—no, not olden, just a few sessions ago—I was driven myself to take up the cudgels in defence of the binder twine industry, and I laboured to show that as a consequence of the wiping out of the duty, the industry, while it remained, was before us in an emaciated, gasping form, and that if our other industries, as fundamental as that, were in like condition, Canada would be in a pitiful state indeed. Some hon. gentlemen to my left remember the arguments of that day, but they will remember how they were replied to and believed to be refuted by hon. gentlemen who are now sitting to your right, Mr. Chairman, and by the leader of the Progressive party of that time who contended that everything was fine and flourishing; that the binder twine industry was still the living example of the glorious effects of free trade. This session we have heard, first from the lips of a leading member of the Progressive party, the declaration, a perfectly true declaration, that at the present time we are making in our Dominion actually 10 per cent of the binder twine we use. Binder twine is one of the great articles of consumption of our country, because we use, in proportion to our people, an immense quantity of this article. After this experience we find ourselves, on the admission of an hon. member to my left, producing in Canada 10 per cent and buying the rest in other lands. How splendid a state of affairs it would be if the same could be said of the other great articles of production in this country! That is precisely where we would be under the policy of hon. gentlemen to my left. An hon. member shakes his head. I wonder why the difference applied to this article? Not only have we the testimony of an hon. gentleman to my left,—and others would say the same if they would look into the facts as thoroughly as he has—but we have the testimony of the eloquent hon. gentleman across the way who declares, as regards the purchase of binder twine, that we are in the grip of a big American monopoly at this hour. I watched the expression on the face of the hon. member for Brome as he looked, in bleak and pained dismay across the way at that family which was once so happy, of which he was an honoured member himself, from which the statement was hurled forth, out of the very camp and court of Liberalism, that free trade on binder twine had landed it in the grip of an American monopoly. All these things have their lessons, and this government that in other times was responsible for the policy that had been pursued for the last 20 years, that initiated it themselves, they themselves members of a government that created the public opinion that forced them against their judgment to do this, are now putting forward this feeble effort to resuscitate, if they can, the industry that they have driven virtually to destruction. These things have their lessons, and all the while no one in this country has benefited at all over the space of time covered by the policy. To-day we are virtually without competition. We have in Canada one or two industries, perhaps three; but they are managed from the United States, and they do just what they are told. They are kept here, I doubt not, just in order that, if possible, they may seduce us to continue the policies that lead us into the humiliating position we are in.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are many of the protected industries in this country not managed from the United States?

Mr. MEIGHEN: Not by any means, not to the extent of an almost infinitesimal fraction. They are Canadian industries; American capital may be in them, but they are not part of a big American ring.

Mr. JACOBS: What about the Imperial Oil Company?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The Imperial Oil Company is, in the main, a Canadian company. How funny it is to see hon. gentlemen to your right rise! If such is the case, why do they not pursue their policy past binder twine and get us into such a shape that we shall have to give bounties to everything raised in this Dominion? I thought hon. gentlemen to my left would be slow to rise.

Mr. PRITCHARD: Is it true that we are buying binder twine cheaper than we did before the duty was removed and the wages were increased?

Mr. MEIGHEN: It is not. Binder twine is cheaper than it was four years ago; most things are; but it is much dearer than it was when we had the 12 per cent duty. I think it is dearer this year than it was last. As I say, out of this very school stands the prophet who declares that we are landed now in the grip of an American monopoly. He is not far from the fact; substantially he is within the truth, and out of this school stands one who says we are making in Canada 10 per cent of this big staple article of consumption by the people of this Dominion. Yes, I support the legislation. I will support any such effort, however feeble, and I only hope at least a measure of success will result from it.

Mr. PRITCHARD: I am quite interested in the remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen). Some of us have memories that reach back to those years when binder twine was 17 cents a pound, when we had a protective duty and dear labour.

Mr. MEIGHEN: When was that?

Mr. PRITCHARD: That was when we built a binder twine factory ourselves, and that is what they told us at the time it was 17 cents a pound, that these corporations he is talking about would force us down to a cost of 6 cents a pound and put us out of business. What happened at that time? Many men went into the business, and if many of the farmers had put all their money into the business at that time, they would have made more money than they would in farming. The price of binder twine came down to 6 cents, and we succeeded in meeting that. My opinion is that no industry starting in this country, in which it has an opportunity of making good, has a right to receive protection from other industries. Such industries have a right to stand on their own feet without any support. I am in entire support of the amendment. We have been carrying on too long this system of subsidizing infant industries in order to establish them, and I do not know how long it takes to get some of them established. We are apparently undertaking to carry more and more of these industries; this must stop some time, and my opinion is that we should stop it right now. We have been bonusing our railways; indeed in all our smaller towns—for instance, in my own town, we have been giving any amount of money to industries, and what has happened? The money has gone and the industry has gone. I am opposed to the continuation of granting bonuses; I am opposed to this particular one, and I will support the amendment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I regret I cannot agree with the argument put forward by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray). I am aware that considerable pressure is being brought to bear from Winnipeg to have this particular matter go through; yet I cannot see how this case differs from hundreds of others that might be brought up from different parts of the country. I note, in the circular sent out by the Winnipeg Board of Trade one of the statements in favour of this matter is that this will be a source of revenue to the federal government by establishing an additional industry which will be subject to taxation. Possibly that is what has appealed to the Minister of Finance. But I would submit that from the standpoint of good business, so far as the federal government is concerned, we may have to wait a very considerable time before any money secured in the form of taxation upon this industry will equal what will be expended in the proposed bonus. I think we can all agree with the member for North Winnipeg when he speaks about the fertility of the western plains, and the possibility of producing raw material in great abundance. there. I have very little doubt that is true. We can also agree, I think, that there is a splendid local market; undoubtedly the western farmers consume a great deal more of these articles than are required elsewhere in this country. Still further, we all know that Winnipeg has cheap power and for that reason production should be carried on without a very heavy expenditure. But all these reasons would seem to show that this is a good business proposition, and if it is I cannot see why those who are interested in investing money should not come into the country without any other encouragement. We are told that if the prices are lowered the farmers will benefit, but I fail to see anything in the bill which will in any way ensure that the prices will be lowered, or that the alleged monopoly will be broken. We are also informed that this industry will be a very great benefit to the labouring classes. Well, if reasonable wages are paid and if there is steady work it may be advantageous to them. But there is no indication whatever that the rights of the labour people in this regard will be respected in this industry any more than they have been in any other industry.

We have been told that British capital is willing to come in and invest in this country. Let me remind hon. members that the statement was also made in the committee on Banking and Commerce that our banks have plenty of money to lend. If this is such a good thing and if the securities are going to be so sound there is no particular reason why British capital should not come in and the Canadian banks should not help to finance the institution while it is producing. I would also suggest, that there are other alternatives which the government might consider. Some of us are very much interested in municipal or provincial enterprises. I cannot see why something of this kind should not be encouraged in the same way as are those enterprises. Or why not, one might ask, bonus the farmers' co-operative societies that are already engaged in various types of productive industry, and if there is any benefit in the undertaking let those societies reap it? I might go so far as to suggest that there are some labour organizations which, if sufficiently bonused, could guarantee to carry on an industry of this kind. These are some of the alternatives to bonusing a group of British capitalists in the way proposed.

With regard to the amendment, I confess I am almost at a loss to know how to vote. As I am opposed to the principle of granting bonuses it seems rather strange to support a motion granting in any form a privilege of this kind. On the other hand, until such time as we have greater control over our industry, and so long as private industry is the rule, I am willing to try experiments. It may be in this instance a good thing to give this particular private industry an opportunity to develop. But more than that, I am rather anxious to test the bona fides of those who are putting forward this proposition, on the ground that it is in the general interest. I submit that if this is indeed in the public welfare no group of men should hesitate to take the position that if the public advances money it should be in the shape of a loan which should have the first claim on the industry. For that reason I propose to support the amendment.

Mr. EVANS: I am opposed to the granting of this bounty on the same ground that I oppose other bounties. No industry has been benefited, or has benefited this country, that has been established artificially. The history of bounties in Canada is just as sorry a spectacle, just as much a delusion and a fallacy as any other form of the old National Policy which was adopted by the Liberal government from its predecessors in 1897. There has been a cry in this House against Americans benefiting by the exploitation of our natural resources. The bounties of 1897 and 1899, however, were given entirely to American promoters. The two companies established at Cape Breton and Sault Ste. Marie were formed for the benefit of American promoters. In one case where money was given for the establishment of a plant, no steel was rolled until years afterwards. These two companies received many millions of Canadian money, the Sydney company, $6,500,000 and the Algoma company $2,600,000. What benefit did the Canadian people derive from those grants? Did we get steel any cheaper, or did our railway constructors get their rails at any lower rate? No. We paid from $11 to $13 a ton higher for our rails during that period than did any other country in the world; we could have secured them that much cheaper outside had we free trade. The bounties that were given to those two companies during those years more than paid the whole of the wages which the industries paid out to their employees. There was another bounty paid these mills in the years 1901 and 1902, but it was not until 1904 that one ingot was rolled in either of them. Why our government to-day is so eager to create monopolies by the granting of bounties and bonuses as well as tariff protection and the placing of embargoes on the export of raw material is more than I can understand. The steel bounties present one of the worst exhibitions of corruption and graft, and these bounties which the government now proposes but finds it hard to excuse, are likely to lead to similar evils. The right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) I think is mistaken in some of the statements he has made. In 1898 the duty was taken off binder twine. We had an understanding about that time with the United States regarding manila from the Philippines, under which no undue import advantages were to be granted to their manufacturers as against ours. But I think the American manufacturers had an advantage of one-eighth of a cent per pound over ours, and we were reimbursing our manufacturers at the time to that extent, perhaps more. But during this period we never got twine in the West under 13, 14, 15 and 16 cents a pound. I am speaking of the early years of my settlement there. Before the war the farmers, under free trade, were getting twine as low as 7 and 8 cents a pound. I know this personally because I bought twine every season for over thirty years. I make the assertion that last year we could have bought twine at least 2 cents a pound cheaper had there been free trade in this commodity. Nominally twine is on the free list, but it is hedged about with such customs regulations that it can hardly be said to enter free. Last year an effort was made to bring the anti-dumping clause into force on an importation of twine by the United Farmers of Ontario, but it failed. That we are in the grip of an American monopoly in respect to this industry is simply a myth. If there is any industry languishing in this country it is not owing to free trade; the cause must be looked for elsewhere, and it is to be found in the fallacy of the National Policy, which advances the price of everything we have to buy and thus forces our cost of production out of line with that of other countries.

The best protection our manufacturers can have, and which this new industry in the West ought to cultivate, is a national sentiment. There is no doubt that our manufacturers have alienated this sentiment until to-day they find themselves more and more at a disadvantage under the tariff system. A truly national policy of "Canada for the Canadians, with fair play for all," is the best protection that our manufacturers can have. I say, let us be done with the whole system of tariff protection, bonuses and bounties.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, the importance of the proposed legislation is my only justification for spending even five minutes in discussing it. I have a good deal of sympathy with my western friends who look with misgiving at anything resembling protection. I remember when this proposal was brought to my attention a year ago last February I loked at it askance because I realized that what we do as a matter of course provincially in the West is looked upon as straight protection when done by the federal authorities. In analyzing the activities of the provincial governments of the West, I naturally am led to review those of my own province of Saskatchewan, where we have given assistance to various industries, very much to their advantage. I have never taken the ground that no kind of assistance should be given industry for fear it might be called protection. It seems to me that this system is the least objectionable form of protection, because it is terminable, while the other kind that we dislike so much is apparently interminable. That is the great difference between the two.

Let me cite some of the things we have been doing in Saskatchewan. For instance, we have for many years given money at 3 per cent to our co-operative creamery, we have given it office accommodation, and we have been paying the freight on cream to the central plant. All this is in the nature of subsidies, bounties or assistance. But as a result we have the satisfaction to-day of having established one of the best co-operative creameries and cold storage plants anywhere in the Dominion. It having been developed into a successful undertaking, assistance has been withdrawn. Then again, we have two stockyard companies in the province to each of which we have granted a straight bonus of $25,000. My hon. friends from the West thought that was all right. How is it altogether wrong when we come down here and do exactly the same thing federally in connection with the hemp industry? A third instance is the substantial grant or bonus which the Saskatchewan government gave towards the building of telephone lines.

Mr. GOULD: Is it not a fact that while the hon. minister was a member of the Saskatchewan government it passed a law prohibiting municipalities from granting bonuses or subsidies to induce industries to locate within their boundaries?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that was in connection with the railways.

Mr. GOULD: Also in connection with mills and such like.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: There may be occasions when municipal bodies should not be subject to the temptation of competing with one another for the establishment of industries. But there is not such competition between provinces. The Saskatchewan government also gave an initial grant at the time the co-operative elevator company was established, and since then, until quite recently at least, the trading account has been guaranteed by the provincial authorities all the way from 75 per cent down.

Mr. KNOX: Were not these grants by the provincial government made to publicly owned utilities?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Certainly not, they are co-operative institutions owned by the people. The principle of this form of assistance has been recognized times without number and has never been condemned in Saskatchewan. I can understand my hon. friends' feelings in regard to this matter, because I know that the environment here is different to what we are accustomed to in Saskatchewan. Here we are suspected of sinister designs upon the Treasury when we suggest any form of assistance to industry, while the same thing could be done by the western provinces and be thought perfectly all right. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitation in supporting the establishment and encouragement of this new industry. Why is it necessary to develop it? It has been developed up to the present to the extent of only ten per cent of our requirements. Our demands for binder twine alone, leaving out the other cordage commodities, have grown annually. We have grown this year to be the largest wheat export country in the world; we are the second largest wheat producing country. Surely, therefore, we should not any longer have to depend on a foreign country for our binder twine. When we first went into the West we had to make our own binding material out of straw. The proposal now is to make our own binder twine through the production of a commodity called hemp fibre, something that is indigenous to this country. Something that can be manufactured here. A band of Winnipeg men have put over $100,000 of their own capital into experiments connected with the growing of hemp. These experiments, carried on without aid for about fifteen years, were on two occasions almost on the point of success, but something always happened. It does seem to me, therefore, that if any industry deserves assistance of this kind it is the hemp industry. I recall the time during the war when there was a dearth of twine; our shipping was in jeopardy; the raw material had to come from the Philippines and in some instances from Mexico. It is true that the twine was being manufactured in the United States, but they had to depend very largely upon foreign countries for their raw material, and even if those countries were friendly, the dangers of the sea were great. I have been impressed with the importance of the production of two things within our own country: One is fuel and the other is twine, and the production of both in Canada is possible. I see that the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is smiling now; he thinks I am advocating his fad, protection. But it is a terminable kind of protection. There are certain kinds of medicine, like strychnine, for example, which are beneficial if taken in small quantities, but which if taken in larger doses will knock you out. I propose that we take the medicinal dose, something that will do us good, not something that will kill us. The question has been asked, why does this industry not start up of its own volition.

Mr. McMASTER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I wonder if the hon. member for Brome ever had anything to do with starting an industry, even as small as this.

Mr. McMASTER: I started my own law.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is quite a different proposition; there are certain advantages there that do away with the need for any kind of assistance. Now, at the annual meetings of the Dairy Association in Saskatchewan I used to warn the farmers that as soon as their industry began to be self-sustaining, as soon as it could stand on its own feet, their assistance would be lessened or withdrawn. I used to say at Saskatoon: We are going to take a certain amount of assistance off this year; we are going to stop paying the express to the central creameries, and next year we are going to stop assisting you in the matter of office staff and office accommodation." It was all right so long as they knew that these curtailments were coming; and it always brought them to time when I would say to them: "You do not want to be in the same category as the eastern manufacturer, wanting this assistance forever." When I would say that they would immediately come across and agree to let the assistance drop. That is what we propose here. We have had two indications this year that these bounties are terminable. They may come along and ask that the bounty be further extended, but surely we can have backbone enough to say nay to them. Take the question of the flax bounty. If I were to give my candid opinion, I think we should have extended that bounty for another year, but rather than put ourselves in the position of being led on by this bounty proposition, we terminated the flax bounty which was being paid to the institution at Guelph. So with the bounty on oil; that has been adjusted so that it will disappear, I think, at the end of another year. We must either assist this hemp industry in some legitimate way, in some way that we can see the end of, or we shall have to go on forever buying our twine from foreign countries. Which do we prefer?

I remember the time when we could take out almost in one car the whole binder twine requirements of Saskatchewan, but since that time the requirement has never ceased to grow, and I am confident that it will keep on growing larger and larger as the country becomes settled. The question is, are we to continue buying our binder twine from another country and running the chance of going without it at some critical time, or are we to develop a commodity that can be produced right in Canada? For many years I found that the soil on my own farm was so rich that it would not grow wheat to maturity in time to escape the frost. In many districts in northern Saskatchewan and Manitoba it is not good business to grow wheat, but it may be an exceedingly profitable business to grow hemp. I am satisfied that hemp can be produced in northern Alberta as well as in the southern part of the province by irrigation; that flax seed and flax fibre can also be successfully produced in those districts, and that this industry may ultimately be developed in Manitoba and in the entire West—right to the Pacific, if you like. When I became interested in this product last year I gave instructions to the Director of Experimental Farms to try out the growing of hemp in all the experimental farms, and it was found that it could be grown in every province. I say there is no reason why, when this industry gets well established, it cannot be extended all over Canada. When I had the painful opportunity of reading the speech of the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Hoey) on this question, he made what seemed to me to be the strongest possible argument for this bounty: he suggested that the price of International twine would be so cut that the new institution would be put out of business. Well, if no assistance were given, that is what would happen, and that is exactly the justification for the assistance. In the early days of an enterprise like this, when the overhead is large and the turnover is small, the cost per pound must be excessive, and if you are going to get into competition with an old-established institution like the International Harvester Company, they can cut their price by two or three cents and beat you out. Under those circumstances, unless a business were enormously strong it would soon have to close its doors. That is not a dream; that is not protectionist theory; it is something that anybody can realize would happen if you start something that comes into competition with an institution that has been long established and has attained full growth. I do not think I can give my hon. friends any better illustration than this: If you take an immature farm animal—a calf, a pig, or a foal—and put it in the same pen with a full grown animal and leave it to rustle for itself, how do you think it will flourish? With these illustrations I will sit down as the weather is getting rather warm.

Mr. EVANS: I should like to make one correction as the minister has created a false impression. Where help has been given to an industry in Saskatchewan it has always been a public owned utility organized to help the people help themselves. It is this creating monopolies that will in the end fleece the people that we object to.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not understand my hon. friend. In the little telephone companies that were organized it was the individuals who benefited. It was not a giant monopoly, and this is not a giant monopoly. We are simply encouraging new capital to come to Canada to engage in a new industry that my hon. friend and thousands of others require in this country.

Mr. EVANS: It is not to be publicly owned.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I prefer making my own product. If we are going to buy everything abroad we shall soon not be able to buy what we want at home.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There is nothing that so cheers the heart of the old battle-scarred veteran as the sight of a young, vigorous and belligerent recruit coming to his aid. I welcome the adhesion even of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). I do not need any memory at all to recall the part the hon. gentleman played when in the ranks of the foe. There dins in my ears even now the battle cry against special privilege that rang through the Progressive press and from Farmer and Progressive and Liberal platforms in western Canada. Special privilege was the curse of the nation, special privilege was something against which every righteous man, every honest man, strikes his blow. And in that battle right in the ranks, yes, in the very front, stood the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and if he did not carry the flag or ride a horse he at least beat the drum. But protection now is all right so long as it is mild. He finds that he cannot enter the lists now against special privilege because it is borne in upon him that all the while he was crying out himself and his newspapers crying behind him, we were giving special privilege ourselves, he says. This town and that town, this province and that province were given special privileges even while we were in the midst of a crusade against it, and what he says is quite true. That is just what they were doing. There is not a town to-day in all western Canada that lives up for a day of the three hundred and sixty-five to any free trade principle or any anti-special privilege principle—not one of them. Every one of them gives special advantages in the interests of the home town, and if we do it in the case of one town in competition against the other, who is going to say that it is wrong to do it when it is competition between one nation against the other? Consequently the whole failure, yes, the whole futility and utter nonsense of the crusade is borne back into the mind of the Minister of Agriculture. So he stands and professes his faith now; yea he says, though we were sinning against the faith then, even while we were singing the psalms of free trade, I prefer now to come right out into the open and do something so long as it is of a mild type and purely medicinal, and purely for new industries. I was against all protection, he says, because they went and applied it after the industry grew up, but here is a case, he says, where we need a new industry. We need a new binder twine industry in this country. Yes, we have to start it in order that we may not be dependent upon the binder twine industry of the United States. It never seemed to dawn on him that the industry he wants to recreate is the industry that he by his theory destroyed.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: No. It never grew its raw material.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Oh, but it made its finished product, and it is the finished product we are interested in.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: More interested in the raw material.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Then it is not that the minister wants binder twine. He wants hemp, is that it? I thought we had to have our binder twine industry in order to have it made right here at home and not be dependent upon a foreign country for our supply. That is what he was arguing, certainly it was.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Get the hemp and you will get the binder twine.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I am afraid the minister had better stand on the ground he was on. It is a whole lot better than the ground he is being jerked to now. Certainly we want our binder twine. Everybody wants that.

I want to answer what the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Evans) says. It is too frequent a practice to give from some recollection reservoir bold and unstudied figures as to what was paid in days gone by for various articles. I took the trouble to get from authoritative sources that I am prepared to show to any member of this House the wholesale average prices of binder twine through all these years, and I have them year by year. It is the wholesale prices that determine the effect of the policy. You may at a certain period have a costlier system of distribution than at another, you may in earlier times in western Canada have had a costlier distribution of binder twine; it is the wholesale prices, however, that are the test of the value of the policy in so far as you judge the value by the results. Now the figures are these, and I ask hon. gentlemen to recall that it was in 1897 that the Minister of Finance reduced the duty from 12½ to 10 cents and in 1898 that he wiped it all away. Consequently we would expect in 1899 the great benefit to the consumer to be most marked. Now I will read the figures. In 1895 the average wholesale price —this is for 500 feet of binder twine, and the rest would be in proportion—was 6 cents; 1896, 5¾ cents; 1897, 6 cents; 1898, 5½ cents; 1899, 9 cents. That was the first year of free trade in binder twine.

Mr. McMASTER: Has the right hon. leader of the Opposition got comparative prices of the raw material for those years? That is very necessary to have, because your raw material may have gone up in price.

Mr. MEIGHEN: No, I have not the comparative prices of raw material. I thought I was answering direct contradictions as to the value of the finished product; that is what I was answering. But if the test is to be switched to raw material I am prepared to get the figures on that too. In 1899 the average price was 9 cents; 1900, 11½ cents; 1901, 7½ cents; 1902, 11 cents;

1903, 10½ cents; 1904, 10¼ cents; 1905, 9½ cents, 1906, 10 cents; 1907, 9⅝ cents; 1908, 8¼ cents; 1909, 7½ cents; 1910, 7½ cents; 1911, 6½ cents; 1912, 7¼ cents; 1913, 9½ cents, 1914, 9 cents; 1915, 7¾ cents; 1916, 9⅝ cents; 1917, 15⅝; 1918, 23¼ cents; 1919, 21¼ cents. These latter were war-time years and are not a fair criterion. But the period before the war would be a fair criterion, and in so far as the value of the product and the cost to the consumer is to be the test of the wisdom of the policy I wonder what is the lesson of these figures that I now produce. What do they show? Out of twenty-five binder twine factories—I have not the exact number immediately at hand—at least fifteen went into bankruptcy. They were not merged in some other concern, they went into bankruptcy. Some three or four of them were destroyed by fire, and were never rebuilt. Two or three others went into other lines of production mainly, continued to produce a small fraction of binder twine for a while and stopped; and at the time these figures were compiled there were three binder twine factories left in this Dominion—three that, in my judgment, were kept here and operated on a small scale, on such a scale that it is now described by the Minister of Agriculture as an extinguishment of the industry which, we are told, is to be recreated in this Dominion, the three being maintained so that the people of the country would not see the lesson as respects the duties on binder twine. It is because of these results of the industry, accompanied by these results to the consumer, that the government now puts its hand into the strychnine bottle and produces a little grain in the hope that they will be able to get it down with those whom they have misled for years in this House. "Yes," the Minister of Agriculture says, "We are determined this will only be temporary. Did we not adhere to that in connection with the bounties on oil? Did we not adhere to it, even against my best judgment, 'in connection with the bounties on linens and on flax?' Yes, they adhered to it and lost the linen industry, and to-day it is in process of emigration to the United States. I think the case of oil is practically the same, showing that these are not the proper methods by which to place the producer in Canada on a level with the competitor in another country; and surely common sense teaches us that unless you do that, your industry of whatever kind —be it agriculture, be it industrial, be it mercantile—it will go where it can get its best results for its investment. You have got to have conditions where you will have equal results for your investment here with those in another country, and you must continue those conditions or you will not have that industry. The government now is only bringing in this method of doing it because it has not the courage to swing right about, and do in respect of binder twine what it is doing with respect to artificial silks. I wonder whether it is right to have the "strychnine system" in connection with binder twine and —shall I call it?—the continuous and immortal arsenic system in connection with silk.

Mr. McMASTER: Both poisons.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Both poisons, yes. The Minister of Agriculture chooses the medicine, apparently, according to the character of the particular applicant to the government. I hesitated somewhat to define what the test was which the Minister of Agriculture adopted, and I venture to say that if he dares to do it he will hesitate a great deal more than I do.

Mr. MILLAR: Was it not true that after a goodly number of these binder twine factories went out of existence the output of the few, at least in some years, exceeded the output from the many?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I would not deny that it was a fact that the output from the few, in a sporadic year or two, did, for special reasons. I knew the reasons at the time and I can give them to the hon. gentleman from memory. They were because of the excessive demand in the factories to the south, demands for special purposes far away. Those were fortuitous and exceptional circumstances. The demand for binder twine has multiplied six times since the days when the duties were removed. We are now only producing ten per cent of the demand, and the industry is in a condition where it must be given rebirth at the hands of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. SALES: The right hon. leader of the Opposition has quoted an increase to 9 cents in 1899, but if my right hon. friend takes 1911 he will see that the price was 6½ cents.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is right.

Mr. SALES: It has been as high as 11 cents, and even in the war year of 1915 it was 7¾ cents. If the right hon. gentleman will explain the reason for these fluctuations it might help to clear the situation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Fluctuations are inevitable, but the lowest average by far was before the duty was removed. The highest average was after that. The fluctuations would doubtless be due to circumstances such as suggested by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. McMaster). But when you get the average always higher after the duty was removed than it was before, it is pretty hard to deduce from that an argument that the removal of the duty was a great relief to the consumer.

Mr. SALES: It is equally unfair to deduce that the raise to nine cents in 1899, was due to binder twine being put on the free list.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not say that.

Mr. SALES: With regard to the binder twine industry as it exists to-day I had the pleasure of visiting Brantford. I know they have increased their plant from time to time. I have talked with the manager there and he does not want any protection. The right hon. leader of the Opposition smiles.

Mr. MEIGHEN: You know why that was done?

Mr. SALES: I can quote the manager's own words. He said "Our industry is growing faster than we can take care of it." So that instead of being in a dying state, as the leader of the Opposition would lead us to believe, it is in a very flourishing condition.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Supplying only ten per cent of the Canadian market.

Mr. MILNE: We heard from the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray), about the International Harvester combine. The government at the present time 4 p.m. are maintaining a tariff wall to protect that huge combine, and yet in a very few weeks they propose spending millions of dollars to smash it. This looks to me rather like folly, but perhaps I am not viewing things in the right light. I have some figures here that might be of interest to the leader of the Opposition. I secured these figures from the Bureau of Statistics and they give the index price of certain materials. Taking 100 as the index figure for 1913 it is interesting to know that binder twine is one of the lowest, standing at 130. I will read the index price of the products of a few other industries and see where they stand. Machinery stands at 170.2; that is the index figure for 1922. Fibrous textile products stand at 140.9; building and construction materials at 165.1; binder twine at 130.5; coal oil at 125.4; hardware 186.3. These figures, it seems to me, show that the free trade product is the lowest in price compared with other commodities we have here. If the idea is to cheapen the products we have to buy, the government are taking the wrong course with respect to the binder twine industry, the profit of which is the lowest in the list of manufactured articles which I have read.

Mr. JACOBS: I was somewhat interested in the vigorous remarks of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) when he painted this doleful picture about the passing of the twine industry by the action of the Liberal government in 1897. I should like to ascertain from him, seeing that his government was in power from 1911 to 1921, what steps that government took to correct the trouble which was brought about by the Liberal party in 1897.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We were continually being met by a free trade crusade engineered partly by the hon. member for George Etienne Cartier (Mr. Jacobs). There was only a certain amount that we were able to do. We did very well; and, moreover, through most of that time war conditions prevailed. Under those war conditions, it was impossible to recreate industries of that character in this country. I do not know what the hon. member means. Does he mean to chastise us because we kept the tariff averaging as low as we did? He is rather late in the day in commencing that course. I do not know but that on more articles than one we did keep the tariff lower than was for the ultimate benefit of the country. If I were to plead guilty to any indictment, that would be the one that I would plead guilty to, but I do not believe that plea will give much encouragement to hon. gentlemen opposite or to hon. gentlemen to my left.

The hon. member (Mr. Milne) said that there was a greater difference between the 1913 price and the 1922 price on binder twine than on most other things, although there were some exceptions. The reason for that is this. The 1913 price was exceptionally high; it was about 35 per cent higher than it was the year before. Hon. gentlemen will see at a glance what a glorious argument resulted from that on the part of the hon. member for Neepawa (Mr. Milne).

Mr. CAMPBELL: I fail to draw from an examination of these figures any such conclusion as that to which the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) has arrived, and it appears, going over these figures from 1899 to the present time, that binder twine has not kept pace with other commodities. Let us take freights, for instance. I think transportation charges have considerably more than doubled in the period from 1899 to the present time. Wages have probably tripled. I think about as recently as 1909, we could hire a labourer for about 20 cents an hour; in 1919, we would pay the same man 60 cents an hour. Therefore, binder twine still remained as one of the cheapest articles we have. Let us look at the matter in this way. As regards the purchasing power of money, twine is to-day cheaper or just as cheap as it was at that particular time.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) made some references to conditions obtaining in Saskatchewan, but I contend that there is no analogy between that and this kind of a bonus to an industry. I do not know that the Saskatchewan government at any time bonused any private industry. The telephone line that received a grant for organization purposes, was a purely public utility; there was nothing in it in the nature of a private concern at all. It is true that the telephone system in Saskatchewan is a joint stock company, but it is owned purely by the individual owners and users of the line.

The leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) seems to think it is a very serious state of affairs that only 10 per cent of our twine is manufactured in this country. We might just as well say that it is a serious state of affairs that we do not raise one per cent of the bananas used in this country. Sisal hemp and manila are not indigenous to this country, and I am very doubtful whether hemp will ever be successfully manufactured into binder twine in Canada. I do not, however, think there is in this section of the House any hon. member who would not give his best wishes to this industry, and I do not think anyone in western Canada and probably in eastern Canada who does not hope that the industry will be successful. But coupled with that, there is always this fear, that if it be successful, then we shall have an annual pilgrimage to this House to demand a duty on binder twine, and the protective argument will be put up as a reason why we should have that duty. In the end, probably this will cost the farmers of the West a good deal more than they make on the hemp.

Something was said about our being dependent upon the United States, and about building up monopolies in the United States, or being in the grip of American monopolies. As regards the farmer, there is no particular difference whether he is in the grip of an American monopoly or a Canadian monopoly. I should like to know whether we are not in the grip of a boot and shoe monopoly, a textile monopoly, a farm implement monopoly, and various other monopolies that have flourished under this protective system.

Mr. McBRIDE: One hon. member on this side of the House has just made the statement that not one of the hon. members in this section will vote for this proposal. I may say there is one member—he need not be an honourable member—who will vote for it.

Mr. FIELDING: Without cutting into the interesting discussion between the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) and hon. gentlemen to his left, I should like to call attention to a fallacy which ran through the whole argument of the leader of the Opposition with regard to the figures on binder twine. He appears to have assumed that on the Liberal side it was claimed that the tariff governs the price. Nobody ever proposed such a foolish thing as that. Whatever the price of binder twine was from time to time, it was by reason, not of the tariff, but of the cost of raw materials, transportation, labour. All those elements enter into the price of binder twine. It is absolutely safe to make this remark: Whether the price was low or high in any of those years, whatever it was, it would have been so much higher if the old duty of 12½ per cent had remained.

Mr. BIRD: I feel compelled to vote against both the amendment and the resolution, and in doing so I want to give a word of explanation. I voted before lunch for the bounty on copper, and that action of mine led me into a difficult situation amongst my friends on this side of the House, because they harked back to the action I took on oleomargarine the other day. They seem to have some difficulty in following the tortuous course of my actions. I do not want to enter very deeply into this discussion, except to state once more my underlying political philosophy. I think, having stated it, my course will explain itself. I am not here as a defender of any economic theory, because I realize that the people, at least my constituents, cannot live on theories. They are ordinary men and women of flesh and blood, and they have not yet acquired the habit of living under the air-bell of any economic theory. My actions are all in relationship to that view, and I want to say that if the rural dwellers of Canada do not see this yet, they are destined to see it, namely that the following of any theory, no matter how sacred it is as a theory, will not get them anywhere. It has not got them anywhere in the last fifty years and, as I gauge the political situation at the present time, it will not get them anywhere in the next fifty. There must be a change in the attitude of mind of the rural dweller of Canada if his livelihood is to be protected, if his standard of living is to be maintained in some reasonable comparison with that of the city dweller. The rural dweller of Canada for a great many years has followed the star of free trade and at last he has fallen into the pit of political impotence; and he is destined to abide there if he cannot become practical in his political allegiance. I spoke as I did on the oleomargarine question rather out of sympathy with the dairy farmer than for any other reason, and I made the mistake of using the language of irony. But realizing the danger of that practice I warned the House in the course of my speech that I was speaking ironically. I know, of course, that such language is always double-edged, but notwithstanding my warning I found, after I had concluded my speech that I had wounded my friends more than my enemies. I am sorry for that because my sympathies were altogether with the dairyman, as I conceive him, the man who has the practical work to do on the farm in producing the milk. From that point of view I had a great deal of sympathy with his position, although I am not a dairy farmer myself, nor a representative of dairy farmers.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BIRD: It may not be permissible for me to explain my action on that occasion, but I think it is usual in this House for hon. members to be allowed that privilege.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. JACOBS: Does my hon. friend not think that it is too hot an afternoon to hold any post mortem?

Mr. BIRD: I am trying to avoid that. I took my stand on that question, not as a dairyman or the representative of dairymen, but as the representative of a wheat growing section of Canada; and by no conceivable stretch of the imagination could it be considered that protection will ever benefit that part of the country. I was consistently carrying out my theory of representation when I took my stand on the question of free trade, as I did in the debate on oleomargarine. Now, with regard to my attitude towards copper. That attitude, let me say, owes something to the peculiar character of my constituency. I think I represent the only constituency in Canada that can produce both copper and hemp, and produce them equally well. With regard to copper and my vote on that question I frankly own that I made concessions to the isolated community to the north of my constituency, a community that has practically no representation in this House because it is in the minority and has no influence, to speak of, on the representation in parliament. I make that concession frankly to the people on the north side of the Nelson constituency, not with any idea that it will serve my own purposes, because I do not believe for a moment that it will. This matter of bounties contains no element of principle for me. A bounty, as I look at it, should be allowed or disallowed according to its practical bearing on the interests of the country as a whole. I am not admitting for a moment that there is any principle herein contained, and I certainly do declare that so far as my conscience is concerned my action is perfectly clear and straightforward.

With regard to hemp, on which I am reversing my vote, let me state the situation. My constituency, on its south side, is well adapted to the growing of hemp, but the farmers there, although their land will grow this product, do not look upon it as a practical proposition, so far at least as they are concerned. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) states that the north of Manitoba is not adapted to wheat growing. I want to correct him in that regard: There is no part of the west of Canada that can grow wheat to compete with that produced in the Swan River valley, comprising the south part of my constituency, and I make no exception whatsoever. It is recognized to be the best wheat growing section in the whole of the West, and there is no such thing as a crop failure in my constituency. For that reason the farmers are not interested in hemp. They believe that hemp producing would involve them in additional work in the fall of the year when attention to their crops is all-important. Moreover, they do not believe that the length of the season in the fall is sufficient for the attention which is required in the proper curing of good hemp. This is not my own opinion, for my own opinion is not concerned; I have it on the authority of a very representative body of farmers in my constituency. They do not think that there is any advantage in this bounty on hemp; if there were, I believe they would possibly be in favour of it. I know from experience that the farmer of Canada is not a theorist; he is not wedded to any theory. And why should he be?

Too long has he been misled by theoretical propositions; he has followed that will-of-the-wisp for all these years and has got nothing thereby. He has been led into the never-ending controversy on the respective merits of protection and free trade, which question has blinded him to his own interest, so that he has come out the loser. And so far as I can see he will continue to lose. I think I am representing the attitude of the farmer of western Canada when I say that he has no interest in any theory as such; I cannot conceive his being so foolish as to have any such interest. I believe he is becoming sufficiently enlightened on the economic and political questions of this country and is no longer to be fooled by mere theories. The situation of the farmer is rather suggestive of the method used in the capturing of a gamecock. They bring along a gamecock in capitivity and place it near the free bird. Presently the two become so absorbed in their mutual attentions that the owner of the captive comes along and catches them both. That is typical, I think, of the case of the Canadian farmer. The political parties have succeeded in ensnaring the farmer in the controversy between protection and free trade, and in the process the rural dweller has been deceived and has got nothing in the result. One would think that having been so badly left behind he would have learned wisdom; but the occurrences of the last few days show that the farmer of Canada has not learned wisdom yet. He has still the desire to pursue the rut which leads towards no profitable goal. In making this explanation, I hope that my hon. friends will not misunderstand me when I indulge in the somewhat dangerous practice of using a two-edged phrase, because I have no other reason for being here than to help our rural men and women receive a better proportion of the good things of life that are being produced in this wonderfully wealthy Dominion.

Mr. DICKIE: I believe the government is advocating this bounty largely for the benefit of my hon. friends to the left, and I do not see why we should spend our time this torrid afternoon trying to force the benefit on unwilling recipients. The free trade Old Man of the Sea seems to have fastened himself around the necks of my hon. friends to the left to the exclusion of vision and good judgment. I believe that the encouragement of the hemp industry will help our friends materially, but if they do not think so, why spend our time trying to force a benefit on them that they are unwilling to receive?

Mr. GOOD: Mr. Chairman,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. GOOD: At the risk of offending those who wish to get out of this "torrid" chamber I shall venture to make a few remarks. We have had a very interesting exposition of political philosophy from my hon. friend from Nelson (Mr. Bird). I take issue with him mildly in regard to the application of what I consider to be a very sound principle. When he enunciates the welfare of the nation as the only principle worth considering in deciding between protection and free trade, I think he is on safe ground. I would suggest that if we are convinced that one policy is better than the other, always bearing in mind the common welfare, then he and I are perfectly agreed. I use the very same principle as a test of either protection or free trade, and from a fairly close study of the matter leaving aside for the time being considerations of political economy, the general policy of free trade works out very much more to the advantage of any nation adopting it than does the policy of protection. If we are going to divide ourselves into a number of classes or communities seeking something for ourselves as such, I do not know what we are coming to. Certainly I very much question the advisability of taking this position.

I regret that the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Meighen) is not in his seat. I think he is really too shrewd to believe half of what he said this afternoon. For instance, in reference to his quotation of the prices of binder twine, it must be obvious to him, as was partially pointed out by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), that there are many other considerations entering into the determination of price. I would add to those already enumerated by the minister that the price index, or the general price level, has to be kept in mind in any comparison of figures.

As for the competition between towns, which was referred to by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, I agree with him that it is just as objectionable and just as unjustifiable as the competition between nations. I think we are prepared to admit that generally speaking such competition between communities is reprehensible. If so, I submit it calls for just as strong condemnation when indulged in between nations.

I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) ought to remember the danger of taking habit-forming drugs. In the actual working out of this policy of giving bounties, subsidies or tariff protection, we nearly always find that after we take the drug for a few years we acquire the habit, and it is almost impossible to break it off.

I believe the right hon. leader of the Opposition left a wrong impression on the House with regard to the binder twine industry. I happen to live near the Brantford binder twine factory—one of the few survivors of the 'nineties. It has been alleged that the abolition of the protective tariff on binder twine brought about a number of bankruptcies and general disaster to those engaged in the industry. I regret that I have not the detailed analysis of the situation which was made two years ago by, I think, the Toronto Star, but, speaking from memory, the actual statistics as to production will not bear out the statement made by the leader of the Opposition. If my recollection serves me, the relative production has not decreased in Canada. And the factory at Brantford has gone ahead by leaps and bounds. The management have had difficulty in keeping up with the demand for their products. It has been impossible to get a sufficient amount of capital in the industry to expand fast enough to meet the growing demand, and this in spite of the fact that they were face to face with competition from the larger binder twine industries in the States. A number of our Canadian binder twine concerns which went to pieces at the time referred to were in the promotion stage. If the right hon. leader of the Opposition looks into the statistics carefully, I think he will find that his statement is not correct, and that to speak of the binder twine industry as having been brought to an emaciated, gasping condition by the abolition of the duty in 1898 is very far from the fact.

One more thought I should like to present to him and to the House, particularly to some hon. members opposite who have perhaps some lingering belief in the gospel—shall I say?—of freer trade. If industry, speaking generally, could be stimulated by this method which we are so prone to adopt at the present time, which seems very plausible and which I notice commends itself to men like the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. McMurray) and a number of his associates, including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell),—if it could be stimulated in this way, then surely we would have had happier results for following this policy. I submit that a careful examination of the facts will show that if you stimulate one industry it can only be at the expense of some other industry, that where you build up one you tear down another, and on the average the whole result is negative rather than positive. I submit as a general principle in that connection that a mistaken public policy based on an economic fallacy must lead to disaster. As for me I am quite prepared to stand—

Mr. McMURRAY: Is it not a fact that the Brantford factory of which my hon. friend speaks so approvingly received its start under a system of protection and that when the tariff wall went down it flourished? The very illustration he gives contradicts his own argument.

Mr. GOOD: No, far from it. If I remember rightly this factory was built before the abolition of the duty in 1897.

Mr. McMURRAY: That is what I say.

Mr. GOOD: It is quite true it was built before that time, but it had a very precarious existence for some years and it was on the point of bankruptcy when the present manager took over the job. I had it from frequent conversations with him that the success of that industry has been almost wholly, if not entirely due to careful management. He has stated on more occasions than one, I think even publicly, that he and his associates have no desire for any tariff protection. The success of that factory has been marked since the abolition of the duty; prior to that time they were getting along in a very limping way. These are the facts. I simply wanted to impress this upon the committee—and I am sorry the right hon. leader of the Opposition is not here—that we have tried out this policy in Canada and the results have been disastrous. We ought therefore to pause and examine the course we have taken. Having regard to the results that have been secured from this fiscal policy, we ought to be quite certain as to the basic principles involved before we trust our future to it.

Amendment (Mr. McMaster) negatived: Yeas, 44; Nays, 81.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. H. B. McGIVERIN (Ottawa): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the House I desire to present the tenth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills.

Mr. SPEAKER: Under Rule 115, the rules can be suspended in cases of urgent and pressing necessity. The hon. gentleman has not made the point that there is a pressing necessity in this case.

Mr. McGIVERIN: The explanation is that to-night is the last night for private bills, and that if these bills are not placed on the order paper to-day they will have to stand over.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. gentleman has made out a case for the presentation of the report.

Mr. McGIVERIN: I beg to move:

That in accordance with the recommendation contained in the tenth report of the select standing committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills, the following bills be placed on the order paper for consideration in Committee of the Whole this day:

Bill No. 224 (from the Senate) for the relief of John Samuel McDonnell.

Bill No. 227 (from the Senate) for the relief of Margaret Marie Pope.

Bill No. 228 (from the Senate) for the relief of Loretta May Girard.

Bill No. 239 (from the Senate) for the relief of Herbert Hugh Keller.

Bill No. 240 (from the Senate) for the relief of Nellie May DeBlaquire.

Bill No. 229 (from the Senate) for the relief of Birdena Frances Wallace LeMay.

Motion agreed to.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1923-4

A message from His Excellency the Governor General, transmitting Supplementary Estimates for the year ending March 31, 1924, was presented by Hon. W. S. Fielding (Minister of Finance) read by Mr. Speaker to the House, and referred to the Committee of Supply.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT, 1913, AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 231, to amend the Quebec Savings Banks Act, 1913.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Certain charters continued.

Mr. FIELDING: There are two savings banks in the province of Quebec having charters separate and apart from the ordinary Bank Act. The purpose of this bill is to extend the charter of these two savings banks for a further period of ten years. It is the usual bill following the Bank Act.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON PETROLEUM

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 214 respecting the payment of bounties on petroleum.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Bounty on petroleum.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Before the bill is gone on with in detail—has my hon. friend had an opportunity of further considering this question, and of making up his mind whether it is not possible to save public revenue and at the same time keep the small well producer going by fixing a limited number of barrels beyond which the bounty would not be paid?

Mr. FIELDING: That suggestion was offered in several quarters at an early stage of the discussion and I am sorry we have not been able to concur in it. We think that the concession now made is giving all concerned an opportunity of adjusting themselves to the changed conditions.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Does my hon. friend think that the small producer can go on at all under the new conditions? Or is it a matter of indifference to him?

Mr. FIELDING: As my hon. friend asks my opinion I rather think they will go on, but my opinion is not worth as much as that of other members who are better informed, perhaps.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 187 to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Excise duty on cigarettes decreased from $7.50 to $6.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose this bill is just what it appeared to me to be—I have not had an opportunity of studying it—that it merely carries into effect what we have already discussed and what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has already explained.

Mr. FIELDING: The first part of the bill provides for a reduction in the duty on cigarettes. The latter part of the measure is in regard to the abolition of the excise duty on beet sugar.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EXPORT ACT—PULPWOOD

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance moved the second reading of Bill No. 242, to amend the Export Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

On section 1—Governor in Council may by regulation prohibit export of pulpwood.

Mr. McMASTER: Before this clause is carried I wish to direct a few observations to the House. I think it was the celebrated Doctor Johnson who made the following reply when asked by his landlady as to the condition in which certain food came before him: "Madam, this meat was ill-killed, ill-dressed, ill-cooked and ill-served." Apparently it was undesirable from all points of view. And, with all respect for those who are responsible for this legislation, I have the same feeling concerning it. This is not the first time that legislation of this sort has been brought before the House during the last few years. The Protectionist and Unionist government in 1920 brought in a similar though a wider measure before the House. In the session of 1920 Sir Robert Borden moved:

> That it is expedient to bring in a measure to amend the Customs Act, and to provide that the Governor in Council may from time to time make regulations for or relating to the exportation of any article, commodity or material which is produced or manufactured in Canada, and which is, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, necessary or desirable for the use or consumption of the Canadian people, or for the encouragement, maintenance or preservation of any trade, industry, business or occupation, and may by such regulations order and direct that any such article, commodity or material shall be exported only under license issued by the Minister of Customs and Inland Revenue, or by an officer appointed upon the minister's recommendation for that purpose.

I will not read the whole resolution, but I would direct the attention of the House to what I consider very sound observations made at that time by the now Minister of Customs and Excise (Mr. Bureau). After referring to this legislation he spoke as follows:

> For my part, I would like to know of some concrete cases in connection with which legislation of this kind becomes necessary in time of peace and under ordinary conditions. We complain that we have a large debt; that our currency is at a discount; that the balance of trade is against us. Now we are going to place in the hands of the government the power to restrict exports of any kind of commodity. Whatever the reason may be, I do not think that there is any emergency to call for action of that kind. Unless the special committee submit a report on the matter which changes my mind, I shall be absolutely and entirely opposed to vesting such power in the Governor in Council.

I addressed the House on the same occasion and spoke as follows:

> This proposed legislation is to my mind so vicious that I wish to have an opportunity given on the introduction of the resolution of speaking to it. It would be very well for the country to be fully advised as to what the government purpose doing. I would have thought that the Canadian nation was thoroughly sick of the government endeavouring to control industry, and it is surely bad enough to have a protectionist government in power with the right to control imports into the country, but it would be worse to have them control exports from the country.

It was on that basis that I opposed the resolution at that time. However, the resolution was referred to a special committee. That committee went into the matter. Subsequently Sir Robert Borden begged leave to withdraw the resolution and it was withdrawn on the 30th June, 1920. I commend the action of Sir Robert Borden in that connection to the present administration.

5 p.m.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), in some remarks directed to this quarter of the chamber some time ago, referred to the member for Brome (Mr. McMaster) having raised a little altar of his own. I admit the fact. But I would remind him that at least the fires of that altar are not fed by splinters from a broken platform. I would draw his attention to the fact that when he made those observations he stated that he was in favour of the principle of free trade, but in order to be on a level with the United States, who had placed high duties against our goods we had to place high duties against them. I will not enter into an argument as to either the soundness of the economics or the soundness of the logic contained in that statement, but I would direct the Prime Minister's attention to the fact that the United States have no duties, as far as I am aware, against exports from that country of pulpwood or any other commodity; that their desire is to further advance their foreign trade and not to restrict it. The Golden Rule was said by Mr. Roosevelt to be not only good morality but sound politics; I think it is a particularly wise rule to follow when the other party is very much stronger and more powerful than yourself. "Do as you would be done by." This is more especially desirable when the other party is ten times more powerful than yourself. If we are to prohibit the export of pulpwood from this country what are we doing? We are inviting reprisals. I do not know whether they will come or not but we are certainly inviting them. What would the situation be supposing the United States restricted the export of hardwood from that country? What would the furniture manufacturers in western Ontario do to replace their raw material, the hardwood that is brought in from the United States? They would certainly suffer, and with them the Canadian people. How long could our cotton mills proceed to carry on their business if there was an export duty placed on cotton, or its export into Canada were restricted? They could not carry on very long.

Mr. HOEY: What about coal?

Mr. McMASTER: An hon. member asks "What about coal?" I was just going to speak of coal. The whole of central Canada is warmed in winter, generally speaking, by anthracite coal brought from the United States, and we who live in central Canada would not contemplate with any equanimity our source of supply being interfered with. Indeed, suppose the United States in reprisal adopted an embargo against degrees from American universities? What would happen in that connection, or even if invitations to address Rotarian clubs in that country were prohibited?

What influence has been at work upon the government to bring them to this frame of mind? The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) told us that the Liberal party had a frame of mind looking towards free trade. Restriction of exports is not an evidence of a frame of mind reflecting free trade. What has deflected the Liberal party from its frame of mind, according to the senior member for Halifax? Is it those gentlemen in the country whose raw material is pulpwood and who wish to be in a position to buy pulpwood cheaper because there will be fewer buyers in the market? If it is those gentlemen who think their interest will be advanced by such a restriction, they are very short-sighted and they are making a great mistake. For, what are they likely to run into? If hon. gentlemen will turn up the United States statutes, cumulative supplement of 1923, they will see on page 347 a paragraph in the American tariff which reads:

Par. 1301. Printing paper, not specially provided for one-fourth of one cent per pound and 10 per centum ad valorem: Provided, that if any country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government shall forbid or restrict in any way the exportation of (whether by law, order, regulation, contractual relation, or otherwise, directly or indirectly), or impose any export duty, export license fee, or other export charge of any kind whatsoever (whether in the form of additional charge or license fee or otherwise) upon printing paper, wood pulp, or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp, the President may enter into negotiations with such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government to secure the removal of such prohibition, restriction, export duty, or other export charge, and if it is not removed he may, by proclamation, declare such failure of negotiations, setting forth the facts. Thereupon, and until such prohibition, restriction, export duty, or other export charge is removed, there shall be imposed upon printing paper provided for in this paragraph, when imported either directly or indirectly from such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, an additional duty of 10 per centum ad valorem and in addition thereto an amount equal to the highest export duty or other export charge imposed by such country, dependency, province, or other subdivision of government, upon either an equal amount of printing paper or an amount of wood pulp or wood for use in the manufacture of wood pulp necessary to manufacture such printing paper.

That is the situation in which this country may find itself if it attempts to restrict. Surely we have had long enough in this country restriction of the right of purchase; but the modern restrictionist wishes to restrict us in the right to sell, and that may land the country in this undesirable position, that our foreign trade in regard to pulpwood may be considerably prejudiced. I think also I might call the attention of the government to this fact, that the passing or bringing into force of such legislation as this, is to ill requite the action of the American people as regards the supply of anthracite coal which we have noticed for the last few years. In this part of Canada we have had for one or two winters back a scarcity of anthracite coal, and we have found that the United States, although they were themselves suffering from a shortage, saw that Canada got its fair proportion. This is a very poor requital for their generosity in that regard.

What is the real theory, what is the real principle that one should follow in this connection as in other matters of this kind? I take it that after a Canadian citizen has grown a bushel of wheat, or manufactured a cheese, or cut a log, or cut a cord of pulpwood, he should have the right to exchange that for the very best value he can obtain, either inside or outside of this country. I see no other proper theory or principle to follow.

And this legislation, if applied, is directly contrary to that. This constitutes a bad precedent. but before I touch on the question of this precedent, let me state how this will affect people in my riding.

I do not often make appeals based on how a matter will affect people in my riding. I do not consider myself purely a mere delegate to think simply of the interests of my constituents, but I consider myself as a representative of the whole people, although I am elected from a certain constituency. In this case I believe the interest of my constituency marches on all fours with the interest of the whole country. Under this legislation a farmer in my riding who wishes to sell a certain quantity of pulpwood, let us say to Richford, Vermont, or to an American paper mill, somewhere to the south, will find himself hampered. He will not be able to get the price that he otherwise would obtain for it. That is unjust; it is not right; it is not consistent with the principles which we would have supposed would animate a party calling itself a Liberal party. It is a bad precedent. If it is right to do this, if it is right, in the interest, let us suppose, of the newsprint manufacturers to limit the right of sale of pulpwood to producers, then it is right, in the interest of the millers, to limit the right of export of the grain producers, the wheat producers. There is no limit to the application of this principle, once it is admitted. It is a most unwholesome precedent.

I had the honour to be a member of the last parliament, and I took some part in the consideration of public questions which came before that parliament and in the debates which we held. One of the strongest arguments which we used against the continuance in power of the distinguished leader of the Opposition and the group which surrounded him, was that they were too fond of trying to govern this country by orders in council. We stated that time and time again in the House, and the matter went pretty widely throughout the country. This was one of the reasons, one of the concomitant reasons which led to his defeat. Now what do we find? We find that this unwholesome practice of government by order in council is introduced in connection with this legislation; that some fine morning three months from now, if this legislation passes, the farmers may find that an order in council has been passed in Ottawa restricting their right to sell certain of their wood products to the United States.

When Clovis, one of the first of the Frankish kings was baptized into the church of the day, St. Rémi said to him: "Courbe la tête, fier Sicambre, adore ce que tu as brûlé, brûle ce que tu as adoré." "Burn what thou hast adored and adore what thou hast burned." I do not know who is the St. Rémi who has given this advice to the present administration but I do know that in this regard the present administration is doing precisely what St. Rémi advised Clovis he should do.

I may bring my remarks to a close. I do not wish to detain the committee, but I know that I am on sound Liberal ground in making the protest that I do. I cannot, however, fail to think that a picture which I see before my mind is a somewhat true picture. I see the present administration as a ship, the Prime Minister as its captain, the Minister of Finance as its first mate, and the Minister of Justice as its second mate. In accordance, it seems to me, with orders issued by the second mate, the first mate has thrown overboard the compass. It had become somewhat depolarized before it was confided to the deep. The chart has followed. The starboard watch—for "starboard" means the "steerboard," the side which controls the ship—watch the chart going down into the ocean, with their faces wreathed in smiles. The port watch do not feel quite so happy. They wonder whether it is worth while launching the life boat in order to recover the chart before it sinks into the ocean. While they are contemplating and waiting, the chart goes down, down, down! No chart, no compass! The ship without a course, without a compass, without a chart, is driven on by this wave of protectionist feeling and wind of protectionist sentiment, until it will, I am sorry to say, inevitably be shipwrecked on the rock of a hostile and, I am afraid, justly exasperated public opinion.

Mr. POWER: I wish to make just two or three remarks at this stage, since I intend to move the six months' hoist on the third reading of the bill. I simply wish to point out to the committee and to hon. members representing certain rural constituencies, that the bill as it is now submitted to the House purports to prohibit the exportation of pulpwood from all lands, the bill to be put into force by order in council at any time after publication of the regulations for four consecutive weeks in the Canada Gazette. What does this mean? It is true it has been intimated to the House by the Minister of Finance, and I think by some other speakers, that the bill will not have for effect the prohibition of the exportation of pulpwood cut from lands belonging to farmers. We have the word of the Minister of Finance to that effect and I am quite willing to take it; I believe he will stand by that promise.

Mr. FIELDING: I did not say that absolutely. What I pointed out was that suggestions of that character had been offered and would be considered; but I gave no decision on the point.

Mr. POWER: That only makes my argument stronger.

Mr. FIELDING: Perhaps.

Mr. POWER: I am glad that the minister has made that statement. At any rate, the government promises to consider the question as to whether or not the exportation of pulpwood to the United States from lands belonging to farmers will be prohibited. I think that so long as the present government remains in power it is highly improbable that it would go the extreme lengths mentioned in the bill. But what guarantee is there that the party led by my right hon. friend (Mr. Meighen) may not some day come into power—stranger things have happened, strange things happened yesterday—and do just what the bill proposes? If I understand rightly the views of the right hon. gentleman and those of his followers, they are pledged to prohibit absolutely and totally the exportation of pulpwood from all freehold lands in the Dominion. In what position would my hon. friends be placed who come from the border counties, such as Brome, and a number of constituencies in Quebec and Ontario where the pioneer settlers in what I might call the backwoods are obliged, in order to cultivate their lands and to eke out their existence while discharging their homestead obligations, to sell pulpwood? In what position would they find themselves if after four weeks' notice they were told that they might no longer export wood to the United States? They would find that the price of pulpwood had so diminished that it would not pay them to take it off their land. I simply warn my colleagues on both sides of the House of the results that will attend this legislation, and I sincerely hope that while there is yet time the government may decide to postpone further consideration of the bill until the commission which it proposes to appoint shall have made a full report on the matter.

Mr. GOOD: Last year, along with other members of the House, I got frequent communications from a Mr. Barnjum, who was interested in the preservation of our forest resources. I think we were all very much impressed with the representations made by him in that connection; we were impressed with the tremendous importance of preserving our forest resources against fire and damage by insects, and so on. Those communications have continued during this year, and I have noticed one rather singular and to me significant fact in connection with the very excellent representations regarding the preservation of our forest resources, namely this, that those representations usually wound up with the recommendation that, as our supply of pulpwood was rapidly being exhausted, we should prohibit its export. I have looked into these representations and I want to say briefly that so far as I can see the parties who were—I would not say, using Mr. Barnjum, although the circumstances would seem to suggest that idea—at all events, those who were interested in the prohibition of the exportation of our pulpwood apparently wanted to prevent competition from the other side. The statement was made, for instance, that we should build up the pulp industry on the north side of the St. Lawrence rather than on the south side. Well, I submit that it does not make any difference to the demands on our pulpwood whether the pulp mill is on one side of the river or the other; you will use the same amount of pulpwood. I am of the opinion, from my careful reading of the representations and the recommendation to which I have referred, that the very necessary precautions that we ought to take to preserve our forest resources have been used as a cloak for an attempt to carry out a policy intended to benefit a few pulp men in Canada by protecting them against competition for the purchase of pulpwood from the other side. That is the way I regard the situation, and I cannot but feel that the whole thing in that respect bears a sinister aspect. Let me say that I am absolutely in sympathy with every possible effort that either this government or the provincial governments may make to protect and increase our forest resources. But I consider that the proposition to prohibit the exportation of pulpwood has no connection whatsoever therewith, and that the bill now before the committee giving this power to the Governor in Council is a very dangerous and objectionable measure.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—CONSTRUCTION

Hon. GEORGE P. GRAHAM (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the third reading of Bill No. 234, respecting the construction of Canadian National Railway Lines.

Right Hon. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to this motion and to refer but very briefly indeed to the debate of yesterday on the same subject. It will be remembered that I endeavoured to show the House yesterday that heretofore all the moneys required for railway construction, capital investment, deficits, all purposes connected with our railways, were, under the practice that had prevailed, included in the estimates and consequently the country was informed each year as to just what the commitments of the nation were with respect to our railways. I endeavoured to show that in that way parliament had retained control over the annual expenditure. These were the principles that were embodied in the practice. It will be recalled that exception was taken to my statement at the time by the Minister of Finance, who stated that the estimates merely provided for deficits for such moneys as were needed for administration and operation. A somewhat sharp difference of opinion arose. I adhered to my view. Well, it is scarcely necessary to say that the facts bear me out. But I go further. The law of the land provides that; the law of the land compels it, nor did the late government ever attempt anything else. The Canadian National Railway Act in section 16 reads as follows—I shall not read it all:

> Expenses shall be paid out of the receipts and revenues. Deficits shall be payable out of Consolidated Revenue Fund.

But here is the precaution:

> In the event of a deficit occurring at any time during any fiscal year the amount of such deficit shall from time to time be payable by the Minister of Finance out of any unappropriated moneys in the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, the amounts paid by the minister under this section to be included in the Estimates submitted to parliament at its first session following the close of such fiscal year; and in the event of a surplus existing at the close of any fiscal year such surplus shall be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Now as to moneys to provide for capital investment, these are covered by section 23, which reads as follows:

With the approval of the Governor in Council—

This is the section that was in question with the now celebrated Hotel Scribe:

With the approval of the Governor in Council. . . sanctioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals, the company may from time to time construct and operate railway lines—

Exactly the wording of the present legislation.

—branches and extensions, or railway facilities or properties of any description in respect to the construction whereof respectively, parliament may hereafter authorize the necessary expenditure, or the guarantee of an issue of the company's securities. A copy of any plan and profile made in respect of any completed railway shall be deposited with the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada.

And pursuant to those laws of this parliament every dollar for the purposes of the railway, whether to be raised by guarantee or advances in cash, was included in the estimates. The House will scarcely be surprised to learn that when the bill was going through in connection with the loans to the companies, although nothing else was ever intended but that the money should be each year voted by parliament, hon. gentlemen opposite rose and insisted that a clause go in compelling the submission to parliament. That submission was immediately adhered to and a clause put in, and these hon. gentlemen now, and chiefly the Prime Minister, who at page 1539 of the Hansard of 1919 railed in derision at the government for not having a clause in to provide that each year the money should be submitted in the estimates, and who declared that without it parliament would lose all its control, and who as a consequence had the clause put in, now comes to parliament with a bill and apparently is going to get the quiescent approval of this House to provide that the government does not need to put in the estimates any more the moneys advanced to the National Railways for construction purposes. This is of course a change of front, but a change of front is the invariable rule, in fact it is about the only consistent thing about the government—a change of front on every piece of legislation and policy. I for my part desire to do what we did, and did willingly, in 1919. I desire to provide for the retention by parliament of its control year by year of the amount of the people's money that is going out that year, and I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Stevens):

That the said bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend same so as to provide that the money or guarantees of money required for the purposes of the said bill must for each year appear in the estimates and be voted by parliament.

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that every appropriation for the public service and every obligation assumed in the name of the government of Canada shall be subject to a direct vote of the House of Commons is a principle to which we can all subscribe. But I do not agree with my hon. friend in his insistence that all items should appear in the estimates. He said, using a quotation a moment ago, that it was essential that the House should know year by year the outgo for the year. Now there is nothing in the law which my hon. friend has quoted to show that it is essential that all items shall be voted in the estimates. The essence of the law is that the moneys shall be voted by parliament, and parliament is now being asked to vote the moneys for this particular purpose. Again and again in the course of the discussion yesterday the hon. gentleman said that we were asking for a blank cheque. He magnified the situation as to how the Minister of Railways might enlarge or diminish or lengthen the mileage of the railways. In that case the essence is that a railway has to be constructed from A to B. That is the vital question. But if the mileage estimated by the engineers is sixty-two miles, and it turns out to be sixty-one or sixty-three miles, there is no vital error if you take the money that is appropriated and apply it to that purpose. There is no blank cheque so long as you state your sum and state the purpose for which it is to be voted. A railroad from A to B shall be constructed, and the sum is stated and you cannot go beyond that. Again I say, the vital question is not that the item shall appear in the estimates, but that the money shall be appropriated by a vote of parliament.

I called the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that the railway subsidies involving millions of dollars have always been voted in a separate bill. He said no, and later qualified that and said perhaps—he was not sure. I am sure that these railway subsidies, and they are quite akin to what we are doing now, have again and again been submitted to this parliament by a separate vote. Therefore I see no wrong in these railways being treated separately.

There is the further point, the reason for that. Let us take as an illustration the resolution on the order paper to loan $10,000,000 to the Montreal Harbour Commission. Here is a case in which we are not going to vote the money year by year in the estimates. We are enacting a law; providing the required amount; we do not limit the harbour board to a particular sum for one year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the Finance Minister permit a question which will bring the matter to a point? Will the minister tell us why it was wrong in 1919 to provide authority to the government to advance money for the construction of railways, for the National lines, and why it is right to do it by legislation in 1923?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not quite recall what happened in 1919.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have Hansard and the bill here.

Mr. FIELDING: As far as my impression is concerned I do recollect the question. However, I do not want to dwell unduly on this matter. Is it not a reasonable proposition that instead off asking for money each year provision should be made for carrying on the work continuously? These railways are not to be completed in one year, neither is the harbour of Montreal. In both cases we vote a sum estimated to be sufficient for the purpose, and if it is not expended in one year it is expended in another. In both cases parliament has given the necessary authority. All that my right hon. friend has said regarding the authority of parliament is complied with in this resolution. We have a distinct vote for a distinct purpose, we have a distinct limitation of amount, and what more can be asked? The Minister of Railways pointed out that if you limit the amount to a sum for the particular year you may stop the operations at the end of the twelve months. As long as you have designated the roads to be constructed, as long as the terminal points are indicated, as long as the amount is limited, what earthly good is to be accomplished in the month of December by telling the Minister of Railways that he must stop and not do anything more? It is not reason, it is not law, it is not common sense.

Mr. FORKE: I listened very carefully to the reading of the section of the Railway Act by the leader of the Opposition which applies, and I am forced to say that I came to the same conclusion that the Minister of Finance has just stated—there is a very specific provision that the money shall be voted by parliament. I can find nothing in the statute which requires that the money shall be voted year by year. I should just like to remark parenthetically that some very wonderful things must have been taking place in parliament in years gone by judging from the remarks we have heard from the leader of the Opposition. However, I for one am not so much interested in what was right or what was wrong in 1919. What I want to know is whether it is right or wrong to carry out what we are interested in at the present time; and I cannot see anything in the act—

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the desire of the House that we should take a vote before taking recess?

Mr. FORKE: I am through.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr SPEAKER: We will proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. FORKE: I was just finishing.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon gentleman.

Mr. FORKE: I can see the reasonableness of what is proposed. The railway building is to be spread over a period of three years but is to be carried on from year to year. We know how much it is going to cost, and therefore, it does not seem to me to be unreasonable to vote the money for the construction of these lines at the present time. However, I want to remain within the strict reading of the law and if the leader of the Opposition is right in his contention that what is proposed here is against the law, of course, we will bow to the decision.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the House ready for the question?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Just a word in answer to what the Minister of Finance has said. He claims that our position is not sense, is not law; I do not know how much further he went, I simply remember that much. Now, let me read what the present Prime Minister said on this subject. His words are to be found at page 1539 of Hansard for 1919. He said:

> If parliament wishes to part with the last vestige of the control that it has over the executive, we should pass this clause, but if parliament wishes to retain any control it may have over expenditures this clause should not be permitted to stand. If money is needed for the carrying on or improvement of the Grand Trunk system, let the minister come to parliament, just as the government does in regard to other appropriations that may be necessary, state in parliament what money he needs and have that money voted by parliament

I do not think it is too strong a term to say that this section is thoroughly vicious in that it deprives parliament altogether of its control over the supplies that may be necessary for this purpose. Under this term "the operation or improvement of the Grand Trunk system" the minister can spend public money for any conceivable purpose in connection with these roads, building hotels, branch lines and stations; he can go into any constituency in this Dominion where the railway is going to run and find that this particular town needs this improvement or that particular county needs that improvement—

And so on. That is what the Prime Minister thought in 1919.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There has been a change of government since then.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: There has been a change of government, yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A different government altogether.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The ideas my right hon. friend had when he was here are absolutely and entirely different from the ideas he holds now that he is over there. What was absolutely wrong when he was sitting here is absolutely right when he is sitting on the treasury benches. What was practically misappropriation of public funds when he was in opposition becomes a public duty entitling him to make the expenditure when he sits there as leader of the government. Of course it is a different government. That is the whole point. It is not necessary to argue this matter any further. The Prime Minister himself gives the House the answer: He was here before, he is over there now. The facts are the same. Surely they are the same to this extent at any rate: It is a first rate thing for the country as a whole, and for parliament, to know exactly what we are spending on railways, to know each twelve months where we stand.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is that not exactly what the Minister of Railways is doing?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Not at all, that is exactly what the minister is getting away from. We might just as well be clear on that point; there is the whole question. Previously we had to have our twelve months' programme which covered everything including deficits and construction. My hon. friend's bill this year covers construction just as it did before but we will not get the complete annual statement as we formerly did. Under the estimates parliament has got some control, but under this bill we shall have none. This policy will enable the government to do in the constituencies exactly what was foretold by the Prime Minister when he was in opposition. There are twenty-eight constituencies in which they can do practically what they like. Supposing an election comes on? I do not believe there is any prospect of an immediate election, but supposing there was?

Mr. GRAHAM: You never can tell.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Here is the very vehicle for the government's purpose, here is the bait which can be dangled here and there. Parliament has the right to know what is to be done each year and has the right to vote money for the purposes of this undertaking. But that right has gone. If parliament wants to do this all right, but let parliament clearly understand what it is doing. The customary practice, the right and proper practice is being changed and the minister will be in a position to say "I am not bound by the approximations given to parliament. The mileage of these lines are mere approximations, the amounts of money to be spent are mere approximations. I can do as I like, under those approximations, with the credit of this country."

6 p.m.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. GRAHAM: I just want to inform my hon. friend that what he has read is not consistent with this bill at all, not in the least. If he will look further into the matter, and calmly, he will find that parliament is making the appropriation, that stated amounts are to be expended every year, and that a full report must be made to parliament of the money expended.

Mr. MEIGHEN: After it is spent.

Mr. GRAHAM: Parliament then has the right to say what further shall be done and if we should overrun certain amounts parliament will have to provide for that.

Mr. STEVENS: If they are overrun.

Mr. GRAHAM: No deviation, no thwarting of the power or will of parliament, directly or indirectly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: What option has parliament if the money is overrun or spent? How does parliament exercise any control after the money is spent and gone? This is the Scribe Hotel case over again.

Mr. GRAHAM: My right hon. friend is raising a very small point. If everybody is dishonest, crooked, then the thing may go wrong; but if people are fairly honest, with the check of parliament, they will not go wrong. Let me point this out. My hon. friend said that this is against the law. This bill in getting its third reading, will be the law when it passes through this House.

Mr. CALDWELL: I can see a very good reason from a logical point of view, why this amendment should not carry. Supposing we pass this amendment, each year an appropriation must be voted to carry on construction for the year. We will vote enough this year to make the surveys on these different lines. It is now fairly late in the season, and it is possible that not more than a survey will be made this year. Next year we must vote money for the construction that it is expected we shall be able to carry out during the year.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Vote it this year.

Mr. CALDWELL: This means that this House will be in session until August. That is a possibility. There is also a possibility that no construction will take place next year. I am in favour of voting the three-years' programme. I am certainly in favour of this parliament voting money to carry on public works, and I can see an object in voting the supply for the three-years' programme, for the reasons I have given.

Mr. GOOD: I should like to ask the Prime Minister for a word of explanation before the vote is called.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is the explanation that my hon. friend wants?

Mr. GOOD: The Prime Minister has made in the past certain representations which are alleged to be inconsistent with his position to-day, and I should like some explanation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They are not inconsistent. If my hon. friend will carefully read all that has been said to-day, he will find that there is no inconsistency.

The House divided on the proposed amendment (Mr. Meighen) which was negatived on the following division:

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—SECURITIES

Hon W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Canadian National Railways Act, 1919, and to provide that no securities as defined in section 26 of the said act, including in such definition equipment certificates or obligations in any form intended to be issued to the public, shall be issued, except those approved as to form, terms and amount by the Governor in Council, and that such securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty.

Motion agreed to and the House went into committee on the resolution, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: The purpose of this resolution is to restrict in some respects the powers of the Canadian National Railway Company. The numerous companies now comprising the Canadian National Railway system have their independent charters, under which certain borrowing powers are conferred. These charters are still outstanding; some of the borrowing powers remain unused, and if we take no action whatever it would be within the power of the Canadian National Railway Company to exercise those borrowing powers. What we propose in the first place by this resolution is that no such security shall be issued under those old borrowing powers without the consent of the Governor in Council. In the second place, where they have the lawful right to issue securities and where that issue is approved by the Governor in Council, in that case the Governor in Council shall have the power to guarantee them. It is not likely that those old borrowing powers will be very largely used, because the later legislation confers borrowing powers—both the Canadian National Railway Act of 1919 and the act with which we have been dealing today. A bond or security of any kind now issued by the Canadian National Railway Company is to all intents and purposes a bond of the government of Canada; it is desirable, therefore, that we should recognize that fact in the placing of securities. As I say, it is not anticipated that these borrowing powers will be used extensively; perhaps they will be used quite rarely if at all, but if they are used it will be only with the consent of the Governor in Council, and if bonds are to be issued for any lawful purposes there is no reason why they should not then be guaranteed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Have any bonds of this character yet been issued?

Mr. FIELDING: They have not been issued by the Canadian National Railway Company, but the various subsidiary companies have of course issued bonds in many cases.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I must say I sought in vain to understand this resolution before the minister rose, and now in the light of his explanation my difficulty is enhanced. The minister says that the different companies composing the National system have by virtue of the original charters, which they held prior to the passing of the Canadian National Railway Act, certain borrowing powers, and that he wishes to curtail those borrowing powers by placing upon them a restraint, the restraint being that the forms and so forth must first be approved—

Mr. FIELDING: And the propriety.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Well, the resolution does not say so. It simply says, "approved as to form, terms and amount." But that is not the point I am making. The restraint he intends to impose upon these constituent companies who want to issue bonds or place mortgages in pursuance of their old charter powers is that such issue or mortgage shall first have the approval of the Governor in Council, and once that approval is given the Governor in Council is to have the power of guaranteeing those bonds. Well, my first point is that the resolution does not do that at all. I hope the minister can correct me—or rather, I shall be very much interested if he can; I have not much hope. What does the resolution say? It reads:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to amend The Canadian National Railway Act, 1919, and to provide that no securities as defined in section 26 of the said act, including in such definition equipment certificates or obligations in any form intended to be issued to the public, shall be issued, except those approved as to form, terms and amount by the Governor in Council, and that such securities so approved may be guaranteed by His Majesty.

I direct the minister's attention to the fact that what he is doing is resolving to amend the Canadian National Railway Act, section 26, so as to provide that any securities issued under that section must be submitted to him. Now, what is section 26? It reads:

> The company may, with the approval of the Governor in Council, issue bonds, debentures, debenture stock, perpetual or terminable, or other securities. . . in repect of the mileage of the lines of railway which it, from time to time, constructs, acquires, owns or controls,—not including the Canadian Government Railways, nor exceeding, with outstanding securities, in the aggregate $75,000 per mile. Such securities may be issued separately in respect of one or more of the company's lines of railway or properties, or in respect of all of its lines, or properties taken together. The company may issue such securities in one or more separate series maturing at the same date or at separate dates, and bearing the same rate or different rates of interest, not exceeding in any case six per cent, and may limit the security for any series or issue to such of the franchises, property, assets, rents and revenues of the company, present or future, or both, as are described in the mortgage or mortgages made to secure such securities.

I have read it hurriedly, but does the minister catch the point? Here is a section which says the Canadian National Railway Company may issue securities, and it may issue them on the whole Canadian National Railway property or on only part of the property, but they are an issue of the Canadian National Railway Company. It is the Canadian National Railway Company that issues them and undertakes to pay. The security may be on the whole property or on only part, and the minister says it is expedient to amend that so that these securities may be submitted to the Governor in Council. Does he not see that does not affect in the least any security issued irrespective of the Canadian National Railway Act by virtue of the charter powers of one of the companies making up the composite company? It does not affect that at all. He is only touching the securities here, and the Canadian National Railway Company cannot issue a security save as it has authority to do so by the statute.

Mr. FIELDING: The old constituent companies will not issue these securities now because all their powers are transferred and consolidated with the Canadian National Railway, and therefore any securities issued would be issued by the Canadian National Railway, but we were advised that there was quite a possibility that the power outstanding would authorize the Canadian National Railway, in virtue of the consolidation of the various constituent companies, to issue securities. At all events it was thought well to make it sure that if any securities were to be issued they should be made subject to the Governor in Council. It may be that we are simply making assurance doubly sure, but the legal officers thought that such action was desirable.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I have not struck the section yet, but I am satisfied that there is a section here already which says that all securities issued by the company shall be approved as to form and so forth by the Governor in Council. That is in all these things. Very well, the minister has that now. It does not matter whether he has it under the old powers or not. As a matter of fact, I do not care what anyone says; it is too obvious to admit of discussion. The Canadian National Railway Company cannot issue a security unless it is authorized by the act creating the company. It is given certain powers by that act and it cannot get powers from any other company. It is created by a single act, and these powers it exercises in issuing securities are restrained already by the very terms embodied in this resolution. Consequently it seems to me the minister is not doing what he set out to do. It may be he is restraining the parent company, but he is not restraining the constituent companies at all, and my opinion is that he is not restraining anything. I will tell you what the minister is doing in this resolution. He is doing just what he did this afternoon or what his colleague to his right (Mr. Graham) did. He is just preparing another bill by which this government can guarantee the bonds of the Canadian National Railway Company and not come to parliament for a vote for the purpose.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend is dreaming. There is not a shadow of foundation for that view. It may be that this is unnecessary, that we already have the power, but the idea that there is any object here of issuing any securities not authorized by parliament is entirely mistaken. All the rights, powers and privileges of the constituent companies I think have been transferred and consolidated in the Canadian National Railway Company. It has been thought expedient to retain all these rights, powers and privileges, but it has been held and with some force that inasmuch as all these rights, powers and privileges have been transferred and consolidated with the Canadian National Railway Company it might have power to issue securities under the borrowing powers of these constituent companies. The most that can be said is that this bill may be unnecessary. There may be something in that view, but the idea that there is any object of issuing securities not authorized by parliament is entirely mistaken.

Mr. MEIGHEN: We will just see. The Canadian National Railway Company cannot take powers from these other companies. It has not the power to take them. There is no power save what is here. Secondly, the other companies cannot give the powers to them. A federal railway like the Canadian Northern —all of them are federal railways that are in the act, under the provisions of the British North America Act—not one of these can transfer its powers save with the consent of parliament. They cannot do it. The Canadian National Railway Company to-day has not any of the powers of these subsidiairy companies except as given to it by this act. To my mind this is pure surplusage. In fact I must say I think it is merely an attempt to cover up the real purpose of this resolution. The minister says, not without the consent of parliament. That is all right. But what he is going to do is to bring down a bill to enable guarantees to be given on the Canadian Northern securities, and once he gets that bill through he can go right ahead guaranteeing them and giving the credit of this country, and he does not need to include the amount in the estimates. Now we will watch his bill.

Mr. FIELDING: We do not need to include the amount in the estimates, but we would in the proper appropriation. If my hon. friend finds in this some mysterious deep-laid scheme I can only come to the conclusion that he has allowed his intense partisanship to lead him astray. There is not a shadow of foundation for anything of the sort. It may be surplusage. It does not create any power, but if there is an existing power to issue securities of the Canadian National Railway then this says that if they are lawful securities the Governor in Council may guarantee them. It may be that my hon. friend is right and that this is covered by the act of 1919. He may be correct in that view, and if he simply argues that this legislation is unnecessary and that we have covered it already that is worthy of consideration. But when he imagines there is some deep-laid diabolical scheme to guarantee something and give the government new powers I can only hope that he will not always see these mysteries in the common things of life. If he takes the view that it is covered by existing legislation, that view is entitled to respect, but I hope he is not going to base any argument on the foolish assumption that there is some dark, deep-laid scheme behind this legislation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did not describe it at all. I simply said it was a scheme. I have not said it is unnecessary for the two objects the minister has in mind. I say it is unnecessary for the first, and that takes up most of the verbiage. It is necessary for the second object, to give the minister and the government power to guarantee without the authority of parliament in the estimates. It is necessary for that, and that is the real object of this resolution, and that is going 9 p.m. to be the bill when it comes down. I ask the House to wait and see.

Mr. FIELDING: I will bring in the bill.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 244, to amend the Canadian National Railways Act, 1919.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE ACT, 1904—EXTENSION OF PROVISIONS

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved that the House go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

1. That the Minister of Finance may make advances to the chartered banks and to the savings banks to which the Quebec Savings Bank Act, 1913, applies by the issue of Dominion notes upon the pledge of certain securities, such advances to be repayable within one year with interest at such rate as may be from time to time fixed by the treasury board.

2. That the provisions of the proclamation dated 3rd September, 1914, made under the authority of the Finance Act, 1914, so far as they authorize the chartered banks to make payments in their notes instead of in gold or Dominion notes, and so far as they suspend the redemption in gold of Dominion notes be continued in force for a period not exceeding three years after the date of the coming into force of any enactment founded on this resolution; provided that the Governor in Council by proclamation may declare and proclaim an earlier date for the termination of any enactment which may be founded on this resolution; and

3. That the Governor in Council during a period not exceeding three years after the date of the coming into force of any enactment founded on this resolution may by proclamation from time to time and for any period or periods declare and proclaim that the export of gold coin, gold bullion and fine gold bars from the Dominion of Canada shall be prohibited except in such cases as may be deemed desirable by the Minister of Finance and under licenses to be issued by him; provided that the Governor in Council by proclamation may declare and proclaim an earlier date for the termination of any enactment which may be founded on this resolution.

Motion agreed to and House went into committee, Mr. Gordon, in the chair.

Mr. FIELDING: The object of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, is to renew what is called the Finance Act of 1914. That is the act under which the government are authorized to make advances to banks as against certain securities. The act was adopted as a war measure, and no doubt was exceedingly useful in the financial operations during the war. It may be said that the war being over we no longer have any need for the act, but experience has shown that the act is still required; indeed, I am inclined to think that something of the kind will have to become almost a permanent part of our financial system. Under the act as it stands to-day, the act as passed some years ago, the government are authorized to advance to the various chartered banks, and to the banks mentioned in the act, sums of money as against certain securities not specified but left to the judgment of the treasury board. Any securities of which the treasury board may approve can be accepted for the purpose, and the government can make advances against them. This resolution, and the bill to be founded thereon, simply renews the act but is a little more specific: Instead of leaving the whole matter to the treasury board the resolution and the bill will indicate the classes of securities upon which advances should be made. The securities of the higher class beyond all question are acceptable. Then we come to the class of securities as to which there may be more room for question. We do not need any particular advice or consultation respecting the standing of the higher class of securities—the high class Imperial government securities, the Dominion, provincial and municipal securities; but there is also a class included in the general expression of what I may call commercial securities. Therein comes a little trouble. My impression is that when the act was passed it was hardly contemplated that these commercial securities should be used; I think the act was designed to serve another purpose. But there is no machinery in the Finance department for making inquiries into the character of securities of that class. As I said a moment ago we do not need any machinery to know the value of certain high class securities such as Dominion and provincial securities, or high class municipal securities, we can all easily ascertain the value of these; but when we come to what are called commercial securities, commercial paper and securities like that, machinery for determining their value does not exist. I am inclined to think, although that is a mere matter of opinion, that originally it was not intended that these securities should be used in a large way. However, they are to-day a part of our financial system and there is a growing feeling, perhaps, that there should be some method of rediscounting such as this act provides for. Having in view that class of securities we aim at seeking the advice of somebody who is competent to advise. As I stated before, we have no organized machinery in the Finance department for that purpose, and we are proposing in this bill that the gentlemen who are trustees of what is called the Central Gold Reserve institution—which was pretty much discussed in the Banking and Commerce committee—shall be deemed an advisory committee and that we shall have the right to ask their advice. They are not to control the matter, but we may at any time ask their advice as to the character of securities that are offered. Again I say we do not need their advice in the case of the higher class of securities; but if some of the banks were to ask us to make advances against ordinary commercial securities it might be desirable that we should have some means of making inquiry into the character of those securities. As the best available means we propose to ask the gentlemen who represent the government and the banks as trustees for the Central Gold Reserve. We regard them practically as an advisory committee from whom we may seek advice if it be needed.

Another portion of the bill relates to the proclamations by which the export of gold is forbidden. We propose, for the present, to continue the powers to prohibit the export of gold, with the addition that if at any moment it may be deemed necessary, that power can be waived and the export of gold continued. These are the main features of the resolution and of the bill which is to be founded upon it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think my hon. friend is absolutely right in continuing the operation of the War Finance Act. It is something that has proved its value time and time again, and I know that the minister needs it to-day in order to keep commerce going upon a proper basis. In connection with the origin of the act it is, I think, quite true that the securities mainly looked upon as securities likely to be offered were not only our own and provincial securities but other first class securities which became available during the war period, namely, the certificates and notes of the Imperial government against which many loans were made. But besides that there was a very direct object, and that object was the discounting of paper covering the wheat movement. That, of course, is really just as good a security as any of these other securities. We only lend to a proportion of the whole amount covered in these wheat and flour transactions, and we are protected by the usual bills of lading, warehouse receipts, insurance and the like. I hope my hon. friend is not, through any advisory committee, seeking to curtail the activities under the act having regard to the movement of the wheat crop. I think I am perfectly within the mark in telling the committee that we never had a loss in connection with the operations under the act. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that we have had some pretty bad times to go through in connection with the war, and the deflation period after the war. But we have had no losses and, speaking frankly, I do not think any very great difficulties. I desire to see the minister doing nothing which removes direct government supervision and control of the extension of these credits. I do not know why the act is necessary at all to deal with the question of an advisory committee. If my hon. friend, in the discharge of the office, thinks he has to get advice it is always open to him to get it, but I think the responsibility always lies with the department—

Mr. FIELDING: Surely.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: —as to either the granting or the refusal of credit. I repeat, this is a resolution which I think ought to be adopted, and I hope that the main object will be kept clearly in view—that this is a government function with government responsibility.

Mr. FIELDING: I entirely concur in what my hon. friend has said. The government cannot and do not desire to absolve themselves of responsibility and if my hon. friend will look at the bill—

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I have not seen the bill yet.

Mr. FIELDING: —he will find that special reference is made there to the class of securities that are regarded as favourable:

> Promissory notes and bills of exchange secured by documentary title to wheat, oats, rye, barley, corn, buckwheat, flax or other commodity;

Then the bill goes on to say:

> Promissory notes and bills of exchange issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes and which have been used or are to be used for such purposes.

It is not intended for a single moment that the government shall absolve themselves of any responsibility, but they may need information as to that class of securities.

As I stated before, we have in the department no organized machinery to deal with them. All the power we take is this. I will give an illustration. Supposing a bank offered us some security which might be of a very good character, but of which we had not the knowledge. Of course anybody in a business way can ascertain the value of securities of the higher class; but if securities of a less substantial character were offered, it might be desirable that we should get some information as to their character. We have thought that these four bankers in Montreal could be for that purpose an advisory committee. That does not mean that they are to have any responsibility or that we evade responsibility. It means that if we need information as to the particular class of security, we do not know of any better authority from whom we can ask information than the gentlemen indicated. They do not have the responsibility. We have the responsibility and must take it. This is merely a precaution in the case of a possible offering of a certain class of securities, which may be all right but concerning which we require information. Otherwise, I agree entirely with the hon. member for West York that the object is just as he has described it, and our purpose is not to restrict the business which is being done under this measure.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Is it not a fact that what the minister proposes to do is already being done in the United States by the creation of the Federal Reserve Bank system, and that all these things are being done there? There is absolute need of a similar institution in this country. For the first time the minister has admitted the need of something of that kind in Canada. I have in my hand a memorandum—

An hon. MEMBER: Read it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I have no intention of reading it, but I will send the Minister of Finance a copy. It gives the details of the splendid machinery that has been created in the United States for this very purpose. This is not exactly in the hands of the banks; but it is in the hands of the government; they take charge of it, and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasury department are all parties to it. They discount great quantities of prime paper for the banks for all kinds of organizations; the banks get this money at a very low rate of interest, and they are in a position to increase the amount available that they can offer to the public also at a low rate of interest. If we adopt something like that, we have a first class system to deal with the question, and to reduce the rate of interest to the country on the prime securities of the country. This is being done in England, and almost every country is gradually coming to this system. All the evidence now is, that the National Reserve Bank system of the United States is an absolute necessity for that country; that it secures discounts for everybody entitled to them at a low rate of interest, and that national notes take largely the place of bank notes, in order to give this credit to the country.

Mr. FIELDING: There is no doubt this measure serves to some extent the same purpose as the national reserve system of the United States. But as we are not likely at this session to adopt the national reserve system generally, we might have this bill as a piece of it, possibly.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The national reserve system was a thing that was very carefully considered, and it has not cost a great deal of money. Running it in the way we ran it before—and I think my hon. friend will probably continue to run it in the same way—the cost to the country is practically nothing; there has been just a little more clerical work to be done. On the question of interest, it may be interesting to the committee to know that during the whole of the war period at the time these things were being done, the rate of interest which was charged to Canadian customers, varied from 1 to 1½ and sometimes as much as 2 per cent less than the same charge being exacted by American banks. The whole thing was done cheaply.

Mr. MILLAR: What is the basis on which the amount of these advances is decided? Would a weak financial condition of a bank, it being therefore much in need, be a factor? If so, how would it operate? Would it tend to increase the advance or to lessen it?

Mr. FIELDING: There is a margin of safety, but at the moment I have forgotten what it is. We make a safe reserve in that respect. We do not advance the full face value, but I cannot tell my hon. friend offhand what proportion we keep. I think that answers the first question. As regards the second question, if a bank is in a weak position, a hasty judgment might be that we should not have anything to do with it. But if the bank has good securities, an advance might help the bank to get into a good position. Everything depends upon the character of the securities. Therefore, a weak bank, if it had strong securities, would be entitled to the benefit of the act.

Mr. LUCAS: I understand there is no limit to the advances, provided that banks hold the necessary securities.

Mr. FIELDING: That is substantially correct.

Mr. LUCAS: What rate of interest is charged to banks?

Mr. FIELDING: Five per cent. It may interest the committee to know the extent to which this act was availed of. Beginning with 1914, advances to the banks amounted to about $12,500,000. They ran up in November, 1917, to as high as $56,000,000; in November, 1918, to $115,000,000; in November, 1919, to $112,000,000, and in November, 1920, to $123,000,000. Since that date they have fallen, and at this date advances under the act are a little less than $7,000,000. The government have from time to time received interest on these advances, and interest alone down to the present time amounts to over $14,000,000.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: And it is practically all profit.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Fielding thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 245, to supplement the Finance Act, 1914.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the first time.

Mr. Fielding moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. GOOD: Are copies of the bill available?

Mr. FIELDING: I will send my hon. friend my copy. If there is any objection, I do not wish to press for the third reading; but this is a purely formal matter, and what has been stated in the House covers it exactly.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Gordon in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN: As this bill has not been generally distributed, if it is the pleasure of the committee, I will read the clauses.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

On section 13—Paragraphs (b) and (d) of proclamation of 3rd September, 1914, continued in force for three years.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Paragraphs (a) and (c) are omitted. What do they refer to?

Mr. FIELDING: My notes are not here and I cannot answer offhand. If my hon. friend thinks it important I can send him a memorandum.

[Mr. Fielding.]

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I can probably find out in the meantime.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—Repeal.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose section 15 deals with a matter covered by the new section 14?

Mr. FIELDING: I think that is likely the case.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I believe it is; in other words, it is made a little more permanent than in the existing statute.

Mr. FIELDING. Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (South York): Before the motion for the third reading is carried I desire again to enter my protest, as I did in the Banking committee, against the substitution of bank notes for national notes. There is no reason why the banks, when the accommodation is afforded them, should use their own notes instead of the national notes they take from the government as issued by the Dominion of Canada. Those notes are issued in twos, fours and other denominations, but the moment we give the accommodation to the banks they substitute their own notes for circulation. When an advance is made to the banks national notes are given and they should use those notes in the conduct of their business. But they say for advertising purposes they wish to substitute their own notes for the national notes. This cannot be justified, it is time it came to an end, and I hope that when we get a national reserve banking system all the business will be done with national notes instead of bank notes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 216 to amend the Customs Tariff Act 1907.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

On section 3—Schedule A amended.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I presume we can take it for granted that the sections carry out in each particular the resolutions already discussed?

Mr. FIELDING: I assure my hon. friend that that is correct.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. W. S. FIELDING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 230 to amend the Special War Revenue Act 1915.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure) in the chair.

On section 1—Stamp tax on cheques, etc.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: When this bill was first before us I drew my hon. friend's attention to the way in which the tax on receipts was being evaded by specially drawn cheques and bills. At that time my hon. friend pointed out, as was perfectly true, that there are always evasions of every law, but that this was no reason why the tax should be abolished. Of course, my hon. friend found evasions in the past, but not of an act introduced by him. However, I will not go into that matter. I merely ask if he has made provision in this bill to prevent such evasions.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, we hope the regulations that may be framed will cover the point suggested by my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I should think that would have to be done by statute, or by giving statutory powers.

Mr. FIELDING: If my hon. friend will read section 3 he will see that what he is referring to is covered. He may be sure that we are anxious to profit by his suggestions to avoid evasions. Might I say regarding the bill generally, that there is one feature as respects which an amendment is found on the order paper to-day. I think most other matters contained in the bill have already been discussed.

Mr. MEIGHEN: This is the bill in which is contained the sales tax in its latest form?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes. The resolution on the order paper to-day really gives the final word on the subject as I hope it will be.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The only reason it is final, I suppose, is because the session is closing.

Mr. FIELDING: There are two or three days yet, you know.

Mr. MEIGHEN: Will the minister be good enough to tell us what this last change really does? As far as I can make out it simply reverses the second last change. Why does he not reverse it openly instead of by this most circuitous phraseology?

Mr. FIELDING: There is nothing circuitous about it.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I do not know who drafted this, but it does seem too bad that we have to put the legislation in this form. The phrasing is anything but clear.

Mr. FIELDING: I think my hon. friend is mistaken. The material change is this. In the resolutions as they stood prior to this amendment we contemplated imposing a sales tax upon imports. The advantage of that was that we would certainly get the money and get it at the beginning. It was contemplated that the tax should be paid, for example, by the importer at the beginning and after he had passed the goods on to the manufacturer he would be entitled to refund, because we would then follow the goods into the manufactory and get the tax at the final stage. That would work out, in a way, successfully from the point of view of the government, but it was urged that it would impose a considerable burden on business men; that where large transactions were being carried on, the necessity for financing to meet the additional duties required would be a serious matter. But perhaps even more serious was the representation that in making arrangements for the refund there would be considerable trouble. After full consideration and hearing the many conflicting views on the subject we came to the conclusion that we would not insist upon the payment of the tax at the time of the importation of the goods; that if the importer sold the goods to a licensed manufacturer there need be no tax paid at that stage; we would follow the goods into the hands of the licensed manufacturer and on his completing the transaction and producing something to be sold the tax would be levied then. I think the change that is made is fairly acceptable—I will not say universally acceptable, because no system of taxation can come under that category. But I am quite sure that although there are differences of opinion on the subject, this form is the most acceptable to the business people.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): Have the business men expressed their view in the matter?

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, I have heard from all sorts and conditions of business men.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I have been receiving telegrams from them, and I would like to know whether this amendment in some measure meets their presentation of the case.

Mr. FIELDING: I think it does.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I did complain and do still about the way this has been done. I doubt if there are three hon. members of this House who know what they are doing right now. I do not, and what is more I doubt whether the minister himself does. The tortuous career of this sales tax and its hopeless involutions would baffle the intellect of anybody. The minister took a sales tax that was simple, that was working all right, and he not only piled conditions on it but he kept changing and shifting and backing and filling, and finally placed the whole incidence of the tax on the importer. Other features were changed, but as to that feature the next change was the provision in some way that the importer should pay the tax first and that there should then be some rebate system when the goods reached the ultimate manufacturer. It is the latter that is being repealed, as I grasp it, by this legislation; that is to say, the final circle the minister traversed is being retraversed backwards. What are we to do? The minister says it is all right; that it is acceptable, but what does it mean? This is the proviso we are adding now; I will read it:

Provided that the consumption or sales tax specified in this section shall not be payable on goods exported; or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to another licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax, or on goods imported by a licensed manufacturer or producer if the goods are to be used in, wrought into, or attached to articles to be manufactured or produced for sale and which are articles subject to the consumption or sales tax; or on goods imported by a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection (7); or on goods sold by a licensed manufacturer or producer to a licensed wholesaler or jobber whose sales are to be accounted for under the provisions of subsection seven of this section.

Well, what is left? Something may be left, but I do not know what it is. Why not simply say that in respect of importations to be used in manufacture there shall not be a tax levied until the manufacture reaches its final state? But if it is impossible to do it that way—I know how simple it is until you get into the details—why not tabulate these exceptions so that they will be clear to the mind? If they were tabulated alphabetically, assuming it is essential that we go into all these matters in order to get back to where we were, the thing might be a little more easily understood. In fact, it is hopelessly involved legislation, and I fancy the working out of it is going to be involved. Indeed, I question whether the minister is going to put this legislation into effect. It is to be deferred until the first of January of next year. Well, his conduct last year was similar with respect to that beet tax; he finally did not put it into effect at all. And when he puts into effect a six per cent sales tax levied at the source and faces the ultimate result of his conduct, I should not wonder if he would quail before it. But if he intends to put it into effect surely it is possible not only to arrive at what we are finally legislating by a direct and immediate route but to express it in clear language. We have arrived at this stage by all sorts of marches forward, marches back, marches in and marches out and up and down; why, it is almost worthy of the Minister of Agriculture and his oleomargarine record. And if the business man finally knows what his position in the matter is—well, I do not think many hon. members of this House do.

Mr. FIELDING: There is one point on which my right hon. friend is certainly wrong. He said we took the simple tax that existed and changed it into this incomprehensible thing. I can assure him that the form of the tax was not simple; it was the subject of a great deal of discussion and a great deal of objection. The tax was payable at several stages, something at one stage and something at another. It was a new question, no doubt the ministers in charge of it made an earnest effort to make it simple, but as a matter of fact it was not simple. As to the proposed change, while it may cause a little friction at the beginning, as all new taxes do, I believe in the end it should work out well. There are good reasons for delay in putting the tax into effect, reasons based on the convenience of business men. I assure my right hon. friend that his judgment is hurried in regard to the drafting. The drafting of measures of this kind is always done under the advice of officials of experience, not only in general drafting but in the administration of customs laws, and I would yield to their judgment rather than to my own so far as the drafting is concerned. This drafting which my right hon. friend thinks is unwise has been well considered; we are advised by those most competent that it will serve its purpose. The delay is justified by good business reasons, and I have no doubt that if we are both spared to come here in a subsequent session my right hon. friend will find the tax in operation and I hope it will be working smoothly.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The minister was told the same thing when he made the last change imposing the tax on the importer. He was advised that it would work smoothly, but it was so obviously impractical and unsound that I do not know what kind of advisers the minister has. Why, it immediately raised a storm all over the Dominion, and the minister at once surrendered. I do not know which change this is as to number. After this I think we ought to pay no attention to the first three or four or five budgets but wait until we get the sixth and then deal with it.

Mr. MACLEAN (York): I have received protests from business men against the tax as it now exists. The net result probably of this is that we are adopting a rather vicious principle, and if we are going to have a deferred sale tax the first thing we know there will be an agitation in the country for deferred customs duties. That would lead us to a condition of affairs that would be very annoying, and instead of securing revenue for the government it would postpone the payment until it gets right down to the consumer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would really like to understand something about this. As to the first tax I do not know that there was very much difficulty about that as soon as it got going, and I never heard of any difficulty as to just what the law meant. There was a tax on the manufacturer and a tax on the wholesaler. There was a tax on the retailer and so far as the first law itself was concerned when we had it down in the low brackets there was very little of it passed on to the public, in fact, nothing was passed on at all. But what my hon. friend has done in this case, and if I am wrong he will tell me, is simply to adopt Mr. Tinling's paper. Mr. Tinling really is the author of this tax. Mr. Tinling worked out the percentages. He has a tax of six per cent that he works out himself, then he has another tax of 6½ or 7 per cent. The whole thing has been worked out entirely for my hon. friend by Mr. Tinling. As I understood the first suggestion it was briefly something like this, that we have a consumption or sales tax of six per cent on the sales price of all goods produced or manufactured, and that the tax be paid by the producer or manufacturer at the time of the sale by him. That was the broad principle we started with. I was not here the other day when the sales tax discussion was on, but there is a question which is immediately provoked right at the commencement of our consideration which perhaps my hon. friend has covered already. We have been to some extent getting away from the intermediary distributor. Quite a number of producers now sell directly to retailers. There is always a difference in price between what is sold to the retailer and what is sold to the jobber. I think it would be fair to say that what would be sold to the jobber at 80, taking that for the sake of illustration, would be sold to the retailer at 100 approximately. What is my hon. friend going to do having regard to this tax being imposed as it is at the source? Is the tax to be paid on the 80, which would be the value of the article as sold to the jobber, and which would make a tax of $4.80, or will there be another tax on the same article when sold to the retailer, based of course upon the higher price? If that is done it is going to throw out the trade lists between the jobbers and the retailers, where you would have a tax on the same article in the first instance of $4.80 and of $6 in the second instance. Before going on I would like my hon. friend to tell me if that point has been considered, and what will be the stand taken by the department.

Mr. FIELDING: I can assure my hon. friend that there are many questions that he can ask as to interpretation which I should hesitate to answer because I quite understand that it is a matter where a difference of opinion may easily arise. Section 19BBB I am advised meets the point my hon. friend raises. It reads:

> In addition to any duty or tax that may be payable under this part, or any other statute or law, there shall be imposed, levied and collected a consumption or sales tax of six per cent on the sale place of all goods produced or manufactured in Canada, including the amount of excise duties when the goods are sold in bond, which tax shall be payable by the producer or manufacturer at the time of the sale thereof by him; and in the case of imported goods the like tax upon the duty paid value of the goods imported payable by the importer or transferee who takes the goods out of bond for consumption at the time when the goods are imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption.
> For the purpose of calculating the amount of the consumption or sales tax, "sale price" shall mean the price before any amount payable in respect of the consumption or sales tax is added thereto.

I think that covers the point raised by my hon. friend.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Oh no, my hon. friend's adviser has not got the point at all, and it is something which would occur to any business man right at the very commencement of his consideration of this tax. I am right in saying that you have sales of the same article to jobbers on the one hand and to retailers on the other. I know I am also right in saying that you have your regular trade lists, and to keep faith with the jobber on the one hand and the retailer on the other certain margins are maintained. Now let me go over it again because the minister evidently did not catch my point at all. We will assume that the sale price to the jobber is 80, and the sale price to the retailer 100. On the face of it, it would appear that the tax on the article when sold to the jobber is to be $4.80, and when sold to the retailer $6. Now that is going to throw out the alignment at once. What my hon. friend so far has not told me and what I want to know is if that same article is going to bear different sales taxes or not.

Mr. FIELDING: If they have different prices I should think the tax could be levied on the actual selling price. The minister has in this case as in the case of the customs law a very general power to deal with any question of valuation, but it is a very intricate matter and I would rather not attempt to interpret the act. If there be any room for doubt in the matter I would have it inquired into, but I would not give my hon. friend a definite answer to his questions because it is quite possible there is room for a difference of opinion as to the interpretation.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I would have thought it would have occurred to anyone before we put new legislation on the books that we should have some idea of how it is going to work out, and the point I have raised is the very first thing that occurs to the business man. What is going to happen in connection with his lists? It is not a question of varying prices. The prices are stable, they are the same. You have your jobbers' lists and you have your retailers' lists. Now if my hon. friend is going to say that he is going to charge a different sales tax rate when sold to the retailer as compared with the rate when sold to the jobber it simply means that he is putting still further difficulties in the way of cutting out any intermediaries and cutting down the cost of distribution. If it be that in addition to getting lower trade prices, which the jobber always gets, he is going to pay on the same article a lower sales tax than the retailer, then of course the government is certainly not helping the retailer who desires to buy directly.

Mr. FIELDING: It appears to me that the selling price in each case would determine the tax, but if any peculiar circumstances arise which make the matter one of difficulty there is a clause here giving the minister power to determine the value for taxation purposes. It reads:

> Whenever goods are manufactured or produced in Canada under such circumstances or conditions as render it difficult to determine the value thereof for the consumption or sales tax because,—
> (a) a lease of such goods or the right of using the same but not the right of property therein is sold or given; or,
> (b) such goods having a royalty imposed thereon, the royalty is uncertain, or is not from other causes a reliable means of estimating the value of the goods; or,
>
> (c) such goods are manufactured by contract for labour only and not including the value of the goods that enter into the same, or under any other unusual or peculiar manner or conditions; or,
>
> (d) such goods are for use by the manufacturer or producer and not for sale
> the minister may determine the value for the tax under this act.

In other words whenever any of these difficulties arise that my hon. friend has in mind, the minister has the power of fixing the valuation on which the tax shall be levied.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: The minister having read those paragraphs will surely agree that the case I mentioned has not been touched at all. There is not a single provision in the cases read by the minister himself where any case such as I have just given him could be considered. I have not given him complex cases but the easiest ones that could possibly arise in the administration of the act, a matter of every day business, whether we are to have two sales taxes on the same standard article or not. We have not had a single thing even suggested one way or the other as to what is to happen. It is on a par, I suppose, with the general miasma which seems to surround this new proposal. We cannot get the facts in connection with the first case so let us take the next one: Manufacturers or producers of over $10,000 annually are to be licensed. I take it from that, and I want the minister to interrupt me if I am wrong, that the fact of this licensing would enable these manufacturers or producers originally, if licensed, to import without the payment of any fee in advance? They are bonded and the like.

Mr. FIELDING: Yes, that is quite right.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought probably that would be the idea. That being so there was no difficulty created under subsection 1 of section 3 as originally brought down. I take it that the whole difficulty, and my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong, arose in connection with the subsequent resolution which he submitted. Am I right in that?

Mr. FIELDING: I do not know any stage of the matter in which there were not difficulties and objections.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Well, I want to get to an understanding of where we are now. If my leader is not able to understand the matter I cannot blame him. No difficulty has arisen as I see it—if there has I want to be informed—under subsection 1 of section 3 which provides for a manufacturer or producer of goods to the value of over $10,000 annually being licensed.

Mr. FIELDING: That is correct; he is licensed now

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That being so, what is the difficulty that has arisen in connection with my hon. friend's last suggested amendment?

Mr. FIELDING: I thought I stated the objections that were raised.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: They could not be raised under this as I read it.

Mr. FIELDING: My hon. friend's statement reminds me of the old story of the man who said "They cannot put me in gaol but I am there."

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think there must have been another amendment brought down when I was away.

Mr. FIELDING: Possibly.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): We are dealing with section 1 which refers to the stamp tax on cheques.

Mr. FIELDING: No, we are on the sales tax.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Fielding suggested an amendment to line twenty of section 1.

Mr. FIELDING: That is to the section dealing with stamps.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not know how we got into discussion on the sales tax, but we are certainly into it.

Mr. FIELDING: We had better keep on the sales tax.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I think we had probably better keep on it. Then, in connection with the same idea, there is the regulation as to the amount that will be in the hands of the minister. I suppose that would be the Minister of—?

Mr. FIELDING: Customs.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It would be in the hands of the minister to direct any other manufacturer or producer although doing less than $10,000 worth to take out a license?

Mr. FIELDING:) (Reading):

> If the minister determines that any manufacturer or producer, who does not manufacture or produce goods to the value of ten thousand dollars a year, uses a substantial portion of goods which are exempt from the tax in the manufacture of goods which are liable to the tax, as to which the minister's finding shall be conclusive, such manufacturer or producer shall take out a license as required by subsection six of this section and shall be subject to the same conditions as a licensed manufacturer or producer.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I suppose the effect of that will be to place it entirely in the hands of the Minister of Customs to say just how many people doing a business under $10,000 shall or shall not pay a sales tax. Am I right?

Mr. FIELDING: Well, the power of the minister is certainly very considerable, but he can only apply the act as it reads. I do not think it admits of the minister exercising any power in a manner unjust to any of them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It seems to me that we have in the first place, a declaration, that people have to be licensed to do a certain amount of business. Then we have a declaration in the next instance that the manufacturers of goods, which when sold are liable to sales tax, will have to take out this license when the minister says so. As it is now left, it is a matter entirely for the Customs department to say whether a man doing a business under $10,000 is to pay or not. The minister may select any one he chooses.

Mr. FIELDING: Under the conditions set forth here.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What conditions?

Mr. FIELDING: I have just read them.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: It is simply to this extent: using goods exempt from the sales tax. That might be construed in one instance to apply to use of goods to the extent of one per cent and in another instance to the use of goods to the extent of 50 per cent. The minister might say "I do not care to apply it to this particular trade, I am going to apply it to that trade." The whole thing is wide open. It is more than order in council taxation, it is taxation by the minister himself, just as he wants to tax in connection with all these smaller matters.

Mr. GERMAN: Are we on section 6 of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Marcil, Bonaventure): We started out on section 1 but we have jumped to section 6.

Mr. GERMAN: I have received a large number of telegrams and communications from manufacturers in the Niagara district referring to this sales tax. I am anxious to have the bill discussed section by section, and explanations given by the minister, so that we may explain the matter to the people whom we represent.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: We have to get an understanding of the idea first.

Mr. GERMAN: The way to understand a bill is to take it section by section. If we are on section 6 let us take it first, and see to what extent it goes and whether there is anything in that particular section which is against the public interest. I do not see anything myself in that section but we shall never get anywhere if all sections are discussed together in a hotch potch sort of way. We have to read the whole bill from beginning to end in order to understand it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I do not want to make any suggestion to my hon. friend as to the course to be pursued. I found the general discussion proceeding on the sales tax and I continued it. We certainly will have a general discussion of this tax on some section of the bill. It was suggested by the Minister of Finance we might just as well go on with it now. It is a matter of indifference to me.

Mr. FIELDING: We have drifted into a discussion of the sales tax, and having entered upon it I see no reason why we should not dispose of it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: That seems to me to be proper, too. There is another thing that we should like to get a little more light on in order to enable us to understand the clause. There is a provision that:

> A wholesaler or jobber who sells not less than 50 per cent of his total sales of goods to a licensed manufacturer or producer. . . . may be granted an annual license.

It is a matter of importance to the wholesaler or jobber to be able to get his license. The minister will see that he has to carry the interest on the payment he has to make. In the first instance, he has a right to his accounts and the like. How are we going to ascertain whether a man is really doing a business of not less than 50 per cent of his total sales to licensed manufacturers or producers? If we do that, and he sells 50 per cent of his sales this month to his licensees and he sells none next month to his licensees, is his license to stop? Is anything going to be done to see that there is continuity in this? What is the idea of the clause? Why should we have it at all?

Mr. FIELDING: In all these matters, regulations will be made by the minister. I quite admit that the bill is a very complicated one, and it requires very careful study. There is something in the statement made by hon. gentlemen opposite that even after we have carefully studied the matter, it is full of trouble. All I can say is that the regulations of the department will cover most of these things, and they will be made intelligently and reasonably with a view of meeting the public desire.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: What is the idea of the change from the old basis to this?

Mr. FIELDING: The old basis was a varied rate of sales tax, and this is a straight 6 per cent tax. That is the main point of difference. The other point of difference was as regards the proposals, and I think it is concerning that that hon. gentlemen have received telegrams recently. The proposal was to put a tax on imports. It was held that while that might possibly be a convenience to the government in getting the money from that source, it was imposing burdens on the business man who would have to finance in order to provide the tax. It was represented, and I think truly, that in many large organizations, materials have to be ordered far in advance of their use. They have to be held, and it was contended that if these business men, having large stocks on hand awaiting the moment to be used, had to finance for paying interest and to carry all the stock at the same time, that in itself was going to be a serious burden. I thought there was force in the contention. There was further a provision that when an importer paid the tax and the goods afterwards went into a manufacturing concern, there would be a refund, and it was held that keeping of accounts for this would be a troublesome thing. For these reasons we have abandoned putting the tax on the importer at first, and we have provided that the importer shall not pay the tax if he sells to a licensed manufacturer. The goods will be brought into the licensed factory, and ultimately we shall get the tax when the licensed manufacturer produces something to sell. That is the main point of difference that perhaps the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) had in mind.

Mr. HOCKEN: There is one feature of this sales tax to which I should like to direct the attention of the minister, something a little more concrete than what we have been getting for the last hour. The committee will remember that a resolution was passed unanimously that some consideration should be given to publishers of magazines and periodical literature. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the fact that instead of giving any relief to that particular industry, he has increased the sales tax from 2¼ to 6 per cent. That is just about the last straw that breaks the camel's back. Would it not be possible for the minister to do what he promised us when he brought down the budget originally, that is to say, to remove the sales tax from the newsprint and paper that go into magazines and such publications? That particular industry is in a very desperate state, and it is undoubtedly the case that a magazine could be taken from Toronto or Montreal and published at Buffalo at a lower cost than it could be published at in Canada. I am informed on very good authority that the managers of the largest magazine that we have in Canada are contemplating that particular move. It would not be a very admirable spectacle for the people of Canada to see magazine publishers forced into the United States because of the difficulties and embarrassments that are placed upon them by the laws of this country. Is it too late for the Minister of Finance to revert to his original proposal and to remove the sales tax from the paper and, indeed, from all the materials of magazines? That is a fair proposition. They are paying taxes now; they are paying duty on their art work, on their inks, on everything that goes into the manufacture of magazines and periodical literature. The minister would be well advised if he took that step, and it would be popular throughout the country if he would give that much consideration to the publishing interests. The enormous increase in the cost of production of daily newspapers has caused a great deal of embarrassment, so much that hundreds of daily newspapers have been compelled to suspend publication. Add that feature of the matter to magazines and periodical literature, and I think the case calls for some consideration by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. FIELDING: The matter to which the hon. gentlemen refers, arose at an earlier stage of the session on a motion which he himself made and which produced an interesting debate. I think it had reference at the time entirely to the customs duty on American periodicals. While there was much to be said in favour of the hon. gentleman's suggestion, there is another side of the question, and we have reason to believe that public opinion on the whole would not favour it. I admit the position of publishers of magazines and periodicals is rather a hard one, but the question of the sales tax is quite a different matter. Magazines and newspapers are now exempt from the sales tax.

Mr. HOCKEN: Are they exempted on their raw materials?

Mr. FIELDING: On the thing they produce. They do not produce raw materials; they produce newspapers and magazines, and they are exempted from the sales tax, while other industries have not that benefit. The raw materials, the newsprint and paper will be produced by the owners of the mills, the paper companies, and they will pay the tax. It is laid down as a principle that with very rare exceptions, all taxes will get down to the ultimate consumer, although you may evade this for a while. In this case, however, the tax is paid by the manufacturer of paper, and not by the publisher, who becomes a seller of magazines, or a seller of newspapers, and who is exempted from the sales tax on those. Of course, it may be said that the paper company passes the sales tax on to the publisher, and I have no doubt that is the case. It would be very pleasant for the Minister of Finance if he could exempt many more things; but I do not think any strong case has been made for the exemption of print and paper; at all events, that was the view which I was obliged to take.

Mr. HOCKEN: I should like to point out to the minister that the ultimate consumer does not pay this tax, and that it has to be absorbed, not by the papermaker, nor by the ultimate consumer, but by the publisher. When the publisher buys the paper and the sales tax is paid, that sales tax is added to the price of his paper. There can be no doubt about that. It is impossible for the publisher to increase the price of his magazine, and at the same time to get any sale for it. Consequently he has to absorb that extra three and three-quarters per cent in addition to contending against conditions that are already so onerous that it is almost impossible for him to stay in business. This is not like any other industry. If a man is making boots, or anything else, he can pass the tax on to the ultimate consumer; but a man producing a publication of the kind I am describing cannot pass it on. This sales tax is putting an extra burden of three and three-quarters per cent upon the publishing industry instead of giving the relief pleaded for, not only by myself, but by a large number of hon.

members, including the Acting Chairman himself (Mr. Marcil). I thought, from the case made out by that hon. gentleman, that we should get that relief, but instead of that there is an added burden. That is the ground of my objection. We have been compelled to accept what the minister says: There cannot be any duty on magazines or on the advertising in magazines. But having accepted that, it is pretty hard now to have the sales tax increased 3¾ per cent on the raw materials that go into the product, which increase must be absorbed, representing in many cases the difference between solvency and insolvency, or perhaps between the publication of the Canadian magazine in Canada, and in the United States. I still think that the minister should look at this matter sympathetically. I believe he realises that there should be some relief in this direction; in fact I think he has said so. Surely then it is not too late to exempt these publications from the tax on their raw materials. At least do not increase the tax; keep it where it was. Do not add any burden to the industry if you cannot give it the relief for which it asks.

Sir HENY DRAYTON: The minister does not say anything.

Mr. FIELDING: What do you expect me to say?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: I thought that at least the minister would give us an expression of sympathy if nothing else. I wonder whether he does not yet realize the fact that it is impossible for him to expect this country to carry on in competition with the outside competitor when we have here special heavy burdens thrown upon the producer by a system of taxation to which the outsider is not subject. There was absolutely no answer made by anyone to the figures quoted by the member for West Toronto (Mr. Hocken) when the matter was brought up. There was no dispute about the question; we had the exact facts and figures showing that the business was labouring under a disability. Surely my hon. friend sees perfectly well that when he says that the Canadian magazine must pay a 6 per cent tax on its raw materials, which the American competitor does not pay, he is adding very materially to the burdens of the Canadian publishing business. As I have said before, when discussing this sales tax, I do not believe in a large number of exemptions. My hon. friend must get the money and he has to get it from as broad a field as he can find. I have never urged exemptions upon him, for I think that possibly our list of exemptions to-day is too broad and perhaps the minister has erred in enlarging it. But a very real wrong is done when we get away from the underlying principle of the sales tax. I was responsible for the institution of that tax here and certainly, as I understand it, the underlying principle was that it should be of such a character that its incidence would be so small as, on the one hand, to place no great hardship on business, and on the other render it probable that the tax would not be passed along to the general consuming public. My hon. friend must unquestionably realise that when he gets the tax up to 6 per cent he is losing sight of all that and imposing a burden which is affecting every one of our producers. Let us take my hon. friend's authority in this matter, Mr. Tinling. Mr. Tinling shows that the result of this tax is that the original charge of $6 on a hundred becomes a charge of $11.25. This matter is of sufficient importance to justify some discussion and I will point out to my hon. friend again that in the first instance, under the sales tax of the former government before it received the 50 per cent boost which the hon. gentleman gave it, much of the tax was never passed on. It did not directly add to the cost of living. I gave one or two quotations from the representations of the people that have been importuning my hon. friend to have this change made, namely, the people in business who were anxious to pass on to the consumer 100 per cent of the tax, plus their profits, and I will give one or two other questions. The thing really is so clear that there is no room for argument about it at all. I will take the case of the Wholesale Grocers' Association, whose secretary, Mr. Pyke, was interviewed in connection with the budget.

Mr. VIEN: Where is the hon. member about to quote from?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: From the issue of the Canadian Grocer, published on the 18th May of this year. Most of the references contained in it constitute a song or praise in connection with the change in the sales tax. Why? Because these gentlemen in business are now in a position to pass on to the consumer 100 per cent of the tax. We will see what this gentleman says; and let us remember that he represents a wholesale trade that were specially marked as people who had to pay the old sales tax.

"Yes, the sales tax as it was formerly collected was very satisfactory to us," Mr. Pyke replied. "However, we were told that this could not be arranged to suit every branch of the trade, and that a sales tax collected at the source was after all the best solution.

It seems to meet with the approval of manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer alike, and prior to the last budget brought down by Sir Henry Drayton, this association suggested such a method of collection, but he did not see fit to meet the proposal. Consequently when there was no other alternative, but to abide by the plan of collection from manufacturer to wholesaler and from wholesaler to retailer; then we entered into an arrangement with a large number of manufacturers selling to us, whereby they absorbed it."

The tax never passed on at all. Then taking the stand of the retail grocers, Mr. D. A. Clark, President of the Ontario Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association, says:

Sometimes it was exceedingly difficult for retailer to get back the 2¼ per cent he paid the wholesaler, with the result that retail profits suffered considerably.

And here is the considered opinion of the magazine itself:

But the change in the sales tax collection system seems to be appreciated by most of the trade. The retailers generally like it; the wholesalers are not antagonistic and it follows the proposal of a good many manufacturers who feel now that those who sell direct will be on equal terms with the wholesaler who formerly showed only 2¼ per cent to the retailer, whereas this manufacturer's invoice showed 4½ per cent.

The 2¼ and 4½ per cent were of course brought about by my hon. friend.

Many manufacturers selling through the wholesale trade absorbed the 2¼ per cent, but 6 per cent is too much and will have to be passed on.

Now, to show there is not a single note out of unison in the whole chorus, Mr. Tinling says:

That contrary to the intention of the government and to the wording of the Sales Tax Act, all the sales tax paid on an article cannot be and is not passed on to be paid by the public who are the ultimate consumers.

It never was the intention of the former government that it should be passed on. The tax was low and was arranged in such a way in the bill that it could be left off.

Mr. FIELDING: Somebody had to pay it.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: Of course, somebody had to, but the manufacturers were absorbing it.

Mr. JACOBS: Oh, oh.

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend laughs. I will give authorities for my statement.

Mr. JACOBS: What did the manufacturers do with it, absorb it into their system or pass it on?

Sir HENRY DRAYTON: My hon. friend may have some confidential advice in regard to the matter, I do not know. This is what the authority—and it is an authority that has been accepted by this government, because the plan is exactly the plan of Mr. Tinling—says:

That because of the wording and the operating of the act, some manufacturers and the majority of the wholesale and retail trade have been forced to absorb the greater part and in many instances the whole of the sales tax, which has entailed losses aggregating, it is estimated, to about $80,000,000 for these three branches of the trade.
