HOUSE OF COMMONS

CHANGE IN OFFICIAL OPPOSITION SEATING ARRANGEMENTS

Madam Speaker: I have been informed by the Whip of the Official Opposition that the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) will occupy seat No. 162 and that the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) will occupy seat No. 161.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF NEW GRAIN TRANSPORT POLICY ON QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased with this opportunity to speak under the provisions of Standing Order 21. Yesterday, the Canadian Government announced a new grain transportation policy. Since that announcement, a lot has been said, but in fact, very little has been said, in Quebec. Many Quebec farmers are wondering about the policy and what the implications are going to be. As a Member from Quebec and as Chairman of the Caucus Sub-Committee on Agriculture, we—and I personally—have always been ready to defend the interests of Quebecers as we did in the past for the dairy policy, pork price stabilization payments, the $33 million policy for the storage of grain and other areas between 1978 and 1983. We shall be going on a speaking tour through Quebec starting on Monday, at Saint-Raymond de Portneuf and Rimouski, to explain our position, to hear what our fellow citizens have to say about this policy and to explain the grain transportation policy to Quebecers and especially to Quebec farmers.

REQUEST THAT LIBERAL MEMBERS DENOUNCE MINISTER'S LIVESTOCK FEED PROPOSAL

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, under the same standing order, I would like to make a few comments on behalf of millions of Quebecers who today are demonstrating their disappointment with respect to the proposals made yesterday by the Minister of Transport regarding this grain policy. Madam Speaker, as a representative of Quebec and on behalf of Quebec farmers, it is my duty to point an accusing finger at those brave Liberal Members who not long ago were giving the Province of Quebec and Quebec farmers the assurance that all was well. Yesterday's statement is certainly not in line with such assurances and has created a general uproar in Quebec. I think I have every right to demand that the ten Members who formed a committee to ensure the survival of agriculture in Quebec, have the courage to speak out against these proposals or at least relinquish their seat in the House, if they really care about the rights of Quebec farmers. The reaction in Quebec is very similar to the feelings aroused by the F-18 issue. Once more, Quebec has been betrayed by the Liberal Members from Quebec, who had committed themselves to take action regarding these proposals. In the circumstances, Madam Speaker, I have no choice but to speak out on behalf of millions of Quebecers, our Quebec farmers and ask the Members from Quebec to stand up and censure these proposals which are only going to jeopardize agricultural growth in Quebec. That is my position.

Mr. Blais: Totally irresponsible! The Hon. Member is doing a disservice to his province and his country.

GARRISON DIVERSION

PROPOSED INCREASE IN UNITED STATES FUNDING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Madam Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 21 to bring to the attention of the House the question of the proposed additional funding for the Garrison diversion project which was indicated a few days ago in the United States Congress. In the 1983-84 year, the Garrison diversion will be receiving some $22 million, the largest amount it has received in any one year since the inception of the project. From a Manitoba point of view, and I would suspect from a Canadian point of view, this kind of funding is totally unacceptable.

S.O. 21

The one point which must be made is that Manitobans at this point in time must not give up hope. It is only a proposal and it can be defeated.

I urge the Government not only to instruct its Ministers but also to give an indication to the Province of Manitoba that an all-Party Committee, as was suggested, will move forthwith to present itself in Washington to put up a strong showing against this particular proposal.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky).

[Editor's Note: The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nielsen) and the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) having entered the Chamber:]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewycky: Madam Speaker, this is the first time that the entire Conservative caucus has risen and applauded me. I assume it is because of the statement I want to make on the Crow.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—OPPOSITION TO ANNOUNCED CHANGES

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Yesterday in Winnipeg the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin), with his announcement on the Crow rate, dealt a crushing blow to farmers in western Canada. With this latest action the Government has completely destroyed the already tenuous survival of farmers who really provide the country with such a fundamental necessity as its daily food. In fact, while the Minister of Transport was making his announcement, many of us were meeting with delegations from the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association. These men are desperate. Prices for grain have been falling, interest rates are climbing, and the banks are foreclosing their farms. Now the Government is throwing farmers to the mercy of the railways. This will be a millstone around the necks of farmers in western Canada. Specifically in Manitoba, there was nothing in the announcement with regard to Churchill or to the farmers of Manitoba.

I have received a strongly worded resolution, passed unanimously by some 300 people at a meeting in Swan River, which reads:

> That this meeting go on record as being strongly opposed to the Pepin efforts to dismantle the Crow.

I present it to the House.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ISSUANCE OF UNITED EMPIRE LOYALIST COMMEMORATIVE STAMP

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, this year and next mark the bicentennial anniversary of the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists to Canada. They were a people who were instrumental in founding the nation we cherish today. They carried with them a loyalty and patriotism which forged a strong bond with England, and assured the French and English colonies protection against the threat of American Imperialism. The Loyalists introduced many of the social values and ideals we prize, as they brought with them British society, Government, and character.

A great many Canadians can proudly trace their families back 200 years to the arrival of these diligent and patriotic people and, in doing so, proudly boast their Loyalist origins.

It is my understanding Canada Post is considering issuing a stamp in 1984 to commemorate the bicentennial of the Loyalist arrival. To honour these settlers, their descendants, and their legacy, I appeal to the Postmaster General and his cabinet colleagues to issue a commemorative stamp honouring the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists. Loyalist descendants will be celebrating the bicentennial with pride, and are asking the Government of Canada to acknowledge properly the significant contributions and historical importance of the Loyalist immigration.

TRUST COMPANIES

CALL FOR REFERRAL OF WHITE PAPER TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, the following exist as fact. First, in the fall of 1980, at the time of the passing of the Bank Act, the then Minister of State for financial institutions promised the committee that there would be a whole new trust company act brought forward within a matter of a month or two.

Second, the Government has now tabled a white paper on trust company act provisions.

Third, negotiations did take place between representatives of the Government side and members of the Opposition with regard either to referring the contents of a new trust company bill or, as it turns out, this white paper, to a special committee so that we could get on with work on the legislation.

Fourth, the actual setting up of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs under the new rules would take at good two or three weeks at least.

Therefore I would suggest to the Hon. Ministers responsible that there be an immediate referral of the contents of the white paper, or of a new trust company act, to a special committee of the House, which could be going within a week because, as you know, Madam Speaker, there are serious problems.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NICARAGUA—CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR PEACE INITIATIVE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, yesterday 1,600 United States troops began military activities in Honduras near that country's border with Nicaragua. Nicaragua has been under prolonged and persistent pressure from the United States and American-backed right wing rebels. This political pressure and military incursions into Nicaragua have taken a toll in civilian lives and a straggering toll on the besieged Nicaraguan economy.

The threat of invasion from Honduras continues. The Governments of Honduras and the United States continue to harbour and support anti-Nicaraguan rebels, terrorists, troop activities, and harassment of refugees. Only last month the foreign ministers of Panama, Columbia, Mexico and Venezuela met at Contadora Island in Panama and made an urgent call to all nations to:

—refrain from undertaking actions that could create the danger of generalizing the conflict throughout the region.

The Ministers said that dialogue and negotiations were the key to solving the interstate problems of Central America.

On Monday last a letter was sent to President Reagan, signed by 78 U.S. Congressmen, protesting U.S. troop presence in the region as:

—a dangerous escalation of tensions in a volatile region.

—and calling for U.S. support for the Mexican-Venezuelan peace initiatives.

Canada supports this Mexican-Venezuelan approach, and should do so enthusiastically according to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) who has recently returned from Central America.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DELAY IN MAILING OF JANUARY OLD AGE PENSION CHEQUES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, altogether too many elderly pensioners in the Victoria area, and probably elsewhere in British Columbia, suffered unnecessary misery and concern earlier this week—some even had to borrow to pay rents that were falling due—because of the deliberate failure of the Department of Supply and Services to mail January's pension cheques on schedule.

I urge, therefore, that the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) be required to investigate the matter immediately to ensure that such suffering and misery not be inflicted again on old age pensioners. A delay of this sort should not have happened, and should not happen again.

INDUSTRY

PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Minister will be aware that the Canadian petrochemical industry is in serious difficulty. In eastern Canada alone this industry accounts for 9,000 direct jobs and 108,000 indirect and induced jobs. The reason the industry is in trouble is that its feedstock prices have pushed it into a non-competitive position as compared to industries in the United States and other countries. Is the Minister aware that, without immediate action, this industry will face the potential loss of 50,000 jobs, to be added to the 1.5 million or more Canadians who are now unemployed?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I will take that question in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We are very much aware and sensitive to the problems of the petrochemical industry, which are certainly not unique to the industry in this country, as the Hon. Member knows. The industry is in difficulty in the United States, and in serious difficulty in Japan.

There are a number of structural reasons for this problem that faces the industry on a world-wide basis. The Government is looking at the matter on an urgent priority basis. Many of us, as I am sure the Hon. Member is aware, have received in-depth representations from industry spokesmen, and I can assure you that the Government has taken its responsibility very seriously in this regard.

Mr. Gurbin: That is precisely the kind of answer that we know the Government has been giving to the industry. It is precisely for that reason that we are asking these questions today.

PRICE OF OIL FEEDSTOCK

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Government does not understand that it is not a question of recession, or other reasons that have been coming from the Department or the Government. This is a made-in-Canada problem. It is a problem of feedstock prices in Canada. Neither the industry, the Opposition, nor anyone else expects the Government to answer for world-wide recession problems, but it can deal with the problems that have been created in Canada and that affect Canadians.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton presented a petition in the House. Part of that petition reads:

—the petrochemical industry is in trouble in Sarnia and in Canada because of the federal Government's Petrochemical Feedstock Taxation Policy; and that thousands of jobs are in jeopardy in both the short and the long term;—

Is the Minister aware that the taxation and revenue policies that have been put forward in the National Energy Program promise that the prices of feedstocks would not exceed 85 per cent of world prices and that that figure, in fact, was not expected to be reached until 1985? In many cases we have already exceeded that figure.

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gurbin: Is he prepared to change those taxation policies?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am sorry, I did not hear the last part of that question. However, the Member is essentially wrong in his facts. The fact is that the oil-based sector of that industry is in serious difficulty everywhere. In fact the Canadian sector does enjoy an advantage because of the feedstock prices that were established by the National Energy Program.

The oil-based sector in the United States is also going through serious difficulties, with many plants having been shut down. It is true that the oil-based sector produces a limited number of products that cannot be produced from the gas-based sector. But these are very complex issues. I suggest that, if the Hon. Member has some worthwhile suggestions to make, I am sure that my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, would be glad to hear them.

It is not a simple problem, frankly, of a domestic nature in the country. The oil-based sector is in serious trouble everywhere.

REQUEST FOR NEW TAX POLICY

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Madam Speaker, the industries that are shut down in the United States are shut down because of the recession. This is a Canadian problem because of the Canadian taxation and revenue policies that have been designed by the Liberal Government. That is what needs to be changed.

Will the Minister respond to the request of the industry and the Opposition to put forward a suitable and appropriate taxation and revenue policy to maintain our feedstock prices below 85 per cent of world and competitor levels? Will the Minister provide a long-term petrochemical feedstock policy pricing regime for the Canadian industry?

• (1420)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues who are directly concerned and seized with this problem at the present time, I will certainly take the Hon. Member's question as a representation as to the position of the Conservative Party on this issue. Certainly a long-term solution to the petrochemical problem is one which we would all like to achieve. That is what the Government is attempting to do at the present time.

STATE OF WESTERN PETROCHEMICAL INDUSTRY

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Perhaps he can enlighten the House a little more concerning the plight of the petrochemical industry. As he well knows, the natural gas based petrochemical industry, largely based in western Canada, is clearly struggling to survive. As a matter of fact, at the present time there are some $7.5 billion worth of petrochemical projects on hold, largely due to the loss of the competitive edge which the western based industry had. It is now in a position where feedstock prices are 10 per cent higher than the international price and the U.S. price. Two years ago, the Alberta based producers had a 25 per cent price advantage.

Has the Minister looked into the reason why the Government has allowed the western petrochemical industry to lose its competitive advantage, and why it refuses to take corrective action to allow this industry to grow once again?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I have nothing to add to what my predecessor just said to the House. At this time we are studying the problem, which is very complex, as we must take into consideration the east and the west, the feed stock base of natural gas, and also of oil, affecting the petrochemical industry, and so on. We are reviewing the situation at this time, and when we have a new policy we will announce it.

REQUEST FOR EARLY GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Can I interpret what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said as meaning that the Government will simply ignore the potential loss of 60,000 jobs as a result of the failure of the petrochemical industry? The fact is that we are not talking about months or years. We are talking about days and weeks for the survival of this very important sector of the Canadian economy. Why does the Minister refuse to act?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, I just said that we are reviewing the situation at this time. Very soon we will announce a policy.

Miss MacDonald: You do not know the difference between feedstock and energy prices.

THE ECONOMY

DEVELOPMENT OF COAL RESERVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my first question is directed to the Prime Minister since it relates to over-all Government policy. The Government announced yesterday that it proposes to amend the 1925 statute which not only sets out statutory grain rates but also sets out provisions concerning the reserve of coal on what are called Dominion coal lands. Amending that legislation would free those lands. The legislation states that "coal will be reserved for the purpose of securing a sufficient and suitable supply of coal to the public at reasonable prices, not exceeding $2 per tonne".

Can the Prime Minister give us his assurance that, should this legislation pass, the development of this $450 billion coal reserve will proceed in the public sector and that the benefits and revenues will go to the people of Canada? Whom will the Government allow to develop this reserve, the CPR or the private coal companies? Who will derive the benefits of that resource which has been held in reserve since 1925?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it would be the intention of the Government to ensure that the benefits to the public are maximized in every way.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, that means that there goes the CPR again, on another gravy train.

AMOUNT OF INVESTMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Yesterday the Government announced the provision of a guaranteed annual income for the railroads, a 21 per cent return on investment and another 20 per cent in add-on profit from the transportation of grain. Why is the Government allowing the railways to invest less money in 1983 than they did in 1980, when they claimed they were losing hundreds of millions of dollars on the transportation of grain? Do the Minister and the Government intend to allow the railroads to take those guaranteed annual profits, and use them for something else?

• (1425)

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I would hope that the Hon. Member has had an opportunity of reviewing the package which was distributed to him yesterday morning at 11 o'clock. It seems to me that it was clear from the announcement yesterday, made across the country and in this House, that the railways' direct investments over the next decade will be $16.5 billion to improve the railway transportation sector. Also there will be industrial spinoffs, which are fully described in that package. So I really do not know what the complaint of the Hon. Member is.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I suggest that the Minister read Statistics Canada instead of letting the CPR write his answers for him. The rate of railway investment for 1980 projected to 1991 is many hundreds of millions more than the Government is now requiring of the railroads.

REQUEST THAT CAPITAL BE USED TO ACQUIRE EQUITY IN RAILWAYS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I must now direct this question to the Prime Minister because this also has to do with over-all Government policy.

We agree that the railway system must be upgraded with a massive capital investment. Since the people of Canada paid for the building of 60 per cent of the CPR, 81 per cent of the Canadian Northern and 65 per cent of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and when the latter two went bankrupt we paid for them a second time, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if the Government will assure the House and the people of Canada that the capital investment provided for Canadian National will be used to increase our equity ownership in the Canadian National and also that the Government of Canada will take equity ownership for the value of the capital investment provided to Canadian Pacific.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I take that as a suggestion by the Hon. Member. I am glad that he is looking at the future, not only the past. I can assure him that the Government wants to look at the future, not at the past.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ADMIRAL'S REPORTED STATEMENT ON DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne). Yesterday the CBC reported that the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Geneva expressed, and I quote:

—unswerving Canadian support for President Reagan's proposal for the zero option.

At the same time, Canada's Admiral Falls, Chairman of NATO'S Military Committee, said in an interview in Brussels, and I quote:

From the beginning it has not been hard for me to understand why the Soviets feel the way they do.

—It is obvious to me, and to a lot of other people, that if (American President Ronald Reagan's) zero option stance is to be retained, and the British and French weapons are excluded, it isn't a zero option.

Can the Minister tell the House why Admiral Falls spoke out against the zero option at the same time as the Secretary of State for External Affairs was expressing unswerving Canadian support for it?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, my first remark about the comment of Admiral Falls is that I would not like to make any comments concerning his remark at the moment, not knowing if it was misquoted or taken out of context.

The former Minister of National Defence knew Admiral Falls, who was Chief of Defence Staff during his tenure, very well. I much prefer to wait until I have the full text of his speech to make sure that what he said was correctly reported.

As far as the NATO commitment by our Minister of External Affairs is concerned, I think it is irrelevant with regard to his comment; the NATO policy is, the two-track decision taken in 1979 in that we believe in a strong credible deterrent in order to prevent peace.

REQUEST THAT ADMIRAL BE RECALLED

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. As he well knows, there are Queen's Regulations for everything, including an outburst such as yesterday's. Article 19.36 of the Queen's Regulations and Orders says:

—no officer or man shall without permission ... publish his opinions on any military question that is under consideration by superior authorities.

It is obvious that Admiral Falls has forgotten this dictate. Does the Government intend to recall him to get this straightened out, because it is clearly in conflict with the Regulations?

• (1430)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to correct something I said in my previous answer. When I said "prevent peace" I meant "prevent war". I must correct it right away to be straight on the record.

As far as Admiral Falls' comment is concerned, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that Admiral Falls is under the authority of NATO itself.

Mr. McKinnon: Paid for by us.

Mr. Lamontagne: He is not delegated by Canada. He was asked by NATO to take up his post, and he is under the responsibility of NATO officials, so any action to be taken will be taken by NATO.

AGRICULTURE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF DEVELOPMENT FUND—ALLOCATION FOR WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Economic Development. Yesterday the Minister of Transport, in changing the statutory rate for the movement of grain, announced a $250 million agricultural development fund. Out of that fund $20 million is supposed to be allocated to western Canada. Is there any connection between the $20 million and the phantom $4 billion western Economic Development Fund which we have not heard anything about over the last while, and which was not mentioned in the Minister's statement? In addition, what industries in western Canada would be eligible for moneys from the fund when it is a stipulation that they cannot compete with existing industries in the rest of Canada which receive government assistance?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question of the Hon. Member to clarify some of the things he said which are not really very correct. First, the offset package put forward as part of the Crow proposal yesterday was a $250 million fund both for agricultural and industrial benefits. Of that amount, $75 million will be used exclusively in western Canada to support a number of initiatives by private business to develop new industry and provide sourcing for railways. To use one major example, the new telecommunications system the railways use will command about $450 million of imports. That is an area which could be very effectively filled by Canadian industry through the assistance of those grants.

The other $175 million is divided between both western and eastern agriculture to support the development of special crops, enter into research and development projects, look at improved marketing information, and sensory equipment to improve the over-all performance of agriculture right across Canada as well as in the West. We will be detailing those particular programs after we have consulted with provincial Governments and the business and agricultural sectors in order to determine from them what their priorities are as to the best allocation of funds in order to help Canadian industry and agriculture respond to the very major opportunities presented by the Crow development.

EFFECT OF ANNOUNCEMENT ON SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster): Madam Speaker, only 10 per cent of the sourcing for railway supplies comes from offshore. That means only 10 per cent of railway sourcing supply is available for industrial development in western Canada. The people of western Canada have a great deal of concern over the mythical Western Economic Development Fund, of which we have not seen anything. There is the immediate employment fund which was in the Minister of Finance's June budget, which was just a Liberal slush fund; it was not even responsible to a line Minister. It was given out through Minister's offices in the Province of Saskatchewan. If there is no specific allocation and no room for more than 10 per cent of railway sourcing in Saskatchewan, it is a myth that industrialization will follow the change of statutory rates.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, first let me say there is absolutely nothing mythical about allocations under the Western Economic Development Fund.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is interesting, Madam Speaker, that this is such a cause of hilarity. Hon. Members opposite obviously are not reading what happened yesterday, because $3.6 billion, originally allocated under that fund, is now going into the modernization and improvement of the railway system in western Canada. That was a high priority, the major priority for which that Fund was allocated. So there is nothing mythical about it. We went through a very clear examination with Westerners as to what the best use of that fund would be, and the message was very clear—put it into transportation. That is what this Government has done, so that we will have the best transportation system in the world.

FISHERIES

WORLD MARKET PROSPECTS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Given the implications of his answer to me on Monday, is it now going to be Government policy to trade non-surplus fish for uncertain market accessibility, or is the Minister prepared to take a more active role in establishing new world markets for both our non-surplus and surplus fish within the 200-mile jurisdiction?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, as I said to the Hon. Member two days ago, the policy announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in Geneva two days ago, which we worked closely on, will very directly link the fishing allocation in Canadian waters not only with commitments to open up markets for our fish, but, I would go even further, on past performance these countries will have to perform by first buying before having access to our waters.

The second question related to border problems with the United States. That, of course, is a separate issue and, as the Hon. Member knows, is being dealt with in a different forum.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR DESTRUCTION OF FILES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. One of the most disturbing findings of the McDonald Commission into the RCMP was the fact that the Security Service had opened up over 800,000 files on Canadians most of whom were completely law-abiding. In November of last year the Minister told the Justice Committee and I quote:

—within a month I will announce the file destruction policy of the security service, and file review and destruction pursuant to that policy will begin.

The Minister promised to destroy tens of thousands of files. Well, three months have passed and there has been no action whatsoever. When will the Solicitor General keep his promise to the Justice Committee and the people of Canada, and destroy those files which were opened in a massive violation of the privacy of thousands of law-abiding Canadian citizens?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I continue to agree that tens of thousands of files can and should be destroyed. But since the meeting to which the Hon. Member refers was held, I have been asked by counsel in the Province of Quebec handling a number of cases, about which the Hon. Member is aware, not to destroy files for the time being. I have been working on a policy which I hope in fact to announce in the next few days, about destruction, but I regret that for the reasons I have just given actual destruction of files will be deferred.

McDONALD COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, we have counsel for the RCMP in Quebec telling the Solicitor General not to destroy files they illegally opened. What kind of system have we got there? How can the Minister possibly defend keeping those files which, in fact, in no way relate to any of the charges presently pending before the courts of Quebec? There is no relationship whatsoever.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, when is this Minister finally going to make public those portions of the Third Report of the McDonald Commission, which will allow Canadians to make their own judgment on the decision of Attorneys-General, provincial and federal, not to lay a single charge for law-breaking as revealed by the McDonald Commission, a decision clearly in fundamental breach of the rule of law in Canada?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is always very good at giving free legal advice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I am sure that he would not want me to take any steps which deprive members and former members of the RCMP of any defences they feel they can make in their interests in the trials proceeding in Quebec. That is the reason the files are not being destroyed for the time being. On the other hand, I do intend to announce the policy, and I would be glad to have the Hon. Member's support for it. When he sees it, I am sure he will agree it is an excellent policy. As I say, in the next few days I do hope to be able to come forward with it.

Mr. Broadbent: I want my file.

Mr. Kaplan: So far as the publication of portions of the McDonald Commission Report is concerned, portions which I indicated were being withheld pending decisions by prosecutors and the Commissioner on Discipline, again those are in the process of being edited and I hope to make them public shortly, as I indicated I would.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—IMPACT OF CHANGES ON FARMERS

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who will remember that in this House he said to western Canadians, and western farmers in particular, that while they had no representation west of Winnipeg, he would look into the interests of the western farmers. The announcement yesterday in Winnipeg was not in the best interests of the western farmer.

Is the Prime Minister aware of the burden which he has placed on the farmers? Wheat prices have dropped $1 a bushel in the last year. Cost of production has increased 25 per cent in the last year. The over-all loss of income to farmers is estimated to be 28 per cent. Is the Prime Minister aware of these facts, and is he aware of what he has done by the announcement made yesterday by his Minister in Winnipeg?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I suppose I should not say I am surprised at the question from the Hon. Member for Assiniboia. It is clear that there is no unified position on the benches across from us, but I would hope that when the necessary legislation is tabled in the House we would see them come forward with one voice. For example, I look at the statements made by the Hon. Member for Lisgar to the CBC on January 18, some two weeks ago, when he said, "We are generally in agreement with the Gilson thrust. We are not completely united because the country is not united. The Hon. Members from Saskatchewan have reservations and have been putting them forward very strongly within our own caucus".

It is perfectly clear, Madam Speaker, that the question, and opinion, if you like, expressed by the Hon. Member, does not represent a consensus of representatives from western Canada on that side of the House. Therefore I would take issue, first of all, with the statement about additional burdens being placed on western farmers because opportunities are being given to western farmers in this package. I dearly hope, Madam Speaker, that when the legislation comes forward it will be scrutinized with the objectivity expressed by the Hon. Member for Lisgar in the interview which he gave to CBC.

LONG-TERM IMPACT

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. I am disappointed he did not answer my question because I believe he has a responsibility to answer to the farmers of Canada. Is the Prime Minister aware of the long-term impact of what happened yesterday in Winnipeg, the long-term impact on the farmers? Within six to eight years the cost of this implementation will be $1 a bushel. Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that, if the farmers are destroyed, grass will grow in the streets of our cities?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member shows concern about the long-term impact. Surely everyone in this country has reflected on the long-term impact of doing nothing about the transportation system in the West.

Hon. Members on that side of the House are complaining about the inadequacies of the transportation system, the rail system. They have been asking for its improvement. It is a statistical fact, it is knowledge, that if the rail system is not improved there will be bottlenecks by the middle of this decade. The farmers will not be able to move their grain. The miners will not be able to move their potash. Coal will not be able to move. There will be a jam of transportation in the West.

The Government has looked at the long-term future of the West. Some $20 billion in private and public moneys will be invested over the next few years in order to improve transportation in the West so that farmers and other producers can move their produce, so they can export it.

Naturally, the Tory Party is saying, "Don't do anything about it. We have no solution, but whatever you bring in to solve it, even if it is $20 billion, we will complain." You do not represent the West.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Within the context of the tragedy of 1.5 million Canadians unemployed last year, we saw a dramatic increase in the number of young people unemployed, that is, between the ages of 15 and 24, a dramatic increase of 37.3 per cent. Many of these young people are university graduates of last year.

We are now just a few months away from the time when more young people will be coming from our universities and post-secondary institutions into a jobless market. Will the Minister tell us what new programs, or what hope does he have for these young people coming into a job market which is already flooded with unemployed young people?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, this year, as in past years, the Government of Canada will be putting forward a major employment program for students, which is called "Summer Canada". It is through this program we have provided a very major basis of summertime employment to allow students to go back into school. As well, we have the "Hire-A-Student Program", where we have something like 400 offices across Canada which undertake to work with the private sector to provide jobs for young people.

I would say beyond that, Madam Speaker, Hon. Members of this Caucus have been working very extensively over the past several months to develop a number of proposals related to youth employment, and they have submitted them to the different Ministers to examine as part of an over-all employment package, which we are examining as part of a buildup toward the new budget. Hon. Members of this Caucus and of this Government have been looking at the kinds of additional initiatives which we can take, and we would hope to be in a position to put them forward at the time the Minister of Finance brings his budget forward.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON STUDENT JOB PROSPECTS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, that initiative and that process do not seem to be working because I have it on the authority of the Minister himself, when he told a group of students on Friday last at the University of Manitoba, "They should prepare for a jobless summer as there is an initial lag between economic recovery and improving job markets." That outrageous statement by this Minister responsible for job creation was made in his own city of Winnipeg to the students of the University of Manitoba. That is a disgraceful cop-out by the Minister. How does the Minister reconcile that statement with what he is now saying in the House?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I believe one of the responsibilities of any Minister is to talk to the people of Canada, including the young people, people of all regions, in a realistic way, and not to try to fool them with exaggeration, hyperbole and rhetoric, which we constantly hear from this Hon. Member of Parliament. What we should be doing is talking common sense to them and discussing with them how we can arrive at a solution. I would point out, Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member and his colleagues are looking for solutions, the announcement which we made yesterday has a potential of creating something like 350,000 jobs. If they, and the Members of the New Democratic Party, are so interested in employment, they should get behind this proposal which is the biggest job-creation effort this country has ever undertaken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—EXPULSION OF MIGRANT WORKERS

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it relates to the tragic situation in West Africa. The Prime Minister will know of the harsh and precipitous action on the part of the Government of Nigeria in expelling an estimated two million migrant workers. Would the Prime Minister tell this House what representations the Government of Canada has made to the Government of Nigeria?

Mr. Trudeau: Do you know the answer? I do not.

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I want to tell the Hon. Member that the Government of Canada is monitoring the situation in Nigeria with great concern. We have received requests for assistance with reference to this matter from Togo, and from the International Red Cross, and steps are being taken to react to those requests. Our officials are in touch with the appropriate officials of that country, and that organization. We are doing all that is possible to be helpful in this tragic situation.

REQUESTS FOR CANADIAN ASSISTANCE

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, the question was not regarding assistance to those affected, but what representations has this Government made on this, the second largest expulsion of migrant workers in recent history?

• (1450)

Pursuing the Minister's comments about the willingness of the Canadian Government to be of assistance, may I ask him if the Government has made any offers, particularly to the Government of Ghana, where 1.5 million of these refugees are heading home? For example, is the Canadian Government prepared to assist the Red Cross and church agencies, and will it send Hercules aircraft to assist in the evacuation?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, may I say to the Hon. Member that while we have received some preliminary inquiries about humanitarian assistance we have only had the two specific requests that I mentioned. We stand ready to respond to requests as soon as the character of the requirements can be defined. What the Hon. Member has said about aircraft is something that can be determined in our contacts to ascertain exactly what help is required of Canada.

Along with the neighbouring states, we recognize that the Nigerian action, unfortunately, falls within the authority of that Government. It parallels action that has been taken by other Governments. We regret, however, the hasty application of the order that has led to considerable hardship for the people there and in the neighbouring countries.

I can only reiterate to the Hon. Member that it is a situation that our officials are following closely. We have indicated our willingness to respond to requests for help, and are attempting to ascertain what help can best be provided by Canada from this distance.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

DELAY IN MAKING PAYMENTS UNDER WORK PROGRAMS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. While I am pleased to hear that the Government is launching a number of new employment programs, I want to tell him that there are thousands of people in British Columbia alone, working on those programs, who are beginning to wonder why they are working in the bush in sub-zero temperatures in snow and rain, not getting paid for weeks and weeks, while other people sit home and collect. What kind of reward is that for initiative?

Last fall, with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James and a number of other Members, I drew the attention of the Government to these non-payment problems and made some suggestions. At that time some minor improvements were made but since then the whole mess of nonpayment has become worse than ever. The UIC pay centre employees and management in Vancouver have a backlog of some 4,000 UIC and EBAP cheques. EBAP employees in Parksville, Campbell River, Salmo, Kaslo, Terrace, Nelson and places throughout the Province are having trouble. We want to see some action.

The corrective measures taken by the Minister have not worked. What new measures will he take? What new systems will be put in place? What does he plan to do to clean up this backlog before the UIC gets further bogged down in other welcome job creation programs so that the new ones may have a chance to work?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to note that the Hon. Member is in favour of and approves the job creation initiatives that we have taken. I will certainly respond to his concerns about the administration.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that in part we are experiencing problems because of the success of the program in its take-up. The Section 38 programs have close to 9,000 people enrolled in them, particularly in the rural areas of British Columbia. Those people must be paid through the unemployment insurance system, and this is now being done manually.

We are accelerating the implementation of the on-line computer system for handling unemployment insurance payouts in the British Columbia region. We hope to have that completed by February. That will mean that we will not have to utilize the manual method, which is a longer and more complicated way of doing it. We will be able to put it on the computer and make it easier to handle.

Mr. Kristiansen: Madam Speaker, as recently as Monday a representative of the Government, speaking in the adjournment debate said, referring to the EBAP program, "Interest in the program is steadily increasing now that the normal growing pains and the birth pains of the Program are over." The Parliamentary Secretary said this on Monday afternoon.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member took two minutes to ask his first question. I cannot allow him more than half a minute.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE PERSONAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lyle S. Kristiansen (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, there seems to be a divorce between their perceived reality and the facts. Would the Minister agree to accompany me, or other Members, to British Columbia to meet with his own officials and with people drawing unemployment, to find out what the situation really is and whether his solutions are really working?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the invitation and his offer of company. I must tell him that I was in British Columbia last week, meeting with my officials about this specific issue. We took the steps we have just announced to bring the system on line. I think we can save the taxpayers the cost of an additional trip to British Columbia. Instead, I will be staying here and working on other programs.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—INQUIRY WHETHER PAYMENTS WILL BE RELATED TO PERFORMANCE

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Bearing in mind that the thesis of the announcement made by the Minister of Transport in Winnipeg yesterday was that the railways would get more money by some contributions from the Government and from farmers, setting aside the merits and demerits of that specific formula for the moment, could the Prime Minister indicate whether, on the basis of getting more money, the railways will be required to meet a target of performance? If they are going to meet a target of performance, will it be measured by the volume delivered to the ports per year? Also, will there be a penalty to the railways in terms of financial payment if they do not meet the delivery target?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I would be just as pleased if the Prime Minister would take the question as a representation.

STATUTORY AUTHORITY FOR CHANGES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, as long as there has been a Crow rate in the country, one of the great facts that farmers could live by has been that, irrespective of whether the rate was right or wrong, it was guaranteed. When the new legislation is introduced with respect to the Crow rates, may I ask the Prime Minister if it will ensure that whatever the changes are, they will be made according to statute, that changes will not be manipulated by order in council, and that farmers will have a guarantee of some rate, either fixed or by formula, so that they will know what their costs of transportation are going to be, and that those facts are predictable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, that is not a question; that is a representation.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUERY RESPECTING RECOVERY OF MONEYS PAID TO CONVICTED MURDERER, CLIFFORD OLSON

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Justice. For two days he has been meeting with provincial Attorneys General. Last week the British Columbia Attorney General, Allan Williams, indicated that during those meetings he would be discussing the question of the recovery of the $90,000 which the RCMP paid at the request of Clifford Olson, and of the $10,000 that is presumably still being held in trust in Canada. Did these discussions about the recovery of the Olson moneys take place and, if so, what was the result of them?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, that was one of the subjects I discussed with the Attorney General of British Columbia yesterday. I had already sent him a copy of my answer in this House to a question by one of the Hon. Member's colleagues. At that time I explained that, since the initial decision to pay was made by the Attorney General of British Columbia, any decision to recover the money should also be his. I understand that the Attorney General of British Columbia hopes to make a final decision on that matter in the relatively near future.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR RECOVERY

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, last week the British Columbia Attorney General, Allan Williams, expressed surprise that the federal Minister of Justice had attempted to put the onus—as he just did today again—on British Columbia to recover these moneys because retrieving these moneys, and I quote directly from the Attorney General, has been "under consideration ever since it started. It involves the Department of Justice federally—"

Why has the federal Minister of Justice attempted to leave the impression just to the contrary of the views of Mr. Williams? If the federal Department has been involved with discussions ever since they started, why has he attempted to put that onus on the British Columbia Attorney General?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, it may well be that the federal Department of Justice would be involved in an attempt to recover the moneys, if such a decision were made. The decision ought to be made by the Attorney General of British Columbia however, just as the original decision to pay the money was made by the Attorney General of British Columbia without the knowledge of either the Commissioner of the RCMP or the Solicitor General. The Attorney General did not challenge my assertion of that yesterday.

CBC—COVERAGE OF LIBERAL PARTY NATIONAL CONVENTION

Question No. 4,566—Mr. Siddon:

Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation provide closed circuit television service or equipment for such service at the Liberal Party National Convention in Ottawa on November 5 to 7, 1982 and, if so (a) what amount was the Corporation paid to provide the service (b) what was the total cost to the Corporation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: No.

MR. PIERRE O'NEIL

Question No. 4,573—Mr. Bosley:

Is Mr. Pierre O'Neil presently the Director of Information Services at the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and was he a former press secretary to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: Yes, Mr. Pierre O'Neil, a former press secretary to Prime Minister Trudeau, is at present Director of Information Services for the French Services Division of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

CBC—ACCESS TO AIR TIME BY PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 4,575—Mr. Bosley:

1. Did the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation accede to an unprecedented instruction by the Prime Minister's Office to grant the Prime Minister three 15-minute free-time appearances on CBC/Radio Canada networks and, if so, did the President (a) consult (b) advise (i) the Vice-President and General Manager, English Services Division of the CBC (ii) the Vice-President and General Manager, French Services Division of the CBC (iii) Messrs. Pierre DesRoches, Arthur Boughner, Gordon Bruce, Guy Coderre, Marcel Deschamps, Guy Gougeon and Jean-Louis Arcand (iv) the Minister responsible for the CBC?

2. How many (a) weeks (b) days (c) hours (d) minutes elapsed between the receipt by the President of the instructions from the Prime Minister's Office and the President's acquiescence in that instruction?

3. During the period between the receipt of the Prime Minister's instruction and the acquiescence, which (a) officials of the CBC (b) other individuals were consulted by or on behalf of the President?

4. During the period between receipt of the Prime Minister's instruction and the acquiescence, did the President inform himself (a) directly (b) indirectly of all relevant circumstances respecting each request for access to the CBC by Prime Minister (i) Bennett (ii) King (iii) St. Laurent (iv) Diefenbaker (v) Pearson (vi) Trudeau (vii) Clark?

5. On what precise occasions were requests for free access to the networks of CBC and/or Radio Canada made by Prime Minister (a) Bennett (b) King (c) St. Laurent (d) Diefenbaker (e) Pearson (f) Trudeau (g) Clark and, in each case (i) what was the response and what were the reasons for that response (ii) by which officer or office in the CBC was the decision taken?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. The CBC policy, copies of which have been supplied to all major federal parties states " ... the Prime Minister of Canada has occasional access to air time to raise issues of exceptional national importance". Under the same policy, any request for such access must be made at least 24 hours before broadcast and must specify the subject matter. The recent request by the Prime Minister met these two requirements. Additionally, the CBC had to decide if such requests had been made only occasionally and if the subject was of exceptional national importance. The President of the CBC, after consultations in the normal manner with senior officers of the Corporation, was satisfied on both counts and advised the relevant senior officers of the CBC decision.

The President at no time consulted the Minister responsible for the CBC about the Prime Minister's request or the CBC's decision regarding the request.

2. The CBC's decision to accept the Prime Minister's request was made on the same day, following consultation by the President, in the usual manner, with senior officers of the Corporation.

3. Between receipt of the request from the office of the Prime Minister and the CBC decision to grant access to its facilities, consultation took place between the President and senior officers of the Corporation. No other individuals were consulted by or on behalf of the President.

4. It should be noted that the present policy which was agreed to by all political parties has been in place only since 1978. In addition, details of requests for Prime Ministerial access were readily available for only the ten previous years. The President informed himself directly of the relevant circumstances respecting these requests.

5. The length of time covered by the question is 50 years (since the establishment of the CRBC in 1932), and files and records have not been maintained in a fashion that would allow the accurate retrieval of such data prior to late 1973. However, since November, 1973 there have been six requests for Prime Ministerial access. In all cases, the requests were granted by the CBC President under provisions of the policy existing at the time. The dates and subject matter of all such broadcasts by the Prime Minister are: November 22, 1973—energy crisis, October 13, 1975—announcement of anti-inflationary measures, December 18, 1975—the economy, June 23, 1976—air traffic controllers strike, August 1, 1978—remarks on Bonn Economic Summit, October 19, 20, and 21, 1982—the economy.

STUDY "HIGH CULTURE, POPULAR CULTURE AND MASS MEDIA"

Question No. 4,630—Mr. Mazankowski:

Were two studies carried out, one on behalf of the Department of the Environment and one on behalf of the Department of Communications, both "to assess the level of involvement of the Canadian population in various types of high, mass and popular culture" and, if so (a) what was the purpose of the studies (b) for what reason were two separate studies required (c) who conducted the studies (d) what amount did each study cost?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Communications and Environment as follows: only one study was carried out on behalf of the Department of Communications.

(a) The project "High Culture, Popular Culture and Mass Media" is designed to show the relationship between high culture, popular culture and the mass media in terms of both behaviour and attitudes. The results will show to what extent individuals distinguish between high culture and popular culture and can aid in the development of fairer funding policies.

(c) The study is being conducted by Professor Zuzanek of the University of Waterloo under the University Research Program of the Department of Communications.

(d) The study, when completed, will cost $25,000.

PROJECTED DEFICIT FOR 1982-83, 1983-84

1. What is the government's projected deficit for the fiscal year (a) 1982-83 (b) 1983-84?

2. Does the Department of Finance have alternate projections based on (a) 10 per cent unemployment (b) 5 per cent unemployment (c) full employment and, if so, what are they?

3. If the economy were running at full capacity, what would be the expected (a) GNP (b) deficit for the fiscal year (i) 1982-83 (ii) 1983-84?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1 to 3. The Minister of Finance has indicated that he will make a budget presentation in the not too distant future.

Mr. McKenzie: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what information he obtained about my starred question which I placed on the Order Paper on December 20, 1982. The questions were:

Will the Government be launching a comprehensive environmental study to determine the effects on the water quality of Indian Bay and Shoal Lake in the event that the proposed 350 cottage lots on the northwest corner of Shoal Lake in Manitoba are developed and, . . . ?

Will the Government permit the use of motorboats for recreational purposes on Indian Bay?

When I raised this question last week, the Parliamentary Secretary stated that he would make some inquiries. Could he inform me what progress is being made on answering this extremely important question?

Mr. Smith: Yes, Madam Speaker, I made inquiries and I regret to advise the Hon. Member that I do not as yet have a reply to them. I will again make further inquiries and hopefully get an answer for him as soon as possible.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, prior to calling what I believe is the first Private Member's Bill, Bill C-668, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock-North Delta (Mr. Friesen), there have been consultations between the Parties and I believe the House would give its unanimous consent to deal with Bill C-672, standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), which is to be dealt with at all remaining stages without debate. I believe the House would be prepared to waive the period required by Standing Order 76(2), which is the period between first and second reading.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, we on this side are prepared to grant the necessary consent to the passage of this Bill at all three stages.

Madam Speaker: Perhaps in circumstances such as this it would be sufficient for the Speaker to ask for and obtain unanimous consent to deal with the matter.

BANK ACT

AMENDMENTS TO PROVIDE INCREASED PROTECTION TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta) moved that Bill C-668, an Act to amend the Bank Act (power of inspector), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we have more than the usual number of Members in the House today for Private Members' Business. I assume it is because of the intense interest in any Bill dealing with the Bank Act, it has an inherent fascination for everyone.

I have proposed this legislation because I see a good change coming in the banking industry. There has always been in the industry a kind of pragmatism with regard to technology. If industry wants to be competitive, if industry wants to get its share of the market, it must be pragmatic in terms of technology. Therefore, we have a lot of competition in the banking industry regarding the obtaining of loans, the extending of personal credit and the taking down of barriers.

I remember as a young man going to the bank. The tellers were behind iron cages. For the past 20 or 30 years the focus has been on removing those cages and making all banking officials as accessible as possible. Now everyone realizes that the consumer is important. It is not commercial lending that is important; it is the individual consumer who is important. All banks are in competition for that lending business. Therefore, the banks are very pragmatic in technology and up to date. We now have computerized banking systems which, incidentally and paranthetically, cause a great deal of concern in society. The computer banks are not situated in Canada and, therefore, they are potentially accessible to people in other countries. Thus, there is some well-founded concern regarding that phase of technology in our banking industry.

What concerns me is that pragmatism is applied not only to technology in banking but can easily be applied to the activities of banking personnel having nothing to do with technology. As a renaissance writer put it, a new philosophy calls all in doubt, whereas there was a time in banking circles when the personnel or the management of banks were controlled by a concept, an overriding understanding that there are certain things you just do not do. That concept has quickly eroded in the last decade or two. We are now into an era of pragmatism where in the minds of some people you do what is successful and what you can get away with. It does not necessarily always have to do with legality.

When that kind of a concept becomes the philosophy of any individual staff member in any bank, then the consumer becomes vulnerable. He is at jeopardy. It is possible for internal fraud to take place within the banking system of which the senior banking management may be totally unaware. I am sure in cases like this that the boards of the banks, the senior levels of management of the banks, would not be committed to all kinds of pervasive attitudes of pragmatism in the banking business. Once any individual official can be guided by the concept that he can do what he can get away with, particularly if that catapults him into the level of a successful executive, then the consumer is vulnerable.

I am concerned about the present Bank Act and the powers of the Inspector General. I am sure the consumer, the borrowing public, naturally expects, with a title like Inspector General, that there is a certain level of protection for the consumer. Therefore, when a consumer goes to the bank to carry out a transaction, if something fraudulent should happen in that bank the consumer will have the Inspector General on his side and an investigation will take place and the wrong righted.

Under the present Bank Act I think that is an illusion. In fact, I think it is a delusion. In Section 246, Clause 1 of the Bill, Subsection (2), we find the following words concerning in the Inspector General:

> The Inspector, from time to time . . . for the purposes of satisfying himself that the provisions of this Act having reference to the safety of the interests of the depositors, creditors, and shareholders of the Bank and other provisions of this Act are being duly observed and that the Bank is in sound financial condition, and at the conclusion of each examination and inquiry shall report thereon to the Minister.

The first obligation of the Inspector General is to make sure that everything taking place within a banking operation is going to maintain the solvency of the bank. That is not unimportant. Every investor or depositor who has an account in a bank will be happy to know that somebody has the authority to make sure that the deposits are secure. That is a very important function for the Inspector General. In the context I am addressing, I think that is not taking place. The present Act goes on to read:

> The Minister, whenever he has reason to believe that an offence against this Act has been or is about to be committed by a bank, or by any director, officer, or an employee of a Bank, shall direct the Inspector to make such examination and inquiry as the Inspector deems necessary for the purpose of determining the facts—

That is basically where it starts—"for the purpose of determining the facts." That is a dead-end. That takes you nowhere. Let me add parenthetically that my Bill is addressing the banks and the Inspector General of Banks. There has been enough information in the news the past weeks and months regarding trust companies, particularly in the Province of Ontario, to give us pause for concern regarding the activities being carried on within trust companies. I would simply like to say that whatever I have submitted in this amendment to the Bank Act I think ought to apply also to trust companies. Trust companies ought to be open for examination. However, it is important to note that the Inspector General is incredibly limited in the conduct of his affairs.

I want to illustrate the dilemma. I have here a letter directed to a constituent, not one of mine, dated some time ago but within the life of this Parliament. It reads:

> Further to my letter of May 5, I have now been advised by the—bank that an investigation has been made and that a blanket release of all of the securities in question has been offered and that they are now available for delivery upon request.

That letter deals with what would have appeared at the time to be an attempted fraud. I think there was a fair amount of evidence to indicate at that time that there was attempted fraud in this particular case. Notice what the Inspector General said—that he had now been advised by the bank in question that an investigation had been made.

Here was a case where there was enough suspicion that fraud was attempted and probably would have been carried out had there not been a storm of protest. There was enough suspicion that very likely a criminal investigation should have been conducted. But what we have is the Inspector General saying that he was acting, in fact, as a messenger boy on behalf of the bank. The bank itself is carrying on an investigation and is reporting to the Inspector General. That is not good enough. I think the banks themselves should welcome an avenue that would allow them to clear themselves. As long as they are carrying on their own investigations, they can always be held suspect of carrying on a whitewash.

It seems to me that the banks should consider this a friendly amendment. If this amendment should be passed, there would be a mechanism structured outside of the banks that would carry on independent investigations. If there is fraudulent activity, charges can be laid. If the banks carry on their own investigations, there continues to be lingering public doubt because of possible whitewashing. Therefore, no real purpose is served. It appears to me that in the banks' own interest this should be considered a friendly amendment.

Even more important, it seems to me that the consumer needs that kind of ultimate protection. If there is an attempt at consumer fraud by a local car dealer, General Motors, or a clothing manufacturer, for example, it is no time at all until an official from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs arrives at that particular industry or business to check their books, and if the Department believes there is reason for charges to be laid, it will lay them.

This is not so in the case of the banks. Nothing like that occurs. According to the present Act, the Inspector General is the one who looks at the solvency of the banks and reports to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). In that, you have a merry circle.

I would invite Members of the House to give serious consideration to supporting this legislation. There is nothing ideological or partisan about it. I believe that all Members of the House are interested in genuine consumer protection. I invite them to support this amendment, which will simply give additional powers to the Inspector General of Banks so that if there is reasonable belief that fraud has been committed, he can make a report to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) who can then take the appropriate steps to ensure that the consumer is protected.

Their support of this amendment will also allow the banking industry itself to be cleared of any accusations of having protected itself, or that it whitewashed any type of activity, as well as giving it a clean bill of health as a result of an investigation. The consumer can then have total confidence that he will have a non-partisan umpire to carry out an independent investigation and to make sure his interests are being protected when he feels he may have been wronged.

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, before I deal with the main issues in this Private Member's Bill, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his election as official caucus Chairman of the Official Opposition. I cannot help but find it interesting that his first speech in the House after his appointment would deal with increasing the powers of the Inspector of Banks. I want to wish him well in his functions. I know he will have a very exciting and eventful two-year term.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member opposite, and I share his interest in the subject as well as his aims, which are to afford greater security and protection to the banking consumer. However, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support the Bill as presented by the Hon. Member, because he seems to be somewhat misdirected. Let me explain. Bill C-668 expands the authority of the Inspector General of Banks by giving him powers under the Criminal Code, as indicated in the wording of the Bill, and I quote:

> Anyone who believes that a director, officer or employee of a bank has committed or is about to commit an offence against this Act or an offence under the Criminal Code—

That is the key-word.

> —may make a complaint to the Inspector.

This amendment is important, I believe, because it considerably expands the powers of the Inspector General of Banks. Mr. Speaker, we all know—and I hope the Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is going to speak in this debate, in view of his considerable interest in banking affairs—we all know what the duties and powers are of the Inspector General of Banks. During a very long debate, as you may recall, Mr. Speaker, which resulted in the new Bank Act, we had an in-depth discussion on the powers of the Inspector General of Banks, which in the previous legislation were defined in Sections 60 and 64 and can now be found in Part IX of the Bank Act which relates to supervision, which is, in fact, the responsibility of the Inspector General of Banks.

The extent of the powers of the Inspector General of Banks is described in Section 246(2) of the present Bank Act, and with your leave, Mr. Speaker, I shall quote as follows:

> The Inspector, from time to time, but not less frequently than once in each calendar year, shall make or cause to be made such examination and inquiry into the business and affairs of each bank as the Inspector may deem to be necessary or expedient, and for such purposes may take charge on the premises of the assets of the bank or any portion thereof, if the need should arise, for the purposes of satisfying himself that the provisions of this Act having reference to the safety of the interests of the depositors, creditors and shareholders of the bank and other provisions of this Act are being duly observed and that the bank is in a sound financial condition, and at the conclusion of each examination and inquiry shall report thereon to the Minister.

Well, Mr. Speaker, those are the powers of the Inspector General which are indeed very extensive, and now the Hon. Member opposite would like to extend those powers even further, conferring responsibilities on the Inspector General, not only with respect to the Bank Act, but also with respect to the Criminal Code.

At the time, the Inspector General of Banks told the Members of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that he did not have enough staff, that the growing number of new banks was putting tremendous pressure on his staff, and that the additional responsibilities and powers that banks have at the present time resulted in an enormous workload for this staff. He had to make sure that audits were in order, he had to discharge his responsibilities as defined in the Bank Act, and he had to have competent staff including auditors, lawyers, accountants, actuaries and people familiar with the international markets, the securities market, the stock market, and Canadian industry in general. Until now, however, it has not been considered either useful or necessary to have Criminal Code experts on the Inspector General's staff.

Mr. Speaker, if in addition, the Inspector General is to have responsibilities with respect to the Criminal Code, it is clear that this will add considerably to his staffing problems, his own responsibilities and the extent of those responsibilities.

Recruiting enough staff is already a difficult problem, and now we want to hire more bureaucrats. But supposing the necessary and I hope competent staff were available, when would they start working? Whenever there is a complaint? Of course, but unless there are a great many complaints, they will not have much to do, and if that is the case, it will be just one more burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this bill is the answer. We should not forget, and I wish to emphasize this for the benefit of my hon. colleague opposite, that the Act already confers on the Inspector General of Banks the power to hold an inquiry as described in Section 246(6), which says, and I quote:

> The Inspector has all the powers conferred on a commissioner appointed under Part II of the Inquiries Act for the purpose of obtaining evidence under oath, and may delegate such powers as occasion may require.

The important thing here is that the Inspector General of Banks already has quasi-judicial powers under the Inquiries Act. These, however, extend only to the Bank Act and not to the Criminal Code. Therefore, if we want to add, and I do not share this view, a Criminal Code responsibility to the responsibilities of the Inspector General in the Bank Act, we shall need an amendment, and that amendment is the one being proposed by my colleague opposite. We on the Government side cannot support this amendment because, Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, we have our police forces, including the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the Sûreté du Québec or the Montreal Police, which have special squads to investigate crimes such as business frauds, fraudulent bankruptcies and shady banking transactions, and these officers are experts in that area. When a complaint is made involving the Criminal Code, when there is the possibility of a criminal offence, it is really up to the officers of the peace to ensure that justice is done.

In recent years we have seen a number of major arrest and convictions thanks to the fact that these excellent officers did their job. It is their responsibility and not that of the Inspector General of Banks to hold that kind of inquiry. I feel that police officers and members of the judiciary who are specialized in business crime should have that responsibility. I know someone is going to say: Sure, but what happens if the Inspector General of Banks suspects fraudulent or criminal activity or if someone informs the Inspector General that he suspects something? The answer is simple. The Inspector General can communicate his information to the RCMP if the charges involved fall under their jurisdiction, or otherwise, he can transmit the information to the Montreal Police or the Sûreté du Québec, depending on their respective jurisdictions, and of course depending on the location where the offence was committed.

Mr. Speaker, in the past—and I remember that the Member for Edmonton West often brought this up in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs—before the present Act, the word bank was often misused. Some companies were using the word "bank" to designate institutions which were not banks. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police had to investigate with the help of experts, and the investigations were made because the offence came under the terms of the Criminal Code. The information was sent to the Inspector who would order the RCMP investigation as he was expected to do. If there was a strong case against the offenders, the whole matter was transferred to the Attorney General of Canada who would then institute proceedings. This procedure used to work smoothly because the Inspector General of Banks—for whom I have a lot of respect and who does a tremendous job, although he has never complained about the fact that he has very few people working for him—has never asked for the authority to extend his jurisdiction to criminal activities.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if it had been deemed advisable to give him that authority, we would have had to consider that amendment when we sat for hours on end to review the Bank Act, a task that was completed hardly a year or 18 months ago and which laster for three years. And yet, the amendment was not even mentioned during the debate on the Bank Act. It is important once more to read what is being proposed in Bill C-668. The amendment in sub-clause (4.2) reads as follows:

> Where, as a result of an examination and inquiry made by the Inspector under this section, the Minister determines that there are reasonable and probable grounds for believing that an offence has been or is about to be committed, he shall forthwith inform the Minister of Justice of his determination.

It seems rather interesting not to say astonishing to me that if the Minister of Finance, for instance, is required to examine the report and determine whether there are reasonable and probable grounds—I am using the legal terminology with which Members opposite are obviously very familiar—for believing that an offence might have been committed, he informs the Minister of Justice. However, if the Minister makes an inquiry pursuant to sub-section 246(4) as it now reads, and I quote:

> The Minister, whenever he has reason to believe that an offence against this Act has been or is about to be committed by a bank or by any director, officer or employee of the bank, shall direct the Inspector to make such examination and inquiry as the Inspector deems necessary for the purpose of determining the facts and the Inspector shall make or cause to be made such examination and inquiry and at the conclusion thereof shall report thereon to the Minister.

Therefore, the Bank Act clearly states that the Minister of Justice must be informed of any irregularity if need be.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the fact that banks are already subject to the Criminal Code, which provides for investigation in case of offences, and that these investigations come under the jurisdiction of the police forces and our courts. Moreover, without any evidence to the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that there are enough offences such as the Hon. Member opposite seems to fear to justify granting the Inspector General of Banks more power. Allowing him to hire personnel and investigate and adding to the responsibilities already given to him under the Bank Act would not be justified. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this would cause much duplication of efforts.

Moreover, there have been enough complaints about the size and cost of our bureaucracy and I am afraid that such a change would result in more duplication of efforts. Everyone knows what problems can be caused by a lack of communication.

It seems to me that, under the Bank Act, and God knows that this Act is quite substantial and voluminous, the Inspector General is primarily accountable to us in this House. He already has quite enough to do and if he feels that the present legislation does not give him enough powers to alleviate the concerns and fears of the Hon. Member opposite, I am convinced that he will be the first to say so. However, such is not the case, Mr. Speaker. The Inspector General of Banks often appears before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to complain that he is short of staff. He is right because there are now many more banks than in the past, but he has never complained of not being granted the power which the sponsor of this bill would want him to have.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that I understand and respect the views of the Hon. Member opposite, namely his concern for security, but I do not believe that such security can be provided by this bill unless we create a very large bureaucracy because there are already officers who have the authority to answer all the concerns of the honourable member, except for centralization, which, unfortunately, neither the Inspector General of Banks nor ourselves seem to want. However, it would certainly be interesting to examine this issue in depth, but not through an amendment to the Bank Act.

[English]

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond very briefly to the proposal before the House this afternoon. I would perhaps make some observations on the comments of the Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Deniger) who last spoke. During the long period in which the Bank Act was reviewed in the House of Commons, it was very clear that the Inspector General of Banks did not have sufficient resources to do the job at hand. In addition to that, he lacked the will, and that lack of will was caused by a lack of direction from the Government and the former Minister of Finance. As a result, the Inspector General of Banks was simply performing a limited accounting function. He was certainly not involved and I suppose had been told not to become concerned with a number of the very crucial issues raised by the Hon. Member.

The Second point raised by the Hon. Member was that those resources already existed, so there was no need to "duplicate", as he called it, through this Bill, in order to delegate additional resources and authority to the Inspector General of Banks. I suggest that this is completely wrong and, to some degree, it shows a lack of sufficient information.

One recommendation I would give to the Hon. Member and the Finance Committee would be to call before that Committee representatives from the RCMP commercial crime group to determine their available resources. Recent publications have indicated that they are extremely short of personnel. They do not have the access which the Inspector General of Banks would have on a regular basis. Finally, they do not have the professional expertise readily available at their fingertips to handle the kinds of complex problems which can arise in commercial crime. The Committee should determine whether or not the resources, which the Hon. Member suggested are adequate, are in fact adequate. I am certain it would be extremely clear to anyone that we do not provide the budget or personnel necessary if those individuals are to handle the kinds of problems with which they are dealing.

Just to recap the first point, the Department of the Inspector General of Banks is understaffed and lacks the policy direction from the Government which is necessary in order to deal with the kinds of concerns which seem to be expressed here.

While the last revision of the Bank Act was before the House of Commons, there were numerous serious questions raised. I would just like to mention some of those questions today. The first would be the role that we had assigned to the Inspector General of Banks of reporting on this particular area and giving us the information he had available; but certainly there was a question in our minds and in the minds of other Members of that Committee during the revision process about the operation of the foreign operations of Canadian chartered banks. At that time we were unable to obtain any co-operation from the Inspector General of Banks on the grounds that, one, the information was confidential and, two, that he did not have it.

Ultimately, there were some serious questions raised about the foreign operations of Canadian banks. First of all, it was suggested that in some countries the banks had in fact been involved with certain groups which had worked actively against the existing governments. That kind of information was not available from the Inspector General of Banks. So the question of supervision of our chartered banks in foreign countries is an extremely important part of his role. The question whether or not these banks are exceeding the laws of the Government of Canada or the policy directions established by the Government of Canada was an extremely important aspect of that, which both the Government and the office of the Inspector General of Banks shrugged off.

The other aspect of the foreign operations of Canadian banks was certainly brought to light when the very serious question was raised some years ago about the exorbitant bank profits, enormous profits, which in reality were gleaned from Canadian taxpayers and Canadian residents. What they tried to sell us was essentially that the banks had earned these enormous profits by their foreign operations. Again, we are getting extremely misleading information from the banks, and this is allowed to proceed through the Inspector General of Banks and the Government of Canada.

Essentially what we have today is the absolute contrary, where Canadian chartered banks through their foreign operations seem to be in very serious difficulty. Loans to Venezuela and to Colombia have turned into a situation of very unwise investment which the supervision of the Inspector General of Banks in earlier times may have prevented.

I would like to suggest that the over-exposure in some of those areas is creating apprehension on the part of the banks and enormous pressure in Canada to reduce that exposure. That type of pressure is applied against small businesses, farmers, fishermen and home owners. When we see foreclosures, people forced into bankruptcies and their assets seized by receivers, essentially we are getting a reaction on the part of banks to over exposure in some very unwise lending programs that occurred some time previously. If these loans had been properly supervised by the Inspector General of Banks, we certainly would not have the level of concern and the level of problem that we have in the country today.

Another area that was raised during the revision of the Bank Act, and again this relates directly to the supervision, the staff and the Inspector General of Banks, was bank operations and their labour relations policy. There was an effort to organize bank workers for a period of time. This particular group was extremely hard pressed. They had low wages, poor working conditions and were subject to many intimidations. When an effort was made to organize these employees, to guarantee them some of the same basic rights that other organized units were provided with, we found that the banks intensified the intimidation and it was extremely difficult to get any co-operation to provide the bank employees with the same kind of rights and privileges that other people in the working community have who are covered by collective agreements. There was no co-operation whatsoever and there was very intense intimidation.

Probably the worst employment record in Canada can be demonstrated by the Canadian banking system. It would not take Government Members any time at all to come up with numerous incidents of the banks' involvement in these practices. Again, if we are talking about supervision in the banks, whether it be through an RCMP commercial fraud operation, through the Inspector General of Banks, or through the facilities of the Canadian Labour Code, we are talking essentially about one and the same thing. Those organizations share responsibility for the smooth and effective operation of the Canadian banking system and one of those items pertains to the tremendously negative record of employee relations during the attempts of organizers and employees within the banking system to organize that particular work force.

Another matter that was raised, and it is proving to be a very difficult situation today, was the degree of consumer protection. We spent an enormous amount of time trying to plug matters into the Bank Act and regulations that would provide for the protection of consumers in the banking industry. When any individual in Canada, any small business, fisherman, or home owner approaches the bank, they literally approach on bended knee with cap in hand to seek a loan. There is an old adage that the only time a banker will give you a loan is when you do not need a loan. But many Canadians find themselves at a tremendous disadvantage because the power of the bank, and behind that the support of the Government, is exercised totally against the consumer.

What we have today is a situation where people are operating with very limited information. Members of the general public do not have the resources to hire accountants and lawyers to provide them with sophisticated advice, adequate guarantees and adequate protection in the event of problems. Therefore the entire situation is stacked in favour of the banks through lack of information and lack of assistance.

We have today an interesting scam that I would like to relate, a situation where employees in a number of banks across Canada, but particularly in my own area, became involved in a situation where they would set up a separate account and into that separate account they would place money obtained from a customer who needed funds transferred from one bank to another. These funds were placed in a staff party fund for individual gifts and whatnot. That is, the charges that were allegedly levied by the bank for a number of services provided were diverted out of the customer's pocket into an employees' fund. This matter is thoroughly documented in cases before the Canada Labour Relations Board.

The question is, where is the Inspector General of Banks? This practice seemed to have been reasonably widespread. The banks were very secretive about it and unwilling to come forward and expose these operations and root them out, even though managers in some cases knew of the matter and it was transmitted from one bank to another. There was very little in the way of consumer protection there. A practice which was really contrary to any accepted level of business practice within the banking community was allowed to continue and flourish.

Another problem is with consumer protection within the present context of the economic downturn. We have a situation where many people are strapped with mortgage interest rates and loan interest rates at 19 per cent or 20 per cent. There are mechanisms by which refinancing of loans can take place so that individuals will not be forced to work with bankruptcy level payments; but the bank will provide no information to customers on methods of refinancing those loans. As a matter of fact, continued unnecessary exploitation at very high interest rates goes on without any attempt to inform customers that interest rates are significantly lower and that there are options to refinance.

I spent a day with constituents from a small community in my riding, Black Creek, who are facing a foreclosure on their home because they are carrying a 19.5 per cent mortgage interest rate that could have been reduced to around 14 per cent, an enormous cut in the payments on their property as they are going through a rather difficult period in connection with their family income.

In addition to that, the bank did not make them aware of a program in British Columbia which would allow them to defer part of the principal and interest. The bank badly bungled the application to a federal program which would have provided assistance.

At that point we have a situation where that family—and they are certainly not alone—are in danger of losing the home they had poured thousands and thousands of dollars into. That money will go down the drain because the bank refuses to provide information to its customers on ways of taking advantage of lower interest rates. That is because of the bank's incompetence or a deliberate attempt, I would say, to obscure opportunities available to these and other individuals to protect themselves in very difficult times.

We find the same situation, Mr. Speaker, with fishermen. There has been a very difficult time for fishermen on the West Coast. Rising fuel and other costs, and inflated interest rates, have put them in a position where they are in danger of losing their vessels. Everyone knows that a seizure by the banks will not in fact resolve the problems faced by those fishermen. So they confront the fishermen with an alternative. They say: "Even though we will not get 15 cents on the dollar for your vessel, we will seize it and take away your method of earning a living unless you sign over your house as well and maybe get a friend to co-sign". They tie that individual to the wall. His boat and home are mortgaged, he has personal friends and family co-signing the loan, and then the bank moves. The bank had intended to shaft the individual all along. They wanted to increase the size of the asset pool so they could get his boat, his home, and take his friends to the cleaners as well. That is the kind of thing the Inspector General of Banks should be inquiring into. He has a dual responsibility to protect not only shareholders and depositors but those who depend on an efficient banking system. Our law is inadequate and the office of the Inspector General of Banks is inadequate; and the Government's policy is also inadequate when it comes to protecting the consumer.

There is no point in repeating the problems of small business because everyone opposite knows them. The Small Business Development Bond has assisted some individuals, but the banking community has failed miserably to act in a responsible and responsive way to those businesses which need a cut in interest rates to survive. If any person were to ask what is the largest problem faced by businessmen in this country today, the answer is simply "trying to service their debt". That is because of high interest rates; there is a desperate need for assistance in bringing them down.

Another problem is the failure of the banks to contribute to the economic well-being of this country. The banks went on a binge during the hey-day of corporate mergers and foreign investment, and we are faced today with a very serious situation. The Inspector General of Banks could be playing a very effective role with more staff, more policy direction and more authority in legislation. The situation of the last couple of years where banks were bank-rolling organizations like Chrysler, Massey-Ferguson and Dome Petroleum, with the subsequent big bail-outs, was totally ill-conceived. When the bubble burst the banks were over-exposed on their foreign loans and they are in a precarious position. They are now faced with some very large bankruptcies in their domestic operations, with the possibility of several banks being hauled down unless something is done.

When we were looking at the Dome Petroleum situation some months ago, Members on the opposite side were seriously concerned that there were no choices available. It was either bail out Dome or bail out the banks; one would drag the other down. That situation is now placing other sectors of the Canadian economy in very serious difficulty. The squeezing we see going on with many other businesses in Canada seems to be directly related to the exposure of the banks with companies like Dome. We looked at this question during the revision of the Bank Act, but unfortunately Government Members and the Official Opposition did not see this as a priority and were not overly concerned with the fact that the generators of pools of capital should be making significant investments for the long-term benefit of our economy. Who knows were we will go from there, but ultimately it was failure to revise the Bank Act and put in policy direction which led us to this situation.

I would like to close my remarks with a reference to the chartering of foreign banks in Canada, Mr. Speaker. It is my contention that this will be something we will live to regret. The proposal before us to allow the Inspector General of Banks more staff, more legal authority and more policy direction from the Government is vitally necessary. We now see advertisements telling us what a great deal Canadians now have because we are not dealing just with domestic chartered banks but with 67 new banks in Canada, many of which are foreign banks. It has been pointed out that this would be one of the worst mistakes Canadians ever made. Well, the Government preached the tremendous benefits of competition and access to capital, but I say we will eventually find foreign companies and their agents working diligently against Canadian industrial policy through the operation of Canadian banks.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have very little time left but may I say that I have never heard such a speech quite so irrelevant to the point of the Bill as the one we have just heard from the New Democratic Party representative. He is not talking about protection which should be provided by the Inspector General of Banks, he is talking about some hope he had, as I recall his stand during the hearings on the Bank Act, that the Inspector General of Banks should be some sort of conscience or, shall we say, spear-carrier on behalf of Government to force banks to do the things we wish them to do.

There should be nothing of the sort, Mr. Speaker. While I have not entirely agreed with my colleague's Bill, I do agree that an individual who is aware of something wrong in the handling of securities held by a bank should have immediate access to laying a complaint with the provincial police.

• (1600)

We have to look at Quebec and Ontario here, and at other Provinces where the RCMP carry out the duties of the provincial police, because the administration of justice in cases of this kind would be from the police to the Attorney General of the Province, who would determine whether a charge should be laid or not.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the proposal in this Bill envisages, somehow or other, that the Inspector General of Banks has the right, or makes a practice, of visiting individual branches. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Inspector General does not do that; he works through the head offices of the banks. He has no flying squads of auditors or other officials who visit banks to count cash or verify securities; nothing of the kind. This is all done internally by the banks.

I would even go further. With respect to the person whose property interests are being adversely affected, or a person who is aware that the property interests of another person may be adversely affected by a criminal act which has been committed in the past—say that bonds had been converted or were about to be converted to the use of a bank official—the right exists. For instance, we know there are frauds, defalsifications and conversions by individual bank employees. If anyone is aware of that, the right already exists for that person to complain to the police. It is not necessary that he should have to go through the Inspector General of Banks, who would then deal with the head office of the bank, who would in turn deal with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde). The Inspector General is not the person to determine whether there has been an offence against a property or a right of property in any way. I believe the right exists already. It does not have to be done through the Inspector General. He is not qualified, nor is the Minister of Finance qualified, to determine that there has been an offence committed or about to be committed. The facts should be turned over to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), whose officials are qualified to determine whether or not charges should be laid.

Frankly—and I will terminate my remarks now—while I accept the purpose which the Bill of my colleague would try to achieve, I would say that right already does exist, because in reciting to me the facts which gave rise to this particular Bill, I found that action was taken by my colleague in reaction to publicity of the situation, and the matter was attended to. To that extent, I think this amendment to Section 246 of the Bank Act is quite unnecessary.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on this important issue of the role of banks. In so doing, I would like to pay credit to the words expressed by the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

I would like, however, to go back to some of the basics. The Finance Committee had the opportunity in a non-partisan way of looking at this precise issue and they made two recommendations: first, that we have an obligation to look at the Loan Act and the Trust Companies Act in order to give those institutions the power to get into consumer and business loans; second, that Committee recommended that the Canadian Payments Association assume additional responsibilities to look into complaints.

The Hon. Member of our Party who spoke before me outlined adequately and well the functions of the Inspector General at this present time. I would like to make it very clear that we on this side, are not unsympathetic to the intent of privіding better service to customers of the banks. As the Hon. Member for Comox-Powell River very eloquently pointed out, if the traditional way of always looking at things is pursued to its ultimate degree, if the banks do not act intelligently and compassionately in circumstances, you could end up with a small business person being put out of a viable operation. You could end up with the banks realizing on their security in such a way that they would not get as much back as if they were prepared to see that person through in particular circumstances.

In these difficult economic times all of us recognize that we are facing extraordinary circumstances, not only in our country but throughout the Western industrialized world. We have an obligation, all of us, Governments, the private sector, business and our banking institutions, to take into consideration these exceptional circumstances.

There are cases which have come to my attention, and I am sure they have come to the attention of many Hon. Members of this House, where the bank has simply called its loan on a small business which has not defaulted on any of its payments, which was probably in the same kind of economic condition as it was when the bank undertook to extend that line of credit. But the banks have been under a squeeze pressure, perhaps as a result of declining international situations, perhaps as a result of too many big loans. We have to look to the small investor who might not have the same type of political clout as the big investor.

That is why I believe the proper approach is not to enter into layers of regulatory coverage, introducing new officers into the banks, into the Inspector General's banks, trying to impose another bureaucracy on our system. Surely, that is not the approach that the Tories, in their wisdom, would want to see happen. Surely, we would not want to see a system in which, perhaps, if we took the NDP argument to its ultimate, we would legislate that banks could only foreclose under very extreme circumstances.

But legislation cannot deal with the myriad of human circumstances which exist out there. Rather, I believe the approach is one which is based on sound banking and an understanding of our present economic circumstances, as well as a sense of obligation and compassion towards our economy as a whole. If the banks are prepared to assume that responsibility, they will be prepared to look at the small business person or farmers they are going to foreclose on who will never get their security back because they have over-extended their loans in the past, and part of that could be the banker's fault. If we are going to get out of this problem in a way which is commensurate with maintaining human dignity and preserving jobs in this country, I believe the best approach is one under which the banks themselves enter into self-regulation whereby they enter into an acceptance of their responsibilities on a mature basis.

I have every confidence, Mr. Speaker, that the banks will be willing to undertake that responsibility. And, perhaps, as Members of Parliament, one of our obligations is that when clients call us, or when constituents call us, we should work with the banks; we should phone the banks and lay out the facts. I have found, when I do this, the banks are generally receptive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and move to the next stage of the proceedings.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Shall all items listed under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding item No. 59 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

TRANSPORTATION

ADVISABILITY OF UPGRADING TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS IN NORTHERN CANADA

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of embarking on an ambitious program of upgrading transportation systems in Northern Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to my motion, which suggests that the Government should embark upon an ambitious program of transportation system upgrading in the northern part of Canada, it is my purpose this afternoon to do what I can to resurrect the Diefenbaker "Vision of the North".

In doing so, I want to pay tribute to two honourable and eminent gentlemen, one of whom is still with us. I refer to the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) who was responsible for giving Diefenbaker his vision of the north. In his younger days the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain spent many years in the northern parts of Canada. He is a gentleman who has always been 30 or 40 years ahead of his time. He saw the opportunities that would come with the development of a transportation system.

The second gentleman to whom I want to pay tribute is the late Hon. Member for Brandon-Souris, the Hon. Walter Dinsdale. In Diefenbaker's time he very ably filled the office of minister for the North.

For the last 20 years or so the vision has become clouded, however. Emphasis on transportation has declined because there is an underlying difference in the viewpoint of Hon. Members opposite and Members on this side of the House. The Liberal view of Canada appears to be that of a little Canada. Liberals are inward-looking. They look at what exists already and put a wall around it. On this side of the House we tend to be outward-looking. At the time of the "Roads to Resources" program—that is, the Diefenbaker vision—we were ridiculed by Hon. Members opposite who described it as an igloo-to-igloo policy. I hope when they look back that they find such has not been the case and that the policy has paid dividends. Perhaps they will then change attitude.

We may be asked why we need an upgraded and improved transportation system in northern Canada. As someone from that part of the country, I look at the matter from a local viewpoint and say it would lower the cost of personal transportation and of the transportation of goods, and that this would eventually show up in the selling price.

In the last two elections in which I participated, I listened to debate between Liberal and NDP candidates. It was a kind of bidding match when each candidate, supported by his Party, claimed that if the people voted for his Party it would give them subsidies which would help to bring costs down. I did not become involved in that bidding match but tried to make the point that a more efficient transportation system and a more competitive transportation industry in the North would bring down the cost of living.

The NDP won that bidding match. Because it is never likely to form a Government it came up with the highest bid. And, of course, it did not succeed to office but the Party opposite did. Unfortunately, it then forgot about this little auction that had gone on. It did precisely the opposite of what it had promised and threatened to remove existing subsidies and to substantially increase taxes for northerners.

Looking at this from the national point of view, which is what we have to argue in this House, if Canada is not to be just a narrow strip of inhabited territory along the forty-ninth parallel, we must develop the hinterland of the country. We must bring northern Canada into the main stream. If we do not, you can bet your bottom dollar, Mr. Speaker, that someone else will come in and do that for us. Whatever our legal position is with respect to sovereignty over the northern part of Canada, we cannot neglect it; we cannot just leave it alone. There are millions and billions of people in the world who are short of land and short of resources. If we do not develop our northern reaches we will lose them by default. Someone else will eventually come in and develop them.

As I have said before, well planned ventures in transportation have been proven to pay dividends. The St. Lawrence Seaway is a prime example of this. It took great investment in time and effort but it has paid handsome dividends. One just needs to look at the volume of shipping and commerce it has generated.

A smaller example is the Pine Point railway which was constructed in the 1950s. Despite certain setbacks which are occurring today, it has proven to be a profitable investment. The people of Canada got their money back, and more. It is now an integral part of the Canadian National Railways system and pays its way.

Then there is the Dempster Highway, the road going through Yukon into the Mackenzie Delta. This was proposed many years ago in the Diefenbaker era, and it received a great deal of criticism at that time. It was completed about the time the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker died. Already it has proven its worth, as oil and gas developments are occurring in the Mackenzie Delta and the Beaufort Sea. The Dempster Highway provides a vital link to that oil and gas rich part of Canada.

I should like to touch on a few distinct sectors of the transportation industry which exist in the North and comment briefly on them, Mr. Speaker. First of all, there is air transportation. Of all sectors this is probably the one that has done the best job. That may be because air transportation is under the control of the Department of Transport and not the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I shall have more to say about that particular Department later.

The Arctic airports program is a joint program of the federal and territorial Governments and has worked out extremely well. There has been some slowness in the system but that has to be expected. A couple of years ago I wrote to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) with respect to the Norman Wells airport, which is now extremely busy and likely to be more so in the coming months, asking that something be done to upgrade the facilities and that planning be done for pipeline and oil field expansion. So far that has not taken place.

Generally speaking, the airports branch of the Department of Transport has done a pretty good job. Our main complaints are not against the Department as such, but rather against the Air Transport Committee of the CTC. There could be improvements in the licensing of certain operations and in the scheduling of service.

With respect to rail service, I already mentioned the Pine Point railway which has proven to be quite successful. I have heard the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) speak about the White Pass and Yukon railway many times in this House. He has said that if it is to be an effective means of transportation of products in and out of Yukon, it must be upgraded. There should be a standard-gauge track and the rolling stock which was originally brought into the country in the early 1900s should be replaced.

The railway into Churchill, Manitoba, which is the natural route into the heartland of western Canada, must be upgraded. It should be reballasted and the railbed should be improved. Perhaps we could use the new geotextiles to stabilize it. We must replace existing rail with heavier rail so that modern rolling stock instead of old boxcars can be used. It is a natural route for the transportation of grain, potash, coal and other commodities out of the Canadian heartland.

I want to make a few remarks with respect to water transportation. The Port of Churchill immediately comes to mind. Port facilities at that location must be expanded. I understand it is the intention of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to go into this matter in detail, so I will skip over it now although it is very important.

New port construction techniques in Arctic areas have been developed. I could cite as an example the construction which went on in connection with the Polaris mines. We should now start looking at the area of the Beaufort coast. There is need for a proper port facility there. In the not too distant future there will be need for a major oil and gas port in the Beaufort Sea, for which we should definitely start planning now. Despite some progress in the private sector—and I am thinking of Kigoriak, for instance—Canada lags in development of commercial icebreakers—and that is probably the bright spot—military ones such as naval icebreakers and vessels for the Canadian Coast Guard.

If ever the United States and the U.S.S.R. were to engage in a naval battle in Canadian Arctic waters when they are ice-covered, they have the correct naval equipment with ice-breaking capabilities, but we would only be able to sit on the iceflows and keep score. This is all we would be able to do.

I look forward to the time when the Northwest Passage will be open for the peaceful commerce of all nations. I would like to see the Northwest Passage through Lancaster Sound, Prince of Wales Strait, and across the northern part of Yukon and Alaska, operated in a manner not dissimilar to the Seaway. Obviously it would be expensive to keep the shipping lanes open and to provide the necessary navigational aids. Denmark, Canada, the United States and potential user nations such as Japan, should get together to come up with a joint system of management of navigation in the Northwest Passage. There is a need for better charts and navigational facilities to complement the Canadian Hydrographic service on the work being done in Arctic waters and a hope they would go from strength to strength.

The Mackenzie River system, according to officers of Northern Transportation Company Limited, needs to have spent on it somewhere in the order of $75 million to upgrade it into a major, proper waterway. In years of shallow water, if conditions get any worse, we will have to put wheels on the barges and push them down the river bed. This $75 million does not have to be spent all at once. There are a few major bottlenecks on which we could concentrate to make the waterway one that could be relied on. Then we could load barges to their full capacities instead of only putting on half-loads. We have to look to potential threats to navigation on the Mackenzie River system such as the proposed Liard Dam in British Columbia.

Now I should like to make a few comments with respect to roads. The worst record of the Government is with respect to roads. In the 1950s and 1960s there were ambitious programs under Conservative Governments. We worked on the Mackenzie Highway and on the Dempster Highway; we upgraded the Alaska Highway. Since that time disintegration and decline have set in. It would appear that the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development concentrates on social engineering, telling people what to think and what to do, rather than on civil engineering. They have the roads branch over there in the figurative basement of the Department. I do not know whether the people in charge of roads ever get to speak to the Minister or the Deputy Minister. In the office of the roads branch they have a graph showing the amount of money, in real dollars or in constant dollars, spent on roads over the last 20 years or so. I can assure the House that it declines year by year. Road building now has no emphasis within that Department.

With the completion of the Liard Highway linking Fort Simpson in the Territories to Fort Nelson in British Columbia, there are now no major road building programs in progress in northern Canada whatsoever. That is a terrible state of affairs. We are losing the expertise in northern road building which has been built up over the years.

I should like to indicate some examples of what could be done. We could pave the Mackenzie and Alaska Highways. I am told by members of the trucking industry that this would probably result in a cost reduction of some 10 per cent to 15 per cent. A bridge is needed over the Mackenzie River. The cost of this was originally estimated some years ago at $6 million. Today it might cost $50 million. In years to come it will cost even more, unless we get it over with once and for all. Also there needs to be a southern access link into the town of Fort Smith, connecting it with the town of Fort McMurray in northern Alberta. This will be especially important if a dam is to be built close to Fort Smith on the Slave River, as is planned by the Province of Alberta.

We must extend the Mackenzie Highway, in the first instance, as far as Norman Wells where oil field expansion and development is presently being undertaken, and then on to the Mackenzie Delta and Inuvik. The Dempster Highway, which presently stops at Inuvik, must be extended to tidewater at Tuktoyaktuk to support the oil and gas industry there. Road construction will not only assist the oil and gas industry, but also the minerals industries and agriculture, an aspect of northern commerce which has been sadly neglected by the present Government.

There are many other sectors upon which I could touch, but I do not propose to do this for lack of time. I could talk about pipelines, electricity transmission lines, vehicles designed especially to go over muskeg areas and lighter-than-air craft. I could say what work has been done in the Province of Alberta with respect to this and describe the meetings I have had with the Hon. Henry Kroeger, the Minister of Transportation for the Province of Alberta who is enthusiastic about potential developments. I could talk about necessary research and development in all aspects of northern transportation, whether it be road construction techniques, ship designs or the need for better ice tanks and research facilities.

If we want to get out of the present economic difficulties we face in Canada, I think the development of transportation in northern Canada is one of the real ways. It is the real cure for unemployment. It is not a make-work scheme or a NEED project; it is none of these things. It would put people to work doing real and sensible jobs. It would provide dividends for us in the years to come. I submit we must rekindle the flame of the Diefenbaker vision and bring all parts of Canada together, socially and economically, connected by a modern, effective, efficient, multifaceted transportation system.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Motion No. 59, which reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of embarking on an ambitious program of upgrading transportation systems in Northern Canada.

Had the mover of the motion changed one word in the Motion, I think the Government would be prepared to support it. All he had to do was change the word "should" to "has", and I think we could have supported it. I hope my remarks will demonstrate to the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) that the Government has over the last decade embarked upon ambitious programs of providing efficient, affordable and safe transportation systems in northern Canada. I had the pleasure, together with the mover of this motion, to take part in the second major Northern Transportation Conference which was held in Whitehorse, Yukon, in October, 1982.

Mr. Nickerson: It was the Yellow-light Conference.

Mr. Flis: At that time, over 200 interested people, from industry and Government together with private citizens, sat down for three days to discuss the issues facing northern development, transportation systems and the environment in which all those components could come together.

The first Arctic Transportation Conference hosted by the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) and the Hon. Don Jamieson in 1970, was in response to the recognized need for co-ordinated discussion of problems encountered in the Arctic. At that Conference, some of the topics discussed were Arctic aviation facilities, re-supply, the social and economic impact of transportation, railway development, pipelines and icebreaker support, terminal facilities in the Arctic and environmental impact. Now, 12 years later, many of the same issues were discussed but with a difference. This time, emphasis was placed on planning, regulatory concerns, research and development.

The first time an Arctic Conference sponsored by the federal Government took place was in 1970 but the Government and industry already had well developed interests in the North, recognizing its potential. We were making strong first steps at that time and we have come a long way since then. I do not think it was only a Diefenbaker vision that brought us to this stage, as the Hon. Member would lead this House to believe.

Efficiency and effectiveness were very serious concerns then as they are now. In 1983 we are even more serious. Much has happened in 13 years. Even more sophisticated approaches have been taken to develop the North, to maximize its potential, while at the same time considering the needs of the people in the Arctic and the environment and bearing in mind the costs of Arctic development.

To underline the increased emphasis on the need for discussion of Arctic air transportation issues, the Northern Air Transport Association, as you may be aware, held its fifth annual Conference in March of 1982, also in Whitehorse. Papers presented at that seminar addressed such issues as cost of risk for air carriers, management of capital and human resources and economic survival in support of the theme "Management Challenges facing North of 60 Operators in the 1980s." What we are facing also is a management challenge. How are we going to make the most of our investment in time and resources in developing the Arctic in a way that will benefit all concerned in a way that we can all survive and not just on the balance sheet?

We are making investments in the future of the North, the future of Canada. During the 1982 Conference, proposals were put forward on ways of meeting the challenge of the 1980s. Allow me, for a few minutes, to highlight some of the initiatives taken by Transport Canada to assist in developing the North since 1970 to meet what could be considered the challenge of the 1970s.

In October of 1972, responding to environmental concerns regarding potential pollution of the Arctic, the Hon. Don Jamieson announced the publication of new Arctic shipping pollution prevention regulations. These regulations were to be used in conjunction with the shipping safety control zones order, proclaimed in August of the same year, under which the waters of the Canadian Arctic were divided into safety control zones, classified according to the degree of ice hazards present. As the Hon. Member is aware, shipping is controlled by limiting the zones in which the vessel may operate based on prevailing ice conditions and the capabilities of the ship.

In 1975, the operational base for the annual re-supply service to the Keewatin communities on the west side of Hudson Bay was transferred from Montreal to Churchill. This decision would provide increased federal Government purchasing in the western provinces and an expanded role for Churchill as a gateway for northern shipping. In November of the same year, plans were announced to build the 28,000 ton bulk carrier, M.V. Arctic, a joint Government industry project. The ship, designed to operate in the high Arctic, was also to serve as a prototype for larger vessels to be engaged in the movement of gas and oil out of the Arctic. It was also intended to enable more accurate determination of the ice navigation regulations under the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. The M.V. Arctic has met these objectives. It has been a successful venture and an excellent example of industry and Government collaboration. To reinforce Transport Canada's support for developing the North, and to allay concerns regarding the application of "user pay", the Hon. Otto Lang, the then Minister, stated in October, 1976:

> The North need have no fear of assuming the full burden of transportation costs ... user pay guidelines would only apply to areas of the country with enough volume in travel and shipping to justify cost recovery.

The costs of opening up and developing the North would be shared by all. The Minister emphasized the importance the North had in Transport Canada's plans to develop an integrated transportation network for the entire country. That same year, subsidies in the amount of $743,000 were provided for the re-supply service in the Keewatin district.

As part of the Urban Transportation Assistance Program, Transport Canada contributed over $442,000 to the total purchase price of $532,379 for buses and mini buses, to be used in Whitehorse, Hay River and Frobisher Bay.

To ease the high cost of air transportation in the Arctic, in April, 1982, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) announced that the imposition of landing and other fees at small Arctic airports will be deferred again until March, 1983. More recently, as a matter of fact, in May, June and September of 1982, Transport Canada announced airport improvement and equipment purchases to the tune of almost $3 million for Eskimo Point and Hall Beach, Northwest Territories, and Whitehorse. On the subject of the Whitehorse airport, I am pleased to say everything is on schedule. Preliminary design of the air terminal building was completed in August, 1982. A request for funding approval will be submitted to Treasury Board shortly.

Fortunately, Mr. Speaker, I could continue citing Transport Canada's past contributions to the Arctic, but I will end the list here. What is of greater significance is what we are doing now, what our future plans are to meet the challenge of the 1980s. As you may be aware, one of the objectives of Transport Canada is "to foster an environment which supports the efficient development, provision and operation of all elements of the national transportation system.

Pursuit of this objective is evidenced by Transport Canada's contributions to assist in the establishment or otherwise provide for improvements of transportation facilities, including subsidies and the funding of studies by private consultants, etc.

Other very significant objectives, Mr. Speaker, concern themselves with efficiency and effectiveness and, of course, safety. We are all too well aware of the hazards to all modes of transportation in the Arctic. Transport Canada, of course, will continue to place a high priority on safety and search and rescue.

One other very important objective, which may not be so obvious but is inherent in the role of Transport Canada, is to support the achievement of the objectives of the federal Government that relate to national, regional and urban social and economic development, and to industrial, environmental and energy policies.

Transport Canada, therefore, is not only in the business of transportation. Every move we make takes into consideration all these other factors and more. For example, Mr. Speaker, plans are being developed to overcome low water levels at one location on the Mackenzie River where some dredging appears necessary. Environment concerns for wildlife and fish habitat are being addressed by the project manager.

To continue, let me give you some other examples of what we are doing. Program responsibility and the modal expertise for Arctic development has been incorporated directly within each of the transportation administrations, with a co-ordinating function provided by headquarters.

I would like to comment on the aspect of research and development to which the Hon. Member also referred. The significance of such a program, be it within the federal Government or the private sector, cannot be overstated. Such programs as the Arctic Scientific Evaluation Program is a major undertaking to evaluate the ice-strengthened cargo vessel, M.V. Arctic. The vessel was designed to meet the Arctic Ice Class II specification, which indicates a moderate ice-breaking capability in accordance with the Arctic shipping pollution prevention regulations.

A three-part instrumentation and evaluation program has been defined to collect data on environmental forces experienced by ships during commercial operations in the Arctic and to verify the appropriateness of the shipping regulations. The total cost of funding this entire project is $1.9 million. In terms of the potential benefits as a result of better designed vessels, these dollars are, to use a very appropriate analogy, the tip of the iceberg in terms of the potential high return on investment.

I am pleased to see that approval has been received for the expenditure of $14 million for Arctic marine projects. The crucial point is that the significance of R and D is finally being recognized and the high profile it has warranted in the past is now a reality. Through research and development, transportation in the North can only improve.

One other area that I would like to expand upon is that of policy. What are Transport Canada's policies with respect to the North? It is understood that air carrier development is also affected by policies on social services, energy and other Government activities. To ensure the requisite co-ordination and planning between the public and private sector, the Joint Air Service Planning and Evaluation Review, or JASPER, was developed in 1977. Since then, it has been applied to a carrier-Government planning for four Arctic route networks.

On the marine side, the question arises as to what level of shipping services for international trade is required to meet the demand in the North.

A more important question that must be raised is, what should the Canadian position be with respect to Arctic shipping? On the one hand, if action is not taken soon Canada could be left out in the cold, so to speak, in more ways than one. On the other hand, having operating experience in northern waters may provide some Canadian carriers with advantages over those of other nations. It is felt by some that the Arctic is a special environment and therefore a greater degree of assistance for Canadian shipping may be justified.

Some have expressed the view, the mining industry, for example, that any extra costs due to shipping would render their already costly northern mining ventures even more difficult to develop. However, based on numerous consultations, it is generally felt that a stronger regime should be in place in the Canadian Arctic than in the rest of Canada, with the condition that such a policy not hamper development and that vessels be available at reasonable cost. The development of an Arctic shipping policy will be designed to ensure that northern demand for shipping services is met by Canadians to the greatest extent possible without causing an adverse effect on Canadian trade.

I have been discussing the North simply from the perspective of developments in the areas of operation and policy, highlights of transportation accomplishments and development in support of Transport Canada's strategic objectives. Unfortunately, success stories of progress do not prevail in all other areas affected by transportation.

From the viewpoint of native groups, there are still shortcomings in the way in which transportation services are provided and, indeed, in the manner in which transport might be used to solve certain social problems such as the high cost of living. Program delivery is perceived to be cumbersome and possibly more expensive than it should be. However, local input for airport planning and construction has become routine, with community co-operatives at times bidding for work. There is a sense of urgency felt by headquarters staff in the scheduling of Arctic projects, which sometimes run afoul of total Government priorities, the short shipping season and the time required to consult extensively with all parties concerned.

It is useful to be reminded of individual project problems and their slippage, but these specific problems should not be allowed to detract from this Government's commitment to northern development.

Transportation cannot be viewed in isolation. This is true especially for social problems. While it is acknowledged that freight rates are very high, and there is a temptation to provide subsidies as a quick fix, it must be remembered that this country is already struggling under many such well-intentioned past programs. Factors such as overcoming the small market size, increased storage facilities and negotiated changes for retail pricing should also be considered.

One other major factor to be considered is the chronic shortage of funds. Because of the lack of sufficient resources, it serves as a governing factor which requires some priorization of programs. There are many programs for which the need is easily justified, but the lack of adequate funds does not allow all of them to be realized.

In support of the six and five restraint program, these limits have been applied to charges levied by Transport Canada. This situation is of benefit to the users but at the same time restricts the flow of dollars into the federal coffers, thus further limiting available Government resources.

I think that we have accomplished much, and by joining forces and working together for the benefit of all concerned, we will be able to meet the challenges of the future, which I know is what the Hon. Member who moved the motion wishes.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the Hon. Member who moved the motion. I believe it is an ideal topic to be raised in the House of Commons since this issue has certainly been neglected in the past. I agreed with much of what the Conservative Member had to say, and I thank him especially for his kind remarks about the community at the Port of Churchill. While I am certainly grateful for his remarks, I must say that I found them to be at variance with the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) and the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) who speaks for his Party with regard to port policy.

It is interesting to note that in spite of the fact that the Conservative Party supports the use of the Port of Churchill, two of its Members who frequently speak about ports and grain transportation came out against the use of the Port of Churchill.

Since I come from a northern riding, although it is not situated in the Territories themselves, I recognize the need for over-all planning in transportation policies in the North. This lack of planning and co-ordination of services is evident in my riding of Churchill almost on a daily basis. I have become very aware of the inconsistent planning for air travel in the North. The Liberal Government has commissioned a study to be conducted into the role of Churchill in providing services into the Northwest Territories. A consultant discussed this matter with me a week ago. Although the Government conducted another study last fall into transportation in northern Manitoba, which is a legitimate study, the consultant who was conducting this Churchill study told me that his terms of reference did not allow him to look at the role of Churchill in northern Manitoba. Surely if we are to have a reasonable transportation policy, we should not only consider those flights heading North but also consider all flights going in and out of a transportation centre.

This is a problem in Canada that can be seen in other areas as well. I will use my own riding as an example since I am familiar with that area. The Government recently decided to close down runways and airport services at five o'clock in the evening in a number of communities and not open them until eight o'clock the next morning. This was done in the full realization of the fact that many of the scheduled flights either came in after the closing or took off prior to the opening. We therefore had the unusual situation in which the airport would not be open when scheduled flights were arriving or departing. How can the Government claim to be planning when this is the situation? Similarly, runways in northern communities would not be cleared except during stated hours. If a flight was arriving during a snowfall, that carrier would have to pay the cost of clearing the runway.

This is not an isolated situation. In Manitoba, and in my riding alone, Flin Flon, The Pas, Lynn Lake, Leaf Rapids, Thompson, Gillam, Norway House and Churchill will all be affected by the Government's new restraint program. Throughout Canada, hundreds of communities will be affected by a restraint program which the Government never really thought out. I discussed the matter of how that would affect scheduled flights. Let me refer to another dangerous side effect of that particular decision.

In the North, medical evacuations are most often carried out by air. They depend upon speedy service. If a plane must fly up from Churchill, for example, or up to one of the small communities in the Territories, and if the runway is not cleared and crews must be called in to start clearing that runway at seven o'clock or eight o'clock at night, it may take two or three hours, as is often the case, and then the flight cannot leave until ten o'clock at night. The same problem could occur at another strip at the receiving end as a result of the new Government cutbacks or restraint measures. A small move to save the Government some dollars could endanger the lives of people because of the long time involved in clearing those runways.

Scheduled carriers are also concerned about the new regulations, first, because they will be charged for having a runway cleared, even though they set up their schedules under the old regime and even though it was the policy of the Liberal Government, the policy of Transport Canada, to have those runways open during times of scheduled flights.

This reversal by the Government means that air carriers, which would try to provide good service to many communities, will now be penalized. They will incur extra costs in keeping airports and runways open. That is a terrible situation and it obviously, once again, points to the lack of planning with regard to northern transportation.

One of my other concerns with regard to northern transportation concerns air safety. In Manitoba, search and rescue is carried out from Air Force bases in Edmonton. We have a time lag, which means that a search will not be started for at least two or three hours after it is known that a plane is down or missing. That is valuable time. It is important that the Government either establish more bases for search and rescue in Canada or at least provide funding for organizations like the Civil Air Search and Rescue Association so that various groups within each region of Canada could carry out an interim search until qualified Air Force personnel are on hand. That is another important area of consideration.

The Hon. Member, in speaking for the Liberal Government, discussed many things which have been going on in the last couple of years, and I agree that there has been some work done. I would congratulate the Government for its current research in relation to the rail line to Churchill. This research may be helpful in overcoming the permafrost problem which is preventing the use of hopper cars in delivering grain to the Port of Churchill. I hope that when the research is complete, the Government will spend the funds to do the actual work so that this will not have been just another study following another study with no action taking place. We are all familiar with studies conducted by Governments of all political stripes, and we know that it is much easier to conduct a study than to carry out the necessary action.

With regard to the use of the Port of Churchill, we in the New Democratic Party are concerned over yesterday's announcement of the Crow rate changes. There are two elements of that program which could have drastic effects on the use of the Port of Churchill for grain movement. First was the announcement that all rates may not be equal for equal distance across the country. That means that the Government or the Canadian Transport Commission, depending on which is given the final authority, may allow the railways to charge different rates for grain being shipped the same distance. This is not allowed under the present Crow rate provisions. One must charge the same rate per mile or per kilometre, regardless of the route.

Our second concern is that the rail lines may be allowed to charge different rates for unit trains, which only carry grain, and that the railways could have complete freedom to determine the routes on which they offered the unit cars. If that were indeed the case, the situation could arise where the CN and CP would offer special low rates for unit trains to the Port of Thunder Bay or the Port of Vancouver, but would not offer that same rate for unit trains destined for the Port of Churchill. That would have not only the effect of killing the Port of Churchill, but also of forcing farmers from the Churchill catchment basin to truck their grain to terminals on the main line. That would hardly be energy-efficient. It could cost people who work on the railways and at the Port of Churchill their jobs, yet it would not increase the profit to farmers. There is a danger involved, and I certainly hope the Government takes that under advisement before it introduces any changes to the legislation which comes under the Crow umbrella.

The issue concerning the Port of Churchill does not receive much attention in the House of Commons although it is very important both to me and to my riding. Yet quite often the Government ignores the central role of that Port in its studies and actions, which has been a problem. In the past, I think there has been some rivalry between the Northwest Territories and the Port of Churchill, which was only natural. But I believe that if there were adequate studies and reasonable research, we would find that in many cases adequate development and use of the Port of Churchill could result in even more savings for the people of the Northwest Territories. I would hope that the Government would spend money to do adequate research, but sometimes we do not find that to be the case.

I mentioned earlier that a study of air service from Churchill to the Northwest Territories is being conducted, but it is isolated from other studies of transportation in northern Manitoba. Once again that points out my central theme. The Government is spending much money on transportation, consultants and research, but it tends to be spending it a little bit here and a little bit there. If we had what I would call a regional-based transportation policy, we could consider the entire transportation system within a region. Then we would not have pockets of research here and there which have little or absolutely no value after the research is done.

We have a saying in the Port of Churchill that it has been studied to death, and I am sure that is a phrase that has been used in other parts of Canada as well. I am sure that the Northwest Territories, both the eastern and western halves, feel that way as well. They feel they have been researched to death. Yet what they also believe is that there is very little in the way of Government action.

We believe, and I am sure other Members from the northern parts of the Provinces and from the Territories would agree with me, that if the Government is going to take an activist role, and I certainly support that position, it must do so based on fact and not only on political goodwill but on adequate research and adequate economic data. I think if that were the approach of the Government, then we would see Northerners much happier with Ottawa. We would see Northerners feeling that their lives are a concern of the Government, that the Government is not going to issue regulations which would shut down airports for certain hours in the middle of winter and threaten the lives of Canadians, that they will not find that the Government is spending thousands and thousands of dollars doing research and then ignoring that research. We would find that we would have a transportation policy for shipping, for air, for rail, that would help all Canadians.

Mr. Peter Ittinuar (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, because the generality of this motion by the Hon. Member for the Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) lends itself to one of the most informative and most boring debates I have ever heard in the House, I would like to bore the House further on certain aspects of northern transportation.

The previous speaker's comments on Churchill bring to mind a saying that we from the Northwest Territories have about Churchill and that is, it being overstudied, each family in Churchill includes a scientist and a polar bear.

I wish to bring Transport Canada's Air Administration to bear on the issue of northern transportation. First of all, the continued expansion of the air transportation industry north of the 60th parallel is inevitable. Government and industry alike must be able to forecast the demand for air services and co-operate in providing them in a timely manner.

I would also like to describe the general direction that the Air Administration is likely to follow in developing northern air facilities and systems. I will review some of the policy issues that require attention. They are the air transportation planning network, and what could be expected in the way of airports and air navigational systems in the Arctic. Little development would have taken place without the funding by the federal Government and support and co-operation of the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and members of the Northern Air Transport Association. This spirit of mutual co-operation is continuing.

I would like to get into the background of this. How did our northern transportation system get where it is today? In 1970, the Northern Transportation Conference identified shortcomings in air facilities and services north of 60, and the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Don Jamieson, spoke of the need for an Arctic air facilities policy. With this beginning, the federal Government approved a policy in 1974 for the provision of air transportation facilities in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It consisted of a five-year $60 million program. Although major hub airports received attention, the policy stressed community airports to provide adequate air transportation to isolated communities with populations of 100 or more. Some projects were delayed by difficult planning, logistics and construction circumstances and, consequently, the program was extended four more years to terminate in March 1983 with a total capital program of about $100 million. A revised or extended policy for community airports in the North is now under review by the Federal Government.

When approved, the Arctic air facilities policy will have the same objectives as the original 1974 policy, that is, to provide adequate air transportation to northern communities, and I might add that air transportation is adequate to most northern communities but still should be improved.

I would like to look at future policy concerns. There are a number of issues that must be considered. These are the vital aspects of adequacy and cost of transportation; that the aviation system of the 1980s will see route and equipment expansion of the 1970s; that competition between charter and unit toll carriers will continue but at a lower rate; and that aircraft standardization for main and local service carriers will continue. A simple, uniform policy for the North perhaps is not possible, but the search for the most appropriate combination of economic, efficient and adequate air service will continue as a challenge to Government, industry and Northern peoples in the decade ahead.

One of the over-all strategic objectives of the Air Administration is the national air transportation strategic plan. Transport Canada has developed a series of national air transportation plans covering safety, security, communications, energy, finances, human resources, air space and airports. These plans provide a framework and guideline for the national air transportation system in terms of technology, levels of service and facilities.

Within this framework, each area of Canada and each airport within that area can develop area and site master plans. An area master plan examines aviation needs and priorities for its area over a 20 year period. It also establishes individual airport roles and requirements from a regional point of view. The airport master plan guides future development of facilities and services at specific sites in the North. Aviation area master plans exist or are in the planning stages for all areas. They can be consulted at Transport Canada's regional offices. Area master plans north of 60 include the Mackenzie Valley area plan, scheduled for completion this summer, the central Arctic plan, completed in 1980, and the Eastern Arctic plan, to be updated in the mid 1980s. Airport master plans or updates also are under way for Norman Wells, Whitehorse, Yellowknife and Tuktoyaktuk. The majority of these will be completed later this year.

A master plan is the basis for decision-making for timing air navigational and airport facilities. This planning process has enabled a link-up of northern aviation requirements to national air strategic objectives.

How will northern airports develop during the coming decade? To answer this, one must examine the present set-up. There are more than 100 airports in Canada north of 60; of these 62 are public airports and are of direct concern to Transport Canada and the Territorial Governments. Private airports will likely continue to be developed, as well as one or two major facilities now being planned by the oil and gas industry.

Some of the 62 public airports are the well-known ones at Whitehorse, Yellowknife, Resolute and Frobisher capable of handling scheduled jet service. These will continue to be developed under national policies and standards and within available resources. Development needs include air terminal building modifications, runway and taxiway repairs, firehall, navigational aids, maintenance and utility facilities. Of the remaining 51 Arctic community airports, which can handle either medium turboprop or light aircraft, 31 have been completed, nine have work under way, and 11 are still in the planning and approval stages.

Development to date has cost $100 million, and operation and maintenance about $15 million. The latter includes annual contributions to the Territorial Governments which have responsibility for operation and maintenance of the majority of Arctic community airports. Benefits derived from these investments include safer, more reliable air transportation; improved aircraft acess to northern communities; improved medical evacuation; perishables more readily available to Northerners, and an over-all improvement in transportation costs and quality of life for northern communities.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one more comment before I stop, and that is that the area which has the greatest need for upgrading of airports in all of Canada is northern Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2) it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall all orders listed under the Private Members' Public Bills preceding Order No. 70 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Before putting the question for second reading of Bill C-270, an Act respecting Nuclear control and administration, the Chair would like to express reservations as to the procedural acceptability of this Bill which seems to infringe upon the financial initiative of the Crown as far as the power of imposing charges upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund is concerned. For instance, Clause 6 of the Bill seeks to increase the number of members of the Nuclear Control Board to be appointed by the Governor in Council, and Clause 9 provides for the appointment of substitute members on the said Board. For its part, Clause 8 makes provision for payment of a salary to members of the board.

However, having entered this caveat, the Chair will allow the debate to take place on the motion for second reading of Bill C-270. Should the debate come to an end, the Chair will have to rule on the procedural acceptability of this Bill.

NUCLEAR CONTROL AND ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough) moved that Bill C-270, respecting nuclear control and administration, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Natural Resources and Public Works.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my planned remarks may I comment briefly on your caveat. That caveat was taken into account when my colleagues and I redrafted the Bill. In fact, it had been brought to our attention by the Table officers that the problem to which you made reference had arisen and the Bill was redrafted taking into account their advice, I understand that the Bill as it now stands meets the normal standards of parliamentary practice in that respect. While Clause 6, I think it is, does contemplate an increase in the number of members on the board, the total cost to the Treasury might not necessarily be increased, but I leave that question to your good judgment at a later point in the debate.

Sir, I am pleased to be the sponsor of the Private Members' Bill now before the House for debate. The subject, as you have pointed out, is Bill C-270, an Act respecting nuclear control and administration which received first reading on May 2, 1980. As Members who participated in the debate then will know, my Bill is virtually identical to a Private Members' Bill debated at second reading on December 17, 1982. The other Bill was sponsored by my friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin). His Bill was thoroughly debated on the occasion; indeed, all Parties in the House were represented in the debate. So I think it is unnecessary for me or for any other Member to address my Bill at any great length. My purpose in rising is to identify myself with the Bill now before us, to remind Members of the main provisions, and to urge all Hon. Members to allow it to go before the Standing Committee on Natural Resources by not talking it out.

In his speech on the Bill of the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Dingwall), whom I see in the House this afternoon, agreed that the subject of nuclear energy was of such importance that it should be discussed in greater depth on another occasion, possibly in committee. I believe the best forum for further discussion would be at the relevant standing committee where each clause could be discussed and perhaps improved upon or supplemented in the thorough fashion that only a standing committee makes possible. The fact is, Sir, a wide-ranging, in-depth investigation by Parliament of the subject of nuclear energy is long overdue. The subject has virtually been ignored by both the Parliament of Canada and the general public alike, except for keenly concerned special-interest groups such as, for example, HOPE, in my own Province of Prince Edward Island. Bill C-270 would give us an excellent opportunity, an excellent point of reference, if you will, for the kind of standing committee investigation we require.

The nuclear industry has grown at a rapid rate since the end of the Second World War when the country began to focus on the development of a nuclear reactor. Yet the country has never had a full inquiry into whether such an energy or export option is in the best interests of the country or, if so, whether we have been following the safest, most cost-effective course in embracing that option. We have developed enormous technical expertise and skill in the nuclear field, to the point where we are currently a world leader. But, as so often happens, our technical capacity has outpaced both our capacity and our resolve to address certain moral, health and environmental questions surrounding the use of nuclear power for either peaceful or defence purposes.

Let me make it crystal clear, Mr. Speaker, that I am not condemning the nuclear option on this occasion. In my opinion, now is not the occasion to address the issue at that level of debate. I am merely trying to make the point that Canada has adopted the nuclear option and pursued it vigorously, albeit in a scatterbrained way, without devoting enough thought to attendant environmental and moral issues. On a more mundane plane, we have not even set in place adequate laws and mechanisms to ensure that the nuclear option is managed with maximum benefits to the public it is intended to serve. Certainly the general public has been all but excluded from a role in the relevant decisions. Meanwhile, nuclear power has emerged as a key part of the country's over-all energy mission.

The size of the industry, the magnitude and scope of it, Mr. Speaker, is mind-boggling. There are currently 18 nuclear reactors in operation or under construction in the country, one of the most recently completed projects being Pickering II in Ontario which consists of four reactors in all. Electricity makes up 30 per cent of the total energy produced in Canada, and 10 per cent of that total is generated by nuclear power. In other words, 3 per cent of all energy is derived from nuclear sources in this country. In Ontario nuclear power stations account for a staggering 35 per cent, or 38 billion kilowatt hours, of all electrical generation in the Province. In my own region, the Atlantic Provinces, nuclear energy has surged in importance with the completion of the LePreau Nuclear Station and with the possibility that another one would be built at LePreau before long.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, Canada has placed a high priority upon efforts to open up overseas markets for the Candu reactor, especially in the last two years. India, Pakistan, Argentina, South Korea and Rumania have all signed contracts with Canada, although of course we have had to end further negotiations with India following the explosion of a nuclear device by that country in 1974. The irony, sir, is that we have continued to feed Argentina's appetite for a nuclear capacity, even though, at the height of its war with Britain over the Falklands, Argentina's Vice Admiral Castro Madero, head of his country's national energy commission, told the International Atomic Energy Commission in Vienna that Argentina reserved the right to develop nuclear energy for military purposes.

In any event, despite the fact that we have lost millions of dollars in our various overseas sales of the Candu reactor—Korea being the only case, I believe, where we actually turned a profit—the export of our nuclear technology remains a major part of what little international trade strategy the current federal Government has deemed it important enough to formulate. Indeed, total federal Government outlays on nuclear energy over the past 30 years amount to some $4 billion. And there is certainly little evidence that I can discern that any significant let-up can be expected in the foreseeable future.

The point, Mr. Speaker, in connection with Bill C-270, is this: for good or ill, the nuclear option has been embraced by Canada. Like it or not, the point of no return has probably been passed, if for no other reason than the fact that about 36,000 jobs depend on it. Given those realities, the task facing us Parliamentarians, those in this House and those in the Senate, is to ensure that our society's interests are fostered in every way possible in connection with nuclear power. In that respect, I believe we have been woefully neglectful. Bill C-270 is aimed at making up for lost time.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to elaborate briefly. The Atomic Energy Control Act, passed in 1946 and amended only slightly since them—I believe there was only one amendment, in 1974—is the principal legislative instrument for the regulation of Canada's nuclear energy program. Its pith and substance, as my lawyer friends would say, are to control nuclear materials and facilities in the interests of health, safety and security. That control is supposed to be achieved by a comprehensive licencing system, including both the evaluation of an application before the issuance of a permit and a subsequent follow-up inspection to ensure compliance. The Atomic Energy Control Board, as everyone in this House will know, is the agency through which the Act is applied.

The chief problem is that the 1946 Act is appallingly out of date, a fact acknowledged by almost every thoughtful Government and non-Government observer alike. In 1977, the Government of the day sought to replace the Act with a "troughly modern Milly" of a Bill, the Nuclear Control and Administration Act. Unfortunately, the Bill was allowed to die on the Order Paper, and we have seen neither hide nor hair of it since then.

Bill C-270, before us for debate today, like the sister Bill of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey, Bill C-218, seeks to resuscitate the Nuclear Control and Administration Act of 1977, with certain improvements made to it. In a nutshell, my Bill would do the following things. In general, the Bill seeks to correct certain drafting flaws in the initial Act. Second, again generally, it seeks to decrease the amount of discretion vested in the relevant regulatory body by opening up the entire process to the public and by enhancing the authority of Parliament itself.

Specifically, the Bill broadens the scope of nuclear regulation by declaring all types of nuclear facilities for the general advantage of the country. Matters related to national defence would be covered by the Act unless explicitly excluded. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) is delegated responsibility for the Act on the grounds that environmental considerations, including human health, must be deemed paramount in the nuclear field. The Bill contemplates a slightly larger regulatory board whose meetings would be public to ensure due process and whose members would include people chosen from the public at large, rather than merely from among activists in the nuclear industry itself, as is now too often the case. Provisions have been added to decrease the potential for a conflict of interest on the part of members appointed to the regulatory agency.

More precision is provided to ensure that professional, scientific, technical and other personnel are hired to ensure the health and safety of the public and the protection of the environment. But this need not involve an added burden on the Treasury because some of those people, probably all of them, could be seconded from other areas within the federal bureaucracy. The Act is given more muscle in other ways also in terms of ensuring that health and environmental factors are taken fully into account in the nuclear field; for example, by requiring applicants to submit environmental impact assessments which must, in turn, be reviewed, studied and decided on by the regulatory board. At present, such a procedure is dependent on the whim of the powers that be. Again, procedures are specified to maximize involvement by, and notice to, the public in relation to the regulatory process.

Of special concern to me, and no doubt to other Members, is the matter of nuclear waste. The topic is dealt with specifically in my Bill. More broadly, the improved mechanisms and procedures for public participation included in Bill C-270 will better ensure that health and environmental concerns will be reflected in all decisions made under the authority of the legislation.

Allow me to conclude, Mr. Speaker, with two brief points: first, currently our nuclear waste is stored in interim reservoirs, so-called swimming pools, on the site of each of the reactors themselves. We have no nuclear waste disposal capacity at present, anywhere in the country. Although much research is under way into the disposal of nuclear wastes, the fact that the field is still virginal underscores the earlier point which I made, namely, that we have allowed the industry to grow at a faster pace than the research and development required to keep it within appropriate health and environmental boundaries.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-270 will help redress the imbalance of which I have spoken. Lost time cannot be recaptured with one legislative stroke, but this Bill is a beginning. I urge all Members to join me this afternoon in making that start by allowing the Bill to go before committee. After all, in this field, more so than in most others, much more than just debate is involved. We are dealing, sir, with the health and safety and the well-being of the very people whom we have been elected to represent.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, in rising this afternoon to speak on Private Member's Bill C-270, sponsored by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan), I would like to say that I know he is sponsoring this Bill with good intent. Unfortunately, whenever we get into a discussion such as this, quite often the factor of nuclear energy becomes automatically mixed up with nuclear power in warfare. This is very unfortunate because Canada's emphasis has been on nuclear energy for peaceful purposes, and certainly Canada's emphasis has also been on medical research through the nuclear industry. We have made great strides in that field.

The Hon. Member correctly mentioned the emphasis on nuclear reactors producing hydroelectric power in Provinces such as Ontario. I think that it is a good thing that we have nuclear reactors producing that amount of electricity in Ontario which is our major industrial Province. Until that happened, every white water rapids and every river in the Province was being dammed and that kind of environment was being destroyed. Everyone was trying to get electrical power by damming the rivers. The nuclear reactors producing hydroelectric energy in Ontario have used the situation and have saved the remaining white water rapids for recreational and other uses.

Although the Atomic Energy Control Board was established 36 years ago with the passage in August, 1946 of the Atomic Energy Control Act, like many administrative tribunals, its role and function in the regulatory process which it applies had evolved very significantly during this period. The changes which have taken place over the years reflect not only the vast scientific and technological developments which have occurred, but also the marked difference between contemporary society and the social milieu of the late 1940s. The basic philosophy of nuclear regulation in Canada and the underlying principles of the regulatory process have changed very little, however. Certainly the process is far more open in terms of the general public. It has also become appreciably more comprehensive and systematic in terms of the depth and extent in both the pre and post-licensing technical evaluations which are conducted from time to time and the ensuing compliance program itself. Furthermore, it applies to the whole of the nuclear fuel cycle as well as the industrial, agricultural and medical applications of radionuclides.

Nevertheless, the following fundamental principles remain unchanged: the primary responsibility for achieving high standards of nuclear safety and environmental protection in the design, construction, commissioning and operation of nuclear facilities resides with the licensee; the credibility of the nuclear regulatory process depends not only upon its technical correctness and practicability, but also upon acceptance by the public at large of its perceived effectiveness and efficiency. That is another very important factor. Even when a good job is done or is attempted by people with expertise, they are not always given full credit for the effort because this is a subject about which it is easy to create fear.

The regulatory criteria and principles should be concise, clearly stated and understandable; regulatory decision-making should be based upon stated criteria and principles, taking into account pertinent scientific and technical facts only; fairness and impartiality must characterize all regulatory decision-making. It is very important that people in the Atomic Energy Control Board or the board set up by Bill C-270, be impartial and have expertise. The regulatory process should be subject to a comprehensive periodic review and evaluation to ensure that it continues to produce the desired results at justified costs.

The jurisdiction of the AECB is, of course, established by the AEC Act, which came into effect in October, 1946. The exercise of that jurisdiction by the AECB, as expressed in regulations and licensing action, has come about in large measure through a series of precedents established as the nuclear program evolved. However, it is worthy of note that the areas of jurisdiction occupied by the AECB in terms of current practice, are significantly less than the potential jurisdictional field embraced by the AEC Act. It would be possible, given the strength and breadth of the current Act, for the AECB to make additional regulations that would explicitly cover, for example, conventional occupational health and safety in addition to the new specified radiological health and safety. It has not done this, for obvious reasons, and such careful attention to the practical necessities of nuclear regulation and control have marked its activities since 1946.

In the present situation, workers in all parts of the nuclear industry, including the medical, research and industrial uses of radioisotopes, are protected to an equal degree against radiation exposures, according to the schedule appended to the AEC Regualtions. Exposure dose limits for the general public are also provided. All Canadians, in effect, are given protection under one Act and with one authority responsible for exerting the control, and being held accountable for same.

This single authority position assures consistency across the country for all Canadians, and it represents the best source and use of expertise. Some Provinces, by their own admission, have little experience in radiological health and safety matters at this time. It also represents the combined opinion of provincial health officials, through the now defunct Dominion Council of Health, but is still unquestioned by the Conference of Deputy Ministers of Health. And it permits a continued and centralized contact with international agencies, such as the International Commission on Radiological Protection, whose advise is part of the basis on which standards are set.

The matter of environmental protection in nuclear regulation presents significant potential for ambiguity. Nuclear facilities are within federal regulatory jurisdiction, the Atomic Energy Control Act providing the only legislative framework. The environment to be protected, however, is clearly an area of primarily provincial concern, though federal concern can never be eliminated, particularly for facilities at or near a provincial or international boundary. At both federal and provincial levels, there exist government bodies with the responsibility and the expertise for environmental protection, and it would seem to me the AECB has neither the justification nor the desire to duplicate what already exists. Indeed, the AECB currently incorporates the environmental protection standards of other jurisdictions through its licensing process. Furthermore, at the federal level, the AECB counts on Environment Canada for expertise—it can draw on experts from other Departments and the private sector—and recognizes the value and role of the environmental assessment and review process. Since there is more potential for difficulty to arise between federal and provincial bodies, a joint regulatory process has been designed to overcome such difficulties. I understand that this system has worked very well.

Reading through this Bill, one gets the impression that it was prepared a little hastily. For instance, the mention of uranium and thorium mines and mills as nuclear facilities subject to controls is missing, although there is a reference to the licensing of extraction and production. Furthermore, the new Nuclear Control Board would be empowered to make regulations respecting the development, mining and milling of uranium and thorium. Since nuclear facilities are the main regulatory focus of the Bill, this would present an awkward situation. One would have to ask how and by whom these regulations would be enforced. Would the public stand for the federal Government treating mines and mills any differently than major nuclear facilities?

Hasty preparation is also marked by the fact that while the employees of the new Board are only to be interested in the general public and the environment, the Bill would give the Board the power to make regulations providing for protection of persons who, because of their work or professional activity, may come into contact with or may be exposed to prescribed substances. In other words, the details of the Bill do not jibe entirely.

There are also a number of items in the Bill which collectively give cause to be concerned about intent. For instance, given the large number of members contemplated and reference to substitute members, one wonders if there is not an effort here to make it easy to infiltrate the Board with delegates of one persuasion or another. This is why I said at the outset that members of the Board must be impartial and must have the expertise to make judgments.

There are various interest groups talking about nuclear energy, but usually when we talk about nuclear interests we think of those people who are actually in the nuclear industry. I submit that those groups opposed to the nuclear research industry are also interest groups. We cannot look at this in a puritanical way by saying, "You are wrong and I am pure".

As well, the inclusion of provisos on Board member employment before and after their appointment at the very least suggests an unreasonable mistrust of the common decency of potential appointees. At worst, it could be an attempt to emasculate the Board by depriving it of necessary expertise or willing candidates.

Unfortunately the Bill is silent on the delegation of authority to issue licences. Undoubtedly this reflects a lack of understanding of the workload involved and perhaps misplaced zeal to require the Board to deliberate on every licensing action. With the number of extant or still existing AECB licences in Canada approaching 5,000, I fail to see how the Board could cope in anything other than semi-permanent session. Otherwise, the whole Canadian radioisotope business—industrial, medical, agricultural and experimental—would grind to a halt. As a matter of fact, the wording of the Bill is very much oriented toward dealing with nuclear facilities and, therefore, it would impose tremendous administrative loads on the more mundane but very numerous licensing actions dealing with prescribed substance uses.

During the past 36 years I believe the Board has consistently exhibited a dedicated commitment to serve Canadians as the guardian of safety in nuclear matters through the development and application of stringent controls. This considerable responsibility enabling decisions to be taken by the people through their elected representatives with a degree of confidence is not popularly associated with the sophisticated technology of the nuclear energy field.

The confidence we enjoy in the nuclear regulatory process as it now exist encourages me to observe that while the Bill is founded on good basic principles and good intent, there are too many unresolved questions and issues to warrant its support by the House.

In closing, I would simply like to say that people who work in the nuclear industry and have considerable expertise listen to television programs and commentators talk about the interests of the future of humanity and the safety of my children, their children and our children's children. The AECB has been involved in that over the past 36 years. Those same people who work in the nuclear industry and try to do their day-to-day work in a very constructive manner feel somewhat hurt by someone insinuating that they are not interested in their children or their children's children. People who work in the atomic energy research and nuclear field are as interested in their children's children as anyone else. I should like to erase that error in judgment and comment before taking my seat.

Also I should like to pay tribute to the tremendous research which has been done in the medical field of the nuclear industry. It has been fantastic. That fact has been overshadowed by the criticism perpetuated among the general public and is quite often overlooked. I know that the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), whose constituency and name was brought into this debate by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough, would certainly be among those to agree that a great deal of good work, particularly in the medical field, through nuclear research was done. Also I know that the Hon. Member for Hillsborough brought in the Bill with good intent and with principle. I do not question his good intent or his principles because all of us agree that while we go ahead and develop nuclear energy, there are positive things in medical research that go along with it. Yes, research into the handling of the waste side of the industry must be faced up to. A great deal of work has already gone into this area and is continuing into the research of handling the waste products of the industry. I am not negative about the future because necessity is always the mother of invention and development. I have confidence in the scientific expertise and common sense of the people in the nuclear industry today. They have done their best to produce good regulations through the AECB. I have faith that they will use good judgment. They are not going out to destroy our children's children or their children's children. Also, in closing I would like to emphasize—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must inform the Hon. Member that his time is exhausted.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I was about to offer the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) an opportunity to finish his sentence, but he indicated that he did not want to take this opportunity and that he felt he had been sentenced long enough. I would like to congratulate him for a most reassuring speech. I, too, would like to confirm that the people who work in the nuclear industry in research and various forms of it are not necessarily conspirators to poison us all forever. I think there are some well motivated people within that industry. I think the whole industry is a high tech turkey, but that does not mean the people who work in it are not well motivated.

I think we got into the nuclear industry for very many good reasons. Canada had the technology, the brains and the uranium. We got into this industry after World War II because it seemed like a reasonable thing to do. Ever since that time we have been throwing good money after bad and trying to recoup an investment for something that is suffering from terminal, if not moral economics. I do not share the same confidence in the nuclear regulatory agencies, whether they are in this country or any other country; the United States, Soviet Union, France, or wherever, that is held by the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke. Simply because I feel that citizens of this world have been systematically lied to about the dangers of even low-level radiation for the last 50 years. We have not yet achieved the competence to look at the tonnes and tonnes of nuclear waste. If the Hon. Member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke is confident, that is terrific. I do not share his view. I think that all of us, and this is the essence of democracy, should probe into what our governments tell us and not believe everything we are told whether by a Government, a regulatory agency, a Crown corporation or whatever. It is absolute naivete for any of us to be that confident in what a group of men, who may have a stake in the nuclear industry, tell us about anything. That is my view. If it sounds cynical, I am sorry. But I happen to feel that way because I think life on this planet in terms of how we dispose of nuclear waste or what we do with nuclear weapons, nuclear power, or nuclear research, is too precious to leave in the hands of a bunch of bureaucrats appointed by the Government who have no reason that I know of to make a clean breast of things.

I think others have noted that this Bill is very similar to the one put forward by the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), a colleague for whom I have the utmost respect. His views on nuclear power are not necessarily congruent with my own. My own position and the position of my Party was set forward, I thought, very well by the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on December 17 at the time when the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey debated his Private Member's Bill. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway and, I believe the Hon. Member for Hillsborough (Mr. McMillan) also said that at this time Canadians would welcome a serious debate on this whole issue of what Canada's commitment to the nuclear industry is, whether it is nuclear weapons, nuclear power or nuclear medical research.

In any event, these sister Bills have been brought forward by the Conservatives to ensure more accountability. We can support that. We are in favour of more accountability. I think that is important. I can support, in principle, some of the proposed changes. I can support tighter regulations on the transportation of radioactive materials. When we had evidence in the Standing Committee on Transport about unsafe cargo or dangerous goods, I was surprised, appalled and even shocked to learn that sometimes when I return to Ottawa from my riding on the West Coast I am sitting blindly and naively above cannisters of nuclear material that are being transported on the same plane. That is not particularly reassuring, not that it would matter one way or the other to me if the plane went down. We still do not know about the technology of shielding or the effect of low-level radiation. We are just beginning to understand that. Witness the story about the people in the Armed Services who were involved in the clean-up of the two spills in Chalk River during or shortly after the Second World War. People like Bjorne Paulson are attempting to get some kind of pension because he suffered cancer as a result of taking part, without adequate shielding, in that clean-up at Chalk River. There are at least 20 to 50 other radiated veterans who are crying desperately for some kind of help from the Government, especially from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I can support tighter regulation in transport. I can support reductions in the ability of the Government to hide nuclear questions behind a secret wall by way of saying, "These are for defence reasons and people cannot know about these things." I do not accept those reasons completely. They are good and sufficient reasons, I think, in terms of international and national security. You cannot let everything hang out. But perhaps more is hidden about this whole question than needs to be. I think Hon. Members on both sides of the House who believe in more freedom of information could support me in that statement.

I like the idea that 50 per cent of the representatives on the Atomic Energy Control Board, or the Nuclear Control Board as proposed, will not be charter members of the private sector or from the governmental nuclear industry fraternity. You have to have informed people on the Board. But if you put only people who have a stake in the industry you can hardly expect to escape bias. Similarly, the College of Physicians needs a medical consumer on its board and the legal profession should welcome lay people on their respective boards. I do not see why we should not have well informed lay people on the AECB as well. Is there a problem?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It has to do with the length of this debate. If I may have the indulgence of the House for a moment, this is the third occasion in Private Member's business when the third Bill or motion has been terminated after about 50 minutes because of the requirements to adjourn the House at six o'clock. I would like to ask either for unanimous consent to continue until 6.10 p.m., or, even better, if the matter of the continuance of the third Member's Bill or motion be referred to a committee so that the Member can get the full hour's debate, which I am sure was the intent of the committee when it decided that on Wednesdays there would be three Bills, motions or motions for papers and that each Member should have his full hour. The last Member should not have his time abbreviated as it has been and might unfortunately happen again today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. He raises a valid concern, one which has been expressed by other Members, if I recall correctly. However, it is the Chair's duty under the present provisional Standing Orders to adjourn the House at six o'clock. I refer Hon. Members to Standing Order 8(1) which reads:

> At 6:00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and at 5:00 o'clock p.m. on Fridays, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

However, as the Chair acknowledges, the Hon. Member raises a valid point. Perhaps he would want to take the initiative of bringing this matter to the attention of the Special Committee on Procedure and Organization, which is now empowered under our provisional rules to consider on its own initiative the Standing Orders and procedure in the House and its committees. It is a matter which can be taken into account by that Committee. I cannot see any other way whereby we could at this time refer that matter to the Committee. The point has been made. It is on the record and I am sure someone will take it under consideration.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, in the attempt to assist me, I think the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) has done his best to talk out the time allotted to me. I know that was not the intention. But I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, since you said you knew of no other way in which I might be accommodated, a time extension can be granted by unanimous consent. The Speaker does not need to see the clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) now proposing that by unanimous consent we do not see the clock?

Mr. Rose: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I shall now put the question to the House. Is there unanimous consent to continue the sitting beyond six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody does not have unanimous consent. It being six o'clock this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is it the pleasure of the House to carry the motion?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to use my allotted ten minutes to make a few brief comments on this legislation which will restrict the indexing of basic pensions of senior Canadians.

[English]

As Members are well aware, this Bill is only one of a number of measures designed to encourage all Canadians to lower their expectations. Although limited indexation of the basic old age pension for those who do not need the supplement will generate estimated after-tax program savings of $49 million in 1983 and 1984, the purpose of this Bill is not to save money, as I have often explained.

Members opposite, by the way, will notice that that sum of money totalling $49 million is drastically lower than the earlier estimated savings of $84 million, and I am very pleased about that. This is a clear indication that the inflation rate is being brought down in Canada. I say that because the New Democratic Party does not seem to be aware of this fact. In every speech made by NDP Members they continue to quote figures which are now seven months old. This is a very dangerous and misleading practice, and I would just ask them to be honest with Canadians, particularly senior Canadians.

As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) said in Toronto last week, the Consumer Price Index dropped from an annual rate of 11.5 per cent in the second quarter of 1982 to 9.7 per cent in the fourth quarter, which is excellent.

Mr. Lewis: And we have two million people unemployed.

• (1110)

Miss Bégin: In other words, since the June budget, inflation has advanced at a compound annual rate of 7.2 per cent. That is the goal toward which this measure and other measures are working.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It still does not balance.

Miss Bégin: The Hon. Member opposite is very bitter. He does not seem to be in favour of seniors. He represents thousands of seniors in the City of Victoria. He should know what their best interests are.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is not that.

Miss Bégin: Is it to let inflation erode their dollar in the long term, or is it to take the bull by the horns and make the effort to fight inflation and keep the full value of the dollar? If he would realize that, he would be in favour of this Bill, as unpleasant as it is to have to implement it.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Minister would permit a question?

Miss Bégin: I will finish my speech according to the new rules. The Member is then permitted a ten-minute question period. I hope Members will not interrupt me all the time. I am sure the Hon. Member knows the rules very well.

This means that 1.1 million pensioners with other incomes would receive about $29 less this year and $52 less next year. However, because of the success story of the six and five program, I have now estimated that they would lose $18 this year and only $39 next year. I want to make this clear to all Members in order that they understand at long last, and can give the proper and factual information to seniors.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Now tell us about the new estimates of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Orlikow: The figures are wrong.

Miss Bégin: This is a much smaller loss than projected because we are winning this fight against inflation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That has nothing to do with it.

Miss Bégin: It has to do with all Canadians who have believed in six and five and fought inflation. That is what the Member does not seem to understand.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) said that seniors were losing something like $300. I would like to make it clear that that is total misinformation. I want to repeat that all senior citizens who have no or little income apart from their basic pension will not be affected by this Bill. I also want to say to those seniors who will be affected by this Bill in small amounts that we will not be collecting back any money on the January cheque which was fully indexed. We will not collect back any money.

Hon. Members opposite have attempted to make Canadians believe that these measures are dismantling the improvements that have been made through the decades to the pension system. That is not true. These charges are false. What is worse, they serve only to create unwarranted anxiety among the elderly.

We know the political game played in this Chamber by every Member in the two Opposition Parties, who always accuse us of being terrible villains. That is the game played in the House. But, when those Members go outside and, instead of quoting figures of $18 in total loss for this year and $39 for next year, they quote figures like $300, they are not damaging us, since we were elected by a majority and we will pass this Bill. They are damaging Mrs. X and Mr. Y, who are at home watching on TV and do not know the real figures. They suddenly become nervous about losing $300. That figure is false. This Bill does not do that at all.

I would like to reply to Members who think that we are doing terrible things to the pension system. I say to those Hon. Members and all Canadians that I am very proud that we have kept the social programs the way they are. Last week, we all watched television when President Reagan delivered a State of the Union message in which he outlined a four-part plan to increase growth and reduce deficits. Who is going to pay the bill? He cited what he termed the need to reduce, and I quote, "the dangerous growth rate in government spending". Where did he find the money? He called for a six-month freeze in the cost of living adjustment—that means zero growth—for government-related pension programs. He spoke of cutting back on food stamps and other such social programs. In addition, he proposed asking the elderly to pay more for medicare.

The United States is not alone in doing that to social programs. In West Germany, Chancellor Helmut Kohl has proposed to delay statutory cost of living increases in old age pensions due in January until July, at which time pensioners will also be required to pay health insurance contributions.

I could go on and on giving examples of other measures that have taken place. In France, for example, people will have to pay for medicare.

An Hon. Member: We are in Canada.

Miss Bégin: Yes, we are in Canada. Hon. Members opposite are not telling the truth to the people, and that is why I have to remind them, and the people, of what other countries have decided on their social programs. Mr. Speaker, members opposite say to the Canadian people that we are dismantling the social programs. I am proving the contrary to them with facts—they never like to hear facts—and with quotations on things that can be verified about what is happening elsewhere.

We are not dismantling the program in Canada; we are making sure that seniors get the full value of their dollar in their pension. We are doing that by a national campaign of 6 and 5 per cent, which is working. That is why Hon. Members opposite are so furious and the proof of that is in many of their speeches. They ask, "If it is such a success, why do it?" Well, Mr. Speaker, if we do not do it, it will stop being a success. Members do not seem to realize the psychological dimension of the economic cycle.

In short, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that social welfare spending is under attack in most countries of the western world. But this country has respected its basic commitments and pensioners will not be subjected to the sorts of draconian measures that the elderly in many other countries are now facing. Bill C-131 safeguards the principles of both universality and indexation.

Despite the laughter from the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, I should like to finish my remarks by inviting all Hon. Members to support the bill. The faster we reduce inflation, the sooner all Canadians, especially pensioners, those on fixed incomes, will benefit.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister. She says that this program is working and is not going to hurt pensioners. Using her own figures, the fact is that the cost of living is still increasing by well over 9 per cent while the capping of indexing means that old age pensioners will get an increase of only 6 per cent. If the figures mean anything, that means that the old age pensioners' real income will be reduced by 3 per cent. How can the minister say that they are not suffering?

Let me ask one other question, Mr. Speaker. The Minister also says that we have not cut back on our social security programs, but we see more and more doctors opting out of medicare and hospitalization plans and we see more and more Provinces putting deterrent fees on hospitalization. How can the Minister then say that we are not cutting back on social security?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I am going to repeat emphatically that in Canada the social programs are well maintained and that, through medicare, Canadians have the best health system in the western world—I can say in all the world. I believe that. It is not often that Canadians can say that we are the best, but in this case we have the best. We are not cutting down on payments because all Provinces and the feds are putting more money into medicare this year than last year, and so on and so forth for every coming year. The Hon. Member is really oversimplifying a more complicated problem. It does not have anything to do with cuts.

Second, the seniors will not suffer as a result of the cut. I have never said anything like that. When you take money away from people, especially when it is $18 this year and $39 next year, it is a small sacrifice. I have always acknowledged it. I do not know what the Hon. Member is referring to. In the last seven months the rate of inflation compounded has dropped to 7.2 per cent. We are only giving 6 per cent. There is a little something missing. I have acknowledged that. I thank seniors for their sacrifice.

[Translation]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. On December 14 last year, the Minister told the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, and I quote:

> The net savings for 1983 are $32 million and for 1984 $52 million, and this shows that people will not suffer because otherwise we would have had considerable savings.

[English]

At the beginning of the Minister's remarks, she leaped at the Opposition and said that we had been using a figure of $84 million, that we were lying to the nation and implied that Members were lying. These are her words of six weeks ago that the Opposition has been using. How does she explain that? Can she answer another question? I would like to know—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair does not want to make a ruling out of my comment at this moment. I notice that the previous Member bicycled two questions together. I know, too, that the intention of the Committee was that questions should be short and sharp. I will gladly recognize the Hon. Member for his supplementary. The House may be better served by not bringing in two, three or four questions in one operation.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: I shall try to answer the Hon. Member very briefly so as to give as many Members as possible a chance to ask questions. The reason for the disparity between the figures quoted by the Hon. Member is that inflation is going down from month to month. When I appeared before the Committee in the first half of December, I gave the figures for that period. Now, almost two months later, I am giving the revised figures which are available to all Members from the Department of Finance and which demonstrate the success of our program. As a result, senior citizens with other sources of income will lose only $18 in 1983 and $39 in 1984 on their indexing.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's attack on the Opposition dishonours her office, as the figures came from her six weeks ago. To accuse us of using seven-month old figures is just not right, when the health and welfare of senior citizens is at stake. I would like to know from the Minister's own lips whether in Cabinet, as these decisions were made, she fought for the senior citizens and the retention of their indexing and lost. Did she fight for them or did she volunteer the senior citizens and their income as the front-line troops in the fight against inflation? The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) got a bigger budget. In all her major portfolios, the Minister of National Health and Welfare took a cut on behalf of the poorer people of this nation, including the pensioners. Did she fight and lose, or did she volunteer these people to make the sacrifice?

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to make it clear to the Hon. Member that when I was talking about seven-month-old figures and figures that had not been checked, I was specifically referring to the New Democratic Party which has not been checking its figures in this area. Therefore, the Hon. Member should not feel that he is under attack. Furthermore, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that I am not going to answer his question because proceedings of Cabinet meetings cannot be disclosed.

[English]

The Hon. Member is playing a game. It is for Canadians to judge whether I usually do well as their privileged voice in Cabinet. What else can I say? I do not have a clue where the media gets this information. However, the media usually says that I am a winner on my programs. What else can I say? My interest is to have the best for seniors. Fighting inflation is the best for seniors.

• (1125)

Mr. Hawkes: Is the Minister implying that she is a winner in this case because Cabinet wanted to cut even more?

Miss Bégin: The Hon. Member will not succeed in making me say what happens in Cabinet, that is forbidden. I took an oath of office and I will respect it. Our purpose is to do the best for Canadians and seniors, and we are doing it.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, there are several anomalies which this Bill is bringing about, and they are of some concern to me. We covered my concern about people on private pensions combined with old age pensions who will suffer, the other day. I expect the Minister will be willing to tell us whether they are going to have a rather automatic adjustment to the size of their Guaranteed Income Supplement to bring them up to the standard level which they would be getting if they had no private pension and were getting the Guaranteed Income Supplement, plus the Old Age Security.

I would like to ask the Minister about the Canada Pension Plan. A person is deprived of the Guaranteed Income Supplement if they get a pension under the Canada Pension Plan which puts them over the figure of around $503 or $504 in total. If the Canada Pension Plan puts them over that line and they cannot get the GIS, it means that their old age pension will be limited to 6 per cent. Whereas if they have a slightly smaller Canada Pension Plan pension, they will then get some GIS and they will be able to get their OAS at the rate of inflation which, as you know, would have been an 11.5 per cent raise. How does the Minister plan to get around the position where you are better off with a smaller pension from the Canada Pension Plan than a larger one?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member started out by saying there are several anomalies with this Bill and he indicated what he believes is one of them. I have explained to him privately, and I have to repeat it again today, that the so-called anomaly he has just pointed out has nothing to do with this Bill. It is deeply rooted in the whole system whereby far too many Canadians do not have a private pension, and the purpose of the Green Paper is to start putting on track a dossier with a view to seeing the situation is corrected as soon as possible. But that has nothing to do with this Bill. This Bill continues to function the way the system of public pensions functions. Therefore, the Hon. Member's thesis does not apply here. He is pointing to a problem which has always existed and which we want to correct through the Green Paper.

Mr. McKinnon: The Minister did not address the question of the Canada Pension Plan, where it would appear that a person would be better off if their Canada Pension brought them in a couple of dollars under the line where they would start to get the GIS. They will get $2 worth of GIS, and because of that $2 they will be able to get their old age pension indexed at the rate of inflation. That would make quite a considerable difference. A person would be much better off to have the smaller Canada Pension than the larger one.

Miss Bégin: I am sorry the Hon. Member does not want to accept the facts on that so-called anomaly, as well as in the other cases he referred to the other day in the House concerning people with a very small private pension. Nothing has changed with this Bill. This Bill does not affect the situation at all; it is continuing today's philosophy of Government public pensions.

The other things which are wrong in the system by which people have small CPP's, or no private pensions, or have small private pensions, are anomalies which we are addressing through the Green Paper on pensions. This Bill has nothing to do with that. I am sorry to repeat this. I am sure the Hon. Member does not want to play politics on the backs of seniors, but this Bill has nothing to do with that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mr. Hawkes: A speech, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Calgary West in debate.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): There are times, Mr. Speaker, in this House, when we should attempt to use the medium of television and radio to speak to the nation. There are other times when we should try to direct our attention to the Hon. Members of this House, because it is only the Hon. Members of this House who can do something about a tragic wrong which is about to be perpetrated on some Canadians. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is that kind of a day.

At six o'clock this evening, Hon. Members of this House will be forced to stand and vote. The Minister is asking Hon. Members of the Liberal Party to stand in this House and impose a special lifetime tax on every Canadian who is 65 years of age and over. It is a lifetime tax which has an immediate consequence in the year 1983. It is a tax which will grow in size and consequence in every succeeding year. In this time of economic difficulty, with budget deficits running in the order of $24 billion, she is asking a particular sub-group, one which represents the poorest segment of Canadian society, to bear a tax, a minimum 3 per cent special tax which no one else would pay, which would last a lifetime and which would grow.

In this Chamber, at six o'clock this evening, we can put a stop to that. Before my remarks are concluded, I will move a motion which will delay debate and thus leave the current law in place. Anyone on the Liberal side who has a social conscience and supports that motion will be ensuring that this special tax is not imposed on senior citizens, those who are 65 years of age and over.

Why in the name of justice, in the name of humanity, is Party discipline about to prevail on an issue which is so ill-considered and so unnecessary? The Minister told us this morning that she estimates the savings to the federal treasury this year to be $18 million. That amounts to 15 cents per month per taxpayer. If every taxpayer in this country was willing to donate 15 cents per month, this piece of legislation would not be necessary.

There have been estimates that this Chamber costs something in the order of half a million dollars a day to operate. We will have taken the time of this Chamber for approximately six days on this piece of legislation. We will have cost the Canadian taxpayers at least $3 million to debate this Bill which is intended to save the Government $18 million and make the lives of every senior citizen who lives at or near an income level of $9,000 a year poorer. The Bill would impose a very special tax on senior citizens who make $750 a month, who must provide themselves with shelter, transportation, recreation, food and medicine. They earn $750 a month, and there are many of them, and they are being asked to absorb a special 3 per cent to 5 per cent tax this year which will be in the order of 4 per cent next year and 5 per cent the year after, because it multiplies in that fashion. I ask, where is the sanity in the Cabinet? Where is the social conscience of Members of Parliament who have been sent here by their constituents?

I have absolutely no doubt that if the Government were to ask every single Canadian taxpayer, ten million people who pay taxes, if they were willing to contribute 15 cents a month more in taxes so that the senior citizens of this country would not have to pay a special tax and the Government would not have to take money out of their pockets, 99.9 per cent of the time the answer would be, "Yes, I will pay the extra 15 cents a month".

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Except for the Grits.

Mr. Hawkes: Why can we not have a Government that thinks about the trade-off? Why can we not have a Government which says that if Canadians are willing to pay 15 cents a month, it can treat our senior citizens better, with dignity, give them an opportunity to eat more nutritious meals and enable them to survive without the fear and threat which this piece of legislation represents?

The Government will tell us that it had to do this to bring down inflation. That argument is not credible. To believe that, in an economy which operates in the order of $300 billion, the sum of $18 million is a significant factor in inflation is nonsense. There is no inflationary reason for this piece of legislation. It is incredible.

Then the Government says: "But we will increase the Guaranteed Income Supplement"; and yes, it will. Every senior citizen who makes less than $750 a month will keep the income he would have received without this Bill. If one makes less than $750 a month, the Government, the Liberal Party, will not take any money away if one is over 65 years of age. However, if one makes $750 a month or $755 or $760, the Government will put a special tax on one's income.

In December we were told in committee that the tax was about 5 per cent. Today the Minister stood up and told us that it is about 3 per cent. It does not even matter if it is three-tenths of 1 per cent, the principle is wrong. People over the age of 65 are the people who created the wealth in this country. They include homesteaders who took down the trees and plowed the fields for the first time. They include miners who dug the first mines and built the first shafts. They include carpenters and plumbers who are busy and have been teaching younger people their skills. This is part of our population to which all of us who are younger owe the most. Without their contribution to this nation, we would not have an economy with the wealth to distribute.

It is simply inconceivable that Hon. Members opposite, like a bunch of sheep, will stand up later this day and impose a special tax on people over 65. It is a logic which says, "Let us identify the poorest segment of the Canadian population and make them pay a tax which no other part of the population must pay". The Government does not say to someone who is 21, 22 or 40 years of age that he or she cannot go out and work double time or work at a little part-time job to augment one's income. However, in the Government's social policy system, it says to the senior citizens: "You have Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. If you make more than $750 a month, we will take part of it away from you in this special fashion. If you go out and earn some more, you must tell us about it and we will take some more public money away from you."

If we had sat down, Mr. Speaker, to design a combination of social programs and legislation which would have a maximum negative impact on a particular part of the population, it would be this legislation. These people are less able to help themselves in an economic sense. The vast majority of them are out of the labour force and are dependent on those assets built up throughout a lifetime of participation in the labour force. As they planned their retirement, one of those assets which they counted on was the fact that they would get an Old Age Security cheque indexed so that it would grow if there was inflation. They had a commitment from the Canadian people, through the Parliament of Canada, that they could prepare their retirement plans in the belief that coming generations would keep that commitment. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we cannot stand in this Chamber later this day and break that commitment. It is inhuman and insane, and there are other options.

The option I laid out today, Mr. Speaker, is 15 cents per month from every taxpayer and we do not have to pass this legislation. Canadians would gladly give that 15 cents, I am sure of it. I see the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Chrétien) in the House. I have raised the issue of the buying out of public funds of some $650 million worth of service stations. The Government does that, and then turns around in the House of Commons and says we can afford that expenditure but we cannot give $18 million to senior citizens.

I have on my desk a report from Ultramar Canada Limited which concludes that the taxpayers of this country are spending $517 million this year just on the financing for Petro-Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, I am going to go out in the next federal election and tell the Canadian people, in the best way I am able to and on every platform I can get, that every elected Member of the Liberal Party in this House in the year 1983 stood up and said a subsidy of $517 million to Petro-Canada and the purchase of $650 million worth of service stations is more important and a priority, and therefore we have to cut pensions. We have to impose a tax on senior citizens this year, next year and every other year of their lives. Cut out the bafflegab, cut through the legislation, and that is the nub of it. It is not right, it dishonours this Chamber and it dishonours our commitment and those people and their lifetime of commitment to this nation. And we have six more hours to decide not to do it.

If Members opposite stand in this Chamber at six o'clock tonight and vote for this Bill, then it is done; they have broken that commitment. I say to whoever is listening on the television network: "Regardless whether you are over 65 or under 65, find out who your Member of Parliament is, find out how he votes later this day, and if you do not like it, you can do something about it. You can join a political party that is different from the one that Member represents in this Chamber"—and I suspect in most cases it will be a Liberal—"and you can have power in this nation. You can work as a volunteer to make sure that any Member who does this, whose social conscience is so weak and so ill considered, never has an opportunity to sit in this Chamber again." It takes volunteers and commitment but it can be done, and if people out there in television land are as mad as I am, then it will be a groundswell which will sweep this Government away and things will change with a new Parliament.

When we come back here we will honour the commitment. Members of this Party will first of all honour the commitment to provide a healthy economy, one that produces wealth so that we can keep our commitment to the senior citizens of this country and those who are not able to take care of themselves.

I implore, Mr. Speaker, I beg Members of the Liberal Party of Canada who sit in this Chamber to support my motion. It does not bring down the Government and cause an election; all it does is stop this legislation so senior citizens in this country will get the pension they are entitled to. It is wrong to impose a special and abusive tax on the poorest segment of the Canadian population. It is wrong, wrong, wrong.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the following motion:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor: "Bill C-131, An Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence."

Please, let us do what is right for the senior citizens of this nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Lang) rises on a question.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) has tried to make the point that the six and five legislation does not have an impact on inflation. In the past five years we in Canada have been experiencing a new phenomenon called an inflationary recession. In a recession there is no increase in total aggregate demand as some Milton Friedman disciples in the Conservative Party might suggest. Clearly there is cost-push inflation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What is your question?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Opposition has been suggesting restraint and measures to bring down inflation. What would the Hon. Member suggest we do to deal with cost-push inflation and inflationary expectations?

Mr. Mazankowski: Stop buying service stations.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I hear someone on our side say "stop buying service stations", and that is a great place to start. This Party voted for six and five in its broadest form. It was too little, too late, and we knew it would not work in all its ramifications, but we voted for it primarily because it cut the salaries of Members of Parliament. The NDP did not want to do that, but we did and we voted for it.

Mr. Keeper: You deserve to have a salary cut.

Mr. Hawkes: But this particular part of the six and five program involves, in the Minister's own words, a saving of $18 million through the imposition of a special tax. It is absolutely insane to believe that a saving of $18 million will have any effect on inflation.

• (1150)

I think an economist would tell the Hon. Member that when money is put in the pockets of the poorest segments of society, they do not save it, they spend it. When they spend it, they create jobs. Perhaps we should be cutting money out of the pockets of the savers and putting it in the pockets of the spenders, if we care about 1.5 million unemployed people and if we care about senior citizens and their previous contribution to the country.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member failed to answer my question. Clearly he does not know how to deal with inflationary expectations. He knows that inflationary expectations are the only things at the present time in a recession which keep inflation going. He knows that the six and five program is bringing inflation down, and he does not have any other suggestions.

I will repeat my question and ask the Hon. Member what specific proposals he has to deal with inflationary expectations. It is not the $18 million that is the point, and the Hon. Member knows it; it is to reduce the income and inflationary expectations of people so that we can have economic stabilization for investment and for jobs. The saved money is being put toward job creation. What would he do to reduce inflationary expectations?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, one of our plans was an increase of 18 cents per gallon of gasoline, and we have now have an increase of over $1, which is inflation. I draw the Hon. Member's attention to the total economic plan presented to the Chamber in December, 1979. That economic plan was not read by Liberal Members of Parliament but it was voted against. If we look at that plan, it had several elements. It has been judged as the fairest budget to poor people in the decade of the 1970s. It was a budget to reduce the federal deficit and therefore inflation. At the same time it would have stimulated job creation and provided a stimulus by increasing jobs at the rate of 40,000 per month. That was the total economic plan. I am quite certain the Hon. Member has either not read it or never understood it. But he hurt the nation a great deal when he stood in the Chamber and voted against it. Out there in the public domain is the kind of planning and approach which my Party had and will have when we are the majority in this Chamber after the next federal election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will be pleased to recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) now that he is in his seat.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would not want the Hon. Member to mislead the House. It is important when one is speaking to have the factual information. I was not a Member of Parliament at that time and was not able to vote against the budget of the Hon. Member for St. John's

West (Mr. Crosbie). However, I would have been delighted to do so because it was an inflationary budget which proposed $3 million—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Lang: It would have done nothing to reduce inflationary expectations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering why and how the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) could rise in the House today and object to the application of the six and five policy to senior citizens and their pensions, when at the time the policy was originally introduced in the House in the form of legislation he and his Party supported it. Did he not realize the implications of that legislation? I know he said that he voted for the six and five legislation because he wanted to vote to lower the salaries of Members of Parliament. If he wanted to do so, I wonder why in the first place he and his Party voted to increase the salaries of Members of Parliament?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Hon. Member why I voted to increase the salaries of Members of Parliament and what I say in my riding, which is: "If you are happy with the politicians and the jobs they are doing, you are paying them enough; if you are not happy, it may be because there is a problem".

The Hon. Member raised an interesting point. I guess it brings into focus one of my contradictions with the New Democratic Party. It is a habit in my Party to read legislation. On the day that we were faced with six and five, we knew and understood that they could not do a thing about pensions, about Family Allowances or about superannuation without bringing forward separate pieces of legislation. Also we knew that we could vote, fight and filibuster. NDP Members stand up and platitudinously say that they do not like it, but the Canadian public should look at the record in committee and in this Chamber. Where are NDP motions which filibuster, delay, try to change or try to make the world better? We see no procedural motions. They do not cause votes to occur. They do not filibuster particularly well. They say one thing but they behave in another fashion.

I am proud of our record of voting for parts of the six and five, including the cutting of the salaries of Members of Parliament, to provide a symbol. Also I am proud of our record of fighting parts of the six and five, one of which is before us today. I urge every Member to fight it. That is the way we approach the real world with real problems—not with great big glorious phrases, but with real solutions.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know from the Hon. Member for Calgary West why, when the Conservative Party has demonstrated its capacity in the House by virtue of the numbers of Members of Parliament and stopped the legislation which affected the oil industry, it cannot stop legislation which will affect senior citizens from one coast to the other.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, again I will return to the same principle. They should have read the legislation on which the bells rang. The fight was not about the content of the Bills. The fight was about democracy and their previous support for an autocratic Government which treats the Chamber as useless. That bunch on the other side of the Chamber has illegally cut the payments to families in the country without the approval of Parliament, without the approval of the Hon. Member or I or any other Member. They moved arbitrarily. They were prepared to put Parliament in the ashcan with that omnibus Bill. We fought in this Chamber for democracy. If the Hon. Member read the entire omnibus Bill, he would understand it. It is about time it was read, and it is about time he understood it.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). He indicated a principle here. If he believes in that principle, did his Party not understand another principle, the principle of free collective bargaining? Many of the workers affected by Bill C-124 were underpaid. Some of them were single women on very low salaries. He talked about the wages of Members of Parliament, but does he not realize that in Kootenay East-Revelstoke the wages of many railroad workers and workers in the labour class are far below the wages of others, and that by supporting that Bill his Party broke contracts with working women with children who depend upon their salaries? The concept of free collective bargaining was lost by the cutting back of contracts which were signed, sealed and delivered by Government and by companies to their workers.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly getting far afield, but I would be happy to answer the Hon. Member. The Canadian public and Canadian unions should look at our record in committee, at the motions we moved to restore collective bargaining, and at the success we have had. It was not what we wanted, but the Bill was changed to restore more rights, not because of the efforts of the NDP and certainly not because of the efforts of the Hon. Members across the Chamber.

This Party deals with a real world in real ways. We created real change, not as much as we wanted and not as much as we would like. But we created change; the NDP talk about it.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, once again I rise to oppose strongly Bill C-131 because of its impact on senior citizens across the land and also because of the principle it represents; that is the erosion of universal social programs in Canada. This is something which we believe is a basic right of all Canadians.

This is the third time many of my colleagues and I have risen to speak against the Bill. We feel very strongly that no protest can be too great. Although perhaps we in the NDP are few in number, we feel so strongly about this matter that we want to keep the opposition to this Bill going for as long as possible. We appeal to our colleagues on the right to continue this protest. We regret that they did not have the same kind of sympathy for workers, as my colleague just said, in relation to opposing Bill C-124.

I spoke on December 2 about the impact of Bill C-131 on older women. This is of particular concern to me and to my colleagues. The New Democratic Party has been involved in a major task force concerning older women. We have travelled to every Province, to the Yukon and to the Territories. The same story has been told to us over and over again. Older women in Canada not only had very low wages if they worked, but by far the majority of them who now are pensioners received no wages at all because they were home makers. They were the ones who worked hard raising families. They had no pay and now they have no benefits. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) knows this only too well. I have heard her express her concern for this group of Canadians. This Bill is completely contradictory to any concern the Minister once had for older women in particular.

I spoke on December 21 about the impact of this Bill on ordinary people. At that time I tried to get as many figures as I could from British Columbia where the cost of living has been excessively high. I took a look at my own riding of Vancouver East. There are many retired people from immigrant families and working class families whose wages were low. There are very many people who have been poor most of their lives; many of them were on welfare and again a great many of these are women.

Today I would like to summarize our concerns once more and appeal to the Government in the last stage to throw out this Bill. I want to appeal to the Liberals in the name of justice. We do not want to treat this matter as our friends to the right are treating it. They are treating it as a humanitarian concern, that we should be good to our old folks. That is patronizing and condescending. This is a matter of basic justice for Canadians.

Pensioners who have worked all their lives should not have to bear the brunt of restraint. They did not cause this country's inflation. Most of them will recognize that the Liberal Government that is bringing this in also is responsible for doing very little to control inflation in Canada. Pensioners are the victims of inflation. They are the ones who go to the grocery store and see the prices rising every month. They cannot buy meat very often for their diets. They are finding it hard to find enough money for fresh vegetables. If they live in rental accommodation, their rents are excessively high. If they are lucky enough to be in senior citizens' residences—and heaven knows, there are not enough of them—they still have to consider escalating costs of telephone, utilities and transportation. Very few of them have money to get out and just be a part of society. Those who have their own homes have been faced with high increases in taxes. There is no extra money in senior citizens' budgets these days except those of the very wealthy.

I appeal to the Government, not only from the basic justice point of view, which the Government owes to elderly Canadians, but also on the basis of need. I am not just talking about those Canadians with the lowest income who qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement; they are far below the poverty level and, of course, the cost of living hits them the hardest. I am talking also about the middle group, some 100,000 Canadian pensioners whose total income for a year is little more than $6,000. They are not eligible for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, but now they are faced with having the cost of living index capped at half what it should be. It is that group which this Bill will affect the most. Surely any Member who knows his or her constituents must have talked to senior citizens. Surely Members have gone to the supermarkets and have watched how the seniors have to scrimp and save, how bare their baskets are as they go through the cash registry with very little. Surely most Members of Parliament know there is a great need for pensioners to have full indexing.

I want to repeat what I said the last time I spoke to the House on this Bill about the Bill's impact on women. This bill is unfair to elderly women who make up over 50 per cent of our old age pensioners. By far the greatest proportion of elderly women live below the poverty level. We have lots of statistics to prove this point. They are poor, and because they are poor, they usually are alone and isolated in rooms, in apartments and sometimes even in their own family home. Few people go to see them and they have no money to get out and be a part of society. They suffer discrimination not only because they are old but also because they are women. Most of them do not have the Canada Pension Plan, nor do they have coverage from private pensions. Those who are married live longer than their husbands. Many of them, if not most of them over the age of 65, are alone and have only one old age pension with which to pay all the costs of living. It is much easier for two people to stretch the pension cheque.

We believe this Bill is particularly unfair to older women. Most older women are in this marginal group, not poor enough in Government terms, to have GIS, but, God knows, in reality they are poor, and they do not have enough income to cover their cost of living.

What are we doing if this Bill passes, which it will because of the Liberal majority? We are telling the older pensioners, most of whom are women, that they do not deserve full indexing, even though it had been promised them in past legislation.

I appeal to the Government to reconsider this Bill in its last stages. It dishonours elderly people: we have heard other Members say that. We are so proud of the older people who have given so much to Canada. We all know families—our own families, friends' families, and so on—who have had members go through two wars and have lost members of their family. All of them have suffered the struggles of life during the depression. They gave up full indexing during the depression. They did not have enough to live on in those days. They cut their costs and they made over old clothes. They struggled to raise families. They should not have to be faced with this situation now they are in their later years.

As we have all said, our senior citizens are the people who have contributed their labour to Canada. They own a share of the resources of this country. They raised families. They contributed leadership. They deserve a full pension with full indexing.

I would like to remind the Government that we oppose this Bill because it does not make financial sense. It takes away close to $400 from senior citizens because their pensions are being reduced, but it will do nothing to create jobs. I think the net saving is about $84 million, a very minimal amount of money when you consider how other expenditures are being allocated in our federal budget, Mr. Speaker. Dome alone was given $500 million. There are many other expenditures which could have been cut that would have created much less hardship for the people who are the victims of inflation and who are now being made the victims of the Government's restraint program.

Finally, we oppose this Bill because we strongly believe, as do many of the groups who presented briefs to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, that the Bill represents a means of eroding the universality of social programs. In this case, it is old age pensions. We believe this to be the case no matter how strongly the Minister denies it. This is a regressive measure.

We know that the Liberal Cabinet, the Minister of Finance in particular, tried very hard last summer to do away with universal old age pensions and Family Allowances. I would remind those Hon. Members opposite that it was Liberals across the country who protested very strongly against the erosion of universality.

We believe that fully indexed pensions are a right. If indexing is removed, the universal concept of old age pensions is removed. It represents the erosion of a basic social program and right which this Party fought so very hard to introduce. We will fight just as hard to oppose a reduction in indexation. Pensions must be indexed to the real cost of living.

The Conservatives have been very hypocritical if one recalls what they said about reductions to workers' wages. If they feel strongly about this Bill, let them relinquish part of their wages to back up one of their arguments for Bill C-124, for example.

We believe that this Bill represents bad politics. As I have said, Liberal supporters across the country have gone on record as saying that they want universality and fully protected pensions and Family Allowances. We disagree with this Bill in principle, but may I remind Liberal Members that pensioners are voters. We are not opposing this Bill simply to be pragmatic and solicit votes, but let the pragmatic Liberals remember that many voters are pensioners. We will do our best to remind those pensioners in two years, or when the next election comes about, that it was the Liberals who cut back old age pensions. Undoubtedly, the Government will offer something to the pensioners to gain their vote shortly before the election but the pensioners will remember and will be reminded that they cannot be used as symbols in a restraint program or flattered with pre-election goodies.

In the time I have remaining I would like to refer to briefs that were presented by a number of organizations to the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs during its debate on this Bill. Time only permits a brief excerpt from these presentations but it is important to put them on the record. I would urge those who are concerned about this Bill not just to take the word of the NDP but also to consider the views of many credible organizations that have experience in social policies. These groups include pensioners' organizations who are certainly experts on the question of pensions and the needs of the elderly in Canada, as well as groups that represent Canadian women.

I would first like to refer to a brief from the National Council on Welfare dated July, 1982:

> Many elderly men and women who live at or just above the poverty line will be hurt by the Government's restraint program. A single pensioner with a total income of as low as $9,200—more than $500 below the poverty line for large urban centres—will sacrifice about $55, just the same as someone living on affluent income.

In other words, those who earn high incomes will receive the same cut in indexing as those with marginal incomes. The brief went on to say that over 100,000 poor and near poor elderly Canadians will suffer.

On December 9, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women said that they—> —condemned the federal Government for limiting the cost of living indexation of Family Allowances and old age pensions. The two Liberal ceilings on indexation Bills do not improve the system but simply try to take advantage of the vulnerability of women and old people. Those most affected by Bill C-131 are the near poor elderly whose income is just a little too high to entitle them to the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women said on December 13:

> Women are facing a reduction of 3 per cent to 5 per cent in the real value of Family Allowance and pensions. It is difficult to understand how indexing pensions below the level of need meets the objectives of the green paper on pension reform, which states that elderly Canadians should be guaranteed a minimum level of income. The recent Report of the Auditor General suggests that there may be other means of reducing Government spending.

We know what those means are. They would certainly be a higher restraint priority in the opinion of our Party.

On December 14 the Canadian Labour Council said:

> Bill C-131 is extremely unjust because it is a tax that falls solely on people over 65, most of whom are people of modest means. Nothing is being said about tax exemptions for the elderly which actually provide benefits that increase with the taxable income—

The National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation felt that there should be full indexing and pensions above the poverty line.

The Canadian Council on Retirees strongly object to restraint programs which force pensioners to give up part of their pension increase and strongly oppose the attack on universality.

All of these organizations and many more have said that this Bill is poor, unjust and denies the promises that were made to senior citizens in pension policies that were adopted by the Liberal Government and the House of Commons. Those policies provided that there must be full indexing. This Bill is in conflict with those policies. Senior citizens in Canada today suffer the most from the high cost of living.

Bill C-131 is particularly hard on women pensioners who are very poor. Many of them have lived on one pension for many years and are trying to stretch their earnings to meet the cost of living.

This Bill erodes the whole concept of universality. I would urge the Minister to reflect upon her statements during the last days of debate on this Bill and to try to live up to her reputation, which I am afraid she is losing, of being concerned about elderly Canadians and women. Of course, we will continue to oppose Bill C-131 as long as we can, for all the reasons I have mentioned.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I heard the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) say that the Conservatives were fighting this Bill on some kind of compassionate grounds, as if we had to be nice to the old folks—I believe those were her words. I want to tell the Hon. Member that I am participating in this debate, as so many of my colleagues are, out of a sense of outrage over the injustice that is being perpetrated against senior citizens, not out of any misplaced sense of compassion or something left over from Sunday morning.

I say that the Government is playing with a type of economic yo-yo, using the senior citizens of our country. When the Liberals spin the wheel and want a little bit of political popularity coming into the election, they will promise senior citizens something; but when they spin the wheel again and ask where they can find a few bucks—in this case, a few lousy bucks, given the outrageous expenses of the federal Government and the $23 billion deficit—their first targets are senior citizens, who are vulnerable and defenceless except for the people in the House who stand and fight this type of outrageous legislation from the viewpoint of injustice, not simply compassion.

I want the Hon. Member for Vancouver East to hear me on this matter. I feel just as strongly about the outrage over the problems facing women, especially those over the age of 65. I have gone door-to-door through Edmonton South, supposedly one of the better areas of Canada, but where all kinds of senior citizens, particularly women, are living just inside the margin of poverty. That is just an absolute outrage and a scandal. It is also a scandal that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), with whom we are trying to communicate in this debate, does not even take the courtesy to listen to what is being said.

I wonder what is the real purpose of Parliament, the purpose of debate and the purpose of the new rules. It was really amazing to me that when the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) proposed an amendment that this Bill be hoisted for six months, setting out his very serious argument, it was as though it was sort of pro forma. We are trying to communicate to the people of Canada that this Party deeply cares about senior citizens, and we want this injustice which is being perpetrated against them to be given six months' study. What is unreasonable about that?

I fully support the Hon. Member in his challenge to see, at six o'clock tonight, how many Hon. Members opposite feel that an injustice is being perpetrated on our senior citizens, who are being asked to carry an unfair burden in the fight against inflation.

I want to deal with some of the arguments put forward by the Minister. I believe she has not really challenged our fundamental objections to Bill C-131. I even wonder how much heart she has herself in carrying forward the Government's intention of pushing this Bill through by the unholy use of closure once again. It is not good enough that the Liberals will not accept more time for study; they cut off debate in the House of Commons when Hon. Members are trying to speak for those of our citizens who need us the most. It is an absolute outrage. They are breaking a commitment to the senior citizens of this country. The Government has not justified the real hardship—

Mr. Parker: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Roche: —which Bill C-131 will create for many senior citizens.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kootenay East-Revelstoke (Mr. Parker) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Parker: I would like to make a point of clarifying the fact that we do support the amendment; the Hon. Member has indicated that we do not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that that is not a point of order.

Mr. Roche: I am certainly pleased that the NDP will support this amendment. I wish on other occasions, when there were votes of critical importance to the future of this country, that the NDP had taken such an attitude of support for solid principles of legislation. I have certain memorable votes of the NDP in mind when I make that comment.

The problem which this Bill poses for the principle of universality and social security has not yet been addressed. When weighed against the fundamental concerns now being presented by myself and my Party, one finds that the Government has only offered, once again, the hollow plea of six and five and has even been unable to give evidence that there will be substantive savings in Government expenditure should the Bill pass.

My most important objection to Bill C-131 is that it breaks an undertaking given to citizens of Canada, in this case the segment of the population which is the most vulnerable. It is certainly not a matter of violating a written agreement, as was the case with Public Service pensions in Bill C-133. In this case it is a question of reneging on a social contract. The Minister of National Health and Welfare herself made this point when she opened the debate on the Bill. At that time she said:

> There is a social contract, as it were, that guarantees a basic pension for everyone.

I also cited the Minister in my remarks two days ago. She said that the Government "had no intention of changing the rules of the game", and that it would "maintain indexing of the Old Age Security pension". As late as November 4, the Minister claimed:

> All social programs, that means in particular pensions and benefits for children, will remain as they are.

Why? The Minister then reassured:

> People are in the middle of an economic crisis and they need stability.

Breaking a trust and taking money from people's pockets certainly does not promote this stability to which the Minister paid lip service. On this theme, I wish to quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Speaking last April at the National Pension Conference, he stated:

> Put simply, people must be protected in their retirement years. The Canadian Government has pledged that they will be better protected in the future than they are now. Pensions which are not protected against inflation naturally tend to dwindle over the years. People who thought they had purchased protection for the rest of their lives find they face more serious financial problems the older they become.

I ask Your Honour, in view of this Bill, which is hurtling through its final hours in the House, how are the senior citizens of this country to have faith in the Prime Minister's word?

What is doubly galling is the fact that in so breaking its obligations to the elderly of this country, the Government would somehow like us to believe that its actions are not arbitrary, not unilateral. Again citing the Minister of National Health and Welfare, her Government is "asking 1.1 million pensioners to help lead the way in the fight against inflation". She asserted that she was "very conscious of the sacrifice we are asking", to use the Minister's words.

It is preposterous to suggest that pensioners have, in any way, shape or form, been "asked", for Bill C-131 dictates to the elderly that Old Age Security is no longer inflation-proof. As if that were not bad enough, the Government rams closure through the House in order to get the Bill passed. It is fortunate that the Government agreed to spare the poorest of pensioners this decrease in indexation by making up the loss in Old Age Security benefits through the annual Guaranteed Income Supplement, which continues, thankfully, to rise with the cost of living. However, by placing greater emphasis on the income-tested GIS, this measure threatens the cardinal principle of universality. To a greater extent, the elderly will be burdened with the welfare stigma associated with GIS, playing down the universality of OAS or a Government pension as a right. This manoeuvre, moreover, would seem to increase the administrative complexity of the entire pension question.

My next major point concerns the hardship which Bill C-131 would create for the 1.1 million pensioners who are not covered by the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Estimates are that this Bill will cost them approximately $290 each over 1983 and 1984, or about $12 a month. According to the National Council on Welfare, about 100,000 pensioners are classified as poor or near poor among these 1.1 million, those single recipients of Old Age Security with incomes between $9,000 and $10,000 annually who do not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement; or, similarly, couples with incomes of $15,000 or $16,000 who are not receiving the GIS.

The Government is fighting inflation on the backs of those who can least afford it. It is singling out the elderly in an effort to extricate itself from the problems caused by its own economic mismanagement. The Bill cuts back on the Government's moral obligation to aid senior citizens. They have left the work force; unlike working people, they are thus unable to recoup their losses and bargain with their employers to offset inflation.

By assaulting those pensioners who border on the poverty line but, because of supplementary incomes, do not qualify for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, the Government is effectively punishing those who were able or wise enough to practise the virtues of thrift and planning. That is not to denigrate senior citizens who are compelled to rely exclusively on OAS and GIS; rather, I am arguing for some consideration toward those who, through their own devices, are now being penalized for living just above the poverty line.

There is a further inequity in Bill C-131, as there is in Bills C-132 and C-133. Single pensioners with incomes of $9,000 lose $290 in the next two years, but a family with two children on an income of $27,000 will lose less than $50 over the course of the much vaunted six and five program. A single elderly widow who has to live on $9,000 a year thus sacrifices six times as much as family with an income of $27,000 annually. This is not to say that the Government should squeeze the latter any more than it is already doing, but it should get its priorities in order. Bill C-131 perpetrates that sense of injustice.

Much has been made by the Government of the allegedly temporary nature of this Draconian measure. But if and when indexing is reintroduced in 1985, the computation for OAS will be on a lower base than it would have been had full indexing been adhered to over these two years. Therefore, pensioners are to suffer a permanent reduction in the amount of OAS benefit. Unlike the public servants who were nailed under Bill C-133, these senior citizens cannot return to the bargaining table to make up that amount. In short, Mr. Speaker, the gamesmanship of six and five simply cannot justify the economic hardship that Bill C-131 will wreak among the elderly.

I want to mention again the door-to-door canvassing of my constituency which I undertook last September. Pensioner after pensioner expressed fear of continually rising prices, and said how even a cutback of $12 monthly would make a significant difference in coping with the grim realities of day-to-day life. Rents, food and the cost of everything that pensioners buy, go up. I do not think it is right for a Government that spends $100 million on advertising its own Departments to expect pensioners to bear the burden of the ever-rising deficit. Fully 62.5 per cent of my constituents who responded to a questionnaire believed that benefits to the elderly should be increased rather than decreased. The very people this Bill is now victimizing are the survivors of the great depression and two world wars; surely it is time that their struggle ended.

Another point which I wish to make is that this unjust and immoral measure will effectively bring few returns to the Government, for all the fuss it is making. Estimates from the Department of National Health and Welfare show that capping OAS will save about $31 million in 1983. Mr. Speaker, what is that against a projected budget deficit of $23 billion for this year? Let us look at other areas where we can cut Government waste; for instance, the Government will spend three times more on advertising its programs this year than it will save by putting the burden of inflation on the backs of the elderly of this country.

In addition, Bill C-131 really reflects a lack of confidence on the part of the Government in its own six and five program. If inflation truly does drop to the targets of 6 and 5 per cent, then this Bill will be totally unnecessary as OAS benefits will be indexed to these levels in any event. But if inflation is really substantial, then Bill C-131 is a monstrosity, for it will take income away from senior citizens right when they need it most. If the Government is so optimistic that it has the answers to the problem of inflation, then why does it want a Bill to do what its six and five program is touted to do?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am appalled at the Government's use of closure and what I expect to be its automatic rejection of the amendment offered by the Hon. Member for Calgary West. The Bill breaks trust, it creates hardship and it is an ad hoc response to a fundamental issue facing our society. We should have spent the time we have given to this debate discussing instead a program that the Government could bring forth to deal with the "greying" of Canada. Surely it is evident that in future a greater proportion of our population will be over the age of 65. This will present a great social problem and a challenge, as it will be necessary to change many aspects of our society. We must not only deal with the elderly but we must draw on their experience for the benefit of the whole of society, not treat them as cast-offs waiting to draw their last breath.

I shall present a motion on a comprehensive program for aging under Private Members' Motions when the new session of Parliament begins—if that ever comes about. This session seems to be going on interminably and is doing damage to Canada.

I want to address the crucial question of a comprehensive program for aging because I believe we are going to have to pay some very serious attention to ways of increasing the number of residences for senior citizens. We must also make more home support available to senior citizens. They want nothing more than to be able to stay in the homes they have had for years and have probably paid for. They may not need a great amount of money to live on but do need some support in the years left to them.

I should also like to see more support for cultural activities for senior citizens, and I should like them to have the opportunity to engage in voluntary and community work. There is an enrichment of society there upon which all of us can draw. It is wrong to think that because someone is over 65 they cannot make a contribution to society.

I could talk for a long time about the number of famous people in history such as Schweitzer, Churchill, Pope John XXIII and any number of composers and artists who made great contributions in their fields and to humanity after they reached the age of 65. There will be an opportunity for more of that in the future because of the greying of our society. We do not want just to tolerate senior citizens or treat them as whipping boys. We must treat senior citizens as an integral part of society, recognizing in this new technological age that they can make greater contributions to our society if only we treat them decently and provide them with the basic level of support and services that they need.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Does the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) stand to be recognized for debate or for questioning?

Mr. Stewart: For debate, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for debate.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand and oppose Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act. Once again, with obvious predictability, this Government has chosen to invoke closure with respect to a debate over an issue which is in strong dispute. Repeatedly, and with good reason, this Government has been described as arrogant. The word "arrogant" as we all know, means overbearing, presumptuous and haughty. The arrogance of this Government is reflected in almost every move it makes, every pronouncement it utters and every attitude it conveys. Now, its disdain for our senior citizens is shown by allowing only 17 hours of debate on this most important Bill and only four sessions to hear witnesses.

Nowhere and under no circumstances does this arrogance assume more dangerous proportions than when it seems to achieve a dismissal of the established democratic rights of this House, and by natural extension the rights of Canadians, whom we all represent, particularly, of course, our senior citizens. This Bill abrogates a responsibility to those seniors who have an unwritten contract, as the Minister herself stated. The only factor in the whole pension scheme, in my view, which bears scrutiny is the universality aspect relating to the top echelon of the income scale.

What are the savings in this Bill? Perhaps some $30 million. I would like to take a minute to examine some of the waste of this Government and put it in perspective with regard to what it is willing to do to the seniors in the name of saving. How much did we waste in Haiti to pay left-wing dictatorships and their lackeys? Some $25 million. How much did we waste on the Unity Office? Perhaps $50 million. Then there was the advertising of the Constitution; loans to left-wing nations. Michael Manley got a $90-million loan, $10 million of it forgivable. Will we ever recover it? What about loans to left-wing nations at no interest or very little interest over terms of 20 to 50 years in the amount of hundreds of millions of dollars?

On the metric office, it spent perhaps $25 million. We have losing Crown corporations, dozens of them. According to the Auditor General's Report, most of them are absolutely and totally unaudited, operating on their own under the cloak of Government. Canadair alone owes this Government $1.5 billion. What is the tab for enforced bilingualism? It is $441 million. Their answer is to penalize the senior citizens of this great Canada of ours.

To invoke closure of debate on this Bill is to say to Members of this House and to their constituents that the Government has no interest in or regard for the opinions and needs of others. By invoking closure the Government is saying to us, to all Canadians, that what we want and what we feel is necessary in our lives is of no importance whatsoever.

By invoking closure the Government is saying: "We will decide what is best for you. We will make these important decisions for you. We are not interested in what you think, even if we waste millions of dollars on programs which are distasteful"—ones which my constituents do not want. By invoking closure, the Government is once again replacing democracy with dictatorship, a situation which I have spoken about in this House before and a situation which I regard with anger and distaste. I submit my outrage is justified, as is that of many Canadians who support that position.

Prior to this particular invocation of closure, there have been 14 times during this session of Parliament when this Government limited debate on issues before this House. As my colleague just mentioned, thank Heaven when it is over. On 12 occasions the Government has imposed time allocation, which we are now under, which is just a fancy word for closure; and on two others it resorted to outright closure in its true meaning. These were 14 actual instances when the Government was successful in imposing its dictatorial will.

There were other times when the Government attempted to invoke closure and was blocked, most recently when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) sought to whisk his controversial and disastrous Canagrex Bill through the House. The Hon. Member to my right presented a petition on behalf of his constituents only yesterday decrying this injustice. What will Canagrex do? It will give the Government the power to buy and sell all agricultural products in Canada. The word for that, which I learned in my reading of Marx, is communization. It will cost more millions with another Crown corporation in place.

By invoking closure, the Government quite clearly reveals its lack of regard and respect for the Members of this House and, I repeat, for the people we represent, particularly our seniors. I might add briefly that this disrespect and disregard is further amplified by the Government's use of Orders in Council. This Government, much to its dismay, must present certain items of legislation to Parliament for examination, scrutiny and debate. That is our role on this side of the House, for the time being.

This Government, much to its dismay again, obviously finds the process of scrutiny distasteful. To have its destructive policies and its shallow reasoning subject to public scrutiny is an obvious irritant to this Government. It is much more simple and less embarrassing for this Government to pass Orders in Council whenever possible. How simple and, as I stated at the beginning, how arrogant! This arrogance is supported by fact. Since this Government was returned to office in 1980, it has passed a total of 11,345 Orders in Council, some 4,062 in 1982 alone.

What has been created by this by-passing of Parliament? A total loss of credibility, a total loss of confidence, people not knowing whether they can trust their banks or trust companies; and now contracts with senior citizens are broken. What it amounts to is a pox on the house of our senior citizens, particularly older women, many of whom have been on the low-wage scale all their lives or have received no wages whatsoever. We all know what the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) thinks of the spousal allowance and women volunteers. As my colleague who spoke before me mentioned, women have a great role to play in the voluntary sector of the country, particularly senior citizens.

Let us look at this Order in Council nonsense. There is VIA Rail, the beginning of the end of passenger rail service in this country. How many senior citizens wrote to me about the cancellation of the commuter train in the riding of Simcoe South? Literally dozens. It was their only mode of transportation to and from the city of Toronto.

The emergency planning order, arbitrary and far-reaching powers for a Government in a nebulous or manufactured emergency, included provisions, if anyone in this country could believe it, for the creation of civilian internment camps. I hope that right-wing senior citizens are not the first on the list.

There has been an increase in the cost of our postal service, another item that is very inflationary. It causes the seniors undue hardship. There has been no regard for a corresponding improvement in the postal service. There has been the imposition of mandatory metric weights and measures, costly and controversial to say the least. I am proud to join 36 other Members on this side of the House in the opening of a service station to give people that freedom of choice. The issue is not metric; the issue is freedom of choice. The issue is no Orders in Council.

Orders in Council also provided for the pension benefits of Senator Pitfield and a handsome salary for the former Deputy Minister of Finance, Ian Stewart—I wish he spelled his name differently—while he looks for a new job.

What about the $200,000 to Ed Clark to languish on the Riviera while he becomes bilingual? He is one of the authors of the National Energy Program which is so disastrous to this country. What did he write his thesis on? If we are not talking about left-wing, then why was it on the Government of Tanzania? He is one of the people who is putting national energy programs in place for free enterprise Canadians.

Then there was the $70,000 to Mrs. Susan Warner in the Barrie office of Health and Welfare for language training in Toronto. Certainly that is required! They would not get one telephone call in French in a month. Waste, waste. Spend, spend. And now at whose expense? At the expense of our seniors who, the Minister admits, have a social contract with her Government. Most particularly it is at the expense of pensioners, who cannot recover lost income. They are in a fixed position, but they have to pay increases in costs for food, clothing and accommodation.

When this Government is ashamed of something it does, it does it secretly without reference to Parliament or to the people particularly, the over one million pensioners. When the Government has to go public, it uses every means available to limit and minimize debate and scrutiny. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, if it was at all possible, that this Government would have passed an Order in Council to limit senior citizens' pensions this year and next, and who knows when, if they could get away with it.

The ridiculous part of it is that none of this would have been necessary if pension funds in Canada had been put into a separate account, had been actuarially sound, had the Government backed them, and had free enterprise been allowed to invest in them. We would have had so much money in the pension accounts in Canada that we would not have had to lie to the people, to let them think there was a separate account, to let them think that they were forever safe from an encroachment on their pension. Bill C-133 also would not have been necessary in that case either. This act of Government is something it should be ashamed of and undoubtedly is the reason why, because it has to go public, it has now invoked closure on debate. I might add there are many more reasons why it would not have been necessary.

Why 14 years ago was this Government not looking at the economic crisis which was coming up? Why was it that Germany and Japan foresaw what was going to happen and really did something about it in their economic planning, in their research and development programs? Canada is now ranked 24th of 24 by the OECD in terms of economic growth, and I quote:

> The OECD estimates that in 1982 the countries listed below economically grew at a faster rate than Canada.

The OECD goes on to list the countries. So we cannot blame it on the anchovies of Peru, or the penguins of the Antarctic, or the foxes of somewhere else, or on Mr. Reagan, because the countries listed are countries such as Belgium, Finland, Greece, Iceland, Luxembourg, The Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Turkey. We are behind those countries. We are 24th out of 24 and I do not think you can blame that on world inflation.

Of the OECD's top seven countries, Canada ranks second in the unemployment rate, second only to the United Kingdom by half a percentage point. We all know what happened to the United Kingdom the minute it embraced socialism: it has gone downhill ever since. We are falling into the same trap because of the Government across the way, which believes it is much easier to start any kind of uphill fight on the backs of our pensioners. Canada is the only OECD country of the top ten in which industrial productivity has decreased. Who are we going to blame that on?

An Hon. Member: Do you know why?

Mr. Stewart: I know why—because of 14 years of totally inept Government planning. If we were putting the money in R and D, everyone knows what it would do; even one-half of 1 per cent would provide some 400,000 jobs. Everyone knows the success of the Mitels of this world. But what do we do? We throw money at all kinds of make-work projects which will do nothing but further increase inflation and, for heaven sakes, we put it on the backs of the pensioners!

Perhaps it might be appropriate at this time to underscore and identify more clearly the nature of the shame involved, as the Hon. Member just said. The Minister of National Health and Welfare when speaking to the House on the Bill before us said she was doing the senior citizens a favour by arbitrarily enlisting them in the Government's sloppy battle against inflation. Some favour! It is like saying to someone who has just been the victim of a pickpocket: "Well, now at least your pants won't bag"; or telling the victim of a purse snatcher that a weight has been taken off her shoulder. Such reasoning defies logic. Such reasoning defies credibility when we are only saving $31 million, with a deficit like we have. Yet such reasoning is absolutely and totally typical of this Government. To offer such shameful reasoning to a particularly important segment of our society, believe me, Mr. Speaker, is without precedent.

The importance of our senior citizens, our deep regard for what they have done and continue to do, is perhaps the basic reason I find this Bill so shameful. Senior citizens are not old age people; they are Canadians over a certain age who have a lot more to contribute. I do not think we should forget the quotation; "Honour thy father and thy mother, that their days may be long". That is something this Government should take a long, hard look at, especially now when they are taxing somebody extra for being over 65. Canada did not spring full blown from the forehead of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), much as he would like to take credit for that creation, too. How do you suppose our senior citizens feel now about the Charter of Human Rights? How much confidence do they have now in the people across the way?

Canada grew, developed and prospered over the past 116 years solely through the efforts of its citizens. Many of those citizens who hewed, harrowed, hallowed and clawed their way through the depression years know what the real cost and sacrifice is of being a Canadian. They have never complained, so why should we hit them first? Canadian citizens in every walk of life work hard and with diligence to create a better environment for themselves and for future generations. Those contributions were made in the home, in the marketplace and on many occasions on the field of battle, and I know we are all proud of the distinction with which they served in preserving the right of freedom which we stand in this House and champion.

Each new generation, understanding and appreciating these efforts, applied themselves with equal enthusiasm and sense of purpose, but this is being eroded by this Bill. The growth of our nation and our advancement as a society has been the result of all that hard work and diligence. Our acknowledgement, gratitude and respect for such services from our seniors should be without question. There should be no doubt of our ability to assume the continuing task without asking those who have given so much to give yet more, or to be hurt in any way. Yet through this Bill, the Government is doing just that, except with respect to the top scale of those receiving the old age pension. This year and next, and knowing this Government likely in the years to follow, the very pension we offer our senior citizens could well be reduced again by the simple means of an Order in Council, or by bringing some measure in and attaching closure to it.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare has said that it would only be a 50-cent reduction. Fifty cents more for the Government to waste with its profligate spending. Fifty cents to give away to anyone, but not to our senior citizens, one of our most important commodities. Fifty cents! Is that not marvellous? The Minister is telling us that this stupid act of disrespect is for 50 cents. For shame!

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my friend, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), a question about part of his speech. He began by illustrating other areas in which Canada has lost money, and one of the places he mentioned was a project with respect to the left-wing Government of Haiti. The Government of Haiti, I believe, is considered by most Governments in the world as being probably the most right-wing Government there is under President Duvalier. I would just like to know now how far the Hon. Member feels he is right of the left-wing Government of Duvalier.

• (1300)

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend and colleague for the question. I would like to apologize; that was a slip of the tongue. Of course, it is a totally ultra right-wing Government, and that is as totally bad as a left-wing Government. I apologize.

An Hon. Member: Fascism and communism.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Kelly) on a question.

Mr. Kelly: Mr. Speaker, I am rising to participate in the debate rather than to ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the first thing is perhaps we ought to look at the clock. With that in mind, there are Hon. Members who wish to rise on questions and answers, so I would expect and hope to see them at two o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

EFFECTS OF BIG PINE MILITARY EXERCISE

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, since the first of February, American and Honduran forces have been holding large-scale joint military manoeuvres in Honduras, less than 20 kilometers from the Nicaraguan border. This military exercise, called Big Pine, is the largest one ever organized in Honduras by the U.S. army. About 1,600 American soldiers are participating with some 5,000 members of the Honduran forces. These manoeuvres are being held at a time when relations between the U.S. and Nicaraguan governments are particularly tense, and their aim is to intimidate and destabilize the Sandinist regime.

It is my feeling that at a time when the Canadian Government is engaged in reviewing its relations with Latin American countries, it should make known its disapproval of manoeuvres which constitute dangerous provocation and may bring about a tragic clash of military forces in this part of our hemisphere. I would therefore ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) to give public expression to our indignation in a communication to the Pentagon.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN ROLE IN CONFERENCE ON SECURITY AND CO-OPERATION

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan-Similkameen): Madam Speaker, recent demonstrations by Canadians show three citizen concerns—the build-up of arms and instruments of mass destruction, unemployment, and support for the world's oppressed. In view of these anxieties, why does the effective role played by Canada in the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe receive so little attention by Canada's media when that Conference holds possibility of progress in all three of these areas—in easing international tensions through dialogue and negotiation of confidence-building measures, in producing new employment by reducing barriers to trade, and in progress in human rights leading to freedom from oppression for such people as Anatoly Shcharansky, whose hunger strike has so possessed the souls of Canadians? Despite the apparent lack of progress in two years of the Conference, one believes that world opinion will bear heavily on those responsible behind the Iron Curtain.

I urge an interest by parliamentarians and the press in keeping before Canadians the significant possibilities which exist for our good through the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe at which Canada will undertake a major responsibility when it reconvenes in Madrid next Monday, February 7.

TRANSPORT

EFFECT OF NEW POLICY ON WESTERN FEED GRAINS—ANXIETIES OF QUEBEC FARMERS

Mr. Rolland Dion (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, on Tuesday the Canadian Government announced a new western grain transportation policy. It seems that the announcement has raised a number of questions among Quebec farmers regarding the survival of the agro-food industry in that province. I would like to take this opportunity to recall that the policy statement includes a number of measures aimed at ensuring that there will be no adverse effects for agriculture in Quebec. First of all, there will be a four- and not a seven-year plan; the Livestock Feed Board of Canada is to set up a mechanism to monitor the effects of this transportation policy; and a task force will be set up to determine a fair and non-discriminatory payment system for Eastern Canada. There is also the assurance that the price of grain in Eastern Canada will not be affected by the new policy; that Quebec's diversity of supply will be maintained; that any additional payments to western producers will require the passage of legislation; and that a study will be carried out by the railways in Eastern Canada to explore ways of improving transportation for agricultural products from Eastern Canada.

Therefore, claims that the Government of Canada will be spending $3 billion on developing agriculture in the West are just not true. I may remind the House that the purpose of this policy is not to improve agriculture but to improve the transportation of agricultural products in Western Canada.

PORTS

CALL FOR INCREASED UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, at the present time several Ministers of the Crown are in various parts of Canada holding news conferences and meetings, publicizing planned changes in the Crow rate and the expenditure of several billions of dollars to modernize the railway transport system.

The Port of Churchill is an integral part of our transportation system, yet the Government has totally ignored it in its proposals. The Port has never been used to capacity and has a potential which has never been exploited. With the new proposed freight rate structure, the cost savings of using Churchill will be much more substantial than they are now. Increased capacity and utilization would greatly assist in movement of the projected 30 million plus tonnes of export grain, and relieve some of the bottlenecks in the system. As well, it would mean lower costs for goods imported to western Canada from Europe.

While I realize there are certain problems because of permafrost and ice, I suggest that these problems are not insurmountable. Techniques involved in constructing the Alaska Gas Pipeline, and reinforced hulls developed for Arctic shipping, should be considered.

If the Government is serious about modernizing our transportation system and developing industry in the West, I would suggest that it spend some of its funds now for Churchill.

RAILWAYS

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN GOVERNMENT EQUITY

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the New Democratic Party supports the development, modernization and expansion of railways for the benefit of all Canadians. The New Democratic Party recognizes the direct effect on the economy which such expenditure will have through jobs in the steel industry and railroad communities across Canada.

Western grain producers will appreciate the possible effects that such upgrading of railways will have on the movement of grain. This upgrading process is long overdue and has been neglected by the railways and the Government. In fact the movement has been the other way—to downgrade and abandon rather than to improve.

The New Democratic Party welcomes this change in Government policy and hopes that the Government has enough business sense to ensure that the Canadian people will gain equity in the railways for the tax dollars spent.

The New Democratic Party does not agree with the removal of millions of dollars of income from western grain farmers by changing the freight rate, the Crow rate, which farmers have to pay. For every dollar that a farmer earns, there is a multiplier effect of $6 or $7 across the country. A billion dollars, which farmers will have to spend on freight, will amount to $7 billion being diverted from the machinery industry, the fertilizer industry, the petro industry, the chemical industry, the food processing industry, and the retailing industry.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES—ADVANTAGES FOR QUEBEC

Mr. André Maltais (Manicouagan): Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Government on revising the Crow rate, in view of the considerable changes this will bring about in the transportation field. The people of the North Shore are especially pleased, because the mining industry can be expected to take advantage of these changes to build new railways and renovate existing railway lines. Grain handling facilities in the Ports of Quebec City, Montreal, Baie Comeau, Port Cartier, Chicoutimi, and probably Sept-Îles as well, will also benefit. In the debate on the changes in the Crow rate, it would perhaps be useful to point out to the people of Quebec that substantial benefits in the field of grain processing and transportation will accrue to the entire province.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER PROVIDE PROGRESS REPORTS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell) has been questioned and pressed to make statements and give progress reports regarding matters dealing with veterans, yet he chooses to remain silent. The Minister says little, and does less, as though all were well and rosy within the Department. He has been asked about the length of time taken in processing veterans' pension applications, the aging veterans programs, Indian war veterans, Hong Kong veterans, War Veterans Allowance, compensation for prisoners of war, the implementation of recommendations by the United Veterans' Association and Committees, such as the Woods Committee and the Senate Committee on Health, Welfare and Science report entitled, "They Served, We Care". Still the minister does not inform us of the action he plans to take.

Just recently two of my colleagues questioned the Minister regarding ongoing problems veterans have been facing for years, yet we hear evasive answers, and no accomplishments are made. The Minister is contacted both in and outside the House and in Committee, in an attempt to have him reveal the developments in progress to better the conditions for veterans, but to no avail. These matters have been raised in the Senate, and still nothing is done.

The patience of my colleagues, of myself and, most important, of the veterans of Canada, is wearing thin. We want to know what the Minister is doing. We want to hear the plans he has made, the action he is taking, and we want the Minister to provide progress reports on his so-called investigations through motions in the House.

ABORTION

LEGISLATION SOUGHT TO DEFEND UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, it is a serious matter of concern that Dr. Henry Morgantaler is attempting to open abortion clinics in Toronto and Winnipeg. While the Attorney General for Manitoba has turned down a request from Morgantaler for immunity from prosecution, and the Attorney General for Ontario has threatened prosecution if Section 251 of the Criminal Code is not complied with, it must be remembered that Morgantaler blatantly violated and continues to violate this Section of the Code in Quebec. The Attorney General of that Province has determined—and I think wrongly so—that, based upon the previous Morgantaler experience in Quebec, it is unlikely that a conviction could be achieved under present federal legislation.

• (1410)

Since the Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides the framework within which we, as Parliamentarians, can legislate on matters concerning abortion, and since amendments to the legislation are desperately needed if we intend to curtail the number of innocent unborn Canadians who die each year as a result of abortion, we must act now to ameliorate this deteriorating situation. Our unborn children are a very precious resource to this country.

NECESSITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the farming industry in Canada, especially the red meat producers' section, has been experiencing some very difficult financial times. In 1982 some 410 producers were forced into bankruptcy, a number that is growing. Despite the recent lower interest rates, this has not eased the pressure on those concerned. To assist them better, the reactivation of the 1935 Farmers'

Creditors Arrangement Act would be a move in the right direction. This would allow a farmer facing bankruptcy to make a proposal to his creditors to save his farm by adopting an alternate refinancing plan approved by a court.

For those farmers and others in dire straits, the use of agri-bonds through the Farm Credit Corporation should be approved. This would make available low interest loans over an extended period of time.

Agriculture is the most important industry in Canada today because more than 40 per cent of all direct and indirect jobs can be attributed to agriculture. It is my belief that everything possible must be done to maintain a viable and healthy agricultural industry, and to encourage and to motivate our producers. Therefore, I believe it is incumbent on the federal Government to play an even more active role to assist this very important industry by making it one of its top priorities. Hopefully this will be reflected in the new budget expected in a few weeks' time.

POLLUTION

DEMAND THAT GOVERNMENT DISCOURAGE USE OF LEADED GASOLINE

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, research has shown that lead pollution of the air we breath is a very serious matter. This poison could retard the brain development of thousands of Canadian children. Over the last few years we have been losing the war against this pollutant due to the attractiveness of low price leaded gasoline over unleaded gas.

The incredible increase in the price spread between leaded and unleaded gas is forcing budget-conscious consumers to substitute polluting leaded fuel even in vehicles built for the unleaded variety. In Ottawa, for example, the price spread has almost tripled in the last three years.

Today we learned that General Motors of Canada plans to reintroduce lead tolerant car to the marketplace in response to consumer demand and, according to Martin Rivers of Environment Canada, such a move would mean lead emission levels will "shoot right out the window."

I have brought this problem to the attention of the House and of the Government two or three times before. The Government knows that the increasing cost of unleaded gas is a result of tax policies and unacceptably high markups by oil companies so the companies can simultaneously increase profits and protect their investment in antiquated leaded gas refinery systems. The Government also knows that our lead emission standards are inferior to those in the U.S.

On behalf of the people of Canada I demand, that the Government stop enticing Canadians to defile our environment and use its taxation and regulatory powers to discourage a resurgence of leaded fuel use.

FOOD AND DRUGS

FOOD NUTRITION LABELLING—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to see that the Government is taking steps, through proposed changes in labelling, to provide consumers with increased amounts of useful information on the nutritional value of foods sold in Canada.

The advantages of a uniform and standardized system of nutrition labelling are clear: consumers, particularly those with food allergies or needing to monitor their intake of substances, such as sodium or sugar, will be able to make better informed choices as to the best food value for their dollar. Manufacturers who wish to promote the nutritional value of a product will be required to substantiate such claims by providing relevant information on the label.

The Government is allowing a 12-month period for discussion of these proposals and has invited the co-operation and participation of industry and of consumers. Some manufacturers will be test marketing the new system later this year, which will allow some experience with it.

The proposals for nutrition labelling have great potential to benefit consumers and industry. I hope that Canadians will use this opportunity to become acquainted with the proposals and their implications, and to make their views known.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

MINES AND MINING

COUNTRY'S INTERNATIONAL COMPETITIVE POSITION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Mines. She will know that industry spokesmen have stated that 50 per cent of Canada's mining work force is unemployed as a result of shutdowns and projected further shutdowns in the nickel, molybdenum, iron ore, coal and asbestos industries, with another 1,900 people to be laid off this Saturday from the Balmer mine in British Columbia. These 70,000 workers represent a payroll loss of some $2 billion annually. This all results, according to industry spokesmen, because of a loss of competitive position on world markets. What specific steps has the Minister of State for Mines taken to restore Canada to its traditional position as a world leader in mineral production?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I think, as the Hon. Member has indicated several times, that he considers himself to be a champion of the mineral industry. If he is indeed, then he should be rejoicing because the mineral industry, particularly the coal sector, has been crying for years for changes to the Crow rate.

Mr. Lewis: Did you hear the question?

Mrs. Erola: This should be a great moment of joy for the critic because he knows how important this is to the mineral industry in Canada over the long term. More specifically I would like to tell him that the price of nickel rose to $1.81 today, and that should be some cause for rejoicing as well.

Locally I would like to tell him that in the Province of Ontario, through Section 38, 110 projects have been created for people in the mining industry. As a matter of fact a number of others are under consideration right now. We are waiting for approval for programs in British Columbia and Ontario. This Government is doing a great deal for those unemployed miners.

Mr. Siddon: Madam Speaker, recourse to the Crow rate and make-work projects has little to do with Canada's declining competitive position internationally. These sorts of make-work projects outlined by the Minister amount to little more than trying to fight a forest fire with one leaky hose.

REASONS FOR DECLINE IN MINERAL PRODUCTION

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, will the Minister of State for Mines not admit that the taxation of northern benefits, the delay in federal aid to Yukon mines, and the many measures in the MacEachen budget which discouraged investment in mining exploration and development, are at the heart of Canada's current decline in mineral production? Why does the Government persist in implementing these negative measures which are destroying Canada's mining industry, and jobs for tens of thousands of Canadians?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): No, I will not admit that, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member for Richmond-South Delta is as aware as I am that the current difficulties of the mining industry in Canada are due to international markets, no more, no less.

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE ON PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, that being the case I would like to address my final supplementary to the Prime Minister.

It is known that Canada's declining international position in terms of mineral sales has to do with our lack of productivity. This decline is costing our resource industries and Canadians billions of dollars in lost income, and with it hundreds of thousands of jobs. Most experts agree that our declining industrial productivity is at the heart of this problem. Will the Prime Minister agree to establish immediately a task force on productivity improvement, with representation from business, labour, and government, so that new and permanent jobs can be found for the two million Canadians who are presently looking for work?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will discuss that representation with the Minister responsible for mines.

INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF TAX MEASURES ON MANUFACTURING

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In the third quarter of 1982 Canadian manufacturers were operating at their lowest level of capacity utilization since records were first kept in 1961. Two hundred and fourteen thousands jobs were lost in the manufacturing sector in Canada, of which 112,000 were in one Province, Ontario. This has occurred at a time when industry needs all the encouragement it can get. It needs increased cash flow to survive, and it needs to retool. Will the Minister revoke those provisions of the disastrous budget which discriminate against the manufacturing sector? For example, will he revoke the half year convention on capital cost allowance which, if maintained, will increase cash flow problems and further discourage capital investment, all of which adds up to jobs, jobs and more jobs being lost which are desperately needed in Canada today.

• (1420)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have had an opportunity to discuss all these issues with business in a series of consultations which I had throughout the country during the last few weeks. The sum of these consultations has been that the best way to provide for creating more jobs in Canada and to put our economy on the way to recovery is to give Canadian business a level of stability and certainty with respect to taxation. This, of course, means that the income tax measures now before the House must be passed as soon as possible. In fact, this legislation follows consultations and meetings held by a Parliamentary committee, which, after examining the legislation, proposed a number of amendments that have been accepted and are now part of the Bill.

As far as the business and particularly the manufacturing sector is concerned, the best thing this Parliament could do would be to pass, as soon as possible, the income tax legislation now being considered by Parliament.

[English]

Mr. McDermid: I get a great charge when the Minister talks about confidence in the country and passing a tax Bill which is disastrous and was brought in by his colleague sitting to the right of the Prime Minister. It was an absolute disaster. Now he wants us to pass it quickly to give stability to the Canadian economy. That is nonsense, and everyone knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

THE ECONOMY

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, will the Minister make a commitment today to the people of Canada that he will get off the socialist binge that the Government has been on for the last 14 years—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: —and bring in policies and a budget that will restore faith in the private sector so we can get the economy rolling again? Will he make that commitment to the people of Canada today?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member was not laughing when he was asking the question.

Mr. Broadbent: We were.

Mr. Lalonde: I cannot believe that he took it seriously. I want to remind him that the Income Tax measure that is before Parliament is the result of extensive consultations with all elements in our society. It is the result of extensive hearings that were held by a special parliamentary committee which made a number of recommendations that have been included in the Bill at the present time.

It is obvious that no income tax measure will please everyone. There is always the problem that some people would like more of, and some less. That is unavoidable.

In effect, the Bill that is before Parliament at the present time is one that will be very beneficial over-all to the Canadian economy. In addition, it is one that will introduce the certainty that is required in the economy at the present time, and by the industrial sector in particular. This is a conclusion, as I have said, that I have seen endorsed overwhelmingly in the series of consultations that I have had across the country.

I am sorry that my hon. friend seems more interested in concentrating on his fixations rather than consulting with the people in the business community.

Mr. McDermid: We have been doing it for years.

Mr. Lalonde: He should talk to the small-business people. They will tell him to get going on the Bill that is before Parliament.

AUTOMOTIVE INDUSTRY

CHRYSLER CORPORATION—OBSERVANCE OF LOAN AGREEMENT TERMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Two years ago, when the Chrysler Corporation was in great difficulty, it went to the American Government for assistance. The American Government refused assistance until the Canadian Government put up some $200 million. The other day the President of the United States was in St. Louis, Missouri, at a Chrysler plant, and was complimenting them on their recovery. However, in July a spring plant in Windsor is due to shut down. Guess where the jobs will be shifted? To St. Louis, Missouri! It is clear that Canadians took the financial risk but the Americans have the jobs.

Is the Minister prepared to stand in the House and guarantee Canadians that the terms of the loan agreement reached with Chrysler on behalf of Canadian workers will be lived up to and that we will not lose a single job?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as I have said in answer to several questions posed in the House and by the media, the Government of Canada has fully lived up to its obligations under the agreement, and Chrysler has not. The Chrysler Corporation cannot expect the Government of Canada to continue to fulfil its obligations unless the company is prepared to find some alternative projects that will make up for the jobs lost in the diesel project, and for the job lost in the spring operation.

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister knows that he still has not given a specific answer.

REQUEST FOR DEFINITIVE STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, considering that Canadian workers in this sector, particularly in the Chrysler Corporation, are more productive than the Americans, considering that the Americans owe us for 1980-81 legally in excess of $240 million in duty remissions, and considering that Chrysler signed a legal agreement to preserve those jobs in Windsor, will the Minister say to the House definitively that he will insist that all of the terms of that agreement will be lived up to?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows enough about negotiations to know that it takes two sides, and we presently are in the middle of our negotiations with the Chrysler Corporation. I think it is incumbent upon me, if we want to have successful negotiations on behalf of the employees, of the UAW, and Chrysler Canada, to say that now is not the appropriate time to make specific commitments because we are trying to negotiate alternative projects to replace the two that have been cancelled.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the Minister has said, in his quaint macho way, that he intended to talk hardball with the Americans. Since then Canadians have put up more than $200 million in loans, we have lost $240 million in revenue that Chrysler owes us for 1980-81, and we have lost the spring plant and the diesel plant. Can the Minister tell us one thing he has obtained for Canadian auto workers?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not have enough time in Question Period to list all of those benefits that the Hon. Member suggested.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lumley: However, I want to remind him of something I told one of his colleagues the other day. For all the criticism from the Hon. Member's Party about what we have done for the Chrysler Corporation, there are only some 240 workers of Chrysler Canada who are unemployed and there are over 43,000 Chrysler workers in the United States who are unemployed.

Mr. Broadbent: That is rubbish, and you know it.

TEXTILES

PRESUMED FAILURE OF NEGOTIATIONS IN ORIENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (International Trade). Canadian negotiators have just come back from the Orient, where they were to renegotiate our bilateral agreements with four of our traditional textile suppliers, namely, Korea, China, Taiwan and Hong Kong, and considering their failure to do so, could the Minister inform the House of the measures he intends to take as a result of that failure, with a view to protecting Canadian textile manufacturers so they will not have to bear the brunt of the slump in the Canadian textile market during these difficult times? Furthermore, could the Minister inform the House whether he intends to use Clause 19 of the GATT Agreement to remedy a situation that is damaging to our textile industry?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): Madam Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his very important question. Following consultations with industry representatives, the Government decided that some form of assistance would be necessary. As soon as I receive a report on this matter, I intend to consult with my Cabinet colleagues on the options open to the Government.

ADMINISTRATION OF AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He is probably aware of the material that was sent in the Crow rate package on "Black Tuesday". One item is called "agricultural development initiative". It talks about $130 million to carry out a variety of functions. If all of these programs are implemented the $130 will not go very far. Is the Minister's Department administering this program and, if so, is the $130 million in addition to his agri-food budget or is it partly agri-food budget?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the program that the Hon. Member mentions is one that we call the agricultural development initiatives program. It is a program that my officials and I have been very much involved in from its beginning. It is in line with the agri-food strategy, no doubt. It is a beneficial program.

My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, announced a $75 million program, and he will be setting aside $20 million or more toward the food processing and meat packing sector in that area. That makes it even larger than the Hon. Member has been suggesting. Call it from whatever sector one wants to call it from, but we know that it is needed.

The Hon. Member is a strong promoter of research. The program also provides for a large research centre to be built in western Canada. It is necessary that that program be directly connected with the soil salinization problem and also with the water and soil conservation problems that we have, especially in western Canada. We have lost over two million hectares of land as a result of salinization. We are losing 100,000 hectares of land a year by salinization. Therefore I am sure the Hon. Member welcomes that fund which will go into the research centre, amounting to approximately $20 million. Yes, we are very much involved in the program.

Mr. Neil: The Minister is quite correct that I am very interested in research. I wish the Minister himself were interested and would deliver $9 million of farmers' money to the research foundation so that it could carry out research.

SOIL AND WATER CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): The second item following the $130 million item is $20 million for soil and water conservation, on which the Minister touched. Is this a program with which the prairie farm rehabilitation people will be dealing?

For many years, starting in the 1930s, they concerned themselves with soil and water conservation. Will they be revitalized to do this job, or will the Minister set up another little department in his organization?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, it will be a program, as usual, with 100 per cent co-operation, but it will be under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. I want to say that, when I spoke of the $9 million program for research, we said we would provide that money under the PFAA. The Hon. Member knows the rules and laws. He made a lot of noise about the so-called transfer. There has not been any transfer of scientists from western Canada to eastern Canada. He has not mentioned the fact that over a period of time I actually transferred 70 researchers from eastern Canada to western Canada. He has not congratulated me for doing that. He has not said that there are still 1,440 researchers working hard every day in western Canada. He recognizes, and we recognize, the fact that research is our most important product, and this program will be far greater than anything of which he ever dreamed.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Peterborough.

Mr. Domm: Madam Speaker, I have been advised that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will be arriving shortly. I would like to defer my question until that time.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member simply need not rise, and I will not recognize him.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FUTURE OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND WORLD BANK

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He will be aware of the proposals made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister of New Zealand with regard to changes in the rules of the IMF and the World Bank. I was wondering whether the Minister could tell us anything about his response to the invitations issued, I believe, by the Prime Minister of New Zealand to a conference on this matter.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I am not aware that the Prime Minister of New Zealand has made specific proposals with respect to changes in the rules of the IMF. I think that at one time the Prime Minister of New Zealand, at a Commonwealth Finance Ministers Conference, did call for a new Bretton Woods Agreement. At that time those of us who attended the Conference were of the view that one ought to understand rather clearly what type of new institution might be necessary rather than, in a sense, abandoning institutions which were presently in place. However, in the absence of more specific proposals, the conversation did not advance beyond the point I have mentioned, except that it was agreed at the Ministers' meeting that the notions which had been put forward by the Prime Minister of New Zealand ought to be studied further in the expectation that better understanding might be attained at the next meeting of Commonwealth Ministers.

NECESSITY FOR INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Given the fact, Madam Speaker, that there is an indebtedness of over $700 billion vis-à-vis developed and developing countries, and the proposal of the Right Hon. Prime Minister of New Zealand was designed to ameliorate the repayment schedule of this indebtedness by stretching it out, or changing the terms, and also facilitating contacts between the Bank, the Fund and the borrowers themselves, the loaners, will the Secretary of State look more carefully into his Department to find out what further progress has been made? It is my understanding that an international conference ought to be called, and the New Zealand Prime Minister is very anxious that it be called to discuss this very urgent matter. By the end of the year there will be real trouble.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there has already been real trouble. For example, in the case of Mexico—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mexico, sure.

Mr. MacEachen: —there had to be a co-ordinated effort by the Bank for International Settlements, by the International Monetary Fund, and by individual nations in order to extend additional credits and to reschedule the debt obligations of Mexico. That same pattern has been followed—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): With $700 billion?

Mr. MacEachen: —with respect to several other countries. I believe the Hon. Member is directing himself to a very relevant question as to how we deal in a global sense with the very large debts which have accumulated and concerning whether it will be possible to deal with new cases on the ad hoc basis which has prevailed up to the present time. In that respect the Prime Minister of New Zealand has made some proposals, for example, at the recent conference at Davos which I attended, with respect to methods of consolidating and dealing with that overhanging debt.

Therefore, what I can say is that, while it is not possible to say that these proposals have been developed to the point or have been brought forward in international fora to the point where decisions can be made, there is no doubt but that the Prime Minister of New Zealand is putting his finger on a problem which will require increasing attention and which is receiving increasing attention. It is not my intention, for a moment, to downplay what the Hon. Member is talking about.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Helping or hindering?

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

INFORMATION ON WEAPONS TESTING PLANS

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister will know that the Government's continuing secretive behaviour surrounding the weapons testing framework agreement with the United States is becoming more and more unacceptable to Canadians. It is only too bad that the Conservatives have not seen fit to criticize this secrecy.

Today we learned, from the Pentagon as usual, that Canada will be asked to test "stealth" Cruise missiles. That is even more destabilizing, making verification almost impossible.

Why must we in Canada continue to learn of weapons testing plans from Washington, from the Pentagon, rather than from our own Government? While the Minister is on his feet perhaps he could tell us when he will table in the House the still secret framework agreement, or is that still a secret?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): I believe, Madam Speaker, that the secrecy exists in the Hon. Member's imagination.

Miss Jewett: Tell that to the Canadian public.

Mr. MacEachen: Her information is also quite imaginative, because there has never been any proposal from the Government of the United States to test what she describes as a "stealth" Cruise missile. That has never been made, and I doubt if it will be made. Perhaps the Hon. Member is able to define what a "stealth" Cruise missile is. The Hon. Member seems to pick up every unsupported speculation appearing in the press and founds a question upon it in order to create unnecessary alarm. There will be no secrecy about the framework agreement.

Miss MacDonald: Table it.

Mr. MacEachen: It will be tabled in the House of Commons very shortly, and the Hon. Member will have full opportunity to consider it and to ask questions. I will be able to prove that her allegation of secrecy is totally confused and unfounded, as is the defence and foreign policy of the Hon. Member and her party.

• (1440)

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, the minister apparently forgets that it was in total secrecy that they negotiated the testing of the Cruise missile. That information was leaked by an investigative reporter on March 10 last year. That is how we found out about it in this House. It was not the Government that told us, but a reporter who learned it from the Pentagon who told us. Therefore we do not believe anything the minister now tells us about squaring it off with the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Jewett: I do not believe him—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. I will gladly give the Hon. Member the floor, but for a question.

REQUEST THAT WEAPONS TESTING FRAMEWORK AGREEMENT BE TABLED

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister whether the framework agreement—the great secret agreement—is going to be tabled tomorrow in the House of Commons. Is that why Ambassador Gotlieb is here today? While that poor, long suffering ambassador for disarmament is here today, will the document be tabled in the House tomorrow, and will the minister make a statement on motions about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, in her second, rather unguided intervention, the Hon. Member has demonstrated clearly the validity of my first answer. She has said that there has been a negotiation in secrecy between Canada and the United States on the testing of a Cruise missile. There has never been any such negotiation, so it has never been leaked because it has never taken place. Such a negotiation can only take place after the framework agreement is signed. Then there will be a negotiation between the Department of Defence in the United States and our Department of National Defence about whatever weapons systems are being discussed. That is when the negotiation will take place on any specific weapons testing system, including the Cruise.

The Hon. Member had better get her facts straight for her next unguided intervention in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION ON PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which arises from what I presume the Minister knows is the financial stress being experienced by many farmers in the country. I presume the Minister is also well aware of the provisions of a Private Members' Bill No. C-653 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex, to amend the Farmers Creditors' Arrangements Act. First of all, does the Minister favour the intention of this Private Members' Bill and, second, does he favour its provisions?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to read Hansard he will see that that question was asked before. I do not know where he has been, but my colleague, the Minister of Finance, answered that question and made public statements about it the other day. It is being considered at the present time.

Oral Questions

QUERY RESPECTING MINISTER'S INTENTIONS

Hon. Bill Jarvis (Perth): Madam Speaker, may I ask the Minister if he will support the intention of Bill C-653 and, second, the provisions of Bill C-653?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member did not say what his intentions were and he did not say what the intentions of his Party were, either. My record shows where I stand on protecting farmers against bankruptcy, right from the beginning, ever since I first came to this House. The first Private Members' Bill to amend the Bank Act was a Bill that I sponsored. Let the Hon. Member do the same thing and then he can take credit for really caring about the interests of farmers.

REQUEST FOR EARLY PASSAGE OF BILL

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the Minister agree to the introduction of the Bill on our next Private Members' day, next Wednesday? Will the Minister undertake with the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex that the Bill will be introduced? If he will do that, I can guarantee him a seconder for the Bill from this side and can guarantee passage of the Bill during that Private Members' hour.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am really amazed that the Party opposite can guarantee anything. I am utterly amazed. The Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex has shown foresight in introducing the Bill and has shown concern for the farmers. I had discussions with him before he introduced the Bill, and my views are pretty well known. I think the principle of the Bill is very good.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, how can the Minister tell that to the House? The Bill was introduced on April 22, 1982, and here we are in 1983. Why does the Minister not come clean and tell the House that he has not considered it at all and is only about to consider it now.

GUARANTEE OF SUPPORT

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. Will the Minister consider the Bill and bring it in next week? If he does, I can guarantee a seconder from this side of the House for the Bill. In fact I will second it.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, if I go by past experience I remember that I introduced a Bill in the House in 1981 and the Party opposite said it would support it. Its agricultural critic said they would support it. They are still debating it. They are still sandbagging it. The Bill is called Canagrex.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: How can I go by what they decide? The Hon. Member may change his mind tomorrow morning.

THE ECONOMY

ROLE OF PRIVATE SECTOR

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and is supplementary to those asked by the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown.

In light of the fact that Government has had to come to the aid, in a justifiable but massive way, of such economic sectors as the pulp and paper industry, the farm industry, the fishing industry, the farm implement industry, and the automobile industry to name but a few, will the Minister give an absolute guarantee to this House that he will not leave the planning and development of Canada's economic future entirely in the hands of the private sector?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, that has been the position of the Government for many years. It is still the position of the Government that the economic future of the country is in the hands of all the people of Canada and all their Governments. This has to be a joint partnership operation involving labour, management, and governments. I can assure my hon. friend that this is what we are working on as a basic premise of all our policies.

TRUST COMPANIES

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF WHITE PAPER TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of State for Finance who is in charge of financial institutions. He may have heard my representations yesterday with regard to bringing forward the white paper on trust companies. Is the Minister in a position now to say whether that will be done, or is this another matter that is to be left in limbo?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the hon. gentleman's concern and interest in the matter of the Loan Companies Act. It is quite obviously one that the Government has been concerned with, resulting in the publication of the white paper in July last year. I must admit that this Department has been quite preoccupied in assisting and consulting with the Conservative Government of the Province of Ontario in respect of companies administered by that Government and which come under its legislation. Of course, I am referring to the role of CDIC in those matters that pertain to Crown Trust, Greymac Trust, and Seaway Trust, all of which come under the jurisdiction of the Government of the Province of Ontario.

LEGISLATION TO INCREASE DEPOSIT INSURANCE LEVELS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, since the Minister mentioned CDIC, would he now tell the House if he has consulted with the Government House Leader with regard to Bill C-142, which is supported by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, and myself, with a view to debating it and sending it to a special committee?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, again I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for bringing his interest and attention to bear on that Bill. This is the Bill that will effectively increase coverage with deposit taking companies from $20,000 to $60,000. Of course, Bill C-142 was introduced partly as a result of the recommendation of the Hon. Member who was one of the Members of the Finance Committee dealing with bank profits. I would like to indicate that with the support of the House, and with the agreement of the House Leaders, if Hon. Members opposite think the matter should be dealt with urgently, there is room for discussion that the matter be dealt with without debate, which would obviate the necessity and delay of going to Committee.

RAILWAYS

FUNDING FOR REBUILDING RAILROAD SYSTEM

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. It is related to the policy decision and the Crow rate announcement. There is no dispute anywhere in the country about the need to rebuild the railroads. I believe everyone agrees on that. The dispute centres around how the rebuilding should be funded.

Given that the farmers have been facing a particularly difficult financial squeeze for a number of years and that to impose an additional cost on the farmers today could result in only one of two things, a reduction in their cash flow or an increase to the consumer, which quite frankly is not able to occur under the structures in place, would it not make more sense to ask CP to invest a substantial sum from the very large profits it has been able to derive from its operations in Canada, together with an equal investment from the Government, the people of Canada, in building a railroad system that will satisfy the needs of the country as a whole, rather than to put the cash flow and the very existence of our farmers in jeopardy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the reality is that the Government of Canada, that is to say, the taxpayers of Canada, have been and would continue for several years to pay hundreds of millions of dollars to the railways in order that they continue operating in the West because they were transporting merchandise at rates set historically at levels which did not permit the railways to operate. Therefore, there had to be some change in order to permit the Government of Canada not to continue subsidizing the CPR and the CNR ad infinitum for one, two, or three more decades, to the tune of many, many billions of dollars. Something had to be done in order to stop that.

What was done was not, as suggested, to make the farmer pay more this year or next year. That is not the solution proposed. The solution is that the farmer continue to receive what he has been receiving historically, but in terms of increased cost in terms of inflation that he be asked to share, as every other Canadian is asked to share, in meeting these increased costs.

That is the proposal that the Government put forward. It seems not only eminently fair to me, but it seemed in principle eminently fair to Mr. Gilson who made the survey, heard all parties, and arrived at a general recommendation along those lines. It is easy for the NDP to say that the Government should pour many more hundreds of millions and billions of dollars into the railways. Somebody has to pay for it. In terms of increased cost it does not seem unreasonable that the farmer be asked to share along with other Canadians in the payment of those increased costs.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACQUIRE EQUITY IN CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I do not deny the complexity of the problem, but I put to the Prime Minister that there is no one in Canada who believes that the farmers of this country can afford to absorb additional costs today. Surely he understands that the end result will be that those farmers will not have the cash to invest in the farm machinery that they require in order to maintain a viable operation. We will kill not only the farming community but the farm implement operation at the same time.

Is the Prime Minister aware that, as a percentage of its investment, CP has been putting less into railroad revitalization than it has been receiving from the railroad end of its operation in profits, as a percentage? Is it not reasonable to expect that CP should put back in proportion to what it gets from its railroad operations in Canada, and that the Government should take equity in CP for the money that is invested out of taxpayers' dollars?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member faults the solution because he says the farmer cannot afford to pay increased costs. I suppose there are many Canadians who cannot afford to pay increased costs. If we had not opened the Crow subject, as the NDP was saying we should not, and has been saying nothing else for two or three years, the end result would have been that the taxpayers of Canada would have had to improve the rail system to the tune of billions of dollars in order that the farmer would be able to continue to move his wheat, along with other western goods.

For years, the NDP, and the NDP Government of Saskatchewan, have said, "Don't touch the Crow". They did not say what the Hon. Member is saying now. They have been saying, "Don't touch the Crow; it must not be altered in any way". That is not a solution, because the rail system was running down. There had to be a solution. Instead of opposing all moves, and instead of being reactionary from every corner, if that Party had said, "Here is a solution", they would have been able to contribute to a better solution, but they chose as always to criticize what is done and to propose no alternative until after the fact.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REDUCTION IN FARM PROGRAMMING

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but it is not necessary for me to put that question at the moment because it was obvious from his answer a short time ago in this Question Period that he indeed does not support his colleague's Private Member's Bill.

I want to put a question to the Minister of Communications. It is with reference to the reduction and the decline in the quantity, and I want to make that very clear, in the quantity of farm and food broadcasting by the CBC. Is the Minister aware that a very capable and highly regarded commentator working with the CBC recently said:

> Things in the CBC today are in one hell of a mess . . . The tools that we need to do our job are being taken away from us.

Is the Minister aware of the situation that exists in the CBC? If so, does he want to make a comment on it?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I know full well that the agricultural programming of the CBC has always been well received and well appreciated by the farm community. I would be most pleased to bring up the whole question about the quantity of programming now available on the air. I would also like to point out to the Hon. Member that my Department, in co-operation with Manitoba Telephone system, has set up one of the first telidon videotex systems which are addressed to the farming community. This service is now available in Manitoba. That is a clear indication of the Government's intention of seeing to it that not only the current type of programming continues but that new technologies are made available and are of use to the farming community in Canada.

TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS ON TORONTO REPORTING STAFF

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, does the Minister of Communications realize that CBC management has a policy that, unless it is absolutely necessary, farm commentators working out of Toronto do not get permission to travel outside the city of Toronto limits to cover meetings? If that is not asinine, I do not know what is. Will the Minister take a personal interest in this case, look into it and, if at all possible, refer it to the appropriate standing committee for review?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I will obviously look into the matter and bring the question to the attention of CBC management. It is indicative of the desire on the part of the CBC to try to cut its costs wherever possible. I can think of another occasion in this House when another Member of the Hon. Member's party stated that he thought CBC people were travelling too much. In any event, I would be pleased to bring the Hon. Member's serious concern to the attention of the CBC.

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, February 2, 1983 and finds that the petitions meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, this being Thursday, I wonder if I might ask the Government House Leader what is the order of business for tomorrow and next week.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate the new House Leader for the Tory Party and confirm to him that the business for today will be Bill C-131, the third reading. Tomorrow will be an Opposition day, as I indicated yesterday.

[Translation]

As far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, on Monday we shall resume debate on second reading of Bill C-139, the income tax measures, and on Tuesday and Thursday, we shall be resuming debate on Bill C-132 which concerns family allowances.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WADDELL—ALLEGED MISLEADING STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I spoke in the House on Tuesday, February 1, 1983, in the morning, on the Old Age Security Act (No. 2). The Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. Campbell), rose on a point of order after my speech and said, as reported at page 22370 of Hansard:

—Mr. Speaker. I know the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House in his comments with reference to veterans, but I am sure he is aware that benefits through the Department of Veterans Affairs to veterans are not affected by the six and five program; that in fact, as of January 1, benefits increased by 11.5 per cent—

He was then cut off by the Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin). I am informed by a flood of phone calls to my office in Vancouver, Madam Speaker, that pension cheques, indeed, are not going out in Vancouver.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. That is not a question of any privilege that I know of, and at any rate, it does not flow from the deliberations of today. Therefore, the Hon. Member would have had to send me a notice of his question of privilege before Question Period, and I have not received any notice.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I did send a notice. I am alleging that the Minister intentionally misled the House and that is a question of privilege. However, I do not see the Minister here today and I am prepared to deal with the matter tomorrow.

Madam Speaker: I have checked with the Table. Any notice of a question of privilege has to be sent to my office and it has to contain a brief statement on what the nature of the question of privilege might be. Therefore, if the Hon. Member wants to follow the rules, I will be delighted to consider his question of privilege. But he must do it under the rules.

PETITIONS

MR. DOMM—IMPOSITION OF METRIC SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition to the House signed by constituents of Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, Leeds-Grenville, Prince Edward-Hastings, Lenark-Renfrew-Carleton, and Kingston and the Islands. It contains 9,814 signatures. This petition is submitted to the House, for the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), by people wishing to express their concern about the mandatory imposition of metric. Canadians should be free to use the imperial system of measurement in their business, trade and speech. That should be recognized as an inalienable right not subject to Government interference.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DEANS—BILLS AWAITING INTRODUCTION RESIDING ON ORDER PAPER

Madam Speaker: Introduction of Bills.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker, I wonder if it might be possible for the Chair to consider the method by which notices of intent to introduce Bills need not appear on the Notice Paper on a regular basis. There are notices on the Notice Paper which have been there for the last two years. If Hon. Members want to introduce a Bill, they should do so; but I do not see any reason why Bills should continue to stand on the Notice Paper indefinitely.

Madam Speaker: I think that matter can be considered perhaps by the Committee which is now reviewing the methods of procedure of the House. I am open to any suggestion which might be made by the House.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I, among many other Hon. Members, think it is ridiculous that Madam Speaker must get up every day and read off these names of Hon. Members. They either want to move a Bill or they do not want to move a Bill. It seems to me they must want to get their names in Hansard every day. I believe that if they have a Bill to move, they should darn well move it; or Madam Speaker should be able to say that all these Bills stand, and that is the end of it.

Madam Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his suggestion. I am sure it will be picked up by the House Leaders and they will let me know what their wishes are.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

AUTHORIZATION FOR COMMITTEE MEMBERS TO TRAVEL TO UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, consultations have taken place between all parties of the House and I believe the House will readily give its consent to the following motion, which I will now move:

That five Members of the House, namely Messrs Clarke (Vancouver Quadra), Desmarais, Hovdebo, Kelly and Wright, be empowered to travel outside of Canada to the United Kingdom, for a period not exceeding eight days, to visit the Select Committee of Public Accounts and the Comptroller and Auditor General of the United Kingdom, and to report, upon return, to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts in relation to its permanent Order of Reference and the subject "Improving Accountability" contained in the Auditor General of Canada's Report to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1981; and

That the necessary staff of the Committee accompany the Members.

Madam Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the introduction of such motion? Does the House agree to the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,530 and 4,576.

[Text]

MR. ANDRÉ DÉOM

Question No. 4,530—Mr. MacKay:

1. Did the Government issue a letter of dismissal of the Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. André Déom, and, if so, was it withdrawn?

2. What were the terms of settlement between Mr. Déom and the Government, in cash and other considerations?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): 1. The Secretary of the Treasury Board wrote to Mr. Déom, conveying the decision of the Treasury Board to dismiss Mr. Déom. At the direction of the Board, that letter was subsequently withdrawn when Mr. Déom resigned from the Public Service.

2. It has not been the practice of the Treasury Board to reveal details of separation settlements. It is the policy of the Treasury Board, however, that separation payments may not exceed two years' salary, with the precise amounts varying according to the circumstances of the separation, the age of the individual, length of service, and likely difficulty in securing re-employment. Each case is considered by the Treasury Board.

DND DEPENDENTS' SCHOOLS IN EUROPE

Question No. 4,576—Mr. Nickerson:

1. With reference to Department of National Defence dependents' schools in Europe, for the last school year for which figures are available (a) how many teaching positions in each subject area or speciality were to be filled (b) how many applications were received and how many teachers were appointed from each Province and Territory?

2. In the past ten years, was only one teacher from the Northwest Territories hired to teach in DND schools in Europe?

3. Does the Department have a policy of excluding teachers from the Northwest Territories from teaching in their schools in Europe?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) Sixty-six positions were to be filled in the following grades or specialities:

Primary and/or Elementary Levels

Junior kindergarten	8
Senior kindergarten	3

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the Old Age Security Act (No. 2), be read the third time and do pass; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 24460).

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member who had just finished his remarks prior to our seeing the clock at one o'clock; I believe it was the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). In the Hon. Member's speech, he referred favourably to the economies of Germany and Japan and did what a number of his colleagues are in the habit of doing, that is, holding up Germany and Japan as countries which Canada ought to imitate. In the same speech, the Hon. Member also waxed on uncritically about the virtues of free enterprise and non-intervention of the Government in the economy.

My question is in the way of a comment to the Hon. Member. When is the Hon. Member, and others like him, going to show some theoretical consistency? When are they going to grow up and admit that the economies which they hold up as worthy of imitation are economies in which there is a long standing tradition of Government intervention in the economy, Government planning of the economy, the very kinds of things which, when they are attempted in this country, the Hon. Member gets up and denounces as the horrors of socialism? When is he going to show some kind of consistency? If he is not going to do that, would he spare us these speeches which make absolutely no sense at all?

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, we have heard these diatribes from the socialists to our left before. What I am talking about is the fact that those economies have invested money in the proper areas, not wasted it as do the Government on North-South dialogue and diatribe. Those economies have produced the money by the free enterprise system, not by state control which every one of the NDP advocate. Why don't they stand up some time in the House of Commons and say: "We advocate state control"?

They talk about nationalization of the CPR. Anyone who makes a profit, which makes the world go round, they are against. This country was built on free enterprise. Show me something in North America that was ever accomplished under socialism or the things they espouse and I will tell them that they are wrong.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's answer is exactly what I was talking about. The CPR was built with Government money, under the direction of the Conservative Government of that day, and anyone who believes that the CPR was founded through the virtues of free enterprise would not pass a grade five current affairs exam. It is embarrassing to hear that kind of garbage coming from someone who has been elected to the House of Commons.

The Hon. Member says the Governments of Japan and Germany have invested more wisely than the Government across the way, and I agree. One of the reasons that investment in those countries has been more wise than here is that the Government has taken a larger role in deciding where investment should be made. That is the kind of direction from the Government we would like to see. We make no bones about that. No apologies. We would like to see investment in this country controlled in the public interest instead of leaving them purely in the hands of the private sector.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. Earlier today the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) made his remarks with respect to the subject of Bill C-131, and I thought his remarks at that time were relevant to that Bill, including some of the comments on the economy generally. The difficulty under the new Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders is that the Chair is obligated to attempt to maintain relevance as between the questions and answers in these ten-minute periods.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and the Hon. Member for Simcoe South that we do seem to be getting away from the point of Bill C-131. However, these are new rules and I do not want my comments to be considered as a ruling on relevance. It is clear that the comments between the two Hon. Members are relevant to one another; it is not clear to the Chair that they are relevant to Bill C-131.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, your comments are well taken. I noticed the irrelevance of the speech of the Hon. Member but I felt that some of the things he said should not go unchallenged despite being irrelevant.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member spent three minutes making a speech instead of asking a question. Then he gets up and talks about irrelevancy. He does not know the meaning of the word.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if I could get to the relevance of this situation, nothing happens unless there is—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Chair has no choice but to recognize a point of order, and there is at least one Member rising on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill on a point of order.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) would read the new Standing Orders. It says Hon. Members are entitled to comment or ask a question. In commenting on what the Hon. Member for Simcoe South had to say, I was simply following the Standing Orders, and I commend the reading of those same Standing Orders to the Hon. Member for Bow River.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I wish the Member from bird's eye would pay attention to what is going on in the House.

Mr. Blaikie: I am.

Mr. Taylor: Let him talk about the things we are talking about and forget the socialism.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, we have a very important Bill in front of the House concerning old age pensions. I wonder if you could not see any further points of order and let us get on with that Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is no way that the Chair can refuse to see an Hon. Member on a point of order. That is not an option open to the Chair, unless, of course, the House wishes to provide a very clear-cut order to the Chair in that regard. Perhaps Hon. Members will recognize the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) and let us proceed with the ten-minute question and answer period.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, as to the relevancy of what I had to say, nothing happens until you make a profit. Canada is now 24th out of 24 on the list of OECD countries.

Mr. Blaikie: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Stewart: Our gross national product is going down. I am not talking on a point of order, I am answering the question. Brighten up.

The whole point of this is that this country must start making money again to keep the existing social programs in place, which we on this side of the House want to do. We do not want them destroyed by the terrible policies of the Government across the way. We want the pensions to be paid and to be based on actuarially sound policies. There is no reason why we should be arguing about this had the money not been shoved into general revenue and wasted. Every Canadian could be assured of the pensions which were put in place for them. It works on the profit system, nothing else, and pretty soon NDP members will be wearing three-piece suits and trying to tell us they understand.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member keeps speaking about money which was put into general revenue. Does he realize that the Bill is about Old Age Security payments, the universal part of the pension, that there are no contributions to it, and that what he is saying makes absolutely no sense at all in the context of the pensions we are debating at this time? Does he realize that?

Mr. Stewart: I understand that; it is the fellows opposite who do not understand that. You can only have what you can afford and you can only afford what is made by profits in the free enterprise system of this country, which was built by our forefathers. They do not understand that. I would like to ask them how it works in Poland. Tell me about Poland, Russia and Afghanistan. Explain the rest of it to me.

Mr. Nystrom: There is Ronnie Reagan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): It would appear that Hon. Members do not want to continue the ten-minute question and answer period, but that is the intervention I am looking for now. In the absence of that we will proceed with the debate. The Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass).

Mr. Mel Gass (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this Bill this afternoon. I believe Bill C-131 is the topic we are supposed to be on; the short debate we had previously was enjoyable, but it did not make too much sense to me. There were some points on the extreme left that were raised but they were not relevant to the Bill we are debating.

This Bill, Mr. Speaker, limits the increase to the old age pension plan to a maximum of 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. Old Age Security now sits at $246.62 a month and should increase to $271.61 on January 1, 1984, but will only increase to $261.74. That is a difference of $118.50 a year. This legislation is directed at the 1.2 million senior citizens who do not qualify for full or partial Guaranteed Income Supplement. Assuming that inflation stays at its current rate of 10 per cent, each one of those 1.2 million senior citizens will lose $290 in the next two years, or just over $70 next year and a further $220 in 1984.

Some of these people are single, elderly people with incomes just over $8,900 per year. That is the cut-off point for those who receive the full Guaranteed Income Supplement. Those receiving more than $8,900 a year, whose incomes are just in excess of that figure, are the ones this legislation hits hardest. If they live in urban centres such as Quebec City, Montreal or Toronto they already live below the poverty line.

The married elderly with incomes just over $15,000 per year will suffer a loss in income over the next two years of $580. We are talking about 50,000 elderly people—25,000 single and 25,000 seniors living as married couples with incomes between $15,000 and $16,000—who will be hardest hit by the Government's six and five legislation. It appears that the sum of money the Government hopes to save from these 50,000 senior citizens will hardly make a difference to this Government, which is the biggest spender of all times. But this $15 million or $20 million does make a difference to the 50,000 senior citizens. The $12 per month that it represents can make a big difference.

The number in Canada of those 65 years and over has risen to more than 600,000 in the last ten years alone. That age group is growing at an annual rate of 3 per cent. This means that without any increase in real benefits the economy will have to grow 3 per cent each year to provide the necessary revenue to support the pensions of these people. Also it means that the larger the population reaching age 65 with little or no

Canada Pension Plan or private savings, the greater the public burden will be since these people will have to be supported by the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

The population from infancy to age 17, on whose behalf Family Allowances and the Child Tax Credit are paid, is declining. There are about 850,000 fewer people in that age group today than there were ten years ago. This means that Family Allowances and the Child Tax Credit will be less of a burden on the public over the next few years than in the past. Also it means that an increased portion of the population is of working age and is contributing to the economy. Therefore, we could adequately support those who will be retiring within the next two decades if we were to use this period wisely.

The Bill attempts to bail out the Government from its own economic and fiscal mismanagement and place the burden on the backs of the elderly. Most Canadians are willing to share the burden of reducing inflation. Most Canadians are able to reduce their lifestyles to their incomes. Old age pensioners are being told that they will have to cut their already small pensions to conform to the six and five policy of restraint. Although the six and five program is a small step in the right direction, it should have considered the exemption of Old Age Security recipients, as many senior citizens have a hard enough time without having to cope with decreases in their pensions.

A 10 per cent inflation rate in the country, coupled with a 6 per cent decrease in pensions, will have a devastating effect upon seniors who are now only able to cover the costs of the bare essentials of life. Restraint should not be imposed upon those citizens who can least afford it. It is not fair to ride out the recession on the backs of our senior citizens by seeking restraint from those who can ill afford it. Approximately 20 per cent or 600,000 of our elderly live in poverty. We also know that senior citizens are forming an ever-increasing segment of our population. This is why we must take a serious look at all our pension needs to ensure that at the time of retirement one is able to live out one's declining years without worrying about having enough funds on which to live.

Pensions should be looked at as deferred income upon which we will draw once we leave the workplace. Also we must make sure that all pensions are not drained of funds by over-extending loans to the Provinces. There should be sufficient funds to ensure the presence of actual money, not just paper figures.

Because of the lifespan of people today, we must study the impact this will have on the national economy. Approximately 2,000 years ago the average life expectancy was only 22 years; 75 years ago in Canada the life expectancy for males was 48 years and for females 51 years. The average life expectancy today for males is 74 and for females between 76 and 78 years. Today's 65-year-old man or woman probably has greater vigour, stamina and health than the 50-year old of the 1900s.

There is no question that the lifespan of man will continue to increase. We may be forced to review retirement practices in industry. We may find it desirable to lean toward the direction of voluntary retirement, depending upon the health of each worker. The human values of forced retirement at age 65 cannot be overlooked. Suddenly, at 65, a person who has spent most of his or her life in the labour force is no longer allowed to contribute. He or she is suddenly cut off from his or her working companions, and just because he or she turns 65 is supposed to stop functioning. How can we justify this kind of treatment when today these very same people have been the most active senior citizens in the history of the country? A person who is forced to retire at the magical age of 65 is faced with more than a loss of income, and in many cases must learn to deal with emotional problems which are every bit as serious as economic ones.

When we consider the hardships which seniors experienced and lived through, such as two world wars and a devastating depression in the 1930s, we must re-examine the methods by which we express our thanks and gratitude. Senior citizens have already paid the price; we should not, by cutting back on their pensions, ask them to pay more.

People who are now aged 65 were born in 1917. They experienced a few good years after the First World War, and then came the depression. People who have not lived throught the Great Depression will never know what it was like, and our seniors who lived through it still suffer because of malnutrition and lack of basic essentials. They did what they could to make the best of the situation.

Then came World War II. All through these years Canadians co-operated. Many young men and women gave up the best years of their lives to do their part in the Canadian war effort. After the war they watched as the country underwent many changes, and still they co-operated. Today we are calling upon these people once more. We continue to burden them with the problems of the Canadian economy. We should realize that these people have already done their part many times over and that they should at least have the right to live as they see fit.

Today in Canada we need a drastic change of attitude. Not only do we have to realize what elderly people have accomplished, but we must also realize that we should not put our elderly people on the shelf. Many seniors are able to work and want to work, but modern methods of business and industry deny them the opportunity to do so. Older Canadian citizens have a treasury of skills and experience which can be used throughout our community. There are approximately 400,000 people in Canada receiving pensions, most of whom are women who fall below the poverty line. The approach of the Government in Bill C-131 does not deal with the problems facing us. The Canada Pension Plan will need contributions of around 9 per cent of earnings in the future instead of the present 3.6 per cent to maintain the present level of benefits. At the present time the Canada Pension Plan looks as if it will be bankrupt by the year 2020. It is discouraging Canadians from investing for their old age or retirement.

The high level of taxation and erratic interest rates are eating up the savings of senior citizens and are part of the economic mess which the Government created. The Government must try to correct the present economic situation, but not by the means proposed in Bill C-131. It will mean great hardship for senior citizens and will reduce the savings of those who planned for their retirement.

Bill C-131 will attack those least able to absorb the six and five program and the group least able to influence changes on its behalf. The group is being asked to shoulder a burden which will have greater impact upon it than upon any other segment of Canadian society. The Government seems almost two-faced about its moral responsibilities and the narrow political motivations of its regional caucus. Statistics Canada indicate that the poverty line for single individuals living in metropolitan areas is $8,922, or $10 more than the Guaranteed Income Supplement. While it may be true that the GIS will be indexed to compensate for the limited indexation of the Old Age Security pension, the loss of any amount at all will be very difficult for the single pensioner whose income is about $9,000 or $10,000 per year, or the married couple with combined earnings of slightly over $15,000 per year.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said:

> We are asking 1.1 million old age pensioners to help lead the way to fight inflation.

• (1530)

By this, the Minister is actually asking some 300,000 seniors, whose only form of support is the Old Age Security pension, if they will volunteer to be in the front line of restraint. These are the people who survived the hungry thirties, served the country in wartime and built up our industries in the post-war era. I can safely say that if the Minister was actually to ask senior citizens at random if they support limited indexing, she would get quite different results than the ones expected by the Government in the House of Commons.

It is important that Canadian people, in general, take a look at how we treat our senior citizens. This is important because it says something about the way we look at human dignity and the value of people. In many cultures older citizens are the ones who receive the greatest respect. They are the ones the rest of society looks after in a very special way. The senior citizens, the wisdom of the community, are held together and looked after and cared for by the whole community. For centuries the Chinese have respected the wisdom of the old, and this is true in their culture even today.

I represent the riding of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island. P.E.I. has a unique situation. There are probably proportionately more elderly people there than in many of the other Provinces of Canada. In the riding of Malpeque alone we have 3,325 senior citizens out of a total population of 32,628, according to the 1981 census. When I speak on this Bill, therefore, I speak as the representative of many people who will be affected by the cutback in their pension and the fact that their pension will not keep up with the cost of living.

These people, having lived in the Maritime region in Canada, know only too well the sacrifices that have to be made as a result of rising costs. A great portion of these people have spent their lives doing physical labour, working the land or fishing. Some of these people had to move to other parts of Canada in order to find job opportunities. But as many Maritimers do, they returned home a few years later wishing to spend their remaining years in the peacefulness of their own Province with a sense of security and belonging. Now this Government plans to take away this small sense of security. The worry of finances has always been a problem for these people, and the six and five program continues to create hardships for them, even in their old age. These people do not live in metropolitan centres but in a high-cost region. Yet the Government insists on taking from the poor and defenceless.

Our Canadian seniors did not have unemployment insurance as a safety measure when they were out of work. They could not depend on social assistance and welfare to help them when they were unemployed. Anyone who speaks to senior citizens can read the hardship in their eyes as they tell of their experiences with poverty. I cannot imagine any government attacking the people who built this country and made it what it is today so that we all can prosper. We are saying to them, "You have to sacrifice some more. You have not sacrificed enough". Yet these elderly people have had their lives shortened because of the privation they had suffered and the struggles they had when they were young.

I feel that Bill C-131, if passed, would further demonstrate this Government's lack of concern for the Canadian people and demonstrate how unjustly it treats our citizens. This Government is attacking the weak who cannot stand up to its wrath.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief but I felt compelled to speak to the House primarily because of the anxiety, concern and fear of many of my constituents and friends who fall in the category of senior citizens. Talking to them, reading their letters, wining and dining with them, if you like, I have found that maybe 90 per cent of their concerns are based on misconceptions of the legislation before us. This, I think, reflects on me, on other Hon. Members of the House and particularly on our Party, since it is our legislation. We are not consciously reminding our senior citizens about the intent of the Bill and what it is designed to do. It is designed not to destroy old age pensions but, on the contrary, to protect the basic principle of what has to be considered, I think, as one of the most enlightened, progressive pension plans of any country in the industrialized world. It should be because, as the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Mr. Gass) pointed out to us, our senior citizens in many, many instances, have been deprived of the possibility of earning a meaningful income with which to provide for themselves as a result of the depression, the war and recessions. As a general rule, it is safe to say that many of our senior citizens reach the age of 65 with very little in the way of investment income. I think it is imperative that this Party, in fact, all Parties in the House, remain as determined as ever to see that the basic principle of old age pensions stays intact.

Essentially, that is precisely what this Bill intends to do. I must confess my bias toward the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) who has shown great dedication to the problems of senior citizens and, to women, reflecting not only her natural compassion but her years with the Commission on the Status of Women and her particular interest in social policy and social reform both in and out of the House. I was surprised at how many senior citizens fail to appreciate the fact that those senior citizens receiving the GIS are not in any way affected by this legislation. I think it might be useful to review for the senior citizens who may be listening and for all of us who are approaching that age, that all Canadians, by virtue of the fact that they are Canadians, regardless of their status in life, whether rich or poor, are entitled to a basic old age pension. We have never sullied that pension in recent years with the concept of a means test. We have said that all Canadians because of their contributions, so eloquently described by the Hon. Member for Malpeque, are entitled to a basic old age pension. We can, however, argue whether that old age pension is sufficient or insufficient. Periodically it has been improved. In respecting the new 20-minute rule, I will not trace the history of pensions, which were once applicable at age 70 and one day, we hope will be applicable at age 60. Regardless, the fundamental basis of our policy is that each and every Canadian is entitled to a pension, and there is nothing in this Bill which destroys that principle.

Years ago we recognized that in order to protect the sanctity of pensions, they had to be viable and economic, not threatened by the economic problems of our good friend, the United States, or the target of every right-wing person in the country. We recognized that there are many Canadians, who, for one reason or another, cannot live on a basic old age pension. They were in the work force probably before the Canada Pension Plan reached its maturity. Not through a means test but on the basis of income tax paid, we provided what is known as an income supplement, in other words, an addition to the basic plan. What the Minister has been able to do here by way of a compromise in the light of the problems we have at the moment is to suggest, in fact to guarantee, that any senior citizen obliged to request or obtain the GIS will continue to have that GIS and the basic old age pension fully indexed. That has not been explained sufficiently in the House. Because of the partisan nature of the House, speakers have glossed over this fundamental principle. As a result of glossing over this fundamental principle, they have created unfounded fears among many of our senior citizens who fail to understand the Bill, as many of us fail to understand the complicated measures.

I can reassure those people who receive the GIS that they will continue to receive it. It will continue to be fully indexed, as will their basic old age pensions.

Who is being asked to make some kind of sacrifice through a curtailment of some benefit through this Bill? It is those Canadians who are fortunate enough not to need the GIS. They are Canadians from all walks of life who, through good planning or good fortune, have other income over and above their old age pension. These Canadians are hardly envious of those receiving the GIS. They are glad they do not need it because it means more for other Canadians. We are simply asking those people to recognize the dilemma that this Government faced last year. Inflation was rampant in this country. It threatened to run away, and the Government was forced to take action. The Government weighed the various alternatives at its disposal, from wage and price control to total disregard for inflation.

It is no secret that every economist in the world has a different view about how to control inflation. Even leading Nobel prize winners in the field of economics have opposing views on the question.

In its wisdom the Government suggested that we could not continue to shelter all Canadians fully by virtue of indexing. We were selective because of our Constitution as to who would make a sacrifice at a time when restraint was needed. They were Members of Parliament, Senators, public servants, members of Crown corporations and some senior citizens who had indicated in their tax returns that while they welcomed the old age pension, they did not need the GIS.

I often ask myself what would have happened to our pension plan if inflation continued to spiral to 20 per cent. What would have been the Government's position? I suppose it would have had to face the reality that the basic old age pension was insufficient. I hope the House would have insisted that the Government increase that old age pension. One would have to wonder how long Canadians who marry their private pensions to their old age pensions would have been able to survive. Certainly, people on fixed incomes suffer more than any other Canadian in times of inflation.

The thrust of the Government's plan was to bring down inflation and to allocate the sacrifice that was necessary in such a way as to enable us to maintain the sanctity of our concept of old age pension, in this case.

I do not wish to give an inflammatory, partisan speech because this subject is too important to drag into that type of environment. Fortunately, inflation has come down dramatically and continuously. When we capped the GIS and indexed salary increases, the level of inflation was at 11.2 per cent. At that time, limiting indexation represented a real sacrifice, if you like, of 4.7 per cent.

Today, as we are discussing this very Bill, the annual compounded rate of inflation since June is down to 7.2 per cent or, to round it off, if I am permitted, to 7 per cent. In reality, we are talking about a capping of 1 per cent or, to be specific, 1.2 per cent. As well, energy prices have come down throughout the world and other factors are bringing down inflation. I do not think anyone can accuse me of being a demagogue if I suggest that inflation could very well be at 6 per cent or less in this country by June. It really makes the exercise academic from that point on—

Miss MacDonald: Exactly. That is the point.

Mr. Mackasey: —as long as inflation remains below 6 per cent. I know, from talking to senior citizens in my riding, that they wonder in effect what the fuss is all about. I said that I did not want to mislead them, because there is some curtailment on the basic pension. I said, "But you would be pleased to know that the gap between the capped pension and inflation is now 1.2 per cent". Had it been that insignificant last June, we probably would not have needed the 6.5 per cent.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: The Hon. Member, whom I never interrupt, laughs. I hope I am not pricking her sensitivities with clear logic. She may wish that inflation had risen to 20 per cent, but we do not. We think that it would have been disastrous for the country and for those living on fixed incomes. We believe it would have been a total disregard of the Government's responsibility to govern and bring down inflation in order to protect people on fixed incomes and to make certain that the Guaranteed Income Supplement and the concept of old age pension remain immune to attacks from those that would destroy it.

The Opposition likes to have the best of both worlds. They supported six and five. At least those Members in the corner did not support it. I suppose the temptation to address themselves to the fears of senior citizens was just too great for some Members. The fact still remains that those Canadians who must remain on a basic pension, and only the basic pension, have to make a little sacrifice.

The most difficult chore that a government is faced with in a democracy is to single out those who must pay or carry the burden of sacrifice in order to continue our democratic process. We have respected the need of those who unfortunately require the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and we will continue to index fully not only their GIS but their OAS as well. That group represents at least half of those Canadians who are collecting old age pensions.

I do not think I need to go on any further. I believe the figures with respect to the impact of indexing on the February cheques as opposed to the January cheques represent approximately 50 cents a month. If we all had our way, it would not even be that much, but as one who has prided himself on his concern for the senior citizen—I am sure all Members have this concern—we should be thankful that inflation has fallen to 7.2 per cent when capping is at 6 per cent. We should be thankful that the real impact on those who have to suffer the six and five implementation will be less. In reality, senior citizens are being asked to suffer the brunt of 1.2 per cent inflation, and not the original figure of last June which was over 11 per cent, therefore, rounded, almost 5 per cent.

I do not want to answer the hypothetical question, which I am sure should be asked, as to what we would have done had inflation continued at a rate of up to 15 per cent or 20 per cent. It is significant that it did not, and I am not even interested in attempting to claim that the six and five program was the main instrument in bringing it down, because then I would be partisan. My purpose in making this case today is really to respond to those senior citizens who have expressed to me, both by letter and in direct contact, their concerns, their worries and their uncertainties about what six and five means to them. It means, fortunately, very little to those few people whom it will affect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have three quite short questions. The Hon. Member has said in his speech that if a senior citizen has an income of $750 a month, that person will not be affected. He has also said that he is happy with the fact that the Government, in effect, intends to tax every senior citizen who makes $750 a month or more by 3 per cent of the OAS. That is a special tax which people who earn a salary of $750 a month do not have to pay. Is the Hon. Member happy with that figure of $750 a month? Is that the break point for what he considers to be sufficient income for senior citizens?

Miss MacDonald: That is the break point for universality.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have great respect for the Hon. Member and I apologize if I did not speak as clearly as I should have spoken. If he would check Hansard, he would find that at no time did I mention the specific figure of $750. He would have to explain where he heard that figure. What I said, in effect, was that those Canadians who do receive the GIS as well as the basic old age pension have my assurance, as I understand the Bill and the Government's position, that the GIS and basic old age pension will continue to be subject to full indexing as if the six and five program did not exist. I said that that is not true in the case of all Canadians fortunate enough not to need the GIS. I must express some puzzlement as to where the Hon. Member picked up the figure of $750. If I myself used that figure, then I apologize, but I am quite sure that I did not.

Miss MacDonald: Nine thousand dollars a year.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the combination of OAS and GIS does not even amount to $9,000 a year, which is where I derived the figure of $750 a month. What the Hon. Member is essentially saying is that, by voting tonight, the Government will take income away from every senior citizen in this country, 47 per cent of whom make $750 a month or more. The Hon. Member, through his intention to vote in this direction, is acknowledging his belief that $750 a month is sufficient for a senior citizen. That is the only implication.

I suggested in my speech this morning that we could vote for the six month hoist, and we will have that opportunity later this afternoon.

We could ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to ask every taxpayer to contribute 15 cents a month more, and then the Government could leave the situation unchanged with respect to senior citizens. I think that Canadians would give 15 cents a month more to the tax man so that senior citizens would not be hurt. I wonder what the Hon. Member thinks of that idea.

Mr. Mackasey: The Hon. Member should ask a question, not repeat his speech given this morning. There is a fundamental difference. I think that if we are to utilize the question period after someone speaks, we should try to stick to asking questions. I will read the speech of the Hon. Member because I usually do. I was very careful to avoid the subject as to whether or not the combination of GIS and OAS was sufficient. I did make the point, for instance, that inflation has continued in the other direction, that the Government and the House had been faced with the reality, the problem and the obvious concern that that combination was insufficient, and it is all a matter of judgment.

Mr. Hawkes: It is insufficient.

Mr. Mackasey: I think that if the Hon. Member reads Hansard, he will find that I said that if inflation had continued higher, with the limited incomes of senior citizens, the solution would have been to increase the basic old age pension. I am quite sure that is what I said. I notice that the young lady whom I respect, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald), is nodding her assent. It would have been imperative to increase the basic old age pension because it would have been very obvious to all of us that we were really creating immense hardship. I simply express satisfaction and relief that inflation has come down from 11.7 per cent to 7.2 per cent, and all of us should be very grateful that this has happened.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Lincoln rather belittles the fact that next month's cheques will only be decreased by some 50 cents. Two things must be recognized here. First, for some people a 50 cent decrease is significant. Second, it represents a slow but steady erosion of the base. That is our concern. However, I would like to ask the Minister one question. He rightly pointed to the fact that the GIS will be indexed and that people who are on the GIS will not suffer any immediate decrease in the money they receive. However, some 50 per cent of pensioners are not covered by GIS. Many of these people are just barely above the line.

Miss MacDonald: Three hundred thousand.

Mr. Manly: These people will have a reduction in the amount of money which they would have received. What is the Minister's comment?

Mr. Mackasey: Well, the "Member's" comment is simple. I am as concerned as you are. There is always a cut-off in every program. There is always that grey area and always someone who is $1 over assistance or $1 under it.

I thank the Hon. Member for calling me a Minister, but I am only an hon. backbencher.

I remember that very problem with Unemployment Insurance, when $1 or $2 meant a big difference in the tax bracket.

Mr. Manly: It is still there.

Mr. Mackasey: This is what happens in our so-called progressive tax system. I think we can all agree that one can make the case, as the Hon. Member made it, that there are people who do not quite qualify for the GIS but who could, if they had slightly less income. There must be a cut-off, I think we all agree, and that cut-off point is periodically reviewed. I am not suggesting for one moment that the basic old age pension should not in time be increased. However, as one who is as much in favour of social policy as anyone in that corner, I also understand the reality that we must be able to afford these things. It might be a condemnation of Canada that in 1983 we must take cost into consideration. However, let us compare our concern over our program with the situation in the United States. I ask Hon. Members which country is further ahead.

Mr. Gauthier: Canada.

Mr. Mackasey: Therefore, at the risk of appearing vain, arrogant and smug, which I am not, because I am as caring as the hon. gentleman, we have fashioned a good program. Those of us on this side of the House who espouse Liberal policy made sure that that basic program was not attacked by those I categorize as reactionaries, who periodically float the balloon at old age pensions, Family Allowances as something we cannot afford. I happen to believe that we must be able to afford them.

Miss MacDonald: You were talking about the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Mackasey: Therefore, if the hon. gentleman wants to tell me that there is a whole category of people who will suffer by the capping and who have a hard time living only on the old age pension because they are almost but not quite eligible for the GIS, I must agree. I would be more than pleased to discuss that matter with the Minister, as I am sure Hon. Members have intimated in their questions. In dwelling on that, I think we have unintentionally left the impression with most senior citizens that somehow something Draconian will happen to all who draw either the old age pension or the old age pension and the GIS. I am simply making the point that that is not true. It does not presume for one moment that there is not some hardship and some specialized cases which the hon. gentlemen pinpointed.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West for a question.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the figures given to us this morning suggest that people over 65 will contribute $18 this year to the federal Treasury and closer to $30 next year. The alternative is that every taxpayer in the country should contribute $1.80 and that senior citizens should keep the $18. The choice to be made at six o'clock this evening is whether the special tax should be applied to senior citizens rather than to all taxpayers.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) if he is satisfied with the Government's intention to make that tax apply for the remaining years of the lives of people now over age 65. Every senior citizen who makes $750 or more per month is being asked to make a contribution ten times the size the contribution would be if it were spread over every taxpayer in the country. As a man with a social conscience, can the Hon. Member defend supporting the Government's intention to deal with the seniors of the country in that fashion?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I have no trouble defending the Government. This Government identifies with senior citizens and has brought in the old age pension, Family Allowance, the Canada Pension Plan and UIC. I am proud to support one of the most compassionate Ministers that I have had the privilege of working with in my 20 years in the House of Commons.

If the Hon. Member has a persuasive case—and I am sure he has and that he believes in it—then I am sure there will be a huge groundswell of support for his speech and we will be inundated with thousands of letters from concerned Canadians to endorse his concept. In that case, I will be in the vanguard to help the Hon. Member sell his concept.

His argument is equally true of everything, however, and I am surprised to hear that from a Conservative. It is equally true of income tax. It is equally true of those who would equalize all incomes. Without getting into a philosophical argument with the hon. gentlemen, I would congratulate him on using the question period to advance his arguments. We will see how persuasive he is when the vote is taken.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, there are a few points that I want to make to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey). I should like to point out some errors he made in his historical reporting. If he examines the record, he will see that unemployment insurance payments were not started by a Liberal Government but by a Conservative Government. He should get that point straight.

He also made some reference to the fact that throughout its history the Liberal Party has done so well by senior citizens. When the late Mr. Harris was Finance Minister, he brought in a $6 increase for senior citizens at a time when they were in real distress. The "six buck boys" rode across the country claiming that was all they could spare for senior citizens. The Hon. Member should recall the history of the Liberal Party in this regard. It is not something he would want to brag about.

Mr. Lang: That was 25 years ago.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) says that was 25 years ago. There are many people who remember the way in which the Liberal Government of that day treated senior citizens. It was the basis of the debate that overturned the Liberal Government of that day and threw it out of office.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member is about to make his maiden speech.

Miss MacDonald: My colleague says that the Hon. Member for Kitchener is about to make his maiden speech, so perhaps we will hear from him on this subject.

The debate on Bill C-131, the Government's measure to limit the indexation of old age pensions, is unfortunately being brought to an abrupt and unnecessary end this afternoon by the imposition of closure. That is being done because the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) believes the debate has gone on too long. On this side of the House we believe that the debate should never have started. The spirit of the Bill is mean and petty. It is particularly miserly when you take into consideration that group of senior citizens whose incomes range just above the old age pension and GIS combined—people whose annual income is in the vicinity of $9,000 and $10,000. There are some 300,000 Canadians in that bracket and it is they who will feel the greatest impact from this Bill.

As well, the Bill achieves very little in the way of savings for the Government as it tries to combat the swollen and burgeoning deficit it has created. If we look at where we stood vis-à-vis inflation last year, we see that, as a result of this Bill, the Government will realize $10 or $15 million. That is a mere pittance compared to the Government's deficit spending this year which is upwards of $30 billion. That is for this year alone. But the Government reaches out to grab that $10 million from the senior citizens of the country at the same time as it continues its profligate spending on Government advertising, travel by Ministers and public servants or on fitting out offices. It is quite content to spend money in that way as it reaches out for the widows' mite.

The Government can argue that that is the way it is going to attain its objective of restraint, but at the same time it is handing out huge sums of money to bail out corporations that have got into trouble. How can the Government justify the fact that it is prepared to see $34 million go to Maislin Corporation, or half a billion dollars to Dome Petroleum while it claims it has to take $10 million away from the senior citizens of the country? Why should hand-outs to companies like this be right and proper while a senior citizen is asked to cut back a few dollars on his or her income? Those few extra dollars might make a difference to that senior citizen faced with the rising cost of living.

The eloquent Member for Lincoln said that a number of these senior citizens will have to practise a little sacrifice. Why should they have to practise a little sacrifice while the Government does not curtail its spending in other areas? That is why we on this side of the House cannot see any logic to the measure that is being pushed through this afternoon and, Mr. Speaker, neither can any senior citizen see any logic in this measure.

If the inflation rate continues at the 10 per cent rate it stood at last year, each senior citizen in the income bracket over and above $8,900 would stand to lose up to $300 in the next couple of years. That is what they would lose. That is a $300 penalty imposed on those who really cannot afford it, those who are not unionized or organized to argue their case and who depend on people here in the House of Commons to argue it for them. That is what I mean when I say that this Bill is mean and petty in spirit. This Bill will not achieve very much for the Government, but it will penalize people in a way that is totally uncalled for.

I have said what they would lose if inflation were to continue at 10 per cent as it was last year. Suppose we take the optimistic scenario that the Hon. Member for Lincoln put forward this afternoon and the Minister of National Health and Welfare put forward at different times, that inflation comes down to 6 per cent and 5 per cent the following year or near it. Suppose we were to accept that scenario. One would have to ask what would be the use of this Bill at all because it does not save the Government any money. It does not do one single thing. All this does is to create anxiety, concern and uncertainty among hundreds of thousands of senior citizens all across this country. That is what it has been doing right along. The Hon. Member for Lincoln termed those anxieties and uncertainties "misconceptions". I have to tell him they are there. They are there because of the way in which this Bill was imposed.

I find it difficult to understand why it is necessary to proceed with this Bill. If the Government is out $10 million or $15 million, it can find that in savings in other ways. If inflation comes down, it gains absolutely nothing from this Bill and does not need to put it forward in the first place. Nothing that the Miniter or her colleague has said has convinced me or other Members of this side of the House that the Bill is necessary. Neither did they convince any of the organizations which appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when this Bill was in committee for study in detail.

I just want to list some of the organizations which appeared before us: The Canadian Council on Social Development, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the Economists and Sociologists and Statisticians Association and the Canadian Labour of Congress. All these organizations represented thousands of people who are staunchly opposed to the legislation.

The other day the Minister stated that there were no organizations which wanted to appear before the Committee when this Bill was being studied in detail. What she seemed unaware was that many organizations made their views about this Bill known when they appeared before the Committee on the complementary piece of legislation, Bill C-132, which is to limit the indexation of Family Allowances. I want to mention a couple of organizations which took that opportunity when they were appearing in committee on Bill C-132 to address themselves to the Bill we are debating this afternoon, Bill C-131. I mention two of them in particular because they represent the views of women. As is a known fact, the great majority of people of pensionable age, 60 per cent, are women.

The first group I want to refer to is the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. That is the advisory Council to Government on the Status of Women. I want to quote what its President, Lucie Pepin, had to say at the committee hearings when the advisory council appeared on December 12, 1982. As reported at page 52:54 of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, she said:

—we are saying that in spite of the economic situation, which is very uncertain at this time, we would like the Government not to take any action in the area of family allowances and pensions. Not only do women make up the majority in these two groups, but, as several studies have shown, the poorest people in Canada are women. So obviously, that is what we are saying. We are asking the Government to be cautious because we do not agree with the action they wish to take. We feel that these two programs should not come under the six and five program.

That was the statement of the President of the Government's Advisory Council on the Status of Women. Did the Government listen to what was being said? It totally ignored the advice it was being given by the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. That should not surprise any of us. On many occasions previously the Advisory Council or its President has spoken out. I think particularly of its former President, Doris Anderson. We know how completely ignored the advice put forth by the Advisory Council has been by the Government on critical issue after critical issue.

One of the other groups that appeared before the Committee was the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. That is the umbrella group which represents some 230 women's organizations across this country, some three million to four million women. They, too, had strong opposition to this Bill. I want to read what they had to say at page 51:10 of the report of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs when appearing before us on December 9 last. It reads:

—we want to emphasize that the companion Bill to this one, which would limit the indexing of the Old Age Pension, makes even less sense to us. The main losers in capping the indexation will not be the wealthiest elderly, because they would have paid back a good part of their increase in taxes. As a result those who will be most affected are the near-poor elderly whose income is just a little too high to entitle them to a Guaranteed Income Supplement for the elderly poor.

We, therefore, call on all Members of Parliament—

She said all Members of Parliament, not just Opposition Members of Parliament.

—in the name of equity, as well as in the name of efficiency, to vote against both of these truly bad Bills.

That was the view of these two major organizations representing the women across this country, to vote against these two truly bad Bills. The Government has not taken that advice. I know it has not listened sympathetically to the views expressed by organizations, groups, individuals, senior citizens, Opposition Members, just about everyone has expressed opposition to this Bill, except Government Members. We are opposed to it because it is mean, petty, penalizes those who can least afford it, strikes out at women in particular and accomplishes very little except to exacerbate uncertainty, anxiety and concern among Canada's senior citizens.

I have received hundreds of letters and calls from across the country, on this issue. I talked to people in my constituency. I listened to what they had to say. I read their letters. I listened to those who came into my office.

I take calls from people who are truly upset because this Bill has created such uncertainty that they feel they do not know where the Government will take action next or how it will next take action against them. I try to reassure them that their interests are being spoken to in the House of Commons, because a good many of us are trying to do that. But how can a person be really reassuring when the Government moves in, as it does this afternoon, with closure to put an end to debate on this Bill? How can you really reassure people that their interests are going to be protected when the Government lines up all its backbenchers and says, "Vote against it. Cut off debate. Don't let anything more be said on this issue." I hope that all senior citizen who are today represented by a Liberal Member of Parliament will take the opportunity to get in touch with that Liberal Member of Parliament and make it known very clearly how strongly they feel about the way their Member of Parliament has voted to impose this restraint on senior citizens, showing their responsibility for the difficulties which are being created by the Government.

• (1620)

It is very important, Mr. Speaker, that pensioners understand just why the Government is pushing this measure through. We all know that the economic situation in this country is in a terrible mess. Even the Government has to acknowledge that at this point. The Hon. Member for Kitchener says that it is not true that the country is in an economic mess.

Mr. Lang: I said you sounded very happy about it.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member for Kitchener just has to read a few of the reports which are being put out by every international organization in the world to find out just how bad the economic mess is, and that economic mess has been brought on by the economic policies of the Liberal Government.

Mr. Schroder: Not true.

Miss MacDonald: Not true? I know that that is what the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Schroder) is saying, it is not true that it has been brought on by the Liberal Government. I am sure he is going to say that it is due to the international recession. Is that right? He nods his head. He says it is all due to the international recession. Well, I would like to ask him why it is that the recent OECD report which was published in December, 1982, shows that Canada's economic growth, its industrial development, ranks 24th out of 24 industrialized countries in the world? Why is it that, given all of those other international factors these other 23 countries had to absorb like Canada, they still do far better than we do? Can the Hon. Member tell me why we are at the bottom of the heap? Why is it that at this point we rank behind Italy, Portugal, Turkey, Iceland? Why is it we are at the bottom? It is because there is no responsibility here in this country for the economic policies which have been developed. That is exactly why we are 24th out of 24 industrialized countries. It is because the policies of this Government over the last two or three years have driven us into that position. And, as a result, what does the Government do? What does it do when it sees we are in this economic mess? It looks around the country and says, "Who are the people we can make the scapegoats?" When the Government began to come to grips with this situation, as it has just begun to do, belatedly, who did it make the scapegoats for the things it has done wrong in the past? The first people it singles out are the senior citizens of this country.

That is what is wrong with this particular Bill. The Government is blaming its own failings on those who had nothing to do with it. I want to advise the Hon. Members opposite that they have their priorities totally wrong when they turn and point to the senior citizens of this country and say, "You are the ones who are responsible for the profligate spending. You are the ones who are responsible for the riotous living which has caused this economic mess." It is this Government which is responsible for the profligate spending. It is this Government which is responsible for the riotous living which has driven Canada into 24th place out of 24 industrialized countries. It is not the senior citizens of this country.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we are so staunchly opposed to this Bill. We do not feel that the senior citizen should be asked to bear the burden of the Government's mistakes. That is why we feel, sir, that not only should this particular measure be given a six months' hoist this afternoon, but that this Bill should be lost forever.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). I realize it is unfortunate to have to introduce facts into the situation for the Hon. Member, but I am going to do that and I will ask her to respond to such facts. We hear from the Opposition day in and day out, "Let's have some restraints. Let's reduce the deficit. Let's bring inflation down." Day in and day out they get up, and every time the Government introduces some form of restraint, the Opposition starts putting on its social conscience, something which has never manifested itself when the opposition was in Government because it has never introduced any major social programs.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands says our economic trouble is due to profligate Government spending. Let us look at the facts, Mr. Speaker. I will quote from the "Economic Review April 1982" put out by the Department of Finance of Canada, and we can compare total Government expenditures. If we look at this we will see that total expenditures of the central Government, the national Government, the Government of Canada, as compared to its GNP, between 1969 and 1972, was 14.0 per cent. In the United Kingdom it was 19.9 per cent; in the United States it was 18.0 per cent; in France it was 17.9 per cent. Let us move up to the middle of the decade. In Canada it was 16.8 per cent; in France, 18.3 per cent; in the United Kingdom, 24.0 per cent; in the United States, 19.6 per cent. All are greater than Canada. Let us move to 1979. In Canada, 15.6 per cent; in France, 18.2 per cent; in the United Kingdom, 24.6 per cent; in the United States, 18.2 per cent.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, the Government's spending on goods and services is not the cause of the increased deficit. The fact of the matter is we have had a recession which has reduced revenues and increased expenditures in social programs because here in Canada, this Government has not taken an axe to the social programs as they have in the United States and in Great Britain, Conservative Governments which the Opposition has endorsed in the past.

I ask the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands why the Opposition continually hounds us that the deficit be brought down and, at the same time, whenever the Government introduces restraint in the transfer payments, or in any other area, the Opposition is up squawking? Put your money where your mouth is.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to be laughing. It was just because of how ludicrous that performance was by the Hon. Member for Kitchener. The Hon. Member asks about Government restraint and why it should not be supported. I would state to the Hon. Member that if the Government would bring in restraint on its $70 million of Government advertising, you would see plenty of support from this side of the House. If the Government would bring in restraint—

Mr. Lang: It has been reduced from $90 million to $70 million. That is a reduction of about 25 per cent.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member says it is reduced. It is not at all reduced. It has gone up this year, and the Hon. Member for Kitchener knows it.

Mr. Lang: No, it has been reduced from $90 million.

Miss MacDonald: Not only that, Mr. Speaker. Government expenditures on Ministers' travel, Government expenditures on Public Service travel, Government expenditures, as the Auditor General has pointed out, have gone up in every single area. Why is there not restraint practised in those areas? Why does restraint first have to be imposed on the senior citizens of this country?

• (1630)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there has been restraint by the Government on its Departments—that is the major thrust of the six and five program. The Government put a six and five limit on administrative costs, public servants and Members of Parliament as an example for the country, and asked all Canadians to share in bringing about a six and five world. When we talk about singling somebody out, every time there has been a piece of six and five legislation, the Opposition focuses in on one group and forgets to mention all the others in the public and private sectors who have been asked to help. The Opposition forgets to pay a compliment to the people of Canada who have endorsed the six and five program and who understand the importance of working together to bring inflation down.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member still goes back to saying that the people in the front line, the ones whom the Minister is calling on to lead the fight against inflation, have to be the senior citizens of this country. He agrees with that.

The Hon. Member has introduced a figure which I think is a very important one and perhaps he will elaborate on it. He has said for the first time that I have heard it admitted by the Government that its advertising program this year was $90 million. No one, not even the Minister, has admitted to that heretofore. So now what we would like is a breakdown of that $90 million so we can point out to the Hon. Member exactly where money can be saved so that it is not the senior citizens of this country who are made the scapegoats of the Government's program.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to accept any representations the Hon. Member would like to make with regard to ways in which the Government can reduce any excessive expenditures. If the Hon. Member would like a complete breakdown of the expenditures of the Government's advertising, she can put a question on the Order Paper and that will be answered.

Mr. Taylor: Yes, two years later.

Mr. Lang: The major thrust of this legislation is to reduce inflationary expectations. It is not to take away large sums of money from senior citizens. This Government and this Party are the ones who have given senior citizens income security without any assistance, in fact with opposition, from the Conservative Party of Canada. Now, the Hon. Member clearly does not understand the thrust of the legislation to reduce inflationary expectations, she has not addressed that issue at any point in her remarks.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Kitchener has said this Bill is not to take money away from senior citizens. May I ask him, then, why we are going through the futility of this exercise?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, what I actually said was this Bill is not to take away large sums of money from senior citizens.

Miss MacDonald: Oh, just small sums.

Mr. Lang: The Bill in fact takes a minimum amount away from senior citizens, as has been indicated by the Minister. What it does do is to put a limit of six and five on indexation in general of Government expenditures through the six and five program. In addition, the six and five applies to indexation under the Income Tax Act. So that we are dealing with the problem of revenues indexed downward and expenditures indexed upward. Anyone with common sense will realize that is a deficit producing situation.

Miss MacDonald: Well, now the Hon. Member for Kitchener has said it is not going to take large sums away, just small sums away from senior citizens. Well, if it is just going to take small sums away from senior citizens, I would suggest that total can be found elsewhere. That is the argument we have been making all along, that $10 million can be much more easily found in the $90 million expenditure he mentioned with regard to Government advertising. Surely it would be more fair, more equitable and more just to take that $10 million out of the Government advertising program rather than to take it out of the pittance which is sent to senior citizens. That is exactly the argument.

The Hon. Member has agreed with that and I hope that when the time comes for the vote this afternoon he will stand up and oppose the legislation on that basis.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, quite clearly we are asking Canadians to contribute a small amount from each sector and in that way no one sector of society is asked to take on a greater burden, which is what the Hon. Member was trying to criticize us for before. In fact, we have asked many different groups in our society—in fact all groups in the public and private sector—to adapt to a six and five world. By doing that we are able to ask each group to contribute a small amount. This is called reducing inflationary expectations.

Now, with regard to the Government spending on advertising, I totally agree with the Hon. Member that this is an area where we can make savings, and the Government is making savings. But the Hon. Member talks about Government advertising as if it were totally wasted. Much of it is used to inform people of the important programs available to them.

Miss MacDonald: The Hon. Member for Kitchener keeps trying to justify the unjustifiable. He keeps trying to say that if we are going to save money, we should be able to save it out of the cheques which go to senior citizens. I keep suggesting to him ways in which the Government could save that money and practise its restraint elsewhere. I mentioned one area, my colleague mentioned another. A prime candidate for savings is that of the Press Council. The $20 million has not been spent, it has not even been allocated to anyone as yet, to impose some kind of censorship on the free press of this country. I know the Government is willing and wants to do that, but perhaps he will consider the $20 million as a candidate for saving rather than taking the money away from senior citizens.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order in connection with the ten-minute questioning, which this time was 12 minutes. It was never intended that a person would get up and make speeches on which he could not be questioned. In this last instance, the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Lang) spoke for five and half minutes altogether and he made a speech each time. The first time it was for three and a half minutes. Now, if he is going to do that, I would like the privilege of questioning him. He should be asking questions, and if he wants to make a speech he should stand up and make it so that we can question him.

Mr. Beatty: Flora was dueling with an unarmed man.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member sought the floor on a point of order and of course the Chair must recognize that. I do not want to rule on the point of order, because this has happened twice today and I feel that if I do so I will begin to create a series of precedents as to how the ten-minute period is to be used to the satisfaction of the Members. For example, earlier today I indicated the question in my own mind as to whether it is the wish of Members that the ten-minute exchange be relevant to the Bill or simply relevant to the preceding Member's speech. In my view, and I warned Members that I did not want to make that a ruling, it is adequate if the ten-minute interchange is simply relevant to the previous speaker's speech. However, in the same manner I want to point out in this subject raised by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that it is not necessary to conclude that only questions and answers are part of the ten-minute exchange. It is perfectly acceptable that a Member may choose to use some time for a comment of some nature. The only sense I have of the Committee's report in this regard is that, and in this sense it is clear, comments should be short and sharp.

Now, I did let the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary speak a little longer than I think I should have. On the other hand, I deliberately added to the ten-minute period an amount of time adequate for the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) to make a reply. We are all trying to work out the best way to proceed during this ten-minute period. I will avoid a ruling on the Hon. Member's point of order for the reasons I have just given. Perhaps, as the days go on, the matter will sharpen up in due course.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak against Bill C-131 because the principle involved in it is very important. It is the same principle which is involved in Bill C-132 and Bill C-133. The principle is that the Government has chosen to cut the spending power of certain groups, not the spending power of all people, as was quite erroneously, if not misleadingly, said by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. There are certain important groups which the Government has refused to touch with its six and five program. In this case, in Bill C-131, it proposes to cut the spending power of about one million pensioners. Last summer the Government and the Tories basically agreed to this. The Tories would like the public to forget what they agreed to last summer, but I doubt that the public has forgotten or will forget.

The Government tries to cover itself, in the words of the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), by talking about the programs it introduced during more prosperous years in the past. He mentioned various programs. In fact, all of them were first proposed, and one of them first introduced, by the CCF and its Leader, not by the Liberal Government. It was the CCF, as led by James Woodsworth, who first put to the conscience of Parliament and this nation the necessity of providing social security. Although the CCF did not have the constitutional opportunity to introduce things such as Unemployment Insurance, it had and used the opportunity to introduce medicare. It pioneered medicare on the continent of North America. The claim of the Hon. Member for Lincoln is as hollow as most claims made on behalf of the Government.

Furthermore, now that inflation has been brought down by the international recession caused by the policies of this Government and its allies in the United States and Great Britain, the Hon. Member is trying to claim that this Bill will not make any difference. The Hon. Member for Lincoln suggested that it would amount to only 50 cents—why bother spending all the hours spent by the Government preparing the Bill, all the dollars spent by the Government advertising its program and all the time necessary to debate this Bill, if all that is at stake is 50 cents? It is quite an incredible statement that the Hon. Member made. I do not think anyone could take him seriously. In fact, I think he is known as a man with a great sense of humour. I am sure he was speaking with his tongue in both cheeks.

My point is that the Government has chosen to cut certain classes of society and has gone against the principles about which it bragged, in the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), less than five years ago when he was taking a different tack than the one he is taking today. This was also at a time of inflation, in 1977, when he said:

> In our society pensions provide a means of sharing risk so that we can retire in reasonable security and dignity without fear of the future. Protecting pensions from inflation by indexing them to increases in the cost of living should be an integral part of our pension schemes. Indexing does not give pensioners an increasingly larger claim on our economy's production—

This is in contrast to the groups the Government is now letting off scotfree. It does not give them a larger claim. He continued:

> —that is, more money to buy things they could not earlier afford. Rather indexing merely enables pensioners to maintain roughly their same standard of living. Even a modest rate of inflation destroys at a devastating rate the buying power of people on fixed incomes. Pensioners are out of the workforce and cannot bargain or strike for larger incomes.

I would add that pensioners cannot raise the price of oil, interest rates in banks, the price of housing or the price of other goods on the market in order to obtain more income. They are the ones who are defenceless. They are not the cause of inflation. In any event, the Prime Minister said:

> They are not the cause of inflation. They are its victim. We have an obligation to help protect them.

Well, that was almost five years ago. Clearly the Prime Minister has forgotten what he said then, but the people of Canada do not forget. By contrast it illustrates that the Government and the Tory Opposition, in complete agreement and totally in bed with each other on this point, will not cut the incomes of oil companies. The Government will not cut the excessive profits of banks and other lending institutions. It has refused to take any measure to restore the kind of control which was placed on banks by legislation for many decades until the 1960s. It will not even take any measure to acquire income tax from hundreds of Canadians who are earning more than $100,000 per year. These people not only are not cut, they are not taxed at all. The Government knows this well because it has reported on them. It refuses to take any action year after year to collect taxes from these people. Instead, it wishes to cut three classes of citizens. One is the pensioners. The second is the mothers of children. The third is public employees and some private employees. It is promoting the cutting of wages of all employees. We should notice that this is directed in a class sense against employees and completely excludes employers. Employers are not to be cut by six and five. Employers are invited to cut their employees by six and five and, glory be, we have all kinds of patriotic employers who are willing to cut wages. So what is new?

In Spadina there are many pensioners. Many of them have telephoned and written to me to oppose this legislation. We have pensioners in the Senator Croll Apartments, at 250 Davenport, at 91 Augusta, in the Kensington Manor, in Central Park Lodge, in the Queen/John Streets Building, in Laughlen Lodge and at The Good Shepherd. Also there are many pensioners throughout the housing area of Spadina, people living in old houses. Many of them have paid for these houses over 10 to 40 years with hard work both in earning money with which to pay their mortgages and in maintaining their houses with their own labour. Now they are often living in these houses with relatives and maintaining them with careful savings. These people manage their money very carefully because they do not have much. Thanks to the Government they will have even less in real spending power.

Spadina is mainly populated by people who work to earn a living. There are a few self-employed people in Spadina, although very few of them are wealthy. Mainly the people of Spadina are construction workers, factory workers, building cleaning workers, almost all of whom are women, and domestic workers, almost all of whom are women. I mentioned factories but I especially want to mention the garment industry in which the great majority of workers are women, and the workers in small stores, in hundreds of restaurants, many of whom work 12 and 14-hour days, six, if not seven days a week, just to earn a very modest living. These are people who are often victimized by our economy even while they are employed. These people receive much less for their work than the people who get off scotfree from paying tax. The $100,000 and $500,000 types get off scotfree from paying tax. Instead of paying tax they would rather pay a lawyer, an accountant or a lobbyist with the Liberal or the Tory Party.

It is for the poor people who have already suffered that this Government is providing a cut in their pensions. The Government has decided to breach its contract. This Government, which is supposed to enforce the rule of law, as all Governments are, has decided to breach its contract, not only with its own civil service pensioners, but in a political sense to breach the kind of solemn contract which the present Prime Minister made years ago and reiterated five years ago in the words that I just read a few moments ago.

I want to quote a comment made by the Canadian Labour Congress. The Canadian Labour Congress is not speaking only for its own members, some of whom have adequate private pensions, adequate compared to what the majority of people in this country have, but it is speaking for all Canadians, including the poorest. It reads as follows:

> Since 1964, OAS benefits have declined from approximately 20 per cent of average wages and salaries to approximately 14 per cent.

With average wages and salaries that could be considered to have roughly kept pace with prices—they have not, they have fallen behind—this means that old age pensions are two-thirds of what they used to be in buying power. These are the people whose buying power this Government now presumes to cut still further.

We have heard again and again and again, from the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), other Government Members and the Parliamentary Secretary, that this is such a small cut. We have heard them say, "Do not worry about it, it is only 50 cents," or whatever they like to say. But the question is why. Apart from the time spent debating this Bill, advertising it, and the clerical book work that is needed to make a change, I am quite sure that this costs more than the 50 cents. What is the Government's purpose? The saving clearly is not worth the aggravation that it causes to the individual pensioner. Nobody likes to have their buying power cut even if it is said the cut is not very great. Why make a cut if it will not bring in any serious revenue?

The Government's first appeal is to inflation. The Government says, "We have bad times. We have to do this to stop inflation." The Government has to cut payments to mothers, employees and pensioners to stop inflation while the Government allows the banks, the oil companies and the other large multinationals to run wild with their prices. That does not make any sense. A cut of the size the Government is talking about, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), does not do anything to stop inflation. It could easily be outdistanced by far by a saving in the Government's own advertising, in which it tried to misrepresent the six and five program to the Canadian people.

Why? This is a question the Government has never answered satisfactorily to anyone in this House or outside of the House. Therefore, I will suggest two reasons why this Government has chosen to single out and attack three classes of our society: employees, mothers of children, and pensioners, in this case especially the pensioners.

First, this is a neat way of undermining the principle of universality which the Government, along with the Tories, now wishes to do away with. What the Government has done is to reduce that part of the pension, a right that not only makes people rely more on that part of the pension which is subject to a means test but, in fact, it will force more pensioners from one group into another.

The Hon. Member for Lincoln talked about the people who are just on the margin. I was too far away but I thought perhaps I could see tears in his eyes when he was talking about these people who were just one dollar over the level at which they would get GIS. He is not here now. I am sure he has gone out to get himself another handkerchief with which to wipe his eyes. But the Bill which the Hon. Member for Lincoln is supporting, presumably, the Bill his Government has put forward and the Bill put forward by the Minister whom he says he admires so much, will take some of these pensioners, not on GIS, and force them to the level at which they will have to apply for GIS. In other words, the Hon. Member will force more of the people of this country to rely on a non-universal type of pension. I think that is the intention of this Government. I think this is a small step, along with other steps this Government has taken, in such things as medicare, to destroy the very principle which the Hon. Member for Lincoln claimed to be supporting, the principle that there were certain allowances and programs that people have basically as a right. The Hon. Member for Lincoln claimed there was no change in the basic principle of a basic pension. Yet, he will be voting an hour from now to change that very thing, the principle of universality.

Since this Government will not give us a reason that makes any sense, we have to guess at it. I believe there is another reason why the Government is so eager to break its promise. On this point I will quote again from the Canadian Labour Congress which has, over the years, been a very good defender of pensioners and poor people, far beyond the ranks of its membership. This passage reads:

> It clearly breaks a promise to Canada's current elderly, namely, the promise that the OAS program will provide benefits of a given real value. But not only does Bill C-131 break a promise to the current elderly, it raises doubts as to whether the arrangements that are now in place will be maintained for future generations of elderly Canadians. The fact that the Government of Canada feels free to reduce OAS benefits for reasons of short-term fiscal expendiency has the potential to breed a great deal of cynicism about the security of all future public pension benefits.

Another passage, referring to pensions, reads:

> They should be treated as incomes to which people have earned rights—

I want to emphasize that point, Mr. Speaker. This is based on years and years of work by people who built Canada. These people have earned a right to a pension. This Government is now breaching its political promise to them. It is breaching a pledge that it made, again and again, so it could be re-elected. Writing about the pensions, this passage reads:

> They should be treated as incomes to which people have earned rights based on the type of compact among generations mentioned above.

That is the position of the labour movement of Canada. It is the position of the Party I represent, and I wish we could fight the next election and the one after that on better issues than this. I wish the Government opposite and the Tories would agree not to trample on pensioners, on mothers with children and on employees as segregated from their employers. We still have to find this other reason. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has kindly given us the slogan. What she has said repeatedly here in this House and in committee is that the reason for this aggravating and senseless imposition on pensioners, employees and mothers with children, is to mobilize them. Her great slogan is "mobilize". During World War II, I and others joined the Forces because we were mobilized to fight an enemy. Others were mobilized to work in the factories and produce the means we needed to fight the enemy. However, no type of mobilization is being carried on through this Bill. Rather, it is immobilization. Rather, it is an attack on people's morale. Rather, it is an attempt to divide and set the pensioners against the workers, to divide and paralyze the people of this country so that they will have no spirit to resist the actions of this Government and of the Tory Party, which would like to do the same and worse.

• (1700)

The mobilization argument is the phoniest argument I have ever heard, even from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). It is as phoney as a three-dollar bill. She does not want to mobilize people. She wants to immobilize and paralyze them and set them fighting against each other so as to weaken the fibre of this country. I am sorry that the Government has chosen a tactic like this which does nothing to stop inflation and will do great harm to the Canadian people.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member who just spoke for some concrete proof that the Conservative Party is against universality.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to think all the way back to the months of June and July in 1982 when he, if he was present in the House, voted for the basic principle which he now claims to oppose. The basic principle which was laid out in the Bill at that time was directed primarily against employees. In other words, it was against one class, segregated from others. The Bill which they did not oppose was also directed against a certain class of pensioners. In that respect it was undermining universality. The Hon. Member and his colleagues, with one exception, voted for it last summer.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Member may have forgotten that the only immediate effect of that Bill was to cut the salaries of Members of Parliament. If he thinks that we should not have been singled out—

Mr. Deans: That is not so at all.

Mr. Hawkes: —then I do not buy his logic. We voted to cut our own salaries to provide some type of leadership to the nation.

Throughout the three series of specific Bills on six and five affecting families and pensioners, we have been consistent in each case in moving an amendment at committee and report stages to cut the effects of these Bills down to one year rather than two years. The NDP has flipped and flopped in different situations. Why have they not been consistent in trying to make these Bills half as bad, and voted with us based on that logic?

Mr. Heap: With respect to the first point raised by the Hon. Member, there was a great deal more contained in last summer's legislation than only the cuts on the salaries of Members of Parliament. As the Hon. Member well knows, it contained a great deal more, and there was no attempt by either the Government or the Opposition to segregate those issues. They were all lumped in together.

Of course, it gives the Hon. Member an excuse that may suit him and his wife, if he has one, and his brother-in-law, if he has one, and it may suit a few people to try to excuse themselves for having voted for it. However, the main thrust of that Bill, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said, was to cut indexing for civil servants, in other words, to cut the indexing of employees. That whole principle at that time was supported by the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

In regard to the cosmetic and superficial amendments that have occasionally been introduced by him and his Party, we have supported those which seemed like a genuine improvement, but not when they simply attempted to hide the actual nature of the Bill.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak next but at this point I would like to ask a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) for a question.

Mr. Irwin: My question is to the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Perhaps I did not hear him clearly but he used a catch word, "class discrimination" or "class action". He indicated that we only moved against public employees. The Members of Parliament are the employers. Was not the same six and five provision made against the employers as it was against the employees?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would read the legislation he will find that it is directed against employees. That is its wording. In fact, I believe all of us here are employees individually. We all individually determine our own salary, unless perhaps it is the Prime Minister. We are employees of the Government. Perhaps the Members on the far side could be considered employers.

The fact is that the philosophy of the Bill was directed primarily, if not exclusively, against employees. This is not something that was invented by anyone else. It was invented by the Government.

Mr. Irwin: I will narrow it down for the Hon. Member. Is the Government not the employer and did the Government not take the six and five cut?

Mr. Heap: No. The Government did not take a cut. The Government's individual Members took a cut, but they are not the employer. The Government is just that, the Government which continues to collect as many taxes as it can. The Government continues to raise prices far beyond six and five.

Mr. Irwin: What about your staff employees?

Mr. Heap: The Government did not even reduce the staff allowance of the Member for Sault Ste. Marie, myself or anyone else below $86,600 for this fiscal year. It did not reduce the amount of money available to us as individual employers. It only sought to reduce the amount of money that we could pay to our employees. In other words, the attack was on the employees.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, my question is with respect to the Hon. Member's previous answer. Because of the example he chose, is he prepared to admit in public that our record on universality for Family Allowance and pensions is clear and consistent? Will he also admit to the House that one of the very few pieces of legislation that we were able to get through the House in the brief two months of the Clark Government was, in fact, an improvement in the pension situation for women? That was one of our first orders of business and something which we accomplished.

Mr. Heap: We know, as a matter of history, that the Conservative Party originally opposed the idea of pensions. During their brief appearance on the other side of the House a couple of years ago, they were studying the very idea of eliminating universality. That was their intention. If they had not been kicked out they would have wiped out universality.

Mr. Hawkes: The Hon. Members has just made an assertion to the House. Where is the proof that we were studying the elimination of universality?

Mr. Heap: Under their then Minister of Health, that was the direction of the Conservative Government.

Mr. Hawkes: If the Hon. Member had attended committee meetings, he would have discovered that there are three major parts to assistance to families in the family support area. One is Family Allowance, one is the income tax deduction and the other is the Child Tax Credit. He would have seen rather strenuous arguments for the need to study the Family Allowance system and the conclusion that it happens to be the fairest to the poor people in the nation and that more money should perhaps go into it and less to other parts of the system.

That is the thrust this Party had in committee. It comes about after careful analysis of a social support system which currently exists. It is not composed of rhetoric. Will the Hon. Member acknowledge that that is the thrust which I personally have carried in committee for several months?

Mr. Heap: I have attended committee meetings. I am aware that one can find a wide variety of opinions among individual Members of the Tory Party. They are the strangest collection of oddballs. I am referring to the main thrust of the Tory Party, not only over the years but even this year and last year, during which time its Members have supported the idea of imposing six and five on employees, on pensioners and on mothers.

Mr. Cosgrove: And themselves, universally.

Mr. Ron Irwin (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to address a few issues with respect to Bill C-131. I was pleased that the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) spoke directly ahead of me because it would give me a chance to defend the Official Opposition. I do not accept the fact that the Official Opposition is against universality. Periodically, one will hear Hon. Members opposite speaking against it, more to cause debate. I do not think anyone in the NDP and I do not think the overwhelming majority of the Liberal Party Members in this House are against universality. It is something which is accepted in our system, and something we want to foster if we can afford it.

The Hon. Member for Spadina was just playing a little mischief on the House when he suggested that either the Liberals or the Conservatives were against universality. I am glad that he cleared up the concept of public employees. I am pleased that he did admit that Government members did take a cut as the public employees took a cut. He suggested that our budgets increased. Our budgets increased because we have inflation. If he does not understand that, it is no wonder he puts the question in the House and does not understand why the six and five program is necessary. Either he does not understand it, or he understands it and is against it. It is either one or the other. He should clearly state which of these alternatives he is speaking for or against, and he should not come here and play games with catch words which I thought went out with 1920 socialism—

Mr. Cosgrove: Communism.

Mr. Irwin: —like communism, like class discrimination.

Mr. Keeper: He did not say communism. He said group of people.

Mr. Irwin: It is gibberish and nonsense, and I do not accept it. The Hon. Member referred to the Canadian Labour Congress and its position. The riding of Spadina does not have the same industrial mix as the riding of Sault Ste. Marie, but it has much the same multicultural mix. They are very similar. I have been through the Hon. Member's riding. As a matter of fact, I heard the Hon. Member when he was more cogent and mellow, and that was much before he got into politics. He is not that way now, probably as a result of the influence of the 30 odd other NDP Members.

Mr. Keeper: Before he got into politics? It must be a long time ago.

Mr. Irwin: Well, it was before he was elected. It was the 30 odd other NDP Members here who turned him so bitter against Liberals, per se. Perhaps if he began to know a few more of us and went to a few more committee meetings, he would understand that they think the same things he does. Concerning the Canadian Labour Congress—

Mr. Manly: My dad was a Liberal; how much more do you need to know?

Mr. Irwin: I could make a great comment, but I will not get into where the Hon. Member comes from.

Mr. Manly: I come from Winnipeg.

Mr. Irwin: Right now the Canadian Labour Congress is interested in jobs. In my riding, 20 per cent to 30 per cent of the people are unemployed. I do not know the figures but I suppose that 15 per cent to 20 per cent of the people in the Hon. Member's riding are unemployed because of its reliance on construction. The Canadian Labour Congress wants jobs.

Retired people in this country who have children and grandchildren who do not have jobs want jobs and a policy of job creation. They will accept 50 cents less a month from their pensions.

Mr. Keeper: You have got a policy of depression.

Mr. Irwin: We have a program which leads to jobs.

Mr. Keeper: But you do not.

Mr. Irwin: That is where the country and where the Canadian Labour Congress is at. I suggest that the Hon. Member check with the Canadian Labour Congress.

The test with respect to Bill C-131 is twofold. First, did the Government take an overview, and did it deal equitably and fairly with the senior citizens? It will be for the public to decide.

I think that this could be termed "the six bit debate", because that is exactly what it will cost a month, $1.50 or less a month if this Bill goes through. The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Miss MacDonald) said, "It is a pittance", and those were her exact words. She then said that senior citizens are "anxious and concerned". I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who is causing this concern? The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands said that when dealing with senior citizens who phone her, she tells them that the matter is being addressed. I would suggest that what she is telling them is, "Those Liberals down there do not know what they are doing and they are out to get you, but the Opposition will take care of your interests".

Mr. Keeper: She is right on.

Mr. Irwin: If she says here that it is a pittance, then she should tell them over the phone that this is a pittance Bill.

I have listened to the debate all day. One Hon. Member said that we have wasted $3 million on this debate, six days at half a million dollars a day. Another Member of the Official Opposition said that we have not debated the Bill long enough and that we should continue. I am listening and I want to learn. I have heard suggestions coming to me from the left, from the right and from the centre of the Party opposite, and I am no wiser for having been here the whole day.

Mr. Keeper: That is obvious.

Mr. Irwin: What is the overview? First, there is world inflation, world unemployment and world recession. Second, there are record deficits. We had to borrow over $20 billion this year. Why must we borrow? It is because we want to keep social programs in place, and that is the only reason. It would have been just as easy to do what was done in Peru or Chile in an attempt to balance their budgets and continue their social programs.

The third part of the overview concerns the need for leadership. I do not think the six and five program is a panacea. I do not even suggest that it is a cure-all. However, it gives the direction which the public wants, even though the Opposition does not understand it.

If we cannot control inflation and set a direction, what good are savings? In 1973, the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands returned from a visit to a country, Chile, where inflation was running at 1,000 per cent a year. As soon as people received their salaries, they went out and bought goods because the next day their money was virtually worthless.

If we cannot control inflation, what good is the saving? Second, what good is an industrial policy? That is only something on paper, and it will not work. I agree with the Hon. Members. The bottom line is a healthy economy, for if we do not have a healthy economy, we will not have all of the cultural benefits which the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Roche) wants for senior citizens. We will not have pensions, unemployment insurance benefits or money. I therefore agree that we must have a healthy economy. If we cannot control inflation, we will not have a healthy economy.

Let us get rid of some of this rhetoric and set the record straight. What are we discussing? There are 2.34 million senior citizens in Canada. This Bill would affect 1.1 million and, in 1983, would mean that they would each receive 50 cents to $1.50 less a month. They will not suffer a decrease; rather, they will receive an increase. In December, 1982, a senior citizen received $249.92, and in January of this year will receive $250.62. Senior citizens will receive an increase. Do you want to know something, Mr. Speaker? They are happy. They know there is widespread unemployment. I receive calls from senior citizens along these lines: "You will cut $300 from my income next year". Where are senior citizens hearing this message? It comes from the Opposition. It is not true. They are getting an increase.

I heard several Hon. Members today, and I will name them if I must, who spoke of the immorality of what we are doing. What is our record, Mr. Speaker? Since the days of Prime Minister Mackenzie King, through the Governments of Prime Minister St. Laurent and Prime Minister Pearson right to the present Prime Minister, all Liberal Governments have brought in measures of social change such as unemployment insurance, children's benefits, pension benefits and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. Major changes, from the Constitution to the trans-Canada pipeline and the St. Lawrence Seaway were Liberal policies and were usually strenuously opposed by the Parties opposite. This country is a world trader and sells $75 billion worth of goods per year to other countries. Is it immoral to say that we have to borrow $23 billion and so will have to take $1.50 of the pension next month but will still keep the $250. If that is immorality, then I should like to know what morality is.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) said that the Opposition is playing political games. She is right, Mr. Speaker, and that is why this House is slowly becoming ineffective. That is why more and more decisions are being made by bureaucrats and Ministers. That is necessary because we cannot have rational and logical debate in this House.

At least three speakers today, including the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) and the Hon. Member for Spadina, have said that fully indexed pensions are a social right. If they believe that, then they must believe that hospital care, education and any number of social services, are a right.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Irwin: Then we come to this question. If the deficit is up, if recession is up, if the economy is down, if unemployment is up and if we have less revenue, then is it still a social right to be fully indexed?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Irwin: If the answer had been no, then I would say that Hon. Members opposite do not fully understand Bill C-133. The key question is where we get the money. There are only three places we can get it—print it, impose more taxes, or borrow. I have not heard any of the more than 100 Members of both Parties on the other side that we should borrow more money, print more money or increase taxes.

I have heard those who represent the oil interests say that we should give more to the oil companies. I heard members of the same Party say that we should give more money to the North-South dialogue, and immediately after that heard another speaker say that we should give less to North-South. That is Party unity, Mr. Speaker. It is pushing and pulling at the same time. Those are the suggestions that were made today. The criterion is not what will work or what is best for the country but what will give the biggest headline in a member's constituency. That is not constructive debate and it does more damage to the credibility of the House of Commons than anything else we can do in the House. It shows a slow erosion that is almost irreversible.

I should like to return to the question of morality, Mr. Speaker. The test is whether things have improved in the last two or three generations. My grandparents did not have pensions or hospitalization or Unemployment Insurance. They lived on $30 per month. There were no benefits at all, no union protection and they only worked six months each year. Out of that $30 per month, $10 went for milk as they had eight or nine children whom they managed to support. But they had nothing at all. My parents had more, but they had nothing like as much as I do or as my children will have. I have legal aid, medicare and housing. They may have to go on a waiting list, to line up or wait their turn, but they are not deprived of housing. The housing program is fundamentally a Liberal program.

No Member of this House can say that things have not improved, Mr. Speaker. They must admit that there has been a giant leap in social justice in this country in only three generations. If that is immoral, then I do not know what morality is. If doing your job, trying to take reasonable resources and spread them equitably is immoral, then I will get out of politics and go back to what I did before.

Mr. Orlikow: The voters will send you back there.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I have been doing this since 1966 and any time the Hon. Member wants to come to my riding to talk to the voters, he is welcome. Members of his party were there last week and drew 36 people. It was their first meeting in three years.

I have much more to say but I want to end by referring to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) who said that we do not care about senior citizens. I believe he said that as Liberals we should vote against this Bill. He said that we should have voted against the last budget—I was here and I heard him say that. He said we should have voted against the Constitution—I was here and heard him say that. In Section 15—and I am going to be here to remind him of this for the rest of his life—there is a clause that says that no Government shall pass legislation that discriminates because of age. Yet today the Hon. Member tells us to vote against this Bill when he himself voted against Section 15 which would have disallowed discrimination because of age. He admits that he has done contradictory things in this House as he voted for six and five at one stage and will vote against it today. He has not done contradictory things just once, Mr. Speaker, but several times.

When I stand here later today I will vote on this Bill with the full knowledge that we all want to get to heaven, but some of us would like to get there with our socks on.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I warned the Government that Supreme Court judges might rule legislation illegal which we, as Members of Parliament and representatives of the people, felt to be in the best interests of Canadians. The Hon. Member has just said that he intends to stand in this Chamber at six o'clock this evening and, because someone is 65 years of age and has an income of $750 per month, he will vote to impose a special three per cent tax on them. Is the Hon. Member saying that he believes in age discrimination and that he believes strongly in the need to impose this special tax on people over the age of 65? Is that what he is saying, or is he saying that he hopes the Supreme Court of Canada will overrule his decision today and take that tax off because it is discriminatory, based on age?

• (1730)

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked the same question in different ways to three people, myself, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I refer him to their answers which dealt with his questions adequately.

Mr. Hawkes: We have a Question Period daily in which I can question Ministers. I just heard a speech by the Hon. Member. I want a clear-cut answer. Is he saying the intends to vote to discriminate against senior citizens in this country simply because they are 65 years of age and not the rest of Canadians who are younger and earn a salary, but simply those 65 years of age who exist on a public pension? Does he just want those senior citizens to be discriminated against? Is that what he is going to do?

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member did not listen to my speech. If I had my druthers, and if we had the money, I would give every senior citizen in this country $1,000 a month because they have earned it, but we do not have the money. Even without the money, we have still managed to increase their pension by basically borrowing the money. A country can only borrow so much; a $23 billion debt is more than that of France. That is our social commitment. That is a debt on the future which we are prepared to pay. That is what I said. We are prepared to pay it. We will pay our social bills at this time and hope that the future will take care of our debt.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Calgary North rising to put a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am rising for a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, that argument implies that it is the Member's intention to tax every citizen over age 65 $1.50 a month because the Government does not have the money. I proposed earlier today that instead we tax every taxpayer an extra 15 cents. If we did that, we would have the same amount of money in the Treasury. That would give the $1.50 a month to senior citizens by taxing every taxpayer an additional 15 cents a month. Is the Member indicating that if there is an easy way to find the money, he will vote for the six-month hoist and let the Finance Minister straighten that out, or is he indicating that he believes senior citizens—

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is it the intention of the rule that one person should monopolize the whole ten minute question period with a series of questions?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Of course not. It is not the intent of the provisional rules. The Chair should apologize. I was seeking to find out from the Hon. Member from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) whether he was rising to put a question. I did not recognize him by his proper constituency name. I intend to recognize him after the answer for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked the question earlier. He did not think it was adequately answered. I am prepared to answer it. I do not agree that we should have a specific levy for senior citizens for pensions because what senior citizens require is much more than just a pension. If we did what the Hon. Member said, we would have a specific levy for their houses, a levy for their hospitalization, a levy for their para-bus, a specific levy for the rebate they receive from municipal taxes and on and on.

Perhaps it was not a serious question. I accepted it as serious. I do not agree with a specific levy. We should use the general revenue, look at the total requirement of the senior citizen and act accordingly because this is a group which does not have the financing to pay for their needs over the age of 65, but they have contributed. That is the criterion for using general revenue.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, during the speech of the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Irwin) he made a statement, quite correctly, that a major objective of the Canadian Labour Congress at the present time is jobs. He then seemed to imply that because the major objective was jobs, somehow the CLC approved of this legislation which limits the indexing of pensions of retired people to six and five.

I would ask the Hon. Member one question. Is he not aware that the Canadian Labour Congress has opposed this legislation? Also, I would ask him whether he has read the statement issued recently by the Roman Catholic Bishops of Canada which is very critical of exactly this kind of legislation, and a recent report of the United Church of Canada entitled "Income Security" which says that all our programs for senior citizens leave a number of single elderly people below the poverty line. They say that the elderly make up a very large proportion of the poor and near-poor group in this country. They are not happy with this legislation. Will the Hon. Member comment on that rather than accuse Opposition Members of being partisan?

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, I will answer that directly. The Canadian Labour Congress is having difficulty. The difficulty is this. The civil service sector of the CLC has more votes than the profit sector. For example, the Canadian Union of Public Employees has 257,000 members, whereas the United Steel Workers has only 203,000 members. The point is this. In the steel-working sector, they are not objecting to the six and five. They want jobs. In the public sector, which we have tried to protect, they want additional protection. That is the dichotomy that may split the Canadian Labour Congress.

The Bishops' Report is an excellent report. It is too bad there is not more debate on many of the other proposals, especially in the natural resource industry where we are using up too much of our natural resources, do not engage in enough manufacturing, and allow too much foreign investment in Canada, which makes us drawers of water and hewers of wood, the big debate on six and five. I talked to some of the Bishops personally. It is a good report that should be debated.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it seems the Hon. Member is talking about the wrong Bill. His argument, which I do not agree with, would have some validity if we were debating a Bill to limit the salary increases of public servants, but we are debating a Bill which limits the indexing of retired people.

The Canadian Labour Congress does not have to worry about Public Service unions. They are talking about retired people. That is what they are talking about. Surely that is the question on which the CLC has expressed and will express itself.

Mr. Irwin: Mr. Speaker, the CLC has taken the position that they are opposed to the six and five program. Again I reiterate "all phases". They are not going to vote in favour of one or against another. They are opposed to six and five primarily because there are too many public sector employees in the CLC. That is the problem that is splitting the CLC. If the Hon. Member is as close to the CLC as he says, he should know this because I certainly do.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, there is one thing we can be sure of, that is, that we are not going to have another ten-minute question period.

I want to make a few observations with respect to Bill C-131, to state my support for the six-month hoist motion and, of course, to indicate my opposition in total to the Bill currently before us. That will be almost all the time I have to speak about it, but nevertheless I wanted to get those two points on the record.

The question asked is who will be affected by this Bill. The answer has been placed on the record quite often, so I will not spend too much time on it. Those who will be most severely affected by the Bill are those who have made the greatest contribution to the development and the building of this country. They spent years and years building, forgetful of their own needs, just barely able to get by. They were looking forward to the time, perhaps, when they could relax a little, when society would recognize and respect the contribution they had made and would assist them in their later years. There are those who, for various reasons, have been unable to provide security for their later years, some because of a lack of skills to compete in the labour market, others who have engaged in humanitarian services at low levels of income, and those who have worked in enterprises which have not provided pension benefits. There are others, including those over the age of 65, who are going to be particularly hard pressed because of this particular measure. I refer to the single persons over age 65 who do not receive any Guaranteed Income Supplement or spouse's allowance if their total income, including the basic old age pension, exceeds $8,900, a level of income $10 below the poverty line for single persons living in metropolitan areas. These are some of the individuals who are going to be affected by the provisions of this particular Bill.

The Government has said this Bill is not to save money, and it is set out in the questions and answers which came with the documents regarding Bill C-131. It reads:

> The Government is asking all Canadians who have the means to lower their expectations over the next two years in order to help bring inflation down to 6 and 5 per cent. Some degree of sacrifice by all Canadians is required to bring about economic recovery in Canada.

When we consider this particular statement, Mr. Speaker, I think it points out the fact that it was meant mainly to take from those, reduce the income of those who could well afford it. But we all know very well, no matter in what area in the House we are sitting, that that does not apply to these people we have spoken of today because they have, for various reasons I have pointed out, not been able to make the savings which would enable them to invest and have returns, or in any other way provide for their later years. Therefore, the question now is, why is the Government proceeding with this particular measure? It has been emphasized today that inflation is down and it is not likely to rise for a while at least, and it may even go down below the 6 per cent or the 5 per cent, or whatever. That being the case, I believe this amendment is most appropriate, that is, to give this measure a six-month hoist in order that there might be an opportunity to gauge the effects of the downward trend of inflation, and then find out if it is really necessary, and if it is not necessary, then why in the world is the Government going to impose it on us? I make this plea because of the statements which have been made today by the Government spokesmen.

There is one more thought which I want to present, and that is the psychological factor. People who worked without any pension plan were fearful of the future. Canada Pension came in and new hope was born. Now, because of this particular measure, they are saying, "What next? What is the next Government step? Are we going to be reduced further?" So they are thrown again into insecurity, fear and uncertainty. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that we are making an eminently reasonable proposal, that this be given a six-month hoist, and if not, then we certainly intend to vote against it and we trust that it will be defeated in the interests of those who will be so adversely affected.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Order. It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made on Monday, January 31, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forth every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

The question is on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes.

[Translation]

All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

Madam Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Amendment (Mr. Hawkes) negatived.

Madam Speaker: The question is now on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Madam Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Madam Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Madam Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Madam Speaker: If it please the House, perhaps we could dispense with the bells.

The House divided on the motion (Miss Bégin) which was agreed to on the following division:

Madam Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I wonder if you could possibly clarify whether it is indeed the case that the Bill could have been defeated had 29 Conservatives shown up in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: And Nielsen eats Grits for breakfast?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLIGHT OF CANADIAN CITIZENS OF ASIAN UGANDAN ORIGIN

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, in the early 1970s thousands of Ugandans of Asian ancestry were expelled from Uganda by Dictator Idi Amin. Many of these people came to Canada and now consider Canada to be their home.

An outstanding question has always been the repossession of property that these people were forced to abandon in Uganda. Kampala has recently announced rules under which such repossession might take place. Apparently, under the proposed rules, ex-Asian Ugandans will have only 90 days to return to Uganda and will then have to remain there for at least five years before being able to dispose of their rightful possessions. For very obvious reasons such a procedure would be unacceptable to people who are now Canadian citizens and wish to remain in Canada. A very similar problem exists with respect to impounded superannuation and insurance funds.

Therefore, the Government of Canada ought to make appropriate representations to the Government of Uganda to ensure fair and timely treatment for Canadian citizens of Asian Ugandan origin.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, in Quebec, all agricultural organizations that were consulted agreed with the need to revise the Crow rate in order to correct railway transportation problems in the West.

First of all, and this is very important, there is now agreement that the measures to be applied in the West will not affect the supply or price of feed grain in Eastern Canada. The reason is simple. The 1974 feed grain policy, recently extended until August 1983, ensures diversity of supply for Quebec feeders. They can buy their feed grain locally or in Ontario, the U.S. or Western Canada. The Canadian Wheat Board must supply feed grain if the private market does not, and does so at a price determined by the price for U.S. corn.

On December 4, 1982, on Radio-Canada, a spokesman for the FPU said that the price in Eastern Canada is determined by the world market. People in the West would have to adjust to that level, and implementation of the Gilson report would not affect our prices.

LIBERAL MEMBERS' REPLY TO STATEMENT BY CONFERENCE OF CATHOLIC BISHOPS

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, many Members of this House, as well as Canadians from coast to coast, were rather taken aback by the tone and substance of a statement released yesterday by five Liberal backbenchers in response to the recent statement on the economy by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops.

It is a sad commentary to see the Government so sensitive to thoughtful criticism of its policies that it must send out a hit team, who used their membership in that same church to justify their advancing the Government's criticism of the Bishops' statement. On the other side of the coin, there are many, many Catholics across Canada who welcomed the Bishops' statement and who support both it and their right to make such a statement. It is disappointing, at a time when Canada is crying out for new directions in its economy, that the Government would react so flippantly to the serious proposals of a major force in our society.

As well, there was a rather disturbing element to yesterday's statement. That was the comparisons used by the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau). To bring into the debate the states of affairs that exist in such extremist regimes as Chile and El Salvador was, I submit, unconscionable. The implied threat that he made by pointing to the assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero as an example of the results of church involvement in temporal affairs, does a grave disservice to the right of freedom of expression in this country. These five Liberals owe an apology to the Catholic Bishops of Canada, to the Catholics of Canada, and indeed to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

NUMBER OF YOUNG UNEMPLOYED QUEBECERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, when we are talking about unemployment among young people in Quebec, we are dealing with a very special problem. Unemployment among this group is now affecting 169,000 people. Last year, young people were losing jobs at a rate of almost 5,000 per month, Madam Speaker, and I believe we have reached a crisis situation in the Province of Quebec and across Canada.

[English]

In the last month we have lost 104,000 jobs in this country. In the past 30 days, 52,000 people have stopped looking for work. We have been losing jobs at the rate of 30,000 month in the past year.

I would remind Members of this House that the Clark Government created 40,000 new jobs per month in its brief term in office. If we had had that rate of job creation in the past year, we would have half as few unemployed in Canada at this time.

I urge the Liberals and the New Democrats to swallow their pride and their bad judgment, and to support a budget which has principles and direction which is similar to that of the Clark Government. We need employment.

EMPLOYMENT

MOHAWK COLLEGE OF HAMILTON—WORK SKILLS PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, Mohawk College of Hamilton, a community college, has been a leader and a pioneer in the development of educational systems which involve employers and training of students. One such program is the co-operative education technique whereby technical and business programs are integrated with industry, business and government throughout Canada. This program provides skills and experience for the student, making him or her particularly valuable as a full-time employee.

This system necessitates the co-operation of the employers to provide work experience during the education terms. This system has the merit of providing students with a modified work program on a year-round basis, and takes the pressure off trying to find a job in the summer only.

Since 1978, the Federal Government has provided Mohawk College with seed money to develop such programs, and Mohawk College has received international recognition for the excellence of the work done. However, current economic conditions are such that the employers find it financially difficult to participate in the work study program.

I would therefore like to recommend that the federal and provincial Governments help the youth of this region in preparing themselves for skilled, full-time jobs, by encouraging employers to participate in these work sharing programs, by providing either a direct subsidy or other financial assistance to employers to cover part of the student wages.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ATLANTIC FISHERIES CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, today we discovered that the Liberal Government is again stalling in attempting to solve the problems which are very drastic in the Atlantic fishing industry. Over a year ago the Kirby Task Force was instructed to proceed "on an emergency basis". Today we discovered that the Cabinet is again stalling and dividing itself strictly for political reasons.

The New Democratic Party criticizes and deplores the leaking of the Kirby Report instead of the issuing of that full report to the public of Canada. We call on the Government to act in order to protect the incomes and livelihoods of fishermen in Atlantic Canada.

Today we found out that one Cabinet Minister is calling for one Crown corporation to act in this area. Other Cabinet Ministers want to continue the divide and rule regime which exists at the present time. It is time that the policy of the Government, which protects the fishing corporations in Altantic Canada, stopped. It is time that the Government acted. It is time that the Government set up one crown corporation to control marketing and to help increase the income of Atlantic fishermen.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION BY UFFI INFORMATION AND CO-ORDINATION CENTRE IN HULL, P.Q.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton-Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House a truly bizarre situation. I am referring to a flagrant case of discrimination on the part of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), at the UFFI information and cordination centre in Hull. Madam Speaker, the courses providing information on how to remove UFFI are offered in English only. My office has received complaints from a number of francophone UFFI victims who were told that the course at the centre were in English only, and that French instruction brochures could be mailed to their home adress. I find this incredible, Madam Speaker. A large number of buildings that have been affected by UFFI are located in Quebec. The UFFI information and co-ordination centre is located in Quebec. Furthermore, one of the Ministers responsible for this Government's affairs in Quebec is also responsible for UFFI, and he is tolerating this kind of discrimination in his own province. If the Government thinks Canadians should have the right to communicate in the language of their choice, it should start by applying this policy to our Federal institutions in Quebec.

INCREASED UNEMPLOYMENT IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, which I find somewhat incredible given the unemployment statistics, I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance. He will know that Statistics Canada this morning indicated that we now have 1.6 million people officially unemployed. This is a staggering increase of 100,000 people more than last month. Also he is aware that the construction industry is the hardest hit, particularly as it affects urban areas. We now have between 25 per cent and 30 per cent unemployed in the construction industry.

Time and time again the construction industry and the Business Council on National Issues have asked the Minister for relief in order to get the construction industry back on its feet and give jobs to its workers. What does the Minister intend to do to see if he can alleviate the incredible unemployment rate in the construction industry?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the figures announced by Statistics Canada this morning show an encouraging trend—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —in the sense that the adjusted rate of unemployment is down for the first time since late 1981. On the other hand, obviously no one can take satisfaction from that result when we see the total number of unemployed in the country.

As the Hon. Member realizes, every winter in Canada the number of unemployed increases. We are seeing the same phenomenon at the present time. As far as the specific question raised by the Hon. Member is concerned, I have received a brief from the Canadian Construction Association. As a matter of fact I am intending to meet with that Association in the next few days. I have also had discussions with my provincial colleagues, the Ministers of Finance, in December, and we all agreed that the area of construction, particularly housing, was an area that should have special priority, both in terms of job creation and in terms of answering serious social problems in the country.

I have also met with the Canadian Federation of Labour which made some specific proposals in this regard, in the last two weeks. Those discussions were very constructive and very helpful. I indicated that I would certainly bear in mind their representations in the preparation of my budget.

In my discussions with my provincial colleagues I also asked them to attach high importance to this issue to see what they could do in the preparation of their budgets; indeed, so that all Governments can address this very serious problem in a co-ordinated and co-operative way and we can all try to reduce the unemployment levels in the country.

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE—NECESSITY FOR TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, again in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, I am sure the Minister of Finance is aware that the hardest hit group with respect to unemployment consists of people between the ages of 15 years and 24 years. They have an unemployment level of about 21 per cent, and it is higher in many parts of the country.

The Minister has had a request before him a number of times for an increase in training opportunities, particularly for young people, and most recently from the Business Council on National Issues and other employment agencies and trade councils. In the face of those requests and in the face of the incredible unemployment difficulties the country now faces, I would like to ask the Minister why his Government continues to refuse to increase training spaces. We are down 20,000 training spaces this year from last year. Why does the Government continue to ignore the training difficulties?

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, first of all, I may point out to the Hon. Member that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is not in the House today because he is in Toronto, discussing job creation programs with his Ontario counterpart, in order to put Ontarians back to work. There are other Ministers in the House who are able to answer questions, if necessary. Regarding the Hon. Member's question with respect to training, the legislation was passed with the consent of all parties in this House, and the Hon. Member was among those who voted in favour of a measure that would meet the needs of Canadians across the country. To increase the number of training spaces, in proportion to the size of the institutions concerned, we must have consultations with the provinces. We must also have as many jobs available as possible when people finish their courses.

I may also point out to the Hon. Member that about three weeks ago, the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced that $40 million were being allocated to institutions that would be providing special courses to students seeking training with a view to entering the labour market.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT EXPAND RECRUITING FOR ARMED FORCES

Hon. David Crombie (Rosedale): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister. A specific proposal was made originally by the Hon. Member for Victoria, raised by myself in the House, and also raised by backbench Members of all Parties, concerning the opportunity for the Government to increase the recruitment program for those people who would like to get into the Canadian Armed Forces, both for training and for jobs. There are now about 25,000 applicants who are waiting. The Minister of National Defence has already agreed to the proposal. I would ask the Prime Minister why he and his Government continue to refuse to increase recruitment for the Armed Forces in the face of the fact that it is supported universally in this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Government is considering various proposals aimed at further increasing its efforts with respect to direct job creation. The Hon. Member is referring to one of these proposals which would increase the number of Canadians in the armed forces. I think he should realize that there are many other proposals involving Government expenditures. There is, however, a question which the Hon. Member and which all of us on this side of the House will have to answer, regarding the optimum use of the limited funds available, and that question is: Would we rather create, let us say, 10,000 jobs with $100 million or 20,000 with the same amount?

Obviously, considering the nature and the high rate of unemployment in this country, we must try to create the maximum number of jobs with the funds available. That is what we are doing at the present time. We have asked the Departments of National Defence and Employment and Immigration, as well as all other Government departments with some responsibility for job creation, to send us their proposals so that we can see whether additional jobs can be created and what the cost would be. At the present time, assuming that we can set aside funds for this purpose, we are looking at ways of providing the most adequate and most comprehensive response, considering the money available, to the very high demand for jobs in Canada.

The Government is open to all suggestions. We must realize, however, that our funds are necessarily limited, and we can do no more than create the largest possible number of jobs with the funds available.

• (1125)

[English]

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister, who surely must be concerned about the unemployment situation in the country. Since the Government brought in its mini-budget last October there are 210,000 more Canadians without jobs than there were at that time, and 100,000 more this month than there were last month. The Government in the last few months has raised the hopes of these people by talking about its great job-creation programs—job-creation programs which just have not materialized. In his statement, the Minister of Finance, said most hirings would occur during November, December, January, and February. Well, that just has not happened. I ask the Prime Minister where is the sense of urgency in his Government about this situation? Where are the 60,000 jobs which were promised under the NEED Program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that the funds for this program—which was announced by the Government and which originally involved $500 million—these funds have now, thanks to the co-operation of the provinces, been increased to more than $700 million, and as a result, the number of jobs to be created under this program has now risen from 60,000 to at least 80,000. Implementation of the program started as early as December in some provinces, thanks to active co-operation on their part. At the present time, new projects are being announced each week, and in fact every day, under this program.

I may also remind the Hon. Member of another comment I made in my statement on October 27 regarding the private sector which would be the engine of growth in this country. In fact, there are some very encouraging signs at this time. The latest figures for the housing and retail sectors indicate some recovery. In fact, only this morning I was reading an article which said that 40 per cent of companies that took part in a survey indicated that they intended to increase production, while 38 per cent said they had noted an increase in orders for their products. As a result of lower interest rates in the past months and Government incentives, there are also attempts to create new jobs through the private sector. It takes time for these trends to follow through, but once again, we can assume that recovery has started and that we shall be seeing job creation by the private, as well as by the public sectors.

[English]

DELAY IN PROCESSING PROPOSALS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I find it appalling that the Prime Minister will shrug off two million unemployed Canadians, just as he shrugged off two million refugees from Nigeria the other day. He will not address himself to any of these issues.

I will direct my question to the Minister of Finance who thinks so much is being done for the unemployed in this country, despite the Government's abysmal record. When I urged the Minister of unemployment—"unemployment" is right—the Minister of Employment and Immigration to act quickly on the NEED Program last November, he said on November 16, " . . . we may be in a position to start processing proposals on the NEED Program before Christmas so that they will be in place by January. I think her comments about three to four months delay are not well taken." I tell the Minister it is February, and there has been a three to four-month delay in the processing of these proposals. In Kingston and the Islands there are—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member has to come to a question at some point. I would suggest it be now.

Miss MacDonald: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Given that only nine people in Kingston and the Islands have been employed under the NEED Program and 6,100 people there are unemployed, is that the measure of the success about which the Minister of Finance is talking?

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Bujold (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's allegations are . . . I may point out that what the Minister of Employment and Immigration announced and confirmed before the House has indeed been realized. Madam Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that up to now, 304 projects under the NEED Program have become operational and that 3,457 jobs have now been filled. In the area mentioned by the Hon. Member, depending on the projects that have been submitted, the program is being processed with the requisite speed and we shall be hiring people as soon as possible. Between now and April 1, we expect to create some 30,000 jobs, and in my opinion, according to the requests we have received, we shall certainly reach that figure.

• (1130)

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTRODUCE ACTION PROGRAM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I will see which back bencher replies to me. I have a question on the same serious object, that we on this side of the House do not sit back and smile about, for the Minister of Finance.

Over the past three months we have seen an increase by the thousands in unemployed men and women, with all the human and economic costs that entails. In the past three months we have not seen the announcement of a single new government program. The Minister recently said he was in favour of some stimulus. I ask him to think just for a moment of the human and economic costs.

We have seen the figures which came out today, an increase in the number of unemployed of no fewer than 100,000 Canadians. If we wait until the budget, maybe another two months, and given the present trend, that means another 200,000 will be unemployed. Will the Minister quit smiling and trying to charm his way through the situation? Will he stop having more and more meetings, and finally bring in a program of action, now?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I am surprised at the comments of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I think they should show a little more respect for the simple principle of parliamentary Government and Cabinet solidarity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: There are such things as Ministers who are responsible for certain files, and the Opposition should at least learn to address their question to the right person, if they cannot do anything else.

Mr. Wilson: There are Ministers who are irresponsible, too.

Mr. Lalonde: I invite them to reflect on this over the weekend, and maybe on Monday they will direct questions to the right person. This applies particularly to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

As far as the serious question raised by the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is concerned, I find it rather amazing that he should object to the process of consultation which has been taking place with provincial Governments, the labour movement, the business community in this country, with farmers and the co-operative movement. I am amazed that the Hon. Member now finds he does not want us to consult, after having complained so often that the Government was not consulting enough. I think he should make up his mind and realize that the process we have been going through is part and parcel of recovery in this country, and that we all have to co-operate and work together, Government, labour, management, and farming community, to ensure a recovery. No Government will be able to do it alone. Certainly he should know that, and certainly he knows better. Rather than attacking my smile, he should attack—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, I wish the Minister would get serious. No one on this side of the House objects to the consultations. We appreciate the consultations, whether with labour, business, or with the Provinces. That is important and has to be done. But we also say that the time for consultation surely is past, and now is the time for some action. That is what we are saying.

Oral Questions

COST OF UNEMPLOYMENT TO ECONOMY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the human costs of unemployment are the most moving and most degrading to the people affected. I ask the Minister to consider these economic costs of the current level of unemployment. Because of the cost of welfare payments and unemployment insurance, on the one hand, and the loss of tax revenue on the other, we are losing in the Canadian economy, at the federal level alone, the following amounts in these regions of Canada: in Atlantic Canada the cost is $3.1 billion; in Quebec, $9 billion; in Ontario, $11 billion; Prairie Provinces, $4.7 billion; British Columbia, $4.5 billion, for a total of $32.3 billion. That is what it is costing the Government for people who are not working.

Considering the people of Canada want jobs, not hand-outs, will the Minister recognize the seriousness of these figures and take action now, before the budget comes in, to produce more jobs?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I have been exposed for long enough to the mathematics of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party to take them with a grain of salt. But one thing we are taking very seriously is the very serious state of high unemployment levels. We have taken initiatives, Madam Speaker. When the Hon. Member says no new initiatives have been taken in the last three months, he is wrong again, like on so many other issues. We have programs that were announced in June and October, which are taking effect every day.

Mr. Broadbent: In October? When?

Mr. Lalonde: Yes, sir. They were announced in October and they are taking effect now.

Mr. Broadbent: Oh, yes, and thousands more are unemployed.

Mr. Lalonde: Every day there are new projects being announced. As recently as earlier this week my colleague, the Minister of Transport, announced major initiatives—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: —which imply $800 million of new investment by railways this year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: That was announced this week.

Mr. McDermid: You announce that every day.

Mr. Lalonde: That money is going to be spent in this country this year and will benefit Canadians in all regions in terms of orders for steel, orders for parts and equipment in the railway sector. These are jobs for Canadians which this Government has created in spite of the rhetoric of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are going to bankrupt the farmer.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER RESIGN PORTFOLIO

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, if the Minister is telling us, as seems clear, that he has no intention of announcing any new measures to create jobs between now and the budget—that is another month and a half and it means probably another 150,000 unemployed—I would like to suggest to him that he just give it up, pack it in and give it back to his predecessor who, at least, did not try to charm us to death.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I will reflect upon the very positive contribution of the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lawrence: That is the best offer you have had in a couple of years.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EFFECT OF SERVICE CONSOLIDATION ON EMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. No reasonable person in the country would quarrel with the familiar argument that Canadian National needs to modernize its operations continually to remain competitive and cost effective. However, given the fact that the Atlantic Provinces are reeling from the highest unemployment levels since the Great Depression, why is the Minister allowing Canadian National to accelerate its consolidation of services, with mass lay-offs, at this very time when we can least afford the harsh consequences of such brutal measures?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have already answered the question a number of times. CN cannot operate as a social agency. Like any other institution in the country, CN must be as efficient as possible in the interest of shippers. Occasionally, like any other organization, they have to rationalize, and occasionally, like any other organization, some people have to be laid off in the process. I regret that very much, but I cannot stop the world.

My hon. friend's argument has been mostly that national institutions like CN should pay their respects to provincial divisions in this country. That again cannot be done. You cannot always organize national institutions on a provincial basis. I am sorry if Prince Edward Island feels it should be the centre of a major CN operation, but CN believes that an operation concentrated in Moncton for the whole of the Maritime region will be better in terms of administration and savings.

Mr. McMillan: Madam Speaker, no one is suggesting that Prince Edward Island should be the centre of Canadian National in the country. The fact is that in the last couple of weeks Canadian National has closed or gutted heavy freight or carload centres throughout the Atlantic region, not just in Prince Edward Island.

EFFECT ON ESSENTIAL SERVICES

Mr. Tom McMillan (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, does the Minister realize that Canadian National's obsession—and it is an obsession—with consolidation at this very time is leading not only to the direct abolition of jobs within Canadian National but also to the elimination of essential services that the private sector requires in turn to create jobs? Will he at least come to the Atlantic region and look at the devastation that Canadian National is inflicting upon every single Province there?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, if my hon. friend can demonstrate to me the essential services that the CN is not fulfilling in this particular instance, I will be glad to look at the matter.

In the last year rail traffic in Canada has gone down by 15 to 20 per cent. The railways had to react to that and adjust to the fact that there has been such a reduction in traffic. If my hon. friend wants to help change the situation, then, with a few of his colleagues, he could support the initiative that we announced on Tuesday. That would see the expenditure of $16 billion in Canada in a period of ten years, would see construction in railways—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is a complete fraud!

Mr. Pepin: —and would see the return to work of a good number of people who, unfortunately, have been laid off recently.

NATIONAL ENERGY PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR CHANGE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He will know that we still import oil and thus export jobs. Since the introduction of the National Energy Program, drilling activity is down by 32 per cent, and therefore those jobs are down by 32 per cent. There are jobs in the steel industry, making pumps and cars, and jobs in the paper industry and so on, that are dependent on drilling activity. The reason for the 32 per cent drop in jobs is the National Energy Program. It is a stupid Program that needs to be changed. Could the Prime Minister give us a commitment to change that Program at the earliest possible opportunity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is quoting a lot of his own personal opinions. Recently I had discussions with some people in the petroleum industry and they told me facts that are quite contrary to those that the Hon. Member puts forth. I was told that Canadian drillers who had moved to the United States were now without jobs there, and were closing their rigs and moving back to Canada where they feel the economy and energy policy are beneficial to them.

REQUEST THAT PROGRAM BE SCRAPPED

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Madam Speaker, to be precise, in the year prior to the imposition of the National Energy Program, 6,948 wells were drilled in western Canada. In 1982, 4,742 wells were drilled. That 32 per cent drop in drilling activity is a direct consequence of the National Energy Program.

Mr. Lalonde: What happened in the United States?

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister should know that we need jobs in steel, we need jobs in the automotive industry, and we need jobs in the paper industry. If he would scrap this Program we could have those jobs. Will the Prime Minister scrap the Program?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member were as good in his statistics as he is at looking at our neighbouring country, which he seems to think has a better record, he would find, by reading magazines like Fortune, and looking at the specifics, that things are worse there. That is the essence of my answer to him now. They have no energy policy like ours and things are worse—

Mr. Hawkes: Things would be better here if—

Mr. Trudeau: Is that so?

EMPLOYMENT

JOB CREATION PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance who is looking more and more uncomfortable in his job, and is sounding more and more like Ronald Reagan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: The Minister has told us that the Government is going to create jobs. I was looking at my notes when he told us that. He told us the same thing with the Alaska tarsands project, as you will recall. He told us the same thing with the offshore oil, and he told us the same thing with the pipeline. Will the Minister be honest? Will he level with the Canadian people? Will he admit that the Government's job-creation programs are indeed short term, inadequate, a drop in the bucket, and that even those programs are not happening?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, first of all I should like to welcome my colleague to his new job as economic critic or finance critic—I am not quite sure which it is. I realize that he had to practise for about three weeks to have this question ready to put on the record, but he did it well. I hope the next one will not take as long.

To address the Hon. Member's question seriously, I must say that in the opinion of the Government direct job creation by Government is not the total answer or even the global answer to the unemployment program that we are facing in this country. These programs can make an important, temporary contribution to relieving very serious social and human problems. These programs have to be recognized as being of a temporary nature, however, and as being only a very small element of the total solution, which is to create an environment where the total economy is going to recover and where the private sector will be the engine of growth.

This is what the Government has been trying to do by trying to lower interest rates, which have gone down by more than 30 per cent in the last few months. The Government has also been trying to create stimulus in the private sector by such initiatives as the announcement made this week with respect to the Crown, whereby the railways are going to invest $800 million this year. There are other similar measures of this type. They are approaches to try to get the total economy to grow, and particularly to get the private sector to play its full role.

In the meantime, we are doing everything we can, alone and with the provincial and municipal Governments, to create jobs directly which will attempt to alleviate the problem we are facing on a short-term basis.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell), without the theatrics, which are not allowed in the House.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I can tell the Minister that, if he does not make jokes about me, I will give my ironclad guarantee that I will not call him charming any more.

NEED PROGRAM STATISTICS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, let me put a supplementary question to the Minister. If he would do his homework he would find out, just by making some phone calls, that under the NEED program, that major job-creation program, in British Columbia 86 jobs have been provided, in Saskatchewan 101, and in Ontario 153. Our arithmetic shows that to be somewhere over 300 jobs. The Minister's office cannot even give the figures for the rest of the country.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Please, will Hon. Members come to questions today? We have had innumerable speeches from both sides today. Questions must be more brief. The Question Period is practically over.

Mr. Waddell: You are right, Madam Speaker, I will get to my question.

Will the Minister consult his Department to find out why NEED funds are not going out and why the Program has not been taken up adequately, especially with respect to the municipalities of Metropolitan Toronto and Vancouver?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a number of specific statistics. I can assure him that I am trying to do my homework on a daily basis, and will continue to do so. The fact is that at the present time there are several thousand projects under consideration and several hundred of them have been approved. As a matter of fact, going back a couple of weeks to January 26, 265 projects had been approved across the country, and were proceeding.

I would indicate to the Hon. Member that these projects are going to be approved on a speedy basis as they come in, and that more and more jobs will be created. It is estimated that, with the co-operation of the Provinces, we will be able to create something like 80,000 jobs under the NEED Program. It is our aim to create those jobs at the earliest possible moment, but this will have to be done in a responsible way. I hope that my hon. friend recognizes that.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware that ten weeks from now more than 100,000 graduating students will be seeking full-time employment and that hundreds of thousands of undergraduate students will be seeking summer employment in order to continue their education.

• (1150)

Last summer youth unemployment constituted 50 per cent of total unemployment, according to the Canadian Federation of Students. In light of today's figures of 104,000 additional unemployed in January, and the absent Minister of Employment and Immigration whose comments were quoted in the press this morning, warning that young people who lack training and move from one dead-end job—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Would the Hon. Member simply ask a question?

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, in light of the Minister's warning about the social unrest and the impact of it, why is the Minister of Finance ignoring the warning of his colleague? Is it proof of a split in the Liberal caucus on this critical situation?

Mr. Savard: I would not worry about that.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): And don't you worry about us.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I do not think the Tory disease has crossed the floor yet. I do not think the Hon. Member should worry about splits in our caucus in that regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lalonde: One thing I can assure the Hon. Member on which we are not split is the necessity of looking after the problems of our young people, particularly the large number of students who will be coming into the market this summer. We have already allocated $120 million for the program. I am considering adding even more funds to that program to take care of the applications that are coming in at the present time.

Mr. McDermid: Will you have it ready in time?

Mr. Lalonde: Students are making applications, and projects will be approved in the next few weeks.

Miss MacDonald: This is like the NEED Program.

Mr. Lalonde: We will try to make sure that all of the money we can make available is available in plenty of time for those projects. I can assure the Hon. Member that this is a very high priority of the Government, and we are working closely together in that regard.

Miss MacDonald: Famous last words.

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Waterloo; a very short question.

CANADIAN STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister of Finance whose assurances have not yet reached the student community in Canada, nor have the assurances of the Secretary of State who met and spoke with provincial ministers assuring them that funding is coming. Will the Minister of Finance tell the House why he is ignoring the indication of the Secretary of State that funding is needed in the matter of the Canadian Student Loan Program?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, this matter is being discussed by the Secretary of State and myself and we are looking into it at the present time. There have been consultations with the provincial ministers. I said earlier that for this summer, the Government has allocated at least $120 million to help students who will be seeking jobs. As far as the next academic year is concerned, we are also looking at the student loan programs, and I hope that as soon as I am able to bring down my budget, I shall be able to announce what steps have been taken with respect to this matter.

LEGISLATIVE REMEDY FOR PROSTITUTION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. Following the Westendorp decision, the Minister will appreciate that soliciting for the purposes of prostitution is, for all intents and purposes, legal across Canada. Does the Minister responsible for the status of women think that a legislative remedy is required from this House and, if so, what would that be?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, we are approaching a very thorny issue and one that was not resolved by the Committee to which it was referred earlier in the year and about which I am sure the Hon. Member is aware. The Minister of Justice is dealing with it at the moment.

REQUEST FOR PARLIAMENTARY ACTION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton-Strathcona): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for the status of women. She will appreciate, I think, that as surely as tomorrow's sunrise the state of affairs that exists now will result in more violence to women and girls. Does she, as the Minister responsible for that subject matter, not think that something should be done in this House, in view of the finding of the court?

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I am as concerned as the Hon. Member. I refer again to the work of the Committee which was unable to come to a decision. I hope that this Committee will take its work more seriously and come to a decision.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

STATUS OF WOMEN

CRIMINAL CODE—POSSIBILITY OF REMOVING NUISANCE REGULATION PROVISIONS

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I should also like to ask the Minister responsible for the status of women whether she is considering the possibility, in co-operation with the Minister of Justice, of deleting from the Criminal Code the provisions concerning soliciting, in order to remove this from federal jurisdiction and possibly allow local by-laws to regulate the matter, thus getting around the problem mentioned by the Supreme Court in the Westendorp case with respect to the Criminal Code?

[English]

Hon. Judy Erola (Minister of State (Mines)): Madam Speaker, I refer once more to the work of the Committee. I understand the Minister of Justice is referring the matter to the Committee again. I do hope that we will be able to deal with it once and for all.

RAILWAYS

POSSIBILITY OF HAULING GRAIN TO SOUTHERN UNITED STATES PORT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister is aware that CN and CP own rail lines to Duluth, Minnesota. He is aware that CP has a line to Minneapolis, has negotiated running rights to Kansas City and can haul, either as a result of joint freight rates or running rights once they acquire them, to New Orleans. A few years down the road, when the Minister's so-called Crow rate is in place on grain and other commodities, it will be possible to haul goods more cheaply to New Orleans than to Thunder Bay and Montreal. Will the Minister put up any road blocks to prevent Canadian Pacific or Canadian National from doing that kind of thing?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am not too sure of the meaning of the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: But the subject of the cost of transportation in different countries of the world, the subject of the degree of subsidization or support transportation gets from the Government in Canada and the Government in the United States comparatively, is one that is impossible to exhaust. I have read discussion papers on these subjects. Some talk about the degree of subsidization which the Americans have by way of the work of the Corps of Engineers or by way of gifts of grain being made abroad as aid. Others say there is more support in Canada. I really have not come to a conclusion on that subject, and I dare say that nobody should. These are very difficult comparisons to make.

EXPANSION OF OPERATIONS IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I am talking about the welfare and the good order of ports such as Thunder Bay and Montreal, and the kind of freight charge that will be necessary under the Minister's ridiculous solution, so-called. My question has something to do with the questions asked earlier by the Hon. Member for Hillsborough.

If Canadian National can afford to buy 3,000 miles of railway line in the United States, and Canadian Pacific can negotiate running rights in the United States to move Canadian commodities as well as American commodities, what justification do the railways have for complaining about losing money hauling grain in Canada? In addition, what justification do the railways have for bankrupting communities like Nakina in Northern Ontario, causing lay-offs, while they can afford to expand operations in the United States but will not build or fix their tracks in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I know that my friend was a reactionary on a number of subjects but I now realize he is also one when it comes to Canadian interests outside the country. It has been considered by everybody I know that the Canadian railways have been able to acquire railways in the United States that have been very advantageous to the Canadian scene, in the sense that they are occasionally in a position to use these railways to bring goods, for example, for export from Montreal. This has been considered an important advantage. The Americans up to now have considered that the fine administration of Canadian railways is making a good contribution to the rationalization of theirs.

SUPPORT FOR STRONGER PENALTIES FOR DRUNKEN DRIVERS

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. He will know that there is strong support for his position for either stronger laws or greater sanctions against those who drink and drive. I know that he has had the support of groups like Mothers Against Drunk Drivers and other organizations of that sort. I also know that he has to consult with provincial Attorneys General. Has that consultation process been completed, and is the Minister receiving support from the Attorneys General in the Provinces in meeting this very serious situation that we have here in Canada?

• (1200)

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his support on this important issue. I am personally convinced that it is an area in which we must try to respond to the social problem. We have, indeed, begun the process of consultation. It has not yet advanced sufficiently for me to give any indication to the Hon. Member of how it will conclude.

Order Paper Questions

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,339, 4,496 and 4,531.

[Text]

WOMAN TO WOMAN ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

Question No. 3,339—Miss Carney:

1. Did the Woman to Woman Organizing Committee request funding from the Women's Program of the Department of the Secretary of State in order to hold a lesbian conference in May, 1981 in Vancouver and (a) did the Committee have to wait until three months after the Conference was held before receiving a response to the application and, if so, for what reason (b) did the application meet all the criteria for funding from the Program and was the application rejected and, if so, for what reason?

2. Does the Secretary of State follow a policy of discriminating against all applications for funding from homosexual groups?

Hon. Serge Joyal (Secretary of State): 1. Yes. The Woman to Woman Organizing Committee requested a grant of $10,700 on February 23, 1981 in order to hold a national conference of lesbians in Vancouver on May 16, 17 and 18, 1981. (a) Woman to Woman's completed application was received on April 8, 1981. The Department sent out its reply on August 20, 1981. (b) It was necessary to reject the application because it did not meet the Secretary of State Department's priorities.

2. No.

"CANADIAN TEAM AT THE COMMONWEALTH GAMES 1982"

Question No. 4,496—Mr. Siddon:

1. What amount did the Department of Fitness and Amateur Sport contribute to the (a) production (b) distribution (c) promotion of the publication entitled "Canadian Team at the Commonwealth Games 1982"?

2. How many copies were distributed by the Department?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): 1. The team handbook, "Canadian Team at the Commonwealth Games 1982", was produced by the Commonwealth Games Association of Canada. Fitness and Amateur Sport provided a $375,000 contribution to this Association towards the costs of organizing and sending the Canadian team to the Commonwealth Games. However, the Association also received funding from outside sources to offset these team costs. Two thousand copies of the team handbook were produced by the Association at a total cost of $10,600.

2. None, see Part 1 above.

LOTO CANADA FUNDS FOR FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Question No. 4,531—Mr. Reid (St. Catharines):

1. Were funds made available to fitness and amateur sport through Loto Canada revenues and, if so, by year, in what amount?

2. Was the money allocated to specific fitness and amateur sport projects, activities or programs and, if so, which ones and in what amounts?

Hon. Gerald Regan (Minister of State (International Trade)): 1. In accordance with vote L27(a) Appropriation Act

No. 4, 1976, Fitness and Amateur Sport was the recipient of 5 per cent of the net proceeds of Loto Canada as follows:

1978-79	4,129
1979-80	2,141
	$10,191

2. The proceeds from Loto Canada were allocated as follows:

	($000)
Canada Games	$ 2,893
Regional Games	155
Athlete Assistance	1,000
Sport Promotion	600
Fitness Programs	637
University Facilities & Travel	911
Hosting World Events	334
Sport Governing Bodies	3,564
Facilities for Disabled	97
	$10,191

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 62—SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. Gordon Gilchrist (Scarborough East) moved:

That this House recognizes that an increased commitment to science and technology is fundamental to the establishment of a new industrial base in Canada, to the rejuvenation of existing industries, to the creation of new employment and the maintenance of existing jobs, and to economic recovery, and that this House condemns the Government for its neglect in failing to aggressively develop policies to promote the advancement of science and technology in this country, for its lack of interest in utilizing and increasing Canada's human potential, and for its failure to adopt the spending targets for science and technology that were established by the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979.

He said: Madam Speaker, we chose to make use of this Opposition day to bring attention to the urgent and critically important subject of science and technology. Our motion clearly states our concern over the virtual neglect of this key to economic recovery and survival.

I would like to begin by alluding to remarks made recently by the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston) in various speeches outside the House. I wish he would have been here to hear these remarks.

Mr. Blais: He will be here later.

Mr. Gilchrist: Good. I bring these remarks to the attention of the House partly for the record, partly to offer endorsement of them in principle, certainly to offer encouragement, and partly to take issue with the non-application of them to date by this Government. I would like to make it clear to the new Minister that we welcome him and his expressed views, but we also remind him that only the Minister is new; the problem is not. It is long past the rhetoric stage. In fact, it is even long past the action stage. The subject of this debate is vitally important to Canada and much too important to be a partisan issue.

I am pleased that science and technology is now the responsibility of the Minister responsible for economic development because that is where it should be. As our motion today states, science and technology is fundamental to economic development and an integral part of economic recovery. It has been disregarded for a decade and a half while the world passed Canada by. It must not be disregarded any longer.

The Minister has recognized this fact in his speeches. Everyone who talks about science and technology recognizes it. Why, then, is the Government of Canada not adequately carrying out the vitally needed policies and programs that everyone knows are needed?

Let me quote some of the Minister's recent public remarks about this subject. The first quote is:

> Our industrial structure will still have a very strong resource bias because that is our area of strongest comparative advantage.

We agree. But why, then, do the two principal levels of Government tax mining on a wind fall basis so that profits are taxed at a level as high as 60 per cent? Why does the Government plan to introduce a northern development tax which will add to the costs of the mining companies in offsetting the former so-called perks of their employees? This will serve only to drive up the cost of Canada's resources in world markets. Why does the Government's regulatory pricing of petroleum resources serve to reduce, not expand, the exploration and development processes which depend on petroleum fuels and petroleum feedstocks? The petroleum industry in eastern Canada alone, an industry which employees over 100,000 people both indirectly and directly and generates product worth $4 billion annually, has been crippled. It faces imminent collapse within months as a result of destructive tax policies on resources, particularly for feedstocks.

I would like to hear the Minister give a detailed explanation of how he will change the Government's tax policy to revitalize the threatened industry and to protect these 100,000 jobs. Will the Minister back up his own statement and show Canadians that he will do more than his predecessor, more than just mouth technological platitudes, and in fact get our resource sector moving productively, technologically, innovatively and profitably. As a tax lawyer, and even as an author on the subject of taxation, will he undertake to make these badly needed changes at once?

Here is another quotation from the Minister:

It is in the new technology-intensive goods and services that the new jobs will be created. But more crucial, it is in these technology-intensive sectors, and I believe in these sectors alone—

That is a remarkable statement:

—that new challenging and high paying jobs can be created.

Let us contrast that statement of hope and intention with the reality of the fact that in 1980 Canada suffered a trade deficit of $1 billion in computers and related products and, according to the Science Council of Canada, that deficit will rise to $5 billion by 1985. Although the Minister can point to some clearly successful examples of high-tech development, it should be apparent that only a dramatic drive to encourage major advances in these technology-intensive sectors by means of tax incentives and grants will any significant degree of success be reached.

But what has the Government actually done? The MacEachen budget cut the capital cost allowance on the first year after acquisition of the necessary new machinery and equipment of all kinds which is needed to speed up both the research operation and the more efficient production of manufactured goods.

Again, can the Minister explain the difference between the wonderful words he has given to the public and the woeful and destructive actions taken by his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde)? Even worse, we find that the Department of Finance is now dictating research and development policies. That calls into question the very definition of R and D, the activities in private companies which, up until now, have normally qualified as research. It is even imposing moratoriums on new rulings on the special research investment contracts, the SRICs.

How does the Minister plan to eliminate this stifling bureaucratic impediment to the new technology development which he so rightly describes as being crucial to new job creation in Canada? Even the vice-president of that highly respected corporation, Mitel, complains that "doors have closed" on the SRIC contracts. He says that "favourable rulings stopped in May of 1982, but we are working with the Government to try to open the doors again".

Other people describe the situation in terms of Revenue Canada tightening the screws. Is Revenue Canada to set the control, to control research policy, and pass judgment on the legitimacy of research being carried out, just as it does with regard to Canadian taxpayers who are considered to be guilty until proven innoncent? Or will the Minister point out to Revenue Canada that there is vastly more to be gained through research and the new products and processes it creates than the paltry sums to be saved by tightening the screws on research tax options? Why, research pays off at the rate of about 100 per cent a year to Government and, in addition, creates jobs at the rate of 800,000 for every 1 per cent of Gross National Product invested.

Another example of stifling of research in Canada is found in the pharmaceutical industry. Unless the amendments to the Patent Act are repealed, more and more research jobs will be lost to Canada because companies are not afforded the normal patent protection, and all this because of a bureaucratic fiat, a control of research in the country's economy.

Would the Minister undertake to convince the Government that it has been too involved in force-feeding its own bureaucratic growth and control to the detriment of productivity and research? Let me remind the Minister of another of his recent statements. He said:

The difference lies in skills, and that is why education and training and the encouragement of creativity, innovation and enterprise are so important to our future success. Our awareness of the challenges and opportunities that lie ahead must begin in the school system.

How can any reasonable person accept such a clear statement of priority by the Minister in light of the crippling cutback in post-secondary funding which will guarantee even fewer scientists, researchers and technicians in the future than even the deficient numbers being turned out today?

The last quotation of the Minister is a remarkable one. He stated:

I can best describe the urgency and importance of all this by forecasting for you how Canada would fare if we could not manage technological change effectively. Our industrial base, especially manufacturing, would be severely eroded. Unemployment would continue to be high, in the double digits. Our net revenues from resource industry would be severely reduced as our costs rose. The vast majority of the labour force would be forced toward low-paying service jobs.

Has the Minister been away on a long trip, or am I in some kind of a time warp? What is all of this would-be nonsense? These are exactly the problems we are facing today because we have not managed technological change effectively. The Government has totally ignored its obligations to the Canadian people by failing to keep Canadian investment and research at a level equal to the standard of the top technological nations of the world. Back in 1968, Canada expended 1.4 per cent of its Gross National Product on research. The Liberal Government let that figure erode to less than 1 per cent by 1980. When the world was going up, Canada was going down. Last year we invested 1.2 per cent of our GNP on research, on the road back to 1.5 percent by 1985, which is the Government's new, or I should say old, renewed goal. Even if we get there, it will be far too little; but then we would rather let Revenue Canada run our science and technology policies than our scientists and businessmen.

The Minister warns us that in the technology-intensive sectors alone will new challenging and high paying jobs be created. We hope, then, that the Minister will consider the following fact when he thinks of the $5 billion deficit Canada will be facing with regard to computer-related products. France alone will be investing $27 billion over the next five years in computers and consumer electronic products. This is more money than Canada will spend on all its research, even if it meets its objective of 1.5 per cent of GNP.

I wish the Minister of State for Science and Technology well. I envy him, too. He has inherited a very difficult, but not impossible, task. He will have to educate and convince the dinosaurs in the Liberal Cabinet that Canada is in the age of the information revolution, that eight working Canadians will be producing information in one form or another for every one Canadian who is producing industrial products, and that the information explosion will be a deadly explosion for Canada if we do not gear ourselves up to managing and developing our technology quickly.

I envy the Minister because he has the power to make the changes necessary to bring Canada into the information age, to get the message through to Canadians that the industrial revolution is over, that work, living and education standards are changing and that we must change with them, and that the Government will lead that change, not follow further and further behind. The micro-technologies and bio-technologies are reshaping and will continue to reshape all our standards and values. Our Government has an obligation to lead Canada into the future, not to anchor it into the past.

I believe that the Minister of State for Economic Development is both a competent Minister and a man of his word. He has said that he will soon be bringing forward policies which will launch the initiatives which he believes we need for economic recovery and investment. We applaud that, and we challenge the Minister to make good on these crucial promises.

The Progressive Conservative Party believes that a policy for research and technological and industrial development must embody the specific components of which I will speak. It serves no useful purpose to simply criticize, and so we will offer the Minister a base plan. A national objective, supported by tax and investment policy, should be set to match and eventually surpass those declared goals of competitive, advanced nations and should be constantly monitored for return on investment in both jobs and dollars. Other nations are expending as much as 2 per cent to 3 per cent of their Gross National Product. We should certainly be attempting to match or better that.

An industrial policy must concentrate on the strength of Canada, both human and fiscal. Canada's research and industrial development should be mainly directed to resource-based activities, as the Minister says, and to those opportunities presented by the exigencies of Canada's geography, climate, size or any other particular requirements.

Policy should aim at the broadest application of human skills and the providing of the maximum in personal accomplishment, social opportunity and national wealth generation for the benefit of all Canadians. Policy should emphasize the greater role and responsibilities of the private sector to conduct the larger portion of research for reasons of objectivity, efficiency and directness of result.

Policy should clearly identify and deliberately support advance in technologies and industries; for example, electronics, micro-electronics, bio-technology and other types of high technology which are developed. Policies should create a favourable environment for research spending and venture capital by means of sensible regulatory and tax systems embodying the proper balance of tax incentives, both positive and negative, grants, Government purchasing practices, export incentives and product mandating encouragement.

Policies should be developed in co-operation with provincial Governments and consider regional needs and strengths. Policies should support a strong basic research role through national and academic institutions. We have done well in these fields in the past but we must do more. Policies should encourage and co-ordinate appropriate educational programs to meet foreseeable scientific, technological, industrial and social requirements.

I found it strange that the secretary of MOSST would go around a year ago with beautiful multi-coloured slides proving conclusively that Canada was producing half as many scientists as it needed, but I did not realize then that the Minister of Finance would take care of the problem and cut the need instead of developing a better streaming of future scientists into the system.

Policies should develop a favourable public appreciation and attitude toward technological and industrial accomplishment and advancement. I look forward to the day when Canadians will see themselves as technologists, scientists and contributors to a world which desperately needs our resources and our brain power.

Policies of Government procurement should be closely tied to, and supportive of, industrial goals. I challenge the Minister to incorporate and achieve these goals. The achievement of them will guarantee Canada's pre-eminence as a strong, healthy, prosperous nation, which is the birthright of all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hudecki: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) would respond to a generally expressed concern that with the development of technology there will be a lesser and lesser need for people who are unskilled and unemployed. In speaking to various high school groups and encouraging them to take specialties in the area of high technology, physics and the basic sciences, even at the high school level young people are concerned that the development of robots and mechanical aids will have an ill effect upon the employment picture and their chances of an occupation. In his studies and readings, has the Hon. Member in his own mind dealt with the particular social problem which the evolution of high technology will produce in the country?

Mr. Gilchrist: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Hudecki) for his very penetrating question. It is a very serious one about which I think we can do something. Young people in schools today are very much more aware that we have left the industrial age and entered the information generation age. I mentioned in my speech that eight Canadians will be working in information generation for every one person producing goods in the future. This is likely to continue to a much greater degree, thus providing more jobs in the information sector.

Of course, the information sector includes everything from people who are in advertising, accounting, conceptual design, the making of blueprints or doing anything which comes up to but falls short of the actual production of goods. The development of skills for which we are calling is one that will embrace a much greater involvement of more and more people to do the kinds of jobs which will be needed in the future.

I am not concerned with the argument that if we put robots in an automotive plant it will cost jobs. That is obvious, but it would only cost assembly jobs. We would replace them with other jobs, such as looking after the robots and looking after designs handled through the CAD-CAM processes. We would simply change the nature of the jobs. The question should not be: Will we lose half the jobs in an automotive plant? It should be: Will we save half the jobs in an automotive plant? Not to do this, not to be right at the top in world-class standards in any kind of operation, is to lose all the jobs. We will end up having no people producing no cars because the cars will be much too costly and much too inefficient.

I think the standards have to be recognized because they are there, not because we want to set them up. They are there, and we must be the best in the world so that we may be the most competitive and the world will buy more and more Canadian products, which will provide more and more Canadian jobs.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I am very impressed with the work the Hon. Member has done in the area of science and technology and with the thinking he has put into his role as critic. He has presented us with a very general framework for policies in the area of science and technology, which I think sets some very broad objectives that are laudible and should be acceptable.

In the area of education, which is of critical concern because we are not training the number of people we need in the sciences or in the research fields, could the Hon. Member put some specifics or some flesh around his objectives as to how we should go about dealing with the problems faced by universities, with the structural difficulties in the universities and with their problems in the reallocation of resources and so on? Could he put some flesh around his objectives in an educational policy as to how the federal Government might take action to improve the situation?

Mr. Gilchrist: Mr. Speaker, I thank my Member for that question. I will not take refuge in the argument that we are not the Government and we should not, therefore, put specifics or flesh on the bones. It is a perfectly fair inter-Party question.

The fact is that we have taken too much of a "hands-off" position with regard to post-secondary education. I sympathize with the Member and the Government for apparently having such little control in the provincial application of educational funds with regard to these institutions. Simply I would encourage him and the Government to be more direct and much more involved in the specific streaming of more federal money directly to perceived objectives in post-secondary institutions. I do not think we can take refuge in the fact that they are not ours and therefore we cannot do anything.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a two-part question. Should I put the first part of it, obtain a short answer, and then put the second part?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I suggest to the Hon. Member that he put one question at a time.

Mr. Waddell: Well, here is my question. As I understand what the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) said, he believes it is basically the private sector which should do research and development. I would like him to confirm that it is basically a private sector thrust. If that is true, how does he square it with some of the questions Members of his Party asked today? I am referring to the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), who want Government involvement, it seems to me.

Also it seems to me that the Hon. Member was saying that in research and development it is basically a private sector thrust. If the private sector in Canada does the research and development, why should American companies—and basically we have American companies in Canada, or a branch plant economy—do the research and development in Canada? Why should they not act like they have always acted and conduct the research and development in the United States, not in Canada; in other words, doing it with the parent companies, to our loss here in Canada?

Mr. Gilchrist: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the private sector should do all the research and development to the exclusion of Government. I said they should all have a share. It is quite obvious in the very expensive areas of farm or agricultural research that even the biggest farm in Canada could not afford the kind of research cost which is attendant to that. There is a clear need for Government participation in those kinds of fields.

Where you are getting into the area of general and broad-based research, it is impossible to direct that from a very few institutions. It should be conducted in a way that allows Canadians in every walk of life, in every institution, in every skill to come forward with the kind of research and innovation of which we are capable. This happens every day in every company that has a research department. It is far more efficiently done, far better directed and far more profitable to all of the country. We are talking about the benefit of all the country.

I happen to have been involved in a company which was once American, as the Hon. Member said, and is now Canadian. There was a changeover from the research which came with an American stamp on the envelope, and for which we paid royalties as high as 3 per cent, to when the company became Canadian, set up its own research organization, did its research and started to generate 3 per cent royalties from large American corporations. They came to us cap-in-hand asking us to sell our products. The transition was tremendous. It became a profit centre in the company, and did very well. This is the kind of encouragement which I believe every company should go through.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) to elaborate and expand on his fear that, if the amendments to the Patent Act are not withdrawn, he sees a loss of protection and jobs in Canada.

Mr. Gilchrist: Mr. Speaker, that is a most poignant and timely question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilchrist: Hon. Members can laugh if they like, but it just so happens that it is. We are meeting these days with the members of the pharmaceutical industry to talk about that very problem. Hon. Members are aware that one research organization has shut down, and I will name it, Ayers. Another nearby is greatly reduced in its research capability.

We have had representations from virtually every major pharmaceutical company that this specious argument about generic products being much lower in price than proprietary products in Canada is really nonsense. There is a very narrow gap in the prices. However, the cost of the Provinces which are insisting on this generic availability is very high because these companies are not producing the new products which would reduce the amount of time people spend in hospitals. Therefore, the cost to the Provinces in even higher than their alleged savings.

Unless we get rid of these amendments which are reducing the normal patent coverage enjoyed by other kinds of companies in Canada, these companies will take their research to the United States, as the previous Hon. Member asked about, and it will be lost to Canada. The cost will be very dramatic.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must inform the House that the Question Period is now over.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps I did not note it in the debate, but I wonder if you could clarify the ruling on whether a Member from the same Party can ask questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Primarily questions should be put by Members of Parties other than the Party of the Hon. Member who has just spoken, but Members of the same party are not excluded from putting questions.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too join with the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) in condemning the record of research and development of the Liberal Government, especially in the last decade, which I would call the lost decade. That decade saw our expenditures on research and development drop to less than 1 per cent of GNP. It was a shameful decade that saw a major downgrading of our major universities and our research capacity.

The record of the 1970s is the strongest example of the type of neglect and mismanagement that the Trudeau Government has inflicted upon Canadian society. It is a national embarrassment and disgrace. It is a disgrace that we ended up having as much of our Gross National Product being expended on research and development as countries like Ireland, Portugal and Spain. It put us into that class of country. I agree with the Conservative Member that Canada should be, and has the capacity, the ability and the need to be, a first-class country in terms of research and development.

There is much that needs to be done in this country. Our position in many ways is unique, geographically, politically, socially and economically. There is a tremendous need and opportunity for having an innovative society with a strong research and development sector.

It is not a case that we are a small country and that we do not have the population base. I point, for example, to the Nordic countries, Norway, Denmark, Sweden and Finland, which are very much like us in climate, population size and resources, yet their private industry spends almost twice as much on research and development. Their industrial labour force is about 25 per cent larger than ours. Those countries have had coherent plans to ensure adequate research and development being done in their countries. It is not an excuse that can wash when we say that Canada just does not have the population base or market base to allow a healthy research and development sector.

The sad record of the seventies continues, the record of mismanagement. Our universities are in a state of financial uncertainty. They do not know what grand scheme the boys across the way are plotting now. They do not have any assurance that financing of universities will continue on a predictable basis in the years ahead. For the last number of years they have been existing in this area of uncertainty. Is it deliberate Government policy to create this uncertainty or is it just a mindlessness we have seen so often being exhibited by this Government?

As well, there exists a lack of coherent policy in terms of taxes and grants to encourage the private sector to expend money on research and development. There has been no clear, precise statement, strategy or goals presented by the Government that would allow the private sector to have some feeling as to where the Government wants the country to go. There is no formulation of coherent policies and goals. We continue to flounder in uncertainty and insecurity.

We have a new Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston). Like the Conservative speaker, I too welcome him to this most important job. Perhaps in the long run it is the most important of all the Ministries.

Like the Conservative Member, I too am disappointed in the record so far. We do not see a coherent program emerging that can begin to shed some light and provide some leadership to Canadians, whether in the private sector or in universities, people who are engaged in research and development. There is no coherent policy and no coherent goals coming from the Government.

While in many ways I agree with the Conservative motion, it does miss a few essential points. The essential reason why we have a small amount of research and development in Canada today is that our private sector has not invested the sums of money in research and development as they have in other countries, such as the Nordic countries, Germany, Holland, the United States and Japan.

We must ask the question why. The answers are there, Mr. Speaker. Studies after studies have demonstrated that most of the industries in Canada are branch plant industries. It is not so much the fact they are foreign owned which prohibits the development of R and D in Canada; it is the economic structure which they create in Canada which works against development of R and D. The simple fact is that we as branch plants do not have the opportunity of doing research and development in Canada. It generally gets done in the home country. That is where the scientists and the labs are. That is where research and development work gets done.

Sometimes research can be done in one country, say Germany, and developed somewhere else, say Taiwan, and there is not even a relationship between the research part and the development part. That is the major reason we have low R and D in Canada. In fact the former Minister of State for Science and Technology suggested in a speech to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association a year or so ago that it would require an increase of some $2.4 billion invested in R and D, and most of that will have to come from the private sector if we are to achieve our goal of 1.5 per cent of our Gross National Product going to research and development.

The question then arises, how can we make the private sector, particularly the foreign-owned private sector, make its contributions towards research and development in Canada? I hasten to add it is the foreign sector, not the Canadian privately-owned industries, which are laggards in terms of their expenditures in R and D. In fact, their record is pretty good. It is the foreign-owned companies which make us into a branch plant economy and prevents us from developing our own research and development community here in Canada.

It seems obvious to me that if the Government is to develop a coherent strategy to achieve the 1.5 per cent of our Gross National Product going to R and D, it must first and foremost address itself to the question of how we can get the multinationals to spend a decent amount of their profits in Canada for R and D. We have heard of no solution to that central problem from either our Conservative or Liberal friends. And until we come to a solution to that problem we will always remain a second-class country in terms of our scientific research and development.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I hasten to add that it is not the fault of the Canadian people. I believe as a people we are generally well educated. We have some excellent universities. In fact, our past record of major discoveries in the world goes far beyond that expected from our population. For example, oil was first discovered in Petrolia, Ontario, but the oil industry was developed somewhere else. The extraction of kerosene from coal was a process discovered here, but again was developed somewhere else. The telephone was invented here in Canada, but again developed somewhere else.

Perhaps historically the biggest R and D blunder of all time came as a result of a decision taken by a Progressive Conservative Government to scrap the Avro Arrow. This decision, Mr. Speaker, cost the jobs of hundreds and thousands of skilled scientists and engineers, wiping out a technology which the United States gobbled up. We used to refer to Los Angeles as the fourth largest Canadian city because of the large number of engineers and scientists who left Canada to work in the American space program. In fact, our greatest contribution to the American space program was not the "arm" but the scientists and engineers we supplied to the U.S.

But there is a deeper question which we have to address ourselves to as Members of Parliament, and that is a question which does not very often get asked; that is, research and development for whom? To benefit whom? Research and development for what purpose? I would maintain, Mr. Speaker, that just blindly throwing money into research and development is not good enough. I can see that the two old Parties are on the verge of panic as they scramble for a solution to the economic mess which this present system has created. They would have us believe that technology offers the golden way out; but technology at all costs is not necessarily the solution. For example, there are some fundamental problems which will affect Canadians with the unmindful introduction of the new technology. In micro-technology there is the whole question of VDTs and health problems. Unless Government plays a responsible role in the development of this new technology, we will eventually have to pay in terms of increased health costs, and all the health problems this could create for untold thousands of people, particularly women, across the country.

Then there is the question of unemployment with respect to robotics in industry. For example, the GM plant in Lordstown, Ohio brought in robots and displaced some 10,000 workers. Yet did the price of cars go down? No, it did not.

A central question which also has to be asked is, how does throwing people out of work give them the money and opportunity they need as consumers to buy the goods produced? For example, over one-half of the telephone operators, mainly women, lost their jobs at B.C. Tel when it automated its switchboard system. Women are particularly hard hit by the developments in the micro-technological field, because women have always been last hired and first fired. Technology at the expense of people will make such inequalities even worse.

Some say the new technology, the robots, the micro-technology and so on, will create as many jobs as will be displaced. There is no study, Mr. Speaker, of which I am aware, which proves beyond doubt that that indeed will be the case. In fact, I believe it is safe to assume that hundreds of thousands of people can no longer become productive workers, that they will, in essence, become obsolete. What to do with that large section of our population which is going to be displaced is something to which Parliament and Government should address itself.

We come back to the question: Technology for whom? Research and development in whose interests? Our Party, Mr. Speaker, is opposed to just throwing money at the private sector, trying to seduce them with greater and greater grants, hoping that in the end they will do their R and D here. There are many countries in the world trying to do the same. Are we going to try to outbid each other in terms of incentives? If the public, as the public should, makes investment in R and D, we have to make certain that that R and D helps and benefits the Canadian people; but the past record shows that very often this is not the case. I point out, as an example, the mounds of money in tax incentives and direct grants which we have given the oil industry for research and development in the extraction of gasoline and oil from heavy oil, the drilling in the North, new technologies which did not exist before. These new technologies were paid for out of public funds, yet we do not own those technologies. The patents are owned by the few multinational oil companies, and they will use the control of those patents, Mr. Speaker, to blackmail Government and Canadian society into doing their will. For us to spend the money to develop new technologies and discoveries which are then owned by the multi-nationals who ship them out of the country is unacceptable to us.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on another side of this issue, commonly called "appropriate technologies". These are technologies which do not increase the concentration of wealth and power into fewer and fewer hands, or technologies which allow for greater central control over more and more people's lives.

However, there is the possibility of developing technologies which allow greater independence and greater self-sufficiency. A prime example of that is energy. If we spend the money needed to build a nuclear plant instead on home insulation and conservation, the energy saved will exceed the energy produced by that nuclear plant. At the same time, developing nuclear technology will mean greater central control over people's lives. Developing conservation technologies, Mr. Speaker, allows greater freedom for people because there is less dependence on utility companies and banking and high finance interests. It gives people a greater degree of freedom. To develop appropriate technologies, Government has to play a central role.

Since being elected to this House I have been concerned about the whole question of herbicides and pesticides. I see tremendous problems in terms of spoiling our water and land. Yet it is the technology of herbicides and pesticides which is now very often forcing farmers into bankruptcy because of their high cost. They are dependent on that technology to control weeds and inspects, even though it has been shown a lot of insects are now developing resistance to these chemicals. And these technologies were developed because of the profit motive. However, a new technology of biological control and different and better farming methods can be developed. That does not mean anyone is going to make a profit on it other than the farmer, but it does mean greater independence for the farmer.

As we move into the twenty-first century, Mr. Speaker, major technological and social changes will occur. We need a Government with a notion as to where we want to go as a society, to develop not only an economic strategy but also a social strategy. We cannot have a research and development strategy without an economic and social strategy; they are all one. We must begin to define the goals of our society. That means input from universities and the scientific community, labour and business, fishermen and farmers, and retired people. We need a coherent policy, a coherent plan. We do not have that now. Therefore, we are in support of the motion introduced by the Conservative Party today.

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, as you know, I spent some considerable time on the special task force on energy, and if there was anything we learned it was about where we are going to be looking for the main source of energy in the long term. The answer we received from the best laboratories and universities in the world dealing with this subject is that the only hope for mankind to have an abundant source of energy in the future was fusion. I would like to have the position of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) as to whether or not he would accept that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I am naturally hesitant about any industry or technology which requires such tremendous capital investment. Given the reality of energy today as opposed to a year ago or even six months ago, we are finding that energy projects require heavy capital investment. Indeed, they are the dinosaurs of the industry. I understood that the committee as well recommended that the path to the future was through hydrogen, the most abundant element in the world today. It is my hope and expectation that R and D will go into solar power, and from there into hydrogen.

The Chairman of the National Research Council suggested to me in committee a year or so ago that he felt that within five to ten years electricity from the sun will be as cost-competitive as that from all other sources. If that is so, if we can get electricity from the sun and at the same time develop hydrogen power to run our cars, trucks and tractors, then I suggest we have something which is environmentally sound and does not require massive capital investment. It will allow every country, almost every community, particularly in the Third World, to attain energy self-sufficiency without going into debt up to their necks. They would have a bountiful supply of energy to light their lamps and run their tractors. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that for me that is the path we should be following.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I have three short questions in response to that answer. When you speak about the sun, in fact what you are talking about is fusion. If you want to supply electrical needs through the power of the sun, then you are talking about technology which in fact is both capital-intensive and has as many inherent dangers as a local nuclear plant.

My first question is whether the Member would support the ideas put forward by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) in his opening statement dealing with one-product mandating, whether it is a foreign or Canadian company. Then there is adjustment of the tax system to provide incentives for high-risk research and development. That is the short question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. May I suggest that Hon. Members put one question at a time in view of the hour.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the notion of product mandating I think has a lot going for it. I would include in there that we develop those technologies appropriate for Canada, those which meet our real needs as a country. Energy, transportation and communications are areas which naturally fall into that category. The problem is getting agreement. However, if we do not get agreement from other countries, we should still proceed; we should select our goals. We should decide what we want to do and go and do it. Make the deals with industry if we can, but go ahead and do it. Studies have shown that by the very nature of multinational corporations and our branch plant economy, very often research and development done in Canada has no relationship to our real needs as a country.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin) had been given the floor for the purpose of asking a question. I understand that there are four minutes remaining in the ten-minute question and answer period. I will accord the floor to the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey and he can decide what he wants to do about the absence or presence of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I regret the absence of the Hon. Member for Regina East as I was looking forward to his response to my questions. Perhaps he will be able to respond in another fashion on a later occasion to the questions his speech raised in my mind.

My first question concerns productivity. The Hon. Member mentioned the auto industry and said that Canadians are not getting cars any cheaper because of the changes in things like robotics and the technology that has been implemented. I wonder if he could enlighten us on the level of productivity that would be necessary in order to decrease the cost of production. Would he agree that the way countries like Japan and others have been able to decrease the unit cost of production is through increased productivity?

The Hon. Member also critized technology control, particularly by the multinational companies. Is he aware that the majority of energy-related development and research is carried on through AOSTRA and the mechanisms they had in place to make sure that the technology would be freely available in that particular sector to Canadian industries and to energy-related activities that could occur in Canada and other countries?

I will leave those questions on the record and look forward to the Hon. Member's response in the future.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted to bring the Hon. Member's very interesting questions to the attention of my colleague. He was delayed by answering some other questions outside the House. I expect him to be here momentarily. I know that he not only has answers to both questions but that he will be well able to satisfy the Hon. Member's curiosity.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) made a very good speech. I enjoyed what he had to say and I agree with most of it. In one respect he worried we though, because he sounded slightly like a Luddite. He talked about 10,000 workers losing their jobs through automation and robotization, but he gave no answers to the problem. Does he have an answer?

We went through this when the railways went to dieselization. That has worked itself out over the years but with considerable disruption in the employment pattern. I do not believe we can stop progress or this movement.

I would appreciate an answer from the Hon. Member or, indeed, from any Member of the NDP at any time, concerning what attitude or policy they would adopt toward these obvious social disruptions that are bound to take place. We all regret them, of course, but I should like to have the answers from the Hon. Member, rather than just questions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Then the Chair will recognize an Hon. Member for debate.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will undertake, as I did with the previous questioner, to have the Hon. Member correspond directly with the Hon. Member on these very important matters that he has raised. The Hon. Member is absolutely right that it is not only enough to raise questions, but it is important, in addition to raising questions, to have answers. But I might ask him in raising his question whether he himself has any answers.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You cannot do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is involved in a ten-minute question and answer period. In that regard I have to say that the clock seems to indicate that that period is over. I think that is the best way to proceed. I see the Minister of State for Economic Development (Mr. Johnston) rising, but I am not sure whether he is rising on a point of order or in debate.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am rising in debate. I am rising today as Minister of State for Science and Technology more than in my capacity as Minister of State for Economic Development.

I would like to say that it is significant, as has been pointed out by one of the speakers who preceded me, that these two ministries come under the responsibility of the same Minister because of the importance of science and technology to economic development in this country. That necessity has been recognized now in many other countries in the western world, and I suggest that in itself is some indication of the importance which this Government attaches to science and technology.

At the outset I would like to say how much I enjoyed the speeches made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) and by the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). While it is true that I take issue with a number of the partisan points which they attempted to score in the course of debate, I suppose that is to be expected.

Mr. Deans: Unlike yourself; you never score partisan points.

Mr. Johnston: At the same time I felt there were some very constructive suggestions put forward upon which I will be commenting during the course of my intervention.

[Translation]

I may also add, Mr. Speaker, that I am most impressed with this procedure which enables Hon. Members to exchange views. Unfortunately, the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) did not remain in the House to answer questions that might be forthcoming. This creates some problems for Hon. Members who would like to ask some questions about the speech he just made in the House.

[English]

Apart from that weakness in today's proceedings which I doubt will arise very often, I do think this is really a very constructive kind of procedure, particularly in terms of a subject like science and technology in which all Members of this House are so passionately interested in today's world.

I felt I should begin by looking carefully at the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East and providing some analysis of it in terms of the Government's policy in the past, in the present and in the future. The motion reads:

> That this House recognizes that an increased commitment to science and technology is fundamental to the establishment of a new industrial base in Canada—

That is the first point made by the motion and I would like to speak to that just for a moment. I am not clear and I hope I will have the opportunity to ask, although I do not see the Hon. Member for Scarborough East in the House, what was specifically intended by "a new industrial base", in light of the comments that followed during the course of his intervention.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member spoke of Canada having a very important resource base, a very important strength in that sector, that in all likelihood it would continue to be one of our strengths and that it must be built upon. Obviously, technology has a very significant role to play in enabling Canada to maintain and expand upon its competitive position in that sector.

I am not sure what the Hon. Member means by new industrial base. I suggest that we have a very strong, well established industrial base in Canada and upon that base we must build further. Technology, of course, is the key for us to build further in that sector.

We hear much of Canada being by-passed by other countries and about our lack of commitment and effort. In fact, I would be the last to say that we do not require a sound, ongoing technology policy. I would be the last to say that there is not more to be done. But I would also be the last to say that we have not accomplished a great deal and that we do not have a record of achievement of which we must be very proud.

Too often it seems to me that one reads in the press and in reports by economists about Canada's falling rate of productivity. When I say "too often", I am not suggesting that we should not all be conscious of that rather lamentable performance in productivity, particularly during the 1970s.

Canadians, by and large, do not realize that Canada is still one of the most productive countries in the world. In the OECD report on historical statistics for the period 1960 to 1980, the real gross domestic product per employed persons of selected countries is compared with that of the United States which, incidentally, and notwithstanding its lamentable performance in improving productivity, remains the most productive country per worker among the countries cited. The countries are the United States, Canada, France, West Germany, Japan and the U.K.

I am not sure that Members of this House realize that Canada is still ranked second among those countries in terms of real productivity; that is, real gross domestic product per employed person. But what is also true is that we have been rapidly slipping in terms of improving our rate of productivity. In that category Canada is a dismal second to last among those countries. In fact, I am sorry to say that between the period 1973 to 1980 Canada is ranked last among those countries with effectively no productivity increase over the period. That is the problem we must address.

It is important for us to realize that we begin from a very sound base achieved over many years of sound policies, of research and development and of innovation in the industries of this country which have brought us the standard of living which all Canadians enjoy. We have many winners in this country; let us not forget that. Many of them have been due to the programs which have contributed to create that industrial base. I would like to cite a number of programs which this Government has introduced over the years. If there are any questions flowing from them, I would be more than pleased to respond.

The programs which are the best known and which have played major, key roles, I suggest, in terms of keeping Canadian industry competitive and also at the leading edge of technology in so many fields, include the Enterprise Development Program and the Defence Industry Productivity program, both of which are programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

A more recent program, Support for Technology Enhanced Productivity Program, is another program of the Department of Industry. Then we have the Unsolicited Proposals Program in the Department of Supply and Services. I see my colleague the Minister for Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) is here today. He is responsible for the administration of that Program to which I have just referred as well as the Source Development Fund, another creative program. This program will have a major impact upon the technology of Canadian firms, also introduced at the instigation of our current Minister of Supply and Services during the current term of this Government. In addition, there are several important programs in the National Research Council of Canada.

I would be remiss in not paying tribute to the work of the National Research Council and the extraordinarily enviable international reputation that it enjoys. It is another institution of which we can be justifiably proud. There we find the Industrial Research Assistance Program as well as Programs for Industry Laboratory Projects.

Each of these programs plays a very significant role in having contributed, and continuing to contribute, to that very important industrial base which Canadians enjoy in this country. I might also mention in passing, because I know that some Members in the House were present, that our colleague the Minister of Supply and Services, who is in the House today, hosted just a few short days ago a celebration of the tenth anniversary of the Science Centre of the Department of Supply and Services. There was a magnificent display of the products and advanced technology that have been produced through a number of these programs operating under the umbrella of the federal Government.

I suggest that when we talk about science policies and technology policies, let us never lose sight of the fact that we in Canada are not in the technological backwaters of the world. In fact, we have much technology to export. Of course, we still have great potential ahead of us and it is to realize that potential ahead of us in this world of rapidly changing technology that our efforts must be directed. That is the direction in which we are moving.

I mentioned a moment ago that we must not forget our winners. I thought I would perhaps this afternoon cite some of the lesser known winners in Canada, most of whom have enjoyed the support of these programs. I expect that most Members of the House are familiar with the achievements of companies like Northern Telecom and Mitel in the international arena, and CAE Industries, particularly in the area of aircraft simulators where it has no peer in the international arena.

There are many other companies in this country which are much lesser known. Just a few months ago, when I was speaking in Toronto, I thought I would look up some of these companies to see how many small threshold firms and others have carved out a niche for themselves in the international arena. Canadians are probably not aware of many of these companies. For example, the Industrial Research Assistance Program which I referred to earlier had contributed some $2 million to Abco, which is a Lunenburg, Nova Scotia plastics and equipment manufacturing company. The sales of that company, which is situated in Lunenburg, have risen from $5 million in 1972 to $30 million in 1981. The number of employees has climbed to over 400 from a base of 150 at the beginning of that period. New products that this company has developed through R and D have permitted it to make as much as 80 per cent of its sales on international markets.

I could go through a number of companies that have had similar successes. For example, there is the International Submarine Engineering Company of Port Moody, British Columbia. I have already referred to Mitel. There is such a number of them that time does not really permit me to cite them all. I can cite them from every area of the country, whether it is Intera Environmental Consultants of Calgary or SED Systems of Saskatoon which is a very well known company to Canadians, certainly in that area.

I should perhaps refer to one program which I believe was directly a result of some of the programs of the Department of Supply and Services which I referred to earlier. It is the Services Converto-Braille-Cypitot-Galarneau of Hull, Quebec, which has permitted the development of a computer terminal that gives the blind access to information services such as Telidon, which is another great Canadian technological achievement, the Canadian Press News Services, libraries and so on.

We have much world-class technology in Canada. We are starting from a very sound base. When we look at this motion, which I do not have a great deal of quarrel with apart from the conclusion, I think we should bear in mind that we are moving forward from an enviable position and have not allowed Canada to stay in the backwaters of technology and innovation as so many observers have often suggested.

Reference is made in the second part of the motion to a policy which supports the rejuvenation of existing industries. We all know that many countries in the western industrialized world today are faced with the phenomenon of the so-called sunset industries. Hopefully, some of these industries can be moved from the sunset back to the sunrise through the application of new technologies. This Government is attempting to do this.

I expect that most Members of the House are familiar with the very substantial financial commitment that this Government has made to that very issue of rejuvenation of existing industries in order to bring them back into a competitive position. I need only mention such programs as ILAP or CIRB, which is directly concerned with the so-called soft sectors——or the "secteurs mous", as they say in Quebec, namely, textiles and footwear. It is therefore very important to realize that we have made a real effort in those areas. If I remember correctly, we spent $267 million on this program, which is aimed at improving and updating companies in these sectors and also at assisting employees who will be affected by the conditions in the sectors in question.

[English]

It is exactly in the spirit of this motion that the Government has in fact moved. As I have said, there is $267 million in that program alone, not to mention an additional $400 million, as I recall, in the ILAP Program to provide industrial adjustment assistance both to industries and, of course, to the employees themselves, who are affected because emerging technologies in other countries and lower labour rates have had a dramatic impact on their ability to compete in international markets.

The motion also refers to the creation of new employment and the maintenance of existing jobs. There is no doubt in anyone's mind that the new technologies and the modernization of plants will have an impact on the job market. Therefore, there is perhaps a certain amount of paradox in the motion when we are being told, on the one hand, that we should introduce new technologies but should maintain existing jobs, on the other hand. That does not mean that we cannot create new jobs, but I suggest that the introduction of new technologies, such as robotics in the automobile assembly line which was referred to earlier, are bound to displace assembly line workers. I do not think there is any doubt of that. It is somewhat incompatible to say that we are to maintain existing jobs and improve productivity at the same time by introducing new technology.

By the same token, I would say that Governments, industry and labour working together must come to grips with those jobs that are displaced through retraining programs, and efforts to bring those people who are affected by new technologies to a level of education and "formation" which will enable them to take advantage of the new and exciting opportunities that technology itself brings.

For every robot that one puts on an assembly line, there will be requirements for additional technicians, engineers and programmers who will be responsible for the software that will go into the micro-computers which will operate that robotics system. In fact, many of the jobs that will be displaced will be jobs that will be unattractive. They will be arduous jobs that will be replaced by more stimulating and challenging jobs. The quality of the work environment will, in turn, improve. But at the same time, there is that transitional period through which we as Governments must pass; and I say as "governments" because much of this responsibility must be shared with provincial Governments as well as other sectors. We must ensure that the workers of this country are not fearful of that necessary change because we know that they in turn will be protected from the harsh effects of that change and will prosper from the benefits which new technology will bring. However, I say that it would be unrealistic to suggest that new technology will not have an impact on some of these existing employments. In fact, it should have, because we should replace some of those dreary, assembly line and clerical jobs with ones which are more challenging and better paying.

I would now like to turn to the last part of the motion wherein the mover, the Hon. Member for Scarborough East, in the normal way condemns the Government, and the condemnation was understandably supported by the Hon. Member for Regina East. As stated, the motion reads:

> —condemns the Government for its neglect in failing to aggressively develop policies to promote the advancement of science and technology in this country, for its lack of interest in utilizing and increasing Canada's human potential, and for its failure to adopt the spending targets for science and technology that were established by the Progressive Conservative Government in 1979.

Allow me to say that, in the few minutes I have been on my feet this afternoon, I believe I have underlined and pointed out a number of programs which have been very successful. When we speak of Government effort, let us consider the record of rhetoric instead. It is all very well to have "targets", but what we on this side of the House look to is performance. I would like to point out to the House that we have steadily moved up our commitment since assuming office in 1980, that we are right on track in achieving 1.5 per cent of GNP and R and D by 1985.

An Hon. Member: One hundred and fourteen jobs in Ontario.

Mr. Johnston: In 1980, it was 1.07 per cent, and in 1982, it was estimated to be 1.2 per cent. I suggest to Hon. Members that in 1985 it will be 1.5 per cent. It is my wish and that of other Hon. Members in the House that that trend continue so that by the year 1990 it will be 2 per cent or even better.

An Hon. Member: Are those as good as last year's projections?

Mr. Johnston: Let me give some more striking examples in terms of annual incremental percentage growth of commitment to the gross expenditure on research and development in various sectors. In 1980 we increased the federal commitment by 15 per cent, in 1981 by 21 per cent, and in 1982 by 17 per cent. More importantly, the incentives which we have provided to the private sector permitted the industrial sector to increase its 1980 percentage by 18 per cent, by 26 per cent in 1981 and by 23 per cent in 1982. The NDP critics have said that industry is not doing its share. Industry is indeed beginning to do its share in a most dramatic way.

While we are on the subject of targets, I was reading a speech by the former Minister of Science and Technology for the Conservative Government, Mr. Grafftey, given back in 1979.

Mr. Waddell: Not a bad target.

Mr. Johnston: He was discussing the university sector and told us that the Conservatives would increase funding to NSERC to 32 per cent. He made the announcement that there would be a 32 per cent hike in 1980-81. Of course, the Conservatives were not in power in 1980-81, but I would like to point out that we took office and it became 34 per cent under a Liberal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I would imagine that the House would have no difficulty in extending the courtesy to the Minister of allowing him to speak for a couple of moments in order to complete his remarks. However, as the person in the Chair, I do not have the privilege of extending that courtesy automatically.

Is there unanimous consent to permit the Minister to speak further?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston: I thank Hon. Members of the House for their indulgence. I will finish my remarks very quickly. Because of the importance which we all attach to the matter, I will finish on a very non-partisan note. I made the point concerning NSERC. Those are the facts, and I think an examination of the record will clearly demonstrate the commitment of the Government to R and D. Notwithstanding cutting back in other sectors, the Government and Members of this side have consistently prodded for more and more spending on research and development.

I was very impressed with the intervention of the Hon. Member for Scarborough East, perhaps more by his comments than by his motion, because when he came to the end of his comments, unlike most spokesmen for the Conservative Party he actually put forward a number of concrete suggestions.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): They were pretty good too.

Mr. Johnston: He put forward the kinds of things which a technology policy, in his view, should embrace. He suggested that we should be building on the comparative advantages of this country and he referred to the resource base. We all agree with that. He said he wanted to emphasize that the private sector has an important role to play in research and development. Not only do we agree with that, but the numbers to which I have just made reference also show this to be true.

Mr. Waddell: You are a Tory, Don.

Mr. Johnston: I would suggest that, notwithstanding the criticism we have heard of the fiscal system, Section 37 of the Income Tax Act has been instrumental in providing incentive to the industries of this country to invest in R and D. In fact, it is one of the most generous provisions of its kind in any western industrialized nation. That is not to say that it could not be modified. That is not to say that it cannot be improved, and it will be improved if it needs to be improved. However, I am saying for the record that it has been very successful in attracting funds into the R and D sector.

The Hon. Member has referred to the necessity of advancing technology and applications of new technology in the industrial sector, what is commonly referred to as "innovation". I agree with that as well. He spoke of a favourable environment being created for research and development and for venture capital. We agree with that. He spoke of the importance of having a co-operative relationship with provincial Governments. I agree with that and would like to encourage provincial Governments to devote more of their resources to R and D. In fact, in each of my meetings with provincial Governments in my role as Minister of State for Regional and Economic Development, the issue of technology has been one of highest priority. I can assure Your Honour that we will be working closely with the Provinces to ensure that we create a synergism so that not only will we be able to spend 1.5 per cent of Gross National Product on R and D by 1985, but also that it is well spent to ensure that the desired results of those targets, which are important, are achieved.

The Hon. Member emphasized the importance of strong basic research through such organizations or institutions as NSERC. We agree with that. He dealt with the awareness issue at some length. Nothing could be more important than making Canadians aware of the opportunities awaiting us as a nation if we embrace these areas of advanced technology. I know that the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said the same thing in the House some weeks ago. He was then quite constructive as well. He also spoke of the importance of Government procurement in terms of developing technology.

I realize that I am going on a bit, Mr. Speaker. Let me just say that there is a paper before a number of my colleagues on technology policy, and I can assure Hon. Members of this House that not only will it address all of the issues which have been raised here today, the constructive issues and suggestions, but that it will also go much further in some areas. I look forward, on the basis of today's exchange, to the support of Members in this House from all Parties when these policies are presented.

I thank Your Honour, in particular, and other Hon. Members of the House for allowing me to speak beyond my time limit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) to ask a question and, following that, other Hon. Members.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a two-part question to the Minister. I was happy to hear him say that one of the roles of research and development is to maintain employment and to help find alternative employment for those whose jobs are affected by new technology. I want to remind him that in my own constituency, 1,500 jobs are affected by new technology in national defence. Can we count on the full resources of both of his Ministries to help us find alternate employment and job opportunities on the Miramichi so that the peole of Miramichi will be able to lead productive lives?

In his comments, he also referred to the National Research Council. I agree with his laudatory remarks. However, I remind the Minister that New Brunswick is the only Province in Canada which does not have a unit of the National Research Council. I ask him to consider the establishment of a unit of the NRC at the about to be closed base in Chatham, so that it will have a research base to attract other industries to the area.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the Hon. Member, the Government is very sensitive, as he knows, to the problems faced by him in the Miramichi area, particularly with respect to the Chatham base. Every effort is being made to find alternatives which will provide employment for the people affected in that area. Through the initiative of the regional Minister, the Member himself and others, the Government has taken initiatives in New Brunswick such as the establishment by Mitel at Buctouche of a facility which is very significant in terms of high technology in the area.

With respect to the NRC, there are projects under consideration. I am not sure I can give an assurance that they should be placed necessarily on the Chatham base, but there is no doubt as technology improves that it should be available to every region of the country by national institutions, and that is our intention.

Mr. Greenaway: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister. It concerns the policy paper which is now before Cabinet. We have awaited this paper for quite a while. I know that he has taken some time to put it all together and that he is in a new position, but I expected that it might come out before the Christmas break. Can the Minister give us any idea when it will come out? Will it address the serious problems in the forest industry which could be remedied by putting research and development money into that industry?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I see my role as Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology as really trying to establish a framework with my colleagues within which various programs can move forward by line departments. There is no doubt that there is important research and development to be done in the forestry sector. It has to be done. Unfortunately, during a period of recession of the kind we are experiencing, companies in that sector are less inclined to invest in research and development because they are simply trying to meet payrolls and to fund ongoing necessary costs. That point has been made to us. It is not a problem, I might say, that is unique to the forestry sector.

We are indeed moving forward in that area. In fact, the issue of the forestry sector will be addressed in some detail this weekend at a caucus gathering in Thunder Bay. I expect we will have a good exchange of views and some very clear suggestions by Members from the areas affected by the problems in the forestry sector and the lack of research and development in that sector.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Minister talked glowingly about more stimulating jobs. Is he aware that many women across the country today are working on word processing machines for not very much more money? Even if one wants to go to the washroom, one has to plug in a key. In the old days one had to ask the boss or the foreman; now one has to ask the machine. Does he really think that is progress?

The Minister speaks highly of sunset and sunrise industries, the winners and the losers, like all Atari Liberals do. Is he aware of a recent study from Massachusetts of one area which got into high-tech that showed the salaries for a few people—engineers, programmers and so on—went very high, but that the rest of the people had to go into the service industries with low-paying salaries. Compared with the way society used to be with older-type industries such as steel manufacturing and so on, where people made the same salaries, the community has basically changed.

Is that the kind of Canada he would like to see when he speaks about more stimulating jobs? Does he recognize the kind of danger inherent in the new high-tech industry about which he so flamboyantly and conservatively speaks? Does he see the danger? What steps would he take to prevent the kinds of things which are happening now, as indicated in the first study conducted in Massachusetts?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is speaking very much with his tongue stuck in his cheek. Not too many weeks ago I heard him speak in the House, and he certainly did not sound like a neo-Luddite, as he seems to today. The inference I would draw from his remarks is that he feels Canada should reject the technological revolution which is reshaping industries all over the world.

I do not think Canada has a choice in joining that revolution, if we intend to maintain the standard of living to which Canadians have not only grown accustomed but to which they are entitled, given the potential of the country both in terms of natural and human resources. It is our job to manage the technological change. It is our job as a Government to take the lead, and be seen to take the lead, in managing that technological change for the benefit of all Canadians and to ensure that the kinds of problems to which the Hon. Member alluded do not take place. Essentially, that is the point I attempted to make during my remarks.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Minister. He has learned his lesson in law school well, that when one has a weak case, assertively state it and volubly state it. He has certainly done that today.

I have two quotations on which I would ask him to comment. The first is from Dr. Larkin Kerwin of the National Research Council wherein he said:

> We currently spend less than any industrialized country on new research.

In other words, we are the worst of all. I would also point out to him that by 1985 Japan will be spending 4 per cent on research, compared with the magnificent sum of 1.5 per cent about which he talked for Canada. Most industrialized countries are over 2 per cent right now.

The second quotation is one from Jack Donegani, President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, wherein he talked about the Liberal Government and said:

> —the Government has deliberately allowed Canadian federal laboratories to suffer through a decade of stagnation since the Lamontagne Commission's review of Canadian science policy. During this time, there has been inadequate hiring of newly trained scientists except to replace retirees. Opportunities for Government scientists to keep their training up to date have been inadequate and active participation in scientific conferences, workshops or professional committees requiring occasional travel has been restricted to an absurd degree.

In view of his beautiful words about what the Government is doing, how does the Minister respond to these two quotations?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, if the accusation is that we should be doing more as a country, I would agree with it. I concur with Dr. Larkin, but if we are to do more, let us do it in a way which reaps the best possible benefits for the country. Let us not throw money at a problem. Let us make sure that the funds which are being spent are expended well and effectively. This means that we should not have duplication and conflict in different regions. This means that we should put our shoulders to the wheel and have a real national effort on research and development. We are moving very quickly in that regard.

By adding vast sums of money before the communities have put in place the necessary infrastructure and laboratories, the necessary engineers and skills at the university level, supported by the Provinces in particular because they have responsibility for university education, we have to move in a way which maximizes the contributions we are making and does not create an enormous amount of waste. In so far as the latest numbers I have for several countries in 1980 are concerned, it is true that we are behind. We were at 1.02 per cent of the GNP. France was at 1.83 per cent, Japan was at 1.95 per cent and the United States was at 2.47 per cent. None of those countries in 1980 was at anything like the 3 per cent, if I recall that the Hon. Member suggested.

Mr. Cook: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Minister was talking about 1985. The projections for Japan in 1985 are 4 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member could have risen on a question or a comment if he wished. I urge him to continue during the time available with his comment.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could direct a question to the Minister. The Minister mentioned that there was a paper being submitted to some of his colleagues, and possibly to a Cabinet committee, emanating from his Ministry. I know he cannot be specific, but is there contained in it proposals for tax and other financial incentives with respect to the development of the high technology industry, particularly small business and the development of new business?

Second, does it contain, or has the Minister addressed in any way, proposals with respect to retraining of people who may be affected as a result of the development of the high technology industry that has been referred to? Does it address those two things? Third, when may we expect to see the paper tabled?

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when I spoke of a paper I indicated earlier that I would be bringing forward a technology policy paper, which I am now doing. For some time I have had consultation and consideration in many areas. Obviously I am not at liberty to disclose to the House what is contained in that paper. I certainly will give assurance to the House that it is broad in its application in the area of technology policy in the industrial sector.

I might add that the kind of issues that the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) raises are, of course, already being addressed. The issue of fiscal incentives has been addressed. Recently some guidelines were issued to clarify some of the interpretations that have been given by the Department of National Revenue with respect to the so-called scientific research investment contracts. These matters are constantly moving forward and being reviewed. As a former Minister of National Revenue, the Hon. Member is fully aware of the activities of the interpretation section of that Department.

With respect to the issue of retraining, that is a matter which is being pursued constantly by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) through the National Training Act and other instruments. That is not to say that more should not be done. As ongoing assessments indicate to what extent technology will affect employment in these sectors, clearly action and perhaps supplemental action will have to be taken because retraining is of fundamental importance, not only to ensure that these people find jobs, but to eliminate a certain amount of the anxiety that appears to exist in many circles with respect to the impact of technology.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when will the paper be ready?

Mr. Lorne Greenaway (Cariboo-Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, one can sense an increasing awareness in this country, an awakening to the fact that we are being rapidly left behind by other more enlightened and adaptable industrialized western nations. The truth is that we are now clearly behind—left in the starting gate—in what is becoming known as the second industrial revolution, change brought on us by new technologies.

For an obvious example of how far out of the race we are, one simply has to check brand names of products sold in outlets retailing TV sets, radios, calculators, computers and other electronic gadgetry. It would be interesting to know how many Sony Walkman radios were sold this past Christmas.

After experiencing the last two years of economic turmoil in this country, many Canadians, especially those out of work, realize that something is drastically wrong. Most now sense that we must become much more than a nation whose economy is based upon the sale of its raw materials. If one examines employment statistics over past years, it can be seen that there has been a serious and growing unemployment problem in this country, long before the present recession began.

In 1966, 251,000 Canadians were out of work. By 1970, it was 476,000, by 1976, 727,000, in 1980, 867,000. Now it is in excess of 1.5 million. In fact, I heard today it is actually 1.6 million. Obviously the number of people unemployed has grown faster than the economy. Even in the good years of the sixties and seventies, unemployment was increasing and we were losing ground. A large portion of the unemployed are new entrants into the labour force, young people and an increasing number of women. I will refer to the problem of unemployment and women later.

We desperately need more jobs, not jobs of the temporary type provided by a number of Government short-term programs. I do not think the real and permanent-type jobs I refer to are going to come out of the resource sector. It seems logical that a good many will come out of the service sector, but the majority will have to be provided by manufacturing. This will not happen if we do not base our own economic future upon technological development. Our economy must be based upon new technologies.

Successful industrialized countries have long since realized that strong economies are based on a healthy level of research and development. This, of course, must be in tune with Government policies that create incentives for the risk-takers, a factor that is fast disappearing in this country.

We have long ago passed the period where unemployment can be solved by putting workers on the public payroll. Last year the National Research Council estimated that if Canada's 1,000 high-technology firms doubled their gross output by 1990, the net benefit to Canada's balance of payments would amount to $12 billion and, what is so important, 650,000 jobs would be created.

The Canadian Government must, of necessity, concentrate upon working with business and labour in order to solve our economic problems. By now this Government should have realized that we are in a crisis situation. It is usual in times of crisis for all people, for all sectors, to pull together for the common good. If we hope to regain our position in the world, we must have a well-planned industrial strategy in this country. It is years and years overdue.

Industry and labour have recognized this for a good long time. Industry has also realized during this recession that, with a few exceptions, it cannot depend on Government for help. In actual fact the federal Government has appeared to be little more than an aimless spectator in the economic shake-out in the past two-years.

At a recent Toronto seminar sponsored by the Conference Board of Canada dealing with the drafting of a national industrial strategy, Mr. John Shepherd, Chairman of Leigh Instruments of Ottawa, said:

> —the private sector has been too passive and defensive in front of government, waiting to react rather than hastening to contribute.
> I believe that our job is to insist on a more intelligent framework, a better ordering of priorities . . . and to help bring to bear on government a better sense of the market forces which are and will be at play . . . We need to inject ourselves more forcibly and responsibility into that process.

Labour is also anxious and willing to co-operate. At the same Toronto meeting Shirley Carr, Executive Vice-President of the Canadian Labour Congress, also called for a national industrial game plan. She said:

> —the creating of an atmosphere wherein shared decision-making power amongst the actors can occur is mutual recognition . . . labour has a legitimate place in Canadian society—a place that not only includes the right to organize and represent workers through collective bargaining, but also extends a seat at the table at all levels of decision-making.

One of the key elements in the Japanese success story is an industrial strategy that incorporates input from many sectors. Before any changes are made, or new initiatives taken, the Japanese Government consults with and seeks advice from representatives of industry, labour, universities and the mass media. Therefore, when a new policy affecting industry is announced, it is widely supported and is effective because of a spirit of co-operation. The Japanese strategy now has the industrial sector supporting 65 per cent of that country's research and development. Long-term, risky and expensive research is left to the Government. Recently, the Japanese Government spent $5 billion in U.S. currency in building a research centre near Tokyo which houses 40 different research groups.

I know that in this country previous and present Ministers have been canvassing representatives of industry. The previous Minister found that industry was concerned with a number of issues. Lack of start-up capital, difficulties with debt financing, a need for research and development tax incentives and a desire for more collaboration among Government, industry and universities were subjects brought to his attention. I am sure the present Minister is going over the same ground. I hope he includes labour in his discussions. The pity is that this Government has spent too much time studying and too little time implementing, and now we are falling well behind our competitors.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook), in a question to the Minister, quoted from a letter from Mr. Jack Donegani, the President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, which appeared in today's Globe and Mail. I would like to quote again from that letter. The heading reads, "Stronger position urged on high-technology policy". It goes on to read:

> The Professional Institute, which represents some 5,000 scientists, for years has been pressing the Government to develop and encourage research and higher technology in Canada in general, and within the federal service in particular. It has urged the Government to recognize the obvious, that advanced research and technology are imperative to the wellbeing of every Canadian, to economic development, to health, safety and security.
> The institute, therefore, urges Mr. Johnston to take a stronger position in Cabinet on this issue.

We are also being warned by the Science Council of Canada that the United States and Japan are front runners in micro-electronics, and Canada would be "hard-pressed to catch even the less advanced "second-tier" nations in Europe and Scandinavia". The micro-chip, a tiny silicon block which can be the equivalent of up to 500,000 transistors or more, is revolutionizing manufacturing in advanced industrialized countries. To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Government has only dedicated about $10 million in chip research. By contrast, other countries have sensed the crisis situation which exists. France, for example, has launched a five-year, $27 billion program to ensure that she becomes a world power in computers, office equipment and consumer electronics. The $27 billion will be spent on new plants, research and development and on various subsidy programs. "Made in France" stamped on electronic gadgets will soon be as common as "Made in Japan". West Germany has a three-year $225 million program under way which grants firms up to $400,000 to promote the use of the micro-chip in their plants and products. Interestingly, applications for grants take an average of only three weeks to process. Contrast that, if you will, with the time it generally takes to get money from our federal Government for any such program. The urgency of the situation is well understood by other countries.

The micro-chip is revolutionizing the world and Canadians must realize what this means. Women, especially, are going to feel its effects. Many jobs traditionally held by women, such as in offices, as bank tellers, retail clerks and telephone operators, will be lost. In my home town of Williams Lake, British Columbia, 50 telephone operators will lose their jobs to new technology in mid-1984. Yet little, if anything, is being done to direct women from areas which will be hit hard by efficiency and productivity improvements resulting from the implementation of micro-electronic technology. Women must awake, unite and demand quick answers from Governments, industry and labour to this very urgent problem.

I suggest to the Minister and the Government that they must place the subject of technological change, and our failure to recognize the importance of research and development, on a very urgent priority basis. They must use research and development as the foundation of an industrial strategy. I suggest a conference of the federal and provincial Governments, industry, labour and representatives of our educational system should be held immediately with a view to positive direction and immediate action. We have talked for years, Mr. Speaker, about what we are going to do in this country as far as research and development and industrial strategy are concerned. Time for talk is long past. We must act. If we fail to realize the importance and urgency of the second industrial revolution, we will pay very dearly.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) this morning, and he placed in a very interesting context the whole question of research and development, which he also linked with tax policy and macro-economic policy and, indeed, strategy on economic development.

After a very difficult period in the world economy, we are now seeing some indicators which are encouraging, and it is important now that the remainder of the 1980s be a period of economic renewal for us, of ensuring Canada's prosperity. Our traditional industries are the backbone of Canada and they can and should remain the source of jobs and income for thousands of Canadians. With continued productivity improvements and new marketing techniques, the traditional industries, such as fishing, forestry, mining and agriculture, can play a central role in Canada's future economic prosperity. When combined with advances in high technology sectors and the securing of Canada's industrial heartland, a positive climate of growth will re-assert itself, allowing for the necessary market adjustments to keep Canada competitive. And with growth we will have the opportunity of ensuring that every region of Canada benefits. The challenge of economic renewal calls for the co-operation of all of us, the federal and provincial Governments, unions, management, academics and consumer groups. We need to deal competently and humanely with the present and we need intelligent medium and long-term planning.

Japan provides a startling example of what is possible, and a number of speakers today have made reference to this. Poorly equipped to deal with the energy crisis, Japan has nevertheless performed very well. The key to its success has been industrial re-deployment, harnessing the most advanced technologies in order to achieve overwhelming competitive advantages. Between 1970 and 1974, while the rest of the OECD countries were worrying about short-term issues, the Japan Computer Usage Development Institute, a Government sponsored body, developed a long-term econmic strategy to make full industrial use of the then infant technology, micro-electronics. This, coupled with advanced Japanese management methods, helped propel Japan to its present industrial position.

The long awaited world economic recovery will not solve Canada's structural problems. Newly industrialized countries, such as South Korea, Taiwan, Hong Kong and Singapore, are using their low labour costs to achieve comparative advantages in many conventional industrial fields, such as textiles, shoes, light machinery, calculators and so on. The reindustrializing countries, such as Japan and France, are threatening both Canada's traditional industries and our high-tech sectors. Canada may have to follow the example of Japan and France and draw a blueprint for a long-term economic development plan based on micro-electronics. But the emphasis on high technology should never be interpreted to be at the expense of Canada's traditional industries. On the contrary, high technology innovation holds the potential for remarkable productivity gains in our traditional industries and, therefore, for greater job security and improved salaries for core workers.

We are blessed with natural resources and they can and should be tapped in the most profitable manner possible. We are also blessed with a competent and well educated work force. While they may have to retrain, as the Minister has just said, they are better equipped to do so than the labour force in the countries of some of our competitors. Faced with these new challenges, we need to open up the decision-making process. We need input from scientists, but we also need input from the people actually doing the job, and we must be very concerned to keep our human values. Speaking in this House on February 6, 1981, I said:

> When I talk about an industrial strategy, I think of a set of policies, of an orderly and integrated way of co-ordinating government policies and, above all, of a human approach with care for the ideals of social justice, for individual dignity, for safety in the workplace and for industrial democracy. Occupational health and safety must be a particular concern at the present time, because we are still losing far more days of work and industrial productivity as a result of illness or injury on the job than as a result of strikes. Unless there is a progressive sharing of the material wealth of society, unless there is active participation in decision-making by the workers who produce that wealth, we will not succeed and, perhaps, we would not deserve to succeed.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, those principles also apply to the application of new technology. Firms facing the need to improve productivity often think first of reducing staff. Yet there is substantial evidence that industrial engineering approaches are more effective. Workers know the processes, know the plant, and if they are actively involved in decision making they can often point the way to procedures which allow the same number of people to stay at work but work in ways that yield greater profits and job satisfaction. The moneys which the federal Government has made available to labour for continued education are being well used, and are increasingly resulting in well informed and sophisticated labour leaders who have much to contribute to our future industrial development.

These people-oriented initiatives may not sound as glamorous or exciting as talk of industrial restructuring and technological innovation, but it is people who will bring forward and implement solutions. In these times we need new ideas and continual examination of the adequacy of our policies and programs.

The very rapid changes in the international economic order demand of Canada an extremely alert business intelligence system and response mechanism. The cornerstone is the free market sytem with its built-in incentives to keep pace with or ahead of international development. But one must ask, could this cornerstone be more effectively supported by Government? Public interventions are often viewed by the private sector as restrictive. Yet the private sector is frequently unable to mount effective competition in the international field without direct or indirect Government support. The success thus far achieved by the Telidon project, for example, would not have been possible without major Government participation in research and development, manufacturing seed-money and marketing. Similarly, the recent Bombardier deal in the U.S. was secured in part because of Government support in allowing for low interest loans to finance the operation.

There are, of course, significant success stories which are a credit to the Government's initiative and the entrepreneurship of the Canadian private sector, for example, Northern Telecom, Mitel, NABU, and so on. Yet the public-private interface in Canada is not carefully brought out, and golden opportunities are sometimes missed. There is, in my view, a gap in co-ordination between the private and public sector. However, there are several other important gaps. Federal-provincial confrontation frequently prevents co-ordinated development strategy; Canada's labour-management interface is the adversary system with too much mistrust prevailing on both sides; the university-Government interface is not so much an adversary system as a tradition of mutual indifference, in sharp contrast to the experience in European countries and Japan. A positive creative force must replace the apprehension and fear which pervades so much current economic thinking. A proactive and concerted strategy is called for, one that associates Government, labour and management and universities in a long-term planning exercise, and which distributes the fruits of innovation in such a way that as many people as possible, if not everyone, benefit. Harmonization of public and private policies, labour and management aspirations, and of federal and provincial interventions must be the wave of the future.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I would like to approach this subject perhaps from a slightly different point of view from what we have heard. I believe the case has been made on all sides of the House that we are spending an inadequate amount of money, we have no over-all plan for research and development and, as a result, we are faced with an unemployment situation which is tragic for a great many people. My comments are directed to the parents of Canada and, I suspect, to anyone who has yet to determine what his or her eventual career will be. Even if they are pursuing a career, I would ask them seriously to consider taking a look at the broad field of science and technology, because that is where the future lies.

Diebold is perhaps one of the leading management philosophers of the world. In the 1950s he made this statement, and I see no reason to doubt it, particularly at this time, that every person would likely have seven different occupations in the course of his lifetime. Even then Diebold could see the revolution which has been taking place.

Initially we went through the age of crafts and guilds. That led into the industrial revolution, mass production and factory jobs. Now we have another revolution upon us. We are entering the age of servo-mechanisms and the robot. I am delighted, because in the initial stages men became slaves to machines, and we now enter the new world where machines will be slaves to men. Every man must do all he can to take advantage of what is taking place. The future holds many areas of great growth that will bring hundreds of thousands of new jobs that were not even contemplated a few years ago. We do not know what the next major breakthrough will be, but we know that those who educate themselves in the sciences will be able to adapt much more easily and rapidly to what may come.

A good example is biological research. Do young people realize that we have developed enzymes that eat oil spills and that there are also enzymes that separate oil and sand? Then there is the whole area of the human condition and drugs and blood. And where are the biological breakthroughs that will change waste into useful products?

When I speak of science I do not mean just industrial research which makes use of what comes from pure science. Pure science is responsible for the laser, and industrialists are responsible for the literally thousands of uses that laser has been put to. Fibre optics came from pure research, as did the silicone chip. If we do not raise the amount of moneys available to universities, even without knowing what developments may result, then we must take a back seat to the rest of the world. It is from pure research and pure science that new developments come.

Young people should consider some of the following areas when thinking of careers. We have yet to develop the perfect ship. As a Member from the Pacific coast, I believe that the perfect ship is long overdue. Then there is the whole area of oceanography. The pittance that we spend on oceanography when we are surrounded on three sides by water, is ridiculous. Fish farming is another area, as is the whole area of agriculture in one form or another.

I should like to ask this and any succeeding Government of this country, where do the priorities lie? Where is their understanding of what is happening in the world? Where is Canada's George Washington Carver, the man who, in the 1920s, found over 100 uses for the peanut? Does anyone think that we would ever have had insulin if Banting and Best had had to deal with a bureaucratic structure of Government like that which exists today?

Where are the new strains of wheat? Disease-resistant wheat has been developed but little research is being done on wheat for new uses or on new crops. That is where the future of our country lies, but not sufficient work is being done in those areas.

With all due respect I would point out that the average stenographer, male or female, is as out of date as the buggy whip salesman is today. Advertisements for help in the newspapers call for people with knowledge of computers or word processors. What a marvellous thing it would have been if this could have been foreseen five or ten years ago. Perhaps we could have arranged for this type of training in the schools a long time ago and have the people available today. Now we are attempting to catch up, but unfortunately a lot of people will be left behind.

A revolution is taking place in the office today. The word processor and the small computer are changing the nature of the individual office in the country more than the invention of the calculator or the typewriter did 50 or 60 years ago.

Where are the jobs going to be in the future? Despite the neglect by the Government and despite the fact that we are not doing what we should in terms of research, science offers the greatest future to young people.

I have no hesitation in taking another man's words when he expresses in a better form what I wish to express. In November, 1981, Dr. Larkin Kerwin of the National Research Council said:

> We are a nation rich in ideas. Japan does so much with so little; we do so little with so much.

At that time he also said:

> If we fail to exploit these current technological opportunities, or fail to develop new ones continually, we may still survive as woodcutters. But we must then be content with a woodcutter's wage.

The young people of this country should think about that, Mr. Speaker. They should think whether they want to be woodcutters or have a meaningful career. When I speak of science, I do not necessarily mean that one has to be a research scientist with a PhD, working in a university. I mean that they should take as much science as they possibly can. There will always be captains, generals, sergeants and troops, and the more training they have, the further up the ladder they will be in the new industries of the future.

Tomorrow, there could be a breakthrough that could mean that five years from now hundreds of thousands of jobs would become available through something that we do not contemplate even in our wildest dreams at the moment. Just look at the explosion that has taken place with computers. To paraphrase a line from Time magazine, if the automobile industry had gone ahead as rapidly as the computer industry has, today you would be able to buy a Rolls-Royce for $2.40 and get 400 miles to the gallon of gasoline. IBM sends its senior computer people into the field for a year, then they must go back to school. They go back to the field for another year, and back to school again. The company believes that if senior computer people are left in the field for two years, they will not be familiar with the technology that is being developed.

At the present time Canada spends less on real research than any other industrialized country, says Larkin Kerwin. Not all the National Research Council's projects under the Industrial Research Assistance Program were sure-fire winners. The average was $20 in sales for every dollar of NRC R and D funding. But 80 per cent of the projects have led to direct or indirect benefits. Just under half of them produced $1.8 billion in sales, 16 per cent are confidently expected to produce sales in the future, while 24 per cent gave indirect benefits. When a research body can produce as many jobs and as much wealth for the country as that, then it is very, very foolish for a government to starve it to death as this Government has been doing for years. If the Liberal Government had put that kind of emphasis on research and development when it came in with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1968, I doubt if there would be any unemployment in the country today.

We just have to look at what Japan has done in terms of research and development and see how it has affected their standard of living. Their economy is far ahead of ours.

In 1968 we spent 1.4 per cent of the Gross National Product in the vital area of research; today we spend only 1.13 per cent, which is up 0.9 per cent from two years ago. Fifteen years after 1968, the Government has moved the target back up to 1.5 per cent for 1985. To reach this modest target, R and D spending must not only outstrip inflation, it must increase in real terms by 18 per cent per year. These are staggering figures. But as a percentage of population Canada had one-third as many people working in research and development as did the Swedes, the Germans or the Japanese. We had one-half as many as the Dutch, the French and the Americans. We spend less per capita on research and development than all industrialized nations, with the exceptions of Ireland and Iceland. That is a record of which we should all be thoroughly ashamed. In fact, if we raise our percentage of GNP expended on R and D by just one percentage point, we could ultimately provide one million new jobs in this country and generate those $20 billion in new manufacturing sales.

I believe that requires some dramatic tax reforms regarding investments in high technology. If this country can afford to give total write-offs on third-rate motion pictures, we can certainly do no less for high-tech investment which will ensure a viable future for our children. To me it is deplorable that this country and this Government do not realize what the pay-offs are in research. This Government brags about this scheme or that scheme. Some are excellent, and for this they ought to be complimented. But we have a philosophical base here which is dead wrong, in my view. That philosophical base is grants, which means the Ottawa bureaucrats decide which company goes ahead and which company does not. Bureaucrats are not good businessmen. As a Conservative, I believe that what should be done is to have a system of incentives. What we should do is to say, "There is the incentive. Go after it, fellow. If you make it, great. If you are inefficient and you cannot do it, down the drain you go." But incentives for research and development should be given to all through the tax system. We should not have bureaucrats trying to run the whole show. We have seen the disastrous results and the wasted taxpayers's dollars when bureaucrats have made terrible errors in judgment.

In conclusion, I want to quote from what Mr. Walter F. Light said. He is the President and Chief Executive Officer of Northern Telecom Limited. Last April he said:

> R and D, like capital spending in plant and equipment, is not an expense, it is an investment in the future. High technology companies must constantly innovate to maintain their leadership and ability to compete.
> The commitment to research and development must be consistent and long term. In the long run, the winners will be those companies that maintain R and D investment in every economic climate and, when their profits are rising, recognize this as an opportunity to step up their R and D spending to an even higher level.
> To compete, a company, an industry, or a country, must pursue a clear strategy, focusing its efforts and resources on the areas of greatest opportunity. It must maintain a consistent and growing commitment to research and development. It must invest in the development of people in schools, in universities, and in business. It must move quickly and decisively to respond to market opportunities.

Mark Twain made a statement on the weather. Everybody talks about it but nobody does anything about it. The weather is another major area for research. But I think we have talked enough about research and development. It is almost like motherhood. I have yet to hear Government Members say that they are not in favour of it, but I have yet to see a fully meaningful policy from the Government on research, and the Government should have one. We can go right back to 1970 and the Senate report. Nothing has happened. Let me say to the Government of Canada, for the sake of the youth of this country, for the sake of the unemployed, for the standard of living for our children, get on with it and let us get the money going in research in the amounts that are needed.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think we all appreciate the motion put forward for discussion today by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist). It is a timely topic and it is one we must address. I enjoyed the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East. I also enjoyed hearing from the Hon. Member for North Vancouver-Burnaby (Mr. Cook) who has just addressed the House, as well as many others.

I want to mention a very small program of the Government of Canada and pay tribute to it. It is one of the smallest in the area of research and development. However, there has been some discussion as to whether or not it will be continued. I hope it will. The program is known as the New Crop Development Fund. I believe the total amount committed to that program is only three-quarters of a million dollars. Speaking only for my area with regard to this fund and the research and development permitted under it, the farmers and those producers of goods in the agricultural sector appreciate this program very much.

I noticed in a booklet entitled "The Government of Canada's Investment in Science" a very interesting opening remark. It reads:

> Research and development (R and D) and industrial innovation are key elements in the federal government's policies and strategies to meet the economic challenges of the future.

I read that because I like the connection between research and development and industrial innovation. I think that is a very important point and it is a linkage that is very often missed. There is a danger, as was found in the United States, that when a tremendous amount of money is put into research and development, the next step, commercialization, does not happen. It does not happen because sometimes we fail to appreciate and make possible the movement from R and D to commercialization. It is one thing to permit, in one way or another, the funds for R and D to be made available, but after the research and development is done, before the product or the technology is on the commercial market, a big gap occurs. The authorities in the United States feel that it takes eight years to move an innovative venture, that is, the product or the technology, from the completion of research and development to profitable commercialization. Those same authorities state that it takes 12 years for a company in a normal or average case to make the same return on investment from an innovative new venture, when you compare that venture with a mature one.

When you look at a period of eight years before a product becomes profitable and a 12 year period before it brings a return on your investment, Mr. Speaker, you realize the importance of the time frame. Small companies cannot overcome this obstacle. I say to the Hon. Member for Scarborough East that, as well as having a research and development policy or strategy, we must also take a look at the next step, that is, what happens between the time when R and D is carried out and the time when a company makes a return on the investment on the product or technology.

I am aware of the fact that the statistics I have just quoted are American, but I think they are so basic that they cannot be much different in Canada, that is to say, that it takes eight years to start turning a profit in the average case taken from a study of 68 industries involved in the innovative ventures, and 12 years to return the investment.

When we, as Members of Parliament, are considering research and development, we must realize that there is an important linkage between R and D and the commercialization of a product. Unless research and development is given assistance to make such projects profitable, it is unlikely that the millions and billions of dollars to be poured into research and development will be of any great benefit.

I personally believe that in order to have a meaningful research and development program, there must be a national industrial strategy in place. I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member for Scarborough East was not attempting to put one ahead of the other, but I suggest that we need a comprehensive and long-term industrial strategy for Canada, part of which would be a research and development policy. I think this is extremely important.

I had the opportunity to present a submission on an industrial strategy for Canada before the Macdonald Commission. I suggested that the Commission make a preliminary report to the Government of Canada asking it not to wait for the economic report from the Macdonald Commission but to set up a group consisting of businessmen, labour leaders, university people and members from the federal and provincial Governments to prepare an industrial strategy for Canada. This group should also receive information about the state of affairs outside of Canada since 30 per cent of our industrial output is exported.

As I pointed out in my letter to the Macdonald Commission, I do not believe that an industrial strategy for Canada can be prepared within the House of Commons, regardless of which Party is in power, if we depend upon the resources available to a government or its Departments. I say this because Ministers of the Crown and their senior advisers already have a very heavy daily administrative burden. I am sure all Members agree that backbenchers are very busy, and surely Ministers are extremely busy running their Departments. We should not wait for an industrial strategy to be developed in the House because it will not happen.

An industrial strategy is essential for the future well-being of this country. This industrial strategy should be developed outside of the House. There are retired businessmen, retired labour leaders, university people and bankers as well as consulting firms who have a great knowledge to contribute in the formation of an industrial strategy. A strong team must be formed that can give us a comprehensive industrial strategy, which will include a system for research and development and the commercialization of the fruits of that research and development as one of its goals.

I pointed out to the Commission that during wartime we adopted a dollar a year idea. I think that we are in position where the economy of this country and the western world is such that we could adopt a warlike innovative action which would be justifiable and acceptable if it resulted in an industrial strategy for Canada. I have learned from major industrial concerns that this is their position. They are prepared to make their top company personnel available to contribute to this industrial strategy since it is their belief that it would be very good for the bottom line of their companies to have a long-term industrial strategy for Canada. However, they would not consider this if it is not connected to the bottom line of their financial sheet.

As I said, I have asked the Macdonald Commission to make a preliminary report such as I have suggested. If that report is delivered, I believe Members would support the Government in setting up a group to form a comprehensive industrial strategy. While it would be best to wait for a report from the Macdonald Commission on an industrial strategy, I do not believe that we can afford the luxury of waiting for it. I might say that this is also the opinion of industrial leaders whom I have consulted.

It is not uncommon to hear after-dinner speakers tell their audiences that the day of the smokestack industry in Canada is gone. They will go on to say that the day of the textile industry in Canada is gone, the shoe industry has disappeared, and some go as far as to say—if not publicly, certainly in private conversation—that the automobile industry will either be unimportant or a thing of the past. These remarks are made by some very important people in governments, industry and education. Responsible people have tried to justify these statements on the basis that a third wave of high-tech industries will employ young Canadians and remove the need for those industries which I have mentioned. When this is said without any in depth study or industrial strategy to back it up, it may result in our having to pay a heavy price in the future for those remarks.

A Member from the New Democratic Party said earlier this morning that there is no concrete evidence available that third wave industries will be of such great strength or have such a large number of employees that they will take the place of the older industries that have been part of the industrial revolution in Canada. I agree with that statement. I am sorry that he is not in the House this afternoon, but I am sure that he will read it in Hansard. What I am saying is that when we make statements like that, when speaking to our constituents or in the House, before we know what we are talking about and before we know what the future holds, we are doing a disservice to this country. That is not to say that the third wave industries will not be helpful and beneficial to this country and a boon to our young people. However, I am saying that I have no evidence that one type of industry will be a complete substitute for the other. If we move in that direction without knowing what we are really doing, we will in all likelihood lay a false foundation for the industrial future of this country, and I, for one, will not participate in the movement in this direction.

I hope that when the opportunity arises, Hon. Members from all sides will support the idea of an out-House industrial strategy being prepared for Canada, because I do not think we will see it unless it is done that way. It can be done under the direction of the Government of the day, the Government of which I am honoured to be a Member at this time. However, it must be very broadly based, along the lines that I suggested. That does not mean that Government Ministers, Deputy Ministers and senior experts in various fields cannot be assigned to this group to ensure that part of the expertise found in the elected or appointed people in Government is fully utilized. They do have a real contribution to make. Ministers have a great deal to offer in the experience they have gained in running large Departments. This is true of Deputy Ministers and various experts in the Departments as well.

As I see it, however, the real expertise for an industrial strategy in Canada must come from those in the private sector to a very large extent. They are the ones who know how to run the country, not Government Ministers, Deputy Ministers or experts in a tiny field in a Department who are qualified to advise a Minister or Deputy Minister on a small issue. When it comes to an issue involving an industrial strategy for Canada well into the twenty-first century, it requires the expertise which we do not have here.

Speaking before the Macdonald Commission, I stated my opinion that not all expertise may be found in Canada itself. We depend on the international market for our sales, and there would be nothing wrong if some of the people we retained to help this group came from some of the countries that take large amounts of our exports.

Mr. Gilchrist: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls for his very serious presentation. I hope he will not mind if I just give him one little jibe over his terminology. I was not too sure what he meant by an "out-House industrial policy". I sort of thought that that is perhaps what we already had. Seriously, I did want to ask him about his concern over the strategy of the Government not embracing the textile or the shoe, or the other "low technology" industries, although it is not really fair to call them "low technology". I remind him that the Minister stated that "it is in these high technology-intensive sectors, and I believe in these sectors alone, that new challenging and high-paying jobs can be created". I am wondering if the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls does not support that view. Will he attempt to convince the Minister that perhaps in areas other than the advancing technologies we should be supporting business?

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. I would like to mention that I think I deserve the jibe that the Hon. Member has given me. Being a farmer's son, I should have been more careful. The phrase "in-House" is now such a part of my vocabulary that I forgot about my past, and I should never do that.

I would say that my view is not necessarily ad idem with the statement of the Minister which the Hon. Member for Scarborough East has quoted. I am trying to be fair. I know there is a place in Canada for high-tech. It is obvious. However, I am afraid that in our rush to get the high-tech, we are forgetting about the bread and butter industries of the past, and that is what I am against. It may be that when a comprehensive industrial strategy is prepared in the manner I have suggested to the House this afternoon, I will be proven wrong, and that we could move in the direction as stated by the Minister of the Government. However, I am certainly not prepared to accept that statement at this time without the in-depth study which I see as being required. I hope that this answer is helpful.

Mr. Waddell: I would like to make a comment and direct a question to the Hon. Member whose speech I very much enjoyed. I liked his use of the term "out-House strategy". It opens up lots of possibilities. We could have Eaton's to catalogue it, for example, we could have the former Alberta Cabinet Minister, Mr. Horst Schmid, to testify about it, and so on. The possibilities are simply endless. My colleagues also have some comments, but they are probably not permitted in Hansard.

The term "industrial strategy" is not a new one. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), has used the term, as did his great friend, John Turner, when he was Minister of Finance.

As Don McGillivray, the journalist, said last week, "all God's children" have used the term "industrial strategy".

Mr. Pepin: All Ministers of Industry, for sure.

Mr. Waddell: But what does it really mean? I would like to direct two questions to the Parliamentary Secretary, who I think is one of the most thoughtful Members of this House. I might say that I agree with what he has said about moving too quickly in high-tech without thinking about it. I think he is right-on there. However, has the Parliamentary Secretary given any thought to the use of another term for industrial strategy, something else we could call it which would better reflect the process? Second, how does he see labour's involvement in the process? He spoke of business being a big part of the industrial strategy. How does he view labour's participation in the new industrial age or in the process of forming an industrial strategy?

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, I will not attempt to explain what I envisage an industrial strategy as being, because if I went into that subject, I think it would take away from what I expect the group to do, because even defining it will not be easy. I was using the term today in the way it is normally used.

I am interested in the Hon. Member's question as it pertains to labour. I was speaking without notes and I meant to say "labour, business, university personnel and others". I will check the "blues", and it may be that I did not make that point as strongly as I had intended. If I did not do so, I do so now. I point out that on Tuesday of this week, I appeared on a TV show with Mr. Cliff Pilkie of the Ontario Federation of Labour. We discussed this very point. We were in agreement on the basic idea of an industrial strategy somewhat along the lines I have suggested today. Certainly the idea was put forward that labour would play a very important part in the preparation of that strategy. This is not to say that Mr. Pilkie did not say there would be difficulties in getting the three together in an industrial strategy for Canada. There was no suggestion at all that it would not work. It was my first opportunity to meet Mr. Pilkie, which probably explains why I may not be as close to labour as I should be. In any event, I enjoyed meeting him. After the show was over, my guess was that labour was just as interested as business and Government in getting together to lay down a foundation for the future economic development of the country.

Mr. G. M. Gurbin (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate precipitated by the motion which in part reads:

> That this House recognizes that an increased commitment to science and technology is fundamental to the establishment of a new industrial base in Canada, to the rejuvenation of existing industries, to the creation of new employment and the maintenance of existing jobs, and to economic recovery—

Perhaps some of the most important inadequacies of the Liberal Government, which we can understand best in terms of current economic conditions, were described in the December issue of "Economic Outlook". It gave the figures which OECD provided, comparing Canada with the other OECD countries. Three parameters were used which I think provided us with a context with which to compare Canada and the other nations in terms of how we were really doing. The first parameter was ranking in terms of economic growth. Canada ranked twenty-fourth out of 24. I could go through the list. It included Australia, Austria, Belgium, Turkey, Portugal, Luxembourg, etc.

The second parameter was that in the top seven OECD countries we had the second worst record in unemployment levels. Again this provided us with a comparison to use. It compared Canada with other industrialized nations, and we were second last in the seven with which we most like to compare ourselves.

The third parameter was industrial productivity. This is the one to which we should pay the most attention. The years that were used were from 1960 to 1973 and then from 1974 to 1980. In looking at those years, we find that Canada is the only country which had a negative growth in its productivity. If we look at our productivity, unemployment and economic growth, although we are well able to appreciate that there is a world-wide recession and economic problems, and compare ourselves on the basis of the available figures, we see that we are not doing as well as most other countries or as well as we have a right to expect. These figures should hurt our pride and should cause very serious concern for our future.

Science and technology is the focus of the debate in the House today. Canada's economy, the health and integrity of the country now and in years to come, are the issues which we are trying to address. The low historical levels of R and D funding in Canada are well known. The 1.2 per cent of the GNP we hope to achieve this year is a start toward the goal and commitment of the Government of 1.5 per cent of GNP. Perhaps the figure should be 2.5 per cent instead of 1.5 per cent. At least the goal toward which we are aiming is one we can all support, at least until we attain it. We know that for every 1 per cent of the Gross National Product invested in R and D we obtain approximately 800,000 jobs. That $3 billion of investment or 1 per cent of our GNP translates directly into 800,000 jobs, according to the figures of the National Research Council. Thus we see that R and D translates into jobs—full-time, long-term employment for Canadians.

It would be easy to point critical fingers at a number of R and D related activities and not to say enough in any number of areas, but I would like to focus on two energy areas in my time today. I would like to deal very specifically with the way they represent Canadian opportunities for economic gain, employment, and serving a mixture of Canadian energy needs. The first energy type upon which I would like to concentrate is solar. Basically I want to concentrate upon active solar, while in passing give full respect to passive solar and photovoltaics.

Historically, the cumulative total R and D and solar specific program to the end of fiscal year 1983 will be $97.6 million, with about one half of it dedicated to R and D. At the end of March of this year the funding is due to stop and there is no commitment on the part of the Government to carry on with additional funding. Cabinet is now faced with interpreting a substantial review of the status of the solar energy industry in Canada and with making a decision on the course of Government action.

What have R and D and the Canadian industry done to date with solar? The industry is ready. It can provide domestic hot water systems which are competitive with current alternatives. They would cost approximately $300 per gigajoule per year. There are other hot water applications in both industrial and recreational areas that are very cost effective. The fruits of years of funding and effort have given the Canadian industry the right to export 25 per cent of its production to date in a world market that has a $10 billion potential by 1990. It is a fast-growing market. It has been well documented that the potential is there.

Active solar has taken off in the past few years, and the sequence of a starting industry flowing to commercialization and markets while maintaining R and D is the question facing Cabinet today. The Science Council of Canada suggested that the Government should back winners. There are a publication which attempted to single out the industries that should be backed or supported. What we really need to consider in this single, very focused area of energy is that if we make a commitment of $175 million over the next five years, we could potentially create 50,000 permanent jobs. Also we could potentially displace 200 million barrels of imported oil. It is not simply a question of dumping more money into research. We should follow it one step further to see how we can support research which has already been done and how to continue on with research that is necessary and appropriate for the Government to conduct. We should ensure that the research we have already supported becomes something of which we can take advantage. This is the decision with which the Government is faced.

It brings into focus a number of questions. First there is the question of initiating and supporting the correct R and D initiatives. There is also the question of providing the environment for industry to grow through investment. Finally, there is the question of providing, where necessary, assistance to market penetration and industry self-sufficiency. A $175 million commitment over the next five years would in fact provide all these things to that industry. Also it would provide, as I said, long-term, permanent Canadian jobs and permanent Canadian energy opportunities.

If the Cabinet had decided to stop further support in this fledgling solar industry, it would have committed a good deal of the previous R and D activity to failure and net loss. It makes no sense. Although the question is in part a short-term political one because a number of options are available in Canada, the decision will be most correct if we make reasonable use of the technologies that match our needs. I urge the Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Johnston), although he is not in the House at the present time, to convince his Cabinet colleagues that this would be the correct decision to make and it makes ultimate sense for Cabinet to continue to support it until the industry has the market penetration it needs to provide the ability to survive without additional Government support.

The second type of energy I would like to specifically focus on is nuclear energy. For the purists, one could say I was talking about a form of nuclear energy when I was talking about solar, but to stick to convention, I will talk about nuclear energy per se. I would like to talk about nuclear energy and the R and D we have in Canada now. I would like to focus particularly in that area on using uranium for heat.

I would like to recognize the historical excellence of Canadians in this technology, including those such as Dr. Green and Dr. Rummery at the Whiteshell Nuclear Research Establishment. Indeed, the work done at this facility can have an impact on the Canadian and world energy scene out of all proportion to the size of this facility.

Whiteshell is responsible for our waste management program and for nuclear products. It is clearly onstream with realistic solutions. We seem likely to be world leaders in this program. Whiteshell is also responsible for the organically-cooled experimental reactor which gives temperatures considerably higher than the standard Candu reactors and which has economic application to removing the oil from oilsands with little disturbance to the terrain, the so-called removal in situ. The literally thousands of direct and indirect jobs, the additional fossil energy security that could be gained and the very efficient marrying of uranium with the oil sands are obvious gains for Canada.

The use of steam for heavy-water production is the best current example of using primary heat from uranium for heat itself rather than for generating electricity. Indeed, the additional capacity that is inherent in just the Bruce nuclear power development is capable of producing energy for industry at prices attractive enough today to create 10,000 new jobs, permanent industrial and agricultural jobs by the year 2000. My point in mentioning both the solar industry and the nuclear industry was really the same. Both represent valuable Canadian options, both have seen significant Canadian R and D content and both are at a critical threshold in many ways. There are obvious differences between them, but the real problem faced by both is the need for the correct political decisions, and soon.

We have all too often missed the boat. Today we see the trouble our automobile industry is in. Yesterday we lost the television industry. In the case of science and technology today in the federal House we have an integration with economic policy. The Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist) has given recognition to the importance of that. We all hope that will help facilitate some of the important decisions that are necessary. That is appropriate. It seems to be a part of the models which have worked well for other countries.

Where we go with our technology options, how we integrate into the marketplace, into an industrial strategy, if you like, is really the key. It is the essence of our situation in Canada today and part of the way that we can regenerate ourselves, even to the point where we can look at these long-term strategies and make them work.

I have suggested two political decisions which can be made today, which need to be made and require the intelligent co-operation of Government with the science community and with industry. They are practical, realistic and provide a part of the background for working out the longer term industrial, technological, economic and employment strategies.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to speak on this motion today. The Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist), as I said earlier in a question to him, has done a great deal of work, which is very interesting, and has put forward a great many useful ideas in the area of science and technology over the three years that he has been the critic for the Opposition Party.

I commend him for putting forward this motion for debate. I might not agree with some of the wording of the motion, but I certainly commend him for bringing this to the House for debate today. It is probably the most critical area that we could and should be looking at as a Government and as a country. If we do not become more engaged in the area of research and development, in the development of new technology and in the development of the ways of the future, as a country we will be left further and further behind in the areas of economic growth, job creation and all of the things that we want for this country which give rise to increases in our standard of living. Without such increases, we will certainly have social unrest and a very difficult time expanding or even maintaining the level of social expenditure now enjoyed in this country. That will certainly be a divisive debate if and when that should ever have to be entered into by Members of this House.

The framework put forward by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East was a good one. Earlier I asked him about putting some flesh on the bones, and he did, especially in the area of education, an area where I agree with him. It is not good enough any longer for a nation to simply leave the role of education in the context of its national importance in the hands of one level of Government. There has to be a greater co-operation between levels of Government in the area of education. Certainly national priorities and needs have to be well defined and well funded from a national level of Government.

The problems that we face in the area of research and development stem from five basic areas. First, we have to be funding a much higher level of basic research in this country. Talking about applied research and the adaptation of existing technology is certainly of importance. However, any country that is going to advance technologically, that is going to stay at the forefront and compete effectively with other nations in this world in the new technologies and the technologies of the future will have to be concerned with funding a substantial body of basic and fundamental research.

Second, we have to begin to utilize our existing body of university researchers and non-governmental researchers much more effectively than we now do. Third, we have to provide funding for the development of new researchers, which gets us into the education question. We have to expand greatly upon our delivery of scholarships, research grants and post-graduate fellowships to ensure that we have highly trained and qualified manpower which will be necessary in the future, not only to do the research but to train our young people in ever-expanding numbers for the jobs in the technology field.

Fourth, and this is where we start to get into the area of industrial strategy, and I have great difficulty with the notions sometimes put forward about an industrial strategy that calls on Governments to direct. I believe Government should be a facilitator and not a director of what is done in this area. The Government does have, as a facilitator, to provide mechanisms for moving basic research that is done by the universities, the Government research agencies or private research foundations into the marketplace in profitable development.

Finally, the fifth key to a successful strategy is to ensure that adequate management talent is available, not only to administer the research effectively, but to manage effectively the process of product development and promotion that flows from the research and development process that we have.

Canada has serious difficulties in all of these areas. In my opinion we are under-funding basic research. We are not utilizing our existing body of research talent, whether it be at the National Research Council, in the universities, the colleges or the private research foundations. They are being under-funded. They are not being provided with the kinds of funds necessary for release time so as to allow them to do increased amounts of research, and as a result we are under-utilizing the talents available to us now. We do not have an advanced program of aid for young people to promote excellence, to promote a science "meritocracy", if you will, and that has to be improved greatly. We do not have the kind of management training which is required to ensure that our scientists have available to them those who are able to put the process in an effective format.

My other point, Mr. Speaker, is that we do not have, through our tax policy or other areas, an effective mechanism for ensuring that new firms are created in the process of moving basic research out into the marketplace in Canada and throughout the world. Those are the five key areas, I believe, of a sound science policy, of a research and development policy, for this country.

I think it is terribly important that we distinguish between basic and applied research. It is naive to expect that industry will delve heavily into the areas of basic research. Certainly some will, but industry is much more short-term oriented. It is more oriented toward what will provide profitable results for the shareholders over the foreseeable five or ten years. I think it is the role of Government to provide the infrastructure, the research capacity, to look into the truly basic elements of research. Governments have done this in the past through the university system, through private foundations and through our own National Research Council. These agencies have been the developers, the doers, of basic research, and the ideas flowing from that have gone into the area of applied research and have led to product development. But there should be a co-ordinated effort.

I believe Government has to focus its attention more directly upon the area of basic research. Governments should be concerned with research which has long-term pay-offs, which you could not really expect a private enterprise to be concerned with. It should facilitate the transfer of this new knowledge which has been developed in basic research into the private sector and into other forms or vehicles for developing products. It should facilitate the creation and growth of firms through tax policy, through our grant structures, and so on, to ensure that as new technology, new ideas are developed in the basic fields, they are moved out into practical application. That is the kind of Research which we should include as part of Government, not only the Government research agencies themselves, but also the universities. I would call "Government" all of those areas of research which are currently publicly funded in a direct way, and I would call "private" that which is funded in an indirect way through the tax system, and so on.

It seems to me we have dealt far too long on the basis of trying to force multinational firms to do research in Canada. I believe we probably will have some success in that effort, but the cost of that success is going to be high. I believe it would be far better to spend our time on developing the basic research capacities, developing our own new ideas and facilitating the creation and development of Canadian firms which will carry those ideas into the marketplace. That would be a far more profitable expenditure of our time and effort. We should be planning now for the firms of the future rather than trying to force the mature firms which exist now to do more research in our country, although some of that certainly can be done. Therefore, direct expenditure for basic research and for the training of qualified persons to conduct that research, is the role of the national Government and it should be played to a much greater extent than it is now.

I would suggest, as a scenario, that the National Research Council could be the hub of this entire research endeavour by the Government. We could have a National Research Council which is much expanded. I quite frankly believe that the research budget of the National Research Council should be expanded dramatically beyond what it is. I believe the Council could work in connection with universities. Facilities could be built for research on university campuses, which are unavailable now and will be unavailable in the near term because of the financial constraints at the university and provincial Government levels. They cannot build the facilities which are needed, but the National Research Council could provide them and could then enter into an interchange of people between the university facilities and the National Research Council, to facilitate the exchange of ideas and the development of research. This same type of co-operation and joint venture in basic research could, of course, take place between the National Research Council, which I would call the "Government" agency, and the universities and private sector research foundations. The role of Government, then, would be to provide facilities, the wherewithal of researchers to undertake basic research, and for graduate training and post-graduate fellowships.

I feel that the key factor is a dramatically increased level of funding. We have heard the Government has put forward 1.5 per cent as its goal. I have said on a number of occasions in the past when the Hon. Member for Scarborough East was in the audience, that I do not think that 1.5 per cent is good enough. I do not think 2.5 per cent is good enough. If we are going to be in the forefront in ten to 15 years, we should be shooting for a 3 per cent goal on research and development funding, not 1.5 per cent. I believe also that we cannot get bogged down on this notion of "who is doing what". While the Government is doing its share, the private sector is not. I feel the Government should set our goal. Perhaps our goal will be 2 per cent of the 3 per cent of the Gross National Product being expended publicly on research and development, and we would expect that the private sector will take up the other 1 per cent. Hopefully, they will do even more. But we are going to set a goal for ourselves publicly and not simply have a situation where we say, "Well, the private sector must increase its expenditures on research and development. We cannot increase ours, because we are already doing more than the private sector." Then it becomes a game of pointing the finger at one another. I believe we have to set an objective for publicly funded basic research in this country, and that, when the new ideas flow, will generate the kind of applied research which is necessary, and that will increase that level of research and development funding.

We must also be very concerned with allowing the development of centres of excellence in this country. I do not think it is wise for us to try to diversify our efforts, whether it be on the basis of the need for job creation, or for any other such need. We should not spread ourselves thinly across the country. From my own personal experience in the research field, and from talking to a great many others, I find that research requires a certain critical mass of people, ideas and funding to be successful. If you try to spread research facilities in one particular area of endeavour widely across the country, that critical mass does not develop and your research does not get off the ground. We have an example of a very successful and dynamic research establishment which is growing right now and that is the high-tech research facilities here in Ottawa. From a purely practical, research-oriented position, I would hate to see the Government undertake programs which would cause firms to locate elsewhere throughout the country and dissipate that critical mass which is now generating millions of dollars, billions of dollars of export, millions and billions of dollars worth of growth in our GNP, the thousands and thousands of jobs in this country, many of which are spread across the country, but not the research function. It seems to me you could put the manufacturing function wherever you like, but the research function requires that critical mass, that exchange of ideas between highly qualified individuals, and they should be in the same general location in order to be able to do that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second basic area of research is of course applied research. I think we will find that being done by most business firms, that is, the application of new ideas to existing problems and moving these ideas forward into the market place. Of course we can encourage this through incentives such as grants, tax incentives, joint ventures to ensure that new ideas are moved forward and proper funding is applied. I could see the Government, for example, developing new ideas in the National Research Council and then having a vehicle, such as the Canada Development Corporation, move the idea out, licence it to a private firm and perhaps take back non-voting shares where the dividends on the development and sale of products from this new idea would flow back into this central agency. Those funds would be recycled back into the research process to generate more new ideas, and thereby become a sort of self-feeding cycle of new ideas, transformed into new products, and so on.

Most important, it seems to me, is that any research and development strategy should find the Government acting as the doer for long-term research and a facilitator thereafter. We must not, it seems to me, turn into a centrally dictated, bureaucratically controlled decision-making device in the name of a research and development strategy. The essence of research is creativity and exploration. Bureaucratic structures, of course, are the antithesis of that process. I think this indicates the type of structure, and the five problem areas, that all countries will have with a research and development strategy. This indicates the kind of things I think have to be done in the area of applied research to ensure that Canada not only develops new ideas for the future, but has the mechanism to share those ideas with the world through new product development.

Let me reiterate the five areas I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker. First is a much higher level of basic research, and I indicated just how high I thought that should be. Second, to utilize the existing body of researchers at the National Research Council, universities and private research foundations much more effectively than we are doing now. Third, to provide the kind of funding necessary to encourage our young people to go into areas of high-technology in our universities and colleges. The last two, of course, have to do with moving research out into the market place. The first I mentioned was to provide a mechanism of various sorts for moving basic research into profitable development. The profits should be shared by a national research funding agency to help fund the level of basic research we want. Finally, also at the university and other levels, we have to ensure we have the funding available to provide the necessary levels of qualified management personnel because, if anything, we have found from experience in the high-tech field that one of the things holding back high-tech development from moving even faster than it is now is the lack of qualified management personnel. We need people who understand technology and who are also able to put the ideas together with good management practices and create highly competitive world class firms.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Scarborough East for bringing this matter before the House, and I hope I have inspired some thought on the issue he has raised.

Mr. Gurbin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) for his candid remarks. One basic problem I have in listening to him is that, in the full realization of the unemployment problems and economic stress we have today, the real question is, how do we survive next month and next year, never mind ten years down the road?

I found his response intelligent, certainly he made some good points, but it is sort of an academic approach to the real problems today. So I would like to ask him, what specific things would he do to solve the problems today, integrating research and development today, making things happen today and tomorrow? While what he has outlined is good, with all respect, I have heard that for the last four years in this House from Members on all sides. I do respect his earnestness in putting it forward so I do not want to detract from that, but what would he do today?

Mr. Evans: Certainly I do not think our debate today was centred on very pressing problems of unemployment we face. But I should say that I hope we are able to develop an integrated strategy where we can deal with the unemployment problems, the short-term unemployment problem in this case, which are terribly serious. But at the same time we should not allow ourselves to not think about how we can move forward in some of the long-term solutions. It seems to me that if we do not follow a strategy, perhaps like the one I have described, or others which may be superior, then we are going to perpetuate and maybe even exacerbate the unemployment problems we have in the future.

I think today Canadians would be willing to say, "All right, you are asking us to tighten our belts but if part of what we are tightening our belts for is to develop a strategy that is going to make the future better, not only for ourselves but for our children and our children's children, then do it". I think we could not only get ourselves moving but we could give Canadians the hope that they are desperately looking for that the future is going to be better than the past. If we simply devote all of our attention to crisis management, dealing with the current problem, it seems to me that we do not give Canadians the hope necessary to overcome the psychological problems of moving into the future.

So it is not just the financial problem we face today in our economic crisis, it is also a psychological problem. Part of the solution to that psychological problem is to give Canadians a vision of where Canada can be in the future, how much better we can make our lives in the future through some strategy to move ourselves forward in the area of science and technology.

Certainly I am talking about things that might not be Government policy at the moment. Certainly they are not at the level of research funding which I am talking about, but I do not think that should restrain Hon. Members in this House from putting forward what we believe is in the national interest.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) would clarify a point which seemed to be rather contradictory. He talked about universities being required to do more research, things like that, and the necessity for more research and development. But then he seems to want to centralize all the research and development in Ottawa—or in one region of the country. The benefit of having research and development in many regions is in that way different problems can be faced. In some regions there are areas of science that are highly developed, whether it be fibre optics in Saskatchewan or the Manitoba telephone system. If people in western constituencies such as mine are not exposed to research and development possibilities, then there is no way they can participate. They would be left out in the cold.

I have a little difficulty reconciling some of the centralization concepts of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre and the necessity for research and development all across Canada. I wonder if he could clear this up for me.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to leave that impression with the Hon. Member. Perhaps he misunderstood what I said. I am not talking about centralizing. Certainly the head office of the National Research Council is in Ottawa, but it also has facilities all across the country. I was trying to make the point that there are universities all across the country as well, with research expertise that is being underutilized. One of the reasons for that is that the funds are not available to provide first-rate research facilities for academics and students.

I say that rather than being centralized in Ottawa, the National Research Council could be the vehicle through which funding could be provided to the universities directly, to enable them to build new facilities on a co-operative basis with the National Research Council. Perhaps the facilities could remain in the hands of the National Research Council but be on the university campuses and available for co-operative use by academics, students and National Research Council personnel. They could move from Ottawa to places where there was a critical mass of people doing fibre optics research or to the West to do biomedical research in Alberta or biotechnology research in other parts of the country. The research has to be spread throughout the country.

As far as critical mass is concerned, if a small country such as Canada is going to do research in a particular field, then it should not try artifically to spread the research effort in that particular field broadly throughout the country so that 15 universities would all be trying to get adequate funds for research in a particular area of effort. Rather, we should try to develop centres of excellence across the country—perhaps even several in one field. These should be adequately funded and have the critical mass of people doing work in that area available to generate new ideas, but the research should be broadly spread across the country.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the Hon. Member's speech. He said that a large number of high-tech companies are located in the National capital region involving, I think, 2,500 jobs. He tied that particular development in with the introduction of the Government's contracting out policy in the area of research and development. Is he aware that in the last ten years since the policy was introduced, more than 20,000 contracts in the research and development field, totalling almost $1 billion, have been let? If he is aware of that, could he tell us how that has, in part, accomplished that which he seeks to accomplish and that is, the transfer of research and development activities and technology into the private sector? I know he is aware of some of those facts but I should like him to comment on the experience of the last ten years and tell us how we can build upon that experience and allocate funding in the future.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's point is appropriate and it is correct. Ottawa and the high-tech industry in Ottawa have benefited greatly from the Government's program of contracting out. Northern Telecom, Bell Northern Research and the myriad of small firms that have sprung up from the research arm of Northern Telecom primarily, have created hundreds of new jobs. That is the kind of critical mass I was talking about. With that critical mass of basic research, new ideas spring up. From that we not only get new firms that create thousands of jobs but we also get an interchange of activity and of minds which leads to further new ideas. I think of Mitel, Gandalf, Nabu and all the corporations that have sprung up in Ottawa over the years. The Minister said 2,500 jobs had been created; on the contrary, 25,000 jobs have been created. We expect that within the next five years that number could be tripled and several hundred small firms could spring up.

The spin-off is spreading throughout the country. Mitel now has plants in New Brunswick, so the benefits are showing. I would not argue with the Minister that the Government has played a key role in this, but I would say that it should provide us with the example of what could be done if we were to fund these activities at much higher levels than is being done at present.

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate for a few moments. I understand another Hon. Member wishes to speak so I undertake to leave some time for him.

I am honoured to participate in debate on the motion brought by the Hon. Member for Scarborough East (Mr. Gilchrist). My knowledge of and admiration for the Hon. Member goes back a long, long way. I spoke at his nomination meeting the first time he was nominated to run for Parliament and for this Party. I hope that Members on the other side of the House will forgive me for mentioning that.

What struck me about his speech that night is exactly what struck me about his speech today. He took a very constructive approach to a very important subject, the importance of research and development and of high-technology and of technology generally to the industrial and social well-being of Canada. I have talked to him about this many times and I do not think any Member of the House exceeds his specific and general knowledge on this very important subject. I am pleased to speak for a few moments on this matter.

I hope the House understands that we live in the midst of one of the largest research areas in the world. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) spoke about the development of companies like Mitel in Kanata and Northern Telecom in Nepean, but a myriad of small companies are involved in research as well.

Mitel began in a basement, with a dream. It has grown into a revolutionary industry which has, revolutionized other industries. That is the history of the high-technology industry. These companies are involved all the time in the application of theories and the applied research that is necessary. The amount of capital required to pursue this research is astronomical, and the chances taken by these innovators are frightening to the bravest among us. In addition, people sometimes seem to forget the two other components of research in this City, namely, the University of Ottawa and Carleton University. Perhaps the unsung heroes of it all are the hundreds of research scientists employed by the federal Government.

This is a centre of research and development unique in the country, perhaps even in the world. I think that we should remember the importance of it and the significance it can have for the future of the country.

Many of the things that are being dealt with here are important to the Mitels and the Telecoms in their own business and in the products they sell, but the theories the techniques, the chips which go into the robots and the other technological devices are the keystones, I believe, to the redevelopment of other industries, the mature industries which are now having to come to terms with themselves in their place as manufacturers and job creators.

The Government, therefore, has an obligation to this new industry. It will be said to me, "We will take grants everywhere", but grants are uncertain things and research is long-term. All these industries ask for is a reasonable set of tax incentives to pry out of the socks, the storage places, the safety deposit boxes and the banks of Canada the investment capital for them to carry on.

We are coming up to a budget in a little while. If there is one area where jobs can be created almost immediately, where new product development can be spurred, its pace doubled, it is in the area of high tech. Advanced high technology industries have a potential to create 500,000 jobs by 1990. That is why I think it borders on the immoral to have a situation develop where the President of the National Research Council needs to say, as he did, that if Canada had listened to its scientists a decade ago and spent more on research and development, the country would not be in the economic mess it is today. That is the truth.

We are not just keeping up with the Joneses, the Japanese or the Germans, or anyone else; in some area we are trying to play catch up.

In the last few seconds that I have left let me say to Members that if any Member on the other side of the House has any influence on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), let him please put his influence there. We talk about unemployment. It is likely that the beginning of hope for the long-term future for those who are unemployed and for those who will come after them is not just in the high-tech industries but in the other industries as well.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words and to commend Members for the very positive debate we have had. I would like to commend the mover of the motion who placed it on the Order Paper. Since I have only about four or five minutes, I want to come directly to the point and suggest that what this House should be doing is to establish a committee of the House to study the social and economic impact of technological change. That might be a way to bring some fruition to all of the ideas that we have spoken about today. As legislators we might have some input into what kind of society and vision we have for this country. I think we all recognize that advanced technology is here. We are experiencing some tremendous technological restructuring throughout the world. We cannot turn back the clock. We cannot close our eyes to what is happening. It is here and it is happening now and it will continue in the future.

Really what we have to do is to ask ourselves a couple of questions. At what pace do we want to have that change brought into Canada? On what kind of industries do we want to concentrate? How will it affect human beings? Will we have a society in the future making these machines and computers to be the slaves of mankind, as someone said, rather than human beings becoming the slaves of the computer? Will we have the kind of society where we control the robots, or will the robots control us? For those kinds of reasons I think it is important that we go to all three House leaders and ask for a committee of this House to be set up to look into the social and economic impact of technological change.

When I look around the world I see a tremendous revolution taking place. There is a tremendous recession in the world. Part of the reason for that recession is to be found in the result of technological change. I am not sure whether any country or political Party has found the solution to which way we should be going. Certainly no political Party has found all the solutions. We have had many different attempts. We find, for example, that the more mature industries that we have known in the past, such as steel, auto, rubber and glass, will not be the industries of the future in terms of providing many jobs and many workers. Even if we have a world running at full capacity and we are over the recession, technological change will make it so that these industries will never employ the number of people they employed in the past. I am not saying that these industries are obsolete. I am saying that while the technologies we knew in the past are obsolete, the industries are not obsolete. We will have to keep many of these more mature industries, but we will have to make sure that we have the most modern technology so that they do not disappear, that they are internationally competitive and we can export around the world as well as supply our own market.

On September 25, I had the chance to speak in Chicago to a convention of the United Auto Workers of America. Those people are most concerned about the unemployed in their industry. From their studies they told me that by the year 2000 even if the Americans regain their full share of the auto industry, from the Japanese and the Europeans, about 80 per cent of the jobs they knew in 1980 will have disappeared because of advanced technology, the robots and the fully automated factories. The Japanese now have factories that are 98 per cent robotized. These are questions that we will have to look at as Parliamentarians. We will have to find solutions to these questions. If we do not, we will have more and more people unemployed, disillusioned and turned off by this failure of leadership in the country. That is why I argue very strongly that a committee be set up.

About two weeks ago, an American economist named Thurow appeared before a policy convention of the Liberal Party of Ontario. He said that what we lack in this country is a vision or a dream of where we are going as a society. We do not have that economic strategy or policy. He said that the Austrians have an objective, even though that country is situated right next door to such a powerful country as Germany. The Austrians' objective is to be better and richer than the Germans. The Austrians have met that challenge. They have succeeded. I think we in this country can learn from countries such as Austria, Scandinavia, France, West Germany and Japan.

In closing I urge Members of all three Parties in this House to approach their House leaders and try to get a committee going very soon, because we are lagging behind in this country in the field of advanced technology.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I may interject, I am intrigued by the thought of a special committee of the House of Commons, the idea of setting up a kind of task force which was put forward by the Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). Would the hon. gentleman be in favour, as well as establishing such a task force, of restructuring the Standing Committees of the House of Commons so that a standing committee of the House of Commons might be struck to deal with matters on an ongoing basis beyond the task force, having regard to the fact that we have come to the day when we must specialize in our committee structure?

• (1700)

Mr. Nystrom: The simple answer to that is yes. I think the Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is absolutely right. I would support any move in that direction and I would appeal to all Members of the House to support that suggestion also.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being 5 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that in accordance with Standing Order 62(11), the proceedings on the Motion have expired. Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m., the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, January 31, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the statute law relating to income tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose on the last occasion when this Bill was under discussion, I was detailing for the House the various meetings which have been held by the Progressive Conservative Party to examine in detail the original budget brought in by the late Finance Minister of the Liberal Party. I had gone through that at length. Today I want to mention some of the specific items which we were able to persuade the Government to withdraw, and then I will deal with some remaining matters concerning Bill C-139.

As a result of the efforts of the Progressive Conservative Party, the Government has withdrawn its ill-fated plan to tax employee health and dental benefits. It has delayed the implementation of the shift of manufacturers' sales tax to the wholesale level until mid-1984. It has changed the rules with regard to the small business dividend distribution tax, and that will apply only to dividends paid out of incomes earned in the taxation years starting after 1982. It has withdrawn the proposal that interest on money borrowed to earn investment income be deducted only against investment income. The automobile standby tax has been reduced from 2.5 per cent to 2 per cent. It has made significant changes in its proposal to tax whole life insurance policies and has made several improvements.

Today I want to discuss the items which have been left in, specifically with respect to employees, small businesses and farmers. The Liberal Government originally planned to sock it to all employees. For years, we on this side of the House have been encouraging unions to bargain for health and dental insurance. To our Party, it made good sense for us as a country to support the healthy Canadian family. In the original budget, the Liberal Party attacked the basic principle that families should look after themselves and decided it would tax employee health and dental plans. Now that proposal has been withdrawn, but I want to deal at length with one item which has been left in concerning the question of mobility.

Canada is a large country, and we must encourage mobility in our economic thinking. Companies have traditionally offered interest subsidies to employees moving from one part of Canada to another where there is a housing shortage and high prices, thus costing the employee more to remain at the same housing level. In November the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) proposed to tax all interest subsidies, effective 1982. In December, 1981 that exemption was withdrawn over two years for loans that were already in effect. In June, 1982 the Government decided it would not apply to commitments made prior to the budget.

I am pointing out these various "back and forths" to point out to the House that the Government does not really understand the problem. It does not understand why housing loans are made. It does not recognize the need for the Government to assist Canadians to be as mobile as possible in finding jobs in these days of high unemployment.

The second reason I am pointing these out is the absolute inability of the Government to understand that you have to phase in tax changes. Tax changes cannot be made overnight. It is one thing to say that it is the intention of the Government to tax loans on housing and that that is going to be phased in. To phase these changes in overnight is something else again. That is what our party is objecting to, the immediate change in taxation policy, which means that the businesses and employees who have arranged their affairs suddenly find that the Government has changed the rules of the game.

One of the most petty rules of the Liberal Government in the 1981 budget was the decision to increase sharply the taxation of employer-owned or leased automobiles which are used by salespeople. Bill C-139 now proposes to charge employees a stand-by fee equal to 2 per cent per month of the purchase price of the automobile if the employer owns the automobile and two-thirds of the lease costs if the car is leased. In simple terms, what the Liberals are saying is that if an employee uses a leased vehicle, he or she is using that car for eight months for his or her personal purposes and for four months for the purpose of earning income, and that simply does not make sense.

There have been other things which we do not agree with in terms of employee benefits, but I want to deal with small business. Small business, as the House well knows, is the backbone of the Canadian economy and this Bill is a direct attack by the Government on the small business community.

Small business was traditionally encouraged to invest in capital assets by the fact that a full year's depreciation or capital cost allowance could be taken in the year of purchase. Now the Government has changed all that. It is now saying that an asset purchased in the first month of the business year will be eligible for the same depreciation as assets purchased in the twelfth month of the first year.

My question to the Members on the Government side is, would it not make more sense to allow capital cost allowance to be calculated according to the month of purchase in the first year? Therefore, if the purchase was made in the first month of the business year, they could claim twelve months' depreciation. If they purchase it in the fifth month, they could claim seven months' depreciation.

This is the time for some innovative thinking on the part of the Government, not for thinking which discourages capital investment. If capital cost allowance is cut in the first year, that discourages capital investment. The reason we have so much shut-down in our manufacturing industry is because of that one provision.

The next point I would like to speak on is the Small Business Development Bond, which was originally introduced by the Progressive Conservative Government in December, 1979 to help small businesses weather the ravages of high interest rates. This was a consolidating feature which allowed small businesses to consolidate their debts on a once in a lifetime basis. There was strong support for that concept in the business community.

In April, 1980 we retained the name but changed the philosophy. In order to qualify, a small business had to be expanding. In times of economic problems, the Government wanted them to expand. Then we had the final insult. In November, 1981, to get a Small Business Development Bond a business had to be going broke. That does not make any sense at all. This Government rewards killers, spies and businesses going broke. It just does not make any sense.

• (1115)

Mr. Fisher: Neither does your speech.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member's viewpoint has always been well respected by himself.

I want to talk about interest deductibility. If Canada is going to grow, we have to encourage Canadians to invest in Canada. In November, 1981 the Liberals proposed to eliminate the interest expense deduction if it exceeded interest income. What the Liberals did not realize was that it occasionally takes time for investment income to exceed investment expense.

It is easy to understand the confusion. After all, Arthur Erickson did not have to wait for his investment in the Liberal Party to pay dividends. Ian Sinclair has not had to wait. He signed on the blue ribbon committee in the summer and he got Bill S-31. If that was not enough, he got the changes in the Crow rate which are going to benefit only the railways. Therefore, it is easy to understand the thinking of the heavy-duty supporters of the Liberal Government. They want their investment return right away. However, they suggest that the ordinary Canadian investor has to wait. Fortunately, after we explained the facts of life to the bureaucrats, they backed down.

The last group I want to deal with in speaking to Bill C-139 is the farmers. The Liberal Party and its bureaucrats simply do not understand that the family farm is the Canadian farmer's pension plan. My constituents work hard on a day-to-day basis to put something aside for retirement. That retirement plan, shall we call it, consists of paying off the family farm.

The Hon. Member laughs. I would not laugh about that. I appreciate that the Hon. Member comes from a metropolitan riding, but I would not laugh about the plight of the Canadian farmer. I do not think that is fair for a metropolitan Toronto Member to do.

That retirement nest-egg is created by paying off the family farm. What the farmer does is sell the farm and take back a mortgage. Before the Government changed the rules, a farmer could sell his farm and invest the capital gain portion in an income-averaging annuity. That allowed him to plan for retirement. He could calculate his chances for surviving and for how long, invest the money and get an annuity. The Liberals have changed all that. Just as the laughter on the other side has demonstrated, how many Liberals and bureaucrats own farms? They do not have any idea of what is happening out there, no idea whatsoever. Instead of the income-averaging annuity content, the farmers of Canada will now be faced with the uncertainty of general averaging.

I want to sum up now because I have had two chances to speak to this Bill. I urge the Government to bring forward Bill C-139 on a serious basis. This is the third day of debate, but in fact we only had one full day of debate before this. The second day was interrupted by a debate on Standing Order 81, plus, if you can believe it, Royal Assent in the middle of the debate on Bill C-139.

We on this side of the House urge the Government to give some certainty and finality to income tax legislation in this country by bringing forward Bill C-139 on a chunk basis so that we can have all the debate at one time and Members in every part of the House can be heard. That will bring some certainty into the lives of accountants, lawyers, small business people, farmers and employees in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The rules now provide for a question and answer period for ten minutes. Are there any Members rising to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member for an interesting and partisan speech. He presented his point of view from a very clear bias. I would like to explore one or two of those nuances.

The Hon. Member said that mobility among Canadian workers must be encouraged and that the question of home loans from employers being viewed as a taxable benefit discourages this kind of mobility. I believe he said that. Taking the hypothetical case of two people working for the Ford Motor Company, one an executive and one working on the assembly line, if both of them have to move from Windsor to Oakville, it has been the practice of such companies to subsidize the mortgages of the executives but not of the workers on the assembly line. Therefore, these workers not only go without the tax-free benefit, but they help to pay for the other man's tax-free benefit. Could the Hon. Member give us some idea of how fair he thinks that kind of equation is?

Mr. Lewis: I should start out by saying that I appreciate the Hon. Member's compliment on my speech. I must say I have no hesitancy in speaking from a biased viewpoint in favour of small business, farmers and employees.

To answer the question directly, I would say the Hon. Members is correct. In my opinion, which I believe would be shared by my Party, if there are going to be loans for employees who are moved by their company, it seems to me eminently fair that the loan should be for all levels of employment. We in this Party, to the best of my knowledge, make no distinction between the executive and the highly skilled worker. If Ford Motor Company, or any company, is going to make loans to enable people to transfer their place of employment without suffering, then as far as we are concerned the executive and the highly skilled worker on the assembly line should get the same break. There is absolutely no question of that. As a matter of fact, if that is happening I would hope the Government is clamping down on it.

The point remains, however, that we want to move people across this country. We want to encourage that. Mobility is referred to in the Charter of Rights, and what that means is that we want companies to flourish in Canada, including Calgary and Vancouver where house prices are out of sight. If a company has to loan a highly skilled worker or an executive money to purchase a house, perhaps there should be some clause in the contract that if there is a capital gain realized, the company would receive a piece of it. We should treat all employees equally and encourage mobility.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the Hon. Member wants everyone treated equally. I agree with that perspective. I would like to point out to him that there are instances in my riding where whole companies have moved and everyone, from the president to the janitor, is offered a home subsidy. That is interesting but it is the exception, not the rule. What I have described to the Hon. Member is more common, that someone working on an assembly line cannot get that kind of subsidy.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could pursue his point one step further and describe how someone moving on his own hook, as is common, from Newfoundland to the oil fields in Alberta, could get this kind of a tax break. An employee can get it, but someone moving on his own hook cannot. What is the fairness in that?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think that the best I could do for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) is to suggest to him that those provisions are in the Act already. If he takes a hard look at them, he will find there are provisions for deduction of moving expenses. I do not have the same familiarity with the Act that I had, but I would be willing to take that up with the Parliamentary Secretary later.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue that point of the question even further. With regard to moving expenses, the Hon. Member is correct. Would he also indicate the fairness of the situation where an individual moves from Calgary, say, to Ottawa, buys a house, takes up employment, and does not receive any consideration, with respect to moving, of a mortgage loan which is tax deductible or tax free, whereas someone from Ottawa calls someone in Calgary, offers them a job and gives them an interest-free loan for the house they purchase in Ottawa? The two individuals are in exactly the same situation, but one has a tax-free or very low-interest loan to purchase a house and the other one has not. Can the Hon. Member comment on the fairness of that situation?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's confirmation that in the Act there was a deduction for moving expenses for people moving on their own. I can understand that there is a problem. Naturally, under the mortgage interest and realty tax deduction plan that the Progressive Conservative Party had in place the individual who had to take up a mortgage to move to Ottawa would be looked after and would be able to deduct those expenses from income. That provision is already in our Party's platform.

However, I think the Hon. Member will find, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance suggested, that different companies have different policies. What we were dealing with was this. I think within the free enterprise system it is equitable for company "A", which manufactures widgets, to have a different system from company "B" which also manufactures widgets, because if company "A" have that plan, they would probably be better able to encourage good employees to come to work for them. That is the situation within the free enterprise system.

As I suggested, the plan should be applied across the board. It should apply to executives and highly skilled workers, anyone who works for the company; no question about that. If the company has to move its janitor to Calgary, the janitor should get the same break as the vice-president. I have no hesitation in saying that at all.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to participate in the debate on Bill C-139. I was not really too surprised to find the Progressive Conservative Party, through their spokesman today, the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis), taking credit for all the changes made in the November, 1981 budget. I think he probably had his tongue firmly planted in his cheek when he made that kind of representation, knowing that back-benchers on this side had a fair amount to do with many of the changes which have taken place, many of them for the better. Not only do we take full credit for that, but we are prepared to share that credit with the business community and labour groups which came forward and spoke to the Minister and the Department of Finance and indicated where there were some burrs in this particular budget which had to be removed if it was going to be equitable and applicable to the whole of the country.

This Bill now represents the culmination of a great deal of work and debate, and some change. With a budget in 1981 and later financial statements, the Government could hardly be seen to be ramming this Bill through the House. It can be called new or recent because it was tabled early in December, but the contents have been comprehensibly scrutinized by the public, Opposition and Government Members, and by and large by the business community and labour groups throughout the country. So it has had a good debate. We also know that the subject matter of the Bill was referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and representations came from that particular Committee, many of which are found in Bill C-139. So the Bill has been, I think, long, effectively and comprehensibly debated.

The problem which flows, I think, was highlighted in part by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in his address on this particular part of the Bill; that is, Mr. Speaker, the process. It is no secret that anyone involved at any time with the preparing of a budget would not agree with the present method of doing so. We have yet to find a perfect method, but I think we have to keep searching to see if there is not some better way so that the kind of certainty that the Hon. Member for Simcoe North was talking about will be known to the general public and it will not require a year or a year and a half of debate before items recommended or suggested in a budget see the light of day.

Unfortunately, people who have tried that in the East have almost been hoist with their own petard. When the Hon. Walter Gordon was Minister of Finance, he thought it would be good procedure to bring in people from the business community to let them see what the bureaucrats, the Departments and the Minister were proposing and find out whether they could propose a counterbalance or some improvements on the suggestions being made. I thought that was a great pioneering move but, unhappily, attention was focused on the three individuals brought in from the business community. There were questions about whether they were on a leave of absence, whether certain benefits were accruing to them or to their firms as a result of advising the Minister, and not enough attention was focused on the positive, courageous step taken by the Hon. Walter Gordon in trying to improve the process.

Next came the white paper method. That offered an opportunity to muse in public about how the next budget might be put together, the sort of things that should be contained in it and the ramifications if certain steps were taken. Unfortunately, it was not regarded as a white paper but as Government policy. The Government found itself having to defend everything in the white paper as if it were Government policy instead of a proposition offered in the hope that the Canadian public would see the things that might be possible and also see the problems that face a Government endeavouring to prepare a budget that was equitable. There was reaction against the white paper and considerable attention paid to the more reprehensible parts of it, rather than concentration on the positive aspects. As a result, that process did not see the light of day.

I served as Parliamentary Secretary to a Minister of Finance who did not particularly care for the secrecy that was involved in the budget. He felt that it was something that we inherited, but that has long since been abandoned in the Westminster system where there is more consultation with the general public. After seeing the disaster of the white paper, he decided to consult with colleagues that he trusted, Ministers who had the same responsibility to their Provinces as he had to Canada, namely, to put a budget together. They bounced ideas off each other, trying to find out what the implications of certain moves would be for Ontario, say, Quebec or for the Atlantic provinces—whether a certain action would be the correct use of tax points and so on.

All in all, people in the political arena—and I emphasize people in the political arena—with some knowledge of budgets, some knowledge of the process and of the impact, were able to come up with what was, I think, a budget good enough to be defeated in the House and, subsequently, for the Liberal Party to win an election on. It was a better budget as a result of that consultation than it would have been without.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North claimed that the Government is prepared to rush this Bill through but he ignored the debate that has been going on since November, 1981. The Bill before us is the culmination of the many, many representations that have been made. What we have here is a study in semantics. I think the changes that have been made are appropriate, that the Bill is better because of them and the budget was better because of them. The Opposition sees this as backing down and, of course, Members of the Government, with their own particular bias, see it as the Government being more flexible. Personally, I think further changes could be made, but this is a necessary element of the present process. Until the night that the budget is read in the House we do not know what it will contain. By its very nature it demands that debate and consultation take place after the fact.

How much better it would be if we could come up with a process to do that before the fact. Some areas could be kept secret because of the stock market or because someone might have inside information. We should question certain approaches, such as indexing—whether it is worth keeping or worth the cost of $7 billion or $8 billion of Government revenues. Such things could be the subject of legitimate debate. This is not the case at the present time, because if an item is not on the bill, it cannot be discussed. All we can do is guess at the subjects the budget will cover. We debate what might be in the budget, only to find that it is not there and all that debate is wasted.

I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) is embarking on an excellent process of consultation in moving this Bill before the Finance Committee so that there can be better debate. I hope he will not be rushed into bringing down his next budget, however, but that he will take time to consult again with groups in order to ensure that the actions he is contemplating will not have severe and negative implications for the business community.

When the Minister spoke to representatives of business in late January, he said:

> We must build the foundation for a tougher, more productive, more competitive economy. And we must do it while combatting the painful effects of a world recession that has hit Canada harder precisely because of our greater dependence on world trade.

He is saying to the business community, to workers and to the public generally, that we have to become lean and mean if we are to succeed in the post-recession market.

It has been difficult for the Government, also for the Conservatives who were once in Government, to put to rest the belief that simple solutions are possible to our economic problems, and most notably the belief that Government can do it all and can end our economic problems. The general public is much more knowledgeable today and recognizes that whether the Government works in concert with the Provinces or whether the Provinces work in concert with the municipalities, no Government can go it alone. It needs the help of the general public.

What can be done to help, Mr. Speaker? Legislators can help bring in the best possible legislation and the public has an obligation to become as productive as possible. If there is one area where the country is failing, it is in the area of productivity. I know that my friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), will be quick to point out that the Canadian farmer is probably the most productive person in the community. We must improve productivity, however, and that is not to slam labour or management. It is a clarion call to recognize one of our major problems, that we are not as productive as we need to be in order to compete.

As the Minister of Finance has said, no one would be happier than he if it were possible to solve unemployment by forgetting about inflation. That would result in fewer jobs, however, not more. Only a few months ago we had high inflation and high unemployment at the same time. The inflation rate is coming down and we have an obligation, through legislation like this, to see to it that unemployment also comes down. To the extent that the economy cannot absorb all those who want to work at the present time, the Government has an obligation to provide jobs, both short term and long term but more appropriately long term. We cannot ignore that problem. That is why money must be and is being spent to train people for the jobs that will become available so that we may be in the forefront of the economies of the western world.

It is not difficult to approve this Bill in principle, Mr. Speaker. Any piece of legislation can be improved, but at second reading we deal with the principle of the Bill. We will deal with the nitty-gritty when it goes before committee for clause-by-clause study. The package of tax rate cuts, modification of federal tax credits and cutbacks that are proposed will result in over 93 per cent of tax filers either having a reduction in tax or no tax increase. That is a rather phenomenal thing in the present state of the economy.

I think everyone can support the increase in the Child Tax Credit which is now $343, an increase of about $50. It could be argued that it should be more and, of course, it would be great if we could provide more. But it is significant that the Government is prepared to make this move at a very difficult time in the economy.

From time to time people will hold up the big Income Tax Act and declare that it is too complex and should be made simpler. We have heard simplistic ideas that if we take 20 per cent of someone's income and pay it to the Government—and the rest is theirs—that will solve all the problems. There is a lot of difference between an individual who earns a $50,000 salary and an individual who earns $50,000 by putting his guts, brains and everything he has—he sacrifices everything—into a small business. The tax Bill is more complicated and complex because we try to build in equities to say to individuals, to entrepreneurs, or to one who is prepared to take a chance, that the Government will back them and give them particular advantages. This is the way complexity is built into the Income Tax Act. It has to be built in in order to make income tax equitable.

There is a tendency from time to time not to go into a sunset situation but to look at some of the incentives which are in place to see whether they should be removed at the present time or whether they should be moved from a particular group and put on to another group because that group is suffering. This could be the case with a businessman, farmer, large corporation or whatever the situation happens to be at the time. We can have a look at it, and if the complexity happens to be there, perhaps we can create equity in other areas by sunsetting some of these situations. I think to be fair that is what was tried in part in November, 1981 without winning too many converts, unhappily. I think in some situations the changes which have been made have been appropriate.

I was pleased to hear the comments of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North. He almost quoted from my speech, judging from what I have written down here. I am sure I heard him say that small business is one of the cornerstones of society. I do not think anyone in the House denies that. They will gain a number of incentives in this particular Bill, signaling the Government's appreciation of the difficult times small-business owners are facing due to world-wide recession. I will cite just a few examples. First, there are the provisions of the Small Business Bond Program, thanks to the Conservatives. They brought them in and we have improved upon and expanded them. I think it is a better program now than it was at that particular time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: We can have an honest debate between ourselves. I think it is that kind of debate which will make this particular bond even more effective than anything they dream of in their wildest dreams—and they have some dreams on occasion. The program was due to expire at the end of 1982. It reduces interest rates by six to seven percentage points through a tax exemption to lenders. That has now been extended to the end of 1983. The limit on annual income qualifying for low small business tax rate is increased to $200,000 from $150,000. The total accumulated income to qualify goes to $1 million from $750,000. There are items in there, but as I said, we are talking about a Bill at second reading and I do not want to go into the specifics. I am sure they will be dealt with in some detail by the Minister and by members of the committee, whether it be Committee of the Whole or the Bill is ultimately referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

In conclusion, given the present process, which everyone concedes is flawed because of the great insistence upon secrecy, after a Bill is passed—before it is passed, yes, but certainly after it is passed—we have to find out the repercussions of a particular measure in the Bill. We have to be vigilant to the actual benefits which flow. We have to decide whether we can increase the benefits or enhance them, whether the benefits are sufficient so that we can move our emphasis to another area. Also we have to be vigilant to the harmful effects of a piece of legislation and to what extent it deters an individual or detracts from being able to run a better business or being able to take advantage of a tax incentive that will have the effect of increasing the cash flow. We have to watch all these things and see to it when a new budget is drafted and we know the timing of it that we make every effort to bring to the attention of the Department of Finance or the Minister of Finance the areas where we can make changes. Thank heavens we have a budget usually on an annual basis or sometimes twice a year. It gives us an opportunity to make particular changes if they should be made.

The necessity of building as much equity into an income tax Bill, program or budget is absolutely essential in today's day and age. It is a tall order for Government, Parliament or the business community, for that matter, to try to come up with the penultimate answer so that there is equity across the board. The present Income Tax Act goes a long way toward that. It needs a lot of improvement. This particular Bill is an improvement, but I hope we will not be stalled and that we will not hesitate to make recommendations immediately to the Minister of Finance for his next budget. It is a tall order, but it is also our responsibility as those who legislate for the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules provide at this point for a ten-minute period of questions and answers. Are there any Hon. Members seeking to put questions?

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Hon. Member would answer a few questions. He mentioned that small business was important in the development of our economy. Could he find any provisions which specifically help small business? For example, does he consider the half capital cost arrangement to be helpful? Did it inspire people to invest? Did the 12.5 per cent tax on surplus which will be paid out in dividends inspire people to invest? Does the reserve system inspire confidence, where if a man sells his business he has to pay any capital gain within a three-year period? Is that the kind of thing which should be done by a Government that wants to help small business? Could he tell us about anything in the Bill of which he is so proud that helps small businessmen?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I tried to give some credit where it was due; admittedly, I gave a small amount to the Conservatives for introducing the Small Business Bond. I also pointed out—and I will read it again in case the Hon. Member missed it—that the limit on annual income qualifying for low small business tax rate has been increased to $200,000 from $150,000 and that the total accumulated income to qualify went to $1 million from $750,000.

I would also point out, because this is specifically to what he referred, that the tax rate of 12.5 per cent on dividends paid by small business corporations will apply only to income generated in years commencing after December 31, 1982. This and other changes will significantly simplify the tax, while addressing concerns expressed by small business groups. I gather the Hon. Member was a member of the House of Commons Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. I could deal with almost any piece of legislation and ask, for example, whether the fact that a school teacher has to pay a certain tax encourages him to be a school teacher or to go out and invest.

I could take almost any piece of legislation. The Hon. Member as a counsel knows that. I am sure that in the past he has taken medical reports and ripped them to shreds in court because a client was not hurt as much as he made out. We can all make that kind of attack. But when I talk about helping the future of Canadians, I would like to see something in a more positive vein than simply nitpicking through the Bill.

Mr. Blenkarn: I think the Hon. Member will agree that all we have here is a Bill that is not quite as bad as the budget of November. There have been some ameliorations as a result of representations made by this Party, by the public in general and finally by Members on his side of the House to the Minister. Could the Hon. Member advise us as to how the half capital cost allowance arrangement is helping business? How is it inspiring people to invest? Somehow the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Lumley) can say that new capital investment for 1983 is estimated to be down 8 per cent and how reducing capital cost allowances inspired it. What is the cause? Does the Hon. Member think that if we changed this and got back to a regular capital cost allowance, we would increase investment?

An Hon. Member: What about the standby charge?

Mr. Cullen: I think I was as vehement as possible in my attack on it. We managed to get it down from 2.5 per cent to 2 per cent.

Any studies I have done on this particular subject seem to indicate that at best it is neutral in so far as the capital investment is concerned.

There have been a fair number of studies done in this particular area. The Hon. Member, of course, focuses in on one particular Bill rather than all of the items in place at the present time to help the small business sector. I have personally made recommendations about the manner in which small businesses might be helped with their cash flow. I would like to see small businesses aided by the creditors' relief arrangement act which was suggested by my colleague from Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) when dealing with farmers. I think we could broaden the scope of that so it could apply to small businessmen. Perhaps that is an idea we could expand upon rather than having it apply only to farmers.

There are openings for improvement. Rather than being negative all the time, I suggest that we find some way to help the small businessman rather than decry one or two items in a particular bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) made quite a case for consultation between the Government and business groups, labour unions and other interested parties. I have no objection to that; I can see how it may be worked out.

Can the Hon. Member give this side of the House a reason why the Government did not include grandfathering provisions and transitional provisions? Using restricted interest expense as an example, why did it suddenly say that the ability of the taxpayer to deduct that expense is gone? Why was there no transition period there?

Why did the Government take work in process and suddenly say that there is a tax on work in process as of next year-end, instead of providing for 25 per cent, 50 per cent and 75 per cent in the original budget? Why do bureaucrats not realize that these things must be phased in? Since the Hon. Member has some experience as a solicitor and has had to advise clients in private life, how does he account for the lack of transitional provisions in the original budget?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the point I was trying to make is that this is one of the weaknesses of the present process. Let us be honest, it has to be adopted by the Minister. It is not something which the bureaucrats felt was appropriate in the circumstances and had to go into the Bill so it could be done immediately. I think if we had seen these proposals in a white paper we would have had an opportunity to discuss them in advance and see whether, if this is implemented, lawyers who are practising alone or in partnership find all of a sudden that they have to change their method of accounting. I agree that suddenness is something we should try to avoid.

I am happy to say that, as a result of pressures brought to bear from all sides of the House, that that particular move was put in rather than a snip-off at the time. There is some time frame provided to adapt to it. It also provides a time-frame within which a tax can be placed on it or other suggestions made. I think if we had a better process for drafting a budget, that sort of thing would not creep in.

When I was Minister of National Revenue, I found it almost incredible that we in National Revenue who were going to have to administer a particular piece of legislation were hardly consulted on the particular bill. If I made one contribution as Minister of National Revenue, it was the insistence that we be made part and parcel of the budget-making process so that we might say that a piece of legislation might be good in theory but cannot be administered. I think there should be more consultation like that between the Government, the politicians and the bureaucrats, and between Parliament and the public.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax. It was given first reading on December 7, 1982. Since the Bill's introduction, I have endeavoured to give it a second reading for my own information and benefit as well as for the information and benefit of the constituents whom I serve in this Parliament. But I say that it has proven to be an almost impossible task.

This Bill contains approximately 295 pages of rules, amendments, double-talk and triple-talk. I submit that no average citizen could understand it. Few Members of Parliament have even read the Bill and even lawyers have difficulty interpreting its complex clauses or stating with certainty the true budget to which these amendments apply.

At present there are four versions of the November, 1981 budget: the version that was introduced; the version as amended on December 18, 1981; the June 28, 1982 version; and the October 27, 1982 version. In addition, there have been minor announcements, and classifications on several occasions, such as a January, 1982 announcement on employee benefits. The fact is that the November budget has been amended so many times that one would literally need a program readily to understand it.

In my opinion, this Bill should not be given speedy passage as requested by Canada's present Finance Minister (Mr. Lalonde). I say this because it is far too lengthy and too far-reaching to be given speedy passage. The Minister stated at a press conference after the Bill received first reading that it is now time to end the uncertainty over our tax laws and let the affected taxpayers know precisely where they stand. He said that quick passage would let the Revenue Department get on with the task of issuing the refunds to which millions of taxpayers will be entitled. He repeated these views during debate in the House on this Bill.

I say that this is nothing more than ministerial nonsense. This Parliament should take its time to make certain that the tax laws it passes are fair and workable. It is not the fault of Members of Parliament or of the Official Opposition that the present Liberal administration brought in a budget that was so unworkable, so unrealistic and unfair, that it took almost 13 months of chopping and changing before it could even be properly put before this Parliament. Even if this Bill is passed—and I hope it will be found unacceptable to a majority of Members in the House—Canadian taxpayers will still not know precisely where they stand because the Finance Minister has already indicated that he plans to introduce yet another budget early in 1983.

The charge that any delay will affect taxpayers is ridiculous, since tax returns will not even begin to be processed until some two months from today. Furthermore, the claim that refunds cannot be sent out until this Bill is passed is highly questionable. The Government often applies tax changes almost immediately following a budget night statement by the Minister of Finance. I have seen this happen quite often during my 25-plus years in this Chamber. If taxes can be collected in this manner, I ask why should there be a legal impediment to paying back money to taxpayers from whom it has originally been taken illegally? This Government obviously believes Barnum was right when he said that there is a sucker born every minute.

When the loopholes used mostly by the rich, and which were to be plugged by the November 12 budget, have turned out to be manholes, into which everyone including the Government is falling, then I submit that it becomes necessary for Parliament to take a careful look to ascertain whether our tax system has now become unbalanced by putting an unfair burden on lower income workers.

After reading Bill C-139, I must admit that its contents frighten me. This Bill symbolizes all that is wrong in Canada today. In my estimation, it is a bureaucratic nightmare, for only a bureaucrat, isolated from the cold reality that lies out there, sitting in a warm office here in Ottawa, could come up with this type of legislation which is causing, in effect, 1.6 million Canadians to be unemployed and businessmen from the Atlantic to the Pacific to throw in the towel and say enough is enough.

There can be no doubt that this is the worst crisis that the Canadian economy has faced since the 1930s. It is not just the continued closing of operations in Sudbury, Corner Brook or other parts of the Atlantic, the downturn in our agricultural economy, the crisis in our fishing industry which is the worst I have seen in my entire lifetime, or the state of the housing and forestry industries. It is also the heartbreak of hope deferred by millions of Canadians. The fact is that Government-announced turning points lead only to more disappointments.

Canadians are asking, in fear and in anger, just what is wrong with our country and our Government. Why are we in this deep depression in a land which is blessed with so many natural resources? There are, of course, many answers which could be given to that question, and some of them can be found in this Bill. This Bill calls for increased taxation of employee benefits, such as retiring allowances, employee loans, automobile benefits, deferred profit-sharing plans and personal service corporations, among other things.

To give Hon. Members some idea why I call this Bill a bureaucratic nightmare, I wish to place on the record, since many of my constituents will not have an opportunity to read the Bill, a sample of the wording found on some of this Bill's 295 pages as it applies to the standby charges to be paid by an employee to his employer for non-business vehicle use. I will begin on page 2 and quote only a few lines. On page 2 it is stated:

> (2) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(e) an amount that is a reasonable standby charge for the automobile for the aggregate number of days in a taxation year during which it was made available by an employer or by a person related to the employer shall be deemed to be the amount equal to the product obtained when
> (a) where the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile at any time in the year, an amount in respect of its cost to the employer equal to the percentage thereof obtained when 2% is multiplied by the quotient obtained when such of the aggregate number of days hereinbefore referred to as were days during which the employer or the person related to the employer owned the automobile is divided by 30 (except that if the quotient so obtained is not a full number and exceeds one it shall be taken to the nearest full number or, if there is no nearest full number, then to the full number next below it), or—

It goes on in this manner for two solid paragraphs. That must be the longest unfinished sentence in Canadian literature. It just boggles the mind. I ask the Minister and any Member of the Government, how can a Bill with this type of wording create stability, as stated by our Minister of Finance? That is the question I would like answered.

As if this were not confusing enough, the Bill goes on to other matters of taxation. But then, on page 25, it contains similar double-talk on the possible benefits of the company car, which are taxable if same is used by a shareholder. I ask, why were these measures not kept together, especially as they apply to automobile taxes? Of course, this is something that my mind, being that of an ordinary MP, will never understand, but it does explain one thing. It explains why every Canadian commercial traveller in Canada today is up in arms. He is literally unable to determine where he stands, what he must pay to his employer, and what he must do with the company car.

All of this type of taxation double-talk is deemed necessary in order to secure an ever-increasing amount of funds to pay the salaries of an ever-increasing number of civil servants. This horror story, and that is all I can think of to call it, was outlined in detail by Canada's Auditor General, Kenneth Dye, who pointed out in his Annual Report that not even Canada's federal Cabinet Ministers know for certain how a great deal of Canadian tax money is spent. To me, this simply does not make sense.

We have before us a Bill which seeks to plug every loophole, which seeks to get every possible penny from these working Canadians who are trying to keep this country going, while the same Government which deliberately plans to make our workers and their employers as wretched as possible takes no steps whatsoever to see to it that every tax dollar is properly and wisely spent. I ask the Government, through Your Honour, why is there this inconsistency? Why does the Government hit out so hard at the little taxpayer, but makes no direct effort to try to curb the unnecessary expenditures of Crown corporations?

Here is what Mr. Dye, after two years of study, had to say: "My first impression of sprawling immensity, confusion of purpose and a sense of urgency comparable to the alacrity of a turtle, remains". On page 13 of his Report of March 31, 1982, Mr. Dye states that the problem of achieving accountability is massive in its dimensions. There are more than 300 Crown corporations, including subsidiaries, employing some 263,000 Canadians. Revenues of Crown corporations for the last fiscal year were $31.9 billion and expenses were $33.6 billion. That represents a loss in one year of $1.7 billion. These are taxpayers' dollars. Most of these corporations are virtually unknown, even to the best-informed Members of Parliament and Cabinet. Yet, in the aggregate, they represent a hole in the taxpayer's pocket, resulting, as they often do, in a consistent negative return on the taxpayer's investment.

Our Auditor General has stated that it might be helpful, in visualizing the state of the problem, to think of the whole group as an economic iceberg floating lazily on the foggy Atlantic, silent, majestic and awesome. As a Nova Scotian and as a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I can fully appreciate that analogy because I have seen those icebergs floating, awesome, silent and majestic, on the Atlantic; and I can assure Hon. Members that while they are awesome, they are also frightening. I think that is the comparison our Auditor General wished to make so that Canadians would better understand.

The public tends to see only the upper portions of icebergs, consisting of the giants like the CNR, Petro-Canada, CBC, Air Canada and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. However, the great bulk of the iceberg below the surface is less spectacular, less likely to attract public interest, less likely to receive the attention of Parliament, yet costly to the taxpayer. Indeed, Mr. Dye says: "There seems to be, deep down near the bottom of the iceberg, subsidiaries of Crown corporations that may escape all public scrutiny".

This is the real reason behind the Bill. The Government does not seem to know how our tax dollars are spent, and its own concern is to find new ways of getting more taxes from those working Canadians who are still operating. I presume it is necessary, in order to keep these Crown corporations running, to have restrictive tax laws like those enshrined in Bill C-139, but I personally feel that we can no longer continue turning a blind eye and a deaf ear to Crown corporations which are losing close to $2 billion annually.

Mr. Dye did pinpoint some of the losses. He told us about a device which is called a "letter of comfort", under which a Minister is authorized by the Cabinet to support the credit of Crown corporations. The amounts involved can be significant. In the last six years, for example, more than $1 billion has been advanced to Canadair through a sequence of letters of comfort. The authorized limit is $1.35 billion. This amount of taxpayers' money is at risk without what I consider to be any real, clear criteria for providing continuing support or even for discontinuing this kind of support. There is no assurance that $1.35 billion is sufficient.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not.

Mr. Crouse: In this period of severe recession, the Government support for such troubled companies as Massey-Ferguson, de Havilland, Canadair, Maislin Industries and Dome Petroleum represents a very big risk. Why must the entire action be taxed to death, as in Bill C-139, for those favourite few? What are the names of the other companies, those which will belly-up to the trough to be spoon-fed by Canadian taxpayers' dollars, by this socialist Government?

The worst example of Crown corporation bungling, as outlined by our Auditor General, concerned the money made available by the Government to Petro-Canada for the purchase of Petrofina. This wholly-owned Crown corporation was used by the Government to identify, evaluate, recommend and negotiate the acquisition of Petrofina at a cost of $1.7 billion. It is one of the crimes of the Government that to date the Auditor General has not been able to assess whether the $1.7 billion invested by the Government of Canada for the purchase of Petrofina was expended with due regard to economy.

The Government feels that it must crack down hard on Canadians who may receive some amount of interest on life insurance policies purchased for the protection of their wives and families, in the event of their death, but it cannot give or refuses to give our Auditor General a detailed breakdown of the expenditure by Petro-Canada of $1.7 billion, which is an action which not only represents a callous disregard for our taxpayers' money, but one which is also affecting the very livelihood of the taxpayers from whom the money was originally taken. In my own constituency, I have small, independent service stations being put out of business by the unfair competition they face from stations set up by the Government Crown corporation.

When this Government is restricting tuition fees and educational deductions for young Canadians, it should ask itself why its basic accounting policies not only fail to produce a fair and honest representation of the Government's accounts, but, as reported in one case, it actually omitted $445 million of revenue that should have been included if the Government had followed its own rules. It should also inquire of itself why Government departments are still indulging in year-end spending sprees rather than turning back unspent funds at the end of the fiscal year. There is no reason why it could not do that. The Government should at least give an explanation to Parliament concerning the $219 million spent last year on overtime, even though most departments and agencies do not have adequate policies and guidelines governing the use of overtime. It should also explain why Canada is the only OECD country in the top ten in which industrial productivity has decreased.

This Government should want to know why it shows a deficit of $24 billion this year. With 24 million Canadians, that amounts to $1 billion for every one million people. If the Americans had that type of deficit, they would be going crazy. There are 240 million Americans, but their predicted deficit is in the range of $180 billion. For their deficit to be comparable with Canada's deficit, it would have to be $240 billion. Perhaps this is one of the reasons our dollar is worth only 75 cents in the United States.

If the Government wants to know why inflation is still at a double-digit figure and unemployment rolls are still rising, I would say that it need look no further than this Bill. This Bill is a capsule form of the gross mismanagement of Canada by the present administration. It is the collective result of three budgets in one year, all presented to Parliament without proper thought or planning by this administration. The result is a very uncertain direction for our ship of state. This state is in the same predicament as a ship whose captain is uncertain of his compass readings. When this happens in Atlantic Canada, the captain slows down his forward speed as he creeps along. He is constantly looking for some familiar headland or marker so he can get his bearings. This all takes time, and while the captain is in this state of uncertainty, there is little or no forward progress for his ship. This situation continues until an expert checks and brings the magnets in line so that it gives a true compass bearing.

In conclusion, I say that our captains of industry are no different from our sea captains. They will simply plod along slowly and warily until they are convinced that their compasses are reliable and giving them a true bearing. I submit that it is way past the time when this Government should give a true course to our captains of industry so we can go forward and progress together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The rules at this point permit a question and answer period of 10 minutes. Are there any Hon. Members rising to ask questions? If not, the Chair will recognize the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn).

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the object of taxation for any Government is to raise the necessary money required for the public purposes of the country, and the responsibility of a Minister of Finance is to organize the economy so that it produces the best result in terms of profitability and business activity that makes the collection of tax possible. The talent of a Minister of Finance should be used to run a goose farm where he makes sure that he can pluck feathers out of the geese without annoying them so that they stop laying the golden eggs. In any measure of ability in running a goose farm, this Government, this Minister, has "goosed" the country, has made sure that the production of golden eggs has been significantly reduced and has created nothing but hissing and upset by every faction of the country from business to labour and, indeed, as expressed earlier by the Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), even from the backbenchers of the Liberal Party.

The production we have before us, Bill C-139, is the result of a mess of budgets, November 12, June 26 and now this effort of October, all supposed to do something to make the economy of Canada work. In my view this Bill that we now have before us is a Bill that assists in preventing the economy of the country from working, and therefore it should be significantly amended or withdrawn.

When the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) was first appointed to replace the former Minister, who was a disaster, he gave us some hope. He talked in glowing terms of the enterprise economy, how it should be the engine of growth, how we would get with it, how changes would be made that would make that enterprise economy work again. However, actions speak louder than words, and no sooner had the Minister finished his budget remarks in October than we proceeded to have $680 million of Petro-Canada money used to buy British Petroleum; we had further grants to Canadair and to de Havilland; we had the Maislin fiasco; we had the program for six and five that was supposed to reduce Government expenditures. At the same time the Minister came before us in the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on his estimates, and he said that he had to increase the number of persons working in his department by 48, that he had to increase the total staff in his Department by 7 per cent and that he had to increase the total wages paid in his Department by 15 per cent.

That is really the Minister's attitude here. He says that we have to make the economy of Canada grow, and that this budget and these Bills are for that purpose. On the other hand, judging by what he does, we find that the $680 million to buy more service stations and the 15 per cent increase in the wages paid in his own Department is his appropriate response to restraint.

The tax system we have in the Income Tax Act is exceptionally complicated. It is not only complicated, it is confusing and complex. Indeed, the committee that studied the proposals of June were able to call many expert witnesses before it, and I want to read into the record a statement made by Donald Huggett, editor of the "Canadian Tax News", a Coopers & Lybrand publication. Donald Huggett is certainly one of Canada's most expert tax authorities, and he says:

> I have specialized in tax work for almost 30 years, and the law is now incomprehensible to me in quite a few cases. It is, in my view, quite unconscionable to have a law that affects almost every adult Canadian and which is understood by only a handful.

I want to suggest that the Members of this House now debating this Bill, including myself, in large measure do not completely understand the Bill, not by a long shot. I want to say that almost every Canadian does not understand the Bill, including chartered accountants and lawyers who specialize in tax problems. We have a situation where we are trying to make the economy of our country grow and produce and increase in size, and we burden that economy with legislation that is incomprehensible to most people, that is contradictory in many cases, that has no general over-all thrust to it, and that is really difficult for anyone to understand on a philosophical basis, let alone any other basis.

What is it doing? I suggest this legislation is totally antiproductive. It is causing people to go into what is called the black economy. People cannot understand the Bill, so why should they pay the tax in the first place? What they do is trade one good or service for another, my carpentry work for your dental work. This is going on to a greater and greater extent all the time. After this Bill passes, it will go on even more. That is the situation this Bill creates.

Let me give one example. We have the new 12.5 per cent tax on the distribution of corporate profits after the 1982 corporate year. What has happened? A great number of people who have small businesses have stripped out to private holding companies their pre-1982 surpluses so that they can pay those out without attracting the 12.5 per cent tax. More important, there is no longer any point in a small-businessman creating a surplus within his company to build the company. The effect of the 12.5 per cent distribution tax will put him in exactly the same position as though he earned the money in a personal way.

The Government says that is equitable, but the fact is that what we have been trying to do in taxation all along is to get small businesses to grow. What this statute does is prevent small businesses from growing. If small business takes advantage of the small business limit and lets the surplus grow, does anyone think that a small business will pay the 12.5 per cent distribution tax? Not unless they are really stuck or make a mistake.

What will happen is that the surplus will never be paid out, so the tax will never be paid. If the tax is never paid, there is no income tax paid by the proprietor which is attributable to his receipt of dividends. The Government will lose not only the tax on the dividends but will lose the build-up of the small business and never get the 12.5 per cent tax. That surplus will be leached out in some other fashion.

The Minister's officials know how this is done, as does the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières). However, they have not communicated that to the Minister of Finance and his officials. The truth is that his officials are all from the ivory tower. They do not understand how business works. They do not understand the motivation of people. They produced this absolutely ridiculous legislation that will hamper, hurt and hinder the development of this country and its small-business community, with no revenue gain for the country whatsoever.

The Minister says it is too difficult to simplify the Income Tax Act. He says we live in a difficult world and therefore we must have difficult statutes. He says that when we pass an Act and give a benefit, we create a loophole so we have to have anti-loophole sections, anti-anti-loophole sections and anti-anti-anti-loophole sections, until the Act is a foot thick, with rulings that run seven days from Sunday, almost all of which are incomprehensible.

We really do not need to have that condition. Is it necessary that Parliament be subjected to a statute that is so complicated that Members of Parliament, the accounting profession and the legal profession cannot read it? The Members of the Government who try to enforce the statute and the courts cannot read it. Is that really necessary? I say it is not.

Is there any reason why this Minister and this Government cannot appoint a task force committee of sensible people who are elected to this House, many with a good business background, representing constituents who are not from the ivory tower? They could go through this Act and change the system. Must we have a capital cost allowance system with 28 kinds of capital cost allowance?

Can we not integrate corporate and personal taxes so that we do not need to have various kinds of surpluses? Can we not have a situation where you either pay personal tax as your corporate tax or pay it as personal tax? It really does not matter. Can we not integrate personal and corporate income tax?

Do we really need to have tax on capital gains in view of the fact that the total receipt by the federal and provincial Governments from capital gains this year will probably be less than a billion dollars in all? Are the problems and complications in terms of reserves, all that we have heard about—annuities, evaluations, valuation dates and appraisers—all that necessary? Does any of that make Canada grow and build again? Do we really need some of the provisions in the Income Tax Act, bearing in mind that the purpose of taxation is to raise sufficient money for the legitimate purposes of the state in such a fashion that the goose does not hiss too much and continues to lay the golden eggs?

Speaking of the golden egg, we have seen what has happened to the economy of this country since the famous budget of November 12. The Minister may say that the problems of the economy are world wide, but it is strange that they are greater in Canada, and that Canada's performance in moving ahead is worse than that of 24 countries in the OECD. I suggest it is the ineptness expressed in Bill C-139 and in the budgets we have had that have been largely responsible for the lack of golden eggs being laid by our goose, the economy of Canada, a Canada to which we all belong, which we cherish and want to go forward.

In section after section, instead of wanting to make the country grow, this Government has shot itself in the foot. How can you expect people to invest if at the same time you take the capital cost allowance and cut it in half in the year when it is needed most? If a man buys a piece of machinery in order to improve the productivity of his plant, what does this Government do? It says that even though he has to pay for the machinery this year, he will not have as much tax allowance, tax holiday or tax deferral in the first year of purchase as was the case previously. In other words, the Government does not want him to buy more new equipment and be more productive. How does that work? How does it help the country grow? It does not.

The Government may pick up an extra billion dollars in revenue through corporate taxes, but when you look at the Government's own forecast for capital investment in real terms, it is down 8 per cent this year over last year and 6 per cent over the year before. As a result of that budget, capital acquisitions of a depreciable nature by companies in this country are down at least 14 or 15 per cent. That kind of capital cost acquisition would have attracted the full capital cost allowance. Is there not some relationship between the capital cost allowance provided for in the old system and that now provided for, indicating that this reduction in the purchasing of capital equipment is taxed induced? I suggest there is.

Dealing with the MURB problem now, the Minister was worried that people were using deferred income arrangements to make themselves wealthy while building fancy apartment houses; therefore, these terrible things should be stopped. But rather than stop that type of action, which he could have, he decided to stop all soft costs. What is a "soft cost"? It is interest expended while you are getting a project going. If you want to make a very major capital expansion of a factory, you have to start spending money today on its plan and on the architects. Pretty soon you have to spend money to clear the land and to start building. It may be a two-year project in the course of building and in many cases all of that money has to be borrowed. Up until now, those who did that were entitled to deduct from their other income the interest spent in creating the project. Naturally, they were entitled to do that. That is the business way of doing things. But this budget says that under no circumstances can you deduct your soft costs from your other income unless you happen to be in the business of an apartment builder who can deduct it from his apartment income.

A man who wants to expand his factory has to borrow money for the course of construction and cannot deduct that interest from his business profits. He has to capitalize it. I say to you, sir, that in the case of a person who wants to expand his manufacturing potential, this tax provision, is costing him 20 per cent to 25 per cent more, and this is the kind of thing which is contained in Bill C-139.

The Bill is a disaster. It is anti-productive. The Government's attitude is anti-productive. It does not matter what the Minister says; what matters is what he is doing. If he really believed what he said in his economic statement speech, he would not have included this provision. But it is there because his bureaucrats do not understand how the business community works.

With respect to the matter of capital formation, for a long time there was a provision that if somebody sold a capital asset they could purchase an IAAC and defer the tax. They would have to invest the money. They would have to pay the tax eventually, but they would invest the money.

Second, there was a provision where people were encouraged to buy insurance. Somebody said, "Look, they are getting a tax advantage if they buy insurance; they are getting a tax advantage if they buy an annuity"—because you do not pay tax on the earned income derived from this type of investment as you go. You only pay the tax when income from the annuity or the deferred investment comes into your pocket. Therefore, you are supposed to receive a benefit. This kind of investment was building capital assets in Canada and was making money available for new investment. This Bill has shot the country in the foot by depriving it of that new capital available for investment.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I believe there are elements in that speech which are very disappointing. Similar comments were made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) and the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse). We have heard three speakers this morning deliberately try to confuse the application of tax laws and the general state of the economy. For example, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) claims that a company will not buy new equipment because of changes in the capital cost allowance. That bald statement came from the Hon. Member as if somehow there is an economic environment in the country today which otherwise would warrant the purchase on a wide scale of new equipment. Yet we have heard from all kinds of groups that that is not true.

I would like the Hon. Member to focus in a little more on the distinction between the tax law, fair tax laws, and the general state of the economy. Could he now tell us why so many people in front of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs told us that the capital cost allowance will not stimulate or depress equipment sales because the state of the economy does not warrant such equipment sales at all? Perhaps he could explain to us why witnesses told us that when he is ready to stand up here and make a claim quite to the contrary?

Mr. Blenkarn: The Parliamentary Secretary must have been at a different committee hearing than I was. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary has his minutes. I suppose I could flip through mine and quote to him chapter and verse from my good friend, John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, Coopers & Lybrand, and other witnesses who were before us, as to how serious the capital cost allowance situation is.

I will particularly refer him to one witness from Newfoundland speaking on behalf of the construction industry. That witness indicated how valuable the capital cost allowances were in terms of making it possible to pay for equipment. The Parliamentary Secretary will recall that this particular witness indicated that normally they would lease the equipment for the year. Then, if they had a pretty good year, they would buy the equipment. They would buy it because of the capital cost allowance. They could take advantage of the lease and they would get that piece of equipment. The witness explained that with this particular change, that type of thing was not taking place at all. The equipment was being sent back because of the nature of the capital cost allowance. Why spend the money up front? Equipment would only be bought if it was absolutely needed and not, perhaps, on the basis that you could use it in the next construction year.

Mr. Fisher: I have just a brief follow-up on that point, Mr. Speaker. The key phrase in the Hon. Member's reply was "when they had a pretty good year". In other words, when the economy is operating at a faster pace than it is at the moment, people would exercise that kind of judgment. But they are not going to exercise that kind of judgment when the economy is slowed down.

The Hon. Member made an issue about simplifying the Income Tax Act. Really, what he is saying is that simplification means "Don't tax". That comes out very clearly in his comments on the capital gains tax. What he is saying is, "Clean up the Act and all these other complexities"; but what he really means is, "Why are we bothering with capital gains tax at all?"

The example of the Hon. Member is typical of what many people really mean when they talk about simplifying the tax Act. I would refer him to the testimony of the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants and of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, both of whom denied that simplifying the tax Act would mean reducing it to the point where an average guy like myself, who is not a lawyer or an accountant, could read it and understand it. It is too complicated for that. And those complexities have come about because special treatment has been asked for and received. People who need to know about the tax Act understand those complexities.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would go back to the question of "simplicity" which he raised earlier, along with the Hon. Member for South Shore. The point raised was misleading because people are not going to be able to read that Act. What they are going to be able to do is learn those parts of the Act which apply directly to them. Perhaps the Hon. Member would reflect a little on the Committee's discussion about that point and give us his observations in a little better light. When he raised his comments on capital gains, he was not talking about simplicity, he was saying "Don't tax us".

• (1240)

Mr. Blenkarn: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary is lacking in understanding of his responsibilities, and this House would be lacking in a responsible attitude if it said do not tax at all. We have certain obligations to perform and that requires fair taxation. But any tax system which is so complex that it deters the collection of taxes is wrong.

I would like to read into the record a paragraph on page 118:5 of the report of the Committee, the top paragraph, if my hon. friend would like to take a look at it:

> While the complexity of the law is understandably a reflection of the complexity of economic reality, it does tend to create uncertainty, to add substantial administrative costs, and to erode public confidence. These in turn, would encourage tax non-compliance and undermine the very cornerstone of the Canadian tax system, namely the self-assessment principle.

I say to my friend that it cannot be so complicated that this Parliament and Members in Committee cannot deal with it. We have to make it so that we can understand it and the public generally can understand it, so that taxes can be collected as required without the needless complexity we have here.

Mr. Taylor: I would like to make a comment, Mr. Speaker, on this capital cost allowance. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Fisher) is, to put it bluntly, talking through his hat when he says there is no practical application and that it has not hurt the economy or sales. In one town in my constituency there were seven cancellations of combine orders. This can be documented. They had ordered the combines, and when this budget came about they cancelled them. That is one town. Is that not hurting the economy? I asked one of the Liberal Members the other day, why would you buy a combine in January, February or March? They buy it naturally and logically in the fall. Then the Government brings in a program to cut the capital cost allowance in half. There is something wrong with that program.

There is a definite effect on the economy: it has reduced sales and cost the country jobs. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North better check with some of the farmers and machine companies if he is going to continue to say these things. He is not factual at all. It has hurt the country, and make no mistake about it.

Miss MacDonald: He does not know what a combine is.

Mr. Fisher: Well, I defer, Mr. Speaker, to the judgment of a Member from a rural area. I am not going to tell him what goes on in his riding as I, frankly, do not come from a rural riding, so I accept his observation. But I caution him on another aspect of the point that he has raised and the one that the Hon. Member of Mississauga South pursued. There is a whole tax industry at work in this country which encourages business people to make tax-related decisions rather than profit or economically-related decisions. There is a whole industry at work, and when Hon. Members raise the line of thought they have raised, they are encouraging that kind of behaviour.

I ask the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) why somebody would buy a combine in December. I do not know; I do not come from a farm. It seems to me that when you have snow on the ground and no wheat, you should not buy a combine because you are going to be paying the carrying charges for that combine until you can use it. Now, I do not know but I ask the Hon. Member to explain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions has expired and the Chair now recognizes the Hon. Member for Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, although there are nearly 300 pages of this Bill which contain a wide range of changes to the Income Tax Act, we should not be misled into thinking that the Bill represents any fundamental overhaul of our income tax system. Yet fundamental reform is what we need.

In opening the debate on December 13, the Minister said that the Bill represents a substantial structural change in the system. I dispute that, Mr. Speaker. Canada needs a tax system which supports and promotes the basic objectives of our society, and we need a tax system which is fair and, at least in its broad outline, can be understood by the general taxpayer. Now, I admit that what the Parliamentary Secretary said has some validity, that there are certain sections which are naturally technical, but the broad outline should be able to be understood by the ordinary taxpayer.

Because our society is always changing, we must from time to time update our laws to take account of these changing conditions. But this has not happened for a long time and is not happening today. One of the reasons for that is detailed in Colin Campbell's book "The Canadian Senate: A Lobby from Within". He points out that as one of its most basic functions the Senate acts to protect the business community from any excess of democratic or egalitarian sentiment. Perhaps if Canadians ever get serious about tax reform their first act should be the abolition of the Senate, which almost invariably acts as the protector of property in opposition to the interests of the broad base of society.

Canada today needs a tax system that will work toward the following basic objectives. Number one, full employment. New Democrats believe that the total resources of society have to be mobilized in support of full employment. At a time when technological change combines with changing world markets to eliminate thousands of traditional jobs, we need to devote our best resources to solving the problems of unemployment. This will not happen, as the Tories say, by unleashing the private sector. That way lies chaos, and perhaps the best example of that is in the American truckers' strike where deregulation over the last few months has led to such cut-throat competition that thousands of small, independent truckers today are on the verge of bankruptcy.

Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, the Tories are so obsessed with the survival of the fittest ethic that they should consider who is fittest to survive in today's world. Perhaps even the Tories could conclude that the characteristic most needed for survival in today's world is co-operation, and that is just as true of individuals, communities and nations as it is of political parties. I fear that the Tories will be rather late in learning that.

Our tax system, Mr. Speaker, should facilitate community and national co-operation for such basic services as health care, pensions for senior citizens, Family Allowance, higher education, community and national security, the elimination of regional disparities and a sound economy. Furthermore, our taxes have to support our Government for regulation and policing of such areas as the environment and foreign investment. Our tax system should support and work toward these objectives. All Members of the House would agree with the need for fairness in our tax system, but we do not all agree on what is fair. New Democrats believe that the fairest system of taxation is a progressive income tax built on the basic concept that a buck is a buck, regardless whether it is wages or capital gain. Tax incentives should be seen as tax expenditures and subject to annual review by Parliament, the same as other expenditures, and they should be tied to performance.

In the past few years we have seen a trend whereby more and more of the tax burden has been shifted from corporations to individual taxpayers. In 1952, 53.7 per cent of tax revenue came from corporations. By 1972 this had shrunk to 26.6 per cent. For individuals, however, the process was reversed. In 1952 they paid 46.3 per cent of total tax revenue, but in 1972 that had increased to 73.3 per cent. There was a slight improvement in the balance by 1980 when 30.5 per cent of tax revenue came from corporations and 69.4 per cent came from individuals. The broad, basic imbalance continued, however.

The tax system should not only be fair, it should be understandable. In the explanatory notes to the Bill there is a section entitled "Death of a Taxpayer". That has a rather literary ring to it, reminiscent of Miller's "Death of a Salesman". When Willy Loman, the salesman, died, one of his sons said that he never knew who he was. If the taxpayer never quite knew who he was, usually there was a number that helped him get by—registration number, social insurance number, UIC claim number and so on. I am certain that the taxpayer never knew all the taxes he was paying, or did he know about all the possible exemptions, reductions and loopholes available to those with enough money to hire tax lawyers or accountants. He may have heard of the over 700 Canadians who had incomes of over $100,000 per year who never paid any income tax at all and wondered how they got away with it. His tax always seemed to be deducted at source. There is material in the title "Death of a Taxpayer" for some promising young Canadian writer to write a novel or a play. I gladly donate the idea.

The Bill before us does not begin to meet our basic objectives or our national needs of being fair and understandable. Rather than a fundamental overhaul of the tax system, this Bill is a thing of shreds and patches. On the coast we would call this "gunnysack" legislation because it seems as if everything is dumped together. One exemption is tied to another with a little bit of wire here and a loophole is patched with a bit of chewing gum there. The whole thing is gunnysack legislation.

In his opening remarks the Minister spoke of the need to end uncertainty, but in the last 18 months the Government has contributed a great deal to uncertainty in the tax system. In the last few weeks, nothing has contributed more to that uncertainty than the various kites flown by different Ministers. The latest and worst example occurred on January 2, when the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), who is also responsible for the status of women, spoke on the TV program "Question Period" of eliminating the spousal exemption. On that program she made the following statement:

> When we look at the whole system of family benefits, where are we going? One of the things that I think we are going to have to take a serious look at is the whole question of spousal deduction. What is happening in our soceity today is that women—as I say, 42 per cent of them are in the work force, and yet we are allowing a spousal deduction which I consider enourmous—it will be $3,300 this year—to slip out of our hands when, in fact, those families who are able to use the spousal deduction are up at the top end of the income scale. It's only the more affluent families in our society that allow a woman to stay at home, and I feel that we should examine that and perhaps somewhere down the line re-channel some of that into where I think the critical areas are, in child care.

I wonder where the Minister has been. She does not seem to understand the average family today. Her later retractions and attempts to clarify this have only increased the uncertainty that Canadians feel. Ordinary Canadian families do not think that they need to be shafted by the Minister of State for Mines.

In his opening remarks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) also said that he wants the Bill passed as soon as possible so that income tax returns can be processed and mailed out. Nobody knows better than we in the New Democratic Party the necessity of getting Government cheques out promptly to the ordinary people. There have been delays in processing superannuation cheques. Last week I had a letter from a constituent who complained that the last cheque received was dated December 19. The Government deliberately withheld those cheques as a form of blackmail, Mr. Speaker, and we do not want to see the same thing happen with income tax returns. On the other hand, this legislation is too important to be pushed through. The Government should forget its attempts at blackmail. Income tax returns should be mailed out. After all, the reduced Family Allowance cheques were mailed before the House had the opportunity to deal with the legislation.

In the few minutes remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I want to concentrate on a couple of things that I think are most harmful to ordinary Canadians. The Minister said that the Bill is based on the principle that the Canadian tax system is better off with lower tax rates applied to a broader income base. I am sure all of us, and certainly all New Democrats, would agree with that as a general principle. But the way to broaden the base is surely to increase employment at decent wages. The Bill does nothing to broaden the base in that way; in fact, its effect is quite the opposite. The Bill broadens the base by capping the indexation of personal exemptions and then lowers the marginal tax rate for people at the upper end of the spectrum.

The entire six and five program has had the effect of driving down the real incomes of ordinary Canadians. We have had to oppose the cuts imposed by six and five on wages of public sector workers, Old Age Security, pensions for public servants and Family Allowances. Even without the capping of indexation for income tax exemptions, these measures will result in the removal of $1.16 billion from the pockets of ordinary Canadians and from the economy. The Minister admitted the need for some stimulation in the economy, but he continues to depress it with the six and five program.

The partial deindexing of personal exemptions will, in effect, be a tax increase of $1.7 billion in 1983-84. As with other aspects of six and five, this will penalize lower income people at a proportionately higher rate than higher income people.

A married taxpayer with two dependent children and an income of $20,000 per year will face a 21.7 per cent tax increase. The same taxpayer with an income of $100,000 per year will pay an increase of only 3.2 per cent. In a similar manner, the lower marginal tax rate will result in a real tax decrease for those in the upper income bracket.

Taxpayers with a taxable income of $133,440 and over per year will have their marginal tax rate brought down from 43 per cent to 34 per cent. Those with taxable incomes under $11,120 per year will receive no reduction at all in the marginal tax rate. They also suffer from the de-indexing program.

In short, Mr. Speaker, we oppose the Bill because it perpetuates and increases inequalities in the rate of taxation. It is not fair, and it does not address the fundamental problems of our society, which is the need for full employment. And certainly, Mr. Speaker, it will not result in a more understandable tax system.

THE ECONOMY

HIGH RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN GASPÉ

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, many Members have described the tragic economic situation in their ridings. I can inform the House that I am not very proud of the performance of the Government of Canada as far as the people of Gaspé are concerned, because we win the gold medal for the highest unemployment rate.

The labour force participation rate is extremely low. Chronic unemployment and a total lack of job opportunities for years and years explain the fact that many people are no longer part of our manpower statistics.

The unemployment rate is exceptionally high in Gaspé, where it was four times the national average in 1981. Unfortunately, this trend is continuing, and the present situation is becoming worse than critical. The most realistic forecasts are for 70 per cent unemployment, by far the highest unemployment rate of any riding in Canada.

Statistics Canada has classified Gaspé as a district that is about to "take off" in the economic sense. Madam Speaker, forestry and mining employ more than 30 per cent of our workers. However, the sawmills at Marsoui, Cap-Chat and Grande-Vallée are closed, and the newsprint plant in Chandler is not operating at full capacity. Now that the Madeleine Mines have closed and Gaspé Mines in Murdochville have decreased their activities, more than 80 per cent of workers in the forestry and mining industries are out of work.

If the situation continues, the entire Gaspé area is heading for an economic and social catastrophe in 1983—

Madam Speaker: Order, order. The minute and a half allowed the Hon. Member has now expired.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CONTAMINATION OF NIAGARA RIVER AND LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, the Canadian Minister of the Environment (Mr. Roberts) said the other day that the S-Area Dump on the American side of the Niagara River poses a greater threat to Canadian waters than any other United States landfill uncovered to date. At least four million Canadians and one million Americans use the waters of the Niagara River and Lake Ontario as a source of drinking water, making this perhaps the most serious environmental problem facing his Department.

When the extent of the contamination of the Love Canal was first made known, the United States Environmental Protection Agency became involved at an early date and began remedial work. That kind of remedial action was not so speedy with the Hyde Park or now the S-Area Dump; in fact the EPA is dragging its heels.

The Minister plans to visit the area some day. Well, some day is not good enough. Will he not plan to lead an all-Party representation to this area now, take it out of Party politics and treat the problem with the urgency it deserves? About 225,000 tonnes of chemical wastes are stored in the area and are leaking into the Niagara River. Can the Minister honestly and knowingly say that there is no present danger to Canadians?

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—EFFECT OF CHANGES ON QUEBEC FARMERS

Mr. Gaston Gourde (Lévis): Madam Speaker, there is not going to be a pork war because of the changes in the Crow rate. At the present time, western pork is not being brought to Quebec markets, although the selling price in the East is about $2 more than in the West. The reason is quite simple: The cost of shipping 100 pounds of pork meat from Calgary to Montreal is $8.51, which means a difference in price of $6.51 per 100 pounds. Under the new policy, western producers will be able to save on the cost of feeding their livestock which, according to the Department of Agriculture, will be $3.17 per 100 pounds in 1985-86. However, by that time, the cost of shipping meat will have increased from $8.51 to $11.02, which still leaves a difference of $5.84. The cost of shipping from West to East will therefore continue to favour the competitive position of Quebec's pork producers.

It will, in fact, be practically impossible and certainly not worthwhile to ship pork from Calgary to Montreal, short of wanting to go bankrupt.

I would therefore suggest that Quebec farmers put the question to our political smart alecks, who are implying that the exact opposite will happen. This is the real challenge: to bring out the truth.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—FORCED EVACUATION OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, since January 17 when the Government of Nigeria ordered the evacuation of some two million to three million people who had come to that country from neighbouring nations, the world has witnessed one of the great human tragedies of all time. Scenes of brutality, forced marches, overcrowding of ships, and starvation have filled our television screens. Protests and appeals have been directed to the Government of Nigeria by heads of churches and heads of Governments all around the world, denouncing an action that not only inflicts tremendous suffering on millions of men, women and children, but also destabilizes neighbouring countries.

The Canadian Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is a senior Commonwealth leader, but when asked what protest Canada had made to the Government of Nigeria, he merely shrugged, "Do you know the answer, I do not", reminiscent of his earlier famous quote: "Where's Biafra?", when dealing with the same country.

Surely as Canadians we have a right to expect that the Canadian Prime Minister will exercise whatever influence he has within the Commonwealth, and directly on the Government of Nigeria, to convey the abhorrence which Canadians feel over this forced migration, rather than display his indifference to an inhuman act which has shocked people of every race, colour, creed, religion and country—

Madam Speaker: Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN HAMILTON, ONT.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, last week the federal and provincial Governments jointly announced their job aid programs for Ontario. Hamilton was not among the recipients. This is the same city in which the Steel Company of Canada has approximately a third of its employees unemployed, Dominion Foundries and Steel similarly has about a third of its employees unemployed, International Harvester has virtually closed and is considering moving its computer operation to the United States, Ontario Hydro has decided to move a major part of its operations out of Hamilton, United Steel Car has hardly a soul working in its plant, and now, to add insult to injury, the federal Government has decided to move the Oceanographic Department from inland waters at Hamilton to Quebec City. Why, I wonder. Patronage, perhaps?

Close to 20 per cent of the people of Hamilton who are eligible for work are unemployed. I ask the Government to answer some questions. Why is Hydro moving? Why is the International Harvester computer operation going to the United States? Why is the Government moving its Oceanographic Department from Hamilton to Quebec City? Why is the Government not prepared to go ahead now with the placing of the orders which will ultimately be needed for the revitalization of the railroads of Canada, and thereby put people back to work in the City of Hamilton, people who are currently desperately looking for employment? I put to the Government, is it either incompetence or patronage—

Madam Speaker: Order.

GILSON REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Marcel Dionne (Chicoutimi): Madam Speaker, I merely wish to point out to the House that personally, I think the coalition movement in Quebec was far too quick in getting off the ground with respect to the Gilson Report. The House is aware that this report is a working paper that was requested for the purpose of looking at all the drawbacks and advantages of a rate system for the movement of grain in Canada. The Canadian people, and especially people in Quebec who joined the coalition movement, should understand that the Gilson Report was a working paper, that it will be tabled in the House and that subsequently, the House will have to refer it to committee for consideration. Madam Speaker, the committee will have to meet with groups in order to hear their grievances, and subsequently make decisions. We on this side of the House, very much aware of the recommendations made by the Gilson Report, formed a working group last fall within the Quebec Caucus, for the purpose of giving further consideration to the theories formulated in this document.

• (1410)

Madam Speaker, I would like to add that the Quebec Caucus, mainly through its Members, has always been very attentive to the needs of agriculture in Quebec, and in this connection, in 1976—

Madam Speaker: Order!

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT AMONG YOUNG PEOPLE

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, concern for the unemployed has been voiced on a number of occasions. However, the heart of the matter, the young people, hardly ever receive enough consideration. Those aged 15 to 24 shoulder more than three-quarters of the over-all decline in employment and lose jobs at the rate of 20.9 per cent, against the national average of 12.8 per cent. There are 600,000 young Canadians out of work.

These are not just mere statistics as the Liberal Government appears to view the matter. In human terms this implies tragedy. A baby-boom generation turned into a lost generation, disillusionment, frustration, the feeling of helplessness and social injustice, lost time and lost capacity for productivity are the cost that the young generation pays for the economic blunders of the Government.

Canada is aging. By the year 2031 we will have one pensioner for every two workers. It is imperative that the post-war generation be now given the chance to build up the economy to provide for their future when they retire. Yet the job creation programs, of the Government are less than a drop in the bucket in comparison to the ever increasing rate of unemployment.

I urge the Government to stop wasting Canada's greatest resource—the large number of young, educated and talented people who have everything it takes to meet the cultural and technological challenges of the present day and the future, were they only given a chance to meet these challenges head on.

SUPPORT FOR LEGISLATION TO ASSIST FARMERS IN FINANCIAL DIFFICULTIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, last week producers representing the Canadian Farmers Survival Association were in Ottawa bringing a tough message to parliamentarians—act soon to help farmers in trouble with the banks, or face a severe crisis this spring when farmers approach the banks for money to plant their crops.

They want to see the Private Member's Bill, C-653, which was proposed by the Hon. Member for Lambton-Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson), either passed by the House or tacked on to C-12, the Bankruptcy Bill, and brought into law.

Since we often forget about lobby groups after they have gone home, I want to remind Members of the House today that the Association wants an arbitration procedure put in place that will encourage a voluntary arrangement between the farmer and his creditors, that will prevent foreclosure while negotiations are taking place or an agreement is in force, and that will impose an agreement on both parties in cases of dispute and reduce the debt without the consent of the creditor if deemed necessary.

Farm bankruptcies jumped again last year. However, this year's farm income projections suggest that even worse times lie ahead. Realized net farm income in 1983 for Canada is predicted to be 11 per cent below the level of 1981. For Saskatchewan, net income for 1983 is projected to be two-thirds of the level in 1981, which is the lowest since 1973. The situation demands action. Our Party would be pleased to pass Bill C-653 in one sitting day. I ask the Government to give Bill C-653 a chance by calling it soon for debate—

Madam Speaker: Order.

MEDICAL CARE

THREAT OF RESIGNATION BY EDMONTON HEART SURGEON

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, a disturbing CBC report emanating out of Edmonton indicated that a surgeon specializing in cardiac surgery is planning to leave the country since he is frustrated by the failure of his hospital to provide him with adequate equipment and support facilities to carry out important operations in his specialty safely and effectively.

Cardiac surgery in children deals with reconstructive and reparative procedures correcting a variety of congenital malformations of the heart and large blood vessels. These operations are physiological for the most part, restoring normal anatomy and function of these organs and thus assuring a normal lifespan.

These operations require not only a well trained skilful surgeon but a team effort of medical and paramedical specialists as well as appropriate nursing staff. Not only in Edmonton but in many of the large communities, with teaching hospitals staffed with well trained and knowledgeable specialists, facilities are sadly lacking to carry out ever-increasing sophisticated procedures to improve the quality of life of our Canadian citizens.

In order that Canada may continue to remain in the forefront of world medicine, those charged with formulating the proposed Canada Health Act must provide optimum conditions for medical care, particularly for our doctors with specialty training, lest the system fall into mediocrity, and Canadians are deprived of the benefits of modern advances in the field of medicine and surgery.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NEW EMPLOYMENT EXPANSION AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DIRECT MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who, I am sure, will know that there are at least 1.6 million Canadians without jobs.

Last October the Government introduced the NEED job creation program for people who would be running out of unemployment insurance benefits. At that time the Minister was repeatedly urged to step in personally and speed up the process of getting jobs approved, otherwise it would be bogged down in red tape and the jobs would not be created. That is exactly what has happened. After three months only 4,000 jobs out of a promised 60,000 have been created. Why did the Minister not take these warnings to heart? Why has he not stepped in personally in the last few months and done something to bring about the creation of these jobs, rather than have only 4,000 out of 60,000 created after that three-month period?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is obviously trying to make nothing more than a political point. She knows full well that over the past two and one-half to three months I, Members of my caucus, and Members of the Government have spent a great deal of time working to ensure that the job-creation programs would be effectively implemented. Proof of this is that the original target date for beginning the NEED Program was February 1 and we were, in fact, able to achieve implementation beginning January 1. At that time we had targeted for 500 jobs being authorized per week. We exceeded that limit. We are now targeting 1,000 jobs per week and we will exceed that limit.

Furthermore, we have been able to sign agreements with the Provinces which have added over an additional $200 million to the Program.

Therefore, in terms of personal intervention, we have worked very hard to put the Program into place, and to gain the co-operation of the Provinces and the municipalities and the private sector. I would say that all this effort contrasts quite dramatically with what we heard from the Hon. Member on that side, which was nothing but a bunch of words.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, what the Minister fails to recognize is that there are 55,000 Canadians a month who are running out of unemployment insurance benefits. That is 165,000 people without benefits since that Program was announced in October.

Is the Minister satisfied with the Government's record of providing 4,000 jobs for those 165,000 people? Is he telling us that is what the NEED Program was directed for in the first place? Was that the Government's goal?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Government's goal that was announced originally in the Program was for 60,000 jobs over the 18-month period of the Program. Because of the additional amount of money that we have been able to solicit and add to this part of it, we are now estimating that we can produce 80,000 jobs through that Program which is a direct result of the kinds of interventions and initiatives we have taken to make the Program work.

I would suggest, rather than getting up in the House and simply being critical and negative, that the Hon. Member should go back to her riding and start recruiting the private sector firms and municipalities to put applications in to make the Program work.

Miss MacDonald: I want to tell the Minister that I have been in my riding. There are 6,100 people out of work there and only nine of them have received jobs from this Program. Only nine.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Miss MacDonald: I want to tell the Minister that 200 people in my riding run out of benefits every month.

PROCESSING OF PROJECTS

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, there are a number of projects pending under the NEED Program in Kingston and the Islands. Can I have the Minister's assurance today—right now—that those projects which are pending will be processed within the next two weeks, will give jobs to people within the next two weeks, and will not be delayed by red tape for another two months?

• (1420)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the fact is that we have been working on a schedule of ten days' turnaround time from the period we receive an application from a municipality or from a provincial government office or from a private sector firm. If the Hon. Member, fulfilling her responsibilities as a Member, will go back into her riding and obtain those applications coming forward—

Miss MacDonald: They are held up in your office.

Mr. Axworthy: —I will assure her that they will be approved on time.

Mr. Trudeau: Too slow for him. You've got to work.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ST. CATHARINES-NIAGARA AREA

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I want to assure him that it is not a particularly happy circumstance to rise here representing an area which, it has been said, has the largest urban rate of unemployment. More than one of every five workers is unemployed. That amounts to 21.7 per cent, almost a full percentage point over the unemployment rate of the city of Windsor, which received the bulk of the ILAP moneys. I do not want to hear, once again, an outline of the programs in existence and the benefits arising therefrom, because in the St. Catharines-Niagara area there are 33,000 persons unemployed, 15,000 more than two years ago, 11,000 more than one year ago, a job disappearance of—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. Does the Hon. Member have a question?

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I certainly do, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Now.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): I just want to point out that, despite the comments—

Madam Speaker: Now.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): —of the Minister, there has been a disappearance of 1,750 jobs per month over the last two years, and my question to the Minister is—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. When the Speaker takes the trouble to intervene to ask a Member, "Will the Member now put his question?" the Speaker really means it, and is only preserving the time of other Hon. Members.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, my question to the Minister is: without outlining the list of existing programs, what does he propose to do for the 33,000 people who are now out of work and are asking for assistance from the Salvation Army and the UAW in a kitchen assistance program that they are receiving from a voluntary service agency in that city?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is slightly contradictory in saying that he does not want to hear about what the existing programs can provide to help those people in need. My point is that we have programs in existence which are designed to work in different parts of the country which have been deeply hit by the recession.

Miss MacDonald: Not in mine.

Mr. Axworthy: They range all the way from the unemployment insurance system, which provides income security for most of those workers in his area, and for those whose benefits have elapsed we have the NEED program. Like other Members of Parliament, I believe it is part of his responsibility to go into his region to work with his municipalities and private firms in the area, to develop projects which we can then review and approve, so that we can provide a work alternative to those people. Madam Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not want to hear about the existing programs—

Mr. Deans: Why don't you put your bureaucracy to work?

Mr. Axworthy: —he obviously does not want to hear about the kind of things we are prepared to do to help.

Miss MacDonald: What are you prepared to do to help? You do not speed up one thing.

QUERY RESPECTING PURCHASE OF MACHINERY FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): The results of the existing programs are already subject to headlines. In Metropolitan Toronto, $2 million has been spent to create 153 jobs under the COED Program. The NEED Program has just been defined and explained, and it is called a "billion dollar flop".

With the number of Canadian plants which are now working at 60 per cent capacity how can it be that, in our community, Niagara College is spending $1 million or more on the acquisition of equipment, and machinery from the United States of America, rather than buying from Canadian plants where the same equipment and machinery can be acquired? Will the Minister give Canadian jobs for Canadian purposes?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would first like to comment on the Hon. Member's statement that the NEED Program is advertised as a "billion dollar flop". As we might expect, that particular quote came from a Conservative Member of Parliament. When the same Conservative Party formed the Government, it cancelled all the job creation programs which the Liberal Government had brought in and made available. Now we are hearing a very different tune. The Conservatives are calling the program a flop. The fact is that the biggest flop is what I am looking at across from me, because the Conservatives were cancelling all the job creation programs when they had the opportunity to improve them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

UNITED STATES PLANS FOR PRODUCTION OF IMPROVED CRUISE MISSILE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister may not be aware of this fact, but according to the—

Mr. Prud'homme: The Minister knows everything.

Miss Jewett: —recently presented budget of the U.S. Department of Defense, the U.S. intends to stop production of the present air launched Cruise missile in late 1983, with just 1,499 of a proposed 4,348 built, and to enter into the production of what the Defense Department calls "advanced Cruise missiles", with "stealth" and other new technologies.

In view of the fact that there is not much point in our testing, next winter, something which has gone out of production, and in view of the Minister's own statement last Thursday that he doubted if the U.S. would ever ask us to test the new "stealth" missile, will the Minister now exclude, from the framework agreement, Canadian participation in the testing of all U.S. Cruise missiles?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I remember the Hon. Member did ask about a new "stealth" missile. What is now apparent is that it is not a new "stealth" missile; rather, it is an improved version of existing missiles with various modifications, including stealth capacity. Therefore, the answer which I gave to the Hon. Member still stands. As the Hon. Member also knows, when the framework agreement is tabled in the House, she will see that there is no provision for the testing in Canada of any armed missile of any kind.

REQUEST THAT CANADA REFRAIN FROM TESTING CRUISE MISSILE

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, the Minister is quibbling with words, as usual. The common phraseology in the U.S. is "stealth missile", when referring to the new stealth technology. Indeed, a U.S. Defense Department official said that Boeing is "now scrambling to come up with a new aeronautical design to take more advantage of stealth technology". That is what we are discussing in relation to the air-launched Cruise missile. The Minister says that there will be nothing concerning this in the framework agreement. I am asking the Minister, and I wish he would answer, this question: before the agreement is signed and given the fact that the present air-launched Cruise missile is obsolete in the view of the Department of Defense, will we explicitly state our intention to exclude any Canadian participation in the testing of U.S. Cruise missiles over our country, our territory?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking me to provide a particular exclusion in the framework agreement. What she will see, when the agreement is tabled, is that it provides an over-all agreement for the testing of weapons systems which could include the Cruise missile.

When any particular weapons system, any particular weapon is proposed to be tested in Canada, that particular weapon, including the Cruise, will be the subject of a separate discussion between the Minister of National Defence and his counterpart in the United States, and will result, if agreement is reached, in a project arrangement. Therefore, it is unnecessary, in the agreement, to exclude any particular weapons system, because that is open to the Government of Canada, at any particular time, if it wishes to do so, when the project arrangement is entered into, if it is. However, I would tell the Hon. Member that it is important that there be an exclusion in the over-all agreement that at no time would Canada consider testing any armed Cruise missile over its airspace or territory.

Miss Jewett: The Minister brings in that red herring each time. If that is the way he will sell this to the Canadian public, by saying that they are not armed, believe me, it will not wash.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MOTIONS

Miss Pauline Jewett: (New Westminster-Coquitlam): The Minister has as much as admitted that we will, therefore, test what are called "stealth" missiles, Cruise missiles using stealth technology. I would like him to come right out and admit that, rather than just imply it, as he has done to get around what he said last Thursday when he stated that it was unlikely that we would be asked to do this, when he knows that we will be asked to do this.

• (1430)

I would finally like to ask the Minister, as we have asked many, many times before, since neither he nor the Prime Minister will allow us to discuss the framework agreement in this House of Commons because they do not want the Canadian public informed, since they insist upon signing it in Washington and they do not mind missiles over Canadian soil—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order. I hope we are not going to have an avalanche of speeches like we did on Friday. Friday's Question Period was a shambles. I would like Hon. Members to keep to questions.

Miss Jewett: Madam Speaker, I was not here Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Jewett: Will the Minister, in light of all this, and the confusion and the alleged misunderstanding of the Canadian public, at least, when he tables the framework agreement, make a statement on motions about it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the practice of making statements on motions has virtually disappeared in the House of Commons.

Mr. Deans: We did not stop it; you did.

Mr. MacEachen: I still repeat that observation, but I assure the Hon. Member that the umbrella framework agreement will be tabled in the House of Commons. It will be known to all Hon. Members, and all possible information will be available to all Hon. Members. When the framework agreement is tabled, Hon. Members will be totally free to ask questions on any point they wish on subsequent days.

If Members of the New Democratic Party find it of such great importance they will be able to debate the Cruise missile on one of the opposition days which will be available to them, when those days become available. Therefore, the Hon. Member has a full opportunity to select her own priorities and there will be full opportunity for questions and debate if the New Democratic Party chooses to do so.

Miss MacDonald: That is cowardly.

Miss Jewett: And a lot of garbage.

RAILWAYS

CROWSNEST PASS RATE—OPPOSITION TO ANNOUNCED CHANGES

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. As the Minister well knows, input costs for western farmers have tripled in the last decade. Energy costs are up 81 per cent since 1979, and interest rates have increased by 75 per cent to western farmers. Yet the Minister introduces a program that is going to ensure the bankruptcy of many, many western farmers.

Since the Prime Minister gave us his iron-clad guarantee that there would be no change in the Crowsnest Pass rate unless there was a consensus in western Canada amongst the farming community, I ask the Minister how he can proceed with this particular program when not only the wheat pools in the prairie Provinces, not only the provincial Governments in western Canada but, as well, the provincial Government of the Province of Quebec and many members of his own caucus are diametrically opposed to this program? How can the Minister bring this program forward at this time?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I want to rejoice first in the fact that the Conservative Government of Ontario has fully approved of this program. I want to thank the Conservative Government of Alberta which, having approved of it, said, as a matter of fact, that we did not go far enough. A number of my colleagues on the other side of the House approve of it also.

On the cost of it, I have repeated this, and I will keep on repeating it, obviously the producer of grain in the West now pays 20 per cent of the real cost of the transportation of his goods. Under this new initiative he will pay 30 per cent by 1985-86 and 60 per cent by the end of the decade, but that is less percentagewise than what he was paying in the 1950s and 1960s.

Also, I want to emphasize that the cost of transportation now represents about 2 per cent of the price of the farmer's grain. By 1985-86 it will represent about 5 per cent, and at the end of the decade it will represent 8 per cent, which is less, on a proportional basis, than what he was paying in the 1950s and the 1960s. If we go further back, in the 1940s the cost of transportation represented 17 per cent of the price of grain. So it is an adjustment that we are making now, that we had to make, because of inflation. As a matter of fact a great number of people in the West, some of them in the riding of the Member, agree that this had to be done, and it will give the farmer much more reliability and much more certainty than he had before.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, there certainly is a consensus which is growing in this country, and that is that the policy of the Minister and the Government stinks and is unacceptable.

DEVELOPMENT OF GRAIN TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. One of the fundamental problems that we have faced in western Canada has been with respect to an efficient grain transportation system. The Minister says that part of this policy is directed toward the development of that particular system.

In view of the fact that in the policy papers brought down by the Minister and in the proposed legislation there is clearly no assurance, after this burden has been put over onto the shoulders of the farmers, that there will be an efficient and effective grain transportation system—and there is no provision for penalties to the railways—what does the Minister say about the fact that he has got the whole thing "bass ackwards" and he should in fact put the system into place and then ask the farmers to pay? Why is he imposing this cost, with no assurance that there will be an efficient grain transportation system at the end of it?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, it is well known that the railways will have to give guarantees of investment and guarantees of performance.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is not in there. There is nothing for three years.

Mr. Pepin: Madam Speaker, in due course my hon. friend will know all the details, but if he talks about reliability, the farmer now has not got that reliability. He does not know if the capacity of the railways will be sufficient to carry his goods. But from now on he will have the certainty that the railways will have this capacity. He will know what price he has to pay; two times the present Crow rate in 1985-86 and five times by the end of the decade. He will know that on top of this, if inflation exceeds 6 per cent the Government will take over. There will be much more certainty in the system that will exist in the future than in the system that exists now. It may take some time for the Member to get that in his mind, but he will.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

YOUTH UNEMPLOYMENT—MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Madam Speaker, as you know, youth unemployment is running at about 21 per cent versus 13 per cent generally, and that over 600,000 young people are out of work.

History has shown many times that large Government deficits lead to inflation which in turn leads to an economic collapse. Canada over the past 14 years has proved that point once again.

I want to know, Madam Speaker, is there anyone over there, the Prime Minister, or a Member of the Cabinet, or a backbencher, who ever, over the last 14 years, has stood up and spoken against those mounting deficits, year by year.

Miss MacDonald: Obviously not.

Mr. Thacker: Precisely, Madam Speaker. Not one Liberal Member of Parliament from the Prime Minister down has ever spoken out about this huge deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thacker: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In mid-January the Minister said that the 600,000 unemployed youth under 24 could "count on quick action toward a substantial youth employment program". In late January, the same Minister told our unemployed youth "to prepare for a jobless summer". I would like the Minister to tell us which statement is true, and how many of the 600,000 young people of this country who want a job and need a job will get one?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the fact is that what I did say, speaking to students, was that we are preparing for a difficult summer because the intention of the private sector to hire young people over the summer months is substantially down. At the same time I indicated that this Government, hopefully with the co-operation of provincial governments, will provide for supplementary programs to give them further assistance. That is the fact and reality of what I have been saying.

I think it is only fair and honest to talk clearly and candidly with young people so we can find ways of working together and find solutions to the problems we face, to ensure that their talents and abilities will be effectively used.

INCOME TAX

ISSUANCE OF REFUNDS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it has been reported that the Department of National Revenue is not going to send out tax refunds for some time. They claim that they cannot issue refund cheques until the amendments to the Income Tax Act, Bill C-139, are passed by Parliament. My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, who knows that is a lie. It is simply not the case. Will the Minister consider abiding by the present legislation and direct his officials to issue tax refunds, where appropriate, based on legislation presently in place?

• (1440)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, surely the Hon. Member knows that what he is proposing does not make sense. For example, he knows that tax collections have been made on the basis of budgets that have been approved by Parliament. How would he make refunds on the basis of old legislation when the tax has been collected and rebates will be made on the basis of budgets that have been approved by this House? Surely he realizes that his proposal does not stand up.

REQUEST THAT REFUNDS BE PAID PROMPTLY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, based on the previous Minister's budgets, tax refunds were in fact given out last year to many Canadians based on legislation that was effective the day of the budget. I suspect that what we are seeing is the Minister trying to blackmail Parliament into keeping money from those who deserve it, in an effort to get Bill C-139 through the House prematurely. The people of Canada who deserve these refunds wish this money now. It is their money. The economy needs it.

The Minister is on record as wanting to stimulate the economy and to provide money for the consumers to get the recovery under way. Will he reconsider his position in light of what the previous Minister of Finance did when it came to tax returns, and take steps now to get the economy moving by allowing those Canadians who deserve refunds, and it is their money, to put that money back into circulation? Will he reconsider that, in light of the present state of the economy?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, we have just been exposed to a typical case of the hypocrisy of the NDP on these issues. They were the ones in January who were threatening to take the Government to court because some people thought we were going to limit the increase in the Old Age Pension to 6 per cent. The NDP said if we did that, which we never said we would do, they would take us to court for not respecting the laws of Parliament and acting before a law is passed by Parliament. Now the NDP wants us to act before a law has been passed by Parliament. They cannot have their cake and eat it too, every day, on every question. Unfortunately that is what the NDP has been trying to sell for decades, but I am sorry, it does not wash any more.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DISENTITLEMENT OF CLAIMANTS ATTENDING SCHOOL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I have given him notice of this question and I have discussed my concern with him. Is he in a position today to tell us whether the priorities have been adjusted in his Department with respect to unemployment insurance claimants or recipients taking their own initiative to attend school and upgrade their skills?

As the Minister knows, his Department purchases a large number of retraining positions in the colleges and permits people on unemployment insurance to attend courses. If someone takes it on his own initiative to do so, he is disentitled. Will there be an adjustment or a recognition of the priorities to improve our manpower skills and, subsequently, an adjustment in the regulations to permit people to attend school, particularly those who have no hope of getting a job in the next year?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that there is a letter in the mail to him giving him a detailed answer to the question he raised. In summary, I would simply point out that one of the difficulties in the proposal he makes is that if someone simply goes on their own to apply for a training course, that in a sense contravenes the basic formula of the Unemployment Insurance Act, namely, that in order to collect benefits you must be available for work. We waive that requirement when someone comes into an employment centre and we have record of their willingness or preparedness to take a training course. We can waive that requirement because we have foreknowledge of their interest and intent.

If someone goes on their own account and registers for a program and then applies for UI, we have not had the opportunity to do an interview to determine their eligibility or any of the other criteria. Therefore, we hold by the rule that, if they want to take a training course, they should register their intent through our employment centres so we have that on record.

ROLE OF COMMISSION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, I very much appreciate the answer of the Minister. Is he now telling us that the onus of proving ability to work or proving that there is a job will be assumed by the Commission rather than the claimant? In other words, if a person enrols in a manpower training course with the consent of the UIC, in our opinion the onus should be put on the Commission or the Canada Manpower Centre to tell the person "There is now a job for you. You have the choice of either staying in the course at your own expense and being disentitled, or leaving the course and taking the job we now have available for you". Is that what the minister is telling us, because that would make sense?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I covered that point in the correspondence, but I would again point out that when we contract courses we are not offering them directly. We usually are under a contractual agreement with a provincially run community college or other training institute. If you contract for a 13, 26 or 52-week course on behalf of a client coming through an employment centre, there has to be some intention that they will in fact fulfil the requirements. We do not want to be put in the position where people enrol for a course and then withdraw, leaving a place open which someone else may have occupied. I am pointing out that the proposal by the Hon. Member has some merit and we will look at it, but under the present administrative circumstances it would be very difficult to have it work smoothly through the system so we could ensure that the benefits under the law are being properly drawn.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

FACILITIES AVAILABLE IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the report of the inquiry into the sinking of the Arctic Explorer, which was commissioned by the Minister under the Canada Shipping Act and conducted by a judge of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland. The Minister's response to recommendation No. 5 is ambiguous to say the least. What does he intend to do about recommendation No. 5, which is the most important recommendation of the report? It very briefly states as follows:

> The adequacy of Search and Rescue facilities available to the Newfoundland region ought to be reviewed and additional ships and aircraft provided.

What does the Minister intend to do about that very critical recommendation of that impartial commission?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, as the Minister responsible for Search and Rescue, I will answer that question. The Hon. Member's question is to the point. I believe I can supply some answers to his question today. I have written to the Premier of Newfoundland concerning this issue. There have been tremendous improvements in Search and Rescue on the East Coast. In the last few years, for example, I can mention SARCUP, ELT regulations, SARSAT satellite, and the Cross Report.

As far as the Cross Report is concerned, I know the Hon. Member read it very carefully. I have read it, as I am sure the Minister of Transport has. Those recommendations which were not implemented to date are in the process of being implemented. We have accepted most of the recommendations in that report. As far as Newfoundland is concerned, according to a review, which I can send to the Hon. Member if he would like, a review conducted in our own Ministry, it states that Newfoundland and the East Coast of Canada are, in fact, well protected as far as Search and Rescue is concerned. The localities at which our facilities are situated are the optimum places, and our capabilities are excellent.

DEPARTMENTAL RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I raise these questions on the eve of the anniversary of the Ocean Ranger tragedy in which 84 lives were lost. I am prompted by the report into the sinking of the Arctic Explorer. Is the Minister telling the House that he accepts the in-house recommendations of his own Department which states as follows:

> If more resources were available, they will be more effectively used in areas other than Newfoundland.

That flies in the face of a recommendation of an impartial judicial commission set up by the Minister of Transport under the Canada Shipping Act. I want to ask the Minister a question because of the credibility that is involved here. Does he intend to go with the in-house recommendations of his own Department which is obviously trying to cover its own tracks?

• (1450)

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I have great respect for the recommendations of Judge Mahoney on this issue. I have also great respect for the Cross Report and for the in-house recommendations to which he refers. We are endeavouring to make a judgment between all of these recommendations so that we may ensure the optimum protection of the East Coast and the West Coast with the facilities and the resources available. At the moment, with the capacity and the facilities that we have, I believe the East Coast is well protected. This is a judgment of my Department. The Cross Report, in fact, does not say that we should necessarily augment, more than we are at the moment, the capabilities on the East Coast facilities.

METRIC CONVERSION

IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT OF FLOOR COVERINGS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister who signed an Order in Council setting up the Metric Commission. Mr. Dave Beckman, the Executive Director of the Metric Commission, has announced the phasing out of the Metric Commission.

In light of the fact that just a week or two ago the Metric Commission advised major department stores that they could use imperial measurement in advertising floor coverings and tile, for example, Sears, Eaton's, and the major corporate chains, would the Prime Minister look into the Order in Council which specifically states Canadian units of measurement shall not be used in advertising floor covering, and bring that Order in Council up to date with an amendment allowing for both imperial and metric measurement in the advertising of floor coverings?

Mr. David Berger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has pointed out a fact which stresses the point which our Party has tried to make consistently, which is the conversion to the metric system is a voluntary program in which over 2,000 volunteers from labour, management, and all sectors of the economy have participated. As the Hon. Member is aware, however, there are certain sectors of the economy where, for reasons of health, safety, and protection of the consumer, it has been necessary to have mandatory legislation. As far as the particular problem which the Hon. Member has raised is concerned, I am sure the Minister will be happy to look into it.

DEPARTMENT'S TREATMENT OF MERCHANTS IN VARIOUS REGIONS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is again directed to the Prime Minister, or to the Minister of Justice. Given the fact that there is another Order in Council which prohibits the sale of gasoline by the gallon, and in light of the fact that the Government, through Consumer and Corporate Affairs, has removed the seals from pumps on which they were placed in the Province of Alberta, and has dropped prosecution charges for selling carpet by the yard in Calgary, I wonder if the Minister of Justice would look into why Consumer and Corporate Affairs, through their "meter-sneakers" or "carpet-snoopers" have prosecuted merchants in the City of Toronto while closing their eyes to the merchants in the rest of Canada.

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is acting in accordance with the law, but I will take the question as notice and see whether there is any further information which I can bring to the Hon. Member's attention.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

VICTORIA OFFICE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the Minister confirm or deny that there are plans to close the DREE office in Victoria? If there are such plans, will the Minister tell the House why he is planning to close the Regional Economic Expansion Office at a time when the unemployment rate on Vancouver Island is over 17 per cent?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, when the reorganization of the Department is finalized, the offices which have been set up in Victoria, Vancouver, and Prince George will still be maintained.

GUARANTEE REQUESTED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, I am asking the Minister if he will give a definite guarantee that the office in Victoria is not going to be closed.

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I am often accused of speaking too quickly, for which I apologize, Madam Speaker. I will try to respond a little more slowly. When the reorganization of the Department is finalized, DREE will have an office in Victoria, in Vancouver, and in Prince George.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

REQUEST FOR IMPOSITION OF SURTAX ON IMPORTED POTATOES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): My question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he tell us why he refuses to recommend to the Minister of Finance, or take action himself, to impose a surtax or a tariff on American-grown potatoes being dumped on the Vancouver market?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the Hon. Member knows, Madam Speaker, that trade between our two countries, the United States and Canada, is very important, especially the potato industry, the processed product, seed product and table stock product. And it is generally in our favour.

EFFECT OF IMPORTS ON FRASER VALLEY FARMS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, is the Minister saying he is willing to have the farms of the Fraser Valley developed into industrial parks in order to preserve trade with the United States?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well that what he mentioned is not under my control. It is under the control of the provincial Government. If it wants to re-zone anything in the Fraser Valley, or any provincial Government wants to re-zone any land, it is its business, and it has been doing that in some of the area which he refers to, without any consultation with us whatsoever. That is a provincial jurisdiction. What I am saying is that we consult with the farmers, not only in the potato industry in British Columbia, but in Alberta, Manitoba, Ontario, and the rest of Canada, when we talk about using a countervailing duty or surcharge or anything to control imports.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

SIZE OF NATIONAL ACCOUNTS DEFICIT

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I wonder if the Minister could advise us, now we are within two months of the end of the fiscal year, what his national accounts deficit will be?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I would indeed hope that before the end of the fiscal year I would have an opportunity to come forward with the detailed figures in that respect. As I indicated on October 27 with respect to the borrowing requirements of the Government, it was likely that I would come back before the end of the fiscal year with additional borrowing requirements. At that time I would hope I would be able to give the up-to-date figures.

EXAMINATION OF ESTIMATES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, what new arrangements has the Minister to control expenditures? Has the Minister given any thought, when the estimates are produced, to have a special committee go over those estimates, to trim them back so we will have some type of priority with respect to Government spending, particularly at this time when we have to do so much job creation?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board will table the estimates later this month, at which time he will indicate exactly what the Government has done in that respect. I hope that when my hon. friend sees these estimates he will recognize that the Government has trimmed the estimates as much as one could without hurting jobs in the public sector, as well as jobs in the private sector. Indeed, I believe he will find, when examining those estimates, that the Government has put top priority on helping job creation in all sectors of the Canadian economy.

FISHERIES

KIRBY TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. He will know that the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is the highest of any Province, and that the fishing industry is suffering particularly badly at the moment. Plants are closed at Ramea and Fermeuse and many other locations in Newfoundland. Can the Prime Minister tell the House whether the Government has made a decision as to what assistance it is going to give to the industry, the fishermen, or the fish plants involved? Has it made a decision on the recommendations of the Kirby task force and when these decisions will be announced and acted on?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would defer to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans for an exact date, but I would predict that it is likely to be within two or three weeks.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, do I gather from the Prime Minister's remarks that a decision has been made by the Cabinet? Apparently his Minister of Fisheries and Oceans put up a cockamamie suggestion that the four major companies in the industry be nationalized and the Government would go in and own, control, and run the industry. Has that been tossed out, as it should have been? Has a decision actually been made on what is going to be done with reference to the East Coast fishery? Is that why he can now tell the House that there will be an announcement within two or three weeks? Are the decisions now made by the Cabinet?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, in this Government they are. I do not know about the Government to which the Hon. Member belonged.

MR. MURPHY—FUNDS FOR SEARCH AND RESCUE OPERATIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the three hundred and eighty-fifth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petition presented by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on Friday, February 4, 1983, and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAMPBELL (CARDIGAN)—NOTICE OF QUESTION TO BE RAISED

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Cardigan): Madam Speaker, I had intended to raise a question of privilege today and I gave you due notice. However, considering the fact that the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) is not in his seat this afternoon, I wish to reserve my right to raise my question of privilege when he is present.

MR. RIIS—COMMENT OF MR. LALONDE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege based on earlier comments made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) when, in an interchange between he and I, I remarked that the 1981 tax returns are based on present legislation and I understand from officials of Revenue Canada that they have been instructed not to process any income tax returns until new legislation is passed. I believe the Minister of Finance indicated that was his position.

Madam Speaker: Order. I was somewhat distracted when the Hon. Member started his question of privilege. However, he did send me a note during Question Period which stated that he wanted to raise a question of privilege. I assumed it flowed from today's deliberations, but he seems to be speaking of some other general problem. I must tell the Hon. Member if he has a question of privilege of that nature, that is to say, not flowing from the deliberations of today, that he would have to give me a statement about the question of privilege and raise it at another time.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, with that clarification, indeed my question of privilege does arise out of today's proceedings when the Minister of Finance indicated that the Government was unable to proceed with income tax refunds which rightfully belong to Canadians until certain legislation is passed. My position, Madam Speaker, was that year after year income tax returns are processed and refunds given based on existing legislation, as occurred in 1981. Yet I believe the Minister of Finance said it was not going to occur in 1982.

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a question of privilege. The Hon. Member is simply continuing debate, and he cannot use a question of privilege to continue debate. If he wants further clarification, he can ask further questions of the Minister.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-132

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

She said: Madam Speaker, I am introducing this motion for time allocation on Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act of 1973, because I believe it is essential that this Bill receive the approval of this House as quickly as possible. Some may say that since we sent the Family Allowance cheque of January with an increase restricted to 6 per cent, it is no longer necessary to speed up debate and pass this Bill immediately. Well, we were given legal advice, of course, to the effect that we had the authority to send cheques to mothers with the 6 per cent indexation instead of full indexation. But that does not obviate the need for parliamentary approval.

Mr. Blenkarn: Why are you using closure, then?

Miss Bégin: I will explain in a few minutes, if Hon. Members want to listen and give me a chance to speak. We will not go on, say, until December, 1983. That would not be reasonable at all. I think the earliest possible passage of this Bill in this House and the other place is essential.

Hon. Members know that families, in this case mothers, were advised in the June budget of the six and five program, and specifically for that group of Canadians we would limit indexation to 6 per cent in order that everyone does their share to fight inflation and bring it down to the figures of six and five which we gave as our objective. When inflation was 12 per cent, we said to Canadians: "Let us try and bring it down to 6 per cent in 1983". It would have been 10 per cent the next year, and we said: "Let us try and bring it down to five in the year 1984".

Now, some people would say that the television, newspaper and radio commentary which always follows and explains a budget might not have been enough to make sure everyone was aware of the Government's plans. Therefore, in the August Family Allowance cheque I sent an insert which was short, quite clear and very factual, giving all the details to make sure that everyone understood the purpose of this decision of the Government. Since that time we have had, of course, several discussions in this House.

Now, I will come to the point of why it is so urgent to pass this Bill as soon as possible. Mothers were told that to make sure we were not creating any hardship, all mothers receiving the Child Tax Credit, either in full or part, would get an additional $50 on the coming Child Tax Credit to make up for any loss of indexation in the Family Allowance for the years 1983 and 1984.

Perhaps I should continue in French because I do not know quite how to say this in English.

[Translation]

The mothers are going to benefit from the provisions of Bill C-132, because in the last seven months, since last June, inflation has already dropped so far that the mothers who receive the Child Tax Credit, that is, those who need it, will be better off under this program.

[English]

This additional $50 for all mothers receiving the Child Tax Credit—and let me point out this means two out of three mothers in Canada—is included in the Bill which follows mine, and that is why there is no reason my Bill should not be passed rapidly. It is contained in Bill C-139, an Act to amend the statute law relating to income tax. This is the main reason why any delay in passing Bill C-132 would prevent the mother receiving additional money through the Child Tax Credit in time. The forms have been sent but nothing can be paid out until Bill C-139 has been passed by the House.

• (1510)

There has been a lot of discussion on the Bill and I fail to see who could oppose it. When the Official Opposition was the Party in power, it wanted to abolish the universality of Family Allowances. That would be very dangerous, Mr. Speaker, but that Party has always wanted to do away with the program, never quite undertanding why it existed in the first place.

I think we are taking a rational approach in this Bill, and according to the mail I have received up to now, the vast majority of Canadians support it. We are saying that the country is in a difficult economic situation, as are all industrialized countries. The first objective is to fight inflation, to bring it down to 6 and 5 per cent to start with and then, as soon as possible, to lower it further. But we must not do this on the backs of those most in need, who in this case are the mothers.

Since there are many families that are single parent units, no one will get mad if all mothers with a Child Tax Credit, or a partial Child Tax Credit, receive an additional $50 to make up for the loss of full indexation of the Family Allowance. This is extremely generous, Mr. Speaker. We might have decided instead that the $50 additional provided in Bill C-139—which I hope will be passed very rapidly by the House to give that additional money to mothers—is very generous and should have been graduated to the mothers who get only a partial Child Tax Credit because the family income is over $26,000.

It is not often in today's society that children receive some benefit; it is usually given to the seniors. As the Minister is, in a way, the special voice of mothers in Cabinet in this case, looking out for the well-being of children, I am not going to oppose more money for the Child Tax Credit. Because it is a program which is targeted to those most in need, it means a benefit for very low-income mothers. It also means that those on the threshold of the middle class, the people who will be in the real middle class later, the young couples with young children who do not yet have enough money to meet all the expenses incurred in bringing up a family, will benefit.

I am sure that all Members of the House will recognize the fact that 32 Members have been involved in discussions over the last few weeks, back to last fall, when we started discussing the Bill in the House, and in committee where we heard witnesses. I should like to thank the Chairman and members of the committee, as well as the witnesses that were heard, for their contributions. It is surprising that the debate has already occupied so much time of the agenda of Hon. Members. I hope the Bill receives speedy passage in order that we may proceed to Bill C-139 and ensure a better Child Tax Credit to two-thirds of Canadian mothers.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the arguments of the Minister on why the Government has to apply allocation of time, or closure, to this Bill do not add up to much. First of all, we know that regardless of what Parliament does, the minute the officials who run this country see an excuse for a tax change to be introduced through a Ways and Means motion or any other method, they immediately apply it whether it is passed or not. That has been the practice for 30 years so I am not going to get into that argument now.

I am glad the Minister is in the House because she knows and understands what I am about to say. Bill C-132 regarding Family Allowances is another attack on the families of Canada. Families cannot be divided according to their wealth. Over and over again Parliament has tried to find a way to apply a means law. When the last major amendments to this Act were brought in, all parties agreed that the plan should be universal and the only means test should be the application of the Income Tax Act on a progressive scale.

I return to my first statement, Mr. Speaker. This attack on the family is small in terms of dollars and cents. The Minister made a good case that for those earning less than $26,000 per year the Government would try to compensate them for the loss in the Child Tax Credit. She is quite right in that. But the principle of this legislation is that it is part and parcel of a policy of rationalization by the senior mandarins of the civil service who cannot appreciate that when you apply a rational thought, it must be applied with equity and justice. I do not care whether a family has an income of $10,000 or $30,000 per year, Mr. Speaker. Under the laws of Parliament, regardless of the wealth of the parties they receive the Family Allowance. That is what Parliament ruled, supported by every Party.

The history of this is long, Mr. Speaker. During the days of the last war, politicians in all western countries sought to build the morale of their troops engaged in war who worried about their families at home. In the United Kingdom there was the Beveridge Report and in Canada the Marsh Report. All the mandarins of the civil service of the day, who were growing in power, accepted the proposition. In 1942 the concept was introduced and the starting place was the family. There was debate and, of course, division of opinion. Finally, every Member of the House voted for it, with one exception.

I was one of the then young men who was asked for an opinion. I was going overseas, leaving two young children and a wife at home. If I did not come back my wife and family would get a pension of $50 per month. I knew I would be much happier if there was something for the children when they were growing up. All parties accepted the document.

With this latest move, in the interest of restraint we would reduce voluntarily, and in some cases compulsorily, the increased income of some people in order to help control inflation. The Party I speak for agreed to the six and five proposal for those who were making money and contracts were altered to that effect.

Common sense, equity and justice, however, say that this should not be applied to people who cannot defend themselves. The amounts involved are small but the principles involved are great. Every Member of Parliament has had a shame riding on his back for the last eight or ten years that he cannot get rid of. The Minister knows what it is and I know what it is. We pass laws based on our best reasoning, and when those laws are ignored by our masters, the mandarins who run the country, we say nothing and do nothing. The only person on the other side of the House that I have ever seen admit the discrimination and injustice of it is the Minister. This matter does not affect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) or the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) because they know who their masters are and who they have to obey. These great rationalists who think they know how better to run the country say that six and five should be applied to everyone regardless of justice, equity or morality. They will do it.

I want to return to the key thought. Under the morality of this Parliament, we decided that regardless of wealth every child up to 16 years of age, and 18 years of age if attending school, would receive Family Allowances. This decision by Parliament is being ignored every day by the irrational mandarins who run the country and who run Cabinet. Sure, the Bill will go through. Sure, they will put closure on it. But as they apply closure, let their conscience recognize that they will carry this scar until they die.

I am not unaware of the fact that we tend to be fraudulent and full of scam as Members of political Parties, but on occasions such as this let us face the fact that we are rushing through this Bill for the convenience of a few people who want it out of the way. It does not make any difference to the cheques going out or the amounts of the cheques. We in Parliament have a duty. This is a talking place and we have a right to talk in this place until every soul in Canada has heard our voice. But that voice will never be heard as long as others who want to be masters decide that no news of this parliamentary debate gets out to the people of Canada. Until every family in Canada has a chance to hear why those of us on the Opposition side are opposed to this legislation, we have a right to continue talking. Until the media realizes that it must tell the story of what is happening in the House, we will continue battling and fighting.

I am as ashamed as I know the Minister is that we continue discrimination against teenagers. Now we are loading an extra burden on families. Families are under attack all over the world, but no place are they more under attack than on the North American continent. The families for who we should be fighting, regardless of race, nationality, colour or religion, are the one institution around which we must all rally to protect at every turn. We are not protecting them in letting this perhaps small but significant amount go through.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and address the House on this critical issue this afternoon. I watched very carefully as the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) stood up and called upon Members of the House to support this motion applying time allocation or closure. I watched her very closely. I listened very carefully to the words she used. I noticed a quaver in her voice as she delivered her words. I listened carefully to the way she phrased her sentences and I noticed that there was a lack of commitment in what she was saying. Also I noticed there was uncertainty in some of the points she was making. I watched her body language and noticed that she was not looking directly at Hon. Members opposite when she was speaking. I noticed that she was using body language, in a sense, to communicate the following to Members of the House: "I do not believe in what I am saying, I do not believe in the words that I am uttering. What I am saying is to be disallowed or ignored because it is not what I want to say, but I am forced to stand up and say it because the Government, senior mandarins or certain Cabinet Members have forced me to rise in the House of Commons to muzzle Parliamentarians from speaking out against a Bill which will deindex Family Allowances".

It is not surprising that the Minister spoke in a quavering voice. She understands clearly what the Bill is communicating to Canadian citizens from the East Coast to the West Coast. I have listened carefully to Ian Sinclair, chairman of the blue chip committee which is to advise the Government on the six and five program. Mr. Sinclair said that the six and five program was really causing damage to the economy of Canada, that we must take steps to encourage economic development to stimulate the economy, and that strangling more life out of the economy was not in our short-term or long-term best interests.

Then I looked carefully at a man who presumably advised the Government often on these matters, the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I noticed what he did to his retirees. He indicated that he did not believe in the six and five program, and for that reason the increase in their pensions this year will be 11.5 per cent, not 6 per cent or 5 per cent. Anyone would know that now is not the time to identify a group of women and children in Canadian society and ask them to bear the attack against inflation.

The Minister indicated that she put the mothers of the children of Canada on notice back in the June budget, that they knew it was coming and therefore it should presumably legitimize today's action of closing off debate on this particular Bill in Parliament.

I recall other Members, particularly on the Government side, saying that they have not received a landslide of letters from mothers or from thousands of children writing in about the decreases in the Family Allowances which they would have expected starting in January. Of course they have not, for two reasons. First, the mothers of Canada are not organized and do not become involved in letter-writing campaigns, as do certain other well-organized lobby groups. Certainly the children of Canada do not. But more important, I do not believe that the mothers of Canada believe or believed that the Government would do this. After all, they know they were not one of the causes of inflation. The paltry Family Allowance cheques which went out every month were not fuelling inflation. I suspect they heard in the budget discussions that indeed the Government would delimit the indexing of Family Allowance payments and they simply refused to believe it, it seemed so incredible. Then the Minister of National Health and Welfare said: "Listen, while we are reducing your income on this side, we will increase it on that side through subsequent legislation on the Child Tax Credit". She said that they would pass legislation some time in the future that would provide an increase in the Child Tax Credit to compensate for this loss.

This is asking a great deal of the Canadian public. They listened to the previous Minister of Finance who on occasion after occasion stood up and made promises. First he said that he would tax dental programs for employees. Later he changed his mind and said that he would not do it, that he would tax medical premiums. Then he again changed his mind and said that he would tax investment money used by people to purchase Canadian stocks. Then he changed his mind again. The previous Minister of Finance changed his mind 37 times. Yet the Minister of National Health and Welfare advises confidence in the Government because it will deliver what it says. I believe that is asking too much of the people of Canada, to have faith in a Government that has let them down on so many occasions.

We should consider what is happening today from another perspective as well. It deals with the psychology of the Canadian society. Today we have a country that is looking for strong political leadership. Canadians realize that our economy is floundering. We are like a ship at sea with no rudder. One day we lurch this way, and the next day we lurch back that way. We see a Government of Canada that is going from crisis to crisis. It tries one program, then another, tries a stimulus here while raising taxes there, gives a tax break to upper income earners and increases taxes to the middle income Canadian. We see a Government that is obviously out of control.

The people of Canada are asking for strong political leadership at this time. They are saying that we need someone who will stand up to show us where the problems are in our economy and how to fight inflation, and how to stimulate the economy. They want someone who will tell us how to encourage investor and consumer confidence. What the people of Canada do not want is a Minister who stands up in the House of Commons to say that the Government wants to take money from the mothers and children of Canada during these difficult times. The Government does not want to hear any more debate in the House of Commons on this issue and therefore introduces a measure called time allocation to cut off the debate on this issue and to muzzle particularly Members on the Opposition side of the House to prevent them from pointing out the shortcomings of this legislation and pointing out the shortcomings of the political leadership that this legislation demonstrates.

There are dozens of countries in the world that envy a Parliament such as ours where people can hear two or three points of view on an issue. They can then draw their own conclusions on the subject in the comfort of their own home or workplace. It is important that the people of Canada have an opportunity to hear the various sides of an issue. We have heard some very convincing arguments as to why this legislation that will remove money from mothers and children of Canada is not the appropriate step to be taken at this time.

I remind Members of an earlier time when I indicated that the Chairman of the blue chip committee said that it is now time to change from this paranoiac adherence to the six and five program. The best thing this Government could do is to send a clear signal to Canadians across the country that in the interests of fair play and justice it will pull out this particular Bill that is before us now and, more important, will not go ahead with de-indexing of Family Allowance payments.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my comments today to the motion before the House under Standing Order 82 which is to limit debate on Bill C-132. It is important to understand what the purpose of this debate today is really all about. It is whether or not a reasonable amount of time has been given to discuss this Bill in general principle. We have heard the Members of the Opposition speaking of everything except Bill C-132. This is certainly not a good use of Parliament's time. I ask, what is the purpose of parliamentary reform as expressed in the amended standing orders of December 22, 1982?

Mr. Blenkarn: I would like to know.

Mr. Flis: This is certainly not good use of parliamentary time.

Mr. Blenkarn: You brought in closure three times in three weeks.

Mr. Flis: The purpose of parliamentary reform is to make Parliament more effective and better able to respond directly to the needs and wants of Canadians.

Mr. Blenkarn: Closure three times in three weeks.

Mr. Flis: However, if we insist on wasting our time by constantly repeating arguments that are many times filled with misinformation and allegations that are wrong, then we are not using Parliament effectively. We are not representing the concerns of our constituents who elected us. We are in fact hampering the whole parliamentary system and its effectiveness.

We have had similar debates regarding the whole question of time allocation in the past. The Hon. Member for Guelph

(Mr. Schroder) stated in the House on December 2, 1982, that:

> Time allocation is a good management tool ... it apportions the time effectively.

I agree with the Hon. Member completely. Given the speeches from the Opposition during this debate, they are not putting their time to good use. In fact, they are attempting to score political points by misinforming and misrepresenting what in fact the Bill is all about. I hear Opposition Members screaming that we are imposing closure. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) used that work today. The Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) used that word today, saying it was closure.

Mr. Blenkarn: Three times in three weeks.

Mr. Flis: There is a difference, and a very important one at that, between closure and what we are proposing now, that is time allocation.

Mr. Riis: What is the difference?

Mr. Flis: In the interest of presenting an accurate picture of the motion as presented, I feel I should illustrate the difference between closure and time allocation. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap is asking me what the difference is. I might ask him to take his amended Standing Orders and refer to page 30, Standing Order 37, which describes closure as follows:

> 37. Immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming an adjourned debate is called, or if the House be in Committee of the Whole, any Minister of the Crown, who, standing in his or her place, shall have given notice at a previous sitting of his or her intention so to do, may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned, or that the further consideration of any resolution or resolutions, clause or clauses, section or sections, preamble or preambles, title or titles, shall be the first business of the Committee, and shall not further be postponed; and in either case such question shall be decided without debate or amendment;

Therefore, closure is a method of procedure which brings debate to a conclusion and enables the House to secure a decision upon the subject under discussion. Time allocation, however, is something totally different. Again, I would refer the same Member to page 86 of our Standing Orders, Standing Order 82. I draw to his attention exactly what Standing Order 82 says. It reads:

> A Minister of the Crown who from his or her place in the House at a previous sitting has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 80 or 81—

Standing Orders 80 and 81 state that where the three Parties could not agree on an allotted time, then the Minister can use Standing Order 82. I continue:

> —in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee and has given notice of his or her intention so to do, may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage;

The key phrase in this Standing Order is:

> —may propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage;

Therefore, what we are in fact doing is limiting the time of debate.

Mr. Riis: Closing off debate.

Mr. Flis: We are not closing debate. Why limit the time of debate? Those in the Opposition have already indicated that they oppose the Bill. Members of the NDP have publicly stated that they will do anything under the sun to prevent this Bill from going through. They have stated their objections, but they have not offered any alternatives. They do not propose an alternative strategy to follow—

• (1540)

Mr. Riis: Yes, we did. Pull the Bill.

Mr. Flis: —within the framework of reducing inflation. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) at least had the decency, honesty and respect to say that his Party does support the principle of six and five. We want to hear the alternatives within the framework of accepting the principle and philosophy of six and five.

For a debate to be truly effective, all Parties must be able not only to raise objections, but also to provide alternatives to follow. Only through this type of information sharing can we have a truly effective debate. However, it is only we on this side of the House who have proposed any type of plan to follow and who are attempting to use Parliament's time more efficiently. If Opposition Members could propose new ideas—

Mr. Riis: Pull the Bill.

Mr. Flis: —and new initiatives—

Mr. Riis: Pull the Bill.

Mr. Flis: —we on this side of the House would be more than willing to listen.

Mr. Riis: Pull the Bill.

Mr. Flis: Unfortunately, this is not the case. Therefore, since no new ideas are expressed, it is ridiculous to continue a debate which has ceased to be a debate. I repeat that the Opposition, through this forum, has used this House of Commons to misinform the people of Canada—

Mr. Blais: Shame.

Mr. Flis: —about what this Bill is in fact all about.

Mr. Riis: Proof, proof.

Mr. Flis: What is the Bill all about? Bill C-132, in conjunction with other Bills, is part of a plan of economic recovery for Canada.

Mr. Riis: It is really working well. Have you noticed how things are going?

Mr. Flis: We on this side of the House have a plan. I am not sure that the Opposition does. Our plan was introduced on June 28, 1982, when the former Minister of Finance tabled the budget in the House of Commons. The Budget emphasized that, in order to move toward economic recovery, we must take immediate action to bring down inflation.

Mr. Riis: You are taking money from the mothers of Canada.

Mr. Flis: The central difficulty in reducing inflation is to break the expectations that inflation will remain high indefinitely. Such expectations, unfortunately, tend to be self-fulfilling. Incomes chase prices which, in turn, chase incomes in a vicious spiral.

This Bill proposes to limit, only for those who can afford it, the indexation of Family Allowances to a 6 per cent cost of living adjustment in 1983 and a 5 per cent adjustment the year after. What this means is that Family Allowances which were $26.91 per child per month would have increased to $29.92. However, limited to 6 per cent, they will increase to $28.52, a difference of $1.40.

Mr. Riis: Why bother?

Mr. Flis: Thus, in 1982, a mother would have received $322.92. In 1983, this amount would have arisen to a total of $358.44. Instead, it will amount to $342.24.

Mr. Riis: Oh, that will turn the economy right around, quite a bit.

Mr. Flis: As a consequence of the Bill, only one-third of Canadian mothers receiving Family Allowances will receive a smaller increase than anticipated for their child benefits in the coming year. I emphasize that there will be an increase. It is not a reduction, as the Opposition would lead the public to believe. Rather, it is an increase. However, as an additional measure, those 2.5 million mothers who also receive the Child Tax Credit, will not be affected by this Bill. In effect, the Child Tax Credit, which amounted to a maximum non-taxable benefit of $261 for each child last year, and which would have been $293 in 1982, will be specially increased by another $50. It will therefore rise to a maximum of $343 for each child. This will compensate for the limited indexing of Family Allowances for the next two years to come. Therefore, with these measures, those who are most in need, those 2.5 million parents who also receive the Child Tax Credit, will not be affected by the 6 per cent and 5 per cent limits, and their benefits will in fact be increased by $50 for the taxation year 1982.

I do not understand what the Opposition is complaining about.

Mr. Blais: They complain all the time.

Mr. Riis: Ask your constituents.

Mr. Flis: Through this Bill, we are clearly asking that those families who can afford it make some sacrifices so that those less well off can be helped even more. Therefore, because the Opposition has already stated its purpose not to support this Bill and, at the same time, does not provide us with any alternative action, I feel that we have no choice but to impose time allocation at this stage of the Bill. If the Opposition could provide some timely alternatives—

Mr. Riis: Pull the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have indicated to the Hon. Member that his allotted time has already expired. Perhaps he may wish to seek the unanimous consent of the House to continue his remarks.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the lesson on the difference between closure and time allocation given by the Hon. Member for Parkdale, and he read from the Bible of the House of Commons. I think we are—

Mr. Flis: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member offends half of my constituency. I do represent the constituency of Parkdale-High Park.

Mr. Riis: They are not offended any more.

Mr. Young: Not after that speech.

Mr. Darling: I offer my apologies to the Hon. Member. Those are both very fine areas in the great city of Toronto. I appreciate his desire to ensure that both parts are acknowledged. I sometimes have the same trouble, because I represent two great areas, the provincial districts of Parry Sound and Muskoka, and so I apologize to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Fisher: Lovely people, all of them.

Mr. Darling: That is quite right.

Mr. Speaker, we are not primarily debating the merits of the Bill which will cap increases, and I am well aware that there would not be a reduction in the amounts presently paid to mothers but, rather, we are debating its principles. Because of the new rules, the Standing Order numbers have all changed and we must learn them anew, but under Standing Order 82, I believe, it is still closure, no matter how one goes around it. I say to Hon. Members opposite not to shake their heads or to say that it is so much easier. It is as though taking castor oil with orange juice were a little different from taking straight castor oil. The truth is that it amounts to the same thing and has the same effect.

Mr. Blais: No one does that anymore.

Mr. Darling: As was mentioned previously, the Government has brought in closure three times over the past week. I am quite sure, although I do not see anyone from whom we might obtain information, that closure or time allocation will also be imposed on Bill C-139 after it has been debated for a few days. There is no question about that. Therefore, I might make a point of suggesting to Hon. Members that there should be a footnote on every Bill which would set out the provisions of Standing Order 82 so that the Government can invoke closure when it feels it has heard enough from the Opposition.

This afternoon, I believe, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) mentioned that some 32 Members of this House had risen to speak on this particular Bill, and that amounts to 32 out of 282, less the vacant seats. Therefore, it was not a great percentage of them.

Concerning this particular Bill, I once again point out that we are not debating the amount of money in question because, as has been pointed out specifically, the difference in the exact number of cents each month will not be astronomical, and, I suppose, will not immediately put families on welfare or push them over into the welfare bracket. We are debating the principle of the Bill. The Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) emphasized the importance of the family. This is a case where the government is sort of infringing on the family. I am sure all my colleagues will agree that the one unit which stands head and shoulders above every other unit in Canada today is the family. Why should the Government do something which will disrupt it financially, even in a minor way, and one which sort of downgrades it? Last week I had the privilege of attending meetings with Parliamentarians from all over the world. It was interesting to hear the theme throughout those meetings, which was the importance of the family and how it should be upgraded in every way possible.

It has been running through my mind that the proper name for these three Bills, C-131, C-132 and C-133, is "the unholy three". There is no question about that in my view. The one which limited the increase on the old age pensions was certainly the worst for the Government to ram through, and this is the second worst. This is the reason why the idea of bringing in closure, to me, is just another slap in the face to the families. The Government can rationalize all it wants, but, as the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) said, give us some suggestions.

When the dollars and cents are added and put in a bag and set in front of the desk of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), or put in the coffers of the general funds, it is not going to be an astronomical amount. There are other places where the Government could have found that money where it is not going to hurt those in the low-income brackets.

The people who are being discriminated against today are not the ones who have caused inflation. They are not the ones who have let Government expenditures go up as high as 23 per cent, and sometimes higher. A good many of these Government Departments could have pared their various expenditures down without hurting anyone too much. As has been mentioned, I believe also by the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, it is probably not the idea of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) himself, and I am quite sure it was not the idea of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is certainly sympathetic, but it is the bureaucrats and senior civil servants who dream up these wonderful ideas.

I see the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) shaking his head as if this were not right. I am quite sure that he is well aware of his power, and he is a powerful Minister because every Government agency that wants to buy, I was going to say a postage stamp but that is a dirty word these days and it will be worse after the 15th of February, or a tank or whatever it is, certainly has to go through his Department. I am quite sure that his arm is twisted by the senior bureaucrats in his Department.

Mr. Blais: It is the other way around.

Mr. Darling: They say, "Mr. Minister, you cannot do this or you cannot do that". The same thing applies to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

There are certainly a great many ways that the Government could have saved money. One of the fairest taxes, whether we like it or not, is the income tax. That was just a temporary tax that was put in, I think, in 1917 and—

An Hon. Member: 1911.

Mr. Darling: It is still with us, and I think it will be here for another few years. The income tax is a fair tax, much and all as we hate to pay it, and we probably do our best to see that we pay as little as possible.

I think it was two years ago that the highest bracket was 62 per cent, and now it is down to 50 per cent. That was a stupid move that I cannot understand. My only solution is that the advisers to the previous Minister of Finance told him there were a good many of his senior civil servants in the 62 per cent bracket, and therefore it might be more convenient and better for them if they reduced that to 50 per cent. And that is the ceiling now.

I am quite sure that Members on the other side of the House would agree that if that 12 per cent was reinstated a lot more tax would be collected than by squeezing it out of a lot of mothers, single parents and otherwise, who are finding it pretty tough to make ends meet. Why this should be done to these mothers who are in the lower income bracket I do not understand.

There are a good many families who are in a very high income bracket who would naturally get the Family Allowance, but most of it will go back in income tax. To me it is unfair. It is a closure when closure was not needed, regardless of what it is called, and of course the Members of this Party are going to be voting against it.

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in this debate this afternoon for two reasons. One, I would like to say something about the whole idea of time management or management procedures, or whatever you want to call it, and I would like to talk a little bit about the fact that the psychology of inflation is important. I would like to talk about what effect the six and five program is having on the development of the momentum that is helping to reduce inflation.

It is interesting that in this management of time the question is, have we had enough time to discuss this Bill? In second reading, we have had two hours and 45 minutes of debate. We have had 16 speakers, seven have been from the Official Opposition, five from the New Democratic Party and four have been from the Liberals. Now, at report stage, we have had six hours of debate. We have had 19 speakers, six Progressive Conservatives, 11 NDPs and two Liberals. That means that so far we have had 35 speakers. Of this the breakdown is: 13 Progressive Conservatives, 16 New Democratic Party Members and six Liberals, and the total time so far has been 12 hours and 30 minutes.

That, I think, indicates that there has been ample time for discussion of this Bill, but the other point that I think is important is the fact that the essence of this Bill really does not require the approval of Parliament, but the Child Tax Credit addition of $50 across the board, a once in a lifetime allocation of $50, does require the passage of Bill C-139, which is the Bill to amend the Income Tax Act. In order for this $50 to be available for the Child Tax Credit this year, which will help those who are most in need to cope with the situation of having to help us in this fight against inflation, it is very important that this Bill be passed.

We have heard a lot of discussion about inflation, and I do not profess to be an expert on the economics of inflation. If what I read is true, there are many different opinions about why we have inflation, and a great number of opinions about what is the best way to attack inflation. In essence, what we have been saying is that there are two ways in which we have to combat inflation. One of those is that the world recession has to be brought under control. Most of us know the very complicated reasons that are given for the fact that all countries in the western world, each of them having a different kind of government from ours, are all suffering from degrees of inflation, so we have this recession which is affecting the world in total. What we do in Canada is not going to have much effect on world matters concerned with inflation. That is not to say that we should not be doing something in Canada about inflation, helping to correct inflation in this country and helping people to cope with inflation.

• (1600)

What we did was to introduce the so-called six and five program in an attempt to cope with inflation in Canada and reduce the rate at which inflation was increasing, reducing it eventually from 12 per cent to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent the following year. That is what the six and five program is all about. In other words, it is a first step in Canada toward economic recovery. It is not the only action necessary to turn the economy around, but it is the primary initiative in working toward this goal.

With regard to the six and five program and employment, a reduction in inflation is the key to economic recovery. That includes securing those jobs we already have and creating new jobs. The Government job-creation program should be seen as a spin-off of the six and five program.

The emphasis of the six and five program has been on the urgency of getting inflation down. As inflation is reduced, consumer confidence and spending is encouraged and unemployment levels will gradually reduce or decrease. There are other purposes that are part of the six and five program, such as trying to bring down retail prices. We are having some success. The Consumer Price Index dropped to under 10 per cent in December 1982, the first time since March 1981. It dropped to 9.3 per cent.

Interest rates have decreased steadily. Interest rates of course have a tremendous impact on the construction and housing industry. We have seen what has happened with regard to restraint on federally-administered prices. We have established this in federal Departments, agencies, Crown corporations and regulatory bodies.

Wage settlements have decreased since the beginning of the six and five program. In fact, they have decreased substantially. This will decrease prices and will certainly foster Canada's competitiveness internationally.

What does this have to do with the Bill we are talking about today and the five Bills we are trying to get through this House which are related to the six and five program? The Opposition Members say we cannot continue to blame other countries for what is happening in Canada. They say we cannot continually refer to the world recession. That requires a degree of leadership. We must answer the question whether there is any light at the end of that tunnel or, as is often expressed, is there any hope?

This is why we are asking Canadians to enter this fight against inflation. This is why we have Bill C-132 to limit the indexation of Family Allowances to 6 per cent this year and 5 per cent next year. This is why we are asking Canadian families to accept this as their contribution in the fight against inflation.

We know that inflation unsettles the confidence of all, but no people more than the families of Canada. I was particularly interested in hearing Opposition Members suggest that somehow or other the mothers of Canada would not be able to understand the need for the six and five program. I say, who better than the mothers who are the managers of the families in this country, who better would realize that reducing inflation will make it easier for them to manage?

The purpose of this debate is to discuss the Bill rationally. It is to give the people of Canada an indication that this is a small price for them to pay for bringing about economic recovery and growth which, as the Minister says, will directly benefit all families by protecting them from the ravages of inflation and the resultant erosion of their budgets.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 45, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn)—Trust Companies—Action taken by Minister—(b) Query respecting role of Minister; the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—North Atlantic Treaty Organization—Canadian naval contribution—(b) Modernization of vessels; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie)—Garrison Diversion—Restoration of United States funding—request that Minister take action—(b) Reported statements made by North Dakota official.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-132

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin:

That, in relation to Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, one sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of each of the report stage and the third reading stage of the Bill; and

That 15 minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on those days, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question then necessary in order to dispose of this stage of the Bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time since January 17 that this Government has decided to use the hammer for limiting time for debate. The concept of the new rules we are supposed to be operating under is to limit the time for debate by shortening speeches on report stage to ten minutes. Consequently, this motion by the Government with respect to time allocation, certainly at report stage, is inappropriate. Indeed, by the very time limitations, Members' speaking opportunities would have run out very soon had the Bill been allowed to follow the normal course.

Second, there has been no indication by this Government of the extent to which consultations were held with respect to reducing the number of speeches or setting some time when this Bill would come to a vote.

It is a sad day for this House when we have the situation where, in the middle of an income tax debate or a day set aside for an income tax debate, a Minister of the Crown rises to impose time allocation in order to limit the length of debate. It is the third time this has happened since January 17. It is disgraceful management of the House by this Government. The new rules are supposed to make the House operate better and make it more relevant. However, the Government uses every opportunity to ensure that these new rules do not work.

This is one of a few Bills where the Government has gone ahead and operated as though it had legal authority to do so. It has already proceeded to reduce Family Allowances. Cheques sent out in January and presumably those prepared for February are at the reduced amount. The Government says it has legal authority to do that. The Government says it does not have to straighten up the question of indexing under the present Act until December, according to the Government's own legal opinion, to handle this matter and the question of the change in the amount of the Family Allowance.

The Minister has come to this House and said in public that there are three kinds of tax measures which affect people with families. Indeed, there are probably four, and I want to point those out to this House. First, there is the allowance for children under the Income Tax Act which goes to everyone who files an income tax form on a positive basis. That is an indexed amount. It has been changed, but there is an allowance which everyone who pays positive income tax receives toward the maintenance of their children, an income tax deduction. Second, the Child Tax Credit is another form of tax allowance for children which happens to be a positive credit. Even if you do not pay income tax, you receive this positive credit of up to $342, approximately, per child. The third allowance has something to do with the spousal allowance when there is, perhaps, a single parent who declares one of the children as, indeed, a spouse. A further allowance is available there. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there is an allowance for babysitting or child care help to families in the tax Act.

All of these matters should be brought together into one form of allowance for children. Both the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and the Minister responsible for the status of women have spoken in the last weeks on these vital tax matters. There is ample time for this whole matter to be resolved by Parliament before December of this year, yet this Minister crashes ahead with a program which she knows does not make sense. There is no justification whatsoever on this particular Bill for any time allocation, particularly in view of the statements made publicly by the Minister responsible for the status of women and the Minister of National Health and Welfare with respect to comments concerning the Income Tax Act. The matter should be reviewed, and reviewed completely.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister spoke about the six and five program. We all know that that is a great, big advertising gimmick which has absolutely nothing to do with the cost of the national revenue, with the cost of Government, in this particular case. This Bill is being forced through because it is part of a general pattern, and the Government does not want to change or alter its pattern. There is no justification for forcing this particular Bill through, repeating six and five, six and five, six and five. Be damned to six and five. This Bill has not a heck of a lot to do with six and five at all.

The truth of the matter is there is a large increase in the amount of money being allocated to children by the Child Tax Credit in the Income Tax Act. There is an attempt to take some of it back in this amendment. The problem is that the Child Tax Credit is part of the Income Tax Act. The benefits under the Child Tax Credit go to mothers who file, or happen to file, income tax returns. In order to get the child income tax credit, you have to file the return. But when do you get the money? When the Government decides to pay out the credit a cheque is delivered which is part of an income tax rebate system, and it is a lump sum cheque.

The advantage of Family Allowance is that the cheque comes monthly to the mother. The money then can be spent monthly for the benefit of the children. The Child Tax Credit is a lump sum payment which can be used to put a downpayment on an automobile, go on a holiday, and perhaps have absolutely nothing to do with the support of children. The advantage of the Family Allowance system is that it is a monthly system, and if we are going to rely on the Child Tax Credit then it should be paid monthly to those persons who need the money to buy groceries. They do not just buy groceries in May and June when tax rebates are paid. They buy groceries in September, October, December and January. That is when they need the money. To say that the increase in the Child Tax Credit somehow is going to help families look after their kiddies is just wrong. It is not going to help them. It is a bureaucratic method of trying to solve these problems by tax adjustments, which cannot be done. What you have to do is to make sure the money is put into the hands of parents on a monthly basis so they can properly look after their current monthly bills for food, shelter, and so on. This is important to the maintenance of children. I say to the Government, therefore, this Bill is ill conceived, has not been thought out properly, does not properly address the question of maintenance of children, and does not properly reflect the payments which should be made to families to help them maintain their children.

There is ample opportunity before December of this year for the Government to form a committee to study the matter and to produce proper legislation which addresses the question of how we pay and how we look after those who are raising families, to make it more equitable for them in our society. This Bill does not do that. The proposal in Bill C-139 does not do that. It is a hodge-podge. It is a flim-flam.

The Parliamentary Secretary says it has something to do with inflation. Goodness, how are you going to solve inflation, by taking off maybe a couple of dollars from someone who gets a Family Allowance cheque, which is taxable in any event, and at the same time increasing the Child Tax Credit, so the net result of payment out by the state and payment into the state through the tax system is almost the same anyway?

Actually, Mr. Speaker, the Bill does not address the question of inflation. It does not address the question of fairness. It does not address the question of the requirement to support children. It does not really deal with the issues at all. It is the kind of Bill which should be subject to a long debate for the very reason we have Parliaments. When you have bad legislation it should be exposed to debate by the people of Canada. The Parliamentary Secretary says we have spent 12 hours and 30 minutes. If that amount of time entitles the Government to foreclose an important issue like this, then there is something wrong with Parliament and with this Government in the way it is directing the affairs of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Denis Ethier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased with this opportunity to express my support, not only for Bill C-132 but also for the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mrs. Bégin), and for her motion for time allocation, so that we can exercise our democratic right to vote either for or against certain measures.

I agree with the Hon. Member who spoke just now that Bill C-132 alone is not the answer to getting rid of inflation. This Bill is only one in a series of measures we must take at a time of serious economic difficulty, if we truly want to bring down inflation and put the economy back on its feet. I know that our friends opposite are not interested in supporting measures that will help to reduce inflation, because to them it is not good politics. It is not good politics to be positive. Consistently, they have always preferred to be negative—in other words, they criticize without offering alternative solutions.

Since Bill C-132 was first tabled in the House, thirty-five Members have taken part in the debate on this Bill, including sixteen from the socialist group. And yet there are Members who insist that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has no justification for using Standing Order 82. We on the Government side want to discharge our responsibilities, even if it is not always the popular thing to do. It is not popular to say that we are going to cap increases in family allowances, but we must not forget that the families who stand to suffer most, namely, those on low incomes and especially families with several children, will receive an increase of $50 per month in their child tax credit. That is far more than the amount they will have to give up as a result of capping at 6 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about Standing Order 82 which we are invoking today. Considering the almost systematic obstruction practised by our two opposition parties, I submit that it might be necessary to invoke Standing Order 82 whenever we table a Bill. Between now and the end of this session, there are still a number of Bills to be passed, including several money Bills, and I think it is irresponsible of the Opposition to hold up the proceedings. I am accusing them of irresponsibility, as I did on the evening of July 8, when I tendered my resignation as Deputy Chairman of Committees of the Whole House. The Members opposite are not acting as true representatives of this country, that is what I said that evening, and I say it again today. You may recall the incident on July 8 when the Progressive Conservative Members themselves had requested a vote and then left the House and did not come back.

Not so long ago, the NDP Members asked for a vote. They also left the House and did not come back.

The Canadian electorate did not give them a mandate to form a government. They were given a far more limited mandate, in keeping with their talents, namely, to provide opposition, not obstruction, which has become a habit among the Members of the NDP and their Progressive Conservative friends. We on the Government side want to discharge the responsibilities we have been given by the Canadian people. To do so, we are obliged to limit the time spent on debate, and I submit, with due respect, that this should become common practice as long as Members who are given a mandate to provide opposition insist on using that mandate to obstruct the proceedings of this House. On this side, if we are to be worthy of the trust of our electorate, we shall have to invoke Standing Order 82, whenever a Bill is tabled. Let us not forget that these irresponsible people held up the proceedings of the House for two weeks during the bells incident. I, for one, have not forgotten, Mr. Speaker. I had your job, and according to the Rules, the Chair had to be occupied twenty-four hours a day, and so it was. We did our duty. During those two weeks, the Liberals remained faithful to their mandate, and every day they came to the House, as required by the Rules. What did the Progressive Conservatives do during that time? They were travelling across Canada. You would have thought it was an election campaign. Mr. Speaker, although there is no legal obligation on these Members to return the salary they unlawfully received, I maintain that if they had any moral sense at all, they would pay back the compensation they received during the two-week walkout or should I say cop-out, because the latter expression is probably more appropriate.

[English]

The Opposition Members scream wolf every time that time allocation is invoked. They seem to forget that every Standing Order has a reason for being, in this case to protect us from the systematic obstruction we have seen in this House over the last two years. We have demonstrated on numerous occasions that if the Opposition has any concrete and positive propositions, we will gladly accept them. However, they seem to favour the negative approach, to the detriment of the people who have elected them.

Let us dispose of Bill C-132 and move on to other legislation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Then withdraw it.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with a sense of déjà vu. It seems that every second time I rise to speak in this House, the subject matter is again closure. This is the sixteenth time that closure or time allocation has been imposed on the House of Commons during a single session. I can assure you that it has not been mindless opposition, such as we have just been accused of by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Ethier). The Opposition in this House has been doing an excellent job of showing up the weaknesses in the Bills presented by the Government. It is because of this responsible opposition and because the Government is unable to refute the facts and arguments we have advanced, that it finds it necessary to use closure on so many occasions.

Bill C-132, Mr. Speaker, which deals with Family Allowance, is part of the great six and five propaganda scheme. It is part of this great public relations gimmick the Government hopes will allow it to take credit for any reduction in the rate of inflation. Of course, that is happening not because of anything the Government has done, but because we are faced with a recession, a recession which was caused by the Government opposite. That is why inflation is abating somewhat. But the very policies pursued by the hon. gentlemen and hon. ladies opposite will guarantee that once the recession is over, we will again face a period of rapid and worsening inflation. Under this so-called six and five system we have a chicken and egg situation. We are faced with inflation and we know everyone has to cut back a little, but who goes first? It is pretty evident that, in the opinion of the Government opposite, it is the little guys who have to go first. It is not the Liberal fat cats who are going first, it is the little guy, the Family Allowance recipients, the pensioners, whether old age pensioners in general or Public Service pensioners in particular. It is the little guys who have been used by the Liberal Government as cannon fodder in the war against inflation.

We on this side of the House do not approve of those tactics, Mr. Speaker. We spent about 12 and a half hours on this debate before the Government decided to impose closure. That time should not have been used to discuss this rather nitpicking Bill, as the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) has explained. After all, it is very much a matter of taking a little bit here from the Family Allowances and adjusting the Child Tax Credit, all with no real net effect on Government revenues or expenditures. What we should have been using that time for was a debate on the entire Family Allowance system.

This debate was opened not that long ago by the Minister responsible for the status of women who made certain proposals, which certainly did not go down too well in my part of the country nor, I think, in others. But at least the debate was open. The question arises: should we have the universal system of Family Allowances we now have in Canada? There are arguments pro and con. Personally, I do not really need the Family Allowance, but maybe there are a number of people in Canada who do. Perhaps a better system would be to give the money at present paid to people like myself to people who really need it. We might care to look at changes of that order.

We have problems with the taxability of Family Allowances. Each month the Government mails out literally millions of cheques right across Canada, and then on April 30 of the following year you get stuck with paying a lot of that money back again. The system of monthly cheques may not be the best one for many people who may prefer the yearly reconciliation at the time of filing their income tax return. Perhaps there should be an option so that people could choose the system they want. That would save millions of dollars as Canada Post would not have to send cheques all over the country.

• (1630)

I have brought this matter up in committee several times but it seems that the Government is reluctant to even consider the idea of changing the system of issuing monthly cheques. The reason for this is quite apparent, Mr. Speaker. It wants that federal cheque to go into practically every household in the country, to show what a good job it is doing. It is another part of the public relations and porkbarrelling that is so often engaged in by the Government. I would have a much greater appreciation of a federal Government that did not insist on sending a piece of paper to every house every month. When it comes to improving relationships between the Government and citizens, I think the provincial or municipal level is a better place to foster this. The federal Government should look after those things that properly fall into the federal domain.

These are some of the arguments that can and should be used in a full debate on Family Allowances rather than the debate we are having today, Mr. Speaker. There are much better ways to look after the interests of children than the system which presently exists.

In the few minutes remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to the matter of closure. Of the 16 times that closure or time allocation—which is the euphemism for it—has been applied, at least half have been unnecessary. Usually the debate was about to end anyway but the Government brought in closure to show who was boss. It wanted to show that it could call the shots. That is the sole reason closure was applied on those occasions. I suggest that that is a dangerous precedent because familiarity breeds contempt. The House and the country is becoming so familiar with closure that they no longer take any notice of it.

I suggest that the House leaders of all Parties get together and work out a system of agreement on the time allocated for debate on Bills of the nature of the one today. Closure is a cop-out, and I guess this Party has been guilty from time to time as well, but not too often. I will pursue this point the next time there is a debate on closure, Mr. Speaker.

In closing my brief presentation, I want to say that I am not satisfied that closure is warranted on this Bill.

Mr. Doug Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the first two minutes of my address to rebut the remarks of the previous speaker regarding time allocation and closure. He did not think that closure was necessary on Bill C-132. Part of the problem that we have had on this side of the House during debate on second reading, committee stage and report stage, is the seeming inability of the Opposition to offer a comprehensive reply to the substance of Bill C-132. In the first six minutes of his speech the Hon. Member confused time allocation and closure, but there is a substantial difference between the two, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that this inability to distinguish is indicative of many of the contradictions in the speeches of Members of the Opposition regarding Bill C-131 and Bill C-132.

This afternoon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) referred to the number of Members who have spoken since the Bill was introduced. At last count some 35 Members had participated in debate, including 16 Members of the Official Opposition. In order to effect speedy passage of the legislation, only nine Liberals have spoken.

It seems to me that a lot of misinformation has been given out by Members of the Opposition both in this Chamber and at committee. Nowhere in the debate has the Minister or any Member of this Party said that the reason for six and five being introduced on the Family Allowance, was to save money. Since the budget of June 1982, we in this Party have said that we are primarily concerned with an attack on the inflationary psychology that seems to have gripped the Canadian public. We realized that if we were to live in an inflationary world of 12 and 10, there would be a tremendous onslaught on the social security systems that are in place. Consequently, when we introduced six and five we decided that it had to be applied across the board. I think the results shown in the last six or eight months point to our success in fighting the inflationary psychology that gripped the nation about 14 months ago. In the last three months, we have been successful in bringing the rate of inflation down to the 7.2 per cent range.

In addition, when we introduced the six and five program to our social security system, we reiterated to the House that in order to protect those who need protection most, we would also introduce several countervailing balances in the legislation. In Bill C-132 the Child Tax Credit was increased by $50 in order to protect people on the lower end of the income scale.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) referred to social security and Family Allowances as porkbarrelling. I find that difficult to comprehend, Mr. Speaker.

Some Members of the Opposition have called this Bill an attack on universality. In committee we have pointed out that there are evidently some misconceptions in the minds of Members of the Opposition about what universality is. We have steadfastly maintained throughout debate that there has been no attack on universality in Bill C-131 and Bill C-132. In both instances we have ensured that people at the lower end of the income scale would receive full compensation for our fight against inflation.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic and others have also said that they would welcome a much wider debate on the whole social security system. We would welcome that as well, Mr. Speaker. The problem is that there never seems to be one spokesman for the Opposition Party who can offer a main platform for that Party. When the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) was Minister of National Health and Welfare in the Conservative Government in 1979, he wanted to dismantle Family Allowances.

Mr. Hawkes: That is not true.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This fiction will not be believed.

• (1640)

Mr. Frith: As a matter of fact, in reply to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), let me indicate that the former Leader of his Party gave a speech in western Canada during the election campaign prior to the 1979 election in which he questioned the need for a complete review of the social security system. In that speech he went on to say that it was his fear that, unless we came to grips with the whole area of universality, the national Government might not have the ability to maintain a strong enough central Government to keep the nation together. It is evident from the remarks of the former Leader of the Opposition and the former Minister of National Health and Welfare that the Conservative Party has yet to come up with a clear-cut position on the Family Allowance system and on Old Age Security.

The Hon. Member for Western Arctic mentioned earlier that he did not see any need for time allocation or closure on this particular Bill. My only comment in that regard would be that perhaps the Hon. Member and other Members of his Party might want to get together with their House leader. I can assure them that we on this side of the House, rather than having to use time allocation, would welcome a much freer debate, knowing that we have some co-operation from the Conservative House Leader in having speedier passage of legislation in the House.

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have I would like to voice my opposition to this closure motion and to give several reasons as to why I feel we should vote against it. It is important to have an opportunity for full and adequate debate in the House of Commons on this particular issue. When we take a look at the entire question of Family Allowances, the underlying principle is that an attack on families is being brought forward at this time by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). We have had ample indication of the way in which families are being attacked. For example, the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola), in recent press statements, attacked women working in the home. But first I want to take a look at the history of Family Allowances. It is important to keep this aspect in mind. It is always good to have an historical perspective when discussing a contemporary issue. This particular issue bears well in that regard.

It was back in 1945 that Prime Minister Mackenzie King introduced the baby bonus. I suppose it could be underlined that he was a bachelor and childless. It is rather ironic that we have the equivalent of the opposite sex introducing her Bill at this time which attacks that previous positive move. Approximately three years later the baby bonus was made universal. In the early years of the 1970s the Liberal Government attempted to introduce a Bill which would have made the baby bonus selective. Fortunately, after the 1972 election we had a minority Government, and the Liberal Government of the day did not proceed with its plan "to do in" the baby bonus. In fact, during that minority Parliament, because of pressure from the Opposition, the then Minister of Health conducted a study and brought in a paper. In 1973 the baby bonus payments were tripled.

The reason I bring forward this historical perspective on a contemporary issue is that it indicates the wisdom which sometimes results if there is opportunity for debate or opportunity for sober second thought. In the early 1970s, in the dying days of Parliament, the Liberal Government wanted to rush through a reduction and elimination of the baby bonus. Then it had second thoughts after the 1972 election. This indicates the wisdom of second thought.

Let me take a look as well at some of the sociological arguments in favour of maintaining Family Allowances as we now know them. When we take a look at Family Allowances, I think we should keep in mind that they are taxable. They are progressive in the sense that the larger one's income, the greater share of one's allowance will be returned to the Government at tax time. The cost of administering the Family Allowance scheme is certainly less expensive than a Child Tax Credit scheme. For example, the administrative costs of Family Allowances from 1976 to 1977 were estimated to be $1.50 per child, or half of 1 per cent in total costs. The estimates for administering alternative schemes such as the Child Tax Credit was something to the tune of ten times those costs.

In addition, there are other reasons we should look positively at the Family Allowance scheme. It is a monthly program. Money is received on a monthly basis, quite often by single parents. Certainly it is easier to budget on a monthly basis than it is to receive a lump sum payment under the Child Tax Credit scheme. Another benefit of a universal Family Allowance scheme is the participation rate. So often, on selective programs such as the Child Tax Credit, many people might not be as aware of it as they should be. They might not be able to fill in the income tax forms as they would like to do. I say this from firsthand experience. As Members of Parliament, we have many people coming to our offices requesting assistance with the Child Tax Credit scheme. There are problems in terms of the incomplete take-up of programs such as the Child Tax Credit. One does not face these problems when there is a universal system such as Family Allowance.

I suppose some people want to argue that the Family Allowance system might be costlier to Government because it can defer the payment of the Child Tax Credit to later in the year. In countering that argument I would want to point out that most income taxes and other taxes are collected earlier in the year. Arguments which attempt to indicate that economically it is better if the Government can hold on to people's money until Child Tax Credit time are certainly not sound ones. It is important to take a look, not only at the historial perspective and some of the sociological considerations, but at the situations in our own constituencies.

In the couple of minutes remaining, I would like to give an indication of what would be the impact on constituencies such as the riding of Dauphin, Manitoba. It is important to keep in mind that often the Family Allowance program assists the poorer regions of the country. For example, the 1971 statistics indicated that the national household income for families was $9,367. For Manitoba it was $8,261, but for areas such as Dauphin it was $5,361. When one looks at such small household incomes one realizes the impact of the monthly Family Allowance will certainly be much greater than it would be in some of the urban centres. When one reviews the whole question of poverty in Canada, it is important to note that the Family Allowance is most beneficial to single parents and those who are poor in many regions of the country. In Manitoba alone, 63 per cent of the poor adults in that Province are female, many of whom will be affected by Bills such as this. Nearly one-third of the poor are children. It is the children who benefit from these regular monthly Family Allowance payments. Many mothers who have visited my constituency office have told me that they use this Family Allowance to provide such necessities as food, clothing and shelter. This money is made good use of by these families.

• (1650)

One out of every two single-parent families is poor, and many live in ridings such as mine. I think it is important that we oppose the Government's motion to limit debate on a matter as important and crucial as this. I believe that we should have the opportunity to expand on some of the ideas I have mentioned so that Members of the Government will have an opportunity to weigh some of these arguments and perhaps even have an opportunity to examine their own conscience. Moral considerations are involved in this issue as well.

I see that my time has elapsed. I thank you for giving me the opportunity to share some of these concerns. I trust the Members opposite will take them into consideration as we look at this closure motion.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it seems that every time we have one of these debates it is necessary to remind Members opposite of the purpose of the debate. One thing that it is not intended for is to debate the merits of the Bill.

There is a motion before us now which cannot be debated for more than two hours—although we seem to be falling into the practice that the maximum also becomes the minimum—on whether we should allocate and specify how much further time should be spent on this particular Bill. I plan to deal with that motion rather than the merits of the Bill which has been debated over a number of days and will be debated for two more whole days in the House if this motion carries, as I assume it will.

I think it important to remind Hon. Members opposite, since they have not yet realized it, that we are not dealing with closure in this debate. The matter of closure comes under Standing Order 37, and I would invite Members to look it up in their Standing Orders. They will find that closure falls under Standing Order 37, formerly Standing Order 33. We are dealing here with time allocation under Standing Order 82, formerly Standing Order 75 until the recent rule changes.

I suggest that the public should be made aware of the fundamental difference between these two Standing Orders. If not, I think Members of the Opposition may find themselves becoming somewhat like the boy who cried wolf. They will call time allocation "closure" on so many occasions that in the event there is a real closure motion, no one will think anything of it because they will not know the difference. If a closure motion does occur, I suspect we will then hear speeches about that really being closure as opposed to what they have been calling closure all along.

What is a responsible amount of time to allocate to any debate? This is a problem that any political Party has that is in Government in a parliamentary system. One has to walk a fine line. Parliament is an institution where ideas can be debated. When legislation is introduced, its pros and cons can be thoroughly debated. However, I think we would all concede that unending debate could lead to abuse. In fact, a Government would not be living up to its responsibility to govern if it allowed the legislative flow to become a trickle as a result of spending too much time on debate.

I think it is fair to say that this is one of three Bills which relate to the Government's six and five program. This program was designed to bring inflation under control in this country. It is a statistical fact that it has met with some success to date. While it may be arguable that the amount of progress we have made in reducing inflation in this country being attributable to the Government's six and five program may be argued, I think it is fair to say that the program's psychological impact has been headed in the right direction.

We have been debating the pros and cons of six and five as it relates to other Bills. This is not the only Bill on which six and five will be debated. As has been pointed out by prior speakers, we have discussed this particular Bill before us on December 1, December 2, December 3, in committee and then at report stage on December 17 and December 18. Prior to today there have been over 35 speakers debating this Bill. We are now in a two-hour debate in which we will probably have a total of 12 speakers because of a ten-minute time limit per speaker. We will then have two more full days of debate.

I would suggest that any reasonable, fair-minded and objective person would readily concede that that is a reasonable amount of time to argue the other side of this Bill. I dare say that after three or four rounds of speeches, the odds of any new pearls of wisdom or perceptive insights being brought out in debate are rather slim. I really question to what extent the public is served by what really boils down to filibuster and obstruction. Perhaps what is in the minds of some Hon. Members opposite—I certainly do not suggest this of those who are present at the moment—is that some political points can be gained by forcing us to introduce time allocation at each stage of all these Bills. Who can say whether their judgment is right? Only time will tell. Perhaps political futures will be determined on matters other than these.

There are times when it is much easier to be in the Opposition than it is to be in Government—probably most of the time. Governments must take decisions that are not necessarily particularly popular. I suppose that everyone wants more rather than less. If one conducts a survey one can probably find people who will say things that are mutually incompatible. How often do I hear from the other side that we should be working for a balanced budget? How often do I hear from the Tories that we should be trying to reduce Government spending. The Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) is sometimes affectionately known as the slasher, and we think of him in those terms in a kindly way. He feels very strongly that Government spends too much. He had a Cabinet post that concerned control of Government expenditures during the previous administration headed by the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark). When he was in office we heard a lot of noise, but when it came down to the specifics about where these cuts would actually come from, he was a little more vague.

It is a little discouraging to be castigated on an almost daily basis for spending too much money when one is trying to take some initiatives which are responsible and which apply equally to everyone in Canada across the board, in a way which does not particularly target out any one group. All of these measures are designed to bring inflation under control, and if we succeed in that, I think that everyone in Canada will be better off in the long run. That is a very desirable thing to do, but when one tries to do it, every possible roadblock is put in one's way. I think it is only fair, in deciding how much time is to be allocated, to ensure that sufficient time has been spent to hear all the arguments. We have long since gone past that stage, and a vote on the Bill at this point would really amount to constructive, responsible and effective leadership on the part of the Government.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes allotted to me I would like to explain to the Parliamentary Secretary and to the Liberals opposite that what we are engaged in, for the third Monday in a row, is another attempt to erode democracy. If one considers the three-year history of the Government—

Mr. Blais: Read Standing Order 75C.

Mr. Hawkes: —of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Cabinet, one sees that the major attempt to erode democracy was in the original version of the Constitution when you sought to transfer power from the voters of this country to appointed people. We saw the next major erosion of democracy in the issue involving the bells when you attempted to use an omnibus form of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I remind the Hon. Member that remarks should be addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, through the Chair, I would like to bring to the attention of the Liberal Party and Cabinet Members the fact that an omnibus Bill, which deals with many different issues but allows one single vote, argues against the democratic right of Members of Parliament and the democratic right of voters in this country to send us to this Chamber to make decisions on their behalf. That is why the bells rang for several days, for freedom and for democracy.

Three Mondays in a row we find the Liberal Government, supported by its backbenchers, attempting to deny Members of this Chamber the right to represent their constituents in free and open debate. We must ask whether or not there are other reasons for an Opposition to filibuster than to fill in time. Just once in three years if the Government had only listened to the Opposition when we tried to stand in the House and say, "Your legislation is wrong and bad", one would not have found so much filibustering, so much debate and so much need for clobbering us on the principle of democracy.

I stood in this Chamber and made a speech last week which suggested that if every taxpayer gave 15 cents a month, that piece of legislation with respect to senior citizens' pensions would not be necessary. Fifteen cents a month is something taxpayers of this country would have gladly given to stop the Government from cutting pensions of senior citizens. That is the point we tried to make. We tried to make it with force, but we have no sense that the Government was listening.

When one finds us filibustering, it is because the Government is supporting a piece of legislation which is bad for the people and this nation. Let us get off the closure kick and get back to democracy. That is what the Opposition is arguing, responsibly.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! It being 5.04 p.m., in accordance with Standing Order 82, the two hours provided for consideration of the motion before the House have expired.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,331, 4,492, 4,502, 4,642 and 4,645.

IMMIGRATION APPEAL ACT

Question No. 4,331—Mr. Cook:

1. During 1969, how many certificates were signed by the then Minister of Manpower and Immigration and the Solicitor General pursuant to Section 21 of the Immigration Appeal Act?

2. Did all of the individuals against whom such certificates were signed then have recent serious criminal or other convictions recorded against them?

3. Did any of these individuals receive a pardon for an offence and, if so (a) what was the offence and on what date did it occur (b) did the Department recognize the validity of the pardon?

4. Were any of the individuals ever convicted of an offence or deported from another country subsequent to which courts or authorities of competent jurisdiction ruled that the events which gave rise to these actions were null and void ab initio?

5. Do any of the individuals now have the majority of their immediate family members in Canada, either as citizens or permanent residents?

6. Where such individuals continue to be excluded from Canada on the basis of the "reports" referred to in a Section 21 certificate, what opportunities are afforded to them or to their family members in Canada to be advised of the nature or details of the Department's "suspicions" as a means of guarding against errors or prejudice by others?

7. Does the Minister regard this policy as fair and reasonable in safeguarding individual freedoms and rights?

8. Was a Section 21 Certificate ever issued against any individual despite a finding by both the Immigration Special Inquiry and the Immigration Appeal Board that there were no grounds to support the Minister's contention that the individual in question posed a threat to the security of Canada?

9. What is the policy of the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Solicitor General respecting the continued enforcement of a Section 21 Certificate where the relevant national and international police agencies (Interpol) state that there are no recorded or pending charges, either of a criminal or civil nature, against the individual in question?

10. Is it the policy of the Minister and the Solicitor General never to lift a Section 21 Certificate regardless of any circumstances which may have changed over time?

11. What opportunities are afforded Canadians to safeguard their reputations and those of their relatives against errors in the personal information-gathering activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and the subsequent use of this information?

12. (a) During the period January 1, 1971 to December 31, 1979, how many individuals previously ordered deported from Canada were subsequently readmitted for permanent residency (b) how many of the individuals were originally ordered deported on criminal or related grounds, including a possible threat to the security of Canada?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission/Department and the Solicitor General as follows:

1. Three.

2. No. See answer to part 3.

3. In one case, a conditional pardon was granted. (a) Not at liberty to discuss details of the case to protect the identity of the person concerned but, (b) the Department of Employment and Immigration recognized the fact that the person had been convicted.

4. The Department of Employment and Immigration is aware of one case where the individual was ordered deported from a country and subsequently the order was rescinded.

5. Records indicate that some family members were admitted to Canada but it is not possible to state whether they are still in Canada since there are no Canadian exit controls.

6. Reports referred to in Section 21 Certificates are confidential and are made known only to the Minister responsible for immigration and the Solicitor General of Canada.

7. This policy is applied only in exceptional cases and the information provided by the Solicitor General's office must be kept confidential to protect sources and/or individuals. The Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Solicitor General always ensure that both the rights of the state and those of the individual involved are fully protected.

8. No.

9. Once a Section 21 Certificate was issued against a person, he/she was required to leave the country. The case would only be reviewed if the person reapplied for admission to Canada. The Minister of Employment and Immigration would review the case in light of any information provided at the time of the new application and would consult with the Solicitor General if necessary to ensure that the grounds under which the original certificate had been issued were still valid or not.

10. Once a hearing is finished the existence of the Section 21 Certificate on record is an historical fact. This, however, does not prevent the Minister of Employment and Immigration from reviewing the situation or taking any other action he may deem necessary.

11. Under Part IV of the Canadian Human Rights Act, Canadian citizens can access personal information held by the RCMP concerning themselves. Furthermore, the requestor can ask for corrections on any personal information relating to him/her that, in the requestor's opinion is erroneous. If the correction is refused by the RCMP, the individual has the right to make an annotation on his/her record stating the reasons why the correction should be made. The individual has a further right to appeal to the Privacy Commissioner to ensure that any exemptions applied to the request are within the law under the Canadian Human Rights Act and that the notifications of corrections have been duly placed on the file.

12. See response to parts 1—10.

CBC—PROGRAM "THIRTY PLUS ONE"

Question No. 4,492—Mr. Siddon:

1. What was the total cost to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the special program celebrating 30 years of CBC television programming, entitled "Thirty Years Plus One" aired on September 20, 1982?

2. What amount was Mr. Patrick Watson paid as host of the special?

3. Were other performers paid for their guest appearances on the Special and, if so, who were the performers and what amount were they paid?

4. Did the CBC or any other government agency expend any money for staff receptions or other private functions to celebrate 30 years of CBC television programming and, if so, which agencies and what amount did the agencies expend?

5. What amount was spent on CBC birthday celebrations by way of (a) special radio or television programs (b) staff receptions (c) other private functions since 1977?

Hon. Francis Fox (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1 and 2. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the costs involved in individual program projects or the fees paid to performers. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 1, 1975.

3. All performers were paid for their appearances on Thirty Plus One. The performers were:

Harry Rasky	Knowlton Nash	Sylvia Murphy-Tate
Ross McLean	Louis Del Grande	Mavor Moore
Jennifer Dale	Roger Abbot	Lorne Greene
Juliette	Luba Goy	Lorraine Thomson
Lally Cadeau	Veronica Tennant	Jack Duffy
Celia Franca	David Suzuki	Billy O'Connor
Peter Gzowski	Eric Malling	Jackie Rae
Gordon Pinsent	Sydney Newman	Earl Cameron
Johnny Wayne	Drew Crossan	Alan Blye
Frank Shuster	Alex Barris	John Vernon
Norman Jewison	Frank Peers	Doug Leiterman
Bruno Gerussi	Eric Koch	James E. Dale
Al Waxman	Robert Goulet	Susan Clark
Larry D. Mann	Patrick MacNee	Jack Miller
George Retzlaff	Charles Templeton	Warren Davis
Peter Kent	Larry Henderson	Barry Morse
Lloyd Robertson	Toby Robbins

With regard to the fees paid these performers, it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975.

4. Yes. The CBC's French Services Division, whose Montreal flagship station CBFT was the first Canadian television station ever to go on the air (September 6, 1952), presented a 30th anniversary gala concert which was telecast on the French network on September 12, 1982. Following the concert, there was a reception in the foyer of the Maison de Radio-Canada in Montreal for the approximately 1,000 people who had performed in and attended the gala. Including the cost of printing invitations, the reception cost $12,695.

5. (a) The French television network presented two programs celebrating the 30th anniversary of television programming in Canada—Le 30e anniversaire and Gala du 30e anniversaire. The English television network presented one program—Thirty Plus One. With regard to the costs of the programs, it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, answered November 6, 1975. (b) None. (c) See 4 above.

Order Paper Questions

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL LOTTERY AGREEMENT

Question No. 4,502—Mr. Reid (St. Catharines):

1. As of the date this question is answered, what amount, on an annual basis, has been received from the provinces pursuant to the 1979 Federal-Provincial Lottery Agreement?

2. Has any interest been earned on this money and, if so, what amount annually?

3. Has any of this money been spent and, if so, on what project or programs and in what amounts?

4. Is it the intention of the Government to allocate any of the fitness and amateur sport proceeds from the lottery agreement to (a) the Calgary Olympics (b) any other major athletic event?

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Communications and the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport as follows:

1. Under the federal-provincial lottery agreement the following amounts have been received on an annual basis. Payments are made quarterly.

Year	Payments	Received	Cumulative
1980	4	$25,576,884.43	$25,576,884.43
1981	4	$28,938,693.45	$54,515,577.88
1982	3	$23,683,417.08	$78,198,994.96

2. The amounts are deposited into the Consolidated Revenue Fund immediately upon receipt. Consequently there is no interest revenue directly attributable to these funds.

3. Subsequent to negotiation of the above agreement, in January of 1980, the federal Government announced that moneys derived from the Provinces as per this Federal-Provincial Agreement were to be shared equally between programs of amateur sport, fitness and physical recreation and programs of arts and culture. However, no reference to this allocation of funds is referred to in the agreement negotiated with Provinces in August, 1979.

In so far as the allocation of these funds to the Fitness and Amateur Sport Program is concerned, a review of Main Estimates for this program demonstrates the following increases:

Fitness and Amateur Sport—Contributions Funding—as per Main Estimates

	Appropriations	Expenditures
1978-79	$25,995,000
1979-80	21,467,000
1980-81	22,750,000	$32,893,913
1981-82	38,577,000	42,327,000
1982-83	42,780,000	42,780,000 (forecast)

In so far as the allocation of these funds for programs of arts and culture: Program of Cultural Initiatives

Spent and committed

Component I (deficit)	$ 3,763,766
Component IIA (management development)	927,409
Component IIB (without deficit)	1,245,000
Component III (capital projects)	15,736,908
Component IV (special projects)	5,994,000
Total	$27,667,083
National Capital Projects	8,000,000
	$35,667,083

4. (a) No. (b) Not in a direct way: some major athletic events are funded by the Fitness and Amateur Sport Voted Base which has been enlarged as per (3) above.

GOVERNMENT SPENDING SINCE 1957-58

Question No. 4,642—Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton):

For each year since the fiscal year 1957-58, based on the accounting practices currently used by the Government, what has been the government's (a) spending on a public accounts basis (b) spending on a national accounts basis (c) revenues on a public accounts basis (d) revenues on a national accounts basis (e) interest costs on a public accounts basis (f) interest costs on a national accounts basis (g) gross debt (h) net debt?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): The table below contains the information requested in question 4,642. It should be noted that interest costs are conceptually the same on the Public Accounts and National Accounts bases. The Public Accounts data have been adjusted for consistency with the 1981-82 Public Accounts. These adjustments include:

(a) treatment of the Post Office as a Crown Corporation throughout the period;

(b) reclassification from liabilities to assets of notes payable to the International Monetary Fund and other international organizations, and the allocation of special drawing rights;

(c) treatment of Old Age Security revenues as budgetary revenue and Old Age Security payments as budgetary expenditure throughout the period;

(d) a reallocation of 1978-79 and 1979-80 Public Accounts provisions for valuation to the individual years for which they actually applied with respect to the following items:

(i) the government's annual cost with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Account;

(ii) loans, investments and advances deemed to be non-recoverable;

(iii) working capital advances;

(iv) unamortized loan flotation costs of marketable bonds and Canada Savings Bonds; and

(v) undisbursed balances of appropriations to special accounts;

(e) the charging to budgetary expenditures of charges made directly to net debt over the period 1958-59 to 1964-65; and

(f) other miscellaneous adjustments to place annual Public Accounts recording on a consistent basis.

The National Accounts data are already publicly available from Statistics Canada but are reprinted here for convenience.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE—LAWYERS ON STAFF

Question No. 4,645—Mr. Beatty:

1. How many lawyers does the Department of Justice currently have on staff full time?

2. How many person-years were approved for lawyers in the Department for the fiscal year 1982-83 in the (a) Main Estimates (b) Supplementary Estimates?

3. How many person-years were added to the Department for the interpretation of the Charter of Rights, as mentioned by the Minister of Justice on p. 112:29 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?

4. What was the total cost to the taxpayer of (a) all lawyers employed by the Department (b) lawyers employed by the Department to help interpret the Charter of Rights?

5. Did the Department decide that the lawyers it already had on staff were inadequate for the provision of advice on the Charter of Rights and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice): 1. Five hundred and ninety-two.

2. (a) 578, (b) 39.

3. Fifty person-years were added to the Department to enable it to cope with the added work arising out of the Charter. Of these, 25 person-years were for lawyers. These are included in the 39 person-years for lawyers approved in Supplementary Estimates. (2 (b) above).

4. (a) The salary cost for all lawyers employed by the Department was $20,175,000 for the first nine months of fiscal year 1982-83. (b) The salary cost for the same period for lawyers dealing with legal work arising out of the Charter was $865,000.

5. The lawyers on the staff of the Department prior to the proclamation of the Charter of Rights were fully committed in the ongoing work of the Department. To allow it to cope with the legal work arising out of the Charter, the Department sought and obtained approval for an additional 25 person-years for lawyers for 1982-83. The work involved goes far beyond interpretation of and advice on the Charter of Rights, and includes such additional activity as a review of existing laws, regulations and administrative practices to determine the extent to which they are in conflict with the Charter, and the preparation of remedial legislation, regulations or other measures; an ongoing review of proposed legislation and regulations at the drafting stage for compliance with the Charter; and ongoing counsel work as laws and practices are challenged before the Courts.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX

AMENDMENTS TO STATUTE LAW

The House resumed from Monday, January 31, 1983, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-139, to amend the Statute Law relating to Income Tax (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to add my voice to the chorus of frustrated and angry Canadians who have spoken out against the disaster and regressive measures contained in the last three budgets presented by this Government. On three occasions, November, 1981, June, 1982, and again in October, 1982, this Government has had the chance to bring forward measures which would help stimulate and promote growth in the stagnating economic climate which we know now exists in Canada. Three times, Mr. Speaker, it has failed miserably. The budgets which were presented were a debacle, a "hound's breakfast", if you will. Obviously, the Government itself knew belatedly the mess it had created, knew without reservation it had produced three "clunkers".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The House will appreciate this rule by silence.

Mr. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have all the more respect for you.

Everything this Government does points to state control, including the provisions in this tax Bill. It points to bail-outs for the large corporations, and I am afraid to think about what might happen to Canagrex when it comes back to this House. What will happen will be, of course, closure and, of course, state control. What is next, Mr. Speaker, is it the banks? What is it that will take this country straight into the real and utter debacle of socialism?

The first indication we had that these measures in this Bill were unpalatable and unworkable was when changes and amendments were hastily introduced. It was the second signal from a beleagured Government which gave indication of the serious nature of the problems it had created. The master craftsman, the architect of the first two monstrosities, the then Minister of Finance, was removed from his portfolio, and not before time. Having created havoc within the country, he was given the outside world to tinker with, a threatre of operation where he presumably can do less damage, given the levels of respect this Government has engendered in international circles, other than an attempt at world socialism. But this shuffle of Ministers did little, if anything, to assure Canadians personally, or the business community in particular, that the economy could be turned around. Does anyone honestly believe for an instant that Canadians now feel safer, now that the Department of Finance is in the hands of the man who was directly responsible for the disastrous National Energy Program? The fire is no worse now than the frying pan was.

The new Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) had the embarrassing task of changing some of the outlandish proposals of his predecessor, but in doing so, he added some objectionable ones of his own. The Bill before us today gives ample proof of this continuing debacle. There were approximately 168 provisions in the original Bill. Due to strong public opposition from the public, and from this Party in particular, some 42 changes have taken place. And the Party to my left had not very much to do with these changes. There were 42 changes, Mr. Speaker, roughly one-quarter of the provisions had to be changed, because this Government never stopped to look before it leaped. Four jumps forward, one jump back for the Canadian economy. In the meantime, confusion and chaos.

Back in December, 1981, I spoke on the Small Businesses Loans act which was directly affecting the budget at that time. I would just like to read from the record because I believe it is very interesting. It is on page 14135 of Hansard for Wednesday, December 16, 1981 and it reads:

> This budget is a destroyer of initiative. It is a destroyer of any form of elitism. It is the work of warp-minded bureaucrats who cannot define the meaning of the work risk and who have never met a payroll. I am including the so-called finance minister, unfortunately. Any self-respecting minister of finance in the federal system of government that we know, any self-respecting minister who has had such public opposition of the budget and its contents from the public and from business, any minister who has made such wide-ranging changes in the tax system without consulting small business, any minister who has made a $600 million mistake, any minister who has made three major changes as an admission of error, would and should resign.

Since then, we have had 39 more changes. These changes from November 12 to December 18 include MURBs, reorganizations, reserves, capital cost allowances, soft costs work in progress, restricted interest expenses, retiring allowances, accrual of interest income, IACCs, small business bonds, loans to non-residents and employer housing loans, prescribed rate of interest, DPSPs, life insurance, life insurance policy holders, contractual commitment, airline passes, jet fuel, fiscal arrangements, charitable foundations, federal sales tax, capital cost allowances. All of these have been spoken on at length by my colleagues. Then there have been changes with regard to the automobile standby charge, corporate distribution tax, forward averaging, IACCs, life insurance, all on June 28, 1982. The litany of horrors goes on and on.

As I sat in the House, Mr. Speaker, and heard these three previous budgets, as a small businessman I could not believe the confusion and contradictory nature of the changes and proposals which have had such a serious impact on small business in this country. I would remind the Members opposite that 65 per cent of the businesses in this country are classified as small businesses, and these businesses are the most penalized because of the inept handling of finance by this Government. This is one area which I can speak on from personal experience. Seeing and hearing these proposals—many now rescinded but most still in place—I could almost feel a personal vendetta by the Minister of Finance toward my small business and my employees, not to mention the farmer or the insurance man, etc. Let me illustrate.

Many small-businessmen and farmers, who planned on setting aside funds for their retirement, will suffer as the result of the abolition of the IAACs. The 12.5 per cent dividend distribution tax and the half year convention on capital cost allowances, a subject which has been gone into in great depth here this afternoon, will hurt small-businessmen. Married couples, who now each own a dwelling, usually a home and a cottage, will now be subject to capital gains taxes on one of the residences. The proposed tax liability for directors will discourage individuals from serving on boards of directors. Employees will now be penalized by the inclusion in taxable income of all interest subsidies from an employer, and there will be a deterrent to education through the restriction on education deductions. Employees who have the use of an employer-owned or leased automobile for personal use will now be taxed according to a complicated formula. If I have time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go into that in great detail.

The Government is penalizing the one thing in this economy of ours which works, that is sales. A person who uses a car on company business will generate sales, which in turn generates production, and that is what we so desperately need in Canada. Canadians will no longer be allowed to deduct interest on loans taken out to purchase registered retirement savings plans. Accrual taxation of life insurance, while watered down from the initial proposal, remains a deterrent to potential purchasers.

In addition to the disastrous effects this Bill will have on the Canadian business community, it raises problems for individual Canadians. The language of the Bill is so complex as to be virtually incomprehensible. It is the most complex piece of legislation since the woebegone days of 1971 when there was supposedly tax reform. I believe Canadians deserve more. They deserve a taxation Act they can know and understand, one which is written in simple style. They do not need an Act which requires the skill of a Philadelphia lawyer to interpret every word and nuance. They do not need tax consultants to explain what it means. Just to give you an idea of what I mean, Mr. Speaker, let me quote from page 58a of the Act as follows:

Clause 20: (1) and (2). The amendment to subparagraph 44(1)(e)(iii) and the new subsection 44(1.1) would implement paragraph (36) of the Income Tax Motion, which is quoted in the note to subclause 12(6).

Subparagraph 44(1)(e)(iii) at present reads as follows:

And on and on. That should really make Canadian taxpayers understand what it is all about. In particular, they do not need two Ministers of Finance in a row going flip-flop in their minds over the tax system, making these 40 some odd changes to date. Of course, those who suffer the most under these regressive measures are low-income Canadians who gain nothing from the lowering of marginal tax rates, and who will lose more proportionately from partial deindexation. The non-deductibility of interest on money borrowed to purchase RRSPs will certainly discourage personal investment. The Government's plan to tax benefits resulting from share purchase loans will reduce the trend toward employee share ownership. Because this Bill will deny registration for future deferred profit-sharing plans which allow an owner, such as myself, to qualify as a beneficiary of the plan, many small, owner-managed firms will not bother instituting such plans, leaving both owners and employees without job related retirement income.

I would like to take a moment, Mr. Speaker, to touch on one of the most important segments not addressed in this budget, the right of Canadians to own property and to have a tax reduction for the ownership of that property. I would like to address this as the blurb on MURB. Among those groups in society which are in drastic need of some direction and assistance from Government are homeowners and home buyers. The Progressive Conservative Government proposed making mortgage interest payments and municipal property taxes a deductible expense from taxable income. This program would have provided a major stimulus to the economy and would have aided thousands of Canadians who have a strong desire to own their own homes. I ask people to think about the fact that that program would have been coming into its final year, and think of what it would have done for those myriads of Canadians who have the ideals I have just stated. At the time the Government scoffed at the idea and rejected this important program out of hand. But what did the Government offer as an alternative? This is the interesting part. On 18 separate occasions in this House—and I have Hansard with me documenting what I am about to say—in the period from November 13, 1980 to November 16, 1981, the then Minister responsible for housing, when queried on the sorry state of housing in Canada and the Government's do-nothing attitude, referred each and every time to MURBs as the magic solution. Hansard makes very interesting reading. Every time we asked him about housing, he stood in his place and said: "MURB, MURB, MURB". Well, where are the MURBs? They have been cancelled, and so has the chance of Canadians for mortgage relief. Where in this Bill, Mr. Speaker, is there any mention of programs which will be of benefit to homeowners or home buyers? Where is the tax relief we had planned to offer? Nowhere.

We were successful, in one of the points I mentioned, in deferring the tax from the wholesale level where the Government wanted to place it, rather than on the manufacturing level where it now rests. When the Minister of Finance could not explain exactly how the measures were even going to be put in place, he said that the change would be 1 per cent or 2 per cent to make up the difference from the wholesale level. He said it was completely equitable. He said there would be no increase in the Government's take. Can you think of anything as ridiculous? There is a profit between the manufacturing and wholesale levels, and when you tax the lesser, who is the winner?

An Hon. Member: The Government.

Mr. Stewart: Absolutely. These figures I am going to quote will give you an idea of what I am talking about. Does the Government realize that in addition to the people who are classed as wholesale merchants there are about 5,000 establishments classed as agents and brokers? In 1978, the last reported year, their accumulated gross sales amounted to $16.3 billion. Given the growth over the past ten years it would be safe to assume that today we have between 26,500 and 30,000 wholesale establishments in the country made up of wholesale merchants, agents, brokers, etc. When you add tax at that level, you can understand just what is going to happen to our tax system. More and more will be grabbed by the Government. No respect for the Laffer curve, no respect for what economists in this country are saying about the need for increased productivity and incentives. In 1978, the last year for which we have complete statistics, wholesalers bought $53.9 billion worth of goods, sold those goods for $70.6 billion, and had the tax been in effect then, wholesalers would have had to pay federal sales tax on the difference. Three years ago that difference was approximately $17 billion. Who would have been the winner? Who would have been the loser? The Canadian taxpayer.

Let us look for a moment at that place, as I mentioned before, where everything happens, the point of sale. Nothing in the free world happens until something is sold. It is sold by a salesman, and in today's world this country runs on rubber and petroleum. This salesman must ride in a car. His selling helps the manufacturer increase productivity and, simply put, the circle keeps on widening and we derive taxes. But you cannot keep taxing that poor salesman until there is no incentive left. Often the commissions cannot cover what this Government has done to the salesman who drives the company car.

I would like to read into the record, Mr. Speaker, a letter from the Association of Canadian Travellers which I received. It reads as follows:

• (1750)

Dear Mr. Lalonde:

RE: LEGISLATION PROPOSED—PERSONAL USE BENEFITS OF A COMPANY OWNED VEHICLE

Our Association of 7000 Commercial Travellers feel you should reconsider the proposed Legislation and consider the increases if necessary within the 6% and 5% Guidelines at this time.

It is of great concern that this type of Legislation was placed on all individuals driving employer-owned autos without the advice of Professional Salesmen, "The Commercial Traveller". I am sure your Department Adviser did not research this area.

This Legislation requires study because there should be several degrees of Benefit for the various Salary levels. You could also have asked the families of Commercial Travellers of the Benefits to have a Company Car filled with Advertising, Sales Record Books, Samples, which have to be moved before personal family usage is possible. You might find that Travellers do not go for Sunday Drives. You might find that many Travellers end up with Medical problems from excessive driving.

A Company Car is worse than your own because the driver personally has to pay the parking lot dents. Most Companies will not allow the Salesman to put on a Trailer Hitch to pull a Holiday Trailer. You cannot add Tape Decks or Air Conditioning with all Firms, as these are luxuries.

The regulations seem to treat everyone regardless of circumstances in the same manner. It is completely ridiculous that a Commercial Traveller should pay in Taxable Benefits, over 3 years, for his working vehicle. A Car is a tool of his trade, like the plumber and his tools.

What would be next—tax the desk in an office because all Canadians don't have one. Tax all Office Workers because they have access to a Photocopier, a Typewriter, or the Postage Meter, etc.

Personal Insurance is high because of theft, i.e. Samples must be taken into the Motel room because some products freeze or would be stolen.

A great many Commercial Travellers that work in the Food, Drug, and Service Areas that have an employer supplied vehicle presently earn less than our Postal Workers. Many of these same Travellers will not even get the 6/5 because of the Economic downturn. Many Travellers are being asked to reduce outside trips, use less expensive Hotels, and are being advised there will be no raises this year at all.

In conclusion, our Association believes that the Standby charge, as proposed is excessive because it is based on the value to employer and not the net Benefit to the employee.

We support the suggestion by our fellow Commercial Travelling Organizations that effective date of this Legislation should be postponed until the 1983 Taxation year.

Yours truly,

A. D. McIntyre.

I most heartily concur with that letter, Mr. Speaker. This tax is not fair and is not imposed equitably. As proof of that let us make some assumptions about the use of a company owned automobile. First, we will assume that the capital cost was $10,000; second that it is company owned; third, that the operation cost is ten cents per kilometer, and fourth, that the cost of operating a standard size car is 18 cents per kilometer. Using the 12,000 kilometer rating that the Government wants to impose, the taxable benefit of the standby charge would be $2,400; operating charges would be $1,200; the cost of operation, taking 12,000 kilometers at 18 cents per kilometer, would be $2,160 and the excess taxation to the travelling salesman, who is producing trade for the country, would be $1,440.

When this became evident in my firm, Mr. Speaker, how many salesmen do you think were knocking on my door asking for a raise? It is totally inflationary and is opposed to what we are supposed to be accomplishing.

If we want to use a lesser amount for the standby charge below 12,000 kilometers, we can work with 10,000. In that case, the taxable benefit would be $2,000, operating charges, $1,000, cost of operation for 10,000 kilometers at 18 cents per kilometer, $1,800 and the excess taxation $1,200 or 66.6 per cent. The Bill is repulsive to individual Canadian taxpayers and small-businessmen, Mr. Speaker. I wish it could be withdrawn but I am sure that is a pipedream.

I should like to close by repeating something that I have said many times in this House and outside, Mr. Speaker. You cannot bring about prosperity by discouraging thrift; you cannot strengthen the weak by weakening the strong; you cannot help the wage earner by pulling down the wage payer; you cannot help the poor by destroying the rich; you cannot establish sound security on borrowed money; you cannot keep out of trouble by spending more than you earn; you cannot build character and courage by taking away man's initiative and independence; you cannot help men permanently by doing for them what they could and should do for themselves—and that means without regressive taxation, Mr. Speaker.

The words of Lincoln are as good today as when he wrote them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the rules of the House there is a period for question and answer. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) has the floor.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire about the irritation the Hon. Member has expressed about some of the changes in the tax measures. I will take, as he did, the example of the federal sales tax measures and point out to him that these reforms were introduced at the suggestion of such organizations as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. This tax change is intended to help Canadian manufacturers and to remove a discrimination that favours imported goods. When we introduced this idea, the Association asked for additional time to consider the proposal. That was granted. Now the Hon. Member uses this, among other things, as an example of retreat and confusion and insensitivity on the part of the Government.

Perhaps he would like to tell us if he would rather we listened to him and thereby create enormous confusion, or listen to such bodies as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which he purports to represent.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if the tax at the wholesale level is equitable, perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fisher) could explain why it was imposed at the wholesale level, but not on tobacco products. That is a multi-billion dollar business and the tax could easily be collected from the manufacturer but would be difficult to collect from the wholesale tobacconist, and why does the Government not impose the liquor tax in the same way?

The Hon. Member should consider how much more simple it would be to devise a scheme of collecting those taxes on imported products at the manufacturing level instead of at the wholesale level. Perhaps the Hon. Member did not hear the odds that I gave regarding the manufacturers and wholesalers. The simplistic answer to the problem is the one that has been traditional. It is only the Liberals who walk away from the traditional without any thought; Conservatives take a really good look before making fly-by-night changes. Customs duties could be brought up very simply to go along with manufacturing. That would leave wholesalers alone.

This should be examined from the point of view of the small-businessman. Usually they are not computerized while manufacturers are, and a simple entry into the computer will handle this for them. Most small businesses are not computerized and it means that a tax has to be added on to each invoice, in the case of drug sundries and other things.

The Hon. Member said that he did not know what a combine was; I would suggest that he does not know what small business is either.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance for a short question.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I am a small-businessman, like the Hon. Member. I should point out to him that the questions he has raised are the same ones that the CMA, CFIB and the Chamber of Commerce raised. That is why we suggested that there be a longer period available for a re-examination of the proposals. Even the Hon. Member has an opportunity to consider input, as the implementation of the proposals have been delayed. We welcome his ideas, and I will get a reply for him on cigarettes and alcohol.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member how he justifies attacking the process of listening to ordinary Canadians and calling the Government confusing and insensitive when it does listen to them and to the associations that represent them.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, long before any of this came up I sat on a commission that considered a White Paper that was sent to the federal Government years ago. It contained not one representation, but dozens. The only person who listened to us was Mr. Rodriguez who represented Nickel Belt at that time.

I should like the Hon. Member to understand how deep this goes. Those representations were made and I should like to show the Hon. Member the letters I received—

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 45 deemed to have been moved.

TRUST COMPANIES—ACTION TAKEN BY MINISTER. (B) QUERY RESPECTING ROLE OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, on January 26, I had occasion in this House to ask a question of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Cosgrove) regarding the affairs of Greymac, Seaway Trust and the other companies that are now under receivership or seizure by officers of the Government of Ontario.

• (1800)

The whole problem in relation to these trust companies has been expressed by Hon. Members on this side and, indeed, the general public. It is of major concern to the Province of Ontario right now. It has been bothering the House of Commons and its Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for a number of months, indeed, years.

The Government is responsible under the Constitution for banks, banking, money supply, interest rates and the various powers which go along with the creation and management of money. Consequently we have several organs of Government which are supposed to be responsible to be our policemen and to manage these affairs. We have a Trust Companies Act and a Loan Companies Act and a director. We have the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation which insures deposits to $20,000, and hopefully that will soon be $60,000 to protect those who deposit in loan and trust companies, banks and so on. We have an Inspector General of Banks. In addition, we have the actions of the Bank of Canada and the efforts which are supposed to be made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and his Department. All these actions are supposed to ensure for the people of Canada that our financial system is sound and secure.

Unfortunately there have been real stirrings, particularly in this session of Parliament, with respect to these financial institutions. The House will recall that earlier this year following a motion there was a special reference to the Finance Committee with respect to banks and bank profits. Very soon that Committee became a bank solvency committee, not a bank profit committee. In accordance with its deliberations, the Committee made reference to increasing deposit insurance to $60,000 and other recommendations to Government, all with the view to increasing the security of our financial system.

The House will also recall that when the Bank Act was before it, the former minister of state for finance gave solid undertakings, both in the House and in Committee, that he would introduce new loan and trust company provisions before the House. All we have had is a White Paper on the trust company matter, but no new statute or proposal from Government.

This matter has become quite serious. Seaway and Greymac are both federal corporations with respect to their mortgage operations. They were incorporated during the life of this Parliament. They are now in trouble. The Government has known of some of the problems for over a year. The Government has known that the officers behind Greymac in particular were involved in trying to get control of the Canadian Commercial Bank. There have been concerns expressed to the Government on the problems of Astra Trust and ReMor. The Government knows of the problems of Argosy. Prior to all this there were problems with British Mortgage and Trust and Atlantic Acceptance.

The whole question of the stability of our financial institutions is at stake. Every day that goes by with the Government stonewalling questions in the House concerning Seaway and Greymac, what it is doing and where it stands, causes further concern to depositors and others who want to deal with trust companies, loan companies and banks. In the view of this fact, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Bill now before the House should be expedited. Because it cannot be expedited unless the Government undertakes that this House will have a complete inquiry by a special committee into the activities of loans and trust companies generally, and into the activities of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Inspector General of Banks particularly, I say to you and the House, it is absolutely essential that the Government take its responsibilities seriously and deal very quickly with new methods of regulating and controlling those who have the right to take deposits from the public, make mortgage loans and generally operate our financial system as financial intermediaries. The whole question of our system of finance is at stake. The Government has been hiding. We have had sleeping policemen on the job. There are problems and it is time for the Government to do something about them.

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, because Crown Trust Company, Greymac Trust Company and Seaway Trust Company are provincially incorporated, the federal Department of Insurance has no jurisdiction over their activities. Greymac Mortgage and Seaway Mortgage are federally incorporated mortgage loan companies licensed under the Loan Companies Act and supervised by the federal Department of Insurance. The activities of Greymac Mortgage and Seaway Mortgage have been monitored by the Department.

The Loan Companies Act stipulates that the licence of each mortage loan company shall expire on March 31 of each year and may be renewed from year to year, subject to any qualification or limitation that the Minister considers expedient. The Act also stipulates that the licence may be renewed for any term less than a year.

I can report that since March 31, 1982, for a number of reasons, the licences of Greymac Mortgage and Seaway Mortgage have only been renewed for successive periods not exceeding two months. I can also report that as early as April in the case of Greymac Mortgage and July in the case of Seaway Mortgage, limitations were placed in their licences aimed at severely limiting any significant growth in the amount of money the companies could accept from the public. Subsequent to that time, further limitations were placed on the companies' licences and additional action was taken to protect the position of their bond and debenture holders.

On January 7, 1983, the Superintendent took control of the companies' assets, pursuant to Section 73 of the Loans Companies Act, and reported to the Minister, pursuant to Section 73.1 of that act, that in his opinion the companies' assets were not sufficient, having regard to all circumstances, to give adequate protection to their bond and debenture holders. Before the Minister may take any action in respect of this report he must give the companies an opportunity to be heard; that process is now in progress.

Concerning the provincially incorporated Crown Trust, Greymac Trust and Seaway Trust, and the reason why the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation has agreed, if necessary, to lend them funds on a secured basis to meet their liquidity needs, all three companies are members of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. One of the powers of the Corporation is to lend member institutions funds to help them meet their liquidity needs. In addition, because the three trust companies are member institutions, the CDIC stands ready to meet its insurance commitments to the companies' insured depositors, should that be necessary.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION—CANADIAN NAVAL CONTRIBUTION. (B) MODERNIZATION OF VESSELS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening in reference to a question I asked of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Lamontagne) on January 31, concerning the status of our destroyers and the DELEX Program. I pointed out during my question that the Canadian Navy is unable to participate fully in NATO exercises because of the unsuitability and age of the equipment. I am concerned tonight with my supplementary question which was:

Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. We are spending over $200 million on a destroyer life extension project, as he knows, to extend the life of 16 ancient destroyers.

Gatineau has just come out of the DELEX Program, a 24 year old vessel having its life extended another eight years. It does not provide for, nor has it had installed any form of anti-missile capability. The lessons of the Falklands point to the necessity of that. These ships will not be able to defend themselves in the event of hostilities. Will the Minister tell us why they are only doing half the job of modernizing those vessels?

In answer, the Minister of National Defence stated:

Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that behind the policy of the DELEX Program, which is a program to modernize our vessels, we are cognizant of the time that we will in fact be able to use these vessels. For the old class of 56 and 57, for example, we will refit them so that they can be used for another seven or eight years, until the new frigates are in service. There is no use spending millions of dollars on something that we will not be able to use in five or six years. However, on the newer class frigates there will be a more complex DELEX Program so that they will be useful for a longer period of time. It is just a question of judgment.

It is not the confusion of the answer that bothers me as much as the fact that, for a considerable length of time yet to come, we will be unable to have any naval vessels which can defend themselves in conventional, non-nuclear war. In the case of a non-nuclear war, Canada would be assigned two major roles; the anti-submarine warfare role and protection and reinforcement convoys. Any future war is likely to be over quickly enough that it will be a "come as you are" war. We will not have time to build ships after the war starts. The Falklands conflict gave military and political leaders some insight as to what can happen, and we should have learned some lessons from it.

Let us consider what the naval forces in the Western world are likely to confront in any future war. I would like to illustrate part of the Soviet capacity of surface ships and submarines. Concerning Cruise missile carriers, there are 50 Cruise-missile-carrying nuclear powered submarines in the Russian fleet at the present time. There are 20 Cruise-missile-carrying diesel-electric powered submarines in its fleet. The Soviets have just deployed a new KIROV class destroyer which carries 20 long range, or 500 kilometre range, Cruise missiles. In addition, there are 26 guided missile cruisers, 38 guided missile destroyers, and 28 guided missile frigates in the fleet.

The largest Soviet surface ship is the Kiev-class aircraft carrier. Two have been deployed and two more are under construction. The Kievs are armed with anti-ship Cruise missiles, anti-submarine and over-the-horizon target acquisition helicopters, anti-aircraft missiles, anti-submarine rockets and missiles, and the FORGER vertical and short-takeoff-and landing aircraft.

The common factor in recent Soviet naval developments is increasing size. Larger than their predecessors, these new ships and submarines have larger weapon magazines and greater endurance. The Soviet Naval Air Force has been receiving the supersonic swing-wing backfire bomber, which is equipped with AS-6 anti-ship missiles. That missile has a range of more than 200 kilometres. To complement the anti-ship missiles, the Soviet Union has developed and deployed two types of low-orbiting satellites for global ocean surveillance.

Having regard to ship defence, what must any modern fleet need? It needs patrol aircraft for reconnaissance. It would also be well advised to have the Airborne Warning and Control System Aircraft. This is one of the things Britain found itself desperately short of during the Falklands war. A fleet must have long range air defence missiles to attack enemy launching platforms, anti-submarine weapons such as ASROC, which is a Mark 46 torpedo on an unguided rocket, and uses a homing device to find submarines to a depth of 11 kilometres, modern depth charge launchers and ASW helicopters. A fleet needs short range point defence, such as anti-missile missiles to shoot down attacking missiles, or a sophisticated electronic countermeasures system to jam the missiles' guidance system, or a chaff dispenser. We have none of these. It also needs close in automatic gun systems.

What does Canada have? We have 23 destroyers, of which three are not operational, and only four of the remaining 20 are modern. By the time the six new patrol frigates have all been delivered, in 1991, Canada will have a ten ship navy.

The youngest ship, apart from the DDH-280s, will be an Annapolis class, which was produced in 1964. The DDH-280 has been fitted with the Sea Sparrow system which, as Commodore Healey told the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, has a very limited capability against second generation missiles. I notice that an advertisement for the Sea Sparrow states, "The Sea Sparrow has successfully intercepted missiles as well as Cruise missile type targets and has proved its ECCM capabilities". I must say that there is a certain amount of puffery in that advertisement, because the type of missiles that they can intercept are not the Exocet. In fact, Canada has no protection for its ships against the Exocet or any other sea skimming missile.

Canada's contribution to the Supreme Allied Command Atlantic this year will be the 26-year old HMCS Margaree, which has no missiles and 1960s technology. The Destroyer Life Extension Program relates to 16 destroyers. First will be the St. Laurent class which has six vessels, 27 years of age at the present time. They will not get any new equipment but the hull and machinery repairs will keep them safe. The MacKenzie class has four vessels, 21 years of age. The improved Restigouche class has four vessels, 25 years of age and the Annapolis class has two vessels, only 19 years of age, and they are going to treat them the same as the improved Restigouche.

• (1815)

Just in closing I might say that the Deputy Minister of Defence at that time, on May 18, 1982 said:

> The DELEX will not be fitted with a missile-to-missile capability ... Their main capability is still in the anti-submarine role. If you ended up in a surface-to-surface action where they could run into that type of missile, they would be in very great difficulty.

I look forward to whatever the Parliamentary Secretary can say that might comfort me in this matter.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will first of all touch on the DELEX program. Quite frankly, it is rather surprising to hear the Hon. Member's concerns in this regard. The Hon. Member knows that the DELEX program was in the departmental approval process between 1977 and 1980 and in fact received Treasury Board's final approval in January 1980 when the Hon. Member was Minister of National Defence. I wonder if it has escaped the Hon. Member's notice that it was he who approved the DELEX program.

From the outset, the DELEX program was constrained in order to accommodate the expenditure within the DND envelope; while still permitting the continued allocation of funds for new equipment; such as the Canadian patrol frigate.

While the total cost of the DELEX program, when completed, will be in the area of $200 million, I think it is important to point out that these funds will be spread over 16 ships. The funds were assigned as follows: all 16 ships, regardless of age, went through a thorough refit, thus ensuring that they could safely proceed to sea for some additional years beyond their projected retirement date. Approximately $80 million of DELEX funds were allocated to this expenditure. The remaining funds were assigned to ships in order to maintain a combat capability for their remaining life, and were assigned to individual ships on the basis of how much longer we anticipate that they would have to remain in service before new ships could replace them.

In this division, or allocation of combat capability funds, the St. Laurent class, our oldest ships, received nothing. The MacKenzie class received approximately $7 million per ship; the improved Restigouche class received approximately $17 million per ship and the Annapolis class, our newest steam destroyers, received approximately $19 million each.

It is true that none of these older ships received an anti-missile missile system. The funds available were simply not sufficient to make major changes in old ships and preserve capital for the real requirement of acquiring new ships. However, in time of imminent conflict, such changes can be incorporated into our active fleet.

However, in dealing with these newer ships we have made several high technology improvements. In the case of Gatineau and the improved Restigouche class, it has already received most of the new DELEX equipment and will receive the remainder when it is available from the production lines. These include: (a) improved secure communications; (b) improved air warning radar; (c) upgraded gun/fire control system; (d) improved electronic warfare system; (e) a new missile decoy system; (f) a new automated link and plotting system and (g) an improved Identification Friend or Foe system. Similar improvements will fitted in the other improved Restigouche and Annapolis classes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but the time allotted to him has expired.

GARRISON DIVERSION—RESTORATION OF UNITED STATES FUNDING—REQUEST THAT MINISTER TAKE ACTION. (B) REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY NORTH DAKOTA OFFICIAL

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Mr. Speaker, I was most distressed over the $22.33 million recently allocated by the United States Government for the continuing construction of the Garrison Diversion Project. However, I was extremely perturbed when I learned that the United States House-Senate Conference Committee had been persuaded to reinstate $4 million of funding for Garrison, originally voted against in the United States House of Representatives.

The very first legislative setback in the project's history occurred in mid-December when Congress denied the allocation of $4 million to the detrimental project. This was the only glimmer of hope for Canada's environmental welfare seen in the 18-year history of Garrison. Finally, it was felt by some, Canada had made headway in the battle to convince the United States that the irrigation project would be harmful to our waterways and Manitoba's fishing and agricultural industries.

One week later, however, the moneys were restored. As reported in the January 3, 1983 Time Magazine, Congressman Silvio Conte publicly stated in Washington that the driving force behind the completion of Garrison, North Dakota's Senator Mark Andrews urged the House-Senate Conference Committee to reinstate funding for Garrison or risk having him vote against their pet projects.

To toy with such matters of importance to Canada is, I feel, a disgrace. Whether the United States House-Senate Conference Committee decided to vote for or against the proposed funding is not the issue here. The fact is the seriousness of the Garrison Diversion Project and, in particular, that the proven harmful effects it will have are not being taken into consideration. Furthermore, for Senators to base the logic of their vote on the criterion of ensuring the life of their own pet projects is totally ludicrous.

For 18 years Canadians have been expressing their objections to the continuation of this project. It is a known fact that if Garrison is completed, Canadian waters will be contaminated, causing Manitoba's industries to suffer. The project will result in a violation of the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty between Canada and the United States, thereby totally disregarding the affirmation of the International Joint Commission. All evidence compiled on the project points to the disastrous consequences it would have on our country.

The facts have been presented time and time again. I have recommended to this House on numerous occasions the need to make representation to the United States Government, airing our valid concern and objection to the completion of the project. I have been in contact with the Ambassador of the United States, His Excellency Paul H. Robinson, Jr., obtaining his assurances that in no way would the United States violate its obligation to the Boundary Waters Treaty or ignore the recommendations of the International Joint Commission.

Still there are those resolved to completing the project with utter indifference to the outcome for Canada. In The Globe and Mail of November 25, 1982, Robert Wefald, the Attorney General for North Dakota stated, and I quote:

The bottom line is the project will be built if the United States Government decides it is in our best interests.

However, according to Congressman Conte and the Joint House-Senate Conference Committee, the best interests of a country are irrelevant. It is the better interests of individual Senators' pet projects which are of prime importance and which, as proven with the restoration of funds for Garrison, come first. For this reason I feel it imperative to call upon this House and ask that immediate steps be taken to ascertain the manner in which this inane situation be dealt with.

On June 9, 1982, an all-Party Committee of the House of Commons travelled to Washington and voiced the concern of the Canadian people. It has been made obvious that again we must show our opposition to this project. I agree wholeheartedly with the recommendation of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), that this House instruct its Ministers and give an indication to the Province of Manitoba to have a committee present itself to Washington to put up a strong showing against funding for Garrison. I must stress the need for speed due to the announced $22.33 million more now allocated to the detrimental Garrison Diversion Project.

Mr. Jean Lapierre (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs). Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his keen interest in the Garrison Diversion Unit Project. I would like to reassure him that this Government has more confidence in the political system of the United States than to think that, as he puts it, an individual Senator's pet project could be a base or a criterion for them to approve the project of such magnitude.

If I may give some history, Mr. Speaker, I would say that the Garrison Diversion Unit, first authorized in 1965 by the U.S. Congress, continues to be a subject of serious concern to the federal Government, as well as to the provincial Government of Manitoba. No one on either side of the Canada-U.S. border contests the fact that if the unit is built to full size it, "would cause severe and irreversible damage to the Manitoba ecosystem and, in particular, to the commercial and sport fisheries in Canada,". This quotation is taken from the 1977 International Joint Commission Report on Garrison, which concluded that, "those portions of the Garrison Diversion Unit which could affect waters flowing into Canada not be built at this time".

The IJC Report, and this conclusion, form the foundation for Canadian opposition to the Garrison Project. We firmly believe, and have so informed the U.S. Government and Congress, that Canadian and Manitoba interests can only be protected through modifications of the project, so that there are no transfers of water from the Missouri River basin into waters of the Hudson Bay basin which flow into Canada.

U.S. authorities have recognized the validity of our position and have formally stated, as has the Ambassador to the Hon. Member, that the United States will comply with its legal obligations to Canada under the 1909 Boundary Waters Treaty not to pollute Canadian waters. Thus, we should not attach much weight to statements by U.S. State officials such as those attributed recently to the Attorney General of North Dakota, or even the Senator from North Dakota, that the Garrison Project will be proceeded with regardless of Canadian or IJC views.

As Hon. Members know, the Congress appropriated $4 million for the project for the fiscal year 1983, despite an initial rejection of this funding by the U.S. House of Representatives. The level of funding proposed for the fiscal year 1984 by the administration is $22 million. While this is a very large increase in the appropriation level, it still must be accepted by Congress. Given the initial defeat of the 1983 appropriation, it is quite possible that Congress will reduce drastically or eliminate an appropriation of this magnitude.

Opposition to the Garrison Project as currently designed is on the increase. We believe that this opposition will influence the administration and Congress to be more forthcoming in finding ways to meet domestic U.S. and Canadian concerns with the design of the project. We will follow up all reasonable means to achieve this goal. We thank the Hon. Member for his continuing support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock a.m.

At 6.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed from Monday, December 20, 1982, consideration of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported, (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 21697).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) to continue his speech, I should inform him and the House that the Hon. Member had already spoken for two minutes before Christmas and, therefore, under the new rules has eight minutes of his speaking time left.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg-St. James): Mr. Speaker, I hope that people understand that the two minutes that you referred to are the two minutes that I spoke on this Bill in a particular debate, as before Christmas I spoke in this House, obviously, for much more than two minutes.

I am glad to be recognized to speak in this debate, but in a way it is sad because it follows the arbitrary action of the Government to impose closure on this debate. I suppose that the Government moved in that direction because the arguments that have been put forward from this side of the House are beginning to hit home and it is feeling the heat. The Government probably feels that if it allowed this debate to continue, it might feel the continuing pressure to withdraw this legislation and to change its policy of six and five as it applies to Family Allowances.

The legislation that is before us today, Bill C-132, the application of six and five to Family Allowances in this country, is fundamentally an attack on human dignity. I want to elaborate on that. It is an attack on human dignity in the sense that, first and foremost, six and five is the Government's economic policy. It is its contention that inflation is the most important problem in this country and it has demonstrated to everyone that fighting inflation is its priority. In other words, by the application of this six and five program, the Government has accepted continued unemployment for at least 1.5 million people. This figure is the official statistic of unemployment in this country. So having 1.5 million people unemployed has not yet moved this Government to make unemployment its priority. It continues with its misguided efforts at wrestling inflation to the ground, and that is what six and five is all about. Fundamentally and effectively the Government has abandoned any notion of providing employment for everyone who wants and needs employment, and has abandoned the policy objective of full employment.

In these times that is a direct attack on human dignity, because every person has a basic need to engage in productive activity. In this society in which we live, the way we distribute revenue is through the employment that we have. In our society it is necessary to have a good income in order to live a decent life and sustain one's feelings of self-worth and dignity. Six and five, as an economic policy, places the priority on fighting inflation, downgrades the importance of employment and undermines the dignity which the average Canadian enjoys.

Unemployment not only hurts the person who is unemployed, it also hurts the person who has a job. It does that because everyone is insecure in their employment, and they live in fear. To live in fear is a very negative experience and adds in no way whatsoever to the quality of life in this country.

The reason I emphasize the employment aspect of six and five, when we are talking about Family Allowances, is that it is hard to understand what the Government is doing in applying six and five to Family Allowances. In the first instance what it appears to be doing is attacking the notion of universality in social programs. In other words, it has capped the increase of Family Allowances, which is a universal program which goes to every citizen in the country. In order to deflect criticism, the Government has added something to the Child Tax Credit, which is a selective program. It has made a fundamental choice to go with selective programs as opposed to universal programs.

The problem with that approach in the social policy field is that it is an attack on human dignity. I say that because we know that once programs start to move down the road of selectivity, once you have to prove that you are poor before you can get social benefits, these programs have attached to them a negative stigma which says that anybody who applies is less than an equal, less than the person who does not have to apply.

This is a retrograde step in terms of social policy in this country and a direct attack on the respect that each individual receives. This Bill needs to be withdrawn. It should be put in the ashcan. The Government has to come up with better social policies that go in the right direction, and with an effective economic policy.

One of the problems in moving this Government to withdraw this legislation is that the whole of the Opposition, the Official Opposition and the NDP Opposition in this House, are not united. The Progressive Conservative Party have taken two stands on the six and five program. That has made them ineffective in fighting this inhumane action by the Government.

When the six and five legislation first came out, the Tories voted for it. They moved in one direction. They did not seem to understand the implications of the six and five legislation, the fact that it places a priority on fighting inflation and downgrades the problems of unemployment. They did not seem to understand that this legislation would be applied to Family Allowances, old age pensions and Public Service pensions. When the specific legislation applying to Family Allowances came into the House, they reversed themselves and went in the other direction.

What message is the Government to take from that? It takes the message that the Official Opposition, the Tory Party, does not know what it is doing and cannot mount an effective attack against the Government, even though the legislation is inhumane.

Mr. Lewis: What about the polls?

Mr. Keeper: One of the Tories says, "What about the polls?" I am sure that is a reference to the fact that the Tories are riding very high in the public opinion polls right now. It is good to be high in the public opinion polls in politics, but it is also necessary and important to look at the substance and quality of legislation before the House.

One of the reasons that the Tories are in trouble now and are such an ineffective Opposition is that they always have their eye on the public opinion polls. That is why they are into a leadership convention. They are afraid that their present Leader could not take advantage of their high standing in the public opinion polls and could not take them to office.

A single-minded eye on the possibility of winning in the public opinion polls is not good enough. It leads to ineffective opposition. If the Tory Party could get its act together, make up its mind about six and five and join us in fighting this attack on human dignity, this attack on Family Allowances, we could do something about it. When the Tory Party decided it did not want legislation that affected the oil industry to go through this House, the bells rang for two weeks. If the Tories were to adopt the same attitude with regard to this legislation, we could stop it. An effective and united Opposition could stop this inhumane action and restore human dignity as a value in public policy.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper) has again shown the classic socialist approach to his Party's philosophy. They truly believe that if they say something often enough, people will come to believe it as they have come to believe it. They truly are ideologues who want to remake mankind into a socialistic image, but they always get botched up when they deal with real people so that they find themselves falling behind in the polls.

They continually refer to this bell ringing episode as if it were an episode to save the oil industry. It had nothing to do with that at all, Mr. Speaker, because all of the Bills went through. The bell ringing incident was because the Government was trying to jam 15 pieces of legislation through in one omnibus Bill. We knew, as the Opposition, that Canadians would never be able to come in and speak properly to that Bill in its omnibus form, that it would set a precedent so that in the future the Government, in theory at least, could bring in three or four omnibus Bills per Session and pass statutes, in effect, as schedules to that omnibus Bill which would affect many, many different areas. So we let the bells ring, with no support from the NDP, until the Government agreed to split that Bill into individual parts. As you know, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I must draw to the attention of the Hon. Member that he is not presently speaking to the motion now before the House. I would suggest that he come to that soon.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-132, a Bill to amend the Family Allowances Act, is the third string in the Government's program to attack the poor people of Canada. Over the years the Government has built up these huge deficits which have led to the inflation which is now leading to the economic collapse in which we find ourselves, so people are having to cut back. We agreed with six and five as an over-all program to cut back in the future, but we certainly did not agree to the Government applying it in these specific areas. As you know, we opposed it when the Government tried to break contracts with retired federal civil servants, we opposed it with respect to the senior citizens, and we are opposing it with respect to the Family Allowances, because, Mr. Speaker, it is being applied unfairly.

As I mentioned before, the Minister herself, who receives $100,000 plus, will this year take an additional $6,500 out of the Canadian economy even though she is not working one bit harder than she was last year. We, as Members of Parliament, will be taking an additional $3,900 out of the economy in 1983, even though we are working not one bit harder than last year. Yet we expect the mothers receiving Family Allowances to take only 6 per cent when they had guaranteed to them full indexation. That is not fair, Mr. Speaker. It might seem like very little money, $17 per child per year, but that $17 to the mother who is barely at the poverty line is much more significant than the $3,900 is to you and me, because our actual cost of living has not gone up $3,900.

There is a solution, however. Had the Government been genuinely fair in treating Canadians, it would have brought in a law that said that rather than six and five, there would be a flat across-the-board payment—just to pick a figure, say,

$1,000 across the board. You and I would get $1,000 and that probably would cover our cost-of-living increase. Well, why not give that to the senior citizens, because their actual cost of living has gone up by that much?

I put that argument to the Minister a few days ago and she stood up with some response which was totally out of context. It was almost as if she did not understand the point I was making, which was that in times of hard inflation when we as a nation decide there has to be a cutback, the way to achieve that cutback is to give a flat across-the-board settlement of, say, $1,000 or $2,000. The people near the poverty line would then come up and those at the top would come down, and we as a society would get closer and closer together.

As I have argued before, the real effect of inflation where you have across-the-board settlements of 6 per cent or 10 per cent is that the rich become incredibly rich and the poor just barely inch up, so that as a Canadian society we get further and further apart. Surely during times of inflation we should be trying to come closer together, particularly when you are trying to adjust to the situation. That has been my argument, Mr. Speaker, and that is why I can stand with absolutely no hesitation and argue against the position of the New Democratic Party and say we are opposing this specific Bill even though we are in agreement with general restraint across the country. We can all agree on restraint. It is the application of it, where you have to decide whether or not you are being fair, that is important.

The NDP push this nation into huge deficits, Mr. Speaker, to the point where 25 per cent to 30 per cent of every tax dollar which comes into the federal Government now goes to service the debt. Where does that 30 per cent go? It goes to people who already have wealth. So when you build up deficits and top that with inflation, you get a concentration of wealth in the hands of people with money already, rather than the poor. That is the direct fall-out from the policies of deficit financing that we on this side have been arguing against for so many years.

I will continue to say that again and again and again, Mr. Speaker, because Canadians are beginning to realize that the real problem is deficits. They lead to inflation as night follows day, and inflation, as day follows night, leads to economic collapse. It has happened time and time again throughout history, in Canada and in every other country in the world, and until Canadians come to realize that, take their sovereignty back, and real limits on the power of Governments to interfere in their lives, we will continue this circle through history.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak at report stage on Bill C-132. Before I get into my prepared text I would like to take issue with my colleagues to the left, if I may very briefly, on two items.

Firstly, as to whether or not we have changed our position on restraint, I would tell my colleagues to the left that we have definitely maintained our position on restraint. We have supported the Government in the broad principle of six and five. Where we have separated ourselves from the Liberal Party is that we do not believe that the errors of the Liberal Government should be corrected on the backs of retired civil servants, senior citizens and those families who are suffering in Canada today as a result of Liberal Government policies.

As to the offer to unite with the New Democratic Party, I should tell them that we are very, very fussy as to whom we unite with. We do not fall in and out of bed as quickly and as easily as they do. While I am talking about beds, I might point out that there is one very great hindrance to any uniting with the NDP, and that is their stated policy on bordellos and licensed houses of ill repute, which policy we know from the words of the NDP justice critic. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to deal with that very pertinent issue right now.

Now, as to the purpose of the Bill, the Liberal Government is planning full steam ahead, unless common sense prevails, to cap the indexing on Family Allowances to 6 per cent despite the fact that, due to its policies in the past, inflation has skyrocketed into double digits and it has done nothing about it. It is clear, Mr. Speaker, to this side of the House that the Liberal Party has not won the battle against inflation. What it did was create such economic chaos that nobody could buy anything. It won the battle against inflation by creating the chaos and making it so no one could afford to buy. That certainly brings prices down because manufacturers are not manufacturing for inventory, they are clearing out inventory.

There is no question on this side that we feel the indexing of Family Allowances to the level of inflation should be maintained. That is why my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), put in an amendment to endeavour to stop this Government from carrying on ad nauseam with its decision to fight inflation, and then take credit for beating inflation on the backs of the poor families of Canada. My colleague moved an amendment to remove capping from the year 1984, as an appeal to the Government and to common sense, to restrict capping to 1983. This was done because we are against the principle espoused by the Liberal Government that old age pensioners, families and retired civil servants should fight inflation. I know that is the position of the Minister and the Government but we feel it is not fair to ask them to bear that burden. As a result of Liberal Government policies, more and more Canadian families are living at the poverty level. I am not sure whether that has ever been stated as firm Government policy, but it is certainly a firm happening in the country.

• (1125)

In my riding of Simcoe North there is 33 per cent unemployment in the Town of Midland as a result of the failure of the Government to react to economic circumstances throughout Canada and the world. Having created that chaos, that hardship and unemployment, the Government feels it will correct the situation by cutting back on the legitimate indexing of Family Allowances.

Time and time again we have suggested that there are better ways to fight the battle. We have suggested that the Minister not fight the battle of restricted Government spending by setting up the Macdonald Commission and paying $825 per day to Mr. Macdonald and lesser amounts to the other members who are not aspirants. We notice that Mr. Macdonald gets more money when he travels but we are not sure why. We are not sure that he has to travel at all or that he should even have been appointed. I would ask the Minister to have her officials calculate how many Family Allowance cheques could be maintained if we did not spend $825 per day for Mr. Macdonald and his confrères. Perhaps the Government could support the motion for capping to 1983 only if it were to dump the Macdonald Commission.

I also suggest to the Minister that the Government should tackle unemployment rather then watching the number of unemployed people increase and doing nothing about it.

It almost seems as if there cannot be a program without an acronym. We get nothing but acronyms from the Government, but no jobs. That is why the Family Allowance is needed at the minimum family income level. It would assist families to receive a cheque once a month, not a tax credit which it seems to me is worked into the income tax return and brings about a refund cheque in May of 1984. A Family Allowance cheque issued once a month is sorely needed by the families of Canada. We suggest that it is unfair, inappropriate and should not be on the cards that the families who need the money have it taken away by the Government.

I do not want to say anything more than that, Mr. Speaker. We will support the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West, which is made in good faith and would give the Government an opportunity to come to its senses on the capping of the indexation of Family Allowances. We will also vote against the Bill.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Mr. Speaker, there is not a Government Member speaking to this amendment, not a Government Member standing in the last series of speakers to speak on this Bill.

This Bill caps Family Allowances. I do not support this package of legislation. It obviously sets the tone and the direction of the Government. The application of the six and five program has been brought before us in four different pieces of legislation up to this time: Bill C-124 will cap the increases allowed to wage earners, Bill C-131 will cap Old Age Security pensions, Bill C-132 which we are discussing today will cap Family Allowances, and Bill C-133 will cap indexing on pensions of retired public servants.

• (1130)

I would point out to Hon. Members that if they look at each piece of legislation in isolation, the Government may be able to give some justification to them. However, if one looks at what the Government is doing with the global package, it is plain that the Government's major thrust is against those who are vulnerable and defenseless in our society. I suggest that this is the condemnation that is at the door of the Government.

The supreme irony of this program lies in the front page article in The Globe and Mail of today wherein it is revealed that the new Chairman of the Macdonald Commission, Donald Macdonald, will cost the taxpayers of Canada $800 a day. That is only for the Chairman. His salary will be a minimum of $800 a day in addition to the per diem expenses he will receive.

Has it occurred to Hon. Members that that minimum of $800 a day is what an unemployed person receives on his monthly UIC cheque? This incredible irony shows the callousness of the Government. This is a man who receives income from the boards on which he serves of various corporations. No doubt he receives a stipend from the law firm of which he is a partner. He receives consultant fees for the work he does for corporations such as McDonnell Douglas which, incidentally, signed a contract with the Government. As well, he receives a generous pension as a former Member of the Cabinet. While he receives all this income, the poor, impecunious, poverty-stricken Donald Macdonald will be propped up with an extra $800 a day. Meanwhile my constituency office—and I am sure this is true for all Members—is besieged with telephone calls from those who are in the snags of the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Then we have Tom Shoyama.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I would ask the Hon. Member to relate his remarks to the motion now before the House.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, you will remember that I introduced this particular segment of my remarks by showing the incredible irony that exists between the legislation we are discussing today, which is to cap Family Allowances for families in Canada, and what the fat cats get who happen to be friends of the Liberal Government. This Government is committing an unconscionable crime.

I want to point out that Mr. Shoyama, the former Deputy Minister of Finance who is now retired on a very generous Public Service pension, will now receive a fee commensurate to that of Donald Macdonald's. This is evidence that the attack is definitely not on the friends of the Government. It is against those Canadians who are vulnerable.

I suggest Hon. Members go back and look at the speeches made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) when she was debating the Bill which would bring about a tax benefit at the end of the year for families. It was called the Child Tax Credit. Her plea at that time was that those receiving this Child Tax Credit were the same as those who received Family Allowances. At that time she said that they were the vulnerable ones. These people include housewives and mothers, single parents or others, in Canada. The Minister and other Members went on to say that this may be the only cheque that these people can cash if they are not single parents. The Government now says that it wants to cut back on these cheques. When we debated the Child Tax Credit two years ago they were the vulnerable ones. Today they are expendable.

As I said at the outset, this legislation in its global sense is an attack on Canadian families, whether senior citizens, retired public servants or children. They are the ones the Government has chosen to bear the brunt of its attack on inflation.

I support my colleague's amendment to terminate this six and five program at the end of 1983 because the Government's record has shown that it is a poor planner. It cannot predict what will happen in 1984. When we have three different budget projections in one year, all of them updated and upgraded to show that the Government deficit will be even larger than its previous estimate, I do not think the Government is qualified to make projections on the restriction of family incomes into 1984. Surely if it wants to operate according to its record, it should limit itself to the year we are in. Therefore, I support my colleague's amendment to limit this legislation to one year.

Last week I mentioned one illustration of the Government's inability to plan. In November, 1981 the Government floated a Canada Savings Bond at the incredible rate of 19 per cent plus. It raised $12 billion through that bond which could have been invested in the private sector. Since interest rates plummeted soon after that bond was floated, the Government paid out more than $2 billion in interest charges which should not have been paid as a result of the interest rates dropping. The Government borrows money on the New York bond market on a three-month term whereas it borrows on the Canada Savings Bond on a one-year term. The Government is not very competent in planning what its future costs will be.

I am in favour of this amendment because it is the Government that creates inflation by its expensive operations. We now have legislation before us which prohibits the taxpayer from protecting himself from the inflation that the Government itself creates. I consider that to be wrong.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in opposition to Bill C-132 and in support of the amendment moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). We on this side of the House have no illusions about the result of this amendment. We know that it cannot make the Bill any more acceptable to the Canadian people, but it can go a long way to offset the damage that will be created by this Bill once it is passed by the Government.

As the Member for St. Catharines, I want to say that I am naturally very much concerned about unemployment and the poor state of the economy that exists in the St. Catharines and Niagara region. St. Catharines-Niagara has the highest rate of urban unemployment in this country. One out of every five workers is unemployed. Jobs have disappeared at the rate of 1,750 a month over the last two years.

We now have Bill C-132. We have heard many irrelevant speeches and comments from those on the Government side of the House. They say that we in the Opposition are making a mountain out of a molehill. Let me offset this argument which Government Members tend to make. We hear them ask what difference does it make? We hear them say that any mother should be prepared to contribute this part of her income to the six and five program by having her Family Allowance cheque reduced from $30 per month to $28.52 per month. Is that a hardship?

The response is quite simple. In the City of St. Catharines alone the loss in 1983 will amount to over $50,000 a month, and this amount will be compounded each month during the time the recipient receives the benefit. That represents nothing less than a one-year tax increase of $600,000 applied to over 22,000 families in St. Catharines, almost 25 per cent of which are single parent families.

What is even more reprehensible, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that we are not talking about wealthy families. According to Revenue Canada, the average person living in St. Catharines is earning just over $13,000 a year. The single parent trying to raise a child or children on $13,000 a year is hardly in a position to join the war against this Government's inflation. That parent is already waging a personal war without needing to do double duty on behalf of a Government that keeps spending.

The Government knows this. According to the 1981 edition of taxation statistics, St. Catharines' taxpayers paid annually an average of $3,000 each to the federal Government. In the 1982 edition, that average is down to $2,265, a drop of almost 25 per cent. Indeed, on a total net tax paid basis, and taking inflation into account, the federal Government's revenues from the City of St. Catharines has dropped by $3.4 million in just one year. This reflects the staggering rate of unemployment in our area and the poor state of the region's economy. Yet it tells a good deal more than that. It tells us that the federal Government is losing revenue from the St. Catharines' people; and this Bill, along with the attack on old age pensioners in Bill C-131, is simply a further attempt at a tax grab.

In committee, witness after witness made the point that this Bill will hurt low-income earners the most and wealthy Canadians the least. It was further pointed out that if the Government were serious about being socially and economically responsible, then tax reform was the route to follow.

Several excellent suggestions were made with respect to the Child Tax Credit, the Family Allowance Program and the tax exemption for dependants. The thrust of these suggestions was to the effect that the Government could do far more for women in general, could do more for middle-income families in particular, while not increasing expenditures and indeed would have the opportunity to cut costs.

The Government's response was typical of its attitude, an attitude that has prevailed since the 1980 election. This is our Bill, the Government says. This is the way it is, and that is the way it is going to be, is what we hear. Only one amendment has been adopted since debate began on these last three six and five Bills. That amendment was granted under threat of revolt from Liberal backbenchers, and under the threat of closure with respect to each.

Efforts on the part of the Opposition to reduce the damage that will be inflicted by those Bills have been rewarded by a series of closure motions to cut off debate and discussion of the responsible approach to pension and taxation reform. In the case of this Bill, the Government did not even wait for the call of closure or for the axe of fall. Mothers had their January cheques reduced despite the fact that the legislation has not yet been passed. If the Government can thumb its nose at the law, then why should Canadians respect the law? Why should Canadians have trust and confidence in this Government? Why bother with the parliamentary process at all if this is the way the Government chooses to operate? Give a Bill first reading, make a few remarks and send everybody home. When will this Government respect the fact that Canadian expect their Parliament to operate in a spirit of co-operation and compromise? What we have today is rule by closure and by order in council.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), has put forward an amendment that deserves this Government's support. We will be watching in what numbers, if any, Government backbenchers will rise in support of this amendment. It is an amendment that limits the application of this Bill to one year and gives the Government an opportunity to reassess its approach and see what impact the legislation will have in that one year. Over that period of a year the Government may realize that the Bill has no economic merit, no economic impact and that it is socially regressive. Conversely, the Government may even regard the program as pure genius and wish to extend it if that can be justified. But that decision cannot be made now.

A lot can happen during 1983. To legislate for 1984 on the basis of the Government's guesstimates is completely irresponsible. We are not talking about an insignificant decision. We are not talking about an insignificant amount. Should inflation again reach astronomical heights in the last quarter of 1983 as it did in prior years, even in the months just gone by, mothers are condemned to getting by with 5 per cent protection in 1984. Surely to goodness, no Government would want to lay the foundation to such a dreadful scenario at the feet of the people of Canada, or expect that to happen and expect it to be accepted.

There is a second advantage to my colleague's amendment. This amendment takes into account the Government's own estimate or guesses about inflation. Canadians know perfectly well that inflation will not be the number one problem in 1983 or 1984. Unemployment and economic recovery have to get top priority. This amendment allows the Government to get on with that instead of fighting an ongoing battle against a third-ranked contender.

I intend to support this amendment, Mr. Speaker. If Members sitting in Government benches are in the least concerned with unemploment and with social progress, they too will support this amendment.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate and to say at the outset that we too support the amendment put forward by the Official Opposition, but we are still fundamentally opposed to the whole Bill.

I have been here a number of years and this is the most outrageous effort at what I call nothing more than chiselling by the Government of all the efforts and times that I have seen this Government chisel here and there from those who can least defend themselves and from those who are most in need.

We saw an occurrence on Tuesday of last week in which the Government said it was prepared to provide hundreds of millions of dollars each year to our two national railways. The two national railways would be given hundreds of millions of dollars, and would be allowed a 39.5 per cent profit annually. I do not know of anyone who makes that kind of profit. Usually a reasonable return on investment is somewhere in the 10 per cent or 20 per cent area. Any Government which can find revenues to hand out to our two national railways and allow them to make that kind of unconscionable profit and at the same time chisel a few dollars a month from old age pensioners, Public Service retirees, Armed Forces retirees and children, surely must be some kind of obscenity. Any Government that can do that must have its priorities in reverse.

The Government, starting this year and continuing over the next several years, is prepared to spend $8 billion on a fighter plane which will be of little or no use to us, which will maximize profits for its manufacturers, and which will continue to escalate the arms race, but it cannot find a few dollars a month for the old, for retired public servants, for retired members of the Armed Forces, and for children. Surely that is an additional obscenity. All the Government has proven is that the money is there for these sorts of things, for unconscionable profit-taking, not making, and military equipment, but it is not there for those who need it the most.

Many of these social payments in the form of pensions, the Family Allowance and so on, are taxable. Therefore, for those in the upper middle and high income groups, the Government will tax back most, all or even more than the increases provided for Family Allowances, for old age pensioners and retired public servants. It really is not a cost to the Government for those who do not necessarily need these increases. One way or another, the Government gets it back, and then some. It is generally efficiently administered. It is a simple way of maintaining universality and seeing to it that those who need it most get it and get to keep it. Surely it is no way to fight inflation on the backs of those who not only did not cause inflation, but are also its first victims.

Mrs. Mitchell: It is child abuse.

Mr. Benjamin: The test of any civilized society is how well it treats its old, its sick and its very young. It seems to me that we are failing part of the test when we put legislation such as this on the law books of Canada. It is the most unfair and—

Mr. Althouse: Neanderthal.

Mr. Benjamin: —backward way. This is the kind of thing that Governments did decades ago. This is not the kind of thing that a Government should do if it has any real concern for who receives and who should receive the benefit of Government payments. This is the time when those people most in need should get first priority.

Every year the Government can give money in the hundreds of millions—yes, even billions—to corporations and to the wealthy, and there is little complaint about it except from a few. However, the minute one attempts to restrict those kinds of outlays by Government, one is accused of being against private enterprise and against assisting the economy to grow and so forth. We do not object to many of those kinds of payments. We think that some of them are necessary. However, if the money is available for that purpose, then surely it is available to the tune of full indexing for children, something they were promised.

One of the few good moves that the Government made in the last number of years was indexing. Of course, it was part of the New Democratic Party shopping list during the 1972 and 1974 minority Parliament, and it took that kind of leverage from both the Official Opposition and from ourselves in that minority Parliament to persuade the Government to institute indexing so that we would not blame those who were old, sick and very young for inflation—because they were its first victims—but, rather, we would in fact protect them from inflation and call on the rest of society and the rest of our economy to take part in sensible measures to control and to reduce inflation. One just does not do it to old people and to children. That is not the way to go.

Mrs. Mitchell: Unless you are a Liberal.

Mr. Benjamin: Those who call themselves "Liberals" on that kind of a matter do not know what they are talking about, because they turn out to be neither small "l" liberal nor large "L" Liberal.

Mr. Fulton: They are not talking about it though.

Mr. Benjamin: They turn out to be the most outrageous reactionaries that I have seen around here, with the exception of a few people in the Official Opposition. I find that these so-called Liberals are even just as reactionary, if not more so, than those that sit in the Official Opposition.

Mr. Prud'homme: Except you.

Mr. Benjamin: And even they agree that this is going too far. I urge the House to support this amendment and, following that, on another day to defeat the Bill.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to address this critical issue of Bill C-132, I cannot stress enough the importance of the Government stimulating the economy but ensuring that our families are not strangled in the process. Today's Canada is looking for strong leadership and a caring Government, but I am sad to say that Canadians have been disappointed. We must work together, but not by penalizing those who can ill afford it.

The single most important thing we as Canadians possess is the family unit. It takes priority, as it should, and should be upgraded in every possible way. This Bill is not one of those ways. We would be better off without the Bill. However, as it has been forced down our throats, let us at least only try it for only one year.

I am pleased to see the NDP finally entering the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: Finally? Would you like to see our record?

Mr. Bradley: We heard the first NDP Member speak on this amendment after four Conservatives. Members of the NDP talk a lot. Let us hope that the action from these self-believers and self-seen supporters of those penalized people is louder than their words.

Mr. Kristiansen: I bet you we will be here to vote.

• (1200)

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, as a part of the six and five restraint program, the Family Allowances Act will set the monthly Family Allowance payments at 106 per cent of the 1982 level in 1983, and 105 per cent of the 1983 level in 1984. Monthly Family Allowance payments, which are currently $26.91 per child, will rise to $28.52 in 1983, and to $29.95 in 1984, a very small measure for the inflation that will probably be taking place. Had full indexing continued in 1983, average monthly payments per child would be some $30 at the rate of 11.5 per cent, and some $33 in 1984 at the same rate.

For most low and middle income families, this loss will be more than offset in 1983 by the one-year temporary increase of $50 per child in the Child Tax Credit program. But what happens in 1984? We have a Government Act which is to continue in force for two years and we are only offsetting it for the first year. That is why we require the amendment. The net result of this action of enriching the Child Tax Credit and partially deindexing Family Allowances is that the Government will spend more than $95 million more than it would have spent if neither program had been changed.

The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) moved this amendment that we are now debating on the basis that he felt, and I agree, that it is impossible to predict just what inflation will be like in 1984, and therefore to project the program that far ahead was unfair to families. He also stated that the Bill should not be passed in the first place because of its attack on the Family Allowance, which is something which mothers in particular use in planning their budgets each month.

Family Allowance was initially introduced to help families or single parents raise their children. The mother always had a certain amount of money which she could set aside through the Family Allowance to provide the basic physical needs for her children. Why change that?

Does this Bill mean that we must take money from our own children in order to solve the inflationary problem of the country? Inflation has come down, but not because of six and five. The economy in this country is in terrible shape; businesses are going bankrupt and unemployment is running rampant. That is why the economy is slowing down and the inflation rate is dropping. Bill C-132 will be another slap in the face for single mothers, many of whom work at low-paying jobs. This could well be the last straw for the unlucky widow who is trying to substain her children.

Why should we require this experiment for two years? The Government has given an exceedingly shocking demonstration of insensitivity to the needs and wishes of the poor, the elderly, members of the Public Service and now children, by the introduction of Bills C-131, C-132 and C-133. What kind of Government can advocate credibility when it carries its ineptness on the backs of our children?

Although we agree that changes are necessary in the Family Allowances Act, this is not the way to go about it. Reducing a program with supposed beneficial actions should not result in added expenditure by the Government of $95 million. What is the real reason behind this Bill? It certainly is not to reduce Government spending. There has been much talk about stopping inflation. However, the battle against this much talked about enemy must start with those who are responsible for it, not mothers and children but Government. We must address the problems as they exist. Certainly we must restrain Government spending, I am in agreement with that, and I am sure Members of all three Parties of this House would agree with reduction and restraint of Government spending.

However, this Bill does not address that question. Why is the Government not looking to see where it could save money without attacking people of low income? Every piece of legislation in the restraint program attacks elderly people, people on fixed incomes, people on Government pensions or senior citizens. We should be making every effort possible to make sure that they live out the remainder of their lives in comfort and without worry, and that is not accomplished through these actions that we are taking in the House of Commons now.

There are ways to reduce the deficit and bring money into the coffers of the Federal Government without attacking the people for which Family Allowance was set up to help. As I said earlier, we need a review of our programs but patchwork legislation like this is not a review. We now have the Family Allowance program, income tax deductions for wholly dependent children, the Child Tax Credit Program and income tax deductions for child care expenses for working mothers. We have programs that were introduced one after another to patch other programs in order to correct inefficiencies in those that were first brought in. These are patchwork programs by a Government that is afraid to cut or change any one specific program because of votes.

This Government is more concerned about winning elections and getting votes than it is about making sure its programs are correct and beneficial to all concerned. Now we have six and five applied to Family Allowances, a move that will, in effect, because of other patchwork costs, cost this Government more money, as has been the case with their programs for so many years.

In closing, I would like to say to this Government, stop playing games. Either review the whole Family Allowance program or leave it alone. Just because this Government has failed, do not now ask the children of our country to wrestle inflation to the ground.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the amendment that has been proposed by my colleague for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), but most importantly I want to rise to speak in opposition to Bill C-132.

This Bill very amply demonstrates this Government's double standard. Today in the Toronto Globe and Mail we read about the extravagance of this Government which is proposing to pay the Hon. Donald Macdonald $800 per day and up to $925 per day plus expenses, along with the other members of his Royal Commission. That clearly demonstrates the double standard of this Government.

We are dealing here with a piece of legislation that is going to cut back on Family Allowances and on the family incomes of those families who are most in need. We have been dealing with legislation that is going seriously to impair the ability of pensioners to have a decent living and live in dignity, while at the same time we have this kind of action which can only serve to undermine any confidence that one may want to muster in support of a Government restraint program.

I think it is scandalous. The Government, in order to lead the country in a period of recession toward the road to economic recovery, in order to lead the country in terms of lowering expectations and reducing expenditures, must lead through example, not merely through rhetoric or demonstration but through example. I submit it is not leading through example when we read this sort of thing in the headlines of a national daily paper.

There is no question that actions like this undermine the confidence of any restraint program. I do not think there is anyone in the country who does not recognize the need for exercising restraint and lowering expectations, but the Government must demonstrate that it is serious, that it is prepared to cut waste, extravagance and non-productive expenditure. If the Government were to come clean and say: "We accept the major recommendation of the Auditor General's Report which identified very serious weaknesses in the accounting practices and expenditure of public funds", and it demonstrated that it was going to take action in that area in terms of curbing non-productive investment, the people of Canada would respond very positively and get behind a restraint program. It certainly cannot demonstrate that kind of faith and leadership by attacking a group in society that is not able to defend itself, while on the other hand being very generous to, and extravagant with, people whose needs are indeed questionable.

This Bill, like the other two Bills pertaining to the six and five program which we have been dealing with in this House, essentially hurts those who are making a major contribution to Canada in the area of families, the raising of children. Many mothers who have sacrificed a second income in order to stay at home with their children will find themselves in a situation where their income to raise their family will be cut back. I consider the limit to indexing to be a very regressive measure which hurts those at the lower income level.

We hear talk about what is going to be saved. We hear bandied about figures in the area of $250 million and $300 million. In speaking to the Bill on December 20, 1982, at page 21770, my colleague from Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke) said that according to his calculations, and considering that the higher income earners do not receive the Child Tax Credit and pay tax on their Family Allowance, the estimated saving will be in the area of $15 million after everything has been tallied up. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Quadra who calculated this figure is a qualified accountant and very much abreast of the legislation and accounting practices. If he is correct in that assumption, it means that this federal Government, which spends money at the rate of $217 million per day or $9 million per hour, will be looking at two hours' worth of revenue going through its hands.

What this measure and its sister legislation does is basically attack two of the pillars of society, the family unit and our senior citizens. In this time of financial difficulty we should be adopting measures which will strengthen the family unit and the wherewithal of our senior citizens. No one in this House would disagree that we owe our senior citizens very much. We all recognize the importance of the family unit both in terms of the social and the economic structure of this country. The family unit is still one of the most important and basic institutions in society. It should be preserved. The integrity of the family should be enhanced, not attacked.

There is no question in my mind that the Government has failed miserably in dealing with inflation. Look at what is happening in the private sector. The Conference Board recently reported that wages in the private sector are dropping without a six and five program. Therefore, the six and five program has become a propaganda sham.

Recent Statistics Canada surveys have indicated that in the area of regulated pricing versus unregulated pricing, regulated pricing, those prices controlled by a Government commission or regulatory agency, over the past year have risen by 18 per cent, while those prices subject to the vagaries of the marketplace have risen by half that amount. When we look at that in the context of the services which our senior citizens and low-income earners rely upon, such as electricity, power, heat, energy and transportation, most of those components are regulated by a regulatory agency. As a result, those prices have increased dramatically vis-à-vis those prices that are not controlled and must respond to the marketplace.

Over the past year, the price of commuter transportation has risen by 13.6 per cent. Intercity bus fares rose by 24 per cent. Over the last two years, energy costs have doubled. Heating costs exceed those in the United States. Having regard to the fact that the Government wants to engage in a war against inflation, why is it attacking those individuals who are suffering the worst effects of inflation? The Government is attacking the problem in reverse. At a time like this it should re-examine the components which make up the formula for the agency regulators, those who regulate the prices. Therein lies the problem.

The Government could reduce the cost of energy by reducing the level of taxation. When our Party was in power, we proposed providing relief for low-income earners and pensioners. We have to look at this in two areas. We must address the real causes of inflation. Most important, we must look at the policies which have mitigated against growth in the generation of new wealth in this country. This recession has been brought on to a large extent by the Government, which has driven away investment and production and driven up Government spending and the deficit.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I rise along with my colleagues to support the amendment to Bill C-132 proposed by our colleague from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I should deal first and directly with that amendment because there are those who would say that this Bill C-132 amending the Family Allowances Act is totally wrong and inappropriate, and that there is no way it can be amended to give it any kind of credibility in the House of Commons or before the Canadian people.

The purpose of the amendment is to say that if you are going to make a mistake, at least do not make the mistake in two successive years; at least look at the situation after the lapse of one year. If the Government with its majority must come into this House to ram through a similar provision a year from now, it would then at least face the Canadian people with this malicious and vicious measure on two occasions rather than on one occasion.

The purpose and intent of the amendment is to say: "Slow down, Government; don't use your majority in the House of Commons to force something on the Canadian people that they do not want. Please at least have the grace and the decency to look at the matter in a year's time when, hopefully, you may not feel as disposed to use your power and authority in the House of Commons to carry out your vendetta against the young people and families across Canada in the name of restraint of Government spending."

That is the message I want to give my friends and colleagues in the New Democratic Party who constantly rise in this House, and ask: "Why did the Progressive Conservative Party support the six and five program"? I, for one, stood against the initial legislative provisions involving the six and five program. Although I agreed with the principle of restraint in Government spending, I never for one second trusted the criminals on the other side of the House who were trying to perpetrate a fraud on the Canadian people. The Government was going to reduce Government spending and it was so adamant and determined in its desire to reduce Government spending that it was going to inflict its restraints on the aged, the senior citizens, the young persons of the country and the retired public servants. I never believed for one minute that the Government had anything but evil intentions in mind. I never believed for one minute that the Government did not intend to fool the Canadian people into thinking it was going to change its arrogant and wasteful ways. But, Mr. Speaker, you can hardly blame honest Parliamentarians for being fooled by what appeared to be an honest attempt to restrict Government spending, and that is what the Government program was supposed to do.

Back in June, 1982, when that program was announced, all of the measures were linked to a reduction over a period of time in the deficit caused by Government spending. If I recall correctly, the budget deficit was to be reduced to the area of $11 billion. Six months later we were told that the budget deficit was going to be in the area of $23.6 billion. Now, six months later again, we know that it may reach as high as $30 billion. That is the beginning and the end of the Government's restraint program. It is a public fraud, but everyone knows that now.

What the Government is trying to do with these closure measures is to stop us from reminding the people of Canada that the Government's six and five restraint program is a fraud. It wants to stop the debate in Parliament. It wants to get on with other things, so that those people in Canada who do not already know about this fraud perpetrated by the Government of Canada will not find out. I believe it is our duty, Mr. Speaker, to stay here as long as we can, as long as the rules of parliamentary debate allow, and keep making the same point over and over again, that the Government is not serious about cutting back on Government spending. It is not serious about trying to get the economic affairs of the country in order. All the Government is trying to do is to maintain itself in office, to maintain the power which it now exercises for all time.

Do not listen to my friends in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, who give the impression they are willing to engage in some crusade to defeat the Government in its measures, because every time that crusade arises and develops, the NDP stand up and side with the Government, allowing it to carry on in its nefarious ways. They keep supporting the Government. And I can tell the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) right now, without fear of contradiction, that whenever the Prime Minister needs the NDP, they will be there to support him. No matter what they say on other occasions, they will always be there for him. We know the nature of that friendship.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), the great saviour of our health and welfare program in Canada, has returned to the House of Commons. I suppose she went out to find out how many doctors have just left Canada because of her intentions with respect to our health programs.

Here we have a Minister of the Crown who stands in the House and says she is working for the senior citizens and the young persons across Canada, that she is trying to provide benefits for them which will allow them to live a decent life. She tries to defend this program as it applies to senior citizens and young persons, but, Mr. Speaker, it is indefensible.

In her own report she says the measure which is contained in Bill C-132 saves $115 million in 1983 and $200 million in 1984, at the expense of some 6.6 million young Canadians and 3.6 million Canadian families. That is not true. The fact of the matter is that when she juggles around with the tax credit and she moves this figure and that figure, with the aid of Government accountants, she comes out with a net loss of $95 million. Even in this very area where the Government claims to be practising restraint, it is in fact transferring the funds to a smaller group, a group which the Government controls, that it knows will support it at election time. We in this House of Commons are continuously fighting against the nefarious schemes of the Government, the purpose of which is to maintain the Government in office; in no way, shape or form do they benefit the people of Canada, nor do they accomplish anything to correct the difficulties with the economy.

I would like to deal in a very particular way with some of the problems which we have seen in this House of Commons with measures like Bill C-132. I pointed this out in relation to the provisions affecting senior citizens. What the Government is doing, Mr. Speaker, is it is taking $47 over the two-year period away from some Canadian children and it is turning around and spending $50 on other Canadian children by way of increases in the Child Tax Credit. All the Government is doing is juggling the books; it is not accomplishing anything. Canada is not back on the road to economic recovery. The Government has not created jobs, or any wealth for the nation, to support social programs. It is simply juggling the books. How stupid does it think the Opposition is? It might fool the New Democratic Party once in a while, but it certainly cannot fool the Progressive Conservative Party when it just juggles the books and pretends it is doing something for the economy and the Canadian people.

The jig is up now. People who were not previously concerned with social programs now realize that when you take $350 million or more from that level of society, all you are doing is stopping purchases in stores and stopping people from having adequate food, clothing and shelter. No one will be able to explain to me how that contributes to the economy, let alone to the advancement and social well-being of the Canadian people. Everyone is on to it. Even Leonard Shifrin, the great defender of the Liberal Party and its social programs. He said in an article that this "Rejigging child benefits won't cure the economy". So it is not my idea. It is one of the friends of the Liberal Party who has said that is all the Government is doing in Bill C-132 and its other six and five legislation. The Canadian Council on Social Development has called for a halt to this action by the Government for the reason which I just mentioned, that it is simply taking money out of the economy without benefiting anyone.

I will conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying that what we have to do in this House of Commons, and I sometimes lose hope that we will ever be able to do it, is work to correct the problems in Canada in a realistic way and try to resolve the problems which face the Canadian people. We are not going to do it, or even work towards it, if we allow the Government to get up in this House and present through this Parliament to the people of Canada a problem which it claims will cure the troubles of the Canadian economy, when it knows, and every one of its advisers know, that it is simply a fraud on the Canadian people. It is simply designed to give the Government the kind of hard-nosed image which people know is needed in Canada to correct the economy, so we can create wealth and support social programs.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise also to support the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), although, of course, we know that this is no solution to a very bad Bill.

I cannot help but comment, before relating my remarks to the Bill itself, on the arrogance of the Liberal Government once again. Not only did it bring in time limitation on this Bill yesterday, but it is not speaking in support of the legislation from its point of view today because, of course, there really is no argument which will support this Bill.

I would like to say particularly that we in this Party believe that it was not only extremely arrogant and unethical, but indeed illegal, that the Liberal Government under the auspices of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) sent out January Family Allowance cheques at a reduced indexing. This indexing, which should have been close to 11 per cent, was reduced to 6 per cent, and this was done before this Bill had the sanction of this House. It was done for only the children's allowances cheques. It was not done, interestingly enough, Mr. Speaker, in relation to the senior citizens' cheques. This shows, I believe, the kind of arrogance and priorities which the Liberal Government has, that it will attack children. Children do not vote; senior citizens do vote. We feel very strongly that the Government must return the money which it deducted from those cheques illegally this month to those families. It amounts to only $1.40, but it is the principle involved, and it was money stolen from the children of Canada.

• (1230)

The Minister, in one of her speeches trying to justify this Bill, said that the six and five capping on Family Allowances was really using "a sword as a psychological weapon". Those were her words. Certainly she has demonstrated how she used this sword on the children of Canada and their mothers—

Miss Bégin: I never said that.

Mrs. Mitchell: —by taking away the full indexing for the month of January before this Bill even passed the House of Commons.

Miss Bégin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. At this stage we cannot question Members opposite, but I find it very difficult to listen to absolute misinformation. If the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) says I said something, she should quote it and give the page and the date, because she is just saying what is not the truth.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I will indeed bring the reference to the House. This was said in the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I do not have the exact page but I will certainly get it for the Minister. I will give the Minister the benefit of the doubt; perhaps she was having some difficulty expressing herself at that time, but that certainly was the phrase she used.

Certainly the feeling expressed in that phrase was demonstrated in the actions which followed. Why on earth would the Minister allow Family Allowance cheques to be reduced for the month of January when this Bill has not even passed the House of Commons? We in this Party feel that this is just another arrogant action by the Liberal Government, and certainly it shows very little sympathy on the part of the Minister for Canada's children and their mothers.

In his speech the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) referred to a columnist, Mr. Leonard Shifrin, in support of some of the points he was making in criticizing the Liberals. It is very interesting that Mr. Shifrin, in an article of January 1 in the Toronto Star, questioned the credibility of the Tories and their attitudes with respect to this Bill. He said that it appears that Canada really has two left-wing Opposition Parties who are opposing the six and five legislation. The NDP and the Conservatives have taken the same position on both C-132 and C-131.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You did such a rotten job, we had to help you out.

Mr. Fulton: We always knew you were a left-winger, Ray.

Mrs. Mitchell: His questioning of the Conservative position refers to the Conservative position generally on Family Allowances.

We just heard a very excellent speech—it sounded almost like an NDP speech—a few minutes ago which strongly supported Family Allowances. On the other hand, as Mr. Shifrin said in his article, 62 per cent of Tories polled said they were in favour of reductions in Family Allowance outlays. So it seems a little hypocritical for the Conservative Party to take such a sanctimonious stand in favour of Family Allowances as a fully-indexed universal program when 62 per cent of them were in favour of reducing Family Allowances. So I suspect they are really presenting the position of the Tory Party, whatever it is, because it is very difficult to determine what that is. According to the survey, it certainly does not reflect the wishes of their Members.

Why do we as New Democrats support Family Allowances and therefore oppose this Bill very strongly? We have always supported fully-indexed, universal Family Allowances. In fact, when these allowances first came in, in the Mackenzie King era, the intention was that the allowance would be increased, not decreased. Eventually, after a lot of pressure, full indexation was supported by all parties in the House.

We believe fully-indexed, universal Family Allowances are a basic right of Canadians, a right which has been recognized by most Canadians. Therefore, most people are opposing any cutbacks in this program because it recognizes the importance of Canada's children. I do not think I have to say again, as I have said many times, that children are one of our most important resources. It sounds a little like a cliché but it is very, very true. It is costing much more to raise children every year. Birth rates are down and I think there is a real reason why they are down.

Mr. Thacker: What is your position on abortion? What do you think of the unborn?

Mrs. Mitchell: It is because of the cost of raising children. So we believe that the baby bonus, as it is sometimes called, is a basic right of Canadians. We also like the program because the cheque is paid directly to the primary parent, usually the mother. Perhaps it should also be available to the fathers who are assuming the role of the main parent. We believe it is particularly good because the cheque is a monthly cheque and mothers depend very much on it, not just for buying shoes or jeans for children, but also to put food on the table in many families. Certainly families on social assistance or unemployment insurance find that towards the end of the month their money is gone and the Family Allowance is used to feed the whole family.

The Family Allowance cheque was also aimed at compensating wage earners who have children as opposed to those who have no children. That seems only fair; workers who do not have children do not get the allowance and they should pay a much higher rate of income tax to help cover the cost of children. We also know that the original intent of early reformers who worked hard on social security legislation in Canada always felt that the Family Allowance should be increased. I was talking recently to some experts in this field from the University of British Columbia School of Social Work, and their opinion was that the whole question of Family Allowances should be reviewed. Family Allowance should go towards covering the cost of children, whether or not families are on social assistance, are wage earners, or collecting unemployment insurance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I regret to inform the Hon. Member that her time has expired.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, in the riding of North Vancouver-Burnaby, according to the latest census figure, there are 22,000 youngsters. My brief remarks today are on behalf of those 22,000 youngsters and their parents. Most of them do not come from wealthy homes. With the fantastically high unemployment on the West Coast, it is a very tough time for many families. I suspect the bulk of those 22,000 children are suffering enough as it is.

This particular piece of legislation, this particular nitpicking grab of a few dollars from those who can least afford it, strikes me as indicating a certain lack of understanding of how the average family lives. A few minutes ago I looked around the Chamber and thought about the 282 Members of the House. Most of us have reached a level of success in life and had a reasonable income prior to coming here. I thought that perhaps the reason for this legislation is that this kind of suffering is an academic exercise for most Hon. Members opposite. They do not fully understand what impact this legislation can have on the 22,000 children in my constituency and the households across the nation. The impact can be severe indeed.

Let me go back to olden times, Mr. Speaker. I remember when I was living on a pittance and had two young children to support. I was attending university, which also explains why my income was so low. It became necessary for me to return to the university each evening to study. At that time the bus fare cost a dime. It took a total reshuffling of the family budget to clear that ten cents for the bus fare. The baby bonus cheque came once a month and helped with clothes for the two children and actually bought a little cheese for the macaroni that we seemed to have about three times a week. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I can sympathize with the thousands of families who live that way today with not much hope for a better life.

All this legislation will do is cause hardship. Hon. Members opposite may not think a few dollars a month is important, but to the family on welfare or on unemployment insurance trying to meet mortgage payments, this is a severe blow and is going to cause a great deal of hardship. Many families will have to reshuffle what is already an inadequate budget.

We are living in a world where the dynamics of social life are changing. The number of one-breadwinner families decreases each year. There are millions of women and men who prefer to see at least one parent available to the children for more time than they have available at present. I have knocked at most doors in my part of the world. Nothing is more tragic than when a seven year old sick little kid comes to the door because it is absolutely necessary for both the father and mother to work. There are thousands of such cases.

I hold no brief for those who say that women should stay at home. I do not accept that. If a woman wants a career she should have it, but if she has a child she has a strong responsibility, as does the husband. Sometimes we overlook that.

There is another phenomenon in the dynamics of social life that is changing. Many men would prefer to be a house husband and stay home to fill that traditional role.

This legislation indicates a philosophy that holds the family not to be important. It indicates an encouragement to force more women or men to go out and work who perhaps realize that the greatest contribution they can make is to the next generation, to their own children or to their neighbour's children. But we do not encourage that.

I wonder if the Minister has ever considered that this kind of philosophical legislation means that we will spend a lot more money in other areas of social responsibility. More funds will be needed to help the broken home, the kid who goofs off and does not get an education, the street people on Davey Street in Vancouver or Yonge Street in Toronto. All of them came from homes that in one way or another were unsatisfactory.

How can we expect someone to go to work at eight o'clock in the morning, spend a heavy day there, come home at five o'clock in the afternoon and, even jointly, prepare dinner, look after a couple of kids, read a bedtime story, put them to bed properly and listen to their problems? For someone who is tired or had the kind of day at the office that the typical Member of this House has, that is hard to do.

The Government should be doing anything it can to help parents raise their children properly. It should realize the kinds of social problems that exist, rather than contributing to problems, as this legislation will.

We might look at what has happened in Sweden. Many families there share a job, one working at it for a few days and then the other, or perhaps one works half time and then the other one works half time. If the Government could make arrangements for two mothers each to work half time on a job, it could save the money that is now being spent in the courts of the country and would help with the broken lives of the young people that one can see on any street corner of our major cities.

When we talk to these kids we find that they did not get along at home for one reason or another. It is not because they are horrible little brats of 18 or 19 but, rather, because when they were three, four or five years of age there was nobody to listen to them or to talk to them. After a long day's work the parents were so tired they could not give the attention and love that a child is entitled to and deserves. We cannot afford to continue with this kind of improper social policy. We must find the money for good programs which are so important to people.

On behalf of the 22,000 youngsters in my riding and on behalf of their mothers and fathers, I ask the Liberal Government to please reconsider and withdraw this terrible piece of legislation. The Government just has to ask any Member of the Conservative Party and he will show where millions of dollars could be saved without affecting the homes and the young people of Canada.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in debate on the amendment proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I take very seriously indeed the Government's six and five program as it relates to three important sectors of our economy and three very important groups of people in our society, namely, the senior citizen, the pensioner who contributed to the security he hoped to enjoy after retirement, and the children of our nation.

I want to say that I take this issue most seriously because all of us, as Members of Parliament, have had the daily experience of receiving representations in our constituency office from those people who have been severely affected by the recession in Canada. They have asked us the simple question of what we as Members of Parliament can do and how we can help and advise them in terms of the negative effects they are feeling because of unemployment and the devalued dollar. I stand to participate in this debate because I have seen the strategy of this Government invoking a motion, whether it wants to call it time allocation or closure, to limit debate on legislation which affects the most important segment of our society.

One has to ask why this callous and arrogant attitude has been adopted by the Liberal Party. Why do we see the spectacle today of the Liberal Members sitting mute in their place and not saying anything in support of this legislation? While I am not casting any reflection or alleging any motivation on the part of Members of the Liberal Party, I think their silence indicates why we have seen this strategy adopted by the Government. The Government House Leader has realized the embarrassment and humiliation felt by every Member in the backbenches of the Liberal Party.

Those Members do not have any basis on which to stand and support this retrograde step in terms of the children or our nation. Indeed, the political consequences to each of them is known. They know that to stand up and attempt to defend the indefensible will cause them serious problems in the next election. It is in their own self-interest that they sit there and do not address this issue as to why we should support this particular proposal.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) herself has tried to skate around the issue by saying that we should not worry because this measure is merely symbolic. What kind of Alice in Wonderland are we seeing? The Minister of National Health and Welfare is charged with a statutory obligation to the children of this nation and their parents to see that there is no erosion of benefits paid to the children and parents of this country. For her to stand in her place and say that this is merely symbolic is not, I suggest, in the best traditions of ministerial responsibility.

When I think of the original principles of Liberalism in this country, those principles of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Right Hon. Mackenzie King who introduced this particular concept of Family Allowance in our country, I think of how they must be rolling and whirling in their graves to see these Liberals stand up and attack the very fabric and basis of what I call a truly Liberal policy and proposal with respect to support for those in our society who most need help.

I say to those Members of the Liberal Party who are sitting there and have supported these measures that whatever your rationale is, the people of Canada instinctively know—that you have deserted the traditions of Liberalism with your support of this kind of legislation. I merely want to say to those Members of the Liberal Party who are keeping silent and not participating in the debate that I recall that at your last annual meeting one resolution that received unanimity was one declaring that the Liberal Party abhors backroom, political manipulation in terms of policy and political activity in this country. You know what this is. This is the Keith Davey and Jim Coutts approach. It is the perceptual approach of trying to suggest that the Liberal Party is moving forward on a program of restraint. It is precisely what you voted against at your annual meeting.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. The Hon. Member should address his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I would never suggest that you, revered as you are in my mind, would ever participate in manipulation of any sort. I apologize for that. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of the Liberal Party have a very short memory in terms of the direction they received from the mainstream of their Party.

With respect to the amendment moved by my colleague for Calgary West, I think he would agree that it is a modest attempt to bring the reality of this situation to the attention of the Government. This amendment provides an opportunity to the backbenchers in the Liberal Party not to vote against their Party but to at least limit the imposition of this particular legislation. If those Members really believe in the true principles of Liberalism, I ask them what is wrong with at least making this small gesture. It is quite logical for them to support this amendment and demonstrate that, as independent, thinking Members of Parliament, they will not be the tools of this backroom manipulation and Madison Avenue approach to politics. I suggest that this amendment is very worthy of their consideration.

I think all Members of the House would agree that we must establish our priorities for Government spending. In my estimation, those priorities are for the disadvantaged of our society, the people least able to help themselves and those unable to help themselves. Those categories include senior citizens, pensioners and the children of our country. That is why I feel so strongly that this restraint program approach goes directly against those segments of our society that are least able to help themselves.

What hope is there when a Government policy is developed around the concept of looking inward and confining the expectations for our great country? What hope is there when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) tells the young people of our country that they will face a desperate time in terms of their future and that the Government has no policies to assure them any realization of employment in the near future?

I see that it is almost one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I have a few more things I would like to say. May I call it one o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I must inform the Hon. Member that his time has expired.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is taking the bread out of the mouths of children. I can understand why the Liberals brought in closure. If you look over the list of speakers, other than the Minister and the Parliamentary Secretary, there have been three Liberal speakers on this Bill. You do not support it. I can understand why you do not want to support it. You do not want to take the bread out of the mouths of children, but you will vote for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Again, I should remind Hon. Members that they should address their remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Evidently from the comments that are made by the hon. gentleman on the other side, the Tories are not only having difficulty in keeping a quorum on their side, but in finding sufficient speakers to take up the time that has been allocated.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. That is not a point of order.

RAILWAYS

NEW POLICY—QUEBEC FARMERS' ANXIETIES

Mr. Normand Lapointe (Beauce): Madam Speaker, for some time now there have been attempts to scare Quebec farmers with our railway transportation policy. However, at the present time, we have a mass of figures based on all kinds of assumptions, and it is therefore important for Quebec farmers to remember that this new policy is going to be scrutinized from A to Z in 1985-86, and that the decision will then be up to Parliament. The farmers have no reason to be afraid. In fact, can you imagine a Western producer getting into all kinds of new ventures—hog raising, for instance—and investing large sums of money, when the policy is going to be reviewed in two or three years? Even if Western producers did get started in the hog-raising industry, their prices would never be low enough to compete with, let alone take over, Eastern markets because of the high cost of transportation between West and East. It is as plain as the nose on anyone's face.

Perhaps Quebec farmers would like to remember how worried they were about a new dairy policy, while today, producers are quite happy with it, and in fact, it has just been adopted by the European Common Market, because our dairy policy seems to be the best in the world.

I would therefore invite Quebec farmers to look on the positive side of this policy.

FISHERIES

FACILITIES AT WOOD'S HARBOUR, N.S.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Madam Speaker, I want to call to the attention of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) the concern expressed by my constituents who are involved in the fishery, a primary industry that is crumbling under the heavy hand of the present Liberal administration. A prime example is the plea made by the fishermen of Wood's Harbour, Shelburne County, where expanded harbour facilities are urgently required.

In 1982 the Small Craft Harbours Branch gave this requirement a "top priority" rating, yet as recently as January 20, 1983, the Minister informed me construction is not expected to commence until early in the 1984-1985 fiscal year, depending on other priorities and availability of funds.

How does the Minister of Fisheries reconcile this further delay in light of the statement made by his Department officials over three years ago, namely, that the expanded facilities at Wood's Harbour qualified for a "top priority" rating based on need. For the sake of the safety of the entire fleet, this work should be proceeded with immediately.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

REMUNERATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Jack Burghardt (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, today's Globe and Mail carries a front page story in which it is reported that Donald Macdonald will be paid a base salary of $800 a day while on duty in his position as Chairman of the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. The remainder of the Commissioners will receive between $350 and $750 a day. I have confirmed the report figures to be accurate. I have a copy of the Order in Council in my possession as proof.

I recognize fully the considerable expertise which Mr. Macdonald will bring to the Royal Commission. I understand as well that compensation for this type of service must give consideration to the renumeration the Commissioners can expect in the private sector. Indeed, Mr. Macdonald's services may merit $800 a day. However, Madam Speaker, these are exceptional times; these are difficult times. Canadians are being asked to lower their demands. In fact the six and five program which I wholeheartedly support requires and indeed legislates restraint.

In light of current conditions I doubt if most Canadians can contemplate $800 a day, let alone be expected to tolerate its payment to a Royal Commissioner. Frankly, I believe most Canadians will feel, as I do, that the "economic prospects" of the Royal Commissioners are excessive.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMPACT OF ENERGY TAXES ON PRODUCERS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, my statement concerns the effects of federal energy taxes on the agricultural industry in Alberta. These concerns have been properly drawn to my attention by the Federation of Alberta Gas Co-ops Limited which supplies heat and energy to over 170,000 rural Albertans, with a 50,000 miles of distribution system.

Energy taxes have a very negative impact on basic agricultural production costs, such as fertilizers, chemicals, plastics, and many other materials made from a natural gas base, and make up 75 per cent of the total cost of nitrogen fertilizers. Increased costs for natural gas feedstock have raised the price of nitrogen fertilizer by 41 per cent over the last two years. Presently in Canada about 5 per cent of our population grows enough food to satisfy most of our own requirements, plus providing nearly $9 billion in export commodities.

The federal Government is placing too much of the burden of energy taxation on agricultural producers who should not be sacrificed for the sake of energy excise taxes. Very visible evidence of this sacrifice has been the recent decision to close, indefinitely, Western Co-Operative Fertilizer Ltd. in Medicine Hat, after 27 years of existence. About 100 permanent jobs are affected.

FISHERIES

CALL FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CHARGES AGAINST INDIANS IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, fisheries management and conservation require a good working relationship between the Department of Fisheries and all user groups, including the traditional Indian food fishery. On January 12 federal fisheries people destroyed this relationship when they arrested 130 people on charges of illegally selling fish. All but one of these people were native Indians. Obviously a method of entrapment had been used that discriminated against Indian people. The presence of television cameras in the pre-dawn raid gave the whole situation an obscene carnival atmosphere.

There are many victims of this stupid action—first, the 129 Indian people who were entrapped and arrested; second, all

Indian people in British Columbia who are trying to establish their aboriginal rights in the fishing industry; third, Department of Fisheries personnel who must continue to work in a deteriorating situation with Indian people and, fourth, all Canadians who care about conservation and fisheries management.

The Minister has recognized his mistake. I now call upon the Government to drop all charges against Indian fishermen based on entrapment. The Minister of Fisheries must begin to rebuild relationships with the Indian people by involving them in basic decisions regarding the conservation and management of our fisheries.

GOVERNMENT FINANCIAL AID—EFFECT ON NEWFOUNDLAND AND QUEBEC CARRIERS

Mr. Pierre Deniger (La Prairie): Madam Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a situation that is unacceptable and that, in my opinion, requires corrective action as soon as possible. I am referring to the case of Atlantic Container Express, a marine transportation company in Newfoundland and Quebec, which is facing serious financial problems as a result of financial support being given by the Canadian Government to CN railways in Newfoundland.

Since 1979, the survival of a number of carriers has been threatened by the actions of Terra Transport, an operational division that takes care of the Newfoundland railway network. In fact, as a result of CN's financial support for this railway, rates have dropped by from 20 to 30 per cent, thus making this means of transportation more attractive than that offered by marine carriers. These rates are entirely non-compensatory. This policy is therefore harming marine shipping companies which are trying to compete however they can. For instance, Atlantic Container Express, a marine carrier which provides a service between Toronto and Newfoundland and between Montreal and Newfoundland has now lost part of its market because of unfair competition by CN.

Madam Speaker, I would therefore urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to bear in mind that the National Transportation Act provides that when Government support for a carrier proves harmful to another carrier in the private sector, immediate action must be taken.

REMUNERATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Madam Speaker, there are 1.6 million Canadians unemployed, and the nation is deeply in debt. The economy is in shambles, and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) response is to invent a new word for relief and a new way of spelling it. He is saying to Canadians the new nine-letter word is "Macdonald", and I spell it "9-2-5 p-e-r d-a-y", $925 a day of taxpayers' money.

This Government, utterly incompetent and totally bereft of ideas, is going to pay Donald Macdonald just over $100 a day, plus expenses, for each letter in his surname, to examine why it made such a mess of things—the very same Donald Macdonald who, as one of a series of Government Finance Ministers, is directly responsible for today's economic chaos.

The very same Donald Macdonald is a director of the Bank of Nova Scotia, Boise Cascade, Dupont, Manufacturers Life, and was made a director of McDonnell Douglas just prior to the selection of that firm's F-18 fighter aircraft for the Canadian military.

The very same Donald Macdonald, having accepted the task, was given permission to quit if he decides to run for the leadership of the Liberal Party, and accepted this pork-barrel position because it provided a ready-made platform from which to launch his leadership campaign and because the appointment was a positive gesture of annointed succession from the Prime Minister.

There was a time when responsible and dedicated Canadians accepted similar forms of service to the nation at salaries of a dollar a year. That a six and five government and a man would agree to a salary of up to $192,000 a year speaks volumes about the intent and integrity of both.

THE ECONOMY

HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT RATE IN GASPÉ

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, yesterday I described to the House the economic situation in the Gaspé. Today I would like to add that the Government of Canada has spent more than $30 million in this riding under a number of job creation programs since 1960, when the winter works programs were introduced by the Diefenbaker Government.

Too often, we have subsidized unemployment instead of subsidizing the installation of facilities and infrastructures to promote the economic and industrial development of the riding of Gaspé.

Last fall, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced at the Liberal Convention that his Government would undertake major projects including roads, watermains and so on, to stimulate Canada's economic recovery and create jobs.

I am therefore asking the Government to start major projects in the riding of Gaspé in 1983—commercial piers, fishing harbours, community and industrial airports and federal buildings, so as to put hundreds of people to work. There is room in this riding for infrastructures that fall under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Government of Canada, and now is the time to act.

Madam Speaker, the people of Gaspé deserve to have a much lower unemployment rate and a decent standard of living. After all, what do governments mean when they refer to distributive justice?

HUMAN RIGHTS

IMPRISONMENT OF PROFESSOR MASSERA IN URUGUAY

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, on December 15 I presented a motion to the Government requesting that it make representations to the Uruguayan Government with regard to Professor Jose Luis Massera's imprisonment for expressing political opinions. He has been tortured and held in terrible conditions in the "Prison of Torture", Libertad, Uruguay. The conditions being suffered by Professor Massera are likely to lead to physical and mental illness, and possibly death. Unbelievably, my motion was turned down by the Liberals.

I have now received further correspondence from Professor Israel Halperin, Director, International Campaign-Massera, stating that on November 11, 1982, the Government reported the First Secretary of the Canadian Embassy in Buenos Aires visited the Professor in prison and was able to talk with him. The First Secretary reported that Professor Massera's mental alertness was such that he was able to study mathematical texts sent to him by colleagues in the United States. Moreover, the Professor informed the First Secretary that his health had improved over the last several months.

The Government should be aware of the fact that this report is unforgivably misleading. It serves well the Government of Uruguay which is trying to circulate confusing statements to counter world-wide condemnation of the savage cruelty with which the Uruguayan authorities treat political prisoners.

The fact is that Professor Massera has been denied contact with scientific work, and has had no contact with any colleagues since 1975—

Madam Speaker: Order.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

REMUNERATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, the term "job creation program" took on new meaning yesterday when the Government revealed an Order in Council which will provide former Liberal Finance Minister, Donald Macdonald, with a salary in excess of $800 per day to head an inquiry into the ailing Canadian economy. Should Mr. Macdonald decide to devote a five-day week to this matter, his annual salary will be some $200,000. This move is certainly in keeping with the statement given to the House yesterday by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) to the effect that "the Government has put top priority on helping job creation in all sectors of the economy".

I am sure that Mr. Macdonald and his 12 Commissioners are most grateful that the Government's job creation initiatives have extended even to them. Might I suggest, however, that this money could be better spent by channelling it into job programs for the hundreds of thousands of unemployed Canadians presently struggling to survive on incomes of less then $800 per month, let alone $800 per day. For example, the so-called NEED program which, to date, has provided an abysmal 4,000 jobs out of a projected 60,000, could use these funds. Better still, given the fact that $200,000 is the basic annual government allocation for many constituencies under the Canada Community Development Program, may I recommend that Mr. Macdonald use this money to sponsor some of the worthy CCDP projects, in constituencies such as my own, which have been rejected on the basis of insufficient funding.

It is surely the ultimate irony that this squandering of public moneys is all in the name of finding a solution to the country's economic crisis.

Madam Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH SHORT-TERM ENLISTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will no doubt recall that last November I wrote to him supporting the idea of short-term engagements in the Armed Forces to help solve our terrible unemployment problem in the 17 to 24 age group, and to teach some useful trades, such as electronics, basic engineering, vehicle maintenance, carpentry and plumbing, radio, supply purchase and control, office procedures, man management and others. I received an answer from the Minister in January saying that the matter was under study. Could the Minister inform the House whether the Government has now finished studying and started making decisions in this matter?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, for once, probably, the Hon. Member for Victoria and I have the same views on this subject; but in any case my answer is still the same. I think that the Government has already put forward many job creation projects. As far as my own Department is concerned, we have made several submissions to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the matter is still under consideration by that Minister and, of course, by the Minister of Finance, who is responsible, after all, for providing the financial resources for future job creation projects coming up.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER SEEK CABINET APPROVAL FOR PROPOSAL

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. It is very difficult to understand, but the Minister of Employment and Immigration in this country seems to be the main opponent of this sensible solution to what is part of the problem. With the newfound support that the Minister now appears to have among some Liberal backbenchers, will the Minister screw up his courage and tackle the Minister of Employment and the Cabinet again on this matter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I feel that I have great support for this type of proposal in my caucus. I have the full support of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and also that of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the Prime Minister?

Mr. Lamontagne: It is a question of judging the amount of financial resources available to start a job creation program. I am sure that when the Minister of Finance tables his budget, and during his pre-budget deliberations, he will certainly take into careful consideration whatever he can do for us in the Defence Department concerning a job creation project.

SUPPORT FOR ENLISTMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): I have a question for—guess who?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: The Prime Minister. It is based on the petition which has reportedly been signed by 108 of his 114 backbenchers and which is reportedly supported by a majority of his 36-member Cabinet, urging the Government to enlist 50,000 young Canadians into the Armed Forces of our country to alleviate partially the terrible jobless situation which confronts our young people.

An Hon. Member: Good enough for Hitler.

Mr. Nielsen: I hear an interjection from the NDP to my left saying, "It is good enough for Hitler". I knew that the NDP would take that position.

An Hon. Member: War is no solution to unemployment.

Mr. Nielsen: I am asking the Prime Minister if he has any personal objections to the Government adopting the urging of that petition and the establishment of that policy which, I can assure him, will be supported by 101 Members, which, added to the 108, will comprise 209 Members of Parliament in support of that policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, it is a matter of some satisfaction for the Government to know that action in the Liberal caucus will at last have brought unity to the Conservative caucus.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I know they are interested.

I would say that it is with that in mind—and I repeat the answer given by the Minister of National Defence—that the Minister of Finance and Cabinet will very seriously consider representations made by Hon. Members on this side which envisage using the Department of National Defence to create jobs and to alleviate the very high unemployment that Canadians are suffering.

• (1420)

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I might note, before posing my supplementary, that it was the initiative displayed by the Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) on behalf of this Party which was plagiarized by the petition of the Liberal backbenchers. Nonetheless we are still in support of it.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has not answered my question. Does he have any personal objections to the implementation of the policy outlined in that petition?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I have no objections at all to the concept. I have told my caucus members that, in effect, and I encouraged them to pursue this very interesting line of economic development in order to create employment in Canada.

I point out to the Hon. Member opposite that if the idea indeed comes from the Member for Victoria, we would be interested in knowing what facts and figures have led to the unanimous support of all the Tory caucus for this, because there are a lot of economic considerations. The cost of creating jobs in that way is higher than the cost of creating jobs in other ways. The benefits or disruptions to the Department of National Defence have to be taken into consideration. We would be very happy to have the originator of the idea supply us with all the supporting facts and figures. Why should we only create 50,000 jobs; why not 500,000 jobs?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I see that even arguments ad absurdum get the support of the Conservative Members, which does not surprise me.

An Hon. Member: Now you are being absurd.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member says I am being absurd in following an idea put forward by the Hon. Member for Victoria. I am not surprised.

Mr. Nielsen: Madam Speaker, I am sure the House would be very interested in seeing those cost figures and, since the Prime Minister seems to be willing to expose them, he might table them for the benefit of all of us.

REQUEST FOR EARLY IMPLEMENTATION OF PROGRAM

Hon. Erik Nielsen (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the Prime Minister that one way of beginning to make up the funding that would be required for the implementation of such a program would be the refraining from paying exorbitant salaries to people such as Donald Macdonald, to architects constructing embassies in the United States, and from advocacy advertising and a few other pork-barrelling policies of the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Since the Prime Minister has answered that he does not have any personal objections to the implementation of that policy, and since he has the support of 209 Members of Parliament, can he assure the House that the Cabinet will implement that policy at the earliest possible moment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member seems to have misunderstood what I said about facts and figures. He claims that it was his Party who originated this idea. I invited the Hon. Member to see the facts and figures that induced the support of the unanimous will of the Conservative caucus, a rather unusual thing.

As far as our attitude is concerned, I repeat, the Minister of National Defence has given the answer. The Minister of Finance, in constructing a budget, will be able to announce his conclusions which might or might not be along the lines suggested by the Hon. Member. It will depend on what financial actions create the most jobs in the most effective way and beneficial way for the future of Canada, and for the reducing of unemployment. That is a very complex set of questions which have to be asked in order to answer that question. I say that I have no objection to creating jobs that way or any other way. We want to create jobs in the particular way which will be least costly and more beneficial to the Canadian economy, and the way we are suggesting now may or may not have that effect.

REMUNERATION OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, on a number of occasions, has asked Canadians to restrain their salary and wage demands and, where possible, in federal Government circles, to restrain their demands to six and five. He has asked the mothers of Canada to accept only a 6 per cent increase in Family Allowances this year, and less next year.

Having now been informed that his Government will be paying Donald Macdonald the obscene sum $800 a day, plus expenses, which is more money than the 2.3 million pensioners receive in Canada for an entire month, will the Prime Minister explain to this House and to the people of Canada how he can justify paying a certain individual $800 a day when he is not prepared to pay that same amount for a total month's income to a typical pensioner in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I must explain to the Hon. Member that in effect all the Commissioners will be receiving remuneration possibly worth the same to all of them, something in the area of $350 a day.

The $800 is paid to the firms of three lawyers who are on the Commission, two lawyers are commissioners and one is a research assistant, and more than 50 per cent of those amounts will be retained by the firms to cover the overhead that each individual member of a firm must pay in order to be a partner of the firm. So in effect all the Commissioners will be receiving approximately the same amount, $350 a day, which is the usual amount paid in recent times to members of Royal Commissions.

REASON FOR LEVEL OF REMUNERATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I still believe this really does add insult to injury. Many Canadians believe that this three-year "Ronald McDonald" approach to economic planning is not needed in the first place. Now we find that we are going to be paying the participants such extravagant sums of money during these times which the Government is calling times of restraint.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, now that he has decided to pay Mr. Macdonald the sum of money that he has indicated, would it not be appropriate at least to expect a commitment from Mr. Macdonald that he will remain for three years, during the time of the inquiry, or is this the Prime Minister's way of extending the golden touch to the man he would like to see replace himself, instead of John Turner?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I think there are many elements of that question which are irrelevant, and the most surprising is that the Hon. Member did not listen to my answer when I said that in effect all Commissioners will be receiving the equivalent of $350.

The supplementary amount in the case of the lawyers goes to their firms to pay for the overhead.

JUSTIFICATION FOR REMUNERATION

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I wish to pursue this with the Prime Minister. This is not part-time work on the part of Mr. Macdonald, it is pork-time work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I want to ask the Prime Minister if in fact this exorbitant salary is going to be paid to Mr. Macdonald, and to all the Commissioners appointed by the Prime Minister, which amount would allow 2,000 Canadians to have extended unemployment insurance benefits for a month, or 10,000 families to have fully indexed Family Allowances for one year, how, morally speaking, he can justify this kind of salary. We are not interested in the overhead of McCarthy & McCarthy. We are interested in the overhead of people who want to heat their homes and feed their children.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's argument seems to turn on whether the Commission is necessary or not. If he does not agree with the figures that I have just quoted, that is a matter of judgment. I just put it that that is the information that I received from the Commission, and the information which has been made public and which can be tested against recent surveys by actuaries who do say that in fact more than 50 per cent of fees received by lawyers go to pay the overhead of their offices. That is another matter.

Assuming that the information is right, the question is, do we need a Royal Commission on Canada's economic future? My deep belief and that of, I would say, many members of the public and of the informed thinking critics of the Government, is that it is time that Canadians have a Royal Commission, outside of the day-to-day preoccupations of Governments and Oppositions, to look at Canada's future, to look at the structure of governments in this country and to see whether Canada's economic future can be improved both by economic means and by constitutional or political reform to institutions.

• (1430)

This is a serious question. I am surprised that the Opposition do not think that it is important because, when they were the Government, the then Leader of the Government, the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead, had proposed the setting up of such a commission. When the same Party are in opposition, they suddenly realize that no knowledge is better than some knowledge, which is not surprising coming from the Conservative Party.

CHAIRMAN'S FEES FROM DIRECTORSHIPS

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister should have been here earlier to hear the Hon. Member for London West, a member of his caucus, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications, chastise the Government for its callousness with respect to this appointment and the amount being paid. We are not worried about Mr. Macdonald. He is going to eat because he is on the Board of Directors of, among other companies, Dupont Canada, the Bank of Nova Scotia, Boise Cascade Corporation, McDonell Corporation—

Madam Speaker: Order. I am just wondering whether that is all necessary for a question. It is a long preamble.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I had just started the list, but I will stop here. It is a serious question. Before the Christmas recess the Minister of Finance indicated that he would take up the matter of conflict of interest. Presumably Mr. Macdonald is the independent Chairman of this great commission the Prime Minister talks about. I want to know why he is continuing to receive his fees with respect to these particular directorships? Why does he continue to represent these multinational corporations when he is purported to be independent on this commission?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, when one sets up a Royal Commission and one goes to members of the private sector to staff and fill the position of commissioners, one does it precisely because the interest and activities of the members of the private sector qualify them for the type of knowledge that will be needed to conduct a commission. If we did not want people with private sector interests, we would not go to the private sector to hire them. I have not heard the argument from the Hon. Member that to be a member of a Board of Directors of a company or to be a lawyer in a firm which is practising corporate law in the normal way disqualifies one from giving good advice to the Government on economic and constitutional matters.

Once again, if one wants to hire people from the private sector, one should take them with their knowledge, capacity, and with their activities. Otherwise one would have an in-house Royal Commission staffed by public servants whose conflicts of interest are defined by the law.

TRUST COMPANIES

GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY FOR MORTGAGE COMPANIES

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance disclosed in this House that the Government knew in March, 1982, that Greymac Mortgage Company and the Seaway Mortgage Company were unsound, and put them on short-term renewals of licences, and placed severe restrictions on their activities. Will the Minister, on Motions today, explain to this House what correspondence he had with the Province of Ontario with respect to his knowledge concerning the mortgage companies, and as the Province was in charge of licensing the trust companies, what arrangements he made and why he did not disclose to the public his concerns with respect to these companies? The Minister has been playing footsie here. He has been hiding. Will the Minister, on Motions today, explain to this House where he stands?

Madam Speaker: Order. I believe the question has been put.

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, yes, indeed. I can confirm the statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance yesterday wherein he indicated that the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada exercised his supervisory authority with respect to the two companies which he recommended be subject to scrutiny earlier this year. I can confirm that the Department was concerned that the exercise of control over those companies reached the stage where the Superintendent recommended, under the Act, in a report to the Minister, that they be investigated as to whether in fact the licences should be continued. The hearings to look into the very issues the Hon. Member has raised are continuing this afternoon. I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that those hearings have to conclude, and that the opportunity must be given to the companies to make their case.

QUERY RESPECTING GOVERNMENT'S ACTIONS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary told us yesterday that the Minister knew what the situation was in March, 1982. I want to know what the Minister did with respect to the trust companies which are the principals behind the mortgage companies. In other words, did he act under the provisions of Section 24 of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporations Act to investigate the unsound lending practices of the trust companies? If not, why not? Why did he not advise the trust companies that their insurance under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporations Act would be cancelled because of their unsound practices which he knew about in March, 1982?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member must be referring to Ontario trust companies, Crown Trust, Seaway Trust, and Greymac Trust. They are under the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario. We are used to the spectacle of federal Conservatives attacking federal Conservatives. We now have the spectacle of federal Conservatives attacking provincial Conservatives.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EMPLOYMENT

PROSPECTS FOR YOUNG CANADIANS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister who, the other day, called our Party reactionary—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: —and who today says that he has no objection to the army project that was just suggested. Why does a young Canadian have to join the army to find a job in modern Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, he doesn't.

Mr. Waddell: Perhaps the Prime Minister could look at the Rooseveltian New Deal. He is old enough.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): That's Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. Waddell: He could look at that and see that there was some national service other than the military.

SUGGESTED CREATION OF MUNICIPAL JOB CREATION FUND

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Did he meet this morning with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities and some of the mayors who were there? Is he prepared to agree to a real job-creation program as they suggested, namely, putting $2 billion in funds into a program for local action toward national recovery, as proposed by this group?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Madam Speaker, I did have the opportunity, with other Ministers of the Government, in the process of budget consultation, to meet with representatives of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities. There were mayors and elected representatives from all of the Provinces. Yes, they made submissions dealing with requests that there be public works projects. I had the opportunity as well of pointing out that, for example, the $2 billion put into housing in the last 24 months by this Government has resulted in an increase in housing starts last month of up to 165,000 annually adjusted. These moneys are working and there are jobs being created under the present commitment of this Government.

TRUST COMPANIES

CROWN TRUST—PROTECTION OF DEPOSITORS

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It is supplementary to the questions of my colleague from Mississauga South. The Government knew that when Greymac Credit bought control of Crown Trust that the new owners of Crown Trust were the same owners as the owners of one of the mortgage companies that was being investigated by his Department under the Loan Companies Act. Since CDIC was providing deposit insurance to Crown Trust, what precautionary measures did the Minister take to protect Canadians who had their savings deposited with Crown Trust?

• (1440)

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, now we have the spectacle of another federal Conservative attacking a provincial administration of trust companies which are clearly under provincial jurisdiction.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, the Minister is showing clearly he has not read the legislation. Under the Deposit Insurance Corporation's legislation he must—not can—he must inspect these companies once a year, and he has it under his jurisdiction to go in more times if he has any doubts about the quality of a company. My question again is, since he was investigating the affairs of one of the companies which was owned by similar people, and which he had been investigating for six months, what precautionary steps did he take to protect the savings of Canadians and to protect the reserves of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): Madam Speaker, one of the steps which this Government obviously has taken as a result of our concern about the difficulties being experienced by depositors, shareholders and the like, in the companies which are under the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario, was to indicate our intention of introducing a Bill in this House to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, to increase deposit insurance coverage from $20,000 to $60,000. That was a move which was recommended by the Hon. Member asking the question, in the Finance Committee which studied the question of bank profits.

THE CONSTITUTION

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of Justice has now confirmed that the agenda for the First Ministers' Conference to be held in March has been completed. One of the agenda items is the question of aboriginal rights. Does the Government intend to put forward its position on aboriginal rights, before the Conference, in order that the native leaders can assess that position, as well as others interested in that question, or does the Government see its role primarily at the Conference as moderator or chairman rather than a protector of aboriginal rights?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, both roles are not exclusive. Obviously the federal Government will be chairing the Conference, trying to ensure its orderly development and hopefully turn it into an on-going process, because we do not expect to have all the problems solved at this one Conference. Naturally the Government will be going to the Conference also with positions which it has developed on the problem of aboriginal rights, and its general attitude and policies toward the aboriginal people.

CONFERENCE AGENDA

Hon. Jake Epp (Provencher): I would like to ask the Prime Minister, Madam Speaker, whether the Government's position is going to be made public prior to the Conference and, as well, in preparation for the Conference whether the Prime Minister intends to place on the table not only the question of aboriginal rights but other topics upon which a number of his Ministers have commented, such as restoring a veto to certain Provinces, as well as some other topics.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I would defer to the Minister of Justice for the latter part of the question, but I know that in my original correspondence with the Premiers, I indicated it was conceivable that we would have part of the Conference devote its efforts to non-aboriginal rights questions. I am not sure what state the agenda is in now, but I expect we would be looking at non-aboriginal rights questions on the second day or in the latter part of the Conference.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUALITY OF BANFF WATER SUPPLY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of the Environment in charge of National Parks. Giardia lamblia, as the Hon. Minister knows, is a stomach disease which causes vomiting and sometimes paralysis. It has been plaguing the people and the tourists of Banff Townsite for more than a year. The parasite which causes this is in the water supply and the only cure appears to be a water filtration plant. When will the Minister authorize a water filtration plant in order to protect the interests of Banff and the tourists to that beautiful area?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, because he congratulated us for it, when this matter came to our attention we did contract to have professional advice given to us by consultant engineers on the best way of responding to this problem. That report has been received and we are acting on the recommendations which were presented to us in the report. I could give him a more specific answer on the details, if he wishes, either by letter, or tomorrow or another day. I would have to refresh my memory on exactly what stage we are at in implementing the recommendations of that report.

IMPLEMENTATION OF STUDY'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, I appreciate what the Minister has said. The study did indicate a water filtration plant could be achieved in a number of different ways. From the answer of the Hon. Minister, is the work which is now being done leading up to a water filtration plant or simply some more wells?

Hon. John Roberts (Minister of the Environment): My recollection, Madam Speaker, which I would like to verify, is that there was a recommendation that we proceed with alternative wells because this would be a necessary step, in any case, before the creation of a filtration plant. If I remember correctly, the recommendation is that we should proceed with that step next. We would then be able to assess whether it was necessary, as it may very well be, to proceed with the filtration plant. This was a matter of great concern several weeks ago and I would like to refresh my memory on the details but to the best of my recollection the answer I have given to the Hon. Member is an accurate one.

HEALTH

INQUIRY RESPECTING PRINTING OF CANADA HEALTH ACT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For some time now, Hon. Members and others have been subjected to fairly intensive lobbying by members of our health services, and I wish to ask the Minister whether the so-called Canada Health Act has been printed and circulated, to whom it was circulated and why these people are carrying out this intensive lobbying. Could the Minister also inform the House whether a bill was drafted recently or some time ago?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, there is no Canada Health Act as such. There is no bill or draft bill. Recently I had a meeting with senior officials of the Department of Justice, and we are working on this. However, I think the Hon. Member is referring to a document, bearing a misleading title, which was published, unfortunately, under the instructions of the new chairman of the Canadian Medical Association. This is extremely unfortunate, because I realize from what I have read in the press, and I have not had a chance to talk about it, that many people have been misled by this document. I am thinking, for instance, of Ontario nurses who are opposed to certain parts. However, there is no such document—I mean, it is not what it seems. The Bill, when there is one, will first be submitted to the Ministers of the provinces, as has always been my intention, and discussed with our parliamentarians.

FOREIGN INVESTMENT REVIEW AGENCY

PORT COLBORNE QUARRIES LTD.—ENFORCEMENT OF PURCHASE COMMITMENTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the Minister in charge of weakening FIRA. In 1978 the Foreign Investment Review Agency approved a takeover of a Canadian company called Port Colborne Quarries Ltd., by an American firm from Ohio. I have with me, Madam Speaker, a confidential FIRA document which outlines the 13 specific undertakings made by the American firm before it took over the Canadian company. It made commitments such as preserving existing jobs and creating others, increasing productivity, expanding the plant, and purchasing all equipment, goods and supplies in Canada. Not one of these major undertakings has been kept by that company. Why has FIRA not moved to enforce a contract which was made between the American firm and Port Colborne Quarries Ltd.?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I first want to thank the Hon. Member for giving me advance notice of his question. My officials have been monitoring this very unfortunate situation which has existed at Port Colborne Quarries Ltd. We are investigating with respect to the commitments which were made under FIRA and, if there is any action to be taken, we will take it.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I think this is an example of where foreign ownership is costing the Canadian people many, many jobs.

• (1450)

AGENCY'S ENFORCEMENT CAPABILITY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Madam Speaker, the enforcement branch of FIRA was recently cut back to fewer than 15 officers. The case load has gone up by some 6 per cent in the last year, which means that each officer has to monitor about 12 cases per day, which is an impossible task. It is making a joke of the enforcement procedure. In light of that, in order to strengthen FIRA and preserve Canadian jobs, will the Minister make a commitment in the House to strengthen the enforcement branch of FIRA so these kinds of situations will not occur in the future?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if I remember correctly, about a year and a half ago my predecessor made a request to Treasury Board to add some person years to FIRA to reduce the case load. If I am not mistaken, I think ten or 12 people were added to FIRA at that time.

Secondly, with respect to job creation and investment, pertaining to the question the Hon. Member raised with the Prime Minister a few days ago, almost 10,000 jobs have been created or protected through commitments by companies as the result of FIRA applications being approved in the last four months. If the Hon. Member and his colleagues are so interested in job creation, obviously they must be very happy with those results achieved in that period of time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

UNCONTESTED DIVORCE ACTIONS

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who is no doubt aware that the Legal Aid Committee of the Law Society of Upper Canada has made a suggestion that the time has come for the law to be changed so that uncontested divorce actions do not have to be tried in the courts, the thesis being that the courts would not be clogged and the public would not be put to unnecessary expense. Has the Minister studied this proposal and, if so, has he taken any position with respect to it?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, the Government is looking very closely at this question in light of the obvious need surrounding the problems with divorce legislation and maintenance questions in Canada. I want to assure the Hon. Member that, whatever decision we make, it will be made in view of the public's need, not in view of the needs of the legal profession exclusively.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONSULTATION

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, the Attorney General of Ontario, Mr. McMurtry, has told the Ontario legislature that the present system is unsatisfactory. He also indicated that he has been pressing the hon. gentleman's Government for action with respect to this matter. Are there any conferences, meetings or other proceedings under way or contemplated by the Minister of Justice with his provincial colleague, on this matter?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, as part of our decision-making process there will be very extensive consultation with the provinces in the very near future on this issue.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—EXPULSION OF FOREIGN WORKERS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, concerning the expulsion by Nigeria of upwards of two million people. First, can the Minister clarify what assistance the Canadian Government has offered those people who are dislocated, and secondly, has the Canadian Government protested to Nigeria for taking this precipitous action as a consequence of the international economic situation, on the grounds that it is a precedent for other countries creating economic refugees in order to deal with their own internal economic problems?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I should tell the Hon. Member we have made an initial contribution of $100,000 to the International Red Cross. We have provided an additional $30,000 to assist in the transport of milk powder. We are now receiving an assessment from international organizations and we are prepared to consider short-term relief for the persons expelled from Nigeria to Ghana, and also a program of longer term assistance.

I understand that, in my absence, the Minister of State for International Trade expressed the concern of the Government of Canada to the Nigerian High Commissioner about this particularly rapid request to these persons to leave the country. I think it is understood in Africa that there are illegal residents in various countries and it is the sovereign right of any Government to request those in the country illegally to leave, so one cannot object to that principle. However, I think one can draw the attention of the Government to the speed with which this particular very large movement of people was requested, and the hardship which obviously followed as a result.

PROVISION OF AID THROUGH NON-GOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, the question of creating economic refugees has enormous implications for the world community. I wish the Minister would address both himself and the Canadian Government to that particular situation. As to the extension of Canadian aid, is the Minister considering involving Canadian non-governmental organizations in any capacity whatsoever?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, we are considering involving non-governmental organizations in the provision of aid. We are also considering the possibility of bilateral projects which might be undertaken.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL REVIEW OF HABITUAL CRIMINALS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In 1977, when the old habitual criminal legislation was replaced by the new dangerous offenders legislation, the then Minister of Justice promised that all those sentenced under the old law would have their cases reviewed in accordance with the new criteria. This has never been done. Recently a comprehensive study conducted by U B.C. Professor Michael Jackson showed that none of the prisoners he studied—most of whom are in British Columbia—are dangerous pursuant to these criteria.

In view of the findings of this study, and, in particular, in view of the Haddock complaint on this point currently before the United Nations Human Rights Committee, will the Minister introduce legislation providing for a judicial review of all habitual criminals to determine whether they are indeed dangerous offenders under the 1977 legislation, and thereby keep the commitment made by his predecessor as Minister of Justice?

Hon. Mark MacGuigan (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, this is an issue I take very seriously. I have met with Professor Jackson and I have devoted considerable attention to deciding on the best way to proceed. I hope it may be possible to proceed to have this matter properly examined without the need for new legislation, but in any event the Solicitor General and I will be consulting about it and we would hope to be able to make some announcement before very much time has passed.

INDUSTRY

CONSTRUCTION OF NEWSPRINT MILL IN MATANE

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. About two years ago, the Minister may recall that his predecessor, the Member for Matane and then Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, had promised that a newsprint mill would be built in Matane. Since then, this municipality has voiced its concern about the possibility that the project might be dropped. Could the Minister inform the House whether, on behalf of the Government, he intends to keep the promise made by the Member for Matane and the then Minister, and if so, could he inform the House when this project would be started, in view of the fact that we have been waiting for two years?

[English]

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, if I am not mistaken, a week ago Friday, was the first time I had all the documentation from the officials with respect to that project. We are now studying it. Obviously the Gaspésie is a priority for our Department and we will be seriously discussing this proposal. I have also sent a letter of invitation to the Mayor of Matane. I am willing to meet with him and his officials to discuss the possibilities of the project.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows full well that his predecessor committed himself on specific conditions—which a number of people will remember—to having this newsprint mill built. With a view to reassuring the people of this riding who, according to my information, are getting worried, I wish to ask the Minister if he could inform the House whether the Government is going to keep its promise to have the mill plant built, and if he is willing to meet the Mayor of Matane who asked the Minister on January 14 to have a meeting with him?

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Lumley: Madam Speaker, I am more than willing to meet with the Mayor of Matane, and as I said, I have already sent him a letter. The agreement signed by my predecessor was an agreement in principle based upon a specific condition. A lot of things have happened in the industry in the interim. As I said, we would like nothing better than to have a pulp mill in that particular area, given that we do not do something that is damaging to the rest of the industry.

PETITIONS

MR. SARGEANT—TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE ON CANADIAN SOIL

Mr. Terry Sargeant (Selkirk-Interlake): Madam Speaker, I rise today to present a petition of which I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) should take special note. This petition, signed by 1,830 people, was circulated among students at 15 high schools throughout Manitoba by two students at Teulon Collegiate, Janice Moeller and Mandy Ens. These young people care about their future. They want their future to be lived in a world free from the threat of nuclear war, so they have initiated and signed this petition opposing the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada.

The petition points out that any decision by the Government of Canada to allow the U.S. to test its Cruise missile on Canadian soil will lessen Canada's credibility as a world champion for arms control and disarmament. I am especially proud of those young people for stating their views on this important issue so clearly, and I am proud today to present this petition to the House of Commons on their behalf.

MR. RIIS—CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE IN CHASE, B.C.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a 1,150-name petition from the Village of Chase, British Columbia. The petition opposes a recent decision by the Canada Post Corporation to close a downtown post office in Chase, B.C. and move it to a location in Chase Plaza.

The concern of the residents is two-fold. This move will add more than two kilometres to the distance senior citizens will have to walk to collect their mail. The major concern is that the Canada Post Corporation made no effort to seek public reaction to the decision. The residents feel that they should have been consulted directly or through their duly-elected village council.

MR. FRIESEN—RIGHT TO OWN PRIVATE PROPERTY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of constituents of mine who are concerned that the Charter of Rights does not include the right to own private property. They have made the effort to collect names and have said that they believe that an amendment should be made to the Constitution and Charter of Rights, entrenching property rights in the Bill of Rights.

POINT OF ORDER

MRS. MITCHELL—EARLIER REFERENCE TO MISS BÉGIN IN DEBATE

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I wish to inform the House that the reference requested this morning by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) is on page 50:12 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of December 7, 1982, line 20:45.

Madam Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I am proposing a Bill to amend the Criminal Code with respect to pornography. This Bill is concerned with the issue of both child and adult pornography. I want to clarify the law. I want to set up effective sanctions and by taking an effective approach to the pornography problem, improve the situation in general.

INTEREST ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING MORTGAGE PAY OUTS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-674, an Act to amend the Interest Act.

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dick: Madam Speaker, when a Government fails to act in the best interests of its citizens, then it is the duty of the individual Member of Parliament to act so that more Canadians do not lose their homes. The Government seems to have forgotten that over 700,000 Canadians are still struggling with mortgages that have an interest rate of over 17 per cent.

This Bill would amend that provision of the Interest Act which has not been changed since 1911 and would provide that people could pay off their mortgages after one year with a three-month penalty, rather than after five years.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

VIA RAIL—SERVICE BETWEEN KITCHENER AND TORONTO

Question No. 4,394—Mr. Beatty:

1. What effort is made by the management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. to provide adequate space for all passengers between Kitchener and Toronto?

2. Since January 1, 1982, on what (a) dates (b) trains in either direction between Kitchener and Toronto was inadequate space provided for all of the passengers wishing to travel by VIA Rail?

3. Would any incidents indicated in the answer to part 2 have resulted in denial of service or of seating to VIA Rail customers who had booked their trips several days in advance?

4. On June 13, 1982, was the 6.15 p.m. train to Toronto delayed for more than an hour while police and VIA Rail officials tried to get up to 25 passengers to leave the train and, if so, at what time did the train leave?

5. At what time (a) was the train scheduled to arrive in Toronto (b) did the train arrive in Toronto?

6. For what reasons did VIA Rail (a) try to persuade the passengers to leave the train (b) decide to allow them to stay on the train?

7. Where did the passengers for whom there were no seats ride?

8. How many passengers were added to the train at Guelph?

9. How many passengers wanted to join the train at Guelph, but could not because of overcrowding?

10. Did the chief executive officer of VIA Rail have to ride in the baggage compartment of any of VIA Rail's trains because of overcrowding?

11. Does the management of VIA Rail feel such incidents encourage VIA Rail passengers to take the train?

12. Are efforts made by VIA Rail to compensate customers for missed connections or serious inconveniences caused by such incidents and, if so, what are such efforts?

13. What steps have been taken since June 13, 1982 to prevent such occurrences on the Kitchener-Toronto line in the future and does the management of VIA Rail feel that such steps will be adequate to prevent such incidents in the future?

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of VIA Rail Canada Inc. advises as follows:

1. Travel between Kitchener and Toronto is unreserved. The only method of ensuring sufficient space for all passengers is to review previous handlings and apply a growth figure. This is done on a continuing basis by VIA Rail management.

2. Since January 1, 1982, no passengers were turned away because of inadequate space on train service between Toronto and London operating via Kitchener. Although VIA is not always able to provide seating to all its passengers, statistics are not available on individual incidents involving lack of seating.

3. See reply to 2 above.

4. Yes. The train departed Kitchener at 1922 hours, (1 hour and 5 minutes late).

5. (a) 1955 hours, (b) 2053 hours.

6. (a) The operation of train 668 is the responsibility of CN Rail and, from information provided, it was the decision of the train conductor, a CN Rail employee, to refuse passage to patrons who were not able to occupy a seat. (b) The CN official, namely the trainmaster, located at Kitchener instructed the conductor to comply with existing CN instructions contained in the General Instructions to Passenger Conductors and Trainmen.

7. Passengers were accommodated in the aisles where there was opportunity to have a handhold to ensure their balance. Some passengers also departed Kitchener in the baggage portion of the car. This is against regulations and measures have been taken to prevent a recurrence.

8. From information provided by CN Rail, there were 12 passengers detrained at Guelph and a like number entrained.

9. There were no passengers at Guelph who were unable to entrain. However, since the train was operating late and since they were aware of the overcrowding at Kitchener, there may have been passengers who availed themselves of other modes of transportation or decided to take the later train.

10. No.

11. No. It is not VIA Rail's policy to operate trains short of the seating capacity required. However, in unreserved territory and due to unforeseen circumstances, it is the policy to inform passengers when space might be available but all passengers would not be able to occupy a seat.

12. Yes. Station staff have the authority to hold connecting trains, provide restaurant facilities and/or hotel connections in instances of missed connections or serious inconvenience.

13. Canada Coach Line bus went on strike during the week previous to June 13. Also, on that particular Sunday there was a matinee performance at the Stratford Festival. While VIA Rail was cognizant of the additional patronage due to the festival, they were not aware of the number of additional passengers who required transportation because of the Canada Coach bus strike. Since June 13 an extra R.D.C. car with a capacity of 76 seats has been assigned to train 668. There have been no further incidents of overcrowding between Kitchener and Toronto.

DND—CONTRACTS FOR COMBAT BOOTS

Question No. 4,551—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Did the Department of National Defence award three separate contracts in the amounts of $1,426,909, $558,031 and $322,661 to Warrington Inc. of Kitchener, Ontario for combat boots and, if so, for what reason were three separate orders issued to the same firm?

2. Are the boots sold to the troops and, if so, is the Department or the Receiver General reimbursed?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): 1. There are only two firms in Canada with the equipment and tooling required to produce combat boots. These firms are Greb Industries Division of Warrington, Kitchener, Ont. and Sunbeam Shoes, Port Colborne, Ont. Although both of these firms may be awarded contracts based on costs and timely deliveries the Department of Supply and Services ensures that each of the firms receive at least some share of the DND business in order to retain their production capability.

The Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of National Defence did award three separate contracts to Warrington Inc. in the amounts stated in the question. These three contracts constitute part of DND's combat boot requirements for 1982/83 and 1983/84 but do not cover the entire supply program for this item. Therefore, all contracts awarded for the supply of combat boots for fiscal years 1982/83 and 1983/84 are listed below:

Company Awarded Contract	Fiscal Year Requirement	Date Awarded	Amount
Warrington	1982/83	Sept. 81	$ 558,031
Sunbeam	1982/83	Sept. 81	788,000
Warrington	1982/83	Aug. 82	332,661
(Special order because of abnormally high usage of combat boots)
Warrington	1983/84	—	1,426,909
Sunbeam	1983/84	—	515,000

2. Combat boots are not sold, but like all other items of operational and environmental clothing are an issue to entitled personnel.

HORMONE ESTRODIAL

Question No. 4,618—Mr. Mitges:

Is there any information or studies connecting breast cancer in women with the consumption of dairy products which normally contain the hormone estrodial?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): From an epidemiological study in the United States*, an association was made between milk fat consumption and mortality from breast cancer. A later study in Alberta did not show a similar association.

The estrodial content of cows' milk is extremely low and National Health and Welfare is not aware of any information relating breast cancer to the level of estrodial in dairy products.

Mr. Smith: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 21697).

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, during the two minutes when I spoke before the luncheon adjournment, I was interrupted by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Blais) on a point of order. It was not a point of order according to the ruling of the Chair, and in addition to that the Hon. Minister was completely in error. He said that on this side we were having difficulty getting speakers. Perhaps we should look at the record. This morning alone there were ten Progressive Conservative speakers but not one Member of the Government stood up to be recognized. That is a ratio of ten to none. In this entire debate only three Members of the Liberal Party have spoken, apart from the Minister and her Parliamentary Secretary. Of course, they have to be here to support the Bill; indeed, they have no choice but to support it. But only three other Members of the Liberal Party have stood to support it, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette), the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau) and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

There is a long list of Progressive Conservatives and New Democratic Party Members who oppose taking bread out of the mouths of the children of this country, but it is sad that Members of the Government do not even stand up to support the Bill. But, when the time comes for the vote, however, no doubt they will vote for this legislation, which should have been withdrawn weeks ago.

Let us look at some of the facts in connection with the legislation. The Minister said that there are about 3.6 million mothers who receive the Family Allowance and then said that the indexation will not affect two-thirds of them. That leaves 1,200,000 mothers whose indexation will be affected. It is like the man who looks at a bottle of whiskey and says that it is half empty. The Minister says no, it is half full. There are 1,200,000 mothers who will be affected by this legislation.

• (1510)

Do Hon. Members realize what havoc that will cause to the great majority of those families? While some do not need the Family Allowance, each family decides how to use that benefit. Family Allowance was a declared policy in this country so that young people would have an income of their own that would be sent to the mother or the father. It was to be used for the benefit of these boys and girls. Every family has used the money in different ways.

One family I know has put that money faithfully into a trust account each month. When their children reach 18 there will be money available to send them to university or college. That family has made excellent use of the Family Allowance. Their children will receive a better education and make a better contribution to the country.

Other families must use their Family Allowance to keep bread on the table. When I was in high school I did not like returning on the first day of school, not because it was not wonderful meeting my friends after the summer vacation, but it was the day when children were given a list of books to buy. I hated the thought of going home with that list of books that we could illafford to buy. We had a large family and at that time the mines were not operating. There was no Family Allowance or other income coming in and we had to stretch our money in order to keep bread on the table. My mother went without food very often in order that the children could have something to eat. However, when I showed this list of books that I needed to buy, they found a way to scrape the money together so that I could get through school. Sometimes I would borrow books until we were able to buy them, and occasionally it was the end of October before I could get them all. Fortunately, I had understanding teachers who knew I could not afford the books, but through the sacrifice of my brothers and sisters and my parents I eventually got them.

Parents who are sending their children to colleges and universities today are faced with a great problem. They must buy books and clothes for their children. There are also tuition fees and other fees at particular colleges or universities, as well as for room and board. These expenses cause great worry to the parents in this country. Now their Family Allowances may be cut. This will affect those children in high school and those who enter university before they are 18 because their future education will be jeopardized. In other words, the future of our young people is being affected by this legislation.

If the Government needs money, I can think of a dozen better ways to get it than taking it from the young people of this country who are the future of this nation. Our young people should be encouraged to get an education, but this measure will only encourage them to quit school and try to get a job since it will be difficult for their parents to supply their books, clothing and other needs.

Young people are proud. When I went to school many boys wore long trousers when they went to high school. I did not get a pair of long trousers until I got to grade 12. I was embarrassed many times because I did not have long trousers like the other kids. I came from a mining camp and others came from the east end of Drumheller, but I always had sympathy and help at home.

This Government is telling mothers that it will not longer give them this allowance. It will take away an average of $17 per child over a year. That $17 is enough to buy three or four of the books that the child needs. It is enough to buy milk for the baby. Some may say "What is $17?". I remember when I thought $1 was an awful lot of money. I remember the time when I wished that I had 25 cents in my pocket. That $17 does not sound like much when one receives a big salary, like $800 a day for Mr. Macdonald. Incidentally, he will not even pay his own expenses. He will get $125 to eat out at the Imperial Room, of course, not at the greasy spoon down the street where many others have to eat.

This Bill is completely wrong because it attacks the wrong people. If we need the money, why do we not take it from some of the Government's advertising budget? I received a letter today from an editor of the Cochrane Times. She asked me what the cost of all this advertising was. She said that she was throwing these advertisements into the wastepaper basket. Here it is, a fancy card in big envelopes. These are being mailed out to many people. I suggest that not even one out of 200 stop to read it.

Furthermore, the Government has set up this Law Reform Commission. Has the Government yet followed one precept that this committee has recommended? The committee has only made recommendations, which is misleading. People will think that this is the law but it is not. It is only what the commission thinks should be the law. While the Government spends thousands of dollars on this type of document, it is taking the bread out of the mouths of the kids in order to keep the Government operating. It is a shameful act by this Government.

I see you are indicating that I have one minute left Mr. Speaker. I am almost through. I would not only like to see this legislation through, but thrown out. I ask Liberal Members, since they did not speak, to vote against this legislation and show the people of this country that they will not take the bread out of the mouths of the children.

Mr. André Maltais (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, once again, I think the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) always manages to find the right word to express his sentiments. However, he should be careful not to let his eloquence become pure rhetoric. I think all Members of this House want family allowances to be granted to those who need them. I also believe that this Government has always preferred to grant family allowances on a universal, rather than a selective, basis. After listening to the Member for Bow River, I feel that his rather unusual approach may give the impression that the present Government intends to remove family allowances, a measure aimed at helping families by providing them with a supplement so that their children can get an education and have a decent standard of living. It is perfectly normal and legitimate that Members on both sides of the House should try to safeguard a measure that was introduced after a long struggle, namely, the family allowance, to ensure that families get the maximum benefit.

However, I believe that for the information of the House, I should perhaps point out that the difference between what would have been given under full indexing, and what will be given with indexing capped at 6 per cent, is not more than $1.40 per child per month. The fact that the previous speaker made such a big issue of this merely goes to show that he is overly fond of dramatizing the situation. Certainly, it would have been more attractive to grant full indexing, and even more, to the families that need it most, but if the tax burden is to be shared by all Canadians more or less equitably, it was necessary to find a way to help all Canadians get out of the recession without undue difficulty, so that the 6 and 5 program as applied to family allowances is just as fair as when it is applied to old age pensions or all public service employees. In addition, many provincial governments and private enterprises have adopted the same measure to fight the effects of inflation.

Mr. Speaker, at this stage, it is important to make the point that if we succeed in bringing the inflation rate down from 12 to 9, from 9 to 6, and then to 5 and 3 per cent, the 6 and 5 program will automatically cease to exist. What really matters is not the six and five program. The important thing is to bring inflation down to zero, because the six and five program in itself is meaningless unless we intend to reduce inflation gradually down to nothing. One important fact—and I am convinced that my colleague opposite will agree with me—is that Canadian families want to see an end to inflation, mindless of the six and five restrictions. They are hoping that our economic system will be rid of inflation once and for all. That is important.

Hon. Members opposite should stop dramatizing in this House and wasting hours in needless debates on this Bill, because they are not helping the Government of Canada and the people in our ridings. As I said earlier, an amount of $1.40 per child will be deducted from the monthly allowance cheque, and that will work out to about $13 a year. But there is something else which may be even more significant since family allowances help a family meet its expenses. I am referring to the child tax credit, something which the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and some of his colleagues could have mentioned.

The child tax credit was implemented three years ago and it will not be affected by this Bill. To enlighten Hon. Members, I would add that the child tax credit enables a family to save $400 per year per child, non taxable, in addition to the family allowances mentioned earlier. In my opinion, the tax credit is basic, quite valuable and more important even than the family allowances. Hon. Members might be interested to know that two thirds of our Canadian mothers are entitled to the child tax credit which enables their families to get that additional assistance from the Government.

When Hon. Members opposite say that this Bill is totally unfair to families, and histrionically claim that we are depriving those families of much needed social benefits, I think they are on the slippery slope towards demagoguery and ought to be more careful. Naturally, the ideal solution would have been to let Canadian families enjoy full indexation and provide them with as much help as possible. As in anything else, however, expectations are unlimited, but the ability to pay is limited indeed. That is why we have to make a choice. I think that anyone in this House who honestly looks at this measure and makes a non-partisan judgement on it will readily admit that justice is being well served. The only thing that might be said is that it would have been desirable to have full indexation, but even if we had agreed to that, families and workers in Canada would have been worse off in the long run. In an economic system undermined by inflation, which year after year is eroding the purchasing power and boosting prices to the extent that each month families are faced with higher prices for food and clothing, I think that if the rates were to stay at 20, 12 or 14 per cent, the first who would unjustly be most affected are those we want to protect today.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when you really think about it, the Government has no alternative but to cut back the so-called full indexation of benefits which we have had for four years and which have caused prices to nearly double in eight years and played havoc with our economy. If we compare Canada with some other industrialized countries, we realize that their action is perhaps much more drastic than ours because they are trying to completely abolish family or social assistance. If we look at the extremely drastic measures proposed by the United States and at the action taken in Germany and even in France, it is very easy to see that the action taken here does not come near what has been done in other industrialized countries of the free world. These are the things we should consider instead of trying to make political gains over a reduction of $1.40 per child in the basic amount of family allowances. I believe that the complementary legislation which will provide a non-taxable tax credit of $400 per child for two-thirds of Canadian mothers more than compensates for the $1.40 which each family will lose every month per child because of the six and five program.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if we look to the future, we can see that the six and five program will, in the long term, provide more purchasing power for the goods which a family needs. Moreover, Canadian families will then have full value for their money, and this is what Canadian men and women have been asking for two or three years. They want to have once more a balanced purchasing power based on the income generated by their wages and industries. As a matter of fact, this is the real problem in Canada. We cannot simply say that because of some piece of legislation a certain group in our society will temporarily be deprived of a minimum amount compared with another group. What is important is to know whether this minimal amount represents less than the income which people will have because our economic system will no longer be affected by inflation. In other words, what is important is to determine whether a child tax credit of $400 a year really represents a purchasing power of $400 and whether these $400 are worth more than $500 because with $500, people can only purchase goods for a real value of $350 or $400. That is the problem of inflation we face at the present time. It is this inflation the Government is trying to fight in an effort to put more money in the pockets of Canadians than there is at the present time. Otherwise, inflation will increase and everyone will lose more every month and every year.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, my speaking time being very limited, I simply want to invite Hon. Members to support this Bill because, in the long term, it will be of benefit to all Canadian men and women.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we are today debating the report stage of Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973. This really should be called "an Act to cut the baby bonus". The Government is again using the sledge-hammer tactic of limiting debate. In effect, the Government is forcing closure in order to get this dangerous and degrading Bill out of public scrutiny.

This sledge-hammer drives home yet one more of the six and five coffin nails. First we had Bill C-124, which broke Government contracts negotiated with its own employees concerning wages and salaries. Then we had Bill C-133, which cut the pensions of former public servants who had already paid for their pensions. Then came Bill C-131, which cut the pensions of the poorest group of Canadian seniors, many of them widows. Now we have Bill C-132, which will cut the baby bonus Canadian mothers receive to clothe and feed their children. This Government has used its power to attack the poorest and most defenceless sectors of our society.

It is interesting that as we debate this Bill today which will cut payments and support to mothers we had the announcement, to which reference has already been made that a former Finance Minister is to get $800 a day or, as someone has calculated, if he worked five days a week he would receive approximately $200,000 a year to head a Royal Commission. This Royal Commission will study our economic situation, which is bleak, to a large extent because of the mistaken policies of the Liberal Government of today of which he was a Member.

Mr. Keeper: You don't need $800 a day to know that.

Mr. Orlikow: I predict the coffin nails which the Government is driving home are the nails that will seal the coffin in which this Liberal Government will be buried the first time Canadians have the right to vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: What about an alternative to this Government? Many Canadians believe that the Progressive Conservatives are the alternative. The views of that leaderless Party on issues such as Family Allowance are less than inspiring. Last spring, the spring of 1982—

• (1530)

Miss MacDonald: Where were you in committee?

Mr. Orlikow: —the Conservative Party held a policy conference. Its members did not discuss resolutions. They were afraid to do that, to show how divided they were, so they issued a questionnaire. One of the questions concerned Family Allowance, and 62 per cent of the delegates at that conference supported reductions in Family Allowances. Only 5 per cent felt that Family Allowances merited an increase. That is the real thinking of the Conservative Party.

What people watching this Parliament will see is the leaderless, right-wing, pseudo-Reaganites in the Official Opposition trying to pretend opposition to a Bill which they themselves might have sponsored if they formed the Government, and the Liberal Government cutting and slashing at mothers and pensioners in order to please their supporters in the corporate boardrooms and in order to pretend that they have a program to deal with the problems of unemployment and inflation.

Is six and five a serious economic program, as people in Canada are being told by the Liberal Government? If inflation is down, it is not because of six and five. If inflation is down somewhat from what it was last June when the Government brought in six and five, it is down for two reasons which have nothing to do with six and five. It is down because we and rest of the world are in a profound recession, and it is down because international oil prices are coming down so markedly. The Government knows that, and Government documents made public some time ago revealed that the program was conceived, more than anything, as a public relations campaign to give the Government a veneer of action while shifting the pressure for economic problems to the private sector. The terrible human costs of this cynical venture will, of course, be borne by those who are not organized to strike back, namely, mothers and pensioners.

It is argued that the cuts will not affect those who cannot afford it. It is a specious argument which does not consider the fact that the base on which Family Allowance increases are based will be reduced from now into the future, and that with its $50, one-shot increase in the Child Tax Credit, the Family

Allowance benefits will become selective. They are no longer a universal right as they have been since they were first implemented, but they come closer to being a handout for the really poor.

Family Allowance payments are now $26.91 a month. This guarantees Canadian mothers some cash to deal with the needs of raising children, to provide their clothes, food, school expenss, etc. This Bill will reduce Family Allowances from what they would have been by $16 in 1983 and by $35 in 1984. The Government argues that those most in need will be sheltered from this real decrease in Family Allowance payments by the one-year increase in the Child Tax Credit of $50. On the face of it, families with children will not lose any money. That is true, in an absolute sense, but our national social security system will lose an immeasurable amount because the base for future Family Allowance increases will be permanently reduced from here to eternity and, further, the amount lost will be paid back to some on a selective basis.

It has already been mentioned that, of the more than 3.5 million Canadian mothers who receive Family Allowance, 2.5 million also receive the Child Tax Credit. This country has accepted Family Allowance as being a universal right since we first began the program. With the Child Tax Credit, we divide those needing help into two camps; those with some need and those with more need. With this Bill, we would move closer still to making a permanent two class system, a ghetto type Family Allowance. One might say that with a ghetto type Family Allowance, we would be able to do more for the really poor, but as soon as one splits mothers into two groups, those who receive it and those who do not, those who do not will lose interest in the whole program.

We say that this program must not be used for selectivity. If some in the upper income brackets do not need the benefit of assistance which they receive from the Family Allowance Program, the money should be taken back from them through the income tax system. That is the most effective and stigma-free way to accomplish that objective.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: The poor who receive the Family Allowance will never make up the losses in these payments which this Bill will inflict. It cuts away at the shelter of those with low incomes and those with fixed incomes. We need to protect them from inflation, not to increase their payments, but simply to meet the day to day price increases which inflation represents.

The Liberal Member who spoke just before me tried to imply that this is not nearly as bad as what many other countries are doing. The Government is again trying to spread the illusion that Canada is one of the big spenders in terms of social programs, yet David Ross, in a book entitled "The Working Poor", which was published in 1981, states:

> Using 1974 data, Canada ranked thirteenth of seventeen OECD countries when expenditures on income maintenance were expressed as a percentage of gross national product.

Therefore, we do not have a great deal of which to be proud. We are not in the forefront. We are just one of many countries which are trying to do the right thing and, in this case, we are obviously doing the wrong thing. We need more progress in order to catch up with other countries.

This piece of legislation takes us two steps in the wrong direction. Family Allowance is the only program we have that acknowledges the cost of parenting and recognizes the importance of children to Canadian society. It is estimated that it takes $500,000 or more to raise a child, counting out of pocket expenses, the extra hours of labour by parents and the income the mother could have earned if she had not interrupted her working career. In the end, this huge investment benefits society as a whole, rather than the parents. However, in comparison with this huge expense, the Family Allowance is a very small amount, and to reduce this amount even by a little bit is, as I have said, both illogical and unjust.

A couple living in one of Canada's largest cities is poor if they have an income under $11,800. If they have a child, they require an additional $4,000 in income. Family Allowance supplies much less than $4,000 a year, less than 10 per cent of that requirement. Yet it is precisely that kind of program which the Government, in its heartless and unthinking way, proposes to cap.

It is for the reasons which I have already indicated that we intend to vote against the Bill, as we have done until now.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was rather touched by the crocodile tears which were wept by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) over the social policy of the Progressive Conservative party. I can tell him that I would be even more touched if I found that some of the efforts which he expended were put into coming to committee occasionally and discussing social policy measures so that he would know who takes part in what and who puts forward amendments, to which the NDP will not even give support when they would do much to improve social legislation in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: Name one, Flora. Hypocrite.

Miss MacDonald: What we have seen in the last few days, indeed in the last few weeks, has been a determined effort by the Government to push social legislation of a detrimental nature through the House at any cost. We have seen this with Bill C-133, which was the Bill to limit the indexation of pensions of superannuated public servants and Armed Forces personnel. We have seen it with Bill C-131, when the Government cut off debate on the Bill to limit the indexing of old age pensions of every senior citizen in this country over the age of 65. Today, and on Thursday, the Government wants to cut off debate on the Bill which is before us, Bill C-132, which will limit the indexing of Family Allowances paid to some 3.6 million Canadian families, which affect almost seven million children in this country. Those are the Bills on which the Government is boring in and saying, "You cannot debate them any longer". They are not the only ones. There is a host of other bills. No matter how complex or complicated the measure, the Government stills says, "Cut off debate". Now I understand why they are doing this, because in doing so the Government is openly admitting that the way it runs the economic and social programs of this country simply does not bear scrutiny. That is why it wants to cut off debate. It believes it would be much better to stop people from talking, to limit investigation, to restrict witnesses, and to tie down Liberal backbenchers so that none of them get up to speak. One lone Liberal backbencher gets up to speak once in a while.

The Government will do anything at all to get unnecessary and uncalled-for legislation through the House. That is what we are finding here this afternoon, with limitation on the report stage of Bill C-132, because the Government has been unable to explain, right from the very outset of this Bill, why it is singling out one or two social programs for attack in its over-all restraint program, legislation that is aimed against children and legislation that is aimed against the elderly of this country.

I do not know, and the Minister has not been able to explain, the backbench members have not been able to explain, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister who is in the House has not been able to explain, why these particular Canadians are expected to bear the brunt of the Government's battle against inflation. Why should they be singled out when the Government does not impose the same restrictions on its Government advertising, on its ministerial travel, or on its consultants? These are not treated the same way. The government goes on as if there was all the money in the world to spend.

The Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais), when he spoke, made the comment that the Government has no other choice but to zero in on the elderly citizens and the children of this country. The Government has no other choice, he says. There must be a great many people in this country today, a great many senior citizens, a great many mothers, who are wondering, with amazement and perhaps with great anger, why the Government grabs a few measly dollars from them at the same time that it pays $800 a day plus expenses to Donald Macdonald and other members of the Royal Commission. Why is it going to take away the few dollars, that the Hon. Member for Manicouagan spoke about, from children of this country so that Donald Macdonald can be paid $800 a day? That is exactly the equation. That is what we are seeing. Take the money from the elderly, take the money from the mothers and children, and give it to Donald Macdonald so he can live off the fat of the land at $800 a day.

I can tell the Hon. Members opposite and I can tell the Government that $800 a day is the total income that many old age pensioners have for a two month period. They have to get by on that over a two month period, not one day or a week or two weeks, but for two months that is all they get. The Government says we have to take away a few of their dollars each month to make up that $800 to Donald Macdonald.

Do the Hon. Members opposite realize that $800 would do for a single Family Allowance cheque? It would pay that Family Allowance cheque for two and one-half years, that $800 for one single day. That is the equivalent, that is what it would be. The Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais) says the Government has no other choice. The Government has a lot of choices. It does not have to pay that kind of fee to a member of a Royal Commission. It does not have to take the money from children and from senior citizens in order to pay out that kind of money, not only $800 a day but $125 a day in expenses. That is incredible; it is just appalling.

Canadians are not prepared to put up with that sort of thing. There are a great many more senior citizens in this country, a great many more mothers of families in this country than there are Royal Commissioners, and those people will be speaking out against the Government because of these measures, on an ongoing basis, and the Government will hear far more from them than it ever does from a few Royal Commissioners.

When Bill C-132 was in committee, we heard from a limited number of witnesses, and I just want to list who they were because it gives some idea of the kinds of organizations and the people who are concerned about this particular Bill being put forward by the Government and about the restraints that are being placed on families and on the elderly. We heard from The Canadian Council on Social Development, from The Ottawa Women's Lobby, from The University Women's Club of Ottawa, from the Ottawa Council for Low Income Support, From the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women and from the National Action Committee on the Status of Women.

It is obvious that many of these witnesses appearing before us spoke out on behalf of families in this country, and every one of them condemned the measures that the Government is taking both in this Bill and the Bill limiting the indexation of old age pensions. Every one of them condemned the ad hoc methods of the Government in restricting these particular programs. Many of the witnesses felt that the time was long overdue for an over-all review and examination of our total income support and retirement income policies.

I want to tell you what Terrance Hunsley, speaking on behalf of the Canadian Council on Social Development, said. He appeared before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on December 13, last. He said this:

—I am concerned about the overriding influence the recession might have on social policy development. We are witnessing that influence in Bill C-131, Bill C-132 and Bill C-133. To a certain extent, all these initiatives appear to be inspired by a perceived shift in political opinion, rather than by rational policy development. Of course, this is a very dangerous way to develop priorities, since perceptions can be illusory—

He went on to say this, and I will finish with this quote. He said:

—we would recommend two types of social policy initiatives. The first is to review and adjust existing programs in order to seek maximum efficiency, and to eliminate areas of social injustice.

That is what he recommended and that is what we have been recommending throughout, not this ad hoc approach but a total review of all programs so that we can eliminate the inequalities and injustices that still exist in our social programs.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, we are here debating again one of the three Bills that are zeroing in on those segments of the population that can least afford it and that should be the least penalized. Having brought the Public Service and the pensioners to their knees, the Government is now turning to the families. With the Public Service, the Government has broken a contract. With the old age pensioners, I would say they have broken faith, and I think a good many would agree with me there. Therefore it is only natural that the families come next.

As was mentioned by the previous speaker, there are 3.6 million families and 7 million children who are going to be affected by this Bill. I agree that the amount is not great. I believe the difference will be about $1.60 a month with a 6 per cent increase rather than 11 per cent.

• (1550)

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) introduced this amendment in the belief that it would make it a little less punitive. The intent of the amendment is to remove the capping for the year 1984. Unfortunately, it leaves in place the capping for 1983 which is still unacceptable to this Party. I hope that Members across the way will see how hard we have been going on about this and they will change their views. However, judging from past performance, it will not work that way.

As I mentioned, closure has been imposed on each of the three Bills. Closure has been brought in on this Bill and, with the Government majority, will receive third reading sometime Thursday evening. It will then go to the Senate where it will receive the stamp of approval. Families, single parents and those in the low-income bracket will feel this slight decrease in the amount they were to receive originally. I repeat that there are other ways in which the Government can get additional revenue.

Compared with certain Government expenditures, the amount that will be saved as a result of this Bill is insignificant. The Government has been practising—that's a joke—has been preaching about the need for restraint, and the ceiling of six and five per cent. However, time and again Government expenditures in different Departments have increased by 23 per cent. The Government tells Canadians to stay within six and five, and then squanders money at 23 per cent.

Highlighted in the news today is the amount to be paid to a former Minister of Finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald. He is certainly not in the lower-income bracket. He is associated with one of the most prestigious law firms in Toronto, in fact in Canada. He was attracted to this Royal Commission with a stipend of $800 a day, plus up to $125 a day expenses. I presume he will set his own work hours. When you are hired on that kind of basis, you may as well work five days a week. In fact, the odd time there may be overtime. Possibly this contract allows time and a half for overtime, or even a higher percentage.

This Royal Commission is to look into the problems facing the economy of Canada. We know what the problems are. One of the greatest problems is this Government which has not been able to produce. That is most important. Literally millions of dollars will be spent on this Royal Commission before it comes down with some great pronouncement three years down the road. That money could be used for programs that will provide jobs now.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was asked earlier to comment on the suggestion that many young people might be interested in joining the Armed Forces for a two-year period. Not only would they receive excellent training, but many could be taken off unemployment insurance. It would be of great assistance to those just coming out of school with no job and no unemployment insurance. Again, the money could be spent in a much more advantageous manner. Let the Family Allowance remain constant.

There are many other areas where this money could be taken from. The Government is hitting approximately half the population when you include the senior citizens, families, pensioners including civil servants, RCMP and Armed Forces pensioners who have contributed greatly to our economy. They worked hard and now they are being singled out.

This amount of a dollar something a month or $13 or $14 annually is not great. It is insignificant. The Minister responsible for this must have had great misgivings when it was suggested by Cabinet. Why is this segment of the population being hit harder than other segments?

None of us like the income tax, but it is the most fair tax. There is no question about that. Additional taxes should be imposed on those who are wage earners. The federal Government is well aware that income tax revenues have dried up considerably, with over 1.5 million people unemployed. In his wisdom, the previous Minister of Finance decreased the amount of tax from 62 per cent to 50 per cent.

I see that you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude. The Government should get the money from those who earn the most and leave the Family Allowance alone.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to rise to speak to this Bill. It is almost seven months since the former Minister of Finance announced in his June 28 budget that we would be going to six and five. It is interesting that when the Bill finally goes through, the old age pension increase will be reduced by 50 cents a month, and with this Bill, the decrease will be $1.40 to $1.50 per month. That is the difference between what the Government will be paying out and what it would have paid out given the present rate of inflation.

What happened is that the inflation rate came down to the 6 per cent level. Therefore, the differences are very small, especially in the old age pension where there are quarterly increments. We are at the point where the amounts become very small.

For some of these things we have a system of gauging inflation that is extremely archaic. At this stage we talk about an inflation rate of 9.5 per cent. That is made up of something less than 6 per cent for the last two or three months plus 11.5 or 12 per cent for February, March and April of last year. We have an index which is based on all of those 12 months. Most other countries limit that period and also project into the future. So that one, I believe, could see an inflation rate, especially since we do not expect any oil increases this year, which would be in the area of 4 per cent or 5 per cent, and perhaps even less than that. It is ridiculous for this House to be sitting at this stage some seven months after the fact, dealing with a Bill which in many ways has actually achieved what we attempted to achieve.

• (1600)

I would like to see this Bill passed today so we could get on to other legislation, particularly since once this Bill is completed we can begin to talk about Bill C-139, which will make it possible to pay the Child Tax Credit, the extra $50, to those families who are going to need it. The people who need the $1.40 or $1.50 a month very badly will receive their $50 per child. This is the kind of thing which has to be done, but we are unable to pass this Bill because of these other three Bills which have been in Parliament since the end of October, as I recall. This is at least the third time I have spoken on one of these Bills, and it shows how slow and antiquated our rules of Parliament are. It is certainly not the Government's fault that there is so much time spent in getting Bills like this through.

I believe there is a much larger issue here which has to be fought. I listened very carefully to the latter portion of the speech of the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Because I have a feeling that when she speaks on this subject she speaks with a good deal of conviction and feeling, I do not belittle what she says at all, but I have the feeling she should be saying the things she is saying to Members of her own caucus. I have the feeling that if that kind of thing had been kicked around two weeks ago in Winnipeg, we would have received some strange results, because I believe there are a lot of people in that milieu who would say, "Look. We should get rid of Family Allowances. There should not be universality. We should just give it to those who need it and that is it." And the universality argument is one, I believe, which has to be brought up.

We are one of the few Government which has not really cut back in social services in any significant way. The last time I spoke on one of these Bills, I mentioned that the President of the United States, President Reagan, went to Houston in June. He spoke to 3,500 people who paid $1,000 a plate for lunch. At the same time, the State of Texas was putting out a brochure saying that no one should come to Texas for welfare because they would get $34 in food stamps and $34 in welfare a month. That is not the kind of Government we have in this country, and I do not want to see that happen. Yet, I hear some rumblings among the neo-Conservatives, the Reaganites around this country, that that is precisely what should happen.

We in this Party had a major debate on that subject at our last convention. We were almost unanimously in favour of universality on all of these subjects and in favour of maintaining the Family Allowances across the board. I believe it is important that we maintain social services in this country in a full way. These are the real issues in this debate.

There is a segment in our population, and I do not deny them their right to speak, of those who would abolish these things, who would like to get us back to a medical system similar to the one in the United States. I believe that that argument is one which we must continue to keep in front of us. We on this side of the House believe very strongly that universality is a basic right of Canadians. The Family Allowance is part of that, as is the old age pension and our public medical services, and so on. These are the kinds of things which we will defend. In spite of the fact that we have a recession and a large deficit, we have not in any material way cut back in those services.

I am very concerned about the direction in which we are all moving and I feel impelled very strongly to talk about how we can spend a good deal more money than we are spending on the services as well as on creating jobs to make sure that Canadians are able to afford the basics of life. It seems to me that at this stage we have to begin to pay a lot more attention to the kind of rhetoric which we hear about our deficit being a dreadful thing and how the economy is going to be destroyed by such large deficits, and so on. I would remind you of a recent study carried out by the University of Toronto Institute of Policy Analysis which looked at our deficit, and this is what people are complaining about in terms of social services. The study showed that our deficit is a short-term, not a structural, deficit. They took the recession out of the economy and found that without a recession we would have a small surplus, about $1.2 billion this year. On the other hand, a similar kind of study on the American economy would show the deficit was in the order of $60 billion to $90 billion after you remove the recession. Therefore, if this is a short-term deficit, a recession deficit, most of it caused by declining revenue and not so much by Government spending, then it appears to me at this stage of the game it should not be a reason for not going ahead and spending large amounts of money in job creation. I am talking about $6 billion, $8 billion or $10 billion. I would suggest this has to be short-term spending, not long-term, so it does not become a part of a permanent structural deficit. We should use this money in such a way that we can create the maximum number of jobs for people who basically need them and not, as someone suggested, so that we could decrease taxes.

I believe one of the problems we face right now is we have to redistribute money to people who will spend it. There is far too much saving in our economy, 13 per cent, 14 per cent of our Gross National Product. If we are going to achieve the kind of equity and support for people on lower incomes and create jobs for Canadians, we are going to have to make sure that money gets to the people who will spend a good portion of it.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, here we are again. This is the third week in a row that we find ourselves debating a Government proposal on social legislation under the restrictions of time allocation. We went through the debate on the pros and cons of that yesterday. Today we are on the more narrow part of the report stage, debating an amendment by my esteemed colleague behind me, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), on the wisdom of changing this iniquitous legislation by reducing the capping to one year only. We thereby avoid prolonging the erosion of the base which is going to keep up the Family Allowance payments in the future. If the Government sees fit to accept this amendment I am sure it would help all the families and children across Canada and they could carry on in the years ahead with a lesser erosion than they would have under this present Bill. I compliment my colleague for Calgary West on seeing the wisdom of advocating such an amendment. I hope the Government sees the light of day.

The last speaker from the Government side, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae), devoted most of his deliberations today to the issue of universality. Before I heard him speak, I had already planned to comment about that because yesterday the Minister, in speaking to her motion for time allocation, seemed to launch into a tirade against the Official Opposition on the issue of universality. Both I and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Gurbin), and perhaps others, have in the past tried to teach her a few lessons about plain, ordinary English—I dare say even French, too—and the meaning of the word "universality". I dare say there is no difference in either language. The Minister has a somewhat bizarre understanding of what universality actually means. Of course, she is torn between the divergent and mutually exclusive concepts of universality on one side, and her desire to help those who need it most on the other side. But it is absolutely impossible to have both at the same time. There is just no way. As you read the Minister's speeches from day to day, or even on the same day, you will find her saying first one thing, and then advocating the opposite.

As an example, before she got very far into her speech on time allocation on Bill C-132 yesterday, she accused the Official Opposition of wanting to abolish the concept of universality. Let me at this point establish the definition of universality, Mr. Speaker. According to the Oxford Concise Dictionary, universality is something applicable in all cases. Well, at the present time most of the Government's programs are not applicable in all cases. The Guaranteed Income Supplement, which is becoming a greater part of the Old Age Security system, becomes less and less a universal program because it takes over a greater proportion of the payments made to the elderly. The same is happening in the Family Allowance program where the Minister, by cutting the Family Allowance component of the total contribution made to families, is moving further and further away from what used to be the concept of universality. But the Minister refuses to recognize that.

Let me use universal suffrage as an illustration. I am sure the Minister would agree that the concept of universal suffrage is something that gives each person, male or female, one vote. When the Minister talks about universal social programs, she is not talking about everyone getting the same thing; she is talking about everyone getting perhaps $1, and then a decent amount being given to those who need it most. I am not arguing with the validity of helping those who need it most, but the Minister must not try to ride two horses at the same time because it is impossible to have a universal program and at the same time give the same benefits, as you do in universal suffrage, to the same people. It is just impossible, but the Minister does not seem to be able to grasp that at all.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, after attacking us on the problem of universality, she said she was dealing with the issue of the importance of fighting inflation and the six and five program, this big marketing program we have been subjected to across Canada. In discussing the first objective of fighting inflation the Minister said, and I quote from page 22572 of Hansard:

> But we must not do this on the backs of those most in need, who in this case are the mothers.

But that is exactly what she is doing. Although she says she must not do it, she turns around and attacks the Family Allowance Program, the one progressive part of the total aid to families' program. This is just another indication of the duplicity and willingness to attempt to convey a message to Canadians about something which in fact is not being done through legislation of this Government.

One can go on and talk endlessly about a number of issues related to this Bill C-132 and its impact on families across Canada. It is affecting mothers and children in particular. It strikes out at the ones who are least able to defend themselves. It was pointed out to me a few minutes ago by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Calgary West, that one aspect which has not been mentioned is the attack on families through the institutional care given to children who cannot be handled at home. This capping of the Family Allowance is going to affect all these institutions in Canada where children are housed because they receive these benefits. They are going to suffer a relative reduction in remuneration from the federal Government, and they are among the ones who can least afford it. Many of these institutions are in desperate straits now, and this will throw an added burden on them. It is just another example of the thoughtlessness of the Minister in attacking that part of society least able to defend itself. The situation has probably been most ably described by Terrance Hunsley, executive director of Canada Council on Social Development, who said before the Committee:

> After 1983, in which low-income families will receive a one-time bonus payment of $50 per child, they will begin losing over $30 per child on a permanent basis and this loss is, in fact, indexed. In 1985, it will be about $36 per child—

The Minister seems to think there is some virtue in this Bill because it is going to help save money for the federal Government and therefore help in the fight against inflation. Well, the statistics seem to suggest about one twentieth of 1 per cent of total federal budget spending is going to be saved by virtue of Bill C-132, or something in the order of $10 million to $15 million. So it is very difficult to see how we are going to get any effective change in inflation as a result of this Bill.

In conclusion, I just want to say that when the Minister goes on the attack about universality, she forgets the words of Shakespeare when he said, "Methinks the lady doth protest too much". Finally, I would like to quote Louise Dulude of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women who appeared before the Committee. She said:

> We feel these changes will do three things—or would do three things; there is still hope. One, they would endanger the integrity of the Family Allowances Program. Two, they are unfair towards parents in general and mothers in particular. And three, they represent a step backward in establishing a coherent family income policy in Canada.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg-Birds Hill): This afternoon I would just like to make a few comments on all the accusations and counteraccusations between the Liberal spokesmen and the Conservative spokesmen about the commitment of either of those Parties to the principle of universality. When it comes to universality, I think the level of hypocrisy is higher on the Conservative side than it is on the Liberal side.

• (1620)

Perhaps I should start by referring to a question that I put to the then minister of National Health and Welfare on November 5, 1979. I asked the Hon. Member for Rosedale (Mr. Crombie) who was then Minister, if he could assure the House that the principle of universality in Family Allowances would be upheld. He replied, "I cannot give the Hon. Member the assurance he seeks." He went on to say that all social programs, and particularly those of a universal nature, would be under review because that Government was looking for ways to spend the money in the social envelope more efficiently. In doing so, the Conservative Government was following the trend that, in all honesty, must be said to have been developed before it came to power. That was the trend toward an ever increasing fascination with the notion of selectivity in social programming instead of universal social programming. At that time the Minister claimed, and I think with some justification, that his Department—

Miss Bégin: That is not true.

Mr. Blaikie: —was continuing the review that had begun prior to the Conservatives coming into office.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) says that is not the case. In any event, it is true that within the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party there has been a growing fascination with the idea of increased selectivity in social programming.

Regardless of what you think of the principle of universal social programs, Mr. Speaker, only the New Democratic Party has been consistent and unambiguous in defence of them. Some may want to contend with the position we have held on this matter, but it is not a position that is advanced one day and hidden the next, depending on whom we happen to be speaking to. We advance the notion of universal programs and call for the protection of those now in place, not just because of the economic benefits that accrue to those who receive them—in this case the mothers and children—but because we believe universal programs are a way of saying something about the kind of society we want Canada to be and the kind of community we want Canada to become.

We want a community in which things like family life, through Family Allowances, like a dignified standard of living for the elderly through old age pensions and like post-secondary education and health care, are available to all. There are things that we want to provide to Canadians because they are Canadian. Every member of the Canadian community is entitled to them. We do not want people to receive Government assistance because they are poor or are have-nots being helped by the haves. We think this is too individualistic a view of what community means. We believe that universal programs are the better way to distribute those benefits to which all Canadians are entitled.

We are worried not just because of the amount of money that is being taken from families through a reduction in the increase of Family Allowances; we are also worried that when universal programs like this are altered then the objective value of them is eroded in terms of their place in the total social policy of Government. Furthermore, the public perception of the value of the programs is also eroded. People will come to see—as they should, given the actions of the Liberal Government—that these programs are, in the view of the Government, discretionary and might be endangered as part of an over-all and, in this case, ad hoc, inadequate, economic strategy. This could lead to an uncertainty which is very damaging.

The Bill before us deals with Family Allowances and it will affect the certainty with which families can regard the support the Government will extend to them in the future. It is also true of the erosion of the universality of the Old Age Security payments through the imposition of six and five.

At a time when we ought to be encouraging those who can afford to do so to take early retirement where it is appropriate, so that jobs could be made available in the work place we will find that those whose company pension is not indexed and whose only indexed pension is Old Age Security, are going to be reluctant to retire early. The guarantee that at least one element of their retirement income would be protected against inflation has been removed through the imposition of six and five on the OAS, which is a breach of trust on the part of the Government. I think of the people in my riding who retire from the CNR. They do not receive an indexed pension, although they should. The OAS is all they can rely on for protection against inflation.

I am interested in the whole debate on universality versus selectivity, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative Party should get its act together and do a favour to the Canadian political process by deciding where it stands on the issue. In my view, through the whole six and five debate, that Party has been particularly two-faced. Maybe it is suffering from a genuine schizophrenia, but in any case, its Members have been talking out of both sides of their mouths regarding six and five.

I recall that the Conservatives often called for that kind of program when they were in opposition, and they seemed intent on bringing it in when they were in Government. History robbed them of the opportunity, however. But it is not unusual for the Conservative Party to have two spokesmen on every issue, however. They have people for the Crow and people against the Crow; people for low interest rates and people for high interest rates; people for human rights in Central America and the Hon. Member for York-Peel (Mr. Stevens) who supports all the right-wing regimes in Central America that violate human rights. They have people, only a few, mind you, who are against testing the Cruise and a whole bunch of people who are for testing the Cruise, including their leadership. They have people who are for medicare, but who never ask a question on medicare in the House except in a way that is complimentary to Tory provincial Governments that systematically undermine medicare. They have two policies on Crown corporations—two policies on almost anything you can imagine. In some ways, I admire this diversity within the Progressive Conservative Party. Perhaps it is their way of trying to move us closer to a congressional system of government. It certainly makes it difficult for the Canadian people.

• (1630)

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this Bill, which will obviously pass through the House at third reading because it is now going through a time allocation procedure, will impose an economic hardship on many children in this country. I also firmly believe—and this happens to be the position of my Party since we believe in the concept of universality—that we will look back on this day as the day when the Government decided to do away with that concept of universality. That is exactly what this Bill does. It tampers with the original principle behind Family Allowances, that they shall be universal.

Of course, we know that Family Allowances were originally introduced to help offset the economic burden of raising a family and to help give people who were raising families some reasonable degree of equality of opportunity.

As one of my colleagues has already said, this Bill will also impose an unfair burden on some institutions in this country that care for children. For example, there is an orphanage in my constituency that cares for boys of all religious denominations. It is operated by the Order of Christian Brothers. This legislation will cause them serious problems because it will unfairly cut into their income. This happens at a time of serious downturn in our economy. They have seen their public support diminish by virtue of high unemployment, high inflation and the general deep recession which the country is presently going through. From all points of view, this is a mean, cruel and unfair Bill which should never have been introduced. Certainly it should never have been subject to time allocation or closure.

Let us look at the context in which this Bill was introduced. A few days ago, Statistics Canada released its unemployment figures. Those figures indicated that unemployment in Canada has risen by 100,000. There are now 1.6 million people officially unemployed in this country. When one takes into account the hidden unemployed, those who have given up hope of looking for a job, there are two million people unemployed in Canada in real terms.

My Province has the highest rate of unemployment. It is over 17 per cent. That unemployment problem, with all of its social implications, is compounded by the fact that the duration of the recession and the longevity of unemployment has meant that there are 100,000 unemployment recipients a month who are coming off UIC because their benefits have expired. Where do those people turn? They have no choice but to become subject to a means test and apply for welfare.

That is the context and time frame within which we are considering this Bill. Among the two million unemployed and the 100,000 who are coming off UIC benefits every month, I would suggest that it is not unreasonable to say that many would be heads of families. Again, this will erode their ability to care for their families. This is a mean and niggardly thing for this Government to do.

If I did not participate in the debate on this Bill, my conscience would bother me as, I am sure, the conscience of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) must be bothering her today. This Bill is not consistent with the social conscience that we recognize the Minister has and that she has brought to her portfolio up to now. I do not believe that she is at all happy about this Bill. I do not believe she is happy about doing away with the principle of universality. I do not believe that she is happy about the application of the six and five formula to this country's very important social benefit.

We may say that the amount of money concerned is not very much. Hon. Members can argue that it will be made up by the Child Tax Credit. However, many people will not qualify for the Child Tax Credit. Many lower and middle-income Canadians will not receive enough from the Child Tax Credit in the long term to make up for the loss in the Family Allowance benefits. What does this mean for unemployed people with large families? It means that their children may have to go without a pair of shoes. It means that their children may have to go without adequate clothing. In many instances it means that children in this country will have to go without an adequate diet. That is one of the consequences of long-term unemployment today and the expiration of unemployment insurance benefits. It is a consequence of the burden that has been placed on some of the poorer Provinces that have had an increase in the number of welfare recipients and decrease the benefits to some. There are many families that are facing hardship and are no longer able to cope in terms of being able to clothe their children adequately and provide an adequate diet.

The figures show that we still have double-digit inflation. Of course, the perverse argument would be put forward that this is the reason for the six and five formula. It will not hurt a Member of Parliament very much to hold him or her to a 6 per cent increase. As a matter of fact, 6 per cent of $100,000 amounts to a $6,000 increase. However, it becomes a very cruel act to hold a $26 a month Family Allowance benefit to that six and five formula. It means that the family will be deprived of the indexing that will allow it to offset the detrimental effects of inflation in a small way. The high cost of food, shelter, clothing and transportation which can be seen in the Consumer Price Index every month is what imposes the hardship on the people who have the burden of raising families today.

Quite frankly, I just do not understand the concept behind this Bill. I am ashamed that this Government would not only introduce this Bill but impose time allocation on it. Poor people have to pay inflated rates for clothes. Poor people have to pay inflated rates for footwear. Poor people have to pay taxes. We see taxes going up. Municipalities have had to raise property taxes, and those taxes are going up constantly.

In my Province the sales tax has risen from 11 per cent to 12 per cent. Sales taxes are going up in all Provinces across the country. Tuition fees are going up as well. Yet we hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) tell the young people of Winnipeg not to expect jobs this summer because of the slow progress in an economic turnaround. There will be hundreds of thousands of young Canadians coming on to the job market in April and May who will have no jobs or income to support themselves for another year of university or no way to offset the burden on their families because they could not get a job last year. That is the mess that has been created in this country.

I can understand the rationale behind trying to curb inflation by bringing expenditures under control. Perhaps at another time we can bring unemployment under control. The argument might even be made for capping indexing of Family Allowances. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Minister that there is no argument that can support the introduction of this Bill at this particular time, because the reverse is true. Instead of bringing in a Bill to cap Family Allowances to six and five, we should be providing additional help to families that are faced with the burden of double-digit inflation, increased shelter costs, increases food costs, increased taxes, increased tuition fees and the additional burden of young kids not being able to find jobs to help finance their university and post-secondary education. I believe this is a cruel and an unnecessary bill. I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare should be ashamed of herself for bringing it in at this time.

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention to rise in the House this afternoon, but because of the time allocation, I want to make a positive contribution regarding this Government's refusal to listen to the Canadian people as a whole.

It is a fact that in committee, several organizations have reminded the Minister responsible and other Government Members that this bill is not most timely at this time, in view of the present economic conditions. The previous speaker has dealt with some quite specific and relevant points, and in the name of a true social justice, I feel he was right in calling on the Government to withdraw this Bill because of the present economic conditions.

At a time when Canada is faced with record unemployment, how can we honestly support this legislation designed to cut government spending? Having experienced and witnessed this Government's gross mistakes and mismanagement, how can we help cut its spending at the expense of those who can least afford it? How can we co-operate and at the same time support its decision to save money on the backs of small wage earners and have-nots? Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has urged us repeatedly to help him bring about his so-called just society. I feel that words such as honesty and justice have become meaningless for the Government.

Mr. Speaker, it is on behalf of some 6 million Quebecers that I rise today to tell the government, like so many of my colleagues who have done a great job, that this legislation is not good enough. How callous Government Members must be if they can turn a deaf ear to our appeal on behalf of the millions of Canadian families and children who will be affected. They will ask, of course, why we are making such a fuss about a few dollars. On the very day when we are asked to reduce the incomes of Canadian families at the risk of causing even more harships to our children, the Prime Minister informs us with a smile that a certain Mr. Macdonald will only be paid $800 per day to carry out a study over the next two or three years.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people who can see and hear us will finally realize what are the priorities of the Prime Minister and his colleagues. One may readily admit that $800 a day is not an unduly large amount nowadays, and yet the Government will deduct from the mother's family allowance $1.40 a month for each child, something which will affect millions of families.

Mr. Speaker, it is our duty to warn the Government that it has breached every rule of common decency, and that is why I chose to speak this afternoon because I do have in my riding families who simply cannot accept this legislation. We know full well that there are essential needs and minimum limits which must be respected, and we have to keep in mind the current economic situation, unemployment, difficulties and hardships which this Government has created as a result of its mismanagement and its deliberate unemployment policies over the past 15 years. Remember that we had 300,000 people unemployed then as compared with two million today. And the Government comes up with such inhuman and cruel measures! I would think that any Member who feels a minimum of responsibility towards his constituents cannot remain silent, and I fail to understand why the Government does not listen to us when we are making representations for the benefit of all Canadians.

What we are talking about today has nothing whatsoever to do with party politics; we are talking about the minimum requirements of our fellow citizens, and the Government stubbornly insists that millions of Canadians will have to pick up the tab even though they are not responsible for its mismanagement and its wrong decisions. We saw the other day that pensioners will have to pay for the damage caused by this Government, senior citizens will also be victims of its mismanagement, and, today, Mr. Speaker, they are going after the children. I must speak up against this measure and this attitude, and I urge the Government Members to have enough decency and honesty to vote against this Bill. Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the Minister would have been more sympathetic towards mothers. Her behaviour is a great disappointment to me and I am very sorry to see that she is still cooperating and going along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) and her Cabinet colleagues to penalize people who do not deserve such harsh treatment.

Mr. Speaker, these are my reasons for urging once more these Members whose ears must be plugged up to think first and foremost of serving their constituents just as I and my colleagues are trying to serve ours. They have clearly forgotten their basic duties in this House. For all these reasons, I hope that the Government will at least agree to add to the Bill the amendment moved by one of my colleagues which will somewhat improve it. However, even with this amendment, the Bill would be unacceptable on the basis of principle, justice and integrity.

Mr. Speaker, these are a few comments I wanted to make at the end of this debate in the hope that if, Government Members on the other side of the House, can but obey the Minister or the Prime Minister who are forcing them to vote for such a callous Bill, they will at least have the decency to be absent when the vote is taken. I cannot believe that these Members will try to justify such a despicable Bill before their constituents. I can hardly wait to meet them, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope that, at the last minute, Hon. Members opposite will seriously reflect on this legislation which all Canadians find totally unacceptable. It is obvious that they are trying to kill the principle of universality which they used to advocate. It is not the first time that I see them go back on their commitments. How long will this go on? Will Canadians be able to forget such despicable action? I do not think so! Because of all that we have heard today, Mr. Speaker, I hope that this Government will soon ask the people to pass judgment on their action, and we shall then see whether the Canadian people will long stand for such repressive measures. This being said, Mr. Speaker, I hope I have appealed to the feelings of some Hon. Members opposite in the best interests of the country and in keeping with the deepest sense of justice which we must show toward those who have elected us.

[English]

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to put some remarks on the record with regard to Bill C-132 and to touch briefly on the history of those two Parties in relation to where they have been in recent years concerning Family Allowance. I would first like to deal with the Tory amendment which would really limit the provisions of the Bill to this year. It is a pretty weak amendment. I will be supporting it, not because I think it is a particularly useful instrument in terms of Bill C-132 and the capping of Family Allowance but, rather, because it would limit it to one year rather than two years, and really would do nothing more.

We have seen a lot of wriggling from the Tories in the last couple of days with regard to Family Allowance. We have not seen anything from those on the Government side. I think that when the Government introduces legislation, its Members have a responsibility to stand up and explain why it is so good, why it is being brought in and why it will help solve some of the problems of the country. As well, I like Liberal Members to put their thoughts on the record so that I can send copies out to Liberals in my riding so they know exactly what their Members here in Ottawa are doing for them.

One Hon. Member, representing Thunder Bay, rose and said that it is really just a few dollars and does not matter too much. However, as my colleague from Newfoundland pointed out, a couple of dollars per child per month means a great deal to many of our constituents across the country. It does mean shoes, busfare and food. It does mean whether or not a child gets an opportunity to participate in some kind of bowling club or other type of extracurricular activity.

The Liberals keep saying that the cut will amount to just a couple of bucks. However, it is not simply a question of shifty bookkeeping so that they can get a few dollars to go out and make some kind of flashy headlines that they are providing a job creation program, or whatever. It is really a violent and vigorous attack by the Government side. I will be reading some quotations to illustrate that it is coming from Cabinet. It is not supported by too many backbenchers. They do not really know what their leaders in Cabinet are up to, what the grand design is, approaching the Speech from the Throne, concerning the Government direction. However, I will be putting on the record where the Cabinet has been throwing money in the last couple of years.

Bill C-124 is something to which we must return. I think Canadians have a right to understand where the Official Opposition is coming from and where the Government has been concerning Bill C-124, because I can recall very vividly the slobbering faces of many Tories who have spoken in this debate trying to get in front of cameras, saying, "Right on, six and five, that is what the country needs. Let us get at it". However, during that period when they were out trying to make an impression on the business community that they were right in there on six and five, they were not telling the pensioners what they had been telling us in speeches here.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), really hit the nail on the head. The Tories do have Hon. Members speaking for and against everything that comes under the sun. If they are trying to reach a certain kind of group, then they send a certain kind of Hon. Member to speak. That is the kind of immorality which has come to permeate this place in terms of political Parties, particularly the Official Opposition and the Government side, in not taking an issue and being forthright with Canadians. It is why, for the first time in Canadian history, politicians are generally seen as being in the same category as convicted sex killers. The entire institutions are coming to be seen as a black eye in Canadian society.

Government Members and Members of other Parties have a responsibility to stand up and speak on policies that they have held for 10, 20 or 30 years, not ones they have held for 15 minutes. The Tories voted for Bill C-124, but now they have come up with all kinds of excuses as to why they were for six and five a couple of months ago and why they are now consistently against it, whether concerning Old Age Security or taking money away from public servants who had paid for the indexation. They paid an extra per cent from their pay to ensure that their pensions were indexed. Money is being taken away from retired people and is actually being taken from the mouths of children. I will be speaking about that in the context of my own riding where this Bill will affect tens of thousands of children and will mean that tens of thousands of dollars every month, or half a million dollars or more a year, will be taken out of our local economy. Those small items which those children would have received otherwise are important.

It is also important to consider why the Government is going ahead with this without the approval of Parliament, just as lawyers are glad to say, "Oh, well, we think it is legal". We all know, in our heart of hearts, that if something is not passed by Parliament, it is illegal. How often will someone go before a judge in Vancouver, Ottawa, Montreal or in Newfoundland to say, "Oh, Your Honour, I thought it was legal. You must let me go"? That argument does not sell. If Parliament now tries to start selling that concept across this country, we will see incidents like the Litton bombing. We will hear people saying, "I am so frustrated with those guys. They can do one thing, but we are not allowed to do the same sort of thing.

If we are to run this institution and gain some respect across the country, we must state our positions. I have respect for the Tories to my right who have stood up time after time and have been consistent. The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) is an example. Long in tooth, he has been in politics for a long time. I know exactly where he will stand, and I respect him for that. However, there are others who one day are in opposition to six and five if they are addressing pensioners or their constituents, but if they are addressing businessmen, they are in favour of it. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill, described that as being some kind of schizophrenia. Maybe it is honestly held schizophrenia, but I think there is a real need in this country for the Parties to come clean as to where they stand.

While the Official Opposition formed the Government, the press releases were pretty clear. On the front page of the Toronto Star, it stated, "Clark to Chop Family Allowance", and on the front page of another paper it stated, "Clark to Chop Bonus". There must be a limit to the kind of political dishonesty which goes on in this place. We know that the former President of the Treasury Board was quite open and vocal in a number of interviews that he gave. One headline stated, "Social Programs May Stop Being Universal", and he described that as "gutsy". The article stated:

> Asked if he felt the Government had "the political guts" to abandon universality, Johnston pointed to the decision to limit indexing of the basic Old Age Pension to the Government's restrained levels of six and five per cent for the next two years.
> That, he said, is a "very gutsy" move.

There is the attack. The attack is on the concept of universality. We know why these two Parties, the Liberals and the Tories, are combined on that. Otherwise, if we are to have universal programs and yet not have consistency, the argument could be that there are people who do not need it. I agree that people who make $30,000 to $70,000 or more a year do not require the full impact of that Child Tax Credit or Family Allowance. Because there are so many holes in the tax system at the upper end, if the Government wanted to be consistent and were able to demonstrate to the Canadian public that those universal payments would be taken back, it would mean that there would have to be an honest revamping of the top end of the tax system to demonstrate that the amount of $25 or $200 or $500 was being taken back through the tax system.

That is why that Party opposite is staying away from that subject. It is much easier to chisel away from pensioners and attack public servants by holding their wages down. The business community is the driving force. In other words, if one is not attacking social benefits, education, hospital care, medicare and that type of thing, then one must be going after the business community and saying, "Oh, you are not really paying your fair share". There is an abundance of information which should be on the record and made available to Canadians as to why the Government has opted for this "shifty bookkeeping", as I describe it. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) pointed out, the amount of money that is going to be taken away and re-shifted in this bookkeeping is about the same as the cost of a wingtip of an F-18. It is shifty bookkeeping, but it is the first part of the attack. If the rate of inflation goes up again, if interest rates go up again, we can be sure that this is not a two-year program but will be permanent. There will no longer be indexation. Children will be forced to eat less and receive less, in other areas, and we are talking here particularly about the impact on poorer families.

Few people are aware that Government assistance to business in the form of tax relief and grants in 1980 alone totalled $15 billion. The option to choose is either to choose to retain proper health programs and educational and social programs and turn the attention away from attacking public service employees or to choose business and military spending. That is the kind of material we need in this debate, not only honesty from the Parties involved in this debate, but also debate on where the money is to come from, from tax breaks and benefits, and so on.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to say a few words on the report stage of Bill C-132 dealing with Family Allowances, and especially on the amendment that we are now considering that has been proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). It is also pleasant to follow the knight in shining armour who last spoke, the bearded avenger of the NDP. If there was a single word of truth in what he said, I do not think I would be able to live with myself. However, the facts of the case are somewhat different.

The amendment that we have before us today would in fact split the argument down the middle. The Government has come forward with a proposal to limit the indexation of Family Allowances for a period of two years. There have been many arguments presented which indicate that this may not be the correct thing to do. We know that we would be unsuccessful in defeating the Bill, but I think there is some chance of success for passage of the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Calgary West. It is a kind of compromise deal, and I would urge all Members of the House to vote in favour of that amendment.

We could live with the Bill, as we propose to amend it, for a year, and after that time we could assess the effect that the reduction in Family Allowance payments has had. If we feel that the reduction has not had such a deleterious effect as some people are predicting, we could continue in that vein; and if not, we could go back to full indexation. I would hope in the spirit of compromise that all Members of this House would vote for that amendment.

I, like other Members on this side of the House, am rather disappointed that the people on the Government side have chosen not to speak this morning or this afternoon. They spoke vehemently yesterday when the subject matter of debate was closure on the issue of Family Allowances. Having achieved that, having voted to close off the debate, they no longer seem interested. I do not think that they have advanced sufficient argument to support their point of view, and I was rather hoping that this afternoon we would hear arguments as to why, in their opinion, we should not vote in favour of the amendment. These arguments have not been forthcoming, and I rather suspect they do not exist.

Yesterday, while speaking on closure on this matter, I referred to the little guys who have been thrust out onto the firing line by the Government in the so-called fight against inflation, whereas the Liberal fat cats have stayed behind the lines, at the back of the scene of action, and they have not been suffering at all on account of the Government's so-called six and five program.

Today we have seen another manifestation of that. It has come to light that, by Order in Council, the remuneration of the Hon. Donald Macdonald, who is heading the Royal Commission inquiring into the economy, is to be paid the exorbitant sum of $800 a day, and $925 a day when he is on the road. I do not buy at all the explanation given by the Prime Minister earlier in this House this afternoon when he said in fact that figure is only $400 because the other $400 goes to pay his office expenses. He could quit his law firm and he would still be making $800 a day. It is not necessary that the overhead expenses of his office be paid for by the taxpayers of Canada. That is just another illustration of the Liberal fat cats behind the lines who are not taking any cutbacks themselves, but passing those cutbacks on to the little guys at the front of the line.

I could mention also Michael Pitfield who is enjoying a nice paid holiday, and Ed Clarke, the architect of the National Energy Policy, who is enjoying himself in the south of France. There are all kinds of illustrations that can be given to underline that argument.

Apparently, the Parliament of Canada has over a number of years come to the conclusion that there is a need for Family Allowances. If that need exists, then I think it is only fair and honest that a system of full indexation be applied to those Family Allowances. I can remember the debate in this House a little over a year ago when a new budget was coming in and we were talking at that time about the indexation and there were suspicions on this side of the House that the Government was contemplating deindexation of programs such as this one and deindexation of certain aspects of the Income Tax Act and other taxation acts. At that time we had reassurance after reassurance after reassurance from the Government front benches that the Government was not considering any system of deindexation. It was not, in that budget, but a year later in comes the deindexation.

Even if partial deindexation was retained, as is proposed in this case, the value of the moneys granted by way of Family Allowances or any other scheme are very rapidly eroded. If the difference between the real rate of inflation and the indexed rate, as it is to be in this instance, is something like 4 per cent or 5 per cent, it will only take less than ten years, probably eight years, until the actual real value of those allocations has been halved.

We on this side of the House have consistently supported the idea of full indexation, whether it be applicable to the Income Tax Act or other acts, in calculating deductions against income, or whether it be in this form of payment. Without full indexation, this leads to the kind of political manipulation that we have seen before on the part of the Government. It brings in a program such as Family Allowances with an amount of money attached thereto that means something to people.

Because that amount does not keep pace with inflation and because it goes down, in real terms, that allows the Government at the time of the next election to come out with a great announcement that it is going to increase these payments. It is a way of buying votes without bringing in any real new program. We have seen that before with Family Allowances.

I remember a few years ago when the rate was $6 per month per child. Originally that was a reasonable amount, but it came to be worth very little. At that time the Government could have gone two ways. It could have got rid of the Family Allowance altogether. It would not have hit people very hard. On the other hand, it could do what it did at that time, come forward with a great increase to $20. I am sure that was done with electoral machinations in mind.

The Bill we are debating here today, C-132, will allow the Government to do precisely the same thing. It will allow them to engage in yet another publicity stunt at the time of the next election. If the Government was sure that the six and five program was going to work, and if it had done those things that are necessary to curb and abate inflation, if it had reduced its deficit, these measures would not be necessary because inflation would be less than 6 per cent and we would not have to cap it at that.

In closing, I should like to say that all Members of this House ought to support the amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Calgary West and, if that fails, to go against Bill C-132.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak on Bill C-132, which is just another Bill in a series of Bills directed toward the Government's six and five program, I cannot help but think about the way the Government has proceeded with this piece of legislation. They are in such a hurry that they implemented the provisions of this Bill before it had even received the approval of this House. One has to wonder about the ethics of a Government which does that.

Mr. Nickerson: They don't have any.

Mr. Young: As my friend points out, perhaps they do not have any. There is certainly some aspect of truth in that.

I rather suspect, and I have had many of my constituents suggest this to me, that these six and five Bills and the whole six and five program has very little, if anything, to do with this Government pretending to fight inflation. The Government's attempts to fight inflation go back at least 14 years. I remember at that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) making such promises as wrestling inflation to the ground, that fighting inflation was the only way to increase employment opportunities, etc. Today we still have high inflation, but now it is coupled with high unemployment. We have the worst of both worlds.

I am still waiting to see this Government come forward with real programs that actually fight inflation. We have a program that has less to do with fighting inflation than with leaving the impression in the country that there is actually some leadership, some focus, that the Government has in fact regained control of the economy when we know that the opposite is actually the case. What burns me in this whole process of the Government, responding to political demand in the country that real action and real programs be to put in place straighten out the economy, is that it has followed a course which Governments have followed over the years. When entering into a program of restraint or restraining financial expenditure, they consistently aim their attacks at those least able to defend themselves.

We saw that in Bill C-131, and we know that the seniors of this country are not a politically organized group. They are not organized to the extent that they can fight back against that kind of restrictive measure. The Government did the same to public servants. Even Government spokesmen pointed out in this House that that was because the Government believed the public servants were not very popular in this country and therefore it was safe to attack and blame them.

We now have Bill C-132 where the Government in its assessment, and probably as a result of public polling, has decided that those who are recipients of the Family Allowance are not a highly organized group. They are not organized like the banks and the corporate sector. They fought very strongly against restrictions which the Government brought down in the infamous budget of a year or so ago. Because of their political strength, they managed to persuade the Government to change those elements in the budget which they felt were detrimental to their interests. The seniors of this country do not have that kind of clout with which to fight back.

The way the Government has brought this program in, it has convinced people that under the six and five program they will receive a monthly increase in any event and that the reduction will be extremely small, probably not noticeable. At the end of that two-year period, the reduction for recipients of the Family Allowance will be a lot more than the 50 cents a month which the Government has been trying to persuade Canadians is what they will lose as a result of this legislation.

In committee the Minister explained to Canadians the Government's position in introducing the six and five program. I wish to quote from the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of December 7, 1982. The Minister said this:

> The Government's philosophy in the Cabinet discussion, which is what you want to understand, was made like this: In the June budget, we decided we had reached the time where the psychological dimensions of the too-high inflation we were witnessing in Canada had to be recognized and dealt with by another psychological weapon, which was a sword—and I know the words might make you smile—a sword of a national campaign of solidarity of all Canadians, mobilizing all Canadians toward cutting in half the forecasted rates of inflation of 12 and 10 to 6 and 5. It was an arbitrary—to my knowledge—choice of common purposes for Canadians to try to embark all partners into, as I said—to mobilize all partners.

I fail to see how the Government can use the sword against the elderly and children of this country to fight inflation when everyone knows the facts. Figures from the Government's own agency, Statistics Canada, clearly show that those groups being asked to mobilize with swords, tanks and everything else the Government can dream up to launch the fight against inflation are the very victims of inflation. The reason the Government is victimizing those people further can only be put down as crass politics, sadism.

When we take a look at this Bill, and I would like to refer to some written notes now, we find that under the provisions of this Bill, the Government expects to save—and that is their terminology,—$155 million over the two-year period, that is, $25 million the first year and $130 million the second year. It proposes to do this by limiting indexation of Family Allowances to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. Without the budget, Family Allowances would have been $358.44 for each child, which was $29.87 per month per child in 1983. However, under the provisions of this Bill, the amount will only be $342.24.

The Government contends that most families, in reality, will not lose any money because it is going to make up the difference by a one-shot increase in the refundable Child Tax Credit. However, Mr. Speaker, there are several problems with this logic. First, of the 3.6 million mothers who receive Family Allowances, about 2.5 million also receive the Child Tax Credit. This leaves 1.1 million families who will have their Family Allowances reduced with no compensation at all since they are not eligible for the Child Tax Credit. To qualify for the full credit of $343 per child, a family must have a taxable income of less than $26,330 per annum. For families above this income level, the total is reduced by five cents on every income dollar. For two-child families the credit disappears at the $40,000 level. For one-child families it disappears at $33,000. Even at this high income level, there are some women for whom the Family Allowance represents the only money they can call their own.

In conclusion, I would simply urge Hon. Members of the House to follow the advice of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women in their presentation to the Committee on Health Welfare and Social Affairs, that it behooves every Member of this House, Liberal as well as Tory and New Democrat, to vote against this measure when it comes up for a vote this evening and the final vote on Thursday.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in my speech today, I would, first of all, like to draw the attention of the House, as my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) has done, to the lack of participation by Quebec Members who, with the exception of the Parliamentary Secretary for the Department concerned, failed to take an active part in the debate today. Yesterday, I think they may have shied away because of closure. They like to impose closure over there. Meanwhile, we are considering a proposal to cap indexing of family allowances at 6 and 5 per cent. In money terms, this is peanuts. It is hardly a matter of principle. Mr. Speaker, if they were really serious about wanting to control Government expenditures . . . They have programs, and it seems that within the administration of those programs, there is a limit on the number of public service employees allowed. This is a time of austerity measures, but take a look at the hundreds of people who are hired on contract. They are not permanent employees, but they are temporarily permanent. It is, in fact, a permanent situation. There is an entire sector of the population of the national capital that is employed in this way.

That is where the money is going. Here in the House, there are expenditures that could have been eliminated. Take the administration of the House. You are aware of this, Mr. Speaker, since you have been to meetings of the Committee on Management and Member Services. We have seen the level of bureaucracy that has invaded the House of Commons. It is a very expensive bureaucracy. That is why we are now providing for a larger number of Members in the House. That is going to cost us millions of dollars. In the amendments to the Standing Orders of the House, it is proposed to establish a secretariat for the Committees of the House. According to the present system, Mr. Speaker, this represents a minimum expenditure of $50,000 per committee, in other words, another million dollars, and that is only the beginning.

As my colleague from Western Arctic (Mr. Nickerson) said earlier, we must support the amendment of my colleague from Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), notwithstanding the comments made by the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who said that we are inconsistent and were playing politics with the issue. No other amendment except this one could be proposed. It is impossible. Of course, for people who really want to simplify things the Bill is already quite simple, since you can hardly amend a Bill that only has one section, unless you want to amend a paragraph by eliminating either the 6 or the 5 per cent after one year. If you try to eliminate them in two years, the amendment will not be acceptable, because it would be a double negative. It would amount to voting against the Bill.

Quite sincerely, one may well ask what the Members from Quebec are saying at home. They are supporting the capping of family allowances. In the past, I remember it was around 1972, after the election, when we were considering funds appropriated under Governor General's warrants—I am sorry, I do not know what it is in French—which were supposed to cover family allowance and unemployment insurance benefits, the Members from Quebec were rising all over the place to attack the Opposition for having the nerve to criticize the way the funds were used, because we would be cutting off payments that Quebecers were waiting to receive. Today, those same benefits are being cut, and not a word of protest did we hear after the Government introduced this negative policy. In 1969 and 1971, when they started to implement the indexing program, they did not have the guts to deal with the problem of inflation. They did nothing, apart from indexing. They added a cushion here and a cushion there. Now the cushion is getting too big, and they want to let out some of the feathers. But what are they going to do if they fail to control inflation within a year or eighteen months? What are we going to do?

Are we going to keep on cutting? Are we going to find something else? Why family allowances? They would not dare touch veterans' pensions but here they give with one hand and take away with the other—that is called revenue transfer.

Mr. Speaker, in Canada we have now reached the point that it is becoming increasingly difficult to do business. Members of the New Democratic Party are saying that people who are in business are going to be taxed to death. People who make money because they are clever and ambitious and energetic and dedicated—they are going to have to pay through the nose. That is what they can expect. People looking for handouts, the bums who come forward and say that they need this and that, not because they need it but because they want it. That is the social policy of the New Democratic Party, closely followed by a number of Members on the Government side who feel that if "bums" and the poor ask, they should receive. These Hon. Members should have attended the public hearings of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when it received representations from the public on taxation. They would have heard what businessmen had to say. If business is not good, who is going to pay the wages? If we cannot sell our products abroad and make money, how is the farmer going to make a living? All of this is involved, but it is easier to say yes, I will give it to you, than to say yes, but earn it first.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are going to rise. I just want to add, that quite honestly, the sensible thing to do would be for the House to support my colleague's amendment.

• (1730)

Mr. Henri Tousignant (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to take just a few minutes to shed some light on the comments the House has heard this afternoon.

Hon. Members were indignant that the Minister should impose closure on this debate. They were shouting and there were howls of rage, and now the Hon. Members opposite are accusing Members on this side of the House of not participating in the debate. We refrained from taking the floor to give Members opposite a chance to debate extensively, because they said they had a lot on their minds. Now they have been caught unawares. They have no more speakers to continue the debate. They are looking high and low, and they have the nerve to say that it is shocking we should not participate. I call that hypocrisy of the lowest order. They have been asking all kinds of questions, they have been indignant, they have been asking why the Government is imposing these restrictions on people with low incomes, and so it goes on. It is a matter of principle, and they know this. The Government has imposed the measure on all Canadians under our jurisdiction. Everything is fair and square, and they know this perfectly well. Now they are just trying to evade the issue.

I was listening to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who said, in quite excellent French, that we were responding to people asking for handouts, the bums and the poor. Those were the expressions used by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West. I repeat: People asking for handouts and the bums and the poor, and he said quite clearly that we were listening to these people. When I heard those words spoken by the Member for Edmonton West, I thought: There you have the Progressive Conservative philosophy in a nutshell. That is exactly what the Progressive Conservative Party thinks of the poor and the needy. The Hon. Member also mentioned, and he certainly did not know what he was talking about, family allowances that would not be fully indexed, and once more he expressed his indignation. He ought to know that the basic exemption of $200 per child has been increased to $343, as a result of which people on very low incomes stand to benefit far more than if we had left indexing at its normal levels, without adjusting the basic exemption.

I merely wish to point out the inconsistencies uttered by the Members opposite, who all day long have been making all kinds of accusations aimed at Members on this side of the House, accusations without rhyme or reason, and then to realize that the same Hon. Members literally howled when we imposed closure, claiming that they had a lot of things to say. They have nothing left to say now, however, and they are actually surprised that, out of courtesy, we refrained from speaking to give them every opportunity to express their views. Mr. Speaker, the Member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) was saying earlier: I was not going to speak, but I have to. Since they have nothing left to say, some time or other they will have to stop playing games. Those were my comments, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, thank you for permitting me to say a few words before you have to rise to interrupt the proceedings. I feel very much as does my colleague, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath); I am a little disappointed, and it would have been on my conscience were I not able to say a few words in regard to this important issue. It never ceases to amaze me, Sir, how we can all stand up in this House to defend certain principles and yet be so far apart in the approach we advocate to achieve these principles and goals. There is probably no one in the House who does not have compassion for children, particularly for children of families who live on fixed and low incomes. There is also a general consensus and agreement that it would not be fair to apply assistance such as the Family Allowance system unfairly. The concept of universality is pretty well accepted and recognized and promoted by all Parties. But the only universality left in the system is the universality of fear and the lack of confidence the Government has created—the universal misery it has dispensed over the last few years.

● (1740)

There are some very serious consequences of the Minister's new measure to put limits on the indexation of old age pensions and Family Allowances. Low income families in the North find it very difficult to have their incomes reduced, even by $30 or $40 per month. Their resources are taxed to the limit already. The Hon. Member for St. John's East said that some children may have to go without shoes and without proper nutrition.

An even more serious impact of these measures is that people are losing their trust and confidence in this institution and in the Government. It is quite obvious that the Government has no intention of making a firm and unequivocal commitment to the contract we have entered into with Canadians. People are developing psychological barriers, saying, "If they can take that away from me now, what about my pension when I retire? Perhaps there is something in the fine print, and the Government will rearrange its priorities so that the pension will not be there for me when I need it." They are asking about unemployment insurance, saying, "I thought I would have it if I were ever laid off, but maybe the benefit can no longer be paid because the Government is running out of money. They have to pay Mr. Macdonald $300,000 a year to study the economy and perhaps buy some more service stations to ensure Canadian content in the energy sector of the economy. Perhaps there will be all kinds of different priorities." Certainly there is now doubt about the security and the legitimacy of the social contract we all thought we had arranged for people.

The damage done by the measures now before the House will probably never be corrected, Mr. Speaker. It is little wonder to me, and it should be little wonder to the Liberals, that people are becoming cynical about this institution and about the system we thought was fair and equitable for all Canadians, especially those in need. They become cynical about the political process and the promises and by politicians. They see that when it suits their political purpose, they default on those promises.

This is a very serious measure we are concerned with, Mr. Speaker. It places the whole process in question. We shall fight this measure with all the power we have—and it is precious little as you know. The Government has no qualms about closing off debate at any time in the House, saying, "We know what is best for Canada. We know what is right. You in the Opposition are just tolerated here." This institution no longer makes policy; it no longer has control of public spending, Mr. Speaker.

I should have liked to go into detail about how devastating this measure is for families on fixed incomes and families in the North where the cost of living is one and a half times or twice that of families in the more populated areas of the country. I should have liked to demonstrate what it means to people in the North who are paying a penalty for manning the frontier. Their children are deprived of the social amenities enjoyed in more organized areas of the country.

These are very serious matters and the consequences of them will be far-reaching. I would ask the Liberals, and my friends in the New Democratic Party to come to their senses before it is too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Monday, February 7, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of report stage of the Bill.

Accordingly, the question is on the motion of Mr. Hawkes. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

HEALTH

ENCOURAGEMENT OF BREAST-FEEDING IN THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mr. Herb Breau (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I wish to urge the Government to develop and implement, in co-operation with the Provinces, Canadian programs consistent with the thrust of the international code of marketing of breast milk substitutes adopted in May, 1981, by the member countries of the World Health Organization.

Recently a UNICEF Report indicated that, in developing countries, the difference between breast milk and bottled milk can mean the difference between life and death. It warns that bottle-fed babies are between three and five times more likely to suffer from malnutrition than breast-fed babies. It indicates a decline in breast-feeding in Third World countries which it says is condemning thousands of babies to tragic deaths. In a lot of countries this is becoming more and more of a trend.

I urge the Government, in co-operation with the Provinces, to support those organizations, those international fora which want to encourage breast-milk feeding in Third World countries.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF CHANGES IN ONTARIO FISH STOCK MANAGEMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Madam Speaker, much of the cash flow of rural Ontario comes through a tourist industry based largely on fishing and hunting, especially in Parry Sound, Muskoka, the Kawarthas, Nipissing, and Timiskaming. As the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. De Bané) and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) are well aware, an agreement has been signed by representatives of the Indian people and by the provincial Government of Ontario that would radically alter how our natural resources, particularly our fish stocks, are managed. I have received many telephone calls, letters, and personal visits from concerned private cottagers and resort owners.

Federal action on this matter, and the resultant uncertainty as to what the future ground rules are to be, have caused a great deal of uneasiness in rural Ontario. As this Government has failed to appreciate so many times before, uncertainty is the enemy of business, particularly small business, such as tourist operations in Parry Sound-Muskoka, because they are too small to have any clout or influence with the Government.

I am well aware that our Ontario provincial colleagues are concerned as to how far-reaching these changes may be. I am sure they will be voicing their concerns to the Ontario Minister of Natural Resources and to the Premier. I therefore call upon the Ministers responsible to tell this House just where the Government stands on this matter and whether or not this agreement will be acceded to. If so, when, and how far-reaching will it be?

RAILWAYS

PAYMENT FORMULA FOR WESTERN TRANSPORTATION DEFICITS—EFFECT ON QUEBEC AGRICULTURAL PRODUCERS

Mrs. Éva Côté (Rimouski-Témiscouata): Madam Speaker, I would like to say a few words about an event that took place in Rimouski last Monday evening, when we had the pleasure of a visit from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who met with more than 500 farm producers from the Lower North Shore. I had invited this group personally to discuss the Government proposal relating to the changes in the formula for railway subsidies for the transportation of grain in Western Canada. It is true, Madam Speaker, that Quebec farm producers are worried about these changes, since they have been told that agriculture in Quebec is seriously threatened and may perhaps disappear altogether. That is just not true. The development of farming and the agricultural miracle, as they say, in Quebec was brought about thanks to the active and enlightened participation of the Federal Government and effective action by Quebec's representatives in the House. There is no reason why people should be telling farm producers in Quebec that the situation is going to change. On the contrary, we are all working to ensure the survival of farming in Quebec, and its continuing development through new initiatives. I can assure our farm producers that we shall have many more meetings with them, and I am also very pleased with the overtures made by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at this meeting—

Madam Speaker: Order.

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—U.S. SAFETY BOARD FINDINGS

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board has just made its findings with reference to the Ocean Ranger tragedy of a year ago. Its members concluded that it could have been avoided with proper training of the crew in operating the ballast control system. They concluded that the crew were not trained to operate the back-up system. They found that the crew were not properly trained in evacuation procedures, that the launching systems for the lifeboats could have been improved, and that there should have been better thermal protection.

This raises the question of what the Canadian Government was doing in the Department of Energy in its administration and supervision of the offshore before the Ocean Ranger tragedy. Why did it not require better thermal protection? Why did it not require better training of the crew? Why did the regulations and administrative practices not prevent this tragedy? Those are questions that I raise, which the Government must consider.

Why has the Government refused to refer this to a parliamentary committee, as I have requested? What regulations have been changed? What procedures have been changed in the last year? Why has the Minister of Energy (Mr. Chrétien) refused to allow the House of Commons to consider what changes have now been made so that people can be assured that this cannot happen again?

It appears from the report of this U.S. Board that the Canadian Government has been negligent in its administration of safety procedures on the offshore. When is this House or one of its committees going to be put in a position to see what changes have been made since? There have been 84 lives lost, and the Government of Canada bears a heavy share of the responsibility.

BANKS AND BANKING

PENALTIES IMPOSED FOR RENEGOTIATION OF MORTGAGES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, prime interest rates have come down very substantially in the last year. Hundreds of thousands of Canadian families have mortgages on their homes which still reflect interest rates of between 18 and 20 per cent. Until recently banks charged a three-month penalty for those wanting to renegotiate their mortgages. They have now increased the penalties.

One of my constituents obtained a mortgage in July of last year at 18¾ per cent. In November he was told he would have to pay a three-month penalty of $2,200 to get out of it. In January he was told the penalty would be increased to $5,000. The banks are not accepting the responsibility which I believe they have as a result of the charters they have been granted. What they are doing may be legally correct, but it is certainly ethically wrong. The banks are practising out and out robbery. They are taking advantage of people in a tough economic spot with fancy, fine print, double-dealing. Other people would call it usury.

I call on the Government to take up with banks what they are doing. Since the Government is asking mothers, pensioners and senior citizens and workers to share the load and take a bit less, is it not time the banks were asked to do the same?

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CONDUCT STUDY OF EFFECTS OF CONSTRUCTION OF ALUMINUM MILL AT BÉCANCOUR, P.Q.

Mr. Pierre Gimaïel (Lac-Saint-Jean): Madam Speaker, not long ago, the Government of Quebec announced its participation in a construction project for an aluminum mill in Bécancour. The Quebec Government is about to invest $300 million with the Péchiney company in this part of the province. It is, of course, gratifying to see that the Canadian Government is showing an interest in the project and has proposed to pay for part of the infrastructures, but, coming from a region where aluminum is very important and where this year Alcan, for the first time in many years, has shown a deficit, I wish the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley) would find out whether a market survey has been made to see whether Péchiney's move to Bécancour will have a negative impact on Alcan. Before the Canadian Government starts spending $18 million on infrastructures for a mill in Bécancour, I hope people will realize that the Government of the Province of Quebec never offered Alcan any grants to modernize its plant in my area, and other than by acquiring a controlling interest in Alcan through the Caisse de dépôt, it has never tried to convince its subsidiary, Alcan, to expand its plant, and I am referring here specifically to the plant in Alma.

I am bringing this up, Madam Speaker, because 500 jobs have already been lost in Alma at Alcan, and I think we should have more details before the Canadian Government starts funding infrastructures for Péchiney.

FEED GRAIN TRANSPORT POLICY

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, as you know, ten or more Liberal Members from Quebec promised Quebec farmers they would force the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) to modify his approach to his policy on feed grain transportation. However, it is public knowledge that the Quebec Liberals entirely failed to get the Minister to change his mind. For several days, Quebec Members have been trying to support this policy as well as they can and asking Quebec farmers to look at the positive side, namely, that the clause providing for a reassessment of problems Quebec may encounter as a result of the new policy will enable Quebec to reassess the policy after four years. Madam Speaker, farmers all know that when the horse is gone, it is no use locking the stable. In the circumstances—and I may add that I want no part of the pressure being brought to bear by Government Members on Quebec farmers to swallow the Crow—I hope the Liberal Members representing Quebec will try to persuade the Minister to change his mind and change his policy, if they really want to serve the interests of Quebec agriculture.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY GLOBAL MONITORING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, I would like to propose today that the House of Commons seriously consider the possibility of setting up a Standing Committee for the watch-dogging of human rights around the world. Everyone in this House, as well as Canadian citizens across the land, realizes that throughout the world there are many, many abuses against human rights. However, when it comes to Canada's relationship with countries in which human rights are being abused, even with respect to international trade or of aid to them, many times we are left without sufficient information and knowledge on how we can treat the situation.

There is precedent for this particular kind of activity in that in the British House of Commons there is a parliamentary group which does that particular kind of work. We made a proposal in the sub-committee on Latin America to find a way to do this. I personally believe that the only way it can be done on any kind of a continuous and secure basis would be with a Standing Committee. At this particular time, when the House is studying new Committees, I believe it would be proper to do this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

DISASTERS

SINKING OF "OCEAN RANGER"—U.S. SAFETY BOARD FINDINGS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask the Minister, in a jurisdictional sense, if he does not feel rather impotent today as a result of the humiliating experience of reading in the newspapers what the Americans have found out about the loss of Canadian lives in Canadian waters in the tragedy of the Ocean Ranger.

• (1415)

In replying, could the Minister assure this House that the deficiencies the United States National Transportation Safety Board found to be part of the cause of this tragedy have been corrected, that the proper safety procedures are being followed, and that proper equipment for the men on oil rigs is available, regardless of what else is going on in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I cannot, and I am sorry about that. First of all, because this is an interim report it is only a first view on the part of the two U.S. authorities who have passed judgment. Secondly, we have not got a copy of the report yet and it would be rather adventurous on my part, or on the part of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to comment on something we have not yet seen.

ROYAL COMMISSION—POSSIBILITY OF INTERIM REPORT

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Madam Speaker, the circumstances are incredible enough, and that answer adds another dimension. Is the Minister telling this House that the facts ascertained in the public inquiry carried on in the U.S. as to training and safety procedures, and proper equipment for the men, are not being attended to by the oil rigs still drilling in Canadian waters?

An Hon. Member: Government observers were there.

Mr. Nowlan: When does the Minister expect even the beginning of an interim report from our Royal Commission into this tragedy?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I think common sense tells us that sometimes people who write reports change views from the interim report to the final report.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: This is normal. They acquire more knowledge between the interim and the final report, and sometimes they revise the views expressed in the interim report.

On the second point, I can only repeat what I said. It may be cricket on the part of my hon. friend to ask me a question on a report he has not seen, but it would not be normal for a Minister to answer the question on the same basis.

TRAINING OF CREWS—REGULATORY CHANGES

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Madam Speaker, there were 84 lives lost in the Ocean Ranger tragedy. One of the findings of the American board was that the tragedy could have been avoided with proper training of the crew in operating the ballast control system. This implies that Canadian regulations did not require proper training of the crew, or that Canadian inspectors failed to find out that the crew were not properly trained in operating the ballast control system. In other words, there was negligence and carelessness on the part of the Canadian authorities on the offshore.

Will the Minister direct officials of his Department or the Department of Energy to come before the House of Commons transportation committee, or natural resources committee, to tell us what changes they have implemented in the regulations concerning inspection procedures since then? What have they done to prevent a recurrence of this tragedy? What will they do to reassure the hundreds who are working on the offshore now, and their families, that that neglect has not continued?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The short answer to that is yes. Either the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or myself will be pleased to go before a committee to indicate what has been done since the accident happened.

APPEARANCE OF MINISTERS BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): The Minister has replied that he or the Minister of Energy, or both, will come before a committee. Can the Minister tell the House why the Minister of Energy has consistently refused my requests of May 4, June, and July of last year—why did he write me in September refusing to have his officials come before a parliamentary committee? I am glad to see the Minister has now changed his mind. Why has it taken this number of months to have them change their minds, and are they prepared to give a commitment to come before the appropriate committee in the next several weeks to try to reassure East Coast Canadians about the situation on the offshore?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): The answer I gave is justified simply by the common practice that Ministers have had, and will forever and ever, have to answer requests from committees to go with their officials or alone to answer these kinds of questions. I have not consulted with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on that subject, but I am quite sure there were particular circumstances why he appeared not to have been at a committee at that particular moment when he usually is before it. I can find out why, but as a general proposition Ministers are quite willing to go before committees. Indeed, they spent a lot of time before committees.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF REPORTS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Hon. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, since we are dealing with two departments of Government. The loss of the Ocean Ranger has been the subject of three inquiries in the United States, including a Congressional inquiry and the one that released its report this week. In addition, we have the Cross Report, which is an evaluation of search and rescue. It was released last December and was critical, admitting that there is no contingency plan in place. As well as that, this week the Prime Minister released to me a further study by the Department of National Defence into an evaluation of search and rescue in the Halifax region. These reports contradict each other.

On the eve of the anniversary of the loss of the Ocean Ranger, would the Prime Minister assume his responsibility as Leader of the Government and at least give the Parliament of Canada a chance to see which is right, the view of the Minister of National Defence, the Cross Report, or the U.S. Commission of Inquiry?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, as the Minister of Transport has said, if we wait for the final report then we will be able to judge the answers to these questions and decide who is right and who is wrong.

INDUSTRY

HOUSTON TRANSIT AUTHORITY CONTRACT—THUNDER BAY COMPANY'S BID

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Last Friday the Houston Transit Authority made an incredible decision involving many millions of dollars. It awarded a contract for a transit system to a Japanese company even though a competent Canadian company, Cancar of Thunder Bay, submitted a bid that was $29 million less. What has the Government of Canada, and specifically the Minister, done to rectify the situation?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, that matter comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, who is in Japan at the present time attending very important trade meetings with the European community, the United States, and Japan. I know that he is very disappointed with the announcement made by the City of Houston.

Two years ago I went to Houston and was involved in the initial stages to ensure that Canada would be considered. The fact that a Canadian company, Hawker Siddeley (Canada), was the lowest bidder and yet it has not been awarded the contract, is indeed very discouraging. We have been in contact with Hawker Siddeley officials and were advised that they are still working on that contract as well as others in the U.S. We will do our very best to ensure that they are given fair treatment by the City of Houston.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT HOUSTON

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, the circumstances surrounding this decision would be described as bizarre at best. This morning I checked with the transit authority in Boston which had previously purchased equipment made by Cancar in Thunder Bay. It described the Canadian product as "exceptionally reliable".

Considering that the Canadian company made a bid that was $29 million less than the Japanese, and that its product is described by another American City as exceptionally reliable, and since the Minister has already established personal contact in Houston, instead of waiting until his colleague returns from Japan would he not go to Houston to see what he could do to save Canadian jobs?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker I am sympathetic with the request of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party with respect to going down to Houston. In view of discussions that we have had with Hawker Siddeley officials, that might not necessarily be the best action to take at this time because there are other contracts that they are pursuing.

I agree with the Hon. Member that Canada does not take second place to any other country in the world in terms of producing quality equipment for the urban transit industry. That is why our industry occupied over one-third of the floor space at the national convention of the U.S. Urban Transit Association a year ago. Also I was asked to open that convention, along with the Secretary of Transport of the United States.

Hawker Siddeley has been very well received in the United States, and we will do our very best to try to ensure that we have not lost this particular contract.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the sentiments are noble, the concern is fine, but the Minister has not told us specifically what he will do.

MINISTERIAL ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, there are several hundred Canadian jobs at stake here for a period of five to seven years, with this contract alone. The Minister knows that if we get the contract in Houston back, and we ought to because of the competitiveness of our bid, it will open up other contracts in the United States. If we lose this contract, however, it means that we will not get others. The decision on this contract was made last weekend. Will the Minister tell the House what he intends to do to get the people in Houston to reverse their decision?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, I do not quite understand the indignation of the Hon. Leader of the NDP. I quite agree about the importance of this contract. Two years ago, however, the two federal Members from Thunder Bay—not from the NDP—came to me asking me to solicit this particular contract. The Hon. Leader of the NDP is a little late in making his representation, but I agree with him about the seriousness of this situation in terms of the effects it will have on other contracts in the United States. That is why we have treated this as a priority.

RAILWAYS

QUEBEC ADVERTISEMENT ON EFFECT OF CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGES

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In last Saturday's edition of Le Devoir a full-page ad entitled "Farewell to the Crow", sponsored by Agriculture Canada, indicated that the new freight rate policy would not provide an advantage to western pork and beef producers. That is contrary, I might say, to the expectations of the West. How does the Minister square that statement with the statement contained in his own policy announcement contending that his transportation initiative will expand the western livestock industry by $1 billion, and the processing, packing and feed mill industries by some $350 million? Why the doubletalk?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I can square that quite easily. My hon. friend, who is very alert and knowledgeable on these matters, knows very well what I will say. There is a diversity of views in the West as to the effect of this announcement, the policy itself, on the future of the livestock industry there. There are three schools, essentially. One says that it will have the effect of only strengthening what exists there and is often in difficulties now. Another school of people say that it will do more than that, that over a period of time it will contribute a certain increase to the livestock industry in the West. A third school says that it will do more than that, that it will contribute significantly to an increase in the livestock industry. The Hon. Member can pick any one he wants, because these views are defended by very honourable people.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not interested in the schools of thought the Minister believes are out in the West. I am interested in the Minister's own school of thought. I am interested in when the Minister will come out with a clear-cut statement, in both official languages, so that we can understand it from one region to the other, and that it is not a policy which varies from one region to the other. That is what we want to know.

REQUEST THAT ADVERTISEMENT BE PUBLISHED IN WESTERN CANADA

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, when will the Minister do the honourable thing and make a clear-cut statement which can be decipherable in both languages? Is the Minister, in consultation with the Minister of Agriculture who sponsored this ad, prepared to run the same ad in western Canadian Provinces as he ran in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am quite eager to make that clear statement now. The clear statement now is that there is room for development of both the livestock industry in the East and the livestock industry in the West. My hon. friend, who was the former minister of transport, knows these things. The main reasons for that are geography and cost of transportation.

For example, there is plenty of room for the export of pork from Quebec and Ontario into the eastern United States, as takes place now, because it costs $2.50 to ship a hundredweight of pork from Montreal to New York, while it costs $10.50 to ship it from Calgary to New York, simply for geographical reasons and cost of transportation. In the same way there is room in the western United States for export of beef, for example, from the western part of Canada. The two can be very well and easily accommodated.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister persistently refuses to answer my question. He is simply engaging in doubletalk, which is adding to the confusion, the anxiety, and mistrust in western Canada.

PUBLICATION OF ADVERTISEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Madam Speaker, I repeat my question. Is the Minister prepared to run the same ad in western Canada as he and the Minister of Agriculture ran in the Province of Quebec? Yes or no?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, when I was in the West very recently I had with me a letter which the Minister of Agriculture and myself wrote to grain producers and to the livestock people of Quebec.

Mr. Mazankowski: Are you going to run the ad?

Mr. Pepin: We made that letter extensively known everywhere we went.

Mr. Mazankowski: Run the ad.

Mr. Pepin: It is available to anybody who wants it. There is no shame at all on our part. Those two approaches are easily reconcilable. I will spend some time with my hon. friend, if he has some, to demonstrate that. That will be a very easy job, the easiest I have had in a long time.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

REMUNERATION OF CERTAIN COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, he announced or rather confirmed that Donald Macdonald, lawyer Michel Robert and a secretary general would be receiving $800, $750 and $700 per day, respectively. In my opinion, the Prime Minister is not responsible for the levels of remuneration paid in connection with this Commission. Since he has been asking Canadians to tighten their belts for a couple of years, and the Government has forced pensioners, senior citizens and children to tighten them even more, I ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister, in the name of justice, whether today, considering public opinion, which he already knows, he will be willing to recommend immediately a reduction in these stipends out of fairness to those who are less well-off?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member always sets himself up as the defender of those who complain about there being a double standard. I suggest, for instance, that he ask his leader or former leader how much the Progressive Conservative Government was paying the Member for Vancouver Centre when she was doing a study for the Progressive Conservative Government. Perhaps he could ask the Member for Saskatoon West what his fees were when he was a lawyer. He would then have some inkling of the levels of remuneration that are common in the private sector and which must be considered if we want to recruit competent people to serve the public.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Not long ago, in the course of a televised speech, the Prime Minister asked Canadians for their trust and co-operation. Today, he has answered my question with a question. Yesterday, I received a telephone call about these exorbitant fees which to Canadians are an absolute disgrace. Could the Prime Minister inform the House how much Mr. Robert has received in fees from the Federal Government during the last three years?

Considering all those Canadians who are worried about the situation and who think such fees are entirely unfair and in fact an obscenity, I ask the Prime Minister again, if he wants our trust and wants to keep what credibility he has left, to bring things back to more acceptable proportions by immediately restraining and blocking fee levels that are now entirely unacceptable, considering the fact that they represent thirty times the wages—

Madam Speaker: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, I can inform the Hon. Member that I asked him to get his own information because I had already answered the question yesterday. He has contacts in the private sector. He may know what it costs to retain the services of a lawyer nowadays, especially one from one of the big law offices, like the Member for Saskatoon West. Perhaps he could ask the President of Iron Ore what he is getting. If we want to attract people from the private sector to sit on a Royal Commission and if we want qualified people, we must be prepared to pay—

Mr. La Salle: Not $800 a day, and $1.40 for children!

Mr. Trudeau: In my opinion, the Hon. Member is not only showing his surprise but also his ignorance—

Madam Speaker: Order.

I apologize to the Prime Minister, but I decided to stop this exchange because it is no longer what oral question period should be, namely, a period of questions and answers.

SOCIAL SECURITY

CANADIAN COUNCIL ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT POVERTY STATISTICS

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will be as loquacious in answer to this question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: I think the Liberals are sensitive again.

Mrs. Mitchell: Poverty statistics released yesterday by the Canadian Council on Social Development are a terrible indictment of the Liberal Government's policy on economics in Canada. There were 3.5 million Canadians living in poverty in 1980 and at least a million more have been added to that total, including single parents, working parents, unemployed, as well as senior citizens. How does the Prime Minister justify the scandalous poverty situation, which has resulted from his own Government's deliberate policies of high unemployment, part-time jobs, the six and five wage controls, and the abandonment of a guaranteed income policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I am afraid I did not catch the gist of the question. The Hon. Member is asking a series of questions on Government policy. We are explaining them every day. The six and five program, for instance, has in effect succeeded in bringing down inflation from a high of 12.5 per cent to something like 8 per cent or 9 per cent now, and this percentage is still declining. We could talk of every one of our policies, including the ones we adopted when the Government was first elected, the increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement, and these are all areas where the Government is conscious of the importance of helping first those who need help the most.

Miss MacDonald: Like Donald Macdonald.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, that is a very unclear, uncaring answer from a millionaire Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: I was talking, Madam Speaker, of those people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Madam Speaker: Order. It is Wednesday again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mitchell: My supplementary question, Madam Speaker, is also for the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: Order, please. May I remind Hon. Members that other Members have a right to ask questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASES

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, I am talking about the over four million poor people who are living in Canada. There are four million people living in poverty in Canada, and the Liberals are laughing, including the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mitchell: The Prime Minister did not even relate to the question on poverty, Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. If the Hon. Member wants to put a question, she must do just that. She knows that anything that is not a question is bound to provoke these kinds of jibes. If she could keep to her question, I think that she would get a legitimate answer.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East.

Mrs. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister, after three years of lip service—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mrs. Mitchell: —and a 6 per cent cap on pensions, will he increase pensions above the poverty line, and is the Prime Minister also concerned about older women in the pre-pension age group who are suffering extreme poverty.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member as far as her first question regarding the Guaranteed Annual Income, is concerned, that the funding for all provincial and federal social programs would add up to some $8 billion, and we would pay nearly the same amount as a supplement to cover people who are now insufficiently covered by our programs. I would like to say that first of all, the country feels that this is certainly not something that should be done now. Second, one of the priorities of this Government—and the Minister of Finance has emphasized this several times since his appointment, doing so on behalf of the Government—is that as soon as the economic situation permits, there will be an increased supplement for single people.

SHIPBUILDING

DELAY IN AWARDING CONTRACTS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver-Burnaby): Madam Speaker, it may please the House to know that I have no insults for anyone, but simply a very desperate plea.

• (1440)

My question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services, and I would ask the President of the Treasury Board to listen carefully. There are five shipyards in my riding of North Vancouver-Burnaby where unemployment is approaching 80 per cent for their workers. It is likely to go higher. The same situation exists on the East Coast.

The Government has announced that it will build six ships this year, a totally inadequate figure, of which two vessels have been tendered, two are to be tendered immediately, and two more in the month of March. In view of the tragedy facing shipyard workers will the Minister assure the House that he will insist that his bureaucrats work weekends and long into the night, and double their efforts not only to get the March tenders out immediately but also to cut the normal three-month time lag, from bids received to the award of contract, to a period of less than a month in order that those shipyard workers who have hope will get their answer as rapidly as possible?

Madam Speaker: Order. Members are making speeches. It is no longer a question period.

Mr. Epp: I have a question.

Madam Speaker: Everybody wants equal time.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased that the Hon. Member has raised this particular question. I do not take any exception to the fact that he has taken some considerable time to put the preamble to his question. I recognize very well the difficulty that the shipbuilding industry is facing.

Indeed, the hon. gentleman has suggested that there be an acceleration in terms of procurement in order to ensure that the shipbuilding industry can be assisted as a result of Government procurement. That is why my officials are indeed working overtime in accelerating the program. That is why we are ahead of schedule in terms of the procurement of the two 1100 class icebreaking coastal ships that we are contemplating procuring.

The hon. gentleman should follow very closely the acceleration program I am putting in place. I would be very pleased to provide him with any additional information that he requests. I would like to—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Blais: —count on his support relating to future measures that I would want to introduce in that regard.

AIRPORTS

BOUNDARY BAY, DELTA, B.C.

Mr. Thomas Siddon (Richmond-South Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The reactivation of Boundary Bay Airport in Delta, British Columbia, was approved by the previous Minister of Transport three years ago. For almost six months Treasury Board has been sitting on a departmental recommendation to appoint a consortium to manage that airport.

Given the unprecedented 55 per cent unemployment rate among construction workers in the Vancouver region, and recognizing that approval of a management contract would lead to immediate construction of hangars, a terminal building, a restaurant, and a permanent control tower at the airport, all at no cost to the Government, why are Transport and Treasury Board officials dragging their feet and dilly-dallying while hundreds of jobs could be created immediately if the Government would only get off the pot and make a decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, unfortunately my memory is not good enough to remember what happens at each of the thousand airports for which I have some responsibility. However, with respect to Boundary Bay the decision was made some months ago that the Department of Transport would go ahead and make the changes that were necessary. If my memory serves me well, there was $10 million worth of changes that had to be made before we could get someone to operate it. As far as I know, these expenditures have been made, are being made now, and we are looking for the operator.

The latest information I have is that we were on the verge of getting one. I will check this and I will send a letter at four o'clock this afternoon to my hon. friend to give him a blow by blow account of what has happened.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR TAX RELIEF FOR FORESTRY AND MINING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Lorne McCuish (Prince George-Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister knows that the forestry and mining industry are the principal employers in British Columbia. He also knows that these industries rely heavily on sales to foreign markets and that the loss of foreign sales has resulted, in great part, in the 20 per cent to 30 per cent unemployment figures which are prevalent throughout B.C.

The competitive edge in foreign markets has been lost, due in large part, to crushing tax measures imposed by his Government. Will the Minister now accept the fact that his Government's make-work programs just do not work in these two industries and are unacceptable to them? Will he consider using equivalent funds as tax relief to the wood and mining industries in order to allow them to operate and have a fighting chance in foreign markets?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I would tell him that the first consultation I had in preparation for my budget was with the representatives of British Columbia industry, particularly the mining and wood industries. Those discussions have been quite productive. I must say, however, that it is not the tax burden on those companies that has created the problems they are facing. As a matter of fact, the tax burdens on the mining and wood industries in this country compare very favourably with almost any competitor. The fact is that there has been a lack of demand generally for products of the mining and wood industries all around the world. We should recognize the situation in the world today where employment in the mining and forestry sectors has declined substantially.

As a matter of fact we are providing such comparatively excellent advantages to our industries that my hon. friend knows there are complaints in the United States that we are favouring the soft wood lumber industry too much. I am going to Washington this week where I intend to have a few words with my American friends in that regard, to ask them to pay attention to the Canadian situation and recognize that we are not unfairly subsidizing the soft wood lumber industry in this country.

PORTS

SURREY, B.C.—APPROVAL OF CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock-North Delta): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, who may know that the port of entry at Pacific Highway in Surrey is the busiest west of his own City of Windsor. The facilities are overcrowded and obsolete. Just last week I received a letter from the Minister of Public Works saying that the design for a new structure will be completed next week. He went on to say:

> Assuming a favourable review by Treasury Board, a construction contract could be awarded as early as January, 1984 which would result in a completion date of January, 1986.

In view of the fact that unemployment in British Columbia had the fastest rate of increase during the past year, could he assure the House, the people of Surrey, and the businessmen who use that port of entry, that Treasury Board will in fact approve that construction contract so that we will face some employment prospects there, and so that the business people using that port of entry will see some cost efficiency in the operation?

Hon. Herb Gray (President of Treasury Board): Madam Speaker, I will be very happy to look into the matter to see what can be done to expedite consideration of the submission. I note with interest my hon. friend's support for the increasing and speedier expenditure of public funds.

METRIC CONVERSION

APPLICATION TO GOVERNMENT FUEL PURCHASES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I understand that his Department declared on Monday of this week that mandatory metrication "obviously does not apply to the Government". We all know it is true that international standards for many items are not in metric. To say the private sector must convert despite this, whereas the Government is free to do as it pleases, is sheer hypocrisy. How can the Minister allow this double standard, and what will he do about it?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman is dealing with a story that arose out of procurement by my Department of turbo fuel in the international market, in order to supply DND aircraft abroad. The measure that is used in the international marketplace is American gallons.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: That is why we have used that particular standard, limited to the international market. In terms of the domestic market, I can assure the hon. gentleman that all of our measures are metric.

• (1450)

REQUEST THAT IMPERIAL MEASUREMENT APPLY TO FUEL SALES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that his Department has admitted that the world unit for some fuels is gallons, I ask the Minister will he withdraw all prohibitions against the sale of fuel in gallons in Canada.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, the hon. gentleman should have listened to the reply that I gave to him initially. I will provide him with the details of our procurement system. In terms of international procurement, when we deal with international suppliers for DND bases outside Canada we are dealing in that context with American gallons. Inside Canada, of course, our requirements are measured in metric terms.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO PERMIT CLASS ACTIONS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Yesterday the Supreme Court of Canada dealt a body blow to Canadian consumers in ruling against the class action suit that over 4,000 owners of defective Firenza automobiles brought against General Motors of Canada Ltd. The Supreme Court, in dismissing this claim, stated that there is, and I quote:

—undoubtedly a need for legislative intervention in this country ... and a comprehensive legislative scheme for the institution and conduct of class actions.

Since the early 1970s the federal Government and this Minister in particular have promised to amend the Combines Investigation Act to facilitate class action suits. When is the Government finally going to bring forward these long overdue amendments to the Combines Investigation Act to permit class actions, and stop the gouging of Canadian consumers?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, like the Hon. Member, I certainly wish this session of Parliament would end so that in a new session, we could expect to consider other bills, and especially amendments to the Combines Investigation Act. To answer the Hon. Member's question, I would say that in this particular case, since what we have here is a civil suit, the provinces would have to be asked to amend their provincial legislation so as to allow civil class actions. The Hon. Member is no doubt aware that this kind of legislation already exists in Quebec, although not in the other provinces, unfortunately. I hope that the decision of the Supreme Court will be an incentive to the nine other provinces to allow their citizens to bring class actions in civil suits in the same way this is being done in Quebec.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

BENEFITS TO SMALL BUSINESS OF CROWSNEST RAILWAY RATE CHANGES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As he knows, British Columbia is experiencing an excessive rate of unemployment and business failures and bankruptcies above the national average. Despite the fact that there is a mega project, the coal in the Northeast and the port development in Prince Rupert, unfortunately Canadian workers and Canadian small businessmen, in particular, are usually on the outside looking in.

I would like to ask the Minister what safeguards are being put in place to ensure that as the Minister of Transport spends $6 billion, and industrial development spends $4 billion on the upgrading of transportation infrastructure in the West, small Canadian firms and their employees will have a share of the pie. Are there tax incentives planned? Is he discussing with his colleagues the prospect of talking with the unions to ensure that average workers will get a job?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member poses a very good question. Our office of regional industrial benefits has worked very closely with the officials of my colleague, the Minister of Transport, on the industrial benefits for western Canada as a result of the changes in the Crow rate.

One example is the potential $418 million contract for signalling and communications equipment, which at the present time is being imported by the railways, which is an excellent opportunity for western Canada. We will try to break these potential contracts into as small component parts as is possible to ensure that small and medium sized entrepeneurs will be able to bid on the specific contracts.

What is also important, I think, is that the business community in western Canada consider forming consortia to undertake a project of this magnitude.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT QUEBEC ADVERTISEMENT BE PUBLISHED NATIONALLY

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is supplementary to the subject matter that was raised earlier in an exchange between the Hon. Member for Vegreville and the Minister of Transport. It is with reference to the advertisement which appeared in the Quebec newspapers. It is clear that this leaves the impression that the Government is saying one thing in one part of the country and something else in the other.

Secondly, there is a clear impression given that western Canadian agricultural producers are going to benefit as a result of the Crow rate changes. There is no question about that. Since this ad was paid for out of the budget of the Minister of Agriculture, would he agree, to clear up this misunderstanding, and I am sure that is exactly what it is, to publish the same ad in both official languages in all the newspapers in all regions of the country?

If the answer is no, obviously the impression is still going to stand that the Minister is in fact saying one thing in one part of the country and something else in the other.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member makes mention of an ad that was placed in some papers in an eastern part of Canada. These ads are factual, they are straightforward, but the Hon. Member has not paid any attention to what the Minister of Transport has said. The Minister of Transport said that the marketing conditions, et cetera, are different in eastern Canada. For instance, pork production, which is of great concern, is exported into New York State and that part of the United States. The production is going to take place under this program, and a similar kind of an ad could be explained in western Canada just as easily, as their exports go into that great populous area, the State of California, and we want that kind of process to take place in western Canada. The people who are in livestock agricultural production know that that is what it will do for them. The Hon. Members opposite should talk to the people in the livestock industry, who are the ones who have recommended this. Of course the Hon. Members opposite do not pay much attention to anyone who recommends anything. For instance, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture unanimously endorsed Canagrex yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, that is simply a disgraceful answer. I will provide the Minister with a second opportunity to answer my question in order to clear up this confusion and misunderstanding. I am giving him the benefit of the doubt as I am sure it is not intentional.

REQUEST FOR ADVERTISEMENT PUBLICATION

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister of Agriculture will he simply publish the same ad in all newspapers in both official languages in all regions of the country. I would like him to answer with a simple yes or no, which is the only kind of an answer that will clear up this matter.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, he knows—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: Madam Speaker, if they had a leader over there I would ask him to put them in order, but—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: The Hon. Member wants a simple answer, yes or no. He knows that there is a difference, because in Quebec the Government of Quebec has led a special propaganda program—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whelan: —and misinformed the people there. No Government in western Canada has seen fit to do such a thing because Governments there know that this program is going to assist agriculture and assist livestock production, and make it possible to export more.

If it becomes necessary to explain this kind of a program in western Canada, yes, we will do it by ads, but the Opposition wants us to have restraint, so we should not do this until we feel that it is necessary to move into these areas.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROTECTION FOR WORKERS ON OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING RIGS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We have been waiting in this House for three years for the federal Government to introduce changes to Part IV of the Canada Labour Code, which deals with occupational health and safety.

One of the problems with the incident of the Ocean Ranger is that the federal Labour Code does not protect workers on offshore rigs. The preliminary report in the United States indicates that management negligence has resulted in the deaths of 84 workers, most of them Canadian. If that happened in any other situation that would be considered a mass murder. I ask the Prime Minister when will his Government provide legislative protection under the Labour Code for workers who work on those rigs?

• (1500)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Minister of Labour): Madam Speaker, I reject parts of the premise of the Hon. Member's question, but I want to assure him that we on this side of the House are as concerned as anyone else about the importance of the matter. We urge the Opposition to help us in processing and passing the legislation that is before the House so as to conclude this session and initiate the next one, so that we can introduce the amendments, to the Canada Labour Code. We are as anxious to produce them as anybody else.

Mr. Murphy: You are responsible. You are a bloody murderer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Madam Speaker: Order. I have just consulted the list and I have to ask the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) to withdraw those words. I did hear them, even from this distance. I am sure the Hon. Member got caught up in the heat of the debate and did not really mean those words. Perhaps he would like to withdraw them.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, out of respect for the rules of the House, I won't call it murder, but I will call it manslaughter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Madam Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but the Hon. Member has to satisfy the rules, which I can see he is quite willing to do, and must withdraw that particular word.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, I do not know what word can be used in this House, but the Government must act. We have been waiting for three years. I am willing to withdraw the specific accusation, but not the general charge of misconduct by this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Madam Speaker: I will accept this today because the Hon. Member did withdraw that particular word, but I want to remind Hon. Members that there is the material fact of pronouncing certain words which has to be dealt with. There is also the spirit behind the rules which means that Members should respect each other during debate. To use a circumstance like this to make a further charge like this is not quite proper. Strictly speaking, it is not unparliamentary, but it is not really proper. However, I will accept what the Hon. Member said.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

TABLING OF REPORTS OF CLERK OF PETITIONS

Madam Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the Table the reports of the Clerk of Petitions stating that he has examined the petitions presented by Hon. Members on Tuesday, February 8, 1983 and finds that they meet the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CAMPBELL (CARDIGAN)—UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE OF MR. WADDELL

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I gave notice on Monday of my intention to raise a question of privilege on the first occasion on which the Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) was in his seat.

I refer to comments made by the Hon. Member last Thursday during my absence from the House; I apologize for waiting so long. However, this is the first occasion which I have had to raise this question of privilege. It has to do with comments made in this House by the Hon. Member on Thursday last, reported in Hansard at page 22481. During his comments, the Hon. Member is reported to have said:

> I am alleging that the Minister intentionally misled the House—

That is not only untrue but it is unparliamentary language. I would request through you, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member withdraw those comments.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Waddell: Do Government Members want to give me my chance to reply or do they want to shout me down? If they want to act like a bunch of fascists, then we are going to treat them that way. I am not replying, Madam Speaker, until I get some order.

Madam Speaker: I just checked because I could not believe what I heard; that word too is unparliamentary. The Hon. Member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has quite a problem; he has to withdraw two expressions.

Mr. Waddell: I am prepared to withdraw the word "fascists" providing the Members opposite let me make my reply to the Minister without interrupting me.

Madam Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member had the floor. He could speak on the matter raised by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Campbell). There were a few jibes from the other side of the House, but that usually does not deter Members from speaking in the House. They were not that loud that the Hon. Member could not be heard; otherwise the Speaker would have asked for order. Will the Hon. Member now take the floor?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, with reference to what my hon. friend the Minister has said, in order to deal with the matter of my comments and also comments made by the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon), a Member of the Conservative Party, the matter arose after my speech—

Madam Speaker: Order. We do not need a speech at this time. The only thing the House requires is for the Hon. Member to get up and withdraw the words he pronounced the other day. They are unparliamentary. I heard them from my seat. At that particular point the Hon. Member, because of circumstances in the House which I do not quite recall, seemed to be withdrawing also from his question of privilege. I think this occurred while he was raising a question of privilege. Therefore, I let the matter stand; I thought he was withdrawing from everything. However, since the Minister has raised the question and since those words have been printed in Hansard, it makes it quite obvious that the Hon. Member said them in earnest. He should now withdraw them. That is all I need from him today.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am prepared to withdraw the remarks, but I have to do it in a certain context. I just want to take 30 seconds.

Madam Speaker: The context is not necessary. The Hon. Member will withdraw now or else I will have to deal with the matter.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am trying to raise this matter on behalf of the old people in Canada who cannot reply. If you won't let me say it, I am not going to withdraw the remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Madam Speaker: The Hon. Member has to be fair. I was not preventing the Hon. Member from speaking. I was asking him to speak precisely to the matter which we were dealing with in the House, and that is to withdraw those unparliamentary words. Does the Hon. Member now want to withdraw his unparliamentary words and say so quite clearly?

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, in the spirit of the House and dealing with the Minister, who is a very fair Minister, I am prepared to withdraw the remarks. I am asking the Minister in the spirit you referred to before to consider the problem about the confusion of veterans as to whether—

Madam Speaker: Order. Will the Hon. Member please say very plainly "I withdraw", not "I am prepared to if". There is no condition to that. There cannot be a condition. The language is unparliamentary. For the last time, will the Hon. Member please get up and say whether he wants to withdraw?

Mr. Waddell: Recognizing the fact that many veterans phone my office, recognizing the fact that they are confused about the six and five program, recognizing the fact that their cheques were delayed and they are powerless except only through me to come back to this Government, I will withdraw the remarks that I made.

Mr. Malone: Good idea.

MR. DOMM—BROADCASTING OF PORNOGRAPHIC FILMS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I wish to present a petition to the House today which was collected from members of the Peterborough constituency. QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 4,552 and 4,617.

[Text]

DND CONTRACT—G.H. WOOD & CO. LTD.

Question No. 4,552—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence award a $15,232 contract to G.H. Wood & Co. Ltd. for "doily paper" and, if so, for what purpose will the doily paper be used?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): The Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of National Defence awarded a $15,232 contract to G.H. Wood & Co. Ltd. for doily paper, an item entirely used on trays in hospital as a sanitary precaution and to enhance meal presentation to patients.

TESTING OF MEDICAL DEVICES

Question No. 4,617—Mr. Mitges:

Has the Government taken or is it taking steps to test the more than 100,000 medical devices, including contact lenses, condoms, tampons and pacemakers, and, if so, what are or were such steps?

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Department of National Health and Welfare is aware of the importance of ensuring that medical devices sold in Canada are safe and effective. On July 30, 1981, the resources for the Medical Devices Program were significantly increased to cope with rapidly advancing device technology. For fulfilling its mandate under the Food and Drugs Act, the Department employs several procedures such as premarket review, imposition of standards, evaluations and testing. Devices such as the prolonged-wear contact lenses, tampons and pacemakers are subject to premarket review; condoms are subject to standards.

[English]

Mr. Schroder: I ask, Madam Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Madam Speaker: Stand.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Schroder (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Madam Speaker: Shall all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PREVENT FINANCIAL GAIN FROM CRIME

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot) moved that Bill C-664, to amend the Criminal Code (profits of crime), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the Bill which is before you, Bill C-664, is a timely Bill in terms of the Canadian mentality towards crime at the moment. If this Bill is passed it would mean that persons sentenced for crime have the prerogative to write, to express, to act out by play or by film, their criminal deeds and those activities centering around their crimes, but any profits derived therefrom would be taxed 100 per cent. The Attorney General of the Province concerned would disburse this money to victims of crime.

In commenting on this Private Members' Bill, I feel it is important to give the background leading up to its presentation. There is a great belief in Canada today that criminals must be stopped from profiting from their heinous crimes. A few years ago as I returned to Ottawa from a speaking engagement in Prince Edward Island, upon landing at a Montreal airport I was incensed to find on the bookshelves in the airport bookstore a book entitled "Son of Sam", concerning the murders of David Berkowitz. In such a situation we have a person who has committed outlandish crimes profiting from those crimes, and doing it in a society where it is a fundamental fact, even in elementary school children's understanding of law, that crime should not pay. In a democratic society we take the view that when one goes to jail for a crime he is paying his debt to society. If at the end of his jail term he writes a book about his crime from which he profits, then in effect the debt has not been paid.

This legislation would be timely for the Canadian public, because the David Berkowitz case resulted in a New York State law being passed. Here in Canada at the present time we have two potential books: one, the recent writing of the Pierre Laporte murder story by Francis Simard and other members of the freedom fighters in the Province of Quebec; the other, of course, is about Clifford Robert Olson in the Province of British Columbia who killed many young people in that Province. Olson has said that he has hired a ghost writer to write the story of his life. These are two examples of profiting from crime.

David Berkowitz is a citizen of the United States, a person who committed his crimes in New York City. The fact that his story in the book called "Son of Sam" caused him to profit as a result of his crime stimulated the New York State legislature to put in place a law, which is now referred to as "The Son of Sam Law", which does precisely what my proposed legislation is intended to do. It takes away those profits from the person who committed the crime and such profits are used for other purposes. So we have a precedent for this particular kind of legislation.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that since I first introduced this legislation on first reading, numerous press reporters have asked me about my intended legislation, but more importantly, there have been a number of radio or television call-in shows with respect to having some kind of legislation which would stop people profiting from crime. The result of those call-in shows, was that the view was unanimous that there was a need for some kind of curtailment of this kind of profit, with the exception of one person who asked the question: "What about a person's right of expression as guaranteed under Canada's new Constitution?" I would like to address those concerns, particularly for those who might argue or debate against the Bill.

One reason why someone would say we should not have a law which would tax away the profits of criminals—my legislation applies to those who have been sentenced to terms of five years or more—is that it would impede the right of expression as guaranteed under the Charter of Rights. I want to stress, Mr. Speaker, that in drafting the proposed legislation this was one of the things which the lawyers were asked to take into account. This Bill is not intended in any way to impede freedom of expression. Anyone may write, and there is good reason for allowing it.

I also understand the emotion of people looking at the case of Clifford Olson who would say that the person should be totally banned from writing anything at all, but I could not support that because, when one looks at restrictions on commenting on one's criminal activities, one must make the law so that it is generalized enough to be effective for any criminal activity at any period of our history.

To pass such legislation would impede those people associated with the Watergate break-ins from ever writing about what happened during the Nixon years. Such a denial would be an infringement on our right to know what took place in the history of our country. Had this been a universal law it would have stopped people such as Albert Speer from writing his book "Inside the Third Reich".

I think it would be the general view of Canadians that, while the facts of a crime may be heinous in nature, it is at least historically important for us to know those facts. The legislation I have proposed was drafted specifically to take that into account. My Bill will stop no one from writing about their criminal activities. What it does is to tax 100 per cent of the profits from the book and turn the money over to the Attorney General of the Province where the crime was committed—to be used to aid the victims of crime.

I believe society is ripe for legislation which will direct its attention towards victims of crime rather than simply the punishment and rehabilitation of criminals. Canadian society is ahead of Parliament in this respect and Parliament ought to take into consideration that the victims of crime, the innocent people who presumed that society was safe and the law would protect them, have a far greater right to protection than does the criminal have a right to profit.

Following the writing of the book "Son of Sam" by David Berkowitz, the New York State legislature passed a law to restrict the profiting from crime. Here in Canada Francis Simard wrote a book about the FLQ and the murder of Pierre Laporte, and Clifford Olson has said that he has hired a ghost writer to write a book about his life. Surely it is time for the Parliament of Canada, especially in light of the widespread support for the concept, to put into law the premise that, while you are free to express your thoughts, you are not free to profit from crime. If you go to jail to pay for your crime, you cannot come out of jail and turn the debt you have paid into a profit. That is unacceptable to Canadians.

In the case of Francis Simard, there are 20,000 books in first printing at $5.95 each, with a 7 per cent royalty per book to the writer. If all those books are sold, he stands to make a profit of somewhere around $8,330. This is the first printing and there could be subsequent printings. The point is that he should not be able to profit at all, not one red cent, not a nickel or dime or a dollar, from his criminal activity. It is not enough to take the view that the criminal is sorry about his crime and he therefore has a right to write about it. We have to remember that justice not only needs to be done, it must be seen to be done. I submit that the strong view of Canadians far and wide is that, no matter what the activity is, be it writing a book, a play, appearing in a film or being interviewed on television, any profit made should go to the victim.

Just this past year, Mr. Speaker, the State of New York has made a pay-out of some $50,000 to three persons who had been held captive in a bank robbery. Not only does New York have a law which prohibits the profiting from crime, but they have already had the first pay-out to the victims of crime.

I cite that example because there are some on the other side who may argue that the law is unworkable or that it is an infringement on the Charter of Rights. I submit in defence, before the argument appears, that there are already precedents in democratic countries for the withholding of profits resulting from criminal activity. The fact is that these people are still free to express themselves, to write, act in plays, give speeches or interviews, but the profits derived therefrom go to the victims of crime.

For those who believe there is a denial of rights here, we have to ask them to recall that murder involves the denial of the rights of another person. The murdered person's rights are permanently denied. Many people will take the view that we cannot impose such legislation as this because it denies the right of free expression. But Canadians everywhere are very quick to note that those who commit murder have denied forever the right of their victims to express any thought ever again. For us as a Parliament to support the criminal as opposed to his victim is to create another injustice on top of the first injustice.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the first priority is that the victim, assuming that he survives, is compensated. In the case of a murder, of course, the victim is dead. Therefore, the second priority would be that such moneys would be paid to those people wholly dependent on the victim. If that is not applicable, then the moneys would go to the estate of the victim. The fourth alternative would be for the money to go to the victims of crime in general. Finally, if none of those situations is applicable, then the money would go to those organizations whose objective it is to deter crime or reform criminals.

Essentially, this is a very simple piece of legislation before the House today. It allows for freedom of expression and thought. It allows criminals, sentenced to five years or more and now free, to express themselves but deters them from profiting from the crime.

The argument that the Criminel Code does not allow for compensation can be answered by saying that we should presume a lawful society and that crime is not profitable. There are precedents where people who committed robberies were paid for the value of the goods stolen, so the Criminal Code does make some provision for compensation. While it does not take into consideration the moral, physical or psychological wounds inflicted on victims, it is one of the fundamental bases of the law that in the past society has always believed that the victim of crime has not received the just attention of Government and that the person who commits the crime ought not to be allowed to profit. Our elementary school children tell us that crime does not pay because that is what we teach them; it is a fundamental truth of our society. Yet today, some crimes do pay when the story is written. Unfortunately, the more heinous the crime, as in the case of Clifford Robert Olson who killed many teenagers in British Columbia, the more the publicity that attends it. That offers the greatest opportunity for profit. What a foul system we would have if the result of the worst crime imaginable was profit; how objectionable that concept would be.

I should like to offer two short thoughts in closing, Mr. Speaker. The first is that justice must not only be done, it must be seen to be done. People everywhere believe that we should not profit from crime. Second, because Private Members are only accorded one hour for their Bills, my time will be up at 4.15 p.m. Central Time. I hope that Members will allow the Bill to go to committee. I know there is agreement for this concept on all sides of the House and amendments could be introduced to broaden or to shrink the provisions.

I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) is considering ways of achieving the same thing so let us not talk the Bill out. If we do, we side with those who believe that crime should pay. That idea would be unacceptable to Canadians. We all want a system where crime does not pay.

Mr. John Evans (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we are considering a Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) concerning profits derived from crime. I must say at the outset that I have a great deal of sympathy for the position he puts forward. I think very few Members do not sympathize with the views he has expressed this afternoon.

As the Hon. Member has stated in the explanatory note attached to his Bill, his objective is as follows:

> To prevent persons convicted of serious offences from realizing financial gains based on the notoriety surrounding their offences and thereby making a mockery of the criminal justice system.

The explanatory note to the Bill goes on to state:

> Any profits accruing from personal appearances, media interviews or published writings would be recoverable by the provincial Attorney General, to be used for compensating victims of crime or for diverting others from criminal activities.

It is clear that the genesis of the Bill with which we are concerned today is the publicity surrounding the unspeakable murders committed in British Columbia just over a year ago. These crimes, which have led to expressions of outrage and disgust all across Canada, have understandably directed attention to the issue this Bill attempts to address. The perpetrator, Clifford Olson, has clearly stated his intention of further capitalizing on these unspeakable acts by publishing a book about them—an act that will obviously give rise to further grief and pain to the survivors of his victims.

Last autumn, the publication in Quebec of a book by one of those convicted of the murder of Pierre Laporte reinforced public attention on this issue.

In the spring of 1982, the Solicitor General (Mr. Kaplan) asserted his "opposition to criminals benefiting from their crimes; particularly from financial proceeds that could be realized from the publication of the details of their crimes". The Minister went on to indicate that possible changes to the Criminal Code were being examined in this respect in order to "prevent the miscreant from profiting from his actions, and to attack the glorification of crime through the reduction of sensational publicity". At that time the Solicitor General noted that constitutional questions involving both division of powers between the federal and provincial Governments and the Charter of Rights would have to be given careful study in the context of an examination of these options.

Since that time, work has indeed been done with respect to the various possibilities that would appear to be available. The complexity of the issues involved, identified by the Solicitor General as long ago as last May, have been remarked upon by all those who have examined this question. It is in the context of a careful consideration of the values and principles involved that we must assess the proposal put forward and the legislation we are discussing this afternoon.

While I am sure that all Hon. Members share the sense of revulsion that arises as a result of the spectacle of a convicted murderer further exploiting his victims and society at large through commercial gains stemming from publication of accounts of those crimes, it is incumbent upon us to ensure that any action we might contemplate in response to this sense of revulsion does not result in unintended, unforeseen and undesirable effects.

In examining the question raised so clearly by Bill C-664, and other suggestions similar to it, it is my contention that we must clearly identify and distinguish the various issues involved. An examination of press reports, letters to the editor, correspondence that I am sure other Members have received on the issue, and so on, reveals, it seems to me, two principal objectives which are not necessarily in harmony. The first of these objectives is that articulated in the explanatory note in Bill C-664, namely, the prevention of the evident unfairness in an offender profiting from his crime through the royalties derived from publications about such crime.

The second major objective—and this is clearly articulated by some of the families of the victims involved—is the prevention of the publication itself of certain types of works which unduly exploit the details of infamous crimes.

In assessing whether any particular approach that may be suggested in pursuit of either or both of these objectives is suitable, we must also bear in mind other crucial interests and principles. These include the victim's right to and desire for privacy, the general interest in public decency, and the desire to afford some measure of compensation to victims of crime. Also, and in a sense working in the opposite direction, we must always consider the fundamental societal interest in freedom of expression, as well as the desirability of encouraging literature of merit.

Taking these in order, the desire of the victims for privacy is obviously a matter of public concern and militates against the right to expression of the offender. It can generally be assumed that most victims of crime lending themselves to sensational exploitation would be further offended by having the details of those events publicly exploited, especially by the publication of an account produced by the offender himself.

• (1540)

Concern for public decency is related to the issue I have just mentioned, in constituting an argument for restriction on the otherwise guaranteed freedom of expression. In essence, the point is that the public at large, not only the victim or the victim's survivors, has an interest in suppressing the publication of accounts of notorious or sensational crimes, especially when the accounts are lurid or exploitative and, further, the offender's desire for further publicity or commercial gain.

Running parallel in a sense to these concerns is the desire to provide some measure of compensation to victims of crime. A federal-provincial task force established at the insistence of Ministers responsible for criminal justice has been working over the past year to explore a number of issues and options aimed at ameliorating the plight of victims. Included among the issues they examined was that of alternative sources of compensation funding for victims of crime. Seizure and forfeiture of royalties and other proceeds payable to offenders as a result of contracts for publication of the details of their criminal activity certainly fall within this general heading. Such a model exists in a number of American states. The Bill we are considering this afternoon also makes provision to this effect.

I should like to outline briefly the issues of freedom of expression and the desire to encourage literary works of merit, both societal interests which give us pause in our consideration of actions that restrict or remove the ability of some individuals in society to seek financial gain through publication of their thoughts. As all Hon. Members are aware, freedom of expression is guaranteed by Section 2(b) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is a fundamental right all Canadians cherish. The question we must consider in the context of legislative proposals such as those contained in Bill C-664 is whether those proposals constitute a "reasonable limit ... demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society" under the terms of Section 1 of the Charter.

With respect to the final consideration to which I have referred, that related to the societal interest in encouraging publication of works having literary, historical, criminological, legal, rehabilitative or other merit, the problem is posed not so much by the particular instances which are paramount in our minds in considering this legislation, but rather by other cases which I am sure most Hon. Members would not wish to see affected by legislation of the kind presented here today. Examples of valuable works of literature produced by criminals abound in world literature throughout the centuries. To cite one recent Canadian example, we need to think no further back than a year or so ago when the Governor General's award for literature was presented to Roger Caron for his book "Go Boy".

The point I am making is that all these interests, principles and objectives must be borne in mind in assessing the various options which might be considered and, in particular, the specific option embodied in Bill C-664.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview-Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the sentiment behind Bill C-664 is, of course, one all decent people would share. We are horrified at the thought of a murderer like Clifford Olson profiting from exploitation in books about his crimes, or in any other way. But I should like to suggest that the Bill before us goes too far. We must explore some other means of dealing with the problem.

First, I would suggest that there is a problem of jurisdiction, whether the issue should be dealt with at the federal or provincial level. The Provinces are responsible for civil rights, for property and for contracts. Compensation for victims of crime is under provincial jurisdiction; some Provinces have boards dealing with this. All these subjects come under this legislation, and it is not clear that they could not be dealt with better at the provincial level.

There have been consultations with the Provinces on the issue. So far those consultations have been inconclusive. Some Provinces would like to see the federal Government proceed, some would not. Clearly more work has to be done. This matter has to be sorted out with the Provinces.

This Bill goes too far in a number of other respects. The motivation is to prevent serious criminals like murderers from profiting from their crimes, but in fact the wording refers to any offender convicted of a crime punishable by five years or more. This could include somebody, for example, who has been found guilty of importing cannabis for personal use, a victimless crime. It could be a person who has committed a property crime without violence. A person who has spent a number of years in prison and has, to most people's satisfaction, paid his or her debt to society could be stopped in the expression of his or her experience in prison. We know that there are people who write books as a result of prison experience. Some American criminals have gone straight and have pursued very legitimate careers in their professions. At one time they were criminals but they have reformed, have done a great deal of work, and certainly deserve to be heard on the subject.

While it is true that we want to stop exploitation of the type of situations that Olson presents us with, the far more common kind of occurrence we might be stopping is that of a person who has paid his debt to society and then writes a very modest book. We know that the profits from book writing and publication in this country are very small; they are poverty wages. To prevent somebody from being paid for that would in effect prevent the person from writing such a book.

The previous speaker referred to some important literary works written in prison. One example was Roger Caron who won the Canadian Governor General's award. I think of the example of Brendan Behan and "Borstal Boy". Would we want to prevent that type of literature from being published? The legislation simply goes too far.

Other examples of convicted offenders being prevented from expressing themselves would be a labour leader convicted of some offence in the course of a labour dispute or a person who peacefully protested the arms race but nevertheless was convicted of a crime, a crime of conscience I would suggest. Would we want such persons to be prevented from continuing their work? How could we distinguish from payment for attending a conference, writing a book or that person's legitimate work? The punishment could be far too excessive, for the person has already paid for the offence.

Third, what is wrong with this legislation is that it includes a notwithstanding section to override section 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The purpose of the legislation is to deal with profiting from expression; the Hon. Member who introduced it said that the intention was not to forbid freedom of expression. If that is the case, why is there a notwithstanding section? We have a Charter of Rights and Freedoms now. We in this Party, at least, are extremely keen to see that people have free expression. We do not want to see limitation of freedom of expression. We do not want to see notwithstanding clauses in statutes before the House.

Finally, I suggest that there are other ways in which we could proceed to deal with this problem. My colleague the member for Riverdale in the Ontario House has a private members' bill modelled on successful New York legislation, the so-called 1977 "Son of Sam" law. This legislation has had some success in the United States. It is at the provincial level. It is a route that should be considered. We should not go the route we are going now without considering constructive alternatives or working out other possibilities with the Provinces.

In conclusion, normally we on this side of the House are criticizing legislation for being too little and too late. At this point I suggest we have a Bill before us which is too early and too much.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley-Hants): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this Private Member's Bill C-664 introduced by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone). He and I have sort of been a two-man team in this matter. He had a draft Bill at the time I first raised a question in the House after hearing the revolting press conference of Simard in Montreal on Thursday, November 18. I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) about this repugnant act of someone who almost takes pleasure coming on TV saying how he sincerely killed one called Pierre Laporte, and on the basis of that wrote a book.

• (1550)

With all due respect to the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), we are not talking about literary pieces of journalism or works of art done in prison because of some cause. I agree the Bill is imperfect. It raises fundamental questions of freedom of speech. But there is no such thing as absolute freedom of speech. Already, regardless of a Charter of Rights, there are certain things that you cannot say about people. If you do, you get charged. What is more repugnant in terms of qualified freedom of speech than one who kills, goes on public television, almost gloats over his deed and because of the sensation tries to derive profit from it?

My instinctive reaction when I saw the press conference and afterwards was that anything written by a murderer should be prohibited from publication. Any person with blood on his hands should not profit from that blood. Obviously, there are constitutional questions. If an outright prohibition on publication cannot be done, then one can certainly try to do something along the lines of what the Hon. Member for Crowfoot has done, and that is to make sure the profit that follows from a publication does not go to the murderer directly or indirectly. The profit motive should be taken away.

I will not get into a philosophical debate with my hon. friend who has just spoken, but there is no doubt that the profit motive is a catalyst for many things in this world. If that profit motive were taken away in this case, you would certainly reduce the chance of this matter being a topic in public policy debates and before a public forum, as it has.

We have an interesting situation here. There is no capital punishment in Canada. That matter has been debated and has been resolved in this House. However, it is still a very subjective issue. It is a philosophic and a moral issue. That topic has emotionally torn this House apart in a way that I have not seen any other debate. Three times this subject has come up for debate and resolution since I have been a Member of this House. Each time Hon. Members get emotionally involved as to whether they stand for or against capital punishment. The question is, do you swing or do you not swing? Capital punishment always tears the soul of every Hon. Member. However, at the present time we do not have capital punishment.

We do have something called television and we do have something called political crime. That was Simard justifying the garrotting of Pierre Laporte because the crime was a political one carried out in the name of Quebec nationalism.

If you get three ingredients together, Mr. Speaker, that of no capital punishment, people killing on the pretext that the murder is not a real murder, that it is a political crime, and with the power of television being able to sensationalize the deed immediately right across the country through a press conference, they will provoke having the issue brought to some resolution by the legislatures of the land or by Parliament.

I do not like the Bill brought forward by the Hon. Member for Crowfoot. I do not think his Bill is perfect; I think it goes too far. I agree with some of the complaints mentioned by the Hon. Member for Broadview-Greenwood.

I do not want to try to cover the whole waterfront on crime and to get into some of the philosophical issues of which the Hon. Member spoke, but I do want to talk about the one single thing that is repugnant to everybody, and that is that a convicted murderer should not profit from that murder. We should restrict ourselves to that, and it will eliminate a lot of the argument against freedom of speech.

As I said before, freedom of speech is not absolute. There are certain rules. Surely in the interest of public policy and decency to the collective sense of the community, we can extend some restriction on freedom of speech so that the murderer with blood on his hands does not profit. After all, Mr. Speaker, I know that you are a teacher of note and you are not perhaps learned in the law, but certainly you have taught many philosophical things in the classrooms from which you come. You know as well as I that the basic law of equity in the old courts of chancery and common law is that one could not come into court with dirty hands. You could not profit from a contract if you had dirty hands or if there were something in the background that affected the contract and your hands were dirty.

What hands are more dirty than those that are bloody? In the days of old without television and with capital punishment, a lot of problems of those who might potentially profit from crime were taken care of. In the old days people were not able to profit from crime. There were extreme capital punishment penalties even for stealing a loaf of bread. But even in those days with such severe capital punishment and without the power of television, fundamental decency was taken care of in the community. No one could profit from a misdemeanor or dirty hands.

You cannot be a beneficiary of a will and bump somebody off hoping to profit from it. There are many famous cases regarding insurance policies. You cannot be a beneficiary under an insurance will and in effect help to terminate the person's life who took out the insurance. You cannot hope to benefit from that insurance policy.

We are not exploring completely new ground. This ground has been covered in the law of contract, the law of insurance and the law of wills. Now we are into the law of political crime. It is murder, justified basically for political ends.

There is something rather unfortunate in this Parliament. We all know that the chance of any Private Members' Bill even to move through this stage and into committee is very slight. Quite frankly, this Bill, regardless of differences or how far it may go, whether or not it is perfect, should have a restriction in it. The Bill wants to restrict "the criminal" from profiting from a crime. In committee I would say at least we could restrict that to "the murderer". Surely that is an issue because of some of the things that have been said.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) mentioned that there are different questions of philosophy. Is it really a restriction of freedom of speech? Does it really take away a right? Does a person have a right to profit from his work when, in effect, the basis of that work is a killing? We are talking about the undue exploitation of a murder for profit. We are not talking about someone writing about the rights or wrongs of the Cruise missile or debating a political question about the importation of hash. We are talking about someone who has committed a murder, who then sensationalizes it, uses the power of television, and because capital punishment has been abolished he can profit.

Earlier I have asked that this issue be made the subject of a white paper. It should be an issue that is referred to the Law Reform Commission. Perhaps it should be a matter for a federal-provincial conference of Attorneys General.

There is a man named Olson. Thank God he is incarcerated somewhere in this land. Let us hope he remains incarcerated. He is trying to twist things around so that he can benefit in a peculiar way from the evil he has done. He has already earned too many dollars from it as far as I am concerned.

There are ways the federal Government can move today to prevent this kind of profit. As the Hon. Member for Crowfoot said, the Income Tax Act can be used. You can tax at the rate of 100 per cent. You can make sure there is a restriction put on a person's discharge to the effect that when released that person is not able to publish any works.

• (1600)

It can also be done with an amendment to the copyright law. We all know that the Provinces can also pass laws under the provincial law of property and civil rights to deal with these matters within their domain. There can be a compensation fund for the families of victims of the killer. The profits of the crime, through the authoring of a book by the killer, can be confiscated and put into the compensation fund, which would then go to the victims of the crime.

It is not beyond the House at least to move this Bill into committee so that it can hear the views of the philosophers, the Attorneys General and the public. This Parliament would be enhanced if it charged the committee with this subject.

It is a poor reflection on this House when we see that not one law similar to this in the United States has been challenged by their Supreme Court in respect to freedom of speech. The Americans have had a Bill of Rights much longer than we have. It is their first amendment. I am informed that there are presently 28 States in the United States that have the type of law that is basically incorporated in Bill C-664 which was introduced by the Member of Crowfoot.

I urge that this matter be sent to committee so that all the issues can be canvassed in a meaningful way. This Bill should at least get into committee because, quite frankly, it will not be dealt with in any other way with all of the difficulties in federal-provincial conferences, with all the difficulties and pressures on the present Solicitor General. Unless we get this Bill to committee so it may be aired publicly, it will be an issue that will come back to haunt us again in Parliament in view of what is happening in the country. We will be doing a disservice to the country if we do not move this Bill to committee today.

I would be interested in restricting the provisions of the Bill in committee and eliminating the five-year provision. I am more concerned with the fundamental issue. I am talking about killers who have blood on their hands. Whether they try to justify it for political reasons or any other reason, they cannot justify it on the basic law that we all try to live by. If they have laws of chancery in England that are 200 or 300 years old which state that one cannot profit if one has dirty hands, at least this House should take one step forward and agree that the person with blood on his hands will not profit from any publication about an odious act.

Mr. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, one can understand the motives and the concerns of the Hon. Member opposite in bringing forth his Bill. I imagine that all Members of the House would share his basic concerns that a criminal not profit from his or her crime. However, as the Hon. Members for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans) and Broadview-Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) have already noted, we must take into account a number of factors, such as the constitutional jurisdiction of Parliament to enact legislation of the kind envisaged in Bill C-664. Serious consideration would also have to be given to the implications concerning the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In addition, questions would arise about the practical effect that any action might have on the specific cases which have given rise to the real public concern so apparent at the present time.

Having noted such considerations, I should like briefly to turn to specific provisions of the Bill which give some concern. First, the provisions cast a broad net with respect to the category of convicted persons who would be brought within its terms. Similarly, it creates a broad definition for the kind of activities that are engaged in by those who would be affected by this legislation. Such individuals would be all those who have been "convicted of an indictable offence punishable by imprisonment for five years or more".

I wonder whether the Hon. Member is aware of the fact that the Criminal Code alone contains more than 200 offences falling into the category just mentioned. Many of these offences are, indeed, most serious, but I question whether the Hon. Member really intends that anyone convicted of—to pick a few random examples—defacing a mark on a piece of drift timber, neglecting to obtain assistance during childbirth, making a false statement in an extrajudicial proceeding, committing fraud upon the Government, committing assault causing bodily harm, or corruptly taking a reward for the recovery of goods or public mischief, should be subject to the kind of restrictions contemplated in the legislation.

What are those restrictions in practical terms? In effect, a reading of the legislation suggests that anyone convicted of any of the large number of offences contained in the category would thereafter be precluded from ever earning any money, unless a pardon were granted, by means of any kind of public commercial activity related in any general way to publication. The Bill explicitly makes the point that the subject matter of this publication need not bear any relationship whatever to the offence for which the conviction resulted. Thus, a member of the media, a writer or author, anyone active in radio, television, music, motion pictures or academia, who ever had any expectation of deriving a living from public appearances or participation in publications or broadcasts—no matter what the subject of those public appearances, publications or broadcasts—would have those earnings forfeited.

The obvious assumption lying behind this drastic penalty, it seems to me, is that the only possible explanation for such a person being able to derive an income from such activities is the notoriety which he or she derived by virtue of the publicity surrounding conviction for any of the hundreds of eligible offences contemplated in this Bill. This assumption is, to say the least, questionable. For example, an academic publishing a learned work in his or her field of specialization should, unless pardoned, be forced to surrender the earnings derived from that publication simply by virtue of the fact that he or she has been convicted of, say, public mischief.

One could go on to raise a number of other points or concerns with the approach taken in Bill C-664 related to its questionable consitutional validity: its Draconian effect on freedom of expression to the extent that its sponsor feels the need to employ a notwithstanding clause; its apparent retroactivity of effect, so as to apply to someone convicted of any eligible offence even prior to the passage of this Bill, and so on.

I understand that other Hon. Members wish to participate in this debate, so I shall conclude by simply reminding Hon. Members that there are several important issues and principles which must be taken into account in weighing the advisability of the particular approach suggested in this Bill. Whatever one's views as to the desirability of taking some action in respect of the publication of accounts of crimes by their offenders, the approach suggested in this legislation must be unacceptable.

The terms of the Bill are much too broad and Draconian in their effect. It may well be unconstitutional from the perspective of division of powers between the federal Government and the Provinces. It would employ, for the first time in federal legislation, a notwithstanding clause in order to overcome its obvious difficulties regarding the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In effect, it is tantamount to automatic civil forfeiture imposed by law on a particular class of persons. It would deny such persons from earning a living through any kind of public activity, on the basis of a questionable assumption that the only reason such persons would be able to command earnings through such means is the alleged public notoriety that they have gained by virtue of a conviction for any of a broad range of offences.

If Parliament is to take action on this important issue which gave rise to the Bill presented by the Member opposite, it should not take this particular action.

• (1610)

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could get an indication from you of how much time I have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Until 4.13 p.m.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I want to say at the outset that I support wholeheartedly what the Hon. Member is trying to do with this Bill. Like my colleague from Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren), I believe this Bill is too broad in scope because there are situations where I do not think the penalty suggested by this Bill should apply. For instance, let us take the case of the convicted felon who spends ten years in prison and when he comes out he writes a book about his experiences, including an account of how the crime was committed. Do we then preclude him from making a profit from that work, if in fact he has been rehabilitated and is doing something positive for society?

I would, however, suggest that the Bill covers an important issue today. The Olson case made it an important issue because of the odious nature of that case and because of the odious nature of that individual. I think we should have a law in Canada that would make it impossible for that type of criminal to profit from his crimes.

An Hon. Member: Let us send the Bill to committee then.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Therefore, if the Hon. Member would just be patient, I would like to suggest that the subject matter only of this Bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration and recommendation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think procedurally I have to put before the House a motion. I believe the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) wanted to propose an amendment which I presume was to be seconded.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): No, I did not make a motion, Mr. Speaker, but I would if I still had the floor.

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to indicate my support for the objective behind the Bill which the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) has put forward. However, due to the shortcomings of the Bill itself I must speak against it.

The subject matter of today's discussion is one of keen public interest, as a result of some notorious criminal acts that have taken place in Canada in the recent past.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I hear some comments on my right. I am not exactly certain what happens but the Chair is obligated, pursuant to Standing Order (24(2), to interrupt the proceedings at this point because the time allotted for Private Members' Public Bills has now past.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is a disposition in the House to at least accept the content of Bill C-664. Since the House is an institution that can rule itself by unanimous consent, and since the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) has made the suggestion, may we seek unanimous consent of the House that the subject matter of the Bill go to the relevant standing committee for further study and whatever amendments that that committee so deems necessary? In this way the intent of the Bill will be put in its proper perspective, irrespective of the specific writings therein.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): On the face of the matter, I should indicate to the House that the time allotted for the Private Member's Public Bill has expired. In the ordinary course, I think the House would want to be observant of the clock and not permit motions pertaining to the Bill to come in after the time allowed.

There was, however, some comment from the Hon. Member to my right, and I do not know what his intention was. Because I think it is important to ensure that the rights of Hon. Members are respected, if necessary I will hear the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne). If I understood him correctly, he may wish to propose a motion, the effect of which would be that the subject matter of the Bill would be sent to committee.

I must say that from the point of view of the Chair, the time has expired. The only way I can go past that is to seek unanimous consent to determine whether or not the House is prepared to not observe the clock long enough to permit the motion that I described.

I would assume that the Hon. Member for Crowfoot would be pleased to ask the unanimous consent of the House to not see the clock for a couple of moments, for the purpose I have described, but I would have to have unanimous consent in order to proceed in that fashion. Is there unanimous consent to not see the clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is not.

Shall all items listed under Private Members' Notices of Motions preceding No. 58 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

GRAIN

PRICE OF CANADIAN RED SPRING WHEAT

Mr. Bill McKnight (Kindersley-Lloydminster) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of setting the price of Canadian Red Spring Wheat for domestic human consumption at a minimum floor level of $7.00 a bushel without any maximum ceiling price restriction.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I already hear comments from the other side saying "you cannot have it both ways". I would just like to draw a little bit of background for the motion that I put forward.

This motion first had second reading on July 7, 1980. The background to the motion is tied very closely with a Government Bill, Bill S-6, which basically removes the legal obligation of the present Government to the tune of about $200 million that it owes western producers and which legally became due on July 31, 1980 when the so-called Two-Price Wheat Act was about to expire.

The Two-Price Wheat Act was introduced by the Hon. Otto Lang in 1974 and he stated at that time that the specific purpose of this Bill was to enshrine for a period of seven years a procedure whereby the treasury supplements payments for the domestic consumption of wheat. Mr. Lang did admit that it was in the nature of a consumer subsidy. At no time in this Bill was there any consideration of cost of production and it was to stay in effect for seven years.

Bill S-6, which is the Two-Price Wheat Act, advances the termination due date to November 30, 1978 instead of July 30, 1980, which really obligates the present Government to pay the producer what he has been receiving since December, 1978 directly from the marketplace. Without the passage of Bill S-6 the Government would legally, in effect, owe the farmers $200 million.

When I put forward my motion, the price of grain had been adjusted by the Minister presently responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board, Senator Argue. It had been adjusted upwards and the maximum for Red Spring Wheat was set at $7 a bushel and the minimum for Red Spring Wheat was set at $5 a bushel. For a bushel of Canadian Amber Durum the price was set at a minimum of $5 and there was no maximum. There was not a cap. This shows that whoever was in charge of the Bill at that time did not understand that it takes the same machinery, the same amount of moisture and the same amount of good luck from mother nature to produce a bushel of Durum Wheat as it does to produce a bushel of Spring Wheat.

On February 4, 1983 the prices received by the producers in the Canadian Wheat Board area were, for 1CWRS in store at Thunder Bay, $5.60 a bushel; for 1 CWRS in store at Vancouver, $6.11 a bushel; 1CWAD in store at Thunder Bay, $5.22 a bushel; and for 1CWAD in store at Vancouver, $5.66 a bushel.

It will be seen that prices have fallen drastically since last year, where they had not exceeded $7 a bushel but were within 23 cents of that price. It has not been the case in the past that the producer receives funds from the Government. It was a subsidy to the consumer at the expense of the producer.

In 1979 action was taken by the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) to obtain Cabinet approval to set the price of grain at a floor level of $6 a bushel, $1 a bushel above the 1980-81 crop year price for domestic grain. As we move along, we see the price of grain dropping and we see the subsidy that has been paid under the two-price wheat system. Payments to consumers between 1973 and 1978 were $396 million, whereas in the period since 1967 the federal Government made payments to producers of only $76 million. That is a difference of $320 million by which grain growers within the Wheat Board area have subsidized consumers of grain in this country.

The problem with the Two-Price Wheat Act is that at present there is no indexing to reflect the cost of production. There has never been specific legislation by which that indexing or cost of production could be placed within the Act. Under Bill S-6, the present Two-Price Wheat Act, there is no method or mechanism to put in the cost of production.

The open-ended freight rates that we as producers in Western Canada are now seeing that will be imposed upon the producers in the Wheat Board area demand that there be some consideration within the Two-Price Wheat Act for the cost of production. The present proposal of the Government is that from the 1982-83 to the 1985-86 crop years, farmers will see the cost of moving their grain increased by 91 per cent. By the way, all this is in a six and five world. The producers of grain will have to pay an additional 91 per cent by the year 1986.

That is not as bad as looking forward to the year 1990 where producers will be paying five times what they are now paying. The railroads will be receiving 1000 per cent more, or ten times the present statutory rate. It bears drawing to the attention of the House that this Government pays someone $800 or $925 a day to study the problems of the economy. I could forward names of people from every walk of life in my riding who would supply that information to the Government without cost. They have been attempting to do so over the last three years, but the Government does not appear to be paying too much attention.

The producers of grain in Western Canada wonder who is here to protect their interests. I would assume that would be the sole responsibility of the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. However, when the announcement was made regarding the change in the statutory rate, the Hon. Senator was in Paris. I am not too sure what he was doing. Maybe he was explaining to the Common Market people that we do not have any subsidies for our farmers in comparison to theirs. I hope that is what he was doing. We found several examples. It makes one wonder who is protecting the interests of the grain producer.

The Herd Maintenance Program was originally under the purview of that Minister. It was moved to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and then moved from him to the Minister responsible for PFRA, leaving the cattlemen and grain producers in Western Canada without anyone to carry their burden to Cabinet.

Several questions have been asked by my constituents regarding the same responsibility, who is responsible for the welfare of the grain producer. Corn producers were paid for the embargo on grain sold to the Soviet Union; rapeseed producers were not eligible.

The Minister of Agriculture told us the $80 million plus came out of his budget. The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) informed us that it came out of the phantom Western Development Fund. We are not sure where it came from, and we are not sure why it was paid out in the way that it was.

As producers try to feed a hungry world, adding their efforts and labour to something we all want to see in this world—self-sufficiency and everyone going to bed with a full stomach—we see the Government working directly against that. The Government is now asking food producers to pay up to 69 cents a gallon in federal tax on fuel used to produce food in this country. I would like to run through those taxes. There is the excise tax of 7 cents a gallon, the 9 per cent federal sales tax, 15 cents a gallon, the petroleum compensation charge of 18 cents, the Canadian ownership charge of 4 cents, the petroleum revenue gas tax of 7 cents and the corporate tax of 18 cents. This totals 69 cents a gallon. Even with a rebate, it is still 40 per cent of the cost of fuel that goes to the federal Government.

I see from the Chair that my time is coming to an end.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I apologize to the Hon. Member; I misled him. His time will come to an end at 4.37.

Mr. McKnight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The problems that I am placing before the House emphasize the need for the price of domestic grain, grain consumed within the country, to be raised to the level of $7. Even looking at the change in statutory rates, the Government has proposed that the grain producers shall carry at their own expense any inflation rate up to 6 per cent. However, I do not see anything in the mechanism in the Two-Price Wheat Act to allow a 6 per cent increase per year, if that is the inflation rate, in the cost to the consumers of Canada.

Who has the ear of the Government? It is hard to dispute what a lot of producers in Western Canada are saying. It is not the producers of grain that this Government listens to but the railroads. For example, in order to get the railroads to invest $806 million in 1983, the Government is offering them over $900 million. That is broken down as follows: $313 million as an interim payment for 1983, $380 million for hopper car purchases and leases, and $278 million for branch line subsidies. That totals $971 million, and it is being given to the railroads to get them to spend $806 million to expand their capacity.

We have a great deal—I was going to use a word that may not be parliamentary—a great deal of difficulty in placing too much faith in statements made by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) recently regarding the change in the statutory rate. I want to put something on the record in the hope that someone on the Government side will be able to explain it for my information and the information of those I represent. In Montreal, Quebec the Minister of Agriculture stated:

—that the Crow rate was a major impediment to agricultural development.

That statement was made on February 1, 1983 in announcing the Government's change in the statutory rate. On May 7, 1980, during the Quebec referendum, the Minister of Agriculture said in Sawyerville, Quebec, and I quote:

• (1630)

The 'Crowsnest Rate' and the Feed Freight Assistance Program have reduced the cost of grain shipped into Quebec and thus lowered the cost of producing hogs and poultry here. These subsidies have resulted in benefits for western grain growers, but they have also decreased the natural comparative advantage for livestock production on the Prairies and given assistance to livestock producers in the East.

Also, the 'Crowsnest Rate' has favoured the growth in Quebec of processing plants for meat, flour and vegetable oils since products processed in the West are not eligible for the preferential statutory rate, while the raw products are.

On Saturday, February 5, 1983, there was a full-page advertisement which appeared in Le Devoir, which reads as follows:

The new Crow rate will not favour producers of pork and beef in Western Canada and will not have a negative effect on those industries in the East.

I would like to compare this with the statement on February 1, 1983, on page 18 of the "Western Transportation Initiative—The Policy Decisions". It reads:

The progressive reductions of distortions in the western agricultural economy should also yield significant benefits in terms of increasing processing, livestock production and crop diversification. On the basis of existing analysis, annual Western agricultural production should be $3.5 billion higher by the beginning of the 1990's than if the decisions announced today had not been taken.

What we would like, Mr. Speaker, is an explanation as to where the benefits are; who will benefit from the changes in statutory rates; and where, under Bill S-6, and in the Two-Price Wheat Act, is there any benefit to the producers? Is there any mechanism for increasing, even by the 6 per cent rate of inflation, the cost to the consumers of Canada, because the producers of grain will have to pay in the movement of their product a 6 per cent increase?

It is not unreasonable right now to compare 1972 in constant dollars to 1982, or this present year. The producers of grain in Canada in the Wheat Board areas are receiving the same constant dollar, whereas costs have tripled and quadrupled in many, many cases.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will hear from the Government side that they are certainly willing to allow the producers of food in this country to have the same protection which it is giving the railroads and other industries in Canada when it comes to establishing an inflation rate plus on their products.

Mr. Jesse P. Flis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) proposes that the Government should consider the advisability of setting the price of Canadian Red Spring Wheat for domestic human consumption at a minimum floor price of $7 per bushel without any price ceiling. As one who comes from a family which has farmed for 25 years in Saskatchewan, I could not agree more with the Hon. Member that farmers should receive a better return for the wheat they produce, whether that wheat is sold on the domestic market or on the export market. We all know that the price of equipment and parts is skyrocketing. The price of fuels and fertilizer keeps increasing. Therefore, it is only natural for the farmer to expect a greater return on his investment and his labour. However, the fact of the matter remains, Mr. Speaker, that Canada is not a country which exists in a cocoon. It is not a country covered by a dome, which is not influenced by outside forces. Canada cannot consume everything it produces. If it could, we might be able to accept the Hon. Member's motion.

The volume of production around the world will affect export prices, which will in turn affect domestic prices. If the Canadian miller has to pay $9 for his wheat on the domestic market—because the Hon. Member does not want a ceiling on this domestic price—but can buy it for $6 across the border in the United States, as a good business person he naturally will buy it in the United States. Why should the Canadian consumer be the one to be penalized, the miller, the baker, and finally the person on a fixed income living under the poverty line who has to buy that loaf of bread?

The two-price wheat program was implemented to protect both the producers and the consumers, not just the producers. The Hon. Member's motion would not achieve this balanced protection. The program also was implemented to counter short-term fluctuations, not long-term trends.

On the side of just the producer-support programs, I believe that the record of measures and policies which have been put in place by the federal Government demonstrate its commitment to obtaining a fair return for grain producers. The initial payments established each crop year for wheat sales to the Canadian Wheat Board set a minimum which producers can expect to achieve upon delivery of wheat to the primary elevator. Furthermore, these are established with a view to allowing the producer to receive as much as possible of his anticipated returns when he markets his grain. These payments are, of course, guaranteed by the federal Government.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program is intended to protect producers against sharp unexpected drops in net cash flow from sales of major grains produced in the prairie Provinces. One factor which can result in a reduction is, of course, lower grain prices, thus, the Program does provide a measure of protection against declining prices. The level of protection under the Western Grain Stabilization Program has been increased as of January, 1983, with an increase to $60,000 in the maximum level of eligibility per participant. This is up from the $45,000 ceiling which was in effect for the last few years. This change brings the Program closer to its objective of covering 90 per cent of eligible grain receipts in Western Canada. The federal Government is paying more than $100 million annually to support the Program, and at present contributes $2 for every $1 of producer levy into the stabilization fund. The decision to increase the ceiling to $60,000 on grain receipts for individual producers is a firm indication of the concern of the Government of Canada that producer incomes be protected in these times of rising costs and low grain prices.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program also provides protection against factors such as reduced marketings of wheat. While expectations for the coming year are for continued strong exports of Canadian grain, there may be occasions when exports could fall in a particular year. This would be reflected in lower sales of wheat even though domestic requirements would not have changed.

There are other programs which protect producers' income such as crop insurance which ensures that a producer's costs of production are covered in the event that yields are adversely affected by weather conditions or disease. The Prairie Grain Advance Payments Program is another mechanism which assists producers with cash flow problems during times when producers are waiting for delivery opportunities to open up. The cash advance program has been utilized by increasing numbers of producers in recent years. These advances are interest-free as the interest costs are borne by the federal Government.

Government must, of course, be receptive to changes in policies and programs to meet the needs of agricultural community and society in general. There has been considerable interest in the quantity of grain exports which Canada will be able to realize in the coming years. One target which has frequently been quoted is that Canada's aim is for total grains and oilseed exports of 30 million tonnes by 1985. The Canadian Wheat Board developed this target, which includes 20 million tonnes of wheat and 10 million tonnes of feed grains, based on a projection of world trade by 1985 of 85 million tonnes of wheat and 94 million tonnes of coarse grains. Canada's share of world wheat and flour exports in 1981-82 was 18.6 per cent compared to 17.3 per cent in 1980-81. Improvements in the grain handling and transportation system and sustained marketing efforts have enabled Canada to maintain its traditional role in world grain markets where conditions are becoming increasingly competitive. Total Canadian wheat production in 1982 reached a new record of 27 million tonnes, following the previous record production of 24.8 million tonnes in 1981. Canadian exports of wheat and flour reached a record 18.4 million tonnes in 1981-82 and are expected to be high again in 1982-83. At the current time, wheat exports this crop year are running over one million tonnes higher than at the same time last year.

Over the longer term, the underlying world demand trend of the early seventies is expected to re-emerge notwithstanding current severe problems in the balance of supply and demand.

During the 1980s, the world agriculture situation is expected to see growing commodity demand. Grain will be among those commodities in demand as world population and incomes rise and as new uses for grains such as feedstock for energy and sweetener production are exploited. As incomes rise, the tendency is for people to consume more meat, poultry, and dairy by-products which, in turn, pushes up demand for grain. This demand pressure was experienced in the three years from 1979 through early 1981 when, even though world production was at record levels, world consumption exceeded production and stocks declined as a result. In 1981 and 1982 major grain producers were able to respond to the higher levels of world demand by expanding production. This was particularly true in North America.

United States wheat production in 1981 was 76.0 million tonnes compared to 64.6 million tonnes in 1980. This same high level of wheat production was maintained in 1982 when production was 76.5 million tonnes. In 1981 Australian wheat production was 16.4 million tonnes compared to 10.9 million tonnes in 1980; but as we all know, 1982 brought drought to Australia and wheat production was only about 8.6 million tonnes. In Argentina, on the other hand, 1981 production of 8.0 million tonnes was similar to the previous year, but in 1982 wheat production increased to 11.5 million tonnes. While increased production can be achieved, and will undoubtedly occur to meet longer-term demand, it is unlikely that world production and consumption will grow at the same rate in total or at the same rate in the various countries or regions of the world.

The result of different rates of increase in world demand and consumption will be temporary world grain surpluses such as exist at the present time. Over the longer term there should be increased opportunities for trade. This is of particular interest to Canada as a major exporter as evidenced by the Government's commitment to expanding transportation capacity to meet future export possibilities. It is necessary to continue to have a positive and constructive approach to the future of world grain trade even in a period such as the present when temporary surpluses are leading some exporters to become aggressive in competing for markets.

In a 1980 study produced in the U.S.A. of future demand for grain, entitled "Global 2000 Report to the President", the forces that will push up demand for grain during the remaining years of this century were described as follows: a) there will be a 50 per cent increase in world population from about four billion people to 6.35 billion by year 2000; b) the use of arable land will increase by only 4 per cent, so that increased production will be mainly a factor of higher yields which will be dependent on greater use of energy; c) the growth in population is not expected to slow down by the year 2000; d) there will be a greater concentration of population in urban centres; e) per capita consumption of wheat is expected to rise, but this will be closely related to increases in income. There are undoubtedly reservations to be attached to this scenario. Even so, all of these factors suggest strong demand for wheat with accompanying strong prices, and the study, in fact, suggested that the real price of food is expected to increase dramatically by about 95 per cent.

The poor world economic situation as well as the rapid production response by grain exporters in 1981-1982 has temporarily prevented these forecasts from becoming reality. The last year to 18 months have, instead, seen depressed world grain prices and the build-up of grain stocks, particularly in the United States. The thrust of the United States now is to reduce grain stocks by cutting back production, and to become more aggressive in export markets by subsidizing exports. While some of these measures may assist in reducing the large carry-overs in that country, the impact of certain elements, such as subsidized credit on producer incomes, is by no means positive in the short term.

World production growth is still expected. A recovery in world economic conditions can be anticipated. The "Global 2000" factors suggesting stronger demand and prices are likely to become relevant at some point during the remainder of this decade. Stable grain prices for Canadian consumers are important to producers. During the last three crop years, only two export markets, the U.S.S.R. and the People's Republic of China, have accounted for a larger volume of wheat than the domestic market. This demonstrates the importance of the domestic market to total wheat sales. Prices have a direct impact on per capita consumption of wheat products and, in turn, on wheat consumption. The domestic market accounts for the major proportion of sales of flour produced in Canada. Approximately 75 per cent of flour produced by mills in Canada is sold in Canada. The quantity of wheat used by the flour milling industry averaged 2.4 million tonnes during the last two crop years. If that amount of wheat is valued at the current domestic price of $204.65 per tonne, $5.57 per bushel, basis in store Thunder Bay, then these domestic sales are contributing approximately $490 million to revenue from the sale of wheat.

The level of per capita consumption of flour is a key factor in the total domestic utilization of wheat. Between 1974 and 1978 inclusive, per capita consumption of wheat flour averaged 134.36 pounds, with the lowest in any of those years at 131.86 pounds in 1977. However, in 1979, after the price of wheat had been allowed to rise from the fixed price of $3.25 per bushel which was in effect from September 1973 to November 30, 1978, the per capita consumption of wheat flour dropped to only 124.88 pounds, although it must be acknowledged that wheat prices are not the only factor affecting consumer prices for wheat products.

The proposal by the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster to increase the minimum domestic price to $7 per bushel, $257.21 per tonne, would have adverse consequences for domestic utilization of wheat in Canada. There is a significant two-way trade between Canada and the United States in products manufactured from wheat such as bread and bakery products. Although Canada enjoys a surplus in this trade there have, in the last year, been increasing reports of companies importing products from the United States. Increasing the minimum domestic price of wheat to $7 per bushel would be an incentive for sharply increased imports of bread and bakery products and could result in loss of Canada's exports of bread and bakery products. Although one method of dealing with the problem of increasing imports would be order controls, that type of measure would likely lead to retaliation, with the result that Canadian industry would lose existing markets.

Therefore, it is vitally important that the Government avoid policies or programs which would make Canadian industry less competitive in world markets. In view of the expectation that grain and wheat prices are likely to be trending upwards over the longer term and considering the domestic market is a large and important market for Canadian wheat, the decision has to be made between, a) exploiting the domestic market to the maximum extent possible, and b) providing that market with supplies at a reasonable price that will foster the long run growth and stability of the domestic market. I would contend that the domestic market should be supplied in a manner which will promote growth and stability.

In making the comments that I have made I want to emphasize that I am not trying to diminish the concern which we all must have with the low prices currently faced by wheat producers. But I would urge the Hon. Member to seek constructive and positive solutions which take into account the broader international aspects rather than treating the domestic market in isolation from the world wheat market.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that I should follow the Hon. Member for Parkdale-High Park (Mr. Flis) as we share the same background. He grew up just 15 or 20 miles from where I did, but when he was in his teens he left with his family to go and live in the Toronto area. I think that may help explain some of the arguments he has offered today. It is too had that he does not seem to pay heed to the economic history that created the circumstances that forced us to live so far apart after having started out in the same area.

He seems to have ignored the theory behind the two-price system for wheat, or for any agricultural product. It was the lack of that kind of two-price system that forced many families, like his, to leave Saskatchewan in the early 1950s. During the thirties a lot of people shifted within the prairies, but in the early 50s, the price decline forced a great many farm people to move away from the region.

About 1949 or 1950, when I was a young boy, I went to my first farm organization meeting with my father, who was active in local organizations. At that time a two-price system for wheat was discussed. The theory was very simple and had been tried in a number of countries. But in this country it was applied for seven years. It has a great deal to offer to agriculture.

The theory is that in agriculture, stability is what keeps farmers on the land, keeps them producing, keeps the farm for the next generation, provides the income necessary to keep the local rural communities alive and provides a foundation for the economy of the country. No country survives long without a strong agricultural industry. It produces the most basic requirements for human existence. It is even more important than sex, housing or warmth. Food is the basic requirement.

Farmers attempt to make the top four to six inches of soil produce food. The most basic components of our culture and our society depend on four to six inches of soil and the fact that we sometimes get rain.

People in the industrialized economies who attempt to make that four or six inches of soil produce when it does rain, are working against the violent fluctuations in price and markets, the violent fluctuations in weather, and the plagues of grasshoppers, locusts, fungi and other pests that attack plants.

In many countries, farmers have been seeking to implement a firm, two-price protection for their products, and in some places they have succeeded. The theory is straight-forward. For products consumed within the domestic market area, a price level will be guaranteed which will cover the cost of production at a level consistent with the labour incomes of other sectors of the domestic economy, and the world price will obtain for the balance or surplus of production.

On the average grain farm in western Canada, production costs for bread wheat run between $6.50 and $7 per bushel. There is some variation according to the size of the farm, and the cost of production varies according to the input cost.

A great many city people are under the impression that all you need in order to grow wheat is a combination of soil, rain and sunshine. In order to produce grain these days there must be an outlay of money for fertilizer and fuel. These costs have more than doubled in the last seven or eight years, and the cost of farm chemicals follows the same pattern.

The two-price system that is needed to provide some semblance of stability in agriculture in this country, would set a floor price which follows the cost of production. The Hon. Member who just spoke outlined the short-lived two-price system brought in by the Hon. Otto Lang when he was in charge of transport, the Wheat Board and everything else in western Canada. There was a floor price and a ceiling price. In 1973-74, that had the effect of providing a consumer subsidy simply because the world price of wheat exceeded the ceiling. Farmers were providing wheat to the domestic market at a price lower than they could have received on the international market. That was a short-term rather than a long-term program.

The proposal before us today does not contain a ceiling price. I suppose that is because of our most recent experience with ceilings. The Lang two-price system had the effect of actually reducing the income of farmers for a good deal of the time it was in effect.

I should like to deal with an alternate proposal later, Mr. Speaker. The idea behind a floor and a ceiling price is to provide protection to producers during the years when the export price is low. It means that some part of the market will provide a return consistent with what other workers take home. It is protection for only a small part of the producer's return, however, that part sold within this country. That is fair.

A ceiling provides protection for consumers during times when the world price exceeds the price that would normally be expected to be paid in Canada for flour and bread.

The reason that farmers have always approved of the two-price system is the stability which it provides. The Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) should be lauded for introducing the idea to the House once again. I think a ceiling would make it more fair, but I have no objection to the $7 floor price. As I pointed out earlier, it compares very favourably with the current production cost of producing a bushel of Red Spring Wheat.

• (1700)

I am somewhat disturbed that the Conservatives have seen fit to bring forward a grain policy designed to provide some stability to farmers because the activities of Tories in the field of agricultural stabilization were not that good. It is laudable that stability is being touted for Red Spring Wheat, but we should remember what happened in terms of stability for feed grain. The same Party, along with later assistance from the Liberals, took away stability for feed grain pricing which farmers had years ago when feed grain was sold under the aegis of the Canadian Wheat Board. Under the Diefenbaker Government, when the Hon. Member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) was Minister of Agriculture, feed grains were taken away from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. The stability which farmers used to have in the form of an initial price guaranteed by Government was taken away, and feed grain prices slumped considerably. The market for feed grain is much bigger in Canada than the market for Red Spring Wheat. It was left to the open market to decide the price, and generally the price has been below the initial price offered by the Canadian Wheat Board, and there would be a much greater undermining of the Canadian grain trade by the Conservative Party. Then it was taken up by the Liberal Party under Otto Lang when he was in charge of the Wheat Board. He not only agreed with the policy of keeping feed grains away from the Canadian Wheat Board where producers would get a fair price, but he enlarged the activities on the open market to make it apply right across Canada. This brought back the kind of market institutions which assisted in creating the economic violence to which prairie farmers were subjected during the 1930s, with the limits of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange and its open-market pricing activities.

In the remaining few minutes left to me I would like to point out the stand my Party takes with regard to the two-price system and feed grains. We say that the floor price should be set at the cost of production, which is currently somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6.50 to $7 per bushel. Also we say that it should have a ceiling that would allow a range of one-third more than the floor. For example, if the rate is $6, it would mean that the range would be $2, or a third of $6 to $8. However, if the costs of production continued to rise and the floor became $9, the range would be $3, or a third of $9 to a ceiling of $12.

In terms of increasing stability to grain farmers in western Canada, we say that feed grains should be returned to the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board so that feed grain producers would have a floor or an initial price and the guarantee of that initial price to fall back on. It is very important in maintaining stability to the agricultural community that the guarantees offered by the federal Government in 1897 and again in 1925, 1926 and 1927 under the statutory Crow rates be continued so that the agricultural sector, not only in western Canada but also in Quebec, the Maritime Provinces and British Columbia, would not be disrupted any further.

Stability and guarantees keep agricultural producers alive and prosperous. They provide incomes to rural communities and jobs in transportation, in manufacturing, food processing, retailing and wholesaling. Those aspects of agriculture account for between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of the employed people in Canada. Some politicians take great notice of the fact that less than 5 per cent of the voting public are farmers, but they forget the other 20 per cent to 25 per cent who rely on agriculture as their basic means of employment. We in the House must remind ourselves of the importance of stability at the farm level to the rest of the elements in the food chain.

It is very important that this kind of proposal be carried through the House and that a two-price system be reinstated. This particular proposal is not for a two-price system. It is simply for a floor price to be set, but I think the idea should be kept alive. We would support a genuine two-price system with the kinds of guarantees I have outlined today.

Mr. Len Gustafson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to rise and support the motion of the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster (Mr. McKnight) for increasing the floor price of wheat to $7 per bushel. The importance of the motion can only be realized by farmers, especially if we consider the increased costs they now face. We are all aware of the boom or bust cycles farmers have been forced to go through. If we look at the increased costs of farmers at this time, we find that the costs of production have risen approximately 25 per cent over last year, while the price of wheat on the world market has fallen in the neighbourhood of $1 per bushel. This is why the motion is so important. Perhaps there has never been a time in the history of farming when it was more important than today. In addition, farmers are faced with the new proposals of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pepin) which increase freight rates. This will have a significant impact upon the welfare of farmers and the whole area of the pricing of wheat.

As well as the domestic price, one must be well aware that the international price or the world price has fallen very significantly. Also there is a large wheat glut in the United States; there is a large supply of corn in that country. The European Common Market is challenging the Canadian market to some extent. The United States subsidizes its farmers. Some indications are that the figure is $2 per bushel, but European subsidies are even greater. France is now putting into the international marketplace almost as much wheat as Canada. When one looks at these areas, one realizes that the matter certainly presents quite a challenge. Therefore, the motion put forward by my colleague is an important solution to some of the problems that we may face.

• (1710)

Let me refer to the LIFT years in farming and agriculture. Particularly in western Canada, although I am sure the situation relates to agriculture all across Canada, we find that the Otto Lang years of western grain farming when the LIFT program had to be brought in put farmers out of production. The repercussions from that were significant to the whole nation. I want to suggest to the House and to all Canadians that it is important to have stability in the agricultural economy of this country, and it is vital we take positive measures. The Progressive Conservative Party is trying to do that in this House today by presenting this motion for a stable floor price on wheat at $7 a bushel. This price is within the region of possibility for farmers to meet the cost of production and stay in business.

From 1930 to the present date I do not believe you will find a time as critical as the one that we will face in the immediate future. The increased freight rates alone will challenge the farmer's ability to compete in the international marketplace. The cost of production, as I alluded to earlier, will be significant. Just one spectrum of that is the increased cost of fuel. Farmers pay in the neighbourhood of 62 cents to 70 cents on a gallon in federal tax. For example, if a farmer uses 10,000 gallons of gasoline or diesel fuel, and that farmer would be operating a medium-sized farm, the tax on that fuel amounts to approximately $6,000. That amount of money would move a lot of grain. It is important that the Government, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) take a good, hard look at their farm policy as it relates to the domestic grain price and also as it relates to freight rates.

Let me suggest to the House and to the people of Canada that the farmers cannot afford the extravagant increases put forward by the Minister in Winnipeg in the last few days. We simply cannot stand it. There is absolutely no guarantee that farmers' interests would be protected in the policy put forward by the Minister in Winnipeg last week. However, the railroads have their hands in the farmers' pockets and in the Treasury of the country, and through subsidies amounting to $600 million plus from the federal Government they are guaranteed a pretty rich program. In addition to that, hopper cars were made available by provincial Governments, by the Canadian Wheat Board and by the federal Government, a very rich program for the railroads.

This only brings attention to the significance of the whole problem we face and which we are addressing here today, namely, that of the floor price of grain.

I want to return to a subject I alluded to earlier. It is significant to the whole agricultural program and to the business of growing wheat particularly. I am speaking of the international marketplace. If it has ever been important to have an international wheat agreement, it is today. We are facing the time when subsidies by governments around the world will cause farmers problems. I want to suggest to the Government and to the Ministers in charge, and I made mention of this to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in a question, that because of the lack of representation in the House there was not a clear understanding of the situation existing in the wheat growing areas of western Canada. The Prime Minister made the statement that we did not represent western Canada, that the Liberals represented western Canada. I think that statement could be challenged to some extent. However, I certainly challenge the Government to look at the facts and to look at the statement put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kindersley-Lloydminster that we should examine the floor price to see if it would not be fair to adopt the motion put forward. This would give farmers a base to work from and a guaranteed price of $7 a bushel upon which they could depend and which would be reasonable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 24(2), it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings.

CRIMINAL CODE
CANADA EVIDENCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING COMPUTER CRIME

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe) moved that Bill C-667, to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act in respect of computer crime be read the second time and be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Members of the House who had the opportunity to read the decision recently issued by the CRTC on the issue of content quotas in broadcasting will have noted the dissenting opinion given by Commissioners Grace and Gagnon. In that dissenting opinion, those two Commissioners pointed out that they felt the CRTC had not kept grips on modern technology in its attempt to apply the law.

That is just one instance where the law as it stands today has been bypassed by modern technology. There are many others. The whole of the communications field is an area where technology is moving very fast. Often statute law has not kept pace. Indeed, you would find, if you were to discuss the matter with Members of Parliament, that knowledge of the issues is not very deep, that an understanding of the implications of the direction in which we are moving often is not very great. The Government's ability to make up its own mind as to the direction in which we should be going to ensure the maximum benefits from new technology and in order to ensure that we do not run into problems as new technologies develop is very much handicapped at the present time.

What we find is that in instance after instance the Government defers taking decisions and leaves Canadians in a position where they are unprotected and where the law is simply not adequate to deal with advances in new technology. What we find is that Government is not good at anticipating new problems coming along and putting legislation in place in a moment of calm when people are able to debate dispassionately a situation that may occur in the future. What generally happens is that after a crisis occurs or after there is an emergency which generates a good deal of public attention we find that the Government overreacts and brings in legislation that is far too sweeping and Draconian as a result of the temporary conditions created.

The recent fiasco over Crown Trust is a case in point. It took a threat to the security of the holdings of people who have investments in Canadian trust companies as well as considerable public concern before the Government was prepared to make amendments to improve the security for those people with investments in those companies. If we had recognized the potential problems that would exist, we would have served Canadians much better.

Nowhere is this problem more acute than in the field of computer crime. We have a situation where the law as it stands in Canada today is simply inadequate, as it is in the United States. Technology has simply rendered the Criminal Code irrelevant. Cases have already been demonstrated in the courts that the law as it stands today is simply not up to scratch with modern technology.

It is essential that Parliament act before it is too late, and there are more serious incidents which could jeopardize the security of Canadians in terms of personal privacy or which could result in the loss of proprietary rights of individuals which could cost literally millions of dollars to Canadian businesses and individuals. That is why I think it is essential for us to act today and do so in a moment of calm and with deliberation. I think it is essential that the Government itself be prepared to allow the Bill to go to second reading, to let it go to committee, to let witnesses who are expert in this field and are concerned with the whole field of computer crime be called. Let Parliament itself hold these hearings so that a consensus can be developed within Parliament and within the community that deals with computers as to what the best course of action is to take. The Government can then introduce its own legislation consistent with the recommendations of Parliament, and let us pass it speedily. The stalling must stop. The indecision must stop. The onus is on Parliament to act today.

To put things in some perspective, some experts have estimated that losses due to computer crime are as high as $20 million a year in Canada and $5 billion in the United States. In 1981, it was estimated that approximately one out of every ten EBP installations was subjected to computer crime.

An example of the vulnerability of computer systems is the Data Encryption Standard which is used to code and scramble confidential data in the United States. The DES is the only technique that has the approval of the National Security Agency, and yet, ever since its development in the early 1970s, experts have been arguing that its codes can be broken by anyone familiar enough with computers who was willing to take the time to devise the right program. To put the complexity of this program into perspective, let us describe it. The DES program involves scrambling all the pulses of a digital electronic message 16 times, transcribing this to the receiver, who must reverse the 16 scrambles. This is the type of sophisticated coding that experts say can be broken.

For Canadian businesses and Government, the computer has come to play a central role, and within the years to come its predominance will only increase. An ever increasing number of employees will have access to computer terminals accompanied by a growing understanding of their complexities. With the world of teleshopping, telebanking, and so on, advancing closer to our living rooms, and with the use of personal computers dramatically on the rise, even the strongest critics of computer crime legislation must agree that the computer will democratize white collar crime. Well within our lifetimes, school-age children will be capable of operating sophisticated computer programs and equipment. Electronic data processors will be no more novel to them than telephones and televisions are to us in the House of Commons today. Accompanying this familiarity and universality of computers will be a growing potential for computer abuse. That is why it is important that we act now to consider legislation to deal with this abuse.

A good illustration of this is the great Dalton School mystery where a number of Grade eight students from a New York private school attempted to tap into 21 Canada data systems, destroying files of at least two firms. Among the firms attacked, successfully or unsuccessfully, were Bell Canada, Canada Cement, Cable Share Inc., Honeywell, several universities and two federal Government data banks with dial-in access to the data banks. On May 9, 1980, as reported at page 888 of Hansard, I questioned the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Johnston) about this matter. At that time, he stated his intention to:

—recommend to the Minister of Justice that amendments to the Criminal Code be considered for the purpose of making it clear that any such theft would be a crime under the Criminal Code.

Obviously some Members of the Government recognize the need to close the loopholes in criminal legislation so that there will be legal recourse against this type of crime. Unfortunately, they seem incapable of acting on their intentions.

On February 1, 1979, I asked another question of the President of the Treasury Board when Professor Eric Manning of the University of Waterloo, and an expert in this field, was present in the gallery. Professor Manning had warned that the Government's safeguards on the networking of computers are so lax that massive invasions of personal privacy would become possible. Perhaps if the Government had taken action then, when the problem of computer theft and unauthorized access became apparent, situations like the Dalton School mystery could have been avoided.

What is most striking about the Dalton School incident is that a group of Grade eight students, operating with a small micro computer in New York City, was able to use the telephone system to break into data banks here in Canada. When this sort of incident occurs, a great deal of discussion takes place about the fact that these children must be computer geniuses. They are not. They were run of the mill students who had no particular expertise that other students did not have. Most important, they were grade eight students.

If data bases here in Canada are vulnerable to that sort of intrusion from grade eight students, then it is time for us to recognize that we have a very serious problem and the Government must act on it.

I want to elaborate briefly on the areas where I believe current federal legislation fails to protect individuals and organizations from computer abuse. Here the distinction between computers as the object of abuse and computers as an instrument of abuse becomes useful. Where the computer is used as the instrument of crime, there have been successful prosecutions under various provisions of the Criminal Code. As it stands today, it is against the law to commit fraud, to transfer money from someone else's bank account to your own. That can be prosecuted under the Criminal Code as it exists today. There have been a number of instances such as that where prosecutions have been successful. There is concern over how the law applies in the present situation when it comes to the introduction of evidence into the courts and whether it is possible to prove that an offence had taken place and that the individual who was accused was the perpetrator of the offence.

I will say again that there is agreement that the law as it stands today for dealing with fraud or with the computer as an instrument of abuse is generally adequate, with the exemption of law relating to evidence as it stands today. It appears there is serious doubt as to whether it is possible to introduce the sort of evidence that is necessary to prove the crime. Unfortunately, the proof for some instrumentality cases is difficult to obtain. Since the Ontario Court of Appeal held in Regina v. McMullen in 1979 that computer print-outs were only admissible as evidence if they could be proven to be true copies of the original record, a heavy burden has been placed on the prosecution.

In 1981, the evidence task force, established by the federal Justice Department, proposed changes to the Canada Evidence Act which would require a person attempting to enter a document as evidence to prove, first, that the data upon which the print-out is based are of a type regularly supplied to the computer in the regular activities of the business; second, that the entries upon which the print-out is based were made in the regular course of business; and finally, that the computer program used in producing the print-out reliably and accurately processes the data in the data base.

One problem with this approach is that a computer print-out would still be treated differently from an ordinary manual record, in spite of the fact that these print-outs are not copies of business records but are the original business documents. Often, no other records except the original computer print-out are kept.

Since it appears that existing legislation is sufficient to charge criminals who use a computer as an instrument of a crime, an amendment to the Canada Evidence Act such as the one I have introduced could close any remaining loophole that might allow perpetrators of crimes of this variety to get off. In effect, the amendment would allow computer print-outs to be treated in evidence as originals.

Where the computer is the object of abuse, more serious problems arise because some forms of conduct—like the theft of ideas, software, or computer time—are simply not dealt with in the Criminal Code. These intangibles are not normally considered property in the legal sense. Other crimes like vandalism of hardware or the stealing of computer chips can clearly be prosecuted as criminal offences since something tangible is involved.

Consider the case where a firm has spent millions of dollars on research and development of a new high-tech item. Suppose someone without authority gains access to the computer system and obtains this valuable data. The thief may copy the information or he might steal it outright, leaving no information at all. As things stand now, it would be extremely difficult to prosecute him. Depending upon how the thief obtained the access code and entered the room containing the computer terminal, he might be convicted on a lesser offence, but he is unlikely to be convicted of theft of information.

Last summer, an individual went to court on charges of counselling an employee of a hotel to commit theft, fraud and mischief. The Crown alleged that he had approached the employee last year and offered him money in return for the names, addresses and telephone numbers of the hotel employees in connection with a union organizing drive. The information was contained on a computer print-out to which only senior executives of the hotel had access. In the fall, Mr. Justice Krever concluded that "confidential information is not property for the purpose of the law of theft in Canada". Consequently, currently under our Criminal Code, deprivation must occur in order for a theft to have been committed. Judge Krever stated that, while he had no trouble attributing a notional value to the confidential information, there was no suggestion in this case that the hotel would have ever sold the information. Therefore, they had not been deprived of anything. The accused was found not guilty on all charges.

Another situation for which there is no clear-cut legal sanction is the unauthorized acquisition of computer software. Again, because a program is really nothing more than a set of coded instructions that, when introduced to a computer, processes information, the law does not recognize programs as property which can be stolen. Indeed, many managers and programmers in the computer industries swap programs so regularly that any legal attempt to combat software piracy would be very difficult. This problem has led some to advocate that the best form of protection is for companies to beef up their own security techniques by introducing protective codes.

Another alternative based on self-help is an attempt to bind those with whom one deals under agreements to treat software packages as trade secrets. This option would give an owner recourse in contract against unauthorized disclosures by customers and employees, but does not address the problem of how to deal with parties beyond the limits of the agreement. On the other hand, software is very expensive and shows little sign of falling in price. If software innovation is to continue, I believe some form of legal protection is needed.

The third situation for which no legal recourse appears to exist is the unauthorized use of computer time and services. In the often-quoted Alberta case, Regina v. McLaughlin (1979), two students and part-time employees gained access to a computer without authorization, examined some university data, interfered with the input of data, and acquired confidential passwords of other users. The three were charged with theft of telecommunications services under Section 287 of the Criminal Code. McLaughlin's conviction under this section was subsequently overturned by the Alberta Court of Appeal which found that a computer system was not a telecommunications facility.

Their decision was upheld by the Supreme Court of Canada in July of 1980. In that decision, Mr. Justice Estey stated:

> Had Parliament intended to associate penal consequence with the unauthorized operation of a computer, it no doubt would have done so in a section of the Criminal Code or other penal statutes in which the term which is now so permanently embedded in our language is employed.

One of the other students involved was convicted under the mischief provisions of the Criminal Code because a computer shutdown or crash resulted from his unauthorized tampering. It is important to realize, however, that for the mischief provisions to apply, there must be obstruction and interruption of, or interference with, the operation of property. If the crime had been committed without causing the crash or some other tangible damage, the conviction would likely not have been upheld.

Similarly, the theft provision of the Code requires that exclusive possession must be taken of that which is stolen for "theft" to have occurred. If a program is stolen by terminal access, the "original" can remain in possession of the owner and the thief does not acquire exclusive possession. In this way the owner is not deprived "temporarily or absolutely" of his property.

The Department of Justice has been examining the issue of computer crime for quite a number of years now. Every so often we are told that legislation will be introduced "within the next few months". In October of 1980, the Justice Minister announced the Government would be introducing legislation prohibiting the theft of computer time and services, as well as the unauthorized alteration or erasure of computer data. Little more was heard at that time on the subject.

In June of 1982, after I began to circulate my draft Bill among industry officials, academics, and other interested people, the Department of Justice again revealed that they were studying the area of computer crime and would be introducing a number of amendments in their omnibus Criminal Code Bill relating to the problem.

At that time, officials of the Department indicated it would be October before the Bill would see the light of day in this House. October has since come and gone. The current Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) has recently informed me that he will be introducing a criminal law amendment Bill sometime during the next session of Parliament. Mr. Speaker, if the length of the session of Parliament to date is any indication, no one knows when action will be taken to deal with this very serious problem.

It appears that one of the difficulties that the Department of Justice is encountering is owing to their hesitation to apply ancient property rights to modern information sources. To define information as property raises the fundamental issue of whether or not information should be treated as a protected resource. While I agree that there is a definite need to maintain a balance between the producers of information and the necessity of having information flow freely in society, I believe that theft of information must be dealt with by criminal law.

The importance of the information industry is growing very rapidly in Canada. To ensure that society can take advantage of the benefits of computer technology, it does not seem unreasonable to expect the law to provide producers of information with at least a minimum of legal protection from computer abuse. These companies will be reluctant to invest time and money in research and development if the results of their efforts can be stolen without recourse.

Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) because the Bill that I am introducing today is, to a very great extent, a refinement of legislation that was introduced by him to deal with a situation similar to the McLaughlin case. It is a refinement as well of what appears to be the Government's approach to this particular issue. What I have done is to opt for the ad hoc approach by proposing selective amendments to two acts, the Canada Evidence Act and the Criminal Code.

In general, my Bill proposes three things: first, an amendment to the Canada Evidence Act that would permit computer printouts to be treated in evidence as original documents; second, an amendment ensuring that the theft of computer software and computer data be considered a crime under the Criminal Code; and third, new provisions making misuse, alteration, damage, manipulation, or destruction of computer software or data by unauthorized personnel punishable under the mischief section of the Code.

I will try to conclude my remarks as quickly as possible, Mr. Speaker.

It is my hope that these proposed amendments will, if eventually passed, close the remaining loopholes in the Criminal Code, as well as ensure that people who commit computer crimes in the future are readily prosecuted in accordance with similar rules of evidence in other cases.

As I stated at the outset, we have many instances where technology has vastly outstripped the ability of the law to keep pace with changes. The rights of Canadians are very much in jeopardy here if we do not act today. I think it is essential that the Government not delay any further, and it is essential that it does not defer decisions. I think it is important that Canadians who have an interest in this particular field be given the opportunity to come before a parliamentary committee to state their point of view and to ensure that that is considered before legislation is brought down by the Government. Allowing this Bill to go to committee today would fulfill that purpose. It would also pave the way for the Government to introduce its own legislation and for it to act quickly before there is a serious problem arising from the Government's negligence.

Mr. Al MacBain (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan), if he were here this afternoon, would want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) for the work he has put into the suggested amendments to the Criminal Code and to the Canada Evidence Act, and for the very thoughtful presentation to which I listened with interest this afternoon. Having said that, I know the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe is concerned about the serious consequences that a poorly drafted or ill thought out Bill could have for individual freedom, the protection of confidential information and the free exchange of information and ideas.

The Hon. Member maintains that his Bill provides a balance, but I question whether that balance is present in the proposed Bill.

Western technological society, having passed through an agricultural and industrial society, is now evolving into a post-industrial society whose basic economy is information based. Information is rapidly taking prominence over raw muscle, power and energy. It is estimated that about one half of Canada's Gross National Product and more than half of the employment of its citizens is related to the production, processing, storage and use of information. This is according to Grant R. Hammond in his article in the 27 McGill Law Journal (1981) at page 48.

There will be two critical challenges to Canadian society in respect of information. The first relates to the ability to devise new legal, economic and social arrangements that will ensure both the creation and the effective and profitable utilization of new information and technology. The second challenges the liberal society to protect its basic political and human values from unwise applications or withdrawals and restrictions of that new knowledge. The fundamental issue is whether information should be treated as a proprietary commodity or as a resource in society or, if both, in what circumstances should the emphasis be, one or the other?

• (1740)

The Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe argues that he has maintained a balance as I referred to above, yet looking at his proposal, I see little in the way of balance, but rather a choice of one of a number of competing options. This choice is to treat information as property. I agree that the law must provide producers of information with legal protection. Producers and creators of information, new ideas, technologies, etc. may be reluctant to invest time and money in research and development if the results of their efforts can be freely appropriated by others. The Hon. Member made this point, and I agree with him. However, is the institution of property as defined in Section 2 of the Criminal Code, which the Hon. Member proposes to amend and which has a scope encompassing the entire Criminal Code, the best vehicle for assessing the challenges that I spoke of earlier?

Bill C-667 does not address the issue of circumstances in which the emphasis should be on the property approach as opposed to the resource approach. It wholeheartedly and solely adopts the property approach as an absolute concept. I am not saying that the institution of property may not be an appropriate vehicle. In some circumstances it may. However, it is difficult to conceive that all information in a computer could be property. Some of it may be knowledge that is already public, known and possessed by many in their own minds. Should it automatically become someone's property merely because he puts it into his computer? Why is it not property when it is in my head or in my own filing cabinet? How can it be property and thereby give the owner of the computer the exclusive right to possess it if the information is also possessed in the minds of half the population of Canada?

What if someone else independently creates the same information? Can it be said that this person has no right to possess or use the information so created? What if I access a computer without authority to check to see that personal information concerning myself which I have voluntarily given is correct? Have I committed theft of my own personal data? Bill C-667 might make that a crime. I am not sure. Clearly more study is required in this area.

Why is it only computer information that is proposed to be protected and not other types of non-computer information? What about information stored in filing cabinets, for example? What if someone misappropriates that information without taking the physical file? That does not seem to be addressed. The question is, should it be? Should all types of information be protected or only certain types, such as those to which reasonable efforts are made to maintain its confidentiality?

Maybe the inherent nature or quality of the information is a more crucial criterion than the manner in which it is stored, that is, in a computer or in a filing cabinet. Maybe property concepts are not appropriate for all types of information. This Bill proposes to protect only and all computer information and also to protect it regardless of its nature.

These are just a few of the conceptual difficulties and questions I see which the Bill inadequately addresses in its present form. I say this not in criticism of the efforts of the Hon. Member. His efforts in attempting to tackle this subject are laudable. However, as will become more clear as I proceed, the issues are complex and transcend the issues addressed in this Bill. A more extensive and co-ordinated approach may well be needed.

I know that the Hon. Member has spoken of his concern for the economic necessity of having information flow freely in society. However, I question whether, in fact, by treating all computer information as property, this may create information monopolies which might hinder a free flow of ideas. Does society wish to attach exclusivity to something in a way which it may consider to be publicly useful simply because someone stores the information or idea in a computer?

The statutory monopolies of copyright, patents and trademark laws are based on proprietary concepts of control. If certain conditions are met, the holder of a copyright patent has the right to use that which is copyrighted or patented. However, even here the law has seen the need for a balance and has not granted absolute proprietary rights to copyrighted or patented information or technology.

The monopolies are limited by time, permit use by others for a fee or are lost if they are not used by the holder. Yet Bill C-667 proposes to grant absolute proprietary rights in the criminal law to entities to which even the civil law of property does not grant an absolute proprietary status.

Clearly there is a dilemma between, on one hand, the protection of certain types of information—I say certain because it may not be all types—and, on the other, the need for a free flow of information and ideas. A scholar in this area, Professor R. Grant Hammond, described the two poles of the dilemma as follows:

> In the absence of a system of property rights to information, a market economy will probably not produce the optimal output of information. There is no point in encouraging free-rider behaviour: X has no incentive to incur costs in producting something Y then may use at no cost to himself. Thus, if a society does wish to encourage innovation and the generation of an optimal information stock, one functional vehicle it might imply could be an extended system of "private" property rights. But if that approach is adopted, a dilemma is created. There should then not only be a concern about the stock of information, but also about what happens to it. Once a fee or cost of some kind is placed on the use of information to encourage creativity, as it is through the patent and copyright systems, two very real difficulties arise. First, there may be under-usage of information, since the optimal price for a public good is zero. Second, denial of access to information in an information-based economy is clearly an affront to the most fundamental kind of rights: It is nothing less than a form of intellectual and economic subjugation. The potentiality of this situation has not gone unnoticed by Third World countries.
> It is entirely possible that Western legal systems have been much too concerned with the creation of a sufficient stock of information and too little concerned with usage and access—

He continues:

> It seems clear that sound policy in the field of information creation and dissemination should recognize the dilemma which has been described. The thrust of legal and economic ordering should be to acknowledge that it is better to have the information in the first place than not to have it at all. It has already been recognized in the areas of patent and copyright law that informational and innovational activity are useful to the innovator and creator and, in the long term, to the public. Further, disclosure and efficient usage of this stock of information should be encouraged. This policy is grounded partly in societal concerns: There is a very real danger that an information underclass will be created because of the over-zealous use of restrictive property theories. There are also sound economic reasons to support this policy: Research and information generation is expensive; duplication of effort is wasteful; excessive secrecy promotes espionage, and serious diversion of effort occurs every day in industry to find out what competitors are doing.

• (1750)

Thus, should information be considered as a private good, a proprietary commodity, or as a public good, a resource? If both, in what circumstances should the emphasis be on one or the other? These are fundamental questions.

Possibly the criminal law is not the best method to completely resolve the dilemma. Maybe the criminal law is appropriate in some circumstances, but with respect to others, it may not be. Maybe the flexibility of the civil law is more appropriate in some circumstances, and in others, it may not be appropriate. Is there an adequate civil law framework, federal or provincial, which is able to address these issues?

Criminal sanctions and deterrents can only go so far. Are there civil means to, in effect, strip a wrongdoer of any gains made through the misappropriation of someone else's work product? What is the extent of federal protection through the laws of patents, trademarks, copyrights and certain provisions of the anti-combines law? What is the extent of protection in provincial statutes, such as privacy statutes, and so on? Is there in existence an integrated approach or a patchwork quilt? Can we rationally make criminal laws without knowing how they will interact with the civil law in this area? Might not an analysis of how the civil law protects ideas and information reveal approaches which could provide a basis for legal techniques which might be adopted in the criminal law, if the criminal law were to be extended? For example, how successful has the civil law been in attempting to treat information as property? Have better and more successful legal techniques been used in this area of the law? Could these techniques be implemented within a criminal law framework at all? Could an integrated combination of both civil and criminal approaches be the best and most appropriate response to this problem?

Other countries are now beginning to realize the folly of having moved in one direction with respect to information protection without keeping an eye on the other parts of the system. Should we repeat the mistakes of others? Or should we do it right? Canada is attempting to encourage the expansion of innovation and information related industries and services. It is a new technology. There is a new scientific revolution occurring, that of information theory, whose effects may touch not only the economic realm but a vast web of socio-economic relations as well. In an attempt to keep pace with this shift from an industrial world to a new post-industrial, information-based world, our legal thinking in terms of legal institutions and remedies may also need to change. Legal concepts based on an old industrial age society may be inappropriate for a new economic age and its technology. New legal institutions and concepts may have to be developed. For example, new concepts such as the privacy law and access to information laws have been established in recent years, wherein the past such concepts, let alone actual laws, did not exist. Likewise, new criminal law concepts may be needed, rather than attempting to guide the future with tools of a bygone era. We are faced with a challenge. Let us do it right.

I think it is clear that the issues involved go beyond that of computers, computer abuse and criminal law. Criminal laws may need to be enacted to address the abuses perpetrated to or with computers and their related entities. However, because of the information implications, broader questions must also be asked and an attempt made to answer them within the entire framework of society. We should not juggle a part of an intricately woven and inter-connected economic system without knowing the effects which it may have on other parts of the system, existing institutions and law.

Of course, I am not saying that the Government should not examine this area carefully with a view to introducing a Bill containing amendments addressing the problems of abuse of computer systems. However, realizing the broader implications and the need for integration and consistency, we must also study aspects of the broader question: the use, misuse and abuse of information.

Many American experts in the field of computers are of the opinion that their computer crime statutes have only dealt with half of the issues. We in Canada have an opportunity to address all the issues in a co-ordinated and comprehensive manner. Let us not rush to enact legislation which does not deal with all of the relevant issues. Hon. Members of this House should have the benefit of the most complete information available. In addition to the study just mentioned, the Canadian Government has been consulting with experts in this field, not only in Canada and the United States, but also it has had contact with experts in Europe. Of course, consultations with Canadian associations involved in the computer and information industries are continuing. Let us not proceed prematurely with this Bill. Let us wait, but only for a short time, until this accumulation of knowledge and experience is complete. Let us not consider this Bill now but rather consider its proposals in conjunction with the work previously mentioned.

In conclusion, I do want to thank the Hon. Member for the Bill which he has proposed to the House this afternoon, and for his thoughtful presentation.

Mr. Althouse: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Since we have not been able to complete the hour for this part of the debate, I would move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), under Standing Order 8(4)(a), that the debate continue so that we can complete the hour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): May the Chair please have the motion in writing.

Pursuant to Standing Order 8(4)(a), Mr. Althouse, seconded by Mr. Anguish, moved:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the purpose of—

The Hon. Member for Welland (Mr. Parent) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to call quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. When the Speaker puts a question to the House, the procedure should not be interrupted. The motion continues:

—continuing consideration of Bill C-667, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act in respect of computer crime, on the second reading stage.

Will those Hon. Members who object to the motion please rise in their places?

And fewer than 25 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The motion is deemed to have been adopted.

• (1800)

Mr. Doug Anguish (The Battlefords-Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I believe the seconder of the motion was the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky), not myself.

I find some difficulty understanding why the Liberal Party would not want the New Democratic Party's position on the record concerning this very important Private Members' Bill, Bill C-667, introduced by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty). It raises a very interesting question in an area which has not been given a great deal of attention by this federal Government. It is an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act in respect of computer crime.

This is an area, Mr. Speaker, where technology has gone far in advance of legislation in Canada. We in the NDP agree with the Bill in that there is a need to update the laws as they relate to computers and the information technology which exists today. Today in Canada we have very little ability to prosecute people who participate in what I think Members of both Opposition Parties would view as criminal activity. I commend the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe for bringing in this Private Member's Bill because it points out a need. I also agree to some extent with the speaker from the Government who said that the Bill does not go far enough. I think there are many areas not covered here, and there are a few basic points which I would like to bring out in the few moments I have.

The proposed legislation would include unauthorized copying of computer information as a form of theft. The Criminal Code definition of property would also be extended expressly to include computer data and software. Other new provisions would make misuse, alteration or destruction of computer programs or information by unauthorized personnel an offence punishable under the mischief section of the Criminal Code. The Canada Evidence Act would be amended so as to permit computer print-outs to be treated as original documents for use as evidence in the courts.

Now, I know Private Members' Bills very rarely pass, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that if this Bill does not pass this afternoon, the Government will take very serious account of the shortcomings of the legislation in place in dealing with the whole area of computer technology and abuses in that area. The Hon. Member who introduced the Bill gave a number of examples of great abuses of the system where people go into other data banks, take out information, and the owner of the information has no recourse.

• (1805)

For example, if someone was to go in and destroy a computer disk or computer tape, he could not be prosecuted for the destruction of information, he could only be prosecuted for the actual physical destruction of the tape or disk. I think this is very wrong. In this day and age information is power; it creates wealth for the companies or individuals who assemble the information. That translates into a lot of dollars being involved in computer crime. The Attorneys General of some Provinces estimate there will be some 1,700 cases of computer abuse in Canada this year, and the loss to computer criminals is estimated to be running at some $100 million in North America alone.

This brings up a very interesting question as to who has the right to information and how it should be used. I think that not only provisions under the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act should be looked at, but I also think that copyright legislation should be looked at as well. One who researches and creates information should have access to copyrights, just as an author would have to a book he has written. It is questionable whether anyone who collects, stores and possibly retrieves information should have a proprietary interest in it, or whether it should actually be a public resource. I think that deserves examination by the House of Commons.

Some quite serious crimes have been committed involving computers. There is the case of a bank employee in the United States who transferred some $10.2 million to a Swiss bank account in a matter of a few minutes. This shows that people with an expert knowledge of computers are able to commit fraud by abusing the system anywhere in the world. However, the particular problem here in Canada should be dealt with so that these people can be prosecuted by due process, and there should be legislation in effect to protect people who have invested a lot of money in their computer programs. They should not have to put up with people who have the knowledge and technology enabling them to steal through the use of computers. There are also the employees of firms with access to the computer system. If their employer or the individual who owns the computer aggravates them, they can foul up the system and cause great expense to the individual or company who owns the computer.

I do not want to prolong this debate, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say in conclusion that computer technology and the wrongdoings which go with it are running way ahead of the law. I think it is now time, either by way of this Private Member's Bill as a beginning, or by Government legislation in the very near future, that the law actually caught up with the state of the art in computer technology.

• (1810)

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words about Bill C-667 and to commend the Hon. Member for bringing it before the House.

In his remarks the Hon. Member who just spoke—or who read what the Government is supposed to be doing—raised several questions about the legislation, and that is fine. It is one of the purposes of a careful analysis of legislation. I submit, however, that all his questions could be answered adequately in committee.

The subject matter of this Bill is long overdue for debate. The thefts that are taking place in the computer world should not be permitted. It is not fair to prosecute someone for stealing a loaf of bread because he is hungry, and not to amend the Criminal Code so that those who steal thousands of dollars by use of a computer cannot be prosecuted. The Department of Justice has been working on this for months and months. Surely it is not beyond the capacity of legal officers in that Department to bring in a Bill that satisfies the demands of modern society.

The points raised by the Member who spoke for the Government are not arguments against sending the Bill to committee, Mr. Speaker, but, rather, are arguments for sending it there.

I know that the time for debate on this Bill has been extended to 6.18 p.m. I should like to submit that when someone deliberately devises a way of stealing by computer, it causes worry for people who have money in a bank, for instance, where computers are used. Indeed, computers are being used to guard the secrets of our lives, and if someone has access to them because he has found a key to the formula and uses it, that is theft.

Some companies have spent thousands and thousands of dollars to find oil in various parts of Canada and the information is all on computer. Now, someone else can get that information scotfree if they can tune in to the right channel. That is theft, Mr. Speaker, and should be treated as such. If my credit card is stolen the loss is probably about 15 cents, but that card can be used to make purchases worth hundreds of dollars. Liability for the charges incurred was changed in that case, and the same should be done with computers. The trouble is not just with stealing the formula for the computer; the value of the information secured by that means or the money obtained from a bank by the same means is a major consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the Bill be referred to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I should have that motion in writing.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that the motion that the Bill be referred had already been made and seconded by someone on the other side.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the point is well taken. The motion has been put. I move that the question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. I apologize to Hon. Members. I was having consultations with the Table officers when the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) was recognized on a point of order. Perhaps he would make his point again for the benefit of the Chair.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think my point has been agreed to by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). When the Bill was introduced at the beginning of Private Members' Hour, a motion was put by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) that the matter be referred to the Standing Committee. I think that motion has already been made. I was rising to speak on the Bill.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I believe that you have a copy of the motion by now that was moved by my colleague. His motion was that the question be now put.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) rising on the same point of order?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Yes, Mr. Speaker. A few moments ago the House agreed to a motion to extend the hour of adjournment in order to complete the hour of debate on this Private Member's Bill. The House having agreed to that, I find it a little difficult to understand how, before that hour expired and when another Member was rising to speak on the Bill, we can now consider a motion to adjourn before that hour expires. We had already agreed to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. The motion I have in my hand is quite in order and I shall put it to the House.

Moved by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley):

That the question be now put.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker—

• (1815)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen).

An Hon. Member: It is a debatable motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I see a number of Members rising. The motion is debatable; I should inform Hon. Members of that. For this reason I recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure which particular rule we are running afoul of at the present time. I understand that it was suggested by the Hon. Member for Bow River that the time slotted for Private Members' Hour had started at 5.18 p.m. and would go 6.18 p.m. It strikes me that the time for Private Members' Business is over. Perhaps you could rule on that aspect before I make further comments. I am first trying to find out if we are arguing at cross-purposes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Is the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe rising on the point raised by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton?

Mr. Beatty: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member's argument that Private Members' Hour has expired is tenuous at best and I think he recognizes that. The motion that was moved and agreed to by the House was to extend the sitting of the House until the conclusion of the business before it. The clock cannot run out on a point of order. There is no clock on a point of order. We are currently discussing a point of order on the question that was put prior to 6.18 p.m. by my colleague, namely that the motion be now put. There is no question of the Private Members' Hour having expired on a point of order that was moved to run the clock out on that motion.

I submit that the appropriate step to be taken at this time would be to put the motion and to have a vote on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I will recognize Hon. Members who wish to contribute to the point of order. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacBain).

• (1820)

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the House as now constituted does not have the authority to extend Private Members' Hour. It may be that the House is still in session, but I am submitting that the House does not have the right to extend Private Members' Hour without consent, and that consent is not forthcoming.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, at the time you were seized of the motion to put the question immediately and related it to the House, as long as it was before the time limit expired and the hours were extended, surely that is the point of time in question. If the Chair is seized of it before the time expires, surely it is the duty of the Chair to call the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Perhaps the Chair could clarify a number of points which have been made in the course of this exchange. The motion presented by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was in order, and under Standing Order 36(1)(b) that is a motion concerning the previous question. I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fifth edition, page 157, Citation 452 which reads:

The previous question is moved when the original question is under debate in order to force a direct vote on it, thereby preventing any amendments to the original question to be proposed. The form of the motion is "That the question be now put." Once it is proposed, the debate may be continued on the original question.

It was in accordance with this precedent that the Chair recognized the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen), so the debate continues.

Also I inform Hon. Members that the motion put earlier to extend the sitting did not contain a time limit and therefore the session continues indefinitely. I hope Hon. Members understand this. Of course the House by agreement, by unanimous consent, may want at this stage or at a later stage to show some agreement for a time of adjournment; but it is not for the Chair to suggest or impose an adjournment time on Hon. Members.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I have one more question. I am sure you are appreciating or enjoying this as much as I am. I was under the impression when I raised the question earlier that there was a conflict here. In other words, there is a rule which makes provision for the Private Members' Hour. I wonder if that would terminate Private Members' Business. It may very well be that we go on to other business, but as far as Private Members' hour is concerned, I thought the rules specifically indicated that there was a time frame within which it could not go beyond the one hour. It does not necessarily have to go an hour, but not beyond the one hour. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if you could help me on that point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I refer Hon. Members to the Permanent and Provisional Standing Orders under which we are now operating. Standing Order 8(4) reads in its entirety as follows:

(a) When the Speaker is in the chair, a Member may propose a motion, without notice, to continue a sitting through a lunch or dinner hour or beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of considering a specified item of business or a stage or stages thereof subject to the following conditions:

(i) The motion must relate to the business then being considered provided that proceedings in any Committee of the Whole—

(ii) The motion must be proposed in the hour preceding the time at which the business under consideration should be interrupted by a lunch or dinner hour, Private Members' Hour or the ordinary time of daily adjournment.

(iii) The motion shall not be subject to debate or amendment.

(b) In putting the question on such motion, the Speaker shall ask those Members who object to rise in their places. If 25 or more Members then rise, the motion shall be deemed to have been withdrawn, otherwise, the motion shall have been adopted.

The Standing Orders provide for debate of not more than one hour on Private Members' Motions or Bills. Of course it could be less; that is for the House to decide. At this stage we are subjected to the provisions of Standing Order 8(4)(a), and it is the Chair's interpretation from the guidance it has received that the debate continues until Hon. Members decide that they wish to adjourn.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not mean to stand before you were seated, but I have a point of clarification, a point of order or whatever you wish to call it. If we continue to read Beauchesne's, it indicates:

If the previous question be carried, the Speaker will immediately put the question without further debate. But, if the previous question is resolved in the negative, then the Speaker cannot put the main motion—

• (1825)

I take that to mean, as I suggested earlier, that once Mr. Speaker is seized of the motion to vote immediately, the motion must be put. If it carries, then we vote immediately; if it fails, then debate on the motion continues as the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) suggested.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, it seems you have already ruled on the very question. The Motion of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) that the question be now put is a debatable motion and, therefore, I do not see what the point of order is about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) raised a legitimate concern. I must draw his attention and that of Hon. Members to Citation 452 of Beauchesne's wherein it is indicated that once the question is proposed—and the Chair has proposed it to the House—"the debate may continue on the original question."

The point raised by the Hon. Member for Simcoe North addressed itself to debate ending on the motion. Once debate on the motion put by the Hon. Member for Bow River is complete, the House has to put the question. First we would dispose of the motion of the Hon. Member for Bow River and then the motion on second reading. That is the understanding and interpretation which the Chair gives to Citation 452.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I am not trying to be obtrusive in this matter. My earlier point was that we seem to have a conflict between two rules. Obviously I accept Mr. Speaker's ruling that when the motion was made earlier by a Member of the New Democratic Party we continue and the Chair not see the clock; that was well and good. I thought we would continue beyond the usual hour of adjournment, that is six o'clock, but there is something conflicting with that particular rule. I was under the impression there is a rule providing that Private Members' Hour shall not last more than one hour. Assuming for a moment, for the sake of debate, that I stand up and commence my address, which I am quite prepared to do, on second reading of this Bill—

• (1830)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. Perhaps the Chair has not sufficiently clarified the point raised by the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) with respect to the length of Private Members' Hour. The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is quite right. We should not go beyond a total of 60 minutes. We could have debate for less than one hour. That is not against the rules. If we go back in time, the Hon. Member for Humboldt-Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse) proposed a motion to the House which was acceptable and which was resolved affirmatively. Therefore, we do not have an adjournment time or an end to the debate on the question of second reading of Bill C-667 which is now before the House. That explains why the debate continues at this point. I hope the Chair has been sufficiently clear in the explanation so that Hon. Members appreciate what is happening. Of course, it is the first time it has happened under the provisional rules. I trust the Chair has clarified the matter to everyone's satisfaction. Again, I recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton for debate on the previous question which was proposed to the House.

Computer Crime

Hon. Bud Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am participating now in this debate on the point that Private Members' Hour, as a result of the motion made under 8(4)(a) that the Private Members' Hour be extended, technically could go on all through the night and well into tomorrow, if that is the interpretation. Therefore, there is a conflict with the rule.

Needless to say, I do appreciate the opportunity of having such a large audience on this particular and very important Bill. I can understand the Opposition Members being here because last year they were defeated nine to zip in the hockey game and probably do not want to go out and see the game that is being played this evening between the Government and the Opposition Members.

To be serious, this is a very important Bill. I think the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty) made the point that technology all too often outpaces the legislation that we need in order to cope with it and keep it on the rails, as it were. We find ourselves worrying about the intention or the meaning of a particular word. We find ourselves wondering if this is going to be inclusive enough. We find ourselves wondering if, as a result of bringing in new legislation, we may not impede communication, which was never intended by the legislation at all.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the desire of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) to speak on this matter. Without being too strict on relevancy, should the Hon. Member not direct his attention to the question of whether or not we vote immediately?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I thought you had already ruled on that. You indicated that the motion put by the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was that the question be now put. You had ruled that as long as people wanted to debate, the debate on the main motion would continue. That is the basis on which I was rising.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is quite correct. I did quote the proper citation. It is very clear that once the Speaker has proposed the motion on the previous question to the House, and I will quote the citation from Beauchesne which reads:

452(1)—the debate may continue on the original question.

This is what is happening. I appreciate the fact that Hon. Members may want to seek clarification, and I am aware of the fact they are not questioning the Chair's ruling. We are operating under new and unusual circumstances. Therefore, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton may continue.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I find the Hon. Member's remarks fascinating and, had he read the Bill, I am sure they would have been even more interesting. However, I am seeking some clarification from you, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand that the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and his motion is deemed to be out of order?

• (1835)

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Beatty: May I ask you what it is that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton is debating? Is he debating the motion of my colleague from Bow River, in which case his remarks are irrelevant, or is he debating the main motion, in which case we will have to decide how to dispose of my colleague's motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. With respect, we will dispose of the motion put by the Hon. Member for Bow River once debate on it has ceased. But what debate is all about at this stage, in view of the fact that the previous question has been put, is that debate may continue on the original question. We are dealing with the Hon. Member's motion at this time. Debate continues on the main motion. That is the interpretation Hon. Members have to reach when reading Citation 452 of Beauchesne. The motion that the question be now put is simply, I am informed, a device to prevent an amendment from being put. Therefore, debate continues on the main motion. These matters do not happen very frequently. I hope we all agree on the interpretation that I am attempting to give at this time.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am rising under the guise of a point of order to seek further clarification from you. As I understand it, the practical, realistic effect of what has happened here now is that it is impossible to talk out this Bill under these circumstances. As long as there is a Member in the House who desires to speak on this motion, he can speak on this motion. If the time comes, and I say if the time comes, when there is no longer a Member in the House who desires to speak, then the question will be put and a vote will be taken. Is that correct, and is it a realistic interpretation of the circumstances in which the House is now? If that is the situation, and if there are no Government Members on the other side with the exception of the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton who desires to speak, I wonder whether discussions and negotiations could not take place so that at the cessation of the very worthwhile contribution that we are going to hear from the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton we could have a vote on the question.

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I have spoken to the Hon. Member who proposed this Bill. I suggested to him that the subject matter of this Bill, which is one of great importance, be referred to the committee rather than the Bill itself. On behalf of the Minister, I would consent to that. If the House is agreeable, we could dispose of that matter. It would be a job well done, and we could get out of here.

• (1840)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): With due respect to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, he is injecting a new and different matter into the points of order previously raised. Does the Hon. Member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen) wish to contribute to the points just raised?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious there have been discussions taking place while I was attempting to rise and deliver my address. I have read the Bill. It is not a bad Bill but I think the subject matter is even better.

I do not know if this is in line with the rules, but I would like to suggest that we seek unanimous consent of the House to have the subject matter of the Bill referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair cannot receive suggestions and put them to the House in the manner in which the Hon. Member has presented them. The Chair can deal with formal proposals. Again, I now draw Hon. Members' attention to Standing Order 56(1) which reads:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendment of the main question, and shall be in the following words, 'That this question be now put'.

Therefore, we are now at the point where the Chair has accepted the motion from the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). It is quite in order. Under our rules and practices, debate may continue on the main motion. If, at some point in the course of the next hour, no Members rise to contribute further to the debate, the Chair will put the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Bow River to the House. At that point, depending on what happens, the Chair could then immediately put the question on the main motion.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a genuine attempt by the Parliamentary Secretary to act in good faith here. I think that all of us have a responsibility to reciprocate. As you pointed out, we are going through uncharted territory. This issue is quite new to the House because of the provisional rules.

I suspect that if the Hon. Member for Bow River were permitted to withdraw his motion, we would then be in a position where, by unanimous consent of the House, we could reach the agreement that the subject matter of my Bill be sent to committee.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I was attempting to get your attention in that regard. Once the motion has been accepted, it is the property of the House. However, I believe, with the consent of the mover and the seconder, the motion can be withdrawn. I would therefore suggest we do it that way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair needs the unanimous consent of the House, not simply that of the mover and the seconder.

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, there certainly would be unanimous consent on the part of the NDP to proceed on the suggestion that was made so that we would withdraw the original point of order and make sure that we send this subject as a reference to the committee.

• (1845)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The House will ask Hon. Members if there is unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Bow River to withdraw his motion on the previous question? Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Agreed and so ordered.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The main motion is now debatable. It is now before the House.

Mr. MacBain: Mr. Speaker, is this the correct time to move that the subject matter of Bill C-667 be referred to the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary cannot at this time make that motion because he has already spoken. However, with the unanimous consent of the House, perhaps he could be allowed to proceed with that motion.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to amend that motion and put a time limit on it so that the House could have it back in order to deal with it? Could we amend the motion by adding "report back to the House by June 30, 1983"?

Mr. Lewycky: Mr. Speaker, is there not a motion already on the floor that has to be disposed of before we attempt to bring in another motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Of course, the Chair cannot deal with another motion until we have disposed of this one.

Does the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) wish me to comment on his remarks?

Mr. Lewis: No, Mr. Speaker. I withdraw my remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I will then put the motion to the House. Moved by the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. MacBain), seconded by the Hon. Member for Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Beatty), in amendment thereto:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word 'That' and substituting the following therefor:
> Bill C-667, an Act to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act in respect of computer crime, be not now read a second time but that the Order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject-matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. MacBain) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Accordingly, the order is discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter thereof referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 6.48 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the third time and do pass.

She said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-132, which is in front of us today for a third and final reading, contains only one provision, which is to limit to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984 the Family Allowances indexation. It is not a difficult amendment to explain in terms of the Family Allowances program, but I wish to emphasize that it should be viewed in the context of the complete six and five program.

The measures announced in the budget of June, 1982, which related to the six and five program, have only one specific purpose, which is to bring down inflation to 6 per cent and to 5 per cent. That is the objective of Bill C-132. I insist on that because many distortions have been nurtured during the debate of this Bill. This means, technically, that all Family Allowances which were at $26.91 per month in December last, except in Quebec and Alberta where they vary the federal rate, will be $28.52 in 1983. Next year, most probably, if inflation remains at 5 per cent or higher, it will be $29.95. So there is an increase in each of the years, but it is less of an increase than anticipated.

There is something very deeply dishonest in not acknowledging that this Bill caps Family Allowances, but the next Bill on the Order Paper, Bill C-139, a tax Bill, increases by $50 the Child Tax Credit on top of the full indexation, to be paid to mothers this spring. Those in need, therefore, and in this case I must say perhaps more than those really in need, namely two-thirds of all the mothers in Canada, those who get a partial or total Child Tax Credit, will receive an additional full $50 to make up for the loss in indexation of Family Allowances.

This I want to make very clear. It is not written in this Bill because to achieve that we have to change another Act, the Income Tax Act. That is why this Bill deals only with one Act, as per the custom. The next Bill, Bill C-139, gives the additional special $50 to cover the relative loss of indexation for the two coming years, 1983 and 1984.

Speaking of the Child Tax Credit, I believe Hon. Members, and surely all mothers, will be interested in certain information I have just received from the National Anti-Poverty Organization, usually referred to as NAPO. NAPO is almost the only national organization still in existence which represents the lower income people of our society and, of course, many of them are women, particularly mothers. As some Hon. Members may recall, I asked the representatives of NAPO at our last meeting what the reaction of their members would be to the possibility of delivering the Child Tax Credit monthly, or four times a year, instead of annually as we do right now.

When the program was created, many professionals, especially in the field of social services, joined the ranks of many Members of the House of Commons in insisting on the Child Tax Credit, which at that time was $200 a year, being distributed on a monthly basis. Both I and the Government resisted that because it seemed to me that one of the characteristics of poverty is never being able to get out of it because of daily expenditures eroding any savings that can be made.

Once a year a big amount of money, originally $200 for one child, possibly $600 for three children, which now means close to $1,000 non-taxable, is exactly what a mother living in poverty can never reach. I was told, and one just has to read the speeches at the time in this House, that they would abuse that money. All sorts of innuendos or direct accusations, I must say, were made. They would drink it away, etc. They would waste it. But we know mothers and they have used that money for special needs in their budget. It could have been that some would say they will buy a bicycle for the child. Well, good, that is exactly what the purpose is. It is for the good, the well-being, of children in the family.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, since the Child Tax Credit is now a much bigger sum of money, almost double what it was, and since times are tougher economically, what would mothers in need now prefer? I apologize to Canadian mothers who are not at the lower end of the scale for not having asked them through a national survey, but I thought I should start with those most in need who I think are a priority amongst the priorities. I received information from NAPO, which they made public very recently, and it gives me the clear preference of families saying that they, of course, want to keep the Child Tax Credit but they want to keep it annually. They do not want, for different reasons explained to me, to see it distributed over several payments a year.

So I just want to inform Members that I will therefore not develop any plan for distributing the Child Tax Credit differently. At a later date we will see if any new need develops, but for the time being I want to confirm to all mothers that the Child Tax Credit will remain an annual payment and not be distributed monthly or every three months.

I say that, and I have to link the Child Tax Credit to the Family Allowance because it is linked in fact although not legislatively speaking, because many Members opposite—I must say this to my great disappointment because I do not accept that type of politics; I think it is really dishonest—have used unbelievable expressions in English—the speeches were all in English—saying that we were taking away food from the mouths of children, taking away the bottle of milk from children, and so on and so forth.

I will not waste my time or the time of anyone around me by listing all the stupidities and literary abuses I have heard in this House on capping the Family Allowances, but I would like to say that no one is a fool and we do see the game being played. I hope the public also sees it. We are not doing any of that.

For the first month of the year mothers received more money but a little less than anticipated. They had a loss of about $1.40 a month on the Family Allowance cheque, my Parliamentary Secretary confirms to me, and that is true. They had an increase but a relative loss for the first month of the year. But then the special increase in the Child Tax Credit will offset all of that; they will have it in their hands before the other months of the six and five program. We are therefore not taking away a penny from two-thirds of all Canadian families with children. That means all people with the lowest income and many, many people with middle-class incomes as well. All young couples who have not yet reached a higher socio-economic group will receive that benefit.

• (1115)

I have met Members of Parliament whose wives are receiving these Child Tax Credits because they have many children. I have met journalists in the same category. There are many people in this environment which I would not qualify as being in poverty. These people do receive at least a partial payment of the Child Tax Credit, because two-thirds of Canadian mothers do. If anyone should try to make the public believe, like the Conservatives in particular do, that food is taken away from the table, that is such an abuse and exaggeration that I suppose it speaks for itself. I could go on, but I do not believe it is necessary.

I want to explain, in this final stage of debate on Bill C-132, what we are attempting to do, which is to reduce inflation, not savings, as many Members have tried to say. It is easy to prove, and I have proved it in committee, because the sums saved are not that extraordinary. That was not the intention. The intention was to have a package of measures involving as many Canadians as possible to mobilize ourselves to fight inflation. It is succeeding. There is no reason not to keep our word and enforce the various pieces of legislation needed. No one can prove one way or another, as I said at the Senate committee, that this particular measure, even the complete set of Government measures regarding the six and five program, have been the cause of bringing down inflation. Nobody can prove that because economic signs are so controversial and made up of so many schools of thought. But nobody can disprove it either.

One thing is sure. We did take action. It has mobilized Canadians, there is no doubt about that, as statistics on credit cards have proven. People have started changing their consumer patterns and paying back their debts instead of living above their means. We have all done that, but now something has changed. Where this Bill fits exactly is impossible to demonstrate but it is part of a package that seems to have worked.

One thing is important, and that is the only one that counts with many mothers. A basket of food now costs less than it did last year, because inflation is being brought down. That means that mothers, despite not receiving the full indexation, will be compensated because of the increase in the value of their dollars.

That is the objective that I pursued for the common good through the programs for which I am directly responsible. There was surely a full and frank discussion of these objectives. People have been aware of the exact figures involved for months.

I will finish by saying that the success of the six and five program is crucial to the well-being of Canadians, in this particular case mothers of families, and I think that is why that objective is so easy for me to defend, despite the appearance of being unpleasant.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have several questions, which I will put one at a time. The first question to the Minister is that with this change in the law I believe revenue is being cut out for those children who are in institutional or public care. Does the Minister have any compensation plan to provide more money to those kinds of institutions?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, no. I said earlier, and that is why I did not repeat it this morning, that this Bill does not affect children receiving what is called a Special Allowance, which means children below the age of 18 who are maintained by Government institutions. None of them will be affected. They will receive the full increase in the cost of living.

• (1120)

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, why did the Minister allow Family Allowance cheques to go out with the indexing already reduced to 6 per cent when the Bill had not been passed and there was no parliamentary sanction for the action? Does she not agree that this was unethical and insulting to mothers and children as well as being illegal? Also I would like to know why this was done just for this Bill and not for the other six and five Bills as well.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, it was surely not unethical, nor was it illegal. I explained that as well, and I am sorry if I did not repeat it today. In cases like this—and this happens all the time for programs which are translated into direct cheques for people—we take the legal advice of the Department of Justice.

According to the nature of existing legislation, the answer given by Justice is one way or another. Because I am not a lawyer I cannot give the exact details which were already given in committee, but because of the drafting of existing legislation concerning seniors, we could not apply the capping before Parliament had changed the exact amount of what would have to be paid. The way the Family Allowance legislation is written, the clear advice of Justice was different and indicated that the payment could be made properly right at the start.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the Minister in her presentation this morning indicated that in relation to the six and five program as it applies to Family Allowance under the provision of Bill C-132 it cannot be supported on the grounds that the Bill has lowered the inflation rate in Canada. She indicated very clearly that she could not prove that the effect of this provision was to decrease inflation. She added, of course, that neither could it be proved that it did not add to inflation.

Is there not an onus or obligation upon her and her Government that presented this measure to the House of Commons and applied this measure to the children of Canada to stand here and say that it does reduce inflation and that is why they are putting it forward? That was the claim of the budget which announced in advance the six and five program. That was the claim of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) that this would reduce inflation. Now the Minister stands in the House of Commons and says that she does not know whether it does or not. Is that justification for this measure which is taking money out of the pockets of Canadian families, over three million Canadian families and six million Canadian children? Now she says that she does not know whether or not it is doing any good.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, the Member is playing unintelligent partisan politics. He very often does that. I do not know why he does that. He has interpreted instead of listening to what I said. I come from research; that is the training I received. I am unable to play the sort of mean game he would like me to play, and I will not. I will just repeat. What I have said is that economists will not be able to demonstrate the direct link. I believe there was one. That is why I subscribed to and supported entirely the six and five program. I could explain it in greater detail to him, but surely he is intelligent enough to grasp that.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting that whenever someone disagrees with the Minister they are partisan, but she is always objective and never partisan! The Minister tried to imply that the ill-effects of the capping of the indexation will be dealt with and that there will not be very serious ill-effects because of the extra $50 that will be given in the form of the Child Tax Credit.

• (1125)

Is it not true that the $50 extra Child Tax Credit is a one-shot affair? The capping of the indexation at six and five for the next two years will mean that if and when—and I say "if" because if the Government can change the rules once it can again—full indexation begins two years from now, the base from which the indexing of Family Allowance benefits will start then will be substantially lower than it would have been without capping. Beginning from that lower base, the amount paid in Family Allowances every month for the entire period the mother is entitled to receive the Family Allowance for her children over the period of 16 or 18 years will be very much less than it would have been if there had been no indexation, despite the $50 Child Tax Credit.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, concerning the $50 first, that sum will be given in one sum through this spring's income tax returns. But it does amount to the total needed, probably a little more, over the two years 1983 and 1984, to cover the loss in indexation. In other words, mothers will have it beforehand in the family budget. That is the reason. It is fiscally distributed over two years as an expense. It is split over two years as an expense, I think, but that is an accounting procedure and does not affect the mothers' cheques.

As for the second more basic question, the fact stated by the Hon. Member is correct. We said that, but not in the dimension he expresses. If indexation compared to real inflation is reduced, the base will be reduced slightly. The Hon. Member said "enormously" and he gives the subsequent 18 or 20 years as a reference, but he is forgetting something. He and his party always use seven-month-old figures instead of the more recent figures reflecting inflation.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you publish the new figures, then?

Miss Bégin: When we introduced that measure seven months ago, we thought inflation would be around 11 per cent. Therefore, mothers receiving only 6 per cent indexation would lose about 5 per cent. But they are not losing more than 1.2 per cent, or something in that vicinity, because in that seven months inflation came down a great deal.

A few minutes ago I was a witness at a Senate committee hearing regarding seniors, so I have the figure of anticipated inflation which should apply to this Bill as well. I think it was for the fall of 1984. The figure was below 5 per cent. In fact, the figure I quoted was 4.8 per cent. Therefore, there is no need to say that mothers will lose a penny. They will receive full indexation next year. That has to be verified monthly according to the variations in inflation. Right now inflation is coming down. Therefore, a loss in the base exists, but it is very slight because inflation has already declined. There is a loss in the base but a very small one. Next year it is possible not one penny will be lost.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to ask the Minister a couple more questions but I guess there is no value in asking short questions because we move on to longer ones and then we do not have a second round. We can all learn from that.

• (1130)

The Minister described the Opposition in such words as "dishonourable" and "unbelievable". I suggest to Canadians watching today that by the time the debate is over they can judge for themselves who is trying to be dishonest and who is trying to be unbelievable.

When you cut through this legislation and the history of the Liberal Party in the last six years, Mr. Speaker, you come to an inescapable conclusion. The economic support provided by the Government of Canada to families through the tax system, the Child Tax Credit, the income tax deduction and the Family Allowance, has been shifted away from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

As I stand here today contemplating the fact that the Liberal Party will pass this legislation later this day and that they have already acted as though it were passed—whether it is legal or illegal we will probably never discover—I know with a sense of certainty that about 60 per cent of the support for families will be coming from the Minister of Finance. The legislation which affects that will be examined by the economic committee of this House, and those Members who serve on the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs will only be examining 40 per cent of that support. That has been the trend line over the last six years.

If you go back far enough in history, it was the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the standing committee which determined the level of support for families with children. I feel very uncomfortable, and every Member of this House should feel the same way, that we are passing over control in a legislative sense to the Minister of Finance rather than to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I might suggest that different people serve on those committees and they have different interests. We are continuing to set a very dangerous precedent.

We tend to treat this as an isolated piece of legislation, something that is happening in January and February of 1983. I remind Members of this House and the Minister of National Health and Welfare that, under her stewardship and the stewardship of the Cabinet, in the year 1976 indexing of Family Allowances was suspended by the Liberal Government. The base of the Family Allowance was eroded in 1976 by a majority vote of Liberal Members in this House.

I remind the Members of this House that in 1978 the Family Allowance had grown to $28 per child. In 1978 the Liberal Government pushed through a Bill to reduce the Family Allowance to $20. They transferred that $8 to the control of the Minister of Finance. They took it out of the hands of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Standing Committee.

I stood in this House in late 1982, four years after that 25 per cent reduction in Family Allowances in 1978, and I stand in this House today recognizing that we are being encouraged by the Minister of National Health and Welfare to erode the Family Allowance even further by passing this legislation. I suggest to the Members of this House that they might be well advised to consider the future. Do we really want a Minister of Finance determining family social policy in this country? Do we really want that Committee of this House to determine what family policy should be? I say with all the sincerity I can muster that I do not want that and my Party does not want that. We do not think that is in the best interests of the Canadian people.

After this Bill passed second reading stage in this House, we received it in Committee in December. The Liberal majority on that Committee made it patently obvious that they would use their majority to ram the Bill through Committee in a very short period of time.

We debate this Bill for one day in this House because it is under closure. The Liberal majority has silenced the Members of this House of Commons. They have denied us our opportunity to exercise freedom of speech in this Chamber through the use of closure on this Bill and the two pension Bills. What is not apparent to the Canadian public is that the Liberals did the same thing in Committee. They used their majority to push this Bill through Committee and back to this Chamber in a hurry.

What happens when you push a piece of legislation through Committee in a hurry is that you are restricted in the number of people you can hear as witnesses. Members of Parliament are denied the right to examine public views on whether it is a positive or negative piece of legislation. On each of these Bills which cut pensions to senior citizens of this country and support for families, the Liberal Government has used closure to cut off debate in the House of Commons and has used its majority in Committee to deny Canadians the opportunity to be heard.

That is an abomination of the democratic principle. It speaks to the continued attempts of this Government over three years to ram a Constitution down our throats without adequate public examination, to ram through an omnibus piece of energy legislation on which we had to ring the bells for two weeks, simply for democracy and simply to be heard. They tried to ram through two MacEachen budgets which were disastrous for this country. We see it time and again.

We have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and a Cabinet which do not believe that the voters of this country have sent to this Chamber people who care, people who work for others and should be listened to. Government Members pay absolutely no attention to a contrary view unless you hit them over the head with a two-by-four. You have to hit them again and again or they do not even consider the logic of your argument or the argument of the Canadian public.

In those brief days when the Bill was before the Committee, we did hear from some witnesses. I wish to remind Hon. Members of the categories of those witnesses and the comments they made regarding this legislation. We heard from the National Action Committee, a group in Ottawa which represents women all across the country. Their message was clear: "Don't pass this piece of legislation".

We heard also from labour union groups. The message was the same. The labour unions called these three Bills perverse, perverse in the sense that they would accomplish the opposite of what was needed in this country at this time.

On this piece of legislation we heard from a group from Ottawa who have joined together in a poverty group. They came as witnesses before Government and Members of Parliament on behalf of Canadians who live below the poverty line. Their message was very clear: "Don't pass this piece of legislation".

It is wise for Members to be reminded, and those who were not in Committee may not have heard about it, that the poverty group told us that they had put in place in the City of Ottawa a transportation system, cars and buses, to take those on low income, those below the poverty line, to known grocery stores in the City of Otawa in order that they can get groceries for their children at the lowest possible price. They stated that if they put that transportation system in place the day before the Family Allowance cheque arrived, they would not have any customers. They very deliberately put that transportation system in place for the day after the Family Allowance cheques arrive. That is the point at which single mothers and low-income earners have cash in their hands and can go to a grocery store and buy the kind of nutritions food which their children need to have an equal chance of growing up healthy, of being able to have the energy to participate in school activities, to study and to succeed.

• (1140)

For the Minister to stand in the House and say: "I am the defender of children, and it is my decision and that of the Liberal Party of Canada to take some money out of those monthly cheques", which are used to buy food, and to lump it into a sum which occurs one time only, an extra $50 one-time only, not paid every year for the next 50 years, and then to say: "We have done nothing to hurt the poverty-stricken people in this country", is pure, unadulterated nonsense. When one is discussing a reduction of $1.40 a month, for a mother with two children it amounts to $2.80 a month, and that is a big start on providing transportation or a bus pass. That amount buys a lot of macaroni and cheese or provides three or four litres of milk a month. If a mother has four children, it means the loss of $5.60, which will buy even more. Throughout the lifetime of those children, whatever age they are today, until they reach the age of 18 this piece of legislation will affect their parents' income and ability to buy milk, bread and other food.

This is the third time in six years that the Government has done this. It did it in 1976, in 1978 and now in 1983. We have a policy shift which is significant, important and not well understood. We get nothing but bafflegab from the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She is taking family policies, support for children, and she is saying: "I do not want to have very much to do with them as Minister of National Health and Welfare; I prefer the Finance Minister to be the champion of children in this country".

In my time in this House I have watched Liberal cabinets form and reform, and I have yet to see a Minister of Finance that I would want in charge of family policy in this country. I have yet to see an economic committee that I would want to see in charge of family policy. The proper place for it is in the portfolio of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and in Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare. We are abrogating our responsibility to Canadian children and families if we lend our vote and our voices to the transfer of that responsibility from the Department of National Health and Welfare to the Department of Finance. All one must do is review Canadian history and the record of Ministers of Finance in this country. Ministers of Finance do a very important job and have a very important responsibility, but they will not have the time to give the attention to the development of family policy that it deserves.

We have one day left in which to debate this legislation. This very day is the last opportunity for Members of the Liberal Party who have a social conscience, who believe in social justice, to stand in this Chamber and tell their Cabinet that it is on the wrong path and that, in a time of economic difficulty, one does not attack people who live at or near the poverty line. We have done this twice in the last two weeks. Liberal Members have stood in this House and made life more difficult for the pensioners of Canada. Last Thursday evening, one week ago, Liberal Members stood in this House and said that all senior citizens who make $750 a month or more will have their incomes cut. On Monday of this week, they wanted to pay one man, Donald Macdonald, $800 a day, yet they want to cut income from every pensioner who makes $750 a month. That is a perversion of what this place and this country is all about.

Before I resume my seat, I will move a motion, a procedural motion, which, simply stated, proposes that this piece of legislation be considered six months from now rather than today. It is called a six month hoist and effectively makes a public statement without causing a Government to collapse or causing a general election. It is simply a means whereby people of conscience in this Chamber can stand up and send the message to the Cabinet that they do not applaud this piece of legislation, that they do not agree with the direction it has taken. I encourage Members of the Liberal Party to stand up and support that motion.

What I would prefer is that Members of the Liberal Party stand up during the vote at third reading stage and turn the Bill down, saying: "We will not stand for it; we will not tolerate it". I would prefer to put the issue to the Canadian public. I stood in this Chamber last Thursday and said that every taxpayer I know would contribute 15 cents a month to the federal treasury simply to stop the Government from cutting money from pensioners, and I believe it. I have yet to encounter a taxpayer who would not be willing to pay 15 cents a month if he or she knew that the Government would not cut money from the cheques of pensioners.

I say to Hon. Members opposite that Canadian taxpayers believe in children and in helping those in poverty. They should understand the Minister's own testimony in Committee. The Minister came to Committee and told us that we have now slipped into a system, which she has largely created, where one receives maximum support for one's child if one's gross income is approximately $40,000 a year. If one's gross income is $40,000 a year, all of the pieces of legislation in place will give support of about $800 per child. If one's gross income is $12,000, it will be closer to $700 per child. We have a system which peaks at a gross income of $40,000. I think the taxpayers of this country would prefer that those people with incomes of $12,000 received more for their children than those with incomes of $40,000.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hawkes: This Party believes in that kind of a system, and it is incredible that so many Members of the Liberal Party do not. It is incredible that so many Hon. Members will stand in this Chamber later this day and vote for a piece of legislation, followed by the next one, Bill C-139, which would guarantee that those with gross incomes of $40,000 would receive the most from the tax and benefits system for their children, not those with incomes of $10,000, $12,000 or $16,000. That most clearly exemplifies the fact that we have a Government which has gone absolutely berserk in terms of its social and spending priorities.

I would like to repeat my plea. I have an amendment to move, and the force of that amendment would simply be a signal to Cabinet that this Chamber and all the Members in it have had enough of this perversity. It is time to reconsider the social priorities and do what is just and right. It is time to bring that perversity to a halt.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday):

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months hence".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid, Kenora-Rainy River): At this time I should inform the House that there is a ten-minute period in which the Hon. Member, who has just taken his seat, can be questioned, but first I will read the motion.

• (1150)

There is an amendment to the order for third reading of Bill C-132 as follows: moved by Mr. Hawkes, seconded by Mr. Halliday:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be not now read a third time but that it be read a third time this day six months hence".

Mr. Schroder: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member would explain how you can have "this day" one year hence?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Reid, Kenora-Rainy River): I apologize, that is the Chair's fault. The motion reads "that it be read a third time this day six months hence". I might say to the Parliamentary Secretary that that is a standard motion taken directly from Beauchesne.

At this point we have the ten-minute question period. Are there any Hon. Members who wish to question the Hon. Member?

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), since he has been the key spokesperson for the Conservative Party on this Bill, what the official policy is of the Conservative Party regarding universality as it applies to Family Allowances. We are very confused about this because when the Tory Government was in power, the Minister of National Health and Welfare at that time refused to give any commitment at all to universal Family Allowances. I understand that there was a poll taken of Conservative Members and 62 per cent of the Hon. Members wanted to dismantle universal Family Allowances and reduce Family Allowances. I would like to hear now officially on behalf of the Conservative Party what its position is on universal Family Allowances. Are they for them or against them?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, this particular piece of legislation is an attack on the principle of universality and we are voting against it. Every speech we have made is in accordance with that principle. I guess the translation of the truth which has come out of the New Democratic Party's propaganda machine, and did so about three and a half years ago when the then Minister of National Health and Welfare was the Hon. David Crombie, is a piece of propaganda which has lived on with a sense of truth in the NDP.

I believe it is wise to review the fact that in Committee in the month of December, the current Minister of National Health and Welfare gave us a sense of the contribution to family and child care in this country which comes from the tax deduction, the Family Allowances and the Child Tax Credit. That particular presentation made it crystal clear that the support system peaks at $40,000 a year.

I would remind the NDP that a study was put in place by the Conservative Minister of National Health and Welfare, and what the Minister did was to ask the officials in the Department to conduct a study of the economic support for children, all parts of the system, so that we would have a data base which a committee of Parliament could look at and make recommendations to the Minister.

The principles involved in that approach are, first, the gathering of facts; second, a belief that Parliamentarians can deal with the facts, that they will do it with sensitivity, and they will make recommendations to a Minister instead of having a Government where the Minister says—

Mr. Manly: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, could the rule of relevance apply in asking the Hon. Member to answer the Hon. Member's question, which was: What is the official policy of the Tory Party with regard to universality?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I have made several speeches on this Bill here and in Committee where in I pointed out that of the three parts of the system, the only one which delivers the maximum amount to the poorer segment of society is the Family Allowances part. Therefore, it is the best part of the system. I also point out, Mr. Speaker, that Parliamentarians need to have the facts, to have an open inquiry, and we, as Members of Parliament, should be proposing legislation to the Ministers instead of the other way around, especially in the areas of social policy. That is a much more fundamental democratic principle which, if I have anything to say about it, the next Government will follow, and any Clark Government will follow.

Mr. Ogle: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to direct a question to the former speaker, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). I must say I did not understand his answer to that particular question because it did not seem to be an answer. Nevertheless, I would like to ask about another area because I know he is a serious person and he is seriously thinking of policy.

He criticized the Government for its lack of family policy, and I realize there is not a great deal of time to make a statement to that effect, but I would ask the Hon. Member as a person now, if he were the Minister, taking the situation as it exists in Canada today with such stress on families, the breakdown of traditional family units, the large number of separated families, single parents, a whole new situation, would he make a few remarks about what he would consider to be a good family policy today?

Mr. Hawkes: What a topic, Mr. Speaker! You have to start with an understanding of this nation, its diversity, its large geographic size, and you need to be sensitive to the fact that policies have to be flexible. When you consider northern parts of Provinces, or the Yukon versus a large city like Toronto, you must have systems which are culturally concordant with the lifestyle, geography, and economic situation in which people find themselves in this country.

I believe it behooves a Government at the federal level to be supportive of local communities, local groups, provincial Governments, and so on, in the development of social policies with the view to strengthening family life, single-parent families or the more traditional two-parent family. Federal Governments can provide some moral leadership, support and co-ordinating function, but you do not start by one person in a Cabinet saying: "This is the way it should be for everyone", trying to lay that kind of "trip" on the nation, whether it is in health care or family policy.

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, this is my last opportunity as the New Democratic Party critic on social policy to speak against Bill C-132. I intend, therefore, to summarize the position of the NDP regarding this retrogressive legislation, and refer again to the reasons we so strongly object to the six and five capping on the indexing of Family Allowances. I hope as well to present some positive alternatives which we of the NDP believe would benefit families and children and which we hope the Government, and indeed all Parties, would consider.

I must also, of course, reiterate our criticism of the Government for introducing such a punitive Bill. This Bill further victimizes families and children who are already suffering a great deal from high unemployment, from the inflated cost of living and, of course, from increasing chronic poverty, a fact which was pointed out just yesterday in this House with reference to the recent studies of the Canadian Council on Social Development. We believe that Bill C-132 erodes the basic principle of universality, the universal social programs which we believe in very strongly, and I will speak to that shortly.

I must for a moment, however, point out once again, following up on the inability of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) to answer my question about the Tory position on universality, the hypocrisy of the leaderless Tories, who really have no clear economic or social policy to offer Canadians. We had a very good example of that recorded in Hansard just a few minutes ago when I asked the Hon. Member for Calgary West about the Conservative position on universality at it applies to Family Allowances. He could not answer, and Hansard will substantiate that.

• (1200)

The Conservative Party supported the Government restraint Bill by voting in favour of Bill C-124, so they are in favour of the whole concept of six and five restaint. We know that very clearly. As I mentioned, they also voted 60 per cent in a survey to dismantle universal Family Allowances. However, we know it is not particularly popular with voters to mention these intentions of the Conservatives in public; therefore, the Conservatives are joining us in public to vote against Bill C-132 as it applies to Family Allowance capping. They do not do this as a matter of principle, Mr. Speaker, but really because they know it would be unpopular to take any other stand.

We have opposed the total six and five restraint program of the Liberal Government because it is unjust, illogical and punitive. The Minister said in her remarks this morning that Bill C-132 should be viewed in the context of the total six and five program. That is certainly the context in which we will be discussing this Bill, and I think it is illogical for the Conservative Party to do otherwise.

The Government, supported by the Conservatives as I just said, introduced and passed Bill C-124 last Spring imposing six and five wage restraint on Public Service workers as an exemple to all workers in the country. In doing so they took away collective bargaining rights from those same workers. Then they brought in Bill C-133 to reduce indexing on pensions of retired civil servants who had paid into their pension plan themselves and who had every right to expect they would be fully protected against inflation when they retired. Not satisfied with this, the Liberals also brought in Bill C-131, passed last week over the strong opposition of those on this side of the House. That Bill reduced indexing on old age pensions, thus penalizing elderly people in Canada who must pay the full and real cost of food and shelter. They are struggling very hard to survive on fixed incomes which are at a very marginal level for the majority of senior citizens. I have spoken before at length about the particular impact of that Bill on elderly women in Canada.

Having imposed its will on workers and pensioners, particularly older women, the Government finally had to attack the most vulnerable group in Canada, women and children. Bill C-132, forced through this House by closure, is an outright attack on Canada's children and another slap in the face for Canadian women. It is no wonder that child abuse and wife battering are on the increase in Canada, Mr. Speaker, with this kind of Government example.

Mr. Ogle: Government abuse.

Mrs. Mitchell: Government abuse, as my colleague says. The Liberals could not even wait until they had forced this legislation through the House; they went ahead and capped the indexing on Family Allowances for the month of January. This was not only immoral, it was illegal and I think the Minister was really quite disappointing this morning when she tried to justify that. I think this indicates the lack of respect the Liberals, and the Minister in particular, have for women and children as well as for the laws of this land.

We have documented in many speeches why we oppose Bill C-132. Family Allowances, fully indexed, are a basic right of Canadians, developed and accepted from coast to coast many years ago to help with the cost of raising Canada's children. This allowance is the means by which the state, society as a whole and childless taxpayers in Canada, contribute to future generations and recognize the important function of parenting.

The Family Allowance is a monthly payment paid directly to the mother, and perhaps it should also be extended to fathers where they are the primary parenting person. It is the only cheque that many women receive in their own name. We believe this allowance should be increased, not decreased, in order to help meet the increasing costs of child care.

We believe the Government restraint rationale is fallacious. Reducing indexing to 6 per cent will not affect inflation. The Minister, referring to the Government restraint program in Committee, called it "a sword, a psychological weapon", not a financial weapon which was going to put money into job creation in any appreciable amount or have much impact, if any, on inflation generally. We agree it is a sword and the facts show that it will net very little financial return to the Government.

There is no real financial reason why this action was taken by the Government. It unfairly penalizes every family in this country with children under 19 years of age. As my colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) pointed out very clearly in questioning the Minister, it imposes a permanent reduction in the basic amount of the Family Allowance Program which will affect lower income families as well, even though there will be a temporary, one-year increased bonus for the Child Tax Credit if another Bill goes through.

Families need a fully-indexed Family Allowance cheque. We heard this over and over again in Committee from the groups which appeared there, particularly low-income families and groups representing low-income people. We know that many if not most families rely during tough times on that Family Allowance cheque to cover basic family expenses at the end of the month. I have said before, Mr. Speaker, that many families on welfare or unemployment insurance use this cheque to buy groceries, indeed to go out and buy food because the cupboard is empty as the end of the month draws near. Even for higher income families there is a value inasmuch as the cheque goes to the mother, recognizing the important role she has in parenting. In those cases also, although the husband may be wealthy and have a higher income, there is no guarantee, as we have heard from women's groups, that the woman in the house has money or income in her own name.

Every single organization, and there were quite a number of them, to appear before the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs opposed Bill C-132 because they thought it was a regressive Bill. We heard from the Canadian Council on Social Development a very fine analysis of social programs generally, and I would hope that we would be getting at some of the broader social issues which they raised and the need for a general review and reform of all programs which affect families.

The National Council on Social Welfare, again a very sound group which does excellent research on the impact of legislation on low-income groups, also presented briefs opposing this measure, as did the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, representing hundreds of women's groups across Canada. The Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women also opposed it. Low-income groups that appeared, particularly some from Ottawa, opposed it very strongly and told us in very emotional terms how much the Family Allowance cheque meant to them. We heard from Public Service labour groups as well.

Finally, we object strenuously to Bill C-132 because it denies and erodes the principle of universality in favour of a limited—so we are told—temporary gift of $50 on the Child Tax Credit. We have yet to see this.

We believe fully-indexed, universal social allowances like old age pensions and Family Allowances are the soundest method of providing social security in Canada. Universal Family Allowances eliminate the stigma and the cost of a means test. They recognize equally all children in Canada, and mothers, equally each month. The cost is retrieved partially through an income tax-back provision from higher income earners.

We believe there must be major tax reforms to make this system work more equitably and to the benefit of lower income families. On this subject, I would like to refer to an interesting proposal called "Family allowances: How to save and pay to all" in an article by Jonathan Kesselman, Professor of Economics at the University of British Columbia, which was published in the December 11 issue of The Financial Post and is a very interesting article. This is directly related to the Bill C-132 debate and I hope that the Government will study this proposal seriously. He proposes more fundamental reforms in the tax transfer treatment of dependent children and points out that, and I quote:

A child in a middle-income family generates greater total benefits than a child in a low-income family—

This is a result of our regressive child tax exemption, the Child Tax Credit and the Family Allowances system, and he gives figures in support. He says that the net benefits rise again for upper income to high-income families, which is just the reverse of the way such a program should work.

A new scheme which he proposes would begin by abolishing both the Child Tax Exemption and the Child Tax Credit. It would raise Family Allowance payments by 145 per cent to a 1982 level of $65.93 monthly or $791 annually per child, and maintain the universal basis of the allowance.

The taxability of Family Allowance would be replaced by a tax-recovery device in the federal income tax to recover increasing portions of the Family Allowance at higher family incomes.

I do not want to take the time to read more from this article, Mr. Speaker, but I would refer Members to it and remind them also that we in this Party have called for a complete review of social programs, both tax exemptions and income support programs, as they apply to families.

I made a statement in the House recently I, on behalf of my Party, in which I criticized the thoughtless and prejudiced statements of the Minister responsible for the Status of Women when she advocated doing away with spousal tax exemptions. At that time we proposed a complete review of programs affecting families, with emphasis particularly on increasing the Family Allowance as proposed in this article to which I have just referred.

We believe it is very unfortunate that Members in this House, particularly the speakers on this side of the House, have had to take so much time to oppose a Bill which should never have been introduced in the first place. We could have used this time much more profitable and enlisted the support of many groups across Canada much more profitably to debate a progressive and major tax reform that would benefit families and also to look at social programs and policies in a much more comprehensive way. We believe that there are ways that should be instituted now to use present expenditures much more effectively and equitably. We believe the time for reform is long overdue. We also must look at a new version of the whole question of income support programs and guaranteed income. There is an urgent need for a major review of social programs, and we join with Canadians in asking for this review. We will be pleased to participate fully in such a review.

As my colleague just mentioned, the nature and fabric of family structure in Canada is rapidly changing. There has been a great increase in single-parent families. I will just quote quickly the 1981 census figures which are very dramatic. The number of children under 15 years of age has decreased by 7 per cent while the number of persons over 65 years of age has increased by 17.9 per cent. The number of divorced persons has increased by 65 per cent, which affects half a million children. This means a tremendous increase in the number of single-parent families. We also know that there is a tremendous increase in the number of families with two working parents, and we have a new pattern of extended families developing in Canada. We must look at our policies and income support programs with these changes in mind.

Poverty is on the increase. It is increasing because of Bills such as the one that is before us today. It has increased because of Liberal economic policies which have deliberately increased unemployment. Increasing unemployment to control inflation is a Liberal policy with a very irrational goal. It has also increased because of the kind of restraint programs that have been brought in by the Liberal government in all of its six and five Bills.

We know also, from a study of demographic projections, that our total population in Canada is changing markedly and will change more in the next ten or twenty years, with a marked increase in the aged population and a decrease in the child population. We are rapidly reaching a position where we will almost have a zero birth rate in Canada. It is very important that we do everything possible to strengthen families, to protect them against the ravages of inflation, to provide services and financial support for parents so that they can choose the best way, for them, to raise their children, and to give equal opportunity of employment at decent wages, with universal child care. It is very important that we give the children of Canada the very best possible start in life that we can.

Bill C-132, which takes away full indexing on Family Allowance cheques, denies these goals. It undermines an absolutely essential universal family support program which Canadians have established as a right which they expect to be fully maintained by their elected Government. The Liberal Government, through Bill C-132, has betrayed this trust.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, one of the points that I have mentioned in several speeches is the fact that the NDP stood in the House in December, 1979 and defeated a budget that was judged the fairest to poor people in this country in the decade of the seventies. I would like to know whether they did that without understanding that it was a budget which was very supportive of families, or whether in fact they are saying one thing and acting in a different fashion.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this is relevant to Bill C-132, but I would be very glad to give a number of reasons why we opposed the Conservative budget. We did it on principle because there were a number of items in it that were very much contrary to things that we believe in, including doing away with PetroCan. If my memory serves me right, this was a proposal at that time which even the Conservative Party changed their mind on.

As I mentioned earlier, there has been no clear statement from the Conservative Party as to what their social policy, if any, is. The Member asking the question said that a little earlier.

• (1220)

Mr. Ogle: Tell him that the people of Canada voted them out.

Mrs. Mitchell: As my colleague says, of course it was the people of Canada who voted the Conservative Government out, not the New Democratic Party. They could have even avoided having an election if they had been a little smarter in a number of areas.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, earlier today we talked about propaganda machines. The Petro-Canada policy was to encourage people to provide voluntarily more money to that Company so that it could drill more oil wells, create more jobs, and improve the economy. The Leader of the New Democratic Party misinterpreted the report, and I guess those Members believe his interpretation rather than the thrust of the report and the policy. In this current time of high unemployment, they might have been wise to look at the actual recommendations instead of following what their Leader said about them.

I ask the Hon. Member to explain how that budget was in violation of the principles we have discussed in the Chamber today. It contained many tax credit proposals of assistance to senior citizens and to families. It was designed to bring down inflation at the same time. It would have created jobs at the rate of 40,000 a month. Where is any of this a violation of NDP principle?

Mrs. Mitchell: I would be pleased to answer that. I recall that the Conservative budget at that time was a restraint budget, just as Bill C-132 is a restraint Bill, except that it was restraint in all areas of the economy. I recall the statement "short-term pain for long-term gain" of the Minister of Finance at that time.

Actually I have already answered the Hon. Member's question. From my point of view as critic on social policy, the budget did nothing to ensure that universal social programs would be upheld as a matter of principle. Also it was part of the Conservatives' economic policy, if one could call it a policy, or part of the pragmatism at that time, just the same as it is with the Liberals today. They are trying to control inflation by increasing unemployment, and this Party will not go along with it.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question as well. I would like to know, yes or no, if it is true that it was not a coalition of Liberal and NDP Members that defeated the Conservative Government in 1979, whether or not there were Family Allowance provisions in their budget. Also I would like the Hon. Member to clarify whether or not the vote which defeated the Conservative Government was not necessarily viewed as a confidence vote; it was on a Liberal amendment and a New Democratic Party amendment to the amendment. If I understand it correctly, that budget dealt with Family Allowances. When the Government of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), the Hon. Leader of the Opposition now—

Mrs. Mitchell: He is not the Leader; use the past tense.

Mr. Anguish: I am sorry. But was it not true that it was the indiscretion or the last—

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems that the ten-minute question period after a speech was set up in order to ask specific questions relating to the issue. The issue here is Family Allowances, but the Hon. Member is now getting involved in a political debate. I suggest that he is entirely out of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I will continue to recognize the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish) and other Hon. Members who may wish to rise on points of order as well. The Chair is struck that perhaps it was not the intention of the reformed parliamentary procedures to encourage an Hon. Member to ask another in his own Party questions which do not appear to have a great deal of relevance either to the Bill before the House or perhaps to the Hon. Member's speech.

I warn Hon. Members that I am very hesitant, as I have said before, about setting down rulings, particularly on the issue of the ten-minute question and answer period. Because it is a new technique, I think it is the responsibility of the Chair to ensure that Members themselves feel out how they want to handle the ten-minute period. But I point out that I have some question in my mind as to whether we are going about it in the right way.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of Members outside the speaker's own Party wanting to ask questions, I think it is appropriate for a Member within that Party to ask questions. Also I might suggest that when we find a Member who belongs to the same Party as the speaker filibustering part of the ten minutes, the Chair might make an accommodation and not count the time spent so that there is adequate time for the rest of us to get to the heart of the question.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my colleague was questioning the Hon. Member with regard to the former Conservative budget as it related to Family Allowances. He was doing the same thing as the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). The Hon. Member for Calgary West raised that matter. If it is not relevant when we ask the question, why is it relevant when a Member of the Conservative Party asks the same question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake on the same point of order?

Mr. Anguish: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order. I would like to continue with my question, if I could. The only reason I asked the question in the form I did is that the Hon. Member from "Eric in Wonderland", Calgary North or whatever, made reference to Family Allowances and the budget which the Conservative Party brought down in 1979. I was trying to point out that it was not because of Family Allowances and the coalition between the other Parties that they were defeated at that time. The Leader of that Party in 1979 went to the Governor General, after being defeated on an amendment to an amendment to the budget, and asked to go to the country, to call an election. I think it was incompetence on the part of the then Leader of the Conservative Party. His inexperience as a Leader shows now because of what happened to that Leader of the Opposition. I think the hindsight of the Conservatives will only get them into all kinds of trouble. I would like to ask the speaker whether or not this is in fact true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering when the Hon. Member would get to his question. He started making a speech. He has now ended up with a question and I suppose he is through, so I will sit down.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My understanding of the reformed rules is that after a speech has been made we could either put a question or make a comment, that in fact comments are not out of order and are quite legitimate in the ten-minute period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member's interpretation is correct.

Mrs. Mitchell: I was asked to answer the question very briefly. I certainly concur completely with the statement made, and my answer is yes—oui.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. She mentioned that there was no social legislation introduced by the former Conservative Government. Who introduced the continuation of the spousal allowance between the ages of 60 and 65 years when a pensioner passed away? Could the Hon. Member tell us who introduced that?

Mrs. Mitchell: I would like to correct the assumption of the Hon. Member. I did not say that there was no social legislation introduced. I said that the Conservatives have never produced any long-range social policy goals and principles. Of course, the spousal allowance was introduced at the time the Conservative Government was in power. I think it was actually a result of many years of work and advocacy on the part of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), as well as many sincere Members of the Conservative Party. I am sure the Hon. Member who raised the question would be one of those.

• (1230)

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is rationalizing. Everything is wrong unless it is done by the Liberals or the NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Perhaps I should recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) for reply and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes).

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, we will take full responsibility for our New Democratic Party policies, but we certainly dissociate ourselves completely from the Liberals who, as far as I can see, have no more policy, either economic or social, than do the Progressive Conservatives.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, when I listened to the question put by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords-Meadow Lake (Mr. Anguish), I was reminded of John Diefenbaker's comment that there are more people who talk their way out of the House of Commons than ever talk their way in.

May I ask the Hon. Member for Vancouver East why the New Democratic Party throughout these three pieces of legislation, two affecting pensions and this one affecting Family Allowances, has not used the rules of the House of Commons to move amendments to cause extra days of debate to occur? If the New Democratic Party wants to be the champion of senior citizens and families in this country, why has that Party not used the rules of the House of Commons to work with us to try and bring the Liberal Government to its senses?

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, we have not introduced amendments because we oppose this Bill in principle. By introducing amendments you are in effect giving approval in principle to the Bill. There is no way in all conscience that we could introduce amendments.

However, I might point out to the Hon. Member that we have had a disproportionate number of speakers in relation to the size of our caucus on all of these Bills. We have carried the debate and the Opposition day after day after day. Often we have more Members in the House than the Conservatives. Furthermore, the Hon. Member should look at the voting record of the Conservatives on the motions relating to this Bill. On closure, 47 Conservative Members were away and did not come to vote.

Mr. de Jong: Obviously they don't care.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Calgary West has a supplementary question and then I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-St. James (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I think the record should show that on Tuesday of this week there were 18 Progressive Conservative Members, four NDP Members and three Liberal Members who spoke to the Bill. That is the Tuesday record, the most recent day of debate.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member in the New Democratic Party whether or not that Party thinks the children of the country will grow healthier if they eat principle or food.

Mrs. Mitchell: I do not think that comment deserves a reply, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, commenting on this matter of Family Allowances and the six and five, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) wanted to know why we did not use the rules of this House to bring this matter to a halt. I must once again remind this House that the Tory Party has demonstrated its capacity in this House to stop legislation if it chooses. It did that with regard to legislation affecting the oil industry. I am still puzzled why the Conservative Party does not join us in fighting this Bill in a very vigorous way in order to stop the legislation, to ring the bells, so that families in this country can be protected. It is a puzzle, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is well known: it is to achieve restraint. That in itself is a very worthy objective and is worthy of our support. However, the objective is only worthy as long as it accomplishes its principle. In this case the program may prove to be both inequitable and counterproductive in assisting the most innocent victims of this recession, our children. The poorest of poor Canadians, those at the lower end of the economic spectrum, those who do not pay income tax, are also those who are in the greatest need and may, in fact, receive less than those in the middle and upper-income brackets. If there were no other reason than this one sense of inequity and injustice, this Bill should not pass.

Let me be graphic and state what this Bill will mean to Canadians. Once we have torn away the rhetoric and gone through the bureaucracy, the end result will mean that my oldest son, who is a young family man struggling to meet his family commitments, will receive less benefit for his son—my grandson—than I will receive for my son's younger brothers, my sons. I will benefit more from this legislation than will my son.

My son must compete in an economic market where 23 per cent of his age group are unemployed. Almost one in four of his age group are unemployed. I know how difficult it is for him to try to struggle to survive in this economy so as to pay his rent, make a payment on his car and provide basic food and clothing. Can you imagine what it is like for those who are receiving even less, those on unemployment and on welfare? What about the very poorest of the poor? We have the lower end of the spectrum, the working poor who earn $8,000 to $10,000 per year who are not receiving supplemental Government benefits. They are just on that line. Those people will receive less than I will or other Members' children or grandchildren will. That is not right. It is not right by any commonsense standard, by any standard of justice, equality or any principle for which this country and this House stand.

I have not heard this inequity refuted by any Member on the Government side. How can Government Members vote in support if they can neither dispute it nor find an amendment that will not allow the weakest of our nation, the most innocent victims, the children, to be adversely affected? They are the ones who will receive less than I will as a Member of Parliament and will receive less than others who are employed in the middle and upper-income areas.

This particular debate, while it focuses on one area, has three major financial elements in the current system to provide support for families and children. The one element is, of course, the Family Allowance itself. Second is the Child Tax Credit, and third is the income tax deduction or the child tax exemption. For a family with two children with a taxable income of about $26,300, those three elements provide approximately $800 a child per year.

The $800 figure is a particularly interesting one as we debate this Bill today. The family with two children will receive $800 for each child a year. That is what they will receive to support their children to give them extra benefits. That $800 a child is the $800 a day that is to be paid to Donald Madonald. Is that not astounding? This Government pays $800 a day to one of its own ex-ministers, yet that same $800 is the total for a whole year paid for a child in Canada. Think of a child of a person unemployed, a child of a person on welfare, a child of a person employed at the lower end of the economy but poorer than those on welfare. That amount of $800 a day to be paid to Mr. Macdonald has to stick in the throat of every Canadian. This is the injustice of the whole system. Donald Macdonald, a perpetrator of the recession, is to receive $800 a day while the victims, the most innocent victims of that recession which he had a part in perpetrating, will have their $800 a year reduced.

For a person to receive in taxable income $800 for each of two children, he would need a gross income of around $35,000 to $40,000. Surely in a just and humane society one would assume that the poorest people would receive at least a little over $800 per child rather than less. Under the current system, however, the poorer segment of Canadian society, those families who do not even earn enough to pay income tax, receive less than $700 per child. That will be the end result of this legislation.

We must judge this legislation by its numbers and not its words. How much money does this legislation put in the hands of families for the support of their children? I wish there was one Member who could stand up before this debate is finished and say that the poor receive less is not the case. I would like to hear that said, but it is not possible because the contrary is the fact.

Rather than imposing this kind of inequity and injustice on Canadian families, the Government should be rationalizing and revamping the whole concept of the Family Allowance. This Bill is just another example of the Government's tinkering with the Family Allowance concept. We need to look at the child in the nuclear family, we need to look at the nuclear family itself and develop programs that will support both. We must consider what the legislation that we debate in the House will in fact deliver to the people in our society. This rethinking or revamping of the Family Allowance concept is unlikely to occur because the Government is apparently bankrupt of new ideas and initiatives to give Canada the forward thrust that it needs to carry us up and out of this recession and into economic recovery and security for Canadians.

New social programs that are introduced are almost always born out of sound principles of need, equity and social justice. In fact the Family Allowance was created with those sound principles in mind. We began tinkering and adding to that basic Family Allowance with the introduction of the Child Tax Credit. The more that program was added to and changed, the more bureaucracy became larger and the final cheque delivered to Canadians smaller.

The Government is adding to the distance between the taxpayer who is able to give through his Government, and individual Canadians who are in the most need. This measure makes the less strong the weakest. This legislation is a good example because we are talking about children, particularly children of the poor. The present system keeps growing in the middle but the taxes that are contributed do not reach those who are in need. We must reconsider this concept and find more efficient ways to administer the program.

As a result of passing this legislation, we are suggesting that there is no better way. However, better methods have been suggested to the House. My colleague for Calgary North (Mr. Wright) suggested the Kesselman concept and I was pleased to see the NDP pick up on that suggestion. I would like to elaborate on that concept. It is not a complete answer to the problem but an interim step which may accomplish two things. If we were to accept a six-month hoist on the Bill, the Committee could then study this concept and others like it.

The Kesselman concept claims that it would save the Government $500 million. According to the current proposal, the Government will pay an extra $95 million. Instead of paying $95 million, why not save $500 million? At the same time we could see Family Allowances rise by 145 per cent through a direct payment program. Does that not logically meet the objectives of restraint since $500 million—perhaps more—could be saved and a 145 per cent increase in individual Family Allowances could be realized?

My first reaction to this is to wonder if there really is that much in the middle. However, according to the actuarial tables which I have here, this would, in fact, be the net benefit or Mr. Kesselman's program. If this is the case, it should be examined. Let me repeat those simple and common-sense proposals. There can be $500 million saved by restraint and a 145 per cent increase in direct payments to individuals.

I would like to explain this further because time is running short for Liberal Members to realize that a six-month hoist would be in the interest of Canadian children. They should be our first concern. I would hope that a delay would allow us to examine not only this proposal but others that would go into much more detail. The fact that this concept was proposed and that others might be proposed is reason enough to allow a hoist. Perhaps consideration of these ideas might mean that this Bill would not need to be introduced again a year from now. I believe, therefore, that the Government should consider this amendment.

Let me present this idea in more detail. I am sure Mr. Kesselman would be pleased to appear before any committee to expand upon it further. For each child under the current system, the system displays a bizarre pattern in relation to family income. A child in a middle income family generates greater total benefit than a child in a low-income family. The net benefits rise again for movements from upper middle-income to high-income families. This pattern results from a combined effect of taxable Family Allowance receipts of $26.91 per month, or $323 per year, the child tax exemption of $670 per year and the Child tax Credit of $293 per year, minus 5 per cent of parents' combined net income over $26,330.

The scheme proposed by Mr. Kesselman would begin by abolishing both the child tax exemption and the Child Tax Credit. As I said, this is one suggestion. The Committee might look at other suggestions and may want to expand the concept of the Child Tax Credit or the child tax exemption. However, we cannot keep layering program upon program, bureaucracy upon bureaucracy and form upon form until the housewife has to become an accountant in order to fill out the forms she requires to get the basic, small amount of money that comes back when the process is completed.

This particular scheme does call for the Child Tax Credit and the child tax exemption to be deleted. This would raise Family Allowance payments by 145 per cent to a 1982 level of $65.93 monthly or $791 annually per child. It would also maintain the universal basis. The taxability of Family Allowance would be replaced by a tax recovery device in federal income tax to recover increasing portions of the Family Allowance at higher family incomes. In particular, this proposal would remove various deficiencies which would arise with the Child Tax Credit in imposing an income test before disbursing net benefits. It would eliminate the need for 1.5 million non-taxable mothers to file tax returns each year to claim their Child Tax Credit, and it would eliminate 350 person-years of work needed annually just to process the 1.5 million forms which must be filled in. It would do away with those forms. Would it not make sense to do away with 1.5 million forms? Think of the work hours spent by the mother, the father, the accountant, or whoever had to help, to fill in those forms, let alone the 350 people required just to process and circulate these forms.

The expanded Family Allowance would be paid automatically and would not require annual applications, and this would avoid the non-participation of some eligible families at lower incomes and in remote areas which arises under the Child Tax Credit.

The monthly payment of Family Allowances would also reduce the budgeting problems of the recipients from the once-annual payment of the Child Tax Credit. Monthly Family Allowance payments are more likely to be used for the child's regular maintenance than a lumpsum payment. We all know the experience of trying to wait for income tax returns or adjustments. At first it is April, then May, then June, and finally some of them arrive in September or October. By the time they have arrived, they have been pre-spent, perhaps on some bulk item, whereas if they were to arrive with the Family Allowance on a month to month basis, they would be spent at the end of that month to provide that little extra bit of food or those extra items that are so often provided to children from the Family Allowance cheques.

The universal payment of Family Allowance and a tax recovery system would make the net benefits to each family instantaneously responsive to change in income position. The larger income tax form is automatically filled out anyway, and the adjustment would be made on an annual basis. Payments through the Child Tax Credit, in contrast, are slow to respond to changes in family income. For example, higher income families losing their employment earnings from January, 1982 onward will have to wait until about April, 1983, fully 15 months, to receive a Child Tax Credit based on reduced income.

Under the proposed scheme, the tax recovery of Family Allowance would be accomplished by withholding tax on earnings at source with final reconciliations made in the annual filing of tax returns. Rates of tax recovery would be based on parents' combined net incomes. From the inception of Family Allowance through 1946, a tax recovery was used to prevent duplication with child tax benefits at higher income.

The proposed scheme would increase gross Family Allowance payments to $5.4 billion from the current $2.2 billion. In addition to this $3.2 billion increase, the federal Government would lose about $400 milion from the removal of ordinary tax ability on Family Allowance. Offset against these costs, there would be a revenue gain—that is money coming to Government—of $900 million from abolishing the child tax exemption. There also would be a revenu of $1.2 billion from abolishing the Child Tax Credit and $2 billion from the Family Allowance tax recovery. That is assuming an average 37 per cent rate of tax recovery.

The net result would be a saving to taxpayers of $500 million, tax dollars which Canadians currently cannot afford to pay, tax dollars which would help to reduce the size of our bureaucracy, help reduce this middle bulge which prevents Canadians from receiving direct benefit from their tax dollar. Larger budgetary savings of up to $1 billion per year could be achieved if desired by smaller Family Allowance increases or higher tax recovery rates.

This $500 million, I am suggesting, is used to give that magic benefit of about $800 a year, and I think $800 a year is about where it should stick. The reason I think it should stick is that we should try and stick it with Donald Macdonald's $800 a year. I like that tie—his $800 a day and the Child Tax Credit of $800 a year. That is a good relationship and would be a good symbol for this kind of Bill or course of action.

The Provinces, in fact, would gain about $180 million from joint abolition of the Child Tax Credit and the—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member. Perhaps he may wish to seek the unanimous consent of the House to continue, since his allotted time has expired. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to complete his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wenman: I will end my remarks, out of respect for Hon. Members giving me unanimous consent, by saying that what I have been presenting today is a positive proposal. I am not really harping or carping at the Government. What I am trying to say is that there are other answers, and these answers have been brought forward by the Conservative Party. They have now been picked up by the New Democratic Party, and apparently meet with its approval, as another idea. If we can just carry this positive idea to the other side, maybe we will have something positive happening for Canadian children and families. That is the tone and intent of what I want to do here today.

As I mentioned, I want to give credit to the system of collecting information which comes through to this House of Commons. As Members of Parliament, we read, we hear, and we gather information from the news media. The article I have in my hand comes from The Financial Post, and I give The Financial Post credit for seeking out Mr. Kesselman and bringing this proposal forward, and I am glad that Members of Parliament have brought it forward here. Now that we have made the connection, will in fact the message be heard?

This particular concept is not the total answer to the question of the protection of the economic security of children. Other more equitable adjustments to the Child Tax Credit or child tax exemption could also be examined. That would be a major objective of this amendment. The Bill being presented on the floor of the House has brought forth irreconcilable inequity and has also brought forth the plight of thousands of Canadian families. We have heard each Hon. Member from across the House standing and saying that they are seeing in their offices families which cannot cope with the recession; they are seeing abuse of children resulting from economic insecurity. These children are the victims. These victims, the most innocent victims of the recession, must be protected in this period above all. They must be protected and supported. It is a different matter for those who are older and stronger, but we have the highest obligation to the child who cannot understand. Let the Government not do this to those children, the poorest of the poor.

The Bill, through our amendment, will allow an opening and a new committee structure to examine the reality of not only children as innocent victims of Government-induced recession, but also the growth and development of children's individual potential as our most precious resource.

Mr. Evans: Mr. Speaker, I would be interested in asking the Hon. Member a question. According to my figures, the Bill now before the House would result in a decline in Family Allowance payments of about $1.50 a month per child. The Hon. Member has put forth a proposal which would result in an expenditure saving to Government of about $500 million in any one year.

With the kind of response that the Government has received from the Opposition with regard to a proposal which would reduce expenditure level by $1.50 a month per child, could he explain the kind of reaction he would expect that the Government would receive from the Opposition if we put forth a proposal which would reduce the level of expenditures on behalf of children in Canada by $500 million a year?

Mr. Wenman: The Hon. Member must realize that the figure of $1.50 which he has used is a very nice figure because, in order to reach that figure, an average is taken across the board. The inequity which I wanted the Hon. Member to address is that there could be as much as a difference of $100 a year between the middle-income person earning $35,000 to $40,000 and the person earning an income in the $12,000 to $20,000 block.

Instead, would the Hon. Member answer my question in this case or, in the form of a comment, state that in fact this is not so? This inequity is in fact in the Bill. Can he assure me that he will bring an amendment forward to correct this inequity? Is he in fact doubting?

I am quoting figures from an economist. The Hon. Member is an economist himself. Is he questioning these figures? If he wants to question these figures, then he had better not have closure today. The Government had better refer this matter to a committee so that this man can be brought forward to present his facts and figures. It is common-sense logic that if you cut a big bureaucracy in the middle, there has to be a big saving. If you make direct payments, it is common-sense there would be a saving to the Government and you would increase the amount of money received by individuals.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I think the Chair should indicate that it is past one o'clock. I want to remind Hon. Members that the period for questions and answers is to continue immediately following the Question Period. By my calculations, there would be approximately eight minutes left in the time remaining as soon as we go to Orders of the Day following Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

URUGUAY—DROPPING OF CHARGES AGAINST FATHER PEREZ AGUIRRE

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, as Vice-Chairman of the External Affairs and National Defence Sub-Committee on Latin America and the Carribean, I had the honour, last August, to lead a parliamentary delegation to South America.

During our stay in Uruguay we had the privilege to meet Father Luis Perez Aguirre who is Uruguayan Co-ordinator of the Nobel Prize winning Peace and Justice Service of Latin America. For nearly two years Uruguayan authorities have threatened Father Aguirre, calling him to regular investigation sessions and banning his organization's information bulletin. His support of the Mothers Committee for the Disappeared, and support for relatives of political prisoners, had resulted in strict surveillance and repressive action on the part of the police and the armed forces. In fact, the day before we met Father Perez Aguirre in Montivedeo last August, he had been informed that charges would be laid as a result of his human rights work. Conviction would have meant imprisonment and probably torture in La Libertad Prison.

Upon our return, we were resolved to bring the plight of Father Perez and his unjust treatment to the attention of Canadians. In particular, my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the Hon. Member for Saskatoon East (Mr. Ogle) took the lead in informing the Canadian public.

As a result of representations made to the Government of Uruguay, Madam Speaker, by many Canadians and Members of Parliament, I am pleased to state that today I have received information that all charges against Father Perez Aguirre have been dropped. This is a testimony to the action of many Canadians and their Members of Parliament who have expressed their abhorrence of human rights abuses in Uruguay. It is also an indication, I hope, Madam Speaker, that the Government of Uruguay is concerned that the past dark decade of repression has become an unconscionable blight on the otherwise enlightened and civilized history of the Uruguayan nation.

REMUNERATION OF COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, the composition of "Big Mac's" Royal Commission on the economy continues to be astounding. If Mr. Macdonald is intent on building up a "Team Canada", he should concentrate on filling positions other than left wing.

S.O. 21

Recently two more Saskatchewan re-treads, Messer and Shoyama, responded to a call to further NDP policy at yet another level. This war is too important to rely on generals from the left wing, and hiring halls for re-treaded socialists. Heaven knows there is an abundance of expertise out there waiting to be tapped, men and women with sound marketplace experience in agriculture and industry.

The rates of pay for the Chairman and the Commissioners are far too generous in the light of the Government's six and five program. The Government's generosity has placed a favoured few well above the poverty line. The per diem rates are distasteful, disgraceful, and obscene. My disgust is best expressed in the words of the Bard of Dromore:

Big Mac, Big Mac, Canadians have had their fill,
You've got your arm too far into the till!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MEDICAL CARE

DOCTOR-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP

Mr. Stanley Hudecki (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, I share the concern of Dr. C. B. Mueller, a professor of surgery at McMaster University, and other physicians who have contacted me, that the measures currently contained in the "Canada Health Discussion Paper" would place the physician in the role of an employee of the state, that is, a civil servant, thereby distorting to a degree the traditional doctor-patient relationship. This relationship is a very special convenant. In the framework of an employer and employee contact, the patient is the employer and the physician the employee. In this single specific relationship the physician has no other obligation than to care for his patient. When the physician is employed by an agency, or by the Government, this special relationship between patient and physician is blurred.

If the employer is either the federal or a provincial Government, the physician will be unable to carry out his responsibilities to the patient and the patient alone, without considering other influences or directions laid down by the Government of the day. In such situations, despite his or her best intentions to the contrary, the doctor would experience difficulties with the time-honoured precept that the physician's first concern should be the good of the patient.

In my opinion the right to "opt out" of Ontario's model medicare creates an essential freedom for the medical profession and must be retained. In this way the doctor's primary responsibility to the patient rather than to the state will not be breached. I do not advocate "opting out", but I believe that it does provide a safety mechanism through which physicians—

Madam Speaker: Order. Order, please. The Hon. Member for Grey-Simcoe (Mr. Mitges).

HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS

UREA FORMALDEHYDE FOAM INSULATION—IMPACT ON TAX BASE OF MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, home owners who insulated their homes with urea formaldehyde foam all across Canada have applied for and received assessment reductions averaging 20 per cent to 25 per cent to reflect the adverse effect of urea formaldehyde foam insulation on the market value of their properties. In small communities, particularly, this has had the effect of reducing the tax base to the extent of about two mills or more, because their main and sometimes only source of revenue is realty taxes.

Since it was in fact CMHC which approved UFFI for home insulation in the first place, as a safe and non-hazardous product, it is only fair to state that the federal Government should be assuming some responsibility for financial assistance to those municipalies. As well, the Government should issue a statement setting out the Government's long-term policies with respect to urea formaldehyde so that municipalities may have some idea of the long-term effect of these value reductions on their tax base.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc) has been made aware of this important problem, and it is my hope that he will discuss this with his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde), and that a favourable solution will be reached and reflected in the next budget.

ENERGY

EXPORTATION OF LIGHT CRUDE OIL

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, in 1972 the then Minister of Energy, Joe Green, said that Canada had 932 years of natural gas and 390 years of crude oil supplies. Less than six months after that statement, Canada began importing large quantities of crude oil, something which continues to this day. The oil industry, and certain political groups, have cruelly misled Canadians to believe that energy exports, particularly of light crude oil, are in our nation's interest. The Liberal Government of today, Madam Speaker, claims that additional light crude exports of 40,000 or more barrels per day are all right by it. This, added to the export of 200,000 barrels per day of heavy crude, makes a sham of the proposed "energy self-sufficiency" by 1990.

Canadian consumers paid out $3.16 billion in 1980-81 under the Oil Import Compensation Program, which is nothing more than a tax on consumers, drives up Canada's adverse balance of payments, and pours additional millions into the coffers of the multinational oil barons.

The Public Accounts Committee of this House, and the Auditor General, raised this matter last year, and the "ironclad" Minister of Energy promised to take actions to improve the domestic market for domestic crude and thus lower the level of imports. As a result of inaction, western oil has been shut in and the producers have found the new Minister an easy mark to sell out Canadian consumers for quick oil company profits.

Surely, Madam Speaker, the solution is to expand the capacity of the Trans-Canada Pipeline so that Canadian crude can access eastern markets. This would create jobs in steel and construction, improve sales of western producers, increase taxes for Canada and western Provinces, and reduce our balance of payments.

BANKS AND BANKING

RESPONSIBILITY TO SMALL BUSINESS SECTOR OF ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I am rising because over the past several months, like many Members opposite and on this side of the House, I have received calls from small business persons, small entrepreneurs, who have been facing difficulties with their banks and financial institutions when their loans have been called. The world economy is facing a shutdown, and one of the results in our country has been difficulties with high interest rates which have been experienced by all Canadians. The Government has taken measures to protect the people hit hardest, home owners, small businesses, and farmers. We have adopted the six and five program, the essence of which is that all Canadians have a responsibility to share and bring about our economic recovery.

Our financial institutions have a critical role to play in that recovery, Madam Speaker, and we would hope that, at a time when the banks may consider themselves over-extended, be it internationally or with large domestic loans, they will not forget their responsibilities to the small people of Canada, the home owners, the small businesses, and the farmers. We all have an obligation to work our way through this recession together.

TRUST COMPANIES

GRAYMAC MORTGAGE CORPORATION AND SEAWAY MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Madam Speaker, the Government of Canada knew that Greymac Mortage Corporation and Seaway Mortgage Corporation were operating in contravention of the provisions of the Loan Companies Act and Trust Companies Act in March, 1982. Yet the Government of Canada deliberately allowed those corporations to continue to suck money out of an unsuspecting public, and to continue to operate in an unsound and improvident fashion until they were finally closed down by the actions of the Government of Ontario. The Government of Canada has powers under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act to remove deposit insurance from member corporations. Greymac and Seaway were member corporations, yet they continued to have all the favours of this Government.

This Government stands indicted, Madam Speaker, for the loss of millions and millions of dollars by persons, municipalities, and boards of education, which were led to believe these companies were sound. This Government has an obligation, having taken the clear position that Greymac and Seaway should be allowed to continue to operate, to compensate all those who were led down the garden path by the Government's refusal to act responsibly.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROVISION OF ENGLISH PRODUCTION FACILITIES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take the opportunity today to focus on a problem within the Province of New Brunswick respecting broadcasting. I want to bring to the attention of the House and the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fox) that, after these many years, as Madam Speaker will appreciate, Canadians in New Brunswick, certainly northern New Brunswick, feel it is time that the CBC allocate the funds necessary to install production capacity in New Brunswick for English CBC broadcasting, which does not exist today.

I would implore the CRTC, the Department of Communications and the CBC, to look seriously at allocating the permits and approvals necessary for CBC to install these facilities in what has to be one of the last Provinces in the country to receive Canadian broadcasting television production capacity. At the same time I would like to encourage the CBC to get on with completing their radio broadcast facilities for English programs in that Province.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR SOIL CONSERVATION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Madam Speaker, in November of last year PFRA published a report entitled "Land Degradation and Soil Conservation Issues on the Canadian Prairies". I quote from page 18:

> Almost four decades have passed since any form of concerted effort towards soil conservation has existed in Canada. Clearly a situation exists where an effective response to emerging soil degradation problems by both federal and provincial Governments must be considered essential.

The Government's downgrading of PFRA over the years, and its lack of interest in and minimum funding for agricultural research, must be condemned, as should be the Minister's recent cutback of 26 researchers in the West. As stated in the report, the responsibility for solving the problem is a joint one, provincial and federal. Unless there is co-operation and co-ordination between these levels of Government, there will never be an effective program of research and development in the area of land degradation and soil conservation.

I believe it is essential that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) table the document in this House and refer it to the Standing Committee on Agriculture for consideration. At the same time it is essential that the Minister enter into discussions immediately with his counterparts on the Prairies to develop a program of co-operation which is so important if we are to have an efficient and effective program of research in this field.

NORTH-SOUTH RELATIONS

CONSEQUENCES OF UNITED STATES ECONOMIC POLICIES

Mr. Bob Ogle (Saskatoon East): Madam Speaker, yesterday in Bonn, Germany, Ex-Chancellor Brandt, Ex-Prime Minister Heath, and Sir Shridath Ramphal, Commonwealth Secretary General, issued a statement on North-South relations which carries back to their commission's work of two years ago. In this statement they indicate that the recession they predicted in their report of two years ago is now slipping toward a world depression unless there are immediate steps taken to curtail it. They point out that U.S. Reaganomics is one of the major reasons for there not being an economic upturn around the world and why Third World countries have fallen into an even greater and more difficult situation than they were in before.

I would like to call the attention of this House of Commons, of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and of the Government and the people of Canada to the fact that the report of two years ago should be seriously looked at again, that the new recommendations made yesterday be looked at, and that we take the serious and important step of seeing that they are put into effect, otherwise the world could, as they indicate, fall into a depression.

EXCISE TAX

IMPACT OF NATURAL GAS TAX ON FARMERS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Madam Speaker, the enactment of the excise tax of 63 cents per gigajoule, which is approximately one million BTUs, was ill-conceived and counterproductive. It reduced the sale of natural gas and products made from natural gas. Thus it did not produce the desired amount of revenue, and reduced the amount of income tax. It assisted greatly in the rapid rise of farm bankruptcies in the last two years. It is forcing and has forced farmers to limit the use of fertilizers and chemicals, and compelled producers to increase summer fallow. It has seriously increased the cost of producing food, thus adding to inflation.

The excise tax adds 63 cents to the field price of $1.72 for natural gas, plus the 14 cent Canadian ownership tax and the five cent PGRT. This is excessive taxation, is increasing the cost of food for everyone, and is therefore inflationary. Any tax which increases the cost of food and discourages farmers from producing is ill-conceived and wrong. I recommend that the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) remove this burdensome tax in the forthcoming budget.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FINANCE

SIZE OF FEDERAL DEFICIT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and of the Minister of State for Finance, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I am sure he is aware that this week's Government bond issue has been a total failure and that this is a clear signal that investors are expecting interest rates to rise again. Practically every pre-budget submission received by the Minister of Finance has stated that interest rates must come down in the near future or the economic recovery and increase in employment that we desperately need just will not happen.

Since the failure of this bond issue is directly related to the fear that Canadians have about the size of the Government deficit, which is out of control, will the Prime Minister respond to this concern by telling the House what order of magnitude the deficit is going to be in the year just ending, and next year?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I am quite happy to correct the Hon. Member and tell him that today the Bank of Canada rate dropped 15 basis points. That has to be good news.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: The Hon. Member indicates that interest rates are going to be a key factor in economic recovery, and the Minister agrees. We have seen a continual drop in interest rates since last June. The Minister has indicated to all the business and labour people who have come to see him during his consultations that we will continue to put an emphasis on lower inflation and lower interest rates as key elements in our economic recovery.

As for the bond sale, I am happy to tell the Hon. Member that we expect that to continue in a normal fashion, and we expect the bonds to be sold today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, if that Member had been in touch with the bond market he would have been told that the reception for today's issue was the worst in history. That means people are worried that interest rates are going to go up again. If that happens, as the Hon. Member for Willowdale just said a minute ago, the small-businessmen, farmers, fishermen, people who have to refinance their houses and are going to be hit with a knock-out punch before they have recovered from the high interest rates of the past two years.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, I repeat, to the Prime Minister, since this is such a major problem, will the Government take cognizance of the size of the deficit and show some concern for the problems it has caused, by introducing a real program of restraint, one which will defer or cancel any unproductive spending which does not lead to the creation of jobs?

Mr. Douglas Fisher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, again I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. Again I want to point out to him that we view the sale of bonds today as a normal sale and it will be completed today despite his rhetoric.

Mr. Wilson: Then you do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. Fisher: I would point out as well that market conditions over the past couple of weeks have been soft in both Canada and the U.S., and again he has chosen to distort market conditions for his own purposes.

As to his comments on the size of the deficit, I would like to assure him that this indeed is the emphasis that the Minister has been making in pre-budget consultations. We will be happy to take his ideas as part of those consultations and consider his comments as representations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

LEIGH INSTRUMENTS CORPORATION—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE IN WATERLOO, ONT.

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce I will direct my question to the Prime Minister since it is a matter of Government policy. Statistics Canada reports that in the Waterloo region in January 22,000 people were jobless out of a total work force of 152,000. This is a record 14.2 per cent, up from 10.8 per cent last month. This past week there has been more bad news.

• (1420)

Leigh Instruments has announced it will close its industrial products division in Waterloo on April 30, with a loss of over 400 jobs. Since this company has received Government grants in the past, and since attempts are under way to salvage this company, will the Government take some initiative to try to keep the plant open while interested parties are trying to put a deal together.

An Hon. Member: Is there no one to answer over there?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, I will be happy to take note of the question on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, I see that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is now about to enter the House. I wonder if I could ask the Minister to answer the question. In light of the unemployment situation which is serious in Waterloo region, which I have just outlined to the House, and in light of the announcement that Leigh Instruments will close with a loss of over 400 jobs in April, will the Government take some initiative to try to keep the plant open while interested parties are trying to put a deal together?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, first of all I want to apologize to the Hon. Member for not being here at 2.15 p.m.

I am not familiar with the specific details of the operation of Leigh Instruments, other than what I have read in the press, because we have not received any official information. As the Hon. Member knows, the Government of Canada did designate the Kitchener area for ILAP, which was one of the first seven or eight areas in Canada so designated, so that area has had some success already. I will take the Hon. Member's point and will look into that specific situation.

Mr. McLean: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Minister for his reminder of ILAP, and the designation.

INDUSTRY AND LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF KITCHENER-WATERLOO DESIGNATION

Mr. Walter McLean (Waterloo): Madam Speaker, as the Minister will also know, yesterday B. F. Goodrich Co. Ltd. announced that it is seeking to sell its engineering products division in Kitchener, putting in jeopardy 545 people's jobs, 116 of whom will be laid off on March 11. As attempts are being made to find a buyer for the expendable Leigh and Goodrich divisions, continuing federal Government support is vital. My question to the Minister: in light of the ILAP designation at the moment, is the Minister prepared to indicate to Kitchener-Waterloo that the ILAP designation will be extended, as has been requested?

Hon. Ed Lumley (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, even from his own colleagues in the area, there are a substantial number of requests from communities all across Canada, first of all, to be designated for ILAP. I think Kitchener has had a jump on everyone else and some substantial benefits have accrued as a result of designation by the Government of Canada. His specific concern will be considered.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT TAX POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Member for Vancouver East was asking the Prime Minister questions concerning the fact that we now have more than 3.5 million Canadians who are living in a state of poverty. Neither he nor the Minister of National Health and Welfare expressed any undue concern about this reality. Indeed, it was suggested that the Government would have no new programs in the forseeable future to help the poor. My question to the Prime Minister is this: is he aware that we have a Bill before the House now at second reading stage that will in fact put a disproportionate tax increase on the poor, in comparison to the rich?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the assertion of the Hon. Member when he says that we are doing nothing to help the poor is obviously wrong. There are a whole series of measures particularly affecting the poor who are unemployed, which are in train now, and which are going to cost the Government and the people of Canada about $2 billion. So it is a slight exaggeration to say we are doing nothing.

As to the poverty line, the Hon. Member knows that that is a figure which is arbitrary in many ways. It is in dispute by the Council of Welfare which itself uses these statistics. The definition of poverty is not one on which there is any agreement, and I think it is a bit simple to just draw a line and say that everyone below that line is below the poverty line. That line is very much higher than it was several years ago. It is a moving line. It means that the people of Canada generally are getting richer. It means, since the average Canadian is getting richer, therefore the average poor person becomes poor at a higher level than he did ten years ago. So it is a conceptual notion which is debatable and which I would be happy to debate with the Members back there who are shaking their heads in ignorance.

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister continues to reveal his deep and abiding concern with the problems of the poor. One thing is certain. A Government that cared about the poor would not increase taxes on the poor at a higher rate than on the rich. That is clear.

EFFECT OF TAX LEGISLATION ON LOW INCOME FAMILIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister in this context, since the Canadian Council on Social Development has said that a family of three living on $18,000 a year is living in poverty, does he think it is reasonable that we should be debating a Bill in this House which will increase taxes on this family living in poverty, by 23 per cent, but increase taxes on a similar family of three earning $100,000 a year by only 10.5 per cent, less than one half. If he does not think that is fair, will he at least have the decency to make a commitment to the House to amend the Bill so that this unfairness is removed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is debating the Bill itself. There will be ample time to do that during the meetings of the House. If the NDP wants to move amendments, it can find out from the Member sitting next to the Leader how to move an amendment in this House, and what process is used to debate it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, it is obvious the Prime Minister just does not care. He looks after his rich friends, puts Pitfield in the Senate and puts Macdonald in a $900 a day job in a Commission, but does not do a thing about the poor of the country. That is the Prime Minister.

He has just talked nobly about an NDP amendment. I would like to ask him, and put him on the spot, if the New Democratic Party moves an amendment to remove this injustice which taxes the rich in terms of increases at half the rate it is going to impose on those at the poor level, will the Prime Minister for once act, instead of just talking about noble principles, and will he commit his Government to supporting that amendment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is saying, instead of talking will we act. If the Hon. Member would act and move his amendment, then we would know what he is talking about, maybe.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

UNEMPLOYMENT ON RESERVES

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs I will direct my question to the Minister of Employment. Since there are over 200,000 status Indians unemployed, and because we have not been able to find where the Indian Economic Development fund is, that fund that was announced with the Western Development Fund of some $345 million, of which $45 million should have spent before this month is out, I wonder if the Minister could help the Minister of Indian Affairs find that money. There is between 60 per cent and 80 per cent unemployed on most reserves. The situation is desperate. At the same time, could he assist the House by telling us how many native Indian people will be employed under the initiative that he is now signing with the Provinces?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to respond to the Member on that question, particularly to tell him and Members of the House that, just last Friday, the Minister of Indian Affairs and I worked out an agreement whereby some $21 million under the NEED program would be directly allocated to work on Indian reserves across Canada, particularly to help native people in the development, restoration and construction of housing on reserves. So we have been able to use the NEED programs as a way of providing major assistance to native people in those particular areas.

In addition to that, my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I were successfully able to negotiate and complete a Northlands Agreement with the Province of Manitoba for about $160 million, to provide major employment opportunities for native people. So we are trying to use a number of existing programs that the federal Government offers as a way of targeting directly at those particular needs.

APPLICATION OF FEED FREIGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM TO MARITIME FARMERS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister is aware that there is enough underdeveloped agricultural land in the Maritimes at least to double the output of livestock and poultry in that region. However, with the Minister's proposal to can the Crow, Maritime producers have been put under a tremendous handicap. The cost of feed grain in the Maritime region will now be crippling. Will the Minister address himself to the plight of farmers in the Maritime region and come up with a formula under the Feed Freight Assistance Program which will at least give them parity with their Prairie brothers?

• (1430)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I have met with representatives of the Maritime Provinces in the last few days. We are very much aware of their concerns, but we think that a lot of them are unwarranted, for instance the increase in the price of grain. What really rules the price of grain is the Chicago market. The Chicago market will rule the price of corn and barley no matter where it is sold, in the world or in eastern Canada.

They will not be at the disadvantage which the Hon. Member is saying. If the agri-food strategy is developed like we say it should be developed, they will be in a position where they will be more competitive than ever. That land will be developed under the programs which we are developing. We intend to work in co-operation with them.

Mr. Corbett: Madam Speaker, the Minister will know that what controls the price of feed grain now in the Atlantic region, as across the nation, is the Minister's decisions which he alone will be taking.

DIVISION OF FUNDS BETWEEN QUEBEC AND NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. His Department has earmarked $130 million to assist those regions which are not now self-sufficient to become self-sufficient in grain production. I think that is commendable. Will the Minister advise the farmers of New Brunswick what strange formula or strange new math he used in divvying up the particular $130 million which gave Quebec $90 million and the Province of New Brunswick a paltry $4 million?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member has read the agri-food strategy and what it says about developing all potential agricultural areas we have, and how they can be developed. Those which can be developed to the greatest economic advantage will be the ones developed first. We say that New Brunswick, for instance, has a tremendous potential. The Province has a role to play, but for years the Province of New Brunswick neglected agriculture in that Province, probably more than any other Province in Canada. That is not true at the present time. The Minister who is there at the present time seems to want to go ahead and develop agriculture in New Brunswick. We can do that together.

The programs which we have in that Province are commendable. They are good, they are working. The Hon. Member said "a paltry" sum. If one checks the productivity of New Brunswick as against Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Ontario, for example, which receives $16 million, one will see that Ontario has a grain surplus producing area. It will produce a million tonnes of surplus grain to be sold on world markets, et cetera, and that type of thing. I am sure the new program for productivity in New Brunswick will make it what the Hon. Member wants it to be and what we all want it to be—a much more productive area than it is at the present time.

EASTERN APPLE PRODUCERS—REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Will he tell the House what his Department has done with regard to requests for assistance to eastern Canadian apple producers whose orchards suffered severe, irreparable, and extensive frost damage in the winter of 1981, and subsequently?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has brought this to my attention, as have other Hon. Members, especially those from the Province of Quebec which has suffered the largest loss because of the severe winter of 1981. The damage had to be measured over a period of time because frost damage does not necessarily show up the first year. It can be in the second year and the third year. With regard to the Hon. Member's Province, there has been no representation by the Province saying, "Look, this is a disaster; it is too big for the Province to look after." The producers in Quebec have made that kind of representation. The Province of Quebec has made some representations but has not called it a disaster. The Province of Ontario has made some representations. We are looking at those three Provinces.

The producers of Quebec have made a claim for, I believe, $62 million to replace their losses. I think the damage in New Brunswick is about 7 per cent of over-all losses which have taken place between Ontario and Quebec. Quebec has the massive loss. We hope to have a report in the next few days or the next few weeks.

Mr. Howie: I thank the Minister for his answer, whatever it was.

REQUEST FOR EARLY DECISION

Hon. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Madam Speaker, the Minister has been in New Brunswick, in many of the areas which have been affected by severe frost. I am sure he knows about the difficult and severe situation in which farmers in Eastern Canada find themselves through no fault of their own. Would the Minister meet with his Cabinet colleagues and press for an early and favourable decision on the request made to him by eastern apple producers?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is no different from Hon. Members on this side who have the same problem in their constituencies. We are hoping to bring something forward which will be satisfactory, in the not too distant future.

RAILWAYS

FEED GRAIN TRANSPORTATION—PROPORTION OF SUBSIDIES GOING TO WEST AND TO QUEBEC

Mr. Jean-Guy Dubois (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Since the new grain transportation policy was announced on February 1, there has been a great deal of discussion in the press and among various groups in Quebec about the fact that western producers will be receiving $3.7 billion, compared to $93 million in Quebec, and it was claimed that these figures were out of all proportion. I would therefore like to ask the Minister whether he could inform the House how payments are going to be opporhoned under the new policy, especially to the railways, and perhaps give us a breakdown of the $3.7 billion?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): To be able to give you a breakdown, I will have to limit myself to the conclusion, which is that if we look at how the $3.7 billion the Federal Government is going to invest in this plan during the next four years is going to be distributed, we see that producers will be getting approximately $1 billion over four years, which is about 27 per cent of the total $3.7 billion. I may add that the western grain producer will be paying more for grain transportation, and in the final analysis, western producers are going to pay twice the amount they are paying now under the Crow Rate system, that is twice $150 million, and that is going to mean definite increase in payments by producers.

GRAIN

TIMING OF CHANGE IN CROWSNEST PASS FREIGHT RATE—EFFECT ON EXPORTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport who also represents the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board in the House. The Minister in charge of the Wheat Board was quoted as saying that our international competitors in the grain market have an advantage over Canadian producers due to high domestic subsidies in those countries, and that Canada will have to lower its asking prices in order for its grain to meet the competition. In light of these market realities could the Minister explain why the Government is choosing this particular time to kill the Crow, the one long-term program we have to keep our landlocked farmers competitive in world markets?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, as I said two days ago, the debate on subsidies being paid to grain producers around the world is a long-standing one. In our instance in this particular item, the payments are made for production and transportation. We think in international terms that they are comparable with and lower than what other countries of the world pay in similar areas. The debate, as I see it, is not really one of quality. It is one of quantity. From our point of view, others are doing more in terms of subsidizing their export program than we are.

Mr. Althouse: The Minister seems to have missed the point of the question. I was asking why they chose to reduce any semblance of subsidy in this country when it is fairly obvious that other countries are increasing their subsidies because of increasing competition and price cutting throughout the world.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE STUDIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt-Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could explain why he has been making statements indicating that both the East and West will benefit from the disruption to the agricultural community as a result of the rapid change in the Crow.

Will he table in the House the studies which must have been done to prove what he has been saying, so that we can look at the assumptions to see where the increased production will take place, how it will take place, where it could be sold and, more important, at what price?

• (1440)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I do not know whether the Hon. Member has the documentation. Loads of documentation have been made public. If he has read all of it, the Hon. Member should know which figures and so on that we are using. I do not know of any document that we have used that has not been made public, but I will check and find out if there are others that are available. If there are and if these are working documents that have not been made public they will be because I think that even a blind economist on a galloping horse could see that what we are saying is true.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PENITENTIARIES

CANCELLATION OF UNIVERSITY TUITION FOR INMATES

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, my question, if I can complete it without interruption, is for the Solicitor General. Is he considering reversing his incredibly inept decision to cancel the college and university course program in federal prisons?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I am not considering reversing that decision. But as I indicated at the time, I am encouraging the Correctional Service of Canada and others to come forward with far less expensive methods of providing post-secondary education for inmates.

Mr. Epp: Private diplomas.

Mr. Kaplan: I have in mind the types of programs that existed, about which the Hon. Member should know, before the present university contract program was introduced, and other ways.

OFFER OF OFFSETTING EXPENDITURE CUT

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham-Northumberland): Madam Speaker, as one who had a little bit to do with the continuation of that program in the first place, may I present this challenge to the Minister? If we can show the Solicitor General where to save $712,000 annually elsewhere in his Department, will he then reinstitute this very worth-while program?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I think it is the responsibility of the Opposition, and of all Members, to come up with ways in which the Government can perform its functions more efficiently.

Mr. Crosbie: Resign.

Mr. Kaplan: I would like very much to see the cuts which the Hon. Member would propose.

MACDONALD ROYAL COMMISSION

INQUIRY WHETHER REMUNERATION OF COMMISSION COULD BE REDUCED

Hon. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, the Minister of National Health and Welfare admitted there would be nothing in the next budget to provide relief for 750,000 elderly Canadians who are living in poverty. Since the Government has already agreed to pay Mr. Robert and Mr. Macdonald between $800 and $900 per day for a study on the economy, could I perhaps ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister, considering the astonishment with which Canadians received the news about these stipends, whether it occurred to him to ask those great Canadians, Mr. Robert and Mr. Macdonald, to take a cut in salary in order to help us build up the country's economy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Madam Speaker, yesterday, I suggested the Member for Joliette ask the Members for Vancouver Centre and Saskatoon West what they were being paid as lawyers or what they were paid by the Clark Government when the Member for Vancouver Centre was working for that Government. Could he give us some figures and the number of hours per year, Madam Speaker?

Mr. La Salle: Fifty dollars an hour!

Mr. Trudeau: How many hours per year, Madam Speaker.

Mr. La Salle: He did not work that long.

Mr. Trudeau: The Hon. Member forgot to ask and is quoting a figure at random. I am going to ask his permission to check this information. Regarding the statement made by the Minister yesterday, Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member completely misunderstood. There is no way anyone can know what will be in the budget because the budget has not even been drafted. Neither the Minister nor myself know any of the details of the budget, and as the House is aware, it will be a while before the budget is brought down. Perhaps the Hon. Member should refrain from speaking in the House if he is going to misinterpret perfectly logical answers given by the Minister.

Mr. La Salle: Madam Speaker, I have a supplementary. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister to inform the House how much Michel Robert had received from the Government during the last three years. I hope the answer to that question will also be forthcoming from the Government side. In any case, since wage increases were considered to be an important factor in the inflationary spiral, could the Minister inform the House today how Canada's intrepid Liberals are going to convince Canadians that wage cuts are necessary to maintain inflation at a reasonable level? I would appreciate it if the Minister would tell me whether or not the credibility of these men will suffer as a result of the remuneration they are receiving from the Government at the present time?

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, since we are exchanging questions, the Hon. Member mentioned $50 an hour. For an eight-hour day that would be $400 per day. Mr. Macdonald is getting $350.

Mr. La Salle: Nine hundred and twenty-five dollars, to be more exact.

Mr. Trudeau: Madam Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member would care to listen to what I am saying and refrain from shouting as he did yesterday when I was trying to answer his questions. Fifty dollars an hour is $400 a day. I also asked him to find out from the Member from Saskatoon what he was charging in his law office. When he does, he will realize what lawyers are being paid. I mentioned Mr. Mulrooney yesterday. The Hon. Member can find out. He has a number of friends in the Progressive Conservative Party who are lawyers. He will see how their figures compare. As far as the fight against inflation is concerned, the Hon. Member knows full well, as I explained yesterday, that we have managed to bring inflation down from 12.5 per cent to around 8 or 9 at the present time. And it is still going down. I think that instead of criticizing for no reason at all, the Hon. Member should support the Government in its efforts to bring down inflation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LANGUAGE TRAINING FOR QUEBEC RECIPIENTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. For some time now his Department has been considering a proposal to allow Anglophone unemployment insurance recipients in Quebec to take French language training required for work purposes without losing their unemployment insurance benefits. As the Minister will appreciate, it is almost impossible to find work in Quebec without a knowledge of French, and consequently it is an essential work skill. Would the Minister say whether his Department has made a decision on this matter to allow unemployment recipients to take a language course where necessary for work, without losing their unemployment insurance benefits?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, first I would like to thank the Hon. Members for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce-Lachine East and Laurier for having brought this very important question to my attention. I want to report to the Hon. Member that I am personally very sympathetic to the proposal that we adjust the regulations for unemployment insurance to allow language training where it is a job-related matter. What I intend to do, in fact, I have already started the process, is to refer the matter with a recommendation to the Commission to examine the implications and to make a decision within a matter of a week.

FISHERIES

REQUEST THAT CHARGES AGAINST BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIANS BE DROPPED

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan-Malahat-The Islands): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I was pleased to see that the Minister apologized to the Indian people in British Columbia for remarks made by his Department regarding the 129 Indian people who were arrested on fisheries charges after an entrapment process especially designed for Indian people. Will the Minister request the Minister of Justice to drop all charges based on entrapment so that the Minister of Fisheries can establish a proper working relationship with the Indian people, a relationship that will do justice to their historic rights in the fishing industry and will also protect our fisheries resource? Will the Minister see that these charges are dropped?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, when I met with the Indian people, they told me that an impression had been created leading people to believe they were the worst offenders under the Fisheries Act. That is not so and I have told them that. But let me state it publicly.

Over the last three years in British Columbia 80 per cent of the charges laid by my officers were against white people. If any impression was created that the Indians are the only ones committing offences, that is incorrect. For having involuntarily created any inaccurate impression, I apologize publicly.

As for the charges, it would be completely contrary to my duty to comment on something which is the sole responsibility of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice has told me to convey to the Indian people that if they have any grounds on which the charges can be dropped, that the Minister would study them. I have conveyed that message to the Indian people and it is up to them to put before the Minister of Justice any arguments, facts or elements for his consideration.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROGRAM INFORMATION FOR MINORITY GROUPS

Mr. Laverne Lewycky (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Multiculturalism. The Hum and Chan Study on Chinese in Winnipeg indicates the problem of program take-up for Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement among minority groups. Has the Directorate of Multiculturalism undertaken, or will the Minister undertake studies on this problem, and has the Minister of National Health and Welfare conferred with him on the negative and discriminatory way in which her six and five bills disproportionately affect groups such as the Chinese, who, I might add, are celebrating 125 years in Canada this year and are celebrating the Chinese New Year as well this weekend?

Hon. Jim Fleming (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Madam Speaker, while celebrating, may I congratulate the Hon. Member on his recent marriage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: May I also thank him for giving me notice of his question, although I just received it in the course of Question Period. Therefore, I am not familiar with the detail of the Hum and Chan study.

I have had a chance in the last few minutes to talk to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She has indicated to me that, indeed, in the case of the Guaranteed Income Supplement, there are some indications, if I am correct, of difficulties because of language barriers, particularly for some of our Canadians of particular ethnic origins, in becoming aware of the availability of the program and taking up the opportunity. I know that through our discussion and notice of the question that she has indicated to me she will be looking further to see what can be done about that situation. However, I do not see how that can relate to the six and five program.

Mr. Malone: Madam Speaker, I trust that the Hon. Member for Dauphin will be sending a copy of today's Hansard to his fiancee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Wrong again, Jim.

RAILWAYS

MEASUREMENT OF PERFORMANCE IN TRANSPORTING GRAIN

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It is based on the same question that I asked the Prime Minister a week ago. Bearing in mind that he has stated his intention of making changes with respect to the Crow rate, and knowing that the railways will be getting more funding from both the Government and the farmers, will there be an assured method of guaranteeing a record of performance by the railways and how will that performance be measured? Will there be a penalty attached such that the Government can ensure that the railways will meet the record of performance that is established in the new legislation that is to come forward?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I believe I can make three points on the subject. First, the railways, in return for interim payments, have committed themselves in public to a number of investments. This is public knowledge now, so anyone in Canada, particularly the press, will be in a position to judge the implementation of these investments.

Second, with respect to CN at least, CN has to present an annual budget and a five-year plan to the Government so that the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Transport and others will be in a position to determine if CN in particular is living up to the five-year plan that it has presented to the Government.

Third, in addition to all that we will have a system under which the co-ordinating agency will supervise and monitor the guarantees that the railways will be giving on a yearly basis as, for example, to how many tonnes they will transport to Thunder Bay, Vancouver, and so on.

There will be a trial period—this is possibly what my hon. friend is talking about—in which a system of punishment and rewards will be tested. After a trial period this will be implemented on a fully executive basis.

Mr. Malone: Regarding the notion that the railways would make a commitment to themselves, the Minister should be reminded that Judas made commitments to himself.

MONITORING OF VOLUME DELIVERIES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Is the Minister presuming that it is satisfactory to call for an increase in the cost to farmers without in fact having a specific target of delivery by volume within the legislation, and that this will be left to a Government five-year plan without farmer input into that plan, and left to a study of the railways without having penalties attached? To do otherwise is simply to tax the taxpayers and tax the farmers for the good of all Canadians for the movement of grain, but with no results for guarantee of delivery. Will the Minister at least take under advisement that there is a necessity to have a guaranteed commitment of volume delivery, otherwise the plan is doomed to failure?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, the monitoring agency will have representatives of different groups in the grain industry. There representatives will be able to make their views very well known.

My hon. friend should compare the future regime to what exists now. What exists now is a fixed rate of one-half cent per tonne-mile. There is no obligation on the part of the railways now to deliver at that rate.

Mr. Benjamin: There is so.

Mr. Pepin: They cannot deliver at that rate. The most they are committed to is best effort.

The fixed rate is there. The fact that railways were not in a position to carry grain at that price is why the federal Government, for over a decade, has had to invest $1.1 billion in the purchase of hopper cars, rehabilitating branch lines and so on.

I am saying that the regime which we will establish will provide much better protection to the farmers than they have now. I will demonstrate that ad nauseam in due course.

MINISTER'S STATEMENT IN RIMOUSKI, P.Q.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport who, this past week, has been on a Liberal travelling caravan in the Province of Quebec. I want to ask him whether or not he in fact stated what is reported in Le Soleil of February 8, 1983. Did he state the following to an audience in Rimouski:

[Translation]

I quote:

Mr. Pepin made a slip when he called western protesters imbeciles.

[English]

I want to ask the Minister on behalf of my friends in western Canada, and in the Province of Quebec for that matter, if what the Minister has said is that people who are opposed to the Government's policies are imbeciles? Did the Minister, in fact, state that, and is this another policy of saying one thing in the Province of Quebec and another thing in Western Canada? Finally, I would ask him if he would come to western Canada and say that on a public stage?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I have recently been to western Canada for a number of days now, and what I was referring to was the gross exaggeration on both sides, on the western side as well as the eastern side.

If I may refer to what was said in the House yesterday on that subject, there is absolutely nothing in the publicity issued in Quebec that we are embarrassed about. My hon. friend from Vegreville made a mistake yesterday. I will call it a mistake. He did not quote the whole sentence. I will quote it in French for translation. What we said yesterday was:

[Translation]

The new policy will not give a marked advantage to pork and beef producers in Western Canada to compete against those of the East on their traditional markets.

[English]

That is quite different from what the Member for Vegreville said yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DESCRIPTION OF OPPONENTS OF RATE CHANGE

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): Madam Speaker, that is all very interesting. What I want to know is—and the Prime Minister smiles. He calls western Canadians uninformed.

Mr. Trudeau: No. I am saying it is interesting.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Will the Minister confirm or deny that he referred to people in western Canada who are opposed to his policy on the Crowsnest Pass rate as imbeciles, and would he be prepared to come out to a place like Delisle, Saskatchewan, and stand on a platform with me and repeat that statement to western Canadians?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will repeat that those who have grossly exaggerated the effect of the policy, such as one farmer, for example, who said in the West that it would cost him $25,000 more in the first year because of this policy when in fact it will cost him $5,000 more in the fourth year, deserve the qualification—whichever one my hon. friend wants to take.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, it being Thursday, I would like to ask the Government House Leader if he could give the House some idea as to the business for the rest of the week and as far into next week as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Be nice this time.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, last week I had foreseen this appointment and I have congratulated my hon. colleague. I will not repeat myself this week except to say that I am sure that we will keep going along very well in the interests of Parliament and the people of this country.

Today we will be dealing with the third reading of Bill C-132, and tomorrow we will be debating the report of the striking committee. No House order is required, but we have agreement among the House Leaders that this debate will end no later than five o'clock tomorrow.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as far as the business of the House for next week is concerned, on Monday we shall resume debate on the second reading stage of Bill C-139, to amend the Income Tax Act, and since we have already spent ten hours on this debate, we hope to be able to complete second reading as soon as possible, so that the House can sit in Committee of the Whole to consider the details of this legislation, which arises from several previous budgets and ministerial statements on the financial situation.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) also intends to give notice of a Bill to authorize the Government to borrow additional funds until the end of the financial year and the beginning of the next one. This legislation is expected to be introduced next Monday, and if it is, I would like to inform the House that Tuesday morning at eleven o'clock we shall proceed with debate on second reading of this very urgent borrowing authority Bill.

Wednesday will be private members' day, as usual, and Thursday, if necessary, we shall continue debate on second reading of the borrowing authority Bill. I shall be giving notice in due time if there is to be an Opposition day next week, possibly on Friday, but that has not been decided yet. Madam Speaker, that was, substantially, the order of business of the House for the coming week.

I offered congratulations earlier concerning the marriage of the Hon. Member for Dauphin (Mr. Lewycky). I was a little in anticipation of the event. I want to change that instead to congratulations on his engagement. It was the light smile on his face recently and his pleasant comportment in the House which obviously misled me!

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—FAILURE TO TABLE ORDER PURSUANT TO CANADA GRAIN ACT

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I have a point of order with regard to the tabling of documents. I waited to see whether the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would rise today to table an order under the Canada Grain Act which was an amendment to the Schedule to the Act, SOR/82-620. Section 15(6) of the Canada Grain Act contains the following clause:

> An order made under subsection (2) shall be laid before Parliament within 15 days from the making of the order or, if Parliament is not then sitting, on any of the first 15 days next thereafter that Parliament is sitting.

That particular instrument was published in the Canada Gazette in June of last year. Fifteen days expired on July 8. I recognize the fact that Your Honour has indicated in the past that you have no ability to tell the Government to obey the law, but I would point out that this was drawn to the attention of the Department and, consequently, the Minister's Department, by the Counsel of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, who wrote to the Department on September 20.

We received a response from the Department of Agriculture several months later, on December 29, in which the Assistant Deputy Minister acknowledged that the law had not been kept by the Government. It had not complied with the law by tabling that instrument in the House on the following grounds:

> Due to an oversight on our part the referenced Order was not tabled.
> We have now prepared the necessary documentation for Mr. Whelan's signature and we expect that the Order will be tabled when Parliament resumes sitting in mid-January 1983.

That Order has never been tabled in Parliament.

I certainly recognize that Your Honour has made a finding that you cannot force the Government to comply with the law, but there is nothing more fundamental to the role of Parliament than the whole question concerning the rule of law. In instances where the Government recognizes itself that it has not complied with the law, and where it chooses to simply ignore the law, surely Parliament's function is being undermined by the Government.

Parliament does not frivolously include in legislation the requirement that an order be tabled in Parliament. When the Government simply ignores the law, thumbs its nose at it and pretends it is of no consequence, I think there is serious damage done to respect for the rule of law in Canada. Second, it seriously undermines the ability of Parliament to discharge its functions. That is why I draw this matter to the attention of Your Honour and the House today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Madam Speaker: I am sure that the point of the Hon. Member has been taken by the House. As he rightfully said, the Speaker has no means of determining whether the law has been followed or not; nor is it the responsibility of the Speaker to interpret the law. The Speaker certainly has no authority or way to force anyone to follow the law.

• (1510)

The point of the Hon. Member is well taken by the House. I would urge him to take recourse other than that which he has now taken in order to satisfy his request.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to revert to House business for a moment in order to ask a question of the Government House Leader.

In giving us an indication of the business that he anticipates, the Government House Leader has taken us as far as Thursday next. He indicated that he might be in a position at some future time to tell us about Opposition days. He will recall that a week ago I asked both him and the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether they would consider a statement on motions on the very topic which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has now tabled, the document related to the framework agreement.

Since there is no Opposition day in the immediate future and no apparent opportunity for a reasonable debate on the question of the framework agreement, is either the House Leader or the Secretary of State for External Affairs prepared to indicate whether a statement will be made on motions to allow for some discussion of this very important document?

Mr. Pinard: I have indicated that at the beginning of next week I might designate one day next week. That could well be Friday next, which will still be next week. The Opposition would have a good opportunity to raise this matter if they felt it was important to be raised. Meanwhile, I want to assure my colleague that he will have the opportunity to ask questions on the matter during Question Period every day next week. The Minister, his assistant, the acting Minister, or his Parliamentary Secretary will be here and will be very pleased to answer questions on the subject.

I want to assure my colleague that he will have ample opportunity to raise this matter. There are still four Opposition days before March 26, and between March 26 and June 30 an additional 13 Opposition days will be available. If they really care about this matter, they will use one of those days to debate this most important issue.

Mr. Deans: Madam Speaker, I am most grateful to the Minister for pointing out that we will have an opportunity to ask questions. We have that anyway. The difficulty is, as he will understand, that this is a document of vital importance, not only to Canada but to many other parts of the world. Up until this point in time, the document has not been available to Canadians for their scrutiny and, therefore, has not been debated in any form.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Government has put the whole system of statements on motions into disuse, is it not reasonable to ask, on a matter of such vital importance to the country, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs stand in his place and at least for ten minutes explain the content, the substance and direction that this agreement will take?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, I was most sympathetic to the request of the Hon. Member until he stated that the Government has made misuse of Statements by Ministers. It is the Opposition that misused this period of time.

Mr. Deans: I said disuse, not misuse.

Mr. Pinard: Disuse as well was caused by the Opposition. I feel they have ample opportunity to raise this matter. The documents were tabled today and are available. Parliament is aware of this. Starting tomorrow this question can be raised during Question Period. There are some 20 Opposition days between now and June 30.

If the NDP are really serious about this, they will see fit to use one of their Opposition days to raise this matter and not force the Government to limit debate all the time because they want to score political points and prevent Parliament from working, as they did with the last three Bills dealing with the six and five policy of the Government which have succeeded in bringing down inflation to 8 or 9 per cent.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, I wish to speak on the same point of order. I would point out to the House Leader of the Government that traditionally Canada has always put international commitments before the House of Commons for approval or advice. This went on in the regime of the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. They all believed that Parliament had a role to play in the formulation of our foreign policy and that international commitments were to be ratified by the House of Commons. This practice has died out in the last 10, 12 or 14 years. This is a major commitment that we are making.

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I cannot see the point of order in the Hon. Member's intervention. I believe he is debating the substance. I know he would like to do that, but this is not the time. We are dealing with House business. If the Hon. Member has a question about that, he may ask it. However, he may not enter the debate now on this particular matter.

Mr. McKinnon: Madam Speaker, this is a very difficult hour that you have caught us in. The Secretary of State for External Affairs now wishes to embarrass us on this. He has locked the barn door and now wants us to debate something that has been cast in stone by the very same Secretary of State for External Affairs. This has reduced Parliament to a nonentity. Why do we have a Parliament? I would ask the House Leader, why do we have a Parliament if we have nothing to say about international commitments that the Government enters into?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, that is exactly the question I was tempted to ask the Hon. Member in 1979 when he was Minister of National Defence. He made a very important decision on double-tracking in relation to NATO, but did he seize Parliament of that? I just wonder what he did at the time. He is in a very bad position to preach any example to be set.

The Hon. Member quoted previous Prime Ministers. In 1968 there were changes in the rules which allowed the Opposition the benefit of 25 days during the year. Therefore, they have full opportunity to debate any matter of their choice, including this very important subject. If they consider the subject so important, they will make it possible for Parliament to be seized of the question. We certainly will not object. We will be glad to participate in the debate.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. WISE—ALLEGED INACCURATE STATEMENT OF MR. WHELAN

Hon. John Wise (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I tried to raise this matter during Question Period today, but time did not permit. My point of order will provide the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with an opportunity to clarify or perhaps change his response to reflect more accurately the actual case. In his answer to my question of yesterday, as reported at page 22657 of Hansard for February 9, the Minister concluded answering my first question by saying:

> For instance, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture unanimous endorsed Canagrex yesterday.

As we all know—

Madam Speaker: Order, please. I do not see any point of order in what the Hon. Member has said up until now. He seems to want to continue the debate on an answer which he received from the Minister. I remind him that that does not contribute a point of order.

Mr. Wise: Madam Speaker, the fact is that it is an inaccurate statement. The CFA meeting yesterday did not—

Madam Speaker: Order. That does not constitute a valid point of order. The Hon. Member may seek clarification or correction of a statement on another occasion, but not under the guise of a point of order.

MR. LEWIS—PROCEDURE RESPECTING STATEMENTS ON MOTIONS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on the point of order with respect to the question whether statements on motions have been used or misused by the Government. I want to correct something for the record which was alluded to today by the Government House Leader, namely the question whether statements on motions were abused or misused.

I did not bring this to Your Honour's attention through a question of privilege, but on a previous occasion the House Leader alluded to the fact that questioning on statements on motions had gone on far too long. As I understand it, the length of time for questioning on a statement on motions is in Your Honour's jurisdiction. I want you to know from this side that the last time there was a statement on motions, we felt it was the appropriate thing for the Minister to do. That was 14 months ago.

It is our position that statements on motions should be used as the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) said, and that you have sole control over the time of questioning. I want it to be very clear that we feel that is your jurisdiction and it should not be referred to by the Government House Leader as an abuse of the process.

• (1520)

Madam Speaker: I will refer the Hon. Member to the discussion which took place a few weeks ago on that specific point. If he looks in Hansard, I believe he will find a statement made by myself exactly on the point which the Hon. Member has raised now. The time allocated to the different sides for statements and for questioning on motions is entirely in the hands of the Speaker. I then explained, I believe, the rule of thumb which was followed. I believe that question was dealt with completely at that time.

Hon. Yvon Pinard (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, as you just indicated this was dealt with completely the last time, and you were right in so doing. You added that the Opposition could make it much easier for you to use the rule of thumb. Therefore, the Opposition has a role to play in all of this and it was not well played in the past.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, on the point raised by the Government House Leader, to begin with we cannot determine whether there will be any statements on motions. We have asked for them, we have begged for them. We have attempted to get from the Government the opportunity to debate this very important matter of the Cruise missile and the deployment of it in Canada for test purposes.

I want to ask the Hon. Member now, if we were to agree to have such a statement with a time limit today, expiring, let us say, in no more than one hour from now, would the Government House Leader be prepared to have the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) make a statement on motions dealing with the agreement just signed in Washington?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, after a brief consultation with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnnon), I will indicate that we would be pleased to associate ourselves with the comments of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party in the interest of having this matter discussed in Parliament.

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this matter was not raised yesterday at the House Leaders' meeting. I understand my hon. colleague could not attend, with good reasons, and he sent a replacement. But this matter was not raised.

I have just indicated that there will be other opportunities to raise the matter in Parliament. If the NDP had not forced the Government to limit debate on three Bills which required the first three weeks of the 1983 session, then perhaps it would be much easier for the Government to agree to such a request; but we have some urgent legislation to be dealt with which requires Government time. Under the new rules, the Government is limited to three days a week, giving Wednesdays to Private Members and one day to the Opposition. Therefore, if the Opposition forces the Government to limit debate on any stage of a Bill in the future, it is most difficult to agree to give statements to the Opposition.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I also believe this is an extremely urgent and important matter, but I do not think an hour given to it is in any way going to exhaust discussion.

I would like to ask a question of the House Leader. There were some discussions earlier to the effect that this item might be the subject of a full debate, that is, a debate on general disarmament, that it might take one to three days, and that there might be some arrangement among the House Leaders that certain Opposition days, and perhaps a Government day, would be given up to this particular subject. I do not know of any subject which is more important. I would ask the House Leader whether negotiations to that effect have gone on, or are they going on, or would he broach the subject to the other House Leaders?

Mr. Pinard: Madam Speaker, this is a very interesting suggestion which can be taken into consideration. The Hon. Member raised it privately with me previously. I hope that in the near future, if the Opposition is willing to consider facilitating passage of Government legislation, we would be in a position to negotiate such an arrangement, that the Opposition would give one or two of its days and the Government would be in a position to give a day.

But I would like to make it very clear that we have to deal with some other pressing and urgent legislation, and if the Opposition continues to force the Government to limit debate on each stage of each Bill, it is not possible to talk about giving Government time for the purpose of discussing any other matters than the Bills chosen by the Government to be dealt with. If the Opposition wants to co-operate, and I believe there is room for co-operation since the subject is most important, the Government is open-minded to giving up some of its time, provided the Opposition is also disposed to give some of its time. However, we will be in a better position to assess that one or two weeks down the road when we see what happens with the two finance Bills which will be before the House.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, on a point of order and to correct the record, obviously we cannot discuss here what went on in House Leaders' meetings, but there might have been an inference that the matter was not raised at the House Leaders' meeting. I would like to point out to the House that it has now been confirmed that it was raised by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay-Atikokan (Mr. McRae) with the Government House Leader.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Peterson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 3,628, 4,396, 4,550, 4,627 and 4,635.

[Text]

SAMPLING OF INCOME TAX RETURNS FOR STATISTICAL PURPOSES

Question No. 3,628—Mr. Blenkarn:

1. In preparing the budget papers, did the Government examine a sample of 150,000 income tax returns and, if so, is it the Government's view that a representative sample of those earning over $100,000 in income was 296 sample income tax returns?

2. Is it the Government's view that 40 to 50 income tax returns in those earning over $200,000 is a representative return?

3. Is it the Government's view that, in taking 150,000 returns, it really had a proper representative sample of those earning $100,000 and more and those earning $200,000 and more, in view of the vast differentials between people in the larger earning brackets?

4. Of the people earning $200,000 or more, how many in the sample consistently over the past five years earned over $200,000 or was $200,000 or better a single or unusual return for those persons, enabling them to take advantage of general averaging and other methods of reducing an exceptionally large earning year?

5. Over the past five years, how many persons consistently earned (a) at least $200,000 or more a year (b) over $100,000 a year?

6. In compiling the statistic on persons earning over $100,000 a year, did the Government only use those persons who consistently earn over $100,000 a year or did it include those who on a one-shot basis earned $100,000 or better?

7. Who developed the word "tax expenditure" in the Government service?

8. Whose idea was it that income deferred or allowances made to individuals was, in fact, a tax expenditure?

9. Who prepared the tax expenditure detail on which the budget was based?

10. Is it the Government's view that a person who owns a single family house clear of mortgage is, in fact, receiving a benefit?

11. Is it the Government's view that those who have children and a spouse and the spouse declares no taxable income are receiving a taxable benefit and therefore fall within the tax expenditure theory of the Government?

12. Is it the Government's view that a capital income claimed to be a capital gain that is really only an inflationary gain is really income?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. In preparing the budget papers, reference was made to a data set based on detailed information transcribed from approximately 150,000 tax returns. These tax returns were selected using a stratified random sampling technique. One aspect of this type of sampling is that the rate of sampling increases with the level of income. The number of returns with incomes over $100,000 actually included in the sample was 14 per cent of all returns filed reporting incomes over $100,000. This may be compared to a 1 per cent sampling ratio over-all. For incomes greater than $100,000 the 14 per cent sample represent 3,800 returns. Thus, the sample of such returns is considered adequate.

2. The number of returns included in the sample for incomes over $200,000 is 1,250 for a sampling rate of 21 per cent. Again, this is considered adequate.

3. Although the size distribution of tax returns by income is highly skewed, the stratified sampling technique used to select tax returns was specifically designed to anticipate this factor and to provide a reasonable degree of accuracy in the upper tail of the distribution.

4. The available data do not allow an answer to this question because the sample is not a longitudinal sample.

5. We do not have an exact answer to this question for the reasons given in answer 4. However, some indicators of variability of incomes over time are available. These show that a substantial majority of high income filers (those with incomes over $50,000) had average net incomes over the preceding four years that were close to or over their net income in 1979.

6. The statistics published in the budget papers, where they refer to individuals' incomes, refer to incomes in the given year. They do not refer to average incomes over a period of years.

7. The words "tax expenditure" can be traced back at least as far as 1969 when Professor Stanley Surrey of Harvard University explored the concept in his book "Pathways to Tax Reform". In Canada, the concept had been the subject of discussion in publications by the National Welfare Council and Professor Smith for the Canadian Tax Foundation before it was formally used by the Government of Canada in the publication of the Tax Expenditure Account in 1979 by the then Minister of Finance, Hon. John Crosbie.

8. It is generally recognized that income deferral or special allowances constitute tax preferences in businesses and individual Canadians have requested assistance in this form to encourage specific activities. The Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account published in December 1979 describes in detail the concept of tax expenditures.

9. The detailed tax expenditure analysis underlying the November 12, 1981 budget was prepared by officials in the Tax Policy and Legislation Branch of the Department of Finance.

10. For tax purposes, the answer is no.

11. The personal tax exemptions for dependent children and for a dependent spouse are considered to be tax expenditures. The reasoning is outlined on pages 18 and 19 of the Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account, 1979.

12. A distinction should be made between real and nominal income. The so-called inflationary component of a realized capital gain is part of nominal income, but is not part of real income. The current income tax base is nominal income. While the adverse effects of using nominal rather than real income as the tax base are recognized, it should also be appreciated that switching the tax base to real income would entail a major reform of the income tax system. These issues are discussed in A Review of the Taxation of Capital Gains in Canada, November 1980, in the tax expenditure context in the Government of Canada Tax Expenditure Account, December 1979, pages 9 and 10, and in Inflation and the Taxation of Personal Investment Income, June 1982.

PETRO-CANADA INTERNATIONAL

Question No. 4,396—Mr. Shields:

1. Since the establishment of Petro-Canada International, announced in the October, 1980 budget, which (a) countries (b) governments (c) private and non-profit organizations (d) regional organizations (e) international agencies received assistance from Petro-Canada International?

2. For each case, what was the (a) nature of the assistance or services (b) amount of assistance?

3. Were outside consultants employed by Petro-Canada International and, if so, in each case (a) what was his/her name (b) what was the amount paid (c) what services were rendered?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Petro-Canada International Assistance Corporation reports as follows:

1. (a)—(e) Petro-Canada International became operational in January, 1982 and as of July 5, 1982, PCIAC has not provided assistance to any country, government, private and non-profit organization, regional organization or international agency.

2. Not applicable.

3. No.

DND—ANALYSIS OF FUTURE POLITICAL SITUATION IN SAUDI ARABIA

Question No. 4,550—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the Department of National Defence award a $10,000 contract to Conant and Associates Limited of Great Falls, Virginia for an analysis of the future political situation in Saudi Arabia and, if so (a) on what date will the study be completed (b) will copies be available to Members of Parliament?

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Minister of National Defence): The Department of Supply and Services on behalf of the Department of National Defence awarded a $10,000 contract to Conant and Associates Ltd. of Great Falls, Virginia for an analysis of the future strategic and military situation in Saudi Arabia.

(a) The study has been completed and is presently being examined with a view to its acceptance and publication by DND's scientific authority.

(b) If accepted, copies will be available to Members of Parliament by early 1983.

TESTING OF COMPRESSED NATURAL GAS AS A VEHICULAR FUEL

Question No. 4,627—Mr. Mazankowski:

Was a study conducted on behalf of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to test and demonstrate the technical and economic feasibility of a compressed natural gas as a vehicule fuel in a captive commercial taxi fleet and, if so (a) by whom was the study done and what was his/her expertise in energy research (b) what was the cost (c) what were the results (d) to what use were the results put?

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources reports as follows:

EM&R is presently conducting two demonstrations to evaluate the technical and economic feasibility of compressed natural gas as a vehicular fuel. The first demonstration involves the Black Top Taxi Co. of Vancouver. The second demonstration is with Inland Natural Gas Company in Kamloops, British Columbia, and utilizes a fleet of light to medium trucks.

(a) Mr. Sam Chessa of Black Top Taxi is managing the taxi fleet demonstration and the project has engaged Resourcecon Ltd., a consulting firm, to manage the data acquisition and economic analysis. Dr. G. Born, formerly of the UBC Alternative Fuels Laboratory, has been engaged to provide the engineering assessment. The Inland Natural Gas demonstration has engaged Davis Engineering Company to provide the requisite engineering and economic expertise.

(b) The cost for each demonstration is $125,000, for a total of $250,000.

(c) and (d) To date both programs are in the process of start up and data gathering. Thus, no results have been submitted. The terms of the contracts do stipulate quarterly reporting and the first set of results is due in early 1983.

INTERNATIONAL PRICE OF OIL

Question No. 4,635—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. If the international price of oil were to fall to (a) $25 per barrel (U.S.) (b) $20 per barrel (U.S.), what impact would this have on (i) Canadian prices for old and new oil (ii) consumer prices (iii) Government revenues (iv) domestic supply and demand (v) payments under the import compensation program?

2. Has the Government made a contingency plan with respect to Canadian oil prices and the federal-provincial oil pricing agreements should world oil prices fall to $25 (U.S.) or below?

Hon. Paul J. Cosgrove (Minister of State (Finance)): 1. (a) If the world oil price were to fall to $25 per barrel (U.S.) from its current level of roughly $31.50 per barrel, we would expect the following impacts:

(i) Canadian wellhead prices for conventional or old oil would drop to roughly $25 per barrel and remain at that level for as long as the world price did;

(ii) the reference price for new oil would drop from approximately $44 per barrel to $35.50 where it also would remain for as long as world prices stayed the same;

(iii) the weighted average price facing Canadian consumers—the blended price of oil at Toronto—would be lower by roughly $5.50 per barrel, that is $30.25 per barrel, than it would have been were the world oil price higher, which would be $35.75;

(iv) consumer prices as measured by the Consumer Price Index would be approximately one-half of one percentage point (0.4 per cent) lower during fiscal year 1983/84 and almost a full percentage point (0.9 per cent) lower the following year;

(v) Government revenues could drop by as much as $1.7 billion during fiscal year 1983/84 and by $1.4 billion the following year from what they would have been at the higher world price;

(vi) the effect upon domestic supply of crude oil would be minimal over the period. Domestic demand for crude oil could be slightly higher in the 1983/84 fiscal year (roughly 1 per cent and roughly higher by 3 per cent the following year);

(vii) although imports of crude oil would rise slightly compared to what they would have been with higher world oil prices—for example, they could rise by three million barrels during fiscal year 1983/84 and 14 million barrels over the following year—the decline in the world oil price, hypothesized in the question, would be sufficient to reduce oil import compensation payments below what they would have been: for example, these payments could drop by approximately $200 million in fiscal year 1983/84 and by $100 million the following year.

(b) The impacts if the world oil price were to fall to $20 per barrel (U.S.) would be similar in direction but slightly more pronounced that those for a $25 per barrel world price, as follows:

(i) Canadian wellhead prices for conventional oil would drop to a level of $20 per barrel;

(ii) the new oil reference price (NORP) would drop to roughly $29 per barrel;

(iii) the blended price facing Canadian consumers would drop by roughly $10 per barrel to about $25 per barrel;

(iv) the moderating effect on the consumer price index would be approximately the same as for the $25 per barrel (U.S.) world oil price, that is; half of a percentage point drop next year and almost a full percentage point decline during the year after;

(v) the drop in Government revenues would be more pronounced that for the $25 per barrel (U.S.) world price, approaching $2.7 billion over fiscal year 1983/84 and $2.4 billion over the following year;

(vi) like the $25 per barrel (U.S.) world price case, for $20 per barrel, the effect upon domestic supply of crude oil would be minimal (roughly a 1 per cent change). As we would expect, domestic demand would be greater by 3 per cent for 1983/84 and 6 per cent for 1984/85, than in the case of a continuation of the current world oil price of approximately $31.50 per barrel;

(vii) for import compensation payments, the effect of the large drop in world price hypothesized (37 per cent) would more than offset any impact of the moderate increases in crude oil imports, and we could expect oil import compensation payments to drop by $350 million over 1983/84 and $225 million over the following year.

2. The Government monitors the energy situation closely and will continue to do so with the intention of making appropriate adjustments when the necessity and desirability of such actions become apparent.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY ALLOWANCES ACT, 1973

MEASURE TO LIMIT INDEXATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Bégin that Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Family Allowances Act, 1973, be read the third time and do pass; and the motion of Mr. Hawkes (p. 22692).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): When the House rose at one o'clock for lunch, the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) had completed his remarks in debate and the House was in the ten-minute period of questions, answers and comments. At that point an exchange was taking place between the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans).

The Chair will now recognize any Hon. Member who wishes to continue within approximately seven or eight minutes of that period of questions and answers.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I cannot let this opportunity go by without some comment on a statement made earlier today as it pertains to this particular Bill, Bill C-132, which is an effort to reduce the Family Allowances expected to be received this year.

The Government House Leader mentioned earlier when discussing the tabling of documents, that had we not taken so much time in opposition since we reconvened after the Christmas break, we would be able to deal, perhaps, with parliamentary debate and discussion on the matter of the deployment of the Cruise missile.

I find it absolutely shocking that the priority of the day is the reduction of some 50 cents in Family Allowance cheques as compared to the seriousness of the deployment of the Cruise missile. The imbalance between the two is inexcusable and indicates very clearly that this detrimental social legislation which is currently before the House has more priority with the Government of today than the matter of the deployment of the Cruise missile.

Having said that, I would now like to take this opportunity to review some of the things which we are actually being asked to pass in just a few hours from now. Bill C-132 is another example of the Government's allocation of priority which I consider to be totally out of pace with the feelings of the people in this country today. I do not think there is a Member on the Government side of this House who would have the nerve to go home to his or her constituents and say "I am sorry, we did not have time in Parliament to discuss the deployment of the Cruise missile because we were all wrapped up in the priority of reducing Family Allowance cheques by 50 cents". That is a priority situation which is very frustrating for both Opposition Parties. I am afraid I have to agree with the NDP on this point. There are so many areas where the Government could find a place to make up the losses incurred by indexing Family Allowance cheques. Instead, this Bill if passed will seriously endanger that element of society least able to defend itself.

• (1530)

Now, Mr. Speaker, we should take just a minute to see what continued full indexation would mean. Had it continued for Family Allowance cheques in 1983 the average monthly payment per child would have been $30 as inflation would have been 11.5 per cent. The annual loss per child under this proposed Bill—which we will pass here, I assume, with a Government majority—will mean deindexing the payment down to $17.76. As it exists, this Bill is totally unacceptable to our Party. Capping the Family Allowance for 1983 is ridiculous enough; extending this policy beyond the bounds of economic logic is really unparallelled insanity. Who in this House can in all certainty predict the inflation rate for 1984? We have a bureaucracy here in Ottawa reported to be rather astute. It determines what the rate of inflation might be in 1984 in order to give families sufficient income to feed their children, and they are prepared to set out a yardstick of 5 per cent in 1984. That is totally unacceptable to the Conservative Party. If the Government is really adamant in its desire to punish the poor, I implore it to at least restrict this horrendous act to a one-year period only.

Here is what the Government is going to say with this ridiculous Bill, Mr. Speaker, which is more important than the Cruise missile as indicated by the Government House leader today. The Government is reported to be saving .05 per cent of the federal budget, or one one-hundredth of 1 per cent of the Gross National Product. This could hardly constitute a major contribution to the fight against inflation. This Government thinks the people out there are naive enough to believe the Government when it says that, because of this piece of legislation, inflation is coming down. The Liberals are sadly mistaken because the people do not believe that the inflation rate will come down in small, minute percentages on a monthly basis if we restrict baby bonuses or Family Allowance cheques to 6 per cent and 5 per cent.

I would remind the Government of the factors which have been beneficial in lowering the inflation rate. Number one, a Gross National Product which has fallen 6.9 per cent since the second quarter of 1981. Secondly, in the third quarter of 1982 Canadian manufacturing was operating at only 67 per cent capacity thanks to this Government. Another factor is that business bankruptcies in 1982 were 33 per cent higher than in 1981, and 63 per cent higher than in 1980. In addition, in January the unemployment rate was a staggering 12.4 per cent, or in real terms, 1,598,000 Canadians were out of work. According to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, Canada's economic decline in 1982 was the worst of that group's 24 Members. Consumer confidence in this country is at an all-time low. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, the most important factor in the slight decline of inflation has been the Liberals' own tragic mismanagement of our economy and our society. Yet they continue to cling to the illusion that deindexing of Family Allowances will save vast amounts of money, lower inflation and reduce the debt. But who will provide the savings? It will come from those who can least afford it. The Government attacks a program which has traditionally maximized benefits to that segment of society which requires it the most. This is yet another excellent example of enlightened Liberal social justice.

I would now like to suggest just a few areas which could be altered substantially by this Government to reduce the deficit while maintaining a just and equitable social policy. The Government, Mr. Speaker, purchased Petro Fina for $1.46 billion, or $120 per share. At the same time, the shares were trading for $90 and were actually estimated to have a value of about $80. In other words, the federal Government paid between $365 million and $486 million more than the real market value for a chain of gasoline stations. Number two, the carrying costs invested by the Government to date in Petro-Canada total over $700 million.

Members on this side in committee and in this Chamber have continually pointed out to the Government other areas which would have more impact on reducing inflation and saving the Government more money than this current legislation. I should like to bring to the attention of the House just a few of them. An analysis was handed out in committee which shows that in the fiscal year just ending, the hidden interest costs subsidy to Petro-Canada, one Crown corporation, will be $514 million. Can I repeat that, Mr. Speaker? The hidden subsidy, which does not show up in the Estimates, through one Crown corporation, in one calendar year, is $514 million. There are direct subsidies in the Estimates to that same Crown corporation in excess of $400 million. At that point we are remarkably close to $1 billion, and here we are spending days of House time to approve a measure which will take about $80 million away from families and children. That is the priority of this Government today. Not the Cruise missile, not the waste of Crown corporations, not the purchase of shares at almost twice their value in order to purchase a chain of service stations. The priority of this Government today, Mr. Speaker, is to make money away from families in order to balance a budget which is totally out of control.

Now it seems necessary to remind the Liberal Government again of the 1982 Auditor General's report, the details of which are well known to all Members of this House. In light of the considerable abuses of power enacted by this Government, in light of the blatant waste of taxpayers' money, and the deplorable state of the economy, I implore the Government at this time to discontinue its attempt to overburden the poor by restricting the Family Allowance which represents a very important and viable source of income for the less fortunate. While the Government preaches restraint it continues to pay the salary of Mr. Edmund Clark while he works for the International Cement Company Lefarge. Documents leaked in September 1982 suggested a price tag of $172,000 for a one year stay. That has since been scaled down to only $153,000. This sabbatical could last for up to 15 months, according to the article in the Ottawa Citizen of October 23, 1982.

• (1540)

If that is not bad enough, Dr. Lyall Black, Assistant Deputy Minister of Health and Welfare, the Minister responsible for this retrogressive legislation, was given a one year posting at the Canadian embassy in Paris. Working as a medical officer, Dr. Black was allowed to keep his own salary even though the medical officer at the Canadian embassy is usually paid as much as $20,000 per year less. In other words, Mr. Black was receiving the same pay in Paris while performing a lesser job. That was reported in the Ottawa Citizen on September 29, 1982.

Consider the horrendous nightmare story of Janet Smith, an Assistant Secretary to the Cabinet, who was sent to Nice in southern France for four months to learn French. The cost to the taxpayer of this Riviera education was $12,000 plus Ms. Smith's salary which is in the range of $60,000 to $70,000 per year, as reported in the Toronto Sun, June 27, 1982.

Keeping in mind that Bill C-132 is a restraint Bill, it is interesting to note that the federal Government spent $1 million to promote its six and five program by setting up exhibits at the Canadian National Exhibition, the Pacific National Museum and Expo Quebec, as reported in The Globe and Mail on December 2, 1982.

While the Government spends $1 million to promote and advertise restraint, it is also reported that it continues to pay the salary of the former Deputy Minister of Finance who annually receives in excess of $100,000, although he does not work for the Government.

This seems to be an extremely contradictory restraint program. In fact, it is obviously based upon a double standard. It allows large sums of money to be paid to people who no longer work for the Government, while extracting much needed funds from individual taxpayers. This point was discussed in the Hansard issue of February 1, 1982 at page 22373.

The generosity of the Government does not end here. We are all aware of the Maislin Trucking bail-out and the selection of Mr. Erickson to design the embassy in Washington. These are all examples of the Government's misuse of resources, and they represent an offence to all Canadians and to most honest Members in this Chamber.

In February 1981, the CNR spent $64,244 to purchase advertising space to wish the CPR, its chief competitor, a happy birthday. The source of that is Question 2135 on the Order Paper presented by the late Tom Cossitt, and answered in that fashion by the Government—$64,244 to purchase advertising space by the CNR to compliment the CPR, its chief competitor, and wish it a happy birthday!

My final examples are in reference to that model of efficiency, the ideal Crown corporation, Canada Post. On the day that Canada Post became a Crown corporation, the Government helped employees celebrate by providing $300,000 worth of free coffee, donuts and souvenir envelopes, according to a CP wire story of October 16, 1981, Item 861. In July of 1982, the Post Office spent another $200,000 to run advertisements in 39 newspapers and publications to tell Canadians that postal service will improve in the future. One would think that improved service would speak for itself. The preceding examples of Government waste are deplorable and inexcusable by the standards of any normal responsible Government.

Over the past 15 years, Government spending has increased at an unprecedented rate. On a national accounts basis, where data is comparable over time, spending has climbed from $12.4 billion in 1968 to $90.6 billion this year, an increase of 630 per cent. In the current fiscal year, the Government will spend $18 billion more on a national accounts basis than the P.C. Government had planned to spend. The gross national debt last March 31 was $134 billion, the equivalent of $14,200 for every taxpayer in Canada. The cost of interest alone on this year's debt is expected to be approximately $16.7 billion, more than the entire budget of the federal Government just a few short years ago.

As a Member of Parliament, elected to serve the needs of my constituents, I cannot in good conscience accept Bill C-132 which reduces the increases in Family Allowances while having full knowledge of a Government that has allowed spending to increase uncontrollably. Poor financial management and lack of expertise in formulating their priorities is a poor excuse for Liberal social policy.

In conclusion, I want to say that the Government's six and five restraint program is, in the final analysis, an exercise in futility. I have attempted to illustrate that this policy has been of extremely limited value in the fight against inflation. What it has managed to do, and quite successfully I might add, is to attack those segments of society most dramatically affected by the recession, a recession which is largely the result of monetary and fiscal irresponsibility on the part of the Liberal Government.

Bill C-131, C-132 and C-133 are all similar in that they attack the members of our society who have been and will be the foundation of Canada's future. First, they seek to deprive pensioners and senior citizens from funds they have themselves contributed. They are divesting this important social group of the security and independence they have worked for and deserve. On the other hand, the Bill which is being voted on today seeks to undermine drastically the potential of our youth and the ability of the less fortunate to raise their families effectively.

There is no financial reason for restricting the increases in Family Allowances to 6 per cent in 1983 and 5 per cent in 1984. As we have seen, there are countless areas within the governmental bureaucracy which could be trimmed and redesigned to save money and reduce the debt.

Let us give one credit where credit is due. The present Liberal Government has finally seen the light and has given the Metric Commission their walking papers. It has advised the Metric Commission that they are through in two years. The Government is following the path of Reagan in the United States and Thatcher in Britain. That will be a saving to the Canadian taxpayers of over $25 million, which is their budget this year, as soon as they get rid of the Metric Commission. The budget of the Metric Commission this year is up 105 per cent over the same period last year when it was only $12 million. This year the Metric Commission will spend $26 million. Congratulations to the Liberals, who have abolished the Metric Commission and told them the truth, that they have walked their last kilometer.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of the House that we are in the question period, there is an opportunity for Liberal Members to defend this policy but we have not yet heard from a Member from the Government side since the opening speech this morning. We are not hearing any questions, and I am wondering if they are accepting what we have to say on this side of the House, if they are in the process of changing their mind or whether they are being silent for some other reason.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair has to indicate to the Hon. Member and to the House that that is not a point of order. However, it fits perfectly into comment, which is quite permitted by the procedures. The Hon. Member has in fact been recognized for the purpose of making a comment relating to the preceding Member's speech. Are there any other comments or questions?

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the speech of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) and simply reinforce to the House the basic theme of the third Member who spoke to us today. There are choices in the system, there are expenditure choices in the system. He identified a great many of them. We do not have to sock it to the pensioners or to the children of the country. We can decide to save money in other areas and put it into the pockets of families and pensioners.

The second speaker for our side today made the point that he proposed a brand new set of ideas which in a sense takes moneys that are given to families and gives more of it to the poorer segments of society—give more of it to the children who need it and less to the children of parents who do not need that support.

In my original speech in the House I think I identified for the Chamber the fact that support for children today, because of the changes made by the Minister, does two things. It provides maximum support for families which have about $40,000 per year gross income. If they have an income of $10,000 or $12,000 per year, they obtain less out of the system. Also I pointed out that in 1976 the Liberal Government deindexed the Family Allowance for a year, in 1978 it reduced the payments from $28 to $20 a month, and here we were in 1982 getting capping for two more years. There is a systematic attempt on the part of the Liberal Government to reduce support to famililes and in fact to transfer responsibility for that support away from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) and toward the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde).

We on this side of the House find it particularly objectionable that an already overburdened Minister such as the Minister of Finance, a very important Ministry, should suddenly be seen as the agent most responsible for family policy in the country. We think family policy belongs quite naturally under the Minister of National Health and Welfare and under the Standing Committee of the House, and that when we are talking about family policy we should be talking about it basically in that forum. Also we think that the economic committees of the House of the Minister of Finance should not be dealing with family policy. They should be dealing with policy elements which would get the economy going again so that we could create jobs and return to providing the kind of family support that comes from the workplace, and which the country really needs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Minister—the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey).

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Lincoln): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your Freudian slip. I want to address myself to the business at hand, third reading of Bill C-132. However, I say to the Hon. Member who just sat down that he has shown in recent weeks by his interventions a propensity to try to have the best of both worlds. I can recall from reading Hansard, as I like to do, that the main issue to which the Hon. Member used to speak eloquently in the House was inflation. Speaker after speaker after speaker quite properly castigated the Government for the fact that there was every evidence that inflation was running away in this country as it was in the United States and in the industrialized nations of the world. The challenge to the Government was to face up to it and do something about it.

Now that it is evident we took that challenge, now that is it evident the six and five program is successful, and now that it is evident inflation is so low that the impact on Family Allowances and pensions is indeed minimal, Hon. Members opposite are trying to create the false impression that somehow this Party is selecting a particular group of helpless people to be affected more adversely than others.

If there is one thing which distinguishes this Party from the Official Opposition, it is our concern and compassion for people. Every piece of social legislation on the books of the country—Family Allowance, old age pension, unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan and medicare—stem from this Government when we were in power, not from the Opposition. If one wants to see a mismatch on fighting inflation, if one wants to see how the Tories handle it, then one should look at the record of Margaret Thatcher with unemployment of 15, 16 and 17 per cent, galloping inflation and virtually no social programs in place. This is what we get from Tory Governments which have the freedom of a centralized Government to practise old fashion Toryism at its best or at its worst.

I do not intend to rise to the bait and answer the simplistic argument of the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) that somehow inflation would disappear if we cut out Government waste. What a simplistic approach! But it is consistent with the Conservatives of the country whose answer to inflation some years ago, some months ago, some weeks ago, was that we must restrain spending. Where were we supposed to restrain that spending? It was in social programs. Hon. Members should read the financial papers and the speeches of Hon. Members opposite a year ago when they were talking about wages, spending and restraint. Where did they look for restraint? It was to social programs. They said that we cannot afford old age pensions, Family Allowances or to continue the Canada Pension Plan. They said that they would love to continue supporting these social measures, that they had the greatest respect for the dignity of people, that they wanted to help the unemployed and the less fortunate. The Tories said that they supported private enterprise and that if we could only return to that laissez faire attitude, somehow increased prosperity brought on by supply and demand would eventually trickle down to the less fortunate. That is not true. It has never been true. It has proven to be an abject failure under Margaret Thatcher.

What do we have in front of us here? We are talking about Family Allowances. As we approach the last of these Bills, I want to pay tribute to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin). I say this because Governments at best can only govern through consensus. In every Cabinet and every caucus there are different points of view, all valid and all important. What comes out in the form of legislative policy has to be a consensus. That is true in caucus. I might mention, in case I forget it, that some months ago at our convention we had time, not to cut each other up but to talk about policies. We debated fully the universality concept of Family Allowances because trial balloons were floating around this city and this country from all parties as to what we could do, how we could get our little hands on the Family Allowances, how we could restrict universality, and what we could do to get our hands on this big pocket of money. The Liberal Party, the backbenchers and the militants, made it very clear to Cabinet that universality must be retained and maintained as the nucleus of our Family Allowance program. It is to the everlasting credit of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as we come out of this debate, that both old age pensions and Family Allowances retain and maintain their dedication to the principle of universality. There is nothing in this Bill which in any way impedes or restrains the concept of universality.

As a matter of fact, I am partly surprised by the success of the Minister in persuading her colleagues, not only that universality can be maintained, but that a formula could be devised to minimize or eliminate entirely the impact of six and five on people we can clearly identify as the poor and the underprivileged who need every last nickel of Family Allowance. How did the Minister do that? How is the Government doing that? When we get to Bill C-139, we will legalize or bring into legislation changes in the Child Tax Credit for 1983. Hon. Members may be surprised to know that it is hard to keep up with statistics. No less than two out of three recipients in this country receive Child Tax Credit benefits. When you take those changes, which are still not legislation, and add them to the minimal impact of the six and five, you will find that two out of three beneficiaries in this country will receive at least a $33 net gain in the 1983 taxation year.

• (1600)

How can you say in any way that we are discriminating against recipients of Family Allowances? If we were, we would not bring in a Child Tax Credit for 1983, the impact of which will be to direct to those two out of three recipients of Family Allowances some extra financial assistance. The one out of three who does not receive the Tax Credit allowance obviously does not need it by reason of the very table that goes with the Bill on which we will have a chance to expand when we debate Bill C-139 because the tax credit is linked clearly to income, as is the GIS to old age pensions.

It is almost pathetic to hear Members of the Opposition take advantage of this legislation in their attempts to garnish support in this country by playing on the fears of the average Canadian. If you listened only to Members of the Opposition, you would believe that every single pensioner in this country would be worse off, dramatically worse off, because of the six and five program. If you listened only to the speeches made here today, you would believe there would be no need for six and five at all if somehow we could say to some young lady, "You have no right to go to France to learn French. It is not important to learn French." The inference is there. It is not important that we get into the twenty-first century with the metric system. It does not mean much to our export countries. If they want our products shipped in metres, millimetres, grams and all the rest, and we do not intend to do it, they say, let them turn somewhere else because we do not care. Every single argument that you hear from the Tories on this issue represents classical Tory thinking of the nineteenth century. It shows how far they have advanced. They have advanced nowhere at all.

What have we been able to do in 18 months, Mr. Speaker? We have been able to put in place a program that has protected the limited income of those who suffer most in times of inflation. I am speaking of people on fixed incomes, people on pensions, people who tend to be under-employed—

Mr. Taylor: How about the one million unemployed people in this country?

Mr. Mackasey: —people who need these kinds of Family Allowances. We have to protect the integrity of those programs.

One can argue, and can I accept the views of anyone who wants to talk about the economy, as to whether our method of attack on inflation is right or wrong. I do not think there is an economist in Canada or the United States with any credibility who would suggest the alternative to inflation is to index everything. There are countries led by governments which believe that, for instance, countries in South America and the Middle East. Their answer to inflation is simply to index everything. If inflation goes up by 90 per cent, you index everything 90 per cent. But do not take your money out of the country because I do not know where you could spend it. Do not attempt to use your money for trade. It is fine perhaps if you are a citizen of a little island, totally insulated or if you are perhaps on the moon. That is the policy of the Tories. If there is to be the slightest impact from the six and five, if there is any evidence that you must suffer a little because of inflation, the answer is to index. That is the answer of the Opposition. Cut out somebody's trip to Paris. That is a waste. Restore full indexing on Family Allowances, full indexing on old age pensions and full indexing on the Public Service salaries. But the Opposition lacks the courage of its convictions. Opposition Members get up on second reading and support the six and five program. At least the New Democrats, whom I respect, philosophically said, "We don't support it." The Conservatives said, "We support it in general, but we are against every single segment and practice of the program."

Mr. Taylor: You are in bed with the NDP.

Mr. Mackasey: The Tories said, "We are for the six and five, but don't dare touch the salaries of the civil servants."

Mr. Taylor: Why don't you move over with the NDP?

Mr. Mackasey: The Hon. Member from Ottawa said, "Don't dare attack the Family Allowances that go to people whose income is over $25,000. Don't attack old age pensions, including those that go to people who do not need it because of the GIS." In other words, it is typical Conservative policy. They say, "We support the program but we are relating to every single person who is affected by it." They wonder why they have been in the wilderness for so many years. They have been in the wilderness because there has been no sincerity in their arguments. They underestimate the intelligence of the Canadians. They underestimate the sophistication of the people watching this program. Their argument that somehow you can eliminate inflation by indexing everything, that somehow inflation is no longer a problem or never was a problem, is not acceptable. If inflation was never a problem, why is it that day after day after day in this House the Opposition, carrying out its legitimate role, hammers at the Government because of inflation? If we were blamed when inflation was 12 per cent, 13 per cent and 14 per cent, then we have a right to take the credit when inflation has been reduced to 7.2 per cent because of the success of the six and five program.

Mr. Taylor: Yell louder, it is a weak point.

Mr. Mackasey: Anybody who cares about the underemployed, who cares about the working class, who wants to see this country prosper, knows that we have to get inflation down if we are to continue being a competitive nation in the field of exports.

Mr. Taylor: Spending $800 a day?

Mr. Mackasey: Do you think we can compete, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member over there always makes good speeches on his seat. If he would turn the other way and talk to himself, we would all be happy.

Do you think for a minute that we can continue to compete with other countries that are mineral-wealthy, Mr. Speaker? Do you think we will be priced out of existence because built into our export prices is an abnormally high level of inflation? Does anybody here think we can regain our markets in the United States, as that country recovers, in the field of copper and mineral wealth? You would understand that better than most of us, Mr. Speaker, representing your riding if, built into the price of copper per pound, or into the price of lead, wood or lumber, or whatever we export were, X number of cents or dollars because of the inflationary factor in this country. No one in his right mind would suggest that 18 months ago inflation was not the number one issue in the country, just as no one in his right mind today would deny the fact that unemployment is the first issue before us now.

I appear angry, but I am not. However, I do get angry when I see the callous efforts of Members opposite who prey on the fears of those people less able to speak out for themselves in this Parliament. I feel very angry when Parliamentarians leave the mistaken impression that somehow we are restricting Family Allowances when, in fact, every single person who needs that Family Allowance, as evidenced by their income, will be better off at the end of the year because of the combination. Two out of three will be better off because of the combination of their indexed Family Allowance—not indexed quite to the extent it used to be—together with the Child Tax Credit allowance of $50, and every single recipient of Family Allowance will be better off.

I should not be impatient with the arguments of the Conservative Party. I heard them last year, I heard them three years ago, I heard them five years ago and I heard them 15 years ago. Sooner or later the classical right wing of that Party emerges, not only in the House but in caucus and in conventions. Those few in that Party who think progressively, who do care about people and who understand what I am trying to say—that we have a responsibility to people—are subjugated, shoved aside and their spokesmen come forward. There is only a minority in that Party who come forward and suggest that somehow inflation would have disappeared if we curtailed trips to Paris, lessons in French or something else that appeals to the prejudices of people.

Miss Bégin: That's it.

Mr. Mackasey: That is the unspoken thing that bothers me.

I want to say in conclusion that we who concern ourselves with people, particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare, have come out of this whole exercise much greater, in my opinion, than when it began. We have been able to reduce inflation in this country from over 12 per cent to 7 per cent. Never mind the reason.

Mr. Keeper: Never mind the reason?

Mr. Mackasey: It is unfortunate that unemployment had to grow as it did, not only here but also in Tory Great Britain, astronomically in that country, in Germany, in France, in the United States and in Sweden. Tell me of one industrialized nation where unemployment has not increased.

Mr. Crosby: Austria.

• (1610)

Mr. Mackasey: Tell me of one industrialized nation that has not been concerned about its ability to maintain a social program and keep its unemployment as low as possible while remaining viable and competitive. Each one has to vary the theme.

What our Party has opted for, since this is a federal system with limited control over the various levers for which the Province also have responsibility, is a six and five program that says, in effect, that we have a moral obligation to the less fortunate. I say to those who believe that the deficit can be eliminated or reduced dramactically by eliminating Family Allowances or the GIS because no one needs it anymore, that we will be able to come out of this recession relatively well inside of a few years. As our customers' recovery begins, we will be able to tell them that our prices reflect a very nominal rate of inflation. Perhaps it will be 5 per cent, 6 per cent or even less. We will be able to show everyone that the unique characteristics of Canada's social problems are intact. We can say that they are still based on universality and not on a means test.

We recognize that the Family Allowance cheque is the only one that comes from the Government in the name of the mother. It is the only cheque that comes from the Government that is totally in her control so that she can do what is best for her children. According to Mackenzie King, it was in recognition of her contribution during the war.

We will be able to turn to the senior citizens and say that their old age pensions will remain intact. It will remain universal. There will be no public servants scrutinizing their bank books or looking for money under their beds. As well, if that pension is insufficient, the GIS will still be in place.

We can say the same thing about unemployment insurance. I can remember when unemployment insurance was on trial in this country and how Members opposite, day after day, would rise to talk about the generous UIC program and imply that everyone on UIC was a lazy welfare bum. We do not hear that today. Unemployment insurance has met its test. It is Liberal philosophy, and that is why I am a Liberal and not a Tory.

I hope that this debate might illustrate the rather simplistic solution being advanced by the Opposition. It is their argument that we can somehow deal with inflation by eliminating waste and that we can deal with inflation by returning to the old fashioned laissez-faire principles of Adam Smith.

I want to repeat that we are fortunate to have in our Minister of National Health and Welfare a person who, by her conviction and dedication, is prepared to stand up in Cabinet week after week and tell her colleagues, on the basis of facts and figures, that there are ways and means of adhering to the six and five program. There are ways and means of allocating sacrifice in a democracy that does not discriminate against those least able to protect themselves. That is the best spirit of this Bill, and I wish we would get on with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Comments, questions and answers.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) if he is aware that a recent report by the Canadian Council on Social Development has indicated that for the first time since the early 1970s we have had a rise in family poverty. Is this the time when we want to cap the indexation of Family Allowances?

This rise in family poverty is quite evidently related to the fact that we have a depression level of unemployment in this country today. While the Hon. Member speaks a good line on inflation, does he realize the importance of putting the priority on employment so that people may have adequate incomes? Would he refer to the Family Allowance question as well?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question from the Hon. Member, who is a close friend of mine and asks his question quite sincerely. As far as I am concerned, the number one issue in this country today is unemployment. I know that the Liberal caucus thinks that, the Party thinks that; I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) believes that and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lalonde) believes that. No doubt that will be reflected in his budget. I agree with the hon. gentleman in that respect.

I agonize, as he does, that no nation, certainly no democratic nation, has been able to develop a way of curtailing inflation without at the same time, impeding growth and creating unemployment. I am not sure if it was Phillips Robatyn, who straightened out the mess in New York some years ago, and who said that democracy works exceptionally well in prosperous times but its real test comes in difficult times when it has to apportion sacrifice and determine who bears the brunt of the battle against inflation. Inevitably, it is the workers. That is why we try to cushion the negative impact with social policies such as unemployment insurance.

I suffer along with the Hon. Member when he talks about unemployment. I appreciate what he is saying. I say quite categorically that the number one problem facing the nation today is unemployment. At the time we brought in the six and five program it was inflation. Now that we have inflation directed in a downward slope to where we should be well below 5 per cent within the year—barring something quite unforeseen—we can devote all our attention to unemployment. Hopefully, we will not create inflation again with job stimulation. The difficult job which the Minister of Finance faces is to stimulate the economy without rekindling inflation.

With respect to the Hon. Member's other point, of course this is the time in history when those on the bottom income scale need more assistance than ever before. That is obvious because inflation does not wreak its havoc equally. Those who had money in the bank a year ago and who were earning 19 per cent and 20 per cent interest were the beneficiaries of inflation. The businessman, the home owner, the home builder, the small-businessman and the farmer suffered from inflation.

The impact of inflation is hardly equal across the board. It is inevitable that people at the bottom end of the scale need increased benefits. As a Liberal, I would say that as soon as the country can afford to increase old age pensions and the basic Family Allowance and return full indexation, it probably will do so.

It is amazing to see how many people fail to appreciate what might have happened to those programs if the six and five program had not been successful and inflation had risen from 12 per cent to 25 per cent. Where would the money come from? Would we here in the House allow indexation at 25 per cent or increase the base of pensions and Family Allowances and, in doing so, drive the deficit of the country up by $10 billion or $15 billion? Would the business community stand idly by or ask us where we expect to get the money from?

I fail to understand why people do not realize that inflation must be curtailed before we can generate the kind of money that is needed for distribution to the less fortunate.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the stirring defence of the six and five program given by the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey), particularly in the presence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who also gave a stirring defence of the same restraint program in Government spending that affects the young people, children and senior citizens in this country.

In addition, there are other Liberal Members who gave the same stirring defence. They were the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Breau), the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Dubois), the Hon. Member for Montreal-Mercier (Mrs. Hervieux-Payette) and the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Maltais). All of them gave stirring defences of the six and five program.

However, the Canadian Council of Catholic Bishops criticized that program by saying that it was repressive, unfair and leading to massive unemployment—1.6 million unemployed—and created an immoral situation in Canada. That is what the Roman Catholic Bishops said. The Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) apparently went public and condemned his colleagues—

Miss Bégin: That is a lie.

Mr. Crosby: —from Ottawa Centre, Gloucester, Lotbinière, Montreal-Mercier and Manicouagan. He said that they were being unfair and would not stand for that attack on the Bishops.

Where does the Hon. Member stand? Does he stand with his five colleagues in defence of six and five or against the Roman Catholic Bishops in their opposition to the six and five?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman, for whom I have great respect, ends up with a rather false argument by comparing apples and oranges. I think the Hon. Member is more intelligent than to think that being for six and five means that one is against the Catholic Bishops, but I am not sure anymore.

• (1620)

Mr. Crosby: You explain.

Mr. Mackasey: I do not think he has read the statement of the Bishops, because if he had read it, he would find that it did not tackle the six and five program. I happen to share their views, and happened to be on record last night on the radio program "As It Happens" concerning the number one issue in the country.

The Hon. Member asks the question in good faith, and I am answering it. If I believed everything I read, or everything that happened in Winnipeg last week according to the newspapers, I would say, "God help the Tories", but I do not. I have more respect for Joe Clark.

Mr. Crosby: Find out about economic affairs, Bishops.

Mr. Mackasey: The Hon. Member asked the question, and I am entitled to answer. If the Hon. Member reads beyond the headlines, that is, if he is capable, he will find that in the body of that article it was made very clear that I was not fighting with my five colleagues. But let him read it.

Mr. Crosby: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: Maybe the Hon. Member cannot. I will not go into that. I want to say what I indicated, that I too have an opinion on what the Bishops said. As I understood their remarks, they said that the level of unemployment in this country was deplorable. I share their view, and said so publicly. I relate to that statement, entirely. What I also said was that I may have a different view from other people who have been publicly commenting on what are moral issues and what are temporal issues.

If the gentleman so desires, I will provide him with a transcript of what I said publicly last night and what I will repeat over and over. I simply said that what is spiritual today is not what would have been considered spiritual 25 years ago. Young priests and ministers, some of whom are in this House—and I am looking at one—see their vocation in life as going beyond a little square box which limits them to very narrow spiritual concepts. Young Catholic priests think it quite in order, spiritually, to worry about unemployment and about the things that lead to the breakup of marriages, to worry about the wasted years of the unemployed, and to speak out on Government matters and to say, "Do something about it". I applaud the Bishops for exactly that.

Mr. Crosby: Denouncing the six and five.

Mr. Mackasey: Where I differ with them is concerning their views on economic policy, which I do not think would resolve the issues.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please.

Mr. Mackasey: I will sit down a little inflated, because I have not said it all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member will realize that the intention of the procedural reforms is that questions and answers should be "short and sharp". The Hon. Member for Crowfoot.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this occasion, especially since the Hon. late Minister—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Order, please. My apologies to the Hon. Member for Crowfoot but there still remains some time for questions and answers.

Mr. Malone: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would just like to point out that it is very difficult to ask a question of an Hon. Member who has just left the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Crowfoot may not have had his microphone open, so I will indicate to the House what he himself has said; that is, that it may be difficult to ask questions when an Hon. Member is no longer in the House, but that does not constrain Hon. Members under those rules, from making such comments as they see fit, and I would have to continue to recognize Hon. Members after that.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Hon. Member has left the House so quickly. I wanted to know why he was yelling so loudly and pounding the desk with his lily-white fingers. Perhaps it is because he had such a weak argument. I want to know how he can reconcile the Bill, which he now supports, which is taking money and food from children—

Miss Bégin: Oh, oh!

Mr. Taylor: Stay calm a minute. Do not get excited. You will break a blood vessel.

I do not know how he can reconcile taking money from mothers, who are having a difficult time feeding their children, and then giving $800 a day, plus $125 for expenses, to a rich man. How can that be reconciled? It is completely contradictory. He says it is not inflationary, but it is inflationary. That is not straight at all. Does the Hon. Member talk that kind of nonsense to the people of Canada, 1.5 million of whom are unemployed? It is no wonder that the Liberals are on their way out. I have no question to ask because the Hon. Member is not here.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): Is there debate?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Crosby: The Minister cannot speak. Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Chair will recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) if her comments are pursuant to those made by the Hon. Member for Bow River.

Miss Bégin: Yes, I think it is very important—

Mr. Crosby: Tell us about the Catholic Bishops.

Miss Bégin: —for the Hon. Member not to get too mixed up in the large dossier which is before him. He has just totally misinformed the House and the population so badly that I want to correct him. How can he say that the person who earns $26,330, and who has only one child, is living in poverty? I do not quite understand it. I would love to hear an answer.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister is not so naive as to think that all of the 1,200,000 mothers are making $26,000 a year. Many of them are not. Many of them have three, four, five or six children, and many of those children are crippled and some are abnormal. They need extra money and they are not getting enough for milk now, so let the Minister not start giving me that baloney.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): As a last exchange, I will recognize the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Miss Bégin: This is exactly what I wanted the Hon. Member to recognize, the fact that that is the limit, the maximum Child Tax Credit, for only one child. The Child Tax Credit has increased by $50 to make up for the reduction of indexation. Therefore, he has totally misinformed the mothers in this country, because if they have two children, they can make much more, and if they have three or four, they can make much more.

Mr. Taylor: A little more.

Miss Bégin: They can make much more money and will still be allowed the full, additional, non-taxable $50 per child on this year's Child Tax Credit, in such a way that two-thirds of all the mothers in Canada will not have lost a penny, and some will be better off—

Mr. Crosby: What are you doing it for?

Miss Bégin: —because of the six and five. Therefore, I would like him to remember that and read all his documents before he opens his mouth, because he is making such a bouillie pour les chats that it is unbelievable. It is unbelievable that he should be creating panic among mothers that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have just received a note indicating that because of certain signals, which Hon. Members recognize I sometimes give to them as to their amount of time left to debate, the Hon. Member for Lincoln apparently did not realize that there was time remaining in the ten minute period.

Mr. Crosby: Oh, he realized. He just left.

Miss Bégin: Oh, come on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): I have only two choices I can make in this matter, and I will be guided by the House. I will extend the ten minute question period now that the Hon. Member for Lincoln has returned to the Chamber, but only based on the unanimous consent of the House, so that I can determine that that is what Hon. Members want. Otherwise, we will continue the debate. Is it the wish of Hon. Members that we debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Taylor: Point of order, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Bow River rises on a point of order.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, you permitted the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who was not being questioned at the time, to rise and make two statements. Surely we cannot leave without comment some of the baloney she advanced, because that is what it was. There are 1,200,000 mothers who will be affected, and she knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Taylor: Why are you trying to kid the people?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): The Hon. Member for Bow River raises two matters, one being a point of order with respect to the fact that allowed the Minister to enter the exchange, and the other raises a matter of debate. Yes, I did recognize the Minister as I would recognize any other Hon. Member in the House who wanted to rise in that ten minute period, even if that Hon. Member is from the same Party as the one who had spoken.

If there are no further points of order, the Chair will recognize—

Mr. Mackasey: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Blaker): There is another point of order.

Mr. Mackasey: I want to make it clear that I left the House fully under the impression that I had utilized my ten minutes. I realize my answers were very lengthy.

Mr. Crosby: So you cannot tell the time either.

Mr. Mackasey: I make this point because I did hear someone suggest that I had left on purpose. The Hon. Member knows that that is not true. He should either retract that statement or apologize because he should accept the word of a gentleman. I left because when the Speaker, with his usual delicacy and finesse, suggested that the question was too long and the answer was too long, I presumed that he was telling me that I had spoken longer than my allotted time, and I ran to make an important phone call. I would not have missed giving the Hon. Member an opportunity to ask any questions he would have liked. The questions I have heard so far have been typical of the type which would have been asked.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by telling the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mr. Mackasey) that I did not think his ten minutes had expired. I thought that a light year had passed. I also noticed that it was one of the interesting speeches we have heard in the House, one which we did not measure by its length in Hansard but, rather, as it registered on the Richter scale.

I want to deal with the analysis put forward by the Hon. Member for Lincoln before getting into my specific comments. He took considerable pleasure on behalf of the Government Party in advocating that the six and five program has been bringing down inflation. It is an interesting paradox to note that all the while that inflation and interest rates were increasing sharply the Government Party blamed the Americans and world conditions. They told us there was nothing Canada could do with respect to its internal policy because we had to live within the reality of a world economy.

All of a sudden inflation in the United States started to decrease. Interest rates began to come down. That fact is also reflected in Canada, and the Liberals take claim with a slogan called "The six and five program". They say if it was not for that program, inflation would not have come down. One of these arguments may sell, but not both. It cannot be a fact that we live in a world economy and then somehow find that we are divorced as a result of something that is not a program but rather a slogan, which is what six and five is.

The Hon. Member for Lincoln took particular pains in trying to tell us that this Party was void of social conscience. He made reference to Margaret Thatcher and the Conservatives in Great Britain. I ask the Hon. Member for Lincoln, and he can tell me on another occasion, whether he embraces the social policies of Jeremy Thorpe. That might be the social policy that the Members of the Liberal Party will want to concern themselves with.

We are dealing today with a question that is indeed serious, one that talks about Family Allowances and decreasing the capping of the indexation thereon. This will cause a constriction on the poorest in this country rather than those who are richer. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) again behaving like a chicadee eating fermented chokecherries. She knows full well that constraint is there against the poorest people in this country.

Miss Bégin: It is not true.

Mr. Malone: Statistics show that for 15 years Canada's poverty level was decreasing. We were having fewer poor people in Canada. This year the statistics are turned around and the poverty rate in Canada is increasing.

I submit that this is a terrible situation. Canada has one-third of the world's fresh water, has no lack of resources and educated people. This group of 20 million people has all the tools to build a healthy and wealthy society, yet we cannot compete with our major competitors, Japan, Germany and other European countries, to the extent that this year the OECD ranked Canada lower than the twentieth position in the world. This is shameful in light of the fact which demonstrates clearly that just 14 years ago when this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) took office we were the second highest nation in the world in terms of standard of living.

For the first time in 15 years, after a tremendous record of decreasing poverty in this country, we have an increase. There are now more poor people in this country. The Liberal answer to that is to cap the Family Allowance. When inflation is going up, they put a lid on those people so that their power with respect to value is decreasing.

The Minister might say we are allowing it to go up some. If it does not go up equally with inflation, it is going down. There is no other direction. All indexing does is to index value. If the indexing is less than the value of inflation, the value goes down. They are giving to the people of Canada not only poverty, but more poverty; poverty upon poverty.

The Liberals do this in the same week that they tell poor Donald Macdonald he can have $800 a day. Do you know that Donald Macdonald has to work ten days every year before he reaches the poverty level? That is how much that poor Liberal has to work. Poor Michael Pitfield in the Senate. He has to work another 15 or 20 days before he gets enough money to reach the poverty line. The Liberal answer for those families below the poverty line is to cap their Family Allowance, to hold them below the rate of inflation.

It would have been different if that were the policy for the richer people in Canada, those in the higher income levels. To put a cap on them would have been saleable to Canadians. However, universally to put a cap on those in all brackets, including the growing poverty group, is not acceptable.

I want to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that of all families, 48 per cent are single-parent families headed by females. Let me assure those who somehow think this money is being spent foolishly that in the majority of cases, and the data proves this, the money is directed to food, clothing, shelter and other necessities.

The Hon. Member for Lincoln accused us of playing on fears. There is fear. It would be blind of us not to recognize it. There is the fear of the 1.5 million unemployed, which does not include the more than 500,000 who have given up looking for work. After months of looking, they have found no work.

It does not include the native Indians of this country, none of whom are listed in the Statistics Canada rating of unemployed people in Canada. We have an unemployment rate on the different reservations across the country ranging from 60 to 80 per cent. Native people are not included.

Miss Bégin: That is not true.

Mr. Malone: That is true. Let us have a little talk afterwards and I will show you.

Miss Bégin: It is not a fact. It is the opposite.

Mr. Malone: It is not the opposite. There is a nice debate across the floor of the House. It would be good to enlighten the Liberals. It simply is not the fact at all. This is lovely. I have some support from the NDP, which sits to my left. That at least demonstrates that I have the support of both the Conservatives and the Liberals because I have the support of the Conservatives and the NDP.

On the one hand we have the situation where there is the capping of Family Allowances. That affects the poor and keeps them below the rate of inflation. On the other hand, we have to look at what is happening with respect to Government expenditures. The Member of my Party who spoke before me went through a number of issues. Interestingly enough, he dealt with many of the same ones on which I intended to comment.

Miss Campbell: You must have the same researcher.

Mr. Malone: It is important, when we talk about restrictions and Government spending, to recognize the onus upon us to talk about where the money will come from. That is not hard, thank goodness, because we have a Liberal Government.

Look at Mirabel Airport. I know that if Mirabel were not there, we still could not buy everything. We cannot use it as an excuse all the time. However, the truth is that hundreds of thousands of acres of farmland were destroyed and that it was built at a cost of $600 million. Every year it has an operating deficit. The airlines do not want to use it, nor do the people of Montreal.

• (1640)

The newspapers in Boston advertise encouraging people to go to Boston to use their airlines to fly overseas because there is less fuss there for Canadians than in using the Mirabel Airport. That is just one $600 million expenditure of the ones I have listed, Sir, which would have covered the cost which the Minister is talking about today dealing with food, clothing and shelter of children in those families that are under the poverty line.

There is also the fact that the Government spent over $1 million to advertise its six and five program. The six and five program was intended, in part, to hold down the increase in Family Allowances. We certainly never supported any $1 million advertising program telling us that the program was okay. This is the same Government which runs Canada Post where the stamps lick the people rather than the other way around. We are in a situation where the Canada Post deficit is running wild—

An Hon. Member: We have reduced the deficit.

Mr. Malone: What a brilliant piece of Liberal logic I heard from the other side, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member has told me that the Government has reduced the deficit. That must mean that if it can make the deficit high enough and then reduce it, it has cleared its conscience. That will not wash. As the Hon. Member for Lincoln was saying a few moments ago, Canadians are more sophisticated than that. He is right. And at the present time the polls indicate that.

The fact of the matter, Mr. Speaker, is that $1 out of every $4 tax dollars spent in this country is spent purely on paying the interest on our foreign debt. That, again, underscores the wild expenditures of the Government for the monuments it has been building in tribute of itself. Another example is the purchase of PetroCan, Petrofina and BP Oil. The Government may not have enough money for poor children in this country, but it can buy oil companies and tax the people at the gas station. When farmers are buying their gasoline and their fertilizer, they are paying more money. But this Government cannot find the dollars necessary to help the children in need across this country. They cap the increases in family income at levels below that of the rate of inflation, and that, Sir, is a shameful act. It is unacceptable that the Government would make that a priority when there are so many other areas where it could save the moneys needed to hold down the rate of inflation and to make its programs work.

There are 1,500,000 persons in this country today who are unemployed. More than three million live below the poverty line, and that is by international standards. Out of 24 million Canadians we have some three million persons today in this country who live below the poverty line. The Hon. Members to my left tell me it is four million. I did not see that statistic, but whether it is three million or four million or some other number, it is too much. My data says it is three million. That is too much. If four million is fact, it is just that much more "too much, too much". I did not get my "tang tungled". I meant that, because it is a very cruel, crass attitude of the Government that in order to build its monuments to itself it would choose to cap Family Allowances, including those of people below the poverty line. That is just unacceptable.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare should know that if you are going to cap, you should cap in such situations the incomes of those of higher wealth, not universally. If that is what the Hon. Member for Lincoln meant when he said the Liberal Party supports universality, then it is the Liberal Party which is at fault, if believing in universality leads to that kind of crass treatment of the people. On the basis of the Government's own data, over the next year families earning $35,000 per year and more will receive $800 per child, and those at the poverty level will receive $700 per child. That is not necessarily from Family Allowances; it is the total benefits which they are going to be able to get from tax credits and from other benefits. If this Bill passes it is going to cause a loss of at least $30 per child, and that is a burden which should not be placed upon those children whose families are living below the poverty line.

This Government has put in place, or allows to stay in place, somewhere in excess of 480 Crown corporations. It has the CBC which it subsidizes at almost $1 billion a year. Some $800 million in subsidies goes to that organization. Yet despite that, despite forced metric, rightly or wrongly forced with all of its bureaucracy, there is money there for those children, for needs which are basic to human life, and it should not be acceptable that a Government in its crassness would refuse to give the kind of adequate support which has been traditionally there.

Single-parent families, most of them headed by females, make up 8 per cent of all of the families in Canada today. But the unfortunate fact is, Mr. Speaker, that those single-parent families headed by females make up 48 per cent of those families which are listed within the poverty bracket. That is what this legislation is aimed at, hurting those people who are least able to cope with their circumstances, female heads of families, caring for their children, who cannot go out to work. That is the insensitive position which the Government is taking toward those particular people. At the same time it tells Donald Macdonald he can have $800, or $900 if he is away from his home. That simply is not going to wash with the Canadian people.

The savings for the federal Government for this particular policy, the capping of six and five on Family Allowances, adds up to .05 per cent of the federal budget, or one-hundreth of 1 per cent of our Gross National Product. Surely, in light of Mirabel, Petro-Canada, Petrofina, British Petroleum, the 480 Crown corporations, CBC, and all the other spillage of money which goes on, there is some money in the public Treasury that in this time of inflation and hard economic times, and in this time when there are 1,500,000 persons unemployed, to would retain the traditional standards for families who are under the poverty line. I believe it is an abominable failure of the Government that under such conditions it would choose to pay persons like Donald Macdonald $800 per day, put wealthy people in the Senate at two salaries, continue with metrication, and continue to support the oil companies. The Liberal landscape, Sir, is a billion dollars of subsidies for PetroCan and a $80 million cut for poor families and children.

• (1650)

That is the landscape we are looking at, and it is unacceptable. If the Government thinks that it will make a saving by capping universal Family Allowances, it should bear in mind that that expense may very well recur somewhere else. If children do not have the proper nutrition, it could well be that they will fail in school, their health will be affected, and it could affect our rate of crime and unemployment. If we do not take care of the children of the nation, we have to recognize that we are not necessarily making a saving; the cost may reappear somewhere else. We are bound to see that children have an adequate start in life, especially in those families last able to cope, such as that 48 per cent who are poor, families headed by single parent mothers.

Mrs. Erola: Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that the Member has been making some very serious charges, using figures which are not really very accurate. In the year 1982 the Child Tax Credit was $261. Is he aware of what the Child Tax Credit will be this year? It will be $343.

Miss Bégin: He did not know.

Mrs. Erola: Who are the recipients of that Child Tax Credit? Those very people he was referring to, single parent mothers. I am delighted to tell him that all Indian mothers, I am informed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), are recipients of the full Child Tax Credit of $343. So the poor of the country, the poor mothers, are indeed being protected by the Child Tax Credit. Let us put that on the record.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) for putting on the record the fact that Indian mothers are able to get a tax credit. I accept that. As a matter of fact, I never even said anything other than that. She says I did, but she will notice tomorrow in Hansard that what I said was that Indian families are not counted amongst the unemployed.

Miss Bégin: You will change the "blues".

Mr. Malone: I am sorry, the sound waves did not get across to the other side, but I stand by my position. Indians are not counted amongst the unemployed in this country, and that is what I was talking about at the time.

With respect to the $240 tax credit, I accepted that there will be an increase over last year. However, because of the capping of the Family Allowance this year there will be a permanent loss of $30 for each family thereafter. It is a permanent loss and it will hit the poor families harder than it does the rich. The Minister can come forward with her tax credit, but that will not solve the ongoing problem. That is not the way to put into place national policy.

Miss Bégin: Madam Speaker, I should not even react to the scare tactics used by the Official Opposition—

Mr. Manly: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it not customary to rotate amongst different Parties during the exchange following a Member's speech?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): You are absolutely right. We will do that eventually. The Hon. Minister for National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin).

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he is not aware that his last explanation is totally false. He explained to the people of Canada who are watching television right now that there will be a loss forever in the base of child benefits received by mothers in need. That is not the case. Is the Member aware that the Child Tax Credit will be a full $50 more, on top of indexation, which will replace all possible loss this year and next year? I repeat, all possible loss. I will send him a copy of the detailed figures I gave in committee because he may not be aware of the damage he is trying to create amongst mothers with false information.

Is he aware of how many mothers get the Child Tax Credit, partially or fully? I would like to know what number he thinks it is.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is at odds with the Canadian Council on Social Development who support the position I have expressed here today. Not only has she a debate with me, she has one with that organization also.

I want to say to her that whenever you restrict the increase in Family Allowance with the intention to start full indexing later, you will be indexing from a lower base. The calculations I have, on the basis of the legislation before us, show there will be a $30 reduction for every child. I concede there is a one-year supplement, but that does not make up for the fact that the base will be lower thereafter in perpetuity, unless the Government makes some other legislative changes. I stand by that statement, and I guess there is nothing else I can say about it other than that that is a fact.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, as I understand what has been said here, the recipients of Family Allowances are not really losing anything because they are getting it back in the Child Tax Credit. Is this Liberal Government telling us that it has put us through all kinds of debate in the House of Commons over the six and five program when it really does not change anything? Has this been done for cosmetic, political posturing in the country when there is really no loss to the recipients and no gain to the Government of Canada? What is the whole point of the six and five program?

Mr. Kristiansen: And they talk about wasting time.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have no quarrel with that submission. I am sure there is some accuracy in it.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) on his speech. I was watching him on the monitor and I thought for a while I was watching Dallas. That vest is very impressive. However, I know that in addition to being a fine orator, he also was very serious about what he was saying. Indeed, we agreed with many but not, of course, all the points he raised.

He talked about Government expenditures and I would like to ask him whether he would be willing to reduce the Government allocations for defence in order to raise Family Allowances for Canada's children?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I am quite willing to find ways of raising funds out of the wasteful expenditures the Government is making at the present time, so that women and children in this country do not have to suffer. However, at a time when this country would lose a war with Cuba because we do not have Armed Forces to match those of Cuba, I would be somewhat reluctant to tone down our defences, especially since there is, on both sides of the House, some feeling that there is a need to beef up Canada's defences.

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, we just saw the usual fight between the NDP and the Conservatives. When it suits them, they gang up one way, then gang up the other way, and go to bed together.

Of course the Hon. Member for Crowfoot has not read the report of the Canadian Council on Social Development, nor is he aware of the amount of poverty, as he showed clearly in his speech. But is he aware that his thesis is absolutely false in that the projected rate of inflation toward the end of 1984 is 4.8 per cent, with which we are very pleased? That would be just below 5 per cent, which means that no mother on welfare or otherwise would lose a penny. I know it is difficult to make him understand our social programs; he has never spoken on that in the time he has been in the House, but I would just like him to tell us if he knew that, because he should. Those are the facts.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I have some experience with the Government's projection of deficits. If the Government is so comfortable with the projected rate of inflation next year, then I am quite comfortable in asking why the Government does not accept the amendment of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) that it be just a one-year program. The capping of indexation would be relative to inflation and there would be no problem because it would simply go up by that 5 per cent, if in fact we can trust the Government's prediction.

• (1700)

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we have heard everything the Opposition knows about defence and Mirabel. I think we should now get to the question being debated in the House this afternoon, and that is Bill C-152. What we have to do is look at this Bill in the proper perspective. This is not a Bill that we apply against defence spending or any other question that—

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of this House, and to the Hon. Member, that we are not debating Bill C-152 here this afternoon, if that is what he has come into the House to debate. We are actually debating Bill C-132, and he should be speaking to that Bill, not Bill C-152.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging that the Hon. Member does know something else. I imagine if we give him one more chance he will exhaust everything he knows.

I think it is important to look at this Bill in perspective; why the six and five program was brought into play. The reason was to reduce inflation. The way to reduce inflation is to have cut-backs on spending and wages across the country. It was important for the Government to set an example. Of course it is important that those who cannot afford to bear reduced incomes not be hurt. I think this has been taken into consideration with respect to Bill C-132.

The Government has chosen to exercise a concerted national effort to lead Canada from a situation of world-wide recession to a realistic world of recovery. To make this or any national effort work, the full thrust of all Canadians is required. Each segment of our society must co-operate, whether it is the elected representatives, public servants, or even, unfortunately in this case, the pensioners, families and children, who are involved as well.

This is not a Bill that is going to be a detriment to families, to single parent families, children, or anyone in this country. I think it is an excellent example of how to keep the six and five program alive while maintaining the incomes of those who most need the income, and need assistance in this country.

It is difficult for anyone, individual or corporate, to give up a benefit to which they have become accustomed, but it is only through limited involvement of each segment of the Canadian population that the six and five program will attack and lower the inflation rate. The problem is universal.

Canadians are being called upon to sacrifice a little in the short term in order to ensure Canada's economic recovery and stability. We must pitch in to achieve this goal. The economy of this country is far too important to be taken lightly, as it is taken by the Opposition. There is a common denominator in this battle. We all, as individuals, unfortunately have to tighten our belts and redistribute the cash flow in response to economic conditions. The Government is doing the same. We are attempting to implement this measure in a way that is least injurious to our basic quality of life. The Government likewise is attempting to redistribute its budget in a way that maintains the basic lifestyle of its citizens, particularly those who are most unable to protect themselves against changes in an economic climate over which they have little or no control.

There are armchair philsophers and prophets of doom and gloom sitting in the Opposition who would criticize any Government program on the basis of partisan politics, but can offer no constructive alternatives. They have indicated that Bill C-132 will take food from the mouths of children and jeopardize their chances of a university education. The simple facts of this straightforward Bill negate this type of sensationalism.

The current Family Allowances Act provides an annual escalation of allowances in January of each year on the basis of increases in the Canadian Price Index. The current 1982 rate is $26.91 per child per month. Under this Bill the amount as of January 1983 will rise to $28.52 a month, and not more than $29.95 a month in January of 1984. Based on the estimate that the average rate of inflation will fall to about 6 per cent—let us hope it will go lower but say 6 per cent—by the end of 1984 the reduction will be approximately $16.80 per child for the year 1983 and $28.32 per child for 1984, a total reduction of $45 per child for the two year period.

The difference between the expected increases in the Family Allowances and the actual increases due to the six and five program capping is between $1.40 and $1.50 per month. As with all aspects of the six and five, there will be increases, so no one will be treading water at the 1982 rate. That is, there will still be increases of 6 per cent and 5 per cent in 1983 and 1984 respectively, even though they will not be at the rate of inflation at the particular time. That is what we see on the one hand; the reduction of $45 per child approximately over the two year period.

On the other hand, just as the indexing of old age pensions protects those most in need of benefits, the seniors who did not have sufficient income to handle this kind of reduction, the Government instituted an indexed increase in the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

As in the case of the old age pensions, Bill C-132 has made special provisions for those families eligible, and therefore most deserving of the Child Tax Credit. The Child Tax Credit was introduced by the Liberal Government in 1978 to provide special assistance to families earning less than $18,000 a year. The amount of family earnings for full entitlement has since been increased to $26,300 per year. As a one time effort under Bill C-139, $50 will be added to the 1982 Child Tax Credit as a compensation in advance to low and middle income families for the reductin in Family Allowances over the two year restraint program. Of the 3.6 million families currently in receipt of Family Allowance payments, approximately 2.5 million families will not be adversely affected, due to the special temporary increase of a $50 Child Tax Credit.

As an example, a family with two children and a yearly income of less than $26,300 will receive the full Child Tax Credit of $686, comprised of the basic $293 per child, plus the special $50 Child Tax Credit per child. The Child Tax Credit is applicable to a similar family on a diminishing scale with a family income of up to $40,050. It is not Family Allowances that will be cut, as claimed by the Opposition. The anticipated increase will be reduced. Recipients in 1983 and 1984 will still be receiving more money than they did in 1982.

To return to the example, only one third of Canadian mothers receiving Family Allowance will receive a smaller increase than anticipated for their child benefits in the coming two years. As stated, this reduction will be between $1.40 and $1.50 per month. Of course this Bill does not in any way affect the special allowances paid for children under 18 years of age maintained by Government care, such as through welfare agencies or institutions. They are fully indexed in both 1983 and 1984.

The results will be that expenditures through the Family Allowance program will have a net reduction of about $93 million in 1983, and potentially $154 million in 1984, depending on the decline in the inflation rate. The gross reduction is approximately $115 million in 1983 and $190 million in 1984. Of course the reason for the difference is the revenue lost in taxation.

At a time when national Governments are faced with the same set of economic circumstances as individuals, they are willing to cut their programs, and the largest expenditures are those to individual Canadians. I say this knowing that the Government does not want to cut expenditures, but, in this case, because of inflation and the need to reduce the rate of inflation, action had to be taken. I commend the Government for taking action. I do not think anyone would suggest that this was not a difficult decision to make. No one likes to have their income expectations reduced.

Only those families with incomes of more than $40,050 will receive no Child Tax Credit. Families with income less than $26,300 will receive the full Child Tax Credit. This will more than compensate for the reduction in the indexation of Family Allowance increases which were anticipated in 1983 and 1984 before the six and five guidelines were put in place. It is my feeling that Bill C-132 will entrench the Liberal commitment to universality, while ensuring that the burden of restraint is not placed on those who are unable to bear it. The spirit is teamwork. Little has been taken from those who cannot afford a reduction in income; it has been more than compensated by the Child Tax Credit.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member clarify for the House and for Canadians his argument about whether or not Family Allowance changes will mean any reduction in money to families? Does he realize, or is he aware of the fact that in 1981 Statistics Canada showed that family poverty had increased in the country for the first time since the early 1970s, that among those poor families the most significant increase was in number of single parent families, and that with the recession and the increase in unemployment poverty would balloon in 1982? Is he aware of the fact that there is increasing family poverty as a result of increased unemployment? When will his Government stop talking about inflation and start doing something about the need for employment so that people can have decent incomes?

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Members concern about low-income families, but the truth of the matter is that poverty has not increased in the country.

Mrs. Mitchell: How can you say that?

Mr. MacLellan: Those who are in need—

Mrs. Mitchell: Don't you know your riding?

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, I know my riding much better than the Hon. Member.

Mrs. Mitchell: Those figures were from 1980.

Mr. MacLellan: No, not at all. Those people who have lost employment certainly do not have an abundance of income, by any means, but unemployment insurance has been maintained. Job-creation programs have been escalated, and the actual poverty line is subject to change by anyone who wants to change it. In my opinion poverty has not increased. The income of those with higher incomes has been reduced, but poverty itself, as it was measured in the past, has not increased.

Mr. Keeper: I am rather surprised that the Hon. Member should deny the fact that family poverty has increased for the first time since the early 1970s, according to the 1981 figures of Statistics Canada. This is not a matter of opinion. They are statistical figures, analyzed by competent economists and researchers with the Canadian Council on Social Development. Poverty has increased, and one of the clear indications of that fact is that there are now more workers who are heads of families, who traditionally had jobs, than ever who are unemployed; in numbers unknown in recent times. How can the Member sit in this House, or travel in this country and come to the conclusion that poverty has not increased?

Mr. MacLellan: The Hon. Member can quote any figures he wants, and substantiate them on any scale he wants, but incomes have also increased substantially over the last ten years. There is no suggestion that unemployment has not increased. There are a great many people whose unemployment insurance benefits have expired. This is of grave concern. I would not argue that point.

How we are to define poverty, keeping in mind that the incomes of those who have jobs have increased? I would like the Hon. Member to set forth his parameters; what does he consider the poverty to be, and then we can take it from there. Unfortunately we cannot do that this afternoon, but I would be interested in learning his parameters and comparing them with comparable parameters of the past.

Mr. Anguish: Mr. Speaker, Before posing my question, I would like to say I was surprised by the Hon. Member's earlier remarks when I raised a point of order in an effort to ensure that he was speaking on the correct piece of legislation.

In light of his unfortunate comments about the circumstances which require keeping the six and five alive, and that it has to affect pensioners and some other people in our society, why does he not urge the Government in caucus to extend the six and five program? I could possibly support a six and five program if it covered everyone. What bothers me most about the program, and this has caused most of the time waste in the House of Commons, is that it is directed at specific segments of society. Why do you not encourage your caucus to have the six and five program extended, say, to the bank's profits and other corporate sector profits? Limiting of profits to six and five should be done. The banks have always maintained that they should have high profits because their profits should relate to their assets. If that is true, why does the Government not guarantee a profit of six and five per cent to the farmers of this country? I know many farmers in my constituency, who have over $500,000 in assets, who, for the past few years, have hardly received any net income at the end of a year. This situation will get worse by doing away with the Crow rate as a result of the Pepin plan. Why does the Government not extend that program to cap profits to some and guarantee profits to others who are not making it in our society right now?

• (1720)

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the concern generally on the six and five program. But the six and five program has worked and it is continuing to work. It does apply to everyone as far as income tax indexing is concerned. In this country we have to look at a great deal of unemployment. We have a very high rate of unemployment, much higher than is acceptable to anyone in this House. At a time when we are trying to create jobs and trying to get an economic recovery, how can we say to companies close to bankruptcy that have perhaps used every dollar to pay off debts and are squeezed by increased interest rates on the one hand and reduced sales on the other, that we are going to apply a reduced level of profits, that they will have to accept a reduced level of profits when their profits are low enough as it is? How are we going to stimulate the economy at this particular time by applying income restraints against these companies? I agree there are companies that do make profits over what one would consider a justified profit, but right now the economy is in great difficulty. We have to try to stimulate the economy, create jobs and get out of this deep recession in which we find ourselves at the present time.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the Hon. Member's last remarks. Why is it that he and his Liberal colleagues, who seem to be talking like Conservatives on this issue, when they want to restore confidence and stability to the economy do so by offering extra incentives, extra grants and extra payments to those who have, and forcibly restrain those who, relatively speaking, do not have? How do the Liberals justify that, particularly by creating the kind of insecurity which seems to be the only tangible results of the Bill before us? At least that is the statement made by representatives of the Government. They say it will not make an actual difference to their income, it will just create that feeling of insecurity among them so they have the psychological idea that they are being mobilized to help restore some stability and security to our economy. How do the Liberals justify the two tracks? The Liberals hit at those who do not have and they give more to those who do have.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member, when he accuses us of talking like Tories, that what we are discussing here at the present time is Bill C-132 and the compensation for reduction in the indexation of the Family Allowance by a $50 Tax Credit over the two-year period.

When the Hon. Member talks about incentives, where was he and his NDP colleagues when the Government presented its November 12 budget and the Government took the criticism from the business community for the regulations which it was putting forward? Where were the NDP then?

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is by the Government's decision, of course, that this afternoon we have to continue debating this six and five legislation, in this case to put the cap on Family Allowances. It is the Government's decision that this is much more important than to debate what part Canada will play in the nuclear arms race.

This afternoon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) tabled the agreement for the framework of testing weapons like the Cruise missile, but refused to make a statement that should have been made. In other words, he refused to allow any opportunity for Members of this House to question or debate a very, very important statement. Therefore, it is with regret that I have to speak not on what has concerned many thousands of Canadians very deeply, not on an issue in which 52 per cent of Canadians are recorded by the Gallup poll as disagreeing with the Government's actions, well in advance of the Government signing that agreement today, but on an issue which, according to Government speakers, is really quite unimportant.

We have been told by Government speakers, including the last one, that almost all of the people concerned will receive the same amount in total between Family Allowance and Child Tax Credit. Only a few on higher incomes, he tells us, will miss anything. He might have told us also that those people on higher incomes may well lose money or would lose money on the income tax if it were fairly graduated. The Government has failed to show why it is so important to put down a debate on national defence in order to have a debate about an income arrangement, which, according to the Government's own spokesman, makes no difference at all to the incomes of most people. This is the only thing on which the Government will allow us to speak.

I hope the Government will come to its senses later and allow us to speak on a more important subject soon.

Bill C-132 fits in as part of a general anti-child temper of the times. It cuts Family Allowance. There may be a temporary compensation for that, but the cut for the future is a message for families, namely: do not have children. This Bill picks on the weak, in this case the children, as the other two Bills pick on the weak, in those cases the pensioners. But this Bill picks on those even weaker because children cannot vote.

The Government's estimates of how much money it would save by this measure have varied all the way from June last year—through committee hearings when the Government admitted that the Government would save only about $10 million—until now when the Government suggests that nothing will be saved at all, or perhaps there will be a net outlay to the children. That situation depends on the projections concerning the rate of inflation. The projections in both the November budget and the June budget were so wildly inaccurate that we cannot take them seriously. Therefore, the fact that the Government keeps pressing for the passage of this legislation and will not withdraw it, even though, by the Government's own figures, the Bill is meaningless and makes no difference to the battle against inflation, has to be examined more deeply.

As I said, this is in the context of a general drift of Government action in which there is less money for housing for ordinary people, less money for education for ordinary people, less money for health care and less money for public services, such as social and recreational services for ordinary people. In some places, such as downtown Toronto, this is even extended specifically to children where there are thousands and thousands of apartments that ban children and expel parents who are guilty of giving birth to children. Therefore, it is very interesting to find this piece of legislation pointed against the Family Allowance.

The Minister gave an interesting explanation in committee. When asked why another measure such as the child tax exemption or the Child Tax Credit was not used, she answered that it was necessary to use something that comes as a cheque into as many houses as possible, a cheque that people receive by mail. If she wants to look up that reference, it is on page 14 of the report of the fiftieth meeting. This was in support of her concept of mobilization. You have to show people that they are being cut in the amount they receive rather than through a tax deduction that they do not receive. In other words, she wants to hit several million families with a monthly reminder of some type of penalty.

This is the part of the Government's approach to the economic crisis that we all recognize. I would like to give a contrasting approach. It is not the approach of any Party in the House, nor is it an approach of a political body. It is the approach of the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church who have suggested, through their commission, an ethical standard. It has been the cause of much debate. Some Hon. Members have opposed it. One Hon. Member opposite is apparently defending it or the Bishops' right to speak on it. I wish to comment on this approach.

The Bishops have suggested that the present recession appears to be symptomatic of a much larger structural crisis. They say that observers have pointed out that profound changes are taking place in the structure of both capital and technology which are bound to have serious social impacts on labour. It is obvious that when they say "capital", they do not mean the national manufacturers association. When they say "labour", they do not mean the Canadian Labour Congress. They are talking about human activities in a basic sense.

They say that we are now in an age when transnational corporations and banks can move capital from one country to another in order to take advantage of cheaper labour conditions, lower taxes and reduced environmental restrictions. They say that we are in an age of automation with computers, when human work is rapidly being replaced by machines on the assembly line and in administrative centres.

The Bishops do not claim that these are facts that are, in any sense, revealed by the Gospel. They claim that these are facts observable by any reasonable human being. I agree.

They also point to a reasonable conclusion. They conclude that the consequences are likely to be permanent or structural unemployment and increasing marginalization for a large segment of the population in Canada and other countries. That is exactly what we have today. The Bishops have suggested a cause for it, which I think the House would do well to consider seriously. In light of the Minister's refusal this afternoon to allow us to debate the matter of armaments and the arms' race, the Bishops' next comment seems very timely. They say, "In this context, the increasing concentration of capital and technology in the production of military armaments—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I apologize to the Hon. Member but I have been listening to him for the last few minutes and it seems to me that he is getting away from the matter now before the House. That is, the motion relating to Family Allowances. I would appeal to the Hon. Member to come back to that subject matter.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker. I am attempting to get to the bottom of the Government's strange behaviour in insisting beyond all else on pushing a Family Allowance capping Bill which does not, according to the Government itself, make any serious difference to anyone's income. It seems strange to insist on debating that rather than debating what many Members of the House feel is a very urgent issue, namely, Canada's part in the arms' race.

I think the Bishops have hit the nail on the head when they said that there is this economic crisis which has generated a moral crisis. They are saying that the emphasis on capital and technology directly contradicts the principle of the dignity of labour. They are also saying that it directly contradicts the principle of a preferential option for the poor. Those are two principles which perhaps—they do not make it clear—they do base on the Gospel. Those are certainly principles that many others besides Christians hold and teach.

My point is that if we accept those two principles, the dignity of human labour and the preferential option for the poor, then this whole program of the Government comes into question. This is the program that the Bishops question.

The Government blames inflation on workers' wages, Government spending and low productivity rather than on the monopoly control of prices. That is the crux of the matter. If the Government is blaming workers' wages and Government expenditures which have been built up over the past three decades to equalize the inequalities of income in this country, and refusing to touch the monopoly prices that are the real cause of inflation, then it is putting up a smokescreen. The Bishops have not accused the Government of putting up a smokescreen, but I do. I believe that the Bishops' remarks provide a very sound base for that accusation.

The Government's strategy is simply to increase profitability by cutting workers' incomes, both the direct pay and indirect pay, through things like Family Allowances. Even if the recession brings the inflation rate down below 6 per cent and 5 per cent, something which has not been proved, the fact is that it is trying to instil in the 3.5 million people who receive Family Allowance some sense that they are to blame for inflation. This is similar to last winter when the Governor of the Bank of Canada said that even minimum wage is a cause of inflation. To blame the victims of inflation for the inflation itself is extremely cynical.

This Bill cuts into Family Allowance at a time when, according to the evidence before the committee, 900,000 children in Canada were living in poverty. It is a cut that will potentially affect the poor more than the rich. It has been pointed out that even if there is a Child Tax Credit that maintains the level of total benefit for two years, the benefit is reduced after that. In fact, the Liberals have been reducing that benefit year by year. In 1976, it suspended the indexation of Family Allowance. In 1978, it reduced the Family Allowance from $28, which it should have been, to $20. The result is that the Family Allowance is now $27 a month when it should be $40 a month, had it not been tampered with. This is a consistent policy on the part of the Liberals.

We are told by the Hon. Member for Lincoln that they discussed this at the convention. He did not tell us what the conclusions was. We know that they did not discuss this at the Conservative Convention: they just took a poll. Sixty-two per cent were in favour of cutting the Family Allowance.

The Government is not only not cutting profits, it is feeding them. It wants to give hundreds of millions of dollars to the railways and guarantee them 39.5 per cent profits. In 1980, it already gave $15 billion to industries in return for only $11 billion in taxes. We are now told that it is up to pensioners, mothers and civil servants to be mobilized in the fight against inflation. The big companies will not be mobilized; only the poor. This mobilization talk is a means of attacking people through a monthly pay cheque which tells its recipients that it is their fault that we have inflation. It is a means of putting people down, a means of blaming the victims for the crisis, each one in his or her home. It is a means of repeatedly penalizing people with small cuts or insults. Along with the hign unemployment, it contributes to paralyzing people, at least for the time being. They just do not understand what the Government they elected is trying to do.

I would seriously recommend to the Government that it consider a complete, alternative policy, as suggested by the Bishops of the Roman Catholic Church. First, the Government should regard unemployment, not inflation, as being the number one problem of our country. A couple of Hon. Members have said that they do, but they continue to act on the theory that inflation is their number one problem. I wish they would put their action where their mouths are today and turn their Government's policy around and treat unemployment, not inflation, as being our number one policy.

Second, there should be a broad industrial plan for rebuilding-industries, especially manufacturing industries and the labour intensive industries of this country. Third, if there is to be a way of fighting inflation, it must be done on a fairer basis. Instead of hitting only employees, pensioners and children, there must be some system for raking in some of the excess profits, some of the fat profits which are being made at this time on the backs of the unemployed and the low paid. There must be maintenance of the network of the support systems of unemployment insurance, welfare, subsidized housing, medicare, subsidized education and all the benefits which have been built up in Canada. Those must be maintained on behalf of the poor. Family Allowance is one of the very important ones.

Finally, the Bishops say that the views of unions should be considered more in these decisions, and I would urge Hon. Members opposite to remember the very strong representations made by the Canadian Labour Congress against this Bill as well as other Bills.

As first the action of the Government simply seems unjust. At the time when it predicted that the inflation rate might be around 10 per cent or 9 per cent, cutting the Family Allowance to 6 per cent and 5 per cent seemed unjust. Now that it claims that the inflation rate will go down below even 5 per cent, it not only seems unjust, but also ridiculous. It seems like a way of stalling, a way of distracting people's attention from the real troubles in this country which arise from monopolistic prices which are forced up by very large groups of corporations. The Government is distracting attention from those by pointing at the Family Allowance recipients who, by its own admission, may in fact not actually be affected in their dollar receipts by this legislation. It is a shameful charade which the Government has played on the House and the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. Are there any questions or comments?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I see that I have two minutes in which to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. I apologize to the Hon. Member. Was the Parliamentary Secretary rising to ask a question?

Mr. Schroder: No. I just wondered if we had used up our question time for debate.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Sit down. I have a minute to go, and I will tell you what I think.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Chair called for questions or comments. No one rose, and we are therefore now proceeding to debate. I recognized the Hon. Member for Saskatoon West.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon West): I have one minute left in which to speak in this particular debate. I think it is significant that today we have seated across from us, on the Government side, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), who is responsible for Family Allowances and is to be the guardian of Family Allowances for the people of Canada, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy), who has a special responsibility to the youth of this country, the Minister of State for Mines (Mrs. Erola) who is responsible for the Status of Women and who should be interested in the plight of women, including single mothers, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Caccia), who should be interested in the terms of employment opportunities. They have been here and have condoned this atrocious attack on the youth and families of our nation. I simply say, shame on them.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order. It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to the order made on Monday, February 7, 1983, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill.

[English]

The question is on the amendment (Mr. Hawkes). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Hawkes) which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 21

[Translation]

METRIC CONVERSION

ADOPTION OF METRIC SYSTEM—WESTERN ALLEGATIONS AGAINST FRENCH CANADIANS

Mrs. Céline Hervieux-Payette (Montreal-Mercier): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to make a few comments on the metric system which is now being used in 150 countries. In Canada, it was adopted unanimously by Parliament in 1971, after which the system was introduced gradually across Canada.

Madam Speaker, the metric system has definite advantages. Today, as a result of an agreement with the provinces, our children are learning the metric system in schools across Canada. I may also point out that the Common Market countries and also the United States are using the metric system. Furthermore, from October 1981 to September 1982, Canada had a surplus trade balance of $11 billion, and one wonders what effect converting back from the metric system to the old imperial system would have on our balance of trade.

Madam Speaker, I am very concerned about the protests we have been seeing for a number of months, which are being led by our Opposition colleagues who after thirteen years are trying to undo legislation that was passed by Parliament. When I went out West not long ago, Madam Speaker, I was also concerned about the fact that people were saying that the metric system was being used by French Canadians to take over the economy of the West. Madam Speaker, I think nothing is further from the truth—

[English]

And I urge my fellow colleagues on the other side of Parliament to respect this institution—

Madam Speaker: Order.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF AGRI-BOND SCHEME

Mr. Bud Bradley (Haldimand-Norfolk): Madam Speaker, the plight faced by agriculture in Canada has been brought to the attention of the House many times. We have pointed out the high cost of energy, labour, seed and equipment, among other things. We have also pointed out the high cost of money. We have requested more money and lower rates for the Farm Credit Corporation, and more money for small business development bonds. We have called on the Government to allow farmers to invest in the Farm Credit Corporation and be allowed to write off their interest returns. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture, as well as many other farm organizations, are now calling on the Government to consider agri-bonds. Why not allow farmers to help farmers? They are capable and willing.

We are in a period of accelerating farm bankruptcies and sales. We have more and more farmers, of all ages, finding themselves in the interest rate squeeze. Agri-bonds would allow farmers with funds to invest in the Farm Credit Corporation. Because interest paid on the bonds would be tax deductible, the Farm Credit Corporation could pay a lower interest return on this money. This would then allow the Farm Credit Corporation to loan funds back to needy farmers at a lower rate. If present Government assistance to the Farm Credit Corporation prevailed, rates could be reduced even further. I call on the Government to consider this method of farm financing now, not next year when it will be too late for too many.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

PROPOSED TESTING OF CRUISE MISSILE

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): Madam Speaker, the Government's communique on Cruise testing states the air launched Cruise missile will help modernize the U.S. Strategic Air Command, part of the United States deterrent force on which North American security depends. In other words, we are testing a strategic weapon system in terrain and conditions entirely different from the conditions which brought about the decision to deploy ground launched Cruise missiles in Europe to counter the Soviets' SS-20. I cannot conceive of any terrain or weather conditions in eastern Germany, Poland, or European Russia, that in any way resemble Canada's far north. How can testing the common guidance system under completely different conditions contribute to NATO defence in Europe?

The weapon we are testing is not a theatre weapon, but a strategic weapon carried by a B-52 bomber. The guidance system needs of the ground launched Cruise to be deployed in Europe do not require the kind of flight testing we are proposing. The Government should not use, as its basis for testing, the NATO agreement of 1979, but rather make it quite clear that we are testing a strategic weapon to be used over the polar regions. If our NATO commitment is our concern, better we should expend our energies improving our conventional forces, and especially our marine command.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPEAL OF ACQUITTAL IN NOVA SCOTIA HOMICIDE CASE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds-Grenville): Madam Speaker, I rise to protest the horrendous decision by the Department of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia to appeal a verdict of not guilty of first-degree murder handed down to Jane Stafford, who shot her wife-beating husband. Strong evidence from 16 witnesses brought to light the torturous mental and physical abuse this lady suffered from her husband for five excruciatingly long years, abuse and suffering that go beyond comprehension, at the hands of a man whose home local RCMP were instructed not to go near unless armed and ready to shoot, a man whom witnesses testified as having beaten and abused two previous wives, and children, and beat Jane Stafford to the point of unconsciousness on a number of occasions, a man who threatened and attempted to kill his wife, her parents, and her sister.

Jane Stafford, fighting for survival, has already received enough punishment—five long years of painful mental and physical punishment—and it appears the Department of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia wants her punished further. I believe, and I am sure everyone in this Chamber would agree, this lady was more than justified in her actions to protect herself and her son from the terrifying onslaught of repeated assault. I would therefore call upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. MacGuigan) to take a giant step for battered wives all across Canada and give them the courage to take legal action, by intervening on behalf of Mrs. Stafford and assuring that her acquittal stands.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHINESE NEW YEAR

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS OF CANADIANS OF CHINESE ORIGIN

Mrs. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Madam Speaker, gung hai fat choy—Happy Chinese New Year.

One hundred and twenty-five years ago the first Chinese community was established in Canada. Men laboured in northern mines hoping to find a better life in the Golden Mountain. Many labourers gave their lives to build our railways which united British Columbia to Canada.

Life was hard and lonely for those men who struggled to support their families in China. Their widows, many of whom lived in Toronto and Vancouver, also suffered great hardships so their children could progress.

Early laws such as the discriminatory Exclusion Act prevented family reunification. It was not until 1949 that Asian people gained the right to vote in Canada. CCF-NDP elected representatives were in the vanguard fighting for these rights.

Canadians of Chinese origin have contributed much to Canada through business, the professions, and higher education. Their strong family life has been a model for Canadian society for four generations. Thriving communities have been rebuilt in our inner cities with new cultural centres to honour and share a rich Chinese heritage. Many organizations provide mutual and community services. Communities across Canada have joined together to protect minority rights.

On behalf of all Members of Parliament we extend best wishes across Canada for a Happy Chinese New Year.

Gung hai fat choy for the Year of the Pig.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

TORONTO CONVENTION CENTRE DEVELOPMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, some 42 million visitors from outside the Province spent more than $2 billion in Ontario in 1982, and the tourism industry last year provided 500,000 people in Ontario with either direct or indirect employment.

This week federal contributions of up to $23 million were announced toward the building of the Toronto Convention Centre, which will not only create 2,500 needed construction jobs in Toronto but is also estimated to have the potential to create up to 10,000 jobs in the service industry in southern Ontario.

Representing, as I do, a constituency where many people are employed in the hospitality industry and in construction, I am particularly pleased to see this development which is the result of considerable co-operation and hard work on the part of federal, provincial, and municipal politicians, and industry and labour representatives.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ENERGY POLICY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Madam Speaker, on November 24, 1980, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Munro) promised he would bring forward a northern energy policy by March, 1981. Would you believe that now, almost two years after the deadline, nothing has been done and no comprehensive policy exists?

Ad hoc programs such as the Remote Community Demonstration Program, announced with great fanfare last April, have withered on the vine, and the Home Heating Oil Assistance Program, the Federal Power Support Program and the Commercial Power Rate Relief Program, which together provide minimal relief to small far northern communities, are scheduled to expire on March 31 this year.

The unanimous recommendations of the House of Commons Subcommittee on the Northern Canada Power Commission gather dust on the shelves of the Department while the Minister twiddles his thumbs. The last of a series of promises concerning the northern energy policy was made on November 8, 1982, when the Minister promised a Cabinet decision by Christmas which, needless to say, was not forthcoming. Northerners are getting tired of worn out promises, and demand to know where the Government stands on northern energy issues.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, in 1982 farm bankruptcies were up by 60 per cent over 1981. That is really only the tip of the iceberg when you consider how many farmers were forced into early foreclosure and, of course, the machinery seizures that became commonplace across Canada.

The Canadian family farm is under a good deal of pressure these days, yet day after day the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) stands in his place saying that the Government has little room to move on the issue. I should like to remind the Minister and Members of the Government that Bill C-653 was introduced for first reading on April 22, 1982. This is a Bill which would provide a simple and inexpensive procedure for farmers to rearrange their affairs when cash flow becomes insufficient to meet current obligations as they become due. A similar Act was introduced in the 1930s which enabled farmers to protect themselves from the banks.

• (1115)

We have seen recent actions by the Canadian Farmers' Survival Association using very unorthodox tactics in an effort to save their own farms and their neighbours' farms. Today the Canadian Bankers' Association threatened farmers across the country by saying that banks would start pulling loans and being more hesitant in giving loans to farmers if this unorthodox tactic continues. It is a desperate situation. The Canadian family farm is being threatened. The Government has an opportunity to move now—

Madam Speaker: Order, please.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EMPLOYMENT

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PERMANENT JOB-CREATION PROGRAMS IN FORTHCOMING BUDGET

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Many Canadians have told me that the only job creation programs of the Government are the alphabet soup programs which are very short-term in nature and do not provide any permanent jobs. They are primarily there for political effect. As an example, the NEED Program provides 12-week to 16-week jobs just to requalify people for the unemployment insurance rolls, but no permanent jobs.

Could the Minister today make a specific statement in the House to give some hope to people who have simply given up looking for jobs, a number which has increased about three times in the last two years, that there will be some permanent job creation programs in the forthcoming budget?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, before I reply to that specific question I think it would be very helpful if the Hon. Member got better information. To begin with, the NEED Program does not provide jobs for 12 to 16 weeks. In fact the average length of jobs which we are approving at the present time is upwards of 32 weeks. They are providing work which ranges all the way from the restoration of housing on Indian reserves, to the development of fish facilities in the Maritimes, and to the provision of sewer and water facilities in other Provinces. We just signed an agreement in British Columbia, for the information of the noise makers over there on that side, which provides for major reforestation projects at Terrace Bay.

The kinds of projects which are being provided across the country are designed to make major contributions to the productive capacity of the communities, to provide for new municipal infrastructure services, to provide major services in the social service area, such as language training, and the ability to provide women with care centres for children.

It would be very helpful for the Hon. Member, before he rises and makes blanket condemnations, to spend a little more time making a careful assessment of the kind of work which is in fact being done. It is providing a real clear option to people to return to work as opposed to having to go on social assistance or social welfare. That is what Canadians want. They want to work as opposed to being idle, and that is what we are providing them with.

Mr. Wilson: Madam Speaker, the Minister did not answer the question. The question was: will the Government propose permanent job creation programs as opposed to short-term alphabet-soup programs, which the Minister just admitted that is what it has been doing.

CONSTRUCTION ASSOCIATION PROPOSAL ON CAPITAL COST ALLOWANCES

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, recently the Canadian Construction Association, in its pre-budget submission, indicated that it was anticipating a further decline of some 60,000 jobs in 1983 over and above a huge drop in jobs in 1982.

Does the Minister agree with the proposals of the Construction Association, which have also been made by the Conservative Party of Canada, to reinstate the capital cost allowance, to reverse the change in the tax regime for the small business community, and to introduce incentives to encourage construction exports, all of which will increase jobs?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, while we are on the subject of developing long-term jobs in the construction area, I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre that he speak to many Members of his own caucus. The Minister of Transport put forward a proposal some two weeks ago which would provide some 350,000 new person-years of jobs in the country in this decade. It would start close to $800 million worth of construction in this year alone, provided that we are able to obtain full support for the legislation to modernize the railway system. Yet all we hear from Members on his side is delay, conflict and opposition. If the Hon. Member is really interested in getting work going, I suggest that he tell his caucus Members to come on board, support that legislation, and get those jobs going.

• (1120)

Mr. Wilson: The Minister is pulling things out of the air. We are looking for specific proposals from the Government to address the problem of job loss. The 60,000 job-loss figure that the Construction Association has pointed to, takes these things into account, and they still need more. That is what we are requesting.

DROP IN EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Madam Speaker, for the past two or three years the Government has continually blamed the problems of high unemployment on the international recession. However, employment in the United States has dropped by some 1.9 per cent while it has dropped by three times that amount in Canada on a proportionate basis; 5.3 per cent in the last year. How does the Minister explain this substantially worse performance to the 1.6 million people who are out of a job and have seen their lives devastated by this abysmal performance?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, again I am afraid that the Hon. Member has been somewhat loose and easy with his reporting to the House on what in fact has taken place. I think it would be foolish for anyone in the House to try to suggest that Canada is not part of a world-wide recession.

Mr. Wilson: I never did. I said, why worse?

Mr. Axworthy: For Members opposite to try to suggest and to continue this foolishness of saying that somehow only Canada is being affected by this recession, simply will not wash. I think that Canadians know better. I believe they understand that the problems we face are being faced by everyone, whether the United States, Great Britain, or France.

What we do point out when we talk realistically to Canadians—not the exaggerated nonsense we hear from that Hon. Member—is that we in fact have put in place in this country, contrary to what the Americans have done, a major program of unemployment insurance that extends for a full 52 weeks, and a number of specific job creation programs for which we will spend over a billion dollars this year to provide well over 150,000 jobs for Canadians. There are a number of other initiatives as well. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, there are many Americans who would be very happy if their Government were bringing in the kind of initiatives that this Government is introducing.

SKILLS GROWTH FUNDS—PURCHASE OF AMERICAN MANUFACTURED EQUIPMENT

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is with regard to the enforcement of the "Buy Canadian" provisions of his Skills Growth Fund. It is supplementary to a question asked by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines on Monday. Why has he allowed Niagara College to place purchase orders for American-made welding equipment for training purposes when suitable Canadian equipment that fully met his "Buy Canadian" provisions was tendered to the College by the Lincoln Electric Company of Canada?

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to answer that particular question and to clear up the confusion in the Hon. Member's mind. As he should know, the jurisdiction over community colleges is very much a provincial Government authority. Our Skills Growth Fund is established as a direct grant to enable community colleges, non-profit groups or business groups to modernize their training facilities. The decisions made by those organizations must be authorized by their provincial authorities.

In the particular case in question, it was drawn to my attention that, while we established the basic standard that the sourcing of new training equipment should be of Canadian origin, the College was authorized in this particular case by provincial authorities, who are much more closely affiliated to the Hon. Member than they are to me, to go ahead and buy this particular piece of equipment.

In order to correct that situation I have sent letters off to all of the provincial Ministers of Education, reminding them of the standards of our Skills Growth Fund, and that we want them to buy Canadian. I hope they will respond.

ENFORCEMENT OF BUY-CANADIAN PROVISIONS

Mr. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Madam Speaker, the Minister's rules in his own booklets say that the community colleges are to "Buy Canadian" unless the Minister of Education of a Province has said that the equipment is not suitable. In these cases of Niagara College, Mohawk College and Conestoga College, the Ministry has not said that. In fact the equipment is 100 per cent in use at Algonquin and other colleges. Will the Minister tell this House whether he is going to enforce the buy Canadian provisions of his own fund so that the jobs that are involved in manufacturing the equipment will stay in Canada, or is his "Buy Canadian" program just more Liberal rhetoric?

• (1125)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I simply point out to the Hon. Member that enforcement action has already been taken. I have written to the provincial Ministers reminding them of their responsibility under the agreement. At the same time, because of the importance of the Skills Growth Fund in the creation of new jobs and new training for the young people of the country, I am not going to endanger the good relations we have with the Provinces simply because of the nonsense put forward by the Member.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I would like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Two of the Prime Minister's top advisers stated, as reported in The Globe and Mail of last Saturday, that even if the arms control negotiations going on in Europe succeed, as we all hope they will, "the Americans will still want to test their air launched Cruise missile in Canada" since it is of course part of the U.S. Air Force's inter-continental strategic weaponry not directly related to the European theatre.

Will the Minister therefore confirm or deny to the House that the Prime Minister has in fact, through secret correspondence and discussions, reached an understanding with the United States President that we will in fact test their Cruise missile over Canadian soil?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has asked me to confirm or deny that the Prime Minister has entered into arrangements with the President of the United States to test the Cruise missile, through correspondence. I deny that.

UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs however not confirm that the Prime Minister has reached an understanding with the President of the United States and that that understanding was reached some time ago, that Canada will be receptive to a proposal from the United States to test their air launched Cruise missile over Canadian territory? Has an understanding in principle been reached between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the understanding reached between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister was that there would be an over-all umbrella agreement that would provide the guidelines for weapons testing in Canada. That understanding was tabled yesterday in detail in the House of Commons.

There is no understanding beyond what was tabled in the House of Commons yesterday, and it is quite untrue to say that a commitment has been made privately by the Prime Minister that goes beyond the agreement which was tabled yesterday.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISEASE FOUND AMONG FORMER FAR EAST PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Since the commencement of the investigation of Canadian Far East prisoners of war for strongyloidiasis by the Division of Laboratories, Ministry of Health in British Columbia, can the Minister inform the House whether or not any positive findings of this disease have been discovered?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I understand that thus far there have been a number of cases, although not a large number that have been identified, and corrective medical action has been taken not only to alleviate but to address any further occurrences which may show up in further investigation.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL PENSION COMPENSATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg-Assiniboine): Madam Speaker, will the Minister then be proceeding with the steps necessary to provide those stricken veterans with special pension compensation, and will he introduce a Bill, or amendments to present legislation, to cover compensation for these veterans?

Hon. W. Bennett Campbell (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is working under some misinformation in that the legislation does not have to be changed. The provisions of the Pension Act would apply, and if disabling conditions are as a result of this particular disease then veterans are entitled to make application and have their cases considered.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO INTERNATIONAL INSTITUTE OF APPLIED SYSTEMS ANALYSIS

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. The Minister knows that the Government is currently contributing $400,000 annually to the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis. This would cover, among others, the expenses of overseas junkets for such peripatetic experts as Michael Kirby.

• (1130)

Is the Minister aware that, following the lead of the United States, Great Britain decided last July to cease its financial participation in the operation of this Vienna-based institute as—and I quote from The New York Times of January 18 of this year—"The Institute produced vague results that at best repeated much of what was already known"? Would the Minister now review the merits of our country spending resources on this particular venture?

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Minister of State for Economic Development and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I would be very happy to review the results. If the results are not positive and if the Institution is not making a contribution, then, clearly, we should very carefully reassess our position. The preliminary reports which I have received have been quite positive. I would be happy to discuss the operations of the Institute and the results achieved, with the Hon. Member. If, in turn, he has some information that he would like to make known to me about the operations, the achievements, and the purpose of the Institution, I would be happy to hear them, as well.

Mr. MacKay: I appreciate the answer.

REPORTED USE OF DATA BANKS BY SOVIET DELEGATES

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Madam Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Has the Solicitor General looked into the report that Soviets and eastern Europeans have used IIASA to obtain access to western scientists, technologies and data banks, without providing anything comparable in return and, specifically, that Soviet officials in the Institute, such as the new chief Soviet delegate to IIASA, Igor Alekseevich Ganin, who is well connected with the KGB, used the Institute's computer to obtain sensitive military information from data banks located in western countries? If so, has the Solicitor General made any recommendations to his Cabinet colleagues concerning further Canadian financial participation in this venture?

Hon. Bob Kaplan (Solicitor General of Canada): Madam Speaker, I have not done so, but I will take that as a representation and will do so.

CANADA-UNITED STATES TEST AND EVALUATION PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON CRUISE MISSILE TESTING

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. An agreement which was signed yesterday for the testing of U.S. defence systems in Canada states that "individual project arrangements shall be negotiated and concluded by the Canadian and American Defence Departments". Could the Acting Prime Minister tell the House whether or not the Canadian Parliament will have an opportunity, accorded by a Government resolution, to debate the arrangements for the Cruise vehicle tests before their final acceptance?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, as the Hon. Member pointed out, no project arrangement for any particular weapons systems, including the Cruise, has yet been negotiated. When that is done, if it is done, and when negotiations are completed, it will then be the occasion to raise the question as to whether debate will be appropriate.

Mr. Epp: Now is the time.

Mr. MacEachen: I will not give any commitment today concerning debate, but I think that it is a matter which can be raised if and when a project arrangement is concluded.

Mr. McDermid: The answer is no.

Mr. McKinnon: I feel that that is a shocking answer which really forecloses any chance that Parliament will be able to debate the most controversial subject in this country. It seems a shame that the Acting Prime Minister would adopt such an answer.

POSSIBLE TESTING OF NON-NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask another question concerning the agreement which was signed yesterday. It suggested that tests could include "surveillance and identification systems and advanced non-nuclear munitions". As the Minister well knows, the super powers are heavily involved in developing anti-satellite systems and non-nuclear anti-ballistic systems. Could the Minister tell the House whether or not either or both of those weapons are potential candidates for testing in Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Madam Speaker, I cannot tell the Hon. Member that, because—

Miss Jewett: The U.S. has not told you what to do yet.

Mr. MacEachen: —before we can know what proposals are to be considered, they must be made by the United States, which has requested these possibilities. The United States has not yet made any proposal with respect to weapons testing systems.

Mr. Wilson: And you did not even talk about it.

Mr. MacEachen: I suspect that such proposals will be made, but they have not yet been made.

NEGOTIATION OF CRUISE TESTING—RELATIONSHIP TO GENEVA ARMS REDUCTION TALKS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton South): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he inform the House when the specific negotiations with regard to the Cruise testing will take place between the two Defence Departments? When will they start under the terms of the framework agreement?

As there are many Canadians who are seeking clarification on this point, I would also ask the Secretary of State what is the relationship between the specific Cruise negotiations and the arms reduction negotiations in Geneva. Is there a relationship and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the first question asked when will the negotiations begin. I presume that if the United States makes a request—

Miss Jewett: It already has.

Mr. MacEachen: —to enter into an arrangement, the negotiations will begin shortly after that request has been made, but it is not in hand at the present time.

The Hon. Member asked a second question—what is the relationship between Cruise testing and the negotiation in Geneva? The relationship, of course, is quite close and obvious. As the Hon. Member knows, at the NATO meeting in December, 1979, the Government of Canada agreed with the NATO decision to modernize the weapons system of the Alliance and to place the Cruise missile and the Pershing II in Europe. That decision was taken in 1979, calling for the deployment of Cruise missiles land-based in Europe. That, of course, was in response to the considerable deployment of SS-20s placed in Europe by the Soviet Union.

What Canada will probably be asked to do will be to agree to the testing of the guidance system which will be used in the Cruise missile to be located in Europe. The Hon. Member should understand, and I am sure he does, that part of the decision by NATO in 1979 was to pursue negotiations with the Soviet Union with the objective of totally eliminating or substantially reducing all existing land-based missiles in Europe or planned missiles in Europe. Obviously, if these negotiations succeed in 1983, then that success will change considerably, possibly make unnecessary, or reduce the necessity for deployment of Cruise missiles in Europe. Therefore, from our point of view, the most important thing that can happen this year is to put our full weight behind those negotiations so that they will succeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL OF CANADA-UNITED STATES AGREEMENT TO COMMITTEE

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I share the concern expressed by the Hon. Member for Victoria in that the Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs have not agreed to a parliamentary debate with respect to this matter. I think it is a matter that he should reconsider.

Perhaps the Minister is aware of the provisions of the new Standing Orders of the House of Commons, wherein Standing Order 46(4) states:

> Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper.

If there is not a debate in the House, there should at least be an opportunity for the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to examine this exchange of notes which are now part of the parliamentary record. I therefore ask the Minister if he would designate the papers which he filed yesterday, as it is recorded in Hansard, to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence so that the committee can at least begin examination of the matter? At the same time I would like the Minister to give his undertaking that he and his officials would appear.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would like to consult the Government House Leader before making a final determination on the Hon. Member's request. I would like to consider it and consult with the House Leader before making a final response. I believe that, in one way or another, the Standing Committee will have an opportunity to consider this exchange of notes, either from its regular examination of estimates or through the method suggested by the Hon. Member.

• (1140)

INTENT OF STANDING ORDER

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I would ask the Minister to advise the Government House Leader of the intent of the rule that those committees were to become scrutiny committees far beyond the normal "guillotined" estimates process. When the Minister is speaking to the Government House Leader, will he have that in mind?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Madam Speaker, as far as I am concerned I would like to see the widest possible debate in the country, and the widest possible discussion with respect to the over-all arms situation, the negotiations, and how the possible testing of a Cruise missile in Canada is related to the over-all posture of the NATO alliance. I am quite prepared to discuss this matter with the Government House Leader.

CROWSNEST PASS RATE CHANGE—OPPOSITION BY FEDERATION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Minister of Transport. Since the Prime Minister has said, "We do not want to fiddle with the Crow rate unless there is some very strong feelings throughout the West that this rate should be re-opened", and in view of the fact that Canada's main agricultural organization, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture rejected the Minister's plan to demolish the Crow rate, may I ask the Minister is he still insisting on proceeding with his proposal? Does he plan to change it? Is he going to keep on stubbornly fiddling while he "burns our Crow"?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I must compliment my hon. friend for quoting the Prime Minister well. The Prime Minister said, and I repeat, that no action would be taken on the Crow unless there was a desire in the West for a change in the Crow. There is such a change. There is such a desire for change in the Crow. I have already indicated, and the Member knows it well, that in all recent discussions, for example at the Canadian Federation of Agriculture meeting yesterday, at the "outlooks" seminar in Saskatchewan a few days ago, the question was not should the Crow remain or should the Crow not remain. The question was which way should it be changed. The division among people is on methods and not, basically, on substance.

I recognize the Canadian Federation of Agriculture voted in favour yesterday of continuing payments to the railway. But then at the same time, at a seminar in Saskatchewan two days ago, three groups opposed the present plan and seven groups agreed with it, with diversified comments on it.

The world is evolving. People are expressing dissatisfaction now that they did not get 100 per cent of what they were looking for, but they will come to the conclusion that 75 per cent or 80 per cent is not a bad average.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY PROPOSAL

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Madam Speaker, the Minister just does not get the message. There is no question but that an overwhelming majority of Canadian producers, not only grain producers, but others, are opposed to his proposal. This morning the New Democratic Party released an alternative proposal and I sent copies over to the Minister's office. It is an alternative plan to keep the Crow rate and create 110,000 more jobs than even the Minister proposes, and will upgrade railways by public investment in exchange for equity ownership. Since the Minister's proposal is opposed by the majority of producers, will he consider our proposal, which would cost no more than the Government's proposal?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I will certainly do that. I apologize to my hon. friend. I have not read it yet because I was busy doing something else this morning. I will do so during the weekend, and I am sure we will have plenty of occasions to debate it further.

INCOME TAX

INCLUSION OF INCOME TOTALS ON TAX RETURNS—LEGISLATIVE AUTHORITY

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. A constituent of mine has complained to me that his total income appeared on his federal individual tax return form. I looked at mine, and I find that my income appears on my federal income tax return form. I assume that everyone's income now appears on their federal income tax return form.

My second point, Madam Speaker, is that the Post Office is in charge of delivering these forms. There is a fair amount of theft which goes on in the mail and I am investigating a case of a young lady who lost her interest payment from Canada Savings Bonds because it was intercepted in the mail. Someone used her social insurance number.

What legislative authority does the Minister have to place on income tax return forms my social insurance number, and every Canadian's social insurance number; my wife's social insurance number and every Canadian's spouse's social insurance number, together with the total family income? What legislative authority does the Department of National Revenue have to make this information available to whomever wants to go and filch it out of the Post Office system?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I may point out to the Hon. Member that the new T-1 forms that were sent out this year allow for the legislation that is now before the House. I may also remind him that this legislation provides for a new income averaging formula that takes into account the taxpayer's income over the last few years. By indicating last year's income on the form, we are making it easier for the taxpayer who wishes to take advantage of the new income averaging formula in the future, so that he knows what amount he declared as income on his previous return.

As far as the social insurance number is concerned, the Hon. Member knows full well that for practical reasons, the use of computers in processing tax returns is increasing more and more, to prevent any mixups or mistakes and to keep the taxpayer's file up-to-date.

[English]

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, that is an entirely inadequate answer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

USE OF PERSONAL INFORMATION

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, the legislation has not been passed. Parliament has not considered it. Also, it is an invasion of the Protection of Privacy Act to make available my income and the income of every other Canadian—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): —together with our social insurance numbers. That is an enormous invasion of the privacy of every Canadian. Having anticipated the legislation, having broken the Protection of Privacy Act, will the Minister take steps to change this, to remove it from the projected law, and make sure that whatever is done in this field is done for the convenience of Canadians and not for the convenience of his bureaucrats?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that this bill is now before Parliament. The Hon. Member knows at what stage the Bill is now. I would also remind him that the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has had an opportunity to make a very detailed preliminary study of this Bill. As for using the social insurance number and indicating the taxpayer's income for the previous year on the tax form, we are doing this and we are providing that information to help the taxpayer get the best possible benefit from the provisions of the Income Tax Act, and we are not doing so for the sake of bureaucracy.

[English]

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Dufferin-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member's point is an excellent one. I would like to ask the same Minister does he not himself have any concern for the privacy of individuals whose social insurance numbers and family incomes are printed on that form. And, if he is concerned, why does he allow this to happen?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I am just as concerned as the Hon. Member about the confidentiality of the information given on an income tax return. I would like to point out that the T-1 form sent to the taxpayer is sent to his home and bears his name and address. A continuous procedure is used, based on the social insurance number, in order to ensure that the information on the form goes to the person concerned, since he is the one who receives his personalized form. As I said earlier to the Member for Kenora-Rainy River, we are providing information on the amount to enable the person concerned to use to better advantage the provisions of the Income Tax Act, including the new income averaging formula which taxpayers will be able to use this year.

PROPOSAL TO PAY RENT ACCORDING TO INCOME—USE OF TAX RETURNS

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, a short time ago the Minister of Public Works suggested it would be appropriate if tenants across Canada paid a fixed amount of 25 per cent to 30 per cent of their income for rent. I was troubled as to how the landlords would ever know what was the gross income of individual taxpayers. It now appears that the system to be employed is that these returns being dispatched across Canada disclosing income can now be used for the purpose of deciding the rent to be paid by tenants. Is that indeed part of the scheme devised by the Minister of Public Works?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I think it is always good to elaborate on an intelligent question, but if there are gaps in the process, logic may well go out the door. I think that is exactly what the Hon. Member has done. The Minister of Public Works mentioned what he thought would be a reasonable share of the individual's income that could be spent on the monthly rent. This has no connection with the amount printed on the T-1 forms which is directly related to the new income averaging formula that is now before the House and which, I hope, will be enacted within the next few days.

[English]

Mr. Gamble: Madam Speaker, the stupidity lies in the Minister of Public Works' initial suggestion.

LANDLORDS' ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. John Gamble (York North): Madam Speaker, unless the federal Government complies with the general suggestion made by the Minister and supplies total income data to landlords, how would landlords be able to determine accurately how much to charge a tenant for rent? Is that not part and parcel of the arrangement decided upon and recommended by the Minister of Public Works?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Bussières (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, I do not think I should answer for the Minister of Public Works as to his intentions in making that statement. As far as I can tell, the comment was made after looking at a number of studies contained in his departmental files.

As far as any possible use of Revenue Canada information is concerned, we shall never violate the principles of the Department of National Revenue. Personal income tax returns are confidential, and that is one of our principles. When we indicate an amount on a tax return, that is because the form is directed to a specific individual and the amount represents that individual's income, and we are therefore maintaining confidentiality.

PORTS

CONSTRUCTION OF COAL TERMINAL AT PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport regarding what seems to be a Fantasay Island situation in Prince Rupert. As he knows, last August, Dillingham-Sceptre accepted a fixed price contract to construct a coal terminal. In November they began construction and now, two months later, that company has suddenly received authorization from the federal Government to do the project on a cost plus basis.

My question to the Minister is threefold. First, is the Minister convinced in his own mind that there is no Canadian company capable of constructing the coal terminal at a fixed price; secondly, will he table all of the project bids from last summer; thirdly, how can there possibly be effective cost controls on this project when all of the supervisory personnel are American citizens? Is this not likely to be like the Montreal Olympics? Is the Minister going to allow 50 per cent, 100 per cent or 200 per cent overruns on this project?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I presume my hon. friend calls it Fantasy Island because there are so many things that the federal Government is doing in that area to enhance its economic prestige and quality. I agree with him that it is really wonderful what is happening on Ridley Island now.

On the subject of the contract itself, I am aware that my hon. friend has been in extensive consultation with officials of the National Harbours Board and I compliment him on that. If there is something else he wants to know, I will make sure he gets it. The reason for the cost plus approach to this project is essentially one of timing. Things could not be done sequentially; they had to be done concurrently. The packaging of the marine works had to be done in relationship to the other works taking place in the coal development on the Island; the stacker reclaimer and the railway loop and so on and so forth. I repeat, the reason it had to be done this way, i.e. cost plus, is essentially one of timing. Because of that, the control system is rather strong. There is a good Board on which both National Harbours Board and private sector people are represented, with a Treasury Board officer watching over the whole thing, and we will try to make sure there will not be any abuse in the cost-plus contract. If my hon. friend thinks there might be, I will go into an inquiry session for him.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I thank the Minister for his comments. I know many of the Members on the Prince Rupert Board are very careful about cost overruns.

ISSUANCE OF WORK PERMITS TO AMERICAN CITIZENS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration who earlier in this Question Period made everyone in this House aware of such comments as "buy Canadian", and "a lot of Americans would be pleased if their Government brought in initiatives like Canada". Would the Minister explain to the two million unemployed in Canada right now why 23 per cent of the workers at Ridley Island are American citizens and why his office in Vancouver gave them EMP2151 work permits without ever posting those jobs anywhere in Canada? Is he going to tell these two million unemployed Canadians in Canada right now that not a single one of them is capable of taking one of those jobs at Ridley Island?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I have looked at this matter. Someone gave me a hint that it might come up. I found that out of 103 employees on the marine works, nine of them are Americans. they are legally in Canada, they have a work permit from the Department of Immigration—

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Pepin: —all are supervisors, and all are underwater drilling experts. It is important to underline that fact. This company, Sceptre, is partly owned by an American firm, I recognize that, which has done work elsewhere such as at Valdez, Alaska and the Aleutian Islands. It has acquired experience and that experience is very valuable, and it is being used now. I think this is the best use of experience and knowledge around the world, and Canadians should not be so narrow-minded that they are not willing to recognize that occasionally other people in the world know a little bit more than they do about some things, like underwater drilling.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Madam Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who realizes that conditions like those depicted in John Steinbeck's "Grapes of Wrath" are beginning to appear in certain parts of rural Canada. If the Minister is serious about taking steps to ensure that the family farm maintains its position in Canadian agriculture and taking steps against the banks of Canada, is he prepared to bring forward for second reading Bill C-653, an Act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, to allow family farms to stay in place in Canada during these very difficult times? I can assure him through you, Madam Speaker, that he would have full support from the New Democratic Party for rapid passage of this Bill.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I had discussions yesterday with the Liberal Member for Lambton-Middlesex who sponsored the Bill, and I understand he is trying to make arrangements so that the Bill can be brought in, in some form. I support the principle of the Bill.

IMMIGRATION

LICENSING OF CONSULTANTS

Mr. John McDermid (Brampton-Georgetown): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. With the downturn in immigration into Canada there are a number of so-called immigration consultants popping up all over the place, providing so-called expert advice. Has the Minister given any consideration at all to the licensing of the legitimate immigration consultants here in Canada?

• (1200)

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member points out a serious problem and one that we have been examining. As he knows, we commissioned some reports from the Immigration Task Force, specifically on what to do about immigration consultants. On the question of licensing, the problem we discovered is that it falls between federal and provincial jurisdictions. It could be corrected through an amendment to the Immigration Act. We are looking into that and hope that the legislative timetable for the next year will give us an opportunity to do so.

In the meantime we are establishing a number of specific administrative procedures to try to correct the problem. One is to provide alternative sources of information in areas of heavy concentration of immigration applications. We have developed a new series of brochures and pamphlets that we are prepared to issue which will give people more complete information. As well, we have been working very closely with my colleague, the Solicitor General and the RCMP, to undertake prosecutions of those people who have very directly contravened the law and have given out bad advice.

I thank the Hon. Member for his observations and I can make the commitment to him that we will continue to work as hard as we can to correct the problem.

PUBLICATION OF KIRBY REPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Madam Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It seems to be common knowledge that the Kirby Report is to be made public on Thursday of next week. May I ask the Minister whether, prior to that or at the same time, he will make a statement on what parts of the report have been accepted by the Government? Will the Government make an announcement to that effect and, if so, on what day will it be made?

Hon. Pierre De Bané (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am putting the final touch to a statement in that regard. I hope that early next week I can give the Hon. Member the precise date on which the report will be made public.

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES ACT—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Apparently the Department of Transport has engaged a firm of consultants to canvas the views of Maritime businessmen with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act. May I ask the Minister what his Department intends with respect to this study? There is a growing fear that we may lose our eastern Crow in its present form in the Maritime Freight Rates Act. Is there any validity to the suggestion that this is the direction in which the Government is heading?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I hope we are talking about the same thing; the question could refer to either the Maritime Freight Rates Act or the At and East subsidy. I do not know which of those two my friend is talking about.

As usual, before doing anything in the Department of Transport we research everything in great depth, and a number of times. My hon. friend has cautioned me about something now, so I will look at it very seriously. If any change is to be brought about, I will consult with him and with many others beforehand.

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (NEPEAN-CARLETON)—TABLING OF EXCHANGE OF NOTES BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Walter Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order which arises out of the tabling of the document described on p. 22714 of Hansard yesterday, February 10, 1983. The Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) tabled, in both official languages, a document described as follows:

—an exchange of notes between Canada and the United States constituting an agreement between our two Governments on the use of Canadian facilities and airspace for the testing and evaluation of U.S. defence systems.

Under the rules of the House of Commons adopted unanimously some time ago, Standing Order 46(4) reads as follows:

Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee designated by the Member tabling the report, return or paper.

The Minister tabled the report in the House of Commons as a Member of the House but also as the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as designated in Hansard. His tabling was therefore deficient. That deficiency should be cleared up immediately by the Minister designating the appropriate Committee, which would be the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

It is not that the tabling was improper; it is that he did not follow the second step required by the rules in order to carry out the intent of the new rules, and that is to designate the Committee. I think it is appropriate that the Minister now designate the Committee. He could do that today or tomorrow, but it should be done without delay.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, I would just remind the Hon. Member that reports, returns or other papers laid before the House are governed by the expression "in accordance with an Act of Parliament". In other words, if a report is obligated for presentation by an Act of Parliament, then it is automatically referred.

In this particular case, there was an exchange of notes not flowing from any particular section of an Act of Parliament. Therefore, I do not think that the particular Standing Order applies in this case. I make that point as a procedural matter.

The substantive point made by the Hon. Member, namely that whether, when there is an exchange of notes, that ought to be considered by a committee, is a matter which I will take up with the Government House Leader. I believe it would be beneficial for the Committee to examine this whole question. It could be done in the normal way when the Estimates go to Committee or it may be desirable to do what the Hon. Member suggests. That is what I should like to discuss with the Government House Leader.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. gentleman is going to discuss that with the Government House Leader.

Let me say, however, with respect to Acts of Parliament, that the Minister is acting under the authority of an Act of Parliament. First, he is a Member of the House of Commons and therefore his conduct is governed by the Statutes dealing with the House of Commons. Second, and perhaps more important, as Secretary of State for External Affairs he has charge over the external relations of the country, the operation of the Department and the matters to be dealt with by Parliament.

I hope that under the new procedure we are not going to rely on legalisms which are doubtful to start with, and which was not the intent of the Committee when it wrote the rules. The intent of the Committee and the intent of the House was that Members of the House of Commons who are not Members of the Government should be engaged in the affairs of state to the extent that is possible. The best way to do this would be to have a debate immediately, of course. The Government may decide, as a matter of policy, that that is not right.

It would equally not be right if the Government decided that a committee of the House with their new powers, to which under the new rules the Government must respond after a report of a committee, was not allowed to work. I think the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) is as mindful as anyone else of the purposes of the Committee's report to the House: it was to allow Members of Parliament to engage in policy matters.

I hope the investigation to be undertaken by the Minister will be with respect to his powers and that he will not rely on what I term a petty legalism.

Mr. MacEachen: Madam Speaker, I am glad that the Hon. Member is back in his former role of arguing procedure. I find it rather compatible to join him in a pursuit which we followed almost daily in the past.

I would make two observations on this matter. First, if one accepts the reasoning of the Hon. Member, then every paper tabled in the House must go to a standing committee. I do not think that is the intent; the intent is that where the Minister must lay upon the Table the report required by Act of Parliament, then it must automatically be referred. That is the sound approach. It is not the explicit requirement of the rule nor was it the intent to have every paper, no matter what it is, sent to a standing committee.

• (1210)

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, the Minister made the point that because it was not explicitly set out in the rule, it may well be that the Government would choose not to allow a debate on this matter to occur in the very near future. Also the Minister indicated yesterday that he would discuss the matter with the House Leader, and again indicated today that he would discuss the question of whether or not there ought to be some time allocated for discussion of this very important matter, one which touches upon the lives of people in this country and in other countries now and in the future.

Notwithstanding the fine legal point which he made with regard to the appropriateness of the rule, there was a desire on the part of the Committee established to review the rules of Parliament that matters of substance, heretofore not dealt with in the House of Commons or in committee by virtue of any automatic referral, could be dealt with and would be dealt with. This matter falls four square into the category. It is a matter of considerable importance to the vast majority of Canadians, notwithstanding on which side of the argument they come down.

Again I ask the Minister, as I did yesterday, whether he is going to rely on some very fine legal point to thwart the right of Members of Parliament to discuss matters of vital importance to the future of the country, or is he going to rise in his place and say that the deployment and use of the Cruise missile, which will be effected by the complicity of Canada in providing a testing site for it, is to be given time in the House and in committee. I suggest that it needs time both in the House of Commons and in committee for a reasonable debate, the time limits of which we would easily agree upon.

Does the Minister not think, in the over-all scheme of things with which we deal in the House of Commons on a day-to-day basis, that the question of the use of the mechanisms to be tested in Canada is a justifiable reason for debate in the House of Commons? If he does, surely it is not too much to ask him to sit down and work out the mechanics of having that take place.

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I just want to point out to the House Standing Order 46(4) which reads:

> Reports, returns or other papers laid before the House in accordance with an Act of Parliament shall thereupon be deemed to have been permanently referred to the committee—

One of those papers which would be permanently referred to the parliamentary committee is an annual report. Surely any procedural expert would tell us that an agreement of the kind which comes under an annual report would automatically be referred to that committee. Therefore, it seems that the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is not really a point of order at all, because that committee, as soon as it is set up and the referral of the annual report is made, will have all the authority it needs to conduct a discussion into the papers laid before the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen).

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): In joining the debate on this point of order, Madam Speaker, I would ask you to consider very seriously the essence of what we are discussing. We have a document which is vital to Canada tabled by the Minister. Despite the comments of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) that it may some day become part of a report which some day is referred to Parliament, the fact is that it was tabled yesterday. I request that you reserve your decision, Madam Speaker, in order to consider very carefully the vital nature of what we are trying to do, which is to provide scrutiny of these documents immediately by standing committees.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Madam Speaker, as a Member of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, I beg to differ with the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis). I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has outlined the problem. I am certainly in agreement with his interpretation of the Standing Order.

I would not want to put words into the mouth of the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), but my recollection was that he was one of the people at the Committee most concerned that minor—or major—administrative matters, not necessarily dealing with policy but all administrative matters, would be before the House on a regular basis. I would certainly defer to him on this particular point, but I thought it was he and some other Members of the Committee who actually stipulated or made the point before the Committee that the words "in accordance with an Act of Parliament" be included, specifically so we would not be dealing on a routine basis with administrative matters, no matter how important they may be.

I am not addressing myself to the substance of this matter; I hope we can divorce it from the procedural question.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, dealing with what I think is an important question, I have cited two Statutes; there may be others. Before there is a ruling with respect to the matter, perhaps we ought to reserve in terms of the argument to see whether or not it is in fact "in accordance with an Act of Parliament". The words are quite clear.

I accept what the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) said with respect to the annual report, but nonetheless the words of the Standing Order are quite clear. They set out the intent, really, of what we meant if we were to view it. I agree that it is not the intention of the rules that every minor administrative matter, as the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Collenette) said, should go to the standing committees. I have to allow that this is not a minor, routine administrative matter. Nonetheless, two Statutes were cited. I do not know whether the Chair has had a chance to read the Statutes yet or whether the Clerk of the House has had a chance to read them in order to advise the Chair. It might be wise if there were a reservation on that, perhaps for further argument, but at least to establish and take a look at the law.

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox-Powell River): Madam Speaker, I would just like to reinforce the remarks that this in fact is not a minor administrative matter and that there appears to be mechanisms available for statutory justification.

This is an issue beyond the House of Commons. Referenda across the country have shown that 75 per cent to 80 per cent of the Canadian public is vitally interested. Demonstrations have brought out thousands of people opposed to this, yet the House of Commons is not in a position to provide further information or investigate the matter. I would urge, Madam Speaker, with the information you have available and the knowledge of how important the issue is viewed not only by legislators in the House but citizens across the country, to rule in favour of allowing this matter to proceed to committee for closer scrutiny.

Mr. David Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this is the first time this new provision in the Standing Orders has been discussed in the House. It is important that it be made absolutely clear that all Members who serve on that Committee hope that we will try to resolve what these new provisions mean in a spirit of good faith.

It is not my view that the Statutes which the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) cited really draw this matter into the particular ambit. Notwithstanding, I think he has made his arguments in good faith. I do not think it goes that far, but it is important to appreciate what the Minister said.

The Minister said that he would look at it. It is quite possible that he will, notwithstanding his conclusion that he is not obliged by the Standing Orders to refer the matter to the Committee, give a reference to the Standing Committee. I hope that people would not then jump on a gesture of good faith which flowed from his tabling the letters as a courtesy to the House and try to establish it as a precedent. I hope all Members try to keep it in that perspective.

Mr. Mark Rose (Mission-Port Moody): Madam Speaker, I will not speak very long because we have heard a great deal on this matter already. The Hon. Member who just spoke talked about a gesture of good faith; I would like to underline it. If we use a legalism to escape the reference of a very important subject to a committee, a subject as important to all Canadians as this one—that is, the Cruise testing agreement—then I think all the good faith which has been built up throughout Committee study will be destroyed or severely damaged.

The differences I noticed between this House and Westminster were attitudinal ones which make the difference between a House co-operating and one always in conflict.

• (1220)

I would just add my plea that a reference to committee needs to be immediate. Allowing it two months from now after all the facts are out or when it is too late and the horse is out of the barn is not good for this House of Commons. So I would urge the Minister to make that reference. One of the reasons we have these new rules and new powers conferred upon committees is to make them important to backbenchers, not just some place for busy work by Liberal Members. We wanted these committees to have powers, decision-making capacities and powers of initiative. The new rules were set up and designed for that purpose.

I hope the Minister will reconsider and send this matter to committee immediately; otherwise, I think much of the work of the Special Parliamentary Reform Committee will have been destroyed and the good faith lost.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I suggested, respectfully, that the matter might be reserved so that the Minister, the Chair and everyone involved might check the law. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) suggested that the matter would be considered by the Minister and considered, I assume from what he said, reasonably quickly.

Given that sense of urgency about looking at the rules and being sure they operate properly, the guts of the issue, there are two grounds for saying that there might be a reservation of the matter today so it could be considered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), if that is agreeable to the Chair. I, who raised the point of order, would certainly be agreeable. We are charting new waters in terms of the rules and we may not have to decide the point of order with respect to this particular matter.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, this is a matter of Canadian sovereignty. This is a matter of our relationship with another country and whether the Canadian people through their elected representatives have appropriate control over decisions made with a foreign power. It would be very dismaying, not just to thousands of people I know of in Spadina but to people all across the country, if we were to find that even the new and revised rules of Parliament make it impossible for Parliament to consider a matter as important as this. Hundreds and hundreds of thousands of Canadians have registered this concern by their votes and by their presence in public activities. This is a matter of Canadian sovereignty. I hope the rules will not prevent us from dealing with it.

Madam Speaker: That, of course, was debate. The Hon. Member did not speak to the point of order. I should have interrupted him but I wanted to see if he was going to discuss the point of order.

I think Hon. Members are quite right. This is a change in the rules and we are faced with a new situation. I believe we would all like to think about it and reflect on what the consequences of that exact wording would be.

I tend to agree with the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), and I think all Members would be of the same opinion, that these changes in the rules were worded precisely to give Members a better opportunity to discuss matters in committee.

On the other hand, it is clear that the rule as it is worded includes a phrase that does qualify the amount of discussion allowed. I tend to agree that the Deputy Prime Minister was probably right in saying that these reports and returns, papers and documents are governed by the phrase "in accordance with an Act of Parliament". As the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) pointed out, this particular document would obviously be discussed once the annual report of the Department was tabled, because it would flow from the report, and under one heading or another Members would be able to discuss it. However, the urgency might be taken out of the matter when it is discussed at that time. That, of course, poses a problem that I cannot solve because I do have to rule within the confines of the wording of the particular Standing Order.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): You could reserve.

Madam Speaker: Yes, I do want to reserve on it. But I think it is helpful that I tell the House how I read the Standing Order, so that if Members of the Committee do want to look at the Standing Order again or let me know what the real intent was and whether it was really expressed precisely in the Standing Order, it would be easier for me to rule on the matter.

I am telling the House now that if I were to rule on this question, I would have to consider the phrase "in accordance with an Act of Parliament". I would like Hon. Members to tell me whether they did want to restrict those documents that are "in accordance with an Act of Parliament". If that is what the Members meant, then that is fine with the Chair. I will look at these words as being the important key words in any ruling that I might make.

However, the Deputy Prime Minister has offered to discuss the matter with the House Leaders. It might be that the Deputy Prime Minister will refer this matter to a committee. Therefore, for the time being the House will be satisfied. Indeed, I think it would be wise for me to reserve and study this matter very carefully. Even if the Deputy Prime Minister did allow this matter to be discussed in a committee and referred it to a committee, the situation might arise again, so we may as well think about it now as later.

MR. LEWIS—REPLY OF MR. BUSSIÈRES DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Doug Lewis (Simcoe North): Madam Speaker, I rise on a new point of order. During Question Period the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Bussières), in reply to a question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Gamble), defended the comments of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. LeBlanc), the Minister responsible for housing, who suggested in Toronto that he was considering taxing Canadian tenants who were not paying between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of their income for rent. In answering the question, the Minister of National Revenue referred to reports received by the Minister of Public Works as the substance and the reason for his making those comments.

In view of the fear tenants have in this country that the Liberal Government is planning to tax anyone who is not paying between 25 per cent and 30 per cent of their income for rent, I would ask you, Madam Speaker, to rule whether or not the comments made by the Minister of National Revenue, in referring to those reports, are sufficient for the House to require that those documents, which have been cited in an answer, be tabled in the House.

Madam Speaker: I do not recall that the Minister quoted or cited from those documents. I do not believe that procedure has been changed in the rules. The rules are quite clear that unless a Minister quotes or cites a particular document, he is not obligated to table it, and the Chair would have no authority to ask the Minister in question to table that document. However, the Minister might make a decision to table those documents if he wished to do so.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Madam Speaker, I think that in his comments, the Hon. Member is going much further than the Minister did in his answer. I am truly sorry that the Hon. Member should try to scare Canadian tenants and—

Mr. Lewis: The Minister did.

Mr. Ouellet: No! The Minister did not say that in his answer, and I think the Hon. Member should not be trying to scare tenants in this way.

Madam Speaker: This is debate, but what is done is done.

PETITIONS

MR. MITGES—OPENING OF ABORTION CLINIC IN TORONTO, ONT.

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I am happy to present a petition from a number of constituents of Grey-Simcoe voicing their opposition to Dr. Henry Morgentaler's plans to open an abortion clinic in Toronto.

• (1230)

I am well aware that it falls within the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario to uphold the law by prosecuting to the full extent of the Criminal Code all those who contravene the law by performing illegal abortions. It is my hope and the hope of the petitioners that this in fact will be the case regarding Dr. Morgentaler, if he goes through with his plan.

Striking Committee Report

MISS JEWETT—UNEMPLOYMENT IN LOWER MAINLAND OF B.C.

Miss Pauline Jewett (New Westminster-Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise today to present a petition which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Axworthy) should particularly note. This petition is signed by 699 members of the IWA in the lower mainland of the Province of British Columbia who are deeply distressed by massive lay-offs and the almost two million unemployed in this country.

The petition points out the failure to protect existing jobs or to create new jobs for the unemployed, and the inadequacies of the Unemployment Insurance Act in dealing with today's crisis.

STANDING COMMITTEES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Mr. Charles Turner (London East) moved:

That the third report of the Striking Committee, presented to the House on Monday, January 31, 1983, be concurred in.

He said: Madam Speaker, this is the first time in many years that a Striking Committee report has been debated. In fact, it is the first time in many years that there has been any substantial discussion about committee composition at all.

Until 1968, committees were very large. I understand that there were between 30 and 60 members of those committees, which had very little to do because the House sat for only three or four months at that time. When they did have an assignment and changes in membership were required, the Chief Government Whip had to propose a motion in the House that could be debated and was debated on at least one famous occasion.

In 1968, it was decided that the size of committees would be reduced, usually to about 20, but in the case of two popular committees—Agriculture and External Affairs and National Defence—they were struck at 30. Some committees, including special committees, were smaller. Substitutions became mere administrative concerns.

Last fall, the House adopted the recommendations of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure to reduce all standing committees to between 10 and 15 members on an experimental basis. The substitution rules were stiffened and a system of alternate members was instituted. As before, any Member of the House may attend and speak at any public committee meeting but does not have the right to vote.

Two of the standing committees, Agriculture and External Affairs and National Defence, had consisted of 30 members. It seemed clear that the maximum number of 15 members should be appointed to those committees. This meant that whenever the two Opposition Parties voted together against the Government, the chairman of the committee would have to cast the deciding vote. On our side, we were hesitant to place chairmen in the position of constantly breaking ties and thereby appearing too partisan but in these two cases the need for maximum numbers prevailed.

It was decided by a majority of the Striking Committee that all of the other committees would have ten members. This would ensure that the chairman would be able to act in most circumstances as a mediator, without concern about being compelled to vote on a regular basis.

I have attended over 1,000 brotherhood meetings during my 27 and one-half years' service with the Canadian National Railways. I have also attended membership meetings and meetings of many other organizations and never once saw a president of the brotherhood, a service or fraternal club called upon to break a tie during any discussion.

At times, the language we heard at brotherhood meetings became a little rough around the edges. Sometimes debate was tough and very heavy. In fact, we used to say that there was more debate in the hotels across Canada and the cinders were flying all of the time. But when we went to lodge, a decision was made one way or the other.

I think the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) would agree that the parliamentary procedure during the meeting was first-class. The Hon. Paul Martin used to say when he attended union meetings that if you want to know parliamentary procedure, go to a union meeting.

I have attended many House of Commons committee meetings. Unless the witnesses were Ministers, officials of Departments or presidents of Crown corporations who were on the hot seat, less than half of the members of the committee were in attendance. This would reduce the number of the committee to below ten. Therefore, in my opinion, I believe that committees composed of ten members is a very sensible suggestion. It certainly allows more members to become experts in the subject of their choice. This also allows regular members to participate in committee debates more often and ask more questions. It also allows the chairperson to be strictly neutral on all subjects debated by the committees.

As I have mentioned, this new system is a one-year experiment. I urge the House to adopt my motion quickly so that the committee part of the experiment may commence and we could put all Members of the House back to work in the committees.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Comments, questions and answers.

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he thinks the breakdown of a ten-member committee to six, three and one, with regard to the three Parties of the House, is fair, based on the fact that there are roughly 150 Government Members, 100 Members of this Party and 30 Members of the NDP? Does he think that the breakdown of six, three and one as it relates to 150, 100 and 30 is fair?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the chairman will not participate. Therefore, it would be five, three and one. I think that ten is the logical figure.

Mr. Mayer: Does the Hon. Member believe that committees should be a reflection of the House? If he does, I would point out to him that the Speaker is not neutral. In the case of a tied vote, the Speaker would have to vote. If he thinks of committees as an extension of the House where the Speaker would obviously have to break a tie, why should the situation be different in committees where he is setting up the membership to allow the chairman to be neutral?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that the Speaker would not be independent. Five, three and one is a reflection of the House of Commons. If the Hon. Member checks the records, he will see that the system is less than ten. In fact, I understand that the two large committees have eight, five and two members out of 15. So, I think ten is the maximum.

Mr. Mayer: With all due respect, the Hon. Member did not answer the question. Does he believe that committees are an extension of the House of Commons where the Speaker can be called upon to break a tie vote? Why is he setting up the committees in such a way that the chairman would not have to break a tie?

Mr. Turner: It is my understanding that never in the history of the House of Commons has the Speaker been called upon to render a vote to break a tie. I think a committee set up with ten members, broken down to five, three and one, with a neutral chairman, is a reflection of the House of Commons and a reflection of this system.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the last remark of the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner). He mentioned a five, three and one set-up as opposed to a six, three and one. I am not sure that that is what he is still proposing. I think that some of us on this side would be very interested in exploring that idea. As a matter of fact, I think it will be proposed by my colleague perhaps a little further down the road this afternoon.

• (1240)

This way, if it was a five, three and one plus a chairperson, that would permit Hon. Members of the Opposition to be chairpersons and, further, as is the case in Westminster, would enhance the independent nature and unbiased kind of chairing of a committee which I think we should be seeking. Therefore, I would like to know whether or not he is proposing a five, three and one plus a chairman.

Mr. Turner: I think the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose) passed a motion in committee and it was supposedly to be six, three and one, and the chairman was to be neutral, which amounts to ten. Five, three and one plus a neutral chairman is ten. I think that that is a reflection of the House of Commons. It gives all Hon. Members a chance to go to committee and express their opinion on behalf of their constituents.

Mr. Rose: I would just like to have that clarified again. Is the Hon. Member for London East now telling us that it is really five, three and one, plus a chairman who may not necessarily be a Member of the governing Party, in this case, a Liberal?

Mr. Turner: Under this system the majority rules, and I therefore think the chairman should be a Government Member. You may be in power some day, so you will have that opportunity.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): So a Government Member is always going to be neutral?

Mr. Deans: Don't wish that on us!

Mr. Wenman: I would like to ask a specific question to gain assurances from the Hon. Member who last spoke. While there is an automatic reference of reports and so on, can he guarantee that there will in fact be an automatic convening of that committee within a given period of time? I know the Hon. Member may have asked for comment on that matter, but I would like to have the assurance of the Government side that the committees will in fact be convened. In other jurisdictions there are the same rules, but they simply do not convene the committees.

Mr. Turner: For the Hon. Member's information, it has been suggested to me that the Striking Committee has nothing to do with the establishing of the committees. The Speaker has reserved judgment as to what should be done. I would set the committees at work right away, next week. I think we need the committees in operation.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I was very intrigued when I heard the Hon. Member for London East saying that we should learn a lesson from the debates which take place in labour unions. At the same time, I would hope that this was not an opinion of his own on some of the contents of those debates and what I would call undemocratic decisions which are sometimes made by some of our well known unions throughout Canada.

Mr. Turner: I would simply like to suggest to the Hon. Member that the railroad brotherhood, the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, was formed before this country was born and it has been democratic down through the years.

Mr. Deans: It is about time you guys on the Liberal side realized that. Mr. Speaker, I just want to join with the chairman of the committee in saying that his Liberal colleagues could learn a great deal from going to a labour union meeting. However, I want to support a position—

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Why not? Birds of a feather.

Mr. Deans: Wait a minute. I was just about to support one of your friends; do not keep shouting, Joe.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): Do not get caught up in a lure.

Mr. Deans: I want to return to a point made by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley West with regard to the method of reference and the convening of the committees, and to suggest that that is, indeed, a fair topic for today.

When we are discussing the establishing of the committees, one of the various considerations concerns proportional representation. But that is not the only factor. I might say to the Chairman of the Committee, through Your Honour, that one of the concerns is that in the past difficulty has arisen from time to time in calling and convening committees for the purpose of dealing with business. We would not want to think, in this spirit of co-operation which has suddenly emerged in the House of Commons—long needed, I might say—that the Government would go about its business in the same way as it did before and thwart the efforts of Hon. Members to raise legitimate and important matters by simply not calling the committee together.

I assumed, as a member of the Committee which studied the rules and procedures, that because we decided on the automatic reference, committees would meet so that the automatic reference would mean something. Although I know the Chairman of the Striking Committee cannot give me any assurance other than his own, perhaps he shares our concern that committees should be properly convened and meet regularly.

I certainly think the Government should pay heed to this matter, and those who are appointed as chairmen of committees should recognize that their responsibility is not simply to do the bidding of the Government. Otherwise, the whole question of impartiality raised by the Chairman of the Committee would be for naught.

Mr. Turner: I would like to say that the Striking Committee does not have the power, but I will certainly take it up with the House Leader and ensure that chairmen are appointed or elected at the first regular meeting so that we can get on with the work of the House.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, under the new rules I am allowed to comment on what has been said by the Hon. Member for London East, whom I have known for a great number of years and have come to admire. He is not only the Chairman of the Striking Committee in the House but he is also the Chief Government Whip, a position which he occupies with distinction, if I may say so, and he carries out his duties with distinction as well.

As a member of the Committee and of this House, I welcome his statement that he would entreat the Government House Leader to consider this particular matter, because I do want to tell him that during the debate in the House prior to the adoption of the third report of the Committee, it was a matter of concern that committees would in fact meet in order to deal with the business, and it is a matter which is presently before the Special committee. On behalf of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, speaking as Vice-Chairman, and I know I also speak for the Hon. Member for Pontiac-Gatineau-Labelle (Mr. Lefebvre), the Chairman, I would thank and comment him for his undertaking and say that we as a Committee look forward to dealing with that matter. We hope we can provide some help and assurance to the hon. gentleman in the undertaking he has given to the House, and I once again thank him.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say thank you to the hon. gentleman for Nepean-Carleton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. The Chair must inform the House that the time allocated for questions and answers is now exhausted. If the Hon. Member for London East wishes to respond, he would need the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to thank the Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton. I have known him for many years. You have taught me much in the House. Your skill as a lawyer and as a debater in the House is first-class.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): Thank you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): The Hon. Member for London East should address his comments to the Chair.

Mr. Smith: Free commercials today, Walter!

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks by responding to the statement of the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) with respect to the debate which will ensue on the motion to concur in the third report of the Striking Committee. We are not here simply to debate the mechanics of the Striking Committee report and the piece of paper that is before the House. We are here to debate the principle involved, as represented by that Striking Committee report.

• (1250)

That principle is very clear and very important. It is the implementation of the spirit of parliamentary reform that we had hoped and thought pervaded the activities of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, the report of which led to the changes made and represented in the Striking Committee Report. So it is principle that we are talking about here, the principle of parliamentary reform and the implementation of that spirit of parliamentary reform. We will not be put down by simply saying that we are quarrelling about numbers or quarrelling about mechanics. We are here to express our concern that the spirit of parliamentary reform will be diminished and destroyed by the attitude of the Government and the Government's representatives, and it is evidenced by this Striking Committee report.

Let me begin my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by reviewing very briefly the history of the specific parliamentary reform movement which led to this change in committee structure and resulted in this report of the Striking Committee. The Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure, which has become better known as the Parliamentary Reform Committee, was established on May 31, 1982. Its purpose was to make proposals to the House of Commons that would lead to reforms in the parliamentary system, in the procedures that we follow, and in the rules that apply to our processes and procedures.

That Committee met on numerous occasions, I think in a spirit of reform and of assisting Parliament to better conduct the affairs of the people. In result the Committee formulated a report which was tabled in the House of Commons in November of 1982 and later met with the unanimous consent of the House of Commons, so that the specific recommendations for changes that were proposed by that Parliamentary Reform Committee could be carried out and implemented.

The net result is the new Standing Orders which we have and which, with respect to committees, are represented by Standing Order 69. I think it may be worth while to review very briefly the specifics of those changes recommended by the Parliamentary Reform Committee and unanimously approved by the House of Commons that we have now implemented in Standing Order 69 and in other Standing Orders of the House.

The first and foremost provision and change was that standing committees would be limited to a regular membership of not less than 10 or more than 15, and I want to speak more specifically about that provision later on. It was also established that in standing committees there would be regular members and alternate members. The idea of that change, as I understand it, was to ensure that there would be continuity of membership. That is to say that if a regular member could not attend a meeting of a standing committee, a substitute who was already briefed and knowledgeable in the matters before the standing committee would stand in the place and the stead of that member. There is, of course, a provision for substitution on a 24-hour notice basis, so that membership will be assured either through the attendance of regular members or alternate members.

One of the important changes that were carried out in the new Standing Orders was the reference to standing committees of all reports, returns or papers tabled in the House of Commons by a Minister. I do not have to underline the importance of that provision because we have already had a debate in the House of Commons today on that very point and we have seen the real attitude of the Government towards parliamentary reform. Notwithstanding this specific change in the rules authorizing a reference to a standing committee of the House of Commons, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) refused to make such a reference and argued that he does not need to make such a reference.

So the case that I would have made in my presentation has almost been made by the debate in this House of Commons this very day. We have had an example of the exact mischief that was attempted to be prevented in this rule change—the covering up of matters of importance, not only to Members of the House of Commons but to the whole Canadian population who are not going to have that window on Government apparently that we thought we were going to have through the references of reports, returns and papers to Standing Committees of the House of Commons.

It is not with a very clear heart and mind that we view these changes that are supposed to be implemented in the new Standing Orders, particularly with respect to the committees of the House of Commons. Our specific concerns have already been expressed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), in his questions to the Hon. Member for London East, but I will repeat them here. It is, simply stated, that we do not think that the size of the standing committees and the allocation of membership on those standing committees is fair in the circumstances, and we certainly do not think it is in the spirit of parliamentary reform.

In case Members opposite do not understand what I mean, I will explain it once more. The report of the Striking Committee calls for standing committees of 10 members except in the case of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. All other standing committees listed in Standing Order 69, and there are 18 of those standing committees, must, by virtue of the provision of the Striking Committee report, have a minimum of 10 members.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the Striking Committee, by exercising its power to allocate positions on the standing committees to members, has chosen an allocation of six Members of the Liberal Party, three Members of the Progressive Conservative Party and one Member of the New Democratic Party. So there we have, in 18 of the standing committees, a membership of 10 with an allocation to the Parties in the House of six to the Liberals, three to the Progressive Conservatives and one to the New Democratic Party.

Simply stated, we do not think that is fair and we do not think that is in the spirit of the parliamentary reforms that were adopted and advocated by the Parliamentary Reform Committee, were agreed to by the House of Commons and are now being implemented by the Striking Committee report.

Because we do not think it is fair, Mr. Speaker, we want to introduce an amendment and I beg your leave to present that amendment to the motion to concur right now. I will read it, if I may do so. I move:

That the third report of the Striking Committee be not now concurred in but that it be recommitted to the Striking Committee with instruction that they have power to amend the same so as to recommend that the Standing Committees of the House of Commons, with the exception of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, consist of eleven (11) members each and that, of those eleven (11) members, six (6) members shall be representatives of the Liberal Party, four (4) members shall be representatives of the Progressive Conservative Party and one (1) member shall be a representative of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, I present that motion, seconded by the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Shall we call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Corbin): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) had the floor.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, before the recess I had made it clear that we are not merely opposing the report of the Striking Committee relating to standing committees, but we are opposing the attitude of the Government towards parliamentary reform. That attitude is characterized by such arrogance and inflexibility that the whole spirit of parliamentary reform, which pervaded the activities of the parliamentary committee in dealing with these reforms, will not only be diminished but may be destroyed.

In specific terms, the Striking Committee has demanded that 18 of the 20 standing committees have a membership of not more than ten persons. It has only allowed the Official Opposition three memberships and the New Democratic Party one membership on those committees. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, as has already been pointed out, that does not reflect the representation of Hon. Members in the House of Commons and the Hon. Members who belong to the particular political Parties. The Government, through its representatives on the Striking Committee, has simply endorsed the will of the majority without respect for the rights of the minority, and it is in support of democracy that we stand to object to that kind of imposition of the will of the majority. The House of Commons, after all, is the seat of democracy in this country.

Let us consider for a moment the purpose of parliamentary reform. We know that committees in parliamentary democracies play an important role in the legislative process in the broad sense. In many countries parliamentary committees or congressional committees, as the case may be, have varying roles. In the United Kingdom, the parliamentary committees play a relatively minor role and deal primarily with legislation, with no inquiry powers. On the other hand, in the United States Congress, the congressional committees are, in many ways, the seat of power within Congress and deal with a wide variety of matters. It is common knowledge that legislation will not be passed by Congress unless it has the support of the relevant congressional committee.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that a report I read recently on State legislative committees indicated that 24 per cent of the authority with respect to significant decisions rested with committees of the State legislatures, as opposed to 26 per cent of the authority in relation to significant decisions resting with the presiding officers. In some legislatures, therefore, Mr. Speaker, the committees, which are the emanations of the legislative body, play a very important role.

I believe part of the attitude and intent of the Parliamentary Reform Committee is to give that kind of strength, that kind of capacity and ability to the committees of the House of Commons. But the Government has already, as I have indicated, destroyed that spirit and prevented that transfer of power taking place, so that Hon. Members of this House of Commons will continue to be subjected to the will of the majority and will lose the ability to represent the people of Canada, and their interests, through the medium of parliamentary committees.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I want to underline the fact that the Government is taking an inflexible and arrogant attitude in not co-operating with all Hon. Members of the House of Commons to arrive at a mutually satisfactory arrangement with respect to membership in parliamentary committees, thereby uniting in the common goal of assisting the people of Canada, and allowing those persons who have special interests to come before Parliament to express those concerns.

We are trying in this parliamentary process, as I thought, to make Parliament more effective by allowing Hon. Members of Parliament to become more effective and, therefore, better able to represent their constituencies and the interests of Canadians. But, Mr. Speaker, if the Government does not change its attitude, then that purpose will not be achieved. Members of Parliament must seek a better rapport with the people of Canada.

This is evident from many things which have been written and said, but I want to refer specifically to the words of Arthur Lower, a distinguished Canadian historian who commented on parliamentary reform and specifically the reforms proposed by the Parliamentary Reform Committee. He was quoted in Maclean's magazine as saying:

> I would say those changes are relatively unimportant because it is not mechanical changes that are necessary to improve Parliament. Unfortunately, what needs to be changed is a much bigger task: human beings. What we need in Ottawa are more able, more sensible, less selfish, self-interested, less partisan members. It is the calibre of members that needs improving.

This eminent Canadian has put his finger right on the problem. We can change the mechanics, the process and procedures, but what we really need to change is the attitude of Members in Parliament. I do not believe the Hon. Members of the Official Opposition need to change their attitude. What must be changed is the attitude of the Government towards the effectiveness of Parliament and its Members. And when Mr. Lower is talking about selfishness, I am sure he is talking about the Members of the Government of Canada and not the Members of the Opposition. It is that attitude of selfishness and self-interest which has to be changed if we are ever going to accomplish a reform of Parliament or the institutions of Parliament.

• (1410)

We are here to get the message across to the people of Canada that we need and require effective changes. We need new procedures and processes if Parliament is to become effective and reflect the will of the people across Canada. But we see no real evidence that the Government is willing to make those changes.

In the few moments I have left I would like to outline to you, Mr. Speaker, the fact that in the course of this debate we hope to present to the House of Commons and the people of Canada a wide variety of thoughts and opinions on parliamentary reform. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a veteran of many years in this House and committee work, will give some historical background to the need for changes. The Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), who is a working Parliamentarian, attends regularly at committees and knows how they function and should function, will indicate what is wrong with the Government and its attitude towards parliamentary reform. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who worked long and hard on the Parliamentary Reform Committee, may have to say how disappointed he is with the result of that work in terms of the attitude of the Government.

We hope in a general way to provide a broad base from which others may attack the Government for its attitude, in the perhaps forlorn hope that the Government will see the error of its ways, will bend a little bit and really take up the spirit of parliamentary reform. We hope it will try to give some meaning to this process in the House and in the committees of the House, where we can arrive at mutually satisfactory decisions by the process of discussion and common understanding. But we do not want that process destroyed in round one by an arrogant Government which refuses to bend to good sense and good judgment.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Member who spoke prior to lunch said that he felt both the size and the composition of the proposed committees were unfair. Now, I can understand his reservations about the composition, but I find it difficult to understand that the size is unfair. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, through you, Mr. Speaker, why did he and his party unanimously vote for the provision in the Standing Orders which says that the size of committees should be from ten to 15 if he now thinks the size is unfair? I do not understand how he can say that.

Mr. Mayer: How can you ask a stupid question like that?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that my friend even raises the question. The Standing Orders call for standing committees of not less than ten or more than 15. It is not that provision we quarrel with, it is the unwillingness of the Striking Committee to choose a number between the minimum and maximum. In the case of the Standing Committee on Agriculture and the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, the Striking Committee was willing to allow 15 members. We make the same request for the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. That ought to be 15. In fact, there is no reason why 15 cannot be the standard as much as ten would be the standard. But we could not go down the list of 20 standing committees and determine what size each committee would be.

In endorsing the action of the Striking Committee, Mr. Speaker, my friend opposite is saying that there should be as many members on the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee as there should be on the Northern Pipelines Committee. That speaks for itself; it makes no sense.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I still do not think the Hon. Member has explained why they voted unanimously for a provision which allows committees to be ten. In any event, I would like to ask him if he believes it is desirable that a chairman of a committee be neutral, and if he feels that a chairman can in fact be neutral when both sides are evenly balanced and he is continually obliged to break ties in favour of the Government? How does he feel about that? Does he believe a chairman can be neutral if he is in the position of having to do that all the time?

Mr. Crosby: I think that is a very interesting point, Mr. Speaker, the possibility of having a neutral person as chairman of a committee. I know that Your Honour adopts habits of neutrality in residing over the business of the House, but I challenge anyone in this House to stand up and say that they have ever noticed in the work of the standing committees of this House neutrality on the part of a chairman who was a Government representative. There are ways and means to establish neutrality of the chair in a committee of any kind, including the standing committees. But not one provision was added to the Standing Orders by the Parliamentary Reform Committee or anyone else which would assure that kind of neutrality or judicious treatment of Members involved in the activities of the standing committees. So to stand in this House and say "Oh, we want judicious and neutral chairmen of committees in this new reform" is ridiculous. There is no foundation for saying that. There are all kinds of actions which could have taken place to assure a judicious approach by committee chairmen and not one provision was added. So I say to the Member: Show me where in the Standing Orders there is any obligation of neutrality or judicious conduct on the part of a chairman of a standing committee, and I will agree with him.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on the comments of my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith), because surely the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) contradicts his own argument. A few moments ago he stated it was the intention of the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform to seek perhaps more independence of committees and permit committee membership some investigation. I think we have achieved that somewhat. Yet he now proposes an amendment which in effect would fly in the face of that general trend towards more impartial and independent committees. Let us face it, Mr. Speaker, the chairmen of standing committees are Government Members—

Mr. Lambert: Why?

Mr. Collenette: —and obviously they have to be very sensitive at present to what the Government wants. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on the far side of the House would hold his counsel, he will have his chance to speak.

Mr. Deans: On the far right.

Mr. Collenette: On the far right or the far left. I would ask him to show courtesy in this House as befits his former office.

My point, Mr. Speaker, is that the Hon. Member for Halifax West is contradicting his own argument, because some of us do believe we have to move towards independent chairmen of committees where they do not take orders from the Government. Some of us believe we should emulate the British system where half the chairmen of select committees are drawn from the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Collenette: Mr. Speaker, let us have a civilized debate here. People are asking me to ask a question and they should realize this is a period where we can make a brief statement, which I have been trying to do, as well as ask a question.

I would like to hear from the Hon. Member for Halifax West how he answers this question. If we adopt his amendment it will mean that on every single procedural as well as substantive item in committee the chairman, who is now a Government Member, will be forced to break a tie. If we are talking about good faith, then surely this is no way to have good faith.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the only indication that there is going to be neutrality or a judicious attitude on the part of chairmen of parliamentary standing committees comes from the Hon. Member for London East in his speech today, and that is not good enough for me. That is the simple answer.

I hope the Hon. Member was not announcing a new Government policy which will prevent Members of the Opposition from being chairmen of parliamentary standing committees. I hope this does not mean that the chairmanship of the Public Accounts Committee will pass from the Opposition back to the Government, or the chairmanship of the Members' Services Committee will pass from the Opposition back to the Government. I hope that is not what the Hon. Member for London East had in mind when he said we would have judicious chairmen. However, the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer) also has some thoughts he would like to express.

• (1420)

Mr. Mayer: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments. The House unanimously adopted the report of the Committee which recommended that the membership of standing committees be composed of not less than ten and not more than 15 members. I see three Members of the Government opposite who were on the Committee that I am pleased to be part of. They will agree that not once, when discussing the size of committees, did we discuss the possibility of having committee chairmen who would be totally neutral. As I understand it, the rules in committee are an extension of what goes on in the House. In the House the Speaker, if called upon, has to vote if there is a tie. I do not see why, all of a sudden, we should change the committee structure when it is really supposed to be an extension of the House.

Standing Order 13 reads as follows:

> The Speaker shall not take part in any debate before the House. In case of an equality of voices, the Speaker gives a casting vote—

It is the Speaker who, if called upon, has to break a tie in the House. What is wrong with allowing more Members to participate in the committee structure, which is exactly what we tried to do in the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure?

All of a sudden we are faced with this question of neutrality. I would put a little more stock in the opinion of Government Members if they would offer an amendment that no committee chairman would ever vote. Members who attend committees regularly will have to agree that Members of the Government have a poor record of attendance. If they now want to say that when there are only three Members of the Government attending a committee and one happens to be the committee chairman, then, even if the vote would be lost, the committee chairman would not vote, I think there would be some credence to their position that committee chairmen will be non-partisan. Until that happens, they are simply trying to juggle the numbers on the committee to suit the Government so that they do not need to have any more Members on committee than they had in the past.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the ten minutes provided for the question and answer period have expired. I am sure the Hon. Member will have an opportunity to participate in the debate.

Mr. Ian Deans (Hamilton Mountain): At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the amendment proposed by the spokesman for the Conservative Party. It is not at all unlike an amendment offered during the time the Steering Committee was meeting. The Hon. Member's argument for fairness falls short of credibility and that is unfortunate. I agree that proportional representation as set out in the Striking Committee's report might not be entirely accurate. If one were to look at the position the spokesman for the Conservative Party takes, then one must come to the conclusion that a division of three Conservatives and one New Democratic Party Member is fair and equitable and, therefore, supportable, but that a division of four Conservatives and one New Democrat is grossly unfair and inequitable and is therefore unsupportable.

Mr. Mayer: What about six Liberals and three Conservatives?

Mr. Deans: My colleague wants to usurp his ten-minute question period by asking me whether six Liberal Members to three Conservatives is fair and supportable. The answer is no.

We are forced to work within the restrictions imposed by the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedures, however. It said that committees, when established, could be no fewer than ten in number and no larger than 15. In order to achieve the proportion that the House might well reflect by formula, we would have five, three and one. But that would be nine members. Unfortunately, that is one less than the minimum number the House adopted as being suitable for the smaller committees.

Mr. Mayer: What about seven, four and two?

Mr. Deans: Seven, four and two, as offered by the Hon. Member for Portage-Marquette (Mr. Mayer), would be quite acceptable to us, but I want to point out to him that it would be unfair inasmuch as there would then be only four Conservatives for two New Democrats. That would be out of proportion. That is equally true of the larger committees. The trouble is that the numbers recommended and accepted really do not divide reasonably and fairly with the present composition of the House of Commons. At the large end it should have been 17, and at the small end it should have been nine. Those numbers would have given us the proper numbers of members on committees and at the same time would have allowed for fair, equitable and proportional representation.

I want to say to the Government, and to the Official Opposition, as I have said privately and publicly before, that this Party would be quite prepared to accept an amendment to establish nine and 17. I know the Chairman of the Committee is not surprised to hear me say that as he knows it is my view. I am prepared to accept any number that will adequately allow for representation on the committees that is in keeping with the numbers in the House of Commons. However, we should face the fact that the House of Commons will not always be made up in the way it is now. We hope there will be fewer Conservatives and fewer Liberals next time and then the New Democrats will, as the Government, in all fairness to the other two Parties, make sure they are adequately represented. That is our common practice.

The argument about the numbers as proposed by the Conservative spokesman, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), is unacceptable. Let me offer an amendment that could have been acceptable had it been put. If someone in the House of Commons were of a mind to move that, though the number in the small committees be ten, the chairman be appointed from among a number of chairmen submitted by each of the Parties in proportion to their representation in the House of Commons and that the chairman would, in every instance, be seen to be impartial and would be required to vote only on that very rare occasion when a tie is apparent and to follow the normal processes of people who chair committees on those occasions and vote to continue the deliberations, as is the normal practice, then I suggest on behalf of this Party that we would support that amendment.

In essence, it would mean that on the smaller committees there would be ten people, nine of whom would be voting members. Five would be from the Government, three from the Official Opposition and one from the New Democratic Party. There would be a chairman who may or may not come from the governing side of the House, depending on which committee was involved. That chairman would be seen by all to be impartial and would be seen by all to operate in the interest of the committee rather than in the interests of the political Party he or she represents.

I do not know how anyone could argue that that would not be a fair and reasonable way to approach this problem. Some may say that that is not what was proposed during the deliberations of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure. I think I could safely say that a proposal in that form truly was not made. However, there was a discussion and there have been ongoing discussions about the desirability of impartiality in the chair and about the desirability of looking at, and perhaps adapting to or adopting, the method used in Great Britain of a panel of chairmen or chairpeople. From among senior Members of the House of Commons—and that does not mean only those who are older but even the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) might fall into the category of senior Member, young though he is—would be drawn those who have a demonstrated capacity to chair in an impartial way.

• (1430)

Let us say for the sake of argument that there were 12 committees. Perhaps seven of them could be chaired by Government appointees during a session of Parliament at the Government's behest or by using some other fancy method, I do not care; perhaps four or five members could come from the Tory Party and one or two from the NDP, depending upon how the numbers break down; and that would continue through that session of Parliament. This would achieve the result the Government would like to see achieved—impartiality.

I know the Chairman of the Committee is an honourable person. When he says that he hopes to see that degree of impartiality, with the chairman not having to become involved in every picayune item which arises, I know it is a desirable objective. If we could follow what I am suggesting as a possibility, we could achieve that result. We could achieve what the Conservatives desire in terms of the impartiality and not overloading committees with Members from the Government side. Also we would give senior Members of Parliament a somewhat different role to play, a role which would respond to their natural abilities. Take my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission-Port Moody (Mr. Rose), for example—

An Hon. Member: You take him.

Mr. Deans: Take him, I don't want him! No, actually he would be an excellent chairman. He would be a person that everyone in the House of Commons would be delighted to support as chairman of a committee.

Mr. Smith: He wants to go to the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: He chairs the caucus of the New Democratic Party. Hon. Members should consider this for a moment. Under the chairmanship of my colleague, have they ever heard of discord or disharmony in the NDP caucus?

Some Hon. Members: Never!

Mr. Deans: Never, because we had a firm but fair hand at the helm which allowed us to have little disagreements, but Heaven forbid they should go too far.

Having made the argument, I hope it does not fall on deaf ears. If we in the House of Commons believe that the committees are ours and that they should represent what we the Members of the House of Commons, want—

Mr. Forrestall: When you live long enough by the Niagara, you do not hear it.

Mr. Deans: I am sure the relevancy of that comment will sink in later. I promise that I will read it and try to apply it. I suggest to Hon. Members that since the committees are our committees, since the committees will be given additional powers, and since those powers will presumably give members of the committees a sense that they are in fact participating for the first time in the ongoing deliberations of the House of Commons and the country, perhaps we could afford a brief reference back and a hurriedly-called meeting of the Striking Committee. It will meet on Sunday, if need be; then we could consider the suggestion I have just made. It would satisfy everyone. It would cause no particular hardship. Although the Speaker is not empowered to make comment, I am sure he must find some slight favour with the thought, knowing how he enjoys the Chair being an impartial position and he exercises impartiality all the time.

I cannot support the amendment because it is no less unfair than the situation before us now.

Mr. Reid (St. Catharines): The Hon. Member is a member of the Striking Committee. What will he do about it?

Mr. Deans: I have already made suggestions as to what I will do about it. We will not support the amendment. If the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), who is offering advice gratuitously, would be interested in offering an amendment along the lines of the one I have suggested, I could guarantee him the support of this Party in trying to achieve that end. I think there are a number of Members who think that would not be such a bad idea. Of course, it is a small but further step in the process of developing the committee system.

I say quite bluntly that I understand the unfairness of the division. Even now I understand the unfairness of it, but to make it equally unfair on the other side is not to make it fair. Thus, I have to choose between one unfairness and another. It seems to me that the impartiality of the chairman argument is one with which I find favour, although I am not satisfied entirely that we can achieve it in the way that the Striking Committee recommended. By the way, I am a member of the Striking Committee, as I have already said.

Let me say briefly that I hope at some point we will, in addition to doing what the Striking Committee did, take a look at the need for different kinds of committees. I feel confident the Committee on Procedure will look at it and look at, in today's quite changing society, the need for a committee to deal with matters related directly to women. I think it should be a separate committee since there is in fact a Minister who deals with women and the status of women. It might be very helpful and useful to have a committee to which all matters directly related to women are referred.

Given the controversy which has raged over a long period of time with regard to the environment, the impact of modern society on the environment and on the future of matters directly related to the environment, I suggest that we could give consideration to establishing a committee which deals directly with all these matters.

In addition to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, there should be a committee which is particularly taken up with the question of human rights. It is a serious question, not only as it affects Canadians directly, but also as it affects people from other parts of the world. Our interest in human rights extends beyond our own borders.

Mr. Forrestall: Talk about relevancy, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Deans: On the matter of relevancy, we are speaking about the setting up of these committees and alternatives which I think are reasonable and probably would find favour with the public, if not with the Hon. Member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). He was the same Member who offered me advice on the waterfall. I am not sure what that was about either.

I make these suggestions to be considered by the Government. Perhaps we are too restrictive in the determination of which committee should be established. Maybe we are a mite too traditional in seeing committees within certain restrictions and guidelines. Perhaps we should have a broader view of a much-changed society and establish committees to meet today's needs, rather than simply try to fit today's needs into the existing committee structure, because it does not always work. I think we could achieve it.

I am sure there will be Members who will want to ask questions and that I will likely have the answers, but I would like to make one parting comment to the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). He asked whether we could name for him any committee in which the chairman was impartial. I thought the Standing Committee on Public Accounts had an impartial Chairman. I even thought the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services had an impartial Chairman, as well as the Special Committee on the Disabled. If I had enough time I could come up with a number of committees where the committee chairman was impartial in view. I am sure the Hon. Member for Halifax West between the time he spoke and now has reconsidered what he said and recognizes that there are Members in the House of Commons whose dedication is beyond reproach and who act in an impartial way. I think to call them into question on the floor of the House is unfortunate. Anyway, that says it.

• (1440)

We would like to see the matter resolved if possible as quickly as it can be resolved in order that the committees can get on with the work they should be doing. We think that if there is to be any delay at all a few hours would make no difference if the Government were prepared to accept my suggestion for a different system of determining who shall chair the various committees with some kind of proportional representation on a panel of chairmen to accommodate that desire. With that in mind, if the Government were now to rise and say it is a wonderful idea, I would be prepared to attribute it to the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there any Hon. Members seeking to ask questions of the Hon. Member who has just spoken?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, is it not true that when we had the vote in the Striking Committee, the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans) voted with the Liberals and the two Opposition Members voted against?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that the argument I made there is exactly the same argument I made here. I pointed out that to give the Conservatives an additional member would not make it a better balance. The balance that was there, unfair though it would appear in numbers, was no less acceptable or no more acceptable to me than the balance the Tories were proposing.

I want to make it clear also, and I say this to the Hon. Member in a rhetorical way, that I am sure he remembers my saying that the unfairness of the system that exists could be accommodated by a motion in the House of Commons changing the numbers from ten to nine and from 15 to 17, and then we could get the proper balance. I even said that I would be prepared to guarantee swift passage of it as far as this Party were concerned. There is no doubt in my mind that I covered all of the angles.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. Deans). I do not think the Hon. Member would disagree that the division of representation in this House is 53 per cent Liberal seats, 36 per cent Conservative seats and 11 per cent NDP seats, whereas the proposal before this House gives Government Members 50 per cent more representation than Opposition Members. In other words, the Government would have 60 per cent of the membership of committees and the Opposition would have 40 per cent. This means representation on committees is strongly biased in the Government's favour.

Is it not possible that committee size be adjusted so that on certain committees where more members might be needed, a higher than average balance is given to certain Parties and on other committees perhaps a lesser than average balance? In considering this we would give particular attention to the 15-member committee where the NDP will get 13.3 per cent of the representation and the Progressive Conservative Party would get only 33 per cent. In other words, we are giving up representation to the New Democratic Party on the 15-member committees, in a proportional sense.

Would the Hon. Member not support the notion that with a degree of flexibility the Striking Committee could have suggested something along the lines of the provision in the Standing Orders which applies to the joint committees?

On page 71 of the Standing Orders, the second paragraph reads:

Provided that a sufficient number of Members of the said joint committees shall be appointed so as to keep the same proportion in such committees as between the memberships of both Houses.

Would the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain not consider that rule might have been applied and the committee size adjusted somewhere between 10 and 15 so that in some cases perhaps the NDP would pick up the advantage and in other cases the Progressive Conservative Party would; but in no case would the Government be given 50 per cent more representation on committees than Members of the Opposition, which is totally unfair to backbench Members of the Opposition who get far too few opportunities as it is to raise important issues before this House.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is simply not aware that I offered to consider any proposal that would give fair and equitable representation in terms of both the Government and the Opposition and between the two Opposition Parties. If the Hon. Member has a specific proposal that I have not yet seen, then he need only put it before us. I can assure him that consideration will be given to it forthwith.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I will make my intervention short. The spirit of the amendment which this Party has put forward this afternoon would allow a referral back to the Striking Committee. I do not think the mover of this amendment would be hard and fast as to whether all of the 18 committees that are presently constituted of ten members would be held to 11 members as proposed. Perhaps some might have 13 members and a few more might have 15 members. Some of the committees have a much larger work load than ten members could handle. That speaks for the importance of a careful reconsideration by the Striking Committee, perhaps over the weekend. Nonetheless, such a reconsideration is essential if Members in the New Democratic Party agree with us that the Government has loaded the deck so that the Government has 50 per cent more Members on committees than Opposition Members, and that is totally unfair.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, it might be just me but I did not notice a question in the Hon. Member's remarks. But let me say that the suggestion being made by the Hon. Member is more difficult to implement than he believes. The only way to resolve this difficulty is to change the outer limits, to alter the Standing Order in order to allow for 17 members on the large committees, which number can easily be broken down into Government and Opposition representation in a fair and equitable way, and to allow for nine members on the small committees, which number can again be easily broken down to allow for fair and equitable representation among the Parties and across the floor of the House.

There is no way that I can see, and I have looked at it carefully, to accommodate in a reasonable and fair way what the Hon. Member is asking for. There are 101 Conservatives in the House, as I recall.

An Hon. Member: There are too many.

Mr. Deans: An Hon. Member says there are too many and that is a subjective view, but nevertheless, it is true. There are 101 Conservatives in the House. In order for the Conservatives to be entitled to four Members for one Member of the NDP, to get that kind of ratio there would have to be about 130 Conservative Members.

Mr. Siddon: One hundred and twenty eight.

Mr. Deans: About 130 Conservatives; I was very close. It is quite clear that the three-to-one ratio is much closer to the actual fact—

Mr. Siddon: It is to your advantage.

Mr. Deans: —than the four-to-one ratio. Given the numbers of committees you would have to go through in order to achieve a reasonable balance in the way the Hon. Member suggests, there are not enough committees. There are just not that many. I suggest that if your Party could have supported my proposal to send the matter back for further consideration in the House of Commons, we would not be in the dilemma that we are in today.

However, perhaps I could again in a rhetorical way, since the Member cannot answer me, ask him or some spokesman for his Party to comment on the suggestion that we might find a way out of this dilemma by having an impartial panel along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans) did not have an opportunity to look at the Westminster operation, as did his seatmate.

Mr. Deans: I have been there before.

• (1450)

Mr. Herbert: He knows that the chairmen are selected from a panel of chairmen. But the assumption is that those committees which are studying legislation always have a majority of members in support of the Government, and it is set up that way to ensure that the chairman will not be in a voting position and can remain impartial as far as the operation of the committee is concerned.

Putting aside the numbers game which we are playing a little this afternoon, would the Hon. Member accept the premise that the structure of the committee should be such that the members, other than the chairman, should always include a majority of Government Members so that the Government would always be, at least theoretically, in a position to carry the vote?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief because I recognize the time is almost up. I would be prepared to see the committee structured in such a way as to reflect the composition of the House of Commons. When there is a majority Government, as there is today, then the committee should reflect the majority that the Government has in the House of Commons without the chairman voting. If we are in a minority situation, the committee should reflect the composition of the House of Commons at that time. I am absolutely committed to making sure that committees adequately reflect the way the House of Commons is made up as a result of any election.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are other Members seeking to ask questions? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

Hon. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure looking into this question, I think I recognize that perhaps the most difficult reform we proposed was the reduction in the size of the standing committees. We were under no illusion as to what we were doing. We felt that there was a consensus in the House of Commons to reduce the size of the standing committees. We tried to find a formula that would be applicable to the House of Commons forever, since every time there is an election there are different proportions of Members from different Parties. I have been in the House when there have been three Parties, five Parties and sometimes six Parties and when independent Members have sought to become voting members of a committee.

After looking at figures, we came to the conclusion that there was no way we could develop a formula that would satisfy everyone forever. After considerable debate, we came up with a range which we thought was reasonable and fair: that was 10 and 15. Obviously, we arrived at those figures by dividing the size of the existing committees in two. We arrived at 15 because there were two committees consisting of 30 members each and we arrived at 10 because 20 was the standard size of most committees. The mathematics become more difficult and even more delicate when we deal with smaller numbers. This puts increasing pressure upon the chairman.

I was personally surprised by the Government's attitude when it decided to buy the whole package without amendment. In fact, I suspect that it not only surprised me and Members on this side, I think it amazed Members on the other side of the House that the Government would, in fact, buy such a revolutionary set of proposals and, furthermore, be prepared to implement those proposals without going through the usual negotiations to clear up the inevitable loose points. I think we have come to deal with one of those loose points.

One reason for deciding to look at the figures of 10 and 15 was simply that we looked at how many Members actually showed up to do committee work. If Members look into any committee records to see who was present, they will find that it was a corps of members who basically carried on the work in every committee. If you look even further and review the committee work, you will find that there is an enormous shift of members on and off of these committees. If a subject came before a committee that was of interest to members, they would negotiate with their colleagues and there would be a massive shift of people. When there occasionally had to be a vote in committee there would be a massive shift of people again in an attempt to get enough members out to have a vote.

After seeing what members actually do, we concluded that there was a relatively small corps of members who carried on the work of the committee. There was the group that I called the prima donnas who like to be on committees when something exciting or unusual is happening so they could bask in the glory of committee work. There were a number of Members from all sides who were used to being drawn in from all sides for a vote so it would look respectable.

It did not take too much effort to arrive at the figures of 10 and 15. We first decided to eliminate the hordes that went around to vote. We accomplished that by setting up a list of people who were qualified to be substitutes on the committee. Another reason for making that list was to guarantee Members their place on the committee. We made it impossible or very difficult for a member to lose his place on the committee because the Whip must come to the floor of the House to say that he is removing someone from a committee and replacing him with another.

We were trying to give members a proprietary right in those committees. We were trying to provide that right to those members who actually carried on the work of the committee. In effect, we were trying to enhance the role of the Private Member and trying to provide an independence of mind in the committee structure in an attempt to get away from the power of the Whips and the power of Party leaders.

That is the purpose of this reform. We knew this would be a painful process because of the practice that has grown up in the House of Commons. All of us are guilty of that practice. When we seek re-election, we produce a long list of committees on which we have sat perhaps for ten minutes, so that we can impress our constituents with the knowledge that we are hard at work in more committees than any one person can sensibly attend in a given year. What we have become concerned about in this debate, to a large extent, is the matter of status, pride and the fact that we must realize that we can no longer run this place as we have in the past if Private Members want to have power and authority. To accomplish that, they will have to specialize in certain areas and make some sacrifices.

We decided to recommend 10-member and 15-member committees because we want to improve the lot of Private Members. In order to do that, Private Members will have to become more disciplined, more specialized and independent. These proposals ensure that Private Members have independence.

A point of order was raised after Question Period today. It concerned this very issue. The point of order concerned whether papers produced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) have to be referred in any way to a standing committee so that it could examine them. I intervened in that point of order to say that under the new rules, as long as it comes under the umbrella of an Act of Parliament or annual report, the committee has a right to look into that subject matter. The annual report of the Department of External Affairs certainly refers to disarmament, peace, NORAD and NATO, all of which are covered in the document signed and tabled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In my judgment, there should have been no point of order raised. The standing committee should simply have gone off and announced that it would hold hearings. In the ordinary course of events the committee would have come to the House of Commons with a report which we would then debate. That is how I see the system working. In order to do this and ensure that Members can participate in a sensible way, we can no longer have the floating hordes floating around and looking for a place to light for momentary glory while pushing those Members who carry on the work of those committees out of the way. We want to have a system in which Members have tenure on the committee, and when there is a change in the committee, that change is within the control of the individual Member and not within the control of the Whip or Party leadership.

We will have to give up certain sloppy practices that have developed over a period of time in the House. It seems to me if Private Members are anxious to take power and responsibility, changes in attitudes will have to be made. There must be changes in the way in which they approach the business of committee and the business of Parliament in order to make it take place. We know that this change will be very painful, because we know that there is status involved, sitting on a large number of committees. We know that there are many Hon. Members who like to see their names on a variety of committees. However, we also know that there is a large number of Hon. Members who take their committee work seriously. We want to give those Hon. Members the maximum opportunity to show their stuff and bring authority and power back to the private Members and away from the Party leaderships, back to the floor of the House of Commons and committees, where it belongs.

When we were in Great Britain, the special committee studied the way in which the British committee system was structured. We found, to our surprise, that there were some 200 Members who belonged to no committee at all, and it was not considered to be an exceptional matter. It was accepted that one had to work and fight his way on to a committee by demonstrating his knowledge and ability. No one attained that position because he was a Member of Parliament but, rather, because he was worth it. The British system works reasonably well and is, I think, fairly effective. The Members we met who were not on any of those committees were not exactly ecstatic about the system, but they felt they had the right to intervene and participate.

I would remind Hon. Members that the right to intervene in a committee is not affected by the changes we have brought in. Hon. Members can still attend any committee they want and participate as equals.

Returning to the British system, another aspect of great interest to us involved the role of the chairman. In Britain there are two types of chairmen. In the committees which deal with legislation, the chairman is drawn from a panel selected by the Speaker. When I say "selected by the Speaker", I mean selected by the Speaker. The Whips indicated that if they ever dared suggest anyone, such person would automatically be a lost cause and would have no opportunity of being selected. I think it is no secret that we were impressed with that idea, and it is probably no secret that we will be studying ways of implementing a variance of that recommendation in one of our reports, because we fundamentally believe that the success of standing committees and, in fact, every other committee, depends to a large extent upon the quality of their chairmen.

I am prepared to agree with the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) that this was not really a direct consideration in our discussions of the size of committee. However, it was raised in a peripheral sense as being a problem which we had to consider in the future. We all recognize that there are very real problems, and it is not fair to put a chairman in a position where he will be the one responsible for breaking tie votes. It is not fair to put anyone in that position, and it is certainly not a good practice for the chairman of a committee.

I would direct Hon. Members who are concerned about it to the publication by the Speaker's office entitled "The Tie-Breaking Vote of the Chair". It was published about eight months ago and sets out a very useful discussion of the role of the Speaker and the chairman in terms of breaking tie votes. It is a very difficult subject, and although the paper may be rather ambiguous in its conclusion, I think the dilemma is posed precisely.

I would like to recap by saying that we recognize that this was the most controversial recommendation we were making. We thought that there was a consensus to reduce the size of committees so that Members on those committees could participate more and we might be able to get rid of the dreaded ten minute rule. We thought we would be going some distance toward emphasizing the position of backbench Members of Parliament by giving them tenure on those committees and by guaranteeing that when something finally came up, they would not be bashed aside by the prima donnas rolling around. We thought we would be providing them with more responsibility by ensuring that they could not just go running off to do things, making them responsible to that committee and ensuring that people who worked on it carried things through.

We feel that the Government and the Opposition Parties have been surprisingly agreeable in terms of putting into effect the total recommendations we brought forth. If this is the only difficulty which Hon. Members are having with our recommendations, then I think we did a much better job than we realized at the time. However, I think Hon. Members should look upon it as being a series of experiments. We should consider it from the point of view of what is actually happening to Hon. Members instead of what sometimes comes out. We are not dealing so much with the numbers game as we are dealing with a real problem in terms of there being fewer places than there were before. I can tell Hon. Members that when I saw the job my Whip had done to me, I felt as bad as any Member of Parliament who had lost his committee. It not only happened on the other side, but it also happened over here.

I would therefore plead with Hon. Members to be aware of the background of what we did and why we did it, to understand our motivation, and to give it a chance to go ahead. We expect that over time there will be a working out of the problems coming back and forth. We recognize the dilemma of individual Members, but we think one must examine this, not from the point of view as to how it would affect individual Members but, rather, as to what this tool placed in the hands of backbenchers could do toward bringing responsibility to the floor of the House of Commons, to remove it from Party leadership and place it where it belongs, directly in the hands of the representatives of the people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are Hon. Members seeking to ask questions?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River a couple of questions which seem to be posed by his interpretation of the positions taken by the Committee. It relates particularly to the British experience. Of course, committees are much larger in Britain. During the course of its deliberations, did the Committee take into consideration the fact that under our present direction, and well within my lifetime, there may very well be 500 or 600 people in this Chamber?

Mr. Nowlan: Never.

Mr. Forrestall: In any event, there will be 320 in a relatively short period of time. The Hon. Member indicated that at one point the Committee structure was being considered in terms of "forever", and that startled me a little bit. I was pleased that he mitigated that to some degree by using the word "experimentation" over the next while. Of course, we carried out the experimentation 10 or 12 years ago, and we know what a mess we got ourselves into. Could the Hon. Member tell us whether or not the Committee in its deliberations considered the built-in growth factor of the size of the House, and whether or not it had reached any conclusions? Set against the cardinal rule of this Chamber that a Member shall be heard, were these matters kept in balance, were they discussed and was a conclusion reached?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Yes, Mr. Speaker, when we attended the British Parliament, we found that their select committees, which are equivalent to our standing committees, have about 9 to 11 Members from a House of approximately 635 Members. My recollection is that there are only about 14 of them, as I recall. There are a different series of committees, and these are the legislative committees, and their membership is almost negotiated for each Bill. Therefore, even if one considers the numbers that we have allotted here, amounting to ten for the standing committees, and compares that with the ten Members on the select committees, and the fact that we have about twice as many committees as they have in Britain, one finds that there is far more opportunity for Hon. Members to participate at that level here in Canada.

Concerning the question raised by the Hon. Member with respect to the increase in the size of the House and other changes, we envisaged two processes. First, we tried to provide a range, because we recognized that there would be an increase in the size of the House, but what is more important is that we also decided that the Standing Orders would be under continual revision by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization and that when the House met for the first time after an election, or at any time, the Standing Orders would be automatically referred to that Committee. We tried to provide a mechanism for an ongoing review of the rules so that problems, as they inevitably came up, could be dealt with as quickly as possible by that Committee.

So the answer to the Hon. Member's question is, yes, we did take into account the generality of the growth. We tried to provide a particular route to have those matters dealt with by a parliamentary committee and we did take into account the problems that he raised.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) on a most interesting exposition on the background of this particular proposal under review, the proposal of the Striking Committee in terms of the number of Members on the committees. I know he has had a continuing and consistent interest in parliamentary procedure and the reform of Parliament as we both sat on the last meaningful, relevant Procedure Committee some time ago under the chairmanship of the then House leader, one Mitchell Sharp, which committee went first to England some years ago.

I am not beguiled or seduced by the British experience. Quite frankly, our experience in this country and the whole metabolism of this country is fundamentally different from that of the Mother of Parliament. While we have heard some good things, I am not going to follow it down the smokescreen road of just everything in England being the answer here. I know the Hon. Member did not intend that, but my question is this: because of all the good things he said, the consideration of the numbers on the committees and the surprise that it was acceptable both to Government and Opposition holus-bolus, in total, and the revision under discussion today, does the Member not feel, in view of his interest in parliamentary reform and the continuation of parliamentary reform, that where we get a fundamental cleavage on something that seems as simple as six, three and one or six, four and one, this could pollute further parliamentary reform? As the Hon. Member knows, the number of members on committees was to be between 10 and 15.

Certainly, from the Opposition's point of view, there will be much more careful scrutiny of reports of the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure because there was a feeling on this side of the House that, while there were many good things recommended in the report on parliamentary reform, which has now been adopted for the year, frankly the Committee's consideration really was rather low on the totem pole and still encompassed, in general, a membership of between 10 and 15. It was felt that a dogfight on the addition of one member that is, six three and one or six, four and one, is something with which the House should not involve itself because of the danger that it is going to prevent further reform.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has zeroed right in on it. This is perhaps, in my judgment, the most significant reform of all. Really, what it has done is to shift away control over committees, over the agenda, over the membership—

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): The subject matter.

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): —the subject matter, all of that is shifting away from the Party Leaders, from the House of Commons, to the committees themselves.

That is fundamental. It is also very painful and we are all going through it. I agree with the Hon. Member that it seems ludicrous for us to spend a whole day debating whether one member should be added on the committee but, in point of fact, that really means a great deal to a great many people because it has become a symbol for a lot of people who are vaguely dissatisfied and have a dislike for the total package of reform.

I think we should be under no illusions as to what it is we are debating. We are not debating one additional member on a committee. We are debating a lot of concerns that many of us have as to what this transformation is going to do to our political careers and to our political activities in Ottawa. That is what we are debating, and I think it is appropriate that we spend a day debating it.

My answer to the Hon. Member is, briefly: no, I do not believe that this division of opinion is going to be fatal. I think it is very healthy to have this, and I am only sorry that we had to bootleg the debate on the reform that we brought in, in this way, on the floor of the House.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has to keep in mind the division of time. The Hon. Member has been given a substantial block of the ten-minute period already.

Mr. Nowlan: I just have one more question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All right. There is only another minute left.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, my question follows from my first one. I did not think we would be so limited this afternoon. With respect, my question, very directly, is: does the Hon. Member, with his experience, not appreciate the fact that the difficulty is that Government has 137 or 139 Members, 80 of whom are appointed as members of Cabinet, or as Parliamentary Secretaries or committee chairmen, so you have an avenue other than Cabinet for the private Member to be involved. But it is quite different in the Official Opposition—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member will have an opportunity later to make a speech.

Mr. Bosley: Mr. Speaker, I have to indicate as well that I was extremely impressed by the Hon. Member's speech. I want to ask one single question.

In light of his sense, which I think is entirely appropriate, of the need to understand the experimentality of this issue in order to protect its integrity, is it not somehow strange that the initial use of that experiment had such lack of flexibility that somehow all committees but two have 10 members, and those two have 15 members?

Would it not make more sense, in the context of the Hon. Member's own concern about flexibility and experimentality, to recognize that some committees have members who do more of the regular work and those committees may need 12 or 13 or 11 members? Is he not worried about the rigidity that is being imposed?

Mr. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member makes an excellent point. It was not the intention of the Committee to recommend any particular size for the committees. But we did recognize one thing. There has been a terrible tendency in this House when something starts small to keep growing. The dilemma that we had was that if we made a recommendation that the top limit would be 20 but that we should really keep it down to 12, we knew that there would be no cutting in the size of the committee. We knew that it would be right up there because we recognized the desire, if not the really felt need, that Members have to be on committees. So we decided we would try an experiment. I would think, at some point, after we have had six months or a year of experience we would want to look at it again. Maybe we should then look at what the corps of troops is on each committee and then recommend a series of numbers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is reluctant to interrupt, but the House has adopted rules and the Chair is trying as fairly as possible to apportion time to Hon. Members for a period of questions. It is not easy. At this stage the question period has expired.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, today we have arrived at a point at which I think, in review, we can look for experience to the time when this House had practically no committees, as I remember in 1957 and 1958 when there was the novelty of some new committees being established, such as Veterans Affairs, Public Accounts, and then gradually more and more committees. At least they sat to consider expenditures after the event. Estimates were considered entirely on the floor of the House. Hon. Member will remember the evolution that came in 1969 into what we now know as the present system of committees based upon a practice in the British House. May I say that some Members felt that we should not follow the British House slavishly. Yet, John Stewart, who was then a Member of the House, was the mastermind of the plan and we tried a British experiment, the specialized committee where everyone gained expertise.

With the greatest respect, we know the problems that we have faced. First of all, we did not follow the British practice, and that is, that the Government Party insisted that the chairman should be a Member of their own Party. It was the third line of caucus patronage, that is what it was. There were some notable exceptions to that. Many, if not most, of the committee chairmen were the chief Government spear carriers in the committee. This conclusion is based upon many years of observation. I know that some junior Members of this House will say that is not so, but I can tell them I have worked on practically every committee of this House and I know some real spear carriers. That is how they gained their promotions to Parliamentary Secretaries and Cabinet Ministers. It is not like the British House of Commons where a man makes his reputation as a neutral chairman in order to make his way up the ladder to Speaker of the House or to Cabinet Minister. At that time we had, with a plethora of 20 standing committees, some two or three joint committees and then some special committees. In the months of January to May, every Tuesday and Thursday morning, one saw about 17 or 18 committees trying to make it out of the gate. Then, gradually, it was Friday morning, then back to Monday night, and then committees sat while the House was sitting on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. This is why we saw the decline of participation in committee work, that is, the hard core committee work.

Frankly, in many instances, the committee became a playpen for a number of Members. It kept them busy. They did not accomplish that much work because it became the practice of far too many Government Ministers to be as difficult and coy about their appearances as movie queens. The Ministers decided somehow or other that one or two committee sessions were sufficient to consider their Estimates. There was about 80 minutes in elapsed time in each session, and we know the famous ten-minute rule. A Member might ask a question, which would take a minute, and the Minister, or a delegated person from the Public Service, would take the remainder of the period. That was the questioning time for that Member that day. At best, a critic from the Opposition might get in three or four questions for the study of department Estimates. I have seen departmental Estimates kept until the final week in May by the majority of the Steering Committee because of the so-called inability of the Minister to be present to discuss his or her Estimates. There were other committees, Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for one, which were overloaded with legislative work and, therefore, Estimates received just a rough brush in many instances. Departments often went through without even a nod.

The membership on both sides of the House has now come forward with the idea of changing the rules to see if the performance of committees cannot be improved. There has been a proposal to cut back the membership, that is, to get away from the ten and five rule. Frankly, I believe the committee missed the boat in its proposal. It was not Draconian enough. I have been through this exercise twice as Chairman of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Procedure and Organization dealing with committee structure. The last one was about 1975 under the chairmanship of the Hon. Mitchell Sharp. I made a proposal, which was accepted by all Parties in principle, with the exception of one point raised by the Government. But the Government House leader of the day, now the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), would not hear of giving us a reference. This was work which we had done on our own, but that Hon. Minister did not want to have a debate. He did not believe in the power of the Cabinet being affected at all by independence on the part of committees and backbenchers.

Therefore, I have some reservations about the remarks of the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). While they may have expressed a general hope of backbenchers, there is always the rocky, rigid side of Cabinet which decides in the end, one way or another, whether it will allow such independence.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee would have worked better if it had reduced the number of standing committees to 14, reduced them by a third and reduced committee membership by a third. In the year 1975 the formula of 14 or 15 presented a beautiful balance. We did not have to argue about the weight to be accorded the separate Parties of the House because there were two fundamental facts which went beyond that. First, standing committees could elect anyone from their membership they wanted as chairman, but their only business was Estimates. All the legislation which the rules provided was to go to committee would go to legislative committees, of which the Minister proposing the Bill would have to be a member. That Minister would be there to defend his Bill. The committee would be under the chairmanship of a chairman named by the Speaker from a panel taken generally from the House. The Chair could consult with the Whips or the Party Leaders, but they would be Members recognized for their particular interests and their abilities as chairmen. They would not have the right of vote, with the exception of a tie-breaking vote. And this is an anomaly in this House. If the Speaker is, by Standing Orders, precluded from voting, then the chairman of a committee, which is in itself an extension of this House, must govern operations of the committee much like the Speaker does in the House. Why is it necessary, then, that that Member should not have the right to vote except to break a tie?

A legislative committee—and you could give it any name you wanted—would die once third reading had been completed because, as we know, there is an opportunity on third reading for the reference back of the legislation to reconsider certain clauses. Therefore, it would have to die after third reading. That would not mean there would be that many committees existing at one time. My proposal would cut back the number of standing committees to 14 or 15, with perhaps a little more flexibility for the Committees on Agriculture, External Affairs and National Defence, or Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. Remember, that is a Committee with a great overload. I know that from experience. We would introduce some flexibility and I think a smoother operation.

• (1530)

Now obviously all reports required to be tabled by an Act of Parliament would be automatically referred to the appropriate standing committee, that is, on Estimates. On legislation this would provide an avenue for Members who do not serve on standing committees but who have a particular interest in specific legislation. The Minister would be there, but the difference between the British House and this House is that Ministers in Britain are much more prepared to accept amendments than they are here. The unfortunate situation in the Canadian Parliament is that the Bills have been passed by the senior bureaucracy up to the level of Minister by the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, and they are writ in stone. There is no flexibility whatsoever allowing it to accept amendments. That to me, Mr. Speaker, is a fundamental weakness in our committee system. Legislation goes to committee to be studied and amended. But what happens? It is turned back as a matter of course by an unyielding Minister backed by an unyielding bureaucracy. It is not this House which decides; they decide on that which we will speak, on that which we will amend, and nothing can be done without their permission. To me this is a fundamental denial of the democratic principles on which this House was established.

Now let us go to the independence of backbenchers. We have seen some good work recently by task forces, small groups of Members, but the subject matter is designated by the Government.

Mr. Baker (Nepean-Carleton): But with no decision by the Government.

Mr. Lambert: But I think it is also incumbent upon this House to decide the subject matter it may pursue. That is why I propose the establishment of a small committee on expenditures which would act as a sort of steering committee. This committee would not be caught by any parliamentary calendar, and that is why it is called an expenditure committee; there is no deadline. So a proposal is made that a subcommittee of the committee on expenditures shall study, shall we say, the participation of the Government of Canada in post-secondary education. Now, you would never get that reference from the Government. There are many other things that one would never get from the Government.

Mr. Rose: Nuclear power.

Mr. Lambert: The proposition or subject could come forward from any of the Opposition Members, but the expenditure committee would act as a screening committee. It would also screen the budgets proposed by the subcommittees. One of the biggest problems that Speaker Lamoureux and Speaker Jerome experienced was the runaway costs of committee and task forces which decided they would travel, print reports and hear witnesses in public. The budgets just went straight up. However, the Speaker faced the problem after the event, and this has led to the escalation of costs in the House of Commons. Therefore, when a proposition comes forward from Members, there would be a screening committee, the steering committee of the expenditures committee, which would consult with Mr. Speaker as to its budget and all other matters. Also there would be control over the number of Members who might be away from a committee meeting, and I can see the Government Whip who would nod very sagely on that particular control. That to me, Sir, would be a meaningful change in the committee system.

We are faced with a narrow question here. Shall it be six, three and one, or six, four and one? I think the Government is missing the boat by insisting on the minimum of ten so that it will have the advantage. That is not the spirit in which this House operates. Members opposite have to remember that comes another day and the Government Party shall be on this side of the House; the political representation of this place is not writ in stone. One lesson they can learn from the British, and I thought perhaps some of the new Liberals would have learned this, is that you do not make or observe the rules in such a way that you will have the knife driven in your back when you are on the other side. You have to be able to live with the rules. So I would strongly urge upon Members that the amendment be accepted in the spirit of reform.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Are there Hon. Members seeking to ask questions at this point? If not, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid).

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, in echoing the words of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I want to point out again that the spirit of parliamentary reform is what we should be concerning ourselves with. It was in that spirit that earlier today Madam Speaker—even though there might have been a difference of opinion with respect to interpreting the rules or the words of the Standing Order on the experimental rules—pointed out that it is in the interest of fairness and justice that she reserve judgment and take into consideration the intent and purpose of parliamentary reform.

Parliament and parliamentarians have fallen into disrepute. They lack the respect and confidence of the people of this country. In the eyes of the news media we are losing credibility. That is why parliamentary reform had to come, Mr. Speaker. I cannot help but say, as Madam Speaker pointed out this morning, that we have to keep in mind the purpose and intent of the reform which the general public of Canada rejoiced over when they heard that at last this House was introducing the reform for which they have waited so long. When that reform package was introduced, the stated purpose was that it would enable this democratic assembly to operate more fairly and effectively. It was designed to protect the rights of Members of the House, not only Members of the Government but of Members of the Opposition.

There was a consensus that the time of Parliament could be better organized and made more productive. The search was on to find ways to enable private Members to make a greater input to legislation and to the productivity of the House. More free votes were to be called and developed for private Members.

I suggest that the public at large is not aware of the ineffectiveness of the committee system in years gone by. The Hon. Member for Nepean-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) and others turned their attention to the broad subject of parliamentary reform, but still other Members were looking to the committee system as a means of providing individuals with a greater opportunity to add to the productivity of the House.

Each of us was elected in a democratic way to represent a sizeable segment of the population of the country. It is that individual Member who is the cornerstone of the parliamentary system. It is in the interests of the country that the highest calibre of person be attracted to become a Member of Parliament. It should follow that Members of Parliament be given an opportunity to make a meaningful contribution to the consideration, deliberation and development of legislation. That has not been the practice in the past, however.

There was a broad consensus that the committee system was not effective, and that is putting the matter kindly. There was a wide range of variance in the volume of work that the committees had to consider. Reference has been made to that today. There were regional differences, and the frequency of meetings and a number of other things contributed to a discrepancy between one standing committee and another.

When the third report of the Standing Committee was introduced, not too much concern was expressed about the provision that the standing committees be composed of not less than 10 and not more than 15 Members. It was viewed as a range within which the Striking Committee would operate and within which the number of parliamentarians to serve on the respective committees would be determined.

I was rather disturbed when the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Deans), who is a member of the Striking Committee, spoke of altering the range and making it from nine to 17 members. Why was that not done before and, as it was not done before, why does the NDP not introduce an amendment now to correct that injustice—an injustice which obviously prevailed and which, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain pointed out, the Striking Committee report invokes upon Members of the Progressive Conservative Party?

As the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River pointed out, the Striking Committee gave additional powers to committees. When there was some comment with respect to the capacity of the chairmen, however, the Hon. Member for London East (Mr. Turner) pointed out that the chairman has to be picked from the Government side. There were additional comments to the effect that there has to be a cushion of Members. The chairman is protected from breaking a tie vote but there has to be a cushion of Government Members, six, three and one, on all committees except two. I cannot think of anything more unfair than that.

As we start off on a basis of parliamentary reform we start off on a basis of unfairness that puts 37 Members on this side of the House in the position of not being able to serve their riding or being able to do the job they want to do in the House. They are deliberately prevented from so doing by Hon. Members opposite who abuse the right of the majority.

The good beginning made by parliamentary reform will be negated by this third report if it is carried today, as I presume it will be.

I do not want to abuse the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to make one personal reference. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River emphasized the necessity of developing a specialty. Then the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Smith) emphasized that it was not a good thing to have a chairman who must break a tie. Like myself, that Member served on municipal Government and sat on committees. He watched his mayor break ties. That was his responsibility. If he was a man at all, that was his job. I see no reason why the Government should protect its chairman from the necessity of breaking a tie. I think it is an abuse of the system to say that there must be a majority of Government Members to provide a cushion, notwithstanding the chairman. To say that the chairman does not reflect the attitude of the Government is completely wrong.

Parliamentary Secretaries sit in to echo the comments of their Minister, if the Minister is not present. These are passed on to the chairman, and the chairman is a reflection of the wants and wishes of the Minister.

I was the mayor of a municipality and we had to make decisions and break tie votes. I was the mayor of an urban industrial city of 125,000 people. I am not now in a position to reflect the attitudes of that automotively oriented city. I am not now in a position to reflect the concerns of the marine industry which is developing along the Welland Canal. As a veteran with perhaps the longest service of any Member of this House—five years and eight months—am I in a position to sit as a Member of the Veterans' Committee?

I consider the actions of the Striking Committee and of the majority of Members on the Government side in limiting the membership of committees to be a devious means of preventing Members of the Opposition from speaking out. It is a means of cutting down on the opportunities of Members to serve their constituencies. Members of the Government have looked after themselves. The Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River made a plausible argument. He said, "We are affected too". But I have already pointed out that there are 37 Conservative Members who are not able to sit on a committee because of the Striking Committee report. Does it affect the other side? There is provision for 120 members as opposed to 64, which is not proportionate to the representation in the House, or opportunities for Members to sit on committees. They appoint the representatives from the Speaker's chair down. They have the Cabinet and the Parliamentary Secretaries. No wonder they are not concerned with or interested in a change of the membership of committees. They do not have the bodies to put in them. They are all fixed with a second opportunity to serve, already. Where is the equity and fairness in that kind of situation as it applies to this side of the House?

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain said that he recognized the unfairness. It is there, but to adopt or support the amendment would give an opportunity to put 20 more of the unemployed 37 Members of the House to work. He indicated that it would sort of give a greater disadvantage to their side because it would not be proportionately the same. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain is on the Striking Committee. I do not know, because I was not privy to the actions which took place, but I heard the Government Whip, the Hon. Member for London East, point out that he voted with the Government to introduce the report and that he voted in support of it.

What is the position of the New Democratic Party? What amendments does it propose to bring forward? I heard the rhetoric and the comments with respect to a neutral chairman. I heard that the NDP would not support the amendment which my colleague proposed to bring forward, but I have not heard of any NDP amendment to the report which is unfair to us, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain now recognizes, and to them as it presently exists. Surely there is a better way of improving the situation. Surely there is an opportunity for the House to start off parliamentary reform on the basis of equity. If we miss the opportunity today, then it might not come around again.

The Government side fails to appreciate that even though these are experimental rules for one year, the possibility is that precedents are being made. I rejoice in the precedent established by Her Honour Madam Speaker this morning. I rejoice in it because it was a precedent with which she was concerned, but this will be a dangerous precedent if it is followed. Also, Government Members fail to recognize that they do not rule by the divine right of kings. The opportunity will soon come when they will be replaced. If they adopt this as a precedent today, one can bet one's sweet life that I, for one, will not be particularly willing or ready to change if I am to be one of the 37 unemployed Members of the House. If I am not able to sit as a member of any of the committees established by that body, I will not be prepared willingly and happily to change when the next session of Parliament rolls around.

Serious consideration should be given to the amendment. There were sufficient comments made by the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River and by Members on both sides of the House today to justify the Striking Committee's taking another look at the composition, even the extreme ranges, and even to the extent of bringing the matter back before the House for an appropriate amendment to vary the numbers, if necessary, but at least taking a look at varying the numbers within the composition of the standing committees. Flexibility should be the order. There must be flexibility between those numbers of 10 and 15 so that a larger representative group of the House will be employed to their capacity to the extent they are prepared to devote to the work of the House.

I support the amendment, and I urge all Members to do likewise.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to speak too long because my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), answered most of the criticisms of the Opposition in a very good speech a few moments ago. I think we have to emphasize what both of us are trying to achieve, at least on the Government side. I remind Hon. Members opposite that just because we sit on this side does not mean that we are of the Government. We are supporters of the Government, and we certainly have our own independent judgments. While we may support the Government, it does not mean to say that we always agree with the Government on every issue.

I would count the Hon. Member for Kenora-Rainy River and myself as two of the leading proponents. We are trying to convince the Government, and hopefully the Opposition, to try to shift the emphasis in Parliament so that the criticisms which were made by Professor Lower in the article which he wrote in a recent edition of Maclean's, to which the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) referred, can be realized. Professor Lower made some very good points about the diminishing effectiveness of Parliament. He really laid it at the feet of Members of Parliament themselves and their attitudes. He indicated that it did not matter what institutional or structural changes there were in the House, that unless the attidues were changed, the House would not be improved. I agree with that. Some of us are trying—and I am sure it is not only those of us on the Government side; I know that some of my colleagues on the Special Committee on Standing Orders and Procedure are trying as well—to change the attitude certainly of the Government and also of the entrenched interests in the Opposition Parties. In effect, we are trying to change the attitudes of the Party leadership in the House—and it is not only that of the Government but that of the Party leadership of the Conservative Party and of the Party leadership of the New Democratic Party—to accept a more flexible system, one which gives more independence to the role of Members of Parliament. We hope to achieve this through the committee system.
